Parol agreement, contract, promise, undertaking. An agreement entered into by spoken words; also, an obligation not under seal. See MERGER, 2.

Parol arrest. An arrest ordered of a person violating the law in the presence of a judge, magistrate, or other officer of the peace; as, for an offense committed in open court.

Parol demurrer. A plea interposed to stay proceedings in a real action until an infant party became of age.

Parol evidence. Evidence not in writing; in particular, evidence outside of a sealed instrument relating to the same subject-matter,—as, the oral negotiations of parties who subsequently sign a statement of their reciprocal engagements.

"Parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument." The object of this rule is to protect the honest, accurate, and prudent in making contracts, against fraud and false swearing, carelessness, and inaccuracy, by furnishing evidence of what was intended by the parties, which can always be produced without fear of change or liability to misconstruction.[1]

Where an agreement is reduced to writing the intent and meaning of the same must be sought in the instrument which the parties have chosen as the repository and evidence of their purpose, and not in extrinsic facts and allegations.[2]

But the rule would become the instrument of the fraud it was intended to prevent, if there were no exceptions to the universality of its application.[1] Accordingly, it may be shown: that a deed, absolute on its face, is a mortgage; that a resulting trust exists; that a contract was without consideration, is void for fraud, illegality, or disability, has been modified as to time, place, manner of performance, or otherwise, or has been abandoned; what was the situation of parties — their surroundings, when the contract was made, thus applying it to the subject; that a joint obligor or maker of a note was a surety; that one accepted, made, or indorsed a bill or note for accommodation; that a contracting party was an agent; that a mortgage or judgment was assigned by parol.[3]

Parol evidence of surrounding circumstances is admissible to show the subject-matter of the contract, when ambiguous or indefinite; but express terms cannot be varied by proof of the negotiations out of which it grew, and the circumstances which surrounded its adoption. In construing the contract, such evidence is receivable in order to ascertain the real intention of the parties, but no new obligation can be imposed which is not warranted by a fair and reasonable construction of the language. The current of authorities shows that parol evidence is admissible in

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 38; 40 N. J. L. 612.

[2] Perrin v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 36 N. Y. 126 (1867).

[3] People v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 445 (1873).

[4] Holt v. Council of Somerville, 127 Mass. 413 (1879), cases.

[5] F. parlement; parler, to speak, confer. See 1 Bl. Com. 147.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. Ch. II; Wharton's Law Dict. On Parliamentary representation, see 37 Alb. Law J. 61-64 (1888).

[7] F. parole, a word, speech.

[1] Union Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 231 (1871), Miller, J.

[2] Walden v. Skinner, 101 U. S. 584 (1879), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Jones v. N. Y. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 U. S. 622 (1879), Swayne, J.

courts of law only to aid in the construction of written contracts, admitted or proved; to ascertain the subject-matter; to show the real nature of the instrument; to explain latent ambiguities or indefinite terms; to give effect to general customs which do not contradict express stipulations; when the original contract was verbal and entire, and only a part of it reduced to writing; and to show a subsequent agreement, on a new consideration, varying the terms of the original contract. The exceptions that relate to fraud, mistake, or accident usually arise in courts of equity, which have ample and elastic modes of procedure in administering adequate relief. Such courts will look beyond the written terms, consider the whole transaction, and hear parol evidence as to alleged fraud inducing or affecting the contract, if the person seeking relief has acted promptly upon discovering the fraud, and has not derived such benefits as to prevent the parties from being placed in statu quo. Proof of fraud in actions at law is restricted to narrower limits: the alleged fraud must affect the execution of the instrument.[1]

To remove such uncertainty as may arise from applying the written terms to the subject-matter, parol testimony is always admissible. Hence, all the circumstances out of which the contract arose may be shown.[2]

The rule does not apply where part only of the original contract is reduced to writing; nor to a collateral undertaking;[3] nor to a distinct subject-matter.[4] And a stranger is not prevented from introducing such evidence.[5]

To admit parol evidence to vary the terms of an instrument for fraud in its procurement, there must be evidence of fraud other than that derivable from the mere difference between the parol and written terms. There must be fraud, accident, or mistake, established by clear, precise, indubitable evidence.[6]

Receipts, bills of lading, subscription papers, and other informal memoranda are excluded from the rule.[7]

Parol lease. An oral agreement for the use of real property. See LEASE.

See generally FRAUD, Statute, etc.; REFORM; SEAL, 1.

[1] Chandler v. Thompson, 30 F. R. 43 (1886), Dick, J.

[2] Stoops v. Smith, 100 Mass. 66 (1868), cases.

[3] Chapin v. Dobson, 78 N. Y. 79 (1879), cases.

[4] Graffam v. Pierce, 143 Mass. 388 (1887), cases.

[5] Kellogg v. Tompson, 142 Mass. 77 (1886), cases; 1 Gr. Ev. § 279.

[6] Thorne v. Warfflein, 100 Pa. 526 (1882), Green, J. See also Hopkins v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 29 Kan. 544, 550 (1883).

See also Wals v. Rhodius, 87 Ind. 4-11 (1882), cases; Martins v. Berens, 67 Pa. 462-63 (1871), cases; Kostenbader v. Peters, 80 id. 441 (1876), cases; Bast v. First Nat. Bank of Ashland, 101 U. S. 96 (1879); Martin v. Cole, 104 id. 30 (1881) — as to an indorsement on a note; Tuley v. Barton, 79 Va. 393 (1884), cases; Hughes v. Tinsley, 80 id. 263 (1885), cases.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. § 926, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 275, cases.

PARRICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

PARS. L. A part; a party.

Ex parte, or ex-parte. From a (one) party; on behalf of one side. Said of a proceeding had at the instance of one party, without opportunity in the opposing party to appear or participate; also, of a proceeding to which there is no adverse party.

Thus, Ex parte, or Exp., Waite, denotes a petition filed by one Waite for a mandamus, a quo warranto, or other writ or proceeding.

Inter partes. Between parties; as, a paper executed, or a transaction had, by or between two acting persons.

Opposed to an act or transaction by one person only, as in the cases of a bill of sale, a promissory note, a will, a deed-poll.

Pars entita. The eldest part: the share of the oldest coparcener, q. v.

Pars rationabilis. Reasonable part. See PART, 1, Reasonable.

Particeps. A part-taker: a participant.

Particeps criminis. A fellow criminal; an accomplice. Plural participes. See ACCOMPLICE.

PARSONAGE. Not a "place of worship," although on land appurtenant to a church.[1]

PART. 1. A share, a portion; a purpart. See PORTION.

Admission of a part involves an admission of the whole of a document; as, when one writing refers to another. This includes all the parts of an account, all indorsements, etc., but not detached items, nor memoranda.[2]

Bipartite. In two parts — counterparts, q. v.

Purpart; purparty. A share of an estate allotted by partition to a coparcener, q. v.

Reasonable part. In the time of Henry II (1154-89), a man's goods were viewed as divided into three parts: one each for his lineal descendants, his wife, and himself. If he left children only, or a wife only, they or she took a moiety. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable part — pars rationabilis.[3]

2. Of part, in part; partial, partially: as, part — owner, payment, performance, qq. v.

Partial. (1) Pertaining to apart: as, partial — balance, eviction, loss, qq. v. (2) Biased, prejudiced. See IMPARTIAL.

[1] Church of Our Savior v. Montgomery County, 10 W. N. C. 170 (1881); Wood v. Moore, 1 Chest. Co. 265 (1881).

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 619-20, cases.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 492.

PARTICEPS. See under PARS.

PARTICULAR.[1] Pertaining to a distinct thing, person or party.

1. Involving title to a part only of the whole inheritance: as, a particular estate, which is precedent to an estate in remainder,[2] q. v.

2. Respecting a distinct portion or thing: as, particular average, q. v., a particular lien, q. v., and opposed, respectively, to total and general, qq. v.

3. Directed to one fact, thing, or individual person: as, a particular — averment or statement, or malice, qq. v.

4. Affecting a limited district: as, a particular custom, q. v.

Particulars. Distinct parts, minutiæ; details, items; specific allegations.

Bill of particulars. An amplification, or more particular specification, of the matter set forth in a pleading.[3]

Gives precise information as to the nature and extent of the demand made in the declaration. Is demandable of right where there are general counts in the declaration, and as to one or all counts. May be voluntarily furnished by the plaintiff. In effect, is an amendment or amplification of the count or counts.[4]

The scope of an order for particulars must ordinarily be a question of discretion.[5]

Independently of statutes, the courts have inherent power to order a bill of particulars in either a civil or a criminal proceeding.

PARTIES. See PARTY.

PARTITIO. L. An apportioning: partitioning, partition.

From partiri, to divide, part.

De partitione facienda. Regarding a partition to be made; for dividing land. A writ of partition is sometimes called a writ de partitione, etc.

Quod partitio fiat. That partition be made: the decree ordering a partition. See PARTITION.

PARTITION. Where two or more joint-tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common, agree to divide the lands so held among them, in severalty, each taking a distributive part.[6]

Used both as a verb and a noun.

As in some instances there is a unity of interest and in all a unity of possession, the co-owners must mutually convey and assure to each other the several estates.[1]

May be had amicably, or compulsorily — either by a suit in equity or by special statutory proceedings on an award of commissioners. Land and buildings which cannot be partitioned without injury to the whole property may be sold and the proceeds divided. The judgment upon a writ at common law is quod partitio fiat, that partition be made.[2]

The object is to secure to each tenant the exclusive possession of his share, thereby avoiding the inconveniences which result from holding property in common. When, therefore, possession cannot follow the judgment, partition cannot be had; that is, an estate must be a subsisting estate held in common or undivided, by persons entitled, after partition, to an immediate possession in severalty. The proceeding is subject to the rights of a dissenting life-tenant.[3]

The difference betwen a judgment and a writ of partition at common law is, that the former operates by way of delivery of possession and estoppel, while in the latter the transfer of title can be effected only by the execution of conveyances between the parties, which may be decreed by the court and compelled by attachment. In many States, where the equity powers of the court have been aided by statutes to get rid of the difficulty of compelling parties in person to execute conveyances, the court is authorized to appoint a commissioner to execute the conveyances in the names of the parties. In other cases, the statute declares that such decree itself shall operate as a conveyance of the title.[4]

See further COPARCENARY; OWELTY; PARTITION.

PARTNERSHIP. A "partner" is a member of a partnership, and a "partnership" (often called a "copartnership") is a voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a communion of the profits thereof between them.[5]

A partnership exists where parties join together their money, goods, labor, or skill, for the purposes of trade or gain, and where there is a community of profits.[6]

An association for the purpose of prosecut-

[1] L. particula, a small part, a "particle."

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 165.]

[3] Starkweather v. Kittle, 17 Wend. 21 (1837).

[4] Zacarino v. Pallotti, 49 Conn. 38 (1881), cases; Chesapeake, &c. Canal Co. v. Knapp, 9 Pet. *564 (1835).

[5] People v. Gibbs, 93 N. Y. 470 (1883).

[6] 2 Bl Com. 323.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 323.

[2] See Dana v. Jackson, 6 Pa. 237 (1847).

[3] See Freeman, Partn. 544; Adams, Eq. 460; 2 Bl. Com. 324; Tabler v. Wiseman, 2 Ohio, 210 (1853); Striker v. Mott, 2 Paige, 389 (1831); 23 Pittsb. Leg. J. 41; Scriner, Dower, 236, § 18.

[4] Gay v. Parpart, 106 U. S. 690 (1883), Miller, J.; 76 Va. 492.

[5] Story, Partn. § 2. [3 Kent, 23.

[6] Ward v. Thompson, 22 How. 333 (1859), Grier, J.

ing any lawful business, formed by contract between two or more persons.[1]

The contract relation subsisting between persons who have combined their property, labor or skill in an enterprise or business as principals for the purpose of joint profit.[2]

No tests have yet been found which determine with absolute certainty what contracts will create a partnership relation.[3]

Persons cannot be made to assume the relation, as between themselves, when their purpose is that no partnership shall exist.[4]

A "partner" has a community of interests with the other partners in the whole property, business, and responsibilities of the partnership; an "agent," as such, has no interest in either. As far as a partner acts for himself in the common concerns of the partnership, he may be deemed a principal; as far as he acts for his partners, an agent.[5]

"Partnership" and "community" are not the same thing. The first is founded upon the contract of the parties, which thus creates the community; the other may exist independently of any contract. Every partnership is founded in a community of interest; but every community of interest does not constitute a partnership. In every case of partnership there is a community of the property of the partnership between the parties, as soon as it becomes part of the common stock. Every real partnership also imports, ex vi termini, a community of interest in the profits of the business, that is, a joint and mutual interest, a communion of profit, q. v. This is of the very essence of the contract.[6]

Articles of partnership. The instrument under which a partnership is begun or continued; articles of copartnership.

Gives the names, style, beginning and ending, nature, management, contributions, apportionment of profits and losses, accounts, expulsion of members, settlements, etc. Need not be sealed. If no other time is specified, the date of the articles indicates the inception.

General partnership. Properly, that in which the parties carry on all their trade and business for the joint benefit and profit of all parties concerned, whether the capital stock be limited or not, and the contributions equal or unequal.[1]

Special partnership. At common law, that formed for a special or particular branch of business, as contradistinguished from the general business or employment of the parties, or of one of them. Commonly called a "limited" partnership, when extended to a single transaction or adventure. But the appellation may be applied indifferently to both classes of cases.[1]

Universal partnership. In this the parties agree to bring into the firm all their property, and to employ all their skill, labor, services, and diligence in trade or business, for their common benefit, so that there is an entire communion of interest between them.[2]

Partnerships are "general" and "limited" [special]. The former exists where the parties are partners in all their commercial business; the latter, where the partnership is limited to some one or more branches, and does not include all the business of the partners. There is, probably, no such thing as a "universal" partnership in the sense that every thing done, bought, or sold is to be deemed on partnership account.[3]

Limited partnership. An association organized under a statute, with limited liability in some or all of the members.[4] By recent statutes, the liability of each member is "limited."

In the latter sense, the parties file a truthful statement of their names, interests, object, place of business, duration, etc., and publish the word "Limited" in connection with the firm name.[5]

Probably all of the States have enactments (copied largely from one another) authorizing the creation of "limited" partnerships. The Pennsylvania act of June 2, 1874, is illustrative. It provides that three or more persons may form such a partnership, their principal place of business being within the State, by signing, acknowledging, and recording with the recorder of deeds a statement setting forth — their full names; the amount of capital subscribed by each; the total amount of capital, and when and how paid; the character of the business; the location; the name of the association, with "limited" added as part thereof; the duration, which is not to exceed twenty years;

---

[1] Payne v. Thompson, 44 Ohio St. 204 (1886), Owen, Chief Justice.

[2] Bates, Partn. § 1. See also 91 U. S. 134; 6 McLean, 82; 18 F. R. 888; 2 Flip. 462; 13 Ark. 31; 9 Cal. 639; 2 Col. 648; 15 Conn. 72; 8 Ga. 288; 12 Bradw. 528-29; 19 Ind. 115; 12 Iowa, 177; 24 Kan 340; 38 Me. 555; 46 Miss. 434; 97 Pa. 499; 25 Vt. 390; 12 W. Va. 390.

[3] Blair v. Sheaffer, 33 F. R. 221 (1887), cases, Brewer, J.; McDonald v. Matney, 82 Mo. 365 (1884).

[4] London Assurance Co. v. Drennen, 116 U. S. 461 (1886).

[5] [Story, Partn. § 1.

[6] Story, Partn. §§ 3, 16, 18. As to participation in the profits, see 30 Alb. Law J. 26-30 (1884), cases.

[1] [Story, Partn. § 74; 1 Cliff. 32.

[2] [Story, Partn. § 72.

[3] United States Bank v. Binney, 5 Mas. 183 (1828), Story, J.

[4] [3 Kent, 34.

[5] See Ames v. Downing, 1 Bradf. 326 (1850); Jacquin v. Buisson, 11 How. Pr. 390 (1855); Taylor v. Webster, 39 N. J. L. 104 (1876); Bates, Lim. Partn. § 3, Partn. § 460; 1 Lindley, Partn., Ewell's ed., *201, cases; 20 Am. Law Rev. 848-66 (1886), cases.

and the names of officers. Amendments are made and recorded in like manner. These requirements being met, no member is liable for the debts of the association beyond the amount of his subscription. The association must keep a subscription-list book, open to inspection by creditors and members, at reasonable times. The word "limited" must be affixed to the name; for indebtedness or damage due to an omission, every member acquiescing is individually liable. Interests are personalty; transferable as the association may prescribe. No transferee of an interest, nor representative of a decedent or of an insolvent, can participate in subsequent business, unless elected by a vote of a majority of the members in number and value; if no election is made, the interest is appraised by agreement or by a man appointed by court. An annual meeting of the members must be held to select from three to five managers,—one for chairman, one for treasurer, one for secretary or for both treasurer and secretary. One or more managers contract the debts; when the amount exceeds five hundred dollars, the obligation to pay must be in writing, signed by at least two managers. Dividends must not diminish or impair the capital stock. Loans of credit or capital to members are unlawful; to others, lawful when authorized in writing by a majority in number and value of interest. Dissolution is by expiration of the period fixed, or, earlier, by a vote of a majority in number and value. Notice of winding-up must be given in two newspapers of the proper city or county, six consecutive times, the business ceasing with first notice, except as to the winding-up. Upon dissolution by agreement the property must be distributed first to debts for wages of labor; then to other liabilities; the residue among the members, by three liquidating trustees, elected by the members, who are to collect and distribute the assets under direction of the court of common pleas.[1]

When contributions to the stock are to be "cash," neither credits, goods, or notes will be equivalent, although convertible into money.[2]

The statute may direct that a contribution made in property shall be so stated, and the cash value given.[3]

Limited partnerships are quasi corporations. The members have no general right to inspect the books of the association.[4]

They are partnerships with a limited liability. No restrictions apply to them which do not exist as to other partnerships, except by special legislation or strong inference.[5]

A person trading with a limited partnership is chargeable with notice as to the scope of the business, and as set forth in the articles, when the same have been made known according to law.[6]

[1] Penn. Statutes, 1874 (P. L. 271): 1 Purd. Dig. 937.

[2] Van Ingen v. Whitman, 62 N. Y. 513 (1875); Haviland v. Chase, 39 Barb. 283 (1860); Pierce v. Bryant, 5 Allen, 91 (1862).

[3] Holliday v. Union Bag Co., 8 Col. 342 (1877).

[4] Patterson v. Tidewater Pipe Co., 12 W. N. C. 452 (1882); Eliot v. Himrod, 15 id. 78 (1884).

[5] Greenwood v. Hampshire Manuf. Co., 41 Leg. Int. 14 (1883).

[6] Taylor v. Rasch, 1 Hughes, 385 (1874).

Secret partnership. Where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed or made known to the public.[1]

Dormant partner. A partner who takes no part in the business, and whose connection with it is unknown.[2]

A partnership is dormant when the name or names of a partner or partners are kept back — dormant as to all whose names do not appear in its transactions. The dormant, sleeping, inactive partner may be known by reputation or declaration of his copartner, but these do not make him an avowed or active one without the avowal and pledge of his name or paper. The principle which makes a dormant partner liable is, that having an interest in the profits, which are part of the fund to which a creditor looks for payment, he shall be bound for claims and losses. When discovered, he is liable as a partner; but then he must be shown to be a partner by an interest in the subject-matter.[3]

A dormant partner is interested in the business of a firm and participates in the profits, but is not publicly known in this relation. When discovered, he is responsible for the debts contracted by the firm while he was a member, although he was not known as a partner when the debts were incurred. On retirement his liability ceases as to debts subsequently contracted by the firm, except as to creditors who knew him to have been a member and who had no notice of his retirement.[4]

A dormant partner takes no part in the control or management of the partnership business. When found out, he is liable like the ostensible partner, for the reason that he is a partner. One is not a dormant partner because the person who trades with the party having possession is not aware that another is interested.[5] Compare Ostensible Partner.

Incoming partner. A person lately or about to be taken into a partnership as a member. Outgoing or retiring partner. One who withdraws from the firm; a withdrawing partner.

Liquidating partner. The member of a dissolved partnership who winds up its business.

Nominal partner. A person presented to the public as a partner who in reality is not a partner.

His liability to creditors is imposed upon the ground of a general policy to preserve good faith and prevent frauds in business transactions.[4]

[1] United States Bank v. Binney, 5 Mas. 186 (1829), Story, J.; 49 N. H. 227.

[2] [Nat. Bank of Salem v. Thomas, 47 N. Y. 19 (1871).

[3] Winship v. Bank of United States, 5 Pet. *573–75 (1831), Baldwin, J.

[4] Oppenheimer v. Clemmons, 18 F. R. 890, 889 (1883), Dick, J.; 6 Tex. 258.

[5] Cochran v. Anderson County Nat. Bank, 83 Ky. 44, 47 (1884), Pryor, J.

Ostensible partner. One who exhibits himself to the public as connected with a partnership and interested in its business.[1]

A person who conducts himself with reference to the general public in such a way as to induce others, acting with reasonable caution, to believe that he is a member of a partnership is liable as such to a creditor who contracted with the firm under such belief.[2]

Surviving partner. Although invested with the legal title to the partnership property on the dissolution of the firm by the death of his copartner, he is not the beneficial owner, but a mere trustee to liquidate the partnership affairs by selling the assets and applying them to the payment of the partnership debts.[3]

Persons are liable as partners to third persons: (1) Where, although there is no community of interest in the capital stock, the parties have a community of interest or participation in the profit and loss as principals. (2) Where, strictly, there is no capital stock, but labor, skill, and industry are to be contributed by each person as a principal, and the profit and loss shared in like manner. (3) Where the profit is to be shared between the parties as principals, but any loss, beyond the profit, is to be borne by one party only. (4) Where parties are not in reality partners, but hold themselves out, or at least are held out by the party sought to be charged, as partners to third persons, who gave credit to them accordingly. (5) Where one of the parties is to receive an annuity out of the profits, or as a part thereof.[4]

While it is generally held that sharing profits and losses will constitute a partnership, an agreement to give a share of the gross profits in consideration of services will not render the parties partners; and the weight of the later decisions is that participation in the net profits does not necessarily create the relation.[5]

As a partnership is formed for joint purposes, the members assume joint risks and incur joint liabilities. Hence, all the members sue and are to be sued. But each is liable for all the firm debts, except in limited associations.[6]

A contract made by a partner with respect to a matter not falling within the ordinary business objects and scope of the partnership is not binding on the other partners, and creates no liability to a third person who knows that the partner acted in violation of his duties. But credit given to the firm within the scope of the partnership, and in the course of its business, binds all partners, notwithstanding a secret stipulation or reservation between them, unknown to him who gives the credit.[1]

In the absence of proof of its purchase with partnership funds for partnership purposes, realty standing in the names of several persons is deemed held by them as joint-tenants, or as tenants in common; and one owner cannot sell or bind the interest of his coowners.[2]

Realty purchased with partnership funds for partnership purposes, though the title be taken in the name of one partner only, is in equity treated as personalty as far as may be necessary to pay firm debts and to adjust the equities of the partners. The survivor can sell the realty, and the purchaser compel the heirs or devisees of the deceased partner to convey their equitable titles.[3]

The joint estate of a partnership is that which belongs to the firm and in which the partners have a joint interest, at law or in equity, at dissolution. The separate estate is that in which any partner has a separate interest, at law or in equity, at the same period.[4]

Partnership effects belong to the partnership and not to the individuals. The right of each partner extends to a share of what may remain after payment of the debts of the firm and the settlement of its accounts. Included in this is the right to have partnership property applied to firm debts in preference to the debts of a partner. This right is an equity as between the partners, and enures to the benefit of creditors, who have a privilege or preference, sometimes loosely denominated a "lien," to have debts due them paid out of the assets of the firm in preference to creditors of its several members. This equity is a derivative one — not held or enforceable in their own right — but practically a subrogation to the equity of the individual partner, to be made effective only through him. Hence, if he is not in a condition to enforce the equity, the creditors of the firm cannot be.[5]

A partnership is dissolved by the death of a partner, but a member may by will authorize a continuance of the relation without subjecting his general assets to joint debts.[6]

If an executor consents to a continuance, his lien on

[1] Oppenheimer v. Clemmons, ante.

[2] Sun Ins. Co. v. Kountz Line, 122 U. S. 583, 593 (1887), cases, Harlan J.

[3] Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 653 (1882), Matthews, J.; Emerson v. Senter, 118 id. 8 (1885).

[4] Story, Partn. § 54; Bigelow v. Elliott, 1 Cliff. 32-33 (1850). As to (4), see Thompson v. First Nat. Bank of Toledo, 111 U. S. 536 (1884); Sun Ins. Co. v. Kountz Line, supra.

[5] Buzard v. Bank of Greenville, 67 Tex. 89-92 (1886), cases.

[6] Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 235-37 (1867), cases.

[1] Kimbro v. Bullitt, 22 How. 266-267 (1859), cases, Clifford, J.

[2] Thompson v. Bowman, 6 Wall. 317 (1867), Field, J.

[3] Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 22-24 (1881), cases, Miller, J.; Davis v. Smith, 82 Ala. 202 (1886), cases; 9 Bened. 22; 14 F. R. 617; 87 Ind. 472; 29 Kan. 727; 100 Pa. 487.

[4] Story, Partn. § 372.

[5] Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 124-25 (1878), cases, Strong, J.; Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 id. 655 (1882). On the effect of a deed by one partner, see 22 Am. Law Rev. 251-61 (1888), cases; as to admissions by one partner, 26 Cent. Law J. 490-98 (1888), cases. That a firm may transfer all assets to one creditor, there being no fraud in the intent, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 789-94 (1887), cases.

[6] Burwell v. Mandeville, 2 How. 576-77 (1844), cases; Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 320 (1879); Jones v. Walker, 103 id. 444 (1880), cases.

after-acquired property will be postponed to that of creditors, in an equitable marshaling of assets.[1]

Accounts between partners are to be settled, in court, in one proceeding, by an action of account render or by a bill in equity. In the absence of an express agreement to pay, assumpsit will not lie to recover advances, until the accounts have been settled. The object is to avoid a multiplicity of suits.[2]

The practice in actions between partners for the settlement of their partnership matters is not uniform. In Massachusetts it is held that neither a settlement nor an express promise to pay need be proved on assumpsit for the balance; but the weight of authority is that, before one partner can sue for the recovery of money, an accounting must first be had.[3]

See further ADMISSION; AGENT; ASSOCIATION; CAPITAL, 2; COMPANY, 1; CONVERSION, 1; CONTRIBUTION; DELECTUS; DISSOLVE, 1; GOOD-WILL; JOINT; MINING; PROFITS; RECEIVER, 2.

PARTUS. L. That which is brought forth, or borne: offspring, young.

Partus sequitur patrem. The offspring follows the father,— the condition of the father. Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follows the mother.

The former rule prevails in determining the status of children born of a mother who is a citizen of the United States or of an Indian living with his people in a tribal relation. This was the principle of the Roman and of the common law with regard to the children of freemen. But in the case of animals the second maxim still obtains: the owner of the female owns her progeny — whether brood, foal, or litter. Formerly, also, in the Southern States, the children of negroes took the mother's condition.[4]

Where domestic animals are mortgaged during gestation, the offspring, when born, will, as between the immediate parties, be included as part of the security; but otherwise as to a bona fide purchaser or incumbrancer acquiring title or lien without notice of the facts and after the period of gestation has passed.[5]

PARTY. Compare CHARTER, 1, Party.

1. One who takes part in anything; a participant in an act, contract, or suit.

2. He or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether at law or in equity; the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons.[1]

In legal instruments and proceedings, the common meaning is legal party.[2]

Others who may be affected by the writ indirectly or consequentially are "persons interested," not parties.[1]

Within the rule that parties having notice of the pendency of a suit in which they are directly interested must exercise reasonable diligence in protecting their interests, "parties" includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and who have a right to make defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and appeal from the judgment. "Strangers" are such as do not possess these rights.[3]

Immediate parties. To a bill of exchange, drawer and acceptor, payee and drawee. Remote parties. Payee and acceptor, indorser and acceptor.[4]

Nominal or formal party. One who has no real interest in a suit, but is joined with another or others in conformity with some rule of law or practice. Opposed, real or necessary party.[5]

See, specially, decisions on next page.

Party and party. The contending parties in a suit; plaintiff and defendant, as distinguished from counsel and client. See COSTS.

Third party. A stranger to the act, contract, or suit in question. See JUS, Tertii.

As a contract is founded upon consent, there must be two or more parties to it; and, unless it is created by law, they must be: of sound mind, of legal age, and under no legal disability.

In equity proceedings, all persons who have a material interest in the subject of the litigation should be joined as parties, complainants or defendants.[6] But this rule, being founded in convenience, will yield whenever it is necessary to accomplish the ends of justice; as, where the court may proceed to a decree, and do justice to the parties before it, without injury to absent parties, equitably interested in the litigation, but who cannot conveniently be made parties.[7]

[1] Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 624-26 (1880), cases. Notice of dissolution required, 21 Am. Law Rev. 418-30 (1887), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 588 (1887), cases; 26 id. 567-71 (1888), cases.

[2] Leidy v. Messinger, 71 Pa. 177 (1872).

[3] Clarke v. Mills, 36 Kan. 397 (1887), cases.

[4] See generally 2 Bl. Com. 390; as to Indians, United States v. Sanders, 1 Hempst. 486 (1847); Exp. Reynolds, 5 Dill. 483 (1879); as to slaves, Andover v. Canton, 13 Mass. *551 (1816); Commonwealth v. Aves, 18 Pick. 229 (1836).

[5] Funk v. Paul, 64 Wis. 39-41 (1885), cases. See sheriff's sale of "mortgaged women" (slaves), with one child, at Natchez, Miss., in 1841, Fowler v. Merrill, 11 How. 375, 396 (1850).

[1] Merchants' Bank v. Cook, 4 Pick. 411 (1826), Parker, C. J.; Douglass v. Gardner, 63 Me. 464 (1874); Rupp v. Swineford, 40 Wis. 28 (1876); Treleaven v. Dixon, 119 Ill. 553 (1886).

[2] English v. Porter, 63 N. H. 215 (1884); ib. 295.

[3] Robbins v. City of Chicago, 4 Wall. 672 (1866), Clifford, J. See also 38 Cal. 640; 37 Ind. 333; 21 Me. 482; 41 Md. 369; 74 Mo. 238; 43 N. H. 57; 51 id. 71; 52 id. 162; 56 id. 74; 17 N. J. L. 433; 64 Pa. 245; 5 Sneed, 107.

[4] See Hoffman v. Bank of Milwaukee, 12 Wall. 191 (1870).

[5] See Deford v. Mehaffy, 14 F. R. 181-82 (1882), cases.

[6] Mechanics' Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. *306 (1828).

[7] Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 431 (1868), Davis, J.

Where the parties are numerous and the suit is for an object common to all, some of them may maintain or defend a bill in equity for all.[1]

To a bill in equity there are three classes of parties: (1) Formal parties. (2) Persons having an interest in the controversy, and who ought to be made parties, that the court may act on the rule which requires it to finally determine the entire controversy and do complete justice, by adjusting all the rights involved in it. These are necessary parties; but if their interests are separable from those of the parties before the court, so that the court can proceed to a decree, and do complete and final justice, without affecting other parties not before the court, the latter are not indispensable parties. (3) Persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final termination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience.[2]

As to parties defendant, in particular, all whose interests will be affected by the decree sought must be before the court. If they cannot be reached by process, or do not voluntarily appear, or from a jurisdictional objection cannot be made parties, the bill must be dismissed.[3]

The exact distinction may be stated thus: (1) Where a person will be directly affected by a decree, he is an indispensable party, unless the parties are too numerous to be brought before the court, when the case is subject to a special rule. (2) When a person is interested in the controversy, but will not be directly affected by a decree made in his absence, he is not an indispensable party, but he should be made a party, if possible, and the court will not proceed to a decree without him if he can be reached. (3) Where he is not interested in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but has an interest in the subject-matter which may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation, he may be made a party or not at the option of the complainant.[4] But no proceeding will prejudice a party who cannot be found.[5]

See further ADJUDICATION, Former; AGGRIEVED; CALL, 3; CITATION, 2; CONTRACT; DEED, 2; DEFENDANT; JOINT AND SEVERAL; JURISDICTION, 2; NOTICE, 1, Judicial; PLAINTIFF; PRIVY, 2; TRUST, 1; WITNESS.

Party-wall. See WALL.

PASS. 1. To undergo an examination without being rejected: as, to pass an account.

To examine and approve: as, to pass a title.

2. To receive approval: as, for a bill, an act, a law, to pass one or both houses of legislation, and be signed by the Executive.[1]

An act of a legislature is "passed" only when it has gone through the forms necessary by the constitution to give it validity as a binding rule of conduct. Its passage dates from the time when it ceases to be a mere proposition or bill, and passes into a law.[1]

The reference may be to the time when the act is to take effect.[2] See ACT, 3.

3. To continue to another call or list: as, to pass a case.

4. To decide upon, to pronounce: as, for a jury to pass upon the weight of the testimony or the merits of a case, and for a court to pass upon a question of law, or to pass sentence upon a convicted offender.

5. To go from one person to another, to become transferred: as, in saying that a title passes by delivery of a deed or by descent, and that incidents pass with the principal. See DESCEND.

6. To put off in payment or exchange as money: as, to pass counterfeit or forged paper.

"Pass" a note may include utter, publish, and sell. "Utter and pass" includes any delivery for value, with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money.[3] Compare UTTER, 3.

Pass and repass. See TRAVEL.

PASS-BOOK. See BANK, 2 (2); DEPOSIT, 2.

PASSENGER. One who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier, as for the payment of fare or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor.[4]

A mere trespasser, a person who steals a ride upon a railroad train, or who is employed thereon, is not a passenger.[4]

See BAGGAGE; CARRIER; COMMERCE; SALVAGE; TRAVEL; VESSEL, Merchant.

PASSIVE. See DECEIT; TRUST, 1. Compare ACTIVE.

PASSPORT. See SEA-LETTER.

[1] Smith v. Swormstedt, 16 How. 302 (1853), cases.

[2] Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 139 (1854), Curtis, J.

[3] Ribon v. Railroad Companies, 16 Wall. 450 (1872), Swayne, J.

[4] Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall. 571 (1873), Bradley, J.; Payne v. Hook, 7 id. 431 (1868), Davis, J.; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 392 (1885); Conolly v. Wells, 32 F. R. 207-9 (1887), cases; Lynchburgh Iron Co. v. Taylor, 79 Va. 671 (1884).

[5] R. S. §§ 737-38, cases.

[1] Waterman v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 208 (1859), Black, C. J.; Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Monta. 235 (1875); 3 Heisk. 442; 1 Paine, 261.

[2] Charless v. Lamberson, 1 Iowa, 443 (1855).

[3] United States v. Nelson, 1 Abb. U. S. 135 (1867), cases; 3 Metc., Mass., 464; 4 Allen, 301; Baldw. 367.

[4] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 267 (1880); s. c. 113 U. S. 218 (1885). See also Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Monta. 99 (1878); 24 Cent. Law J. 219 (1887), cases; 25 id. 51 (1887), cases; 139 Mass. 238, 542; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 262. As to rights of gratuitous passengers, see 20 Cent. Law J. 485-89 (1885), cases.

PATENT.[1] 1 (1) Open to inspection; not closed by sealing.

Grants by the king of lands, honors, liberties, franchises, etc., are contained in charters or letters-patent, that is, open letters: not sealed up, but exposed to view and addressed to his subjects at large. Other letters of the king, directed to particular persons, and for special purposes, not being proper for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside: writs close, and recorded in the close-rolls, as others are in the patent-rolls.[2]

(2) Evident; apparent: as, a patent ambiguity, q. v.

2. By elision, equivalent to "letters-patent" (noted above, and, more at length, below) for a grant of public land or for a discovery, made by government, and constituting a "patent right."

A "patent" is a grant by the crown or government.[3]

Patentable, and non-patentable express, respectively, that letters-patent will or will not be issued for the thing in question — a discovery, or land.

Patentee. He to whom letters-patent have been granted or issued, in particular for a discovery. Compare GRANTEE, 2; LICENSEE, 2.

Patent for land. The instrument by which the government, State or national, passes its title to land; the government conveyance.

Of itself is evident of title because the government, being the original source of title, is presumed to have retained title until some other disposition is shown.[4]

It is the highest evidence of title, and conclusive as against the government and all persons claiming under junior patents or titles, until set aside or annulled by some judicial tribunal. . . A bill in chancery is the most convenient remedy to annul a patent; which may be done for fraud in the patentee, for mistake or want of authority in the officer, or because of a higher equity in another claimant.[5]

When a patent has been regularly signed, sealed, countersigned, and recorded, the patentee has a perfect right to its possession. His title is title by record; delivery of the instrument is not essential to pass the title: that ministerial duty can be enforced by mandamus.[6]

A patent, lawfully issued, cannot be collaterally impeached in a court of law. . . A patent from the United States is the conveyance by which the nation passes its title to portions of the public domain. That the provisions of the law may be properly carried out, a land department has been created to supervise the proceedings taken to obtain a title. The decisions of the officers of that department are conclusive except in direct proceedings for the correction or annulment of their acts.[1]

Lapsed patent. A patent which has become inoperative through neglect in the patentee.

Relates to the date of the original patent, and makes void all mesne conveyances.[2]

See more at length LAND, Public; PRE-EMPTION, 2; RELATION, 1.

Patent for a discovery or an invention. A public franchise granted to the inventor of a new and useful improvement to secure to him, for a limited term mentioned therein, the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the article or object, as tending to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, and as matter of compensation for the labor and expense in making and reducing the invention to practice for the public benefit.[3]

The grant of a patent is not the exercise of any prerogative to confer upon a subject the exclusive property in that which would otherwise be of common right. It more nearly resembles a contract which Congress may enter into to secure the inventor, for a limited time, the exclusive enjoyment of the practice of his invention, for disclosing his secret and relinquishing his invention to the public at the end of the term.[4]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to . . Inventors the exclusive Right to their . . Discoveries."[5]

The most important laws passed in pursuance of this power are the acts of July 4, 1836, and July 8, 1870, each of which revised preceding legislation. The act of 1870, changed in its expressions and arrangement, and otherwise amended, was re-enacted in the Revised Statutes as sections 4883–4986.

The provisions of the acts may be thus summed up: Whoever discovers that a certain useful result will be produced, in any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, by use of certain means, is entitled to a patent for it: provided he specifies the means in a

[1] The adj. is pronounced pā'-tent or păt'-ent; the noun, păt'-ent. F. patent; L. patere, to lie open.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 346.

[3] See United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 397 (1880).

[4] Patterson v. Tatum, 3 Saw. 172 (1874), Field, J.; Hayner v. Stanly, 8 id. 221 (1882), Sawyer, Cir. J.

[5] United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 535 (1864), Grier, J.

[6] United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 392 (1880), Miller, J.

[1] St. Louis Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 640 (1881), Field, J.; Mullan v. United States, 118 id. 278 (1886), cases; Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 id. 325, 381 (1887), cases.

[2] Wilcox v. Calloway, 1 Wash. 39 (Va., 1791).

[3] Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 533 (1870), Clifford, J.; Wilson v. Rousseau, 1 Blatch. 79 (1845).

[4] Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 22 F. R. 617 (1876), Shepley, J.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8.

manner so full and exact that any one skilled in the science to which it appertains can, by using the means specified, without any addition to or subtraction from them, produce precisely the result described. If this cannot be done by the means described, the patent is void. If it can be done, then the patent confers on the patentee the exclusive right to use those means to produce the result or effect he specifies, and nothing more. It makes no difference whether the effect is produced by chemical agency or combination, or by the application of discoveries or principles in natural philosophy known or unknown before his invention, or by machinery acting together upon mechanical principles. In any case, he must describe the manner and process as above mentioned, and the end it accomplishes. And any one may lawfully accomplish the same end, without infringing the patent, if he uses means substantially different from those described.[1] That clear and exact summary of the law affords a key to almost every case that can arise. Everything turns upon the force of the word "means" as there used. The means need not be a machine, or an apparatus: it may be a process.[2]

A patent-right confers a temporary monopoly (q. v.), but the benefit to the public is the primary object. This benefit is the equivalent for the labor of the patentee. Hence, the inventor who withholds his invention from the public, to be used solely by himself, will not be aided.[3] And the inventor who suffers his invention to be in public use or on sale two years before applying for a patent forfeits his right.[4] It is not necessary that more than one of the articles be publicly used. If the inventor, having made his device, gives or sells it to another, to be used by the donee or vendee without limitation or restriction or injunction of secrecy, and it is so used, such use is "public," even though the knowledge of the use is confined to that one person. But a use necessarily open to public view, if made solely to test the qualities of the invention, and for experiment, is not a public use.[5]

A patentee cannot be permitted to use for profit a machine which embodies a perfected invention for a period of two years or more, and then obtain a valid patent for the old machine by means of the addition of some new improvement intended, perhaps, to benefit the inventor, rather than the machine.[6]

The act of March 3, 1839, § 7, did not require that, to invalidate a patent, the public use or sale for the two years, should have been with the consent of the patentee.[7]

A patentable invention is a mental result. It must be new and of practical utility. Then, everything within the domain of the conception belongs to him who conceived it. The machine, process, or product is but its material reflex and embodiment.[1]

Crude and imperfect experiments are not sufficient to confer a right to a patent. The applicant must have proceeded so far as to have reduced his idea to practice, and embodied it in some distinct form. He is the first inventor, and entitled to a patent, who first perfected and adapted the same to use.[2]

Such a thing, for example, as a bundle of kindling wood and a fire lighter is not patentable.[3]

It is not the object of the laws to grant a monopoly for every trifling device which would naturally and spontaneously occur to any skilled mechanic or operator, in the ordinary progress of manufactures.[4]

The design of the laws is to reward those who make some substantial discovery or invention, which adds to our knowledge and marks a step in advance in the useful arts.[5]

An earlier published description, to invalidate a patent, must exhibit the later intervention in such a full and intelligible manner as to enable persons skilled in the particular art to comprehend it without assistance from the patent, or to make it, or to repeat the process.[6]

The patentee must be the first inventor in this country. Foreign use will not affect his right, and a foreign patent will only limit his term to seventeen years from the date or publication of the foreign patent.[7]

A patent is to receive a liberal construction, so as to uphold, and not destroy, the right of the inventor.[8]

The circuit courts, and district courts with circuit court powers, have original jurisdiction in suits respecting patents.[9]

The Federal courts have exclusive cognizance of such suits only as directly involve the validity or the infringement of a patent.[10]

A patentee, for an infringement, may seek remedy at law or in equity.[11]

[1] O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How. 119 (1853), Taney, C. J.

[2] Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 728 (1880), Bradley, J. See also R. S. §§ 4889, 4891.

[3] Kendall v. Winsor, 21 How. 328 (1858), Daniel, J.

[4] R. S. § 4886, cases.

[5] Egbert v. Lippmann, 104 U. S. 336 (1881), cases, Woods, J.; Worley v. Tobacco Co., ib. 340 (1881); Emery v. Cavanagh, 17 F. R. 243 (1883), cases.

[6] The Driven-Well Cases (Andrews v. Hovey), 123 U. S. 267 (1887), Blatchford, J., affirming 5 McCrary, 181, 16 F. R. 387; Andrews v. Hovey, 124 U. S. 694 (1888).

[7] Smith & Griggs Manuf. Co. v. Sprague, 123 U. S. 257 (1887), cases, Matthews, J.

[1] Smith v. Nichols, 21 Wall. 118 (1874), Swayne, J.

[2] Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 552 (1870), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Alcott v. Young, 16 Blatch. 134, 138 (1879), cases.

[4] Thompson v. Boisselier, 114 U. S. 12 (1885), cases, Blatchford, J.

[5] Atlantic Works v. Brady, 107 U. S. 200 (1882), Bradley, J.; 111 id. 608; 112 id. 59.

[6] Downton v. Yeager Milling Co., 108 U. S. 471 (1883), cases, Woods, J.; Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 555 (1870); Cohn v. United States Corset Co., 93 U. S. 370 (1876); Eams v. Andrews, 122 id. 66 (1887).

[7] Cornely v. Marckwald, 17 F. R. 83 (1883); De Florez v. Raynolds, 17 Blatch. 436 (1880); Siemens v. Sellers, 123 U. S. 276 (1887), "Siemens' regenerator furnace."

[8] Turrill v. Michigan Southern, &c. R. Co., 1 Wall. 510 (1863); White v. Dunbar, 119 U. S. 51 (1886), cases; 3 Sumn. 520; 58 N. H. 351.

[9] R. S. § 629.

[10] Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 348 (1872); Dale Tile Manuf. Co. v. Hyatt, 125 U. S. 46 (1888), cases; 3 McLean, 523; 58 Pa. 155.

[11] R. S. § 4920.

In the absence of a specific statute, the United States cannot maintain a bill in equity to cancel a patent.[1]

Letters-patent are prima facie evidence that the patentee is the first and original inventor.

A bill in equity for a naked account of profits and damages against an infringer cannot be sustained. Such relief, ordinarily, is incidental to some other equity, the right to enforce which secures to the patentee his standing in court. The most general ground for equitable interposition is, to insure to the patentee the enjoyment of his specific right by injunction against a continuance of the infringement; but grounds of equitable relief may arise, other than by way of injunction, as where the title of the complainant is equitable merely, or equitable interposition is necessary on account of the impediments which prevent a resort to remedies purely legal; and such an equity may arise out of, and inhere in, the nature of the account itself, springing from special and peculiar circumstances which disable the patentee from a recovery at law altogether, or render his remedy in a legal tribunal difficult, inadequate, and incomplete; and as such cases cannot be defined more exactly, each must rest upon its own particular circumstances, as furnishing a clear and satisfactory ground of exception from the general rule.[2]

A person who marks upon any unpatented article the word "patented" or its equivalent, for the purpose of deceiving the public, is liable, for each offense, to a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, with costs.[3] The plaintiff must allege an intention to affix a stamp or plate indicating a present subsisting patent. It is not an offense to give the date of a patent which has expired.[4]

State laws making void notes given in consideration of a patent-right unless the words "given for a patent-right" are prominently written upon the face of the note, have generally been held to be unconstitutional, on the ground that property in inventions exists by virtue of laws of Congress, and no State may annex conditions to the grant or otherwise interfere with its unrestricted enjoyment.[5]

A legislature may enact a statute which has the effect to pass title to letters-patent to the assignee of an insolvent.[6]

Patent office. The bureau or office from which letters-patent issue, in which assignments thereof are noted, and other records appertaining to patents made and preserved.

The responsible head is the commissioner of patents, whose office was created by the act of July 4, 1836. In theory, he is to issue no patent which may not be sustained by the courts, as both novel and useful. Under that act he was allowed a clerk to assist him in making the necessary examinations under applications. Since the act of 1870, there have been, besides the commissioner and assistant commissioner, three examiners in chief, a chief clerk, an examiner in charge of interferences, twenty-two principal examiners, twenty-two first and twenty-two second assistant examiners.[1]

All patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the patent office, and shall be signed by the secretary of the interior or under his direction by one of the assistant secretaries of the interior, and countersigned by the commissioner of patents, and they shall be recorded, together with the specifications, in the patent office, in books to be kept for that purpose.[2]

The secretary of the interior has no power to revise the action of the commissioner in awarding priority of invention to an applicant for a patent, such action being quasi-judicial. After determining that a patent shall issue, the commissioner acts ministerially in preparing the patent for the signature of the secretary, and in countersigning it. A mandamus will lie to compel the performance of these duties.[3]

As against the patentee himself, an assignment need not be recorded, to retain validity; but as respects a subsequent purchaser without notice and for a valuable consideration, a prior assignment must be recorded within three months. And as against a third person, a suit may be maintained by an assignee provided he records his assignment before the trial or hearing.[4]

See ABANDON, 1; ART, 1; CAVEAT; COMBINATION, 1; COMPOSITION, 2; DAMAGES; DEDICATION, 2; DELIVERY, 1; DESIGN, 1; DISCLAIMER, 3; DISCOVERY, 2; EQUIVALENT, 2; EXTENSION; INFRINGEMENT; INTERFERENCE; INVENTION; ISSUE, 1, Re-issue; MACHINE; MANUFACTURE; MODEL; NEW, 1; NOVELTY; PRINCIPLE, 2; PROCESS, 3; PROFIT, 2; RESIDUUM, 2; SURRENDER; TELEPHONE CASE; TRADE-MARK; USE, 1, Useful.

PATER. L. Father. Compare PARTUS. Has been used in genealogical tables.

Pater est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. The nuptials show who is the father. The marriage of the mother declares the paternity of the child.

At common law, the nuptials must precede the birth of the child; in the civil law, they may precede or follow.[5]

[1] United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 32 F. R. 591 (1887), Colt, J.; Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, ib. 608 (1876), Shepley, J. The former case was argued on error, before the Supreme Court in October, 1888, and reversed: post, 1016.

[2] Root v. Lake Shore, &c. R. Co., 105 U. S. 189 (1881), cases, Matthews, J.

[3] [R. S. § 4901. See Pentlarge v. Kirby, 19 F. R. 501 (1884); ib. 507.

[4] Wilson v. Singer Manuf. Co., 11 Biss. 298 (1882), Drummond, J.; s. c. 12 F. R. 59.

[5] See Exp. Robinson, 2 Biss. 309 (1870); Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309 (1877); 43 Ind. 167; 53 id. 454; 54 id. 290; 70 Ill. 109; 4 Bush, 311; 25 Ohio St. 26; 18 Pa. 465; 86 id. 173; 23 Minn. 24.

[6] Barton v. White, 144 Mass. 281 (1887).

[1] R. S. §§ 476, et seq.

[2] Act 18 Feb. 1888 (25 St. L. 40), amending R. S. § 4883.

[3] Butterworth v. Hoe, 112 U. S. 50 (1884), Matthews, J.

[4] See Curtis, Pat. 183; 20 Am. Law Rev. 708-12 (1886), cases; 1 Story, 273; 2 id. 542, 609; 2 Blatch. 148; 7 id. 193.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 446, 454-56; The King v. Luffe, 8 East, 193 (1807).

Paterfamilias. The father (head) of a family; one not subject to paternal power, but sui juris.

In the Roman law, a paterfamilias was one who either had no father living or had been emancipated from his power. A man who had neither wife nor child was in this position or status. But a man with a wife and child was a filiusfamilias, if subject to the family control of a living father — the patria potestas,[1] q. v.

Pater patriæ. Father of the country. See PARENS.

PATERNAL. See LINE, 8.

PATERNITY. See BASTARD; FILIATION; PATER.

PATIENT. See COMMUNICATION, Confidential, 1; PHYSICIAN.

PATRIA. L. 1. Belonging to a father; paternal.

Patria potestas. Paternal authority: the power which, under Roman law, the head of a family (paterfamilias) had over that family.

Continued to the close of the father's life; included his own children, the children of his sons and of his sons' sons. Did not include the children of a daughter: these belonged to a different family, the family of their own father.

Originally, and for a long time, had a terribly despotic power. Not only was the father entitled to all the service and acquisitions of his child, as much as those of a slave, but he had the same absolute control over his person. He could sell him into mancipium, a status analogous to slavery. Down to the Christian era, the father had the jus vitæ et necis, the right to take the life of the child. The reasons which caused the Romans to accept and tenaciously uphold the patria potestas must have been the profound impression of family unity, the conviction that every family was, and of right ought to be, one body, with one will and one executive. The English common law gave the husband a power not much less over his wife, and upon the similar idea of a natural normal unity of the married pair.[2]

2. Fatherland (terra being understood); country.

Nemo potest exuere patriam. No one may leave the kingdom. No subject can expatriate himself,— the English doctrine.[3] See EXPATRIATION.

Parens patriæ. Parent, father, of the kingdom or country. See PARENS.

PATRICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

[1] Hadley, Roman Law, 107, 119.

[2] Hadley, Roman Law, 119-122, 130, 140. See also Maine, Ancient Law, 130-141; 1 Bl. Com. 452, 444; Mackeldey, Rom. Law, § 589.

[3] See 3 Kent, 44-50; 9 Op. Att.-Gen. 356; 3 Dallas, 145; 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 370, note.

PATRIMONY. Property received from one's father, or ancestors. Whence patrimonial. See DESCENT.

PATRONIZE. To act as a patron toward.[1]

The patrons of a house of ill-fame cannot be said to be those who are occupied in the house or about the premises.[1]

PATTERN. See DESIGN, 2; MODEL.

PAUPER. 1. L. adj. Providing little: having little; indigent, needy, poor.

In forma pauperis. In the character of a poor man; as a poor suitor.

"Paupers, or such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds, are to have original writs and subpœnas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee, and are excused from paying costs when plaintiff."[2]

In admiralty practice, an exception is made in favor of seamen, by Rule 45, in consideration of their necessitous condition, and their presumptive inability to give the ordinary security required of libelants. This is a result of the protection afforded them as wards of the admiralty. It is in conformity with the ancient usage, which, as in the practice in common-law actions permitting suits in forma pauperis, dispensed with sureties in suits by poor persons, and allowed, instead, a juratory caution, which is now rarely used.[3]

The "pauper act" is concerned with liability; the "non-resident act" with security.[4]

Dispauper. To deprive of the privilege of suing in forma pauperis, from subsequent acquisition of property, or other cause.

2. Eng. n. One who receives aid and assistance from the public, under the laws for the support and maintenance of the poor.[5]

May designate a poor and indigent person standing in need of relief, a poor person likely to become chargeable, as well as a poor person who has actually received support from the town.[6]

See POOR; VAGRANT; COMMERCE; INSPECTION, 1.

PAVE. To cover with stones, brick, or other suitable material, so as to make a level or convenient surface for horses, carriages, or foot-passengers.[7]

Re-flagging may be "re-paving."[7]

[1] Raymond v. People, 9 Bradw. 345 (1881).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 400.

[3] The Georgeanna, 31 F. R. 406 (1887), Brown, J. See also, generally, Bradford v. Bradford, 2 Flip. 280, 283 (1878), cases, Hammond, J.

[4] Heckman v. Mackey, 32 F. R. 575 (1887), Lacombe, J.

[5] [Opinion of the Justices, 11 Pick. 540 (1832); Wilson v. Brooks, 14 id. 343 (1833); 124 Mass. 597.

[6] Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 625 (1874), Peck, C. J. See also 30 Ark. 768; 49 Ill. 186; 59 Iowa, 208; 3 Pittsb. 133.

[7] Matter of Phillips, 60 N. Y. 23 (1875), Allen, J.

Power to pave a street may include, as not unusual, macadamizing and making gutters; [1] also raising and lowering parts of the street.[2]

But an order to grade a street does not authorize macadamizing it.[3] See REPAIR, 2; SIDEWALK.

PAWN.[4] v. To deliver plate or jewels [or other personalty] as a pledge or security for the repayment of money lent thereon at a day certain.[5]

n. A bailment of goods to a creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged.[6]

Pawnee; pawnor. The pledgee, and pledgor, respectively, in a contract of pawning. Pawner is common.

Pawnbroker. Any person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money lent lent thereon.[7]

In Illinois, "every person or company engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge, or as security for money or other thing advanced to the pawnor or pledgor."

An occasional loan does not constitute a person, under that provision, a pawnbroker: he must so engage in the occupation that it may be known as his regular business; and the advances must be upon articles of personalty.[8]

The pledgor and pledgee have each a qualified property in the goods: the pledgor's property is conditional, depending upon the performance of the condition for repayment, etc.; and so likewise is the property of the pledgee, which depends upon its nonperformance.[9]

By the common law, a pawnbroker cannot retain goods illegally pawned, e. g., goods stolen; nor can the purchaser from him retain them as against the rightful owner.

At common law, the rights of a pawnbroker are the rights of an ordinary pledgee; but, owing to abuses, legislatures seek to control the business by special statutory regulations. See PLEDGE.

[1] Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa, 36 (1870).

[2] Smith v. Corporation of Washington, 20 How. 147 (1857); Hooe v. Mayor of Alexandria, 1 Cranch, C. C. 98 (1802).

[3] State v. District Court of Ramsey Co., 33 Minn. 164 (1885).

[4] F. pan, gown, skirt, pane: L. pannus, cloth. The readiest pledge was clothing,— Skeat.

[5] [2 Bl. Com. 452.

[6] See Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Ray. 913 (1702); Johnson v. Smith, 11 Humph. 396 (1850); Surber v. McClintic, 10 W. Va. 242 (1877).

[7] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1869, § 9: 14 St. L. 116.

[8] City of Chicago v. Hulbert, 118 Ill. 636 (1886).

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 396.

PAY.[1] v. To discharge an obligation by a performance according to its terms or requirements, whether the obligation be for money, merchandise, or services.[2]

To deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, in either money or goods, to his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged.[3]

n. Money, other property, or services, accepted in discharge of an obligation: as, an amount given to a person in the military service, in consideration of personal service.[4] See FIX, 3.

Payable. Dischargeable by delivery of an equivalent in value, usually in money; also, due in present time, matured. See DUE.

Payee. He to whom payment has been or is to be made. Payer. He who makes or ought to make payment. Payor is rare.

Payee refers, in particular, to the person in whose favor a bill of exchange, check, or draft is drawn.

Repay. May be synonymous with "restore." [5]

Unpaid. Is more commonly applied to a debt due than to a debt undue.[6]

Payment. 1. Delivery by a debtor to his creditor of the amount due.[7] Opposed, non-payment.

That is payment which the parties contract shall be accepted as payment. It may be made in something else than money.[8]

Originally, the performance of a promise to pay money, at the time and in the manner required by the terms of the contract; but has been extended to include the delivery of money in satisfaction of a debt after default made in paying according to the contract.[9]

If a commodity, like wood, is accepted, upon a note for money, in pursuance of a subsequent agreement, the transaction constitutes an "accord and satisfaction."[9]

Implies a voluntary act by the debtor looking to the satisfaction, in whole or in part, of the demand.[10]

[1] F. paier, payer, to content: L. pacere, to pacify, appease.

[2] Tolman v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 1 Cush. 76 (1848), Forbes, J.

[3] [Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 527 (1867), Hunt, J.; 15 Barb. 274.

[4] See Sherburne v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 496 (1880).

[5] Dunnegan v. United States, 17 Ct. Cl. 258 (1881).

[6] Sloane v. Anderson, 57 Wis. 133 (1883).

[7] [Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 250 (1868), Chase, C. J.

[8] Huffmans v. Walker, 26 Gratt. 316 (1875).

[9] Ulsch v. Muller, 143 Mass. 379 (1887), Field, J.

[10] Detroit, &c. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 113 (1883); Bradford Academy v. Grover, 55 Vt. 465 (1883). See

2. As a plea, money or its equivalent in value.

In Pennsylvania, the courts of law, from a time antedating 1770, have exercised chancery powers upon a plea of "payment, with leave, etc." This plea, after notice of the special matter proposed to be offered by way of defense, enables the defendant to give evidence of anything which will prove that in equity and good conscience the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. The notice is considered as, in effect, a bill in equity; and the plea and the notice operate substantially as a bill of injunction. The defendant's equity is administered through the medium of a jury.[1]

Involuntary or compulsory payment. A payment made under compulsion, coercion, or duress. Voluntary payment. A payment made from choice.

A voluntary payment is made by the debtor on his own motion, without compulsory process.

A payment made upon execution is not, therefore, a voluntary payment.[2]

The coercion or duress which will render a payment involuntary must in general consist of some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the person exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of another, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by making payment.[3]

An action does not lie to recover money claimed without right, if the payment was made voluntarily, and with full knowledge of the facts upon which the claim was predicated. It is not enough that the payment was made under protest. To authorize a recovery, the payment must have been compulsory, that is, made under coercion, actual or legal. A payment made to prevent a seizure of property which can only take place by legal proceeding, in which the defendant may defend, is voluntary.[4]

Where a party pays an illegal demand with knowledge of the facts which render it illegal, without immediate and urgent necessity therefor, and not to release from detention nor to prevent an immediate seizure of his person or property, such payment must be deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered. Filing a written protest cannot make a payment involuntary.[1]

That is a correct statement of the rule at common law. Cases may be found in which the language of the court, separated from the facts, would seem to imply that a protest alone was sufficient to show that the payment was not voluntary; but on examination it will be found that the protest was used to give effect to other attending circumstances.[2]

It suffices if the payment, caused on the one part by an illegal demand, is made on the other part reluctantly, and in consequence of that illegality, and without the person being able to regain possession of his property except by submitting to the payment.[3]

See further DURESS; EXTORTION; PROTEST, 1; REVENUE; TAX, 2.

Non-payment. See PROTEST, 2.

Part payment. The part payment of a debt which will take a case out of the statute of limitations means the payment of a smaller sum on account of a larger sum due.

Payment of part of an outlawed debt implies an admission that the balance is still due and a promise to pay it. The act of payment on account takes the case out of the statute.[4]

The principle is that the payer intends to acknowledge the greater debt to be still due.[5]

Oral agreements are competent to prove that a payment of money, the delivery of a note, the settlement of accounts, or the assuming of an obligation of a pecuniary nature, are, as between the parties, payments on account or in reduction of a note or other debt within the meaning of the statute.[6]

Nothing can justly be considered as payment in fact but that which is in truth such, unless something else is expressly agreed to be received in its place.[7]

In ordinary transactions, a check on a bank, payable on demand, is payment. But a note of the debtor, or of a third party, is not a payment of a precedent debt, unless specially agreed to.[8]

By the general commercial law, a promissory note also 2 La. An. 26; 23 Mo. 285; 3 Duer, 441; 19 Barb. 15; 6 Heisk. 135; 12 W. Va. 780.

[1] Hawk v. Geddis, 16 S. & R. *28 (1827); 1 Rawle, 304; 9 Pa. St. 123; 11 S. & R. *190; 94 N. Y. 333; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 516–36.

[2] [Nichols v. Knowles, 3 McCrary, 478 (1882), McCrary, Judge.

[3] Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 272 (1861), Field, C. J.; Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210 (1877), Field, J.

[4] Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. v. Tappan, 16 Blatch. 297–302 (1879), cases, Wallace, J.; Nichols v. United States, 7 Wall. 128 (1868), cases.

[1] Wabaunsee County v. Commissioners, 8 Kan. 436 (1871), cases, Valentine, J.

[2] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Commissioners, 98 U. S. 544, 543 (1878), cases, Waite, C. J.

[3] Swift Co. v. United States, 111 U. S. 29 (1884), cases, Matthews, J., quoting Maxwell v. Griswold, 10 How. 256 (1850), Woodbury, J. See also Maxwell v. San Luis Opispo County, 71 Cal. 466 (1886); 18 Cent. Law J. 188–90 (1884), cases; 20 id. 224–28 (1885), cases; 20 Cent. Law J. (1885), cases; 68 Ga. 122; 74 Me. 84; 100 Pa. 346; 101 id. 255–57. As to recovery of money paid under a mistake of fact, see 1 Harv. Law Rev. 211–22 (1887), cases.

[4] Waters v. Tompkins, 2 Crompt., M. & R. *726 (1835), Parke, B.

[5] United States v. Wilder, 13 Wall. 256 (1871).

[6] Blanchard v. Blanchard, 122 Mass. 562 (1877), cases, Endicott, J.; Taylor v. Foster, 132 Mass. 33 (1882), cases; 6 Col. 589; 29 Minn. 174; 91 N. Y. 210; 37 Hun, 97; 22 N. H. 219; 28 Eng. L. & E. 454.

[7] The Kimball, 3 Wall. 45 (1865).

[8] Downey v. Hicks, 14 How. 249 (1852).

does not extinguish the debt for which it is given, unless that be the express agreement; it merely extends the period for payment of the debt. Acceptance of the note is considered as accompanied with the condition of its payment.[1]

Demand of payment of commercial paper must be made on the maker or acceptor personally at his place of business or dwelling. Neither bankruptcy nor death will excuse a neglect. The holder is the proper person to make the demand, but the law makes a notary public his agent. What the notary does must appear distinctly in his protest.[2]

See APPLICATION, 2; ASSUMPSIT; DEBT; DEFER; DEMAND, 2; GRACE; NEGOTIABLE; PLACE, 1; REIMBURSE; TENDER, 1, Legal.

Payment into court. When the defendant in an action for a certain sum of money admits that a part of the sum is due, he may plead "payment of money into court," thereby stating that he brings a sum into court ready to be paid the plaintiff who has no claim to a larger amount.

The plea is accompanied by actual payment of the admitted sum to the proper officer of the court, for the plaintiff. Should the plaintiff not accept the same, but proceed with the action and fail to prove that a larger sum is due, he pays the costs accruing since the tender was perfected.

When a debtor, before suit is brought, tenders a certain sum in lawful tender, absolutely and without condition, to his creditor, which sum is refused, after suit brought he will be relieved from paying interest from the date of the tender, and from paying costs, if the plaintiff recovers no more than the sum tendered. But, if the tender be made pending the suit, it cannot avail, unless the defendant follows it up with an offer to pay the money into court, or submit to a judgment for the admitted sum.[3]

A species of confession of action; and necessary, for the most part, upon pleading a tender,— is itself a kind of tender. The accrued costs are also to be paid into court. All may be done by a motion.[4]

Admits a special contract, sued on. Beyond the sum brought in, is no acknowledgment. Does not waive the benefit of a defense, though that be to the whole claim. After non-acceptance, the case goes on as if no money had been proffered.[5]

PEACE.[6] A state of quiet or tranquillity; freedom from disturbance, or agitation; calm; repose.[7]

The tranquillity enjoyed by a political society, internally by the good order which reigns among its members, externally by the good understanding it has with other nations.[1]

1. Good conduct, public order and decorum, within a community.

"The common law hath ever had a special care and regard for the conservation of the peace; for peace is the very end and foundation of civil society."[2]

Offenses against the public peace are: threatening, or demanding any valuable thing, by letter; affrays; riots, routs, unlawful assemblies; forcible entry and detainer; going unusually armed; spreading false news; challenges to fight; libels. All criminal offenses are against the peace, and are so laid in indictments.[3]

Articles of the peace. Complaint on oath to a magistrate of reasonable fear of harm to self or property from what another threatens; "articles to keep the peace."

The accused gives security to appear at the next quarter sessions, and, meanwhile, to keep the peace toward all persons. He may except to the complaint for insufficiency; and, by affidavits, he may reduce the amount of bail demanded; but he cannot, by affidavit, controvert the allegations in the articles. Such articles are included within "surety for good behavior;" which may be required of any person suspected to be not of good fame, even of an acquitted prisoner.[4]

Bill of peace. A bill brought by a person to establish and perpetuate a right which he claims, and which, from its nature, may be controverted by different persons, at different times, and by different actions; or, where separate attempts have already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice requires that the party should be quieted in the right, if it is already sufficiently established, or if it should be sufficiently established under the direction of the court.[5]

The design is to secure repose from perpetual litigation. Equity suppresses useless litigation and prevents multiplicity of suits.[6] Compare QUIA, Timet; QUIET, 2.

Breach of the peace. An act of assault or violence.

A violation of public order; the offense of disturbing the public peace.

---

[1] The Kimball, ante; 8 Conn. 472; 37 id. 559.

[2] Musson v. Lake, 4 How. 274-75 (1846), cases. As to presumptions of payment, see 30 Alb. Law J. 84-88, 103-8, 124-27 (1884), cases.

[3] Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co., 32 F. R. 316 (1887), cases, Simonton, J.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 304.

[5] Elliott v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co., 66 Pa. 87 (1870): 1 Tidd, Pr. 624-25; 100 U. S. 673.

[6] L. pax, pacem, compact: pacere, to agree.

[7] Webster's Dict.

[1] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 349.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 142-52, 268. The king's peace, 1 Law Q. Rev. 35-50 (1885).

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 251; 10 Pa. 389; 13 East, 171.

[5] 2 Story, Eq. § 853; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. 282 (1816); Alexander v. Pendleton, 8 Cranch, 468 (1814); Holland v. Challen, 101 U. S. 19-20 (1884), cases; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 246.

The term, which is generic, includes unlawful assemblies, riots, affrays, forcible entry and detainer, the wanton discharge of fire-arms near a sick person, sending challenges and provoking to fight, going armed in public without lawful cause, to the alarm of the public, and other acts of a similar character. The offense is committed in the presence of an officer, though at some distance from him and in the dark, if he can detect the act, and could see the person doing it if it were light.[1]

Court of quarter sessions of the peace. See SESSION, Quarter Sessions.

Justice of the peace. An officer originally appointed under the common law to maintain the public peace. An inferior judicial officer with jurisdiction to determine minor statutory controversies, and to commit offenders on criminal complaints.

Some justices have their power to maintain the peace annexed to other offices which they hold; and others have, or had, it merely by itself, and were thence named custodes or conservatores pacis. Those that were so virtute officii still continue; but the latter sort are superseded by the modern justices. The sovereign is the principal conservator of the peace; hence it is called the "king's peace." The lord chancellor and the justices of the king's bench (by virtue of office) are general conservators of the peace, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them to keep it: other judges are only so in their own courts. The coroner is also a conservator of the peace; and so are sheriffs and constables.[2]

Their common-law powers relate exclusively to matters affecting the public peace, and to the arrest and punishment of wrong-doers; the extent of their jurisdiction in the trial and punishment of offenders is regulated by local statutes.[3]

They have no civil jurisdiction at common law.[4]

See ARREST, 2; BEHAVIOR; BRAWL; CONSTABLE; CONTEMPT, 1; MAGISTRATE; NIGHT-WALKERS; PAPER, 6; SHERIFF; SUMMARY.

2. The reverse of war; that state in which every one quietly enjoys his rights, or, if controverted, amicably discusses them by force of argument.[5]

A peace between states lately belligerent is a return to a state of amity and intercourse, implying no intention to recommence hostilities. It implies that redress of wrongs has been obtained, or that the intention is renounced of seeking to obtain redress. The first agreements are called preliminaries, and a peace at this stage is a "preliminary peace" in contrast with the "definitive peace."[1]

Articles of peace. The preliminary articles between Great Britain and the American Colonies were signed November 30, 1782, and the definitive treaty at Paris, September 3, 1783.[2]

PEAS. See GRAIN.

PECULATION.[3] Appropriation of public money or goods; embezzlement of public funds.

One of the purposes of the New York act of 1875, c. 19, as the word "peculation" in its title indicates, and perhaps its primary purpose, is to afford additional security against the betrayal of official trusts by imposing severer punishment for embezzlements, or other frauds by public officers in misapplying public property, than was provided by existing laws.[4]

PECUNIARY.[5] Pertaining to money; monetary.

A pecuniary loss is of money or of something by which money, or a thing of money value, may be acquired.[6]

In Rhode Island, a divorce may be had from a husband who, without cause, grossly or wantonly and cruelly refuses or neglects to provide suitable maintenance for his wife, he being of "sufficient pecuniary ability" to make such provision. The reference is to the possession of means in property to provide the necessary maintenance, not to capacity for acquiring such means by labor.[7]

See CIRCUMSTANCES, 2; CONSIDERATION, 2; INTEREST, 1; MONEY; RESPONSIBLE.

PEDDLER. Originally, a foot-trader; by custom, a person who travels from place to place, and carries about with him on his back, on horseback, or in a vehicle, articles of merchandise for sale.[8]

One who deals in small or petty things; as, one who goes from house to house selling milk in small quantities.[9]

A dealer who supplies the same customers, regularly and continuously, may be a peddler; as, a butcher who delivers meat from a wagon.[10]

---

[1] People v. Bartz, 53 Mich. 495 (1884), Champlin, J.; Galvin v. State, 6 Coldw. 294 (1869); City of Corvallis v. Carlile, 10 Oreg. 142 (1882).

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 349.

[3] Wenzler v. People, 58 N. Y. 530 (1874); Allbright v. Lapp, 26 Pa. 101 (1856); Way's Case, 41 Mich. 303 (1879); 15 Ill. 391; 4 Kan. Law J. 113, 128 (1886) — Chicago Leg. Adv.

[4] Dunnagan v. Shaffer, 48 Ark. 477 (1886), cases.

[5] [Vattel, Law of Nations, b. 4, § 1, *490.

[1] Woolsey, Int. Law, 5 ed. § 158.

[2] As to the effect of the treaty upon citizenship, see Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. *247 (1830).

[3] L. peculari, to appropriate to one's own use: peculium, private property.

[4] Bork v. People, 91 N. Y. 16 (1883). See 4 Bl. Com 122.

[5] L. pecunia, property: pecua, pecus, cattle. See Webster's Dict.; 5 Binn. *244. Compare CHATTEL.

[6] [Green v. Hudson River R. Co., 32 Barb. 33 (1860), Allen, J.; Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co., 29 N. Y. 274 (1864).

[7] Farnsworth v. Farnsworth, 16 R. I. — (1886); Hammond v. Hammond, 15 id. 40 (1885).

[8] Higgins v. Rinker, 47 Tex. 402-3 (1877).

[9] City of Chicago v. Bartee, 100 Ill. 61 (1881).

[10] Davis v. Mayor of Macon, 64 Ga. 134 (1879).

A commercial traveler who does not carry with him the goods sold is not a peddler.[1]

See COMMERCE; HAWKER.

PEDESTRIAN. See ROAD, 1, Law of; SIDEWALK.

PEDIGREE. The lineage, descent or succession of families.

All authorities agree that this may be proved by reputation, that is, by hearsay. The term embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when those events happened.[2]

In order to come within the exception to the rule which excludes hearsay evidence, the question of pedigree itself must be in issue; and alleged declarations must have been made before the question arose.[3] See HEARSAY.

PEDIS. See POSSESSIO.

PEER.[4] An equal in rank or condition: as, in "trial by one's peers."

In early times the lord was legislator and judge over all his feudatories; and, therefore, the vassals of inferior lords were bound by their fealty to attend their domestic court barons (instituted in every manor for doing speedy and effectual justice to all the tenants) in order to form a jury or homage for the trial of their fellow-tenants. Upon this account they are distinguished as the "peers" of the court, pares curtis, or pares curiæ. In like manner, the barons themselves, or the lords of inferior districts, were denominated "peers" of the king's court, and bound to attend him upon summons.[5] Compare SUIT, 1.

By Magna Charta, ch. 29, no freeman shall be affected in his person or property "nisi per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ," except by lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.[6]

"Judgment of his peers" means "trial per pais," by the country, that is, by a jury.[7]

Peerage. See PARLIAMENT.

PEINE. L. Fr. Punishment, penance; also, prison (prisone).

Peine forte et dure. Punishment severe and hard; or prison hard and strong. The name of the punishment inflicted upon a prisoner who refused to plead to an indictment for felony.

The accused, nearly naked, was laid on his back, upon the ground, with arms and feet drawn apart by cords, and with as great a weight of iron or stone placed upon his chest as he could bear. The next day he had three morsels of bread, and the next day three draughts of the stagnant water nearest the prison; and so on, on alternate days, till he died or answered. The practice was abolished in 1772.[1]

The desire probably was to save the accused's property, otherwise forfeited, to his family.[2]

PENAL.[3] Pertaining to, prescribing, or incurring punishment; with a penalty attached.

Penal action. A suit for a penalty.

Penal bill. See Penal Sum.

Penal clause. The words in a statute which attach a penalty to the act forbidden by it.

Penal servitude. See SERVITUDE, 1.

Penal statute. An act which inflicts a forfeiture for transgressing its provisions.[4] See STATUTE.

Penal sum. The sum in a bond declared to be forfeited in case of non-fulfillment of the covenant.

When the bond is for the payment of money, the penal sum is usually twice the real debt. The instrument was formerly called a "penal bill."[5] See further Penalty.

Penalty. Punishment; also, money recoverable by way of punishment; and, also, a sum named in a bond as a forfeit in case the obligor fails to comply with the conditions.[6]

The imposition of the payment of a sum of money, or some personal suffering.[7]

Is in the nature of a punishment for the non-performance of an act or for the performance of an unlawful act, and in the former case stands in lieu of the act.[8]

Involves the idea of punishment, and its character is not changed by the mode in which it is inflicted, whether by a civil or a criminal prosecution.[9]

Includes fines, which are pecuniary penalties.[10]

"Penalty," "fine," and "forfeiture" are often used

---

[1] Exp. Taylor, 58 Miss. 481 (1880). See also 2 Lea, 28; L. R., 8 Q. B. 303; Act of Congress, 1 July, 1862.

[2] Swink v. French, 11 Lea, 80 (1883): 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; 1 Whart. Ev. § 208; American Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 516 (1875); 105 id. 577.

[3] Commonwealth v. Felch, 132 Mass. 23 (1882). See generally Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 397 (1886), cases, Woods, J.

[4] F. per, peer: L. parem, par, equal.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 54, 316; 1 id. 401; 4 id. 260, 348.

[6] 3 Bl Com. 350-51.

[7] Fetter v. Wilt, 46 Pa. 460 (1864); Craig v. Fetter, 65 id. 399 (1870); 2 Md. 453; 62 Barb. 34.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 327, 325.

[2] See Washb. Jud. Hist. 142.

[3] L. poena, pain, suffering, punishment.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 161.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 340.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 340.

[7] [Hills v. Hunt, 28 E. L. & E. 396 (1854), Maule, J.

[8] County of San Luis Obispo v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. 245 (1886), Searls, C.

[9] United States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 611 (1880) Field, J. See also 16 S. & R. 322; 13 Abb. Pr. 237; 21 How. Pr. 370; 5 Q. B. D. 596.

[10] The Strathairly, 124 U. S. 571 (1888), Matthews, J.

confusedly. "Penalty" is the general term.[1] See FINE, 2; FORFEITURE; PUNISHMENT.

When a penalty is inserted in an instrument to secure the performance or enjoyment of a collateral object, the latter is considered as the principal intent of the instrument, the penalty as accessory, and, therefore, intended only to secure the due performance thereof or the damage incurred by non-performance. In every such case, the true test by which to ascertain whether relief can or cannot be had in equity is to consider whether compensation can be made or not. If it cannot be made, a court of equity will not interfere. If it can be made, if the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, then equity will relieve the party, upon paying the principal and interest. If it is to secure the performance of some collateral act or undertaking, a court of equity will direct an issue quantum damnificatus; and, when the amount of damages is ascertained by a jury, will grant relief upon the payment of such damages. As the penalty is designed as a mere security, when the party obtains his money, or his damages, he gets all that he expected, all that, in justice, he is entitled to. But there is a distinction between a "penalty," strictly so called, and "liquidated damages." The latter properly occur when the parties have agreed that, in case one party shall do a stipulated act, or omit to do it, the other party shall receive a certain sum as the just, appropriate, and conventional amount of the damages sustained by such act or omission. In cases of this sort, courts of equity will not interfere to grant relief; but will deem the parties entitled to fix their own measure of damages; provided always that the damages do not assume the character of gross extravagance, or of wanton and unreasonable disproportion to the nature or extent of the injury. On the other hand, courts of equity will not suffer their jurisdiction to be evaded merely by the fact that the parties have called a sum "damages" which is in fact and intent a penalty; or because they have designedly used language and inserted provisions which are in their nature penal, and endeavored to cover up their objects under other disguises.[2] See DAMAGES, Liquidated.

The mode in which penalties shall be enforced and what disposition shall be made of the proceeds are matters of legislative discretion.[3]

While the judgment on a penal bond is technically rendered for the full amount of the penalty, the execution will be limited to the amount of the damages proved to have been sustained by the breach of the bond.[4]

Debt lies for a statutory penalty because the sum demanded is certain, but, though in form ex contractu, it is founded in fact upon a tort. The necessity of establishing a joint liability does not exist; it is sufficient if the liability of any of the defendants is shown. Judgment may be entered against them and in favor of the others whose complicity in the offense, for which the penalty is prescribed, is not proved, precisely as though the action were in form as well as in substance ex delicto.[1] See CONTRIBUTION.

Penalties are never extended by implication. They must be expressly imposed or they cannot be enforced.[2]

Extreme penalty of the law: death, q. v.

PENCIL. See WRITING.

PEND.[3] To be in process of settlement or adjustment.

A petition, as soon as filed, is "pending."[4]

An action is "pending" or "depending" until the judgment is fully certified.[5]

"Another action pending" is a plea in abatement (q. v.) that another suit is already pending, upon the same subject-matter or cause of action, and between the same parties, in person or interest.

See further Lis, Pendens.

PENITENTIARY.[6] A prison or place of punishment;[7] any place designed for the confinement of convicts; a State's prison.

By statute 19 Geo. III (1779), all offenders liable to transportation may be confined at hard labor in certain "penitentiary houses," to be created by virtue of that act.[8]

Sir William Blackstone, co-operating with John Howard, was influential in procuring the passage of that act,— legislation which led the way to more just and rational views of prison discipline.[9]

See INFAMY; LABOR, 1, Hard; PRISON.

PENSION.[10] 1. (1) In Gray's Inn, an assembly of the members of the society to "consult" over their affairs. (2) An annual payment due from each member.

A "pension writ" was a sort of peremptory order against a member who was in arrears with his dues.[11]

2. In lieu of a corody, especially when due

[1] Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300 (1856); United States v. Mathews, 23 F. R. 75 (1885).

[2] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1318-18. Approved, Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 455 (1883), Matthews, J.; ib. 454-58, cases. And see McPherson v. Robertson, 82 Ala. 402 (1886), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 143-46 (1884), cases; 17 Ct. Cl. 215; 11 F. R. 119; 12 id. 444; 48 Pa. 450; 54 id. 329; 71 id. 180; 19 S. C. 434.

[3] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 513, 523 (1885).

[4] State v. Estabrook, 29 Kan. 744 (1883).

[1] Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 538 (1873), Field, Justice.

[2] Elliott v. East Penn. R. Co., 99 U. S. 576 (1878).

[3] L. pendere, to hang.

[4] Wentworth v. Farmington, 48 N. H. 207 (1868); 3 Cliff. 371; 4 Watts, 156.

[5] Wegman v. Childs, 41 N. Y. 162 (1869); Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. 170, 174 (1872); 142 Mass. 96.

[6] L. pœnitentia, penitence: pœna, punishment. "Penitentiary" has meant: a penitent, an ordainer of penances, and a place for penitents. See Locus, Penitentiæ.

[7] Millar v. State, 2 Kan. 183 (1863).

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 371.

[9] 1 W. Bl. Rep. xxi; 1 Shars. Bl. xvi; 4 Bl. Com. 371.

[10] F. pension: L. pensionem, pensio, weighing, deliberation; payment.

[11] [Cowell's Law Dict.

from ecclesiastical persons, and which is a right of sustenance or to receive certain allotments of victual and provision for one's maintenance, a "pension" or sum of money is sometimes substituted.[1]

3. A periodical allowance of money granted by a government for services rendered, in particular to a soldier or sailor in connection with a war or with military operations.[2] Whence pensionary (n. and adj.) and pensioner. See DEBT, Public.

PEONAGE. The state or condition of a peon,— in Mexico, a debtor held in servitude until he has worked out his debt. See CITIZEN, Amendment, XIV.

PEOPLE. Ordinarily, the entire body of the inhabitants of a State. In a political sense, that portion of the inhabitants who are intrusted with political power; the qualified voters.[3]

The words "the people" must be determined by the connection. In some cases they refer to the qualified voters, in others to the state in its sovereign capacity.[4]

The United States government proceeds directly from the people; is "ordained and established" in the name of the people. It is emphatically and truly a government of the people. In form and substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them, and for their benefit.[5]

Under our system, the "people," who in England are called "subjects," constitute the sovereign.[6]

The simple word "people" is sometimes applied to a nation or foreign power.[7]

When the constitution of a State directs that processes shall run in the name of the State, a process in the name of the "people" will be held deficient, notwithstanding the form be statutory.[8]

See CITIZEN; COUNTRY; GOVERNMENT; LEX, Salus, etc.; MAGISTRATE; NATION; SOVEREIGNTY; STATE, 3; WELFARE.

PEPPERCORN. The berry of the pepper-plant. In England, "one peppercorn" is sometimes named as a nominal rent.

A peppercorn rent is not a rent within sec. 3, subs. 4, of the Conveyancing Act of 1881, such peppercorn not being paid.[1]

PER. L. By; through. Compare PUR.

Introduces both Latin and English phrases. Examples of the latter are: per advice; per year;[2] opinion per Story, J.

The original of the character ℔.

Per annum. By the year; yearly.

Per capita. By heads — individuals. See CAPUT, Per, etc.

Per curiam. By the court. See CURIA.

Per fraudem. By fraud: as, a replication alleging fraud as to matter pleaded in discharge. See FRAUS.

Per industriam. By exertion or labor.

Per infortunium. By misadventure.

Per minas. By threats.

Per my et per tout. L. F. By half and by the whole; of a moiety and of all. See JOINT-TENANTS.

Per pais. F. Per patriam. L. By the country or jury. See COUNTRY, 2; PAIS.

Per proc. By procuration, q. v.; by letter of attorney.

Per quod. By which; whereby.

In common-law pleading, introduces a conclusion of law upon facts previously stated. The rule that special damage must be particularly charged, is termed "laying the action with a per quod."[3]

Per quod consortium (q. v.) amisit. By which he (the husband) lost her (the wife's) company.

Per quod servitium amisit. By which he (the plaintiff) lost her (or his) service.

Per se. By itself; in itself considered. As, an act of negligence per se; fraud per se; a nuisance per se; a thing malum per se.

Per stirpes. By roots; by the stocks; according to representation. Opposed, per capita, q. v.

Per verba. By words — de futuro, of the future (tense); — de præsenti, of the present (tense). See MARRIAGE.

PERAMBULATION.[4] Going around the boundaries of land, with witnesses, to determine and preserve recollection of its extent, and to see that no encroachments have been made and no land-marks removed.[5] Compare PROCESSIONING.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 40; 1 id. 283.

[2] See at length R. S. §§ 4692-4791; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 468; United States v. Hall, 98 U. S. 343 (1878); United States v. Moyers, 15 F. R. 417 (1882).

[3] [Blair v. Ridgely, 41 Mo. 176 (1867), Wagner, J.; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 568 (1883); Cooley, Const. Lim. 29, 598.

[4] Black v. Trower, 79 Va. 126 (1884), Lewis, P.

[5] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 403-4 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[6] United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 208 (1882).

[7] United States v. Quincy, 6 Pet. *467 (1832).

[8] Manville v. Battle Mountain Smelting Co., 17 F. R. 126 (1883); Perkins v. State, 60 Ala. 9 (1877).

[1] Moody v. Yates' Contract, 28 Ch. D. 661 (1885).

[2] See Curtiss v. Howell, 39 N. Y. 213 (1868).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 124.

[4] L. per-ambulare, to walk through.

[5] [Greenville v. Mason, 57 N. H. 393 (1876); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 146, n.

PERCEPTION.[1] Taking, receiving; pernancy, q. v.

"Perception of rents and profits is the mortgagor's right until a final determination of the right to sell [by the mortgagee], and a sale made accordingly."[2]

PERCOLATE. See AQUA, Currit, etc.

May refer to any flowage of sub-surface water, other than that of a running stream, open, visible, clearly traceable.[3]

PEREMPTORY.[4] Final, determinate, without hope of renewing or altering.[5]

That for which no reason is or need be assigned; not admitting of contention or controversy; final; positive; absolute; obligatory: as, a peremptory — challenge, day, defense, instruction, mandamus or other writ, nonsuit, rule, qq. v.

PERFECT. Complete; also, to make complete: as, a perfect obligation, a perfect title; to perfect — an appeal, bail, a copyright, a deed, an invention, qq. v. Whence imperfect.

If excepted to, "bail" must be perfected; that is, the persons must justify themselves by each swearing that he is worth the sum for which he is bail, after paying his debts.[6]

A perfect external "obligation" confers the right of compulsion; a perfect "right," the right to compel those who refuse to fulfill the corresponding obligation,[7] q. v.

A perfect "title" means a title which is good in law and equity.[8]

A perfect "machine" may mean a "perfected" invention; not a machine perfectly constructed, but so constructed as to embody all the essential elements of the invention, in a form that would make them practical and operative, so as to accomplish the result.[9]

PERFORMANCE.[10] 1. Accomplishment, fulfillment, consummation, discharge. Specifically, doing as one has agreed; also, the thing itself as done; and, also, discharge of the obligation. Opposed non-performance.

Such a thorough fulfillment of a duty as puts an end to obligations by leaving nothing more to be done.[1]

"Perform" is synonymous with "fulfill."[2]

In the Statute of Frauds, "performed" means completely consummated.[3]

"Performance" of a contract means performance in specie of the agreement; "satisfaction" occurs where the contracting party does something in lieu of the thing contracted for.[4]

Part performance. Such an act done in performance of a contract that non-enforcement of the contract would be a fraud.[5]

The Statute of Frauds requires that a contract concerning realty shall be in writing. Courts of equity have relaxed the rigidity of the rule, holding that a part performance of an oral contract removes the bar of the statute, on the ground that it would be a fraud for a vendor to take advantage from the absence of a written instrument when he has permitted the contract to be partly executed; especially so, where valuable improvements have been made by the vendee.[6]

Nothing is to be considered as a part performance which does not put the party in a situation which is a fraud upon him unless the agreement is performed. . . The acts should clearly appear to be done solely with a view to the agreement being performed. . . On this account, acts which are merely introductory or ancillary to an agreement are not considered as a part performance thereof, although attended with expense.[7]

The existence of the parol contract and its terms must be shown by full, complete, satisfactory, and indubitable proof. The evidence must define the boundaries and fix the consideration; exclusive and notorious possession must have been taken under it, and continuously maintained; and the contract must have been so far in part performed that compensation in damages would be inadequate and rescission inequitable and unjust.[8]

Specific performance. Doing as one has agreed to do. That branch of equity jurisprudence which compels a party to perform his contract in specie.

[1] L. per-cipere, capere, to take wholly or entirely.

[2] Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 393 (1882), Bradley, J.; 2 Bl. Com. 163.

[3] Mosier v. Caldwell, 7 Nev. 367 (1872).

[4] Per'-emp-tory. L. peremptorius, decisive; per-imere, to take away entirely, cut off, destroy.

[5] [Furman v. Applegate, 23 N. J. L. 29 (1850).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 291.

[7] [Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 128 (1867): Vattel, Law of Nations, § 17.

[8] Warner v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 21 Conn. *449 (1852).

[9] American Hide, &c. Splitting, &c. Machine Co. v. American Tool, &c. Co., 4 Fish. 298–99 (1870), Shepley, J.

[10] M. E. parfourmen, parfournen: O. F. par, per, thoroughly; fournir, to furnish.

[1] Hare, Contracts, 569 (1887).

[2] Ætna Ins. Co. v. Kittles, 81 Ind. 97 (1881).

[3] Boydell v. Drummond, 11 East, 85 (1809). On substantial performance, see 19 Cent. Law J. 442–46 (1884), cases. Time, as affecting performance, 26 id. 283–86 (1888), cases.

[4] [Johnson v. Collins, 20 Ala. 441 (1852).

[5] [Armstrong v. Kattenhorn, 11 Ohio, 271 (1842); 15 id. 248.

[6] Neale v. Neales, 9 Wall. 9 (1869); Purcell v. Miner, 4 id. 517 (1866).

[7] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 761–62; Plymale v. Comstock, 9 Oreg 318 (1881); Dudley v. Hayward, 11 F. R. 543 (1882); Warren v. Warren, 105 Ill. 576 (1883).

[8] Brinser v. Anderson, Sup. Ct. Pa. (1888); Brown v. Hoag, 35 Minn. 375–76 (1886); Burns v. Daggett, 141 Mass 373 (1886); Halsey v. Peters, 79 Va. 67 (1884), cases; Browne, St. F. §§ 457–58.

An equitable remedy, for it gives more than damages for non-performance, which only are recoverable at law. The contract constitutes the right. The object is to place the complainant, as nearly as possible, in the situation in which the defendant had agreed he should be placed.[1]

A court of law is inadequate [not competent] to decree a specific performance, and can relieve the injured party only by a compensation in damages, which, in many cases, would fall far short of the redress which his situation would require. Wherever, therefore, the party wants the thing in specie, and he cannot otherwise be fully compensated, a court of equity will grant him a specific performance.[2]

Specific relief, execution, performance or enforcement of contract will be granted when it is apparent, from a view of all the circumstances of the case, that it will subserve the ends of justice; and it will be withheld when it appears it will produce hardship or injustice to either party. When specific execution, which would work a hardship were it unconditionally performed, will work equity when decreed on conditions, it will be decreed conditionally.

Not a matter of right in either party; but a matter resting in the discretion of the court, to be exercised upon a consideration of all the circumstances of each case.[3]

Not decreed in favor of a party who has disregarded his own reciprocal obligation; nor where duties to be fulfilled (as, by a grantee) are continuous, and involve the exercise of skill, personal labor, and cultivated judgment; nor where there is want of mutuality; nor where there is a complete remedy at law.[4]

A contract for personal services, involving the labor, skill, and inventive genius of the person in default, cannot be specifically enforced.[5]

The original and sole equity of the jurisdiction is, that an award of damages at law will not afford adequate compensation — will not put the complainant in a situation as beneficial to him as if the agreement were specifically performed.[6]

A court of equity may decree specific performance of a contract concerning a chattel, and, while generally it will not exercise it, it is proper so to do where the plaintiff's case is good, his right clear, and the remedy at law inadequate or its enforcement attended with doubt or difficulty.[7]

While it is a rule that specific performance of a contract respecting personalty will not be decreed, because compensation is ordinarily sufficient, in cases where the circumstances are extraordinary, as respects either the property or the situation of the parties, and an action for damages would not afford an adequate remedy, equity may be invoked for specific performance. Letters patent and copyrights fall within the exception.[1]

He who seeks specific performance must show the facts which make such a decree equitable.[2]

The question, as already stated, is always one of sound judicial discretion. The contract must be definite in its terms, and be clearly proved.[3]

The plaintiff must come into court with clean hands. Omission or mistake in the agreement, or that it is unconscionable or unreasonable, or that there has been concealment, misrepresentation or any unfairness, are some of the causes which induce the court to refuse its aid. If the jurisdiction attaches, the court will go on to do complete justice, although in its progress it may decree on a matter cognizable at law.[4]

See CONDITION; CONTRACT; COVENANT; LACHES.

2. An exhibition, entertainment, qq. v.

PERIL. The risk, contingency, event, or cause of loss insured against, in a policy of marine insurance.

The old phrases "perils of the sea," "perils of navigation," and "perils of the river," are interchanged.

"Perils of the sea" are all those natural perils and operations of the elements which occur without the intervention of human agency, and which the prudence of man could not foresee, nor his strength resist.[5]

While the phrase "perils of the sea" does not cover all losses that happen on the sea, there is a principle of construction which gives it as extended a meaning as can be reasonably done. All navigation is perilous, and the rule that the insurer is liable only for losses occurring from extraordinary causes means nothing more than that a seaworthy vessel will endure all ordinary perils. The phrase is only used to describe those abnormal circumstances of dangerous navigation under which the loss occurs, be they what they may. Because the "peril" cannot be located it does not follow that there was none.[6]

See further DANGERS; RISK; SALVAGE.

PERIOD. Any portion of complete time. Designating an act to be done or to be begun, though its completion may take an uncertain time, it means the day when the [1] Tasker v. Small, 3 My. & C. *69 (1837), Cottenham, Lord Chancellor.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. § 716; Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 338 (1872).

[3] Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. 565-67 (1869), cases, Field, J.; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 127 U. S. 675 (1888), cases.

[4] Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 357-59 (1870), cases, Strong, J.

[5] Wollensak v. Briggs, 119 Ill. 453 (1887), cases.

[6] Comer v. Bankhead, 70 Ala. 496 (1881); Lead. Cas. Eq., 4 Am. ed., 1093; Harnett v. Yielding, 2 Sch. & Lefr. *553-54 (1805).

[7] Johnson v. Brooks, 98 N. Y. 343 (1883), cases.

[1] New York Paper-Bag Machine Co. v. Union Paper-Bag Machine Co., 32 F. R. 786 (1887), cases, Butler, J.

[2] Fowler v. Marshall, 29 Kan. 665 (1883).

[3] Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Lewis, 76 Va. 835 (1882).

[4] Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. *263, 276 (1831), Marshall, C. J.

[5] 3 Kent, 300; 52 Barb. 497; 43 N. Y. 419.

[6] Moores v. Louisville Underwriters, 14 F. R. 226 (1882), Hammond, D. J.; Hazard v. New England Mar. Ins. Co., 8 Pet. *585 (1834); Thames, &c. Mar. Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 57 Law T. Rep. 695 (1887), cases.

thing commences, as, the exportation of goods.[1]

A stated and recurring interval of time, a round or series of years, by which time is measured.[2]

Periodical. Recurring, made or to be made, after the lapse of a specified or regular interval of time: as, periodical allowances of money, payments of interest or of principal and interest.

PERISH. See RES, Perit, etc.

Perishable. Subject to speedy and natural decay.

But where, as in the case of a levy upon personalty, the time before a sale can be made is necessarily long, may embrace property liable to material depreciation in value from other causes than decay.[3]

In the commercial sense, designates such property as from its nature decays in a short time, without reference to the care it receives.

Of that character are many varieties of fruits, flowers, some kinds of liquors, and numerous vegetable productions. But merchantable corn is not "perishable."[4]

Fattened cattle are perishable property;[5] so are potatoes;[6] and so are skins and furs.[7]

Inherently liable to deterioration and decay. "In this case, the goods can be preserved as they are, by reasonable care, and that the sheriff is bound to bestow upon them, until the right to make a sale shall be secured by a judgment against the debtor, and an execution be issued for that purpose. The order should be modified so as to allow sale of the kid gloves, as they are shown to be inherently liable to decay and deterioration, but not so as to the underwear, neckties, shirts, jewelry, umbrellas, etc., although as to some of these the fashion may change."[8]

Where property, attached as belonging to a defendant, is sold under an order of court before judgment, the purchaser takes a title good as against all the world. Such sales, which are very ancient in their origin, proceed upon the principle of necessity. To permit the property to become worthless by natural decay would be to defeat the object of the attachment or levy.[9] See REPLEVIN, 1; SOUND, 2 (1).

A court will order the sale of realty belonging to an insolvent corporation, when there is no income with which to keep it in repair, and it is of such a character as to materially deteriorate in value pending protracted litigation.[1]

PERJURY.[2] When a lawful oath is administered, in some judicial proceeding, to a person who swears willfully, absolutely, and falsely, in a matter material to the issue or point in question.[3]

The willful giving, under oath, in a judicial proceeding or course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry.[4]

The taking of a willful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely in a matter material to the point in question.[5]

Taking a false oath in a judicial proceeding.[6]

An offense against public justice. Must be corrupt (committed malo animo), willful, positive, absolute; on a point material to the question in dispute; and the oath be administered by a court or officer having jurisdiction or authority over the subject-matter, and in a proceeding relative to a civil suit or a criminal prosecution. The breach of an extra-judicial oath is merely ground for damages for the private injury.[7]

The false statement must have been made "willfully."[8]

The officer must have had legal authority to administer the oath.[9]

The matter charged to have been falsely stated must have been material to the issue. The words used in Rev. St. are "material matter." These words were adopted from the common law; and they must be given a signification broad enough at least to cover cases of perjury at common law.[10] The section referred to provides that "If any person in any case, matter, hearing, or other proceeding, when an oath or affirmation shall be required to be taken or administered under or by any law or laws of the United States, shall, upon the taking of such oath or affirmation, knowingly and willingly swear or affirm falsely, every person so of-

[1] [Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. 579 (1857), Wayne, J.

[2] People v. Leask, 67 N. Y. 528 (1876), Folger, J.

[3] [Webster v. Peck, 31 Conn. 495 (1863), Butler, J.

[4] Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Ill. 67 (1870), Walker, J.

[5] M'Call v. Peachy, 3 Munf. 288 (1811).

[6] Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 208 (1839).

[7] Astor v. Union Ins. Co., 7 Cow. 202 (1827).

[8] Fisk v. Spring, 25 Hun, 367 (1881). See Schoul. Bailm. 397.

[9] Young v. Keller, Sup. Ct. Mo. (1888), cases; Mo. R. S. 1879, §§ 494-95, 470: 26 Cent. Law J. 420-22, 423 (1888), cases.

[1] Middleton v. New Jersey West Line R. Co., 26 N. J. E. 269 (1875).

[2] L. perjurare, to forswear: per, through, over, beyond; jurare, to bind by oath: jus, right, law.

[3] Coke, 3 Inst. 164: 4 Bl. Com. 137; 26 Ohio St. 83.

[4] 2 Bish. Cr. L., 5 ed., § 1015.

[5] Commonwealth v. Smith, 11 Allen, 253 (1865), Hoar, Judge.

[6] The Queen v. Castro ("Tichborne"), L. R., 9 Q. B. 357 (1874), Blackburn, J.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 137; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 1257.

[8] Schmidt v. Witherick, 29 Minn., 156 (1882).

[9] United States v. Curtis, 107 U. S. 672 (1882).

[10] United States v. Shinn, 8 Saw. 410-11 (1882), Deady, J.; s. c. 14 F. R. 447; 3 Crim. Law Mag. 459-83 (1882), cases.

fending shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine, not exceeding two thousand dollars, and by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor, not exceeding five years, according to the aggravation of the offense."[1]

One who swears willfully to a matter which he rashly believes, which is false, and which he had no probable cause for believing, may be convicted of the crime.[2]

The truth must be shown.[3]

Parol testimony is admissible.[4]

The testimony of one witness, unsupported, may not be enough to convict; for there may then be merely oath against oath.[5]

Subornation of perjury. Procuring another to take such a false oath as constitutes perjury in the principal.[6]

"If any person or persons shall knowingly or willingly procure any such perjury [see above] to be committed, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of subornation of perjury, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished" by fine, and by imprisonment at hard labor, as in cases of perjury,[7] q. v.; and thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until the judgment is reversed.[8]

Subornation of perjury is in its essence but a form of perjury itself. An indictment must aver that the accused knew that the testimony was false, and that in giving it the witness would commit perjury.[9]

The person solicited is not an accomplice in the crime of subornation; and the fact that he committed perjury does not prevent the jury from convicting the suborner of the solicitation on his testimony.[10]

Solicitation to commit perjury, though unsuccessful, is a misdemeanor at common law.[11] See SUBORN.

See CRIMEN, Falsi; INFAMY; SWEARING, False.

PERMANENT. Does not always embrace the idea of absolute perpetuity.[12]

Thus, "permanent residence" does not involve the idea that a change thereafter may not be made;[13] it implies that there is no present intention to make a change.[14]

"Permanently establish a county seat" does not mean to keep the county seat at a place perpetually, or for all time;[1] the legislature may at pleasure remove a county seat "permanently located."[2] See FOREVER.

An institution of learning is "permanently located" when the trustees by resolution locate the buildings with intention that the place shall be the permanent place for conducting the business of the corporation.[3]

A sidewalk need not be made of stone or brick to be "permanent" rather than "temporary."[4]

Compare ESTABLISH; PERPETUAL. See ALIMONY.

PERMIT.[5] Is more positive than "allow" or "suffer:" denotes a decided assent.[6]

Implies assent given or leave granted.[7]

May mean "suffer."[8]

Includes knowledge of what is to be done, and intention that what is done is what is to be done.[9]

One definition is "to allow by not prohibiting," as in an ordinance that "no person shall permit swine to go upon a sidewalk."[10] See SUFFER.

Permissive. Allowed; suffered: as, permissive waste, q. v.

PERNANCY.[11] Taking, receiving; enjoyment.

Pernancy of the profits of an estate is the taking, perception, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom. See PERCEPTION.

Pernor. He who receives such profits, etc.; a cestui que use.[12]

PERPETRATOR. See ACCOMPLICE.

May include an artificial person, as, a railroad company.[13]

PERPETUAL.[14] Unlimited in time; continuous: as, a perpetual — injunction, lease, statute, succession, qq. v.

A grant of perpetual succession to a corporation does not mean that the corporate existence shall be unending, but only unbroken during the term.[15] Compare PERMANENT.

See STATE, 3 (2).

PERPETUATE. To cause to endure indefinitely; to preserve from the contingency of loss or extinction.

---

[1] R. S. § 5392: Act 3 March, 1825, § 13.

[2] See United States v. Moore, 2 Low. 235-38 (1873), cases; Baldw. 370; 1 Sprague, 558; 4 McLean, 113.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 387, Cr. L. § 1321; 27 Gratt. 127.

[4] 3 Greenl. Ev. §§ 188-202; 105 Mass. 582; 107 id. 227.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 358. On corroboration, see 25 Cent. Law J. 534 (1885), cases.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 137.

[7] R. S. § 5392.

[8] R. S. § 5393. See also § 5397.

[9] United States v. Dennee, 3 Woods, 41 (1877); Commonwealth v. Douglass, 5 Metc., Mass., 244 (1842).

[10] United States v. Thompson, 31 F. R. 331 (1887), Deady, J.

[11] See 2 East, 5; 6 id. 464.

[12] Hascall v. Madison University, 8 Barb. 185 (1850).

[13] Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 563 (1879).

[14] Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 181 (1875).

[1] Newton v. Commissioners, ante.

[2] Harris v. Shaw, 13 Ill. 465 (1851).

[3] Mead v. Ballard, 7 Wall. 290 (1868).

[4] City of Lowell v. French, 6 Cush. 294 (1850). See also 23 How. Pr. 448; 12 Bush, 541.

[5] L. per-mittere, to send through, pass through.

[6] City of Chicago v. Stearns, 105 Ill. 558 (1883).

[7] Loosey v. Orser, 4 Bosw. 404 (1859).

[8] Territory v. Stone, 2 Dak. 165 (1879).

[9] Gregory v. United States, 17 Blatch. 330 (1879).

[10] Commonwealth v. Curtis, 9 Allen, 271 (1864).

[11] Per'-nan-cy. F. prendre, to take.

[12] 2 Bl. Com. 163.

[13] Philo v. Illinois Central R. Co., 33 Iowa, 47 (1871).

[14] L. perpetualis, universal, permanent: perpetuus, constant, continuous.

[15] Scanlan v. Crawshaw, 5 Mo. Ap. 339 (1878).

Perpetuate testimony. If a witness to a disputed fact is old and infirm, or going abroad, it is not unusual to file a bill to "perpetuate" his testimony, although no suit be pending.[1]

Such bills are indispensable in securing justice, as it may be impossible for a party to bring his rights presently to a judicial decision; and unless, in the meantime, he may perpetuate his proofs, the rights themselves may be lost without default in him. The civil law adopted similar means of preserving testimony. Bills to take testimony de bene esse arise when suits are actually pending.[2]

PERPETUITY. 1. Of the sovereign: absolute immortality in his political capacity.[3]

2. The settlement of an interest in property, which will go in the succession prescribed, without any power of alienation.[4]

A grant of property wherein the vesting of an interest is unlawfully postponed.[5]

So called, not because the grant, as written, would actually make the estate perpetual, but because it transgresses the limits which the law has set in restraint of grants that tend to a perpetual suspense of the title, or of its vesting, or, as it is sometimes expressed, with less accuracy, to a perpetual prevention of alienation.[6]

A limitation of property which renders it inalienable beyond the period allowed by law,[6]— a life or lives in being and twenty-one years more, with a fraction of a year added for the term of gestation, in cases of posthumous birth.

All that is required is that the estate shall vest within the prescribed period. The right of possession may be postponed longer.[7]

Perpetuities are abhorred by the law. They make estates incapable of answering the ends of social commerce, and providing for the sudden contingencies of private life, for which property was at first established.[8]

Trusts created for charitable or public purposes are not subject to the rule.[9]

See ACCUMULATION; CHARITY, 2; MORTMAIN.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 450.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1505-13; Hall v. Stout, 4 Del. Ch. 273 (1871); 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 955; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 82, 210.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 249.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 174.

[5] City of Philadelphia v. Girard's Heirs, 45 Pa. 26 (1863), Lowrie, C. J.; 10 id. 334; 88 id. 495.

[6] Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 312 (1877), Swayne, J. See also Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 494 (1860); Saund. Uses, &c. 196; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 382-88 (1885), cases, Gray, J.

[7] Bruce v. Nickerson, 141 Mass. 408 (1886).

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 174; Ould's Case, supra; De Wolf v. Lawson, 61 Wis. 474 (1884); 76 Va. 147.

[9] Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 185 (1882); Detwiller v. Hartman, 37 N. J. E. 354 (1883).

PERQUISITE. See EMOLUMENT.

PERSON. Persons in law are either natural or artificial. Natural persons are such as the God of nature formed us; artificial persons, such as are created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government — corporations or bodies politic,[1] which derive their existence and powers from legislation.[2]

In the bankruptcy acts, person included a corporation.[3]

In internal revenue laws, includes a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person.[4]

In the Revised Statutes, or any act or resolution of Congress passed subsequently to February 25, 1874, the word may extend and be applied to partnerships and corporations, unless the context shows that a more limited sense is intended.[5]

A private corporation is included within the prohibition of section one of the Fourteenth Amendment, that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws.[6]

May include a State, or the United States.[7]

Includes Indians, within habeas corpus[8] and intercourse acts.[9]

In a statute, includes women, unless the context clearly shows an intention to limit it to men.[10]

In short, while "any person or persons" comprehends every human being, the terms will be limited to the class or classes in the mind of the legislature.

While a natural person may do any act which he is not prohibited by law from doing, an artificial person can do none which the charter giving it existence does not expressly or by fair inference authorize.[11]

"Injuries to the person" import hurt to the body, physical injuries; as, in a civil damage law.[12]

Offenses against the person are: homicide, mayhem, rape, robbery, buggery, battery, wounding, false imprisonment, kidnaping, abduction.[13]

The rights of persons are those which concern and are annexed to the persons of men; and they are either absolute or relative. See RIGHT, 2.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 123, 467.

[2] United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 321 (1876).

[3] R. S. § 5013.

[4] R. S. § 3140; 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 230.

[5] R. S. § 1; 11 Wheat. 412; 12 Pet. 134; 94 U. S. 321; 8 Saw. 239, 269, 274-75, 281, 283-92; 18 F. R. 404; 87 Ind. 506.

[6] Pembina Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 189 (1888).

[7] Alabama Certificates, 12 Op. Att.-Gen. 179 (1867); ib. 217; 9 Kan. 194; 33 Minn. 426; 8 N. J. E. 500; 24 Ohio St. 611; 24 Tex. 61.

[8] United States v. Crook, 5 Dill. 458 (1879).

[9] United States v. Shaw-mux, 2 Saw. 364 (1873).

[10] Opinions of the Justices, 136 Mass. 580 (1883); 74 Ga. 795.

[11] Smith v. Alabama Life Ins. & Trust Co., 4 Ala. 568 (1843).

[12] Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 456 (1877).

[13] 4 Bl. Com. 205-19.

Person, fictitious. See DECOY; FORGERY.

Persons in public employment. See LIBEL, 5.

See also ARREST, 2; BAIL, 2; BODY, 1; CITIZEN; EXPOSE; IDENTITY, 1; INDIVIDUAL; INSPECTION, 2; JURISDICTION, 2; NAME, 1.

Personal. Pertaining to the person; belonging to an individual person; individual: as, personal or a personal — action, asset, baggage, chattel, contract, covenant, credit, demand, disability, estate, goods, injury, knowledge, liability, liberty, note, performance, property, representative, security, service, servitude, tax.

Referring to some subjects — as, an action, asset, chattel, estate, property — "personal" means simply movable, transitory: that which may follow the person of the owner or defendant.

Again, referring to some subjects — as, an action, contract or covenant, defendant, injury, privilege, security, service, tax — "personal" is contrasted with real, or that which concerns real estate.

See those substantives.

Personalty. Personal property, q. v.

Personate. To assume the character of another without authority and do something to his or a third person's detriment.

Known as "false personation," which is a misdemeanor both at common law and, generally, by statute.[1]

In England, since 1874, to personate any person or his heir, executor, etc., with intent to claim succession to property, or falsely to claim relationship to any family, is a felony, punishable with penal servitude for life.[2]

There may be a false personation of an officer for the purpose of making a pretended arrest, or collecting fines, taxes, or other alleged dues.

Falsely personating any person under the provisions of the naturalization laws,[3] or any person holding a claim against the government, are criminal offenses.[4]

See CHINESE, p. 177, sec. 7; PRETENSE, False.

PERSONA. L. A person.

See ACTIO, Personalis; DELECTUS, DESCRIPTIO, Personæ: IN, Personam, Propria, etc.; MOBILIA.

PERSUADE. See INFLUENCE.

To "inveigle, persuade, or entice" a child into involuntary servitude, necessarily implies assent yielded as the result of the persuading or enticing, by whomsoever the influence is brought to bear, whether by parents, uncles, or others.[1]

PERTINENT. Relevant; materially relevant. Opposed, impertinent.

Said of evidence which is useful in proving a cause of action or a defense. See IMPERTINENCE; RELEVANT.

PETIT; PETTY.[2] Small, little; the lesser; opposed to grand and high: as, petty constable, q. v.; petit or petty — jury, larceny, treason, qq. v. See also PETTIFOGGER.

Petty-bag office. Proceedings to cancel letters-patent were in the "Petty Bag" office of the court of chancery, in which common-law proceedings were carried on, and all were entitled "In the Petty Bag Office in Chancery."[3] See HANAPER.

PETITIO. L. Requesting, seeking: petition.

Petitio principii. A begging of the question: assuming as conceded or settled the question at issue.[4]

PETITION. Formal written application to a superior for the exercise of his authority. See PETITIO.

An application, in writing, to bring before a court a matter in regard to which judicial action is necessary, a suit being inappropriate from there being as yet no adversary party.[5]

Under code practice, the first pleading filed by a plaintiff, wherein he states the facts of his case as they actually occurred.[6]

"Petition" describes an application in writing, in contradistinction to a "motion," which may be viva voce.[6]

Petitioner. He who presents a petition.

The person adversely interested is called the "respondent."

The use of petitions to induce the exercise of judicial discretion or power is manifold. By means of them proceedings are begun, expedited, and terminated in the settlement of decedents' and insolvents' estates; in the appointment, change, and discharge of guardians, committees, assignees, and other trustees, and in the filing, auditing, and settling of their accounts; in the appointment of viewers under laws relating to the opening of highways, the construction of bridges, canals, etc. In equity practice, they are generally ancillary to suits already begun.

There are also petitions for alimony and other al-

---

[1] See 4 Bl. Com. 348; 2 Russ. Cr. 479.

[2] Stat. 37 & 38 Vict. c. 36.

[3] R. S. § 5424.

[4] R. S. § 5426.

[1] United States v. Aucarola, 17 Blatch. 423, 430 (1880), Blatchford, J.

[2] F. petit. "Petty" is the anglicised word.

[3] Attorney-General v. Rumford Chemical Works, 31 F. R. 618 (1876).

[4] 107 U. S. 507; 29 Wis. 197.

[5] Bergen v. Jones, 4 Metc., Mass., 376 (1842), Shaw, C. J.; 67 N. Y. 547; 48 Miss. 36.

[6] See Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Rice, 36 Kan. 599 (1887)

lowances, petitions for summons to respondents in divorce, etc.

Statements of facts in petitions are required to be verified by accompanying affidavit. Compare PRAYER.

Petition of rights. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by Charles the First, in 1629.[1]

Right of petition. The right of petitioning the sovereign or either house of Parliament for the redress of grievances.[2]

The right which the government of Great Britain accords to aliens or subjects to prosecute claims against it. The proceeding is judicial, to be tried like a suit between subjects.[3]

Appertains to every individual when any uncommon injury happens, or any right is infringed, which the ordinary course of law is too defective to reach.[4]

Petitory. Said of a suit in which the title to property is to be enforced by means of a petition, or other proceeding.[5]

Suits in admiralty concerning property in ships are "petitory" when the mere title is litigated, and sought to be enforced independently of any possession previously accompanying that title; and "possessory" when they seek to restore to the owner a possession of which he has been unjustly deprived, that possession following a legal title, or being a possession under a claim of title with a constat of property.

The former has been silently abandoned in England, upon the principle that titles to property derived from the common law shall be litigated in the common-law courts — a proposition which, carried to the full extent, would prostrate the entire jurisdiction of admiralty in instance cases. Indeed, titles to ships principally depend upon the maritime law as recognized and enforced in the common law; and the admiralty law does little more in instance cases than carry into effect the declarations of the maritime law, so recognized and enforced. In the United States, admiralty has jurisdiction of both kinds of actions.[6]

PETROLEUM. See MINERAL; OIL; WAGER, Contract.

PETTIFOGGER.[7] 1. A practitioner of law whose business is chiefly confined to petty causes.

2. One who pretends to practice law, but is without either knowledge of the law or conscience.[8]

An inferior attorney employed in mean professional business.[1]

The expression "pettifogging shyster" can only apply to an unscrupulous practitioner who disgraces his profession by doing mean work, and who resorts to sharp practice to do it.[2]

PETTY. See PETIT.

PEW. See CHURCH.

In the United States, pews belong to the legal owners of the church building. The right of an individual holder is not partial ownership of the building itself. The sale of a pew, as a pew, conveys no such ownership. The pewholder's right is incorporeal, a mere easement, or, at most, a usufructuary interest; subject to such changes as the circumstances of the congregation require. The holder's consent is not necessary to such a change, and his right is extinguished when the edifice is taken down. He is not entitled to a pew in a new building because he held one in the old.

But while his right remains it is exclusive. He may use the pew on all occasions when the house, as a church, is open; he may put a fastening on the door, and deny access to persons other than those whom he chooses to admit; he may even maintain an action at law against an intruder.

Acquisition is by perpetual grant from the owners of the edifice, or by demise for a limited term; and, possibly, subject to assessments. For unpaid dues or rents, an action at law will lie. Whether, in the event of failure to dispose of it by will, a pew passes to the owner's heirs, or to his executor or administrator, depends upon the question whether, by the law of the State, pew rights are real or personal property. In Connecticut, Louisiana, and Maine, pews are realty, and descend to the heir-at-law; in Massachusetts and New Hampshire,— in most of the States,— they are personalty, and, unless disposed of by will, vest in the administrator or the executor.[3]

PHARMACY. See DRUGGIST.

PHOTOGRAPHER. Any person who makes for sale photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or pictures, by the action of light.[4]

An artist who takes impressions or likenesses of things and persons on prepared plates or surfaces.[5]

His implements are not "mechanic's tools," exempted from execution.[6] See MECHANIC.

Congress may confer upon the author, inventor, designer, or proprietor of a photograph the rights con-

---

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 128.

[2] [1 Bl. Com. 143.

[3] United States v. O'Keefe, 11 Wall. 183 (1870); The Fidelity, 16 Blatch. 574 (1879); United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 205 (1882).

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 143; 4 id. 147; 23 & 24 Vict. (1860), c. 34.

[5] [1 Kent, 371.

[6] The Tilton, 5 Mas. 468-78 (1830), Story, J.; Ward v. Peck, 18 How. 267 (1855), cases; 15 F. R. 285.

[7] F. petit, little; O. Dut. focker, an engrosser of commodities,— Skeat.

[8] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[1] Webster's Dict.

[2] [Bailey v. Kalamazoo Publishing Co., 40 Mich. 256 (1879), Campbell, C. J.

[3] See Strong, Relations of Civil Law to Church Polity, &c. 126-32 (1875); Washb. Easem. 515; Craig v. First Presby. Church, 88 Pa. 51 (1878); Jones v. Towne, 58 N. H. 464 (1878), cases; Livingston v. Rector of Trinity Church, 45 N. J. L. 232-37 (1883), cases.

[4] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9; 14 St. L. 120.

[5] Story v. Walker, 11 Lea, 517 (1883).

ferred by Rev. St., § 4952, so far as the photograph is a representation of original intellectual conceptions. The object of the requirement in the act of June 18, 1874 (18 St. L. 78), that notice of a copyright in a photograph shall be given by inscribing upon some visible portion of it the word "copyright," the date, and the name of the proprietor, is to give notice of the copyright to the public. Whether a photograph is a mere mechanical reproduction or an original work of art is a question to be determined by proof of the facts of originality, of intellectual production, and of thought and conception on the part of the author.[1] See PRINT.

Having control, as business manager, of sheets of a photograph, is not such possession as will render the person liable to the penalty imposed by Rev. St., § 4965, which provides that when one without permission sells a copyrighted photograph, he shall forfeit one dollar for every sheet found in his possession.[2]

Photographs have been admitted as evidence—(1) from necessity, as, to present accurate copies of public records which cannot be withdrawn from the files;[3] (2) to identify individuals,[4] and to furnish ocular evidence of injuries;[5] (3) to identify and describe premises in dispute;[6] (4) upon questions of disputed handwriting, in addition to the writing itself: in which cases enlarged photographs point out and emphasize peculiarities.[7] See SATISFACTORY.

PHYSICAL. See DISABILITY; FORCE; LABOR, 1; NECESSITY; PRESUMPTION.

PHYSICIAN. In a statute providing for the organization of medical societies, held not limited to any school of practitioners.[8]

The law implies an undertaking that he will exercise reasonable care and skill in the treatment of a patient; not that he will effect a cure.[9]

He may testify to a statement given by his patient in relation to his condition, symptoms, and feelings, past and present—where the bodily condition of a plaintiff, alleged to have been injured, is the subject of inquiry; but the necessity does not extend to declarations by the party as to the cause of the injury when that is the principal matter of inquiry.[1]

To defend against an action for his services, on the ground of a custom among physicians not to charge each other, it must appear that that custom was so universal as to justify the conclusion that it became, by implication, a part of the contract.[2]

A physician is liable in damages for want of skill in another physician to whom he intrusts practice.[3]

See CARE; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; CORONER: DRUGGIST: EXPERT; FAMILY; INFORMATION, 1; INSPECTION, 2; MEDICAL; MEDICINE; POLICE, 2; SCIENCE; SLANDER; TRADE, Restraints.

PHYSIOLOGY. See ALCOHOL.

PIA. See FRAUS.

PIANO. See EXEMPTION; IMPLEMENT; OPERA.

PICKPOCKET. See LARCENY.

PICTURE. See COPYRIGHT; DESIGN, 2; FURNITURE; HEIRLOOM; LIBEL, 5; OBSCENE; PHOTOGRAPH; PRINT; SATISFACTORY, 1.

PIECE. See BAIL; PARCEL, 2; SATISFACTION, 1.

PIER. See COMMERCE; RIPARIAN; SPAN; WHARF.

PIG. See CATTLE; HOG.

PIGNUS. In civil law a pledge, q. v.

PIKE. See TURNPIKE.

PILFER. In its popular sense, to steal.[4] See HOOK.

PILLORY. A contrivance for inflicting punishment by exposing the offender to public disgrace.

A frame of wood erected on a post or posts, with movable boards containing holes through which the head and hands were put. First appointed for fraudulent bakers and such as used false weights. In use in the American colonies; now abolished, except in Delaware.[5]

The punishment of standing in the pillory shall not be inflicted.[6]

---

[1] Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53 (1884), Miller, J.; s. c. 17 F. R. 591, 596-601; 6 id. 176.

[2] Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 612 (1888), Miller, J., reversing 17 F. R. 608 (Philadelphia case); s. c. 26 Cent. Law J. 550 (1888), cases.

[3] Re Stephens, L. R., 9 C. P. 187 (1874); Leathers v. Salvor Wrecking Co., 2 Woods, 682 (1875); Daly v. Maguire, 6 Blatch. 137 (1868); Luco v. United States, 23 How. 541 (1859).

[4] Udderzook v. Commonwealth, 76 Pa. 340 (1874); Luke v. Calhoun Co., 52 Ala. 118 (1875); Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 234 (1871); Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Schaible, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 369 (1873): 9 Phila. 186.

[5] Franklin v. State, 69 Ga. 42 (1882); Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Schaible, 1 W. N. C. 369 (1873).

[6] Blair v. Pelham, 118 Mass. 421 (1875); Cozzens v. Higgins, 33 How. Pr. 439 (1866); Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 519 (1872); Locke v. Railroad Co., 46 Iowa, 112 (1877); Hollenbeck v. Rowley, 8 Allen, 475 (1864); 2 Tichb. Tr. 640.

[7] Marcy v. Barnes, 16 Gray, 163 (1860); Foster's Will, 34 Mich. 23 (1876); Tome v. Railroad Co., 39 Md. 90 (1873); Ebon v. Zimpleman, 47 Tex. 519 (1877). And see 8 Am. Law Reg. 1-8 (1869); 20 Alb. Law J. 4-6 (1879), cases; 23 id. 182-84 (1881), cases; 1 Whart. Ev. § 646; Popular Science Monthly, 1875, p. 710.

[8] Rayner v. State, 62 Wis. 289 (1885).

[9] O'Hara v. Wells, 14 Neb. 403 (1883); Holtzman v. Hoy, 118 Ill. 534 (1886); 26 Am. Law Reg. 168-73 (1887), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 515-18 (1887), cases; 20 Am. Law Rev. 80-92 (1886), cases; 4 Kan. Law J. 145 (1886) — Ohio Law Bulletin. As to death of patient by accident, see 21 Cent. Law J. 267-69 (1885), cases.

[1] Roosa v. Boston Loan Co., 132 Mass. 429 (1882).

[2] Madden v. Blain, 66 Ga. 49 (1880).

[3] Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 215 (1832).

[4] Becket v. Sterrett, 4 Blackf. *500 (1838).

[5] See Rex v. Beardmore, 2 Burr. *792 (1759); 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 797; 4 Steph. Com. 443, note; 1 McMasters, Hist. Peop. U. S. 100.

[6] Act 23 Feb. 1839: R. S. § 5327.

By 56 Geo. III (1816), abolished in all cases except perjury; and by 7 Will. IV (1837), abolished absolutely in general terms without exception.[1]

PILOTAGE. See COMMERCE.

A libel in rem may be maintained for fees allowed for pilotage services tendered in accordance with the provisions of a State statute, but declined by the master of the vessel.[2] See CONSPIRACY; SHIP, 2.

PIMP. See PROSTITUTE.[3]

PIN-MONEY. Money allowed by a man to his wife for her personal expenses.

Anciently, a tax was laid for providing the queen with pins.[4]

Not a gift out and out, but a sum set apart for a specific purpose. The husband may find the wife in apparel instead of paying this apparel-money, as it may be called.[5]

PIOS. See USE, Pious, p. 1074.

PIRACY.[6] Robbery and depredation upon the high seas.[7]

Robbery and forcible depredation upon the high sea, animo furandi.[8]

Robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, done animo furandi, and in the spirit and intention of universal hostility.[9]

Pirate. One who roves the sea in an armed vessel, without commission from any sovereign State, on his own authority, and for the purpose of seizing by force, and appropriating to himself, without discrimination, every vessel he may meet.[10]

Piratical. Imports an aggression unauthorized by the law of nations, hostile in character, wanton and criminal in its commission, and utterly without sanction from any public authority or sovereign power,—that the act belongs to the class of offenses which pirates are in the habit of perpetrating, whether the purpose be plunder, hatred, revenge, or wanton abuse of power.[11]

Hostilities committed under a commission from a party to a recognized war are not included. In that case the superior may be held for the act.[1]

Piracy is the same offense at sea as robbery on land. It is everywhere punished with death; at common law was punished as an offense against the law of nations (part of the common law)—the universal law of society: a pirate being deemed an enemy of his race, hostis humani generis.[2]

Congress shall have power "To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations."[3]

"To define" is to enumerate the crimes which shall constitute piracy.[4]

2. Infringement of a copyright by reprinting all or a substantial portion of the production, word for word; or, by imitating or copying it with colorable alterations.

Citing the most important parts of a copyrighted work, with a view not to criticism but to supersede the use of the original work and to substitute the review.[5]

In determining the question of piracy, quantity, quality and value are regarded. If the selections are made animo furandi, with intent to make use of them for the purpose for which the original author used them, to convey in a different publication the information he imparted, or to supplant him in his own territory, a small quantity will suffice to support the charge. If the pirated portion, being substantial, cannot be separated from the original matter without destroying the publication, the whole book will be enjoined—upon the principle of the doctrine of "confusion of goods."[6] See ABRIDGE, 1; COMPILE; REVIEW, 3.

PISCARY. See COMMON, 2; FISHERY.

PISTOL. See BAGGAGE; WEAPON.

PL. See PLACITUM, 2.

PLACE. 1. Any locality limited by boundaries, however large or small, as, a country, a State, a county, a town, or a portion thereof. The extent of the locality is to be determined by the connection in which the word is used.[7]

Often denotes a specific place within a city or town at which a person dwells or transacts business;

[1] 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 490.

[2] The Alzena, 14 F. R. 174-76 (1882), cases.

[3] See also Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 156 (1884).

[4] Barring. Stat. 181.

[5] Howard v. Digby, 8 Bligh, 269 (1834).

[6] F. pirate: Gk. peiratês, one who attempts or attacks.

[7] [4 Bl. Com. 71.

[8] United States v. Smith, 5 Wheat. 161-62 (1820), Story, J.

[9] 1 Kent, 183; Dole v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 2 Cliff. 416 (1864).

[10] United States v. Baker, 5 Blatch. 12 (1861), Nelson, J.; Davison v. Seal-skins, 2 Paine, 333 (1838?).

[11] United States v. The Malek Adhel, 2 How. 229 (1844), Story, J.

[1] The Chapman, 4 Saw. 511 (1864).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 71; 5 Wheat. 158, 161-62; 1 Kent, 183; R. S. § 5368; 47 Pa. 169, 187.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 10.

[4] United States v. Smith, 5 Wheat. 161-62 (1820); R. S. §§ 5368-82.

[5] Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 106-7 (1841).

[6] Farmer v. Elstner, 33 F. R. 499 (1888), cases: 37 Alb. Law J. 230, in which the defendant's "Industries of Detroit" was held to infringe (in 11 out of 70 pages of the first chapter) the plaintiff's "History of Detroit and Michigan," &c.

[7] Law v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 432 (1874), Ross, J.; Clapp v. Burlington, 42 id. 582 (1870); State v. Hart, 31 N. J. L. 429 (1866); ib. 414.

es, in the expressions, "place of business," "usual place of business," "usual place of abode," etc., found in statutes fixing the venue of transitory actions, referring to trustee process, taxation of partnership property, and in provisions for serving writs, notices, etc.[1] See ABODE; BUSINESS; RESIDENCE; VICINITY.

In a revenue act, may mean a locality more limited than the country where goods are bought or manufactured.[2]

In internal revenue acts, as applied to the place where a licensee may carry on business, construed with reference to the business, but not as an equivalent for county, town or State.[3]

In a statute forbidding betting in any "house, office, room, or other place," need not be covered with a roof;[4] an umbrella is such place.[5]

A canvas tent may be a disorderly house or place.[6]

In a statute forbidding the sale of liquors "in any place" within four hundred feet of a public schoolhouse, held to include a tent, a booth, an excavation in the ground or anything similar thereto.[7]

Public place. It would be difficult to define what is a "public place" within the meaning of statutes against gaming, affrays, retailing liquor, indecent exposure of person and drunkenness, for notices of sale, etc.; but, generally speaking, it means a place where the public may go uninvited.

Not, necessarily, a place devoted exclusively to the uses of the public, but "public" in fact, as distinguished from private; visited by many persons; usually accessible to the neighboring public.[8]

A public highway is not necessarily a public place: it may be abandoned or traverse a forest.[9]

A place where the public has a right to go and be; not every place where people may be congregated.[10]

For the purpose of setting up notices of sale, a place likely to give information to those interested, and who may probably become bidders. The term is relative; what is a public place for one purpose may not be public for another.[11] See PUBLIC.

Compare ALIBI; LOCUS; SITUS; VENUE.

[1] Palmer v. Kelleher, 111 Mass. 321-22 (1873), Morton, J.

[2] Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 142 (1865), Swayne, J.; Act 3 March, 1863, § 1.

[3] Salt Company v. Wilkinson, 8 Blatch. 33 (1870).

[4] Eastwood v. Miller, L. R., 9 Q. B. 443 (1874); 10 id. 102; L. R., 3 Ex. 137; 12 L. T. 355.

[5] Bows v. Tenwick, L. R., 9 C. P. 343 (1874).

[6] Kliman v. State, 2 Tex. Ap. 222 (1877).

[7] Commonwealth v. Jones, 142 Mass. 575 (1886).

[8] Parker v. State, 26 Tex. 207 (1862).

[9] Williams v. State, 64 Ind. 555-57 (1878), cases.

[10] State v. Welch, 88 Ind. 310 (1882): 52 id. 311.

[11] Cummins v. Little, 16 N. J. E. 53 (1863).

See, as to affrays, 22 Ala. 15; 35 id. 392; 29 Ind. 206; as to gaming, 12 Ala. 492; 13 id. 602; 17 id. 369; 19 id. 398, 551; 20 id. 47, 51, 86; 23 id. 39; 25 id. 60, 78; 26 id. 69, 135; 29 id. 46; 30 id. 19, 524, 532, 550; 31 id. 371; 32 id. 596; 35 id. 390; 37 id. 472; 59 id. 89; 9 Tex. 430; 21 id. 223; 26 id. 145, 204; 43 id. 602; 4 Leigh, 680; 8 id. 741; 6 Gratt. 689; 8 id. 585; 14 id. 679; 22 id. 917; as to exposure of person, 4 Hun, 636; 43 Tex. 346; 3 Car. & K. 360; 2 Cox, C. C. 376; 3 id. 248; L. R., 1 C. C. 282; 1 L. & C. 326; 2 Camp. 89; 1 Den. C. C. 338; as to intoxication, 52 Ind. 311, 481; 74 id. 103; 36 N. H. 59; 26 L. J. M. C. 178; as to sales of liquors, 74 Me. 563; 54 Vt. 155; as to public sales of property 71 Me. 547; 48 Mo. 300; 3 N. H. 179; 40 id. 173; 57 Ind. 556; 53 Vt. 447; 44 Wis. 213.

Place of contract. Matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and the validity of a contract, are determined by the law of the place where the contract is made. Matters connected with its performance are regulated by the law prevailing at the place of performance. Matters respecting the remedy, such as the bringing of suits, the admission of evidence, the statute of limitations, depend upon the law of the place where suit is brought.[1]

The general rules, and their exceptions, are familiar, but the books are full of conflicting illustrations of their application. The primary rule is that the validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the State where it was made. If valid there, it is deemed valid everywhere, and it will sustain an action in a State whose laws do not permit such a contract. If the contract is not in itself immoral, although expressly prohibited in the State where suit is brought, the courts administering the comity of that State will not refuse to enforce the contract. The principal exception is that the law of the place of performance will govern the mode of performance, because it is presumed that the parties had this law in mind when they entered into the contract; but the presumption may be rebutted by an express declaration to the contrary, or by the fact that the obligation is illegal by the local law.[2]

Place of delivery. In a contract of sale, if no place of delivery is specified, the articles must, in general, be delivered at the place where they were at the time of sale, unless some other place is required by the nature of the article, the usage of the trade, or the previous course of dealing between the parties, or is to be inferred from the circumstances of the case. If a place is prescribed as a part of the contract, the vendee is not bound to accept, nor is the vendor obliged to make, a tender of the goods elsewhere.[3] See SALE.

[1] Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 412 (1875), Hunt, J. See also Pritchard v. Norton, 106 id. 129-41 (1882), cases; Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall. 550 (1866), cases; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 277 (1880); Gebhard v. Canada Southern R. Co., 17 Blatch. 417-18 (1880); Codman v. Vermont & Canada R. Co., 16 id. 175-76 (1879), cases; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 375-88 (1878), cases.

[2] Brown v. American Finance Co., 31 F. R. 519-20 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.

[3] Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 134-35 (1879), cases, Clifford, J.; Ragland v. Wood, 71 Ala. 150 (1881), cases; Janney v. Sleeper, 30 Minn. 474-75 (1883), cases; Story, Sales, § 306; Benj. Sales, § 679; 2 Kent, 505.

Place of indictment. In general, all offenses must be inquired into and tried in the county where the fact is committed. Yet, if larceny is committed in one county, and the goods are carried into another, the offender may be tried in either, for the offense is complete in both. But for robbery, burglary, and the like, he can only be indicted where the fact was actually committed; for though the carrying away and the keeping of the goods is a continuance of the original taking, and is therefore larceny in the second county, yet it is not robbery or burglary in that jurisdiction.[1]

The crime of murder is complete where the felonious blow was struck, notwithstanding that the death happens within another jurisdiction.[2]

In the Federal courts, capital offenses are indictable in the jurisdiction where the offense was committed, when that can be done without great inconvenience; offenses committed on the high seas, or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of a State or district, in the district where the offender is found, or into which he is first brought.[3] An offense begun in one circuit and completed in another is deemed committed in either and may be tried in either.[4] Suits for taxes, penalties, and forfeitures may be begun in the district where they accrue or in which the offender or delinquent is found.[5] Seizures, made upon the high seas, where the property is brought; made within any district, in that district, unless otherwise provided.[6] See DESCRIPTION, 4; INDICTMENT; VENUE.

Place of payment. When no place of payment is expressed in a bill or note, the rule, in the absence of any agreement or circumstances fixing or indicating a different intention, is that the place of presentment is the place where the acceptor or maker resides, or at their usual place of business.[7] See BUSINESS; PRESENT, 2 (1).

2. To negotiate, or contract, for a thing: as, to place a risk, a mortgage, or other loan; also, to deliver a thing to a person for a purpose.

A person who "places" his goods with an agent for a specified purpose does not necessarily authorize him to make a warranty.[8]

Parties to a contract for "placing" mortgages may mean selling or realizing upon them.[9]

PLACITUM. L. 1. A plea, or pleading; a suit. See PLEA.

2. A subdivision of an abridgment or digest. Abbreviated pl.

PLAGIARISM. See PIRACY, 2.

PLAGUE. See HEALTH.

PLAIN. Such as may be read and understood by most persons.

"Plain type" means large or ordinary sized type, within the meaning of a statute requiring innkeepers to post up copies of the hotel law.[1]

The "plain statement" required by the New York code is one that may be readily understood by all persons acquainted with the language in which it is written.[2]

PLAINT.[3] A private memorial tendered in open court to the judge, wherein the party injured sets forth his cause of action.[4]

Preserved in complaint and plaintiff.

PLAINTIFF. Originally, one who makes plaint, q. v.

The party in whose favor the plaint or suit purports, on the record, to have been instituted.[5]

One who complains of injury done, in court.[6]

Whoever brings a suit, bill, or complaint, is a "party plaintiff," and whoever is bound to appear and defend is the party defendant,[7] q. v.

In common-law proceedings we speak of the actor (the party bringing suit) as "plaintiff," and in equity proceedings as "complainant,"—a distinction without a difference. The terms are convertible, although, for the purpose of distinguishing whether the suit is at law or in equity, the different names are sometimes used. In the equity rules of the Supreme Court, the actor is always called plaintiff.[8]

Legal plaintiff. He in whom the legal title or cause of action is vested. Equitable plaintiff. He who in equity is entitled to the thing sued for.

Nominal plaintiff. One who is named as plaintiff, but yet has no interest in the controversy, having assigned his right to another for whose use the action is maintained, and who is therefore the use or real plaintiff.

Plaintiff in error. The party who sues out a writ of error. Called also the plaint-

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 305.

[2] United States v. Guiteau, 18 Rep. 138, 718-21 (1882), cases.

[3] R. S. §§ 729-30, cases.

[4] R. S. § 731.

[5] R. S. § 782.

[6] R. S. § 734.

[7] 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 90, 635; Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 U. S. 709-18 (1879), cases; Stubbs v. Colt, 30 F. R. 417 (1887), cases. Law of place generally, 34 Am. Law Reg. 403-12 (1885), cases.

[8] Anderson v. Bruner, 112 Mass. 14 (1873).

[9] Bailey v. Joy, 139 Mass. 359 (1883).

[1] Porter v. Gilkey, 57 Mo. 237 (1874).

[2] Mann v. Morewood, 5 Sandf. 564 (1852).

[3] F. pleinte: L. planctus, lamentation, lament.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 273.

[5] Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill, 533 (1843).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 25.

[7] Canaan v. Greenwoods Turnpike Co., 1 Conn. 9 (1813).

[8] Stinson v. Hildrup, 8 Biss. 378 (1878), Drummond, J

ff above: the plaintiff in the appellate tribunal.

See ACTOR; APPELLANT; ASSIGN, 1; CALL; COMPLAINANT; LIBELANT; LITIGANT; ORATOR; PARTY; PROSECUTOR; RELATOR; SUITOR.

PLAN. See PLAT.

PLANING-MILL. See NUISANCE.

PLANK-ROAD. See TURNPIKE.

PLANTATION. A place planted; all the land forming the parcel or parcels under cultivation as one farm.[1]

PLANTS. See CROP; EMBLEMENTS; LARCENY.

PLAQUE. See COPYRIGHT.

PLASTERING. As commonly understood, includes the work of "lathing."[2]

PLAT, or PLOT. A subdivision of lands into lots, streets and alleys, marked upon the earth and represented upon paper.[3] See DEDICATION, 1; MAP.

PLAY. See DRAMA; GAME, 2; REVIEW, 3.

PLAZA. See PARK, 2; PUEBLO.

PLEA.[4] 1. Anciently, a suit or action: as, in the expressions, "summoned to answer B of a plea of trespass;"[5] to "hold pleas," "have cognizance of pleas."[6]

Common pleas. Civil suits between man and man: tried in the courts of common pleas. Pleas of the crown. Suits prosecuted by the sovereign; crimes and misdemeanors.[7]

By "common pleas" is understood such pleas or actions as are brought by private persons against private persons, or by the government where the cause of action is of a civil nature.[8]

2. A formal answer, made by a defendant, to a demand or charge.

In common-law practice, the defendant's answer to the merits of the declaration, as opposed to a demurrer, q. v.

In equity practice, a short statement, in response to a bill, of facts which, if inserted in the bill, would render it demurrable.[1]

An "answer" is a complete statement of the defendant's cause, and may contain responses to interrogatories.[1]

The office of a "plea" in a suit in equity is not, like an "answer," to meet all the allegations of the bill, nor like a "demurrer," admitting those allegations, to deny the equity of the bill; but to present some distinct fact, which of itself creates a bar to the suit or to the part to which the plea applies, and thus avoid the necessity of making the discovery asked for, and the expense of going into the evidence at large.[2]

The plaintiff may set down the plea for argument, or file a replication to it. If he sets it down for argument, he admits the truth of all the facts stated in it, and merely denies their sufficiency in point of law to prevent his recovery. If he files a general replication to the plea, no fact is in issue but the truth of the matter pleaded. Objections to the equity of the plaintiff's claim, as stated in his bill, cannot be taken by plea. A plea, though under oath and negativing a material averment in the bill, is not evidence in the defendant's favor.[3] See ANSWER, 3.

Plead. (1) To carry on a suit or plea; to litigate.

(2) To conduct the allegations of the respective parties to a cause.

(3) To make an allegation of fact in a cause.

(4) To make that allegation of fact which follows and opposes the allegation in the declaration.[3]

In the last sense, "plea" and "to plead" are now generally understood.

Plead and pled are sometimes improperly used for pleaded.[4]

"To plead a statute" is to state the facts which bring a case within the statute, without mentioning the statute itself. Compare RECITE.

Pleading. (1) A plea of any nature.

(2) The statement, in a logical and legal form, of the facts which constitute the cause of action or the ground of defense.[5]

The formal mode of alleging on the record that which would be the support or the defense of the party on evidence.[5]

"The pleadings" are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and the defendant.[6]

These altercations are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing. Formerly, they were put

---

[1] Stowe v. Davis, 10 Ired. L. 433 (1849). See also Attorney-General v. State Board of Judges, 38 Cal. 295 (1869).

[2] See Higgins v. Lee, 16 Ill. 495, 502 (1855); Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 467 (1872); Mellen v. Ford, 28 F. R. 639, 642 (1886).

[3] McDaniel v. Mace, 47 Iowa, 510 (1877).

[4] F. ple, plai, plait, plaid: L. L. placitum, a decree, sentence, etc.: placere, to please, seem fit.

[5] Steph. Pl. 38, 39.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 37.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 40; 4 id. 2, 265.

[8] Dallett v. Feltus, 7 Phila. 628 (1870), Thompson, C. J.

[1] [Hunt, Eq., Part I, ch. 3. See Carter v. Hoke, 64 N. C. 351 (1870).

[2] Farley v. Kittson, 120 U. S. 303, 314-16 (1887), cases, Gray, J.

[3] [Burrill's Law Dict.]

[4] Webster's Dict.

[5] Read v. Brookman, 3 F. R. 159 (1789), Buller, J.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 293.

in by counsel viva voce, in court, and minuted down by the chief clerks; whence in law-French the pleadings are called "the parol."[1]

The pleadings are the written allegations of what is affirmed on the one side, or denied on the other, disclosing to the court and jury the real matters in dispute.[2]

In a large sense, all proceedings from the declaration until issue is joined. In the most limited sense, the defendant's answer to the declaration.[3]

In criminal practice, may include the indictment, and pleas in abatement or in bar, but not a motion to quash.[4]

(3) The art or science of preparing such statements.

(4) In popular parlance, oral advocacy, forensic argumentation.

The office of technical pleading is to inform the court and the parties of the facts in issue: the court, that it may declare the law; the parties, that they may know what to meet by their proofs.[5]

The common law requires that the controversy, before it is submitted to the court or jury, should be reduced to one or more integral propositions of law or fact; hence, it is necessary that the parties should frame the allegations which they respectively make in support of their demand or defense into certain writings called "the pleadings." These should clearly and succinctly state the nature of the wrong complained of, the remedy sought, and the defense set up. The end proposed is to bring the matter of litigation to one or more points, simple and unambiguous.

Common-law pleading came to its perfection in the reign of Edward III. At one time, the excessive accuracy required, the subtlety of distinctions introduced by astute logicians, the introduction of cumbrous forms, fictions, and contrivances which seemed to perplex the investigation of truth, had brought the system of special pleading into disrepute. In more modern times it has been so modified, the pleadings in every form of common-law action have been so reduced to simple, clear, and unambiguous forms, that the merits of a cause are now reached directly and fully.[6]

The object of all pleadings is to develop the real issue.[7]

Definite, legal conclusions cannot be arrived at upon hypothetical averments.[8]

Courts are not established to determine what the law might be upon possible facts, but to adjudge the rights of parties upon existing facts; and when their jurisdiction is invoked parties will be presumed to present in their pleadings the actual, and not supposable, facts touching the matter in controversy.[1]

In their order, pleadings are: the declaration, defense, plea, replication, rejoinder, surrejoinder, rebutter, and surrebutter,[2] qq. v.

These must be single, containing one matter; direct and positive, and not argumentative; have convenient certainty of time, place, persons; must answer allegations in every material part; and must be so pleaded as to be capable of trial. No more is to be stated than is necessary to set out the cause of complaint or ground of defense; and facts, not inferences or matters of law or evidence, are required.[3]

The substantial rules of pleading are founded in strong sense and in the soundest and closest logic.[4]

All pleading is a logical process. The object is to facilitate the administration of justice, by simplifying the grounds of controversy and ultimately narrowing the contest to a single and direct affirmative and negative — a definite point of law or fact.[5]

The rules of pleading involve a methodized body of principles which constitute a complete system of legal logic, artificial in its form and structure, but admirably adapted to the ends of simplicity, uniformity, and certainty in the administration of justice. . . . All good pleading is in substance a syllogistic process. For example, in an action for a trespass upon land, the declaration may be presented thus: "From him who forcibly enters upon my land I have a right, by law, to recover damages: The defendant has forcibly entered upon my land: Therefore, from him I have a legal right to recover damages." Here the major proposition asserts the legal principle; the minor proposition alleges the matter of fact to which the principle is to be applied; the conclusion is the legal inference, resulting from the law and fact together. The judgment is but an affirmance or negation of that conclusion. The successful denial of any one of the three propositions will defeat recovery. Denial of the major proposition tenders an "issue in law;" denial of the minor proposition an "issue in fact." Assuming the major to be correct in principle, and the minor true in fact, the conclusion inevitably follows,— unless the defendant can repel it by alleging some "new matter" which is inconsistent with it, and, therefore, by consequence, implies a denial of it. This new matter must be matter of release, duress, or other matter in confession or avoidance.[6]

Dilatory pleas tend to delay or put off the suit [or the plaintiff's eventual remedy]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 293.

[2] Desnoyer v. Hereux, 1 Minn. 19 (1851).

[3] Lovett v. Pell, 22 Wend. 375 (1839). See also 19 Johns. 37; 32 Barb. 219; 51 Pa. 375; 47 Me. 459.

[4] Wagner v. State, 42 Ohio St. 541 (1885).

[5] Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 455 (1874), Waite, C. J.

[6] McFaul v. Ramsey, 20 How. 524 (1857), Grier, J.; 1 Black, 315.

[7] Thomas v. Mann, 28 Pa. 522 (1857).

[8] Commonwealth v. Allegheny County, 37 Pa. 265 (1860); Sullivan v. Iron Silver Mining Co., 109 U. S. 555 (1883); Territory v. Hauxhurst, 3 Dak. 211 (1882).

[1] Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 229 (1888). Field, J.; Gould, Pl. ch. 14, p. 1, § 43.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 293, 313.

[3] 3 Chitty, Bl. Com. 293.

[4] Robinson v. Raley, 1 Bur. *319 (1757), Ld. Mansfield.

[5] Gould, Plead. p. 10.

[6] Gould, Plead. pp. 4-10. See also 3 Bl. Com. 294.

by questioning the propriety of the remedy, rather than by denying the injury.[1]

They are to the jurisdiction of the court: alleging that it ought not to hold plea of the matter; to the disability of the plaintiff: as being an infant, a feme-covert, that he has a committee, etc.; or in abatement of the writ, or declaration, for some defect: as, misnomer, that the plaintiff is dead, etc.

No dilatory plea is admitted unless verified by affidavit. Pleas to the jurisdiction conclude by praying "judgment, whether the court will have further cognizance of the suit;" pleas to the disability, "judgment, if the plaintiff ought to be answered;" pleas in abatement, "judgment of the writ or declaration, and that the same may be quashed," or "judgment of the bill" — when the action is by bill. When any of these pleas is allowed the cause is dismissed from the jurisdiction, the plaintiff is stayed till his disability is removed, or else he must either sue out a new writ or amend his declaration. When the plea is overruled, the plaintiff has judgment of respondeat ouster — to answer over in some better manner: it is then incumbent on him to plead.[1]

Pleas to the action dispute the cause of the suit, — confess or deny the merits of the complaint.

Confession is of all or of a part of the complaint (here applying tender, payment into court, and set-off); but the more usual is denial of the truth of the complaint by pleading the general issue, or by some special bar to recovery, such as a release, a former recovery, the statute of limitations, a justification, an accord, arbitration, estoppel, or perhaps a pardon.[1]

Pure plea. In equity practice, a plea which relies wholly upon a matter dehors the bill; as, a release or a settled account.

Anomalous or negative plea. Such plea as consists mainly of a denial of the substantial matters set forth in the bill.[2]

Bad plea; bad pleading. Not of the form of action with the last preceding pleading: as, a plea in contract to a declaration in tort.

Not cured by verdict, as are pleas which, although they would be held bad on demurrer as wrong in form, yet still contain enough substance to put in issue the material parts of the declaration.[3] See BAD, 2; CURE, 2.

Counter-plea. Of an incidental kind, diverging from the main object of the suit; as, a demurrer to an erroneous demand of oyer.[4] (Rare.)

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 301-3; 4 id. 332.

[2] [Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 651, 667; Swayze v. Swayze, 37 N. J. E. 186 (1883).

[3] Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 144 (1846).

[4] See Steph. Plead. 79.

Double pleading. Alleging distinct matters, any one of which would be sufficient; duplicity, q. v.

Implead. To sue in due course of law: as, A impleaded with B.

Each defendant may then interpose his own answer.[1] Abbreviated imp.

Interplead. To become a party litigant. See INTERPLEADER.

Misplead. To plead amiss or wrongly; as, to misdeclare by misjoining parties.[2]

Plead issuably. To plead so as to raise a material issue, of law or of fact. See ISSUE, 3.

Plead over. 1. To pass over, omit to notice, a material allegation or defect in the declaration. 2. To plead again; as, the general issue, after a demurrer or special plea has been overruled.

Formal defects in a pleading are waived by pleading over after demurrer overruled.[3]

Plead to the merits. See MERITS.

Special plea, pleading, pleader. When the allegations are not of the ordinary form, but of a complex or special character, they are called "special pleadings;" and when the defendant interposes a plea of this description, that is, a "special plea," he "pleads specially," instead of pleading the general issue. Whence "special pleading" for the science, and "special pleader" for a person learned, or employed, in draughting such pleadings.

Causes were frequent in which the plaintiff could not aver his cause of action, or the defendant embody his defense, in the then settled mode, but a count or plea adapted to the peculiar facts was necessary. These were called special counts and "special pleas;" draughting them was "special pleadings;" and chamber counsel who made a business of draughting them were "special pleaders."[4]

Special plea. Also, the allegation of special or new matter to avoid the effect of an allegation by the opposite party.

See ABATEMENT, 4; ACTION, 2; ALLEGATION; AMENDMENT, 1; ASSIGNMENT, 1, NEW; BAR, 3; CERTAINTY, 3; COLOR, 2; CONFESSION, 1; CONTINUANCE, 1; COUNT, 4; DISCLAIMER, 4; DECLARATION, 2; DEMURRER; DEPARTURE, 3; DESCRIPTION, 3; FORM, Of action; INDICTMENT; INDUCEMENT, 1; ISSUE, 3; MANNER AND FORM; MATTER,

[1] See People v. Clarke, 9 N. Y. 368 (1853); 47 Wis. 239.

[2] See Lovett v. Pell, 22 Wend. 375 (1839); 2 Tidd, Prac. 954.

[3] Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 190 (1886).

[4] See Steph. Plead. *29, 162; 1 Chitty, Pl., 16 Am. ed., 491.

New, Special; MULTIFARIOUSNESS; NEGATIVE; OYER; PAPER, 5; PRACTICE; PROCEDURE; PROFERT; PROTESTATION; REPUGNANT; SAID; STATE, 1; SURPLUSAGE; TRAVERSE; VIDELICET.

PLEDGE.[1] A bailment of personal property as a security for some debt or engagement.[2]

A deposit of personal property as security, with an implied power of sale upon default.[3]

The thing itself thus deposited or bailed.

Pledgee. He who receives a pledge; a pawnee.

Pledgor;[4] pledger. He who delivers a pledge; a pawnor.

A "mortgage" of a chattel is a conveyance of the legal title upon condition, and becomes absolute at law if not redeemed by a given time. A "pledge" is a deposit of goods, redeemable on certain terms, with or without a fixed period for redemption. In a pledge the general property does not pass, as in the case of a mortgage, and the pawnee has only a special property in the thing. He must choose between two remedies: a bill in chancery for a judicial sale under a decree of foreclosure, or a sale without judicial process, on the refusal of the debtor to redeem, after reasonable notice to do so.[5]

Delivery of the thing is essential to the completion of the contract. When possession is retained by the pledgor the contract is an hypothecation,[6] q. v.

The pledgee of bills receivable may hand them back to the debtor for collection, or to be replaced by others; and collections made thereon are for the pledgee.[7]

When the pledgee parts with the pledge to a bona fide purchaser (without notice of any right in the pledgor), the pledgor cannot recover against such purchaser without first tendering him the amount due.[8]

The possession which is essential need not be actual: it may be constructive; as, where the key of a warehouse containing the property is delivered, or a bill of lading is assigned. In such case, the act done will be considered as a token, standing for an actual delivery. It puts the property under the control of the creditor.[9]

Where there is no express agreement, the intention of the parties, as to the mode by which the security shall be converted into money, must be implied from the nature of the property pledged and the circumstances of the transaction.[1]

See BAILMENT; CONDITION; FACTOR; FORECLOSURE; MORTGAGE; PAWN; REDEEM; REPLEVIN; SECURITY, 1. Compare PIGNUS; VADIUM.

PLEDGES. See DOE.

PLENA. See PROBATIO.

PLENE. See ADMINISTRARE; COMPUTARE.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. See MINISTER, 3.

PLIGHT. In old English law, the habit or quality of a thing, whether property, real or personal, or an estate or right therein.[2]

To deliver a thing in "the same plight and condition" is a common expression.[3]

PLOT. See PLAT.

PLUNDER.[4] The most common meaning is, to take property from persons or places by open force, as in the case of pirates or banditti. In another common meaning (in some degree figurative), expresses the idea of taking property from a person or place without just right, but not stating the nature or quality of the wrong done.[5]

Embraces robbery and fraudulent taking, or embezzlement. Thus, a vessel may be said to be plundered, not only if openly attacked and robbed, but if property be taken from her furtively, in the night time, or after she has been abandoned by the crew.[6]

PLURAL. See NUMBER.

Plurality. See BIGAMY; MAJORITY.

PLURIES. L. Many times; often; formerly.

The emphatic word in the Latin form of a writ issued after a second writ of a like kind had been returned unexecuted.

If the sheriff cannot find the defendant upon the first writ of capias, and returns a non est inventus, there issues an alias writ, and after that a pluries writ to the same effect as the former, except that after the words "we command you as we have—" "often"

---

[1] M. E. plegge, a hostage, security: F. plege, a surety.

[2] Story, Bailm. § 286; 37 Cal. 25; 59 id. 107; 41 N. Y. 241; 2 Kent, 577.

[3] Jones, Pledges, § 1. See also 78 Ill. 452; 83 id. 326.

[4] Pronounced as if spelled pledge-or, i. e., pledj-or. Pledg*eor* is rarely found in standard law publications. Compare MORTGAGOR.

[5] Evans v. Darlington, 5 Blackf. *322 (1840); Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 428, 441 (1868); 8 Johns. 98; 2 Barb. 543; 43 id. 610; 38 Md. 251; 2 Ves. 378.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 159; Jones, Pledges, § 23; Story, Bailm. §§ 286, 308; Brewster v. Hartley, 37 Cal. 25 (1869); Mitchell v. Roberts, 17 F. R. 778, 782 (1883), cases.

[7] Clark v. Iselin, 21 Wall. 368–69 (1874): White v. Platt, 5 Denio, 271 (1848); Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 476–80 (1877), cases.

[8] Talty v. Freedman's Savings, &c. Co., 93 U. S. 324–26 (1876), cases.

[9] Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 477 (1877), Bradley, J.; Bank of British Columbia v. Marshall, 11 F. R. 19 (1882).

[1] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 133 Mass. 486–87 (1882), cases; Story, Bailm. § 308.

[2] Coke, Litt. 221.

[3] See 95 U. S. 764; 101 id. 406, 738; 2 Bl. Com. 425.

[4] Gr. plunder, trash, trumpery: to strip of even worthless stuff.

[5] Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. 9 (1834), Shaw, C. J.

[6] United States v. Pitman, 1 Sprague, 198 (1852): 14 St. L. 121: R. S. § 5361; United States v. Stone, 8 F. R. 246–49, 233 (1881); 1 Pet. Adm. 242; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 141; 2 Russ. Cr. 150.

is inserted instead of "formerly," "sicut pluries præcipimus."[1] See ALIAS.

PŒNA. See PENAL; SUBPŒNA.

POINT. Any question, particularly of law, arising in connection with the determination of a cause.

Points for the court's charge are generally isolated, often abstract, propositions, framed not so much upon the real aspect of the evidence as to express the extremes of the case, and lead to the expression of opinion upon the theoretical rather than upon the practical questions.[2]

Statutes require that the answer of the judge or court affirming or rejecting a point as a correct statement of law shall be reduced to writing. See RESERVE, 6.

POISON. Ordinarily, a substance taken internally, seriously injurious to health and often fatal to life.[3]

In common parlance, chloroform is classed among poisonous substances.[4]

Upon a charge of murder by poisoning, the State must prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the deceased came to his death by poison administered by the accused knowingly and feloniously.[5]

See ACCIDENT; ADMINISTER, 1; ADULTERATE; ATTEMPT; DRUGGIST; MURDER; NOXIOUS.

POKER. See GAME, 2.

POLE. See CATCHPOLE.

POLICE.[6] 1. The polity of a community with respect to the liberty, safety, health, morals, tranquillity, and happiness enjoyed by its members. Compare POLICY, 1.

2. Regulations for promoting the general welfare of the people of a State.

In the abstract sense, divided into administrative and preventive police; and spoken of as the police power, internal police, public police, and police purposes or regulations.

"Public police and economy" mean the due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the individuals of the state, like members of a well-governed family, are bound to conform their general behavior to the rules of propriety, good neighborhood, and good manners, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective stations.[7]

Offenses against public police comprise all such crimes as especially affect public society and are not comprehended under offenses against public justice, peace, trade, or health. Among these offenses are clandestine marriages, bigamy, common nuisances, idleness, gaming, and infractions of sumptuary laws.[1]

The power of "internal police" includes all those powers which relate to merely municipal legislation.[2]

The "police power" is the power vested in the legislature by the constitution to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with or without penalties, not repugnant to the constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same.[3]

The power by which the health, good order, peace, and general welfare of the community are promoted.[4]

The States have full power to regulate within their limits matters of internal police, including in that general designation whatever will promote the peace, comfort, convenience, and prosperity of their people.[5]

The power in each State to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people.[6]

None of the amendments to the Constitution interfere with this power.[6]

Legislation which secures to all protection in their rights, and the equal use and enjoyment of their property, embraces an almost infinite variety of subjects. Whatever affects the peace, good order, morals, and health of the community, comes within its scope; and every one must use his property subject to the restrictions which such legislation imposes. The police power of the State can only interfere with the conduct of individuals in their intercourse with each other, and in the use of their property, so far as may be required to secure these objects.[7]

There is also the further limitation that no such

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 283; 4 id. 319.

[2] Roberts v. Roberts, 54 Pa. 269 (1869).

[3] Bacon v. United States Mut. Accident Association, 44 Hun, 602 (1887), Learned, P. J.

[4] State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 22 (1886).

[5] Hatchett v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1026 (1882).

[6] Pō'-lēs. F. police; Gk. politeí'a, government, polity: poli'-tēs, a citizen: pol'is, a city.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 162; Canal Commissioners v. Willamette Transp. Co., 6 Oreg. 222 (1877); Commonwealth v. Hale, 97 Pa. 408 (1881); 3 Law Q. Rev. 180-203 (1887), Eng. cases.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 162-75. See also Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 300-1 (1879), cases.

[2] City of New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. *139 (1837), Barbour, J.

[3] [Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 85 (1851), Shaw, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 546 (1882).

[4] Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 348 (1880), Field, J.

[5] Escanaba & Lake Michigan Transportation Co. v. City of Chicago, 107 U. S. 683 (1882), Field, J.

[6] Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31 (1885), Field, J.; Soon Hing v. Crowley, ib. 708 (1885).

[7] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 145 (1876), Field, J.; ib. 113.

regulation may encroach upon the free exercise of the power vested in Congress to regulate commerce.[1]

The power certainly extends to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens, and to the preservation of good order and the public morals. The legislature cannot divest itself of the power to provide for these objects. They belong to that class of objects which demand the application of the maxim, salus populi suprema lex; and they are to be attained and provided for by such appropriate means as the legislative discretion may devise. This discretion can no more be bargained away than the power itself.[2]

The government may, by general regulations, interdict such uses of property as would create nuisances and become dangerous to the lives, health, peace, or comfort of the citizens. Unwholesome trades, slaughter-houses, operations offensive to the senses, the deposit of powder, the application of steam-power to propel cars, building with combustible materials, and the burial of the dead, may all be interdicted on the general and rational principle that every person ought so to use his property as not to injure his neighbors, and that private interests must be made subservient to the general interests of the community.[3]

A law passed in the legitimate exercise of this power is not obnoxious because it does not provide compensation for inconvenience to the individual. He is rewarded by the common benefits secured.[4] See TAKE, 8.

Lotteries, for example, are subjects for the exercise of the power — which the legislature cannot grant away. It is easier to determine whether a particular case comes within the general scope of the power, than to give an abstract definition of the power itself which will be in all respects accurate.[5]

The power was not surrendered to the United States, but remains complete, unqualified, and exclusive in the States. If one were to attempt to define a subject so diversified and multifarious, we would say, that every law came within this description which concerned the welfare of the whole people of a State, or of any individual within it; whether it related to their rights or their duties; whether it respected them as men or as citizens of the State, and whether in their public or private relations; whether it related to the rights of persons, or of property, of the whole people of a State, or of any individual within it; and whose operation was within the territorial limits of the State, and upon the persons and things within its jurisdiction.[6]

Within its category comes every law for the restraint and punishment of crime, and for the preservation of the public peace, health, and morals.[1]

Although a State is bound to receive and to permit the sale, by the importer, of any article of merchandise which Congress authorizes to be imported, it is not bound to furnish a market for it, nor to abstain from the passage of any law which it may deem necessary or advisable to guard the health or morals of its citizens, although such law may discourage importation, diminish the profits of the importer, or lessen the revenue of the general government.[2]

The States have power to prevent the introduction into them of articles of trade which, on account of their existing condition, would bring in and spread disease and death. Such articles are not merchantable; they are not legitimate subjects of trade and commerce. They may be rightly outlawed, as intrinsically and directly the immediate sources and causes of destruction to health and life.[3]

If the right of the States to pass statutes to protect themselves in regard to the criminal, the pauper, and the diseased foreigner, exists at all, it is limited to such laws as are absolutely necessary for that purpose,— else it invades the power in Congress to regulate commerce.[4]

In their leading features, the power of "eminent domain" and the "police power" are plainly different, the latter reaching even to the destruction of property, as in tearing down a house to prevent the spread of a conflagration, or to removal at the expense of the owner, as in the case of a nuisance tending to breed disease. In the first instance, the community proceeds on the ground of overwhelming calamity; in the second, because of the fault of the owner of the thing; and in either case compensation is not a condition of the exercise of the power. The same general principles attend its exercise in other directions, and it is generally based upon disaster, fault, or inevitable necessity. On the other hand, the power of eminent domain is conditioned generally upon compensation to the owner, and for the most part is founded, not in calamity or fault, but in public utility. These distinctions clearly mark the cases distant from the border line between the two powers, but in or near to it they begin to fade into each other, and it is difficult to say when compensation becomes a duty and when not.[5] See DOMAIN, Eminent.

See also COMMERCE; HEALTH; INSPECTION, 1; LEVEE; LICENSE, 3; MONOPOLY; OLEOMARGARINE; PROHIBITION, 2.

[1] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 359 (1887).

[2] Beer Company v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33 (1877), Bradley, J.; Fertilizing Company v. Hyde Park, ib. 699 (1877); Justice v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 212 (1885), cases; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 478–79 (1887).

[3] [2 Kent, 340; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 146 (1876), cases.

[4] Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 441 (1879), cases.

[5] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 818–19 (1879), cases, Waite, C. J.

[6] [City of New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. *139 (1837), Barbour, J.

[1] License Cases, 5 How. 631 (1847), Grier, J.

[2] Ibid. 577, Taney, C. J.

[3] Bowman v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 125 U. S. 489 (1888), Matthews, J.; Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 520, 530–31 (1887).

[4] Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275 (1875), Miller, J.

[5] Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. 85 (1876), Agnew, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 85 (1851); Commonwealth v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 546 (1882); Bass v. State, 34 La. An. 496 (1882); Hollingsworth v. Parish of Tensas, 17 F. R. 114 (1883); Davenport v. Richmond City, 81 Va. 639 (1886). See generally Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 57 (1872): views of minority (p. 83) explained by Field, J., in Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 id. 133–41 (1873);

3. The body of officers charged with the duty of enforcing those laws of a community (in particular of a municipality) intended to preserve and promote the public peace, morals, health, security, and happiness.[1]

Police court. An inferior court exercising a limited jurisdiction over offenses of a criminal nature; and, perhaps, also, a limited civil jurisdiction. See PEACE, 1, Justice; SUMMARY.

Police justice or magistrate. A magistrate charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of a conservator or justice of the peace.[2]

The prefix "police" may serve merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction.[3]

Police officer. May designate one of a class of persons who are not constables.[3] See RIOT.

POLICY. 1. Polity; police, q. v.

The settled method by which the government and affairs of a nation are, or may be, administered; a system of public or official administration, as designed to promote the external or internal prosperity of a state.[4]

Public policy. What is the "public policy" of a State, and what is contrary to it, if inquired into beyond what its constitution, laws, and judicial decisions make known, will be found to be a matter of great vagueness and uncertainty, and to involve discussions which scarcely come within the range of judicial duty and functions, and upon which men may and will differ.[5]

What is termed the "policy of the government," with reference to any particular legislation, is generally a very uncertain thing, upon which all sorts of opinions may be formed. It is a ground much too unstable upon which to rest the interpretation of a statute.[6]

The Federal courts can know nothing of "public policy" except from the Constitution and the laws, and the course of administration and decision. Considerations of policy or expediency must, in general, be addressed to the legislature. Cases in which arguments drawn from public policy have influence are cases in which the course of legislation and administration does not leave any doubt upon the question what the public policy is, and in which what would otherwise be obscure or of doubtful interpretation may be cleared and resolved by reference to what is already received and established.[1]

Anything more indistinct, undefined, and incapable of certainty or uniformity than "public policy" in the law determining the responsibility of common carriers, and restricting its limitation by special contract, can hardly be imagined. Of late years the principle has been invoked with increasing frequency; and, sometimes at least, seems to be made use of as authority for deciding in whatever way the court thinks would, on the whole, be most useful.[2]

Void, as "against public policy," are all agreements to control the business operations of the government, the regular administration of justice, the appointments of public officers, or the ordinary course of legislation. The law looks at the general tendency of such agreements.[3] See further LEGAL, Illegality.

The phrase "policy of law," in a statute providing that "no interest or policy of law shall exclude a party or person from being a witness," etc., does not include the "public policy" which prevents a husband or wife from proving non-access.[4]

2. A warrant for money in public funds.[5]

The ticket or writing which evidences a lottery contract. See LOTTERY.

3. A contract of insurance or assurance, as expressed in writing. See, at length, INSURANCE.

POLITIC.[6] Referring to public government: as, in "body politic;" also, concerning a public corporation, q. v. See also BODY, 2.

Political. Pertaining to public policy or politics; relating to state in distinction from municipal affairs.

Pertaining to policy or the administration of government.[7]

Political assessment. See SERVICE, 3, Civil.

Political corporation. See CORPORATION.

Political law. Law treating of the science of government; the jurisprudence of government.

6 South. Law R. 59-79 (1880), cases; 3 Kan. Law J. 386; 4 id. 36 (1886)—Chic. Leg. News; 25 Cent. Mag. 179; 5 Saw. 505; 70 Ill. 194; 29 Minn. 451; 12 Mo. Ap. 219-22; 44 N. J. L. 93.

[1] See 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 194; 19 Am. Law Rev. 547-70 (1885), cases.

[2] Wenzler v. People, 58 N. Y. 530 (1874), Allen, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Smith, 111 Mass. 408 (1873).

[4] Webster's Dict.

[5] Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 2 How. 197-98 (1844), Story, J.; Magee v. O'Neill, 19 S. C. 185 (1882).

[6] Hadden v. The Controller, 5 Wall. 111 (1866), Field, J.

[1] License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 469 (1866), Chase, C. J.; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 710 (1885), Field, J.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr. 249.

[3] Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 55-56 (1864).

[4] Tioga County v South Creek Township, 75 Pa. 437 (1874).

[5] F. police; L. L. politicum: Gk. poly'ptychon, a writing in many folds or leaves; a register.

[6] Gk. politicos', belonging to the citizen or state.

[7] People v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 568 (1878): Bouvier.

Political liberty. See LIBERTY, 1.

Political offense. See EXTRADITION.

Political office. May refer to an office not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or with the execution of the mandates of a superior, as, of the President or the head of a department.[1] See OFFICE, 1.

Political rights. Such rights as may be exercised in the formation and administration of the government.[2] Opposed to civil rights. See RIGHT, 2 (a).

Politics. The public polity or policy of a state or nation.

In its original meaning, comprehends everything that concerns the government of the country.[3]

The President cannot be restrained by injunction from carrying into effect an act of Congress alleged to be unconstitutional.[4]

See GOVERNMENT; LIBERTY, 1, Of the press; POLICY, Public.

POLL.[5] 1, n. A head; a person.

Polls. Individual persons; also, the place where electors are counted, and the votes by which they are counted. Whence polling place.

Challenge to the polls. A challenge to single persons as jurors.[6] See CHALLENGE, 3.

Deed-poll. A deed made by one party only, the edges of the instrument being "polled" or shaven even.[7] See further DEED, 2.

Poll-tax. A tax upon individual persons. See TAX, 2.

2, v. To enter the names of persons on a list or in a registry, as, for purposes of taxation, or voting.

Poll a jury. To call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each man to declare his verdict before it is recorded.

In most of the States it is the absolute right of an accused person to poll the jury. The right did not exist at common law; it seems to have grown up in practice.[8]

The rulings differ as to the right of a party to demand a poll of the jury. In some States, in both civil and criminal cases, the right may not be denied; in others, the matter is left to the discretion of the trial judge.[1]

POLYANDRY. See note 2, infra.

POLYGAMY.[2] The act of formally entering into marriage with a third person, by one already sustaining this relation with a second person. More frequently termed bigamy,[3] q. v. Whence anti-polygamy, polygamist, polygamous.

The anti-polygamy act of March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 635), amending the act of March 22, 1882 (22 St. L. 30), which in turn amended Rev. Stat. § 5352, provides as follows:[4]

Sec. 1. That in any proceeding or examination before a grand jury, a judge, justice, or a United States commissioner, or a court, in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the person accused shall be a competent witness, and may be called, but shall not be compelled to testify in such proceeding, examination, or prosecution without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be; and such witness shall not be permitted to testify as to any statement or communication made by either husband or wife to each other, during the existence of the marriage relation, deemed confidential at common law.

Sec. 2. That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, whether before a United States commissioner, justice, judge, a grand jury, or any court, an attachment for any witness may be issued by the court, judge, or commissioner, without a previous subpœna, compelling the immediate attendance of such witness, when it shall appear by oath or affirmation, to the commissioner, justice, judge, or court, as the case may be, that there is reasonable ground to believe that such witness will unlawfully fail to obey a subpœna issued and served in the usual course in such cases; and in such case the usual witness-fee shall be paid to such witnesses so attached: Provided, That the person so attached may at any time secure his or her discharge from custody by executing a recognizance with sufficient surety, conditioned for the appearance of such person at the proper time, as a witness in the cause or proceeding wherein the attachment may be issued.

---

[1] Twenty Per Cent. Cases, 18 Wall. 575 (1871), Clifford, J.

[2] People v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 563 (1878).

[3] Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sr. *156 (1750), Hardwicke, Ld. Ch.

[4] Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. 475 (1866).

[5] O. Dut. polle, a head or pate.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 361; 4 id. 352.

[7] See 2 Bl. Com. 296; 2 Hill, 550.

[8] Doyle v. United States, 11 Biss. 106 (1881); 60 Md. 402; 10 F. R. 274, cases; South. Law J. & R., Dec. 1879: 1 Crim. Law Mag. 170-77, cases.

[1] Hindrey v. Williams, 9 Col. 376-77 (1886), cases.

[2] Gk. polygami'a, marrying many wives: poly'-many; gam'os, marriage. Polyandry: polys', many; anĕr, andros', man, male, husband. Monandry: mónos, one.

[3] 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 296. See 4 Bl. Com. 164; 4 Steph. Com. 278, note; R. S. § 5352.

[4] The act was received by the President, February 19, 1887, not having been returned by him to the House in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution, it became a law without his approval.

Sec. 3. That whoever commits adultery shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding three years; and when the act is committed between a married woman and a man who is unmarried, both parties to such act shall be deemed guilty of adultery; and when such act is committed between a married man and a woman who is unmarried, the man shall be deemed guilty of adultery.

Sec. 4. That if any person related to another person within and not including the fourth degree of consanguinity computed according to the rules of the civil law, shall marry or cohabit with, or have sexual intercourse with such other so related person, knowing her or him to be within said degree of relationship, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of incest, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three years and not more than fifteen years.

Sec. 5. That if an unmarried man or woman commit fornication, each of them shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Sec. 6. That all laws of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah which provide that prosecutions for adultery can only be commenced on the complaint of the husband or wife are hereby disapproved and annulled; and all prosecutions for adultery may hereafter be instituted in the same way that prosecutions for other crimes are.

Sec. 7. That commissioners appointed by the supreme court and district courts in the Territory shall possess and may exercise all the powers and jurisdiction that are or may be possessed or exercised by justices of the peace in said Territory under the laws thereof, and the same powers conferred by law on commissioners appointed by circuit courts of the United States.

Sec. 8. That the marshal of said Territory, and his deputies, shall possess and may exercise all the powers in executing the laws of the United States or of said Territory, possessed and exercised by sheriffs, constables, and their deputies as peace officers; and each of them shall cause all offenders against the law, in his view, to enter into recognizance to keep the peace and to appear at the next term of the court having jurisdiction of the case, and to commit to jail in case of failure to give such recognizance. They shall quell and suppress assaults and batteries, riots, routs, affrays, and insurrections.

Sec. 9. That every ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of a marriage ceremony, of any kind, in any of the Territories, whether either or both or more of the parties to such ceremony be lawfully competent to be the subjects of such marriage or ceremony or not, shall be certified by a certificate stating the fact and nature of such ceremony, the full names of each of the parties concerned, and the full name of every officer, priest, and person, by whatever style or designation called or known, in any way taking part in the performance of such ceremony, which certificate shall be drawn up and signed by the parties to such ceremony and by every officer, priest, and person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and shall be by the officer, priest, or other person solemnizing such marriage or ceremony filed in the office of the probate court, or, if there be none, in the office of court having probate powers in the county or district in which such ceremony shall take place, for record, and shall be immediately recorded, and be at all times subject to inspection as other public records. Such certificate, or the record thereof, or a duly certified copy of such record, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this act to be stated therein, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in which the matter shall be drawn in question. Any person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 10. That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence now legally admissible for that purpose.

Sec. 11. That the laws enacted by the legislative assembly of Utah which provide for or recognize the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or to be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of the father of any such illegitimate child are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from his or her father or to receive any distributive share in the estate of his or her father: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any illegitimate child born within twelve months after the passage of this act, nor to any child made legitimate by the seventh section of the act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to bigamy, approved March 22, 1882.

Sec. 12. That the laws enacted by the legislative assembly conferring jurisdiction upon probate courts, or the judges thereof, or any of them, in said Territory, other than in respect of the estates of deceased persons, and in respect of the guardianship of the persons and property of infants, and in respect of the persons and property of persons not of sound mind, are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no probate court or judge of probate shall exercise any jurisdiction other than in respect of the matters aforesaid, except as a member of a county court; and every such jurisdiction so by force of this act withdrawn from the said probate courts or judges shall be had and exercised by the district courts of said Territory respectively.

Sec. 13. That it shall be the duty of the attorney-general of the United States to institute and prosecute proceedings to forfeit and escheat to the United States the property of corporations obtained or held in violation of section three of the act approved July 1, 1862, to punish and prevent polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the legislative assembly of Utah, or in violation of section 1890 of the Revised Statutes; and all such property so forfeited and escheated shall be disposed of by the secretary of the interior, and the proceeds thereof applied to the use and benefit of the common schools in the Territory in which such property may be: Provided, That no building, or the grounds appurtenant thereto, which is held and occupied exclusively for purposes of the worship of God, or parsonage connected therewith, or burial ground shall be forfeited.

Sec. 14. That in any proceeding for the enforcement of the provisions of law against corporations or associations acquiring or holding property in any Territory in excess of the amount limited by law, the court before which such proceeding may be instituted shall have power in a summary way to compel the production of all books, records, papers, and documents of or belonging to any trustee or person holding or controlling or managing property in which such corporation may have any right, title, or interest whatever.

Sec. 15. That all laws of the legislative assembly of Utah, or of the so-called government of the State of Deseret, creating, organizing, amending, or continuing the corporation or association called the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company are hereby disapproved and annulled; and the said corporation, in so far as it may now have, or pretend to have, any legal existence, is hereby dissolved; and it shall not be lawful for the legislative assembly to create, organize, or in any manner recognise any such corporation or association, or to pass any law for the purpose of or operating to accomplish the bringing of persons into the said Territory for any purpose whatsoever.

Sec. 16. That it shall be the duty of the attorney-general of the United States to cause such proceedings to be taken in the supreme court of Utah as shall be proper to carry into effect the provisions of the preceding section, and pay the debts and to dispose of the property and assets of said corporation according to law. Said property and assets, in excess of the debts and the amount of any lawful claims established by the court against the same, shall escheat to the United States, and shall be taken, invested, and disposed of by the secretary of the interior, under the direction of the President, for the benefit of common schools in said Territory.

Sec. 17. That the acts of the legislative assembly incorporating, continuing, or providing for the corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and the ordinance of the so-called general assembly of the State of Deseret incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, so far as the same may now have legal force and validity, are hereby disapproved and annulled, and the said corporation, in so far as it may now have, or pretend to have, any legal existence, is hereby dissolved. That it shall be the duty of the attorney-general of the United States to cause such proceedings to be taken in the supreme court of Utah as shall be proper to execute the foregoing provisions of this section and to wind up the affairs of said corporation conformably to law; and in such proceedings the court shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to make such decree or decrees as shall be proper to effectuate the transfer of the title to real property now held and used by said corporation for places of worship, and parsonages connected therewith, and burial grounds, and of the description mentioned in the proviso to section thirteen of this act and in section twenty-six of this act, to the respective trustees mentioned in section twenty-six of this act; and for the purposes of this section said court shall have all the powers of a court of equity.

Sec. 18. (a) A widow shall be endowed of third part of all the lands whereof her husband was seized of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage unless she shall have lawfully released her right thereto.

(b) The widow of any alien who at the time of his death shall be entitled by law to hold any real estate, if she be an inhabitant of the Territory at the time of such death, shall be entitled to dower of such estate in the same manner as if such alien had been a native citizen.

(c) If a husband seized of an estate of inheritance in lands exchanges them for other lands, his widow shall not have dower of both, but shall make her election to be endowed of the lands given or of those taken in exchange; and if such election be not evinced by the commencement of proceedings to recover her dower of the lands given in exchange within one year after the death of her husband, she shall be deemed to have elected to take her dower of the lands received in exchange.

(d) When a person seized of an estate of inheritance in lands shall have executed a mortgage, or other conveyance in the nature of mortgage, of such estate, before marriage, his widow shall nevertheless be entitled to dower out of the lands mortgaged or so conveyed, as against every person except the mortgagee or grantee in such conveyance and those claiming under him.

(e) Where a husband shall purchase lands during coverture, and shall at the same time execute a mortgage, or other conveyance in the nature of mortgage, of his estate in such lands to secure the payment of the purchase money, his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such lands, as against the mortgagee or grantee in such conveyance or those claiming under him, although she shall not have united in such mortgage; but she shall be entitled to her dower in such lands as against all other persons.

(f) Where in such case the mortgagee, or such grantee or those claiming under him, shall, after the death of the husband of such widow, cause the land mortgaged or so conveyed to be sold, either under a power of sale contained in the mortgage or such conveyance or by virtue of the decree of a court if any surplus shall remain after payment of the moneys due on such mortgage or such conveyance, and the costs and charges of the sale, such widow shall nevertheless be entitled to the interest or income of the one-third part of such surplus for her life, as her dower.

(g) A widow shall not be endowed of lands conveyed to her husband by way of mortgage unless he acquire an absolute estate therein during the marriage period.

(h) In case of divorce dissolving the marriage contract for the misconduct of the wife, she shall not be endowed.

Sec. 19. That hereafter the judge of probate in each county within the Territory of Utah provided for by the existing laws thereof shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and so much of the laws of said Territory as provide for the election of such judge by the legislative assembly are hereby disapproved and annulled.

Sec. 20. That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the legislative assembly providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

Sec. 21. That all laws of the legislative assembly which provide for numbering or identifying the votes of the electors at any election are hereby disapproved and annulled; but the foregoing provision shall not preclude the lawful registration of voters, or any other provisions for securing fair elections which do not involve the disclosure of the candidates for whom any particular elector shall have voted.

Sec. 22. That the existing election districts and apportionments of representation concerning the members of the legislative assembly are hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the governor, Territorial secretary, and the board of commissioners mentioned in section nine of the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes in reference to bigamy in said Territory, forthwith to redistrict said Territory, and apportion representation in the same in such manner as to provide, as nearly as may be, for an equal representation of the people (excepting Indians not taxed), being citizens of the United States, according to numbers, in said legislative assembly, and to the number of members of the council and house of representatives, respectively, as now established by law; and a record of the establishment of such new districts and the apportionment of representation thereto shall be made in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and such establishment and representation shall continue until Congress shall otherwise provide; and no persons other than citizens of the United States otherwise qualified shall be entitled to vote at any election in said Territory.

Sec. 23. That the provisions of section nine of said act approved March 22, 1882, in regard to registration and election officers, and the registration of voters, and the conduct of elections, and the powers and duties of the board therein mentioned, shall continue and remain operative until the provisions and laws therein referred to to be made and enacted by the legislative assembly of said Territory shall have been made and enacted and have been approved by Congress.

Sec. 24. That every male person twenty-one years of age resident in the Territory shall, as a condition precedent to his right to register or vote at any election, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation, before the registration officer of his voting precinct, that he is over twenty-one years of age, and has resided in the Territory for six months then last passed and in the precinct for one month immediately preceding the date thereof, and that he is a native-born (or naturalized, as the case may be) citizen of the United States, and further state in such oath or affirmation his full name, with his age, place of business, his status, whether single or married, and, if married, the name of his lawful wife, and that he will support the Constitution of the United States and will faithfully obey the laws thereof, and especially will obey the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes in reference to bigamy, and will also obey this act in respect of the crimes in said act defined and forbidden, and that he will not, directly or indirectly, aid or abet, counsel or advise, any other person to commit any of said crimes. Such registration officer is authorized to administer said oath or affirmation; and all such oaths or affirmations shall be by him delivered to the clerk of the probate court of the proper county, and shall be deemed public records therein. But if any election shall occur in said Territory before the next revision of the registration lists as required by law, the said oath or affirmation shall be administered by the presiding judge of the election precinct on or before the day of election. As a condition precedent to the right to hold office in or under said Territory, the officer, before entering on the duties of his office, shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation declaring his full name, with his age, place of business, his status, whether married or single, and, if married, the name of his lawful wife, and that he will support the Constitution of the United States and will faithfully obey the laws thereof, and especially will obey the said act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, and will also obey this act in respect of the crimes in said act defined and forbidden, and that he will not, directly or indirectly, aid or abet, counsel or advise, any other person to commit any of said crimes; which oath or affirmation shall be recorded in the proper office and indorsed on the commission or certificate of appointment. All grand and petit jurors in said Territory shall take the same oath or affirmation, to be administered, in writing or orally, in the proper court. No person shall be entitled to vote in any election in said Territory, or be capable of jury service, or hold any office of trust or emolument in said Territory who shall not have taken the oath or affirmation aforesaid. No person who shall have been convicted of any crime under this act, or under the act of Congress aforesaid approved March 22, 1882, or who shall be a polygamist, or who shall associate or cohabit polygamously with persons of the other sex, shall be entitled to vote in any election in said Territory, or be capable of jury service, or to hold any office of trust or emolument in said Territory.

Sec. 25. That the office of Territorial superintendent of district schools created by the laws of Utah is hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the supreme court of said Territory to appoint a commissioner of schools, who shall possess and exercise all the powers and duties heretofore imposed by the laws of said Territory upon the Territorial superintendent of district schools, and who shall receive the same salary and compensation, which shall be paid out of the treasury of said Territory; and the laws of the Territory providing for the method of election and appointment of such Territorial superintendent of district schools are hereby suspended until the further action of Congress shall be had in respect thereto. The said superintendent shall have power to prohibit the use in any district school of any book of a sectarian character or otherwise unsuitable. Said superintendent shall collect and classify statistics and other information respecting the district and other schools in said Territory, showing their progress, the whole number of children of school age, the number who attend school in each year in the respective counties, the average length of time of their attendance, the number of teachers and the compensation paid to the same, the number of teachers who are Mormons, the number who are so-called gentiles, the number of children of Mormon parents and the number of children of so-called gentile parents, and their respective average attendance at school; all of which statistics and information shall be annually reported to Congress, through the governor of said Territory and the department of the interior.

Sec. 26. That all religious societies, sects, and congregations shall have the right to have and to hold, through trustees appointed by any court exercising probate powers in a Territory, only on the nomination of the authorities of such society, sect, or congregation, so much real property for the erection or use of houses of worship, and for such parsonages and burial grounds as shall be necessary for the convenience and use of the several congregations of such religious society, sect, or congregation.

Sec. 27. That all laws passed by the so-called State of Deseret and by the legislative assembly for the organization of the militia or for the creation of the Nauvoo Legion are hereby annulled, and declared of no effect; and the militia of Utah shall be organized and subjected in all respects to the laws of the United States regulating the militia in the Territories: Provided, however, That all general officers of the militia shall be appointed by the governor of the Territory, by and with the advice and consent of the council thereof. The legislative assembly shall have power to pass laws for organizing the militia thereof, subject to the approval of Congress.

POND. See LAKES.

The great ponds of the commonwealth belong to the public, and, like the tide-waters and navigable streams, are under the control of the government.[1] See ICE; RIPARIAN; WATER.

PONE. L. Put, place.

In old English law, an original writ issued out of chancery, to remove a plaint from an inferior to a superior court; also, the initial word of the mandate of an attachment for non-appearance on the return of an original writ. The Latin words were: Pone per vadium, etc., put by gage, etc.[2]

POOL.[3] The stake played for in certain games of cards.[4] See GAME, 2.

"Pool, in the sense here used ['a real estate pool'] is of modern date, and may not be well understood, but in this case it can mean no more than that certain individuals are engaged in dealing in real estate as a commodity of traffic."[5]

[1] Attorney-General v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation, 133 Mass. 364 (1882). See also Angell, Wat. C. § 41; 3 Washb. R. P. 416.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 280.

[3] F. poule, a hen: hen's eggs, as a stake.

[4] Webster's Dict.

[5] Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168 (1880), Miller, J. Compare Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 541 (1880).

Pooling contracts between railroad companies, by which territory and traffic is divided and rival carriers discriminated against, are against public policy They are ultra vires, as amounting to a partnership of corporations; they are combinations against lawful competition in trade; and the courts would possibly condemn the railway managers, who make their companies parties to such unlawful confederations, as guilty of a breach of trust toward their stockholders.[1] See COMBINATION, 2; COMMERCE, Inter-State Act; TRADE, Restraint of; TRUST, 2.

Pooling table. Keeping a pool table for hire is a thing affecting public morals, which the legislature can either absolutely prohibit or regulate. A common form of regulation is by requiring a license.[2] See GAME, 2; SALOON.

POOR. In a statute providing for the relief of the poor: persons so completely destitute of property as to require assistance from the public.[3]

In a will, held to include those who have exhausted all means of support and are in a condition to require public aid for the supply of their necessities.[4]

"Poor," "poor person," "person in distress," "indigent person," and "pauper" may be used synonymously."[5]

"Casual poor" are such poor persons as are suddenly taken sick, or meet with accident, when from home.[6]

See BELONG; CHARITY; IMPRISONMENT, For debt; PAUPER.

POP. See LIQUOR.

POPULAR.[7] Pertaining or belonging to, or obtaining among, the people in general.

A "popular action" is maintainable by any person who will sue for the penalty provided for in the case. See ACTION, 2, Popular.

The "popular sense" of words used in a statute is the sense in which they are understood by persons conversant with the subject-matter.[8]

PORCELAIN. See PAINTING.

PORK PACKER. See MANUFACTURER.

PORT. Generally, a harbor or shelter for vessels from storms. Applied to a place where there is no harbor, may mean only a [1] Denver, &c. R. Co. v. Atchison, &c. R. Co., 15 F. R. 650, 667 (1883), cases, Hallett, J.; id. 667–74, cases.

[2] Commonwealth v. Kinsley, 133 Mass. 579 (1882).

[3] See State v. Osawkee Township, 14 Kan. 421-22 (1875), Brewer, J.

[4] Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 492 (1885).

[5] Hutchings v. Thompson, 10 Cush. 289 (1852), Metcalf, J.

[6] Force v. Haines, 17 N. J. L. 405 (1840), Hornblower, Chief Justice.

[7] L. popularis: populus, the people.

[8] Grenfell v. Commissioners of Revenue, L. R., 1 Ex. D. 248 (1876).

road or anchorage — a place for loading and unloading cargoes.[1]

May include any place from which merchandise can be shipped for importation, or at which merchandise can be imported.[2]

Foreign port. A port outside of the United States.[3]

The ports of the States are foreign to each other for some purposes; as, for pledging the credit of the owner for supplies.[4] See VESSEL, Foreign.

Home port. The port of enrollment.

While it is difficult to formulate a rule by which the home port of a vessel belonging to persons residing in different States may be determined, it is well settled that a vessel cannot have more than one home port, or be a domestic vessel in more than one State. A fortiori, if owned by residents of different States, she may be a foreign vessel in the port of a State wherein certain of her owners reside. Prima facie, the home port is the place of enrollment, where or nearest to which the owner, or, if more than one owner, the managing owner, resides.[5]

Port of delivery. Sometimes distinguishes the port of unloading or destination from any port at which the vessel touches for other purposes.[6]

Port of destination. In a time policy, may mean any foreign port to which the vessel may be destined, as well as her home port, and include any usual stopping place for loading or unloading cargoes.[7]

Port of discharge. Any place at which it is usual to discharge cargo, and to which the vessel is destined for the purpose of discharging a substantial part.[8]

To constitute a "port of destination" a "port of discharge" some goods must be unladen or some act done to terminate the voyage there.[9]

Port of entry. A port designated for the entry of vessels, with reference to the execution of laws imposing duties. See ENTRY, II, 2.

Port-risk. A risk upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has departed on another voyage.[1]

See ARRIVAL; BLOCKADE; COMMERCE; DISPATCH; EXPORT; IMPORT; INSPECTION, 1; USE, 1.

PORTION. Is synonymous with part.[2]

Specifically, such part of a parent's estate as is given to each child.

Portionist. One who receives a share or portion.

Share, part, and portion are frequently synonymous. Applied to property acquired from an ancestor, "portion" is the most comprehensive word that can be used.[3]

See ADVANCEMENT; PART, 1; PARTITION; RAISE; SATISFACTION, 8.

PORTRAIT. See HEIRLOOM.

POSITION. See BAGGAGE; NECESSARIES; RANK; STATUS.

POSITIVE. Express; absolute; not doubtful; affirmative; direct: as, a positive or positive — affirmation, condition, evidence, fraud, proof, statute, qq. v.

Positive law. Law actually ordained or established; statutory regulations; enacted law, or enactments; the lex scripta.

POSSE. L. To be able: power; to be possible: possibility.

In posse. In possibility; opposed to in esse: in actual existence.[4] See CONTINGENCY.

Posse comitatus. The power of the county, q. v.

POSSESSIO. L. Being near: possession; seizin.

Habere facias possessionem. That you cause to have possession. The emphatic words in the writ of execution, and now the name of the writ itself, where a plaintiff has been awarded the possession of land.[5]

Abbreviated hab. fa. poss., hab. fa., and, perhaps, h. f. p.

Pedis possessio. Possession of the foot: an actual foothold; actual possession of land.

Since standing upon land is a natural symbol of possessing it, the phrase has come to mean actual possession of any particular piece of land, as evidenced by occupancy, inclosure, etc. Pedis positio. Placing of the foot; a foothold.

Possessio fratris. The brother's possession.

---

[1] [De Longuemere v. N. Y. Fire Ins. Co., 10 Johns. *125 (1813), Kent, C. J.

[2] R. S. § 2767.

[3] King v. Parks, 19 Johns. *877 (1822); 26 Wend. 511.

[4] The Lulu, 10 Wall. 200 (1869); Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 303 (1868); 2 Low. 555; 2 Abb. U. S. 172.

[5] The Ellen Holgate, 30 F. R. 126 (1887), cases, Wales, Judge.

[6] [The Two Catherines, 2 Mas. 331 (1821), Story, J.

[7] [Gookin v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 12 Gray, 515-16 (1859), Dewey, J.

[8] Bramhall v. Sun Ins. Co., 104 Mass. 513 (1870), Gray, J.; 132 id. 588; 5 Mas. 414; 2 Cliff. 4; 1 Sprague, 485; 18 L. R. 94.

[9] United States v. Barker, 5 Mas. 406 (1829), Story, J.

[1] Nelson v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 71 N. Y. 459 (1877).

[2] Holly v. State, 54 Ala. 240 (1875).

[3] Lewis's Appeal, 108 Pa. 137 (1885), Mercur, C. J.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 397; 10 Johns. 85.

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 412.

In the English law of descents, the possession by one person in such privity with another as to be considered that other's own possession. It was a rule of law that "possession by a brother of an estate in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir:" his possession makes his sister of the whole blood his heir in preference to a brother of the half blood.[1]

Potior est conditio possidentis. The stronger is the condition of the party in possession.[2] See further CONDITIO, Melior, etc.; POSSESSION, Adverse.

POSSESSION.[3] See POSSESSIO.

Owning or having a thing in one's power.[4]

The detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself or by another in his name.[5]

Holding an exclusive exercise of dominion over land.[6]

"Possessed" sometimes implies a temporary interest in lands; sometimes a corporal having; and sometimes no more than that one has a property in a thing — that he has it as owner, that it is his.[7]

Possessor. He who hold, detains, or enjoys a thing as his own.

A bona fide possessor of land is one who not only supposes himself to be the true proprietor, but who is ignorant that his title is contested by another person claiming a better right to the land.[8]

Possessory. Refers to a proceeding intended to obtain possession, and not merely to determine title.

Thus, ejectment is a possessory remedy.

In a possessory action the right of possession, and not that of property, is contested. The action decides nothing with respect to the right of property; it merely restores the demandant to that state or condition in which he was, or by law ought to have been, before dispossession.[9] See PETITORY.

Actual possession. Exists when a thing is in one's immediate occupancy. Constructive possession. Possession in contemplation of the law.[10]

Actual possession, which means a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, is usually evidenced by occupation, by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, or by appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property.[1]

Constructive possession, where there is no actual possession, is in him who has the legal and rightful title.[2]

Adverse possession. Possession of realty avowedly opposed to some claim of title in another.

A possession not under the legal proprietor, but entered into without his consent, directly or indirectly given; a possession by which he is disseised and ousted.[3]

An adverse and hostile possession is one held for the possessor, as distinguished from one held in subordination to the right of another; a possession inconsistent with the possession or right of possession by another. Such is an exclusive possession of one who is not in privity with the true owner.[4]

"Visible" and "notorious" are terms employed to denote that the possession must be more than secret, and unknown to the disseised owner. Since acquiescence implies knowledge, a possession that he permits must be "notorious" or known to him.[4]

If under claim of right, and uninterrupted, open, visible, and notorious for twenty years, such possession is evidence of title in the possessor, and a good defense in ejectment.[5]

Independently of positive statute law, such a possession affords a presumption that all the claimants to the land acquiesce in the claim of the possessor, or that they forbear for some substantial reason to controvert his claim or to disturb him in his quiet enjoyment. Secret possession will not do, as publicity and notoriety are necessary as evidence of notice and to put adverse claimants upon inquiry. Mere occupation is not sufficient, but adverse and continuous possession is.[6]

The weight of authority is that, where one has had the peaceable, undisturbed, open possession of real or personal property, with an assertion of his ownership, for the period which, under the law, would bar an action for its recovery by the real owner, the former has acquired a good title — a title superior to that of the latter, whose neglect to avail himself of his legal rights has lost him his title.[7]

---

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 227; 4 Kent, 384; Reeve, Desc. 377; 2 Pet. 59, 625.

[2] As to possession in Roman law see 3 Law Q. Rev. 52-53 (1887).

[3] Pos-sĕsh'-un, or zĕsh'-un.

[4] Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80 (1876), Allen, J.

[5] [Redfield v. Utica, &c. R. Co., 25 Barb. 58 (1851), W. F. Allen, J.

[6] [Booth v. Small, 25 Iowa, 181 (1868), Beck, J.

[7] Mayor of Detroit v. Park Commissioners, 44 Mich. 608 (1880), Cooley, J.

[8] Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 79 (1823), Washington, J.; Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 80 (1883).

[9] [2 Bl. Com. 198, 190.

[10] Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80 (1876), Allen, J.; Lillianskyoldt v. Goss, 2 Utah, 297 (1878).

[1] Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. *573 (1860), Field, C. J. See also 71 Ala. 264; 1 Cal. 263; 16 id. 109; 4 Nev. 68; 59 N. Y. 136.

[2] Norris's Appeal, 64 Pa. 282 (1870).

[3] [French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. *442-46 (1831), Hosmer, Chief Justice.

[4] Sheaffer v. Eakman, 56 Pa. 153 (1867), Strong, J.; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. *53 (1837).

[5] Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 776 (1876), cases.

[6] Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 145-46 (1871), cases, Clifford, J.; Hughes v. United States, 4 id. 232 (1866).

[7] Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 623 (1885), cases, Miller, J.; Gilbert v. Decker, 53 Conn. 401-5 (1885), cases; Hollingsworth v. Sherman, 81 Va. 671, 674 (1886), cases.

Adverse possession of vacant lands, under color of title, includes as much as is within the boundaries of the title, and to that extent the true owner is disseised. But if the latter be in actual possession of any part, his constructive seizure extends to all not in fact occupied by the intruder. The reason is, the intruder's acts give notice only to the extent of actual occupancy.[1]

Though a presumption of a deed may be rebutted by proof of facts inconsistent with its supposed existence, yet, where no such facts are shown, and the things done and the things omitted, with regard to the property in controversy, by the respective parties, for long periods after the execution of the supposed conveyance, can be explained satisfactorily only upon the hypothesis of its existence, the jury may be instructed to presume such a conveyance. The presumption of a grant is indulged merely to quiet a long possession which might otherwise be disturbed by reason of the inability of the possessor to produce the muniments of title, which were actually given at the time of the acquisition of the property by him or those under whom he claims, but have been lost, or which he or they were entitled to have at that time, but had neglected to obtain, and of which the witnesses have passed away, or their recollection of the transaction has become dimmed and imperfect. And hence, as a rule, it is only where the possession has been actual, open, and exclusive for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations to bar an action for the recovery of the land, that the presumption of a deed can be invoked. . . The presumption may be invoked where a proprietary right has long been exercised, although the exclusive possession of the whole property may have been occasionally interrupted during the period necessary to create a title by adverse possession, if in addition to the actual possession there were other open acts of ownership, as, the payment of taxes.[2]

The maxim that the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the defendant's, is applicable to all actions for the recovery of property. But if the plaintiff had actual prior possession of the land, this is strong enough to enable him to recover from a mere trespasser who entered without any title. He may do so by a writ of entry, where that remedy is still practiced, or by an ejectment, or he may maintain trespass. This rule is founded upon the presumption that every possession peaceably acquired is lawful, and it is sustained by the policy of protecting the public peace against disorder. But, as it is intended to prevent and redress trespasses and wrongs, it is limited to cases where the defendants are trespassers and wrong-doers. It is therefore qualified in its application by the circumstances which constitute the origin of the adverse possession, and the character of the claim on which it is defended. It does not extend to cases where the defendant has acquired possession peaceably and in good faith, under color of title. It is also understood that the prior possession of the plaintiff has not been voluntarily relinquished without the animus revertendi, and that the subsequent possession of the defendant was acquired by mere entry, without legal right. The action, also, to regain the prior possession must have been brought within a reasonable time after it has been lost. If there has been delay in bringing suit, the animus revertendi must be shown, and the delay satisfactorily accounted for, or the prior possessor will be deemed to have abandoned his claim.[1]

The party who challenges the title of his adversary to realty must be diligent in discovering that which will avoid the title or render it invalid, and diligent in his application for relief. Unreasonable delay, not explained by equitable circumstances, is evidence of acquiescence.[2]

Bare possession. See Naked Possession.

Concurrent possession. Possession in one person contemporaneous with possession in another person, whether for the same time and in the same right or otherwise.

Dispossession. Deprivation of possession; unlawfully excluding from the occupation of realty a person who is entitled thereto. Compare OUSTER; SEISIN, Disseisin.

Fraudulent possession. Such possession of property by an insolvent vendor as secures him new credit from, and to the injury of, a person unaware of the alleged transfer.

By statute 13 Eliz. (1572), c. 5, a gift or grant of personalty or realty, with intent to defraud creditors or others, is voidable by such defrauded persons. Under this statute it was held, in Twyne's Case,[3] that if the grantor continues to retain possession it is a badge of fraud. Some American cases make retention of possession fraudulent per se and in law; others, only evidence of fraud for the jury.

Transfer of possession and actual removal of personalty is necessary to render a sale or attachment valid as against creditors. This is to prevent fraud—which seeks to favor the vendor or debtor by shielding his property for his benefit from the claims of creditors. The rule is one of policy. As matter of evidence, the continued possession of a vendor or debtor, who is in embarrassed circumstances, yields a presumption that the process or the sale is colorable; for, in general, no reason can be given why possession should not be taken, except that he should not be in-

[1] Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 368-69 (1880), cases, Strong, J. On tacking the possession of several successive holders together, see Sherin v. Brackett, 36 Minn. 152 (1886), cases. See also, generally, 43 Ala. 633; 33 Ga. 539; 35 id. 141; 13 Ill. 193; 58 id. 589; 30 Md. 409; 32 id. 359; 3 Metc., Mass., 510; 37 Miss. 152; 47 id. 326; 9 Wend. 511; 39 Barb. 513; 54 id. 9; 6 Pa. 210; 11 id. 189; 19 id. 202; 25 id. 259; 58 id. 122, 313; 61 id. 146; 69 id. 300; 85 id. 37.

[2] Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 551-52, 545-54 (1887), cases, Field, J.

[1] Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 296 (1888), cases, Matthews, J., quoting Christy v. Scott, 14 How. 292 (1852), cases, Curtis, J.

[2] Howe v. South Park Commissioners, 119 Ill. 117 (1886), cases, Scott, J.

[3] 3 Coke, R. *81 (1602); 2 Bl. Com. 442.

dulged with the disposition or use of the property to the injury of others.[1]

In the Federal courts, and in Alabama, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, and Kentucky, unless possession follows an absolute sale, the transfer is fraudulent in law and void, as against creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers; but in the case of a contingent sale or a mortgage, retaining possession is not inconsistent with the nature of the conveyance. The law of New Hampshire, and of South Carolina, resembles this. In Connecticut, New York (before the revised statutes), Pennsylvania, and Vermont, delivery of possession is necessary, as against creditors, in cases of mortgages, contingent transfers, and absolute sales; but the court may say that the reason for non-delivery is good. Arkansas, Georgia, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, and Texas, follow the Federal courts in the distinction between absolute and contingent sales, but regard retention of possession which is inconsistent with the conveyance as only evidence of fraud and for the jury.[2] See further CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent; DELIVERY, 1; SALE.

Naked possession. Actual occupation of an estate, without apparent right, or shadow or pretense of right, to hold or continue such possession. Called also bare possession.[3]

Thus, where one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of his occupation, till some act be done by the rightful owner to devest this possession and assert his title, such actual possession is prima facie evidence of a legal title, which, by length of time, may ripen into an indefeasible title.[4]

A man out of possession has remaining the right of possession, which is an apparent right of possession, defeasible by proof of a better right, and, an actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all opponents.[4]

Reduce to possession. To change a right existing as an actionable claim into actual custody and enjoyment.

Thus, at common law, a husband who converted his wife's choses in action into money or property in hand was said to reduce them to possession.

[1] Mills v. Camp, 14 Conn. 225 (1841), Sherman, J.; Norton v. Doolittle, 32 id. 410 (1865); Hull v. Sigsworth, 48 id. 266 (1880); Warner v. Norton, 20 How. 459-60 (1857).

[2] Twyne's Case, 1 Sm. L. C., 7 ed., 52, cases: continued in 18 Am. Law Reg. 137-53 (1879), cases. See also Lewis v. McCabe, 49 Conn. 148-55 (1881), cases; Lund v. Fletcher, 39 Ark. 332 (1882); City Nat. Bank v. Goodrich, 3 Col. 139 (1876); Bassinger v. Spangler, 9 id. 175, 183-87 (1886), cases; McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356 (1870); Crawford v. Davis, 99 id. 578 (1882); Sauerwein v. Costigan, 41 Leg. Int. 16 (1883); Mead v. Gardiner, 13 R. I. 259 (1881), cases; Blanchard v. Cooke, 144 Mass. 225 (1887); 22 Cent. Law J. 57 (1886) — Irish Law Times.

[3] See Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Col. 300 (1877).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 195-96; 3 id. 177, 179.

Repossession. Retaking into custody; recaption.

See DETAINER; ESTATE, 3, 4; LARCENY; LIEN; OCCUPANCY; REMAINDER; SEISIN; TITLE, 1; VEST.

POSSIBLE. 1. Liable, but not likely, to happen or come to pass. 2. Practicable; reasonable.

"Forthwith give notice" of a loss by fire and "as soon as possible" render an account of the loss, cannot mean instantly and directly, for that might be impossible, but as soon as could be, under the circumstances, or within reasonable time, or as soon as practicable.[1]

Possibility. An event which may or may not happen; something that is uncertain.[2]

Spoken of as "near" or "remote," and as "ordinary" or "extraordinary," according to the degree of probability.[2]

When the condition of an obligation is possible at the time of its making, but, before it can be performed, becomes impossible by act of God, the law, or the obligee, the obligation is saved. Otherwise, if impossible at the time of making.[3]

If what is agreed to be done is possible and lawful, it must be done. Difficulty or improbability will not avail. It must be shown that the thing cannot be effected by any means. If a hardship, it might have been guarded against. At common law, if a lessee covenants to repair and the house burns down, he is bound to rebuild; so, as to repairing a bridge which is swept away by flood; so, as to building a foundation, although there be a latent defect in the soil.[4] The principle rests upon reason and justice. It regards the sanctity of contracts; requires a party to do what he has agreed to do. Contingent impediments should be guarded against.[5]

"In contracts in which the performance depends upon the continued existence of a given person or thing, a condition is implied that the impossibility of performance arising from the perishing of the person or thing shall excuse the performance."[6]

Bona, non impossibilia, cogit lex. Effective, not impossible acts, the law requires.

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. The law does not compel doing impossible things.[7] See ACT, Of God; RES, Perit.

POST. 1. L. prep. After; afterward.

Introduces Latin phrases, and is used in Latin and English compound words.

[1] Palmer v. St. Paul Ins. Co., 44 Wis. 208-9 (1878), cases; 4 Q. B. D. 673; 29 Moak, 102; 17 F. R. 431.

[2] See Bodenhamer v. Welch, 89 N. C. 81 (1883); 46 Barb. 87; 7 Ohio St. 443.

[3] Coke, Litt. 206 a; 2 Bl. Com. 340; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 229 (1872).

[4] The Harriman, 9 Wall. 172 (1869), cases, Swayne, J.

[5] Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 7-8 (1864), cases, Swayne, J.; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1004-5.

[6] Eliot Nat. Bank v. Beal, 141 Mass. 567-70 (1886), cases.

[7] 101 U. S. 690; 14 Gray, 78; 7 Cush. 42, 393; 2 id. 549

Post diem. After the day — when due; as, a plea of payment post diem.

Post facto. After the fact. See FACTUM, Post, etc.

Post hac. After this.

Post litem motam. After controversy begun. See LIS, Mota.

Post mortem. After death. See CORONER.

Post natus. After-born. See NATUS, Ante.

Post obit. After he dies. See OBIT.

Post-date. To date after the true time. See DATE.

Post-due. Past due. See DUE.

Post-note. A note payable at a distant day, and not on demand.

Differs from other promissory notes only as to time of payment.[1]

Post-notes are a species of obligation resorted to by banks when the exchanges of the country, and especially of the banks, have become embarrassed by excessive speculations. They are intended to supply the place of demand notes, which the banks cannot afford to issue or re-issue, to relieve the necessities of commerce or of the banks, or to avoid a compulsory suspension. They are under seal, or without seal, and at long or short dates, and with or without interest, as the necessities of the bank may require.[2]

Post-nuptial. After nuptials or marriage. Opposed, ante-nuptial. See SETTLE, 4.

2. Eng. n.[3] (1) A military station; (2) any fixed place on a line of road; (3) a conveyance between such places, and the person who used relays of horses; (4) speedy conveyance, rapid travel, quick communication, communication by letter or message. Whence "the post," "post haste," etc.

Military post. A military establishment where a body of troops is permanently stationed.[4]

Post-office. (1) The department of government concerned in receiving and delivering postal matter.

The postmaster-general, deputy postmasters, and their assistants and clerks, appointed and sworn as required by law, are public officers; and each is answerable for his own negligence only.[5] See TORT, 2.

(2) The "business" of keeping, forwarding and distributing mailable matter, equally with the "place" where such business is conducted.

Such place, to constitute a post-office, may be a building, an apartment in a building, a desk, or a trunk or box to be carried about a house or from one building to another. The place of deposit is the post-office, in this sense. Hence, feloniously removing a letter out of the place where kept, in a post-office, is stealing it from the post-office.[1]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To establish Post Offices and Post Roads."[2]

This power authorizes the regulation of the entire system: the designation of route, the matter — its weight and form, the places where receivable, the charges for carriage, measures to secure safe and speedy transit, prompt delivery, etc.[3]

Under this power the department also determines what matter shall and shall not be mailable. The protection of the public morals is incidental to the protection of the mails.[4]

Post-road. A highway by land or water over which mails may be lawfully transmitted. Post-route. A post-road, or a definite portion thereof, over which mails are usually transported by contract; a route for which the department contracts for the transportation of a mail.[5]

Letters, and sealed packages subject to letter-postage, when once entrusted to the care of the postal department, for transmission, are as fully guarded from inspection, except as to outward form and weight, as if retained by the forwarder in his own domicil. The guarantee against "unreasonable searches and seizures" extends to articles placed in the mails. They can be opened only under warrant, duly sworn to and particularly describing the thing, as if it were a paper in one's own household. But what is purposely left open to inspection, as, newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter, may be examined without warrant.[6]

See further LETTER, 3; MAIL, 2; BOOK, 2; CIRCULAR, 2; LIBERTY, Of the Press; LOTTERY; OBSCENE; REVENUE; TELEGRAPH.

POSTEA. L. Afterward. Whatever was done in a cause subsequently to joining issue and awarding trial was entered on the record, and called the postea.

The substance is, that postea, afterward, the parties appeared by their attorneys at the trial, and a

[1] Re Dyott's Estate, 2 W. & S. 489 (1841).

[2] Hogg's Appeal, 22 Pa. 488-89 (1854).

[3] F. poste, a carrier, messenger: L. L. postus, posta, a station, post: L. positus, placed: ponere, to place. A "post-horse" was a horse placed at a station in readiness for a traveler.

[4] [Caldwell's Case, 19 Wall. 268 (1873), Hunt, J.

[5] Keenan v. Southworth, 110 Mass. 474 (1872), cases. Compare Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 516 (1888), cases.

[1] United States v. Marselis, 2 Blatch. 110 (1849), Betts, J.; United States v. Campbell, 16 F. R. 234 (1883).

[2] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 7.

[3] Exp. Jackson, 96 U. S. 732 (1877), Field, J.

[4] United States v. Bott, 11 Blatch. 346 (1873).

[5] Railway Mail Service Cases, 18 Ct. Cl. 204 (1877), Davis, J.; Blackham v. Gresham, 16 F. R. 611 (1883); 18 id. 591; R. S. § 3829.

[6] Exp. Jackson, supra; 107 U. S. 218.

jury found a verdict,—stating it; or, that the plaintiff made default, or otherwise, as the case may be. This is added to the roll, which is then returned (from nisi prius) to the court from which it was sent. The history of the cause from the time it was carried out is thus continued in the postea.[1]

POSTERITY. Embraces descendants to the remotest generation.[2]

POSTHUMOUS. Describes a child born after the death of its father.

Any such legitimate child inherits as if born before the parent's death, and a will which does not provide for it is regarded as revoked pro tanto.[3] See ANNUS, Luctus.

POSTLIMINY. Claiming property after recapture; restitution after recapture.

The jus postliminii of the Roman law. From post, behind, and limen, the threshold. A legal fiction, according to which a Roman citizen captured by the enemy was treated as not having been away from home, and all his rights were restored to him. Slaves, ships, mules, horses, and land, on recapture, were also returned to the original owner.[4]

The right of postliminium is that in virtue of which persons and things taken by the enemy are restored to their former state, on coming again into the power of the nation to which they belonged.[5]

POSTNATUS. See NATUS.

POST-OFFICE. See POST, 2.

POSTPONE. 1. To put after, place one thing after another; to defer: as, to postpone a claim or lien. See DEFER.

2. To put off to a later day; to adjourn; to continue, q. v.: as, to postpone a cause or hearing.[6]

POSTREMOGENITURE. See PRIMOGENITURE.

POTESTAS. L. Power, authority, dominion. See DEDIMUS; DELEGATA; PATRIA; SUB. Compare VIRES.

POTIOR. See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

POTTERY. See COPYRIGHT.

POUND. 1. Twenty shillings.

In calculating the rates of duties, the pound sterling shall be taken as of the value of four dollars, eighty-six cents, and six and one-half mills.[7]

The Colonial pound, in Georgia, contained fifteen hundred and forty-seven grains; in Virginia, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Hampshire, twelve hundred and eighty-nine grains; in New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, one thousand and thirty-one and a quarter grains; in New York, and North Carolina, nine hundred and sixty-six grains. . . In New England, six shillings, or one hundred and eight coppers, made a dollar; in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, ninety pence; in New York, and North Carolina, ninety-six coppers.[1]

In Pennsylvania currency, a pound was equivalent to $2.66⅔, a shilling to 13⅓ cents, and sixpence to 6⅔ cents; although the latter passed for 12½ and 6¼ cents respectively. It is suggested that in these values is found the explanation of the origin of the practice by which juries in that State award 6¼ cents (a sixpence) as nominal damages — which carry full costs; and the origin of the statutory limit from which no appeal may be had from the judgment of a justice of the peace, to wit, $5.33⅓, that is, two pounds.[2]

2. A legal inclosure for the confinement of estrays, or the custody of goods distrained.[3]

An enclosed piece of land, secured by a firm structure of stone, or of posts and timber, placed in the ground.[4]

Like the grant of a mill, house, etc., carries with it the land on which it stands as parcel of the subject-matter of the grant. Necessarily requires land, and is in its nature perpetual.[4]

The board of supervisors of San Francisco granted to one A., and his assigns, the exclusive privilege, for twenty years, of having and removing the carcasses of dead animals, not slain for food, subject to certain sanitary regulations, and with the provision that the keeper of the public pound should notify A. to remove animals destroyed therein. Held, that the plaintiff could restrain the pound-keeper from delivering carcasses to any other person.[5]

Impound. 1. To confine in a pound; as, an animal estray.

2. To place in the custody of the law; as, an instrument discovered, in the course of a trial, to be a forgery. An original will is said to be impounded with the register of wills.

An executor may impound a legacy to set off a debt due by the legatee.[6]

Things distrained must be first carried to some pound. Once impounded, even though without cause, the owner may not break the pound and take them out; for they are then in the custody of the law.

If a live distress of animals be impounded in a common pound-overt (i. e., open overhead), the owner

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 386.

[2] Breckinridge v. Denny, 8 Bush, 527 (1871).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 130; 2 id. 169; 4 Kent, 412, 521, 525; 3 Washb. R. P. 412; 25 Ga. 549; 4 Paige, 52; 5 id. 172; 18 S. C. 55; 3 Munf. 20; 1 Murph. 233.

[4] Woolsey, Int. Law, 5 ed. § 151.

[5] Vattel, Law of Nations, § 204. See also 1 Kent, 108; 1 N. Mex. 44.

[6] See State v. Underwood, 76 Mo. 639 (1882); 8 How. Pr. 448; 13 id. 89.

[7] R. S. § 3565. See 8 Saw. 169.

[1] 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 23, 191, 199-200.

[2] See Chapman v. Calder, 14 Pa. 357 (1850); Hinds v. Knox, 4 S. & R. 417 (1819); Winger v. Rife, 101 Pa. 152, 160 (1882).

[3] A. S. pund: L. parcus, an inclosure,— 3 Bl. Com. 12.

[4] Wooley v. Groton, 2 Cush. 309 (1848), Shaw, C. J.

[5] Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 F. R. 506-6 (1887).

[6] Ballard v. Marsden, 37 Eng. R. 53, 55 (1880), cases.

must take notice at his peril; but if in a special pound-overt, constituted for the particular purpose, the distrainor must give notice to the owner; and in both cases the owner is bound to feed the beasts. But if put in a pound-covert (i. e., closed), in a stable or the like, the distrainor must feed them.[1]

Being in the custody of the law, taking the distress back by force is a "rescous," for which pound-breach, a remedy in damages, lies in the distrainor.[1] See DISTRESS.

Pound-master. The keeper of a pound.

Poundage. 1. Money paid for the release of animals impounded.

2. An allowance to a sheriff of a percentage upon the amount levied under an execution.

Whether referable to a percentage upon each pound sterling collected, or to the charge for keeping goods impounded, is not settled.

POUR. See PUR.

POVERTY. See POOR.

Poverty-affidavit. A statement, verified by oath or affirmation, required to be filed in court by the law of some States, by a litigant to the effect that he cannot furnish security for paying the costs in the case in the event of the issue being determined against him.[2] Compare PAUPER, 1.

POWDER. See POLICE, 2.

POWER. 1. The authority which one person gives another to act for him: as, the powers of an agent, of an executor, a power of attorney, qq. v.

Authority conferred by law to act for one's self or in behalf of the interest or estate of another or others: as, the powers of infants, lunatics, married women, of administrators, arbitrators, assignees, executors, guardians, or other trustees, qq. v. See INTEREST, 2, Coupled, etc.

Power and authority. When a statute confers a power upon a corporation, to be exercised for the public good, the exercise of the power is imperative; the words "power and authority" then mean "duty and obligation."[3] See MAY.

2. Authority conferred upon one person to dispose of an estate vested in another.

A "power" in a will is never imperative: it leaves the act to be done at the will of the party to whom given. A "trust" is always imperative and obligatory upon the conscience of the party intrusted.[4]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 12-13, 146; 45 Conn. 161; 126 Mass. 364.

[2] See Cole v. Hoeburg, 36 Kan. 263 (1887).

[3] Rankin v. Buckman, 9 Oreg. 262 (1881): 20 Md. 458, 477; Dwar. Stat. 712.

[4] Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. 168 (1866): Wilmot, C. J., 2 Sugd. Pow. 588.

Powers under the Statute of Uses. Methods of causing a use, with its accompanying estate, to spring up at the will of a given person.[1]

A mere right to limit a use.[2]

The right to designate the person who is to take the use is termed the "power of appointment."

If the donee of the power has no estate in the land, the power is collateral or naked; if he has an estate, it is appendant or in gross. A power "appendant" is such as he may execute out of the estate limited to him,—depends for its validity upon that estate. He may create an estate which will attach on his interest; as where, while being a tenant for life, he may make sub-leases. A power "in gross" is a power to create an estate which will not attach on the interest limited to the donee, or take effect out of his interest; as, where, as tenant for life, he may create an estate to begin after his estate ends. Called "in gross," because his estate has no concern in it. If the donee may appoint to whom he pleases, the power is general. If he is restricted to an appointment to or among particular objects, the power is special or particular. If the power be to create a new estate in any one, it is a power of appointment; if to divest or abridge an existing estate, a power of revocation.[3]

A power coupled with an interest imports an interest in the thing itself,—a power engrafted on an estate in the thing.[4]

The power and the interest then unite in the same person, who, in executing the power, may act in his own name. He is not a substitute, but a principal; and the power survives the person who gives it.[4]

If the donee of a power clearly intends to execute, and the mode is unexceptionable, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative.

Three classes of cases at least have been held to be sufficient demonstration of an intended execution of a power: where there is reference in the instrument to the power; a reference to the property, as the subject, on which it is to be executed; or where the pro-

[1] Williams, Real Prop. 245.

[2] 4 Kent, 334.

[3] [2 Washb. Real Prop. 305, 307, cases. As to naked power, generally, see Franklin v. Osgood, 14 Johns. R. 553 (1817), cases; as to powers in gross, Thorington v. Thorington, 82 Ala. 491 (1886).

[4] Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 203-5 (1823), Marshall, C. J.

vision in the instrument, executed by the donee, would otherwise be ineffectual or a mere nullity.[1]

If the will of the donee contains no expressed intent to exert the power, and it may reasonably be gathered from the gifts and directions that the purpose was to execute it, the will must be regarded as an execution. An appointment under a power is an intent to appoint carried out, and if made by will the intent and its execution are to be sought for through the whole instrument.[2]

The courts look at the design of the parties, and the substantial, rather than the literal, execution of the power.[3]

When a power is given to executors to be executed in their official capacity, and there are no words in the will warranting the conclusion that the testator intended a joint execution of the power, as the office survives, the power will be construed as surviving. And courts of equity will lend their aid to uphold the power, in order to carry into execution the intention of the testator.[4]

If land is devised to a person, with general power to dispose of the same, an estate in fee-simple passes. But if the devise is for life, with power to dispose of the reversion, only a life estate passes; and if the devisee dies without having disposed of the reversion, it goes to the heir of the devisor.[5]

While at common law a married woman could not make a will, she could make an appointment by will: the latter concerning the estate of the donor of the power.[6]

A person, having a power for the benefit of another, cannot use it for his own benefit.[7]

See further APPOINTMENT, 2; DISCRETION, 2.

8. Authority in the departments of government to do any particular act: as, the power in a legislature to make laws; power in a judge or court to decide what the law is, or to administer justice; power in the executive to enforce the law.

Power of appointment. The appointing power; the power to select and indicate by name individuals to hold office and to discharge the duties and exercise the powers of office.[1]

Constitutional powers are spoken of as granted or reserved; as express, expressed, and implied; as incidental or ancillary; as enumerated and non-enumerated or unenumerated; as plenary; as legislative, judicial, and executive.

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."[2]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof."[3]

Executive power; judicial power; legislative power. "Judicial power" is authority to decide controversies and to administer justice; "legislative power," authority to enact laws; "executive power," authority to enforce the laws.

In particular, "judicial power" is that power by which judicial tribunals construe the Constitution, the laws enacted by Congress, and the treaties made with foreign powers or with the Indian tribes, and determine the rights of the parties in conformity with such construction.[4]

"Judicial power" is undoubtedly power to hear and determine; but this is not peculiar to the judicial office. Many of the acts of administrative and executive officers involve the exercise of the same power. Boards for the equalization of taxes, of public works, of county commissioners, township trustees, judges of election, viewers of roads, all, in one form or another, "hear and determine" questions in the exercise of their functions, more or less directly affecting private as well as public rights. It may be conceded that power to hear and determine rights of property and of person between private parties is judicial, and can be conferred only upon the courts. But such a definition does not necessarily include the case of the governor of a State, like that of Ohio, empowered to remove any police commissioner, and cannot, therefore, conflict with the constitutional provision conferring judicial power upon the courts.[5] See further JUDICIAL.

---

[1] Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 446-47 (1841), cases, Story, J.; Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 534-47 (1879), cases; Gindrat v. Montgomery Gas-Light Co., 82 Ala. 603-6 (1886), cases; White v. Hicks, 33 N. Y. 392-93 (1865), cases; Hutton v. Benkard, 92 id. 301-3 (1883), cases; Sewall v. Wilmer, 132 Mass. 134 (1882), cases.

[2] Blake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 326 (1878), Strong, J.; Warner v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 109 id. 65-67 (1883).

[3] Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 80 (1871); th. 77; 4 Kent, 544.

[4] Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. *564 (1836); Osgood v. Franklin, 2 Johns. Ch. 19 (1816).

[5] Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 533 (1879), cases.

[6] Osgood v. Bliss, 141 Mass. 477-79 (1886), cases.

[7] Shank v. Dewitt, 44 Ohio St. 242 (1886), cases. See generally Re Thomson's Estate, 37 Eng. R. 26-35 (1880), cases.

[1] Attorney-General v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 556 (1857).

[2] Constitution, Amd. Art. X.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 18. See Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 18 (1883).

[4] Gilbert v. Priest, 65 Barb. 448 (1873), Mullin, P. J. See also New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 141 (1880).

[5] State, ex rel. Attorney-General v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 109 (1886), Minshall, J.

Implied power. Such power as is necessary to carry into effect powers expressly granted.[1]

See CONSTITUTION; COURTS; DELEGATUS, Potestas, etc.; DISCRETION, 5; GOVERNMENT.

PRACTICABLE. Compare POSSIBLE.

An agreement to locate a railway station "at the nearest practicable point" within a mile of a courthouse was held not to intend the nearest possible point, but the nearest point at which the depot could be located at a reasonable and ordinary cost, with reference to all the circumstances under which the work was to be done, and in view of the object and purpose inducing the contract.[2]

PRACTICAL. Compare PRACTICABLE.

A "practical construction" of a constitution refers to practice sanctioned by general consent.[3]

The "practical location" of a division line was held to be identical with an actual location.[4]

See PATENT, 2; PRINCIPLE, 2; PROCESS, 2.

PRACTICE. The rules adopted by a court to facilitate the transaction of business before it in a proper and orderly manner.[5]

Sometimes these rules are printed, and called "rules of practice;" sometimes they are embodied in statutes, but perhaps as frequently they are unwritten.

In the larger sense, the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the law which gives or declares the right. Sometimes convertible with "procedure."[6]

The procedure in a court of justice, through the various stages of any matter, civil or criminal, depending before it. Rules of pleading tell what is the most efficient form to adopt in shaping pleadings. Rules of practice tell in what manner pleadings should be brought under the notice of the court, and what steps should be taken to obtain the benefit of them.[7]

Compare PROCEDURE. See ERROR, 1, Communis, etc.; TECHNICALITIES; USUS, Malus, etc.

PRÆ. See PRE.

PRÆCIPE. L. Command.

1. An original writ in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required or to show cause why he has not done it.

Abridged from præcipe quod reddat, command that he return. The writ issued where something certain was demanded, incumbent upon the defendant to perform.[1]

2. A paper containing the particulars of a writ, for the instruction of the officer who is to issue it. Spelled also precipe. See PRECEPT.

PRÆMIUM. L. Profit; consideration; price.

"Premium" (q. v.) is the Anglicized word.

Præmium pudicitiæ. Price of chastity. Compensation for illicit intercourse. Sometimes termed præmium pudoris, pay for shame, or disgrace.

An agreement, or security given, for future illicit intercourse, is incapable of confirmation, or enforcement.[2]

PRÆMUNIRE. L. A corruption of præ-moneri, to fore-warn. The offense, affecting the king and his government, of maintaining the papal power — of introducing a foreign power into the realm, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which belongs to the king alone.[3]

Statutes of this name were meant to repress the civil power of the pope. Præmunire (facias), originally the emphatic word in the writ for prosecuting the offense, became the name of the writ and of the offense itself.[3]

The same penalties were subsequently applied to other offenses.

PRÆSUMERE. L. To take in advance of; to take to be true without positive proof, but upon the basis of probability; to presume. Præsumptio. Supposition, assumption, presumption, q. v.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. All things are inferred against one who destroys (or withholds) documentary evidence. See further SPOLIATION, 2.

Omnia præsumuntur rite et solemnitur esse acta. All things are presumed to have been done in due and solemn form.

The principle is, that there is a disposition in the courts to uphold official, judicial, and other acts, rather than to render them inoperative. Where, then, there is general evidence of acts having been legally and regularly done, proof of circumstances, essential to the validity of those acts, and by which

[1] People v. Brown, 2 Utah, 465 (1879).

[2] Wooters v. International, &c. R. Co., 54 Tex. 300 (1881).

[3] Farmers', &c. Bank v. Smith, 3 S. & R. 69 (1817).

[4] Hubbell v. McCulloch, 47 Barb. 294 (1866).

[5] [Butler v. Young, 1 Flip. 279 (1872), Sherman, J.; Bowlies v. Brier, 87 Ind. 395 (1882).

[6] Payson v. Minors, L. R., 7 Q. B. D. 333 (1881), Lush, Lord Justice.

[7] Hunter, Suit in Equity, 2-3.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 274.

[2] See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 296, 299; Contr. § 670.

[3] [4 Bl. Com. 103, 115, 423; Coke, Litt. 129.

they are accompanied in most instances, will be dispensed with.[1]

The law presumes that every man in his private and official character does his duty, until the contrary is proved; that all things are rightly done, unless the circumstances of the case overturn this presumption. Thus, it presumes that a man acting in a public office has been rightly appointed; that entries in public books were made by the proper officer; that, upon proof of title, matters collateral thereto are consistent and regular.[2]

A superior court of general jurisdiction, proceeding within the general scope of its powers, is presumed to act rightly. All intendments of law are in favor of its acts. It is presumed to have jurisdiction to give the judgment it renders, until the contrary appears — jurisdiction of the cause or subject-matter of the action, and of the parties. The former will generally appear from the character of the judgment, and will be determined by the law creating the court or prescribing its general powers. The latter should regularly appear by evidence in the record of service of process upon the defendant or his appearance in the action. But where the former exists, the latter will be presumed. The rule is different with respect to courts of special and limited authority: there is no presumption of law in favor of their jurisdiction; that must affirmatively appear by sufficient evidence or proper averment in the record, or their judgments will be deemed void on their face.[3]

Presumptions as to the judgments of superior courts only arise with respect to jurisdictional facts concerning which the record is silent. Presumptions are only indulged to supply the absence of evidence or averments respecting the facts presumed. They have no place for consideration when the evidence is disclosed or the averment is made. When, therefore, the record states the evidence or makes an averment with reference to a jurisdictional fact, it will be understood to speak the truth on that point, and it will not be presumed that there was other or different evidence, or that the fact was otherwise than as averred. Were this not so it would never be possible to attack collaterally the judgment of a superior court, although a want of jurisdiction might be apparent upon its face; the answer to the attack would always be that, notwithstanding the evidence or the averment, the necessary facts to support the judgment are presumed. These presumptions are also limited to jurisdiction over persons within the territorial limits of the courts, persons who can be reached by their process, and also over proceedings which are in accordance with the course of the common law.[3]

"The extent to which presumptions will be made in support of acts depends very much upon whether they are favored or not by law, and also on the nature of the fact required to be presumed." The maxim does not apply to give jurisdiction to magistrates or other inferior tribunals, nor to give jurisdiction in proceedings which are not according to the common course of justice.[1]

Præsumptio juris. A presumption of law. Præsumptio juris et de jure. A presumption of law and of right. The former characterizes a rebuttable, the latter an irrebuttable, presumption.

The latter was originally intended to express intense or "superlative" presumptions. Difficulty being felt in finding suitable limits for such presumptions, doubt as to their force was got rid of by making them irrebuttable. Our courts, while holding to the old phraseology, are so far contracting the range of this class of presumptions that no perfect individual of the class can be found.[2]

PRÆTOR. See JUDEX, 1.

PRAYER. Petition; request.

In a bill in equity, a request that the court will grant the relief desired; also, that part of the bill in which the request is made.

Such prayer is for process, for special or general relief, or for both. A common formula for the conclusion is "And he will ever pray, etc." See EQUITY; RELIEF, 2. Compare ORATOR; PETITION; PRECATORY.

On prayers for instruction, see CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

PRE. The Anglicized form of the Latin preposition præ, before. In compounds, expresses priority of time, place, or rank.

PREAMBLE.[3] An introduction or preface.

1. A clause introductory to, and explanatory of, the reasons for establishing a constitution.

Preamble to the Constitution of the United States: "WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this CONSTITUTION for the United States of America."

This preamble has been constantly referred to by statesmen and jurists to aid them in expounding the provisions of the Constitution.[4] See WELFARE.

2. The introductory clause or section of a statute, ordinance, or other like enactment.

Usually recites the motives for passing the enactment. Referred to when doubts and ambiguities arise upon the words of the enacting part. Its office is to expound powers conferred, not substantially to create

[1] 2 Best, Ev. § 353; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 19.

[2] Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 69-70 (1827), Story, J. See also 20 Wall. 250; 115 U. S. 451; 18 F. R. 96; 4 Hughes, 519.

[3] Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 365-73 (1873), cases, Field, J.; Cornett v. Williams, 20 id. 250 (1873).

[1] Sabariègo v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 284 (1888); 2 Best, Ev. §§ 353, 363.

[2] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1232-37; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15, note; 2 Best, Ev. § 306.

[3] L. præ-ambulare, to go before.

[4] 1 Story, Const. §§ 460, 458-517; Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 474 (1793), Jay, C. J.

powers. It serves as a guide to the intentions of the framers, which is only the first stage on the road to construction. Not being an essential part of a statute, it is frequently omitted.[1]

8. A recital in a contract declaring the intention of the parties. See CONTRACT.

PREBEND. An endowment in land, or a pension in money, given to a cathedral or conventual church in præbendam: for maintaining a secular priest or regular canon as a prebendary.[2]

PRECARIOUS. Revocable at the will of the creator or owner: as, a precarious right or loan. See PRECARIUM. Compare PRECATORY.

The circumstances of an executor are "precarious" when his conduct evidences such improvidence as, in the opinion of prudent men, endangers the security of the trust estate.[3]

PRECARIUM. L. A thing held by entreaty — at the will of another.

A contract by which a thing was delivered into the custody of a person until such time as the owner might want it back.[4]

PRECATORY.[5] Describes an expression in a will which requests that something be done — recommendatory words.

Courts of equity have gone great lengths in creating implied or constructive trusts from such words. The tendency is to discourage extending the doctrine. Whenever the object, or the property, of the supposed trust is not certain or definite, or a clear discretion and choice to act is given, and whenever prior dispositions import uncontrollable ownership, the courts will not create a trust from precatory words.[6]

Words of entreaty, recommendation or wish, addressed by a testator to a devisee or legatee, make him a trustee for the person in whose favor such expressions are used, provided the testator has pointed out with clearness the objects of the trust, and the subject-matter on which it is to attach or from which it is to arise and be administered.[7]

If there be a trust sufficiently expressed and capable of enforcement, it does not disparage, much less defeat it, to call it "precatory." The question of its existence depends, after all, upon the intention of the testator as expressed by the words he has used, according to their natural meaning, modified only by the context and the situation and circumstances of the testator when he used them. On the one hand, the words may be merely those of suggestion, counsel, or advice, intended only to influence, and not to take away the discretion of the legatee growing out of the right to use and dispose of the property given as his own. On the other hand, the language may be imperative in fact, though not in form, conveying the intention of the testator in words equivalent to a command, and leaving to the legatee no discretion to defeat his wishes, although there may be a discretion to accomplish them by a choice of methods, or even to defeat and limit the extent of the interest conferred upon his beneficiary.[1]

PRECEDENCE. See MINISTER, 3; PRECEDENT; PRIORITY; PRIVILEGE; RANK.

PRECEDENT.[2] 1, adj. Going before; to happen or be performed before any right under it can vest or be claimed: as, a precedent condition, q. v.

2, n. An authoritative example.

A decision cited in support of a proposition.[3] See further DECISUM, Stare, etc.

A draught of a deed, pleading, will, or other instrument serviceable as a model or form.

As the title of a law book, "precedents" denotes a collection of forms approved by usage and, perhaps, by judicial decision.

PRECEPT. A command or mandate in writing. Of equal import with writ or process.[4] See PRÆCIPE.

PRECINCT. The limits of an officer's jurisdiction, or of an election district.

As used in the return to a process, the territory within which the officer may legally discharge the duties of his office.[5]

A general word, indicating any district marked out and defined. In a given connection, may signify a district inferior to a county and superior to a township.[6]

In Wisconsin, formerly referred to certain districts having similar functions to those of towns, and which passed away upon the formation of the first legislative

[1] Copeland v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 3 Woods, 660 (1878), Woods, J.; Beard v. Rowan, 9 Pet. *317 (1835); Commonwealth v. Smith, 76 Va. 484-85 (1882), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 27-29 (1884), cases — Irish Law Times; 15 Johns. 116; 1 Pick. 251; 69 Pa. 382; Dwar. Stat. 107.

[2] Randolph v. Milman, L. R., 4 C. P. *111 (1868).

[3] Shields v. Shields, 60 Barb. 61 (1870), Potter, J.

[4] See Story, Bailm. §§ 227, 253 b; Hadley, Rom. Law, 178.

[5] L. precari, to pray, entreat, request.

[6] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1068-70.

[7] Warner v. Bates, 98 Mass. 276-78 (1867), cases, Bigelow, C. J.; Handley v. Wrightson, 60 Md. 198-206 (1883), cases; Knox v. Knox, 59 Wis. 172, 178-85 (1884), cases; Howard v. Carusi, 109 U. S. 725 (1884); 44 Am. Dec. 365, 369; Hawk. Wills, 159 (1835), cases.

[1] Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 312-21 (1888), cases, Matthews, J. See generally 20 Cent. Law J. 63-66 (1885), cases; 27 Am. Law Reg. 459-63 (1888), cases; 1 Perry, Trusts, §§ 112-23, cases.

[2] 1. Pre-cĕd'-ent. 2. Prĕc'-e-dent.

[3] On the value of, see 10 Va. Law J. 582 (1886).

[4] Adams v. Vose, 1 Gray, 58 (1854), Dewey, J.

[5] Brooks v. Norris, 124 Mass. 178 (1878), Colt, J.

[6] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Cheyenne, 113 U. S. 524 (1885), Bradley, J.

districts after the admission of the State into the Union. The term is no longer used, except, perhaps, occasionally as interchangeable with election district.[1]

PRECLUDE. See ESTOPPEL.

Precludi non. L. Ought not to be barred.

The clause in a replication to a plea in bar, "that by reason of anything in said plea alleged, plaintiff 'ought not to be barred' from maintaining his said action." The two words were the most emphatic in the Latin writ.

PRE-CONTRACT. See CONTRACT; MARRIAGE.

PREDOMINANT. Something greater or superior in power and influence to others, with which it is connected or compared: as, a predominant motive.[2]

PRE-EMPTION.[3] 1. The first buying of a thing.

A privilege allowed the king's purveyor up to 1661.[4]

2. The right to purchase at a fixed price in a limited time in preference to others.[5]

The exclusive right in a person to purchase a quantity of the public lands in consequence of having complied with the laws of Congress upon the subject.[6]

Pre-emptor; pre-emptioner; pre-emptionist. He who holds such prior right of purchase. One who by settlement upon the public land or by cultivating a portion of it has obtained the right to purchase a portion of such land, to the exclusion of all other persons.[6]

Pre-emption claimant. One who settles upon land subject to pre-emption, with the intention to acquire its title, and has complied, or is proceeding to comply, in good faith, with the requirements of the law, to perfect his right to it.[7]

All public lands are subject to pre-emption, except land included in reservations, land within the limits selected as the site of a city or town, land actually settled and occupied by trade and business and not for agriculture, and lands on which are found or situated any known salines or mines. Any adult citizen of the United States, or a foreigner who has filed his declaration to become a citizen, who makes a settlement in person, and inhabits and improves the same, and shall erect a dwelling thereon, may enter, for one hundred and sixty acres, with the land-register, upon paying the minimum price of such land, and proving settlement. But one who has three hundred and twenty acres in any State or Territory cannot pre-empt; nor can one who quits his residence on his own land to reside on public lands in the same State or Territory. Nor can any one file a second declaration for another tract.[1]

A party by mere settlement, with declared intention to obtain a title, does not thereby acquire such interest as to deprive Congress of the power to devest it by a grant to another party. The power of Congress ceases when all the preliminary acts, prescribed for the acquisition of the title, have been performed by the settler. Then the settler's interest is vested, and he is entitled to a certificate of entry from the local land-office, and, ultimately, to a patent from the United States. Until such entry, the settler has only a privilege or preference of pre-emption in case the lands are offered for sale in the usual manner. The United States only declare by the pre-emption laws that if lands are thrown open for sale, the preference of sale, in limited quantities, shall be in the first person who settles and improves them.[2]

The pre-emption laws imperatively require a residence both continuous and personal upon the land. The settler may be excused for temporary absences caused by well-founded apprehension of violence, by sickness, by the presence of an epidemic, by judicial expulsion, or by engagement in the military or naval service.[3]

See LAND, Public; PATENT, 2.

PRE-EXISTING. Referring to a debt, will include every debt previously contracted, whether payable or not.

This, at least, is the meaning in the insolvent law of Massachusetts.[4] Compare PREVIOUS; PRIOR.

PREFER. 1. To bring or lay a matter before a court: as, to prefer a criminal charge, a petition in divorce.

2. To give advantage, priority (q. v.), or privilege to. Specifically, to favor one or more creditors over others, when the debtor has not the means with which to pay all alike.

In this sense are used the expressions preferred or preferential — assignment, bonds, creditors, dividend, shares, stock. See DIVIDEND, 3; STOCK, 3 (2).

"Preferred" means that the thing to which it is attached has some advantage over another thing of the same character, which but for this advantage would be like the other.[5]

---

[1] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Town of Oconto, 50 Wis. 196 (1880), Orton, J.

[2] Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. 53 (1839), Shaw, C. J.

[3] L. præ, before; imere, to take. Also printed pre-emption.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 287.

[5] Bowers v. Keesecker, 14 Iowa, 307 (1862); Davenport v. Farrar, 1 Scam. 317 (1836), Lockwood, J.

[6] [Dillingham v. Fisher, 5 Wis. 480 (1856), Whiton, C. J.

[7] Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 581 (1878), Field, J.

[1] R. S. §§ 2257-61.

[2] The Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77 (1872), cases, Field, J.

[3] Bohall v. Dilla, 114 U. S. 51 (1885), Field, J.

[4] Fletcher, Appellant, 136 Mass. 342 (1884).

[5] State v. Cheraw, &c. R. Co., 16 S. C. 580 (1881), Simpson, C. J.

Preference. A payment to one creditor which will or, possibly, may give him an advantage over others.[1]

In the absence of a bankrupt law, a failing debtor may prefer one creditor to another by a deed, a judgment, or other means, except, in some States, by an assignment in trust. The effect may be to delay a creditor not preferred, in fact to prevent his obtaining payment at all; but if the honest intent was to pay the preferred debt, the transaction is not invalidated by the statute of 13 Elizabeth. That statute is aimed at intended fraud,— at transfers of property or preferences which are not bona fide, but collusive arrangements "to delay, hinder, or defraud" particular creditors.[2]

The mere existence of a desire that a particular creditor may succeed by suit, judgment, execution, and levy, in obtaining a preference, is not sufficient to establish that the debtor "procured or suffered" his property to be taken on legal process with intent to prefer such creditor, if the proceedings were the usual proceedings in a suit, unaided by any act of the debtor, either by facilitating the proceedings as to time or method, or by obstructing other creditors who otherwise would obtain priority.[3]

If debtors could not give preferences to bona fide creditors, while they yet retain dominion over their property, the transaction of business would be embarrassed.[4]

See CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent; SUFFER.

PREGNANCY. Being with child.

Existing at the time of marriage by another than the husband, is ground for divorce, provided the husband was without knowledge of the woman's condition, either from her confession or appearance.[5]

A woman "with child" is a "pregnant woman," within the meaning of a statute punishing assault with intent to procure a miscarriage.[1] See QUICKENING.

As to pretended or alleged pregnancy, see REPRIEVE; VENTER, 1.

Pregnant. In pleading, see AFFIRMATIVE (2); NEGATIVE.

PREJUDICE. Fore-judgment, pre-judgment; detriment, disadvantage.

A prejudice is a pre-judgment. The popular meaning involves some grudge or ill-will, as well as a pre-conceived opinion. A disqualifying prejudice in a juror is a fixed judgment or opinion as to guilt or innocence.[2]

A man cannot be "prejudiced" against another without being "biased" against him; but he may be biased without being prejudiced.[3]

Implies nearly the same thing as opinion; a pre-judgment of the case, and not necessarily enmity or ill-will against a party. A statute excluding as a juror a person who has "formed or expressed an opinion, or is insensible of any bias or prejudice," intends to exclude any person who has made up his mind, or formed a judgment in advance. Yet, the opinion or judgment must be something more than a vague impression, formed from casual conversations with others, or from reading imperfect newspaper reports. The opinion must be upon the merits of the question, and be such as would be likely to bias or prevent a candid judgment, upon a full hearing of the evidence. If one has formed what in some sense might be called an opinion, but which yet falls short of exciting any bias or prejudice, he may consistently discharge his duty as a juror.[3]

The right to a trial by an impartial jury does not mean that the jurors must have no prejudice or opinion as to the policy of enforcing the laws.[4] See further BIAS; IMPARTIAL, 1; OPINION, 2.

The "prejudice" in the mind of a judge which will afford ground for a change of venue refers to an opinion in regard to the case, formed beforehand, without examination, or a prepossession; not, an opinion on the questions of law involved;[5] prejudice against the party personally.[6]

Without prejudice. That what is said or done is not (1) to be construed as an admission of liability, or (2) to affect the rights

[1] [Re Hapgood, 2 Low. 202 (1873), Lowell, J.

[2] York County Bank v. Carter, 38 Pa. 453 (1861), Strong, J.; Worman v. Wolfersberger, 19 id. 61 (1852); Smith v. Craft, 11 Biss. 347 (1852); Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. 200 (1838); Lucas v. Claflin, 76 Va. 276–79 (1882), cases; Tootle v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 134 (1883), cases; Jewett v. Noteware, 30 Hun, 194 (1883), cases; Sartwell v. North, 144 Mass. 192–95 (1887), cases; 48 Ala. 376; 10 Cal. 277; 19 id. 46; 4 Del. Ch. 536; 4 B. Mon. 296; 13 R. I. 463; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 220, cases.

[3] Brown v. Jefferson County Bank, 19 Blatch. 316–17 (1881), Blatchford, J.; Wilson v. City Bank of St. Paul, 17 Wall. 483–87 (1873), Miller, J.; Jewell v. Knight, 123 U. S. 434 (1887), cases.

[4] Campbell v. Colorado Coal & Iron Co., 9 Col. 64–65 (1885), cases. As to assignments with preferences, see Woonsocket Rubber Co. v. Falley, 30 F. R. 808, 811–12 (1887), cases; Weil v. Polack, ib. 813 (1887), cases.

[5] See Hoffman v. Hoffman, 30 Pa. 417, 421 (1858); Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 92–106 (1859), cases; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen, 609 (1862); Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 Mich. 452 (1865); Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen, 26 (1866); Crehore v. Crehore, 99 Mass. 330 (1867); Hedden v. Hedden, 21 N. J. E. 61 (1870); Farr v. Farr, 2 McArthur, 35 (1875); Allen's Appeal, 99 Pa. 196 (1882); State v. Shoemaker, 62 Iowa, 344 (1884); Sissung v. Sissung, Sup. Ct. Mich. (1887), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 115–16 (1884), cases; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. §§ 179–91, cases; 44 Am. R. 112, cases.

[1] Eckhardt v. People, 83 N. Y. 464 (1881).

[2] Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 448–50 (1853), Nisbet, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 297 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

[4] United States v. Noelke, 17 Blatch. 562–63 (1880), cases, Choate, J.; 2 McCrary, 257.

[5] Hungerford v. Cushing, 2 Wis. *405 (1853), Whiton, Chief Justice.

[6] Wheeler v. Lawson, 57 Wis. 402 (1883).

of the party before the law or his standing in court.

Thus, an offer in compromise (q. v.) of litigation is presumed to have been made "without prejudice."[1]

A letter marked "without prejudice," and the reply, although the latter is not so marked, cannot be used as an admission.[2]

When a bill in equity is dismissed without a consideration of the merits, the practice is for the court to express in its decree that the dismissal is "without prejudice." An omission of the qualification will be corrected.[3] The decree of dismissal is not a bar to a subsequent suit for the same cause of action, if the complainant, in another suit, can obviate the defects of the existing bill.[4]

PRELIMINARY. See INJUNCTION; PEACE, 2, Articles of; PROOF.

PREMEDITATE. To think of in advance; to determine upon beforehand; to intend, design.

To plan, contrive, or scheme beforehand.[5]

A "premeditated design" to kill means simply an intent to kill. Design means intent, and both words essentially imply "premeditation." Premeditation does not exclude sudden intent, and need not be slow or last long.[6]

"Premeditated" has been invariably defined by the supreme court of Missouri as "thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short."[7]

The execution of the guilty purpose must be settled upon reflection. A full and determined purpose is necessary, as distinguished from an impulsive fatal act. No particular period of time is requisite, but still deliberation must take place.[8]

"Deliberation and premeditation" imply that the act has been "done with reflection," "conceived beforehand." Some time for deliberate reflection is necessary.[9]

A charge of killing with "premeditation" means that there was design or intent before the act; that is, that the accused planned, contrived and schemed beforehand to kill. A killing with "deliberation" means that the act was determined upon after reflection, and that "the consequences, chances, and means were weighed, carefully considered and estimated."[10]

A design to kill must precede the killing by some appreciable space of time. But the time need not be long. It must be sufficient for some reflection and consideration upon the matter, for choice to kill or not to kill, and for the formation of a definite purpose to kill. When the time is sufficient for this, it matters not how brief it is. The mind acts with a celerity which it is sometimes impossible to measure, and whether a deliberate and premeditated design to kill was formed must be determined from all the circumstances of the case.[1]

The killing must be a pre-determined killing upon consideration, and not a sudden killing upon a momentary excitement and impulse of passion, upon provocation given at the time, or so recently before as not to allow time for reflection. This design may be formed at the moment of the commission of the act.[2]

The law leaves the existence of a fully formed intent as a fact to be determined by the jury from all the facts in evidence.[3]

See DELIBERATION, 8; DRUNKENNESS; MURDER.

PREMISES.[4] Something sent or put before: foregoing statements; facts already mentioned; introductory matter.

1. (1) In a bill in equity, the stating part, the narrated facts upon which the complainant expects to recover. (2) In a declaration, the statements, in the early part, out of which the defendant's liability grows: as, in the expressions, "by reason of the premises," "in consideration of the premises."

2. In a deed, all that precedes the habendum; that is, the date, parties, consideration, grant, description, recitals, exceptions, etc.[5]

The premises being the part of a deed in which the thing is granted, the habendum, which serves to limit the certainty of the estate, cannot increase the grant.[6]

3. A distinct portion of realty; land, or lands; tenements, buildings.[7]

In common parlance, land with its appurtenances. In a conveyance, "the thing demised or granted by the deed."[8]

In a policy of insurance on a vessel, "insured premises" means the vessel.[9]

In a policy upon a habitation, covers the whole property insured — dwellings, out-houses, and appurtenances, which together compose the establishment.[10]

[1] West v. Smith, 101 U. S. 273 (1879), cases.

[2] Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 331 (1852).

[3] Durant v. Essex Company, 7 Wall. 109 (1868), Field, Judge.

[4] County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 705 (1880), Field, J.; Ragsdale v. Vicksburg, &c. R. Co., 62 Miss. 688 (1884); Mobile, &c. R. Co. v. Davis, ib. 271 (1884).

[5] [Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 483 (1866), Crozier, C. J.

[6] [Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 244 (1874), Ryan, C. J.

[7] State v. Harris, 76 Mo. 363 (1882), Norton, J.

[8] People v. Mangano, 29 Hun, 262 (1883), Cullen, J.

[9] Simmerman v. State, 14 Neb. 569 (1883), Lake, C. J.

[10] State v. McGaffin, 36 Kan. 319 (1887), cases, Johnston, J.

[1] People v. Majone, 91 N. Y. 212 (1883), Earl, J.

[2] McDaniel v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 284 (1883), Hinton, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Drum, 58 Pa. 16 (1868), Agnew, J.

[4] L. præmissa (sententia), that which is stated beforehand.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 298; 44 Me. 416; 15 Md. 63.

[6] Brown v. Manter, 21 N. H. 533 (1859).

[7] See Bowers v. Pomeroy, 21 Ohio St. 190 (1871); 4 Duer, 191.

[8] Zinc Co. v. Franklinite Co., 13 N. J. E. 331 (1861), Green, Ch.; 15 id. 462.

[9] Reid v. Lancaster Fire Ins. Co., 19 Hun, 286 (1879).

[10] Herman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. Super.

"Premises adjacent to" a place where liquor is sold, embraces a public street or alley fronting on the place.[1]

In a lease of a factory, "premises" does not include a portable machine worked by a belt attached to the factory.[2]

The word never describes personalty.[3]

See CONTAINED; LOCUS, In quo; VIEW.

PREMIUM.[4] Reward, recompense; price; the sum paid or to be paid.

To a "wager" or "bet" there are two parties. To a "premium" or reward there is but one party until the act, thing, or purpose for which it is offered, has been accomplished. A "premium" is a reward or recompense for some act done; a "wager" is a stake upon an uncertain event. In a "premium" it is known who is to give before the event; in a "wager" it is not known until after the event.[5] Compare further BET; BOUNTY; PRIZE; WAGER, 3.

At a premium. At a price higher than the nominal value; as, when it is said that a share of stock, or exchange, is at a premium.

Premium note. A promissory note given for the price of insurance. Premium of insurance. The sum paid for undertaking the risk in a contract of insurance.

The payment of the annual premium in life insurance is a condition subsequent only, the non-performance of which may incur a forfeiture of the policy, or may not, according to circumstances. The insured may show a waiver of the condition, or a course of conduct which gave him a just and reasonable ground to infer that a forfeiture would not be exacted.[6] See INSURANCE.

PRENDER; PRENDRE. F. To take, seize. The right to take a thing before it is offered.

Whence "it lies in prendre, but not in render." See PROFIT, A prendre.

PREPARATION. See ATTEMPT; OVERT.

PREPENSE.[7] Aforethought; premeditated: as, malice prepense, q. v.

PREPONDERANCE.[8] Superiority of weight; outweighing. More, therefore, than "weight."[9]

A mere preponderance of evidence, however slight, must prevail in civil cases. But to sustain a finding of crime, the preponderance must be sufficient to outweigh the opposing evidence, including evidence of good character, if any, and the presumption in favor of innocence.[1]

In a civil case, the law does not require that the jury be convinced beyond all reasonable doubt, much less beyond any doubt; they must determine the issue upon the weight or preponderance of evidence.[2]

See further DOUBT, Reasonable; FAIR, 1.

PREROGATIVE.[3] That special pre-eminence which the king hath over and above all other persons, and out of the course of the common law, in right of his regal dignity. That law in case of the king which is law in no case of the subject.[4]

According to Vattel, the "prerogatives of majesty" are all the prerogatives without which the sovereign command, or authority, could not be exerted in the manner most conducive to the public welfare. One of these prerogatives is the right of eminent domain.[5]

Prerogative writs. Certiorari, prohibition, procedendo, mandamus, quo warranto, and habeas corpus: writs which do not issue without showing why the extraordinary power of the crown is called to the party's assistance.[6]

Some of the prerogative writs have been, in this country, largely shorn of their prerogative character, so far as their general use is concerned.[7]

In the United States, the cases proper for the issue of prerogative writs are largely defined by statutes. Before the passage of these statutes no such writ issued purely of right, but in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, which took into consideration the general welfare of the community.

See the writs named.

PRESCRIPTION.[8] That which is declared, published, or directed beforehand.

1. Municipal law is "a rule prescribed." That is, the resolution of the legislator is to be notified to the people who are to obey it, before its commencement as a law.

This may take place by universal tradition and long practice, which supposes a previous publication, as in the case of the common law; by viva voce proclamation; or by writing, printing, or the like.[9]

The constitutional provision that "a jury trial may

---

402 (1879); Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 40 Wis. 446 (1876).

[1] Bandalow v. People, 90 Ill. 218 (1878).

[2] Holbrook v. Chamberlin, 116 Mass. 161 (1874).

[3] Carr v. Fire Association, 60 N. H. 520 (1881).

[4] L. præmium, profit, advantage. See PREMIUM.

[5] Alvord v. Smith, 68 Ind. 62 (1874), Biddle, J.

[6] Thompson v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 260 (1881), Bradley, J. On the effect of delivering a policy without payment of premium, see 35 Alb. Law J. 104-5 (1887), cases.

[7] F. pre-penser, to think beforehand.

[8] L. præ-ponderare, to outweigh.

[9] Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 586 (1881), Eakin, J.

[1] Hills v. Goodyear, 4 Lea, 241-43 (1880), cases.

[2] Whitney v. Clifford, 57 Wis. 157-58 (1883).

[3] L. præ, before; rogare, to require, demand.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 239; 37 Wis. 443.

[5] Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. *641-42 (1837); Vattel, Law of Nations, § 45.

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 132; 3 Steph. Com. 629.

[7] Wheeler v. Irrigation Co., 9 Col. 252 (1886).

[8] L. præ-scribere, to write beforehand.

[9] [1 Bl. Com. 45.

be waived in the manner to be prescribed by law," contemplates actual legislation upon the subject.[1]

"Prescription" of a statute is necessary to give it effect. There are other modes of publication than that by the session laws. The doings of the legislature are necessarily public, and the journals of each house are required to be published regularly. Every enactment is, therefore, published in the sense in which publication is intended in the word "prescribed," though, by some oversight, it is omitted from the annual volume of laws.[2] Compare PROMULGATE.

2. In the Roman law, præscriptio was an exception written in front of the plaintiff's pleading. It became applied exclusively to the præscriptio longi temporis, etc., or the prescription founded on length of possession,[3] which see, below.

3. "When a man can show no other title to what he claims than that he and those under whom he claims have immemorially used to enjoy it."[4]

Whence prescriptible, imprescriptible, prescriptive.

All prescription must be either in a man and his ancestors, or in a man and those whose estate he has, which last is called prescribing in a que estate (quorum statum). Nothing but incorporeal hereditaments can be claimed by prescription; as, a right of way, or a common. No prescription can give title to lands of which more certain evidence may be had; and it must always be laid in him that is tenant of the fee: since usage beyond time of memory cannot be predicated of any lesser estate. Nor, again, can it be for a thing which cannot be raised by grant: for the law allows prescription only in supply of the loss of a grant, and, therefore, every prescription presupposes a grant to have existed.[4]

Title by prescription is a right which a possessor of land acquires by reason of his adverse possession during a period of time fixed by law, and where it does not originate in fraud, and is under a claim of right.[5]

Prescription is a legal fiction to quiet ancient possession.[6]

It rests upon the presumption that there was a grant which by lapse of time (usually twenty years) has become lost. The presumption is rebuttable.[7]

The doctrine is broader than that of a statute of limitations, although based upon analogous principles of repose to society.[8]

"What the primary owner has lost by his laches, the other party has gained by continued possession, without question of his right." This is the foundation of the doctrine, which, in the English law, is mainly applied to incorporeal hereditaments, but which in the Roman law, and the codes founded on it, is applied to property of all kinds.[1] See USE, 2, User.

4. To fill a druggist's prescription is to furnish and combine the requisite materials in due proportion as directed.[2]

When a druggist, in good faith, recommends a prescription as that of another person, and, at the request of his customer, fills it, charging only for the drugs and for compounding them, he is not responsible for injury that may result from the use of the alleged remedy.[3] See DRUGGIST.

PRESENCE. Being in a particular place.

Actual presence. Being bodily in the precise spot indicated. Constructive presence. Being so near to, or in such relation with, the parties actually in a designated place, as to be considered, in law, as in the place.[3]

In the commission of crime, not always an actual immediate standing by, within sight or hearing of the fact; may be a constructive presence, as when one commits a robbery or murder and another keeps watch at a convenient distance.[4] See ACCESSARY; PRINCIPAL, 5.

Does not depend upon whether a person can be distinctly seen.[5]

Obscene words uttered in the hearing of a female, are used in her presence; especially so, when addressed to her by name.[6]

"In the presence of the testator" who can see, means within his sight, at reasonable proximity.[7]

Statutes of wills do not make the test of the validity of a will to be that the testator must see the witnesses subscribe their names. They must subscribe "in his presence;" but in cases where he has lost or cannot use his sense of sight, if his mind and hearing are not affected, and he is sensible of what is being done, and the witnesses subscribe in the same room, or in such close proximity as to be within the line of vision of one in his position who could see, and within his hearing, they subscribe in his presence.[8]

Statutory provisions which require that a will be signed in the presence of the testator are intended to enable him to see that the persons he confides in are those who attest, and to prevent a false paper being

[1] Exline v. Smith, 5 Cal. 112 (1885).

[2] Peterman v. Huling, 31 Pa. 436 (1858), Strong, J.

[3] Sandar's Justinian, 47, 126; Maine, Anc. Law, 275.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 263-66.

[5] Burdell v. Blain, 66 Ga. 170 (1880), Crawford, J.

[6] Folsom v. Freeborn, 13 R. I. 205-7 (1881), cases.

[7] Brookline v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 226 (1882); Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 458 (1886).

[8] Boseman v. Boseman, 82 Ala. 391 (1886).

[1] Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 622 (1885), Miller, J.; Angell, Limitations, §§ 1, 2. See also 51 N. H. 329; 11 Lea, 338; 32 Pa. 398; 38 La. An. 318.

[2] [Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 511 (1878), Bleckley, J.

[3] [Baldwin v. Baldwin, 81 Va 410 (1886): Bouvier's Law Dict.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 34.

[5] People v. Bartz, 53 Mich. 495 (1884).

[6] Brady v. State, 48 Ga. 313 (1873); 1 Keyes, 66.

[7] Ray v. Hill, 3 Strob. 301 (1848).

[8] Riggs v. Riggs, 135 Mass. 241 (1883), Morton, C. J.

imposed upon them. "Presence" is the opposite of absence; it means in company with, within the view of, in the same room with the testator, coupled with consciousness on his part of such proximity.[1]

As to the presence of the husband when a wife is acknowledging a deed, see EXAMINATION, 5. As to presence in the law of estoppel, see STAND BY.

PRESENT. 1, adj. (1) To be in a designated place, actually, or by construction of law. See PRESENCE.

(2) Now existing; neither ended nor yet to begin; neither past nor future: as, present — time, estate, use, enjoyment, qq. v.

A bequest to a "present" attending physician, refers to the physician in attendance at the date of the will.[2]

Presently. Now; at once; immediately.

A jointure takes effect "presently after the death of the husband;"[3] and a donation mortis causa "presently belongs to the donee," in case the donor dies.[4]

2, v. (1) To offer for acceptance or payment.

Presentment. Producing or tendering, according to the terms of either instrument, (1) a bill of exchange to the drawee for acceptance or to the acceptor for payment; or (2) a promissory note to the maker for payment.[5]

Presentment of a bill is to be made on the drawee that he may judge of the genuineness and of the right of the holder to receive the contents, and that he may obtain immediate possession of the bill upon payment of the amount.[6]

Ordinarily, the instrument should be produced, so that, upon payment, it may be delivered up.[7] See ACCEPT, 2; NEGOTIABLE; PLACE, Of payment.

(2) In criminal law, to find, represent, or report officially.

Presentment. The notice taken by a grand jury of an offense from their own knowledge or observation, without a bill of indictment being laid before them.[8]

Upon this presentment an indictment is framed.

In Massachusetts, an indictment begins "the jurors on their oath present." In some other jurisdictions, where the offense is continuing, the charge is that the defendant, on a day named, and between that day and the day of the "taking of this inquisition," committed certain acts. And in some others the words are "the day of the making of this presentment." At common law, every indictment is a presentment. "Presentment" here means, not the delivery of the indictment to the court, but that a certain person has committed the acts set forth. The jurors "represent" or "show" those facts; present what they find to be the facts, and they find what they represent. The finding and the presentment mean the same.[1] See INDICTMENT.

Presents. (1) In the expressions "Know all men by these presents" and "To all to whom these presents may come," refers simply to the instrument or writing then in hand, or being read or spoken of.

The original was præsentes literæ, words before the reader: formal words of description in old conveyances.

"By these presents" is a phrase peculiar to conveyances and contracts in common-law countries. It is not found in documents executed under the civil law.[2]

(2) See BAGGAGE; GIFT, 1; INSOLVENCY; SERVICE, 3, Civil.

"No Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them [the United States], shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State."[3]

PRESIDE. A judge may "preside" whether sitting alone or as one of several judges.[4] See JUDGE.

PRESIDENT. See AGENT; DESCRIPTIO, Personæ.

Of a bank or corporation. See BANK, 2 (2); CORPORATION.

Of the Senate. See CONGRESS.

Of the United States. "The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows"[5]— by electors, appointed by each State, as see, at length, ELECTORS, Presidential.

"No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States."[6]

"In Case of the Removal of the President from Office

[1] Baldwin v. Baldwin, 81 Va. 410-14 (1886), cases, Lacy, J.; Neil v. Neil, 1 Leigh, 11 (1829), Carr, J. See generally 17 Cent. Law J. 412-47 (1883), cases.

[2] Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 333 (1871).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 137.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. § 606.

[5] See 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 449, as to acceptance; § 571, as to payment.

[6] Musson v. Lake, 4 How. 274 (1846).

[7] Codman v. Vermont, &c. R. Co., 17 Blatch. 4 (1879), cases. See generally Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 U. S. 712-18 (1879), cases.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 301; 18 Fla. 663.

[1] Commonwealth v. Keefe, 9 Gray, 291 (1857), Metcalf, J. See also Commonwealth v. Adams, 4 id. 88 (1855); 2 Story, Const. § 1784.

[2] Bouldin v. Phelps, 30 F. R. 574 (1887).

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, cl. 8.

[4] Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 334 (1872).

[5] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 1.

[6] Ibid., cl. 5.

or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation, or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected."[1]

An act approved January 19, 1886 (24 St. L. 1), provides, section one, that "in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President, the secretary of state, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability," then each of the following officials, in the order here given and subject to the same conditions as to removal, death, etc.,—the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the attorney-general, the postmaster-general, the secretary of the navy, and the secretary of the interior,—"shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President is removed or a President shall be elected: Provided, That whenever the powers and duties of the office of President . . shall devolve upon any of the persons named herein, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of such person . . to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting."

Sec. 2. The act shall only apply to officers appointed by the consent of the Senate, and to such as are eligible to the office of President, and not under impeachment by the House of Representatives at the time. Sec. 3. Repeals Rev. St. §§ 146–50.

"The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be encreased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States or any of them."[2]

His salary is at present fifty thousand dollars a year.[3]

"Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."[4]

"The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments (q. v.), upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons (q. v.) for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment."[5]

He may meet invasion or insurrection by military force, previous to any declaration of war by Congress.[1] See WAR.

"He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties (q. v.), provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint (q. v.) Ambassadors, other public Ministers (q. v.) and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments."[2] See OFFICE.

"The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies (q. v.) that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session."[3]

"He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient [see MESSAGE]; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States."[4]

He and the Vice-President "shall be removed from Office on Impeachment (q. v.) for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."[5]

See subjects relating to the Constitution and government of the United States; in particular CONGRESS; SERVICE, 3, Civil.

PRESS. See COPY; LIBERTY, 1, Of the press.

PRESUME. To take or assume a matter beforehand, without proof; to take for granted.

Infer is stronger than presume. The law does not presume, much less infer, fraud.[6] See INFER.

Presumption. Next to positive is circumstantial evidence, or the doctrine of presumptions. When a fact cannot itself be demonstrated, that which comes nearest to

[1] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 6.
[2] Ibid., cl. 7.
[3] R. S. § 153: Act 3 March, 1873, c. 226.
[4] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 8.
[5] Ibid., sec. 2, cl. 1.

[1] R. S. § 1642: Acts 28 Feb. 1795, 3 March, 1807.
[2] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2. "Had the consent of the Senate been made necessary to displace as well as to appoint, the Executive would have suffered degradation; and the relative importance of the House of Representatives a grave diminution." 2 Bancroft, Const. 191.
[3] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 3.
[4] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3.
[5] Ibid., sec. 4. See generally 2 Bancroft, Const. 166–94, 2 Story, Const. §§ 1410–1572.
[6] Morford v. Peck, 46 Conn. 385 (1878), Loomis, J.

proof of it is proof of the circumstances necessarily, or usually, attending it: this proof creates a presumption, which is relied upon till the contrary is established.[1]

Presumptive evidence proceeds upon the theory that the jury can infer the existence of a fact from another fact that is proved, and which most usually accompanies it.[2]

Presumption of law. A rule which, in certain cases, either forbids or dispenses with any ulterior inquiry.[3]

A judicial postulate that a particular predicate is universally assignable to a particular subject.[4]

It is founded upon the first principles of justice, a law or laws of nature, or the experienced course of human conduct and affairs, and the connection usually found to exist between certain things.[5]

Derives its force from jurisprudence. Probability is not necessary to it. It relieves from producing evidence. Its conditions are fixed and uniform. It is irrebuttable or absolute, and rebuttable or provisional.[6]

Conclusive, imperative, or absolute presumptions of law. Rules determining the quantity of evidence requisite to support any particular averment, which may not be overcome by proof that the fact is otherwise.[3]

Cases in which the long experienced connection between things has been found so uniform as to make it expedient for the common good that this connection be taken as inseparable and universal,[3] and indisputable.

Disputable or rebuttable presumptions of law. These are such presumptions as may be overcome by opposing proof: that facts, usually together, were so in a given case.[5]

The law infers one fact from the proved existence of its common companion; directs how much shall be proved to make a prima facie case, and that that may be overcome by counter-proof.[5]

Presumption of fact. A mere argument upon the facts in a case; a natural presumption derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case, by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of rules of law.[6]

A logical argument from a fact to a fact; an argument which infers a fact otherwise doubtful from a fact already proved.[1]

An inference of the existence of a certain fact arising from its necessary and usual connection with other facts which are known.[2]

Derives its force from logic. To it probability is necessary. It requires evidence. Its conditions fluctuate.[1]

There are certain departments of scientific knowledge where an entire series of facts or forms may always be inferred from the existence of any one, according to the maxim ex pede Herculem. The conclusion in such cases is deduced from the observed uniformity of physical nature, which by a necessity of our own minds we believe to be invariable. But this mode of reasoning has but a very limited application in the law of evidence as judicially applied to ascertain the facts and motives of human conduct. It is the foundation of the doctrine of presumptions to the extent to which they are admitted.[3]

Psychological presumptions. These are of knowledge of law; of a fact from a known fact; of innocence; of love of life; of good faith; of sanity; of prudence; against danger; as to supremacy of husband; of intent as to probable consequences; of malice; against a spoliator.[4]

Physical presumptions. Of incompetency through infancy; of identity; of death; of survivorship in a common catastrophe; of loss of a ship from lapse of time.[5]

Presumptions of uniformity and continuance. As to residence, occupancy, habit, coverture, solvency, value; that foreign law is like our law; as to constancy of nature — of physical sequence, animal habits, conduct of men in masses.[6]

Presumptions of regularity. As to marriage, and legitimacy; negotiation of paper; judicial proceedings; dates; formalities of documents; appointments of officers and agents; acts of public officers, of business and professional men; of the due delivery of letters.[6]

Presumptions of title. In favor of possession of realty — not tortious, and independent; and of personalty — as to vessels, and papers; that the proprietor adjacent to a road owns the soil thereof; as to ownership of hedges, land covered by water, alluvion, trees, and minerals. Missing links are proven from long possession, and grants from lapse of time. Applied, also, to licenses from use.[6]

Presumption as to payment. This arises after the lapse of twenty years.[7]

"Facts presumed are as effectually established as facts proved, where no presumption is allowed."[8]

---

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 371.]

[2] Home Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 440 (1870), Davis, J. See also 26 Ala. 30; 66 Ind. 432; 11 Me. 146; 34 N. H. 365; 27 N. J. L. 150, 153; 6 Wend. 181; 7 id. 66; 97 Pa. 34; 16 Vt. 71; 12 Wis. 257.

[3] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 14; Improvement Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. 449 (1871).

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. ch. XIV.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33; 29 Minn. 15.

[6] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 44; 4 Whart. 172; 107 U. S. 502-3; 71 Cal. 276.

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. ch. XIV.

[2] Roberts v. People, 9 Col. 474 (1886), Beck, C. J.

[3] Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 295 (1888), Matthews, J.

[4] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1240-69.

[5] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1270-83.

[6] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1331-59.

[7] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1360-65.

[8] Dickens v. Mahana, 21 How. 283 (1858).

If the evidence offered conduces in any reasonable degree to establish the probability or improbability of the fact in controversy, it should go to the jury.[1]

Inferences from inferences are not permitted: only immediate inferences from facts proved. If the presumed fact has no immediate connection with or relation to the established fact from which it is inferred, it is regarded as too remote. Thus, the presumption that a public officer has done his duty does not supply proof of independent and substantial facts.[2]

In a case where the ultimate fact was whether a renewal premium had been paid to the defendant, it was held that the jury could not infer (1) that the policy did not lapse but was renewed; (2) that the renewals were paid to the plaintiff's sub-agent; and (3) paid over by the agent to the defendant.[3]

A judge, in deciding that evidence of a particular circumstance is not receivable, impliedly decides that no presumption can be drawn from it which ought to have effect with the jury. A presumption which the jury is to draw is not a circumstance in proof, and it is not, therefore, a legitimate foundation for a presumption. There is no "open and visible connection" between the facts out of which the two presumptions arise.[4] An inference from an inference, if allowed at all, has little probative force.[5]

See PRÆSUMPTIO; EVIDENCE.

PRETENSE.[6] Representation; simulation; device.

False pretenses. The offense of "obtaining property by false pretenses." An offense variously defined by statutes; as generally understood: a knowingly false statement of a supposed by-gone or existing fact with intent to defraud, and an obtaining of property thereby.[7]

Many statutes are copied from 30 Geo. II (1757), c. 24 — "knowingly and designedly, by false pretenses," obtaining "from any person money, goods, wares, or merchandise, with intent to cheat and defraud any person of the same;" and from 24 and 25 Vict. (1861), c. 96 — obtaining "any chattel, money, or other valuable security with intent to defraud."[8]

A representation of some fact or circumstance, calculated to mislead, which is not true.[9]

A false pretense prima facie imports a misrepresentation as to something existing. . . The offense and the facts constituting it must be stated; where these facts consist in words, the words must be set forth.[1]

Four things must concur: an intent to defraud; actual fraud committed; false pretenses used; the fraud accomplished by means of those pretenses.[2]

There must be a scienter and a fraudulent intent. The representation must relate to past events: a representation for the future may be only a promise; it may be made in any of the ways by which ideas are communicated; and it may be inferred. The reason of the law is to protect the weak and credulous from the stratagems of the artful and cunning; it does not extend to those who, having the means in their own hands, neglect to protect themselves.[3]

The law gives a different effect to a representation of existing facts, from that given to a representation of facts to come into existence. To make a false representation the subject of an indictment, or of an action, two things are necessary, viz., that it should be a statement likely to impose upon one exercising common prudence and caution, and that it should be the statement of an existing fact. A "promissory" statement is not, ordinarily, the subject either of an indictment or of an action. The law also gives a different effect to promissory statements based upon general knowledge, information, and judgment, and to representations which, from knowledge peculiarly his own, a party may certainly know will prove to be true or false.[4]

Collecting money by falsely personating a creditor constitutes false pretenses.[5]

When the owner parts with the possession of his property, a felonious receiving is "larceny." When he parts with the possession and title (his right of property), the offense is false pretenses.[6]

In England, and Massachusetts, and perhaps in other States, obtaining money as a charitable gift by false pretenses, is indictable; but otherwise, it seems, in New York.[7]

Any words equivalent to "by means of a false pretense," may be used in the indictment.[8]

The indictment must set forth distinctly that there was an actual transaction between the parties, a payment of money or a delivery of property; that it was

[1] Home Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 440 (1871).

[2] United States v. Ross, 92 U. S. 283–84 (1875), Strong, J.; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 id. 470 (1875).

[3] Manning v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 100 U. S. 698 (1879), Strong, J.

[4] Douglass v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. 446–47 (1860), Strong, J.; McAleer v. McMurray, 58 id. 126 (1868).

[5] Ayer v. Glaucus, 4 Cliff. 171 (1870).

[6] L. prætensus: præ-tendere, to spread before, hold out, pretend. Spelled also pretence.

[7] [Broom, Common Law, 966.

[8] 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1130, 1175, 1186–89; Broom, Com. L. 963.

[9] Commonwealth v. Drew, 19 Pick. 184–86 (1837), Morton, J.

[1] Bardlaugh v. The Queen, L. R., 3 Q. B. D. 623 (1878), Bramwell, L. J.

[2] Commonwealth v. McDuffy, 126 Mass. 470 (1879), cases.

[3] Commonwealth v. Drew, ante.

[4] Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 160 (1873), Hunt, J.; 4 Hill, 9; 22 N. Y. 413; 99 Pa. 575; 26 Alb. Law J. 105–6 (1882), cases.

[5] State v. Goble, 70 Iowa, 447 (1888).

[6] Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 326–29 (1876), cases; Zinc v. People, 77 id. 114 (1879), cases; 53 id. 111; 47 111 397; 57 Ind. 341; 39 Mich. 505; 26 Ohio, 15; 11 Ind. 154, 12 Johns. 292.

[7] Commonwealth v. Whitcomb, 107 Mass. 486 (1871), cases; People v. Clough, 17 Wend. 351 (1837).

[8] Commonwealth v. Walker, 108 Mass. 313 (1871), cases.

the accused's purpose, in making the false pretenses, to effect such a transaction; and that the party alleged to have been defrauded was actually deceived by the false pretenses.[1]

See further CHEAT; LARCENY; OBTAIN: SPIRITUALISM.

PRETIUM. L. Price; value.

Pretium affectionis. Price from affection; value bestowed on account of association or endearment.

As, regard for a house as an inheritance or a home, for a jewel as a present, for a picture as an heirloom. Unless expressly provided for, this extrinsic value is not recoverable under a contract of insurance. When, if ever, the law affords no adequate remedy for withholding an article thus enhanced, equity will grant relief by ordering a delivery to the owner.[2]

Pretium periculi. Price of the risk. Payment in consideration of which a risk is assumed; in particular, the risk in a contract of insurance.

Compare PRÆMIUM; PREMIUM.

PREVAIL. He is the prevailing party, within the meaning of a statute entitling such party to costs, who prevails on the main issue, to a greater extent than admitted by his adversary, though not to the full extent of his claim.[3]

To be a prevailing party does not depend upon the degree of success at different stages of the suit; but whether at the end of the suit or proceeding the party who has made a claim against the other has successfully maintained it.[4] See COSTS.

PREVENTION. See CRIME; DEFENSE, 1; HOMICIDE; INJUNCTION; POLICE, 2; PROHIBITION; QUIA TIMET; SUFFER.

PREVIOUS. Compares an act or state named, to another act or state, subsequent in the order of time, for the purpose of asserting the priority of the first.[5] Compare PREEXISTING; PRIOR.

PRICE. The sum of money for which an article is sold; also, the equivalent or compensation, in whatever form received, for property sold.

The first and general meaning originates in the fact that property is ordinarily sold for money; not because the word has necessarily such a restricted meaning.[6]

The Latin is pretium, reward, value, estimation. equivalent. Webster shows that "price" is sometimes still used in this sense.[1]

Cost price. The price paid for a thing, as, for goods.[2]

Prices-current. Prepared by parties furnishing them in the ordinary course of business, may be used as evidence of the value of the articles mentioned in them.[3] See BOOK, 1; SCIENCE.

See also CASH; COST; INADEQUACY; MARKET-PRICE; VALUE.

PRIEST. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

PRIMA. See PRIMUS.

PRIMAGE. A small payment to the master of a vessel for his care and trouble, paid by the owners of the merchandise laden on board, and for his own personal use, unless otherwise agreed with the owners of the vessel.[4]

No longer considered a gratuity to the master, unless specially so stipulated. It belongs to the owners or freighters, as an increase of the freight rate.[5]

PRIMARY. First: principal, chief, leading, the best: as, a primary conveyance (q. v.), primary evidence (q. v.), obligation, power. See PRIMUS.

Primarily. "Designed primarily" for advertising purposes was held to mean "chiefly or principally intended" for such purposes.[6]

PRIMOGENITURE. The rule of descent, in English law, that of two or more males in equal degree, the eldest inherits; while females all inherit together. Postremogeniture. The right of the youngest son to inherit.[7]

When the emperors began to create honorary feuds, or titles of nobility, it was found necessary, in order to preserve their dignity, to make them impartible, and in consequence descendible. to the eldest son alone. This example was further enforced by the inconveniences which attended the splitting of estates.[7]

PRIMUS. L. First. See PRIMARY.

Imprimis. In the first place. See FIRST, 2.

Prima facies. First view, or appearance.

Prima facie. At first view; on first appearance.

---

[1] Commonwealth v. Howe, 132 Mass. 258 (1882), C. Allen, J. As to title to the property, see 94 Cent. Law J. 103 (1887), Eng. cases.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. § 709.

[3] [Weston v. Cushing, 45 Vt. 537 (1873).

[4] Bangor, &c. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 60 Me. 286 (1872); Hawkins v. Nowland, 53 Mo. 330 (1873).

[5] Lebrecht v. Wilcoxon, 40 Iowa, 94 (1874), Beck, J.

[6] Hudson Iron Co. v. Alger, 54 N. Y. 177 (1873), Earl, C.

[1] Hudson Iron Co. v. Alger, ante.

[2] Buck v. Buck, 18 N. Y. 340 (1858).

[3] Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 141, 115 (1865); 1 Bened. 249.

[4] [Peters v. Speights, 4 Md. Ch. 381 (1853): Abbott, Shipp. 493.]

[5] Carr v. Austin, &c. R. Co., 18 F. R. 421 (1883).

[6] Advertising Publications, Postage on, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 304 (1879).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 214-16.

A prima facie case or evidence is that which is received or continues until the contrary is shown.[1]

Possession of a negotiable instrument, payable to bearer or indorsed in blank, is prima facie evidence of lawful ownership; and nothing short of fraud, not even gross negligence, will invalidate the holder's title.[2] But if the defendant proves that the paper originated in an illegality, or was lost or stolen, the presumption arises that the holder gave no value for it. In that case, to recover, the plaintiff must show value paid.[3] See further EVIDENCE; FAITH; NEGOTIATE, 2; RECEIPT.

Primæ impressionis. Of the first impression, q. v.

PRINCIPAL.[4] Leading; highest in importance. See PRIMARY.

1. The original debt or sum loaned: as, in principal and interest. See INTEREST, 2 (3).

2. The more worthy; opposed to accessory, appurtenant, incident, secondary, inferior, qq. v. Applied to estates, rights, and obligations. See CHALLENGE, 4.

3. The person primarily liable; the original debtor; opposed to bail, surety, qq. v.

4. The employer of an agent or attorney; opposed to agent, q. v.

One primarily and ordinarily concerned, and who is not an accessary or auxiliary; as, the person receiving goods or employing workmen for his own advantage. An "agent" is a person employed to manage the affairs of another; as, he who receives or employs workmen for another.[5]

Vice-principal. A servant to whom his master deputes general supervision of his work, with the power of appointment and dismissal; a deputy master.

Especially is he a vice-principal who is engaged to manage a business distinct from the principal's regular occupation. The word "manager," as a synonym, is somewhat ambiguous.[6] See MANAGER, 1.

5. The chief actor in a crime; opposed to accessary.

Either the chief actor, that is, the actual perpetrator of the crime, or else he is present aiding and abetting the fact to be done.[7]

One present, consenting, aiding, procuring, advising, or assisting in the commission of a crime. Each person present consenting to the commission of the offense, and doing any act which is either an ingredient in the crime or immediately connected with or leading to its commission.[1]

A principal in the first degree is he that is the actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime. A principal in the second degree is he who is present, aiding and abetting the fact to be done.[2]

In treason and trespasses all participants are principals. See further ACCESSARY; AID, 1; PRESENCE.

PRINCIPLE.[3] 1. A fundamental truth; an elementary proposition; a settled rule of action or procedure. Compare MAXIM.

2. In patent law, a fundamental truth, an original cause.

These cannot be patented, as no one can claim in either of them an exclusive right. . . The processes used to extract, modify, and concentrate natural agencies, constitute the invention. The elements of the power exist; the invention is not in discovering them, but in applying them to useful objects.[4]

There is no authority for granting a patent for a "principle," an idea, or any other abstraction. . . The principle of a machine is "its mode of operation," or that peculiar combination of devices which distinguish it from other machines. The machine is not the principle or the idea.[5]

To make useful and patentable the discovery of a new principle, it must be applied to a practical purpose. . . The practical application to some useful purpose is the test of its value.[6]

When mechanical devices operate substantially in the same way, producing a similar result, they are considered the same in principle.[7] See PATENT, 2.

PRINT. A mark or form made by impression: anything printed; that which, being impressed, leaves its form, as cut in wood or metal, to be impressed on paper; the impression made; a picture; a stamp; the letters in a printed book; an impression from an engraved plate; a picture impressed from an engraved plate, etc.[8]

A chromo is a lithographic "print" in colors; and playing cards, printed in colors, are "prints."[9]

---

[1] Troy v. Evans, 97 U. S. 3 (1877); ib. 267, cases.

[2] Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 754 (1876), cases.

[3] Commissioners v. Clark, 94 U. S. 285 (1876), cases.

[4] L. principalis, taking the first place; chief.

[5] [Adams v. Whittlesey, 3 Conn. 567 (1821), Hosmer, Chief Justice.

[6] Murphy v. Smith, 19 C. B. N. S. *366 (1865); Gallagher v. Piper, 16 id. *669 (1864); Dwyer v. American Express Co., 55 Wis. 456 (1882); Foley v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 64 Iowa, 650 (1884); 1 Shearm. & R. Neg. §§ 230-31 (1888).

[7] [1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 615, 618.

[1] United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 103 (1830), Baldwin, J.; United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 226-27 (1869), cases.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 34; 33 Gratt. 868.

[3] F. principe, beginning: maxim, axiom

[4] Le Roy v. Tatham, 14 How. 175 (1852), McLean, J.

[5] Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. 570 (1863), Grier, J.

[6] Le Roy v. Tatham, 22 How. 137 (1859), McLean, J

[7] Roberts v. Ward, 4 McLean, 566 (1849), McLean, J.; 2 id. 178; 5 id. 63; 102 U. S. 707; 15 F. R. 448.

[8] Yuengling v. Schile, 20 Blatch. 463-64 (1882), cases.

Print means, apparently, a picture, something complete in itself, similar in kind to an engraving cut or photograph.[1]

Although the law recognizes a distinction between a "painting" and a "print," a copyright of the former will protect the owner in the sale of copies which may appropriately be called prints or lithographic copies.[2] See COPYRIGHT; DESIGN, 2; NOSCITUR, A sociis.

Printed. The "printed" copy of the title of a book or other article required by Rev. St., § 4956, to be deposited with the Librarian of Congress, may be printed with a pen.[3]

The place from which a newspaper is issued to subscribers is the place where it is "printed and published," although the press-work is done in another city.[4]

That one may subscribe by a printed name, see SUBSCRIBER, 1.

Printer. In a statute, may include the publisher of a newspaper.[5]

Printing. See COPYRIGHT; ORIGINAL, 2; PUNCTUATION; WRITING.

PRIOR; PRIORITY. Prior: a going before. Priority: precedence; legal preference.

A debt, incumbrance, or invention, is said to have or to take priority over another or others; and United States law, over State law. Compare JUNIOR, 3.

In paying the debts of a decedent, his executor or administrator must observe the rules of priority; otherwise, on deficiency of assets, if he has paid those of a lower degree first, he will have to pay those of a higher degree out of his own funds.[6]

See TEMPUS, Prior, etc.

PRISON.[7] A public building in which may be confined persons charged with or convicted of a crime, and persons who can give important testimony on the trial of criminal cases. Compare JAIL; PENITENTIARY; REFORMATORY.

A "state prison," in its general sense, means a place of confinement for state prisoners; that is, for persons charged with political offenses, and confined for reasons of state. But in some States the term designates the penitentiary maintained by the State for the confinement of prisoners convicted of certain crimes, in distinction from other prisons maintained and used by counties and cities.[8]

Prison bounds, or limits; rules of prison. A district around a prison within which a debtor, released from confinement under bond, may go at large.

A slight, temporary, unintentional overstepping of the line is not such breach of the condition not to go beyond the limits set as will render the sureties liable for the debt.[1]

Prison breach, or breaking. The act of a prisoner in escaping from the place in which he is in lawful custody; also, the act of breaking into such place to aid a prisoner in escaping.[2] See ESCAPE, 2.

Prisoner. A person deprived of his liberty by virtue of judicial or other lawful process.

Not then, necessarily, a person confined within the walls of a prison, as see IMPRISONMENT; BAIL, 2.

Rev. St., § 5541, provides that a person convicted of an offense against the United States and sentenced for a term longer than one year, may, by direction of the court, be confined in a State prison.[3]

To the same effect are §§ 5542 and 5548. Congress here recognizes a distinction between a "sentence," and an "order" for the execution of the sentence: the "order" is not necessarily a part of the judgment.[4]

There is no reason, in principle, why the prisoner should be present when an order changing the place of his confinement is signed by the court.[4]

PRIVATE.[5] Affecting or belonging to a single person or persons, as distinguished from the people at large; opposed to public or state. Compare PUBLIC; PRIVY.

As, private or a private — agent, boundary, bridge, carrier, charity, corporation, conveyance, counsel, easement, examination of a married woman or witness, law — act or statute, nuisance, person, property, rights, wrong, qq. v.

Privateer. A vessel owned and officered by private persons, but acting under a commission from a hostile or belligerent state, usually called "letters of marque,"[6] q. v.

PRIVIES. See PRIVY, 2.

PRIVILEGE.[7] 1. Exemption from such burdens as others are subjected to.[8]

A right peculiar to the person on whom conferred, not to be exercised by another or others.[9]

Brown, J.; Rosenbach v. Dreyfuss, 2 F. R. 221 (1880); 5 Blatch. 325; 97 U. S. 365.

[1] Yuengling v. Schile, ante.

[2] Schumacher v. Schwenke, 30 F. R. 691 (1887).

[3] Chapman v. Ferry, 18 F. R. 539 (1883).

[4] Boyer v. Hoboken, 44 N. J. L. 181 (1882).

[5] Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 350 (1853).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 511; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 553, 557, 837.

[7] F. prison: L. prensio, prehensio, a seizing, seizure.

[8] Martin v. Martin, 47 N. H. 52 (1866), Perley, C. J.

[1] Randolph v. Simon, 29 Kan. 406 (1883).

[2] See 4 Bl. Com. 130; 48 N. J. L. 555.

[3] Exp. Karstendick, 93 U. S. 396 (1876).

As to condition of prisons and the prison system, at the close of the last century, see McMaster's Hist. Peop. U. S., Vol. 1, pp. 98–102.

[4] Exp. Waterman, 33 F. R. 30 (1887).

[5] L. privatus, apart: privus, sundered, single.

[6] [Woolsey, Int. Law, § 127; 1 Kent, 96.

[7] L. privilegium, q. v.

[8] State v. Betts, 24 N. J. L. 557 (1854), Potts, J.

[9] City of Brenham v. Brenham Water Co., 67 Tex. 552 (1887), Stayton, A. J.

The exercise of mental power cannot be a privilege: it is not derived from a law granting a special prerogative contrary to common right.[1]

A right peculiar to an individual or body.[2]

An exemption or immunity; as, from taxation.[3] See under TAX, 2.

Personal privilege. Such privilege as is granted to or concerns an individual person. Real privilege. In English law, a privilege granted to a place.

Illustrations of personal privileges are: a debtor's claim for exemption; immunity from taxation; a widow's rights; most disabilities, as, disability in a feme-covert. Many such privileges may be waived.

Special or exclusive privilege. Any particular or individual authority or exemption existing in a person or class of persons, and in derogation of common right; as, the grant of a monopoly.[4]

Within the meaning of the prohibition in the constitution of New York against granting to private corporations "any exclusive privilege," describes grants in the nature of monopolies, of such inherent or statutory character as to make impossible the coexistence of the same right in another.[5]

Grants of special privileges are strictly construed; whatever is not given in unequivocal terms is withheld.[6] See FRANCHISE, 1; MONOPOLY.

"The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States."[7]

This provision is confined to such privileges and immunities as are fundamental; which belong of right to the citizens of all free governments; and which have always been enjoyed by citizens of the several States, from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. What these fundamental principles are may be comprehended under these heads: protection by the government, and enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject to such restraints as the government may prescribe for the general good of the whole.[8, 9]

The privileges and immunities intended are those which are common to the citizens of a State under its constitution and laws, by virtue of their being citizens. Special privileges enjoyed in one State are not secured in other States.[1]

That section of the Constitution is directed against State action. Its object is to place the citizens of each State upon the same footing with citizens of other States, and inhibit discriminative legislation.[2, 3]

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."[4]

The privileges of a citizen are those which he has as a citizen, first, of the United States, and, second, of the State where he resides as a member of society. The XIVth Amendment forbids the States to abridge the former, but not so the latter — one of which, for example, is marriage.[5]

"Privileges and immunities" are words of very comprehensive meaning. They include, at least, the right of a citizen of one State to pass into any other State for the purpose of engaging in lawful commerce, trade, or business without molestation; to acquire personalty; to take and hold realty; to maintain actions in the courts of the State; and to be exempt from any higher taxes or excises than are imposed by the State upon its own citizens.[6]

The right to practice law in the State courts is not a privilege or immunity of a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of the XIVth Amendment; nor does the Amendment affect the power of the State to prescribe the qualifications for admission to the bar.[7]

Abridgment of the right to sell intoxicating liquors is not forbidden;[8] nor of the right of trial by jury in suits at common law pending in the State courts.[9]

The Amendment refers to actions of the political body denominated a State: no agency of a State or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed, shall deny to any persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.[10]

See IMMUNITY; PROCESS, 1, Due; SUFFRAGE.

2. Exemption from arrest, q. v.

3. A communication from a client to his attorney which the latter may not divulge without the consent of the client. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

4. The constitutional provision (intended to secure free expression of opinion) that for any speech or debate in either house of a

---

[1] Lawyers' Tax Cases, 3 Heisk. 649 (1875), Turney, J.; ib. 473–75.

[2] Ripley v. Knight, 123 Mass. 519 (1878), Endicott, J.

[3] See Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 146 (1886); 9 Baxt. 546; Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Gaines, 3 F. R. 278–79 (1880); 80 Ky. 274; 2 N. M. 169; 4 Tex. Ap. 317.

[4] See Elk Point v. Vaughn, 1 Dak. 118 (1875); 1 Utah, 111; 1 Bl. Com. 272.

[5] Trustees of Exempt Firemen's Fund v. Roome, 93 N. Y. 328 (1883), Finch, J.

[6] Moran v. Commissioners, 2 Black, 722 (1862); Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 225 (1873); Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Missouri Packet Co., 125 U. S. 271 (1888), cases.

[7] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 2.

[8] Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. 380 (1823), Washington, J.; Felkner v. Tighe, 39 Ark. 357 (1882).

[9] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 75–78 (1872).

[1] Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168 (1868), Field, J.

[2] United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 643 (1882), Woods, Justice.

[3] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 75–78 (1872).

[4] Constitution, Amd. Art. XIV, sec. 1. Ratified July 28, 1868.

[5] Exp. Kinney, 3 Hughes, 12–13 (1879), cases.

[6] Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 430 (1870), Clifford, J.

[7] Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. 137–42 (1872).

[8] Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 133 (1873).

[9] Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 92 (1875).

[10] Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 346–47 (1879), Strong, J. legislature the member shall not be questioned in any other place.[1]

The privileges of members of Parliament are: of speech, of person, of domestics, and of goods.[2]

"A breach of privilege is any contempt of the high court of Parliament, whether relating to the House of Lords or to the House of Commons."

5. In maritime law, the lien of a seaman on a vessel for wages. See LIEN, Maritime.

6. In civil law, a claim on a thing which exists apart from possession, and until waiver or satisfaction.

Privileged. Enjoying a peculiar right or immunity: as, privileged from arrest, a privileged communication, qq. v.

A privileged debt is payable prior or in preference to some other debt. See PRIORITY.

PRIVILEGIUM. L. A private law: an enactment which conferred upon a person some anomalous or irregular right, or imposed some such obligation or punishment.

PRIVITY. See PRIVY, 2.

PRIVY.[3] 1, adj. (1) Connected with; concerned with; affected alike.

(2) In the sense of "private," used in the English phrases privy council, privy seal, qq. v.

Privy verdict. A verdict given privily to the judge, out of court; similar to a sealed verdict.[4] See further VERDICT.

2, n. A person so connected with another in an estate, a right, or a liability as to be affected as he is affected.

Privies are persons between whom some connection exists, arising from a mutual contract: as, donor and donee; lessor and lessee; or, persons related by blood: as, ancestor and heir.[5]

Privies in blood. Ancestor and heir, and co-parceners. Privies in estate. Lessor and lessee, donor and donee, and joint-tenants. Privies in representation. Testator and executor, intestate and administrator. Privies in law. Are created by the law casting land upon a person, as, in escheat.[5]

Privity. (1) Mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property.[6]

(2) Participation; complicity.

May refer to some fault or neglect in which one personally participates; as, in the expression, "loss occasioned without the privity" of another vessel.[1]

Privity of contract. Something on which an obligation, an engagement, a promise can be implied.[2]

No action lies where there is no privity of contract. Thus, B cannot maintain an action against C, where A, who is under a contract to sell an article to B, is induced by C to sell to C himself.[3]

The holder of a bill or check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment, in the absence of proof that the bill was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer.[4]

When one suffers loss from the negligence of another, and there is neither fraud or collusion nor privity of contract, the person causing the loss is not liable therefor, unless the act is one immediately dangerous to the lives of others, or is an act not performed in pursuance of a legal duty.[5]

The rule undoubtedly is that a person cannot be affected by any evidence, decree, or judgment to which he was not actually, or in consideration of law, a privy. This rule has been departed from so that wherever reputation would be admissible evidence, there a verdict between strangers, in a former action, is also evidence; as, in cases of public rights of way, immemorial customs, disputed boundaries, and pedigrees.[6]

A party claiming through another is estopped by that which is established as to that other respecting the same subject-matter.[7]

The ground upon which persons standing in this relation to a litigating party are bound by the proceedings is, that they are identified with him in interest; and whenever this identity is found to exist, all are alike concluded.[8] See ADJUDICATION, Former.

Because they are identified in interest, the admission of one privy binds his fellows.[9] See RES, Inter alios.

PRIZE. 1. Ordinarily, some valuable thing, offered by a person for the doing of a thing by others, into the strife for which he does not enter.[10] See BET; LOTTERY.

[1] See Constitution, Art. I, sec. 6.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 164.

[3] Priv-y. L. privatus, apart: privus, single.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 377; 5 Phila. 124; 6 id. 520.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189. As to privies in estate, see 20 Am. Law Rev. 389–411 (1886), cases.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189; 6 How. 59; 15 Barb. 588.

[1] Lord v. Steamship Co., 4 Saw. 300 (1877), cases; R. S. § 4283; 102 U. S. 541.

[2] Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 247 (1845), Daniel, J. See also 4 Pet. 83; 7 Ct. Cl. 526; 3 Ga. 430; 41 Iowa, 516; 20 Minn. 431; 35 N. H. 16; 54 id. 378; 48 Barb. 82; 64 Pa. 246; 4 Lea, 128.

[3] Ashley v. Dixon, 48 N. Y. 430 (1872).

[4] Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 10 Wall. 152 (1869); First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 344 (1876).

[5] Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 205–6 (1879), cases. Clifford, J.

[6] Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. 599 (1848), cases. Wayne, J.

[7] Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 59–60 (1848).

[8] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 523, cases; Litchfield v. Goodnow 123 U. S. 551 (1887), cases.

[9] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189. See generally 1 Harv. Law Rev. 226–32 (1887), cases.

[10] Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 539 (1880), Folger, C. J

Prize-fighting. Persons who agree to engage in a prize-fight or pugilistic contest may be held to answer for a conspiracy, and to keep the peace. The pretense that the contest is for scientific "points" will not avail, when the evidence shows that a fight is intended.[1]

2 In marine insurance, a capture; any taking or seizing, even unlawfully, by force.[2]

3. Property captured at sea under the laws of war; prize of war.

Prize-court. A tribunal which administers the law upon the subject of maritime captures made in time of war.

The district courts of the United States possess original jurisdiction in all matters relating to the law of prize.

Prize-courts are constituted to try judicially the lawfulness of captures at sea, according to the principles of public international law, with the double object of preventing and redressing wrongful captures, and of justifying the rightful acts of the captors in the eyes of other nations. From the necessity of the case, and to interrupt as little as may be the exercise of the belligerent duties of the captors, or the voyage and trade of the captured vessel if neutral, the proceedings are summary. The libel is filed as soon as possible after the prize has been brought into a port of the government of the captors, and does not contain any allegation as to title, or even set forth the grounds of condemnation, but simply prays that the vessel be forfeited to the captors as lawful prize of war. The monition issued and published upon the filing of the libel summons all persons interested to show cause against the condemnation, and is returnable within a very few days, too short a time to allow of actual notice to or appearance or proof in behalf of owners residing abroad. The law of nations presumes and requires that in time of war every neutral vessel shall have on board papers showing her character, and shall also have officers and crew able to testify the facts establishing her neutrality. The captors are therefore required immediately to produce to the prize-court the ship's papers, and her master, or some of her principal officers or crew, to be examined on oath upon standing interrogatories, and without communication, or instruction by counsel. The cause is heard in the first instance upon the proofs, and if they show clear ground for condemnation or acquittal, no further proof is ordinarily required or permitted. If the evidence in præparatorio shows no ground for condemnation, and no circumstances of suspicion, the captors will not ordinarily be allowed to introduce further proof, but there must be an acquittal and restitution. When further proof is ordered, it is only from such witnesses and upon such points as the prize-court may in its discretion think fit.[3]

A capture made by the army, or by the army and navy operating together, inures to the benefit of the United States. If a captor unnecessarily delays instituting proceedings for condemnation, the court may in case of restitution, decree demurrage against him as damages.[1]

See ADMIRALTY; CAPTURE; CONDEMN, 4; CONFISCATE.

PRO. L. For; as for.

In such expressions as pro-slavery, pro-license, opposed to anti, q. v.

Pro confesso. As confessed. See DECREE.

Pro facti. For the fact; as a fact.

Pro forma. For form: as a matter of form; formally.

Pro hac vice. For this turn; for the occasion: as, an attorney or judge pro hac vice. Abbreviated p. h. v.[2]

A charterer is an owner pro hac vice.[3]

Pro indiviso. For an undivided part; as undivided.

Pro interesse suo. For his interest; to the extent of one's interest.

Said of a person admitted to intervene in a suit.

Pro rata (parte). For the estimated part; in proportion; ratably (or rateably).

Whence "prorate:" to divide, as, gain or loss;[4] to divide or distribute proportionately; to assess pro rata.[5]

Pro rata itineris. According to the voyage made. See FREIGHT.

Pro re nata. For the thing created: for the exigencies of the occasion; for the occasion.

Pro salute animæ. For the welfare of the soul; for reformation.

Pro se. For himself; representing oneself: as, "Mr. Miner, pro se, contra."

Pro tanto. For so much; for as much as may be; as far as it goes.

A perpetual lease by a life-tenant is good for such interest as he may convey, that is, pro tanto.

Pro ut. See RECORDUM, Prout, etc.

PROBABLE.[6] Apparently true or real; seeming to be founded in fact or reason; reasonable: as, probable cause. See CAUSE, 2; DOUBT; PRESUMPTION; PROSECUTION, Malicious.

[1] Commonwealth v. Sullivan and McCaffrey, 16 W. N. C. 14 (Phila., 1885).

[2] [Dole v. New Eng. Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 6 Allen, 388-90 (1863), cases, Bigelow, C. J.

[3] Cushing v. Laird, 107 U. S. 76-82 (1882), cases, Gray, J.; 15 Blatch. 289.

[1] The Nuestra Señora De Regla, 108 U. S. 101, 103 (1882), cases.

[2] See 66 Ga. 715; 89 N. C. 513; 1 Bl. Com. 345; 2 id. 278; 3 id. 13, 243; 4 id. 261, 268.

[3] Thomas v. Osborn, 10 How. 29 (1856).

[4] Penniman v. Stanley, 122 Mass. 316 (1877); 7 How. Pr. 415.

[5] Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405 (1881); 19 Am. Law Reg. 360, n.

[6] L. probabilis, provable.

Probably. An instruction, otherwise correct, was held not vitiated by the conclusion that "if there be a reasonable doubt whether the person premeditated to kill the deceased, or to do him bodily harm which would probably [necessarily] occasion death, the jury ought not to find the accused guilty of murder in the first degree."[1]

Probability. "Probability" and "proof" each expresses a particular effect of evidence; but "proof" is the stronger term. The dictionaries give different definitions of "probability," as see Worcester and Webster.[2]

A committee of viewers reported that certain land would "in all probability" continue to be used for railroad freight purposes. Held, that if a degree of probability amounting to a practical certainty was intended, the facts on which the conclusion was based should have been stated, that the court might see on what it rested; also, that a lighter degree of probability could not affect the case.[3]

PROBARE. L. To prove.

Probandum. See FACTUM, Probandum; ONUS, Probandi.

Probata. Things proven; proofs. See ALLEGATA.

Probatio. Proving; proof.

Actori incumbit probatio. Upon the plaintiff rests the proving — the burden of proof. Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. Upon the one alleging, not upon him denying, rests the duty of proving. Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. Upon him rests the burden of proof who avers, not upon him who denies. See further PROOF, Burden of.

Plena probatio. See OATH, Suppletory.

PROBATE.[4] Formal, official or legal proof: as, the probate of (and to probate) a claim, a will.

When a will is proved, the original is deposited in the registry, and a copy, made under the seal of the register, is delivered to the executor or administrator, along with a certificate of its having been proven: all which together is styled "the probate."[5]

Strictly used, relates to the proof of a will before an officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to determine the question of its validity. In common usage, however, often refers to the proceeding incident to the administration and settlement of the estates of decedents, and is, therefore, sometimes so used in statutes.[1]

Federal courts have jurisdiction in a controversy between parties of different States respecting the validity, construction, or enforcement of a decree admitting a will to probate: it is in the nature of a proceeding in rem.[2]

Jurisdiction as to wills, and their probate as such, is neither included nor excepted out of the grant of the judicial power to the Federal courts. So far as it is ex parte and merely administrative, it is not conferred, and cannot be exercised at all, until, in a case at law or in equity, its exercise becomes necessary to settle a controversy as to which those courts have jurisdiction by reason of citizenship.[3]

A probate is conclusive until revoked.[4]

Generally speaking, a court of equity will not entertain a bill to set aside the probate of a will. Succession to the estate is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, in which all who have any interest are parties, and are concluded as upon a res adjudicata by the decision of the court, which generally has ample powers of process and investigation.[5]

A statute which provides for an ante mortem probate is inoperative and void.[6]

Court of probate. A court exercising jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, possessing, as to personal assets, nearly all the powers formerly exercised by the courts of chancery and the ecclesiastical courts of England.

Such courts collect the assets, allow claims, direct payments and distribution of the property to legatees or others entitled, and, generally, do everything essential to a final settlement of the affairs of the deceased, and the claims of creditors against the estate. Other names are "orphans'" and "surrogates'" courts.[7]

Such a court has power to administer the equities directly involved in the matter before it.[8] See RES, 2.

PROBATIO. See PROBARE.

PROBATIVE. Tending to prove: as, probative evidence, the probative force of a presumption.

PROCEDENDO. L. For proceeding: to proceed.

---

[1] Honesty v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 294 (1886).

[2] Brown v. Atlanta, &c. R. Co., 19 S. C. 59 (1882).

[3] New York, &c. R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40 (1881).

[4] L. probare, q. v.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 508.

[1] Reno v. McCully, 65 Iowa, 632 (1885), Reed, J.

[2] Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 21 (1875).

[3] Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 494–98 (1883), Matthews, Judge.

[4] Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 391–96 (1881), cases.

[5] Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 509–14 (1874), cases, Bradley, J.

[6] Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 Mich. 236 (1885); 24 Am. Law Reg. 790, 794–96 (1885), cases.

[7] Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 551 (1873), Field, J.; Davis v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 34 (1881); Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608 (1883).

[8] Hewitt's Appeal, 53 Conn. 37 (1885).

A writ by which a court of review remits to the inferior court a cause removed on insufficient ground.

A writ of procedendo ad judicium (to judgment) issues out of the court of chancery, when the judges of any subordinate court delay the parties, as by not giving judgment. In such case a procedendo will be awarded, commanding them to proceed to judgment, but without specifying the form.[1]

PROCEDURE. The body of rules, whether of practice or of pleading, whereby rights are effectuated through the successful application of proper remedies. Opposed to the sum of the legal principles which constitute the substance of the law, and also distinguished from the law of evidence.[2]

The term is so broad that it is seldom employed as a word of art. It includes whatever is embraced by the three technical terms pleading, evidence, and practice (qq. v.)—practice here meaning those legal rules which direct the course of proceeding to bring parties into the court and the course of the court after they are brought in; and evidence meaning those rules of law whereby we determine what testimony is to be admitted and what rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted.[3] Compare PROCEEDING.

The practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil cases, other than in equity and admiralty, in the circuit and district courts, shall conform, as near as may be, to those existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State within which such circuit or district courts are held.[4]

The conformity is to be "as near as may be," not as near as possible or as near as may be practicable.[5]

Adopting the forms of proceeding in the State courts, as near as may be, in the Federal courts, does not authorize an equitable defense (q. v.) to an action at law, nor blending legal and equitable claims in one suit.[6]

The purpose was to bring about uniformity in the law of procedure in the Federal and State courts of the same locality. The legislation had its origin in the code enactments of many of the States. While in the Federal tribunals the common-law pleadings, forms, and practice were adhered to; in the State courts of the same district the simpler forms of the local code prevailed. This involved the necessity of studying two distinct systems of law, and of practicing according to the wholly dissimilar requirements of both.[1]

The forms of mesne process and proceedings in equity and admiralty shall be according to the principles, rules, and usages which belong to the courts of equity and of admiralty, respectively, except when otherwise provided by statute or rules of court made in pursuance thereof; but the same may be altered by said courts or by the Supreme Court, by prescribed rules, consistent with the laws of the United States.[2]

PROCEED. See PROCEDENDO; PROCEDURE; PROCEEDING.

PROCEEDING. Any step taken by a party in the progress of an action.[3]

A proceeding in court is an act done by the authority or direction of the court, express or implied.[4]

The performance of an act; an act to be done in order to attain a given end; a prescribed mode of action for carrying into effect a legal right.[5]

"Proceedings," in its more general sense in law, means all the steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action. In ordinary acceptation, when unqualified, includes the whole of the subject. Thus, the proceedings of a suit embrace all matters that occur in its progress judicially; proceedings upon a trial, all that occur in that part of the litigation.[6]

A suit is a proceeding;[7] so is a writ of attachment.[8]

Common proceeding. That kind of proceeding which is instituted and conducted in a manner common to other civil actions.[9]

Judicial proceeding. Any proceeding in a court of justice.

Summary proceeding. The determination of a matter without a jury. See SUMMARY.

See generally DISCONTINUANCE, 1 (1); PARE, EX parte; PROCEDURE; PROCESS, 1; RECORD, 2; RES, 2; STAY; STET.

PROCEEDS. A word of great generality, but not necessarily money.[10]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 109.

[2] [Brown's Law Dict.

[3] Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 2; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 289 (1883).

[4] R. S. § 914.

[5] Phelps v. Oaks, 117 U. S. 239 (1886); Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 id. 301 (1876); Senior v. Pierce, 31 F. R. 633 (1887).

[6] Doe v. Roe, 31 F. R. 97 (1887).

[1] Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 441 (1875), Swayne, J.; Lamaster v. Keeler, 123 id. 388 (1887).

[2] R. S. § 913.

[3] Wilson v. Allen, 3 How. Pr. *371 (1849), Harris, J.

[4] Bulkeley v. Keteltas, 3 Sandf. 741 (1851); 48 Barb. 119; 3 S. C. 338.

[5] [Rich v. Husson, 1 Duer, 620 (1852), Duer, J.

[6] Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 319-20 (1852), Gardiner, J.; Gordon v. State, 4 Kan. 501 (1868).

[7] Dodd v. Middleton, 63 Ga. 638 (1879); 57 id. 140.

[8] Langstaff v. Miles, 5 Monta. 554 (1885).

[9] Brown v. Crego, 29 Iowa, 322 (1870), Beck, J.

[10] Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380 (1879), Bradley, J.

The income of an estate.[1]

Power to dispose of land and to take in return such proceeds as one thinks best includes power to exchange for other lands.[2]

PROCES VERBAL. F. A written statement, in legal form, of what has been said and done in the presence of an official, and of what he does in the matter.[3]

PROCESS.[4] 1. Something issuing out of a court or from a judge;[5] a writ of any nature.

At common law, the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court.[6]

In criminal practice, its office is to bring the defendant into court to answer the charge or information against him; the "information" being the foundation upon which it issues.[7]

In a large sense, comprehends the whole proceeding after the original writ and before judgment, but generally refers to the writs which issue out of any court to bring the party to answer, or for execution. It proceeds or goes out upon former matter, either original or judicial.[8]

A summons or notice to a defendant, for the commencement of a suit, is a process, as much so as a capias or a subpœna to appear and answer.[9]

"Mode of process" means mode of proceeding.[10]

Compulsory process. For a witness, a process that will compel his attendance — bring him into court if he refuses to come without it.[11]

Legal process. A process issued by virtue of and pursuant to law.[12]

Process issued by a court of justice.[13]

In a technical sense, usually only a writ, an execution, an attachment, or the like, running in the name of the people, and addressed to the sheriff or like officer. In bankrupt law, the writ, mandate, or order of a court taking hold of property and withdrawing it from the possession and control of the debtor, and from the ordinary reach of creditors for the payment of what is due.[1]

Original, mesne, and final process. The means of compelling the defendant to appear is sometimes called "original process," being founded upon the original writ (q. v.), and also to distinguish it from "mesne (intermediate) process," which issues, pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as, to summon juries, witnesses, and the like. Mesne process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to "final process" or process of execution; and it then signifies such process as intervenes between the beginning and the end of the suit.[2]

"Mesne process" ordinarily signifies any writ issued between the original writ and the execution. By "original process," the first writ at common law, is not now meant the first process: such original process is not used here. All of our writs preceding the execution are mesne process.[3]

"Mesne process" describes any except the final process.[4]

The equitable powers of courts of equity and of law over their own process to prevent abuse, oppression, and injustice, are inherent, and equally extensive and efficient.[5]

A "malicious abuse of process" occurs when a party employs legal process for some unlawful object, not the purpose it is intended by law to effect; that is, when he perverts the process. In an action for such abuse, it is not necessary to prove that the action has been determined, or to aver that it was sued out without probable cause. It is immaterial whether the proceeding was baseless or not. Legal process may be "maliciously used" so as to give a cause of action where no object but its proper effect and execution is contemplated. In such case both malice and want of probable cause must be averred and proved, and the proceeding must be determined before an action can be maintained.[6] See PROSECUTION, Malicious; OBSTRUCT, 3; ISSUE, 1; REGULAR, Irregular.

Due process of law. A course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established by our jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights.[7]

---

[1] Thomson's Appeal, 89 Pa. 46 (1879), Sharswood, C. J. See also 59 Wis. 179; 12 Mass. 71; 8 Wend. 160.

[2] Phelps v. Harris, ante.

[3] See Burdett v. Spilsbury, 6 Man. & G. *458 (1843); 6 How. 38.

[4] L. pro-cedere, to go before or forward; to issue forth.

[5] [People v. Nash, 1 Idaho, 210 (1868), McBride, C. J.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 279.

[7] [City of Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa, 527 (1872), Miller, J.

[8] [Gilmer v. Bird, 15 Fla. 421 (1875): Comyn.

[9] Dwight v. Merritt, 18 Blatch. 306 (1880): R. S. § 911; 19 F. R. 253.

[10] United States v. Martin, 17 F. R. 155 (1883). See also 33 Cal. 292; 7 Ill. 670; 11 id. 420, 443; 70 id. 258; 10 Iowa, 187; 27 La. An. 457; 12 Minn. 86, 255; 1 N. M. 385; 6 Lans. 204; 1 Hill, 169–70; 11 Phila. 164; 44 Pa. 329; 49 id. 246; 1 Wis. 457; 11 id. 70; 98 E. C. L. 359.

[11] Exp. Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 238 (1886), Norton, C. J.

[12] Cooley v. Davis, 34 Iowa, 130 (1871), Day, J.

[13] [Re Bininger, 7 Blatch. 274 (1870), Woodruff, J.; 6 Lans. 204.

[1] [Re Bininger, ante.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 279.

[3] Ferguson ads. State, 31 N. J. L. 291 (1865).

[4] Arnold v. Chapman, 13 R. I. 586 (1882).

[5] Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 283 (1884).

[6] Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 285–86 (1870), cases, Sharswood, J.

[7] Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 715 (1877), Field, J.

"Nor shall any person . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."[1]

"Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."[2]

The first of the foregoing provisions is found in perhaps identical language in the constitution of each one of the States.

An equivalent phrase, according to Lord Coke,[3] is "law of the land," used in the Great Charter in connection with the writ of habeas corpus, the trial by jury, and other guaranties against oppression by the Crown, and meaning the ancient and customary laws of the English people, or the laws enacted by the Parliament of which the barons were a controlling element; not protection against the enactment of laws by Parliament.

The meaning of the phrase remains without that satisfactory precision of definition which judicial decisions have given to nearly all the other guaranties of personal rights found in the constitutions. There is wisdom in ascertaining the intent and application of the phrase by the process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented require.[4]

Whenever, by the laws of a State, a tax, an assessment, a servitude or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge, in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property, as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.[4]

Generally implies an actor, reus, judex, regular allegation, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceeding. Yet this is not universally true; as, where process, in its nature final, under oath, issues against the body, lands, and goods of public debtors.[5]

The necessities of government, the nature of the duties to be performed, and usage, have established a procedure for the levy and collection of taxes which differs from proceedings in courts of justice, but which is still due process of law.[1]

The revenue laws of a State need not provide that a person shall have an opportunity to be present when a tax is assessed against him, or that the tax shall be collected by suit.[2] See SUMMARY; TAX, 2.

A trial in which the rights of the party shall be decided by a tribunal appointed by law and governed by the rules of law previously established, is what is meant.[3] In this there is a strong implication against punishment for contempt by order of a legislative body.[3]

Opportunity to be heard is absolutely essential.[4]

The expression means due process according to the law of the land. This process in the States is regulated by the law of each State. The power of the Supreme Court over that law is to determine whether it is in conflict with the supreme law of the land. The State courts may decide whether a proceeding is in accordance with the law of the State; the Supreme Court, whether it is in accordance with the Constitution, acts of Congress, and treaties of the United States.[4]

That kind of procedure is due process of law which is suitable and proper to the nature of the case, and sanctioned by the established customs and usages of the courts. "Perhaps no definition is more often quoted than that given by Mr. Webster in the Dartmouth College Case: 'By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities, under the protection of the general rules which govern society.'"[6]

By "due process" is meant one which, following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case, and just to the parties to be affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law; it must be adapted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties, it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought.[7]

In England, the requirement was originally designed to secure the subject against the arbitrary action of [1] Constitution, Amd. Art. V.

[2] Constitution, Amd. XIV, sec. 1.

[3] 2 Inst. 50.

[4] Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 101-5 (1877), cases, Miller, J. Approved, 107 id. 289; 111 id. 707; 115 id. 519.

[5] Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land, &c. Co., 18 How. 280 (1855), cases, Curtis, J.; Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 594 (1880), cases.

[1] Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78 (1881); Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 569 (1886).

[2] McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 41 (1877); Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 id. 331 (1885).

[3] Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 182 (1880).

[4] Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 190-95 (1878), cases; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Saw. 288-96 (1882), cases.

[4] Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 93 (1875), Waite, C. J.

[5] Exp. Wall. 107 U. S. 289 (1882), Bradley, J.; Cooley, Const. Lim. 353; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 530-38 (1884), cases, Matthews, J.

[7] Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 707-8 (1884), Field, J.; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Saw. 274-75 (1882), Field, J.; Baldwin v. Ely, 66 Wis. 188 (1886).

the Crown, and to place him under the protection of the law. The words, as stated, were held to be the equivalent of "law of the land." A similar purpose must be ascribed to them when applied to a legislative body in this country; that is, that they are intended, in addition to other guaranties of private rights, to give increased security against the arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, and the arbitrary spoliation of property.[1]

See LAW, Of the land; NOTICE, Judicial; RES, In rem; TAKE, 8.

2. In patent law. A "process," eo nomine, is not made the subject of a patent. It is included under the general term "useful art." An art may require one or more processes or machines in order to produce a certain result or manufacture. . . Where the result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called "processes."

It is for the discovery or invention of some practical method or means of producing a beneficial result or effect, that a patent is granted, and not for the result or effect itself. It is when the "process" represents the means or method of producing a result that it is patentable, and it will include all methods or means which are not effected by mechanism or mechanical combinations.

A new "process" is usually the result of a discovery; a "machine," of an invention. The arts of tanning, dyeing, making water-proof cloth, vulcanizing India rubber, and smelting ores are usually carried on by processes, as distinct from machines. One may discover a new and useful improvement in the process of tanning, dyeing, etc., irrespective of any particular form of machinery or mechanical device. And another may invent a labor-saving machine by which this operation or process may be performed, and each may be entitled to a patent.

The term is often used in a vague sense, in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus, we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine, as distinguished from a process. In this use of the word it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine. A man cannot have a patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine; only for the machine which produces it.[1]

A process is a mode of treatment of certain materials to produce a certain result. It is an act, or a series of acts, performed upon the subject-matter to be transformed and reduced to a different state or thing. If new and useful, it is as patentable as a piece of machinery. In the language of the patent law, it is an "art." The machinery pointed out as suitable to perform the process may or may not be new or patentable; while the process itself may be altogether new, and produce an entirely different result. The process requires that certain things should be done with certain substances, and in a certain order; but the tools to be used in doing this may be of secondary consequence.[2]

A "machine" is a thing. A "process" is an act, or a mode of acting. The one is visible to the eye. The other is a conception of the mind, seen only by its effects when being executed or performed. Either may be the means of producing a useful result.[3]

When a new process produces a new substance, the invention of the process is the same as the invention of the substance, and a patent for the one may be reissued so as to include both, as in the case of Goodyear's vulcanized-rubber patent. But a process and a machine for applying the process are not necessarily one and the same invention. They are generally distinct and different.[4]

A process producing a new product, like that of celluloid, differing from any known before, not merely in degree of usefulness and excellence, but in kind, having new properties and uses, is the proper subject of a patent, although some or all of the parts of the apparatus used are not new.[5]

The mixing of certain substances together, or the heating of a substance to a certain temperature, is a process. If the mode of doing it, or the apparatus in or by which it may be done, is sufficiently obvious to suggest itself to a person skilled in the particular art, it is enough, in the patent, to point out the process to be performed, without giving supererogatory directions as to the apparatus or method to be employed. If the mode is not obvious, then a description of a particular mode by which it may be applied is sufficient. There is, then, a description of the process and of one practical mode in which it may be applied. Perhaps the process is susceptible of being applied in many modes, and by the use of many forms of apparatus. The inventor is not bound to describe them all, in order to secure to himself the exclusive right to the process, if he is really its inventor or discoverer. But he must describe some particular mode, or some ap-

[1] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 519 (1885), Field, J. See also Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 519, 515 (1878), Andrews, J.; State v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 218 (1881), Durfee, C. J.; Lavin v. Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, 18 Blatch. 17-30 (1880), cases; 18 F. R. 410, 416, 449-50, cases; 76 Mo. 479-83.

[1] Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 267-68 (1853), Grier, J. See also Fermentation Co. v. Maus, 122 U. S. 427-28 (1887), cases.

[2] Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 788 (1876), Bradley, J.

[3] Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 728-29 (1880), Bradley, J.

[4] James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 377 (1881), Bradley, J.

[5] Celluloid Manuf. Co. v. American Zylonite Co., 31 F. R. 910 (1887), cases, Gray, J.

paratus, by which the process can be applied with at least some beneficial result, to show that it is capable of being exhibited and performed in actual experience.[1] See ART, 1; PATENT, 2.

PROCESSION. See ASSEMBLY.

PROCESSIONING. A going around.

To prevent controversies concerning the boundaries of land between adjacent owners, they were required, once every ten years, to have their lands "processioned" or gone around, and the land-marks renewed.[2] Whence processioners. Compare PERAMBULATION.

PROCHEIN.[3] Nearest, next.

Prochein ami or amy. Nearest friend. See further AMI.

PROCLAMATION. 1. An announcement made by the ministerial officer of a court that some particular thing is about to be done officially by the court.

As, that court is about to open or adjourn; that an accused person is about to be discharged; and, in Pennsylvania, that a sheriff's deed is about to be acknowledged. See CRIER.

2. In affairs of state, the king's edict concerning the execution of the laws.[4]

A notice publicly given of anything whereof the king thinks fit to advise his subjects.[5]

Made under the great seal and published, so that the people may be apprised of its existence and do as it commands.[6]

A proclamation by the President relieving parties, who had been transacting business in ignorance of it, from penalties, may take effect when signed by the President and sealed with the seal of the United States, officially tested. Publication in newspapers may not be requisite.[6]

A proclamation is a crying aloud; making publicly known; official notice given the public. One may proclaim, as of old, by the sound of a trumpet, by voice, by print, or by posting. A proclamation may be published in the newspapers, or scattered by writing, or in any other demonstrative manner. Publicity is an important ingredient. It cannot be published by mere deposit in a place to which the public have no access.[7]

A proclamation by the President, reserving lands from sale, is his official public announcement of an order of that effect. No particular form of announcement is necessary. It is sufficient if it has such publicity as accomplishes the end to be attained. Such order sent out from the appropriate executive department in the regular course of business is the legal equivalent of the President's own order to the same effect — the acts of the heads of departments, within the scope of their powers, being the acts of the President.[1] See WAR.

PROCTOR. 1. An agent, or proxy.

2. An attorney in an admiralty, ecclesiastical or probate court.

3. An attorney in admiralty.

An attorney at law answers to the "procurator" or proctor, of the civilians and canonists.[2] See ATTORNEY, 2.

Procuration. Acting as agent for another; agency; proxy, q. v.

When one person indorses a bill of exchange, or makes any other contract for another, the transaction is sometimes said to be effected per proc., by procuration.

Procurator. A person employed to manage the affairs of another; an agent; a representative. See MINISTER.

PROCURE. A bankrupt procures the seizure of his property when the initiation of the proceeding comes from him, when he is the person who begins to procure, when he caused the thing to be done, in the ordinary sense of the word.[3]

But signing, however reluctantly and under pressure, a warrant to confess judgment, under a stipulation that the warrant should not unnecessarily be put in force, is "suffering" a taking. Decisions on "procuring" have no application on "suffering."[3] See further SUFFER; PREFERENCE.

To "procure a female to have illicit carnal connection with any man" refers to intercourse with another than the "procurer" or "procuress."[4] See ABDUCTION. As to procuress, see BAWD.

See also ABET; CONSPIRACY.

PRODUCE.[5] 1, v. To bring forward or exhibit, for inspection by one's adversary.

After due and timely notice to an adversary to produce, at trial, specified documents alleged to be in his possession, and which the demandant has a right to inspect, secondary evidence of the contents will be received, provided the documents are not produced in court, and that, if produced, they would be evidence.[6]

---

[1] Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 728, ante; 12 F. R. 615, 618; 20 Blatch. 471; 22 Cent. Law J. 294 (1886), cases.

[1] Watson v. Bishop, 69 Ga. 53 (1882).

[2] Prō'shĕn; a law-French term.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 270.

[4] [Cowell, Law Dict.

[5] Lapeyre v. United States, 17 Wall. 191, 195–96 (1872), Swayne, J.; Chase, C. J., Clifford, Davis, and Strong, JJ., concurring.

[6] Lapeyre v. United States, supra, Hunt, Miller, Field, and Bradley, JJ., dissenting.

[1] Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S. 770 (1879), Waite, C. J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 25; 4 id. 137; 3 H. L. C. 686.

[3] Re Black, 2 Bened. 204–5 (1868), cases, Blatchford, J.; Brown v. Jefferson County Nat. Bank, 19 Blatch. 317–21 (1881). See also as to procuring and suffering a preference, Sartwell v. North, 144 Mass. 194–95 (1887), cases.

[4] People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 11 (1874).

[5] 1. Prō-dūce'. 2. Prŏd'-ūce.

[6] See R. S. §§ 724, 914, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 560–63, 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 152–63, 753; 10 Bened. 268; 3 McCrary.

Congress cannot compel the production of the private books and papers of a citizen for its inspection, except in the progress of judicial proceedings, or in suits instituted for that purpose, and in both cases upon averment that its rights are dependent for enforcement upon the evidence those writings contain.[1] See INSPECTION, 2; SUBPŒNA, Duces.

2, n. A bequest of the "produce" of a fund, directly or in trust without limitation, carries the principal.[2]

The "produce of a farm" was held not to include beef raised and killed on it.[3]

Compare INCOME. See BROKER; PERISHABLE.

PRODUCT. See NOVELTY; PROCESS, 2; RESIDUUM, 2.

In the pork-packing business, by general usage, may not include certain portions of slaughtered hogs.[4]

PROFANITY. Compare BLASPHEMY.

Public profane swearing from its tendency to disturb the peace, corrupt the morals of the community, and undermine the foundations of Christianity, was an indictable offense at common law. The view now is that a single utterance of a profane word is not per se indictable, if it is not spoken with a loud voice, nor with repetitions. To be indictable, the profanity should take such form, and be uttered under such circumstances, as to constitute a public nuisance.[5]

PROFERT.[6] He produces, he proffers; also, the act of producing.

When either party alleges a deed as in existence, he must make "profert" of it, that is, produce it in court simultaneously with the pleading.

When oral pleading was in vogue, the deed was actually produced; but, later, "profert" consisted merely of a formal allegation that the party showed the deed in court; it being, in fact, retained in his own custody.[7]

Hence, for a time, there could be no remedy on a lost instrument; as, on a bond. Now, however, profert is dispensed with, if an allegation of loss is stated.[8] See further OYER.

PROFESSION. "Professional employment" relates to some of the occupations universally classed as professions, the general duties and character of which the courts notice judicially.[1] See PROPERTY; TAX, 2.

PROFFER. See PROFERT; PROPOUND; TENDER, 2.

PROFIT; PROFITS. 1. The gain made upon any business or investment, when receipts and expenses are taken into account.[2] Compare EARNINGS.

Net income; as, in the expression "profits used in construction." Not, therefore, that which is required and expended to keep property (as, a railroad) in its usual condition, proper for operation, and which is classed with repairs, part of the current expenses.[3]

Mesne profits. The pecuniary benefit received by one who dispossesses another of realty, between the disseisin and the restoration of possession.[4]

The provisions of the New York Code of Civil Procedure providing for recovery in an action of ejectment, as damages for withholding the property, "the rents and profits, or the value of the use and occupation of the property," may be regarded as a legislative definition of the ancient technical expression "mesne profits." The owner should have either the rents actually received or the rental value, as may be just under the circumstances. The "mesne profits" consist of the net profits, the rental value, or the value of the use and occupation, in ascertaining which necessary payments for taxes and ordinary repairs are to be deducted.[5]

Net profits. The gain that accrues on an investment after deducting losses and expenses; not what is made over losses, expenses, and interest.[6] See INCOME.

The words "net profits" define themselves. They mean what shall remain, as the clear gains of any business venture, after deducting the capital invested in the business, the expenses incurred in its conduct, and the losses sustained in its prosecution.[7]

In the law of partnerships, "profits" are the excess of returns over advances; the excess of what is obtained over the cost of obtaining it. "Losses" are the excess of advances over returns; the excess of the cost of obtaining over what is obtained. "Profits" and "net profits" are, for all legal purposes, synonymous expressions; but the returns themselves are often called "gross profits;" hence it becomes necessary to 274; 12 F. R. 813-14, cases; 10 id. 529; 15 id. 718-30, cases; 2 Blatch. 23, 301; 20 How. 194.

---

[1] Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 F. R. 250 (1887), Field, J.

[2] Craft v. Snook, 13 N. J. E. 122 (1860), cases; 4 La. An. 109; 7 id. 449.

[3] The Mayor v. Davis, 6 W. & S. 279 (1843).

[4] Morningstar v. Cunningham, 110 Ind. 333 (1886).

[5] Goree v. State, 71 Ala. 9 (1881), cases, Somerville, J.; Gaines v. State, 7 Lea, 410 (1881); State v. Crisp, 85 N. C. 528 (1881); 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 498; 2 id. § 79; 3 Whart. Am. Cr. L. § 2536; Cooley, Const. Lim. 476.

[6] L. proferre, to bring forward.

[7] Steph. Pl. 74; 2 Arch. Pr. 1059; 46 N. J. L. 505.

[8] 1 Story, Eq. § 81.

[1] Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 155 (1879).

[2] [People v. Supervisors, 4 Hill, 23 (1842), Bronson, J.; 9 Wall. 788; 142 Mass. 102.

[3] Grant v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 98 U. S. 227 (1876), Bradley, J.; s. c., 9 Blatch. 542.

[4] See Leland v. Tousey, 6 Hill, 333 (1844); Nash v. Sullivan, 32 Minn. 190 (1884); 14 Neb. 12.

[5] Wallace v. Berdell, 101 N. Y. 14-15 (1885), cases, Rapallo, J.

[6] [Tutt v. Land, 50 Ga. 350 (1873), Trippe, J.; 105 Mass. 105; 13 East, 543.

[7] Park v. Grant Locomotive Works, 40 N. J. E. 121 (1885), Van Fleet, V. C.

call profits "net profits," to avoid confusion.[1] See further PARTNERSHIP.

Profit a prendre. The right to take a part of the soil or produce of the land.

A right to the products or proceeds of land.[2]

This right, if enjoyed by reason of holding another estate, is regarded as an easement appurtenant to the estate; whereas, if it belongs to an individual, distinct from ownership in other lands, it takes the character of an interest or estate in the land itself, rather than that of a proper easement.[3]

The right, although capable of being transferred in gross, may be attached by the owner of the land to other land as an appurtenance, and pass as such upon conveyance of the latter. While the technical definition of an easement excludes such right, the right is nevertheless in the nature of an easement.[3] See PERMANCY.

Profits of a business. The receipts, deducting concurrent expenses; the equivalent of "net receipts."[4]

Depreciation of buildings is not ordinarily or necessarily considered in the estimate.[4]

Wherever profits are spoken of as not a subject of damages it will be found that something contingent upon future bargains, or speculations, or states of the market, are referred to, and not the difference between the agreed price of something contracted for and its ascertainable value or cost.[5]

2. In patent law, the rule of damages for an infringement is the amount the infringer actually realized in profits; not what he might have made by reasonable diligence.[6]

This amount is estimated by finding the difference between cost and sales. The elements of cost of materials, interest, expense of manufacture and sale, and bad debts, considered by a manufacturer in finding his profits, are taken into account, and no others. Profits due to elements not patentable may sometimes be allowed. Salaries, as dividends of the profit under another name, are disallowed. The wrong-doer is made liable for actual, not for possible, gains. The controlling consideration is that he shall not profit by his own wrong. The rule compensates one party and punishes the other. A decree "for all the profits made in violation of the rights of the complainant under the patent aforesaid, by respondent, by the manufacture, use, or sale of any of the articles named in the bill of complaint," is correct in form.[7]

Interest upon the various sums is not allowed.[8]

In an action at law for the infringement of a patent, the plaintiff can recover a verdict for only the actual damages which he has sustained; and the amount of such royalties or license fees as he has been accustomed to receive for the use of the invention, with interest thereon from the time when they should have been paid, is generally, though not always, taken as the measure of his damages; but the court may, whenever the circumstances of the case appear to require it, inflict punitive damages, by rendering judgment for not more than thrice the amount of the verdict. Upon a bill in equity, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of gains and profits that the defendant has made by the use of the invention. This rule was established by a series of decisions under the patent act of 1836, which simply conferred upon the courts of the United States general equity jurisdiction, with the power to grant injunctions, in cases arising under the patent laws. The reasons for the rule are, that it comes nearer than any other to doing complete justice; that in equity the profits made by an infringer belong to the patentee; and that it is inconsistent with the ordinary principles and practice of courts of chancery either to permit a wrong-doer to profit by his own wrong or to make no allowance for the expense of conducting his business, or to undertake to punish him by obliging him to pay more than a fair compensation to the person wronged. The infringer is liable for actual, not for possible, gains. The profits, therefore, which he must account for, are not those which he might reasonably have made, but those which he did make, by the use of the invention; or, in other words, the fruits of the advantage which he derived from the use, over what he would have had in using other means then open to the public and adequate to enable him to obtain an equally beneficial result. If there was no such advantage, there can be no decree for profits, and the plaintiff's only remedy is by an action at law for damages. But if the defendant gained an advantage by using the invention, that advantage is the measure of the profits to be accounted for, even if from other causes his business did not result in profits. If, for example, the unauthorized use of a patented process produced a definite saving in the cost of manufacture, he must account for the amount so saved. This application or corollary of the general rule is as well established as the rule itself. . . The profits allowed in equity have been, and are still, considered as a measure of unliquidated damages, which, as a rule, and in the absence of special circumstances, do not bear interest until after their amount has been judicially ascertained.[9]

PROHIBERE. L. To hold before, put in one's way: to prevent, forbid, prohibit.

[1] Lindley, Partn. 15; Story, Partn. § 23; 49 Conn. 240, 272; 60 Md. 475; 15 Minn. 519.

[2] Huntington v. Asher, 96 N. Y. 610–14 (1884), cases, Finch, J.

[3] Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 421–22 (1877), Church, C. J.; 22 Wend. 433; 4 Pick. 145; 5 B. & C. 221; 2 Washb. R. P. 25.

[4] Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[5] Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Steel Co., 121 U. S. 275–76 (1887), cases, Blatchford, J.

[6] Dean v. Mason, 20 How. 203 (1857), McLean, J.

[7] Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 801–4 (1869), Swayne, J.; Livingston v. Woodworth, 15 How. 558 (1853); Dobson v. Hartford Carpet Co., 114 U. S. 444–45 (1885), cases; Freeman v. Freeman, 142 Mass. 102–3 (1886).

[8] Parks v. Booth, 102 U. S. 106 (1880).

[9] Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 142–49, 160 (1888), cases, Gray, J.

Qui non prohibet, cum prohibere possit, jubet. He who does not forbid, when he might forbid, commands.

Qui non prohibet, quod prohibere potest, assentire videtur. He who does not prevent what he can prevent, is viewed as assenting. See ESTOPPEL; SUFFER.

PROHIBITION.[1] 1. The act of forbidding or interdicting. Whence prohibitory. Compare INHIBITION; MANDATE.

The imposition of punishment implies a prohibition of the act punished.[2]

While the XIIIth and XIVth Amendments are prohibitory, they imply positive immunity from legal discriminations.[3]

In marine insurance, words equivalent to a prohibition amount to a warranty.[4]

The right to pass an ordinance usually involves the incidental right to enforce it by a reasonable pecuniary penalty.[5]

Power "to prohibit and suppress" the maintenance of a place as a nuisance includes the power to provide a punishment.[6]

Power in the authorities of a city to prohibit or regulate a thing includes partial prohibition or regulation.[7]

If a statute does not declare void a contract which is in violation of it, and if it is not necessary to hold the contract void to accomplish the purpose of the statute, the inference is that the statute was intended to be directory, and not prohibitory of the contract.[8]

A statute often speaks as plainly by inference, and by means of the purpose which underlies it, as in any other manner. When it appears by necessary inference from what is expressed that an act is opposed to the policy of the law, and will defeat its purpose, such act should be held to be prohibited. When a statute directs that a thing should be done in a given manner, it ordinarily excludes other modes of doing it.[9]

See LEGAL; ILLEGAL.

Writ of prohibition. A writ directed to the judge and parties to a suit in any inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution thereof, upon a suggestion that either the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court.[1]

Commands the person to whom it is directed not to do something which, by the suggestion of the relator, the court is informed he is about to do.[2]

Suspends all action, prevents further proceeding in the prohibited direction; is never used as a remedy for an act already completed.[3]

Prevents an unlawful assumption of jurisdiction.[4]

Cannot be made to perform the office of a proceeding for the correction of mere errors and irregularities. If there is jurisdiction, and no provision for appeal or writ of error, the judgment of the trial court is conclusive.[5]

It is often said that the granting or refusing of the writ is discretionary, and, therefore, not the subject of a writ of error. That may be true, where there is another legal remedy, by appeal or otherwise, or where the question of the jurisdiction of the court, whose action is sought to be prohibited, is doubtful, or depends on facts which are not made matter of record, or where a stranger, as he may in England, applies for the writ. But where that court has clearly no jurisdiction of the suit or prosecution instituted before it, and the defendant therein has objected to its jurisdiction at the outset, and has no other remedy, he is entitled to a writ of prohibition as a matter of right; and a refusal to grant it, where all the proceedings appear of record, may be reviewed on error.[6]

The writ will not be granted unless the defendant has unavailingly objected to the jurisdiction.[6]

2. Interdiction of the liberty of making, and of selling or giving away, intoxicating liquors, for other than medicinal, scientific, and religious (sacramental) purposes.

Sometimes called total prohibition, and, of late years, effected by amendments to the constitutions of several of the States.

Authority conferred upon a town, by its charter, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, does not fairly embrace a power to regulate sales. The exercise of the power to regulate sales provides for the continuance of the traffic under prescribed rules. The power to prohibit is to be wielded only for suppression.[7]

"The weight of authority is overwhelming that no

---

[1] L. prohibere, q. v.

[2] Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 388 (1879).

[3] Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 507 (1879); Exp. Virginia, ib. 345 (1879).

[4] Odiorne v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 101 Mass. 554 (1869), cases.

[5] 1 Dillon. Mun. Corp. §§ 338, 376, cases; 1 Bishop, Stat. Cr. § 21.

[6] Rogers v. People, 9 Col. 453 (1888).

[7] Chicago Packing, &c. Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 225 (1878); Keokuk v. Dressell, 47 Iowa, 599 (1878).

[8] Bowditch v. New England Ins. Co., 141 Mass. 228-95 (1886), cases, Morton, C. J.

[9] United States v. O'Connor, 31 F. R. 451 (1887), Thayer, J.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 112.

[2] United States v. Hoffman, 4 Wall. 161-62 (1866), Miller, J.

[3] Exp. Gordon, 104 U. S. 516 (1881), Waite, C. J.

[4] Exp. Ferry Co., 104 U. S. 520 (1881), Waite, C. J.

[5] Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 173-74 (1886), cases, Gray, J. See also 49 Conn. 124; 29 Minn. 523; 77 Va. 229, 332; 21 W. Va. 140.

[6] State v. Williams, 48 Ark. 227 (1886); 26 id. 52, cases

[7] State v. Fay, 44 N. J. L. 476-77 (1882), Dixon, J., citing 68 Ill. 444; 92 id. 569; 2 Mo. 113. See also 48 Ind 308; 25 id. 283; 25 Iowa, 440; 54 Mo. 33, 172; 42 N. J. L. 364; 82 N. Y. 318.

such immunity has heretofore existed as would prevent State legislatures from regulating, and even prohibiting, traffic in intoxicating drinks, with a solitary exception. That exception is the case of a law operating so rigidly on property in existence at the time of its passage, absolutely prohibiting its sale, as to amount to depriving the owner of his property. A single case, that of Wynehamer v. The People [3 Kernan, 378, N. Y., 1856], has held that as to such property, the statute would be void for that reason. But no case has held that such a law was void as violating the privileges or immunities of citizens of a State or of the United States. If, however, such a proposition is seriously urged, we think that the right to sell intoxicating liquors, so far as such a right exists, is not one of the rights growing out of citizenship of the United States, and in this regard the case falls within the principles laid down by this court in the Slaughter-House Cases [16 Wall. 36, 1872]." [1]

"No one has ever doubted that a Legislature may prohibit the vending of articles deemed injurious to the safety of society, provided it does not interfere with vested rights of property. When such rights stand in the way of the public good, they can be removed by awarding compensation to the owner. When they are not in question, the claim of a right to sell a prohibited article can never be deemed one of the privileges and immunities of the citizen. It is toto coelo different from the right not to be deprived of property without due process of law, or the right to pursue such lawful avocation as a man chooses to adopt, unrestricted by tyrannical and corrupt monopolies." [2]

"I have no doubt of the power of the State to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, when such regulation does not amount to the destruction of the right of property in them. The right of property in an article involves the power to sell and dispose of such article as well as to use and enjoy it. Any act which declares that the owner shall neither sell it nor dispose of it, nor use and enjoy it, confiscates it, depriving him of his property without due process of law. Against such arbitrary legislation by any State, the Fourteenth Amendment affords protection. But the prohibition of sale in any way, or for any use, is quite a different thing from a regulation of the sale or use so as to protect the health and morals of the community. All property, even the most harmless in its nature, is equally subject to the power of the State in this respect with the most noxious." [3]

"If the public safety or the public morals require the discontinuance of any manufacture or traffic, the hand of the legislature cannot be stayed from providing for its discontinuance, by any incidental inconvenience which individuals or corporations may suffer. All rights are held subject to the police power of the State" — a power of which the legislature cannot divest itself by contract. [4]

"In Bartemeyer v. Iowa it was decided that a State law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors was not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. This was re-affirmed in Beer Company v. Massachusetts, and that question is now no longer open in this court." [1]

But a State may not by taxation discriminate against the products or the citizens of another State. The police power of a State to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors does not warrant the enactment of a law infringing a positive provision of the Constitution of the United States. [2]

"All property is the creation of the law, either the common or the statute law, and must, in its existence and enjoyment, be subjected to the policy and provisions of the law." [3]

December 5, 1887, Mr. Justice Harlan, in writing the opinion of the Supreme Court in the cases of Mugler v. Kansas and Kansas v. Ziebold, reported in 123 U. S. 623, 657-74, said: The general question is whether the prohibition statutes of Kansas, approved February 19, to take effect May 1, 1881, and March 7, 1885, amendatory and supplementary to the act of 1881, are in conflict with that clause of the Fourteenth Amendment which provides that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." That legislation by a State prohibiting the manufacture within her limits of intoxicating liquors, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution, is made clear by the decisions of this Court, rendered before and since the adoption of that Amendment.

In the License Cases, 5 How. 504 (1847), the question was whether certain statutes of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire, relating to the sale of spirituous liquors, were repugnant to the Constitution. In determining the question, it became necessary to inquire whether there was any conflict between the exercise by Congress of its "power to regulate commerce" and the exercise by a State of what are called "police powers." The members of the Court were unanimous in holding that the statutes under examination were not inconsistent with the Constitution or any act of Congress. Chief Justice Taney said: "If any State deems the retail and internal traffic in ardent spirits injurious to its citizens, and calculated to produce idleness, vice, or debauchery, I see nothing in the Constitution to prevent it from regulating and restraining the traffic or from prohibiting it altogether." Mr. Justice McLean said: "A State regulates its domestic commerce, contracts, transmission of estates, and acts upon internal matters, which relate to its moral and political welfare. Over these subjects the

[1] Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 133 (1873), Miller, J.

[2] Ibid., 136, Bradley, J.

[3] Ibid., 137-38, Field, J. See also State v. Mugler, 29 Kan. 252 (1883).

[4] Boston Beer Company v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 32 (1877), Bradley, J.

[1] Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 206 (1884), Waite, C. J. See also Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 7[illegible] (1881).

[2] Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 454 (1886), Bradley, J.

[3] Oviatt v. Pond, 29 Conn. 487 (1861), Ellsworth, J. See also Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 761 (1881), 32 Iowa, 252.

Federal government has no power. . . The acknowledged police power of a State extends often to the destruction of property. A nuisance may be abated. Everything prejudicial to health or morals may be removed." Mr. Justice Woodbury observed: "How can they [the States] be sovereign within their respective spheres, without power to regulate all their internal commerce, as well as police, and direct how, when, and where it shall be conducted in articles intimately connected with the public morals, public safety, or public prosperity." Mr. Justice Grier said: "The true question is whether the States have a right to prohibit the sale and consumption of an article of commerce which they believe to be pernicious in its effects, and the cause of disease, pauperism, and crime. . . Without attempting to define what are the peculiar subjects or limits of this power, it may safely be affirmed that every law for the restraint or punishment of crime, for the preservation of the public peace, health, and morals comes within this category. . . It is not necessary, for the sake of justifying the legislation under consideration, to array the appalling statistics of misery, pauperism, and crime which have their origin in the use or abuse of ardent spirits. The police power, which is exclusively in the States, is alone competent to the correction of these great evils, and all measures of restraint or prohibition necessary to effect the purpose are within the scope of that authority."

In Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129 (1873), it was said that, prior to the Fourteenth Amendment, State enactments, prohibiting traffic in intoxicating liquors, raised no question under the Constitution; and that such legislation was left to the discretion of the respective States, subject to no other limitation than those imposed by their own constitution, or by the general principles supposed to limit all legislative power. Referring to the contention that the right to sell intoxicating liquors was secured by the Fourteenth Amendment, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said that "so far as such right exists, it is not one of the rights growing out of citizenship of the United States." In Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33 (1877), it was said, by Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, that "as a measure of police regulation, looking to the preservation of public morals, a State law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is not repugnant to any clause of the Constitution. Finally, in Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 206 (1884), the court, by Chief Justice Waite, said that the question as to the constitutional power of a State to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors was no longer an open one. These cases rest upon the acknowledged rights of the States to control their purely internal affairs, and, in so doing, to protect the health, morals, and safety of their people by regulations that do not interfere with the execution of the powers of the general government, or violate rights secured by the Constitution. The power to establish such regulations, as was said by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 203 (1824), reaches everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the National government.

It is, however, contended that, although the State may prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for sale or barter within her limits, for general use as a beverage, "no convention or legislature has the right to prohibit any citizen from manufacturing for his own use, or export or storage, any article of food or drink not endangering or affecting the rights of others." The proposition concedes that the right to manufacture drink for one's personal use is subject to the condition that it does not endanger or affect the rights of others. If such manufacture does prejudicially affect the interests of the community, it follows, from the premises stated, that society has the power to protect itself, by legislation, against the injurious consequences of that business. As was said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 124 (1876), by Chief Justice Waite, while power does not exist in the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require "each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another." But by whom, or by what authority, is it to be determined whether the manufacture of particular articles of drink, for general personal use, will injuriously affect the public? Power to determine such questions, so as to bind all, must exist somewhere; else society will be at the mercy of the few, who, regarding their own appetites or passions, may be willing to imperil the peace and security of the many, provided only they are permitted to do as they please. Under our system that power is lodged with the legislature. It belongs to that department to exert what are known as the police powers of the State, and to determine, primarily, what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety.

It does not follow that every statute enacted ostensibly for the promotion of these ends is to be accepted as a legitimate exertion of the police power. There are, of necessity, limits beyond which legislation cannot rightfully go. While every possible presumption is to be indulged in favor of the validity of a statute, the courts must obey the Constitution rather than the law-making department, and must, upon their own responsibility, determine whether, in any particular case, these limits have been passed. Their solemn duty is to look at the substance of things, whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and hereby give effect to the Constitution.

Keeping in view these principles, it is difficult to perceive any ground for the judiciary to declare that the prohibition by Kansas of the manufacture or sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for general use as a beverage, is not fairly adapted to the end of protecting the community against the evils which confessedly result from the excessive use of ardent spirits. There is no justification for holding that the State, under the guise merely of police regulations, is aiming to deprive the citizen of his constitutional right; for we cannot shut out of view the fact, within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drink; nor the fact established by statistics accessible to every one, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are, in some degree at least, traceable to this evil. If, therefore, a State deems the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for other than medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes, to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy of legislation. Indeed, it is a fundamental principle in our institutions, indispensable to the preservation of public liberty, that one of the separate departments of government shall not usurp power committed by the constitution to another department. And so, if, in the judgment of the legislature, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use, as a beverage, would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the efforts to guard the community against the evils attending the excessive use of such liquors, it is not for the courts, from their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question. So far from such a regulation having no relation to the general end sought to be accomplished, the entire scheme of prohibition, as embodied in the constitution and laws of a State, might fail, if the right of each citizen to manufacture intoxicating liquors for his own use as a beverage were recognized. Such a right does not inhere in citizenship. Nor can it be said that the government interferes with or impairs any one's constitutional rights of liberty or of property, when it determines that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, for general or individual use, as a beverage, are, or may become, hurtful to society, and constitute, therefore, a business in which no one may lawfully engage. Those rights are best secured in our government by the observance, upon the part of all, of such regulations as are established by competent authority, to promote the common good. No one may rightfully do that which the lawmaking power, upon reasonable grounds, declares to be prejudicial to the general welfare.

This conclusion is unavoidable, unless the Fourteenth Amendment takes from the States those powers of police that were reserved at the time the original Constitution was adopted. But this court has declared, upon full consideration, in Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31 (1885), that that Amendment had no such effect.

Upon this ground, it is contended, that, as the primary and principal use of beer is as a beverage; as the breweries of the defendants were erected when it was lawful to engage in the manufacture of beer for every purpose; as such establishments will become of no value as property, or, at least, will be materially diminished in value, if not employed in the manufacture of beer, for every purpose,— the prohibition upon their being so employed is, in effect, "a taking of property for public use without compensation, and depriving the citizen of his property without due process of law." In other words, although the State, in the exercise of her police powers, may lawfully prohibit the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, legislation having that object in view cannot be enforced against those who, at the time, happened to own property, the chief value of which consists in its fitness for such manufacturing purposes, unless compensation is first made for the diminution in value of their property, resulting from such prohibitory enactments.

This interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment is inadmissible. It cannot be supposed that the States intended, by adopting that amendment, to impose restraints upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community. In respect to contracts, the obligations of which are protected against hostile State legislation, this court in Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Landing Co., 111 U. S. 751 (1884), said that the State could not, by any contract, limit the exercise of her powers to the prejudice of the public health and the public morals. So, in Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 816 (1879), where the Constitution was invoked against the repeal by that State of a charter, granted to a private corporation, to conduct a lottery, and for which that corporation had paid to the State a valuable consideration in money, the court said: "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. . . Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them." Again, in New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U. S. 672 (1885): "The Constitutional prohibition upon State laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not restrict the power of the State to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, as the one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts. Rights and privileges arising from contracts in a State are subject to regulations for the protection of the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, in the same sense, and to the same extent, as are all contracts and all property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations."

The principle that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, was embodied, in substance, in the constitutions of nearly all, if not all, of the States at the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment; and it has never been regarded as incompatible with the principle, equally vital, because essential to the peace and safety of society, that all property is held under the implied obligation that the owner's use of it shall not be injurious to the community. Illustrations of this doctrine are afforded by the cases of Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501 (1878), and Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, ib. 659, 667 (1878), both decided after the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. In the first case, a statute of Kentucky, enacted in 1874, imposed a penalty upon any one selling fluids, the product of coal, petroleum, or other bituminous substances, which would ignite at a temperature below 130° Fahrenheit. Patterson having sold a certain oil for which letters patent had been issued in 1867, but which did not come up to the standard required by said statute, and having been indicted therefor, disputed the State's authority to prevent or obstruct the exercise of his rights under the letters patent. This court upheld the legislation, upon the ground that while the State could not impair the exclusive right of the patentee, or of his assignee, in the discovery described in the letters patent,— the tangible property, the fruit of the discovery, was not beyond control in the exercise of her police powers. In the second case, the court sustained the validity of an ordinance of Hyde Park, in Cook county, Illinois, passed under legislative authority, forbidding any person from transporting through that village offal or other offensive or unwholesome matter, or from maintaining or carrying on an offensive or unwholesome business or establishment within its limits. The fertilizing company, at large expense, and under authority expressly conferred by its charter, had located its works at a particular point in the county. Besides that, the charter of the village provided that it should not interfere with parties engaged in transporting animal matter from Chicago, or from manufacturing it into a fertilizer or other chemical product. The enforcement of the ordinance operated to destroy the business of the company and seriously to impair the value of its property. As, however, its business had become a nuisance, producing discomfort, and often sickness, among large masses of people, the court maintained the authority of the village, acting under legislative sanction, to protect the public health against such nuisance,— to regulate and to abate nuisances being an ordinary exercise of the police power, which the States had never surrendered, but which they all retained and still possess.

A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared, by valid legislation, to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community, cannot, in any just sense, be deemed a "taking" or an appropriation of property for the public benefit. Such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes, nor restrict his right to dispose of it, but is only a declaration that its use by any one, for certain forbidden purposes, is prejudicial to the public interests. Nor can legislation of that character come within the Fourteenth Amendment, in any case, unless it is apparent that its real object is not to protect the community, or to promote the general well-being, but, under the guise of a police regulation, to deprive the owner of his liberty and property, without "due process of law." The power which the States have of prohibiting such use by individuals of their property as will be prejudicial to the health, the morals, or the safety of the public, is not, and, consistently with the existence and safety of organized society, cannot be burdened with the condition that the State must compensate such individual owners for pecuniary losses they may sustain, by reason of their not being permitted, by noxious use of their property, to inflict injury upon the community. The exercise of the police power by the destruction of property which is itself a public nuisance, or the prohibition of its use in a particular way, whereby its value becomes depreciative, is very different from taking property for public use, or from depriving a person of his property without due process of law. In the one case, a nuisance only is abated; in the other, unoffending property is taken away from the innocent owner. It is true, when the defendants erected their breweries, the laws of the State did not forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. But the State did not thereby give any assurance, or come under an obligation, that its legislation upon that subject would remain unchanged. Indeed, as was said in Stone v. Mississippi, the supervision of the public health and the public morals is a governmental power, "continuing in its nature," and "to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require;" and that, "for this purpose, the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself." So in Beer Co. v. Massachusetts: "If the public safety or the public morals require the discontinuance of any manufacture or traffic, the hand of the legislature cannot be stayed from providing for its discontinuance by any incidental inconvenience which individuals or corporations may suffer."

A portion of the argument in behalf of the defendants is to the effect that the statutes of Kansas forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquors to be exported, or to be carried to other States, and, upon that ground, they are repugnant to the clause of the Constitution giving Congress power to "regulate commerce" with foreign nations and among the several States. We need only say, upon this point, that there is no intimation in the record that the beer which the respective defendants manufactured was intended to be carried out of the State or to foreign countries. And, without expressing an opinion as to whether such facts would have constituted a good defense, we observe that it will be time enough to decide a case of that character when it shall come before us. (See Kidd v. Iowa, p. 832.)

Section thirteen of the act of Kansas of 1885 provides, that "All places where intoxicating liquors are manufactured, sold, bartered, or given away in violation of any of the provisions of this act, or where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale, barter, or delivery in violation of this act, are hereby declared to be common nuisances, and upon the judgment of any court having jurisdiction finding such place to be a nuisance under this section, the sheriff, his deputy, or undersheriff, or any constable of the proper county, or marshal of any city where the same is located, shall be directed to shut up and abate such place by taking possession thereof and destroying all intoxicating liquors found therein, together with all signs, screens, bars, bottles, glasses, and other property used in keeping and maintaining said nuisance, and the owner or keeper thereof shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of maintaining a common nuisance, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment in the county jail not less than thirty nor more than ninety days. The attorney-general, the county attorney, or any citizen of the county where such nuisance exists, or is kept, or is maintained, may maintain an action in the name of the State to abate and perpetually enjoin the same. The injunction shall be granted at the commencement of the action, and no bond shall be required."

By this section it is not declared that every establishment is to be deemed a common nuisance because it may have been maintained, prior to the passage of the statute, as a place for manufacturing liquors. The statute is prospective in its operation; that is, it does not put the brand of a common nuisance upon any place, unless, after its passage, that place is kept and maintained for purposes declared by the legislature to be injurious to the community. Nor is the court required to adjudge any place to be a common nuisance simply because it is charged by the State to be such. It must first find it to be of that character; that is, must ascertain, in some legal mode, whether the place in question has been or is being so used as to make it a common nuisance.

Equally untenable is the proposition that proceedings in equity for the abatement of the nuisances indicated in the thirteenth section are inconsistent with due process of law. See further NUISANCE.

To the objection that the statute makes no provision for a jury trial, it is sufficient to say that such a mode of trial is not required in suits in equity brought to abate a public nuisance. The statutory direction that an injunction issue at the commencement of the action is not to be construed as dispensing with such preliminary proof as is necessary to authorize an injunction pending the suit. The statute leaves the court at liberty to give effect to the principle that an injunction will not be granted to restrain a nuisance, except upon clear and satisfactory evidence that one exists. Here the fact to be ascertained was not whether a place, kept for purposes forbidden by the statutes, was per se a nuisance, that fact being conclusively determined by the statute itself, but whether the place in question was so kept and maintained. If the proof upon that point is not sufficient, the court can refuse an injunction, or postpone action until the State first obtains the verdict of a jury in her favor.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting from the judgment concurred in by the rest of the court in Ziebold's Case, in substance said: I am not prepared to say that the State can prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors within its limits if they are intended for exportation, or forbid their sale within its limits, under proper regulations for the protection of the health and morals of the people, if Congress has authorized their importation, though the act of Kansas is broad enough to include both such manufacture and sale. The right to import an article of merchandise, recognized as such by the commercial world, whether the right be given by an act of Congress or by a treaty with a foreign country, would seem necessarily to carry the right to sell the article when imported. In Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 447 (1827), Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Sale is the object of importation, and is an essential ingredient of that intercourse of which importation constitutes a part. It is as essential an ingredient, as indispensable to the existence of the entire thing, then, as importation itself. It must be considered as a component part of the power to regulate commerce. Congress has a right, not only to authorize importation, but to authorize the importer to sell."

If one State can forbid the sale within its limits of an imported article, so may all the States, each selecting a different article. There would then be little uniformity of regulations with respect to articles of foreign commerce imported into different States, and the same may be said of regulations with respect to articles of inter-State commerce. . . By the thirteenth section of the act of 1885, the legislature, without notice to the owner or hearing of any kind, declares every place where liquors are sold, bartered, etc., to be a common nuisance; and then prescribes what shall follow, upon a court having jurisdiction finding one of such places to be what the legislature has already pronounced it. The court is not to determine whether the place is a common nuisance in fact, but is to find it to be so if it comes within the definition of the statute, and, having thus found it, the executive officers of the court are to be directed to shut up and abate the place by taking possession of it; and, as though this were not sufficient security against the continuance of the business, they are to be required to destroy all the liquor found therein, and all other property used in maintaining the nuisance. It matters not whether they are of such a character as could be used in any other business, or be of value for any other purposes. No discretion is left in the judge or in the officer. These clauses appear to deprive one who owns a brewery and manufactures beer for sale, of property without due process of law. The destruction to be ordered is not as a forfeiture upon conviction of any offense, but merely because the legislature has so commanded. Assuming, which is not conceded, that the legislature, in the exercise of that undefined power called the "police power," may, without compensation to the owner, deprive him of the use of his brewery for the purposes for which it was constructed under the sanction of law, and for which alone it is valuable, I cannot see upon what principle, after closing a brewery, and thus putting an end to its use in the future for manufacturing spirits, it can order the destruction of the liquor already manufactured, which it admits by its legislation may be valuable for some purposes, and allows it to be sold for those purposes. Nor can I see how the protection of the health and morals of the people can require the destruction of property, like bottles and other utensils which may be used for many lawful purposes. It has heretofore been supposed to be an established principle that where there is a power to abate a nuisance, the abatement must be limited by the necessity, and no wanton or unnecessary injury be committed to the property or rights of individuals. Thus, if the nuisance consists in the use to which a building is put, the remedy is to stop such use, not to tear down or to demolish the building itself, or to destroy property found within it. The decision of the court, as it seems to me, reverses this principle. The supreme court of Kansas admits that the legislature, in destroying the values of such kinds of property, may have gone to the utmost verge of constitutional authority. In my opinion it has crossed the line which separates regulation from confiscation.

Section 1553 of the code of Iowa, as amended by the act of April 5, 1886 (Laws, c. 66), § 10, forbids any common carrier to bring within that State, for any person or corporation, intoxicating liquors from any other State or Territory, without first having been furnished with a certificate under the seal of the auditor of the county to which such liquor is to be transported, or is consigned, certifying that the consignee or person to whom the liquor is to be transported or delivered is authorized to sell intoxicating liquors. Section 1524 excepts from the operation of the law sales by the importer thereof of foreign intoxicating liquor, imported under the authority of the laws of the United States, provided that the liquor at the time of sale by the importer remains in the original casks or packages in which it was by him imported, and in quantities of not less than the quantities in which the laws of the United States require such liquors to be imported, and is sold by him in the original casks or packages and in said quantities only. Held, that § 1553, as amended in 1886, is void, being in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution granting to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States.[1]

Mr. Justice Matthews, delivering the opinion of the court, in the course of his argument, said, in substance: The provision in question (§ 1553, as amended in 1886) was adopted, not expressly for the purpose of regulating commerce between its citizens and those of other States, but as subservient to the general design of protecting the health and morals of its people, and the good order of the State, against the physical and moral evils resulting from the unrestricted manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. . . The point in judgment in the License Cases, 5 How. 504 (1847), was confined to the right of the States to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor after it had been brought within their territorial limits. The right to bring it within the States was not questioned; and the reasoning which justified the right to prohibit sales admitted, by implication, the right to introduce intoxicating liquor, as merchandise, from foreign countries or from other States, free from the control of the States and subject to the exclusive power of Congress over commerce. It cannot be doubted that the law of Iowa under examination, regarded as a rule for the transportation of merchandise, operates as a regulation of commerce. . . That law, while it professes to regulate the conduct of carriers engaged in transportation within the limits of the State, nevertheless materially affects, if allowed to operate, the conduct of such carriers, as respects both their rights and obligations, in every other State into or through which they pass in the prosecution of their business of inter-State transportation. The defendant is sued as a common carrier in Illinois, and the breach of duty alleged is a violation of the law of that State in refusing to transport goods which as a common carrier, by that law, it was bound to accept and carry. It interposes as a defense the law of Iowa which forbids the delivery of such goods within that State. Has the law of Iowa an extra-territorial force which does not belong to the law of Illinois? If the law of Iowa forbids the delivery, and the law of Illinois requires the transportation, which of the two shall prevail? How can the former make void the latter? In view of this necessary operation of the law of Iowa, if it be valid, the language of this court in the case of Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 488 (1877), is exactly in point, viz.: "We think it may safely be said that State legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon inter-State commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom, encroaches upon the exclusive power of Congress."

The statute of Iowa cannot be justified by classifying it as an inspection law which the States may pass (Constitution, Art. I, § 10). It has never been regarded as within the scope of an inspection law to forbid trade in respect to any article of commerce, irrespective of its condition and quality, merely on account of its intrinsic nature and the injurious consequences of its use or abuse.

For similar reasons the statute cannot be regarded as a regulation of quarantine, or a sanitary provision for the purpose of protecting the physical health of the community, or a law to prevent the introduction of disease,— all exercises of power not viewed as prohibited regulations of commerce.

For the purposes of its policy a State has legislative control, exclusive of Congress, within its territory of all matters of strictly internal concern. In order to protect its people from the evils of intemperance, it may prohibit the manufacture within its limits of intoxicating liquors. It may prohibit all domestic commerce in them between its own inhabitants, whether the articles are introduced from other States or from foreign countries. It may adopt any measures tending, even indirectly and remotely, to make the policy effective, until it passes the line of power delegated to Congress. It cannot, without the consent of Congress expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its own people and those of other States, in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be. This particular statute falls within this prohibition. It is essentially a regulation of commerce among the States, within any definition heretofore given to that term, or which can be given; and, although its motive and purpose are to perfect the policy of the State in protecting its citizens against the evils of intemperance, it is none the less a regulation of commerce. If it had extended its provisions so as to prohibit the introduction of all importations of intoxicating liquor produced abroad, no one would have doubted the nature of the provision as a regulation of foreign commerce. Its nature is not changed by its application to commerce among the States. Can it be supposed that, by omitting any express declarations on the subject, Congress has intended to submit to the States the decision of the question in each locality of what shall and what shall not be articles of traffic in the inter-State commerce of the country? If so, it has left to each State, according to its own caprice and arbitrary will, to discriminate for or against every article grown, produced, manufactured, or sold in any State, and sought to be introduced as an article of commerce into any other. . . The section of the statute in question is an attempt to exercise the jurisdiction of the State of Iowa over persons and property within the limits of other States. It seeks to prohibit their importation into its own limits, and is designed as a regulation for the conduct of commerce before the merchandise is brought to its border. It is not one of those local regulations designed to facilitate commerce; it is not an inspection law to secure the due quality and measure of a commodity; it is not a law to regulate or restrict the sale of an article deemed injurious to the health and morals of the community; it is not a regulation confined to the purely internal commerce of the State; it is not a restriction which only operates upon property after it has become mingled with and forms part of the mass of the property within the State. It is, on the other hand, a regulation directly affecting inter-State commerce in an essential and vital point. If authorized, in the present instance, upon the grounds and motives of the policy which have dictated it, the same reason would justify any and every other State regulation of inter-State commerce upon any grounds and reasons which might prompt in particular cases their adoption. It is, therefore, a regulation of that character which constitutes an unauthorized interference with the power given to Congress. If not in contravention of any positive legislation by Congress, it is nevertheless a breach and interruption of that liberty of trade which Congress ordains as the national policy, by willing that it shall be free from restrictive regulations.

[1] Bowman v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 473-500 (March 19, 1888), Matthews, Miller, Field, and Blatchford, JJ. Field, J., filed a concurring opinion, 500-9. Waite, C. J., Gray, and Harlan, JJ., dissented — opinion by Harlan, J., 509-24. Lamar, J., not having been present at the argument of the case, took no part in its decision. The plaintiffs — one of them a citizen of Iowa — applied to the board of supervisors of Marshall county, Iowa, for permission to buy and sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal, culinary, mechanical, and sacramental purposes, but their application was rejected. They then bought 5,000 barrels of beer in Chicago, and tendered them to the railroad company for transportation to Marshalltown, said county, without furnishing the required certificate — the company being a common carrier of merchandise from Chicago, Illinois, to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and under a duty to carry to all stations along its line merchandise entrusted to it for that purpose. The refusal of the company to transport the beer into Iowa, in violation of her laws, was the basis of the suit. The plaintiffs claimed damages upon the ground that they could have sold the beer in that State at an advance.

It may be argued, however, that a prohibition of the sale cannot be made effective except by preventing the introduction of the subject of sale; that, if its entrance into the State is permitted, traffic in it cannot be suppressed. But the right to prohibit sales, so far as conceded to the States, arises only after the act of transportation has terminated, because the sales which the State may forbid are of things within its jurisdiction. Its power over them does not begin to operate until they are brought within its limits. It might be very convenient and useful, in the execution of the policy of prohibition within the State, to extend the power of the State beyond its territorial limits. But such extra-territorial powers cannot be assumed upon such an implication. On the contrary, the nature of the case contradicts their existence; for, if they belong to one State, they belong to all, and cannot be exercised severally and independently. The attempt would necessarily produce that conflict and confusion which it was the very purpose of the Constitution, by its delegations of national power, to prevent. It is easier to think that the right of importation from abroad, and of transportation from one State to another, includes, by necessary implication, the right of the importer to sell in unbroken packages at the place where the transit terminates; for the very purpose and motive of that branch of commerce which consists in transportation is that other and consequent act of commerce which consists in the sale and exchange of the commodities transported. Such, indeed, was the point decided in the case of Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419 (1827), as to foreign commerce, with the express statement, in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, that the conclusion would be the same in a case of commerce among the States. But it is not necessary now to express an opinion upon the point because that question does not arise in the present case. The precise line which divides the transaction, so far as it belongs to foreign or inter-State commerce, from the internal and domestic commerce of the State, we are not now called upon to delineate. It is enough to say that the power to regulate or forbid the sale of a commodity, after it has been brought into the State, does not carry with it the power to prevent its introduction by transportation from another State.

Mr. Justice Harlan, delivering the opinion of the minority, in substance said: The decision of the majority is placed upon the broad ground that intoxicating liquors are merchantable commodities, or known articles of commerce; and that consequently the Constitution, by the mere grant to Congress of the power to regulate commerce, operates, in the absence of legislation, to establish unrestricted trade, among the States, in such commodities or articles. To this view we cannot assent. . . The decision, it seems to us, does not conform to the doctrines enunciated and adhered to in the cases decided heretofore, the last being Mugler's Case, and may impair, if it does not destroy, the power of a State to protect her people against the injurious consequences that are admitted to flow from a general use of intoxicating liquors. . . If, as the court decides, the Constitution gives the right to transport intoxicating liquors into Iowa from another State, and if that right carries with it, as an essential ingredient, authority in a consignee to sell or exchange such articles after they are so brought in, and while in his possession, in the original packages, the regulation forbidding sales of intoxicating liquor, within the State, for other than medicinal, mechanical, culinary, or sacramental purposes, and then only under a permit, will be of little practical value. In this view, any one, desiring to sell intoxicating liquors, need only arrange to have them delivered to him from some point in another State, in packages of varying sizes, as may suit customers; or he may erect his own manufacturing establishment or warehouse just across the Iowa line, in some State having a different public policy, and thence, with wagons, transport liquors into Iowa in original packages. If the State arraigns him for a violation of her laws, he may claim that, although such laws were enacted solely to protect the health and morals of the people, and to promote peace and good order among them, and although they are fairly adapted to accomplish those objects, yet the Constitution, without any action upon the part of Congress, secures to him the right to bring or receive from other States intoxicating liquors in original packages, and to sell them, while held by him in such packages, to all who choose to buy them. Thus, the mere silence of Congress upon the subject of trade among the States in intoxicating liquors is made to operate as a license to persons doing business in one State to jeopardize the health, the morals, and good order of another State, by flooding the latter with intoxicating liquors, against the expressed will of her people.

It is admitted that a State may prevent the introduction within her limits of goods infected with disease, or of cattle or provisions, which, from their condition, are unfit for human use or consumption; because, it is said, such articles are not merchantable or legitimate subjects of trade and commerce. But suppose the people of a State believe, upon reasonable grounds, that the general use of intoxicating liquors is dangerous to the public peace, the public health, and the public morals, what authority has Congress or the judiciary to review their judgment upon that subject, and compel them to submit to a condition of things which they regard as destructive of their happiness and the peace and good order of society? If, consistently with the Constitution, a State can protect her sound cattle by prohibiting altogether the introduction within her limits of diseased cattle,— as was decided in Hannibal & St. Joseph R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 471 (1877),— she ought not to be deemed disloyal to their Constitution when she seeks by similar legislation to protect her people and their homes against the introduction of articles, which are, in good faith, and not unreasonably, regarded by her citizens as "laden with infection" more dangerous to the public than diseased cattle, or than rags containing the germs of disease. It is not a satisfactory answer to these suggestions to say that if the State may thus outlaw the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and exclude them from her limits, she may adopt the same policy with reference to articles that confessedly have no necessary or immediate connection with the health, the morals, or the safety of the community, but are proper subjects of trade the world over. This possible abuse of legislative power was earnestly dwelt upon by the counsel in Mugler's Case. The same argument can be, as it often is, made in reference to powers that all concede to be vital to the public safety; but it does not disprove their existence. This court there said that the judicial tribunals were not to be misled by mere pretenses, and were under a solemn duty to look at the substance of things whenever it became necessary to inquire whether the legislature had transcended the limits of its authority; and, further, that it was difficult to perceive any ground for the judiciary to declare that the prohibition by a State of the manufacture or sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for general use as a beverage, is not fairly adapted to the end of protecting the community against the evils which confessedly result from the excessive use of ardent spirits. (123 U. S. 661–62.) In the same case the court sustained, without qualification, the authority of Kansas to declare, not only that places where liquors were manufactured or kept for sale, barter, or delivery, in violation of her statutes, should be deemed common nuisances, but to provide for the forfeiture, without compensation, of the intoxicating liquors found in such places, and the property used in maintaining such nuisances.

Now, can it be possible that the framers of the Constitution intended — whether Congress chose or not to act upon the subject — to withhold from a State authority to prevent the introduction into her midst of articles the manufacture of which, within her limits, she could prohibit, without impairing the Constitutional rights of her own people? If a State may declare a place where liquors are sold for use as a beverage a common nuisance, subjecting the keeper to fine and imprisonment, can her people be compelled to submit to the sale of such liquors when brought there from another State for that purpose? This court has often declared that the most important function of government was to preserve the public health, morals, and safety; that it could not divest itself of that power, nor, by contract, limit its exercise; and that even the Constitutional prohibition upon laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not restrict the power of the State to protect the health, the morals, or the safety of the community, as one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts. Does the mere grant of the power to regulate commerce among the States invest individuals of one State with the right, even without the express sanction of Congressional legislation, to introduce among the people of another State articles which, by statute, they have declared to be deleterious to their health, and dangerous to their safety? In our opinion, these questions should be answered in the negative. It is inconceivable that the well-being of any State is at the mercy of the liquor manufacturers of other States. These views are sustained by Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446 (1886), the judgment in which case the majority suggest is conclusive upon the issue in this case. The clear implication from the language used in the judgment in that case is that the law of Michigan would have been sustained if it had applied the same rule to the products (intoxicating liquors) of Michigan which it attempted to apply to the products of other States.

At the argument it was insisted that the contention of the plaintiffs was supported by Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 436 (1827), where the question was whether the legislature of a State could require an importer of foreign articles or commodities to take out a license before he should be permitted to sell a bale or package so imported. Among other things, it was said in the opinion that the right to sell articles imported from foreign countries is connected with the law permitting the importation, as an inseparable incident; observing, at the close of the opinion, that it supposed the principle laid down to apply equally to importations from a sister State. But from the whole opinion it was clear that the court referred to commerce in articles having no connection with the health, morals, or safety of the people, and that it had no purpose to qualify the explicit declaration in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 198 (1824), that the health laws of the States were a component part of that mass of legislation, the power to enact which remained with the States, because never surrendered to the general government. It was insisted, on behalf of Maryland, that the prohibition of State imposts or duties upon imports ceases the instant goods enter the country; otherwise, it was argued, the importer "may introduce articles — as, gunpowder — which endanger a city into the midst of its population; he may introduce articles which endanger the public health, and the power of self-preservation is denied." To this Chief Justice Marshall replied: "The power to direct the removal of gunpowder is a branch of the police power which unquestionably remains, and ought to remain, with the States. . . The removal or destruction of infectious or unsound articles is undoubtedly an exercise of that power [to pass inspection laws], and forms an express exception to the prohibition we are considering. Indeed, the laws of the United States expressly recognize the health laws of a State." This we understand to have been a distinct re-adjudication that the police power remains with the States, and is not overridden by the national Constitution.

The purpose of committing to Congress the regulation of commerce was to insure the equality of commercial facilities, by preventing one State from building up her own trade at the expense of sister States. But that purpose is not defeated when a State employs appropriate means to prevent the introduction into her limits of what she lawfully forbids her own people from making. It certainly was not meant to give citizens of other States greater rights in Iowa than Iowa's own people have. But if this be not a sound interpretation of the Constitution; if intoxicating liquors are entitled to the same protection as ordinary merchandise entering into commerce among the States; if Congress, under the power to regulate commerce, may, in its discretion, permit or prohibit commerce in intoxicating liquors; and if, therefore, State police power, as the health, morals, and safety of the people may be involved in its proper exercise, can be overborne by national regulations of commerce,— the former decisions of this court would seem to show that such laws of the States are valid, even where they affect commercial intercourse among the States, until displaced by Federal legislation, or until they come in direct conflict with some act of Congress. . . This principle has been announced in many cases decided by this court — all of them cases of the erection of bridges and other structures within the limits of States, and under their authority, across public navigable waters of the United States. They were held not forbidden by the Constitution, although the structures actually interfered with inter-State commerce.

Perhaps the language of this court — all the judges concurring — which most directly bears upon the question is found in County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 701 (1880), re-affirming Willson v. Marsh Company, 2 Pet. 250 (1829). It was there said: "In the License Cases, 5 How. 504 (1847), there was great diversity of views in the opinions of the judges upon the operation of the grant of the commercial power in the absence of Congressional legislation; but the decision reached was confirmatory of the doctrine that legislation of Congress is essential to prohibit the actions of the States upon the subject thus considered." This language is significant in view of the fact that in one of the License Cases — Peirce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. 557, 578 — the question was as to the validity of an act of that State, under which Peirce was convicted and fined for having sold, without license, a barrel of gin which he had purchased in Boston, transported to Dover, New Hampshire, and there sold in the identical cask in which it had been transported from Massachusetts. In harmony with these principles, the court affirmed at the present term, in Smith v. State, 124 U. S. 465 (1888), the validity of a statute of Alabama making it unlawful for a locomotive engineer, even when his train is employed in inter-State commerce, to operate a train of cars upon a railroad in that State, used for the transportation of persons or freight, without first having obtained a license, after examination, from a board of engineers. This court held that the statute in question was "an act of legislation within the scope of the admitted power reserved to the States to regulate the relative rights and interests of persons within its territorial jurisdiction, intended to operate so as to secure the public safety of personal property;" and that, "so far as it affects transactions of commerce among the States, it does so only indirectly, incidentally, and remotely, and not so as to burden or impede them; and in the particulars on which it touches those transactions at all it is not in conflict with any express enactment of Congress on the subject, nor contrary to any intention of Congress to be presumed from its silence."

It would seem that if the Constitution does not, by its own force, displace or annul a State law, authorizing the construction of bridges or dams across navigable waters, thereby preventing the passage of vessels engaged in inter-State commerce, the same construction ought not to be held to annul or displace a law of one of the States which, by its operation, forbids the bringing within her limits, from other States, articles which that State, in the most solemn manner, has declared to be injurious to the health, morals, and safety of her people. The silence of Congress upon the subject of inter-State commerce, as affected by the police laws of the State, enacted in good faith to promote the public health, morals, and safety, and to that end prohibiting traffic, within her limits, in intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, ought to have at least as much effect as the silence of Congress with reference to physical obstructions placed, under the authority of a State, in a navigable water of the United States. The reserved power of the States to guard the health, morals, and safety of their people is more vital to the existence of society than their power in respect to trade and commerce having no possible connection with those subjects.

October 22, 1888, the Supreme Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Lamar, in the case of Kidd v. Pearson, decided that the statute of Iowa, under which it had been held by the supreme court of that State [1] that a person had no right to manufacture liquors within the State for exportation to other States, was not in conflict with the power to regulate commerce vested exclusively in Congress.[2]

See further POLICE, 2. Compare OLEOMARGARINE; OPTION, Local; MORALS; SUMPTUARY.

[1] Pearson et al. v. International Distillery et al., 72 Iowa, 348 (Sept. 1887).

[2] To be reported in 128 U. S. See ADDENDA.

PROLICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

PROMISE. A declaration, verbal or written, made by one person to another for a good or valuable consideration, by which he binds himself to do or to forbear from doing some act, and gives to the other a legal right to demand and enforce fulfillment.[1]

Refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reason for it or to the duties of other parties. See PROPOSAL.

"Agreement" is seldom applied to specialties, and "contract" is generally confined to simple contracts.[2] See those terms.

Promisor. He who makes a promise. Promisee. He to whom a promise is made.

Promissory. Involving a promise; executory: as, a promissory — note, oath of office, representation, qq. v.

Concurrent promises. Where the acts to be performed are simultaneous.

Dependent promises. When the agreements go to the whole of the consideration on both sides; when one promise is made the consideration of another. Independent promises. To the extent that the agreements do not go to a part of the consideration on both sides.[3]

Express promise. A promise made in express terms,— openly stated. Implied promise. Is inferred from the acts or position of a person. See RAISE.

Mutual promises. Promises exchanged at the same time, the one in consideration of the other.

A promise on the part of the plaintiff to do something of advantage in law to the defendant, and on the part of the defendant to do something of advantage in law to the plaintiff — one promise being the consideration of the other.[4]

Whether one promise be the consideration for another, or whether the performance, and not the mere promise, be the consideration, is to be determined by the intention and meaning of the parties, as collected from the instrument, and the application of good sense and right reason to each particular case.[5]

One dependent promise is a condition precedent to the other. The breach of an independent promise may be paid for in damages. Either party to a concurrent promise may sue the other for a breach of the contract, on showing that he was ready to do his part, or was prevented from doing it by the other party.[1]

New promise. A promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations.

The promise by which a discharged debt is revived must be clear, distinct, and unequivocal. It may, at the same time, be either absolute or conditional. If the latter, the occurrence of the condition must be averred. The rule is different in regard to a debt barred by lapse of time. Acts and declarations recognizing the present existence of the debt have been held to take a case out of the statute.[2]

The expression of an intention to pay the barred debt is not sufficient. There must be a promise before the debtor is bound. An intention is but the purpose a man forms in his own mind; a "promise" is an express undertaking or agreement to carry that purpose into effect, and must be express, in contradistinction to a promise implied from an acknowledgment of the justness or existence of the debt. The promise must be clear, distinct, unequivocal.[3]

"I will send you the first spare 'V' or 'X' I have," does not fairly import a promise to pay absolutely five or ten dollars.[4]

See further ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 1; PAYMENT, Part.

Original and collateral promise. Expressions used in speaking of liability under the statute of frauds "to answer for the debt or default of another:" the former designating the obligation of the principal debtor; the latter, the obligation of the person undertaking to answer for the debt. "Original" also characterizes any new promise to pay an antecedent debt of another.[5]

When the object of the promise is a direct benefit to the promisor which he did not enjoy before, and the promise to pay another's debt is a mere incident, the former is not within the statute. Within the statute is a promise, where the main object is to obtain the release of the person or the property of the debtor, or other forbearance or benefit to him, though a new consideration moves to the promisor.[6]

Cases in which a promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time, and be-

[1] [Newcomb v. Clark, 1 Denio, 228-29 (1845), Jewett, J.

[2] [1 Pars. Contr. 6. See 3 Bl. Com. 158.

[3] [3 Pars. Contr. 677, 528; Dermott v. Jones, 23 How. 881 (1859).

[4] Schweider v. Lang, 29 Minn. 256 (1882), Berry, J.

[5] Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 27 (1877), Clifford, J.

[1] 2 Pars. Contr. 677. On implied promises, see 19 Cent. Law J. 462-65, 486-88 (1884), cases; promises enforcible by strangers, 18 id. 136 (1884), cases.

[2] Allen v. Ferguson, 18 Wall. 3 (1873), Hunt, J.

[3] Shockey v. Mills, 71 Ind. 292 (1880), Worden, J.; Hubbard v. Farrell, 87 id. 217 (1882); Denny v. Marrett, 29 Minn. 361 (1882); Parker v. Butterworth, 46 N. J. L. 246-47 (1884), cases; Shepherd v. Thompson, 122 U. S. 234-39 (1887), cases; R. S. § 955: 14 F. R. 390, 392, cases.

[4] Bigelow v. Norris, 141 Mass. 15 (1886); Elwell v. Cumner, 136 id. 102 (1883); Dennan v. Gould, 141 id. 16 (1886). See generally 27 Cent. Law J. 431 (1888), cases.

[5] [Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 414-33 (1860), cases, Comstock, C. J.; 2 Pars. Contr. 7, 9.

[6] Furbish v. Goodnow, 98 Mass. 297 (1867), cases, Gray, C. J.

comes an essential ground of credit given to the principal debtor, are generally within the statute; so, also, cases in which the collateral agreement is subsequent to the execution of the debt, and not the inducement to it. But whenever the main purpose of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business end of his own, involving benefit to himself or damage to the other party, his promise is not within the statute, although in form and effect to pay the debt of another.[1]

The person for whose benefit a binding promise to another is made, unless only incidentally benefited, may maintain an action on it against the promisor.[2] Compare GUARANTY.

PROMOTER. 1. A person who, in a popular or penal action (q. v.), prosecuted offenders in the name of the crown and of himself.

He was a common informer; he promoted charges.[3]

2. A person who, by his active endeavors, assists in procuring the formation of a company and the subscription to its shares.[4]

Not a term of law, but of business, usefully summing up in a single word a number of business operations, familiar to the commercial world, by which a company is generally brought into existence.[5]

The promoters of a corporation secured subscriptions to its stock without informing purchasers that they were to have stock for nothing. Held, that the promoters were fiduciaries, with no right to derive advantage over other stockholders without full disclosure, and that the shares of stock should be transferred, and profits refunded, to the corporation.[6]

PROMULGATE.[7] 1. To publish or make known a law after its enactment. Compare PRESCRIPTION, 1.

2. To announce officially or publicly: as, to promulgate a postal convention, a treaty, a state paper.[8] See STATUTE.

PRONOUNCE. See PASS, 4.

PRONOUNS. See BLANK, 2.

The use of "he" in an instrument, in referring to a person whose Christian name is designated by an initial, is not conclusive that the person is a male. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the person intended is a female.[9]

[1] Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 43 (1859), cases, Clifford, J.; Wilson v. Hentges, 29 Minn. 104-5 (1882), cases.

[2] Burton v. Larkin, 36 Kan. 249-50 (1887), cases.

[3] See Trench, Glossary, 160-61.

[4] Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 545.

[5] Whaley Bridge Printing Co. v. Green, L. R., 5 Q. B. D. 111 (1879), Bowen, J. See at length 16 Am. Law Rev. 981-95 (1882), cases; Thomp. Liab. Officers, 219; 2 Lindl. Partn. 580; 3 Ap. Cas. 1218.

[6] Chandler v. Bacon, 30 F. R. 540 (1887), cases.

[7] L. promulgare, to publish.

[8] See 1 Bl. Com. 45; Aust. Jur., Lect. 38; 17 La. An. 390.

[9] Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38 (1886).

PROOF. "Evidence" and "proof" are often used indifferently, as synonymous; but the latter is applied, by the most accurate logicians, to the effect of evidence, and not to the medium by which truth is established.[1]

A sufficient reason for the truth of a judicial proposition.[2]

This truth is "formal," as distinguished from "real." The object of sound jurisprudence is to render formal truth the reflex of real,—a result which can only be approximately reached; no witness can detail all he saw; no instrument can be framed so as to exclude all doubt as to the intention; and a party may even refuse to explain his conduct.[3]

"Proof" means the reasons or grounds on which a proposition may be maintained; also, conviction; and, also, the instrument or means which tend to lead the mind to a conclusion.[3]

"Evidence" includes the reproduction of the admissions of parties and of facts relevant to the issue. "Proof" includes, in addition, presumptions of law and of fact and citations of law.[4]

Judicial proof is not a matter of arbitrary rule. Its principles are drawn from the experience and observation of men and should be applied as they are by men in general.[5]

Full proof. Evidence which satisfies the mind of the truth of the fact in dispute, to the entire exclusion of every reasonable doubt.[6]

Preliminary proof; proof of loss. See Loss, 2.

Proofs. Evidence given in proof at a trial.[7]

The aggregate of evidence adduced by one or both parties.

The obligation to establish by evidence an allegation of fact is called the burden of proof (onus probandi), and often, simply, "the burden."

"Burden of proof" is properly applied only to a party affirming some fact essential to the support of his case. In this sense it never shifts from side to side during the trial. Loosely used, it is confounded with the "weight of evidence," which often shifts as

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 1; Schloss v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 203 (1866); Perry v. The Dubuque Southwestern R. Co., 36 Iowa, 106 (1872).

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 1, 2.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 3.

[4] Lindley v. Dakin, 13 Ind. 389 (1859).

[5] Bell v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 699 (1887).

[6] Kane v. Hibernia Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 450 (1876); Starkie, Ev. *617.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 367.

facts and presumptions appear and are overcome.[1]

The principle is that he who affirms the existence of a given state of facts must prove it: a rule adopted because the negative does not admit of the direct and simple proof of which the affirmative is capable.[2]

The burden of proof resting on a plaintiff is coextensive only with the legal proposition upon which his case rests. It applies to every fact which is essential to or necessarily involved in that proposition; not to facts relied upon in defense to establish an independent proposition, however inconsistent with that upon which the plaintiff's case depends. It is for the defendant to furnish the proof of such facts; and, when he has done so, the burden is upon the plaintiff, not to disprove these particular facts, nor the propositions which they tend to establish, but to maintain the proposition upon which his own case rests, notwithstanding such controlling testimony, and upon the whole evidence in the case. The distinction may be narrow, but it is real, and often decisive.[3]

He who sets up another's tort must prove it. Contributory negligence is to be proven by the defendant. In a suit for non-performance of a contract the plaintiff proves the non-performance. The rule is altered when the plaintiff sues in tort; as, in a contract against a bailee, in which case it is sufficient to prove the bailment. If one alleges, he must prove: causes, want of good faith, non-legality. License and formalities are proved by the party to whom they are essential; crime, beyond a reasonable doubt.[4]

The burden of proof rests upon the party against whom judgment would be given, were no proof to be offered on either side.[5]

In criminal cases the burden of proof never shifts, but is upon the government throughout.[6]

The weight of evidence shifts from side to side according to the varying strength of the proofs.[7]

See ALLEGATION; DEMONSTRATION, 1; DOUBT, Reasonable; EVIDENCE; NEGATIVE; NEGLIGENCE; OFFER, 2; PRESUMPTION; PROBABILITY; REDUNDANCY; TEND; VARIANCE. Compare PROBATE.

Proof-sheets. See MAIL, 2.

PROPER.[8] 1. Own; one's own: as, proper — costs, county, debt, goods and chattels, person.

2. Appropriate, q. v.; well adapted; suitable; fit; sufficient: as, proper — action, county, court, form of decree or judgment, legislation. See NECESSARY.

The proper instructions under which the issue in a contested will case is made up and tried are such instructions as the law of the case and the testimony before the jury make pertinent.[1]

PROPERTY.[2] That which is one's own; something that belongs or inheres exclusively in an individual person.

1. In an abstract sense, ownership, title, estate, right. 2. In a concrete sense, the thing itself which is owned.

The right of property is that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the rights of every other individual in the universe. The "absolute right of private property" consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all one's acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the law of the land.[3]

Standing alone, the term includes everything that is the subject of ownership.[4]

Every species of thing in which there may be ownership, and which may be made available in the payment of judgments.[5]

A nomen generalissimum; extends to every species of valuable right and interest, including real and personal property, easements, franchises and other incorporeal hereditaments.[6]

The word "property" alone may include both realty and personalty, unless a different meaning is apparent from the context, as the Revised Statutes of Texas, art. 3140, provide.[7]

May refer to goods and chattels, on the principle of noscitur a sociis.[8]

Applied to land, comprehends every species of title, inchoate or incomplete. Embraces rights which lie in contract; those which are executory, as well as those which are executed.[9]

---

[1] Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 71 (1885), Loomis, J.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 5 Pet. 148; 6 Del. 95; 52 Ga. 180; 119 Ill. 357; 2 Gray, 132, 527.

[3] Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 490 (1868), Wells, J.; Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 357 (1886).

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 358-71, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. Ch. III. As to a liquor license, see Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 674 (1887).

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 357.

[6] Commonwealth v. McKee, 1 Gray, 62-65 (1854), cases; Commonwealth v. Rogers, 7 Metc. 501 (1844).

[7] Central Bridge Corporation v. Butler, 2 Gray, 132 (1854). On proof and allegation, see 8 Va. Law J. 65 (1884); on right to begin and reply, 25 Cent. Law J. 171, 458-88 (1887), cases.

[8] F. propre; L. proprius, q. v.

[1] Wagner v. Ziegler, 44 Ohio St. 69 (1887).

[2] F. propreté; L. proprietas, ownership: proprius, q. v.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 139; 2 id. 2; 102 Ill. 77.

[4] Stanton v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 449 (1857), Hinman, J.

[5] Baker v. State, ex rel. Mills, 109 Ind. 56 (1886), Zollars, J.

[6] Boston, &c. R. Co. v. Salem, &c. R. Co., 2 Gray, 36 (1854), Shaw, C. J.

[7] Moffett v. Moffett, 67 Tex. 644 (1887).

[8] Harwood v. City of Lowell, 4 Cush. 313 (1849).

[9] [Soulard v. United States, 4 Pet. *512 (1830), Marshall, C. J.; 9 id. 133; 10 id. 329.

The mere possession of real estate is constantly treated as property.[1]

The word includes choses in action as well as choses in possession — everything that goes to make up one's wealth or estate.[2]

The right to take and prosecute an appeal is property, within the meaning of a statute against extorting property by threats.[3]

Everything which has an exchangeable value is property. The right of property includes the power to dispose of it according to the will of the owner. Labor is property.[4]

That only is property which is recognized as such by the law. When, then, an article, either intrinsically or by use, becomes prejudicial, the law may withdraw from it the attribute of property; as, in the law of nuisances per se.[5] See PROHIBITION, 2.

8. The single word "property" is used as a plea in actions of replevin when a defendant claims that the right of property lies exclusively in him.

In that case the defendant gives an obligation called a "claim-property bond," which is substituted for the property.[6] See REPLEVIN, 1.

Absolute property. A full and complete title to and dominion over personalty. Qualified property. A temporary or special interest, liable to be totally destroyed by the happening of a particular event.[7]

The interest which can be acquired in external objects or things is "property." The things themselves are not, in a true sense, property, but they constitute its foundation and material, and the idea of property springs out of the connection, or control, or interest which, according to law, may be acquired in or over them. This interest is "absolute" when a thing is objectively and lawfully appropriated by one to his own use in exclusion of all others; and "limited" or "qualified" when the control acquired falls short of that. To entitle one to bring an action for an injury to any specific object or thing, he must have a property therein of one kind or the other. An administrator has no property in the body of his intestate.[1]

General property. The general right which one person has in a thing. Special property. Some temporary right of control, until a common purpose is accomplished.[2]

In a contract of bailment the bailor has the general property, and the bailee a special property, in the thing bailed; and an officer has a special property in goods levied upon.

Property in possession "absolute" is where a man has, solely and exclusively, the right, and also the occupation, of any movable chattels; so that it cannot be transferred from him, or cease to be his, without his own act or default. "Qualified," "limited," or "special" property is such as is not in its nature permanent, but may sometimes subsist and at other times not subsist.[3]

Private property. Things which belong to an individual or private person. Public property. Anything that belongs to the government — local, State, or national. See LAND, Public; TERRITORY, 2.

The power of the state over private property is well defined: it may take the property for a public use, upon compensation being made or secured. It may take by taxation. It may control the use so as to secure equal enjoyment. It may destroy it to arrest a conflagration or the ravages of a pestilence, or to prevent other calamity under an immediate and overwhelming necessity.[2] See COMPENSATION, 3; POLICY, Public.

Private property becomes "clothed with a public interest" when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest to that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use. In this category is the business of a common carrier, an innkeeper, a warehouseman, miller, ferryman, bridge-keeper, turnpike company, and the like.[3]

Real property. Consists of such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable; as, lands, tenements, and hereditaments of all kinds, which are not annexed to the person, nor can be moved from the place in which they subsist. Personal property. All movable chattels and things thereunto incident; property which may attend a man's person wherever he goes. Mixed prop-

---

[1] King v. Gotz, 70 Cal. 240 (1886), approving Soulard v. United States, ante.

[2] Carlton v. Carlton, 72 Me. 116 (1881); Ide v. Harwood, 30 Minn. 195 (1883); Vaughan v. Murfreesboro, 96 N. C. 317 (1887).

[3] People v. Codman, 57 Cal. 564 (1881).

[4] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 127 (1873), Swayne, J., dissenting; Re Jacobs, 33 Hun, 374, 379 (1884).

[5] Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 315-16; Fisher v. McGirr, 1 Gray, 27 (1854).

See also, generally, 4 McLean, 603; 34 Ala. 239; 2 Ark. 299; 2 Cal. 289; 9 id. 143; 31 id. 637; 35 Ga. 294; 102 Ill. 77; 9 Ind. 202; 34 La. An. 497; 7 Cush. 53; 51 N. H. 511; 33 N. J. L. 561; 1 N. Y. 24; 13 id. 397; 24 id. 384; 86 id. 268; 84 id. 565; 91 id. 5; 1 Ohio St. 662; 36 Wis. 155; 17 F. R. 116, 118.

[6] See 1 Wall. Jr. 327; 25 Pa. 197; 52 id. 484; 65 id. 105; 93 id. 221; 2 T. & H. § 1737.

[7] [2 Kent, 347

[1] [Griffith v. Charlotte, &c. R. Co., 23 S. C. 25 (1885), Simpson, C. J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 388, 391.

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 145, 126, 130 (1876), Field, J

erty. Partakes of the characters of realty and personalty; as, a leasehold.[1]

When the term "property" is applied to lands, all titles are embraced, legal or equitable, perfect or imperfect.[2]

Personal property has no locality. The law of the owner's domicil determines the validity of a transfer thereof, unless there is some law of the country, where it is found, to the contrary.[3] In a qualified sense, it accompanies the owner wherever he goes, and he may deal with it and dispose of it according to the law of his domicil. If he dies intestate, that law, wherever the property may be situated, governs its disposal and fixes the rights and shares of the distributees. Such property is taxable where it has its actual situs.[4]

The maxim that personal property follows the person of the owner is but a legal fiction, invented for useful purposes, and must yield whenever the purposes of convenience or justice make it necessary to ascertain the fact concerning the situs. In cases of attachment and for purposes of taxation, the maxim is constantly disregarded.[5]

The power of a State to regulate the tenure of real property within her limits, and the modes of its acquisition and transfer, and the rules of descent, and the extent to which a testamentary disposition may be exercised, is undoubted. This follows from her sovereignty within her limits, as to all matters as to which jurisdiction has not been transferred to the Federal government. Control over realty would be foreign to the purpose for which the Federal government was created, and embarrass the landed interests of the States.[6]

At common law, every corporation has, as an incident to its existence, the power to acquire, hold, and convey realty, except as restrained by its charter or act of parliament. And so, also, as to personalty.[7]

See ABANDON, 1; CAPITAL, 2; CAPTION; CHATTEL; COMMODITY; CONCEAL, 1; CONDITION, Real; CONFUSION; CONVERSION, 2; DESCENT; DEVISE; DISTRIBUTION, 2; EFFECTS; ESTATE; FIND, 1; FIXTURE; IMPROVE; INCOME; INSURANCE; INTEREST, 2; INVENTORY; INVOICE; MONEY; MORTGAGE; NUISANCE; OUSTER; OWNER; PARTNERSHIP; PERISHABLE; PERPETUITY, 2; PLEDGE; POSSESSION; PREMISES, 3; PRESCRIPTION, 3; PROCESS, 1, Due; PURCHASE, 2; PURPRESTURE; REALTY; REPLEVIN, 1; RESULTED; RES, 2; RESTITUTION; RULE, 3; SALE; SEPARATE, 2; TAX, 2; TIMBER; TITLE, 1; TRADE; USE; USUS; UTERE, Sic, etc.; VALUE; VEST; WILL, 2.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 144; 2 id. 16; 3 Law Q. Rev. 406 (1887); 106 Mass. 585.

[2] Hornsby v. United States, 10 Wall. 242 (1869), Field, J.; Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 192 (1885).

[3] Black v. Zacharie, 3 How. 514 (1845), Story, J.

[4] St. Louis v. Ferry Co., 11 Wall. 430 (1870), cases, Swayne, J.; Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 610 (1883); 22 Cent. Law J. 7-14 (1886), cases.

[5] Dundee Mortgage Co. v. School District, 19 F. R. 909 (1884), cases.

[6] United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 320 (1876), Field, J.

[7] Jones v. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 U. S. 625 (1879); Graham v. La Crosse, &c. R. Co., 102 id. 161 (1880); Page v. Heineberg, 40 Vt. 85 (1868), cases: 94 Am. Dec. 381-87, cases; 2 Bl. Com. 256.

PROPONENT. See PROPOUND.

PROPOSAL. When one person signifies to another his willingness to do or to abstain from doing anything, with a view to obtaining the assent of that other to such act or abstinence.[1]

When the person to whom the proposal is made signifies his assent thereto, the proposal is said to be accepted. A proposal when accepted becomes a promise. The person making the proposal is called the "promisor," the person accepting, the "promisee." Every promise, and every set of promises forming the consideration for each other, constitutes an agreement. An agreement enforceable by law is a contract.[1] See OFFER, 1.

PROPOSITUS. L. Put forward; proposed: the person from whom descent is reckoned.[2] See ANCESTOR.

PROPOUND.[3] To bring forward; to proffer for judicial action; to propose as genuine: as, to propound a will for probate. See ARTICULATELY.

Proponent; propounder. He who offers for proof, before a court of probate, a writing purporting to be a will.

PROPRIA. See PROPRIUS.

PROPRIETOR.[4] 1. Owner.

In the copyright laws, the representative of an artist or author who might himself obtain a copyright.[5]

From the act of 1790 down to 1870, there could be no "proprietor" except the owner of the work of a citizen or resident author, including a transferee of such resident's right of copyright. When, therefore, in the act of 1870, the word "proprietor" is found used, for the first time, in connection with the words "author, inventor, designer," as a person to whom a copyright may be granted, it must be construed, if possible, in harmony with the inflexible policy and intent of the copyright law up to that date, and held to be used in the sense in which the word had always been used in our copyright law, viz., as meaning the lawful owner and representative, whether by assignment, employment, death, or other lawful succession, of the exclusive rights of some native or resident author or artist only. The proprietor of a native work is intended.[6] See PRINT.

Proprietary. Belonging to ownership; belonging or pertaining to a proprietor — one who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything, whether in possession or not; an

[1] [Pollock, Contr. *6, quoting Indian (India) Contract Act, 1872.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 224; 5 Pa. 166.

[3] L. pro-ponere, to put forward, propose.

[4] L. proprius, q. v.

[5] Yuengling v. Schile, 20 Blatch. 459, 461-62 (1883), Brown, J.

owner; relating to a certain owner or proprietor.[1]

2. A person in possession; a manager, or operator.

A law imposing a penalty upon the "proprietors" of a railroad, for negligence causing death, applies to a corporation owning and operating a road.[2]

PROPRIUS. L. One's own; individual.

Propria persona. In his own person; personally. Abbreviated p. p.

Applied to an appearance made, a pleading filed, or other thing done in court by a party "in person."

Proprio vigore. By its own force; intrinsically. The same as ex proprio vigore.

State rules of practice have no efficacy, proprio vigore, upon the United States courts. They must first be adopted.[3]

When judgment is affirmed by an appellate court, the sureties, proprio vigore, become liable to the same extent as the principal obligor.[4]

See under BONA, 2; INJURIA.

PROPTER. L. On account of; by reason of; owing to; for.

Propter affectum. Because of favorable inclination.

Propter defectum. For incompetency.

Propter delictum. For criminal conduct. See CHALLENGE, 4.

Propter impotentiam. On account of helplessness. See ANIMAL.

Propter privilegium. By virtue of special exemption. See ANIMAL.

PROSECUTE.[5] To carry on a judicial proceeding; in particular, a proceeding of a criminal nature.

Prosecute with effect. To carry on, with due diligence, to a final issue or judgment, and without fraud or unnecessary delay: as, to prosecute an appeal, or a writ of error.[6]

The condition to prosecute a replevin bond "with effect" is to be construed as meaning with success, or to a successful termination. The condition is broken by a dismissal of the action.[7]

Prosecution. 1. The act of conducting any judicial proceeding; also, such proceeding itself.

2. Specifically, a suit in a criminal court.

3. The informant or complainant in a penal or criminal proceeding, and his counsel.

The manner of formal accusation of crime, which is by presentment, indictment, or information.[1]

A criminal proceeding at the suit of the government.[2]

Criminal prosecution. A prosecution in a court of justice, in the name of the government, against one or more individuals accused of crime.[3]

In the provision that "in all prosecutions the accused shall have a speedy trial," the reference is to criminal prosecutions for violation of the laws of the State, not to prosecutions for violating city ordinances.[4]

Malicious prosecution. A prosecution on some charge of crime, which is willful, wanton, or reckless, or against the prosecutor's sense of duty and right, or for ends he knows or is bound to know are wrong and against the dictates of public policy.[5]

"Malicious" is not used in the sense often ascribed to it. There may exist ill-will, malevolence, spite, a spirit of revenge, or a purpose to injure without cause; but not necessarily so.[6]

When the general issue is pleaded, the plaintiff must prove: the fact of the prosecution; that the defendant was the prosecutor or instigator; that the proceedings were finally determined in favor of the accused; that the charge was unfounded; that it was made without probable cause; and that the defendant was actuated by malice. Malice alone is not sufficient, as a person actuated by the plainest malice may nevertheless prefer a well-founded accusation, and have a justifiable reason for the prosecution of the charge.[6]

In trespass against a collector of revenue for a wrongful seizure, the sole question is probable cause.[7]

Malice and the want of probable cause must both concur. The existence of malice is always for the jury. The question of probable cause is for the court, on the facts found. Malice may be inferred from the want of probable cause, but the want of probable cause cannot be inferred from any degree of even express malice. Failure in a suit is not evidence of either malice or want of legal cause.[8]

---

[1] Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U. S. 487 (1886): The Imperial, Webster's, and Worcester's Dictionaries; Duty Laws, R. S. § 2504, Sched. M. p. 480.

[2] Commonwealth v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 11 Cush. 512, 516 (1853).

[3] The Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall. 413 (1869).

[4] 101 U. S. 15; 1 Black, 266; 86 Pa. 127.

[5] L. prosequi, q. v.

[6] Kasson v. Brocker, 47 Wis. 87-88 (1879), Taylor, J.

[7] Boom v. St. Paul Foundery, &c. Co., 33 Minn. 254 (1885), cases, Dickinson, J.; 101 U. S. 15; 7 Conn. 436; 5 C. & B. 284; 8 M. & W. 477.

[1] [4 Bl. Com. 301.

[2] Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 269 (1879), Strong, J.

[3] Harger v. Thomas, 44 Pa. 130 (1862): 1 Chitty, Cr. L.; State v. Williams, 34 La. An. 1199 (1882); 30 Kan. 763; 3 A. K. Marsh. 74.

[4] State v. City of Topeka, 36 Kan. 87-88 (1886), cases.

[5] Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 229 (1878), Graves, J.

[6] Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 24 How. 549-50 (1860), Clifford, J.

[7] Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 645 (1878), Hunt, J.

[8] Stewart v. Sonneborn, 98 U. S. 192-96 (1878), cases. Strong, J. See further McCarthy v. De Armitt (Pittsburgh Riot, July, 1877), 99 Pa. 63 (1881), cases; Jones v Jones, 71 Cal. 89 (1886); Neall v. Hart, 115 Pa. 354 (1887):

Legal malice is made out by showing that the proceeding was instituted from any improper or wrongful motive; it is not essential that actual malevolence or corrupt design be shown.[1]

The criminal prosecution must have terminated — by a verdict of not guilty, by an ignoring of the bill, by the entry of a nolle prosequi, or by a discharge of the accused from bail or imprisonment.[2]

No action lies to recover damages for the prosecution of a civil suit, however unfounded, where there has been no actual interference with either the person or the property of the defendant.[3]

See CAUSE, Probable; CRIME; INDICTMENT; MALICE; SUSPICION, 3.

Prosecutor. He who carries on or maintains any criminal proceeding. Prosecutrix. The feminine form of the Latin word.

Public prosecutor. An officer of government, as the attorney-general, or a district or county attorney, whose duty it is to conduct criminal proceedings on behalf of the people. See ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

PROSEQUI. L. To pursue: sue, prosecute.

Nolle prosequi. To not wish to prosecute. See NOLLE, Prosequi.

Non prosequitur. He does not prosecute. Said of a judgment in a civil action for some default in the plaintiff, as, a failure to file a declaration or other pleading. Spoken of, briefly, as a non pros., and the plaintiff is said to be "nonpros'd."[4] Compare NONSUIT.

PROSPECT. See LANDSCAPE; LIGHT.

PROSPECTIVE. See DAMAGES; RETROSPECTIVE; STATUTE.

PROSPECTUS. The purpose of a prospectus of an intended company is merely to invite persons to become allottees of the shares, or original stockholders in the company.

A prospectus of an intended company ought not to misrepresent actual and material facts, or to conceal facts material to be known, the misrepresentation or concealment of which may improperly influence and mislead the reader; for if he is thereby deceived into becoming an allottee of shares, and, in consequence, suffers loss, he may proceed against those who thus misled him.[1]

PROSTITUTE. A female given to indiscriminate lewdness for gain.[2]

But incontinence with one or two may suffice.[3]

A woman who is unchaste, who has surrendered herself to illicit sexual intercourse with men.[4]

Common prostitute. A public prostitute, who makes a business of selling the use of her person to the male sex for the purpose of illicit intercourse.[4]

A woman may be a prostitute and have illicit connection with one man only; but, to be a "common" prostitute, her lewdness must be more general and indiscriminate.[4]

Prostitution. 1. In its most general sense, the act of setting one's self up for sale, or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power: as, the prostitution of talents or abilities, the prostitution of the press, etc. 2. In a more restricted sense, the act or practice of a female offering her body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men; the common lewdness of a female.[5]

Not defined at common law; offenses of the nature not being punishable by common-law tribunals. The definitions of Walker, Webster, and Johnston refer to the act of permitting illicit intercourse for hire, an indiscriminate intercourse, or what is deemed "public" prostitution: common, indiscriminate, sexual intercourse, in distinction from sexual intercourse confined exclusively to one individual. The word has been used in a more loose and general sense.[6]

While the testimony of prostitutes is to be closely scrutinized, credit is not to be withheld if the testimony appears to be worthy of confidence.[7] See ABDUCTION; BAWD.

PROTECTION. See ASSAULT; DEFENSE, 1.

"Nor shall any State . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."[8]

By "equal protection of the laws" is meant equal security to every one in his private rights — in his right to life, to liberty, to

---

Brewer v. Jacobs, 22 F. R. 217-44 (1885), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 563 (1887), cases; 26 id. 286-88 (1888); 12 F. R. 253; 35 Ind. 15, 286; 43 id. 65; 34 La. An. 246; 4 Cush. 289; 30 Minn. 518; 76 Mo. 669; 100 Pa. 94; 13 R. I 617; 64 Tex. 673.

[1] Cooley, Torts, 185; Peck v. Chouteau, 91 Mo. 149 (1886), cases.

[2] Lowe v. Wartman, 47 N. J. L. 413 (1885).

[3] Muldoon v. Rickey, 103 Pa. 112 (1883), cases; Burton v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 33 Minn. 191 (1885); 18 Cent. Law J. 242-45 (1884), cases; 32 Alb. Law J. 124-26, 145-48 (1885), cases.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 296, 316, 376.

[1] Peek v. Gurney, L. R., 6 Eng. & Ir. Ap. 377 (1873); Simons v. Vulcan Oil, &c. Co., 61 Pa. 202 (1869).

[2] State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 27 (1866), Appleton, C. J.

[3] State v. Rice, 56 Iowa, 431 (1881).

[4] Springer v. State, 16 Tex. Ap. 593 (1884), Willson, J.

[5] [Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 610 (1850), Welles, P. J.

[6] Commonwealth v. Cook, 12 Metc. 97 (1846), Dewey, J.; Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 162-63 (1885); cases.

[7] Paul v. Paul, 37 N. J. E. 25 (1883), cases.

[8] Constitution, Amd. XIV, sec. 1.

property, and to the pursuit of happiness. It implies not only that the means which the laws afford for such security shall be equally accessible to him, but that no one shall be subject to any greater burdens or charges than such as are imposed upon all others under like circumstances.[1] See CITIZEN, page 184.

The inhibition quoted was designed to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discriminating and hostile legislation. Under the designation "person" a private corporation is included.[2]

Legislation which applies to particular bodies or associations, imposing upon them additional liabilities, is not forbidden, if all persons brought under its influence are treated alike under the same conditions.[3]

PROTEST.[4] A declaration, more or less formal, against an act about to be done or already done, intended to express dissent on the ground of impropriety or illegality, to preserve a right which otherwise might be held relinquished, or to exonerate from a liability which might otherwise attach.

1. Objection, disapproval, dissent: as, to pay money under protest.

Duties or taxes illegally demanded may be paid "under protest" and the receiver afterward be compelled to refund them. Such payments are involuntary.[5]

Under acts relating to the recovery of duties paid under protest, a written protest, signed by the party making it, with a definite statement of the grounds, is a condition precedent to the right to sue for a recovery.[6]

Protests against the levy of duties are commercial documents, and if they are sufficiently formal and accurate to inform the collector distinctly of the position of the importer, the object of the statute requiring them is accomplished. They have always been liberally construed by the courts, and great formality or fullness is not required.[7]

See further PAYMENT, Involuntary.

2. Referring to commercial paper, in a strictly technical sense, not applicable to a promissory note. The word, however, by general usage has acquired a more extensive signification, and in a given case may include all the acts which by law are necessary to charge an indorser on such paper.[1]

The formal declaration drawn up and signed by a notary that he presented a [foreign] bill of exchange for acceptance or payment and that that was refused. But, with business men, includes all the steps necessary to charge an indorser.[2]

Demand of payment of a note in proper form and at a proper time; and, in case of non-payment, due and reasonable notice to the indorsers, by any suitable person.[3]

In the popular sense, includes demand of the maker and notice of non-payment to indorsers.[4]

Mercantile paper which has "gone to protest" is said to be dishonored, q. v.

Protest includes, in a popular sense, all the steps taken to fix the liability of a drawer or an indorser. When there is nothing else in a waiver of protest to limit the meaning, the word must be taken as used in that sense, whether applied to foreign or domestic bills or to promissory notes.[5]

The object of the notice is to enable the indorser to take measures for his own security. The language used should be such as to reasonably apprise the party of the particular paper on which he is sought to be charged.[6]

Supra protest. Over protest: said of acceptance of a bill of exchange by a person not a party to it, after a protest for non-acceptance by the drawee; also, of a payment, by such a person, after protest for non-payment.

When a bill is protested for non-acceptance or for better security, any person may accept it supra protest, for the honor of the drawer or of any indorser The acceptor personally appears before a notary, with a witness, and declares that he accepts the bill in

[1] County of Santa Clara v Southern Pacific R. Co., 18 F. R. 398 (1883), Field, J.; ib. 450–51, cases. See also Claybrook v. City of Owensboro, 16 id. 302–3 (1883), cases.

[2] Pembina Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 188 (1888).

[3] Missouri R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 209 (1888).

[4] L. protestari, to bear witness.

[5] Philadelphia v. The Collector, 5 Wall. 732 (1866); 13 Pet. 267; 17 F. R. 505.

[6] Nichols v. United States, 7 Wall. 126 (1868); R. S. §§ 2931–32, 3011–12, cases.

[7] Herman v. Schell, 18 F. R. 892 (1884), cases, Coxe, J.; United States v. Lang, ib. 15 (1883).

[1] Coddington v. Davis, 1 N. Y. 189 (1848), Gardiner, J.; 1 Comst. 186; 3 Denio, 25; 1 Pars. Bills & N. 471, 575, 579, 582, cases.

[2] Townsend v. Lorain Bank, 2 Ohio St. 353 (1853), Ranney, J. See also McFarland v. Pice, 8 Cal. 636–37 (1837); Sprague v. Fletcher, 8 Oreg. 370 (1880).

[3] [Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 575 (1872), Allen, J.

[4] [Brannon v. Hursell, 112 Mass. 70 (1873), Morton, J.; 2 Bl. Com. 469.

[5] Wolford v. Andrews, 29 Minn. 251 (1882); Baker v Scott, 29 Kan. 137 (1883); Annville Nat. Bank v. Ketterling, 106 Pa. 531 (1884); 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 929, 1094–95; 42 Miss. 807; 37 Mo. 91; 53 Barb. 467; 7 Hun, 562.

[6] Bank of Cooperstown v. Woods, 28 N. Y. 559 (1864) 19 id. 518; Edwards, Bills, 289.

honor of a party named, and that he will satisfy the same at the appointed time; and he then subscribes the formula — "Accepted, supra protest, in honor of A. B.;" or, as is more usual, "Accepts, S. P."[1]

Payment supra protest is where a bill, protested for non-payment, is paid by another person for the honor of one of the parties. Any party to a bill may pay for honor; and so may a mere stranger, without previous request or authority. This is a provision of the law-merchant, introduced to aid the credit and circulation of bills of exchange. It extends to no other instruments.[2] See NEGOTIATE, 2.

3. When a vessel from a foreign port is compelled to put into a port for which it is not destined, the master, or person next in command, makes a protest, that is, a declaration under oath, as to the causes and circumstances of the distress or necessity.[3]

4. A declaration by a member of a legislative body that he dissents from some act or resolution of the body.

Protestation. Pleading so as to avoid an implied admission of a fact which cannot be positively affirmed or denied, is by a "protestation:" the party[4] interposes an oblique allegation or denial of the fact by protesting (protestando) that the matter does or does not exist; at the same time avoiding a direct affirmation or denial. Coke's definition is "an exclusion of a conclusion."[4]

Prevents the party from being concluded by a fact or circumstance which cannot be directly affirmed or denied without "duplicity," and which, without protest, he might be deemed to have tacitly waived or admitted.[4]

PROTESTANT. Includes all those who believe in the Christian religion and do not acknowledge the supremacy of the pope.[5]

The word is capable of sustaining a charitable bequest.

PROTHONOTARY.[6] The chief scribe in a court.[7]

The head clerk in some courts, whose principal duty is to make and preserve accurate records of proceedings in court, and as prescribed by law.

In England, prior to 1837, there were three such officials in the court of common pleas, and one in the king's bench.

[1] [Byles, Bills, 267.

[2] [Byles, Bills, 272.

[3] [R. S. § 2891.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 311; Coke, Litt. 124; 1 Chitty, Pl. 534; Steph. Pl. 235.

[5] Tappan's Appeal, 52 Conn. 418 (1884), Park, C. J.; Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 53 id. 493 (1885).

[6] L. protonotarius: Gk. prō'tŏs, first, chief; L. notarius, scribe, clerk.

[7] [1 Bl. Com. 72.

PROUT. See RECORDUM, Prout, etc.

PROVE. See APPROVE; DERAIGN; PROBATE; PROOF.

Provable debts. See BANKRUPTCY.

PROVIDED; PROVISO.[1] Employed in contracts, deeds, wills, statutes, and treaties in the senses indicated by the authorities subjoined.

"Provided" is an apt word to create a condition. Yet it may not import a condition: it is often used by way of limitation or qualification, especially when it does not introduce a new clause, but only serves to qualify or restrain the generality of a former clause.[2]

No word better expresses a condition; and it is always so taken, unless the context shows the intent was to create a covenant.[3]

"Provided," "so that," and "if it shall happen" are all of the same import as "on condition." "Provided always" may constitute a condition, limitation, or covenant, according to the circumstances.[4] See IF.

"Provided always" refers to all that has gone before, and qualifies preceding limitations.[5]

"Provided" or "proviso," in a deed or will, though appropriate to constitute a common-law condition, does not invariably or necessarily do so. Giving way to the intent, may express a limitation in trust.[6]

"Proviso," in a statute, is generally intended to restrain the enacting clause; to except something which otherwise would have been within it; in some measure to modify it.[7]

In deeds and laws "proviso" is a limitation or exception to a grant made or authority conferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided.[8]

In a statute, excepts something from the enacting clause, qualifies or restrains its generality, or excludes some possible ground of misinterpretation, as, extending to cases not within the purview.[9]

Carves special exceptions out of the body of a statute.[10]

Is ordinarily confined to the last enactment; but the context may evince a different intent.[11]

He who sets up any such exception must establish

[1] L. pro-videre, to foresee, act with foresight. Proviso: it being provided.

[2] Chapin v. Harris, 8 Allen, 596 (1864), Gray, J.

[3] Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 419 (1844), Williams, C. J.

[4] Heaston v. Commissioners, 20 Ind. 403 (1863), Worden, J.

[5] Martelli v. Holloway, 5 L. R., H. L. 549 (1872).

[6] Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. 166 (1866), Nelson, J.

[7] Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 30 (1825), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[8] Voorhees v. Bank of the United States, 10 Pet. 471 (1836), Baldwin, J.

[9] Minis v. United States, 15 Pet. 445 (1841), Story, J.

[10] United States v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 165 (1841), Story, J.; Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 83 (1876).

[11] Friedman v. Sullivan, 48 Ark. 215 (1886), cases; Exp. Lusk, 82 Ala. 523-23 (1886), cases.

it, as being within the words as well as within the reason of the law.[1]

An "exception" is of that which otherwise would be included in the category from which it is excepted.[2] See EXCEPTION, 2.

PROVINCE. In a figurative sense, power, authority, prerogative: as, in saying that it is the province of the jury to decide the facts, and the province of the court or judge to decide the law.

PROVISION. That which is provided, arranged, or stipulated for: as, the provisions of a contract, of a will, of a constitution, statute, treaty.

A rule or doctrine established by judicial decision is a "provision of law," equally with one enacted by the legislature.[3] See PROVIDED.

PROVISIONAL. Temporary; for the time being: as, a provisional — assignee, committee, court, injunction or other remedy.

PROVISIONS. See GROCERIES; HEALTH; MARKET; PERISHABLE.

The "provisions" of a ship mean articles of food or sustenance; her "stores" include wood, coal, and the like.[4] See NECESSARIES, 2.

Fat cattle,[5] Indian corn,[6] wine and brandy,[7] have been held to be provisions.

PROVISO. See PROVIDED.

PROVOCATION. See DEFENSE, 1.

No provocation by words, however opprobrious, will mitigate an intentional homicide, so as to reduce it to manslaughter.[8]

In the law of voluntary manslaughter, it is not the degree of the force with which a blow may be struck or an assault inflicted that constitutes "legal provocation," but it consists in an assault or battery of some degree which, under the attending circumstances, or by reason of its force, is calculated to create, and does create, sudden heat and passion.[9]

No provocation can render homicide justifiable or excusable; but it may reduce it to manslaughter.[10]

That circumstances of mitigation must form part of the res gestæ has been repeatedly ruled.[11]

In an action of trespass for an assault and battery the defendant cannot give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, matters of provocation on the part of the plaintiff, unless they happened contemporaneously with the assault and battery, or so recently as to induce the presumption that the assault was committed under the immediate influence of the passions excited by the provocation.[1]

PROXIMATE. See CAUSE, 1; DAMAGES; DOMINION.

PROXY. A shortened form of "procuracy:" procuration, agency.

A person empowered to act for another, as, to vote a share or shares of the capital stock of a corporation; also, the authority itself to represent the constituent.[2]

Shareholders cannot vote by proxy without special provision in the charter so to do.[3]

The right of voting by proxy at the meetings of an incorporated company is not a general right, and the party who claims it must show a special authority; but where, rejecting all votes cast by proxy, there is still a majority, the minority are bound.[4]

A shareholder in a national bank may vote by proxy, but no officer or employee of the bank may act as proxy.[5] See TRUST, 2.

PRUDENCE. Varies with the exigencies that require vigilance and attention, conforming in degree to the circumstances under which it is to be exercised.

"Ordinary care and prudence" imports that degree of care and prudence which a careful and prudent man would exercise in the same circumstances.[6] See CARE; DISCRETION.

PSYCHOLOGY. See INSANITY; PRESUMPTION.

PUBLIC.[7] 1, n. "The public" are the body of the people at large; the people of the neighborhood; the community at large; the people.

2, adj. Belonging to, concerning, of interest or importance to, affecting the people or community at large; for the accommodation or benefit of all persons; also, generally known. Opposed, private, q. v.

As in speaking of public or a public — act, administration, agent, assembly, attorney,

[1] United States v. Dickson, ante.

[2] United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 177 (1872), cases: 1 Ld. Ray. 120; 1 B. & A. 48.

[3] Clark v. Lake Shore, &c. R. Co., 94 N. Y. 220 (1883).

[4] Crooke v. Slack, 20 Wend. 177 (1838), Nelson, C. J.

[5] United States v. Barber, 9 Cranch, 243 (1815); United States v. Sheldon, 2 Wheat. 119 (1817).

[6] Atkinson v. Gatcher, 23 Ark. 103 (1861).

[7] Mooney v. Evans, 6 Ired. Eq. 363 (1849).

[8] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 305 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

[9] Williams v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 316 (1882), Hargis, J.

[10] Honesty v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 298 (1886).

[11] Bonino v. Caledonio, 144 Mass. 302 (1887); 2 Greenl. Ev. § 267.

[1] Keiser v. Smith, 71 Ala. 481 (1882): 2 Greenl. Ev. § 98; Field, Dam. § 604; 2 Sedg. Dam. 547; 1 Waterm. Treesp. § 266; 1 Sutherl. Dam. 227; 1 Mass. 11; 19 Johns. 319; 17 Iowa, 408; 17 Mo. 537.

[2] See 1 Bl. Com. 168, 478; 1 Paige, 590.

[3] Brown v. Commonwealth, 3 Grant, 209 (1856).

[4] Craig v. First Presby. Church, 88 Pa. 47 (1878): 2 Kent, 294; Angell & Ames, Corp. §§ 127, 131, 498.

[5] R. S. § 5144.

[6] Fassett v. Roxbury, 55 Vt. 555–56 (1883), Rowell, J.: 28 id. 180; 86 id. 580; 51 id. 131.

[7] L. publicus, belonging to the people.

auction, blockade, boundary, bridge, building, charity, conveyance, corporation, document, domain, easement, enemy, entertainment, exhibition, grant, health, highway, holiday, house or inn, indecency, land, law, notice, nuisance, office or officer, peace, place, policy, property, prosecutor, record, river, sale, school, seal, statute, stocks, trial, use, verdict, vessel, war, water, welfare, wrong, qq. v.

"Public" and "general" are sometimes used as synonymous, meaning merely that which concerns a multitude of persons; but in other connections "public" refers to that which concerns all the citizens, and every member of the state, while "general" refers to a lesser, though still a large, proportion of the community.[1] Compare GENERAL.

The word "public" is used variously, its specific meaning depending upon the subjects to which it is applied. This is illustrated in the different uses of the word as applied to law, statutes, debts, securities, and taxes.[2]

The word sometimes describes the use to which property is applied; at other times, the character in which it is held. If the use is of such a nature as concerns the public, and the right to its enjoyment is open to the public upon equal terms, the use will be public, whether compensation be exacted or not.[3]

PUBLICATION. 1. Making a thing known to the public; proclaiming to general hearing; exposing to general view.

As, putting forth a law in some printed form; exhibiting a deposition taken in chancery; inserting a summons or other order in a newspaper as an advertisement; the uttering of words in slander, and the declaring by pictures, signs, etc., in libel; a testator's statement that a designated writing is his will. See those general subjects.

2. Something, as, a book or print, which has been published — made public or known to the world. A writing as well as a printing may be "published." What constitutes a publication or a making public may be a question, and must generally depend upon the circumstances of each case.

But a private letter sent in a sealed envelope cannot be considered a publication within the statute against mailing indecent publications.[4] See OBSCENE.

The office of an "order of publication" is to notify parties, who are properly such, of the proceeding, and of the object sought; it is a substitute for a subpœna.[5]

It is a rule, without qualification or exception, that when it is sought to conclude a party by constructive "service by publication" there must be a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute: nothing can be taken by intendment; every fact necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction, based on the service, must affirmatively appear in the mode of service.[1]

An "award" is published when made and notice given to the parties.[2]

In "slander," words are published although spoken to one person, who knows them to be false.[3] See SLANDER.

But sending a letter containing a "libel" to the person defamed, where no third party hears or reads it, will not support an action for damages.[4] See LIBEL, 5.

As to publication by "statutes" and "ordinances," see PRESCRIPTION, 1; PROCLAMATION, 2; PROMULGATE. See also COPYRIGHT.

The publication of a "will" is the act of declaring or making known to the witnesses that the testator understands and intends the instrument subscribed by him to be his last will.[5]

Republication. A re-publishing; in particular, the revival of a will previously revoked or changed by the addition of one or more codicils.

PUBLICIST. A writer upon international law — the laws of nations, public law in its comprehensive sense.

PUBLISHER. One who by himself or his agent makes a thing publicly known; one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, and other papers.[6] See EDITOR; MANUFACTURER; NEWSPAPER; PRINTER; UTTER, 2.

PUEBLO. In its original signification, people or population, but is now used in the sense of "town." It has the indefiniteness of that word, and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place, a settlement or village, as well as to a regularly organized municipality.[7]

[1] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 128.

[2] Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 786 (1861), Peck, J.

[3] Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 241 (1874), White, J.

[4] United States v. Loftis, 8 Saw. 197 (1882), Deady, J.: s. c. 12 F. R. 673. See United States v. Gaylord, 17 F. R. 438 (1883), Drummond, J.

[5] Savary v. Da Camara, 60 Md. 148 (1882).

[1] Cissell v. Pulaski County, 3 McCrary, 449 (1881), cases; Hartley v. Boynton, 17 F. R. 876 (1883).

[2] Knowlton v. Homer, 30 Me. 556 (1849); 9 Bing. 605; 5 B. & Ad. 518; 1 N. J. L. 415.

[3] Marble v. Chapin, 132 Mass. 225 (1882).

[4] Spalts v. Poundstone, 87 Ind. 524-25 (1882), cases; 1 Am. L. Cas. 114.

[5] Lewis v. Lewis, 13 Barb. 23 (1852), Brown, J.; Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 466 (1856): 2 Greenl. Ev. § 561.

[6] Leroy v. Jamison, 3 Saw. 377 (1875): Bouvier's Law Dict.

[7] Trenouth v. San Francisco, 100 U. S. 251 (1879).

At the time of the conquest of California, July 7, 1846, there was a Mexican pueblo at the site of the present city of San Francisco.[1]

Ownership of the lands in the pueblos could not in strictness be affirmed. It amounted to little more than a restricted and qualified right to alienate portions to its inhabitants for building or cultivation, and to use the remainder for commons, for pasture lands, or as a source of revenue, or for other public purposes. This right of disposition and use was, in all particulars, subject to the control of the government of the country. The right appears to have been common to the cities and towns of Spain from an early period in her history, and was recognized in the laws governing her colonies on this continent.[2]

Upon the conquest, the United States succeeded to the rights and authority of the Mexican government, subject only to their obligations under the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo. Before the estate of the pueblo could become absolute and indefeasible, some action was required on the part of the United States. This action was taken by act of July 1, 1864. Down to that time, the city of San Francisco held under its original imperfect Mexican title only. Afterward, it was possessed of the fee "for the uses, and purposes specified" in the Van Ness ordinance. The State statute of limitations began to run, as to this title, July 1, 1864.[3]

The pueblo Indians in New Mexico held their lands by a right superior to that of the United States. Their title dates back to grants made by Spain before the Mexican revolution, fully recognized by the Mexican government, and protected by it in the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, by which the country and the allegiance of its inhabitants were transferred to the United States. "For centuries the pueblo Indians have lived in villages, with municipal government. They adopted the Spanish language, and the Christian religion as taught them by Spanish Catholic missionaries. They are a peaceable, industrious, intelligent, honest, and virtuous people. They are Indians only in feature, and in a few habits."[4]

PUFFING. See AUCTION.

PUGILISTS. See PRIZE-FIGHTING.

PUIS. See CONTINUANCE, 1.

PUNCTUATION. Compare GRAMMAR.

When the meaning of a clause in an instrument is doubtful, the court may insert punctuation to show of what construction the words are capable; and if by such aid the court is enabled to see that the language can bear an interpretation which will make the whole instrument rational and self-consistent, it is bound to adopt that interpretation, in preference to another which would attribute to the parties an intention utterly capricious, insensible and absurd.[1]

In the interpretation of written instruments very little consideration is given by the courts to the punctuation, and it is never allowed to interfere with or control the meaning of the language used. The words must be given their common and natural effect regardless of the punctuation or grammatical construction.[2]

When the punctuation is strictly consistent with one of two senses, equally grammatical, and inconsistent with the other, it should be allowed the force of opening the question of construction to receiving aid from the context, and from the purpose in view.[3]

PUNISH.[4] To afflict with pain or loss, with a view to amendment; to impose a penalty for the commission of a crime.

Punishable. Liable to punishment.[5]

May be punished, or liable to be punished.[6]

Not, must be punished, but liable to be punished.[7]

Punishment. Punishments are evils or inconveniences consequent upon crimes and misdemeanors, and inflicted by human laws, in consequence of disobedience or misbehavior in those to regulate whose conduct such laws are made.[8]

In ex post facto laws, "punishment" is synonymous with chastisement, correction, loss, or suffering to the party supposed to be punished, and not in the legal sense which signifies a penalty inflicted for the commission of crime. Wharton's definition, "the penalty for transgressing the law," is, perhaps, as comprehensive and accurate as can be given.[9]

The end of punishment is not atonement or expiation, but precaution against future offenses.[10]

The power is exercised through the means which the laws provide.[11]

A statute which describes an act as punishable and imposes a fine creates an offense.[12]

Field, J.; Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall. 372 (1867); More v. Steinbach, 127 U. S. 70, 78 (1888), cases.

[1] Trenouth v. San Francisco, ante.

[2] Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wall. 336 (1866), Field, J.

[3] Palmer v. Low, 98 U. S. 16 (1878), Waite, C. J.; San Francisco v. Scott, 111 id. 768 (1884).

[4] United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 618, 616 (1876), Miller, J.

[1] Re Denny's Estate, 8 Irish Eq. 447 (1874), Christian, Ld. J.

[2] O'Brien v. Brice, 21 W. Va. 707 (1883), Snyder, J.

[3] Caston v. Brock, 14 S. C. 107 (1880), Willard, C. J.; Albright v. Payne, 43 Ohio St. 14-15 (1885), cases; 65 Pa. 311; 38 Wis. 434.

[4] F. punire-, punir: L. punire, to impose a penalty upon.

[5] Commonwealth v. Pemberton, 118 Mass. 42 (1875).

[6] United States v. Watkinds, 7 Saw. 94 (1881).

[7] State v. Neuner, 49 Conn. 233 (1881); 58 Ga. 200.

[8] [4 Bl. Com. 7.

[9] Exp. Garland, 4 Wall. 393 (1866), Chase, C. J. See also Matter of Bayard, 25 Hun, 546 (1881).

[10] [4 Bl. Com. 11, 252.

[11] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 119 (1866).

[12] Re Jackson, 14 Blatch. 245 (1877).

Arbitrary punishment. Such punishment as in degree or kind is left wholly to the discretion of the judge, in distinction from such as is defined by statute.

Capital punishment. Punishment of death: originally, by decapitation.

Abolished in Maine (in 1887), in Rhode Island, and in Wisconsin. Except for treason, never existed in Michigan, until April 9, 1887.[1]

The legislature of New York, by an act approved in April, 1888, substituted electricity, as the means of executing persons sentenced to death, for hanging.

A century ago, in Massachusetts ten and in Delaware twenty crimes were punishable with loss of life.[2]

Corporal punishment. Any kind of corporal privation or suffering which is inflicted by a sentence, directly by way of penalty for an offense.[3] Also, such chastisement inflicted by a teacher.

The reasonableness of the punishment administered by a school teacher to a pupil is a question of fact. The teacher has a right to require obedience to reasonable rules and a proper submission to his authority, and to inflict punishment for disobedience; being governed, as to mode and severity, by the nature of the offense, the age, size, and physical condition of the pupil. And in punishing for a particular offense the teacher may take into consideration habitual disobedience.[4]

Cruel, unusual punishment. "Nor" shall "cruel and unusual punishments" be "inflicted."[5]

The kind and degree of punishment suited to particular offenses is a matter left to the discretion of the legislature, with the qualification above noted.[6]

Twice punished. "Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb."[7]

The punishments in use under the colonial and provincial governments were: imprisonment in the common jail; hard labor in the workhouse or house of correction; the pillory; sitting on the gallows; cropping one or both ears; branding on one or both cheeks, with indelible ink, the letter T for thief, or B for burglar; whipping; sitting in the stocks; in case of larceny, restoration of threefold the value of the property with liability to be sold to service to pay it.[1]

No man can be twice lawfully punished for the same offense.

Although there have been nice questions in the application of this rule to cases in which the act charged was such as to come within the definition of more than one statutory offense, or to bringing the party within the jurisdiction of more than one court, there has never been any doubt of its entire and complete protection when a second punishment is proposed in the same court, on the same facts, for the same statutory offense.

In civil causes, the doctrine is expressed by the maxim that no man shall be "twice vexed" for one and the same cause. It is upon the foundation of this maxim that the plea of a former judgment for the same matter, whether for or against the defendant, is a good bar to an action.

In criminal law, the same principle is expressed thus: No one can be twice punished for the same crime or misdemeanor. Protection against the action of the same court in inflicting punishment twice is as clearly within the maxim as protection from the chances of a second punishment on a second trial. Hence the pleas autrefois acquit, autrefois convict.

These are principles of the common law, and embodied in all our constitutions. At the time they came into existence almost every offense was punished with death or other punishment touching the person.

A second trial may be had, without violating the principle, when the jury fail to agree and no verdict is rendered, or the verdict is set aside on motion of the accused, or on a writ of error prosecuted by him, or the indictment was found to describe no offense known to the law.

When a court has imposed a fine and imprisonment, where the statute only confers power to punish by fine or imprisonment, and the fine has been paid, the power of the court to punish further is gone. One judgment only can be pronounced; if that is unwarranted by law, the court cannot modify the judgment and impose a new sentence.[2]

Therefore, sureties on a distiller's bond cannot be subjected to the penalty attached to the commission of an offense, when the principal has effected a compromise with the government, under the sanction of an act of Congress, of prosecutions based upon the same offense and for the same penalty.[3]

The principle is, that one shall not be tried a second time for the same offense, after he has been once convicted or acquitted by a verdict of a jury, and judgment has been rendered against him or in his favor. There is no implication that he shall not be tried a second time if the jury in the first trial were discharged without giving a verdict, or if, having given a verdict, the judgment was arrested or a new trial granted at the request of the accused.[4]

---

[1] See North Am. Rev., 1881, p. 557.

[2] 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 100. See 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 457–58, 472–76.

[3] People v. Winchell, 7 Cow. 525 (1827), note.

[4] Sheehan v. Sturges, 53 Conn. 483–4 (1885), cases; Deakins v. Gose, 85 Mo. 485 (1885), cases: 24 Am. Law Reg. 662, 664–69 (1885), cases.

[5] Constitution, Amd. VIII. See same prohibition in the constitutions of the States.

[6] See Cooley, Const. 296; 18 Am. Law Reg. 681; 70 Cal. 1; 1 N. M. 415; 61 How. Pr. 294. On inequality in punishment, see 5 Cr. Law M. 16–31 (1884).

[7] Constitution, Amd. V. See same provision in the constitutions of the States.

[1] Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 348 (1857); 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 100–1.

[2] Exp. Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 168–78 (1873), cases, Miller, J.; Exp. Gilmore, 71 Cal. 625 (1887).

[3] United States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 610 (1880).

[4] [2 Story, Const. § 1787. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 397,

A second punishment does not arise if the court had no jurisdiction; nor if the first indictment was clearly insufficient and invalid; nor if by any overruling necessity the jury are discharged without a verdict; nor if the term of the court ends before the trial is finished; nor if the jury was discharged before verdict, by consent of the accused, expressed or implied; nor if the first verdict was set aside on motion of the accused, or on error sued out in his behalf; nor if the judgment was arrested on his motion.[1]

Penalty, fine, and imprisonment are only one punishment for the same offense, although the penalty is recoverable in a civil action and the others are inflicted by criminal prosecution.[2]

See further ASSESS, 2; BURNING; COMMUTATION; JEOPARDY, 2; PEINE; PENAL; PILLORY; QUALIFY, 2; RACK; RETALIATION; SERVITUDE, Penal; VEX; WHIPPING.

PUNITIVE. See DAMAGES, Exemplary.

PUPIL. See PUNISHMENT, Corporal; SCHOOL.

PUR. In Law French, for. Sometimes spelled pour.

Pur autre vie. For the life of another. See VIE.

PURCHASE.[3] 1. Acquisition, procuring, suing out: as, the purchase of a writ of error.[4]

2. In a popular and confined sense, acquisition by way of bargain and sale or other valuable consideration.[5]

The transmission of property from one person to another by their voluntary act and agreement, founded on a valuable consideration. In judgment of law, the acquisition of land by any lawful act of the party, in contradistinction to acquisition by operation of law, and includes title by deed, by matter of record, and by devise.[6]

As to the purchase of negotiables, see DISCOUNT, 2.

3. In the law of real property, originally, any method of acquiring an estate otherwise than by descent.[7]

The possession of lands and tenements which a man has by his own act and agreement, and not by descent from any of his ancestors or kindred.[8]

In its technical sense, includes all modes of acquisition other than that by descent. But generally, in statutes as in common use, the non-technical sense is employed — acquisition by contract between the parties.[1]

The purchase of an estate includes every lawful method of coming to an estate by the act of the party, as opposed to the act of the law. It includes titles obtained by sale of personal property on execution by the sheriff, or by levy, or in execution of the right of eminent domain.[2] See OCCUPANCY; REDEEM.

Purchase-money. The consideration money paid or agreed to be paid to the vendor by the vendee of realty.[3]

Treated as a lien on the land sold, when the vendor has taken no separate security. The vendee ought not, in conscience, to be allowed to keep the estate without paying the consideration.[4]

The vendor, though he has made an absolute conveyance by deed, and though the consideration is in the instrument expressed to be paid, has an equitable lien for the unpaid purchase money, unless there has been an express or implied waiver. The lien is not affected by the vendor's taking the vendee's bond or bill single, or a negotiable promissory note, or a check, if not presented or if unpaid, or any instrument involving merely personal liability. Taking a note with a surety is a presumption, rebuttable, however, of an intent to rely exclusively upon the personal security, The lien will be enforced in equity against the vendee and all persons holding under him, except a bona fide purchaser without notice.[5]

The vendee's estate is equitable, and alienable as real estate held by a legal title. Any security for the purchase-money is personalty. The vendee cannot dispute the title of his vendor.[6] See further LIE Vendor's.

Purchaser. A vendee: a buyer.

The original word, perquisitor, meant one who acquired an estate by sale, gift, or other method than by descent. The expression "first purchaser" is still used in this sense.[7] See ANCESTOR; DESCENT.

In registry acts, a complete purchaser, a purchaser clothed with a legal title.[8]

May include one who buys at a judicial sale, as in the recording acts of Illinois.[9]

A purchaser of land for a valuable consideration is one who pays a fair value, or something approaching a fair value, for the premises.[10] See FAITH, Good.

[1] Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 520 (1878), cases, Clifford, J., dissenting. See Smith v. State, 41 N. J. L. 598 (1879), cases.

[2] Re Leszynsky, 16 Blatch. 9, 18–20 (1879), cases.

[3] F. purchacer, to pursue eagerly, acquire.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 273.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 241.

[6] 4 Kent, 509. See also 2 Washb. R. P. 401; 7 Tex. 135.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 241; 2 id. 180, 181.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 241: Litt. § 12; 96 Ill. 585; 20 Wend. 356; 34 Me. 572.

[1] Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 374 (1875), Strong, J.; 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 328.

[2] Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 364 (1871), Chapman, C. J.

[3] See 37 Ill. 441; 38 Md. 279; 15 Barb. 572.

[4] Chilton v. Braiden, 2 Black, 460 (1862), Grier, J.

[5] Cordova v. Hood, 17 Wall. 5–6 (1872) cases, Strong, J.; Mackrith v. Simmons, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq., H. & W., 235.

[6] Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. 125 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.; 2 Story, Eq. § 1212.

[7] See 2 Bl. Com. 220; 5 Pa. 166; 23 id. 207.

[8] Steele v. Spencer, 1 Pet. *559 (1828).

[9] McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 361 (1872).

[10] Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 228 (1862).

Words of purchase. When, in a will, the limitation of a remainder is to a "son" or "sons," "children" or "issue," "heir" or "heirs" of the life tenant, if the word is a descriptio personæ, the descendant takes as a purchaser; if intended to comprehend a class to take by inheritance, the word is a term of "limitation," within the rule in Shelley's case. "Child" and "children" are always regarded as words of purchase, unless the testator unmistakably used them as descriptive of the extent of the estate given, and not to designate the donees, in which case they are words of limitation.[1]

"Children" is as certainly a word of purchase as "heirs of the body" are words of limitation. This is the rule, but a testator may evince a different intent.[2]

See further CHILD; HEIR; ISSUE, 5; LIMITATION, 2; SHELLEY'S CASE.

PURGE. To clear of a charge by one's own oath:[3] as, to the satisfaction of a court that by a certain act no contempt was intended. See CONTEMPT.

PURPART. See PART, 1.

PURPORT. The substance or general import of language.

The "purport" of a communication is its substance, as stated in any other than the identical words in which it was originally expressed. In libel, the exact words are required to be set out.

The substance of an instrument as it appears on the face of it to every eye that reads it. "Tenor" (q.v.) imports an exact copy.[4]

PURPOSE. End; view; design; intention, q. v.

"Purposely" means intentionally, designedly; as, to purposely commit a homicide.[5]

"For other purposes," added to the title of an act, covers every possible subject of legislation.[6]

To all intents and purposes, see INTENT.

Power to borrow money for any "public purpose" gives authority to a municipal corporation to borrow money to aid a railroad company making its road as a way for public travel and transportation, and it may issue bonds for the loan. As against bona fide holders of the bonds for value, the corporation is estopped from denying that the power was properly executed.[7]

Money borrowed in the service of such a power, for the construction of a plank road which leads from, extends to, or passes through the limits of the corporation, is borrowed for a "public purpose."[8]

Any legitimate expenditure of a State necessary to be provided for by a State tax, is a "State purpose."[1] See AID, Municipal.

See CITY; CORPORATE; LITERARY.

PURPRESTURE.[2] A close or enclosure; that is, when one encroaches or makes that several to himself which ought to be common to many.[3]

In old law-writers, an encroachment upon the king or his subjects. In common acceptation, now an encroachment upon the king, upon his demesne lands, or upon rights and easements held by him for the public, as, upon highways, public rivers, forts, streets, squares, bridges, quays, and the like.[3]

Where a house is erected or an enclosure made upon any part of the king's demesnes, or of a highway or common street, or public water, or such like public things.[4]

Any encroachment, however slight, upon public property, whether in highways, navigable streams, or streets, is a purpresture, which is in the nature of a trespass upon public property by an individual.[5]

Any erection upon navigable soil, without license, is an encroachment upon the public property of the sovereign,—a purpresture, which he may remove at pleasure, whether it tend to obstruct navigation or not.[6]

The term imports an enclosure made by a private party of a part of that which belongs to and ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of the public at large—as of part of a public common, or of a highway by land or on water. Unlike a public nuisance, a purpresture may exist without putting the public to any inconvenience.[7]

PURSE. See BET; PRIZE, 1.

PURSUE. 1. To follow, in order to overtake or obtain.

Following immediately with intent to reclaim or recapture goods being carried off by a thief, or an escaping animal, is making "fresh pursuit."[8]

2. To use measures to obtain; to prosecute; to continue: as, to pursue a remedy. Compare SUIT, 1. See HAPPINESS.

---

[1] 2 Washb. R. P 273-74, cases.

[2] Oyster v. Oyster, 100 Pa. 540 (1882); Haldeman v. Haldeman, 40 Pa. 35 (1861); 2 Jarman, Wills, 368.

[3] [4 Bl. Com. 287.

[4] Fogg v. State, 9 Yerg. 394 (1836), Reese, J. See also Commonwealth v. Wright, 1 Cush. 65 (1848); Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 381 (1884); Thomas v. State, 103 id. 426 (1885); 26 Iowa, 407; 29 Minn. 175; 68 Mo. 286; 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 413.

[5] Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 262 (1864); 17 id. 307.

[6] Hadden v. The Collector, 5 Wall. 111 (1866).

[7] Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 654 (1865), Clifford, J.

[8] Mitchell v. Burlington, 4 Wall. 270 (1866).

[1] People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Col. 422, 430 (1886).

[2] F. pourpris, a taking without authority; an enclosure,—4 Bl. Com. 167.

[3] [2 Story, Eq. 921, cases.

[4] [4 Bl. Com. 167.

[5] Wood, Nuisances, § 604.

[6] Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall. 65 (1873): Angell. Tid. W. 198.

[7] Attorney-General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 Mich. 472-73 (1876), Cooley, C. J. See also Wood, Nuis. § 604; 2 Ct. Cl. 401; 30 Ga. 512; 31 Minn. 302; 2 Johns. Ch. 381; 7 Barb. 548; 28 N. Y. 397; 2 Abb. N. Cas. 215.

[8] See 4 Bl. Com. 363; 3 id. 4.

PURVIEW.[1] The enacting part of a statute, in contradistinction to the preamble.[2] See ACT, 3; PROVISO; STATUTE.

PUT. 1, v. "To put one's self upon the country:" to express a readiness to submit the truth of an issue of fact to a jury; to request a jury trial in a civil action. See under COUNTRY, 2.

Put in fear. See ROBBERY.

2, n. The privilege, for a nominal consideration, of delivering personalty within a certain time at a specified price.[3]

A "call" is the privilege of calling or not calling for the subject-matter of the contract.

"Puts" and "calls" are merely options to sell or buy.[4]

The true idea of an option is embraced in what is called a "put" and "call,"—the former being the privilege of delivering or not delivering the thing sold; the latter, the privilege of calling or not calling for the thing bought.[5]

See STRADDLE; WAGER, 2.

PUTATIVE.[6] Supposed; reported; reputed: as, a putative—father, wife, marriage.[7] See BASTARD.

Q.

Q. As an abbreviation, commonly denotes quare, queen, qui, or quod.

Q. B. Queen's bench.

Q. B. D. Queen's Bench Division.

Q. C. Queen's counsel.

Q. c. f. Quare clausum fregit, why he broke the close. See CLOSE, 3.

Q. e. n. Quare executionem non, why execution should not (issue).

Q. S. Quarter sessions. See SESSION, 1.

Q. t. Qui tam. See ACTION, 2.

Q. v. Quod videas, which (word, title, subject) see. Plural qq. v., which words, etc., see, consult, compare.

QUA. See QUI.

QUADROON. See WHITE.

QUÆRE. L. To question, inquire: query, inquiry.

Denotes that a point of law is not fully considered, and is deemed doubtful.

QUÆSTIO. L. An inquiry; question.

Ad quæstionem facti non respondent judices; ad quæstionem legis non respondent juratores. To a question of fact the judges do not respond; to a question of law the jurors do not respond. See JURY.

Cadit quæstio. The question falls: discussion is at an end; there is no room for argument.

Vexata quæstio. A mooted matter; a disputed point.

QUALIFY. 1. To make fit or capable; to be made or become fit or capable. Opposed, disqualify. See INTEREST, 2 (1).

2. To prepare one's self for the discharge of a duty, or the duties of an office.

To qualify as executor is to take an oath to discharge the duties of that trust.[1]

Qualification. The endowment or acquirement which renders eligible to place or position.[2]

"Qualifications" and "qualified," in the constitution of Kentucky, have their most comprehensive sense, referring not only to circumstances that render a citizen eligible to office, or entitle him to vote, but also to those that exempt him from all legal disqualifications for either purpose.[3]

Qualification relates to fitness or capacity for a particular pursuit or purpose. Webster defines it as "any natural endowment or any acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment, or enables him to sustain any character with success."[4]

Disqualification from the pursuit of a particular vocation, from positions of trust, from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or of acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, has been and, perhaps, may still be imposed as punishment.

Jurors in the Federal courts must have the qualifications required for jurors by the law of the State of which they are citizens to serve in her highest courts. Exceptions are made of certain officials, followers of some vocations, persons over a designated age, and persons infirm, or infamous.[5] "Qualifications" here refers to general qualifications as to age, citizenship, etc., not to bias, interest, and the like, which do not disqualify generally, but only at the instance of a party.[6] Conformity to State law is all that is required.[7]

3. To limit, restrict; to modify.

Predicated of one section of a statute in its operation upon another section; of an indorsement (q. v.)

[1] F. pourvu, provision.

[2] Payne v. Conner, 3 Bibb, 181 (1813).

[3] [Exp. Young, 6 Biss. 53-67 (1874), cases; 8 id. 218.

[4] See Pixley v. Boynton, 79 Ill. 353 (1875).

[5] Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 234 (1885), Scott, J.

[6] L. putativus: putare, to think.

[7] Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. 602, 554 (1860).

[1] See Hale v. Salter, 25 La. An. 324 (1873), Morgan, J.

[2] Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 672 (1876), Chambers, J.

[3] [Hall v. Hostetter, 17 B. Mon. 785 (1856); Commonwealth v. Jones, 10 Bush, 744 (1874); 64 Mo. 102.

[4] [Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 319-20 (1866), Field, Justice.

[5] See R. S. § 800.

[6] United States v. Williams, 1 Dill. 495 (1871).

[7] United States v. Collins, 1 Woods, 502 (1873).

of a bill or note which restrains or enlarges liability as ordinarily understood; of a limited right of ownership in property (q. v.); of a base fee (q. v.).

Qualified. (1) Fitted by endowment or acquirement; capacitated; prepared; entitled.

Qualified elector. A person legally qualified to vote.[1]

A "legal voter" is a qualified elector who in fact votes.[1]

Qualified for office. Imports that the person has complied with the law, as, by giving a bond and taking the oath of office.[2]

"Qualified," in the expression "duly qualified," may refer to the condition or status of the officer or to the act of taking the oath.[3] See VACANCY.

Qualified voter. A person qualified to vote generally.[4]

In Colorado, a woman, not being such an elector, cannot, under the constitution, be appointed a notary.[4]

In the constitution of Mississippi, one qualified or entitled to vote, and actually voting.[5]

A voter is one who votes, not one merely qualified to vote.[6]

(2) Limited, restricted; modified: as, a qualified — indorsement, fee, property, qq. v. See also PROVIDED. Compare ABSOLUTE.

QUALITY. See CAVEAT, Emptor; DESCRIPTION, 1.

QUANDO. See ACCIDERE.

QUANTI. See QUANTUM, 1.

QUANTITY. See ABOUT, 2; DESCRIPTION, 1; DIVERS; ESTIMATE; MORE OR LESS; QUANTUM.

QUANTUM. L. 1. How much; as much as; so much; whatever.

Quanti minoris. Of how much less: what reduction.

In Louisiana, an action for an allowance on the price of property on account of a defect discovered after sale.[6]

Quantum damnificatus. How much he has been injured. See under DAMNUM.

Quantum meruit. Whatever he deserved.[7]

Quantum valebat. Whatever it was worth — work, labor, goods, etc. See COUNT, 4 (1), Common.

[1] [Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 362 (1871), Dixon, C. J.
[2] State v. Niebling, 6 Ohio St. 44 (1856), Bartley, C. J.
[3] [People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 636 (1883), Finch, J.; 77 Va. 300, 271.
[4] Notaries Public, 9 Col. 629 (1886).
[5] Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 565 (1884), Matthews, J.; 97 N. C. 233.
[6] Millandon v. Soubercase, 3 Mart. 297 (1825).
[7] See generally 20 Cent. Law J. 326-30 (1885), cases.

2. Amount; quantity: as, the quantum of consideration, damages, evidence.

QUARANTINE.[1] 1. The period of forty days.

The time during which a widow may remain in her husband's chief "mansion-house" after his death, and until her dower is assigned her.[2]

This right was allowed, of dowable lands, by Magna Charta. In most of the States the period has been lengthened, as, to one whole year, or is of indefinite duration.[3]

2. The days during which persons arriving from an infected country must wait before they may land.[4]

The forty days probation by ships coming from infected countries, required by 26 Geo. II (1753), c. 26, and 29 Geo. II, c. 8.[5]

At present, the period varies with the exigencies of the case.

That power to establish quarantine regulations rests with the States, and has not been surrendered to the general government, was settled in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden.[6] The source of the power lies in the general right of a State to provide for the health of its people; and, although the power, when exercised, may, in a greater or less degree, affect commerce, yet quarantine laws are not enacted for that purpose, but solely for preserving the public health. If they injuriously affect commerce, Congress, under the power to regulate it, may control them. Of necessity, they operate on vessels engaged in commerce, and may produce delay or inconvenience, but they are still lawful when not opposed to the Constitution or any act of Congress.[7]

Beyond what is absolutely necessary for self-preservation, a State cannot establish quarantine regulations which interfere with transportation into or through its territory.[8]

The act of Congress of April 29, 1878, provides that no vessel or vehicle coming from a foreign port where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, or with infected passengers, merchandise, or animals, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country, contrary to the quarantine law of any State, except as prescribed in said act.[9]

The system of quarantine laws established by statutes in Louisiana is a rightful exercise of the police

[1] F. quarantine or -taine, forty days: quarante: L. quadraginta, forty.
[2] [2 Bl. Com. 135; 1 Steph. Com. 271.
[3] See 4 Kent, 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 222; 16 Ala. 148; 29 id. 662; 5 Conn. 462; 2 Mo. 163; 5 T. B. Mon. 561; 7 id. 337.
[4] [2 Bl. Com. 135.
[5] 4 Bl. Com. 161.
[6] 9 Wheat. 203 (1824).
[7] Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. 582-83 (1873), Davis, J.
[8] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465 (1877).
[9] 20 St. L. 37: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 313.

power for the protection of health. While some of the rules may amount to regulations of commerce, though not so designed, they belong to that class which the States may establish until Congress acts in the matter by covering the same ground or forbidding State legislation. The requirement that each vessel passing a quarantine station shall pay a fee for examination as to her sanitary condition and the ports from which she came is a part of all quarantine systems; the fee is a compensation for services rendered to the vessel, not a tonnage tax. Nor does it give a preference for a port of one State over those of another: that provision (section nine of Article one) in the Constitution being a restraint upon the powers of the general government. Since the government was first organized, Congress has passed no law to protect the people against the invasion of contagious or infectious diseases from abroad, notwithstanding that yellow fever and the cholera have at times been epidemic. The reason is, no doubt, that Congress has believed that the power to do this belonged to the States, or that what ought to be done could be more efficiently done by local authorities familiar with the matter.[1]

See COMMERCE; HEALTH; POLICE, 2.

QUARE. See Q.

QUARRY. See LAND; MINES; WASTE, 2.

In the Latin of the later ages, quadratarius was a stone-squarer. The French quarriere, the original of quarry, meant the place where stone is cut into squares — a stone pit, referring to a place upon or above, not under, ground.[2]

When land is leased with an open quarry, the lessee, unless restrained by the contract, may remove the stone; but he has no right to open a new quarry.[3]

QUARTER. See COIN; SESSIONS; TREASON.

QUARTO. See DIES, Quarto.

QUASH.[4] To make void or abate;[5] to overthrow, annul.[6]

A plea in abatement prays that the writ or declaration be quashed — cassetur breve.[6]

The ground for exercising the summary power of quashing writs is to clear the record of irregular, void, or defective proceedings.[6]

When an indictment is so defective that a valid judgment cannot be given upon it, should the accused be convicted, the court, upon application, may quash it; or the accused may assign the defect as ground for an arrest of judgment.[7]

Not being a matter of right, but of privilege, the motion will not be received when presented at an unreasonable time, as, after issue joined on a plea of not guilty.[1]

QUASI. L. As if; like, corresponding to. Marks resemblance, yet supposes difference, between objects.[2]

Thus, one may become a quasi accomplice;[3] bank-notes are quasi cash;[4] a common carrier is a quasi public officer;[5] and the postmaster-general is a quasi common carrier.[6] There may be a quasi deposit, as, in finding; and a quasi derelict.[7] The right of stoppage in transitu constitutes a quasi lien.[8] The decisions of administrative commissioners are of quasi judicial character.[9] A bill of lading is only quasi negotiable.[10] Acts of quasi ownership of realty include all acts short of taking possession.[11] Fixtures, chattels real, and leases for years are quasi personalty; heirlooms, and title deeds, quasi realty.[12] A surety is a quasi party, subject to jurisdiction.[13]

Quasi contract. An unassented-to obligation in the nature of a contract.

As, the liability of an heir under his ancestor's covenant respecting realty, or of an executor or administrator for the debt of the decedent.

Quasi corporation. A body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute.[14] See further CORPORATION, Quasi.

Quasi crimes. Offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but in that nature — a class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes.[15]

In Louisiana, certain offenses are termed quasi offenses. Thus, what is an offense in a servant is a quasi offense in the employer.[16]

Quasi records. The books of a distiller, required to be kept by the revenue laws, are an example.[17]

---

[1] Morgan v. Louisiana, 118 U. S. 455, 466 (1886), Miller, J.

[2] [Bell v. Wilson, L. R., 1 Ch. Ap. Cas. *309 (1866), Turner, L. J.

[3] See Bainbridge, Mines, 2.

[4] F. quasser, to break: L. quassare, to shatter.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 308.

[6] Crawford v. Stewart, 33 Pa. 86 (1860); United States v. Rosenburgh, 7 Wall. 583 (1868).

[7] Commonwealth v. Eastman 1 Cush. 214 (1848).

[1] Richards v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 114-15 (1885), cases.

[2] See People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 402 (1871).

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 382.

[4] 2 Chitty, Bl. Com. 384.

[5] 3 Pars. Contr. 357 c.

[6] 3 Pars. Contr. 249.

[7] The Nicholaus, 1 Newb. 449 (1853).

[8] 1 Pars. Contr. 599.

[9] Clinkenbeard v. United States, 21 Wall. 70 (1874).

[10] Nat. Bank v. Merchants' Bank, 91 U. S. 98 (1875).

[11] 3 Pars. Contr. 394.

[12] Wharton's Law Dict.

[13] Blossom v. Milwaukee, &c. R. Co., 1 Wall. 656 (1863).

[14] School District v. Insurance Co., 103 U. S. 708 (1880), Miller, J.; 91 id. 552; 2 Wall. 508.

[15] Wiggins v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 375 (1873), Walker, J.; 29 Minn. 133, 452.

[16] Case v. Citizens' Bank, 100 U. S. 450 (1879).

[17] United States v. Myers, 1 Hughes, 534 (1875); R. S. § 3308.

QUAY. Is a space of ground appropriated to public use: such use as the convenience of commerce requires.[1]

QUE ESTATE. See PRESCRIPTION, 8.

QUEEN. See BENCH; KING.

QUERELA. See AUDIRE, Audita.

QUERY. See QUÆRE.

QUESTION. Interrogation; inquiry; examination. Compare QUÆSTIO.

1. An interrogation addressed to a witness, requesting him to state his personal knowledge as to a fact.

Categorical questions. A series of questions presented in a logical or systematized order; as, the questions propounded in an application for a contract of life insurance.

General question. Requests witness to state all he knows, without directing his attention to a particular matter, as is done in a leading question.

Leading question. A suggestive interrogation.

Puts into a witness's mouth words to be echoed back; plainly suggests the answer desired.[2]

Suggests to the witness the answer he is expected to make, and leads him to make such answer.[3]

A question is also objectionable as leading which embodies a material fact, and admits of answer by a simple affirmative or negative.[4]

Leading questions are not allowed, except: on cross-examination; on a matter introductory to a material part of the inquiry; when the witness appears hostile to the party calling him, is unwilling to testify, or, from want of recollection which a suggestion may assist, makes an omission in his testimony; and in cases where the mind cannot be directed to the subject without particularization. Allowing leading questions is a matter wholly within the discretion of the court.[5]

2. Subject of inquiry; a matter under examination or discussion.

May be of pure fact, of pure law, or of both fact and law; in the last case constituting a mixed question. See JURY; RESERVE, 6.

Federal question. See COURTS, p. 277.

[1] New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. *715 (1836), McLean, J.

[2] [People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 247 (1830): 1 Stark. Ev. 124.

[3] Harvey v. Osborn, 55 Ind. 544 (1877), Howk, J.

[4] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 434; 31 N. H. 488.

[5] See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 434-35; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 449-504, 927; 3 Wash. 580; 11 F. R. 39; 4 Del. Ch. 311; 26 Miss. 159; 40 N. H. 47, 63; 6 Binn. 483; 23 Pa. 143, 440.

QUI; QUID; QUOD. L. Who, he who; which, that which; what; that.

Other inflections: Cui, to whom; cuicunque, to whomsoever; cuilibet, to any one; cujus, of what one, whose. Quem, which (objective); quicquid, whatever.

Qua. On which side; as far as; in so far as; considered as; as.

Freight qua freight;[1] a party qua party;[2] a judgment qua a judgment;[3] qua a contract; qua a regulation.[4]

Qui. He who; whoever.

Qui approbat. See APPROBARE.

Qui facit. See FACERE.

Qui hæret. See LITERA.

Qui non habet. See DARE.

Qui non prohibere. See PROHIBERE.

Qui prior tempore. See TEMPUS.

Qui sentit commodum. See COMMODUM.

Qui tacet. See CONSENSUS.

Qui tam. See ACTION, 2.

Quid. What.

Quid pro quo. What for what; one thing for another thing; also, an equivalent, a consideration — implied in every sale or exchange.[5] See CONSIDERATION, 2.

Quo. In what, with what, by what. See QUOAD; QUOUSQUE.

A quo. From which. Correlative, ad quem, to which.

Designate, respectively, the court or judge from which, and to which, a cause has been removed; also, the day from which (dies a quo) and the day to which (dies ad quem) a period is to be computed; and also, the limit from which, the starting point (terminus a quo), and the limit to which, the end (terminus ad quem) — as, the beginning and ending of a way, of a risk in marine insurance, of the descent of a title.

In quo. In which. See LOCUS; STATUS.

Quo animo. With what motive. See ANIMUS.

Quo jure. By what right. See JUS.

Quo warranto. By what authority. See at length WARRANTUM.

Quod. (1) What; that which.

Quod non apparet. See APPARERE.

Quod populus jussit. See REPEAL.

(2) That; to the end that.

Quod computet. See COMPUTARE.

Quod partitio fiat. See PARTITIO.

[1] 2 Allen, 90.

[2] 1 T. & H. (Pa.) § 577.

[3] 43 Pa. 409.

[4] 19 F. R. 711.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 494; 2 id. 446.

Quod recuperet. See RECUPERARE.

Quorum. Of whom.

As a substantive, the number of members of a body whose presence is necessary to the transaction of business. See MAJORITY.

The commission of oyer and terminer was originally directed to the judges of the courts of Westminster, and several others, but the judges or serjeants at law only are of the quorum, so that the rest cannot act without the presence of one of them. The words of the commission ran "quorum aliquem vestrum unum esse volumus" — of whom we wish some one of you to be present. The justices referred to were eminent for their skill and discretion.[1]

QUIA. L. Because.

Quia emptores. Because purchasers. The initial words of 18 Edw. I (1291), c. 1, statute of Westminster 3, regulating sales of lands and tenements. See FEUD, Subinfeudation.

Quia timet. Because he fears. A bill in equity in the nature of a writ of prevention to accomplish the ends of precautionary justice.[2]

Ordinarily, prevents anticipated mischief, and is not merely to redress it when done. The party seeks the aid of the court "because he fears" some future probable injury to his rights and interests. The manner in which this aid is given depends upon circumstances. The court may appoint a receiver to collect income; order a fund to be paid into court, or that security be given, or that money be paid over; or issue an injunction or other remedial process,— whether the right of enjoyment is present, or future and contingent.[3]

Is always used as a preventive process before a suit is actually instituted. A bill of peace, although sometimes brought before any suit is instituted to try a right, is generally brought after the right has been tried at law.[3] See QUIET, 2; PEACE, 1, Bill of.

QUICK. See DISPATCH; QUICKENING.

QUICKENING. See ABORTION; PREGNANCY.

Takes place about the sixteenth week from conception, yet may vary from the tenth to the twenty-fifth week.[4]

A woman is "quick with child" from the period of conception and the commencement of gestation; and she is "pregnant with a quick child" when the child has become quickened in the womb.[5]

QUIET. 1, adj. Peaceable, undisturbed, unmolested: as, quiet — enjoyment, possession, qq. v.

2, v. To settle the ownership or validity of, by ending disputes or litigation: as, to "quiet a title" to real estate.

The ground of bringing a suit to quiet title is, that the disturber, while asserting a claim which is a cloud on plaintiff's title, refuses to carry it to the test of a trial in court, and because he refuses to do this a court of equity stops his mouth.[1]

The decree operates by way of estoppel as to all parties and ends all litigation between them. Those only who have a clear, legal and equitable title to land connected with possession have any right to claim the interference of a court of equity to give them peace or dissipate a cloud.[2]

The defendant is forbidden, under contempt of court, to assert his title in conflict with complainant's title.[3]

See further CLOUD; PEACE, 1, Bill of.

QUIT. To abandon, relinquish, surrender, qq. v.

To quit a service is to abandon it, not to leave it expecting to return the next day.[4]

Referring to a notice to a tenant to give up possession of premises, has no technical meaning.

Is generally necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, and no definite period is fixed for the termination of the estate. Where a lease is to expire at a certain time, the notice is not necessary, because to hold over would be a wrong.[5] See LEASE; MONTH; NOTIFY.

Quitclaim. v. To give up one's claim of title.

n. A deed in the nature of a release, containing words of release and of grant.[6]

Conveys such interest as the grantor may have, without covenants of title; but covenants against incumbrances imposed by him are usually added. The operative words are "remise, release, and forever quitclaim." The term presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance or a subsisting estate and possession.[7]

In Massachusetts, a deed of quitclaim passes all the estate which the grantor could convey by deed of bargain and sale. If he has in fact a good title, his

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 270; 1 id. 357.

[2] [2 Story, Eq. §§ 826–27; 1 id. § 780.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 852; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 246–51; 3 id. § 1394; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 20 (1884), cases; United States v. Wilson, 118 id. 87, 89 (1886); 7 Wall. 15; 3 Ala. 169.

[4] Denman, Midw. 129; 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 183

[5] Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 89 (1872); 8 C. & P. 262; State v. Emerich, 18 Mo. Ap. 492 (1883).

[1] Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 56–59 (1855), cases, Daniel, J.

[2] Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 265 (1855), Grier, J.; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 556 (1887), cases.

[3] Re Chiles, 22 Wall. 167 (1874).

[4] Heber v. United States Flax Manuf. Co., 13 R. I 305 (1881).

[5] Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 281–82 (1863), Davis, J; Harland v. Eastman, 119 Ill. 26 (1886).

[6] See Nathans v. Arkwright, 66 Ga. 186 (1880).

[7] See Ely v. Stannard, 44 Conn. 533 (1877), Park, C. J.; Hoyt v. Ketcham, 54 id. 63 (1886); Thornton, Conv. 44; 2 Washb. R. P. 606.

deed conveys his estate as effectually as a deed of warranty.[1]

To charge a purchaser with notice of an unrecorded instrument, a secret lien or equity, his deed must purport to convey and quitclaim no more than the right, title or interest of the grantor. If the grantor conveys no more than his title, the presumption is that he had doubt as to his rights and notice of some opposing claim; and he expresses that doubt upon the face of a quitclaim deed. The use of "give, grant, bargain and sell," in addition to "remise, release, and forever quitclaim" the right of the grantor, such as it may be, will not change the character of the conveyance. A "release" is in most States equivalent to the word "quitclaim."[2]

The settled law of the Supreme Court is that one who takes by simply a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser without notice.[3]

Quit-rent. A rent paid by a freeholder in consideration of which he went free from all other services.[4]

QUO. See QUI; WARRANTUM.

QUOAD. L. As to; as regards; concerning.

A prohibition quoad is as to a particular thing among others.

A shareholder in a national bank, who, apprehending a failure of the bank, transfers his stock to an irresponsible person, will still be held as a shareholder quoad the creditors.[5]

Quoad hoc. As to this; as respects the matter in question.[6]

A purchaser or bidder at a master's sale subjects himself quoad hoc to the jurisdiction of the court as a party to the suit.[7]

QUOD. See QUI.

QUONDAM. L. Formerly; former: as, a person quondam infant.[8]

QUORUM. See QUI.

QUOTA. L. The feminine form of quotus: which or what in number, or order; of what number; how many; what part or portion. Apportionment.

The proportion or share of a common burden which belongs to several persons or places.[1]

QUOTATION. See ABRIDGE, 1; REVIEW, 3.

QUOTIES IN VERBIS. See AMBIGUITY.

QUOUSQUE. L. Until such time as; until: temporary or temporarily.

An execution quousque has force till the defendant does a thing required of him. Such, for example, is a capias ad satisfaciendum.

A prohibition quousque has effect until some act be performed, some event happen, or a certain time elapse, or otherwise, as is specified in the order.[2]

R.

R. As an abbreviation, may denote railroad, railway, real, regina, repeal, report, review, revision, rex, rolls, Roman.

R. L. Revised Laws; Roman Law.

R. S. Revised Statutes. See REVISE.

RACE. See CITIZEN, Amendment, XIV; COLOR, 1; SLAVERY.

RACES. See BETTING; GAME, 2.

RACEWAY. An artificial canal dug in the earth; a channel cut in the ground.[3] See AQUA, Currit, etc.

RACK. An engine of torture, consisting of a large frame upon which the body of a person could be gradually stretched until the joints became dislocated.[4]

Was used for extorting confessions from convicts and suspected persons.[4]

Trial by rack is unknown to the law of England. Certain ministers of Henry IV, as a beginning to the introduction of the civil law into the kingdom, erected a rack of torture in the Tower of London; and this was used as an engine of state, not of law, more than once in the reign of Elizabeth. When, however, upon the assassination of Villiers by Felton, it was proposed to put the assassin to the rack to discover who his accomplices were, the judges decided that the proceeding was not allowable.[5]

---

[1] Kyle v. Kavanagh, 103 Mass. 359 (1869); Rawle, Cov. Titles, 36. Compare Cutler v. James, 64 Wis. 177–78 (1885), cases, holding that a quitclaim deed is a "conveyance."

[2] Richardson v. Levi, 67 Tex. 364, 367 (1887), cases, Willie, C. J.

[3] Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 410 (1845); May v. Le Claire, 11 Wall. 232 (1870); Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 id. 338 (1870); Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 584 (1879); Hastings v. Nissen, 31 F. R. 600 (1887). See generally 12 Cent. Law J. 127–30 (1881), cases; 33 Alb. Law J. 244–45 (1886), cases.

[4] [2 Bl. Com. 42.

[5] Bowden v. Johnson, 107 U. S. 261 (1882).

[6] See 1 Bl. Com. 91, 257, 430.

[7] Blossom v. Milwaukee, &c. R. Co., 1 Wall. 656 (1863); Minnesota Co. v. St. Paul Co., 2 id. 634 (1864).

[8] Eureka Company v. Edwards, 71 Ala. 256 (1881).

---

[1] [Bridgewater v. Plymouth, 97 Mass. 390 (1867), Foster, J.

[2] See 1 Steph. Com. 637.

[3] Wilder v. De Cou, 26 Minn. 17 (1879).

[4] Webster's Dict.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 326. See Penny Mag., vol. 1, pp. 53–54 (1832).

RADIUS. Within a radius of ten miles from a particular village means within ten miles from its center.[1]

RAFFLE. See GAME, 2; LOTTERY.

RAILROAD. "Railroad" and "railway" are as nearly exact synonyms as any two words in the language.[2]

May refer to the road-bed and track, with the superstructure — all that forms part of the completed road.[3]

A charter authorizing the construction of a road with one or more tracks, with warehouses, works, and other appendages for the convenient use of the road, confers the right to construct sidings, turnouts, stations, engine-houses, and all other works and appendages usual in the convenient operation of a road.[4]

Switches and side-tracks are essential to the use of "a road." Power to construct them need not be expressed in words; and the spot where they shall be located rests in the discretion of the company.[5]

There is no rule of law to restrict railroad companies as to the curves it shall use in its stations and yards, where the safety of passengers and of the public is not involved. The engineering question as to the curves proper in such places is not a question to be left to a jury to determine.[6]

"Railroad" ex vi termini includes sidings, branches, and like accessories.[7]

"Road" or "railroad" will include the principal road and all adjuncts.[8]

For the purpose of constructing a "railway" the company may construct such stations and other works as it deems proper.[9]

The right to construct sidings to private establishments may be granted by the legislature, because therewith the public interests are subserved.[10]

An extension of the main line may be a "branch."[11]

A "branch" is a section of a road. It may be an offshoot from the main road, or a direct extension from the terminus. The necessity for such branches, and their direction, rests in the judgment of the officers of the company.[12]

[1] Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 177 (1879).

[2] State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 524 (1883).

[3] Beardsley v. Ontario Bank, 31 Barb. 624 (1859).

[4] Philad'a, W. & B. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Pa. 103 (1867).

[5] Cleveland & Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. 325 (1867). See also Pfaff v. Terre Haute, &c. R. Co., 108 Ind. 144 (1886), as to the meaning of "track."

[6] Tuttle v. Detroit, &c. R. Co., 122 U. S. 189 (1887).

[7] Black v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Pa. 252 (1868).

[8] St. John v. Erie R. Co., 22 Wall. 148 (1874).

[9] Lake Superior, &c. R. Co. v. United States, 12 Ct. Cl. 54 (1876): 93 U. S. 442; United States v. Chaplin, 31 F. R. 895 (1887). As to incidents, see 25 Am. Law Reg. 848-51 (1886), cases.

[10] Getz's Appeal, 10 W. N. C. 453 (1881).

[11] Howard County v. Boonville Central Nat. Bank, 108 U. S. 314 (1883).

[12] McAboy's Appeal, 107 Pa. 548, 558 (1884); Western Penn. R. Co.'s Appeal, 99 id. 155, 161 (1881).

Whether the word includes a horse or street rail road, or is to be confined to roads run by steam, depends upon the context and intent. In a general law authorizing consolidation of roads, held to include narrow-gauge roads and horse or street roads.[1]

"Road," referring to a street railway, is not a technical word, requiring explanation by experts. Under a contract that "the road, rolling and live stock" of a company should be exempt from taxation, stables, shops, and like conveniences were held not exempt.[2]

"Railroad" frequently means "railroad company."[3]

May mean all the land, not exceeding a certain amount in width, taken and included in the location — the surface of the land within the limits of the location.[4]

The "road-bed" is the bed or foundation upon which the superstructure of the railroad rests. The "roadway" includes all that and whatever ground the company is allowed on which to construct its road-bed and lay its track. As applied to common roads, the two words ordinarily mean the same thing.[5]

The track on which the steam-cars now transport the traveler or his property is called a road, sometimes, perhaps generally, a railroad. The term "road" is applied to it because in some sense it is used for the same purpose that roads had been used. But until the thing was made and seen no imagination could have pictured it from any previous use of the word road. So the inclosure in which the passengers travel is less like a "coach" than several other vehicles rarely if ever called coaches. It does not, therefore, follow that when a word was used in a statute or a contract seventy years since, it must be held to include everything to which the same word is applied at the present day. The structure over a stream for a railroad is called a "bridge," yet it is not like the bridge of olden time.[6]

When, in an act of Congress, a railroad is referred to in its character as a road, as a permanent structure, and designated and required to be a public highway, the term "railroad" cannot be extended to embrace the rolling stock or other personalty of the company. The reference in such case is to the immovable structure stretching across the country, graded and railed for the use of the locomotive and its train of cars. That such road shall be a "public highway," "for the use of the government, free of toll," etc., means that the road shall be open to the use of the public with their own vehicles, and that the government shall have

[1] Hestonville, &c. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 219-20 (1879); Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 55 (1860); Johnson v. Louisville, &c. R. Co., 10 Bush, 232 (1874); 2 Duv. 175.

[2] Atlanta Street R'y Co. v. Atlanta, 66 Ga. 107-9 (1880).

[3] Calhoun v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 2 Flip. 445 (1879).

[4] Commonwealth v. Haverhill, 7 Allen, 524 (1863); Worcester v. Western R. Co., 4 Metc. 567 (1842).

[5] San Francisco v. Central Pacific R. Co., 63 Cal. 469 (1883), Thornton, J.; 60 id. 34; 32 id. 499: 118 U. S. 413 (1886). See also Pfaff v. Terre Haute, &c. R. Co., 108 Ind. 144 (1886), cases.

[6] Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Co., 1 Wall. 147 48 (1863), Miller, J.; Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Co., 30 F. R. 329 (1887).

the right to use the road, not to require its transportation to be performed by the railroad company.[1]

In theory, railroads are public highways. In practice, they are operated by the companies that own them, or by those with whom they have permanent arrangements for the purpose. These companies have a practical, if not a legal, monopoly of their use. In some States, as in Massachusetts, where railroads were originally declared public highways, the right of the public to use them has been expressly abrogated.[1] See WAY.

Railroad corporations are quasi public corporations dedicated to the public use. It is upon this idea that they have been invested with the power of eminent domain, and that they exercise the functions of common carriers. Their duties and liabilities are defined by law. In accepting their charters they necessarily accept them with all the duties and liabilities annexed. That is to say, they undertake to construct the roads contemplated by their several charters; to keep them in good condition; equip them with suitable rolling stock and safe machinery; employ skilled and trustworthy laborers; provide suitable means of access to and egress from their trains; erect depots and designate stopping-places whenever the public necessities require them; supply, to the extent of their resources, necessary and adequate facilities for the transaction of all the business offered; deal fairly and impartially with their patrons; keep pace with improvements in machinery; and adapt their service to the varying necessities and improved methods of doing business.[2]

A state has power to limit the amount of charges by railroad companies for the transportation of persons and property within its own jurisdiction, unless restrained by some contract in the charter, or unless what is done amounts to a regulation of foreign or inter-State commerce. This power of regulation is a power of government, and if it can be bargained away at all it can only be by words of positive grant or something which is equivalent in law. If there is a reasonable doubt, it must be resolved in favor of the existence of the power.[3]

Railroads are not natural highways of trade and commerce. They are artificial creations; constructed within the territorial limits of the State, by authority of its laws, and ordinarily by means of corporations exercising their franchises by limited grants from the State. The places where they may be located, and the plans according to which they must be constructed, are prescribed by the legislation of the State. Their operation requires the use of instruments and agencies attended with special risks and dangers, the proper management of which involves peculiar knowledge, training, skill, and care. The safety of the public in person and property demands the use of specific guards and precautions. The width of the gauge, the character of the grades, the mode of crossing streams by culverts and bridges, the kind of cuts and tunnels, the mode of crossing other highways, the placing of watchmen and signals at points of special danger, the rate of speed at stations and through villages, towns, and cities, are all matters naturally and peculiarly within the provisions of that law from the authority of which these modern highways of commerce derive their existence. The rules prescribed for their construction and operation, designed to protect persons and property, otherwise endangered by their use, are strictly within the limits of the local law. They are not per se regulations of commerce; it is only when they operate as such in the circumstances of their application, and conflict with the expressed or presumed will of Congress exerted on the same subject, that they can be required to give way to the supreme authority of the Constitution.[1]

See ACCIDENT; ALONG; AGENT; BOND; CARRIER; COMMERCE; COMPENSATION, 3; CONNECTION, 1; CONSOLIDATE; CORPORATION, Public; COUPON; DAMAGES; DEPOT; DOMAIN, 1; ENTRY, I, 3; EXTEND; EXPRESS, 2; FENCE; FERRY; FIXTURE; FRANCHISE, 1; FREIGHT; INTERSECT; LAND, Public; MAINTAIN, 1; MASTER, 2; MORTGAGE; NEGLIGENCE; OBSTRUCT, 1, 2; OVER, 1; PASSENGER; PERISHABLE; POOL; RECEIVER, 2; STATION, 2; STOCK, 2; STRUCTURE; TAKE, 8; TAX, 2; TELEGRAPH; TICKET; TIME-TABLE; TOLL, 2; TORPEDO; TORT, 2.

RAISE. To create; to call or bring into existence; to infer as the result of construction.

Raise a check, note, etc. To increase, by fraudulent means, the face amount or value of a check, promissory note, or other piece of commercial paper. See further NOTE, 2, Raised.

Raise a child. A child is "raised" when it attains twenty-one.[2]

Raise an issue. To produce an issue between parties pleading.

The plea of not guilty is said to "raise the general issue."

Raise portions. Settling realty upon an eldest son, and charging him with the payment of sums to his brothers and sisters.

Raise a presumption. A fact or circumstance, admitted or proven, is said to "raise a presumption" that some other fact, also in issue but not directly established, is or is not as alleged.

[1] Lake Superior, &c. R. Co. v. United States, 93 U. S. 442, 449-51 (1876), Bradley, J. See also Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 663 (1865); Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co. v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 38 Ohio St. 629 (1883); Hale v. County Commissioners, 137 Mass. 114 (1884).

[2] M'Coy v. Cincinnati, Indianapolis, &c. R. Co., 13 F. R. 7 (1882), Baxter, C. J. See also Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 126-34 (1876), cases; Pierce v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 155 (1883), cases.

[3] Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 325, 334 (1886), cases, Waite, C. J.; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 id. 686 (1888); Georgia Railr. & Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 id. 179 (1888).

[1] Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 481 (1888), Matthews, J.

[2] Shoemaker v. Stobaugh, 59 Ind. 598 (1877).

Raise a promise. To infer a promise made, as a matter of justice: as when it is said that the law will or will not "raise a promise" or "an assumpsit" from a transaction. See ASSUMPSIT.

Raise revenue. To bring revenue together; to collect revenue; not necessarily to increase the amount.

This is the meaning in the declaration that a bill "to raise revenue" shall originate in the popular house.[1] See REVENUE.

Raise a use. To call a use into existence; to infer a use to exist, by construction.

In this sense is the saying that equity will "raise a use" from a conveyance in fee without consideration.

RANK. Frequently expresses something different from office; is a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer to fix his position with reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay or emoluments.[2] See GRADE, 2; TITLE, 5.

RANSOM. 1. In old English law, money paid for the pardon of some great offense, or to redeem the person from imprisonment; the redemption of a corporal punishment.[3]

2. Redemption; repurchase.

A friendly belligerent may ransom the property of a neutral after capture.

A bill of exchange given as collateral security for the payment of the ransom of a vessel was held to be a contract on which an action could be sustained in a court of common law. Duress, arising from a threat to destroy vessel and cargo, will not avoid the contract, where the capture was justified by probable cause. A ransom is in the nature of a repurchase of the actual right of the captor as a prize-court would adjudicate it.[4]

RAPE.[5] The carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will.[6]

"It is not easy to express in one definition all the refinements of the decisions upon this subject, especially as statutory definitions differ, and peculiar cases may be stated which are punishable as rape in some jurisdictions while not in others." By the current of authorities, and by statutes, proof of penetration is all that is required; actual violence is not now necessary. If the act was committed without consent,—as where the woman is stupefied by drugs or liquors, or is deceived as to the nature of the act, or is overcome by duress or threats of murder,—the case may be rape, although there was no actual, continued resistance. A girl under ten is not competent to consent[1] (see SEDUCTION), nor is an older female of insane mind. Marriage gives permanent, irrevocable consent.[2]

A male child under fourteen is not conclusively presumed to be incapable of committing the crime.[3]

An assault with intent to commit rape is generally punishable as a distinct offense.

"Ravish" or "ravished" is indispensable in an indictment.[4]

It is a felony to force even a concubine or harlot: she may have forsaken her evil ways. . . The party ravished may give evidence, but the credibility of her testimony must be left to the jury. If she be of good fame, presently disclosed the offense, and made search for the offender who has fled: these and like circumstances give greater probability to her testimony. But, if she be of evil fame, unsupported in her testimony by others, concealed the injury a considerable time, and might have been heard, yet made no outcry: these and like circumstances create a strong but not a conclusive presumption that her testimony is not to be believed.[5]

The punishment varies in different jurisdictions. When the crime is committed on the high seas, or in ports, arsenals, etc., within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, it is punishable with death.[6]

See INDICTMENT; PROSTITUTE; WILL, 1.

RASURE. See ALTERATION, 2.

RATE.[7] 1. Rank, standard; proportion; value, price, amount: as, in rate or rates of fares, rate of exchange (q. v.), rating of vessels.

Rate means price, value. "Going rate" as to freight means an established price for the time.[8]

2. A sum assessed as a tax; in England, a local tax: as, the county, the borough, the poor rate.

---

[1] Perry County v. Selma, &c. R. Co., 58 Ala. 557 (1877).

[2] [Wood v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 159 (1879), Richardson, J.

[3] See 4 Bl. Com. 380; Litt. 127.

[4] Maissonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 325, 337-38 (1815), Story, J.

[5] Mid. Eng. rape, haste, hurry: seizure by force. A popular etymology connects it with L. rapere, to seize hastily,— Skeat.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 210; Commonwealth v. Fogerty, 8 Gray, 490 (1857); 143 Mass. 37; 105 id. 376; 11 Ark. 409; 9 Fla. 183; 52 Ind. 187; 25 Mich. 359; 29 id. 284; 14 Neb. 207; 11 Nev. 257; 20 Tex. Ap. 155; 22 Wis. 445; 64 id. 474; 67 id. 552.

[1] See generally Commonwealth v. Roosnell, 143 Mass. 37-40 (1887).

[2] Abbott, Bouvier, Law Dicts.; 50 Conn. 579; 77 Mo. 157; 50 Wis. 518; 2 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 1107-36; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 550-77.

[3] State v. Jones, 39 La. An. 935 (1887), cases.

[4] Davis v. State, 42 Tex. 228 (1875); 50 Barb. 182. 12 S. & R. 69; 8 Gray, 490; 3 Ind. 330.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 213.

[6] R. S. §§ 5345, 5339.

[7] L. rata (pars): ratus, reckoned, calculated. Compare PRO RATA.

[8] Barrett v. The Wacousta, 1 Flip. 519 (1870).

May apply to the percentage of taxation, or to the valuation of the property.[1]

Ratable. "Ratable estate," within the meaning of a tax law, is taxable estate.[2]

Rates of postage. See MAIL, 2.

RATIFICATION.[3] Acceptance or adoption of an act performed by another as agent or representative; in particular, confirmation of what has been done without original authority.[4]

An adoption of a contract made on our behalf by some one whom we did not authorize, which relates back to the execution of the contract and renders it obligatory from the outset.[5]

Requires some positive, assertive act. An "estoppel" may be created by silence.[6]

Refers to contracts between private persons, to treaties between states, and to changes proposed in written constitutions.

1. Ratification of the unauthorized act of another operates upon the act ratified as if authority to do the act had been previously given, except where the rights of third parties have intervened between the act and the ratification. In other words, it is essential that the party ratifying should be able not merely to do the act ratified at the time the act was done, but also at the time the ratification was made.[7]

It is by express consent, or by conduct inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that of approval; but inoperative, if the party sought to be charged was not competent to make the contract when the same was made, nor when the supposed act of ratification was performed, or if the contract was illegal, immoral, or against public policy.[8]

Where fraud is of such a character as to involve a crime, ratification of the act from which it springs is opposed to public policy, and, hence, cannot be permitted; but where the transaction is contrary only to good faith and fair dealing, where it affects individual interest merely, ratification is permitted. Thus, the forgery of an indorsement, being a criminal act, is incapable of ratification.[9]

Any ratification by an adult of his act done in infancy, of a clear and unequivocal character, showing an intention to affirm, will bind him. Mere acquiescence is not therefore enough. But it is not necessary that the act of affirmance be as solemn as the original act itself.[1]

A distinction is recognized between acts necessary to avoid and to confirm an infant's deed. Some assert that the avoidance must be by an act as solemn as the deed; some, that that cannot be done short of an act of entry; others, that it can be done by another deed to a different grantee. But all agree that acts which would not be sufficient to avoid such a deed may amount to an affirmance. Acquiescence, with other circumstances, may establish a ratification. The reason is, a confirmation is an act of a character less solemn than an avoidance, and it may well be effected in a less formal manner.[1]

No new consideration is required; but it is essential that the person sought to be charged have full knowledge of the facts in the case.[2]

If the principal ratifies that which favors him, he ratifies the whole, as far as it is not unlawful.[3]

To have a retrospective effect, as against the interest of a third party, there must be some mutuality between the ratifying principal and such party.[4]

See AFFIRM, 2; KNOWLEDGE, 1; RATIHABITIO; VOID.

2. Ratification of conventions between independent states. See TREATY.

3. Ratification of amendments to constitutions. See AMENDMENT, 2.

RATIHABITIO. L. Approval; ratification, q. v.

From ratum-habere, to have or to hold firm or established.

Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. A ratification is equal to a command.

Abridged from omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato (priori) æquiparatur, every ratification relates back and is equivalent to a (prior) command. An act of ratification has a retroactive effect, and amounts to previously given authority.

Where the rights of strangers will not be prejudiced, no maxim is better settled in reason and law. In matters of simple contract, it is as applicable to corporations as to natural persons. The rule is, where the principal, upon full knowledge of all the circumstances of the case, deliberately ratifies the acts of his agent, he will be bound thereby as fully as if he had originally given direct authority in the premises to the extent to which such acts reach.[5]

[1] State v. Utter, 34 N. J. L. 494 (1869), Van Syckel, J.; Burlington, &c. R. Co. v. Lancaster County, 4 Neb. 304 (1876), Lake, C. J.

[2] Marshfield v. Middlesex, 55 Vt. 546 (1883), Powers, J.; 115 Mass. 186.

[3] L. L. ratificare, to confirm: ratus, settled; facere, to make.

[4] See Negley v. Lindsay, 67 Pa. 228 (1870), cases.

[5] Hare, Contracts, 272 (1887).

[6] Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 651 (1887).

[7] Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall. 338 (1873), Field, J.; Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 id. 684 (1870), cases; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 451 (1886); 19 Cent. Law J. 482 (1884), cases.

[8] Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 781-82 (1866), cases, Clifford, J.; United States v. Grossmayer, 9 id. 72 (1869).

[9] Shisler v. Vandike, 92 Pa. 449 (1880), Gordon, J.; Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 id. 15 (1863).

[1] Irvine v. Irvine, 9 Wall. 627-28 (1869), cases, Strong, J.; Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 312 (1880), cases; Fink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 311 (1886), cases.

[2] Drakely v. Gregg, 8 Wall. 267 (1868), Davis, J.; Beninghoff v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. 495, 501 (1883), Ruger, C. J.; First Nat. Bank of Ft. Scott v. Drake, 29 Kan. 324 (1883), cases; Bohart v. Oberne, 36 id. 291 (1887).

[3] Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 398 (1884), cases.

[4] Johnson v. Johnson, 31 F. R. 703 (1887), cases.

[5] Story, Agency, § 239; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S.

A legislature may ratify any act which it might have authorized.[1] See RETROSPECTIVE.

RATIO. L. Reason, cause; nature, character.

Cessante ratione, cessat ipsa lex. The reason ceasing, the law itself ceases. When the reason, which is the soul of a law, ceases to exist, the law itself should lose its operative effect.

Thus, the essence of a contract being assent, there is no contract where assent is wanting. A right of way of necessity terminates with the necessity which gave rise to it. A litigant, or a witness, is privileged from arrest only while going to, remaining at, and returning from, the place of trial. If a corporation, made a grantee of land, be afterward dissolved, the grantor may re-enter; for the cause of the grant has ceased.[2]

But a custom may be good though no reason for it can be assigned.[3]

The maxim means that no law can survive the reasons on which it is founded. It needs no statute to change it; it abrogates itself. If the reasons on which a law rests are overborne by opposing reasons, which in the progress of society gain a controlling force, the old law, though still good as an abstract principle, and good in its application to some circumstances, must cease to apply as a controlling principle to the new circumstances.[4] Compare REPEAL.

Ratio decidendi. Reason for deciding; the logic of a ruling.[5]

Ratione materiæ. From the nature of the subject or subject-matter.[6]

Ratione personæ. From the character of the person.[7]

Ratione privilegii. By reason of privilege; by virtue of a franchise or prerogative.[8]

Ratione soli. By reason of the soil; by virtue of ownership in the land.[8]

Ratione tenuræ. By reason of possession or tenure.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi eadem jus. Where the reason is the same, the law is the same. "Like reason maketh like law."

Eadem ratio, eadem lex. The same reason, the same law.

Contrariorum contraria ratio. The reason for things which differ is different.

Dissimilium dissimilis ratio. For unlike things the rule is unlike.[1]

RAVISH. See RAPE.

RE. 1. In the matter of. See RES, Re.

2. The Latin inseparable particle, re, red, again, against.

In compounds, denotes a turning backward, restoration to a former condition, transition into the opposite state; opposition; return, repetition, iteration. See words following.

READING. See INFLUENCE.

1. A deed should be read whenever any party to it desires it. If he can, he should read it himself; if he is blind, or illiterate, another should read it to him. If it is read falsely, it will be void.[2]

If a party who can read will not read a deed placed before him for execution, or if, being unable to read, he will not demand to have it read or explained to him, he is guilty of supine negligence, which is not the subject of protection, in equity or in law.[3]

If a party who can read and write signs a contract without reading the contents, he will be bound by the contract, in the absence of fraud or coercion in procuring his signature.[4]

It is no defense that the defendant was misled as to the contents and effect of the writing, unless it also appears that by reason of some disability he was incapable of reading and comprehending the writing for himself, or that he was imposed upon by some fraudulent device, as, the substitution of one writing for another.[5]

If an applicant for life insurance is required to answer questions relating to material facts in writing, and to subscribe his name thereto, it is his duty to read the answers beforehand, and it will be presumed that he read them.[6]

It is not necessary for a devisee to prove that the will was read to the testator in the presence of the witnesses. In general, this is to be presumed; but if the testator was blind, or incapable of reading, or if a reasonable ground be laid for believing that it was not read to him, or that there was fraud in the transaction,—it is necessary for the devisee to satisfy the 396-97 (1879); Bird v. Brown, 4 Ex. *799 (1850); 132 Mass. 331; 44 N. H. 407; 37 Pa. 104; 52 id. 479; 57 id. 438; 80 id. 406.

---

[1] Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 690 (1878); Thomson v. Lee County, 3 Wall. 331 (1865); Beloit v. Morgan, 7 id. 624 (1868); Spaulding v. Nourse, 143 Mass. 492-94 (1887), cases.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 15, 26, 60, 256, 337, 390; 3 id. 219; 4 id. 336; 1 id. 476, 484.

[3] Smith, Contr. 77.

[4] Beardsley v. City of Hartford, 50 Conn. 542 (1883), Loomis, J. See also 8 Cranch, 249; 106 U. S. 3; 30 Kan. 238; 143 Mass. 489; 44 N. J. L. 96; 60 Pa. 515; 66 id. 338; 67 id. 203; 79 id. 505; 18 R. I. 594; 67 Wis. 112.

[5] 114 U. S. 288.

[6] 17 F. R. 612, 613; 34 La. An. 784.

[7] 4 Hughes, 343.

[8] 108 E. C. L. 870.

[1] 34 La. An. 94, 117.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 304.

[3] Greenfield's Estate, 14 Pa. 496 (1850), Gibson, C. J.; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Shay, 82 id. 203 (1876); Pacific Guano Co. v. Anglin, 82 Ala. 496 (1887).

[4] Illinois Central R. Co. v. Jonte, 13 Bradw. 430 (1885).

[5] Taylor v. Fleckenstein, 20 F. R. 100 (1887), cases; 17 Alb. Law J. 7-10 (1883) — Irish Law Times.

[6] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 532-33 (1886), Field, J.

jury that the will was so read, or that the contents were known to the testator.[1]

2. In ancient pleading, see OYER.

REAL.[2] 1. Actual; neither nominal nor formal: as, a real party. See PARTY, 2.

2. Concerning land; relating to one's interest, ownership or title in land; landed. Opposed to personal.[3] As, real or a real — action, asset, chattel, contract, covenant, estate, privilege, property, representative, security, qq. v.

Realty. Real estate, real property, q. v.

REALIZE. To receive money or value.

An owner of land who agrees to pay a percentage in the event of his realizing a specified sum of money for the land, becomes bound to pay the percentage the moment a responsible person in good faith offers that amount for the land.[4] See BROKER.

RE-APPRAISER. See APPRAISER.

REAR. "In the rear of" a messuage does not necessarily mean directly behind the messuage.[5]

RE-ARGUE. See ARGUMENT.

RE-ARREST. See ARREST, 2.

REASON. Presents no meaning peculiar to jurisprudence.

Reasonable. Agreeable to sound reason, just, rational; also, conformable to the requirements of law, sufficient, proper: as, reasonable — care, diligence, skill; reasonable — cause, doubt, notice, part, time, qq. v.

Compare RATIO; SANE.

REASSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

REBATE. Reduction in the amount of money due in consideration of prompt payment; discount. Compare ABATE.

REBEL; REBELLION. See AMNESTY; BLOCKADE; ENEMY; GOVERNMENT, De facto; MONEY, Lawful; TENDER, 2, Legal; TREASON; WAR.

REBUILD. See REPAIR, 1.

REBUT.[6] To contradict, oppose, do away with; to adduce counter testimony or proof.

Rebut an equity. To impose a construction upon an instrument at variance with the superficial tenor.[7]

[1] Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. 584 (1820), Washington, J. See also Patton v. Hope, 97 N. J. E. 527-98 (1883).

[2] L. res, a thing. See RES.

[3] On the use of "real" and "personal" in English law, see 4 Law Quar. Rev. 394-408 (1888).

[4] Lorillard v. Silver, 25 Barb. 132 (1861). See also Stanford v. Greene County, 18 Iowa, 220 (1865).

[5] Read v. Clarke, 109 Mass. 83 (1871).

[6] F. rebouter, to repulse, repel.

[7] [1 Whart. Ev. § 973, cases.

Rebuttal. As a briefer expression than "rebutting evidence," and also as referring to the time for introducing such evidence, has gained general recognition. Whence "as rebuttal," "on rebuttal," "in rebuttal."

Rebutter. In pleading, defendant's answer to a sur-rejoinder.

Sur-rebutter. Plaintiff's answer to a rebutter.[1]

Rebutting. Referring to evidence, sometimes means contradictory only, at other times conclusive or overcoming.[2]

Rebutting evidence is evidence adduced to rebut a presumption of fact or of law, that is, to avoid its effect; also, any evidence adduced to destroy the effect of prior evidence, whether by explanation or direct denial.[3]

RECALL. See CALL; REVOKE.

RECAPTION. See CAPTION, 1; REPRISAL.

RECAPTURE. See CAPTURE.

RECEIPT. 1. Taking or accepting a thing delivered, usually money, but may be any personalty. Receipts: moneys received. See EARNINGS.

2. Such written acknowledgment by one person of his having received money from another as will be prima facie evidence of that fact in a court of law.[4]

An acknowledgment of payment or delivery.

May contain a contract to perform something in relation to the thing delivered.[5]

Receipt in full. A payment of money, or a delivery of other property, in complete discharge of a demand.

Receipt on account. A payment or delivery of money or other property in part fulfillment of a contract.

Simple receipt. A bare acknowledgment of the payment of money, or of the delivery of personal property of any kind, to the person who signs the receipt.

A receipt in full operates to defeat any further claim for a debt, unless it was obtained under such circumstances of mistake, accident, surprise, or fraud as would authorize a court of equity to set it aside.[6]

A receipt which simply acknowledges a payment or delivery is prima facie, not conclusive, evidence of the

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 310.

[2] Fain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 186 (1858).

[3] [3 Steph. Com. 539; People v. Page, 1 Idaho, 194 (1868).

[4] Kegg v. State, 10 Ohio, 79 (1840), Grimke, J.

[5] The Missouri v. Webb, 9 Mo. 194 (1845).

[6] Aborn v. Rathbone, 54 Conn. 446 (1887).

fact. But if it contains the terms of a contract, it cannot be contradicted or varied by parol,[1] q. v.

Receiptor. 1. He who receives anything delivered by another; he who gives a writing certifying that he has received money or personal property.

See ACCEPTANCE, 1; DEED, 2; DISCHARGE; ESTOPPEL; INTERIM; WAREHOUSEMAN.

2. A person, other than the execution-debtor, who gives a receipt for property attached, engaging, as surety to the officer who makes the levy, that the property will be forthcoming to answer any final judgment the plaintiff may recover.[2]

RECEIVER. One who receives anything belonging to another or others.

1. One who receives stolen goods. See further STEAL.

2. A person appointed by a court of equity to take charge of property in dispute.

"An indifferent person between parties, appointed by the court to receive the rents, issues, or profits of land, or other thing in question in court, pending the suit, where it does not seem reasonable to the court that either of the parties should receive it."[3]

He is an officer of the court; his appointment is provisional — for the benefit of all the parties who may establish rights in the cause. He is but the creature of the court. He has such powers only as are conferred upon him by the order of his appointment and the course and practice of the court.[4]

The order appointing him is in the nature of an injunction or writ of sequestration, preventing any disposition of or interference with the property without the consent of the court.[5]

To authorize a partner to demand the appointment of a receiver, he must show such a case of gross abuse and misconduct in his co-partner that a dissolution ought to be decreed and the business wound up.[6]

When a debtor is insolvent, and his mortgaged property is an insufficient security for the debt, and there is reason to believe that it will be wasted or deteriorated in his hands, as by cutting timber, suffering dilapidation, etc., a court or equity may take charge of the property by means of a receiver, and preserve not only the corpus of the property, but the rents and profits, for the satisfaction of the debt.[1]

He is appointed upon a principle of justice for the benefit of all concerned. Every kind of property of such nature that, if legal, it might be taken in execution, may, if equitable, be put into his possession. Hence, the appointment has been called an "equitable execution." He is virtually a representative of the court, and of all the parties in interest. He is required to take possession of property as directed, because it is deemed more for the interests of justice that he should do so than that the property should be in the possession of either of the parties in litigation. The property in his hands is in the custody of the law. The court gives consent to sue him touching the property, or for malfeasance, and will not permit his possession to be disturbed by force, nor violence to be offered his person. Property claimed by another may be tried by an issue at law, by reference to a master, or otherwise, as the court may direct. . . In the progress of equity jurisdiction it has become usual to clothe such officers with much larger powers than were formerly conferred. In some States they, by statute, settle the affairs of certain insolvent corporations, and sue in their own names. It is not unusual for courts of equity to put them in charge of railroads financially embarrassed, and to require them to operate such roads until the difficulties are removed or until the roads can be sold with the least sacrifice of the interests of those concerned. In all such cases the receiver is the right arm of the jurisdiction invoked. A court of equity may, perhaps, accomplish all the results intended by such legislation.[2]

Whether a receiver of the property of a railroad company shall be appointed is a matter within the discretion of the court, which discretion is to be exercised sparingly, and with caution, and with reference to the circumstances of each case.[3]

Very little discretion is allowed him. He must apply to the court for liberty to sue, to let the estate, or to lay out money on repairs. Where there are tenants, the court is virtually the landlord.[4]

The practice is to ask the court for permission to sue him, as to the property. An unauthorized suit would be a contempt of court.[5] This rule likewise applies to suits for a money demand, or damages.[6]

Without previous consent of court he may not incur any expense on account of the property beyond what

---

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 305, 212; Bishop, Contr. § 176, cases; 2 Story, Contr. § 1338, cases; 2 Whart. Contr. §§ 938-41, cases; 7 Wait, Actions & Def. 444-50, cases; 53 Ind. 574; 59 Iowa, 367; 16 N. H. 489.

[2] See Story, Bailm. § 124; Stevens v. Bailey, 58 N. H. 564 (1879); Hunter v. Peaks, 74 Me. 363 (1883).

[3] Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 331 (1854), Wayne, J., citing Wyatt's Prac. Reg. 355.

[4] Thornton v. Washington Savings Bank, 76 Va. 433 (1882).

[5] Story, Partn. §§ 228, 231; 2 Bates, Partn. §§ 993-1008, cases; 2 Lindley, Partn. *545-55, cases. See also Hanna v. Hanna, 89 N. C. 68 (1883).

[1] Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 395 (1882), Bradley, J.

[2] Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 217-22 (1872), cases, Swayne, J. See 14 W. N. C. 521 (1884), cases.

[3] Sage v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 125 U. S. 376 (1888), Harlan, J.

[4] Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 331 (1854), cases.

[5] People's Bank of Belville v. Calhoun, 102 U. S. 256 (1880).

[6] Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126-36 (1881), cases. Actions by and against him, 25 Am. Law Reg. 289-304 (1886), cases; against him, for a personal wrong, Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Texas Pacific R. Co., 30 F. R. 167, 169 (1887), cases.

is absolutely necessary to its preservation and use, as contemplated by his appointment.[1]

He has no extra-territorial power of official action. If he seeks to be recognized in another jurisdiction, it is to take the fund there out of it, without such court having any control of his subsequent action in respect to it.[2]

Receiver's certificate. A non-negotiable evidence of debt, or debenture, issued by authority of a court of chancery, as a first lien upon the property of a debtor corporation in the hands of a receiver.[3]

The power in a court of equity to appoint managing receivers of such property as a railroad, when taken under its charge as a trust fund for the payment of incumbrances, and to authorize such receivers to raise money necessary for the preservation and management of the property, and make the same chargeable as a lien thereon for its repayment, cannot at this day be seriously disputed. It is a part of that jurisdiction by which it is its duty to protect and preserve the trust funds in its hands. It is, undoubtedly, a power to be exercised with great caution; and, if possible, with the consent or acquiescence of the parties interested in the fund.[4]

Many circumstances may exist to make it necessary for the receiver to pay pre-existing debts of certain classes out of the earnings of the receivership, or even out of the corpus of the property, with a priority of lien. Yet the discretion allowing this should be exercised with great care.[5]

The court, in order to preserve the road, and, perhaps, to complete inconsiderable portions of it, and put it into a condition for the transaction of business, may make money borrowed on certificates a lien on the property superior to that of the first mortgage.[6]

But, in order to complete an unfinished road, except under extraordinary circumstances, the power of the court ought not to be exercised to enable the trustee to borrow money on certificates and create a paramount lien therefor. It is better to reorganize the enterprise on the basis of existing mortgages as stock, or an equivalent, and by a new mortgage, with a lien superior to the old, raise the money required without asking the court to engage in railroad building.[7]

Where receivers issue and dispose of certificates contrary to orders, the certificates are invalid, even in the hands of a subsequent bona fide taker for value.[1]

RECESSION. See CEDE.

RECIPROCITY. See COMITY; EXTRADITION; TREATY.

RECITE. To set forth in writing facts explanatory of a transaction,— its nature, or the reasons for it.

In pleading, "reciting a statute" is quoting or stating its contents.[2]

Recital. The statement, in a deed or other instrument, of the reason for executing it, or of its relation to other instruments.

Misrecital. An erroneous recital.

Constitutes part of the premises of a deed. Usually begins with "whereas," and sets forth such other deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction is founded.[3]

Particular recitals in a deed may operate as an estoppel upon the parties thereto, and their privies; not so general recitals. But no recital can bind innocent third parties. A recital of purchase-money is always open to dispute.[4]

It is laid down generally that a recital of one deed in another binds the parties, and those who claim under them. Technically speaking, it operates as an estoppel, and binds parties and privies,— privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law. But it does not bind mere strangers, or those who claim by title paramount to the deed; nor persons claiming by an adverse title or from the parties by title anterior to the date of the reciting deed. But there are cases in which such a recital may be used as evidence even against strangers. If, for instance, there be a recital of a lease in a deed of release, and in a suit against a stranger the title under the release comes in question, there the recital is not per se evidence of the existence of the lease. But if the existence and loss of the lease be established by other evidence, the recital is admissible as secondary proof, in the absence of more perfect evidence, to establish the contents of the lease; and if the transaction be ancient, and possession has long been held under such release, and is not otherwise to be accounted for, the recital will of itself materially fortify the presumption, from lapse of time

---

[1] Cowdrey v. Galveston, &c. R. Co., 93 U. S. 354 (1876).

[2] Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 338-39 (1854), cases. On suing in foreign jurisdictions without leave of the appointing court, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 551-70 (1887), cases.

[3] Beach, Receivers, § 879; ib. 880-402, cases. See also, generally, High, Rec., §§ 398 c-g, cases; 3 Wood, Railw. Law, 1675-77, cases.

[4] Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 162 (1877), Bradley, J. Quoted, 106 id. 310, infra.

[5] Miltenberger v. Logansport R. Co., 106 U. S. 311 (1882), Blatchford, J.

[6] Stanton v. Alabama, &c. R. Co., 2 Woods, 506 (1875); Kennedy v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 2 Dill. 448 (1873).

[7] Shaw v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 100 U. S. 605, 612 (1879), Waite, C. J. In foreclosing mortgages, see 26 Cent. Law J. 543-46 (1888), cases; points of practice, 19 Am. Law Rev. 400-23 (1885), cases; his compensation, Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 187 (1887).

See generally Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland R. Co., 117 U. S. 434 (1886), Blatchford, J.; 23 Cent. Law J. 340 (1886), cases; 3 Law Quar. Rev. 429-45 (1887), cases; 100 U. S. 153; 3 Woods, 316, 514, 527, 691; 5 Dill. 519, 476; 60 Ala. 331; 16 Wend. 421; 71 N. Y. 401; 12 R. I. 497; 11 Heisk. 210, 412.

[1] Stanton v. Alabama, &c. R. Co., 31 F. R. 585 (1887). Same v. Same, 2 Woods, 512 (1875), cases.

[2] Gould, Pl., 4 ed., p. 46, note; 6 W. Va. 648.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 298.

[4] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1039-43; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 28, 26; 3 Devlin, Deeds, §§ 992-1009.

and length of possession, of the original existence of the lease.[1]

Compare INDUCEMENT; PREAMBLE. See BOND, Municipal; COUPON; ESTOPPEL.

RECKLESS. See CARE; NEGLIGENCE; WANTON.

RECLAIM. 1. To demand back what was formerly parted with: as, in suing for money advanced upon goods which were never delivered.

2. To domesticate, tame: as, to reclaim an animal (q. v.) of a wild nature; to cultivate, till: as, to reclaim wild or waste lands.

RECOGNITION. See ACQUIESCENCE; RATIFICATION.

RECOGNIZANCE.[2] An obligation of record, entered into before a court of record or a magistrate duly authorized, with condition to do some particular act; as, to appear at court, to keep the peace, to pay a debt.[3]

Is commonly applied to all forms of security for the appearance of the accused in criminal proceedings, whether in the form of a common-law recognizance or of a common bond; and so of appeals from probate courts. "Bond" is not unfrequently used as a general term, including "recognizance," which is but one kind of a bond. The difference in some States is now largely one of form; and the terms are often interchanged.[4]

In most respects a recognizance is like any other bond; the difference being chiefly that a "bond" is the creation of a fresh debt or obligation de novo; a recognizance is an acknowledgment of a former debt upon record. The cognizor (or conusor), the person who enters into it, acknowledges to owe the cognizee, the party to whom it is given (perhaps the commonwealth or government), a specified sum of money, with the condition to be void on performance of the thing stipulated. This, being either certified or taken by the officer of a court, is witnessed only by the record of that court, and not by the party's seal; so that it is not in strict propriety a deed, though the effects of it are greater than a common obligation, being allowed a priority in point of payment, and binding the lands of the cognizor, from the time of enrollment on record.[3]

The provision that the cognizor shall not depart without leave of court has often been held to be distinct from those which bind him to answer the specified charge, or all matters which may be alleged against him, or to abide the final order of the court.[1]

Recognize. To bind by a recognizance: as, to recognize a witness for his appearance.[2]

Recognizee. He in whose favor a recognizance is executed; a cognizee.

Recognizor; recognitor. He who executes a recognizance; a cognizor.

Recognizances are also required by courts as security for the due administration of trust property.

A person accused of crime may be "discharged upon his own recognizance" when the evidence against him is slight and the time for trial distant.

A recognizance is a matter of record, in the nature of a judgment. The process upon it, whether a scire facias or a summons, is intended to carry it into execution, and is judicial; it is an original suit in the sense that the defendant may plead to it. When final judgment is given, the whole of the proceedings constitutes one record.[3]

A recognizance is a debt of record, in the nature of a conditional judgment, which a recorded default makes absolute. It is subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by the plea, or to such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture. The object of a scire facias is to notify the cognizor to appear and show cause why execution should not issue for the sum acknowledged.[4]

See BAIL, 2; ONUS, Exoneretur.

RECOMMENDATION. See LETTER, 3, page 613.

RECOMPENSE. See COMPENSATION.

RECONSTRUCT. See REFORM; REPUBLICAN, Form, etc.

RECONVENTION. In civil law, a species of cross-bill; an action by defendant against plaintiff, before the same judge.[5]

The defendant does not render unavailable his allegation that the contract in suit is unlawful by a further defense in "reconvention;" as, by claiming damages for a non-fulfillment of the contract, if valid, on the part of the plaintiff.[6]

RECONVEYANCE. See CONVEYANCE.

RECORD. 1, v. To preserve the memory of, by committing to writing or printing or by inscription; to write or enter in official

[1] Carver v. Astor, 4 Pet. *83 (1830), Story, J.; Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 283 (1888), cases, Matthews, J. As to variance in recitals, see 24 Cent. Law J. 55 (1887) — Irish Law Times.

[2] Re-kŏg'-ni-zans, or -kŏn'. In legal usage the verb is re-kog'-nize.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 341, 465.

[4] Re Brown, 35 Minn. 308 (1886), Mitchell, J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Teevens, 143 Mass. 215-16 (1887), cases.

[2] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 313.

[3] Respublica v. Cobbett, 3 Dall. *475 (1798).

[4] State v. Warren, 17 Tex. 288 (1856). As to discharge and forfeiture, see 18 Cent. Law J. 245-49 (1884), cases. See also 9 Pet. 329, 356; 15 W. N. C. 229; 30 Cal. 629; 58 Ill. 436; 33 Ind. 219; 12 Kan. 465; 73 Me. 554; 43 Md. 306; 121 Mass. 84; 25 Miss. 54; 56 N. H. 178; 6 Wend. 330; 26 Barb. 433; 2 Oreg. 316; 37 Pa. 181.

[5] Story, Eq. Pl. § 403; 4 Mart., La., 439; 7 id. 283; 8 id. 516.

[6] Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542 (1868); Barras v. Bidwell, 3 Woods, 9 (1876); 14 How. 368.

books for authentic evidence; to transcribe, in permanent form, for reference.

2, n. A memorial of what has been done; a writing or document preserved as evidence; authentic written evidence, considered as either public or private, but usually public. See WRITING, Public; RECORDUM.

The acts and judicial proceedings of a court of record are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony; and the rolls are called the "records" of the court.[1] See COURT, Of record.

Judicial record. An official record of proceedings in a court of justice.

Usage, in England, has made parchment the material for perpetual memorials. In the United States, records are kept in bound books of linen paper, parchment, as the material, no longer entering into the definition.

In many expressions, referring to proceedings before courts of review, what is really meant is a copy of the record; as, in the expressions "defect in the record," "diminution of the record," "show error by the record," "error apparent upon the face" or "in the record," "the record shows" or "does not show," "remit the record."

A record, or judicial record, is a precise history of a suit from its commencement to its termination, including the conclusion of the law thereon, drawn up by the proper officer, for the purpose of perpetuating the exact state of the facts. In the language of Lord Coke, "records are memorials or remembrancers, in rolls of parchment, of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice, which hath power to hold plea according to the course of the common law."[2]

Matter of record. Any judicial proceeding entered upon the records of the court in which it originates, or to which it is carried for review.

Thus, the pleadings in an action being entered upon the records of the proper court and filed with its officer as the authentic history of the suit, are thence termed a matter or matters of record. Opposed, "matter in deed," q. v.

Of record. On record; recorded. Opposed, not of record: unrecorded; not legally recorded.

Contracts of record. Express contracts evidenced by some matter on record in a court; as, a judgment, or a charge in that nature.

Merges any other contract or ground of action; is, in effect, an estoppel, q. v.; requires no consideration; binds the debtor's realty; is avoided by fraud or illegality; and is discharged by satisfaction entered on the record itself.

Affidavits, depositions, and other matters of evidence, though appearing in the transcript of the proceedings of a common-law court, do not form part of the record, unless made so by an agreed statement of the facts, a bill of exceptions, a special verdict, or a demurrer to the evidence. They must be made a part by some regular proceeding at the time of trial and before the rendition of judgment.[3]

Nul tiel record. No such record. A plea that there is no such matter of record in existence as the opposite party alleges.[4]

Puts in issue only that fact; and is met by the production of the record itself, valid upon its face, or an exemplification duly authenticated. A defense which requires evidence to contradict the record admits its existence and seeks to avoid its effect — by special plea, as at common law, or by an equivalent. Defects on the face of the record may be taken advantage of upon production, but defects which require extrinsic evidence to make them apparent must be formally alleged before they can be proven.[5] See APPEARER, De non, etc.

Denial of a record of a foreign court is tried by a jury, because the existence of the record to be inspected must first be proven.[6]

Judicial records are "of such incontrolable credit and verity that they admit no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary; and if such record be alleged, and it be pleaded that there is no such record, it shall be tried only by itself."[6] This is called trial by record, and is by bare inspection whether there is any such record or not; otherwise, there would be no end to disputes.[6] See INSPECTION, 2.

The records of the domestic courts of England and of some of the States are held to import absolute verity, as well in relation to jurisdictional as to other facts, in all collateral proceedings. Public policy and the dignity of the courts are supposed to require that no averment shall be admitted to contradict the record. But the rule has no extra-territorial force.[7] See JURISDICTION, 2.

If there appears any material mistake of the clerk in making up a record the court will direct him to amend it.[8] Courts of record may at any time, of their own motion, without notice, correct the mistake of a recording officer so as to make the record conform to

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 24.

[2] Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 217 (1839), Williams, C J.; Coke, Litt. 260 a. See also 18 F. R. 609; 2 Ark. 33; 11 id. 355; 34 Cal. 423; 44 Conn. 53; 2 Dak. 470; 49 Me. 345; 4 Metc., Mass., 423; 51 Miss. 656; 6 Ohio, 427; 18 id. 469; 7 Baxt. 56.

[3] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Trustees, 91 U. S. 130 (1875), cases, Clifford, J. See also Roanoke Land, &c. Co. v. Hickson, 80 Va. 591 (1885), cases.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 331.

[5] Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 455 (1874), cases, Waite, C. J.; Clark v. Melton, 19 S. C. 506 (1883).

[6] Basset v. United States, 9 Wall. 40 (1869), cases.

[6] Coke, Litt. 260 a; 13 Conn. *218.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 24, 331.

[7] Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 468 (1873), Bradley, J.; State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 800 (1883), cases.

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 24.

the truth. They are the exclusive judges of the propriety and of the proof.[1] See ERROR, 2 (1); MISPRISION, 2; NUNC PRO TUNC.

The old notion that a record remains in the breast of the court only till the end of the term has yielded to necessity, convenience, and common sense.[2] See TERM, 4.

Recorder. 1. An officer charged with the preparation and custody of records, especially records of deeds of all descriptions; a register, q. v.

2. An officer, in cities of a few States, who exercises original jurisdiction in determining some of the more common criminal complaints, and adjudicates matters of a limited, civil nature.

Anciently, one who recited or testified on recollection, as occasion required, what had previously passed in court, and this was the duty of the judges, thence called recordeurs.[3]

In England, he is often a person learned in the law whom the magistrate of a city, by virtue of the king's grant, associates with himself for his direction in judicial proceedings. The recorder of the city of London is practically the judge in the Lord Mayor's court of the city.[4]

Recording. Copying an instrument into the public records, in a book kept for that purpose, by or under the superintendence of the officer appointed therefor.[5]

Recording Acts. Statutes which regulate the official recording of conveyances, mortgages, bills of sale, hypothecations, assignments for the benefit of creditors, articles of agreement, and other sealed instruments, for the purpose of informing the public, creditors and purchasers, of transactions affecting the ownership of property and the pecuniary responsibility of individual persons.

Also, statutes which regulate the registration of vessels. Compare REGISTRY.

Public records, by construction of law, are notice to all persons of what they contain. Their contents are matters of public knowledge, because the law requires them to be kept, authorizes them to be used, and secures to all persons access to them that knowledge of them may be public; and thence imputes to all interested persons that knowledge the opportunity to acquire which it has provided. The law assumes the fulfillment and not the defeat of its own ends. It will not permit its policy to be gainsaid, not even by a plea of personal ignorance of its existence or extent. It would defeat that purpose not to presume with conclusive force that the notice, which it was their office to communicate, had reached the party interested in receiving it.[1]

See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; AUTHENTICATION; DELIVERY, 4; DIMINUTION; ERROR, 2 (3); EVIDENCE; EXEMPLIFICATION; FACE, 1; FAITH, Full, etc.; FALSIFY, 2; INDEX; JUDGMENT; LODGE, 1 (2); LOST, 2; NOTICE, 1; QUASI; REMIT; SATISFACTION, 1.

RECORDARI. L. To be recorded.

Recordari facias loquelam. That you cause the plaint to be recorded. A writ formerly in use to remove a suit in replevin from a county court to a superior court.[2]

In North Carolina the writ of recordari secures a new trial of a case heard before a justice of the peace, and a reversal of a judgment erroneously rendered by him.[3]

Recordum. A record; a judicial record. Prout patet per recordum. As appears by the record. Abridged prout patet, and prout. A formula for reference to a record.

A writing either admitted or rejected as evidence, and excepted to, should appear in the bill of exceptions by a prout.[4]

RECOUP.[5] To cut out a part: to keep back, withhold part of a sum demanded.

Recoupment. Reduction of a demand.

"Recoupe" is synonymous with defalk or discount. "Recoupment" is keeping back something alleged to be due, because there is an equitable reason for withholding it.[6]

For example, in an action for damages due on a contract, the defendant may recoup the damages he has sustained from the imperfect execution of the work.[7]

Arises where there is an action upon a contract, or some obligation arising out of it, and there has been a breach of a divisible part of it or of such obligation.[8]

Means a cutting back on the plaintiff's claim by the defendant. Properly applicable to a case where the same contract imposes mutual duties and obligations, and one party seeks a remedy for the breach of the

---

[1] Gilman v. Libbey, 4 Cliff. 454, 460 (1878), cases, Clifford, J.; Blanchard v. Ferdinand, 132 Mass. 390 (1882); Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 157 (1883).

[2] Rhoads v. Commonwealth, 15 Pa. 276 (1850).

[3] Stephen, Plead. App. xix, note 11.

[4] Cowell's Law Dict.; 1 Steph. Hist.Cr. Law Eng. 117; Respublica v. Dallas, 3 Yeates, 315 (1801).

[5] [Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 175 (1836), Williams, C. J.

[1] Nealing v. Wells, 104 U. S. 433-41 (1881), cases, Matthews, J.; Moore v. Simonds, 100 id. 145 (1875); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 484; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 403-4; 4 Wheat. 487.

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 34, 37, 195.

[3] Weaver v. Mining Co., 89 N. C. 189 (1883), cases.

[4] Wilson v. Horner, 59 Pa. 155 (1868); 10 Me. 134; 1 Chitty, Plead. 356.

[5] F. recoupe, a shred: recouper, to cut again. Compare COUPON.

[6] [Ives v. Van Epps, 23 Wend. 156 (1839): Tomlins' Law Dict.

[7] Dermott v. Jones, 23 How. 235 (1859).

[8] Merrill v. Everett, 38 Conn. 48 (1871), Butler, C. J.

duty by the second, and the second meets the demand by a claim for a breach of duty by the first.[1]

It is the right to set off unliquidated damages. "Set-off" comprehends only liquidated demands, or demands which are capable of being ascertained by calculation.[2]

Anciently, it was applied to the right of deduction from the damages claimed by the plaintiff on account of part-payment, depreciation or failure of consideration, or some analogous act. The right is now recognised under the name of deduction or reduction of damages; while the meaning of recoupment has been greatly enlarged and changed — extended to cross-demands existing in favor of the defendant, and arising out of the same contract or transaction upon which the plaintiff founds his action.[3]

See DEFALCATION; SET-OFF.

RECOURSE.[4] A going back; resort.

Without recourse. By the use of these words the holder of negotiable paper may transfer title without incurring the responsibility of an indorser.[5] See INDORSEMENT, Qualified.

RECOVER. To obtain by judicial action or proceeding.

Referring to a note: to collect or obtain the amount, possibly by a suit at law.[6]

Applied to debt and demands generally intends action by process and course of law.[7] See RECUPERARE.

Recovery. Obtaining by legal process or proceeding; restoration of a right by judicial award.

The actual possession of anything or its value, by judgment of a legal tribunal.[8]

Implies adjudication, and receipt of the thing.[9]

As to "recover" is to obtain by course of law, "recovery" is obtaining a thing by judgment of a court, as the result of an action brought for the purpose.[10]

Common recovery. A mode of transferring title to land.

Abolished in England by 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1834), c. 74. In the United States, either expressly abrogated or fallen into disuse.

Consisted of a suit, actual or fictitious, invented to elude the statute of mortmain and to unfetter inheritances. The land was recovered against the tenant of the freehold. This recovery, as a supposed adjudication of the right, bound all persons, and vested an absolute fee-simple estate in the recoverer.[1]

A religious house, for example, set up a fictitious title. The tenant, by collusion, making no defense, judgment was given for the plaintiff. This was a recovery by sentence of law upon a supposed prior title. In time, the procedure became a common assurance, and a legal mode of conveyance by which a tenant in tail could dispose of his land and tenement.[2] Compare FINE, 1.

Former recovery. Previous adjudication; former judgment.

Upon a question directly involved, a former recovery is conclusive in another suit.[3]

A plea of former recovery, whether it be by confession, verdict, or demurrer, is a bar to any new action of the same or the like nature for the same cause. There must be at least one decision on the right. The reason of the rule is, there must be an end to litigation after the merits of a cause have been determined.[4] See further ADJUDICATION.

RECRIMINATION. See CRIME, Criminate.

RECTIFIER. In the internal revenue laws, any one who rectifies or purifies spirits in any manner whatever, or who makes any mixture of spirits with any thing else, and sells it under any name.[5] See DISTILLER.

RECTUS. See CURIA, Rectus.

RECUPERARE. L. To recover; literally, to get again — re-capere.

Quod recuperet. That he may recover. The ordinary form of a judgment at law for the plaintiff. See RECOVER.

RED TAPE. 1. Tape used for tying up documents.

[1] Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 207, 206 (1873), Ross, J., citing 2 Pars. Contr. 247, 28 Vt. 414; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 113 (1886).

[2] [Parker v. Hart, 32 N. J. E. 220 (1880): Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill, 174 (1842), Bronson, J.

[3] Emery v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 77 Mo. 345 (1883), cases, Martin, C. See also 7 Am. Law Rev. 389-416 (1873), cases; 27 Ala. 574; 17 Ark. 270; 95 Ill. 476; 9 Ind. 470; 39 Me. 382; 4 Mich. 619; 54 Miss. 563; 49 Mo. 572; 2 N. Y. 236; 13 id. 151; 6 Barb. 391; 28 Vt. 413; 4 Wis. 440; 2 Pars. Contr. 760.

[4] Re-course'.

[5] See Byles, Bills, 154, note by Sharswood; 100 U. S. 714; 18 Iowa, 202; 12 Mass. 14; 2 Allen, 434; 18 Ohio St. 515; 8 Pa. 468.

[6] See Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. *128 (1833), Story, J.

[7] [Jones v. Walker, 2 Paine, 719 (1790?), Jay, C. J.

[8] Strohecker v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Pa. 45 (1847).

[9] [Lapham v. Almy, 13 Allen, 305 (1866), Gray, J.; 1 Wheat. 468.

[10] [Keiny v. Ingraham, 66 Barb. 257 (1873): Burrill's Law Dict. See also Norton v. Winter, 1 Oreg. 48 (1853); Hoover v. Clark, 3 Murphey, 171 (1819): Coke, Litt. 154.

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 357.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 271, 117. See Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. 364 (1823); Martin v. Strachan, 5 T. R. 108, n. (1793); 4 Kent, 487; 8 Mass. *34.

[3] Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 606 (1876), cases; Cromwell v. County of Sac, id. 351 (1876), cases; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 id. 525-40 (1878), cases; 101 id. 539.

[4] Haldeman v. United States, 91 U. S. 585 (1875), Davis, J.

[5] Quantity of Distilled Spirits, 3 Bened. 73 (1868), Act 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 117; United States v. Tenbrook, 1 Pet. C. C. 180 (1545).

2. Extreme official formality.[1]

Order carried to fastidious excess — system run out into trivial extremes.[2]

REDDERE. L. To give back: to return, render, restore.

Reddendo singula singulis. Referring the several things to distinct persons: construing distributively — the particular things enumerated among the different persons designated.[3]

Reddendum. Rendering; yielding: yielding and paying. See DEED, 2; YIELDING.

Redditus; reditus. Something given back; return; rent, q. v.

REDEEM.[4] To buy back; to repurchase.

Redeemable. Obtainable again by purchase. Opposed, irredeemable.

Redemption. Purchasing a thing which the buyer formerly owned; repurchase.

Used of the payment of a mortgage debt — whereupon the absolute title to the property becomes revested in the mortgagor; also, by analogy, of the act by which a pledgor pays his debt and receives back the article bailed.

Equity of redemption. The privilege in a mortgagor to redeem his property forfeited by default in payment.

At common law, when the condition was broken, the estate in the mortgagee became indefeasible. At an early period equity let the mortgagor, within a reasonable time, extendible once or oftener, redeem upon payment of the amount due — the debt being regarded as the principal thing. This equity is a distinct estate from that vested in the mortgagee before or after condition broken, and is descendible, devisable, and alienable like other interests in realty. As a right, it is jealously protected; any limitation is contrary to public policy, and void. Proceedings to foreclose the equity are regulated by statute, and the regulations are part of the mortgage contract.[5] See further MORTGAGE.

Stock may be pledged for the redemption of certificates of debt with interest, and foreclosure decreed upon non-payment of any installment.[6]

RE-DIRECT. See EXAMINATION, 9.

RE-DISCOUNT. See DISCOUNT, 2.

[1] See Webster's Dict.

[2] Webster v. Thompson, 55 Ga. 484 (1875), Bleckley, J.

[3] See 12 Pick. 291; 18 id. 298; 143 Mass. 562; 37 N. J. E. 2; 14 Ves. 490.

[4] L. redimere, to buy back.

[5] Clark v. Reyburn, 8 Wall. 321-22 (1868), cases, Swayne, J. See also Pough v. Davis, 96 U. S. 337 (1877); 40 Cal. 296; 24 Me. 198; 9 Oreg. 351; 44 Vt. 612; 4 Kent, 159.

[6] Swasey v. North Carolina R. Co., 1 Hughes, 1 (1874), Waite, C. J.; 71 N. C. 571; 22 Wall. 405.

REDRESS.[1] A setting right; reparation; relief against wrong; satisfaction for an injury done; remedy.

The more effectually to accomplish the redress of private injuries, courts of justice are instituted to protect the weak from the insults of the strong, enforcing those laws by which rights are defined and wrongs prohibited. This remedy is had by application to the courts, that is, by civil suit or action. But private injuries may also be redressed: (1) by the act of the injured party, as in defense of self, child or parent; by the reception of goods; by entry upon realty; by abating nuisances; by distraining animals doing damage; (2) by the joint act of the injured and the injuring parties, as in accord, and arbitration; (3) by operation of law, as in retainer, and remitter.[2]

See RELIEF, 2; REMEDY; DAMAGES.

REDUCE. See POSSESSION; RECOUP.

REDUNDANCY. Matter inserted in a writing foreign to its purpose; superfluous statement; surplusage.

A material distinction is made between redundancy in allegations and redundancy in the proof. In the former case, a variance between the allegations and the proof will be fatal, if the redundant allegations are descriptive of that which is essential. But in the latter case, redundancy cannot vitiate, merely because more is proved than is alleged, unless the matter superfluously proved goes to contradict some essential part of the allegation.[3] See SURPLUSAGE.

RE-ENACT. See ACT, 3.

RE-EXAMINE. See EXAMINATION, 9.

REEVE. Steward; officer.

The original Anglo-Saxon was geréfa, distinguished, famous.[4] The word is preserved in a few proper names and in port-reeve, sea-reeve, sheriff, qq. v.

REFER. 1. To send to a person specially selected, for examination and report, a question or issue raised in a pending suit.

Referee. The person so designated: an auditor, master, register in bankruptcy, or like officer.

As used in Rev. St. § 894, which allows a docket fee to be taxed on a trial "before referees," — a class of officers who are appointed in pursuance of State statutes, to hear and determine all or a portion of the issues that arise on the final hearing of a cause. It does not refer to or include masters in chancery, however they may hold their places.[5]

Reference. The act, order, or paper by which a matter is committed to one or more persons for investigation and report.

Refer back; reference back. Import a sec-

[1] Re-dress'.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 3-19.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 67; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 945, 1004.

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 116.

[5] Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 695-96 (1887), cases, Thayer, J.

ond or new return of a matter to the referee (auditor, master, etc.) for an additional or amended report.

When a case is referred, not by a submission in pais, but by a rule of court, the referee derives his authority from the court, not from the consent of the parties. The case remains in court subject to its power, and a judgment must be entered by the court. The procedure is a substitute for a trial by jury.[1]

See ARBITRATION; AUDIT; AWARD, 2; FINDING, Special; MASTER, 4; REPORT, 1 (1).

2. A reference in one instrument to another incorporates the latter. See further VERBUM, Verba illata, etc.

REFLECTION. See DELIBERATION; PREMEDITATE.

REFORM. To rectify; to make an instrument what it ought to be; to reconstruct according to the intention of all parties.

If through fraud, ignorance, or mistake an obligation does not express the meaning of the parties, it will be reformed so as to conform to it; as, where it is joint, or several, or joint and several, by an oversight.[2]

Where an agreement as reduced to writing omits or contains terms or stipulations contrary to the common intent of the parties, the instrument will be corrected so as to make it conform to the real intent. The parties will be placed as they would have stood if the mistake had not occurred. The party alleging mistake must show exactly in what it consists and the correction that should be made. The evidence must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt upon the mind of the court as to either of these faults. The mistake must be mutual, common to both parties; it must appear that both have done what neither intended. Mistake on one side may be ground for a rescission, q. v. Where the minds have not met there is no contract, and hence none to be corrected.[3]

Where an instrument is executed that professes or is intended to carry into execution an agreement, in writing or by parol, previously made between the parties, but which by mistake of the draftsman, as to fact or law, does not fulfill or which violates the manifest intention, equity will correct the mistake so as to produce a conformity of the instrument to the agreement. The reason is, the execution of agreements fairly and legally made is one of the peculiar branches of equity jurisdiction, and if the instrument intended to execute the agreement be from any cause insufficient for that purpose, the agreement remains as much unexecuted as if the party had refused altogether to comply with his agreement, and a court of equity will afford relief in the one case as much as in the other, by compelling the delinquent party to perform his undertaking according to its terms and the manifest intention of the parties. At the same time, equity has no power to make agreements for parties.[4] See JOINT.

The burden of overcoming the strong presumption arising from the terms of a written instrument rests upon the moving party. If the proofs are doubtful and unsatisfactory, if there is a failure to overcome this presumption by testimony entirely plain and convincing beyond reasonable controversy, the writing will be held to express correctly the intention of the parties.[5]

Parol proof, in all cases, is to be received with great caution, and, where the mistake is denied, should never be made the foundation of a decree, variant from the written contract, except the proof be of the clearest and most satisfactory character. Nor should relief be granted where the party seeking it has unreasonably delayed application for redress, or where the circumstances raise the presumption that he acquiesced in the written agreement after becoming aware of the mistake.[6]

There are many precedents for reforming policies of insurance in cases where the insured has held the policy until after a loss, in silence and ignorance of the necessity for reformation.[7]

REFORMATORY, n. Includes every institution and place in which efforts are made to cultivate the intellect, instruct the conscience, or improve the conduct; any place in which persons voluntarily assemble, receive instruction, and submit to discipline, or are detained therein for either of these purposes by force.[8]

REFRESH. To "refresh the memory" means to consult letters, diaries, or other memoranda in order to be enabled to recall the details of a past event. After that, the witness is regarded as speaking from memory.

A witness may refresh with memoranda not in themselves admissible. He need not remember the [1] Seavey v. Beckler, 132 Mass. 204 (1882), Morton, C. J. On compulsory references, see 21 Cent. Law J. 284-88 (1885), cases.

[2] Pickersgill v. Lahens, 15 Wall. 144 (1872), Davis, J.

[3] Hearne v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 20 Wall. 490-91 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.; 4 Cliff. 196.

[4] Hunt v. Rousmaniere, 1 Pet. *13-14 (1828), Washington, J.; Same v. Same, 8 Wheat. 211 (1823); Walden v. Skinner, 101 U. S. 583 (1879); 1 Story, Eq. §§ 151-80; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 845-71.

[5] Howland v. Blake, 97 U. S. 626 (1878), cases, Hunt, J.; Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 id. 381 (1887), cases; 4 Cliff. 582; 76 N. Y. 458; 1 Story, Eq. § 152.

[6] Snell v. Atlantic Fire & Mar. Ins. Co., 98 U. S. 89-90 (1878), cases, Harlan, J. See also Elliott v. Sackett, 108 id. 142 (1882); Leaver v. Dennett, 109 id. 90 (1883); Baltzer v. Raleigh, &c. R. Co., 115 id. 645 (1885), cases; Coyle v. Davis, 116 id. 108 (1885); Reed v. Root, 59 Iowa, 359 (1882); Fessenden v. Ockington, 74 Me. 125 (1882), cases; Clark v. Higgins, 132 Mass. 589-90 (1882), cases.

[7] Palmer v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 54 Conn. 501-9 (1886), cases.

[8] [Hughes v. Daly, 49 Conn. 34 (1882), Pardee, J.

independent facts. The notes must be primary, but need not have been made by the witness, as, a deposition. If the notes fail to refresh the witness's memory, the opposing party is not entitled to inspect them.[1]

It is well settled that memoranda are not admissible unless reduced to writing at or shortly after the time of the transaction, while it must have been fresh in the memory of the witness.[2]

The opposite party may inspect a memorandum and cross-examine in regard to it; and it may be shown to the jury to prove that it could not properly refresh the memory.[3]

There are cases which declare that, unless prepared in the discharge of some public duty, or of some duty arising out of the business relations of the witness with others, or in the regular course of his own business, or with the concurrence of the party to be charged and for the purpose of charging him, a private memorandum cannot under any circumstances be admitted as evidence. There are other cases to the effect that where the witness states, under oath, that the memorandum was made by him presently after the transaction to which it relates, for the purpose of perpetuating his recollection of the facts, and that he knows that it was correct when prepared, although he cannot recall the circumstances so as to state them from memory alone, the paper may be received as the best evidence of which the case admits.[4]

The writing is used to aid the memory. As the facts must finally be stated from personal recollection, if the witness has an independent recollection there is no propriety in his inspecting any note or writing.[5]

Refresher. In England, a fee paid to a barrister in a case unexpectedly prolonged and laborious, either for re-perusal of briefs, or by way of reviving interest in the litigation.

Refreshment. See ENTERTAINMENT.

REFUND. To return money which should not have been paid.

Refunding bond. An obligation to return money if found to have been prematurely or erroneously paid, as, money paid to a legatee or to the creditors of an estate.

Refunds. In customs and duties laws: (1) moneys paid back on account of goods destroyed by accident; (2) excess of deposits for unascertained duties; (3) duties paid under protest; (4) proceeds of property seized for violation of the laws.

In internal revenue laws: taxes illegally assessed, or erroneously paid; the cash value of stamps spoiled, unused, useless, etc.; duties on spirits destroyed by accident, fire, or other casualty; excess of taxes paid by national banks; drawbacks on exports; moneys paid for lands sold for taxes, and the purchase-money on public lands erroneously sold.[1]

REGICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

REGINA. See KING.

REGISTER. 1, v. To enter officially in proper form, or in the appropriate book or books.

2, n. A book kept by public authority; a record.

3, n. A keeper of records; a recorder; a registrar: as, a register in bankruptcy, of public lands, of vessels, of wills.

Registrant. A person who complies with a law requiring a registration; as, of a trade-mark, q. v.

Registration. Recording, in full or in substance, and in due form of law, in an official book or register.

The act of making a list, catalogue, schedule, or register.[2]

May not intend a literal copying or recording, but entering in a book a statement or memorandum of facts to serve as memorials or evidence; as, in a statute requiring the certificate of a transfer of stock to be registered on the books of the company which issued the stock.[3]

Registry. 1. The act of recording; registration.

2. The system of recording transactions as required by law; also, the place where recorded documents are kept.

Registry of deeds. The object is to impart to parties dealing with property information respecting its transfers and incumbrances, and thus to protect them from prior secret conveyances and liens.

It is to the registry, therefore, that purchasers, or others desiring to ascertain the condition of the property, must look; and, if not otherwise informed, they can rely upon the knowledge there obtained. But if they have notice of the existence of an unregistered conveyance, they cannot complain that they are prejudiced by the want of registry. The general doctrine is that knowledge of an existing conveyance or

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 516-26, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 436-39, cases.

[2] Maxwell v. Wilkinson, 113 U. S. 658 (1885), cases, Gray, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Haley, 13 Allen, 587 (1866), Hoar, J. See also, generally, Commonwealth v. Jeffs, 132 Mass. 6 (1882), cases; Bigelow v. Hall, 91 N. Y. 145 (1883).

[4] Vicksburg, &c. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 102 (1886), cases, Harlan, J.

[5] State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 15 (1886). See 26 Cent. Law J. 311-17 (1888), cases; 28 id. 53 (1888), cases.

[1] See R. S., and St. L., Index, "Refunds."

[2] Appointment of Supervisors of Election, 1 F. R. 5-6 (1880), Bradford, J.

[3] Fisher v. Jones, 82 Ala. 129 (1886), cases.

mortgage, in legal effect, is equivalent to notice by the registry.[1]

Registry of vessels. The purpose is to declare the nationality of vessels engaged in trade with foreign countries, and to enable these vessels to assert that nationality.

The purpose of an "enrollment" is to evidence the national character of vessels engaged in the coasting trade or home traffic and to enable them to procure a coasting license. Neither "registry" nor "record" is usually applied to an enrollment. This distriction is observed throughout the legislation of Congress. The general statute on the subject of registry is the act of December 31, 1792; the general statute on enrollment, the act of February 18, 1793.[2]

Registry of voters. In statutes relating to elections, "registered voters" uniformly refers to persons whose names are placed upon the registration books provided by law as the sole record or memorial of the duly qualified voters.[3]

"Registration," in its ordinary, generic sense, when applied to voters, means any list, register, or schedule containing names, the being on which list, register, or schedule constitutes a prerequisite to voting.[4]

See RECORD; TRADE-MARK.

REGNAL YEARS. See KING.

REGRATING. By statute 5 and 6 Edw. VI (1552), c. 14, buying corn [grain] or other "dead victual," and selling it again in or within four miles of the same market.

An offense against public trade; because, by the practice, the price of provisions advanced with each change of ownership.[5]

Compare ENGROSSING; FORESTALLING.

REGRESS. See INGRESS.

REGULA. See REGULAR; EXCEPTIO, Probat, etc.; SECUNDUM, Regulam.

REGULAR.[6] 1. Following the rule; according to rule or law; observing the prescribed course: as, a regular — deposit, judgment, process or other proceeding.

2. Usual; general; not special: as, a regular — election, session.[7]

In the expression "regular navigation," "regular" may be used in contradistinction to "occasional" and refer to vessels which constitute lines, rather than to vessels which are regular in the sense of being properly documented.[1]

Irregular. Not in compliance with the rule; regardless of rule or law; also, exceptional, special.

"Irregular process" is usually applied to process not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defect renders the process absolutely void or only voidable.[2]

Irregularity. Non-adherence to the prescribed rule or proceeding; as, by omitting something necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or by ordering it in an unseasonable time or improper manner.[3]

See ERRONEOUS; VOID; PRESUMPTION.

Regularly. "Regularly employed" in a trade does not mean continuously so employed.[4]

Regulate. To lay down the rule by which a thing shall be done; to prescribe the rule by which a business or trade shall be conducted.

Power "to regulate commerce" is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed, that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted; to determine when it shall be free and when subject to duties or other exactions.[5]

"To regulate the practice" of a court by rules means to prescribe the manner of conducting proceedings, the time for pleadings, etc.[6]

Power to regulate the use of the streets of a city implies power to prohibit their use under proper circumstances.[7]

Power to regulate the sale of liquor may embrace entire prohibition of sales to certain classes, such as minors.[8] See further PROHIBITION.

Regulation. In an act of Congress, "regulations" of a department means general rules relating to the subject upon which the department acts, made by the head thereof under some act giving the regulations the force of law.[9]

General power to enact "sanitary regulations" includes power to prohibit sales of adulterated milk.[10]

See RULES AND REGULATIONS; TEMPORARY.

---

[1] Patterson v. De la Ronde, 8 Wall. 300 (1868), Field, J. In English law, 2 Law Quar. Rev. 324–46 (1886); Roman Dutch law, ib. 347 (1886).

[2] R. S. §§ 4131, 4312: The Mohawk, 3 Wall. 571 (1865), Miller, J.; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 214 (1824).

[3] Chalmers v. Funk, 76 Va. 719 (1882), Staples, J.

[4] Appointment of Supervisors, ante. See generally 35 Am. Law Reg. 641–43 (1886), cases.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 158; 1 Russ. Cr. 169.

[6] L. regula, a rule.

[7] See State v. Conrades, 45 Mo. 47 (1869); Bethel v. Commissioners, 60 Me. 538 (1872); 72 N. C. 163.

[1] The Steamer Smidt, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 277 (1879).

[2] Doe dem. Cooper v. Harter, 2 Ind. 253 (1850): Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cow. 735 (1823).

[3] Bowman v. Tallman, 2 Robt. 634 (1864): 1 Tidd's Pr. 512; Baldw. 246; 31 Cal. 625; 43 Mo. 317; 40 Wis. 365; 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 509.

[4] Wilson v. Gray, 127 Mass. 99 (1879).

[5] Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203 (1885), Field, J.

[6] Vanatta v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 423 (1811).

[7] Attorney-General v. Boston, 142 Mass. 206 (1886).

[8] Williams v. State, 43 Ind. 308 (1874).

[9] Harvey v. United States, 3 Ct. Cl. 43 (1867), Loring, J.

[10] Polinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65 (1878).

REHABILITATE.[1] To restore to the ability or capacity formerly possessed, but of which the person has been deprived by judgment of a court.

Reversal of judgment and pardon (q. v.) rehabilitate a felon to competency as a witness.[2]

REHEARING. See HEARING.

REIMBURSE. To pay back again.

This, the primary, meaning is to be imputed where not controlled by contract stipulations.[3] Compare DISBURSEMENT.

REINSTATE. To restore to former position with reference to other persons or things.

When the President is authorized by law to reinstate a discharged army officer, as by act of March 8, 1879 (20 St. L. 484), he may do so without the advice and consent of the Senate; and the right of such officer to pay for the period he was out of the service depends upon the will of Congress as expressed in the enactment.[4]

RE-INSTRUCT. See INSTRUCT.

RE-ISSUE. See ISSUE, 1.

REJOIN. To answer a replication.

Rejoining gratis. For defendant to rejoin without putting the plaintiff to the necessity of obtaining a rule.[5] See JOINDER.

RELATION.[6] 1. The principle by which an act done at one time is viewed, by a fiction of law, as done at an antecedent period.

Applies where several proceedings are essential to complete a particular transaction, as, the execution of a conveyance or deed. The last proceeding which consummates the conveyance is held for certain purposes to take effect as of the day when the first proceeding was had.[7]

Thus, as between the parties to an application for a patent for land, when the title is consummated by all the necessary forms it relates back to the day when the patent was ordered; but not so when third persons, who are not parties, will be prejudiced thereby.[8]

The doctrine is applied to subserve the ends of justice, and to protect parties deriving their interests from the claimant pending proceedings for the confirmation of his title. Effect is given to the confirmation as of the day when the proceedings were instituted.[1]

Other illustrations: an instrument delivered as a deed, but previously held as an escrow, bears the date of the delivery of the escrow; an assignment in bankruptcy transfers the debtor's title as it existed at the date of the filing of the petition; an act may give character to a prior act and make a case of trespass ab initio; the judgment of a court has been held to be rendered as of the first day of the term.[2]

2. A narrative; information: as, in speaking of the suit of the State "at the relation" of (ex relatione, or ex rel.) A. B. v. C. D.

Relator. An informant: the plaintiff in proceedings by quo warranto. See WARRANTUM.

The feminine form relatrix designates the complaint in bastardy proceedings.[3]

8. (1) The connection or tie between persons in a social status, as of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, master and servant.

(2) A person connected with another by consanguinity or affinity.

The more common use expresses kindred of blood or affinity, though properly only the former is embraced. Hence, in strict technical sense, does not include husband and wife.

May include any and every relation that exists in social life. If literally taken, would have so wide a range as to be liable to objection as indefinite or vague. To avoid this, it has long been settled that a bequest to "relations" applies to those who, by virtue of the statute of distributions, would take the property as next of kin.[4]

"'Relation' might better be confined to the connection or tie, and 'relative' to an individual person."

RELATIVE. See ABSOLUTE; RELATION, 3; RIGHT, 2.

RELEASE. The act or writing by which some claim or interest is surrendered to another person.

As, the instrument, or act, by which a creditor relinquishes a demand or all demands whatsoever to his debtor; the instrument or action by which a trustee or witness is discharged from liability, or by which a part of one's property is relieved of the lien of a mortgage or other incumbrance.

---

[1] L. re-habilitare, to have again.

[2] White v. Hart, 13 Wall. 648 (1871); Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 153 (1877); 48 Pa. 223.

[3] Philadelphia Trust, &c. Co. v. Audenreid, 83 Pa. 264 (1877), Woodward, J. See also Fuller v. Atwood, 13 R. I. 316 (1881).

[4] Collins v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 22 (1879), Richardson, J.; Kilburn's Case, ib. 41 (1879); Collins's Case, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 624 (1879).

[5] Adkins v. Anderson, 10 M. & W. *14 (1842).

[6] L. re-latum, borne back, carried back.

[7] Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 100 (1871), Field, J.

[8] Heath v. Ross, 12 Johns. *141 (1815).

[1] Lynch v. Bernal, 9 Wall. 325 (1869), cases, Field, J.

[2] See 15 Am. Dec. 246-55, cases; 15 Johns. 309; 3 Kent, 83.

[3] See Volkedorf v. People, 12 Bradw. 534 (1882).

[4] Esty v. Clark, 101 Mass. 38-39 (1869), cases, Ames, J.; Handley v. Wrightson, 60 Md. 206 (1883), cases, Bigelow, C. J.

Releasee. He to whom a release is given.

Releasor. He by whom a release is executed.

In the law of real property, a release is a discharge or a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that has some former estate in possession.[1]

This may be by way: of enlarging an estate, of passing an estate, of passing a right, of entry and feoffment, or of extinguishment.[1]

While at common law a release conveyed to a person in possession the title of the releasor, it may now be used to convey a title to one who has no previous right in the land. In most States it is equivalent to a "quitclaim" conveyance.[2]

Compare CONFIRMATION, 2; EXTINGUISHMENT; SURRENDER. See LEASE.

RELEVANCY.[3] That which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis.[4]

Relevant. As applied to testimony, that which directly touches upon the issue made by the pleadings, so as "to assist" in getting at the truth of it.[5]

Relevant means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other, that, according to the common course of events, one, taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or non-existence of the other.[6]

Irrelevant. Not pertinent; inapplicable.

In pleading, said of a fact or allegation which has no bearing upon the subject-matter and cannot affect the decision of the court.[7]

Testimony cannot be excluded as irrelevant which would have a tendency, however remote, to establish the probability of the fact in controversy.[8]

A statement not material to the decision of the case is irrelevant; as, an answer which does not form or tender a material issue.[1]

A pleading is irrelevant which has no substantial relation to the controversy between the parties to the suit. "Irrelative" is, perhaps, more appropriate. In parliamentary debate in England, "irrelevant" means "unassisting, unrelieving."[2]

Facts, in an answer to a bill in equity, not material to the decision are "impertinent." The test is whether the subject of the allegation could be put in issue, and would be matter proper to be given in evidence between the parties.[3] See IMPERTINENCE.

In the law of evidence, collateral, disconnected facts are generally irrelevant. But from one part similar qualities of another part may be inferred. Evidence of prior ignitions is admissible against a railroad company charged with the negligent use of fire.[4]

Evidence is admissible which "tends" to prove the issue, or constitutes a link in the chain of proof, although alone it might not justify a verdict in accordance with it.[5] See TEND.

RELICT. The survivor of a married couple, whether husband or wife; the survivor of the union, not simply of the decedent individual.[6]

RELICTION. See ALLUVION; DERELICT.

RELIEF.[7] 1. In feudal law, a fine or composition paid to the lord of a fee for taking up an estate which had lapsed or fallen by the death of the last tenant. It "raised up" and re-established the inheritance in the hands of the heir.[8]

2. In practice, redress provided by law for deprivation of a right; such enforcement of an alleged right as is invoked in a suit.

To bar equitable relief the legal remedy must be equally effectual with the equitable remedy, as to all the rights of the complainant. Where the remedy at law is not "as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration," the aid of equity may be invoked; but if, on the other hand, "it is plain, adequate, and complete," the legal remedy must be pursued.[9]

Under a prayer for general relief, the plaintiff is entitled to such relief as is agreeable to the case made in the bill, though different from the specific relief prayed for.[10]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 324; Field v. Columbert, 4 Saw. 527 (1864); Palmer v. Bates, 22 Minn. 534 (1876).

[2] Richardson v. Levi, 67 Tex. 367 (1887), Willie, C. J.; Ely v. Stannard, 44 Conn. 583 (1887); 1 Devlin, Deeds, § 16, cases.

[3] F. relevant: relever, to assist, help, be of use: L. re-levare, to raise again,—58 Cal. 168; 78 N. Y. 95; 6 How. Pr. 314.

[4] State v. Witham, 72 Me. 537 (1881): 1 Whart. Ev. Ch. II, § 20. See also Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 438 (1884).

[5] Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 95 (1879), Folger, J.; Hagerty v. Andrews, 94 id. 199 (1883).

[6] Lamprey v. Donacour, 58 N. H. 377 (1878), Foster, J.; Steph. Dig. Ev. (May's Am. ed.) 36; 52 N. H. 405; 58 id. 96.

[7] Scofield v. State Nat. Bank of Lincoln, 9 Neb. 321 (1879), Maxwell, C. J.

[8] Trull v. True, 33 Me. 367 (1851).

[1] [People v. McCumber, 18 N. Y. 321 (1858).

[2] Seward v. Miller, 6 How. Pr. 313-14 (1852), Strong, J.; Morton v. Jackson, 2 Minn. 222 (1858).

[3] Woods v. Morrell, 1 Johns. Ch. *106 (1814), Kent, Ch.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. Ch. II.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 51 a.

[6] [Spitler v. Heeter, 42 Ohio St. 101 (1884).

[7] F. relever: L. re-levare, to raise up again.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 66, 56; Williams, R. P. 120.

[9] Lewis v. Cocks, 23 Wall. 470 (1874), Swayne, J.; Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 215 (1830).

[10] Slemmer's Appeal, 58 Pa. 167 (1868); Hiern v. Mi 13 Ves. *119 (1806); 13 Pa. 70.

That a bill contains a prayer with a "double aspect" forms no objection to the bill. "You may ask the court to come to a conclusion on the facts which you have disclosed, having stated everything that will enable the court to form a proper judgment. You may ask the judgment of the court on two alternatives." [1]

The complainant, if not certain as to the specific relief to which he is entitled, may frame his prayer in the alternative, so that if one kind of relief is denied another may be granted; the relief, of each kind, being consistent with the case made by the bill.[2]

See COMPENSATION, 4; EQUITY, Bill in; INJURY; PRAYER; REDRESS; REMEDY.

RELIGION. In this country, the full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not violate the laws of morality and property nor infringe personal rights, is conceded to all. The law knows no heresy, is committed to the support of no dogma, the establishment of no sect.[3]

Laws are made for the government of actions; and, while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may with practices. Thus, they prevent human sacrifices, burning alive on the funeral pile, plural marriages, and the like. To permit such practices would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and, in effect, to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Under such circumstances government could exist in name only.[4]

The words "religion" and "religious," although used, are not defined in the national Constitution. Article VI, cl. 3, provides that "no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States." And the first sentence of the first Amendment, ratified in 1791, declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." To ascertain the meaning of these provisions, reference must be made to the history of the times in which they originated.

Before the adoption of the Constitution, attempts had been made to legislate with respect not only to an establishment of religion, but also as to religious precepts. The people were taxed for the support of sects to whose tenets they could not subscribe, and punishments were prescribed for non-attendance upon public worship and even for entertaining heretical opinions. The controversy upon the general subject culminated in Virginia. There, in 1784, the legislature had under consideration "a bill establishing provision for teachers of the Christian religion." Action on this bill was postponed one session; and, during the interval, strenuous opposition to the bill was developed. A remonstrance by Mr. Madison, widely circulated and numerously signed, declared "that religion, or the duty we owe the Creator," was not within the cognizance of civil government. At the ensuing session, not only was the proposed bill defeated, but another bill "for establishing religious freedom," drafted by Mr. Jefferson, was passed. This act (12 Herr. St. 84) recites "that to suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion, and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill-tendency, is a dangerous fallacy which at once destroys all religious liberty; — that it is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order." Therein lies the true distinction between the domains of church and state.

About a year later the convention which framed the Federal Constitution met. The instrument as proposed and as adopted contained no declaration expressly insuring freedom of religion. New Hampshire, New York, Virginia, and North Carolina suggested such a declaration as an amendment. Accordingly, at the first session of the first Congress, the First Amendment was proposed by Mr. Madison. That amendment deprives Congress of all legislative power over mere opinion, but leaves it free to reach all actions which are in violation of social duties or subversive of good order. "The Amendment," said Mr. Jefferson "builds a wall of separation between church and state." [1]

The real object of the Amendment was to exclude rivalry among Christian sects, and prevent any national ecclesiastical establishment which would give to a hierarchy the exclusive patronage of the national government. It thus cuts off the means of religious persecution.[2]

The general if not the universal sentiment was that Christianity ought to receive encouragement from the state so far as not incompatible with the private rights of conscience and freedom of religious worship. Any attempt to level all religions, to make it a matter of state policy to hold all in indifference, would have created universal disapprobation, if not universal indignation.[3]

The Amendment prohibits any laws which shall recognize, found, confirm, or patronize any particular religion or form of religion, permanent or temporary, present or future.[4]

But it is a restriction placed upon the legislative power of the United States government alone. The Constitution makes no provisions for protecting the [1] Wilhelm's Appeal, 79 Pa. 140 (1875), Sharswood, J.: Rawlings v. Lambert, 1 Johns. & H. 466 (1860).

[2] Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 763 (1885), cases, Harlan, Justice.

[3] Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 728 (1871), Miller, J.; United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 359-60 (1879), Blatchford, J.

[4] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 166 (1878), Waite, C. J. See also Guiteau's Case, 10 F. R. 175 (1882).

[1] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 162-64 (1878) 1 Jefferson's Works, 45; 8 id. 113; 2 Howis., Va., 298.

[2] 2 Story, Const. §§ 1877, 622-23.

[3] 2 Story, Const. § 1874.

[4] 1 Story, Const. § 454; 1 Tuck. Bl. Com. Ap. 296.

citizens of the respective States in the exercise of religious liberty. That is left wholly to the constitution and laws of each State.[1]

The provision against "religious tests" was intended to cut off every pretense of alliance between church and state, and prevent any sect from securing a monopoly of the offices of government.[2]

Likewise, the constitutions of the States forbid the establishment of any particular religion. Those of California, New York, and Pennsylvania may be taken as declaring the sentiment of the people of the other States upon the general subject of the natural rights of conscience and freedom of worship. They provide as follows:

"The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed [guaranteed] in this State to all mankind; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness [or juror] on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State.[3]

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship or to maintain any ministry against his consent; no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience, and no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or modes of worship."[4]

As early as December 7, 1682, it was enacted by William Penn and the deputies, "That no person, now or at any time hereafter Living in this Province, who shall confess and acknowledge one Almighty God to be Creator, Upholder and Ruler of the World, And who professes him or herself Obliged in Conscience to Live peaceably and quietly under the civil government, shall in any case be molested or prejudiced for his or her Conscientious persuasion or practice. Nor shall he or she at any time be compelled to frequent or maintain any religious worship, place or Ministry whatever, Contrary to his or her mind, but shall freely and fully enjoy his or her Christian liberty in that respect, without any Interruption or reflection. And if any person shall abuse or deride any other, for his or her different persuasion and practice in matters of religion, such person shall be looked upon as a Disturber of the peace, and be punished accordingly."[1]

"Religion" in the constitution of Ohio, in the declaration that "religion, morality, and knowledge are essential to good government" refers to the religion of mankind, not of any class of men. There is no such thing as "religion of state."[2]

But "religion," "religious," and equivalent words and phrases, have often been held to refer to the Christian religion, in its most comprehensive acceptation. Thus, in a will, "religious books" will denote such publications as tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation, unless associated words or circumstances show a reference to another mode of worship.[3]

Though the constitution of New York has discarded religious establishments it does not forbid judicial cognizance of those offenses against religion and morality which have no reference to any such establishment, or to any particular form of government, but are punishable because they strike at the root of moral obligation, and weaken the security of social ties.[4]

"The separation of church and state is not so complete that the state is indifferent to the welfare and prosperity of the church. This is a Christian commonwealth. . . Religion lies at the basis of morality. For the purpose of securing the best and most thoroughly extended morality, it is fitting that religion and the church be recognized."[5]

"The criminal laws of every country are shaped in greater or less degree by the prevailing public sentiment as to what is right, proper, and decorous, or the reverse; and they punish as crimes acts which disturb the peace and order or tend to shock the moral sense or sense of propriety and decency of the community. The moral sense is largely regulated and controlled by the religious belief; and therefore it is that those things which, estimated by a Christian standard, are profane and blasphemous, are properly punished as crimes against society, since they are offensive in the highest degree to the general public sense and have a direct tendency to undermine the moral support of the laws and to corrupt the community."[6]

See ASSEMBLY; BLASPHEMY; CAMP-MEETING; CHARITY; CHURCH; CONSCIENCE; HOLIDAY; MASSES; MORTMAIN; OATH; PROFANITY; SCHOOL; SUNDAY; WORSHIP.

[1] Barron v. Mayor of Baltimore, 7 Pet. 247 (1833), Marshall, C. J.; Permoli v. First Municipality, 3 How. 609 (1845); Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 162 (1878).

[2] 2 Story, Const. §§ 1847, 1849.

[3] New York Constitution of 1846, Art. 1, sec. 3. The California constitution of 1879, Art. 1, sec. 4, is the same except as to the words inclosed by brackets.

[4] Pennsylvania Constitution of 1874, Art. I, sec. 3. See Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 198 (1844), Story, J.; Bush v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 249 (1882); Cooley, Const. 206; Strong, Civ. Law and Church Polity, 11-27 (1875).

See constitutions of other States as follows: Ala. I, 4; Ark. II, 24; Col. II, 4; Conn. I, 34, VII, 1, 2; Del. Pre. I, 1; Fla. D. R. 5, 23; Ga. I, 6, 12; Ill. II, 3; Ind. I, 2-4, 7; Iowa, I, 3, 4; Kan. B. R. 7; Ky. XIII, 5, 6; La. 12; Me. I, 3; Md. D. R. 36; Mass. II, 1, 2, Amd. 11; Mich. IV, 39, 41; Minn. I, 16, 17; Miss. I, 23; Mo. II, 5-7; Neb. I, 4; Nev. I, 4; N. H. I, 4-6; N. J. I, 3, 4; N. Y. I, 3; N. C. I, 26; Ohio, I, 7; Oreg. I, 2, 3, 6, 7; R. I. I, 3; S. C. I, 2, 10; Tenn. I, 3; Texas, I, 6; Va. I, 18; Vt. I, 3, II, 14; W. Va. III, 15; Wis. I, 18, 19.

[1] "The Great Law" of the Prov. of Penn.; Linn, 107, 478.

[2] Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 243 (1872), Welch, J.

[3] Simpson v. Welcome, 72 Me. 499 (1881).

[4] People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. *296 (1811), Kent, C. J.

[5] Commissioners of Wyandotte County v. Presbyterian Church, 30 Kan. 637 (1883), Brewer, J.

[6] Cooley, Const. Lim. 568. On apostacy at common law, see 2 Law Quar. Rev. 153 (1886).

RELINQUISH. See ABANDON; DERELICT; DISCHARGE; QUIT; RELEASE; REMIT, 2, 8; RENOUNCE; WAIVE.

REM. See RES.

REMAINDER. An estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined.[1]

As, in the case of a grant of lands to A for twenty years, and, after the determination of that term, to B and his heirs forever. Here A is tenant for years, remainder to B in fee.[1]

A remnant of an estate in land, depending on a particular prior estate, created at the same time, and by the same instrument, and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate, and not in abridgment of it.[2]

Generally used of landed property, but there may be a remainder in personalty.[3]

Remainder-man. The owner or tenant of an estate in remainder.

There must be a "particular" estate precedent to the estate in remainder; and the remainder itself must commence or pass out of the grantor at the time of the creation of the particular estate, and vest in the grantee during the continuance of such estate or the instant it determines.[4]

Contingent remainder. Where the estate is limited to take effect as to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined and the remainder never take effect. Called also an executory remainder, for by it no present interest passes. Vested remainder. Where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. Called also a remainder executed, since by it the present interest which passes is to be enjoyed in the future.[5]

Cross-remainder. Where a devise is of black-acre to A and of white-acre to B in tail, and, if both die without issue, to C in fee,—A and B have "cross-remainders" by implication, and on the failure of either's issue, the other or his issue will take the whole; and C's remainder over is postponed till the issue of both shall fail.[6]

A cross-remainder cannot arise in deeds without express limitation.[1]

It is the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment, not of its actual enjoyment, which renders a remainder "contingent." The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder, and not the certainty that the possession will ever become vacant while the remainder continues.[2]

A remainder is "vested" when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession upon the ceasing of the intermediate particular estate. It is an estate grantable by any of the conveyances operating by force of the Statute of Uses. A remainder limited upon an estate-tail is a vested remainder. A remainder is never held to be contingent when, consistently with the intention, it can be held to be vested.[3]

A contingent remainder, amounting to a freehold, cannot be limited to an estate less than freehold. It may be defeated by the determination or destruction of the particular estate before the contingency happens. Hence, trustees are appointed to preserve such remainders.[4]

The law will not construe a limitation in a will an executory devise when it can take effect as a remainder, nor a remainder to be contingent when it can be taken to be vested. The rule is, an estate vests at the earliest possible period, unless there is a clear manifestation of the intention of the testator to the contrary.[4]

"Where," "there," "after," "from," and other adverbs of time, used in a devise of a remainder, are construed to relate to the time of the enjoyment of the estate, not to the time of the vesting in interest. Where there is a devise to a class of persons to take effect at a future period, the estate vests in the persons as they come in esse, subject to open and let in others as they are born afterward. An estate once vested will not be devested unless the intent to devest clearly appears.[4] See THEN; WHEN.

Words directing that land be conveyed or divided among remainder-men, after the termination of a particular estate, are always presumed, unless clearly controlled by other provisions of the will, to relate to the beginning of enjoyment by the remainder-men, and not to the vesting of a title in them.[4]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 163.

[2] 4 Kent, 197; Bennett v. Garlock, 10 Hun, 337 (1877).

[3] In Connecticut, may be of realty or personalty, Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 278 (1885).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 165–69.

[5] [2 Bl. Com. 168–69; Doe's Case, 6 Wall., post.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 381; Cowp. 777, 797; 4 T. R. 710; 5 id. 481, 521, 2 East, 36.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 381; Hall v. Priest, 6 Gray, 18 (1856), Bigelow, J.; 2 Washb. R. P. 233; 4 Kent, 201; 1 Prest. Est. 94.

[2] 4 Kent, 202–6.

[3] Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 287–88 (1866), cases, Swayne, J. See also Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529, 564–65 (1885), cases; Mercantile Bank of New York v. Ballard, 83 Ky. 487–88 (1885); Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 278–83 (1885), cases.

[4] Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall. 474–78 (1867), cases, Swayne, J. See also Cropley v. Cooper, 19 Wall. 176 (1873), cases; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 379–80 (1885), cases; 8 Conn. *359; 66 Ga. 472–73; 26 N. J. L. 540; 5 Paige, 466; 26 Barb. 224; 37 Pa. 28; 75 id. 220; 83 id. 488.

[5] McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 380 (1885), cases, Gray, J.

When the income of property is devised to A during his life, remainder to B, the interest of B becomes vested at the death of the testator, even though A should have died before the testator.[1]

If a remainder created by will cannot take effect, the property, according to circumstances, will either fall into the residuum or remain undisposed of. If an executory devise cannot take effect, the estate, ordinarily, unless the will directs otherwise, will continue in the first taker.[2]

See ABEYANCE; DEVISE, Executory; REVERSION; SHELLEY'S CASE; WASTE, 2.

REMAND. 1. When an accused person, after a partial hearing, is sent back to prison to await further proceedings, as, the collection of testimony, the magistrate is said to remand him, and the order of recommitment is called the remand.[3]

2. An order sending back a cause improperly removed into an appellate tribunal; as, a cause taken to the circuit court of the United States from a State court. See REMOVE, 2.

REMANET.[4] A cause held over from a former term of court; a continued or postponed case. Plural, remanets.

REMEDIAL. See REMEDY.

REMEDIUM. L. Redress, relief, remedy; reparation.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. Where there is a right, there is a remedy. For every legal right the law provides a remedy.[5] See DAMNUM, Absque, etc.

REMEDY. A mode prescribed by law to enforce a duty or redress a wrong; not, an obligation to guarantee a right or to indemnify against a wrong.[6]

The remedy for every species of wrong is "the being put in possession of that right whereof the party injured is deprived. The instruments whereby this remedy is obtained are a diversity of suits and actions."[7]

"A judicial means of enforcing a right or redressing a wrong."[1]

In saying that, while a contract right may not be impaired, the remedy may be modified without impairing the obligation of the contract, the word "remedy" pertains to the modes of procedure and pleading which lead up to and end in the judgment.[2] See IMPAIR.

Remedial. Affording a remedy; supplying defects in the common or statutory law: as, remedial statutes, legislation.[3]

The remedial part of the law is that whereby a method is pointed out to recover private rights, or redress private wrongs. See further STATUTE.

Adequate remedy. May mean complete satisfaction of such judgment as may be recovered without restriction.[4] See ADEQUATE, 2.

Civil remedy. Redress afforded by a civil court for a private injury.

Cumulative remedy. A remedy, created by statute, additional to the other remedy or remedies already existing.

Where a statute creates a new right or liability and at the same time gives a remedy, such remedy is exclusive; but when the right or remedy was not created by the statute, but would have existed without the statute, the statutory remedy is cumulative.[5]

Whenever a statute gives a new right without creating a special remedy for its enforcement, it may be enforced by any appropriate common-law action. So where a right is to be enforced by a common-law action, it is immaterial whether the right has been conferred by statute or common law.[6]

Equitable remedy. Redress afforded by a court exercising equity powers. Legal remedy. Redress afforded by a court exercising purely common-law powers.

Extraordinary remedy. Relief furnished by a court of chancery exercising its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Judicial or legal remedy. "Judicial remedy," in its largest sense, comprehends more than a direct proceeding against a party to a contract to compel him to perform its stipulations. It comprises, also, judicial

---

[1] Robison v. Female Orphan Asylum, 128 U. S. 706-9 (1887), cases, Matthews, J.; 26 Cent. Law J. 552-54 (1888), cases.

[2] Medley v. Medley, 81 Va. 270 (1886); Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen, *596 (1838); Barnitz's Lessee v. Casey, 7 Cranch, 464 (1813). See generally, as to remainderman and life tenant, 38 Alb. Law J. 404, 424, 444 (1888), cases; 34 id. 144 (1886), cases.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 21.

[4] Rem'-a-net. L. remanet, it remains, is left.

[5] Broom, Max. 192; 7 Gray, 197; 1 Sm. L. C. 472.

[6] [United States v. Lyman, 1 Mas. 500 (1818), Story, J.; State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 528 (1860).

[7] Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 407 (1821); 3 Bl. Com. 118.

[1] Stratton v. European, &c. R. Co., 74 Me. 428 (1883), Danforth, J.

[2] Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 631 (1877), Chalmers, J.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 86.

[4] [United States v. New Orleans, 17 F. R. 491 (1883), Billings, J.

[5] Godding v. Pierce, 13 R. I. 534 (1882); 11 id. 526; 9 id. 544; 8 Cush. 93; 15 Gray, 221; 1 Chitty, Pl. 112.

[6] Union R. & Transit Co. v. Shacklett, 119 Ill. 239 (1886); Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523 (1887).

protection against invasion by others of the rights vested by the contract. Any means in the hands of the party aggrieved, or of any other person, though not a court, for enforcing performance of a contract,— any mode agreed upon, if permitted by the law, is a "legal remedy."[1]

Remedy over. A remedy against another as a third person.

Thus, when an indorser has a "remedy over" he must be given notice of non-payment.[2]

See ELECTION, 3; REDRESS; RELIEF, 2; SUIT, 3.

REMISE. To release, q. v.

REMISSNESS. In sending and delivering a message, implies a sending in a tardy, negligent or careless manner.[3]

REMIT. 1. To send back, as, a record to an inferior court.

2. To release, as, a debt; to discharge, as, a penalty; to pardon, as, an offense.

3. To relinquish, give up, as, damages awarded.

The right of the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, when it deems a verdict excessive, the result of ignorance, passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, to refuse a new trial, upon condition that the prevailing party remit such a sum as shall leave the recovery not excessive, has often been exercised.[4] See REMITTITUR, 1.

Remitter. At common law, a redress by operation of law: where one who has right to lands, but is out of possession, has afterward the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent defective title, and enters by virtue of that title.[5]

The law sends him back to his ancient, more certain title.[6]

REMITTERE. L. To send back: to release; to remit.

Remittit. He releases; he surrenders.

Remittitur. It is sent back; also, it is released.

1. Relinquishment of a part of the damages found by a jury.

Remittitur damnum. The damage is released. Remittitur damna. It is released as to damages. Remittit damna. He releases damages.

Where an award of damages is excessive, the court may give the plaintiff the alternative of entering a remittitur as to the excess, and recovering a judgment upon the verdict as reduced, or of taking his chances under a new trial.[1]

Where, after judgment for a sum of money, a remittitur is entered as to a part, the remittitur does not bind the party making it, if the judgment be vacated or set aside.[2]

2. Returning a record from the court of review to the lower court for proceedings as specified, as, for execution, or a new trial.

REMOTE. See DAMAGES; DOMINION.

REMOVE. To change or cause to change place or position.

1. To go from one place to another; to change place of residence.[3]

2. To deprive of office by the lawful act of a superior,— another officer of the legislature.

Removal for cause. Imports that a reason exists, personal to the individual, which the law and sound public opinion recognize as a good cause for his no longer occupying the place.[4]

Implies some dereliction or general neglect of duty, some incapacity to perform the duties of the post, or some delinquency affecting the incumbent's general character and fitness for the office.[5]

The power to remove an officer "for cause" can be exerted only for just cause, after he has had an opportunity to defend.[6]

3. To carry away something that pertains to land; as, in a statute against removing any tree, timber, stone, or other article which would pass by a sale of the land.[7]

4. To transfer a cause from a State court to the circuit court of the United States.

The act of March 3, 1875, § 2, provides that any suit of a civil nature pending in any State court, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of five hundred [now two thousand] dollars, and in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States, either party may remove said suit into the circuit court for the proper district.[8]

---

[1] State v. Young, 29 Minn. 534 (1881), Gilfillan, C. J.

[2] Brown v. Maffey, 15 East, 216 (1812).

[3] Baldwin v. United States Telegraph Co., 6 Abb. Pr. 423 (1867).

[4] Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 237 (1881), cases; North. Pacific R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 646 (1886), cases; 3 Mas. 107; 36 Cal. 462; 3 Col. 571; 4 Conn. 311; 74 Ill. 399; 35 Iowa, 432; 28 Me. 97; 97 Mass. 213; 49 N. H. 358; 54 N. Y. 295.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 19, 190; 30 Hun, 190.

[1] Pollitz v. Schell, 30 F. R. 422 (1887); Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 204 (1886).

[2] Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 497 (1873).

[3] Society v. Platt, 12 Conn. *187 (1837).

[4] People v. Nichols, 19 Hun, 448 (1879).

[5] People ex rel. Munday v. Fire Commissioners, 72 N. Y. 449 (1878), Allen, J.

[6] Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. L. 14 (1876): Rex v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 517 (1758).

[7] Bates v. State, 31 Ind. 75 (1869).

[8] 18 St. L. 470; R. S. § 643. See this subject, as to

This means that when the controversy is between citizens of one or more States on one side, and citizens of other States on the other side, either party may remove the suit without regard to their position as plaintiffs or defendants. For the purpose, the matter in dispute may be ascertained, and, according to the facts, the parties arranged on the opposite sides. If in such arrangement it appears that those on one side, being all citizens of different States from those on the other, desire a removal, the suit may be removed.[1]

To bar removal, it must appear that the trial in the State court was actually in progress in the orderly course of proceeding when the application was made. The case must be actually on trial by the court, all parties acting in good faith, before the right is gone. A party may not experiment in the State court, and, meeting unexpected difficulties, stop the proceedings and take his suit to another tribunal.[2]

That is, a party must make an election before he goes to trial or hearing on the merits.[3]

The act of 1875 also requires that the petition be filed in the State court at or before the term at which the suit "could be first tried" and before the trial. This refers to the term at which, under the legislation of the State and the rules of practice pursuant thereto, the cause is first triable, that is, subject to be tried on the merits.[3]

An application to remove a case, made pending trial, is made "before trial thereof," although there may have been several mistrials.[4]

The act means that when there is a controversy wholly between citizens of different States, which can be fully determined as between them, one or more on either side actually interested may effect the removal. The right depends upon the case disclosed by the pleading, when the petition is filed. It does not matter that a defendant who is a citizen of the State of a plaintiff may be a proper but not an indispensable party. The removal of a separable controversy operates to transfer the whole suit — which was not the case under the act of 1868.[5]

Congress has not provided for the removal of a suit in which the controversy is not wholly between citizens of different States, and to the final determination of which an indispensable party on the side seeking the removal is a citizen of the State of one or more of the parties against whom the removal is asked.[6]

The right, as indicated, being statutory, a party must show that his case is within the statute. The petition becomes part of the record, and must state facts which, with such as already appear, entitle the party to a transfer.[1]

By the act of 1875, § 5, if it appears to the circuit court that the suit does not really and substantially involve a controversy within its jurisdiction, the court may remand the cause back, and the order be reviewed by the Supreme Court "on writ of error or appeal, as the case may be." Previously, the order was not such a final judgment or decree as gave jurisdiction for review; but a mandamus issued to compel the circuit court to hear and decide. Congress substituted appeal and writ of error for mandamus. Such remanding order is not a final judgment or decree; it simply fixes the court in which the parties shall litigate. The review by the Supreme Court is not limited by the value in dispute.[8]

A removal cannot be had upon an affidavit made, under Rev. St., § 639, by the attorney, agent, or other person, for a natural person.[9]

See DISPUTE; HEARING.

REMUNERATION. See COMPENSATION.

RENDER.[4] 1. To give up, yield, return.

2. To pay: as, to render rent, q. v.

3. To make up, furnish: as, to render an account. See ACCOUNT, 1.

4. To determine upon, declare, announce: as, to render a verdict, or a judgment.

Rendering a judgment is announcing or declaring the decision of the court.[5]

When a judgment is formed in the mind of a justice of the peace and then publicly announced by him it is rendered. "Entered" and "rendered" may be synonymous.[6]

RENEW. A common meaning is to make again; as, to renew — a treaty, a covenant, an objection or exception.

The written declaration "I hereby renew the within note," imports a promise anew to pay the amount of the note, not merely an admission that the old note is unpaid.[7] changes made by act of March 3, 1887, under COURT, United States Circuit, p. 281.

---

[1] Removal Cases, 100 U. S. 468, 473 (1879), cases, Waite, C. J. Approved, Bank of Mayville v. Claypool, 120 id. 269–70 (1887).

[2] Jifkins v. Sweetzer, 102 U. S. 179 (1880), Waite, Chief Justice.

[3] McLean v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 17 Blatch. 366 (1879), cases, Blatchford, J.

[4] Fisk v. Henarie, 32 F. R. 425–27 (1887) cases.

[5] Barney v. Latham, 103 U. S. 205, 212–16 (1880), Harlan, J.; Anderson v. Appleton, 32 F. R. 859 (1887), cases; Weller v. Pace Tobacco Co., ib. 862 (1887), cases.

[6] Blake v. McKim, 103 U. S. 339 (1880), Harlan, J. See Seldon v. Keokuk Packet Co., 9 Biss. 318–19 (1885), cases.

[1] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pechner, 95 U. S. 185 (1877), Waite, C. J.

[2] Babbitt v. Clark, 103 U. S. 610–12 (1880), Waite, C. J. See also Fraser v. Jennison, 106 U. S. 194 (1882); King v. Cornell, ib. 395 (1882); Myers v. Swann, 107 id. 546 (1882); Shainwald v. Lewis, 108 id. 158 (1883); St. Paul, &c. R. Co. v. McLean, ib. 212 (1883); Houston, &c. R. Co. v. Shirley, 111 id. 358 (1884), Mansfield, &c. R. Co. v. Swan, ib. 379 (1884); Edrington v. Jefferson, ib. 779 (1884).

[3] Duff v. Duff, 31 F. R. 772 (1887), Sawyer, J.

[4] F. rendre: L. red-dare, to give back.

[5] [Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. *528 (1833).

[6] Conwell v. Kuykendall, 29 Kan. 710 (1883), Horton, C. J.; Haseltine v. Simpson, 61 Wis. 431 (1884).

[7] Daggett v. Daggett, 124 Mass. 151 (1878), Morton, J.

To renew a charter is to give new existence to a charter which has been forfeited or has lost validity by lapse of time.[1]

Renewal. Imparting continued or new force or effect to; the substitution of a new right or obligation for another of the same nature; also, that which is renewed, extended, or substituted.

As, the renewal of bail, of a lease, of a patent. "Renewals" is often used, particularly of renewal notes and premiums.

The "renewal" of a bill of exchange does not necessarily import that some new and additional bill or bills must be drawn or accepted. It is not a word of art; it has no legal or technical signification; and though, in common parlance, it might appear, prima facie, to apply to something new, yet there is nothing forced or absurd in giving it a different meaning.[2]

Renewal premiums upon policies of insurance are not debts due to the insurer.[3]

The "renewal" of a patent is often synonymous with the "extension" of the patent.[4]

Where a mortgage was given to secure the payment of promissory notes, made by the mortgagee for the accommodation of the mortgagor, and the renewals thereof until the whole sum was paid, it was held that it was not necessary, in order to constitute notes subsequently used "renewals" of such original notes, that they should have been issued for the same amounts, at the same periods, and that each successive note should have been applied to take up its immediate predecessor.[5] See USURY.

RENOUNCE. To disclaim, disavow; to give up, forego, resign, relinquish.

Renunciation. Disclaimer, rejection, relinquishment; as, of a right or privilege.

A person named for executor in a will may renounce his right to administer the estate — sometimes called "renouncing probate" — by declining to take upon himself the burden of that office;[6] and a widow who declines appointment to settle the estate of her deceased husband is said to renounce or to file her renunciation of the office of administratrix.

Compare ABANDON; DERELICT; DISCLAIMER.

RENT.[7] A compensation or return, in the nature of an acknowledgment, given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance.

A certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal.[1]

The compensation to be paid for the occupation of land by a tenant, whether he holds under a written lease, at will, or at sufferance, and whether the amount to be paid has or has not been defined by the parties.[2]

Its original is found in the returns in service, grain, cattle, money, etc., made by inferior tenants to their chief feudatories, to enable the latter to perform their military duties without distraction.[3]

It is part of the land or thing itself; issues from some inheritance to which the owner or grantee of the rent may have recourse to distrain; is an incorporeal hereditament; and need not issue every successive year, nor be for a sum of money.[4]

A sum of money payable periodically for the use of a chattel is not a rent in any legal sense. Rent issues only out of land, and must be fixed, definite, and certain in amount, whether payable in money, chattels, or labor.[5]

It is a misnomer to call that "rent" which is the agreed price at which goods are to become the property of the person to whom they are bailed.[6]

The ordinary definition of rent, as a profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal, does not include all the cases; as, where a furnished house or a stocked farm is leased. In every such case the personal property is a part of the consideration, so that it is only by a fictitious accommodation of the case to the defective definition that we can say that the rent issues exclusively out of the land. A rent may issue out of lands and tenements corporeal, or out of them and their furniture.[7]

"Rented," in common use, refers as well to the act of the lessee as to that of the lessor.[8]

Rental. 1. A rent-roll: a list of tenants, lands let, rents, etc.

2. Moneys received or due as rent.

At common law, there were three principal kinds of rent: rent-charge, rent-seck, and rent-service — the original kind. (See post.)

Ground rent. A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor and lessor of land, out of the land itself.

Our ground-rent is not granted like an annuity or rent-charge, but is reserved out of a conveyance of

---

[1] Moers v. City of Reading, 21 Pa. 201 (1853), Black, Chief Justice.

[2] Russell v. Phillips, 68 E. C. L. 900 (1850), Patterson, Judge.

[3] Manning v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 100 U. S. 697 (1879).

[4] Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 697 (1846); Goodyear v. Cary, 4 Blatch. 303 (1859); Pitts v. Hall, 3 id. 204 (1854).

[5] Gault v. McGrath, 32 Pa. 392 (1859).

[6] [Re Application of Maxwell, 3 N. J. E. 614 (1832), Ewing, C. J.

[7] F. rente; L. L. rendita; nasalized form of L. reddita: reddere, to give back, return: red-dare. Compare RENDER.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 41: Coke, Litt. 144.

[2] [Kites v. Church, 142 Mass. 589 (1886), Field, J.; Rice v. Loomis, 139 id. 303 (1885).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 57, 299; 3 id. 231.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 41.

[5] Commonwealth v. Contner, 18 Pa. 447 (1852), Black, Chief Justice.

[6] Bailey v. Hervey, 135 Mass. 174 (1883).

[7] Mickle v. Miles, 31 Pa. 21 (1856), Lowrie, J.

[8] Gray v. La Fayette Co., 65 Wis. 569 (1886). See also 4 Mich. 577; 51 Miss. 480; 41 N. Y. 483; 14 Barb. 655; 4 Pa. 147; 43 id. 410; 37 Wis. 426; L. R., 10 Ex. 177. As to present law of rent generally, see 23 Cent. Law J. 507 (1886), cases.

the land in fee. Where the reservation is attended by a clause of distress, the land is the debtor. Our ground rent is an ordinary rent-service.[1, 2]

The right of distress is an incident by force of express power reserved in the deed.[3]

But covenant and distress may be cumulative. All assignees may be joined for arrears accrued after the assignment.[4]

The lien of a judgment for arrears relates back to the date of the deed.[5]

Rent-charge. Where the owner of the rent has no future interest or reversion expectant in the land.[6]

As, when a man by deed makes over to another his whole estate in fee-simple, with a certain rent payable thereout, and adds to the deed a covenant or clause of distress that if the rent be arrere it shall be lawful to distrain for the same. Thus the land is charged with a distress for the payment of the rent.[6]

Rent-seck. Barren rent — reditus siccus. In effect, a rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress.[6]

Rent-service. Where a tenant held land by fealty, homage, or other service, and a certain material return or rent, delivery of which was enforceable by distress.[7]

Quit rent. See QUIT.

White rent; black rent. See BLACKMAIL, 1.

See generally ANNUITY; DISTRESS; EVICTION; FARM; INCOME; LANDLORD; LEASE.

RENUNCIATION. See RENOUNCE.

RE-OPEN. See OPEN, 1.

REPAIR. 1. To replace a building as it was, or to restore it after injury or dilapidation; not, to enlarge or elevate it by raising it a story or by extending its sides.[8]

A covenant to repair may involve an obligation to rebuild.[9]

2. Not, to make a new thing, but to refit, make good or restore an existing thing; as, to repair a highway.[10]

To restore to sound or good condition, after injury or partial destruction; as, to repair a street from curb to curb.[1]

Includes the substitution of new curbstones and gutters for old ones;[2] but not of a new and different kind of pavement.[3]

Referring to a sewer, may mean to keep it large enough to carry off all the water naturally flowing into it.[4]

See COVENANT; ERECT, 1; LANDLORD; LIEN; NECESSARY; PROFIT; RECEIVER; RES, Perit; RESTITUTIO; ROAD; SIDEWALK; STREET; WALL.

REPARATION. See DAMAGES; REDRESS; REMEDY.

REPEAL.[5] The revocation or abrogation of one written law by another.

May be used of a statute, an ordinance, a rule of court, or a constitution.

Express repeal. When the later enactment directs that the earlier shall be repealed.

Implied repeal. When the later is irreconcilably inconsistent with the earlier enactment.

The latest expression of the legislature prevails.[6]

When the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute, and an old statute to a new one: upon the principle of universal law that leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant (or, as expressed in the Twelve Tables, quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto). But this is the rule only when the later statute is couched in negative terms, or when its matter is so clearly repugnant that it implies a negative. If both statutes be merely affirmative, and their substance such that both may stand together, the latter does not repeal the former,—they have a concurrent efficacy. If a statute that repeals another is itself afterward repealed, the first is thereby revived, without formal words for that purpose.[7]

"Whenever an act is repealed, which repealed a former act, such former act shall not thereby be revived, unless it shall be expressly so provided."[8] A repealed statute is treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining action for the enforcement of any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred thereunder.[9]

A repeal by implication must be by necessary implication. It is not sufficient to establish that the subsequent law or laws cover some or even all of the cases provided for by

---

[1] Bosler v. Kuhn, 8 W. & S. 185 (1844), Gibson, C. J.
[2] Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 495 (1863).
[3] Hannen v. Ewalt, 18 Pa. 9 (1851).
[4] Fassitt v. Middleton, 47 Pa. 214 (1864). See generally 8 Am. Law Reg. 577-90 (1854), Pa. cases.
[5] 2 Bl. Com. 42. See also 18 F. R. 499; 23 Barb. 216; 21 id. 648; 44 P 495-97; 28 Vt. 265.
[6] 2 Bl. Com. 42. See 44 Pa. 495-97, supra.
[7] See 2 Washb. R. P. 272; Smith, Landl. & T. *89; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 493 (1863).
[8] Douglass v. Commonwealth, 2 Rawle, 264 (1830); Stevens v. Milnor, 24 N. J. E. 373 (1874).
[9] Beach v. Crain, 2 N. Y. 93 (1848); McIntosh v. Lown, 49 Barb. 554, (1867); Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 90 (1879); Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 7 (1864).
[10] Todd v. Stowley, 8 Allen, 58 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[1] Passenger Ry. Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, 80 Pa. 76 (1875).
[2] People v. City of Brooklyn, 21 Barb. 488 (1856).
[3] Re Fulton Street, 29 How. Pr. 430 (1865).
[4] Blood v. City of Bangor, 66 Me. 156 (1877).
[5] F. rapeler, to call back, recall, revoke.
[6] Hogaboon v. Highgate, 55 Vt. 414 (1883), cases.
[7] 1 Bl. Com. 90.
[8] R. S. § 12.
[9] R. S. § 13.

it; for they may be merely affirmative, or cumulative, or auxiliary. But there must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law, and those of the old; and even then the old law is repealed by implication only pro tanto, to the extent of the repugnancy.[1]

Statutes which apparently conflict with each other are to be reconciled as far as may be, on any fair hypothesis, and effect given to each if it can be, and especially if necessary to preserve titles to property.[2]

Where there are two acts on the same subject the rule is to give effect to both, if possible. But if the two are repugnant in any of their provisions, the latter act, without any repealing clause, operates to the extent of the repugnancy as a repeal of the first; and even where two acts are not in express terms repugnant, yet if the latter act covers the whole subject of the first, and embraces new provisions, plainly showing that it was intended as a substitute for the first act, it will operate as a repeal of that act.[3]

That, undoubtedly, is a sound exposition of the law. The doctrine asserts no more than that the former statute is impliedly repealed, so far as the provisions of the subsequent statute are repugnant to it, or so far as the latter statute, making new provisions, is plainly intended as a substitute. Where the powers or directions under several acts are such as may well subsist together, an implication of repeal cannot be allowed.[4]

A special or local statute, providing for a particular case or class of cases, is not repealed by a subsequent statute, general in its terms, provisions and application, unless the intent to repeal or alter is manifest, although the terms of the general act are broad enough to include the cases embraced in the special law.[5]

The same rule applies as between a treaty and an act of Congress; as, for example, between the Chinese Immigration Treaty of May 9, 1881, and the Restriction Act of May 6, 1882, as amended July 5, 1884. Since the purpose avowed in the act was to faithfully execute the treaty, any interpretation of its provisions would be rejected which imputed to Congress an intention to disregard the plighted faith of the government; consequently, the court ought, if possible, to adopt that construction which recognized and saved rights secured by the treaty.[6]

But clauses of a statute which have been repealed may still be considered in construing the provisions which remain in force.[1]

See REVISED, Statute; RIGHT, 2 (3), Vested.

REPLEAD. See PLEADING.

REPLENISH. To fill again; to fill up.

To replenish a stock of goods means to fill up the stock as reduced by sales. The word necessarily implies exhaustion, reduction or diminution in quantity.[2]

REPLEVIN.[3] 1. When a person distrained upon applies to the sheriff, and has the distress returned into his own possession, upon giving security to try the right of taking it in a suit at law, and, if that be determined against him, to return the goods once more to the distrainor[4]—or, where the goods are of a perishable nature, to return a pecuniary equivalent.[5]

In modern practice, a remedy for any unlawful detention of personalty, the same being delivered to the claimant upon security given either to make out the injustice of the detention or to return the property.[6]

Replevy. To obtain possession of personalty by an action of replevin.

Repleviable; replevisable. Obtainable by replevin. Opposed, irrepleviable; irreplevisable.

Replevisor. The plaintiff in replevin.

There must be a tortious taking or detention of the property; not a mere breach of a contract.[7]

Replevin lies wherever trespass lies for taking the plaintiff's goods — with this difference: trespass will lie upon possession alone, while replevin requires property in the plaintiff. All that is necessary to support the action is property in the plaintiff, either general or special, and a wrongful taking from his possession, actual or constructive. The idea suggested by Blackstone that replevin lies only for goods taken by "distress" has no foundation. The complaint is, that the defendant took and unjustly detains the plaintiff's goods, not that he took them for any particular purpose.[8]

---

[1] Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 362 (1842), Story, J. To the same effect, Adams Express Co. v. Lexington, 83 Ky. 661 (1886); The Gulf, &c. R. Co. v. Rambolt, 67 Tex. 657 (1887), cases.

[2] Beals v. Hale, 4 How. 51 (1846), Woodbury, J.

[3] United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 92 (1870), cases, Field, J.

[4] Henderson's Tobacco, 11 Wall. 657 (1870), Strong, J. See also King v. Cornell, 106 U. S. 396 (1882).

[5] McKenna v. Edmundstone, 91 N. Y. 233 (1883), cases. That repeals are not presumed, see Ryan v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 337 (1885).

[6] Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 549 (1884), Harlan, J.

[1] Exp. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 561 (1883), cases.

See also, generally, State v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 451 (1873), cases; King v. Cornell, 106 U. S. 396 (1882); Red Rock v. Henry, ib. 601 (1882); Cook County Nat. Bank v. United States, 107 id. 451 (1882); Bowlus v. Brier, 87 Ind. 396 (1882); Hogaboon v. Highgate, 55 Vt. 414 (1883).

[2] Bynum v. Miller, 89 N. C. 395 (1883), Ashe, J.

[3] F. re, again, plevir, to be surety,—Skeat. L. L. replegiare, to take back the pledge,—3 Bl. Com. 13.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 13.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 9, 146.

[6] See Taylor v. The Royal Saxon, 1 Wall. Jr. 336–22 (1859).

[7] Mead v. Johnson, 54 Conn. 319 (1886).

[8] Williamson v. Ringgold, 4 Cranch, C. C. 41 (1830), Cranch, C. J.

The action is a special one, entirely regulated by statute, its whole object being to place the plaintiff in possession of personal property, which he claims to be his either by a general or special title, with a right of immediate possession. The requirements of the statute must, therefore, be strictly complied with before the plaintiff can avail himself of its aid.[1]

The better doctrine is that before an action can be brought, a demand of possession of the property must be made when necessary to terminate the defendant's right of possession or to confer that right on the plaintiff; but when both parties claim the ownership and the right of possession as an incident, no demand is necessary.[2]

The security which the plaintiff furnishes, as a substitute for the property, is called a replevin bond, claim-property bond, property bond, or, simply, the claimant's bond.

No one account of the course of proceedings, everywhere applicable, can be given. The term is unknown to equity and admiralty jurisprudence, and under codes of reformed procedure the action has been replaced by "claim and delivery," a provisional remedy ancillary to a civil action to try the title to goods; the word "replevin" being used as if interchangeable with such action.[3]

See AVOWRY; CAPERE, Cepit; DETAINER; DISTRESS; ELOIGN; RETORNUM.

2. A writ formerly used for liberating a man from prison or private custody, upon security given that he would be forthcoming to answer the charges.

Otherwise known as the writ de homine replegiando, for replevying a man.[4] See HABERE, Habeas corpus.

REPLICATION. Plaintiff's answer to defendant's plea or answer.[5]

Reply. To respond to a plea or an answer.

At law, the replication denies the allegation in the plea, alleges new matter in contradiction of it, or confesses and avoids it.[6]

In equity, it puts in issue all matters well alleged in the answer. If none is filed, the answer will be taken as true, and no evidence be received to contradict anything so alleged.[7]

A general replication denies every allegation in the answer not responsive to the bill.[8]

Replication de injuria. Replication of the wrong; denial of a matter of excuse in an action of tort.

Puts in issue the material averments of the plea; throws on the defendant the burden of proving as much of the plea as constitutes a defense to the action. Numerous decisions hold that it is good only where the plea sets up matter of excuse, and not matter of justification.[1] See TRAVERSE.

See ANSWER, 3; DEPARTURE, 3.

REPORT. 1. (1) An official statement of the facts, or of the facts, proceedings, and law, in a case: as, the report of — an auditor, a commissioner, a master, a receiver, or viewers, qq. v.

(2) A published volume of judicial decisions; a volume of reported cases; a judicial report.

Official report. A report prepared and published under the authority of law, and by direction of the judge or judges of a court.

Unofficial report. A report published by an uncommissioned person.

In most of the States, statutes have been passed providing for the selection of the cases, the size of volume, the printing by contract, the sale, etc., of the authorized reports.

Reports may be of cases upon every branch of jurisprudence, or illustrative of the law of a particular subject. The expression State reports is contrasted with Federal or United States reports. Particular series take their names from the name of the court or courts; as, Supreme Court reports, Court of Appeals reports, Circuit and District Court reports. They are sometimes spoken of as the higher and the lower reports; and, from the grade of the court, as law reports and equity reports, the former, too, being either civil or criminal reports, or of the nature of both species. Side reports is occasionally used in contradistinction to the regular or official reports of a State. While foreign reports are designated by the name of the country in which they originate, or from which they come, as, English, Irish, Scotch, or Canadian, the reports of all countries, and of each of our States,— of any separate or special jurisdiction, are very frequently cited by the name of the person under whose special supervision they are, or have been, collated, indexed, and otherwise prepared. Again, some volumes or series of volumes have also been named after the name of the [1] Spencer v. Bidwell, 49 Com. 63 (1881), Granger, J. See also 81 Pa. 488.

[2] Lamping v. Keenan, 9 Col. 393 (1886), cases, Beck, Chief Justice.

[3] See as to value Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 125 U. S. 426–47 (1888), cases.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 129; 32 Me. 560; 34 id. 186.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 309.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 309–10, 443.

[7] Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 212 (1868), cases.

[8] Hume v. Scruggs, 94 U. S. 22 (1876).

[1] Crogate's Case, 8 Coke, 132 (1609): 2 Sm. L. C., H. & W., 247; Taylor v. Cole, 1 id. 262, 267–73, cases; Erskine v. Hohnbach, 14 Wall. 618–20 (1871), cases.

judge whose opinions they preserve, chiefly or exclusively.

A reported case comprises a summary of the points decided, called the syllabus or head-note; a statement of the essential facts in the case, and of the arguments of counsel; and the opinion of the court.

Nothing can be so various, as respects grade of merit, as the English reports prior to 1775. Anterior to 1800, there were but two or three American reports.[1]

In the absence of express legislation to the contrary, the reporter of court decisions is entitled to a copyright on his volumes for whatever is the work of his own mind and hand.[2]

The decisions of the court are public property, and may be published freely by any person whatever.[3] See MANUSCRIPT.

The decisions of the courts are the authorized expositions of the laws — unwritten and statutory. Every citizen, being bound to know the law, should have free access to the opinions; and it is against public policy to withhold the earliest knowledge of them, as it would be of the statutes. The opinions, after delivery, belong to the public.[4]

The judge who writes an opinion is not an "author" or "proprietor" within Rev. St. § 4952, so that the State can become his assignee and take out a copyright.[5]

Reporter. (1) A person who prepares decisions for publication.

State reporter. An official who edits and publishes the decisions of the highest court of a State.

(2) A periodical devoted to the publication of reports, perhaps with annotations from other cases.

(3) A person who stenographs a witness's testimony or the charge of a judge. See STENOGRAPHER.

Unreported. Said of a decision either not printed in any law publication or else not officially so published.

See AUTHORITY, 3; CASE, 2; DECISION; PRECEDENT, 2.

2. As to reporting news, see NEWSPAPER.

REPOSE. See LIMITATION, 3.

REPRESENTATION. 1. A statement regarding a fact.

False representation. Not necessarily, although often, a statement of fact known to be untrue.

Misrepresentation. A statement of fact not true in some particular, and misleading another to his injury.

In alleging a tort in the sale of an article, it is necessary to use "falsely represented," or an equivalent phrase implying fraud.[1]

(1) Fraud consists in falsely representing a thing as a fact, or in the deceitful concealment of an existing fact.[2]

Where a party, by words or deeds, intentionally misrepresents a material fact, or produces a false impression, in order to mislead or to obtain an undue advantage of another, he is chargeable with positive fraud. The misrepresentation must be (1) of something material, constituting the inducement or motive to the act or omission of the other, and by which he is actually misled to his injury; and (2) as to something as to which one party places a known confidence in the other — not of a matter of opinion, equally open to both for examination and inquiry, and where neither party is presumed to trust to the other, but to rely upon his own judgment.[3]

The misrepresentation which will vitiate a contract of sale must relate not only to a material matter constituting an inducement to the contract, but also to a matter respecting which the complaining party did not possess at hand the means of knowledge; and must be a misrepresentation on which he relied, and by which he was actually misled to his injury.[4]

In some cases the falsity of the representation, not the bona fides, is the determining inquiry.[5] See KNOWLEDGE, 1.

(2) a. In the law of fire insurance, the statement of something as a fact which is untrue, and which the assured, knowing it to be not true, states with an intent to deceive the underwriter, or which he, without knowing it to be true, states positively as true, and which has a tendency to mislead, the fact being material to the risk.[6]

As a representation to obtain insurance must always influence the judgment of the underwriter in regard to the risk, it must be substantially correct. It

[1] See "The Reporters," &c., 1 South. Law R. 86, 223, 497 (1875); 3 id. 268 (1877); 5 id. 53 (1879); 25 Alb. Law J. 264 (1880); History of the Law Reports, 1 Law Quar. Rev. 136–49, 287–97 (1885).

[2] Myers v. Callaghan, 10 Biss. 139, 150 (1881), cases.

[3] Banks v. West Publishing Co., 27 F. R. 56 (1886), cases, Brewer, J.; Banks v. Manchester, 23 id. 143 (1885); 24 Am. Law Rev. 524–27 (1885), cases; 3 Kan. Law J. 242 (1886), cases.

[4] Nash v. Lathrop, 142 Mass. 35–39 (1886), cases; State v. Gould, 56 Conn. — (1888).

[5] Bates v. Manchester, 128 U. S. 244 (1888); id. 617.

[1] Cooper v. Landon, 102 Mass. 60 (1869).

[2] [Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. 519 (1867).

[3] Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 36–37 (1839), cases, Barbour, J.; Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 637 (1879); Buckner v. Street, 15 F. R. 868 (1883).

[4] Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 383–85 (1871), cases, Field, J. See generally Weis v. Rhodius, 97 Ind. 12 (1883); Potts v. Chapin, 133 Mass. 282–83 (1882); Clark v. Edgar, 12 Mo. Ap. 351 (1882); Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S. 152 (1884).

[5] Lynch v. Mercantile Trust Co., 18 F. R. 496 (1883), cases; Redgave v. Hurd, L. R., 20 C. D. 12 (1881); Re London, &c. Fire Ins. Co., 24 id. 158 (1883).

[6] [Daniels v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co., 12 Cush. 426 (1853), Shaw, C. J.

differs from an express "warranty," as that always constitutes a part of the policy, and must be strictly and literally performed.[1]

It is the duty of the assured to communicate every material fact; he cannot urge as an excuse for his omission that a fact was known to the underwriter, unless the latter's knowledge was as full and particular as his own.[2]

Where a policy contains contradictory provisions, or leaves it doubtful whether the exact truth should be a condition precedent, that the statements constitute a warranty is not to be favored. The policy will be construed against the insured, who prepares it.[3]

An "affirmative" representation is an affirmation of a fact existing when the contract begins; a "promissory" representation, a promise to be performed after the contract has come into existence.[4]

A representation on information derived from others, reported truly and as resting on information, does not avoid the policy, if the information proves incorrect.[5]

b. In the law of marine insurance, an explicit affirmation or denial of a fact, or such an allegation as irresistibly leads the mind to the same conclusion.[6]

c. In the law of life insurance, all statements must be true when the materiality is removed from the consideration of a court or jury by an agreement that the statements are absolutely true, and that, if untrue in any respect, the policy shall be void.[7]

Where there is no express condition that the statements and declarations made in the application are in all respects true, as far as affects the interests of the insurer, every statement and declaration must be true. . . There is no place for the argument that a false statement was not material to the risk, or that it was a positive advantage to the insurer to be deceived by it. The statement need not come up to the degree of a warranty, nor be a representation even, if that conveys an idea of an affirmation having any technical character; as, where the insured, being "married," stated that he was "single." At the same time, there are many cases to the effect that where false answers are made to inquiries which do not relate to the risk, the policy is not necessarily avoided unless they influence the mind of the insurer, and that whether they are material is for the determination of a jury.[1]

A false answer, in an application for a policy on a life, as to any fact material to the inquiry, knowingly and willfully made, with intent to deceive the insurer, is fraudulent. If it accomplishes its result, it is a fraud effected; if it fails, it is a fraud attempted.[2]

See CONCEAL, 5; CONDITION; DECEIT; ESTOPPEL; FRAUD; INSURANCE; PRETENSE, False; VALUE; WARRANTY, 3.

2. Standing in the place, acting the part, exercising the right, or taking the share, of another person.[3]

Representative. (1) One who occupies the position another held, succeeding to his rights and liabilities; as, an heir to his ancestor, a devisee to the devisor, an executor to his testator, an administrator to his intestate, an assignee to his assignor, successors in a corporation or partnership to their predecessors, a grantee to his grantor, a lessee to his lessor.

In a statute, "representative" will be interpreted with reference to the subject-matter.[4]

Legal representative. In the broadest sense, one who lawfully represents another in any matter whatever;[5] ordinarily, an executor or administrator, but this meaning, in a will, may be controlled by the context;[6] while, strictly, an executor or administrator, is often used in other senses in statutes, wills, deeds, and contracts.[7]

Thus, it may refer to the heir, next of kin, or descendants.[8] In a will, refers to the artificial representation granted by the probate court, or those who take under the statute of distributions. The words by themselves denote the former; but the context may [1] Hazard v. New England Mar. Ins. Co., 8 Pet. *580 (1834), M'Lean, J. See also 49 Me. 200; 21 Conn. 19; 34 N. J. L. 244; 30 Pa. 315; 48 id. 367.

[2] Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 U. S. 485, 510 (1882), Matthews, J.

[3] First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 673 (1877), Harlan, J. Approved, Insurance Co. v. Gridley, 100 id. 617 (1879).

[4] Kimball v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co., 9 Allen, 543 (1865), Gray, J.

[5] Tidmarsh v. Washington Fire, &c. Ins. Co., 4 Mas. 443 (1827), Story, J.

[6] [Livingston v. Maryland Mar. Ins. Co., 7 Cranch, 541 (1813), Story, J.

[7] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 91 U. S. 512 (1875), Hunt, J.; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Trefz, 104 id. 202 (1881).

[1] Jeffries v. Economical Life Ins. Co., 22 Wall. 53, 56 (1874), cases, Hunt, J.

[2] Claflin v. Commonwealth Life Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 95 (1884), Mathews, J.; Connecticut Life Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 119 Ill. 482–88 (1887), cases; Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 80 Ala. 470–75 (1886), cases; Bliss, Life Ins. §§ 33 et seq.

[3] Abbott's Law Dict.

[4] Duncan v. Walker, 2 Dallas, 205 (1793); Mullanphy v. Simpson, 4 Mo. 333 (1836); Wear v. Bryant, 5 id. 164 (1838); Loos v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 41 id. 541 (1867).

[5] Wear v. Bryant, 5 Mo. 164 (1838).

[6] Cox v. Curwen, 118 Mass. 200 (1875); Lodge v. Weld, 139 id. 504 (1885).

[7] Bowman v. Long, 89 Ill. 21–23 (1878); Warnecke v. Lembca, 71 id. 92–93 (1873); Johnson v. Van Epps, 110 id. 559–60 (1884); Halsey v. Peterson, 37 N. J. E. 448 (1883); 34 La. An. 1099.

[8] Warnecke v. Lembca, supra.

show that the testator meant his next of kin within the statute.[1]

In a land-patent certificate, may embrace the representative of the original grantee, whether made such by grant or by operation of law.[2] In a contract for the use of an invention, may include the successors to a partnership or corporation;[3] in a license for the use of a patent, may include the assigns of the license;[4] in a policy of life insurance, may contemplate the assigns of the assured;[5] and in bankruptcy, will embrace an assignee.[6]

In fine, the designation is broad enough to include all persons who, with respect to another's property, stand in his place, and represent his interests, whether transferred by his act or by operation of law.[8]

Personal representative. An executor or administrator: he represents the person of the deceased as to personal estate.

Real representative. The heir at law: he represents the real estate of his deceased ancestor.

A widow is not a "personal representative;"[7] nor is an agent.[8]

Representatives of a deceased person are "real" or "personal;" the former being his heirs at law, and the latter, ordinarily, his executors or administrators. The term "representative" includes both classes. When the personal representatives alone are intended in a statute they are so named. . . As to personalty, executors and administrators, although the usual, are not the sole, representatives of a deceased party. The next of kin, when they succeed to the personalty, whether through the intervention of the executors or administrators or in any other way, become the representatives quoad the effects distributed. In wills and settlements, "representatives" and "legal representatives" are frequently held to mean heirs and next of kin, and not executors or administrators.[9]

The heir at law succeeds to all the rights and responsibilities of the deceased ancestor in respect to realty, and is, in all respects, pro hac vice, his representative. The executor or administrator, except in special cases, represents the deceased only as to the personal estate, and, hence, is denominated the "personal" representative.[10] See PRIVY, 2.

[1] Jennings v. Gallimore, 3 Ves. Jr. *148 (1796), cases; ib. *491; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 291 (1885).

[2] Hogan v. Page, 2 Wall. 605 (1864); Capenter v. Rancels, 19 id. 145 (1873).

[3] Hammond v. Mason, &c. Organ Co., 92 U. S. 724 (1875).

[4] Hamilton v. Kingsbury, 15 Blatch. 69 (1878).

[5] New York Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 597 (1886), Field, J.; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 352 (1852).

[6] Wright v. First Nat. Bank of Greensburgh, 8 Biss. 243, 246 (1878).

[7] Hagen v. Kean, 3 Dill. 125 (1875).

[8] Jones v. Tainter, 15 Minn. 517 (1870).

[9] Lee v. Dill, 39 Barb. 520-21 (1863), Allen, J.

[10] Card v. Card, 39 N. Y. 323 (1868). See also 22 id. 497; 18 id. 349; 71 id. 91; 89 id. 19; 8 Minn. 97.

(2) A member of the popular branch of a State or of the national legislature; a member of the house of representatives. See ASSEMBLY; CONGRESS; PARLIAMENT.

REPRIEVE.[1] Withdrawing a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended.[2]

It is granted ex arbitrio judicis (in the discretion of the judge), before or after judgment, for any reason sufficient to the court. It is ex necessitate legis (from legal necessity), where the offender becomes insane before or after the award of execution: he may have a reason, which he cannot explain, for non-execution. Where a woman, capitally convicted, pleads pregnancy, execution will be respited till she be delivered.[3]

A reprieve operates only in capital cases, and is granted either by the favor of his majesty himself, or the judge before whom the prisoner was tried, in his behalf, or from the regular operation of law, in circumstances which render an immediate execution inconsistent with humanity or justice.[4] See PARDON; RESPITE.

REPRISAL.[5] Reception: a species of remedy by the act of the party injured.[6] See CAPTIVE; MARQUE AND REPRISAL.

Reprises. Deduction on account of payments or expenses.

The yearly value of an estate ultra reprises, beyond all subtractions, is spoken of. In Pennsylvania, realty will not be sold by the sheriff when the rents will pay the judgment, with interest and costs, in seven years, beyond reprises,[7]—unless otherwise agreed to by the debtor.

REPUBLIC. The commonwealth; the state. See RESPUBLICA.

In a republic, all the citizens, as such, are equal, and no one can rightfully exercise authority over another but by virtue of power constitutionally given by the whole community, which authority, when exercised, is in effect the act of the community. Sovereignty resides in the people in their political capacity.[8]

Republican form of government. "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government."[9]

[1] F. re-prendre, to take back,—4 Bl. Com. 394. The same as reprove, but nearer Mid. Eng. repreven, to reject, put aside, disallow,—Skeat.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 394.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 394-96.

[4] Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 461 (1876): 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 757.

[5] F. represaille, taking or seizing on: L. re-prehendere, to seize again. F. reprise, to take back.

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 4.

[7] Act 16 June, 1836, § 44: P. L. 769; 1 Purd. Dig. 755.

[8] [Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dallas, 93 (1795), Iredell, J.

[9] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 4.

No particular government is designated as "republican," neither is the exact form to be guaranteed in any manner especially designated. Here, as in other parts of the Constitution, we are compelled to resort elsewhere to ascertain what was intended. The guaranty necessarily implies a duty on the part of the States themselves to provide such a government. All the States had governments when the Constitution was adopted. In all, the people participated to some extent, through representatives elected in the manner especially provided. These governments the Constitution did not change. They were accepted precisely as they were, and it is therefore to be presumed that they were such as it was the duty of the States to provide. Thus we have unmistakable evidence of what was "republican" in form, within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution.[1]

Authority to provide for the restoration of State governments, when subverted and overthrown, is derived from this obligation on the United States. Discretion in the choice of means is necessarily allowed. It is essential only that the means be "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution the power conferred, through the restoration of the State to its constitutional relations, under a republican form of government, and that no act be done, no authority exerted, which is either prohibited or unsanctioned by the Constitution.[2]

It rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State, before it can determine whether it is republican or not.[3]

See GOVERNMENT; STATE, 3; WAR.

REPUBLICATION. See PUBLICATION.

REPUDIATION. See IMPAIR, Obligation, etc.

REPUGNANT.[4] Inconsistent; irreconcilably opposed to, contrary to, or contradictory of each other.

Said of clauses in contracts, wills, statutes; of conditions, q. v.; of statements in a pleading militating with statements in a prior pleading.

Words and phrases are often found in different provisions of the same statute, which, if taken literally, without any qualification, would be inconsistent, and sometimes repugnant, when, by a reasonable interpretation, as, by qualifying both, or by restricting one and giving the other a liberal construction, all become harmonious, and the difficulty disappears. In such a case the rule is, that the repugnancy should, if practicable, be avoided, and that, if the natural import of the words contained in the respective provisions tends to establish such a result, the case is one where resort may be had to construction for the purpose of reconciling the inconsistency, unless it appears that the difficulty cannot be overcome without doing violence to the language of the law-maker.[1] See REPEAL.

REPURCHASE. See REDEEM.

REPUTATION. General opinion in the community.

The qualities which a person is supposed to possess.[2]

What the community thinks, believes, or says; not the declarations of a person as to a particular fact not of a public nature.[3]

Evidence of reputation is receivable to prove character, heirship, historical facts, and prescription.

An existing reputation is a fact to which any one may testify who knows it; he knows it because he hears it, and what he hears constitutes reputation.[4]

Unwillingness to believe a man under oath must be based upon two facts: that the witness knows the reputation for veracity among the man's neighbors, and that that reputation is bad.[5]

On the trial of an indictment for murder, the dangerous "character" of the deceased cannot be proved by proof of his "reputation," but notice of that character to the prisoner may be shown by proof of the reputation, in connection with proof that he had the means of knowing that reputation.[6]

See further CHARACTER; EVIDENCE; HEARSAY; PEDIGREE; SLANDER.

Reputed. Commonly reported; generally believed: as, a reputed — marriage, parent, owner. See BASTARDY; OWNER; PUTATIVE.

Reputation is an incident from which, being joined to cohabitation, the married relation may be inferred. It is essential, however, that the reputation of marriage be general. The conduct of the parties must be such as to make almost every one infer that they were married. It is the reputation arising from holding themselves out to the world as occupying that relation, to which the law refers. It is not enough that an opinion may exist that they ought to be married, from their intimacy; it is the belief that they are married which constitutes the reputation of it. Their acts should be inconsistent with any other inference than that of marriage to justify the repute of it, and this repute should be credited by their relatives, neighbors, friends, and acquaintances.[7] See further COHABITATION.

REQUEST; REQUIRE. Usage has given these words (of the same origin) somewhat different meanings, but these meanings

[1] Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 175–76 (1874), Waite, Chief Justice.

[2] Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 728–29 (1868), Chase, C. J.

[3] Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 42 (1849), Taney, C. J. See also 2 Story, Const. §§ 1813–25; North Am. Rev., Ap. 11, 1844, p. 371; Internat. Rev., Jan., 1875; Federalist, No. 43, 44.

[4] L. re-pugnare, to fight against, oppose.

[1] New Lamp Chimney Co. v. Ansonia Brass & Copper Co., 91 U. S. 663 (1875), Clifford, J.

[2] Andre v. State, 5 Iowa, 394 (1857): Webster's Dict.

[3] [Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 363 (1880), Strong, J.

[4] Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 642 (1883), Cooley, J.

[5] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 206 (1887).

[6] Marts v. State, 26 Ohio St. 168 (1875).

[7] Brinckle v. Brinckle, 34 Leg. Int. 426 (1877), Biddle, J.,—C. P., Philadelphia.

are really more distinctions in intensity than in effect or substance. "Require" is nearer a command than "request." Neither word may import more than to give notice.[1] Compare MAY; WANT.

In a will, "request" may impose a duty.[2] See PRECATORY.

Generally, when a debt is payable immediately, no request to pay need be made. The necessity for a request may be implied; as, where one retains an article to be paid for at delivery, the buyer must show a request, or an impossibility in the seller to comply, after request made. A request to marry must also be made before action is begun for a breach of a promise to marry. Generally, it is advisable that requests be made in writing. A special request, as provided for in a contract, must be averred in a declaration. See DEMAND, 2; NOTICE, 2; PAYMENT; QUIT, 2.

Requisition. A formal demand or request.

Usually, in writing: as, the request made by the governor of one State on the governor of another State for the extradition of a fugitive from justice. See EXTRADITION.

RES. L. A thing, or things; whatever may be possessed, seized or attached; property; matter, subject-matter.

1. In the Roman law, property was divided in several ways; thus into — (1) Res divini juris, for pious uses, including (a) res sacræ, for the service of the gods, and (b) res religiosæ, for the burial of the dead. (2) Res humani juris, for secular uses, (a) res privatæ, belonging to individuals and subject to traffic, and (b) res republicæ, belonging to the people: res fisci, of the treasury, and res sanctæ, of inviolable character, as city walls and gates; (c) res commune omnium, the common property of all — the air, running water, the sea, etc. Another division was: res corporales, objects apprehensible by the senses; and res incorporales, objects of thought only. A third division was: res mobiles, movables; and res immobiles, immovables.[3]

2. In admiralty, all parties who have an interest in the subject of the suit — the res — may appear, and each independently propound his interest. The seizure of the res, and the publication of the monition to appear, is equivalent to the particular service of process in the courts of law and equity. But the res is in no other sense than this the representative of the whole world. To give jurisdiction, there must be a valid seizure and actual control by the marshal.[4]

Jurisdiction of the res is obtained by a seizure under process, whereby it is held to abide such order as the court may make concerning it.[5]

The res is that which is seized and brought within the jurisdiction of the court. In admiralty and revenue cases the thing condemned is considered the offender or the debtor, is seized in its entirety; and a sale passes the entire title. Not so in many other proceedings in rem.[1] See SERVICE, 6, Substituted.

Re, or in re. In the matter of. Designates a proceeding to which there is but one party; as, in matters in a court of probate, and in insolvency or bankruptcy courts.

In rem. Against a thing. Used of a proceeding concerning a particular piece of property. Opposed, in personam, against the owner of property.

Proceedings in rem are instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property forfeited in admiralty or in the exchequer, and to enforce liens in admiralty. Also included are suits to obtain a sentence, judgment, or decree upon the personal status or relation of a person, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, and the like.[2]

In rem is a technical term, taken from the Roman law, where it distinguished an action against the thing from one against the person. An action in personam was directed against a specific person; an action in rem against a specific thing, and so against whom it might concern — "all the world." A proceeding to determine the status of the particular thing itself, and which is confined to the subject-matter in specie, is in rem, the judgment also determining the state or condition, and, ipso facto, rendering the thing what the judgment declares it to be, while a proceeding which seeks the recovery of a personal judgment is in personam.[3]

In the former, process may be served on the thing itself, and by such service, and by making proclamation, the court is authorized to decide upon it without other notice to persons, all the world being parties; while in the latter, to give the court power to adjudge, there must be service upon those whose rights are sought to be affected. As regards rights, the terms signify the antithesis of "available against a particular person," and "available against the world at large." Thus "jura in personam are rights primarily available against specific persons, jura in rem rights available against the world at large." Beyond this, a judgment or decree is in rem, or in the nature of a judgment in rem, when it binds third persons, such as the sentence of a court of admiralty on a question of

[1] Prentice v. Whitney, 15 N. Y. Supr. 301 (1876), Boardman, J.; 58 N. H. 65; 2 Allen, 85.

[2] Hutton v. Hutton, 41 N. J. E. 271 (1886); Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 319 (1888).

[3] Hadley, Rom. Law, Lect. VII.

[4] Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 599 (1857), Campbell, J.

[5] Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 317 (1870), Miller, J.

[1] Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. 162 (1873), Strong, J.; City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 503 (1886); 93 id. 168; 106 id. 307.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 525, 541, cases; 2 Sm. L. C. 662.

[3] Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 623-24 (1887), Spear, Judge.

prize, or a decree of other courts upon the personal status or relation of the party, such as a dissolution of a marriage contract, bastardy, etc., a decree admitting a will to probate and record, granting administration, etc., or a decree of a court of a foreign country as to the status of a person domiciled there.[1]

In admiralty, process in rem is founded on a right in the thing, and the object of the process is to obtain the thing itself, or a satisfaction out of it, for some claim resting on a real or quasi proprietary right in it. Consequently, the court, through its process, arrests the thing, and holds possession of it by its officers, as a means of affording such satisfaction, and in contemplation of law it is the possession of the court itself. Service of process is had upon the property.[2]

Marine torts are in the nature of trespasses upon the person or upon personal property, and they may be prosecuted in personam in any district where the offending party resides, or in rem wherever the offending thing is found within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the process.[3]

Actions in rem are prosecuted to enforce a right to things arrested, to perfect a maritime privilege or lien attached to a vessel or cargo or both, and in which the thing to be made responsible is proceeded against as the real party. Actions in personam are those in which an individual is charged personally in respect to some matter of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction. The process, proceedings, and decrees are different.[3]

A proceeding to enforce a debt or demand by attachment of a defendant's property partakes of the character of a suit both in rem and in personam. If there is personal service of process on the defendant or personal appearance by him, the case is mainly a personal action; but if, in the absence of either, his property is attached and sold, it becomes essentially a proceeding in rem, and is governed by the principles applicable to that class of cases. In this class the court cannot proceed without a levy on the property, and the judgment binds the property only. Therefore, seizure under proper process is the foundation of the jurisdiction. A valid writ and levy, judgment, order of sale, sale, and deed, conclude all persons.[4]

Decrees of probate or orphans' courts directing sales for the payment of debts or for distribution are proceedings in rem. Sales under attachments, or proceedings to foreclose a mortgage, are at least quasi proceedings in rem. In none of these cases is anything more sold than the estate of the decedent, or of the debtor, or of the mortgagor, in the thing. The interests of others are not cut off or affected.[5]

The probate of a will is in the nature of a proceeding in rem.[6]

In a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of the property; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien.[1]

The thing, in admiralty, is to be actually or constructively within reach of the court. An accidental, fraudulent, or improper removal from the custody of the marshal, as, a delivery upon security, does not destroy jurisdiction.[2]

Actions in rem, strictly considered, are proceedings against property only, treated as responsible for the claims asserted by the libelants or plaintiffs. The property itself is in such actions with the defendant, and, except in cases arising during war for its hostile character, its forfeiture or sale is sought for the wrong, in the commission of which it has been the instrument, or for debts or obligations for which by operation of law it is liable. The court acquires jurisdiction over the property in such cases by its seizure, and of the subsequent proceedings by public citation to the world, of which the owner is at liberty to avail himself by appearing as a claimant in the case. There is, however, a large class of cases which are not strictly actions in rem, but are frequently spoken of as actions quasi in rem, because, though brought against persons, they only seek to subject certain property of those persons to the discharge of the claims asserted. Such are actions in which property of non-residents is attached and held for the discharge of debts due by them to citizens of the State, and actions for the enforcement of mortgages, and other liens. Indeed, all proceedings having for their sole object the sale or other disposition of the property of the defendant to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff, are in a general way thus designated. But they differ, among other things, from actions which are strictly in rem, in that the interest of the defendant is alone sought to be affected, that citation to him is required, and that judgment therein is only conclusive between the parties.[3]

The proceedings may or may not be of ubiquitous obligation.[4] See LIEN; SALVAGE; UBIQUITY, 2.

Jus ad rem; jus in re. See JUS.

Res adjudicata. A matter judicially decided. See further ADJUDICATUS.

Res gesta. A thing done. Res gestæ. The things done; the facts of a transaction; circumstances evidentiary of a litigated fact.

The circumstances, facts, and declarations which grow out of the main fact, are con-

[1] Cross v. Armstrong, ante.

[2] The Propeller Commerce, 1 Black, 580 (1861), cases. Clifford, J.; Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. 95 (1872); 9 id. 456-57; 98 U. S. 108.

[3] The Sabine, 101 U. S. 388 (1879), Clifford, J.

[4] Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 316-21 (1870), Miller, J.

[5] Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. 162 (1873), Strong, J.; 2 How. 338; 19 id. 89.

[6] Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 21 (1875).

[1] Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734 (1877), Field, J.; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 id. 279 (1876); Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 413-14 (1886), cases.

[2] The Rio Grande, 23 Wall. 464-65 (1874), cases.

[3] Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 187 (1886), Field, J.

[4] As affected by death, see 21 Cent. Law J. 65-67 (1885), cases.

temporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character.[1]

All declarations made at the same time that the main fact under consideration takes place, and so connected with it as to illustrate its character, are admissible as original evidence.[2]

The area of events covered by the term depends upon the circumstances of each case. Included are those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of it. These incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of time more or less appreciable.[3]

It is not possible to lay down a rule as to what is a part of the res gestæ which will be decisive of the question in every case in which it may be presented by the ever-varying phases of human affairs. Included in it are facts which so illustrate and characterize the principal fact as to constitute the whole one transaction, and render the latter necessary to exhibit the former in its true light and give it its proper effect.[4]

In the complexity of human affairs, what is done and what is said are often so related that neither can be detached without leaving the residue fragmentary and distorted. . . Where sickness is the principal fact, the res gestæ are the declarations tending to show the reality of its existence, its extent and character. . . Rightfully guarded in its application, there is no principle in the law of evidence more safe in its results. The tendency is to extend the scope of the doctrine.[5]

Where, for example, the fact in question is a loan, the circumstances of the negotiation constitute the res gestæ. A draft would be one circumstance; the conversation of the parties another. Evidence why the loan was made in particular funds or securities instead of in cash, is competent where it will tend to elucidate the nature of the transaction, that being the question at issue. . . The manner and form in which an act is done, being one of several acts concurring to the purpose or transaction, indicate, by shades of circumstances often difficult to analyze, what was the character of the act, or the intent and purpose with which it was done.[1] See further ADMISSION, 2.

Res in re. Member in member.

Res integra. A thing yet entire; a matter as yet undetermined by decision.

Res inter alios acta. A thing done between others. More fully, res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet, a thing done between others ought not to injure. A transaction between persons who are "strangers" toward another person cannot affect unfavorably the rights of that person.

Excepted from the rule are proceedings against a res, and decisions regarded as precedents.[2]

No person is to be affected by the acts or words of others unless connected with them, personally or by those whom he represents or by whom he is represented.[6] See PRIVITY, Of contract.

Res ipsa loquitur. The thing speaks for itself: the meaning or intent is apparent.

The reservation on the face of an instrument of a higher than the legal rate of interest indicates per se usury.[4]

Res judicata. A matter which has been settled; a decided case. See ADJUDICATUS.

Res nova. A new matter,—point or question.

Res nullius. A thing of no one: nobody's property.

In Roman law, an object in which no person could have a property, as, a thing or place consecrated to religious uses; also, property without an owner. See ABANDON, 1.

Res perit domino. The thing perishes for its owner: where a thing of value is destroyed by an act of God or of the public enemy, the loss falls upon the owner, not upon the person in whose custody it has been temporarily placed.

The principle is that in contracts in which the performance depends on the continued existence of a given person or thing, a condition is implied that impossibility of performance arising from the perishing of the person or thing shall excuse the performance. Excuse for performance is implied by law, because from the nature of the contract it is apparent that the [1] Stirling v. Buckingham, 46 Conn. 464 (1878), Loomis, Judge.

[2] McLeod v. Ginther, 80 Ky. 403 (1882), Hargis, C. J.; Territory v. Yarberry, 2 N. Mex. 453 (1883), Axtell, C. J. See also 76 Ind. 222; 9 Cush. 42; 57 Mo. 93; 32 N. H. 360; 40 N. J. L. 538; 55 Pa. 402.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 258-59, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 108-23; United States v. Noelke, 17 Blatch. 570 (1880); United States v. Angell, 11 F. R. 41 (1881), cases.

[4] Beaver v. Taylor, 1 Wall. 642 (1863), cases, Swayne, J.; Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 338-43 (1886); Culverius v. Culverius, 81 Va. 813 (1886).

[5] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 408 (1869), Swayne, J.

[1] Nat. Bank of the Metropolis v. Kennedy, 17 Wall 24, 26, 19 (1872), Bradley, J. See generally 14 Am. Law Rev. 817-38 (1880), cases; 15 id. 1-20, 71-107 (1881), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 468 (1887), cases; 26 id. 207 (1888), cases.

[2] See 2 Best, Ev. § 506; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 173-76, 760; 2 id. § 1041; 1 Wall. 469; 100 U. S. 616; 101 id. 351; 3 Curt. 403; 82 Ala. 500; 77 Mo. 281; 57 N. H. 369; 52 Pa. 229, 418; 55 Vt. 576.

[3] State v. Beaudet, 53 Conn. 541 (1885); ib. 461.

[4] Bank of United States v. Waggener, 9 Pet. 399 (1835); Turner v. Turner, 80 Va. 331 (1885); 32 F. R. 120.

parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the particular person or chattel.[1]

When property, real or personal, is destroyed by fire, the loss falls upon the party who is the owner at the time. If, from such destruction, the vendor of a house cannot perform his agreement to convey, he cannot recover or retain any part of the purchase-money.[2]

The rule of the common law is the civil-law rule, that if one is employed in making up the materials or in adding his labor to the property of another, the risk is with the owner of the thing into which the labor is incorporated. . . One who, under a contract, is doing the ornamental woodwork in a building destroyed by fire while under control of the owner, may recover a quantum meruit for the work done prior to the fire. An accidental fire is not such act of God or vis major as will excuse the performance of a contract.[3]

Where a res is seized by judicial process for debt, which carries with it a jus in re, as between debtor and creditor the maxim means that the destruction of the seized property, without fault of the debtor, works a payment of the debt to the extent of its value. Where third parties voluntarily join the seizing creditor in his proceeding, and unite, so to speak, in the seizure, also asserting claims which carry with them liens, the destruction of the property without fault of the debtor works a payment of their respective claims, to the extent of the value of the property destroyed, in the order of their priority.[4]

Where a vessel, before she breaks ground, is so injured by fire that the cost of repairs would exceed her value when repaired, and she is rendered incapable of earning freight, a contract of affreightment for the carriage of cotton, evidenced by a bill of lading providing for the payment of freight-money on the delivery of the cotton, is thereby dissolved, so that the shipper is not liable for any part of the money, nor for expenses paid for stowing the cotton.[5]

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. That the thing may prevail rather than be destroyed: that the subject-matter may have effect, or the end be promoted, rather than be defeated.

The courts aim to uphold, to preserve, not to destroy, written contracts, wills, statutes,—all instruments presented for construction. Within the spirit of the rule is the cy pres doctrine,[1] q. v.

See other expressions under ALIENATIO; EX NECESSITATE; FORUM; LOCATIO.

RE-SALE. See BID.

RESCISSION.[2] Cutting off; abrogating, canceling, annulling, nullifying, vacating, avoiding.

Rescind. To annul a thing done; to vacate, set aside.

Rescissory.[3] Designed to abrogate, annul, avoid.

Used, in particular, of the refusal of a party to a contract to be bound by it, because of alleged disability, mistake, or fraud operating at the time of the formal making; also, of the decree of a court of equity canceling a contract for cause shown.

The right to rescind a contract of sale proceeds upon the ground that a party has been fraudulently betrayed into making the contract, and, having thus been induced to part with his own property, he may resume possession of it on returning that which he has himself received, thus placing the other party in the position he was in before the contract was made.[4]

Equity will rescind a purchase induced by a material misrepresentation of the vendor, though innocently made.[5]

The cancellation of an executed contract is an exertion of the most extraordinary power of a court of equity. The power ought not to be exercised in a clear case, and never for an alleged fraud, unless the fraud be made clearly to appear; never for alleged false representations, unless their falsity is certainly proved, and unless the complainant has been deceived and injured by them.[6]

The rule that he who seeks to rescind a contract of sale must first offer to return the property received, and place the other party in the position he formerly occupied, as far as practicable, prevails equally at the civil and the common law. It is a rule founded in natural justice, and requires that the offer shall be made by the purchaser to his vendor upon the discovery of the defect for which the rescission is asked.

---

[1] Taylor v. Caldwell, 118 E. C. L. *839 (1863), Blackburn, J.; Appleby v. Myers, L. R., 2 C. P. *658 (1867).

[2] Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 515–18 (1871), cases, Gray, J.; Snow v. Alley, 144 id. 551 (1887); Broom, Maxims, *228, cases.

[3] Haynes v. Second Baptist Church, 12 Mo. Ap. 540–46 (1882), cases, Bakewell, J.

[4] Gill v. Packard, 4 Woods, 271 (1883), Billings, J.: s. c. 17 F. R. 400. See also Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 712 (1887), cases — leased property; Story, Bailm. § 426; Benj. Sales, § 570; 2 Kent, 591; 2 Add. Contr. *927; Bish. Contr. § 588, cases; Hare, Contr. 89, 434, 690; 12 Allen, 361; 14 id. 269.

[5] The Tornado, 108 U. S. 342 (1883), cases, Blatchford, J.; Jones v. United States, 96 id. 24 (1877).

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 89; 2 id. 380; 95 U. S. 713; 106 id. 137; 108 id. 461; 109 id. 365; 59 Iowa, 325; 100 Mass. 113; 108 id. 393; 59 Miss. 96, 108; 89 N. C. 462; 93 N. Y. 345; Broom, Max. 565.

[2] F. rescinder, to cancel: L. re-scindere, to cut off, annul.

[3] Re-sis'-o-ry.

[4] Snow v. Alley, 144 Mass. 551–57 (1887), cases, Devens, J.

[5] Curtiss v. Hurd, 30 F. R. 733 (1887), cases.

[6] Atlantic Delaine Co. v. James, 94 U. S. 214 (1876), Strong, J.

The vendor may then receive back the property, and be able by proper care and attention to preserve it, or he may have recourse upon other parties, the remedies against whom might be lost by delay. He must be permitted to judge for himself what measures are necessary for his interest and protection, and if the purchaser by delay deprives him of the opportunity of thus protecting himself, he cannot demand a rescission of the contract.[1]

Where a party desires to rescind upon the ground of mistake or fraud, he must, upon discovery of the facts, at once announce his purpose, and adhere to it. If he be silent, and continue to treat the property as his own, he will be held to have waived the objection, and will be conclusively bound by the contract, as if the mistake or fraud had not occurred. He is not permitted to play fast and loose. Delay and vacillation are fatal to the right which had before subsisted. These remarks are peculiarly applicable to speculative property which is liable to fluctuations in value. A court of equity is always reluctant to rescind, unless the parties can be put back in statu quo. If this cannot be done, it will give such relief only where the clearest and strongest equity imperatively demands it.[2]

In order to rescind a contract for the purchase of realty on the ground of fraudulent representation by the seller, it must be established by clear and decisive proof that the representation regarded a material fact; that it was false; that the maker knew that it was false; that he made it in order to have it acted upon; and that it was so acted upon by the other party to his damage, in ignorance of its falsity and with a reasonable belief that it was true.[3]

There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. But he may not willfully shut his eyes to what he might readily and ought to have known. When fully advised, he must decide and act with reasonable dispatch. He cannot rest until the rights of third persons are involved and the situation of the wrong-doer is materially changed. Under such circumstances, he loses the right to rescind, and must seek compensation in damages. But the wrong-doer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission. It does not lie in his mouth to complain of delay unaccompanied by acts of ownership, and by which he has not been affected. The election to rescind, or not to rescind, once made, is final and conclusive.[4]

The principle of many cases is, that, where the contract has been induced by fraud, it is not necessary that the party seeking to rescind should absolutely tender what he has received on account of the contract. It is necessary, however, that he should give notice of his intention to rescind, and that at trial he should be in a situation to put the other party in the condition in which he was at the time he discovered the fraud. That the subject-matter has been partially disposed of will not of itself prevent a rescission, unless the greater part has so disappeared.[1]

An application to rescind, like that for specific execution, is addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the court. The maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity emphatically applies. A mistake in law, where there is neither fraud, concealment, nor material mistake in fact, constitutes no ground for rescinding a contract. The complainant must not have done any act which will prevent the respondent from being placed in statu quo.[2]

The cases generally hold that where a vendor undertakes to rescind the sale for fraud, he must, before suing for either the goods or their value in money, return or tender to the vendee whatever valuable consideration he has received for them. But the cases which so hold are cases where goods were given for goods, or where the action was replevin to recover the goods sold, in specie, and not trover for their value in money. If this rule were not applied, the fraudulent vendee may lose what the vendor has received, and the vendor get justice without doing it. There is no case in which the rule has been applied in an action of trover against the fraudulent vendee, where the vendor has received nothing but money.[3]

See CANCEL; KNOWLEDGE, 1; PERFORMANCE, Specific.

RESCOUS. See RESCUE.

RESCRIPT.[4] 1. In Roman law, rescripta were answers returned by the emperor, when consulted on questions of law, either by the parties in some controversy, or, more commonly, by officers charged with the administration of justice.[5]

In succeeding cases these rescripts had the force of laws. Justinian preserved them in his Institutes. Decretal epistles of the popes are also rescripts in the strictest sense.[6]

2. In common law, a counterpart.

In Massachusetts, the statement of the decision of the highest appellate tribunal; also, the brief statement sent to the court a quo.

---

[1] Andrews v. Hensler, 6 Wall. 258 (1867), Field, J. See also Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 12 (1862), cases, Lowrie, C. J.

[2] Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 62 (1876), cases, Swayne, Justice.

[3] Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 250 (1888), Lamar, J.

[4] Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581 (1878), Swayne, J. See also Indianapolis Rolling Mill Co. v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co. 120 id. 260 (1887), cases; Kraus v. Thompson, 30 Minn. 67 (1882), cases.

[1] American Wine Co. v. Brasher, 4 McCrary, 347 (1882), cases, Hallett, D. J. See also 18 Cent. Law J. 482–87 (1884), cases; 19 id. 7–9 (1884), cases; 53 Cal. 46; 68 Ga. 103; 75 Ill. 206; 91 N. Y. 155; 44 Pa. 12, cases; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 692–705; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 845–71.

[2] Ferry v. Clarke, 77 Va. 409, 406–8 (1883), cases, Lacy, J.; Linhart v. Foreman, ib. 540 (1883); McMullin v. Sanders, 79 id. 364 (1884), cases.

[3] Warner v. Vallity, 18 R. I. 484–87 (1893), cases, Durfee, C. J.

[4] F. rescript, a written reply: L. re-scriptum, written back.

[5] Hadley, Rom. Law, 7.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 58–59.

RESCUE. 1. Taking from a distrainor a distress on its way to a pound.

On their way to a pound things distrained may be rescued by the owner in case the distress was taken without cause or contrary to law: as, if no rent be due, if taken upon the highway, and the like. But, once impounded, although unlawfully taken, the distress may not be retaken.[1]

2. Forcibly and knowingly freeing another from an arrest or imprisonment.[2]

The same offense as a voluntary escape (q. v.) by a jailor. Not criminal, unless the rescuer knew that the person was held on a charge of crime, or that he was in charge of a public officer.[3]

RESEMBLANCE. See LIKE; QUASI; SIMILITUDE.

RESERVATION; RESERVE.[4] Reserve: to keep or hold back, withhold, as one thing or right out of another — the subject-matter; also, the thing withheld. Reservation: the act of withholding; also the thing itself which is not given up; and also the clause in a writing by which that thing is reserved.

1. An auctioneer sells "without reserve" when no price is prescribed up to which the property must be bid. See AUCTION.

2. When an author wishes to reserve the right to translate or to dramatize his work he must give notice that that is his purpose by printing "Right of translation reserved" or "All rights reserved," below the notice of copyright entry; and the librarian of Congress is thereby notified to record such reservation. See COPYRIGHT.

3. Public land withheld from sale, as, for military posts, for parks, for the use of Indian tribes, or other purposes, is called the "public reservation" or simply the "reservation." In former years, "reserve" seems to have been in vogue, as, in "Western Reserve."

In this sense reservation does not imply an absolute disposition of the land or lands, in all cases, but a withholding for some other disposition, as, sale, or the use of schools.[5]

See PRE-EMPTION, 2; LAND, Public.

The reservation of lands for any specific purpose by the government is but an expression of a desire to use them for that purpose. The same precision in the use of terms is not required as in the case of a conveyance.[1]

4. The creation of a right or interest, which had no prior existence as such, in a thing or part of a thing granted.[2]

By a reservation in a deed a new right is created in the thing granted which did not previously exist, and is reserved to the grantor.[3]

An "exception" is always part of the thing granted, and of the whole of the thing excepted. A reservation may be of a right or interest in the particular part which it affects. The terms are often used in the same sense. Though apt words of reservation be used, they will be continued as an exception, if such was the design of the parties.[2, 3] See EXCEPTION, 1.

5. Many other rights are said to be reserved or not reserved. Thus, the maker of a power of attorney may reserve the right to revoke the power; and a respondent in equity may reserve, in his answer, the advantage to be had from a defect in the structure of the bill.

As to reserved rights under the Constitution, see that title, pp. 237–39.

6. In practice, when, during the course of a trial, the judge decides, for the time being, a point raised, but subject to revision by the court at the hearing of a motion for a new trial, he is said to "reserve a question of law."

The procedure enables the jury to render a verdict on the facts subject to the decision upon the question reserved.

The question must be one of pure law. The facts which are to be agreed upon or else found by the jury, must be stated in the record. The question, moreover, must be such as rules the case: the object of reserving it being to save the necessity for a second trial. An adverse verdict on the facts will, of course, preclude the point from arising. The reservation of subordinate questions tends to complicate the case. A point cannot properly be reserved unless, if it be held one way, the court would be bound to instruct the jury for which of the parties to find.[4]

7. The sum of money which every national bank in the sixteen largest cities must have on hand — an amount equal to at least

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 12, 170; 43 N. H. 469; 5 Pick. 714; 113 U. S. 111–14, infra.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 131.

[3] See 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 1065; 1 Hale, P. C. 606; Findley v. McAllister, 113 U. S. 111–14 (1885), cases; 1 Story, 66; 2 Gall. 313.

[4] F. reserver; L. re-servare, to keep back.

[5] [McConnell v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 359 (1837), Smith, J.

[1] United States v. Payne, 2 McCrary, 301 (1881); 13 Pet. 266; 92 U. S. 733.

[2] Kister v. Reeser, 98 Pa. 5 (1881), Trunkey, J.

[3] Perkins v. Stockwell, 131 Mass. 530 (1881), cases, Devens, J.; Kimball v. Withington, 141 id. 379 (1886). See also 2 McLean, 392; 8 Saw. 99; 16 Conn. 482; 38 id. 542; 18 Iowa, 358; 42 Me. 9; 59 id. 340; 107 Mass. 322–23; 126 id. 196; 129 id. 231; 11 N. Y. 321; 41 id. 483; 29 Ohio St. 568; 47 Pa. 197; 44 Vt. 416; 22 Wis. 547.

[4] Wilde v. Trainor, 59 Pa. 442 (1868), Sharswood, J.

twenty-five per centum of the aggregate of its notes in circulation and its deposits. Fifteen per centum is required of all other national banks.

When the reserve falls below this limit, the bank may not increase its liability otherwise than by purchasing sight bills of exchange, nor may it make a dividend. On failure to make the reserve within thirty days after notice from him, the comptroller of the currency, with the concurrence of the secretary of the treasury, may appoint a receiver and wind up the bank.[1]

RESIDE; RESIDENCE; RESIDENT.[2] May import temporary sojourn or permanent domicil. Illustrative cases are given below. The negatives non-residence and non-resident are in frequent use.

Residence. The legal definitions of the cognate terms "residence" and "domicil" vary with the circumstances of the case and the mental constitution of judges and authors. While "residence" generally imports personal presence, one may have a "domicil" in a place from which he is absent most of the time. "Residence" also implies more than a temporary sojourn.[3]

Non-residence. Actual cessation to dwell within a State for an uncertain period without definite intention as to a time for returning, although a general intention to return may exist.[4]

When a residence has once been established by the concurrence of intention and personal presence, continuous personal presence thereafter is not essential to a continuous residence. Prima facie, a man's "home" is where his family lives.[5]

Residence means a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling-place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence.[6]

Ordinarily, the place of one's permanent domicil, rather than his temporary abode.[7]

In the constitutional requirement that a qualified voter must reside in the district a specified number of days, the same as "domicil" — the place where a man establishes his abode, makes the seat of his property, and exercises his civil and political rights.[1]

Denotes permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, boarding, or other temporary occupation; but does not include as much as "domicil," which requires an intention continued with residence.[2]

May require continuous and voluntary abiding, as, to give jurisdiction; not, temporary boarding, though for a long period.[3]

The precise meaning depends upon the purpose and phraseology of the particular statute. May refer to place of business, domicil, or home.[4]

In a statute defining political rights, synonymous with "domicil" — a permanent rather than a temporary dwelling-place. "Domicil" is never lost until a new one is acquired; but a person may cease to "reside" in one place and have no fixed habitation elsewhere.[5]

A citizen of one State who in good faith gives up his residence there, and takes up a permanent residence in another State, acquires citizenship in the new place of domicil.[6]

The residence of a corporation is the place where its principal office is located, or its principal operations carried on. But a railroad corporation resides in the counties through which its road passes, and in which it transacts business; at least as regards suits and taxation.[7]

The proper seat of residence of a foreign corporation is the State which created it and which continues it in existence. Otherwise, the corporation might reside in a multitude of jurisdictions. But legislation may give it status as a resident.[8]

Resident. Literally, one who sits, abides, inhabits, or dwells in a particular place.

A person sojourning (i. e., residing) at a place is prima facie residing there, and cannot be a resident

[1] R. S. § 5191.

[2] F. resider, to stay: L. re-sidere, to remain back.

[3] [On Yuen Hai Co. v. Ross, 8 Saw. 392 (1882), Deady, J.

[4] [Weitkamp v. Loehr, 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. 83 (1886), cases,— attachment law.

[5] Topsham v. Lewiston, 74 Me. 239 (1882); Greenfield v. Camden, ib. 64-65 (1882).

[6] Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 140 (1831), Walworth, Ch.

[7] [Reeder v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 95 (1870), Chapman, Chief Justice.

[1] Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 420 (1862), Woodward, J.

[2] [Inhabitants of Jefferson v. Inhabitants of Washington, 19 Me. 300-2 (1841), Whitman, C. J.

[3] Charter Oak Bank v. Reed, 45 Conn. 395 (1877), Loomis, J.

[4] Tyler v. Murray, 57 Md. 441-43 (1881), Irving, J.; 30 id. 512; 35 id. 169; 15 M. & W. 433; 2 Kent, 430, note.

[5] [Hannon v. Grizzard, 89 N. C. 120 (1883), Smith, C. J. See also Fitzgerald v. Arel, 68 Iowa, 106 (1884).

[6] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Ohle, 117 U. S. 127 (1886).

[7] Thorn v. Central R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 121 (1856); People v. Fredericks, 48 Barb. 176 (1866); Baldwin v. Mississippi, &c. R. Co., 5 Iowa, 519 (1857); 8 id. 260; 2 How. 497; 5 Cranch, 61; 4 McLean, 192; 5 id. 455; 26 Me. 434; 40 Mo. 580; 17 Gratt. 176; 33 How. Pr. 150.

[8] Stafford v. American Mills Co., 13 R. I. 311 (1881), Durfee, C. J.

of another place at the same time. This, at least, is the meaning in attachment laws. The word is of narrower significance, then, than "one domiciled in a place;" like inhabitant, it implies bodily presence.[1]

Non-resident is in general use in laws on the subject of attachments, divorce, registration, taxation, and elections. Non-resident administrator, bondholder, debtor, executor, guardian, and trustees, especially are of frequent recurrence.

The act of Congress of March 3, 1875, § 8, provides for summoning as parties to a suit persons who are non-residents of the district, by service of an order of court, as therein provided.[2]

See generally ABODE; CITIZEN; DIVORCE; DOMICIL; DWELLING; FAMILY; HOME; INHABITANT; MINISTER, 3; PERMANENT; TAX, 2.

RESIDUE. That which remains after taking away a part; surplus.

In a will, such portion of the estate as is left after paying the charges, debts, devises, and legacies.[3]

The presumption is that a testator uses it in this sense. A contrary intention must clearly appear.[3]

The "residue" of a man's estate, in testamentary language, means whatever is not specifically devised or bequeathed. The word has this meaning unless the whole will taken together shows clearly that it was not so intended.[4]

The courts incline to extend the word to the whole estate, when it is not clear whether the testator meant it to apply to a residue of the whole or only of a particular part.[5]

Residuary. Relating to the residue; as, residuary — clause, legatee, devisee, estate.

A residuary legatee receives the residuum of an estate. Any words indicating that purpose will be sufficient to uphold the bequest.[6]

See LEGACY; RESIDUUM, 2.

RESIDUUM. L. Remainder; residue.

1. In patent law, what is left after a process of separation.

There are as many different residuums of a substance as there are distinct products which may by taken away from it. Showing that all the matter that is in the residuum of the earlier of two patents is also in, and is obtained by separation from, the residuum of the patent of later date, does not make out an infringement on the former. It does not show that the patents are the same. If the rule were otherwise, a prior patent for the same use, of the common source, would cover both.[7]

2. The surplus of an estate after all debts and particular legacies are discharged.[1]

This goes to the residuary legatee; if none is named, then to the next of kin, under the intestate law. Anciently, the residuum was taken by the executor, unless otherwise directed.[1]

If a legacy is not legally disposed of, it falls into the residuum. But where a specific devise of realty is invalid, the realty descends to the heir at law.[2]

RESIGNATION. Of an office: the act of giving it up; surrender, relinquishment, renunciation.

Need not be in writing, unless required by statute; and may be either express or implied. The question is one of intention. Non-user may indicate absolute relinquishment.[3]

At common law, an office was regarded as a burden which the appointee was bound, in the interest of the community and of good government, to bear. From this it followed that after an office was assumed it could not be laid down without the consent of the appointing power. This was required that public interests might suffer no inconvenience for the want of servants to execute the laws. Acceptance may be manifested either by a formal declaration or by the appointment of a successor. In this country, a contrary doctrine may have obtained; but it will be assumed that the common-law rule prevails unless the contrary is shown.[4] See OFFICE, 1.

RESIST. To oppose, meet force with force; to hinder, prevent. Whence resisting, resistance. See DEFENSE, 1.

Resistance to a legal arrest is criminal, though the accused be innocent of the charge.[5]

"Resisting" does not necessarily imply assaulting or beating an officer.[6]

"Every person who knowingly and willfully obstructs, resists, or opposes any officer of the United States in serving, or attempting to serve or execute, any mesne process or warrant, or any rule or order of any court of the United States, or any other legal or judicial writ or process," shall be imprisoned not more than twelve months, and fined not more than three hundred dollars.[7]

The offense is complete when the person refuses to go with the officer.[8]

Resistance to an officer is opposing him by direct, active, and more or less forcible means. It implies something more than hindering, interrupting, preventing, baffling or circumventing. The gist of the offense is personal resistance, that is, personal oppo-

[1] [Collison v. Teal, 4 Saw. 243 (1877), cases, Deady, J.

[2] Castello v. Castello, 14 F. R. 207, 210 (1882), cases.

[3] [Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 264 (1873), Carpenter, J.

[4] Willard's Appeal, 68 Pa. 332 (1871), Sharswood, J.; 41 Leg. Int. 314.

[5] Carr v. Dings, 58 Mo. 406 (1874); Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 82 (1871); 2 Redf. Wills, 448.

[6] Laing v. Barbour, 119 Mass. 525 (1876), cases; 24 Moak, 297; 2 Williams, Ex. 1014; 4 Kent, 541.

[7] Parsons v. Coalgate, 15 F. R. 600 (1882), Wheeler, J.

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 514.

[2] Johnson v. Holifield, 82 Ala. 127 (1886).

[3] Barbour v. United States, 17 Ct. Cl. 153-54 (1881), cases.

[4] Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S. 473-74 (1880), cases, Bradley, J.; State v. Clayton, 27 Kan. 445 (1882), cases, Brewer, J.; State v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 21 (1874).

[5] Floyd v. State, 82 Ala. 23 (1886).

[6] Woodworth v. State, 26 Ohio St. 196 (1875).

[7] Act 30 April, 1790: R. S. § 5398, cases.

[8] United States v. Lukens, 3 Wash. 335 (1810).

sition to the exercise of official authority or duty, by direct, active, in some degree forcible, means. A person may not resist or obstruct an officer after he has made a seizure of property.[1] See ARREST, 2.

RESOLUTION. See BY-LAW, 2.

RESORT. The highest or last court to which a cause may be carried for review is called the court or tribunal "of last resort." See COURT.

RESOURCES. Money, or property, that can be converted into supplies; means of raising money or supplies; capabilities of producing wealth, or of supplying necessary wants; available means, or capability of any kind.[2]

RESPECTIVE. See SEVERAL.

RESPITE.[3] Temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence; a delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.[4]

RESPOND. To answer — a bill in equity, a libel in admiralty or in divorce, in an appeal taken to a higher court, etc. See RESPONDERE.

Respondent. One who makes or files an answer in a cause; a defendant.

Co-respondent. A co-defendant; one of two or more respondents; in English practice, the paramour as joint-defendant in proceedings in divorce for adultery.

Responsive. Containing or embodying an answer; completely answering.

That an answer in equity must be "responsive" to the allegations in the bill, see ANSWER, 3.

RESPONDERE. L. To answer; respond.

Ad respondendum. See CAPERE, Capias, etc.

Respondeat. Let him answer.

Respondeat ouster. Let him answer over.

The name of a judgment upon a dilatory plea in a civil suit, that defendant answer in some better manner, that is, put in a more substantial plea;[5] also applicable in criminal cases, when a demurrer to an indictment or an information is overruled.[6] See ABATEMENT, 4.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer.

The employer is answerable for the act (not wanton) of his servant or agent.[1] See further AGENT; CONTRACTOR; NEGLIGENCE.

Respondentia. Ability to answer: a loan upon the personal obligation of the owner of a cargo on board a ship.

The loan of money upon merchandise laden on board a ship, the repayment whereof is made to depend upon the safe arrival of the merchandise at the destined port.[2]

A loan upon the vessel is called "bottomry." In a loan upon the merchandise, which is for sale or exchange in the course of the voyage, the borrower only is personally bound to answer the contract, and he is said to take up money at respondentia.[3]

The money, with maritime interest, is paid to the lender upon the arrival of the merchandise at the port.[4] See BOTTOMRY; HYPOTHECATION; SALVAGE.

Responsa prudentum or prudentium. Answers of the learned — by learned lawyers.

Augustus gave to certain jurists a privilege called jus respondendi: the right of making answers, on points of law submitted by judges, which should have the authority of law.

Books of responses, bearing the names of leading jurisconsults, obtained an authority at least equal to that of our reported cases, and constantly modified, extended, limited, or practically overruled provisions of the Decemviral law. These responses were at first opinions interpretative of the written law — explanatory glosses.

Opinions were given upon fictitious or imaginary cases; in which fact Mr. Maine finds an explanation for the thorough scientific development attained by the Roman law. English and American judges confine themselves to the actual cases presented: obiter dicta being regarded with disfavor, if not censured.[5]

RESPONSIBLE. Answerable, accountable, amenable; able to answer just expectations; of pecuniary ability. Opposed, irresponsible. Compare LIABLE. See CIRCUMSTANCES, 2.

A promise to be "responsible" for the contract of another is a contingent liability, and becomes absolute by showing due and unsuccessful diligence to obtain satisfaction from the principal.[6]

A statute requiring that a writ shall be indorsed by some "responsible person" intends that the person

[1] United States v. McDonald, 8 Biss. 439, 448 (1879), Dyer, J.; State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 200-3 (1875), Ryan, Chief Justice.

[2] [Ming v. Woolfolk, 3 Mont. 386 (1879): Webster's Dict.

[3] F. respite: L. re-spicere, to look back upon; regard, respect had to proceedings,— Skeat.

[4] Mishler v. Commonwealth, 62 Pa. 60 (1869).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 303, 397.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 338; R. S. § 1026.

[1] See generally Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 485-87 (1852); Chicago City v. Robbins, 2 Black, 428 (1862); Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 350-67 (1855), cases; 5 South. Law Rev. 238-85 (1879), cases; 3 Cent. Law J. 647 (1876) — Solicitors' Journ.; 83 Ky. 661; 2 Mich. 529; 58 N. H. 53.

[2] The Brig Atlantic, 1 Newb. 516 (1855), McCaleb, J.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 458.

[4] Marsh. Ins. 734. See generally 3 Kent, *353, et seq.

[5] Maine, Ancient Law, 32-38; Hadley, Rom. Law, 65-69.

[6] Gilbert v. Henck, 30 Pa. 209 (1858); Bickel v. Auner, 9 Phila. 499 (1872).

shall possess sufficient pecuniary ability to pay the costs that may be recovered against the plaintiff. Strictly speaking, "responsible" means liable, answerable, rather than able to discharge an obligation.[1]

A testator devised property for founding a school upon condition that within six months after his decease "responsible citizens" should pledge forty thousand dollars to the object. A large number of persons of limited means subscribed small amounts, some conditional. Held, that the subscription list was not a pledge by such persons as the testator contemplated.[2]

In deciding upon the responsibility of bidders for the erection of a public building, it is the duty of the proper officials to consider not only the pecuniary ability of the bidders to perform the contract, but also to ascertain which ones, in point of skill, ability, and integrity, will be most likely to do faithful, conscientious work, and to fulfill the contract promptly, according to its letter and spirit.[3]

The "lowest responsible bidder" is one who complies with all the requirements of the law, not merely one whose bid is lowest.[4]

In the Pennsylvania act of May 23, 1874, which directs that contracts for municipal work shall be awarded to the "lowest responsible bidder," "responsible" has been held to refer to pecuniary ability, judgment, and skill. The statute calls for the exercise of duties and powers, in the city authorities, which are deliberative and discretionary; and if they act in good faith, although erroneously or indiscreetly, a mandamus will not lie to compel them to change their decision.[5]

RESPUBLICA. L. The common weal: the commonwealth; the state; the government. See INTEREST, 1, Reipublicæ, etc.; REPUBLIC.

REST. 1, v. To rely upon, trust to the sufficiency of.

"To rest a case," and for a party "to rest," is to adduce what is thought to be sufficient testimony to make out an apparent case in chief, or to rebut the adversary's prima facie case.

2, n. (1) A pause made by an accountant in his entries, in order to strike a balance upon which to allow interest.

Spoken of as annual and semi-annual rests; and made by an administrator, executor, guardian, or other trustee.[6]

(2) Peace, quiet. See PEACE, 1; SUNDAY.

RESTAURANT. Has no such definite legal meaning as necessarily excludes its being an inn; as currently understood, an eating-house,[1] q. v. See also ENTERTAINMENT; INN; SALOON; TAVERN.

RESTITUTIO. L. Restoration; restitution, q. v.

Restitutio in integrum. Restoration to the original (unbroken) state or condition.

1. In civil law, placing a party in the position he occupied before he was induced to enter into a contract by reason of fraud, force, fear, mistake, or incapacity. See RESCISSION.

2. In maritime law, putting a vessel into the condition it was in before a collision.

The owner of a vessel is not liable for loss by collision, occasioned without his privity (q. v.) or knowledge, beyond the amount of his interest in the vessel, and her freight pending at the time the collision occurred.[2]

Subject to that provision, the damages recoverable are established in the same manner as in suits for injuries to other personalty, and the claim for compensation may, in certain cases, extend to the loss of the freight, necessary expenses in making repairs, and unavoidable detention.

Restitutio in integrum is the leading maxim as to the measure of damages in such cases. Where repairs are practicable, the rule is, that the damages assessed shall be sufficient to restore the injured vessel to the condition she was in at the time the injury was inflicted.

The rule does not allow deductions, as in insurance cases, for new materials furnished in the place of old because the claim arises on the wrongful act, and the measure of indemnity is not limited by any contract. Such repairs may embrace the value of the vessel. If the vessel is wholly lost, the measure is the market value at the time of her destruction. That she sunk is not evidence of total loss.[3] See COLLISION, 2; DAMAGES; LOSS, 2.

RESTITUTION. Restoration to former condition or position. See RESTITUTIO.

Return of a thing to its owner: the act of making the return, or the proceeding or writ by which directed.

At common law, when the judgment of a lower court is reversed, the court of review may specially order that the plaintiff in error be restored to what-

---

[1] Farley v. Day, 26 N. H. 531 (1853), Gilchrist, C. J.; N. H. Rev. St. ch. 183, § 17.

[2] Yale College v. Runkle, 10 Biss. 309 (1881), Drummond, J.

[3] Hoole v. Kinkead, 16 Nev. 221 (1881), Leonard, C. J.; Nev. St. 1861, 59.

[4] Booker v. Wabash County, 88 Ind. 267 (1882).

[5] Douglass v. Commonwealth, 108 Pa. 563 (1885), Mercur, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 348 (1876); Findley v. City of Pittsburgh, ib. 353 (1876). See also State v. McGrath, 91 Mo. 393-94 (1886), cases.

[6] See Buller v. Harrison, 1 Cowp. 566 (1777); Pennypacker's Appeal, 41 Pa. 501 (1862); 53 id. 503; Smith, Eq. 205, 320; 3 Pars. Contr. 151.

[1] Lewis v. Hitchcock, 10 F. R. 6-7 (1882), cases, Brown, D. J.; s. c. 13 Rep. 300; 1 Hilt. 195; 54 Barb. 311.

[2] Act 3 March, 1851: 9 St. L. 635. See Propeller Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. 25 (1858).

[3] The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 385 (1869), cases, Clifford, J.

ever he has lost in consequence of the erroneous judgment. Any such order is part of the judgment in reversal. The judgment, in form, is, not only that the judgment of the court below be reversed, but that "it is considered, that the defendant be restored to all things which he has lost on occasion of the judgment aforesaid;" and the writ of restitution which is issued in pursuance of it, and in which the sheriff is commanded to levy the money of the chattels of the plaintiff below, or to arrest his person, is strictly an execution.[1]

In crimes, at common law, there was no restitution, because the indictment was in the name of the king. But by 21 Hen. VIII (1530), c. 11, on conviction of larceny, the prosecutor was to have restitution of the goods. That act was repealed by 7 and 8 Geo. IV (1827), c. 27, 29, which provides that the court may order restoration to the owner or his representative, from the thief or the receiver from him; but not so, if the thing stolen was a negotiable security, which has come into the possession of a bona fide holder, for value, without reasonable cause to suspect that the paper was stolen.[2]

RESTORE. Compare RESTITUTION.

The words "restored to market," in the act of March 3, 1877, § 3,—securing the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands in Kansas,—signify no more than a withdrawal of the lands from the condition or reservation in which they have been held by reason of the railroad grant.[3]

RESTRAIN. 1. To keep in, hold in; to abridge, confine, regulate.

To restrain and suppress an amusement is to regulate or wholly suppress it, or regulate it by a license.[4] See PROHIBITION, 2.

2. To limit, restrict, hinder, repress: as in saying that contracts in restraint of trade, or of marriage, are void.

A "restraining statute" limits the action of the common law.

See DURESS; IMPRISONMENT; LEGAL, Illegal.

3. To prohibit by judicial order, by injunction; to enjoin: as, to restrain an act, a proceeding, a defendant.

A "restraining order" is of the nature of an injunction. The force of such an order ceases upon the granting of an injunction pendente lite.[5]

Restrictive. Limited, to a particular person or purpose: as, a restrictive condition, indorsement, q. v. Compare ABSOLUTE.

RESTS. See REST, 2.

RESULTING. See TRUST, 1; USE, 3.

RESURRECTIONIST. See SEPULCHER.

RETAIL. To sell in small quantities.[1]

To sell by small parcels or quantities, and not in the gross; as, to sell half a pint of alcohol at once.[2]

Retail dealer. One who sells by small quantities, to suit customers, articles which are bought in larger amounts.[3]

A "wholesale dealer" sells in gross, not by the small quantity or parcel.[3] See MERCHANT.

To constitute the offense of carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax required by United States law, the accused must have procured the liquor sold with intent to retail it, or, having it on hand, formed the intent to retail it, and carried out that intent by one or more acts.[4]

Gratuitously distributing ardent spirits at a public gaming-table does not constitute the keeper of the table a retailer of spirituous liquors.[5]

RETAINER. 1. The act of engaging an attorney-at-law to prosecute or defend a cause; also, the formal notice given by the lawyer that he has been so retained; and, also, the fee paid — the "retaining fee."

In particular, the fee of a barrister, or advocate, paid before it is earned. The old rule that all fees should be paid in advance, by removing pecuniary interest in the issue of suits, tended to maintain the independence and respectability of the bar.[6] See ATTORNEY.

2. At common law, the right in an executor or administrator to reserve assets enough to pay his own debt, before other creditors of equal degree.

The reason was, he could not sue himself. Now, as a rule, unsecured debts share alike.[7]

RETALIATION. Compare RETORSION.

The lex talionis, or law of retaliation, can never be in all cases an adequate or permanent rule of punishment. The difference of persons, place, time, provocation, or other circumstances may enhance or mitigate the offense; and in such cases retaliation can never be a proper measure of justice.[8]

RETIRE. 1. To withdraw from membership: as, to retire from a firm or partnership. Whence retiring partner, q. v.

2. In its application to bills of exchange, is

---

[1] Duncan v. Kirkpatrick, 13 S. & R. *294 (1825), Gibson, J.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 362-63; Chitty, ib.

[3] Kansas & Neosho Valley R. Lands, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 181 (1878).

[4] Smith v. City of Madison, 7 Ind. 86 (1855); City of Burlington v. Lawrence, 42 Iowa, 681 (1876); 12 Kan. 630.

[5] Cohen v. Gray, 70 Cal. 85 (1886).

[1] Commonwealth v. Kimball, 7 Metc. 308 (1843).

[2] Bridges v. State, 37 Ark. 226 (1881).

[3] State v. Lowenhaught, 11 Lea, 15 (1883), Freeman J.; Webb v. State, ib. 664 (1883).

[4] United States v. Bonham, 31 F. R. 908 (1887).

[5] United States v. Mickle, 1 Cranch, C. C. 268 (1808).

[6] Forsythe, Hist. Lawyers, 353. See 3 R. I. 206; 60 Iowa, 520; 3 Chitty, Pr. 116, m.

[7] See 3 Bl. Com. 18; 63 Ala. 488; 6 Fla. 29; 9 Ill. 300.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 12-13. See Woolsey, Int. Law, § 122.

ambiguous. It is ordinarily used of an indorser who takes up a bill by handing the amount to a transferee, after which the indorser holds the instrument with all his remedies intact. But it is sometimes used of an acceptor, by whom, when a bill is taken up or retired at maturity, it is in effect paid, and all the remedies on it extinguished.[1]

Acts of Congress speak of "retiring" from circulation coin or other money of a particular issue or denomination.

RETORNUM. L. Return, q. v.

Retorno habendo. For return had; to have a return. A judgment awarding a defendant in replevin the possession and property of the goods or articles; a judgment de retorno habendo.[2]

RETORSION.[3] Applying the law of retaliation to another nation,—treating it or its subjects in similar circumstances according to the rule which is set.[4]

RETRACTION. See LIBEL, 5; OFFER, 1.

RETRAXIT. L. He has withdrawn. The act of a plaintiff in voluntarily withdrawing from his suit.

A "non-suit" is negative, a mere default and neglect of the plaintiff, after which, upon paying the costs, he may begin his suit again. A "retraxit" is positive, being an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit in court, and by which his right of action is forever lost.[5]

RETREAT. In the law of homicide, before a person who is assaulted may kill his assailant, he must flee as far as he reasonably can, either by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit.[6]

"Retreating to the wall" means that the party assaulted must avail himself of any apparent and reasonable avenue of escape, by which the danger might be averted, and the necessity of slaying his assailant avoided.[7]

But if the attack is of such a nature, or the weapon of such a character, that to attempt to retreat might increase the danger, the party need not retreat.[7]

If retreat does not apparently place the assailed in greater peril he must resort to it.[8]

Where the master of a vessel assaults a seaman, who futilely endeavors to escape, the latter may protect himself from injury; if the assault is made with a deadly weapon or otherwise dangerously, he may use equivalent force.[1]

RETROSPECTIVE; RETROACTIVE. Retrospective: looking backward; retroactive: acting backward. Affecting what is past; operating upon a past event or transaction. Retrospective is the more common.

Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past, must be deemed "retrospective."[2]

That there exists a general power in the State governments to enact retrospective or retroactive laws, does not admit of question. The only limitation is the provision[3] that the same shall not be such as are technically "ex post facto," or as "impair the obligation of contracts."[4]

A legislative body may by statute declare the construction of previous statutes so as to bind the courts in reference to all transactions occurring after the passage of the law, and, in many cases, thus furnish the rule to govern the courts in transactions which are past, provided that no constitutional right of a party concerned is violated. Congress cannot, under cover of giving a construction to an existing or expired statute, invade private rights, with which it could not interfere by a new or affirmative statute. But where it can exercise a power by passing a new statute, which may be retroactive in its effect, the form of words used cannot be material, if the purpose is clear, and that purpose is within its power.[5]

The settled doctrine of the Supreme Court is that "words in a statute ought not to have a retrospective operation unless they are so clear, strong and imperative that no other meaning can be annexed to them, or unless the intention of the legislature cannot be otherwise satisfied."[6]

---

[1] [Byles, Bills, 226.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 160, 413.

[3] L. retorquere, to twist back, retort.

[4] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 118.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 296; 1 Ala. 47; 31 id. 113; 17 Ga. 251; 68 Ind. 310; 8 Pa. 163; 79 Va. 338.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 185.

[7] People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 120 (1880), Morrison, C. J.

[8] Carter v. State, 89 Ala. 15 (1886), cases.

[1] United States v. Beyer, 31 F. R. 37 (1887).

[2] Society for Propagating the Gospel v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 139 (1814), Story, J. See also Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. *503-8 (1811), Kent, C. J. Story's definition quoted, Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 519 (1885), Woods, J.; Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 210 (1864), Brinkerhoff, C. J.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10.

[4] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. 401-2 (1850), cases, Daniel, J.

[5] Stockdale v. The Insurance Companies, 20 Wall. 331-32 (1873), Miller, J.; Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 679 (1881); Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 231 (1882); 23 Wall. 76; 95 U. S. 654-55; 17 Ct. Cl. 171; 2 Story, Const. § 1393.

[6] Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 559 (1884), cases, Harlan, J., quoting United States v. Heth, 3 Cranch, 413 (1806), Paterson, J.

If the judge is satisfied that the legislative construction, expressed in a declaratory act, is wrong, he is bound to disregard it. The act will not be given a retrospective operation, so as to deprive a party of a vested right, unless its language is so plain and explicit as to render it impossible to put any other construction upon it.[1]

Retroactive effect will not be given to a statute unless the intention of the law-makers that that is to be the effect is expressed in terms, especially where rights will be taken away or restricted.[2]

See FACTUM, Ex post; IMPAIR; USUS, Utile, etc.

RETURN. 1. To come or go back to the same place; to revisit.[3]

2. For an officer to report to a court what he did toward executing its process; also, the certificate indorsed upon the writ as to what was officially done, and when and where; and, also, by elision for "return day," the day when such report is to be made or actually is made. See RETORNUM.

Whatever the sheriff does in pursuance of the command of a writ he must "return" or certify to the court together with the writ itself.[4]

The day on which a defendant is ordered to appear in court, and on which the sheriff is to bring in the writ and report how far he has observed it, is called the "return" of the writ, or the "return day."[5]

Every process issued by a court must be returned, unless some statute otherwise provides, to the court which issues it. This is essential, that the court may know that its order has been obeyed, and that the record may be complete. The term "return" implies that the process is taken back to the place from which it was issued.[6]

Returns and return days are either general, that is, regular, or special, that is, conventional, as corresponds with the requirements of statutes and established practice, or, as in particular cases, the convenience of parties, the engagements of counsel and the judge or judges of the court, or the effectual administration of justice, may permit or direct.

Due return. Bringing a process into court, with such indorsements as the law requires — whether they in fact be true or false.[7]

False return. An incorrect statement or report of what was done under a judicial mandate.

Does not necessarily import willful disregard of facts.

Insufficient and irregular also are descriptive of defective returns.

Returnable. Requiring official report as to what was done by way of execution of a precept.

Said of a summons, citation, capias, writ of execution, or other process, to be returned to the court or officer who ordered it to issue and to be served or otherwise executed by a day named in the process itself.

The time within which returns are, in the first instance, directed to be made, may, in cases, be "enlarged" by special order. Where intervening rights will not be adversely affected, a return, as made, may be "amended." And when the law has been flagrantly disregarded, a return will be "set aside."

A return, as made, is conclusive in its statements of facts upon the officer and on a party who does not except to it; it is always construed rigorously against the officer; but it cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding.[1] When "false," an action for the loss incurred may be maintained against the officer. When the process is void or voidable, the return of service also will be so. There may be an irregular or erroneous return to legal process. This is true, in a special sense, of returns to writs of execution.

See BONA, Nulla; CAPERE, Cepi; ERROR, 2 (3); FIND, 3; NIHIL; SERVICE, 6; VENIRE, Tarde.

3. To make complaint that one is violating a law; to inform against; as, to return a person for selling liquors without license, or for maintaining a nuisance. See INFORMATION, 3.

REUS. L. A defendant in a civil or criminal suit. See COURT; MENS, Rea.

REV. ST. Revised Statutes. See REVISE.

REVE. See REEVE.

REVEL. To behave in a noisy, boisterous manner, like a bacchanal.[2]

REVENDICATION.[3] Demand that a thing be returned or restored; reclamation of a thing sold.

The doctrine of stoppage in transitu appears to have been derived from, or to be analogous to, revendication in the civil law: "the right of an unpaid vendor, upon the insolvency of the vendee, to reclaim, in specie, such part of the goods as remains in the

---

[1] Salters v. Tobias, 3 Paige, 344 (1832), Walworth, Ch.

[2] Hill v. Duncan, 110 Mass. 240 (1872), cases, Colt, J See also 25 Am. Law Reg. 681-95 (1886), cases; 26 Iowa, 340; 20 Miss. 347; 57 Pa. 433; Barr. Stat. 466; 1 Kent, 455.

[3] Society v. Platt, 12 Conn. *187 (1837).

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 278.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 275. See Steph. Plead. 24.

[6] Re Crittenden, 2 Flip. 215 (1878), Ballard, J.

[7] Harman v. Childress, 3 Yerg. 329 (1832).

[1] See Von Roy v. Blackman, 3 Woods, 100-2 (1877), cases.

[2] Petition of Regan, 12 R. I. 310 (1879).

[3] L. re, again; vindicare, to lay claim to.

hands of the vendee entire, and without having changed its quality."[1]

REVENUE.[2] The income of a state.[3]

In a statute providing that appeals should be taken directly to the highest court in "cases relating to the revenue," held, that "revenue" was not used in its most extended meaning, but as embracing public revenue, whether State or municipal — all taxes and assessments imposed by public authority.[4]

"All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills."[5]

Revenue laws. Laws made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenue or public funds for the service of the government.[6]

Used in connection with a reference to the jurisdiction of the United States courts, means a law imposing duties on imports or tonnage, or a law providing in terms for revenue; that is, a law directly traceable to the power granted to Congress "To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises."[7]

The lexical definition of "revenue" is very comprehensive: "The income of a nation, derived from its taxes, duties, or other sources, for the payment of the national expenses." "Other sources" would include the proceeds of public lands, the receipts of the patent-office and of the post-office department, in excess of expenditures. The appellative "revenue laws" is applied only to such laws as are made for the purpose of creating revenue or public funds for the service of the government.[8]

Bills for raising revenue are such as impose taxes upon the people, directly or indirectly, or lay duties, imposts or excises, for the use of the government, and give the persons from whom the money is exacted no equivalent in return, unless it be the enjoyment, in common with other citizens, of the benefits of good government. It is this feature which characterizes bills for raising revenue. They draw money from the citizen, giving no direct equivalent in return. In respect to such bills it was reasonable that the Constitution should provide that the immediate representatives of the tax-payers should alone have power to originate them. It is a very strained construction which would regard a bill establishing rates of postage as a bill for raising revenue.[9] See RAISE, Revenue.

Under the revenue system of the United States, the collection of the revenue in the manner prescribed by law cannot be restrained by judicial proceedings. The only remedy for an illegal exaction is payment under protest and suit to recover back the money. The reason is, that as it is necessary that the government should be able to calculate with certainty on its revenues, it is better that the individual should be required to pay what is demanded under the forms of law, and sue to recover back what he pays, than that the government should be embarrassed in its operations by a stay of collection.[1]

Officer of the revenue. In the Revised Statutes, an officer of the revenue from customs; does not therefore include a postmaster.[2]

See DUTIES; REFUNDS; STAMP; TAX, 2.

REVERSE. To set aside, annul, vacate: as, to reverse a judgment.[3]

Reversal. The act or decision of one court in pronouncing erroneous, and therefore annulling, the judgment or decree of a lower court. Opposed, affirmance, q. v.

Compare OVERRULE; REVOKE. See OPINION, 3; VENIRE, De novo.

REVERT.[4] For property (usually land) to go back or return to a person who formally owned it but who parted with the possession or title to it, by creating an estate in another which has terminated by his act or by operation of law.

"Revert back to my other heirs" means, simply, to go back to such heirs.[5]

Reversion. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. "The returning of lands to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over."[6]

A return of the estate to the original owner, after the limited estate carved out of it has determined.[7]

The fee-simple of land must abide somewhere; and if he who is possessed of the whole carves out of it a smaller estate, and grants it away, whatever is not so granted remains in him. While a "reversion" is never therefore created by a deed, but arises from construction of law, a "remainder" can never be limited except by a deed or a devise. Both are equally transferable, when actually vested, being estates in præsenti, though taking effect in futuro. A reversion is an incorporeal hereditament.[8]

---

[1] Benedict v. Schaettle, 12 Ohio St. 520, 518 (1861), Gholson, J., quoting note 2 Nev. & Man. 650. See also 27 E. C. L. 201; L. R., 7 Ap. Cas. 582.

[2] F. revenir, to come back.

[3] United States v. Bromley, 12 How. 97 (1851), McLean, Judge.

[4] Webster v. People, 96 Ill. 347 (1881), Walker, J.; Potwin v. Johnson, 106 id. 533 (1883).

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 7, cl. 1.

[6] United States v. Mayo, 1 Gall. *398 (1813), Story, J.

[7] United States v. Hill, 123 U. S. 686 (1887), Waite, C. J.

[8] United States v. Norton, 91 U. S. 568-69 (1875), Swayne, J., quoting Worcester's Dict.

[9] United States v. James, 13 Blatch. 208 (1875), Johnson, J.; 1 Story, Const. § 880; 4 Blatch. 311; 1 Woolw. 270.

[1] Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 777 (1882), Waite, C. J.

[2] Campbell v. James, 18 Blatch. 196 (1880).

[3] Laithe v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 268 (1871), Brewer, J.

[4] L. re-vertere, to turn backward.

[5] Beatty v. Trustees, 39 N. J. E. 463 (1885).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 175, quoting 1 Coke, Inst. 142; 26 N. J. L. 540.

[7] 4 Kent, 353-54.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 175-76; 4 Kent, 353-56; 1 Washb. R. P. 37, 47; 38 N. J. E. 124.

Reversionary. Pertaining to or partaking of the nature of a reversion.

A reversionary interest is the right to enjoy in the future property at present in the possession of another.

Reversioner. A person entitled to an estate in a reversion.

Reverter. Reversion.

See ESTATE, 3; FIXTURE; REMAINDER; TABLE, 4.

REVEST. See VEST.

REVIEW. Viewing again: a second consideration; revisement, reconsideration, re-examination to correct, if necessary, a previous examination.

1. A re-examination for report upon the line of a highway as recommended by a jury of "viewers." The persons who make this second view are called "reviewers," and compose the "jury of review." See VIEW.

2. The revision of a judicial act.

Bill of review. A proceeding in a court of equity by which the defendant may have a decree against him reviewed for error upon its face. A formal mode of rehearing the case, incidental to the original suit.[1]

A bill in the nature of a writ of error; its object is to procure an examination, and alteration or reversal, of a decree made upon a former bill, after such decree has been signed and enrolled.[2]

If the decree is not enrolled, a "bill in the nature of a bill of review," or a "supplemental bill in the nature of a bill in review," is appropriate.[3]

May be had upon error apparent upon the face of the decree; or, by special leave of the court, upon oath made of the discovery of new evidence, which could not possibly be had or used when the decree passed.[3]

Lies for error in point of law apparent upon the record, or for some new matter of fact, relevant to the case, discovered since publication passed, and which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered before. To enable the court to judge of the propriety of granting a rehearing, the petition must state the grounds upon which it is asked. The petitioner must also show that he has performed the decree, especially as regards the payment of money and costs.[4]

"No bill of review shall be admitted unless the party first obeys and performs the decree, and enters into a recognizance with sureties, to satisfy the costs and damages for the delay if it be found against him."[1]

There is no universal and absolute rule which prohibits the court from allowing the introduction of newly-discovered evidence to prove facts which were in issue on the former hearing. The allowance is not a matter of right, but of sound discretion, to be exercised cautiously and sparingly, and only under circumstances which demonstrate that it is indispensable to the merits and justice of the cause.[2]

The bill will be refused, if productive of mischief to innocent parties, or for other cause sufficient to the court.[3]

The only questions open for examination on a bill for error of law appearing upon the record are such as arise on the pleadings, proceedings, and decree, without reference to the evidence in the cause.[4]

A bill must ordinarily be brought within the time limited by statute for taking an appeal from the decree sought to be reviewed, where the review is not founded on matters discovered since the decree.[5]

Court of review. A court whose distinctive function is to pass upon (affirming or reversing) the final decisions of another or other courts.

3. To examine a literary production and express (usually publish) an opinion as to its merits.

A reviewer may fairly cite largely from the original work, if his design is to use the passages for the purpose of fair and reasonable criticism. But if he thus cites the most important parts of the work, with a view, not to criticise, but to supersede the use of the original work, and substitute the review, such use will be deemed a piracy.[6]

Where an action of libel respects a comment in a newspaper on a matter of public interest, the case is not one of privilege, properly so called, and it is not necessary, in order to give a cause of action, that actual malice be proved. The question whether the comment is or is not actionable depends upon whether, in the opinion of the jury, it goes beyond the limits of fair criticism. "Whatever is fair and can be reasonably said of the works of an author or of himself as connected with his work, is not actionable, unless it appears that, under the pretext of criticising the

[1] [Bush v. United States, 13 F. R. 628 (1882), Deady, D. J.: s. c. 8 Saw. 326.

[2] Story, Eq. Pl. § 408.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 454.

[4] Wiser v. Blachly, 2 Johns. Ch. *491 (1817), cases, Kent, Ch.; Ketchum v. Breed, 66 Wis. 94 (1886), cases.

[1] Davis v. Speiden, 104 U. S. 84–86 (1881), cases: Bacon's Law Tracts, 280.

[2] Wood v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 334, 318–35 (1836), cases, Story, J.; Craig v. Smith, 100 U. S. 234 (1879), Waite, Chief Justice.

[3] Story, Eq. Pl. § 417; Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 521 (1866); Ricker v. Powell, 100 U. S. 107 (1879), cases.

[4] Shelton v. Van Kleeck, 106 U. S. 534 (1882), cases. See also Irwin v. Meyrose, 2 McCrary, 244, 250 (1881), cases; Willamet Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 19 F. R. 347 (1884).

[5] Ensminger v. Powers, 108 U. S. 302 (1883), cases; Taylor v. Charter Oak Life Ins. Co., 3 McCrary, 486 (1882), cases: s. c. 17 F. R. 566.

[6] Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 106, 117 (1841), Story, J. See also 8 South. Law Rev. 160–88 (1882), cases.

work, the defendant took an opportunity of attacking the character of the author: then it will be libel."[1] See ABRIDGE, 1; DRAMA.

REVISE. To re-examine and amend: as, to revise a judgment, a code, laws, statutes, reports, accounts. Compare REVIEW, 1.

Revisions of codes and statutes, partial or entire, have been enacted as follows: In Alabama, in 1876, 1887; Arizona, 1887 (compiled laws); Arkansas, 1874; California, 1873; Colorado, 1877, 1883; Connecticut, 1875, 1887; Dakota, 1877, 1887; Delaware, 1874; Florida, 1872; Georgia, 1882; Idaho, 1875, 1887; Illinois, 1874, 1883; Indiana, 1852, 1881; Iowa, 1873, 1880; Kansas, 1868, 1879; Kentucky, 1873, 1887; Louisiana, 1870, 1875, 1882, 1884; Maine, 1871, 1883; Maryland, 1878, 1886, 1888; Massachusetts, 1860, with supplements to 1872, and to 1882; Michigan, 1871; Minnesota, 1866, 1888; Mississippi, 1880; Missouri, 1879; Montana, 1879, 1887; Nebraska, 1881, 1887; Nevada, 1873, 1885; New Hampshire, 1878; New Jersey, 1877, 1887; New Mexico, 1884; New York, 1829, with eight revised editions to 1888; North Carolina, 1883: Ohio, 1880; Oregon, 1872; Pennsylvania, a criminal code in 1863; Rhode Island, 1882; South Carolina, 1882; Tennessee, 1871, 1884; Texas, 1879; Utah, 1876; Vermont, 1880; Virginia, 1873, 1887; Washington, 1881; West Virginia, 1883, 1887; Wisconsin, 1878; Wyoming, 1876, 1887.[2]

Revised Statutes. Statutes which have been amended, re-arranged, and re-enacted.

Where, by a statute, there is a revision of the whole subject-matter of former statutes, the earlier enactments are repealed so far as it appears it was the intention of the legislature to repeal them. The revision repeals by implication so far as it is repugnant to the old law, or when it is evidently intended as a substitute.[3]

A different interpretation is not to be given to revised statutes without some substantial change of phraseology other than what may have been necessary to abbreviate the form of the law.[4]

Where the language is of such doubtful import as to call for a construction, it is usual to refer to the statute or statutes from which the revision was made. But where the language is plain, and leads to no absurd or improbable result, there is no room for construction, and such effect will be given it as is required by the ordinary signification of the words used, regardless of the prior statute or its construction. The rational rule must be to resort to the prior statute to remove, not to raise, doubts.[1]

Revised Statutes of the United States. An act of Congress, passed June 27, 1866, authorized the appointment of three commissioners, learned in the law, to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all the statutes of the United States, of general or permanent nature.[2]

This revision, which embraced statutes in force up to December 1, 1873, went into effect June 22, 1874.

An act of June 20, 1874, directed the secretary of state to cause the head and marginal notes to be completed, referring to the original statutes and to decisions explaining the same; to annex an index and otherwise prepare the work for printing and distribution; and, finally, to certify the completion of the work. This act provided, further, that, after promulgation, the printed volumes should be evidence of the laws and treaties therein contained in all courts.[3]

The revision repeals all acts embraced within it. No presumption of a legislative intent is to be drawn from the arrangement and classification of titles and sections.[4]

Acts of February 18, and March 3, 1875, declared that acts passed since December 1, 1873, are not affected by the revision.[5]

Act of March 2, 1877, authorized the appointment of one commissioner to prepare a new edition; the same to be examined and certified by the secretary of state.[6] This second edition was published February 18, 1878.

Act of March 9, 1878, makes the second edition evidence, but not to control or affect acts passed since December 1, 1873.[7]

Act of June 7, 1880, authorized a supplement to be prepared and published. The same to be prima facie evidence, but not to preclude reference to, nor control in case of discrepancy, the effect of any original act, nor to change or alter any existing law.[8]

The first edition is a transcript of the original work in the state department. It is prima facie evidence of the law. The second edition is neither a new revision nor a new enactment, merely a new publication — a compilation containing the original law with certain alterations and amendments made by subsequent legislation, incorporated therein according to the judgment of the editor, who had no direction to correct errors or supply omissions.[9]

---

[1] Merivale v. Carson, 20 Q. B. D. 275 (1887), cases. The defendant was the editor of a theatrical newspaper called The Stage. A criticism of the play called "The Whip Hand," published in his paper, falsely charged, plaintiff alleged, that the play had an immoral tendency.

[2] See Stimson Am. St. Law, IX-XIV; 1 Sup. p. 14, § 1047; Banks & Brothers' Catalogue, 1888. For each State there are one or more Digests, Compilations, or Supplements prepared by private persons, and, therefore, not authoritative.

[3] Bowlus v. Brier, 87 Ind. 396 (1882), Black, C.; 41 id. 282.

[4] McDonald v. Hovey, 110 U. S. 628 (1884), cases, Bradley, J.

[1] Heck v. State, 44 Ohio St. 537–88 (1886), cases.

[2] See R. S. for 1878, p. 1069.

[3] R. S. p. 1090.

[4] United States v. Jordan, 2 Low. 537, 542 (1876).

[5] R. S. p. 1085; 15 Ct. Cl. 80.

[6] R. S. p. 1092.

[7] 1 Sup. R. S. pp. 308, 52, 285.

[8] 1 Sup. R. S. pp. 582–83.

[9] Wright v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 86–89 (1879), Richardson, J.

Sections in pari materia are to be construed together.[1]

Section 5596 of the revision indicates a belief on the part of Congress that all parts of acts passed prior to December 1, 1873, not contained in the revision, are superseded. That is a recital of belief, not a declaration, and not conclusive. Whether a statute was repealed by a later one is a judicial, not a legislative, question.[2]

The revision is the legislative declaration of the statute law on the subjects embraced on December 1, 1873. When the meaning is plain, the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised to see if Congress erred in that revision, but may do so when necessary to construe doubtful language used in expressing the meaning.[3]

The revision as a whole is an act of Congress, approved June 22, 1874. In cases of uncertainty, the previous statutes may be referred to, to elucidate the legislative intent. But where the language is clear, the revision, as expressing the latest will, must govern.[4]

While, in construing the revision, the presumption is against an intention to change the law, yet, where the language cannot possibly bear the same construction as in the repealed act, full effect must be given to the new enactment.[5] See REPEAL; STATUTES, At Large.

REVIVE. To impart new life to, renew: to make operative once more; to restore original force to: as, to revive a debt, a suit, a judgment.

Revival; reviver; revivor. The act or proceeding of giving new life or efficacy to that which has lain dormant, been abated, or has or will become outlawed.

On the revival of debts barred by the statute of limitations, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 1; PAYMENT, Part.

Bill of revivor. Sets proceedings in motion again, when a suit has abated by the death of a party,[6] or by the marriage of a female plaintiff.

When, in the progress of a suit in equity, the proceedings are suspended from the want of proper parties, it is necessary to file a bill of revivor.[7]

It is a bill in equity, brought by the personal representative of a deceased party. A "bill of revivor and supplement" seeks to continue an abated suit, and to supply a defect in the original bill, arising from a subsequent event.[1]

REVOKE. To call back one's own act or deed, recall; to cancel, annul, qq. v.

Revocable. That which may be annulled by its author. Opposed, irrevocable: past recall.

Revocation. The nullification of a person's own act; the extinguishment of a right by the person who created it; the cancellation of an instrument by its maker.

As, to revoke an appointment, a power of attorney, a will, the probate of a will, letters testamentary or of administration, a submission to arbitrators or a referee, the power of a partner to act for the firm.

"To revoke" is to recall what one has done or promised. By a loose use of language, anything which renders a bequest inoperative at the testator's death may be called a "revocation." The "ademption" of a legacy is not usually called revocation. When ademption is not used, the act is called satisfaction, payment, performance or execution.[2]

A revocation is an act done by a testator by which he recalls his will.[3]

Consists in the purpose to destroy or annul the operation of the instrument, manifested by some outward sign or symbol. The question is one of fact and intention.[4]

REVOLT. Under the Crimes Act of April 30, 1790, consists in the endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his command to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring obedience from the lawful commander to some other person.[5]

An endeavor to excite the crew of a ship to overthrow the lawful authority and command of the master and officers of the ship. In effect, an endeavor to make a mutiny among the crew or to stir up a general disobedience or resistance to the authority of the officers.[6]

---

[1] Exp. Karstendick, 93 U. S. 398 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[2] United States v. Claflin, 97 U. S. 548 (1878), Strong, Justice.

[3] United States v. Bowen, 100 U. S. 513 (1879), Miller, J.; Myer v. Western Car Co., 102 id. 11 (1880); Cambria Iron Co. v. Ashburn, 118 id. 57 (1886); 14 Ct. Cl. 2; 7 Rep. 198.

[4] Wright v. United States, ante.

[5] The Bark Brothers, 10 Bened. 402 (1879), Choate, J.; The Gorgas, ib. 470 (1879); ib. 170.

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 448.

[7] Kennedy v. Georgia State Bank, 8 How. 610 (1850), McLean, J.

[1] Story. Eq. Pl. §§ 354–87. See 2 Paige, 369; 5 Johns. 342; 1 Root, 578.

[2] Langdon v. Astor's Executors, 16 N. Y. 40, 39 (1857), Denio, C. J.

[3] [Lathrop v. Dunlop, 4 Hun, 215 (1875).

[4] Beauchamp's Will, 4 T. B. Mon. *363 (1827), Bibb, C. J. See also Gay v. Gay, 60 Iowa, 420 (1882), cases; Towne v. Weston, 133 Mass. 515 (1882); 35 Am. Rep. 35–37, cases.

[5] United States v. Kelly, 11 Wheat. 418 (1826), Washington, J.

[6] United States v. Smith, 1 Mas. 147 (1816), Story, J.

An open-rebellion or mutiny; an usurpation of the authority and command of the ship, and an overthrow of that of the master or other commanding officer. . . Any act done with intent to accomplish such an object is an endeavor to commit a revolt.[1]

A total refusal to perform any duty on board, until the master has yielded to some illegal demand of the crew, when it has produced de facto a compliance, or a suspension of his power of command, is a revolt.[2]

The act of March 3, 1835 (Rev. St. §§ 5359-60), enlarges the act of 1790, by adding distinct offenses to the "endeavor to make a revolt." These statutes do not include every case of simple passive disobedience by one of the crew, but do embrace every case of resistance to the free and lawful exercise of the master's authority, when accompanied by force, fraud, intimidation, violence, a conspiracy among the crew, or concerted action in such resistance or disobedience by one of them. An unlawful confinement of the master is not restricted to a physical confinement of his person.[3]

REVOLUTION. See INDEPENDENCE.

REVOLVER. See WEAPON.

REWARD. Compare PREMIUM; PRIZE.

1. Where a liberal reward was offered for information leading to the apprehension of a fugitive from justice, and a specific sum for his apprehension, it was held that a party giving the information which led to the arrest was entitled to the "reward," but not to the specific sum, unless he, in fact, apprehended the fugitive, or the arrest was made by his agents.[4]

Where an offer of a reward is made by public proclamation, before rights have accrued under it, it may be withdrawn through the channel in which it was made. No contract arises under such an offer until its terms are complied with. That the claimant was ignorant of its withdrawal is immaterial.[4] Compare BOUNTY.

Where an advertisement is published offering a reward for information in respect to or for the return of lost property, an acceptance of the offer by a person who is able to give the information or to return the property creates a valid contract.[1]

2. On the subject of reward for the custody of property, see BAILMENT; DEPOSIT, 2.

REX. See KING.

RHODIAN LAW. See MARITIME LAW.

The Rhodians were the earliest people that created, digested, and promulgated a system of marine law. Their laws concerning navigation were received at Athens, in the islands of the Ægean sea, and throughout the coast of the Mediterranean, as part of the law of nations. One title in the Pandects of the Roman law contains all the fragments extant of the code of the Rhodians; their laws, by recognition of Augustus and Antoninus, becoming rules of decision among the Romans in all maritime cases in which they were not contrary to their own laws.[2]

In these fragments is stated the modern law of jettison, average, and contribution, as distinctly as in any recent text-book. . . The Rhodians possessed a flourishing commerce at least one thousand years before the Christian era. Their laws were probably founded upon usages which were themselves of long standing.[3]

RICE. See GRAIN.

RICHARD ROE. See DOE.

RIDER. A clause added to a bill pending before a legislative body after it has been reported from committee.

Amendments are sometimes made to bills in Parliament after third reading. If a new clause be added it is done by tacking on a separate piece of parchment called a "rider."[4]

RIDICULE. See LIBEL, 5.

RIFLE-SHOOTING. See SCIENCE; SHOOTING MARK.

RIEN. L. F. Nothing.

Rien arrere or en arrere. Nothing back. A plea denying that rent is due.

Rien per descent. Nothing by inheritance; no assets by descent.

---

[1] United States v. Hemmer, 4 Mas. 107 (1825), Story, J.; United States v. Haskell, 4 Wash. 405 (1823); ib. 529.

[2] United States v. Haines, 5 Mas. 277 (1829), Story, J.

[3] United States v. Huff, 13 F. R. 630, 636-41 (1882), cases, Hammond, D. J. See also United States v. Peterson, 1 Woodb. & M. 309 (1846); United States v. Nye, 2 Curtis, 227 (1855); R. S. §§ 5359-60, cases.

[4] Shuey, Executor of Ste. Marie v. United States, 92 U. S. 76, 75 (1875), cases, Strong, J.

April 20, 1865, the secretary of war offered $25,000 reward "for the apprehension of J. H. Surrat," one of the accomplices of J. Wilkes Booth, and a "liberal reward for any information" leading to his arrest. November 24, 1865, the offer was revoked by public advertisement. In April, 1866, Surrat was a souave in the Papal service in Italy. Ste. Marie, who was also in the same service, made known to our minister at Rome that Surrat had confessed to him participation in the plot against the life of President Lincoln, and kept watch over the fugitive up to November 6, 1866, when he was arrested for extradition. At the moment of leaving prison at Veroli, Surrat escaped from his guard, and fled to Alexandria, where he was re-arrested, Ste. Marie having been sent there to identify him. During all this period, both Ste. Marie and the minister were without information that the offer of a reward had been revoked. The claimant died pendente lite. He had been paid $10,000 for the information as to the identity of Surrat, but later filed a petition in the court of claims to recover $15,000, the balance he alleged to be due him on account of the "apprehension."

[1] Pierson v. Morch, 82 N. Y. 503 (1880). See generally Huthsing v. Bousquet, 2 McCrary, 152 (1881); Dunham v. Stockbridge, 133 Mass. 233 (1882); 25 Cent. Law J. 321-24 (1887), Eng. cases; 5 Cr. Law Mag. 665-82 (1888), cases.

[2] 3 Kent, 4-5, 233; 17 F. R. 261.

[3] 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 6.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 183.

RIGHT.[1] 1, adj. Direct, nearest; lineal; legal.

"Right heirs," in a will, was held to mean children.[2]

A limitation to one and his "right heirs" is the same as to his "heirs" simply; and a limitation directly to the "right heirs" of one carries a fee, without the addition of the words "and his heirs."[3]

To limit an estate to one's "right heir," excepting A, who actually is that heir, is palpably inconsistent.[4]

2, n. (1) There can be no more uncertain rule of action than that which is furnished by an intention to do "right." How or by whom is the right to be ascertained? What is right in a particular case? Archbishop Whateley says: "That which is conformable to the supreme will is absolutely right, and is called right simply, without reference to a specific end. The opposite of right is wrong." This announces a standard of right, but it gives no practical aid. What is or what may be right depends upon many circumstances. The principle is impracticable as a rule of action to be administered by the courts. There is no standard known to us by which we are able to say that it is wrong, for example, for a person not to pay a debt from which he has been discharged by decree of a bankrupt court.[5]

Moral right and legal right are not always synonymous.[6]

(2) A right in any valuable sense can only be that which the law secures to its possessor, by requiring others to respect it, and to abstain from its violation. Rights, then, are the offspring of the law; they are born of legal restraints; by these restraints every man may be protected in their enjoyment within the prescribed limits; without them possessions must be obtained and defended by cunning and force.[7]

An enforceable claim or title to any subject-matter whatever: either to possess and enjoy a tangible thing, or to do some act, pursue a course, enjoy a means of happiness, or be exempt from any cause of annoyance; also, one's claim to something out of possession; and, also, a power, prerogative, or privilege, as, when the word is applied to a corporation.[1]

Right, as in "right of trial by jury," is seldom used in the sense of law. It is to be given its primary and natural meaning, unless there is something which clearly indicates its use in a different sense.[2]

The rights of persons that are commended to be observed by the municipal law are such as are due from every citizen, usually called civil "duties;" and, such as belong to him, which is the more popular acceptation of the term "rights." Both may be comprised under the latter division, for all social duties are relative: due from one and to another person.[3]

Those rights which concern and are annexed to the persons of men are called rights of persons; such as a man may acquire over external objects, rights of (to) things.[4]

The primary rights are the rights of personal security, personal liberty, and private property;[5] and, the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and belief.[6]

See DUTY, 1; OBLIGATION, 1. Compare DROIT; JUS.

Absolute rights. Such rights as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or single persons; such rights as would belong to their persons merely in a state of nature [whence called natural rights], and which every man is entitled to enjoy, whether out of society or in it. Relative rights. Rights incident to individuals as members of society, standing in various relations to each other.[7]

Human municipal laws concern social or relative rights and duties, which result from, and are posterior to, the formation of states and societies: the primary end of this being to maintain and regulate absolute rights, to harmonize them with relative rights and duties. These absolute rights are: personal security, personal liberty, and private property,[7] qq. v.

The Constitution does not mean that all persons have an absolute "right to life, liberty, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry." Each of these rights is held in subordination to the right of society.[8]

Bill of rights; declaration of rights. The formal declaration of popular rights which accompanies the constitutions of the several States and, in a sense, that of the United States. See MAGNA CHARTA.

Declares and sets forth the restrictions which the people in their sovereign capacity (or, in the case of [1] A. S. riht: L. rectus, straight, ruled.

[2] Ballentine v. Wood, 42 N. J. E. 557 (1886).
[3] 1 Washb. Real Prop. *57.
[4] Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 529 (1882); 38 Pa. 431, 438.
[5] Allen v. Ferguson, 18 Wall. 4 (1873), Hunt, J.
[6] Commonwealth v. McDuffy, 126 Mass. 469 (1879).
[7] Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 226.

[1] [People v. Dikeman, 7 How. Pr. 130 (1856).
[2] State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 364 (1878).
[3] 1 Bl. Com. 123.
[4] 1 Bl. Com. 122; 2 id. 1.
[5] 1 Bl. Com. 141.
[6] 2 Kent, 34.
[7] 1 Bl. Com. 123-24; 22 Barb. 229.
[8] State v. Addington, 12 Mo. Ap. 217 (1882).

the United States, the individual States) have imposed upon their agents — the respective governments. In reality, contains restrictions upon the majorities who choose persons to fill the departments of government. The purpose is to protect the reserved rights. The bill of rights accompanying the national Constitution is found in the amendments thereto,[1] q. v.

For the better security of the rights of life, liberty, and property it was deemed essential that the fundamental principles of free government should be set down in a few plain, clear, and intelligible propositions, for the better guidance and control, both of legislators and magistrates. . . The general purpose was to assert and maintain the great rights of English subjects, as they had been maintained by the ancient laws, and the actual enjoyment of civil rights under them.[2]

The purpose of the Declaration of Rights was to announce great and fundamental principles, to govern the actions of those who make and those who administer the law, rather than to establish precise and positive rules of action.[3]

Civil right. (1) A right accorded to every member of a distinct community or nation. Political right. A right exercisable in the administration of government.

"Political rights," which consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government, are defined by the constitutions. "Civil rights" have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government; they consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, of exercising paternal and marital powers, and the like. An alien has no political rights, but many, if not all, civil rights.[4]

(2) Such right as belongs to all the citizens of a State or of the United States. As referring to the latter class, these rights were either created or extended by the XIIIth and XIVth Amendments, and secured by the following Civil Rights Acts:

Act of April 9, 1866 (14 St. L. 27) provides that "All persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States; and such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right, in every State and Territory in the United States, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding," — § 1. The other nine sections of the act, known as the Civil Rights Bill of 1866, provided the means for protecting persons in the enjoyment of the rights conferred by the act.

The act, held to be constitutional,[1] as an appropriate method of exercising the power conferred on Congress by the XIIIth Amendment, was replaced by the first section of the XIVth Amendment, — ratified July 28, 1868. But it was re-enacted, with modifications, in sections 16, 17, 18, of the Enforcement Act, passed May 31, 1870 (16 St. L. 140, c. 114), a statute which is purely corrective in its character, intended to counteract and furnish redress against State laws and proceedings, and customs having the force of law, which sanction the wrongful acts specified. The corrective character of this legislation is also preserved in the Revised Statutes — §§ 1977-79, 5510.[2]

Act of March 1, 1875 (18 St. L. 336; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 148: known as Charles Sumner's bill), provides "That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude," — § 1.

For denying, aiding or inciting any violation of the foregoing section, the offender shall forfeit five hundred dollars to the aggrieved, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be finable five hundred to one thousand dollars, with imprisonment from thirty days to one year. The aggrieved may elect to sue for the penalty, or in debt, or proceed under his rights at common law or by State statutes. A judgment for the penalty or upon an indictment bars other remedies, — § 2. Jurisdiction is in the district and circuit courts, — § 3. No person possessing all other qualifications which may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as a grand or petit juror in any court on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. . . Any officer charged with selecting or summoning jurors, who shall exclude or fail to summons any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and finable in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, — § 4. The Supreme Court may review the case, regardless of the sum in controversy, — § 5.

On the fifteenth day of October, 1883, in deciding five different cases, since known as the Civil Rights Cases, and which had been submitted at the October term of 1883, the Supreme Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley (Harlan, J., dissenting), held: That the first and second sections of the act of 1875 are unconstitutional enactments as applied to the States, not being authorised by either the XIIIth or the XIVth Amendment. That the XIVth Amendment is prohibitory upon the States only, and the legislation author-

[1] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 124-25.

[2] Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 343-44 (1857), Shaw, C. J.

[3] Foster v. Morse, 132 Mass. 355 (1882), Morton, C. J. See also Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 613-14 (1874).

[4] [3 Bouvier's Law Dict. 597.]

[1] United States v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. U. S. 29, 37, 56 (1866), Swayne, J. See Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 22 (1883).

[2] Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 16-17 (1883).

ized to be adopted by Congress for enforcing it is not direct legislation on the matters respecting which the States are prohibited from making or enforcing certain laws or doing certain acts, but is corrective legislation, such as may be "necessary or proper" for counteracting and redressing the effect of such laws or actions. That the XIIIth Amendment relates solely to slavery and involuntary servitude — which it abolished; and, although, by its reflex action, it establishes universal freedom, and although Congress may probably pass laws directly enforcing its provisions, yet such legislative power does not extend beyond the subject of slavery and its incidents; and the denial, by individuals, of equal accommodations in inns, public conveyances, and places of public amusement imposes no badge of slavery or involuntary servitude, but, at most, infringes rights which are protected from State aggression by the XIVth Amendment.[1]

The court, arguendo, said that the act of 1875 "steps into the domain of local jurisprudence, and lays down rules for the conduct of individuals toward each other, and imposes sanctions for the enforcement of these rules, without referring in any manner to any supposed action of the State or its authorities. . . If the laws of a State make any unjust discrimination, amenable to the prohibitions of the XIVth Amendment, Congress has full power to afford a remedy under that Amendment and in accordance with it. . . Civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. . . If the wrongful act of an individual is not sanctioned in some way by the State, the rights of the injured party remain in full force, and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress."[2]

Some of the States have laws embodying the substance (if not couched in the identical language) of the first and second sections of the act of 1875, as to the subject-matter of which Congress had no legislative power in the first instance, not being legislation corrective of enactments, or actions on the part of a State or States. Thus, for example, the Civil Rights Act of April 9, 1873, of New York provides that: No citizen of this State shall, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be excepted or excluded from the full and equal enjoyment of any accommodation, advantage, facility or privilege furnished by innkeepers or common carriers, or by owners, managers or lessees of theaters or other places of enjoyment; by teachers and officers of common schools and public institutions of learning, or by cemetery associations. The violation of this section is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars.[3]

See further CITIZEN, Amendments, p. 183; SCHOOL; WOMAN. Compare LIBERTY, Civil.

[1] Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 8–26 (1883). Dissenting opinion by Harlan, J., ib. 26–62.

[2] Ibid. 14, 17, 25. See also United States v. Buntin, 10 F. R. 730, 738 (1882), cases.

[3] See Penn. Act 19 May, 1887 (P. L. 72); 7 Alb. Law J. 355 (1873); 8 id. 3 (1873).

Common right. When it is said that a franchise is a privilege which does not belong to individuals by "common right," the meaning is that the privilege is not a right which pertains to the citizens by common law.

"This common law of England is sometimes called right, sometimes common right, and sometimes common justice."[1]

In her own right. Added to the words "femesole owner," merely repeats one of the necessary qualities of ownership. The phrase neither enlarges, abridges, nor qualifies the meaning of the word "owner." There is no greater necessity for its use than for the addition of "absolute" to "fee-simple."[2]

Legal right. A right which is recognized and protected by a court of common law. Equitable right. A right recognized and protected by a court of equity.[3]

Petition of right and of right. See under PETITION.

Private and public right. See JUS, Privatum, etc.

Reserved right. Rights withheld from a representative, or from a government; as, the rights retained by the States or the people, at the creation of the national government. See Bill of Rights; STATE, 3 (2).

Right of way. See WAY.

Rightful. Possessing right under the law; authorized by law: as, the rightful executor, heir.

Vested right. Something more than such a mere expectation as may be based upon an anticipated continuance of the present general laws; a title, legal or equitable, to the present or future enforcement of a demand, or a legal exemption of a demand made by another.[4]

It is only when rights have become vested under laws that the citizen can claim a protection to them as property. Rights do not vest until all the conditions of the law have been fulfilled with exactitude during its continuance, or a direct engagement has been made, limiting legislative power over and producing an obligation.[5]

When a right has arisen upon a contract or a transaction in the nature of a contract authorized by statute, and has been so far perfected that nothing remains

[1] Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 107 (1882), Thornton, J., quoting Coke's Inst. 142 a.

[2] Dow v. Gould, &c. Mining Co., 31 Cal. 649 (1867).

[3] See 1 Story, Eq. § 25.

[4] Cooley, Const. Lim. 445.

[5] State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop, 16 How. 408 (1853), Campbell, J.; Morton v. Nebraska, 21 Wall. 660, 673 (1874).

to be done by the party asserting it, the repeal of the statute does not affect it or an action for its enforcement. It has become a vested right, which stands independent of the statute.[1]

Writ of right. In case a right of possession is barred by a recovery upon the merits in a possessory action, or by the statute of limitations, a claimant in fee-simple may have a mere writ of right,— the highest writ in the law.[2]

Abolished in England by statute of 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1833), c. 27, and by the Common Law Procedure Act of 1860, § 26.

RING. 1. See SEAL, 1.

2. Persons united with the view of exercising control over political affairs, or over commercial or stock-exchange transactions, for selfish ends; a combination for illegitimate purposes; a clique.[3] See COMBINATION, 2.

RINGING BELLS. See NOISE; NUISANCE.

RINGING UP. This custom, in vogue among brokers and commission merchants, is founded in commercial convenience, and, when not adopted to promote a gambling transaction, is lawful.[4]

RINK. See EXHIBITION.

RIOT.[5] Where three or more actually do an unlawful act of violence, either with or without a common cause or quarrel; as, if they beat a man, or do other unlawful act with force and violence, or even do a lawful act, as, removing a nuisance, in a violent and tumultuous manner.[6]

A tumultuous disturbance of the peace, by three persons or more assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another, against any one who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterward actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was of itself lawful or unlawful.[7]

There must be an unlawful assembly; then, whatever act will make a trespass, will constitute a riot.[1]

If persons who have met for a lawful purpose afterward form and execute an unlawful intention, this may be sufficient; and the unlawful act is evidence of the unlawful intent.[2]

Riot Act. Statute of Geo. I (1714), c. 5, for the suppression of riots. Provides that if any twelve persons are unlawfully assembled to the disturbance of the peace, any justice of the peace, sheriff, or mayor of a town may, if he shall think proper, command them by proclamation to disperse. Then, if they contemn his order and continue together for one hour afterward, such contempt shall be a felony.[3]

The Riot Act was passed by reason of the tumult attendant upon the accession of George I to the throne. The act made it a felony to unlawfully assemble and demolish any church or dwelling-house; and provided that the inhabitants of the district should be liable for all damage done. The laws upon the subject were consolidated in 1827, by 7 and 8 of George IV, c. 31. The principle of the original act has been adopted in the legislation of Pennsylvania.[4]

The right to reimbursement for damages caused by a mob or riotous assemblage is not founded upon contract. It is a statutory right, and can be withdrawn or limited at the pleasure of the legislature of a State. Municipal corporations are invested with authority to establish a police to guard against disturbances; and it is their duty to exercise their authority so as to prevent violence from any cause, particularly from mobs and riotous assemblages. It has therefore been generally considered as a just burden to require them to make good any loss sustained from the acts of such assemblages which they should have repressed. The imposition has been supposed to create, in the holders of property liable to taxation, an interest to discourage and prevent movements tending to such violent proceedings. But, however considered, the imposition is simply a measure of legislative policy, in no respect resting upon contract, and subject, like all other measures of policy, to any change the legislature may see fit to make, either in the extent of the liability or in the means of its enforcement.[5]

See ASSEMBLY, Unlawful; CONSPIRACY; MOB; ROUT; TREASON.

RIPARIAN.[6] Relating to the bank of a stream or other water — river, lake, or sea: as, riparian — proprietors, rights, States.

---

[1] Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450, 457 (1864), Field, J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 193. See Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch, 242 (1814).

[3] [Worcester's Dict.

[4] Ward v. Vosburgh, 31 F. R. 12 (1887); Clarke v. Foss, 7 Biss. 548 (1878).

[5] F. riote, a brawling, strife.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 146. See also Whitley v. State, 66 Ga. 656 (1881).

[7] 1 Hawkins, Pl. C., ch. 28, p. 513. See also State v. Russel, 47 N. H. 84 (1865).

[1] The Queen v. Soley, 11 Mod. *115 (1708), Holt, C. J.

[2] United States v. McFarland, 1 Cranch, C. C. 140 (1803). See also, generally, Commonwealth v. Daley, 4 Pa. Law J. 150 (1844); Commonwealth v. Hare, ib. 257 (1844); Charge of King, P. J., ib. 29; 2 Clark, 275; People v. Judson (Astor Place case), 11 Daly, 1, 17, 83 (1849); State v. Jenkins, 14 Richard L. 215 (1867); 94 Am. Dec. 136–38, cases.

[3] [4 Bl. Com. 145.

[4] County of Allegheny v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 405 (1879), Paxson, J. Railroad riot of July 21–4, 1877.

[5] Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 287–88 (1883), Field, J.

[6] L. ripa, shore of a river.

Riparian proprietor. An owner of land bounded generally upon a stream of water, and, as such, having a qualified property in the soil to the thread of the stream, with the privileges annexed thereto by law.[1]

Supra riparian. Concerning water-rights higher up the stream than other similar rights.

Where opposite banks of unnavigable streams belong to different persons, the stream and the bed thereof shall be common to both.[2]

The owner of land bounded by a navigable river has certain riparian rights; whether his title extends to the middle of the stream or not. Among them are free access to the navigable part of the stream, and the right to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or for the use of the public. These, being valuable property rights, may be taken by the public after due compensation is made or secured. They are enjoyed subject to such general laws as the legislature may prescribe for the protection of the public right in the river as a navigable stream.[3]

In applying the rule, that the line between opposite shore-owners is the thread of the current, to non-navigable ponds and lakes, because of the practical difficulties encountered, an exception is made, and a grant is held to extend only to the water's edge.[4]

A grant by a government to a private individual of land upon a navigable river is limited to the shore; a grant to a political community extends to the middle of the stream.[5]

See ALLUVION; AQUA, Currit, etc.; FISHERY; ICE; LAKE; MILL, 1; WATER.

RIPRAP. A species of wall; stone laid into a kind of shingling, upon the slope of an embankment, at such points as are likely to be washed by water.[6]

RISK. Danger, hazard, peril; the probability that an insurer may be called upon to pay a loss, and the anticipated cause of that loss. Spoken of as fire, life, and marine risks.

Builder's risk. The danger to an insured subject from work being done by mechanics in building, altering, or repairing; specifically, extraordinary danger incident to material changes in progress.

Where there is no increase of risk, notice to the insurer may not be required.[1]

Risks of navigation. Is more comprehensive than "perils of navigation."[2] See further DANGERS; PERIL.

See also INSURANCE; Loss, 2; CARRIER.

RIVER. A body of flowing water of no specific dimensions — larger than a brook or rivulet, less than a sea; a running stream pent on each side by walls or banks.[3]

A considerable stream of water that has a current of its own flowing from higher level, which constitutes its source, to its mouth where it debouches.[4]

Banks of rivers are the boundaries which contain their waters at their highest flow, making the bed of the river.[5]

Rivers have banks, shores, waters, and a bed. Though naturally navigable, even for boats and rafts, rivers and the smaller streams are often regarded as public rights, subject to legislative control, as the means of creating power for operating mills and machinery, or as furnishing supplies of fish, even where private persons own the banks and soil under the water.[6]

In many States, the public title to the beds and shores of navigable streams is confined to tide-water; in Federal matters, to navigability.[7]

Proprietors bordering upon streams not navigable, unless unrestrained by the terms of their grants, hold to the center of the stream; proprietors on navigable rivers, under titles from the United States, to the stream. If the latter hold to the center line, the public have an easement for purposes of a highway.[8]

See ALONG; AQUA; BED, 1; BOUNDARY; COMMERCE; DANGERS; FISHERY; ICE; LEVEE; MEANDER; NAVIGABLE; PERIL; PROPERTY, Qualified; RIPARIAN; SEA; WATER-MARK.

ROAD. 1. An open way or public passage; ground appropriated for travel. Generically, includes highway, street, lane.[9]

---

[1] Bardwell v. Ames, 22 Pick. 333 (1839), Shaw, C. J.

[2] R. S. § 2476.

[3] Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 504-7 (1870), cases, Miller, J. See also Weber v. Harbor Commissioners of California, 18 id. 65 (1873), Field, J.; Von Dolsen v. Mayor, &c. of New York, 17 F. R. 817, 819 (1883), cases; 109 U. S. 682.

[4] State of Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 206 (1882), cases, Gresham, J.

[5] Barney v. City of Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 336 (1876), cases, Bradley, J.

[6] Wood v. Vermont Central R. Co., 24 Vt. 610 (1852).

[1] James v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 4 Cliff. 275-84 (1874), cases, Clifford, J. On expert evidence as to increase of, see 19 Am. Law Rev. 701-13 (1885), cases.

[2] Pitcher v. Hennessey, 48 N. Y. 419 (1872).

[3] Alabama v. Georgia, 23 How. 513 (1859), Woolrych, Justice.

[4] The Garden City, 26 F. R. 772 (1886), Brown, J. See also 14 N. H. 477; 2 Ohio, 497; 3 Gratt. 492; 37 U. C., Q. B. 59.

[5] Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 415 (1851).

[6] Holyoke Water-power Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 506-7 (1872), Clifford, J.

[7] Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 336-43 (1876), cases.

[8] St. Paul, &c. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 287 (1868); Banks v. Ogden, 2 id. 68 (1864).

[9] [Manchester v. Hartford, 30 Conn. 130 (1867): Webster.

Has never been defined to mean land: it is difficult to find a definition which does not include the sense of "way," though the latter word is more generic, referring to many things besides roads. "Road" is generally applied to a highway, street, or lane, often to a path-way or private way, yet strictly it means only one particular kind of way.[1]

May refer to a traveled place or track, without regard to the nature of the user, or to the question of any right thereto in the public.[2]

By-road. An obscure or neighborhood road, not used to a great extent by the public, yet so far a public road that the public have, of right, free access to it at all times.[3]

Plank-road; turnpike road. See TURNPIKE.

Private road. A road used by private persons only.[4]

A road must be deemed "private" when its control is not under a public officer, and the public are not bound to keep it in order, and where an individual might obstruct its use without being guilty of any public offense.[5]

Public road. A road dedicated to and kept up by the public.[6]

Since "road" and "street" mean ways open to public use, the word "public" is unnecessary, even in an indictment.[7]

Public roads for travel are often established by application to the court of quarter sessions, with view, report, and confirmation. Once established, they pass into the control and supervision of the township, county, or other local authorities, and are kept in repair by local taxation.[8]

By the common law, the fee of the soil remains in the original owner, with the use of the road in the public. If vacated by the public, he resumes exclusive possession of the ground. While used as a highway, he is entitled to the timber and grass upon the surface, and to all minerals below it. He may sue in trespass one who obstructs the road. But the law is otherwise when he absolutely parts with the fee.[9]

Persons authorized to make or improve highways are not answerable for consequential damages, if they act within their jurisdiction and with care and skill. This doctrine is almost universally received. The reason is, the State holds its highways in trust for the public. Improvements made are her acts, and the ultimate responsibility rests upon her. Her refusal to be sued, except as the legislature prescribes, protects her agents. The rule is different as to individuals who for their own benefit make improvements on land.[1]

Properly applied, the principle involved in the rule is a sound one; but many decisions have gone to the limit of allowable constitutional construction.[2]

Road-bed; road-way. See RAILROAD.

Road, law of. The requirement as to the side of a highway which the drivers of vehicles, horsemen, and pedestrians must take in order to make traveling safe and easy.

It is the custom in this country for persons meeting on a highway to pass on the right; but when a horseman or a light vehicle can pass with safety on the left of a heavily laden team, the choice of way is to be given to the latter.[3]

The principle that a footman or horseman cannot compel a teamster, who has a heavy load, to turn out of the beaten track, if there is sufficient room for the former to pass, applies to a light wagon or carriage with a heavy weight.[4]

The fact that a footman crosses a street elsewhere than at the usual crossing is not per se contributory negligence which will defeat an action for damages for injuries caused by reckless riding or driving.[5]

See ALONG; DEDICATION, 1; OLD; OPEN, 1 (7); REPAIR, 2; ROUTE; STREET; TRAVEL; VIEW; WAY.

2. Referring to a steam or street railway see RAILROAD.

3. A place where ships may ride at anchor at some distance from the shore. Called also roadstead.

"Hampton Roads" implies a place of anchorage, at a distance from shore. There vessels of every class may anchor at will, anywhere within the area laid down and described in the charts of the United States coast survey, as the "usual anchorage-ground," whether within or without the customary track of steamers.[6]

ROBBERY. Open and violent larceny from the person; the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear.[7]

The felonious taking of goods from the person of another, or in his presence, by vio-

[1] Kister v. Reeser, 93 Pa. 4 (1881), Turnkey, J. See also Mining Co. v. Kennedy, 3 Nev. 373 (1867), Beatty, C. J.; Heiple v. East Portland, 13 Oreg. 103 (1885), cases.

[2] Hart v. Red Cedar, 63 Wis. 638 (1885).

[3] Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. L. 89 (1869), Van Syckel, J.; Yeomans v. Ridgewood, 46 id. 509 (1884).

[4] [Witham v. Osburn, 4 Oreg. 324 (1873).

[5] Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 562-65 (1883), Green, J.

[6] Mills v. State, 20 Ala. 88 (1852); 30 id. 531.

[7] Horner v. State, 49 Md. 286 (1878): 3 Yeates, 421; 4 S. & R. 106; City of Denver v. Clements, 3 Col. 486 (1877).

[8] Ritchie v. Franklin County, 22 Wall. 75 (1874).

[9] Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. *513 (1832), M'Lean, J.

[1] Northern Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 641-44 (1878), cases, Strong, J.

[2] Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 180-81 (1871), Swayne, J.

[3] Grier v. Sampson, 27 Pa. 192 (1856).

[4] Beach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 197 (1854). See also Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. *465 (1840); Parker v. Adams 12 Metc. 417 (1847), cases; Story, Bailm. § 599.

[5] Simons v. Gaynor, 89 Ind. 166 (1883).

[6] The Everman, 2 Hughes, 28 (1874); 7 Ex. 784.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 241.

lence, or by putting him in fear, and against his will.[1]

If the taking is neither directly from the person nor in the presence, it is not robbery. It is immaterial what the value of the thing may be. The taking must be by force or by a previous putting in fear: which distinguishes robbery from other thefts. But the indictment may charge the use of violence only. "Putting in fear" does not imply any great degree of terror or fright: it is enough that so much force or threatening by word or gesture is used as might create an apprehension of danger, or induce a man to part with his property without or against his consent.[2]

Highway robbery. In England, from about 1500 to 1700, robbery upon or near a highway was a capital offense; committed elsewhere, the punishment was less severe.[3]

See LARCENY; INDICTMENT; THREAT.

ROBE. See GOWN.

ROCK OIL. See OIL.

ROE, RICHARD. See DOE.

ROGATORY.[4] See LETTERS, page 613.

ROGUE. See VAGRANT.

ROLL. 1. A sheet of parchment on which proceedings were entered.

A schedule of parchment, which may be rolled up like a pipe or tube, sheet to sheet, or so tacked together that the whole length might be wound into a spiral roll.[5]

When the art of book-binding was little used, economy suggested the adding of one sheet of parchment to another, to form a record-book. The roll on which the issue was entered was called the "issue roll," and the file comprising the papers necessary to support the judgment, when attached in order, was (or still is) called the "judgment roll."

2. The record of a court or office;[6] a record, a register or registry, qq. v.

Enroll; inroll. (1) To transcribe, as, a deed, on a roll. See REGISTRY, Of vessels.

(2) To record, as, a decree, a legislative bill.

The legislative practice has been to enroll a bill or joint resolution, for signing by the presiding officers, and for preservation in the office of the secretary of state. The enrolled bill should be regarded as the original act. But it does not follow that enrollment is essential to the validity of a statute.[7]

Master of rolls. The judge, in the English court of chancery, who has the custody of the rolls of all patents and grants which pass by the great seal, and of the records in chancery.

He likewise presides in the Rolls Court, as assistant to the lord chancellor, and is the chief master in chancery.[1]

Under the Judicature Acts he is a judge of the high court, and an ex-officio member of the court of appeals.

Strike off the roll. When an attorney is disbarred from practicing before a court, his name is expunged from the list of the members of that court. See ATTORNEY.

ROLLING-STOCK. The movable property of a railroad; such property as in its ordinary use is taken from one part of the line to another, as, cars and locomotives.[2]

Some decisions make the rolling-stock of railroads a fixture, part of the corpus of the road; other decisions make it personalty. In a few States, the precise nature is defined by statute.[3]

ROMAN LAW. The common law of England has been largely influenced by the Roman law, in several respects: 1. Through the ecclesiastical courts, their canon law being founded on the Roman law. 2. Through the court of chancery, all the early chancellors being ecclesiastics, familiar with the canon law, if not with the Roman system. 3. Through the development of commercial law.[4]

The Roman law had great influence upon the early common law, not so much by the copying of text into it as by the spirit and methods of study it introduced, and the disposition it engendered to refer rules to principles. . . Blackstone, Kent, and other great writers, owe much in their arrangement and outline to Roman works.[5]

See special terms, such as CHANCELLOR, 1; EQUITY; FALCIDIAN; FEE, 3; LATIN; OBLIGATION, 1; JUS; PACT; PATER; PATRIA; RESPONSA; USUFRUCTUS; VETO.

RONDS. See GAME, 2.

ROOM. See BURGLARY; HOUSE; TENEMENT.

ROSTER. A corruption of register,—a register, list, catalogue.

---

[1] United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. 216 (1813), Washington, J. See also Baldw. 93; 5 Blatch. 11; 66 Ga. 165; 1 Idaho, 769; 16 Miss. 401; 1 Ohio St. 495; 7 Ex. 734.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 241–42; 35 Ind. 460; 58 Mo. 581; 59 id. 318; 6 Park. Cr. 642.

[3] See 4 Bl. Com. 243.

[4] Rŏg'-atory.

[5] [Colman v. Shattuck, 2 Hun, 502 (1874), Lamont, J. Same case, 62 N. Y. 348.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 24.

[7] Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 553–54 (1883).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 442, 450; 1 Spence, Eq. J. 100, 357.

[2] Ohio & Miss. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 448 (1880), Dickey, J.

[3] See generally 4 South. Law Rev. 198–237 (1878), cases; 23 How. 117; 3 Dill. 412; 23 Ill. 300; 54 Me. 263; 25 Barb. 485; 11 Am. R. 751; 53 Mo. 17; 29 N. J. E. 311; 52 N. Y. 521; 54 id. 314; 21 Wis. 44; 2 Redf. Railr. 504; Jones, Railr. §§ 146–87, cases.

[4] Hadley, Roman Law, 43–48.

[5] 3 Columbia Jurist, 74 (1886); 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 14, 55; Hare, Contr., Index. See "The Roman Law in Bracton," 1 Law Quar. Rev. 425–41 (1885); "The Roman Bar," 15 Alb. Law J. 405 (1877).

ROUT. Where three or more persons meet to do an unlawful act upon a common quarrel, as, forcibly breaking down fences upon a right claimed of common or of way, and make some advances toward it.[1]

A disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intent to do a thing which, if executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion toward the execution thereof.[2]

Compare ASSEMBLY, Unlawful; RIOT.

ROUTE. A way used in going from one place to another.

Power to change the route or location of a railroad does not include power to change the termini; they are excluded from the common acceptation of the word.[3]

See ADOPT, 2; ALONG; DIRECT, 1; MAIL-ROUTE; RAILROAD.

ROUTINE. See COURSE, 2.

ROYALTY. A prerogative or superiority of the king; also, the amount due to the lessor of a mine.[4] See MINES.

In modern usage, a sum paid by one who uses the patent of another, at a certain rate for each article manufactured;[5] also, the sum paid per volume by a publisher who prints and sells a book which another has composed and copyrighted.

RULE. 1, v. (1) To hold, lay down, decide: as, to rule testimony admissible as evidence, to rule on a proposition of law.

Overrule. To rule against, reject, refuse to allow or receive: as, to overrule a motion, a plea, an exception.

Also, for a court to decide a question of law contrary to a decision in a former case. Whence overruled case. Compare REVERSE.

(2) To make or enter a formal order or direction.

2, n. Such order or mandate itself. Compare MOTION, 2.

A court, or its officer, grants a rule to show cause, to make a return, to file a declaration or a plea, to make a reference, to strike off an entry, etc.

Peremptory rule. An order which is to be observed promptly and fully, without argument contra.

Rule absolute. Said of a rule to show cause which has been heard and a peremptory order therein made that a party do as required in the rule. Rule nisi or rule to show cause. A direction that a party do, or be permitted to do, a specified act unless (nisi) a legal reason be shown or appears for his not doing it.

A day is appointed for hearing a rule to show cause why the thing requested should not be done. At this hearing, after argument, and, perhaps, the consideration of testimony, the rule is either discharged or made absolute, according as the objection is or is not sufficient in law.[1]

Rule of course. A rule granted by an officer of a court, as a matter of routine, and without application being first made to a judge of the court itself. Called also office rule, and, formerly, side-bar rule.

Rule day. A day designated under a rule of court for the performance of some duty required of a litigant.

Rule of court. An order made by a court of record. (1) A special order in a particular case. See REFERENCE. (2) A general requirement, usually in writing, applicable to all cases of a class.

General rules of court. Standing orders, made by a court, to regulate its general practice.[2]

Express power to establish rules of court has been conferred by statute upon courts of record. At the same time, such courts have an inherent right to make rules to regulate their practice and to expedite the determination of suits and other proceedings, the rules being consistent with the constitution and laws of the State. Otherwise, the public business could not be dispatched.[3]

Regularity, justice, and dispatch are the objects of rules of court. They are indispensable to routine business.[4]

But they cannot abridge a right secured by positive law; as, alter the general law of evidence,[5] or the statutory manner of serving a notice; nor add terms to an arbitration law;[6] nor supersede a special rule

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 146.

[2] Hawkins, Pl. Cr. ch. 65, § 14.

[3] Attorney-General v. West Wisconsin R. Co., 36 Wis. 494 (1874). "En route," see M'Lean v. United States, 17 Ct. Cl. 90 (1881).

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 294.

[5] [Webster's Dict.

[1] See Stearns v. Barrett, 1 Mas. 162–63 (1816).

[2] See Owens v. Ranstead, 22 Ill. 173 (1859); Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 178 (1860); Dougherty v. Thayer, 78 id. 172 (1875).

[3] Vanatta v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 423 (1811); Barry v. Randolph, ib. 277 (1811); Fullerton v. Bank of United States, 1 Pet. *613 (1828); Jones v. Rittenhouse, 87 Ind. 350 (1882); 43 Cal. 179; 22 Ill. 173; 18 La. An. 708; 12 Md. 463; 5 Pick. 512; 9 Oreg. 121; 25 Pa. 516.

[4] Magill's Appeal, 59 Pa. 430 (1868).

[5] Patterson v. Winn, 5 Pet. *274 (1831); 5 W. & S. 175.

[6] Hickernell v. First Nat. Bank of Carlisle, 62 Pa. 147 (1869); 11 S. & R. 131; 3 id. 250.

where that is contemplated;[1] nor supersede a statute;[2] nor affect jurisdiction.[3] In one case, an imperfection in a statute was remedied by means of a rule.[4]

It is not essential that a rule of practice be established by a written order: it may be by a uniform mode of proceeding.[5]

A rule of court must operate prospectively.[6]

An attorney is bound to know the rules of his own court.[7]

The expediency of a rule is determined by the sound discretion of the court by whose authority it is established. Only where wrong is manifest will that discretion be interfered with.[8]

Discretion in applying a rule to a particular case must be authorized by the rule itself.[9] For the sake of certainty, no departure should be made from a plain, written, express rule.[10]

The court is the best judge of its own rules; an appellate court will not reverse for a construction not palpably erroneous.[11]

Many regulations of practice introduced into England by statute have been the objects of rules of court in this country.[12]

The court of common pleas of Philadelphia had written rules as early as 1788. Collections were published in Western Pennsylvania in 1791, 1796, and 1811.[13]

The Judiciary Act of 1789, § 17, confers authority on the Federal courts to establish all rules necessary for the ordinary conduct of their business, not repugnant to the laws of the United States. The act empowers the Supreme Court to regulate the practice of the district and circuit courts; and empowers those courts themselves to make such regulations of their practice as may be necessary to advance justice and to prevent delays.[14]

Like power is conferred upon the court of claims.[15]

Rules in admiralty are promulgated in accordance with a special statute.[16]

The equity rules prescribed by the Supreme Court bind all the Federal courts.[1]

The rules of the high court of chancery in England are of force as analogies.[2]

But Congress has not empowered the circuit and district courts to make rules touching the mode of taking testimony.[3]

3. A canon; a principle: as, a rule of construction, a case governed by a certain rule, a rule established by or deducible from the decisions or authorities; a rule of law, of practice or procedure, of evidence or of pleading, qq. v.

Rule of property. An established principle regulating the ownership and transfer of property.

A decision with respect to the law under which property is held, enjoyed, and transferred, is sometimes said to create or indicate the "rule of property."

Where a course of decisions, whether founded upon statutes or not, have become rules of property as laid down by the highest courts of the state, by which is meant the rules governing the descent, transfer, or sale of property, and the rules which affect the title and possession thereof, they are to be treated, by the Federal courts, as the laws of that state.[4]

Rules and regulations. Power "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization," "to make all needful rules and regulations respecting . . property belonging to the United States," "to regulate commerce," gives plenary control over those subjects. But power to make rules and regulations on a particular subject is, in cases, limited to the mode and form, the time and circumstance, and not to the substance.[5] See REGULATE.

RUMOR. Popular report.

In England, and in some of the States, it has been held that in an action of slander, under the general issue, the defendant may prove, in mitigation of damages, that when the words were uttered a general rumor or report existed in the neighborhood that the plaintiff was guilty of the offense charged. In other States, it has been held that such testimony is inadmissible.[6]

Where it appeared that a libelous article was taken from a neighboring sheet as news, with no circumstance of aggravation or malice, it was held that

[1] Ringwalt v. Brindle, 59 Pa. 54 (1868); contra, Dougherty v. Thayer, 78 id. 173 (1875).

[2] Cates v. Mack, 6 Col. 408 (1882).

[3] The St. Lawrence, 1 Black, 527 (1861).

[4] Cochran v. Loring, 17 Ohio, 409 (1848).

[5] Duncan v. United States, 7 Pet. *451 (1833); contra, Owens v. Ranstead, 22 Ill. 173 (1859). See also State v. Ensley, 10 Iowa, 150-51 (1859).

[6] Dewey v. Humphrey, 5 Pick. 187 (1827); 11 S. & R. 131.

[7] Dearborn v. Dearborn, 15 Mass. 319 (1818).

[8] Gannon v. Fritz, 79 Pa. 307 (1875); 7 Watts, 64.

[9] Thompson v. Hatch, 3 Pick. 516 (1826); 4 id. 189; 5 id. 187; 22 Ill. 173; 22 Md. 295; 2 Dak. 467.

[10] Alexander v. Alexander, 5 Pa. 277 (1847); 56 id. 183; 59 id. 430; 30 id. 272; 18 La. An. 703.

[11] Coleman v. Nants, 63 Pa. 178 (1869), cases.

[12] Vanatta v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 417 (1811); 35 Pa. 416.

[13] Barry v. Randolph, 3 Binn. 277 (1811); 2 Brown, App. 1-14; Wilkins v. Anderson, 11 Pa. 399 (1849); Fleming v. Beck, 48 id. 309 (1864).

[14] R. S. §§ 917-18, cases. See Rules of the Supreme Court, announced Jan. 7, 1884, in 108 U. S. 573-92, index, 625.

[15] R. S. § 1070.

[16] 5 St. L. 518: R. S. § 917; 118 U. S. 619.

[1] M'Donald v. Smalley, 1 Pet. *625 (1828); Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. 652 (1873).

[2] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 14 Pet. 256 (1840); Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, &c. Bridge Co., 18 How. 460 (1855); Evory v. Candee, 17 Blatch. 208 (1879).

[3] Randall v. Venable, 17 F. R. 162 (1883). See generally, as to rules of court, 25 Am. Law Reg. 188-90 (1886), cases.

[4] Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co., 125 U. S. 00 (1888), Miller, J.

[5] Hamilton v. Dillin, 21 Wall. 93 (1874), Bradley, J.

[6] Pease v. Shippen, 80 Pa. 514-15 (1876), cases; 58 id. 345, 431.

the plaintiff was entitled to compensation for the injury suffered, and the manner of the publication could be considered either in mitigation or aggravation.[1]

RUN. 1. To stroll without restraint or confinement; as, for an animal "to run at large." See AT LARGE.

2. To pass, spread, communicate; as, in a statute providing for the payment of damages by a person who set a fire that "run upon the land" of another.[2]

3. To continue to be valid or binding, to possess legal efficacy: a bond or a lease may "run for a term" of years, and a note for days or months.

4. A covenant "runs with land" when the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee or purchaser.[3] See COVENANT, Real.

5. The statute of limitations "begins to run" when the cause of action first becomes subject to its operation.

And when the statute has once begun, it continues to run until its effect is complete.[4] See LIMITATION, 8; TEMPUS, Nullum, etc.

6. Warrants of commitment and indictment "run in the name" of a State when they bear upon their face the name of the proper State as the nominal actor or prosecutor. See further PEOPLE.

Running account. See ACCOUNT, 1.

Running at large. See RUN, 1.

Running days. See WORKING DAYS.

Running policy. See INSURANCE, Policy of.

Running water. See AQUA, Currit.

S.

S. As an abbreviation, is in common use for same, section, select, senate, senior, session or sessions, sheriff, southern, special, State or States, statute, superior, supreme, surrogate:

S. B. Senate bill.

S. C. Same case; select cases; supreme court.

S. D. Southern district. See D, 8.

S. J. Senior judge; special judge.

S. L. Session laws; statute laws.

S. P. Same principle; supra protest.

SS. Scilicet. See SCIRE, Scilicet.

SABBATH. Sabbath and Sunday are used indiscriminately to denote the Christian Sabbath.[1] See SUNDAY.

SÆVITIA. L. Raging, ferocity: fierceness, savageness, barbarity, cruelty, violence.

In divorce legislation, personal violence inflicted or menaced, and affecting life or health; also, obscene and revolting indecencies.[2]

SAFES. See TOOL.

SAFETY. See POLICE, 2; WELFARE.

SAID; AFORESAID. As employed in legal writings, convey certainty of reference.

When a name, once introduced into a pleading, is repeated, the repetition must be by such a term of reference as will identify the person named in the latter instance as the one before named — as by "said," "aforesaid," or other term of similar import; otherwise the latter description will be ill for uncertainty. But when there are two or more antecedent persons or subjects to which the name may be referred, it is necessary to use "first aforesaid," "last aforesaid," or other term of equivalent import.[3]

"Said," in an entry, is a relative term, and refers to its next [nearest] antecedent.[4]

But, in construing a will, there is no invariable rule which refers "said" to the last antecedent, if to so apply it would be at variance with the context.[5]

In an indictment, "said" will be referred to the next antecedent only when the meaning plainly requires it.[6] See SUCH.

SAIL. A stipulation in a charter-party that the vessel is "now sailed or about to sail with cargo," is a stipulation that she has her cargo on board and is ready to sail.[7]

Sailing. Within the meaning of a charter-party, complete readiness for the sea, with an intention to proceed at once on the voyage.[8]

If a ship quits her moorings and removes, though a short distance, being perfectly ready to proceed upon her voyage, and is detained by some subsequent occur-

[1] Edwards v. Kansas City Times Co., 32 F. R. 813 (1887).

[2] Ayer v. Starkey, 30 Conn. 306 (1861).

[3] Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 137-228, cases: 5 Coke, 16 (1583); Willard v. Worsham, 76 Va. 396 (1882); Shaber v. St. Paul Water Co., 30 Minn. 182-88 (1883).

[4] Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall. 596 (1873); Croxall v. Sherard, 5 id. 269 (1866).

[1] State v. Drake, 64 N. C. 591 (1870).

[2] Briggs v. Briggs, 24 S. C. 380 (1885).

[3] Gould, Plead. 78, cases.

[4] Ellis v. Horine, 1 A. K. Marsh. 418 (1818).

[5] Healy v. Healy, 9 Irish Eq. 418 (1875).

[6] Wilkinson v. State, 10 Ind. 373 (1858): 2 Kent, 555; 34 La. An. 829; 115 Mass. 544; 132 id. 555; 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 236; 10 East, 503.

[7] Davison v. Von Lingen, 113 U. S. 49 (1885).

[8] Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co., 20 Pick. 278 (1838), Shaw, Chief Justice.

rence, that is a sailing; otherwise, if at the time she quits her moorings and hoists sail she is not in a condition to complete the voyage.[1]

Some progress, though by a tow-boat, may be necessary.[2] See SEA, At sea.

Sailor. See SHIPPING.

SALARY.[3] The per annum compensation to men in official and in some other positions.[4]

In Indiana, there have been three modes of making compensation: by a "salary," as defined above; by "wages," which are compensation for services by the day, week, etc., as, of laborers, commissioners, and others; and by "fees," which are compensation for particular acts or services, as, of clerks, sheriffs, lawyers, physicians.[4]

According to the most approved lexicographers, "salary" and "wages" are synonymous. Both mean, "a sum of money periodically paid for services rendered." If there is any difference in the popular sense, it is in the application to more or less honorable services.[5]

See COMPENSATION, 1; EMOLUMENT; FIX, 3; IMPAIR; ONUS, Cum onere.

SALE. 1. A transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value.[6]

Technically, a transfer of property in consideration of a price paid therefor in money. But it may not mean this.[7]

A transfer of the absolute or general property is a thing for a price in money.[8]

A transfer of the absolute title to property for a certain agreed price. A contract between two parties, one of whom acquires thereby a property in the thing sold, and the other parts with it for a valuable consideration.[9]

A transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent.[10]

Property or money may be said to be the price of a service; but it can hardly be said that the service is the price of the property or money, or that the property or money is sold to the person performing the service.[1]

2. A contract for the transfer of property from one person to another, for a valuable consideration.[2]

A contract between parties, to give and to pass rights of property for money,— which the buyer pays or promises to pay to the seller for the thing bought and sold.[3]

The essential idea is that of an agreement or meeting of minds by which a title passes from one, and vests in another.[4]

The view which seems to reconcile all uses of the word most satisfactorily is to regard a sale as a contract or agreement for transferring ownership, and not as the very transfer itself. It may then be applied to lands and rights in action, as it daily is, as well as to chattels. This view also supports the convenient expressions "conditional," "executed" and "unexecuted" sales.[5]

To constitute a valid sale there must be: competent parties; mutual assent; a thing, the absolute or general property in which is transferred from the seller to the buyer; and a price in money paid or promised.[6]

A commutation of goods for goods is an "exchange." A transferring of goods for money is a "sale."[7]

In a "barter" the consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation.[8]

When a liquor-dealer furnishes liquor and receives in payment therefor pool-checks, which he has previously sold, worth the price of the liquor, the transaction is not a sale, but a barter.[9]

The difference between a "sale on credit" and a "bailment" may be illustrated thus: If I deposit wheat to be stored and kept for me, the property remains in me. But if I simply leave the grain and authorize the bailee to sell it for his own benefit and not as my agent, he to pay me the value when I demand it, the transaction is a sale on credit.[10]

---

[1] Pittegrew v. Pringle, 3 Barn. & Ad. 519 (1832), Tenterden, C. J.; Pedersen v. Pagenstecher, 32 F. R. 842 (1887), cases.

[2] The Francesco Curro, 4 W. N. C. 416 (1877.)

[3] From salarium, which in turn is from sal, salt— an article in which Roman soldiers were paid; that is, salt-money.

[4] Cowdin v. Huff, 10 Ind. 85 (1857), Perkins, J.

[5] Commonwealth ex rel. Wolfe v. Butler, 99 Pa. 542 (1882), Sharswood, C. J.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 446, 9.

[7] [Howard v. Harris, 8 Allen, 298 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[8] Benjamin, Sales, § 1; 71 N. C. 455.

[9] Story, Sales, § 1; 95 Pa. 158.

[10] Five Per Cent. Cases, 110 U. S. 478 (1884), Gray, J.; 6a. 468.

[1] Five Per Cent. Cases, ante.

[2] 2 Kent, 468.

[3] Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 544 (1850), Wayne, J.

[4] Butler v. Thomson, 92 U. S. 415 (1875), Hunt, J.

[5] [2 Abbott, Law Dic. 442. See also 13 F. R. 541; 54 Ala. 258; 37 Ark. 418; 26 Conn. 31; 1 Ind. 69; 27 Iowa, 173; 71 id. 217; 107 Mass. 550; 10 Mich. 281; 20 Mo. 267; 5 Neb. 269; 33 N. C. 670; 35 N. H. 443; 38 Pa. 398; 85 id. 163; 44 Wis. 691.

[6] Benj. Sales, § 1; Gardner v. Lane, 12 Allen, 43 (1866), Bigelow, C. J. Transactions resembling sales, 27 Cent. Law J. 136-38 (1888), cases.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 446.

[8] Commonwealth v. Davis, 12 Bush, 241 (1876); Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418 (1881).

[9] Massey v. State, 74 Ind. 368 (1881). See also Marmot v. State, 48 id. 21 (1874); Rickart v. People, 79 Ill. 85 (1875); State v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405 (1871); Selm v. State, 55 Md. 566 (1880); Commonwealth v. Smith, 102 Mass. 144 (1869); 8 Allen, 297; 30 Ala. 591.

[10] McCabe v. McKinstry, 5 Dill. 515 (1878), Dillon, J. See

Absolute sale. A sale which has been completed or perfected; a sale outright. Conditional sale. Takes effect or is to become complete on the performance of a condition.

If the transaction resolves itself into a security, whatever may be its form, it is in equity a "mortgage." If it be not a security, it may be a conditional sale or an absolute purchase, or a lease.[1]

In the case of a conditional sale the vendee has a conveyable and an attachable interest, which can be transformed into an absolute sale by the performance of the condition.[2]

A contract for the sale of personalty, to be delivered at once to the vendee, the title to remain in the vendor until the price is paid, is valid.[3]

It is sometimes difficult to determine whether a contract is itself a sale of personalty so as to pass ownership to the vendee, or a sale on condition to be consummated only when the condition shall be performed, or a mere agreement to sell. Whether the property passes or not is dependent upon the intention of the parties. Following are the rules by which to construe such contracts: 1. When the vendor is to do a thing to the property in order to put it into the state in which the vendee is bound to accept it, the doing of that thing is a condition precedent to the vesting of the property. 2. If a thing is to be done to ascertain the price, as, by weighing, measuring, etc., where the price is to depend upon the quantity or quality, the doing of that thing is also a condition precedent to the transfer, although the individual goods be ascertained. 3. Where the buyer is to do a thing as a consideration on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the condition is fulfilled, though the goods be delivered into his hands.[4]

In the absence of fraud, an agreement for a conditional sale of personal property accompanied by delivery is valid, as well against third persons as against the parties to the transaction.

A bailee of personal property who receives it under an agreement that he may purchase it on the performance of conditions on his part, cannot convey title to it or subject it to execution for his own debts, until performance of the conditions on which the agreement to sell is made.[5]

Conditional sales were valid by the common law, and their validity was not affected by the Statute of Frauds; but there is much contrariety of reasoning and decision relative to their validity in the different States, and often to some extent in the same State.[1]

See INSTALLMENT; LIEN, Secret; MORTGAGE; PLEDGE; POSSESSION, Fraudulent.

Executed and executory sales. Nothing was required at common law to give validity to a sale of personal property except the mutual assent of the parties. As soon as it was shown that it was agreed that the one should transfer the absolute property in the thing to the other for a money price, the contract was considered as proven, and binding on both parties. If the property passed immediately to the buyer, the contract was deemed a "bargain and sale;" but if it was to remain for a time with the seller, and to pass to the buyer at a time or on conditions inconsistent with immediate transfer, the contract was deemed an "executory agreement."[2]

Where the goods are not specified, the ordinary conclusion is that the parties contemplated an executory agreement. Many cases show that where the goods are clearly specified, and the terms of the sale, including the price, are explicitly given, the property, as between the parties, passes to the buyer even without actual payment or delivery. Standard authorities also show that where there is no manifestation of intention, except such as arises from the terms of the sale, the presumption is, if the thing to be sold is specified and ready for immediate delivery, that the contract is an actual sale, unless there is something in the subject-matter or attendant circumstances to indicate a different intention. Doubt upon that subject cannot be entertained if the terms of bargain and sale, including the price, are explicit. But when the thing is not specified, or if, when specified, something remains to be done by the vendor to put it into a deliverable shape or to ascertain the price, the contract is executory.[3]

The weight of authority is that where the property sold is a part of an ascertained mass of uniform quality and value, separation is not essential, and the title to the part sold will pass to the vendee, if such appears to be the intention of the party.[3] also Rahilly v. Wilson, 3 id. 420 (1873); Austin v. Seligman, 18 F. R. 519 (1883).

---

[1] Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 533 (1837), Story, J.

[2] Vincent v. Cornell, 13 Pick. 296 (1832); Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 447 (1869); Carrier v. Knapp, 117 id. 324 (1875).

[3] Cooley v. Gillan, 54 Conn. 80, 83 (1886).

[4] Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 187-96 (1874), cases, Strong, J.; Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 246 (1880); Pope v. Allis, 115 id. 363, 371-72 (1885), cases.

[5] Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 667-82 (1886), Bradley, J., reviewing many cases, American and English. Compare Davidson v. Davis, 125 id. 90, 98 (1888). See generally 23 Cent. Law J. 436 (1886), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 813-17 (1886), cases; 27 id. 596-608 (1888), cases.

[1] Blackwell v. Walker, 2 McCrary, 34-36 (1880), cases; Lewis v. McCabe, 49 Conn. 143-54 (1881), cases; Turner v. Kerr, 44 Mo. 431 (1869); 7 Cranch, 218; 12 How. 139; 39 Ala. 156; 38 Cal. 326; 41 id. 22; 49 Ga. 133; 73 Ill. 156; 80 id. 183; 18 Iowa, 504; 19 id. 335; 15 La. An. 386; 37 Me. 543; 30 Md. 495; 109 Mass. 130; 21 Minn. 449; 5 Miss. 329; 62 Mo. 202; 8 Nev. 147; 47 Barb. 220; 15 Johns. 205; 50 N. Y. 441; 70 Pa. 434; 71 id. 264; 35 Vt. 125; 21 W. Va. 429; 57 Wis. 415.

[2] Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 130-32 (1879), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Kingman v. Holmquist, 36 Kan. 738-39 (1887), cases.

Things not yet existing, which may be sold, are those which have a potential existence — things which are the natural product or expected increase of something already belonging to the owner. . . Where a railroad company makes a general mortgage of its road, this does not pass after-acquired lands, unless they are used in connection with the actual operations of the road as a part thereof.[1]

Under a contract for supplying labor and materials and making a chattel, no property passes to the vendee till the chattel is completed and delivered or ready to be delivered. This rule prevails in all cases, unless a contrary intent is expressed or clearly implied.[2]

"The courts of this country have not adopted any arbitrary rule of construction as controlling such agreements, but consider the question of intent, open in every case, to be determined upon the terms of the contract, and the circumstances attending the transaction."[3]

Forced sale. A sale made under the process of a court and in the mode prescribed by law.[4]

When the owner of a homestead estate consents to a sale under an execution or other legal process, the sale is not forced, but is as voluntary as when he directly effects the sale and executes the conveyance.[5]

A sale under a power in a mortgage is a voluntary, not a forced, sale.[6]

Fraudulent sale. A sale of either realty or personalty made in fraud of the rights of creditors — usually existing creditors.

To render a sale, for a valuable consideration, of personalty delivered into the actual possession of the vendee, invalid as against the creditors of the vendor, the vendee must have had actual knowledge or belief, or at least actual suspicion, that the sale was being made to defraud the creditors. But where it appears that the vendee was free from guilty knowledge or suspicion, mere negligence in not inquiring into facts known to him which were calculated to put him upon inquiry is not equivalent to a want of good faith, and does not charge him with notice of the fraud.[7] See CONVEYANCE; POSSESSION, Fraudulent.

Judicial sale. A sale made under the process of a court having competent authority to order it, by an officer legally appointed and commissioned to sell.[1]

A sale made by a court of competent jurisdiction in a pending suit, through its authorized agent.[2]

A purchaser at such a sale is protected when the power to sell is expressly given; when he buys on the faith of an order of court which clearly authorizes the act to be done.[3]

He buys the debtor's interest, subject to all outstanding equities.[4]

Should the judgment be reversed, all rights acquired at the sale while the judgment was in force, and which it authorized, will be protected. It is sufficient for the buyer to know that the court had jurisdiction and exercised it, and that the order, on the faith of which he purchased, was made and authorized the sale.[5, 6]

The rule of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales. After confirmation (q. v.), the purchaser will not be entitled to an abatement of the purchase-money.[6]

The policy of the law is to multiply bidders and increase competition, that the interests of both the debtor and creditors may be advanced. For this reason, any attempt in a purchaser to dissuade bidding avoids the sale; for this reason, also, selling in the mass is generally disallowed, but it is not per se evidence of fraud in the sale.[7] See BID.

Public sale. A sale made at auction to the highest and best bidder. Private sale. A sale not made at public auction.

Private sales are always voluntary; public sales are often compulsory or "forced." Administrators, executors, guardians, and committees of persons non compos, are required, as a rule, to first obtain the consent of court to sales of trust property. Unequivocal direction in a will may obviate this necessity. See Judicial Sale.

Sale in gross. A sale without regard to quantity.

A "contract of hazard." If there be a mistake in quantity, upon an estimate influencing the price, which, if understood, would probably have prevented the sale, or varied its terms, equity may afford relief.[8] See ESTIMATE; MORE OR LESS.

---

[1] Calhoun v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 2 Flip. 447, 442 (1879), cases, Hammond, J.

[2] Williams v. Jackman, 16 Gray, 517 (1860), Bigelow, Chief Justice.

[3] Clarkson v. Stevens, 106 U. S. 515, 514-15 (1882), cases, Matthews, J. The controversy involved the title to the uncompleted man-of-war "Stevens Battery," on which payments had been made by the secretary of the navy, as the work progressed.

[4] Sampson v. Williamson, 6 Tex. 110 (1851), Hemphill, Chief Justice.

[5] Peterson v. Hornblower, 33 Cal. 276 (1867).

[6] Patterson v. Taylor, 15 Fla. 340 (1875).

[7] Parker v. Conner, 93 N. Y. 118, 122 (1883), cases, Rapallo, J. On sales voidable for fraud in the vendee, see 18 Cent. Law J. 405-9 (1885), cases.

[1] Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 547 (1850), cases, Wayne, J. Approved, Lawson v. De Bolt, 78 Ind. 564 (1881), Elliott, C. J. And see Sturdevant v. Norris, 30 Iowa, 71 (1870).

[2] Terry v. Coles' Executor, 80 Va. 701 (1885).

[3] Gray v. Brignardello, 1 Wall. 636, 634 (1863), cases, Davis, J.

[4] Osterman v. Baldwin, 6 Wall. 122 (1867).

[5] Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 391-96, 404-6 (1881), cases.

[6] Boyce v. Strother, 76 Va. 862 (1882); Hickson v. Rucker, 77 id. 135 (1883); 29 Gratt. 351, cases.

[7] Klopp v. Witmoyer, 43 Pa. 219 (1862); Yost v. Smith, 105 id. 631 (1884); Furbush v. Greene, 108 id. 507 (1886). On setting aside a judicial sale, see Aderholt v. Henry, 82 Ala. 542 (1886), cases.

[8] Yost v. Mallicate, 77 Va. 610 (1883), cases; Green v. Taylor, 3 Hughes, 400 (1879).

Sale on approval or trial; sale or return. In the former case, there is no sale till the approval is given, expressly or by implication resulting from keeping the goods beyond the time allowed for trial. In the latter case, the sale becomes absolute, and the property passes, only after a reasonable time has elapsed, without the return of the goods.[1]

Sale on credit; sale for cash. The idea of a sale on credit is that the vendee is to have the thing sold on his assumption to pay, and before actual payment. In a cash sale, possession is given upon payment.

It may be agreed that the vendor shall retain the subject until the expiration of the credit, as a security for the payment of the sum stipulated. But such an agreement, being special and unusual, will not be presumed.[2] See CASH.

Sale with faults. See FAULT, 2.

Sale, bill of. An instrument evidencing the transfer of title to personalty. Compare INVOICE.

At common law, personalty can be transferred, or incumbered, without the use of a deed. A chattel mortgage (q. v.) is a bill of sale with an incorporated defeasance. A seal is not essential to a bill of sale.[3]

Applicable in every case where the thing sold, from its character or situation at the time, is incapable of actual delivery. A ship at sea may be transferred by delivery of a bill of sale, and the cargo, by indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading. Indorsement and delivery of a warehouse receipt is equivalent to delivery of the property itself. Such regulations are necessary for the purpose of commerce.[4]

As fictitious bills of sale are given to protect property from creditors, statutes have very generally been enacted to prevent frauds of that nature. To affect execution-creditors, registration may be essential.

A rule of the maritime courts calls for a written bill of sale of a vessel. And the Revised Statutes direct that in the case of a sale of a registered vessel to a citizen of the United States, there shall be some writing in the nature of a bill of sale, and that this writing shall recite, at length, the certificate of registry; otherwise, the vessel is incapable of re-registry, and is not of the United States merchant marine.[5]

Compare AUCTION; CONVEYANCE, 2; GRANT, 2; PURCHASE; VEND.

See generally ACCOUNT; AGENT; BARGAIN; CAVEAT, Emptor; CONCERN; CONTRACT; DECLARATION, 1; DEED, 2; DELIVERY, 1; DISPARAGEMENT, 2; DISPOSE, 2; DRUMMER; EASEMENT; EXECUTION, 3; FRAUD; LIEN; OFFER, 1; PAYMENT; PERFORMANCE; PERISHABLE; PLACE. Of delivery; POSSESSION; RECORD; RESCISSION; RETAIL; SAMPLE; STOPPAGE; TAX, 2; TRUST, 1; VALID; VALUE; VENDITIO; VOID; WARRANTY, 2.

SALIC or SALIQUE LAW. The code of laws of the Salians, a German tribe who settled in ancient Gaul.

One provision, which has excluded women from inheriting the crown in France and in a few other continental countries, was that males only should succeed to inheritances.[1]

SALOON. Originally, a large public room or parlor; now, usually, a place where intoxicating liquors are sold.[2]

A licensed saloon-keeper is, therefore, a person licensed to sell intoxicating liquors.[3]

Supposed to be a place where persons who call for them are supplied with refreshments.[3]

A pool-table is not necessary to the conduct of the business.[3]

A house or room used for retailing spirituous liquors is sometimes improperly called a saloon, but this use cannot impart to the word any such legal signification.[4]

See CLOSE, 1 (2); KEEP, Open; RESTAURANT; TAVERN.

SALT LAKE. See LAKES.

SALTPETRE. See DRUGS.

SALUS. See LEX, Salus populi, etc.

SALVAGE.[5] 1. Allowance for saving a ship or goods from the danger of the seas, from fire, pirates, or enemies.[6]

The compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a ship or vessel or the cargo of the same, or the lives of the persons belonging to the ship or vessel, are saved from danger or loss in cases of shipwreck, derelict, capture, or other marine misadventure.[7]

The compensation allowed to persons by whose voluntary assistance a ship at sea, or her cargo, or both, have been saved in whole or in part from impending sea peril, or in re-

[1] 1 Benjamin, Sales, § 911, cases See also Exhaust Ventilating Co. v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 69 Wis. 454 (1887), cases: 13 N. W. Rep. 599.

[2] Nat. Bank of Commerce of Boston v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Memphis, 91 U. S. 95-96 (1875), Strong, J.

[3] Gibson v. Warden, 14 Wall. 247 (1871), cases, Swayne, Judge.

[4] Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 399-400 (1850), cases, Taney, C. J.

[5] See R. S. §§ 4170, 4192; Weston v. Penniman, 1 Mas. 317 (1817); Hosey v. Buchanan, 16 Pet. 215 (1842). On the English Bills of Sales Acts of 1878, 1882, see 3 Law Quar. Rev. 300 (1887).

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 194; Maine, Anc. Law, 152.

[2] McDougall v. Giacomini, 13 Neb. 434 (1882), Maxwell, J.

[3] Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 Mich. 8 (1882), Cooley, J.; Kitson v. Mayor of Ann Arbor, 26 id. 326 (1873).

[4] State v. Mansker, 36 Tex. 365 (1871), Ogden, J. See also 39 Conn. 40; 105 Mass. 40.

[5] F. salvage: L. salvare, to save.

[6] Weeks v. The Maria, 2 Pet. Adm. 425 (1790); Lea v. The Alexander, 2 Paine, 469 (1832?), Wayne, J.

[7] The Clarita and The Clara, 23 Wall. 16-19 (1874), cases, Clifford, J.

covering such property from actual peril or loss, as, in cases of shipwreck, derelict, or recapture.[1]

Salvor. A person who renders salvage service. "A person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a voluntary adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of that ship."[2]

Elements of a valid claim are: a marine peril, voluntary service not owed to the property as a matter of duty, and success in saving the property, or some portion, from the impending peril;[3] or, again: a marine peril, service voluntarily rendered when not required as an existing duty or from a special contract, and success in whole or in part, or service contributing thereto. Proof of success, to some extent, is as essential as proof of service.[4]

Suit for salvage may be in rem, against the property saved or the proceeds thereof, or in personam, against the party at whose request and for whose benefit the service was performed. But both proceedings may not be had in one and the same libel.[5]

The allowance of a compensation, which much exceeds the risk encountered and the labor employed, is intended as an inducement to render the services which it is for the public interest and the general interest of humanity, to hold forth to those who navigate the ocean.[6]

Liberal remuneration is allowed — to induce the daring to embark in such enterprises, and to withdraw motive to depredate upon the property. Seamen, pilots, and passengers, who perform extraordinary services out of their duty, are entitled to it; but not, one who places the property in danger.[7]

In determining the amount of the reward, courts of admiralty consider as the main ingredients: the labor expended; the promptitude, skill, and energy displayed; the value of the property employed in rendering the service, and the danger thereto; the risk incurred; the value of the property saved; and the degree of danger from which the property was rescued.

The compensation is not viewed merely as pay, on the principle of quantum meruit, or as remuneration pro opere et labore, but as a reward for perilous services voluntarily rendered, and as inducement to embark in such undertakings.[8]

Compensation presupposes good faith, meritorious service, complete restoration, and incorruptible vigilance.[1]

Saving a ship in port from imminent danger of destruction by fire is as much a salvage service as saving her from the perils of the seas. The shortness of the time occupied does not lessen the merit of the service. . . A passenger cannot recover for every service which would support a claim by one in nowise connected with the ship; yet, for extraordinary services, and the use of extraordinary means, not furnished by the equipment of the ship herself, by which she is saved from imminent danger, he may have salvage. . . The amount is largely a matter of fact and discretion, which cannot be reduced to precise rules but depends upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case.[2]

See ADMIRALTY; CONSORT, 2; DERELICT, 2; TOWAGE.

2. In the law of insurance, see INSURANCE, Fire.

SAME. Refers to the next antecedent.[3] Does not always mean identical; frequently, of the kind or species, though not the specific thing; is often a substitute for a word used before, and employed as a pronoun.[3]

In the expression "deliver policies and receive premiums on the same," means them — the policies.[4]

Same manner. See MANNER.

Same offense. In the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, an offense which is the same in law and in fact.[5]

Same property. The tenant of a stock farm was to draw out the "same property" he put into the business. Held, that the same description of stock, of equivalent value, was meant.[6]

Same v. Same. The same plaintiff against the same defendant; the same case as first cited.

Sameness. See PATENT, 2; TRADE-MARK.

Compare EQUAL; EQUIVALENT; IDEM; IDENTITY; LIKE; SAID.

SAMPLE.[7] In the law of sales, that which is taken out of a large quantity as a representative of the whole; a part shown as a specimen.[8]

The fair import of the exhibition of a sample is that the article to be sold is like that shown as a par-

[1] The Sabine, 101 U. S. 384–91 (1879), cases, Clifford, J. See also Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 119 id. 629 (1887), cases; The Fannie Brown, 30 F. R. 220 (1887).

[2] The Neptune, 1 Hagg. 236 (1824), Ld. Stowell. Approved, The Wave v. Hyer, 2 Paine, 189 (1833?); 1 Curtis, 378.

[3] The Clarita and The Clara, ante.

[4] The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 265 (1804), Marshall, C. J. Approved, 31 F. R. 496.

[5] The Blackwall, 10 Wall. 14, 12 (1869), cases, Clifford, J.; The Sabine, supra.

[1] The Island City, 1 Black, 130 (1861), Grier, J.

[2] The Connemara, 108 U. S. 357–59 (1883), cases, Gray, J.; The Tornado, 109 id. 115 (1883).

See generally The Egypt, 17 F. R. 367–76 (1883), cases; 9 id. 53, 480; 10 id. 556; 1 Bened. 553, 10 id. 73–74; 1 Sumn. 216; 1 Bond, 117, 270; 3 id. 375; 1 Cliff. 220; 3 Woods, 149.

[3] 2 Kent, 555: Coke, Litt. 20 b, 385 b.

[4] Carpo v. Brown, 40 Iowa, 493 (1875), Day, J.

[5] United States v. Cashiel, 1 Hughes, 560 (1863).

[6] Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 99 (1872).

[7] O. F. ensample, a corruption of example, exemple: L. exemplum: ex-imere (emere), to take out, select.

[8] Webber's Case, 33 Gratt. 904 (1880), Staples, J.

sel. The object is to save the purchaser the trouble of examining the whole quantity.[1]

The rule of caveat emptor does not apply, because there is no opportunity for a personal examination of the bulk of the commodity which the sample is said to represent.[2]

A warranty is implied that the bulk corresponds to the sample in nature and quality. But if the sample is fairly drawn from the bulk, and there is a defect in both, unknown and not discoverable by examination, there is no such warranty. A specimen may be shown to enable the purchaser to form an opinion of its probable qualities without any intention in the seller to warrant all the goods to be equal to it. Opportunity to examine the bulk is a strong circumstance against considering the sale a sale by sample.[3]

See CAVEAT, Emptor; WARRANTY, 2.

SAMPLE-ROOM. See INNKEEPER.

SAN FRANCISCO. See PUEBLO.

SANCTION.[4] The vindicatory branch of the law, whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any public wrong, and trespass or neglect their duty.[5]

Sanction of an oath. A belief that the Supreme Being will punish falsehood.[6] See OATH.

SANCTUARY.[7] 1. Exemption of a place, consecrated to religious duties, from criminal arrests.[8]

As a plea, introduced at a time when superstitious veneration was paid to consecrated ground. The accused first fled to a church or church yard; within forty days, dressed in sackcloth, he confessed his guilt before the coroner, took an oath to abjure the realm, and went with a cross in his hand to a designated port and embarked. The privilege was abolished in 1624, by 21 James I, c. 28.[9]

2. A place where process of law cannot be executed.

Civil sanctuary. The protection afforded a man by his own house as against the service of civil process. See ASYLUM; HOUSE, 1.

SANE.[1] Whole in mind; healthy in mind; of sound mind.

Insane; nonsane. Not whole, sound, or healthy in mental faculties; unable, from nature or accident, to perform the rational functions common to man.[2]

Sanity. Mental health; soundness of understanding. See at length INSANITY; WILL, 1.

SANITARY REGULATIONS. See COMMERCE; HEALTH; QUARANTINE, 2; POLICE, 2.

SANS. See SINE.

SATISFY.[3] 1. To supply fully, with what is required; to free from doubt or uncertainty; to set the mind at rest; to convince.

"To satisfy fully" is to exclude all doubts, reasonable or otherwise.[4]

"Entirely satisfied" implies a firm and thorough assent of the mind and judgment to the truth of a proposition. This may exist notwithstanding a possibility that the fact may be otherwise.[5]

Satisfactory. As applied to evidence (q. v.), that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind, beyond reasonable doubt.[6]

An action cannot be maintained, for work and labor, upon an agreement to construct a book case "to the satisfaction" of the defendant, by proof that the case was made according to the terms of the agreement, without also proving that it was accepted by the defendant;[7] and the same is true as to a contract to make a "satisfactory suit of clothes."[8]

An agreement to deliver certain notes or "make satisfaction" binds the promisor, for failure to deliver the notes, to make such compensation as the law provides.[9]

A contract to employ one as agent for a year "if he fill the place satisfactorily" may be terminated by

---

[1] Bradford v. Manly, 13 Mass. *143 (1816), Parker, C. J.

[2] Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 388 (1870), Davis, J.

[3] Story, Sales, § 376, cases; 2 Benj. Sales, §§ 969-81, cases; 2 Kent, 480, cases; Hare, Contr. 508, cases; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 383, 388-94 (1870), cases. In Pennsylvania, until 1887, in the absence of fraud or circumstances fixing the character of a sample as a standard of quality, the sample was a guaranty only that the article to be delivered should follow its kind, and be simply merchantable. Boyd v. Wilson, 88 Pa. 324 (1877, Sharswood, J., dissenting); Selser v. Roberts, 105 id. 242 (1884). The act of April 18, 1887 (P. L. p. 21), provides that unless the parties agree otherwise, there shall be an implied warranty that the property to be delivered is the same in quality as the sample shown.

[4] L. sanctio; sancire, to render sacred, inviolable.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 54, 56.

[6] Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 355 (1841).

[7] L. sanctuarium, a shrine: sanctus, consecrated, holy.

[8] [4 Bl. Com. 365.

[9] 4 Bl. Com. 332; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 491.

[1] L. sanus, sound in mind.

[2] Den v. Van Cleve, 5 N. J. L. 661 (1819), Kirkpatrick, Chief Justice.

[3] L. satis, enough; facere, to make.

[4] State v. Sears, 1 Phil. L. 148 (1867).

[5] People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 335 (1870).

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2.

[7] McCarran v. McNulty, 7 Gray, 141 (1856).

[8] Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136 (1873).

[9] Moore v. Fleming, 34 Ala. 498 (1859).

the employer when, in his judgment, the agent fails to meet that requirement.[1]

"A contract to make a bust with which the defendant ought to be satisfied is one thing; an undertaking to make one with which she will be satisfied is quite another thing."[2] The same ruling was made with respect to a portrait not to be paid for "if unsatisfactory."[3]

Where S. refused to accept an elevator, costing $2,300, which had been warranted satisfactory in every respect, it was held, reversing the lower court, that, provided he acted in good faith, S. was the sole judge whether the elevator was satisfactory.[4]

If one orders goods (milk-pans) agreeing to pay for them if satisfied, "he must act honestly, and in accordance with the reasonable expectations of the seller as implied from the contract, its subject-matter, and surrounding circumstances. This dissatisfaction must be actual, not feigned; real, not pretended."[5]

An agreement that the purchaser of an article, sold with warranty, may rescind the sale if the article is not satisfactory, does not preclude him from retaining it, and recouping damages for breach of the warranty, in an action for the price.[6]

2. To comply fully with a demand; to extinguish, as, by payment or performance.

"Satisfied" referring to a note or bond imports that the instrument is paid.[7]

Satisfaction. (1) The settlement or extinguishment of a demand; also, the record-entry to that effect.

The demand may be of the amount of a judgment, mortgage, or other lien, or of a claim not evidenced by a record; but the reference is frequently to matters of record by way of distinction.

Accord and satisfaction. See ACCORD.

Satisfaction piece. An acknowledgment in writing that an incumbrance has been satisfied.

(2) In equity, the donation of a thing, with the intention, expressed or implied, that it is to be an extinguishment of some existing right or claim.[8]

Arises, as a matter of presumption, where a man, being under an obligation to do an act (as, to pay money), does that by will which may be considered as a performance or satisfaction of the act, the thing done being ejusdem generis with that which he engaged to perform. The presumption may be rebutted by circumstances. The thing so done must be a substitute or equivalent for the contract, and not intended as a fulfillment of it. In a "performance" the thing is done strictly in pursuance and in fulfillment of the contract. The question may arise where there is a portion, secured by a marriage settlement or given by a will, and an advancement is afterward made to the donee; and in case of a legacy to a creditor.[1]

See ADEMPTION; ADVANCEMENT; ELECTION, 2.

SAVE. 1. To reserve, exempt out of; to preserve.

Statutes allowing summary convictions "save" the right of trial by jury.

A saving totally repugnant to the body of a statute is void.[2]

2. To suspend the operation of; to bar.

The statute of limitations (q. v.) is "saved" when some circumstance prevents the statute from being applied to the case in hand.

SAVINGS BANK. See BANK, 2 (2).

SC. See SCIRE; Scilicet.

SCANDAL.[3] 1. In scandalum magnatum, words spoken in derogation of a peer, judge, or other high officer of the realm.

Formerly, more reprehensible than defamation of a common or private person.[4]

"Scandal" and "slander" mean the same thing in law. Escandre in 3 Edw. I, c. 34, is translated slander in the statute book.[5] See SLANDER.

2. An allegation in a pleading in equity which is expressed in language derogatory to the dignity of the court, or which charges an offense irrelevant to the merits of the cause.

The allegation in a bill in equity of anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or which is contrary to good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause.[6]

A party may refuse to answer a pleading which contains scandalous matter till the same is expunged in pursuance of the report of a master appointed for the purpose.[7]

But nothing which is positively relevant to the merits of the cause, however harsh or gross the charge, can be treated as scandalous. If, technically, matter

---

[1] Tyler v. Ames, 6 N. Y. Supr. 280 (1872).

[2] Zaleski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 234 (1876).

[3] Gibson v. Cranage, 39 Mich. 49 (1878).

[4] Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 296 (1885), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 18-21 (1886), cases; Seeley v. Welles, 120 Pa. 74 (1888), as to a machine: 27 Am. Law Reg. 578-82 (1888), cases.

[5] Daggett v. Johnson, 49 Vt. 349 (1877); 43 id. 523.

[6] Shupe v. Collender, Sup. Ct. Conn. (1888); 15 Atl. R. 605, cases.

[7] Reynolds v. Bird, 1 Root, 306 (1791).

[8] 2 Story, Eq. § 1099. Approved, 49 Ind. 422.

[1] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1099-1123. See also Exp. Pye, 18 Ves. Jr. 140 (1811), Eldon, L. Ch.; Exp. Pye (Chancey's Case), 2 W. & T., L. C. Eq. 752-833, cases; 1 Pom. Eq §§ 521, et seq.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 89.

[3] Gr. scándalon, a snare; a stumbling-block, an offense.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 123; 1 id. 402; 5 Coke, R. *125.

[5] Sharff v. Commonwealth, 2 Bian. *519 (1810).

[6] 1 Daniel, Ch. Pl. § 347.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 442.

is scandalous, it is also impertinent. A bill may be "referred" for scandal at any time; even upon application of a stranger. Scandal tends to injure by making records the means of perpetuating libelous and malignant slanders.[1] See IMPERTINENCE.

SCHEDULE. Schedules are annexed to constitutions, statutes, answers, depositions, petitions in insolvency, bankruptcy, and probate courts, and to other documents, in order to exhibit in detail matters previously mentioned in general terms. The word is sometimes used instead of inventory, q. v.

SCHEME. The "scheme of a statute" means the scope or extent of operation intended for it by the enacting body.[2]

SCHISM. Separation; division.

"In case a schism or division shall take place in a society" means in case a society shall separate, divide, or become partitioned, without reference to its external relations.[3]

SCHOOL. A place for instruction, particularly for the young.

In the constitution of California, "schools" refers to common or public schools, such as are organized for the sole purpose of disseminating knowledge and imparting scholastic instruction.[4]

Common or public schools. Schools supported by general taxation, open to all free of expense, and under the control of agents appointed by the voters.[5]

The phrases are never applied to the higher seminaries of learning, such as incorporated academies and colleges.[6]

All schools established as part of the general system of popular education, and open and free to all children and youth who are of proper age and other qualification.[6]

Does not include private schools supported and managed by individuals.[6]

"Common" denotes that the schools are open and public to all. "Common" and "public" are used interchangeably. "School" does not imply a restriction to the rudiments of an education.[7]

The words "common schools" have in themselves no definite meaning.[8]

School-house. A house for instruction; any building in which a school is kept.[1]

Separate schools. Schools for the education of the children of a sect or race; particularly, schools exclusively for the children of African parents,—sometimes called "colored" schools.

The question as to the constitutionality of laws providing for separate schools does not arise under the clause in the Fourteenth Amendment which prohibits the States from enacting "any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," since this clause refers exclusively to privileges enjoyed by individuals as citizens of the United States. Education has not been made a matter of national, but of domestic, concern. Unless the constitution of a State directs otherwise, its legislature is not required to adopt any system of public instruction at all; but when it has once established a system, the clause in the Amendment which forbids a State to deny to any person "the equal protection of the laws" controls the exercise of power over the enjoyment of the rights conferred by the system. The weight of authority is that it is still left to the legislatures to provide for the maintenance of separate schools for children of African parentage. The reasoning is that equality does not necessarily imply identity of rights. All decisions, however, hold that the schools, if separate, must afford equal advantages.[2]

A law is unconstitutional which, while taxing whites and blacks alike, directs that only the money collected from the blacks shall be used to sustain their schools, the whites thereby enjoying superior school facilities.[3]

The act of Kentucky of February 23, 1874, establishing a uniform system of common schools for colored children, is unconstitutional, because, by implication, it excludes negro children from a share in the proceeds of the common-school fund set apart by the con-

---

[1] Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 269–70.

[2] See 109 U. S. 532, 538, 569; 91 N. Y. 639.

[3] McKinney v. Griggs, 5 Bush, 417–18 (1869), Williams, Chief Justice.

[4] Aid Society v. Reis, 71 Cal. 631 (1887), Foote, C.

[5] Merrick v. Amherst, 12 Allen, 509 (1866), Bigelow, Chief Justice.

[6] Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 98–100 (1869), Chapman, C. J. See also People v. Board of Education of Brooklyn, 18 Barb. 400, 410 (1851),— in which a "Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum" was held not to be a common school.

[7] Roach v. St. Louis, 77 Mo. 487 (1883), Ray, J.

[8] Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 89 (1874), Cofer, J. As to the common-school systems of the States, see 2 Kent, 195–201.

[1] Luthe v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 55 Wis. 546, 548 (1882); — in which insurance placed upon a dwelling-house, converted into a school-house, was held void as upon the school-house, the same not having been continued upon the "school-house" by a majority vote of the members of a town company, as required by law.

[2] See United States v. Buntin, 10 F. R. 730 (1882); id. 736, note; Bertonner v. New Orleans, 3 Woods, 177, 180 (1878); Roberts v. Boston, 5 Cush. 198 (1849); Dallas v. Fosdick, 40 How. Pr. 249 (1869); County Court v. Robinson, 27 Ark. 116 (1871); State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 198 (1871); People v. Easton, 13 Abb. Pr. 159 (1872); State v. Duffy, 7 Nev. 342 (1872); Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 41 (1874); Cory v. Carter, 48 Ind. 329 (1874); People v. Gallagher (Brooklyn), 93 N. Y. 438 (1883); 95 U. S. 504–6. Contra, Clark v. Muscatine, 34 Iowa, 270 (1868); Dove v. Keokuk, 41 id. 689 (1875); People v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 400 (1869); Chase v. Stephenson, 71 Ill. 383 (1874); Board of Education v. Tinnon, 26 Kan. 1 (1881); Kaine v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 493 (1882): Act 8 June, 1881.

[3] Claybrook v. Owensboro, 16 F. R. 297 (1883).

stitution, as well as from the annual tax levied on the property of white persons for school purposes.[1]

Every man is interested in the education of the children of his community: his peace and quiet, his happiness and property, are largely dependent upon the intellectual and moral training which it is the object of public schools to supply. Hence the right to tax for maintenance of schools.[2]

The practice of setting apart section sixteen of every township of public lands, for the maintenance of public schools, is traceable to the Ordinance of 1785, the first enactment for the disposition by sale of the public lands in the western territory. The appropriation for that object became a fundamental principle by the Ordinance of 1787, which settled the terms of compact between the people and the States of the northwestern territory, and the original States. One article affirmed that "religion, morality, and knowledge" are "necessary for good government and the happiness of mankind," and declared "that schools and the means of education, should be forever encouraged." This principle was extended, first by enactment (1 St. L. 550, § 6), and again, in 1802, by the compact between the United States and Georgia, to the southwestern territory. There is a definite purpose declared to consecrate the same central section of every township of every State which might be added to the Federal system to the promotion of these objects. Reservations of minerals were not made out of that section.[3]

On the subject of corporal punishment in schools, see the cases cited to this paragraph,[4] and PUNISHMENT, Corporal.

See ABODE; ALCOHOL; APPENDAGE; BOND; CHARITY, 2; COLLEGE, 2; EDUCATION; LECTURES; SECTARIAN; SEMINARY; TEACHER; TUITION; WORSHIP.

SCI. FA. See SCIRE, Facias.

SCIENCE. In its broadest sense, knowledge; the knowledge of many, methodically digested and arranged, so as to be attainable by many; a body of principles and deductions to explain the nature of some matter.[5]

Depends upon abstract or speculative principles. "Art" relates to practice or performance — is practical skill as directed by theory or science; the mere application of knowledge. Rifle-shooting is not a "science."[6]

"The Congress shall have Power . . to promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing . . to Authors and Inventors, the exclusive Right to their Writings and Discoveries."[6]

The term "science" cannot, with propriety, be applied to a work of so fluctuating and fugitive a form as that of a newspaper or price-current, the subject-matter of which is daily changing, and is of mere temporary use. Prices-current, catalogues of merchandise, a scoring-sheet for games, a chart of patterns for dresses, blank account-books, and the like, are not subjects of the copyright laws passed in execution of the foregoing power.[1]

Scientific works. A medical expert may cite standard authorities as sustaining his views, and then they may be used by the opposite side to discredit him; but they may not be read as evidence or argument.[2]

The reasons for admitting scientific works to prove the statements they contain are, the authors did not write under oath, and their grounds of belief and process of reasoning cannot be tested by cross-examination. But an expert's opinion, formed in part from reading treatises by persons of acknowledged ability, may be given in evidence; and he may refresh his own recollection by reference to such authorities.[3] See further BOOK; EXPERT.

SCIENTER. See SCIRE, Scienter.

SCILICET. See SCIRE, Scilicet.

SCINTILLA. L. A spark, a glimmer; the smallest particle.

Scintilla juris. A spark of right or law; the smallest particle of legal interest.

Designated a fiction resorted to to enable a feoffee to uses to support a contingent use when it should come into existence and thereby effect an execution of the use under the Statute of Uses. In theory a small though sufficient portion of the fee-simple remained in the feoffee, which involved a possibility of future seisin in him.[4] See USE, 3.

Scintilla of evidence. The doctrine that when, on the trial of a cause, there is any evidence, however slight, tending to support the issue, the case must be submitted to the jury for a verdict, no longer prevails. See NONSUIT.

SCIRE. L. To be aware of; to learn; to know.

Scire facias. That you cause to be known. A writ for a defendant to appear in court on a day named to show cause why the plaintiff should not have advantage out of a matter of public record. Abbreviated sci. fa., and s. f.

Causes execution to issue upon the matter of record, as, a judgment, recognizance, mortgage, tax lien,

[1] Dawson v. Lee, 83 Ky. 56 (1885).

[2] Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 82 (1881), Miller, J.

[3] Cooper v. Roberts, 18 How. 177–82 (1855); Sherman v. Beuick, 93 U. S. 209 (1876).

[4] 22 Cent. Law J. 326–28 (1887), cases; 54 Ga. 281; 79 Ill. 567; 87 id. 303; 45 Iowa, 248; 50 id. 145; 4 Gray, 36; 12 Allen, 127; 68 N. C. 322; 5 Clark (Pa.), 78; 43 Tex. 167; 35 Wis. 59.

[5] Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. An. 637 (1881), Todd, Judge.

[6] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8.

[1] Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine, 392 (1828), Thompson. J. Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond, 540 (1862); Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 99 (1879), cases.

[2] Huffman v. Clirk, 77 N. C. 58–59 (1877), cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 498; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 438, 665–67, cases.

[3] State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 17–18 (1886), cases; Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148 (1883), cases; Boyle v. State 57 Wis. 472, 478 (1883), cases.

[4] See 4 Kent, 238; 2 Washb. R. P. 125; Williams, R. P. 261; 2 Bl. Com. 332.

or letters patent. In so far as it is an original action the defendant may plead to it. It is often of the nature of a declaration.

When founded upon a judgment, the purpose may be to revive the judgment, which from lapse of time (at common law, a year and a day) will soon be presumed to have been satisfied or released. The writ commands the defendant to show cause (1) why the judgment should not be revived, and the lien continued, or (2) why execution should not issue. Again, the purpose may be to make a person a party defendant, who, since the judgment was originally obtained, has become chargeable to an execution, or accountable in law for the assets of the first defendant. In either case the writ serves to continue a former suit to satisfaction.[1]

When founded upon a non-judicial record, as, letters patent for land or an invention, the writ institutes an original action designed to annul or repeal the instrument for some legal cause, as, fraud in the procuring or in the issuing of it. The writ has also been used to enforce the forfeiture of charters of incorporation, and the return of franchises back into the hands of the government.[2]

Scienter. With knowledge, knowingly; the fact of knowledge.

In the Latin forms of pleadings, the emphatic word used to charge knowledge in a defendant. Has also designated the clause in a declaration or indictment which alleges such knowledge.

The intention of the accused must be alleged in every part of the description of the crime where it is necessary to constitute an offense.[3]

It is necessary to allege and prove a scienter where there is injury by a domestic animal of mischievous propensity.[4]

The possession of other counterfeit paper by the accused at the time of passing a counterfeit note is evidence of the scienter.[5]

The scienter may be proved inductively by collateral facts,[6] and from previous offenses.[7]

Scilicet. From scire licet, as one may know or learn: to wit; that is to say, namely. Abbreviated scl., sc., ss.

[1] On reviving judgments, see generally 94 Am. Dec. 222-46 (1888), cases; on making representative a defendant to suit abated by death, Porlevant v. Pendleton, 28 Miss. 36-37 (1851), cases; recognizances, United States v. Stevens, 16 F. R. 105 (1883), cases, State v. Dowd, 43 N. H. 455 (1862); order for alimony, Chestnut v. Chestnut, 77 Ill. 349 (1875), cases; liens, Winder v. Coldwell, 14 How. 443 (1852).

[2] As to patent for an invention, see Stearns v. Barrett, 1 Mas. 164 (1816); United States v. Bell Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 360, 369, 371 (1888).

[3] Commonwealth v. Boynton, 12 Cush. 500 (1853), cases; 12 Metc. 448.

[4] Mareau v. Vanatta, 88 Ill. 133 (1878).

[5] United States v. Mitchell, Baldw. 366 (1831).

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. § 30.

[7] Tarbox v. State, 36 Ohio St. 584 (1883), cases.

Videlicet is now more commonly used, with the same meaning and effect. See VIDELICET; WIT.

SCOLD. A troublesome and angry woman, who, by brawling and wrangling among her neighbors, breaks the public peace, increases discord, and becomes a nuisance to the neighborhood.[1]

At common law, a common scold is a public nuisance. The sentence was that she be placed in a trebucket, castigatory, or cucking-stool, that is, in Anglo-Saxon, the scolding stool.[2]

The offense is now punishable, if at all, by fine, or by fine and imprisonment.

In 1824 a woman was convicted of this offense in the city of Philadelphia, and the sentence was, as at common law, that she "be placed in a ducking or cucking-stool, and be plunged three times in the water." This sentence was reversed by the supreme court, which decided that the old common-law punishment had not been adopted in Pennsylvania. The court also said that the punishment was introduced at a time when women were subjected to degradation as slaves; that authorities differ as to what the original punishment was, and how, therefore, it was to be executed upon offenders, if executed at all.[3]

In 1866 the same court, in reviewing the record in another case, said that the law has been considered settled since the decision in the James Case; that the penal code of 1860 did not abolish the offense; and that, as to the unreasonableness of punishing women alone for a too free use of the tongue "it is enough to say that the common law, which is the expressed wisdom of ages, adjudges that it is not unreasonable. . . . Argument drawn from the indelicacy or unreasonableness of such a prosecution should be addressed, therefore, to the legislature."[4] See PUNISHMENT, Cruel.

SCOT AND LOT. Certain duties paid by those who exercised the elective franchise within cities and boroughs.[5]

A customary contribution laid on subjects according to their ability.[6]

SCRAMBLING. Scrambling possession: a struggle for the possession of land on the land itself.[7]

SCRAWL. See SCROLL.

SCRIBE. See SCRIVENER.

SCRIP.[8] A certificate or schedule. Evidence of the right to obtain shares in a pub-

[1] [United States v. Royall, 3 Cranch, C. C. 622 (1829): Jacob's Law Dict.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 168.

[3] James v. Commonwealth, 11 S. & R. 226-36, Duncan, J., Gibson, J., Tilghman, C. J.

[4] Commonwealth v. Mohn, 52 Pa. 245-46, Woodward, C. J. See also Whart. Cr. L. 171; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 147; 1 Russ. Cr. 302; Laws of Prov. of Pa. (1682-1700), Linn, 115, 145; 29 Harper's Weekly, 759-60 (1886).

[5] [McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. 116 (1868).

[6] Cowell's Law Dict.

[7] Spiers v. Duane, 54 Cal. 177 (1880).

[8] L. scribere, to write.

lic company: a scrip certificate, in distinction from the real title.[1]

Scrip certificate. Entitles the holder to apply for shares in a public company. Insurance scrip. Shows that the holder will be entitled to a share in the profits of the company which issued the scrip when they have been realized and declared.[2]

Scrip issued in England by the agent of a government, the holder, on payment of all installments, to receive the definitive bonds, and which, by the usage of dealers in public securities, is transferred by mere delivery, passes by such a delivery to a bona fide holder for value without title: that is, such script is itself a negotiable instrument.[3]

State scrip, declaring on its face that it is receivable for "taxes and dues," gives the holder no right to have it received for taxes unless he owes the taxes.[4] See DIVIDEND, 3.

SCRIPT.[5] A writing; an original writing.

In England, a testamentary document of any kind, including even written instructions for drafting the document.

Affidavit of script. An affidavit attached to the paper relied upon in a testamentary cause.[6]

SCRIVENER.[7] A writer for another; a draughtsman; a scribe: as, the scrivener of a will, deed, or other document.

Originally, a person with whom people deposited money to be laid out when he found opportunity; he, meanwhile, having the use of the money. The banker has supplanted him as the depositary of money, and the attorney as the draughtsman of securities. . . To be a scrivener, a man now must carry on the business of being trusted with other people's moneys to lay out for them as occasion offers.[8]

SCROLL. A flourish made with a pen, around "L. S." or "Seal," and intended for a seal.

May consist of a circle, a scalloped curved line, or even of brackets, written opposite the place of signature. See further SEAL, 1.

SCT. See SCIRE, Scilicet.

[1] [Wharton's Law Dict.

[2] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[3] Goodwin v. Robarts, L. R., 10 Ex. 337, 352 (1875), Cockburn, C. J.

[4] Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 63 (1886), cases.

[5] L. scribere, to write.

[6] See Randolph v. Hughes, 89 N. C. 428 (1883); Osborne v. Leak, ib. 433 (1883).

[7] Formerly scriven: L. L. scribanus, a notary: scribere, to write.

[8] Adams v. Malkin, 3 Campb. 539-40 (1814), Gibbs, C. J.; Harman v. Johnson, 18 E. L. & E. 402 (1852), Campbell, C. J.

SCULPTOR. See STATUARY.

SE. See SUI, Se.

SEA. Includes all waters within the ebb and flow of the tide.[1]

"A sea" may mean a general disturbance of the surface of the water occasioned by a storm, breaking it up into the roll and lift of waves following or menacing each other; or, a particular wave or surge, separate from its fellows.[2]

The main or high seas are part of the realm of England, for thereon the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction; but they are not subject to the common law. This main sea begins at the low-water mark. But between high and low-water marks, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction: one upon the water, when it is full sea, the other upon the land, when it is an ebb.[3]

It is now a well-established principle of international law that no nation has any exclusive dominion over the high seas, which are the highway of all nations and subject to the public law of the whole civilized world. But each nation has such dominion over the sea within a certain distance from her shores — usually agreed to be as far as a cannon-shot will reach from the land, or a marine league,[4] q. v.

The high sea is free and open to all nations. It cannot be the property or the empire of any particular state. Its destination is clearly for the common benefit of mankind; it is a common pathway, separating and yet binding, intended alike for all. Formerly, portions of the ocean were claimed as a monopoly. Thus, the Portuguese prohibited other nations from sailing to the East Indies; the Spanish claimed the right to exclude all others from the Pacific: the English, in the seventeenth century, claimed property in the seas surrounding Great Britain as far as the coasts of the neighboring countries, and in the eighteenth century only softened down the claim into one of sovereignty; and Russia based an exclusive claim to the Pacific north of the fifty-first degree, upon the ground that this part of the ocean was a passage to shores lying exclusively within her jurisdiction. But this claim was resisted by our government, and withdrawn in the temporary convention of 1824.

Bays of the sea are within the jurisdiction of the states to whose territory the promontories embracing them belong. Thus, Delaware bay was declared in 1793 to belong exclusively to the United States. When, however, the headlands are very remote, there is more doubt in regard to the claim of exclusive control over them; and, for the most part, such claim has not been made. . . . Great Britain has long claimed supremacy in the narrow seas adjoining that island. But the claim, although cheaply satisfied by paying

[1] Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 462 (1847), Wayne, J.

[2] Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 463 (1886), Finch, J.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 110.

[4] 1 Kent, 30; Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch, 234 (1804); Vattel, 207.

certain honors to the British flag, has not been uniformly acquiesced in, and it may be said to be falling into desuetude. In 1856 Denmark agreed to give up her claim to dues for navigation over Elsineur sound and the Belts, for thirty-five million rix dollars (at fifty cents of our money to the dollar) — to be divided among the nations interested in proportion to the value of their commerce passing through the straits. In 1857 our government agreed to pay of this sum three hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars. . . By the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856, "the Black Sea is made neutral. Open to the mercantile marine of all nations, its waters and ports are formally and in perpetuity interdicted to flags of war." The treaty, however, grants to Russia and Turkey the liberty of keeping a small force for coast service.

Where a navigable river forms the boundary between two states both are presumed to have free use of it, and the dividing line will run in the middle of the channel, unless the contrary is shown by long occupancy or agreement of the parties. When a river rises within the bounds of one state and empties into the sea in another, international law allows to the inhabitants of the upper waters only a moral claim or imperfect right to its navigation. . . . But there is now scarcely a river in the Christian portions of the world, the dwellers on whose waters have not the right of free communication with the rest of mankind. The Rhine, the Scheidt, the Danube, the Mississippi, the St. Lawrence, the Amazon, and the La Plata system of rivers, etc., have been made free by treaties.[1]

Arm of the sea. A river, harbor, creek, basin, bay, or other subordinate description of waters, where the tide ebbs and flows.

This is within the jurisdiction of admiralty, but when within the body of a State, the State has concurrent jurisdiction.[2]

At sea. A vessel is at sea when she has actually sailed, and is on her voyage.[3] See SAIL.

Beyond the sea. Out of a State or of the United States, as the case may be.[4]

High sea. The main or high sea begins at low water-mark.[5]

The uninclosed waters of the ocean on the sea coast outside the fauces terræ.[6]

A vessel lying in harbor, fast to the shore by cables, communicating with the land by her boats, and not within any inclosed dock or at any pier or wharf, is on the "high seas," outside of low water-mark on the coast.[1]

The words "upon the high seas, or on any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay, within the admiralty jurisdiction, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State," used in Rev. St. § 5346, are limited to the high seas, and to the waters connected immediately with them. That the Lakes are not "high seas" is too clear for argument. These words have been employed from time immemorial to designate the ocean below low water-mark, and have rarely, if ever, been applied to interior or land-locked waters of any description.[2]

Main sea. That part of the sea lying outside of the fauces terræ or points on the opposite shore sufficiently near to enable persons standing on one shore to distinctly see with the naked eye what is doing on the opposite shore.[3]

Sea brief; sea-letter. A custom-house document certifying to the citizenship of the owner of a vessel which has been duly registered.

Making or using a forged sea-letter is a penal offense.[4]

The term, in use, is synonymous with "pass-port."[5] The document relates more particularly to the cargo, while "passport" relates rather to the vessel.[6]

The form of the document has been variously given in different commercial treaties. This may explain the different descriptions given by text-writers.[7]

Seaman. One whose business is navigating ships; a sailor; a mariner.

In a broad sense, includes a master or other officer; in a narrow sense, one of the crew. The context and subject-matter determine the scope of the meaning. See CURE, 1; NATURALIZATION, R. S. § 2174; WARDS.

Sea-manure; sea-weed. See BEACH; DRIFT-STUFF.

Sea-shore. The margin of the sea, in its usual and ordinary state; all the ground between the ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark.[8]

By the common law, the land between ordinary high and low-water mark; the [1] Woolsey, Intern. Law, §§ 59-62. See also 1 Kent, 26-32.

[2] United States v. Grush, 5 Mas. 298-302 (1829), cases; L. R., 2 Q. B. 7.

[3] Union Ins. Co. v. Tysen, 3 Hill, 123-28 (N. Y. 1842), cases; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 199 (1853); 20 Pick. 278; 14 Mass. 31; 12 Gray, 501; 6 Whart. 255; 1 Story, 259.

[4] State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 479 (1867), cases; Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 637-38 (1878), cases, Harlan, J.; 13 F. R. 898.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 110.

[6] United States v. Grush, 5 Mas. 298 (1829), Story, J.

[1] United States v. Seagrist, 4 Blatch. 422-23 (1860), cases.

[2] Exp. Byers, 32 F. R. 406 (1887), Brown, J.

[3] People v. Richmond County, 73 N. Y. 397 (1878), Andrews, J.

[4] R. S. §§ 4190-91.

[5] Arnould, Ins. 623.

[6] 1 Marshall, Ins. 317.

[7] See 1 Kent, 157; Sleght v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. *203 (1806); Sleght v. Hartshorne, 2 id. 531 (1807).

[8] Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. *439 (1810), Parsons, C. J.; 17 Ala. 791; 31 Cal. 121; 34 Conn. 494; 40 id. 400; 123 Mass. 361; 23 N. J. L. 633; 23 Tex. 358.

land over which the daily tides ebb and flow.[1]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the owner of land bordering on the sea-shore holds only to the ordinary high-water mark, and that the shore between high and low-water mark belongs to the State.[1]

Sea-worthy. Not, capable of going to sea or being navigated on the sea, but sound, stanch, and strong in all respects, and equipped, furnished, and provided with officers, men, provisions, and documents for a certain service. In a policy of insurance for a definite voyage, means "sufficient for such a vessel and voyage."[2]

The hull must be so tight, stanch, and strong as to be competent to resist all ordinary action of the sea, and to prosecute and complete the voyage without damage to the cargo.[3]

The hull, tackle, apparel and furniture must be in such condition of strength and soundness as to resist the ordinary action of the sea, wind and waves.[4]

The question is to be determined with reference to the customs and usages of the port or country from which the vessel sails, the existing state of knowledge and experience, and the judgment of prudent and competent persons versed in such matters. If, by this standard, the ship is found in all respects to have been reasonably fit for the contemplated voyage, the warranty of sea-worthiness is complied with.[4]

The burden of proving unsea-worthiness is on the insurer, there being a prima facie presumption of sea-worthiness in favor of the assured.[4]

In the insurance of a vessel by a time-policy, the warranty of sea-worthiness is complied with if the vessel is sea-worthy at the commencement of the risk; the fact that she subsequently sustains damage, and is not properly refitted at an intermediate port, does not discharge the insurer from subsequent risk or loss, provided such loss is not the consequence of the omission. A defect of sea-worthiness, arising after the commencement of the risk, and permitted to continue from bad faith or want of ordinary prudence or diligence on the part of the insured or his agents, discharges the insurer from liability for any loss which is the consequence of such bad faith or want of prudence or diligence; but does not affect the contract as to any other risk or loss covered by the policy, and not caused or increased by such particular defect.[5]

See ADMIRALTY; DANGERS; INSURANCE; MARINE; MARITIME; PIRACY, 1; VESSEL; WHARF; WRECK.

SEAL.[6] 1. An instrument for impressing wax made to adhere to a writing, in attestation of the genuineness of the writing or of the deliberation with which it is executed.

The impression produced with such instrument; also, any device allowed as a substitute for such impression.

The implement originally employed was a seal ring, and the substance wax, wafer, or other ceraceous matter. A substitute was a figured piece of leather or parchment, attached at the end of the document.

At common law, a scroll or scribble, a figure, an impression or other device in or upon the texture of the writing material is not a seal. But now, by enactment, these are almost universally allowed as substitutes. Corporate seals, and the seals of public officials and of notaries, are attached by means of a metallic die, and with or without wax or wafer.[7]

A seal is not necessarily of any particular form or figure; when not of wax nor made by a die, it is usually in the form of a scroll, but "L. S." or "Seal," inclosed in brackets or in some other design, are in common use. It may consist of the outline without any inclosure; it may be in the shape of a circle, an ellipse, a scroll, a rectangle, or an irregular figure; or it may be a simple dash or flourish of the pen. Its precise form cannot be defined; that depends upon taste or fancy. Whether an instrument is under seal or not is a question for the court upon inspection; whether a mark or character shall be held to be a seal depends upon the intention of the executant as shown by the paper.[8]

"In all cases where a seal is necessary by law, to any commission, process, or other instrument provided for by the laws of Congress, it shall be lawful to affix the proper seal by making an impression therewith directly on the paper to which such seal is necessary; which shall be as valid as if made on other adhesive substances."[9]

The use of seals as a mark of authenticity is very

[1] Land and Water Co. v. Richardson, 70 Cal. 206 (1886); United States v. Pacheco, 2 Wall. 590 (1864), Field, J.

[2] Capen v. Washington Ins. Co., 12 Cush. 536 (1853), Shaw, C. J.; 3 Kent, 205.

[3] Dupont v. Vance, 19 How. 167 (1856), Curtis, J.; The Little Hamilton, 18 F. R. 329-30 (1883); Hazard v. New England Mar. Ins. Co., 8 Pet. *581 (1834).

[4] The Orient, 4 Woods, 256 (1883); s. c. 16 F. R. 918.

[5] The Titania, 19 F. R. 107, 105-7 (1883), cases; Tidmarsh v. Washington Ins. Co., 4 Mas. 441 (1827), Story, Justice.

[6] Pickup v. Thames Ins. Co., L. R., 3 Q. B. D. 594 (1878); Moores v. Louisville Underwriters, 14 F. R. 226 (1882).

[1] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 427 (1888), cases, Blatchford, J.

[2] F. seel, a signet: L. sigillum, a mark, seal.

[3] See 4 Kent, 452; 1 Am. Law Rev. 638-52 (1867), cases; 13 Ga. 162; 13 La. An. 524; 5 Pick. 497; 24 id. 417; 10 Allen, 331; 12 id. 337; 50 Me. 549; 42 Miss. 304; 5 Mo. 79; 5 N. J. E. 52; 6 N. J. L. 169; 11 id. 174; 1 Denio, 377; 5 Johns. 245; 5 Duer, 402; 17 Barb. 309; 3 Hill, 493; 5 Whart. 563; 1 S. & R. 72; 7 Leigh, 301; 5 Wis. 549.

[4] Hacker's Appeal, 121 Pa. — (1888). The testatrix wrote "In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal. Ellen Waln," placing a dash after her name. In the body of the will she had used a similar dash for a period.

[5] Act of Congress, 13 May, 1864: R. S. § 6.

ancient.[1] . . In the civil law they were the evidence of truth.[2] . . Among the Saxons, seals were little used; their method was for such as could write to subscribe their names, and, whether they could write or not, to affix the sign of the cross. For the same reason the Normans, an illiterate nation, used sealing only; which custom continued after learning had made its way among them. The oldest sealed charter in England, that of Edward the Confessor to Westminster abbey, was witnessed by his seal only. At the Conquest (1066), the Norman lords introduced waxen seals. . . In the reign of Edward I (1272–1307), every freeman, and such of the villians as were fit to be put upon juries, had their individual seals. The impressions of these were a knight on horseback or other device; coats of arms were introduced by Richard I, who brought them from the crusades. . . This neglect of signing remained for a long time; for it was held in all books that sealing alone was sufficient to authenticate a deed: and so the common formula "sealed and delivered" continues to this day.[3]

Whenever a writing was read or exhibited as a person's last will, the praetorian court would not sustain it unless each of the seven witnesses had severally affixed his seal to the outside. This is the first appearance of sealing in the history of jurisprudence, considered as a mode of authentication. The use of seals, however, as mere fastenings, is doubtless of much higher antiquity. With the Romans, seals to wills and other documents of importance did not only attest the presence or assent of the signatary, but were also literally fastenings which had to be broken before the writing could be inspected.[4]

Formerly, wax was the most convenient and the only material used to receive the impressions. Hence it was said, sigillum est cera impressa; quia cera, sine impressione, non est sigillum:[5] a seal is wax impressed; wax without an impression is not a seal. This is not an allegation that an impression without wax is not a seal. The courts have held that an impression made on wafers or other adhesive substance capable of receiving an impression comes within the definition "cera impressa." If then wax be construed to be merely a general term including any substance capable of receiving and retaining the impression of a seal, paper, if it has that quality, may well be included in the category. The machine now used to impress public seals does not require any substance to receive or retain the impression, which is as well defined, as durable — less likely to be defaced than that made on wax. It is the seal which authenticates, not the substance impressed. Identity is all that is desired.[6]

The statute of 29 Charles II (1678) indicated a necessity that transfers of realty should be in writing and signed. In early days in England, a deed had to be sealed, whether signed or not.[1]

A seal to an instrument imports a consideration, or renders proof unnecessary. The presumption is that what is executed with so much deliberation (q. v.) and solemnity is founded upon sufficient cause.[2]

The present opinion is that parol authority is adequate to authorize an alteration or addition to be made to a sealed instrument.[3]

When a writing must be executed under seal, authority to an agent to execute it must be under seal. But where a seal is not vital to the contract, and the agent, unauthorized, signs with a seal, the instrument will still operate as a simple contract.[4]

Where a joint obligation concludes "witness our hands and seals," and contains but one seal, this will be deemed the seal of each of the signers.[5]

Bond, deed, covenant, conveyance, warrant of attorney, and like terms, import a sealed instrument.

A seal may destroy negotiability, q. v.; but not of corporation bonds, q. v.

In Missouri, a scroll must be referred to as a seal, in the body of the instrument.[6]

When the seal of a party, required to make an instrument valid, has been omitted by accident or mistake, a court of equity may adjudge the instrument binding.[7]

Common seal; corporate seal. The seal of a corporate body.

At common law, a corporation cannot manifest its intention by any personal act or oral discourse: it therefore acts and speaks only by its common seal. Though the particular members may express their private consent to act, by words or by signing their names, this does not bind the corporation: it is the fixing of the seal which unites the several assents of the individuals and makes one joint assent of the whole.[8]

The rule now is that for a contract of an ordinary every day occurrence a seal is not necessary; and that if such a contract has been executed, and the corporation has had the benefit of it, it must pay the price. The old rule still applies, however, to contracts of an extraordinary nature not within the usual business of the corporation.[9]

A corporation may bind itself by a contract not under its corporate seal, when the law does not re-

[1] 1 Kings, xxi, 8; Esther, viii, 8; Jeremiah, xxxii, 14.

[2] Institutes, 2, 10, 2–3.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 305–6. See also 4 Kent, 452; Holmes, Com. Law, 272; Hare, Contr. 121; 1 Ves. Jr. 13; 1 Wils. 213.

[4] Maine, Ancient Law, 203–4.

[5] Coke, 3 Inst. 169.

[6] Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 473–74 (1851), Grier, J. See also Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 548 (1882), Field, J.; Alexander v. Jameson, 5 Binn. *241–47 (1812); Miller v. ble et ux., 107 Pa. 399–400 (1884); 1 Reeves, Hist. : Law, 164, note.

[1] Miller v. Ruble et ux., 107 Pa. 399 (1884); Pa. Act 21 March, 1772.

[2] Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 84 (1876), cases; Bates v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 10 Allen, 253–56 (1865), cases; Warren v. Lynch, 5 Johns. *244 (1810).

[3] Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 33 (1864).

[4] Wagoner v. Watts, 44 N. J. L. 126 (1882).

[5] Bowman v. Robb, 6 Pa. 302 (1847).

[6] Dickens v. Miller, 12 Mo. Ap. 403 (1882).

[7] Bernards Township v. Stebbins, 109 U. S. 349 (1883), cases.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 475; 4 Kent, 288.

[9] Clarke v. Cuckfield Union, 21 L. J., Q. B. 351 (1852); 4 Man. & G. 860.

quire the contract to be evidenced by a sealed instrument.[1]

The corporate seal is to be affixed to transfers of realty, and to powers to make such transfers.[2] See SPECIALTY.

Great seal; privy seal. Grants or letters-patent first pass by bill. This is then signed at the top with the king's own sign-manual, and sealed with his privy signet, which is in the custody of the secretary of state; and then sometimes immediately passes under the great seal. Otherwise the course is to carry an extract to the keeper of the privy seal, who makes out a writ or warrant thereupon to the chancery. So that the sign-manual is the warrant to the privy seal, and the privy seal to the great seal. But some grants pass through certain offices, as the admiralty or the treasury, in consequence of the presence of the sign-manual without the confirmation of the signet, the great or the privy seal.[3]

The office of lord chancellor (q. v.) is created by the mere delivery of the great seal into his custody: he having always had supervision of all such public instruments of the crown as were authenticated in the most solemn manner.[4]

Keeper of the seal. Of the great seal: an officer through whose hands pass all charters, grants, and commissions of the king under the great seal; the lord keeper of the great seal. Of the privy seal: an officer through whose hands pass all charters signed by the king before they come to the great seal; at present, the lord keeper of the privy seal.

To counterfeit the king's great or privy seal was high treason, and a branch of the crimen falsi or forgery.[5]

Public seal. A seal belonging to one of the departments of government, in particular of the executory department, and used to attest approval and genuineness — of official acts, of copies of public documents.

Seal, place of. The place on a document where a seal is attached or is to be attached. In Latin, locus sigilli; whence "L. S." — usually printed or written with an encircling scroll.

By long usage and general understanding, "L. S." is regarded as representing a seal, in copies of legal precepts.[1]

If incumbent on an officer to give a bond, and he furnishes an instrument having "L. S." instead of a seal, and, upon the strength thereof, assumes the duties of the office, he and his sureties will be held upon the instrument as upon a bond.[2] See NOTARY.

2, v. For a trial judge to certify by signing and sealing, or simply by signing, a statement of the exceptions taken to his rulings or charge is called "sealing a bill of exceptions."

It is sufficient, in the practice of the Supreme Court, if the bill is simply signed by the judge.[3] See further EXCEPTIONS, Bill of.

3, v. For a jury to write out and seal up their verdict, as, in an envelope, and then separate to meet and publish it in open court, is termed "sealing their verdict," q. v.

4. As to sealed letters, see LETTERS, 8; PUBLICATION, 2.

Seals. In Louisiana, the effects of a decedent may be taken into public custody by means of "seals."

If the heir wishes to obtain the benefit of inventory, and delay for deliberation, before committing an act of heirship, he must cause seals to be affixed to the effects by a judge, or a justice of the peace; and, after ten days, petition for the removal of the seals, and that an inventory be taken. The seals are placed on the bureaus and on the doors of the apartments which contain the effects and papers of the deceased, so that they cannot be opened without destroying the seals; and they are "raised," publicly, in the same manner.[4]

5. To make air-tight, usually with wax.

Placing wax upon the top of a cork in a bottle containing a sample of milk for analysis, and not extending the wax over the mouth so as to render the bottle air-tight, is not "sealing" it, within a statute providing for the preservation of alleged adulterated milk for use as evidence.[5]

SEAMAN. See SEA, Seaman.

SEARCH. A careful examination; an examination or inspection authorized by law. It may be (1) of legal records in their proper office, for acts and proceedings affecting title to realty, such as conveyances, mortgages, mechanics' liens, municipal liens, judgments. The certificate of such examination is also called a search; and searcher describes the person who makes the examination. See NAME, 1.

[1] Gottfried v. Miller, 104 U. S. 527 (1881), cases, Woods, J.; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cranch, 305-6 (1813), cases.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 692-95, 735, cases.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 347; 1 Steph. Com. 571.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 46-47.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 83, 89.

[1] Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. 594 (1852).

[2] Board of Education v. Fonda, 77 N. Y. 355 (1879).

[3] Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 555 (1876), cases.

[4] See La. Civ. Code, arts. 1027-28, 1068-71, 1079, 1084.

[5] Commonwealth v. Lockhardt, 144 Mass. 182 (1887).

It may be (2) of a man's house, possessions, or person, for the discovery of proof of an offense with which he is charged.

In this sense a search may be for matter unlawfully deposited in the mails; for gambling apparatus; for implements used in counterfeiting; for intoxicating liquors kept for unlawful sale; or for other articles unlawfully concealed; also, for frauds attempted upon the revenue; and for liquors intended for illegal introduction into the Indian country.

Search-warrant. Written authority from a court or magistrate for the examination of a designated house or place for articles alleged to be concealed there contrary to law,—frequently for stolen property.

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." [1]

Search for and seizure of stolen or forfeited goods, or goods concealed in order to avoid the payment of duties, are totally different things from a search for and a seizure of a man's private papers for use as evidence against him. In the one case the government is entitled to the possession of the property; in the other it is not. The seizure of stolen goods is authorized by the common law; and the seizure of goods forfeited for a breach of the revenue laws or concealed to avoid paying duties has been authorised by English statutes for two centuries, and by our revenue acts since the commencement of the government, the first act, that of July 31, 1789, being passed by the Congress which proposed the first ten amendments. To ascertain what was meant by "unreasonable searches and seizures," as used in the Fourth Amendment, it is only necessary to recall the controversies had upon the subject.

The practice had obtained in the colonies of issuing writs of assistance to revenue officers, empowering them in their discretion to search suspected places for smuggled goods. This practice had been bitterly denounced, as "placing the liberty of every man in the hands of every petty officer." In England, from 1762, when the North Briton was started by John Wilkes, to 1766, when the Commons condemned general warrants for the seizure of persons or papers, a controversy was carried on between the government and Wilkes, he insisting upon the abolition of certain abuses, chief among which was the issuing of general warrants by the secretary of state to search private houses for evidence against alleged libelers of the administration. Several numbers of the North Briton being viewed as heinously libelous, Lord Halifax issued a general warrant for the apprehension of the supposed offenders. On the authority of this warrant Wilkes's house was searched in his absence, and all his papers, including even his will, were indiscriminately seized. For the outrage Wilkes recovered a verdict of £1000 against one of the messengers who had made the search, and £4000 against Lord Halifax, who had issued the warrant. Another case, also fresh in memory in 1791, was that of Entick v. Carrington, for entering the plaintiff's dwelling, breaking open his desks, boxes, etc., and examining his papers. In this case Lord Camden pronounced the judgment of the court (on a special verdict) in 1765, and the law has ever since been regarded as settled, the decision being considered a land-mark in English history. The principles laid down affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the government and its employés of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life. It is not the breaking of his doors and the rummaging of his drawers that constitutes the essence of the offense, but rather the invasion of his indefeasible right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property, where that right has not been forfeited by conviction for an offense. Any forcible and compulsory extortion of a man's own testimony or of his private papers to be used as evidence to convict him of crime or to forfeit his goods is within the condemnation of the judgment pronounced by Lord Camden.

The "unreasonable searches and seizures" condemned in the Fourth Amendment are most always made for the purpose of compelling a man to give evidence against himself, which in criminal cases is condemned in the Fifth Amendment; and compelling a man "in a criminal case to be a witness against himself," throws light upon the question as to what is an "unreasonable search and seizure." Seizing a man's private books and papers to be used in evidence against him is not different from compelling him to be a witness against himself.[1]

See HEALTH, Boards of; POST-OFFICE; SEIZURE; SUBPŒNA, Duces; TRADE-MARK.

Right of search. The right in a belligerent to stop a neutral vessel on the high seas, to go on board of her, examine her papers, and, it may be, even her cargo — in short, to ascertain by personal inspection whether or not she is conveying hostile or contraband goods.

A war right; applicable to merchant ships alone; to be exercised in such a way as to attain its object, and nothing more. The duty of submitting to the search is well established in international law. Treaties

[1] Constitution, Amd. IV. Ratified Dec. 15, 1791. See provisions to same effect in the constitutions of the States.

[1] Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 622-30, 633 (1886), Bradley, J. Revenue Act 22 June, 1874: R. S. § 3091.

See Semayne's Case, 5 Coke, 91 (1605); Wilkes's Case, 2 Wils. 150 (1763); Entick's Case, ib. 275 (1765); 2 Hale, P. C. 149; 2 Story, Const. § 1902; Cooley, Const. Lim. 300-8, cases; May's Const. Hist. Eng. c. II; 2 Bancroft's Hist. U. S. 414; 1 Sm. L. C. 183.

have been entered into regulating the exercise of the right.[1] See VISIT, 1.

SEAT. See PERMANENT; STOCK-EXCHANGE.

SEATED. Settled; actually occupied. Opposed, unseated. Said of land, in earlier legislation.

Residence without cultivation or cultivation without residence constitutes seated land. Temporary suspension of an actual occupation will not render seated land unseated.[2] A tract ceases to be unseated as soon as actually occupied with a view to permanent use.[3] The improvement of a part fixes the character of the whole tract as seated.[4] Land once seated may, by abandonment, become unseated.[5]

SEA-WORTHY. See SEA, Sea-worthy.

SEC. See SECUNDUM.

SECESSION. See GOVERNMENT, De facto.

SECK. See RENT, Rent-seck.

SECOND. See DISTRESS; EXCHANGE, 8; MORTGAGE; PUNISHMENT.

SECONDARY. See CONVEYANCE; EVIDENCE; USE, 3.

SECONDS. See BATTERY; DUEL.

SECRET. See CONCEAL; DISPOSE, 2; EQUITY; LIEN; PARTNER; POSSESSION, Adverse; SECRETE.

SECRETARY. See AGENT; DEPARTMENT; DESCRIPTIO; DIRECTORS.

SECRETE. Applies to any making away with property which puts it unlawfully out of the reach of a creditor.[6]

May be by putting legal impediments in the way by which he is prevented from getting possession in order to effect payment.[6] See BANKRUPTCY.

SECRETS, STATE'S. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

SECT. See RELIGION; SECTARIAN.

SECTA. See SUIT, 1.

SECTARIAN. A religious sect is a body or number of persons united in tenets, but constituting a distinct organization or party by holding sentiments or doctrines different from those of other sects or people. In the sense intended by the constitution of Nevada, every sect of that character is "sectarian."[1]

A Roman Catholic orphan asylum is a "sectarian institution," although only Catholic children are taught the principles of the Catholic church, and Protestant children the tenets common to all Christian people.[1] See RELIGION; SCHOOL, Public.

SECTION. See LANDS, Public; PARCEL, 2.

SECUNDUM. L. Following; according to.

Secundum allegata et probata. According to allegations and proofs. See ALLEGARE, Allegata, etc.

Secundum artem. According to the trade or calling.

Secundum legem. Conformably to law.

Secundum regulam. According to rule.

SECURE.[2] 1. To make safe or certain: to protect, insure, save, ascertain.[3]

Congress may secure to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.[4] The term does not here imply the protection of an acknowledged legal right. Acts passed in the exercise of the power create rights, rather than sanction previously existing rights.[5]

To "secure" a debt may mean to save it.[6]

2. To assure, guarantee, indemnify; to render certain that money will be paid or an obligation performed.

As, for a non-resident plaintiff to be required to secure payment of the costs (q. v.) of the suit he has instituted; for a debtor to secure his creditor by giving him a lien upon realty: the creditor being then said to be "secured."

A contract by which a vendor agrees to execute a conveyance as soon as the vendee "secures the payment" of the purchase-money, means, not when he pays it in money, but when he gives something by means of which payment may, at any future time, be procured or compelled.[6]

3. To procure; to perfect.

To "secure" a mechanic's lien means to do such acts as will perfect an incipient lien, that is, make it available.[7]

Security. (1) An instrument which guarantees the certainty of some specific thing, as, payment or performance.

(2) A surety.

Written after the name of one who signs a promissory note, means "surety."[8] See SURETY.

---

[1] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 208; 1 Kent, 154; 6 Webster's Works, 329, 335; 11 Edinb. Rev. 9; 35 Foreign Quar. Rev. 211.

[2] 5 Pet. *468; 6 Watts, 209; 55 Pa. 90; 73 id. 418; 15 W. N. C. 262.

[3] 7 W. & S. 248.

[4] 2 Watts, 421; 19 Pa. 223; 29 id. 106; 34 id. 332.

[5] 9 Watts, 156; 4 Pa. 214; 6 id. 210; 38 id. 40; 56 id. 374.

[6] Gault v. Dussault, 4 Can. Leg. News, 321 (1881); 3 id. 258.

[1] State v. Hallock, 16 Nev. 385 (1882), Leonard, C. J.

[2] L. se-curus, free from anxiety.

[3] Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. *660 (1834), M'Lean, J.

[4] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8.

[5] Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St. 401 (1870).

[6] Foot v. Webb, 59 Barb. 52 (1866).

[7] Boston v. Chesapeake, &c. R. Co., 76 Va. 181 (1882).

[8] Favorite v. Stidham, 84 Ind. 495 (1882).

(3) Individual safety. See Personal Security (2).

Securities. Written assurances for the return or payment of money; evidences of indebtedness.

In popular acceptation, includes bills of exchange, promissory notes, and bonds for the payment of money.[1]

Collateral security. A security side by side with, or in addition to, other security as the primary or principal obligation, or additional to the debtor's own engagement. Thus, when one man covenants with another, and enters into a bond to perform the covenant, the bond is the collateral security.[2] A bond accompanying a mortgage is another example. Such security is frequently termed the "collateral," and the plural "collaterals" is in general use.

A separate obligation, attached to another contract to guarantee its performance; also, a transfer of property, or of another contract, to insure the performance of the principal engagement.[3]

The transfer establishes a privity of contract which invests the creditor with ownership of the securities for the purposes of dominion over the debt assigned.[4]

The creditor must use due diligence to collect a promissory note left with him as collateral security, or suffer the loss of the amount of it.[5] He should give notice of his intention to sell the security, after default of payment, and also of the time and place of sale, in the absence of a contract to sell ex mero motu.[6] But he is not bound to apply the collateral before enforcing his direct remedy against the debtor.[7]

The collateral may be redelivered for collection by the debtor as trustee for the pledgee.[8]

It may be regarded as settled in commercial jurisprudence — there being no statutory regulation to the contrary — that where negotiable paper is received in payment of an antecedent debt; or where it is transferred by indorsement as collateral security for a debt created, or a purchase made, at the time of the transfer; or the transfer is to secure a debt, not due, under an agreement expressed or to be clearly implied from the circumstances that the collection of the principal debt is to be postponed or delayed until the collateral matured; or where time is agreed to be given and is actually given upon a debt overdue, in consideration of the transfer of negotiable paper as collateral security therefor; or where the transferred note takes the place of other paper previously pledged as collateral for a debt, either at the time such debt was contracted or before it became due,— in each case the holder who takes the transferred paper before its maturity, and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defense thereto, is held to have received it in the due course of business, and becomes a holder for value, entitled to enforce payment, without regard to any equity or defense which exists between parties to the paper. . . But there is a conflict of authority where the note is transferred before maturity as collateral security merely, without other circumstances, for a debt previously created. Abundant authority sustains the position that if such paper be so indorsed that the holder becomes a party to the instrument, although the transfer is without express agreement by the creditor for indulgence, that transfer is not an improper use of the paper, and is as much in the usual course of commercial business as is its transfer in payment of such debt. In either case the bona fide holder is unaffected by equities or defenses between the prior parties of which he had no notice.[1]

The doctrine as to an antecedent debt does not apply to an instrument conveying property as security in consideration only of pre-existing indebtedness.[2]

The decided weight of authority is that antecedent indebtedness constitutes ample consideration for a new contract.[3]

Counter-security. Security given to a person who has become surety for another.

The condition is that if he who first became surety shall suffer expense or loss, the person accommodated will indemnify him.

Marshal securities. See MARSHAL, 2.

Personal security. (1) Evidence of indebtedness which binds the personalty of the debtor; choses in action or other personal estate pledged to the performance of a contract. Opposed, real security: an obligation in the nature of a lien on land.

(2) Security of the person; right of personal security: consisting in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, limbs, body, health, and reputation,[4] qq. v. See also LIBERTY, 1; RIGHT, 2.

[1] Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 139-40 (1862).

[2] Chambersburg Ins. Co. v. Smith, 11 Pa. 127 (1849), Coulter, J.; Shoemaker v. Nat. Mechanics' Bank, 2 Abb. U. S. 423 (1869).

[3] [Lochrane v. Solomen, 28 Ga. 292 (1868).

[4] Hanna v. Holton, 78 Pa. 334 (1875).

[5] Semple Manuf. Co. v. Detwiler, 30 Kan. 398-99 (1883), cases.

[6] Davis v. Funk, 39 Pa. 250 (1861); Loomis v. Stave, 72 Ill. 628 (1874); 2 Kent, 581-83; Story, Bailm. § 310.

[7] Lewis v. United States, 92 U. S. 623 (1875), cases.

[8] White v. Platt, 5 Denio, 269 (1848); Clark v. Iselin, 21 Wall. 368 (1874).

[1] Brooklyn City & Newton R. Co. v. Nat. Bank of the Republic of New York, 102 U. S. 25-28 (1880), cases, Harlan, J. Clifford and Bradley, JJ., filed concurring opinions; Miller and Field, JJ., dissented.

[2] People's Saving Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 564-67 (1887), cases.

[3] Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Col. 610 (1886), cases.

[4] [1 Bl. Com. 129; Wabash, &c. R. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 379 (1883).

Public security. The safety or protection of the community. See POLICE, 2.

Public securities. Evidences of indebtedness on the part of the people of a State or of the United States.

May mean securities issued under legislative sanction in furtherance of works deemed promotive of the interests of the public.[1]

Railroad bonds are not "public securities," within the ordinary meaning of those terms.[2] See DEBT, Public.

See generally AVAILABLE; BOND; DEPOSIT, 2; OBLIGATION, 4; TAX, 2.

SECUS. L. Otherwise; to the contrary effect.

SED. L. But.

Sed quære. But examine. Sed vide. But see. Expressions which direct attention to a case or authority supporting a doctrine contrary to that laid down. See QUÆRE.

SEDGE FLAT. A tract of land below high-water mark.[3] See MEADOW.

SEDITION.[4] Conduct tending toward treason, but wanting an overt act; attempts made, by meetings or speeches, or by publications, to disturb the tranquillity of the state, which do not amount to treason.[5] Called seditious conspiracies and libels.

A seditious libel tends to excite disaffection with the government, and thus induce a revolutionary spirit.[6]

The act of Congress of July 14, 1798, was called the "sedition law," because its object was to prevent political disturbances. It was limited to a short duration, and expired by limitation; its constitutionality was questioned, but never passed upon by the courts.[7]

See SEARCH-WARRANT.

SEDUCE.[8] "Seduce" and "entice" are often used indifferently in the old, and sometimes in the later, books. A journeyman was said to be seduced when enticed away from his employer's service.[9]

Although a general term, having a variety of meanings according to the subject to which it is applied, when referring to the conduct of a man toward a female is universally understood to mean: an enticement of her on his part to the surrender of her chastity, by means of some art, influence, promise or deception calculated to accomplish that object, and to include yielding of her person to him.[1]

Seduction. The use of some influence, promise, art, or other means on the part of a man by which he induces a woman to surrender her chastity and virtue to his embraces.[2]

While now a crime in most of the States, at common law was not so. An injured husband had an action for criminal "conversation;" but a parent or master had no standing in court unless the female as daughter or domestic owed him service, and, in consequence of the seduction, she was in some degree less able to assist in housewifery work; or, unless there was a trespass upon property. The law, while punishing even with death acts of violence against women, left her chastity exposed to the artifices of the seducer.[3]

An action for seduction grows out of the loss of service in the relation of master and servant. Some service, however trivial, must be shown to have been done and to have been due from the female to the plaintiff.[4]

The consent of a minor daughter is no defense to an action by the father; and he should be allowed compensation for his mental suffering as well as for the loss of services, etc.[5]

But the parent cannot recover damages when, with his knowledge, the defendant and his daughter slept together according to the custom known as "bundling."[6]

The age of consent, in at least twenty States, until recently, was ten years. It has been raised to fourteen in Connecticut, Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Vermont; to fifteen in Nebraska; to sixteen in Michigan, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania; and to eighteen in Colorado and Kansas. In England, since 1886, it has been sixteen.[7]

See CHASTE; CONVERSATION, 1; DEBAUCH; FORNICATION.

---

[1] Hall v. Commissioners, 10 Allen, 102 (1865); 46 Vt. 786.

[2] Hale v. Commissioners, 137 Mass. 114 (1884). As to watering railroad securities, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 696-704 (1887), cases.

[3] Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 424 (1867).

[4] L. seditio, a going apart, dissension.

[5] Abbott's Law Dict.

[6] Cooley, Const. Lim. 426-30; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 377; Queen v. O'Brien, 4 Cr. Law Mag. 424 (1883); Whart. St. Tr. 22.

[7] 2 Story, Const. §§ 1292-94.

[8] L. se-ducere, to lead aside, astray.

[9] Bigelow, Torts, 139. See Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & B. 216 (1853); Bigelow, Ld. Cas. Torts, 306, 325-28, cases.

[1] State v. Bierce, 27 Conn. 320 (1858), Storrs, C. J.

[2] [Croghan v. State, 22 Wis. 445 (1868), Cole, J. See also 40 Ark. 482; 77 Ind. 334; 38 Iowa, 224; 106 Mass. 488; 11 Mich. 278; 17 Pa. 126; 100 id. 28.

[3] 3 Christian, Bl. Com. *140, 142; 4 Bl. Com. 212; 1 B. & Ald. 722.

[4] Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 282 (1873); Kinney v. Laughenour, 89 N. C. 367-68 (1883); Wood, Master & S. § 245; Martin v. Payne, 9 Johns. 387 (1812): Bigelow, Ld. Cas. Torts, 286, 290-305, cases.

[5] Barbour v. Stephenson, 32 F. R. 66 (1887).

[6] Hollis v. Wells, 3 Clark, *30 (Pa., 1845).

[7] See generally 3 Cr. Law Mag. 331-47 (1889), cases.

SEED. See GRAIN.

Millet seed, not in its natural state, but having the outer hull removed and used for making soup and for bird food, was found by a jury not to be seed within the meaning of the tariff laws.[1]

SEISIN.[2] The possession of land under a claim, either express or implied by law, of an estate amounting at least to a freehold.[3] See SEISINA.

Ordinarily, a possession in fact by one having or claiming a freehold interest.

This is known as a seisin in deed; the right of immediate possession is a seisin in law. There may be a constructive seisin, which is the equivalent of a seisin in deed.[4]

Originally, seisin was the completion of the feudal investiture; it now means ownership. A "covenant of seisin" and a "covenant of right to convey" are synonymous.[5]

In Missouri, a covenant of seisin is a covenant of indemnity, and runs with the land to the extent that if the covenantee takes any estate, however defeasible, or if possession accompanies the deed, though no title passes, the covenant enures to the subsequent grantee who sustains the loss.[6] See COVENANT, Real.

Livery of seisin. Pure feudal investiture or delivery of corporal possession of land or of a tenement.[7]

Held absolutely necessary to complete a donation.[8] See DELIVERY, 1; DEMESNE.

Disseisin. Ouster or deprivation of a freehold. A wrongful putting of him out of that is seised of a freehold,—is in actual possession.[9]

Where one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of lands: being a deprivation of that actual seisin, or corporal freehold of the lands, which the tenant before enjoyed.[9]

Disseisor. A person who intrudes and ejects another from his possession of an estate of freehold. Disseisee. The freeholder so ejected.

The law will not construe a possession to be tortious unless from necessity. It considers every possession lawful, the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful Where, then, a naked possession is in proof, unaccompanied by evidence as to its origin, it will be deemed lawful, and co-extensive with the right set up by the party. If he claims only a limited estate, the law will not, contrary to his intentions, enlarge it to a fee. And it is only when he is proved to be in by disseisin that the law will construe it to be a disseisin of the fee, and abridge him of his right to qualify his wrong.[1]

Purchase of the rights of a disseisee (called "buying title") was not permitted at common law: one could not sell a quarrel or lawsuit; and was made an offense by 36 Henry VIII (1545), c. 9. It is generally disallowed in the United States, but not so in Illinois, Missouri, and Pennsylvania.[2] See CHAMPERTY.

SEISINA. L. Actual possession of an estate of freehold; seisin, q. v.

Habere facias seisinam. That you cause to obtain seisin. The emphatic words of a writ of execution by which the sheriff delivered possession of a freehold to the demandant.[3]

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. Actual seisin formerly made a person the root or stock from which inheritance by blood was derived.[4]

Discarded by 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1834), c. 106; and believed to be so in all the States. Descent is now traced from the last "purchaser"—the person last entitled who did not himself inherit.[5] See DESCENT.

SEIZURE. Taking a thing into possession, or custody of the law; caption of property by authority of law; manucaption.

Examples are: taking property under an alleged forfeiture, or by virtue of a right to hold it under an attachment, or to sell it on an execution.

1. The manner, and whether actual or constructive, depends upon the nature of the thing. As applied to objects capable of manual delivery, the term means "caption:" the physical taking into custody.[6] Compare ARREST, 2 (1).

The modes vary; land cannot be seized as a movable may be; actual manucaption cannot be taken of stocks and credits.

---

[1] Nordlinger v. Robertson, 33 F. R. 941 (1887).

[2] F. seisin, to make to possess or sit upon. See Webster's Dict. "Seize."

[3] Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 59 (1835), Richardson, C. J.

[4] Jenkins v. Fahey, 73 N. Y. 362 (1878); Hart v. Dean, 2 MacAr. 63 (1875).

[5] Cook v. Hammond, 4 Mas. 488 (1827), Story, J.; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 361 (1872); Ford v. Garner, 49 Ala. 603 (1873), Peters, C. J.; Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch, 242-49 (1814); 4 Kent, 386.

[6] Allen v. Kennedy, 91 Mo. 329 (1886), cases.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 311; 1 Washb. R. P. 32-35.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 169.

[9] [3 Bl. Com. 195; 5 Pet. *439; 5 Conn. 257, 518; 58 Ill. 389; 56 Me. 268; 6 Metc. 537, 444; 14 Pick. 294; 2 Wend. 166.

[1] Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 107 (1822), Story, J.

[2] 3 Washb. R. P. 329. As to seisin of chattels, see 1 Law Quar. Rev. 324 (1885); the mystery of seisin, 2 id. 481-96 (1886).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 412; 2 id. 359.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 209.

[5] See 4 Kent, 388-89; 1 Steph. Com. 367.

[6] Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall. 106 (1869), Field, J.

Seizures are actual or constructive. Taking part of the goods in a house in the name of the whole may be a good seizure of all. An assertion of control, with a present power and intent to execute it, may be sufficient.[1]

To constitute a valid seizure, so as to entitle the party to the proceeds of a forfeiture, there must be an open, visible possession claimed, and authority exercised under the seizure. A seizure, once voluntarily abandoned, loses its validity.[2] See PROCURE; SUFFER.

Section 3895, Rev. St., does not constitute a postmaster a seizing or detaining officer of suspected letters. It merely directs the disposition to be made of letters "seized or detained for violation of law" under other statutory provisions.[3] See POST-OFFICE; SEARCH.

2. In marine insurance, the taking of a ship by the act of public authority for a violation of the laws of trade, or some rule or regulation instituted as a matter of municipal police, or in consequence of an existing state of war.[4]

See ADMIRALTY; MARSHAL, 1 (2); PROSECUTION, Malicious; RES, 2.

SELECT. See COUNCIL, 2.

Selectman. In several States, management of the public affairs of towns is intrusted to boards of officers called selectmen.

SELF. See DEFENSE, 1; SUI.

SELL. See SALE; RETAIL. Compare DISCOUNT.

SEMBLE.[5] It seems; seemingly. In written decisions, and in notes to cases, indicates that the statement following is an expression of opinion as to what a decision on the particular point would be. Compare DICTUM, 2.

SEMI PROBATIO. See OATH, Suppletory.

SEMINARY. Has no definite legal meaning; is used in a general way to designate institutions for the promotion of learning.[6]

In a statute exempting from taxation "public school-houses, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning," was held to denote any and every place of training or institution of learning not already specifically named, and therefore inclusive of a parish school.[7] See SCHOOL.

SEMPER. L. Always; ever.

Semper paratus. Always ready. In common-law practice, a plea that the defendant always has been and still is ready to do what is demanded of him.

Following a tender by the debtor and a refusal by the creditor, will at least save the costs of the suit to the defendant. In French, tout temps prist.[1] See TENDER, 2.

SEN. In New York reports, senator.

SENATE. See CONGRESS; HOUSE, 2.

SENILE. See DEMENTIA.

SENIOR. In military usage, "senior" may refer to the person longest in continuous service. Webster defines the adjective as meaning "more advanced in life; older in office or dignity; prior in age or rank; elder;" and the noun as "one older in office, or whose entrance upon an office was anterior to that of another:" which may mean, not one who entered upon his present term of office first, but one who has been longest in the office. On the other hand, the word may refer to the person, as, a judge, who has served longest under his present commission.[2] See JUDGE, Senior; JUNIOR; NAME, 1.

SENSE. Meaning; import. See SENSUS.

In the construction (q. v.) of instruments and documents of the various kinds, words are said to be used in their "common," "popular," "ordinary" sense, or else in an "artificial" or "technical" sense.

Insensible. Unintelligible.

A pleading which omits a material word may be "insensible," and therefore bad.[3]

SENSUS. L. Sense; signification.

Malus sensus. The bad sense. In malo sensu, or malo sensu. In the less favorable acceptation.

Mitior sensus. The milder meaning. In mitiori sensu. In the more favorable acceptation.

The old rule was that language alleged to be defamatory was to be interpreted in the sense most favorable to the defendant. In modern practice, that meaning is attributed which the words ordinarily bear under the circumstances in which they were used.[4] See LIBEL, 5; SLANDER.

SENTENCE.[5] A final determination by a criminal court, or (but less frequently) by a court of admiralty.

[1] Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 296 (1870), Strong, J.
[2] The Segunda, 10 Wheat. 325 (1825), Story, J.
[3] Lotteries, 16 Op. Att-Gen. 5 (1878).
[4] Greene v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co., 9 Allen, 222 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.
[5] F. sembler, to seem: L. similis, like.
[6] Chegaray v. Mayor of New York, 13 N. Y. 229 (1855).
[7] County of Hennepin v. Grace, 27 Minn. 506 (1881).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 303.
[2] State ex rel. Belford v. Hueston, 44 Ohio St. 6 (1886), Spear, J.
[3] Steph. Plead. 414.
[4] Reeves v. Bowden, 97 N. C. 29 (1887).
[5] F. sentence: L. sententia, way of thinking.

"Judgment" is generally used of a decision in a civil, common-law tribunal; and "decree" of a decision in a court of equity or admiralty.

"Sentence," or judgment, appropriately denotes the action of a court of criminal jurisdiction in declaring the consequences to a convict of the fact of guilt, confessed or ascertained by verdict.[1]

Where, upon the trial of an indictment containing several counts charging distinct misdemeanors, identical in character, a general verdict of guilty is rendered, or a verdict of guilty upon two or more specified counts, the court has no power to impose a sentence or cumulative sentences exceeding in the aggregate what is prescribed as the maximum punishment for an offense of the character charged.[2]

In such case the court has power to pass separate sentences exceeding in the aggregate the maxim punishment for the offense. . . One judgment only can be passed upon a single indictment, and each count is, in effect, a distinct indictment.[3]

It is not error to make one term of imprisonment commence when another ends. There is no other mode by which a delinquent may be sentenced on several convictions.[4]

The judgment having been executed so as to be a full satisfaction of one of the alternative penalties of the law, the power of the court as to that offense is at an end.[5] And so, also, as to other offenses as to which sentence was not imposed.[6]

In the absence of express power, the court cannot at a subsequent term alter its sentence.[7]

A court has power to remand a convict for sentence for as long a period as may be deemed advantageous to the ends of justice, and in the meantime to receive evidence as to what would be an appropriate sentence, where the court has discretion.[7]

Power to suspend sentence is inherent in the court. It is indispensable to the interests of public justice; it rests upon grounds of public policy, or of legal necessity.[8]

The inquiry whether a convicted person has anything to say "why sentence should not be passed" upon him, is supposed to have originated at a time when prisoners were not allowed counsel, in order to enable them to move in arrest of judgment any matter sufficient to stay sentence.

See further CONVICTION; ERROR, 2 (3); JUDGMENT; PARDON; REPRIEVE.

SEPARATE.[1] 1, v. To part company. See JURY, p. 585, c. 2.

2, adj. Severed or severable; set apart; distinct; existing, belonging to, enjoyed, maintained or maintainable by or for one person or class; entirely one's own, individual; independent, exclusive. Opposed, common, joint, firm, partnership.

As, separate — acknowledgment, action, assets, claim, covenant, debt, earnings, estate, examination, maintenance, property, school, trial, qq. v. See also PARTNERSHIP.

The separate estate of a married woman is that alone of which she has the exclusive control, independent of her husband, and the proceeds of which she may dispose of as she pleases.[2]

At common law, separate property in a wife is an estate, held in its use and title, for the benefit and advantage of the wife.[3]

"Separate" is the most apt word for creating a trust for the benefit of a married woman; it will of itself exclude the marital rights of her husband.[4]

In the absence of "sole and separate" or equivalent words, or of a provision that excludes the marital rights of the husband, or that gives the wife powers inconsistent with the disabilities of coverture, the rights of the husband will attach.[5] See SOLE.

The English doctrine is that the wife's capacity to dispose of property settled to her separate use is absolute, unless she is expressly restrained by the terms of the settlement; and, generally speaking, the property is bound by her contracts. In the United States the decisions as to her power over her property, and its liability for her engagements, have not been uniform; but the tendency of legislation is to enlarge her power. The American doctrine is that she has no powers except such as are given by the trust instrument, and that these must be strictly pursued. This is the law in Illinois, Mississippi, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina (since 1811), Tennessee, and, formerly, in Maryland. The English doctrine has been followed in Alabama, California, Connecticut,

---

[1] [Commonwealth v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 325 (1872), Gray, J.

[2] People ex rel. Tweed v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 560 (1875).

[3] Castro ("Tichborne") v. The Queen, 43 L. T. 78 (1880). Affirmed in the House of Lords, 44 id. 350 (1881), cases. See also Re Donnelly, 30 Kan. 494 (1883); Commonwealth v. Foster, 122 Mass. 318-19 (1877); Exp. Bryan, 76 Mo. 253 (1882); Re Haynes, 30 F. R. 769 (1887).

[4] Kite v. Commonwealth, 11 Metc. 585 (1846).

[5] Exp. Lange, 18 Wall. 176 (1873).

[6] Commonwealth v. Foster, 122 Mass. 319 (1877), cases.

[7] Commonwealth v. Mayloy, 57 Pa. 291 (1868); State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 116 (1881).

[8] People v. Mueller, 4 Cr. Law Mag. 735-39 (1883), cases,— Cir. Ct. Cook Co., Ill. See also State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 114 (1881), cases; Commonwealth v. Dowdican's Bail, 115 Mass. 136 (1874).

---

[1] L. se-parare, to set or put apart.

[2] Petty v. Malier, 14 B. Mon. 247 (1853), Simpson, J.; Bowen v. Sebree, 2 Bush, 115 (1867); Alston v. Rowles, 18 Fla. 126 (1870).

[3] George v. Ransom, 15 Cal. 324 (1860); Dow v. Gould, 31 id. 637 (1867).

[4] Lewis v. Mathews, L. R., 2 Eq. 179 (1866); Massey v. Rowen, L. R., 4 H. L. C. 294 (1869); Christian v. Gunn, 80 Va. 372 (1885); Tullett v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 1, 33 (1838).

[5] Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52 (1881), cases; Kutcher v. Williams, 40 N. J. E. 438 (1885); 133 Mass. 178.

Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, North Carolina, New Jersey, New York, Virginia, and Vermont, and in the Federal courts. The tendency is toward placing her legal and equitable separate estates, as far as regards her power over them, upon the same footing.[1]

See ANTICIPATION, 1; HUSBAND; JOINDER; JOINT; RIGHT, 2, In own.

Separation. Cessation of cohabitation between husband and wife, by agreement.[2]

Divorce from bed and board is sometimes called a "separation," leaving the word "divorce" to refer to the dissolution of a valid marriage.[3]

The agreement is usually evidenced by articles or a deed of separation.

"Voluntary separation," or such as is mutual between the parties, is used in contradistinction to such as is "by sentence of court," that is, "separation a mensa et thoro," or "judicial separation."

In some States, the expression "judicial separation" has given way to "divorce a vinculo;" in others, it is still in use, being granted for any cause not sufficient to authorize an absolute divorce.

Such separation works no change in the relation of the parties, toward each other or toward third persons, except in authorizing them to live apart until they may choose to live together again. A reconciliation, of its own force, annuls a sentence of separation.

When the terms upon which a voluntary separation takes place are not unreasonable, particularly as regards the rights and claims of the wife, the contract is likely to be upheld as valid.[4]

There are serious objections to voluntary separations between married persons. Nevertheless, contracts for the separate maintenance of the wife, through the intervention of a trustee, have received the sanction of the courts for so long a period that the law must be considered as settled. His covenant to support her, where the consideration is apparent, will be enforced, if it appears that the deed was not made in contemplation of a future possible separation, but in respect to one which was to occur immediately, or for the continuance of one already taken place; especially so, if the separation was occasioned by the misconduct of the husband, and the provision is reasonable, and not more than the court would have decreed as alimony.[5] See DESERTION, 1; DIVORCE; HUSBAND.

SEPULCHER. The place where the body of a human being is buried; a grave.

Violation of sepulcher is the misdemeanor of willfully and unlawfully opening a tomb, vault, or grave, and clandestinely removing the corpse therefrom. The offense has been extended to include the mutilation of gravestones, monuments, fences, shrubbery, etc., in places of interment See BURIAL.

SEQUESTRATION.[2] Separating or setting aside a thing in controversy from the possession of the contending parties.

1. Gathering and taking care of the fruits and profits of a vacant benefice for the benefit of the next incumbent.[3]

Also, an execution against the profits of a benefice to collect the same for the plaintiff till the full sum is realized.[4]

2. A remedy, in equity practice, by which property is taken possession of by a court in order to enforce obedience to a decree, or to preserve it in its integrity during the time that a controversy respecting it is pending.

Issued at common law, when a defendant eluded service of process, and after a commission of rebellion was returned non est inventus. It seizes all personalty, and the profits of realty, and detains them subject to order.[5]

It issues either as a mesne process, on the defendant's not appearing or not answering, after the whole process of contempt has been spent against him; or as a judicial process, in pursuance of a decree, and to enforce the specific performance of it.[6]

Where, by the election of a widow to take under the law rather than under her husband's will, a benefit accrues to some legatees and a loss is entailed upon others, the income or annual value of the benefits intended for the widow and the first class of legatees may be sequestered for the purpose of securing compensation to the latter class. As, when, from such election, a residuary legatee is disappointed and a general pecuniary legatee is benefited.[7]

---

[1] See 1 Ld. Cas. Eq. 741; Schoul. H. & W. III; Perry, Trusts, § 655; Hill, Trustees, 657; Bisp. Eq. IV; 17 Ala. 805; 26 id. 213; 23 Cal. 554; 20 Conn. 175; 4 Fla. 418; 12 Ga. 200; 32 id. 604; 41 id. 147; 128 U. S. 236; 23 Ill. 209; 61 id. 426; 10 B. Mon. 320; 16 id. 482, and statute since; 5 Md. 219; 11 id. 492; 26 id. 5; 12 Minn. 430; 4 N. J. E. 512; 28 id. 529; 17 Johns. 548; 18 N. Y. 265; 22 id. 456; 14 Ohio St. 519; 1 Rawle, 231; 4 Pa. 93; 65 id. 430; 86 id. 380; 2 R. I. 355; 3 Desseu. 417; 1 Hill, Ch. 228; 1 Strob. E. 27; 8 Humph. 159; 1 Cold. 461; 2 Leigh, 183; 37 Vt. 78; 13 Blatch. 268; 9 Wall. 119. On executions against her separate estate, see 21 Cent. Law J. 44-49 (1885), cases; as to wife dealing with it, 24 Am. Law Reg. 670-78 (1885), cases.

[2] 2 Bishop, Mar. & D. § 225.

[3] See 1 Bishop, Mar. & D. §§ 550-58, cases.

[1] Walker v. Walker, 9 Wall. 750-51 (1869), cases, Davis, J.

[2] L. sequestrare, to lay aside, surrender: sequester, a mediator, trustee.

[3] See 2 Arch. Pract. 966.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 418.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 444.]

[6] Herman, Executions, § 41.

[7] McReynolds v. Counts, 9 Gratt. 342, 344 (1852); Firth v. Denny, 2 Allen, 468 (1861); Van Dyke's Appeal, 60 Pa. 381 (1869); Sandoe's Appeal, 65 id. 314 (1870); Gallagher's Appeal, 87 id. 200 (1878); Young's Appeal, 108 id. 17 (1885).

Sequestrator. The person who is placed in charge of sequestered property.

The same general rules apply to him as to a receiver,[1] q. v.

SERGEANT or SERJEANT.[2] In England, the title of several officers.

Sergeant-at-arms. An executive officer to a legislative body, and to a court of chancery, one of whose duties is to arrest for contempt.[3]

Sergeant-at-law. A barrister of the common-law courts, of high standing.

These sergeants seem to have derived their title from the old knights templars, and have continued as a separate fraternity from an early period. Until 1834 they had the exclusive privilege of practicing in the courts of common pleas.[4]

A species of advocate or counsel, but not qualified to execute the full office of advocate till of sixteen years standing; at which time he may be called to the state and degree of serjeant—servientes ad legem. The first king's counsel under this degree was Sir Francis Bacon.[5]

The degree was deprived of its peculiar advantage, audience in the common pleas, by 9 and 10 Vict. (1846), c. 54, which extends to all barristers the privileges of sergeants. In 1839 the court of common pleas had decided that the crown, by a mere order, could not open that court to the bar at large, and thereby deprive the sergeants of the enjoyment of an immemorial office.[6]

Sergeantry. See FEUDAL SYSTEM.

SERIATIM. L. In a series: severally; successively: as, the judges delivered opinions seriatim; questions to be answered seriatim.

SERIES. See BOND.

SERIOUS. "Serious bodily harm" is synonymous with "great bodily harm."[7]

SERVANT. 1. An assistant about the work of a household; a menial; a domestic; a family servant.

A person hired for wages to work as the employer may direct.[8]

A hireling who makes a part of a man's family, employed for money to assist in the economy of the family or in matters connected with it; a person who, from the nature of the station, must render servile offices within the walls of a house.[1]

One who is engaged not merely in doing work or services for another, but who is in his service, usually upon or about the premises or property of his employer, subject to his direction and control therein, and liable to be dismissed.[2]

A "domestic" servant resides in the house with the master he serves; he is not one whose employment is outside, as, a farm-hand who sleeps and eats outside though he performs chores within the house.[3] See FAMILY.

2. A person employed to assist another in any vocation, but without the powers of an "agent."

3. An employee, in the broadest sense, and inclusive of "agent."

Co-servants; fellow-servants. Such servants as are employed in the same or a common service and subject to the same general control.[4]

Master and servant. Describes the relation of employer and employee.

The relation which arises out of the contract of hiring; the relation in private life, founded in convenience, whereby a man calls in the assistance of others, when his own skill and labor is not sufficient to answer the cares incumbent upon him.[6]

Servants are menials or domestics, apprentices, laborers; also, stewards, factors, and bailiffs.[6]

The duty of a father to educate and maintain his minor son entitles him to the son's services, and creates the relation of master and servant between them.[7]

The master acquires a property in his servant's labor, and may therefore recover damages for any detaining or beating, whereby he loses the labor.[8]

All servants, except apprentices, become entitled to wages according to agreement or custom. What notice, if any, shall be given of an intention to quit a service depends upon the nature of the service. If a servant leaves before the end of the term agreed upon, without good cause, or is dismissed for just cause, he loses his right to wages for the whole period served.[9]

The hiring of clerks, if general, is construed to be

---

[1] 2 Story, Eq. § 833. See Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Sears, 20 Blatch. 29 (1881); Tompkins v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 15 F. R. 11 (1 82).

[2] Sär-, or sör-. M. E. sergeant: F. sergant, serjant: L. serviens, an officer.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 444.]

[4] Brown's Law Dict.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 26–27.

[6] The Sergeants' Case, 27 E. C. L. 338 (1839); Ø. 360 (1840).

[7] Lawlor v. People, 74 Ill. 230–31 (1874).

[8] Morgan v. Bowman, 22 Mo. 548 (1856), Leonard, J.

[1] [Boniface v. Scott, 3 S. & R. *354 (1817), Gibson, J. See also Lockett v. Pittman, 72 Ga. 817 (1884).

[2] Heygood v. State, 59 Ala. 51 (1877), Manning, J. See also Lang v. Simmons, 64 Wis. 529–30 (1885); 49 Barb. 298; 3 Robt. 315; 25 Ohio St. 168, 6 Q. B. D. 530, 673; 9 Hare, 551; 1 M. & K. 560.

[3] Waterhouse v. State, 21 Tex. Ap. 663 (1886).

[4] Gravelle v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 11 F. R. 873 (1882); 59 Ala. 249; 57 Cal. 81; 32 Md. 418.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 423. See 22 Popular Science Monthly, 803 (April, 1883).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 425–28.

[7] Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Willis, 83 Ky. 60 (1885).

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 142.

[9] 2 Kent, 258. As to discharge for drunkenness, see Bass Furnace Co. v. Glasscock, 82 Cal. 454 (1886), cases.

for a year at a time; not so, however, as to a commercial traveler, paid by commissions.[1] See SERVICE, 1, Constructive.

For all acts done by a servant in obedience to the express order of the master, or in execution of the master's business, within the scope of his employment, and for an act in any sense warranted by the express or implied authority conferred upon him, considering the nature of the service required, the instruction given, and the circumstances under which the act is done, the master is responsible. For acts not done within these conditions the servant is responsible.[2]

A servant assumes all risks from negligent acts of his fellows and the ordinary risks incident to the employment, but not the risks of the master's negligence.

One who contracts with a competent person to do certain work, giving him entire charge, is not responsible for his negligence or that of his subordinates.

See further AGENT; CONTRACTOR; EMPLOYEE; LABORER; NEGLIGENCE; SERVICE, 1.

SERVICE. 1. The duty which a servant or employee owes to his employer. See SERVANT.

Common service. Employment of the same general kind; the same general service.

Constructive service. The theory that, when a person is wrongfully discharged before the end of the period for which his services were engaged, his continued readiness to render the services should be viewed as equivalent to performance.

The weight of authority is against the soundness of the doctrine, and in favor of the view that the employee has no action for the worth of his services as if in fact rendered, but that he may have an action for damages for the breach of the contract, the measure being the loss occasioned by such breach; and, further, that there can be but one recovery upon the claim.[3]

"Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or in behalf of the government of the United States."[4]

That act is in the nature of a direction by the government to its agents that eight hours are to be deemed a day's labor. It is but a contract between it and the laborers that eight hours are a day's work. The act does not prevent an agreement by which labor may be more or less than eight hours, nor prescribe the amount of compensation for that or any other number of hours of labor.[5]

[1] Beeston v. Collyer, 13 E. C. L. 517 (1827); Nayler v. Yearsley, 2 F. & F. 41 (1860); Clay Commercial Tel. Co. v. Root, 17 W. N. C. 200 (1886).

[2] Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 47 (1877), cases.

[3] James v. Allen County, 44 Ohio St. 231–36 (1886), cases pro and con. See also, same and other cases, 25 Am. Law Reg. 529–31 (1886).

[4] Act 25 June, 1868; R. S. § 3738.

[5] United States v. Martin, 94 U. S. 402–4 (1876), Hunt, J.; 10 Ct. Cl. 276.

2. Useful work, including skilled or professional exertion: as, the services of counsel, of an expert, of a trustee; professional, skilled, official services. See PERFORMANCE, Specific.

3. Duty performed or to be performed in a public office; employment under government: as, the public service, the civil service, secret services.

The civil service act of January 16, 1883 (known as the Pendleton bill), designed to regulate and improve the civil service of the government of the United States, provides as follows:

That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three persons, not more than two of whom shall be adherents of the same party, as Civil Service Commissioners, and said three commissioners shall constitute the United States Civil Service Commission. Said commissioners shall hold no other official place under the United States.

The President may remove any commissioner; and any vacancy in the position of commissioner shall be so filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as to conform to said conditions for the first selection of commissioners.

The commissioners shall each receive a salary of three thousand five hundred dollars a year. And each of said commissioners shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his duty as a commissioner.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commissioners:

FIRST. To aid the President, as he may request, in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in the departments and offices to which any such rule may relate to aid, in all proper ways, in carrying said rules, and any modifications thereof, into effect.

SECOND. And, among other things, said rules shall provide and declare, as nearly as the conditions of good administration will warrant, as follows:

First, for open, competitive examinations for testing the fitness of applicants for the public service now classified or to be classified hereunder. Such examinations shall be practical in their character, and so far as may be shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity and fitness of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the service into which they seek to be appointed.

Second, that all the offices, places, and employments so arranged or to be arranged in classes shall be filled by selections according to grade from among those graded highest as the results of such competitive examinations.

Third, appointments to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. Every application for an examination shall contain, among other things, a statement, under oath, setting forth his or her [the applicant's] actual bona fide residence at the time of making the application, as well as how long he or she has been a resident of such place.

Fourth, there shall be a period of probation before any absolute appointment or employment aforesaid.

Fifth, that no person in the public service is for that reason under any obligations to contribute to any political fund, or to render any political service, and that he will not be removed or otherwise prejudiced for refusing to do so.

Sixth, that no person in said service has any right to use his official authority or influence to coerce the political action of any person or body.

Seventh, there shall be non-competitive examinations in all proper cases before the commission, when competent persons do not compete, after notice has been given of the existence of the vacancy, under such rules as may be prescribed by the commissioners as to the manner of giving notice.

Eighth, that notice shall be given in writing by the appointing power to said commission of the persons selected for appointment or employment from among those who have been examined, of the place of residence of such persons, of the rejection of any such persons after probation, of transfers, resignations, and removals, and of the date thereof, and a record of the same shall be kept by said commission. And any necessary exceptions from said eight fundamental provisions of the rules shall be set forth in connection with such rules, and the reasons therefor shall be stated in the annual reports of the commission.

THIRD. Said commission shall, subject to the rules that may be made by the President, make regulations for, and have control of, such examinations, and, through its members or the examiners, it shall supervise and preserve the records of the same; and said commission shall keep minutes of its own proceedings.

FOURTH. Said commission may make investigations concerning the facts, and may report upon all matters touching the enforcement and effects of said rules and regulations, and concerning the action of any examiner or board of examiners hereinafter provided for, and its own subordinates, and those in the public service, in respect to the execution of this act.

FIFTH. Said commission shall make an annual report to the President for transmission to Congress, showing its own action, the rules and regulations and exceptions thereto in force, the practical effects thereof, and any suggestions it may approve for the more effectual accomplishment of the purposes of this act.

Sec. 3. That said commission is authorized to employ a chief examiner, a part of whose duty it shall be, under its direction, to act with the examining boards, so far as practicable, whether at Washington or elsewhere, and to secure accuracy, uniformity, and justice in all their proceedings, which shall be at all times open to him. The chief examiner shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of three thousand dollars a year and he shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his duty. The commission shall have a secretary, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of one thousand six hundred dollars per annum. It may, when necessary, employ a stenographer, and a messenger, who shall be paid, when employed, the former at the rate of one thousand six hundred dollars a year, and the latter at the rate of six hundred dollars a year. The commission shall, at Washington, and in one or more places in each State and Territory where examinations are to take place, designate and select a suitable number of persons, not less than three, in the official service of the United States, residing in said State or Territory, after consulting the head of the department or office in which such persons serve, to be members of boards of examiners, and may at any time substitute any other person in said service living in such State or Territory in the place of any one so selected. Such boards of examiners shall be so located as to make it reasonably convenient and inexpensive for applicants to attend before them; and where there are persons to be examined in any State or Territory, examinations shall be held therein at least twice in each year. It shall be the duty of the collector, postmaster, and other officers of the United States, at any place outside of the District of Columbia where examinations are directed by the President or by such board to be held, to allow the reasonable use of the public buildings for holding such examinations, and in all proper ways to facilitate the same.

Sec. 4. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the interior to cause suitable and convenient rooms and accommodations to be assigned or provided, and to be furnished, heated, and lighted, at the city of Washington, for carrying on the work of said commission and said examinations, and to cause the necessary stationery and other articles to be supplied, and the necessary printing to be done for said commission.

Sec. 5. That any said commissioner, examiner, copyist, or messenger, or any person in the public service who shall willfully and corruptly, by himself or in co-operation with one or more other persons, defeat, deceive, or obstruct any person in respect of his or her right of examination according to any such rules or regulations, or who shall willfully, corruptly, and falsely mark, grade, estimate, or report upon the examination or proper standing of any person examined hereunder, or aid in so doing, or who shall willfully and corruptly make any false representations concerning the same or concerning the person examined, or who shall willfully and corruptly furnish to any person any special or secret information for the purpose of either improving or injuring the prospects or chances of any person so examined, or to be examined, being appointed, employed, or promoted, shall for each such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not less than ten days, nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 6. That within sixty days after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the secretary of the treasury, in as near conformity as may be to the classification of certain clerks now existing under § 168 of the Revised Statutes, to arrange in classes the several clerks and persons employed by the collector, naval officer, surveyor, and appraisers, or either of them, or being in the public service, at their respective offices in each customs district where the whole number of said clerks and persons shall be altogether as many as fifty. And thereafter, from time to time, on direction of the President, said secretary shall make the like classification or arrangement of clerks and persons so employed, in connection with any said office or offices, in any other customs district. And, upon like request, and for the purposes of this act, said secretary shall arrange in one or more of said classes, or of existing classes, any other clerks, agents, or persons employed under his department in any said district not now classified; and every such arrangement and classification upon being made shall be reported to the President.

Second. Within said sixty days it shall be the duty of the postmaster-general, in general conformity to said one hundred and sixty-third section, to separately arrange in classes the several clerks and persons employed, or in the public service, at each post-office, or under any postmaster of the United States, where the whole number of said clerks and persons shall together amount to as many as fifty. And thereafter from time to time, on direction of the President, it shall be the duty of the postmaster-general to arrange in like classes the clerks and persons so employed in the postal service in connection with any other post-office; and every such arrangement and classification upon being made shall be reported to the President.

Third. That from time to time said secretary, the postmaster-general, and each of the heads of departments mentioned in § 158 of the Revised Statutes, and each head of an office, shall, on the direction of the President, and for facilitating the execution of this act, respectively revise any then existing classification or arrangement of those in their respective departments and offices, and shall, for the purposes of the examination herein provided for, include in one or more of such classes, so far as practicable, subordinate places, clerks, and officers in the public service pertaining to their respective departments not before classified for examination.

Sec. 7. That after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act no officer or clerk shall be appointed, and no person shall be employed to enter or be promoted in either of the said classes now existing, or that may be arranged hereunder pursuant to said rules, until he has passed an examination, or is shown to be specially exempted from such examination in conformity herewith. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to take from those honorably discharged from the military or naval service any preference conferred by § 1754 of the Revised Statutes, nor to take from the President any authority not inconsistent with this act conferred by § 1753 of said Statutes; nor shall any officer not in the executive branch of the government, or any person merely employed as a laborer or workman, be required to be classified hereunder; nor, unless by direction of the President, shall any person who has been nominated for confirmation by the Senate be required to be classified or to pass an examination.

Sec. 8. That no person habitually using intoxicating beverages to excess shall be appointed to, or retained in, any office, appointment, or employment to which the provisions of this act are applicable.

Sec. 9. That whenever there are already two or more members of a family in the public service in the grades covered by this act, no other member of such family shall be eligible to appointment to any of said grades.

Sec. 10. That no recommendation of any person who shall apply for office or place under the provisions of this act which may be given by any Senator or Representative, except as to the character or residence of the applicant, shall be received or considered by any person concerned in making any examination or appointment under this act.

Sec. 11. That no Senator, or Representative, or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employee of either of said houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employee of any department, branch or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employee of the United States, or any department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the treasury of the United States.

Sec. 12. That no person shall, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any officer or employee of the United States mentioned in this act, or in any navy-yard, fort, or arsenal, solicit in any manner whatever, or receive any contribution of money or any other thing of value for any political purpose whatever.

Sec. 13. No officer or employee of the United States mentioned in this act shall discharge, or promote, or degrade, or in [any] manner change the official rank or compensation of any other officer or employee, or promise or threaten so to do, for giving or withholding or neglecting to make any contribution of money or other valuable thing for any political purpose.

Sec. 14. That no officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or Representative, or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever.

Sec. 15. That any person who shall be guilty of violating any provision of the four foregoing sections shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or by such fine and imprisonment both, in the discretion of the court.[1]

[1] 22 St. L. 403. See also R. S. §§ 1753-54.

In May 1887, President Cleveland approved rules which apply the competitive principle to promotions.

No officer, clerk, or employee of the United States government employ shall at any time solicit contributions from other officers, clerks or employees in the government service for a gift or present to those in a superior official position; nor shall any such officials or clerical superiors receive any gift or present offered or presented to them as a contribution from persons in government employ receiving a less salary than themselves; nor shall any officer or clerk make any donation as a gift or present to any official superior. Every person who violates this section shall be summarily discharged from the government employ.[1]

All executive officers or employees of the United States not appointed by the President and the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer or employee of the government, any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and every offender shall be at once discharged from service, and be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction, be fined in a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars.[2]

That act, designed to promote efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties, and to maintain proper discipline in the public service, forbids contribution between the persons named. All such enactments are plainly constitutional. The act does not apply to persons out of the employment of the United States; only to those in its service, against exactions through fear of personal loss. Otherwise, the government could be made to pay the expenses of keeping a party in power by increasing the compensation of employees.[3]

4. In the law of easements, a real service is the right of doing something or having a privilege in one man's estate for the advantage and convenience of the owner of another estate.[4] A servitude, q. v.

5. In feudal law, the duty which a tenant owed to his lord. See FEUD.

6. In practice, the execution of an order, writ, or other process; also, the communication of a notice required by law: as, the service of an attachment, a rule, subpœna, summons.

Whence "to accept service," "service accepted:" certifying to notice or information received. Opposed, non-service.

Service of a writ. Serving the defendant with a copy of the process, and showing him the original if he desires it.[5]

Service of a paper. The judicial delivery or communication of papers; execution of process. The delivery or communication of a pleading, notice, or other paper in a suit, to the opposite party, so as to charge him with the receipt of it, and subject him to its legal effect.[1]

Personal service. Delivery of an original writ, notice, or other paper, or a copy thereof with oral information as to the contents, to the person who is to be affected by the service.

When a statute requires service on a person it means personal service, unless some other mode is indicated.[2]

Service by attorney or upon attorney. Notification given to a party's counsel, personally or at his office, as prescribed by statute or rule of court.

Service by publication, q. v. By publishing the writ or notice as an advertisement in a designated newspaper, in cases where the party to be served is either a non-resident or else is evading service, and, perhaps, also, by mailing a copy of the paper to his last known address.

An affidavit for an order for service by this method must contain evidence tending to prove that the defendant could not be found in the State after due diligence.[3]

Substituted service. Any mode, provided by statute, instead of personal service, where that is impracticable and service by publication inappropriate.

In English practice, service upon another than he upon whom it is primarily to be made, in cases where the latter is impossible.[4]

Sometimes refers to service by publication.

Substituted service, by publication, is not allowed in the Federal courts in a purely personal action; only where some claim or lien is to be enforced.[5]

Substituted service, where property is once brought under control of the court, may be in any manner sufficient to inform a party of the object of the proceedings. The property is assumed to be in the possession of its owner, in person or by agent, and seizure will inform him of the nature of the proceedings. It suffices in all proceedings in rem. But where the object is to determine personal rights and obligations, that is, where the suit is merely in personam, such constructive service is ineffectual for any purpose.

---

[1] Act 1 Feb. 1870: R. S. § 1784.

[2] Act 15 Aug. 1876, § 1: 1 Sup. R. S. 245.

[3] Exp. Curtis, 106 U. S. 371 (1882), Waite, C. J.; Louthan v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 202-4 (1884).

[4] [Karmuller v. Krotz, 18 Iowa, 357 (1865), Dillon, J.; Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 409 (1851).

[5] Goggs v. Huntingtower, 12 M. & W. *504 (1844), Alderson, B.; 16 How. Pr. 152.

[1] Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 198 (1875).

[2] Rathburn v. Acker, 18 Barb. 375 (1854).

[3] McDonald v. Cooper, 32 F. R. 748-50 (1887), cases.

[4] See Lush, Prac. 867.

[5] R. S. § 738; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 439 (1880).

Thus, as process from a tribunal of one State cannot run into another State and summon a non-resident to respond to proceedings, so publication of process, in that case, cannot create a greater obligation to appear.[1]

See further RETURN, 2.

SERVIENT. See EASEMENT.

SERVITUDE. 1. The condition of a person who is bound to the performance of services.

Involuntary servitude. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."[2]

There is no reference here to servitudes attached to property. That a personal servitude was meant is proved by the use of the word "involuntary," which can only be applied to human beings. The exception as a punishment gives an idea of the class meant.

"Servitude" is of larger meaning than "slavery," as the latter is popularly understood. The purpose was to forbid all shades and conditions of African slavery.[3]

The committee on the details of the original Constitution used "servitude" as referring to an engagement to labor for a term of years. The committee on revision unanimously substituted "service" for it, servitude being thought to express the condition of slaves, service an obligation of free persons.[4] See SLAVERY.

The act of June 23, 1874, protects persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude.[5] Under this act it was decided that an intention in a defendant in bringing a child to the United States to employ him as a beggar, or as a street musician, for his own profit, if such employment would be injurious to the morals of the child and inconsistent with its proper care and education, according to its condition, is an intention to hold to involuntary servitude, although the child (in Italy) consented to the employment and did not afterward dissent.[6] See KIDNAPING; PERSUADE.

Penal servitude. In England, a punishment introduced by 16 and 17 Vict. (1853), c. 99, in lieu of transportation. A convict subjected to this punishment may be kept in any place of confinement in the kingdom, or in any river, port, or harbor thereof, or in some place in her majesty's dominions beyond the seas, appointed therefor by order in council, according as the secretary of the state may direct; and may be kept at hard labor, and be otherwise dealt with, as was a person transported. Statute 20 and 21 Vict. (1857), c. 3, abolished transportation; and 27 and 28 Vict. (1864), c. 47, sec. 2, forbids sentence to penal servitude for a shorter period than five years.[1] See TICKET, Of leave.

2. Metaphorically, a charge upon one estate for the benefit of another. An incorporeal right, derived from the civil law, and answering to the easement (q. v.) of the common law.

An example is the right to fasten joists in another's wall.[2] See SUPPORT, 1.

The Roman law admitted and provided for rights in the property of others, jura in re aliena, or, as they were usually called, jura in re. The oldest of these rights were called servitutes, servitudes, subjections — the subjection of one estate to another, the liability of one estate to be used for the advantage of another. The relation was not affected by a change of owners. Among the most important were servitudes of way, drive, road, water-draining. These were known as the "praedial" servitudes. There were also "personal" servitudes, in which the right of use vested in a particular individual, and terminated with his life. The most important of this class was the usufructus (q. v.) the right to use and enjoy some property of another.[3]

SESSION.[4] A sitting; an actual sitting: a term of a court or of a legislative body.

1. The time during which a court sits for the transaction of business.[5]

The whole term, which is construed as but one day, and that the first day of the term.[6] See TERM, 4.

Quarter sessions, or court of quarter sessions of the peace. A court held in each county, every quarter of a year, for the trial of the smaller misdemeanors, especially of offenses relating to the highways, bastards, the settlement and provision of the poor, vagrants, apprentices, game, etc.[7]

Some of these offenses are proceeded upon by indictment, and others in a summary way by motion and order thereon. Capital felonies are remitted to the court of oyer and terminer.[7]

Sessions, court of. In the State of New York, a court composed of the county judge, and two associates, all elected, and styled justices of the sessions. The jurisdiction extends to the trial of misdemeanors — all criminal matters formerly cognizable by the court of general sessions of the peace of the county.

---

[1] Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 727 (1877). Field, J.

[2] Constitution, Amd. XIII. Ratified Dec. 18, 1865.

[3] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 69 (1872), Miller, J. See also Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 21 (1883).

[4] 2 Bancroft, Const. 211.

[5] 18 St. L. 251: 1 Sup. R. S. 103.

[6] United States v. Aucarola, 17 Blatch. 423, 430-31 (1880).

[1] See 4 Steph. Com. 449-52; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 482, 480-88.

[2] 3 Kent, 435; Nellis v. Munson, 24 Hun, 576 (1881).

[3] Hadley, Rom. Law, 182, 183, 190.

[4] L. sessio: sedere, to sit.

[5] See People v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 64 Ill. 96 (1872); MacNaughton v. South Pac. C. R. Co., 19 F. R. 882 (1884).

[6] Dew v. The Judges, 3 Hen. & M. 27 (Va., 1808).

[7] [4 Bl. Com. 271-73; 3 Steph. Com. 43-44.

In the county of New York, a court of special sessions,— a court held by any three police justices, with exclusive jurisdiction over misdemeanors, unless the accused elects, on his examination before the committing magistrate, to be tried in the court of general sessions, which is held by a single judge — the recorder of the county, the city judge, or the judge of general sessions,— and has jurisdiction over all crimes, capital or otherwise, including review of proceedings in special sessions.[1]

2. A meeting of the members of a legislative body as such.

Sessions of Congress. "The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day."[2]

Each Congress ordinarily holds two sessions, known as the first session and the second session. Extra or special sessions may be called by the President in pursuance of the provision "he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them."[3]

The requirements that all Representatives and one-third of the Senators shall be chosen every second year and that Congress shall assemble at least once each year limit "a Congress" to two years continuance, of two regular meetings for purposes of legislation, and suggested calling the first and second years the "first" and the "second" sessions respectively.[4] See STATUTES AT LARGE.

Sessions of the State legislatures. The constitutions of the States provide for these, as regular and extra sessions. In Rhode Island, a regular session is held twice a year; in Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and South Carolina, once a year; in the other States and in the Territories, generally, once every two years — a biennial session, with adjourned sessions sometimes held in the intervening year, except in Pennsylvania, where such sessions are prohibited.

Extra sessions, on extraordinary occasions, may be convened by the governor. While the length of a session varies in the different States, from forty to ninety days, in most of the States it is sixty days, with provision for continuance a certain number of days upon concurrence of three-fifths or two-thirds of the members of both houses.[1]

SET. 1, n. All of several duplicates considered together: as, a set of exchange, q. v.

A lease of mines has been called a "mining set."

2, v. In conjunction with other words, has received judicial interpretation:

Set aside. To annul, vacate, make void;[2] "to defeat the effect or operation of:"[3] as, to set aside — an award, a verdict, report, judgment, writ, the service of a writ, a fraudulent conveyance, qq. v. Compare CANCEL.

Set down. To place upon the appropriate docket or record: as, to set down a case for argument or hearing.

Set on fire. A statute allowing damages against one who shall set on fire the property of another does not apply to an accidental firing by a locomotive engine, without negligence.[4]

Set out. To aver, allege: as, to set out a writing in its own words; to set out in an indictment the facts which constitute the elements of the offense charged.[5]

Set up. To propose as legally sufficient, by way of explanation or exoneration: as, to set up a defense or a matter in defense.

SET-OFF. 1. In law, when the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand, but, on the other, sets up a demand of his own, to counterbalance that of the plaintiff, either in whole or in part.[6]

The subtraction or taking away of one demand from another opposite or cross-demand, so as to extinguish the smaller demand and reduce the greater by the amount of the less, or, if the opposite demands are equal, to extinguish both.[7]

Formerly, sometimes called "stoppage," because the amount sought to be set off was stopped or deducted from the cross-demand.[7]

Obtains where the defendant has a debt against the plaintiff arising out of a transaction independent of the contract on which the plaintiff sues, and desires to avail him-

[1] See N. Y. Crim. Code; 1 Abbott's Law Dict. 317; People v. Powel, 14 Abb. Pr. 93 (1862).

[2] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 4, cl. 2.

[3] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3.

[4] The first and second sessions of the Ist Congress were held at the City of New York, March 4 to Sept. 29, 1789, and Jan. 4 to Aug. 12, 1790; and the third session at the City of Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1790, to March 3, 1791. The sessions of the IId to the Vth Congress were held at Philadephia, also the first session of the VIth, closing May 14, 1800. The second session of the VIth began at the City of Washington, Nov. 17, 1800.

[1] See Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, § 270.

[2] State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171 (1875).

[3] Swalley v. People, 116 Ill. 250 (1886).

[4] Missouri, &c. R. Co. v. Davidson, 14 Kan. 351 (1875).

[5] See United States v. Watkins, 3 Cranch, C. C. 477 (1829).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 304.

[7] Byles, Bills, 365.

self of that debt in the existing suit, either to reduce the plaintiff's recovery or to defeat it altogether; and, as the case may be, to recover a judgment in his own favor for the balance.[1]

The defendant's case must be made out in the same manner as if he sought to maintain a separate action upon it.[2]

At common law, the right was not recognized: the defendant had his cross-action. To obviate this circuity of action, 2 Geo. II (1729), c. 22, § 13, allowed mutual debts to be set one against the other, and the matter to be given in evidence under the general issue, or to be pleaded in bar, notice of the particular debt being given beforehand. And 8 Geo. II (1735), c. 24, § 4, enacted that said § 13 should apply to all mutual debts of a different nature except debts accruing as a penalty, which were to be pleaded in bar.[3]

The substance of those statutes has been re-enacted in the States generally, and the principle extended.

Antecedently, equity, under peculiar circumstances of right, would compel a plaintiff to submit to a set-off; but, to obtain this relief, the defendant had to file a separate bill in equity.

When the government is plaintiff, no set-off will be allowed, unless Congress has authorized it.[4]

"Offset" has been used, to a limited extent, for set-off.[5]

2. In equity, that right which exists between two persons, each of whom, under an independent contract, owes an ascertained amount to the other, to set off their mutual debts by way of deduction, so that in an action brought for the larger debt, the residue only, after such deduction, shall be recovered.[6]

The mere existence of cross-demands will not be sufficient to justify a set-off in equity. Indeed, a set-off is there ordinarily allowed only when the party seeking the benefit of it can show some equitable ground for being protected against his adversary's demand.[7]

But set-off is not allowed of a joint debt as against a separate debt, nor vice versa; that is, more generally stated, it is not allowed of debts accruing in different rights — except under special circumstances, as, where fraud has been practiced.[8]

Since the statutes of set-off of mutual debts and credits, courts of equity have generally followed the course adopted in the construction of the statutes by courts of law, and have applied the doctrine to equitable debts. They have rarely, if ever, broken in upon the decisions at law, unless some other equity intervened, which justified them in granting relief beyond the rules of law. On the other hand, courts of law sometimes set off equitable against legal debts.[1]

In Pennsylvania, set-off is permitted of claims which are not mutual, but this is not in accordance with the general rules of equity.[2] In Kansas, set-off is allowed for unliquidated damages.[3]

Compare DEFALCATION, 1; RECOUPMENT.

SETTLE. 1. To set or determine the form of; as, to settle — a bill of exceptions, interrogatories, an issue. See under EXCEPTION, 4.

2. (1) To reside; to gain a right to maintenance: as, for a pauper to be settled or to acquire a settlement in a particular township or county.[4] See BELONG.

The right is obtained by birth, parentage, marriage, continued residence, payment of taxes, exercise of a public office, hiring and service, serving an apprenticeship, etc., as local statutes provide.[5]

(2) To establish one's self upon; to occupy, reside upon: as, to settle land.

Settler. Within the meaning of pre-emption laws, one who actually resides upon the land in question.[6] See further PRE-EMPTION, 2.

3. Sometimes, to pay; sometimes, to account together and strike a balance by computation; at other times, to adjust matters in controversy, and strike a balance by agreement.[7]

"Settle" implies the mutual adjustment of accounts, and an agreement upon the balance.[8]

An admission that a money demand has been "settled" is evidence tending to show payment.[9]

The settlement of an account between parties, resulting in a fixed balance, takes the case out of the [1] Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 401 (1863), Sanford, J.

[2] Gorham v. Bulkley, 49 Conn. 91 (1881). See also Cook v. Mills, 5 Allen, 37 (1862), Bigelow, C. J.; 54 Miss. 563; 49 Mo. 572.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1431–33; Adams, Eq. 222; Chitty, Contr. 1267; United States v. Eckford, 6 Wall. 488 (1867).

[4] United States v. Robeson, 9 Pet. *324 (1835); 9 Cranch, 236; 39 Cal. 389.

[5] Mandeville v. Union Bank, 9 Cranch, 11 (1815).

[6] Adams, Equity, 222.

[7] 2 Story, Eq. § 1436; Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 586 (1883).

[8] 2 Story, Eq. § 1437; Gray v. Rollo, 18 Wall. 632 (1873); Blake v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 493 (1847).

[1] Greene v. Darling, 5 Mas. 212 (1828), Story, J.; Howe v. Sheppard, 2 Sumn. 414–16 (1836); Gordon v. Lewis, ib. 633–34 (1837); Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. 447 (1854); Wulschner v. Sells, 87 Ind. 75 (1882), cases.

[2] Gray v. Rollo, 18 Wall. 632 (1873).

[3] St. Louis, &c. R. Co. v. Chenault, 36 Kan. 55 (1886), cases.

[4] See Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 300 (1841), Whitman, C. J.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 363–64; 132 Mass. 499.

[6] See Peterson v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 27 Minn. 222 (1880); 3 Op. Att.-Gen. 126; 3 id. 182; 16 id. 88, 183; 1 Oreg. 166.

[7] See Moore v. Hyman, 13 Ired. L. 274 (1852).

[8] Baxter v. State, 9 Wis. *44 (1859); 8 Wend. 600; 4 Denio, 235; 9 Barb. 371.

[9] Applegate v. Baxley, 98 Ind. 149 (1883).

statute of limitations, without an express promise to pay the balance.[1]

A settled account is only prima facie evidence of correctness. It may be impeached by proof of unfairness or mistake, in law or in fact. If it be confined to particular items it concludes nothing in relation to other items not stated.[2]

Where an account is settled by the parties with all the facts equally known to both, and no unfairness is practiced, the adjustment is conclusive.[3]

Settle up. Referring to the estate of a decedent or an insolvent, means to collect the assets, pay the debts, and distribute the balance, if any, according to law. Compare ADMINISTER, 4.

Final settlement. May refer to the payment of the final balance of cash ascertained to be in the hands of an executor or administrator, so as to leave nothing to be done to complete the execution of his trust.[4]

Partial settlement. When founded on regular proceedings is only prima facie evidence of its own correctness.[5]

A "final settlement" is a conclusive determination of all the past administration.[6]

When an executor or administrator presents his account, purporting to charge himself with everything received and to credit himself with everything disbursed, and showing a balance for distribution, and the court, after due notice to parties interested, approves and allows the account, that is a "final settlement" though there is outlying property which may yet come into the accountant's possession for administration. As to the subject-matter on which it operates the settlement is final.[6]

4. To transfer property, real or personal, for the benefit of another.

Whence settlor or settler, and settlement: ante-nuptial, post-nuptial, or marriage settlement, articles or deed of settlement, lawful and fraudulent settlements.

Deed of settlement. An instrument by which the use of property is settled upon one or more persons (the beneficiaries), with directions as to the mode and time of holding, enjoying, and disposing of the corpus of the property.

The beneficiary is the settlor's wife or intended wife, wife and children, near relative, or creditors.

A promise to settle property on an intended wife is void, under the Statute of Frauds; and, made after marriage, is void for want of a consideration.

The old doctrine that if the settlor is in debt his deed is void has been generally abandoned. The rule now is that prior indebtedness is presumptive, not conclusive, proof of fraud. Where there is no fraud there will be no infirmity in the deed. Every case depends upon its own circumstances. The vital question is the good faith of the transaction: there is no other test.[1]

The right of a husband to settle a portion of his property upon his wife, and thus provide against the vicissitudes of fortune, when this can be done without impairing existing claims of creditors, is indisputable. Its exercise tends to the future comfort of wife and children. The right arises from the absolute power he possesses over his own property, by which he can make any disposition which does not interfere with the existing rights of others. The transfer, moreover, may be directly to her: the technical reasons of the common law for conveying through a trustee having long since ceased to exist. A power reserved to revoke or to appoint to other uses does not impair the efficacy of the transfer; nor will such power pass to an assignee in bankruptcy.[2]

An ante-nuptial settlement, though made with a fraudulent design on the part of the husband, should not be annulled without the clearest proof of the wife's participation in the intended fraud; for, upon its annulment, there can follow no dissolution of the marriage,—the consideration of the settlement.[3] See CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent.

A post-nuptial settlement will be presumed to have been "voluntary." The burden of proof that there was a valid consideration rests upon one claiming a benefit under such settlement.[4]

Equity of settlement. The right of a wife to have a portion of her equitable estate settled upon herself and her children. Termed the "wife's equity" and her "equity to a settlement."

By marriage, at common law, the husband acquires an absolute property in all his wife's personalty which is capable of immediate possession, and a qualified right in such property as he may, by legal measures, reduce to possession. But, inasmuch as he cannot reach his interest in her equitable rights (as, for example, in an estate vested in a trustee), which interest is even less than a qualified one, without application to a court of equity, in which she must join, that court will not aid him, unless he agrees to "do equity,"

[1] Johns v. Lantz, 63 Pa. 326 (1869); McClelland v. West, 70 id. 187 (1871).

[2] Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. 256 (1826).

[3] Hager v. Thomson, 1 Black. 93 (1861).

[4] Dufour v. Dufour, 28 Ind. 424 (1867), Frazer, C. J.; Stevens v. Tucker, 87 id. 114-15 (1882), cases.

[5] Sims v. Waters, 65 Ala. 445 (1880).

[6] Pomeroy v. Mills, 37 N. J. E. 580 (1883), cases, Dixon, J.

[1] Lloyd v. Fulton, 91 U. S. 485 (1875), cases, Swayne, Justice.

[2] Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 227-30 (1879), cases, Field, J.; Clark v. Killian, 103 id. 766 (1880); Wallace v. Penfield, 106 id. 260 (1882): 59 Mo. 158; Moore v. Page, 111 U. S. 118 (1884), cases; Bean v. Patterson, 122 id. 499 (1887), cases.

[3] Prewit v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 25, 24 (1880), cases.

[4] Perry v. Ruby, 81 Va. 317, 326 (1886), cases; Adams v. Edgerton, 48 Ark. 494 (1886), cases.

by making suitable provision for her out of that or other property in the event of her surviving him. The rule applies, also, as against his assignee; and, also, when she as plaintiff seeks like relief against her husband or his assignee.[1]

Strict settlement. A settlement by which land was limited to a parent for life, and, after his death, to his son, sons, or children in tail, with one or more trustees interposed to preserve contingent remainders.[2]

In substance, a limitation first to the use of the settlor himself until a contemplated marriage took place, then to the use of the husband and wife for life, with remainder to the use of their first or other sons in tail; this being as far as a limitation could go without the intervention of a trustee.[3] See PERPETUITY.

The object was to put it out of the power of parents to deal with the corpus of an estate to the prejudice of their issue.

SEVER. To separate, divide, disjoin.

Co-defendants may either all plead jointly the same defense, or each may plead a separate defense. The latter course is termed "severing" and "severance."

Severable. Susceptible of separation; admitting of distinct division, or of independent existence or maintenance: as, a severable — consideration, covenant, contract, q. v.

As to severing crops from realty, see CROP; EMBLEMENT; FRUCTUS.

Several. (1) Separated, separate; distinct; individual: as, a several — action, covenant or obligation, fishery, plea. Opposed, joint, q. v. Compare SEPARATE, 2; DIVERS.

A testator directed that his property should be divided after the "several" deaths of persons named. Held, that several was not synonymous with "respective;" that the division was to be postponed until all the persons had died.[4]

(2) More than two, but not many.

In a case in Alabama, six to seven hundred was held included in "several" hundred dollars — the recommended limit of credit to a retailer of groceries.[5]

May mean all, as, "my several children," used in a will.[6]

Severalty. He that holds lands in severalty, or is sole occupant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest, during his estate therein. . . Also termed a "several tenancy."[7]

Unless expressly declared otherwise, all estates are supposed to be of this sort.[1] Compare ENTIRETY. See PARTITION.

SEWER. Will apply to an underground structure for conducting the water of a natural stream, as well as to a structure used exclusively for surface flow.[2]

The duties of municipal authorities, in adopting a general plan of drainage, and determining when and where sewers shall be built, of what size and at what level, are of a quasi judicial nature, involving the exercise of deliberate judgment and large discretion, depending upon considerations affecting the public health and general convenience throughout an extensive territory. The exercise of such judgment and discretion, in the selection and adoption of the general plan or system of drainage, is not subject to revision by a court or jury in a private action for not properly draining a sufficient lot of land. But the construction and repair of sewers, according to the general plan so adopted, are simply ministerial duties; and for negligence in so constructing a sewer, or keeping it in repair, the municipality which has constructed and owns the sewer may be sued by a person whose property is thereby injured.[3]

See DRAINAGE; NEGLIGENCE; REPAIR, 2.

SEX. See CITIZEN; DURESS; INFLUENCE.

SHALL. As against the government, in a statute construed "may," unless a contrary intention is manifest.[4]

Construed "must" in order to sustain or enforce an existing right; but need not be, to create a new right.[5] See further MAY.

Whether "shall" imports futurity depends upon the subject-matter and the context.[6]

Shall be allowed. An appeal from the circuit court "shall be allowed" — R. S. § 692. This means must be allowed, when asked for by one in a position to demand it.[7]

Shall be given. An act provided that certain lands "shall be given to Major-General Nathaniel Greene." Held, those are words of absolute donation, and convey a present right.[8]

Shall be lawful. The meaning of "it shall be lawful," in a statute, depends upon the subject-mat-

[1] See 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1404-8, 1402; 3 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 1114 et seq.

[2] [1 Steph. Com. 332.

[3] [2 Washb. R. P. 358.

[4] Colton v. Fox, 67 N. Y. 352 (1876).

[5] Einstein v. Marshall, 58 Ala. 153, 164 (1877).

[6] Outcalt v. Outcalt, 42 N. J. E. 501 (1886).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 179.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 179.

[2] Bennett v. New Bedford, 110 Mass. 436 (1872).

[3] Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 20-27 (1886), Gray, J., citing, as "the leading authorities," Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 51-53 (1862), Hoar, J.; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489, 495-500 (1865), Denio, C. J. See also cases collected, 118 U. S. 20; Gilluly v. City of Madison, 63 Wis. 522 (1885); Attorney-General v. Northampton, 148 Mass. 589 (1887), cases; Hitchins v. Frostburg, Md. Ct. Ap. (1887), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 123, 411 (1887), cases.

[4] Cairo, &c. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 170 (1877).

[5] West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Foley, 94 U. S. 103 (1876).

[6] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 304 (1876).

[7] Exp. Jordan, 94 U. S. 251 (1876).

[8] Rutherford v. Greene's Heirs, 2 Wheat. 196 (1817).

ter. Prima facie the words import a discretion, but they may be imperative.[1]

Shall go. That property held in common between husband and wife "shall go" to the survivor means, shall vest in that person.[2]

Shall not. May mean "cannot;" as, in the provision that if a vessel departs without a permit or clearance, and shall not be seized, the owner shall pay a penalty.[3]

SHAM. Referring to an answer, defense, or plea,—good in form, but false in fact; false and not pleaded in good faith; so clearly false as not to present a substantial issue; interposed for delay.

The distinguishing characteristic of a sham answer is falsity, and, to warrant applying the severe rule of striking it off the record, the matter must be shown to be unquestionably false and not pleaded in good faith.[4]

Compare FRIVOLOUS.

SHARE. A portion of anything: as, a share of stock, a share in an estate, a widow's share.[5] See PART, 1; PORTION.

A share in a corporation is a right to participate in the profits, or in a final distribution of the corporate property pro rata.[6]

There is no such thing in rerum natura as a "railway share." It is not such a thing as you can see or touch. It is a term which indicates simply a right to participate in the profits of a particular joint-stock undertaking. And the word stock may have the same meaning, as, in a will.[7]

Share and share alike. Equal in quantity and quality; in equal proportions.

In a will, "equally to be divided," "share and share alike," "respectively between and among" certain persons, will generally create a tenancy in common.[8]

Shareholder. See STOCK, 3.

SHARP. In the sense of authorizing summary action, is used (perhaps locally) of a clause in a mortgage or bond, or of the whole instrument itself, which provides for proceedings in execution immediately upon default made in complying with any condition; as, for non-payment of money — principal, interest, premium of insurance, or taxes.

SHAVE. To buy any security for money, at a discount; also, to obtain the property of another by oppression and extortion.

To charge a man with using money for "shaving" is not, within those senses, libelous per se.[1]

SHED. See ARSON.

SHEEP. See ANIMAL.

If a ewe is stolen, it must be so called in the indictment; a lamb must be called a lamb; "sheep" is proper only where the animal is a wether.[2] See WORRY.

Sheep-shears. See CUTLERY.

SHEET. See BOOK, 1; FOLIO.

SHELLEY'S CASE. The limitation of a remainder, in fee-simple or fee-tail, to a person who already has an estate of freehold, is governed by a rule of law known as the rule in Shelley's Case — a case decided in 1581 by Lord Edward Coke, and in which the rule was first authoritatively declared, and clearly stated. The rule, as there expressed, is: "When the ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs in fee or in tail, 'the heirs' are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase."[3]

That is to say, when a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to "the heirs" entitles the ancestor to the whole estate.[4]

The word "heirs," or "heirs of the body," creates a remainder in fee, or in tail, which the law, to prevent an abeyance, vests in the ancestor, who is "tenant for life," and by the conjunction of the two estates he becomes "tenant in fee" or "in tail;" and, whether he takes the freehold by express limitation, by resulting use, or by implication of law, the subsequent remain-

[1] The Queen v. Bishop of Oxford, L. R., 4 Q. B. 257, 553 (1879); 1 Barn. & C. *85; 2 Dowl. & R. 172.

[2] Broad v. Broad, 40 Cal. 496 (1871).

[3] Parker v. United States, 2 Wash. 363 (1809).

[4] See People v. McCumber, 18 N. Y. 321 (1858); Thompson v. Erie R. Co., 45 id. 471 (1871); Wayland v. Tysen, ib. 282–88 (1871); Littlejohn v. Greeley, 22 How. Pr. 345 (1861); Gostorfs v. Taafe, 18 Cal. 388 (1861); Glenn v. Brush, 3 Col. 31 (1876); Greenbaum v. Turrill, 57 Cal. 287 (1881); Baker v. Foster, 29 Minn. 167 (1882); 1 Chitty, Pl. 541.

[5] See 49 Ill. 110; 13 N. Y. 98; 27 Barb. 371; 46 Tex. 15; 23 Wis. 655.

[6] Field v. Pierce, 102 Mass. 261 (1869), Ames, J.; People v. Commissioners, 40 Barb. 353 (1863).

[7] Morrice v. Aylmer, L. R., 10 Ch. Ap. 155 (1874).

[8] Gilpin v. Hollingsworth, 3 Md. 194 (1852); Provencher's Estate, 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 69 (1870).

[1] [Stone v. Cooper, 2 Denio, 300 (1845), Walworth, Ch.

[2] Rex v. Birket, 19 E. C. L. 482 (1830).

[3] Shelley's Case, 1 Coke, *104. See Webster v. Cooper, 14 How. 500 (1852).

[4] Preston, Estates, 263–419. See also 2 Bl. Com. 241.

der to his heirs unites with, and is executed on, his estate for life.[1]

The words "issue of his body" are more flexible than "heirs of his body." The courts more readily interpret the former as synonymous with "children" and a description of persons, than the latter.[2]

The rule is older than Shelley's Case. Some trace its origin to the feudal system, which favored taking by "descent," for thereby the incidents of wardship, marriage, relief, etc., attached, while in "purchase" the taker was relieved from those burdens. Others attribute it to the aversion of the common law to fees in abeyance, a desire to promote the transferability of realty and make it liable for the specialty debts of the ancestor.[3]

The rule, instead of regarding a part of the entire estate as being in the ancestor, and a part in his heirs, considers the entire estate as in him alone; that the intent in creating it was to have it go in a certain line of succession, and, if the first taker died intestate, his heirs should take by descent from him, and not as purchasers under the original limitation. By statutes in some States (as see below), such a limitation is declared to be what it purports to be in terms,— a contingent remainder in the heirs.[3]

Applies alike to legal and equitable estates.[4]

Applies, also, to trust estates where both the life estate and the remainder are of the same character. The legal effect of the union of the two estates does not occur where the life estate is of an equitable character and the remainder is legal, or vice versa. Both estates must be of the same character, whether created by deed or devise.[5]

The rule is that where the ancestor might have taken and been seized, the heir shall inherit.[6]

The rule operates only on the intention (of the devisor) when it has been ascertained, not on the meaning of the words used to express it. . . . It gives the ancestor an estate for life in the first instance, and, by force of the devise to his heirs, general or special, the inheritance also, by conferring the remainder on him, as the stock from which alone they can inherit.[7]

The rule, which was adopted as part of the common law of this country, is said to have been abolished, in whole or in part, in Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire (as to devises), New Jersey (devises), New York, Ohio (devises), Rhode Island (devises), Tennessee, Virginia, and Wisconsin.[8]

See HEIR; ISSUE, 5; PURCHASE, Words of.

[1] 4 Kent, 215.

[2] Daniel v. Whartenby, 17 Wall. 642-44 (1873), cases, Swayne, J.

[3] 2 Washb. R. P. 268.

[4] Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 281 (1866), cases.

[5] Green v. Green, 23 Wall. 489-92 (1874), cases, Hunt, J.

[6] Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 213 (1875): Thornby v. Fleetwood, 1 Stra. 318 (1720).

[7] Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 354 (1850), Gibson, C. J.; Guthrie's Appeal, 37 id. 1, 12-23 (1860), cases, Strong, J.; Millett v. Ford, 109 Ill. 162-63 (1886), cases; Allen v. Croft, ib. 479 (1886), cases.

[8] See Williams, R. P. 249, 4 ed., notes by Rawle; 2 Washb. R. P. 268-76; 2 Kent, 214; Tud. L. C. 482; 10 Conn. 448; 23 Ind. 28; 26 id. 251; 86 id. 418; 99 id. 190; 70 Iowa, 61; 15 B. Mon. 282; 18 id. 329; 7 Metc. 172; 16 Gray, 307; 24 Miss. 366; 59 id. 299; 40 N. H. 500; 1 N. J. L. 525; 40 Barb. 488; 5 R. I. 127, 276, 549; 6 id. 264; 7 id. 145, 383; 13 id. 680, 714; 11 Lea, 656; 21 Tex. 804; 22 id. 547; 16 Pa. 93; 35 id. 117; 45 id. 179; 50 id. 483; 64 id. 15; 70 id. 73, 335, 509; 75 id. 339; 83 id. 242, 377; 86 id. 396; 87 id. 144, 248; 91 id. 30.

SHELLS. See MANUFACTURE.

SHERIFF.[1] An officer who represents the administrative power of a State within one of its counties; an officer who executes the mandates of the courts of record within a county; the chief ministerial officer in a county.

Sheriffalty. The office of sheriff.

Shrievalty is about obsolete.

An officer of great antiquity. In Latin, the vice-comes, the deputy earl, to whom the custody of the shire was committed at the first division of the kingdom into counties. But the earls, in time, by reason of their high employments and attendance on the king's person, not being able to transact the business of the county, were delivered of that burden, reserving to themselves the honor, while the labor was laid upon the sheriff. So that now the sheriff does all the king's business in the county; and, though he is still called the vice-comes, he is entirely independent of the earl; the king by his letters-patent committing the care of the county to the sheriff alone.[2]

He was the immediate officer of the king within the shire; received his commission from the king, and directly represented the sovereign power. In this country his function has been similar, his relation to the sovereign power the same. He is the chief executive officer of the State in his county. In Missouri his office exists by provisions of law and of the constitution. He obeys the mandate of the State in executing writs issued to him by the courts of his own and other counties. He is the State officer whose jurisdiction is ordinarily bounded by his own county.[3]

Originally, the office was held by men of large estate, able to support the retinue of followers which the dignity of the office required, and to answer in damages for neglect of duty. Now, a bond with sureties is given as security for the execution of the duties therein named, all of which are chiefly ministerial.[4]

In England, in his judicial capacity, he formerly held the sheriff's tourn or county court, and performed certain other functions. As king's bailiff, he seized all escheats, forfeitures, waifs, wrecks, estrays, etc.[5]

As conservator of the peace in his bailiwick, he represents the sovereign power: has

[1] Sax. shire, a part sheared off: a division, county; and reeve, a bailiff, officer,— 1 Bl. Com. 116, 117, 339; 56 Pa. 275. See REEVE.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 339, 117.

[3] State ex rel. Beach v. Finn, 4 Mo. Ap. 352-53 (1877).

[4] South v. Maryland, 18 How. 402-3 (1855), cases.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 343; 18 How. 401; Dow v. Humbert, 91 U. S. 300 (1875), cases.

care of the county; may make arrests upon view; may bind to keep the peace; may command the power of the county. In his ministerial capacity, he executes all processes issued from the courts: summons and returns juries; makes arrests upon warrants; and executes judgments and sentences.[1]

The office exists in this country substantially as derived from England,— the details are matters of constitutional or statutory regulation. The sheriff is generally elected by the people of the county, for a term of two or three years. Presiding at inquests is his chief judicial duty; his other duties are ministerial, and generally performed by deputies.

Obedience to all precepts committed to him is the whole of his duty; and hence, if they issue from competent authority, and with legal regularity, and so appear upon their face, he is justified for every action within the scope of his command.[2]

His liability varies with the conditions under which he acts. In some matters he stands as an insurer, warranting the practical perfection of his work. Thus, he is answerable for the escape of a prisoner in execution; he assumes to know the law, and must not, therefore, commit a legal mistake, and he cannot safely keep property seized in execution.[3]

Deputy sheriff. A person selected by a sheriff to assist him in discharging the duties of his office.

An officer coeval with the sheriff himself. The appointment of deputies arose from the impossibility of the sheriff's performing all the duties of his office in person. It was very early decided that the deputy could execute any writ directed to the sheriff by the name of his office, and not by a particular name. A "deputy sheriff" is a general deputy, with powers as extensive as the sheriff can delegate. An "under sheriff" may mean a deputy sheriff.[4]

A general deputy attends to all the ordinary duties of the office. A special deputy represents the sheriff in some special relation, as, in executing a particular writ.

A general deputy executes all processes without special power from the sheriff; in some cases he may delegate authority, in the name of the sheriff, to a special deputy.[5] See DEPUTY.

High sheriff. Imports no more than the word "sheriff;" "high" is pleonastic.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 343; 18 How. 401; Dow v. Humbert, 91 U. S. 300 (1875), cases.

[2] Watson v. Watson, 9 Conn. *146 (1832), Hosmer, C. J. Approved, Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 228 (1881). See also 7 Metc. 259; 10 Cush. 46; 2 Gray, 410; 5 Wend. 170; 24 id. 485; 20 How. 65.

[3] Strout v. Pennell, 74 Me. 262–63 (1882).

[4] Tillotson v. Cheetham, 2 Johns.* 70, 73 (1806), Kent, Chief Justice.

[5] Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 162 (1831); Gradle v. Hoffman, 105 Ill. 153 (1882); Reves v. State, 11 Lea, 126 (1883); Oliver v. Athey, ib. 150 (1883); Marx v. Hanthorn, 30 F. R. 583 (1887).

Sheriff's inquest, or jury. A jury, in number not more than twelve, summoned by a sheriff, to hold an inquest of office or make other inquiry required by local law. See INQUEST.

Sheriff's sale. A sale of property by a sheriff or his deputy, in execution of the mandate of legal process.[1] See SALE, Judicial.

See also ARREST, 2; BAILIWICK; CAPERE; CORONER; COUNTY; ESCAPE, 2; EXIGENCY; MARSHAL, 1 (2); PERISHABLE; RETURN, 2; SERVICE, 6.

SHIFTED. See WARRANT, Land.

SHIFTING. See INHERITANCE; USE, 3.

SHILLING. See POUND, 1.

SHINGLES. See TIMBER.

SHIP. 1. The Anglo-Saxon scipe, state, office, calling, destiny.

As, in citizenship, executorship, guardianship, heirship, judgeship, mastership, membership, partnership, receivership, solicitorship, suretyship, survivorship, township, trusteeship, wardship.

2. The Anglo-Saxon scip, a ship, literally, a thing shaped: a general designation for any vessel navigated with sails;[2] any vessel employed in navigation.

In the Roman law, anything which floated upon the waters and was accessory to commerce.[3]

Any vessel that substantially goes to sea. By the act of 17 and 18 Vict. (1854), c. 100, s. 2, "every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars."[4]

Includes whatever is built in a particular form for the purpose of being used on water.[5] In its ordinary acceptation, it is generic for anything formed for the purpose of going on the water.[6]

"Ship" and "vessel" are used in a very broad sense, to include all navigable structures intended for transportation. But a fixed structure, like a dry-dock, is not used for such purposes.[7]

Within the meaning of a particular statute, a ferry-boat may not be a "ship;"[8] nor may a canal-boat;[9] nor a coal-barge;[10] nor a small open boat employed

[1] See Batcheider v. Carter, 2 Vt. 172 (1829).

[2] [Tomlins, Law Dict.; 4 Wash. 530.

[3] Raft of Cypress Logs, 1 Flip. 544 (1876).

[4] [Exp. Ferguson, L. R., 6 Q. B. *291 (1871).

[5] The Mac, 46 L. T. 909 (1882), Brett, L. J.

[6] Ibid. 910, Cotton, L. J.

[7] Cope v. Valette Dry-Dock Co., 119 U. S. 629, 627 (1887), Bradley, J.

[8] 17 Johns. 54.

[9] 5 Hill, 34; 17 Barb. 528; 3 Wall. Jr. 199; 2 Grant, 521. Contra, 3 Grant, 40.

[10] 3 Grant, 110.

within a port;[1] nor a dredge, or mud-hopper dredge;[2] nor, as subject to admiralty jurisdiction, are flat-boats or coal-barges transporting merchandise and sold for lumber at the end of the voyage.[3]

A steamship is a vessel whose principal motive power is steam and not sails.[4] See further VESSEL.

Domestic ship; foreign ship. Whether a vessel is foreign or domestic depends upon the residence of her owners, and not upon her enrollment, where the two are different.[5]

General ship. A vessel which carries merchandise for all persons who may apply for transportation, as distinguished from a vessel chartered to one or more individuals.

A ship by which the master or owner engages separately with a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of the ship's destination.[6]

Ships are strictly and technically denominated chattels, or personal property, at the common law, although distinguishable from other kinds of personalty by the solemnities by which the title is ordinarily acquired, transferred, and made susceptible of pledge, lien, or mortgage. The title is now usually acquired, transferred, and evidenced by written documents.[7]

In international law ships are regarded as floating sections of the land to which they belong, and whose flag they carry. Hence, a general assignment under the insolvent laws of a State passes title to a vessel on the high seas, as if within the State.[8]

A vessel carries with it the local rights and legal jurisdiction of her state or territory. All persons on board are endowed and subjected accordingly. But the principle is subject to the powers of Congress over commerce and crimes.[9]

Ship-broker. One who makes contracts for the employment of vessels.

Ship-chandlery. Includes everything necessary to furnish and equip a vessel, so as to render her sea-worthy for the intended voyage.[10]

Shipped. Placed on board a vessel for the purchaser or consignee, to be transported at his risk.[11]

Shipper. One who places property of his own on board a vessel for transportation.

Shipping. Ships in general, vessels for navigation; also, relating to ships or vessels; and, the act of placing or receiving goods on board a vessel.

Shipping articles. An agreement, in writing, between the master and seamen on board a vessel, specifying the voyage, and time for which the seamen are shipped.[1]

Shipping commissioner. An officer appointed for each of such ports of entry as, in the judgment of the circuit court having jurisdiction, may seem to require it, and charged with general supervision as to the contracts of seamen, and the enforcement of laws made for their protection and relief.[2]

Shipping, laws of. The law which relates to vessels — their construction, tonnage, ownership, registration, inspection, national character; the employment and rights of seamen, the power and duties of their commanders; ship-brokers, ship-agents, pilots, etc.; the transfer of merchant vessels; freight, charter-parties, demurrage, towage, collisions, salvage, etc.[3]

Ship's bill. The copy of the bill of lading of a vessel retained by the master.

The bill delivered to the shipper controls, if the two do not agree as to the terms of the contract of afreightment.[4]

Ship's husband. The general agent of the owners in respect to a vessel; in statutes of registration, called the managing owner.[5]

The person who, in a vessel's home port, does what the owner would otherwise do — obtains a cargo, and attends to whatever is essential to the due prosecution of the voyage.[6]

There is no maritime lien on a ship in favor of her general agent or husband.[7]

Ship's papers. (1) Documents which, under the laws of individual nations, a ship must carry — a certificate of registry, license, charter-party, bills of lading and of health. (2) Such documents as the general law of nations requires a neutral ship to carry — a

[1] 5 Wend. 564.
[2] 15 Can. L. J. 268; 46 L. T. 206, 207.
[3] 3 Wall. Jr. 53; 1 Flip. 545, a raft.
[4] L. R., 7 Q. B. 569.
[5] The Albany, 4 Dill. 439 (1876), Dillon, Cir. J.; Weaver v. The Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 365 (1849).
[6] Waru v. Green, 6 Cow. 176 (1826), Savage, C. J.; Abb. Ship. 128, 319; 1 Pars. Mar. L. 130.
[7] Story, Partn. § 416.
[8] Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 624–32 (1872), cases.
[9] Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 574 (1880); 1 Kent, 26; Woolsey, Int. Law, § 58.
[10] Weaver v. The Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 359, 368–69 (1849).
[11] Fisher v. Minot, 10 Gray, 262 (1857).

[1] See R. S. § 4509; 2 Sumn. 443; 1 Mas. 443; 2 id. 541; 5 id. 272.
[2] See R. S. §§ 4501-8.
[3] See R. S. §§ 4399, 4463–4500. See generally, as to ship-owners and seamen, Scarff v. Metcalf, 107 N. Y 211 (1887), cases: 1 Am. St. R. 812–14 (1888), cases.
[4] The Thames, 14 Wall. 105 (1871).
[5] 1 Parsons, Shipp. & Adm. 109.
[6] Gillespie v. Winberg, 4 Daly, 322 (1872), Daly, C. J
[7] The Esteban de Antunano, 31 F. R. 923 (1887), cases

passport; sea-brief or sea-letter, proofs of property, muster-roll, charter-party, bill of lading, bill of health, log-book or ship's journal, etc.[1]

Shipwreck. When a ship is so broken, disjointed, or otherwise injured that it no longer exists in its original nature and essence.[2]

Ship-yard. In a policy of insurance, may mean the yard in actual use, including sidewalks.[3]

The rules for the acquisition of property by persons engaged in navigation, and for its transfer and descent, are, with some exceptions, those prescribed by the State to which the vessel belongs. In general, the legislation of a State, not directed against commerce but relating to the rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens, and only indirectly and remotely affecting the operations of commerce, is obligatory upon the citizens, within its territorial jurisdiction, whether on land or water, or engaged in commerce, foreign or inter-State, or in any other pursuit.[4] See SALE, Bill of.

See further ABANDON, 1; ADMIRALTY; ANCHOR; APPURTENANCES; ARREST, 2 (1); BARRATRY, 1; BILGED; BOTTOMRY; CARGO; CHARTER-PARTY; COASTING TRADE; COLLISION, 2; COMMERCE; CONSORT, 2; CONVEYANCE, 1; CREW; DEMURRAGE; DERELICT, 3; DEVIATION; DISPATCH; DREDGE; EFFECTS; EMBARGO; FREIGHT; FURNITURE; HYPOTHECATION; INSPECTION, 1; LADING; LAUNCH; LICITATION; LOG-BOOK; LOOKOUT; LOSS, 2; MARITIME; MODERATE, 2; NAVIGATION; NECESSARIES; OUTFIT; PETITORY; PLUNDER; PORT; PRIMAGE; PROTEST, 3; PROVISIONS; QUARANTINE, 2; RANSOM; REGISTRY, 1; RES, 2, Perit; RESPONDENTIA; RESTITUTIO; REVOLT; ROAD, 2; SAIL; SALVAGE, 1; SEA; SEARCH, Right of; SEIZURE, 2; STRANDING; TONNAGE; TOUCH; TOWAGE; VISIT, 1; VOYAGE; WHARF; WRECK; YACHT.

SHIRE. See SHERIFF.

SHOOTING MARK. See GAME, 2.

Shooting at a mark is lawful, but not necessary, and may be dangerous, and the law requires extraordinary care to prevent injury to others. If the act is done where there are objects from which balls may glance and endanger others, the act is wanton, reckless, without due care, grossly negligent.[5]

SHOP. A place kept and used for the sale of goods.[6]

In this country shops for the sale of goods are frequently called "stores."[7] See further STORE, 2; BURGLARY.

Shopkeeper. See TRADER.

Shop-right. See LICENSE, 2.

Shops. See RAILROAD.

SHORE. See BEACH; NAVIGABLE; ON; RIPARIAN; SEA.

SHORT. 1. More limited in time than some other; brief, or the briefest; opposed to long: as, a short — cause, draft, lease, note, notice, summons, qq. v.

2. Not exhibited in full; not stated in detail: as, a short plea, q. v. See ENTRY, II.

3. As opposed to long, in the language of brokers, see PUT, 2; WAGER, 2.

Shortly. Three months is not "shortly," that is, a reasonable time, within the presumed meaning of a sale of iron-pipe to "arrive shortly."[1]

SHORT-HAND. See STENOGRAPHER.

SHOULD. See MAY.

SHOW. "Show" and "indicate" are not always interchangeable. "To show" is to make apparent or clear by evidence, to prove; an "indication" may be merely a symptom, that which points to, or give direction to the mind.[2]

Show cause. See RULE, 2.

SHOWS. See ANIMAL.

SHRIEVALTY. See SHERIFFALTY.

SHROUD. See BURIAL.

SHYSTER. See CRANK; PETTIFOGGER.

Has reference to the professional character and standing of a lawyer. Hence, in an action for libeling one, as respects his character as a lawyer, by the use of the word, an issue as to whether the plaintiff is a lawyer or not is material.[3]

In an action for libel expressed in ordinary language, a witness may not testify as to the sense in which he understood the language, nor that he understood it to apply to the plaintiff the term "shyster."[4]

SIC. L. Thus; so. Sometimes calls attention to a quoted word or phrase as being strictly literal.

Sic utere. See UTERE, Sic, etc., 1076.

SICK. See BENEFITS; CHARITY; DISEASE; INFLUENCE; SUNDAY; WILL, 2. Compare LANGUIDUS.

SICUT. See ALIAS; PLURIES.

SIDE. Compare ALONG.

"Fences on the sides of a railroad" may mean fences on the spaces between the road-bed and the outer lines of the company's land; not necessarily on the dividing lines.[5]

---

[1] 1 Marsh. Ins. ed. 1802, Ch. VIII, § 5, pp. 317-19.

[2] Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 42 (1822), Story, J.; 1 Marsh. Ins. Ch. XIII, § 1.

[3] Webb v. National Fire Ins. Co., 2 Sandf. 504 (1849).

[4] Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 104 (1876), Field, J.

[5] Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 185 (1869).

[6] Commonwealth v. Riggs, 14 Gray, 378 (1860), Metcalf, J.

[7] Commonwealth v. Annis, 15 Gray, 199 (1860), Merrick, J.

[1] Thompson v. Currie, 4 Can. Leg. News, 189 (1881).

[2] Coyle v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 133 (1883).

[3] Gribble v. St. Paul Pioneer-Press Co., 34 Minn. 342.

[4] Gribble v. Same, 37 Minn. 277 (1887), cases.

[5] Marshall v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 51 Mo. 140 (1872).

Side of the court. The law side and the equity side of a court designate a court administering justice, in the former case under the forms of strict law or common law, in the latter case according to the more liberal principles of equity.

The equity side of the courts is deemed always open for pleadings and proceedings preparatory to the hearing of causes upon their merits.

Side-report. See REPORT, 2.

Side-track. See RAILROAD.

SIDEWALK. "A raised way for foot passengers at the side of a street or road; a foot pavement." [1]

May rest on posts, as well as on the ground.[1]

The word "street" presumptively always includes the sidewalks; as, in a statute providing for compensation for damages from a change of grade in a street,[2] although "street" often denotes that part of the way devoted to carriage travel.[3]

A walk crossing a public alley is a "crosswalk," as distinguished from sidewalk.[4]

In a suit to recover damages for injuries received from a fall caused by a defective sidewalk the plaintiff may show that other like accidents occurred at the same place from the same cause.[5]

The duty of a municipal corporation is to see that its sidewalks are reasonably safe for persons using ordinary caution. Mere slipperiness, from ice or snow, not accumulated so as to constitute a dangerous obstruction, is not ordinarily such a defect as will make the city liable for damages occasioned thereby.[6] See SNOW; STREET.

SIDING. See RAILROAD.

SIGHT. 1. Presence, q. v.

2. Presentment.

Bills of exchange and drafts are frequently drawn at sight or a certain number of days after sight. In the former case the paper is called a sight bill or sight draft, payable on presentment.

Deposits are received by banks subject to sight drafts.

Bills payable at sight are entitled to days of grace by the law-merchant; but statutes may have changed that law. The holder of such paper must use due diligence to put it into circulation. The holder of paper payable after sight must present it within reasonable time.[1] See EXCHANGE, 2, Bill of.

SIGILLUM. See SEAL, 1.

SIGN.[2] Although in general understanding refers to writing the name at the foot or bottom of a document, is not confined to that meaning.

The primary meaning is to write one's name on paper or to show or declare assent or attestation by some sign or mark.[3]

A "signing" may be at the beginning of a document,— within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds.[4]

Within the meaning of that statute, also, a memorandum is "signed" if the name is printed in a letterhead, with the contract underwritten.[5]

But it may be that a will cannot be considered as "signed" unless the testator's name is affixed at the bottom, or otherwise outside the body.[6]

Countersign. (1) To sign on the side opposite to another's name.

(2) To sign what has already been signed by a superior; to authenticate by an additional signature.

Where the charter of a city required a document to be "signed" by certain officers, "countersigned," prefixed to one signature, was held not to be a material irregularity.[7]

Sign a judgment. For the proper officer of a court to formally enter a judgment.

Judgments were formerly pronounced in open court, and are still supposed to be. But now, except in the case of an issue at law, there is no actual delivery in court or elsewhere. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause is in such a state that by the course of practice he is entitled to judgment, obtains an allowance or entry by the proper officer, expressing generally that judgment for a certain amount is given in his favor. This is called "signing" judgment.[8]

Signature. The act of writing or putting down one's own name; and the name so set down.

May imply the personal act of writing one's own name or of actually making one's own mark.[9]

---

[1] Challiss v. Parker, 11 Kan. 391 (1873): Webster's Dict. As to power to make, see Attorney-General v. Boston, 142 Mass. 204 (1886).

[2] City of Kokomo v. Mahan, 100 Ind. 243 (1884).

[3] Dickinson v. City of Worcester, 133 Mass. 502 (1885).

[4] Pequignot v. City of Detroit, 16 F. R. 211 (1883); O'Neil v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 133 (1883).

[5] District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 525-26 (1882), cases.

[6] 2 Dillon, Munic. Corp. § 1006, cases; Chase v. Cleveland, 44 Ohio St. 515, 509-11 (1886), cases; Boulder v. Niles, 9 Col. 415 (1886); Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 205 (1887), cases; 17 How. 169; 32 Iowa, 328; 97 Mass. 389; 77 Pa. 113; 100 id. 119; 101 id. 616. On obstructing the sidewalk, see 24 Alb. Law J. 464-65 (1881), cases.

[1] See 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 617-19, cases.

[2] L. signare: signum, a mark.

[3] James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 12-13 (1851), Paige, J.

[4] Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. *486 (1817).

[5] Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546 (1882), cases.

[6] Catlett v. Catlett, 55 Mo. 339-41 (1874). As an element of "execution," see Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. 23 (1850).

[7] Gurnee v. City of Chicago, 40 Ill. 167 (1866).

[8] [Steph. Plead. *111; Tidd, Pr. 616.]

[9] Chapman v. Limerick, 56 Me. 392 (1868).

May consist of the act of writing one's name with intention to authenticate the instrument.[1]

At common law, includes a mark unattested, unless the instrument is one which must be witnessed, irrespective of the mode of signing.[2]

Where an instrument shows on its face the names of the contracting parties, an agent may sign his own name first, and add to it, "agent" for his principal, or he may sign the name of the principal first, and add, by himself, "as agent." All that is required is that the contract shall purport on its face to be the contract of the principal.[3]

See BLANK, 2; DATE, False; FORGERY; MARK, 1; SEAL, 2.

Sign-manual. (1) The king's signature to grants or letter-patents, as a personal, unofficial act. See SEAL, 1, Great.

(2) Any autograph signature.

SIGNET. See SEAL, 1, Great.

SILENCE. In the law of estoppel, imports knowledge with opportunity to act.[4]

No principle is better established than that a party is not estopped by his silence unless he has misled another to his hurt.[5]

Although silence as to a material fact is not necessarily, as matter of law, equivalent to a false representation, yet concealment or suppression by either party to a contract of sale, with intent to deceive, of a material fact, which he in good faith is bound to disclose, is evidence of, and equivalent to, a false representation.[6]

That silence in an instrument is exclusion may be applied to a statute.[7]

Silent. A contract is sometimes said to be silent as to a contingency. See IMPLIED.

See further ACCOUNT, 1; ACQUIESCENCE; CONCEAL, 5; CONSENT; ESTOPPEL, Equitable; KNOWLEDGE, 1; REPRESENTATION, 1; RESCISSION; STAND BY.

SILK GOWN. See GOWN, 2.

SILVER. See COIN; MINE; MONEY; TENDER, 2, Legal.

SIMILAR. Denotes partial sameness, and, also, sameness in all essential particulars.[8] See SIMILIS.

Within a statute respecting counterfeit money, is not equivalent to "in the similitude of."[9] See SIMILITUDE.

[1] Watson v. Pipes, 32 Mo. 466 (1856): 2 Greenl. Ev. § 674.

[2] Bickley v. Keenan, 60 Ala. 295 (1877).

[3] Elwell v. Shaw, 16 Mass. 46 (1819); Smith v. Morse, 9 Wall. 82-83 (1869).

[4] Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581 (1878).

[5] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Dubois, 12 Wall. 64 (1870); Hill v. Epley, 31 Pa. 334 (1858); Parrish v. Thurston, 87 Ind. 428 (1882), cases.

[6] Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranch Co., 128 U. S. 383 (1888).

[7] Bates v. Brown, 5 Wall. 717 (1866).

[8] Commonwealth v. Fontain, 127 Mass. 454 (1879).

[9] State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 394 (1856).

SIMILIS. L. Like. Compare QUASI.

De similibus idem est judicium. As to like cases, the judgment is the same. See ARGUMENTUM.

Nullum simile est idem. No like thing is the same; likeness or similarity is not identity.

Thus, while a partner is like a joint-tenant and a tenant in common, he is neither;[1] a telegraph company is like, but is not the same as, a common carrier;[2] an award of arbitrators is not like a judgment in all respects;[3] a check resembles a bill of exchange, yet it is not the same thing. In the patent and copyright laws, identity, not resemblance, is regarded.[4]

Similiter. Likewise; the like. A reply that as one party has put himself upon the country, the other does the same.

The full sentence was et prædictus similiter, equivalent to "and he does the like." Expresses concurrence in referring a trial to the jury. In strictness, no part of the pleadings: it neither affirms nor denies any fact; is matter of form. Spoken of as the similiter.[5]

SIMILITUDE. Likeness; resemblance.

"In the similitude of" may be synonymous with forged or counterfeited. "Similar" may not be equivalent.[6]

Since, in the act of 1877 against counterfeiting silver coins, the words "in resemblance or similitude" are a variation or exposition of the preceding words "falsely make, forge, or counterfeit," each meaning to make something in the resemblance or similitude of another, the former expression may be omitted in an indictment.[7] See COUNTERFEIT; GENUINE; TRADE-MARK.

Between articles subject to duty, see DUTY, 2.

SIMONY. The corrupt presentation of one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward.[8]

So called from resemblance to the sin of Simon Magus.[9]

SIMPLE. See BATTERY; CONTRACT; FEE, 1; INTEREST, 2 (3); LARCENY; RECEIPT, 2; TRUST, 1.

SIMPLEX. See COMMENDATIO.

SIMULATED.[9] Feigned; fictitious.

A simulated sale presents the outward appearances of a sale, while, in reality, no transfer of property is made.[10]

[1] Story, Partn. § 90.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr., 6 ed. *257c, 257a.

[3] Ibid. 701.

[4] Ibid. 257*ap*. See also 2 Bl. Com. 61; 2 Story, 512.

[5] Gould, Plead. 290-91; Steph. Plead. 265; 9 Mass. 533; 2 Day, 393; 11 S. & R. 32.

[6] State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 394 (1856): Me. R. S., c. 127, § 5.

[7] United States v. Otey, 31 F. R. 69 (1887).

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 278-79; 4 id. 62; 1 C. P. D. 649.

[9] L. simul, together; or similis, like.

[10] See 34 La. An. 198, 324.

An interest conferred upon a person for the purpose of causing the jurisdiction of a particular court to attach, is sometimes characterized as a "simulated interest." See FICTITIOUS.

SINCE. May cover the whole of a period between an event and the present time; while "subsequently" may refer to a particular time.[1]

SINE. L. Without.

Sine die. Without a day — for the reassembling of a body, or for the appearance of a defendant.

Sine hoc. Without this. See ABSQUE.

SINGLE. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; ADULTERY; BILL, III; BOND; MAN; ORIGINAL, 2; SALE.

SINGULAR. See NUMBER.

SINKING FUND. See FUND.

SISTER. See CONSANGUINITY.

Where a testator's property would be diverted from his lineal descendants to strangers by construing "sister" to mean half-sister, the burden of proving that that was his intention rests upon the contestant.[2]

SIT. To hold a session of court; to hold court.

Sittings. In England, has much the same meaning that session or term has with us. Sittings in banc are for determining matters of law; sittings at nisi prius, for trying issues of fact.[3] See SESSION; TERM, 4.

SITUATE. To have a situs (q. v.), a place or position.

Situated. In the United States, in such expressions as "all that tract of land situated," etc., has been more commonly used than "situate."

Personalty is situated wherever it may be at a particular time. Strictly speaking, it cannot have a situs.[4] See CONTAINED.

A house may be said to be situated on all the lands within the inclosure necessary for its enjoyment, and actually so used.[5]

SITUS. L. A thing placed, or lying; manner of lying, local position, place, site, situation. In situ. In place, in position.

Personalty has its situs at the place of its owner's domicil. For purposes of taxation, a debt has its situs at the residence of the creditor.

Realty has its situs where it has been placed by nature.

Lex rei sitæ. The law of the state where realty is situated, where property lies.[1] Compare LEX, Loci. See PROPERTY.

SIXTY YEARS. See TEMPUS; YEAR.

SKATING RINKS. See EXHIBITION.

SKEPTIC. See OATH; RELIGION.

SKILL. See CARE; CONTRACT, Implied EXPERT; GAME, 2; INVENTION.

SKINS. See PERISHABLE.

SLANDER.[2] 1. Injuries affecting a man's reputation and good name are, first, by malicious, scandalous, and slanderous words, tending to his damage and derogation; and, second, by printed or written libels, pictures, signs, etc., which set him in an odious and ridiculous light, and thereby diminish his reputation.[3] The former is sometimes called oral or verbal slander, the latter written slander or libel.

False defamatory words when spoken.[4]

As, if a man maliciously and falsely utters any false tale of another, which may endanger him in law by impeaching him of some heinous crime, as, to say that a man has poisoned another or is perjured; or which may exclude him from society, as, to charge him with having an infectious disease; or which may impair or hurt his trade or livelihood, as, to call a tradesman a bankrupt, a physician a quack, a lawyer a knave. Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, and words tending to scandalize a magistrate or person in a public trust, are reputed more highly injurious than when spoken of a private person. For such scandalous words an action on the case may be had, without proving any particular damage to have happened, but merely upon the probability that it might happen. But with regard to words that do not thus upon the face of them import such defamation as will of course be injurious, it is necessary that the plaintiff aver some particular damage to have happened.[5]

Oral slanders, as a cause of action, are: (1) Words falsely spoken of a person which impute the commission of some criminal offense involving moral turpitude, for which, if the charge is true, he may be indicted and punished. (2) Words falsely spoken which impute that he is infected with some contagious disease, and which, if true, would exclude him from society. (3) Defamatory words falsely spoken, which impute unfitness to perform the duties of an office or employment of profit, or the want of integ-

[1] Re Rosenfield, 7 Am. Law Reg. 621 (1868); 79 Me. 195.

[2] Wood v. Mitcham, 92 N. Y. 379 (1883).

[3] See Gird v. State, 1 Oreg. 311 (1860).

[4] County of Allegheny v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397 (1879).

[5] Orr v. Baker, 4 Ind. 86 (1853).

[1] Story, Conf. Laws, § 379.

[2] F. esclandre, scandal, q. v.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 123, 125.

[4] Odgers, Libel & Slander, 1, 7.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 123-24.

rity in the discharge of the duties thereof. (4) Defamatory words falsely spoken, which prejudice the person in his profession or trade. (5) Defamatory words falsely spoken, which, though not in themselves actionable, occasion the person special damage. The ordinary meaning is to be affixed to the words.[1]

Mere scurrility, or opprobrious words which neither import nor are attended with injurious effects, will not support an action. Words of heat and passion, as, to call a man a rogue and rascal, if provocative of no ill consequence, and not being of the dangerous species mentioned, are not actionable; neither are words spoken in a friendly manner, as, by way of advice, admonition, or concern, without any tincture or circumstance of ill will: for, in both cases, they are not spoken maliciously; nor are words used in a legal proceeding, pertinent to the cause. . . If the defendant is able to justify and prove the words true, no action will lie, though special damage ensue: if the fact be true, any damage is damnum abeque injuria.[2]

The words must be "published," that is, be communicated to a third person in a language he understands. See PUBLICATION.

A party to a judicial or quasi judicial proceeding may say anything concerning the case that is pertinent and material, and cannot be held to answer for scandalous words, unless, under pretense of pleading the cause, he designedly wanders from the question, and slanders another person. The rule is the same as to a witness, and counsel. Public policy dictates that a man should not be hampered in prosecuting or defending a right by fear of an action for defamation. It is only when he abuses his right by using it as a cloak for malice that he will be held responsible.[3]

Evidence of the truth of language is inadmissible unless a justification is pleaded.[4] Under the plea of "not guilty," the defendant cannot, in mitigation, in effect prove guilt.[5] To establish a justification, the proof must be as broad as the charge; the plea, unsupported, is evidence of actual malice and augments the damages.[6]

Where the words are prima facie privileged, express malice must be proved.[7] After proof that the words were spoken, the plaintiff, to show malice, may give evidence of other words of the same nature (not actionable per se) spoken at different times.[1]

Evidence of the plaintiff's reputation must relate to the time before the speaking of the words; since bad reputation, after the utterance, may result from the publication.[2]

In the absence of malice, the motive of the speaker may be considered in mitigation of damages. The plaintiff is entitled to reasonable compensation for the injury suffered, but if the injury was unintentional, or committed under a sense of duty, or through an honest mistake, no vindictive damages should be given.[3]

Mental suffering is an element of damage.[4]

Evidence of the defendant's pecuniary resources is admissible, to enhance the exemplary damages.[5]

See ATTORNEY; BAD, 1; COLLOQUIUM; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2; DAMAGES, EXEMPLARY; DEFAMATORY; INNUENDO; LIBEL, 5; RUMOR; SCANDAL; SENSUS, Mitiori; TRANSLATION, 2.

2. Defamation of one's interest in real or personal property, or of the property itself objectively considered.

Slander of another's title, by spreading such injurious reports, as, if true, would deprive him of his estate, is actionable, provided special damage accrues to the proprietor; as, if he loses an opportunity to sell the land.[6]

The title is personified, and made subject to some of the rules applicable to personal slander when the words are not actionable per se. The language must be false, be uttered maliciously, and be followed, naturally, by pecuniary damage, which must be specially alleged and substantially proved.[7]

That rule "applies not only to actions for slander of title, strictly and properly so called, that is, with reference to real estate, but also to cases in which personalty is involved, or personal rights and privileges."[8]

SLAUGHTER-HOUSE. See CONDITION; NUISANCE; POLICE, 2.

Slaughter-House Cases. See POLICE, 2; SERVITUDE, 1; STATE, 3 (2).

SLAVERY. An institution by which one man is made the property of another.[9]

[1] Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 226 (1875), Clifford, J. Approved, Page v. Merwin, 54 Conn. 434 (1886). As to injury to business, see Singer v. Bender, 64 Wis. 172 (1885).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 124-25.

[3] Stewart v. Hall, 83 Ky. 380-381, 383 (1885), cases, Holt, J. Uttered by witness, see Shodden v. McElwee, 86 Tenn. 149 (1887), cases; in legal proceedings, 26 Cent. Law J. 2-8 (1888), cases.

[4] Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 304, cases.

[5] Smith v. Smith, 39 Pa. 442 (1861), cases; Porter v. Botkins, 59 id. 484 (1869).

[6] Burford v. Wible, 32 Pa. 96 (1858), cases; Gorman v. Sutton, id. 248 (1858); Howard v. Thompson, 1 Am. L. C. 178-79, cases.

[7] Brockerman v. Keyser, 1 Phila. 369 (1851).

[1] Elliott v. Boyles, 31 Pa. 65. (1857); M'Almont v. McClelland, 14 S. & R. 358 (1826).

[2] Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 305; Townshend, § 408.

[3] Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 302.

[4] Mahoney v. Belford, 132 Mass. 394 (1882) cases.

[5] See 23 Alb. Law J. 44 (1881), cases. On special damages, see 17 Cent. Law J. 105 (1883).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 124; Malachy v. Soper, 3 Bing. N. C. 381 (1836); Paull v. Halferty, 63 Pa. 46 (1869), cases.

[7] Kendall v. State, 1 Seld. 18 (1851), cases.

[8] Halsey v. Brotherhood, L. R., 15 C. D. 514 (1880) [affirmed, 19 id. 386 (1881)], in which B. had stated his belief that H.'s patent on a steam-engine infringed his patent; following Wren v. Weild, L. R., 4 Q. B. 730 (1869), which also concerned the infringement of a patent. Compare case of libel of letters patent, Meyrose v. Adams, 12 Mo. Ap. 329 (1882). See generally Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 138; Heard, Lib. & Sl. §§ 10, 59.

[9] Douglass v. Ritchie, 24 Mo. 180 (1857): Justinian.

The wish to use the bodily powers of another person as a means of ministering to one's own ease or pleasure is doubtless the foundation of slavery.[1]

In the United States, up to July 28, 1868 (as see below), a slave had no political rights, and only such civil rights as were given him by local law. The offspring followed the status of the mother. See PARTUS.

The master owned whatever property his slave acquired; and the slave could be a witness only for or against another slave or one who had been a slave; and he could sue in court only for his freedom: in other cases the master sued for his own use. If the master neglected to provide proper support for his helpless or impotent slave, a public officer made the provision at the owner's expense. In Louisiana, for cruel treatment, the slave could be emancipated; in Alabama and Texas, sale to another master was part of the penalty. He could be the subject of unlawful homicide; and was himself responsible for acts of crime. His owner could manumit him: the effect being to make him, not a citizen, but merely a freeman.[2]

The first governmental action toward abolishing the slave-trade was the provision that "The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person."[3]

In 1807, importing slaves was made to cease after January 1, 1808; and in 1818, a law passed increasing the penalties of the trade. In 1819, the vessels and effects of citizens engaged in the trade were made liable to seizure and confiscation. And by the act of March 3, 1820, all persons over whom our jurisdiction extends, whether found on domestic or foreign vessels, concerned in the slave-trade, or in kidnaping negroes or mulattoes, were to be deemed pirates and to suffer death. In Great Britain the trade was declared unlawful in 1807, and in 1824 it was made piracy. Since then efforts have been made by that nation, by treaties and otherwise, to suppress the trade everywhere. As early as 1793, the State of Georgia prohibited the trade.[4]

Slavery is a status unprotected by the law of nations, supported, where it exists, by local law. Hence persons seized to be sold as slaves in a territory where the importation of slaves is forbidden, commit no crime when they get possession of the vessel, and either slay the crew or compel them to sail for another country.[1]

The maxim in international law is that "the air makes free." If then a cargo of slaves is stranded on the soil of a state which prohibits slavery, there is no process, excepting express treaty, by which they can be prevented from availing themselves of their freedom.[2]

But the Constitution provided that "No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due."[3]

In the Dred Scott Case it was decided: that a free negro, whose ancestors were brought here and sold as slaves, is not a "citizen" within the meaning of the Constitution. When that instrument was adopted, Africans were not regarded in any State as "people or citizens;" the two clauses which refer to them treat them as persons whom it was lawful to deal in as articles of property and to hold as slaves. A citizen may take into United States territory any article of property recognized as such by the Constitution, and the Federal government is pledged to protect him in his lawful uses of it. Dred Scott acquired no title to freedom by being taken by his owner into Illinois from Missouri: the status of a person of African descent depending on the law of the State in which he resides.[4]

See Amendments XIII, XIV, XV, under CITIZEN; CHATTEL; DEBT, Public; MIGRATION; VILLEIN; WAR.

SLAY. Signifies no more than "kill," and is not necessary in an indictment.[5]

SLEEP. Occurs in a few expressions in its literal or in a figurative sense.

"Sleeping with a man" is equivalent to lying awake with a man, and being "in bed with a man" is equivalent to sleeping with him.[6]

Sleeping on rights. See DELAY; SILENCE; STALE; VIGILANS.

Sleeping partner. See PARTNER, Dormant.

Sleeping-car company. Is not responsible either as a common carrier or as an innkeeper. It is bound, however, not only to [1] Maine, Anc. Law, 158, 157-61.

[2] See 2 Kent, 248-58; Commonwealth v. Aves, 18 Pick. 206-25 (1836), Shaw, C. J.; Wood v. Ward, 2 Flip. 342-43 (1879), cases; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 22 (1883); 70 Ala. 388.

"Everywhere, always, by everybody, in statutes alike of Virginia and South Carolina, in speeches, in letters, slavery in those days (1787) was spoken of as an evil." 2 Bancroft, Const. 129 (1884).

"Every word in the Constitution bearing on the subject was chosen with the greatest caution." Ib. 164. See also ib. 141-44, 151-64.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9.

[4] See 2 Story, Const. §§ 1332-37, 1915-27.

[1] See United States v. The Amistad, 15 Pet. 587-98 (1841), Story, J.; "The Case of the Amistad," a pamphlet read before the New Haven Historical Society in 1886, by Prof. S. E. Baldwin, of Yale Law School.

[2] See Priscilla Smith v. Smith, 13 La. *444 (1838); Eliz. Thomas v. Generis, 16 id. *486 (1840); Woolsey, Int. Law, § 74.

[3] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 2, cl. 3.

[4] Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 399-456 (1856), Taney, C. J., Wayne, Nelson, Grier, Daniel, Campbell, and Catron, JJ., concurring, 454-529; McLean and Curtis, JJ., dissenting, 529-633.

[5] State v. Thomas, 32 La. An. 351 (1880).

[6] Barnett v. Ward, 36 Ohio St. 110 (1880).

furnish its guest a berth, but to keep a watch during the night, exclude unauthorized persons from the car, and take reasonable care to prevent theft.

In case of loss from negligence the company is liable for such articles as a passenger usually carries about his person, and such sums of money as may be reasonably necessary for his traveling expenses. The invitation to make use of the bed carries with it an invitation to sleep, and an implied agreement to take reasonable care of the guest's effects while he sleeps.[1]

A sleeping-car company holds itself out to the world as furnishing safe and comfortable cars, and, when it sells a ticket, it impliedly stipulates to do so. It invites passengers to pay for, and make use of, its cars for sleeping, all parties knowing that, during the greater part of the night, the passenger will be asleep, powerless to protect himself or to guard his property. He cannot, like the guest of a hotel, by locking the door, guard against danger. He has no right to take any such steps to protect himself in the sleeping-car, but, by the necessity of the case, is dependent upon the owners and officers of the car to guard him and the property he has from danger from thieves or otherwise. The law raises the duty on the part of the car company to afford him this protection. While it is not liable as a common carrier, or as an inn-holder, yet it is its clear duty to use reasonable care to guard the passengers from theft; and if through want of such care the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable for it.[2]

A passenger is entitled to a continuous passage in such berth and on such car as his ticket calls for, or in an equally desirable berth or an equally safe, convenient, and comfortable car.[3]

The law will not permit a railroad company, engaged in carrying persons for hire, through any arrangement with a sleeping-car company whose cars constitute part of its train, to evade the duty of providing proper means for the safe conveyance of those whom it has agreed to convey.[4]

A company may refuse to sell accommodations to a person who does not have a proper railroad ticket.[5]

The obligation of the company for injury to a person, not a passenger, who is wantonly assaulted and beaten by the porter, is not governed by the principles which regulate the liability of a common carrier for a like assault committed by a servant.[1]

See CARRIER, Common.

SLIGHT. See CARE; NEGLIGENCE.

SLUICE-DAM. Is for the purpose of utilizing the water of a stream by raising a head sufficient to float logs over obstructions and shoal places down to the dam; and then, by letting the water out, flood the stream below so as to carry the logs to their destination. It is constructed with a "sluice-way," or opening, for the passage of logs. To "sluice" and "sluicing" mean simply opening the gates for logs to pass through.[2]

The owner has charge of his own property all the time. The owner of the dam has no control over the logs, except by virtue of a lien for tolls.[3]

SMART-MONEY. See DAMAGES, Exemplary.

SMELTING. See ART, 1; PROCESS, 2.

SMOKE. See AIR; NUISANCE; POLICE, 2.

SMUGGLE.[3] The act, with intent to defraud, of bringing or attempting to bring into the United States dutiable articles without passing them, or the package containing them, through the custom-house, or submitting them to the officers of the revenue for examination.[4]

Implies something illegal, and is inconsistent with an innocent intent. Conveys the idea of a secret introduction of goods, with intent to avoid payment of duty.[5]

An article found secreted in baggage will be forfeited, and a penalty of treble the value imposed.[6] In other cases the penalty is of a sum of equal or double the value.

The penalty for making or attempting to make an entry of merchandise by means of a false invoice, certificate, etc., is forfeiture of the merchandise;[7] or the value of the property may be recovered by suit.[8] See MOIETY.

If particular goods were actually smuggled or

---

[1] Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 3 Cent. Law J. 591 (U. S. C. C. W. D. Tenn., 1876), Brown, J.; Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. v. Diehl, 84 Ind. 481-84 (1882), cases: s. c. IX Am. & Eng. R. Cases, 294, 301, cases; Pullman Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360 (1874); Pullman Co. v. Gardner, 14 W. N. C. 17 (Pa., 1883); Pardee v. N. Y. Central Sleeping Car Co., N. Y. (1884): 1 Ry. Corp. Law J. 490.

[2] Lewis v. N. Y. Central Sleeping Car Co., 143 Mass. 273 (1887), cases, Morton, C. J.; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pollock, 69 Tex. 120 (1887). See also Pullman Co. v. Gaylord, Super. Ct. Ky. (1884): 23 Am. Law Reg. 788; Whitney v. Pullman Co., 143 Mass. 243 (1887); 22 Cent. Law J. 364-65, 367 (1887), cases; 19 Am. Law Rev. 204-22 (1885), cases; 20 id. 159-82 (1886), cases.

[3] Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Taylor, 65 Ind. 153 (1879).

[4] Pennsylvania Company v. Roy, 102 U. S. 457 (1880).

[5] Lawrence v. Pullman P. Car Co., 144 Mass. 7 (1887).

[1] Williams v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., Sup. Ct. La. (1888), cases. The plaintiff entered a car to ask to be permitted to wash his hands, and, without provocation, was beaten by the porter.

[2] Anderson v. Munch, 29 Minn. 416 (1882), Mitchell, J.

[3] Scan. smug-, to creep through a hole.—Skeat.

[4] [Act 22 June, 1874, § 4: 1 Sup. R. S. 77.

[5] United States v. Claflin, 13 Blatch., 184 (1875), Benedict, J.; Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 546 (1871)

[6] R. S. § 2802.

[7] R. S. § 2864, cases.

[8] United States v. Flax Spinning Co., 17 Blatch. 138 (1879).

brought in by fraud, the government is entitled to a decree of forfeiture under the act of June 22, 1874, § 12, notwithstanding the claimant may have purchased in good faith and for full value.[1]

As an indictable offense, punishable by a fine of as much as five thousand dollars, and with two years imprisonment, either or both.[2]

SNAKE. A bill pending before a legislative body, which, while introducing a general rule of law, is especially designed to change the law in relation to some matter then in controversy, to the advantage of the originator or supporters of the bill. Compare RIDER.

SNOW. See SIDEWALK.

The owner of a building who leases it, reserving only the right to enter "to repair," is not liable to a person injured by a fall of snow from the roof, it not appearing that the tenant might not by reasonable care have prevented the accident.[3]

SO. "Hence" and "therefore" are sometimes the equivalents of "so," and the latter word is thus understood whenever what follows is an illustration of a conclusion from what has gone before.[4]

As a proviso in a will, "so" is a limitation. It is also descriptive, and the same as "hereinbefore."[5]

That "so much" of a piece of land shall be sold, refers to a fractional portion.[6]

So help you God. See OATH.

So that. See CONDITION, Precedent; PROVIDED.

SOBER. See INTEMPERATE.

SOCAGE.[7] Holding lands in consideration of services certain or definite in nature and amount. The principal kind of title to land recognized by modern English law.[8]

In the United States, allodial tenure; which is subject only to ultimate rights in the state — such as eminent domain, and escheat. See FEUD.

SOCIALISM. See COMMUNISM; NIHILIST, 2.

SOCIETY. See ASSOCIATION; BENEFIT; CHURCH; COMPACT, Social; CONSORTIUM; GOVERNMENT.

[1] United States v. Certain Diamonds, 30 F. R. 364 (1887).

[2] R. S. § 2865, cases. Cases on violation of laws, Friedenstein v. United States, 125 U. S. 224 (1888); Origet v. United States, ib. 240 (1888).

[3] Clifford v. Atlantic Cotton Mills, 146 Mass. 47 (1888), cases.

[4] Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 431 (1870).

[5] Giles v. Melsom, 6 L. R., H. L. C. 24 (1873); 42 L. J., Ch. 122; 21 W. R. 417; 28 L. T. 789.

[6] Straw v. Poor, 74 Me. 55 (1882).

[7] Sax. soc. liberty, privilege, — 2 Bl. Com. 80.

[8] See 2 Bl. Com. 79–82; Maine, Anc. L. 225.

SODOMY. Carnal copulation, by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast.[1]

Named from the prevalence of the sin in Sodom.[2]

The infamous "crime against nature," committed either with man or beast; an offence of so dark a nature, so easily charged, and the negative so difficult to be proved, that the accusation should be clearly made out.[3] Sometimes called "bestiality" or "buggery."

SOIL. See LAND.

SOJOURN. Something more than to "travel," and applies to a temporary, as contradistinguished from a permanent, residence.[4] See RESIDE.

SOLAR. See DAY; MONTH.

SOLATIUM. L. A soothing, assuaging; compensation, indemnification.

Compensation for injury to the feelings, as distinguished from indemnification for pecuniary loss or for physical suffering.[5] See DAMAGES, Exemplary.

SOLD. Imports a valuable consideration, and a valid contract to sell or convey.[6] See SALE.

Sold note. See NOTE, 1, Bought, etc.

SOLDIER. See BOUNTY; ENLISTMENT; MILITARY; MILITIA; PENSION, 3; RANK; WAR.

SOLE. Alone; single; separate: individual; opposed to joint and married: as, a sole — administrator, executor, corporation, tenant, use, a feme-sole, qq. v.

In a will, "sole" has no fixed technical meaning which requires that a person who contests that meaning must show, by implication, that it is not used in a strict technical sense. In a marriage settlement, it may have a particular and exclusive meaning.[7]

In a will, was held to mean "absolute," rather than "separate," — the phrase being "sole and separate use."[8] See SEPARATE, 2.

SOLEMN. Made in due form; conforming to the requirements of law; formal: as, a solemn — admission, instrument, qq. v. See also OATH, Corporal; SEAL, 1.

Solemnize. To be present at a marriage ceremony, that it may have due publication

[1] Bishop, Cr. L. § 1029.

[2] Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 356 (1858).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 215.

[4] [Henry v. Ball, 1 Wheat. 5 (1816), Marshall, C. J.

[5] See Malloy v. Bennett, 15 F. R. 373 (1883); 22 Conn 298; 132 Mass. 394; 15 N. Y. 415; 10 E. L. & E. 437; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 267.

[6] See 74 N. C. 593; 3 Wend. 112; 1 Smith, 54; 5 Wall 720.

[7] Massey v. Rowen, L. R., 4 E. & I. Ap. 295 (1869).

[8] Lewis v. Mathews, L. R., 2 Eq. 180 (1866).

before third persons, for the sake of notoriety and the certainty of its being made.[1]

SOLICIT.[2] To importune, entreat, implore, ask, attempt, try to obtain.

So held under an indictment for soliciting, by newspaper publication, persons to commit murder.[3]

A solicitation to commit a crime is a misdemeanor.[4] See CHASTITY. Compare ATTEMPT.

Solicitor. A practitioner in courts of equity.[5]

Solicitor-general. A law-officer next in rank to the attorney-general.

In some States, the chief law-officer of the government; corresponding to the attorney-general in other States. See further ATTORNEY.

SOLIDUM. See CONSOLIDATE; IN SOLIDO.

SOLUM. L. The lowest part: land, soil.

Ædificatum solo, solo cedit. What is built upon the land, goes with the land: a building follows the ownership of the land. See FIXTURE.

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos. Of whom is the land, of him is it also to the sky and to the deepest depths: he who owns the land owns all above and all below the surface.

Upward no man may erect a building to overhang another's land; and downward, whatever is in a direct line belongs to the owner of the surface.[6]

The owner of land has the right to use that which is beneath the soil, whether rock or water, where there is no intent to injure the adjoining owner.[7] See MINE; TREE.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. With the land goes whatever is on the land planted.

See LAND; TERRA.

SOLUTIO. See OBLIGATION, 1.

SOLVENCY.[8] Ability to pay one's own debts — in the ordinary course of business; also, ability to pay at some future time, upon settlement of one's estate.

Solvent. Owning property enough to pay all one's own debts.

"Solvency" may mean being in such condition with respect to property that a demand may be collected by due course of law; as, within the law of suretyship, a solvent principal.[1]

The solvency which will sustain a voluntary deed consists in such condition as to means that payment can be enforced by process of law.[2]

Does not depend upon the amount of property owned which is subject to execution: the debtor may be solvent and yet have no property liable thereto.[3]

"Debts due from solvent debtors," which are taxable under a statute, refer not to general solvency, but to the amount which may be realized, that is, to the value of the debts.[4]

In Missouri, a bank is solvent which has assets sufficient to pay, within reasonable time, all its liabilities, through its own agencies.[5]

See further INSOLVENCY.

SOLVIT. L. He paid. See DIES, Solvit.

SOME. See NUMBER.

SON. 1, Eng. See CHILD; ELDEST; NAME, 1.

2, F. See ASSAULT; TORT, 1.

SONANS. See IDEM.

SOON. Within a reasonable time; as, in the case of a promise to do an act soon.[6] See TIME.

As soon as. A contract to deliver cotton "as soon as it can be picked out and shipped" was held to allow the lapse of a reasonable time, and until the usual mode of transportation could be employed.[7]

The charter of a railroad company authorized it "as soon as it conveniently can" to construct a road, with tracks, works, appendages, etc. Held, that the company was not bound to exercise its whole authority in the beginning, when the demands of business are few.[8]

SORCERY. See WITCHCRAFT.

SOROCIDE. See HOMICIDE.

SOUL. A corporation is sometimes said to have no soul or to be soulless: it is an artificial body.

"Neither can a corporation be excommunicated, for it has no soul, as is gravely observed by Sir Edward Coke; and therefore it is not liable to be summoned into the ecclesiastical courts upon any account."[9]

SOUND. 1, v. An action brought for damages, as, in covenant or trespass, and not for specific property, is said to "sound in damages."[10]

---

[1] [Pearson v. Howey, 11 N. J. L. 19 (1829).

[2] L. sollicitare, to agitate, arouse, urge.

[3] Regina v. Most, 44 L. T. 827 (1881).

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 16.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 26.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 18, 16.

[7] Redman v. Forman, 83 Ky. 216 (1885).

[8] L. solvens: solvere, to disengage, liberate, be free; to pay.

[1] Huffman v. Hulbert, 13 Wend. 378 (1835).

[2] Eddy v. Baldwin, 32 Mo. 369, 374 (1862).

[3] McKown v. Fergason, 47 Iowa, 637 (1878).

[4] Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla 155 (1881).

[5] Dodge v. Mastin, 17 F. R. 665 (1883).

[6] Sandford v. Shepard, 14 Kan. 282 (1875).

[7] Waddell v. Reddick, 2 Ired. L. 429 (1842). See also Ubsdell v. Cunningham, 22 Mo. 124 (1855).

[8] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Pa. 107 (1867).

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 477; 10 Rep. 32.

[10] Stephen, Plead. 105.

Within the meaning of a particular statute relating to appeals and writs of error, an action "sounding in damages" is one in which the damages cannot be determined in dollars by witnesses, but certain facts are proven from which the jury may determine the amount of damages, as, in slander, and the like,—when the damages are not susceptible of direct proof.[1]

Sounding the same. See IDEM, Sonans.

2, adj. (1) Referring to wood, vegetables or other inanimate substance: free from decay or rottenness;[2] opposed to that which is defective, decaying, injured,—not merely inferior.[3]

(2) Referring to an animal: that neither from nature, disease, or other cause is the animal incapable of performing its ordinary functions; as applied to organs of seeing, hearing, smelling, etc., that the organ has not, from nature, disease, or other cause any defect which makes it incapable or unfit to perform the services ordinarily required of it.[3]

Free from disease. . . The only qualification arises from the purpose for which the warranty is given. If a horse is purchased for a specified use, "sound" means that he is useful for that purpose, and "unsound" that he is affected with something which will impede that use.[4]

A general warranty will cover even a patent defect, when so intended.[5]

False assertion of soundness, knowingly made, is such a fraud upon the vendee as will entitle him to a rescission, whether the assertion amounted to a warranty or not.[6]

In Massachusetts, a representation that a horse is "sound," known to be false, is a false pretense.[7]

Sound health. See HEALTH.

Sound mind and memory. See INSANITY, 2 (5).

SOUS SEING PRIVE.[8] F. Under his private signature. In Louisiana, an act or contract evidenced by writing under private signature—a "private act."

An "authentic act" is an agreement entered into in the presence of a public officer.[8]

[1] Bradshaw v. Standard Oil Co., 114 Ill. 172 (1885).

[2] Bell v. Jeffreys, 13 Ired. L. 357 (1852).

[3] Hawkins v. Pemberton, 35 How. Pr. 333 (1868), Robertson, C. J.

[4] Kiddell v. Burnard, 9 M. & W. *670-71 (1842), Alderson, B.

[5] Fletcher v. Young, 69 Ga. 593 (1883); Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 641 (1869).

[6] Nelson v. Martin, 105 Pa. 229 (1884).

[7] Commonwealth v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16 (1882); 17 Me. 211; 64 id. 157; 5 Q. B. 49. See also Kingsley v. Johnson, 49 Conn. 462 (1882); Means v. Means, 88 Ind. 196 (1882).

[8] Privé. See Louque's Dig. (1878) XXIV-V.

SOVEREIGNTY.[1] The public authority which orders and directs what is to be done by each member of a political community in relation to the purposes of the association.[2]

The supreme power which governs the body politic or society that constitutes the state.[3]

The exercise of, or right to exercise, supreme power, dominion, or sway; as applied to a State, the right to exercise supreme power, dominion, or authority.[4]

In international law, the uncontrolled exclusive exercise of the powers of a state, q. v.; that is, both of the power of entering into relations with other states, and of the power of governing its own subjects.[5]

All legislative powers appertain to sovereignty. The original power of giving the law, on any subject whatever, is a sovereign power. In America, the powers of sovereignty are divided between the government of the Union, and those of the States. Each is sovereign with respect to the subjects committed to it.[6]

Sovereignty and legislature are convertible terms: one cannot subsist without the other. Legislature is the greatest act of superiority that can be exercised by one being over another. . . Wherever the power of making laws resides, all other powers must conform to and be directed by it. . . In a democracy there can be no exercise of sovereignty but by suffrage, which is the declaration of the people's will. In England, where the people do not debate in a collective body, but by representation, the exercise of sovereignty consists in the choice of representatives.[7]

The sovereign or supreme power in every state resides in the people. Blackstone supposes the jura summi imperii, or the right of sovereignty, to reside in those hands in which the exercise of the power of making laws is placed. Our simple and more reasonable idea is that the government is a mere agency established by the people for the exercise of those powers which reside in them. The powers of government are not, in strictness, granted, but delegated powers. They are then trust powers, and may be revoked. It results that no portion of sovereignty resides in government.[8]

See further GOVERNMENT; KING; STATE, 3; SUIT, 3; TREASON.

[1] F. soverain: L. L. superanus, chief: super, above.

[2] [Vattel, Law of Nations, § 1.

[3] Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 251 (1861).

[4] Territory v. Lee, 2 Monta. 130 (1874), Wade, C. J.; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199 (1861); Chancely v. Bailey, 37 Ga. 532 (1868).

[5] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 37.

[6] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 409-10 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 46, 49, 52, 170-71. See also 1 Story, Const. § 207.

[8] 1 Sharsw. Bl. Com. 49. See also Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. *98 (1795).

SPAN. 1. The word does not, even in architecture, always mean a part of a structure. It perhaps as often denotes the distance or space between two columns. Referring to a bridge, it may therefore designate the measure of the distance between the piers — the space left open for navigation purposes.[1]

The act of Congress of July 25, 1866, § 10 of which authorized a bridge to be constructed over the Missouri river at Kansas City, required that the distance of one hundred and sixty feet between the piers should be obtained by measuring along a line between the piers drawn perpendicularly to their faces and the current of the river. Held, that as the length of such a line between the piers actually built measured seven feet less than the required distance, the bridge was not a lawful structure.[1]

2. Of horses, see HORSE.

SPANISH LAWS. See PUEBLO.

SPARRING MATCH. See PRIZE-FIGHTING.

SPEAKING. See COLLOQUIUM; DEMURRER; IMPARLANCE; SPEECH.

SPECIAL. Relating to a species (q. v.), a single kind or sort: individual; particular; peculiar; distinctive. Opposed to common, ordinary, general,[2] qq. v. Compare PARTICULAR; SEPARATE; SOLE; SPECIFIC.

As, in speaking of special or a special — acceptance, act, administration, agent, allocatur, assumpsit, bail, case, charge, constable, contract, count, custom, damages, demurrer, deposit, deputy, finding, guaranty, indorsement, injunction, issue, jury, law, legacy, legislation, lien, limitation, matter, meeting, minister, occupant, partner, plea, pleading, privilege, property, return, rule, session, statute, tail, term, traverse, tribunal, trust, verdict, warranty, qq. v.

SPECIALIST. See EXPERT.

SPECIALTY. An instrument under seal.

Debts by "specialty," or special contract, are debts whereby a sum of money becomes or is acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal; as, by deed of covenant, by deed of sale, by lease reserving rent, or by bond or obligation.[3]

A specialty is any sealed contract or obligation; a special contract as distinguished from an oral or verbal contract, a parol or unsealed contract, and a contract or obligation of record.[1]

See CONTRACT, Special; COVENANT; DEED, 2; SEAL, 1.

SPECIE.[2] Metallic money issued by public authority; generally used in contradistinction to "paper money."[3]

SPECIES. L. Look, view; appearance; a particular thing among others to which attention is directed: specere, to look, see. Opposed, genus, q. v. See IN SPECIE; SPECIAL; SPECIE; SPECIFIC.

SPECIFIC. Characterizing a species (q. v.), a particular kind; particular; definite; limited, restricted. Opposed to general, q. v.

As, specific or a specific — intent, legacy, performance, duty, qq. v.

SPECIFICATION. A statement of the species or particulars; an account or narrative in detail.

As, a specification of the items of a claim, the plans and specifications of a building.

In architecture, not only the dimensions and mode of construction, but a description of every piece of material — its kind, length, breadth, thickness, and the manner of joining separate parts.[4] See Jones v. Watson, CONTRACT, Executed.

In patent law, see INVENTION; ISSUE, 1; PATENT, 2.

SPECULATION. Gambling is not to be confounded with speculation. Merchants speculate upon the future price of that in which they deal, and buy and sell accordingly. In other words, they think of and weigh, that is, speculate upon, the probabilities of the coming market and act upon this outlook into the future.[5]

But when ventures are made upon the turn of prices alone, with no bona fide intent to deal in the article, but merely to risk the difference between the rise and the fall of the price at a given time, the case is changed. The purpose then is not to deal in the article, and the bargain represents not a transfer of property, but a mere stake or wager upon its future price.[6] See WAGER, 2.

Speculative. See DAMAGES, 1, Speculative.

[1] Hannibal & St. Joseph R. Co. v. Missouri River Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260, 270 (1888), Lamar, J. The defendant, in the court below, recovered $5,300 for damages to steamboats, caused by striking the piers of the bridge.

[2] See 4 N. Y. 561; 6 id. 176; 12 id. 508; 16 id. 80; 18 id. 57; 20 id. 434; 5 Barb. 169; 23 id. 88; 5 Cal. 43; 45 id. 679; 48 id. 70.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 465.

[1] See January v. Goodman, 1 Dall. 208 (1787); Bank of the United States v. Donnally, 8 Pet. 371 (1834); 10 Ga. 167; 15 Ind. 282; 5 Neb. 87; 10 Ohio St. 40; 2 S. & R. 503.

[2] "Money paid by tale;" probably by confusion with L. abl. specie, as if paid in specie — in visible coin, — Skeat. See SPECIES.

[3] Walkup v. Houston, 65 N. C. 502 (1871), Dick, J.; Webb v. Moore, 4 T. B. Mon. 488 (1827); Henry v. Salina Bank, 5 Hill, 536 (1843).

[4] Gilbert v. United States, 1 Ct. Cl. 34 (1863), Casey, Chief Justice.

[5] Kirkpatrick v. Bonsall, 72 Pa. 158 (1872), Agnew, J.

SPEECH. See LIBERTY, 1, Of speech; SLANDER.

SPEED. See MODERATE.

Speedy. See TRIAL.

SPELLING. See IDEM, Sonans.

SPENDTHRIFT. See COMMITTEE; TRUST, 1.

SPES RECUPERANDI. L. Hope of recapture. See CAPTURE.

SPINSTER. A single or unmarried woman of mature years.

Formerly used as a title or addition to the surname. The primitive meaning seems to have been "spinner:" the unmarried daughters who remained at home did the spinning, while the "wife" did the weaving. The termination "-ster" is for "-er," and signifies a female doer.

SPIRIT OF A STATUTE. See CASUS, Omissus; LETTER, 2.

SPIRITS; SPIRITUOUS. See COUPON; DISTILLERY; EMPTY; INTOXICATE; LIQUOR.

SPIRITUAL ADVISER. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

SPIRITUALISM. See INFLUENCE.

Obtaining money upon a representation that the party obtaining it can cause the spirits of deceased persons to be present in a material form, is punishable under statutes against false pretenses.[1] See PRETENSE.

While, as an abstract proposition, spiritualism does not prove insanity, a person may be a monomaniac upon that subject as upon any other form of religion.[2]

SPLIT. To split a cause of action is to bring separate actions for parts of a claim or several actions where one action would suffice.

A party seeking to enforce a claim must present to the court, by the pleadings or proofs, or both, all the grounds upon which he expects a judgment. He may not split up his demand and prosecute it piecemeal, or present only a portion of the grounds upon which relief is sought, and leave the rest for a second suit, if the first fails. Otherwise, there would be no end to litigation. But this principle does not require distinct causes of action, that is, distinct matters, each of which by itself would authorize independent relief, to be presented in a single suit, though they exist at the same time and might be construed together.[3]

[1] Regina v. Lawrence, 36 Law Times, 404 (1877), Cockburn, C. J.; Regina v. Giles, 11 id. 643 (1865), Erle, C. J.; Thompson v. Hawks, 11 Biss. 440 (1883); Commonwealth ex rel. Gordon v. Keeper of County Prison, 15 W. N. C. 289 (1884).

[2] Conner v. Stanley, 73 Cal. 556 (1887): 26 Am. Law Reg. 523-31 (1887), cases. See also, generally, Chafin Will Case, 32 Wis. 563 (1873), cases; Smith's Will, 52 id. 543 (1881).

[3] Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 495 (1876), Field, J.

SPOLIATION.[1] 1. An injury done by one clerk or incumbent to another, in taking the fruits of his benefice without right, but under a pretended title.[2]

2. Mutilation of an instrument by a stranger.

"Alteration" is applied to the act of a party entitled under an instrument, and imports some fraud or improper design on his part to change its effect. But the act of a stranger, without the participation of the party interested, is a mere "spoliation," or mutilation of the instrument, not changing its legal operation, so long as the writing remains legible, and, if it be a deed, any trace of the seal remains. The law regards a spoliation which destroys the identity of an instrument, as far at least as the rights of the parties are concerned, as an accidental destruction of primary evidence, compelling a resort to that which is secondary.[3] See ALTERATION, 2; SPOLIATOR.

SPOLIATOR. L. A despoiler, a destroyer; a wrong-doer; one who fraudulently alters a writing.

In odium spoliatoris omnia præsumunter. In condemnation of the despoiler, all things are presumed.

Omnia præsumunter contra spoliatorem. All things are presumed against the despoiler: every presumption will be made against a person who destroys or suppresses that which might be evidence against him; also, all things are presumed against the wrong-doer: no man shall receive advantage from his own wrong.[4]

The rule, applied in all its rigor, is for wrong-doers — for those who have been guilty of fraud or willful disregard of duty.[5]

SPORT. See CRUELTY, 3; GAME, 2; WANTON.

SPRING. A stream of water which does not appear as a stream to casual observation, and which is finally lost in the ground, may be described as a "spring" in a reservation in a conveyance.[6]

Appellant and appellee owned adjoining lands, and appellee had been using water that ran from a spring on appellant's land into a pool on his (appellee's) side of the line, from which he watered stock. Although partially subterranean, the course of the vein was [1] Pronounced spō'. L. spoliare, to strip off spoil, despoil.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 90.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1264-65; Medlin v. Platte County, 8 Mo. 239 (1843).

[4] Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Sm. L. C. 649-45, cases; 2 Best, Ev. §§ 411-14; Broom, Max. 938; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 37.

[5] Knapp v. Edwards, 57 Wis. 196 (1883), Lyon, J.

[6] Peck v. Clark, 149 Mass. 440 (1889).

well defined, for years running in the same channel, a few feet only, from one farm to another. Held, that the appellant could not be enjoined from interfering altogether with the flow of the water; that he was entitled to the reasonable use of it for farm purposes, and that if he enlarged the spring and his stock consumed all the water, appellee could not complain.[1]

In a recent case in New York, the waters from a spring on defendant's land, one hundred and twenty feet from the plaintiff's line, had been for years conducted to a trough; the waste disappeared in the ground, but one hundred feet from the trough, and near the plaintiff's line, appeared on the surface, sometimes in motion toward a sluice under the division fence, where it again disappeared, and, twenty feet beyond, on the plaintiff's land, arose, forming a spring or reservoir. The defendant diverted the water from his spring for domestic purposes, thereby intercepting the plaintiff's supply. Held, that the defendant was not liable in damages for the diversion. The court said: "No stream or water-course ran from the spring. The source from which it came, and the flow of its waste or surplus, were alike under-ground, concealed, and matters of speculation and uncertainty. Such a spring belongs to the owner of the land. It is as much his as the earth or minerals beneath the surface, and none of the rules relating to water-courses and their diversion apply. The only exception established by the authorities is that of under-ground streams which are known and notorious, and flow in a natural channel between defined banks. A few such exceptions are admitted to exist, and others may occur. But, outside of these, sub-surface currents or percolations are not governed by the rules and regulations respecting the use and diversion of water-courses, and they may be interrupted or diverted by the owner of the land for any purpose of his own."[2]

See AQUA, Currit; WATER; WELL, 1.

SPRINGING. See USE, 8.

SPURIOUS. A spurious bank-bill may be a legitimate impression from the genuine plate, an illegitimate impression from a genuine plate, or an impression from a counterfeit plate. It may also be both counterfeited and forged, or both counterfeited and spurious, but not both forged and spurious.[3] See GENUINE; TRADE-MARK.

SQUARE. A dedication of land to public use as a square, means for free passage or for ornamentation and improvement.[4] See DEDICATION, 1.

In the expression "owners in each fourth of a square," means each subdivision of the territory bounded on all sides by principal streets.[5]

Square yard. In a contract for removing earth, held to mean "cubic yard."[1]

SQUATTER. A person who settles or locates on land without obtaining a legal title.[2] See INTRUDER; PRE-EMPTION.

SQUIRE. See ESQUIRE.

SS. See SCIRE, Scilicet.

ST. State; statute.

St. L. Statutes at Large, q. v.

ST. LOUIS. See COUNTY.

STAB. To wound with a pointed instrument; to penetrate the skin at least, and draw blood.[3] See CUT, 1.

STABLE. See ARSON; BARN.

STAGE. See DRAMA; OPERA; THEATER.

STAKEHOLDER. A depositary for both parties of the money advanced by them respectively with a naked authority to deliver it over upon the proposed contingency.[4]

The loser may withdraw his stake at any time before actual payment to the winner. A locus penitentiæ is allowed to each party. Payment by the stakeholder after notice not to pay will make him personally liable for the amount.[5]

See further BET; DELICTUM, In pari; GAME, 2; WAGER, 2.

STALE. Describes a claim too old to be entertained in a court of equity or of admiralty, on account of laches in the complainant; antiquated.

Those courts have not always considered themselves bound by the Statute of Limitations, though the tendency is to give the statute uniform application in all courts.

Courts of equity, acting on their own inherent doctrine of discouraging, for the peace of society, antiquated demands, refuse to interfere in attempts to establish a stale trust, except where the trust is clearly established and the facts have been fraudulently and successfully concealed by the trustee from the beneficiary.

In a case for relief, the beneficiary should set forth in his bill, specifically, what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of his claim; how he came to be so long ignorant of his rights, the means used to keep him in ignorance, and how and when he first came to a knowledge of the matters alleged in his bill.[6]

---

[1] Redman v. Forman, 83 Ky. 214 (1885).

[2] Bloodgood v. Ayers, 108 N. Y. 405 (1888), cases.

[3] [Kirby v. State, 1 Ohio St. 187 (1853), Corwin, J.

[4] Methodist Epis. Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 17 (1868). See also Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 523-26 (1887), cases.

[5] Caldwell v. Rupert, 10 Bush, 181 (1873).

[1] Louisville v. Hyatt, 2 B. Mon. 182 (1841).

[2] O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 16 Abb. N. Cas. 86 (1885); McAdam, Landl. & T. § 283; 5 Biss. 529; 35 Ga. 141.

[3] State v. Patza, 3 La. An. 514 (1848); State v. Lowry, 33 id. 1224 (1881); Ward v. State, 56 Ga. 410 (1876).

[4] Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 562 (1875), Colt, J.

[5] Willis v. Hoover, 9 Oreg. 421 (1881), cases; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Col. 214 (1886), cases; Smith, Contr. 265; 48 Me. 107; 4 Metc., Mass., 10; 8 Johns. 147; 16 S. & R. 148; 32 L. J., Q. B. 297; 5 Ap. Cas. 342.

[6] Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall. 92, 95 (1864), cases, Grier, J

To let in a defense that a claim is stale it is not necessary that a foundation be laid in the answer. If the case, as it appears at the hearing, is liable to the objection by reason of laches, the court will, upon that ground, be passive, and refuse relief. Every case is governed chiefly by its own circumstances; sometimes the analogy of the Statute of Limitations is applied; sometimes a longer period than that prescribed by the statute is required; in some cases a shorter time is sufficient; and sometimes the rule is applied where there is no statutable bar. It is competent for the court to apply the inherent principles of its own system of jurisprudence, and to decide accordingly.[1]

Length of time necessarily obscures all human evidence, and deprives parties of the means of ascertaining the nature of original transactions; it operates by way of presumption in favor of the party in possession. Long acquiescence and laches by parties out of possession are productive of much hardship and injustice to others and cannot be excused but by showing some actual hinderance or impediment caused by the fraud or concealment of the party in possession, which will appeal to the conscience of the chancellor.[2]

See DELAY; LIMITATION, 3.

STALL. See HOMESTALL; MARKETSTALL.

STALLION. See HORSE.

STAMP. Compare BRAND. See WRITING.

1. The act of March 3, 1875, required that every bank check, draft, order, or voucher for the payment of money, drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust-company, should have a two-cent stamp.[3] This act was repealed by act of March 3, 1883.[4]

Regard was had to the form of the instrument rather than to its operation, though the device was intended to evade the revenue acts.[5]

If not attached to a document which the law requires to be stamped, the document is not evidence; but it may be attached before it is offered in evidence.[6]

2. Although a statute designates stamps as "distiller's warehouse" and "tax paid" stamps, a designation in an indictment as "United States internal-revenue distillery warehouse stamps," and "tax-paid stamps for distilled spirits," will be sufficient — the offense charged being the removal, without destroying, of stamps from a cask of distilled spirits.[7] See COUPON-STAMP.

3. As to postage-stamps, see MAIL, 2.

[1] Sullivan v. Portland, &c. R. Co., 94 U. S. 811 (1876), cases, Swayne, J.; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1519-20 c; 16 Blatch. 561; 4 Cliff. 226, cases.

[2] Wagner v. Baird, 7 How. 258 (1849); United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65 (1878); Spidal v. Henrici, 120 id. 387 (1887), cases; Richards v. Mackall, 124 id. 187-88 (1888), cases; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 287 (1887), cases: 2 Am. St. R. 795-806 (1888), cases; 1 Pom. Eq. §§ 418-19.

[3] Act 3 March, 1875: 1 Sup. R. S. 132; R. S. § 3418.

[4] 22 St. L. 488, c. 121.

[5] United States v. Isham, 17 Wall. 496 (1873).

[6] R. S. §§ 3421-22; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 697-99; 47 N. Y. 467; 58 Pa. 176; 82 id. 280; 39 Vt. 412; 26 Wis. 163.

[7] United States v. Bayaud, 16 F. R. 376 (1883): R. S. § 3294.

STAND. Pleadings and transactions which cannot be shown to be illegal are said "to stand;" and a person who has or has not a right to sue is said to have or not to have "standing in court." Compare STATUS.

Stand aside. Statute 33 Edw. I (1303) forbade the crown to challenge jurors except for cause shown. A rule of practice then arose which permitted the prosecution to direct jurors to "stand aside until the whole panel be gone through and it appear that there will be a full jury without the persons so challenged."

The practice was inherited by us, and has been repeatedly recognized by the courts. It is precisely the same here as in England, and exists in cases of misdemeanor as well as in felonies.[1]

Stand by. To know of a thing being done against one's right and not to protest until another's interest has been materially affected.

"Standing by" does not import actual presence, but knowledge under such circumstances as to render it the duty of the possessor to communicate it.[2]

The expression, often used in discussing cases of estoppel, does not mean actual presence or actual participation in the transaction, but silence where there is knowledge and a duty to make a disclosure.[3] See ESTOPPEL, Equitable.

Stand by precedents. See DECISUM, Stare, etc.

Stand committed. To be committed.[4]

Stand mute. See MUTE.

STAPLE. A settled, established mart or market. The grand mart for the principal commodities or manufactures of the kingdom, formerly held by act of Parliament, in certain trading towns, and presided over by a mayor.[5]

The hereditary customs of the crown, which were certain customs due on the exportation of wool, skins, and leather, were styled "the staple commodities" of the [1] See United States v. Shackleford, 18 How. 590 (1855); Haines v. Commonwealth, 100 Pa. 322-23 (1882); Zell v. Commonwealth, 94 id. 272-73 (1880); 14 Cent. Law J. 402-6 (1882), cases; Baldw. 78, 82; 4 Bl. Com. 353; 2 Bac. Abr. 365; Coke, Litt. 156; 2 Hale, P. C. 271; 26 How. St. Tr. 1231; 92 E. C. L. 92; 7 Watts, 586; 37 Pa. 54-55, 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 938; 2 Whart. Am. Cr. L. § 2956; Thomp. & M., Juries, 147.

[2] Gatling v. Rodman, 6 Ind. 292 (1855); 8 Blackf. 47.

[3] Anderson v. Hubble, 93 Ind. 573 (1883), cases, Elliott, C. J. See generally Richardson v. Pickering, 41 N. H. 386, 384-85 (1860), cases.

[4] Young v. Makepeace, 103 Mass. 57 (1869).

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 160.

kingdom, because they were brought to those ports where the king's staple was established to be rated before being exported.[1]

"While we make the goods prepared or sold the 'staple of the place,' our grandfathers made the place the 'staple' of the goods."[2]

Staple productions. Such productions of the soil as have an established and defined character in the commerce of the country.[3]

Statute staple. A security for money, entered into before the mayor of the staple. See further STATUTE-MERCHANT.

STAR. In law-books, indicates the line and word at which the pages of the first edition began.

STAR-CHAMBER. The room or chamber in which were originally kept the chests containing starra or starrs (Heb. shetâr): the contracts or covenants of the Jews; no starr being valid unless deposited in the legal repository.[4]

After the Jews were expelled from England the starr-chamber was used by the king's council sitting in their judicial capacity. Later, the room was designated as the camera-stellata.[4]

Court of star-chamber. An ancient English court, remodeled by 3 Hen. VII (1488), and 21 Hen. VIII (1530). The court repressed the turbulence of the nobility and gentry in the provinces, and supplied a court for matters which, being of novel origin, were unprovided for by the existing tribunals; such as riots, perjury, misbehavior of sheriffs, and offenses against proclamations in ecclesiastical matters. The court enhanced the royal authority by supplying it with speedy and effective machinery. It acted without the assistance of a jury. The abuses to which its processes were liable led to its abolition in 1640, by 16 Char. I, c. 10.[5]

STARE. L. To stand, stand firm; to be established.

See words following in stat-, and stet.

Stare decisis. See DECISUM.

START. Is, not limited to setting out upon a journey or a race; it means, as well, the commencement of an enterprise or undertaking; as, in the phrase he "started to leave the State," said of an insolvent creditor.[6] Compare DEPARTURE, 1.

STAT. See VOLUNTAS, Stat, etc.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 314.

[2] Trench, Glossary, 187.

[3] Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 581 (1868).

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 266 a.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 266-68; 4 Steph. ib. 308-10; 12 Am. Law Rev. 21-38 (1877); 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 168-80; Green, Short Hist. Eng. Peop. 115.

[6] Graw v. Manning, 54 Iowa, 521 (1880), Day, J.

STATE.[1] 1, v. To set, set down, establish; to represent as true, declare as fact, allege, aver.

"Stating" a case to be within the purview of a statute is simply alleging that it is so; while "showing" it to be so, consists of a disclosure of the facts which bring it within the statute.[2]

State a case. For parties to agree upon the facts in a case and to submit the same to a court for a decision as to the law governing the case. See CASE, Stated.

State an account. To exhibit the items which constitute an account. See ACCOUNT, Stated.

State of the case. In New Jersey a narrative of facts which takes the place of a declaration. See Statement.

State of the facts. Formerly, each party to a suit in equity placed before the master a statement showing how the party represented the matter in question to be, that is, exhibiting his version of the facts.

Statement. A formal narrative of facts; an averment, allegation: as, a plaintiff's statement of claim, defendant's statement of defense. See ALLEGATION; REPRESENTATION, 1.

A "declaration" is a specification, in legal and technical form, of the circumstances which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action. A "statement" is an immethodical declaration, stating, in substance, the time of the contract, the sum, and on what founded, whether a verbal promise, a book-account, a note, a bond, a penal or single-bill, with a certificate of the belief of the plaintiff, or his agent, of what is really due.[3]

Brief statement. In Maine, a short notice filed by a defendant, without formal or full statement of the matters relied upon. The reply to this, filed by the plaintiff, is called his counter brief statement. They are used instead of pleas and replications, and relieve the parties from that exactness of allegation and denial by which trial upon the merits could formerly be avoided. The statements are, in effect, little more than notices of special matter to be given in evidence.[4] See PLAIN.

Statement by an accused person. In Alabama, at trial, on any criminal proceeding,

[1] F. estat: L. statum, a condition: stare, to stand.

[2] Spalding v. Spalding, 3 How. Pr. 301 (1848).

[3] Dixon v. Sturgeon, 6 S. & R. *28 (1820), Duncan, J.

[4] Trask v. Patterson, 29 Me. 502 (1849), Shepley, C. J. See also Brickett v. Davis, 21 Pick. 406 (1838).

the defendant may make a statement as to the facts in his own behalf, but not under oath.

He is not then a witness; nor can he be examined or cross-examined, nor impeached by proof of extrinsic facts introduced for that purpose.[1]

Stated term. One of the terms of a court in their established order.

Stating part. The portion of a bill in equity which alleges the facts in the case. See EQUITY, Bill in.

2, n. The circumstances or condition in which a person or thing stands or exists; standing, status, q. v.

3, n. (1) In general public law, a nation, republic, people, government, qq. v.

A body politic or society of men united together for the promotion of their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.[2]

A community of persons living within certain limits of territory, under a permanent organization which aims to secure the prevalence of justice by self-imposed law. The organ of the state by which its relations with other states are managed is the "government."[3]

A complete body of free persons united together for their common benefit, to enjoy peaceably what is their own, and to do justice to others.[4]

The "people" do not constitute the "state," though it exists for their benefit, and is maintained by their means. A people without a "government" is not a state. The people are only an element of the state. When, within prescribed territorial limits, they effect a political organization and establish a government, a state arises. The government is established to protect them from external wrong and internal disorder. In this organization and government what is called "sovereign power" rests. Under American organizations this power is distributed among the several departments, each wielding the portion vested in it, as well against the body of the people as against individuals.[5]

In its most enlarged signification, the word "state" includes all republics, and governments not monarchical; and even monarchies, if they fall within the reason of its use.

This comprehensive sense is restrained, in the Constitution, by the subject-matter.[6]

(2) In American constitutional law, state means, sometimes, a people or community of individuals united more or less closely in political relations, inhabiting temporarily or permanently the same country; often, only the country or territorial region inhabited by such a community; not unfrequently, the government under which the people live; at other times, combines the idea of people, territory, and government. In all senses the primary conception is that of people or community — the fundamental idea upon which our institutions are established.

In the Constitution, most frequently expresses the idea of the people, territory, and government,— a political community of free citizens, occupying a territory of defined boundaries, and organized under a government sanctioned and limited by a written constitution and established by the consent of the governed. It is the union of such States, under a common Constitution, which forms the distinct and greater political unit which that Constitution designates as the United States and makes of the people and States which compose it one people and one country.

The word is used in the threefold idea in the prohibitions upon the States to make treaties, emit bills of credit, lay tonnage duties, in the guaranty of representation in Congress, etc. The geographical idea obtains in the provisions that a representative in Congress shall be an inhabitant of the State in which he is chosen, and that the trial of crimes shall be held within the States where they are committed. The idea of a political community is presented in the provision that the United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government, and protect it against invasion.

The union of the States never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the Colonies, and grew out of their common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form, and character, and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to "be perpetual." And when these Articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of

[1] Chappell v. State, 71 Ala. 322 (1882); Act 2 Dec. 1882.

[2] [Vattel, Law of Nations, § 1.

[3] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 36.

[4] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. *455 (1793), Wilson, J.

[5] State v. Young, 29 Minn. 536 (1881), Gilfillan, C. J.

[6] [Terry v. Olcott, 4 Conn. 445 (1823), Hosmer, C. J.

the country, the Constitution was ordained "to form a more perfect Union." It is difficult to convey the idea of indissoluble unity more clearly — a perpetual union, made more perfect.

But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union by no means implies the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the States. Under the Articles of Confederation each State retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right not expressly delegated to the United States. Under the Constitution, though the powers of the States were much restricted, still, all powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. . . It may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States.[1]

The people of the United States constitute one nation, under one government, and this government, within the scope of the powers with which it is invested, is supreme. On the other hand, the people of each State compose a state, having its own government, and endowed with all the functions essential to separate and independent existence. The States disunited might continue to exist. Without the States in union there could be no such political body as the United States.

Both the States and the United States existed before the Constitution. The people, through that instrument, established a more perfect union by substituting a National government, acting, with ample power, directly upon the citizens, instead of the Confederate government, which acted with powers, greatly restricted, only upon the States. In the Constitution the independent existence and authority of the States is distinctly recognized. To them nearly the whole charge of internal regulation is committed or left; to them and to the people all powers not expressly delegated to the National government are reserved. The general condition was well stated by Mr. Madison in the Federalist, thus: "The Federal and State governments are in fact but different agents and trustees of the people, constituted with different powers and designated for different purposes."[2]

"In the early history of the organization of the government, its statesmen seem to have divided on the line which should separate the powers of the National government from those of the State governments, and though this line has never been very well defined in public opinion, such a division has continued from that day to this. The adoption of the first eleven amendments to the Constitution so soon after the original instrument was accepted shows a prevailing sense of danger at that time from the Federal power. And it cannot be denied that such a jealousy continued to exist with many patriotic men until the breaking out of the late civil war. It was then discovered that the true danger to the perpetuity of the Union was in the capacity of the State organizations to combine and concentrate all the powers of the State, and of contiguous States, for a determined resistance to the general government. Unquestionably this has given great force to the argument, and added largely to the number of those who believe in the necessity of a strong National government. But, however pervading this sentiment, and however it may have contributed to the adoption of the amendments we have been considering, we do not see in those amendments any purpose to destroy the main features of the general system. Under the pressure of all the excited feeling growing out of the war, our statesmen have still believed that the existence of the States with powers for domestic and local government, including the regulation of civil rights — the rights of person and of property — was essential to the perfect working of our complex form of government, though they have thought proper to impose additional limitations on the States, and to confer additional power on that of the Nation. But whatever fluctuations may be seen in the history of public opinion on this subject during the period of our national existence, we think it will be found that this court, so far as its functions required, has always held with a steady and even hand the balance between State and Federal power."[1]

For all national purposes intended by the Constitution the States are regarded as domestic, but in all other respects they are foreign and independent.[2]

All the rights of the States as independent nations were surrendered to the United States. The States are not nations, either as between themselves or toward foreign nations. They are sovereign within their spheres, but their sovereignty stops short of nationality. Their political status at home and abroad is that of States in the United States. They can neither make war nor peace without the consent of the National government. Neither can they, except with like consent, "enter into any agreement or compact with another State."[3]

[1] Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 720-21, 725 (1868), Chase, C. J.; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 249-52 (1875).

[2] Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 76 (1868), Chase, C. J. See also White v. Hart, 13 id. 650 (1871), Swayne, Justice.

[1] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 81-82 (1872), Miller, J., all the justices concurring. The question concerned the scope of the XIIIth and XIVth Amendments.

[2] Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 590 (1829); 44 Pa. 330; 76 Va. 27. See also Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 16-18 (1888), Lamar, J.

[3] New Hampshire v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 90 (1883), Waite, C. J.

The United States is not a foreign sovereignty as regards the several States, but is a concurrent, and, within its jurisdiction, a paramount sovereignty. Every citizen of a State is a subject of two distinct sovereignties, having concurrent jurisdiction in the State — concurrent as to place and persons, though distinct as to subject-matter. Legal or equitable rights, acquired under either system of laws, may be enforced in any court of either sovereignty competent to hear and determine such kind of rights. The one qualification is that where a right arises under a law of the United States, Congress may, if it sees fit, give to the Federal courts exclusive jurisdiction — which may be by express enactment or by implication. Thus, where Congress creates a penalty, without specifying a remedy, the penalty may be enforced in a State court, which is as much bound to recognize United States laws as operative as to recognize its own laws. The laws of the two systems form one system of jurisprudence, which constitutes the law of the land of the State.[1]

The political society which attempted to separate itself from the Union did not destroy its identity as a State, nor free it from the binding force of the Constitution.[2]

"State" in the Internal Revenue Title of the Revised Statutes includes the Territories and the District of Columbia, when such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions.[3]

"State" in the act of March 2, 1837, relating to the taking of pilots on water forming the boundary between two States, includes an organized Territory.[4]

See AID, 1; BODY, 3; CITIZEN; COMMERCE; CONSTITUTION; COURT; DEBT, Public; DEPARTURE, 1; ESCHEAT; EVIDENCE; GOVERNMENT; INSPECTION, 1; LAW, Common; LOTTERY; MILITIA; OFFICER; POLICE, 2; POLICY, 1; PRIVILEGE, 2; PRISON; PURPOSE; STATUTE; SUIT; TAX, 3; TERRITORY, 2; TRIAL; WAR.

STATION. In the broadest sense, a place, position, or post. Compare STATUS.

1. It may be said that wherever a man stays in pursuance of orders, he is "stationed," and that if he is a military man, such place becomes a "military station." But as used in the army laws and regulations, "military station" is synonymous with "military post," and means a place where troops are assembled, where military stores are kept or distributed, where military duty is performed, or military protection afforded,— where, in short, something more or less closely connected with arms or war is kept or is to be done.[5]

2. A stopping place at which passenger tickets are ordinarily sold; as, within the meaning of a statute forbidding a railroad company to eject a person from its cars for non-payment of fare, except at "some passenger station." In another statute or connection a different sense may be intended.[1]

As to what constitutes a "station or depot," within the meaning of a statute providing that no railway company shall abandon any station or depot on its road, after the same has been established twelve months, except by the approval of the railroad commissioners after public notice and a hearing had, has been discussed in two cases in Connecticut.[2] See ABANDON, 1; DEPOT, 2; RAILROAD; USUAL.

STATIONERY. Includes blanks for use in public offices.[3]

STATU. See STATUS.

STATUARY. A copy, made by a modern artist, of an antique statute is a "professional production of a statuary or sculptor," within the customs law.

Revised Statutes, § 2504, Schedule M, directs that the duty on "paintings and statuary not otherwise provided for" shall be "ten per centum ad valorem. But the term statuary as used in the laws now in force imposing duties on foreign importations shall be understood to include the professional productions of a statuary or sculptor only."

The object of this section is to encourage a taste for art, and hence to admit the work of professional artists at a low rate of duty.

A sculptor is "one whose occupation is to carve wood, stone, or other material, into images or statues." A statuary is "one who professes or practices the art of carving images or making statues." The "professional productions" of a statuary or sculptor are the practical results of the practice of his profession or occupation,— the "images or statues" produced by the exercise of his professional skill. In this sense, the statute embraces all the artistic work of a statuary or sculptor who pursues the employment of his class as a profession.[4]

See COPYRIGHT; DESIGN, 2; FURNITURE; SATISFACTORY.

STATUS. L. Standing: state, condition, situation. Compare ESTATE.

A corporation has no status as a citizen outside of the jurisdiction where it was created.

Statu quo or in statu quo. In the condition in which — a person or thing was; upon the original footing.

A court in equity is reluctant to rescind a contract unless the parties can be put back in statu quo, that

[1] Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 136-42 (1876), cases, Bradley, J.; Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 334 (1816), Story, J.

[2] Keith v. Clark, 97 U. S. 462 (1878); White v. Hart, 13 Wall. 651 (1871).

[3] R. S. § 3140.

[4] The Ullock, 19 F. R. 207 (1884); R. S. § 4236. See also 2 Cranch, 445; 1 Wheat. 91; 5 How. 377; 6 Wall. 287; 8 Saw. 321.

[5] United States v. Phisterer, 94 U. S. 222 (1876), Hunt, J.; Caldwell's Case, 19 Wall. 268 (1873).

[1] Baldwin v. Grand Trunk R. Co., Sup. Ct. N. H (1888).

[2] State v. New Haven & Northampton R. Co., 37 Conn. 163 (1870); Same v. Same, 41 id. 134 (1874).

[3] County of Knox v. Arms, 22 Ill. 179 (1859); contra, Commissioners v. Koons, 1 Col. 160 (1869). See also Commissioners' Court v. Goldthwaite, 35 Ala. 704 (1860).

[4] Viti v. Tutton, 14 F. R. 246, 741 (1882), McKennan, Cir. J.; s. c. 14 Rep. 741; 108 U. S. 312.

is, can be remitted to the position they occupied before the transaction complained of. Where a thing should not have been done, the parties are to be placed, as far as possible, in the situation in which they would have stood if there had been no such transaction.[1] See COMPENSATION; DAMAGES; LACHES; REFORM; RESCISSION.

STATUTE.[2] 1. The written will of a legislature, expressed in the form necessary to constitute it part of the law; an act of legislation; an enactment; a written law.

The express written will of the legislature, rendered authentic by certain prescribed forms and solemnities.[3]

An act of ordinary legislation, by the appropriate organ of government; the provisions of which are to be executed by the executive or judiciary, or by officers subordinate to them.[4]

The written laws of the kingdom are statutes, acts, or edicts, made by the king's majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in parliament assembled.[5]

The great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances.[6]

2. Formerly, the whole legislation of one session of a legislature, each distinct enactment being referred to as a "chapter" of the statute; whence the abbreviations ch. and c.

Statutable. Introduced, provided for, or required by express legislative enactment.

Statutory. Relating to that which exists, obtains, or is maintainable, by virtue of legislation, instead of by force of common law; regulated by express enactment: as, statutory — copyright, indictment, lien, proceedings, remedy, qq. v.

General or public statute. An universal rule that regards the whole community.[7]

Local statute. Applies to the citizens of a part of a State; also, a written law of one State as distinguished from national law.

Special or private statute. This is rather an exception than a rule, being that which operates only upon particular persons and private concerns.[7]

A "public" act or statute relates to the public at large.[1]

The disposition is to enlarge the limits of public statutes, and to bring within them all enactments of a general character or which in any way affect the community at large.[2]

Examples of public statutes are: statutes relating to a particular officer, establishing or defining municipal corporations, respecting roads or navigation generally, regulating the sale of liquors, giving jurisdiction to a particular court, affecting all classes of persons in a State; also, municipal ordinances before a municipal court; but the laws of a school board are private.[3]

A "private" act or statute concerns the particular interests or benefit of certain individuals or of particular classes of men.[1]

A private statute affects only an individual or a small number of persons;[4] concerns only a particular species, thing, or person.[5]

A "local" statute touches but a portion of the territory of a State, a part of its people, or a fraction of the property of its citizens.[6]

A local statute may be general or private in nature. In discussions on the relative authority of State and United States laws, "local" statute often refers to the statute law of one State, as opposed to a law, on the same subject, of another State, or of Congress, or the general commercial law.

Other distinguishing epithets applied to statutes are: declaratory, directory, mandatory; enabling, disabling; penal, and remedial, qq. v.

General or public statutes are noticed judicially without proof. Private statutes are to be formally pleaded and proved.[7]

Private statutes are proved by copy, examined by the roll itself, or by an exemplification under the great seal. In the United States, printed copies of the laws of a legislature, published in "statute-books" by its authority, are competent evidence either by statute or judicial decision; and it is sufficient, prima facie, that the book purports to have been so printed. The laws and resolutions of each session of our legislatures are printed by their authority; confidential

[1] Neblett v. Macfarland, 92 U. S. 103 (1875), cases; 20 How. 155; 93 U. S. 62; 101 id. 789.

[2] F. statut; L. statutum; statuere, to establish, lay down as settled or decided: stare, to cause to stand. Compare CONSTITUTION; LAW.

[3] 1 Kent, 447; 51 Miss. 773; 15 Barb. 114.

[4] Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. *348 (1825), Gibson, J.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 85.

[6] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 134 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 86.

[1] [Potter's Dwar. Stat. 52: Devine v. Cook County, 84 Ill. 592 (1877).

[2] Unity v. Burrage, 103 U. S. 455 (1880), cases, Woods, Judge.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 293, cases.

[4] Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 784-86 (1861).

[5] Village of Winooski v. Gokey, 49 Vt. 235 (1877).

[6] People v. Supervisors of Chautauqua, 48 N. Y. 16-17 (1870); People v. Squire, 107 id. 593 (1888); 49 id. 135; 68 id. 383; 5 Lans. 115; 2 Abb. Pr. 348. See also 22 La. An. 548; 7 Nev. 350; 9 id. 218; 15 id. 249; 93 N. Y. 323; 8 Oreg. 422; 6 W. Va. 349; 10 Wis. 178.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 86; Unity v. Burrage, 103 U. S. 454 (1880); 8 Oreg. 422.

persons are selected to compare the copies with the original rolls, and superintend the printing.[1]

The following rules for the construction of statutes, formulated by Sir William Blackstone,[2] are frequently quoted:

(1) In construing a remedial statute, the old law, the mischief, and the remedy are to be considered. See post, 971, c. 2.

(2) A statute which treats of things or persons of an inferior rank cannot by general words be extended to those of a superior rank. See EJUSDEM.

(3) Penal statutes must be construed strictly. See post, 971, c. 1.

(4) Statutes against frauds are to be liberally and beneficially expounded.

(5) One part of a statute must be so construed by another that the whole may, if possible, stand. See RES, Ut res, etc.

(6) A saving totally repugnant to the body of a statute is void.

(7) When the common law and a statute differ the common law gives place to the statute, and an old statute to a new statute.

(8) If a statute that repeals another is itself afterward repealed, the first statute is thereby revived without formal words for that purpose. See REPEAL.

(9) Acts of Parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent Parliaments bind not.

(10) Acts of Parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity; and if there arise out of them collaterally any absurd consequences, manifestly contradictory to common reason, they are, with regard to those consequences, void.

To the foregoing, Judge Sharswood, in his annotations to Blackstone's Commentaries, at page ninety-one of book one, adds the following five canons, with references to decided cases:

(11) A statute shall always be so construed as to operate prospectively, and not retrospectively, unless the language is so clear as to preclude all question as to the intention of the legislature. See RETROSPECTIVE.

(12) Contemporaneous usage may be resorted to as evidence of the construction put upon a statute by those best acquainted with the mind and intention of the law-makers. See EXPOSITIO, Contemporanea.

(13) The judicial interpretation of the statute of a State as settled by its own courts is to be received and followed by the courts of other States and by the Federal judiciary. See COMITY; DECISION, Rules of.

(14) When there has been a general revision of the statute code of a State, under the authority of the legislature, and the revision has been approved, a mere change of phraseology, introduced by the revisers, will not be held to have effected a change in meaning unless such clearly appears to have been the intention. See REVISED STATUTES.

(15) A statute cannot be repealed by usage or become obsolete by non-user.

That a part of a statute may be unconstitutional, see CONSTITUTIONAL.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 480; Young v. Bank of Alexandria, 4 Cranch, 388 (1808); Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 56 (1842); Biddis v. James, 6 Binn. *326 (1814).

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 87-91. See also 1 Kent, *460-65.

Blackstone, on pages fifty-nine to sixty-two of the same book (Vol. 1, Book 1) of his Commentaries, had made the subjoined "observations" concerning the interpretation of particular statutes, which, like the canons given above, are everywhere quoted or cited Having premised that "the most rational method to interpret the will of the legislator is by exploring his intentions" as evinced by the words employed, the context, the subject-matter, the effect and consequences, and the spirit and reason,— he adds, more at length, that —

(1) Words are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification; not so much regarding the propriety of grammar as their general and popular use. . . Terms of art, or technical terms, must be taken according to the acceptation of the learned in each art, trade, and science. See ART, 3.

(2) If words are still dubious their meaning may be established from the context.

(3) As to the subject-matter, words are always to be understood as having a regard thereto, for that is always supposed to be in the eye of the legislator, and all his expressions directed to that end.

(4) As to the effects and consequences, the rule is that where words bear either none, or a very absurd signification, if literally understood, the received sense may be a little deviated from.

(5) But the most effectual way of discovering the true meaning of a law, where the words are dubious, is by discovering the reason and spirit of it; the cause which moved the legislator to enact it. See EQUITY, Of a statute, p. 409.

The following paragraphs, for the most part from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, will serve still further to elucidate this important subject:

Regard is to be had to the words, and to the intent: by reference to the context, previous or current enactments, the history of the art or trade, general history, etc.[1]

A meaning is to be accorded, if possible, to every word. That construction which makes a word redundant is to be rejected. The light had when the statute was made, and not the light of experience, is to be followed.[2]

Every part must be construed in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonious, if possible, and give a meaning to each part.[3]

A thing within the intention is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter; and a thing within the letter is not within the statute if contrary to the intention of it.[4]

[1] Merritt v. Welsh, 104 U. S. 702 (1881).

[2] Platt v. Union Pacific R. Co., 99 U. S. 58-59, 63 (1878), cases.

[3] Washington Market Co. v. Hoffman, 101 U. S. 115 (1879).

[4] People v. Utica Ins. Co., 15 Johns. *381 (1818), Thompson, C. J. Approved, Insurance Co. v. Grindley, 100 U. S. 615 (1879). See also United States v. Moore, 95 id. 763 (1877); Harrison v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 171 (1885).

The intention of the law-maker is the law. The duty of the court, being satisfied of this intention, clearly expressed in a constitutional enactment, is to give effect thereto, and not to defeat it by adhering too rigidly to the mere letter of the statute, or to technical rules of construction.[1]

The business of the interpreter is to expound, not to improve, the language. The question is not so much what the law-makers meant, as what their language means.[2]

A construction leading to an absurd consequence is to be discarded. . . General terms will be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression, an absurdity, or an unconstitutional operation, if possible. It will be presumed that exceptions were intended which would avoid results of that nature.[3]

If a literal interpretation of any part of a statute would operate unjustly or lead to absurd results, or be contrary to the evident meaning of the act taken as a whole, it should be rejected. The best way to discover the meaning, when expressions are rendered ambiguous by their connection with other clauses, is to consider the causes which induced the enactment.[4]

No statute, however positive in its terms, is to be construed as designed to interfere with existing contracts, rights of action, or with vested rights, unless the intention that it shall so operate is expressly declared or is to be necessarily implied. Hence, a new statute is regarded as applying to future cases.[5]

Settled construction is as much a part of a statute as the text itself, and a change of decision is the same in effect on contracts as an amendment of the law by enactment.[6]

The practical construction given to a statute through a long period, and acquiesced in by all the departments of government, should control the court in construing it, though that construction contravene the letter of the law.[7]

Where no Federal question is involved, the Federal courts accept the construction of the statutes of a State made by the courts of the State, however much they may question the correctness of that construction.[8]

Penal statutes are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature.

This rule is founded on the tenderness of the law for the rights of individuals; and on the principle that the power of punishment is vested in the legislature, and not in the judicial department. It would be dangerous to carry the principle, that a case which is within the reason or mischief of a statute, is within its provisions, so far as to punish a crime not enumerated in the statute, because it is of kindred character with those which are enumerated.[1]

But the court must not disregard the rule that the intention of the law-maker, gathered from the words employed, governs in all cases.[2]

The intention being the law, that sense is to be adopted which best harmonizes with the context, and promotes in the fullest manner the policy and the object of the legislature.[3]

A citizen is not to be placed where, by an honest error in construction, he may be prosecuted.[4]

"The criminal law ought to be plain, perspicuous, and easily apprehended by persons of common intelligence. It is cruel and unjust to punish men for actions which can be construed to be crimes only by the application of artificial principles according to a mode of disquisition unknown in the ordinary pursuits of life."[5]

Laws in derogation of common law, and statutes conferring exclusive privileges, are also to be construed strictly, that is, by close adherence to the words.[6]

A remedial statute must be construed liberally, so as to afford all the relief within the power of the court which the statute indicates the legislature intended to grant. Courts will look into the occasion for the passage of such a statute, and consider the evils it seeks to remedy, their nature and extent, to determine how far it was to reach.[7]

The meaning may be extended beyond the precise words used, from the reason or motive upon which the legislature proceeded, the end in view, or the purpose designed — the limitation being that to extend the meaning to a case not included in the words, the case must be shown to come within the same reason upon which the law-maker proceeded, and not only within a like reason.[8]

Contemporaneous construction by those called upon to carry a statute into effect is entitled to great respect.[9]

[1] Oates v. First Nat. Bank of Montgomery, 100 U. S. 244 (1879), Harlan, J.

[2] Senior v. Batterman, 44 Ohio St. 673 (1887).

[3] United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 486 (1868), Field, J.; Carlisle v. United States, 16 id. 153 (1872); Oates v. Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 244 (1879); Montclair v. Ramsdell, 107 id. 152 (1882).

[4] Heydenfeldt v. Daney Gold Co., 93 U. S. 638 (1876), Davis, J., quoting Gyger's Estate, 65 Pa. 312 (1870), Sharswood, J. See also Lamp Chimney Co. v. Brass, &c. Co., 91 U. S. 662-63 (1875); Leavitt v. Lovering, Sup. Ct. N. H. (1888).

[5] Twenty Per Cent. Cases, 20 Wall. 187 (1873), cases.

[6] Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 687 (1879).

[7] Harrison v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 170-71 (1885).

[8] Erie Railway Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 Wall. 497 (1874), cases.

[1] United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 95, 96 (1820), Marshall, C. J.; 81 Va. 243.

[2] Re Coy, 31 F. R. 800 (1887), Harlan, J.; State v. McMahon, 53 Conn. 413 (1885).

[3] United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 395-96 (1867), cases, Swayne, J.; 1 Story, 255; 17 F. R. 437.

[4] United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 219 (1875).

[5] Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 534 (1887), Bryan, J.

[6] See Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 796 (1879); Ruggles v. Illinois, 106 id. 531 (1883).

[7] Johnston v. United States, 17 Ct. Cl. 171 (1881), Richardson, J.; Neurath v. District of Columbia, ib. 226 (1881); Stewart v. Kahn, 11 Wall. 504 (1870); ib. 515; Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 704 (1881); 70 N. Y. 228; 1 Kent, 455.

[8] United States v. Freeman, 3 How. 565 (1845), Wayne, Justice.

[9] United States v. Pugh, 99 U. S. 269 (1878); Brown v.

Where English statutes have been adopted, the settled construction of them by the English courts has been considered as incorporated in the text.[1]

Decisions made in England since the separation of the Colonies are entitled to great respect, but their authority is not admitted.[2]

See ACT, 2; CONSTRUCTION; CONSTITUTION; DAY; DECLARATORY; DEROGATION; EXCEPTION, 2; EXPOSITIO; FORM; LAW; MATERIA; ORDINANCE, 2; PREAMBLE, 2; PROHIBITORY, 1; PROVIDED; PUNCTUATION; PURVIEW; REPEL; REVISE; REPUGNANT; TITLE, 2; WAIVER.

Statute of Accumulations. See ACCUMULATION.

Statute of Distributions. See DISTRIBUTION, 1.

Statute of Elizabeth. See CHARITY, 2; CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent.

Statute of Frauds. See FRAUD, Statute, etc.

Statute of Gloucester. See COSTS.

Statute of Limitations. See LIMITATION, 8.

Statute of Uses. See USE, 3.

Statute of Wills. See WILL, 2.

Statutes at large. Statutes in full or at length as originally enacted, in distinction from abridgments, compilations, and revisions. In particular, the title of the publication containing, chiefly, the acts of Congress — the United States Statutes at Large.

Acts of the State legislatures, as a rule, go by other names, as, "session laws," in Pennsylvania "pamphlet laws."[3]

The United States Statutes at Large exhibit the legislation of the several Congresses from March 4, 1789, the day of the organization of the government and of the first meeting of the First Congress. Each volume after the eighth contains all matters in the nature of legislation ordained or enacted by the Congress or Congresses in session, or by the Administration in power, during the periods covered by the volumes respectively — general or public statutes, private acts, treaties with the Indian tribes and with foreign nations, postal, consular and other conventions, public proclamations by the President and by the heads of departments, Executive orders, resolutions by the Senate and House, etc.

The different volumes and legislative periods are subjoined. Compare REVISED STATUTES, Of the United States; SESSION, 2.

Vol. 1. Congresses: I,[4] II, III, IV, V.[4] March 4, 1789 to March 4, 1799.

Vol. 2. Congresses: VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI,[1] XII. Dec. 2, 1799 to March 4, 1813.

Vol. 3. Congresses: XIII,[1] XIV, XV, XVI, XVII. May 24, 1813 to March 4, 1823.

Vol. 4. Congresses: XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII. Dec. 1, 1823 to March 4, 1835.

Vol. 5. Congresses: XXIV, XXV,[1] XXVI, XXVII, XXVIII. Dec. 7, 1835 to March 4, 1845.

Vol. 6. Private laws. March 4, 1789 to March 4, 1845.

Vol. 7. Indian treaties. Sept. 17, 1778 to Oct. 11, 1842.

Vol. 8. European treaties. Feb. 6, 1778 to Nov. 10, 1845.

Vol. 9. Congresses: XXIX, XXX, XXXI. Dec. 1, 1845 to March 4, 1851.

Vol. 10. Congresses: XXXII, XXXIII. Dec. 1, 1851 to March 4, 1855.

Vol. 11. Congresses: XXXIV,[1] XXXV. Dec. 3, 1855 to March 4, 1859.

Vol. 12. Congresses: XXXVI, XXXVII.[1] Dec. 5, 1859 to March 4, 1863.

Vol. 13. Congress: XXXVIII. Dec. 7, 1863 to March 4, 1865.

Vol. 14. Congress: XXXIX. Dec. 4, 1865 to March 4, 1867.

Vol. 15. Congress: XL.[1] March 4, 1867 to March 4, 1869.

Vol. 16. Congress: XLI.[1] March 4, 1869 to March 4, 1871.

Vol. 17. Congress: XLII.[1] March 4, 1871 to March 4, 1873.

Vol. 18. Congress: XLIII. Dec. 1, 1873 to March 4, 1875.

Vol. 19. Congress: XLIV. Dec. 6, 1875 to March 4, 1877.

Vol. 20. Congress: XLV.[1] Oct. 15, 1877 to March 4, 1879.

Vol. 21. Congress: XLVI.[1] March 18, 1879 to March 4, 1881.

Vol. 22. Congress: XLVII. Dec. 5, 1881 to March 4, 1883.

Vol. 23. Congress: XLVIII. Dec. 3, 1883 to March 4, 1885.

Vol. 24. Congress: XLIX. Dec. 7, 1885 to March 4, 1887.

Vol. 25. Congress: L. Dec. 5, 1887 to March 4, 1889.

STATUTE-MERCHANT, STATUTE-STAPLE. A species of estate defeasible on condition subsequent; a security for money.

The statute-merchant was entered into before the chief magistrate of some trading town, pursuant to 13 Edw. I (1286), de mercatoribus; the statute-staple, pursuant to 27 Edw. III (1354), c. 9, before the mayor of the staple, q. v. They are both securities for debts acknowledged to be due; and were originally permitted only among traders, for the benefit of commerce. They allowed the debtor to be imprisoned, his goods seized, and his lands delivered to the creditor till out of the income the balance of the claim was paid in full. While the creditor held the lands he was tenant

United States, 113 id. 571 (1885), cases; Barbour v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 102 (1885).

[1] Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. *18 (1829); McDonald v. Hovey, 110 U. S. 628 (1884).

[2] Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. *280–82 (1831).

[3] See Dwarris, Statutes, 626.

[4] Held an extra session.

[1] Held an extra session.

by statute-merchant or statute-staple.[1] Compare EXTENT, 2.

STAY. To interrupt, arrest, suspend. Used also as a noun: as, stay of judgment, sentence, execution, or other proceeding. See STET; SUPERSEDEAS.

May result from an agreement, an order of court, or the operation of law — as, when an appeal, a writ of error, or a certiorari is perfected by bail being furnished and the requirements of the law in other respects observed. See ERROR, 2, (3), Writ of.

Stay-laws. Statutes designed to relieve debtors against the oppressive enforcement of remedies for the collection of debts in time of general financial distress. See IMPAIR.

STEAL. To commit larceny, q. v.

But the words "he stole my patterns" are not actionable as imputing the felonious taking of property if the defendant meant that the plaintiff fraudulently used knowledge which he had acquired.[2]

Receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, is a misdemeanor.[3]

The possession of goods recently stolen creates a presumption that the person in whose possession they are found is the thief, but not that he got them by burglary or house-breaking.[4]

The temporary retention of chattels alleged to have been stolen, pending the prosecution of the supposed thief, is within the police power.[5]

Stealing public property is a felony. Concealers and receivers are punishable alike.[6]

By 25 Geo. II (1752), c. 36, to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen, with "no questions asked," or other words to that effect, subjects both the advertiser and the printer to a forfeiture of fifty pounds each.[7] See COMPOUND, 1 (4).

As to stolen bills of lading, notes, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness, see BEARER; LOST, 2; NEGOTIABLE.

Compare HOOK; PLUNDER. See RESTITUTION; SEARCH-WARRANT.

STEAM. See NEGLIGENCE; POLICE, 2; RAILROAD; SHIP, 2.

STEER. See CATTLE.

STENCIL-PLATE. See BRAND.

STENOGRAPHER. A short-hand writer or reporter who officially takes down testimony, and the rulings and charge in a case on trial.

His transcript of evidence is admissible when he testifies that he took the testimony in short-hand, that the transcript is correct, and exhibits all the testimony received.

A deposition should be read to and signed by the witness, after being written out in long-hand.[1]

The official stenographic notes that, by direction of a statute, are the "best authority in any matter of dispute," are the notes made up under the eye and with the approval of the court.[2] In Pennsylvania, also, his note of a bill of exceptions taken to the admission or rejection of testimony is sufficient, without the bill being actually sealed by the judge.[3] But a county is not liable for a transcript of his notes, unless made by order of court, or filed in performance of his general duty.[4]

His notes are still "in writing" although not transcribed. Where a record was incomplete for want of transcription not attributable to the plaintiff in error, the case was remanded for a new trial.[5]

A transcribed report cannot be used to contradict the witness on a subsequent trial, the legislature not having made the report evidence for any purpose.[6] But a transcript may be used on the hearing of a bill in equity for a new trial in a suit at law, the stenographer testifying to the correctness of the copy, that the witnesses were sworn, etc.[7]

His minutes of the testimony given on a former trial by a witness who has left the jurisdiction are admissible.[8]

But, before such testimony can be used in a later trial, the examination must have been completed, and the stenographer must testify to the accuracy of his report.[9]

Where a stenographer was employed by the master in a case to take testimony at the accounting before him, the expense was not allowed as costs, the parties not having agreed thereto.[10]

STEP-CHILD. See CHILD.

STET. L. Let it stand or be stayed.

Stet processus. Let the process stand; let proceeding be stayed.

An entry on a record, by leave of court, by which a plaintiff agreed that no further proceeding should be had. It prevented a defendant who became insolvent

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 160.

[2] Dunnell v. Fiske, 11 Metc. 554-55 (1846). See Alexander v. State, 12 Tex. 540 (1854); 1 Sprague, 196; 8 F. R. 247-49; 10 Oreg. 366.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 132.

[4] Taliaferro v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 413 (1883), cases; Jenkins v. State, 62 Wis. 49 (1885); 2 Whart. Cr. Law, § 1605.

[5] Simpson v. St. John, 98 N. Y. 363 (1885).

[6] 1 Sup. R. S. 183-84.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 134.

[1] Re Cary, 9 F. R. 754 (1881).

[2] Taylor v. Preston, 79 Pa. 442 (1875); Act 15 May, 1874.

[3] Chase v. Vandegrift, 88 Pa. 217 (1878); Act 8 May, 1876.

[4] Briggs v. Erie County, 98 Pa. 570 (1881); Lehigh County v. Meyer, 102 id. 479 (1883).

[5] Nichols v. Harris, 32 La. An. 646 (1880).

[6] Phares v. Barber, 61 Ill. 272 (1871).

[7] Brown v. Luehrs, 79 Ill. 581 (1875).

[8] Stewart v. First Nat. Bank of Ft. Huron, 43 Mich. 257 (1880).

[9] Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438 (1880).

[10] Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatch. 507 (1880). See also Gunther v. Liverpool, &c. Ins. Co., 20 id. 390 (1883). See generally 10 Am. Law Rec. 257; 10 Law J. 337; 1 Leg. News, 565, 592, 593, 604; 7 Mo. Law Mag. 194.

pending the action from obtaining judgment as in case of nonsuit.

STICK IN THE BARK. See LITERA.

STIPITAL. See STIRPS.

STIPULATION.[1] 1. The mode of furnishing security or bail in admiralty; also, the instrument by which this is done.

The name given to the securities which the parties are required to furnish or enter into, as a means of enabling the court to enforce justice.[2]

Corresponds to "bond" and "recognizance" at common law. No particular form of words is used: the instrument states the pendency of the suit, and that the required obligation is assumed; it is acknowledged, but need not be sealed. A deposit of money may be made instead. The stipulations now in use are for costs, for costs and damages, for value, to appear and abide the decree, or to pay money recovered.[3]

Stipulator. An obligor or surety.

Stipulators, like sureties, are not liable beyond the amount specified, except for costs and interest by way of damages in case of default to make payment pursuant to the terms of the obligation.[4]

The court may require the security to be kept good.[5]

2. An agreement between counsel respecting business before a court.

Generally, by rules or practice of the courts, is to be reduced to writing. May be to refer or to postpone a cause, to admit one or more facts, to waive an objection, to waive a trial by jury, or the like. Once filed, becomes part of the record, to be withdrawn only by leave of court.[6] See FINDING, Special.

STIRPS. L. A root, stock; source of descent.

Taking property by representation is called succession in stirpes or per stirpes, according to the roots; since all branches inherit the share that their root, whom they represent, would have inherited. Whence "stipital distribution." Opposed, distribution per capita, by heads or individuals.[7] See CAPUT, Per capita.

STOCK.[8] 1. The animals which are used with, supported by, or raised upon a farm or land.[9]

In its popular sense includes the domestic animals, cattle, etc., raised and used upon a farm.[1]

Domestic animals or beasts collected, used or raised on a farm: as, a stock of cattle or of sheep; called also "live-stock."[2] See ANIMAL.

2. Articles accumulated in a business or calling for use and disposal in its regular prosecution. See STORE; ROLLING-STOCK.

3. (1) Public funds; the indebtedness of a state or government.

"The reasonable expenses of a prosecutor are by statute to be allowed him out of the common stock."[3]

Shares in a public stock are represented by scrip issued to creditors, or by entries in official books kept in government offices. The funded national debt of Great Britain is understood to stand wholly in the form of stocks. In this country, an issue of bonds has been the more common form, though there have been Federal and State stocks.[4]

Since the introduction of the system of borrowing upon interminable annuities, "stock," instead of signifying the security upon which loans are advanced, has come to signify the principal of the loans themselves.[5]

(2) The capital of an incorporated company in transferable shares of a specified amount. In a restricted sense, refers to the interests of the respective shareholders. The aggregate of these interests may, in cases, be denominated the stock of the corporation.[6]

Capital stock. In its general acceptation, money invested in business; "capital" is a synonymous term. In this general sense it is money invested in business operations, whether that business be conducted by a single individual, a partnership, a corporation, or government; and it makes no difference how the money is obtained, whether by labor, by borrowing, or otherwise. If the money is borrowed it is represented in the hands of the lender by bonds, notes or other papers, with the government by governmental securities, sometimes called "stocks." But in such cases the lender is not a stockholder in the business. So far as the party

[1] L. stipula, a straw. The early Romans, upon making a solemn promise, broke a stipula, and, joining the parts, acknowledged the agreement. See The Nation, Vol. 35, p. 445; 36 id. 12.

[2] 2 Conkling, Adm. 80.

[3] Benedict, Adm. §§ 489, 491, 493; 3 Bl. Com. 291, 108.

[4] The Wanata, 95 U. S. 605-18 (1877), cases.

[5] The City of Hartford, 11 F. R. 89 (1882).

[6] R. S. § 649; 94 U. S. 277; 106 id. 622, 634; 103 id. 554.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 217, 204; 41 N. J. E. 504.

[8] A thing "stuck" or fixed; hence a post, trunk, stem, a fixed store, fund, capital, cattle, etc.,— Skeat.

[9] [Graham v. Davidson, 2 Dev. & B. 171 (N. C., 1838).

[1] Baker v. Baker, 51 Wis. 546 (1881), Cole, C. J.

[2] Inman v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 60 Iowa, 461 (1883), Day, C. J.; State v. Clark, 65 id. 338 (1884).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 362.

[4] Abbott's Law Dict.

[5] [Mozley & Whiteley's Law Dict.

[6] [Bailey v. New York Central, &c. R. Co., 22 Wall. 637 (1874), cases, Clifford, J.; State Railroad Taxes, 92 U. S. 603 (1875); Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Vance, 96 id. 455 (1877).

himself is concerned, if the money is invested in his business, it is his capital or stock in trade. This is the general meaning of the term. But when it refers to a chartered or joint-stock company, made up of individuals, it has a somewhat more limited signification. It then means the money advanced by the corporators or members as capital, which, for convenience, is divided into equal amounts called "shares," for which each member is entitled to a certificate, showing the number of shares which he has in his company; or, in other words, the amount of money he has furnished to the common stock; which certificate is the evidence of his being a stockholder. Referring to a corporation, especially in connection with "subscribing" to its stock, means capital stock.[1]

In the case of an individual, "capital stock" means the fund of money or the property on which he does business; in the case of a voluntary association of persons for conducting a business, as, a partnership, the fund of money or property controlled by one or more of the associates, employed as a basis of a business, on which and with which the business is to be commenced and carried on. "Capital" alone means this.[2]

The capital stock of a corporation is the amount of capital prescribed to be contributed at the outset by stockholders, for the purposes of the corporation.[3]

The funds of a corporation may fluctuate — may be increased by surplus profits or be diminished by losses; but its capital stock remains inviolable, unless changed by legislative authority.[4]

The capital stock of a corporation is that money or property, which is put into a single corporate fund, by those who by subscription therefor become members of the corporate body.[4]

That fund becomes the property of the aggregate body only. A share of the capital stock is the right to partake, according to the amount put into the fund, of the surplus profits of the corporation; and ultimately, on the dissolution of it, of so much of the fund thus created as remains unimpaired and is not liable for the debts of the corporation.[1]

Referring to a corporation, the property contributed by its stockholders or otherwise obtained by it, to the extent required by its charter.[3]

"Capital stock" and "shares of capital stock" are distinct things. Thus, the capital stock of a bank is the money paid or authorized to be paid in as the basis of the business and the means of conducting its operations. It represents whatever it may be invested in. If a large surplus be accumulated, that does not become a part of it. The amount authorized cannot be increased without legal authority. If there are losses which impair it, there can be no formal reduction without the like sanction. Shares of capital stock in a bank are usually represented by "certificates." Each holder is a cestui que trust to the extent of his ownership. The shares are held and may be bought, sold, and taxed like other property. Each share represents an aliquot part of the capital stock. The holder cannot touch a dollar of the principal. He is entitled only to share in the dividends and profits. Upon a dissolution of the institution, each shareholder is entitled to a proportionate share of the residuum, after satisfying all claims. The liens of creditors are prior to his. He, and not the corporation, can vote upon his shares. The capital stock and the shares thereof may both be taxed.[3]

Capital stock exempt from taxation is that which in the legitimate operations of the corporation comes to represent the capital. The capital stock of a bank usually consists of money paid in to be used in banking.[4]

In revenue laws, the capital stock of a corporation often means the capital stock actually issued, not the capital authorized to be issued.[5]

The capital stock of a corporation, especially unpaid subscriptions, is a trust fund for the benefit of the general creditors. The board of directors, except by fair and honest dealing and for value, cannot release an obligation to pay a subscription.[6]

The capital stock of a national banking association is a fund set apart for the payment of its debts; a substitute for the personal liability which subsists in private corporations. The creditors have a lien upon it. If diverted, they may follow it as far as it can be traced and subject it to the payment of their claims, except as against holders who have taken it bona fide for value and without notice. It is publicly pledged for the security of creditors. Unpaid stock is as much a part of the assets as is the cash paid in upon it.[7]

[1] State v. Cheraw, &c. R. Co., 16 S. C. 528-29 (1881), Simpson, C. J.

[2] San Francisco v. Spring Valley Water Works, 68 Cal. 529 (1883), Thornton, J. See also People v. Commissioners of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 219-20 (1861), Comstock, C. J.; approved, 22 Wall. 636, ante.

[3] State v. Morristown Fire Association, 23 N. J. L. 196 (1851); Seignouret v. Home Ins. Co., 24 F. R. 332 (1885), cases: 25 Am. Law Reg. 32-34 (1886), cases. On the illegal issue and over-issue, see 27 Am. Law Reg. 667-92 (1888), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 696-704 (1887).

[4] Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co., 75 N. Y. 216 (1878), Folger, J.; Barclay v. Culver, 30 Hun, 5 (1883).

[1] Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co., ante.

[2] Williams v. Western Union Tel. Co., 93 N. Y. 188 (1883), cases. See also 30 Ark. 693; 83 Ill. 602; 40 Ga. 98; 8 id. 486; 52 Pa. 177; 18 Wis. 291.

[3] Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 686-87 (1877), cases, Swayne, J.

[4] Railroad Companies v. Gaines, 97 U. S. 707 (1878), Waite, C. J.

[5] Commonwealth v. Texas, &c. R. Co., 98 Pa. 100 (1881).

[6] Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 620 (1873), cases.

[7] Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 60-61 (1875), cases, Swayne,

The directors of the corporation are the trustees of the capital stock. The trust is to be managed for the benefit of the stockholders during its life, and of its creditors in the event of its dissolution. The trustees are bound to call in what is unpaid. They cannot squander or give away the capital paid in. Accepting and holding a certificate of shares makes the holder liable to all the responsibilities of a shareholder.[1]

Certificate of stock. Not a security for money, nor a negotiable instrument in the strict sense; simply a muniment and evidence of the holder's title to a described share or interest in stock, as, in the property and franchises of a corporation.[2]

Does not partake of the character of a negotiable instrument. A bona fide assignee, with power to transfer the stock, takes the certificate subject to the equities which existed against his assignor.[3]

A transfer not entered on the books of the corporation may be valid against all the world except a subsequent purchaser in good faith.[4]

Deferred stock. Irredeemable railroad bonds, not entitled to interest until certain common stock has received six per centum, and after that to share pari passu with said common stock, do not constitute "deferred stock," in form or substance. They more nearly resemble a perpetual loan, with the interest indefinitely postponed, the owners having no rights as stockholders.[5]

Preferred stock. "Preferred," "preference," "preferential" or "guaranteed" shares of stock, as they are indifferently called, are issued by incorporations which have expended their original capital, in order to obtain further capital. The owners are entitled to profits to a certain extent in preference to other creditors. Opposed, common stock.[6]

The object of issuing "preferred" stock is to strengthen the company's standing or to enlarge its business. A crisis having been reached, the old stockholders are unwilling to risk more money in the enterprise, yet are ready to give those who will do so a preference in any profits which the increased means may enable the concern to make. The company cannot pay dividends with such stock. The holders are stockholders, not creditors. The question of the ability to pay dividends or interest upon it will be decided by the court. The declaring of dividends or interest on "common stock" is discretionary with the directors. The right of a holder of preferred stock extends only to a priority of dividends out of profits actually earned.[1]

Stock associations. A "joint-stock association" or "company" is a union of persons owning a capital stock devoted to a common purpose, under an organization analogous to that of a corporation; or, it is a body upon which some of the privileges or powers of a corporation have been conferred. A "joint-stock corporation" is a fully incorporated body, owning and managing a stock capital.[2]

A "joint-stock company" is a partnership with shares of capital transferable without the express consent of all the partners; that is, no delectus personarum exists.[3]

A partnership made up of many persons acting under articles of association, for the purpose of carrying on a partnership business, and having a capital stock, divided into shares transferable at the pleasure of the holder. Never used, in Massachusetts, of a corporation created by an act of the legislature, and authorized to issue certificates of stock.[4]

English joint-stock companies are not pure corporations, but are intermediate between corporations as known to the common law and ordinary partnerships. They are so far clothed with corporate powers that they may be treated in this country, for the purpose of taxation at least, as foreign artificial bodies, or corporations.[5]

Stock-exchange. An association of persons who deal in stocks as a business; also, the building or room maintained by the association for the public sale of stocks.

J.; County of Morgan v. Allen, 103 id. 506 (1880); Bissit v. Kentucky River Nav. Co., 15 F. R. 353 (1882); ib. 359–65, cases.

[1] Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 47–48 (1875), cases.

[2] [Bailey v. New York Central R. Co., 22 Wall. 636 (1874), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Mechanics' Bank v. New York, &c. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 611, 627 (1856).

[4] Parrott v. Byers, 40 Cal. 614 (1871). As to risks in purchasing, see 22 Cent. Law J. 3, 269 (1886), cases. On compelling issue of new certificate, where old negligently canceled, see St. Romes v. Cotton Press Co., 127 U. S. 619 (1888), cases.

[5] Philadelphia & Reading R. Co.'s Appeal, 39 Leg. Int. 98 (Pa., 1882).

[6] Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 81 (1875), Cooley, J. See also State v. Cheraw, &c. R. Co., 16 S. C. 530–31 (1881); St. John v. Erie R. Co., 22 Wall. 136 (1874); Warren v. King, 109 U. S. 389 (1883); N. Y. Central R. Co. v. Nickals, 119 id. 296, 308 (1887); Mackintosh v. Flint, 32 F. R. 350 (1887); Gilkey v. Paine, 80 Me. — (1888); 20 Am. Law Rev. 633–49 (1881), cases; 139 Mass. 9; 24 Hun, 360; 45 N. Y. 468; 78 id. 159; 84 id. 157; 8 R. I. 359.

[1] Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, ante.

[2] [1 Abbott's Law Dict. 652, 654.] See Smith, Contr. 326.

[3] [1 Pars. Contr. 121.

[4] Attorney-General v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 121 Mass. 596 (1877), cases, Endicott, J. See also 1 Disney, 90 (1855).

[5] Oliver v. Liverpool, &c. Ins. Co., 100 Mass. 531, 538 (1868). See Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. 566, 573 (1870).

The persons transacting business professionally "on the exchange" are either brokers or jobbers: the former are agents merely for customers; the latter deal for themselves, at the same time making purchases and sales for customers, chiefly by means of "time bargains."[1]

Stock-exchange boards are voluntary associations for business purposes, with elective membership, and provisions for a right in each member to assign his "seat" to be sold to an approved purchaser. The number of members being limited, the right to a seat at the board has a moneyed value. When a member fails to perform his contracts, or becomes insolvent, he can no longer be a member, at least until he resumes payment; and his seat may be sold for his benefit, or for that of his creditors among the other members of the board to the exclusion of outside creditors — the seat not being a matter of absolute purchase, but incumbered with conditions of tenure not imposed by the member, and which violate no principle of public policy.[2] See further EXCHANGE.

Stockholder. The owner of one or more shares of stock, either state or corporation; a shareholder. What he "holds" is strictly a certificate of ownership.

Within the meaning of a statute, a person who holds stock, issued in his name, may be regarded as a stockholder, as well as the person who owns it.[3]

A stockholder is an integral part of the corporation, and is constructively before the court in all proceedings touching the body.[4]

The liability of a subscriber is several. By subscribing he becomes a separate debtor to the company. His subscription may be enforced without the joinder of other subscribers. Where the object is to wind up the affairs, all the shareholders, as far as ascertainable, should be made parties, in order to equalize the burdens and avoid multiplicity.[5]

The individual liability of shareholders in a corporation is a creature of statute. But, on failure of a bank, in which each is liable for twice the amount of his shares, a suit in equity by or for all the creditors is the appropriate mode of enforcing payment.[6]

A certificate is not necessary to perfect a subscription. All that is needed, as to creditors, is that the subscriber shall have bound himself to become a contributor to the fund which the capital stock represents.[7]

In a national bank, the shareholders are individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all engagements of the association, to the extent of the amount of the stock of each shareholder, at the par value, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. This liability may be enforced through a receiver appointed by the comptroller.[1]

The separate property of a married woman who holds stock in a national bank may be charged with an assessment thereon.[2]

At common law, the individual property of the shareholder was not liable for the debts of the corporation. Such liability exists now by statutes. In a national bank it exists by contract from assent to the foregoing provision in accepting a charter. That liability, as stated, is several. It cannot be made joint; the shareholders are not guarantors or sureties one for another. The insolvency of one shareholder, or his absence, does not affect the liability of another, nor does the fact that the bank itself is a holder. To fix the liability of each shareholder, ascertain the whole amount of the par value of all the stock held by all the stockholders, and the amount of deficit to be paid after exhausting the assets of the bank; and then apply the rule that each share shall contribute such sum as will bear the same proportion to the whole amount of the deficit as his stock bears to the whole amount of the capital stock at its par value.[3]

A purchaser of national bank stock, who, to conceal ownership and escape individual liability, transfers the stock to a person pecuniarily irresponsible, is still liable, as long as he is the actual owner.[4]

The responsibility of a holder ceases upon surrender of his certificate and delivery of a power of attorney intended and sufficient to effect a transfer of the stock; unless, perhaps, the transferee avows an intention not to have the formal entry made in the books of the bank for a period of time unreasonably long.[5]

To enable a stockholder in a corporation to sustain in equity in his own name a suit founded on a right of action existing in the corporation itself, there must exist as a foundation some action or threatened action of the managing board of directors or trustees which is beyond the authority conferred on them by their charter or other source of organization; or, such a fraudulent transaction completed or contemplated by

---

[1] Brown's Law Dict.; 2 South. Law Rev. 821–45 (1876), cases; L. R., 4 Ch. Ap. 8; L. R., 4 C. P. (Ex. Ch.) 36; L. R., 4 Ex. 81.

[2] Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523 (1876), Miller, J.; Nicholson v. Gooch, 5 El. & B. 999 (1856); 9 Reporter, 305; 5 W. N. C. 36; Pancost v. Jowen, 93 Pa. 66 (1879); Dos Passos, Stock Brokers, &c., 14, 87, 96.

[3] State v. Leete, 16 Nev. 242 (1881).

[4] Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 59 (1875).

[5] Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 211–15 (1879), cases.

[6] Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 217–18 (1879); Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520 (1874); Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co. v. Applegate, 21 W. Va. 172 (1882), cases.

[7] Hawley v. Upton, 102 U. S. 316 (1880), cases. See generally Gray v. Town of York, 15 Blatch. 338–39 (1878), cases; Foreman v. Bigelow, 4 Cliff. 545–49 (1878), cases; Clark v. Bever, 31 F. R. 676–77 (1887), note; 25 Cent. Law J. 411 (1887), cases. On subscriptions by municipal corporations, see Kelley v. Milan, 127 U. S. 150 (1888), cases.

[1] R. S. §§ 5151, 5234, cases.

[2] Witters v. Sowles, 32 F. R. 767 (1887), cases. Case of a bill filed by a receiver to enforce payment of an assessment, Bundy v. Cocke, 128 U. S. 185 (1888).

[3] United States v. Knox, 102 U. S. 424–25 (1880), cases, Swayne, J.

[4] Davis v. Stevens, 17 Blatch. 259 (1879); Crescent City Nat. Bank v. Case, 99 U. S. 628 (1878).

[5] Whitney v. Butler, 118 U. S. 655, 662 (1886).

As to non-liability for par value, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 161–65 (1887), cases; as to prohibitions on transfer, ib. 104–6 (1887), cases.

the acting managers, in connection with some other party, or among themselves, or with other shareholders, as will result in serious injury to the corporation or to the interests of the other shareholders; or, where the board of directors, or a majority of them, are acting for their own interest, in a manner destructive of the corporation itself, or of the rights of the other shareholders; or, where the majority of the shareholders themselves are oppressively and illegally pursuing a course, in the name of the corporation, which is in violation of the rights of the other shareholders, and which can only be restrained by the aid of a court of equity. Possibly other cases may arise in which, to prevent irremediable injury, or a total failure of justice, the court would be justified in exercising its powers. The complaining shareholder must first make an earnest, not a simulated, effort with the managing body to induce remedial action on their part, and this must be made apparent to the court. If time permits, he must show, if he fails with the directors, that he has made an honest effort to obtain action by the stockholders as a body, in the matter. And he must show a case, if this is not done, where it could not be done, or it was not reasonable to require it.[1]

The capital stock of a corporation exists for the benefit of the creditors whenever their interests require it. Its payment can be enforced in modes not available to the corporation and without using its name. Creditors' bills in the names of individual creditors, whether by judgment or otherwise, proceedings by assignees in bankruptcy either directly by bill or by petition, and proceedings by insolvent assignees or receivers under direction of the proper courts, are the ordinary modes; in all which it is essential that there should be an ascertainment of the fact of insolvency, of the exhaustion of all other assets, of the amount of the debts due by the corporation, of the amount of capital stock required for the discharge of those debts, and an assessment and call upon the stockholders for the payment of the amount due from each. If the contract of subscription is without conditions relieving the stockholders from paying the full par value of the stock, the call may be made by the directors, and if the corporation is sui juris and has not passed into the hands of assignees or receivers, the proceeding to recover the money may be prosecuted by the corporation in its own name. If, however, the corporation refuses to act, or is disabled, either by the terms of its contract or from legal incapacity by reason of insolvency, the assessment must be made by a court having jurisdiction of the matter and the parties, in some suitable proceeding by way of bill or petition; and the court will either order an assessment to be made upon each stockholder of the amount to be paid by him, and upon which an action can be tried in the common-law courts, or a decree can be made directly against each stockholder who has been made a party and served with process, for the payment of the money due by him, and such decree can be enforced by immediate execution process.[1]

Letters of administration are sufficient evidence of authority in an administrator to transfer stock. On the same footing is the trustee of an insolvent, and an executor. In general, the transfer agent is not to look beyond the certificate or letters of appointment of such person. He may demand inspection of a will, especially where stock is held in trust for a person named. Because the corporation is a trustee of the property and title of each owner of stock, it may demand this evidence of authority to make a transfer.[2]

A discretionary power to transfer stock cannot be delegated; a mere ministerial power may be. But a ratification of the delegation of a discretionary power would validate the transfer made.[3]

A power of attorney to transfer stock is valid, though executed in blank. The right to insert the name of a transferee is implied. The commercial usage is not to insert the name.[4]

The pledgee of stock may vote on it without losing his character as a pledgee.[5]

Where shares of stock are pledged as collateral, the pledgee reserving the right to sell in case of default and of causing a transfer to him on the books of the corporation, until the pledgor's rights are foreclosed by a sale, he may vote the stock, no statute providing otherwise.[6]

See further BANK, 2 (2); CALL, 5; CARRY, 6; CONSPIRACY; CORPORATION; DIRECTOR; DIVIDEND, 8; PROXY; SCRIP; SUBSCRIBE, 2; TAX, 2; VOTE.

STOCKS. A contrivance for inflicting punishment, consisting of a frame, acting like a large clamp, with openings for the legs, or legs and arms, and which, when adjusted, held the delinquent in a sitting posture.[7] Compare RACK.

STOLEN. See STEAL.

STONE. See QUARRY; WRITING.

STOP. See ESTOPPEL; ORDER, 2.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. The right which arises to an unpaid vendor to resume the possession, with which he has parted, of goods sold upon credit, before they come into the possession of a vendee who has become insolvent, bankrupt, or pecuniarily embarrassed.[8]

An equitable extension, recognised by the courts of common law, of the seller's lien for the price of goods

[1] Hawes v. City of Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 457, 460 (1881), cases, Miller, J; Huntington v. Palmer, ib. 482 (1881); City of Detroit v. Dean, 106 id. 537 (1882); Bulkley v. Big Muddy Iron Co., 77 Mo. 106 (1882), cases.

[1] Lane's Appeal, 105 Pa. 69-63, 60 (1884), cases, Green, J.

[2] Bayard v. Farmers' &c. Bank, 53 Pa. 232, 235 (1866), cases, Strong, J.

[3] Bohlen's Estate, 75 Pa. 304 (1874).

[4] German Association v. Sendmeyer, 50 Pa. 67 (1865); Denny v. Lyon, 38 id. 101 (1860).

[5] Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 29-31 (1882), cases.

[6] State v. Smith, 15 Oreg. 98, 112 (1887), cases.

[7] See Webster's Dict.; Penny Mag. Vol. 1, 54 (1832).

[8] Inslee v. Lane, 57 N. H. 457 (1876), Foster, C. J.

of which the buyer has acquired the property, but not the possession. The right is paramount to any lien created by usage or by agreement between the carrier and the consignee for a general balance of account, but not to the carrier's lien for freight.[1]

The right is personal to the consignor. An exercise of the right is not a rescission of the contract, but, at most, a revesting of possession in the vendor. The right must be exercised while the goods are in transit. That ends when the goods come into the possession, actual or constructive, of the vendee or his agent; but an ending as to a part is not an ending as to all the goods, unless the contract is entire. The termination may be accelerated by the vendee; but it may not be prolonged by the carrier. The right is defeated by the consignee negotiating the bill of lading to a bona fide transferee for value.[2] See REVENDICATION.

STOPPING-PLACE. See USUAL.

STORE. 1, v. To keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received.

Safe-keeping is the principal object of deposit, not consumption or sale.[3] See BAILMENT.

2, n. In England, is never applied to a place where goods are sold, only to a place where they are deposited. In this country, denotes both of these places.[4]

A shop for the sale of goods of any kind, by wholesale or retail. That is, we use "store" for store-house, a word properly meaning the quantity of a thing accumulated or deposited, for the place of deposit. But "shop" may refer to a place where a mechanic art is carried on.[5]

That is, again, "store" is of larger signification than "shop." The latter word frequently designates the place in which a mechanic pursues his trade.[6]

The common use of "store," when applied to a building, is to designate a place where traffic is carried on in goods, wares and merchandise, and not to designate a "store-house."[7]

Store fixtures. Store fittings or furniture, which are peculiarly adapted to make a room a store rather than something else. "Store" designates a shop or warehouse, never a factory. Therefore, fixtures in a shoe factory are not covered by the expression "store fixtures," in a policy of insurance."[1]

Store orders. Legislation intended to prevent persons sui juris from making their own contracts for the sale of labor or merchandise is unconstitutional; as, a statute providing that no person shall issue, for the payment of labor, any order or paper than such as is redeemable in money.[2] See CIRCULATION.

STORES. See PROVISIONS; STATION, 1.

STORM. See ACCIDENT; DANGERS; TEMPEST.

STORY, JOSEPH.

Was born September 18, 1779, at Marblehead, and died September 10, 1845, at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

He was graduated from Harvard college in 1798, standing second in his class; and in 1801 he was admitted to the bar at Salem.

From 1805 to 1808 he was a representative in the legislature; in 1808 he was sent to the lower house of Congress from the Essex district; and in 1810, having declined a re-election to Congress, he was returned to the legislature, of which, in January, 1811, he became speaker.

November 18, 1811, without solicitation, he was appointed a justice of the United States Supreme Court, which position he filled, with distinction, to the day of his death, thirty-four years later. From the death of Marshall in July, 1835, to the appointment of Taney in March, 1836, he acted as chief justice.

His decisions as judge of the circuit court for the first district are contained in two volumes of reports by Gallison, five by Mason, three by Sumner (Charles), and three by his son William Wetmore Story. His decisions in the Supreme Court are found among the decisions of that Court comprised in volumes seven, eight, and nine of Cranch's reports, the twelve volumes of Wheaton, the sixteen of Peters, and the first three of Howard.

In 1829 he became law professor at Harvard university on a foundation specially established for him by Nathan Dane for the delivery of lectures on general law and equity. The lectures prepared in discharge of the duties of this position were delivered extemporaneously, and so were not preserved. But there is scarcely a branch of the law that he did not illustrate and enlarge — constitutional, admiralty, prize, patent, copyright, insurance, real estate, commercial law so-called, and equity.

In 1833 he published a Commentary, in two volumes, 8vo, on the "Constitution of the United States." Four editions of this work have been issued up to 1889, the original text being preserved intact.

In 1834 appeared his "Conflict of Laws," eight editions of which have been issued, the third being the last edition under his supervision.

In 1835 he published his "Equity Jurisprudence," a work of which there have been thirteen authorized editions, the fifth being the last revised by the author

---

[1] Potts v. New York, &c. R. Co., 131 Mass. 457 (1881), cases.

[2] See Audenried v. Randall, 3 Cliff. 106-9 (1868), cases; Wheelhouse v. Parr, 141 Mass. 595 (1886), cases; Bethell v. Clark, 19 Q. B. D. 553 (1887): 36 Alb. L. J. 446; 1 Law Quar. Rev. 397 (1885); 14 Cent. Law J. 242-44 (1882), cases; 24 id. 387 (1887), cases as to what is a delivery; 1 Am. St. R. 312-14, cases; Story, Sales, §§ 343-47; 2 Kent, 702; 5 Wait, Act. & Def. 612.

[3] See O'Niel v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. 127 (1849); 16 Barb. 129; 6 Wend. 628; 5 Minn. 503.

[4] Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 440 (1847), Storrs, J.

[5] State v. Canney, 19 N. H. 137 (1848), Gilchrist, C. J.

[6] Sparrenberger v. State, 53 Ala. 483 (1875), Brickell, Chief Justice.

[7] Hittinger v. Westford, 135 Mass. 259 (1883), Colburn, J.; Boston Loan Co. v. Boston, 137 id. 335 (1884).

[1] Thurston v. Union Fire Ins. Co., 17 F. R. 129 (1883); 16 Gray, 359.

[2] Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431 (1886): Act 20 June, 1881.

himself; and in 1838 he published his "Equity Pleadings," of which there have been nine editions, the third, issued in 1844, by Story himself, the fourth, by Charles Sumner, containing notes left by Story.

In 1839 he published his "Agency." The original text is preserved in the ninth, the last edition.

His "Bailments" seems to have been prepared next. The fourth edition of this work, now in its ninth edition, was issued in 1846, the revised matter consisting chiefly of notes to the original text left by Story.

In 1841 he published his work on "Partnership." Of this there have been seven editions, the second, issued in 1847, being the last edition embodying changes made by the author.

In 1843 appeared his "Bills of Exchange." The original text is retained in the four editions.

In 1845 came his "Promissory Notes." Of this treatise there have been seven editions, the second, issued in 1847, containing the latest notes prepared by the author.

The popular treatises known as Story on "Contracts" and on "Sales of Personal Property" were published by his son, W. W. Story, the former in 1844, the latter in 1847. The son also published, in 1851, a life of his father, (2 vols., 8vo), and in 1854, a collection of his "Miscellaneous Writings."

The style of Joseph Story is characterized less by strength than by variety and fullness, his wide learning tending to make him somewhat diffuse. His experience at the bar was of too short duration to demonstrate his ability as an advocate.[1]

STOWAGE. See LADING, Bill of.

STRADDLE. In stock-brokers language, the double privilege of a "put and call;" securing to the holder the right to demand of the seller at an agreed price, within a given time, a certain number of shares of specified stock, or to require him to take within the time the same shares of stock.[2]

STRANDING. The striking of a vessel upon a rock, bank, reef, or the like.[3]

To constitute a "voluntary" stranding it is not necessary that there should have been a previous intention to injure the vessel, nor is that supposed to exist. It is sufficient that the vessel was selected to suffer the common peril instead of the whole of the associated risks, in order that the rest might be saved. A stranding is voluntary whenever the will of man in some degree contributes thereto, though existence of the particular reef or bank was not before known to the master, and though he did not intend to strand the vessel thereon; provided it sufficiently appears that in exposing the vessel he was aware that stranding was the chief risk incurred, and that it was not wholly unexpected by him.[4]

STRANGER. A person who has no direct interest in the subject-matter of a suit, and who has, hence, no right to make defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and appeal from the judgment.[5]

A person not a party or privy to an act, contract, or title; as, in saying that a "stranger" must know the extent of an agent's power.

Strangers are "third persons" generally — all persons in the world except parties and privies. For example, those who are in no way parties to a covenant, nor bound by it, are said to be strangers to the covenant.

See PARTY, 2; PRIVY, 2; NEGOTIABLE; NOTICE; RECORD; RES, Inter alios.

STRAW BAIL. A nominal or worthless person as a surety. A person who frequents the neighborhood of law-courts ready to be bail for any one on the payment of a fee.

Formerly such persons wore straw in their shoes as a sign of their occupation.[6]

"We have all heard of a race of men who used in former days to ply about our own courts of law, and who, from their manner of making known their occupation, were recognized by the name of 'straw shoes.' An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to meet with one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. 'Don't you remember . . ?' said the advocate. 'To be sure I do,' was the reply. 'Then come into the court and swear it.'"[7]

"During the process by which the English original writ of summons was gradually falling into disuse and the capias becoming in fact the first process, bail underwent a corresponding change. Originally, when the capias was a real arrest, the bail were two men of substance who bound themselves for the defendant's future appearance and obedience. By Blackstone's time common bail had degenerated to the two legal men-of-all-work — John Doe and Richard Roe. But there was an intermediate stage when the bail were required to be men of flesh and blood — money being of no consequence. Hence it became a regular profession to stand about the courts with straw in the shoes, signifying willingness to go any one's bail for a consideration. These were 'men of straw,' and the bail thus put in was 'straw bail.'"[8]

STRAY. A stray beast is one that has left an inclosure and wanders at large with-

[1] See Life of Story; 13 Alb. Law J. 90-92 (1876); American Cyclopaedia; 6 Am. Law Mag. 241; 1 U. S. Jur. 90, 102.

[2] [Harris v. Tumbridge, 83 N. Y. 95 (1880), Finch, J.

[3] Strong v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 106 (1865), Denio, C. J.; 18 Ohio, 66; 4 M. & S. 505; 1 Camp. 131; 8 id. 431; 4 id. 474; 4 B. & A. 34; 5 Q. B. D. 542; Arnould, Ins. §§ 297, 318.

[4] Star of Hope, 9 Wall. 203, 232 (1869), cases, Clifford, Justice.

[5] [Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 672 (1866), Clifford, J.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 523.

[6] Imperial Dict., tit. Bail.

[7] Quarterly Rev., Vol. xxxiii, 344 (1825).

[8] The Nation, No. 935, p. 467 (1884); 3 Bl. Com. 374, 287, 295.

out its owner, and beyond his control.[1] See ESTRAY.

STREAM. See AQUA, Currit, etc.; SPRING; WATER-COURSE.

STREET.[2] Strictly, a paved way or road, but now used for any way or road in a city or village.[3]

In common parlance, a road or highway.[4]

Prima facie, a public highway.[5]

As used upon a map of a town imports a public way for the free passage of its trade and commerce.[6]

A public way,—a highway or town way, or a way which has become public by dedication or prescription.[7]

Includes the whole surface and so much of the depth as is or can be used, not unfairly, for the ordinary purposes of a street.[8]

Includes the sidewalks.[9]

The word may not include a road owned by a private corporation, as, a toll-road within the boundaries of a city.[10]

A conveyance of land bounded by a street gives the grantee a title to the middle of the street, if the grantor owned thereto; and, presumptively, a lot bounded by a street extends to the middle of it.[11]

The owner of a lot abutting upon a public street owns to the center. His title is a fee burdened only by the easement in the public.[12]

Such owner has a special interest in the street differing from that of the general public.[13]

A street cannot be devoted to purposes inconsistent with street purposes without compensation being made to the abutting owners.[14]

A city must keep its streets in a safe condition for use. But this duty is relative, not absolute. Where a defect was created by the unauthorized act of a person not an officer of the city, the duty of the city to make repairs arises only after actual notice of the existence of the defect, or after such a lapse of time as would justify the imputation of negligence, if the defect or obstruction had not been discovered. What is such reasonable time is a question for a jury.[15]

See DEDICATION, 1; GUTTER; MAP; OBSTRUCT, 1; OPEN, 1 (7), 2 (13); PAVE; REPAIR, 2; ROAD; SIDEWALK; TELEGRAPH; WAY.

Street-car.[16] See RAILROAD; VEHICLE.

Street-sprinkler. See VEHICLE.

STRICT. In the sense of governed by exactest rule, rigorously regular and legal in form, rigidly interpreted or enforced, is used — of the construction of language, of the performance of a covenant, of proof of marriage in trials for bigamy and criminal conversation, and of settlements of land for remote descendants. See STRICTUS.

STRICTUS. L. Tightly drawn: exact; rigorous; strict, q. v.

Stricti juris. Of exact right; of strict law. See SURETY.

Strictissimi juris. Of the strictest right; subject to the most rigid construction or rigorous application of the rules of law.

An expression applied to licenses and grants to one or more individuals and in derogation of common right.

STRIKE. 1, v. See ACCOUNT, 1; BALANCE; BARGAIN; BATTERY; HAND, 1.

Strike off. See ATTORNEY; JURY; ROLL, p. 910, c. 2.

Struck off. Property at auction is "struck off" or "knocked down" when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer or by other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale.[1]

Strike out. See CANCEL.

2, n. A combination among laborers, or those employed by others, to compel an increase of wages, a change in the hours of labor, a change in the manner of conducting the business of the principal, or to enforce some particular policy in the character or number of the men employed, or the like.[2]

---

[1] Sturges v. Raymond, 27 Conn. 474 (1858).

[2] L. strata (via), paved (way).

[3] Brace v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 27 N. Y. 271 (1863).

[4] Sharett's Road, 8 Pa. 92 (1848); 4 S. & R. 106.

[5] Hamlin v. City of Norwich, 40 Conn. 25 (1873).

[6] City of Denver v. Clements, 6 Col. 486 (1877).

[7] Commonwealth v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 135 Mass. 551 (1881).

[8] Coverdale v. Charlton, L. R., 4 Q. B. D. 121 (1878).

[9] Taber v. Grafmiller, 109 Ind. 209 (1886).

[10] Wilson v. Allegheny City, 79 Pa. 272 (1875).

[11] Grier v. Sampson, 27 Pa. 190 (1856).

[12] Terre Haute, &c. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 129 (1883); Same v. Scott, 74 id. 38 (1881), cases; Columbus, &c. R. Co. v. Witherow, 82 Ala. 195 (1886), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 442-44 (1886), cases.

[13] Brakken v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 29 Minn. 42-43 (1881), cases; Sciota Valley R. Co. v. Lawrence, 38 Ohio St. 45 (1882); 24 Cent. Law J. 51 (1887), cases.

[14] Mahady v. Bushwick R. Co., 91 N. Y. 153 (1883); Story v. Elevated R. Co., 90 id. 122 (1882).

[15] Rehberg v. New York City, 91 N. Y. 142-43 (1883), cases, Andrews, C. J.; Ironton v. Kelley, 38 Ohio St. 52 (1882); Bennett v. Fifield, 13 R. I. 139-40 (1880), cases pro and con; Hanscom v. Boston, 141 Mass. 245 (1886), cases.

[16] See street railways, generally, 15 Am. Law Rev. 390-401 (1881), cases.

[1] Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill, 439 (1844).

[2] [Delaware, &c. R. Co. v. Bowns, 58 N. Y. 582, 583 (1874), Allen, J.

A party, contracting to deliver a quantity of any commodity (as, coal) may provide that he shall not be liable for non-delivery in the event of a strike preventing his obtaining the article.[1]

The fidelity of the employees of a railroad company is at the risk of the company. Therefore, to a suit for non-delivery of goods within time, the carrier cannot answer that the delivery was prevented by a strike, unless, perhaps, the interference come from discharged employees.[2]

If a society or union bring about a strike and uphold a striker's extraordinary demand, all who participate in the action of the association are chargeable with conspiracy.[3]

"If A is possessed of a stone-pit, and B, intending to discredit it and deprive him of the profits, imposes so great threats upon his workmen, and disturbs all comers, threatening to maim, and vex them with suits, if they buy stones, so that some desist from working, others from buying, etc., A shall have an action upon the case against B, for the profit of his mine is thereby impaired."[4]

Freedom is the policy of this country. But freedom does not imply a right in one person, alone or with others, directly or indirectly, to injure another in his lawful business, and to threaten him with annoyance or injury, for the sake of compelling him to buy his peace.[5]

With respect to strikes and boycotts generally, the States may be divided into (1) those in which the common law of conspiracy alone prevails, and (2) those in which the law is regulated by statute.

Arkansas, California, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Missouri, Nevada, New Jersey, and Tennessee follow, in substance, the section (Ch. VIII, § 163, sec. 6) in the New York Code which makes it a crime "to commit any act injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to trade or commerce, or for the perversion or obstruction of justice, or of the due administration of the laws."

Michigan, New York, Rhode Island, Texas, and Vermont have statutes to the effect that every person, who by himself or with others shall attempt by force, threats, or intimidation to prevent any other person from pursuing any employment he may think proper, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

In Kansas and Michigan it is a crime to combine to impede, by any act or by means of intimidation, the regular operation of any railroad company, or other incorporation, firm, or individual; or to hinder the running of any locomotive engine, freight or passenger train, except by due process of law.

It is a crime in Georgia and South Carolina for any one, knowing the fact, to persuade the servant of another to leave his employment, when such servant is under an attested contract.

In Alabama, Missouri, and Wisconsin an overt act is necessary to constitute a conspiracy a crime, except when a felony is the object.

In Indiana it is a crime to conspire to commit a felony.

In Colorado and Maine it has been made a crime to conspire to indict a person, or to do any other unlawful act.

In Delaware any railroad employee who, to aid, incite, or encourage a strike, shall abandon any train before it reaches its destination, or shall refuse to move the cars of another company, such company's employees then being on a strike, or if any person in aid of a strike shall molest or obstruct a railroad employee engaged in the discharge of his duty, or destroy the track, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Michigan, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania allow employees to combine to leave their employment, and to use peaceable means to persuade others to leave their employers.[1]

See BOYCOTTING; CARRIER; COMBINATION, 2; OBSTRUCT, 2; RIOT; TRADES-UNIONS.

STRIPES. See WHIPPING.

STRONG. See HAND, 2.

STRUCK. See STRIKE, 1.

STRUCTURE. Compare BUILDING; ERECT, 1.

Where a statute provided that for an injury caused by a structure legally placed upon a highway by a railroad company, the company, and not the person bound to keep the highway in repair, should be liable, it was held that by "structure" was meant some permanent stationary erection, rather than an object like a moving car or engine.[2]

Another statute authorizing a mechanic's lien on any house, manufactory, other building, appurtenance, fixture, or other structure, and on the interest of the owner in the lot on which the same stands or is removed to, for labor, machinery, or materials furnished by the contractor, for erecting, altering, repairing, or removing the same, was held not to authorize a lien upon a railroad, although, within the general signification of the term, a railroad may be considered a "structure."[3]

STUB. See COUPON, Stamps.

Stub duplicate of tax receipts, made by a county treasurer, as required by law, are evidence of the receipt of the tax, although they have never been returned to the county auditor, as directed by the same law.[4]

---

[1] [Delaware, &c. R. Co. v. Bowns, ante.

[2] Blackstock v. N. Y. & Erie R. Co., 20 N. Y. 48 (1859); Cooley, Torts, 640.

[3] Commonwealth v. Curren, 3 Pittsb. 143 (Pa., 1869).

[4] Bacon, Abridg. Actions on the Case, F., Bouv. ed. p. 119; Gwillim's ed. of 1797.

[5] Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 15 (1870), Chapman, C. J. See also Mapstrick v. Ramge, 9 Neb. 390 (1879).

[1] 22 Am. Law Rev. 241-42 (April, 1888), citing statutes, codes, cases. See also 21 id. 41-69 (1887), cases; 3 Kan. Law J. 389 (1886) — Weekly Law Bul. (1886): 10 Va. Law J. 391; 17 Cent. Law J. 163-66 (1883) — Can. Law Times. As to interference with railroad property in hands of a receiver, see Re Doolittle, 23 F. R. 544, 549 (1885), cases; United States v. Kane, 6 Cr. Law Mag. 530 (1885).

[2] Lee v. Barkhampted, 46 Conn. 217 (1878).

[3] Rutherfoord v. Cincinnati, &c. R. Co., 35 Ohio St. 563 (1880).

[4] State v. Ring, 29 Minn. 84 (1882).

STUDENT. See ABODE; GRADUATE; SCHOOL.

STUFF. See GOWN, 2.

STULTIFY.[1] To allege or prove oneself to have been non compos mentis.

In the time of Henry VI (1422-61), the reasoning that a man shall not be allowed to disable himself by pleading his own incapacity, because he cannot know what he did under such a situation, was adopted by the judges upon the question whether the heir was barred by his right of entry by the feoffment of his insane ancestor. And from these loose authorities the maxim that "a man shall not stultify himself" has been handed down as settled law.[2]

The true and only rational explanation of the maxim is that it is to be understood of acts done by a lunatic in prejudice of others; as to which he shall not be permitted to excuse himself from civil responsibility on pretence of lunacy. It is not to be understood of acts done to the prejudice of himself; for this can have no foundation in reason or natural justice.[3] See INSANITY.

STUMP. Presumably, a stump rooted in the soil, and not, at least under the circumstances of the case cited, a stump cast upon a highway.[4]

Stumpage. The price paid for a license to enter upon another's land, to cut down standing trees, and to remove the timber.[5] See TIMBER.

SUA. See SUUS.

SUABLE. See SUIT.

SUB. L. Under, below; upon.

As a prefix, expresses inferiority, subordination.

In composition before c, f, g, p, r, or m, the b changes to that letter.

Sub colore juris. Under color of right.

Sub conditione. Upon condition.

Sub judice. Under advisement.

Sub modo. In a manner; qualifiedly.

Sub nomine. In name; under the title of.

Sub potestate. Under authority — another's power. See POTESTAS.

Sub silentio. In silence; without objection.

SUB-AGENT. See AGENT; DELEGATUS.

SUB-CONTRACT. See CONTRACTOR.

SUBINFEUDATION. See FEUD.

SUBJECT.[6] 1, adj. See UNDER AND SUBJECT. Compare AFTER; WHEN.

2, n. (1) The thing forming the groundwork; the basis; the matter in contract or in question.

Subject-matter. The cause of action.[1]

The thing or matter spoken of, written about, or legislated upon; the thing or object in controversy or dispute.

The subject-matter of litigation is the right which one party claims against the other, and demands the judgment of the court upon.[2]

Section 3253 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the allowance of extra costs in an action wherein rights of property are involved and a pecuniary value may be predicated of the subject-matter involved. Held, that "subject-matter involved" refers simply to property or other valuable thing, the possession, ownership or title to which is to be determined by the action, and does not include other property although it may be directly or remotely affected by the result.[3]

See MATTER; JURISDICTION, 2; TITLE, 2, Of act.

(2) One who owes obedience to the laws and is entitled to partake in the elections into public office.[4] See further CITIZEN.

SUB-LET. See LEASE.

SUBMARINE CABLES. See CABLE.

SUBMIT.[5] 1. To place before a court for decision or determination; as, to submit a cause without argument. Compare 3.

2. To place before a jury for their verdict. Thus, a judge may not submit a question when the state of the testimony forbids it. See NONSUIT.

3. To leave to a referee or arbitrators for a finding or an award.

A "submission" is a contract between two or more parties whereby they agree to refer the subject in dispute to others and to be bound by their award.[6]

Parties "submit" a cause when they refer it to the court or a referee. The word is sometimes applied to evidence, though not with the same accuracy. Where in an equity case evidence is brought forward and placed at the disposal of the court, to be admitted or excluded, it is in some sense submitted, and it is certainly offered.[7] [1] L. stultus, foolish, simple, silly; irresponsible.

See ARBITRATION. Compare REFER, 1.

---

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 292.

[3] 1 Story, Eq. § 226. See also 4 Kent, 451; Owing's Case, 1 Bland Ch. 376-77 (1828).

[4] Cremer v. Portland, 36 Wis. 96 (1874).

[5] Blood v. Drummond, 67 Me. 478 (1878).

[6] L. sub-jectus, lying or being under.

[1] Borst v. Corey, 15 N. Y. 509 (1857).

[2] Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 93 (1879), Cooley, J.

[3] Conaughty v. Saratoga County Bank, 92 N. Y. 401, 404 (1883).

[4] Respublica v. Chapman, 1 Dall. *60 (1781), M'Kean, Chief Justice.

[5] L. sub-mittere, to put or place under.

[6] Witcher v. Witcher, 49 N. H. 180 (1870), Foster, J.; 9 Wend. 661; 17 How. Pr. 21.

[7] Miller v. Wolf, 63 Iowa, 235 (1884), Adams, J.; Iowa Code, § 2742.

SUBORDINATE. See AGENT; DELEGATUS; INFERIOR; OFFICER; SUPERIOR; SUPREME.

SUBORN.[1] To procure another person to commit perjury.

Suborner. The active party in such a case.

Subornation. The offense committed. See further PERJURY.

SUBPŒNA.[2] 1. A writ requiring a person to appear at a certain time and place, or in default to pay a penalty or undergo punishment.

Devised about 1382, by John Waltham, chancellor to Richard II, to make a feoffee to uses accountable in chancery to his cestui que use. The process was afterward extended to matters wholly determinable at common law. In the time of Edward IV (1461–83), process by "bill and subpœna" had become the daily practice in chancery.[3]

As soon as a common bill is filed, process of subpœna is taken out, which is a writ commanding the defendant to appear and answer the bill, on pain of one hundred pounds. If he is served and does not appear, within the time limited by the rules of the court, and plead, answer, or demur, he is in contempt.[4] Compare SUMMONS.

2. In divorce causes, an order to appear and answer the bill or libel. See LIBEL, 3.

3. In courts of common law, a process for bringing witnesses into court in order to obtain their testimony — a writ of subpœna ad testificandum: a "subpœna for testifying," for causing a person to appear and testify.

The writ commanded the witness, laying aside all pretenses and excuses, to appear at the trial on pain of one hundred pounds to be forfeited to the king, and, by 5 Eliz. (1564), c. 9, twenty pounds to the party aggrieved, and, also, damages equivalent to the loss sustained by the want of the evidence.[5]

But no witness, unless his reasonable expenses are first tendered him, is bound to appear in a civil suit; nor, if he appears, is he bound to give evidence till such charges are actually paid him.[6]

Subpœna duces tecum. A subpœna that you bring with you. A writ issued to procure, in addition to a witness's oral testimony, the production of one or more writings in his possession.

It consists of a clause of requisition, particularly designating the document, added to the ordinary subpœna.[1]

A witness examined under Rev. St., § 863, may be compelled to produce books and papers in his possession which would be material and competent evidence for the party calling him, upon the trial of the cause, but he cannot be compelled to produce them merely for the purpose of refreshing his memory.[2]

The writ is used to compel the production of written testimony. It cannot issue to a witness, not a party, to produce a thing like a stove-pattern.[3]

The witness must obey the subpœna, leaving to the court the sufficiency of the reason for not producing the document. Whether a private paper belongs to him or not, he must bring it into court, if in his possession. But a custodian of public records cannot be compelled to produce such records, they not being within his power.[4] See further PRODUCE, 1.

Subpœnas are to be personally served. The length of time depends upon the circumstances of each case; generally, twenty-four hours notice for each twenty miles is sufficient.[5]

The manner of service is regulated by local statutes or rules, as are likewise fees, mileage, etc. If the cause goes over to another term, the witness must be subpœnaed anew.[6]

4. The word is also used, as seen above, in verbal senses: to subpœna, be subpœnaed, subpœnaing, etc.

See DISCOVERY, 6; INSPECTION, 2; PROCESS, 1; WITNESS.

SUBROGATION.[7] The substitution of a new for an old creditor; more generally, the act of putting, by transfer, a person in the place of another, or a thing in the place of another thing.[8]

The doctrine of marshaling securities or funds was derived from the Roman law, in which it was called "subrogation" or "substitution." By that law when a surety paid the creditor he was entitled to a cession of the debt and subrogation to all the creditor's rights against the debtor.[9] See MARSHAL, 2.

The doctrine that when one has been compelled to pay a debt which ought to have

---

[1] F. suborner: L. subornare: sub, under, secretly; ornare, to furnish.

[2] L. sub-pœna, under penalty.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 51–52; 1 Story, Eq. § 46.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 443, 444–45.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 369; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 369; 4 Chitty, ib. 362.

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 382; R. S. §§ 716, 863–71, cases.

[2] United States v. Tilden, 10 Bened. 566, 570–81 (1879), cases.

[3] Re Shepard, 18 Blatch. 296 (1880); 9 East, 473; 3 Stark. Ev. p. 1722.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. § 377, cases.

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 378, cases.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 309–19, cases.

[7] L. surrogare, to choose in place of another, to substitute.

[8] Houston v. Branch Bank, 25 Ala. 257 (1854), Chilton, C. J.; Knighton v. Curry, 62 id. 408 (1878), cases. Brickell, C. J.

[9] [1 Story, Eq. § 635; 3 Pom. Eq. § 1419.

been paid by another, he is entitled to a cession of all the remedies the creditor possessed against that other.[1]

Subrogee. He who succeeds to the rights of the creditor in that case.

To the creditor, both may have been equally liable, but if, as between themselves, there is a superior obligation resting upon one to pay the debt, the other, after paying it, may use the creditor's security to obtain reimbursement. It is not allowed to one partner as against his copartner, or to a joint debtor as against his co-debtor, because, as between them, there is no obligation to pay the debt resting upon one superior to that which rests upon the other. The doctrine does not depend upon privity, nor is it confined to strict cases of suretyship. It is a mode which equity adopts to compel the ultimate discharge of the debt by him who in good conscience ought to pay it, and to relieve him whom none but the creditor could ask to pay. To effect this, the latter is allowed to take the place of the creditor, and make use of all the creditor's securities, as if they were his own.[1]

The right is not founded on contract. It is a creation of equity; is enforced for the purpose of accomplishing the ends of substantial justice; and is independent of any contractual relation between the parties.[2]

Subrogation is purely an equitable result. It arises only in favor of a party who on some sort of compulsion discharges a demand against a common debtor. The doctrine applies in all cases where a payment has been made under a legitimate and fair effort to protect the ascertained interests of the party paying, and when intervening rights are not legally jeopardized or defeated.[3]

The principle does not apply where one voluntarily pays the debt of another; but only where he is surety for the debt, or is compelled to pay it to protect his own interests, or where the debt is assigned to him on payment, or where he pays it under a special agreement that he shall be substituted to the rights of the creditor.[4]

Subrogation in equity is confined to the relation of principal and surety and guarantor; to cases where a person, to protect his lien, is compelled to remove a superior lien; and to cases of insurance. One under no legal obligation to pay the debt is a volunteer.[5]

The doctrine requires (1) that the person seeking its benefit must have first paid a debt due to a third party; (2) that he must not act as a mere volunteer, but on compulsion, to save himself from loss by reason of a superior lien or claim on the part of the person to whom he pays the debt, as, in cases of sureties, prior mortgages, etc. The right is never accorded to one who is a mere volunteer in paying the debt of one person to another.[6]

The surety is entitled to all the means of payment held by the creditor against the principal debtor; and the creditor has a reciprocal right to all the securities the principal debtor may have furnished for the surety's indemnity.[1]

But before the principle can be applied the whole debt must be paid.[7]

The doctrine cannot be invoked where it would work inequitably.[8]

The right of an insurer, upon paying a total loss, to recover from third persons, is only such right as the assured has.[9]

SUBSCRIBE.[10] 1. To sign one's own name beneath or at the end of an instrument; also, to write one's name as attesting witness.[6]

To set one's hand to a writing.[7]

The purpose of a law requiring the subscription to a will to be at the end of the paper is to prevent fraudulent additions before or after execution, and a statute of wills should be so construed as to accomplish this purpose.[6]

The subscribing witnesses to a deed being dead, the execution is to be established by proof of their handwriting.[9]

A summons issued by an attorney with his name printed at the end of the paper, is subscribed by him.[10]

See ATTEST; HAND, 3; SIGN; WITNESS.

2. To agree in writing to furnish a sum of money, or its equivalent, for a designated purpose; as, to assist a charitable or religious object, or to take stock in a corporation.

Applied to a contract for stock in a railroad company, has a definite technical sense, including the idea of a promise to pay the

[1] McCormick v. Irwin, 35 Pa. 117 (1860), Strong, J. Approved, Reber v. Gundy, 13 F. R. 58 (1882).

[2] Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Dow, 120 U. S. 301 (1887).

[3] Mosier's Appeal, 56 Pa. 81 (1867), Thompson, C. J.

[4] Clark v. Moore, 76 Va. 262 (1882), Burks, J.

[5] Suppiger v. Garrels, 20 Bradw. 629 (1880), cases.

[6] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Town of Middleport, 124 U. S. 549-51 (1888), Miller, J., approving the statement of the doctrine in Gadsden v. Brown, Speer, Eq. 41 (S. Car., 1843).

[1] Hauser v. King, 76 Va. 733-35 (1882), cases. As to collateral securities, see Exp. Dever, 53 L. T. 131 (1885); 21 Cent. Law J. 460, 464 (1885), cases.

[2] Carithers v. Stuart, 87 Ind. 433 (1882), cases.

[3] Gerrish v. Bragg, 55 Vt. 337 (1883). See generally Wadsworth v. Lyon, 93 N. Y. 214 (1883), Gans v. Thieme, ib. 225, 232 (1883); Hampton v. Phipps, 108 U. S. 263-66 (1883), cases; Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 Cox, 318 (1787); 1 W. & T. Ld. Cas. Eq. 120-68, cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 465-68 (1886), cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 472-73 (1888), cases; 2 Colum. Jur. 38.

[4] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie, &c. Transportation Co., 117 U. S. 312, 321 (1886), cases; Pearman v. Gould, 42 N. J. E. 9-10 (1886), cases.

[5] L. sub-scribere, to write under or beneath.

[6] James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 12 (1851).

[7] Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 502 (1860): Pridgen v. Pridgen, 13 Ired. L. 260 (1852).

[8] Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 539 (1884), Earl, J.

[9] Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 44 (1883), cases.

[10] Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. 62 (1866); Meschen v. More, 54 Wis. 214 (1882); Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 252 (1887).

amount subscribed in the manner agreed upon.[1]

A claim for a "subscription" to stock implies that the subscription is a writing, and it must be set out as written.[2]

A promise to pay a subscription to a charity is a mere offer, revocable any time before acceptance — some act whereby a legal liability is incurred or money expended on the faith of the promise. The death of a promisor revokes his offer; but not so if thereby his co-subscribers would have to pay his subscription.[3]

Where an advance has been made or an expense or liability incurred by others in consequence of a subscription, before notice given of a withdrawal, the subscription becomes obligatory, provided the advances were authorized by a reasonable dependence on the subscription. When the subscription is made on the condition that it is not to bind unless a specified sum is raised, all subscribers are equally liable, and if some subscribe only to make up the sum or to induce others, they themselves not to be called upon, no subscription is binding. The sum is raised when the subscriptions of solvent and responsible (q. v.) persons are received to the full amount. A seal to each name, or one seal with a written declaration that each subscriber adopts it as his own seal, will preclude a defense on the ground of want of consideration.[4]

A gratuitous subscription cannot be enforced unless the promisee, in reliance on the promise, has incurred or assumed some liability or obligation.[5]

An actual manual subscription on the books of a railroad company is not indispensably necessary to bind a municipality as a subscriber to the capital stock. The contract may be effected by the acceptance of a copy of an ordinance or resolution making a subscription on behalf of the municipality.[6]

See CONSIDERATION, 2; STOCK, 3 (2); SUNDAY.

SUBSEQUENT. See CONDITION; CONVEYANCE, 2; POSSESSION; SINCE.

SUBSIDY.[7] 1. Aid granted to the king by Parliament, upon exigencies of state, to be levied of each subject upon his property; also, a custom payable upon exports and imports of staple commodities.[8]

2. Pecuniary assistance from a government toward an enterprise of benefit to the public; as, of money to a steamship company, or of money and lands to a railroad corporation.

3. Money paid an ally in war.

SUBSTANCE.[1] 1. The sustaining element; the essential constituent; the real essence; the important part; the material thing. Opposed, form, q. v. See also PURPORT.

Substantial. Not merely nominal, but considerable or fair in amount; as, substantial damages; opposed to formal or technical, as, a substantial right.[2]

Substantially. Really or essentially the same as: as, substantially naphtha.[3]

Machines may differ somewhat in their structure, and yet be "substantially the same." If they are substantially alike in structure, and produce a similar effect, they are in principle the same. "Substantial" as here applied is not susceptible of specific definition. . . . A pleading may be substantially good, though technically informal; an instrument substantially described in a declaration or indictment may be given in evidence.[4]

See DEMURRER; DESCRIPTION, 3; INDICTMENT; SAME; TRADE-MARK.

2. In the sense of property, see EFFECTS.

SUBSTITUTE. 1, v. To put one thing or person in the place of another.

2, n. A person or thing made to take the place of another.[5]

Whence substituted agent, executor, deputy, service; substitutionary evidence; and substitution in the sense of subrogation, qq. v.

See DELEGATUS.

SUB-TENANT. See TENANT.

SUBTRACTION. Withholding or withdrawing from another what he is entitled to: as, subtraction of feudal rents and services, of tithes, of conjugal rights, of legacies, of church rates.[6]

SUBVERT. To overthrow, overturn.

All allegation that a defendant subverted the water from a well, does not charge him with corrupting the water. "Subvert" has no such natural meaning when applied to a material object.[7]

---

[1] Cheraw, &c. R. Co. v. White, 14 S. C. 62 (1880), Willard, C. J.

[2] Knapp v. Duck Creek Valley Oil Co., 53 Pa. 191 (1866).

[3] Grand Lodge v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 159–160 (1886), cases.

[4] 1 Pars. Contr. 453–55, cases.

[5] Cottage Street Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 530 (1877), cases, Gray, C. J: 16 Am. Law Reg. 548–54 (1877), cases. See also Miller v. Ballard, 46 Ill. 377 (1868); Pratt v. Baptist Society, 98 id. 478 (1879), cases; Stuart v. Presbyterian Church, 84 Pa. 388 (1877); Williams v. Rogan, 59 Tex. 438 (1883), cases; Eaton v. Pacific Nat. Bank, 144 Mass. 260, 274 (1887), cases; 9 Va. Law J. 321–31 (1885), cases; 26 Am. Law Reg. 1–20 (1887), cases.

[6] Bates County v. Winters, 112 U. S. 327 (1884), cases.

[7] L. subsidium, troops in reserve, assistance.

[8] [Moxley & W.; 1 Bl. Com. 310–12, 315.

[1] L. sub-stare, to stand under.

[2] People v. New York Central R. Co., 29 N. Y. 421, 430 (1864); Rahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. *531 (1860).

[3] Commonwealth v. Wentworth, 118 Mass. 442 (1875).

[4] Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McLean, 456–57 (1844).

[5] See Henderson v. State, 50 Ala. 91 (1877).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 230, 88, 102, 94, 98.

[7] Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 170 (1882).

SUCCESSION.[1] The mode by which a right is transmitted to another person or set of persons.

1. Transmission of the rights and obligations of a deceased person to his heir or heirs.[2] (Civil law.)

Succession tax. As succession is the devolution of title to realty, by will, deed, or the laws of descent, a "succession tax" is a tax imposed upon such devolution.[3]

Not a tax on property, but a premium demanded for the privilege of transmitting one's estate. In the absence of a constitutional inhibition, the power to impose such a tax is inherent in a legislature.[4] See DESCENT; INHERIT.

2. The mode by which the members of a corporation aggregate acquire the rights which belonged to their predecessors.

A method of gaining a property in chattels, whether personal or real; but, in strictness, is applicable only to a corporation aggregate: in which one set of men, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, movables, and other chattels of the corporation. In law, the corporation never dies: predecessors and successors constitute one and the same body. Hence, in a gift to the corporation, no allusion need be made to successors. But in the case of a sole corporation, no chattel interest can regularly go in succession. "Successor," applied to a person in his political capacity, is equivalent to "heir," in his natural capacity.[5]

In a grant to a corporation aggregate, the word "successors," though usually inserted, is not necessary.[6]

By analogy to the rule of the common law, that a grant to a natural person, without words of inheritance, creates only an estate for life, the grant of a franchise, without words of perpetuity, to a corporation aggregate, whose duration is limited, creates only an estate for its life.[7] See PERPETUAL.

"Heirs," used instead of "successors," will not vitiate a deed.[8]

3. To the office of President of the United States, see PRESIDENT.

[1] L. suc- (sub), next, after; cedere, to go, follow.

[2] See Hunt v. Hunt, 37 Me. 344 (1853); Blake v. McCartney, 4 Cliff. 103 (1869).

[3] See Blake v. McCartney, 4 Cliff. 103-6 (1869); United States v. Hunnewell, 13 F. R. 617, 618-23 (1882), cases; 2 Bl. Com. 516.

[4] Peters v. Lynchburg, 76 Va. 929 (1882): Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 428 (1858), Lee, J.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 430-31, 108, 126; 1 id. 468.

[6] Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whart. *425 (1836); Overseers v. Sears, 22 Pick. 132 (1839); Congregational Society v. Stark, 34 Vt. 249 (1861).

[7] St. Clair County Turnpike Co. v. Illinois, 96 U. S. 68 (1877).

[8] Walker v. Colby Wringer Co., 14 F. R. 517 (1882).

SUCH. The context should show to what antecedent this word refers.[1]

It sometimes means "the same."[2]

A statute in Vermont provides that "such" and "said" in statutes shall be taken to refer to the same person or thing last mentioned.

In a statute providing that "in actions by and against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgments may be rendered for or against them as such, neither party should be allowed to testify against the other," "as such" refers to those persons in their representative capacity.[3]

SUE. See SUIT.

SUFFER. Is synonymous with permit, q. v.; as, in a statute against "suffering" an animal to go at large.

To suffer an act to be done, by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it, to approve it, not to hinder it. It implies willingness.[4]

Illustrative expressions are to "suffer" guests to use forbidden games, to "suffer" minors to drink liquor in a house, to "suffer" travel on the Lord's day.[4]

Includes knowledge of what is to be done, and intention that what is done is what is to be done.[5]

The words "grant, bargain, and sell," in a conveyance of a fee-simple, constitute a covenant against acts done or suffered by the grantor. "Suffered" here implies that the covenant is not confined to the voluntary acts of the grantor, and, therefore, includes a tax assessed during his ownership of title. All governmental burdens rest upon the principle of consent.[6]

In the sense of the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, a debtor "suffered" or "procured" his property to be seized under an execution, when, knowing himself to be insolvent, an admitted creditor, who had brought suit against him, and who, as he knew, would, unless he applied for the benefit of the act, secure a preference over other creditors,— proceeded in the effort to get a judgment until one was actually obtained by the perseverance of the creditor and the default of the debtor.[7]

Within the meaning of that act, "suffer" did not import a demonstrative, active course, as did "pro-

[1] Stephenson v. Short, 92 N. Y. 439 (1883); Mott v. Ackerman, ib. 548 (1883); Steinlein v. Halstead, 52 Wis. 291 (1881); 62 id. 96; 65 id. 570; 48 Ark. 81; 41 N. J. E. 97; 12 Wheat. 477.

[2] Ackley v. Fish, 55 Vt. 20 (1883).

[3] Jones v. Parker, 67 Tex. 81 (1886).

[4] [Selleck v. Selleck, 19 Conn. 505-6 (1849), Church, C. J. See also Collinsville v. Scanland, 58 Ill. 221 (1871).

[5] Gregory v. United States, 17 Blatch. 231 (1879).

[6] Shaffer v. Greer, 87 Pa. 375 (1878); Blossom v. Van Court, 34 Mo. 390 (1864).

[7] Buchanan v. Smith, 16 Wall. 277, 300-9 (1872).

cure."[1] It aptly applied in the case of pressure and powerful motives brought to bear upon a party. Under the influence of their pressure and the operation of these motives he suffered a thing to be done; that is, allowed or permitted it.[2] See PREFER, 2.

Sufferance. Consent given from a failure to object; negative permission; toleration; allowance.

Estate at sufferance. Where one comes into possession of land by a lawful title, but keeps it afterward without any title at all.

Examples are: the estate of a tenant for years whose term has expired; the estate of a mortgagor who continues in possession after foreclosure; the estate of a grantor who agrees to deliver possession by a certain day and holds over, without authority from the grantee; the estate of a tenant during the life of another person, after the death of that other.[3]

A tenant by sufferance is a tenant who comes in by right and holds over without right.[4]

SUFFERING. See DECLARATION, 1.

SUFFICIENT. Adequate, competent, ample in law. Opposed, insufficient: less in amount or degree than satisfies the requirements of the law.

Used of allegations of claim and of defense in proceedings in courts of common law, equity, and admiralty, and of charges in indictments in courts of criminal law, which meet or fulfill the requirements of the law with respect to certainty, notice, and the other elements of a prima facie case.

Strictly speaking, evidence is "insufficient" in law only when there is a total absence of such proof, in quantity or kind, as, in the particular case, a rule of law requires as essential to the establishment of the fact. Insufficiency in point of fact may exist where there is no insufficiency in point of law; that is, there may be some evidence to sustain every element of the case, competent, both in quality and quantity, in law to sustain it, and yet it may be met by countervailing proof so potent as to leave no reasonable doubt of the opposing conclusion.[4]

"Sufficient sureties," to an appeal bond, imports two or more persons as sureties.[5]

See ANSWER, 3; DEED, 2; DEFENSE, 2; DEMURRER; EVIDENCE; INDICTMENT.

SUFFRAGE.[6] Choice, voice, vote; the elective franchise.

The right of suffrage is the right to vote at elections of officers of government and upon fundamental questions of governmental policy or action.

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."[1]

The right of suffrage was not necessarily one of the privileges or immunities of citizenship before the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment; and that Amendment does not add to those privileges and immunities: it simply furnishes an additional guaranty for the protection of such as the citizen already had. Suffrage has never been co-extensive with citizenship in the States. The Constitution did not make all citizens voters. A State may confine the right of voting to male citizens of the United States.[2]

The Amendment vests citizens of the United States with the right of exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.[3]

The right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship. That there shall be exemption from discrimination in exercising the right, for the causes named, is an attribute. The right to vote in the States comes from the States; the right to exemption from prohibited discrimination comes from the United States.[4] See CITIZEN.

SUGGESTIO. See SUPPRESSIO.

SUGGESTION. 1. Indirect introduction; informal statement or representation; indefinite communication; intimation. Opposed, suppression. See SUPPRESSIO.

Suggestive. Leading, indicating the answer desired; as, a suggestive interrogatory. See QUESTION, 1, Leading.

2. A more or less formal representation; the communication to a court of a fact essential to the adjustment of the rights of parties to a cause, but not as yet of record nor pleadable.

In this sense is "suggestion" of and to "suggest" the death of a party, that his representative may be substituted; to "suggest" diminution of record; to "suggest" freehold as security for costs, or in stay of execution. Compare SURMISE.

SUI. L. Of one's self — himself, herself, itself, themselves. Other forms are, se, sese, one's self: suus, one's own.

Se defendendo. In defending one's self. See DEFENSE, 1.

Cf. FELO DE SE; IN SE; INTER SE; PER SE; PRO SE.

---

[1] Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 2 Biss. 481 (1871).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 150.

[3] Cook v. Norton, 48 Ill. 26 (1868); Anderson v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 580 (1886); 42 Ga. 574; 12 Barb. 483; 59 Tex. 637; Wood, Landl. & T. 15; 1 Washb. R. P. 524.

[4] Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 569, 567-68 (1887), cases. Matthews, J.

[5] State v. Fitch, 30 Minn. 533 (1883): 12 id. 420.

[6] L. suffragium, a voting-tablet, a ballot; the right to cast a vote.

[1] Constitution, Amd. Art. XIV, Ratified July 28, 1868.

[2] Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162 (1874), Waite, C. J. See also Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43 (1872).

[3] United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214 (1875).

[4] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 555-56 (1875).

Sua sponte. Of one's own free will; of one's own motion, q. v.; spontaneously.

A court may sua sponte instruct a jury;[1] or sua sponte dismiss a bill where there is adequate remedy at law, or for other cause not first suggested by counsel.[2]

Sui generis. Of its own kind.

Sui juris. Of one's own right. See JUS, Sui.

Suo jure. In one's own right.

Suum cuique tribuere. To render to each one his own; give every man his due.

The fundamental maxim of distributive justice.[3] See LAW.

SUICIDE.[4] Self-killing, self-destruction; also, self-murder.

The death of a person by his own voluntary act. "Dying by his own hand" translates this Anglicized Latin word. Life insurance companies indiscriminately use either expression, as conveying the same idea.[5]

Voluntary death caused by an act done by a person sound in mind, and capable of measuring his moral responsibility.[6]

Death by accident or mistake, as, from drinking a mixture not known to be poison, is, literally, self-killing, but not suicide; nor is death self-caused by an insane person. Death which is the result of insanity is death by disease.[7]

Does not necessarily imply criminal self-destruction. Thus, a condition in an insurance policy providing for forfeiture in case of suicide will not be construed to apply to an act of self-destruction not involving evil will. Death by one's hand in the case of a person non compos, is the result of disease. To provide for death by disease is the very object of life insurance.[8]

A self-killing by an insane person, understanding the physical nature and consequences of the act, but not the moral aspect, is not a death by suicide within the meaning of a condition that a policy of insurance upon his life shall be void in case he shall die by suicide.[9]

A policy provided that the insurer should pay the beneficiary within a certain time after proof made that the insured sustained bodily injuries, effected through external, violent and accidental means, which alone caused death within a limited period, no claim to be presented in case of suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane. Held, that the burden of proof was on the claimant (subject to the limitation that it is not to be presumed as law that the deceased took his own life or was murdered) to show that the death was caused by external violence and accidental means; and that no claim could be made if the deceased himself intentionally or when insane inflicted the injuries.[1]

At common law, self-murder is ranked among the highest of crimes. But there was no felony committed where the person lacked years of discretion or was out of his senses. The punishment was forfeiture of goods to the state, and ignominious burial.[2]

In New York, an attempt to commit suicide is a felony,[3] but actual self-destruction is not.[4]

An attempt to commit suicide may be considered in connection with previous conduct, as evidence tending to prove insanity.[5]

See ADMINISTER, 1; DIE, By his own hand; INSANITY, 2.

SUINE. See OLEOMARGARINE.

SUIT.[6] 1. Followers: witnesses for the plaintiff.

The actual production of the "suit," the followers, has been disused since the time of Edward III (1327-77), though the form is continued. This explains the meaning of the phrase, still found in declarations at common law, "and therefore he brings suit:" inde producit sectam.[7]

Those words were affixed at a time when a suitor's witnesses were his followers, as prompt to maintain his quarrel in the forum as in the field. Now, as then, a party usually selects his witnesses from among his friends, who insensibly catch the spirit of their side.[8] See LIS, Mota.

Sue out. To seek after; to apply for and obtain: as, to sue out a writ or a pardon.[9]

2. Following another; pursuit; also, at-

---

[1] 96 U. S. 265.

[2] 2 Black, 550; 7 Wall. 618; 23 id. 466.

[3] Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 531 (1884).

[4] L. sui-cidium, a killing of one's self: cædere, to kill.

[5] [Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 286 (1876).

[6] See Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Groom, 86 Pa. 97 (1878), cases.

[7] Eastabrook v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 Me. 227 (1866), cases, Appleton, C. J. See particularly Clift v. Schwabe, 54 E. C. L. 457-81 (1846).

[8] Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 45 (1876).

[9] Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 127-32 (1883), cases, Gray, J.; Accident Ins. Co. of North America v. Crandel, 120 id. 530 (1887), cases; 21 Cent. Law J. 378-82 (1885), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 886-90 (1886), cases.

[1] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661 (1888).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 189-90.

[3] Penal Code, §§ 173, 174, 178.

[4] Darrow v. Family Fund Society, 42 Hun, 247 (1886).

[5] Wolff v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 2 Flip. 358 (1879), cases; Coyle v. Commonwealth, 100 Pa. 579 (1882).

[6] L. secta: sequi, to follow. Whence sue, pursue, prosecute. Ad sectam, abridged to ads, at suit of, is still in use, Bowen v. Wilcox, &c. S. M. Co., 86 Ill. 12 (1877); 31 N. J. L. 313, 316; and see VERSUS.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 296; 2 id. 54; 8 Wheat. 662; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 67; 63 Ga. 638.

[8] Commonwealth v. Jolliffe, 7 Watts, 585 (1838), Gibson, C. J.; 71 Pa. 174.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 68.

tendance upon another: as, to do suit, suit at a feudal lord's court, fresh suit.

Fresh suit. (1) When a lord distrained animals for rent and the owner rescued or drove them upon ground not belonging to the distrainer, and the latter followed and reseized them.

(2) When a person who had been robbed at once followed and apprehended, or afterward helped to convict, the thief.

As punishment for making no effort to capture the thief, the king confiscated any goods thrown away by him in his flight.[1]

3. Any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy which the law allows him. Whatever the mode, if a right is litigated the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a "suit."[2]

The prosecution, or pursuit, of some claim, demand, or request. In law language, the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice.[3]

To "commence" a suit is to demand something by the institution of process in such court; and to "prosecute" a suit is to continue that demand.[3]

In any legal sense, action, suit, and cause are convertible terms.[4]

Any proceeding in a court in which a plaintiff pursues his remedy to recover a right or claim.[5]

Any proceeding in a court for the purpose of obtaining such remedy as the law allows a party under the circumstances.[6]

"Suit at law" is synonymous with "action at law."[7]

Usually "suit" and "action" are synonymous terms, although "suit" is of more general meaning, and is indefinitely applied to proceedings in law as well as in equity, while "action" is applied to proceedings at law.[8]

In its most extended sense, a suit includes a criminal prosecution. "An indictment is an accusation at the suit of the king."[1]

May apply to a controversy which has not yet taken the form of a pending suit.[2]

The instruments whereby a remedy is obtained for a wrong done are a diversity of "suits" or "actions," which are defined to be the lawful demand of one's right, or, in the words of Justinian, jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur, the right of seeking in court whatever is due to anyone.[3]

Sue. To institute or continue an action or proceeding for the recovery of a right.

To seek for in law; to make legal claim; to prosecute.[4]

Suitor. A party to a suit in court; a party litigant.

See ACTION, 2; CAUSE, 1 (3); CONTROVERSY; INTERPLEAD; INTERVENE; LAWSUIT; MULTIPLICITY; PARTY, 2; PROSECUTE; RECORD, 2; VEX. Compare LIS.

No suit or action can be brought against the king, even in civil matters, because no court can have jurisdiction over him — in his political capacity. Jurisdiction implies supremacy of power.[5]

The principle is elementary that a state cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent. This is a privilege of sovereignty.[6]

"The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State."[7]

The Constitution, as originally adopted, provided that the judicial power of the United States should extend to controversies "between a State and Citizens of another State," or "between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects," and that in all cases "in which a State shall be a Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction."[8] The Supreme Court, in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia,[9] decided in 1793, held that under these provisions a State could be sued in that Court by a citizen of another State. This decision led Congress in 1794 to pass a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, which, being ratified, became the Eleventh Amendment.[10]

Every government has an inherent right to protect

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 296-97.

[2] [Weston v. Council of Charleston, 2 Pet. 464 (1829), Marshall, C. J.; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 id. 566 (1840), Taney, C. J.; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 375 (1875), Strong, J.

[3] Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 408-11 (1821), Marshall, C. J.

[4] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 112 (1866), Davis, J. See also 4 Conn. 322; 58 N. H. 126; 1 Flip. 605.

[5] Sewing Machine Cases, 18 Wall. 585 (1873), Clifford, J.; New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 143-44 (1880).

[6] Harris v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 312 (1868), Hinman, C. J.

[7] White v. School District, 45 Conn. 61 (1877).

[8] McPike v. McPike, 10 Bradw. 333 (Ill., 1882); Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. 174 (1872).

[1] United States v. Moore, 11 F. R. 251 (1882); Commonwealth v. Moore, 144 Mass. 137 (1886); 3 Bacon, Abr. 542, 544.

[2] Larkin v. Saffarans, 15 F. R. 151 (1883).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 116; 4 Conn. 322.

[4] [United States v. Moore, 11 F. R. 251 (1882): Webster's Dict.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 243.

[6] Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 335 (1879).

[7] Constitution, Amd. XI. Ratified Jan. 8, 1798.

[8] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2.

[9] 2 Dallas, 419.

[10] See New Hampshire v. Louisiana, and New York v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 86 (1883).

itself against suits. If they are permitted, it is only upon the conditions prescribed by statute. But for the protection which the principle affords a government would be unable to perform its duties. It might be impossible to collect the revenue for its support, without infinite embarrassments and delays, if subject to civil processes the same as a private person.[1]

A State may withdraw the right while an action pends to secure an adjudication, that being merely an auditing of the claim, not a remedy for enforcing a contract.[2]

When the power to sue the United States is given in an act of Congress, "State" means a member of the Union, and not the District of Columbia or a Territory.[3]

But the officers whose acts are illegal and void may be sued.[4]

A cause cannot be maintained against a State, though brought in its name, if the absolute right to the subject in controversy is in an individual (as, the real owner of a bond sued on), the plaintiff State being a mere collecting agent.[5]

Reference must be had to the real party in interest, not merely to the parties to the record. An action brought to restrain the attorney-general of a State (Virginia) and the treasurers of the various counties from enforcing certain statutes alleged to impair contract obligations of the State, with respect to coupon bonds issued by her, was held not to be maintainable, although the laws in question might violate such obligations.[6]

See COURT, Of claims; RIGHT, 2, Petition of.

SUITABLE. 1. Proper, competent, fit in a legal view: as, a suitable person for administering an estate.[7]

Unsuitable. May imply no want of capacity, but unfitness arising out of the relation of the person to the estate, either from being indebted to it or having claims upon it, or from his interest under a will, or from his situation as heir at law.[1]

2. A "suitable" bridge or railroad viaduct may mean such structure as, in the opinion of the proper officer or board, is required for the safety and convenience of the public and the interests of a particular corporation or corporations.[2]

Under a statute authorizing a town to take land for a public cemetery without the owner's consent, "when land cannot be obtained in any suitable place at a reasonable price by contract," the most suitable land may be taken. What is a suitable place is a question of fact to be determined on a consideration of all the circumstances. The term is a relative one. The legislature meant the most suitable place, or a place as suitable as any other, or a place as suitable as the town can afford to pay for.[3]

SUM. Amount or aggregate: as, the face sum, the penal sum.

The word of itself imports a sum of money.[4]

See DISPUTE; EXCEEDING; PENALTY.

SUM UP. To bring together under one view.

To address a referee, a board of arbitrators, a master, but more often a jury, at the close of a case, reviewing the evidence and applying the law thereto. Whence summing up, which is applied to the final arguments of counsel, to that part of the judge's charge which reviews the testimony, and to that stage in a case in which these respective duties are performed. See CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

SUMMARY. Without delay for a trial by a jury; immediate; speedy; peremptory: as, a summary — conviction, or proceeding, summary relief.

By the common law of England and the laws of many of the Colonies before the Revolution, and of the States before the formation of the Constitution, a summary proceeding existed for the recovery of debts due to the government, especially of debts due from the receivers of the revenues.[5]

The mode of assessing taxes by all governments is necessarily summary, that it may be speedy and effectual. But by "summary" is not meant arbitrary, unequal, or illegal. The mode must be lawful, which does not necessarily mean by a judicial proceeding.[6]

The term is also applied to statutory proceeding for

---

[1] Nichols v. United States, 7 Wall. 126 (1868).

[2] Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 339-40 (1879); South & North Alabama R. Co. v. Alabama, ib. 834 (1879).

[3] Scott v. Jones, 5 How. 377 (1847), cases.

[4] Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 560 (1879), cases; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 220 (1872), cases; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196 (1883).

[5] New Hampshire v. Louisiana, and New York v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 77, 91 (1883), cases, Waite, C. J.

[6] Exp. Ayers, Scott, and McCabe, 123 U. S. 443, 485 (1887), Matthews, J., reviewing previous cases; Harlan, J., dissenting.

See generally United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 205-23 (1882), cases: Clark v. Barnard, 108 id. 447 (1883); Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 id. 287-88 (1885), cases; Hagood v. Southern, 117 id. 69 (1886), cases; Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Allen, 17 F. R. 171 (1883); ib. 188-97, cases. On compelling a State to pay its debts, see 12 Am. Law Rev. 625 (1878); 15 id. 519 (1881); 7 South. Law Rev. 544-48 (1881).

[7] Peters v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 207 (1850).

---

[1] [Thayer v. Homer, 11 Metc. 110 (1845), Hubbard, J.

[2] Worcester v. Railroad Commissioners, 113 Mass. 171 (1873).

[3] Crowell v. Londonderry, 63 N. H. 48 (1884).

[4] United States v. Van Auken, 96 U. S. 368 (1877); Tax on Notes, 16 Op. Att.-Gen 344 (1879).

[5] Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land, &c. Co., 18 How. 280 (1855).

[6] McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 41 (1877).

the prompt dispossession of a tenant who holds over after default in paying rent, or after his term has expired; to hearings and determinations of charges of the lighter misdemeanors, by committing magistrates without the intervention of a jury; and to punishments for contempts committed in open court.[1]

See CONTEMPT; CONVICTION, Summary; JURY, Trial by; PRIZE, 3; PROCESS, 1, Due.

SUMMING UP. See SUM UP.

SUMMON.[2] To officially notify a party that he has been sued, so that he may appear in court and answer the complaint.

Summons. A warning to appear in court at the return-day of the original writ.[3]

Under codes of civil procedure, not a writ or process of the court, but simply a notice to the defendant that an action has been commenced against him, and that he is required to answer the complaint, which is either attached thereto or is or will be filed in the proper clerk's office.[4]

Bouvier, Brown, Wharton, Stormonth, Webster, and Worcester give "summon" as the spelling of the verb and "summons" as the spelling of the noun. Abbott, under the title "Summons," uses that spelling for both the verb and the noun, while elsewhere he employs "summon," "summoned," and "summoning" as the verb and its inflections.

Summon, referring to notification to a party, has been used for "subpœna," which, strictly, refers to a judicial command to a witness to appear and testify.[5]

From the time of the service of a summons the court acquires jurisdiction.[6]

See CITATION, 2; MONITION; PROCESS, 1; SERVICE, 6; SUBPŒNA.

SUMPTUARY.[7] "Under the head of public economy may be ranked all sumptuary laws against luxury, extravagant expense in dress, diet, and the like."[8]

These laws were originally passed in England in the view that luxury, in some degrees, was opposed to public policy. Notable statutes were passed in 1336, 1363, 1463, and 1482; but all statutes were repealed in 1603, by 1 James I, c. 25.[9]

The habits, occupation, food, and drink,—the life of the individual, are severally matters for his own determination. They can be abridged by the majority of the people speaking through the legislature only when the public safety, the public health, or the public protection demands it. The constitutional guaranty of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" can be limited only by the absolute necessities of the general public.[1]

See further POLICE, 2; PROHIBITION, 2.

SUNDAY. The Sabbath, the Lord's Day, and Sunday all mean the same thing: the first day of the week.

Sabbath laws do not rest upon the ground that it is immoral or irreligious to labor upon the Sabbath day. They simply prescribe a day of rest, from motives of public policy and as a civil regulation. The day prescribed is the Christian Sabbath: yet, so entirely is the law based upon the ground of public policy that the statutes would be equally constitutional and obligatory did they name any other day.[2]

The provision in the Massachusetts law which prohibits traveling, like the law which forbids the doing of any business, labor or work, excepts what is done from "necessity or charity." The exception covers everything morally fit and proper to be done upon that day under the circumstances of each case. "Charity" includes everything that proceeds from a sense of moral duty or from a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the relief or comfort of another, and not for one's own benefit or pleasure,—acts to prevent or relieve suffering in men or animals.[3]

The duty of observing the day set apart is imposed upon all as members of the body politic without reference to the religious faith and worship of any. The day, as a day of rest, is a legal holiday rather than a holy day. Jews and Seventh-Day Baptists are not then compelled, against conscience, to keep it as a day of worship.[4]

Laws setting aside Sunday as a day of rest are upheld not from any right of the government to legislate for the promotion of religious observances, but from its right to protect all persons from the physical and moral debasement which comes from uninterrupted labor. Such laws have always been deemed beneficent and merciful laws, especially to the poor and dependent, to the laborers in our factories and workshops and in the heated rooms of our cities; and their validity has been sustained by the highest courts of the States.[5]

---

[1] See Barter v. Commonwealth, 3 P. & W. 259 (1831); Philadelphia v. Duncan, 4 Phila. 145 (1860); United States v. Smith, 17 F. R. 510 (1883).

[2] F. somoner, semoner: L. summonere, to remind privily.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 279.

[4] Mezchem v. Moore, 54 Wis. 215-16 (1882), cases, Taylor, J.; Hanna v. Russell, 12 Minn. 86 (1866); Gilmer v. Bird, 15 Fla. 410, 421 (1875).

[5] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 336.

[6] Woodward v. Baker, 10 Oreg. 493-94 (1883), cases.

[7] L. sumptuarius: sumptus, expense: sumere, to take to use or consume.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 170.

[9] See 2 Knight, Hist. Eng. 272-74; 2 Kent, *330 (b).

[1] Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 761 (1881), Brewer, J.

[2] McGatrick v. Wason, 4 Ohio St. 571 (1855), Thurman, C. J.; Bloom v. Richards, 2 id. 387-406 (1853), cases.

[3] Doyle v. Lynn, &c. R. Co., 118 Mass. 197 (1875), cases, Gray, C. J.

[4] Exp. Burke, 59 Cal. 6, 13-20 (1881), cases, Morrison, C. J.; Exp. Koser, 60 id. 188 (1882); Commonwealth v. Starr, 144 Mass. 361 (1887).

[5] Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 710 (1885), Field, J. See also, generally, Shover v. State, 10 Ark. 262 (1850), Johnson, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Nesbit, 34 Pa.

"Besides the notorious indecency and scandal of permitting any secular business to be publicly transacted on that day in a country professing Christianity, and the corruption of morals which usually follows its profanation, the keeping one day in the seven holy, as a time of relaxation and refreshment as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to the state, considered merely as a civil institution. It humanizes, by the help of conversation and society, the manners of the lower classes, which would otherwise degenerate into a sordid ferocity and savage selfishness of spirit; it enables the industrious workman to pursue his occupation in the ensuing week with health and cheerfulness; it imprints on the minds of the people that sense of their duty to God so necessary to make them good citizens, but which yet would be worn out and defaced by an unremitted continuance of labour, without any stated times of recalling them to the worship of their Maker."[1]

At common law, a contract made on Sunday was valid. Legal invalidation must therefore arise from some statute in force at the place where the contract is made.[2]

A contract made on Sunday is not void unless completed on that day. Therefore, merely signing the paper containing the terms does not vitiate the contract. Until the paper is delivered, the parties have a locus penitentiæ.[3]

Making a will is not such secular employment as is forbidden.[4]

Subscriptions made on that day for the support of public worship are binding. What work is "of necessity or charity" is a question of law and statutory construction. Mere inconvenience of time and opportunity cannot be a test.[5]

The publication of notice of a sheriff's sale in a Sunday newspaper is void.[6]

Crying newspapers was held disorderly conduct;[7] and selling newspapers is "business."[8]

Running passenger trains is a work of necessity.[9]

Shaving customers is not a work of necessity or charity.[10]

Writs in civil actions cannot be served.[11]

Lading, unlading, and sailing vessels are works of necessity.[12]

A person may be driven to a church in his private conveyance.[13]

In Pennsylvania ice cream may not be sold on that day;[14] nor cigars.[15]

See further CHARITY; CHRISTIANITY; HOLIDAY; LABOR, 1; NECESSITY, Works of; RELIGION.

SUNDRY. See DIVERS.

SUO. See SUI.

SUPER. L. Above, over; upon. Compare SUPRA; SUR.

Super altum mare. Upon the high sea.

Super visum corporis. Upon view of the body. See CORONER.

SUPERIOR.[16] 1, adj. Higher in rank than another person or thing; opposed to inferior, q. v.

A statute which treats of persons or things of an inferior rank cannot by general words be extended to those of a superior rank.[17] See GENERAL, 6.

Higher in authority than another, yet not the highest: as, a court intermediate between an inferior court or courts and a higher court or courts or the court of last resort, and the jurisdiction of which may extend over a city, a county, several counties as one district, or over a State. See further COURT.

2, n. One who controls the actions of another; a principal, as distinguished from his agent. See RESPONDERE, Respondeat.

SUPERSEDE. 1. To suspend, stay, supplant. Said of a proceeding which arrests

405 (1859); Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 568-75 (N. Y., 1861); Sparhawk v. Union Passenger R. Co., 54 Pa. 433 (1867); More v. Clymer, 12 Mo. Ap. 14-19 (1882); Richmond v. Moore, 107 Ill. 433-40 (1883); Commonwealth v. Dexter, 143 Mass. 28 (1886); Parker v. State, 16 Lea, 476 (1886); 28 Am. Law Reg. 273-84 (1880), cases; 34 id. 726-29 (1886), cases; 18 South. Law Rev. 273-300 (1880), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 533-50 (1887), cases; 26 Cent. Law J. 103 (1888), cases.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 63.

[2] More v. Clymer, 12 Mo. Ap. 14 (1882); Richmond v. Moore, 107 Ill. 433 (1883), cases; Kinney v. McDermott, 55 Iowa, 674 (1881): 20 Am. Law Reg. 740-42 (1881), cases.

[3] Gibbs, &c. Manuf. Co. v. Brucker, 111 U. S. 601-3 (1884), cases, Woods, J.; Von Hoven v. Irish, 3 McCrary, 443 (1882); Evansville v. Morris, 87 Ind. 274 (1882), cases; Beitenman's Appeal, 55 Pa. 185 (1867), cases; Swann v. Swann, 21 F. R. 299, 308 (1884), cases. Contra, Richmond v. Moore, 107 Ill. 429 (1883); More v. Clymer, 12 Mo. Ap. 11 (1882); 24 Am. Law Reg. 889-97 (1885), cases.

[4] Beitenman's Appeal, 55 Pa. 184 (1867).

[5] Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich. 1, 7 (1880), cases, Cooley, J.; Dale v. Knepp, 98 Pa. 389, 393 (1881). Contra, Catlett v. Meth. Epis. Church, 62 Ind. 365 (1878).

[6] Shaw v. Williams, 87 Ind. 158 (1882).

[7] Commonwealth v. Teamann, 1 Phila. 177 (1853).

[8] Commonwealth v. Osgood, 144 Mass. 362 (1887).

[9] Commonwealth v. Louisville, &c. R. Co. 80 Ky. 291 (1882). Contra, Sparhawk v. Union Passenger R. Co., 54 Pa. 401 (1867): Act of 1794.

[10] Phillips v. Innes, 4 Clark & F. 234 (H. L., 1837); Commonwealth v. Dextra, 143 Mass. 28 (1886).

[11] Kinney v. Emery, 37 N. J. E. 341 (1883), cases in note; 9 Pac. R. 798, cases.

[12] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. 219 (1859).

[13] Commonwealth v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. 398 (1859). As to injuries received when violating the law, see 21 Cent. Law J. 525-29 (1885), cases.

[14] Commonwealth v. Burry, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 481 (1888). Contra, Commonwealth v. Bosch, 15 W. N. C. 316 (Pa., 1884).

[15] Baker v. Commonwealth, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 10 (1888). See generally other decisions, 2 Alb. Law J. 61-64 (1870), cases; 8 id. 161-62 (1873), cases.

[16] L. superior, higher.

[17] 1 Bl. Com. 88.

the operation of another proceeding. See STAY; SUPERSEDEAS.

2. To be superseded, in military law, is to have one person put in the place which, by the ordinary course of military promotion, belongs to another.[1]

SUPERSEDEAS. L. That you stay or suspend. The emphatic word of a writ (anciently in Latin) commanding a stay of proceedings in a designated case. It is now oftenest applied to a proceeding which operates as a writ of supersedeas; as, a perfected appeal, writ of error, or writ of certiorari.

Merely an auxiliary process designated to supersede the enforcement of the judgment of the court below brought up by writ of error for review.[2]

In the code of Kentucky, defined to be "a written order signed by the clerk, commanding the appellee and all others to stay proceedings on the judgment or order." It is a remedy for the unsuccessful litigant who complains of errors committed to his prejudice by the court below. It stops all proceedings on the judgment until the appeal is disposed of.[3]

An appeal allowed and security taken operate as a supersedeas. In the absence of fraud, the power of the lower court is exhausted; all control is transferred to the higher court.[4]

It is a statutory remedy, obtained only by strict compliance with all required conditions.[5]

No execution shall issue upon a judgment, where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, until the expiration of ten days after the judgment.[6]

See APPEAL, 2; CERTIORARI; ERROR, 2 (3), Writ of.

SUPERSTITIOUS. See USE, 3.

SUPERVISOR. An overseer; a surveyor.

An officer whose duty it is to take care of public roads.

One of a board of persons intrusted with the fiscal affairs of a county.

Of elections: a person commissioned by a judge of the United States circuit court in a city of over twenty thousand inhabitants, or in any Congressional district, to attend at the registration of voters for Congressmen, and so supervise the registry as to insure the detection of improper removals or additions of names.[7]

[1] Exp. Hall, 1 Pick. *263 (1823).

[2] Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 249 (1880), Field, J.

[3] Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 271 (1885).

[4] Draper v. Davis, 102 U. S. 371 (1880), cases; Hovey v. McDonald, 109 id. 150 (1883).

[5] Sage v. Central R. Co., 93 U. S. 417 (1876), cases; 109 id. 160; 9 Bened. 269.

[6] R. S. § 1007; 109 U. S. 159-61.

[7] See fully R. S. §§ 2011-31; Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 371 (1879); Exp. Clarke, ib. 399 (1879); Re Appointment of Supervisors, 9 F. R. 14 (1881).

SUPPLEMENTAL. Added to a thing to complete it; supplying a defect in something that precedes: as, a supplemental affidavit, bill, answer, complaint, petition,—each of which adds to or supplies matter either not previously known or omitted as non-essential, without taking the place of the original paper or proceeding. See ANSWER, 3; BILL, IV; DEFENSE, 2, Affidavit of "Supplementary" and "suppletory" are also used, as, of an oath to books of original evidence, and of comparison of handwriting, at common law. See OATH, Suppletory.

As to supplemental legislation, see TITLE, 2, Of act.

SUPPLICAVIT. L. He has besought. A writ in chancery in the nature of a process at common law to find sureties of the peace, upon articles filed for that purpose.

Very rarely used, as the common-law remedy is generally adequate; sometimes resorted to by a wife against her husband.[1]

SUPPORT. 1. Sustenance; maintenance, q. v.

G. sent D. a letter saying "Please let S. and family have whatever they may want for their support, and I will pay you." Held, that D. could not recover for services and medicines furnished by a physician; that "support" is generally used to mean articles for sustenance, and that G. did not intend the word to mean necessaries.[2] See NECESSARIES, 1; MEANS; WANT.

2. The right in an owner to rely upon the support afforded his land by the ground adjoining, in its natural state. Spoken of as "lateral," when the support is thought of as contiguous or adjacent, rather than as subjacent.

The right to support for land in its natural condition is ex jure naturæ, not dependent on grant and not acquirable by prescription. The right to support for artificial burdens is an easement acquirable only by grant, express or implied. The right may be implied from circumstances, as, where houses, needing the support of each other, are built by the same owner, and one is conveyed without stipulation to the contrary. But such implied right is confined to the status quo at the time of grant, and extends not to increase the burdens upon the soil.[3]

Subject to any express grant, reservation, covenant, or inconsistent right gained by prescription, it is well established that when the surface of land belongs to one person and the subjacent earth and minerals to another, the latter is burdened with a natural servitude to support the former, and also that the owner of land is entitled to the performance of a similar servitude of lateral support by adjacent land; but these easements only extend to the land in its natural and unincumbered state, and not with the additional weight of buildings upon it. To maintain an action for a nuisance affecting such an easement, some appreciable damage must be shown.[1]

[1] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1476-77; 4 Bl. Com. 253.

[2] Grant v. Dabney, 19 Kan. 389 (1877), Horton, C. J.

[3] Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 3-9 (1885), cases.

Every land-owner has a right to have his land preserved unbroken. An adjacent owner excavating on his land is subject to the restriction that he must not remove the earth so near his neighbor's land that his soil will crumble under its own weight and fall. But this right to lateral support extends only to soil in its natural condition. It does not protect whatever is placed upon the soil increasing the downward and lateral pressure. If it did, it would be in the power of a lot-owner, by erecting heavy buildings, to greatly abridge the right of his neighbor to use his lot.[2]

See EASEMENT; UTERE, SIC, etc.

Supports. Of a bridge: the abutments, piers, and trestles on which the string-pieces rest from beneath.

The cross-pieces, under the string-pieces, and to which they are bolted, are not supports.[3]

SUPPOSE. "To suppose" and "to believe" mean substantially the same — to think, to receive as true.

As, when a plaintiff compromises what he honestly "supposes" is a good cause of action.[4]

SUPPRESS. To prevent; never, therefore, to license or sanction.[5] See SUPPRESSIO; PROHIBITION, 2.

SUPPRESSIO. L. Concealing, misrepresenting; literally, pressing down or under, holding back. Opposed, suggestio, intimation.

Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi. Concealment of the truth is (equivalent to) statement of what is false: suppression of fact, which should be disclosed, is the same in effect as willful misrepresentation.[6] See further DECEIT; FRAUD; REPRESENTATION, 1.

SUPRA. L. Above, over; formerly.

Alone, and in ut supra and vide supra, refers to matter, of text or citation, preceding in the same book or work, and usually upon the same page; in this book, upon the same column. Compare ANTE. Opposed, infra.

Supra protest. Over protest. See PROTEST, 2.

Supra riparian. Upper riparian. See RIPARIAN.

SUPREME.[1] Superior to all others; of the last resort; highest: as, the supreme Magistrate, the supreme court, the supreme power of a State, the supreme law of the land. Opposed to inferior, subordinate, superior, qq. v. See COURT; LAW; MAGISTRATE.

SUR. F. On, upon; over, beyond. L. super, supra.

Sur judgment: upon a judgment; sur mortgage: upon a mortgage; debt sur bond: debt upon a sealed instrument. Observe words following, beginning in sur.

SURCHARGE. Overcharge; an excessive or unlawful charge.

Surcharge and falsify. In the language of the common law "surcharge" imports an overcharge in quantity, price, or value beyond what is just, correct, and reasonable. In this sense it is nearly equivalent to "falsify;" for every item which is not truly charged as it should be, is false; and, by establishing such overcharge, it is falsified. But in the sense in which used in courts of equity, the words are contrasted with each other.[2]

A surcharge is appropriately applied to the balance of the whole account; and supposes credits to be omitted, which ought to be allowed. A falsification applies to some item in the debits; and supposes that the item is wholly false, or in some part erroneous. "If any of the parties can show an omission [in a stated account] for which credit ought to be taken, that is a surcharge; or if anything is inserted that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it, and that is falsification. But that must be by proof on his side."[3]

SURETY.[1] A person who engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. The engagement constitutes a contract of suretyship.[2]

A person who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by

[1] Moak, Underh. Torts, 419, cases.

[2] Northern Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 645 (1878), cases, Strong, J. See also Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass. 201-9 (1877), cases, Gray, C. J.; Keating v. Cincinnati, 38 Ohio St. 148-49 (1882), cases; Carlin v. Chappel, 101 Pa. 350-53 (1882), cases; 3 Kent, 435; 1 Am. Law Rev. 1-22 (1866), cases; 27 Am. Law Reg. 539-39 (1879), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 270 (1887), cases.

[3] Abbott v. Town of Wolcott, 38 Vt. 672 (1866).

[4] See Parker v. Enslow, 102 Ill. 277 (1882).

[5] See Schwuchow v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 448 (1873); Town of Nevada v. Hutchins, 59 Iowa, 508 (1882).

[6] See Fleming v. Slocum, 18 Johns. *405 (1820); 17 Alb. Law J. 501-4 (1878), cases; 1 Story, Eq. § 191; Bishop, Eq. § 213.

[1] L. supremus, uppermost.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. § 525, quoting Lord Hardwicke in Pit v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. 565-66 (1354). See also Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. 256 (1826).

[3] F. sureté: L. se-, apart from, free of; cura, anxiety.

[4] See Evans v. Keeland, 9 Ala. 46 (1845).

some other person who ought himself to have made or performed before the former was compelled to do so.[1]

The relation is fixed by the arrangement and equities between the debtors or obligors, and may be unknown to the creditor.[1]

Co-surety. Persons are co-sureties, so as to give the right of contribution, when they are bound for the performance by the same principal of the same duty.[2]

A contract of "suretyship" is a direct liability to the creditor for the act to be performed by the debtor; a "guaranty" is a liability only for his ability to perform this act. A surety assumes to perform the contract if the principal should not; a guarantor undertakes that his principal can perform — that he is able to perform. The undertaking in suretyship is immediate and direct that the act shall be done; if not done, the surety becomes at once responsible. In a case of guaranty, non-ability, that is, insolvency, must first be shown.[3]

A "surety" is usually bound with his principal, by the same instrument, executed at the same time and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor, and a debtor from the beginning, and held to know every default of his principal. He may be sued with the principal. The contract of a "guarantor" is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. He is often discharged by indulgence to the principal, and usually is not liable unless notified of his default. At the same time, each stands responsible for the debt, default, or miscarriage of the other; each is a favorite in law, and not bound beybnd the strict terms of the engagement.[4]

The liability of a surety is not to be extended, by implication, beyond the terms of his contract. To the extent, and in the manner, and under the circumstances, pointed out in his obligation, he is bound, and no farther. It is not sufficient that he may sustain no injury by a change in the contract, or that it may even be for his benefit. He has a right to stand upon the very terms of his contract; and if he does not assent to any variation of it, and a variation is made, it is fatal. The courts scan contracts of sureties with considerable strictness.[5]

When a change is made without his assent, he is not bound by the contract in its original form, for that has ceased to exist. He is not bound by the contract in its altered form, for to that he never assented.[6]

He is a "favored debtor." His rights are zealously guarded both at law and in equity. The slightest fraud on the part of the creditor, touching the contract, annuls it. Any alteration after it is made, though beneficial to the surety, has the same effect. His contract, exactly as made, is the measure of his liability; and, if the case against him be not clearly within it, he is entitled to go acquit. But there is a duty incumbent on him. He must not rest supine, close his eyes and fail to seek important information within his reach. If he does this, and a loss occurs, he cannot, in the absence of fraud by the creditor, set up as a defense facts then first learned which he ought to have known and considered before entering into the contract.[1]

When it is said that the contract is to be construed strictly, the meaning is that the obligation is not to be extended to any other subject, or person, or period of time than is expressed or necessarily included in it This rule applies only to the contract itself, not to matters collateral and incidental or arising in execution of it, which are governed by the rules that apply to like circumstances, whatever the relation of the parties.[2]

In the case of an absolute guaranty by a surety of payment of a debt, no duty rests upon the creditor in the first instance to take steps against the debtor, and a request to proceed, and damage resulting to the surety from a failure to proceed, must be shown by the surety, to establish a defense. But in the case of an undertaking of such a nature that proceedings must be taken against the debtor before the obligation of the surety to pay arises, proof of a request to proceed is not necessary, the law in such case implying the condition precedent that due diligence will be used in proceeding against the principal.[3]

Where a law provides that a surety may require his creditor, by written notice, to commence action against the principal, the notice must be unconditional — to commence forthwith; a notice that the surety "wishes" the creditor to collect the claim or have it arranged, the surety not desiring to remain liable, is not sufficient.[4]

A surety who pays the debt for which he is bound is not only entitled to all the rights of the creditor against the principal for the whole amount, but against the other sureties for their proportional part.[5]

---

[1] Smith v. Shelden, 35 Mich. 48 (1876), Cooley, C. J.; Wendlandt v. Sohr, 37 Minn. 163 (1887).

[2] Young v. Shunk, 30 Minn. 505 (1883), Gilfillan, C. J.

[3] Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 440 (1866), Agnew, J.

[4] Markland Mining & Manuf. Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 566–69 (1882), cases, Zollars, J. See also Barns v. Barrow, 61 N. Y. 42–46 (1874), cases; Kingsbury v. Westfall, ib. 360 (1875); Hammel v. Beardsley, 31 Minn. 315 (1883).

[5] Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 703 (1824), cases, Story, J.

[6] Reese v. United States, 9 Wall. 21 (1869); Smith v. United States, 2 Wall. 233–35 (1864), cases; Read v. Bowman, ib. 603 (1864), cases; State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 442 (1886), cases; 20 Cent. Law J. 183–89 (1885), cases.

[1] Magee v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 93 (1875), cases, Swayne, J.

[2] Warner v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 363 (1883), Matthews, J.; Burge, Suretyship, 1 Am. ed. 40.

[3] Toles v. Adee, 91 N. Y. 573 (1883), Rapallo, J.

[4] Meriden Silver Plate Co. v. Flory, 44 Ohio St. 435 (1886); Baker v. Kellogg, 29 id. 665 (1876): Ohio Rev. St. § 5833.

[5] United States v. Ryder, 110 U. S. 733 (1884); Hampton v. Phipps, 108 id. 263–66 (1883), cases; Shaeffer v. Clendenin, 100 Pa. 567 (1882); Stevens v. Tucker, 87 Ind. 122 (1882), cases; 1 Harv. Law Rev. 326–37 (1887), cases; 9 Va. Law J. 1–7 (1885), cases.

The rule of law is that where one surety has paid the debt, he can recover from a co-surety, at law, an aliquot part of the debt, regard being had to the number, but not to the solvency, of the sureties. If any co-surety is insolvent, a larger proportion may be recovered in equity.[1]

When a surety has contracted with reference to the conduct of a party in a proceeding in court, in the absence of fraud or collusion, he is concluded by the judgment.[2]

If the surety holds indemnity from the principal, the creditor may have the debt satisfied out of it; if the indemnity is against a contingent liability, the creditor cannot be substituted until the liability becomes absolute, that is, until the claim is reduced to judgment.[3]

If the purpose for which the contract is made is illegal, the surety cannot be held. Thus, a bond to release property from an unlawful attachment creates no liability.[4]

Surety company. An association of persons, usually incorporated, which makes a business of acting as surety for persons occupying positions of trust, for a compensation which varies with the amount of the bond or security required. Such companies are sometimes also called "guaranty companies."

See ALTERATION, 2; APPEAL, 2; ASSENT; CONTRIBUTION; DISCUSSION; GUARANTY, 2; INDORSEMENT; JOINT AND SEVERAL; LIABILITY, Contingent; PEACE, 1; RECOGNIZANCE; STRICTUS; SUBROGATION.

SURFACE. May refer to the existing or artificial and not to the original or natural surface.

As, in a statute which makes a lot-owner liable for damages done by excavating more than a certain number of feet below the surface of the adjoining lot.[5] See LAND; MINERAL; SUPPORT, 2.

Surfacing. In a contract for constructing a railroad, was held not to include the work of filling in between the ties, nor of raising the road-bed.[6]

Surface-water. Ceases to be such after it has entered the space between the banks of a watercourse.[7] See AQUA, CURRIT; PERCOLATE; WATERCOURSE.

[1] Griffin v. Kelleher, 132 Mass. 83 (1882), cases; 1 Story, Eq. § 496.

[2] Blaiden v. Mercer, 44 Ohio St. 343-46 (1886), cases.

[3] Macklin v. North. Bank Kentucky, 83 Ky. 319 (1885).

[4] Pacific Nat. Bank v. Mixter, 124 U. S. 729 (1888).

Wife as surety for husband, see 20 Cent. Law J. 205 (1885), cases. Sureties on official bonds, 23 id. 124 (1886), cases. Bond signed conditionally, 37 Alb. Law J. 188-93, 208-12 (1888), cases. Judgment against principal as evidence against surety, 36 id. 404-8 (1887), cases. Recovering penalty and interest, 37 id. 108-11 (1888), cases. Limitation of actions for deficits, on U. S. officers' bonds, Act 8 Aug. 1888: 25 St. L. 387.

[5] Burkhardt v. Hanley, 23 Ohio St. 559 (1873).

[6] Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 167 (1874).

[7] Jones v. Hannovan, 55 Mo. 466-67 (1874). See Weis v. City of Madison, 75 Ind. 241 (1881), cases; M'Clure v. City of Red Wing, 28 Minn. 192 (1881), cases.

SURGERY. See PHYSICIAN.

Surgical instruments. See BAGGAGE.

SURMISE. Formerly, as a verb, to suggest; as a substantive, a statement or allegation intended to induce judicial action.

When a defendant pleaded a local custom, he had to "surmise," that is, to suggest, that the custom be certified by the mouth of the recorder; without which the issue was tried as any other issue of fact.[1]

SURNAME. See NAME, 1.

SURPLUS.[2] Excess; residue.

Of an insurance company: the fund it has in excess of its capital stock after paying the debts.[3]

"Surplus earnings" of a company: the amount owned by it over and above its capital and actual liabilities.[4]

As used in a will, may have a meaning different from "overplus" or that which shall happen to be left over.[5]

Where a contractor was to fill a trench and haul away the surplus, it was held that the surplus belonged to him.[6]

SURPLUSAGE.[7] 1. Surplus matter; overplus; residue; also, a balance over. See MORE OR LESS; RESIDUE.

2. Matter, in any instrument, foreign to the purpose; whatever is extraneous, impertinent, superfluous, or unnecessary.

Whatever may be stricken from the record without destroying the plaintiff's right of action; as, in a suit for a breach of warranty, that goods were not such as the defendant warranted them — "and that he knew this." Yet it is not every immaterial or unnecessary allegation that is surplusage; for if the party, in stating his title, should state it with unnecessary particularity, he must prove it as alleged. Regard must be had to the nature of the averment itself, and its connection with the substance of the charge, rather than its grammatical collocation or structure.[7]

Surplusagium non nocet. L. Surplusage does not vitiate. Mere surplusage may be rejected.

The statement of what the law implies is surplusage, and avails nothing. Such is the phrase "value received," on the face of bills and notes; and the

[1] Vin. Abr. 246 (P); 1 Burr. 251.

[2] F. surplus; L. super, above; plus, more.

[3] [State v. Parker, 34 N. J. L. 482 (1871), Van Syckel, Judge.

[4] [People v. Commissioners, 76 N. Y. 74 (1879), Church, Chief Justice.

[5] Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. Jr. *466 (1812).

[6] White Lot Sewer, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 378 (1879).

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 51, cases; United States v. Burnham, 1 Mas. 67 (1816).

words "and the survivor of them," in a lease to persons for their joint lives.

In an indictment, any allegation, not descriptive of the identity of the offense, which can be omitted without affecting the charge and without detriment to the complaint, may be treated as surplusage, and need not be proved.[1]

See DESCRIPTION; INDICTMENT; REDUNDANCY.

SURPRISE. 1. In equity is not a technical term. Johnson's common definition explains it: the act of taking unawares; the state of being taken unawares; sudden confusion or perplexity. When equity relieves for surprise it is on the ground that the party has been taken unawares, has acted, without due deliberation, under confused and sudden impressions. Loosely used, the word may presume or import "fraud;" in accurate usage it refers to something done which, as being unexpected, misleads or confuses on the sudden, and thus operates as a fraud.[2] Compare MISTAKE.

2. In statutes providing for amendments of pleadings at trial, and the granting of new trials: such variance between the allegations and the proofs as misleads the opposite party in maintaining his action or defense on the merits. It constitutes a material variance which the party is not prepared to meet and could not expect.[3]

One remedy for a surprise is a motion for a new trial.[4]

The surprise for which a court will set aside proceedings, fair and regular on their face, which have resulted in vesting rights to realty in a purchaser, must be a legal surprise, without fault in the person alleging it.[5]

It must be absolutely impossible for the adverse party to be taken by surprise by an amendment which does not touch the merits or substance of a cause.[6]

A modification, not a change, in the cause of action, is allowed — any alteration, indeed, which does not affect the identity of the transaction.[7] See ALLEGATION.

SURREBUTTER. See REBUTTER.

SURREJOINDER. See JOINDER.

SURRENDER. To give up, make over, deliver; also, such act itself. See DELIVERY; WAIVER.

To relinquish or give up, unless the meaning is extended by construction; as, in a statute providing that attached goods should be surrendered upon delivery of a bond.[1]

Surrenderee. He to whom a surrender has been made. Surrenderor. He who makes a surrender.

Surrender by bail. For a person who has become another's bail or surety to give him over again into the custody of the officer who made the arrest or of the sheriff, marshal, or jailor. See BAIL, 2.

Surrender of a criminal. For the executive of a State to give up an alleged fugitive from justice to the authorities of the State from which he fled. See EXTRADITION.

Surrender of an estate. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him that has the immediate reversion or remainder, wherein the particular estate may merge or drown, by mutual agreement.[2]

A "surrender" is the falling of a less estate into a greater; in a "release" (q. v.) the greater estate descends upon the less. The surrenderor must be in possession, and the surrenderee must have a higher estate into which the estate surrendered may merge. Hence, a tenant for life cannot surrender to him that is in remainder for years.[3]

Surrender of a lease. A yielding up, by a tenant, of his estate, to the landlord, so that the leasehold interest becomes extinct by mutual agreement.

May be by express words, or by operation of law where the parties have done some act which implies that they both agreed to consider the surrender as made.[4] See QUIT.

Surrender of a preference. For a creditor of a bankrupt to turn over to the assignee whatever property or security he may have received in preference to other creditors, in order to share in a dividend.[5]

SURROGATE.[6] 1. One who is substituted or appointed in the place of another.

Formerly, a person selected by the bishop to issue, in his stead, licenses to marry. He presided in the [1] Commonwealth v. Rowell, 146 Mass. 130 (1888); ib. 146, 286, 331.

[2] [1 Story, Eq. § 120, note, cases; ib. § 251.]

[3] Nash v. Towne, 5 Wall. 698 (1866), cases, Clifford, J.

[4] Mulhall v. Keenan, 18 Wall. 343, 350 (1873).

[5] Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. 446 (1854); Central Pacific R. Co. v. Creed, 70 Cal. 501 (1886).

[6] Franklin v. Mackey, 16 S. & R. *118 (1827).

[7] Farmers', &c. Bank v. Israel, 6 S. & W. *295 (1830).

[1] Clark v. Wilson, 14 R. I. 13 (1882).

[2] Coke, Litt. 337 b.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 326. See also 4 Kent, 103; 26 Minn. 136, 321; 30 N. Y. 462; 12 Johns. 361; 5 Pa. 424; 18 Gratt. 159; 8 Wis. *158.

[4] Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 389 (1876), cases, Clifford, J.; Spooner v. Spooner, 26 Minn. 136 (1879), cases; Smith v. Pendergast, ib. 321 (1879), cases; Martin v. Stearns, 52 Iowa, 347 (1879), cases.

[5] See Re Richter's Estate, 1 Dill. 552 (1870).

[6] L. surrogatus, elected in place of another: subrogare.

bishop's diocesan court. As representative of the ordinary, he granted letters of administration. Whence —

2. A judicial officer, corresponding to the ordinary or to a judge of an orphans' court or court of probate,[1] qq. v.

SURROUNDINGS. See RES, Gestæ.

SURVEY.[2] A view or examination, usually professional or official, with reference to the boundaries, features, etc., of land, the condition and value of a building, the seaworthiness of a vessel, or the quality, condition, or value of merchandise.

Whence surveyor of land, of highways, of customs or of the port, of vessels; and surveyor-general of public lands.

Survey of buildings. In insurance law, a plan and description of the existing state, condition, and mode of use of property. "Plan" and "description" may be synonymous.[3]

Includes the application, containing the questions propounded and the answers thereto.[4]

Survey of land. The actual measurement of land, ascertaining the contents by running the lines and angles, and fixing the corners and boundaries.[5]

In civil engineering, does not necessarily mean a map or profile; but the terms are sometimes convertible.[6]

Chamber survey. A survey not made upon the ground.

Where a return of an official survey is made and accepted, a prima facie presumption arises that the survey was made upon the ground, but for twenty-one years after the return such presumption may be rebutted by proof that it was but a chamber survey.[7]

Junior survey and senior survey are used in the ordinary sense of younger or later and older or earlier survey, respectively.

In Pennsylvania, unless a survey is returned to the land-office within a reasonable time,— seven years, as fixed by the courts,— it is regarded as abandoned.[8]

In that State, also, original marks and living monuments are the highest proof of a location; calls for adjoining surveys are next in importance. Both these being wanting, corners and distances returned to the land-office govern. Surveys constituting a block are treated as one survey; and its lines and corners, belonging to every sub-tract as much as to any particular one, fixes the location of the whole block. When a survey can be determined by its own marks upon the ground or by its own calls, it cannot be controlled by the lines of an adjoining junior survey; but when marks have disappeared from the senior survey, so that a line is rendered uncertain, original and well-established marks found upon a later adjoining survey, made by the same surveyor about the same time, are admissible to aid the jury in settling the location of the senior survey. After twenty-one years from the return of a survey the presumption is that the warrant was located as returned to the land-office: but this may be rebutted by proof of the existence of marked lines and monuments, and of other facts showing that the actual location was different from the official courses and distances.[1]

See BOUNDARY; TAKE, 8.

Survey of a vessel. A public document which affords the means of ascertaining the condition of the ship and the other property at hazard.[2]

SURVIVE.[3] To live beyond an event or person.

1. A right of action is said to "survive," rather than to abate, upon the death of a person, when his representative may institute or continue the action; as, for breach of a contract or for injury to property.[4]

A right of action survives against one's representatives where by means of the offense property is acquired which benefited the decedent.[5] See further ACTION, 2, Personal.

2. To live beyond another related person. To remain in life after the death of another.[6]

The persons may be partners, executors, administrators, trustees. Whence surviving partner, executor, etc., or simply the survivor.

"Surviving," "survivor," or "survivors," is often used, in wills, in the broad sense of all "others," rather than as referring to members of a particular class alone, which is its ordinary and perhaps strict sense.[7] See EXECUTOR; PARTNER.

Survivorship. When two or more persons are seized of a joint estate of inheritance for their own lives, or for the life of another, or are jointly possessed of a chattel interest, the entire tenancy, upon the death of any of

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 508; 2 Kent, 420; 2 Steph. Com. 247.

[2] F. sur, over; veër (voir), to see.

[3] Denny v. Conway Ins. Co., 13 Gray, 497 (1859), Bigelow, J.

[4] May v. Buckeye Ins. Co., 25 Wis. 307 (1870).

[5] [Winter v. United States, 1 Hemp. 332 (1848), Johnson, J.

[6] Attorney-General v. Stevens, 1 N. J. E. 385 (1831).

[7] Packer v. Schrader Mining, &c. Co., 97 Pa. 383 (1881); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 668-70.

[8] Paxton v. Griswold, 122 U. S. 441 (1887), cases.

[1] Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 327, 332, 336 (1888), cases.

[2] [Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 43 (1837), Story, J.

[3] F. survivre, to outlive: L. super-vivere.

[4] See Jenkins v. French, 58 N. H. 533 (1879).

[5] United States v. Daniel, 6 How. 13 (1848); 20 Am. Law Rev. 49-79 (1886), cases.

[6] Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. *31 (1811).

[7] Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 593-94 (1885), cases.

them, survives to the survivor, and at length to the last survivor.[1]

Also called jus accrescendi, because, upon the death of one joint-tenant, the right accumulates and increases to the survivor.[2]

Generally abolished, and preference given to tenancy in common, unless otherwise directed in devises, and except as to mortgages, trust estates, and, perhaps, as to devises and conveyances to husband and wife.[3] See TENANT.

Where two or more persons, entitled to inherit from one another, perish together in the same shipwreck, battle, or conflagration, or otherwise, the English common law requires the matter of successive survivorship to be proved by facts. The French civil code and the civil code of Louisiana deduce rules from the probabilities resulting from age, sex, and strength.[4]

There is no presumption of survivorship in the case of persons who perish by a common disaster. One who claims through a survivorship must prove the survivorship.[5]

See ACCUMULATION; COPARCENARY; ENTIRETY; TENANT, Joint-tenants.

SUS. PER COLL. An abbreviation of the Latin suspendatur per collum, let him be hanged by the neck.

These words were formerly written on the criminal calendar, opposite the name of a person convicted of a capital felony, and constituted the sheriff's warrant for executing him.[6]

SUSPENSION.[7] Temporary stopping or interdiction of the exercise of some power, proceeding, right, or law.

As, the suspension of, and to suspend,— a right of entry upon, and the pre-emption of, public lands, the running of the statute of limitations, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus (q. v.), rendering a decision or pronouncing a sentence, execution of a judgment or sentence, or from office.[8]

See ARREST, 1; REPRIEVE; SENTENCE; STAY; VACANCY.

SUSPICION. "The act of suspecting, or the state of being suspected; imagination of something ill; distrust, mistrust; doubt."[9]

1. "Suspicions" is frequently applied to an act, thing, or occurrence which, from its nature or from some circumstance attending it, may well put a man of ordinary caution upon his guard against deception.

Mere suspicion that there may be something wrong with a piece of negotiable paper will not defeat recovery by a purchaser. He loses protection against an infirmity only when he is guilty of bad faith, or buys with actual notice of the defect.[1] See BEARER; INNOCENT.

A man may have grounds of suspicion that his debtor is in failing circumstances and yet have no cause for a well-founded "belief" of the fact. To make mere suspicion a ground of nullity would render business transactions too insecure. "A reasonable cause to believe" a debtor insolvent is a different matter.[2]

2. "Suspicions" is also applied to cases in which a party fails or omits to produce evidence within his exclusive possession, and which, being introduced, would have changed the result, presumably against his interest.

3. The words are likewise applied to the case of a person who is believed to have committed a crime, or whose actions fairly indicate an intention to commit crime.

Suspicious character. A person suspected of intending to commit, in the present or near future, some act of criminal misbehavior.

The grounds for the suspicion appearing reasonable to a committing magistrate, such person may be required to find security for keeping the peace, and for good behavior.[3]

A justice of the peace may issue a warant to apprehend a person suspected of felony, though the suspicion originates with the person who prays the warrant; because the justice is competent to judge of the probability of the suspicion.[4]

Where a high crime has been committed, very stringent proof is not required that there was ground for a reasonable belief that a suspected party was guilty. Peace officers may arrest upon suspicion of felony. A high officer, as, the sheriff, may arrest a person merely suspected of a capital offense. Yet suspicion is not belief; probable cause for suspicion by a prudent and reasonable man that a person committed a high crime may not be sufficient to induce him to believe the person guilty.[5]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 183–84; 4 Kent, 360.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 183.

[3] See 1 Washb. R. P. 408, note; 4 Kent, 361–63.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 29–30, cases; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1280–82, cases; 30 Alb. Law J. 45–46 (1884), cases; 14 Cent. Law J. 367–71 (1882), cases,— Irish Law T.

[5] Newell v. Nichols, 75 N. Y. 86–90 (1878), cases, Church, C. J.; Russell v. Hallett, 23 Kan. 278 (1880), cases; Johnson v. Merithew, 80 Me. — (1888), cases.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 403; 44 L. T. 365.

[7] L. suspendere, to hang up.

[8] See Richards v. Burden, 59 Iowa, 756 (1882).

[9] McCalla v. State, 66 Ga. 348 (1881), Speer, J.

---

[1] Fox v. Bank of Kansas City, 30 Kan. 446 (1883), cases, Brewer, J.; Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 444 (1880), cases, Strong, J.

[2] Grant v. First Nat. Bank of Monmouth, 97 U. S. 81 (1877).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 252.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 290.

[5] McCarthy v. DeArmit, 99 Pa. 70 (1881), cases. McCarthy, as mayor of Pittsburgh, Pa., at the time of

In an action for malicious prosecution it is enough if the circumstances produced an honest and strong suspicion of guilt; a "conviction" would imply a higher degree of proof than the law requires.[1]

Circumstances which merely cast upon one suspicion of guilt will not support a conviction by being coupled with the confession of an alleged accomplice.[2]

See ARREST, 2; CAUSE, 2, Probable; NIGHT-WALKER.

SUUM; SUUS. See SUI.

SWAMP. Within the meaning of the act of Congress of September 28, 1850, granting swamp and overflowed lands to the States, such lands as, by periodical overflow at seasons of sowing and harvesting, are rendered unfit for cultivation of the staple crops.[3] See MEADOW.

SWEAR. 1. To take an oath before an officer employed to administer oaths. Compare JURARE. See OATH; AFFIDAVIT.

The certificate of a magistrate that a complaint was "taken and sworn" before him is sufficient in form; so are the words "sworn before me."[4]

An allegation that the defendant did "depose and swear" to the truth of an answer, does not show that he was "sworn" to the truth. One may "swear" who is not "sworn;" and in that case the oath is self-imposed.[5]

False swearing. Swearing to a statement with knowledge of its falsity, as, by an assured.[6]

A verified false assertion which deceives, or is fitted and likely to deceive, the one to whom it is made.[7]

The words "she has sworn falsely" do not of themselves import perjury. To render them actionable it must be averred that they were spoken with reference to a judicial oath, and were meant to charge perjury.[8]

It is sufficient to charge that the accused willfully and knowingly swore, deposed, or gave in evidence that which was false, in a matter judicially pending, or on a subject in which he could be legally sworn, or in which he was required to be sworn. Proper allegations of the falsity of the matter are as necessary as in an indictment for perjury. The indictment should be direct and certain as to the falsity of the oath, which, in both cases, must be knowingly and willfully made.[1] See FORSWEAR; PERJURY; TRUE.

2. To use such profane language as the law forbids.

Profane swearing is generally punished by statutes. See BLASPHEMY; PROFANITY.

SWEDEN TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

SWEEPING. Comprehending many particulars in one act or action: as, a sweeping objection, exception, or denial.

Sweeping clause. The last (eighteenth) paragraph of section 8, Art. I, of the Constitution, conferring power upon Congress "To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" the powers vested in the general government. See further NECESSARY.

SWELL. To augment, increase the amount of: as, that a circumstance in a case of wrong-doing will, or will not, swell the damages recoverable.

SWIFT. Said of a witness who is over-ready to answer, betraying, possibly, partiality for the side by which he is called; a zealous or over-zealous witness. See EXAMINATION, 9.

SWINDLE. Does not, with any degree of certainty, import the commission of an indictable offense. The word was imported into England from Germany, and implies no more than to "cheat,"[2] q. v.

In Minnesota, whoever by any device, sleight of hand, or other means, by use of cards or instruments of like character, obtains from another any money or other property, shall be guilty of the crime of "swindling."[3]

The Penal Code of Texas defines it as the acquisition of movable property, money, or a writing securing a valuable right by means of some false or deceitful pretense or device, or fraudulent representation, with intent to appropriate the same to the use of the party so acquiring, or of destroying or impairing the right of the party justly entitled to the same.[4]

In a State where the term does not necessarily import a crime, not actionable per se.[5] the railroad riots there July 21-22, 1877, caused De-Armit's arrest, without a warrant, on suspicion that he was the person who had "avenged" the death of a brother by shooting two militiamen.

---

[1] Keep v. Griggs, 12 Bradw. 516-17 (1882); Harpham v. Whitney, 77 Ill. 38 (1875).

[2] McCalla v. State, 66 Ga. 346 (1881).

[3] Thompson v. Thornton, 50 Cal. 144 (1875). See the decisions under the act of 1850 reviewed and explained at length, United States v. Louisiana, 127 U. S. 182-91 (1888); Merrill v. Tobin, 30 F. R. 738 (1887).

[4] Commonwealth v. Bennett, 7 Allen, 533 (1863).

[5] United States v. McConaughy, 33 F. R. 168 (1887), Deady, J.

[6] Franklin Ins. Co. v. Culver, 6 Ind. 139 (1855).

[7] Maher v. Hibernian Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 292 (1876), Folger, J.

[8] Barger v. Barger, 18 Pa. 492 (1852), Black, C. J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Still, 83 Ky. 277 (1885).

[2] Stevenson v. Hayden, 2 Mass. *408 (1807), Sedgwick, Judge.

[3] State v. Gray, 29 Minn. 142 (1882): Gen. St. 1878, c. 99, § 15.

[4] Blum v. State, 20 Tex. Ap. 591 (1886): Code, art. 790.

[5] Chase v. Whitlock, 3 Hill, 140-41 (1842), cases; Pollock v. Hastings, 88 Ind. 248 (1882). See also Herr v. Bamberg, 10 How. Pr. 130 (1854); Odiorne v. Bacon, 6 Cush. 185 (1850).

SWINE. See CATTLE; HOG.

SWITCH. See RAILROAD.

SWORN. See SWEAR.

SYLLABUS.[1] An abstract; a head-note.

The brief statement of the point or points decided, prefixed to the printed report of a case.

Being prepared by the reporter, it is not an authoritative part of the report. See REPORT, 1 (2).

English plural, syllabuses; Latin plural, syllabi.

SYMBOL. In the law of trade-marks, see TRADE-MARK.

Symbolic delivery. Delivering one thing in evidence of the transfer of some other more important thing: as, of a bill of lading in place of the merchandise. See DELIVERY, 1; LADING, Bill of; SALE, Bill of.

SYNDIC.[2] F. The assignee of an insolvent; also, a director, or the managing director, of a community — company or corporation.

In Louisiana, all the property rights of an insolvent who makes a cession, pass to the syndic.[3]

SYNDICATE. Persons united for the purposes of an enterprise too large for successful management by a single individual; also a number of persons who buy all of an issue of stock or bonds, in order, by advancing the market value, to make a profit to themselves as members of the company.[4] See SYNDIC.

SYNGRAPH.[5] An instrument under the hand and seal of all the parties; an indenture, in the original meaning of that term.[6]

SYNOD. See CHURCH.

T.

T. 1. As an abbreviation, usually stands for tempore, term, terminer, Territory, title, trial, Trinity.

2. As a brand or mark of infamy, commonly meant "thief."

Anciently, a person convicted of a felony, not murder, and admitted to clergy, was branded with a T on the brawn of the thumb.[7]

In Colonial times, was branded or imprinted with indelible ink upon the cheek of a person convicted of theft.

A law enacted in Pennsylvania in 1698 provided, as part of the punishment for stealing goods worth five shillings, that the culprit be ordered, upon penalty of banishment, to wear, when away from his own premises, for six months, upon the outside of the left sleeve between the shoulder and the elbow, a badge of his "thieving" in the shape of a Roman "T," four inches long by one broad, of a color unlike that of the garment,— red, blue, or yellow, as the court directed.[1]

TABLE. 1. In the sense of billiard-table, gaming-table, etc., see GAME, 2.

2. In the sense of a condensed statement or a view of items or details, for ready reference, is used of genealogical tables, interest tables, tables of descent, of weights, measures, etc. See TIME-TABLE.

Table of cases. A statement of the decided cases reported or cited in a law-book, arranged in alphabetical order by their respective titles, with reference to the page or pages where found in the book, and, perhaps also, in the original volume; the whole being printed at the beginning or at the close of the book.

3. In the sense of a law or chapter of a statute, see TWELVE TABLES.

4. Statistics concerning the longevity of large numbers of individuals have been arranged in "tables;" from which the probable duration of the life of a particular person may be estimated, from any year in life.

These tables are chiefly used for determining the present worth of annuities, dower interests, reversions, and policies of insurance.

Life and annuity tables are framed upon the basis of the average duration of the lives of a great number of persons. They have never been held to be absolute guides.[2]

The Northampton Tables were prepared, by a Dr. Price, from bills of mortality kept in the parish of All Saints, a town in the north of England, between 1735 and 1780.

The Carlisle Tables were framed for the town of Carlisle, also in the north of England, from observations made upon a population of 8000 persons, during 1779 and 1780.

---

[1] Gk. syl'labos, taken together — as a whole; a thing made concise; a brief.

[2] Gk. syn'dicos, an assistant to a judge or court.

[3] Arnold v. Danziger, 30 F. R. 899 (1887), cases; 32 id. 1; La. Civ. Code, art. 429.

[4] See Appeal of Whelen, 108 Pa. 162, 195 (1884).

[5] Gk. syn-graphein, to write together. Compare HOLOGRAPH.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 296.

[7] Wharton, Law Dict.

[1] Laws of Prov. of Penn., Linn, 275; 1 Bioren's Laws, 3 (1700).

[2] Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 556, 554 (1886), cases, Gray, J.,— an action for damages for personal injuries; 67 Wis. 37.

The Equitable Tables were made by the Equitable Insurance Company of London, from data collected by the company in the transaction of its business.

The Sweden Tables are based upon returns collected between 1755 and 1776, corrected by returns made between 1775 and 1805, from the population of the whole of Sweden and Finland.

Finlaison's Tables were constructed, about 1825, by John Finlaison, actuary of the National Debt Office of England, from observations upon 25,000 life annuities of the English government, from about 1795 to 1825.

McKean's Tables, first issued in 1837, were prepared by Alexander McKean, actuary, of London.

Wigglesworth's Tables were framed by a Dr. Wigglesworth, from observations made in New England.

Bland's Tables were arranged by Chancellor Bland, of Maryland, from various other tables.[1]

TABULA. L. A plank or board.

Tabula in naufragio. A plank in a shipwreck: a thing saved out of a general loss.

In English law, the right in a third mortgagee, who did not know of the existence of a second mortgage, to acquire the first mortgage, and, by tacking his own to that, to secure satisfaction of both incumbrances before the second received anything.[2] See TACKING.

TACIT. Silent; not expressed, but understood; implied from acts: as, tacit consent, or acknowledgment. See SILENCE.

TACKING. In English law, the equitable doctrine of uniting securities given at different times, to prevent an intermediate purchaser from redeeming or discharging a prior lien without discharging the liens subsequent to his title.[3]

Suppose, for example, that there are three mortgages of different dates. The mortgagee first in time holds the legal title; the others are simply equitable incumbrancers. If, now, the third mortgagee buys the first mortgage, so as to become the owner of the legal title, he has a right to tack his two mortgages together, and receive the whole amount due upon both, prior to the second mortgagee. But this is allowed, when at all, only where the third mortgagee had no notice of the second mortgage at the time he took his mortgage. The right has existed in favor of those who have advanced money on the credit of land. The doctrine does not exist in the United States. A rule apparently analogous is found in cases where a mortgage is given to secure future advances and the mortgagee is allowed to recover sums subsequently advanced, as against a mesne mortgagee.[4]

The reasoning in support of the doctrine has been that where the equity is equal the law shall prevail. But this assumes the whole case. He who is prior in time is prior in right, and has the better equity.[5]

The doctrine is opposed to the policy and express provisions of the recording acts of our States, which direct that the rights of incumbrancers shall be determined by the records of their incumbrances.[6]

TAIL.[7] Fee-tail, as descriptive of an estate in lands, was borrowed from the feudists, among whom it signified any mutilated or truncated inheritance from which the heirs general were "cut off."[8]

Entail. 1, v. To restrict an inheritance to a class of issue or descendants. Opposed, disentail: to bar an estate in tail.

2, n. An estate in tail; an estate-tail.

The words formerly employed in creating the estate were "heirs (male or female) of the body" of a particular person; but other expressions, such as "issue forever," and "posterity," have been held to be of not less extensive import. Where the estate is not recognized, language which, formerly, would have created it will be construed to create a fee-simple.[9]

Entailments are generally abolished in the United States; where retained, they may be barred, as, by a deed from the tenant. Our law favors free alienation, q. v. In England the law has been so modified as to remove the more serious inconveniences that attended such estates.[10] See further FEE, 1.

TAINT. See ATTAINDER.

TAKE. With its inflections, has its popular, a quasi or a wholly technical sense.

1. In the sense of being entitled to, procuring, acquiring, obtaining, receiving, accepting, reserving, is of frequent use.

As in the expressions: take a note; take by descent, by purchase, by devise, by will; take up a lease, or claim; take out a copyright, a patent, a caveat; take possession; take an oath; take words in their popular sense; take effect; take a rule, a nonsuit, an exception, a bill pro confesso, a verdict, a judgment, an appeal, a writ of error.

That it will "take" all one's property to pay his debts means it will require all.[11]

In a statute providing than an estate by curtesy should not "be liable to be taken" for the debts of the husband, "taken" was held to mean taken in invitum.[12]

---

[1] See Williams' Case, 3 Bland, Ch. R. 227–35 (1828); Scribner, Dower, 663–76, App. A. p. 811. As to Bland's Table, see 3 Bland, Ch. R. 237–38; as to Wigglesworth's, see Memoirs Am. Acad. Arts. & Sc., Vol. 2, p. 131; 10 Mass. 315.

[2] See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 414–15, cases; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. *211 (1836); 18 Wall. 475.

[3] [1 Story, Eq. § 412.

[4] See Bispham, Eq. §§ 158–59.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 413.

[6] See at length Marsh v. Lee, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. *611–29, cases; 1 W. & T. ib. 853–80, cases; 2 Pom. Eq. § 768; 10 Conn. 251; 29 id. 324; 1 Johns. Ch. 399; 1 Dall. 158; 11 S. & R. 223; 30 Pa. 378; 13 Vt. 309.

[7] F. taille, a cutting.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 112.

[9] Brann v. Elzey, 83 Ky. 442–43 (1885).

[10] 1 Washb. R. P. 92–111; 4 Kent, 13–23.

[11] King v. Kent, 29 Ala. 555 (1857).

[12] Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 138 (1880).

Power in a bank to "take" realty in payment of debts includes power to sell the same again.[1]

Reserving interest as discount is the same as taking interest. But where there is a penalty, actual receipt is necessary.[2]

Taker. The "first taker" under a will is presumed to have been a favorite of the deceased.[3] See DEVISE, Executory.

2. To take up a bill or note is to pay the amount thereof, and receive the paper back; to retire the bill or note by paying it or substituting other paper for it. See RENEWAL; RETIRE.

3. To avail one's self of the provisions of a law; to take such action in court as will secure one's self the benefits of a particular law: as, to take the bankrupt or insolvent law.

4. To apply for and secure; to procure: as, to "take out" a license, letters of administration or letters testamentary, a policy of insurance, a writ of any kind. See GRANT, 4.

An appeal from a decree of a circuit court is not "taken" until it is some way presented to the court which made the decree, so as to put an end to its jurisdiction over the cause.[4]

5. The technical word in a precept ordering an arrest. See ARREST, 2; CAPERE.

6. The technical word charging felonious appropriation in embezzlement; in larceny the words are "take and carry away."

"Take" and "steal" are not necessarily synonymous.[5]

The taking is actual when the seizing and carrying away is without pretense of an existing contract; and constructive, when, under such pretense, possession, with intent to convert, is obtained. See CARRY, 1; EMBEZZLEMENT; LARCENY; ROBBERY.

7. A mere attempt to seduce is not a taking within a statute against abduction: there must be some positive act to get the person away.[6]

But a taking for purposes of prostitution need not be by force; it may be by improper solicitations or inducements.[7]

8. To appropriate to a public use, against the will of the owner: as, to take private property.

The constitutions of all of the States provide, in substance, as follows: "Nor shall any person . . be deprived of . . property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."[1] In this connection "taken" means, broadly,— occupied, used, diminished in value, injured, damaged, destroyed.

The courts of some States hold, or have held, that the inhibition extends only to cases of actual appropriation — direct, physical seizure or dispossession; the courts of other States, that cases of indirect, consequential injury are also included. The later constitutions generally include the latter class of cases under such phrases as "property taken or damaged," damaged meaning injuriously affected.[2]

When a public use causes to property, no part of which is taken, an injury of such a character that, if it accrued when a portion of the property was taken, it would form an element of the damages as to the part not taken, there is such damage as entitles the owner to compensation.[3]

Applied to the condemnation of land for railway use, "taken" means the exclusion of the owner from use and possession and the actual assumption of exclusive possession by the corporation at the termination and as the result of judicial proceedings.[4]

Where the tracks of a street railway, which owned an exclusive franchise for that mode of carriage, were paralleled by the tracks of a cable tram-way, the latter having obtained from owners of the soil the right to occupy the streets, the property of the former was held to be "damaged," and not "taken," within the meaning of the constitution of Nebraska.[5]

Under the Constitution of Illinois of 1870, in which the words used are "taken or damaged," a recovery may be had wherever private property has sustained a substantial injury from the making and use of any public improvement, whether the damage be direct, as when caused by trespass or physical invasion, or consequential, as in diminution of market value.[6]

---

[1] Jackson v. Brown, 5 Wend. 594 (1830).

[2] Bank of United States v. Owens, 2 Pet. *538 (1829).

[3] Grim's Appeal, 89 Pa. 334 (1879).

[4] Credit Co. v. Arkansas Central R. Co., 128 U. S. 261 (1888); R. S. § 1008.

[5] Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. *229 (1837).

[6] People v. Parshall, 6 Park. Cr. 132 (1864).

[7] People v. Marshall, 59 Cal. 388 (1881).

[1] U. S. Constitution, Amd. V. See 1 Bl. Com. 139.

[2] Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 71, 75 (1882), cases; Mollandin v. Union Pacific R. Co., 14 F. R. 894 (1882); Gottscholk v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 14 Neb. 559 (1883); Hollingsworth v. Parish of Tensas, 4 Woods, 280 (1883); Rochette v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 32 Minn. 203-4 (1884), cases; Pittsburgh Junction R. Co. v. McCutcheon, 18 W. N. C. (Pa., 1886); Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 166 (1853); Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. 245 (1856).

[3] Omaha Horse Ry. Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co., 32 F. R. 733 (1887); McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 id. 257 (1884).

[4] Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 297 (1886), Pardee, J.

[5] Omaha Horse Ry. Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co., 32 F. R. 727 (1887).

[6] Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 168 (1888), Harlan, J.,

The word "injured," in the constitution (art. XVI, § 8) of Pennsylvania of 1874, in the phrase "property taken, injured or destroyed" by corporations, etc., refers to such legal wrong done as would be the subject of an action for damages at common law; to injuries which, though consequential, are yet actual, positive, and visible, the natural and necessary result of original construction or of enlargement, and of such certain character that compensation may be ascertained immediately, and be paid for or secured in advance. Hence, in that State, a railroad company is not liable for indirect injuries, the result of the operation of its road in a lawful way, without negligence, unskillfulness, or malice, upon its own property.[1]

Acts done in the proper exercise of governmental powers, and not directly encroaching upon private property, though their consequences may impair its use, are universally held not to be a taking.[2] Thus, the State may take a portion of a man's property by way of taxation for support of the government.[3]

Destroying a building to prevent a conflagration is not viewed as a taking.[4] But statutes make it this, in some States. See FIRE.

A lot abutting on a street may be "damaged" by laying tracks and running railroad cars through the street.[1]

Where realty is actually invaded by superinduced additions of water, earth, sand, or other material, or by having any artificial structure placed on it, so as to effectually destroy or impair its usefulness, it is a taking. That is, a serious interruption to the common and necessary use of property may be equivalent to taking it, as, by overflowing land with back-water.[2]

An entry upon land for a survey, preliminary to locating a railroad, is not such a taking as entitles the owner to compensation for the fee; but he may claim for the temporary occupation.[3]

The right to enter upon and use is complete as soon as the property is actually appropriated under authority of law, but the title does not pass from the owner until compensation is made.[4]

Taking differs from a sale, in that the transfer of title may be compelled, and the amount of compensation be determined by a jury or officers appointed for that purpose. A taking is an exchange of property for an equivalent.[5]

Only such estate is taken as is necessary to carry out the purposes for which the land is used. This estate is an easement; the fee remains in the original owner.[6]

The object must be a public one.[7]

The particular use for which the land is first taken cannot be departed from.[8]

See further BRIDGE; COMPENSATION, 3; DOMAIN, Eminent; LEVEE; PROPERTY; RIPARIAN.

TALE. See DECLARATION, 2.

TALES. L. Plural of talis, such, of such a kind: additional jurors.

If, from any cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable jurors do not appear at the trial, or if a panel is exhausted by challenges before a jury is obtained, either party, at common law, may pray a tales, that is, more of such men as were summoned upon the first panel, to make up the deficiency.

Talesman. One of such additional jurors.[9] citing many Illinois cases, and relying chiefly upon the unanimous opinion in Chicago & Western Indiana R. Co. v. Ayres, 106 Ill. 518 (1883), and Rigney v. Chicago, 102 id. 64 (1882). Under the constitution of 1848, which provided for compensation for property "taken or applied" to public use, it was held that recovery could not be had for merely consequential damages, provided the improvement had the sanction of the legislature,— 125 U. S. 164-65, cases. In the same State, damages for an actual appropriation are payable in advance; an injury sustained in common with the public at large is not a subject of claim; and any special injury must be remedied by an action at law, as it cannot be by an injunction,— Lorie v. North Chicago City R. Co., 32 F. R. 270 (1887).

---

[1] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 553 (1888), one justice dissenting. (Counsel for plaintiff cite many English and American cases.) The railroad company had invested a large sum on the south side of Filbert street, Philadelphia, in purchasing property and in constructing a depot and elevated tracks. The defendant owned a dwelling-house upon the north side of the street, fifty-one feet from the railroad; and claimed damages for loss of light, for the noise, jarring, smoke, etc. The decision of the lower court, which was in his favor, was reversed. Occupation of the street itself, in front of his house, would have constituted the subject of a claim in the nature of special damages. The words used in the constitution of 1838 were "taken or applied" to a public use, and it was held that some portion of one's private property had actually to be taken — an immunity not enjoyed by individuals, and occasioning great hardships. See Marchant's case annotated, 27 Am. Law Reg. 391-400 (1888).

[2] Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 642 (1878), cases: Illinois constitution of 1848, as to which see supra.

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 145 (1876).

[4] Surroco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 73 (1853).

[1] Frankle v. Jackson, 30 F. R. 398 (1887), cases.

[2] Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 181, 179-80 (1871), cases, Miller, J.: Illinois constitution of 1848; 28 Minn. 540.

[3] Bonaparte v. Camden, &c. R. Co., Baldw. 225 (1830); Polly v. Saratoga, &c. R. Co., 9 Barb. 457 (1850).

[4] Kennedy v. Indianapolis, 103 U. S. 602 (1880).

[5] County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 703 (1880).

[6] Attorney-General v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation, 133 Mass. 365 (1882), cases.

[7] Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 6 (1885), cases; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 551-52 (1883), cases. As to one railroad condemning land for another, see 27 Cent. Law J. 207-12 (1888), cases.

[8] Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Oregon Real Estate Co., 10 Oreg. 445 (1882), cases.

[9] [3 Bl. Com. 364-65; 4 id. 354; O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 225 (1860).

At nisi prius, by virtue of 35 Hen. VIII (1544), c. 6, the judge is empowered to award a tales de circumstantibus, of by-standers — persons present in court, to be joined to the other jurors to try the cause. They are subject to the same challenges as the principal jurors.[1]

By-standers may still be chosen, except in California. A jury so impaneled is regarded as a "jury of the county" where the offense was committed.[2]

Since a tales signifies a returning of as many men as will make up the full complement of jurors, it is not granted where there is a total default; only where the number is deficient.[3]

"When, from challenges or otherwise, there is not a petit jury to determine any civil or criminal cause, the marshal or his deputy shall, by order of the court in which such defect of jurors happens, return jurymen from the by-standers sufficient to complete the panel."[4]

The act of June 30, 1879, c. 52, § 2, prescribing the mode for drawing jurors, does not repeal the foregoing provision, nor affect the power, when a panel has become exhausted, to call in talesmen.[5]

Octo tales, eight such jurors, and decem tales, ten such jurors, were the names, at common law, of bodies of additional jurors, and of the writs by which they were summoned.[6]

TALTARUM'S CASE. See DONUM, De donis.

TAME. See ANIMAL.

TANNERY. See CONDITION; NUISANCE; POLICE, 2.

TANNING. See ART, 1; PROCESS, 2.

TANTAN. See GAME, 2.

TARDE. See VENIRE, Tarde.

TARIFF.[7] Originally, a list or schedule showing the price or charge affixed to each of a number of items. Latterly, a statute, or a commercial convention, as well as a list or schedule, exhibiting the kinds or the names of articles of merchandise designed for importation or exportation, upon which duties or customs are to be paid for the use of the general government. See CUSTOMS; DUTY, 2.

TAUTOLOGY. See SURPLUSAGE.

TAVERN. At common law, a tavern-keeper is one who makes it his business to entertain travelers or passengers and provide lodging and necessaries for them, their horses and attendants. When licensed they usually had the privilege of selling liquors, but this depended wholly upon the provision of law.[1]

"Tavern," "hotel," and "public house" are synonymous in this country; and while they entertain the traveling public, and receive compensation therefor, they do not lose their character, though they may not have the privilege of selling liquors. The distinction, as respects inn-keepers and tavern-keepers, observed in England, under the common law, does not exist with us, and different names are applied to them, though "hotel" and "house" are commonly used to denote a higher order of public houses than the ordinary tavern or inn. As employed in a statute, the word may refer to the whole class, comprehending all houses that entertain the public for compensation.[1]

See further INN.

TAX.[2] 1, v. To assess, adjust, fix, determine: as, to tax the items and the amount of the costs in a case. Whence re-tax.

Costs are taxed, in the first instance, by the clerk of the court; and provision is made, by statute or rule of court, for appeal, after due notice to the adverse party, to the judge or judges of the court itself. See COSTS.

2, n. A charge, a pecuniary burden, for the support of government.[3]

A charge or burden for which the state may make requisition in a prescribed mode.[4]

A tax is not a "debt," that is, an obligation for the payment of money founded upon contract. It is an impost levied for the support of the government, or for some special purpose authorized by it. The consent of the taxpayer is not necessary to its enforcement: it operates in invitum. The form of

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 364–65.

[2] State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 66 (1885).

[3] Williams v. Commonwealth, 91 Pa. 500 (1879); 1 Chitt. Cr. Law, 518.

[4] R. S. § 804; Act 24 Sept. 1789; Clawson v. United States, 114 U. S. 487 (1885), cases.

[5] Lovejoy v. United States, 128 U. S. 173 (1888); United States v. Rose, 6 F. R. 136 (1881); Clawson v. United States, 114 U. S. 487 (1885).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 364.

[7] F. tariffe, a casting of accounts. Sp. tarifa, a list of prices, a book of rates. Arab. ta'rif, giving information, notification,— Skeat. Or, Tarifa, a town in Spain, at the entrance of the straits of Gibraltar, where duties were collected,— see Webster.

[1] St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 594 (1870), Wagner, J. See also Curtis v. State, 5 Ohio, 394 (1832); Rafferty v. New Brunswick Fire Ins. Co., 18 N. J. L. 434 (1842); Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 308 (1849); People v. Jones, 54 Barb. 316 (1868); 3 Hill, 150; 2 Daly, 15; 3 Brewst. 344; 2 Kent, *597, note a.

[2] F. taxer: L. taxare, to handle, appraise.

[3] United States v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 17 Wall. 326 (1872), Hunt, J.; Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 id. 664 (1874), cases; County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 703 (1880).

[4] Tompkins v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 15 F. R. 12 (1882), Caldwell, J. See also 20 Cal. 350; 34 id. 454; 27 Ind. 63; 34 La. An. 1050; 30 Minn. 357; 6 Neb. 77; 56 N. H. 159; 4 N. Y. 424; 19 Pa. 260; 21 id. 169; 39 id. 83; 93 id. 131; 46 Vt. 784.

procedure to collect, as, an action of debt, does not change its character.[1]

Power to tax is vital to the functions of government: it helps sustain the social compact and give it efficacy; it is intended to promote the general welfare; it reaches the interests of every member of the community. It may be restrained by contract in special cases for the public good, where such contracts are not forbidden. But the contract must be shown to exist; there is no presumption in its favor; every reasonable doubt will be resolved against it. Where it exists it is to be rigidly scrutinized, and never permitted to extend, in scope or duration, beyond what the terms of the concession clearly require. It is in derogation of public right, and narrows a trust created for the good of all.[2]

The power to tax is an incident to the exercise of the legitimate functions of government No government dependent upon taxation can bargain away its whole power of taxation; that would be a substantial abdication.[3]

The power rests upon necessity, and is unlimited, except by constitutional prohibition. The amount is co-extensive with the wants of government. The power is also applicable to all property and rights created or protected by law: it is correlative with protection.[4]

The power is the strongest, most pervading one of government. "The power to tax is the power to destroy."[5]

There can be no lawful tax which is not laid for a public purpose.[6]

Levying a tax is a high act of sovereignty falling to the legislative department, and to be performed upon considerations of policy, necessity, and public welfare.[7]

Security against the abuse of the taxing power is found in the structure of the government itself. The legislature acts upon its constituents; and responsibility to them constitutes a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation.[8]

The legislature may direct that the whole or a part of the expense of a public improvement, like that of laying out, grading or repairing a street, shall be paid by the owners of the lands benefited; determination of the territorial district which shall be taxed for the improvement is within the province of its discretion. If provision is made for notice to and hearing each proprietor, at some stage of the proceedings, as to what proportion of the tax his land shall bear, there is no taking of his property without due process of law.[1]

A tax is not a lien unless made so by statute. Mandamus will compel a levy. Being levied by authority of the legislature, it can be altered, postponed, or released only at its pleasure. But a repeal of such authority is invalid when it impairs the obligation of a contract, the tax being the inducement.[2]

But a court of equity has no jurisdiction to appoint a collector or receiver, by mandamus.[3]

Because a levy is the exercise of legislative function, and a court cannot make a new assessment if one already made is erroneous, and because taxes should be promptly paid,—neither illegality nor irregularity in the proceedings, nor error nor excess in the valuation, nor the hardship or injustice of the law, provided it is constitutional, nor a grievance which can be remedied by a suit at law, will authorize an injunction against collection. Moreover, before that, all taxes rightfully due must have been paid or tendered.[4] See REVENUE, p. 899, c. 2.

The system which most nearly attains perfect equality and uniformity is the best, but none is complete.[5]

Taxation by a uniform rule requires "uniformity" in the rate and in the mode of assessment. Uniformity implies equality in the burden of taxation, and this cannot exist without uniformity in both those essentials. The uniformity must be co-extensive with the territory to which it applies—State, county, city, town, etc.; and be extended to all property subject, so that all be taxed equally.[6]

Where inequality is designed to discriminate against any class of persons or any species of property, a court of equity will give relief.[7] See UNIFORM.

An assessment of a tax is invalid, if, being laid upon different kinds of property as a unit, it includes property not legally assessable, the part assessed upon

[1] Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 513–15 (1880), Field, J.; Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 80 (1868), cases, Chase, C. J.

[2] Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. 575 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.; Erie Ry. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 id. 498–99 (1874), cases; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 686 (1877), cases; Memphis Gas Co. v. Shelby County, 109 id. 400 (1883), cases; Vicksburgh, &c. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 id. 668–69 (1886), cases.

[3] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 820 (1879), Waite, C. J.

[4] Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 66 Pa. 73 (1870).

[5] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[6] Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 663–64 (1874).

[7] Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 515–18 (1880), cases.

[8] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355 (1888), cases.

[1] Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355–56 (1888), cases: s. c. 100 N. Y. 585, 587–89.

[2] Meriwether v. Garrett, ante.

[3] Thompson v. Allen County, 115 U. S. 550 (1885).

[4] State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 613–17 (1875), cases, Miller, J.; German Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Kimball, 103 id. 733–35 (1880), cases.

[5] State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 612 (1875).

[6] Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 15 (1853); Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153 (1879); Worth v. Wilmington, &c. R. Co., 89 N. C. 296 (1883); Morrison v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 549 (1879); Edes v. Boardman, ib. 589 (1879).

[7] People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539 (1879); Pelton v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 101 id. 143 (1879); Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, ib. 153 (1879); German Nat. Bank v. Kimball, 103 id. 735 (1880); Santa Clara Co. v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 18 F. R. 385 (1883): 8 Saw. 254, 282, 301.

the latter property not being separated from the other part.[1]

Double taxation is never to be presumed. Justice requires that the burdens of government, as far as practicable, shall be laid equally on all. Hence, also, presumably, all species of property are subject to taxation.[2]

"The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."[3] "Direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States . . according to their respective Numbers," as determined by the decennial census.[4] "No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration."[5] "No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State."[6] "No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing it's inspection Laws."[7] "No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage."[8]

Capitation tax. A poll tax; a tax imposed upon each individual person without regard to his property, business, or other circumstances.[9]

A tax upon the person simply, without reference to his property, real or personal, or to any business in which he may be engaged, or to any employment which he may follow.[10] See Direct Tax.

Direct tax; indirect tax. Attempts to define "direct tax," as used in the Constitution, have been unsatisfactory. For an understanding of the meaning resort must be had to the historical evidence. A review of the acts of Congress shows that personalty, contracts, occupations, and the like, have never been regarded as proper subjects for such tax. What was meant is, such a tax as may be levied (1) by capitation, and (2) on land and its appurtenances; or, perhaps, (3) by valuation and assessment of personalty upon general lists. These were the subjects from which the Colonies had usually raised their principal supplies.[1]

Taxes are usually "direct" and "indirect." Under the former are included taxes on real property; under the latter, taxes on consumption.[2]

Direct taxes are only capitation taxes, as expressed in the Constitution, and taxes on real estate; not, therefore, a tax (1) upon pleasure carriages, nor (2) upon receipts of insurance companies from premiums and assessments, and additions to surplus or contingent funds, nor (3) upon notes of State banks paid out by other banks, nor (4) a succession tax on realty, nor (5) internal revenue assessments upon income and profits.[3]

Poll tax. See Capitation Tax.

The power conferred upon Congress to lay and collect taxes extends to every object except exports, and in such measure as that body may determine. Definition of the particular words used, in the provisions for exercising the power, was unimportant. And there are no limitations upon the exercise of the power. Directions as to the mode are, that a direct tax shall be laid in proportion to the census, and that duties, etc., must be uniform.[1]

The Constitution gave the power to tax, directly and indirectly, to the National government, and, subject to the one prohibition of any tax upon exports and to the conditions of uniformity in respect to indirect and of proportion in respect to direct taxes, the power was given without express reservation. On the other hand, no power to tax exports, or imports except for a single purpose and to an insignificant extent, or to lay any duty on tonnage, was permitted to the States. In respect, however, to property, business, and persons, within their respective limits, their power remains entire. It is a concurrent power, and in the case of a tax on the same subject by both governments, the claim of the United States, as the supreme authority, must be preferred. With this qualification it is absolute. The extent, the subjects, and the mode are equally within the discretion of the legislatures. That discretion is restrained only by the will of the people, expressed in the constitutions or through elections, and by the condition that the power is not to be used so as to embarrass the operations of the National government.[4]

But the National government may not tax the agencies of the State governments; otherwise it might destroy them by oppression.[5]

---

[1] Santa Clara Co. v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 118 U. S. 410, 416 (1886), cases.

[2] Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 137 (1886); Re Surgert, 119 Ill. 87 (1886).

[3] Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 1.

[4] Ibid. sec. 2, cl. 3.

[5] Ibid. sec. 9, cl. 4. "This was intended to prevent Congress from enforcing a general emancipation by the special taxation of slaves." 2 Bancroft, Const. 164.

[6] Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 5.

[7] Ibid. sec. 10, cl. 2.

[8] Ibid. sec. 10, cl. 3.

[9] See Head-Money Cases, 18 F. R. 139 (1883); 3 Dall. 171; 5 Wheat. 317.

[10] Gardner v. Hall, 61 N. C. 22 (1866); 1 Nev. 313.

[1] Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 541, 543, 544 (1869), cases, Chase, C. J.

[2] 1 Story, Const. § 950; 1 Kent, 254–58.

[3] Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 602, 595–602 (1880), cases, Swayne, J.

[4] Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 77 (1868), Chase, C. J.

[5] United States v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 17 Wall. 327 (1872).

Outside of the Constitutional prohibitions the power in a State extends to all objects within its sovereign power, except as to the means and instruments of the Federal government.[1]

The power, in a State, is necessarily limited to subjects within its jurisdiction. These are persons, property, and business,—whatever the form of taxation, whether as duties, imports, excises, or licenses. The power may touch property in every shape: in its natural condition, in its manufactured form, in its transmutations. It may touch business in any of its infinite forms—in professions, commerce, manufactures, transportation. The amount is determined by the value, use, capacity, or productiveness. Unrestrained constitutionally, the power of the State as to the mode, form, and extent is unlimited, provided the subject be within her jurisdiction.[2]

The property of a non-resident, not yet in course of transportation to another State, may be taxed, even though he is taxed in his own State for the value thereof.[3]

The actual situs of tangible personalty, not the domicil of the owner, often determines the State in which personalty may be taxed. The same is true of public securities, and the circulating notes of banks. But other personalty, as, private bonds, mortgages, and debts generally, has no situs independent of the domicil of the owner. . . Debts are not the property of the debtor in any sense; therefore a non-resident holder of the bonds of a corporation is not taxable.[3]

In corporations four elements of taxable value are sometimes found: franchises, capital stock in the hands of the corporation, corporate property, shares of the capital stock in the hands of individuals.[4]

A tax on the capital stock of a corporation is a tax on its property and assets; and, the taxing power of a State being limited to the subjects within its jurisdiction, when an act declares that the capital stock of a foreign corporation, doing business within the State, shall be taxed, such tax will be limited, in intent, to the property and assets within the State.[5]

Liable to taxation are, further, the capital stock and shares thereof of State banks; the franchises of a corporation; accumulated earnings; profits and dividends; realty of a corporation necessary to its business; and, by the United States, banks and bankers, on—their deposits, capital employed in business, circulation, notes of individuals or of State banks used and paid out for circulation.[6]

A State may tax its own securities as property in the hands of creditors, entitled to bear a proportion of the public burdens.[1] It may also tax, in the hands of her own citizens, the registered public debt of another State, whether there taxed or exempt.[2] But it may not tax United States loans: that would restrict the power of the United States to borrow money, and might be used to defeat the Federal power altogether.[3]

"It seems to us almost absurd to contend that a power given to a person or corporation by the United States may be subjected to taxation by a State. The power conferred emanates from, and is a portion of, the power of the Government that confers it. To tax it is not only derogatory to the dignity, but subversive of the powers of the Government, and repugnant to its paramount sovereignty."[4]

The exemption, being founded in the implied necessity for the use of the instrumentalities of the Government, is limited by the principle that State legislation which does not impair the usefulness to serve the Government is valid. Hence a State may tax shares of national bank stock, provided that thereby a discrimination is not created in favor of other moneyed capital.[5]

A legislature may make a difference between the capital stock of a corporation in its own hands and shares in the hands of individuals. The capital stock of the national banks invested in United States securities is not taxable by the States, because those securities are not taxable (R. S. § 3701); but shares in the hands of individuals may be taxed—they, by the terms of the Banking Act, are put for purposes of State taxation, upon the same footing as other moneyed capital (R. S. § 5219).[6]

The main purpose of Congress in fixing limits to State taxation on investments in shares of national banks was to render it impossible for a State, in levying such a tax, to create and foster an unequal and unfriendly competition, by favoring institutions or individuals carrying on a similar business, and operations and investments of like character.[7]

A lien for taxes does not stand upon the footing of an ordinary incumbrance; and, unless otherwise pro-

[1] State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall. 212 (1870); Transportation Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 276–85 (1878), cases; 18 F. R. 433–42, cases; 19 id. 372, 381–88, cases.

[2] State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 319 (1872), Field, J.; United States v. Erie R. Co., 9 Bened. 72–74 (1877), cases; 12 F. R. 551–53, cases; 14 id. 35–38, 534–39, cases; 16 id. 201–6, cases.

[3] Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 524 (1886), cases.

[4] Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 137 (1886).

[5] Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. 145 (1882), cases.

[6] R. S. §§ 678, 1015; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 687–88 (1877), cases.

[1] Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432 (1877); Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 id. 683 (1880).

[2] Bonaparte v. Tax Court, 104 U. S. 592 (1881).

[3] Bank of Commerce v. New York City, 2 Black, 620 (1862); Bank Tax Case, 2 Wall. 200 (1864).

[4] California v. Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 41, 1 (1888), Bradley, J. Actions to recover taxes assessed upon the property and franchises of the Central, Northern, Southern, and California Pacific Railroad Companies. The assessments aggregated $50,000,000. Some of the franchises had been conferred by Congress, and the State Board of Equalization blended, in the assessments, all franchises indistinguishably.

[5] First Nat. Bank of Louisville v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353 (1869); Bank of New York v. Supervisors, 7 id. 26 (1868); Boyer v. Boyer, 113 U. S. 689 (1885): R. S. § 5219; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 id. 136 (1886), cases.

[6] Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 135–36 (1886), cases.

[7] Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138 (1887).

vided, is not displaced by a sale under a pre-existing judgment or decree. It attaches to the res without regard to individual ownership, and, when enforced by sale pursuant to the statute, the purchaser takes an unimpeachable title.[1]

The right to redeem land sold for taxes is commonly reserved, and is favored by the policy of the law.[2]

Immunity from taxation is a personal privilege, not transferable except under express authority of the legislature; and the exemption does not necessarily attach to the property after it passes from the privileged owner.[3]

Unless exempted in terms which amount to a contract not to tax, the property, privileges and franchises of a corporation are legitimate subjects.[4] Exemption of a corporation extends only to the property necessary for its business; otherwise, it could extend its immunity, and escape the common burden of government.[5]

An exemption granted an individual is a franchise which may be lost by acquiescence for a period of years.[6]

Property of the United States is exempt by the Constitution from taxation by a State.[7]

The necessities of government, the nature of the duties to be performed, and usage, have established a procedure in regard to the levy and collection of taxes which differs from proceedings in courts of justice, but which is still "due process of law." When levied by a city, for a public purpose, by authority of law, though some of the property assessed be farm lands, within the city, the State does not deprive the owner of his property without due process.[8]

Where the taking of property is in the enforcement of a tax, the proceeding is necessarily less formal than in other cases, and whether notice is necessary may depend on the character of the tax, and the manner in which its amount is determinable.[9]

To sustain an action to recover illegal taxes paid, it is necessary: that authority to levy be wholly wanting; that the money was actually received by the defendant; that payment was made under compulsion, to prevent the immediate seizure of his goods or the arrest of his person.[10] The remedy which a statute provides is exclusive.[1] See PROTEST, 1.

Compounds of tax are: tax-assessor, tax-certificate, tax-deed, tax-fund, tax-levy, tax-lien, tax-payer, tax-receipt, tax-receiver, tax-sale, qq. v. Other common words are, taxable, non-taxable, taxables, qq. v.

See ASSESS, 1; CHARTER, 2; CIRCULATION; COMMERCE; CORPORATION; DISTRICT, 2; DUTY, 2; ESCAPE, 2; FRANCHISE, 1; IMPAIR; IMPORT; IMPOST; INCOME; LEVY, 3 (1); LIST, 2; MANDAMUS; PRIVILEGE, 1; PROCESS, 1, Due; RATE, 2; SALE; SCHOOL; SCRIP; SECTARIAN; STOCK, 3 (2); SUFFER; TONNAGE; WORSHIP.

TEACHER. He is not an "officer" in the ordinary sense: he is not usually elected or appointed, but is employed — contracted with.[2] See PARENS, In loco; PUNISHMENT, Corporal; SCHOOL.

TEAM. Within the meaning of an exemption law, one or more horses, with their harness and the vehicle to which they are customarily attached for use.[3]

The animals which a householder or the head of a family uses in the business of providing for his family.[4]

In a statute allowing damages for injury from the condition of a highway, was held to include a horse driven with other horses unharnessed.[5]

Referring to turning out on meeting in a highway, may mean a vehicle, with animals drawing it, and used for loads instead of persons.[6]

A statute making a railroad company liable in damages for injuring "live-stock running at large" at a place where it should have fenced its track, was held to include a runaway "team," that is, two or more horses, oxen or other beasts, harnessed together to the same vehicle for driving.[7]

Team work. In a statute exempting from execution two horses kept and used for team work, means work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business.[8]

Teamster. One who drives a team; also, one who habitually drives a team, or is engaged in the business of teaming as a means of earning a livelihood.[9] See CARRIER, Common; ROAD, 1, Law of.

[1] Osterberg v. Union Trust Co., 93 U. S. 428 (1876).

[2] Barrett v. Holmes, 102 U. S. 657 (1880), cases.

[3] Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 222-24 (1876), cases; East Tennessee, &c. R. Co. v. County of Hamblen, 102 id. 274 (1880); Wilson v. Gaines, 103 id. 417 (1880); Memphis R. Co. v. Commissioners, 112 id. 617 (1884), cases.

[4] North Missouri R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 Wall. 61 (1873).

[5] Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 496-97 (1881), cases.

[6] Given v. Wright, 117 U. S. 648, 656 (1886).

[7] Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 153-80 (1886), cases.

[8] Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78 (1881), Miller, J.

[9] Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 708 (1884); 18 F. R. 449-50 (1883), cases.

[10] Dillon, Munic. Corp. § 940; Lamborn v. Commissioners, 97 U. S. 181 (1877); Union Pacific R. Co. v. Commissioners, 98 id. 541 (1878).

[1] Snyder v. Marks, 109 U. S. 189, 193 (1883), cases. See generally 18 F. R. 445-55 (1883), cases.

[2] Seymour v. Over-River School District, 53 Conn. 509 (1885). On rights as between teacher and pupil, see 25 Cent. Law J. 339 (1887), cases.

[3] Dains v. Prosser, 32 Barb. 291 (1860), cases; Brown v. Davis, 9 Hun, 44 (1876).

[4] Wilcox v. Hawley, 31 N. Y. 653 (1864); 47 Barb. 497.

[5] Elliott v. Lisbon, 57 N. H. 29-30 (1876), cases.

[6] Hotchkiss v. Hoy, 41 Conn. 577 (1874).

[7] Inman v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 60 Iowa, 462 (1883).

[8] Hickock v. Thayer, 49 Vt. 375 (1877).

[9] See Brusie v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 306 (1867); Elder v. Williams, 16 Nev. 419 (1882); Story, Bailm. § 496.

TECHNICAL.[1] 1. Pertaining to an art, trade, science, profession, or vocation; artificial.

Technical language is construed in the sense generally received in the business or calling to which the subject-matter relates, unless it is apparent that the words were understood in another sense.

2. As employed in law or jurisprudence; legal; opposed, in some relations, to actual and moral: as, technical or a technical — estoppel, fraud, malice, trust, qq. v. See further ART, 3; CONSTRUCTION; CONTRACT; INDICTMENT; STATUTE; WILL, 2; FRENCH; LATIN.

Technical culpability exists where a person transgresses a law without intending to do an unlawful act. Thus, the merest touching of another's person or clothing may amount to a battery, and be punishable as a crime. See also FRAUD, Constructive.

Technicalities are unintended applications of rules designed to give effect to principles imperfectly understood, and rigidly adhered to from fear that departure from them should relax legal rules in general. . . Once established, they are adhered to partly because they are looked upon as the outworks of the principles which they distort; partly from a perception of the truth that an inflexible adherence to established rules, even at the expense of particular hardships, is essential to the impartial administration of justice; and partly because to a certain kind of mind arbitrary rules are pleasant in themselves. . . As long as the doctrines of any department of knowledge are supposed to be absolutely true, technicalities are devised and maintained by those who believe in the doctrines, and are treated as a reductio ad absurdum by those who deny their truth. Wider experience demonstrates that a technicality or absurd inference from an alleged truth shows not that the proposition from which it follows is wholly untrue, but only that it is imperfectly expressed. Technicalities thus mark the progress of knowledge.[2] See CERTAINTY.

TELEGRAPH.[3] v. To write afar off or at a distance.

A wire or wires used for the purpose of telegraphic communication, with any casing, coating, tube, or pipe inclosing the same, and any apparatus connected therewith for the purpose of such communication.[4]

Includes any apparatus for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric signals.[5] See CABLE.

[1] Gk. technicos', belonging to an art.

[2] 3 Stephen's History Crim. Law Eng. 347-48.

[3] Gk. têle, afar; grâph'ein, to write.

[4] 26 & 27 Vict. c. 112 — Telegraph Act of 1863.

[5] 32 & 33 Vict. c. 73 — Telegraph Act of 1869. See TELEPHONE.

Telegram. Any message or other communication transmitted or intended for transmission by telegraph.

Morse was the first and original inventor of the electro-magnetic telegraph, for which a patent was issued to him in 1840, and re-issued in 1848. His invention was prior, as well as superior, to those of Steinhiel of Munich, and Wheatstone and Davy of England.[1]

Though in some respects a telegraph company is like a common carrier, it is not strictly a common carrier, nor is it held to the same degree of responsibility. A common carrier is an insurer; a telegraph company is held only to a reasonable degree of care and diligence, in proportion to the degree of responsibility.

Since telegraph companies undertake to exercise a public employment, in many respects analogous to that of a common carrier, they must bring to the employment that degree of skill and care which a prudent man, under the circumstances, would exercise in his own affairs; and any stipulation intended to relieve them from this duty, or to restrict their liability for its non-use, is forbidden by the demands of sound public policy.[2]

A telegraph company, by express contract or by reasonable rules contained in a printed notice so brought to the knowledge of a patron as to create an implied contract, may limit its liability for delay or error in transmitting and delivering a message, except as to such delay or error as is caused by its own misconduct or gross want of care.

Most of the rules and regulations embodied in the printed blanks for messages have been upheld by the courts as reasonable requirements.

While the contract for a message is made only with the sender, companies have been held liable to receivers who have been misled to their damage by negligence in the companies' servants.

When a message is sent over a connecting line, the same principles are applied as in the case of common carriers of merchandise.

A company cannot protect itself against gross negligence or incompetency in its employees, or as against a remediable imperfection in its instruments. It must receive all messages offered, except such as are illegal or immoral in character, unreasonably lengthy, or in disregard of reasonable rules; and must send them in the order in which they are received, preference being given to government messages. Every message is to be sent as written; if illegible, it may be refused. Liability for negligence extends to the natural and immediate consequences only.[3]

[1] O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How. 134, 62 (1853).

[2] Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 114 (1885), cases.

[3] See generally Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 180-83 (1883), cases; Pinckney v. Western Union Co., 19 S. C. 82-85 (1882), cases; Western Union Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 308-10 (1882), cases; White v. Western Union Co., 14 F. R. 710, 718-23 (1882), cases; Jones v. Western Union Co., 18 id. 717, 718-19 (1883), cases; Southern Express Company v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 270 (1874), cases; 24 Am. Law Reg. 831-39 (1885),

In Dryburg's case, the message, as sent from New York city, read "Send two hand bouquets, very handsame, one of five, one of ten dollars." As received in Philadelphia it read: "Send two hundred bouquets," etc. Before the error was discovered, Dryburg, a florist, had cut flowers to the amount of one hundred dollars, as a jury found.[1]

A telegram, like a letter, may constitute an admission, and complete a contract.[2] To charge the sender the original draft must be produced. The sending operator may be called to prove the sender's presence.[3]

The company or operator may be compelled to disclose the contents of a dispatch, unless a statute provides otherwise.[4]

An accepted telegram is a sufficient memorandum within Statute of Frauds.[5]

Congress may regulate communication by telegraph between the States. And where a State has given exclusive privileges to one company, which would preclude free intercourse, Congress, under the powers "to regulate commerce" and "to establish post-offices and post-roads," may provide for the construction of competing lines.[6] See COMMERCE.

A telegraph company holds the same relation to commerce as a carrier of messages that a railroad company holds as a carrier of goods. Both companies are instruments of commerce, and their business is commerce itself. From their essentially different characteristics, the regulations suitable for one of these kinds of commerce would be inapplicable to the other.

Within the reservation that it does not encroach upon the exercise of the powers vested in Congress, a State may make such provisions in respect to the buildings, poles and wires of the companies within its jurisdiction as the comfort and convenience of the community may require.[7]

Any telegraph company organized under the laws of any State, shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines through and over any portion of the public domain, over and along any military or post-road, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States; the lines not to obstruct navigation, or interfere with ordinary travel.[1]

Acceptance of that provision, as far as government business is concerned, makes the company agent of the United States.[2]

But the privilege conferred does not involve exemption from the ordinary burdens of taxation in a State within which a company may own or operate lines.[3]

A railroad being a post-road that act of 1866 is paramount over any agreement for the exclusive use of a road by one company.[4]

A State may not tax inter-State messages: they are commerce, as well as in the nature of postal service, and exempt from State regulations, except as to regulations of a strictly police character. Any regulation by way of a tax upon the occupation or business of transmitting messages between different States, or as a license to transact business, is unconstitutional.[5]

Nor may a State tax a company's receipts from inter-State messages.[6]

Whether the poles, wires, and instruments are part of the realty to which they are annexed, depends upon the intent with which they were erected.[7]

A city may determine the conditions upon which a company shall pass through its limits. After expiration of the time for erecting poles, etc., in pursuance of an ordinance, express direction from the city council, and notice to the company, should be given, before the mayor proceeds to remove the poles.[8]

It is no part of the corporate duty of a company to collect and send out market reports.[9] cases; 2 Kent, 12 ed. [829], cases; 2 Pars. Contr. 6 ed. 257 f; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 549–71; 11 F. R. 1, 10; 27 Iowa, 451; 113 Mass. 301; 15 Mich. 532; 37 Mo. 472; 48 N. Y. 132; 62 Pa. 88; 5 S. C. 358; 19 id. 71; Allen's Tel. Cases; Scott & Jarn. Tel.

---

[1] New York & Wash. Tel. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. 298 (1860). See further, as to negligence by operator, Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, CARRIER, Common.

[2] Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307 (1867): 93 Am. Dec. 514–17 (1887), cases; Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S. 29 (1876); 4 Biss. 357; 1 Woods, 286; 4 Dill. 431; 39 Iowa, 39; 103 Mass. 327; 20 Mo. 254; 35 Barb. 463; 36 N. Y. 307; 37 id. 457; 41 id. 544; 30 Wis. 605.

[3] See 14 Cent. Law J. 262–65 (1882), cases; 3 Dill. 571; 40 Conn. 363; 26 Ill. 591; 82 id. 73; 49 Ind. 223; 15 La. An. 668; 7 Allen, 548; 37 Miss. 682; 48 N. H. 488; 40 Pa. 9; 29 Vt. 127; 40 Wis. 431; 18 U. C., Q. B. 60.

[4] 27 Am. Law Reg. 65–79 (1879), cases; 5 South. Law Rev. 473–520 (1879), cases; 3 Dill. 567; 15 F. R. 713; 58 Me. 267; 7 W. Va. 544; 2 Pars. S. Cas. 274; 13 West. Jur. 122; 20 Law Times, 421.

[5] Godwin v. Francis, L. R., C. P. 293 (1870); Reuss v. Picksley, L. R., 1 Ex. 342 (1866); 39 L. J., C. P. 121; 4 H. & C. 588; 6 U. C., C. P. 221.

[6] Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 9 (1877), Waite, C. J.; 125 id. 185.

[7] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 356–89 (1887).

[1] R. S. § 5263: Act 24 July, 1866.

[2] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 464 (1881).

[3] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530 (1888).

[4] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Tel. Co., 19 F. R. 660 (1884), Wallace, J.; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 135 (1882), cases; Same v. Baltimore, &c. Tel. Co., 23 F. R. 12 (1885), cases.

[5] Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (1888). The plaintiff, as agent for the Western Union Co., had been fined for refusing to pay $225 imposed by ordinance as an annual license tax. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460 (1881), followed.

[6] Ratterman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 127 U. S. 411, 423 (1888): Ohio R. S. § 2778; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 128 id. 39 (1888).

[7] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 139 (1882).

[8] Mutual Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago, 16 F. R. 309 (1883). See also American Union Tel. Co. v. Town of Harrison, 31 N. J. E. 627 (1879); 21 Alb. Law J. 44–46 (1880), cases; 27 Cent. Law J. 447–51 (1888), cases.

[9] Metropolitan Grain, &c. Stock Exchange v. Mutual Union Tel. Co., 11 Biss. 531 (1883).

As to the use of the public domain and materials, the priority of Government messages, and the purchase of lines by the Government, see at length R. S. tit. LXV, §§ 5263–69.

TELEPHONE.[1] A conversation held through a telephone is a message, or a communication transmitted by a telegraph,—a telegram.[2]

A telephone is a telegraph. The idea conveyed by each term is the sending of intelligence to a distance.[3]

In a general sense, "telephone" applies to any instrument or apparatus which transmits sound beyond the limits of ordinary audibility. But the word is technically and primarily restricted to an instrument or device which transmits sound by means of electricity and wires similar to telegraphic wires. In a secondary sense, the term refers generally to the art of telephony; and, more particularly, to the apparatus, as an entirety, used in the transmission, as well as in the reception, of telephonic messages.[4]

The discoverer of a new art is entitled to the broadest claim for it which can be permitted in any case; not to the abstract right to the art without regard to the means, but to all the means and processes which he has both invented and claimed.[5]

Edison's patent, granted July 30, 1877, infringed on Bell's patent of December 9, 1876.[6]

In the five cases (bills for the infringement of letters patent No. 174,465, of March 7, 1876, and No. 186,787, of January 30, 1877, to Alexander Graham Bell, for "improvements in telegraphy" and "electric telephony," respectively) between the American Bell Telephone Company and Dolbear et al., the Molecular, the Clay Commercial, the People's, and the Overland Telephone Companies, decided March 19, 1888, by the Supreme Court, and known as the Telephone Cases or Dolbear v. American Bell Telephone Company,[7] Chief Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the majority (four) of the court, said, in substance, as follows:

The important question in each of these cases is as to the scope of the fifth claim of the patent of March 7, 1876, which is as follows: "The method of and apparatus for transmitting vocal or other sounds telegraphically, as herein described, by causing electrical undulations, similar in form to the vibrations of the air accompanying the said vocal or other sounds, substantially as set forth." It is contended that this embraces the art of transferring to or impressing upon a current of electricity the vibrations of air produced by the human voice in articulate speech, in a way that the speech will be carried to and received by a listener at a distance on the line of the current. Articulate speech is not mentioned by name in the patent. The invention, as described, "consists in the employment of a vibratory or undulatory current of electricity, in contradistinction to a merely intermittent or pulsatory current, and of a method of and apparatus for producing electrical undulations upon the line wire." The question is not whether "vocal sounds" and "articulate speech" are used synonymously as scientific terms, but whether the sound of articulate speech is one of the "vocal or other sounds" referred to in the claim for the patent. We have no hesitation in saying that it is.

In this art—or, what is the same thing under the patent law, this process, this way, of transmitting speech—electricity, one of the forces of nature, is employed; but electricity, left to itself, will not do what is wanted. The art consists in so controlling the force as to make it accomplish the purpose. It had long been believed that, if the vibrations of air caused by the voice in speaking could be reproduced at a distance by means of electricity, the speech itself would be reproduced and understood. How to do it was the question. Bell discovered that it could be done by gradually changing the intensity of a continuous electric current, so as to make it correspond exactly to the changes in the density of the air caused by the sound of the voice. This was his art. He then devised a way in which these changes of intensity could be made, and speech actually transmitted. Thus his art was put in a condition for practical use. In doing this, both discovery and invention, in the popular sense of those terms, were involved; discovery in finding the art, and invention in devising the means of making it useful. For such discoveries and inventions the law has given the discoverer and inventor the right to a patent, as discoverer, for the useful art, process, method of doing a thing, he has found; and, as inventor, for the means he has devised to make his discovery one of actual value. Other inventors may compete with him for the ways of giving effect to the [1] Gk. têle, far; phônê, sound, voice. Whence te-lĕph'-ony, tel-e-phŏn'-ic.

[2] Attorney-General v. Edison Telephone Co., 43 L. T. 708 (1881), Stephen, J.; Telegraph Acts of 1863—26 & 27 Vict. c. 112, and of 1869—32 & 33 Vict. c. 73.

[3] Commonwealth v. Pennsylvania Telephone Co., 42 Leg. Int. 180 (Pa., 1885)—Revenue Act 7 June, 1879.

[4] Haughey's Case (Hockett v. State), 105 Ind. 250, 261 (1885), Niblack, C. J.; ib. 509; Central Union Telephone Co. v. Bradbury, 106 id. 9 (1885).

[5] American Bell Telephone Co. v. Spencer, 8 F. R. 809 (1881), Lowell, Cir. J.; Same v. Dolbear, 15 id. 448 (1883), Gray, J., 17 id. 604 (1883).

[6] United Telephone Co. v. Harrison, L. R., 21 C. D. 720 (1882).

[7] 126 U. S. 1, 531–78, Waite, C. J., Miller, Matthews, and Blatchford, JJ., concurring in affirming the decrees of the lower (circuit) courts which supported the patent granted to Bell; Bradley, Field, and Harlan, JJ., dissenting, pp. 573–77. Gray, J., not being present, and Lamar, J., not being a member of the court, at the time of argument (Jan. 24—Feb. 8, 1887), took no part in the decision. The history of the cases, including pleadings, exhibits, etc., covers pp. 1–149; and the arguments of counsel, 149–531. A petition for a rehearing was filed May 7, 1888, but no justice who united in the opinion having requested the rehearing, the application was denied, 584.

discovery, but the new art he has found will belong to him, and to those claiming under him, during the life of his patent. If another discovers a different art or method of doing the same thing, reduces it to practical use, and gets a patent for his discovery, the new discovery will be the property of that discoverer; and thereafter the two will be permitted to operate each in his own way, without interference by the other. The only question between them will be whether the second discovery is in fact different from the first. The patent for the art does not necessarily involve a patent for the particular means employed for using it. Indeed, the mention of any means, in the specification or descriptive portion of the patent, is only necessary to show that the art can be used.

The effect of the decision in the case of O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How. 62, 106 (1853), was that the use of magnetism as a motive power, without regard to the particular process with which it was connected in the patent, could not be claimed, but that its use in that connection could. In the present case the claim is not for the use of a current of electricity in its natural state as it comes from the battery, but for putting a continuous current, in a closed circuit, into a certain specified condition, suited to the transmission of vocal and other sounds, and using it in that condition for that purpose. So far as at present known, without this peculiar change in its condition it will not serve as a medium for the transmission of speech, but with the change it will. Bell was the first to discover this fact, and how to put such a current in such a condition; and what he claims is its use in that condition for that purpose, just as Morse claimed his current in his condition for his purpose. Bell's claim is in all respects sustained by the authority of Morse's case. It may be that electricity cannot be used at all for the transmission of speech except in the way Bell has discovered, and that therefore, practically, his patent gives him its exclusive use for that purpose, but that does not make his claim for the use of electricity distinct from the particular process with which it is connected in his patent. It will, if true, show more clearly the importance of his discovery; it will not invalidate his patent.

When Bell applied for his patent, it is true that he had never actually transmitted telegraphically spoken words so that they could be distinctly heard and understood at the receiving end of his line, but in his specification he did describe accurately, and with clearness, his process, that is to say, the exact electrical condition that must be created to accomplish his purpose, and he also described, with sufficient precision to enable one of ordinary skill in such matters to make it, a form of apparatus which, if used in the way pointed out, would produce the required effect. The particular instrument which he had, and which he used in his experiments, did not, under the circumstances in which it was tried, reproduce the words spoken so that they could be clearly understood, but the proof is abundant, and of the most convincing character, that other instruments, carefully constructed, and made exactly in accordance with the specification, without any additions whatever, have operated, and will operate, successfully. . . The law does not require that a discoverer or inventor, in order to get a patent for a process, must have succeeded in bringing his art to the highest degree of perfection; it is enough if he describes his method with sufficient clearness and precision to enable those skilled in the matter to understand what the process is, and if he points out some practicable way of putting it into operation. This Bell did.

The patent is for both the magneto and the variable resistance methods, and for the particular magneto apparatus which is described, or its equivalent. There is no patent for any variable resistance apparatus. When Bell got his patent he thought the magneto method was the best. Indeed, he said, in express terms, he preferred it, but that does not exclude the use of the other, if it turns out to be the most desirable way of using the process.

Precisely how the subtle force operates under Bell's treatment, or what form it takes, no one can tell. All we know is that he found out that, by changing the intensity of a continuous current so as to make it correspond exactly with the changes in the density of air caused by sonorous vibrations, vocal and other sounds could be transmitted and heard at a distance. This was the thing to be done, and Bell discovered the way of doing it. He uses electricity as a medium for that purpose, just as air is used within speaking distance. In effect he prolongs the air vibrations by the use of electricity.

Reis discovered how to reproduce musical tones. He could sing through his apparatus, but he could not talk. In his first paper on the subject he said "I have succeeded in constructing an apparatus with which I am enabled to reproduce the the tones of various instruments, and even to a certain extent the human voice." Although this paper was published in 1861, and Bell did not appear as a worker in the field until fifteen years afterward, no advance had been made, by the use of what he had contrived or of his method, toward the great end to be accomplished. He caused his instruments to be put on the market for sale, and both he and those whom he employed for that purpose called attention to them by prospectus, catalogue, and otherwise, and to describe what they were and what they would do. . . It is not contended that Reis had ever succeeded in actually transmitting speech, but only that his instrument was capable of it if he had known how. With the help of Bell's discoveries in 1875 we now know why he failed. As early as 1854, Bourseul had said, substantially, that, if the vibrations of air produced by the human voice in articulate speech could be reproduced by means of electricity at a distance, the speech itself would be heard there. As a means of stimulating inquiry to that end he called attention to the principle on which the electric telegraph was based and suggested an application of that principle to such a purpose. That Reis was working all the time upon the principle of the telegraph as thus suggested by Bourseul, is abundantly proven. . . It was left to Bell to discover that the failure of Reis was due not to workmanship but to the principle which was adopted as a basis of what had to be done. He found that what he called the "intermittent current"—one caused by alternately opening and closing the circuit—could not be made under any circumstances to reproduce the delicate forms of the air vibrations caused by the human voice in articulate speech, but that the true way was to operate on an unbroken current by increasing and diminishing its intensity. This he called a "vibratory or undulatory current," not because the current was supposed to actually take that form, but because it expressed with sufficient accuracy his idea of a current which was subjected to gradual changes of intensity exactly analogous to the changes of density in the air occasioned by its vibrations. Such was his discovery, and it was new. Reis never thought of it, and he failed to transmit speech telegraphically. Bell did, and he succeeded.

Dr. Van der Weyde copied Reis, and it was not until after Bell's success that he found out how to use a Reis instrument so as to make it transmit speech. The patent office was right in holding that James W. McDonough had been anticipated by Reis. The patents of Cromwell F. Varley, of London, were for "improvements in electric telegraphs." His purpose was to superpose upon the ordinary signal current another, which, by the action of the make-and-break principle of the telegraph, would do the work he wanted.

As to the alleged anticipation of Daniel Drawbaugh between three and four hundred witnesses were produced whose testimony was taken to establish the priority of his invention. No one of these witnesses could tell how Drawbaugh's instruments were originally constructed, or what the process was by which sound was transmitted when the instruments were in use. All that any of the witnesses could say was that they had used one or more of the instruments at Drawbaugh's shop, had heard sounds and sometimes spoken words through them, and that Drawbaugh told them the sound was carried on the wire by electricity. There was nothing whatever produced in print or in writing on the subject; not even a memorandum or a drawing of any kind. And there is nothing in the testimony to show that Drawbaugh ever told any one how his earlier instruments were made, or what his process was, until he was called as a witness in December, 1881, and explained it in his testimony. This was nearly twenty years after he had begun his experiments, nearly seven after he had made and used alleged "perfectly adjusted and finished magneto instruments," and more than five after microphones as good, or nearly as good, as those of Blake, which were not invented until 1878, had been constructed in his shop. It was also nearly six years after the date of Bell's patent, more than five after the success of Bell's discovery had been proclaimed at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, four after his process had got into public use, three after it had become an established success, and two after he had brought his first suit for infringement. In the meantime, Bell's discovery had been heralded to the world, and Drawbaugh had had abundant means and ample opportunities to make his claim known. During part of this time he had treated his discovery as of secondary importance, and had devoted himself to the advancement of other inventions of his of comparatively small merit. In addition, the instruments of Drawbaugh were fairly tested in March, 1882, at the instance of the Bell Company, and failed to produce satisfactory results; when offered in evidence, they were in mere "remains." Two years afterward other reproductions were presented, differently constructed, and used in a different way. These would "talk," but they were neither made nor used in the same way as the original. These second experiments conclusively showed that the original instruments could not have done what the witnesses supposed they did, and that what they heard was produced by some other means than an electric speaking telephone. We do not doubt that Drawbaugh may have conceived the idea that speech could be transmitted by means of electricity and that he was experimenting upon that subject, but to hold that he discovered the art of doing it before Bell did would be to construe testimony without regard to the ordinary laws that govern human conduct. We therefore decide that the Drawbaugh defense has not been made out.

The charge that after Bell swore to his application on January 20, 1876, and after the application had been formally filed in the patent-office on February 14, 1876, an examiner, who got knowledge of the Gray caveat put in afterward on the same day, disclosed its contents to Bell's attorneys, and that they were allowed to withdraw the application, change it so as to include Gray's variable resistance method over Bell's signature, and over the jurat, and then restore the application to the files, thus materially altered, as if it were the original, and all this between February 14 and 19, is not sustained by the testimony.

Nor was Bell's claim as a whole, being for an electric telephone, in the construction of which the plate or diaphragm, the permanent magnet, the sounding box, the speaking tube, etc., or any of them, are used, and not for the several things in and of themselves, anticipated by the magnet in Hughes' printing telegraph, as described in Schellen's work.

The conclusion of the court then is that Bell's patent gives to him, and those who claim under him, the exclusive use of his art for the conveyance of articulate speech until the expiration of the statutory term of his patented rights.

Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering the opinion of the minority (three) of the court, said, in substance: Without expressing an opinion on other issues, the point on which we dissent relates to the defense made on the alleged invention of Daniel Drawbaugh. We think that Drawbaugh anticipated the invention of Bell, who, at most, is not claimed to have invented the speaking telephone prior to June 10, 1875; and that the evidence on this point is so overwhelming that it cannot be overcome. The question is one of fact, depending upon the weight of the evidence, and involves no question of law. . . We are satisfied that Drawbaugh produced, as early as 1869, an electrical instrument by which he transmitted speech, so as to be heard and understood, by means of a wire and the employment of variable resistance to the electrical current. This resistance was produced by causing the current to pass through pulverized charcoal, carbon, and other substances, acted upon by the vibrations of the voice in speaking. This was the whole invention as far as the principle of variable resistance is concerned. And we are also satisfied that as early as 1871 he reproduced articulate speech, at a distance, by means of a current of electricity, subjected by electrical induction to undulations corresponding to the vibrations of the voice in speaking,—a process substantially the same as that which is claimed in Bell's patent.

Drawbaugh certainly had the principle, and accomplished the result. Perhaps without the aid of Bell the speaking telephone might not have been brought into public use to this day; but that Drawbaugh produced it there can hardly be a reasonable doubt. We do not question Bell's merits. He appreciated the importance of the invention, and brought it before the public in such a manner as to attract to it the attention of the scientific world. His professional experience and attainments enabled him to see, at a glance, that it was one of the great discoveries of the century. Drawbaugh was a different sort of a man. He did not see it in this halo of light. Had he done so, he would have taken measures to interest other persons with him in it, and to have brought it out to public admiration and use. He was only a plain mechanic; somewhat better instructed than most ordinary mechanics,—a man of more reading, of better intelligence. But he looked upon what he had made more as a curiosity than as a matter of financial, scientific, or public importance. This explains why he did not take more pains to bring it to public notice. Another cause of his delay was that he was ever indulging the hope of producing speech at the receiving end of the line loud enough to be heard across a room, like the voice of a person speaking in an ordinary tone. . . The proof amounts to demonstration, from the testimony of Bell himself, and his assistant, that he never transmitted an intelligible word through an electrical instrument, nor produced any instrument that would transmit an intelligible word, until after his patent had been issued; while, for years before, Drawbaugh had talked through his, so that words and sentences had again and again been distinctly heard. Bell was original, if not first. He preconceived the principle on which the result must be obtained by that forecast which is acquired from scientific knowledge; but in this, as in the actual production of the thing, he was, according to the preponderance of the evidence, anticipated by a man of far humbler pretensions. Drawbaugh invented the telephone without appreciating the importance and completeness of his invention. Bell subsequently projected it on the basis of scientific inference, and took out a patent for it. As the laws do not award a patent to one who was not the first to make an invention, we think that Bell's patent is void by the anticipation of Drawbaugh.

In 1887, the solicitor-general of the United States filed a bill in equity to have canceled the letters patent granted to Bell on the ground that they had been procured by fraud. The lower court held, on demurrer, that, as there was no express authority for it, the bill would not lie. The Supreme Court decided that such authority was not essential, that the duty of the government to protect the people against deception when valuable privileges were conferred upon individuals, whether by means of patents for land or for inventions, afforded a sufficient basis for entertaining the bill; and that Congress in providing (R. S. § 4920) a limited form of relief for private persons, in such cases, did not intend to take away the affirmative relief which has always existed in behalf of the United States.[1]

The employment of telephone companies is a public one — they are common carriers of messages, and they must therefore serve the community without discrimination.[2]

The use of patented property, devoted to a public use, is subject to control by State legislation, where the public welfare requires it. Discrimination by a telephone company against a telegraph company with respect to receiving messages is void as against public policy, and may be void as against a statute.[3]

A State may prescribe the maximum price a telephone company may charge for the use of an instrument. The property of the company being devoted to a public use is a subject of legislative regulation, although some of its appliances are patented under the Constitution and laws of the United States.[4]

A subscriber, by using profane or vulgar language, may forfeit his right to be supplied with an instrument.[5]

TELLER. One who tells or counts the moneys of a bank, received or paid out.[6]

Where the business of the bank is large, there may be a receiving teller and a paying teller.[6] See CASHIER.

TEMPERANCE; TEMPERATE. See DRUNKARD; INTEMPERATE; INTOXICATE; POLICY, 2; PROHIBITION, 2; SUMPTUARY.

TEMPEST. Strictly speaking, a storm of extreme violence, a current of wind rushing with great velocity.

Damage done by ice, at the time of high water, but in ordinary wind and weather, is not then the result of a tempest.[7]

TEMPORARY. That which is to last for a period of time, usually not long continued. Compare PERMANENT.

Power in the authorities of a city to close liquor shops "temporarily," is not well executed by an order closing them until further notice. The order, in such case, should prescribe a limited time.[8]

---

[1] United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 350 (1888), reversing Same v. Same, 32 F. R. 591 (1887).

[2] State v. Bell Telephone Co., 22 Alb. Law J. 363 (1880), Thayer, J.; Louisville Transfer Co. v. American Dist. Telephone Co., 24 id. 283 (1881); American Rapid Telegraph Co. v. Connecticut Telephone Co., 49 Conn. 352 (1881).

[3] State v. Bell Telephone Co., and Western Union Telegraph Co., 36 Ohio St. 296 (1880); Bell Telephone Co. v. Commonwealth ex rel. Baltimore & Ohio Telegraph Co., 17 W. N. C. 505 (Pa., 1886).

[4] Haughey's Case, 105 Ill. 250 (1885).

[5] Pugh v. Telephone Association of Cincinnati, 37 Alb. Law J. 163, 161 (1888).

[6] Mussey v. Eagle Bank, 9 Metc. 311 (1845).

[7] [Thistle v. Union Forwarding, &c. Co., 29 U. C. C. P. 84 (1878).

[8] State v. Strauss, 49 Md. 299 (1878).

TEMPUS. L. Time; limited time.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. No time runs against the king. Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicæ. No time runs against the commonwealth. Lapse of time, at common law, will not prevent the sovereign from asserting a right; laches cannot be alleged against the state.

The sovereign is not included in statutes of limitations unless expressly named. But possession for sixty years is a bar even against the prerogative.[1]

It is a settled principle that the king is not barred unless named in the statute. The ground upon which the maxim rests is the principle of public policy (which belongs alike to all governments) that the public interests should not be prejudiced by the negligence of public officers to whose care they are confided. But statutes which regulate proceedings may include the government, without express reference to it.[2]

No presumption of payment against the government arises from mere lapse of time.[3]

The doctrine, as respects civil rights of action and prosecutions for offenses, has been generally qualified by legislation.[4]

Prior tempore, prior jure. Earlier in time, stronger in right. First in time, first in right. Priority gives precedence.

The principle applies where the equities are equal; when unequal, the superior equity prevails.[5]

A patentee's title rests entirely on priority of invention, q. v.

Priority in the drawing of a check gives the holder no preference of payment over checks subsequently drawn.

The principle is also illustrated in the priority allowed by attachment and lien laws.[6]

Tempore. In the time of.

TEN PINS. See GAME, 2.

TENANT.[7] In its largest sense, any one who holds lands, whatever the nature or extent of his interest.[8]

One who holds lands by any kind of title, whether for years, for life, or in fee.[9]

Almost all realty is supposed to be holden of some superior lord, in consideration of services to be rendered by the possessor. The thing held is styled the tenement, the possessor thereof the tenant, and the manner of possession a tenure, or tenancy.[1]

In popular language, "tenant" stands opposed to "landlord," and implies that the land, house, or other real property is not the tenant's own but another person's of whom he holds immediately; and this sense is recognized in jurisprudence, as when the law relating to "landlord and tenant" is spoken of. But, speaking broadly, within the understanding of the law, every possessor of landed property is a tenant, whether the property is absolutely his own or is leased of another person. A mere lodger may not be regarded as a tenant.[2]

Tenants are, or have been, distinguished, by terms referring to the nature of the estate held by them. At common law, the first three descriptive designations following were generic:

Tenants in common. Such as hold by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession; because none knows his own severalty, and therefore all occupy promiscuously.[3]

This tenancy, says Blackstone, is found where there is a unity of possession merely, with, perhaps, an entire disunion of interest, title, and time. One tenant may hold in fee-simple, the other in fee-tail or for life; or, one may hold by descent, the other by purchase, or each by purchase from a different grantor; or, again, the estate of one may have been vested for fifty years, and that of the other for a single day. The only unity is that of possession: because no man can certainly tell which part is his own. The estate may be created by destroying the unity of title or interest in an estate in joint-tenancy or coparcenary, or by special limitation in a deed. The tenants may be compelled to make partition; but not so by early common law. They take by distinct moieties; no one has any entirety of interest: hence there is no survivorship between them. As they differ from estates in severalty only in having the possession blended, the estate is dissolved by uniting all interests in one tenant, or by partition of the interests.[4]

Tenants in common, says Kent, are persons who hold by unity of possession: they may hold by several and distinct titles, or by title derived at the same time, by the same deed or descent. They are seized per my and not per tout. In this country, the estate may be created by descent or by deed. The tenants are viewed as having distinct freeholds; and each conveys as if seized of the entirety. They sue separately as to realty, but join in actions relating to an indivisible thing, as, for trespass on the land, or for rent. Actions of waste and account lie between them.[5]

Joint-tenants. An estate in joint-tenancy is where lands and tenements are granted to

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 247; 3 id. 307.

[2] United States v. Knight, 14 Pet. 315 (1840); Fink v. O'Neil, 106 U. S. 280–89 (1882), cases.

[3] United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489–90 (1878), cases.

[4] Broom, Max. 65. See 70 Ala. 519; 38 Ohio St. 86; 66 Pa. 228.

[5] Neslin v. Wells, 104 U. S. 441 (1881); 1 Story, Eq. § 64 d.

[6] 2 Kent, 123; Broom, Max. 363–64; 2 Bl. Com. 10, 12; 39 Minn. 287; 38 Ohio St. 96.

[7] F. tenant, holding: L. tenere, to hold.

[8] [Coles v. Marquand, 2 Hill, 449 (1842).

[9] Hosford v. Ballard, 39 N. Y. 151 (1868).

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 59.

[2] White v. Maynard, 111 Mass. 252 (1872).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 191. See also 5 Conn. 365; 12 Allen, 36; 8 Minn. 431; 4 Hun, 200; 2 Utah, 297.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 191–94. See also Tilton v. Vail, 42 Hun, 640 (1886).

[5] 4 Kent, 367–71.

two or more persons to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will.[1]

This tenancy or estate, says Blackstone, arises from the act of the parties, never from the act of the law. The tenants have unity of interest, title, time, and possession, that is, they have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. One tenant cannot sue or be sued without joining the other; nor do any act to defeat or injure the other's estate; nor, at common law, have an action of waste or of account against his co-tenant. Upon the death of one tenant, the estate remains to the survivor. The estate is destroyed by severing any one of the unities.[2]

Joint-tenants, says Kent, are persons who own land by a joint title, created expressly by one and the same deed or will. They uniformly hold by "purchase." The estates need not be of the same duration, nature, or interest. The beneficial act of one enures to all tenants. By statute, one tenant may maintain an action of waste or of account against his co-tenant. They join and are to be joined in suits. They are seized per my et per tout; each has entire possession of every parcel and of the whole. Survivorship is the distinguishing incident; whence the early law, which was averse to the division of tenures, favored this species of tenancy. In this country, the estate is reduced in extent, and the incident of survivorship is generally abolished, except as to titles held by trustees and conveyances to husband and wife, which conveyances are rather conveyances to one person than strict joint-tenancies.[3]

Tenants in coparcenary. These always take and hold by descent as one heir.[4]

They have distinct estates, with right to possession in common; and each may alien his share. They resemble joint-tenants in having the same unities of title, interest, and possession. The seisin of one is generally the seisin of all.[4]

As estates, in this country, descend to all children equally, there is no substantial difference left between co-parceners and tenants in common.[5]

Personalty also may belong to its owners in joint-tenancy, and in common, but not in coparcenary. Thus, if a house is given to two persons absolutely, they are joint-owners. If the jointure be severed, as by either owner selling, the vendee and the remaining part-owner are tenants in common. For the encouragement of trade, partnership stock is considered as common and not as joint property, with no survivorship.[6]

Tenant at sufferance. See SUFFERANCE.

Tenant at will. One who holds lands as tenant at the will of the lessor.

A tenancy at will is one which may be determined at the will or pleasure of either party.[1]

Such tenant has no certain, indefeasible estate; nothing that he can assign. The estate is at the will of both parties, landlord and tenant; so that either one may determine his will, and quit connection with the other at pleasure. But if the tenant sows his land, and the landlord, before the grain is ripe, or before it is reaped, puts him out, the tenant shall have the implements, and free ingress and egress to cut and carry them away. But where the tenant voluntarily determines the will, the landlord has the profits of the land. The law is careful that no sudden determination by one party shall prejudice the other; and the courts lean against construing demises, where no certain term is mentioned, to be tenancies at will, but rather hold them to be tenancies from year to year.[2]

Tenant by curtesy. See CURTESY.

Tenant for life. See LIFE, Estate.

Tenant for years, or from year to year. See YEARS, Estate for.

Tenant from month to month. See MONTH.

Tenant in capite. See FEUD.

Tenant in dower. See DOWER.

Tenant in fee-simple. See FEE, 1 (2).

Tenant in fee-tail. See FEE, 1 (2); TAIL.

Tenant in severalty. See SEVERALTY.

Tenant paravail. See FEUD.

Terre-tenant. See TERRE.

Under tenant. See LEASE, Sublease.

See further CROP; DISCLAIMER, 1; EMBLEMENTS; ENTIRETY; JOINTURE; LEASE; MOIETY; PARTITION; SURVIVORSHIP.

TEND. If the answer to a question may tend to prove the matter alleged in the declaration, the question may be asked. It is not necessary that the testimony be sufficient to prove the matter.[3]

Evidence which tends to prove the issue on the part of either side must be submitted to the jury.[4]

Gross negligence tends to show fraud, q. v.

There is no difference in meaning between "tending" and "directly tending" to prove a fact.[5] See EVIDENCE, Relevant.

TENDER. 1, v. When either side traverses or denies the facts pleaded by his antagonist he is said to "tender an issue."[6]

2, n. A formal offer; a proffer which binds him who refuses it.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 180.
[2] 2 Bl. Com. 180–87.
[3] 4 Kent, 357–66.
[4] 2 Bl. Com. 187–91.
[5] 4 Kent, 367, 366–67.
[6] 3 Kent, 25.

[1] Davis v. Murphy, 126 Mass. 145 (1879), Morton, J.
[2] 2 Bl. Com. 145–47. See also 4 Kent, 111–16; Johnson v. Johnson, 13 R. I. 468–70 (1881), cases, Durfee, C. J.
[3] Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. 368 (1863).
[4] Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 471 (1866); Hickman v. Jones, 9 id. 201 (1869).
[5] State v. Anderson, 10 Oreg. 461 (1882).
[6] 3 Bl. Com. 313.

The plea that the defendant has always been ready to pay the debt demanded, and, before action was begun, had tendered the amount to the plaintiff, which amount, with interest and accrued costs, the defendant brings into court for the plaintiff.[1]

May be by proffered delivery of a thing, of services, of an obligation; most commonly, is of money—actually produced, unless the creditor has dispensed with such production.[2]

Imports not merely readiness and ability to pay money, or to deliver a deed or other property or thing in question, but also actual production and offer of the thing itself, unconditionally, or as agreed to.[3]

In the case of a breach of an express warranty, the warrantee may sue without a return or tender of the goods. He is not obliged to rescind the sale.[4]

Misapprehension or confusion appears to have arisen from the mode of expression used in treating of the necessity of a tender or offer in cases of mutual and concurrent promises. "Tender" does not then mean the same as when the reference is to paying or offering to pay a debt due in money, where the money is offered to a creditor who is entitled to receive it and nothing further remains to be done; but, merely a readiness and willingness, accompanied with an ability to do the act which the agreement requires of the party making the tender, provided the other party will concurrently do the thing required of him, and a notice by the former to the latter of this readiness. Such readiness, ability, and notice, are sufficient evidence of, indeed constitute and imply, a "tender," that is, not an absolute, unconditional offer to do or to transfer anything at all events, but a conditional offer, dependent on, and to be performed only in case of, the readiness of the other party to perform his part of the agreement.[5]

See AMENDS; COVENANT; DEPOSIT, 2; RESCISSION; WARRANTY, 2.

Legal tender. (1) An offer to do a thing, conformably to the requirements of the law in the case.

(2) Money that may be offered in payment of a debt.

No foreign coins shall be a legal tender in payment of debts. The gold coins of the United States shall be a legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided by law for the single piece, and, when reduced below such standard, shall be a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight; the silver coins, for any amount not exceeding five dollars in any one payment; the minor coins, for an amount not exceeding twenty-five cents in any one payment; United States notes, in payment of all debts, except for duties on imports and interest on the public debt; the same as to demand Treasury notes authorized by acts of July 17, 1861, c. 5, and February 12, 1862, c. 20; and the same as to Treasury notes authorized by acts of March 3, 1863, c. 73, and June 30, 1864, c. 172, for their face value excluding interest: Provided, that notes issued under the act last named shall not be a legal tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank intended to circulate as money.[1]

The act of June 9, 1879, provides, sec. 3, "that the present silver coins . . of smaller denominations than one dollar shall hereafter be a legal tender in all sums not exceeding ten dollars in full payment of all dues public and private."

Legal Tender Acts. By acts of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, Congress authorized the issue of notes of the United States, declaring them a legal tender for all debts, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt.[2]

Legal Tender Decisions. There is no express grant of power, in the Constitution, to Congress to make any description of currency a legal tender in payment of debts. The making of notes or bills of credits a legal tender in payment of pre-existing debts is not a means appropriate, plainly adapted, or usually calculated to carry into effect any express power vested in Congress, and is inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution—is prohibited by the Constitution. Prior to February 25, 1862, all contracts for the payment of money, not expressly stipulating otherwise, were contracts for the payment of coin, and must still be paid in coin, notwithstanding the legislation which makes United States notes a legal tender in payment of such debts.[3]

Contra. The Legal Tender Acts—chosen as a means to a proper end: to suppress rebellion and preserve the government—were constitutional, as appropriate and within the power of Congress "to declare war." The clause "to coin money" contains no implication that nothing but the precious metals can ever have the uses of money. The acts apply equally to pre-existing debts and to debts contracted subsequently to their passage.[4]

---

[1] See 1 Steph. Plead. 247; 3 Bl. Com. 304.

[2] See Thomas v. Evans, 10 East, 101 (1808); Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. 638 (1836); Hunter v. Warner, 1 Wis. 147 (1853); Irvin v. Gregory, 13 Gray, 218 (1859).

[3] Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. 144 (1851).

[4] Smeltzer v. White, 92 U. S. 395-96 (1875), cases; 4 Kent, 480.

[5] Smith v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 119-20 (1857), cases, Storrs, C. J.; Cook v. Doggett, 2 Allen, 441 (1861); Bruce v. Smith, 44 Ind. 9 (1873). See generally 26 Am. Law Reg. 745-58 (1878), cases; 20 Cent. Law J. 344-51 (1885), cases.

[1] R. S., Title XXXIX, §§ 3584-90, cases.

[2] See at length, 12 St. L. 345, 532, 709.

[3] Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. 603. Decided November 27, 1869; read January 29, 1870: 12 Wall. 528-29. Opinion by Chase, C. J., Nelson, Clifford, Field, and Grier, JJ., concurring; Miller, Swayne, and Davis, JJ., dissenting.

[4] Legal Tender Cases (Knox v. Lee; Parker v. Davis), 12 Wall. 457, 540-44. Decided May 1, 1871. Opinion by Strong, J., Miller, Swayne, Davis, and Bradley, JJ., concurring; Chase, C. J., Nelson, Clifford, and Field, JJ., dissenting. December 15, 1869, the resignation of Mr. Justice Grier had been accepted, the same to take effect February 1, 1870. December 20, 1869, the appointment of Edwin M. Stanton as a member of th

Congress has also the constitutional power to make the Treasury notes a legal tender in payment of private debts in time of peace, and such notes may be re-issued after having been received into the Treasury. The power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States" is the power to raise money for the public use on a pledge of the public credit, and may be exercised to meet present or anticipated expenses and liabilities. It includes the power to issue, in return for the money borrowed, the obligations of the United States in any appropriate form of stock, bonds, bills or notes. Congress has authority to issue these obligations in a form adapted to circulation from hand to hand in the ordinary transactions of commerce and business. To promote and facilitate the circulation of these obligations, to adapt them to use as currency, and make them more current in the market, it may provide for their reception in coin or bonds, and may make them receivable in payment of debts to the government. This was admitted by the judges who dissented from the decision in the Legal Tender Cases. The constitutional authority in Congress to provide a currency for the whole country is now firmly established. The Constitution prohibits the States from coining money, emitting bills of credit, or making anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment for debts; but no intention can be inferred from this to deny to Congress either of these powers. . . The exercise of the power to issue bills of credit, making them a tender in payment of private debts, not being prohibited to Congress is included in the power expressly granted to borrow money on the credit of the United States. . .

Congress, as the legislature of a sovereign nation, being expressly empowered by the Constitution "to lay and collect taxes, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" and "to borrow money on the credit of the United States," and "to coin money and regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin;" and being clearly authorized, as incidental to the exercise of those great powers, to emit bills of credit, to charter national banks, and to provide a national currency for the whole people in the form of coin, Treasury notes, and national bank bills; and the power to make the notes of the government a legal tender in payment of private debts being one of the powers belonging to sovereignty in other civilized nations, and not expressly withheld from Congress by the Constitution; "we are irresistibly impelled to the conclusion that the impressing upon the Treasury notes of the United States the quality of being a legal tender in payment of private debts is an appropriate means, conducive and plainly adapted to the execution of the undoubted powers of Congress, consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and therefore, within the meaning of that instrument, 'necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States.' Such being our conclusion in matter of law, whether at any particular time, in war or in peace, it is, as matter of fact, wise and expedient to resort to this means, is a political question, to be determined by Congress when the question of exigency arises, and not a judicial question, to be afterward passed upon by the court."[1]

TENEMENT. A word of greater extent than land, and though in popular acceptation it applies only to houses and other buildings, yet in its original, proper, and legal sense it signifies everything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature: whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal kind.[2] Whence tenemental, tenementary.

Whatever may be holden in tenure.[3]

While frequently used in the sense of house or building, the enlarged meaning is land, or any corporeal inheritance, or anything of a permanent nature which may be holden.[4]

In modern use, a room let in a house, or such part of a house as is separately occupied by a single family or person, in contradistinction to the whole house; also, a part of a room occupied by one person, even though no partition separates his holding from that of another tenant.[5]

The modern meaning is doubtless traceable to associations with "tenant" and "tenancy."

In statutes against lewdness, liquor-selling, and other nuisances, may include a room connected with a shop, and forming no part of a dwelling-house.[6]

While a "building" is a tenement, a tenement may be something different from a building. The words have been used synonymously.[7]

Dominant tenement; servient tenement. The tenement to which is attached court had been confirmed, but he died four days later. In pursuance of the act of April 10, 1869 (16 St. L. 44), which went into effect the first Monday of December following, the number of justices had been restored to nine and Justice Strong was commissioned February 18, and Justice Bradley, March 31, 1870. The court being thus reconstructed, a motion was made for a reconsideration of Hepburn's Case, and a re-argument was ordered (four judges dissenting). This was heard April 18, 1871, and the decision of May 1, 1871, rendered.

[1] Legal Tender Case (Julliard v. Greenman), 110 U. S. 421, 444, 449-50. Decided March 8, 1884. Opinion by Gray, J., Waite, C., J., Miller, Bradley, Harlan, Woods, Matthews, and Blatchford, JJ., concurring; Field, J., dissenting. See 1 Harv. Law Rev. 73-97 (1887); 2 Bancroft, Const. 139-37.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 16-17, 59. See 3 Kent, 401; 5 Conn. 518; 73 Ill. 409; 13 N. Y. 159.

[3] Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige, 157 (1843); Shep. Touch. 91.

[4] Sacket v. Wheaton, 17 Pick. 105 (1835), Wilde, J.

[5] [Commonwealth v. Hersey, 144 Mass. 298 (1887), Devens, J.; Young v. Boston, 104 id. 104 (1870); 44 L. T. 302; L. R., 10 Exch. 305.

[6] Commonwealth v. Cogan, 107 Mass. 212, 210-11 (1871).

[7] Commonwealth v. Bossidy, 112 Mass. 278 (1873).

an easement in an adjoining tenement is called the "dominant" tenement, and the tenement which is subjected to this service is called the "servient" tenement. See EASEMENT; HEREDITAMENT.

TENERE. L. To hold.

Tenendum. For holding; to hold. A word once in use to express the tenure by which an estate was to be enjoyed.[1] See DEED, 2.

Teneri. To be held; to be bound. The part of a bond in which the obligor declares himself "to be held and firmly bound" to the obligee.

Tenet. He holds. Tenuit. He held. Words once used to state the tenure in actions of waste; the latter, where the estate had ended and damages only were sought.[2]

TENOR. Holding: course; general meaning. See TENERE.

In pleading, imports an exact copy — that the instrument is set forth in the very words and figures.[3]

In popular use, the substance and effect of an instrument.[4] Compare PURPORT.

TENTERDEN'S ACT. See FRAUDS, Statute of.

TENURE. Holding; possession. See TENERE.

Tenure of land. The manner of possessing land held of a superior, in consideration of services to be rendered.[5]

Simply, the mode of holding an estate in land.

May import any kind of holding, from mere possession to owning the inheritance.[6]

Tenure is inseparable from the idea of property in land, according to the theory of the English law. All land in England is held mediately or immediately of the king. There are there no lands to which "tenure" does not strictly apply. So thoroughly does this notion pervade the common-law doctrine of real property that the king cannot grant land to which the reservation of tenure is not annexed. The idea also pervades, to a considerable extent, the law of realty in this country. The title to land is essentially allodial (q. v.), and every tenant in fee-simple has an absolute and perfect title, yet, in technical language, his estate is called an estate in fee-simple, and the tenure free and common socage, q. v. This technical language is very generally interwoven into the jurisprudence of the States, though no vestige of feudal tenure may remain.[1] See FEUD.

Tenure of office. The manner of holding or of exercising the duties of an office; also, the duration or term of office.[2]

The Constitution is silent with respect to the power of removal from office, where the tenure is not fixed. Offices not so fixed are held during good behavior, or during the life of the incumbent; or at the will of some department of the government, and subject to removal at pleasure. In the absence of express regulation the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment. The tenure of ancient common-law offices depended on ancient usage; but with us there is no ancient usage.[3] See BEHAVIOR; OFFICE, 2.

Tenure of Office Acts. The act of Congress of March 2, 1867 (14 St. L. 430), was repealed as to sections one and two, and amended, by act of April 5, 1869 (16 St. L. 6), and finally repealed entire by act of March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 500) — the repeal not affecting "any officer heretofore suspended" under R. S. §§ 1767-72, "or any designation, nomination, or appointment heretofore made by virtue of the provisions thereof."[4]

TERM. 1. A word; an expression; a phrase; language: as, a term of art, a term of law or law term, technical terms. See TERMINUS, 3.

Sometimes used for expression or phrase: as, "the term 'entry for withdrawal;'"[5] "the term 'reasonable doubt;'"[6] "the term 'any former deceased husband.'"[7]

Terms of art, in the absence of parol testimony, are understood in the primary sense, unless the context shows a use in a particular sense, in which case the testimony of persons skilled in the art or science may be admitted to aid the court in ascertaining the true intent and meaning of the instrument.[8] See ART, 3.

2. A condition, stipulation, covenant, or obligation: as, the terms of a contract; granting a request on terms; imposing terms.

In its general signification, denotes a word, phrase or expression by which the definite meaning of lan-

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 298.

[2] 2 Greenl. Ev. § 652.

[3] Commonwealth v. Wright, 1 Cush. 65 (1848); People v. Warner, 5 Wend. 273 (1830); 5 Blackf. 458; 1 Mass. 208; 14 Ohio St. 61; 9 Yerg. 394; 1 East, 180; 7 Exch. 537, 561.

[4] Beeson v. Beeson, 1 Harr. 472 (Del., 1830).

[5] [2 Bl. Com. 59.

[6] [Richman v. Lippincott, 29 N. J. L. 59 (1860).

[1] 3 Kent, 487-88. Tenure in Scotland and England, 1 Law Quar. Rev. 175-88, 400-11 (1885); 2 id. 166-76 (1886).

[2] See People v. Walte, 9 Wend. 58 (1832); People v. Brundage, 78 N. Y. 407 (1879).

[3] Exp. Hennen, 13 Pet. 258-61 (1839), cases, Thompson, J.

[4] See same, R. S. §§ 1767-72; Impeachment of President Johnson (1868); 2 Am. Law Rev. 549; Embry's Case, 12 Ct. Cl. 455 (1876); 2 Story, Const. §§ 1537-47.

[5] 17 F. R. 230.

[6] 5 Cush. 320.

[7] 44 Ohio St. 440.

[8] Moran v. Prather, 23 Wall. 499 (1874), Clifford, J.; The John H. Pearson, 121 U. S. 469 (1887); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 285.

guage is conveyed. "Terms," in its restricted and legal sense, and as used chiefly in reference to contracts, means the conditions, limitations, and propositions which comprise and govern the acts which the parties agree expressly or impliedly to do or not to do. As employed in respect to a lease, embraces the covenants and conditions which impose, confer and limit the respective obligations and rights of the landlord and tenant. When "terms and conditions" are said to be annexed to "the term," "the term" means the estate granted, while the "terms and conditions" are the incidents to the grant.[1]

A court may refuse to grant a request absolutely, as, to dismiss an appeal, where there has been no citation to the appellee, and grant relief upon such terms as seem proper.[2]

3. An estate for years: the duration or continuance is bounded, limited, and determined — has a certain beginning and end.

Not merely the time specified in the lease by which the estate is created, but also the interest that passes by the lease.

Hence, the "term" may expire during the continuance of the "time," as, by surrender, or forfeiture.[3]

In a lease, the word may refer to the time during which the lessee is to occupy the premises, or to the estate or interest demised.[4] See TERMINUS, 2; LEASE.

The lessee is the termor, and his estate the particular estate, being but a small portion of the inheritance.

A term was outstanding or in gross when it was unattached to the inheritance, that is, was in the hands of another than the owner of the inheritance; and attendant when vested in a trustee for such owner.

Thus, suppose that the owner borrowed money on a lease for ten years, conditioned to terminate by an earlier day provided that by that day he returned the loan with interest, but failed to do this until a subsequent day: the lessee, at law, could keep possession for the rest of the ten years, although equity might require him to yield it up. The lessee, acting voluntarily, could "surrender" the term to the lessor, thereby "merging" it in the inheritance, or he could assign his interest to a third person as trustee for the benefit of the inheritance,— the latter course, which was generally preferred, making the term to "attend upon the inheritance" — a satisfied attendant term. Some terms were held to be attendant without assignment, and, to an extent, defeated intermediate alienations. A purchaser or mortgagor, who had no notice of an incumbrance, by acquiring the equitable title to the land by assignment of an outstanding term to a trustee for himself, could acquire title to the legal estate during the term. Our registry laws, which determine the rights of purchasers and mortgagors by notice and priority of record, relieve us of the intricacies of attendant terms. Statute 8 and 9 Vict. (1845), c. 112, § 2, abolished all such terms as soon as satisfied.[1]

4. The period of time during which a session of court is held.

Spoken of as general or regular, and special; as adjourned, present, subsequent, etc.

Terms of court are those times or sessions of the year which are set apart for the dispatch of business in the superior courts of common law.[2]

Their origin has been attributed to the canonical constitutions of the church; the four ordinary feasts of Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas, the names also of the four terms of the courts of common law in England, clearly indicate that that is the true origin. . . A term of court, as understood in this country, is a definite and fixed period, prescribed by law, for the administration of judicial duties. While a term may be extended by adjournment, a fixed term is not thereby enlarged.[3]

By the Judicature Act "term," in English practice, is superseded by the "sitting" of the court of appeal and of the high court of justice.[4]

In American practice the theory of terms of court is retained, but the word does not seem to designate a fixed period. Any continuous, authorized "sitting" or "session" is probably known, in most States, as a term.

A record is in the power of the court during the term at which it is made.[5]

At the next term the court cannot strike off a judgment on the ground of supposed want of jurisdiction. But the right to correct, at sight, mere clerical errors, so as to conform the record to the truth, always remains. And so, too, as to irregularities in notices, mandates, and similar proceedings. Any amendment permissible by the statute of jeofails, is proper at a subsequent term, and, in cases, even after writ of error brought. Thus a judgment entered by fraud may be annulled at any time. But relief for error in law is had only by means of a new trial, review, writ of error, appeal, or other mode provided by statute.[6]

Except upon bills of review in cases in equity, writs of error coram nobis in cases at law, or upon motions which, in practice, have been substituted for the latter remedy, no court can reverse or annul its decision for

[1] Hurd v. Whitsett, 4 Col. 84-90 (1878), Stone, J.; Beus v. Shaughnessy, 2 Utah, 500 (1880); Welsh v. Mehrback, 5 Hun, 449 (1875).

[2] Dayton v. Lash, 94 U. S. 112 (1876), cases; Railroad Co. v. Blair, 100 id. 662 (1879).

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 142-44. See 4 Kent, 87-95.

[4] Young v. Dake, 5 N. Y. 467 (1851); Finkelmeier v. Bates, 92 id. 178 (1883); Hurd v. Whitsett, 4 Col. 85 (1878); Sanderson v. City of Scranton, 105 Pa. 472 (1884).

[1] See 4 Kent, 87-94; 1 Washb. R. P. 311.

[2] Tidd, Practice, 105.

[3] Horton v. Miller, 38 Pa. 271 (1861).

[4] 3 Steph. Com. 489-96.

[5] Goddard v. Ordway, 101 U. S. 752 (1879), cases.

[6] Bank of United States v. Moss, 6 How. 38-39 (1848), cases, Woodbury, J.; Schell v. Dodge, 107 U. S. 630 (1883).

an error of fact or law, after the term at which rendered, unless for clerical mistakes; nor can any change be made which may substantially affect the decision.[1]

Courts of common law had power to vacate judgments during the term in which they were rendered, and the rule is still the same in all courts exercising jurisdiction in common-law cases. A term continues until the call of the next succeeding term, unless previously adjourned sine die.[2]

Judgments are considered as rendered on the first day of the term. There is a fiction that a term consists of but one day. This is tolerated for the purposes of justice. To antedate the judicial rejection of a claim, so as to give effect to a grant, does not promote the ends of justice.[3]

The time of a term's commencing is fixed by statute, and its end by the final adjournment of the court for that term. After the term has ended, all final judgments and decrees of the court pass beyond its control, unless steps be taken during that term, by motion or otherwise, to set aside, modify, or correct them; and if errors exist they can be corrected only by such proceeding, by writ of error or appeal, as may be allowed in the court which by law can review the decision. To this rule is the one exception of error coram nobis,[4] q. v.

When a cause is in progress the trial is not to be discontinued by the arrival of a new term.[5]

See CONTINUANCE, 2; NEXT; SESSION, 1; VACATION.

5. The period prescribed for holding an office.

The expression "term of office" uniformly designates a fixed and definite period of time.[6] See OFFICE, 2; TENURE.

TERMINATE. See AT; FROM; TO.

Termination. A voyage is terminated when the vessel arrives at the port of destination, and has been moored there in safety for twenty-four hours.

This does not necessarily terminate a risk on the cargo.[7]

TERMINER. See OYER AND TERMINER.

TERMINUS. L. 1. Bound, limit, end — in space or time. Whence co-terminous.

Terminus a quo. The end from which; the starting point; the beginning. Termines ad quem. The end to which; the point of ending; termination.

Apply, respectively, to the places of beginning and ending of ways, of risks in marine insurance, to transfers of title, etc.[1] See AT; FROM; TO.

2. An estate for years: since its existence is limited, begins and ends.

Interesse termini. Interest in (of) a term. Describes a right to the possession of an estate for years at a future time.

A bare lease does not vest an estate in the lessee. It merely gives him a right of entry, which is his interest in the term, or interesse termini. When he has actually entered, and thereby accepted the grant, the estate is vested in him, and he is possessed not properly of the land but of the term of years: the possession or seisin of the land still remaining in him who has the freehold.[2] See TERM, 3.

3. Ending: word, expression, term.

Ex vi termini. From the force of the word; from the meaning which inheres in the expression. Plural, ex vi terminorum.

Deed, bond, obligation, and like words import, ex vi termini (or ex vi terminorum), sealed instruments.[3]

TERMOR. See TERM, 3.

TERRA. See ONUS, Cum onere; SOLUM.

TERRE-TENANT. He who is in actual possession of a piece of land, as distinguished from the owner, real or alleged; also, but less frequently, the owner of the legal, as distinguished from the equitable, estate.[4]

When a mortgagor sells the land he has mortgaged, in pieces, for a full price, and at different times, the parts are liable for the debt in the inverse order of their alienation; and, before a decree of foreclosure will be entered, notice of the proceeding must be given to the terre-tenants.[5]

Statutes also provide for summoning terre-tenants in actions on judgments. Thus, if all the terre-tenants be not named in a scire facias to revive a judgment, the fact may, perhaps, be pleaded in abatement.[6]

TERRIER.[7] In old English law, a land-roll, or survey of lands, containing the number of acres, tenants' names, etc.[8]

Also, a detailed statement or inventory of the temporal possessions of the church.[9]

---

[1] Morgan's Louisiana & Texas R. &c. Co. v. Texas Central R. Co., 32 F. R. 530 (1887), cases, Harlan, J.

[2] Exp. Lange, 18 Wall. 192 (1873), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 766 (1875), cases.

[4] Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 415 (1881), cases, Miller, J.; Phillips v. Negley, 117 id. 672-75 (1886), cases.

[5] R. S. § 746.

[6] Speer v. Crawford, 8 Metc. *213 (Ky., 1860); People v. Brundage, 78 N. Y. 407 (1879), Church, C. J.

[7] Gracie v. Marine Ins. Co., 8 Cranch, 82 (1814), Marshall, C. J.

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 504; 4 Kent, 413.

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 144: Coke, Litt. 46.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 109; 17 How. 145; Baldw. 129; 57 Cal. 497; 2 Hill (N. Y.), 500.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 91, 328.

[5] Carpenter v. Koons, 20 Pa. 226 (1852), Black, C. J.; Nailer v. Stanley, 10 S. & R. 453 (1823); 13 W. N. C. 502; 31 Leg. Int. 257; 1 Johns. Ch. 447; 5 id. 235.

[6] See Cahoon v. Hollenbeck, 16 S. & R. 424 (1826); Colwell v. Easley, 83 Pa. 31 (1876); Penn. Act 1 June, 1887.

[7] F.: L. L. terrarius liber, land book.

[8] See Tomlins, Cowell, Law Dicts. In Termes de la Ley (1721) spelled "terrar."

TERRITORY. 1. The area of land or country within the jurisdiction of a State, municipality, or court.

The district within which a judge or magistrate has jurisdiction is his "territory," and his power in relation thereto, his territorial jurisdiction.[1]

Extra-territorial and intra-territorial refer to the effect given to a decree or statute beyond, as compared with within, the geographical limits of the jurisdiction of the court which pronounced the decree or of the body which enacted the statute.[2]

The decree of a court of admiralty, proceeding in rem, has extra-territorial validity.[3] See COMITY; JURISDICTION; SHIP, 2.

2. "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States."[4]

"Territory," as here used, is merely descriptive of one kind of property, and is equivalent to "lands."[5]

Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States. This power is without limitation and is the foundation upon which the territorial governments rest.[6]

The reference is to the territory owned by the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, June 21, 1788. Territory subsequently acquired is subject to the legislation of Congress as a mere incident to its ownership by the United States.[6]

The power of Congress over a territory extends to all rightful subjects and methods of legislation not denied by the Constitution, consistent with the spirit and genius of the same, and with the purpose for which the territory may have been acquired. The power to govern new territory, until it is fit to be admitted as a State, results from the acquisition.[7]

Territory Northwest of the Ohio. The Ordinance of July 13, 1787, for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio river, was adopted by the Continental Congress when the Constitutional Convention was in session at Philadelphia. The territory consisted of seventeen millions acres between the Ohio river and the Lakes, and was acquired, by treaties, from Indian tribes. The Ordinance provides, among other things, that there should be "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the Territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crime." Compare CITIZEN, Amendment XIII.

In the territory northwest of the Ohio river, and as separate Territories were successively formed, Congress applied the principles of the Ordinance of 1787.[1] See SCHOOL.

The fact that the First Congress confirmed the Ordinance, did not give it effect in any State formed out of the original "territory," unless re-enacted by the authority of such State.[2] See under ORDINANCE, 2.

A portion of the public domain becomes an "organized Territory" when Congress provides a governmental system for it, consisting of a legislature, courts, a governor, etc.[3]

Within the meaning of the Constitution an organized Territory is not a "State," although the words may be used in that sense.[4]

Nor are its courts constitutional courts: they are legislative courts, created in virtue of the power vested in Congress to make all needful rules respecting the territory of the United States, or in virtue of the general right of sovereignty which exists in the government. In legislating for the Territories, Congress exercises the combined powers of the General and of a State government.[5]

The theory upon which the governments for portions of our territory have been organized has been that of leaving to the inhabitants all the powers of self-government consistent with the supremacy and supervision of the National authority, and with certain fundamental principles established by Congress. . . The fact that judges of the courts are appointed by the President, under certain acts, does not make their courts "courts of the United States." Their courts are but legislative courts of the Territories. Accordingly, jurors are not to be summoned, necessarily, as in the courts of the United States.[6]

The practice, pleadings, forms and modes of procedure, as well as the jurisdiction of the courts, are left to the legislative action of the Territorial assemblies and of the courts themselves. But Congress may establish such regulations as it deems expedient. Thus far Congress has merely instituted a general system of courts.[7]

In organizing a Territory, Congress may establish tribunals for the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, or leave it to the local legislature to create such tribunals. In either case such courts are not, in strictness, courts of the United States: the jurisdiction is not part of the jurisdictional power, but is conferred in exercise of

---

[1] [Phillips v. Thralls, 26 Kan. 781 (1882), Brewer, J.

[2] See 4 Wall. 497; 109 U. S. 536.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 814.

[4] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 3, cl. 2.

[5] United States v. Gratiot, 14 Pet. 537 (1840).

[6] Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 432–42 (1856), Taney, C. J.; American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 542 (1828); Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 235 (1850); 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 115.

[7] Nelson v. United States, 30 F. R. 112 (1887).

[1] 1 Kent, 384; R. S. p. 13.

[2] Stroder v. Graham, 10 How. 94 (1850); Permoli v. First Municipality, 3 id. 610 (1845).

[3] See R. S. §§ 1839–95; Secombe v. Kittelson, 29 Minn. 559 (1882).

[4] See New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. 94 (1816); Campbell v. Read, 2 Wall. 198 (1864); Watson v. Brooks, 13 F. R. 540 (1882); The Ullock, 19 id. 211–12 (1883), cases; 12 id. 427, cases.

[5] American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. *546 (1828), Marshall, C. J.; Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 243 (1850).

[6] Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. 440–49 (1871), cases, Chase, C. J.; 15 F. R. 712, 715.

[7] Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. 648 (1873).

the power to make needful rules respecting the public domain.[1]

A resident of a Territory is not a citizen of a State in the sense that a citizen of one State may sue a citizen of another State in the Federal courts.[2]

In ordaining government for the Territories all the discretion which belongs to legislative power is vested in Congress; and that extends to determining by law, from time to time, the form of the local government in a particular Territory, and the qualifications of those who shall administer it. The political rights of the people are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of Congress.[3] See LANDS, Public.

An act of Congress approved July 30, 1886 (24 St. L. 170), provides that the legislatures of the Territories now or hereafter to be organized shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following cases, that is to say:

Granting divorces.

Changing the names of persons or places.

Laying out, opening, altering, and working roads or highways.

Vacating roads, town-plats, streets, alleys, and public grounds.

Locating or changing county seats.

Regulating county and township affairs.

Regulating the practice in courts of justice.

Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of justices of the peace, police magistrates, and constables.

Providing for changes of venue in civil and criminal cases.

Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing or amending the charter of any town, city, or village.

For the punishment of crimes or misdemeanors.

For the assessment and collection of taxes for Territorial, county, township, or road purposes.

Summoning and impaneling grand or petit jurors.

Providing for the management of common schools.

Regulating the rate of interest on money.

The opening and conducting of any election or designating the place of voting.

The sale or mortgage of real estate belonging to minors or others under disability.

The protection of game or fish.

Chartering or licensing ferries or toll bridges.

Remitting fines, penalties or forfeitures.

Creating, increasing, or decreasing fees, percentage, or allowances of public officers during the term for which said officers are elected or appointed.

Changing the law of descent.

Granting to any corporation, association, or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, or amending existing charters for such purpose.

Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever.

In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law can be enacted in any of the Territories by the legislatures thereof.

Sec. 2. That no Territory now or hereafter to be organized, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, shall hereafter make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or company or association having corporate powers, or in any manner loan its credit to or use it for the benefit of any such company or association, or borrow any money for the use of any such company or association.

Sec. 3. That no law of any Territorial legislature shall authorize any debt to be contracted by or on behalf of such Territory except in the following cases: To meet a casual deficit in the revenues, to pay the interest upon the Territorial debt, to suppress insurrections, or to provide for the public defense, except that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes, the legislature may authorize a loan for the erection of penal, charitable or educational institutions, if the total indebtedness of the Territory is not thereby made to exceed one per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property as shown by the last general assessment. And nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the refunding of any existing indebtedness of such Territory or of any political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision therein.

Sec. 4. That no political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision in any of the Territories shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeding four per centum on the value of the taxable property within such corporation, county, or subdivision, to be ascertained by the last assessment for Territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount given by such corporation shall be void: That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect the validity of any act of any Territorial legislature heretofore enacted, or of any obligations existing or contracted thereunder, nor to preclude the issuing of bonds already contracted for in pursuance of express provisions of law; nor to prevent any such legislature from legalizing the acts of any county, municipal corporation, or subdivision of any territory as to any bonds heretofore issued or contracted to be issued.

Sec. 5. That section 1889, title 23, of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows: "The legislative assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or special privileges, but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits, and for conducting the business of insurance, banks of discount and deposit (but not of issue), loan, trust, and guarantee associations, and for the construction or operation of rail-roads, wagon-roads, irrigating

[1] City of Panama, 101 U. S. 460 (1879).

[2] New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. 91 (1816); Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall. 287 (1867); Cissel v. McDonald, 16 Blatch. 153 (1879), cases; Darst v. Peoria, 13 F. R. 561 (1882).

[3] Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 44-45 (1885), cases.

See, as to Alaska, R. S. §§ 1954-76; as to Arizona, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, R. S. §§ 1896-1953, and these titles in the index thereto, and in the indexes to the Statutes at Large since 1878. As to Utah especially, see POLYGAMY.

ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable, or scientific association."

Sec. 6. That nothing in this act shall be construed to abridge the power of Congress to annul any law passed by a Territorial legislature, or to modify any existing law of Congress requiring that the laws of any Territory shall be submitted to Congress.

Sec. 7. That all acts and parts of acts hereafter passed by any Territorial legislature in conflict with the provisions of this act shall be null and void.

See further COURTS, United States; SCHOOL; TREATY.

TERROR. See RIOT; ROBBERY.

TEST. When the identity of anything is once established, other things, as to which there is doubt, may be compared with it as the test or standard, to ascertain whether they belong to the same class or not.

Thus, to permit a signature to be shown to the jury as a test-paper its genuineness must first be directly proved.[1] See HANDWRITING.

Test Act. Statute of 25 Geo. II (1752), c. 2, enacting that all persons holding office, receiving pay from or holding a place of trust under the crown, should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament, according to the usage of the Church of England, within six months after appointment.

Repealed by 9 Geo. IV (1829), c. 17, as to receiving the sacrament, and a new declaration substituted.[2]

The English Test Acts related to matters of opinion, most of them to religious opinions. The meaning attached to the word "test" in our constitutions was derived from these acts.[3] See BALLOT; RELIGION.

Test oath. An oath of loyalty toward the existing government.

In England and France, test oaths have been limited to an affirmation of present belief or disinterestedness toward the government, with no reference to past conduct. . . The clauses in the constitution of Missouri which require clergymen, before they may exercise their profession, to take an oath that they have not committed designated acts, some of which at the time were innocent in themselves, constitute a bill of attainder, and an ex post facto law, forbidden by the Federal Constitution.[4]

TEST'. See TESTIS, Test'.

TESTABLE. Having capacity to make a will; also, capable of being given by will. Opposed, intestable. See TESTIS.

[1] Depue v. Place, 7 Pa. 430 (1848).

[2] See 4 Bl. Com. 59.

[3] Attorney-General v. Detroit Common Council, 58 Mich. 217-18 (1885).

[4] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 318 (1866), Field, J.

Testacy. The condition, in law, of having made a valid will for the disposition of the maker's estate after death. Opposed, intestacy: dying without leaving a valid will.

Testament. Written or oral instructions, properly "witnessed" and authenticated, according to the pleasure of the deceased, for the disposition of his effects. Styled his will by way of emphasis.[1]

Originally, a "testament" concerned personalty only, and a "devise" or "will" realty. Later, the general expression for an instrument embracing either or both species of property was "last will and testament," or simply a "will." The terms are now interchanged.[2]

A testament, according to both Justinian and Coke, was so called because it is a testatio mentis, a witnessing to one's intent. This derivation "savors too much of the conceit." It is, rather, a substantive from testari, to be a testis, a witness, to bear witness. The definition of the old Roman lawyers was: testamentum voluntatis nostræ justa sententia de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit, a testament is the legal expression of one's will as to what he after his death wishes done.[3] See TESTAMENTUM, p. 1027.

Testamental. Pertaining to a testament or will.

Testamentary. (1) Connected with, relating or belonging to, the making of a will or of a will as made: as, testamentary capacity or power; a testamentary cause, gift, matter, purpose, use; a testamentary paper; letters testamentary.

(2) Named, appointed, or created in or by one's will: as, a testamentary heir, guardian, trustee.

Post-testamentary. Referring (1) to a child: born after its parent has made his last will; (2) to property: acquired after a will, or the last will, was made.

Testate. (1) Having made a valid will; leaving a will: as, he died testate.

(2) Disposed of by will: as, testate property, or estates.

Opposed, intestate: without leaving a will; not disposed of by will. Said of the fact, and descriptive of the person himself as distinguished from a "testator."

Testator. Any person who makes a will; specifically a man, as distinguished from testatrix, a woman, who has made a will.

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 12, 489, 499.

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 490; 4 Kent, 501; 21 Wend. 426.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 499; 12 Barb. 153; 4 Kent, 501, b.

One may die testate as to a part, and intestate as to the rest, of his property.

See generally INFLUENCE; INSANITY, 2 (5); LETTER, 4; REPRESENTATIVE (1); WILL, 2.

TESTAMENTUM. See under TESTIS.

TESTATUM; TESTE; TESTIS. See under TESTIS.

TESTIFY. To bear witness to; to give testimony in a judicial inquiry. See TESTIS.

Testimony. A witnessing: the declaration of a witness as to a fact; a statement in evidence made by a witness; whatever is admitted as evidentiary of the truth in a cause, whether competent or incompetent as proof, and inclusive of writings and records of all kinds.

"Testimony" is the statement or declaration of a witness; it is merely a species or class of "evidence." Evidence includes all testimony, while testimony does not include all evidence. Testimony may not be evidence.[1]

Testimony consists in what is not proved as well as in what is proved. When the act of withholding testimony raises a violent presumption that a fact not clearly proved or disproved exists, the court may allude to the act as a circumstance strengthening the proof.[2]

A bill to "perpetuate testimony" is a bill filed in a court of equity to preserve testimony in danger of being lost, before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation; as, the testimony of an aged or sick person about to move out of the jurisdiction. The testimony may respect a title or claim to realty or personalty, and be used to support an action or a defense. Analogous are bills to "take testimony de bene esse," and bills to take the testimony of persons resident abroad, to be used in suits actually pending.[3]

See further DEPOSITION; DISCOVERY, 3, 6; EVIDENCE; PERPETUATE; STENOGRAPHER; WITNESS.

TESTIS. L. A witness. Testari: to be a witness, bear witness to; to be witnessed, shown, certified.

Derivatives: attest, contest, protest, testify, testimony, testacy, testator, testament, intestate.

Nemo testis esse debet in propria sua causa. No one should be a witness in his own cause. One cannot testify in his own behalf.

This common-law rule has been very generally abrogated.[4] See further WITNESS.

[1] See McDonald v. Elfes, 61 Ind. 234 (1878); 13 id. 389; 17 id. 272, 95; 18 id. 443; 63 Iowa, 235.

[2] Frick v. Barbour, 64 Pa. 121 (1870).

[3] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1505, 1513; 3 Bl. Com. 450. As to contracts for the production of testimony, see Cobb v. Cowdery, 40 Vt. 25 (1867), cases: 94 Am. Dec. 375-78, cases.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 128, 311, 331, 333, 339, 340, 343, 349, 362, 379, 386, 390, 411, 587.

Test'. An abbreviation of testis, a witness, or of teste, being a witness.

The attestation of the foreman of a grand jury that a bill has been found or ignored may be certified in Pennsylvania in the words "test. pro reipublicæ, A—— B——."

Testamentum. A will of personalty; a will of any species of property.

Cum testamento annexo. With the will annexed — to letters of administration, q. v.

Ex testamento. From a will; under a will; by force or virtue of a will. Opposed, ab intestato: from an intestate. Expressions used to indicate the origin of property.

Omne testamentum consummatum morte est. Every will is perfected by the death: a will is of no effect till after the death of the maker — up to the last moment of life is ambulatory, q. v.

Testamentum inofficiosum. An undutiful will; a will made in disregard of the obligations of nature or parentage.

The Romans set aside testaments as inofficiosa, that is, deficient in natural duty, if they disinherited "children" without assigning sufficient reason. But if a child received any legacy, though ever so small, it was proof that the testator had not lost his memory or reason, which, otherwise, the law presumed, and no contest of the will was allowed. From this has arisen the groundless notion that to disinherit an heir he must be left a shilling or some other express legacy.[1]

"Children" meant natural and domestic heirs. They were non-disinheritable because considered as having a property in the father's effects, and as entitled to the management of his estate. An action, called querela inofficiosi testamenti, was introduced to rescind any such will, made without just cause. But the parent, by charging his estate with debts, could render succession unprofitable.[2]

Testandi. See ANIMUS.

Testatum. It is witnessed, or testified.

At common law, when a defendant who was to be arrested on a capias could not be found within the sheriff's bailiwick the writ was returned, and another writ, called the testatum capias, was directed to the sheriff of the county where the defendant was supposed to be, reciting the former writ, and that "'it is testified' that the defendant lurks in your bailiwick," and then commanded that he be taken, as in the case of the former capias. At present, when the action is brought in one county and the defendant lives in another, to save trouble, time, and expense it is usual to make out a testatum at first, supposing a former writ to have been granted.[3]

A testatum execution is a writ of execution (either a fieri facias or a capias ad respondendum) issued

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 502; Hadley, Rom. Law, 317.

[2] 2 Kent, 327; 2 Addams, 449; 3 id. 207.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 282-83.

into another county than that in which the record remains, to secure satisfaction out of the property there. The writ formerly concluded with the words "Wherefore, on behalf of the plaintiff, 'it is testified' in our said court that the defendant has goods, etc., within your bailiwick." In England, since 1852, the testatum clause in the second writ (now the only writ issued) is omitted.[1]

Teste. Being witness; witnessed by. The date of the issue of a writ.[2]

Originally, the initial word of the last clause of writs, when expressed in Latin, setting forth that each particular writ was issued by authority of the official whose signature was affixed — the sovereign or the chief justice of the court.

The corresponding clause in a writ is now called the teste, and the writ itself is said to be "tested."

Writs and processes issuing from the Supreme or a circuit court shall bear teste of the Chief Justice, or, if that office be vacant, of the associate justice next in precedence. Writs and processes issuing from a district court shall bear teste of the judge, or, if the office be vacant, of the clerk thereof.[3]

Testes. Witnesses.

Trial per testes, by witnesses, described (1) the action of an executor in producing the witnesses to a contested will in court, and there proving the execution of the instrument;[4] (2) a trial without the intervention of a jury, by testimony presented to a judge, as opposed to a trial by combat, ordeal, or the oath of parties alone.[5]

Testimonium. Witnessing; attestation.

The testimonium clause of an instrument is the clause at the end beginning "In witness whereof."[6]

THANKSGIVING. See HOLIDAY.

THAT. See THIS.

That is to say. See WIT.

THE. Particularizes the subject spoken of. The bill of scandal may be very different from a bill of scandal.[7] See A, 4.

THEATER. A house in which dramatic compositions are spoken or recited by "actors."[8]

Not necessarily more than a stage on which actors play and a room in which acting is done and seen; not, then, necessarily, a place where valuable goods are stored.[9]

Any edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance-money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations.[1]

A negro minstrel performance is a "theatrical entertainment;"[2] ballet dancing is an "entertainment of the stage,"[3] but tumbling may not be;[4] and an equestrian pageant or circus is a "theatrical performance."[5]

Where the question was whether or not the performance of an opera may properly be regarded as a theatrical exhibition, within the meaning of a statute providing that no "theatrical exhibition shall be allowed without a license first had and obtained," the court said that a theatrical exhibition must be either such as pertains to the theater or to the drama for the representation of which the theater is designed. A drama is a story represented by action, and while it is ordinarily designed to be spoken, it may be represented by pantomime. An opera is a musical drama. In the former the actor observes the rules of rhetoric and of oratory, in the latter he employs his powers of music, vocal and instrumental. The ordinary theater is adapted to the performance of the opera, and this form of exhibition, especially the light opera and opera comique, in these days is a prominent feature of theater work.[6]

Contracts for the exclusive services of distinguished artists in theatrical representations are personal and peculiar. Damages for violation of such a contract is not capable of definite determination, and a violation may be restrained by injunction — except where the damages have been liquidated by agreement.[7]

See DRAMA; RIGHT, 2, Civil Rights Acts; TICKET, Theater.

THEFT. The fraudulent taking of corporeal personal property belonging to another, from his possession, or from the possession of some one holding the same for him, without his consent, with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same and to appropriate it to the use or benefit of the person taking.[8]

The popular name for larceny,[9] q. v.

---

[1] 1 Arch. Pract. 376.
[2] 3 Bl. Com. 275, 282; 1 id. 179; 4 Yerg. 27.
[3] Act 8 May, 1792: R. S. §§ 911-12.
[4] 2 Bl. Com. 508; 2 Story, Eq. § 1516.
[5] 3 Bl. Com. 336.
[6] Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. 36 (1850).
[7] Sharff v. Commonwealth, 2 Binn. *519, 516 (1810).
[8] Rowland v. Kleber, 1 Pittsb. 71 (1853).
[9] Lee v. State, 56 Ga. 478 (1876).

[1] Revenue Act 13 July 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 126.
[2] Taxing District v. Emerson, 4 Lea, 312 (1880). As to minstrelsy, see generally, Mayor, etc. v. Eden Musee Co., 34 Alb. Law J. 164 (N. Y., 1886).
[3] Gallini v. Laborie, 5 T. R. 242 (1793); Wigan v. Strange, L. R., 1 C. P. 175 (1865).
[4] The King v. Handy, 6 T. R. 287 (1795).
[5] Cheney v. Stetson, Mass. Super. Ct. (1878).
[6] Bell, Treasurer of Philadelphia, v. Mahn, Sup. Ct. Pa. (1888): Act 16 April, 1845.
[7] McCaull v. Braham, 16 F. R. 37, 40 (1883), cases; id. 42-49, cases.
[8] Quitzow v. State, 1 Tex. Ap. 68 (1876): Pasc. Dig. Art. 2381; 8 id. 138; 14 id. 234, 575; 37 id. 338; 20 id. 171 (1886); 4 Bl. Com. 229.
[9] See People v. Donohue, 84 N. Y. 442-43 (1881).

Thief. In a policy upon the cargo of a vessel, the word "thieves" is broad enough to cover acts of compound and simple larceny.[1]

See COMPOUND, 1 (4); HUE AND CRY; MAINOR; SLANDER, 1.

THELLUSSON ACT. See ACCUMULATION.

THEN. As an adverb of time, means "at that time," referring to a time specified, past or future. It has no power of itself to fix a time; it refers to time already fixed.[2]

As an adverb of contingency, means "in that event."[3]

Although, strictly, an adverb of time, it often intends an event or contingency, and is equivalent to "in that event," or "in that case." In this sense it designates a limitation of an estate, or a future contingency on which it is made to depend. Thus employed, it is a word of reference, not indicating any particular point of time.[4] See REMAINDER; WHEN.

Then and there. In an indictment, refer to some foregone averment by which their effect is determined. If that is a single act, and the indictment avers that "then and there" another act occurred, the necessary import is that the two acts were precisely co-existent, and the word "then" refers to a precise time. When the antecedent averment fixes no precise time, "then," used afterward, of course fixes no definite time.[5]

When time and place have once been named with certainty it is sufficient to refer to them afterward by the words "then and there:" the effect being the same as if the time and the place were repeated.[6]

THENCE. In a deed, preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it.[7]

THEORY. See EXPERT; HYPOTHESIS.

THERE. See THEN AND THERE.

THEREFORE. Compare SO. See SUIT, 1.

THEREIN. In the expression "vacate the judgment in said action, and all proceedings therein," held to refer to the action.[1]

A woman, in an ante-nuptial contract, agreed to accept money in satisfaction "of her rights of dower and inheritance" in the "estate" of the husband, and relinquish "all claim therein" as widow. Held, that "therein" referred to "dower" and "inheritance," and not to "estate."[2]

THEREOF. In a deed of trust, "to secure the payment of said notes at the maturity thereof," held to refer to the notes.[3]

THEREON. The description of a voyage to a port on the north side of Cuba, "with the liberty of a second port thereon," was held to mean that the second port was to be on the side already specified, and that "thereon" meant "on the same side."[4]

THEREUPON. Without delay or lapse of time; as, in a minute that a committee, having made its announcement, a motion was "thereupon made" and carried.[5]

In a declaration, was taken to mean "in consideration thereof," where the context seemed to require it.[6]

THIEF. See THEFT.

THING. Subject-matter; substance; effects; any object that may be possessed.

The objects of dominion or property are things — real and personal. Things real are such as are permanent, fixed, immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as, lands and tenements. Things personal are goods, money, and all other movables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go.[7]

"Immovable things, as land and houses, and the profits issuing out of the same, were the principal favorites of our first legislators: such property was imagined to be lasting, and would answer to posterity the pains their ancestors employed. Those legislators entertained a low and contemptuous opinion of all personal estate, it being a transient commodity. The amount of it was indeed comparatively trifling, during the scarcity of money and the ignorance of luxurious refinements which prevailed in the feudal ages. Hence it was that a tax of the fifteenth, tenth, or larger proportion of all the movables of the subject was frequently laid without scruple; and hence may be derived the frequent forfeitures inflicted by the com-

[1] American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 1 Hill, 32 (N. Y., 1841). See also Spinetti v. Atlas Steamship Co., 80 N. Y. 71, 77-78 (1880), cases.

[2] Mangum v. Piester, 16 S. C. 329 (1881), Simpson, C. J.; Dove v. Tarr, 128 Mass. 40 (1879).

[3] Pintard v. Irwin, 20 N. J. L. 505 (1845).

[4] Hall v. Priest, 6 Gray, 24 (1856), Bigelow, J.; Ash v. Coleman, 24 Barb. 647 (1857); Busby's Appeal, 61 Pa. 116 (1869); Cresson's Appeal, 76 id. 24 (1874); Thomson v. Ludington, 104 Mass. 193 (1870); Newberry v. Hinman, 49 Conn. 132 (1881); Gibson v. Hardaway, 68 Ga. 378 (1882); Stook's Appeal, 20 Pa. 352 (1853); McArthur v. Scott, 113 id. 380 (1885), cases; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 279, 296 (1885).

[5] Edwards v. Commonwealth, 19 Pick. 126 (1837), Shaw, C. J.; State v. Willis, 78 Me. 74 (1886); 12 Allen, 152, cases; 100 Mass. 16; 1 Mo. Ap. 3; 74 Me. 221; 1 Bish. Stat. Proc. § 413, cases.

[6] State v. Cotton, 24 N. H. 146 (1851); State v. Willis, 78 Me. 74 (1885).

[7] Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 66 (1886).

[1] Cummings v. Tabor, 61 Wis. 191 (1884).

[2] Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 61 Iowa, 679 (1883); 63 id. 64 (1884).

[3] Bridges v. Ballard, 62 Miss. 241 (1884).

[4] Nicholson v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 402 (1871).

[5] Putnam v. Langley, 133 Mass. 205 (1882).

[6] Bean v. Ayers, 67 Me. 487 (1878).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 16, 384.

mon law of all of a man's goods and chattels."[1] See PROPERTY; RES; SLAVERY.

THINK. To believe, consider, esteem.

A finding by a jury that they "think" that certain horses were not struck by a particular train was held to sufficiently express the finding of the fact.[2]

See DISCRETION, 2; INTENTION; MALICE; PREMEDITATE.

THIRD or THIRDS. See DOWER.

Third person. See STRANGER.

THIS. Used of things before stated, refers to the thing last mentioned, while "that" refers to the thing first mentioned; but "these others" refers to others than those just mentioned.[3] Compare HIC.

THOROUGHFARE. See ROAD, 1; STREET; WAY.

THOUGHT. See THINK.

THREAD. The middle line of a stream or highway. See FILUM; RIPARIAN; STREET.

THREAT. A threat or menace of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, is inchoate violence.[4]

A menace of destruction or injury to one's life, reputation, or property.

A person (a tramp) who has entered a house against the will of the occupant, may "threaten" to injure another by acts as well as by words. The test in such case is as to what the occupant had reasonable ground to believe were the intruder's intentions from his conduct.[5]

On a trial for homicide when the question whether the prisoner or the deceased commenced the encounter is in doubt, the accused may prove threats of violence made against him by the deceased, though not brought to the knowledge of the prisoner.[6]

A person whose life (or whose family) has been threatened by another, whom he knows or has reason to believe has armed himself with a deadly weapon for the avowed purpose of taking his life or inflicting great personal injury upon him, may reasonably infer, when a hostile meeting occurs, that his adversary intends to carry the threat into execution. A previous threat alone, however, unless coupled at the time with an apparent design then and there to carry it into effect, will not justify a deadly assault; there must be such a demonstration of an immediate intention to execute the threat as to induce a reasonable belief that the party threatened will lose his life or suffer serious bodily injury unless he immediately defends himself against the attack. But a previous threat alone is not enough: the party may have relented or abandoned his purpose, or his courage may have failed, or the threat may have been idle gasconade, made without any purpose to execute it. Generally speaking, the threat must have been communicated to the accused — to influence his action.[1]

The remoteness of the threat from the time of the homicide is a circumstance for the jury to consider, even where the threat was made thirty years prior to the killing.[2]

A threat to commit a crime, by another than the person on trial, is not admissible on the part of the accused, unless part of the res gestæ, or a link in a chain of evidence connecting with the crime itself.[3]

See DEFENSE, 1; CONFESSION, 2; CONSENT; DURESS.

Threatened injury. See INJUNCTION.

Threatening letter. A letter sent to a person threatening to accuse him of a crime, with a view to extort money, chattels, or other property.[4]

Such letter may also threaten to libel or to kill the person addressed.

When the threat is to accuse of a crime the indictment need not specify the particular crime: for the prisoner may intentionally leave that in doubt. Nor need the threat be to accuse before a judicial tribunal.[5] See BLACKMAIL.

THROUGH. In an act providing that no road shall be laid out "through" the grounds of a cemetery company, held to mean "over."[6]

A general warranty, in a deed of conveyance, to defend the possession of the premises against claims made "through or by" the grantor estops his heirs and subsequent grantees from claiming an interest in the premises.[7]

THRUST. "Thrusting" a person with a dangerous weapon will include thrusting with an iron bolt, rod, or pin, whether the point be sharp or not.[8]

TICHBORNE CASE. See PERJURY; PERSONATE; SENTENCE, Cumulative.

TICKET. The meaning, in a statute, is a matter of construction: the word itself has no determinate signification; — for there are

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 384.

[2] Martin v. Central Iowa R. Co., 59 Iowa, 414 (1882).

[3] Russell v. Kennedy, 66 Pa. 251 (1870).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 120.

[5] People v. Deacons, 109 N. Y. 381 (1888): N. Y. Laws 1885, ch. 490, § 2.

[6] Wiggins v. People, 93 U. S. 465, 485 (1876), cases

[1] People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 688–84 (1869), Crockett, J.; People v. Iams, 57 id. 126–27 (1880); People v. Campbell, 59 id. 247–51 (1881), cases; United States v. Leighton, 4 Dak. T. 31 (1882).

[2] Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 552 (1884): 4 Cr. Law Mag. 583, cases.

[3] State v. Beaudet, 53 Conn. 542–51 (1885), cases.

[4] [4 Bl. Com. 137, 126.

[5] See 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1200; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1664; 3 Cr. L. Mag. 720; 26 Iowa, 122; 34 Me. 71; 68 id. 473; 126 Mass. 55; 12 Allen, 447; 68 Mo. 66; 2 Barb. 427; 38 Ohio St. 318.

[6] Hyde Park v. Cemetery Association, 119 Ill. 147 (1886).

[7] Traver v. Baker, 15 F. R. 191 (1883).

[8] State v. Lowry, 33 La. An. 1224 (1881).

lottery tickets, play-house tickets, admission tickets at public exhibitions and private parties, tickets to seats on a stage, tickets for passage on boats, etc.[1]

Lottery ticket. See LOTTERY.

Railroad ticket. A token or voucher, adopted for convenience, showing that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another: generally it does not contain, and ordinarily it is not intended to contain, a contract, but is a receipt for money only.[2]

Issued to a passenger, is a receipt for the passage money, and may be assigned by delivery so as to give a right of action for the value of unused coupons.[3]

That a discount will be made, when purchased before entering the car, is a reasonable regulation. A company is not bound to keep its office open after the time advertised for the departure of the train.[4]

The sale of a ticket is an undertaking that due care for safety will be used in managing trains and maintaining the road.[5]

See further CARRIER, Of passengers; COUPON-TICKET; TIME-TABLE.

Ticket of leave. Under English laws, a convict, particularly one sent to a penal settlement, for continued good conduct may have a license, called "a ticket of leave," to be at large; amounting, practically, in cases, to a remission of the sentence, within the conditions prescribed. Whence ticket-of-leave man.

The conditions are that the holder shall preserve his license, and produce it when called for by any officer of the peace; shall abstain from violating the laws; shall not associate with bad characters; and shall not lead an idle or dissolute life.

Ticket to a theater. The lawful holder of a ticket to a seat in a theater has more than a mere license; his right is rather in the nature of a lease, entitling him to peaceable ingress and egress, and exclusive possession of the designated seat during the performance.[1]

The proprietor of a theater is not bound to sell any chosen seat, for a period of opera, to the person who first presents himself at the advertised hour for the sale of seats.[2]

See DRAMA; THEATER.

TIDE. To be tidal water it is not necessary that water should be salt, but the spot must be one where the tide, in the ordinary course of things, flows and reflows.[3]

In England there is no navigable stream beyond the ebb and flow of the tide. There, therefore, tide-water and navigable water are synonymous terms, and mean nothing more than public rivers. Hence the established doctrine in that country that admiralty jurisdiction is confined to the ebb and flow of the tide. In other words, it is confined to public navigable waters. And so, in early days in this country, a public river was defined as a tide-water river, without examination whether that definition was as applicable here as in England, the navigable waters then thought of being tide-waters on the Atlantic coasts, rather than the great lakes with their tributaries.[4]

See ADMIRALTY; LAKES; NAVIGABLE.

TIE. See VOTE.

TIES. See TIMBER.

TIGHT. Has no strictly technical signification.

1. In a claim for a patent to fit a vessel for sweating tobacco, means sufficiently tight to subserve the purpose of the invention; and an imitation less tight than the original is not thereby saved from the charge of infringement.[5]

2. Referring to an instrument of writing, see SHARP.

TILES. See COPYRIGHT.

TILL. See UNTIL.

TILLAGE. Husbandry; the cultivation of the land, particularly by the plow. See AGRICULTURE.

That is the meaning in the act of June 3, 1878 (20 St. L. 89), which permits a settler on the public lands to cut timber on his claim in order to prepare the land for tillage. He may not cut timber merely for the purpose of selling it.[6]

TIMBER. Generically, only such trees as are used in building ships or dwellings. When the trunk of a tree is severed from the root and felled to the earth it becomes "tim-

[1] [Allaire v. Howell Works Co., 14 N. J. L. 23 (1833), Hornblower, C. J. See generally 1 Harv. Law Rev. 17-26 (1887), cases.

[2] [Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 48 N. Y. 217 (1872); Earl, C.; Gordon v. Manchester, &c. R. Co., 52 N. H. 599 (1873); Logan v. Hannibal, &c. R. Co., 77 Mo. 66 (1883).

[3] Hudson v. Kansas Pacific R. Co., 18 Rep. 295 (1883): 9 F. R. 879. H. was a "ticket broker," and the railroad company refused to redeem tickets held by him.

[4] Swan v. Manchester, &c. R. Co., 132 Mass. 116 (1882), cases.

[5] Little v. Dusenberry, 46 N. J. L. 643 (1884), cases; Richmond, &c. R. Co. v. Ashby, 79 Va. 133 (1884). See generally Redf., Wood, Railw., Index "Ticket;" 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cases, 314-15, cases.

[1] Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 242 (1880); McCrea v. Marsh, 12 Gray, 213 (1858)—"a license, legally revocable."

[2] Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. Ap. 141 (1882).

[3] Reece v. Miller, 8 Q. B. D. 630 (1882), Grove, J.

[4] The Genesee Chief, 12 How. 454-55, 457 (1851), Taney, C. J.; The Hine, 4 Wall. 555 (1866).

[5] Robinson v. Sutter, 8 F. R. 830 (1881).

[6] United States v. Willims, 18 F. R. 475, 478 (1883). See Vigar v. Dudman, L. R., 6 C. P. 478 (1871).

ber" or "lumber" according to the use to which it can be applied.[1]

The body, stem or trunk of a tree, or the larger pieces or sticks of wood which enter the frame-work of a building or other structure, excluding the plank, boards, shingles or lath used to complete the structure.[2]

In a contract for cutting and removing certain kinds of trees, held to refer to trees standing or felled and lying in their natural condition upon the ground, and not to include "railroad ties" made out of the trees.[3]

The particular meaning depends upon the connection in which the word is used or the calling of the person by whom it is used.[4]

In the act of Congress of March 2, 1831 (R. S. § 2461), making it a crime to cut timber on lands of the United States for purposes of sale rather than of cultivation, "timber" refers to trees prepared for transportation, such as saw logs or lumber in bulk; [1] includes trees of any size that may be used in any kind of manufacture or the construction of any article. It matters not to what purposes the trees are applied after being cut, if converted to the use of the accused.[5]

The homesteader may use or dispose of timber as an incident to his settlement, cultivation and improvement. He has only those rights in or over the property which are necessary to perfecting his title.[6]

Boxing pine trees for turpentine is not forbidden, where they are not upon lands reserved for the uses of the navy, and there is no intent to export, dispose of, use, or employ the trees or timber.[6]

An act approved June 4, 1888 (25 St. L. 166), amending R. S. § 5388, provides that every person who unlawfully cuts or wantonly destroys any timber standing upon land which, in pursuance of law, may be reserved or purchased for military or other purposes, or upon any Indian reservation, or lands belonging to or occupied by any tribe of Indians under authority of the United States, shall pay a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned not more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

In a contract for the purchase of "timber" the purchaser acquires no title to trees suitable only for fire-wood or cord-wood.[7]

An indictment for carrying away fence rails will not lie under a statute punishing cutting and carrying away timber.[8]

When the title to land remains in a State timber cut upon the land belongs to the State. While the timber is standing it constitutes a part of the realty; severed from the soil, its character is changed — it becomes personalty, but its title is not affected: it continues to be the property of the owner of the land, and can be pursued wherever it is carried: All the remedies are open to the owner which the law affords in other cases of wrongful removal of personalty.[1]

Timber unlawfully cut by one of two owners of land may not become personalty as to the other owner unless he elects to treat it as personalty.[2]

That which was real estate continues real until the owner of the freehold elects to give it a different character.[3]

Where the plaintiff, in an action for timber cut and carried away from his land, recovers damages, the rule for assessing them against the defendant is: (1) Where he is a willful trespasser, the full value of the property at the time and place of demand, or of suit brought, with no deduction for his labor and expense. (2) Where he is an unintentional or mistaken trespasser, or an innocent vendee from such trespasser, the value at the time of conversion, less the amount which he and his vendor have added to its value. (3) Where he is a purchaser without notice of wrong from a willful trespasser, the value at the time of such purchase.[4]

See ADJACENT; LOGS; MORTGAGE; OPERATE; STUMP; USE, 2; WASTE, 2; WOODS.

TIME. Has no distinctly technical signification.

"Present time" usually means a period of some considerable duration — a period within which certain transactions are to take place. "Future time" means a period to come after such present time, and after the period when such transactions have actually taken place.[5]

Time-bargain. A contract for the sale and delivery of stock at a future day, the vendor intending to purchase the stock before the day of delivery. See FUTURES.

Time, cooling. See COOLING.

Time immemorial, or out of mind. Time beyond legal memory, q. v.

In California, seems to be five years.[6]

Time policy. A policy of marine insurance in which the risk is limited, not to a [1] United States v. Schuler, 6 McL. 37 (1853), Wilkins, J.

[2] Babka v. Eldred, 47 Wis. 192 (1879), Lyon, J.: Lien Act, 1862; 22 Wis. 669 — "shingles."

[3] Hubbard v. Burton, 75 Mo. 67 (1881).

[4] United States v. Stores, 14 F. R. 825 (1882), Locke, D. J.; The Timber Cases, 11 id. 51 (1881).

[5] United States v. Murphy, 32 F. R. 379 (1887), cases; United States v. Ball, 31 id. 667 (1887).

[6] Leatherbury v. United States, 32 F. R. 780 (1887).

[7] Nash v. Drisco, 51 Me. 418 (1864).

[8] McCauley v. State, 43 Tex. 374 (1875).

[1] Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 64 (1874), Field, Judge. See also Nelson v. Graff, 12 F. R. 889, 391 (1882), cases; Putnam v. Lewis, 133 Mass. 264 (1882).

[2] Duff v. Bindley, 16 F. R. 178 (1883).

[3] Rogers v. Gilinger, 30 Pa. 187-89 (1858), cases, Strong, J.; Leidy v. Proctor, 97 id. 492 (1881).

[4] Bolles Wooden-ware Co. v. United States, 106 U. S. 432 (1882), cases, Miller, J. See also United States v. Mills, 9 F. R. 684 (1881); United States v. Williams, 18 id. 475 (1883): Act 3 June, 1878 (20 St. L. 89), for the Pacific States; United States v. Leatherberry, 27 F. R. 606 (1886).

[5] State v. Rose, 30 Kan. 506 (1883), Valentine, J.

[6] Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 66 (1886); ib. 456; 70 id. 347.

voyage, but to a period of time. See INSURANCE, Policy of.

Time the essence of a contract. The general doctrine in equity is that "time is not of the essence of a contract."

It often is of the essence as to contracts for the purchase and sale of realty, so that equity will not interfere in behalf of either party. It may be made of the essence by express stipulation, or arise by implication from the nature of the property, or from the avowed object of the seller or purchaser.[1]

But in the contracts of merchants time is of the essence.[2]

Time is not, in equity, of the essence of a contract unless the parties have expressly so treated it, or it necessarily follows from the nature and circumstances of the contract. It is regarded so far as it respects good faith and diligence; but if circumstances of a reasonable nature have disabled a party from a strict compliance; or if he comes, recenti facto, to ask for a specific performance, the suit is treated with indulgence, and generally with favor; but, in such cases, it should be clear that the remedies are mutual; that there has been no change of circumstances affecting the character or justice of the contract; that compensation for the delay can be fully made; that he who asks a specific performance is in a condition to perform his part of a contract; and that he has shown himself ready, desirous, prompt and eager to perform the contract.[3]

The doctrine was formerly carried to an unreasonable extent; in modern times it has been more guardedly applied. Time may be made of the essence by clear manifestation of the intent of the parties, by subsequent notice from one party, by laches in the party seeking to enforce the contract, by change in the value of land, or other circumstance which would make a decree for specific performance inequitable.[4] See PERFORMANCE, Specific.

Time, reasonable. What constitutes reasonable time in a particular case must be arrived at by a consideration of all the elements which affect that question; as, when a beneficiary seeks to avoid a sale by his trustee.[5]

What is reasonable time is nowhere so determined as to furnish a rule applicable to all cases. The question is to be answered in view of the particular circumstances of each case; as, where an adult would disaffirm a contract made during his infancy.[1]

Where a demand or a notice is necessary before an action can be brought, and the time is not definitely fixed, reasonable time is allowed. What this is necessarily depends upon circumstances.[2]

In computing time, "until," "from," "between," and like words generally exclude the day to which the word relates; but this rule yields to apparent intention.[3]

In the interpretation of contracts, where time is to be computed from a particular day or event, as when an act is to be performed within a specified period "from" or "after" a day named, the rule is to exclude the day thus designated and to include the last day of the specified period.[4]

Cases may be found in which it is held, where an act is required by statute to be done a certain number of days at least before a given event, that the time must be reckoned excluding the day of the act and that of the event. But there is no case in which it has been held that both the day of the act and the day of the event shall be included. There are cases which hold that, where the computation is to be made from an act done, the day on which the act is done is to be included. Exceptions exist to that rule, and there are many cases which hold that the last day is included and the first excluded. Different rules prevail in different jurisdictions.[5] See further DAY, page 312.

See AFTER; AT; AT LEAST; BETWEEN; BY; FOREVER; FOR; FORTHWITH; IMMEDIATELY; PERIOD; SHORTLY; SOON; THEN; THEREUPON; UNTIL; WHEN; WITH; — DAY; MONTH; WEEK; YEAR; — COMMENCE; DATE; DELAY; DESCRIPTION, 4; FRAUD; INDICTMENT; LACHES; LIMITATION, 3; PREMEDITATE; RELATION, 1; STALE; TEMPORARY; TENANT; TERM, 3, 4. Compare NUNC; TEMPUS.

Time-table. A railroad company is liable for damage resulting to a passenger for a negligent failure to run its trains according to its time-tables; but there must be proof of negligence. Neither a time-table nor an advertisement is a warrant of punctuality.[6]

Reasonable notice must be given of a change of time.[7]

---

[1] Taylor v. Longworth, 14 Pet. 174 (1840), cases, Story, J.; Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. 104 (1857); Ahl v. Johnson, ib. 520–21 (1857); Holgate v. Eaton, 116 U. S. 40 (1885); Brown v. Guarantee Trust Co., 128 id. 414 (1888); 30 Minn. 339; 18 Pa. 95; 76 Va. 517.

[2] Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 208 (1885), cases, Gray, J.; Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Rhodes, 121 id. 261 (1887), cases.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 776; Smith v. Cansler, 83 Ky. 367, 374 (1885).

[4] Carter v. Phillips, 144 Mass. 103 (1887), following Barnard v. Lee, 97 id. 93 (1867); Lumber Co. v. Horrigan, 36 Kan. 389–90 (1887), cases.

[5] Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 591 (1875).

[1] Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 309 (1880), cases, Strong, J. See also Re Estate of Weston, 91 N. Y. 508 (1883); Gilfillan v. Union Canal Co., 109 U. S. 404 (1883); 18 Cent. Law J. 235–39 (1884), cases; 27 id. 376–80 (1888), cases; 10 Wall. 129; Baldw. 331; 6 McLean, 295; 1 Newb. 171; 71 Ala. 167; 3 Col. 540; 59 Iowa, 458; 101 Mass. 469; 26 Mich. 195; 30 Minn. 415; 77 Pa. 298; 55 Vt. 376; 11 Wis. 417.

[2] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Burlingame Township, 36 Kan. 634–35 (1887), cases.

[3] Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 95 (1876), cases.

[4] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 190 (1864), cases.

[5] Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 559–61 (1876), cases.

[6] See Whart. Neg. § 662, cases; Angell, Carriers, 527 a; Gordon v. Manchester, &c. R. Co., 52 N. H. 596, 600 (1873), cases; 2 Wood's Ry. Law, 1174; 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cases, 315.

[7] Sears v. Eastern R. Co., 14 Allen, 437 (1867), cases.

Timely. See DUE, 2; NOTICE.

TIMET. See QUIA TIMET.

TINCTURES. See LIQUOR.

TIPPLING-HOUSE. A place of public resort where spirituous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors are sold and drank in small quantities, without a license therefor.[1]

A public drinking house — where intoxicating liquor is either sold by drams to the public or else is given away, and imbibed.[2]

TIPSTAFF. (Plural, tipstaves.) 1. An officer appointed to attend upon the judges of the king's courts with a staff or rod tipped with silver as a sign of authority, and to take into charge persons committed by the court.[3]

2. An officer who waits upon a court in session, preserving order, caring for jurors and juries, serving processes, etc. Compare BAILIFF, 2; CRIER.

TITHE. The tenth part.

Almost all the tithes of England have been commuted into rent charges, under statute of 6 and 7 Wm. IV (1836), c. 71, and amendments thereto.[4]

TITLE.[5] 1. The means whereby the owner of land has the just possession of his property.[6]

Titula est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est: a title is the just right of possessing that which is our own;[7] the lawful cause or ground of possessing that which is ours.[8]

In ordinary acceptation, the right to or ownership in land. Having title to a farm means owning it; which corresponds with the legal meaning. He who has possession, the right of possession, and the right of property has a perfect title.[9]

A person may have a title to property although he is not the absolute owner. If he has the actual or constructive possession, or the right of possession, he has a title.[1]

Within the meaning of the rule that a tenant is estopped from alleging that his landlord has no "title," means paramount right of possession.[2]

In modern use includes personalty as well as realty, and may be defined to be such claim to the exclusive control and enjoyment of a thing as the law will enforce. The word points to the right rather than to the actuality of ownership. In the definition in old books "means" seems to refer to remedies or acts for obtaining possession.[3]

Titles are, or have been, acquired by abandonment, accession, accretion, confusion, contract, creation, descent, devise or bequest, eminent domain, escheat, execution, forfeiture, gift, grant, judicial decree, marriage, occupancy, possession, prerogative, prescription, purchase, succession, will, qq. v.

Absolute title. This cannot exist at the same time in different persons or in different governments. To be "absolute" it must be exclusive, or, at least, exclude all others not compatible with it.[4]

Abstract or brief of title. See ABSTRACT, 2.

Adverse title. See POSSESSION, Adverse; WARRANTY, 1; WATER.

Apparent title. See APPARENT, 2.

Doubtful title. See Marketable Title.

Good title; perfect title; unincumbered title. A "perfect title" is a title good in law and in equity.[5]

A "good unincumbered title" imports an estate without any prior claim, to continue forever, and having no qualification or condition in regard to its continuance.[6]

When an agreement to convey a title is silent as to the character of the title, and there is no evidence indicating the character intended, an implication arises that the title is to be a good one, and therefore free from incumbrance.[7] See Marketable Title; DEED, 2.

Legal title. A right in the nature of ownership cognizable by, and enforceable in, a court of law. Equitable title. A title available or enforcible in a court of equity.

Thus, the legal title to land conveyed remains in the vendor until all the purchase-money has been paid; while the vendee acquires an equitable title only. As the payments by the vendee increase his

---

[1] Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 628 (1874), Brewer, J.

[2] Minor v. State, 63 Ga. 318 (1879); Koop v. People, 47 Ill. 329 (1868); Morrison v. Commonwealth, 7 Dana, *219 (1838).

[3] [Jacob's Law Dict.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 34–32.

[5] F. title; L. titulus, superscription; bill, placard, notice.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 195.

[7] 1 Coke, Inst. 345 b; 2 Bl. Com. 195; 34 Cal. 385; 4 Conn. 55; 11 N. J. L. 62; 81 Va. 383.

[8] Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 456 (1878); 6 Hill, 537; 33 Ill. 456; 3 Tex. 468; 81 Va. 383; 3 Washb. R. P. 399.

[9] [Shelton v. Alcox, 11 Conn. *249 (1836), Williams, C. J.; 2 Bl. Com. 195; 1 Kent, 177–78; 4 id. 373–74.

[1] Roberts v. Wentworth, 5 Cush. 198 (1849).

[2] Rodgers v. Palmer, 33 Conn. 156 (1865).

[3] [Abbott's Law Dict.]

[4] Johnson v. M'Intosh, 8 Wheat. 588 (1823), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[5] [Warner v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 21 Conn. 449 (1852).

[6] Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. 375 (1856).

[7] Newark Sav. Institution v. Jones, 37 N. J. E. 451 (1883).

equitable interest increases; and when the price has been fully paid the entire title is vested in him and he can compel a conveyance of the legal title. The vendor is a trustee of the legal title to the extent of the payments.[1]

A legal title to real estate acquired subsequent to the lease by a lessor owning the equitable title inures to the benefit of the lessee.[2]

In the Federal courts, a party who claims a legal title must proceed at law; and a party whose title or claim is equitable must follow the forms and rules of equity as prescribed by the Supreme Court under the act of 1842.[3]

"The mistake in this case does not appear to have been discovered by Smith [who purchased from the United States a certain S. E. ¼ section of land, erroneously described by the register as the S. W. ¼ section, which had been previously entered by another] or by those claiming under him, until after Widdicombe had got his patent, and after they had been in the undisputed enjoyment for thirty-five years of what they supposed was their own property under a completed purchase with the price fully paid. Widdicombe, being a purchaser with full knowledge of their rights, was in law a purchaser in bad faith; and as their equities were superior to his they were enforceable against him, even though he had secured a patent vesting the legal title in himself. Under such circumstances, a court of chancery can charge him as a trustee, and compel a conveyance which shall convert the superior equity into a paramount legal title. The cases to this effect are many and uniform. The holder of a legal title in bad faith must always yield to a superior equity. As against the United States his title may be good, but not as against one who had acquired a prior right from the United States in force when his purchase was made and under which his patent issued. The patent vested him with the legal title, but it did not determine the equitable relations between him and third persons."[4] See LIEN, Equitable, Vendor's; TACKING.

Marketable title. Such title as a court of equity would require a purchaser to accept.

A purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a doubtful title, or one which the court cannot warrant to him; the question being, not whether the title is good, but whether it is clearly so. A title is "doubtful" when its condition invites litigation. A purchaser cannot be compelled to take such a title, if he thereby exposes himself to a law-suit. When doubts are raised by extrinsic circumstances, which neither the purchaser nor the court can satisfactorily investigate for want of means, the court will refuse its aid; when the means of inquiry are offered, and the result is satisfactory, performance will be enforced.[1]

A possibility of a contest is not sufficient: it must be considerable and rational; such doubt as would induce a prudent man to pause and hesitate, and as would produce a bona fide hesitation in the mind of a chancellor.[2]

Equity will not decree specific performance where that would compel the defendant to accept a doubtful title. The purchaser has a right to a marketable title. He may not refuse to perform the contract because a fanciful or speculative doubt as to its validity may be suggested. But a title open to a reasonable doubt is not marketable, and, unless the defect is such that substantial justice can be done by allowing compensation, the purchaser will not be subjected to the contingency of being disturbed, or of having his title successfully challenged when he comes to part with it. In such actions, unless the party is present in whom the outstanding right is vested, the court will not undertake to cure infirmities by deciding a disputed question, of fact or law, but will refuse to decide for or against the validity of the title.[3]

The doctrine of constructive notice has been most generally applied to the examination of titles to real estate. It is the duty of a purchaser to investigate the title of the vendor, and to take notice of any adverse rights or equities of third persons which he has the means of discovering and as to which he is put on inquiry. If he makes all the inquiry which due diligence requires, and still fails to discover the outstanding right, he is excused; but if he fails to use due diligence, he is chargeable, as a matter of law, with notice of the facts which the inquiry would have disclosed.[4] See INQUIRY, 1.

Paper title. "Color of title" is not synonymous with "claim of title:" for to the former a paper title is requisite, while the latter may exist wholly in parol.[5]

Title-deed. Deeds evidencing one's right to land are his "title-deeds," otherwise called his muniments (q. v.) of title.

An equitable mortgage is effected by a deposit of title-deeds. A mortgagee who allows his mortgagor to retain the title-deeds, and to raise money on a second mortgage by concealing the first mortgage, will be postponed to the second incumbrancer. See MORTGAGE, Equitable.

See generally ACQUIRE; CHAIN; CLOUD; COLOR, 2; CONVEYANCE, 2; COVENANT; DESCEND; DEVOLUTION, 2; EJECTMENT; FAILURE; PASS, 1, 5; PATENT, 2; POSSESSION; PRESCRIPTION, 3; QUIET, 2; RELATION, 1; SEISIN; SLANDER, 2; TENANT; TRANSFER.

[1] Jennisons v. Leonard, 21 Wall. 309 (1874); Cordova v. Hood, 17 id. 5-6 (1872), cases; Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 id. 125-27 (1874), cases.

[2] Skidmore v. Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co., 112 U. S. 33 (1884); Gregory v. Peoples, 80 Va. 357 (1885).

[3] R. S. § 913; Hunt v. Hollingsworth, 100 U. S. 103 (1879).

[4] Widdicombe v. Childers, 124 U. S. 404 (1888), cases, Waite, C. J.

[1] Kostenbader v. Spotts, 80 Pa. 434-35, 437 (1876), cases, Gordon, J.

[2] Stapylton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272 (1809), Eldon, Ld. Ch.; 21 Cent. Law J. 164 (1885).

[3] Adams v. Valentine, 33 F. R. 2-3 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.; Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 187 (1875); Chesman v. Cummings, 142 id. 67-68 (1886), cases.

[4] Parker v. Conner, 93 N. Y. 124 (1883), Rapallo, J

[5] Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 486 (1870).

2. As applied to a literary production: a heading, caption, name or designation given to the document or work as a whole or to one of its larger divisions.

Title of a book. In copyright law, the name by which a book or other literary composition is known.

The theory of the copyright statutes is that every book must have a title, a name or designation — something short and convenient by which it may be identified; that that name must appear on it, or in it, when published, on a title-page or its equivalent; and that such title or page must have been deposited, before the publication of the book, in the designated office. The copyright to be protected is the copyright in the book. A printed copy of the title of the book is required to be deposited, before publication, only as a designation of the book to be copyrighted. The title is "a mere appendage, which only identifies, and frequently does not in any way describe, the literary composition itself, or represent its character." The title alone is never protected separate from the book which it designates.[1] See COPYRIGHT; PRINTED.

Title of a cause. The distinctive designation of a cause, giving the style of the court, the venue, names of plaintiff or petitioner and defendant, and, perhaps, also the calendar or docket number of the case.

Title of a paper or pleading. The title of an affidavit, of a declaration, pleading or other paper filed, or to be filed, in a suit, means the title of the proceeding as written at the head of such paper. Whence "to entitle" a case, cause, pleading. See CAPTION, 2; VENUE; VERSUS.

Title of an act, bill, or statute. The language, at the beginning, in which its general nature or purpose is declared or indicated, and by which it is distinguished from other statutes, or from other chapters of the same statute-book, or even from other parts or chapters of the same enactment or bill.

The title of an act furnishes little aid in the construction of its provisions. Formerly, in the English courts, it was regarded as no part of the act: it was framed by a clerk of the House in which the act originated, as a convenient means of reference. At the present day it constitutes a formal part of the act: it cannot be used to extend or to restrain positive provisions contained in the body of the act. Where the meaning of these is doubtful, resort may be had to it, but even then it has little weight: it is seldom the subject of special consideration by the legislature.[2] Compare PREAMBLE.

The constitutions of the States provide that no bill or act, except general appropriation bills, shall contain more than one subject, and that that subject shall be clearly expressed in the title of the bill or act.

The title of a statute need not index all the contents of the enactment, but it should fairly suggest the related subjects — give such notice of the general subject as will lead to inquiry into the contents. Provisions not covered by the title will be declared void. If a supplement is germane to the original act it may suffice to style it a "supplement" to such original.[1]

The purpose is to secure a separate consideration of every subject presented for legislative action, and a conspicuous declaration of that action. Substantial unity in the statutable object is all that is required.[2]

If the several sections are germane to the subject-matter, which is described in the title, the statute embraces a single subject. The title need not give an abstract of the contents nor specify the means by which the general purpose is to be accomplished. Particular sections may be rejected, if the integrity of the act remains.[3]

The provision is directed against the practice of embodying numerous objects in one act, thus passing measures which would not be discovered by reading the title only. The requirement that all bills shall be read at length before final passage gives an additional safeguard against fraudulent legislation, and makes it unnecessary, except in special cases, to construe the provision with strictness.[4]

The objections should be grave, the conflict between the statute and the constitution palpable, before the judiciary disregard an enactment upon the sole ground that it embraces more than one object, or, if but one object, that it is not sufficiently expressed by the title.[5]

The purpose is met when a law has but one general object, fairly indicated by the title. To require every end and means necessary or convenient for the accomplishment of the general object to be provided for by a separate act relating to that alone would be unreasonable and render legislation impossible.[6] See GRANT, 3.

3. Such right of action as a plaintiff relies upon, alleges or proves. See DECLARATION, 2.

4. In the law of trade-marks, a title may become the subject of property; as, by long

[1] Donnelley v. Ivers, 18 F. R. 594-95 (1883), cases, Blatchford, J.

[2] Hadden v. The Collector, 5 Wall. 110 (1866); United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 91 U. S. 82 (1875); People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 585 (1883), cases; Wilson v. Spaulding, 19 F. R. 306 (1884).

[1] State Line & Juniata R. Co.'s Appeal, 77 Pa. 431 (1875), cases.

[2] Rader v. Union Township, 39 N. J. L. 512 (1877), Beasley, C. J. Approved, 107 U. S. 155, infra.

[3] Baltimore v. Reitz, 50 Md. 579 (1878).

[4] Henderson v. Jackson County, 2 McCrary, 619 (1881).

[5] Montclair v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 155 (1882).

[6] Cooley, Const. Lim. *144, cases; Klein v. Kinkead, 16 Nev. 202 (1881), cases; Mahomet v. Quackenbush (Ill.), 117 U. S. 513 (1886), cases; Otoe County v. Baldwin (Neb.), 111 id. 16 (1883), cases; Ackley School District v. Hall (Iowa), 113 id. 142 (1885), cases; Carter County v. Sinton (Ky.), 120 id. 522-23 (1887), cases.

and prior use or by registration and notice under statutes. See TRADE-MARK.

5. As used with reference to the naval and military service, "title" is the name by which an office, or the holder of an office, is designated and distinguished, and by which the officer has a right to be addressed.[1]

"Grade" is one of the divisions or degrees in the particular branch of the service, according to which officers therein are arranged; "rank" is the position of officers of different grades or of the same grade, in point of authority, precedence, or the like, of one over another. Sometimes "rank" is used as synonymous with "grade," and the title of an officer (e. g., admiral, or vice-admiral) may denote both his grade and rank,[1] q. v.

6. An addition to one's name; as, a title of office, of honor, or nobility. See ADDITION, 2.

In England, titles of nobility are hereditary.

"No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person Holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State."[2]

"No State shall . . grant any Title of Nobility."[3]

Titles of nobility were thought inconsistent with the theory of republican institutions, which is perfect equality of rights. The first provision quoted anticipates and prevents foreign influence in the affairs of government.[4] See MINISTER, 3; NATURALIZATION, 'Fourth;" RANK.

TITULUS. See TITLE, 1.

TO. A term of exclusion, unless by necessary implication it is used in a different sense.[5]

Has no precise legal meaning; may signify "within" or "into:" as, where a road is chartered to run "to a city."[6]

As commonly used, conveys the idea of moving toward and reaching a specified point; and the meaning is not satisfied unless the point or object is actually attained. But the word sometimes embraces a part of this idea only, or it is simply a word of direction, as we say "to the north" when we mean in that direction merely, or as in the army an officer might command a wounded man, or impedimenta, to be taken to the rear. In many cases the meaning is nearly synonymous with "toward."[1] Compare AT, 2; FROM.

To let. See LEASE, Let.

To wit. See WIT.

TOBACCONIST. Any person, firm, or corporation whose business it is to manufacture cigars, snuff, or tobacco in any form.[2]

TOIL. See LABOR, 1.

TOKEN.[3] In a statute punishing false pretenses: a sign, mark, symbol. "Written token" will include matter printed or lithographed.[4]

Tokens are public or general, or privy; and, either false or true.

Cheating by a false token is by any material device that may be used to perpetrate the offense of obtaining property by false pretenses.[5] q. v.

A bank check is a false token when the drawer knows that he has no funds with which to meet it, nor credit upon which he can draw.[6]

TOLL.[7] 1, v. To bar, defeat, take away: as, to toll an entry into lands; entry tolls the statute of limitations. Tolled: removed, barred.

2, n. A Saxon word, originally signifying a payment in towns, markets, or fairs for goods and cattle bought and sold there. Now, popularly applied to the charges which canal and railroad companies make for transporting goods.[8]

The legal meaning is, a tribute or custom paid for passage, not for carriage — always something taken for a liberty or privilege, not for a service; and such is the common understanding.[9]

Thus, the tolls taken by a turnpike or canal company do not include charges for transportation; such tolls are merely an excise to be paid for using the way.[9]

In common-law usage, "toll" applies to a large class of dues and exactions in the nature of fixed rights, and which cannot lawfully be exceeded. It is almost universally connected with some franchise, which involves duties as well as privileges of a public or private nature. The right to receive fixed tolls is found in fairs, markets, mills, turnpikes, ferries, [1] Commission of Pay-Inspector in the Navy, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 416 (1880), Devens, A.-G.; R. S. § 1480; Relative Rank of Assistant Surgeons, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 651 (1880).

[2] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, cl. 8.

[3] Ibid. sec. 10, cl. 1.

[4] 2 Story, Const. §§ 1350–52, 1400.

[5] Montgomery v. Reed, 69 Me. 514 (1879): 13 id. 201; 52 id. 256; Thomas v. Hatch, 3 Sumn. 178–79 (1838).

[6] Farmers' Turnpike v. Coventry, 10 Johns. *392 (1813); 6 Paige, 561; Hazlehurst v. Freeman, 52 Ga. 246 (1874); McCartney v. Chicago & Evanston R. Co., 112 Ill 626 (1884), cases.

[1] Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 87 (1884), Cooley, C. J.

[2] Revenue Act 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 120; 1 Hughes, 326.

[3] A. S. tacen, pointing out, indicating.

[4] Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 476 (1875), cases, Buskirk, J.

[5] People v. Johnson, 10 Johns. *292 (1815).

[6] People v. Donaldson, 70 Cal. 118 (1886), cases.

[7] Probably allied to tale, tally: tell, account.

[8] Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Delaware, &c. Canal Co., 29 Barb. 592 (1859).

[9] Boyle v. Philadelphia, &c. R. Co., 54 Pa. 314 (1867), Strong, J.; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Sly, 65 id. 210 (1870), Sharswood, J.

bridges, and many other classes of interests where the owner of the franchise is obliged to accommodate the public and the public are protected from extortion by an obligation to pay regular dues.[1]

Neither by the common law of England, by its statutes, nor by customary usage there or in the United States, is the word limited to compensation for the use of a road, a way, a mill, or a ferry, where the moving power comes from the party using it; but, on the contrary, it is and always has been applied to compensation for such use when the thing used, and the motive power by which it was used, came from the party charging the toll, as well as when it came from the party paying it. It is, therefore, a word properly used to express the charges made by railroad companies for transportation of persons or property in the manner which is now usual, if not universal.[2]

Tollage. The sum charged as toll; also, the franchise under which the charge is made.

Toll-thorough. A sum demanded for a passage through an highway, or for a passage over a ferry, bridge, etc., or for goods which pass by such a port in a river.[3]

Toll-traverse. A toll granted and claimed for going over the land of a grantee.[4]

See BRIDGE; STREET; TURNPIKE.

TOMB. See BURIAL; SEPULCHER.

Tombstone. See HEARSAY.

TON. In weight: sometimes two thousand pounds avoirdupois;[5] sometimes two thousand two hundred pounds.[6]

In measurement: forty cubic feet.[7]

Tonnage. (1) A custom or impost paid to the king for merchandise carried out or brought in in ships, or such like vessels, according to a certain rate upon every ton.

(2) In our law, "internal cubical capacity in tons of one thousand cubic feet each."[8]

In commercial designation, the number of tons burden a ship or vessel will carry, as ascertained by official admeasurement and computation prescribed by public authority.[9]

Tonnage tax. A tax or duty on tonnage;[1] a duty levied on a vessel according to its tonnage or capacity.[2]

A tonnage tax is imposed, whatever the subject, solely according to the rule of weight, either as to capacity to carry or as to the actual weight of the thing itself.[3]

The registered tonnage of vessels is ascertained by rules provided by acts of Congress; otherwise, registered tonnage would be a variable quantity, dependent upon State statutes or local usages.[4]

"No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage."[5]

Taxes levied, as on property, by a State, upon vessels owned by its citizens, and based upon a valuation of the same, are not prohibited. But taxes cannot be imposed "at so much per ton of the registered tonnage."[1]

It is not only a pro rata tax which is prohibited, but any duty on a ship, whether a fixed sum upon its whole tonnage, or a sum ascertained by comparing the amount of tonnage with the rate of duty.[6]

For the use of wharves, piers, and similar structures a reasonable compensation may be charged to each vessel, care being taken not to cover a violation of the foregoing prohibition. A tax for the privilege of arriving, stopping, or departing is unconstitutional.[7]

A tax upon a boat as an instrument of navigation, and not as a tax upon the property of a citizen of the State, is invalid.[8]

A State, as a police regulation, may impose a license tax, directly or indirectly, upon the business of keeping ferries between landings in different States. Such exaction is not a duty of tonnage if it is not graduated by the tonnage of the boats or by the number of times they land within the State.[9]

Whether a charge is a charge of wharfage or a duty of tonnage must be determined by the terms of the regulation which imposes it. A "duty of tonnage" is a charge for the privilege of entering, or trading or lying in, a port or harbor; "wharfage," a charge for the use of a wharf. Whether the exaction is one or the other is a question of fact and law, and not of intent.[9]

See COMMERCE; WHARFAGE.

---

[1] McKee v. Grand Rapids &c. R. Co., 41 Mich. 279 (1879), Campbell, C. J.

[2] Lake Superior, &c. R. Co. v. United States, 93 U. S. 458-59 (1876), Miller, J. See also 29 Ohio St. 552; 12 Ct. Cl. 58; 22 E. L. & E. 526; 105 E. C. L. 60; 12 East, 340.

[3] County Commissioners v. Chandler, 96 U. S. 208 (1877): Comyns' Digest.

[4] Markets Company v. Neath, &c. R. Co., L. R., 7 C. P. 566 (1872).

[5] See 1 N. Y. Rev. St. 609, § 35; 9 Paige, 188; 40 N. Y. 262; 29 Pa. 27; 3 Wall. Jr. 46.

[6] See Act of Congress, 30 Aug. 1842, c. 270, s. 20.

[7] Roberts v. Opdyke, 40 N. Y. 262 (1869).

[8] Inman Steamship Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 243 (1876): R. S. § 4153.

[9] [State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall. 294-95, 204 (1870), Clifford, J.; Transportation Company v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 284 (1878).

[1] [State Tonnage Tax Cases, ante.

[2] The North Cape, 6 Biss. 509-15 (1876), Blodgett, J.

[3] Inman Steamship Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 243 (1876): R. S. § 4153.

[4] Beck v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 16 Hun, 345 (1878).

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 3.

[6] Steamship Co. v. Portwardens, 6 Wall. 35 (1867).

[7] Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. 577 (1874); Peete v. Morgan, 19 id. 581 (1873).

[8] Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 374, 376 (1882), cases; Transportation Co. v. Wheeling, 99 id. 273 (1878).

[9] Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 696 (1882), Bradley, J. See also Huse v. Glover, 119 id. 549 (1886).

TONTINE.[1] In French law, a partnership composed of the recipients of perpetual or life annuities or benefits, the portions of those who die accruing to the survivors.

A species of life annuity, propounded by Lorenzo Tonti, about 1650, as a mode by which governments might obtain loans. The general idea is that property is loaned, owned, or invested for the benefit of a certain number of persons, who at first receive its income, the share of a deceased member increasing the sum divisible among the survivors; the last survivor taking the whole income or principal, as the case may be.

A company which issues a policy on the tontine or "ten years dividend system" is in no sense a trustee of any particular fund for policy-holders; their relation is that of debtor and creditor, and the assured is not entitled, at the end of the term, to an accounting, in the absence of evidence of wrong-doing or mistake on the part of the company.[2]

TOOL. "An instrument of manual operation, particularly such as is used by farmers and mechanics.[3]

The statutes of some States exempt from execution the tools or implements belonging to a debtor which are necessary to his trade or business.

Where the language of the statute was "tools of the debtor necessary for his trade or occupation," the court said "The design and effect of the law are to secure to handicraftsmen the means by which they are accustomed to obtain subsistence in their respective occupations. The exemption is not limited to tools used by the tradesman with his own hands, but comprises such, in character and amount, as are necessary to enable him to prosecute his appropriate business in a convenient and usual manner; and the only rule by which it can be restricted is that of good sense and discretion in reference to the circumstances of each case."[4]

The object of such laws is to secure to the debtor the means of laboring at his trade or profession, the tools and instruments required by him in his own manual labor.[5]

The following articles have been decided to be included within such laws: the abstracts of titles and iron safe of a conveyancer;[6] a barber's chair;[7] cheese vats, presses, and knives;[8] a cornet,[9] a violin,[9] a piano;[9] dentist's instruments;[9] surgeon's instruments;[9] a fish net and boat;[7] a hunter's gun;[9] a journeyman jeweler's tools;[9] a merchant's books and safe;[10] a plow, harrow, and drag,[11] and like articles;[12] a printing press, cases, and type;[13] a shovel, ax, fork, and hoe;[14] watches.[15]

Not included: a threshing-machine;[16] the blocks of an oil-cloth printer;[17] a lawyer's library;[16] the machinery and implements constituting an extensive factory.[18]

See BAGGAGE; EXEMPTION; IMPLEMENT; MECHANIC; TRADE.

TOOTH. See MAYHEM.

TORNADO. See LIGHTNING.

TORPEDO. See FIREWORKS.

A train of cars passed over, leaving unexploded, a signal torpedo, which was picked up by a boy at a point where the public were accustomed to cross the track as the railroad authorities knew. While attempting to open the torpedo it exploded and injured a companion, the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff could recover damages; and that the fact that the torpedo had been used contrary to rules did not exempt the company from liability.[19]

TORT.[21] 1. Fr. Improper, unlawful conduct; wrong.

De son tort. Of his own wrong; by action not authorized by law.

Applied to a person who, without proper authority, takes upon himself to act as executor by intermed-

[1] In the sense of a resort for merchants, see 2 McMaster's Hist. Peop. U. S. 236.

[2] Uhlman v. New York Life Ins. Co., 109 N. Y. 421 (1888), distinguishing and limiting Bogardus v. Same, 101 id. 328, 338 (1886).

[3] Oliver v. White, 18 S. C. 241 (1882).

[4] Howard v. Williams, 2 Pick. 83 (1824), Lincoln, J. See also Healy v. Bateman, 2 R. I. 456 (1853).

[5] Boston Belting Co. v. Ivens, 28 La. An. 696 (1876), Howell, J.

[6] Davidson v. Sechrist, 28 Kan. 324 (1882).

[7] Allen v. Thompson, 45 Vt. 473 (1873).

[8] Fish v. Street, 27 Kan. 271 (1882).

[9] Baker v. Willis, 123 Mass. 195 (1877).

[10] Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen, 395 (1861).

[11] Amend v. Murphy, 69 Ill. 338 (1873).

[12] Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 334 (1868).

[13] Whitcomb v. Reid, 31 Miss. 569 (1856); Robinson's Case, 3 Abb. Pr. 467 (1856).

[14] Sammis v. Smith, 1 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 446 (1873).

[15] Choate v. Redding, 18 Tex. 580 (1857).

[16] Howard v. Williams, 2 Pick. 83 (1824).

[17] Harrison v. Mitchell, 13 La. An. 260 (1858).

[18] Wilkinson v. Alley, 45 N. H. 551 (1864).

[19] Dalley v. May, 5 Mass. *313 (1809); Garrett v. Patchin, 29 Vt. 248 (1857); Pierce v. Gray, 7 Gray, 68 (1856).

[20] Patten v. Shepard, 4 Conn. 453 (1823); Smith v. Osburn, 53 Iowa, 475 (1880); Jenkins v. McNall, 27 Kan. 532 (1882). Contra, Buckingham v. Billings, 13 Mass. *86 (1816); Danforth v. Woodward, 10 Pick. 427 (1830); Oliver v. White, 18 S. C. 241 (1882).

[21] Pierce v. Gray, 7 Gray, 68 (1856).

[16] Rothschild v. Boelter, 18 Minn. 369 (1872); Bitting v. Vandenburgh, 17 How. Pr. 82 (1859).

[16] Johnson v. Barrett, 34 Barb. 364 (1861); Seeley v. Gwillim, 40 Conn. 109 (1873).

[17] Richie v. McCauley, 4 Pa. 471 (1845).

[16] Lenoir v. Weeks, 20 Ga. 596 (1856).

[18] Boston Belting Co. v. Ivens, 28 La. An. 596 (1876).

[19] Harriman v. Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 11, 19 (1887), citing many cases on negligence.

[21] L. tortus, twisted, bent, wrung.

dling with the goods of the deceased;[1] also, to a trustee who, of his own authority, enters into the possession, or assumes the management of property which belongs beneficially to another.[2] See further EXECUTOR.

Nul tort. No wrong done: the general issue in a real action.[3]

2. Eng. An injury done, to one's person or property, by another. A private wrong, or civil injury.[4]

Actual legal damage to the plaintiff, and a wrongful act committed by the defendant.[5]

An unlawful act done in violation of the legal rights of some one.[6]

An invasion of the legal rights of another accompanied by damages.[7]

Ordinarily, the essence of a tort consists in the violation of some duty due to an individual, which duty is a thing different from the mere contract obligation. An omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty. That legal duty may arise from circumstances not constituting elements of the contract as such, although connected with and dependent upon it, and born of that wider range of legal duty which is due from every man to his fellow, to respect his rights of property and person, and to refrain from invading them by force or fraud.[8]

Actual loss is not now invariably necessary. If a legal right has been violated, the law will presume damage, so far as to allow an action, and refer the question of the amount to the judgment of a jury. But if no legal right is infringed, no action is maintainable, however great the loss.[9] See further INJURY.

Used with reference to admiralty jurisdiction, "tort" is not confined to injuries committed by direct force. It includes, also, wrongs suffered in consequence of the neglect or malfeasance of another, where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case.[10]

Tort-feasor. One who commits a tort; a wrong-doer.

Tortious.[11] Of the nature of a tort; having the elements of a civil or private injury; wrongful in law.

The acts which constitute torts are injuries to one's person, property, or reputation; more particularly: assault and battery; conspiracy; conversion; deceit; enticement and seduction; false imprisonment; infringement of a copyright, patent, or trade-mark; malicious prosecution; negligence; nuisance; slander and libel; trespass on land; violation of the right of support, and of water-rights; damage by animals; damages from unlawful sales of liquor,—any violation of a right or breach of a duty causing damage to a person who is himself without fault. The right or duty may exist at common law or be created by statute.[1]

The common-law forms of action founded upon tort are: detinue, replevin, trespass, trespass on the case, trover. The most common remedy has been action on the case.

The employer is liable for a wrong done, whether through negligence or malice, by his employee when engaged in the performance of a duty which the employer owes to the person injured. For example, if a railroad company does not protect female passengers on its trains from assault by its own trainmen, it may be made to pay damages.[2]

The result of the cases is that for an act done by the agent of a private corporation, in the course of its business and of his employment, the corporation is responsible, as an individual under similar circumstances.[3]

A corporation is liable for every wrong it commits — the doctrine of ultra vires having no application — whether for assault and battery, fraud and deceit, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, or libel. It may even be indicted for misfeasance or non-feasance touching duties imposed upon it in which the public are interested.[4]

As to municipal corporations, some cases hold that the adoption of a plan for an authorized work is a judicial act, and that if injury arises from the execution of that plan no liability exists; other cases, that for negligent exercise of a public good in itself, or for

---

[1] Brown v. Leavitt, 26 N. H. 495 (1853): 2 Leigh, N. P. 357; Emery v. Berry, 28 id. 481 (1854).

[2] Morris v. Joseph, 1 W. Va. 259 (1866): Hill, Trustees, 246.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 305.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 117, 2.

[5] [Rex v. Pagham Commissioners, 15 E. C. L. 361 (1828), Bayley, J.

[6] Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 345 (1879), Miller, J.

[7] Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 173 (1882), Barrows, J.

[8] Rich v. N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. Co., 87 N. Y. 390, 398 (1882), Finch, J.

[9] Addison, Torts, 2.

[10] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Towboat Co., 23 How. 215 (1859), Grier, J.

[11] Tor'-shus. Tortuous is obsolete.

[1] See Addison, Torts, §§ 53–77; Cooley, Torts, 650; Underhill, Torts, 20.

[2] Craker v. Chicago & Northw. R. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 668–79 (1875), cases, Ryan, C. J. The plaintiff, a school teacher, recovered $1,000 damages from the defendant, for the insult and assault of a conductor who kissed her some five or more times. See New Jersey Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 645 (1887), cases; as to malicious torts by agents, 26 Am. Law Reg. 609–20 (1887), cases; 1 Law Quar. Rev. 207–24 (1885), cases.

[3] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 210 (1858), cases; Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. First Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 330 (1883); Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 id. 261–63 (1886), cases; Denver, &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 id. 597, 608 (1887), cases; Woodward v. Webb, 65 Pa. 259 (1870), cases.

[4] Nat. Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 100 U. S. 702 (1879), cases; Wheeler & Wilson Manuf. Co. v. Boyce, 36 Kan. 353 (1887), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 763–68 (1886), cases.

mere negligence in the care of its streets or other works, it cannot be charged. But the authorities establishing the contrary doctrine, that a city is responsible for its mere negligence, are so numerous and so well considered that the law must be deemed settled in accordance with them.[1]

For a failure to exercise governmental powers municipal corporations are not liable: as, for a failure to provide appliances for extinguishing fires, to supply an adequate force of police officers, to enforce the laws of the State or its own ordinances.[2]

The rule is well settled that where power is conferred on a city to make improvements and keep them in repair, the duty to make them is quasi judicial and discretionary, and for a failure to exercise this power or an erroneous estimate of the public needs, no civil action can be maintained. But where the discretion has been exercised, the duty of maintaining the improvement is ministerial, and for neglect to perform such a duty an action by a party injured will lie.[3] See SEWER.

A private action does not lie against a city, at common law, for the non-performance or the negligent performance of a public duty imposed by a general statute without its request, unless the city receives or is entitled to receive some privilege or profit in consideration of the duty.[4]

A government is not responsible for the wrongful acts of its officers.[5]

It does not guarantee the fidelity of any officer or agent whom it employs. To do so would involve it, in all its operations, in endless embarrassments, and difficulties, and losses, which would be subversive of public interests. The head of a department, or other superior functionary, is in the same position.[6]

By the maritime law, a vessel, as well as the owners, is liable for damages caused by its tort.[7]

See ADMIRALTY; AGENT; CARE; CARRIER; CASE, 3; CAUSE, 1 (1); CONTRIBUTION; CRIME; DAMAGES; DELICT; GUILT; INTEREST, 2 (3); JUDGMENT; NEGLIGENCE; RATIFICATION; ULTRA VIRES; WAIVER; WRONG. Compare DELICTUM.

[1] Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 551 (1875), cases; Weightman v. Corporation of Washington, 1 Black, 50 (1861).

[2] City of Lafayette v. Timberlake, 88 Ind. 331 (1882), cases; Robinson v. City of Evansville, 87 id. 334 (1882), cases.

[3] Urquhart v. City of Ogdensburg, 91 N. Y. 71 (1883), cases.

[4] Wixon v. City of Newport, 13 R. I. 458-59 (1881), cases.

[5] Hart v. United States, 95 U. S. 318 (1877), cases.

[6] Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 515 (1888), cases. Held, that the plaintiff, a collector of customs, was not personally liable for the negligence of a subordinate in leaving a trunk on a pier, where it was destroyed by fire: there being no evidence connecting plaintiff with the negligence, or that the subordinate was not competent.

[7] Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 108 (1876). On assigning actions for torts, see 24 Am. Law Reg. 730-34 (1885), cases.

TORTURE. In statutes protecting animals from cruelty: gross abuse, inhuman treatment, unjustifiable physical pain or suffering inflicted.[1]

In an indictment for torturing a horse, the means used must be alleged so that the court can see that such means have the inevitable and natural tendency to produce the effect in which the crime consists. Torture is pain, anguish, extreme pain or anguish of body or mind, pang, agony, torment; in the statute of Missouri, some violent, wanton, and cruel act necessarily producing pain and suffering. Tying brush and boards to a horse's tail is not necessarily torture.[2] See CRUELTY, 3; RACK.

TOTAL. See FAILURE; LOSS, 2; PROHIBITION, 2.

TOTIDEM. See VERBUM, Totidem.

TOTIES QUOTIES. L. As often as (it may be or may happen).

Where alimony was ordered to be paid in quarterly installments, in case it was not so paid execution was to issue toties quoties.[3]

TOUCH. A vessel touches at a port when she calls there for orders or a cargo. The opposite word is "stay."[4]

If there be liberty granted by the policy of insurance "to touch" or "to touch and stay" at an intermediate port on the passage, the insured may trade there, when consistent with the object and furtherance of the adventure, provided it produces no unnecessary delay, nor enhances nor varies the risk.[5] See DEVIATION.

TOUT. See SEMPER.

TOW-BOAT. See VESSEL.

The weight of authority is that the owner of a steamboat engaged in the business of towing is not a common carrier.[6]

Towage. Drawing a vessel or other craft through the water from one place to another; also, the compensation or price for such service.

A tug-boat (q. v.) is not a common carrier. Her captain or pilot must exercise reasonable skill and [1] See 1 N. Y. Laws, 1867, c. 375; Laws, 1874, c. 12.

[2] [State v. Pugh, 15 Mo. *511 (1852), Ryland, J.

[3] Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 586 (1858).

[4] Re George Moncan, 8 Saw. 353 (1882); Chinese Immigration Act, 6 May, 1882, § 3.

[5] 3 Kent, 314, cases.

[6] See Caton v. Rumney, 13 Wend. 389 (1835); Alexander v. Greene, 3 Hill, 19 (1842); Wells v. Steam Nav. Co., 2 N. Y. 206 (1849); Leonard v. Hendrickson, 18 Pa. 41 (1851); Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush, 702 (1879), cases. Contra, Smith v. Pierce, 1 La. *354 (1830); Adams v. New Orleans Steam Tow-boat Co., 11 id. *47 (1837); Walston v. Myers, 5 Jones L. 176 (N. C., 1857). Quære, White v. The Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 470 (1856); Ashmore v. Pennsylvania Steam Towing Transp. Co., 29 N. J. L. 184 (1860), cases.

care; the want of either will render her liable for all the damages resulting.[1]

A "towage service" is rendered a vessel for the purpose of expediting her voyage, without reference to any circumstance of danger. A "salvage service" is designed to relieve the vessel from some distress or danger, present or apprehended.[2]

In the absence of a contract, the towing of a vessel in peril or disabled is salvage; but as a convenient word to distinguish an ordinary case of contract from one of salvage "towage" is often used. The increased use of tugs, and their rivalry, have operated to reduce the value of a salvage service in most ports to something not much beyond the price of a towage contract contingent upon success. Competition has established what might be called a quantum meruit for cases of this kind.[3]

TOWARD. In the expression "insulting language toward a female relation," does not mean to, but about, respecting.[4] See To.

TOWER OF LONDON. See RACK.

TOWN; TOWNSHIP. "Town" is from the Anglo-Saxon tun, an inclosure: a garden inclosed by a hedge, or a collection of houses inclosed by a wall. Its customary usage in England denoting a collection of houses or a hamlet, between a village and a city, or its stricter legal or civil meaning denoting a civil corporation of larger territory, which might include a village or a city, are somewhat foreign to the use of the word, and the civil and territorial subdivision or organization which it signifies, in this country. Its first use here was to define the original or primary civil or governmental organizations of the early colonists in New England.[5]

The word has become generic, comprehending the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. A city is a town incorporated, and a "town" may include a city.[6]

In New England, towns having been the first local civil governments, antecedent to the formation of counties, the counties were made out of the towns. In the Western States, when an organic law is first made for the government of the whole territory, or a constitution is formed for the whole State, counties are formed first, and towns within them afterward; but the original meaning of a town as "a subdivision of a county" remains the same.[1]

In some parts of the United States, "town" signifies a civil division of a county, irrespective of incorporation or powers of government: such as is elsewhere called a "township;" in other parts, a species of municipality more highly organized than a "village," and less so than a "city." In instances, the word means a territorial division only, to avert which construction "incorporated town" is used.[2]

According to the dictionaries the word "town" signifies any walled collection of houses. (Johnson.) But that is its antique meaning. By modern use it is said to be applied to an undefined collection of houses, or habitations; also to the inhabitants; emphatically to the metropolis. (Richardson.) Again, a town is any collection of houses larger than a village; or any number of houses to which belongs a regular market, and which is not a city. (Johnson, Webster, Ogilvie.) The same authorities define a "village" as a small collection of houses in the country, less than a town. . . In New England and New York, towns are the political units of territory, into which the country is subdivided, and answer, politically, to parishes and hundreds in England, but are vested with greater powers of local government. In Delaware, the counties are divided into hundreds, "town" and "village" being indiscriminately applied to collections of houses. In Maryland and most of the Southern States, the political unit of territory is the county, though this is sometimes divided into parishes and election districts for limited purposes; and "town" is used in a broad sense to include all collections of houses from a city down to a village. In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois, the subdivisions of a county, answering to the towns of New England and New York, are called townships, though "town" is also applied to them in Illinois. In these States "town" and "village" are indiscriminately applied to large collections of houses less than a city.[3]

The system of survey of government lands, established in 1796, divided territory into townships six miles square, and these again into sections each a mile square.[4]

See BOROUGH; BY-LAW, 1; CITY; SCHOOL; PUEBLO; VILLAGE.

TRACING. A mechanical copy or fac simile of an original, produced by following

[1] The Cummings, 18 F. R. 178 (1883), cases; The Margaret, 94 U. S. 497 (1876), cases.

[2] M'Connochie v. Kerr, 9 F. R. 58 (1881), cases, Brown, D. J.

[3] Baker v. Hemenway (The City of Valparaiso), 2 Low. 503 (1876), cases.

[4] Hudson v. State, 6 Tex. Ap. 575 (1879).

[5] Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Town of Oconto, 50 Wis. 193-94 (1880), Orton, J.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 114; Odegaard v. City of Albert Lea, 33 Minn. 351 (1885), cases; 24 Ind. 287; 54 N. H. 53; 40 N. J. L. 4; 6 Daly, 355; 3 R. I. 256; 40 Wis. 44.

[1] Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. Town of Oconto, ante.

[2] [Abbott, Law Dict.; 82 Ill. 119; 50 id. 453; 55 id. 346; 46 Ill. 256; 30 Minn. 189; 40 N. H. 173; 12 N. J. E. 299; 17 Ohio St. 271; 13 R. I. 85; 40 Wis. 124; 15 F. R. 846.

[3] Town of Enfield (Illinois) v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 684-86 (1887), Bradley, J.

[4] Act of Congress 18 May, 1796, § 2: 1 St. L. 464.

its lines, with a pen or pencil, through a transparent medium called tracing paper.[1]

TRACK. See EXTEND; RAILROAD.

TRACT. Does not imply anything as to the size of the parcel of land.[2] See PARCEL, 2.

TRADE. Generally, equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile; any occupation, employment, or business carried on for profit, gain, or livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions.[3]

The business or occupation which a person has learned and carries on for procuring subsistence, or for profit; particularly, a mechanical employment, distinguished from the liberal arts and learned professions, and from agriculture.[4]

In its broadest signification, includes not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling for money, or commerce and traffic generally.[5]

In the expression "implements of a debtor's trade" the reference is to the business of a mechanic,—carpenter, blacksmith, silversmith, printer, or the like.[6]

Trader; tradesman. Primarily, one who trades. But "tradesman" usually means a shopkeeper.[7]

Trader. One who buys and sells goods; "one who makes it his business to buy merchandise, or goods and chattels, and sell the same for a profit."[8]

One who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought. Any general definition would fail to suit all cases; each case has its peculiarities.[9]

In England, applied to small shopkeepers; in the United States, rarely to persons engaged in buying and selling, generally to mechanics and artificers of every kind, whose livelihood depends upon the labors of their hands.[1]

Tradesman. Cannot be restricted to mean traders, in the large sense of our bankrupt laws. Most often synonymous with shopkeeper.[2]

Was imported from the English bankrupt act, and refers to a smaller merchant or shopkeeper.[3] See MERCHANT; PEDDLER.

An agreement in general restraint of trade is illegal and void. An agreement which operates merely in partial restraint is good, provided it be not unreasonable and there be a consideration to support it. In order that it may not be unreasonable, the restraint must not be larger than is required for the necessary protection of the party with whom the contract is made. The application of the rule is somewhat difficult. A contract not to exercise a trade in a particular State is generally held to be invalid, on the ground that it would compel a man to transfer his residence and allegiance to another State in order to pursue his vocation. The cases are to be judged according to their circumstances. The grounds of the rule are, further: the injury to the public by being deprived of the restricted party's industry; and the injury to the party himself by being prevented from supporting himself and his family. Both these evils occur when the contract is general—not to pursue the trade at all, or in the entire country. But if neither evil ensues, and the contract is founded on a valuable consideration and a reasonable ground of benefit to the other party, it is free from objection. A stipulation by a vendee of any trade, business, or establishment, that the vendor shall not exercise the same trade or business, or erect a similar establishment within a reasonable distance, so as not to interfere with the value of the trade, business, or thing purchased, is reasonable and valid. So also is a stipulation by a vendor of an article to be used in a business in which he is himself engaged, that it shall not be used within a reasonable region or distance, so as not to interfere with his business. The point of difficulty is to determine what is a reasonable distance. This must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. If the distance be such that the business cannot possibly be affected, the stipulation is unreasonable.[4]

It was one of the most ancient rules of the common law that all contracts in restraint of trade were void. This was settled law in England as early as 1415, and its courts would not then tolerate the least infraction of the rule. It was enforced with severity, and doubtless grew out of the law of apprenticeship, under which no one could earn a livelihood at any trade until after long service, and then he must continue in the

[1] Chapman v. Ferry, 18 F. R. 540 (1883), Deady, J.

[2] Edwards v. Derrickson, 28 N. J. L. 45 (1859).

[3] [The Nymph, 1 Sumn. 518 (1834), Story, J.

[4] [Whitcomb v. Reid, 31 Miss. 569 (1856): Webster.

[5] May v. Sloan, 101 U. S. 237 (1879), Bradley, J.

[6] Atwood v. De Forest, 19 Conn. *517 (1849), Hinman, J.: 40 id. 109; 44 id. 99 (1876); 11 Metc. 79; 6 Gray, 298; 23 Iowa, 359.

[7] Re Ragsdale, 7 Biss. 155 (1876), Gresham, J.

[8] [Re Smith, 2 Low. 70 (1871); 80 N. C. 479; 4 B. & A. 514.

[9] Sylvester v. Edgecomb, 76 Me. 500 (1884), Peters, Chief Justice.

[1] Richie v. McCauley, 4 Pa. 472 (1846), Bell, J.

[2] Re Coté, 2 Low. 376-77 (1874), Lowell, J.; Re Smith, ib. 70 (1871); 9 Bened. 66, 309, 311.

[3] Re Stickney, 5 Dill. 91 (1878), Dillon, Cir. J.; R. S. § 5110.

[4] Oregon Steam Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 66-69 (1873), cases, Bradley, J.

one adopted or have none. For two hundred years the rule existed, without exception, that all contracts in restraint of trade were void. It was qualified, however, as the law of apprenticeship broadened; and a distinction was then drawn by the cases of Broad v. Jollyfe, 3 Cro. Jac. 596 (1623), and Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181 (1711), between a general and a limited restraint of trade. Other decisions followed, until it became the settled English rule that while a contract not to do business anywhere is void, one stipulating not to do so in a particular place, or within certain limits, is valid. This has always been the rule in this country, and the wisdom of it cannot be doubted. It is eminently suited to the genius of our institutions. It prevents building up monopolies and the creation of exclusive privileges. Contracts in general restraint of trade produce them; they tend to destroy industry and competition, thus enhancing prices and diminishing the products of skill and energy; they impair the means of livelihood and injure the public, by depriving it of the services of men in useful employments. This reasoning, however, does not apply to such contracts as impose a special restraint; as, not to carry on trade at a particular place, or with certain persons, or for a limited reasonable time. Indeed, a particular trade may be promoted by being limited for a short period to few persons, and the public benefited by preventing too many from engaging in the same calling at the same place. If, therefore, the limitation be a reasonable one, it will be upheld.[1]

A contract not to engage in a business, directly or indirectly, for five years, may not extend to isolated acts, or to occasional services voluntarily rendered in good faith for the accommodation of another; nor will it include a subordinate employment not affecting the management of the business nor directly influencing custom.[2]

A covenant to retire from business "so far as the law allows" was held to be too vague to be enforced.[3]

See ART, 3; BUSINESS; COMBINATION, 2; CONDITION; DISTRESS; MANUFACTURE; MONOPOLY; TOOLS.

See especially TRUST, 2.

Trade-dollar. See COIN.

[1] Sutton v. Head, 85 Ky. — (1888), cases. The grantee under a deed containing a condition that intoxicating liquors should not be retailed on the premises claimed that the contract was in restraint of trade, and void.

[2] Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. — (1888), cases.

[3] Davies v. Davies, 58 Law T. R. 209 (1887).

See generally Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Hale, 1 Wash. T. 284 (1870), cases; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 184–85 (1871), cases; Smith's Appeal, 113 id. 590 (1886); Albright v. Teas, 37 N. J. E. 171 (1883); Mandeville v. Harman, 42 id. 185 (1886), cases; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473 (1887), cases; Sharp v. Whiteside, 19 F. R. 156, 164 (1883); Rousillon v. Rousillon, 37 Eng. R. 39, 49–53 (1880), cases; 26 Alb. Law J. 284 (1882), cases; 35 id. 165, 282 (1887), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 202–8 (1884), cases; 26 id. 595–99 (1888), cases; 24 Am. Law Reg. 217–30, 281–96 (1885), cases; 26 id. 389–91 (1887), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 387–89 (1884),—Irish Law Times; 92 Am. Dec. 751–65, cases.

Trade-fixture. See FIXTURE.

Trade-talk. See COMMENDATIO, Simplex.

TRADE-MARK. A mark by which one's wares are known in trade.[1]

A word, mark, or device adopted by a manufacturer or vendor to distinguish his production from other productions of the same article.[2]

Every one is at liberty to affix to a product of his own manufacture any symbol or device, not previously appropriated, which will distinguish it from articles of the same general nature manufactured or sold by others, and thus secure to himself the benefits of increased sale by reason of any excellence he may have given the product. The symbol or device thus becomes a sign to the public of the origin of the goods, and an assurance that they are the genuine article of the original producer.[3]

But letters or figures, which indicate quality merely, and which cannot indicate, by their own meaning or by association, origin or ownership, cannot be appropriated: as, for example, "A. C. A. ticking."[3]

May consist of a name, a device, or a peculiar arrangement of words, lines, or figures, in the form of a label, which has been adopted and used by a person in his business to designate goods of a particular kind manufactured by him, and which no other person has an equal right to use.[4]

Numbers arbitrarily chosen will be protected as trade-marks, unless they are already in use by another person and known to the trade.[5]

Words or devices may be adopted as trade-marks which are not the original inventions of him who adopts them. Property in them has little analogy to that in copyrights or in patents for inventions. Words in common use, with some exceptions, may be adopted, if, at the time, they are not employed to designate the same, or like articles. The office of a trade-mark is to point out distinctively the origin, or ownership of the article. Unless the mark so points to the origin or ownership, neither can he who first adopted it be injured by any appropriation of it by others nor can the public be deceived. No one can use exclusively a trade-mark or trade-name which would practically give him a monopoly in the sale of any goods other than those produced or made by himself; otherwise

[1] [Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 12 F. R. 710 (1882); 14 id. 252; 31 id. 280.

[2] Hostetter v. Fries, 17 F. R. 622 (1883), Wallace, J.

[3] Amoskeag Manuf. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 53, 56 (1879), Field, J. Compare Menendez v. Holt, post.

[4] Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 147 (1877), Gray, C. J. See also Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 474 (1885); 45 Cal. 478; 54 Ill. 456; 97 Mass. 297; 1 Mo. Ap. 310; 51 N. Y. 193; 61 id. 228; 2 Saw. 86.

[5] American Button Co. v. Anthony, Sup. Ct. R. I. (1887): 26 Am. Law Reg. 173 (1888); ib. 176–79, cases.

the public would be injured, for competition would be destroyed. Neither can a generic name, nor a name merely descriptive of an article of trade, its qualities, ingredients, or characteristics, be employed as a trade-mark and the exclusive use be protected. Nor can geographical names, designating districts of the country, be so appropriated: they cannot point to a personal origin or ownership; besides, their appropriation would result in mischievous monopolies. Hence, no one can exclusively use the expressions "Pennsylvania wheat," "Kentucky hemp," "Virginia tobacco," "Lackawanna coal," "Brooklyn white lead," or "Akron cement." It is only when the adoption or imitation of any such geographical name amounts to a false representation that there is any title to relief.[1]

A combination of words from a foreign language, in order to designate merchandise as of a certain standard and uniformity of quality, may be protected as a trade-mark.[2]

A party is not, in general, entitled to the exclusive use of a name, merely as such, without more. Instead of that he cannot have such a right, even in his own name, as against another person of the same name, unless the latter uses a form of stamp or label so like that used by the complaining party as to represent that the goods of the former are of the latter's manufacture.[3]

There is a general consensus of opinion that the use of a personal name in a fair, honest, and ordinary business manner cannot be prevented, even if damage results therefrom. The cases in which uses have been regulated exhibit a conscious, intentional, fraudulent misrepresentation, or such a combined use of the name with other marks, characters, figures, or form and arrangement of circulars, advertisements, etc., as amounts to a false representation, in which latter case only the combination has been enjoined.[4]

No person can appropriate to himself exclusively any word or expression properly descriptive of an article, its qualities or ingredients. Whether a name is descriptive or arbitrary depends upon the circumstances of each case.[5]

The exclusive right to any authorized trade-mark has long been recognized by common law, the chancery courts, and State statutes. It is a property right, for the violation of which damages may be recovered, and the continuance of the violation enjoined. The whole system of trade-mark property, and the remedies for its protection, existed before any act of Congress providing for the registration of trade-marks in the patent-office. . . A trade-mark is neither an invention, a discovery, nor a writing. At common law the exclusive right to it grew out of its use, not from its mere adoption. It is simply founded on priority of appropriation. Like the great body of the rights of person and of property, property in trade-marks rests on the laws of the States. If an act of Congress can be extended, as a regulation of commerce, to trade-marks, it must be limited to their use in "commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." The legislation of August 14, 1876 (19 St. L. 141), is not a regulation thus limited, but embraces all commerce, including that between citizens of the same State, and, since it cannot be confined to such commerce as is subject to the control of Congress, it is void for want of constitutional authority.[1]

The act of Congress of March 3, 1881, provides, sec. 1, that: "Owners of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations, or with the Indian tribes, provided such owners shall be domiciled in the United States, or located in any foreign country, or tribes which by treaty, convention or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, may obtain registration of such trade-marks (1) by causing to be recorded in the patent-office a statement specifying the name, domicil, location, and citizenship of the party applying; the class of merchandise and the particular description of goods comprised in such class to which the particular trade-mark has been appropriated; a description of the trade-mark itself, with fac similes thereof, a statement of the mode in which the same is applied and affixed to goods, and the length of time during which the trade-mark has been used; (2) by paying into the treasury of the United States the sum of twenty-five dollars, and complying with such regulations as may be prescribed by the commissioner of patents."

Sec. 2. "That the application prescribed in the foregoing section must, in order to create any right in favor of the party filing it, be accompanied by a written declaration verified by the person, or by a member of a firm, or by an officer of a corporation applying, to the effect that such party has at the time a right to

---

[1] Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 322-27 (1871), cases, Strong, J., deciding that "Lackawanna Coal" could not be made a trade-mark. See Evans v. Von Laer, 32 F. R. 153 (1887) — "Motserrat Lime-Fruit Juice;" Goodyear Case, 128 U. S. 598 (1888).

[2] Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 520 (1888), holding that "La Favorita Flour" could be used as a trade-mark, and not come within the rule in Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. v. Trainer, ante.

[3] McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 252 (1877), cases, Clifford, J. See also Faber v. Faber, 49 Barb. 358 (1867); Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 430 (1875), cases; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 148 (1877), cases; Rogers Manuf. Co. v. Rogers & Spurr Manuf. Co., 11 F. R. 495 (1882), cases.

[4] Rogers v. Rogers, 53 Conn. 156 (1885), cases; Rogers Manuf. Co. v. Simpson, 54 id. 527, 565-69 (1886), cases; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 31 F. R. 454 (1887), cases; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., 37 Eng. R. 71-99 (1880), cases.

[5] Selchow v. Baker, 93 N. Y. 63-64 (1883), holding that "Sliced Animals," applied to games for children, could be appropriated.

[1] Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 92-99 (1879), Miller, J. One Steffens was indicted for counterfeiting the trade-mark of Mumm & Co., of Rheims, France, contrary to the fourth and fifth sections of the act of August 14, 1876; one Wittemann, for imitating the trade-mark of the makers of a "Pelper Heidsick" champagne wine, of the same place; and one Johnson, for imitating the trade-mark "O K" of a brand of whiskey.

the use of the trade-mark to be registered, and that no other person, firm, or corporation has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive; that such trade-mark is used in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes, as above indicated; and that the description and fac similes presented for registry truly represent the trade-mark sought to be registered."

Sec. 3. "That the time of the receipt of any such application shall be noted and recorded. But no alleged trade-mark shall be registered unless the same appears to be lawfully used as such by the applicant in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes as above mentioned or is within the provision of a treaty, convention, or declaration with a foreign power; nor which is merely the name of the applicant; nor which is identical with a registered or known trade-mark owned by another and appropriate to the same class of merchandise, or which so nearly resembles some other person's lawful trade-mark as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public, or to deceive purchasers. In an application for registration the commissioner of patents shall decide the presumptive lawfulness of claim to the alleged trade-mark; and in any dispute between an applicant and a previous registrant, or between applicants, he shall follow, so far as the same may be applicable, the practice of courts of equity of the United States in analogous cases."

Sec. 4. Certificates of registry are issued in the name of the United States, under the seal of the department of the interior, and signed by the commissioner of patents. Copies of trade-marks, statements, and certificates of registry are evidence in suits.

Sec. 5. A certificate of registry shall remain in force for thirty years from its date; except as to trade-marks protected under the laws of a foreign country for a shorter period, in which case the certificate shall cease to have force here at the time the mark ceases to be exclusive property elsewhere. Within six months prior to the end of the first thirty years, registration may be renewed on the same terms, and for a like period.

Sec. 6. Applicants are entitled to credit for fees paid under former acts.

Sec. 7. "Registration of a trade-mark shall be prima facie evidence of ownership. Any person who shall reproduce, counterfeit, copy or colorably imitate any trade-mark registered under this act and affix the same to merchandise of substantially the same descriptive properties as those described in the registration, shall be liable to an action on the case for damages for the wrongful use of said trade-mark, at the suit of the owner thereof; and the party aggrieved shall also have his remedy according to the course of equity to enjoin the wrongful use of such trade-mark used in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes, as aforesaid, and to recover compensation therefor in any court having jurisdiction over the person guilty of such wrongful act; and courts of the United States shall have original and appellate jurisdiction in such cases without regard to the amount in controversy."

Sec. 8. "No action shall be maintained under the provisions of this act in any case when the trade-mark is used in any unlawful business, or upon any article injurious in itself, or which mark has been used with the design of deceiving the public in the purchase of merchandise, or under any certificate of registry fraudulently obtained."

Sec. 9. Any person who procures the registry of a trade-mark by any false or fraudulent representation or means shall be liable to pay any damages sustained in consequence, to the injured party, by an action on the case.

Sec. 10. The act does not give cognizance to any court of the United States in a suit between citizens of the same State "unless the trade-mark is used on goods intended to be transported to a foreign country, or in lawful commercial intercourse with an Indian tribe."

Sec. 12. The commissioner of patents is authorized to make rules and regulations for the transfer of rights to trade-marks.

Sec. 13. "Citizens and residents of this country wishing the protection of trade-marks in any foreign country, the laws of which require registration here as a condition precedent to getting such protection there, may register their trade-marks for that purpose as is above allowed to foreigners, and have certificate thereof from the patent-office."[1]

The act of August 5, 1882, provides that nothing contained in the foregoing act "shall prevent the registry of any lawful trade-mark rightfully used by the applicant in foreign commerce or with Indian tribes at the time of the passage of said act."[2]

Search-warrants for counterfeit dies, plates, trade-marks, colorable imitations, labels, wrappers, empty cases, bottles, etc., upon oath of knowledge or belief that the same are in the possession of any person for deception and fraud, or that originally genuine trade-marks are not so defaced or destroyed as to prevent fraudulent use, are issuable by a judge of the district or circuit court, or a commissioner of a circuit court. Further proceedings are as under the law relating to search-warrants, q. v. After proof made, the articles seized are to be destroyed.[3]

A trade-mark is an entirety, and incapable of exclusive use at different places by more than one independent proprietor. Right thereto is forfeited, if deceptively used to designate a spurious article. Relief is given for infringement upon the ground that one man is not allowed to offer his goods for sale, representing them as the manufacture of another. Two marks are substantially the same when the resemblance is such as to deceive ordinary purchasers, giving such attention as people usually give, and to cause them to purchase one manufacture supposing it to be the other.[4]

[1] 21 St. L. ch. 128, pp. 502–4. See act 14 Aug. 1876: 1 Sup. R. S. 241; R. S. Title IX, ch. 2, §§ 4937–47.

[2] 22 St. L. ch. 393, p. 298.

[3] Act 14 Aug. 1876: 1 Sup. R. S. 241–42. Prior to that was the act of 8 July, 1870.

[4] Gorham Manuf. Co. v. White, 14 Wall. 528, 511 (1871), Strong, J.; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245 (1877); Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 4 Cliff. 478, 488 (1878) cases; Singer Manuf. Co. v. Loog, 48 L. T. 3 (1882).

To constitute an infringement, exact similitude is not required. If the form, marks, contents, words, or the special arrangement of the same, or the general appearance of the alleged infringer's device, is such as would be likely to mislead one in the ordinary course of purchasing the goods, and induce him to suppose that he was purchasing the genuine article, the similitude is such as entitles the injured party to equitable protection, if he takes reasonable measures to assert his rights, and to prevent their continued invasion.[1]

"Cellonite" is enough like "celluloid" to mislead the ordinary purchaser. The fact that a registered word becomes a common appellative cannot impair rights acquired in it. Others may use the word to designate the product, but not as a trade-mark.[2]

The owner of a trade-mark which is affixed to articles manufactured at his establishment may, in selling the latter, transfer to the purchaser the right to use the trade-mark.[3]

A partnership trade-mark is part of the good-will and an asset of the firm, salable, on dissolution, like any other asset. After dissolution, either partner may continue to use the mark, unless he has divested himself of such right. But neither, except by agreement, can use the name of the other.[4]

As an abstract right, apart from the article manufactured, it cannot be sold, for the transfer would be productive of fraud upon the public; but in connection with the article produced, it may be bought and sold like other property, individual or partnership.[5]

Where consent by the owner (a former partner) to the use of his trade-mark by another (a new partner) is to be inferred from his knowledge and silence merely, "it lasts no longer than the silence from which it springs; it is, in reality, no more than a revocable license."[6]

TRADES-UNIONS. A combination by employers or employees to regulate the price of labor is, within limits, valid at common law; but, carried to violence in any phase, is illegal.[7]

Statute 6 Geo. IV (1826), c. 129, placed such combinations, on the part of the employers chiefly, under a rigorous restraint, making criminal threats to force a workman to leave his employment.[8]

Under statutes 22 Vict. (1859), c. 34, 32 and 33 Vict. c. 61, and 34 and 35 Vict. c. 31, trades-unions are recognized as legal associations, with objects they may endeavor to secure by pecuniary and other means of supporting strikes, and the like, so long as they do not resort to open or secret violence, or to threats, intimidation, rattening, or the like.[1] See BOYCOTTING; COMBINATION, 2; CONSPIRACY; STRIKE, 2.

TRADITION. See DELIVERY, 1, 4.

TRAFFIC. The passing of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money; and a "trafficker" is one who traffics — a trader, a merchant.[2]

It is as much traffic to deal in a commodity by wholesale as at retail.[3] See CARRIER; COMMERCE.

TRAIN. See NEGLIGENCE; OBSTRUCT, 1; PASSENGER; RAILROAD.

TRAITOR. See TREASON.

TRAMP. A wandering, homeless vagabond.

Tramps are "persons who rove about from place to place begging, and all vagrants living without visible means of support who stroll over the country without lawful occasion."[4] See VAGRANT.

TRAMWAY. See DRAYAGE.

TRANSACTION. Whatever may be done by one person which affects another's rights, and out of which a cause of action may arise.[4]

Is broader than "contract." A contract is a transaction, but a transaction is not necessarily a contract.[5]

In a statute limiting counter-claims to demands arising out of the same transaction: some commercial or business negotiation; not, a wrong of violence or fraud.[6] See RELATION, 1; RES, Gestæ.

TRANSCRIPT.[7] 1, n. A copy of an original record.[8]

A transcript of a record on appeal or writ of error is only a copy of the record.[9]

2, v. To copy or to copy officially. Whence transcripted. See COPY.

TRANSFER. 1, v. To take from one court to another; to remove, q. v.

To convey or pass over the right of one person to another.[10]

[1] McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 253 (1877), cases, Clifford, J. See also Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 4 Cliff. 478 (1878), cases; Alexander Brothers v. Morse, 14 R. I. 153 (1884); Goodyear Case, 128 U. S. 604 (1888).

[2] Celluloid Manuf. Co. v. Cellonite Manuf. Co. 32 F. R. 94 (1887).

[3] Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 620 (1879), cases.

[4] Hazard v. Caswell, 93 N. Y. 264–65 (1883), cases.

[5] Morgan v. Rogers, 19 F. R. 597 (1884), cases. See generally 12 F. R. 704–6, 717–19 (1882), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 107–8 (1884), cases; on assigning, Hoxie v. Cheney, 143 Mass. 592 (1887), cases.

[6] Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 524 (1888), cases.

[7] Rex v. Batt, 25 E. C. L. *425 (1834).

[8] Walsby v. Anley, 107 E. C. L. *521 (1861).

[1] Regina v. Druitt et al., 10 Cox, Cr. C. 600 (1867); Regina v. Shepherd, 11 id. 325 (1869).

[2] Senior v. Ratterman, 44 Ohio St. 673 (1887), Spear, J.; Ohio Const., Sch. 18; Dow Law — Act 14 May, 1886.

[3] N. Y. Act 1885, ch. 490, § 2.

[4] Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406 (1877), Valentine, Judge.

[5] Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 113 (1886); Xenia Branch Bank v. Lee, 7 Abb. Pr. 389 (1858).

[6] Barhyte v. Hughes, 33 Barb. 321 (1861), Clerke, J. See also 17 F. R. 631; 49 E. C. L. *537.

[7] L. trans-scriptum, copied from one to another.

[8] Dearborn v. Patton, 4 Oreg. 60 (1870), Prim, C. J.

[9] Cavender v. Cavender, 3 McCrary, 384 (1882).

[10] Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 669 (1840). See 2 Bl. Com. 10.

2, n. There is no meaning of the word which carries the idea of an act of extinction, or any other idea than that of the bearing over of a right or title to property in a thing from one to another.[1]

In a declaration on a note, implies a passing of the beneficial interest, but not necessarily of the legal title.[2]

Foreclosure of a mortgage and the becoming absolute of the title in the mortgagee by the failure to redeem constitute a "transfer" of the property, in the sense of a statute providing that the real estate of any tax-payer shall be liable until a transfer thereof is made.[3]

Transferable. Includes every means by which property may be passed from one person to another.[4] Also spelled transferrible.

Non-transferable. Not admitting of transfer to another person.

Transferrer or transferror. He by whom a transfer, an assignment, or a conveyance is made. Transferee. The recipient in any such case.

See further ABANDON, 1; ASSIGN, 2; BEARER; CONVEYANCE, 2; DELIVERY, 1; INDORSE, 2; SECURITY; STOCK, 3; TRANSFERRE.

TRANSFERRE. L. To convey over; to make over, assign, convey, transfer.

Nemo plus juris ad alium transferre potest quam ipse habet. No one more right to another can transfer than he himself possesses. One cannot sell, grant, or give away a right or interest superior to that vested in him.[5] Compare DARE, Nemo dat, etc.

But the holder of negotiable paper who cannot himself recover upon it as against the rightful owner, by transferring it in good faith, for value, and before it is due, may make it available in the hands of his assignee. And a consignor, by indorsing and delivering the bill of lading to the consignee, puts it in the power of the latter to transfer property to a bona fide purchaser for value, and thus defeat his own original right of stoppage in transitu. See LADING, Bill of; NEGOTIATE, 2.

TRANSGRESSION. See CRIME; TRESPASS.

TRANSIENT. Going or passing over; moving about.

Transient foreigner. One who visits a country without intention of remaining.[1]

Transient person. Not exactly a person on a journey from one known place to another, but rather a wanderer ever on the tramp.[2]

Transitive. Passing over to another.

A transitive, as opposed to an intransitive, covenant, is an obligation which devolves also upon the covenantor's representatives.

Transitory. Following the person.

A transitory, as distinguished from a local, action, rests upon a transaction which might have taken place anywhere. See ACTION, 2; TRANSIRE.

TRANSIRE. L. To go across; to pass over, pass to another person, place, thing, or state.

A transire is a custom-house permit to let goods pass or be removed.

Transit in rem judicatam. It passes into a matter adjudicated, q. v.

Transit terra cum onere. Land passes with the burden — is conveyed subject to its incumbrance. See ONUS, Cum onere.

Transitu. See STOPPAGE, In transitu.

TRANSLATION. The act of rendering or the fact of being rendered into another language; also, that which is so rendered.

1. The testimony of a witness who cannot make himself understood in English is delivered aloud in open court to a sworn interpreter, who translates the oath, the questions and answers.[3]

2. When language which is alleged to be defamatory is expressed in a foreign tongue, the plaintiff should file a translation, except as to words which have become anglicised — and the court may define these to the jury.[4]

The words should be set out in the foreign language, and followed by a translation averred to be correct.[5]

3. A translator may copyright his translation. It is no infringement of the copyright to translate a work which the author has already had translated and copyrighted.[6]

TRANSMISSION. See DESCENT.

TRANSPORT. To carry, convey,[7] from one place to another.

---

[1] Sands v. Hill, 55 N. Y. 22 (1873), Folger, J.; Robertson v. Wilcox, 36 Conn. 429 (1870).

[2] Montague v. King, 37 Miss. 443 (1859), Handy, J.

[3] Waterbury Savings Bank v. Lawler, 46 Conn. 244 (1878), Loomis, J. See generally, on the transfer of land, 2 Am. Law Rev. 12-32 (1886).

[4] Gathercole v. Smith, 17 Ch. Div. 9 (1881), Lush, L. J.

[5] 10 Pet. 161, 175; 64 Pa. 371.

[1] Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 170 (1853), Hemphill, C. J.

[2] Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 208 (1834), Mattocks, J.

[3] See Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 225 (1809).

[4] See Gibson v. Cincinnati Inquirer, 2 Flip. 125 (1877), Odgers, Sl. & Lib. 109-10, cases.

[5] Pelzer v. Benish, 67 Wis. 291 (1886); 61 id. 626.

[6] Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 547, 566, 568 (1853); Emerson v. Davies, 3 Story, 780 (1845); Shook v. Rankin, 6 Biss. 477 (1875).

[7] United States v. Sheldon, 2 Wheat. 120 (1817).

Transportation. Carrying or sending to another place or country.

1. May include other modes of moving or removing property than by "carrying," as that word is ordinarily understood.

Thus, it will include taking petroleum from one place to another by means of pipes laid under ground.[1]

In the Inter-State Commerce Act of February 4, 1887, "includes all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage." See COMMERCE; TAX, 2.

2. Sending a convict to another country as punishment.[2] See SERVITUDE, 1, Penal.

TRAVEL. Has no precise or technical meaning when used without limitation. Its primary and general import is to pass from place to place, whether for pleasure, instruction, business, or health.[3]

The length of the journey or its continuance does not destroy the character of the occupation.[4]

1. The purpose for which towns are compelled to construct highways and bridges and keep them in repair is to promote the comfort and convenience and insure the safety of "travelers"—persons who have lawful occasion to pass over them upon business or for pleasure. "Travelers," in this connection, is to be interpreted in the light of knowledge common to all, gained from observation and experience, as to the manner in which people are accustomed to use highways; that is, is to be so interpreted as to permit a convenient and beneficial use.[5]

In a statute giving a right of action for an injury caused by defects in a highway, "traveler" means every one, whatever his age or condition, who has occasion to pass over the highway for any purpose of business, convenience, or pleasure, irrespective of the motive or object with which a way is thus used, if it be not unlawful. Not, then, a gymnast performing feats, nor a boy sliding down a hill.[6]

Walking for exercise is not traveling.[6]

2. Within the meaning of a law allowing a person traveling to carry concealed weapons, the traveling must be on a journey—beyond the ordinary habit, business, or duties of the person and beyond the circle of his friends or acquaintances.[7]

3. One who has been carried by steamboat, and walks eight miles from the landing to his home, is not, while walking, within the meaning of a policy of insurance, "traveling by public or private conveyance."[1]

4. As to what is traveling within the meaning of Sunday laws, see SUNDAY.

See also ACCIDENT; GUEST; INN; JOURNEY; OBSTRUCT, 1; OPEN, 1 (7); ROAD, 1; WAY, Public.

TRAVERSE.[2] Denial; denial of a fact alleged by one's opponent, or of an allegation in an indictment.[3]

A traverse is a denial on one side of some matter of fact before alleged on the other side; and regularly tenders an issue of fact. It applies to the declaration, plea, replication, or other pleading. The general issue is but a compendious traverse of the whole complaint. A technical traverse is preceded by introductory affirmative matter — matter of inducement; as that is general or special so is the traverse. An example of a "general technical traverse" is a replication de injuria; an example of a "special technical traverse" is a traverse beginning with the words absque hoc, without this, or et non, and not. A common traverse is simply a direct denial, in common negative language. This is the more eligible mode, since it is simple, direct, and produces an issue sooner. It always concludes to the country, q. v.; whereas, the absque hoc traverse concludes, in most cases, with an averment.

Illustration of a traverse absque hoc: Plea — A devised to me, B. Replication — A died intestate, and his title is in me, C, his heir: absque hoc, A devised to B. Here the averment of intestacy and heirship introduces the special traverse, and the "absque hoc" denies the devise in the words in which it is alleged.

A traverse absque tali causa, without such cause, is, at common law, a traverse of a plea in tort. It denies the matter pleaded and avers that the defendant of his own wrong (de injuria sua propria) and "without such excuse" (absque tali causa) as is set forth in his plea, committed the trespass. This formula was devised as an abridgment of the replication.[4] See further REPLICATION, De injuria.

Traverse jury. A common jury, which finds the fact in dispute, as opposed to the grand jury, q. v.

Traverse of office. Proving that an inquisition made by an escheator is defective or not true. See INQUEST, Of office.

TREASON.[5] Betrayal, treachery, breach of faith or allegiance.[6]

Traitor. One who breaks faith, or betrays a trust; one guilty of treason.

---

[1] Columbia Conduit Co. v. Commonwealth, 90 Pa. 307 (1879); 93 U. S. 185; 94 id. 1, 6.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 371, 377.

[3] Lockett v. State, 47 Ala. 45 (1872), Peters, J.

[4] Ward v. North Haven, 43 Conn. 154 (1875), Pardee, Judge.

[5] Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 240 (1864), Bigelow, C. J. See also 59 Me. 217; 63 id. 468; 67 id. 167; 107 Mass. 347; 110 id. 21; 58 N. H. 14, 431, cases.

[6] Hamilton v. Boston, 14 Allen, 475 (1867), cases, Gray, J.; Baker v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 74 (1885).

[7] Gholson v. State, 53 Ala. 530 (1875); Coker v. State, 63 id. 95 (1879); Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 448 (1879); Rice v. State, 10 Tex. Ap. 288 (1881); Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 464 (1875); Burst v. State, 89 Ind. 128 (1883); 25 Am. R. 654-56, cases.

[1] Ripley v. Insurance Co., 16 Wall. 336 (1872).

[2] Trăv'-erse. F. traverser, to thwart: L. trans-versus, turned across.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 313; 4 id. 351.]

[4] See Gould, Plead. 349-53; Stephen, Pl. 163, 264; 18 N. J. L. 352; 29 id. 513; 55 Vt. 261.

[5] F. traison: L. traditio, giving over, surrendering.

[6] [4 Bl. Com. 75.

Treason may exist only as between allies: it is a general appellation to denote not only offenses against the king and government, but also that accumulation of guilt which arises whenever a superior reposes a confidence in a subject or inferior, between whom and himself there subsists a natural, a civil, or even a spiritual relation, and the inferior so abuses that confidence, so forgets the obligations of duty, subjection, and allegiance, as to destroy the life of the superior. Therefore, for a wife to kill her husband, a servant his master, an ecclesiastic his ordinary, these being breaches of the lower allegiance of private and domestic faith, are denominated petit treasons. But when disloyalty attacks majesty itself it is called, by way of distinction, high treason, equivalent to the crimen læsæ majestatis of the Romans.[1]

High treason is the most heinous civil crime a man can commit. If indeterminate, this alone is sufficient to make any government degenerate into arbitrary power. By the ancient common law great latitude was left to the judges to determine what was treason: whereby the creatures of tyrannical princes had opportunity to create constructive treasons; that is, to raise, by forced and arbitrary constructions, offenses into the crime of treason which were not suspected to be such. To prevent this, the Statute of Treasons, 25 Edw. III (1352), c. 2, defined what offenses should be held to be treason. All kinds are now comprehended under seven branches.[2] . . The third species is "levying war against our lord the king, in his realm." This may be done by taking arms, not only to dethrone the king, but under pretense to reform religion or the laws, or to remove evil counsellors, or other grievances, real or pretended. To resist the king's forces by defending a castle against them is levying war; so is an insurrection with a design to pull down all enclosures, all brothels, etc., the universality of the design making it a rebellion against the state, an usurpation of the powers of government, an insolent invasion of the king's authority. But a tumult with a view to pull down a particular house amounts at most to a riot, this being no general defiance of public government.[3] . . The fourth species is "adhering to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elsewhere." This must likewise be proved by some overt act, as by giving them intelligence, sending them provisions, selling them arms, treacherously surrendering a fortress, or the like. By "enemies" are here understood the subjects of foreign powers with whom we are at open war. As to foreign pirates or robbers, invading our coasts without open hostilities between their nation and ours, and without commission from any prince or state at enmity with the crown, giving them any assistance is also clearly treason. But to relieve a "rebel" fled out of the kingdom is no treason; for the statute is taken strictly, and a rebel is not an "enemy;" an enemy being always the subject of some foreign prince, and owing no allegiance to the crown of England. And if a person be under actual force and constraint, through a well-grounded apprehension of injury to his life or person, this fear or compulsion will excuse his even joining with rebels or enemies in the kingdom, provided he leaves them whenever he has a safe opportunity.[1]

Another species of high treason, under the statute, was counterfeiting the king's seal or his coin,—an offense reduced to felony by 2 Will. IV (1832), c. 34.[2]

The consequences of conviction of high treason were: death by hanging (anciently, decapitation and quartering); attainder, and forfeiture of estate, with corruption of the blood of descendants.[3]

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort."

"No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court."

"The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted."[4]

By the last clause, the cruel feature of the old law, which punished the traitor in the persons of his descendants, was forever removed.

Act of April 30, 1790, c. 9, § 1, provides that every person owing allegiance to the United States, who levies war against them, or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, is guilty of treason; and shall suffer death, or, at the discretion of the court, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five years, and fined not less than ten thousand dollars, to be collected of such property as is owned at the time of committing such treason; with incapacity to hold office under the United States.[5]

The principal treasonable offenses are: misprision of treason; inciting or engaging in rebellion or insurrection; criminal correspondence with foreign governments; seditious conspiracy; recruiting men to serve, and enlisting to serve, against the United States.[6]

Treason, being a breach of allegiance, can be committed only by him who owes allegiance, perpetual or temporary.[7]

Having been defined by the Constitution, Congress can neither extend nor restrict the crime; its power

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 75-76.
[2] 4 Bl. Com. 75-76, 203.
[3] 4 Bl. Com. 81-82.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 82-83.
[2] 4 Bl. Com. 83-84, 89.
[3] 4 Bl. Com. 92-93. See Trial of Sidney, 9 St. Tr. 817 (1683).
[4] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 3.
[5] R. S. §§ 5331-32.
[6] R. S. §§ 5333-38.
[7] United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 97 (1820).

is limited to prescribing the punishment. In it all are principals.[1]

A mere conspiracy by force to subvert the established government is not treason: there must be an actual levying of war — men assembled with intent to effect by force a treasonable purpose. Then, all who perform any act, however minute or remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are traitors. In every case proof of some overt act is absolutely necessary; an intention to commit the crime is distinct from actual commission.[2]

A person may commit treason toward the State in which he resides, since he also owes allegiance to it. The definitions and laws of the various States follow, in substance, the foregoing definition, enactments, and constructions. A notable case was the trial, conviction, and execution of John Brown, in Virginia, in 1860.[3]

See further AID AND COMFORT; ATTAINDER; ENEMY; FELONY; LEVY, 1; REBEL; SEDITION; WAR.

TREASURE-TROVE.[4] Where any money, coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown.[5]

At common law, treasure-trove belonged to the king; treasure found upon the earth to the finder.[6]

Though commonly defined as gold or silver hidden in the ground, includes their paper representatives. And it is not now necessary that the hiding be in the ground. The civil law gave the treasure to the finder, according to the law of nature.[7]

See CORONER; FIND, 1.

TREASURY. See COMPTROLLER.

TREATY.[8] By the general law of nations, is in the nature of a contract between two nations, not a legislative act.[9]

A contract between two or more independent nations.[10]

Contracts between states may be called conventions or treaties. . . Treaties, allowed by the law of nations, are unconstrained acts of independent powers, placing them under an obligation to do something which is not wrong.[1]

The President "shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur."[2]

"The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority."[3]

The Constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, "and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."[4]

The power to make treaties is given by the Constitution in general terms, without any description of the objects intended to be embraced by it; consequently, it was designed to include those subjects which in the ordinary intercourse of nations had usually been made subjects of regulation and treaty, and which are consistent with the nature of our institutions, and the distribution of powers between the general and State governments. The recognition and enforcement of the principles of public law, being one of the ordinary subjects of treaties, were necessarily included in the power conferred on the general government.[5]

The power to make treaties includes the power to acquire territory by treaty, and thus to legislate over such territory.[6]

A treaty does not generally effect, of itself, its object; it is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the parties. In the United States, however, a different principle is established. Our Constitution declares a treaty to be part of the supreme law of the land; and it is, consequently, regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the legislature whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not to the judicial, department; and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule of the court.[7]

Admitting of two constructions, one restrictive as to the rights that may be claimed under it and the other liberal, the latter is to be preferred. The treaty-

---

[1] United States v. Greathouse, 4 Saw. 457 (1863), Field, J.

[2] See Exp. Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75, 126 (1807), Marshall, C. J.; United States v. Burr, 1 Bur. Tr. 14, 2 id. 405; 4 Cranch, 470, 126 (1807), Marshall, C. J. Early cases in the court of oyer and terminer of Philadelphia county (Sept. session, 1778), see 1 Dall. 33-34. Charges to Juries, 1 Story, 614, 2 Wall. Jr. 134, 4 Blatch. 518, 5 Pa. L. J. 55. See Fries' Case, 1 Whart. St. Tr. 610; ib. 102, 458; 2 Wall. Jr. 139; 3 Wash. 234; 20 Wall. 92; 16 id. 147; 92 U. S. 202; 93 id. 274; 3 Story, Const. § 667; 2 Bancroft, Const. 149-50.

[3] See also People v. Lynch, 11 Johns. *552 (1814).

[4] F. trove, found.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 295; 74 Me. 456.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 295.

[7] Huthmacher v. Harris, 38 Pa. 499 (1861); 2 Kent, 357-58.

[8] F. traité: traiter, to treat, manage, settle.

[9] Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. *314 (1829), Marshall, C. J.

[10] Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 194 (1888), Field, J.

---

[1] Woolsey, Int. Law, §§ 101, 102.

[2] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[3] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2, cl. 1.

[4] Constitution, Art. VI, cl. 2.

[5] Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 569 (1840), Taney, C. J., deciding that the power to make extradition (q. v.) treaties is in the national government only; ib. 572.

[6] American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 511, 542 (1828).

[7] Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. *314 (1829); United States v. Arredondo, 6 id. 691 (1832); Garcia v. Lee, 12 id. 511 (1838).

making clause of the Constitution is retroactive as well as prospective.[1]

While a treaty cannot change the Constitution, it may supersede a prior act of Congress, and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty.[2]

The power given the judiciary to decide on the validity of a treaty is restricted to its necessary validity, resulting from the treaty having been made by persons authorized for purposes consistent with the Constitution. Voluntary validity is the validity which a treaty, voidable by reason of violation, continues to retain by the silent volition of the nation. The principles which govern the necessary validity are of a judicial nature; the principles on which its voluntary validity depends are of a political nature.[3]

Whether those with whom the President has dealt had proper authority from their own government, and whether that government could give the right it has assumed by the treaty to transfer, are political questions; the judiciary cannot inquire into them.[4]

New treaties are to be published in a newspaper of the District of Columbia.[5]

"There would no longer be any security," says Vattel, "no longer any commerce between mankind, if they did not think themselves obliged to keep faith with each other and to perform their promises." And as sovereign nations, acknowledging no superior, cannot be compelled to accept an interpretation, however just and reasonable, "the faith of treaties constitutes in this respect all the security of contracting powers." "Treaties of every kind," says Kent, "are to receive a fair and liberal interpretation, according to the intention of the contracting parties, and are to be kept in the most scrupulous good faith." Aside from the duty imposed by the Constitution to respect treaty stipulations when they become the subject of judicial proceedings, the court cannot be unmindful of the fact that the honor of the government and people of the United States is involved in every inquiry whether rights secured by such stipulations shall be recognized and protected. . . When the avowed purpose of an act of Congress is to faithfully execute a treaty, any interpretation of its provisions will be rejected which imputes to Congress an intention to disregard the plighted faith of the government. The courts ought, if possible, to adopt that construction which recognizes and saves rights secured by the treaty. Repeals by implication are never favored.[6]

A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it. If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war. With all this the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress. But a treaty may also contain provisions which confer certain rights upon the citizens or subjects of one of the nations residing in the territorial limits of the other, which partake of the nature of municipal law, and which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country. . . A treaty is a law of the land as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined. . . So far as a treaty can become the subject of judicial cognizance, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal.[1]

For the infraction of its provisions a remedy must be sought by the injured party through reclamations upon the other. When the stipulations are not self-executing they can only be enforced pursuant to legislation to carry them into effect, and such legislation is as much subject to modification and repeal by Congress as legislation upon any other subject. If a treaty contains stipulations which are self-executing, that is, require no legislation to make them operative, to that extent they have the force and effect of a legislative enactment. Congress may modify such provisions, so far as they bind the United States, or supersede them altogether. By the Constitution, a treaty is placed on the same footing, and made of like obligation, with an act of legislation. Both are declared to be the supreme law of the land, and no superior efficacy is given to either over the other. When the two relate to the same subject, the courts will always endeavor to construe them so as to give effect to both, if that can be done without violating the language of either; but, if the two are inconsistent, the one last in date will control the other: provided, always, the stipulation of the treaty upon the subject is self-executing. If the country with which the treaty is made is dissatisfied with the action of the legislative department it may present its complaint to the executive head of the government, and take such other measures as it may deem essential to the protection of its interests. The courts can afford no redress. Whether the complaining nation has just cause of complaint, or our country was justified in its legislation, are not matters for judicial cognizance.[2] See ADDENDA, p. 1130.

See COURT, United States Supreme; INDIAN.

TREBLE. See COSTS; DAMAGES.

TREBUCKET. See SCOLD.

[1] Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 487-90 (1879), cases.

[2] The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 621 (1870), cases.

[3] Jones v. Walker, 2 Paine, 696-98 (1825?), Jay, C. J.

[4] Doe v. Braden, 16 How. 657 (1853), Taney, C. J.; Fellows v. Blacksmith, 19 id. 372 (1856), cases.

[5] Act 31 July, 1876, par. 2: 1 Sup. R. S. 284; ib. 589.

[6] Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 539-40, 549 (1884), Harlan, J.; Vattel, b. 2, ch. 12, 17; 1 Kent, 174.

[1] Head Money Cases (Edye v. Robertson; Cunard Steamship Co. v. Same), 112 U. S. 598-99, 597 (1884), cases, Miller, J.; United States v. Rauscher, 119 id. 418-19 (1886). See also Re Ah Lung, 18 F. R. 29 (1883), cases.

[2] Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 194 (1888), Field, J. An act under which duties on certain sugars from San Domingo are collected was passed after a treaty on the subject with the Dominican republic. Held, if there was conflict between the treaty and the statute, the latter must control. See also Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curt. 459 (1855). On the treaty-making power, see 20 Am. Law Rev. 513-27 (1886).

TREE. See AT, 2; BOUNDARY; CROP; EMBLEMENTS; FIXTURES; LAND; LOGS; PERSONALTY: STUMP: TIMBER.

Overhanging branches are a nuisance; and the person over whose land they hang may cut them off, or have his action for damages and an abatement of the nuisance. He cannot cut down the trees, nor remove the roots further than they produce damage.[1]

TRESPASS.[2] In its largest sense, any transgression or offense against the law of nature, of society, or of the country in which we live, whether it relates to a man's person or his property.[3]

In Blackstone's commentaries, in some connections, means misdemeanor.[4]

Also, a form of action, at common law, to recover damages for any wrongful use of force.

Beating another is a trespass, for which an action of trespass vi et armis (with force and arms) in assault and battery will lie; taking or detaining a man's goods is a trespass, for which a similar action, or an action on the case in trover and conversion, is given by the law; so, also, non-performance of a promise or undertaking is a trespass, upon which an action of trespass on the case in assumpsit is grounded.

In general, any misfeasance or act of one man whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified is a transgression or trespass in its largest sense: for which whenever the act itself is directly and immediately injurious to the person or property of another, and therefore necessarily accompanied with some force, an action of trespass vi et armis will lie; but, if the injury is only consequential, a special action of trespass on the case will lie.[5]

Trespass on the case is a universal remedy, given for all personal wrongs and injuries without force or unaccompanied by force; so called because the plaintiff's whole case or cause of complaint is set forth at length in the original writ.[6]

In the sense of a wrong to a man's lands, tenements, or hereditaments, trespass signifies no more than an entry on another man's ground without lawful authority, and doing some damage, however inconsiderable, to his real property.[7]

The quantum of satisfaction is determined by considering how far the offense was willful or inadvertent, and by estimating the value of the actual damage sustained. Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil the law entitles a trespass by breaking his close, q. v. But, to be able to maintain an action for the trespass, one must have a property, absolute or temporary, in the soil, and actual possession by entry: having the freehold is not enough. A man is also answerable for trespasses by his cattle,[1] or fowls, as see DAMAGE-FEASANT.

In trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is renewed, the declaration may allege the injury as committed by continuation from one day to another,[2] as see CONTINUANCE, 1.

In some cases entry on another's land or into his house is not accounted trespass; as, an entry to demand or pay money there payable, or to execute in a legal manner the process of the law. The keeper of a public house gives a general license to enter his doors. A landlord may justify entering to distrain for rent; and a reversioner to see if any waste be committed on the estate, from the apparent necessity of the thing. But in such cases, where a man misdemeans himself or makes an ill use of the authority with which the law entrusts him, he shall be accounted a trespasser ab initio; as, if one comes into a tavern and will not go out in a reasonable time, this wrongful act affects and has relation back to his first entry, and makes the whole a trespass. But a bare non-feasance, as, not paying for an accommodation received at an inn, is only a breach of contract.[3]

A mere omission of duty, or neglect to do what another has a right to exact, or any other mere non-feasance, does not amount to such an abuse of authority as will render the party a trespasser ab initio. Not doing a thing is not a trespass.[4]

The criterion of "trespass" is force directly applied.[5]

The force may be such as is implied in law. As the law always implies force where the injury is immediate to the person or property of another, the substantial distinction between actions of "trespass" and "case" is between direct and immediate, and mediate or consequential, injuries.[6]

In its widest scope, trespass on property is any injury to property. Its synonym in law-Latin was transgressio: any infraction of a legal right. In this sense it comprehends not only forcible wrongs, where the damages are direct and immediate, but also acts which are tortious in their consequences.[7]

Where the defendant fired a pistol, the ball from which glanced and hit the plaintiff, and it was found that the injury was unintentional but the result of culpable negligence in the defendant, it was held that

[1] Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 162 (1882); 107 Mass. 234; 16 S. & R. 390; Wood, Nuis. § 112.

[2] F. trespasser, to pass over or beyond.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 208.

[4] 1 Bishop, Cr. L. §§ 568-69, 625; State v. Watts, 48 Ark. 58 (1886).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 208; 34 Ala. 554.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 122.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 209-12; 9 Ill. 170.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 209-12; 9 Ill. 170.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 112.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 212-14.

[4] Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. 91 (1872), cases.

[5] Smith v. Rutherford, 2 S. & R. *360 (1816).

[6] Jordan v. Wyatt, 4 Gratt. 153 (1847).

[7] Ten Eyck v. Runk, 31 N. J. L. 429-30 (1866), Beasley, C. J. On trespass and negligence, see 14 Am. Law Rev. 1-35 (1880), cases.

trespass vi et armis would lie: the injury was the direct and immediate result of the motion recklessly given to the bullet.[1]

See further CASE, 3; CONTRIBUTION; DAMAGES, Exemplary; JOINT AND SEVERAL; MALICE; REPLEVIN; TORT, 2; WAIVER.

TRIAL. The examination of the matter of fact in issue.[2]

In its general use, the investigation and decision of a matter in issue between parties before a competent tribunal; including all the steps taken in the case from submission to the jury to the rendition of judgment. In its restricted sense, the investigation of the facts only.[3]

The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue.[4]

A judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or fact, in an action or proceeding.[5]

In acts of Congress regulating the removal of causes, a trial by jury of an issue which will determine the facts in an action of law; "final hearing" meaning the hearing of the cause upon its merits by a judge sitting in equity.[6]

The hearing of a demurrer is a "trial," within the act of March 3, 1887.[7]

The trial of a case is not any trial, but the final trial — the one that stands as a thing accomplished in the case.[8]

In criminal law, an actual trial by a jury; not, the arraignment, and pleadings preparatory thereto.[9] See ARRAIGN.

In civil cases, trials are by record, by inspection, by certificate, by witnesses, and by a jury, qq. v.

Mistrial. An erroneous or fatally irregular trial, due to disqualification in a juror or jurors or in the judge, or to an incurable defect or deficiency in the pleadings.[10]

Where a jury is discharged without a verdict, the proceeding is properly a "mistrial;" the proceeding has miscarried, and the consequence is no trial at all.[1]

New trial. A re-trial awarded for defeat of justice happening at the former trial, by surprise, inadvertence, or misconduct.[2]

A re-examination, before a court and jury, of an issue in fact which has been tried at least once before.[3]

A re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court, after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee.[4]

Has always been used in the sense of a complete re-trial of a cause, except in instances. Being a re-trial of the facts of a case, defined as a "re-examination of an issue in fact."[5]

The cause is in the same condition as if no judgment had been rendered, so that the action is in no sense "new," but identically the original suit. The error is extirpated, and everything else is in statu quo.[6]

A motion for a new trial is addressed to the discretion of the court, and the court's action is not reviewable.[7]

To justify granting a new trial, there must be more than a strong preponderance of evidence in favor of the defeated party; it must be so palpable that the jury have erred as to suggest that the verdict was the result of misapprehension or partiality.[8]

The statute conferring jurisdiction upon the Federal courts to grant new trials expressly provides that such power should be exercised "for reasons for which new trials have been usually granted in courts of law." This provision applies only to jury trials, and is directory to the courts, to be governed by the rules and principles of the common law. The courts of common law have usually granted new trials: when the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, or contrary to law; when excessive or manifestly insufficient damages have been awarded; for the admission of illegal evidence, or the rejection of competent evidence; when a party has been deprived of evidence by accident, and without fault on his part, or is taken by surprise in a matter that he could not reasonably anticipate; for misdirection upon material questions of law, or for serious irregularity in the trial or misconduct of the jury; for unfair conduct of the prevailing party; when manifest injustice has been done; when

[1] Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 183, 185-86 (1869). See also Morris v. Platt, 32 id. 75, 87 (1864).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 330; 9 F. R. 437.

[3] [Jenks v. State, 39 Ind. 9-10 (1872), Buskirk, C. J.; Bruce v. State, 87 id. 453 (1882).

[4] Tregambo v. Comanche Mining Co., 57 Cal. 505 (1881), McKee, J. See also 2 Fla. 573; 63 Mo. 444; 2 Hun, 444; 54 Wis. 545.

[5] Ohio Rev. St. 5127; 44 Ohio St. 528.

[6] Minnett v. Milwaukee, &c. R. Co., 3 Dill. 464 (1875), Nelson, J.; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. 225 (1873); Vannevar v. Bryant, 21 id. 43 (1874); 112 Mass. 339; 20 Ohio St. 181; 40 Ind. 179.

[7] Lookout Mountain R. Co. v. Huston, 32 F. R. 711 (1887), cases; Laidly v. Huntington, 121 U. S. 179 (1887).

[8] Fisk v. Henarie, 32 F. R. 427 (1887).

[9] United States v. Curtis, 4 Mas. 236-37 (1826), Story, J.

[10] See Wilbridge v. Case, 2 Ind. 37 (1850); 4 Blackf. 309.

[1] Fisk v. Henarie, 32 F. R. 427 (1887), Deady, J.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 387.

[3] Silvey v. United States, 7 Ct. Cl. 331 (1871); Ford v. United States, 18 id. 70 (1883).

[4] Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 596 (1866).

[5] Zaleski v. Clark, 45 Conn. 401 (1877), Loomis, J.; Steph. Plead. 94-96.

[6] Lockwood v. Jones, 7 Conn. 436 (1829), cases.

[7] See R. S. § 726; Indianapolis, &c. R. Co v. Horst, 93 U. S. 301 (1876), cases; Railway Co. v. Heck, 102 id. 120 (1876), cases; 17 F. R. 793; 2 N. M. 462, 475.

[8] Mengis v. Lebanon Manuf. Co., 13 Rep. 198 (S. D. N. Y., 1882), Wallace, J.

the losing party, who was duly diligent in preparing for trial, has discovered new evidence which will tend to prove a material fact not directly in issue before, or not then investigated, which will probably produce a different result, and which is not merely cumulative.[1]

In an issue out of chancery, a motion for a new trial is to be made to that court — the verdict being only advisory.[2]

In criminal cases, a new trial will be granted, in most jurisdictions, on the application of the accused, for cause shown.[3]

Public trial. Not necessarily a trial to which the public generally or a large concourse is admitted.

The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused: that the public may see that he is fairly dealt with and not unjustly condemned, and that the presence of interested spectators may keep his triers keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions; and the requirement is fairly observed, if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend.[4]

Separate trial. A single or different trial of each of two or more persons accused of participation in the same offense.

Error cannot be assigned for refusal to grant such a trial; the granting being discretionary with the court.[5]

Speedy trial. The constitutions of the States provide that persons held on a criminal charge have the right to a "speedy trial," a right which was guaranteed by Magna Charta. The meaning is that the trial shall take place as soon as possible after an indictment is found, without depriving the prosecution of a reasonable time for preparation.[6]

A trial at such a time after the finding of the indictment, regard being had to the terms of court, as will afford the prosecution a reasonable opportunity, by the fair and honest exercise of reasonable diligence, to prepare for a trial.[7]

A trial for an offense under a city ordinance may not be such a public trial as is intended.[8]

State trial. In England, a prosecution conducted by the government; in particular, a public prosecution of more than ordinary importance.

See CALENDAR, 2; DEPOSITION; EVIDENCE; JURY; LIST; PEER; PUNISHED, Twice; RECORD, 2; SLANDER, 1; VENIRE.

TRIBE. Whether a class of Indians have ceased to hold the tribal relation is primarily a question for the political department of the government.[1] See INDIAN.

TRIBUNAL.[2] 1. A magistrate's seat; the place where justice is dispensed.

2. Any court, forum, or judicial body. See COURT; FORUM.

The tribunal before which matters pertaining to railroads are discussed, and by which they are decided, may, with propriety, be called a "court of justice;" not an ordinary court, but a special tribunal authorized to administer justice in a class of cases which experience proves cannot so satisfactorily be tried before the regular courts.[3]

Except as otherwise provided, the decisions of special tribunals are binding and conclusive adjudications upon all parties, like the judgment of a court of record; and this is true independently of any express statutory provision making them final. When a statute creates a special tribunal to determine a class of questions, it is a necessary implication that the determinations are intended to have force and validity, otherwise the proceeding would be useless.[4] See DETERMINE, 2; SEWER.

TRICYCLE. See BICYCLE.

TRIERS, or TRIORS. Persons whose office is to determine whether a juror, challenged for favor, is favorable or unfavorable.[5]

The office is abolished in nearly all of the States, the judge who presides at the trial of the cause being empowered to decide upon the fitness of jurymen.[6]

TRINODA. See NECESSITAS, Trinoda.

TRIPARTITE. See PART, 1.

TROOPS. Conveys the idea of an armed body of soldiers whose sole occupation is war or service, answering to the regular army.[7]

The organization of the active militia of a State bears no likeness to such a body. It is simply a do-

---

[1] Chandler v. Thompson, 30 F. R. 44 (1886), Dick, J.; Steph. Pl. 93.

[2] Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 250-56 (1879), cases.

[3] United States v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 17 (1858), cases.

[4] Cooley, Const. Lim. *383; 1 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 959; Grimmett v. State, 22 Tex. Ap. 41 (1886).

[5] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 265 (1887).

[6] [Exp. Stanley, 4 Nev. 116 (1868), Lewis, J.

[7] United States v. Fox, 3 Monta. 517 (1880), Wade, C. J. See also Exp. Jefferson, 62 Miss. 227 (1884).

[8] State v. Topeka, 36 Kan. 87-88 (1886), cases.

[1] United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 419 (1865).

[2] L. tribunal, platform for a magistrate, judgment-seat: tribunus, chief of a tribe: tribus, one of the three original families: tri-, three.

[3] Smith v. City of Waterbury, 54 Conn. 178 (1886).

[4] United States v. Leng, 18 F. R. 20 (1883), cases, Brown, J.; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. *729 (1832); Belcher v. Linn, 24 How. 522 (1860); 132 Mass. 43.

[5] [4 Bl. Com. 353.

[6] See Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 157 (1878); 5 Cal. 347; 23 Ga. 57; 43 Me. 11; 14 N. J. L. 195; 15 S. & R. 156.

[7] Dunne v. State, 94 Ill. 126 (1879), Scott, J.

mestic force, as distinguished from regular troops, to be called into service when the exigencies of the State make it necessary.[1] See MILITIA.

TROUBLE. See DAMAGES.

In a statute giving a land-owner damages for the "trouble and expense" he is put to by proceedings to lay out a street upon his land, the reference is to trouble from which material and pecuniary injury results, involving labor and the expenditure of time, or occasioning inconvenience. Mental trouble, so difficult to estimate by any pecuniary standard, and which may vary in different individuals, according to temperament or health, is not intended.[2]

TROVER.[3] Originally, an action of trespass upon the case for the recovery of damages against such person as had "found" another's goods and refused to deliver them on demand, but "converted" them to his own use.[4] Whence trover and conversion.

In form, a fiction; in substance, a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use.[5]

One who, being lawfully in possession, wrongfully parts with possession, to the injury of another, is liable in trover for a conversion.[6]

Trover is an action on the case. It may be joined with case, or new counts in case added to it by way of amendment.[7]

Conversion is based upon the idea of an assumption by the defendant of a right of property or a right of dominion over the thing converted, which casts upon him all the risks of an owner; it is therefore not every wrongful intermeddling with or wrongful asportation or wrongful detention of personal property that amounts to a conversion. Acts which themselves imply an assertion of title or a right of dominion, such as selling, letting, or destroying the property, amount to a conversion, although the defendant may honestly have mistaken his rights; but acts which do not in themselves imply such assertion or right of dominion will not sustain an action of trover, unless done with intent to deprive the owner of the property permanently or temporarily, or unless there has been a demand for it and neglect or refusal to deliver it, which are evidence of a conversion, because they are evidence that the defendant in withholding it claims the right to withhold it, which is a claim of a right of dominion. . . In actions in the nature of trover, the rule of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, diminished, when the property has been returned to and received by the owner, by its value at the time of return.[1]

The rule of damages is the value of the property, with interest from the date of conversion. But this rule may be modified by the relations to the property of the parties to the action. It may be practicable to adjust the rights in one action, indemnifying the plaintiff by a sum less than the full value, and avoiding circuity of action. Thus, where the plaintiff has a special property in the goods, his damages, as against the general owner, is the value of his interest only; but as against a stranger, he will be entitled to the full value of the goods, holding the surplus over his own claim as trustee for the general owner.[2]

See CONVERSION, 2; DEMAND, 2; DETINUE; WAIVER.

TROY WEIGHT. See COIN; WEIGHT, 1.

TRUE. 1. Conforming to the fact; actual; real. 2. Honest; sincere; not knowingly false or misstated. Compare JUST, 2.

In one sense that only is "true" which is conformable to the actual state of things; and in that sense a statement is "untrue" which does not express things exactly as they are. But in another and broader sense "true" is often used as a synonym of honest, sincere, not fraudulent.[3]

What a life insurance company requires of an applicant in making "fair and true answers" to questions put, as a condition precedent to a binding contract, is, that he shall observe the utmost good faith toward it, and make full, direct, and honest answers to all questions, without evasion or fraud, and without suppression, misrepresentation or concealment of facts with which the company ought to be made acquainted.[3]

Prima facie "untrue" means inaccurate, not necessarily willfully false.[4]

True bill. See IGNORE.

Truth. Actuality, reality, verity; veracity, veraciousness.

Compare FACT; FAITH; VERIFY; VERUM; VOIR; VOUCH. See EVIDENCE; LIBEL, 5; OATH; SLANDER; REPUTATION; VALUE.

TRUST. 1. Technically, an obligation arising out of a confidence reposed in a person, to whom the legal title to property is conveyed, that he will faithfully apply the [1] Dunne v. State, ante.

[2] Whitney v. City of Lynn, 122 Mass. 343 (1877).

[3] F. trover, to find.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 152.

[5] Cooper v. Chitty, 1 Burr. 31 (1756), Mansfield, J.

[6] Spencer v. Blackman, 9 Wend. 168 (1832), Savage, Chief Justice.

[7] M'Connell v. Leighton, 74 Me. 416 (1883), Appleton, Chief Justice.

[1] Spooner v. Manchester, 133 Mass. 272, 272 (1882), cases, Field, J.

[2] Jellett v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 30 Minn. 267 (1883), cases, Vanderburgh, J.; Forbes v. Fitchburg R. Co., 133 Mass. 158 (1882), cases.

[3] Moulor v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 345-46 (1884), Harlan, J.; Clapp v. Massachusetts Benefit Association, 146 Mass. 580 (1888); First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 673 (1877)

[4] Fowkes v. Manchester, &c. Life Assur. Association, 113 E. C. L. *929 (1863), Blackburn, J.

property according to the wishes of the creator of the trust.[1]

Where there are rights, titles, and interests in property distinct from the legal ownership.[2]

The legal title carries the absolute dominion. Behind it lie beneficial rights belonging to another. These are a charge upon the property, and constitute an equity which the courts will protect.[2]

No technical language is necessary to the creation of a trust. If it appears to be the intention of the parties to an instrument conveying property that it is to be held or dealt with for the benefit of another, a court of equity will affix to it the character of a trust, and impose corresponding duties upon the party receiving the title, if it be capable of lawful enforcement. In each case the intention is to be gathered from the general purpose and scope of the instrument.[3]

Trustee. A person holding the legal title to property, under an express or implied agreement to apply it, and the income arising from it, to the use and for the benefit of another person, who is called the cestui que trust.[4] Whence co-trustee. He who creates the trust is sometimes called the trustor.

The person who establishes the trust is called the "donor," "creator," or "founder."

The word "trustee" of itself means trustee for some one whose name is not disclosed.[5]

In one sense a mere bailee or agent is a trustee, because he has property delivered to him in the confidence that he will do with it according as he is directed by the bailor. It may even be required, by statute, that the title to the property be conveyed to the trustee. . . Conveying property to another in confidence that he will sell it and apply the avails in a particular way, not for his own use, undoubtedly creates a trust.[6]

A trustee is not an agent. An agent represents and acts for his principal. "A trustee is a person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property is vested for the benefit of another." When an agent contracts in the name of his principal, the principal contracts and is bound. As a trustee holds the estate, although only with the power and for the purpose of managing it, he is personally bound by the contracts he makes as trustee, even when designating himself as such. When he acts in good faith for the benefit of the trust he is entitled to indemnify himself for his engagements out of the estate in his hands. If he wants to protect himself from individual liability on a contract he must stipulate that he is not to be personally responsible.[1]

Trustee ex maleficio. One who by wrongful or illegal conduct becomes or is held to be a trustee.

Such is a transferee under a fraudulent conveyance, and a bailee who misapplies moneys intrusted to him.[2] See Constructive Trust; TORT, 1.

Trustee process. In New England, a proceeding in attachment similar to garnishment, q. v.

Cestui que trust. He for whom a trust is created or exists: the owner of the equitable estate where a legal estate is vested in a trustee.

One who has a right to a beneficial interest in and out of an estate, the legal title to which is vested in another as trustee.[3]

"A barbarous Norman-law French phrase, ungainly and ill-adapted to the English idiom. 'Beneficiary' is a more appropriate term."[4]

He is an equitable owner, and, if his right of possession is not postponed, he is entitled to the usufruct or rents and profits of the trust estate.[3]

He may charge the interest vested in him in any manner not inconsistent with the purposes of the trust.[5]

The word "trust" is frequently italicized, as if part of the Norman French expression. Another spelling of cestui is cestuy; and cestuique is met with. The plurals are cestuis que trust, cestuis que trustent and trustents, cestuis que trusts and trustents.[6] The first form has the weight of usage and authority. See CESTUI; also ADDENDA, p. 1129.

Active trust. When the trustee is not merely a passive depositary of the estate, but is required to take active measures to carry into effect the general intention of the creator of the trust; as, a trust by which an executor is to sell property and apply the proceeds as directed. Also called a special trust. Passive trust. Requires nothing

[1] [Beers v. Lyon, 21 Conn. *613-14 (1852), Hinman, J.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. § 964: Taylor v. Taylor, 74 Me. 585 (1883). See generally 4 Kent, 301-13; 2 Washb. R. P. 157-215; 3 Pomeroy, Eq. Index; Stimson, Am. St. Law, 233-50.

[3] Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 310 (1888); Creswell v. Jones, 68 Ala. 423 (1880). As to trusts in personalty, see Thomas v. Merry, Sup. Ct. Ind. (1888), cases: 27 Cent. Law J. 501-2 (1888), cases.

[4] 1 Story, Contr. § 373.

[5] Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 389 (1868).

[6] Beers v. Lyon, ante.

[1] Taylor v. Davis, 110 U. S. 334-35 (1884), Woods, J. The definition of trustee is identical with that in Hill on Trustees, p. *41.

[2] See 71 Ala. 161; 80 Pa. 406; 74 id. 315; 71 id. 260; 70 id. 269; 67 id. 52; 66 id. 241; 64 id. 443; 63 id. 122; 60 id. 308; 55 id. 374; 51 id. 384.

[3] Gindrat v. Montgomery Gas-Light Co., 82 Ala. 601 (1886), Somerville, J. See definition, Smith v. Anderson, L. R. 15 C. D. 275 (1880).

[4] 1 Story, Eq., 12 ed. § 321, note.

[5] Weaver v. Van Akin, Sup. Ct. Mich. (1888): 27 Cent. Law J. 359, cases.

[6] See 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1207, 1196 b; Adam's Eq. 107; 13 R. I. 407, 500.

to be done by the trustee beyond transferring property to the beneficiary; in this respect corresponding to the ancient "use." Also called a barren, dry, naked, or simple trust.[1]

Where an active duty is imposed upon the trustee, the trust is not executed under the Statute of Uses until the duty is performed. If, however, the trust be purely passive, it will be executed at once under that statute.[2]

Passive trusts have been abolished in some of the States.

Constructive trust. (1) Such trust as is imposed by construction of law, from reasons of equity and justice, and independently of the intentions of the parties: as, a vendor's or vendee's lien (q. v.) for purchase-money unpaid or prematurely paid; the renewal of a lease by a trustee in his own name; and, perhaps, a permanent improvement unavoidably made to an estate by the legal possessor.

(2) A trust which arises from actual or legal fraud; as, where a person occupying a fiduciary relation gains an advantage to himself personally.[3] Also called a trust ex maleficio.

Sometimes interchanged with "implied trust," q. v.

Directory trust. When the trust fund is directed to be invested in a particular manner till the period arrives at which it is to be appropriated.[4]

Executory trust. Requires something to be done toward complete creation. . . A trust which is to be perfected at a future time — as, by a conveyance "to B in trust to convey to C." Executed trust. Requires nothing to be done toward complete creation. . . It is when the legal estate passes, as, in a conveyance to B in trust, or for the use of C; or when only the equitable estate passes, as, in a conveyance to B to the use of C in trust for D: in which the trust is executed in D, though he has not the legal estate.[5]

All trusts are in a sense executory, because a trust cannot be executed except by conveyance, and, therefore, there is always something to be done. But in equity an "executory" trust occurs where the author of the trust has left it to be made out from general expressions what his intention is; and an "executed" trust is where there is nothing to be done but to take the limitations given and convert them into a legal estate.[1]

A trust is "executed" when the limitations of the equitable interest are complete and final; in an "executory" trust, the limitations of the equitable estate are not intended to be complete and final, but merely to serve as instructions for perfecting the settlement at some future time.[2]

Executory trusts are modifiable in equity.[3]

Express trust. A trust created in express terms in the deed, will, or other writing.[4]

Implied trust. A trust raised or created by presumption or construction of law,— and either rests upon the presumed intention of the parties, or is independent of any express intention, and enforced upon the conscience by operation of law.[5]

"Express" trusts are raised and created by the act of the parties; "implied" trusts by act or construction of the law.[6]

Resulting trust. Arises by operation of law whenever a beneficial interest is not to go along with the legal title, as where a conveyance is taken in the name of one person and the consideration is advanced by another.

Is raised by law from the presumed intention of the parties and from the natural equity that he who furnishes the means for the acquisition of property shall enjoy its benefits. It does not obtain where an obligation, legal or moral, exists to provide for the grantee, as husband for wife, or parent for child; for in such cases arises the contrary presumption of an advancement for the grantee's benefit.[7]

[1] See Kay v. Scates, 37 Pa. 31 (1860), Strong, J.; Bacon's Appeal, 57 id. 504 (1868); Barnett's Appeal, 46 id. 392, 398 (1864); Rife v. Geyer, 59 id. 393 (1868); Goodrich v. City of Milwaukee, 24 Wis. 429 (1869).

[2] Sprague v. Sprague, 13 R. I. 703 (1882), cases, Durfee, C. J.; Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. 168 (1866); 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 153; 2 id. §§ 988, 992.

[3] Burks v. Burks, 7 Baxt. 356 (1874): Perry, Trusts, 827; 39 Ark. 313; 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. (Hare), 62; Bisph. Eq. § 91; 1 Pom. Eq. § 155; 2 id. § 1044.

[4] Deaderick v. Cantrell, 10 Yerg. 272 (1837).

[5] [4 Kent, 304-5; 33 Miss. 739.]

[1] Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. 210 (1853), Ld. St. Leonards.

[2] Lewin, Trusts, 4: Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. 177 (1847), Gibson, C. J.

[3] 1 Story, Eq. § 64. See 2 Pom. Eq. § 1000.

[4] [1 Story, Eq. § 64.

[5] [2 Story, Eq. § 1195; Walden v. Skinner, 101 U. S. 577 (1879); 41 N. Y. 58; 6 Col. 439.

[6] Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. *591 (1676), Worth, C. J.; 1 Pom. Eq. § 155; 2 id. § 1030.

[7] Jackson v. Jackson, 91 U. S. 125 (1875), cases, Field, J.; Chapman v. County of Douglass, 107 id. 357 (1882); 71 Ala. 40; 25 Iowa, 45; 46 Md. 569; 19 S. C. 196, 135; 76

There must be an actual payment of the purchase-money or a liability incurred for it, on the part of the cestui que trust; made or incurred as part of the original transaction of purchase, and not pursuant to a subsequent arrangement. Parol evidence, which may be offered to overcome the presumption in favor of the legal owner, must be clear, full, and satisfactory.[1]

If an agent purchases land with his principal's money and takes a deed in his own name, a resulting trust exists in favor of the principal.[2]

No such trust is raised by a subsequent payment of purchase money.[3]

To establish this trust in favor of a wife as against her husband's creditors, the proof that she advanced the purchase-money must be clear.[4]

Parol evidence adduced to raise a resulting trust may be rebutted by parol.[5]

Secret trust. The retention of possession of personalty as if still his own by the vendor affords an example of a secret trust.

May render the sale fraudulent and void as to creditors, whether the trust be express or implied.[6]

Voluntary trust. A trust in favor of a volunteer: one as to whom the trust is a pure gift. Trust for value. A trust in favor of a vendee or other claimant who has parted with an equivalent in value.

The founder of a trust may secure the benefit of it to the object of his bounty by providing that the income shall not be alienable by anticipation nor subject to be taken for his debts; but otherwise, in England.[7]

A "voluntary" trust is an obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in and voluntarily accepted by one for the benefit of another; an "involuntary" trust is created by operation of law.[8]

Va. 527; Perry, Trusts, § 143; 2 Story, Eq. § 1201; 1 Pom. Eq. § 155; 2 id. § 1031.

[1] Harvey v. Pennypacker, 4 Del. Ch. 459–60 (1872), cases, Bates, Ch.

[2] Bratton v. Mitchell, 3 Pa. 44 (1846); Eshleman v. Lewis, 49 id. 410 (1865).

[3] Barnet v. Dougherty, 32 Pa. 371 (1859); Nixon's Appeal, 63 id. 279 (1869). See generally 1 Harv. Law Rev. 185–90 (1887), cases.

[4] Klin's Appeal, 39 Pa. 463 (1861); O'Hara v. Dilworth, 72 id. 379 (1872); 82 id. 57.

[5] Hays v. Quay, 68 Pa. 272 (1871); Donaghe v. Tams, 61 Va. 141–43 (1885), cases.

[6] Plaisted v. Holmes, 58 N. H. 294 (1878).

[7] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 721–29 (1875), cases; Hyde v. Woods, 94 id. 526 (1876); Spindle v. Shreve, 111 id. 547 (1884), cases; Pope v. Elliott, 8 B. Mon. 56 (1847); Sparhawk v. Cloon, 125 Mass. 266–67 (1878), cases; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 id. 170–74 (1882), cases; ib. 177; Holdship v. Patterson, 7 Watts, 547 (1838); Bell v. Watkins, 82 Ala. 517 (1886), cases; 47 Pa. 118; 59 id. 398; 100 id. 151, 254; White v. White, 30 Vt. 338 (1857). Contra, 18 Ves. 429; 9 Hare, 475; 2 Beav. 63; 37 Ala. 327; 42 Mo. 45; 4 Ired. Eq. 131; 5 R. I. 205; Perry, Trusts, § 386 a, cases.

[8] California Code, 7215–17; Dakota Civ. Code, 1288–90.

Trust deed. An instrument creating an active trust. In a few States, the equivalent of a mortgage.

Deed of trust. An assignment of property to a trustee for the purpose therein declared.

Usually made by a debtor in failing circumstances to secure all his creditors equally or to give some a preference over others, when it is not prudent to make immediate sale of his property. The debtor nearly always remains in possession until the trustee is bound to make sale for the purposes of administering the trusts. Registration of the deed is equivalent to the delivery of possession to the trustee. The deed is in the nature of a mortgage,[1] q. v.

Prior to the Statute of Uses, uses existed as confidences which a court of chancery would enforce, and were thus the earliest form of trusts. That statute transferred the use into possession, and made the cestui que use owner of the legal and equitable estate. Thereupon, equitable jurisdiction over these early uses (now legal estates) ceased, or became unnecessary. But the decision rendered in Tyrrell's Case, in 1557, by which a use upon a use was refused recognition, revived and even increased the former jurisdiction over trusts.[2] See further USE, 3, Statute of.

The Statute of Frauds require declarations or creation of trusts in lands to be proven by some writing signed by the creator; and so as to grants or assignments. It is sufficient if the terms can be ascertained from the writing; a letter in acknowledgment is ample. See FRAUDS, Statute of.

The trusts intended by courts of equity as not being affected by the Statute of Limitations are those technical trusts which are not cognizable at law, but fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of equity courts.[3]

A voluntary or express trust cannot be imposed on any one unless he agrees to accept, or by clear implication assumes the duties and liabilities; but acceptance in the case of an implied, resulting, or constructive trust is not necessary.[4]

The nature and duration of a trust estate are governed by the requirements of the trust itself. If that requires a fee-simple in the trustee, it will be created, though the language be not apt. If the language conveys to the trustee and his heirs forever, while the trust requires a more limited estate, in quantity or duration, the latter only will vest.[5]

A trust will not be allowed to fail for want of a trustee; a court of equity will supply a trustee.[6]

Where a conveyance is made to a trustee, and the object of the conveyance fails, the trust cannot be

[1] Means v. Montgomery, 23 F. R. 421, 424 (1885), Dick, Dist. J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 336.

[3] Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch. *111 (1823), Kent, Ch.; 4 Kent, 305; 2 Story, Eq. § 972; Speidell v. Henrici, 15 F. R. 753 (1883), cases; ib. 758–63, cases.

[4] Taylor v. Holmes, 14 F. R. 509 (1882).

[5] Young v. Bradley, 101 U. S. 787–88 (1879), cases.

[6] Kain v. Gibboney, 101 U. S. 365 (1879); Irvine v. Dunham, 111 id. 334 (1884), cases; Tucker v. Grundy, 88 Ky. 543 (1886).

executed, and the trustee must re-convey. Where a conveyance would not involve a breach of duty or a wrong, a presumption arises that the trustee conveyed, this being his duty.[1]

Co-trustees are responsible only for their individual acts, unless they have agreed to be bound for each other, or, by co-operation or connivance, have enabled one or more to do an act in violation of the trust. This, too, although they have equal power, and cannot act separately, as executors may, but must join, both in conveyance and receipt. But the rule has been varied where one trustee has assisted another to do a thing, as, to receive money. The rule seems to regard the ability of one to interpose and hinder the other from pursuing the course which resulted in loss. But trustees of a public trust may act by the majority.[2] See JOINT.

Where trustees are in existence and capable of acting, the court will not interfere to control them in the exercise of a discretion vested in them by the instituting instrument.[3]

A trustee may be invested with such powers that his beneficiaries are bound by what is done against or by him. Then, he is in court in their behalf, and they are not necessary parties. But fraud between him and the adverse party may impeach the decree; as, in the case of the trustee of a railway mortgage holding for the benefit of bondholders.[4]

In a suit brought against a trustee by a stranger, for the purpose of defeating the trust altogether, the beneficiaries are not necessary parties, if the trustee has such powers, or is under such obligations, with respect to the execution of the trust, that "those for whom he holds will be bound by what is done against him, as well as by what is done by him." In such cases the beneficiaries will be bound by the judgment, "unless it is impeached for fraud or collusion between him and the adverse party."[5]

The property of a corporation is held in trust for the payment of the debts of the corporation, until it has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Distributed among the stockholders, they hold subject to the trust in favor of creditors. Hence, application to an illegal purpose will be restrained, and restitution compelled.[6]

It is for the beneficiary alone to complain of the non-execution of a trust.[7]

Ordinary prudence is required of one dealing with trust property.[1]

A trustee must prevent the property under his care from being wasted or injured. His first duty is to place the property in a state of security.[2]

Since the characters of vendor and purchaser impose different obligations, they cannot be held by the same person. Their union in the same person would raise a conflict between interest and duty, and, constituted as humanity is, in the majority of cases, duty would be overborne.[3] While there may be cases where an unratified sale, or other contract by a person occupying a fiduciary relation, would be void ab initio, the general doctrine is, not that such contracts are absolutely void, but that they are voidable at the election of the party whose interest has been so represented, he exercising his option to avoid within a reasonable time. What is such time is to be decided upon the circumstances of each case.[4]

The acts of trustees when personally interested should be open and fair. Slight circumstances will sometimes be considered sufficient proof of wrong to justify setting aside what has been done; but when everything is honestly done, and the courts are satisfied that the rights of others have not been prejudiced to the advantage of the trustee, the simple fact of interest is not sufficient to justify withholding confirmation of his acts.[5]

The rule is everywhere recognized that a trustee, when investing property in his hands, is bound to act honestly and faithfully, and to exercise sound discretion, such as men of ordinary prudence and intelligence use in their own affairs. In some jurisdictions, no attempt has been made to establish a more definite rule; in others, the discretion has been confined, by the legislature or the courts, within strict limits.[6]

Property once charged with a valid trust will be followed in equity into whosesoever hands it comes, and the holder charged with the execution of the trust, unless he is a purchaser for value without notice.[7] The law exacts the utmost good faith from all parties dealing with a trustee respecting the trust property.

---

[1] French v. Edwards, 21 Wall. 149–51 (1874), cases.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1280–84 c; 14 Am. Law Rev. 36–56 (1880), cases; 15 id. 159–85 (1881), cases; 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 858, 865; Bisph. Eq. § 146.

[3] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 724–25 (1875), cases.

[4] Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 160 (1876), cases; Shaw v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 100 id. 611 (1879); Richter v. Jerome, 123 id. 233 (1887), cases.

[5] Vetterlein v. Barnes, 124 U. S. 172 (1888), cases, quoting Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 id. 160 (1876).

[6] Chicago, &c. Co. v. Howard, 7 Wall. 409–10 (1868), cases; 2 Story, Eq. § 1252, cases; Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 269 (1876).

[7] Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co., 100 U. S. 58 (1879); Perry, § 834.

[1] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 68–69 (1869), cases; ib. 548; Eyster's Appeal, 16 Pa. 372 (1851).

[2] Tyler v. Campbell, 106 U. S. 325–26 (1882), cases.

[3] Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. 183 (1874); Wardell v. Union Pacific R. Co., 103 U. S. 658 (1880), cases.

[4] Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 588–89, 592 (1875), cases.

[5] Shaw v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 100 U. S. 613 (1879), Waite, C. J. Shaw was trustee of a railroad mortgage. See also Allen v. Gillette, 127 id. 596 (1888), cases.

[6] Lamar (guardian) v. Micou, 112 U. S. 465–70 (1884), cases, Gray, J. See also as to attorneys, Stockton v. Ford, 11 How. 247 (1850); as to bank directors, First Nat. Bank of Ft. Scott v. Drake, 29 Kan. 319–21 (1883), cases; as to executors, Bowen v. Richardson, 133 Mass. 296 (1882), cases; Carson v. Marshall, 37 N. J. E. 213 (1883), cases; Baugh v. Walker, 77 Va. 104–5 (1883), cases; as to guardians, Downs v. Rickards, 4 Del. Ch. 430 (1872), cases; Dodge v. Stevens, 94 N. Y. 215 (1883).

[7] Stone v. Bishop, 4 Cliff. 596 (1878).

Property acquired from him with knowledge of his trust and of his disregard of its obligations, can be followed and recovered.[1] As long as trust property can be traced, the property into which it has been converted remains subject to the trust; and if a man mixes trust funds with his own, the whole will be treated as trust property, except so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his.[2] See IDENTITY, 2.

The estate of a trustee is commensurate with the purposes of the trust, and ceases when there are no further duties to be performed.[3]

Where the acts or omissions of a trustee show a want of reasonable fidelity, a court will remove him. Thus, where he neglects to invest money, he may be removed as for a breach of trust.[4]

See BREACH; CHARITY, 2; CREDIT; DECLARATION, 1; DELEGATUS, Potestas; DESCRIPTIO, Persona; DEVISE, Executory; DIRECTOR; DISCRETION, 2; EQUITY; FIDES; FIDUCIARY; GOVERNMENT; LIEN, Equitable; MINISTERIAL; POWER, 2; RESCISSION; SETTLE, 3; SHELLEY'S CASE; STOCK, 3; TITLE, 1, Equitable.

2. In its modern, non-technical sense: a combination of interests in property, usually of a personal nature, with the power of directing the use, or of controlling the disposal, intrusted to a few men for the benefit of all persons concerned.

Or, more at length, the word describes an arrangement between the holders of the majority of the stock of associations incorporated for similar business purposes, by which those holders transfer the power to vote their stock to a selected committee whose policy will be not only to elect but to so animate each board of directors that the action of all the boards will be identical without a contract therefor. The boards may even be chosen from the members of the committee, each member for this purpose being made the owner of one or more shares of stock in all of the corporations.

Among the objects sought are: lessening competition; regulating supply or production; lowering the cost of material; reducing expenses; advancing prices or rendering them steady; increasing dividends; and enhancing the value of the shares of stock. The effects may be: monopolization, by centralizing power in a few persons; evasion of laws regulating corporations; and, perhaps, even criminal interference with the law of supply and demand.

While, in their organization, "trusts" may vary with the nature of the property involved, the objects in view, and the readiness to confide the use or control of capital, products, or good-will, or their representatives, to agents, the general kinds, as already intimated, are: (1) That in which the use of the stock of similar corporations is given to a few men or to one dominant corporation. (2) That in which the possession of tangible property of any species is committed to others for management or disposal.

The first species has been called a "corporate trust;" the second, which is the simplest in form, as well as the most common, may be called a "commercial trust;" and either may be termed a "proxy trust."

In order to participate in these schemes, private concerns have been re-organized as associations whose capital was represented by issues of stock; some establishments (manufacturing) have been closed, and others consolidated; or all have been leased or conveyed to the committee for the purposes of a common control; or, perhaps, one establishment, centrally located, has been delegated to receive and to sell the products of the confederated establishments. In other cases the plan has been for the owners of the establishments to convey them to the committee, and each receive, for protection, a mortgage upon his property, and certificates for the value of the good-will.

The right to use (by voting or otherwise) another's shares of stock represents the "legal" interest in them. This right may be parted with by an absolute transfer, a "declaration of trust" being executed at the same time, or by means of a simple power of attorney or proxy. The "beneficial" or "equitable" interest in the shares is retained by their original owner, who receives, in place thereof, one or more "trust certificates" for his share in the combined interests,—the trustees having received from the respective corporations new stock-certificates in their own names, and appearing upon the corporate books as the absolute owners of the stock. The committee are not supposed to represent any one corporate body; in effect, all they need do is to determine the personnel of the boards of directors and to infuse into the minds of the members a common purpose. By securing control of the voting power of one share more than one-half of all of the shares of stock in each corporation, these ends may be accomplished, it is claimed, without any corporation, as such, knowing anything about the object in view, much less without its participating in any scheme on foot to shape or to control its action. The stockholders of a corporation do not constitute the legal entity known as the corporation.

The principle upon which modern "trusts" are

[1] Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 327-28 (1879), cases.

[2] Central Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 67-70 (1881), cases; Moore v. Stinson, 144 Mass. 506 (1887); Fletcher v. Sharpe, 108 Ind. 279 (1886), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 74-82 (1887), cases.

[3] Koenig's Appeal, 57 Pa. 352 (1868); Williams's Appeal, 83 id. 377 (1877); 75 id. 354; 80 id. 337.

[4] Cavender v. Cavender, 114 U. S. 472, 473 (1885), cases.

organized would seem to have been applied in England nearly half a century ago in "cost-book companies," formed for carrying on mining operations.[1] More recently, a plan, very similar, has been employed in that country for receiving and investing subscribed funds in the securities of different incorporated companies, upon the principle of "average gain and loss" — a loss of funds upon one investment being made up by profits derived from other investments.[2]

What is called a "car trust," which is of American extension, if not of American origin, consists in an agreement between the owners of freight cars, chiefly, but perhaps of other rolling stock for railroads, by which such property is placed in the hands of a trustee, possibly a corporation, for the purpose of effecting leases or sales upon the installment plan, the trustee, in cases, issuing certificates for interests in the deferred payments or rentals.[3]

The word "trust," in the sense under consideration, is said to be applicable to the plan upon which the Standard Oil Company was originally organized, and is at present conducted; that, in point of fact, all modern "trust" combinations find in it their prototype.

The following general propositions are deducible, it is believed, from the decisions hereto cited:

1. Mutuality of agreement to become a party to a "trust" arrangement may not of itself serve as a sufficient consideration to make the agreement binding.

2. One who has executed a power of attorney for voting his stock may revoke it at any time, and he may have an injunction to prevent voting it.

3. The combination to transfer the voting power, that is to execute proxies, is not necessarily illegal.

4. A dissenting party can have relief against the combination when its object is illegal.

5. Where the engagement has been to do an illegal act, a withdrawing party cannot be made to pay damages as for breach of a contract.

6. Any agreement in general restraint of alienation is not enforcible.[4]

In the absence of decisions determining more directly the nature and powers of these organizations, the following more general observations are submitted:

A "trust" seems to be like an ordinary partnership — persons endeavoring, through managers, to accomplish a common purpose.

Any species of property which can be assigned at law may be transferred to another person to be held in trust.[1]

A share of stock, which is a chose in action, is personalty. The New York law defining express trusts is limited to realty; this is also probably true of the statutes of California, Connecticut, Dakota, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Wisconsin, and other States, specifying the objects for which legal trusts may be created.

The creation of monopolies is not only not encouraged in any State, but expressly forbidden in Arkansas, Maryland, New Mexico, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas.

Perpetuities also are forbidden in all the States; and restraints upon the alienation of property are held to be against public policy, as are also agreements tending toward restraint upon trade, especially in the necessaries of life.[2]

The minority stockholders in a corporation are bound by the action of the majority as to all matters of legitimate business.[3]

If its charter, or general law, does not permit a corporation to enter into a "trust" combination, becoming a party to one would doubtless result in the forfeiture of its franchises, and perhaps incur other penalties.

The power to manage a corporation by its stockholders cannot be transferred to a body other than its own board of directors; nor can it be bound by an executory contract providing for an exercise of any of its powers against the intereste of its stockholders. Any secret arrangement by which it is practically merged into other corporations would be illegal.[4]

---

[1] See Kittow v. Liskwood Union, L. R., 10 Q. B. 9 (1874).

[2] See Sykes v. Beadon, L. R., 11 C. D. 170 (1879) — a "Government Securities Trust," investing in Colonial and other obligations; Smith v. Anderson, 15 id. 247 (1880) — a "Submarine Cables' Trust;" Wigfield v. Potter, 45 L. T. 612 (1882) — a real estate trust or pool; Crowther v. Thorley, 32 W. R. 330 (1884); Re Siddall, L. R., 29 C. D. 1 (1885). The question in each of these cases did not involve the legality of the "trust," as such, but whether the company was included within the meaning of the Companies Act of 1862, providing that an association consisting of more than twenty persons, carrying on business for gain, should be registered.

[3] See Ricker v. American Loan & Trust Co., 140 Mass. 347 (1885).

[4] Hafer v. New York, Lake Erie & Western R. Co., Cincinnati Sup. Ct., 14 Cin. Law Bul. 68 (1886); Griffith v. Jewett (Cin., Ham. & Dayt. R. Co.), 15 id. 419 (1886); Woodruff v. Dubuque & Sioux City R. Co., 30 F. R. 91 (Feb. 1887); Louisiana v. American Cotton Oil Trust, 1 Ry. & Corp. Law J. 509 (May, 1887); Vanderbilt v. Bennett, C. P. 1, Allegheny Co., Pa., 2 id. 409 (Oct. 1888): affirmed, Sup. Ct. Pa.; Moses v. Scott et al., 84 Ala. 608, 611 (Dec. 1887); Moses v. Tompkins, ib. 613 (1887); Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. R. 868 (Oct. 1886) — upon an agreement to control parallel and competing lines of railroad, indirectly, through the agency of a third road; Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun, 641 (1885) — upon an agreement neither to sell nor to vote stock without the consent of all parties; Noel v. Drake, 28 Kan. 265 (1882) — upon an agreement (against public policy) to make one cashier of a bank.

[1] See Perry, Trusts, 3 ed. § 67; Lewin, Trusts, &c. *45; Hill, Trustees, *44.

[2] See India Bagging Association v. Kock, 14 La. An. 168 (1859); Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173 (1871); Croft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346 (1875) — concerning a grain pool; Arnot v. Pittston & Elmira Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 558 (1877); Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666 (1880).

[3] See Ervin v. Oregon Railway & Navigation Co., 27 F. R. 625, 630 (1886), cases.

[4] See generally 19 Abb New Cases, 450 (1888), note by Austin Abbott; Monograph on "Trusts," by W. W.

An eminent authority, in discussing the "legality of trusts," writes substantially as follows: The word "trust" is not descriptive of the subject, but it is difficult to find a substitute. Strictly, the trust itself is a mere instrument — the means to an end. The determinative inquiry is whether the end sought is lawful at common law, whether the agreement be by individuals acting, or not acting, as stockholders. The object of each stockholder in making the committee the apparent stockholders and in conferring upon them the power of control, is his own ultimate benefit — which is not unlawful. No law prevents each stockholder from selecting the same trustee or trustees. The "trust deed" declares the trust — a legal contrivance in daily use between individuals. It is the purpose, if anything, that gives the combination the stamp of illegality. The stockholders of a corporation do not own its property; they have but an "equitable" title to it; on the other hand, the rights of the corporation are "legal" rights. Owning stock confers a right to vote for managers or directors, to receive dividends, and to hold the directors, that is the corporation, to an account for their management.

The unincorporated association through the instrumentality of which the objects of a "trust" are sought to be attained constitutes a partnership — something is undertaken by several persons for gain; the consideration is the mutual promises. Its validity depends wholly upon the lawfulness of the ends in view.[1]

Parties may agree to prevent competition between themselves, unless the agreement is unlawful in its own nature. At common law it is not wrong to raise prices so as to pay the costs of production and a reasonable profit, nor to regulate them in order to keep them steady; nor is such an agreement a conspiracy "to commit an act injurious to trade or commerce" (N. Y. Penal Code, sec. 168), since it is not "injurious" to keep production on an even line with consumption.[2]

The same writer's conclusions are: (1) At common law forestalling, regrating, and engrossing were not criminal unless they concerned the necessaries of life. The sounder opinion seems to be that they were made crimes by statute 5 and 6 Edw. VI (1552), c. 14, which was repealed by 12 Geo. III (1772), c. 71, and by 7 and 8 Vict. (1844), c. 24. (2) If forestalling was criminal it was only where there was proven a criminal intent to injure trade. Where the purpose was laudable, as, when to keep prices steady, no such intent could be inferred. (3) It is not a nuisance by that law for persons to form an association, issue transferable certificates, and appoint a committee to make rules for governing the association. (4) The old rule that a contract in general restraint of trade is void as between the parties was originally based upon erroneous views of political economy. It has practically disappeared in England and New York, and is likely to be modified elsewhere.[1] (5) If a "trust" is lawful as a reasonable element in production it cannot be made unlawful by legislation of a stigmatizing character. To produce freely as individuals, to act in concert with others, to stimulate production when there is a scarcity of commodities, to regulate and restrain it when there is a "glut" — are all prime elements in liberty[3] of trade; and they are also constitutional rights.[3]

See ALIENATIO; COMBINATION, 2; HAPPINESS; LEGAL, Illegal; LIBERTY, 1; MONOPOLY; PERPETUITY; STOCK, p. 977, c. 2; TRADE, p. 1043.

TRUTH. See TRUE.

TRY. See ATTEMPT; TRIAL.

TUG-BOAT. In the towing of vessels without motive power, is regarded as the dominant mind or will of the adventure.

The details of immediate navigation, with reference to approaching vessels, must be left to a great extent to those on board of her. And they must use at least reasonable and ordinary care toward the tows in their charge.[4]

Cook (N. Y. City, 1888); 1 Harv. Law Rev. 132-43 (Oct. 25, 1887), by F. J. Stimson; 27 Cent. Law J. 205 (Aug. 31, 1888); New York Times, Feb. 20, 1888; New York World, Feb. 21, 1888.

[1] See Bostwick v. Champion, 11 Wend. 571 (1834): s. c. on appeal, 18 id. 175 (1837); Merrick v. Gordon, 20 N. Y. 93 (1859); Burnett v. Snyder, 81 id. 555 (1880); Stroher v. Elting, 97 id. 102 (1884). Analogous to, and not at variance with, Merrick v. Gordon are, Wright v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 449 (1868); Snell v. De Land, 43 Ill. 323 (1867); Irvin v. Nashville, &c. R. Co., 92 id. 108 (1879).

[2] Compare Marsh v. Russell, 66 N. Y. 288, 291-92 (1876) — a contract between four partners to furnish recruits for certain towns at five hundred dollars per man, under an anticipated call for troops.

[1] See Rousillon v. Rousillon, L. R., 14 C. D. 351 (1880); Printing, &c. Co. v. Sampson, L. R., 19 Eq. C. 462 (1875); Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473 (1887). In Wickens v. Evans, 3 Y. & J. 318 (Exch. R., 1829), an agreement between manufacturers of trunks for a division of territory, and for non-interference, was upheld. In Collins v. Locke, L. R., 4 Ap. C. 674 (1879), an agreement to parcel out the stevedoring business of a port, and to prevent competition, at least among the contracting parties, was also held to be valid. In Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, L. R., 21 Q. B. D. 544 (1888), it was held that a number of associated owners of vessels could lawfully offer rebates to dealers in China who would ship teas to Europe by vessels controlled by the association, the object being, not to ruin the trade of rival ship-owners, but to confine the transportation of teas to vessels belonging to the association. In Central Shade-Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 364 (1877), the court sustained, as not in restraint of trade nor against public policy, a combination between the manufacturers of a patented article to maintain uniform prices. See generally, as to combinations designed to destroy competition, 20 Am. Law Rev. 195-216 (1886), cases.

[3] Compare People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 398-99 (1888), cases; Matter of Jacobs, 98 id. 106 (1885).

[3] 3 Political Science Quarterly, 592-632 (Dec. 1888), by Theodore W. Dwight. Ib. 611, is a copy of the "trust deed" of the Sugar Refineries Company, from the report of the Commission relative to Trusts in New York, made March 6, 1888. On the Economic and Social Aspects of Trusts, see 3 id. 3 (Sept. 1888).

[4] The Fannie Tuthill, 12 F. R. 448 (1882); The Civilta

Although a tug may not be a common carrier, liable as an insurer, nor required to use the highest degree of care and skill, she is bound to use reasonable care and skill, and to know the condition of the bottom and the depth of the water of the river she may be navigating.[1]

The rule that the tug is alone responsible for damages upon a collision between her tow and other vessels is applicable only when the tow is wholly under the control of the tug.[2]

The English authorities hold that a ship in tow of a tug is liable for injury to third persons though the direct fault may be that of the tug; the ship and her owners being treated as principals. In this country, under the law of principal and agent, the tug is held to be the sole principal, and the ship exempted, when her navigation is, by contract, exclusively in charge of the tug.[3] See TOW-BOAT; COLLISION, 2; VOYAGE.

TUITION. Is ordinarily restricted to the fee or fees paid for instruction, and not to charges made to meet incidental expenses.[4]

TUMULT. See BRAWL; PEACE, 1; RIOT; WAR.

TURNKEY. A jailer's assistant whose special duty is to open and close (lock) the door or doors of the prison. See ESCAPE, 1 (2).

TURNOUT. See RAILROAD.

TURNPIKE. Originally, a road having toll-gates or bars, called "turns" or "pikes," with which to obstruct passage until toll was paid.[5]

A "turnpike road" means a road having on it toll-gates or bars, originally called "turns." Such roads were first constructed about the middle of the last century. Individuals, with a view to the repair of particular roads, subscribed money and erected gates, taking tolls from those who passed through them. The distinctive mark still is the right of turning back any one who refuses to pay toll.[6]

A turnpike company is one which has the power to collect tolls from persons passing over the road, and to enforce the collection by erecting turnpikes or gates, or both, to obstruct the passage till tolls are paid.[6]

This definition is general, embracing various species of roads, whether the materials of which they are formed be stones, gravel, or plank, or the structure be flat or rounded.[6]

A turnpike road is a public highway, differing from a common highway only in being authorized by public authority and made at the expense of individuals, which expense is reimbursed by a toll.[1] See TOLL, 2; WAY.

TURPIS. See CAUSA, Ex turpi; TURPITUDE.

TURPITUDE. Doing a thing against good morals, honesty, or justice; unlawful conduct; infamy. Latin, turpitudo.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. One alleging his own infamy is not to be listened to. Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus. No one who avers his own infamy is to be heard. A person cannot escape fulfilling an obligation by alleging bad conduct on his part. The maxim states the rule applied to a party who seeks to enforce a right founded upon an illegal or criminal consideration.

Where there is turpitude, the law will help neither party.[2]

The meaning is that no one shall be heard in a court of justice to allege his own turpitude as a foundation of a right or claim; not, that a man shall not be heard who testifies to his own turpitude or criminality, however much his testimony may be discredited by his character. In Walton v. Shelley (1 T. R. 300), where an indorser was held not to be competent to prove that a note was void for usury in its inception, the maxim was plainly misapplied by Lord Mansfield. That was in 1786. In 1798, Lord Kenyon being chief justice, that case was overruled by Jordaine v. Lashbrooke (7 T. R. 601, 609), as to all instruments. The States are divided between the two cases. But the tendency is to disregard all objections to the competency of witnesses, and to allow their position and character to affect only their credibility. Where Walton v. Shelley is adopted, the rule is limited to negotiable instruments. A holder cannot invoke protection against an infirmity he has aided to create. But the rule is not applicable to a case between the original parties, where the paper had not been put into circulation and each party was cognizant of all the facts.[3]

There are many cases in which witnesses are admitted, though not compelled, to prove facts which show their turpitude; as, in the case of a particeps criminis, when credibility is for the jury. The maxim is more applicable to parties. See LEGAL, Illegal.[4] and The Restless, 103 U. S. 701-2 (1880); The Atlas, 93 U. S. 302 (1876); The Charles Allen, 11 F. R. 317 (1882).

[1] The Robert H. Burnett, 30 F. R. 215 (1887), cases.

[2] The City of Alexandria, 31 F. R. 427 (1887); Sturgis v. Boyer, 24 How. 121-23 (1860).

[3] The Doris Eckhoff, 32 F. R. 559 (1887), cases.

[4] State ex rel. Priest v. Regents of University of Wisconsin, 54 Wis. 159, 163 (1882).

[5] [Northam Bridge Co. v. London Ry. Co., 6 M. & W. 428 (1840), Abinger, C. B.

[6] Haight v. State, 32 N. J. L. 451 (1865), Haines, J.; State v. Haight, 30 id. 448 (1864).

[1] Commonwealth v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. 177 (1834), Shaw, C. J. See also Heyward v. New York, 8 Barb. 492 (1850).

[2] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 452 (1874).

[3] Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 425-27 (1875), Field, J.; 2 Best, Ev. §§ 545-46.

[4] Winton v. Saidler, 3 Johns. Cas. *189, 192 (1802), Kent, J.; Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. *180 (1819); Fox v. Whitney, 16 Mass. *121 (1819); Gould v. Gould, 3 Story, 541 (1844); 35 Pa. 527; 40 id. 156, 51 id. 376; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 383.

TUTOR; TUTRIX. In civil law, a person to whom is committed the care and custody of the person and estate of a minor.

Tutrix is the feminine form of the word. Lest the interests of ward and tutor become opposed, the court in Louisiana appoints an "under-tutor" to act for the ward.[1] See COMMITTEE; GUARDIAN.

TWELVE TABLES. The Roman plebs, in their struggle with the patricians for equality of rights, demanded that the laws of the state be reduced to written form, the patricians, it was claimed, administering the law to suit themselves. A commission of ten persons (decemviri) was appointed, 451 B. C., to draw up a code. In 450 the commission reported ten tables or chapters of laws, and added two more in 449. The object was to obtain an open and exact statement of the system already existing.

This code continued for many centuries as the fundamental law. The legislation of Justinian supplanted it in form. The original Tables were inscribed on plates of brass. Quotations are preserved in the extant works of ancient writers. Form and ceremony in actions were rigorously insisted upon.[2]

TWICE. See JEOPARDY.

TWYNE'S CASE. See POSSESSION, Fraudulent.

TYPE. See PLAIN.

Typewriter. See STENOGRAPHER; WRITING.

TYRRELL'S CASE. See TRUST, p. 1059.

U.

U. The initial letter of a few words sometimes abbreviated:

U. B. Upper bench.

U. C. Upper Canada — courts, reports.

U. S. Under sheriff; United States — courts, statutes, reports, etc.

UBERRIMA. See FIDES, Uberrima.

UBI. L. Where; when.

Ubi eadem ratio. See RATIO.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. See REMEDIUM.

UBIQUITY.[3] 1. Presence throughout a dominion or jurisdiction.

The king, politically, is the fountain of justice, the steward who dispenses justice to whom it is due. A consequence of this prerogative is his "legal ubiquity:" he is always present in his court by his judges, whose power is an emanation of his prerogative. On account of this ubiquity in his royal office he can never be nonsuit, and he is not said to appear by attorney.[1]

The United States, in their sovereign capacity, possess, in contemplation of law, an ubiquity throughout the Union.[2]

2. Universal validity or efficacy.

A valid judgment in rem is ubiquitous — binds all the world. . . Decrees as to personal status are not necessarily ubiquitous.[3] See RES.

ULLAGE. See LEAKAGE.

ULTIMA. L. The last, extremest; literally, the furthest off, remotest.

Ultima ratio. The final argument; the last resort.

Ultimus hæres. The remote heir: in feudal law, the lord.

Ultimatum. The last proposition a party will make — toward negotiating a contract or a treaty; also, the result of the negotiation as expressed in the final determination.

ULTIMATE. See ULTIMA.

In the expression "ultimate facts," is opposed to probative, evidential. And as the probative or evidential facts are such as serve to establish or disprove the issues, the issues are, therefore, the ultimate facts.[4]

ULTRA. L. Beyond, over, outside of.

Ultra reprises. Beyond drawbacks. See REPRISES.

Ultra vires. Beyond the power or powers. Sometimes termed extra vires. Intra vires. Within the power or powers. These phrases donate that an act, of contract or of tort, done on behalf of a corporation is, or is not, within the scope of the powers conferred upon it.

The phrase ultra vires, as used in the discussion of legal subjects, seems to be first found in Kames's Principles of Equity, published in 1776, where he inquires whether a court of equity can afford relief in a case where a deed is "void at common law, as ultra vires."[5]

The expression, which is a concise and convenient form by which to describe the unauthorized act of artificial persons with limited powers, is applicable to individual action.[6]

[1] See Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514 (1883); Sensenman's Appeal, 21 Pa. 336 (1853).

[2] Hadley, Rom. Law, 74-79; Maine, Anc. Law, 1, 14, 89; Gibbon, Rome, ch. 44.

[3] L. ubi-que, wherever, everywhere.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 266, 270; 3 id. 24.

[2] Vaughn v. Northup, 15 Pet. 6 (1841), Story, J.; 16 How. 105; 109 U. S. 657.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 814-18; 2 Sm. L. C. 662.

[4] Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 2 Utah, 379, 381 (1878); id. 375-76; Pio Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174 (1873).

[5] See 16 Am. Law Reg. 514 (1877); Green's Brice's Ultra Vires, Pref. v-vi.

[6] Nat. Pemberton Bank v. Porter, 125 Mass. 336 (1878).

An act is ultra vires when (1) it is not in the power of the corporation to perform it under any circumstances; when (2) the corporation cannot perform the act without the consent of certain persons; and when (3) the corporation cannot perform the act for some specific purpose.[1]

The act, in the first sense, is void in toto, and the corporation may avail itself of that plea. But whether the plea may be set up in other cases depends upon circumstances.[1]

When a contract is not on its face necessarily beyond the scope of the power of the corporation, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed to be valid. A corporation is presumed to contract within its powers. The doctrine of ultra vires should not be allowed to prevail where it would defeat the ends of justice or work a legal wrong.[2]

The House of Lords has decided that a contract not within the scope of the powers conferred on a corporation cannot be made valid by the assent of the shareholders, nor by a partial performance. This decision, which is based upon sound principle, represents the preponderance of authority in this country.[3]

Whatever, under the charter of a corporation and the general laws applicable to it, may fairly be regarded as incidental to the objects for which the corporation is created, is not to be taken as prohibited.[4]

The doctrine, as applying to the powers of railroad corporations, has not been construed, of late years, with the strictness that obtained in former times. . . Where a corporation has received the benefits of a contract, it may not now deny its validity.[5]

A corporation possesses only such lawful powers as are expressly conferred by its charter, and such as are clearly incidental or impliedly requisite for carrying out the declared objects of its creation. While some authorities hold that an act in excess of the powers so limited are illegal (any contract in excess thereof being non-enforceable), and that neither party is estopped from pleading the ultra vires of the transaction, in some States the corporation is estopped from alleging or taking advantage of its want of power. The latter doctrine seems to be gaining ground.[6]

A corporation is liable for every wrong it commits, and in such cases the doctrine of ultra vires has no application. It is also liable for the acts of a servant while engaged in the business of his principal.[1] See TORT, 2.

UMPIRE.[2] When arbitrators do not agree, it is usual to add that another person be called in as umpire (imperator or impar) to whose sole judgment the controversy is then referred.[3]

A person whom two arbitrators, appointed and duly authorized by the parties to a suit, select to decide the matter in controversy, concerning which the arbitrators are unable to agree.

His province is to determine the issue submitted to the arbitrators, and to make an award thereon. This award is his alone. He is in the situation of a sole arbitrator, and, unless it is otherwise agreed, is bound to hear and determine the case as if it had been originally submitted to his determination.[4] See ARBITRATION.

A testator may designate his executor as umpire to settle questions of doubt as to his intentions. And if such umpire exercises the power in good faith, his decisions will not be revised by a court, although they might be thought erroneous. But if he refuses to act, transcends his authority, makes an incomplete award, or commits any gross mistake or error of judgment evincing partiality, corruption, or prejudice, or violates a statute on which a dissatisfied party has a right to rely, a court of equity may interfere, correct the error, and restrain further abuse of the powers committed to the umpire.[5]

UN. A prefix, of Anglo-Saxon origin, equivalent to the Latin in and non, not. Compare DIS; IN, 3 (1); NON.

Negatives the meaning of the simple word.

UNA. See UNUS.

UNADEEMED. See ADEMPTION.

UNADJUSTED. See ADJUST.

UNADMINISTERED. See ADMINISTER, 4.

UNADMITTED. See ADMISSION, 2.

UNALIENABLE. See ALIEN, 2.

UNALTERED. See ALTERATION.

UNASSESSED. See ASSESS, 1.

[1] Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 578 (1869), Sawyer, C. J. Approved, McPherson v. Foster, 43 Iowa, 65 (1876).

[2] Ohio & Mississippi R. Co., v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 267 (1877), cases, Swayne, J.; Bissell v. Michigan Southern, &c. R. Cos., 22 N. Y. 263–80 (1860), cases; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 419 (1870), cases; Holmes v. City of Shreveport, 31 F. R. 119–21 (1887), cases.

[3] Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 83 (1879), cases.

[4] Green Bay, &c. R. Co. v. Union Steamboat Co., 107 U. S. 100 (1882), cases, Gray, J.

[5] Dimpfel v. Ohio & Mississippi R. Co., 9 Biss. 130 (1879).

[6] Denver Fire Ins. Co. v. McClelland, 9 Col. 18–31 (1885), cases.

[1] First Nat. Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 100 U. S. 702 (1879), cases. See also Cooley, Torts, 119–23, cases. See generally 16 Am. Law Reg. 513–26 (1877), cases; 13 Am. Law Rev. 632–62 (1879), cases.

[2] For numpire: F. nom-pair, a non-peer: L. impar, un-equal.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 16.

[4] Haven v. Winnisimmet Company, 11 Allen, 384 (1865), cases, Bigelow, C. J. Approved, Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 30 (1874).

[5] Board of Foreign Missions v. Ferry, 15 F. R. 709 (1883), cases.

UNAVOIDABLE. See ACCIDENT; CASUALTY.

UNBORN. See CHILD.

UNCERTAIN. See CERTAIN.

UNCERTIFIED. See CERTIFICATE.

UNCLAIMED. See CLAIM.

UNCLE. See CONSANGUINITY.

UNCOLLECTIBLE. See COLLECT.

UNCONDITIONAL, or UNCONDITIONED. See CONDITION.

UNCONSCIONABLE. See CONSCIENCE.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL. See CONSTITUTION.

UNCONTESTED. See CONTEST.

UNDE. See DOWER, Writ of.

UNDECIDED. See DECISION.

UNDENIED. See ADMISSION, 2; DEFENSE, 2.

UNDER. Lower than, beneath, below; subject to; subordinate: as, under a law or jurisdiction; under the law; under a judgment, mortgage, or other incumbrance; under sentence; under the hammer. Compare OVER, 1.

No right can be acquired "under a law" which is not in pursuance of, that is, subject to, the law.[1]

Under and subject. Used in relation to the mutual and dependent rights and duties of mortgagees, mortgagors, the grantees of mortgagors and the alienees of such grantees; also, of rights affected by ground-rents, and other incumbrances.

An agreement merely to take land subject to a specified incumbrance is not an agreement to assume and pay the incumbrance. The grantee of an equity of redemption, without words in the grant importing in some form that he assumes the payment of a mortgage, does not bind himself personally to pay the debt. To make him personally liable, there must be words importing that he will pay the debt.[2]

In Pennsylvania, a conveyance of land "under and subject" to a mortgage executed by the grantor creates a covenant of indemnity to the grantor on the part of the grantee. If the grantee aliens by a deed containing the same "under and subject" clause, without more, the alienee does not assume a liability to the mortgagee, or undertake to discharge the grantee's covenant of indemnity. The mortgagee may show, however, that the alienee has taken upon himself not only the grantor's duty to indemnify the mortgagor, but a personal obligation to pay the mortgage debt. The evidence may consist of stipulations in the deed, of written articles outside of its terms, or of a verbal contemporaneous agreement; and the undertaking may be implied from circumstances. . . It may be provided by statute that a grantee shall not be personally liable for an incumbrance unless, in some writing, he shall expressly have assumed personal liability; that the words "under and subject" alone shall not be construed to create it; and that such liability shall not be enforced by any person other than he with whom it was incurred, nor continue after the grantee has bona fide parted with the property, unless there is an express agreement for continuing the liability.[1]

UNDER AGE. See AGE.

UNDER-AGENT. See AGENT; DELEGATE.

UNDERBILLING. See COMMERCE, p. 201.

UNDER IMPROVEMENT. See IMPROVEMENT.

UNDERLET. See LEASE.

UNDER PROTEST. See PROTEST, 1.

UNDER-SHERIFF. See SHERIFF.

UNDERSTANDING. An ambiguous word, unless accompanied by an expression showing that it constitutes a meeting of minds as to something respecting which the parties intend to be bound. It may be used to express the expectation of confidence upon which parties frequently are willing to rely without their exacting a binding stipulation.[2]

"Understanding" and "agreement" are synonymous. An understanding is "anything mutually understood or agreed upon."[3]

"It is understood," in ordinary use, when adopted in a written contract, has the same force as "it is agreed."[4]

It falls short of alleging a distinct, express contract.[5]

Expresses a valid contract engagement of a somewhat informal character.[6] See ASSENT; PROMISE.

UNDERTAKE. To assume, engage; to agree, promise, obligate one's self. The technical word used in declaring upon an engagement or promise of any nature. See ASSUMPSIT; CARE; COVENANT.

UNDERTAKER. One who has charge of a funeral.

---

[1] Mills v. Stoddard, 8 How. 366 (1850).

[2] Elliott v. Sackett, 108 U. S. 140 (1883), Blatchford, J. See also Shepherd v. May, 115 id. 510 (1885); Fiske v. Tolman, 124 Mass. 256 (1878); Belmont v. Coman, 22 N. Y. 438 (1860); Hoy v. Bramhall, 19 N. J. E. 74 (1868); Fowler v. Fay, 62 Ill. 375 (1872).

[1] Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. 80 (1879), cases, Paxson, J.; Act 12 June, 1878, P. L. 235; 121 Pa. 139.

[2] [Camp v. Weed, 25 Conn. 529 (1857), Storrs, C. J.]

[3] Barkow v. Sanger, 47 Wis. 507-8 (1879), Taylor, J.

[4] Higginson v. Weld, 14 Gray, 170 (1859).

[5] Black v. City of Columbia, 19 S. C. 419 (1883).

[6] Winslow v. Dakota Lumber Co., 32 Minn. 286 (1884).

An undertaker's establishment, in which he keeps coffins, ice-boxes and cases for preserving bodies, and at the rear of which he cleanses and dries such boxes, is not necessarily a nuisance.[1]

UNDER-TENANT. See LEASE, Lessee, page 607.

UNDER-TUTOR. See TUTOR.

UNDERWRITER. When marine insurance was the only insurance known, a person soliciting a contract exhibited in writing, in a resort for merchants or insurers, the particulars of his application, or sent the application to an insurance-broker. A person who was willing to take the risk wrote underneath the application the sum, his name, residence, etc. Hence "underwrite" (and "underwriting") came to mean to accept proposed contracts for insurance, to carry on the business of insuring against loss by storm, shipwreck, fire, etc. See INSURANCE.

UNDISCLOSED. See ADMISSION, 2; AGENT; DISCOVERY.

UNDIVIDED. See DIVISION, 1.

UNDUE. See CONCEAL, 5; INFLUENCE.

UNEXECUTED. See EXECUTE.

UNEXEMPTED. See EXEMPTION.

UNFAIR. See CONSCIENCE; FRAUD; INFLUENCE.

UNIFORM. Conforming to one rule, mode, or unvarying standard; affecting persons and property alike; agreeing with each other; substantially one and the same. See PRESUMPTION.

The National and State constitutions provide that legislation on designated subjects shall be "uniform" in its operation.

Thus, "The Congress shall have Power . . To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies."[2]

Bankrupt laws are uniform when they allow bankrupts in each of the States the exemption which the laws of any particular State allow to debtors upon the levy of an execution, although this may leave bankrupts in some States more property than they can retain in others.[3]

That "all laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation" means that such laws shall bear equally, in their burdens and benefits, upon persons standing in the same category.[4]

Every law of a general nature must operate equally upon all persons brought within the relations and circumstances provided for.[1]

A law is uniform when all persons brought within the relation and circumstances provided for are affected alike, when it has a uniform operation upon all within the class upon which it purports to operate.[2]

Uniformity consists in the fact that no person or thing, of the description affected, is exempt from the operation of the law.[3]

All legislation, to a greater or less extent, consists in the creation of categories to which the provisions of a statute apply.[4]

Uniformity in taxing implies equality in the burden of taxation — uniformity in the mode of assessment, as well as in the rate of taxation. This uniformity must be co-extensive with the territory to which the law applies, and be extended to all property subject to taxation, so that all may be taxed alike and equally.[5]

Absolute uniformity may not be attainable in practice, but an approximation to it is possible, and any plain departure from the rule will defeat the tax. . . Taxes must be levied according to some fixed rate or rule of apportionment, so that all persons shall pay the like amount upon similar kinds of property of the same value.[6]

"All Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." A tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found.[7] See TAX, 2.

UNILATERAL. See BILATERAL.

UNIMPAIRED. See IMPAIR.

UNIMPEACHED. See IMPEACH.

UNINCORPORATED. See ASSOCIATION, 8.

UNINCUMBERED. See INCUMBRANCE.

UNION. See MERGER, 1; TRADES-UNION; UNITED STATES; UNITY.

UNITED STATES. In America, the political entity or entirety formed by the adoption of the Federal or National Constitution; also, the whole territory or country subject thereto. Used adjectively, that which emanates from, pertains or belongs to, the General or National government.

See further CONSTITUTION; COURTS; GOVERNMENT; REVISED STATUTES; STATE, 3 (2); TERRITORY, 2; — CITIZEN; COMITY; COMMERCE; CORPORATION, Public; FEDERAL; NATION; TORT, 2; WAR.

[1] Westcott v. Middleton, 43 N. J. E. 478 (1887).

[2] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 4.

[3] Re Smith, 2 Woods, 460 (1876); Re Deckert, 10 Bankr. Reg. 4 (1873); Re Shipman, 14 id. 570 (1876); Appold's Estate, 16 Am. Law Reg. 627 (1868).

[4] People v. Judge, 17 Cal. *554 (1861).

[1] McAunich v. Mississippi, &c. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 343 (1866); Kelley v. State, 6 Ohio St. 271 (1856).

[2] [Senior v. Ratterman, 44 Ohio St. 673 (1887).

[3] [Heck v. State, 44 Ohio St. 539 (1886).

[4] Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 573 (1886).

[5] Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 15 (1853), Bartley, C. J.

[6] Railroad Tax Case, 8 Saw. 252 (1882), Field, J.

[7] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 1; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 594 (1884), Miller, J.

UNITY. 1. The peculiar characteristic of an estate in joint tenancy is a four-fold unity — of interest, title, time, and possession. See TENANT.

2. At common law, a husband and wife were one person, and he that person.

Upon this principle of "unity of person" depended all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities that either party acquired by the marriage. Hence, the wife could neither sue nor be sued without joining the husband; and neither could convey directly to the other — a principle which does not now operate, at least in the case of a voluntary transfer as a settlement upon the wife.[1] See HUSBAND.

3. Assent to the same thing in the same sense. See AGREEMENT; ASSENT.

UNIVERSAL. See AGENT; ALL; GENERAL; PARTNERSHIP.

UNIVERSITY. See ABODE; COLLEGE, 3; LECTURES; SCHOOL; TAX, 2.

UNJUSTIFIABLE. See DEFENSE, 2; HOMICIDE.

UNKNOWN. See KNOWLEDGE, 1; CONTENTS, 1; INDICTMENT; OWNER.

UNLAWFUL. See LAWFUL.

UNLESS. See CONDITION; NISI.

UNLIQUIDATED. See LIQUIDATE; DAMAGES.—

UNMARKETABLE. See MARKET.

UNMARRIED. See MAN, 2; MARRIAGE.

UNMORTGAGED. See MORTGAGE.

UNO. See UNUS.

UNOCCUPIED. See OCCUPY.

UNOFFICIAL. See OFFICIAL; REPORT, 1 (2).

UNPAID. See ASSUMPSIT; PAYMENT.

UNREASONABLE. See CAUSE, Probable; REASON; SEARCH-WARRANT.

UNRECORDED. See RECORD, 1.

UNREDEEMED. See REDEEM.

UNREGISTERED. See REGISTER.

UNREPORTED. See REPORT, 1 (2).

UNSATISFIED. See SATISFY.

UNSEATED. See SEATED.

UNSOUND. See SOUND, 2.

UNSUITABLE. See SUITABLE.

UNTAXED. See TAX.

UNTENANTABLE. See LANDLORD.

UNTIL. Generally excludes the day to which it relates, but this construction will yield to the manifest contrary intention of the parties.[2]

A charter continuing "until the first day of January" expires the thirty-first day of December.[1]

"Until" or "till" the next term of court does not include any part of that term. And when time is given for filing exceptions until a particular day in a term, a filing on that day is too late.[2]

Otherwise held where a party had until a certain day for filing a motion for a new trial.[3]

"Until summer" ordinarily means to the first of June; "until fall," to the first of September.[4]

UNTRUE. See TRUE.

UNUS. L. One; the same.

Una voce. With one voice; with one assent.

Uno acto. In one act; by the same act.

Uno flatu. In one breath; in the same breath; in one utterance.

UNUSUAL. See PUNISHMENT; USUAL.

Two is not an "unusual" number, when applied to persons who violently enter premises in dispute.[5]

UNVERIFIED. See VERIFY.

UNWAIVED. See WAIVE.

UNWRITTEN. See LAW, Common, PAROL; WRITING.

UPLIFTED HAND. See OATH.

UPON. 1. Resting on, united with; contained in, q. v.

Breaking and turning over the soil of land does not constitute an improvement "upon" land, within the meaning of a mechanic's lien law.[6]

2. When; in case of.

Where a deed is to be delivered "upon" or "on" the payment of the purchase-money, a tender of delivery is precedent to the payment, the covenants being dependent. "Upon" in such case means "when."[7]

"Upon the death" of a devisee was held equivalent to "in case of" his death.[8]

See CASE, 1; THEN. Compare AFTER; ON.

UPPER. See BENCH.

UPSET. See BID.

USAGE; USANCE. See USE, 2, page 1070, c. 2.

USE.[9] 1, v. To employ, hold, occupy, enjoy, take the benefit of.[10]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 442; 101 U. S. 228, 243.

[2] Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 95 (1876), cases, Gray, C. J.; Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 304 (1850).

[1] People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 503 (1858). See also People v. Crissey, 91 id. 631 (1883).

[2] Corbin v. Ketcham, 87 Ind. 139 (1882), cases.

[3] Rogers v. Cherokee Iron & Ry. Co., 70 Ga. 717 (1883); 67 id. 765.

[4] Abel v. Alexander, 45 Ind. 528 (1874).

[5] Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 597 (1870).

[6] Brown v. Wyman, 56 Iowa, 454 (1881); 55 Vt. 149.

[7] Adams v. Williams, 2 W. & S. 228 (1841); Courtright v. Deeds, 37 Iowa, 508 (1873); 10 Ala. 414.

[8] Conrow v. Conrow, 14 W. N. C. 483 (1884); Roberts's Appeal, 59 Pa. 72 (1868).

[9] L. usus, q. v.

[10] Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co., 48 N. Y. 667 (1872).

In insurance law, "to use a port" means to go into a harbor or haven for shelter, commerce, or pleasure, and to derive advantage from its protection.[1]

2, n. Appropriation, application, employment; enjoyment, benefit, profit. See ABUSE.

"For the use of," in conveyancing, expresses the right of appropriation or enjoyment, rather than the purpose or mode of use.[2]

A grant of "the use of the timber" on a tract of land was held to convey an incorporeal right, not the timber itself nor the soil.[3]

Riding a stray horse about, trying to find the owner, is not such using as is intended by the rule that one who "uses an estray" becomes liable in trover.[4]

A "change in use" in insurance includes a change from occupancy to "disuse."[5]

Actual use. Wearing apparel may be "in actual use" without having been actually worn. "In use" means in employment; and "actual" means real as opposed to nominal and present.[6]

For use. Describes a suit or proceeding, a decree or judgment, had for the benefit of another person than the nominal plaintiff; as, "A, for use, etc. v. B."

Misuse; Misuser. Wrongful use; abuse.

Non-use; non-user. Failure to use; neglect.

An office may be forfeited by misuser or abuse, as when a judge takes a bribe; or by non-user or neglect.[7]

Public use. A use which is for the benefit of the public,[8] or which concerns the whole community in which it exists, as distinguished from a particular individual or number of individuals.[9]

The power of taxation cannot be used in aid of enterprises for the benefit of individuals, though in a remote or collateral way the local public may be benefited thereby.[10]

A public use of an invention, permitted by the inventor, for more than two years prior to the date of a patent avoids the patent. To constitute such use it is not necessary that more than one of the patented articles be publicly used.[11]

See DEDICATION, 1; DOMAIN, Eminent; TAKE, 8.

[1] Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co., ante.

[2] Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 394 (1871).

[3] Clark v. Way, 11 Rich. 694 (S. C., 1858).

[4] Henry v. Richardson, 7 Watts, 559 (1838).

[5] Cannell v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 59 Me. 590 (1871).

[6] Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 213 (1884).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 153; 26 Pa. 318.

[8] Re Townsend, 39 N. Y. 182 (1868); ib. 179.

[9] Kellar v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 629 (1879): Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 251 (1861); Concord R. Co. v. Greeley, 17 N. H. 61 (1845); Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 552-66 (1883), cases.

[10] Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 665 (1874).

[11] Egbert v. Lippman, 104 U. S. 336 (1881), cases; Manning v. Cape Ann Isinglass, &c. Co., 106 id. 465 (1883).

Usage. General and uniform practice. See Usual, p. 1071.

In English law, "usage" is local practice, and must be proved; "custom" is general practice, judicially noticed without proof.

Usage is the fact; custom the law. There may be usage without custom; there can be no custom without usage to accompany or precede it. Usage consists in a repetition of acts; custom arises out of this repetition. The usage leading to a custom may be proved by public writings, by the testimony of aged persons, or by two concurring judgments upon the matter.[1]

Usage of trade. A course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind.[2]

The custom or usage of a trade is the law of that trade, and obligatory if ancient (sufficiently old to be generally known), certain, uniform, and reasonable.[3]

Usage of trade and custom are part of the common law. They help interpret the otherwise indeterminate intention of parties, where their acts and expressions are doubtful; but they are never admissible to contradict what is plain.[4]

A general usage may be proved in proper cases to remove ambiguities and uncertainties in a contract or to annex incidents, but it cannot destroy, contradict, or modify what is otherwise manifest. Where the intent and meaning of the parties are clear, evidence of a usage to the contrary is irrelevant. Usage cannot make a contract where there is none, nor prevent the effect of the settled rules of the law.[5]

See CUSTOM; USUS, Malus, etc.

Usance. The period which, in early times, it was usual to appoint between different countries for the payment of bills.[6]

When usance is a month, half usance is always fifteen days, notwithstanding the unequal length of the months.[6]

Use and occupation. A species of assumpsit, when one has used another's realty under a contract, express or implied, to pay therefor, and for the value of which an action of rent cannot be maintained, as for

[1] Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 284 (1855): Escriche, Dict.

[2] Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 535 (1874), Wells, J.

[3] Collings v. Hope, 3 Wash. 150 (1812); Carter v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 77 Pa. 290 (1875), cases.

[4] The Reeside, 2 Sumn. 569 (1837), Story, J.; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 390-91 (1870), cases; Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, ib. 667 (1870), cases; Hearne v. Marine Ins. Co., 20 id. 492-93 (1874), cases; Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 206 (1879); 1 Wall. 95; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 251, 292.

[5] First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 692 (1879), cases, Swayne, J.; Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 id. 283 (1883), cases; Janney v. Boyd, 30 Minn. 320 (1883), cases.

[6] Byles, Bills, 206.

want of a lease, or of an agreement to pay a specified sum.[1]

The law implies a promise to pay what the benefits accruing from the possession are worth. This is the foundation of the cause of action. In certain cases the value of lasting and valuable improvements may be deducted.[2]

Not maintainable where the occupation has been tortious, as that forbids the implication of a promise;[3] nor where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist.[3]

Useful. Is employed in patent statutes incidentally, distinguishing that which is beneficial from that which is mischievous or immoral; does not intend that which is superior to other modes in use for the same purpose.[4]

A "useful invention" is such as may be applied to some beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention which is injurious to the morals, the health, or the good order of society. The law does not regard the degree of utility.[5]

Useful is here opposed to "frivolous" or "noxious."[6]

Unless the invention is shown to be absolutely frivolous and worthless, the patent is valid. The fact that a patent has been issued raises a presumption of utility. The burden of proving inutility is upon the contestant.[7]

See NOVELTY; PATENT, 2; PROCESS, 2; UTILITY. Compare USUS, Utile, etc.

User. The exercise or enjoyment of a right, especially of a franchise right. Opposed, non-user, disuser.

An uninterrupted possession and use of an incorporeal hereditament or easement, such as a way or a water-privilege, for twenty years, is prima facie, and, if unexplained, conclusive evidence of a right; under some circumstances the courts will entertain the presumption of a grant, even for a shorter period. A right thus acquired by "user" may, in like manner, be lost by "disuser;" in other words, discontinuance of the use for a long period affords a presumption of the extinguishment of the right.[8]

Adverse user. A user without license or permission.

An adverse right of easement cannot grow out of a mere permissive enjoyment. The distinction is between a permissive or tolerated user, and a user claimed as a matter of right. Where, however, one has used a right of way for twenty years unexplained it is but fair to presume that the user is under a claim of right, unless it appears to have been by permission. In other words, the use of a way over the lands of another whenever one sees fit, and without asking leave, is an "adverse" use, and the burden is upon the owner of the land to show that the use was by license or contract inconsistent with a claim of right.[1]

An adverse use is such a use of property as the owner himself would make, asking no permission, and disregarding all other claims so far as they conflict with this use. Continued for twenty years, such use is equivalent to a grant.[2]

When an easement has once been acquired, mere non-user will not defeat the right: there must be an adverse use by the servient estate for a period sufficient to create a prescriptive right.[3]

See DEDICATION, 1; EASEMENT.

Usual. According to general practice; conforming to common usage.

"Usual and customary," referring to a usage, import something more than casual or exceptional,—a fixed and established usage which has become general in the particular trade.[4]

"Usual stopping place," in a statute respecting the expulsion of a passenger from a railway train, means a regular station. A water-tank is not such place, although passengers get off there while trains are stopping.[5]

See BUSINESS; DISPATCH; NEGOTIATION.

3. "Where a man has anything to the use of another upon confidence that the other shall take the profits: he who has the profits has an use."[6]

Cestui, or cestuy, que use. He for whose benefit a use is created. Under the Statute of Uses, the legal owner of the estate, as opposed to the nominal grantee or holder.

The forms of the plural, found in standard law works, are: cestuis que use, cestuis que uses, and cestui que uses. The first, like cestuis que trust, seems to be the preferred spelling. See further CESTUI.

Usee. Chancery gave the beneficial enjoyment to the person intended to be benefited, calling the first "usee" the legal-estate man, or trustee merely; the proper beneficiary being the second or last "usee," the cestui que trust, and true owner in equity.[7]

[1] Hurley v. Lamoreaux, 29 Minn. 133 (1882), cases.

[2] Seibert v. Baxter, 36 Kan. 190 (1887), cases.

[3] Clark v. Clark, 58 Vt. 529 (1886), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 772-76 (1886), cases. As to action against trespasser, see 23 Cent. Law J. 387 (1886), cases.

[4] [Lowell v. Lewis, 1 Mas. 186 (1817), Story, J.; Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 549 (1870), cases.

[5] Bedford v. Hunt, 1 Mas. 303 (1817), Story, J.

[6] Winans v. Schenectady, &c. R. Co., 2 Blatch. 290 (1851); Kneass v. Schuylkill Bank, 4 Wash. 12 (1820); Roberts v. Ward, 4 McLean, 566 (1849).

[7] Parker v. Stiles, 5 McLean, 62 (1849).

Hazard v. Robinson, 3 Mas. 275 (1823), Story, J.

[1] Cox v. Forrest, 60 Pa. 79-80 (1882).

[2] Blanchard v. Moulton, 63 Me. 436 (1873), Appleton, Chief Justice.

[3] Curran v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 632 (1886), cases.

[4] [Carter v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 77 Pa. 290 (1875).

[5] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Flagg, 43 Ill. 367 (1867).

[6] Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 180 (1759), Henley, L. K., quoting Finch.

[7] [Brown's Law Dict., tit. Uses.

A use is where the legal estate of lands is in A, in trust that B shall take the profits and that A will make and execute estates according to the direction of B. . . Before the Statute of Uses, a use was a mere confidence in a friend, to whom the estate was conveyed by the owner without consideration, to dispose of it upon trusts designated at the time, or to be afterward appointed by the real owner. The feoffee or trustee, to all intents and purposes, was the real owner of the estate at law, and the cestui que use had only a confidence or trust, for which he had no remedy at common law.[1]

A "use" regards principally the beneficial interest; a "trust," the nominal ownership. A use is an estate vested since the Statute of Uses, and by virtue thereof. A trust is the relation between the holder of the legal estate, and the owner of the equitable estate — the beneficiary. Trusts are now what uses were before the Statute.[2]

Uses and trusts, in their original, are of a nature very similar, or exactly the same. They answer to the fidei-commissa of the Roman law, which were trusts introduced by testators to evade the law which disabled certain persons, as, exiles and strangers, from being legatees or heirs. The property was given to a person in confidence that he would convey it or dispose of the profits according to the pleasure of another, the real object of the bounty. But every such gift was also a jus precarium, a right with a remedy in entreaty or request, not enforcible in law, but depending solely upon the honor of the trustee. Augustus, having been frequently solicited in favor of persons toward whom trustees had broken faith, directed the prætor to afford a remedy in such cases. These fiduciary interests then increased so fast that special equity jurisdiction was created for them through the prætor fidei commissarius, the "chancellor for uses."[3]

In English law, a use may be classed as a jus fiduciarum of the Roman law, that is, as a right in trust, with a remedy in conscience; a confidence reposed in another, tenant of land, that he would dispose of the land according to the intentions of him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits.[4]

About 1375 these uses were transplanted into England by foreign ecclesiastics, to evade the statutes of mortmain (q. v.) by obtaining grants of lands to third persons to the use of religious houses. The clerical chancellors of that day held that these grants were fidei commissa, and binding in conscience. The evasion was prevented by 15 Rich. II (1392), c. 5.[1]

The idea continued to be applied to a number of civil purposes: it removed restraints upon alienations by will, and permitted the owner of lands in his lifetime to make such designations of their profits as prudence, justice, or family convenience might require. . . At length, through the desire to provide for children by will, and to secure estates from forfeiture in times of civil commotion when parties alternately attainted each other, uses grew almost universal, and the courts of equity reduced them to a system.[2]

About 1535 the greater part of the land of England was conveyed to uses: the property or the possession of the soil being vested in each case in one man, and the use, or the profits, in another, whose directions regarding the disposition thereof the former was in conscience bound to follow, and he could be compelled so to do by a court of equity.[3]

In 1536 the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII, c. 10), the statute for transferring uses into possession, was passed, enacting that "when any person shall be seized of lands, tenements, or other hereditaments to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or otherwise, shall thenceforth stand and be seized or possessed of the lands, etc., of and in the like estates as they have in the use, trust, or confidence; and the estate of the person so seized to uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form and condition as they had before in the use." The statute "executes the use," that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use into possession; thereby making the cestui que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity.

The statute did not abolish conveyance to uses: it only annihilated the intervening estate of the feoffee, and turned the interest of the cestui que use into a legal, instead of an equitable, ownership. Thereupon the courts of common law began to take cognizance of uses. As the use and the land were now convertible terms, they became liable to dower, curtesy, and escheat; but they were no longer devisable.

It was adjudged that if the use cannot take effect the instant the conveyance is made, the operation of the statute may wait till the use shall arise upon a contingency, to happen within a reasonable period. Which doctrine, when devises were again introduced, as

[1] 4 Kent, 289: Gilbert, Uses, 1.
[2] Williams, R. P. 155; 4 Kent, 303; Sand. Uses, 266.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 327-28; 4 Kent, 290-91; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 965-66; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 151; 2 id. § 977; Hadley, Rom. Law, 323.
[4] 2 Bl. Com. 328.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 328; 4 Kent, 290; 2 Story, Eq. § 969.
[2] 2 Bl. Com. 329; 2 Story, Eq. § 969.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 137.

equivalent to declarations to uses, was also adopted in favor of "executory devises," which are contingent or springing uses, except that for such uses there must be a person seized to the uses when the contingency happens, else they can never be executed by the statute; and, therefore, if the estate of the feoffee be destroyed, before the contingency arises, the use is destroyed: whereas by an executory devise the freehold itself is transferred to the future devisee.[1]

"Springing uses" are limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding estate is limited, and they do not take effect in derogation of any preceding interest. By means of powers, a use, with its estate, may spring up at the will of any given person. But future or contingent uses are limited to take effect as remainders,[2] q. v. See SCINTILLA, Juris.

Shifting or secondary use. A use which, though executed, may change from one person to another by circumstances ex post facto; as, if a man makes a grant to his intended wife and her eldest son for their lives, at marriage the wife takes the whole use in severalty, and upon the birth of a son the use is executed in them jointly.[3]

"Shifting" or "secondary" uses take effect in derogation of some other estate, and are limited by the deed creating them or are authorized to be created by a person named in it. They are common in all settlements. In marriage settlements the first use is always to the owner in fee till the marriage, and then to other uses. The fee thus remains with the owner until the marriage, when it "shifts" as uses arise. But it will be so confined as not to lead to a perpetuity,[4] q. v.

Resulting use. Whenever the use limited by the deed expires, or cannot vest, but returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration, or during such impossibility. Thus, if a man makes a grant to the use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the use of her first-born son: till he marries, the use "results back" to the grantor himself; after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and if she dies without issue, the whole goes back to him in fee.[5]

If the use limited by deed expired, or could not vest, or was not to vest except upon a contingency, the use "resulted back" to the grantor. The rule is the same where no uses are declared by the conveyance. So much of the use as the owner does not dispose of remains in him. If he conveys without any declaration of uses, or to such uses as he shall thereafter appoint, or to the use of a third person on the occurrence of a specified event, in all such cases there is a use resulting back.[1]

By the equitable decisions in the courts of law, the power of the court of chancery over landed property was greatly curtailed; but one or two technical scruples restored it with tenfold increase. It was held (1) that "no use could be limited on a use;" that when a man bargains and sells his land for money, which raises a use, by implication, in the bargainee, the limitation of a further use to another person is repugnant, and therefore void; as, a grant to A and his heirs, to the use of B and his heirs, in trust for C and his heirs.[2]

A use limited upon a use is not affected by the statute, which executes the first use only. The second use may be valid as a trust. In the case of a deed of bargain and sale the whole force of the statute is exhausted in transferring the legal title in fee-simple to the bargainee.[3]

It was held (2) that "seized to the use," in the statute, did not extend to a term of years or other chattel interest, whereof the termor is possessed.

As to the distinctions above noted it may be observed that, in the first case, it was evident that the parties did not intend that B should have a beneficial interest; and, in the second case, that the cestui que use of the term was expressly driven into chancery for a remedy. That court determined that though these interests were not "uses" which the statute could execute, they still were "trusts" in equity, which in conscience ought to be performed. Thus the doctrine of uses was revived under the name of "trusts;" and thus, by the strict construction of the courts of law, the Statute of Uses has had little other effect than to make a slight alteration in the formal words of a conveyance.[4]

The statute imported into the rules of law some of the then existing doctrines of the courts of equity, and added "to the use" to every conveyance. The intent of the statute was to abolish chancery jurisdiction over landed estates, by giving actual possession at law to every person beneficially entitled in equity. The court of chancery, by the foregoing rulings, defeated this intent.[5]

The Statute of Frauds (q. v.) having required that every declaration, assignment, or grant of any trust in lands or hereditaments, except such as arise from implication, shall be in writing signed by the party, or by his written will, the courts now consider a trust estate, expressed or implied, as equivalent to the legal ownership, governed by the same rules of property, and liable in equity as the other is in law. In fine, the courts, assisted by statutes, now make trusts to an-

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 332-34; 4 id. 430; 4 Kent, 294-95; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 963-86.
[2] 4 Kent, 297-98.
[3] [2 Bl. Com. 334-35.
[4] [4 Kent, 297.
[5] [2 Bl. Com. 335.

[1] 4 Kent, 299; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. § 961.
[2] 2 Bl. Com. 335-36.
[3] Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 282 (1866), cases.
[4] 2 Bl. Com. 335-36.
[5] Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591 (1738); 1 Sand. Uses, 265; Beckwith v. Rector of St. Phillip's Parish, 69 Ga. 574, 579 (1882).

swer in general all the beneficial ends of uses, without their inconvenience or frauds. The trust will descend, may be aliened, is liable to debts, executions, forfeitures, leases, incumbrances, curtesy, but not to dower, nor to escheat.[1]

Covenant to stand seized to uses. A species of conveyance by which a man, seized of lands, in consideration of blood or marriage, covenants that he will stand seized of the land to the use of his wife, child, or kinsman, for life, in tail, or in fee.

Here the statute executes at once the estate; for the party intended to be benefited, having thus acquired the use, is thereby put at once into corporal possession.[2]

The statute also introduced the species of conveyance known as bargain and sale: a kind of real contract, whereby the bargainor, for a pecuniary consideration, contracts to convey land to the bargainee; and becomes, by such bargain, a trustee for, or seized to the use of, the bargainee: and then the statute completes the purchase. The bargain vests the use, and the statute the possession.[3]

The English doctrines of uses and trusts, under 27 Hen. VIII, and the conveyances founded thereon, have been generally introduced into the jurisprudence of this country.[4]

Charitable use. Such gift, conducive to the welfare of the public, as a court of equity will take cognizance of; a charity, q. v.

Executed use. The first use upon which the Statute of Uses operates, by joining the possession and the use, as seen above. Executory use. A springing use which confers a legal title analogous to an executory devise.

Future use. A general name for any shifting or secondary, springing, contingent, or resulting use.[4]

Pious use. A gift to a religious house; a devise, bequest, or other donation to a religious organization.

Superstitious use. Refers to old English legislation which restricted gifts in aid of religious doctrines deemed erroneous and pernicious, as, the tenets of dissenters, Roman Catholics, and Jews.

See generally CHARITY, 2; RAISE; TRUST, 1.

USEFUL; USER; USUAL. See USE, 2, p. 1071.

USUFRUCT. See USUS, Fructus.

USURIOUS. See USURY.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 327.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 328.

[3] 4 Kent, 229. See generally 2 Washb. R. P. 91–156.

[4] [4 Kent, 296.

USURPER.[1] One who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant, and ousts the incumbent without any title of color whatever.[2]

His acts are void in every respect.[3]

Non usurpavit. L. He has not usurped: he is not exercising a franchise without authority.

A plea to a quo warranto, that the defendant has a right to exercise the franchise, accompanied by a negation of the allegations of the writ, is not a plea of non usurpavit nor a disclaimer, but is a valid plea in such case.[3]

See OFFICER, De facto.

USURY.[4] Originally, a premium or reward for the use of money, a commodity or other thing.[5]

Taking more than the lawful rate of interest for the loan or forbearance of money.[6]

The taking of more than legal interest for the forbearance of a debt or sum of money due.[7]

Lending money on a contract to receive again the principal sum and an increase by way of compensation for the use is called lending on "interest" by those who think it lawful, and "usury" by those who do not think so. . . The Mosaical precept was political, not moral: while it prohibited the Jews from taking usury from their brethren, it expressly permitted them to take it from strangers. This proves that taking a moderate reward for the use is not malum in se. To demand an exorbitant price for the loan of a horse, or a loan of a sum of money, is equally contrary to conscience; but a reasonable equivalent for the inconvenience the owner may feel by the want of the thing, and for the hazard of losing it entirely, is not more immoral in one case than in the other. . . To a moderate profit we give the name of "interest," and to an exorbitant profit the odious name of "usury."[8]

Usurious. Pertaining to, or of the nature of, usury: as, usurious interest, a usurious contract. Whence usuriousness.

There must be an intention knowingly to contract for or to take usurious interest. . . Where a contract imports usury upon its face, as, by an express reservation of more than legal interest, inquiry is at [1] L. usu-rapere, to seize to one's own use.

[2] McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. 513–14 (1880), cases, Christian, J. See also Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 80 (1861); 14 La. An. 507; 21 Wend. 370.

[3] Commonwealth v. Cross Cut R. Co., 53 Pa. 62, 70 (1866).

[4] F. usure: L. usura, use, interest.

[5] [Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill, 528 (1843).

[6] Turner v. Turner, 80 Va. 381 (1885).

[7] Hogg v. Ruffner, 1 Black, 118 (1861), Grier, J. See also 11 Conn. 497; 11 Bush, 180; 3 Johns. Cas. 206; 41 Barb. 359; 32 id. 557; 6 Ohio St. 535; 17 Wis. 394.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 455–56.

an end. But where the contract on its face is for legal interest only, proof is necessary that there was some corrupt agreement to cover up usury.[1]

Where the promise to pay a sum above legal interest depends upon a contingency, the loan is not usurious.[2]

Sale at a discount greater than legal interest, of a note made and indorsed in blank for the purpose of raising money by a broker, to a purchaser ignorant of the purpose, is not usury.[3]

Where the promisor in a usurious contract makes it the consideration of a new contract with a person not a party to the original contract, or to the usury paid or received upon it, and the new contract is not a contrivance to evade the statutes against usury, the latter contract is not usurious.[4]

But payment of illegal interest, after the maturity of a note, for forbearance, is usury.[5]

In a usurious transaction, the borrower acts somewhat under duress; he is not wholly a free agent. The maxim in pari delicto does not apply.[6]

When an agent who is authorized to lend money for lawful interest exacts for his own benefit more than the lawful rate, without the knowledge of his principal, the loan is not thereby rendered usurious.[6]

But authority to make a usurious loan may be inferred from a general agency, pertaining to an extensive business.[7]

A national bank may take interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State, territory, or district where the bank is located; and if no rate is fixed, then seven per centum, and it may take it in advance.[8]

Taking a greater rate of interest than that allowed by the preceding section, when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the evidence of debt carries with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. The person by whom the greater rate has been paid, or his legal representative, may recover back, in an action of debt, twice the amount of interest paid, provided action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurred.[9]

The suit may be had in any circuit, district, or Territorial court of the United States held within the district in which such association is located, having jurisdiction in similar cases,[1] or in a State court.[2]

A national bank may take the rate of interest allowed to natural persons generally, and a higher rate, if State banks of issue are authorized to take it.[3]

Usurious interest paid a national bank on renewing a series of notes cannot, in an action by the bank on the last of the renewals, be applied in satisfaction of the principal of the debt.[4]

In most of the States it is provided that, as a penalty, the person who receives more than the legal rate of interest shall forfeit a sum equal to all interest so taken, and that this sum may be withheld from the principal at the time of payment, when that is due as a loan, or be recoverable by an action within a specified period after payment.[5]

In England, all restrictions upon rates of interest were abolished by 17 and 18 Vict. (1854), c. 90.

See BONUS; INTEREST, 2 (3); USUS, UTILE, etc.; VOID.

USUS. L. A using; use, application, employment; service, benefit, utility; practice, usage, custom. From utere, uti, to use, apply.

Ancipitis usus. Of a double use; having two or more uses.

As it is impossible to determine the final use of an article ancipitis usus, in considering what articles in course of transportation to an enemy's country are contraband of war, it is not an injurious rule to deduce the final use from the immediate destination.[6]

In copyright law, refers to the final end or object, as of a design or illustration addressed to the taste, of which the form is the essence, and the production of pleasure the object. But the teachings of science and the rules and methods of useful arts have their final end in application and use — what the public derive from the publication of a book which teaches them. As taught in any literary composition, their essence consists only in their statement, which alone is secured by a copyright.[7]

Malus usus abolendus est. A bad practice is to be abandoned. A usage which is unreasonable, vicious or pernicious, must be abolished. An unsafe way of doing a thing should be discontinued.

If a custom is not a good custom, it ought no longer to be used. Malus usus, etc., is an established maxim of the law.[8]

[1] United States Bank v. Waggener, 9 Pet. 399 (1835), cases, Story, J.; Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S. 101 (1885), cases.

[2] Spain v. Hamilton, 1 Wall. 625-26 (1863).

[3] Mosley v. Brown, 76 Va. 419 (1882); Siewert v. Hamel, 91 N. Y. 201 (1883).

[4] Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S. 103 (1885), cases; Palmer v. Call, 2 McCrary, 528 (1881), cases.

[5] Philanthropic Building Association v. McKnight, 35 Pa. 472 (1860), cases; Mosley v. Brown, 76 Va. 425-26 (1882).

[6] Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S. 102 (1885), cases; Palmer v. Call, 2 McCrary, 525 (1881), cases; Philips v. Mackellar, 92 N. Y. 34 (1883), cases; Anonymous, 40 N. J. E. 507-10 (1885), cases.

[7] Sherwood v. Roundtree, 32 F. R. 113 (1887).

[8] R. S. § 5197: Act 3 June, 1864, c. 106, s. 30.

[9] R. S. § 5198: Act 3 June, 1864, c. 106, s. 30. See Farmers', &c. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 32 (1875); Stephens v. Monongahela Bank, 111 id. 197 (1884), cases.

[1] R. S. § 5198: Act 18 Feb. 1875, c. 80.

[2] Lebanon Nat. Bank v. Karmany, 98 Pa. 65 (1881).

[3] R. S. § 5197: Act 3 June, 1864, c. 106, s. 30. See Tiffany v. Nat. Bank of Missouri, 18 Wall. 409 (1873)

[4] Driesback v. Second Nat. Bank of Wilkes Barre, 104 U. S. 52 (1881); Barnet v. Second Nat. Bank of Cincinnati, 98 id. 555 (1878); Lebanon Nat. Bank v. Karmany, 98 Pa. 65 (1881); Peterborough Nat. Bank v. Childs, 133 Mass. 250-51 (1882), cases.

[5] See Harris v. Bressler, 119 Ill. 467 (1887).

[6] 1 Kent, 140.

[7] Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 103-4 (1879).

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 76.

The commercial usage, that the name of the transferee need not be inserted in a power of attorney to transfer stock, is vicious.[1]

A custom among stockbrokers to appropriate money belonging to the principal to the payment of the broker's indebtedness is too iniquitous ever to obtain the sanction of law.[2]

The practice of delivering a note or bond upon which judgment is entered back to the plaintiff is bad, and malus usus, etc. It should be left on file.[3]

The maxim applies to the unauthorized act of a government officer in accepting bills of exchange.[4]

Optimus interpres rerum usus. The best interpreter of things is usage. The practice which follows upon the making of a statute or a compact shows the meaning attached among those by whom or for whom the thing was done.

See CONSTITUTION, p. 240; CUSTOM; EXPOSITIO, Contemporanea; STATUTE, pp. 970-71.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own that another you may not injure. You may use what belongs to yourself as you see fit, except to harm another person. Enjoy your own private rights as you please, but take care not to molest others, in the lawful exercise of their rights, by your affirmative action.

The maxim is not applicable to a mere omission to act, but rather to an affirmative act or course of conduct in invasion of another's rights.

Hence, in the absence of a covenant to repair the upper stories of a building, a lessor will not be liable for damage from rain, let in by a roof which has gradually become defective, to merchandise owned by the lessee of a lower story.[5]

Grants of privileges to corporate bodies confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of other persons. The great principle of the common law, which is equally the teaching of Christian morality, so to use one's property as not to injure others, forbids other application or use of the rights and powers conferred.[6]

The maxim expresses the only restriction which the law places upon ownership in property, or the exercise of any other private or public right. Because of the principle it was formerly a question whether property could be taken from an inebriate or spendthrift and given in trust to a committee.[7]

The principle prohibits the creation or continuance of a nuisance. A lawful trade may be so offensive that it should be carried on only in an out-of-the-way place.[8]

A State may require each of its citizens to so conduct himself, and to so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and the source of police powers. The maxim, sic utere, etc., furnishes the rule by which every member of society possesses and enjoys his property; and all legislation essential to secure this common and equal enjoyment is a legitimate exercise of State authority.[9] See POLICE, 2.

One riparian owner may not injure the concomitant right of another owner.[9]

A surface-owner has a right of action against the mineral-owner for removing supports necessary for holding up the surface.[4]

Every lessee impliedly agrees to so use the property as not unnecessarily to injure it; to so use it as to avoid the necessity for repairs, as far as possible. The tenant, though the United States government, must exercise reasonable care to prevent damage to the inheritance.[5]

See DAMNUM, Absque injuria.

Usucaptio. A taking by using. Acquisition from having the possession and use of an object for a legal period; ownership from adverse possession; prescription.[6]

Usus fructus. Use of the fruit: enjoyment of the income or profit of property; usufruct.

The usus fructus of the civil law was the temporary right of using a thing, without having the ultimate property, or full dominion of the substance.[7]

Whence "usufruct:" the right to receive and use the profits of property belonging to another; and "usufructuary:" he who has a usufruct right, or right of enjoying a thing in which he has no property.[8]

---

[1] Denny v. Lyon, 38 Pa. 101 (1860).

[2] Evans v. Waln, 71 Pa. 75 (1872).

[3] Fraley's Appeal, 76 Pa. 43 (1874); 77 id. 378.

[4] The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 677 (1868).

[5] Krueger v. Ferrant, 29 Minn. 388 (1882), cases.

[6] Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 331 (1883), Field, J.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 306.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 217.

[2] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 124-25, 145 (1876), cases, Waite, C. J. See also Richland County v. Richland Center, 59 Wis. 596 (1884).

[3] Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 506 (1872).

[4] Jones v. Wagner, 66 Pa. 435 (1870).

[5] United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 65-66 (1876), cases.

See generally McCutchen v. Blanton, 59 Miss. 119-22 (1881), cases; Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295 (1883); Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R., 1 Exch. *265, 279-80 (1866); 21 Cent. Law J. 205-10 (1885), cases; 30 F. R. 792; 8 Gray, 66, 424; 14 Allen, 294; 101 Mass. 252; 106 id. 199; 107 id. 576; 112 id. 58; 97 N. C. 479; 44 Ohio St. 282; 118 Pa. 143.

[6] See Maine, Anc. Law, 275; Hadley, Rom. Law, 172.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 327.

[8] Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 628 (1857); 40 id. 700.

Only a usufructuary property may be had in light, air, and water. These belong to the first occupant while he retains possession of them.[1]

In the Roman law, besides praedial servitudes, there were also personal servitudes, in another's property. Of the latter the most important was the usufructus, the right to use and enjoy some property belonging to another, without suffering deterioration. Using another's money on a loan was quasi-usufruct. The right might be for a term of years in land; was transferable for the life of the original usufructuary; might cease by non-user, and always ceased upon transfer back to the owner of the property. This servitude was commonly established by will.[2]

Usus norma loquendi. Usage is the rule for speaking. Usage regulates speech. Usage interprets language, spoken or written.

Words are generally to be understood in their usual, most known signification; not so much regarding the propriety of grammar as general and popular use.[3]

Usus . . est jus et norma loquendi.[4]

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. The useful by the useless is not destroyed. What is valid is not impaired by what is invalid; the good is not marred by the bad; the lawful is not vitiated by the unlawful — provided they are capable of separation.

If parts of a work, unlawfully copied from another, are inseparable, the entire work will be suppressed.[5]

Where lawful services are blended with such as are forbidden, the whole being a unit and indivisible, the bad destroys the good.[6]

When an indictment contains both good and bad counts, a verdict of guilty upon the whole indictment will be sustained.[7]

A jury may separate articles proper as personal baggage from those which are improper.[8]

The invalid parts of a contract may be discarded, and the valid parts enforced, when the parts are severable and there is no imputation of malum in se.[9]

When a bond contains separable legal and illegal conditions, the legal conditions may be enforced.[10]

A contract is good for lawful interest, and voidable as to an excess, unless otherwise provided by law.[11]

A will may be void as to a part of its dispositions and valid as to the rest.[1]

So as to provisions in a trust.[2]

A deed void as a lease may be good as an agreement to execute a lease.[3]

The valid in a statute, if so separable from the invalid that each can stand alone, may be enforced.[4]

But if unconstitutional (q. v.) provisions are so connected with the general scope of the statute that, being stricken out, effect cannot be given to the legislative intent, the other provisions fall with them.[5]

UT. L. That; in order that; as.

Ut res magis. See RES, Ut res, etc.

Ut supra. As above; as see foregoing.

UTAH. See BIGAMY; POLYGAMY; RELIGION; TERRITORY, 2.

UTILE. See this page, ante.

UTILITY. Usefulness; applicability to a beneficial use.

A valid patent is characterized by both utility and invention. While less evidence, where the utility is great, may establish invention, yet great utility may result from changes in devices which embrace no invention.[6]

In an action for infringement the defense of lack of utility will not be sustained unless there is the clearest evidence that the invention is utterly frivolous and worthless. The fact that the defendant used the invention is an argument against such defense.[7]

See further INVENTION; NOVELTY; PATENT, 2; USE, 1, USEFUL.

UTLAGATUM. See OUTLAWRY.

UTTER.[8] 1, adj. Outer: as, utter bar, and barrister, q. v.

Outside; extreme, complete: as, utter loss, q. v.

2, v. To put out, put forth; to tender to another; to offer to put into circulation; to publish: as, to utter a libel, forged paper, counterfeit money.

To "utter" a libel is to publish it.[9]

To "utter" a thing is to offer it, whether the thing is taken or not.[10]

---

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 14, 18, 4; 2 id. 18, 105.

[2] Hadley, Rom. Law, 191-92, 195.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 59; 93 U. S. 455; 110 id. 534; 6 Conn. 91, 308; 6 Allen, 386; 23 Pa. 84.

[4] Horace, Ars Poetica, 71-72.

[5] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 85-86 (1869), cases; Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617 (1888).

[6] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 452 (1874).

[7] United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 256 (1875).

[8] N. Y. Central, &c. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 31 (1879).

[9] Gelpcke v. City of Dubuque, 1 Wall. 222 (1863); 10 Pet. 360.

[10] United States v. Hodson, 10 Wall. 408 (1870); 10 Ohio, 51.

[11] Farmers', &c. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 35 (1875), cases; Ewell v. Daggs, 108 id. 148-51 (1883), cases.

---

[1] Rudy v. Ulrich, 69 Pa. 183 (1871); Cuthbertson's Appeal, 97 id. 173 (1881).

[2] Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 257 (1885).

[3] Williams, Real Prop. 374.

[4] United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 221 (1875); Trademark Cases, 100 id. 98 (1879); Packet Company v. Keokuk, 95 id. 89 (1877); Penniman's Case, 103 id. 716 (1880).

[5] Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 83-84 (1880); Warren v. Mayor of Charleston, 2 Gray, 99 (1854.) See also Jaehne v. New York, 128 U. S. 189 (1888).

[6] Sax v. Taylor Iron-Works, 30 F. R. 838 (1887); Holister v. Benedict Manuf. Co., 113 U. S. 59 (1885).

[7] Kearney v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 32 F. R. 828 (1887).

[8] A. S. uttor, ut, out, without.

[9] Benedict v. Westover, 44 Wis. 404 (1878).

[10] People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 392 (1872), cases; 27 id. 386.

"Uttering" a paper is declaring that it is good, with an intention or an offer to pass it. "Passing" a paper is putting it off in payment or exchange.[1]

To "utter and publish" forged paper means to declare or assert directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that a note is good, as, in offering it in payment. But such paper is not "passed" until received by the person to whom it is offered.[2]

"Uttering and publishing" import a disposal or negotiation of a forged instrument to another person.[3]

The party accused of uttering or passing counterfeit paper must be present when the act is done, privy to it, or aiding, consenting, or procuring it to be done.[4]

An intent to defraud is a material element in the crime of uttering forged paper.[4]

UXOR. L. A wife. Plural, uxores.

Et uxor, usually abbreviated et ux., and wife; as, in the case of a conveyance from A et ux. to B, or to B et ux.

Jure uxoris. In right of the wife: said of a claim made or of an act done by a husband in behalf of his wife. Opposed, jure mariti, in right of the husband. See HUSBAND.

Uxoricide. See HOMICIDE.

V.

V. An abbreviation of vacation, verb, Victoria, volume; also, of the Latin words, versus, vice, vide and voce, qq. v.

V. A. Vice-admiral.

V. C. Vice-chancellor.

V. C. C. Vice-chancellor's court. See CHANCELLOR.

V. E. Venditioni exponas. See VENDITIO.

VACANCY; VACANT; VACATE.[5] "To vacate" has acquired an active sense, through a long period of transition, by popular usage and in consequence of its early adoption as a technical, legal term. "To leave empty; to cease from occupying; to annul; to make void," express its meaning. But it does not follow that its derivatives have acquired exclusively equivalent meanings in popular, legislative, or legal usage. In Latin, the word defined the state and condition of some existing thing at a particular point of time: it had no intransitive power; it meant "to be empty, void or vacant; to be void of, free from or without, to lack or want a thing." Vacant lands were lands that were "uninhabited or uncultivated." Vacant possessions were such as were "free, unoccupied, ownerless." Many derivatives from the English verb retain the exact meaning of the original Latin word. "To be vacant," in its primary sense, is "to be deprived of contents; to be empty, or not filled." . . Usage has warranted the employment of these words in an enlarged and broader sense; but the primary and strictly grammatical meaning which they still retain is identical with their exclusive original signification. The result is that "vacancy" aptly describes the condition of an office when it is first created and has been filed by no incumbent.[1]

Vacancy is the state of being empty or unfilled. Vacant lands are unoccupied lands. A vacant house is an untenanted house. An old office is vacated by death, resignation, or removal. An office newly created is ipso facto vacant at creation.[2]

Vacancy is properly applicable to the office, rather than to the term of office or service;[3] but the word may apply to the term to which the event causing the vacancy relates.[4]

A vacancy de facto exists where there is an absence from sickness or other cause. A vacancy de jure imports an entire legal emptiness.[5]

An existing office without an incumbent is vacant, whether the office is new or old.[6]

An office may not be regarded as vacant when an incumbent lawfully holds over until a successor is duly qualified.[7]

The reference may be to a case where there has been a failure to elect.[8]

[1] United States v. Mitchell, Baldw. 367-68 (1831), cases, Baldwin, J.

[2] Commonwealth v. Searle, 2 Binn. *339 (1810), Tilgham, C. J.; People v. Brigham, 2 Mich. 553 (1853); State v. Horner, 48 Mo. 522 (1871).

[3] People v. Rathbum, 21 Wend. 527 (1839); Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 511 (1882).

[4] United States v. Nelson, 1 Abb. U. S. 135-38 (1867); United States v. Carter, 2 Cranch, C. C. 244 (1821); Rex v. Jones, 38 E. C. L. 325 (1841); State v. Redstrake, 39 N. J. L. 367-71 (1877), cases; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 605.

[5] L. vacare, to be empty: to be void of, free from; to lack, want.

[1] Walsh v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 435 (1879), Woodward, J.

[2] State v. Askew, 48 Ark. 89 (1886), cases.

[3] People v. Green, 2 Wend. 273 (1829).

[4] County of Scott v. Ring, 29 Minn. 404 (1883).

[5] Woodworth v. Hall, 1 Woodb. & M. 391-94 (1846).

[6] Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 329 (1855); Clarke v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 129-30 (1869), cases; State v. Jones, 3 Oreg. 537 (1869); State v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 21 (1874); 113 Ind. 439.

[7] State ex rel Attorney-General v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 593 (1886); State v. Howe, 25 id. 596 (1874).

[8] People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 634 (1883).

In Virginia, the failure of any county, corporation, or district officer to qualify before the commencement of his term of office creates a vacancy in the office.[1]

As to a person suspended from office, the office becomes as if it did not exist, and he may not be entitled to salary during the period of suspension; although the cause of suspension be afterward declared insufficient.[2]

"The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies which may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the end of their next Session." This authorizes him to fill a vacancy happening during a session and which continues after adjournment.[3]

A vacant administration or trusteeship is any such office unfilled or without an occupant or incumbent from any cause whatever.[4]

A dwelling-house does not become vacant or unoccupied when the tenant leaves it for a few hours; only when there is a cessation to use it as a dwelling.[5]

Vacant lands are such as have not been appropriated by individuals.[6]

Vacate. (1) To leave empty or unoccupied.[7]

(2) To declare void, deprive of force, annul: as, to vacate a judgment or proceeding for irregularity, surprise, or fraud.

A writ of error does not vacate the judgment below; that continues in force until reversed.[8] See SET ASIDE.

VACATION. The interval between two successive terms of a court.

During this period orders signed by a judge are said to be issued "at chambers," q. v.

In this country all courts have terms and vacations. The time of the commencement of every term is fixed by statute, and the end of it by the final adjournment of the court for that term.[9]

The English year was divided into four terms of different lengths, separated by the vacations — the seasons of the great festivals or feasts, or deemed necessary on account of the avocations of rural business. The legal definition of "vacation" is, the period of time between the end of one term and the beginning of another; and this meaning will be given to the word in a statute, unless it appears that a more popular sense was intended. The intervals between the actual sessions of court when conducting the business of a term cannot be called vacations.[10]

Under the earlier organization of courts in England, the terms, which began and ended on fixed days, aggregated ninety-one days. The vacations embraced all days not included in the terms. . . The word may embrace the period, after adjournment, in which a court does not sit and transact business, as, in a statute authorizing judgments by confession in vacation; and not embrace all the time the court is not actually in session, or the time of adjournment from day to day.[1]

VACATUR. L. Let it be set aside.

VADIUM. Law Lat. A pledge.

Vadium mortuum. A dead pledge; mortgage. A security with the condition that if the money be not promptly repaid the debtor's estate will be forfeited.[2]

Vadium vivum. A living pledge. A security to be held by the creditor till he has received the amount of his debt out of the income of the property pledged.[2] See PLEDGE.

VAGRANT.[3] One who wanders about, and has no certain calling; an idle fellow;[4] a vagabond; a tramp, q. v.

A person who roams about from place to place, begging, or living without labor or visible means of support.[5]

Any person going about from place to place begging, asking or subsisting upon charity, and for the purpose of acquiring money or a living, and who shall have no fixed place of residence or lawful occupation in the county or city in which he shall be arrested, shall be taken and deemed to be a tramp and guilty of a misdemeanor.[5]

Any act of begging or vagrancy is prima facie evidence.[6]

Vagrancy is distinct from disorderly conduct and breach of the peace, and includes only such cases of vagabondage as are known to the common law.[7]

Such statutes, designed to suppress vagrancy, as are in derogation of the right of trial by jury, are to be strictly construed.[8] See CONVICTION, Summary.

A statute authorizing two overseers of the poor, by writing, under their hands, to commit vagrants and paupers to the work-house, is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.[9] See PROCESS, 1, Of law.

---

[1] Vaughan v. Johnson, 77 Va. 300 (1883); Johnson v. Mann, ib. 271 (1883).

[2] Steubenville v. Culp, 38 Ohio St. 18, 26 (1882).

[3] Re Farrow and Bigby, 4 Woods, 492-94 (1880), cases, Woods, Cir. J. Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 3.

[4] [Cline v. Greenwood, 10 Oreg. 238-39 (1882), cases.

[5] Laselle v. Hoboken Ins. Co., 43 N. J. L. 470 (1881); Sleeper v. N. H. Ins. Co., 56 N. H. 404 (1876).

Marshall v. Bompart, 18 Mo. 87 (1853).

[6] See Walsh v. Commonwealth, ante.

[7] Kansas Pacific R. Co. v. Twombly, 100 U. S. 81 (1879).

[8] Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 415 (1881).

[9] Brayman v. Whitcomb, 134 Mass. 526 (1883), C. Allen, J.

[1] Conkling v. Ridgely, 112 Ill. 36, 40, 43 (1884), Sheldon, J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 157; 21 N. Y. 344.

[3] L. vagari, to wander.

[4] [Jacob's Law Dict.

[5] Penn. Act, 1879, No. 31.

[6] See Del. Laws, 1879, No. 223; North Car. Laws, 1879, No. 355; Ohio Act, 1879, No. 191; Mary. Laws, 1880, No. 43; Mass. Laws, 1880, No. 231, c. 257, §§ 2-3; 1 N. Y. Laws, 1880, No. 296.

[7] Re Way, 41 Mich. 301 (1879). Campbell, C. J.

[8] Bullock v. Geomble, 45 Ill. 222 (1867); People v. Turner, 55 id. 287 (1870); Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 426 (1856); 41 Mich. 308, supra.

[9] Portland v. Bangor, 65 Me. 120 (1876). See also Prescott v. State, 19 Ohio St. 184 (1869); Johnson v. Waukesha County, 64 Wis. 268 (1885).

Idleness in any person whatsoever is a high offense against public economy. . . Idle persons or vagabonds, whom ancient statutes describe to be "such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, haunt customable taverns and ale-houses, and routs about, and no man wot whence they come nor whither they go," or such as are more particularly described by 17 Geo. II (1744), c. 5, as idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues, are all offenders against good order.[1]

Statute 5 Geo. IV (1825), c. 83, revised and codified previous laws, and has been known as the English Vagrant's Act. Amendments were made by 1 and 2 Vict. (1837), c. 38. These acts form the basis of similar legislation in some of our States.

By force of various statutes, rogues and vagabonds are: persons convicted a second time as idle and disorderly; fortune-tellers, and such as use subtle arts to deceive; persons wandering abroad, lodging in barns or out-houses, in the open air, or in any tent, cart, or wagon, not having any visible means of subsistence, and not giving good account of themselves; persons guilty of indecent exposures — by pictures, or of the person; persons exposing wounds, or making fraudulent pretenses, to obtain alms; persons deserting their families or children, leaving them chargeable to the parish; persons playing or betting in a place to which the public have access, with any instrument of gaming; persons armed or prepared to commit a felony; persons found on premises for an unlawful purpose; reputed thieves, in a public place, intending to commit felony.[2]

VAIN THING. See LEX, Neminem.

VALID.[3] Having force, of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Opposed, invalid: as, a valid or invalid — condition, consideration, defense, instrument, marriage, sale. Whence validity, invalidity, invalidate.

A sale of land may be regular in form and in the mode of its conduct, but it cannot be "valid," unless authorized by law.[4]

"Validity" is legal sufficiency, in contradistinction to mere regularity. . . A valid judgment, decree, or sale is not void for any reason. A valid sale means one having the quality of legal sufficiency and complete obligation.[5]

That what is invalid in an instrument will not destroy what is valid, see UTILE, etc., p. 1077. See also LAWFUL; VOID.

VALUE.[6] 1. Applied without qualification to property of any description, means the price it will command in the market.[7]

Consists in the estimate, or the opinion of those influencing the market, attachable to certain intrinsic qualities belonging to an article.[1]

In custom laws, "the true market value of merchandise in the principal markets of the country from whence exported at the date of exportation."[2] See Market Value; Valuation.

Actual value; cash value. Within the meaning of a policy of insurance upon a stock of clothing, "actual cash value" is the sum of money the goods would have brought for cash, at the market price, at the time when and the place where they were destroyed.[3]

"Actual value," "cash value," "salable value," and like expressions, in enactments containing directions to tax-assessing officers, mean the same thing, are designed to effect the same purpose — to assess all species of taxable property at the actual value.[4]

Current value. The common marketable price of a thing without reference to the price the owner gave for it.[5]

True value. In duty laws the actual cost. This is the basis of appraisement.[6]

Equitable value. Referring to a life insurance policy, the difference between the cost of a new policy and the present value of the premiums yet to be paid on a forfeited policy when the forfeiture occurred.

Where failure to pay premiums is caused by a public war, the assured may recover the equitable value of his policy, with interest from the close of the war.[6] See Net Value.

For value. For a valuable consideration q. v.: as, a holder of paper for value, a trust for value. See NEGOTIABLE.

Intrinsic value. The true, inherent, and essential value of a thing, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere and to every one.

A bank note has no such value.[7]

Market or marketable value. The price established by public sales, or sales in the way of ordinary business.[8]

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 169.

[2] Wharton's Law Dict.

[3] L. validus, strong.

[4] De Treville v. Smalls, 98 U. S. 523 (1878), Strong, J.

[5] Sharpleigh v. Surdam, 1 Flip. 487-89 (1876), Emmons, Cir. J.

[6] L. valere, to be worth.

[7] Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. 399 (1837), Bronson, J.

[1] Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 463 (1878), Appleton, C. J.

[2] R. S. § 2962: Act 2 March, 1861; United States v. Nash, 4 Cliff. 112 (1869).

[3] Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 2 McCrary, 211 (1880), McCrary, Cir. J.

[4] Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Toledo, 101 U. S. 162 (1879), Miller, J.; Burr. Tax. p. 227, s. 99, cases.

[5] [Tappan v. United States, 2 Mas. 399-401 (1822), Story, J.

[6] N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 33-35 (1876).

[7] State Bank v. Ford, 5 Ired. L. 698 (1845), Ruffin, C. J.

[8] [Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 348 (1868), Wells, J.

The market price of an article furnishes the measure of damages, at the time at which the article was deliverable under a contract. Then the "price" is the "value," the rate at which the thing is sold. To make a market there must be buying and selling, purchase and sale. The asking price is not necessarily the market price. If the price was not fixed by agreement, and ranged between different rates, the jury may take the highest, lowest, or medium rate, according to the conduct of the defendant.[1]

As to what is the market price is sometimes a matter of opinion which may require, for its formation, the consideration of a great variety of facts, as, prices-current, sales, shipments, letters from dealers and manufacturers.[2]

Appraisers of imports are to appraise according to the market value in the principal markets of the country from which the same was imported.[3] See MARKET, Price.

Net value. The net value of a policy of life insurance represents, approximately, the amount of the payments which have been made by the holder in excess of the yearly cost of insurance.[4] Compare Equitable Value.

Par value. See PAR, 2.

Value received. An equivalent or a sufficient consideration has passed or exists.

The rule is that in an action upon a non-negotiable instrument a consideration must be proved. But when the instrument on its face states the consideration, or purports to be given for "value received," a prima facie case of consideration is made out, as between the original parties, and as against third persons. Indeed, those words, though usual, are not necessary in a negotiable instrument: the instrument of itself is evidence of a legal consideration for the obligation it creates. If no such consideration existed it is incumbent on the defendant to establish that fact. Hence, the plaintiff need not aver, nor prove — until the presumption has been overcome by testimony — that the obligation was originally based upon a sufficient consideration of some kind.[5] See NEGOTIABLE; CONSIDERATION, 2.

In Missouri a statute provides that a promissory note shall not be a negotiable instrument unless it contains the words "value received," but the recital is not essential to impart negotiability to a bill of exchange.[1]

Valuable. (1) Of some value; worthy of preservation: as, valuable papers.[2]

(2) Bearing a value; of equivalent worth: as, a valuable consideration, q. v.

(3) That on which money is payable irrespective of contingency: as, a valuable security.[3]

Valuation. The act of estimating the worth, or of appraising the value, as, of an article of property; also, the value placed upon the article.

Over-valuation. An estimate higher than the real value; excessive valuation.

Of insured property, unless so excessive as to amount to proof of fraud, does not vitiate the contract, because an estimate is a matter of mere opinion.[4]

The ordinary test of the value of property is the price it will command in the market if offered for sale. Individual men may honestly differ about the value of property, or as to what it will bring in the market, and such differences are often marked among those whose special business it is to buy and sell property of all kinds. The duty of a person seeking insurance, who is to give the "estimated value" of the property, is to deal fairly in estimating the market value.[5]

G., wishing to borrow money of B., offered as security a mortgage upon land containing sandstone quarries, which had not been worked sufficiently to show their extent. He furnished, however, the certificate of two other persons, each setting forth that he had for many years resided near the quarries and was acquainted with them, and giving, in his best judgment, their value, which was one hundred and fifty per cent. more than the amount of the loan. B. took the mortgage and lent the money, which was not paid. Upon a foreclosure sale, the land brought less than one-sixth of the loan. B. thereupon sued G. and the other parties to recover damages for the loss sustained, and he charged that they had conspired to defraud him by a false and fraudulent certificate. Held, that the action would not lie, defendants not being liable for an expression of opinion, however fallacious, in regard to property the value of which depended upon contingencies that might never occur, or developments that might never be made. The court, arguendo, said: To justify any imputation of fraud in giving the certificate, it was necessary to show that the parties signing

[1] Blydenburgh v. Welsh, Baldw. 341-43 (1831), Hopkinson, J.

[2] Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 542 (1873), cases.

[3] United States v. Nash, 4 Cliff. 112 (1869), cases; R. S. § 2932: Act 2 March, 1861.

[4] Connecticut Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 133 Mass. 165 (1882), Morton, C. J.

[5] See Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. 282 (1820), Story, J.; Benjamin v. Tillman, 2 McLean, 213 (1840), cases; Gamwell v. Mosley, 11 Gray, 173 (1858); Coursin v. Ledlie, 31 Pa. 508 (1858), cases; Averett v. Booker, 15 Gratt. 164 (1859), cases; Miller v. Cook, 23 N. Y. 496 (1861), cases; Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Iowa, 270 (1871); Frank v. Irgens, 27 Minn. 43 (1880); Kearney v. Whitehead, 34 La. An. 530 (1882); 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 161, cases.

[1] Taylor v. Newman, 77 Mo. 263 (1883), cases.

[2] [Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. 135 (1867).

[3] The Queen v. Tatlock, 2 Q. B. D. 163 (1876), Cockburn, C. J.

[4] Lynchburg Fire Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 582 (1882); Sturm v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 83 (1875), cases; May, Ins. § 373; Wood, Ins. 427.

[5] First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 677-78 (1877), Harlan, J.; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 92 id. 518-19 (1875).

it had knowledge, at the time, that the value of the property was materially less than their estimate. And from the nature of the property, and its imperfectly developed condition, such knowledge was impossible. No one could know its actual value until further development was made. Until then, any estimate must have been entirely speculative and conjectural. It would depend as much, perhaps, upon the temperament and expectations of the party making it as upon any knowledge of facts. The law does not hold one responsible for the extravagant notions he may entertain of the value of property, dependent upon its future successful exploitation, or the result of future enterprises; nor for expressing them to one acquainted with its general character and condition. How could an over-estimate in such a case be shown? Other estimates would be equally conjectural. The law does not fasten responsibility upon one for expressions of opinion as to matters in their nature contingent and uncertain. Such opinions would probably be as variant as the individuals who give them utterance. A statement of an opinion assigning a certain value to property like a mine or a quarry not yet opened is not to be pronounced fraudulent because the property upon subsequent development may prove to be worthless; nor is it to be pronounced honest because the property may turn out of much higher value. . . Whenever property of any kind depends for its value upon contingencies which may never occur, or developments which may never be made, opinion as to its value must necessarily be more or less of a speculative character; and no action will lie for its expression, however fallacious it may prove, or whatever the injury a reliance upon it may produce. The determination of its truth or falsity, until the contingency occurs or becomes impossible, would lead the courts into investigations for which they have no fixed rules to guide their own judgments or to instruct juries. For opinions upon matters capable of accurate estimation by application of mathematical rules or scientific principles, such, for example, as the capacity of boilers, or the strength of materials, the case may be different. So, also, for opinions of parties possessing special learning or knowledge upon the subjects in respect to which their opinions are given, as of a mechanic upon the working of a machine he has seen in use, or of a lawyer upon the title of property which he has examined. Opinions upon such matters are capable of approximating to the truth, and for a false statement of them, where deception is designed, and injury has followed from reliance on them, an action may lie.[1]

Valued. With value agreed upon: as, a valued policy of insurance, q. v.

See APPRAISE; DESCRIPTION, 4; IMPAIR; JUST, 2; PRICE.

2. Effect, import; as, in a law respecting setting forth, in an indictment, the value of an instrument alleged to have been forged, uttered, etc.[1]

VARIANCE.[2] Failure of proof to correspond with the allegation.[3]

A disagreement between the allegations and the proof in some matter which, in point of law, is essential to the charge or claim.[4]

To be objected to at the trial; cannot avail the defendant, as an error, in the higher court, nor on a motion for a new trial. It is material only when it misleads.[5]

Sometimes confounded with "departure" in pleading, as in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, all editions, and even in Gould's Pleading, 4 ed., at pp. 251-52, secs. 97-100. See DEPARTURE, 3.

See also ALLEGATION; DESCRIPTION, 4; VIDERE, Videlicet.

VARIETUR. See NE, Varietur.

VASTUS. See DEVASTAVIT; WASTE.

VAULT. See BURIAL, par. 4.

VEGETABLES. See PERISHABLE; SOUND, 1 (1).

VEHICLE.[6] In the Revised Statutes, acts and resolutions of Congress, includes every description of carriage or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on land.[7]

A ferry-boat is not a vehicle, within a statute providing for a specific tax on "carriages and other vehicles used for passengers for hire."[8]

But a street-sprinkler is a "public vehicle," within an ordinance imposing a license upon public vehicles using streets for trade or traffic.[9]

The phrase "or other wheeled vehicle of whatever description," used in a statute, following such specified vehicles as "carriages, wagons, buggies, sleighs and sleds," was held to refer to vehicles of the same

[1] Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 556-58 (1881), Field, J., citing Holbrook v. Connor, 60 Me. 578 (1872),— in which, to induce a sale, representations were made that untested land contained oil, a fact unknown except as inferred from the production of wells on neighboring lands and from a well upon the land itself; and in which it was held, also, that an action would not lie for a false statement as to the price the vendor had paid for the land, ib. 582, cases,— two judges, out of the seven, dissenting, ib. 585-91, cases. In Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 252 (1888), the principle stated in the text was applied in a suit to rescind a contract for the purchase of a silver mine on the ground of fraud in representations as to the probable amount of mineral it would yield, and to recover the consideration paid..

[1] Chidester v. State, 25 Ohio St. 433 (1874).

[2] L. varius, diverse, changing. Whence variant.

[3] See Nash v. Towne, 5 Wall. 638 (1866).

[4] House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 638 (1858), Sanford, J.; 30 id. 57; 72 Ill. 229.

[5] Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. 581 (1867), cases; 18 Bradw. 43, 491. See Gould, Pl., pp. 28, 62, 491.

[6] L. vehere, to carry, convey.

[7] R. S. § 4: Act 18 July, 1866, § 1.

[8] Duckwall v. New Albany, 25 Ind. 286 (1865).

[9] St. Louis v. Woodruff, 71 Mo. 92 (1879).

general class as those particularly specified, and not to include street-cars.[1]

See BICYCLE; CONVEYANCE, 1; ROAD, Law of; TEAM; VESSEL; WAGON.

VEIN. The terms "vein" and "lode," as used by miners, and in the Mining Acts of Congress of 1866 and 1872, apply to any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within the boundaries, clearly separating it from the neighboring rock. Included are all deposits of mineral matter found through a mineralized zone or belt coming from the same source, impressed with the same forms, and appearing to have been created by the same processes.[2]

A vein or lode is a body of mineral or mineral-producing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain.[3]

Those acts of Congress, not being framed in the interests of science, may not present scientific accuracy in the use of terms. They were intended to protect miners in the claims they locate and develop, and are to be so construed as to carry out this purpose.[3]

The law assumes that all veins are more or less vertical, and requires that the location of a claim shall be upon the top or apex of the particular vein. Having discovered a vein, and located the claim so that the top or apex is within his surface lines extended down vertically, the locator may follow the vein to any depth, as far as he can show that it is the same lode or vein. The "top" or "apex" is the end or edge or terminal point of the lode nearest the surface of the earth. If found at any depth, and the locator can define on the surface the area which will inclose it, the lode may be held by his location. No location can be made on the middle part of a lode, or otherwise than at the top or apex, which will entitle the locator to go beyond his lines.[4]

When a mining claim crosses the course of the lode or vein instead of being "along the vein or lode," the end lines are those which measure the width of the claim as it crosses the lode; and the side lines those which measure the extent of the claim on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface. . . When there are surface outcroppings from the same vein within the boundaries of two claims, the one first located carries the right to work the claim.[1]

See further MINE.

VELLE. See VOLO.

VEND.[2] To transfer for an equivalent in money; to dispose of by sale; to sell.

Applicable to merchandise or chattels.

Vendible. Capable of being sold, salable; merchantable, marketable, qq. v.

Vendor. The party by whom a sale is made.

Vendee. He to whom a sale is made.

Often confined to sales of realty. "Seller" and "buyer" are more comprehensive, applying also to personalty.

He is the vendor, rather than the grantor, who negotiates a sale of realty, and becomes the recipient of the consideration, though the title comes to the vendee from another source.[3]

A sale of personalty procured by fraud does not bind the vendor unless he afterward ratify the sale; and he may recover possession of the property or have damages for the conversion.[4]

What acts upon the part of the vendee of a chattel amount to a fraud upon the vendor has not been uniformly settled.[5]

See LIEN, Vendor's.[6]

Vendue. A public sale by outcry; an auction, q. v.

See CONVEYANCE, 2; DECLARATION, 1; DEED, 2; PURCHASE, 2, 3; REVENDICATION; SALE; VENDITIO.

VENDITIO. L. A sale.

Venditioni exponas. That you expose for sale. A writ by which the sheriff sells property already taken in execution under a fieri facias. Abbreviated vend. ex., and v. e.

In old practice, issued after a return that the goods so taken remained unsold from want of buyers. See EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

VENIRE. L. To come; to appear in court.

Tarde venit. It came late. A return that a writ came into the officer's hands too late to be executed before the return day named in the writ. The single word tarde is sometimes used.

---

[1] Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Birmingham Ry. Co., 114 Pa. 484 (1886); Act 18 May, 1871.

[2] The Eureka Case (Eureka Mining Co. v. Richmond Mining Co.), 4 Saw. 312, 311 (1877), Field, J. Approved, Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Cheesman, 116 U. S. 534 (1886), Miller, J.; Stevens v. Williams, 1 McCrary, 487 (1879). See also Juniper Mining Co. v. Bodie Mining Co., 7 Saw. 107 (1881): s. c. 11 F. R. 666; 123 U. S. 679.

[3] Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Cheesman, 2 McCrary, 195 (1881), Hallett, D. J.

[4] Iron Mine v. Loella Mine, 2 McCrary, 121 (1880), Hallett, D. J.: s. c. 16 F. R. 829. See also Flagstaff Silver Mining Co. v. Tarbet, 98 U. S. 463 (1878); Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Cheesman, 116 id. 529, 534 (1886), Miller, J.; Same v. Elgin Mining Co., 118 id. 196 (1886); Patterson v. Hitchcock, 3 Col. 545 (1877); R. S. §§ 2322, 2318, et seq.

[1] Argentine Mining Co. v. Terrible Mining Co., 122 U. S. 478, 485 (1887); Acts of 1866, 1872.

[2] L. vendere, to sell.

[3] Rutland v. Brister, 53 Miss. 685 (1876), Simrall, C. J.

[4] Amer v. Hightower, 70 Cal. 442-43 (1886), cases.

[5] See 25 Am. Law Reg. 247-50 (1886), cases, note to Farwell v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 179 (1886). Damages for non-fulfillment of contract, 22 Cent. Law J. 152 (1886), cases.

[6] Also 10 Va. Law J. 515 (1886).

Venire facias. That you cause to come. A writ commanding that jurors be summoned. The emphatic words in the old Latin writ, the full expression being venire facias juratores. Often termed simply the venire.[1]

Venireman. A person who appears, as a juror, in obedience to the command of a venire facias.

This word would seem, in Virginia, to be contrasted with "talesman," a by-stander who is taken as a juror.[2]

The common-law venire commanded the sheriff to "cause to come" a certain number of jurors; and the command included: the selection of the names of qualified men, summoning the persons drawn, a return of the writ, with the sheriff's action under it, whereby he "returned and delivered in" the jury to the court — showing the identity of the persons appearing with the persons drawn.[3]

Venire facias de novo. That you cause to come anew. An order, by a court of review, that a new trial be had; also, the writ which summons jurors for such a trial. Shortened to venire de novo.

The award of a venire de novo is in no instance more than an order for a new trial in a cause in which the verdict or judgment is erroneous in matters of law. It is never equivalent to a new suit.[4]

A trial de novo does not mean a trial on appeal with nothing but the record to correct errors, but a trial of the entire case anew, including hearing evidence, whether additional or not.[5]

When the court of review reverses a judgment entered upon a verdict for the plaintiff, but awards no venire de novo, the reversal constitutes no bar to another suit for the same cause of action.[6]

VENTER. L. 1. The womb. Fr. ventre. See PARTUS.

Ad ventrem inspiciendum, and de ventre inspiciendo. For examining the womb.

At common law, a reprieve was had where a woman, capitally convicted, pleaded pregnancy. The judge directed that a jury of twelve matrons or discreet women inquire into the fact; if they brought in a verdict of quick with child, execution was stayed.[7]

In or en ventre sa mere. Fr. In its mother's womb.

An infant en ventre is regarded as born for some purposes. It may have a legacy, and a guardian, assigned to it, and an estate may be limited to its use.[1]

2. A wife, or mother; maternal parentage: as, a child by the first venter; children by the same venter: uterine brothers and sisters.[2]

VENUE.[3] Locality, neighborhood; place of trial; county.

The county where a cause is to be tried.[4]

The clause in a declaration or indictment which states the place where the transaction was had, the injury inflicted, or the crime committed.

Some certain place must be alleged as the place of occurrence for each traversable fact. In local actions the true venue must be laid, and it cannot be changed; in transitory actions, may be laid in any county where the plaintiff can find the defendant.[5]

Originally, a venue was employed to indicate the county from which the jury was to come. The necessity of stating a venue is reluctantly confessed by the authorities. It is enough, in a civil action, to name a place in the county without naming the county.[6]

In a criminal proceeding the venue must be laid in the county where the act was committed. See PLACE, Of indictment.

Change of venue is allowed by statute in cases in which there is reasonable ground to believe that such local prejudice exists toward a party, or that such feeling exists on the subject-matter in litigation, as to preclude the probability of an impartial trial.

The affidavit required must state the facts from which the conclusion is deduced that an impartial trial cannot be had.[7] See KNOWLEDGE, 1; PREJUDICE.

VERACITY. See REPUTATION.

VERBA. See VERBUM.

VERBAL. See FACT; MERGER, 2; PAROL.

VERBUM. L. What is spoken; a word. Verba. Words, language, discourse.

Ex visceribus verborum. From the bowels of the words: from the vital part of the language.[8]

In hæc verba, and in his verbis. In these words. In totidem verbis, or totidem verbis. In the very same words.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 352; 4 id. 351.

[2] See Cluverius v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 787, 791, 794 (1886).

[3] United States v. Antz, 4 Woods, 182 (1882), Billings, D. J.: s. c. 16 F. R. 125; 18 Johns. *216; 13 How. St. Tr. 327.

[4] United States v. Hawkins, 10 Pet. *131 (1836), Wayne, J.

[5] Schultz v. Lempert, 55 Tex. 277 (1881); 10 Tex. 471.

[6] Fries v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 98 Pa. 144 (1881); Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. 82 (1868). See R. S. § 803; 2 Arch. Prac. 1549; Steph. Plead. 120.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 394; 1 id. 456.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 130; 33 Me. 48; 9 Metc. 263; 22 N. J. L. 57; 91 U. S. 638.

[2] See Doe v. Keen, 7 T. R. 386 (1797).

[3] F. venuë, a coming, place of arrival.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 383.

[5] McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. 248 (1843), cases.

[6] Bean v. Ayers, 67 Me. 486-87 (1878), cases.

[7] Territory v. Egan, 3 Dak. 125 (1882); People v. Yoakum, 53 Cal. 567 (1879); 16 Minn. 282.

[8] 10 Johns. 494; 47 Pa. 396.

Ipsissimis verbis. In the very words themselves. Nudis verbis. In the naked words.

In the identical language; word for word; verbatim.

Where an offense consists of words spoken or written, "the very words" used must be set forth in charging the offense, the substance of the language not then being sufficient. An exception to this rule obtains when the matter is too indecent to be spread upon the records.[1]

Verba de futuro, and de præsenti. See MARRIAGE, 1.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu. Words are to be understood effectively.[2] See RES, Ut res, etc.

Verba fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. Words the more strongly are taken against him offering them. Frequently, verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem: the language of instruments is to be construed against the person who proposes it, rather than against the person who is invited to accept it.

Does not apply to wills, nor to legislative documents, nor as against the state, nor where a third person would be made to suffer, but is applied to pleadings.[3]

Applies to a contract limiting the liability of a common carrier:[4] and perhaps, also, to questions, with their answers, propounded by a life insurance company.[5]

Self-preservation makes men careful not to prejudice their own interests by a too extensive meaning of words. The maxim tends to prevent deception: some would affect ambiguous and intricate expressions, if at liberty afterward to put their own construction upon them. But the rule, being one of strictness and rigor, is the last to be resorted to.[6]

Verba illata (or relata) inesse videntur. Words referred to are viewed as incorporated. A writing to which reference is made becomes thereby a part of the later instrument — contract, deed, will, statute, pleading.

Reference in a policy of insurance to the application incorporates the application as part of the policy.[7]

An answer to a letter cannot be put in evidence without also admitting the first letter, unless the answer contains statements which cannot be misunderstood when read alone.[1]

A mortgage and the note it secures, by identifying words, become virtually one instrument.[2]

If an agreement, required by the Statute of Frauds, is not signed, but a letter, acknowledging the agreement, is signed, this will satisfy the statute.[3]

Matter stated in one count may, by reference, without re-statement at length, be made part of another count.

A deed or plan directly referred to in another deed becomes thereby part of the latter.

Where a map or plan of a tract of land is referred to in a deed containing a description of one of the lots, such map or plan is regarded as giving the true description, as if it were recited in the deed.[4]

Verba intentione debent inservire. Words ought to subserve the intention.

Expresses the better rule of construction for a statute, when it can be acted upon without doing violence to language or wresting it from a fair application to the subject-matter.[5]

VERDICT.[6] The saying of the truth. The finding of a jury.

The answer of the jury to the questions of fact contained in the issue formed by the pleadings.[7]

General verdict. This directly finds or negatives all facts in issue, in a general form. Special verdict. When the jury finds the facts particularly, and submits to the court the questions of law arising upon them.[7]

A "general verdict" is that by which the jury pronounces generally upon all the issues for the plaintiff or for the defendant. A "separate-general verdict" is the finding, upon any of the issues. A "special verdict" is the finding of facts by a jury, as shown in their answers to questions submitted to them in writing.[8]

---

[1] United States v. Noelke, 17 Blatch. 560–61 (1880), cases; United States v. Bennett, 16 id. 343–50 (1879), cases.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 380; 2 Johns. Cas. 97, 101.

[3] Broom, Max. 594; Whart. Max.

[4] 2 Pars. Contr. 241.

[5] 2 Pars. Contr. 357, 465; 30 F. R. 911.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 380, 121, 347; 2 Pars. Contr. 506, cases.

[7] First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 675 (1877).

[1] Brayley v. Ross, 33 Iowa, 508 (1871), Beck, C. J.; Stone v. Sanborn, 104 Mass. 324 (1870), cases; Newton v. Price, 41 Ga. 195 (1870); Lester v. Sutton, 7 Mich. 331 (1859); Bryant v. Lord, 19 Minn. 404 (1872); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 201, note; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1127.

[2] Winchell v. Coney, 54 Conn. 31 (1886). See also Wilson v. Roots, 119 Ill. 386 (1887).

[3] 2 Whart. Ev. § 872, cases; 3 Pars. Contr. 4, cases.

[4] Chapman v. Polack, 70 Cal. 495 (1886), cases: Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 696 (1888).

See generally Smith, Contr. 506; 2 Pars. Contr. 421; 2 Black, 504; 62 Cal. 638; 74 Me. 306; 121 Mass. 50; 133 id. 514; 144 id. 359; 64 Pa. 400.

[5] Milton v. Babson, 6 Allen, 324 (1863), Bigelow, C. J.; 2 Bl. Com. 379.

[6] L. vere dictum, said by the truth.

[7] Day v. Webb, 28 Conn. 144 (1859), Waldo, J.; 45 Me 536; 3 Tex. Ap. 513.

[8] Kentucky Civil Code, § 336, subs. 1, 2, 3.

By a separate-general verdict the jury pass upon an issue that may be constituted of many facts: by a special verdict, upon the existence of facts without reference to any issue. A separate-general verdict is separate as to the particular issue, as distinguished from any other issue, and general as to the particular issue; that is, it applies in cases where there is more than one issue.[1]

A special verdict is based upon 13 Edw. I (1286), c. 30. The jury state the naked facts, as they find them to be proved, and pray the advice of the court thereon; concluding, conditionally, that if upon the whole matter the court should be of opinion that the plaintiff had cause of action, they find for the plaintiff; if otherwise, for the defendant. This is entered at length on the record, afterward argued, and determined by the court.[2]

If error exists in a general verdict, it can be corrected only by a new trial. The usual course is to sustain a special verdict if it contains the facts necessary to a proper judgment upon the matter in controversy; the court of original jurisdiction may render such judgment as the case requires. Error apparent in the record is re-examinable on a writ of error.[3]

It is of the very essence of a special verdict that the jury find the facts on which the court is to pronounce the judgment according to law, and the court is confined to the facts so found. Stating the evidence of the facts is insufficient. . . The verdict is formally prepared by counsel, subject to correction by the court; after being found, it is entered on the record, and the questions of law are then decided by the court, as in a case of demurrer. In a court of error nothing is open for revision except the questions of law inferentially arising upon the facts stated. The proceeding, like a bill of exceptions, enlarges the record by incorporating the facts of the case. Error apparent in any part of the record is within the revisory power.[4]

By leave of court, the verdict may be prepared by the parties, subject to correction by the court, and may include agreed facts in addition to those found by the jury. The purpose is, that the court may have time to hear the parties and give the questions of law deliberate consideration.[5] Rulings on evidence are not properly included, any more than in an agreed statement of facts; because the verdict is entered on the record, and the judgment is based on the findings of the jury.[6] See CASE, 2, Stated; FINDING, 4, Special.

Privy verdict. Where the judge has left or adjourned court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privily to the judge out of court: which verdict they afterward affirm by a public verdict given openly in court; wherein, if they please, they may vary from the first verdict.[1]

A privy verdict is not known in criminal practice; but that practice allows the judge to adjourn while the jury withdraw to confer, and to return in order to receive the verdict in open court.[2] Finding such verdicts is seldom indulged; the practice would allow time for tampering with a jury.[3]

Sealed verdict. A verdict which a jury seal up, return to court, and at the next sitting make known as their finding.

Sealed verdicts are common. In each case, when the court is again session, the jurors assemble and announce their finding in all respects as if it had not been sealed.[4] See POLL, 1.

Public verdict. In this the jury openly declare that they have found the issue for the plaintiff or the defendant.[5]

When the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff, the court may direct a verdict for the defendant.[6] See further NONSUIT.

But the court cannot direct a verdict of guilty as to a criminal offense, even where the facts are admitted, and the question of guilt depends upon a matter of law left for the court to determine.[7]

On the trial of a felony, at common law, a verdict cannot be rendered in the absence of the accused; and the record should show that he was present.[8]

After a verdict for a plaintiff it is presumed he proved every fact indispensable to a recovery, though no evidence appears in the record to show it.[9]

Where it is so palpable that the jury have erred as to suggest the probability that their verdict was the result of misapprehension or partiality, the court will set aside the verdict.[10]

---

[1] [Witty v. Chesapeake, Ohio, &c. R. Co., 83 Ky. 29 (1884), Hines, C. J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 377; Collins v. Riley, 104 U. S. 324 (1881).

[3] New Orleans Ins. Co. v. Piaggio, 16 Wall. 387–88 (1872), cases.

[4] Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 432–33 (1857), cases, Clifford, J.; Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 U. S. 500–1 (1882), cases, Matthews, J.

[5] Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 432–33 (1867). See also Wallington v. Dunlap, 14 Pa. 32–33 (1850), cases.

[6] Pomeroy v. Bank of Indiana, 1 Wall 603 (1863). Upon special interrogatories to juries, see 20 Am. Law Rev 866–88 (1886), cases.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 377; 5 Phila. 124; 6 id. 520.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 360.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 377.

[4] United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 373–75 (1879), cases; Doyle v. United States, 11 Biss. 100 (1881).

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 377.

[6] Schofield v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 114 U. S. 619 (1885).

[7] United States v. Taylor, 11 F. R. 470 (1882); th. 475.

[8] United States v. Whittier, 13 F. R. 536 (1882); State v. Cartwright, 10 Oreg. 195 (1881), cases.

[9] Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 340 (1844); Garland v. Davis, 4 id. 144 (1846); 3 Bl. Com. 394; 4 id. 375.

[10] Mengis v. Lebanon Manuf. Co., 10 F. R. 665 (1882); Poole v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 2 McCrary, 351 (1881); New York Central, &c. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 31 (1879).

The courts will not set aside a verdict for excessive damages unless so excessive as to evince prejudice, partiality, or corruption in the jury.[1]

See also BEHAVIOR; CONTRARY; INSTRUCT, 2; JEOPARDY; JURY; LOT, 1; TRIAL.

VERIFY.[2] To show to be true; to confirm by oath: as, to verify an account, a petition, a plea, by making oath to the truth of the statement of the facts set forth. Whence verification.

Sometimes, to confirm or substantiate by oath, sometimes by argument; in legal proceedings generally the former.[3]

A notary may "verify" a mortgagee's written statement of the amount of his claim, but need not "authenticate" the act by his seal. "Verify" here means to swear to.[4] Compare AVER.

VERILY. See BELIEF.

VERITY. See RECORD, Judicial.

VERSUS. L. Turned toward: against.

Separates the name of a plaintiff from the name of the defendant. Abbreviated vs. and v.[5]

In New York, prior to 1848, when an action was brought by A against B, the declaration was entitled A, plaintiff, v. B, defendant. But the plea was entitled B, defendant, ads. (ad sectam) A. Generally, when a party was an actor in a proceeding, he placed his own name first. This explains why, in the earlier reports of that State, v. or ads. appears between the names of parties, and why, in the progress of a case from one court to another, the names themselves appeared reversed.[6] See under A, 3; SUIT, 1.

VERTU. "Objects of vertu and taste" do not necessarily include valuable paintings.[7]

VERUS. L. True; real, actual; genuine. Verum. The truth. See AVER; VERDICT; VERIFY.

VESSEL.[8] In the Revised Statutes and acts and resolutions of Congress, includes every description of water-craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.[9]

Vessel has been used in contradistinction to an "open boat," which is an open vessel without decks, and it rarely designates any water-craft without a deck; but "boat" is constantly used for such small vehicles of this nature as are used without a deck.[1]

Includes a steam canal-boat,[2] and a steam-dredge.[3]

May include any structure made to float upon the water, for purposes of commerce or war, whether impelled by wind, steam, or oars.[4]

Yet a raft is not a vessel.[5]

Foreign vessel. May sometimes be applied to any vessel not registered or licensed, in reference to the privileges derived from the revenue system, but, in a variety of instances, designates a vessel navigating under the flag and with the papers of a foreign sovereign.[6]

A vessel is to be registered at the home-port, which is the port nearest the owner's residence.[7]

Merchant vessel. Rev. St. § 4270, which provides that the penalties imposed by foregoing provisions regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels shall be liens upon the vessels, applies to those sections which declare a "fine" for the violation of its provisions, as well as to those which declare a penalty eo nomine; and a fine incurred by a violation of § 4253, which prohibits carrying more passengers than are allowed by § 4252, is therefore a lien upon the vessel. Under § 4270, the lien for carrying passengers in excess of the limit prescribed, cannot exceed the amount of the fine imposed upon the master, under criminal prosecution.[8]

Public vessel. A vessel belonging to a nation or government, as such, and a part of her sovereignty.

The liability of such a vessel for damages from a collision is merged into the liability of the sovereign. Redress is to come from the sovereign public faith, not through a court of admiralty.[9]

See generally SHIP, 2.

VEST.[10] 1. To clothe, robe; to cover, surround; to put something upon a person, confer upon, endow, put into the possession of, intrust to: as, to vest a person or a court with discretion, authority, power, jurisdiction.

2. To give an immediate, fixed right, of present or future enjoyment.[11]

---

[1] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Peregoy, 36 Kan. 431 (1887); Potter v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 22 Wis. 589 (1868). On amending verdicts, see 20 Cent. Law J. 145–50 (1885), cases; as to form and substance, 22 id. 101 (1886), cases.

[2] L. verus, true; facere, to make.

[3] De Witt v. Hosmer, 3 How. Pr. 284 (1848).

[4] Ashley v. Wright, 19 Ohio St. 295–96 (1869).

[5] Smith v. Butler, 25 N. H. 523 (1852).

[6] See Bowen v. Sewing Machine Co., 86 Ill. 12 (1887).

[7] Bridgman v. Fitzgerald, 43 L. T. 409 (1880).

[8] F. vaissel, a ship: L. vascellum, a small receptacle.

[9] R. S. § 3: Act 18 July, 1866. See The Devonshire, 8 Saw. 211 (1882).

[1] United States v. Open Boat, 5 Mas. 137, 134 (1828), Story, J.

[2] King v. Greenway, 71 N. Y. 416 (1877), cases.

[3] The Pioneer, 30 F. R. 206 (1886).

[4] Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. An. 611 (1875).

[5] Moores v. Louisville Underwriters, 14 F. R. 236 (1882); Raft of Cypress Logs, 1 Flip. 543 (1876).

[6] [The Sally, 1 Gall. 59 (1812), Story, J.

[7] Hays v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 17 How. 598 (1854), Nelson, J.

[8] The Strathairly, 124 U. S. 558 (1888).

[9] The Fidelity, 16 Blatch. 573 (1879), cases.

[10] L. vestire, to clothe: vestis, a garment, dress.

[11] Stewart v. Harriman, 56 N. H. 29 (1875), Cushing, C. J.

A statute, deed, or will is said to vest an estate or property in a person, or to vest him with the estate, meaning to confer upon him ownership in the subject thereof; and an estate is said to vest, and to become vested, in a person when it becomes his property.

A contract for the sale of ascertained goods "vests" the property immediately in the buyer, and the right to the price in the seller, unless that is not the intention.[1]

Devest. To remove, take away, withdraw: as, to devest a person of authority, power, right, title to property. Opposed, invest.

Divest is common, but not approved.

Adjudication in bankruptcy ipso facto devests the debtor of all rights of property.

The repeal of a statute does not devest vested rights. See REPEAL; RETROSPECTIVE.

Invest. To clothe.

(1) To put a thing upon one; to confer, put into one's possession, convey the exercise of: as, to invest with discretion or authority.

(2) To surround with, place in; to lay out money, or its equivalent, so as to produce an income; to put out money at interest. See further INVEST.

Vested. Not subject to a condition precedent or unperformed: as, a vested estate, interest, right; which may be either present or immediate, or even future but uncontingent, and, therefore, transmissible, and may be qualified by a condition which does not delay the actual vesting.

Other examples are "vested" legacies and remainders, qq. v. Opposed, contingent.

An estate is vested when there is a person in being who will have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate;[2] — when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment, or a present fixed right of future enjoyment.[3]

In the widest sense, vested rights are rights which are complete and consummated, so that nothing remains to be done to fix the right of the citizen to enjoy them.[4] See further RIGHT, 2 906. VESTED.

The law favors the vesting of estates, rather than their resting upon contingencies.[1]

VETO. L. I oppose, protest, forbid. Originally, the word in which the Roman tribunes and the praetor expressed dissent from a measure proposed by the senate or the magistrates.

The power in the President of the United States, and in the governors of the States, to refuse (executive) assent to a bill proposed for enactment into a law.

Whence veto power, message, clause.

"Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it becomes a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. . . If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Mannner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law."[2] Failure to sign a bill constitutes what is sometimes called a "pocket" or "silent" veto.

This makes the President in effect a third branch of the legislature. Whether the proposed law is necessary or expedient, whether it is constitutional, or whether it is so framed as to accomplish its intent, are questions transferred from the two Houses to the President. . . Said Webster: This is an extraordinary power, to be exercised only in peculiar and marked cases . . . vested in the President as a guard against hasty and inconsiderate legislation, and against any act, inadvertently passed, which might seem to encroach upon the just authority of other branches of government, or on the rights of States or of individuals.[3]

VEX. To harass, trouble, annoy. Said of a second suit or prosecution after another has been fairly tried on the merits and a verdict of acquittal or conviction rendered. "Vexatious litigation" is a common expression. See VEXARI.

VEXARI. L. To shake: to molest, annoy, trouble, prosecute, vex, q. v.

---

[1] Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 124 (1879), cases.

[2] Taylor v. Gould, 10 Barb. 396 (1851), Parker, J.; 28 id. 367.

[3] 4 Kent, 202; 2 Sm. & M. 347.

[4] Moore v. State, 43 N. J. L. 243 (1881), Van Syckel, J.; 7 Leigh, 496; 6 Yerg. 154; 4 Q. B. D. 116-26.

[1] Fairfax v. Brown, 60 Md. 60 (1882), cases; 50 Mich. 299; 38 Ohio St. 255.

[2] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 7, cl. 2.

[3] Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 50, 160-63; 1 Webster's Works, 267; Federalist, No. 73; 4 Madison's Works, 369; 1 Story, Const. § 878; 1 Kent, 289.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro uno et eadem causa. No person should twice be prosecuted for one and the same cause. No second suit can be maintained over a matter once fairly adjudicated.[1] No person shall be twice put in jeopardy. See ADJUDICATION, Former; ESTOPPEL, By record; JEOPARDY.

Vexata. See QUÆSTIO, Vexata.

VI. See VIS.

VIA. L. Way, road, path. See FILUM.

Via trita via tuta. The beaten path is the safe path; the worn way is the safest way.

Follow the rule: deviations are dangerous; adhere to precedent: innovations are perilous. Via antiqua via tuta, the old way is the safe way, and via tuta est tutissima, the beaten way is the safest, are other forms.[2]

VICARIOUS. See LIABILITY, Vicarious.

VICE. L. 1. In the place of; instead of. "Vice the officer dismissed."[3] See PRO, Hac vice.

Vice-comes. A deputy earl or sheriff, q. v.

Vice versa. The place, position, or order being reversed or exchanged; on the contrary.

2. Prefixed to a title, signifies that the person may serve for another in case of absence, incapacity, or death: as, vice-chancellor, vice-consul, vice-president, vice-principal, qq. v.; vice-officer.

VICINITY; VICINAGE.[4] Neighborhood; county.

Etymologically and by common understanding, "in the vicinity" means in the neighborhood, and "neighborhood," as applied to place, signifies nearness as opposed to remoteness. Whether a place is in the vicinity of another depends upon no arbitrary rule of distance or topography. "Vicinity" admits of a more indefinite and wider latitude in place than proximity or contiguity, and, as applied to territory, may embrace a more extended space than that lying contiguous to the place in question; as applied to towns and other territorial divisions, may embrace those not adjacent.[5] See COUNTY, 2; VENUE.

[1] 5 Mass. 176; 7 id. 423; 9 id. 423; 99 id. 208; 76 Pa. 239; 13 R. I. 477; 76 Va. 925.

[2] 5 Pet. 223; 1 Johns. Ch. 527, 530; 4 M. & S. 168.

[3] 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 296, 616.

[4] F. voisinage; L. vicinus, near.

[5] [Langley v. Barnstead, 63 N. H. 247 (1884), Allen, J.

VICIOUS.[1] A vicious propensity in an animal is a propensity to do any act which might endanger the safety of the persons or property of others in a given situation; not merely such propensity as impairs the utility of the animal for the purpose for which it is kept.[2] See ANIMAL.

VIDERE. L. To see; to perceive, understand, know.

Vide. See. Quod vide: which see. Words of reference. The last expression is abbreviated q. v., in referring to one word or subject only, as, that immediately preceding it; and qq. v., when the reference is to each of the several terms or topics just mentioned.

Videlicet. From videre licet, it is permitted to see: as you may see; to wit; namely. Abbreviated viz.

Scilicet, that is, scire licet, as you may know; to wit. See WIT.

The office of a videlicet, or a scilicet, is to particularize what is general in the words preceding, or in some other manner to explain what goes before.

While a viz. may restrain the generality of preceding words, it cannot enlarge or diminish the preceding subject-matter. If the averment immediately preceding is direct and positive, that which immediately follows is so. Any fact, in its nature traversable, may be traversed though placed under a viz. A material fact cannot be made immaterial by being placed there. Therefore, if an averment under a viz. contains matter in itself material, but which is repugnant to what goes before, the pleading is ill. If that which comes under a viz. is immaterial, or of mere form, its repugnancy to what goes before does not affect the pleading, but it will be rejected as surplusage.[3]

The terms generally used are "to wit," or "that is to say."

A viz. serves to give additional particulars of time or place, or circumstances explanatory of previous statements made in general terms; it cannot render nugatory previous specific averments.[4]

Will not avoid a variance, nor dispense with exact proof in an allegation of material matter.[5]

If repugnant to what has gone before, it will be rejected, but not if it can be reconciled and made restrictive.[6]

[1] L. vitium, fault, vice.

[2] Dickson v. McCoy, 39 N. Y. 408 (1868).

[3] Gould, Plead. 58, secs. 35-41; United States v. Burnham, 1 Mas. 67 (1816), cases; Steph. Pl. 309; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 60.

[4] Lewis v. Hitchcock, 10 F. R. 7 (1882), Brown, J.

[5] Bruguier v. United States, 1 Dak. 9 (1867); State v. Murphy, 55 Vt. 549 (1883); 26 Conn. 431; 47 Ill. 175; 132 Mass. 3, 491; 9 Minn. 317; 7 Cow. 45; 4 Johns. 450; 2 Flip. 445.

[6] Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. Jr. *194 (1796).

VIE. F. Life.

Cestui que vie. He who lives; he whose life measures the duration of an estate. See further CESTUI.

Per autre vie. For the life of another. The last term is applied to a tenant or to a tenancy limited on the life of another person than the grantee; the first term, to such other person.[1]

VIEW.[2] Seeing, sight, examination by the eye; ocular inspection or survey: as, that a sheriff may arrest upon view, without process. See ARREST, 2 (2, 3).

Whence view of, and to view, a body. See CORONER.

Whence also view, re-view, viewer, board of viewers, etc., as applied to an ocular examination, with report, upon the proposed route of a highway. See REVIEW, 1; ROAD, 1.

Whence, again, the views had by juries, of the spot where a crime is alleged to have been committed, of the location of a railroad upon property alleged to be damaged thereby, and the like. See COMPENSATION, 3.

In many States statutes provide for a view in civil and criminal cases. The first English statute was 4 Anne (1706), c. 16. The general practice is to have the view after the jury has been impaneled. The ruling of Lord Mansfield has been followed, that a view will be allowed only when, in the sound discretion of the court, it appears to be necessary or proper. From the enactments of the greater number of States it would appear that the court has power of its own motion to order the view. In a few States, however, the rule is otherwise. In Massachusetts, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, the authority to order the view seems to be confined to cases where it is asked by either party, and in Indiana, in criminal cases, it can only be allowed "with consent of all parties."

"The purpose is to enable the jury, by view of the premises, the better to understand the testimony and thereby the more intelligently to apply it to the issues; not to make them silent witnesses, burdened with testimony unknown to the parties, and in respect to which no opportunity for cross-examination or correction of error, if any, could be afforded."

In some States, the statutes provide for a special jury in cases involving the condemnation of land.

At common law a view could not be allowed except by consent of parties. Under the constitutional right of the accused to be confronted with the witnesses against him, a view can only be had in his presence.

The particular stage of the proceedings at which the view may be ordered seems to be left to the discretion of the court.[1]

"With a view to a rehearing" means for the purpose of a rehearing.[2]

VIGILANS. L. Awake: watchful, circumspect; attentive to one's own interests; vigilant; active.

Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, leges subveniunt — or jura subveniunt or succurrunt. Those awake, not those asleep, the laws assist. Relief is not given to such as sleep on their rights. Legal remedies are for the active and vigilant. Another form is lex vigilantibus favet: the law favors the vigilant.

Applies to a surety who fails to know what ought to be known before he enters into a contract.

Along with the maxim interest reipublicæ, etc., expresses the principle of statutes for the limitation of actions.[3] See LACHES; STALE.

VIGOR. L. Strength, efficacy, force.

Ex proprio vigore. By its own inherent force.

Ex vigore termini. By the strength of the word. Ex vigore terminorum. From the very meaning of the language.

VILLAGE. Any small assemblage of houses, for dwelling or business, or both, in the country, whether situated upon regularly laid out streets and alleys or not.[4] See TOWN.

VILLEIN or VILLAIN.[5] Under the Saxon government, villeins were a class of people employed at the most servile work, and belonging, with their children and effects, to the lord of the soil, like the cattle upon it.

They held the folk-land, from which they were removable at the lord's pleasure. It is probable that the Romans admitted them to the oath of fealty, which raised them to an estate superior to downright slavery but inferior to every other condition. This they called villeinage, and the tenants villeins. Villeins "regardant" were annexed to the manor or land; villeins "in gross," to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed. They could be enfranchised by manumission; which was express when by deed,

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 123.

[2] F. veué: L. vid-, to see, look at.

[1] 26 Cent. Law J. 437, 439, 436-40 (1888), cases; Close v. Samm, 27 Iowa, 507 (1869); 92 Am. Dec. 342-45, cases.

[2] Richards v. Burden, 59 Iowa, 756 (1882).

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 188; 92 U. S. 98; 3 Cranch, C. C. 453; 17 F. R. 185; 19 id. 63; 30 id. 911; 66 Ga. 517; 34 La. An. 58; 8 Allen, 182; 12 id. 98; 77 Mo. 336; 55 Pa. 69; 58 id. 177; 60 id. 133.

[4] [Illinois Central R. Co. v. Williams, 27 Ill. 49 (1861), Caton, C. J.; Toledo, &c. R. Co. v. Spangler, 71 id. 568 (1874); 25 Minn. 404, 413.

[5] F. villein, servile; a boondman: L. villanus, a farm-servant.

and implied when the lord dealt with a villein as a freeman. See FEUD.[1]

VINDICATORY. See LAW.

VINDICTIVE. See DAMAGES, Exemplary.

VINOUS. See LIQUOR.

VIOLATION. See DEBAUCH; SEPULCHER.

VIOLENCE.[2] Force, physical force; force unlawfully exercised.

"Violence" and "physical force" are used interchangeably, in relation to assaults, by elementary writers on criminal law.[3]

In the commission of robbery, implies overcoming or attempting to overcome actual resistance, or preventing such resistance through fear. May include restraint of the person. Generally implies that the acts tend to produce terror and alarm.[4]

Domestic violence. "The United States . . shall protect each of them [the States] against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence."[5]

When, by act of February 28, 1795, Congress delegated to the President the power of protecting a State against violence, the power of judging what authority represented the State was also necessarily delegated, and its exercise cannot be reviewed by the courts.[6]

Violent. (1) Produced by force; unnatural: as, a violent death, q. v.

(2) By the exertion of force; forcible: as, violent means.

(3) Strong; almost conclusive: as, a violent presumption, q. v.

Violently. With force, forcibly; against consent: as, in charges of rape[7] and robbery, qq. v.

See FORCE; VIS; BATTERY; OBSTRUCT; 3 RIOT.

VIRES. L. Powers; corporate powers. See ULTRA, Vires.

VIRTUE. 1. Any rightful act done in office is "by virtue" of that office; a wrongful act may be "under color" of the office.[8] See OFFICE.

2. Moral quality; chastity; purity. See CHARACTER; CHASTE.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 92-95.

[2] L. violare, to use force to: vis, force.

[3] State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 212 (1862), Butler, J.

[4] People v. McGinty, 24 Hun, 64 (1881), cases.

[5] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 4.

[6] Luther v. Borden, 17 How. 43-44 (1849), Taney, C. J.; R. S. § 687.

[7] State v. Williams, 32 La. An. 336 (1880); State v. Blake, 39 Me. 322, 324 (1855); Commonwealth v. Fogerty, 8 Gray, 490 (1857).

[8] Broughton v. Haywood, 1 Phill. L. 383 (1867); State v. Costin, 89 N. C. 513 (1883).

VIRTUTE. See OFFICIUM, Virtute, etc.

VIS. L. Force.

Vi et armis. With force and arms, qq. v.

Vis divina. An act of God.

Vis impressa. Force imparted: the original force applied to a body to put it in motion. See CAUSE, 1, Proximate.

Vis major. Superior force; irresistible force. See ACCIDENT; ACT, Of God.

VISE.[1] To examine and indorse officially; as, to visé a passport, that the bearer may proceed on his journey.

Under the treaties and legislation respecting the immigration of Chinese to this country, it has been provided that such persons as are entitled to admission shall produce certificates as to occupation, etc., from their government, viséd by our diplomatic or consular representative at the port of departure.

VISIBLE. See POSSESSION, Adverse.

VISIT.[2] 1. In international law, the right of visit or visitation is the right to ascertain by inspection of a ship's papers that she has the nationality which she claims; the right of approach.[3]

The inter-visitation of ships at sea is a branch of the law of self-defense, and is, in point of fact, practiced by the public vessels of all nations when piratical character is suspected.[4]

2. The right officially to inspect a charitable institution, or a place receiving pecuniary assistance from an individual or the public. Whence also visitor, and board of visitors, for the person or persons authorized to perform such service.

Corporations, like the individuals who compose them, are liable to deviate from the end of their institution. For this reason the law provides proper persons to visit, inquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in them. With respect to a lay corporation, the founder, his heirs or assigns are the visitors. In the original and strictest sense, the founder of all corporations is the king alone. The law has appointed the court of king's bench as the place where he exercises this jurisdiction; there all misbehaviors of civil corporations are inquired into and redressed.[5]

3. A visitor to a place is one who goes there for pleasure or health, engages in no busi-

[1] Vē-zā'. F. viser, to put a visa to: to indorse, after examination: L. visus, seen.

[2] L. visitare, to go to see: videre, to see.

[3] [The Marianna Flora, 11 Wheat. 42 (1826), Story, J.

[4] 1 Kent, 153, note; Woolsey, Int. Law, § 213.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 480-82; 2 Kent, 300-5; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 674-75 (1819), Story, J.; Allen v. McKean (Bowdoin College Case), 1 Sumn. 300-1 (1833), Story, J.

ness, and remains only for a reasonable time.[1] See RESIDENT.

4. The expressions "visit" an act of negligence with damages, and "visit" liability, or the consequences of an act, upon one, are not uncommon.

VITIATE. See FRAUD; USUS, Utile, etc.

VIVA VOCE. L. With living voice; by word of mouth; by spoken word; verbally; orally: as, testimony given viva voce in court; to vote viva voce.

VIZ. See VIDERE, Videlicet.

VOCATION. See BUSINESS; HAPPINESS; TAX, 2; TRADE.

VOID; VOIDABLE.[2] As employed in contracts, laws, decisions, and text-books these words are often ambiguous. They have been more or less interchanged in speaking of agreements, assignments, conveyances, sales, leases, orders, judgments, and other acts, transactions, and proceedings where incapacity, irregularity, or actual or imputed fraud is present.

Void. Properly, of no legal force, null, incapable of confirmation or ratification; often, voidable or capable of being avoided.[3]

Said of an act of no effect at all — a nullity ab initio.[4]

Whenever entire technical accuracy is required, only applied to contracts that are of no effect whatever — mere nullities, incapable of confirmation or ratification.[5] But also used in the sense of

Voidable. Whatever may be avoided; not absolutely null and invalid:[6] as, in saying that fraud renders a contract voidable at the option of a party defrauded;[7] that an unauthorized contract by a trustee is voidable, and not necessarily void.[8]

A transaction void for unlawfulness cannot be bettered by ratification.[9]

A judgment may be erroneous and not void, and it may be erroneous because void. The distinctions between void and merely voidable judgments are nice, and they may fall under the one class or the other as they are differently regarded.[10]

A thing is "void" which is done against law, at the time of doing it, and where no person is bound by the act. A thing is "voidable" which is done by a person who ought not to have done it, but who, nevertheless, cannot avoid it himself, after it is done. Whenever the act takes effect as to some purposes, and is void as to persons who have an interest in impeaching it, it is not a nullity, and, therefore, is not utterly void, but merely voidable. Another test of a void act or deed is, every stranger may take advantage of it; not so as to a voidable one.[1]

In some cases it is said that fraud in procuring a contract makes it "void," in others, only "voidable." While a conveyance which is made in fraud of creditors is usually called "void," in many cases "voidable" is designedly substituted. Provisions in leases are common that for non-performance of a covenant the lease shall be "void," yet the word is perhaps generally held to mean "voidable." And "voidable" is now the usual predicate of contracts by infants. These instances reveal the general principle that the persons intended to be wronged by the particular transaction are not bound by it, also that they are not bound to reject it: they may adopt it, after they learn of it. Contracts absolutely void are contracts to do an illegal act, or to omit a legal public duty. They have no legal sanction; they establish no legitimate bond or relation between the parties.[2]

That is absolutely void which the law or the nature of things forbids to be enforced at all; that is relatively void which the law condemns as wrong to individuals, and refuses to enforce as against them. It is void because absolutely or relatively invalid or not binding.[2]

In all contracts, when stipulations are inserted for the sole benefit of one of the parties, the word "void" will be construed "voidable." Thus, an insurer may waive a breach of the contract and continue the policy in force.[3]

The fact that one promise is illegal will not render a disconnected promise void. But the doctrine does not embrace cases where the objectionable stipulation is for the performance of an immoral or criminal act for such an ingredient taints the entire contract; nor in general, will it apply where a part of the considere tion is illegal. Many decisions hold that where there are several considerations, and one is illegal, the

[1] [Exp. Archy, 9 Cal. 168 (1858).

[2] F. voide: L. viduus, bereft, empty.

[3] [Van Schaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa, 203-5 (1873), cases.

[4] [Inskeep v. Lecony, 1 N. J. L. 112 (1791).

[5] Allis v. Billings, 6 Metc. 417 (1843).

[6] Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 552 (1871); Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 287 (1872).

[7] Foreman v. Bigelow, 4 Cliff. 541 (1878), cases.

[8] United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 400 (1880).

[9] United States v. Grossmayer, 9 Wall. 75 (1869).

[10] Exp. Lange, 18 Wall. 175 (1873), Miller, J.

[1] Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. *528 (1820), Spencer C. J. See also Somes v. Brewer, 2 Pick. 191 (1824) Crocker v. Bellangree, 6 Wis. *668 (1858).

[2] Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 13-16 (1862), cases, Lowrie, C. J. See also Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 148-49 (1883), Matthews, J.

[3] Turner v Meridan Fire Ins. Co., 16 F. R. 454 (1883), cases; Hinckley v. Germania Ins. Co., 140 Mass. 47 (1885).

whole agreement is void; because it is impossible to say how much or how little weight the void portion had in inducing the contract.[1]

See AVOID, 1; CONFIRMATION, 1; LEGAL, Illegal; RATIFICATION; TRUST; USUS, Utile, etc.; VALID.

VOIR. F. The truth.

Voir dire. To speak the truth. Refers to an oath administered to a proposed witness or juror, and also to the examination itself, to ascertain whether he possesses the required qualifications, he being sworn to make true answers to the questions about to be asked him concerning the matter.

Thus, at common law, the interest of a witness in the result of a suit may be made to appear on the voir dire. And a supposed wife may be examined on the voir dire to facts showing the invalidity of the marriage.[2]

If the court has doubts as to the age (infancy) of a party, it may examine him upon an oath of voir dire, that is, to make true answers to such questions as the court shall demand of him.[3]

The use of this test is now questioned, for if a witness be sworn on the voir dire, he can be sworn on the examination in chief. The English practice is to put questions as to competency on the examination in chief. With us, the old practice continues in many courts, though this is rather as to the discretion of the judge, who may remand the question to the examination in chief. The appeal to the voir dire does not preclude recourse to other means of proving incompetency.[4]

In homicide cases, the practice of examining on the voir dire persons drawn as jurors, as to whether they have conscientious scruples against capital punishment, and as to relationship, prejudice, belief as to guilt, etc., is continued.

VOLO. L. I will, or am willing; I consent.

Volenti non fit injuria. To him consenting no injury is done. One who wills a thing to be or to be done cannot complain of that thing as an injury. That to which a man consents, or which he causes by his own action, cannot be considered an injury for which he can recover damages.[5]

Thus, a man cannot complain of an injury which he has received through his own want of foresight; nor as to a right of action or defense which he has knowingly relinquished.[6]

Applies where both plaintiff and defendant are in equal fault; where one pays a debt he might have avoided paying;[1] where one gives answers to improper questions;[2] where a tenant plants away-going crops;[3] where one voluntarily throws up a contract.[3]

When one prevents a thing being done he cannot avail himself of the fact of the non-performance.[4]

One who waives the effect of an alteration in an instrument and consents to be bound, when he might have objected, cannot complain.[5]

Equity will not relieve from the consequences of one's own inattention and carelessness,—the means of knowledge being at hand and equally available to both parties.[6]

One who becomes a member of a church or other society consents to be governed by the laws of the organization.[7]

Money paid or value parted with, under the alternative of submitting to an illegal exaction or discontinuing one's business, is not regarded as a voluntary act within the meaning of the maxim.[8]

See LACHES; WAIVER.

Voluit, sed non dixit. He willed but did not say it. He may have intended the result, but he did not provide for it.

Quoted in answer to an argument based upon the supposed intention of a testator[9] or law-maker.

Compare VOLUNTAS; NOLLE.

VOLUME. See COPYRIGHT.

VOLUNTARY. 1. In accordance with one's own free will; without constraint or compulsion; spontaneous; free; chosen, intended; allowed, suffered. Opposed, involuntary: as, a voluntary, and, in some senses, involuntary — answer, assignment, association, confession, conveyance, curtesy, escape, ignorance, manslaughter, negligence, nonsuit, oath, payment, sale, servitude, waste, qq. v.

"Voluntary" means spontaneously, of one's own will, without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others.[10]

Voluntarily. Used alone in a certificate of acknowledgment, is not the equivalent of "her own free will and accord, and without fear," etc.[11]

---

[1] Erie R. Co. v. Union Locomotive & Express Co., 35 N. J. L. 246 (1871) cases; Burlington, &c. R. Co. v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 31 F. R. 657, 659 (1887), Brewer, Judge.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 423-25; 2 id. § 339.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 382, 384, 370.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. § 492, cases.

[5] Richards v. City of Waupun, 59 Wis. 47 (1883).

[6] Wharton, Maxims.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 193.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 145.

[3] United States v. Wormer, 13 Wall. 29 (1871).

[4] United States v. Peck, 102 U. S. 65 (1880), cases.

[5] Smith v. United States, 2 Wall. 220 (1864).

[6] Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 383 (1871); Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 660 (1882).

[7] Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 224 (1881).

[8] Swift Co. v. United States, 111 U. S. 29 (1884); Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. United States, 104 id. 687 (1881); 106 id. 487. See also 69 Ga. 517; 34 La. An. 182; 11 Cush. 386, 550.

[9] See 4 Kent, 538.

[10] Kearney v. Fitzgerald, 43 Iowa, 586 (1876), Day, J.

[11] Scott v. Simons, 70 Ala. 356 (1881).

2. Without consideration — a valuable or adequate consideration; gratuitous: as, a voluntary — conveyance, deposit, settlement, trust, qq. v.

Volunteer. One who receives a voluntary conveyance,[1] that is, a conveyance made without a good or valuable consideration.

In contests between different volunteers equity will generally not interfere, but leaves the parties where it finds them as to title — their equities being equal. Equity favors a transferree for value, as against a mere voluntary contract of any nature, except, perhaps, a settlement upon wife and children. Exceptions are made in the cases of bona fide grantees for value, without notice, from volunteers — such innocent persons always being favorites in equity.[2] See especially CONVEYANCE, 2; SETTLE, 3.

VOLUNTAS. L. Will; intention; volition.

Stat pro ratione voluntas. The will stands for the reason.

The fact that a testamentary disposition is made, is sufficient reason for its being made.[3]

Voluntas reputatur pro facto. The will is to be taken for the deed.

In cases of treason, the rule at common law was, that the intention to commit treason was sufficient to constitute the crime without an overt act.[4]

Voluntas testatoris ambulatoria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory up to death.[5] See further AMBULATORY.

VOTE.[6] The will of a member of a body, formally manifested toward the decision of a question by the body as whole; also, the aggregate of the expressions of the will of the members.[7]

The word, with its inflections, is most commonly used in speaking of the election of officers of corporations and of government.

A "vote" is but the expression of the will of the voter — whether the formula of expression be by ballot or viva voce.[8]

A "voter" is an elector who votes — an elector in the exercise of his franchise or privilege of voting.[9]

"Voting" and "giving in a vote" are synonymous.[10]

The qualifications of voters are similar in all the States, but not uniform. Among those generally required are: citizenship, by birth or naturalization; residence for a given period; age — twenty-one years; payment of taxes, and registration; freedom from infamy, q. v.; sanity.[1] See INSANITY, 2 (3).

Casting vote. At common law, signifies, sometimes, the single vote of a person who ordinarily does not vote; and, in case of an equality of votes, sometimes, the double vote of a person who first votes with the others and, upon an equality, creates a majority by giving a second vote — as, in the New York statute relating to religious corporations.[2]

The President of the Senate "shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided."[3]

See ABODE; BALLOT; BRIBERY; CITIZEN; ELECTION, 1; FRANCHISE, 2, Elective; MAJORITY, 2; PRECINCT; QUALIFIED, 1; REGISTRY; RESIDENCE; SUFFRAGE.

Cumulative voting. "In all elections for directors or managers of a corporation, each member or shareholder may cast the whole number of his votes for one candidate or distribute them upon two or more candidates as he may prefer."[4]

By "whole number" is meant, as many votes for each share as there are directors to be elected.[5]

The section confers upon the individual stockholder the right to cast all the votes which his stock represents, multiplied by the number of directors or managers to be elected, for a single candidate. The intent was to work a radical change in the method of conducting corporate elections. The innovation, being made part of the supreme law, is thus placed beyond the power of legislative interference.[6]

The provision is unambiguous. If there are six directors to be elected, the single shareholder has six votes, and, contrary to the old rule, he may cast them for one candidate or distribute them to two or more candidates. The ordinary manner of conducting corporate elections is in nowise interfered with. Legislation directing the manner of exercising the right is not required: the provision is self-operative; and it applies to all private corporations, including railway and canal companies.[7]

The purpose of the provision is to enable the stockholders who are in the minority, on any question of administration or policy, to secure representation in the directory or management; but the right to cumulate does not exist unless expressly conferred: each shareholder being entitled, at common law, to but one

[1] [Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ga. 16 (1869), Brown, C. J.
[2] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 433-34, 176.
[3] See Dietz's Case, 41 N. J. E. 296 (1886).
[4] See 4 Bl. Com. 80; 4 Mass. 439.
[5] 2 Bl. Com. 502.
[6] L. votum, a wish; originally, a vow.
[7] [Abbott's Law Dict.
[8] People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 57 (1863).
[9] Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 362 (1871), Dixon, C. J.
[10] State v. Moore 27 N. J. L. 107 (1858).

[1] See McCrary, Elections, § 4.
[2] [People ex rel. Remington v. Rector of Church of Atonement, 48 Barb. 606 (1866).
[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 3, cl. 4.
[4] Penn. Const. Art. XVI, sec. 4.
[5] Commonwealth ex rel. Donnelly v. Tintsman, 23 Pitts. Leg. J. 122 (1876).
[6] Hays v. Commonwealth ex rel. McCutcheon 82 Pa. 521 (1876).
[7] Pierce v. Commonwealth ex rel. Pierce, 104 Pa. 154 (1883).

vote on each share for each member of the proposed new board.[1]

See CORPORATION; ELECTION, 1; MAJORITY, 1; PROXY.

VOUCH.[2] To call upon — in attestation; to attest; to affirm, confirm, support, prove; to aver that a thing is true.

"Vouched by witnesses" imports the same as testified by witnesses, called into court. A note subscribed by two persons cannot be said to be vouched by witnesses, until the persons are called and testify before a court respecting the note.[3]

Vouchee. A person called to attest or warrant.

Voucher. 1. Calling in a person, to answer in a real action, who warranted the title to the defendant; also, such warrantor himself.

Thus, in a common recovery, the tenant vouched another to warrant his title. If the vouchee appeared, he was made defendant in place of the voucher.[4]

2. An instrument which attests, warrants, maintains, bears witness.[5]

A document which serves to vouch the truth of an account, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind.[6]

Evidence, written or otherwise, of the truth of a fact — as, that services have been performed, or expenses paid or incurred.[7]

An account-book in which charges and acquittances are entered; also, any acquittance or receipt, discharging a person or being evidence of payment.[8]

In connection with the disbursement of monies, implies some written or printed instrument in the nature of a receipt, note, account, bill of particulars, or something of that character which shows on what account or by what authority a particular payment has been made, and which may be kept or filed away by the party receiving it, for his own convenience or protection, or that of the public.[9]

While it is true that receipts are not indispensable, it is still "the imperative duty" of registers of wills, of auditors of the accounts of executors, administrators, etc., and of the judges of orphans' courts, "to require some distinct and definite form of proof to establish the validity of demands against dead men's estates."[1]

That municipal vouchers are non-negotiable, see NEGOTIABLE.

VOYAGE.[2] A passage by water from one place to another.

As applied to vessels engaged in foreign and inter-State commerce, is not used of a tug making short trips from one body of water to another.[3]

In a policy of marine insurance, the enterprise begun; not, the route taken.[4]

Not limited to the passage of a vessel from one port to another, but may include several ports.[5]

Foreign voyage. A voyage to some port or place within the territory of a foreign nation.

Not, then, a whaling voyage into the northern seas.[6]

But may include, as within the meaning of the Coasting Act of 1793, a voyage to a place within the waters of the United States, for trade.[7]

See COURSE, 1; DEVIATION; INSURANCE, Marine.

VS. See VERSUS.

VULGAR. See INDECENT; OBSCENE.

W.

W. 1. As an abbreviation may denote west, western, Westminster, William (king), wills, Washington, Wyoming.

W. D. Western District. See D, 3.

2. In law-French, interchanged with g: as in wages and gage, ward and guardian, warn and garnish, warranty and guaranty.

WAFER. See SEAL.

WAGE.[3] To pledge, give assurance of security; also, a pledge. Whence wager, and wages, qq. v.

WAGER. 1. A pledge or gage.

Wager of battel or battle. Trial by combat. When the tenant in a writ of right pleaded the general issue and offered to prove it by his champion, and the tender was accepted, the tenant produced his champion, who, by throwing down his glove as a gage or pledge, waged or stipulated battel with the champion of the demandant. The latter, by taking up the gage, stipulated to accept the challenge.

[1] 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 476 a. As to the meaning of "majority of votes cast," in popular elections, see Walker v. Oswald, 68 Md. 146 (1887) — High License Act of 1886: 27 Am. Law Reg. 516-19 (1888), cases, contra.

[2] F. voucher, to cite, pray in aid of a suit: L. vocare, to call to or upon.

[3] Baker v. Coit, 1 Root, 225 (1790).

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 300; Coke, Litt. 101 b.

[5] State v. Hickman, 8 N. J. L. 301 (1826).

[6] [People v. Green, 5 Daly, 199 (1874), Daly, C. J.; 56 N. Y. 476.

[7] Brown v. Green, 46 How. Pr. 304 (1873): People v. Haws, 12 Abb. Pr. 202 (1861).

[8] Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. 218 (Mass., 1840), Shaw, Chief Justice.

[9] People v. Swigert, 107 Ill. 504 (1883), Mulkey, J.

[1] Romig's Appeal, 84 Pa. 237 (1877), Woodward, J.

[2] F. veiage, voyage: L. viaticum, provision for a journey: via, a way.

[3] The John Martin, 2 Abb. U. S. 181 (1870).

[4] [Friend v. Gloucester Ins. Co., 113 Mass. 332 (1873).

[5] Re George Moncan, 8 Saw. 353 (1882).

[6] Taber v. United States, 1 Story, 7 (1839), Story, J.

[7] The Lark, 1 Gall. 57 (1813); The Three Brothers, ib. 143 (1812).

[8] F. wage, gage, pledge. L. vas, vad-; L. L. vadium, wadium; old Scotch, wad-. See GAGE; VADIUM.

This mode of trial, which originated in the military spirit of early days, was introduced into England by the Conqueror. It was also resorted to in appeals of felony and upon approvements.[1] See APPROVE, 5; BATTEL.

Wager of law. As in wager of battel the defendant gave a pledge, gage, or vadium, to try the cause by battel, so in wager of law he was to put in sureties or vadios that at such a day he would make his law, that is, take the benefit which the law allowed him. In the view that in cases an innocent man of credit might be over-borne by false witnesses, this species of trial, by the oath of the defendant himself, was established: for if he swore himself not chargeable, and appeared to be a person of repute, he went free and acquitted of the cause of action. He had, however, to produce eleven neighbors as "compurgators," his secta or suit, who upon oath avowed their belief that he spoke the truth. Abolished by 3 and 4 Will. IV (1833), c. 42.[2]

If wager of law ever existed in the United States, it is now abolished.[3]

2. Placing something valuable, belonging in part to each of two individuals, in such a position, that it is to become the sole property of one, upon the result of an unsettled question.[4]

A contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening of an uncertain event.[5]

The contract by which a "bet" is made; also, the thing or amount bet, but not the subject on which the bet is laid.[6]

A wager is the bet or stake laid upon the result of a game. "Bet" and "wager" are synonymous, and applied to the contract of betting and wagering, and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. They may be laid upon acts to be done, events to happen, or facts existing or to exist,—upon things legal and illegal.[7]

Offering a premium is not a bet or wager. A "premium" is an award or recompense for some act to be done. A "wager" is a stake upon an uncertain event.[8]

At common law, all wagers were not illegal. Thus, it was not illegal to make a bet or wager on a horse-race; and an action to recover a wager could be maintained. . . To trot a horse in another State for a wager or stakes is not prima facie illegal in that State.[9]

Wagering contract. A wager, as defined above; that is, a contract in which the parties stipulate that they shall gain or lose upon the happening of an uncertain event in which they have no interest except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss.[1]

Whether a particular contract is wagering is for a jury to decide. All such contracts are void.

The generally accepted doctrine in this country is that a contract for the sale of goods [merchandise, commodities, stocks, etc.] to be delivered at a future day is valid, even though the seller has not the goods, nor any other means of getting them than by going into the market and buying them; but such a contract is only valid when the parties really intend and agree that the goods are to be delivered by the seller and the price is to be paid by the buyer; and if, under guise of such a contract, the real intent be merely to speculate upon the rise or fall of prices, and the goods are not to be delivered, but one party is to pay the other the difference between the contract price and the market price of the goods at the date fixed for executing the contract, then the whole transaction constitutes a mere wager, and is null and void. This is now the law in England also, by force of the statute of 8 and 9 Vict. (1845), c. 109, s. 18, altering the common law.[2]

Dealing in futures without intent to pay for or to receive or deliver the property is declared to be a wagering contract by recent enactments in Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, Texas, and other States; and "bucket shops" and other places maintained for enabling persons to make such contracts are declared to be nuisances.

See further FUTURES; OPTION, Contract; SPECULATION.

Wager policy. That in which the party assured has no interest in the thing assured, and could sustain no possible loss by the event insured against, if he had not made such wager.[3]

Wager or gambling policies are those in which the persons for whose use they issue have no pecuniary interest in the life insured.[4]

---

[1] 3 Bl. 337-41; 4 id. 346-48, 414.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 341; Coke, Litt. 295.

[3] Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat. 674 (1823).

[4] Edson v. Pawlet, 22 Vt. 223 (1850), Hall, J.

[5] Exp. Young, 6 Biss. 67 (1874), Blodgett, J.; Merchants' Savings, &c. Co. v. Goodrich, 75 Ill. 560 (1874).

[6] [Smoot v. State, 18 Ind. 19 (1862), Perkins, J.

[7] Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 16 (1858), Perkins, J.

[8] Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 63 (1878), Biddle, J.; Delier v. Agricultural Society, 57 Iowa, 481 (1881).

[9] Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, 544 (1880), cases; Cosmy v. Hillegas, 94 Pa. 122, 126 (1880), cases; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 510 (1884), cases.

[1] Fareira v. Gabell, 89 Pa. 99 (1879), cases, Hare, P. J

[2] Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 508 (1884), cases, Matthews, J.; Benj., Sales, §§ 541-42. See further Roundtree v. Smith, 108 U. S. 269 (1883); Higgins v. McCrea, 116 id. 686 (1886), cases; White v. Barber, 123 id. 419 (1887); Ward v. Vosburgh, 31 F. R. 12 (1887); 6 Biss. 53-67; 7 id. 552-58; 8 id. 217-19; 11 id. 60, 223; 10 F. R. 249; 11 id. 193, 201; 18 id. 263; 15 id. 438, 774; 68 Ga. 124, 296; 78 Ill. 43; 81 id. 415; 88 id. 33, 324; 58 Iowa, 711; 39 Mich. 337; 6 Mo. Ap. 269; 70 N. Y. 202; 71 id. 430; 83 id. 93; 55 Pa. 297-99; 70 id. 325; 89 id. 250; 10 W. N. C. 112; 11 C. B. 538.

[3] Amory v. Gilman, 2 Mass. 27 (1806), Parker, J.

[4] Gamba v. Covenant Mut. Life Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 47 (1872), Bliss, J.

A pretended insurance founded on an ideal risk, where the assured has no interest in the thing assured.[1]

Originally, applied to the practice of insuring large sums without having any property on board a vessel: insurance, interest or no interest; and also, of insuring the same goods several times over,—species of gaming without any advantage to commerce.[2] Now extended to all species of insurance.[3] See further INSURANCE, Policy of.

See also BETTING; GAME, 2; STAKE-HOLDER.

WAGES.[4] Compensation paid or to be paid for services by the day, week, or month; as, for the services of laborers.[5]

Compensation paid a hired person for his services: a specified sum for a given time of service or for particular work.[6]

The term suggests inconsiderable pay, without necessarily excluding "salary," which is suggestive of larger compensation for personal services. As applied to compensation made or to be made a laborer or employee, conveys the idea of a subordinate occupation which is not very remunerative; one of not much independent responsibility, but rather subject to immediate supervision.[7]

See EARNINGS; LABOR, 1; SALARY; ADMIRALTY; APPRENTICE; BUSINESS; EXEMPTION; HUSBAND; PARENT; SERVICE, 1.

WAGON. In a statute exempting property from execution, a common vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise of all descriptions.[8]

What is usually called a "buggy" is within the meaning of the term "wagon" in the Minnesota statute.[9]

The term is general. Vehicles known as wagons differ in style, form, and dimensions, depending upon the character of the use, the nature of the business, and the pleasure or notions of the manufacturer or owner. A "hearse" is a wagon.[10]

See CARRIER; TOOL; VEHICLE.

WAIF. Waifs, bona waviata, were goods stolen and thrown away by the thief in his flight, from fear of being apprehended.

If the party robbed did not recover the goods first, they were forfeited to the king, to punish the owner for not pursuing the felon.[1]

WAIVE.[2] To abandon, relinquish, surrender: said of property, claims, privileges, rights.

Waiver. A voluntary relinquishment of some right.[3]

The intentional relinquishment of a known right.[4]

A voluntary surrender and relinquishment of a right.[5]

Implies an election of the party to dispense with something of value, or to forego some advantage which he might at his option have demanded or insisted upon.[6]

A renunciation of some rule which invalidates a contract, but which, having been introduced for the benefit of the contracting party, may be dispensed with at his pleasure.[7]

There must be both knowledge of the existence of the right and an intention to relinquish it.[8] The waiver must be supported by an agreement founded upon a valuable consideration, or the act must be such as to estop the party from insisting on the performance of the contract or forfeiture of the condition.[9]

Waiver is a voluntary relinquishment of some right which, but for such relinquishment, the party would continue to have enjoyed. Voluntary choice, and not mere negligence, is of the essence, though from negligence, unexplained, such election may be inferred. Waiver is a question of fact, to be determined from declarations and acts, or from forbearance to act.[9] See KNOWLEDGE, 1.

---

[1] [Sawyer v. Dodge County Mut. Ins. Co., 27 Wis. 539 (1870), Ryan, C. J.: Arnould, Ins. 17.

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 460.

[3] 3 Kent, 275–78, 369, n, cases.

[4] Wage: stipulated pay.

[5] [Cowdin v. Huff, 10 Ind. 85 (1857), Perkins, J.

[6] [Ford v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 54 Iowa, 728 (1880), Beck, J.; Lang v. Simmons, 54 Wis. 529 (1885).

[7] South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Falkner, 49 Ga. 118 (1873), upon an act providing that the "wages of laborers and employees" should not be subject to garnishment or attachment. See also McLellan v. Young, 54 Ga. 400 (1875); People v. Remington, 45 Hun, 388 (1887); 1 Bl. Com. 428.

[8] Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418 (1855); Snyder v. North Lawrence, 8 Kan. 84 (1871).

[9] Allen v. Coates, 29 Minn. 49 (1882); Gen. St. 1878, c. 66, § 310. Contra, 27 id. 507.

[10] Spikes v. Burgess, 65 Wis. 481 (1886), Cassoday, J. See also 64 Ga. 625; 7 Kan. 320; 71 Me. 164; 18 Johns. 128; 19 id. 442; 32 Tex. 533; 39 id. 363; 46 N. H. 521; 47 N. Y. 194.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 296; 2 Kent, 358.

[2] O. E. waiven, to set aside, remove, refuse, give over: F. waiver.

[3] Stewart v. Crosby, 50 Me. 134 (1863), Davis, J.

[4] Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 40 (1864), Butler, J.; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 395 (1868), Foster, J.; 143 id. 374; State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 445 (1886), cases.

[5] Dawson v. Shillock, 29 Minn. 191 (1882), Dickinson, J.; 33 id. 117.

[6] Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 301 (1883), Cooley, J.; State Ins. Co. v. Todd, 83 Pa. 275 (1877); 12 Tex. 102.

[7] Hare, Contracts, 272.

[8] Ripley v. Ætna Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 164 (1864); Montague v. Massey, 76 Va. 314 (1882).

[9] [Fishback v. Van Dusen & Co., 33 Minn. 117 (1885), Mitchell, J. The question was whether a vendor had waived a condition for payment in cash on delivery of 5,000 bushels of wheat, or had made a conditional de-

Waiver of a tort. Said of the act of a person who, by treating a matter as a contract, waives his right to pursue it as a tort with the peculiar remedies, penalties and consequences belonging to it in that character.[1]

Thus, the owner of personalty may waive a tortious conversion of it.[2]

If property be tortiously taken or converted, the tort-feasor may be sued in trespass or trover, or the injured party may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit — as if there had been an implied contract. The defendant cannot set up his own wrong-doing to defeat the action, and a judgment will bar an action ex delicto.[3]

A party may waive any provision of a contract, statute, or constitution intended for his benefit.[4]

The doctrine of waiver is especially important in connection with covenants in lessees; as to these a waiver may be actual or express, and implied, as, in the last case, from taking rent after notice to quit for covenant broken.

Where no principle of public policy is concerned, a party is at liberty to waive a statutable provision intended for his benefit.[5]

A man may not barter away his life, freedom, or substantial rights. Thus, in a criminal case, it has been held, he cannot consent to be tried without a jury, or by a jury of eleven men.[6]

The public has an interest in his life and liberty. Neither can be lawfully taken except as prescribed by law. That which the law makes essential in proceedings involving the deprivation of either life or liberty cannot be dispensed with or affected by the consent of the accused.[7]

In a civil case he may consent to an arbitration, or decision by a single judge. He may waive removal into a Federal court, in each recurring case, but, not by an agreement in advance thus to forfeit a right on every occasion. And a party cannot waive jurisdiction.[8]

See ABANDON; ACQUIESCENCE; PRIVILEGE, 1, Personal; PROTEST, 2; VOID.

WALKING. See STREET; TRAVEL; NIGHT-WALKERS.

WALL. Occurs in the expressions ancient wall; common wall, division-wall, party-wall; and private wall. See FLEE.

Ancient wall. A wall built to be used, and in fact used, as a party-wall, for more than twenty years, by the express permission or continuous acquiescence of the owners of the land on which it stands.[1]

Common or division-wall. See Party-wall.

Party-wall. A wall built partly on the land of one person and partly on the land of another, for the common benefit of both, in supporting timbers used in the construction of contiguous buildings.[2]

A wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common — the most common and primary meaning; also, a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners; also, a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements; and, also, a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross-easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety.[3]

The principle upon which the law as to party-walls is based is the same as that applied to partition fences. This principle has been recognized in the law of France for ages. The absolute right of property is not invaded, for that absolute involves a relative, in that it implies the right of each adjoiner, as against the other, to insist upon a separation by a substantial boundary line.[4]

A right to a party-wall is a right which an owner of land has to build a division-wall partly over his line on the land of another. It is therefore a right appurtenant to land, and may properly be called an easement or servitude. In the city of Philadelphia, for example, this relation between adjoiners is regulated by statute. He that first builds on his line must erect the wall at his own expense, and it is then, as one whole wall, an essential part of his house, and real estate. Yet half of it rests on his neighbor's land, which is charged with a servitude for this purpose. The neighbor cannot use the wall without paying for so much of it as he intends to use; and, on paying, he may use it, and then the wall becomes a common wall, and each lot appurtenant to the other, as far as needed for its support. The price to be paid by the adjoining livery with right to reclaim reserved. See also Okey v. State Ins. Co., 29 Mo. Ap. 111 (1888).

[1] Harway v. New York City, 1 Hun, 630 (1874), Davis, Presiding Judge.

[2] Tome v. Dubois, 6 Wall. 554 (1867), cases.

[3] May v. Le Claire, 11 Wall. 235–36 (1870), cases.

[4] Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 159 (1872); Re Cooper, 93 N. Y. 512 (1883), cases.

[5] White v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 4 Dill. 183 (1877).

[6] Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 135–38 (1858); State v. Stewart, 89 N. C. 563 (1883); Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 448–49 (1880).

[7] Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 579 (1884), Harlan, J.

[8] Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 451 (1874); 1 Story, Eq. § 670; 25 Am. Law Reg. 402–4 (1886), cases.

[1] Eno v. Del Vecchio, 4 Duer, 63 (1854), Bosworth, J.

[2] Brown v. Werner, 40 Md. 19 (1873), Robinson, J.

[3] Watson v. Gray, L. R., 14 Ch. D. 194–95 (1880), Fry, J.; s. c. 37 Eng. R. 22.

[4] Evans v. Jayne, 23 Pa. 36 (1854).

lot-owner, before he can use the wall, is a fixed lien upon the lot, enforced by restraining the full use of the wall until the amount is paid. The mason who builds the wall may agree to look to the adjoiner for half the value, and retain a lien for that half, which will remain incident to the wall, that is, to the house and wall, and pass on a sale of the house. In such case the owner of the house is a trustee of the lien for the builder of the wall, and a purchaser from such original owner, with notice of the agreement, becomes himself a trustee; but a purchaser without notice will take title to the wall discharged of the builder's claim. If the trustee sells the house without reserving the lien, he must account to the builder for the amount of it.[1]

The rights and liabilities of the co-owners differ somewhat in different jurisdictions. But the weight of authority is that an agreement, under seal between the adjoining owners, for the construction of a party-wall, creates cross-easements which run with the land and bind all persons, even an assignee, succeeding to the estates to which the easements are appurtenant.[2]

If the necessity for the repair of an old wall be established, the cost will be divided. But some cases hold that the easement is terminated by decay or destruction of the wall, as, by fire.[3]

See EASEMENT; SUPPORT, 2; RIP-RAP.

WANT. Being commonly used to mean "wish" or "desire," and as frequently "need" or "require," is in itself ambiguous.

Where a testator created a life-estate with power, if the tenant "should want for his support," to sell part or all of the land, it was held that the provision implied a limitation or restriction of the power to a case of necessity.[4]

Wanted. In a statute for condemning land "wanted for the construction or repair" of a railroad, means necessary, and is not synonymous with "desired."[5]

WANTON. Unrestrained; reckless; regardless of another's right.

Adds no force to a charge that an act was done in a "reckless" manner.[6]

To make the killing of animals (sheep) a wanton act, under a charge of malicious mischief, the killing must have been committed regardless of the rights of the owner, in reckless sport or under such circumstances as evinced a wicked or mischievous intent, and without excuse.[1]

The act of killing an animal belonging to another is wanton when it is needless for any rightful purpose, is without adequate legal provocation, and manifests a reckless indifference to the interests and rights of others.[2]

Wantonly. In an indictment, implies turpitude — that the act is of willful, wicked purpose.[3]

Wantonness. Reckless sport; willfully unrestrained action, running immoderately into excess.[4]

Action without regard to the rights of others.[4]

Eminent judges have used the term with reference to cases of mere "omission," but such use is of doubtful propriety.

Smart money may be allowed as damages in actions of tort founded on wanton misconduct; as, where a ball, fired at a mark, glanced and hurt a person living near the place where the mark was set up.[5]

Doing that which will annoy another and which the first party knows will produce no results to himself, as, by violently ringing a door bell late at night, the person having reasonable cause to believe that he will not be admitted, is wanton conduct.[6]

See CRUELTY.

WAR. An interruption of a state of peace for the purpose of attempting to procure good or prevent evil by force. A just war is an attempt to obtain justice or prevent injustice by force, in other words to bring back an injuring party to a right state of mind and conduct by the infliction of deserved evil. A justifiable war, again, is only one that is waged in the last resort, when peaceful means have failed to procure redress, or when self-defense calls for it.[7]

An armed contest between different states upon a question of public right.[8]

Every contention by force, between two nations, in external matters, under the authority of their respective governments, is a public war. If it be declared in form, it is [1] Roberts v. Bye, 30 Pa. 377 (1858), Lowrie, C. J. See also Appeal of Western Nat. Bank, 102 id. 171, 182 (1883), cases.

[2] Roche v. Ullman, 104 Ill. 19 (1882), cases; Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 211, cases; 98 Ill. 359; 111 Mass. 111; 57 N. Y. 209.

[3] Campbell v. Mesier, 4 Johns. Ch. *334 (1820); Dowing v. Hennings, 20 Md. 179 (1863); Partridge v. Gilbert, 15 N. Y. 601 (1857); Orman v. Day, 5 Fla. 385 (1853); Vollmer's Appeal, 61 Pa. 118 (1868). See generally 18 Cent. Law J. 122-26 (1884), cases; 92 Am. Dec. 289-306 (1887), cases.

[4] Hull v. Culver, 34 Conn. 405 (1867).

[5] Tracy v. Elizabethtown, &c. R. Co., 80 Ky. 267 (1882).

[6] Lafayette, &c. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 290 (1867).

[1] Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 205 (1883), Willson, J.

[2] State v. Brigman, 94 N. C. 890 (1886), Smith, C. J.

[3] State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 468 (1887).

[4] Cobb v. Bennett, 75 Pa. 330 (1874), Agnew, C. J.

[5] Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 184-85 (1869), Butler, J.

[6] Clarke v. Hoggins, 103 E. C. L. *552 (1862), Willes, J.

[7] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 115.

[8] Brown v. Hiatt, 1 Dill. 380 (1870); Bluntschli, Code Int. Law, 270.

called solemn, and is of the "perfect" kind: because one whole nation is at war with another whole nation.[1]

That state in which a nation prosecutes its right by force.[2] One belligerent may claim sovereign rights as against the other — but both need not be independent sovereignties.

Insurrection may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the government. A civil war is never solemnly declared; it becomes such by its accidents — the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on. When the parties in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory, have declared their independence, cast off allegiance, organized armies, committed hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents, and the contest a "war." When the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts of justice cannot be kept open, then "civil war" exists.[3]

"The Congress shall have Power . . to declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water; To raise and support Armies; . . To provide and maintain a Navy; To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces; To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions."[4]

"No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, . .. keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, . . or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay."[5]

"The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States."[6]

Previous to any declaration of war by Congress, the President, by acts of February 28, 1795, and March 3, 1807, is authorized to meet invasion or insurrection by military force.[1]

The late war in the United States was accompanied by the general incidents of an international war.[2] Whatever auxiliary causes may have contributed to bring it about, the overshadowing, efficient cause was African slavery.[3]

In that war the United States acted both as belligerent and as sovereign. As belligerent she enforced her authority by capture; as sovereign she recalled her revolted subjects to allegiance by pardon and restoration of rights.[4]

The rules of war, as recognized by the public law of civilized nations, became applicable to the contending forces. The usual incidents of a war between independent nations ensued.[5]

At no time were the rebellious States out of the pale of the Union. Their rights under the Constitution were suspended, not destroyed. Their constitutional duties and obligations were unaffected: as a citizen is still a citizen though guilty of a crime and visited with punishment.[6]

A political society which attempted to separate itself from the Union did not destroy its identity as a State, nor free itself from the binding force of the Constitution. Hence, all its acts, during the period of the rebellion, are obligatory on the State now, except those in aid of that rebellion, or in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or intended to impeach its authority.[7]

When the war closed there was no government in an insurgent State. Such as had been organized for waging war against the United States had disappeared. The chief functionaries, and many subordinate officials, left the State. Legal responsibilities were annulled or greatly impaired. . . The new freemen became part of the people, and the people still constituted the State. Having suppressed the rebellion, the next duty imposed upon the United States government was to re-establish the broken relations of the States with the Union. . . Restoration of the old government, without a new election of officers, was impossible; and before an election could be held, it was necessary that the old constitutions should receive such amendments as would conform their provisions to the new conditions created by emancipation, and afford security to the people. . . Authority to suppress rebellion is found in the power to suppress insurrection and carry on war. Authority to provide for the restoration of State governments, when subverted, is derived from the obligation "to guarantee to every State a republican form of government." While war continues, the President, as commander-in-chief, may institute temporary governments within the insurgent districts, the means being

[1] The Eliza (Bas v. Tingy), 4 Dall. *40 (1800), Washington, J.

[2] [Vattel, Law of Nations, *291: 2 Black, 666.

[3] Prize Cases, 2 Black, 666–67 (1862), Grier, J.

[4] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 11–15.

Vesting the sole power to declare war in Congress is "a regulation where the spirit of republicanism exerted its humanest influence. The world has been retarded in civilization, impoverished and laid waste by wars of the personal ambition of its kings." 2 Bancroft, Const. 146.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 3.

[6] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2.

[1] Prize Cases, 2 Black, 668 (1862).

[2] Dow v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 164 (1879), Field, J.

[3] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 68 (1872), Miller, J.

[4] Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S. 195, 198–200 (1875), Waite, Chief Justice.

[5] United States v. Pacific Railroad, 120 U. S. 238 (1887).

[6] White v. Hart, 13 Wall. 651 (1871), Swayne, J.

[7] Keith v. Clark, 97 U. S. 459–61 (1878), Miller, J.

necessary and proper, although the power to carry into effect the clause of the guaranty is primarily a legislative power and resides in Congress.[1]

Acts of hostility occurred at periods so various, and of such different degrees of importance, and in parts of the country so remote from each other, both at the commencement and at the close of the war, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to say on what precise day it began or terminated. To fix the dates it is necessary, therefore, to refer to some public act of the political or executive department of the government. The proclamations of the President may be assumed as the dates. The proclamations of intended blockade were: that of April 19, 1861, embracing South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas; and that of April 27, 1861, embracing Virginia, and North Carolina. The proclamations declaring the war closed were: that of April 2, 1866, applying to Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, and Arkansas; and that of August 20, 1866, applying to Texas.[2]

One of the immediate consequences of a declaration of war and the effect of a state of war, even when not declared, is that all commercial intercourse between the adherents of the contending powers is unlawful and interdicted. All the members of each belligerent are respectively enemies of all the members of the other belligerent. Were commercial intercourse allowed, it would tend to strengthen the enemy, and afford facilities for conveying intelligence, and even for traitorous correspondence. Trading may be authorized by the sovereign, and, to a limited extent, by a military commander.[3]

As war is necessarily a trial of strength between the belligerents, the ultimate object of each is to lessen the strength of his adversary, or add to his own. Whatever is necessary to accomplish this end is lawful; and each belligerent determines for himself what is necessary. If, in so doing, he offends against the accepted laws of nations he must answer in his political capacity to other nations for the wrong he does. If he oversteps the bounds which limit the power of belligerents in legitimate warfare, as understood by civilized nations, other nations may join his enemy, and enter the conflict against him. If, in the course of his operations, he improperly interferes with the person or property of a non-combatant subject of a neutral power, that power may redress the wrong.[4]

When a foreign war first breaks out it is the duty of the citizen to return home without delay; when the war is civil, it is his duty to leave the rebellious section, and adhere to the regular, established government.[1]

The President alone has power to license commercial intercourse.[2]

War dissolves a partnership subsisting between citizens of the nations at war.[3]

The doctrine of the revival of contracts suspended during war is based upon considerations of equity and justice, and cannot be invoked to revive a contract which it would be unjust and inequitable to revive; as, a contract of life insurance.[4]

A statute of limitations did not run against the right of action upon a contract made previous to, and maturing after, the commencement of the war; because the courts were closed to public enemies.[5]

See ARMS, 1; BLOCKADE; CAPTURE; CONFISCATE; CONTRABAND; DEBT, Public; ENEMY; FEUD; FIELD, 2; INFAMY; INSURANCE; LEX, Silent leges: LEVY, 1; MARQUE; MARTIAL; MILITARY; MILITIA; NECESSARY; OATH, Of office; PEACE, 2; PRIZE, 3; RANSOM; TENDER, 2 (2), Legal; TREASON; TROOPS.

WARD.[6] Care, charge; protection, defense.

1. One of the principal duties of constables is to keep "watch and ward." "Ward" or guard was chiefly applied to the day time, for apprehending rioters, and robbers on the highways. "Watch" properly referred to the night only.[7]

In walled towns the gates were closed from sunrise to sunset, and watch was to be kept in every borough and town to apprehend rogues, vagabonds, and nightwalkers, and make them give an account of themselves.[7]

2. A territorial division of a city.

"A division in the city of London committed to the special ward, that is, guardianship, of an alderman." Also, a prison, or a division thereof.

Warden. A keeper or guardian: as, the warden of a prison or penitentiary; a fish-warden; a port-warden.

3. One who is guarded.

Ward of chancery or of court. A minor or lunatic under the protection of a court of equity. More particularly, a minor under the personal care of a guardian.

"While the infant is in ward."[8]

---

[1] Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 727–30 (1868), Chase, C. J. On "Theories of Reconstruction," see 1 Am. Law Rev. 233–64 (1867).

[2] The Proctor, 12 Wall. 701–2 (1871), Chase, C. J.; Walker v. United States, 106 U. S. 419 (1882); Carver v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 383 (1883).

[3] Matthews v. McStea, 91 U. S. 9–10 (1875), Strong, J.

[4] Young v. United States, 97 U. S. 60 (1877), Waite, Chief Justice.

[1] The William Bagaley, 5 Wall. 408 (1866); Gates v. Goodloe, 101 U. S. 617–18 (1879).

[2] Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 554–55 (1868).

[3] The William Bagaley, 5 Wall. 405–12 (1866), cases; Matthews v. McStea, 91 U. S. 9–11 (1875).

[4] N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 29 (1876), Bradley, J.

[5] Brown v. Hiatts, 15 Wall. 183–86 (1872), cases, Field Justice.

[6] A. S. weard-, to guard, keep.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 356–57.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 70.

A person under the age of twenty-one years, and subject to the guardianship of another.[1]

An inseparable incident to tenure in chivalry was "wardship." When a tenant died seized of a knight's fee, leaving an heir of full age, the king received of the heir a year's profits of the land, if in immediate possession, and, if in reversion expectant on a life estate, a half year's profits. This right was called "primer seisin."

If the heir was a male under twenty-one, or a female under fourteen, the lord was entitled to the wardship of the heir, as "guardian in chivalry" — with custody of body and lands, without accounting, till the male was twenty-one and the female sixteen. "Wardship of the land," or custody of the feud, was retained by the lord that he might, out of the profits, provide a person to supply the infant's services. A consequence was, "wardship of the body:" the lord was the most proper person to educate and maintain the infant, and qualify him for the services he was to render in maturity. At maturity he could sue delivery of the lands out of the guardian's hands; the action being called ouster le main. Before maturity the guardian had power to dispose of his ward in matrimony — to tender a suitable match; because of the ward's tender years, and the danger of a female inter-marrying with the lord's enemy. Magna Charta provided that notice of the proposed contract should be given to the next of kin.[2]

"Wardship in socage" differed from wardship in chivalry. The inheritance, descending to an infant under fourteen, did not belong to the lord of the fee, because no personal services were required, and no part of the profits of the land were spent in procuring a substitute. The ward's nearest relation had custody of his land and body. At fourteen, the heir could oust the guardian, require him to account for the profits, and choose another guardian. But as heirs so young made improvident choices, 12 Car. II (1651), c. 24, enacted that the father might by will appoint a guardian to serve till the ward attained twenty-one. The father failing in that, the court of chancery would name such guardian.[3] That statute is the original of similar legislation in this country.[4]

See further GUARDIAN, 2; NECESSARIES, 1.

Wards of admiralty. Seamen are sometimes so called, from the fact that, by reason of their improvidence and their inability to make or enforce advantageous contracts, the courts extend them more consideration than is accorded to persons generally who are employed in serving others.

Courts of admiralty watch with scrupulous jealousy every deviation in shipping articles from the principles of the maritime law as to seamen's wages, as injurious to the rights of seamen, and as founded in an unconscionable inequality of benefits. Seamen as a class are rash, thoughtless, and improvident. They are generally necessitous, ignorant of the nature and extent of their rights and privileges, and incapable of appreciating their value. Their credulity is easily excited, and their confidence readily surprised. Hence it is that bargains between them and ship-owners, the latter persons of intelligence and shrewdness, are open to scrutiny; for they involve great inequality of knowledge, of forecast, of power, and of condition. On this account courts of admiralty are accustomed to consider seamen as peculiarly entitled to their protection; by a somewhat bold figure they are said to be "favorites" with such courts. Those courts, acting upon the enlarged and liberal jurisprudence of courts of equity, may hold void any stipulation in the shipping articles which derogates from the privileges of seamen, as founded upon imposition, unless the nature of the clause was fully and fairly explained, and an additional compensation is allowed, adequate to any new risk or restriction imposed upon the seamen.[1]

WAREHOUSE. A building for the safe-keeping of merchandise.

Warehouseman. One who receives and stores goods as a business for a compensation or profit.[2]

A person whose business is the receiving and storing of merchandise for a compensation.

Under duties-laws, an importer who does not choose to pay duties may have the goods stored in a "public warehouse" designated by law, there to remain, subject to the duties and storage fees, till withdrawn for consumption, exportation, etc.[3]

This "warehousing system," begun under the act of August 6, 1846 (St. L. 53), was extended by the establishment of private bonded warehouses, under act of March 28, 1854 (St. L. 270).[4]

The object of the Warehousing Act of 1846 was to facilitate and encourage commerce by exempting the importer from the payment of duties until ready to bring his goods into market.[5]

All elevators or storehouses where grain or other property is stored for a compensation, whether the property stored be kept separate or not, are declared to be "public warehouses."[6]

The act of April 25, 1871, intended to give effect to that article, is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. Where warehouses are situated and their business is carried on exclusively within a State, she may, as a matter of domestic concern, prescribe regulations for them, notwithstanding they are used as [1] Darland v. The Justices, 4 Bibb, 524 (1817), Boyle, Chief Justice.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 67-71.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 87-89.

[4] 2 Kent, 222-26; 5 Johns. 278.

[1] Brown v. Lull, 2 Sumn. 449 (1836), Story, J.; Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mas. 556-57 (1823); The Georgeanna, 31 F. R. 406 (1887); 3 Kent, 193.

[2] Bucher v. Commonwealth, 103 Pa. 534 (1883), Gordon, J.; Pa. Act 24 Sept. 1866.

[3] See R. S. §§ 2954-3008, cases.

[4] See R. S. §§ 2964-65.

[5] Tremlett v. Adams, 13 How. 303 (1851). See Hartranft v. Oliver, 125 U. S. 527-29 (1888): Act 3 March 1883, § 10.

[6] Const. of Ill., Art. XIII, sec. 1.

instruments by those engaged in inter-State as well as in State commerce; and, until Congress acts with reference to their inter-State relations, such regulations can be enforced, even though they directly operate upon commerce beyond her immediate jurisdiction.[1]

The undertaking of a warehouseman is a contract for mutual benefit. Ordinary care toward preserving the merchandise is required of him. When a common carrier has transported goods, ready to be forwarded by another, he continues liable as a warehouseman only. Nor is it necessary that the goods be housed, in order to affect a bailee with the liabilities of a warehouseman; it is enough if they are actually in his custody for housing. A warehouseman has a lien for all reasonable charges.[2]

A public warehouseman assumes an obligation to serve the entire public. He cannot escape this obligation by calling himself a "commission merchant."[3]

In the ordinary railway transportation by common carriers of goods there is no obligation after the goods reach their destination but to place them safely in a warehouse.[4]

State statutes largely regulate the rights and duties of warehousemen. Although their receipts for the property are made negotiable, they as bailees are not guarantors of the title to the property.[5]

A receipt in Pennsylvania, under the act of September 24, 1866, must be issued by the person in possession of the goods in his own right, and not by his agent.[6]

If a receipt is that of a warehouseman it is negotiable without regard to its form, and to destroy that negotiability notice to that effect must appear upon its face. But unless it is in fact a warehouse receipt no form will make it such.[7]

In the absence of statutory regulations, the delivery of a receipt payable to bearer, as collateral security, without indorsement, passes the legal title to the pledgee as if there had been an actual manual delivery. Although, to enable the transferee to sue on the receipt in his own name at law, a statute may require an indorsement to pass the legal title, and the holder of an indorsed receipt is protected against latent equities, yet a transfer by delivery passes a special property and constructive possession sufficient to create a valid pledge as between the parties and as against a third person who has not acquired a prior or intervening right.[8]

See BAILMENT; CARRIER, Common; LADING, Bill of; POLICE, 2; WHARFINGER.

[1] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 114, 123 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr. 139-43; 2 Kent, 565; Story, Bailm. § 444; Seals v. Edmondson, 71 Ala. 511 (1882); Bank of Oswego v. Doyle, 91 N. Y. 32 (1883); 2 Kan. Law J. 99 (1885).

[3] Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539 (1882); 103 Pa. 535.

[4] American Union Express Co. v. Robinson, 72 Pa. 278 (1872); Redf. Car., 33, cases; White v. Colorado Central R. Co., 3 McCrary, 559, 564 (1878), cases.

[5] Mechanics', &c. Ins. Co. v. Kiger, 103 U. S. 355 (1880); Adams v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 9 Biss. 396, 400-2 (1880), cases.

[6] People's Bank v. Gayley, 92 Pa. 527, 529 (1880). See also 6 Col. 356; 40 Ill. 320; 62 Miss. 86.

[7] Bucher v. Commonwealth, 103 Pa. 535 (1883).

[8] Alabama State Bank v. Barnes, 82 Ala. 615 (1886), cases. See generally 10 Cent. Law J. 421-23 (1880), cases; "Grain Elevators," 6 Am. Law Rev. 450-71 (1872), cases.

WARES.[1] Up to the middle of the last century, had the same meaning as "merchandise."[2]

In the Revised Statutes of 1873, merchandise was substituted as an equivalent for "goods, wares, and merchandise," which expression had formerly been in use as including all movable chattels, in particular chattels capable of being imported.[3] See further GOODS; MERCHANDISE.

WARN. See GARNISH.

WARRANT.[4] 1, v. To give assurance of the existence of a fact; as, of the quality of goods sold, the validity of a title, the description and uses of insured property. Whence warrantor. Compare WARRANTY.

2, n. (1) A writing from a competent authority, in pursuance of law, directing the doing of an act, and offering him protection from damage if he does it.[5]

"Warrant" and "commission," outside of naval technicality, are synonymous words. There is no difference, in form, between them as used in the Navy, except that one recites that the appointment is made "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and the other does not. Both are signed by the President.[6]

Bench-warrant. See BENCH.

Death-warrant. See DEATH, Penalty.

Landlord's warrant. See LANDLORD.

Search-warrant. See SEARCH.

Warrant in bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY.

Warrant of arrest. See ARREST, 2.

Warrant of attorney. See ATTORNEY.

Warrant of commitment. See COMMIT, 3.

(2) Several evidences of debt and of title are known as warrants. Thus a city, county, or town warrant calls for the payment of money out of the public treasury; a dividend or interest warrant is a check drawn by a joint-stock company upon its banker, directing payment to a shareholder or to his order; and a land warrant authorizes the holder (the warrantee) to take up public lands. See LAND, 1, Warrant.

[1] A. S. ware, to be guarded.

[2] Passaic Manuf. Co. v. Hoffman, 3 Daly, 512 (1871), Daly, C J.

[3] See R. S. § 2766.

[4] F. warant, garant, protection, heed, care

[5] People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 376 (1877), Folger, J.

[6] Brown v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 543 (1883).

3. A stipulation, on the part of an assured person, that a fact is as stated by him.

Answers in applications for life insurance are made warranties by express condition. The effect is that if any answer is not true, however immaterial to the risk, there can be no recovery. In some policies, all statements are put on this footing. But statutes have been passed to restrict the nullifying effect of warranties on immaterial matters.[1]

Affirmative warranty. The representation of the existence of some fact or state of things, at the time of, or previous to, the making of the policy. Promissory warranty. Relates to the happening of some future event, or the performance of some future act.

An affirmative warranty is a condition precedent; if not true in fact, the policy does not attach. A promissory warranty may be a condition precedent or subsequent — is an executory stipulation, has the effect of a representation rather than a warranty. The precise nature is to be ascertained from the language employed, the subject-matter, and surrounding circumstances. The words of a warranty receive a liberal or a strict construction, to meet the justice of the case. A condition precedent includes what is necessarily implied in its terms. But some courts say that there is no difference between warranties, that both species are conditions precedent.[2]

In order to constitute a statement a warranty, it must be made a part of the policy, either by appearing in the body of the instrument, or by reference therein to some other paper in which it is found. Being a condition precedent, the statement must form part of the contract.[3]

The distinction has been made that a "representation" is a part of the preliminary proceedings which propose the contract, while a "warranty" is a part of the completed contract; and the former, unless coupled with fraudulent intent, need be only substantially true, whereas the latter must be literally fulfilled.

Where a policy becomes void by a failure of the warranty, the insured is entitled to a return of the premium, if there be no actual fraud.[4]

See further REPRESENTATION, 1 (2).

WARREN.[1] A "free warren" is a franchise erected for the preservation or custody of beasts and fowls of warren, which, being ferœ naturæ, every one had a right to kill as he could.

A franchise invented by the Normans to protect royal game, by giving the grantee sole power of killing, on condition of his preventing other persons from so doing. The name in time designated ground set apart for the breeding of hares and rabbits.[2] See GAME, 1.

WASHINGTON CITY. See DISTRICT, 2, Of Columbia.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY. See TERRITORY, 2.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY. See HOLIDAY.

WASTE.[3] Deterioration; destruction.

1. Any squandering or misapplication of property or of a fund by trustees or others charged with a duty, or any abuse of trust or of duty by which property is lost or an estate or trust fund is diminished in value.[4]

If an executor or administrator be extravagant, it is a species of "devastation or waste" of the substance of the deceased.[5]

2. A spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditament, to the disherison of him that has the remainder or reversion in fee-simple or fee-tail. Whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance.[6]

A spoil and destruction of the estate, in houses, woods, or lands, by demolishing not the temporary profits only but the very substance of the thing, thereby rendering it wild and desolate, which the common law expresses by the word vastum.[7]

Spoliation or destruction to lands or other corporeal hereditaments by a tenant to the prejudice of the reversioner or remainderman.[8]

Any unlawful act or omission of duty on warranties in sales by agents, see 18 Cent. Law J. 223–25 (1884), cases.

[1] White v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 4 Dill. 181 (1877), Dillon, Cir. J. See also Jeffries v. Economical Life Ins. Co., 22 Wall. 52–53 (1874); Anderson v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. L. C. 484, 495 (1853); Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 44 Ohio St. 29–32 (1886), cases.

[2] Cady v. Imperial Life Ins. Co., 4 Cliff. 209–10 (1873), cases, Clifford, J.; James v. Lycoming Life Ins. Co., Id. 280–82 (1874), cases; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Benton, 87 Ind. 136–37 (1882), cases; Lynchburg Fire Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 582 (1882).

[3] Goddard v. East Texas Fire Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 71–75 (1886), cases.

[4] Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. 668 (1777); Delavigne v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. Cas. 310 (1800); Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Pyle, 44 Ohio St. 31–32 (1886), cases; 3 Kent, *341; May, Ins. § 4.

[1] F. war-enne, a preserve for animals.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 38–39; 4 Law J. 648.

[3] L. vastus, empty, desolate, devastated.

[4] Ayers v. Lawrence, 59 N. Y. 197 (1874), Allen, J.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 508; 3 id. 222.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 281: Coke, Litt. 53.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 223.

[8] Ayers v. Lawrence, supra. See also 1 Saw. 437; 59 Miss. 304; 29 Mo. 327; 3 N. H. 107; 13 Pa. 440; 53 Wis. 60; 107 U. S. 323.

the part of the tenant which results in permanent injury to the inheritance.[1]

An improper destruction or material alteration or deterioration of the freehold, or of things forming an essential part of it, done or suffered by a person rightfully in possession as tenant, or having but a partial estate, like that of a mortgagor.[2]

Double waste. Committing a new act of waste in providing against another act; as, felling timber for repairing a house suffered to be out of repair.[3]

Legal waste. Such waste as a court of law may restrain. Equitable waste. Such as a court of equity alone can restrain; as, injury to a reversion or remainder.

Nul waste. No waste: a plea forming the general issue in an action of waste.

Permissive waste. A matter of omission only; as, by suffering a house to fall for want of necessary repairs.[4] Also called passive waste.

"Arises from mere negligence, and want of sufficient care in reparations, fences, and the like."[5]

Voluntary waste. An actual and designed demolition of lands, woods, and houses.[5] Also called active waste.

Writ of waste. An action, brought by the immediate reversioner or remainderman, to recover the land and damages for its illuse.[6]

Removing a thing once fixed to the freehold is waste; and, up to 1708, negligence in a lessee by which the house was burned; cutting down timber or causing it to decay, but not so as to underwood; converting land from one species to another; opening the ground in search of mines. The general heads of waste are then: houses, timber, land; though, whatever else tends to destroy or depreciate the value of the inheritance is waste. At one time waste was punishable only in a guardian in chivalry, in a tenant in dower, and in a tenant by curtesy; because, the law, which created those relations, afforded a remedy for abuses. In other cases, as in tenancy for life or years, up to 1268, if there was no remedy, the owner of the fee was at fault. The punishment consisted in being required to pay damages, possibly treble damages, and forfeiture of the thing or place.[7]

It is not waste for a mortgagor to remove or change fixtures, to sell timber, to remove coal, stone, or other minerals from opened mines, nor growing nursery stock,—if done in good faith in the regular course of business, before foreclosure proceedings are begun and not in apprehension thereof.[1]

Modern remedies are by injunction to stay waste where the injury would be irreparable; and by special action on the case in the nature of waste, to recover damages.[2]

It is now a common practice, in cases where irremediable mischief is being done or threatened, going to the destruction of the substance of the estate, as, by extracting ores from a mine, cutting timber, or removing coal, to issue an injunction, though the title to the premises is in litigation.[3]

In the absence of an express covenant, there results, from the relation of landlord and tenant, an implied obligation on the part of the tenant not to commit waste, nor to permit it.[4]

The English doctrine is not fully applicable to a new and unsettled country. Here, regard is had to the condition of the land, and, where the inheritance will not suffer, what good husbandry would direct.[5]

A tenant for life cannot open new mines, because that would be a lasting injury to the inheritance; but his right to operate previously opened mines, and work them to exhaustion, cannot be questioned.[6]

See DEVASTAVIT; ESTREPEMENT; FIXTURE; IMPEACH, 1; MANURE; MORTGAGE; TENANT.

WATCH. 1. See BAGGAGE; JEWELRY.

2. See DEATH-WATCH; WARD, 1.

Watchman. A condition in a policy requiring that a watchman be kept on certain premises as long as an insured mill, standing thereon, remained idle, was held to be complied with by the watchman continuing in close proximity to the property, in a location from which he could speedily discover the inception of a fire.[7]

WATER. Being a movable, wandering thing, of necessity continues common by the law of nature; so that one can only have a temporary, transient, usufructuary property in it.[8]

The grantee of land has a usufruct in the water. The limitation is, the use must not interfere with public navigation, nor, in a substantial degree, diminish and impair private rights of use in other proprietors.[9]

[1] Whitney v. Huntington, 34 Minn. 462 (1886), Berry, J.

[2] Hamilton v. Austin, 36 Hun, 143 (1885), Follett, J.

[3] Coke, Litt. 53.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 281.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 223. See also Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 304 (1878), cases.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 227-28.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 281-84.

[1] Hamilton v. Austin, 36 Hun, 143 (1885).

[2] 4 Kent, 77-85.

[3] Ehrardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 539 (1885), cases.

[4] United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 65-66 (1876), cases; California Dry-Dock Co. v. Armstrong, 17 F. R. 216 (1883), cases.

[5] Drown v. Smith, 55 Me. 143-44 (1862), cases; Keeler v. Eastman, 11 Vt. 294 (1839); Lynn's Appeal, 31 Pa. 46 (1857); 56 id. 119.

[6] Eley's Appeal, 103 Pa. 307 (1883), cases.

[7] Sierra Company v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., Sup. Ct. Col. (1888): 27 Cent. Law J. 452-54 (1888), cases.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 14, 18; 5 Conn. *518-19.

[9] Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 54 (1881), cases; Red River Roller Mills v. Wright, 30 Minn. 252-54 (1883), cases.

A grant of land carries title to the center of an unnavigable boundary stream, and includes bed, islands, water, and ice.[1]

Water companies. See MONOPOLY.

Water-course. A stream of water, usually flowing in a definite channel, having a bed and sides or banks, and discharging itself into some other stream or body of water.[2]

A living stream with defined banks and channel, not necessarily running all the time, but fed from other and more permanent sources than mere surface water.[3]

Consists of bed, banks, and water. The water need not flow continually; many water-courses are sometimes dry.[4]

The term does not include occasional bodies of surface water at certain seasons descending from the hills down ravines without any definite channel.[5]

The size of the stream is not material. There must be a stream in fact, as distinguished from surface drainage occasioned by freshets. Where water has a definite source, as, a spring, and takes a definite channel, it is a water-course, and no person through whose land it flows has a right to divert it from its natural channel so as to injure another land-owner.[6] See SPRING.

A natural water-course may be created by the flow of surface water.[7]

Mere surface drainage over one tract of land to another, through a ditch, does not constitute a water-course.[8]

Water-mark. High and low water-marks, referred to as boundaries, mean the place to which the water ordinarily ascends or descends.[9]

Where the tide ebbs and flows, the line of high water is marked by the periodical flow of the tide, excluding the advance of waters above this mark by winds and storms, and by freshets or floods; and the line of low water-mark is the furthest receding point of ebb and flow.[10]

Where streets had been dedicated as terminating at the Hudson River, and, afterward, the bed in front below high water-mark was filled in by legislative authority and the land so made conveyed by the State to the defendants, who had also succeeded to the title of the original owner and dedicator, it was held that the title to the filled-in land was not affected by the dedication, that the streets terminated at the former high water-mark.[1] See BEACH.

Water-power. The fall in a stream when in its natural state, as it passes through one's land, or along the boundary of it; the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land, and the surface where it leaves it.[2]

See further AQUA; BOUNDARY; COMMERCE; DRAIN; MILL; NAVIGABLE; PROPERTY, Qualified; RIPARIAN; RIVER; SURFACE; TAKE, 8; VESSEL; WELL, 1.

WATERING STOCK. See DIVIDEND, 8; STOCK, 3 (2).

WAX. See SEAL, 1, 5.

WAY. The right of going over another man's ground.[3]

By right of way is generally meant a private way, which is an incorporeal hereditament of that class of easements in which a particular person, or description of persons, has an interest and a right, though another person is the owner of the fee of the land in which it is claimed.[4]

A right to pass over another's land more or less frequently according to the nature of the use to be made of the easement.[5]

The privilege which one person, or description of persons, may have of passing over the land of another in some particular line.[6]

Referring to a railway, a right of way is a mere easement in the lands of others, obtained by lawful condemnation to the public use or by purchase.[7]

It is a way over which the company has to pass in the operation of its trains. The term includes land acquired for necessary side tracks and turnouts, and the improvements thereon.[8]

[1] 3 Kent, 427–32; Angell, Water-Cour. § 5; 18 R. I. 614.
[2] Luther v. Winnisimmet Co., 9 Cush. 174 (1851), Bigelow, J.
[3] Jeffers v. Jeffers, 107 N. Y. 651 (1887).
[4] Angell, Water-Cour. § 4; 26 Cent. Law J. 26–31 (1888), cases.
[5] Wels v. City of Madison, 75 Ind. 253 (1881), cases; 27 id. 556; 37 id. 228; 41 id. 320; 30 Conn. 180; 75 Ind. 253; 25 Kan. 210; 67 Me. 356; 12 N. J. E. 280; 16 Nev. 317; 10 Oreg. 76; 37 Wis. 226.
[6] Pyle v. Richards, 17 Neb. 182 (1885), cases.
[7] Kelly v. Dunning, 39 N. J. E. 483 (1885), cases.
[8] Stanchfield v. Newton, 142 Mass. 110, 116 (1886).
[9] Gerrish v. Proprietors, 26 Me. 395–96 (1847), cases, Shepley, J.; 113 Mass. 238; 60 Pa. 339.
[10] Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 423, 417 (1851), Nelson, J.; Houghton v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 372 (1877).

[1] City of Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 124 U. S. 656 (1888).
[2] McCalmont v. Whitaker, 3 Rawle, 90 (1831), Gibson, C. J.; 62 Me. 91; 10 Barb. 521.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 35.
[4] Wild v. Deig, 43 Ind. 458 (1873): Angell, Highw. 1–2.
[5] Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 319 (1870), Ames, J.
[6] Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 63 (1886), Searls, C.
[7] Williams v. Western Union R. Co., 50 Wis. 76 (1880), Orton, J.
[8] Pfaff v. Terre Haute, &c. R. Co., 108 Ind. 144 (1886), cases.

It sometimes refers to the mere intangible right of crossing; often, to the strip which the company appropriates for its use, and upon which it builds its road-bed.[1]

This incorporeal hereditament is a right of passage over another man's ground, and arises by grant from the owner of the soil, by prescription, which supposes a grant, or from necessity. To be a freehold right it must be created by deed. It imports a right of passing in a particular line. If it be a right of way in gross, or a mere personal right, it dies with the person. As appendant or annexed to an estate, it may pass by assignment of the land. A right of way from necessity arises, as an incident, where one sells another land which is surrounded by other land of the vendor: the grant of land, or the use of a house, etc., carries the right of ingress and egress. The temporary right of going upon adjoining land, where the highway is impassable, applies solely to public ways.[2]

A "way appurtenant" is incident to the estate, inheres in it, and goes with it on a transfer as essential to its enjoyment. "A right of way in gross" is personal to the grantee, and not assignable or inheritable.[3]

What is a reasonable use of a way, where the purposes are not defined in the grant, is a question of fact, to be determined upon evidence. A grant without restriction is understood to be general for all purposes.[4]

A grant of way across one's land does not imply that it is to be open and free from gates, unless the nature of the use indicates that it should be unobstructed. Nothing passes as an incident to the grant of an easement but what is requisite to the fair enjoyment of the privilege.[5]

Private way. A way established by law for the particular benefit or accommodation of individuals, such as lead from a county or town road to the farms or dwelling-houses of private individuals, and which are to be maintained and kept in repair by those for whose accommodation they were established.[6]

Public way; highway; public highway. A lawful public road.[7]

"Highway" applies to all great roads leading from town to town, to markets, and to public places, and denotes a way that is common to all passengers.[1]

A "highway" is a road open to the public for use in their own vehicles. In a special connection may include a railroad. Plank and macadamized roads are highways in a strict sense.[2]

"Highway" is a generic name, embracing every kind of way common to all citizens, whether a foot-way, a horse-way, a cart-way, or way by water, however laid out originally and under whosesoever's charge. Roads are divided into "highways" and "private ways." Highways are subdivided into "public highways" and "neighborhood roads."[3]

A highway is nothing but an easement, comprehending merely the right of all individuals in the community to pass and repass, with the incidental right in the public to do all acts necessary to keep it in repair.[4]

Every thoroughfare which is used by the public is a highway, whether it be a carriage way, a horse way, a foot way, or a navigable river. It is the genus of all public ways. The presumption is that the owners of the land on each side go to the center of the road, and they have the exclusive right to the soil, subject to the right of passage in the public.[5]

A railroad is a public highway — a road for public use. And a State may impose a tax in furtherance of that use. The same is true as respects turnpikes, bridges, ferries, canals, etc. The public have in "common roads" a mere right of passage, no right of possession or occupation.[6]

In most cities, the fee of the land belongs to the adjacent owner, and, upon discontinuance of the street, the possession reverts to him.[7]

The State has an easement to adapt the streets of a city to easy and safe passage.[8]

The duty of a municipality being to keep ways free from defects — in good repair, it will be held liable for an injury from an obstruction placed on a street by a third person, where the obstruction remains long enough to charge the authorities with notice.[9]

Every parish is bound of common right to keep the highroads that go through it in good repair, unless the care is consigned to a particular person. From this burden no man was exempt by early law. About

---

[1] [Keener v. Union Pacific R. Co., 31 F. R. 128 (1887), Brewer, J.

[2] 3 Kent, 419-21, 494; 2 Bl. Com. 35. As to ways of necessity, see further City of London v. Riggs, 37 Eng. R. 1 (1880); Linkenhoker v. Graybill, 80 Va. 838-39 (1885), cases; Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 65 (1886); as to ways of convenience, 17 Cent. Law J. 127 (1887) — Can. Law J.

[3] Hall v. Armstrong, 53 Conn. 556 (1885), cases, Loomis, J.

[4] Rowell v. Doggett, 143 Mass. 487 (1887); Washb. Ease. 254, 282.

[5] Whaley v. Jarrett, 69 Wis. 615 (1887), cases; Washb. Ease., 3 ed., 230-31, 264.

[6] Jones v. Andover, 6 Pick. 60 (1827), Parker, C. J.; 96 Ga. 458; 16 Gray, 179; 24 N. H. 118.

[7] Vantilburgh v. Shann, 24 N. J. L. 744 (1855).

[1] Harding v. Medway, 10 Met. 469 (1845), Hubbard, J.

[2] Flint, &c. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 Mich. 428-29 (1879), Cooley, J.

[3] State v. Harden, 11 S. C. 368 (1878), Haskell, A. J.

[4] Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 128 (1814), Swift, J. See also State v. Davis, 80 N. C. 352 (1879).

[5] 3 Kent, 432. Boston & Albany R. Co. v. Boston, 149 Mass. 87-88 (1886), cases — as to a "public foot-way."

[6] Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall. 694-97 (1872), cases.

[7] Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. 69 (1864); Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 556 (1875).

[8] Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 641 (1878).

[9] Merrill v. City of Portland, 4 Cliff. 145-46 (1878), cases.

1530, the care of roads was first left to the parishes, and the care of bridges to the county at large; for neglect a parish could be indicted. About 1555, and later, in 1773, by statute 13 Geo. III, surveyors of the highways were chosen in every parish, empowered to call the parish together, and set the people at the work of repair, the owners of teams and of lands being each required to send a team, and other persons between eighteen and sixty-five required to work in person or by substitute, or else to compound with the surveyors at certain rates. When the personal labor of a parish was inadequate for the work of repair, the surveyors, with the approval of the court of quarter sessions, were authorized to levy a tax on the parish in aid of the personal duty.[1]

See further ALLEY; ALONG; BOUNDARY; DEDICATION, 1; EASEMENT; FILUM, VIÆ; NECESSITAS, Trinoda; NUISANCE; ROAD, 1; STREET; TRAVEL.

WAYS AND MEANS. The committee of or on ways and means, in a legislative assembly, is charged with the duty of inquiring into and recommending the ways and means for raising funds for the uses of government.

The "committee of supply" considers what specific grants of money shall be voted as supplies demanded by the crown for the service of the current year, as explained by the estimates and accounts prepared by the executive government, and referred by the house to the committee. The "committee of ways and means" determines in what manner the necessary funds shall be raised to meet the grants which are voted by the committee of supply, and which are required for the public service. The former committee controls the public expenditure; the latter provides the public income: the one authorizes the payment of money, the other sanctions the imposition of taxes, and the application of revenues not otherwise applicable to the service of the year.[2]

WEAPON. While the right of the people to bear arms, that is, to own and preserve weapons for warfare, is secured by the constitutions, statutes may prohibit, as a police regulation, the carrying of "concealed," "deadly" or "dangerous" weapons.

Concealed weapon. A weapon willfully and knowingly covered or kept from sight.[3]

The purpose of statutes forbidding the carrying of concealed weapons is to protect individuals against sudden, unexpected, dangerous and perhaps deadly violence inflicted with weapons which the assailant has concealed in some way about or conveniently near his person, and which he may use under sudden impulse, or deliberately and unfairly against one taken unawares; and to conserve the public peace and safety.[4]

Until a pistol has lost so many of its parts as to cease to be a fire-arm, carrying it concealed, without sufficient excuse, is indictable.[5]

The weapon (a pistol) need not be complete in all its parts or capable of direct and immediate use.[6]

The implement must be carried about the person, accessible for use in fight, and so hidden from general view as to put others off their guard. If a pistol is worn concealed, the jury may presume it was loaded and worn as a weapon; but the presumption is rebuttable.[7]

Dangerous weapon. A weapon dangerous to life, as actually used.

A weapon likely to produce death or great bodily injury.[8]

In many cases the court may declare that a particular weapon was, or was not, a dangerous weapon; and, when practicable, it is the court's duty to do so. But where the weapon might be dangerous or not, according to the manner in which it was used or the part of the body struck, the question must be left to the jury.[9]

That a loaded pistol is both a dangerous and a deadly weapon, the courts will notice without proof.[10]

Deadly weapon. Includes any weapon with which a person may be wounded by cutting or stabbing.[6]

A weapon likely to produce death or great bodily harm.[7]

A hoe is per se a deadly weapon.[8]

If a deadly weapon be used in a case of homicide in the manner in which it would be likely to produce death, the presumption of an intention to kill arises. Otherwise, if used so as not naturally to produce death.[9]

See ARMS; CARRY, 2; CONTRACT; DEFENSE, 1; JOURNEY; LOADED; SHOOTING; TRAVEL; THRUST.

WEAR AND TEAR. "Natural and reasonable wear and tear" means deterioration by use, and does not include damage by operation of nature, as, by a freshet.[10]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 357–59.

[2] May, Parliamentary Law, 41.

[3] Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 389 (1858), Rice, C. J.

[4] State v. McManus, 89 N. C. 559 (1883), Merrimon, J.

[5] Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 509 (1875); Hutchinson v. State, 62 id. 3 (1878); Evins v. State, 46 id. 88 (1871); Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417 (1878); Cook v. State, 11 Tex. Ap. 19 (1881).

[6] Redus v. State, 32 Ala. 53–54 (1886).

[7] Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 448 (1879).

[8] United States v. Williams, 2 F. R. 64 (1880), Deady, Dist. J.

[9] United States v. Small, 2 Curtis, 243 (1855), cases, Curtis, J.; State v. Dineen, 10 Minn. 411 (1865); Doering v. State, 49 Ind. 58 (1874).

[10] Commonwealth v. Branham, 8 Bush, 388 (1871), Hardin, J.; 3 id. 105.

[7] Kouns v. State, 3 Tex. Ap. 15 (1877), White, J.: 4 id. 328; 43 Tex. 93.

[8] Hamilton v. People, 113 Ill. 38 (1885).

[9] Hanvey v. State, 68 Ga. 615 (1882); Moon v. State, 69 608 (1882).

[10] Green v. Kelly, 20 N. J. L. 547 (1845).

A tenant from year to year is not liable for permissive waste, and is to make good mere wear and tear.[1]

He is only bound to keep the leased house "wind and water" tight.[2]

See LEASE.

WEARING APPAREL. See APPAREL; BAGGAGE.

WEBSTER'S CASE. See HOMICIDE; MALICE, Aforethought.

WEEK. A period of time commencing on Sunday morning and ending at midnight Saturday; also, a period of seven days' duration, without reference to the time when it commences.[3]

"Once a week" means once between each Sunday and Saturday night, the particular time of the week not being important.[3]

The first publication of a notice of a sale under a power contained in a mortgage, which requires the notice to be published "once a week for three successive weeks," need not be made three weeks before the time appointed for the sale.[4]

See DAY; MONTH; NEWSPAPER; TIME; YEAR.

WEIGHT. 1. Heaviness, gravity.

"The Congress shall have Power . . To fix the Standard of Weights and Measures."[5]

This power has not as yet been fully exercised. The States, in the exercise of the police power, may compel conformity with a fixed standard. The weights in use are the avoirdupois and troy systems.[6] See INSPECTION, 1; METRIC SYSTEM; NET; TON.

2. In the figurative sense of ponderance or preponderance, is used of evidence, cases, authorities. See PREPONDERANCE.

WELFARE. Well-going, well-being; prosperity in its most comprehensive sense.

"WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in Order to . . promote the general Welfare . . do ordain and establish this CONSTITUTION. . ."[7]

"The Congress shall have Power To Lay and collect Taxes, Duties," etc., to "provide for the . . general Welfare of the United States. . ."[8]

Promote the general welfare. This phrase was adopted from the Articles of Confederation, and, though seemingly vague, was employed in a rigidly restrictive sense to signify "the concerns of the Union at large, not the particular policy of any State."[1]

Experience had proved to the people that they required a national government for national purposes. The separate governments of the separate States, bound together by the Articles of Confederation alone, were not sufficient for the promotion of the general welfare of the people in respect to foreign nations, or for their complete protection as citizens of the confederated States. For this reason they established the government of the United States, and defined its powers by a constitution, which they adopted as its fundamental law, and made its rule of action.[2]

See POLICE, 2; PREAMBLE; PROHIBITION, 2; TAX, 2.

WELL. 1, n. An artificial excavation and erection in and upon land, which necessarily includes and comprehends the substantial occupation and beneficial enjoyment of the whole premises on which it is situated.[3]

A person has a right to dig a well on his land for water for his own use, although the effect may be to dry up the spring of a neighbor. But if he acts in bad faith, he may be liable in damages.[4]

Making dry a well by taking lands for a public use constitutes an element of damages for which compensation must be made.[5]

See APPENDAGE; GRANT; LAND; WATER.

2, adv. Agreeably, suitably, adequately, fully; properly, legally.

Thus, a demurrer admits such facts as are well pleaded, that is, properly pleaded.[6] A bill may well be brought as an original bill.[7] A power is sometimes said to be well executed.[8] A jury is sworn to well and truly try the issue. Well knowing charges knowledge in a defendant to an action on the case. See BAD, 2; ILL, 2.

WEREGILD.[9] In old English law, a pecuniary satisfaction paid to a party injured, or to his relatives, to expiate an enormous offense, most commonly homicide.[10]

The custom originated with the ancient Germans. For homicide, Athelstan (and other rulers) graded the [1] Torriano v. Young, 6 Car. & P. 8 (1833).

[2] Anworth v. Johnson, 5 Car. & P. 239 (1832). See generally Taylor, Land. & T. § 343; 1 Wood, Land. & T. § 365.

[3] [State v. Yellow-Jacket, &c. Mining Co., 5 Nev. 420 (1868), Beatty, C. J.; Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 361 (1830); Steinle v. Bell, 12 Abb. Pr. 176 (1872).

[4] Dexter v. Shepard, 117 Mass. 484 (1875); 1 id. *254.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 5.

[6] See 1 Bl. Com. 274; Social Science Assoc., 1871, 578. On the "weight of authorities," see 10 Va. Law J. 582 (1886).

[7] Constitution, Preamble.

[8] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 1.

[1] 2 Bancroft, Const. 208 (1882), abr. ed. 358 (1884), quoting Washington.

[2] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 549 (1875), Waite, C. J.; 1 Story, Const. §§ 497-506.

[3] Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray, 110 (1856), Bigelow, J. See Mixer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 257 (1853).

[4] Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 170-71 (1882), cases; Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Ga. 296 (1884).

[5] Trowbridge v. Brookline, 144 Mass. 141 (1887), cases; Ballard v. Tomlinson (Eng.), 24 Am. Law Rev. 634, 636-40 (1885), cases.

[6] 91 U. S. 536; 2 Black, 523.

[7] 14 Wall. 82.

[8] 7 Pa. 530.

[9] Wēre'-gĭld. A. S. were, a man; geld, money: the value of a life.

[10] [4 Bl. Com. 313.

amount according to the rank of the deceased, from peasant to king. In the time of Henry I, other offenses were made redeemable. A private process seems to have been allowed for recovering the amount.

See APPEAL, 3; CAPUT, Æstimatio.

WESTMINSTER. Up to 1180, the court of common pleas followed the king's household from one end of the kingdom to the other. For the convenience of suitors, Magna Charta provided that the court should "be held in some certain place." This place has ever since been Westminster, or Westminster Hall, where the aula regis originally sat, when the king resided there.[1]

WHARF. A structure erected on a shore below high-water mark, and sometimes extending into the channel, for laying vessels alongside to load or unload, and on which stores are often erected for the reception of cargoes.[2]

A sort of quay (q. v.) constructed of wood or stone, on the margin of a road-stead or harbor, alongside of which ships or lighters are brought for convenient loading or unloading.[3]

A structure, on the margin of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded.[4]

A paved street extending to the water's edge and used by vessels as a place for receiving and discharging freight and passengers may be designated as a "wharf."[5]

Wharfage. The fee paid for tying vessels to a wharf, or for loading goods on a wharf or shipping them therefrom.[6]

"A toll or duty for the pitching or loading of goods upon a wharf." "Money paid for landing goods at a wharf or quay, or taking goods into a boat and from thence."[6]

A municipal corporation, owning wharves for the benefit of persons engaged in commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States, may collect from those persons such reasonable fees as will fairly remunerate it for the use of the property.[7]

The power of the State includes the power to discriminate as to the rates between different classes and vessels employed in different occupations.[1]

But care must be taken that the exaction is not a "duty of tonnage."[8]

Wharfage is a charge for the use of a wharf. This must be reasonable. But a "private wharf," that is, a wharf which the owner has constructed and reserves for his private use, is not subject to this rule. That a private wharf may be had, even on a navigable river, is not open to controversy; but whether it may be maintained as such, where it is the only facility of the kind, may be questioned. . . The regulation of wharves belongs prima facie and in the first instance to the States, and would only be assumed by Congress when its exercise by them became incompatible with the interests of commerce.[2]

To create a lien for wharfage, the contract must be made by a person who has authority to pledge the vessel. A sheriff who attaches a vessel is not such person.[4]

A city which is in possession of a wharf, exercising exclusive control over it, and receiving tolls for its use, is bound to keep it in condition for use.[5]

See ADMIRALTY; COMMERCE; DOCKAGE; RIPARIAN; TONNAGE, 2.

Wharfinger.[6] One who keeps a wharf for receiving goods for hire.

His responsibility begins when the goods are delivered on the wharf, and he has received them, expressly or by implication.[7]

He is a bailee for hire, held to ordinary care only He must use reasonable care to keep the dock in repair for the vessels he invites to enter.[8] See DOCK, 2.

WHEEL. See JURY; LOTTERY.

WHEN. Standing unqualified, in a will, is a word of condition, perhaps equivalent to "if." The context may show that the possession, not the vesting, of the gift, is meant.[9]

---

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 23; 3 id. 38. See Jeaffreson, "Lawyers:" 3 Leg. Gaz. 408.

[2] Doane v. Broad Street Association, 6 Mass. 334 (1810), Parsons, C. J

[3] Giger v. Filor, 8 Fla. 332 (1859), Blatsell, C. J.

[4] Langdon v. Mayor of New York, 93 N. Y. 151 (1883), Earl, J.

[5] City of Keokuk v. Keokuk Northern Packet Co., 45 Iowa, 206 (1876).

[6] Kusenberg v. Browne, 42 Pa. 179 (1862); Town of Pelham v. The Woolsey, 16 F. R. 423 (1883).

[7] Packet Co. v. St. Louis, 100 U. S. 423 (1879); Vicksburg v. Tobin, ib. 430 (1879); Ouachita Packet Co. v Aiken, 121 id. 444 (1887), cases.

[1] The Barge Welch, 9 Bened. 514 (1878).

[2] Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. 577, 580 (1874). Exp. Easton, 95 U. S. 68 (1877); Packet Co. v. Keokuk. ib. 88 (1877): 45 Iowa, 196; Ouachita Packet Co. v. Aiken, 4 Woods, 211 (1883); s. c. 16 F. R. 892.

[3] Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 696, 699, 703 (1882), cases, Bradley, J. See generally 22 Am. Law Reg. 588-605 (1883), cases; 16 F. R. 894-96 (1883), cases.

[4] The Mary K. Campbell, 31 F. R. 840 (1887), Wallace, Cir. J.

[5] Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54 (1853); City of Allegheny v. Campbell, 107 id. 535 (1885); Joyce v. Martin, 15 R. I. 558 (1887); 1 Thomp. Neg. 316.

[6] Wharf'-in-jer, for wharf*ager*.

[7] Rodgers v. Stophel, 32 Pa. 113 (1858).

[8] See Roberts v. Turner, 12 Johns. *232 (1815), cases, Blin v. Mayo, 10 Vt. 60 (1838), cases; New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Hanning, 15 Wall. 659 (1872); Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 239 (1879), cases.

[9] 2 Jarman, Wills, 417-21, cases; 3 Ired. Eq. 398; 6

Though the word may import a contingency, as, for instance, in the case of a legacy to A "when he attains twenty-one," without more, yet it is settled that it may mark the period at which the estate is to take effect in enjoyment, and not as postponing the period of vesting.[1]

"When," like "if," is ordinarily a word of condition, or of conditional limitation; but this meaning may be controlled by language showing that the estate is to be vested.[2]

Whenever. Though often equivalent to "as soon as," is frequently used where the time intended is, and will be, until arrival, or of some uncertain period at least, indeterminate.[3]

"Whenever" and its synonyms, referring to the time when property is to be enjoyed, are among the most ordinary words used in creating a vested remainder, and cannot be relied upon as creating a contingent remainder.[4] Compare THEN.

WHEREAS. Involving recital, cannot be used where direct, positive averment is required; as, in pleadings, q. v. See also RECITAL.

WHEREUPON. Denotes sequence, succession, order of action, relation, a thing done with reference to something previously done; is interchangeable with the words "upon which," "after which."[5]

WHILE. Compare DUM.

WHIP HAND. See ROAD, 1, Law of.

WHIPPING. Punishment by the infliction of stripes.

Whipping-post. A stake to which an offender is tied to receive stripes; punishment by whipping.

At common law, whipping was inflicted on inferior persons for petty larceny and vagrancy, and it accompanied sentences of imprisonment in a few other cases.[6]

Abolished, as to female delinquents, by 1 Geo. IV (1820), c. 57. Later statutes, notably 24 and 25 Vict. (1861), and 26 and 27 Vict. (1863), prescribe the offenses, ages, number of strokes, and the instrument.

The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted.[7]

The Great Law of the Province of Pennsylvania, by enactment of 1684, provided that twenty-one stripes should be inflicted where no other number was prescribed.[1]

The Maryland act of 1882, c. 120, which provides that any person who shall brutally assault and beat his wife, shall, upon conviction, be sentenced to be whipped, not exceeding forty lashes, or be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, is not in contravention of the VIIIth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which forbids inflicting "cruel and unusual punishments," since that is a restraint upon Congress only; nor is it in contravention of the like prohibition in the constitution of Maryland. The provision appears in 1 W. and M. (1689), stat. 2, c. 2, and in the declarations of the rights of the State promulgated in 1776, 1850, 1864, and 1867. From 1776 to 1819, the punishment of whipping for certain offenses was imposed upon whites and negroes alike, and upon negroes alone until the adoption of the constitution of 1864. The word "brutal," in the act of 1882, has its ordinary, popular meaning.[2]

WHISKEY. See ALCOHOL; LIQUOR; PROHIBITION, 2.

WHITE. "White person," as used in the naturalization laws, means a person of the Caucasian race, and does not therefore include a Mongolian.[3]

Does not include a person half white and half Indian.[4]

But does include one nearer white than black or red.[5]

In the legislation of the slave period, referred to a person without admixture of colored blood, whatever the actual complexion might be.[6]

See CITIZEN; COLOR, 1; MULATTO.

White acre. See ACRE.

WHOLE. See BLOOD.

Wholesale. See RETAIL.

WHORE. See PROSTITUTE; SLANDER, 1.

WIDOW. A woman who has lost her husband by death.[7]

A wife that outlives her husband.[8]

May refer to the person, not to her state, whether she remain a widow or marry again; as, in a statute giving a widow the right to sue for the homicide of her husband.[9]

Whenever a right by law has been attached by rea-

Jones, Eq. 347; 6 Ves. Jr. 343; 16 C. B. 59; 7 Ves. 422; 11 id. 489.

[1] Minnig v. Batdorff, 5 Pa. 506 (1847), cases; Letchworth's Appeal, 30 id. 175 (1858); 1 Dall. 175; 5 Watts, 496.

[2] Sutton v. West, 77 N. C. 431 (1877); Fisher v. Johnson, 38 N. J. E. 47 (1884).

[3] Robinson v. Greene, 14 R. I. 188 (1883), Durfee, C. J.

[4] Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. 31 (1854).

[5] [Lee v. Cook, 1 Wyom. 419 (1878), Peck, J.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 169.

[7] R. S. § 5327: Act 26 Feb. 1889.

[1] Linn, 168, 275.

[2] Foote v. State, 59 Md. 264, 267 (1882), Stone, J.; s. c. 4 Cr. L. M. 401. Compare 6 Alb. Law J. 70 (1872); Cooley, Const. Lim. *329-30; 1 Law J. 697; 51 id. 306.

[3] Re Ah Yup, 5 Saw. 155 (1878), Sawyer, Cir. J.

[4] Re Camille, 6 F. R. 256 (1880).

[5] Jeffries v. Ankeny, 11 Ohio, 375 (1842); United States v. Barryman, 21 Alb. Law J. 194 (1879): R. S. §§ 2154-55; 2 Kent, 72.

[6] Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 192 (1882), Eakin, J. See also Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 492 (1885).

[7] Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 231 (1855): Webster's Dict.

[8] Claim of Eliza Burr, 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 2 (1863).

[9] Georgia R., &c. Co. v. Garr, 57 Ga. 280 (1876).

son of widowhood, there must be some law by which it is divested, or it will remain.[1]

Widow's appraisement, law, portion, share or third, and renunciation are frequently spoken of. See those words, also DOWER; HEIR, 1; HUSBAND; QUARANTINE, 1; REPRESENTATIVE, 1, Personal; WIFE.

WIFE. A woman who has a husband living.[2]

As used in a will may refer to the wife of the testator at the time he made his will, and not to any wife who might survive him.[3]

In laws providing for alimony and dower after a divorce has been granted, the term "wife" may be regarded as designating the person, and not the actual existing relation.[4]

See FAMILY; HUSBAND; SETTLE, 4; UXOR; WIDOW.

WIGGLESWORTH'S TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

WIGS. Compare GOWN.

The custom of wearing wigs seems to date back to the remotest antiquity. They were worn in Egypt; references in the classics attest their use in Greece and Rome. The fashion died out; it was revived in France in the time of Henry III, and became prevalent in that of Louis XIII, and almost universal in that of Louis XIV. From France it spread to other countries, attaining its height in England in the reign of Anne. After the Revolution it disappeared in France, and, gradually, elsewhere. From the time of George III, the fashion began to wane in England, except among professional men. It prevailed, to some extent, in this country during the latter half of the last century. "The wig of the seventeenth century now holds its place only on the judicial bench" of Great Britain, "and with the speaker of the House of Commons, barristers, and advocates; but even on the bench its use is being threatened.[5]

WILD. See ANIMAL; LAND.

WILL. 1. The faculty of the mind which makes choice between objects or ends; the power which directs action; inclination toward action; desire, purpose, consent, intention, volition.

As employed in defining the crime of rape, is not construed as implying the faculty by which intelligent choice is made between objects, but as the synonym of "inclination" or "desire;" and in this sense is used with propriety in reference to the actions of persons of unsound mind.[6]

The technical phrase "against the will" charges violence, especially in the commission of such crimes as rape, and robbery from the person. "Against consent" expresses the idea with equal accuracy. In the case of robbery, the greatest degree of terror is not contemplated.[1] See VIOLENCE.

On the subject of ill-will, see MALICE; as to estates at will, see TENANT, At will.

Willful; willfully. In common parlance "willful" means intentional, as distinguished from accidental or involuntary; in penal statutes it means with evil intent, with legal malice, without ground for believing the act to be lawful.[2]

The ordinary meaning of "willful," in statutes, is not merely "voluntary," but with a bad purpose.[3]

Sometimes it means little more than "intentional" or "designed." But that is not its ordinary signification in criminal and penal statutes; in them it most frequently conveys the idea of legal malice in greater or less degree — implies an evil intent without justifiable excuse. "Voluntary" is, therefore, a weaker word: it means simply "willing."[4]

Doing or omitting to do a thing "knowingly and willfully" implies not only a knowledge of the thing, but a determination with a bad purpose to do it or to omit doing it.[5]

"Willful," frequently means more than merely "intentional;" it sometimes implies perverseness, deliberate design, malice.[6]

"Willfully," in an indictment, implies that the act is done knowingly and of stubborn purpose, but not necessarily of malice.[7]

Referring to an act forbidden by law, means that the act must be done knowingly and intentionally — that with knowledge the will consented to, designed and directed the act.[8]

Only want or defect of will will protect the doer of a forbidden act from the punishment annexed thereto. An involuntary act induces no guilt: the concurrence of the will, when it has its choice to do or to avoid an act, being the only thing that renders human action either praiseworthy or culpable. To make a

[1] Commonwealth v. Powell, 51 Pa. 441 (1866).

[2] People v. Hovey, 5 Barb. 118 (1849), Selden, J.

[3] Anshutz v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212 (1876).

[4] Woods v. Waddle, 44 Ohio St. 457 (1886); McGill v. Deming, ib. 654 (1887).

[5] See Ency. Brit.; 45 Law Times, 273, 278 (1868); 37 Litt. Liv. Age, 543 (1853): 12 Penn. Monthly, 894 (1881); Jeaffreson, "Lawyers."

[6] Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 427 (1865), Cooley, J.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 212, 224.

[2] State v. Clark, 29 N. J. L. 96 (1860), Whelpley, J.; Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 204 (1883); Minkler v. State, 14 Neb. 183 (1883); United States v. Three Railroad Cars, 1 Abb. U. S. 201 (1868).

[3] Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 220 (1838), Shaw, C. J.

[4] [State v. Preston, 34 Wis. 683-84 (1874), Dixon, C. J.; 10 Ala. 928; 36 id. 285; 37 id. 154; 9 Metc. 268.

[5] Felton v. United States, 96 U. S. 703 (1877), Field, J.

[6] Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 128 (1883), Franklin, C.; State v. Smith, 52 Wis. 136 (1881).

[7] State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 468 (1887).

[8] Woodhouse v. Rio Grande R. Co., 67 Tex. 419 (1887), Stayton, A. J See also Highway Commissioners v. Ely, 54 Mich. 180-81 (1884), cases.

crime complete there must be both a will and an act. As no temporal tribunal can search the heart or fathom the intentions of the mind, otherwise than as demonstrated by outward actions, it cannot punish what it cannot know. Hence, an overt act, some open evidence of an intended crime, is necessary to demonstrate depravity of will, before a man can be punished. . . To constitute a crime against human laws, there must be a vicious will and an unlawful act consequent thereon. The will does not join with the act in three cases: (1) When there is a defect of understanding. Where there is no discernment there is no choice, and where no choice there is no act of the will, which is merely a determination of one's choice to do or to abstain from doing a particular action. (2) Where there is understanding and will sufficient, but it is not called forth or exerted at the time the action is done; as, in cases of chance and ignorance. (3) When the action is constrained by outward force. Here the will disagrees as to the act which the person is obliged to perform. To the first class of cases are referred infancy, lunacy, and intoxication: to the second class, misfortune and ignorance; to the third class, compulsion or necessity,[1] qq. v.

See CONSENT; CRIME; DURESS; INSANITY; INTENTION; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MALICE; MIND; VOLO; VOLUNTARY, 1. See also GOOD-WILL.

2. The legal declaration of a man's intention which he "wills" to be performed after his death.[2]

A disposition of real and personal property to take effect after the death of the testator.[3]

It expresses "the will" of the maker as to the direction his property shall take.[4]

A declaration of the mind, either by word or writing, in disposing of an estate; to take place after the death of the testator.[5]

An instrument in any form, if the obvious purpose is not to take place till after the death of the maker, operates as a will. The essence of the definition is, it is a disposition to take effect after death. The form is immaterial, if the substance is testamentary.[6]

An instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease.[7]

A will is to be considered as the "testament," and the instrument. The testament is the result and effect in law of what is the will; that consists of all the parts, including a codicil.[1] See further TESTAMENT.

Whatever the form of the instrument, if it vests no present interest but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker, it is "testamentary."[2]

If the intention is to convey a present estate, though the possession be postponed until after the death of the maker, the instrument is a "deed;" if an interest accruing after his death, it is a "will."[3]

If the disposition necessarily takes effect after the death of the maker, and that intention is clear, the instrument is a will, though the maker supposed it to be some other kind of a paper.[4]

If the instrument is such that, upon delivery, interests vest, though to be enjoyed in possession in the future, or obligations are created which are enforceable by the parties respectively, it is a contract inter vivos.[5]

An instrument in the form of a deed, signed, sealed, and delivered as such, but intended as a posthumous disposition of a maker's property, is testamentary.[6]

Last will. The last will made.

If two or more wills are in contemplation, this expression appropriately designates the one made after the other or others; otherwise, "last" is redundant, the word "will" alone fully expressing the idea.

Nuncupative will.[7] Such will as depends upon merely oral evidence, being declared by the testator in extremis, before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterward reduced to writing.[8]

In early times, a will of chattels was good without writing — that being then little known. By the time of Henry VIII (1509), reading and writing had become so widely diffused that verbal or unwritten wills were confined to extreme cases. A case of perjury in connection with one will, as well as the opportunities for imposition they have ever afforded, caused nuncupative testaments to be placed under restrictions by the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries of 29 Chas. II (1678), c. 3. By 1 Vict. (1837), c. 26, §§ 9, 11,— preceded by 1 Will. IV (1830), c. 20 — the privilege was confined to soldiers "in actual military service" and to mariners and seamen "at sea," and extended to personalty

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 20–22.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 499; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. *75 (1872); 127 U. S. 309; 80 Pa. 170; 11 Lea, 323.

[3] 4 Kent, 501.

[4] McRee v. Means, 34 Ala. 361 (1859), Walker, C. J.

[5] Hubbard v. Hubbard, 12 Barb. 153 (1851), Brown, J., citing 7 Bac. Ab. 299.

[6] Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 178 (1875), cases, Mercur, J.

[7] Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 539 (1884), Earl, J. See also Wilks v. Burns, 60 Md. 68 (1882); Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449 (1887), Alvey, C. J.

[1] Fuller v. Hooper, 2 Ves. Sr. 342 (1750), Hardwicke, Ld. C.; Alsop's Appeal, 9 Pa. 382 (1848).

[2] Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. 134 (1866), Woodward, C. J.

[3] Williams v. Tolbert, 66 Ga. 128 (1880), Crawford, J.; Ga. Code, § 2295; Sperber v. Balster, ib. 317, 321 (1881), Jackson, C. J.

[4] Kelleher v. Kernan, 60 Md. 442–43 (1883), cases, Irving, J.; Cunningham v. Davis, 62 Miss. 366 (1884).

[5] Book v. Book, 104 Pa. 345 (1883).

[6] Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449 (1887), Alvey, C. J.; Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 230 (1793). See generally 19 Cent. Law J. 46–50 (1884), cases; 92 Am. Dec. 383–89, cases. On contracts to dispose of property by will, see 37 Cent. Law J. 503 (1888), cases.

[7] Nun-cu'-pative. L. nomine capere, to call by name; i. e., to declare publicly in solemn words the disposition to be made, or who shall be executor. See Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. 519 (1823).

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 500.

only. These statutes, which, in substance, have been re-enacted here, receive a strict construction. The deceased must, furthermore, possess testamentary capacity, be in contemplation of death, without time to make a written will, and clearly evince, by words or signs, an intention to dispose of his property.[1]

In England, while property continued in a man only for his life, wills were unknown. In more modern times, a person could dispose of but one-third of his movables from his wife and children. No will of lands was permitted till 1541, and then of a portion only. Indeed, wills and successions are creations of municipal law exclusively.[2]

Statute of wills. Statute of 32 Henry VIII (1541), c. 1, which enabled a person seised in fee-simple, socage tenure, to devise lands according to his own pleasure, except to a body corporate, and enabled a person holding lands in chivalry to devise two-thirds thereof.[3]

Later statutes, notably that of 7 Will. IV and 1 Vict. (1837), c. 26, removed all restrictions.

Our ancestors imported the English law on the subject of wills. Statutory regulations, which are substantially alike in all the States, follow the English statutes, especially the Statute of Wills, so called.[4]

In New York, for example, every person must devise within the limitation of the Statute of Henry VIII, which became part of her law upon the adoption of the constitution of 1777, and, with modifications, remains so to this day.[5]

Power to dispose of property by will rests almost wholly upon statutes, the directions of which must be substantially complied with.

No right is now more solemnly assured than the power to dispose of property by will as the owner pleases. This privilege creates an incentive to practice industry and frugality. The law secures equality of distribution when the owner dies intestate. The object of a will is to produce inequality either in the disposition or use, to make preferments; and, in this matter, a sane man, not unlawfully influenced, has a right to be governed by his prejudices.[6]

If a testator does not violate any principle of public policy, religion, or morality, nor infringe upon any statute, he may make such disposition of his property as he sees proper.[7]

A will "speaks from the death" of the maker; that is, takes effect, as respects its dispositions, from the moment of his decease.

The testator must be of years of discretion, now generally twenty-one, and of testamentary capacity. The draughting, signing, attesting, publishing, revoking, probating, etc., are matters also largely regulated by statutes, and explanatory decisions.

An important general principle is that personalty is to be disposed of according to the law of the domicil of the testator, while realty must be disposed of according to the law in vogue at the place where the property is situated.[1]

A court of equity has power to correct mistakes in a will apparent upon the face of the instrument or made out by a due construction of its terms: the intention is the will.[2]

The intent of the testator is the cardinal rule by which to construe a will. If that intent can be clearly perceived, and is not contrary to a positive rule of law, it must prevail, although, in giving effect to it, some words should be rejected, or so restrained, as materially to change the literal meaning of the particular sentence.[3]

Wills being the least artificial of all instruments, often the productions of persons ignorant of the law and of the correct use of the language in which they are written, are the least to be governed by the settled use of technical legal terms. It may well be doubted if any other source of enlightenment is of much assistance than the application of natural reason to the language of the instrument under the light thrown upon the intent of the testator by the extrinsic circumstances surrounding the execution, and connecting the parties and the bequests and devises with the testator and with the instrument itself.[4]

When interpreting a will, the attending circumstances of the testator, such as the condition of his family, the amount and character of his property, are to be considered. The interpreter is to place himself in the position occupied by the testator when he made his will, and from that standpoint discover what was intended.[6]

Little aid is to be derived from a resort to formal rules, or from a consideration of judicial determinations in cases apparently similar. It is a question in each case of the reasonable interpretation of the words of the particular will, with a view to ascertaining the testator's intention.[6]

See further ADMINISTER, 4; AFTER; AMBIGUITY; ATTEST; BEQUEST; CANCEL; CODICIL; CONTEST; CONVERSION, 1; CY PRES; DEMONSTRATIO; DESCENT; DESCRIPTION, 2; DESIRE; DEVISE; DONATIO; EFFECTS;

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 500-1; 4 Kent, 517; 1 Jarman, Wills, 97-98; 1 Williams, Exec. 59; Redfield, Wills, 185; Sykes v. Sykes, 2 Stew. 364 (Ala., 1830): 20 Am. Dec. 44-48, cases; Moffett v. Moffett, 67 Tex. 642 (1887).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 12, 211, 491-92. See 20 Am. Law Rev. 502 (1886); Hadley, Rom. Law, 294-325; Maine, Anc. Law, 171-217.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 375.

[4] 4 Kent, 504; Williams, R. P., Ch. X, notes to 4 Am. ed.; 3 Jarman, Wills, 731, ed. by R. & T.; 1 Whart. Ev. § 984.

[5] United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 321 (1876).

[6] McMasters v. Blair, 29 Pa. 304 (1857); Stevenson v. Stevenson, 33 id. 471 (1859); Cauffman v. Long, 82 id. 77-78 (1876).

[7] Bainbridge's Appeal, 97 Pa. 485 (1881).

[1] See 25 Am. Law Reg. 153-62 (1886), cases.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 179-80; 2 Jarman, Wills, 189; 1 Redfield, Wills, 501; Effinger v. Hall, 81 Va. 98 (1885), cases.

[3] Finlay v. King, 3 Pet. *377 (1830), Marshall, C. J.

[4] Clarke v. Boorman's Executors, 18 Wall. 502 (1873), Miller, J. Approved, Giles v. Little, 104 U. S. 293 (1881), Woods, J.

[6] Drake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 324 (1878), cases, Strong, Justice.

[6] Robison v. Female Orphan Asylum, 128 U. S. 707 (1887), cases, Matthews, J.; Colton v. Colton, 127 id.

ELECTION, 2; EQUALLY; EXECUTOR; FIRST, 2; HEIR, 1; HOLOGRAPH; IGNORANCE; INFLUENCE; INHERIT; INOFFICIOUS; INSANITY, 2 (5); ISSUE, 5; ITEM; LEGACY; LOST, 2; MONEY; MORTMAIN; MUTILATE, 2; PART, 1, Reasonable; PERPETUITY, 2; POWER, 2; PRECATORY; PRESENCE; PROBATE; PROPERTY; PROVIDED; PUBLICATION; PUNCTUATION; READING; REPRESENTATIVE (1); RES, 2; RESIDUE; SAID; SCRIPT; SCRIVENER; SEPARATE, 2; SIGN; SO; SOLE; SUBSCRIBER, 2; THEN; TRUST, 1; UMPIRE; WHEN; WRITING.

WIND. See DANGERS; TEMPEST.

Wind and water. See WEAR AND TEAR.

WINDOW. See BAY-WINDOW; LIGHT.

WIND UP. To liquidate the assets of an association, as, a partnership or corporation, for purposes of distribution. Whence "winding-up" statutes, and proceedings. See LIQUIDATOR.

WINE. See LIQUOR.

WISDOM. See DISCRETION, 2.

WISH. See PRECATORY; VOLO; WANT.

WIT.[1] To know, have knowledge of. To wit explains what precedes, being equivalent to "that is to say," "more particularly," "namely," "videlicet."[2] See VIDERE, Videlicet.

Wittingly. Relating to the wit or understanding; knowingly, designedly.[3]

Knowingly, with knowledge, by design.[4]

WITCHCRAFT. The practices of a witch: a woman (formerly, a man or a woman) supposed to be able to affect the happiness and destiny of other persons by the exercise of supernatural power acquired from intercourse with evil spirits; conjuration; sorcery; enchantment.

"A species of offense," says Blackstone, "against God and religion, of which one knows not well what account to give, is witchcraft, conjuration, enchantment or sorcery. The thing is a truth to which every nation hath borne testimony, by examples seemingly well attested or by prohibitory laws."

The civil law punished with death sorcerers and those who consulted with them, imitating the Mosaic law "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live" [by her craft?] Our own [English] laws have been equally penal, condemning culprits to the flames. Statute 33 Henry VIII (1542), c. 8, made witchcraft and sorcery felony without benefit of clergy; and 1 James I (1603), c. 12, enacted that persons invoking any evil spirit, or consulting, covenanting with, entertaining, employing, feeding, or rewarding any evil spirit, or hurting any person by such infernal arts, should be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, and suffer death; and that if any person attempted by sorcery to discover hidden treasure, to restore hidden goods, to provoke unlawful love, or to hurt any man or beast, he or she should suffer imprisonment and pillory for the first offense, and death for the second. Not a few of those executed under these laws confessed guilt at the gallows. Louis XIV of France forbade the courts to receive informations of witchcraft. Statute 9 Geo. III (1769), c. 5, disallowed prosecutions for conjuration, witchcraft, sorcery, or enchantment. But pretending to use witchcraft, tell fortunes, or discover stolen goods, by skill in the occult sciences, is still a punishable misdemeanor in England,[1] and in the States.

WITH. Along with, in place or time.

That an affidavit is to be filed "with a pleading" does not necessarily imply a filing at the same time.[5]

It is a sufficient compliance with the rule that "the plaintiff shall file with his declaration an affidavit of claim," that they be both filed at the same time, and this is not affected by their being detached, or by the place of deposit in the office.[6]

With all faults. See FAULT.

With interest. See INTEREST, 3.

With strong hand. See HAND, 2.

WITHDRAW. To take away, as, to withdraw a record; to mark off, as, to withdraw an appearance once entered of record in a cause; to substitute one for another, as one plea for another plea; to cause to leave, to remove, to retire, as, to withdraw a juror from the box; to quit or sever connection 809-10 (1888); Hatcher v. Hatcher, 80 Va. 171 (1885), cases; 50 Mich. 460; 74 Me. 413; 100 Pa. 481; 102 id. 247; 16 S. C. 227; 17 id. 348.

As to testamentary capacity, in addition to the references to "influence" and "insanity" (ad fin.), see 34 Alb. Law J. 4-7 (1886), cases; 4 Law Quar. Rev. 442-48 (1888), Eng. cases; formalities as to execution, 34 Alb. Law J. 485-88 (1886), cases; execution, authentication, and construction, 26 Cent. Law J. 151-56 (1880), cases; implied revocation of, ib. 387-91 (1888), cases; costs in contested cases, 18 id. 83-86 (1884), cases; lost wills, 39 Alb. Law J. 44-47, 64-67 (1888), cases; distribution of assets in cases of erroneous construction, 28 id. 582 (1886) — Irish Law Times.

[1] A. S. witan, to know: L. vid-, to see. Whence "witness."

[2] See Commonwealth v. Grey, 2 Gray, 502 (1854).

[3] Harrington v. State, 54 Miss. 493 (1877).

[4] Osborne v. Warren, 44 Conn. 359 (1877): Webster.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 60-62; 3 Coke, Inst. 44; Spectator, 117; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 54; 2 id. 430-36. See Trial of Suffolk Witches, 6 St. Tr. 687-702 (1665),— Rose Cullender and Amy Duny, who were convicted after half an hour's deliberation by the jury, Sir Matthew Hale presiding, and were executed four days later, neither one confessing the charge, although "much urged to," "the judge and all the court" being "fully satisfied with the verdict;" Trial of Three Devon Witches, 8 id. 1018-39 (1682),— with "the substance of their last words and confessions at the time and place of execution." See also 2 West. Law J. 312; 106 North Am. Rev. 176; 45 New Engl. 788.

[5] Hummert v. Schwab, 54 Ill. 146 (1870).

[6] Hossler v. Hartman, 82 Pa. 55 (1876).

with, to end responsibility in, as, to withdraw from a cause.

"Withdrawing a juror" describes a fiction to which a court may resort when it appears that, owing to some accident or surprise, defect of proof, unexpected and difficult question of law, or like reason, a trial cannot proceed without injustice to a party.[1]

The clerk, under direction from the court, calls a juror out of the box, whereupon the plaintiff objects, or is supposed to object, to proceeding with eleven jurors, and the trial goes over to the next term, the rights of the litigants remaining unimpaired. The court may resort to this practice rather than nonsuit the plaintiff. The costs may be imposed upon one party, be divided between both, or abide the event of the continued suit.[2]

See GUILTY; NONSUIT; RETRAXIT.

WITHIN. May refer to a place or a period of time. Compare CONTAINED.

Referring to place, may mean on the line or outside of. Thus, a horse in the street, breaking down a fence, is doing damage "within the inclosure."[3]

"Within thirty days" from May thirteenth includes June twelfth as the last day; that is, the first day is excluded and the last included.[4] See further DAY.

WITHOUT. 1. Outside, beyond: as, "without the State;"[5] "without the allegiance;"[6] "without the jurisdiction."

2. With the omission of; with the exclusion of, excluding; independently of; without any: as, without appeal, or exception; without children, heirs, or issue; without day, defalcation, notice, recourse, reserve, qq. v.

"Without being licensed" is of the same import and effect as "not licensed" or "not being licensed."[7]

Without this, etc. See TRAVERSE.

WITNESS.[8] 1, n. One who gives evidence in a cause before a court.[9]

A most general term, including every person from whose lips testimony is extracted to be used in any judicial proceeding.[10]

An "affiant" or "deponent" is always a witness, but a witness is not necessarily an affiant or deponent.[10]

2, v. To bear testimony to; to have personal knowledge of the execution of an instrument.

Adverse witness. A witness who is hostile toward, or who testifies strongly against, a party.

Attesting witness. One who signs an instrument, certifying that it was executed in his presence.

At the time of attestation he must be "competent" to testify in court on the subject-matter.[1] See further ATTEST.

Competent witness. A person who is legally qualified to give testimony. Opposed, incompetent witness.

In some States wills devising land must be attested by competent witnesses, unless wholly written by the devisor, as, in Kentucky. In Pennsylvania the "competent witnesses" who are to prove a will need not be subscribing witnesses.[2]

In Virginia, by the code of 1873, c. 118, sec. 4, unless the will, about to be attested, be olograph, the witnesses must subscribe as witnesses, though that word need not be used.[3] See further COMPETENT.

Credible witness. A witness who is deserving of confidence; a person who, being competent to testify, is worthy of belief.

In some States a will is to be attested by "credible witnesses." It has been held that "credible" in this connection means "competent."[4]

In a statute empowering an examined copy to be made and sworn to by "credible witnesses," in the absence or inability of the clerk of a probate court, held to mean witnesses giving testimony under the sanction of an oath, and who could be cross-examined as to the existence of the record and the accuracy of the copy.[5] See further CREDIBLE, 2.

Interested witness. A witness who is directly interested in the result of the suit, or in the record as evidence.

The common-law rules disqualifying for interest have been generally abrogated, except as to personal communications with a dead party. See post.

Subscribing witness. A person who, being present at the execution of an instrument, at that time and at the request of the

---

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] See People v. Judges of New York, 8 Cow. 180 (1828), cases; Winsor v. The Queen, L. R., 1 Q. B. *298–99 (1866), cases; 3 Chitty, Pr. 917.

[3] Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 672 (1874).

[4] McDonald v. Vinette, 58 Wis. 620 (1883).

[5] 91 U. S. 277; 97 id. 637.

[6] 9 Mass. 456.

[7] Commonwealth v. Thompson, 2 Allen, 508 (1861), cases.

[8] A. S., witnes, knowledge, testimony. See WIT; SUIT, 1.

[9] Barker v. Colt, 1 Root, 225 (Conn., 1790).

[10] [Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 252 (1859), Appleton, J.

[1] Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 601 (1874), Gray, C. J.; Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. 17–18 (1839), cases.

[2] Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. 178–79 (1875).

[3] Peake v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 296 (1885).

[4] See Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. *298 (1809); Sears v. Dillingham, 12 id. *361 (1815); Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. *356 (1830); Bacon v. Bacon, 17 id. 135 (1835); Haven v. Hilliard, 23 id. 17–18 (1839); Hall v. Hall, 18 Ga. 44–45 (1855); Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 476 (1860); Estep v. Morris, 38 Me. 424 (1873). Contra, Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 417 (1758), Ld. Mansfield, considering 29 Charles II, c. 3.

[5] Dibble v. Morris, 26 Conn. 495 (1857).

party, attaches his signature to it; or, a person who, though not so present, yet subsequently in the presence of the party, who acknowledges the signature and requests him to sign, affixes his signature.[1]

At common law a subscribing witness was to be called to prove the execution of the instrument, but never as to a collateral matter; a party was not sufficient, except when the subscribing witness was incapacitated. He is not called when an opponent produces a writing on notice and claims an interest under the writing, nor when he refuses to produce the writing, nor where an acknowledgment makes a writing evidence. An attesting witness proves his own signature only.[2]

Swift witness. A witness who is very eager to testify.

Zealous witness. A witness who evinces partiality for the party who calls him.

The tendency is to admit all persons to testify who can furnish relevant, material evidence, leaving the jury to judge of the credibility of each witness.

"In the courts of the United States no witness shall be excluded in any action on account of color, or in any civil action because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried."[3]

That enactment was intended to admit the testimony of witnesses previously incompetent on account of interest or of being parties. It introduced a principle extensively adopted in the States.[4]

"Provided, that in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other, as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court. In all other respects the laws of the State in which the court is held shall be the rules of decision as to the competency of witnesses in the courts of the United States in trials at common law, and in equity, and admiralty."[5]

The purpose in preventing a party from testifying, where the adverse party is an executor or administrator, is to guard the estates of decedents against fraudulent defenses and claims, or unfounded causes of action.[6]

In trials at common law a party to the record could not be a witness for or against himself or his adversary. The purpose of the statutes is to put the parties on a footing of equality with other witnesses, that is, to make all admissible to testify for themselves, and compellable to testify for others. The statutes are remedial, and to be construed accordingly.[7] See INTEREST, 1.

The exception of executors, administrators, and guardians leaves other suitors, including the United States, under the operation of the common law.[8]

A wife is not given capacity to testify for (or against) her husband.[9]

In a criminal case the defendant, at his own request, shall be a competent witness. But failure to make himself a witness shall create no presumption against him.[10]

Like remedial statutes have been enacted in all the States, Delaware and New Mexico excepted. In a few States persons charged with homicide may not testify in their own behalf.[11]

In civil suits a witness may demand prepayment of expenses.[12] Non-attendance, after a subpœna has been duly served, is an offense against public justice, and a contempt of court, for which an attachment may issue and a fine, or a fine and imprisonment, be imposed. A writ of habeas corpus will secure the attendance of an imprisoned witness. By common law in criminal cases, and by statutes in civil cases, a witness likely to disappear before trial may be required to give bail for his appearance.[13]

On calling witnesses before either house of Congress or a committee thereof, see R. S. § 859, and CONTEMPT, 2.

See further AGED; ANCIENT, 2; ARREST, 2 (2, 3); CALL, 1; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; CONFRONT; CONTEMPT, 1; CRIME; DECISION, Rules of; DEPOSITION; DUMB; EXAMINATION, 9; EXPERT; EVIDENCE; FALSUS, In uno; GOING; HUSBAND; IMPEACH, 3; INFAMY; INFANT; INSANITY, 2 (1); LETTERS, 4, Rogatory; OATH; OPINION, 1; PARTY, 2; QUESTION, 1; REFRESH; REPUTATION; SLANDER, 1; SUBPŒNA, 3; TESTIFY; TESTIMONY; TESTIS; TURPITUDE; VOUCH.

WITTINGLY. See WIT.

WOLF'S HEAD. See CAPUT, Lupinum.

WOMAN. May mean any human being of the female sex, or an adult female.

In the United States unmarried women have all the civil rights of men: they may make contracts, sue and [1] Huston v. Ticknor, 99 Pa. 238 (1881), Paxson, J.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 569 a, cases; Cussons v. Skinner, 11 M. & W. 168 (1843); Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill, 304 (1844), cases.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 705–40, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 272–78, cases.

[3] Act 2 July, 1864, § 3: R. S. § 858.

[4] United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Woolw. 195 (1867); Rison v. Cribbs, 1 Dill. 184 (1870).

[5] Act 3 March, 1865: R. S. § 858, cases. See also Rice v. Martin, 7 Saw. 338–40 (1881), cases.

[6] Roberts v. Briscoe, 44 Ohio St. 601 (1887); Dudley v. Steele, 71 Ala. 426 (1882). As to testifying to communications with deceased persons, see 36 Alb. Law J. 84–90 (1886), cases.

[7] Texas v. Chiles, 21 Wall. 490–91 (1874), Swayne, J.

[8] Green v. United States, 9 Wall. 658 (1869); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 457–90, cases.

[9] Lucas v. Brooks, 8 Wall. 452 (1873).

[10] Act 16 March, 1878: 1 Sup. R. S. 312.

[11] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 464–72, cases; 27 Cent. Law J. 328–32 (1888), cases; 4 Cr. Law M. 333, 397.

[12] O'Neil v. Kansas City, &c. R. Co., 31 F. R. 666 (1887); 1 Whart. Ev. § 464.

[13] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 381–85, 414, cases. As to privileges of witnesses, see 61 Alb. Law J. 144, 183, 244, 323, 344, 383, 403 (1885), cases; as to "utterances," 27 Am. Law Reg. 714–19 (1888), cases, and 26 Cent. Law J. 2–8 (1888), cases.

be sued, be trustees and guardians, be witnesses, and attest all kinds of papers. But exercise of political powers has not been generally conferred upon them: while she is a citizen (q. v.), she is not eligible to office, nor entitled to vote, nor has she a constitutional right to practice law.[1]

It is not one of the privileges and immunities of women as citizens to engage in any and every profession, occupation, or employment in civil life. The civil law, as well as nature herself, has always recognized a wide difference in the respective spheres and destinies of man and woman. Man is, or should be, woman's protector and defender. The natural and proper timidity and delicacy which belongs to the female sex evidently unfits it for many of the occupations of civil life. The constitution of the family organization, which is founded in the divine ordinance, as well as in the nature of things, indicates the domestic sphere as that which properly belongs to the domain and functions of womanhood. The harmony, not to say identity, of interests and views which belong or should belong to the family institution is repugnant to the idea of the wife adopting a distinct and independent career from that of her husband. So firmly fixed was this sentiment in the founders of common law that it became a maxim that a wife had no legal existence separate from her husband, who was regarded as her head and representative in the social state; and, notwithstanding some recent modifications of this civil status, many of the special rules of law flowing from and dependent upon this cardinal principle still exist in full force in most of the States; as, that she, without his consent, is incapable of making a contract binding on either of them. This incapacity renders her incompetent fully to perform the duties and trusts that belong to the office of an attorney and counsellor at law. That unmarried women are not affected by the incapacities which arise out of the married state are exceptions to the general rule. But the rules of civil society must be adapted to the general constitution of things, and cannot be based upon exceptional cases. It is within the province of legislation to ordain what offices, positions, and callings shall be filled and discharged by men, and what by men or women.[2]

Act of 15 February, 1879, admits to practice before the Supreme Court any woman of good character who shall have been a member of the bar of any State or Territory, or of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for three years.[3]

The tendency of legislation, and of the decisions of the higher courts, is toward the admission of women to the legal profession, upon equal terms with men.[4]

In a few States a woman may serve as a recorder of deeds, be appointed a notary public, be eligible to a school or a city office and vote for nominees for such offices, and hold the office of overseer of the poor. In Illinois by statute[1] no person is precluded from any occupation, profession, or employment (except military) on account of sex, the statute not affecting the eligibility of women to an elective office, nor enabling them to serve as jurors, nor permitting them to labor on the streets; but, by construction, it allows them to be appointed masters in chancery.[2]

In the discretion of the head of any department of the general government she may be appointed to any clerkship authorized by law, upon the same conditions and with the same compensation as are prescribed for men.[3]

She may be employed as customs inspector to search the baggage and persons of females.[4]

When women are excluded from the right to vote for particular officers, they are excluded from the right to hold the offices.[5]

Compare FEME. See BURN; CITIZEN; FEUDAL, System; HUSBAND; MAN; PERSON; PRIVILEGE, 1; PRONOUNS; SCOLD; WIDOW; WIFE; WITCHCRAFT.

WOOD. See SOUND, 2 (1); TIMBER.

Wood-cut. See COPYRIGHT; PRINT.

Wooden buildings. See POLICE, 2.

Woods. Forest; woodland.

A field grown up in broom-sedge and wire-grass, surrounded by an old fence and used as a pasture, is not "woods" within the meaning of a law against setting fire to a woods.[6]

But an old field, "turned out," without fencing around it, grown up in broom-sedge and pine bushes, some of which are head high, is a "woods," within such statute.[7]

The reference, in such cases, is to forest lands in their natural state, in contradistinction to lands cleared and enclosed for cultivation.[8]

A sale of "standing wood" includes trees suitable for timber as well as those for fuel.[9] See FIRE, Set on.

WOOLSACK. If the lord chancellor "be a peer, he ought regularly to be placed at the top of the dukes' bench, on the left of the throne; and if a commoner, upon the uppermost sack in the Parliament chamber, called the lord chancellor's woolsack."

"For convenience, here he generally sits, though a peer, and here he puts the question, and acts as prolocutor; but this place is not considered within the

[1] United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 200 (1873); Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162 (1874); United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214 (1875); 16 How. 287; 1 MacArthur, 169; 43 Cal. 43; 39 Ga. 282.

[2] Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. 140-42 (1872), Bradley, J.: s. c. 55 Ill. 535 (1869).

[3] 20 St. L. 292: 1 Sup. R. S. 410.

[4] Re Hall, 50 Conn. 131 (1882), Park, C. J.: R. S. 1875; Re Goodell, 48 Wis. 693 (1879), Cole, J.: R. S. 1878; Re Kilgore, 17 W. N. C. 475 (Pa., 1886): Act May, 1885; s. c. 14 id. 80, 255, 466; 17 id. 563-68, cases. Contra, Robinson's Case, 131 Mass. 376-84 (1881), cases, Gray, C. J.: Stat. 1876.

[1] R. S. 1874, p. 478.

[2] Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 505 (1881).

[3] R. S. § 165: Act 12 July, 1870.

[4] R. S. § 3064: Act 18 July, 1866.

[5] Atchison (County Judge) v. Lucas, 83 Ky. 464 (1885).

[6] Achenbach v. Johnston, 84 N. C. 264 (1881).

[7] Hall v. Cranford, 5 Jones, L. 4 (N. C., 1857).

[8] Averitt v. Murrell, 4 Jones, L. 323 (1857).

[9] Strout v. Harper, 73 Me. 273 (1881).

House, and when he is to join in debate as a peer he stands in front of his proper seat, at the top of the dukes' bench."

"There are woolsacks for the judges and other assessors, as well as for the lord chancellor. They are said to have been introduced into the House of Lords as a compliment to the staple manufacture of the realm; but I believe that in the rude simplicity of early times a sack of wool was frequently used as a sofa."[1]

WORDS. Words for the most part do not represent distinct thoughts; only the parts into which a thought or conception has been, or may be, divided by an analytic process.[2]

Words get their point and meaning almost entirely from the time, place, circumstances, and intent with which they are used.[3]

The same word may have different meanings even in the same sentence.[4]

In ordinary writings any words may be used which express the intention of the parties: the words ought to subserve the intention. Words are to be taken effectively, according to the subject-matter, and so that the purpose may not fail; are to be taken the more strongly against the party who proposes the phraseology; such as are of general import are to be construed with reference to the subject-matter, and will be controlled by specific or technical terms: words of an art are to be understood as in the art or trade. In cases of doubt, written control printed words.

It is often necessary to ascertain whether a word has acquired a special meaning, as applied to the subject-matter of a contract, or whether it is used with a restricted signification by authors or jurists or those conversant with the business to which the contract relates. It is not always safe to adopt the mere etymological meaning, or such as lexicographers give.[5]

Words are to be taken in their most usual and known signification; technical terms, according to the interpretation of the learned in each art, trade, or science.[6]

The courts take notice of the meaning and force of common words, and also of technical words where the meaning is well settled by usage, and, when necessary, they define them to the jury.[7]

It has been a source of perplexity to those who attempt to reduce discoveries to scientific classification, that old terms, with well-defined meanings, are applied to things wholly new, as "road" in railroad, q. v. To avoid this result, modern science is enriched with compounds of Greek and Latin words.[8]

In addition to particular words or terms, see generally ART, 3; CONSTRUCTION; DEFAMATION; ETYMOLOGY; EXPRESSIO; FOLIO; GENDER; GENERAL, 6; GRAMMAR; INFERIOR; NOSCITUR; NUMBER; PROVOCATION; RES, Ut res; TERM, 1; USUS, Utile; WRITING. Compare VERBUM.

WORK. The "work" and the "duty" of a person, as of a brakeman, mean the same thing.[9] See BUSINESS; LABOR, 1; SERVICE, 1.

Work and labor. See COUNTS, 4, Common.

Work-beast. See HORSE.

Working-days. Days that succeed each other, exclusive of Sundays and holidays.[10]

Lay-days. Time to load and unload a cargo.[11]

Running days. Successive or consecutive days, whether working-days or not.[12]

In a charter-party, days as they run, day by day, from a given time.[13]

WORKS. The structures and grounds which compose a factory or manufacturing establishment.

In a statute exempting from taxation "all machines, vehicles and carriages, belonging to the company, with all their works," the word "works" was held to include real estate.[14]

"Works of all kinds," as used in a provision for licensing in a city charter, does not include the business of insurance agents.[15]

Works of charity, or of necessity. See CHARITY, 2; NECESSITY; SUNDAY; WORSHIP.

Works of fine arts. See ART, 2; COPYRIGHT.

WORLD. "The whole world," in the law of notice, means all persons who are interested or who may become interested in a transaction or proceeding. See NOTICE, 1.

Worldly employments. See SUNDAY.

WORRY. 1. Compare TROUBLE.

2. To pursue, run after, harass; as, for a dog to worry sheep or fowls.

---

[1] Campbell, Lives of the Lord Chancellors, vol. I, pp. 15–16, note.

[2] [Lieber, Hermen, 3 ed., 14, n.

[3] Dillard v. State, 41 Ga. 280 (1870).

[4] Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 533 (1882).

[5] Dole v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 6 Allen, 386–87 (1863), Bigelow, C. J.

[6] Pea Patch Island Case, 1 Wall. Jr., cxlv (1848); People v. May, 3 Mich. 605 (1855); 1 Col. 359.

[7] State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 22 (1886), cases. The lower court explained "anæsthetic," "chloroform," 'poison," and "asphyxia."

[8] Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Co., 1 Wall. 147 (1863), Miller, J.

[9] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Bragonier, 119 Ill. 63 (1886).

[10] Pedersen v. Eugster, 14 F. R. 492 (1882): 1 Cal. 498.

[11] See 3 Kent, 202; 2 Steph. Com. 141; 10 M. & W. 331.

[12] Crowell v. Barreda, 16 Gray, 472 (1860), Hoar, J.

[13] Davis v. Pendergast, 16 Blatch. 567 (1879), Waite, Chief Justice.

[14] City of Richmond v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 21 Gratt. 607–8 (1872).

[15] State v. Smith, 31 Iowa, 496 (1871). See also 21 How. Pr. 1; 5 Abb. Pr. 232

Worrying sheep does not imply tearing them with the teeth; for a dog to pursue and bark at them is worrying them.[1]

In a statute giving the owner of domestic animals, such as fowls, worried by a dog, the right to kill the dog, "worry" means to run after, chase, bark at.[2]

WORSHIP. No definition of this word, as used in "divine worship," "religious worship," "place of worship," and similar expressions, applicable to all cases, has, seemingly, been framed by any court. The word has no technical, legal signification; each case, in which its meaning has been the subject of contention, has been decided upon its own merits.

A Sunday-school is a worshiping assembly.[3]

But a Sunday-school was held not to be contemplated by the expression "divine worship," in an agreement between two congregations for the erection of a common meeting-house, at a time when Sunday-schools were not in vogue in the neighborhood.[4]

One room used as a chapel does not reserve the whole building "for religious worship."[5]

A Christmas-tree festival for Sunday scholars at a school-house is not an assembly for "religious worship."[6]

Camp-meeting grounds belonging to an association deriving profit therefrom are not to be exempt from taxation as a "place of worship."[7]

"Religious worship" has no technical meaning, in a legal sense. Whether a temperance camp-meeting is "a public assembly convened for the purpose of religious worship" is a question of fact.[8]

Receiving compulsory prices for admission to a camp-meeting on Sunday is worldly employment or business, and not within the exception of "works of necessity and charity."[9]

A prosecution for disturbing an assemblage for religious worship will not be sustained by proof that the meeting was for business purposes, though opened with religious exercises.[10]

A building for "religious purposes" is exempt from taxation although used for educational purposes, so long as the use is merely incidental or occasional, or, if habitual, is purely permissive and voluntary and does not interfere with the use for religious purposes, there being no alienation (as, e. g., by lease) of the building in whole or in part for educational uses. Much Sunday-school teaching, though auxiliary to religion, is not purely religious. Buildings for religious worship, or parts of them, are frequently permitted to be used on week days for literary or scientific lectures, or for industrial instruction. Some of these uses, while not wholly religious, are prompted by religion.[1]

See ASSEMBLY, Civil; CHURCH; PARSONAGE; RELIGION; SUNDAY.

WOUND. Within the meaning of 9 Geo. IV (1829), c. 21, s. 12, an injury to the person by which the skin is broken — the whole skin, not the cuticle merely.[2]

Breaking a limb was not, then, a wounding; nor was biting off a finger, or the nose; nor was throwing acid in the face — because, in such cases, no instrument inflicting at least a skin wound was used.[3]

Statute of 24 and 25 Vict. (1861), c. 97, s. 47, makes it an offense to kill, maim, or wound any cattle. "Wound" is distinguishable from "maim," which implies a permanent injury, whereas a wound is any mutilation or laceration which breaks the continuity of the outer skin. The injury may be as great when produced by manual power as by an instrument, though in the former case it is not evidence of so much malice.[4]

In many cases there is great difficulty in determining what constitutes a wound. . . A scratch on the face, by rupturing the cuticle only, without separating the whole skin, is not a wound.[5]

The words "mortal wound," in an indictment for murder by felonious wounding, are superfluous when the indictment alleges a wounding which produces death.[6]

Wounding. As an injury to the limbs or body, consists in giving another some dangerous hurt; an aggravated species of battery.[7]

If death ensues from a wound given in malice, not in its nature fatal, but which, being neglected or improperly treated, causes death, the assailant may be held guilty of murder, unless it clearly appears that the neglect or treatment was the sole cause of the death.[8] See MAYHEM; STAB.

[1] Campbell v. Brown, 1 Grant, 83 (1854).

[2] Marshall v. Blackshire, 44 Iowa, 478 (1876), Seevers, Chief Justice.

[3] Martin v. State, 6 Baxt. 234 (Tenn., 1873).

[4] Gass' Appeal, 73 Pa. 45 (1873).

[5] St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors, 12 R. I. 19 (1878).

[6] Layne v. State, 4 Lea, 200 (1879).

[7] Summit Grove Meeting Association v. School District of New Freedom, 12 W. N. C. 103 (Pa., 1882).

[8] State v. Norris, 59 N. H. 536 (1880).

[9] Commonwealth v. Weidner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 437 (1888): Act 22 April, 1794.

[10] Wood v. State, 11 Tex. Ap. 318 (1882). Contra, Hollingsworth v. State, 5 Sneed, 518 (Tenn., 1858).

[1] Saint Mary's Church v. Tripp, 14 R. I. 309 (1883), Durfee, C. J.

[2] Moriarty v. Brooks, 25 E. C. L. 598 (1834); Rex v. Wood, 19 id. 564 (1830); Regina v. M'Loughlin, 34 id. 561 (1838).

[3] Rex v. Stevens, 1 Moody, C. C. 409 (1834); Rex v. Murrow, ib. 456 (1835); Rex v. Harris, 33 E. C. L. 700 (1836). See these cases explained, 11 Cox, Cr. C. 127, infra.

[4] Regina v. Bullock, 11 Cox, Cr. C. 127 (1868), Cockburn, C. J.: s. c., L. R., 1 C. C. 115.

[5] Commonwealth v. Gallagher, 6 Metc. 568 (1843), Shaw, C. J.; State v. Leonard, 22 Mo. 450 (1856).

[6] Brown v. State, 18 Fla. 476 (1881), cases, Randall, C. J.; People v. Steventon, 9 Cal. 275 (1858); Commonwealth v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 23 (1869).

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 121; 4 id. 216; 2 East, P. C. 1076.

[8] Crum v. State, 64 Miss. 4 (1886), cases, Cooper, C. J.: 26 Am. Law Reg. 368 (1887); ib. 370-71, cases.

WRECK.[1] By the ancient common law, was where any ship was lost at sea, and the cargo or goods were thrown upon the land.[2]

Such goods as, after a shipwreck, are cast upon land by the sea, and left there, within some county.[3]

A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of injury received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable, or unable to pursue her voyage, without repairs exceeding the half of her value.[4]

That "admiralty has no jurisdiction of the wreck of the sea" does not refer to property deemed wreck or shipwrecked, in the sense of the maritime or commercial law, but to "wreck of the sea" in the purely technical common-law sense.[5]

The act of December 23, 1852 (R. S. § 4136), authorizes the issue of a certificate of register or enrollment for any vessel built in a foreign country, but wrecked in the United States, and purchased or repaired by a citizen thereof. "Wrecked" here applies to a vessel disabled and rendered unfit for navigation, whether this condition has been caused by the winds or the waves, by stranding, fire, explosion of boilers, or other casualty.[6]

At common law, to constitute a legal wreck, the goods must come to land. If they continue at sea they are jetsam, flotsam, or ligan.[7] qq. v.

Wreck, by the common law of England, belonged to the king or his grantee; but within a year and a day the true owner could claim it or the proceeds.[8]

Here, sea-shore rights were vested in the Colonies; and wreck belongs to the owner of the shore where it is cast, as against a stranger claimant.[9]

The States may by legislation regulate property in wrecks.[10]

Stealing or destroying money or goods from or belonging to any vessel, boat, or raft, in distress, lost, or stranded, or willfully obstructing the escape of any person endeavoring to save his life from such vessel, etc., or holding out any false light or extinguishing any true light, with intent to bring any vessel, etc., on the sea into danger, distress, or shipwreck, are felonies, punishable by fine up to five thousand dollars and with as much as ten years imprisonment.[11]

See ADMIRALTY; BILGED; LOSS, 2; MARITIME; SALVAGE; STRANDING.

[1] Wrack, what is cast ashore, drift: A. S. wreccan, to drive, force.

[2] [1 Bl. Com. 290; 3 id. 106.

[3] Baker v. Hoag, 7 N. Y. 558 (1853), Jewett, J.

[4] Wood v. Lincoln, &c. Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 482 (1810), Parsons, C. J.; 3 Kent, 322-24.

[5] United States v. Coombs, 12 Pet. *77 (1838), Story, J.

[6] Wrecked Vessel, 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 402 (1877), Devens, A.-G. See also The Mohawk, 8 Wall. 570 (1865).

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 292.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 290-92; 12 Pet. 72.

[9] Baker v. Bates, 13 Pick. 257 (1832); 113 Mass. 337.

[10] The Schooner Tilton, 5 Mas. 479 (1830).

[11] Act 3 March, 1825: R. S. § 5358. See also 12 Pet. 72; 1 Bl. Com. 293; 4 id. 236; 2 Kent, 321, 357.

WRIT. That which is written: a writing; a mandate or precept.

The king's precept in writing under seal issuing out of some court and commanding something to be done touching a suit or action, or giving commission to have it done.[1]

As used in the statutes of some States, generally means process in a civil suit, while process in a criminal case is denominated a "warrant."[2]

At common law writs in civil actions were either original or judicial writs:

Original writ. When a person had to apply to the sovereign for redress of an injury he sued out an "original writ," or simply an "original," from the court of chancery (wherein all the king's writs were framed). This was a mandatory letter from the king, in parchment, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed, or supposed to be, requiring him to command the wrong-doer to do justice to the complainant or else to appear in court and answer the accusation.

Whatever the sheriff did in pursuance of this writ he "returned" or certified to the court of common pleas, together with the writ itself. This was the foundation of the jurisdiction of that court, being the king's warrant for the judges to proceed to the determination of the cause.

An original writ was either optional or peremptory. It was "optional," or a præcipe, when in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason why he had not done it. It was "peremptory," or a si fecerit te securum, when it directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without option, provided the plaintiff gave security to effectually prosecute his claim. The former writ issued when something certain was demanded; the latter, when only a satisfaction in general was wanted.[3]

Judicial writ. A mandate, precept, or process issuing, or issued, from a court (of law or equity), or from a judge acting as a judge.

If a defendant, being summoned, neglected to appear, or if the sheriff returned a nihil (i. e., nothing whereby the defendant may be summoned, attached, or distrained), a capias issued, to take the body of the defendant and have him in court on the day of the return, to answer the complaint. That writ of capias, and all other writs subsequent to the original writ, not issuing out of chancery, but from the court into which

[1] Termes de la Ley; Brown's Law Dict.

[2] Stoddard v. Couch, 23 Conn. *240 (1854), Waite, J.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 273-74.

the original was returnable, and being grounded on what passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, were called judicial writs. They issued under the private seal of that court, and were teste'd in the name of the chief or senior justice only.[1]

In England, since 1873, all suits begin with a writ of summons. In this country, the courts derive jurisdiction from constitutions, and not from any writ in the nature of the old common-law original writ.[2] See STRAW BAIL.

In some jurisdictions, "original" refers to the writ by which a suit is instituted, as, a writ of summons, and is contradistinguished from the "final" writ or writ of execution. See FINAL, 3.

The forms of writs, by which actions are commenced, were perfected in the reign of Edward the First (1273–1307).[3]

One inherent power in an appellate court is the right to make use of all writs known to the common law, and, if necessary, to invent new writs or proceedings in order to suitably exercise jurisdiction already conferred.[4]

The various species of writs in use take their names from their office or purpose; as, a writ of — assistance, attachment, capias, dower, ejectment, entry, error, execution, extent, inquiry, right, summons; prerogative writs, etc. See those substantives, also ABATEMENT, 4; EXIGENCY; JUDGE, p. 575, c. 2; QUASH; PROCESS, 1; RETURN, 2; SERVICE, 6; especially EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

WRITING. Words traced with a pen, or stamped, printed, engraved, or made legible by any other device.[5]

The expression of ideas by visible letters — on paper, wood, stone, or other material.

When a statute or usage requires a "writing," it must be on paper or parchment; but it is not essential that it be in ink; it may be in pencil. This rule applies to promissory notes, book accounts, a will or a signature thereto, applications for insurance, and the like.[6]

The notes of an official stenographer, taken when a witness testifies in court, is a taking "in writing."[7]

A judicial order by telegraph is an order "in writing."[8] Compare SUBSCRIBE.

Under a statute which provides that an officer may assign tax certificates "by writing" his name in blank, with his character added, the officer may "stamp" his name and character, with intent to assign a certificate.[1]

A printed theater ticket is a "writing" which may be made the subject of forgery at common law.[2]

A contract, required to be "in writing," may not need the signatures of both parties.[3]

Words written prevail over words printed: the former are the immediate language of the parties; the latter, a general formula adapted to all cases, as, in the case of a policy of insurance, or a lease.[4]

Ancient writings. Deeds, wills, and other instruments more than thirty years old.

May be read in evidence without other proof of execution than that they have been in the possession of those claiming rights under them.

The evidence of such ancient documents is admitted upon the ground that, although between strangers, they are of such character as usually accompanies transfers of title or acts of possession, and purport to form a part of actual transactions referring to coexisting subjects by which their truth can be tested, and there is deemed to be a presumption that they are not fabricated. But plottings for plans and field-notes are memoranda only, which may never have been acted upon.[5]

The rule is that an ancient deed may be admitted in evidence, without direct proof of its execution, if it appears to be of the age of at least thirty years, when it is found in proper custody, and either possession under it is shown, or some other corroborative evidence of its authenticity, freeing it from all just grounds of suspicion.[6]

After the lapse of thirty years, the witnesses are presumed to be dead. . . The rule applies to all kinds of deeds, where the instrument comes from the custody of the proper party claiming under it, or entitled to its custody.[7]

More or less credit has always been attached to ancient documents without other proof of authenticity than that of their production from proper depositories. Where any document purporting or proved to be thirty years old is produced from its proper custody, every part which purports to be in the handwriting of a particular person is presumed to be authentic. This exception to the general rule of evidence rests upon a conceded necessity, and applies not only to formal instruments, such as wills, bonds, and

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 282.

[2] Walker, American Law, 514.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 427.

[4] Wheeler v. North. Col. Irrigation Co., 9 Col. 251 (1886), cases.

[5] Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. 318 (1830), Parker, C. J., quoting La. Penal Code.

[6] Myers v. Vanderbelt, 84 Pa. 513–14 (1877), cases; Chitty, Contr. 91; Story, Prom. Notes, § 11; Byles, Bills, 134; 1 Redf. Wills, § 17, pl. 2; City Ins. Co. v. Bricker, 91 Pa. 490 (1879); 2 Bl. Com. 297.

[7] Nichols v. Harris, 33 La. An. 646 (1880).

[8] State v. Holmes, 56 Iowa, 590 (1881); 48 N. H. 480; 36 N. Y. 307.

[1] Dreutzer v. Smith, 56 Wis. 297 (1882), cases.

[2] Re Benson, 34 F. R. 649 (1858); Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 467 (1888).

[3] Hightower v. State, 72 Ga. 482 (1884); Wofford v. Wyly, ib. 863 (1884).

[4] James v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 4 Cliff. 289–91 (1874), cases; 3 Kent, 260; 1 Whart. Ev. § 925, cases.

[5] Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 484 (1882), Devens, J.

[6] Applegate v. Lexington, &c. Mining Co., 117 U. S. 263 (1886), cases, Woods, J.; Fulkerson v. Holmes, ib. 389 (1886); Williams v. Conger, 125 id. 417, 397 (1888).

[7] Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. *675 (1835), Story, J. See generally 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 141–46, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 708–32, cases.

other deeds, but to receipts, letters, entries,—all ancient writings.[1] Compare POSSESSION, Adverse.

Public writings. The recorded acts of public functionaries, in the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of government; the transactions which official persons are required to enter in books in the discharge of their public duties, and which occur within the circle of their personal knowledge.[2]

Also spoken of as judicial or non-judicial, and, as to their proof, as those which are of record or not of record.

See generally ALTERATION, 2; BLANK, 2; CANCEL; CERTAINTY, 2; CONSTRUCTION; DEED, 2; DOCUMENT; FALSE; FRAUDS, Statute of; GRAMMAR; HANDWRITING; ILLITERATE; INSTRUMENT, 2, 3; MAIL, 2; OBLIGATORY; OBSCENE; PAROL; PHOTOGRAPH; READING; RECORD; REFORM; SUBPŒNA, 3, Duces; UNDERWRITER; WILL, 2.

WRONG.[3] A violation of right or of a right; a privation of right; an injury; a tort, or a crime.

In its broad sense, includes every injury to another, independent of the motives of the offender; but, in an instruction as to negligence, may not inappropriately refer to the failure to exercise the required degree of care where another may be injured.[4]

Legal wrong. Such transgression of right as the law takes cognizance of.

Private wrong. An infringement or privation of a private or civil right belonging to an individual considered merely as an individual; frequently termed a civil injury.[5]

Public wrong. A breach and violation of a public right and duty, which affects the whole community, considered as a community; a crime or misdemeanor.[6]

Wrong-doer. A person who commits a civil injury; a tort-feasor.

Wrongful; wrongfully. These words, referring to acts or intent, charge legal malice, q. v. They may import simply that a thing is contrary to law.[6]

Compare DELICTUM; ENORMIA; MALUM. See BENEFIT; CONTRIBUTION; CRIME; DAMAGES; INJURY; MERGER, 3; REMEDY; RIGHT; TORT; WAIVER; WILL, 1.

WYOMING. See TERRITORY, 2.

[1] Bell v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 694-95 (1887), cases.

[2] [1 Greenl Ev. § 470.]

[3] A. S. wrang, wrung, wrested, perverted. Compare TORT.

[4] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Henry, 36 Kan. 570 (1887).

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 2; 4 id. 5; 1 id. 122.

[6] Tax on Distilled Spirits, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 668 (1880).

Y.

Y. B. Year-book, q. v.

YACHT. A light sea-going vessel used only for purposes of pleasure, racing, and the like.

The secretary of the treasury may cause yachts employed exclusively as pleasure vessels, and designed as models of naval architecture, if entitled to be enrolled as American vessels, and built and owned in compliance with Rev. St. §§ 4133-35, to be licensed on terms which will authorize them to proceed from port to port without entering or clearing at the custom-house; the license to be in such form as the secretary may prescribe; the owner to first give a bond in such form and amount as the secretary shall prescribe, conditioned that the vessel shall not engage in trade, nor violate the revenue laws, and shall comply with the laws in all other respects. Such vessel shall not transport merchandise or carry passengers for pay; and shall have the name and port placed on some conspicuous portion of the hull. For any violation of the laws on the subject of commerce and navigation the vessel may be seized and forfeited. Provided, that all charges for license and inspection fees shall not exceed five dollars, and for admeasurement ten cents per ton.[1]

All such licensed yachts shall use a signal of the form, size, and colors prescribed by the secretary of the navy; and naval architects in the employ of the United States may at all times examine and copy the models.[2]

Yachts, belonging to a regularly organized yacht club of any foreign nation which shall extend like privileges to the yachts of the United States, may enter or leave any of our ports without entering or clearing at the custom-house or paying tonnage tax.[3]

For the identification of yachts and their owners a commission to sail for pleasure in any designated yacht belonging to any regularly organized and incorporated yacht club, stating the exemptions and privileges enjoyed under it, may be issued by the secretary of the treasury, and shall be a token of credit to any United States official, and to the authorities of any foreign power, for privileges enjoyed under it.[4]

Every yacht visiting a foreign country under the foregoing provisions shall, on her return, make due entry at the custom-house of the port at which she arrives.[5]

Yachts which are propelled by steam must have their hulls and boilers inspected.[6]

A licensed yacht of four hundred and eighty-one tons burden, propelled by steam, and having two high masts, is an "ocean-going steamer" and a "steamer carrying sail," within Rule 3 of the rules of navigation prescribed by Rev. St. § 4233, and should carry the

[1] Act 3 March, 1883: 22 St. L. 566, repealing R. S. § 4214—parts of Acts of 1848, 1870.

[2] Act 7 Aug., 1848: R. S. § 4215.

[3] Act 29 June, 1870: R. S. § 4216.

[4] Act 29 June, 1870: R. S. § 4217.

[5] Act 29 June, 1870: R. S. § 4218.

[6] Act 28 Feb., 1871: R. S. § 4426.

lights therein provided for, and not the lights specified in Rule 7.[1]

YARD. See CURTILAGE; SQUARE.

YEAR. The civil year consists of three hundred and sixty-five days, with one more day for a "leap" year. Compare ANNUS; DAY; MONTH.

In legislative and judicial proceedings, in the absence of another system of reckoning, the Christian calendar is intended.[2]

The period is determined by the subject-matter and the context,— by the intention of the parties.[3]

In New York, a year consists of three hundred and sixty-five days; a half year, of one hundred and eighty-two days; a quarter year of ninety-two days.[4, 5]

Means "year of our Lord," in Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. In most of the States, also, a "calendar year" is meant.[6]

Bissextile or leap year. Consists of three hundred and sixty-six days.

By 21 Henry III (1237), the increasing day and the preceding day are counted as one day.[8]

"The day of a leap year and the day immediately preceding, shall be reckoned as one day."[7]

In Indiana the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth of February are counted as two days, when a specified number of days are to be computed. Out of the statute of Henry has grown the notion that for all purposes the two days are as one. The correct rule is that in speaking of a "year," a "quarter's" rent, and the like, the twenty-ninth day is not counted; but in marking off a fixed number of days, it is to be counted.[9]

The statute of Henry is in force in some of the States, as common law or by re-enactment.[9]

That statute was passed to produce uniformity in the length of years. It has no relation to the computation of time when a rule or a statute fixes a certain number of days.[10]

Ninety-nine or nine hundred and ninety-nine years. See Years, Estate for.

Sixty years. See TEMPUS, Nullum, etc.

Thirty years. See WRITINGS, Ancient.

Twenty and twenty-one years. See LIMITATION, 8.

Year and a day. At common law, a fixed period of time for many purposes. The day seems to have been included to secure the full complement of one whole year.[1]

Thus, to make a felonious killing murder, the party assailed must die within a year and a day from the day on which the attempt was made on his life.[2]

Execution on a judgment must, at common law, issue within a year and a day from rendition; otherwise the judgment will be presumed satisfied.[3]

If the owner of an estray did not claim it within this period it became the property of the lord of the manor where found.[4]

And that was the law as to claims by owners of wreck.[5]

In some States, no scire facias has been allowed on a common mortgage till the end of a year and a day; and so as to suits on common bonds — which do not stipulate for a shorter period within which the obligee may sue for a default. See DAY; LIMITATION, 8.

Year-books. Reports of decisions, made by the "prothonotaries" at the expense of the sovereign, and published annually from about 1300 to 1550.[6]

Spoken of as mere "lumber garrets of obsolete feudal law."[7] "They are not worth the labor and expense either of a new edition or of a translation." . . "Valuable to the antiquarian and historian" as records of ancient customs and manners."[8]

Year of our Lord. Statutes in some States provide that "year" shall be taken to mean "the year of our Lord," as see ante.

In England, the time of an offense may be alleged as that of the sovereign's reign, or as that of the year of our Lord. The former is the usual mode. Hence, there, "year" alone might not certainly indicate the time intended. But we have no other era; therefore, any particular year, as "1857," must mean that year in our era.[9]

Hence, the abbreviation "A. D." may be omitted; and the omission of the word "year" is not fatal.[10] See ABBREVIATIONS.

An indictment charging that the defendant made an unlawful sale of liquor "Aug. 16, 18184," was held bad, on a motion to quash.[11]

Yearly. See ANNUALLY.

Years, estate, lease, or tenant for, and term of. A contract for the possession of [1] Chase v. Belden, 34 Hun, 571 (1885).

[2] Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 93–94 (1850).
[3] Thornton v. Boyd, 25 Miss. 505 (1853); United States v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 162 (1841).
[4] 2 N. Y. Rev. St. c. 19, t. I, § 3.
[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 141.
[6] 1 Stimson, Am. St. Law, p. 139.
[7] 2 N. Y. St. ante; N. Car.
[8] Helphenstine v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 65 Ind. 537–90 (1879), cases, Howk, J.
[9] See 10 Cent. Law J. 158 (1880).
[10] Harker v. Addis, 4 Pa. 517 (1846).

[1] 1 Para. Contr., 6 ed., *294, h.
[2] 4 Bl. Com. 197, 306; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 18, n.
[3] 3 Bl. Com. 421.
[4] 1 Bl. Com. 298.
[5] 1 Bl. Com. 292; 8 Pet. 4. See also 2 Bl. Com. 284, 354; 3 id. 175; 4 id. 315, 335.
[6] 1 Bl. Com. 71–72.
[7] 2 Wall. Jr. 309; 69 Pa. 281.
[8] 1 Kent, 480–81; 2 Taunt. 201; 2 Columb. Jur. 133.
[9] Commonwealth v. Doran, 14 Gray, 38–39 (1859), cases, Dewey, J.; ib. 97; 5 id. 91.
[10] State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 393 (1860); State v. Munch, 22 Minn. 71 (1875). Contra, Commonwealth v. McLoon, 5 Gray, 92 (1855). See also 3 Vt. 481.
[11] Murphy v. State, 106 Ind. 96 (1885).

lands or tenements for a determinate period,— where a man lets them to another for the term of a certain number of years, agreed upon between the lessor and the lessee, and the lessee enters thereon.[1]

If the lease be but for half a year, or a quarter, or less time, the lessee is a tenant for years: a year being the shortest term of which the law in this case takes notice.[1]

Every estate which must expire at a period certain and fixed, by whatever words created, is an estate for years. If no other day is mentioned, it begins from the delivery of the lease. A lease for as many years as A shall live is void for uncertainty; but not so a lease for twenty or more years, if he shall so long live, though the term may end sooner by his death.[2]

An estate for one thousand years is only a chattel, part of one's personalty. An estate for life is a freehold.[3]

But in several States, permanent leaseholds are regarded as freeholds or realty for purposes of judgments, executions, descent, distributions, and the like.[4]

Estates from year to year. Estates at will are turned into estates from one year to another, or estates for years, by the operation of statutes or by force of decisions of the courts.

The privilege of determining a tenancy at will upon the mere caprice of the lessor being found to greatly inconvenience the lessee, the courts held that such relation was a tenancy from year to year. Again, a tenant at will was not entitled to notice to quit, but the rule obtained that he held from year to year, so far at least as to entitle him to notice six calendar months prior to the day when the lessor desired to resume possession, except where the tenant was already apprised of the end of the term. A general tenancy at will is construed as a tenancy from year to year. Beginning a new year, by sufferance on the part of the lessor, is a tacit renovation of the contract for another year, subject to the right of distress and half a year's notice to quit.[5]

See EMBLEMENT; LEASE; MERGER; RENT; TERM, 3.

YEARLING. See HEIFER.

YEAS AND NAYS. Affirmative and negative votes.

The power of calling for the yeas and nays in legislative bodies is given by the various constitutions, and by municipal charters.

"The Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal,"[1] q. v.

The restriction of a call to one fifth is founded upon the necessity of preventing too frequent a recurrence to this mode of ascertaining the votes at the mere caprice of an individual.[2]

In eight States the yeas and nays are always to be entered on the journal; in three at the request of any member; in three others at the request of three members, and in ten by request of two members, in either house; in nine at the request of one-fifth of the members present, and in three, one-tenth; in Georgia, when the constitution requires a two-thirds vote; in Michigan, at the request of one-fifth of the members elected, and in Wisconsin, one-sixth of those present.[3]

See ENTRY, II. 6.

YELLOW FEVER. See QUARANTINE, 2.

YEOMAN.[4] He that has free land of forty shillings by the year.[5]

Anciently, such person could serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire,— do any act permitted of one probus et legalis.[6]

With us, the word has no exact meaning; it is found as an addition to the names of parties in declarations, indictments, and common-law forms of writs.[6]

YES; YEZ. See OYEZ.

YIELDING AND PAYING. In a lease, constitute a covenant by the lessee to pay the rent.

If the covenant is express, the lessee is bound for the rent notwithstanding an assignment of the term and acceptance of the rent by him from the assignee; while, if the covenant is merely implied, the liability

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 140.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 143.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 143, 386, 270; 4 Kent, 86; 5 Mass. 419; 1 N. H. 350, infra.

[4] See Mass. Rev. St. 1836; Re Gay, 5 Mass. 419 (1809); 2 Chase, Ohio Sts., 1185; North. Bank of Kentucky v. Roosa, 13 Ohio, 361 (1844); Brewster v. Hill, 1 N. H. 350 (1818); Flannery v. Rohrmayer, 49 Conn. 26 (1881).

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 147; 4 Kent, 112-14; 1 Johns. 329; 2 id. 7 6 id. 272; 7 id. 1, 4; 8 East, 167; 8 T. R. 3.

[1] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 5, cl. 3. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 140.

[2] 1 Story. Const. § 843.

[3] 1 Stimson, Am. St. Law, p. 69; 1 Sup. p. 7, § 275; Cooley, Const. Lim. 140, cases.

[4] Etymologists are not agreed as to the origin of the yeo-. It may be — 1. Ge, a servant. 2. Yeo, young. 3. O. Eng. yemen, to take care of: A. S. gémen, to keep,— Webster's Dict.

"A yeman [young man] hadde he, and servaunts no moo," — Chaucer, Prol. Cant. T., l. 101 (1390).

In records of London for 1396 "serving man" is said to be "called yoman."

"Youngman" is used for "yeoman" in 33 Hen. VIII (1542).

4. Greek, gê, earth, land; Gothic, gaus, country: cultivator, husbandman, proprietor.

5. O. Fries., gaman, a villager.

6. O. Dutch, goyman, arbitrator.

7. Geman, common; i. e., a commoner — next to a gentleman.

8. Yew-bow man — a respectable freeholder next to an esquire.

See Skeat's Etym. Dict.; Notes & Queries, Ser. I, vol. x, p. 468; III, viii, 286, 419; ix, 438; VI, i, 416; Long Ago, I, 249, 280; Gent. Mag. I, 129.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 406: 2 Coke, Inst. 6, 68.

[6] See Respublica v. Steele, 2 Dall. 98 (1786); Cobeen v. Thompson, 1 P. & W. 98 (1829).

for rent is but co-extensive with the occupation, and the lessee is not liable for such as accrues after assignment and acceptance of the rent by his lessor from the assignee.[1]

YOUNG. See ANIMAL; PARTUS.

YOUTH. Includes young persons of both sexes.[2]

[1] See Auriol v. Mills, 4 T. R. 98 (1790); Kimpton v. Walker, 9 Vt. 198-202 (1837), cases; Walker v. Physick, 6 Pa. 202 (1847); Ghegan v. Young, 23 id. 20 (1854); Fanning v. Stimson, 13 Iowa, 49 (1862); Rawle, Cov. Tit. 481, n.

[2] Nelson v. Cushing, 2 Cush. 532-34 (1848).

Z.

ZEAL. See WITNESS, Zealous.

ZINC. See COIN; MANUFACTURE; ORE.

ZONE. See LEAGUE; VEIN.

ZOOLOGICAL PARKS. See ANIMAL.

&.

&, &c. See ET, Etc.

ADDENDA.

CESTUI, pages 162, 1057.

Neither the origin nor the pronunciation of this term is given in the law dictionaries or glossaries, and in but two of the popular dictionaries (both of them English) is anything said on either subject; while the original plural form is not stated or conjectured in any book upon words or etymologies that has come to the notice of the writer.

While the pronunciation cĕst'-wē is authorized by the Imperial and Encyclopædic Dictionaries, learned lawyers everywhere say cĕt'-wī, a pronunciation which, it is probable, has always generally obtained.

In Coke upon Littleton, the term is spelled cesty (que use).

The spellings of the plural of cestui que trust (the expression which, from the nature of the subject, is most common), collected on page 1057, are found in standard law works and in the opinions of the courts, both English and American. The statement that cestuis receives the preference (the rest of the expression remaining unchanged) is based upon the writer's observations, and his examination of many text-books and reports. At the same time, it needs be said that the other forms, some more, others less, are in general use, even those in which the English word "trust" is pluralized "trust*ent*" and "trust*ents*," and cestui is made cestuis.

As to what the earliest plural was teachers of Norman French are not in accord; one, a philologist, suggests that it was cesteaux; another, a lecturer in a law school, writes that the simple words received no plural endings. More certain information can be of little importance at this date: the courts and law-writers will continue to "follow precedent," varying as that has been seen to be.

A late authority (Encyclopædic Dictionary, 1888) makes cestui the objective case of the Norman French cist, cest, equivalent to the modern French ce.

In modern French, also, as the lexicons show, ce means this, that; qui (subjective) and que (objective), the one which, and que, also, of whom; celui, he that, the one, that one: plural, ceux; celui qui, he who: plural ceux qui; c'est eux: cesteaux.

Cestui que trust may be rendered, he for whom, or as to whom, there is a trust, or the trust is — exists, is created, is founded; cestui que use, he as to whom, or for whom, there is a use, or the use exists; cestui qui vie, he who lives, he as to whose life, or on whose life — an estate depends, or is to continue.

CHINESE, pages 177–78.

The treaty of March 12, 1888, was not finally ratified by China. The articles as agreed upon by secretary Bayard and minister Chang Yen Hoon are those printed on page 178, excepting the words, at the close of the first Article, "and this prohibition shall extend to the return of Chinese laborers who are not now in the United States, whether holding return certificates under existing laws or not," and the sentence, at the close of the second Article, "And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required."

These amendments were engrafted upon the proposed treaty by the Senate, May 7, 1888, the President having submitted the same for its advice and consent. They were designed to obviate difficulties presented by the decision in Yung Ah Lung's Case (124 U. S. 621, Feb. 13, 1888, ante, p. 179). The first amendment was intended to cancel "permits" granted to laborers not actually residing here March 12, 1888; the "extension" was viewed, by the Senate, as necessary to render the treaty completely effective,— it having been found impossible, in many cases, under the acts of 1882 and 1884 (ante, p. 175), to disprove alleged "prior residence," identity, etc., when genuine certificates were presented by persons who claimed to be the original and rightful holders of them.

But for the amendments the Chinese minister was prepared, it would seem, to exchange ratifications. As it was, on May 12th he wrote to Mr. Bayard that he did not disapprove of the changes proposed "as they did not alter the terms of the treaty." Without delay he also telegraphed the language of the amendments to China, whither an original draft of the treaty had been sent by mail. He was, moreover, of the opinion that about three months would elapse before the subject could be acted upon by the Grand Council of his government, and the result be reported to him at Washington. He intended, meanwhile, to go to Peru on official business, and return in September, when the expected exchange of ratifications could take place.

During the ensuing summer, Congress proceeded to embody in one comprehensive act legislation deemed necessary to give effect to the new treaty. The bill for this purpose, which became a law by the President's approval September 13th, 1888, passed the Senate on August 6th, and the House on the 20th. The first of its fifteen sections recites "that from and after the date of the exchange of ratifications of the pending treaty, . . signed the twelfth of March, A. D. 1888, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese person" to enter the United States, "except as hereinafter provided."

About September 1st it was "reported, by way of London," that the treaty in its new shape had been rejected. The representative of China, at Washington, made no such report.

On September 3rd the subjoined "Exclusion Act" was presented, read and passed in the House of Representatives, and by the Senate, four days later, unamended. A motion to reconsider the vote postponed final action by the latter body some ten days; and on October 1st the President signed the bill,— the Chinese government, on September 20th, having declined to negotiate further upon the subject-matter. The act reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese laborer who shall at any time heretofore have been, or may now or hereafter be, a resident within the United States, and who shall have departed, or shall depart, therefrom, and shall have not returned before the passage of this act, to return to, or remain, in the United States.

"Sec. 2. That no certificates of identity provided for in the fourth or fifth section of the act to which this is a supplement shall hereafter be issued; and every certificate heretofore issued in pursuance thereof is hereby declared void and of no effect, and the Chinese laborer, claiming admission by virtue thereof, shall not be permitted to enter the United States.

"Sec. 3. That all the duties prescribed, liabilities, penalties and forfeitures imposed, and the powers conferred by the second, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth sections of the act to which this is a supplement are hereby extended and made applicable to the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 4. That all such part or parts of the act to which this is a supplement as are inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed." (See 25 St. L. 504.)

An act approved October 19, 1888, appropriated fifty thousand dollars for carrying into effect the provisions of the Exclusion Act. (25 St. L. 615.)

In the case of Chae Chan Ping v. United States, decided May 13, 1889 (130 U. S. 581, 589), the Supreme Court held that Congress has power to pass the act of October 1st, 1888, notwithstanding that it may affect personal rights acquired under existing treaties. Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion, said, in substance: By the Constitution, laws made in pursuance thereof and treaties made under the authority of the United States are both declared to be the supreme law of the land, and no paramount authority is given to one over the other. A treaty, although in the nature of a contract, is often merely promissory in its character, requiring legislation to carry its stipulations into effect. Such legislation will be open to future repeal or amendment. If the treaty operates by its own force, and relates to a subject within the power of Congress, it can be deemed in that particular only the equivalent of a legislative act, to be repealed or modified at the pleasure of Congress. In either case the last expression of the sovereign will must control.

While it will not be presumed that Congress will lightly pass laws conflicting with treaties, circumstances may arise which would not only justify the Government in disregarding their stipulations, but demand, in the interests of the country, that it should do so. Unexpected events may call for a change in the policy of the country. Neglect or violation of stipulations on the part of the other contracting party may require corresponding action on our part. In 1798 the conduct toward this country of the government of France was of such a character that Congress declared that we were freed and exonerated from the stipulations of previous treaties with that country.

That the Government, through the legislature, can exclude aliens from this territory is a proposition not open to controversy. Jurisdiction over its own territory to that extent belongs to every independent nation. It is a part of its independence. If it could not exclude aliens, to that extent it would be subject to the control of another power. As said by this Court in the case of The Exchange, 7 Cranch, 136 (1812), speaking by Chief Justice Marshall: "The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction."

To preserve its independence, and give security against foreign aggression and encroachment, is the highest duty of a nation. To attain these ends nearly all other considerations are to be subordinated. It matters not in what form such aggression and encroachment come, whether from the foreign nation acting in its national character or from hordes of its people crowding in upon us. The Government, possessing the powers which are to be exercised for protection and security, is clothed with authority to determine the occasion on which the powers shall be called forth; and its determinations, so far as the subjects affected are concerned, are necessarily conclusive upon all its departments and officers. If, therefore, the government of the United States, through its legislative department, considers the presence of foreigners of a different race in this country, who will not assimilate with us, to be dangerous to its peace and security, their exclusion is not to be staid because at the time there are no actual hostilities with the nation of which the foreigners are subjects. The existence of war would render the necessity of the proceeding only more obvious and pressing. The same necessity, in a less pressing degree, may arise when war does not exist, and the same authority which adjudges the necessity in the one case must also determine it in the other. In both cases its determination is conclusive upon the judiciary. If the government of the country of which the foreigners excluded are subjects is dissatisfied with this action, it can make complaint to the executive head of our Government, or resort to any other measure which, in its judgment, its interests or dignity may demand; and there lies its only remedy.

The power of the Government to exclude foreigners whenever, in its judgment, the public interests require such exclusion, has been asserted in numerous instances, and never denied by the executive or legislative departments. It was asserted, for example, by representatives of the executive department in 1852, 1856, 1869, 1879, and 1882. The exclusion of paupers, criminals and persons afflicted with incurable diseases, for which statutes have been passed, is only an application of the same power to particular classes of persons, whose presence is deemed injurious, or a source of danger to the country.

The power of exclusion of foreigners being an incident of sovereignty, the right to its exercise at any time when, in the judgment of the Government, the interests of the country require it, cannot be granted away or restrained on behalf of any one. The powers of government are delegated in trust to the United States, and are incapable of transfer to an other parties. . . Whatever license Chinese laborers may have obtained, previous to the act of October 1st, 1888, to return to the United States after their departure, is held at the will of the Government, revocable at any time, at its pleasure. Whether a proper consideration by our Government of its previous laws, or a proper respect for the nation whose subjects are affected by its action, ought to have qualified its inhibition, and made it applicable only to persons departing from the country after the passage of the act, are not questions for judicial determination. If there be any just grounds of complaint on the part of China, it must be made to the political department, which alone is competent to act upon the subject.

COMMERCE, page 206.

An act approved October 1, 1888 (25 St. L. 501), authorizes the creation of boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carries engaged in inter-State and Territorial transportation of property and passengers, and their employees.

Pages 201-5. Inter-State act of February 4, 1887, as amended by the act of March 2, 1889. The italics indicate the additions, the brackets the omissions, in the former act —

Sec. 1 is re-enacted without change.

Sec. 2. If any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects or, receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

Secs. 3, 4 and 5 remain unchanged.

Sec. 6. Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep open to public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its [railroad, as defined by the first section of this act] route. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force [upon such railroad], and shall also state separately the terminal changes and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type [of at least the size of ordinary pica], and copies for the use of the public shall be [kept in every depot or station upon any such railroad, in such places and] posted in two public and conspicuous places, in every depot, station, or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation, in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected.

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep [for] open to public inspection, at every depot or office where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing, etc.,— as in the former act.

No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, etc.,— as in the former act. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges [may be made without] shall only be made after three days' previous public notice, [; but whenever any such reduction is made, notice of the same shall immediately be publicly posted and the changes made shall immediately be made public by printing new schedules, or shall immediately be plainly indicated upon the schedules at the time in force and kept for public inspection] to be given in the same manner that notice of an advance in rates must be given.

Paragraph 4 remains unchanged.

From the end of paragraph 5 is omitted the words: "but no common carrier party to any such joint tariff shall be liable for the failure of any other common carrier party thereto to observe and adhere to the rates, fares, or charges thus made and published."

Paragraph 6 succeeds the following new matter:

No advance shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, shown upon joint tariffs, except after ten days' notice to the Commission, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect. No reduction shall be made in joint rates, fares, and charges, except after three days' notice, to be given to the Commission as is above provided in the case of an advance of joint rates.* The Commission may make public such proposed advances, or such reductions, in such manner as may, in its judgment, be deemed practicable, and may prescribe from time to time the measure of publicity which common carriers shall give to advances or reductions in joint tariffs.*

(*NOTE. "The time is to be computed from the day when the notice reaches the office of the Commission in Washington." Official Circulars, March 7, 23, 1889.

March 8, 1889, the Commission ordered that—

"All advances and reductions in joint rates, fares and charges shown upon joint tariff established by common carriers subject to the provisions of the act shall be made public. Every such advance or reduction shall be so published by plainly printing the same in large type, two copies of which shall be posted for the use of the public in two public and conspicuous places in every depot, station or office of such carrier where passengers or freight, respectively, are received for transportation under such schedules, in such form that they shall be accessible to the public and can be conveniently inspected. Such schedules shall be so posted ten days prior to the taking effect of any such advance and three days prior to the taking effect of any such reduction in joint rates, fares and charges."

The rule which required ten days' public notice of any advance in the rates established by individual carriers was enlarged, March 7, 1889, by adding the following provision:

"Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges shall only be made after three days' previous public notice, to be given in the same manner that notice of an advance in rates must be given.")

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any services in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate, fare, or charge is named thereon than is specified in the schedule filed with the Commission in force at the time.

The Commission may determine and prescribe the form in which the schedules required by this section to be kept open to public inspection shall be prepared and arranged, and may change the form from time to time as shall be found expedient.

Secs. 7, 8 and 9 remain unchanged.

To sec. 10 is added the following:

Provided, That if the offense for which any person shall be convicted as aforesaid shall be an unlawful discrimination in rates, fares, or charges, for the transportation of passengers or property, such person shall, in addition to the fine hereinbefore provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any officer or agent thereof, or any person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, shall knowingly and willfully assist, or shall willingly suffer or permit any person or persons to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation of such common carrier, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense.

Any person or any officer or agent of any corporation or company who shall deliver property for transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom as consignor or consignee any such carrier shall transport property, who shall knowingly and willfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, false representation of the contents of the package, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the carrier, its agent or agents, obtain transportation for such property at less than the regular rates then established and in force on the line of transportation, shall be deemed guilty of fraud, which is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not exceeding five thousand dollars or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

If any such person, or any officer or agent of any such corporation or company, shall, by payment of money or other thing of value, solicitation, or otherwise, induce any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or any of its officers or agents, to discriminate unjustly in his, its, or their favor as against any other consignor or consignee in the transportation of property, or shall aid or abet any common carrier in any such unjust discrimination, such person or such officer or agent of such corporation or company shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each offense; and such person, corporation, or company shall also, together with said common carrier, be liable, jointly or severally, in an action on the case to be brought by any consignor or consignee discriminated against in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction for all damages caused by or resulting therefrom.

Sec. 11 remains unchanged.

The first paragraph of sec. 12 now reads:

The Commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the Commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and the Commission is hereby authorized and required to execute and enforce the provisions of this act; and, upon the request of the Commission it shall be the duty of any district attorney of the United States to whom the Commission may apply to institute in the proper court and to prosecute under the direction of the attorney-general of the United States, all necessary proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of this act and for the punishment of all violations thereof; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States; and for the purposes of this act the Commission shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and [to that end] in case of disobedience to a subpœna, the Commission, or any party to a proceeding before the Commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

Sec. 13 is unchanged.

To sec. 14 is added as paragraph third:

The Commission may provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall be competent evidence of the reports and decisions of the Commission therein contained, in all courts of the United States, and of the several States, without any further proof or authentication thereof. The Commission may also cause to be printed for early distribution its annual reports.

Sec. 15 remains unchanged.

Sec. 16 presents the following changes:

Whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate, or refuse or neglect to obey or perform any lawful order or requirement of the Commission [in this act named] created by this act, not founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, it shall be [the duty of] lawful for the Commission [and lawful] or for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district, etc., as in the act of 1887, except that "on such hearing the findings of fact in the report of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence," etc. A second paragraph provides that

If the matters involved in any such order or requirement of said Commission are founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and any such common carrier shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey or perform the same, after notice given by said Commission as provided in the fifteenth section of this act, it shall be lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting as a court of law in the judicial district in which the carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience as the case may be; and said court shall by its order then fix a time and place for the trial of said cause, which shall not be less than twenty, nor more than forty days from the time said order is made, and it shall be the duty of the marshal of the district in which said proceeding is pending to forthwith serve a copy of said petition, and of said order, upon each of the defendants, and it shall be the duty of the defendants to file their answers to said petition within ten days after the service of the same upon them as aforesaid. At the trial the findings of fact of said Commission as set forth in its report shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated, and if either party shall demand a jury or shall omit to waive a jury the court shall, by its order, direct the marshal forthwith to summon a jury to try the cause; but if all the parties shall waive a jury in writing, then the court shall try the issues in said cause and render its judgment thereon. If the subject in dispute shall be of the value of two thousand dollars or more either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect to security for such appeal; but such appeal must be taken within twenty days from the day of the rendition of the judgment of said circuit court. If the judgment of the circuit court shall be in favor of the party complaining, he or they shall be entitled to recover a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, which shall be collected as part of the costs in the case. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

The last sentence of sec. 17 now reads: "Either of the members of the Commission may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas."

Sec. 18. The first two sentences read as formerly, and the section continues: The Commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, [subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior. The Commission shall be furnished by the secretary of the interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies.] Until otherwise provided by law, the Commission may hire suitable offices for its use, and shall have authority to procure all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the Commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

All of the expenses of the Commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the Commissioners, or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigation, or upon official business in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the Commission [and the secretary of the interior.]

Secs. 19 and 20 remain unchanged.

The rest of the act reads as follows:

Sec. 21. That the Commission shall, on or before the first day of December in each year, make a report [to the secretary of the interior], which shall be [by him] transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports [issued from the interior department] transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the Commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the Commission may deem necessary, and the names and compensation of the persons employed by said Commission.

Sec. 22. That nothing in this act shall [apply to] prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion, or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons, or to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employees, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employees; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act.

(New section.) That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction upon the relation of any person or persons, firm, or corporation, alleging such violation by a common carrier, of any of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement and all acts amendatory thereof, as prevents the relator from having interstate traffic moved by said common carrier at the same rates as are charged, or upon terms or conditions as favorable as those given by said common carrier for like traffic under similar conditions to any other shipper, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus against said common carrier, commanding such common carrier to move and transport the traffic, or to furnish cars or other facilities for transportation for the party applying for the writ: Provided, That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the common carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper, pending the determination of the question of fact: Provided, That the remedy hereby given by writ of mandamus shall be cumulative, and shall not be held to exclude or interfere with other remedies provided by this act or the act to which it is a supplement.

RULES OF PRACTICE IN CASES AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE COMMISSION, ADOPTED JUNE 8, 1889.

I. The general sessions of the Commission for the hearing of contested cases will be held at its office in the Sun building, No. 1315 F street, northwest, Washington, D. C., on such days and at such hour as the Commission may designate.

Sessions for receiving, considering, and acting upon petitions, communications, and applications relating to business before the Commission, and also for considering and acting upon any business of the Commission other than contested cases, will be held at its said office at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday of every week when the Commission is at Washington.

When special sessions are held at other places such regulations as may be necessary will be made by the Commission.

II. Where a complaint concerns only anything done or omitted to be done by a single carrier no other need be made a party, but if it relates to joint tariffs, or matters in which two or more carriers doing business under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, are interested, all the carriers constituting such line must be made parties.

A complainant may embrace several carriers, or lines of carriers, operated separately, in the same proceeding, when the subject-matter of the complaint involves substantially the same alleged violation of the law by the several carriers or lines.

Persons or carriers not parties may apply, in any pending case or proceeding, for leave to intervene and to be heard upon the questions involved.

III. Complaints under section 13 of the act, of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act in contravention of the provisions thereof, must be made by petition, which must briefly state the facts which are claimed to constitute a violation of the act, and must be verified by the petitioner, or by some officer or agent of the corporation, society, or other body or organization making the complaint, to the effect that the allegations of the petition are true to the knowledge or belief of the affiant.

The complainant must furnish as many written or printed copies of the complaint or petition as there may be parties complained against to be served. When a complaint is made the name of the carrier or carriers complained against must be set forth in full, and the address of the petitioner, and the name and address of his attorney or counsel, if any, must be indorsed upon the complaint.

The Commission will cause a copy of the complaint to be served upon every common carrier complained against, by mail or personally, in its discretion, with notice to the carrier or carriers to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within the time specified.

IV. A carrier complained against must answer the complaint made within twenty days from the date of the notice, unless the Commission shall in particular cases prescribe a shorter time for the answer to be served, and in such cases the answer must be made within the time prescribed. The original answer must be filed with the Commission, at its office in Washington, and a copy thereof must at the same time be served upon the complainant by the party answering, personally or by mail, who must forthwith notify the secretary of the Commission of the fact. The answer must admit or deny the material allegations of fact contained in the complaint, and may set forth any additional facts claimed to be material to the issue. The answer must be verified in the same manner as the complaint. If a carrier complained against shall make satisfaction before answering, a written acknowledgment of satisfaction must be filed with the Commission, and in that case the fact of satisfaction without other matter may be set forth in the answer filed and served on the complainant. If satisfaction be made after the filing and service of an answer, a supplemental answer setting forth the fact of satisfaction may be filed and served.

V. If a carrier complained against shall deem the complaint insufficient to show a breach of legal duty, it may, instead of filing an answer, serve on the complainant notice for a hearing of the case on the complaint; and in case of the service of such notice, the facts stated in the complaint will be taken as admitted. A copy of the notice must at the same time be filed with the Commission. The filing of an answer will not be deemed an admission of the sufficiency of the complaint, but a motion to dismiss for insufficiency may be made at the hearing.

VI. Copies of notices or other papers must be served upon the opposite parties to the proceeding, personally or by mail, and when any party shall have appeared by attorney the service upon the attorney shall be deemed proper service upon the party.

VII. Affidavits to a petition, complaint, or answer may be taken before any officer of the United States, or of any State or Territory, authorized to administer oaths.

VIII. Upon application by any petitioner or party, amendments may be allowed by the Commission, in its discretion, to any petition, answer, or other pleading in any proceeding before the Commission.

IX. Adjournments and extensions of time may be granted upon the application of parties in the discretion of the Commission.

X. Parties to cases and proceedings before the Commission may, by stipulation, duly signed by them and filed with the secretary, agree upon the facts, or any portion of the facts, they deem to be involved in the controversy, which agreed statement shall be regarded and used as evidence. It is desirable that the facts be thus agreed upon whenever practicable.

XI. Upon issue being joined by the service of answer, the Commission will assign a time and place for hearing the same, which will be at its office in Washington, unless otherwise ordered. Witnesses will be examined orally before the Commission, unless testimony be taken or facts agreed upon as otherwise provided in these rules. The petitioner or complainant must in all cases prove the existence of the facts alleged to constitute a violation of the act, unless the carrier complained of shall admit the same, or shall fail to answer the complaint. Facts alleged in the answer must also be proved by the carrier, unless admitted by the petitioner.

In cases of failure to answer, the Commission will take such proof of the charge as may be deemed reasonable and proper, and make such order thereon as the circumstances of the case appear to require.

XII. Subpœnas requiring the attendance of witnesses will be issued by any member of the Commission in all cases and proceedings before it, and witnesses will be required to obey the subpœnas served upon them requring their attendance or the production of any books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, or documents relating to any matter under investigation or pending before the Commission. When a subpœna is desired for the production of books, papers, or other documentary evidence, special application must be made to the Commission therefor, specifying the documentary evidence desired.

When a cause is at issue on petition and answer, each party may proceed at once to take depositions of witnesses in the manner provided by sections 863 and 864 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and transmit them to the secretary of the Commission, without making any application to, or obtaining any authority from, the Commission for that purpose.

[Sections 863 and 864, Revised Statutes, provide as follows:

"Sec. 863. The testimony of any witness may be taken in any civil cause depending in a district or circuit court by deposition de bene esse, when the witness lives at a greater distance from the place of trial than one hundred miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of the district in which the case is to be tried, and to a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of trial, before the time of trial, or when he is ancient and infirm. The deposition may be taken before any judge of any court of the United States, or any commissioner of a circuit court, or any clerk of a district or circuit court, or any chancellor, justice or judge of a supreme or superior court, mayor or chief magistrate of a city, judge of a county court or court of common pleas of any of the United States, or any notary public, not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, nor interested in the event of the cause. Reasonable notice must first be given in writing by the party or his attorney proposing to take such deposition to the opposite party or his attorney of record, as either may be nearest, which notice shall state the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of his deposition; and in all cases in rem, the person having the agency or possession of the property at the time of seizure shall be deemed the adverse party, until the claim shall have been put in; and whenever, by reason of the absence from the district and want of an attorney of record or other reason, the giving of the notice herein required shall be impracticable, it shall be lawful to take such depositions as there shall be urgent necessity for taking, upon such notice as au-judge authorized to hold courts in such circuit or district shall think reasonable and direct. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose as provided by this section, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in court."

"Sec. 864. Every person deposing as provided in the preceding section, shall be cautioned and sworn to testify the whole truth, and carefully examined. His testimony shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by himself in the magistrate's presence, and by no other person, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent."

Fees of witnesses are fixed by law at $1.50 for each day's attendance at the place of hearing or of taking depositions, and 5 cents per mile for going to said place from his place of residence and 5 cents per mile for returning therefrom.]

XIII. Upon the final submission of a case to the Commission, either party may submit proposed findings of fact for the consideration of the Commission, which findings must embrace only the material facts of the case supposed to be established by the testimony.

XIV. Application for a rehearing may be made by either party at any time within sixty days after a decision shall have been filed and made public in any case decided by the Commission. Such application must be by petition, and must state clearly the findings of fact or conclusions of law supposed to be erroneous. If the application be to give further testimony, the nature of the additional testimony must be briefly stated, and it must not be merely cumulative. The petition must be verified in the same manner as a complaint, and a copy thereof, with a notice of the time and place of the application, must be served upon the opposite party at least ten days before the time named for the application.

XV. For convenience in reading and filing, it is recommended that when practicable petitions, answers, and depositions be printed or in type-writing, and that when in type-writing, or ordinary writing, only one page of the paper be used. [It is desirable, if complaints, answers, etc., are in ordinary writing or type-writing, that the size of the pages should conform as near as convenient to 9 by 13 inches, not to exceed the same; if printed, 6 by 9 inches.]

XVI. Copies of any petition, complaint, or answer in any matter or proceeding before the Commission, or of any order, decision, or opinion by the Commission, and also of testimony when practicable and desired for use in the case, will be furnished without charge upon application to the secretary by any person or carrier party to the proceeding.

XVII. All complaints concerning anything done or omitted to be done by any railroad carrier, and all petitions or answers or applications relative to any pending proceeding, and all letters or telegrams relating in any manner to either of these matters, must be addressed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C.

The following forms may be used, with such alterations as circumstances render necessary:

COMPLAINT AGAINST A SINGLE CARRIER.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A. B. against
THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY.

The petition of the above-named complainant respectfully shows:

I. That [Here let complainant state his occupation and place of business.]

II. That the defendant above named is a common carrier engaged in the transportation of passengers and property by railroad between points in the State of —— and points in the State of ——, and as such common carrier is subject to the Act to regulate commerce.

III. That [Here state concisely the matters intended to be complained of. Continue numbering each succeeding paragraph as in Nos. I, II, and III.]

Wherefore the petitioner prays that the defendant may be required to answer the charges herein, and that after due hearing and investigation an order be made commanding the defendant to cease and desist from said violations of the act to regulate commerce, and for such other and further order as the Commission may deem necessary in the premises. [If reparation for any wrong or injury be desired, the petitioner should state the nature and extent of the reparation he deems proper.]

Dated at ——, ——, ——, 18—. A. B.
[Complainant's signature.]

STATE OF ——,
County of ——, ss:

A. B., being duly sworn, says that he is the complainant in this proceeding, and that the matters set forth in the foregoing petition are true as he verily believes. A. B.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 18—. C. D.,
Justice of the Peace,
[Or other officer authorized to administer oaths.]

COMPLAINT AGAINST JOINT OR CONNECTING CARRIERS.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A. B. against
THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY.

[Here set out in full the titles of the several carriers complained against.]

The petition of the above-named complainant respectfully shows:

I. That [Here let complainant state his occupation and place of business.]

II. That the defendants above-named are common carriers, and under a common control, management, or arrangement, for continuous carriage or shipment, are engaged in the transportation of passengers and property wholly by railroad [or partly by railroad and partly by water, as the case may be] between ——, in the State of ——, and ——, in the State of ——, and as such common carriers are subject to the Act to regulate commerce.

[Then proceed as in form No. 1.]

NOTICE TO ANSWER.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., —— ——, 18—.

To the —— ·——,
—— ——:

Enclosed please find a copy of a —— petition filed against your company, embracing a statement of charges made by —— —— under section 13 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and amended March 2, 1889.

You are hereby called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same, in writing, within twenty days from this date.

For the Commission:

—— ——,
Secretary.

NOTICE TO COMPLAINANT.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
WASHINGTON, —— ——, 18—.

—— ——,
·—— ——:

—— :

Your petition against the —— Company, under section 13 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and amended March 2, 1889, is received and placed on file.

A statement of the charges made has been forwarded to the carrier for satisfaction or answer within twenty days.

For the Commission:

—— ——,
Secretary.

ANSWER.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A. B. against
THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY.

The above-named defendant, for answer to the complaint in this proceeding, respectfully states—

1. That [Here follow the usual admissions, denials, and averments. Continue numbering each succeeding paragraph.]

Wherefore the defendant prays that the complaint in this proceeding be dismissed.

THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY,
By E. F.,
[Title of officer.]

STATE OF ——,
County of ——, ss:

E. F., being duly sworn, says that he is the —— of the —— Railroad Company, defendant in this proceeding, and that the foregoing answer is true as he verily believes.

E. F.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 18—.

C. D.,
Justice of the Peace,
[Or other officer authorized to administer oaths.]

NOTICE BY CARRIER UNDER RULE V.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A. B. against
THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY.

Notice is hereby given under Rule V of the Rules of Practice in proceedings before the Commission that a hearing is desired in this proceeding upon the facts as stated in the complaint.

THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY,
By E. F.,
[Title of officer.]

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ANSWER.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.
WASHINGTON, —— ——, 18—.

—— ——,
—— ——,
—— ——.
—:

The Commission acknowledges the receipt of an answer made by the —— Rail—— Company to the complaint filed against said company —— by —— ——, and the same has been filed.

Very respectfully,

—— ——,
For the Commission:
Secretary.

NOTICE OF HEARING.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.
WASHINGTON, —— ——, 18—.

—— ——,
—— ——,
—— ——,
——:

The case of —— against the —— Rail—— Company —— is assigned for hearing —— ——, 18—, —— a. m., at ——.

For the Commission:

—— ——,
Secretary.

SUBPŒNA.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

To —— ——,
—— ——:

You are hereby required to appear before —— in the matter of a complaint of —— —— against —— ——, as a witness on the part of —— ——, on the —— day of ——, 18—, at —— o'clock at ——, and bring with you then and there ——.

Dated —— ——.
[SEAL.]

—— ——,
Commissioner.

—— ——,
—— ——,
Attorney for —— ——.

[NOTICE.—Witness fees for attendance under this subpœna are to be paid by the party at whose instance the witness is summoned, and every copy of this summons for the witness must contain a copy of this notice.]

NOTICE OF TAKING DEPOSITIONS UNDER RULE XII.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

A. B.
&
against
THE —— RAILROAD COMPANY.

You are hereby notified that G. H. will be examined before C. D., a —— [title of officer or magistrate], at ——, on the —— day of ——, 18—, at —— o'clock in the ——noon, as a witness for the above-named complainant [or defendant, as the case may be], according to act of Congress in such case made and provided, and the rules of practice of the Interstate Commerce Commission; at which time and place you are notified to be present and take part in the examination of the said witness.

Dated ——, ——, 18—.

L. J.

[Signature of complainant or defendant, or of counsel.]

To A. B., the above-named complainant [or The —— Railroad Company, the above-named defendant; or to K. L., counsel for the above-named complainant or defendant.]

NOTE.—The Commission recommends that the conditions upon which witnesses may be examined under sections 863 and 864 of the Revised Statutes before one of the officers designated be waived, and that parties consent in all cases to take testimony in that manner when practicable.

COURT, United States Circuit, p. 281.

An act approved August 13, 1888 (25 St. L. 433), corrects the enrollment of the act of March 3, 1887 (24 id. 552), as follows:

Page 261, column 2, line 15, "of" is made "or;" line 25, "of" is made "if;" lines 42 and 49, "any other suit" and "and when" begin new sentences.

Page 282, column 1, line 14, "At any other time," and line 27, "Whenever," begin paragraphs; column 2, line 31, "the owner" is made to read "that the owner."

A few changes are also made in the punctuation.

EXECUTION, p. 431. Levari facias.

At common law, by means of this writ, the sheriff could levy upon the chattels of the defendant, and also upon the emblements, rents, and present profits of his lands. In American practice, the land itself may be seized and sold. In Delaware, the writ is used to enforce a judgment upon a mechanic's lien, and to sell unimproved or unproductive real estate; in Indiana, it serves the purpose of a writ of venditioni exponas; in Pennsylvania, it enforces payment of a mortgage, a mechanic's lien, a municipal claim, or other like charge upon realty. The writ, as a writ of execution, may be employed in any manner designated by statute. See Com. Dig. tit. Execution, C. 3; Freeman, Executions, § 6; Herman, Executions, §§ 10–11.

JUDGMENT, page 578.

An act approved August 1, 1888 (25 St. L. 357), intended "to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," provides as follows:

"That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State, shall be liens on property throughout such State in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions only as if such judgments and decrees had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such State: Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county or parish in the State of Louisiana before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein whenever and only whenever the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

"Sec. 2. That the clerks of the several courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indices and cross-indices of the judgment records of said courts, and such indices and records shall at all times be open to the inspection and examination of the public.

"Sec. 3. Nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county or parish in the State of Louisiana in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county."

OBSCENE, page 724.

An act approved September 26, 1888 (25 St. L. 496), amends former legislation as follows: Section 1. That the last clause of section two of the act of June 18, 1888 (ib. 188), shall constitute section three of that act, and read thus:

"Sec. 3. That all matter otherwise mailable by law, upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character, or calculated by the terms or manner or style of display and obviously intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another may be written or printed, or otherwise impressed or apparent, are hereby declared non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any postoffice nor by any letter-carrier, and shall be withdrawn from the mails under such regulations as the postmaster-general shall prescribe; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same or cause the same to be taken from the mails, for the purpose of circulating or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall, for each and every offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Sec. 2. Revised Statutes, § 3893, as amended by act of July 12, 1876, shall read:

"Sec. 3893. Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, and every article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall, for each and every offense, be fined upon conviction thereof not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court. And all offenses committed under the section of which this is amendatory, prior to the approval of this act, may be prosecuted and punished under the same in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed: Provided, That nothing in this act shall authorize any person to open any letter or sealed matter of the first-class not addressed to himself."

PROHIBITION, page 832.

Case of Kidd v. Pearson, argued before the Supreme Court April 4, and decided October 22, 1888.

The code of Iowa (ch. 6, tit. 11), as amended in 1884 (Laws, ch. 143), provides: That no person shall manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical, medicinal, culinary, and sacramental purposes; keeping liquors with intent to sell them within the State contrary to law is prohibited, and liquor so kept "is a nuisance," and shall be forfeited (secs. 1538, 1526). "Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to forbid the sale by the importer thereof of foreign intoxicating liquor imported under the authority of the laws of the United States regarding the importation of such liquors and in accordance with such laws: Provided, That said liquor at the time of said sale by said importer remains in the original casks or packages in which it was by him imported, and in quantities not less than the quantities in which the laws of the United States require such liquors to be imported, and is sold by him in said original casks or packages and in said quantities only. . . ." (Sec. 1524.) Permission to manufacture or buy and sell for "mechanical, medicinal, culinary, or sacramental purposes" is to be obtained from the board of supervisors of the county in which the business is to be conducted, under conditions prescribed as to moral character, the wants of the locality, etc.

December 24, 1885, I. E. Pearson and S. J. Loughran filed a petition in equity against J. S. Kidd, praying that a certain distillery used by him for the unlawful manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors be abated as a nuisance, and that he be perpetually enjoined from manufacturing such liquors therein. The concluding averment was that Kidd manufactures and keeps for sale, and sells within the State, intoxicating liquors to be taken out of the State for use as a beverage, and for other than "mechanical, medicinal, culinary, or sacramental purposes," contrary to the statute.

Kidd, in his answer, pleaded that he had at all times complied with the requirements of the law. Upon the trial it was proven that all the liquors he manufactured were for exportation and were sold outside of Iowa. A decree was rendered against him, ordering that his distillery be abated as a nuisance, etc., as prayed for. This decree being affirmed by the supreme court of the State, the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, by which the constitutionality of the law and proceedings was upheld.

Mr. Justice Lamar, delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, said in substance: That the State of Iowa could abate the distillery without depriving the owner of his property "without due process of law," within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, was settled by the opinion in the case of Mugler v. Kansas. The only question to be decided is then as to whether the legislation of Iowa undertakes to "regulate commerce."

That power, conferred upon Congress, is absolute and complete in itself, with no limitation other than prescribed in the Constitution; is to a certain extent exclusively vested in Congress, so far free from State action; is co-extensive with the subject on which it acts, and cannot stop at the external boundary of a State, but must enter into the interior of every State whenever required by the interests of commerce with foreign nations, or among the States. This power, however, does not comprehend the purely internal domestic commerce of a State which is carried on between man and man within a State or between different parts of the same State. Whenever power reserved to one of the States is so exercised as to conflict with the free course of a power vested in Congress, the law of the State must yield to the supremacy of the Federal authority, though the law may have been enacted in the exercise of a power indisputably reserved to the States.

It is a mistake to say, as in this case, that the act of transporting alcohol from the State in the course of lawful commerce with other States not being a crime, to perform that act was not a criminal intent, whether formed before or after the manufacture. It is not the criminality of the intent to export that is in question, but the innocence or criminality, under the statute, of the manufacture, in the absence of the specific exceptions to the prohibition, the actual and controlling and bona fide presence of at least one of which exceptions was indispensable to the legality of the manufacture.

The construction contended for by Kidd would extend the words of the grant to Congress beyond their obvious import. . . "Manufacture" is transformation — fashioning raw materials into a change of form for use. The functions of "commerce" are different. The buying and selling and the transportation incl dental thereto constitute commerce; and the regulation of commerce in the constitutional sense embraces the regulation at least of such transportation. If it be held that the term "commerce" includes the regulation of all such manufactures as are intended to be the subject of commercial transactions in the future, it is impossible to deny that it would also include all productive industries that contemplate the same thing. The result would be that Congress would be invested, to the exclusion of the States, with the power to regulate, not only manufactures, but also agriculture, horticulture, stock-raising, domestic fisheries, mining,—every branch of industry; for there is not one of these that does not contemplate, more or less clearly, an inter-State or foreign market. The power being vested in Congress and denied to the States, it would follow that the duty would devolve on Congress to regulate all those delicate, multiform, and vital interests,—interests which are and must be local in all the details of their successful management.

We find in the statute no provision the purpose of which is to exert the jurisdiction of the State over persons or property or transactions within the limits of other States; or to act upon intoxicating liquors as exports, or while in process of exportation or importation. Its avowed object is to prevent, not the carrying of liquors out of the State, but their manufacture, except for specified purposes, within the State. Because the products of a domestic manufacture may ultimately become the subjects of inter-State commerce, it does not follow that State legislation respecting such manufacture is an attempted exercise of the power to regulate commerce exclusively conferred upon Congress.

The right of a State wholly to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors is not to be overthrown by the fact that a manufacturer intends to export the product of his distillery. And a statute, by merely omitting to except from its operation liquors manufactured for export, does not interfere with the power vested in Congress. In License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 471 (1866), it was said: "No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature [Congress]. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject." The manufacture of intoxicating liquors in a State is none the less a business within that State because the manufacturer intends, at his convenience, to export the liquors to other States.

It has already been decided that the fact that an article was manufactured for export to another State does not of itself make it an article of inter-State commerce, and that the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when the article or product passes from the control of the State and belongs to commerce. In the case of Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524 (1886), logs, which had been cut in New Hampshire and hauled to Errol on the Androscoggin river, in the same State, to be floated down that river to Lewiston, Maine, while being held at Errol for a convenient opportunity for the transportation were assessed for local and State taxes. This court held that the logs were liable for taxes like other property in New Hampshire; that "goods do not cease to be part of the general mass of property in a State, subject, as such, to its jurisdiction, and to taxation in the usual way, until they have been shipped or entered with a common carrier for transportation to another State, or have been started upon such transportation in a continuous route or journey."

The police power of a State is as broad and plenary as its taxing power; and property within a State is subject to the operations of the former as long as it is within the regulating restrictions of the latter.

(The case is reported in 128 U. S. 1, 15–26. Fuller, C. J., not being a member of the Court when it was argued, took no part in the decision. With Coe v. Errol compare Low v. Austin, 13 Wall. 29 (1871), determining when goods lose their character as "imports.")

NON OBSTANTE, page 711.

Lat. Notwithstanding.

Formerly used (1) to preclude any construction other than that stated; (2) to express a privilege exercised by a sovereign to dispense with a law,—a practice "effectually demolished by the bill of rights." 1 Bl. Com. 342; 2 id. 271; 4 id. 401.

Non obstanto veredicto. Notwithstanding the verdict. Describes a judgment for the party against whom a verdict was found.

Imports that the claim or defense was not good in law. At common law, is entered, on motion of the plaintiff, when the plea or defense confesses the cause of action, and a matter of avoidance relied upon, and found to be true in fact, is not legally sufficient. The corresponding remedy for the defendant is a motion in arrest of judgment. Ward v. Phillips, 89 N. Car. 217 (1883); Tillinghast v. McLeod, 17 R. I. 212 (1891); Stephen, Pl. *97; 1 Chitty, Pl. *688; Gould, Pl. x, § 46.

The motion includes nothing dehors the record. Stearn v. Clifford, 62 Vt. 96 (1889). Another judgment must not have been entered. Scheible v. Hart, 91 Ky. — (1890). The motion does not preclude a motion for a new trial. Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 68 Iowa, 744 (1886); Indianapolis &c. R. Co. v. McCaffrey, 69 Ind. 555 (1879); Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Dimick, 96 Ill. 48 (1880).

In a few States, the motion will not be entertained unless a controlling question of law is reserved and a record thereof, and of the supporting facts, made at the time. Inquirer Printing Co. v. Rice, 106 Pa. 624 (1884); Buckley v. Duff, 111 id. 227 (1887). 1 Thompson, Trials, § 1022. See RESERVE, 6.

In other States, there may be a general verdict with a finding upon special issues. Which shall prevail, in case of conflict, is not uniformly settled. Larkin v. Upton, 144 U. S. 19, 21 (1892); St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Ritz, 38 Kan. 408 (1885); Fenton v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 69 Iowa, 577 (1886); Porter v. Waltz, 108 Ind. 40 (1886); Brown v. Searle, 104 id. 222 (1885); 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 7, cases. Compare DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE; NONSUIT; VERDICT, Special, p. 1086.