
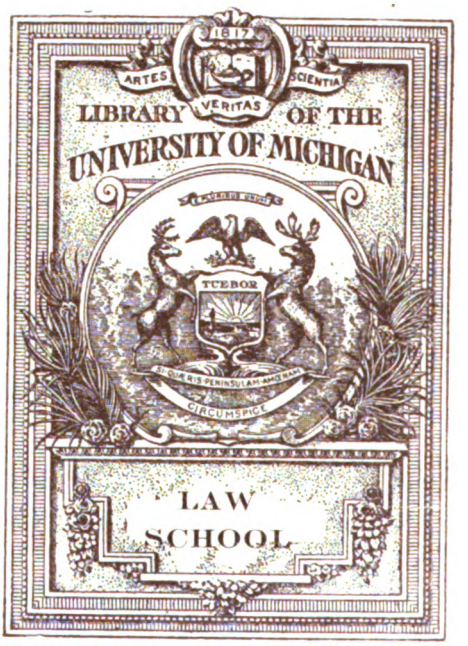
DICTIONARY OF LAW

ANDERSON



Albert G. Barclay

A

DICTIONARY OF LAW,

CONSISTING OF

JUDICIAL DEFINITIONS AND EXPLANATIONS

OF

WORDS, PHRASES, AND MAXIMS,

AND AN

EXPOSITION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF LAW:

COMPRISING A

DICTIONARY AND COMPENDIUM OF AMERICAN AND ENGLISH JURISPRUDENCE.

BY

WILLIAM C. ANDERSON,

OF THE PITTSBURGH BAR.

CHICAGO:

T. H. FLOOD AND COMPANY,

LAW PUBLISHERS.

1913.

STATE JOURNAL PRINTING COMPANY,
PRINTERS AND STEREOTYPERS,
MADISON, WIS.

TO MY BROTHER,
GEORGE BONBRIGHT ANDERSON, M. D.,
THIS BOOK IS DEDICATED.

INTRODUCTION.

The title Dictionary of Law has been chosen for this book because it seeks to define and otherwise explain law terms and expressions, to show the application of legal principles, and to present judicial interpretations of common words and phrases.

Similar productions, heretofore issued, are marked, in the opinion of the writer, by the following imperfections:

1. Absence of judicial matter, especially of judicial definitions or interpretations and reasoning; also, dearth of non-technical terms as cross-references.

2. Neglect or omission of important subjects, and needless repetition of matter under different heads.

3. Inattention to pronunciation, and lack of discrimination in selecting words for etymological explanation.

4. Omission of the names of the parties to important cases, and of the dates when decisions were rendered.

5. The presence of thousands of obsolete Anglo-Saxon, Old English, Scotch, Spanish, French, and civil law words and phrases, antiquated Norman and Latin expressions, and matters of a purely non-legal character,—a mass of material of no use to student or practitioner, of interest to the legal antiquarian alone.

In the preparation of this work care has been taken not to follow in the "beaten path" of law dictionaries. Under the following heads its plan is set forth:

1. The different spellings of terms are noted, the preferred spelling being placed first, with comment where pertinent.

2. The correct pronunciation of words often mispronounced is indicated, according to Webster's Dictionary.

3. As to etymology, while the aim has been to discriminate between terms whose origin is of no importance or interest and such as contain in their ancient form somewhat of their present signification, the supposed origin of all technical terms is stated.

4. The definitions are printed in the larger type, except where incorporated in a paragraph along with explanatory matter.

The endeavor has been to find definitions framed by the courts, the highest tribunals of this country receiving the preference. Some by text-writers also are given. Where a court explains rather than defines a term (as, in a charge to a jury), such explanation has generally been condensed. Definitions thought to be too narrow or too broad in statement have been modified with a view to greater fullness and clearness.

Any change made in the phraseology of a definition is indicated. A single bracket [denotes that a slight or immaterial change has been made; a double bracket [ ] that the substance only is given — that the definition is recast, or that a definition is constructed out of the language employed by the authority cited, or is formed upon partial or incomplete definitions found in the accompanying citations.

The absence of a bracket denotes that no change has been made in the language of the court. This last class of definitions makes up the body of the DICTIONARY portion of the book, and constitutes one of the special features mentioned — its large number of judicially framed definitions.

The word "whence," which will be noticed in the text immediately after some definitions, does not necessarily mean that the word or words which follow it are derived from the title word, but that they are derivatives from the same root word,— the latter being sometimes included in the appended list. This is done to avoid repetitions under different forms of the same word.

Expressions having the same initial word are placed under that word, arranged alphabetically with reference to the second word. Thus, A mensa will be found under A, and not between Amends and Amerce.

For typographical reasons, general cross-references have been advanced to the beginning of a few articles, and some common words, not originally intended for definition, have been defined.

5. Synonyms are treated under the leading word of the group. For positives and negatives — words beginning with dis-, il-, in-, non-, re-, un-, reference should be had to the simple word, except where the negative itself is the word most used. Examples: Dishonor, Insolvency, and Insanity.

6. The Latin and Norman-French law terms now in use have been collected, and such maxims and phrases as student and practitioner alike meet in the books they consult. The selection also includes important terms found in treatises on Roman law, mention of the primitive meaning of terms current under new applications, and explanation of a few terms in ancient law long obsolete but occasionally referred to as of historical interest.

Each Latin maxim or phrase is entered, in whole or in part, as a title or subtitle under its initial word; but if that word is unimportant, like the particles a, ab, con, de, in, nam, pro, qui, quod, ut, or is an adjective, a cross-reference is made from such word to the principal word, under which the expression is explained at length.

7. Having given the origin of a term, and the senses in which it is used, where the importance of the subject warrants it, the value of the idea or the extent of its application in the affairs of society is stated — by comment, more or less extended, or by reference to a related topic under which such information may be found. These remarks, which are printed in the smaller type and compose the COMMENTARY portion of the work, consist, in brief, of matters pertaining, it is believed, to every recognized branch of the law, and set forth the "reasoning of the law" itself.

For English common law antedating the adoption of the Constitution, I have relied chiefly upon the commentaries of Blackstone, making my own abridgment of that invaluable treatise, and citing it in all cases. Many statements of principles have been taken from the commentaries and decisions of Chancellor Kent, more from the works and decisions of Judge Story, and not a few paragraphs from other and later standard writers.

Under appropriate heads have been embodied the various provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and many from the constitutions of the States. When the former is given verbatim its original orthography and punctuation have been restored.

Quotations are made from English statutes followed in this country.

Still more frequently acts of Congress, from the earliest to the latest date, have been drawn upon — very important recent ones being reprinted entire; also, enactments in the several States, including sections from codes.

There are also presented decisions of the courts on the foregoing subjects, explanatory of questions of general and sometimes of local importance, and, for the most part, of permanent interest. To this end, all the decisions of the United States Supreme Court have been read, and thousands of the decisions rendered in the States — indeed, entire series of State reports.

8. In the cross-references a subject may be found to be not the title word, but its shortest form.

English words are referred to foreign words, and vice versa, wherever there is likeness or sameness of sense between them, and a perusal of both will contribute to an understanding of the general subject.

Sub-titles referred to under the title word are italicised.

Having treated each word where it will be soonest comprehended in its own meaning or meanings and as related to other subjects, references to it, under heads where it might be incidentally treated, are entered.

Specific terms are fully defined only under the generic head with which they are associated. Thus under "Express" the reader will not find "express contract:" he will there find "express" explained, generically and specifically, but it is only under "Contract" that he will learn anything substantial about "express contract." Not so, with local or isolated expressions, such as "Baby Act." and "Lynch Law."

9. In the selection of cases, preference has been given to decisions reviewing or collecting earlier cases.

In a very few instances the dates of decisions are not given because not known. In collections of leading cases, where the annotations are the important matter, the year of the title case may not be stated.

From 108 to 128 United States Supreme Court Reports (October, 1882, to January, 1889), the year when an opinion was rendered is given; prior to 108 U. S., the reporters noted only the year of the term to which the writ of error or the appeal was taken.

Cases without the names of the parties are such as follow a text-book quoted; or they occur where it was not thought necessary to make copious reference to definitions on common technical terms; or where a later quotes an earlier authority already given in full; or they are so added in order not to take up space on a point already supported by cases cited at length; or they establish a principle universally accepted; or they concern incidental or illustrative matters; or they show where a term or maxim was applied. Cited to a common word, they will sometimes be found to contain that word without suggestion as to its general meaning or use.

The word "cases," printed at the end of a citation, imports that the court examined previous decisions which will be found discussed or referred to in the decision itself. This device, while saving space, directs the reader to other cases on the same subject.

The abbreviation id. refers to another volume in the same set or series; ib., to the volume last mentioned. Unless otherwise indicated, new series is meant, where there is also an "old series." "R." stands for Railroad or Railway. "Constitution" means Constitution of the United States; while "constitution" refers to the similar instrument belonging to a particular State. "Supreme Court" means the Supreme Court of the United States; in a few instances, for purposes of distinction, the names of the other Federal courts begin with capital letters. "State" refers to one of the United States; "state" to a nation; "R. S." to the Revised Statutes of the United States; "Government" to the National government.

The first descriptive word in the names of corporations has been sought for. Some reports furnish nothing more than "Insurance Co." or "Railroad Co."

Unless otherwise noted, the original or star pages are intended.

10. I have received valuable information from other dictionaries. For original extracts taken from them due credit has been given. Definitions from these books, adopted by the courts, are noted. Where a court has approved a definition of a common word as found in a vernacular dictionary, or in a cyclopædia, the title of such work is placed after the particular case, separated from it by a colon; so, also, with matter from other sources.

11. References are made to useful articles in the law periodicals, especially to such as discuss cases, and to a few articles in lay publications.

12. A knowledge of the chief events in the lives of Sir William Blackstone, James Kent, and Joseph Story, the most widely read of law-writers,— in particular, the circumstances under which their works were composed, with information as to different editions,— being useful to all students of the law, and those works having been largely quoted throughout this book — brief biographies are inserted under the names of those distinguished jurists.

Hoping that the volume will in some degree lighten the labors of student and practitioner, it is submitted to the kindly consideration of the profession.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 1, 1889. W. C. ANDERSON.

DICTIONARY OF LAW.

A.

A, or a, the first letter of the alphabet, is used in legal, legislative, and judicial writings as a numerical character, as an abbreviation, and as a word:

1. The capital serves for marking — (1) the first division, chapter, or other large portion of a legal treatise or digest; (2) the first appendix in a report: of cases, or of a commission or committee; (3) the first schedule to a constitution or a statute; (4) the first series of an issue of corporate or governmental bonds; (5) the first distinct portion of any other tabulated statement.

The small letter designates — (1) in old law-books, the first page of a leaf or folio (b designating the second page); (2) in modern works, the first paragraph of new matter inserted in the body of a volume: as, of a new section printed between older sections; (3) the first foot-note to a page in the first edition of a book: in enlarged editions, especially those prepared by annotators, a note subjoined to such foot-note is designated as a^1, or $(a)^1$, a^2, etc.

The other letters, capital and small (in the language of printers, upper case and lower case), are used in the same manner.

2. Indicates the first of a number of documents or other proofs: as, Exhibit "A," or "A 1," "A 2," etc.

The other letters, in their order, are similarly employed. See further EXHIBIT, 2.

In the old States, volumes containing recorded instruments were formerly, and perhaps are still, designated by letters, or by letters and numbers: as, A, or A 1; B, or B 1; A 2, B 2; AA, BB. To avoid errors and confusion in copying references, some of the letters, as J, K, N, U, V, Y, were not used.[1]

3. As an abbreviation, usually denotes American, anno, appeal, article, assistant, associate, attorney.

Has been used for al in the expression et al.[1] See ALIUS.

Formerly stood for adversus (versus); as, Cockle a Underwood.[2]

Among the Puritans, a convicted adultress wore an A upon the front of her dress, in Plymouth colony by law of 1658, or earlier, and in Vermont as late as 1788.

A. D. Anno Domini, in the year of our Lord. See YEAR.

A. G. Attorney-general.

A. J. Assistant, or associate, judge or justice. A. JJ. Associate judges or justices. A. L. J. Associate law judge or justice. See JUDGE.

A. R. Anno regni, in the year of the reign.

A 1. Of the highest class.

Originated with underwriters in rating vessels: the A denoted that the hull of a particular ship was well built and seaworthy for a voyage of any length; the 1 the efficient state of her tackle, sails, apparel, and other appurtenances. B, C, and other letters, indicated lower conditions of seaworthiness; 2, 3, and perhaps other numerals, inferior or insufficient appurtenances.[3]

4. The indefinite article a or an.

Often used in the sense of any, and then applies to more than one individual object.[4]

---

[1] In the superior court of Baltimore city, Md., this practice, which was begun in 1651, continued to 1797; in the office of the recorder of deeds for Philadelphia county, Pa., it continued from 1683 to 1799; in the county court of Augusta, Va., from 1745 to 1879; in the office of recorder of deeds for Allegheny county, Pa., from 1788 to 1849. In the last county there is a deed book N 5, or volume 86. In the department of internal affairs at Harrisburg, Pa., the patent books (early numbers of which contain the grants from William Penn) are designated as A 1 to 20, AA 1 to 16, P 1 to 65, H 1 to 74; and there is also in use a second series of account books designated as AA, BB, etc., to HH 4, which last is in use in 1868.

[1] 58 N. H. 3, 4, 6, 7, et seq.

[2] 1 Abb. Pr. R. o. s. 1; id., vols. I-XIX.

[3] See Webster's Dict., p. 1782; Chambers' Ency., tit. A.

[4] Nat. Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 206 (1886).

Where directors are empowered to issue a note or accept a bill of exchange, they may give several notes or bills, equal to the sum specified.[1] See ANY; THE.

5. The Latin preposition: from, away from, by, in, on. Compare AB.

A fortiori. With stronger (reason); with more right; much more.

A private person, and a fortiori a peace-officer, present when a felony is committed, is bound to arrest the felon.[2]

A multo fortiori. By far the stronger — reason, right, equity.[3, 4]

A gratia. Out of favor; from mere indulgence, and not of right. See GRACE.

A latere. By the side: collaterally.

Said of succession to property; but now of rare occurrence.

A mensa et thoro (toro). From table and bed: from bed and board. A vinculo matrimonii. From the bond of matrimony.

The former describes a "partial" divorce: separation of the parties by law, with all rights preserved; the latter, a "total" divorce: complete dissolution of the marriage relation with all incidental rights. See further DIVORCE.

A nativitate. From birth, from infancy.

The legal settlement of an idiot a nativitate is that of his father.[5]

A posteriori. From what comes after — the effect. A priori. From what goes before — the cause.

Reasoning from an effect back to its supposed cause is described as a posteriori; reasoning or argument from an assumed cause to the result it may or must produce is termed a priori.[6]

A prendre. F. See PROFIT, A prendre.

A quo. From which.

As, the court a quo a cause has been removed, by an appeal or a writ of error. Correlative ad quem, to which. See further QUI, QUO.

A retro. In arrear, q. v.

A sociis. From its associates; from its surroundings; from the context. See further NOSCITUR.

A teneris annis. From tender years; by reason of youth. See NEGLIGENCE.

A verbis legis. See LEX, A verbis, etc.

A vinculo. See A mensa, etc.

AB. L. From.

Takes the place of a before a vowel sound. See A, 5; ABS.

Ab assuetis. See INJURIA, Ab assuetis.

Ab inconvenienti. From hardship, q. v.

Ab initio. From the beginning; from inception.

A contract is said to be illegal, a writ, an action, or a service, irregular or void, ab initio. See TRESPASS, Ab initio.

Ab intestato. From an intestate (owner).

Ab invito. By one unwilling: unwillingly. See INVITUS.

Ab irato. By one in anger — displeased.

A gift, bequest or devise, adverse to the interest of any heir is sometimes said to be made ab irato.

ABANDON.[1] To relinquish, surrender, disclaim, desert, forsake, give up wholly. Whence abandonment, non-abandonment, and (though rare) abandoner, abandonee.

As, to abandon property, a relation, a proceeding — any species of right.

"Abandon" includes the intention and the external act by which it is carried into effect.[2]

To constitute an abandonment of a right, there must be an unequivocal and decisive act of the party showing a determination not to have the benefit designed.[3] See ESTOPPEL.

For example, a homestead is abandoned by an act which shows an intention wholly to relinquish it; not by temporary absence.[4]

A statute may require that this intention be proved by a declaration duly executed and recorded.[5]

There is a difference between "abandoning" and "surrendering" a right or thing; between giving it up because regarded as useless, and assigning or transferring it to another as valuable. When one surrenders a thing by solemn agreement in writing, he certainly does not "abandon" it in the sense in which that word is generally understood.[6]

1. Property. An object of property remains the owner's till such time as he does some act which shows an intention to abandon it; then it becomes publici juris once

[1] Thompson v. Wesleyan Association, 65 E. C. L. 849 (1849). See also Sharff v. Commonwealth, 2 Binn. *516, 519 (1810).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 293.

[3] 100 U. S. 633.

[4] Although strictly terms in logic, these expressions are so common in law language that they may be considered quasi legal.

[5] Shippen v. Gaines, 17 Pa. 42 (1851).

[1] F. a, to; ban-, to proscribe, give up. See BAN.

[2] Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 455 (1883), Appleton, C. J.

[3] [Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flip. 309 (1878), Hammond, J.

[4] Hurt v. Hollingsworth, 100 U. S. 104 (1879); 29 Minn. 20.

[5] Tipton v. Martin, 71 Cal. 338 (1886); Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 1243-44.

[6] [Hagan v. Gaskill, 42 N. J. E. 217 (1886), Bird, V. C.

more, liable to appropriation by the next occupant.[1]

"If a man be dissatisfied with his immovable estate and abandon it, immediately he departs from it corporally, with the intention that it shall no longer be his; and it will become the property of him who first enters thereon."[2] See DERELICTION, 2.

Property is abandoned when it is thrown away, or its possession is voluntarily forsaken by the owner,— in which case it will become the property of the first occupant; or, when it is voluntarily lost or left without the hope or expectation of again acquiring it,— then it becomes the property of the finder, subject to the superior claim of the owner; except that in salvage cases, by the admiralty law, the finder may hold possession until he is paid his compensation or till the property is submitted to legal jurisdiction for ascertainment of the compensation.[3] See FIND, 1.

To an abandonment of "land" there must be a concurrence of the act of leaving the premises vacant, so that they may be appropriated by the next comer, with an intention of not returning.[4] See VACANT.

No rule of law, applicable to all cases, can be laid down, as to what change of a "station" will constitute an abandonment or relocation. Every relocation involves, in one sense, an abandonment of the old station.[5]

The abandonment of an "easement" imports a non-user of it. All acts of enjoyment must have totally ceased for the same length of time that was necessary to create the original presumption.[6] See EASEMENT.

A person may abandon an "invention" in two senses: (1) When he gives up his idea, abandons it in the popular sense, relinquishes the intention of perfecting it, so that another person may take up the same thing and become the original and first inventor; (2) when, having made an invention, he allows the public to use it without objection.[7] See PATENT, 2.

In the law of marine insurance, abandonment is the act of cession, by which in cases where the loss or destruction of the property, though not absolute, is highly imminent, or its recovery is too expensive to be worth the attempt, the assured, on condition of receiving at once the whole amount of the insurance, relinquishes to the underwriters all his property and interest in the thing insured, as far as it is covered by the policy, with all the claims that may ensue from its ownership, and all profits that may arise from its recovery.[1]

The yielding up or surrendering to the insurer by the insured of his interest in the property.[2]

Usually made by the owner of the property when informed of the peril or loss. He gives the insurer notice of the abandonment, the effect of which is to place the insurer in his position to the extent of the interest insured.[3]

To be made within reasonable time; which is a question of fact and of law. No particular form is necessary, nor need it be in writing; but it should be explicit, and not left to be inferred from equivocal acts. The insured must yield up all his interest in the subject. Regularly made, operates as a transfer of the property to the underwriter.[3]

"The right of abandonment does not depend upon the certainty, but on the high probability, of a total loss, either of the property or of the voyage, or both. The insured is to act, not upon certainties, but upon probabilities, and if the facts present a case of extreme hazard, and of probable expense exceeding half the value of the ship, the insured may abandon; though it should happen that she was afterward recovered at less expense." If the abandonment, when made, is good, the rights of the parties are definitely fixed, and do not become changed by subsequent events; if not good, subsequent circumstances will not impart validity to it.[4]

Where the interest insured is that of a part owner, or when the entire owner insures some definite part, the abandonment is limited to a cession of the insured interest; but, when the insurance reaches every part of the ownership indiscriminately, the abandonment extends to the entire property, though its value exceeds the amount of the insurance. For the protection of the underwriter, the abandonment relates back to the date of the loss.[5] See DERELICTION, 3; LOSS, 2.

The doctrine is not applicable to fire insurance.[6]

---

[1] [1 Bl. Com. 9-10.

[2] Partidas, 3, Tit. 4, law 50; Sideck v. Duran, 67 Tex. 269 (1887), cases.

[3] Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 509 (1861), cases, Fairchild, J.

[4] Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 310 (1870), Rhodes, C. J.

[5] Attorney-General v. Eastern R. Co., 137 Mass. 48 (1884).

See also 64 Ill. 238; 49 N. Y. 346; 2 Johns. 98; 9 Pa. 273; 21 W. Va. 286; 40 Am. Dec. 464, n.; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 370.

[6] Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. 535-36 (1837), cases; 3 Mas. 275.

[7] [American, &c. Dressing Machine Co. v. American Tool Co., 4 Fish. P. C. 299 (1870). And see Planing-Machine Co. v. Keith, 101 U. S. 485 (1879); Bump, Patents, 946.

[1] 2 Arnould, Mar. Ins. 912.

[2] [Merchants', &c. Mar. Ins. Co. v. Duffield, 2 Handy, 127 (Ohio, 1855).

[3] Chesapeake Ins. Co. v. Stark, 6 Cranch, C. C. 272 (1810), Marshall, C. J.; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. 621 (1831); The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 492. 506 (1886); 4 Pet. 144; 4 B. Mon. 544; 6 Ohio St. 203; 12 Mo. Ap. 250-51; 32 E. C. L. 110-20; 2 Arn. Mar. Ins. 912-942; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 111-200.

[4] Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. 397 (1838), Story, J., quoting 3 Kent, 321; Marshall v. Delaware Ins. Co., 4 Cranch, 206 (1808). Same cases approved. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67 (1887), Harlan, J.

[5] The Manitoba, 30 F. R. 129 (1887).

[6] May, Ins. § 421a.

2. Relation or Duty. The relation of husband and wife, of parent and child, or of master and servant.

(1) The act of a husband in voluntarily leaving his wife with an intention to forsake her entirely, — never to return to her, and never to resume his marital duties toward her or to claim his marital rights.[1]

Such neglect as either leaves the wife destitute of the common necessaries of life, or would leave her destitute but for the charity of others.[2]

Exists when a man fails to supply his wife with such necessaries and comforts of life as are within his reach, and by cruelty compels her to quit him and seek shelter and protection elsewhere.[3] See further CAUSE, 1 (2), Reasonable; DESERTION, 1; DIVORCE.

(2) The act of a parent in exposing an infant of tender years (usually under seven) in any place, with intent wholly to desert it.[4] See DISPOSE, 2.

(3) For an apprentice, a sailor, or a soldier, to quit his service, intending not to return to it. See DESERTION, 2, 3.

3. Of Legal Proceedings. Voluntary, when of the plaintiff's own accord; involuntary, when the defendant compels him either to abandon or to continue the action. See NONSUIT; RETRAXIT.

ABATE.[5] To quash, beat down, destroy.[6]

"Abating" is used in three senses. The first and primitive sense is that of beating down a nuisance; the second, that of abating a writ or action — its overthrow or defeat by some fatal exception to it; in the third denotes that the rightful possession or freehold of an heir or devisee is overthrown by the rude intervention of a stranger.[7]

In such expressions as to abate a demand, duties, rents, taxes, the word has no distinctly technical meaning. Compare REBATE.

Abater; abator. He who actually removes a nuisance; also, he who abates a freehold. See 1, infra.

Abatement. Demolition, destruction, diminution, removal, suspension.

In equity practice, a suspension of proceedings in a suit from want of parties capable of proceeding therein.[1]

1. Abatement of a freehold; of an estate. Where a person dies seized of an inheritance, and, before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger, who has no right, makes entry and gets possession of the freehold.[2] Compare AMOTION, 1.

2. Abatement of a legacy. The reduction of a legacy, in case of insufficiency of assets to pay all debts and other legacies.

First, general legacies, and then specific legacies, abate proportionately.

The rule is that where bequests are made in the form of a general legacy, and are pure bounty, and there is no expression in or inference to be drawn from the will manifesting an intention to give them priority, in case of a deficiency of funds to pay them in full, they abate ratably: on the principle that equality is equity.[3] See LEGACY.

3. Abatement of a nuisance. The removal of a nuisance.

Whatever unlawfully annoys or doeth damage to another may be abated, i. e., taken away or removed by the party aggrieved thereby, he committing no riot.[4]

An injunction may prevent, and a verdict for damages may punish, but neither will "abate" a nuisance.[5] See further NUISANCE.

4. Abatement of a writ. Quashing or setting it aside on account of some fatal defect in it.[6]

A plea in abatement is one mode. Sometimes it is the duty of the court to abate a writ ex officio. Where the writ is a nullity, so that judgment thereon would be incurably erroneous, it is de facto abated.[7]

Plea in abatement. Matter of defense which defeats an action for the present, because of a defect in the writ or declaration.[8]

Such plea is: (1) of the writ — for an irregularity, defect, or informality, in its terms, form, issue, service or return, or for want of jurisdiction in the court; (2) to the action — as misconceived, or because the right has not yet accrued, or because another action is pending;[1] (3) to the declaration, on account of — (a)

[1] [Moore v. Stevenson, 27 Conn. 25 (1858), Ellsworth, J. A feme-sole trader law.

[2] [Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 476 (1858), Field, J. A divorce case.

[3] Levering v. Levering, 16 Md. 219 (1860), Bartol, J. A divorce case.

[4] See State v. Davis, 70 Mo. 468 (1869); 4 Bl. Com. 198.

[5] F. abattre; L. ab-batuere, to beat down, prostrate.

[6] Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 140 (1826).

[7] [3 Bl. Com. 168.

[1] See Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 20, n, 354.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 168.

[3] Titus v. Titus, 26 N. J. E. 114, 117-19 (1873), cases, Runyon, Ch.; Brown v. Brown, 79 Va. 650 (1884), cases.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 5, 168.

[5] Ruff v. Phillips, 50 Ga. 132 (1873).

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 168, 302.]

[7] Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 140 (1826).

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 302. See also Steph. Plead. 47; Gould Plead. 235.

the misnomer of a party; (b) the disability of a party:[2] alienage, infancy, coverture, lunacy, imprisonment, non-existence of a corporation; (c) a privilege (q. v.) in the defendant; (d) non-joinder or mis-joinder of parties; (e) a departure as between the writ and the declaration; (f) a variance between the writ and the instrument sued upon.

If the action be such as survives (q. v.), the representative of a deceased party may be substituted.[3]

Pleadable to an indictment, but chiefly for misnomer.[4] [1]

Because they are dilatory, pleas in abatement are not favored. Each plea must give a better writ, i. e., show how the writ may be amended. Each must also precede a plea to the merits,[2] [1] and a plea in bar;[4] and be verified by affidavit.

Judgment upon a plea is, for the plaintiff — respondeat ouster, that the defendant answer anew; for the defendant — quod billa cassetur, that the writ be made void or abated.[5]

See AMENDMENT, 1; QUASH; PLEA; PLEADING; REVIVE, 1. Compare BAR, 3, Plea in.

ABBREVIATIONS. A judge may, without proof, determine the meaning of the customary abbreviations of Christian names,[6] names of offices,[7] names of places,[8] and common words.[9] See AMBIGUITY; NAME, 1.

See, in this book, particular words, and the collections of abbreviations at the beginning of each letter.

In declaring upon an instrument containing abbreviated terms, extrinsic averments may be used to make them intelligible; and evidence of the sense in which the parties were in the habit of using the abbreviations, and of their conventional meaning, is admissible, but not to show the intention of one party in using them.[10]

Generally, in indictments, common words are to be used as descriptive of the matter. Abbreviations of terms employed by men of science or in the arts will not answer, without full explanation of their meaning in common language. The use of A. D., year of our Lord, because of its universality, constitutes an exception. Arabic figures and Roman letters have also become indicative of numbers as fully as words written out could be. Their general use makes them known to all men. But unexplained initials, as, for example, initials referring to public land surveys, may not be employed in an indictment.[1]

ABDUCTION.[2] Taking away a wife, child, or ward, by fraud and persuasion, or open violence.[3]

In private or civil law, the act of taking away a man's wife by violence or persuasion.[4]

In criminal law, the act of taking away or detaining a woman either against her own will, or, in the case of a minor, against the will of her parents or other person having the lawful charge of her.[5]

Any unlawful seizure or detention of a female.[6]

The taking may be accomplished by solicitations or inducements, as well as by force. This, at least, is the intention of the California statute which punishes abductions for purposes of prostitution.[7] In New York, also, it must be proved that there was persuasive inducement on the part of the accused, for the purposes of prostitution; mere permission or allowance to follow such a life is not enough. And proof must be given, aside from the testimony of the alleged abducted female, of the taking and the specific intent.[8]

Harboring against the will is abduction. Not, protection against abuse, nor shelter given after the parent or guardian has relinquished the right of control. Every abduction includes a false imprisonment. The remedies are trespass vi et armis for damages, and indictment for the assault and battery.[9] See KIDNAPING; SERVITUDE, 1.

ABET.[10] To aid, encourage, promote the commission of an offense; to incite a person to commit a crime. Whence abettor, abetment. See ACCESSARY; AID, 1.

If men who are present at a quarrel encourage a battery, they thereby assume the consequences of the act, equally with the party who does the beating; often, indeed, they are more culpable. It is not necessary that encouragement should consist of appeals. It is enough that they sanction what is being done, and

[1] Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall. 668 (1867).

[2] Society for Propagation of the Gospel v. Town of Pawlet, 4 Pet. 501 (1830).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 334.

[4] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 84 (1870); Pointer v. State, 89 Ind. 257 (1883).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 302-3. See generally Gould, Plead. 235-78; Stephen, Plead. 47-51.

[6] Gordon's Lessee v. Holiday, 1 Wash. 289 (1805); Weaver v. McElhenon, 13 Mo. 90 (1850); Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 241 (1852).

[7] Moseley's "Adm'r" v. Mastin, 37 Ala. 221 (1861).

[8] Ellis v. Park, 8 Tex. 205 (1852); Russell v. Martin, 15 id. 238 (1855).

[9] Jaqua v. Witham, &c. Co., 106 Ind. 547-48 (1886); Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y. 40, 46 (1854); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 282; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1003; Best, Ev. 232, 262.

[10] Jaqua v. Witham, &c. Co., 106 Ind. 547-48 (1886), cases; Robinson v. Kanawha Bank, 44 Ohio St. 441 (1886).

[1] United States v. Reichert, 32 F. R. 147 (1887), Field, J. See Bish. Contr. § 377

[2] L. ab-ducere, to lead away.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 139; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 606 (1850); State v. George, 98 N. C. 570 (1885).

[4] 3 Stephen, Com. 437.

[5] [Sweet's Law Dict.

[6] See 1 Russell, Crimes, 9 Am. ed., 940; 5 Strob. (S. Car.) 1.

[7] People v. Marshall, 59 Cal. 388 (1881).

[8] People v. Plath, 100 N. Y. 590 (1885), cases, Ruger, C. J.; Penal Code, § 282; Laws 1884, c. 46, § 2; amended, Laws 1886, c. 31.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 139-41. As to place, see 6 Cr. L. M. 357-60 (1884), cases.

[10] F. a-beter, to bait, lure on.

manifest this by demonstrations of resistance to any who might desire to interfere to prevent it; or by words, gestures or acts, indicating approval.[1]

ABEYANCE.[2] In expectation, remembrance, and contemplation of law; in suspense.[3]

Subsisting in contemplation of law.[4]

In abeyance: undetermined.

Said of a fee or a freehold when there is no person in esse in whom it can vest and abide: though the law considers it as always potentially existing, and ready to vest when a proper owner appears.[5]

Thus, in a grant to A for life and then to the heirs of B, the fee is not in A or B, nor can it vest in the "heirs" of B till after his death: it therefore remains in waiting or abeyance, during the life of B.[6]

It is a maxim of the common law that a fee cannot be in abeyance. The maxim rests upon reasons that have now no existence, and it is not now of universal application. Even where it still applies, being a common-law maxim, it must yield to a statutory provision inconsistent with it — as, the Confiscation Act of 1862.[6]

The franchise of a corporation may be in abeyance;[7] so may a grant of land to a charity.[8] In this category, also, are all property rights of a bankrupt until final adjudication;[9] and, a capture until a prize court has passed upon it.[10]

ABIDE. To await; as, in saying that costs abide the event of the suit.

Abide by. To conform to, obey.

"To abide by an award" is to stand by the determination of the arbitrators, and take the consequences of the award; to await the award without revoking the submission; not, necessarily, to acquiesce in, or not to dispute the award.[11]

The language employed in arbitration bonds, "to abide by the award," is to prevent the revocation or breaking of the contract of submission, rather than to apply to the actual finding of the arbitrators.[12]

In a bond "to appear and abide the order of the court," means to perform, to execute, to conform to, such order. An obligation to appear and abide the final order and judgment (in force through the entire proceedings), although it does not oblige the defendant to attend court personally and consecutively, yet it does require him to take notice, by himself or his representative, of each step in the proceeding, and to attend personally when by law necessary.[1]

"To abide and satisfy" a judgment or order is to perform, execute, conform to, and to satisfy it; that is, to carry it into complete effect.[2]

Abiding conviction. Of guilt — a settled and fixed conviction, a conviction which may follow a careful examination of the whole evidence in the case.[3]

ABILITY. See CAPACITY; DISABILITY; PECUNIARY; REHABILITATE; RESPONSIBLE.

ABLEGATUS. See MINISTER, 8.

ABODE. The place where a person dwells.

Prescribed as the criterion of the residence required to constitute a legal voter, nothing more than a domicil, a house, which the party is at liberty to leave, as interest or whim may dictate, but without any present intention to change it.[4]

The place where a college is situated may or may not be a student's permanent abode. To such as are free from parental control, and regard the place as their home, having no other place to which to return in case of sickness or affliction, it is, pro hac vice, their home, their permanent abode.[4]

A college student may be both a voter and a student; and if he in good faith elects to make the place his home, to the exclusion of all other places, he may acquire a legal residence, although he may intend to remove from such place at some fixed time, or at some indefinite period in the future.[5] See DOMICIL.

ABORTION.[6] The act of miscarrying, or producing young before the natural time, or before the foetus is perfectly formed; also, the foetus itself so brought forth.[7]

"Miscarriage" means bringing forth the foetus before it is perfectly formed and capable of living. The word "abortion" is equivalent to miscarriage in its primary meaning; but it has a secondary meaning, in which it is used to denote the off-spring.[8]

At common law an indictment will not lie for an attempt to procure an abortion with the consent of the [1] Frantz v. Lenhart, 56 Pa. 367 (1867). See 50 Conn. 101, 92.

[2] F. abeiance, suspension, waiting: abayer, to expect.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 107, 216, 318.

[4] 4 Kent, 260.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 107.

[6] Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 212 (1875).

[7] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 691 (1819).

[8] Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 332 (1815).

[9] Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 406 (1879).

[10] 1 Kent, 102. See also 5 Mass. 555; 15 id. 464.

[11] Shaw v. Hatch, 6 N. H. 162 (1833).

[12] Marshall v. Reed, 43 N. H. 40 (1862); 17 id. 461; 35 id. 198.

[1] Hodge v. Hodgdon, 8 Cush. 297 (1851), Shaw, C. J.; 108 Mass. 585; 30 Kan. 88; 13 R. I. 125; 7 Tex. Ap. 33.

[2] Erickson v. Elder, 34 Minn. 371 (1885), Berry, J.

[3] [Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 439 (1887), Field, J.

[4] Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 181 (1875): Ill. R. S. 1874. See Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 302 (1872); McCrary, Elections, § 34.

[5] Pedigo v. Grimes, Ind. Sup. Ct. (Nov. 1887), cases; Sanders v. Getchell, 76 Me. 165 (1884); Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 53 Iowa, 249 (1880), cases.

[6] L. abortio. untimely birth.

[7] [Butler v. Wood, 10 How. Pr. 224 (1854).

[8] Mills v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. 633 (1850), Coulter, J

mother, until she is "quick with child." It was considered that the child had an independent existence only when the embryo had advanced to the degree of maturity designated by that phrase, although, in reference to civil rights, an infant in ventre sa mere was regarded as a person in being.[1] See QUICKENING.

It is a flagrant crime at common law to attempt to procure a miscarriage or an abortion. By that law it is not the murder of a living child which constitutes the offense, but the destruction of gestation by wicked means and against nature.[2]

Notwithstanding an infant in ventre is treated by the law, for some purposes, as born, or as a human being, yet it is otherwise with reference to making the act of causing its miscarriage murder, unless so declared by statute. When the infant is born it becomes a human being, within the meaning of the law; and if it should die by reason of potions or bruises received in the womb, it would be murder in the person who administered or gave them, with a view of causing a miscarriage.[3] See MALICE, Constructive.

Abortion, as a crime, is found only in modern statutes and treatises. No mention is made of it in the ancient common-law writers.[4]

The intent not being specifically to take life, some States have made the offense a statutory felony, and punish any unlawful attempt to procure a miscarriage.[5]

The woman cannot be indicted as an accomplice.[6]

Abortionists' articles are non-mailable,[7] and non-importable.[8] See ATTEMPT; DECOY.

ABOUT. 1. Carrying weapons concealed "about" the person means: near, in close proximity, within convenient control and easy reach.[9]

2. In close proximity to; closely approximating.

An agreement to furnish "about 1000 tons" of metal per month will not allow the shipment of a quantity materially less than that number of tons.[1]

"About forty acres" implies that the actual quantity is a near approximation to forty acres.[2] See ESTIMATE; MORE OR LESS.

3. Imports not only nearness of time, quality, or degree, but, also, making preparation to do a thing, or being actually engaged in doing it.[3]

A man is about to convert his property into money when he is near doing it, is making preparations to do it, is actually about to dispose of the property.[4] See ABSCOND.

ABOVE. Upper, higher; superior.

"Above all incumbrances" means in excess of such incumbrances.[4]

Court above. The court to which a cause is removed.

Defendant above. The party who is defendant before an appellate court. Plaintiff above. The plaintiff in an appellate court.

Opposed — court, plaintiff, and defendant below. See BAIL Above. Compare SUPRA.

ABRIDGE.[5] 1. To shorten, condense; to epitomize, reduce, contract.

A reasonable abridgment of a copyrighted publication is permitted as a new production, involving in its preparation intellectual labor. Not so as to a mere colorable reduction, which is not real nor fair and does not require invention and judgment. What constitutes a fair and reasonable abridgment is a question difficult to answer. But a mere selection, or different arrangement of parts, so as to bring the work into a smaller compass, is not such abridgment. There must be real, substantial condensation of the materials, and intellectual labor and judgment bestowed thereon; and not merely the facile use of scissors, or extracts of the essential parts.[6]

A "compilation" consists of selected extracts from different authors; an "abridgment" is a condensation of the views of one author.[7]

The former cannot be extended so as to convey the same knowledge as the original work; the latter con-

[1] Commonwealth v. Parker, 9 Metc. 266 (1845), Shaw, C. J.

[2] Mills v. Commonwealth, ante. Commented on in cases below, especially in Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 206-7 (1879).

[3] Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa, 278-79 (1856). To same effect, State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 53-58 (1849), cases; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 54-55 (1851), cases; State v. Moore, 25 Iowa, 131-37 (1868), cases; Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 88 (1872); State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 309 (1877), cases; Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204 (1879); State v. Slagle, 82 N. C. 653 (1880). And see 10 Cent. L. J. 338; 4 Bl. Com. 201; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1220.

[4] State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 55, 53-58 (1849), cases; 3 Coke, Inst. 50; 1 Bl. Com. 129.

[5] See Commonwealth v. Wood, 11 Gray, 85 (1858); Commonwealth v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343 (1874); Commonwealth v. Felch, 132 id. 22 (1882); Commonwealth v. Taylor, ib. 261 (1882); State v. Watson, 30 Kan. 281 (1883); Commonwealth v. Railing, 113 Pa. 37 (1886); 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1220-28.

[6] People v. Vedder, 98 N. Y. 630, 632 (1885), cases.

[7] Act 3 March, 1879; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 229.

[8] R. S. §§ 2491-92; Act 3 March, 1883, 22 St. L. 499, 500.

[9] State v. McManus, 89 N. C. 558 (1883).

[1] Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 204 (1885). And see Brawley v. United States, 96 id. 171-72 (1877).

[2] Stevens v. McKnight, 40 Ohio St. 341 (1883). See also Baltimore Land Society v. Smith, 54 Md. 208 (1880); 16 C. B. 36; 44 L. T. R. 152.

[3] [Hockspringer v. Ballenburg, 16 Ohio, 308, 312 (1847): 59 Tex. 285. See also Von Lingen v. Davidson, 4 F. R. 350 (1880); s. c. 11 Rep. 5.

[4] Williams v. McDonald, 42 N. J. E. 395 (1886).

[5] F. abregier, to shorten.

[6] Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 107, 115 (1841), Story, J. Concerned letters reprinted from "Sparks' Life of Washington."

[7] Story's Executors v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 308-14 (1847), McLean, J. Concerned an abridgment of "Story's Commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence."

tains an epitome of the work abridged, and, consequently, conveys substantially the same knowledge. The former cannot adopt the arrangement of the works cited, the latter must adopt the arrangement of the work abridged. The former infringes the copyright if the matter transcribed, when published, impairs the value of the original work; but a fair abridgment, though it injures the original, is lawful. To "abridge" is to epitomize, to reduce, to contract. To copy certain passages from a book, omitting others, is in no sense an abridgment: the judgment is not exercised in condensing the author's views; his language is copied, not condensed. To "abridge" is to preserve the substance, the essence of the work, in language suited to such purpose.[1]

An abridgment of an original work, where intellectual labor and judgment are involved, made and condensed by another person, without the consent of the author, is not an infringement of a copyright on the original, especially as to histories, translations, and abridgments not of a character to supersede the original.[2] See further COMPILE; PIRACY, 2.

2. "Abridgment" has also been used to describe a book in which the substance of reports, or of the rules of law to be deduced from them, are concisely and more or less systematically stated.[3] Compare DIGEST.

3. To subtract, diminish, limit, curtail, restrict, discriminate against.

"No State shall make . . . laws which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."[4]

The exercise of any right may be regulated by law. The right to pursue a lawful employment is not "abridged," within the Fourteenth Amendment, by an ordinance which merely prescribes the reasonable conditions under which such business may be carried on.[5] See CITIZEN.

ABROAD. In English chancery law, beyond the seas. See DEPOSITION; SEA.

ABROGATE. See REPEAL; RESCIND.

ABS. The form of a or ab (from) in composition. See A, 5.

ABSCOND.[6] To hide, conceal or absent one's self clandestinely, with intent to avoid legal process.[7]

In an attachment-of-debtor law, may not apply to an act about to be done.[7] See ABOUT, 3.

An absent and absconding debtor is one who lives without the State, or intentionally conceals himself from his creditors, or withdraws himself from the reach of their suits, with intent to frustrate their demands.[1]

If a debtor departs from his usual residence, or remains absent therefrom, or conceals himself in his house, so that he cannot be served with process, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, he is an absconding debtor.[1] See ABSENT.

ABSENT. Being away: away, not present; not at one's domicil or usual place of business; out of the jurisdiction. Compare PRESENCE.

Absentee. A person who has resided in the State and has departed without leaving any one to represent him; also, a person who was never domiciliated in the State and resides abroad.[2]

Absence does not necessarily mean out of the State; it may refer to cases of default without service of process. Where the presence of a defendant is not secured by appearance or service of summons to appear, a judgment rendered upon his involuntary default is rendered "in his absence."[3] See ABSCOND.

Notice by publication (q. v.) is often given to absent defendants.

Brief or temporary absence from a dwelling-house, in the law of arson, burglary, and insurance (qq. v.), does not, as a rule, affect the owner's rights.

ABSOLUTE.[4] Exclusive; without condition or incumbrance; complete; perfect; final; opposed to conditional, qualified, relative: as,

Absolute or an absolute — acceptance, alienation, allegiance, bail, bond, confirmation, conveyance, decree, delivery, divorce, estate, fee, guaranty, nullity, ownership, possession, privilege, property, right, rule, sale, waiver, warranty, qq. v.

Absolute means complete, unconditional, not relative, not limited, independent of anything extraneous. In the sense of "complete, not limited," distinguishes an estate in fee from an estate in remainder. In the sense of "unconditional," describes a bond, a conveyance, or an estate without condition. In the sense of "not relative," describes the rights of a man in a state of nature, as contradistinguished from those which pertain to him in his social relations. Characterises a pure estate, unmixed and unconnected with any peculiarities or qualifications; a naked estate, freed from every qualification and restriction, in the donee. Thus, it may describe an estate given to a married

[1] Story's Executors v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 306-14 (1847), ante.

[2] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 79-86 (1869), cases, Clifford, J. Concerned an infringement of the copyright of "Wheaton's Elements of International Law."

[3] See 1 Bl. Com. 72; 1 Kent, 507; Story's Misc. Writ. 99; North Am. Rev., July, 1826, pp. 8-13.

[4] Constitution, Amd. XIV.

[5] Re Bickerstaff, 70 Cal. 38-40 (1886), cases.

[6] L. abs, away; condere, to hide.

[7] Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed, 153 (1854).

[1] Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 121 (1823).

[2] Morris v. Bienvenu, 30 La. An. 880 (1878): Civ Code, art. 3556.

[3] James v. Townsend, 104 Mass. 371-73, 369 (1870).

[4] L. ab-solvere, to free from, set free.

woman, without the exclusion of the husband, in distinction from an estate qualified with that exclusion. The most usual acceptation, when used of estates, is, not independent, but the opposite of partial or conditional.[1]

Absolute is often used as the opposite of "conditional" and in the same sense as "perfect." It signifies without any condition or incumbrance.[2]

That is an absolute interest in property which is so completely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without his own consent. "Absolute" may be used synonymously with "vested," and as contradistinguished from contingent or conditional; as in speaking of the absolute property of an assured.[3]

ABSQUE. L. Without; except.

Absque hoc. Without this. Absque tali causa. Without such cause.

Technical words of denial at common law. The former introduces the negative part of a special traverse and follows the affirmative part or inducement. The latter denies the matter of a plea by which defendant seeks to excuse a tortious act. See further, TRAVERSE.

ABSTRACT.[4] 1, v. To take or withdraw from; to remove or take away.

Under § 5209, Rev. St., an officer of a national bank may be guilty of "abstracting" funds, money, and credits, without any animus furandi. The statute may be satisfied with an intent to injure or defraud some company, body politic or corporate, or individual person, other than the banking association whose property is abstracted, or merely to deceive some other officer of the association, or an agent appointed to examine its affairs.[5]

To abstract a public record for the purpose of destroying or mutilating it has been generally made a criminal offense.

2, n. That which is drawn off: an epitome, a summary.

Referring to records, ordinarily a brief, not a copy, of that from which it is taken.[6]

But may be used in the sense of "copy."[7]

Abstract of title. A concise statement of the record evidence of one's title or interest in realty. Frequently spoken of as an "abstract."

In conveyancing, an abstract or summary of the most important parts of the deeds and other instruments composing the evidences of a title to real estate, arranged usually in chronological order, and intended to show the origin, course and incidents of the title, without the necessity of referring to the deeds themselves. It also contains a statement of all charges, incumbrances, and liabilities to which the property may be subjected, and of which it is in any way material for purchasers to be apprised.[1]

The person preparing a perfect abstract must fully understand all the laws on the subject of conveyancing, descents, uses, trusts, devises,—every branch of the law that can affect real estate in its mutations from owner to owner.[2]

ABUNDANS. See CAUTELA.

ABUSE.[3] 1. An improper use; a custom or practice contrary to the intendment of law or to good morals.

Common expressions are: the abuse of authority, of discretion, of a thing bailed, of process, of a distress, of a prisoner; of the liberty of free speech; of a witness, qq. v.

2. The synonym of injure; in its largest sense, ill-use or improper treatment of another person or of a dumb animal. Compare CRUELTY.

In a statute punishing the deflowering of a female child, is limited by the words with which it is connected referring to the same subject-matter. The term itself includes physical injury, which is also included in the words "carnally knew." Our statutes, following the English, describe the offense by the words "unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any woman child under the age of ten years."[4] See SEDUCTION.

ABUT. To touch or meet. Compare ADJOINING.

Abutment. The part of a bridge which touches the land. See BRIDGE.

Abuttal. The point at which tracts of land meet; the butting or bounding of lands.

Abutting. Usually, although not necessarily, imports "in contact" with.[5]

Properties abut upon a street; and their owners are abutting owners. See further STREET.

AC. See AD.

ACADEMY. See ABODE; CADET; COLLEGE, 2; SCHOOL, Public.

---

[1] Johnson's Adm. v. Johnson, 32 Ala. 640-42 (1858), cr sea, Walker, J.

[2] Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. 597 (1850); 2 N. Y. 357.

[3] Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 20 (1860), Sanford, J.; Williams v. Buffalo German Ins. Co., 17 F. R. 95 (1883), cases.

[4] L. abs-trahere, to draw away or off.

[5] United States v. Northway (President Second Nat. Bank of Jefferson, Ohio), 120 U. S. 327, 334-36 (1887), Matthews, J.

[6] [Dickinson v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 413 (1874).

[7] Willhite v. Barr, 67 Mo. 286 (1878).

[1] Burrill's Law Dict.; Warvelle, Abstr. Title, § 2.

[2] Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 101 (1859); 7 W. Va. 413.

[3] L. ab, amiss; uti, to use.

[4] Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 379, 378 (1877), Brickell, C. J. See generally Commonwealth v. Roosnell, 143 Mass. 32 (1887).

[5] Cohen v. Cleveland, 42 Ohio St. 197 (1883).

ACCELERATE. To shorten the period after which an interest or estate is to vest in possession or enjoyment.

ACCEPTANCE.[1] A receiving — with approval, or conformably to the purpose of a tender or offer; receiving with intention to retain.

Whence acceptor, non-acceptance.

A person is said to accept the service of a notice, an offer, a bid, the terms of a contract, a guaranty, a charter, rent, goods delivered, a bill of exchange.

1. At common law, a sale of goods, wares, or merchandise was complete upon acceptance of the offer to sell. The Statute of Frauds requires that before an action can be maintained there must have been both a delivery and an acceptance of the article by the purchaser or by his duly authorized agent. In determining, in a particular case, whether there was a binding acceptance, the courts consider the intention of the parties and the nature of the property.[2]

It is a question for the jury whether, under all the circumstances, the acts which the buyer does or forbears to do amount to a receipt and acceptance. But where the facts are not in dispute it is for the court to determine their legal effect; also when the facts are not such as can in law warrant finding an acceptance. To take the contract out of the operation of the statute, there must be "acts of such a character as to place the property unequivocally within the power and under the exclusive dominion of the buyer as absolute owner, discharged of all liens for the price."[3] See FRAUDS, Statute of; OFFER, 1.

2. Acceptance of a bill of exchange is an assent or agreement to comply with the request or order contained in the bill, or, in other words, an assent or agreement to pay the bill according to the tenor of the acceptance, when due.[4]

An engagement to pay the bill according to the tenor of the acceptance; a general acceptance being an engagement to pay according to the tenor of the bill.[5]

"Accepted," on a bill of exchange, is an engagement to pay the bill in money when due. Indorsed upon non-negotiable paper, would not import a consideration.[1]

The bill itself, after acceptance, is also called "an acceptance."

Acceptor. He who accepts a bill of exchange,— usually the drawee.

An acceptance is commonly made by writing "accepted" upon the face of the bill and signing thereunder the acceptor's name; but there is no particular place, and no uniform formula, observed.

Acceptances are: express, and implied; verbal, and written; prior to drawing the bill; before or after maturity; for accommodation; after protest; absolute, qualified, conditional; by all the drawees, by one or more of them, by a person not a drawee for the honor of the drawer or of an indorser. They are "complete," when in exact conformity with the tenor of the bill; "qualified," when the engagement is to pay at a different time, place, or manner, from the tenor; and "conditional," when the obligation to pay is to commence on the happening of some event or circumstance.[2]

Every act giving credit to a bill amounts to an acceptance; and this, once fairly and fully made and consummated, cannot be revoked. But the drawee has a reasonable time in which to obtain desired and pertinent information.[3]

Unless forbidden by statute, a promise to accept an existing bill is an acceptance whether the promise is in writing or by parol.

The acceptor is to the drawer as the maker of a promissory note is to the payee, i. e., he is the principal debtor, and the drawer is his surety. His liability is governed by the terms of the acceptance.[4]

Acceptors of a bill of exchange by the act of acceptance admit the genuineness of the signatures of the drawees, and the competency of the drawers to assume that responsibility. Such an act imports an engagement, on the part of the acceptor, with the payee or other lawful holder of the bill, to pay the same if duly presented, when it becomes due according to the tenor of the acceptance. He engages to pay the holder, whether payee or indorsee, the full amount of the bill at maturity, and if he does not, the holder has a right of action against him, and he may also have one against the drawee. Drawers of bills of exchange, however, are not liable to the holder, under such circumstances, until it appears that the bill was duly presented, and that the acceptor refused or neglected to pay according to the tenor of the instrument; their liability is contingent and subject to those conditions

[1] L. accipere, to receive.

[2] See Bullock v. Tschergi, 13 F. R. 345 (1882); Mahan v. United States, 16 Wall. 146 (1872); 1 Reed, St. Fr. §§ 258-303, cases; 28 Minn. 354; 2 Kent, 494; 3 Pars. Contr. 39; 2 Bl. Com. 447.

[3] Hinchman v. Lincoln, 124 U. S. 38 (1888), cases, Matthews, J., quoting Marsh v. Rouse, 44 N. Y. 647 (1871), cases. See also Shindler v. Houston, 1 id. 265 (1848); 49 Am. Dec. 325-40 (1883), cases; Remick v. Sandford, 120 Mass. 316 (1876), cases; Baldey v. Parker, 2 Barn. & C. 40 (1823); Benj. Sales, § 187; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 317 a.

[4] Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 445 (1875), Miller, J.; 12 Barb. 669; 1 Pars. N. & B. 281.

[5] Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 U. S. 712 (1879), Clifford, J.

[1] Cowan v. Halleck, 9 Col. 578 (1886), cases.

[2] See 1 Pars. Contr. 267; 2 Pars. N. & B. 281; 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 496; 64 Ala. 28-33; 109 Mass. 414.

[3] 3 Kent, 82-88.

[4] Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 413-14 (1875), cases; Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 id. 713, 712-18 (1879), cases.

precedent.[1] See CHECK; EXCHANGE, 2, Bill of; PLACE, 1, Of payment; PROTEST, 2.

ACCESS.[2] Going to or with: approach, intercourse, or opportunity therefor. Opposed, non-access.

In a special sense, refers to sexual intercourse between a husband and wife, and imports its occurrence or opportunity of communicating for that purpose.

The presumption that children born in lawful wedlock are legitimate, may be rebutted by evidence showing that there could have been no intercourse. Where there were opportunities for intercourse, evidence to establish impotency is generally not admitted. Non-access is not presumed from the mere fact that the parties lived apart in the same country.[3]

A parent will not be permitted to prove non-access for the purpose of bastardizing issue born in wedlock. The admission of such testimony would be unseemly and scandalous; it would reveal immoral conduct in the parents, and the child, who is in no fault, would be the chief sufferer. Modern statutes allowing parties to testify in their own behalf have not changed this rule of law.[4]

ACCESSARY.[5] He who is not the chief actor in an offense, nor present at its performance, but is in some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed.[6]

If a person does no more than procure, advise or assist, he is only an accessary; but if he is present, consenting, aiding, procuring, advising, or assisting, he is a "principal."[7]

Accessary before the fact. One who, being absent at the time of the crime committed, doth yet procure, counsel, or command another to commit the crime.[8]

Accessary at the fact. An aider and abetter was formerly defined to be an "accessary at the fact." He is now spoken of as a principal in the first or second degree.[9]

Accessary after the fact. One who, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon.[1]

In treason and misdemeanors, all participants are principals. The nearest relatives dare not aid or receive one another. Mere presence makes an accessary before the fact a principal in the second degree. An accessary before the fact is liable for all that ensues from the unlawful act. The manner of executing his command is simply a collateral circumstance. Any assistance given a felon to hinder his being apprehended, tried, or punished, makes the assister an accessary after the fact. A person acquitted as a principal may be indicted as an accessary after the fact; and one may be indicted as an accessary both before and after the fact.[2]

Whatever will make a party an accessary before the fact in felony will make him a principal in misdemeanor, if properly charged as such. . . . The acts, conduct, and declarations of each confederate, made during the pendency of the enterprise, are evidence, as part of the res gestæ, against all concerned; but a confession made subsequently to the crime affects only him who makes it. . . . Where the accessary is tried with the principal, the confession of the latter is admissible to prove his own guilt, and where he confesses by pleading guilty and retiring, the record of such conviction is prima facie evidence of his guilt at the trial of other defendants. Evidence of the confession of an accessary, to prove the guilt of the principal, cannot be admitted under an indictment against the accessary, unless the guilt or conviction of the principal is alleged in the indictment. The rule at common law was that the accessary could not be convicted until the guilt of the principal was established; so that the principal was first to be convicted or both indicted and tried together. . . . When the accessary is indicted before the principal has been convicted, the indictment, whether separate or joint, must allege the guilt of the principal, as the offense of the accessary depends upon the principal's guilt and is never to be regarded as complete unless the chief offense was actually committed. When principal and accessary are indicted together, the regular course is to introduce all substantive evidence against all the parties before they are required to state their defense. Then the jury are instructed to consider the case of the principal defendant in the first place, and, if they find him not guilty, that it is their duty also to acquit the accessary; but if they find him guilty, they are to proceed to examine the charge against the accessary, and declare whether it is sustained.[3]

Every accessary after the fact to murder, robbery, or piracy, shall be imprisoned not more than three years, and fined not more than five hundred dollars. Every accessary after the fact to any robbery of the carrier, agent, or other person intrusted with the mail, of such mail or of any part thereof, shall be fined not

[1] Hoffman v. Bank of Milwaukee, 12 Wall. 186, 193 (1870), Clifford, J.

[2] Ac-cess', or ac'-cess,— Webster.

[3] 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 150-51; 1 id. § 28; 1 Whart. Ev. § 608; 2 id. § 1298; 1 Bl. Com. 457.

[4] Tioga County v. South Creek Township, 75 Pa. 436-37 (1874); Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. C. 263-64 (1874), cases; Melvin v. Melvin, 58 N. H. 570 (1879), cases; King v. Inhab. Sourton, 31 E. C. L. 315-16 (1836), cases.

[5] Ac-ces'-sary,— Webster. L. accessorius, q. v. Also spelled -ory, but -ary is preferred. See ACCESSORY.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 35; 3 Cliff. 227.

[7] United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 103 (1830). See also Speer v. Hiles, 67 Wis. 363 (1886), cases.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 37: 1 Hale, P. C. 615.

[9] United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 226 (1869).

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 37; 14 R. I. 283.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 36-40. See also State v. Davis, 14 R. I. 283 (1883).

[3] United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 226-31 (1869), cases, Clifford, J. See also 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 229.

more than two thousand dollars, and be imprisoned at hard labor not more than two years;[1] and for stealing any letter, or other mail matter, or inclosure therein, not more than five years imprisonment and one thousand dollars fine.[2] Accessaries to murder, robbery or other piracy upon the seas, shall suffer death.[3]

"An accessary is he who stands by, and aids, abets, or assists, or who, not being present, aiding, abetting, or assisting, hath advised, encouraged, aided or abetted the perpetration of the crime. He who thus aids, abets, assists, advises or encourages shall be considered as principal and punished accordingly. Every such accessary, when a crime is committed within or without this State by his aid or procurement in this State, may be indicted and convicted at the same time as the principal, or before, or after his conviction, and whether the principal is convicted or amenable to justice, or not, and punished as principal."[4]

See ABET; ACCOMPLICE; AID, 1; ANARCHISTS' CASE; DECOY; HUSBAND; PRESENCE; PRINCIPAL, 5.

ACCESSIO. L. Increase; accession, q. v.

Accessio cedit principali. Increase goes with the principal.

Any addition belongs to the owner of the principal object. See ACCESSORIUM.

ACCESSION. Addition, increase; augmentation. See ACCESSIO.

Specifically, the right to all that which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable, and the right to that which is united to it, either naturally or artificially.[5]

The fruits of the earth, produced naturally or by human industry, the increase of animals, new species of articles made by one person out of the materials of another, and increments to land, are embraced within the definition.[6]

The doctrine of property arising from accession is grounded on the right of occupancy. By the Roman law, if any corporeal substance received an accession by natural or artificial means, the original owner of the thing, by virtue of his right of possession, was entitled to the thing in its improved state; but if the thing itself became changed into a different species, as by making wine out of another's grapes, it belonged to the new operator, who was only to make satisfaction to the former proprietor for the materials so converted. These doctrines have since been confirmed by the courts.[8]

The rule is that the accession goes with the principal thing.[7]

See ACCESSORIUM; ACCESSORY; ACCRETION; INCIDENT; PARTUS. Compare CONFUSION, Of goods.

[1] R. S. §§ 5533, 5473.
[2] R. S. §§ 5535, 5467, 5469, 5471.
[3] R. S. §§ 5323-24.
[4] Ill. Rev. St., Cothran's ed., p. 506, cases. On casual connection, see 20 Cent. Law J. 3-6 (1885), cases.
[5] [3 Kent, 360.
[6] 2 Bl. Com. 405.
[7] 2 Kent, 360.

ACCESSORIUM. L. An accessory — thing; the incident.

Accessorium sequitur principale, or principalem, or naturam sui principalis. The accessory follows the principal thing, or the principal, or the nature of the principal.

The incident follows the principal. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.[1] See ACCESSION.

ACCESSORIUS. L. An accessary; an assistant.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An assistant follows the character of his chief.

An accessary follows the nature of his principal — in treason and misdemeanors: he cannot be guilty of a higher degree of crime.[2] See further ACCESSARY.

ACCESSORY.[3] 1. Accompanying; incidental; subservient; appurtenant: as, an accessory contract or obligation, qq. v.

2. Whatever is connected as an incident or subordinate thing to another as the principal. See ACCESSION.

3. An accessary, q. v.

Accessorial. Going with some other as the chief or more important thing: as, an offense of an accessorial nature,[4] an accessorial service.[5]

ACCIDENT. See ACCIDERE.

An event or occurrence which happens unexpectedly, from the uncontrollable operations of nature alone, and without human agency; or an event resulting undesignedly and unexpectedly from human agency alone, or from the joint operation of both.[6]

An event from an unknown cause, or an unusual and unexpected event from a known cause; chance, casualty.[7]

In equity, includes not only inevitable casualties and such as are caused by the act of God, but also those that arise from unforeseen occurrences, misfortunes, losses, and acts or omissions of other persons, without the fault, negligence, or misconduct of the party.[8] See MISTAKE; RELIEF, 2.

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 11, 36, 176; Broom, Max. 497.
[2] See 3 Inst. 139; 4 Bl. Com. 36; Broom, Max. 497.
[3] Ac-ces'-sory,— Webster.
[4] 12 Wheat. 476; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 294.
[5] 2 F. R. 478.
[6] Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 85 (1864), Butler, J.
[7] Crutchfield v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 76 N. C. 320 (1877), Reade, J.
[8] Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 198 (1868), Park, J.

Avoidable, unavoidable, and inevitable accident. Accidents are: (1) Such as are "inevitable" or absolutely unavoidable, because effected or influenced by the uncontrollable operations of nature. (2) Such as result from human agency alone, but are "unavoidable" under the circumstances. (3) Such as are "avoidable," because, in a given case, the act was not called for by any duty or necessity, and the injury resulted from the want of that extraordinary care which the law reasonably requires of one doing such a lawful act, or because the accident was the result of actual negligence or folly, and might, with reasonable care adapted to the emergency, have been avoided.

"Unavoidable accident" does not mean an accident which it is physically impossible in the nature of the things to prevent; but an accident not occasioned in any degree, remotely or directly, by the want of such care or skill as the law holds every man bound to exercise.[1]

No one is responsible for that which is merely the act of God or "inevitable accident." But when human agency is combined with it and neglect occurs in the employment of such agency, a liability for damages results from the neglect.[2]

In maritime law, "inevitable accident" is a relative term, to be construed not absolutely, but reasonably with regard to the circumstances of each case. In that light it signifies an occurrence which the party charged with the collision could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill; as, a collision resulting from the darkness of the night.[3]

"Unavoidable accidents or dangers," in a bill of lading, mean such accidents as are unavoidable by the carrier. To avail himself of such as an exception to his liability he must prove their existence, and clearly show that there was no default on his part.[4]

Where a collision occurs exclusively from natural causes, the loss must rest where it falls, on the principle that no one is responsible for such an accident. . . . It is only where a disaster happens from natural causes, and without negligence or fault on either side, that "inevitable accident" as a defense can be admitted — a collision which occurs where both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident.[5]

"Inevitable accident," within the meaning of the maritime law, is where a vessel is pursuing a lawful avocation in a lawful manner, using proper precaution against danger, and an accident occurs.[6]

When a casualty occurs, which might have been prevented by the use of known and proper means, it is not "inevitable."[7] See further ACT, Of God; COLLISION, 2.

Accidents in insurance law. In a policy insuring a person "against death or injury by accident" it is difficult to define "accident" so as to draw with perfect accuracy a line between injury or death from accident, and from natural causes. But in the term, thus used, some violence, casualty, or vis major, is necessarily involved.[8]

Disease produced by the action of a known cause cannot be considered as "accidental" — unless, for example, exposure is brought about by circumstances which may give it the character of accident. In one sense, disease or death through the direct effect of a known natural cause may be said to be accidental, inasmuch as it is uncertain beforehand whether the effect will ensue in any particular case. Yet diseases arising from malaria or infection have always been considered, not as accidental, but as proceeding from natural causes. Sunstroke arises from a natural cause, although it implies exposure to the sun.[9]

A large proportion of the events called accidents happen through some carelessness of the party injured. Thus, men are injured by the careless use of fire-arms, of explosives, of machinery, etc., where a little greater care on their part would have prevented it. Yet such injuries, having been unexpected, and not caused intentionally, are always called accidents, and properly so. . . . An accident may happen from an unknown, or be an unusual result of a known cause, and therefore unexpected; as where a person is injured in passing from the platform of a railway depot to a car in motion.[10]

Death by accident means death from any unexpected event which happens as by

---

1 Story, Eq. § 78; Bisp. Eq. § 174; Pom. Eq. § 823; 17 F. R. 616.

[1] [Dygert v. Bradley, 8 Wend. 473 (1832).

[2] Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 202 (1881), cases.

[3] The Morning Light, 2 Wall. 560-61 (1864), cases, Clifford, J.

[4] Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 378-86 (1861), cases, Lowrie, C. J.

[5] Union Steamship Co. v. N. Y. & Va. Steamship Co., 24 How. 313 (1860), cases, Clifford, J.

[6] The Grace Girdler, 7 Wall. 203 (1868), cases, Swayne, J. See also Stewart v. Ship Austria, 7 Saw. 437 (1882); s. c. 14 F. R. 800.

[7] Ladd v. Foster, 31 F. R. 827 (1887).

[8] Sinclair v. Maritime Passengers Assur. Co., 107 E. C. L. 484 (1861), Cockburn, C. J.

[9] Schneider v. Provident Life Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 29-31 (1869), Paine, J.

chance, or which does not take place according to the usual course of things.[1]

When the object of a company is to insure against bodily injuries produced by external, violent, and accidental means, all combined, there can be no recovery where an assured innocently drank poison.[2]

Within a policy against injury or death from "external, violent, and accidental means," excepting injury or death from "poison," a recovery was had for death from poison absorbed into the system by handling hides.[3] See POISON.

A policy against "bodily injuries, effected through external, accidental, and violent means," occasioning death or complete disability to do business, providing that "this insurance shall not extend to death or disability caused by bodily infirmities or disease, by suicide, or self-inflicted injuries," — covers a death by hanging one's self while insane.[4] See SUICIDE.

The burden of proof rests upon the insurer to show that the assured did not use the required degree of 'diligence for his personal safety.' . . . The use of the word "accidental" will not prevent recovery for injuries to which the negligence of the assured contributed.[5]

Within the meaning of the rules of a beneficial society, an "accident" has its usual signification of an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation.[6]

In this sense it includes an injury received by one in a common affray, when no fault on his part is shown.[6]

A "railway accident" is any accident having its essence in the peculiarities or properties of railway traveling;[7] an accident attributable to the fact that the injured party is a passenger on the railway, and arising out of an act immediately connected with his being such a passenger.[8]

See CASUALTY; CAUSE, 1, Proximate; CONVEYANCE, 1; INJURY; NEGLIGENCE; RES, Perit, etc.

[1] North American Life, &c. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 51 (1871), Williams, J. Approved, Bacon v. Accident Association, 44 Hun, 607, infra.

[2] Pollock v. United States Mut. Accident Association, 102 Pa. 234 (1883).

[3] Bacon v. United States Mut. Accident Association, 44 Hun, 599 (1887), cases.

[4] Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 531–32 (1887), cases, Gray, J.

[5] Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 575 (1887), cases; s. c., 36 Alb. Law J. 127. As to "total disability," see Saveland v. Fidelity & Casualty Ins. Co., 67 Wis. 176 (1886).

[6] Supreme Council of Chosen Friends v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 140 (1884), Zollars, J.

[7] Theobald v. Railway Passenger Assur. Co., 26 E. L. & Eq. 437 (1854), Alderson, B.

[8] Ibid. 440, Pollock, C. B.

That accidents are not crimes, see 21 Cent. Law J. 264–70 (1885), cases.

ACCIDERE. L. To fall upon: to come to, arrive at; to come to hand; to fall out, come to pass, happen.

Quando acciderint. When they (assets) come to hand.

Where an executor or an administrator pleads plene administravit, the plaintiff may pray judgment of assets quando acciderint, or traverse the plea.[1]

ACCOMMODATION. Convenience, favor, benefit. An engagement made as a favor to another, and without consideration; something done to oblige another; as, a loan of money or credit.

Accommodation paper. A loan of the maker's credit, without restriction as to the manner of its use, by means of a bill of exchange or a promissory note, and by making, accepting, or indorsing the same, as the case may be.

A payee may use such instrument, as the name imports, for his own benefit, in any manner he may judge best calculated to advance his interests. Thus, he may pay an existing debt with it, sell or discount it, or pledge it as collateral security.

A holder for value may recover, though he knew that no consideration passed between the parties to the paper; if otherwise, the purpose of the paper would be defeated. But the want of a consideration is a good defense as against the party accommodated.[2]

Being out of the regular course of business, a partner, unauthorized, may not thus loan the name of his firm.[3] See ACCOMMODATUM.

ACCOMMODATUM. L. A loan for use without pay, the thing to be restored in specie.

A species of bailment, q. v. The same as commodatum.[4]

ACCOMPLICE.[5] One who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime, whether as principal or as an accessary. . . . One of many equally concerned in a felony, the term being applied to those who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals for the furtherance of justice.[6]

[1] See 1 Pet. C. C. 442, n; 67 Ga. 49; 19 S. C. 251.

[2] Appleton v. Donaldson, 3 Pa. 386 (1846); Lord v. Ocean Bank, 20 id. 396 (1853), Black, C. J.; Moore v. Baird, 30 id. 139 (1858); Dunn v. Weston, 71 Me. 283 (1880), Appleton, C. J.; 109 U. S. 667; 55 Pa. 75; 3 Kent, 42, 86; Byles, Bills, 131–32, note by Sharswood.

[3] 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 272; 1 Pars. N. & B. 259; 1 Bates, Partn. § 349, cases.

[4] 2 Kent, 573.

[5] F. accomplic, complice, a confederate: L. complicem, folded with, interwoven; involved.

[6] Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 158 (1868), Breese, C. J. And see People v. Smith, 28 Hun, 627 (1883), Daniels, J.; Cook v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 101 (1883), White, P. J.; ib. 591.

One who in any manner participates in the criminality of an act, either as a principal or an accessary.[1]

One who knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent with the principal offender unites in the commission of a crime.[2]

Whether to allow an accomplice, who has turned state's evidence, a separate trial, or to enter a nolle prosequi and admit him as a witness, is discretionary with the court. He is serviceable as a witness until sentenced. To bring the chief offender to justice justifies the practice. Accomplices never corroborate each other; but an informer is not subject to this rule;[3] and the rule is not applicable to civil issues.[4]

The corroboration ought to be as to some fact the truth or falsehood of which goes to prove or disprove the charge.[5] But the testimony of a feigned accomplice does not need corroboration. Whether or not one is a feigned accomplice is for the jury.[6]

Accomplices, not previously convicted of an infamous crime, when separately tried, are competent witnesses for or against each other; and the universal usage is that such a party, if called and examined by the public prosecutor on the trial of his associates in guilt, will not be prosecuted for the same offense, provided it appears that he acted in good faith and that he testified fully and fairly. But it is equally clear that he cannot plead such fact in bar of an indictment against him, nor avail himself of it upon his trial, for it is merely an equitable title to the mercy of the executive, subject to the conditions stated, and can only come before the court by way of application to put off the trial in order to give the prisoner time to apply to the executive for that purpose. Some of the elements of the usage had their origin in the ancient practice of approvement. . . . It is regarded as the province of the public prosecutor to determine whether or not the accomplice shall be examined for the state. In order to acquire the information necessary to determine the question, the prosecutor will grant the accomplice an interview, with the understanding that any communication he may make will be strictly confidential. Interviews are for mutual explanation, and so do not absolutely commit either party; but if the accomplice is subsequently called and examined, he is entitled to a recommendation for executive clemency. The accomplice may be pardoned prior to conviction, or the public prosecutor may nol. pros. the indictment, or advise the prisoner to plead guilty with the right to retract and plead to the merits if his application for pardon shall be unsuccessful. Where attempt is made to put him to trial in spite of his equitable right to a pardon, the prisoner may move that the trial be postponed, supporting his motion by his own affidavit, when the court may insist to be informed of all the circumstances; or the court may order that he be acquitted at the trial.[7]

See ACCESSARY; APPROVE, 5; PARDON; PARTICEPS.

ACCORD.[8] Agreement; satisfaction.

A satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured.[9]

An agreement, in the case of a contract, where the creditor agrees to accept some other thing in lieu of that which is contracted or promised to be done.[4]

Used in the plea "accord and satisfaction."

When performed, constitutes a bar to all actions.

The money or property must be offered in satisfaction of the claim, and upon the condition that if accepted it is a satisfaction, and the claimant must be made to understand that he takes it subject to such condition.[9]

The bar rests on the agreement and not on the mere reception of property; for whatever amount may have been received, the right of action will not be extinguished, unless it was agreed that the property should be received in satisfaction of the injury. An accord by parol, or by writing not under seal, cannot be set up as a bar to an action of debt founded on a record, or to a judgment in the nature of a record, nor to a debt by specialty, where the debt arises upon the deed; but it may be interposed as a bar to a claim for damages founded upon the breach of a specialty.[4]

Furthermore, an accord must be legal, reasonable, advantageous to the creditor, certain, complete, and be made by the debtor. It may proceed from a partner or a joint wrong-doer for him and his associates, and may be accepted by one co-plaintiff. When a definite sum of money is agreed upon, a less sum is not considered a satisfaction, unless there is an additional benefit.[7]

The technical rule, that an unsealed agreement to accept a smaller sum than the entire debt does not bind the creditor, has been falling into disfavor. It is now held that where a new element enters into the

[1] Polk v. State, 36 Ark. 126 (1880), Eakin, J. See too Russ. Crimes, 26; 4 Bl. Com. 34, 331.

[2] People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 20 (1886): Whart. Cr. Ev. § 440.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 379.

[4] Kalckhoff v. Zoehrlaut, 43 Wis. 379 (1877). See 71 N. Y. 137.

[5] State v. Miller, 97 N. C. 488 (1887); Commonwealth v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. 399 (1839), cases; State v. Maney, 54 Conn. 190 (1886); People v. Flath, 100 N. Y. 593 (1886).

[6] People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 19-20 (1886); 30 id. 316.

[7] Whiskey Cases (United States v. Ford), 99 U. S. 595, 599-606 (1878), cases, Clifford, J. See also Rex v. Rudd, 1 Cowp. 336 (1775), Mansfield, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Knapp, 10 Pick. 492-94 (1830); Commonwealth v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 429-45 (1879), cases, Gray, C. J.; State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 16-22 (1879), cases; Oliver v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 590 (1883); 66 Ga. 346; 133 Mass. 402.

[8] F. accorder, to agree.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 15-16.

[4] Way v. Russell, 33 F. R. 7 (1887): 1 Swift's Dig. 499; 24 Conn. 613; 75 N. Y. 574.

[9] Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 206 (1861); Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 462 (1876).

[9] Mitchell v. Hawley, 4 Denio, 417-18 (1847).

[7] See Cumber v. Wane, 1 Sm. L. C. 604 [*445], cases; 20 Wall. 309; 40 Ark. 184; 6 Col. 162; 44 Conn. 541; 87 Ind. 256; 88 id. 45; 29 Minn. 254-55; 88 Pa. 147; 1 Wash. T. 328; 2 Pars. Contr. 193; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 28.

agreement of compromise, the entire debt is satisfied; as, for example, a promise to pay at an earlier day, at a different place, in a different thing, or a promise by a new party.[1]

ACCORDING. Compare BY, 3; SECUNDUM.

Where a mortgage is conditioned for the payment of money "according to" the tenor of a note, to secure which the mortgage is given, the terms of the note are viewed as imported into the mortgage.[2] See VERBUM, Verba illata, etc.

According to law. After the ending of a life estate, land was to go to the male heir nearest the testator "according to law." Held, that the estate was to descend as the law would have given it to the heir.[3]

Since, after a verdict and judgment, a reasonable intendment will be made, on error, in favor of a complaint which shows a substantial cause of action, an averment that an affidavit was made "according to law" will be held to mean that it was made in the time required by law.[4]

In 1809 a testator devised land to his son for life, and then to his children "according to law." The testator died in 1812, and the son in 1860 leaving children. Held, that the children were to take equally as the law stood in 1860, when the distribution was to be made.[5]

Where, in an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the docket entry showed that bail had been given "according to the act of assembly," the recognizance was held to be sufficient.[6]

A bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of an office "according to law," embraces duties required by laws in force during the term of the officer, whether enacted before or after the execution of the bond.[7]

An administrator is to administer "according to law," that is, to fulfil his functions, to perform all his duties.[8]

See DULY; LAWFUL; VALID; VOID.

ACCOUNT.[9] 1. The primary idea is, some matter of debt and credit, or demand in the nature of debt and credit, between parties. It implies that one is responsible to another for moneys or other things, either on the score of contract or of some fiduciary relation, of a public or private nature, created by law or otherwise.[10]

Some matter of debt and credit, or of a demand in the nature of debt and credit, between parties, arising out of contract, or of a fiduciary relation, or some duty imposed by law.[1]

Current or running account. An account [illegible] which items are being added at intervals; an account open to further charges.

First account; partial account; final account. Designate the number or completeness of accounts [illegible]ted to a court for confirmation.

Mutual accounts. Those having original charges by persons against each other; accounts kept between merchants.

Open account. An account with one or more items unsettled; also, an account with dealings still continuing.

Account rendered. An account exhibiting the creditor's demand delivered to the debtor — as a basis for settlement.

Account stated. An account rendered by the creditor and assented to by the debtor.

An account to be "continuous" must be without break or interruption. "Open" means not closed; "current," running, passing, a connected series. A "continuous, open, current account" is an account which is not interrupted or broken, not closed by settlement or otherwise; a running, connected series of transactions.[2]

Death "closes" accounts in one sense, that is, there can be no further additions on either side, but they still remain "open" for adjustment and set-off, which is not the case with an account "stated;" for that supposes a rendering of the account by the party who is the creditor, with a balance struck, and assent to that balance, expressed or implied.[3]

In the statute of limitations, the exception in favor of "merchants' accounts" applies to actions of assumpsit as well as of account. It extends to all accounts "current" which concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant. An account "closed" by the cessation of dealings is not an account "stated."[4]

An "account concerning the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant" is not barred by the statute of limitations, though none of the items are within six years after the action was brought.

[1] Seymour v. Goodrich, 80 Va. 304-5 (1885), cases; Bish. Contr. § 50, cases. On paying a part for the whole debt, see 24 Cent. Law J. 175 (1887).

[2] Scheibe v. Kennedy, 64 Wis. 569 (1885).

[3] McIntyre v. Ramsey, 23 Pa. 319 (1854).

[4] McElhaney v. Gilleland, 30 Ala. 183, 188 (1857).

[5] Van Tilburgh v. Hollingshead, 14 N. J. E. 32 (1861).

[6] Harvey v. Beach, 38 Pa. 500 (1861).

[7] Dawson v. State, 38 Ohio St. 3 (1882). See also 18 N. Y. 115; 32 Minn. 162.

[8] Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 162 (1884).

[9] F. aconter, acompter: L. ad-con-putare, to reckon up together. See COMPUTARE.

[10] Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. 217 (1840), Shaw, C. J. Approved, Stringham v. Supervisors, 24 Wis. 598 (1869); McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 574 (1870); McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 367 (1883).

[1] Nelson v. Posey County, 105 Ind. 288 (1885), Mitchell, J.; Watson v. Penn, 108 id. 25 (1886).

[2] Tucker v. Quimby, 37 Iowa, 19 (1873), Miller, J.

[3] Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. 192 (1829), Parker, C. J.; Volkening v. DeGraaf, 81 N. Y. 270-71 (1880); McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 368-69 (1883).

[4] Mandeville v. Wilson, 5 Cranch, 18 (1809), Marshall, C. J.

Whether an account concerns "the trade of merchandise" is a fact for the jury. Such accounts include accounts for merchandise bought and sold, and demands for money growing out of the trade of merchandise.[1]

Accounts are "mutual" where each party makes charges against the other in his books, for property sold, services rendered, money advanced, etc., as, for rent due.[2]

The term "mutual accounts" is used in statutes of limitations, declaring that, when suit is founded upon any such account, the time for suing may be reckoned from the last item proved. To constitute such account there must have been reciprocal demands between the parties. An account where there are no credits except payments is not such a mutual account.[3]

In Massachusetts, to a "mutual and open account current" there must be a mutual agreement, express or implied, that the items of the account upon one side and the other are to be set against each other. There must be one account upon which the items upon either side belong, and upon which they operate to extinguish each other pro tanto, so that the balance upon either side is the debt between the parties.[4]

A "mutual account" is one based on a course of dealing wherein each party has given credit to the other, on the faith of indebtedness to him. If the items on one side are mere payments on the indebtedness to the other, the account is not mutual. Whether or not an account is a mutual account is a question of fact. The doctrine that the statute of limitations does not begin to run against either party until the last just item is obtained on either side, does not rest on the notion that every credit in favor of one is an admission by him of indebtedness to the other, or a new promise to pay, but upon a mutual understanding, either express or implied from the conduct of the parties, that they will continue to credit each other until, at least, one desires to terminate the course of confidential dealing, and that the balance will then be ascertained, become then due, and be paid by the one finally indebted. Either party may terminate the mutual understanding at any time by actual payment of the balance, by stating the account for that purpose, by demanding a settlement privately, by suit, or by any other act which evinces his determination to deal no longer that way. Without proof of its termination, the law presumes that such a mutual understanding, once proved or admitted, runs through all the dealings of the parties until the complete bar of the statute has attached.[5]

A "partial account" implies that nothing is settled by it, but the matters constituting the items in question in the statement of it.[1]

An "account rendered" and not objected to within a reasonable time is to be regarded as admitted, by the party charged, to be prima facie correct. If certain items are objected to, within reasonable time, and others not, the latter are to be regarded as covered by such an admission. When the facts are clear, what is a reasonable time is a matter of law; where the proofs are conflicting, it is a mixed one of law and fact. Between merchants at home, an account presented, and remaining unobjected to after the lapse of several posts, is, ordinarily, by acquiescence, a stated account. The principle is that the silence of a party to whom an account is sent, warrants the inference of an admission of its correctness. This inference is more or less strong according to circumstances. It may be repelled by showing facts which are inconsistent with it, as that the party was absent from home, suffering from illness, or expected shortly to see the other party, and preferred and intended to make his objections in person.[2]

Unless objected to within a reasonable time an account rendered becomes an account stated, and cannot be impeached except for fraud or mistake. What constitutes reasonable time is a question of law.[3]

A "running account" refers to cases of reciprocity and mutuality of dealings between parties, and not to cases where the items are all on one side.[4]

That an account is "settled" is only prima facie evidence of its correctness. It may be impeached by proof of unfairness, or mistake, in law or in fact; and if it be confined to particular items it concludes nothing in relation to other items not stated.[5]

Merely rendering an account does not make it "stated." If the other party receives the account, admits the correctness of the items, claims the balance, or offers to pay it, it becomes a stated account.[6]

In stating an account two things are necessary: That there be a mutual examination of each other's items; and, that there be a mutual agreement as to the correctness of the allowance and disallowance of the respective claims, and of the balance, on final adjustment. Yet it is not necessary to show such examination and agreement: these may be implied from circumstances. An omission to object to the account rendered, raises merely an inference that the party is satisfied with it. Any circumstances rebutting such inference, or calculated to raise a counter inference, are competent evidence as to the actual intention of the parties.[7]

[1] Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. 192 (1829), Parker, C. J.; Volkening v. DeGraaf, 81 N. Y. 270–71 (1880); McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 368–69 (1883).

[2] Edmonstone v. Thomson, 15 Wend. 556 (1836), Savage, C. J.; Ross v. Ross, 6 Hun, 81 (1875), cases; Pratt v. Runyon, 12 Ind. 177 (1859).

[3] Traylor v. Sonora Mining Co., 17 Cal. 596 (1861); id. 844; 25 id. 122; 1 Ga. 228; 12 Ind. 174; 51 Me. 104; 3 Pars. Contr. 86.

[4] Eldridge v. Smith, 144 Mass. 36 (1887), Morton, C. J.; Pub. Sts. c. 197, § 8.

[5] Gunn v. Gunn, 74 Ga. 555, 557–68 (1885), cases, Clarke, J.

[1] Leslie's Appeal, 63 Pa. 386 (1869); 39 id. 186.

[2] Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. 131 (1869), Swayne, J. See also 1 Story, Eq. §§ 526, 520; 18 N. Y. 289.

[3] Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 334 (1882), cases.

[4] Leonard v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 385 (1883).

[5] Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. 256 (1826), Washington, J.; Hager v. Thomson, 1 Black, 93 (1861).

[6] Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. 335 (1838), Barbour, J.; Zacarino v. Pallotti, 49 Conn. 38 (1881).

[7] Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 288, 298 (1858); 1 Story, Eq. §§ 526–28; 13 Bradw. 43; 58 N. H. 250; 39 Tex. 118, 389.

Without impugning the rule that an account rendered which has become an account stated is open to correction for fraud or mistake, other principles come into operation, where a party to a stated account, who is under a duty, from the usages of business or otherwise, to examine it within a reasonable time after having an opportunity to do so, and give timely notice of his objections thereto, neglects to make such examination, or to have it made, in good faith, by another; by reason of which negligence, the other party, relying upon the account as having been acquiesced in or approved, has failed to take steps for his protection which he could and would have taken had such notice been given. In other words, parties to a stated account may be estopped by their conduct from questioning its conclusiveness.[1]

A complex and intricate account is an unfit subject for examination in court, and ought always to be referred to a commissioner for report, with a view to the entry of a final decree by the court.[2]

It is the difficulty of properly adjusting accounts which confers jurisdiction in equity upon them, without much regard to their singleness or mutuality.[3]

A mistake in one item of an account may be corrected without opening up the whole account, unless the plaintiff can show error or fraud in the settlement as to other items.[4]

Accountable. Liable to demand for the exhibition of an account; under obligation to disclose fully the circumstances of a transaction involving the investment or expenditure of trust funds.

Accountable receipt. A written acknowledgment of the receipt, by the maker of it, of money or other personal property, coupled with a promise or obligation to account for or pay to some person the whole or some part thereof.[5]

Such receipt for money may be in legal effect, though not in form, a promissory note.[6]

[1] Leather Manufacturers' Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 107 (1886), Harlan, J. A depositor in the bank sent his check-book to be written up and received it back with entries of credits and debits and his paid checks as vouchers, but, from delay in examining the book and checks, failed to discover that his confidential clerk had raised certain checks to the amount of $10,000, in time to enable the bank to indemnify itself. See also Swayze v. Swayze, 37 N. J. E. 190 (1883), cases.

See generally, as to account stated, 22 Cent. Law J. 76 (1886), cases.

[2] Dubourg v. United States, 7 Pet. 626 (1833); Tillar v. Cook, 77 Va. 479-81 (1883); 13 Bradw. 120; 37 N. J. E. 157, 564, 571; 94 N. Y. 80-81; 17 F. R. 19, 21, cases.

[3] State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 433-36 (1886), cases.

[4] Carpenter v. Kent, 101 N. Y. 594 (1886); 2 Barb. 586.

[5] State v. Riebe, 27 Minn. 317 (1880), Gilfillan, C. J.; Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 96, § 1. And see Mason v. Aldrich, 36 id. 284 (1886), cases; Commonwealth v. Talbot, 2 Allen, 161 (1861); Commonwealth v. Lawless, 101 Mass. 32 (1869).

Accountant. One who states in writing the nature, condition, and value of trust property committed to his charge; also, one skilled in stating accounts.

Account-render. An action at law, in fiduciary matters, wherein a jury settles disputed items.

If no account has been made, the remedy is by writ of account de computo: commanding the defendant to render a just account to the plaintiff, or show cause contra. In this there are two judgments for the plaintiff: that the defendant do account (quod computet) before an auditor; and, then, that he pay the plaintiff whatever he is found in arrears. . . . The most ready and effectual way to settle matters of account is by a bill in a court of equity, where a discovery may be had on the defendant's oath. Wherefore, actions of account, to compel a man to bring in and settle his account, are now seldom used; though, when an account is once stated, nothing is more common than an action upon the implied assumpsit to pay the balance. . . . For want of discovery at law, the courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with other courts in all matters of account. As incident to accounts, they take concurrent cognizance of the administration of personal assets, and consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. They also take concurrent jurisdiction of all dealings in partnership, and many other mercantile transactions; also of bailiffs, receivers, agents, etc.[1]

The action of account-render is founded upon contract, and the engagement between partners that each shall account to every other for himself, and not for his copartner. It is a several liability; no two are responsible to another jointly.[2]

Where mutual accounts are intricate, a bill in equity is preferable.[3] Compare Account, Action of.

Account-book; book-account. See BOOK, Account.

Action of account. Action of account-render, q. v.

Proceeds upon the ground that the defendant rightfully had money for some purpose; and he cannot be in default until he has refused or neglected to account after being called upon. The judgments are: that the defendant account with the plaintiff; after accounting, that he pay him the balance found due.[4]

Place to our account. An order [superfluous] on a bill or draft, that the drawee charge the maker with the amount, after payment.[5]

See further AUDIT; BALANCE; CHARGE; DEMAND; REST, 2; SETTLE, 3; VOUCHER; ADMINISTRATOR; AGENT;

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 164, 437. See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 449-59.

[2] Portsmouth v. Donaldson, 32 Pa. 204 (1858), Strong, J.

[3] Dubourg v. United States, 7 Pet. 625 (1833).

[4] Travers v. Dyer, 16 Blatch. 181 (1879); 3 Bl. Com. 164; 2 Bates, Partn. § 899, cases.

[5] Byles, Bills, 91.

ASSIGNEE; EXECUTOR; GUARDIAN; PARTNERSHIP; PASS; RECEIPT; MISTAKE; PAYMENT; SALE; TRUST, 1.

2. The claim, demand, or right of action, for such balance as may be found to be due upon an account current or closed; as, an account in bank, to assign an account.

3. Interest, benefit, behalf: as, in saying that an agent (q. v.) acts upon account of his principal; a policy issued upon account of whom it may concern (q. v.); a collection (q. v.) made for the account of another person.

4. Reason, ground, consideration. See CONDITION.

ACCRESCERE. L. To grow to, come by increase, add to: to accrue, attach. See ACTIO, Non accrevit; JUS, Accrescendi.

ACCRETION. A mode of acquiring title to realty, where portions of the soil are added by gradual deposit, through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of the owner.[1] See ACCRESCERE.

The deposit itself is ordinarily called alluvion, q. v. Compare AVULSION.

At common law, imperceptible increase to land on the bank of a river by alluvial formations, occasioned by the washing up of the sand or earth, or by dereliction, as where the river shrinks back below the usual water-mark.[2]

When by addition, it should be so gradual that no one can see how much is added each moment of time.[3]

Until new land is made or emerges, there can be no "accretion" to or increase of the land of which it shall constitute a part. The term, importing an addition of what possesses the characteristics of land, cannot, therefore, be construed to include oysters planted opposite to land.[3]

The rule governing additions made to land bounded by a river, lake, or sea, has been much discussed and variously settled by usage and positive law. Almost all jurists and legislators, however, have agreed that the owner of the land, thus bounded, is entitled to these additions. By some, the rule has been vindicated on the principle of natural justice that he who sustains the burden of losses and of repairs, imposed by the contiguity of waters, ought to receive whatever benefits they may bring by accretion; by others, it is derived from the principle of public policy, that it is the interest of the community that all land should have an owner, and most convenient, that insensible additions to the shore should follow the title to the shore itself.[4]

It is generally conceded that the riparian title attaches to subsequent accretions to the land affected by the gradual and imperceptible operations of natural causes. But whether it attaches to land reclaimed by artificial means from the bed of the river, or to sudden accretions produced by unusual floods, is a question each State decides for itself. By the common law, such additions to the land on tide or navigable waters belong to the crown.[1]

An aerolite belongs to the owner of the fee of the land upon which it falls. Therefore, a pedestrian upon a highway who first discovers such stone cannot claim title to it, the highway being a mere easement for travel.[2]

ACCROACH.[3] To attempt, or assume, to exercise royal power.[4]

ACCRUE.[5] 1. To be or become added to; to fall due.

Accrued. Due and payable.

Accruing. Falling due; becoming but not yet due.

As, accrued or accruing — dividend, interest, pension, rent.

Accruing costs are such costs as become due and are created after judgment; as, the costs of an execution.[6]

2. To attach, arise, come into existence, commence, enure.

Benefits, and a right or cause of action, are said to accrue at a certain time.[7] See LIMITATION, 3.

Accruer, clause of. A clause in a gift to tenants in common, that upon the death of one tenant his share shall go to the survivor.

Extends only to the original, not to accrued shares, unless (as is ordinarily the case) it is otherwise expressly stated.

ACCUMULATION.[8] A gathering in quantity; also, the sums or other things so gathered.

Accumulative. Heaping up; additional; cumulative, q. v.

At common law, the utmost length of time allowed for the contingency of an executory devise to happen in was that of a life or lives in being and one-and-twenty years afterward.[9]

Under this rule, one Peter Thelluson, in 1796, de-

---

[1] [3 Washb. R. P. 451. See also 4 Kent, 428; 34 La. An. 838.

[2] [Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Neb. 250 (1876), Gantt, J.

[3] Hess v. Muir, 65 Md. 597 (1886), Ritchie, J.

[4] Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. 57 (1864), Chase, C. J. See also New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. 717 (1836); Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. 156 (1855); 2 Bl. Com. 261-62.

[1] Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 337 (1876), Bradley, J.; Steers v. City of Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 56 (1885), cases.

[2] Maas v. Amana Society, Ill. (1877): 16 Alb. L. J. 76; 18 Irish Law T. 381.

[3] F. accrocher, to draw to one's self: croc, a hook.

[4] See 4 Bl. Com. 76; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 246.

[5] F. accreu: L. accrescere, q. v.

[6] 87 Ind. 254; 91 Ill. 95.

[7] 98 U. S. 476; 17 F. R. 873; 1 Story, Eq. § 212.

[8] L. ad-cumulare, to amass: cumulus, a heap.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 174; 2 Kent, 353.

vised his fortune to trustees, for accumulation during the lives of three sons and of their sons, and during the life of the survivor. At the death of this last survivor the fund was to be divided into three shares — one share for the eldest male lineal descendant of each of his three sons; upon failure of such descendant, the share to go to the descendants of the other sons. The testator left three sons and four grandsons living, and twin sons born soon after his death. It was found that at the death of these nine persons the fund would exceed nineteen million pounds; and, upon the supposition of only one person to take and a majority of ten years, that the sum would exceed thirty-two million pounds. The will was upheld, as within the limits of the common-law rule, by the court of chancery in 1798, and by the House of Lords in 1805.[1]

By statute of 39 & 40 Geo. III (1799), c. 98, known as the Thellusson Act or the Statute of Accumulations, accumulation was forbidden beyond the life of the grantor (or testator), twenty-one years from his death, and during the minority of any person living or in ventre sa mere at his death, or during the minority of any person who, under deed or will, would, if of full age, be entitled to the income.[2]

And such also is the law in most of the States; so that directions for accumulation beyond those limitations are void.[3] See ALIENATIO, Rei; DEVISE, Executory; PERPETUITY.

ACCUSARE. L. To lay to one's charge; to accuse, q. v.

Accusare nemo se debet. No one is obliged to accuse himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. No one is bound to accuse himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere. No one is bound to betray or expose himself.

It is the privilege of a witness not to answer a question where there is real, not imaginary, danger that the answer may criminate himself.

The rule is intended to preserve the witness from temptation to commit perjury.

A husband cannot testify against his wife, or vice versa.[4] But a bankrupt must answer fully as to the disposition of his property.[5] And a member of a public corporation may be compelled to testify against the corporation.[6]

The rule has been relaxed, and a difference made between private crimes or those arising out of commerce or the private relations of society, and public crimes or those relating strictly to the general welfare of the state.[7]

See CRIMINATE; STULTIFY; TURPITUDE.

[1] Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 227–343; 11 id. 112–50.

[2] 4 Kent, 284; Will. R. P. 306.

[3] 4 Kent, 346, 271; Pray v. Hegeman, 92 N. Y. 514–15 (1883); Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 574–82 (1885), cases.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 330, 340.

[5] 3 Pars. Contr. 519.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 331. See 1 Bl. Com. 443; 4 id. 296; 107 Mass. 181; 10 N. Y. 10, 33.

[7] Whart. Max. 28; Broom, Max. 968, 970; 17 Am. Law Rev. 798.

ACCUSE. To charge with violation of law; specifically, to charge with criminal misconduct. See ACCUSARE.

Accusation. A charge that one has committed a misdemeanor or crime; also, the act of preferring such a charge.

"To accuse" is to bring a charge against one before some court or officer; and the person thus charged is "the accused."[1]

A threat to accuse of a crime does not refer to accusing by way of railing, or slander, or bearing false witness under a separate accusation made by others, but the institution or participation in the institution of a criminal charge before some one held out as competent to entertain such a charge in lawful course.[2]

See CRIME; EXAMINATION, 2; INDICTMENT; STATEMENT, 1.

ACCUSTOMED. See CUSTOM; HABIT.

Where a deed conveyed a water privilege with the power and appurtenances as they then existed, and with the right to rebuild a dam, and to pass and repass in the use of the same over the "accustomed way," it was held that the right of way must be regarded as limited to the last accustomed way.[3]

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. Owning to; avowal, admission.

1. A statement by a debtor that a claim, barred by the statute of limitations, is still a valid obligation.

Takes the case out of the statute, and revives the original cause of action.

An acknowledgment which will revive the original cause of action must be unqualified and unconditional. It must show positively that the debt is due in whole or in part. If connected with circumstances which affect the claim, or if conditional, it may amount to a new assumpsit for which the old debt is a sufficient consideration; or if it be construed to revive the original debt, that revival is conditional, and the performance of the condition, or a readiness to perform it, must be shown.[3]

A new promise, as a new cause of action, ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, and be in its terms unequivocal and determinate; and, if any conditions are annexed, they ought to be shown to be performed. If there be no express promise, but a promise to be raised by implication of law from the acknowledgment of the party, such acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified and direct admission of a subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay. If there be accompanying circumstances which repel the presumption of a promise or intention to pay; if the expressions be equivocal, vague, and indeterminate, leading to no certain conclusion, but at best to probable inferences, which may affect different minds in different ways, they ought not to go to a jury as evidence of a new promise to revive the cause of action. Any other course would open up all the mischiefs against which the statute was intended to guard innocent persons, and expose them to the dangers of being entrapped in careless conversations, and betrayed by prejudices. It may be that in this manner an honest debt may sometimes be lost, but many unfounded recoveries will be prevented.[1]

[1] People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 468–70 (1874), cases, Graves, C. J. See also Commonwealth v. Andrews, 132 Mass. 264 (1882).

[2] Ferriss v. Knowles, 41 Conn. 308 (1874).

[3] Wetzell v. Bussard, 11 Wheat. 315, 311–16 (1826), cases, Marshall, C. J.

No case has gone the length of saying that there must be an express promise to pay in terms. A clear, distinct, unequivocal acknowledgment of a debt as an existing obligation, identifying it so that there can be no mistake as to what it refers to, made to a creditor or his agent, takes a case out of the statute.[2]

"I will pay the debt as soon as possible," constitutes a new and sufficient acknowledgment.[3]

Acknowledgment does not necessarily imply words.[4] See further PROMISE, New.

2. The act of a grantor in going before a competent officer and declaring that the instrument he produces is his act and deed.[5]

Also, the official certificate that such declaration was made.

The acknowledgment or the proof which may authorize the admission of a deed to record, and the recording thereof, are provisions for the security of creditors and purchasers. They are essential to the validity of the deed as to those persons, not as to the grantor.[6]

An acknowledgment, regular on its face, makes the instrument evidence, without further proof, and fits it for being recorded. The exact words of the statute need not be followed: it is sufficient if the meaning be clearly and fully expressed.[7]

In the case of a wife, the certificate must show that she was examined separate and apart from her husband; that she was of full age; that the contents of the deed were first made known to her; and that she acted of her own free will. Otherwise, although recorded, her acknowledgment constitutes neither a record nor notice.[8]

Conveyance of the estates of married women by deed, with separate examination and acknowledgment, has taken the place of the alienation of such estates by "fine" in a court of record under the law of England. For fraud in levying a fine, the court of chancery would grant relief, as in the case of any other conveyance. And so now, her deed of conveyance does not bind her if her acknowledgment was obtained by fraud or duress, or if, by reason of infancy or insanity, she was not competent to make the contract. Statute of 18 Edw. I. (1290) enacted that if a feme covert should be a party to a fine, she was first to be examined by certain justices; and if she dissented, the fine was not to be levied. This was held to mean that the fine ought not to be received without her examination and consent; but that if it was received, neither she nor her heirs could be permitted to deny that she was examined and freely consented; for this would be contradicting the record, and tend to weaken the assurances of real property.

The object of statutes requiring the separate examination of the wife to be taken by an officer, to be certified by him in a particular form, and to be recorded in the public registry, is not only to protect her by making it the duty of such officer to ascertain and to certify that she has not executed the deed by compulsion or in ignorance of its contents, but to facilitate the conveyance of the estates of married women, and to secure and perpetuate evidence, upon which transferees may rely, that the requirements of the law have been complied with. The duty of the officer involves the exercise of judgment and discretion, and so is a judicial or quasi judicial act. The conclusion is that, except in case of fraud, his certificate, made and recorded as the statute requires, is the sole and conclusive evidence of the separate examination and acknowledgment, and that, except where fraud in procuring her execution is alleged, extrinsic evidence of the manner in which the examination was conducted is inadmissible.[1]

Whenever substance is found in a certificate, obvious clerical errors and all technical defects will be disregarded, and, in order to uphold it, the certificate will be read in connection with the instrument and in the light of surrounding circumstances.[2] See EXAMINATION, 5; NOTICE, 1.

3. Admission of a fact; confession of guilt. See CONFESSION, 2.

[1] Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 362 (1828), Story, J. See also Moore v. Bank of Columbia, 6 id. 91–94 (1832); Fort Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 163 (1884); Green v. Coos Bay Wagon Co., 23 F. R. 67 (1885), cases; Curtis v. Sacramento, 70 Cal. 414–15 (1886); Chidsey v. Powell, 91 Mo. 636 (1887).

[2] Jones v. Lantz, 68 Pa. 326 (1869), Sharswood, J.; Wolfensburger v. Young, 47 id. 517 (1864); Shaefer v. Hoffman, 113 id. 5 (1886), cases; 114 id. 358; 23 Alb. Law J. 104–5 (1881), cases.

[3] Norton v. Shepard, 48 Conn. 141 (1880), cases.

[4] Bailey v. Boyd, 59 Ind. 298 (1877).

[5] [Short v. Coulee, 28 Ill. 228 (1862), Breese, J.

[6] Lessee of Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 136 (1832).

[7] Wickersham v. Reeves, 1 Iowa, 417 (1855); Owen v. Norris, 5 Blackf. 481 (1840); Becker v. Anderson, 11 Neb. 497 (1881); Spitznagle v. Vanhessch, 13 id. 338 (1882).

[8] See Paxton v. Marshall, 18 F. R. 361, 364–68 (1883), cases; Young v. Duvall, 109 U. S. 577 (1883); McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 244–45 (1882), cases; Watson v. Michael, id. 571–73 (1883), cases; Langton v. Marshall, 59 Tex. 298 (1883); Schley v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 120 U. S. 575 (1887), citing Ill. cases; 1 Bl. Com. 444.

[1] Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 301–3 (1887), cases, Gray, J. In this case a notary had taken the acknowledgment in the statutory form, and the wife admitted that the signature was hers, but did not recollect executing the deed, and denied that it was explained to her. Held, there being no proof of fraud or duress, evidence to impeach the certificate was properly rejected. See also Davey v. Turner, 1 Dallas, *13 (1765); Lloyd v. Taylor, ib. *17 (1768); Cox v. Gill, 83 Ky. 669 (1886); Davis v. Agnew, 67 Tex. 210 (1886); Cover v. Manaway, 115 Pa. 345 (1887).

[2] King v. Merritt, Sup. Ct. Mich. (Oct. 13, 1887), cases

ACQUAINTED. Implies a mutual acquaintance; as where one swears that he is "well acquainted" with an applicant for naturalization.[1]

Having a substantial knowledge of the subject-matter; as of the paper to which a certificate is affixed.[2]

ACQUETS. See PURCHASE, 8.

ACQUIESCENCE.[3] A keeping quiet: consent inferred from silence or from failure to object, the person to be charged having knowledge of the essential facts. Tacit encouragement to an act done; assent.

Imports mere submission, not approbation; as when it is said that the board of trustees of a college acquiesced in legislation affecting their charter.[4]

Implies such knowledge of facts as will enable the party to take effectual action. One may not then rest until the rights of third persons are involved and the situation of the wrong-doer is materially changed.[5]

Where a person tacitly encourages an act to be done, he cannot afterward exercise his legal right in opposition to such consent, if this encouragement induced the other party to change his position, so that he will be pecuniarily prejudiced by the assertion of such adversary claim.[6]

See further AFFIRM, 2; ESTOPPEL; SILENCE; STALE; WAIVER.

ACQUIRE.[7] To obtain, procure: as, to acquire property, a domicil. Compare HOLD, 6.

Acquired. "In the law of descent, includes lands that come to a person in any other way than by gift, devise, or descent, from an ancestor."[8]

After-acquired. Obtained after some event or transaction: as, property acquired after an adjudication in bankruptcy, or after a judgment has been entered.

Acquisition. Procuring a thing — specifically, property; also, the property itself. See INHERIT; PURCHASE, 2, 3.

Original acquisition. When, at the moment, the thing is not another's, i. e., is acquired by first occupancy — by accession, intellectual labor, etc. Derivative acquisition. When the thing is obtained from another by his act or the act of the law; as in cases of gift, sale, forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, intestacy.[1]

The property that a bankrupt acquires, after he has devoted all his possessions to the payment of his debts, is his individually.[9]

Where one makes a deed of land as owner and subsequently acquires an outstanding title, the acquisition enures to the grantee by estoppel.[8] See under COVENANT, 1.

A judgment may not be a lien upon after-acquired land, unless specially made so, as by a scire facias or some analogous proceeding.[4]

ACQUIT. F. Exonerated, acquitted, cleared.

Autrefois acquit. Formerly acquitted. Opposed, autrefois convict. A plea in bar, that the accused has already been cleared of the charge.[8] See ACQUITTAL, Former.

ACQUITTAL. Setting free; deliverance from a charge or suspicion of guilt; the act or action of a jury in finding that a person accused of a crime is not guilty.

Acquitted. "Set free or judicially discharged from an accusation; released from a debt, duty, obligation, charge, or suspicion of guilt."[6]

Refers to both civil and criminal prosecutions.[6]

Acquittal in fact. A verdict of not guilty. Acquittal in law. A discharge by operation of law; as, where one is held as an accessary and the principal is acquitted.[7]

Former acquittal. An acquittal in a former prosecution.

When the facts constitute but one offense, though divisible into parts, a final judgment on a charge of one part bars a prosecution for another part. When the facts constitute two or more offenses wherein the lesser is necessarily involved in the greater, and the facts necessary to convict on a second prosecution would necessarily have convicted on the first, then the first judgment bars another prosecution.[8]

The greater includes the lesser crime.[6] Compare CONVICTION, Former.

---

[1] United States v. Jones, 14 Blatch. 90 (1877).

[2] Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. Ap. 106–7 (1878).

[3] L. acquiescere, to rest in or upon: quies, quiet.

[4] Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 314 (1833), Story, J.

[5] Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581 (1878), Swayne, J. See also Matthews v. Murchison, 17 F. R. 766 (1883); Ramsden v. Dyson, L. R., 1 H. L. 129 (1865).

[6] Swain v. Seamans, 9 Wall. 254, 267, 274 (1869), Clifford, J.

[7] L. acquirere, to get, obtain: quaerere, to seek.

[8] Re Millars' Wills, 2 Lea, 61 (1878); Donahue's Estate, 36 Cal. 332 (1868).

[1] [2 Kent, 358, 386.]

[2] Allen v. Ferguson, 18 Wall. 4 (1873).

[3] Irvine v. Irvine, 9 Wall. 625 (1869).

[4] See Loomis v. Davenport, &c. R. Co., 17 F. R. 305 (1882); 1 Jones, Mortg. § 157. See generally Babcock v. Jones, 15 Kan. 301 (1875), cases; 21 Cent. L. J. 500–2 (1885), cases.

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 335.

[6] Dolloway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. 400 (1841): Webster

[7] [2 Coke Inst. 364.]

[8] State v. Elder, 65 Ind. 285–86 (1879), cases; 58 N. H. 257; 4 Cr. L. M. 411.

[9] 18 Cent. Law J. 392–94 (1884), cases.

ACQUITTANCE. A written discharge from the performance of a duty; also, the writing itself.

Includes a common receipt for money paid.[1]

A receipt for damages may operate as an acquittance, when not a release.[2]

An acquittance under seal is a "release," q. v.

ACRE. Formerly, in discussing the law of real estate, for brevity, "black acre" and "white acre" were used to distinguish parcels. See ESTIMATE; MORE OR LESS.

ACT. 1. A thing done or performed; the exercise of power; an effect produced by power exerted.[3] See ACTUM.

"Act" and "intention" may mean the same as "act" alone, for act implies intention, as in the expression "death by his own act or intention."[4]

A service running through several days, as, inventorying attached goods, may be treated as one act.[5]

The law deals with the acts of men as members of society under a contract honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere: to live honorably, hurt nobody, and give to every one his due.[6]

Acts are spoken of as unintentional and as intentional, wanton, malicious, and criminal; as of omission and of commission; as reasonable; as of diligence, and of negligence; as of ownership, of sufferance, of trespass; as of concealment and of fraud; as overt; as judicial, and as ministerial, qq. v.

What ought to be done is readily presumed. What ought not to be done, when done, may be valid. Equity treats that as done which ought to be done. He who can and ought to forbid, commands, if he does not forbid. He who fails to prevent what he can prevent, does the act himself. When anything is prohibited, everything by which it may be done is also prohibited. When more is done than ought to be done, that which it was proper to do, is accepted as rightly done. What cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly. Every act involves its usual consequences, q. v. See also ESTOPPEL; RELATION, 1; VALID.

Act of bankruptcy. An act which exposes a debtor to proceedings in a court of bankruptcy, q. v.

Act of God. Such inevitable accident as cannot be prevented by human care, skill or foresight; but results from natural causes, such as lightning and tempest, floods and inundation.[7]

Something superhuman, or something in opposition to the act of man.[1]

Every "act of God" is an "inevitable accident," because no human agency can resist it; but it does not follow that every inevitable accident is an act of God. Damage done by lightning is an inevitable accident, and also an act of God, but the collision of two vessels, in the dark, is an inevitable accident, and not an act of God.[2]

That may be an "inevitable accident" which no human foresight or precaution can prevent; while "act of God" denotes a natural accident which could not happen by the intervention of man. The latter expression excludes all human agency. Moreover, to excuse a carrier, the act of God must also be the immediate, not the remote, cause of the loss.[3]

Courts and writers have differed as to whether "unavoidable accident" in a bill of lading is exactly equivalent to the exception of the common law "act of God or of the public enemies." Some treat "inevitable accident," "perils of the sea," "of navigation," "of the road," as equivalent to the "act of God" as this phrase is used by judges and lawyers; and others treat them as expressing different ideas. Others again view them as identical for the purpose of making "inevitable accident" mean "act of God," in the sense of a sudden and violent act of nature; while others make them equivalent in order to make "act of God" mean any accident which the carrier cannot, by proper care, foresight, and skill, avoid. Many cases overlook the common custom of merchants (the law in such matters) that all bills of lading contain an exception against losses by inevitable accident, perils of the sea, etc. If a man signs a bill containing the technical phrase "act of God" he will be held according to the usual custom of commerce.

The maxim actus Dei nemini facit injuriam does not appear to be different from lex non cogit ad impossibilia, impotentia excusat legem, impossibilium nulla obligatio est, and other maxims of the Roman law.

"Act of God" no more excludes human agency than do such terms as Deo volente, Deo juvante, ex visitatione Dei, Providential dispensation, or the Roman terms fataliter, divinitus, casus fortuitus, damnum fatale, all which originally referred to the intervention of the gods, in the sense that the appropriate human agency was powerless.

When rights depend upon the life of a man, they end with his death, which is called an "act of God," whether from nature, accident, carelessness, or suicide.[4]

---

[1] State v. Shelters, 51 Vt. 104 (1878), cases.

[2] Mitchell v. Pratt, Taney, 448 (1841).

[3] See Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Monta. 284–85 (1875).

[4] Chapman v. Republic Life Ins. Co., 6 Biss. 240 (1874).

[5] Bishop v. Warner, 19 Conn. 467 (1849).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 40: Justinian.

[7] McHenry v. Philadelphia, &c. R. Co., 4 Harr., Del., 461 (1846), Booth, C. J.

[1] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 289 (1873), cases, McAllister, J.

[2] Fergusson v. Brent, 12 Md. 33 (1857), Le Grand, C. J. See also The Charlotte, 9 Bened. 6–16 (1877), cases; 10 id. 310, 312, 320.

[3] Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 117–18 (1864), Wright, J.; Michaels v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 30 id. 571 (1864), cases.

[4] Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 379–80, 381, 382 (1861), cases, Lowrie, C. J. Dissenting opinion by Thompson, J., 3 Grant, 357–64, cases: "An opinion characterized

The law was first established by the courts of England with reference to carriers by land, on whom the Roman law imposed no liability beyond that of other bailees for reward. Nor did the Roman law make a distinction between inevitable accident arising from what in English law is termed "the act of God," and inevitable accident arising from other causes, but, on the contrary, afforded immunity to the carrier, without distinction, whenever the loss resulted from "casus fortuitus," "damnum fatale," or "vis major"— unforeseen and unavoidable accident.

It is not under all circumstances that inevitable accident arising from the so-called act of God will, any more than inevitable accident in general by the Roman and continental law, afford immunity to the carrier. This must depend upon his ability to avert the effects of the vis major, and the degree of diligence which he is bound to apply to that end.

All causes of inevitable accident may be divided into two classes: those which are occasioned by the elementary forces of nature unconnected with the agency of man or other cause; and those which have their origin, in whole or in part, in the agency of man, whether in acts of commission or omission, of nonfeasance or misfeasance, or in any other cause independent of the agency of natural forces.

It is not because an accident is occasioned by the agency of nature, and therefore by what may be termed the "act of God," that it necessarily follows that the carrier is entitled to immunity. The carrier is bound to do his utmost to protect the goods from loss or damage, and if he fails herein he becomes liable from the nature of his contract. If by his default in omitting to take the necessary care, loss or damage ensues, he remains responsible, though the so-called act of God may have been the immediate cause of the mischief.

What Story says of "perils of the seas" applies equally to such perils coming within the designation of "acts of God." That is, all that can be required of the carrier is that he shall do all that is reasonably and practically possible to insure the safety of the goods. If he uses all the known means to which prudent and experienced carriers ordinarily have recourse he does all that can be reasonably required of him; and if, under such circumstances, he is overpowered by storm or other natural agency, he is within the rule which gives immunity from the effects of such vis major as the act of God. It is, therefore, erroneous to say that the vis major must be such as "no amount of human care or skill could have resisted" or the injury such as "no human ability could have prevented." [1]

Where, in an action for the loss of goods, the defense is "an act of God" [an unusual flood], the burden of showing that the negligence of the carrier co-operated to produce the loss is on the shipper. Such defense may be shown under a general denial.[2]

Where a duty is imposed upon a person by law he will not be absolved from liability for non-performance occasioned by an act of God, unless he has expressly stipulated for exemption.[3]

See further ACCIDENT; CARRIER; CONDITION; POSSIBILITY.

Act of honor. Acceptance or indorsement of protested paper, to save the credit of a name thereon. See HONOR, 1.

Act of the law. The operation of legal rules upon a fact or facts; operation of law.[4]

A common expression is "act and operation of law."

Succession to property, surrender of leases, and some divorces are said to be created by act of the law.[5]

An act of the law exonerates from liability.[6]

2. A formal written statement that something has been done; as, that an instrument is the maker's act and deed. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2.

3. A law made by a legislative body.

Used abstractly, or with reference to a particular statute: as, an act of Assembly, of Congress, of legislation, or of the legislature; the Civil Rights Act, the Confiscation Acts, the Factor's Act, the Inter-State Commerce Act, the Legal Tender Act, Recording Acts, the Riot Act, Tenterden's Act, the Tenure of Office Act, qq. v.

Enact. To establish in the form of positive law, or by written law. Whence enactment.

Enacting clause. The section of a bill or statute which establishes the whole document as a law. Commonly begins "Be it enacted, etc.," that is, by the Senate and House of Representatives (or the People) of a State, or of the United States.

The section of a statute which defines an offense is not the enacting clause.[6]

"Act of Congress" is as strong and unequivocal as "statute of Congress."[7]

The legislature, in exercising a power conferred by fine discrimination, and by accurate research," 1 Smith's Lead. Cases, 413, where extended quotation is made from it.

[1] Nugent v. Smith, L. R., 1 C. P. D. 429-30, 435-36 (1876), cases, Cockburn, C. J.; 1 Story, Bailm. § 512 (a). The defendant received a mare to be carried by him as a common carrier by sea. The jury found that her death was caused partly by very rough weather and partly from struggling due to fright, and that the defendant had not been negligent. The Court of Appeals reversed the lower court, holding that the defendant was not liable for the value of the animal.

[1] Davis v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 89 Mo. 349-53 (1886), cases, Ray, J. Same case, 25 Am. Law Reg. 650 (1885) th. 658-60, cases.

[2] Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 31 F R 441 (1887).

[3] 17 Wall. 373, 376.

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 123; 15 Wend. 400; 2 Barb 1[illegible] 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 858-62.

[5] Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 376 (1872).

[6] United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 176 (1876).

[7] United States v. Smith, 2 Mas. 151 (1820, Story J

enacts laws, and a law is called a statute or an "act." . . . All legislative acts are laws; if not laws, then they are not acts of legislation.[1]

A proposed law is embodied in a bill. When this bill is duly passed by the legislative body it becomes an act of that body. When the executive department signs or approves such a bill it becomes a law.[2]

General or public act. A statute which binds the community at large. Private or special act. Such act as operates only upon particular persons and private concerns.

Special or private acts are to be formally shown and pleaded, else the judges are not bound to notice them.[3]

There is no statute fixing the time when acts of Congress shall take effect, but it is settled that where no time is prescribed, they take effect from their date. Where the language employed is "from and after the passage of this act," the same result follows. The act becomes effectual from the day of its date. In such cases it is operative from the first moment of that day, fractions of the day not being recognized.[4]

A thing is done in pursuance of an act when the person who does it is acting honestly, under the powers which the act gives, or in discharge of the duties which it imposes.[5]

See further LAW; LEGISLATE; STATUTE.

ACTA. See ACTUM.

ACTING. Performing; serving; attending to the duties of an office; as, the acting — executor, partner, commissioner of patents, reporter of decisions.

Attached to an officer's title, designates not an appointed incumbent, but merely a locum tenens who is performing the duties of an office to which he does not himself claim title.[6]

ACTIO. L. A doing, performing: an action, or right of action.

Actio non accrevit infra sex annos. The action has not accrued within six years: the right of action has not arisen, etc.

The Latin form of the plea of the statute of limitations. In strictness, appropriate only when the action has accrued subsequently to the promise. To an action on the promise, the plea is non assumpsit infra sex annos.[7] See ACCRUE, 2.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona. A personal action dies with the person.

Applies to actions merely personal, arising ex delicto, for wrongs actually done by the defendant, such as trespass, battery, slander: in which the action cannot be revived by or against any representative. But actions arising ex contractu, by breach of promise, in which the right descends to the representative, may be revived: being actions against the property rather than against the person.[1]

Expresses the rule at common law with regard to the surviving of personal actions arising ex delicto, for injuries to the person, personalty, or realty. By 4 Edw. III (1331), c. 7, the rule was so modified as to give an action in favor of a personal representative for injuries to personalty; by 3 and 4 Will. IV (1833), c. 42, an action was given against personal representatives for injuries to personalty or realty;[2] and by 9 and 10 Vict. (1846), c. 23, known as Lord Campbell's Act, a right of action for damages for the death of the person injured by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, is given to near relatives — husband, wife, parent, child. These statutes have been followed in this country.

At common law actions on penal statutes do not survive. Congress has not changed the rule with respect to actions on the penal statutes of the United States.[3] See further DAMAGES.

Non oritur actio. A right of action does not arise — ex dolo malo, out of a fraud; — ex nudo pacto, out of an engagement without a consideration; — ex pacto illicito, upon an unlawful agreement; — ex turpi causa or contractu, out of an immoral cause or contract.

Whenever illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. Consent cannot neutralize its effect.[4] Whatever the contamination reaches it destroys. See further DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

ACTION. 1. Doing a thing, the exercise of power, physical or legal; the thing itself as done; an act, q. v.: as, legislative, judicial, executive action, qq. v. See CAUSE, 1 (1).

2. "The lawful demand of one's right"[5] — in a court of justice.[6]

An abstract legal right in one person to prosecute another in a court of justice; a "suit" is the actual prosecution of that right.[7]

An action or suit is any proceeding for the

---

[1] People v. Tiphaine, 13 How. Pr. 76–77 (1856).

[2] Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Monta. 284–85 (1875).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 86; Unity Township v. Burrage, 103 U. S. 454 (1880).

[4] Lapeyre v. United States, 17 Wall. 198 (1872), Swayne, J. See also 7 Wheat. 211; 1 Gall. 62; 20 Vt. 638; 21 id. 619; 1 Kent, 457.

[5] Smith v. Shaw, 21 E. C. L. 126 (1829).

[6] Fraser v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 514 (1880).

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 308.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 302.

[2] Russell v. Sunbury, 37 Ohio St. 374 (1881). See also Henshaw v. Miller, 17 How. 219 (1854); Mitchell v. Hotchkiss, 48 Conn. 16 (1880); Tufts v. Matthews, 10 F. R. 610–11 (1882), cases; 55 Mich. 338; 143 Mass. 305.

[3] Schreiber v. Sharpless, 110 U. S. 80 (1884).

[4] Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 556–59 (1868), cases; Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 149 (1883), cases; 107 Mass. 440; 99 N. Y. 85; Broom, Max. 297, 729.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 116.

[6] McBride's Appeal, 73 Pa. 488 (1873).

[7] Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio, 501 (1854).

purpose of obtaining such remedy as the law allows.[1]

In any legal sense, action, suit, and cause are convertible terms.[2]

The "cause" of this lawful demand, or the reason why the plaintiff can make such demand, is some wrong act committed by the defendant, and some damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence thereof: the two elements must unite.[3] See further CAUSE, 2.

Since all wrongs may be considered as merely a privation of right, the plain, natural remedy for every species of wrong is the being put in possession of the right again. This may be effected by a specific delivery or restoration of the subject-matter to the legal owner, or, where that is not possible or at least not adequate, by making a pecuniary satisfaction in damages. The instruments whereby this remedy is obtained are a diversity of actions or suits. The Greeks and Romans had set forms of actions for the redress of distinct injuries. Our actions are founded upon original writs, and these are alterable by legislation only. The several suits, or remedial instruments of justice, are actions personal, real, and mixed.[4]

Whether a writ of error, a quo warranto, a mandamus, a scire facias, a suit in partition, a suit in equity, a summary proceeding — in some of which the court is the actor, — are actions, in the strict sense, has been variously decided.

Action in personam. An action against the person (of the defendant). Action in rem. An action against a thing — an inanimate object out of which satisfaction is sought. See RES, 2.

Action of contract or ex contractu. An action for the recovery of damages upon a broken contract. In form: assumpsit, debt, or covenant (qq. v.) — all founded on promises. Action of tort or ex delicto. An action for the recovery of personalty withheld, or damages for a wrong not a breach of contract. In form: trespass, case, trover, replevin, or detinue (qq. v.) — all founded on torts or wrongs.[5]

Action on the case. See CASE, 3.

Actionable. That for which an action may be maintained; opposed to non-actionable: as, actionable — fraud, defamation.

Words are "actionable per se" when the natural consequence of what they impute is damage.[6] See LIBEL, 5; SLANDER.

Amicable action. An action entered of record by agreement and without the service of process, to obtain the judgment of the court in a matter of common interest. Opposed, adversary action.

Civil action. Recovers a private right or compensation for deprivation thereof. Criminal action. Is instituted by the state for an offense to the community or to society.

Civil actions include actions at law, suits in chancery, proceedings in admiralty, and all other judicial controversies in which rights of property are involved.[1]

Civil action is used in contradistinction to criminal action; as, in the act of July 2, 1864, relating to parties as witnesses.[2]

Common-law action. An action maintainable at common law. Statutory action. Such form of action as is given by legislative enactment. See REMEDY, Cumulative.

Cross action. An action brought by the defendant in a suit against the plaintiff upon the same subject-matter, the particular cause of action not being available as set-off in the first suit. See SET-OFF.

Equitable action. An action for money had and received is sometimes so called.

Yet, in the absence of special circumstances, courts of equity refuse jurisdiction, because the remedy at law is complete.[3] See ASSUMPSIT, Implied.

Fictitious action. A suit upon a wager, and under pretense of a controversy, to obtain a judicial opinion upon a question of law. See FICTITIOUS, 1; ISSUE, 3, Feigned.

In action. That for which a suit will lie or is pending. See CHOSE.

Joint action. A suit in which all persons obligated or interested on one side of a controversy appear as co-plaintiffs, and all obligated or interested on the other side are made co-defendants. Joint and several action. A suit by either one or all persons on one side as plaintiff or co-plaintiffs, and against either one or all on the other side as defendant or co-defendants. Separate action. Such action as each person must

[1] Harris v. Insurance Co., 35 Conn. 312, 311 (1868); Magill v. Parsons, 4 id. 322 (1822).

[2] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 112 (1866), Davis, J.; 2 McCrary, 180; 18 Blatch. 447; 60 Wis. 478.

[3] Foot v. Edwards, 3 Blatch. 313 (1855), Nelson, J.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 116-17.

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 117; 13 F. R. 537.

[6] Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 226-28 (1875), cases.

[1] United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, 1 Woolw. 125 (1867).

[2] Green v. United States, 9 Wall. 658 (1869). And see 1 Dill. 184; 28 Conn. 580; 69 Ga. 647; 104 Ind. 6, 18; 2 Monta. 70; 51 N. H. 383; 1 Barb. 15; 14 Abb. Pr. 353; 44 Pa. 130; 43 Vt. 297.

[3] Wallis v. Shelly, 30 F. R. 748 (1887); Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 397-98 (1884), cases.

bring when several complainants cannot pursue a joint remedy. See further JOINT.

Local action. A suit maintainable in some one jurisdiction exclusively. Transitory action. A suit maintainable wherever the defendant can be found.

In "local actions," where the possession of land or damages for an actual trespass or waste, etc., affecting land, is to be recovered, the plaintiff must declare his injury to have happened in the very place where it happened; but in "transitory actions," for an injury that might have happened anywhere, as in debt, detinue, slander, the plaintiff may declare in what county he pleases. . . . Transitory actions follow the person of the defendant; territorial suits must be discussed in the territorial tribunal.[1]

Actions are deemed "transitory" when the transactions on which they are founded might have taken place anywhere; and "local," when their cause is, in its nature, necessarily local.[2]

Actions which do not seek the recovery of land may be "local" by common law because they arise out of some local subject or from the violation of some local right or interest; as, waste, trespass quare clausum, actions on the case for nuisances to houses, for disturbance of a right of way, for the diversion of a water-course, and the like; also, replevin. These actions are personal and local.[3]

When the action by which a remedy is to be enforced is personal and transitory the defendant may be held liable in any court to whose jurisdiction he can be subjected by personal process or by voluntary appearance. Thus, as an action in the nature of trespass to the person is transitory, the venue is immaterial.[4] See ACTOR, 1, Sequitur, etc.

Penal action. A suit brought by an officer of government to recover a penalty imposed by statute. Popular action. An action also for a penalty, maintainable by any person. Compare Qui tam action. See FORFEITURE; PENALTY.

Qui tam action. Qui tam: who as well. The emphatic words in the Latin form of a declaration in an action by an informer for a penalty.

Civil in form, but designed to recover a penalty imposed by a penal statute; therefore, partially at least, criminal in nature.[5]

Sometimes one part of a forfeiture, for which a popular action will lie, is given to the king, to the poor, or to some public use, and the other part to the informer or prosecutor: and then the suit is called a qui tam action, because brought by a person "qui tam pro domino rege, quam pro se ipso"— as much for his lord the king, as for his own self.

If the king commences the suit he has the whole forfeiture. If any one has begun such action, no other person then can pursue it; and the verdict in the first suit bars other actions. This caused offenders to induce their friends to begin suit, in order to forestall and prevent other actions: which practice is prevented by 4 Hen. VII (1488), c. 20, enacting that no recovery, otherwise than by verdict, obtained by collusion, shall be a bar to any other action prosecuted bona fide.[1] That being the law in England in 1776, such action cannot be prosecuted in the name of an informer unless the right is distinctly given by statute.[2]

Real action. An action whereby the plaintiff claims title to lands or tenements, rents, commons, or other hereditaments, in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life. Personal action. Such action whereby a man claims a debt, or a personal duty or damages in lieu thereof, or damages for some injury to his person or property. Mixed action. Partakes of the nature of both of the former — by it real property is demanded, with personal damages for a wrong sustained.[3]

A "real action" is brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. It includes every form of action where the judgment is for the title and possession of the land demanded; as, ejectment. A "mixed action" is brought for the specific recovery of land, as in a real action, but has joined with this claim one for damages in respect to such property; as, actions of waste and dower. A "personal action" is brought for the specific recovery of chattels, or for damages or other redress for breach of contract and other injuries of every description, the specific recovery of lands and tenements only excepted.[4] See ACTIO, Personalis, etc.

Right of action. Right to bring a suit; such right as will sustain a suit; in particular, a right of remedy or recovery at law.[5]

See ACTIO; BOOK-ACCOUNT, Action of; CIRCUITY; COMMENCE; CONSOLIDATE; DISCONTINUANCE: FORM, 2; GIST; ISSUE, 3; MULTIPLICITY; PARTY, 2; PEND; PROCEEDING; PROCESS, 1; RES, 2.

ACTIVE. 1. Produced by exertion; resulting from intentional action; opposed to passive: as, active — deceit, waste, qq. v.

2. Requiring intelligent direction, personal

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 294, 384.

[2] Livingston v. Jefferson, 1 Brock. 209 (1811), Marshall, C. J.

[3] Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 256–57 (1860).

[4] Dennick v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 103 U. S. 17–18, 21 (1880), cases; Livingston v. Jefferson, 4 Hughes, 611–13 (1811), Marshall, C. J.; Oliver v. Loye, 59 Miss. 321–23 (1881), cases; R. S. §§ 739–45, cases.

[5] State v. Kansas City, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 726 (1887), Brewer, J.; R. S. Mo. § 1709.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 161–62.

[2] O'Kelly v. Athens Manuf. Co. 36 Ga. 52 (1867).

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 117–18.

[4] [Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255–56 (1860).

[5] As to premature actions, see 21 Cent. Law J. 401–12 (1885), cases.

exertion; opposed to passive: as, an active — trust, use, qq. v.

ACTOR. 1. Lat. A doer; a plaintiff. See CAVEAT, Actor.

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff follows the forum of the thing — the thing in suit, or the residence of the defendant.[1]

Personal actions are to be brought before the tribunal of the defendant's domicil. Actions for collisions between vessels may be brought where neither party resides: on the ground that a quasi-contract arises on the part of the wrong-doer to pay the damage he has caused, and that the place of performance is taken to be the port at which the injured vessel first arrives.[2] See ACTION, 2, Local.

Actori incumbit probatio. On the plaintiff rests the proving — the "burden of proof," q. v.

2. Eng. (1) A doer, a performer: as, the chief actor in a crime.[3] See PRINCIPAL, 5.

He who institutes a suit; a plaintiff,[4] q. v.

He who avers a matter as a fact or law.

(2) A stage-player. See REVIEW, 3.

ACTUAL. Existing in act; really acted; real, at present time; as a matter of fact. Opposed, constructive: speculative, implied, legal.

An assault with "actual" violence is with physical force put in action, exerted upon the person assailed.[5]

It is common to speak of an actual or the actual — annexation of a fixture, appropriation of a thing, attachment, battery, breaking, close or curtilage, cost, costs, damage, delivery, escape, eviction, fraud, knowledge, levy, loss, malice, notice, occupation, payment, possession, presence, seizure, use, value, violence, qq. v.

ACTUM; ACTUS. L. A thing done: an act; action.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts evince the inward purpose. See OVERT; WILL, 1.

Actus curiæ neminem gravabit. An act of the court shall oppress no one.

A court will not suffer a party to be prejudiced by its own action, as, by delay. On this principle orders are sometimes entered nunc pro tunc,[6] q. v.

[1] 2 Kent, 462.

[2] Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Bened. 115 (1877).

[3] See 4 Bl. Com. 34.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 25.

[5] State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 213 (1862). See 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 447, 445.

[6] See Cumber v. Wane, 1 Sm. L. C. *444-45; 108 U. S. 66 119 id. 596; 3 Col. 236; Broom, Max. 122.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. An act of God does wrong to no one.

No one is responsible in damages for the result of an inevitable accident, q. v.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. An act of the law wrongs no man.

An act of the law is to be so limited in its operation that no right shall be prejudiced.[1]

Actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a man a criminal, unless his intention be criminal.

To constitute a crime the intent and the act must concur: a mere overt act, without wrongful intention, does not make guilt.[2] See CONSEQUENCES; MALICE.

AD. L. At, to, for; according to; on account of.

In compounds assimilates with the consonant following, becoming ac-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, at-.

Ad colligendum. For collecting (the goods). See under ADMINISTER, 4.

Ad damnum. To the loss. See DAMNUM.

Ad diem. On the (very) day. See DIES

Ad filum. To the line. See FILUM.

Ad hoc. On this (subject).

Ad idem. To the same (thing or effect) See ASSENT.

Ad interim. In the meantime; temporarily.

Said of one, as an assignee, who serves in the place of another; also, of a receipt for a premium paid, pending the approval of a risk in insurance against fire. See INTERIM.

Ad litem. For the suit. See GUARDIAN, 2.

Ad majorem cautelam. For the sake of caution. See CAUTELA.

Ad medium filum. To the middle line. See FILUM.

Ad pios usus. For religious purposes. See USE, Pious, p. 1074.

Ad quæstionem. See QUÆSTIO.

Ad quem. To which. See A, 5, A quo.

Ad quod damnum. To the loss which. See DAMNUM.

Ad sectam. At the suit of. See SUIT, 1.

Ad valorem. According to valuation. See DUTY, 2.

ADDITION.[3] 1. Under a statute allowing a mechanic's lien upon an "addition to a former building," the new structure must be a lateral addition. It must occupy ground beyond the limits of the original building.[1]

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 123; 69 Ga. 400; Broom, Max. 127, 408.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 2, 21; 4 N. Y. 159, 163, 195; Broom, Max. 307.

[3] L. ad-dare, to add to.

A change in a building by adding to its height, or depth, or to the extent of its interior accommodations, is an "alteration," not an addition.[1]

Additional. Given with, or joined to, some other: as, an additional — building, legacy, security.

Embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another so as to form an aggregate.[2]

"Additional security" is that which, united with or joined to the former security, is deemed to make the aggregate sufficient as a security from the beginning.[3]

2. A word or title added to the name of a person to help identify him.

Addition of estate (status): yeoman, gentleman, esquire. Addition of degree: knight, earl, marquess, duke — names of dignity. Addition of domicil: place of residence. Addition of mystery or trade: scrivener, laborer, etc.[4]

By 1 Hen. V. (1413), c. 5, an indictment must set forth the Christian name, surname, and the addition of degree, mystery, place, etc.[4] See NAME, 1.

ADDRESS. 1. The part of a bill in equity which describes the court.[5]

2. The name and residence of the drawee in a bill of exchange. See PROTEST, 2.

ADEMPTION.[6] The act by which a testator pays to his legatee, in his life-time, a general legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death; also, the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of the testator having parted with the subject.[7] Whence adeem, adeemed.

When a parent gives a legacy as a portion, and, afterward, advances in the same nature, the latter presumably satisfies the former.[8]

The ademption of a legacy of personalty is not usually called a "revocation." When ademption is not used the act is called "satisfaction," "payment," "performance," "execution." But these terms, so used, have not their ordinary sense; for their primary relation is to some debt, duty, or obligation resting absolutely upon a party; whereas a will, having no effect in the maker's life-time, does not bind him to anything. "Ademption" is the most significant.[9] See REVOKE.

If a horse, specifically bequeathed, die during the testator's life-time, or be disposed of by him, the legacy will be lost or adeemed, because there will be nothing on which the bequest can operate. The only question, in such case, is, whether the specific thing remains after the death of the testator.

ADEQUATE.[2] Equal, proportionate, fully sufficient, complete. Opposed to inadequate.

1. If a consideration has some value it need not be adequate. Inadequacy is regarded only when gross and when imposition is apparent; but it may prevent specific performance, and justify small damages for a breach of contract.[3]

The immediate parties to a bargain are the judges of the benefits derivable therefrom. To avoid a bargain for inadequate consideration the inadequacy must be so great and manifest as to shock the conscience and confound the judgment of common sense.[4] See BID.

Gross inadequacy alone does not constitute a sufficient reason to impeach the genuineness of a sale made by a trustee. The inadequacy must be such as to shock the conscience or raise a presumption of fraud or unfairness.[5]

Where gross inadequacy of price is coupled with accident, mistake, or misapprehension, caused by a purchaser or other person interested in a public sale, or by the officer conducting the sale, a court of equity will set the sale aside.[6] See INFLUENCE.

2. Where there is an adequate remedy at law for the redress of an injury, resort may not be had to a court of equity. This means a remedy vested in the complainant to which he may at all times resort at his own option, fully and freely, without let or hindrance.[7]

The remedy at law must be plain, adequate, and complete, and as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and to its prompt administration as the remedy in equity. In that case the adverse party has a right to a trial by a jury.[8]

But a judgment and a fruitless execution at law are not necessary.[9]

The absence of a plain and adequate remedy at law affords the only test of equity jurisdiction; the application of the principle to a particular case must de-

---

[1] [Updike v. Skilliman, 27 N. J. L. 132 (1858), Green, C. J.

[2] State v. Hull, 53 Miss. 645 (1876); 139 Mass. 356.

[3] [Termes de la Ley.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 306; 1 id. 407; 10 Cush. 402; 1 Metc., Mass., 151.

[5] See Story, Eq. Pl. § 26.

[6] L. adimere, to take away.

[7] See 3 Will. Exec. 1330.

[8] Strother v. Mitchell, 80 Va. 154 (1885); Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. *515 (1802).

[9] Langdon v. Astor's Executors, 16 N. Y. 39–40 (1857), Denio, C. J.; Same v. Same, 3 Duer, 541 (1854); Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. 56 (1850).

[1] Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 215–17 (1851), cases, Gilchrist, C. J.

[2] L. adæquatus, made equal.

[3] 1 Pars. Contr. 436, 492, cases.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 244–47; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 452 (1844).

[5] Clark v. Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co., 100 U. S. 152 (1879), cases; Cleere v. Cleere, 82 Ala. 588 (1886); Carden v. Lane, 48 Ark. 219 (1886), cases.

[6] Cole County v. Madden, 91 Mo. 614 (1887), cases; 26 Cent. Law J. 350 (1888), cases.

[7] Wheeler v. Bedford, 54 Conn. 249 (1886), Park, C. J.

[8] Morgan v. City of Beloit, 7 Wall. 618 (1868), cases.

[9] Case v. Beauregard, 101 U. S. 690 (1879).

pend altogether upon the character of the case as disclosed by the pleadings.[1] See further EQUITY.

ADHERING. See TREASON.

ADIT. A horizontal entry to a mine.

A statute which provides that "an adit at least ten feet in, along the lode, from the point of discovery, shall be equivalent to a discovery shaft," contemplates that the ten feet may be wholly or in part open or under cover, dependent upon the nature of the ground.[2]

ADJACENT.[3] Near, but not touching. Applied to lots, is synonymous with "contiguous." In another relation it might have a more extended meaning.[4] See ADJOINING; CONTIGUOUS; VICINITY.

Certain acts of Congress authorized the defendant to take from public lands "adjacent" to its road materials necessary for the construction and repair of its railway. Held, that the reference was to such materials as could be conveniently reached by ordinary transportation by wagons, and that the privilege did not include the right to transport timber to distant parts of the road.[5]

Where the "adjacent" ends and the non-adjacent begins may be difficult to determine. On the theory that the material is taken on account of the benefit resulting to the land from the construction of the road, the term ought not to be construed to include any land save such as by its proximity to the line of the road is directly and materially benefited by its construction.[6]

ADJOINING.[7] Touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near or adjacent; in contact with.[8]

In popular use seems to have no fixed meaning. Frequently expresses nearness.[9]

What is "adjacent" may be separated by the intervention of a third object. What is "adjoining" must touch in some part. What is "contiguous," strictly speaking, should touch along one side.[9]

Towns contiguous at their corners are adjoining.[10]

The whole yard of a house of correction, though divided by a street, from which it is fenced off, is adjoining or appurtenant to the house.[11]

Compare ABUT; ADJACENT; APPERTAIN.

[1] Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 79 (1866).

[2] Electro-Magnetic Mining, &c. Co. v. Van Auken, 9 Col. 207 (1886); Gray v. Truby, 6 id. 278 (1882); Gen. Laws Col. 630, § 7.

[3] L. adjacere, to lie near.

[4] Municipality No. Two, 7 La. An. 79 (1852), Eustis, C. J. See Continental Improv. Co. v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 299 (1882).

[5] United States v. Denver, &c. R. Co. 31 F. R. 886, 889 (1887), Hallett, J.

[6] United States v. Chaplin, 31 F. R. 890, 896 (1887), Deady, J.

[7] F. adjoinder: L. ad-jungere, to join to.

[8] Re Ward, 52 N. Y. 397 (1873); Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 479 (1882); Akers v. United R. Co., 43 N. J. L. 110 (1881).

[9] Peverelly v. People, 3 Park. Cr. R. 59, 72 (1855); Crabbe, Syn.

[10] Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289, 293 (1865).

[11] Commonwealth v. Curley, 101 Mass. 25 (1869).

ADJOURN.[1] To put off, or defer to another day specified; also, to suspend for a time. to defer, delay.[2]

Referring to a sale or a judicial proceeding, may include fixing the time to which the postponement is made.[3]

Adjournment. Putting off until another time and place.[3]

A continuation of a previous term of court.[4]

A continuance of a session from one day to another.[5] See VACATION.

ADJUDGE. To decide judicially; to adjudicate; sometimes, to declare or deem, but not implying any judgment of a judicial tribunal.

As in a statute declaring that "all lotteries are hereby adjudged to be common nuisances."[6] Compare DEEM.

ADJUDICATA. See ADJUDICATUS.

ADJUDICATE. To determine in the exercise of judicial power; to pronounce judgment in a case.

Adjudicated. Judicially determined: as, an adjudicated — case, bankrupt.

Adjudication. Determination by judicial authority.

Former adjudication. Judicial determination of a matter previously in litigation.

When the judgment, rendered in the former trial between the same parties, is used as a technical estoppel, or is relied upon by way of evidence as conclusive per se, it must appear, by the record of the prior suit, that the particular controversy sought to be concluded was necessarily tried and determined — that is, if the record of the former trial shows that the verdict could not have been rendered without deciding the particular matter, it will be considered as having settled that matter as between the parties; and where the record does not show that the matter was necessarily and directly found by the jury, evidence aliunde consistent with the record may be received to prove the fact; but, even where it appears extrinsically that the matter was properly within the issue controverted in the former suit, if it be not shown that the verdict and judgment necessarily involved its determination, it will not be concluded.

The former adjudication is a finality, concluding

[1] F. adjorner, to put off to another day.

[2] La Farge v. Van Wagenen, 14 How. Pr. 58 (1857).

[3] Wilson v. Lott, 5 Fla. 303 (1853).

[4] Van Dyke v. State, 22 Ala. 60 (1853); 6 Wheat. 109.

[5] Trammell v. Bradley, 37 Ark. 379 (1881); 1 Bl. Com. 187.

[6] State v. Price, 11 N. J. L. 218 (1830); Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 111 (1877).

[7] Packet Company v. Sickles, 5 Wall. 592 (1866), cases, Nelson, J.; Aurora City v. West, 7 id. 109-8 (1868), cases; Goodenow v. Litchfield, 59 Iowa, 231 (1882); ib. 549.

parties and privies, as to every matter received to sustain or to defeat the claim, and as to what might have been offered for that purpose. But where the second action is upon a different demand, the former judgment is an estoppel only as to the matters in issue upon the determination of which the finding was rendered.[1]

A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, upon a question directly involved in one suit, is conclusive as to that question in another suit between the same parties. But to this operation of the judgment it must appear, from the face of the record or be shown by extrinsic evidence, that the precise question was raised and determined in the former suit. If there be any uncertainty on this head in the record,— as, for example, if it appears that several distinct matters may have been litigated, upon one or more of which the judgment may have passed, without indicating which of them was litigated and upon which the judgment was rendered,— the whole subject-matter of the action will be at large, and open to new contention, unless this uncertainty be removed by extrinsic evidence showing the precise point involved and determined. To apply the judgment and give effect to the adjudication actually made, when the record leaves the matter in doubt, such evidence is admissible.[2]

When the second suit involves other matter as well as the matters in issue in the former action, the former judgment operates as an estoppel as to those things which were in issue there, and upon the determination of which the first verdict was rendered. Extrinsic evidence, when not inconsistent with the record and not impugning its verity, is admissible to show that a former action involved matters in issue in the suit on trial, and were necessarily determined by the first verdict.[3]

If a former adjudication is not pleaded as an estoppel evidence may be received to show the truth.[4]

It cannot be said that a case is not an authority on one point because, although that point was properly presented and decided, something else was found in the end which disposed of the whole matter.[5] See ADJUDICATUS, Res, etc.

ADJUDICATUS. L. Decided, settled, adjudged, adjudicated, q. v.

Res adjudicata, or res judicata. A thing adjudicated; a case decided; a matter settled. Plural, res adjudicatæ or judicatæ.

To make a matter res judicata there must be concurrence of four conditions: identity — in the thing sued for, of the cause of action, of the parties to the action, and of the quality in the persons.[1]

Transit in rem judicatam. It passes into a thing adjudicated; it becomes a judgment.

Applies to a contract upon which a judgment has been obtained.[2]

ADJUST.[3] To determine what is due; to settle; to ascertain: as, to adjust a claim, a demand, a right.

Adjuster. He who determines the amount of a claim; as, a claim against an insurance company.

Adjustment. Settlement of the relative rights of parties, of a demand or cross-demands of any nature; in particular, the settlement of the claim of an insured party after a loss.[4]

Unadjusted. Applied to a demand — that the amount is uncertain, not agreed upon.[5]

ADMEASUREMENT. Ascertainment; apportionment.

A writ which lay against one who usurped more than his share; as, of pasture, dower or other right.[6]

ADMINICULAR.[7] Supporting; aiding; strengthening.

Describes testimony adduced to explain or complete other testimony.[8]

ADMINISTER. 1. To dispense, supply, furnish, give: as, to administer poison, or a stupefying mixture.

Not simply to prescribe or give a drug, but to direct and cause it to be taken.[9]

That offense is not to be confined to the manual administering of poison. So construed, the law would be substantially without effect, and would not reach the large class of offenders at whom it is aimed. "Administer" has a far more extended meaning — to furnish or cause to be furnished and taken, to give or cause to be taken, by any mode.[10]

Etymologically, applicable to anything that can be done by the hand to or for another. Neither fraud

[1] Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351-58 (1876), cases, Field, J.; ib. 364-66, cases; Lumber Company v. Buchtel, 101 id. 639 (1879); Litchfield v. Goodenow, 123 id. 550-51 (1887): 1 Greenl. Ev. § 523; Gilmer v. Morris, 30 F. R. 459 (1887), cases.

[2] Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 608 (1876), cases, Field, J.; Corcoran v. Chesapeake, &c. Canal Co., ib. 745 (1876). See also Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 109-11 (1882), cases; McCalley v. Robinson, 70 Ala. 433 (1881); Moore v. City of Albany, 98 N. Y. 410 (1885); Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 651 (1885); Bennitt v. Star Mining Co., 119 Ill. 14-15 (1886), cases.

[3] Wilson's Executor v. Deen, 121 U. S. 526, 533 (1887).

[4] Metas v. Gill, 44 Ohio St. 258-60 (1886), cases.

[5] Railroad Companies v. Schutte, 103 U. S. 143 (1880).

[1] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 12 Kan. 135 (1873).

[2] See 11 Pet. 100; 2 Sumn. 486; 15 F. R. 300; 28 Minn. 179, 180; 76 Mo. 38; 85 N. C. 456; 42 N. J. L. 117; 18 Johns. 463; 19 S. C. 156.

[3] L. ad-justus, according to right.

[4] See 3 Kent, 240, 335; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1814-15.

[5] Richardson v. Woodbury, 43 Me. 214 (1857).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 183, 238; 3 Kent, 418.

[7] L. adminiculum, a prop.

[8] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 606.

[9] [Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 165 (1857).

[10] [La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 229-33 (1866).

nor deception is a necessary ingredient in the act of administering poison. To force poison into the stomach of another; to compel another by threats of violence to swallow poison: to furnish poison to another for the purpose and with the intention that the person shall commit suicide therewith, and which poison is accordingly taken for that purpose; or to be present at the taking of poison by a suicide, participating in the taking by assistance, persuasion, or otherwise, although the party intends and agrees himself also to commit suicide,— each is a mode of "administering" poison. The word does not then always imply service.[1] See ATTEMPT; NOXIOUS.

2. To dispense, direct the application of: as, to administer the law, justice.[2]

Administrable. Capable of being administered or rendered effective: as, an administrable decree or law.

3. To propound the form of; to give, tender: as, to administer an oath.

4. To manage, to settle: as, to administer the estate of an intestate or of a testator who has no executor.

Administered. Applied to legal ends or uses; opposed to unadministered: as, the administered or unadministered effects of a decedent.[3]

Administrator. A man appointed by a competent court to settle the affairs of a decedent's estate. Administratrix. A woman charged with that duty.

The former word is generally used, in statutes and decisions, to designate the officer.

Administration. The service rendered, or the charge or duty assumed, in the settlement of a decedent's estate.[4]

While administrator designates a representative named by the court, in opposition to an executor, who is designated by will, administration may mean the management of an estate by either an executor or an administrator. See REPRESENTATIVE, (1).

Maladministration; misadministration. In law-books, in which they are often interchanged, these words mean wrong administration.[5]

Waste and embezzlement are examples.[6]

Administration ad colligendum. For collecting — and preserving perishable goods.[6]

Administration cæterorum. Of the rest — of the goods which cannot be administered under the limited power already granted.[1]

Administration cum testamento annexo. With the will attached — to the letters.

The Latin words are abbreviated c. t. a.

Obtains either when no executor is named or when he who is named will not or cannot serve.

The incumbent follows the statute of distributions, unless otherwise directed by the will.

The administrator, in such case, succeeds to all the ordinary powers of the executor. When the will expressly constitutes the executor a trustee for some special purpose, or vests in him a discretionary power in reference to some matter outside of the ordinary powers and duties of an executor, or charges him with some duty indicating a special confidence reposed in him, such duty or power does not pass to an ordinary administrator.[2]

Administration de bonis non. Concerning goods not — already disposed of.

The Latin words are abbreviated d. b. n. Occurs where another administrator has died, or been discharged, leaving a part of the estate unsettled.

Administration de bonis non, cum testamento annexo. Upon goods not administered, and with the will annexed to the letters.

The Latin words are abbreviated d. b. n., c. t. a. Occurs where an executor has died, or been discharged, leaving a part of the estate yet to be settled.

An administrator de bonis non cannot sue the former administrator or his representative for a devastavit or for delinquencies in office, because the latter is liable directly to creditors and the next of kin. The former has to do only with the goods of the intestate unadministered. If any such remain in the hands of the discharged administrator or his representative, in specie, he may sue for them either directly or on the bond. Regularly, a decree against the administrator for an amount due, and an order for leave to prosecute his bond, are prerequisites to the maintenance of a suit thereon.[3] But otherwise, under statutes.

The preceding administration must have become vacant by resignation, removal, or death.[4]

Administration durante absentia. During absence — when the absence of the proponent of a will or of the executor delays or imperils settlement of the estate.[5]

Administration durante minori ætate. During minority — while the executor named is under lawful age; at common law seventeen.

---

[1] Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 162-64 (1872); 11 Fla. 256; 4 Car. & P. 368.

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 72.

[3] See United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 263-64 (1883).

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 490; 92 N. Y. 74; 18 S. C. 351.

[5] Minkler v. State, 14 Neb. 188 (1883); Martin v. Elsarbe, 70 Ala. 339 (1881); 37 id. 399; 108 U. S. 199, 206.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 505.

[1] See 1 Will. Exec. 585.

[2] Pratt v. Stewart, 49 Conn. 339 (1881). Powers as to realty, 24 Am. Law Reg. 689-706 (1885), cases.

[3] Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 540-42 (1872), cases; United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 260-61 (1883), cases.

[4] Sims v. Waters, 65 Ala. 443 (1880). See also Conklin v. Egerton, 21 Wend. 432 (1839); Zebach v. Smith, 3 Binn. *69 (1810); 10 Ark. 465.

[5] See 5 Rawle, 264; 16 Wall. 540.

His guardian, or other suitable person, may then take out letters cum testamento annexo.

Administration pendente lite. While a suit continues — over an alleged will or the right of an appointment.

The incumbent's duty is limited to filing an inventory, caring for the assets, collecting and paying debts.[1]

Ancillary administration. Subordinate to another administration, and for collecting the effects of a non-resident.[2]

Any surplus beyond the claims of local creditors is paid over to the domiciliary representative.[3]

Foreign administration. Granted at decedent's domicil in another State or country.

Ground for a new probate, ancillary in nature. But a few courts hold that new letters need not be issued.[4]

Letters confer no authority beyond the limits of the State granting them. The title acquired by the administrator of the domicil is a fiduciary one, enforceable in another State only by permission of its laws. No State can be required to surrender the effects or debts due to an intestate domiciled elsewhere to the prejudice of its own citizens. Although the right of the domiciliary administrator may be recognized ex comitate, it is subject to the rights of creditors where the assets exist or the debtor resides.[5]

Limited administration. Restricted in time, power, or as to effects.[6]

Public administration. Conducted by a special public officer, or the guardians of the poor, where there is no relative entitled to apply for letters.

Special administration. Limited, either in time or in power.

The instrument given by the officer of probate to the person who proposes to administer upon the estate of an intestate is called the letters of administration. This instrument confers authority to take charge of and to settle the estate, collecting dues, paying debts, etc.; and comprises: a copy of the will, if there be a will and no executor; a copy of the decree of allowance of such will in probate; a certificate of the name of the appointee, his rights, duties, etc. The faithful discharge of his duties is secured by an administrator's bond, — an obligation entered into by the nominee, with sufficient sureties, and approved by the court.[1]

As against strangers letters of administration are not evidence of death, but merely of their own existence; i. e., that the proceedings have been regularly had, and that the appointee is entitled to the office. Being like an exemplification, they need not be proved.[2] Compare LETTERS, 4, Testamentary.

An administrator represents the personal property of his decedent. He is a trustee thereof for creditors, distributees, and heirs; and is an officer of the court. He takes title from the time of his appointment. He stands in privity with the deceased, succeeding to all his rights, but not to his contract duties of a purely personal nature. He is liable to the amount of the assets. The nearest of kin is preferred for the office: descendants to ancestors; males to females; and, where there is no kin, a creditor of the estate. He is held to the care of a man of ordinary prudence,[3] and to the utmost good faith. Where there are two or more appointees, each is the other's agent; and all sue and are to be sued.

The chief duties of an administrator are to bury the deceased; give public notice of the grant of letters; make an inventory; collect the assets; pay the debts. He may not buy any part of the estate for himself; nor mix the estate's funds with his own; nor let the assets lie idle; nor use them to his own gain. On the more important matters he should seek and follow the direction of the court. For debts and improvements he is to first exhaust the personalty; after that he may convert realty. The law of the decedent's domicil governs the disposal of his personalty, the law of the place where situated his realty.[4]

See ADMINISTRARE; ASSETS; COMPROMISE; EXECUTOR; IMPROVIDENT; INCAPABLE; PERISHABLE; PRIVITY; SETTLE, 3; TRUST, 1; VOUCHER; WITNESS.

ADMINISTRARE. L. To wait upon, serve; to dispose of, administer.

Plene administravit. He has fully administered. Plene administravit præter. He has fully administered except —.

The emphatic words of pleas by an executor or administrator: the former plea meaning that he has lawfully disposed of all assets that have come into his hands; the latter plea, that he has administered all assets except an amount which is not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim.

[1] See 4 Watts, 36; 16 S. & R. 420.

[2] 21 Cent. Law J. 186–90 (1885), cases.

[3] See 11 Mass. 263; 132 id. 452; 44 Ill. 202; 32 Barb. 190; 86 Pa. 131.

[4] See Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256 (1883); 2 Ala. 429; 18 B. Mon. 582; 18 Miss. 607; 12 Vt. 589.

[5] Moore, Adm'x, v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 275 (1887), cases, Johnston, J; Story, Confl. Laws, § 512; Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654 (1884), cases.

[6] See McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 399 (1885), cases.

[1] See Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 543 (1872); Stov all v. Banks, 10 id. 583 (1870).

[2] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 243 (1875); Devlin v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 276 (1882), cases.

[3] See Moore v. Randolph, 70 Ala. 584 (1881); Bowersox's Appeal, 100 Pa. 437 (1882).

[4] See generally Williams, and Schouler, on Executors, &c.; 2 Bl. Com. 489; 2 Kent, 409; 1 Pars. Contr 127; 13 How. 466–67.

Unless the defendant falsely pleads plene administravit he is not liable to a judgment beyond the assets in his hands. The plea is not necessarily false because not sustained. The jury, if no devastavit is averred, must find the amount of the assets, if any, before a judgment can be rendered.[1]

See ACCIDERE, Quando, etc.; BONA, De bonis; DEVASTAVIT.

ADMIRALTY. A court exercising jurisdiction over controversies arising out of the navigation of public waters; also, the system of jurisprudence which pertains to such controversies.

So named because, in England, originally held before the lord high admiral.[2]

"The judicial Power shall extend . . . to all cases of Admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction."[3]

The principal subjects of admiralty jurisdiction are maritime contracts and maritime torts, including captures jure belli, and seizures on water for municipal and revenue forfeitures. (1) Contracts, claims, or service, purely maritime, and touching rights and duties appertaining to commerce and navigation. (2) Torts and injuries of a civil nature committed on navigable rivers. Jurisdiction in the former case depends upon the nature of the contract, in the latter entirely upon the locality.[4]

The jurisdiction is not limited to tide-waters, but extends to all public navigable lakes and rivers, where commerce is carried on between different States, or with a foreign nation — wherever ships float or navigation successfully aids commerce.[5]

Courts of admiralty exist in all commercial countries, for the safety and convenience of commerce, the speedy decision of controversies where delay would often be ruin, and to administer the laws of nations in seasons of war, as to captures, prizes, etc. . . . A wide range of jurisdiction was necessary for the benefit of commerce and navigation: these needed courts acting more promptly than courts of common law and not entangled with the niceties and strictness of common-law pleadings and proceedings. . . . The acts of 1789 and 1845 save a concurrent remedy at common law in any Federal or State court, and secure a trial by jury as a matter of right in the admiralty courts. Congress may modify the practice in any respect it deems conducive to the administration of justice.[6]

By the act of September 24, 1789, § 9, the district courts have exclusive original cognizance "of all civil causes of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction; saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it."[1] The saving does not authorize a proceeding in rem to enforce a maritime lien, in any common-law court. Common law remedies are not applicable to enforce such a lien, but are suits in personam, though such suits, under special statutes, may be commenced by attachment of property.[2]

The act of February 26, 1845, limits the powers granted by the act of 1789, as regards cases arising upon the "lakes, and navigable waters connecting said lakes;" limits jurisdiction to vessels of twenty tons burden or upward, enrolled or licensed for the coasting trade, or employed in commerce between places in different States; and grants a jury trial if either party demands it. The jurisdiction is expressly made concurrent with such remedies as may be given by State laws. Otherwise, the jurisdiction granted by the act of 1789 is exclusive in the district courts.[3]

Jurisdiction, in "civil cases," extends to all contracts, claims, and services essentially maritime: among which are bottomry bonds, contracts of affreightment and contracts for conveyance of passengers, pilotage on the high seas, wharfage, agreements of consort-ship, surveys of vessels, damages by the perils of the seas, the claims of material-men and others for the repair and outfit of ships belonging to foreign nations or to other States, and the wages of mariners; and also to civil marine torts and injuries, among which are assaults and other personal injuries, collisions, spoliation and damage, illegal seizures or other depredations of property, illegal disposition or withholding possession from the owners of ships, controversies between part owners as to the employment of ships, municipal seizures of ships, cases of salvage and marine insurance.[4]

Admiralty courts are international courts. As originally constituted they are the appropriate tribunals for controversies between foreigners.[5]

They have jurisdiction of collisions on the high seas between vessels owned by foreigners of different nationalities.[6]

They may estimate damages for death by negligence, when the court has jurisdiction of the vessel and of the subject-matter.[7]

In England there are two courts: the "instance" and the "prize" court, qq. v. The same judge presides in both. In the United States this double jurisdiction is vested in the district court.[8]

---

[1] Smith v. Chapman, 93 U. S. 42 (1876); 8 Wheat. 675; 5 Cranch, 19; 15 Johns. 383; 89 N. C. 416; 19 S. C. 252; 2 Kent, 417.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 268.

[3] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2.

[4] The Belfast, 7 Wall. 637 (1868), cases. Clifford, J.; New England Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 id. 29, 31 (1870).

[5] The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 454-59 (1851), Taney, C. J.; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 562-70 (1866), cases; The Belfast, 7 id. 639-41 (1868); The Eagle, 8 id. 20-26 (1868); New England Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 id. 28-29 (1870); Exp. Easton, 95 U. S. 70 (1877).

[6] The Genesee Chief, supra; N. E. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, supra; 2 Story, Const. § 1672; 1 Brown's Adm. 353; 20 F. R. 68.

[1] R. S. § 563, (8).

[2] The Belfast, 7 Wall. 644, 625 (1868); The Moses Taylor, 4 id. 428-31 (1866); The Hine, ib. 568 (1866).

[3] R. S. § 566; The Hine, 4 Wall. 569 (1866); The Eagle, 8 id. 20-26 (1868); 2 Kent, 365.

[4] Exp. Easton, 95 U. S. 68 (1877), Clifford, J. See also De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398 (1815), Story, J.; 4 Woods, 267; 17 F. R. 387-88, cases.

[5] Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Bened. 115 (1877); The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, 361 (1885).

[6] The Luna, 13 Rep. 6 (E. D. Pa., 1881).

[7] Exp. Gordon, 104 U. S. 517-18 (1881), cases.

[8] 1 Kent, 353.

A "mixed case" in admiralty is a contract which does not depend altogether upon locality as the test of jurisdiction; as, a contract for supplies, a charter-party, and the like; but not a tort begun on land and completed on navigable water,[1] nor a policy of insurance upon a ship and its cargo against marine perils.[2]

The libelant propounds the substantive facts, prays for appropriate relief, and asks for process suited to the action, which is in rem or in personam. The respondent answers those facts by admitting, denying, or declaring his ignorance thereof, and alleges the facts of his defense to the case made by the libel. The proofs must substantially agree with the allegations. There are no common-law rules of variance or departure. The court grants relief on the case made out.[3]

The criminal jurisdiction of the Federal courts does not extend to the Great Lakes and their connecting waters; as, for example, the Detroit river. See SEA, High.[4]

See further ACCIDENT; CANAL; COLLISION, 2; CONSORT, 2; DAMAGES; FIDEJUSSOR; LAKES; LIBEL, 4; MARINE; MARITIME; MONITION; NAVIGABLE; PETITORY; RES, 2; SEA; STIPULATION, 1; TIDE; TORT, 2.

ADMISSION.[5] 1. Receiving; reception. Whence admit, admissible, inadmissible, non-admission.

Used of assenting to, allowing, or receiving — a claim, a will to probate, any other writing, or testimony.

Also applied to making a person a member of a privileged class or body, as of the legal profession, or of a partnership or association. See DELECTUS.

2. Recognition as fact or truth; acknowledgment, concession; also, the expression in which such assent is conveyed.

In evidence, applied to civil transactions, and to facts, in criminal cases, not involving criminal intent.[6]

In pleading, what is not denied is taken as admitted.

Direct or express admission. An admission made openly and in direct terms. Implied admission. Results from an act done or undone; as, from character assumed, from conduct or silence.

Incidental admission. Is made in another connection, or involved in some other fact admitted.

Judicial or solemn admission. So plainly made in pleadings filed, or in the progress of a trial, as to dispense with the stringency of some rule of practice.

Partial admission. In equity practice, delivered in terms of uncertainty, with explanation or qualification. Plenary admission. Without any qualification.[1]

Admissions are treated as "declarations against interest" and, therefore, probably true. In the absence of fraud they bind all joint parties and privies.[2]

The credibility of an admission is a question of fact. The admission of a right is not the same as of a fact. All the words must be considered. May be by a document, conduct, predecessor in title, agent, attorney, referee, joint party, trustee, officer, principal, husband, wife.[3]

Where the act of the agent will bind the principal, his admission respecting the subject-matter will also bind him if made at the same time, and constituting part of the res gestæ.[4]

But an act done by an agent cannot be varied, qualified, or explained, either by declarations, which amount to no more than a mere narrative of a past occurrence, or by an isolated conversation held, or an isolated act done, at a later period. The reason is, the agent to do the act is not authorized to narrate what he had done or how he had done it, and his declaration is no part of the res gestæ.[5]

For example, the declaration of the engineer of a train which met with an accident, as to the speed at which the train was running, made from ten to thirty minutes after the accident occurred, is not admissible against the company in an action by a passenger to recover damages for injuries sustained. "His declaration, after the accident had become a completed fact and when he was not performing the duties of engineer, that the train, at the moment the plaintiff was injured, was being run at the rate of eighteen miles an hour, was not explanatory of anything in which he was engaged. It did not accompany the act from which the injuries in question arose. It was, in its essence, the mere narrative of a past occurrence, not a part of the res gestæ — simply an assertion or representation, in the course of a conversation, as to a matter not then pending, and in respect to which his authority as engineer had been fully exerted. It is not to be deemed part of the res gestæ simply because of the brief period intervening between the accident and the making of the declaration. The fact remains that the occurrence had ended when the declaration in question was made, and the engineer was not in the act of doing anything that could possibly affect it. If his declaration had been made the next day after the accident, it would scarcely be claimed that it was admissible evidence against the company. And yet the circumstance that it was made between ten and twenty minutes — an appreciable period of time — after the

[1] The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 34–35 (1865), cases.

[2] New England Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1 (1870).

[3] Dupont de Nemours v. Vance, 19 How. 171 (1856); The Clement, 2 Curtis, 366 (1855).

[4] Exp Byers, 32 F. R. 404 (1887), Brown, J.

[5] L. ad-mittere, to send to: receive.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170.

[1] See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 194–211; 1 Chitty, Pl. 600.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 169.

[3] See Whart. Ev. Ch. XIII.

[4] Story, Agency, § 134. See also 1 Greenl. Ev. § 113.

[5] Packet Company v. Clough, 20 Wall. 540 (1874), Strong, J.; American Life Ins. Co. v. Mahone, 21 id. 157 (1874); Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How. 164–65 (1858), cases; Whiteside v. United States, 93 U. S. 247 (1876); Xenia Nat. Bank v. Stewart, 114 id. 228 (1885), cases.

accident, cannot, upon principle, make this case an exception to the general rule. If the contrary view should be maintained, it would follow that the declaration of the engineer, if favorable to the company, would have been admissible in its behalf as part of the res gestæ, without calling him as a witness — a proposition that would find no support in the law of evidence. The cases have gone far enough in the admission of the subsequent declarations of agents as evidence against their principals. These views are fully sustained by adjudications in the highest courts of the States."

Contra. "As the declaration was made between ten and thirty minutes after the accident, we may well conclude that it was made in sight of the wrecked train, in the presence of the injured parties, and whilst surrounded by excited passengers. The engineer was the only person from whom the company could have learned of the exact speed of the train at the time. . . It would seem, therefore, that his declaration, as that of its agent or servant, should have been received."

"The modern doctrine has relaxed the ancient rule that declarations, to be admissible as part of the res gestæ, must be strictly contemporaneous with the main transaction. It now allows evidence of them when they appear to have been made under the immediate influence of the principal transaction, and are so connected with it as to characterize or explain it. . . . . What time may elapse between the happening of the event . . and the time of the declaration, and the declaration be yet admissible, must depend upon the character of the transaction itself. . . The admissibility of a declaration, in connection with evidence of the principal fact, as stated by Greenleaf, must be determined by the judge according to the degree of its relation to that fact, and in the exercise of a sound discretion; it being extremely difficult, if not impossible, to bring this class of cases within the limits of a more particular description. The principal points of attention are, he adds, whether the declaration was contemporaneous with the main fact, and so connected with it as to illustrate its character." [1]

See ACQUIESCENCE; COMPROMISE; CONFESSION, 2; DECLARATION, 1; DEMURRER; ESTOPPEL; EVIDENCE; PART, 1; SILENCE.

ADMIXTURE. See ACCESSION: CONFUSION, Of goods.

ADMONITION.[1] A judicial reprimand to an accused person about to be discharged. Whence admonitory.

ADOPT.[2] To choose: take, receive, accept. Whence adoption.

1. To make as one's own what formerly was not so; to appropriate: as, to adopt a symbol or design for a trade-mark, q. v.

2. To assent to what affects one's right; to approve, ratify: as, to adopt the unauthorized act of an agent; to adopt a by-law, a charter, a constitution, an amendment.

To "adopt" a route for the transportation of the mails is to take the steps necessary to cause the mail to be transported over that route.[3]

3. To take a stranger into one's family as son and heir; to accept the child of another as one's own child and heir.[4]

"Adopted child" and "adopted parent" are correlative expressions. "Adopting parent" and (but less frequently) "adopter" are also used.

Adoption, in this sense, is regulated by statute in each State. The child becomes in a legal sense the child of the adopted parent. At the same time it remains the child of its natural parents, and is not deprived of the right of inheriting from them, unless expresely so provided by statute.[5]

In the Roman law adoption was an act by which a person undertook to rear the child of another and appoint such child as his heir. Some special authority of law was necessary to constitute the relation. No right to adopt a child exists at common law. The methods known in modern law are by a decree of a competent court and by indenture.[6]

Adoption was unknown to the common law, but was recognized in the civil law from its earliest days. The effect was to make a stranger the son and heir of the adopting person. The stranger entered the family and came under the power of its head; he became as a child, and his children as grandchildren, of the adopter. Under the Spanish law as it existed while Texas was part of Mexico, no person having a legitimate child living could adopt a stranger as co-heir with his child. The statute law of that State has imported the civil law, modified in important respects. It gives the adopted party the position of a child so

[1] Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 105-6 (Nov. 1, 1886), cases, Harlan, J.; Bradley, Woods, Matthews, and Gray, JJ., concurring; Waite, C. J., Field, Miller, and Blatchford, JJ., dissenting,— opinion, pp. 107-9, by Field, J., citing, as in point, the declaration of the engineer and the ruling in Hanover R. Co. v. Coyle, 55 Pa. 396, 402 (1867). And see Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 560 (1877); N. J. Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 id. 649 (1887). "The true rule is correctly stated by Greenleaf, with its limitations." Darling v. Oswego Falls Manuf. Co., 30 Hun, 279, 280-82 (1883), cases. See further, as to res gestæ, Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333-43 (1886), cases — declaration by injured brakeman; Keyser v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., Sup. Ct. Mich. (1887), cases — declaration by an engineer: 36 Alb. Law J. 202, 203, cases; Williamson v. Cambridge R. Co., 144 Mass. 150 (1887) — declaration by conductor of a street car.

[1] L. ad-monere, to advise.

[2] L. adoptare, to choose.

[3] Rhodes v. United States, 1 Dev. 47 (1856).

[4] See Vidal v. Commagere, 13 La. An. 157 (1858): Webster.

[5] Wagner v. Varner, 50 Iowa, 534 (1879). See, as to inheriting lands in another State or country, Roes v. Ross, 129 Mass. 245-68 (1880), cases.

[6] Ballard v. Ward, 87 Pa. 361 (1879); Shafer v. Enea, 54 id. 306 (1867), Strong, J.; 8 W. N. C. 14; 10 id. 80.

far as to make him an heir, but does not make him a member of the adopter's family. It allows him to inherit, to an extent, along with legitimate children.[1]

ADS. See VERSUS.

ADULT.[2] A person twenty-one or more years of age.

Where an assault becomes "aggravated, when committed by an adult male on a female or a child, or by an adult female on a child," "adult" means a person who has attained the age of twenty-one.[3]

Some processes may be served upon an adult member of a man's family. See AGE; INFANT; NEGLIGENCE.

ADULTERATE. To mix with food, drink, or drugs, intended for sale, other matter inferior in quality, and, perhaps, deleterious in character.

In some States no recovery can be had for a sale of adulterated liquors.

Watered milk may not be "adulterated" milk unless expressly declared so by statute.[4] See OLEOMARGARINE; POLICE, 2; SEAL, 5.

ADULTERY.[5] Criminal intercourse between a married person and one of the opposite sex whether married or single.[6]

Sexual connection between a married woman and an unmarried man or a married man other than her own husband.[7]

At common law adultery cannot be committed with a single woman. The child of such is filius nullius, possesses no inheritable blood, and cannot therefore be imposed as a legitimate heir upon a husband, for the mother has no husband, and cannot consequently occasion an adulteration of issue. The heinousness of the offense, by that law, consists in exposing an innocent husband to the maintenance of another man's child and to having it succeed to his estate. For the offense there lay, not an indictment, but a civil action for damages for the private wrong.[8]

By the civil law adultery could only be committed by the unlawful sexual intercourse of a man with a married woman. In the English ecclesiastical courts the offense is (or was) established by showing that the husband has had illicit intercourse with a married or an unmarried female.[9]

To sustain the charge there must be proof of actual marriage. Reputation and cohabitation (q. v.) are not enough; there must be strict proof of the fact.[1]

In allegations for divorce, although presumptive evidence alone is sufficient to establish the fact of adulterous intercourse, the circumstances must lead to it not only by fair inference but as a necessary conclusion; appearances equally capable of two interpretations, one of them innocent, will not justify the presumption of guilt. Evidence simply showing full and frequent opportunity for illicit intercourse is not alone sufficient.[2]

"Living in adultery" means living in the practice of adultery.[3] It is not necessary that the parties live together in the same house continually, as man and wife. An habitual illicit intercourse between them, though living apart, constitutes the offense.[4]

Adulterine. Children begotten in adultery.

See BIGAMY; CONDONE; CONVERSATION, 1; DIVORCE; POLYGAMY.

ADVANCE.[5] 1. To move forward on a list or calendar of causes, for early consideration; as, to advance a cause — whence advanced cause.

2. To supply beforehand; to loan before work is done or goods made: as, to advance materials or moneys.[6]

An advance of money on a contract is a payment made before an equivalent is received.[7]

In maritime insurance, has no fixed meaning; commonly refers to advances to a crew or on account of freight; may include money expended by a fishing vessel for bait.[8]

In a will, "advanced" and "loaned" may be interchanged.[9]

In a will, may not be restricted to "advancement" within the meaning of a statute, but may include any benefit conferred which the testator might have considered an appropriation of his estate.[10]

In its strict legal sense, "advances" does not mean gifts — advancements, but a sort of loan; and, in its ordinary sense, includes both loans and gifts — loans more readily, perhaps, than gifts.[11]

---

[1] Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 204 (1886), cases, Willie, C. J. See also Barnhisel v. Ferrell, 47 Ind. 338 (1874); 14 Am. Law Reg. 632-34 (1875), cases; 1 South. Law Rev. 70-85 (1875), cases; 3 Cent. Law J. 397 (1876).

[2] L. adultus, grown up.

[3] George v. State, 11 Tex. Ap. 95 (1881). Compare Bell v. State, id. (1885): 21 Cent. Law J. 221, cases.

[4] People v. Tauerback, 5 Park. Cr. 311 (1864); 132 Mass. 11-14; 2 Q. B. D. 530. See generally "Adulteration of Food," 22 Am. Law Rev. 95-106 (1888), cases.

[5] L. adulterare, to make impure, corrupt.

[6] Miner v. People, 58 Ill. 60 (1871).

[7] Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 271-74 (1877); 27 Minn. 300.

[8] State v. Lash, 16 N. J. L. 384-90 (1838); State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 517 (1838); Matchin v. Matchin, 6 Pa. 336-37 (1847). See Leviticus, xx, 10; Deut. xxii, 22-28.

[9] Commonwealth v. Call, 21 Pick. 511-13 (1839). See also State v. Fellows, 50 Wis. 65 (1880); 1 Crim. Law Mag. 579-82 (1880), cases; 1 Law Quar. Rev. 471-74 (1885).

[1] Miner v. People, 58 Ill. 60 (1871); 16 id. 85; Montana v. Whitcomb, 1 Monta. 362 (1871).

[2] Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 141-42, 144-48 (1877), cases; Loveden v. Loveden, 2 Hagg. 1 (1810); 1 Whart. Ev. § 225.

[3] Goodwin v. Owen, 55 Ind. 349 (1876).

[4] Smith v. State, 39 Ala. 555 (1865); 14 id. 609.

[5] F. avancer, to go forward: avant, before.

[6] Powder Company v. Buckhardt, 97 U. S. 117 (1877), Hunt, J.

[7] Gibbons v. United States, 1 Dev. 51, § 145.

[8] Burnham v. Boston Mar. Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 399 (1885).

[9] Wright's Appeal, 89 Pa. 70 (1879).

[10] Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 488 (1872).

[11] Nolan's Executors v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 355 (1858).

A mortgage for "future advances" is valid at common law and throughout the United States, except where forbidden by local law.[1] See GUARANTY, 2.

Advancement. Giving, by anticipation, the whole or a part of what it is supposed a child will be entitled to on the death of the giver.[2]

A pure and irrevocable gift made by a parent to a child in anticipation of such child's future share of the parent's estate.[3]

A giving by a parent to a child or heir, by way of anticipation, of the whole or a part of what it is supposed the donee will be entitled to on the death of the party making it.[4]

"Advancements" means money or property given by a father to his children as a portion of his estate, and to be taken into account in the final partition or distribution thereof. "Advances" has a broader signification: it may characterize a loan or a gift, or money advanced, to be repaid conditionally.[5]

There is no intention to have a "gift" chargeable on the child's share of the estate. In "debt" the relation of debtor and creditor still exists.[6]

If, after an advancement, a will be made, the intention of the testator with respect thereto is a matter of fact determinable from the will and extrinsic testimony.[7]

Proof that gifts were made is not sufficient: it must appear that they were intended as advancements.[8]

Advancement is always a question of intention; and this must be proven to have existed at the time of the transaction. Thus, declarations of a parent that money, for which he held a note, was an advancement will establish it as such. The declarations must be of the res gestæ, accompanying the act.[9] See HOTCHPOT.

ADVANTAGE. See BENEFIT; COMMODUM; INTEREST, 1.

ADVENTURE.[10] 1. An enterprise of hazard.

2. A partnership for a single transaction.

3. Goods sent abroad to be disposed of for the benefit of the owner.

Also called a marine adventure; and evidenced by a bill of adventure.

In marine insurance, synonymous with "perils." Describes the enterprise or voyage insured against.[1]

ADVERSARY. See ADVERSE, 2.

ADVERSE.[2] 1. Acting against or in a contrary direction; opposed to; conflicting with, contrary to, the interest of another. In some senses, opposed to amicable.

As, an adverse — claim, conveyance, employment, enjoyment, interest, judgment, party, possession, proceeding, service, suit, title, verdict, use, qq. v.

2. Biased, hostile: as, an adverse witness.

Adversary.[3] Having an opposite party adverse; not amicable.

As, an adversary — action, judgment, proceeding.

ADVERSUS. See A, 8; VERSUS.

ADVERTISEMENT.[4] Information given by hand-bill or newspaper. See LETTER, 3; REWARD, 1.

Official advertisement. Such as is made by some public authority and in pursuance of law.

Advertisement in a newspaper, under direction of law, is equivalent to notice; as, of a proceeding in court, of the dissolution of a partnership. See PUBLICATION, 1.

The exclusive right to employ a particular method of advertising, as by a card displaying paints of various colors, is not the subject of a copyright.[5]

ADVICE. Counsel, opinion; information given, or, perhaps, consultation had, as to action or conduct. Compare ADVISE; INOPS, Consilii. See INFLUENCE.

As per advice. On a bill of exchange, deprives the drawee of authority to pay the bill until in receipt of the letter of advice: the drawer's letter containing information as to paying the bill.[6] See under LETTER, 3.

ADVISE. Where a statute authorizes a trial judge to "advise" the jury to acquit an accused person, a request by counsel that the [1] Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How. 27 (1859), cases; Jones v. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 U. S. 626 (1879); Nat. Bank of Genesee v. Whitney, 103 id. 99 (1880).

[2] [Osgood v. Breed's Heirs, 17 Mass. 358 (1821), Parker, C. J.

[3] Yundt's Appeal, 13 Pa. 580 (1850); 89 id. 341.

[4] Wallace v. Reddick, 119 Ill. 156 (1886), Scott, C. J.; Grattan v. Grattan, 18 id. 170 (1856), cases, Skinner, J.; Kintz v. Friday, 4 Dem., N. Y., 542-43 (1886), cases.

[5] Chase v. Ewing, 51 Barb. 612 (1868).

[6] Weatherhead v. Field, 26 Vt. 668 (1854).

[7] Wright's Appeal, 89 Pa. 70 (1879).

[8] Comer v. Comer, 119 Ill. 180 (1886).

[9] Merkel's Appeal, 89 Pa. 343 (1879); Holliday v. Wingfield, 59 Ga. 208 (1877); Dillman v. Cox, 23 Ind. 442 (1864); Fellows v. Little, 46 Vt. 35 (1865); Clark v. Wilson, 27 Md. 700 (1867); Eshleman's Estate, 74 Pa. 47 (1873); Dunham v. Averill, 45 Conn. 87 (1877); Rickenbacker v. Zimmerman, 10 S. C. 115-16 (1877), cases; 67 Law Times, 261.

[10] F. aventure, chance: L. adventurus, about to happen. Compare MISADVENTURE.

[1] Moores v. Louisville Underwriters, 14 F. R. 888 (1882), Hammond, J.

[2] L. adversus, opposed to.

[3] Ad'versary.

[4] Advertise'; adver'tisement or -tise'ment.

[5] Ehret v. Pierce, 18 Blatch. 302 (1880).

[6] See Byles, Bills, 91.

court "instruct" the jury to acquit should be denied.[1] Compare ADVICE; INSTRUCT, 2.

Advisable. See DISCRETION, 2.

Advisor. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; ATTORNEY.

Advisory. Containing counsel or a suggestion, yet not concluding or binding.

The verdict of a jury on an issue out of chancery is advisory;[2] a judge's opinion on the facts in a case may be regarded as advisory;[3] a nomination to an office may be an advisory designation.

ADVOCATE.[4] See JUDGE-ADVOCATE.

An assistant; an associate in conducting a lawsuit.

A person who makes a profession of presenting cases orally.

"Of advocates, or (as we more generally call them) counsel, there are two species or degrees: barristers and sergeants."[5]

In the United States no distinction is made between an advocate and an attorney, q. v.

ADVOWSON.[6] Taking into protection. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

Advowsons are (were) appendant, or in gross; and presentative, collative, or donative.[7]

ÆDIFICATA. See SOLUM, Ædificata.

ÆQUITAS. L. Equity.

Æquitas sequitur legum. Equity follows the law.

Where the law, or the common law, is ineffectual, equity affords relief, following at the same time the rules of law.[8] See EQUITY.

ÆROLITE. See ACCRETION.

ÆS. L. Money.

Æs alienum. Another's money. Æs suum. One's own money.

The principle of bankrupt and insolvent laws is fairly expressed by the phrase "æs alienum," which, in Roman law, signified a debt. The property of a debtor, to the extent of his indebtedness, belongs to his creditors.[9]

ÆSTIMATIO. See CAPUT, Æstimatio.

AFFAIRS. Things done or to be done; business interests.

A word of large import. A receiver who has the management of the "affairs of a railroad company" must necessarily have control and management of the road.[1]

AFFECT. To act upon; to concern: as, cases affecting public ministers.

Often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon a person or thing; as in a proviso that an act shall not affect any confirmed claim to lands.[2]

AFFECTION. See CONSIDERATION, 2.

AFFIDAVIT.[3] A voluntary oath, before some judge or officer of a court, to evince the truth of certain facts; as, the facts upon which a motion is grounded.[4]

Affiant. One who makes an affidavit.

An affidavit is simply a declaration, on oath, in writing, sworn to by the declarant before a person who has authority to administer oaths.[5]

It does not depend upon the fact whether it is "entitled" in any cause or in a particular way. Without a caption it is an affidavit.[6]

It is not necessary that the party sign the statement, unless a statute expressly so require. It is the official certificate which gives authenticity to the written oath.[6]

In common parlance, any form of legal oath which may be taken.[7]

Hence, in a statute, may mean simply an oral oath.[7]

The officer must sign the jurat; otherwise the document is not an affidavit.[8]

The certificate is no part of the affidavit, but the prima facie evidence that it is the affidavit of the person by whom it purports to have been made.[9]

Counter affidavit. An affidavit made or filed in opposition to the averments contained in another affidavit.

Supplemental affidavit. An affidavit containing averments upon the same subject-matter as another affidavit previously presented, and designed to remedy some defect in that other.[10]

---

[1] People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 18 (1886); Cal. Penal Code, § 1118.

[2] Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 252 (1879).

[3] Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 439 (1875).

[4] L. advocatus, one called upon.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 26.

[6] Advow'zon. L. advocatio, patronage.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 21-22; 21 E. L. & Eq. 417.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 330; 3 id. 441; 1 Story, Eq. § 64; 10 Pet. 210; 15 How. 299.

[9] 3 Pars. Contr. 428.

[1] Tompkins v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 15 F. R. 12 (1882).

[2] Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 83 (1876).

[3] L. affidavit, he has made oath: ad fidem dare, to pledge faith for.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 304; 2 Tex. Ap. 508.

[5] Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 311 (1875), Scott, C. J.

[6] Hagardine v. Van Horn, 72 Mo. 371 (1880). See 8 Iowa, 320; 16 N. J. L. 125.

[7] Baker v. Williams, 12 Barb. 557, 580 (1850). See 77 N. C. 334; 28 Wis. 463.

[8] Morris v. State, 2 Tex. Ap. 508 (1877); State v. Richardson, 34 Minn. 118 (1885); 18 id. 90.

[9] Hitsman v. Garrard, 16 N. J. L. 126 (1837); Hagardine v. Van Horn, 72 Mo. 371 (1880).

[10] See Callan v. Lukens, 89 Pa. 136 (1879); 1 T. & H. § 423.

Among the more common affidavits in use in civil practice are:

Affidavit of cause of action, which avers that a just cause of action exists.

Affidavit of claim, which verifies the statements of facts upon which a claim or demand is made.

Affidavit of defense, which verifies the statements of facts upon which a defendant resists a demand made upon him. See DEFENSE, 2, Affidavit, etc.

Affidavit of or to the merits (q. v.), which is to the sufficiency of the facts which constitute a defense in a civil action, instead of resistance upon technical grounds.

Affidavit to hold to bail, which is that the cause of action, brought for a civil injury, is valid.

Affidavits serve to verify allegations of fact not already matters of record, and thereby qualify them for judicial action; also, to initiate remedies, giving to statements the impress of good faith and probable cause. They are no part of the record in a case unless specially made so.[1]

Compare COMPLAINT, 2; DEPOSITION. See APPARERE, De non, etc.; CAPTION, 2; JURAT; KNOWLEDGE, 1; OATH; RECORD.

AFFILIATION. See FILIATION.

AFFINITAS. L. Nearness; affinity.

Affinitas affinitatis. The tie between the respective kindred of a married couple.

Affines. Relations by marriage.

AFFINITY. Relation by marriage. See AFFINITAS.

The tie which arises from marriage between the husband and the blood relations of the wife, and between the wife and the blood relations of the husband.[2] Opposed, consanguinity.

There is no affinity between the blood relations of the husband and of the wife.[3] See CONSANGUINITY; RELATION, 3.

AFFIRM.[4] 1. To aver a thing as established or certain, or as existing, or as provable as a fact. Whence affirmative, affirmation.

Affirmative (1), adj. Asserting as true; declaratory of what exists or is to be or to be done; positive. Opposed, negative.

As, affirmative or an affirmative — allegation, averment, condition, covenant, defense, evidence, pleading, representation, statute, warranty, words, qq. v.

(2), n. The affirmative: the party who maintains or supports. Opposed, the negative.

The burden of proof rests upon him who holds the affirmative of an issue.[1] See PROOF, Burden of.

Affirmative pregnant. An affirmative allegation implying a negative in favor of the adverse party.

Opposed, negative pregnant: a negative allegation involving or admitting of an affirmative implication, or, at least, an implication favorable to the adverse party.[2] See NEGATIVE.

Affirmatively. (1) In positive terms; by positive testimony, and not by way of inference.

Error in judicial action, not being presumed, must be shown affirmatively.[3]

(2) In favor of what is proposed; approvingly.

A legislative committee is said to report a bill affirmatively, or negatively.

2. To make binding what before was not obligatory, but voidable; to confirm, to ratify, qq. v. Opposed, disaffirm. Whence affirmance, disaffirmance.

An infant, to avoid a deed, must disaffirm within a reasonable time after his majority is attained. While the decisions differ as to what constitutes a disaffirmance, the preponderance of authority is that mere inertness or silence, continued for a period less than prescribed by the statute of limitations, unless accompanied by voluntary affirmative acts manifesting an intention to assent to the conveyance, will not bar his right to avoid the deed. He cannot disaffirm while infancy continues.[4] See DISABILITY; RESCISSION; VOIDABLE.

3. To support or confirm: as, for a court of review to affirm the judgment or order of a lower court. Opposed, reverse. Whence affirmance, affirmed. See CURIA, Per curiam.

4. To attest by a solemn declaration, made in a judicial inquiry, to speak the truth. Whence affirmant, affirmation.

An affirmation, which is generally made by such persons as interpret the words of Scripture "Swear

---

[1] 65 Pa. 81; 100 U. S. 222.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 434.

[3] Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. 333 (1847); 1 Denio, 95, 97; 29 Me. 545.

[4] F. a former, to fix: L. ad-firmus, steadfast.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 119 Ill. 357.

[2] Gould, Plead. 295; Steph. Pl. 381.

[3] 101 U. S. 601.

[4] Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 309, 312 (1880), cases. Brazee v. Schofield, id. (1883); Dawson v. Helmes, 30 Minn. 113 (1882), cases; Wilson v. Branch, 77 Va. 71-72 (1883), cases; Catlin v. Haddox, 49 Conn. 492 (1882), cases; Nathans v. Arkwright, 66 Ga. 186 (1880); Adams v. Beall, Sup. Ct. Md. (1887), cases: 8 Atl. Rep. 664; 32 Am. Law Reg. 713-15 (1887), cases; Bishop, Contr §§ 936-41, cases.

not at all," etc., as prohibitory of an oath, does not, like an oath, involve an appeal to the Supreme Being.

A common form is, "You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm, that you will state the truth," etc. Upon assent to this interrogation the affirmant is bound as by oath, and liable to punishment as for perjury. See OATH; PERJURY.

AFFIRMANTI. See PROBARE, Probatio.

AFFIX. See FIXTURE; SEAL, 1.

AFFRAY.[1] The fighting of two or more persons in some public place to the terror of his majesty's subjects.[2]

When persons come together without a premeditated design to disturb the peace, and suddenly break out into a quarrel among themselves.[3]

More of a private nature than a "riot."[3]

If the fighting be in private it is an "assault." Actual or attempted violence is essential; the "terror" is presumed. An abettor is a principal.[3] See ABET; ACCIDENT.

AFFREIGHTMENT. See FREIGHT.

AFORE. Before; formerly; previously.

Aforesaid. Spoken of formerly. See SAID.

Aforethought. Conceived beforehand. See MALICE.

AFRICAN. See CITIZEN; COLOR, 1; SLAVERY.

AFTER. Further off, behind: subsequent to a date or event; exclusive of; subject to.

Where time is to be computed "after" a day that day is excluded.[4]

In the devise to A, "after" providing for B — subject to, after taking out, deducting or appropriating.[5]

Does not necessarily refer to time; may refer to order in point of right or enjoyment. "After settling my estate" is equivalent to "subject to the settlement."[6]

"After the charges herein," and "after the payment of my debts," means subject to the charges, subject to the payment of the debts.[7] See ON.

A contract to pass a title "after" payment of the purchase price is to be understood as if it read "upon" payment.[1] See MATURITY, 2.

After-acquired. Obtained after some event: as, property acquired after a will was made, or after an adjudication in bankruptcy, or after a judgment is recovered. See ACQUIRE.

After-discovered. Came to light or was disclosed after an event or occurrence: as, after-discovered evidence, an after-discovered principal. See AGENT; AUDITA QUERELA; DISCOVERY, 3.

AFTERNOON. See DAY.

A complaint for not closing a saloon "at nine o'clock" and keeping it open till "past eleven in the afternoon" is not bad for failing to show that nine o'clock at night was meant.[2]

AG. Against; agreeing.

AGAINST. In opposition to; opposed; contrary to; adversely to. Compare CONTRA.

An enactment that neither party shall be allowed to testify "against" each other, as to any transaction with the deceased person whose estate is interested in the result, has been construed to allow the representative of the decedent to compel the opposite party to testify for the estate.[3]

A verdict in disobedience of instructions upon a point of law may be said to be "against law."[4]

Against the form of the statute. In an indictment alleges that a statute has been broken. See further FORM, 2, Of statute.

Against the peace. Words in use to charge a breach of the peace. See PEACE, 1.

Against the will. Words used to charge violence. See WILL, 1.

AGE. A period in life at which a person may do an act which, before that time, he could not do; "of age."

The period at which one attains full personal rights and capacity.

The time of life when a particular power or capacity becomes vested; as, in the phrases age of consent, age of discretion, qq. v.[5]

Full age. Twenty-one; majority.

Attained the day preceding the anniversary of birth. Considered as arbitrarily fixed, but very generally adopted.[6]

An infant is liable, as for deceit, for an injury re-

---

[1] F. affraier, to terrify,—4 Bl. Com. 145. "It affrighteth or maketh afraid,"—3 Coke, 158. L. L. ex fredare, to break the peace: disturb, frighten,—Skeat. L. frigus, shudder from fear,—Webster.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 145; Order of Friends v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 130 (1884); 70 Ala. 26; 33 Ark. 178; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 270; Arch. Cr. Pl. 1709.

[3] People v. Judson, 11 Daly, 33 (1849), Daly, J.—Astor Place Riot Case.

[4] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 190 (1864); 2 Hill, 355.

[5] Hooper v. Hooper, 9 Cush. (1851); 9 Pet. 470.

[6] Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. 378 (1831), Shaw, C. J.; Minot v. Amory, 2 Cush. 337 (1848).

[7] King v. King, 14 R. I. 146 (1883); id. 516. See also 68 Wis. 301, 573, 588; 9 H. L. Cas. 1.

[1] Hawley v. Kenoyer, 1 Wash. T. 611 (1879).

[2] People v. Husted, 52 Mich. 624 (1884).

[3] Dudley v. Steele, 71 Ala. 426 (1882).

[4] Declez v. Save, 71 Cal. 553 (1887); 40 id. 545; 4 Bosw 202.

[5] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 463; 2 Kent, 233.

sulting from his fraudulent representation that he is of full age.[1] See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; MUTUAL, 1.

Lawful age. The period in life when a person may do a particular act, or serve in a given relation.

Non-age. Under the age at which the law has conferred ability to perform an act; minority.

At common law a male at twelve may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen choose a guardian, and, if his discretion be proved, make a will of personalty; at seventeen be an executor; at twenty-one is at his own disposal, may alien his property and make all contracts. A female, by the common law, may, at seven, be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to dower; at twelve is of years of maturity, may consent to marriage, and, if proved to have sufficient discretion, may bequeath her personalty; at fourteen is of years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen be an executrix; at twenty-one dispose of herself and her lands.[2]

A male from eighteen to forty-five is liable to military service; at twenty-five is eligible as a Representative, at thirty as a Senator, and at thirty-five as President.

See ADULT; INFANT; INFLUENCE; INSANITY; SEDUCTION; WHEN.

AGENDO. See ARREST, 2 (3).

AGENT.[3] A person employed by another to act for him. Opposed, principal.

Agency. The relation between two persons as principal and agent.

The term agent includes many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given; as, a factor, broker, attorney, cashier, director, auctioneer, clerk, partner, supercargo, consignee, ship's husband, master of a vessel, qq. v.

The relation is founded upon contract, but not for the doing of an unlawful act or an act of a strictly personal nature.

General agent. An agent empowered to transact all business of a particular kind.

Special agent. An agent employed to do a single act or for a special transaction.

A "special agency" exists when there is a delegation of authority to do a single act; a "general agency" when there is a delegation to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business, or employment.[4]

To constitute one a general agent it is not necessary that he should have done before an act the same in specie with that in question. It is enough if the transaction involves the same general power that he has usually exercised, though applied to a new subject-matter.[1]

The principal is responsible for the acts of his general agent when acting within the general scope of his authority, and the public cannot be supposed to be cognizant of any private instructions; but where the agency is special and temporary, and the agent exceeds his employment, the principal is not bound.[2]

The doctrine of general agency does not apply to non-trading partnerships: as to them there is no presumption of authority to support the act of a partner.[3]

Public agent. A person by whom a power of government is exercised.

Public agents represent the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of government. They have such power only as has been specifically conferred upon them.[4]

Sub-agent. A person selected by an agent to perform a part or all of the duties of the employment.

An agent is answerable to his principal for the act of his sub-agent although the principal knows that the sub-agent has been employed.[5]

When an agent has power to employ a sub-agent the acts of the latter, or notice given him in the transaction of the business, have the same effect as if done or received by the principal.[6]

Universal agent. One who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal personally can do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do.[7]

Such agency may potentially exist; but it is difficult to conceive of its practical existence, since it puts the agent completely in the place of the principal.[8]

An infant, or feme covert (her husband consenting), may serve another as agent; but not so a person who has an adverse interest of employment.[8]

---

[1] Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472–80 (1886), cases.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 463.

[3] L. agens, agentis, doing, acting.

[4] Story, Agency, § 17; id. §§ 127, 133; Keith v. Herschberg Optical Co., 48 Ark. 145 (1886), cases, Smith, J.; 41 Ind. 288; 35 Iowa, 281; 102 Mass. 225; 9 N. H. 263; 14 N. Y. 421; 16 id. 133, cases.

[1] Commercial Bank of Erie v. Norton, 1 Hill, 504 (1841); Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 650 (1870); Mining Co. v. Anglo-Californian Bank, 104 U. S. 192 (1881).

[2] Minn v. Commission Co., 15 Johns. 54 (1818); Scott v. McGrath, 7 Barb. 55 (1849), cases; Adriatic Ins. Co. v. Treadwell, 108 U. S 365-66 (1883); Bohart v. Oberne 36 Kan. 289 (1887); Bickford v. Menier, Ct. Ap. N. Y. (Dec. 13, 1887): 26 Cent. Law J. 236; ib. 239–41 (1888), cases; 2 Kent, 620; Smith, Contr. 363; cases ante.

[3] Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 60–65 (1885), cases. The question was whether one member of a partnership for conducting a theater could bind his partner by a promissory note in the name of the firm, the copartner having no knowledge of the transaction.

[4] Whiteside v. United States, 93 U. S. 257 (1876), cases; Anthony v. County of Jasper, 101 id. 699 (1879); Exp. Virginia, 100 id. 347 (1879); Virginia v. Rives, ib. 313 (1879)

[5] Barnard v. Coffin, 141 Mass. 40 (1886), cases.

[6] Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 310 (1875), cases; Story Agency, §§ 452, 454.

[7] Story, Agency, § 21.

[8] Wharton, Agency, § 14; Story, Agency, § 4

The act of an agent, done in the usual way in the line of his employment, binds the principal.[1] His authority is limited to the usual and ordinary means of accomplishing the business intrusted to him.[2]

Knowledge in the agent is knowledge in the principal.[3]

The rule that notice to the agent is notice to the principal applies not only to knowledge acquired by the agent in the particular transaction, but to knowledge acquired in a prior transaction and present to his mind at the time he is acting as agent, provided it be of a character he may communicate to his principal without breach of professional confidence. The general rule, that the principal is bound by the knowledge of his agent, is based on the principle of law that it is the agent's duty to communicate his knowledge and the presumption that he will perform that duty.[4]

Where the principal has employed the agent to do an act upon the existence of a fact peculiarly within the latter's knowledge, and of the existence of which the execution of the power is a representation, a third person, dealing with the agent in good faith, may rely upon such representation, and the principal be estopped from denying the truth of the representation.[5]

But where communication by the agent would prevent him from consummating his own fraudulent purpose, the knowledge he possesses will not be imputed to the principal. In this sense, for example, a director of a corporation, acting wholly for himself, cannot be treated as the agent of the corporation. Uncommunicated notice received by the agent in prosecuting his private business will not bind the employer.[6]

An agent's act affecting negotiable paper requires specific authority.[7]

He is to exercise the highest good faith toward his principal.

He may make no profit secretly out of funds belonging to the principal.[8] See TRUST, 1.

The principal is answerable for the agent's act of negligence (q. v.) done in the course of the employment.[9]

He should name the principal as the contracting party in the body of a contract, and sign as agent.[1]

A note made by an agent with the principal unnamed in the body, but signed "B, agent for A," or "B for A," is the note of A, the principal. But inserting "for," "in behalf of," or "as" the principal, and signing the name of the agent, does not make the contract the principal's.[2]

In a bill payable to and indorsed by "B, agent," the word "agent" is a designatio personæ, and he may show by parol that he was merely an agent, as the plaintiff knew.[3]

Only where the power as given is under seal need the agent use the principal's name with a seal.[4] See further SEAL, 1.

Under a deed of trust a person may be the agent of another to buy and sell, without exposing the donor's bounty to liability for the agent's former debts.[5] See further TRUST, 1.

An agent who discloses the name of his principal is not liable on a contract, unless he agrees to be held.[6] The principal may sue on a contract made in the name of his agent.[7] But where a third party discovers the undisclosed principal he may sue either the principal or the agent.[8]

Where the principal and the agent are liable on a contract, each continues liable until satisfaction is made.[9]

An agency is dissolved (1) by revocation — (a) by the principal, except when the power is "coupled with an interest" or given for value, is part of a security, or a severable portion is executed and there exists no indemnity for the rest. Revocation takes effect from the time of notice. (b) The agent may renounce at any time, paying damages, if any, as to the part unexecuted. (2) By termination — by insanity or death, except when coupled with an interest; not, necessarily, by marriage or bankruptcy. (3) By extinction of the subject-matter or of the principal's power over the same. (4) By operation of law, in various ways. (5) By complete execution of the trust.[10]

See further ADMISSION, 2; ATTORNEY; COLLECTION;

[1] Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How. 164–65 (1858), cases; Hoffman v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 164 (1875), cases; Whiteside v. United States, 93 id. 257 (1876), cases.

[2] Williams v. Getty, 31 Pa. 461 (1858).

[3] Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 310 (1875), cases; Smith v. Ayer, 101 id. 320 (1879); Vicksburg, &c. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 id. 105 (1886).

[4] The Distilled Spirits, 11 Wall. 366–68 (1870), cases, Bradley, J.

[5] Bank of Batavia v. New York, &c. R. Co., Ct. Ap. N. Y. (1887): 7 Cent. Rep. 822. Cases pro and con, 26 Am. Law Reg. 876–81 (1887), cases.

[6] Innerarity v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 139 Mass. 333–35 (1885), cases; Wilson v. Second Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh, Sup. Ct. Pa. (1886): 6 Cent. Rep. 756; Frenkel v. Hudson, 82 Ala. 162–63 (1886), cases.

[7] 1 Pars. Contr. 62; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 676 (1868); Anthony v. County of Jasper, 101 U. S. 699 (1879).

[8] Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Kindred, 3 McCrary, 631 (1881), cases.

[9] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 209–10 (1858), cases; The Clarita, 23 Wall. 12 (1874); The Cahill, 9 Bened. 353–54 (1878), cases.

[1] Gottfried v. Miller, 104 U. S. 527 (1881), cases.

[2] Barlow v. Congregational Society, 8 Allen, 460, 463–64 (1864), cases, Gray, J.

[3] Bartlett v. Hawley, 128 Mass. 92 (1876), Gray, C. J.; 29 Minn. 121; 38 Ohio St. 444–45.

[4] Stanton v. Camp, 4 Barb. 276 (1848); Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392 (1879).

[5] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 725–30 (1875), cases.

[6] Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 396 (1879); Cragin v. Lovell, 109 id. 194, 198 (1883), cases.

[7] New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 381 (1848); Ford v. Williams, 21 id. 289 (1858).

[8] Wharton, Agency, § 464, cases; Merrill v. Kenyon, 48 Conn. 317 (1880), cases: Beymer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. 300 (1875); N. Y., &c. Steamship Co. v. Harbinson, 15 F. R. 688 (1883), cases; ib. 694–96, cases.

[9] Story, Agency, § 295; Wharton, Agency, § 473; Beymer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. 300 (1875).

[10] Story, Agency, §§ 462–500; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 306 (1886); 2 Kent, 643; 4 Pet. 344.

DELEGATUS; DESCRIPTIO; DIRECTOR; DISABILITY; FACERE, Qui facit; INTEREST, 2 (2), Coupled, etc.; LIVERYMAN; MANAGING; PARTNERSHIP; PRINCIPAL, 4; PROXY; RATIFICATION; RES, 2, Gestæ; SERVANT, 3; TORT, 2.

AGGRAVATION.[1] Whatever adds to the weight of an act — in its consequences or guilt. Opposed, mitigation.

Something done by the defendant, on the occasion of committing the trespass, which to some extent is of a different legal character from the principal act complained of.

As, where a plaintiff declares in trespass for entering his dwelling-house, and alleges in addition that the defendant also destroyed goods in the house and assaulted the domestics.[2] See DAMAGES, Special.

Aggravated. Increased, in severity or enormity: as, aggravated assault and battery, which is a more serious offense than simple assault and battery, q. v.

AGGREGATE. See CORPORATION, Aggregate.

AGGREGATIO MENTIUM. L. Collection of purposes; collected intentions; agreement.

Essential to a contract; where there is a misunderstanding, wanting.[3]

Not the origin of "agreement." That derivation was suggested by the harmony of intention which is essential.[4] See AGREEMENT; ASSENT.

AGGRIEVED.[5] Damaged, injured, exposed to loss: as, that the party aggrieved may appeal or have a writ of error.

The "party aggrieved" is he against whom an appealable order or judgment has been entered;[6] a party prejudiced by the judgment;[7] one against whom error has been committed by a decree or judgment entered;[8] one whose pecuniary interest is directly affected by the order or decree — whose right of property may be established or divested by the order or decree.[9]

Before a person can be said to be "aggrieved," so as to be entitled to an appeal within the meaning of § 1296 of the code of New York, the adjudication must have binding force against his rights, his person, or his property. The fact that an order may remotely or contingently affect interests which a receiver represents does not give him a right of appeal.[1]

In the New York act of 1858, the party aggrieved by proceedings relative to any assessment for local improvements in the city of New York may apply to vacate the same. This refers to the person injured by the proceedings. The injury must be a direct, not a remote or consequential, result.[2]

AGIST.[3] Originally, to feed cattle in the king's forest: a service performed for a consideration by officers called "agisters" or "gist-takers." Now, to pasture animals for pay.

Agistment. Where a man takes in a horse or other cattle to graze and depasture in his grounds.[4]

Agister. One who takes the cattle of another into his own ground to be fed for a consideration to be paid by the owner.

He has a lien for the keep; and may maintain trespass or trover against a stranger for taking the animals away.[5]

While he does not insure the safety of an animal he is responsible for ordinary negligence in the care he takes of it.[6]

He, and not the owner, is liable for injuries done by beasts prone to commit trespasses.[7]

AGNATI. See NATUS, Agnati.

AGNOSTIC. See OATH.

AGREE.[8] To concur in thought; to unite in mental action, be of one mind, assent. Opposed, disagree.

May be read "grant;" as where a grantor agrees that no building shall be erected on an adjoining lot.[9]

Arbitrators, judges, and jurors, are said to agree, and to disagree.

Agreed balance. See BALANCE.

Agreed statement of facts. Facts submitted as true to a court, for an opinion upon the law in the case. See CASE, 2, Stated.

Agreement. Union of minds to a thing; concurrence of intention; mutual assent. More specifically, a mutual agreement, a contract.

Consists of two or more persons being of [1] L. aggravare, to add to a load: gravis, heavy.

[2] Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 107 (1846), Royce, C. J. See also Steph. Plead. 257; 3 Am. Jur. 287–313.

[3] Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S. 49 (1876).

[4] 1 Pars. Contr. 6.

[5] F. agrever, to overwhelm: L. ad-gravis.

[6] Ely v. Frisbee, 17 Cal. 261 (1861).

[7] People v. Pfeiffer, 59 Cal. 91 (1881); 8 id. 315

[8] State ex rel. v. Boyle, 6 Mo. 59 (1878).

[9] Dietz v. Dietz, 38 N. J. E. 485 (1884).

[1] Ross v. Wigg, 100 N. Y. 246 (1885), Earl, J.

[2] Matter of Walter, 75 N. Y. 357 (1878); 91 id. 2; 100 id. 246; 141 Mass. 208; 143 id. 235.

[3] F. giste, abode: L. jacere, to lie.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 452.

[5] Bass v. Pierce, 16 Johns. 596 (1853).

[6] Story, Bailm. § 443, cases.

[7] Rossell v. Cottom, 31 Pa. 526–29 (1858), cases; Reddick v. Newburn, 76 Mo. 424 (1882); Kemp v. Phillips, 55 Vt. 69 (1883). Case of agistment of 1,200 head of cattle. Teal v. Bilby, 123 U. S. 572 (1887).

[8] F. agreer, to receive with favor.

[9] Hogan v. Barry, 143 Mass. 538 (1887).

the same mind, intention, or meaning, concerning the matter agreed upon.[1]

The expression by two or more persons of a common intention to affect their legal relations.[2] See UNDERSTANDING.

In the Statute of Frauds is not understood in the loose sense of a promise or undertaking, but in its more proper and legal sense of a mutual contract on consideration between two or more parties.[3]

In a popular sense frequently declares the engagement of one person only. When a man "agrees" to pay money or to do some other act, the word is synonymous with "promise," "engage."[4]

In popular signification means no more than concord, the union of two or more minds, concurrence of views and intention. Every thing done or omitted by the compact of two or more minds is universally and familiarly called an agreement. Whether a consideration exists is a distinct idea which does not enter into the popular notion. In most instances any consideration, except the voluntary impulse of minds, cannot be ascribed to the numberless agreements that are made daily. . . In its broad sense, synonymous with the concord of two or more minds, or mutual assent. . . If there is nothing to limit the meaning, regards promises only, not their consideration.[5]

In which ever sense understood in the Statute of Frauds the requirement is that it be in writing — if not to be performed within a year.[6]

The meaning of the contracting parties is their agreement.[7]

Also, the writing which preserves the evidence of the reciprocal promises.

Articles of agreement. The memorandum of the terms of an agreement; an agreement in writing.

Should state the names and residence of the parties, the subject-matter, the promises to be performed, the date, and any other elements of the contract.

See AGGREGATIO; ASSENT; CONTRACT; CONVENTIO; PARTY, 2; MERGER, 2; PERFORMANCE; RESCISSION.

AGRICULTURE. A person engaged in agriculture is engaged in raising cereals and stock. "Agriculture," in its general sense, is the cultivation of the ground for the purpose of procuring vegetables and fruits for the use of man and beast; or, the act of preparing the soil, sowing and planting seeds, dressing the plants, and removing the crops. In this sense the word includes gardening or horticulture, and the raising or feeding of cattle and other stock. In a more common and appropriate sense — that species of cultivation which is intended to raise grain and other field crops for man and beast; "husbandry," as defined by Webster.[1]

A person who cultivates a one-acre lot and is also a butcher and a day laborer is not "engaged in agriculture," within the meaning of an exemption law.[1]

A person is "actually engaged in the science of agriculture" when he derives the support of himself and family, in whole or in part, from the tillage and cultivation of fields. He must cultivate something more than a garden, though it may be less than a field. If the area cultivated can be called a field, the employment is "agriculture," as well in contemplation of law as by the etymology of the word. This condition being fulfilled, the uniting of other business not inconsistent with the pursuit of agriculture will not take away the protection of a law exempting one horse, harness, and a plow from levy and sale.[2]

See CROP; CULTIVATION; HORSE; IMPLEMENTS; TOOLS.

AID.[3] 1. Help; assistance; support.

Aid and abet. In common parlance, assistance, co-operation, encouragement.[4]

Assistance rendered by acts, words of encouragement, or support; or presence, actual or constructive, to render assistance should it become necessary.[5] See DECOY.

Aider and abettor. One who assists another in the accomplishment of a common design or purpose.

He must be aware of and consent to the design.[6]

Mere presence is not enough: something must be said or done showing consent to the felonious purpose and contributing to its execution.[7]

Aiders and abettors cannot be punished under a statute which creates a felony, unless the statute applies to all who are guilty, and not alone to the person actually committing the offense. Thus under a statute for confining in the penitentiary "any woman who shall endeavor to conceal the birth of her bastard child," aiders and abettors cannot be punished.[8] See CONSPIRACY; FELONY; PRINCIPAL, 5; LIQUOR, ad fin.

[1] Leake, Contr. 12.

[2] [Anson, Contr. 3.

[3] [Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, *17 (1804), Ellenborough, C. J.

[4] Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 131 (1821), Parker, C. J.

[5] Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 85-94 (1826), Hosmer, C. J. See also Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 131-34 (1821); Marcy v. Marcy, 9 Allen, 10-11 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.; Woodworth v. State, 20 Tex. Ap. 382 (1886); 31 F. R. 849.

[6] Marcy v. Marcy, 9 Allen, 10-11 (1864).

[7] Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 396 (1879), Swayne, J.

[1] Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. 515 (1872), Sneed, J.

[2] Springer v. Lewis, 22 Pa. 193 (1853), Woodward, J.; 62 Me. 526; 64 Ga. 128.

[3] F. aider: L. adjutare (ad-jurare), to help.

[4] United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. 476 (1827), Story, J.

[5] Rainford v. State, 59 Ala. 108 (1877), Stone, J.

[6] Adams v. State, 65 Ind. 574-75 (1879), cases, Hawk, J.; United States v. Snyder, 14 F. R. 555 (1882): 1 Sup. R. S. 858; 127 Mass. 17.

[7] Kemp v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 450 (1885), cases.

[8] Frey v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky. 190 (1885). See generally 18 Cent. Law J. 446 (1884) — Canad. Law Times.

Aid and comfort. In treason, any overt act which, if successful, would advance the interests of a treasonable design.[1]

Actual assistance is not essential.[1]

The subject of a foreign nation who furnished munitions of war to the Confederates, or did an act which would have rendered him liable to punishment for treason had he owed allegiance to the United States, gave "aid and comfort" to the rebellion, within the meaning of the act of March 12, 1863 (12 St. L. 820), and cannot recover the proceeds of property captured and paid into the treasury.[2]

Municipal aid. Assistance rendered by a municipal or a quasi municipal corporation, as, a township or a county, toward some work of internal improvement. Whence aid bonds.[3]

A steam grist-mill may or may not be a work of that nature.[4]

The legislature of a State, unless restrained by the organic law, has the right to authorize a municipal corporation to take stock in any work of internal improvement, to borrow money to pay for it, and to levy a tax to repay the loan. And this authority can be conferred in such a manner that the object may be attained with or without the sanction of a popular vote.[5] See BOND, Municipal; CORPORATE, Purpose.

2. Cure, remedy, supply. Whence aid and aider by verdict. See VERDICT.

Aid societies. See BENEFIT, Society.

AIR. A qualified property may be had in the air or atmosphere.[6]

The private owner of property has a natural right to purity of air; and, formerly, a like right to its free passage. Easements relative thereto are: a right to pollute it to an extent justified by the customary business of the locality; and, to send noise through it.[7]

No man may so use the air as to injure his neighbor. To poison or materially change it is a nuisance.[8]

An easement in the air coming over another's land cannot be acquired in the United States.[1]

Upon a conveyance, the right to air coming over other land of the grantor is implied as an easement of necessity.[2]

The right to pure air is an incident to land. While in cities the causes of pollution cannot be as easily traced as in sparsely inhabited places, yet, when the source of a well-defined nuisance is definitely known, the courts will protect the rights of any person injured by it. Each case must rest upon its own merits. The rule by which a court will be guided is the maxim that every one must so use his own property as not to injure another.[3]

See HEALTH; NUISANCE; OCCUPANCY; PROPERTY, Qualified; UTERE, Sic, etc.

A. J. See A, 3.

ALASKA. See TERRITORY, 2.

Congress has power, in its discretion, to prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors in the district of Alaska, and to make the violation of the prohibition a crime.[4]

ALCOHOL. See DISTILLER; LIQUOR.

An act of Congress approved May 20, 1887 (24 St. L. 69), the substance of which has been enacted in many of the States, provides —

"Section 1. That the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and special instruction as to their effects upon the human system, in connection with the several divisions of the subject of physiology and hygiene, shall be included in the branches of study taught in the common or public schools, and in the military and naval schools, and shall be studied and taught as thoroughly and in the same manner as other like required branches are in said schools, by the use of textbooks in the hands of pupils where other branches are thus studied in said schools, and by all pupils in all said schools throughout the Territories, in the military and naval academies of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, and in all Indian and colored schools in the Territories of the United States.

"Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers in control of any school described in the foregoing section to enforce the provisions of this act; and any such officer, school director, committee, superintendent, or teacher who shall refuse or neglect to comply with the requirements of this act, or shall neglect or fail to make proper provisions for the instruction required and in the manner specified by the first section of this act, for all pupils in each and every school under his jurisdiction, shall be removed from office, and the vacancy filled as in other cases.

"Sec. 3. That no certificate shall be granted to any person to teach in the public schools of the District of Columbia or Territories, after January 1, 1888, who has not passed a satisfactory examination in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the nature and

---

[1] [United States v. Greathouse, 4 Saw. 458 (1863), Field, J.

[2] Young v. United States, 97 U. S. 62 (1877).

[3] See 4 Neb. 455; 104 Ill. 285.

[4] Township of Burlington v. Beasley, 94 U. S. 310 (1876); Osborne v. County of Adams, 106 id. 181 (1882).

[5] Thomson v. Lee County, 3 Wall. 330 (1865); James v. Milwaukee, 16 id. 159 (1872); Kenicott v. The Supervisors, ib. 452 (1872); Railroad Co. v. County of Otoe, ib. 667 (1872); Town of Concord v. Savings Bank, 92 U. S. 625 (1875); Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 100 id. 47 (1879); Quincy v. Cooke, 107 id. 549 (1882); Ottawa v. Carey, 108 id. 123 (1883); Lewis v. City of Shreveport, ib. 286 (1883); City of Savannah v. Kelly, ib. 184 (1883); Grenda County Supervisors v. Bragden, 112 id. 261 (1884), cases.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 14.

[7] 10 A. & E. 590; 4 DeG. & S. 315; 11 H. L. C. 650; 10 C. B. 268; 19 W. R. 804; 4 Bing. N. C. 183.

[8] Appeal of Penn. Lead Co., 96 Pa. 116, 123 (1880); 2 Ld. Ray. 1163.

[1] Randall v. Sanderson, 111 Mass. 119 (1872), cases: 54 N. Y. 439; 25 Tex. 238; 17 Am. L. Reg. 440, note.

[2] Washb. Easem. 618; 115 Mass. 204; 34 Md. 1.

[3] Sellers v. Parvis, &c. Co., 30 F. R. 166 (1886).

[4] Nelson v. United States, 30 F. R. 112 (1887).

the effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics upon the human system."

ALDERMAN.[1] Originally, a senior: a superior in wisdom or authority.

A word of frequent occurrence among the Anglo-Saxons. All princes and rulers of provinces, all earls and barons, were aldermen in a general sense: but the word applied more particularly to certain chief officers.

In modern times, an officer in municipal corporations who is a kind of "assessor" to the chief magistrate.[2]

In England he sat with the bishop at the trial of causes, applying the common, while the latter expounded the ecclesiastical, law. Aldermen also sat as justices of assize, and exercised such powers of government as were conferred by the charters of their cities or towns, in that character taking cognizance of both civil and criminal matters. The term has designated an officer having judicial as well as civil power, in England from a period beyond the Conquest.[3]

In American cities "the aldermen" are a legislative body with limited judicial power, as, in matters of internal police; in some cities they hold separate courts and exercise magisterial authority.[4]

In some cities their sole functions are those of a magistrate of a court not of record and of limited statutory jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters; corresponding, in these respects, to justices of the peace in boroughs and townships. See COUNCIL, 2; JUSTICE, 2; MAGISTRATE.

ALE. See LIQUOR.

ALEATORY.[5] Depending upon an event the outcome of which is unknown; resting upon a contingency.

Applied, mainly, to annuities and insurance contracts. It is of the essence of all aleatory contracts that there should be risk on one side or on both sides.[6]

ALIA. See ALIUS.

ALIAS. L. 1. Otherwise; also used for—

Alias dictus. Otherwise called.

Alias, in the expression "A, alias B," denotes that those names are different descriptions of the same person. The word was formerly employed in connection with dictus—otherwise called. The use of alias alone to express the whole meaning has long obtained. The term has become familiar as equivalent to "otherwise called" or "otherwise known as." Generally the true name precedes the alias dictus. The term so used will avoid a variance or misnomer.[7]

2. At another time; formerly; before.

An alias execution is a process issued, upon a scire facias or otherwise, where the original execution has been returned, lost, or legally extinguished as a writ. It is another and different execution actually issued at a different time.[1]

ALIBI. L. In another place; elsewhere. The defense that at the time laid in the charge of an offense the accused was in another place.

Being proven, the conclusion is "not guilty."

To convict, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was at the place charged.[2]

The defense must cover the time when the offense is shown to have been committed, so as to preclude the possibility of presence at the locus in quo. This impossibility is to be proven like any other fact.[3]

The court, without discrediting the defense in the particular case, may observe generally that the defense is open to suspicion, because it offers opportunity and temptation to employ false witnesses, and because it may mislead through a mistake of honest witnesses as to the precise day and hour.[4]

ALIEN.[5] 1, n. One born in a strange country under obedience to a strange prince, or out of the liegeance of the king.[6]

One born out of the king's dominion or allegiance.[7]

A citizen or subject of a foreign state.[8]

In California a "non-resident alien" who may take by succession is one who is neither a citizen of the United States nor a resident of that State.[9]

Alienage; alienism. The legal status or condition of an alien.

Alien born. A naturalized citizen or subject.

Alien enemy. One who owes allegiance to an adverse belligerent.[10]

Alien friend. A citizen or subject of a friendly power; one whose country is at peace with ours.[11]

By the common law a person born within the dominion of the United States is a natural-born citizen

---

[1] A. S. ealderman, elder-man, elder: eald, old.

[2] Brown's Law Dict.; Spelman, Gloss.

[3] Purdy v. People, 4 Hill, 409, 387 (1842), Walworth, Ch. See 1 Hume, Eng. 69.

[4] [Bouvier's Law Dict.]

[5] Pronounced ā'-le-ā-tō-ry. L. alea, a die: chance.

[6] Moore v. Johnston, 8 La. An. 489 (1852); Henderson v. Stone, 6 Mart. 699 (1823); May, Ins. § 5.

[7] Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 250-52 (1868); 3 Salk. 223; 4 Johns. 118.

[1] Roberts v. Church, 17 Conn. 145 (1845).

[2] Howard v. State, 50 Ind. 192-3 (1875), cases.

[3] Briceland v. Commonwealth, 74 Pa. 469 (1873); State v. Northrup, 48 Iowa, 583 (1878); People v. O'Neil, 59 Cal. 259 (1881); Ware v. State, 67 Ga. 349 (1881); Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 975 (1882); State v. Beaird, 34 La. An. 106 (1882).

[4] See State v. Blunt, 59 Iowa, 469 (1882); Dawson v. State, 62 Miss. 243 (1884); 6 Crim. Law Mag. 655-63 (1885), cases; 22 Am. Law Rev. 297-98 (1888), cases.

[5] L. alienus, strange, a stranger.

[6] [Coke, Litt. 1:28 b.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 373.

[8] Milne v. Huber, 3 McLean, 219 (1843); 2 Kent, 50.

[9] State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 156 (1886); Civil Code, § 673

[10] 1 Kent, 72.

[11] [1 Bl. Com. 372.

whatever the status of his parents. An exception is made of the children of ambassadors.[1]

An "alien born" may not purchase lands for his own use, for the king is thereupon entitled to them. One reason is that if he could purchase, the nation might in time become subject to foreign influence. But he may acquire personalty, which is of a movable nature; besides that, trade demands this indulgence. As a consequence he may maintain actions concerning personalty, and dispose of it by will. An "alien enemy," however, has no rights unless by the sovereign's special favor.[2]

By the common law an alien may take lands by purchase, though not by descent; in other words, while he cannot take by the act of the law he may take by the act of the party. But he has no capacity to hold lands, and they may be seized into the hands of the sovereign. Until so seized, the alien has complete dominion over them. In this regard alien friends and alien enemies are alike. The title is devested by office-found,[3] q. v.

Disabilities as to holding realty have been removed in the States. See LAND, Public.

At common law an alien is protected in his person, as to such property as he may own, in his relative rights, and in his reputation. In return for protection he is required to pay taxes. He cannot become President, nor, in some States, governor. Seven years after he has been naturalized he may be elected to Congress. Unnaturalized, he could not be adjudged a bankrupt, he cannot take out a copyright, nor can he exercise any political right. See PATENT, 2; TRADE-MARK.

See further ALLEGIANCE; CITIZEN; DENIZEN; IMMIGRATION; NATURALIZE.

Alien and sedition laws. See SEDITION.

2, v. To transfer; to alienate, q. v.

Alienable. Admitting of transfer from one person to another. Inalienable, less frequently unalienable, not subject to transfer or devestment.

"Inalienable rights" are such rights as cannot be bartered, given or taken away except in punishment of crime.[4]

An "unalienable right" is one which cannot be surrendered to government or society, because no equivalent can be received for it, and one which neither the government nor society can take away, because they can give no equivalent. Of such is the right of conscience.[5]

ALIENATE. See ALIENATIO.

To transfer property to another; to make a thing another man's.

In common law to alienate realty is voluntarily to part with ownership in it, by bargain and sale, conveyance, gift, or will.[1]

The right, originally, was a right in the owner of realty to divert it from his heir.[1]

To transfer or convey a title.[2]

An entry to foreclose does not do this.[3]

Alienee. He to whom property — realty, is transferred. Alienor. He by whom realty is transferred.

Alienation. Any method whereby an estate is voluntarily resigned by one man and accepted by another, whether that be effected by sale, gift, marriage, settlement, devise, or other transmission of property by the mutual consent of the parties.[3]

An act whereby one man transfers the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things, to another.[4]

A transfer short of a conveyance of the title is not an alienation of an estate.[5]

Absolute alienation. A transfer of realty without condition or qualification.

Conditional alienation. A transfer of realty made to rest upon some event yet to happen, or upon some act yet to be done; as, a covenant to convey an estate. See CONDITION.

Blackstone describes four modes of alienation or transfer of title to real estate which he calls "common assurances:" by matter in pais or deed; by matter of record in the courts; by special custom; by devise.[6]

See CONVEYANCE, 2; MORTGAGE; TRANSFER.

ALIENATIO. L. Transfer, alienation.

From alienare, to make to be the property of another: alienus, another.

Alienatio rei præfertur juri accrescendi. The alienation of a thing is preferred in law to its accumulation. Alienation, rather than the accumulation, of property is favored.[7]

Limitations upon alienation, imposed by public policy or by general statutes, are designed to prevent perpetuities and accumulations of realty in corpora-

[1] Town of New Hartford v. Town of Canaan, 54 Conn. 40-45 (1886), cases.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 372.

[3] Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 619-21 (1813), Story, J.; Conrad v. Waples, 96 U. S. 289-90 (1877); Phillips v. Moore, 100 id. 212 (1879); Hauenstein v. Lynham, ib. 484 (1879).

[4] Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 756 (1884), Field, J.

[5] Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 60 (1868).

[1] [Burbank v. Rockingham Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 24 N. H. 558 (1852). See also Lane v. Maine Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 12 Me. 48 (1835); 13 R. I. 622.

[2] Huntress v. Place, 137 Mass. 409 (1884).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 287.

[4] Boyd v. Cudderback, 31 Ill. 119 (1863); 1 N. Y. 48.

[5] Masters v. Madison County Ins. Co., 11 Barb. 630, 629 (1852).

[6] United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 397 (1880); 2 Bl. Com. 294.

[7] See 2 Bl. Com. 175, 288; 3 Kent, 507; 4 id. 181, 441; 59 Pa. 342; 76 Va. 144.

tions and ecclesiastical bodies, and to protect creditors against fraud by debtors. But there is no reason why a person who is solvent should not make another, who parts with nothing, an object of bounty, thereby protecting him from the ills of life, the vicissitudes of fortune, improvidence, etc.[1] See ACCUMULATION; TRUST, 1.

ALIENI. See under ALIUS.

ALIKE. See EQUAL; EQUIVALENT.

ALIMONY.[2] Support; provision; allowance for necessaries or maintenance.

1. An allowance made to a woman for her support out of her husband's estate, after a divorce a mensa et thoro.[3]

Applicable to all allowances, whether annual or in gross, made to a wife upon a decree of divorce — either from bed and board or from the bond of matrimony.[4]

Alimony pendente lite or temporary. An allowance at the institution of the suit to pay the expenses thereof and to supply the wife with necessaries. Permanent alimony. An allowance for future maintenance at the time a divorce is decreed.

Originally allowed because the wife was without other means of support or of obtaining the money necessary to defray her expenses in the suit, the husband owning everything. Where she has sufficient separate property that reason does not exist.[5]

Not the separate property of the wife, but a portion of the husband's estate for her subsistence. At her death arrears belong to the husband, subject to the payment of her debts.[6]

The amount, which is largely discretionary with the court, is usually proportioned to the rank of the parties, and is, ordinarily, about one-third of their joint income.[7]

The allowance is based upon the existence of the marriage relation, the ability of the husband, and the circumstances of the wife.[8]

To entitle the wife to permanent alimony there must have been a valid marriage; by the common law the marital relation must continue to exist — a rule generally changed by statute; the separation must be by decree; and she must not be the guilty party — except in a few of the States. An independent suit for an allowance is not maintainable. In a few States a gross sum is given. The right ceases upon re-cohabitation.

A wife under sentence of separation from bed and board is entitled to make a domicil for herself; and, by her next friend, she may sue her husband for the alimony decreed.[1]

Consult the statutes and decisions of each State. See DIVORCE.

2. In Louisiana the necessary expenses of a municipality; also, funds therefor.

The duty of levying a tax to pay registered judgments is subordinate to the duty of first providing for "the necessary alimony or support of the city."[2]

"The duty of providing for the alimony of the city is lodged in the discretion of the common council, in the legal exercise of which the courts may not interfere."[3]

ALIO; ALITER. See under ALIUS.

ALIUD. See CONCEAL, 5.

ALIUNDE. See under ALIUS.

ALIUS. L. Another, other; different. Plural, alii.

Alia enormia. Other wrongs. See ENORMIA; INTER, Alia.

Alieni generis. Of another kind.

Alieni juris. Under another's right or authority. See JUS, Sui, etc.

Alio intuitu. Under another aspect.

Alios. Other persons. Whence et al., and et als., q. v. See also A, 8.

Aliter. In another manner; otherwise — held or decided.

Introduces an exception to a rule or general principle.

Aliunde. From another — person, place, or source.

Designates evidence derived from an extrinsic source; as, testimony offered to contradict, vary, or explain the terms of a written instrument, or to explain an ambiguity therein.[4] Compare DEHORS. See PAROL, 2, Agreement.

ALIVE. See DEATH.

When an animal is stolen "alive" it is not necessary, in the indictment, to state the fact: the law presumes it; but when dead, that fact must be stated.[5]

ALL. Compare A, 4; EVERY; OMNIS.

May mean "each" or "every one."[6]

In the acts of legislatures, as in common parlance, "all," being a general rather than a universal term, is to be understood in one sense or the other according to the demands of sound reason.[7]

[1] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 725 (1875). As to restraints in wills, see 18 Cent. Law J. 307-8 (1884), cases.

[2] L. alimonia: alere, to nourish, support, supply.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 441; 1 Kent, 128; 36 Ga. 319; 18 Ill. 40; 98 N. C. 420.

[4] Burroughs v. Purple, 107 Mass. 432 (1871), cases, Gray, J.

[5] Westerfield v. Westerfield, 36 N. J. E. 197 (1882); Collins v. Collins, 80 N. Y. 1, 11-12 (1880).

[6] Holbrook v. Comstock, 16 Gray, 110 (1860), cases.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 441-42; Bacon v. Bacon, 43 Wis. 203 (1877).

[8] Daniels v. Daniels, 9 Col. 150-51 (1885), cases.

[1] Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 590-98 (1858), cases. As to right to, after divorce, see 24 Am. Law Reg. 1-21 (1885), cases; and generally 26 id. 33-37 (1887), cases.

[2] Marchand v. New Orleans, 37 La. An. 18 (1885).

[3] United States v. New Orleans, 31 F. R. 537 (1887).

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291.

[5] Kollenberger v. People, 9 Col. 236 (1886); 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 359.

[6] Sherburne v. Sischo, 143 Mass. 442 (1887); Towle v. Delano, 144 id. 100 (1887).

[7] Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa. 391 (1852); Stone v. Elliott, 11 Ohio St. 258 (1860).

All cases. See CASE, 1.

All faults. See FAULT, 2.

All-fours. Entirely alike.

Cases or decisions are said to be or to run "upon all-fours" when alike in such circumstances as affect their determination. The expression is metaphorical — from the running of mated quadrupeds.

All rights reserved. See RESERVE, 2.

ALLEGARE. L. To lay before one: to relate, allege.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. He who alleges contradictory things is not to be listened to.

"A man shall not blow hot and cold." In Scotch phrase, no man may "approbate and reprobate."[1] See ESTOPPEL.

Allegans turpitudinem. See TURPITUDE, Allegans, etc.

Allegata et probata. Allegations and proofs.

A rule of evidence is, that the allegata and the probata must agree: the proofs must correspond with the averments.[2] See ALLEGATION.

ALLEGATION. Statement of what one can prove; positive assertion; an averment in pleading. See ALLEGARE.

Alleged. Asserted; claimed, claimed to be; charged: as, an alleged — fact, forgery, offense, deed, will, signature, execution.

Material allegation. Such an averment in the pleadings of an opponent as requires answer — by explanation or denial. Opposed, immaterial allegation.

A material allegation is one which is essential to the claim or defense, which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient.[3]

Defensive or responsive allegation. An averment by way of defense. Rejoining allegation. Complainant's reply to a defensive allegation.[4]

The rule is that the proof must correspond with the allegations in a declaration (or bill), but the requirement is fulfilled if the substance of the declaration is proved. The purpose of the rule is that the opposite party may be fairly apprised of the specific nature of the questions involved in the issue. Formerly the rule was applied with great strictness, but the modern decisions are more liberal and reasonable. . . The rule established by recent statutes and decisions is that no variance between the allegations of a pleading and the proofs offered to sustain it shall be deemed "material" unless of a character to mislead the opposite party in maintaining his action or defense on the merits. Irrespective of statutes, however, no variance ought ever to be regarded as material where the allegation and proof substantially correspond.[1]

See ANSWER, 3; DESCRIPTION, 4; REDUNDANCY; SAID; VARIANCE.

ALLEGHENY CITY. See COMMON, 2.

ALLEGIANCE.[2] The tie, or ligamen, which binds the subject to the king in return for that protection which the king affords the subject.[3]

When acknowledgment was made to the absolute superior, who was vassal to no man, it was in early times no longer called the oath of fealty (q. v.), but the oath of allegiance: therein the tenant swore to bear faith to his sovereign lord, in opposition to all men, without any saving or exception. . . There is an implied, original, and virtual allegiance owing from every subject to his sovereign, antecedently to any express promise.[3]

Acquired allegiance. Such allegiance as is due from a naturalized citizen.[4]

Local allegiance. Such allegiance as is due from an alien, or stranger born, as long as he continues within the king's dominions and protection.[4]

Natural allegiance. Such allegiance as is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth. Also called absolute or permanent allegiance.[4]

Allegiance is nothing more than the tie or duty of obedience of a subject to the sovereign whose protection he is under. Allegiance by birth arises from being born within the dominions and under the protection of a particular sovereign. . . A person born on the ocean is a subject of the prince to whom his parents owe allegiance. The child of an ambassador is a subject of the prince whom he represents, although born under the actual protection and in the dominions of a foreign prince.[5]

Allegiance is the obligation of fidelity and obedience which the individual owes to the government under which he lives, or to his sovereign in return for the protection he receives. . . It may be an absolute and permanent obligation, or a qualified and temporary one. The citizen or subject owes an absolute and permanent allegiance to his government or sovereign, or, at least, until, by some open and distinct act, he renounces it and becomes a citizen or subject of another

[1] See Broom, Max. 169, 294; 60 Cal. 600; 10 Mass. 163; 50 Mich. 126; 70 Pa. 274; 61 Wis. 261; 62 id. 67, 326.

[2] 10 Pet. 209; 2 Sumn. 209; Story, Eq. Pl. § 257; 71 Ala. 80.

[3] [Rhemke v. Clinton, 2 Utah, 236 (1879): Civil Pract. Act, § 66; Lusk v. Perkins, 48 Ark. 247 (1886).

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 100.

[1] Nash v. Towne, 5 Wall. 698-99 (1866), Clifford, J.; Brown v. Pierce, 7 id. 211 (1868).

[2] F. a-ligance, homage: L. ad-ligare, to tie, bind.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 366-69; 20 Johns. 191-92.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 369-70; 44 Pa. 501.

[5] Inglis v. Trustees of Sailors Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. 155 (1830), Story, J.; Shanks v. Dupont, ib. 242 (1830).

government or sovereign. An alien whilst domiciled in the country owes a local and temporary allegiance, which continues during the period of his residence.[1]

At common law natural allegiance could not be renounced except by permission of the sovereign to whom it was due.[2] This was changed by the act of Congress of July 27, 1868,[3] and by statute of 33 Vict. c. 14, May 10, 1870.

Whether natural allegiance revives upon return of the naturalized citizen to his native country is not settled.[4]

See EXPATRIATION; INDIAN; NATURALIZATION; TREASON; WAR.

ALLEY. See ROAD; WAY.

When not qualified by "private," is conventionally understood, in its relation to towns and cities, to mean a narrow street in common use.[5]

ALLISION. See COLLISION.

ALLOCATUR. L. It is allowed.

The name of a writ permitting a thing requested.

As, an order or proceeding — to remove an indictment, to stay execution of a sentence, that special bail be furnished, that a quo warranto issue, that a bill of costs be referred to an auditor.

Non allocatur. It is not allowed.

Special allocatur. The allowance of a writ of error required in particular cases.

ALLODIAL.[6] From the low Latin allodium: every man's own land, which he possesses in his own right, without owing any rent or service to a superior — property, in the highest degree. Opposed, feodum, a fee.[7]

Wholly independent, and held of no superior.[8]

Held in free and absolute ownership.[9]

"All lands . . are declared to be allodial, and feudal tenures are prohibited" — constitution of Wisconsin. This means little more than if the framers had said "free" or "held in free and absolute ownership," as contradistinguished from feudal tenures, the prohibition of which, with their servitudes and attendant hindrances to free and ready transfer of realty, constituted the chief object of the provision.[10] See FEE, 1 (1); TENURE, 1.

[1] Carlisle v. United States, 16 Wall. 154 (1872), Field, J.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 369; 2 Kent, 449; 8 Op. Att.-Gen. 139; 9 id. 356.

[3] R. S. § 1999.

[4] Whart. Confl. L. § 6; 18 Am. Law Reg. 595, 665 (1879).

[5] Bailey v. Culver, 12 Mo. Ap. 183 (1882).

[6] Ger. al-ód, all one's own: the whole estate,— Skeat.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 105.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 47, 60.

[9] 3 Kent, 495, 488, 496.

[10] Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 384 (1871), Dixon, C. J. See 1 Washb. R. P. 16, 41; 9 Cow. 512.

ALLONGE.[1] A paper attached to a bill or note for such indorsements as the original paper itself will not hold.

When an indorsement is made on a paper attached to and made part of a note, such paper is called an "allonge." The reason for using it is, there is no room on the note for the indorsement. This does not mean that there must be an actual physical impossibility of writing the indorser's name on the original paper. All that the mercantile law requires is that when it is inconvenient to write on the back of the note the real contract between the vendor and vendee, which, if so written, would pass the title, it may be written on another paper and attached to it with like effect. There are cases showing that an assignment of a number of notes at once, by a separate paper, never attached to either of the notes or intended to be, is not an indorsement.[2]

ALLOPATHY. See MEDICINE.

ALLOT. 1. To set apart a thing to a person as his share: as, to allot a fund, land. Whence allottee, allotment.

As usually understood, to set apart a portion of a particular thing or things to some person: as, to allot to a widow a portion of her husband's estate.[3]

2. To assign, appoint: as, to allot the justices of the Supreme Court to circuits.

ALLOW. To approve of, sanction; to permit, consent to. Opposed, disallow. See PERMIT; SUFFER.

In its ordinary sense, to grant, admit, afford, or to yield, to grant license to, permit. Implies a power to grant some privilege or permission.[4]

Allowance. The act of permitting or giving; also, whatever is given as a share or portion.

As, to allow, and the allowance of — an account, alimony, an amendment, an appeal, a bill of exceptions, a claim, a pardon, a pension, a sum to an insolvent.

"Allowing" claims against estates: the sanction or approbation which the court gives to the acts of an executor or administrator as manifested by his account.[5]

Allowance to a widow of money in lieu of dower: something substituted by way of compensation for another thing.[6]

[1] Al-lŭnj'. F. allonger, to lengthen.

[2] Crosby v. Roub, 16 Wis. 626-27 (1863); Folger v. Chase, 18 Pick. 67 (1836); French v. Turner, 15 Ind. 68 (1860); Osgood v. Artt, 17 F. R. 577 (1883); Story, Bills, § 204, Prom. Notes, §§ 121, 151.

[3] Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 586 (1868.)

[4] Doty v. Lawson, 14 F. R. 901 (1883).

[5] Gildhardt's Heirs v. Starke, 1 How., Miss., 457 (1836).

[6] Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 584, 586 (1868).

Allowance to a child or other dependent: ordinarily, only another name for a gift or gratuity.[1]

The honorable discharge of a soldier from service does not restore him allowances forfeited by desertion (included in which is a bounty), that is, everything which could be recovered from the government in consideration of enlistment and services. The forfeiture must first be removed.[2]

ALLOY. See COIN.

ALLUVIO. L. That which is washed to a place.

Alluvio maris. The washing of the sea.

Jure alluvionis. By right of alluvion. See ALLUVION.

ALLUVION. By the common law the addition made to land by the washing of the sea, a navigable river or other stream, whenever the increase is so gradual that it cannot be perceived in any one moment of time.[3] See ALLUVIO.

An addition to riparian land, gradually and imperceptibly made by the water to which the land is contiguous. It is different from "reliction" and the opposite of "avulsion."[4] See AVULSION; DERELICTION, 1.

The test as to what is gradual and imperceptible is, that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while going on. Whether it is the effect of natural or artificial causes makes no difference. The right to future alluvion is a vested right. It is an inherent and essential attribute of the original property. The title to the increment rests in the law of nature. It is the same with that of the owner of a tree to its fruits, and the owner of flocks and herds to their natural increase. The maxim qui sentit onus debet sentire commodum lies at its foundation. The owner takes the chances of injury and of benefit arising from the situation of the property. If there be a gradual loss he must bear it; if a gradual gain, it is his. The principle applies alike to streams that do, and to those that do not, overflow their banks, and where dykes and other defenses are, and where they are not, necessary to keep the water within its proper limits.[4]

It is generally conceded that the riparian title attaches to subsequent accretions to the land affected by the gradual and imperceptible operation of natural causes. But whether it attaches to land reclaimed by artificial means from the bed of the river, or to sudden accretions produced by unusual floods, is a question which each State decides for itself. By the common law such additions to land on navigable (tide) waters belong to the crown.[1]

The right to alluvion depends upon the fact of the contiguity of the estate to the river. The accretion belongs to the strip of land to which it attaches, rather than to a larger portion from which the strip, when sold, was separated.[2]

See ACCESSION; ACCRETION; BATTURE; RIPARIAN.

ALMS-HOUSE. A house appropriated to the use of the poor.[3]

Within the meaning of an act exempting property from taxation, will include a house used solely for the "purpose of affording pecuniary and other relief to persons of Swiss origin in need of assistance."[3]

ALONE. See SEPARATE, 2.

A granted to B, for the use of C "alone," the right to take water anywhere on his donation. Held, that "alone" signified that the grant was for the "sole" benefit of C.[4]

ALONG. Over against in length; lengthwise of. Compare BY, 1; PARALLEL.

"By the length of, as distinguished from across; lengthwise of;" as, a railway along a highway.[5]

A sidewalk "along the line" of land does not import that the sidewalk must at all points touch or be parallel to such line.[6]

"Along a line" means up to, extending to, reaching to, that line.[7]

In the expression "on, over, and along" an alley, is synonymous with on or over, not by the side of.[8]

An insurable interest on property of a railroad "along its route" means property in proximity to the rails upon which the engines run: which may be outside the lines of the roadway or lawfully within those lines.[9]

"Along the bank" of the Chattahoochee is definite enough to exclude the idea that any part of the river or its bed was not to be within the State of Georgia — by the cession of her unsettled territory to the United States in 1802. The call excludes the idea that a line was to be traced at the edge of the water as that may be at one time or another; — it is for "the bank," the fast land which confines the water of the river in its channel or bed in its whole width. Wherever the bed may be it belongs to Georgia, and not to Alabama. The line is to be determined, in each trial, by the jury.[10]

[1] Taylor v. Staples, 8 R. I. 179 (1865). See also Bacon v. Bacon, 43 Wis. 208 (1877).

[2] United States v. Landers, 92 U. S. 79, 80 (1875), Field, J.; 13 Op. Att.-Gen. 198.

[3] Lovingston v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 60 (1872), cases, Thornton, J.

[4] County of St. Clair v. Lovingston, 23 Wall. 68 (1874), Swayne, J. See 18 La. An. 129; 2 Bl. Com. 262; 3 Kent, 428; 2 Washb. R. P. 58, 452.

[1] Barney v. City of Keokuk, 94 U. S. 837 (1876), Bradley, J. See also New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. 717 (1836); 16 F. R. 816.

[2] Saulet v. Shepherd, 4 Wall. 508 (1866).

[3] People ex rel. Swiss Society v. Commissioners of Taxes, 36 Hun, 311 (1885): Webster.

[4] Salem Capital Flour Mills Co. v. Stayton Water Ditch & Canal Co., 33 F. R. 154 (1887).

[5] County of Cook v. Great Western R. Co., 119 Ill. 226 (1886): Webster.

[6] Commonwealth v. Franklin, 133 Mass. 570 (1882).

[7] Benton v. Horsley, 71 Ga. 626 (1883).

[8] Heath v. Des Moines, &c. R. Co., 61 Iowa, 14 (1883).

[9] Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 472 (1875). See also 13 Metc. 99; 42 Me. 585-86; 27 Alb. L. J. 385.

[10] Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 416-17 (1851).

ALS. See ALIUS, Alios.

ALSO. In wills, most frequently points out the beginning of a new devise or bequest. Imports no more than "item," and may mean the same as "moreover," but not the same as "in like manner."[1] Compare LIKEWISE.

ALTER.[2] To make a thing different from what it was; as, by cutting out a brand-mark.[3]

The word implies "another." A thing which ceased to exist can in no proper sense be said to be "altered." If altered it has merely changed its form or nature, but still has an existence. Thus, in forgery making may be by an original fabrication or by merely changing a thing already made into another thing. An altered note is still a note.[4]

To "alter judicial districts" means to change them. It is not a violation of usage to speak of the increasing or diminishing of a given number as an alteration or change in the number.[5]

Alteration. 1. A change or substitution of one thing for another: as, the alteration of a way.[6] See ADDITION, 1.

2. An act done upon an instrument by which its meaning or language is changed.

If what is written or erased has no tendency to produce this result or to mislead it is not an "alteration." The term applies to the act of the party entitled under the instrument and imports some fraud or improper design to change its effect. The act of a stranger is a mere "spoliation" or mutilation of the instrument, and does not change its legal operation as long as the original writing remains legible, and, if it be a deed, any trace of the seal remains.[7]

Material alteration. Such alteration as changes the language or meaning of the contract in a material particular. Immaterial alteration. Such merely verbal change as does not vary the contract in an essential particular.[8]

Suspicious alteration. Such change, apparent upon inspection, as would lead a man of ordinary caution to infer that the instrument had been illegally tampered with; or such apparent change in the language as would deter such person from accepting the instrument as reliable evidence of indebtedness or of an obligation.

That is a "material alteration" which causes the instrument to speak a language different in legal effect from what it originally spoke;[1] or which gives the instrument a different legal effect.[2]

A material alteration made without consent after execution avoids the instrument; but not so as to words which the law would supply. The question of materiality is for the court. If attested as made before execution does not detract from credit; nor, if it is against the interest of the holder. If suspicious upon its face, the law presumes nothing, but leaves questions of time, person, and intent, to the decision of a jury. If immaterial, presumed to have been made before execution. But some authorities require explanation before any altered instrument can be admitted in evidence.[3]

It will not be presumed that a party would sign a document with material clauses interlined or in the margin. The rule is strict as to negotiables. The burden of explaining alterations in ancient writings is not imposed when they are taken from their proper repository. Formal blanks may always be filled.[4]

The material alteration of a written contract by a party to it discharges a party who does not authorize or consent to the alteration, because it destroys the identity of the contract and substitutes a different agreement. Any change which alters the contract, whether increasing or diminishing liability, is "material."[5]

Some authorities hold that where there are no particular circumstances of suspicion the presumption of law is that the alteration was made contemporaneously with the execution, giving as a reason that a deed cannot be altered after its execution without fraud, which is never assumed without proof; other authorities hold the presumption to be the other way, and require an explanation of the alteration before the deed can be admitted in evidence.[6]

In the absence of proof the presumption is that a correction by erasure in a deed (a patent to land) was made before execution. This doctrine rests upon principle. "A deed cannot be altered after it is executed without fraud or wrong; and the presumption is against fraud or wrong." The cases are not uniform in this country, but the most stringent ones leave the question to the jury.[7]

---

[1] Evans v. Knorr, 4 Rawle, 68-70 (1833), cases; 23 Ill. 366.

[2] L. L. alterare: L. alter, other, another.

[3] Smith v. Brown, 1 Wend. 236 (1828).

[4] Haynes v. State, 15 Ohio St. 457 (1864).

[5] People v. Sassovich, 29 Cal. 484 (1866).

[6] Johnson v. Wyman, 9 Gray, 189 (1857). Shaw, C. J.

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566.

[8] See Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. 391 (1821): 10 Am. Dec. 267-73 (1879), cases.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 565; 9 Baxt. 462.

[2] Eckert v. Pickel, 59 Iowa, 547-48 (1882); 51 id. 675; 30 Minn. 154; 76 Va. 545, 544; 18 Ct. Cl. 565.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 564-68; 61 Ala. 269; 2 Bl. Com. 308.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 621-32, 732, cases.

[5] Mersman v. Werges, 112 U. S. 141 (1884), cases. Gray, J.; Angle v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 id. 342 (1875).

[6] Malarin v. United States, 1 Wall. 288 (1863). Field, J

[7] Little v. Herndon, 10 Wall. 31 (1869), cases. Nel

A voluntary alteration of any instrument under seal, in a material part, to the prejudice of the obligor or maker, avoids it — unless done with the assent of the parties affected. Such act differs from spoliation by a stranger, or accidental alteration by mistake, in which case the instrument retains its effect. In respect to commercial paper the rule is more stringent, the law casting on the holder the burden of disproving any apparent material alteration on the face of the paper. The ground of the rule is public policy to insure the protection of the instrument from fraud and substitution. The purpose is to take away the motive for alteration by forfeiting the instrument on discovery of the fraud.[1]

See FORGE, 2; NOTE, 2, Raised; RATIFICATION.

ALTERNATIVE.[2] Offering a choice between two acts, courses, or things: as, an alternative—covenant, obligation, judgment.

An alternative writ commands the respondent to do a certain thing or show cause why he should not do it: as, an alternative mandamus,[3] q. v.

Alternative pleadings are ill; and alternative judgments, decrees, and sentences are, as a rule, invalid. See OR, 2; RELIEF, 2.

ALWAYS. See PROVIDED.

AM. Amended, amendment; American.

AMALGAMATE. See CONSOLIDATE, Associations.

AMBASSADOR. See MINISTER, 3.

AMBIGUITAS. See AMBIGUITY.

AMBIGUITY.[4] The effect of words that have either no definite sense or a double sense.[5]

Ambiguity or duplicity is predicable only of language as to which it is needful to make a choice of readings; while "indistinctness," "obscurity," and "uncertainty" include these, and also cases of language devoid of sense or which does not present any meaning with clearness or precision. The case of a blank left for a name should be deemed an uncertainty.[6]

Patent ambiguity. Such ambiguity as appears upon the face of the writing itself.

Latent ambiguity. Where a writing is perfect and intelligible upon its face, but, from some circumstance admitted in proof, a doubt arises as to the applicability of the language to a particular person or thing.[1]

Ambiguitas patens is that which appears to be ambiguous upon the instrument. Ambiguitas latens is that which seems certain and without ambiguity for anything that appears upon the instrument, but there is some collateral matter out of the deed that breeds the ambiguity.[2]

A "latent ambiguity" is where you show that words apply equally to two different things or subject-matters.[3]

Evidence is then admissible to show which thing or subject was intended.[3]

Difficulty in applying the descriptive portion of a deed to the external object usually arises from a latent ambiguity, which, having its origin in, is to be solved by, parol evidence.[4]

A "patent ambiguity" means an inherent ambiguity which cannot be removed either by the ordinary rules of legal construction or by the application of extrinsic and explanatory evidence, showing that impressions prima facie unintelligible are yet capable of conveying a certain, definite meaning.[5]

The court has to do with cases of patent ambiguity; the jury with a case of latent ambiguity. When the intention cannot be ascertained the defect is incurable.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity of words is supplied by evidence; for whatever arises ambiguous from a fact [extrinsic] may be removed by evidence of the fact.[6]

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. As long as in the words there is no ambiguity, then no interpretation contrary to the words is to be made.[7]

A cardinal canon of interpretation, both of deeds and of statutes. The words, the context, and the subject-matter, are to be considered equally with the effect and consequences or the spirit and reason, if not before them.[8] son, J., quoting Campbell, C. J., in Doe v. Catomore, 71 E. C. L. 746 (1851).

[1] Neff v. Horner, 63 Pa. 330-31 (1869), cases. See also Batchelder v. White, 80 Va. 108 (1885), cases; Fuller v. Green, 64 Wis. 165 (1885), cases; State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 437-40 (1886), cases; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 1373-75, cases; 30 Alb. Law J. 245-49 (1884), cases; Bishop, Contr. §§ 745-76, cases.

[2] L. alter, other.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 273, 111.

[4] L. ambiguus, doubtful.

[5] [Ellmaker v. Ellmaker, 4 Watts, 90 (1835), Gibson, C. J.

[6] Abbott's Law Dict.

[1] Stokeley v. Gordon, 8 Md. 505-9 (1855).

[2] [Lord Bacon, Max. Reg. 23 (25), Law Tracts, 99-100. Approved, Lathrop v. Blake, 23 N. H. 60 (1851); Lycoming Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sailer, 67 Pa. 113 (1870); Deery v. Cray, 10 Wall. 270 (1869); Hawkins v. Garland, 76 Va. 152 (1882). See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 297-300; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 956-57, 961, 1006.

[3] Smith v. Jeffryes, 15 M. & W. *562 (1846), Alderson, B.; Webster v. Paul, 10 Ohio St. 534 (1860); 40 Ark. 241.

[4] Reed v. Proprietors of Locks, 8 How. 290 (1850); Moran v. Prather, 23 Wall. 501 (1874).

[5] Brown v. Guice, 46 Miss. 302 (1872), Peyton, C. J.

[6] Bacon, Max. 23; Broom, Max. 608; 2 Kent, 557; 13 Pet. 97; 100 Mass. 60; 8 Johns. 90; 67 Pa. 112.

[7] Broom, Max. 617; 2 Bl. Com. 379; 8 Mass. 201.

[8] Dame's Appeal, 62 Pa. 420 (1869), Sharswood, J.; cf. id. 136, 251; 34 La. An. 227, 957.

A latent ambiguity in a will, which may be removed by extrinsic evidence, may arise: (1) When the will names a person as the object of a gift, or a thing as the subject of it, and there are two persons or things that answer such name or description; or (2) when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no such person or thing in existence; or, if in existence, the person is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to the testator. When a careful study of the testator's language, applied to the circumstances by which he was surrounded, discloses an inadvertency or mistake in a description of a person or thing which can be corrected without adding to his language — thus making a different will, — the correction should be made.[1]

One Gilmer, after making bequests to two Presbyterian churches in Illinois, and other bequests, left the rest of his estate "to be divided equally between the board of foreign missions and the board of home missions." Held, that there was a latent ambiguity respecting the object of the residuary gift, but that the ambiguity could be removed by extrinsic evidence; that the evidence introduced, taken in connection with the bequests to the Presbyterian churches, showed that the testator meant the Board of Foreign Missions and the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, of which he was a member and an officer, and not any board of missions controlled by the Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, or other denomination.[2]

AMBULATORY.[3] 1. Moving about from one place to another; not held in any one place; not stationary.

The court of common pleas while it followed the king's household was said to be ambulatory.

2. Not fixed in legal character; not yet settled past alteration; revocable.

In this category is a sheriff's return until filed; and a will, to the last moment of testamentary rationality.

Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory (alterable, revocable) up to his death.[4]

AMBUSH. The act of attacking an enemy unexpectedly from a concealed station. A concealed station where troops or enemies lie in wait to attack by surprise; an ambuscade. Troops posted in a concealed place, for attacking by surprise.[1] See DISGUISE.

AMENDMENT.[2] 1. Correction of a fault; the curing of a defect; alteration for the better; improvement. Whence amendatory.

"Amend," in its most comprehensive sense, means to better. . . When a defendant is allowed to withdraw one plea or answer and to substitute another which rightly sets out his defense, it is a change for the better — an "amendment."[3]

Also, the writing or instrument made or proposed, which embodies the improvement.

Used of the correction, proposed or actually made: of an error in the pleadings or proceedings in a pending cause; of changes in bills, statutes, and ordinances, by lawmakers; of alterations in charters and by-laws; of changes in constitutions.

Material amendment. In pleading, such change in the substance of a party's case as destroys its former identity and occasions surprise (q. v.) in his adversary.

At common law, proceedings being in fieri till judgment, the courts allow amendments up to that point. After judgment enrolled, no amendment is permitted at a subsequent term; for only during the first term is the record in the breast of the court.[4] See further RECORD, 2.

An indictment, being a finding upon the oaths of the grand jury, can be amended only by their consent. See INDICTMENT.

Allowing amendments is incidental to the exercise of all judicial power, and indispensable to the ends of justice. Usually to permit or refuse any particular amendment rests in the discretion of the court; the result is not assignable for error.[5]

An appellate court will regard as made such amendment to a verdict as should have been made in the court below.[6]

A bill in equity may be amended, when found defective in parties, in prayers for relief, or in the omission or mistake of some fact or circumstance connected with the substance of the case, but yet not forming the substance itself, or for putting in new matter to meet the allegations in the answer. That is to say, by amendment the plaintiff may not make a new bill.[7]

---

[1] Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 217-19 (1886), cases, Bradley, J. See also Senger v. Senger's Executor, 81 Va. 694-97 (1886), cases; Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 397 (1886), cases; 64 id. 355.

[2] Gilmer v. Stone, 120 U. S. 586, 588-90 (1887), cases, Harlan, J. In Hannen v. Moulton, 28 F. R. 5-11 (1885), a devise of 1,500 acres of land was held defective on account of a latent ambiguity. See generally 5 Am. Law Reg. 140-48 (1866), cases.

[3] Ambulatory. L. ambulare, to walk or move about.

[4] Coke, Litt. 112 b; 2 Bl. Com. 503; 4 Ves. 210; 10 id. 379; 149 Mass. 221; 1 Story, Eq. § 606 a.

[1] Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 142 (1871), Peck, C. J.

[2] F. amender: L. emendare, to free from fault.

[3] [Diamond v. Williamsburg Ins. Co., 4 Daly, 500 (1873), Daly, C. J.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 407-8.

[5] Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 166 (1876); International Bank v. Sherman, 101 id. 406 (1879); Tiernan v. Woodruff, 5 McLean, 138 (1850), cases; 11 F. R. 781; 13 id. 653-55, cases; 132 Mass. 194.

[6] Shaw v. North Penn. R. Co., 101 U. S. 567 (1879).

[7] Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 144 (1854); Story, Eq. Pl. § 884.

In reference to amendments of equity pleadings generally, the courts have found it impracticable to lay down a rule for all cases. Their allowance, at every stage, must rest in discretion — a discretion depending largely upon the special circumstances of each case. But the ends of justice should never be sacrificed to mere form, nor by a too rigid adherence to technical rules of practice. Where the application comes after the litigation has continued some time, or when granting it would cause serious inconvenience or expense to the opposite side, great caution should be exercised. Where it would materially change the very substance of the case made by the bill, and to which the parties have directed their proofs, an amendment should rarely, if ever, be permitted.[1] See JEOFAIL.

2. Amendments to constitutions are made in pursuance of directions contained in the instruments themselves.[2]

What here follows relates, as will be seen, to the Constitution of the United States.

"The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided . . that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate."[3]

The President's approval of a proposed amendment is not necessary.[4]

The amendments themselves thus far made (May, 1889) are designated as "Articles in Addition to, and Amendment of the Constitution," etc., and are numbered "Articles I, II," etc., up to XV.

Upward of one hundred amendments were proposed by the minorities in the several conventions that adopted the Constitution. The First Congress referred them to a committee of one member from each State. Twelve articles were agreed to for submission to the States. The first two, relating to the number and the pay of the members of the lower House, were rejected, and the remaining ten ratified, December 15, 1791.[5]

Most of these ten amendments are denials of power which had not been expressly granted, and which cannot be said to have been "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" other powers. . . They tend to show that in the judgment of those who adopted the Constitution there were powers created by it which grew out of the aggregate of powers conferred upon the government, or out of the sovereignty instituted.[1]

They left the authority of the States where they found it, and added nothing to the already existing powers of the United States.[2]

The feeling that the Constitution as proposed for ratification contained no formal Bill of Rights led to the adoption of the ten amendments. All are designed to operate as restraints upon the general Government; most of them are for the protection of the private rights of persons and property. Notwithstanding this reproach, however, there are many provisions in the original instrument of this latter character.[3]

The provisions of the fifteen amendments will be found quoted and commented upon under the following titles:

I — ASSEMBLY; LIBERTY, 1, Of speech, Of the press; RELIGION.

II, III — MILITIA.

IV — SEARCH, Warrant.

V — CRIMINATE; INDICTMENT; JEOPARDY; PROCESS, 1, Due, etc.; TAKE, 8.

VI — CRIME.

VII — JURY, Trial by.

VIII — BAIL, 2; FINE, 2; PUNISHMENT, Cruel, etc.

IX, X — CONSTITUTION, p. 288; POWER, 3.

XI — SUIT, p. 990.

XII — ELECTORS, Presidential.

XIII, XIV, XV — CITIZEN.

And see generally CONSTITUTION; EXPRESSIO; GOVERNMENT; STATE, 3 (2).

AMENDS. Reparation; compensation for wrong done; satisfaction.

By 24 Geo. II (1751), c. 24, re-enacted in several States, a tender of amends to the party injured by a mistake made by a magistrate, acting as such, is a bar to a contemplated action.[4]

Any sum may be tendered, because, in torts, the standard of damages is uncertain and the party is as likely to recover at trial less than more than the sum tendered.[5]

In some States a like tender may be made by a minister or a magistrate who marries a minor without the consent of the parent or guardian; also, for involuntary trespasses committed by constables, revenue officers, and perhaps some other ministerial officers.[6]

See COMPENSATION, 2-4; DISTRESS; TENDER, 2.

---

[1] Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 761 (1885), Harlan, J. Approved, Richmond v. Irons, 121 id. 47, 46 (1887); Coubrough v. Adams, 70 Cal. 378 (1886): 17 id. 285.

[2] See Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 709-12 (1881); Re Constitutional Convention, 14 R. I. 651 (1883).

[3] Constitution, Art. V.

[4] Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. 378 (1798).

[5] See 1 Story, Const. §§ 301-5; 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 501, 555. While the proposed Constitution was before the people for adoption, the explanation that it did not need a Bill of Rights — the Government being "limited," having only such powers as were specially granted to it — "satisfied not one State." 2 Bancroft, Const. 241-42, et seq.

[1] Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 535 (1870), Strong, J

[2] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 522 (1875); Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 325-27 (1868), cases

[3] Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 226 (1882), Miller, J See also Spies v. Illinois (Anarchists' Case), 123 id 131 (1887), cases; 8 Saw. 262.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 16.

[5] 3 Shars. Bl. Com. 16; 3 Watts, 317; 5 S. & R. 209, 517

[6] See Arch. Pract. 1372, 1174, 1373.

AMERCE.[1] To be amerced, or à mercie, is to be at the king's mercy with respect to a fine to be imposed. Later, simply to be fined. Whence amercement.

Before the jury deliver their verdict the plaintiff is to appear in court, by himself or attorney, to answer the amercement to which he is liable in case he fails in his suit, as a punishment for his false claim. The amercement is disused, but the form remains. It was an arbitrary amount, unliquidated; a "fine" was a fixed sum imposed upon one not a party for some fault or misconduct.[2]

Now used of a mulct or penalty imposed by a court upon its own officers for neglect of duty. In several States, also, amercement is the remedy against a sheriff for failing to levy an execution or make return of proceeds of a sale according to statute.[3]

AMERICA. See DISCOVERY, 1; STATE, 3 (2), p. 966.

American. In the general mind now describes a descendant of Europeans, born in America, and is especially applied to an inhabitant of the United States.[4]

AMI. F. A friend. Also spelled amy. Compare AMICUS.

Alien ami. An alien friend. See ALIEN, 1.

Prochein ami. Next friend.

One admitted by a court to prosecute for an infant, because otherwise the infant might be prejudiced by the refusal or neglect of his guardian. He is a species of attorney; and the court controls his actions.[5] See FRIEND, Next; GUARDIAN, Ad litem.

AMICABLE. Friendly; agreed to; prosecuted by consent of all parties; opposed to adverse, adversary: as, an amicable action, an amicable scire facias to revive a judgment, mortgage, or other lien.

An amicable lawsuit is a suit instituted seriously but in a friendly spirit, that some matter in controversy, by judicial decree, may be settled definitely, as cheaply and with as little delay as possible.[6]

AMICUS. L. A friend. Compare AMI.

Amicus curiæ. A friend of the court.

Imports friendly intervention of counsel to remind the court of some matter of law which has escaped its notice and in regard to which it appears to be in danger of going wrong. It is not his function to take upon himself the management of a cause.[1]

AMNESTY. Has no technical meaning in the common law: is merely the synonym of "oblivion," which, in English law, is the synonym of "pardon." The literal meaning is "removal from memory."[2]

Properly belongs to international law, applying to rebellions which by their magnitude are brought within that law.[3]

"Pardon" is remission of guilt; "amnesty" an act of oblivion or forgetfulness.[3]

By act of May 22, 1872, the political disabilities imposed by the third section of the XIVth Amendment were removed from all persons except members of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service, heads of departments, and foreign ministers, of the United States.[4] See OATH, Of office; PARDON.

AMONG. Intermingled with.

Commerce among the States cannot stop at the external line of each State, but may be introduced into the interior. . . Comprehensive as "among" is it may properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more States than one. . . Commerce among the States must of necessity be commerce with the States.[5] See COMMERCE.

Each child has a share where a power is distributed "amongst" children.[6] See BETWEEN.

AMORTISE. See MORTMAIN.

AMOTION.[7] Turning out; removal.

1. Turning out the legal proprietor of an estate in realty before the termination of the estate;[8] an eviction. See EVICTION; OUSTER.

2. Removal of a corporate officer from office, as distinguished from depriving a member of his privilege of membership[9]—expulsion, disfranchisement.

This right, for just cause, is a common-law incident to all corporations Where the appointment is during good behavior, or the removal is for a specified cause, an opportunity to be heard should be afforded.[9]

Among the various causes are—first, such as have no immediate relation to the office yet are in them-

---

[1] F. amercier, to fine: L. merces, wages, detriment, pains.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 376, 378; 4 id. 379–80.

[3] Abbott, Bouvier, Law Dicts.

[4] [Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 58 Conn. 493 (1885), Pardee, J., where the word is used in a charitable bequest.

[5] Tidd, Pract. 100, n; Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Heisk. 19–20 (1883); 10 Abb. Pr. 40.

[6] Thompson v. Moulton, 20 La. An. 537 (1868); Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. 255 (1850), Taney, C. J.

[1] Taft v. Northern Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 416 (1876), Cushing, C. J. See also 11 Pitts. Leg. J. 321–22 (1864); 109 U. S. 68; 2 Mass. 215; 11 Tex. 698; 11 Gratt. 656.

[2] Knote v. United States, 10 Ct. Cl. 407 (1874).

[3] Exp. Law, 35 Ga. 296 (1865): Pardoning Power, 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 228 (1865).

[4] 17 St. L. 142. See, as to President granting a general amnesty, 8 Am. Law Reg. 513–32, 577–89 (1869), cases.

[5] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 194, 196, 227 (1824), Marshall, C. J.; 14 How. 573; 3 Wall. 782; 9 id. 43.

[6] 4 Kent, 343.

[7] L. a-movere, to move from, remove.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 198–99.

[9] See 2 Kent, 297; Bouvier, cases.

selves of so infamous a nature as to render the offender unfit to execute any public franchise — but indictment and conviction must then precede; second, such as are only against his oath and the duty of his office as a corporator and amount to a breach of the tacit condition annexed to his office; third, such as are offenses not only against the duty of his office, but are indictable at common law.[1] See TENURE, Of office.

AMOUNT. See DESCRIPTION, 1, 4; DISPUTE; EXCEEDING; MORE OR LESS; SUM.

AMPLIARE. See JUDEX, 2, Boni, etc.

AMUSEMENT. See ENTERTAINMENT; GAME, 2; RIGHT, 2 (2), Civil rights; THEATER; TICKET.

AN. See A, 4; AD; ANTE; ANY.

ANALOGY. See ARGUMENTUM, A simile.

ANARCHY.[2] The absence of government; a state of society in which there is no law or supreme power.[3]

"If the conspiracy had for its object the destruction of the law and government, it had for its object the bringing about of practical anarchy. And when murder has resulted from the conspiracy and the perpetrators are on trial for the crime, whether or not they were anarchists may be a proper circumstance to be considered in connection with other circumstances, with a view of showing what connection, if any, they had with the conspiracy and what were their purposes in joining it."[3]

See further as to case cited, ACCESSARY; CHALLENGE, 4; CHARACTER; CHARGE, 2 (2, c); CONSPIRACY; COURTS, United States; CRIMINATE; DOUBT, Reasonable; JURY; MALICE; OPINION, 2.

ANCESTOR.[4] The last person actually seized of an inheritance.[5]

In the law of descents the prepossessor of an estate.[6]

The ascendant of an intestate in the right line, as father, mother, grandfather, grandmother.[7]

The person from whom an estate descends; not a progenitor, in the popular acceptation.[8]

It is the immediate, and not the remote, ancestor from whom the estate descends.[9]

After the rule was adopted that inheritances might ascend, the ancestor was the person from whom the inheritance devolved upon the heir, and a child might, therefore, be the ancestor of his parent.[1]

Common ancestor. The parent from whom designated persons have sprung.

In the Ohio statute of descents the ancestor is any one from whom the estate is inherited. The ancestor from whom it must "have come to the intestate" is he from whom it was immediately inherited. Such ancestor takes the place of the first purchaser under the English canons of descent. . . No remote ancestor has any favorable estimation here. Neither the primary definition nor the legal sense of the word agrees with the most popular and obvious signification. He from whom the estate was immediately inherited is the ancestor, the propositus, from whom the estate came.[2]

Embraces collaterals as well as lineals through whom an inheritance is derived, and refers to the immediate ancestor.[3]

Uncles, aunts, and other collateral "antecessors" who are not in fact "ancestors" are sometimes designated as "collateral ancestors." In its ordinary import "ancestors" includes only those from whom the person spoken of is lineally descended on the father's or the mother's side. When used in a sense different from its ordinary import of lineal antecessors, so as to embrace all the blood relatives preceding the person referred to, it is qualified or enlarged by some other term.[4]

"Maternal ancestor" in the Massachusetts statute of 1851, c. 211 (relating to illegitimate children), is limited to progenitors in the direct ascending line, according to the common meaning and the only sense in which "ancestor" is used throughout the statute of descents and distributions.[5]

See further CONSANGUINITY; DESCENT; HEIR; INHERIT.

ANCHOR. See A, 3, A 1; APPURTENANCE; FURNITURE, Of ship.

A vessel fastened to a pier is not "lying at anchor;"[6] nor is a vessel purposely beached, though having an anchor out for caution.[7]

ANCIENT.[8] 1. Created, made, conceded, or established at a day now long past; beginning with a period indefinitely early; dating from a time so remote as to acquire or have attached some right or privilege accorded in view of long continuance: as,

[1] Rex v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 538 (1758), Mansfield, C. J.; 1 B. & Ad. 936; L. R., 5 H. L. 636. See generally 24 Cent. Law J. 99 (1887), cases.

[2] Gk. anarchi'a, lack of government: an'archos, without a chief.

[3] [Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 253 (Sept. 14, 1887), Magruder, J.,—"Anarchists' Case." [Webster's Dict. Same case, 9 Cr. Law Mag. 829, 926-35, cases; 12 N. E. Rep. No. 16; 18 Chic. Leg. News, 309, 411.

[4] F. ancessour, a fore-goer: L. antecessor: ante cedere, to go before.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 209, 443; 2 Kent, 404, 419.

[6] [McCarthy v. Marsh 5 N. Y. 275 (1851).

[7] [Valentine v. Wetherill, 31 Barb. 659 (1859).

[8] Bailey v. Bailey, 25 Mich. 188 (1872).

[9] Murphy v. Henry, 35 Ind. 450 (1871).

[1] Lavery v. Egan, 143 Mass. 391 (1887), Field, J.

[2] Lessees of Prickett v. Parker, 3 Ohio St. 396-97 (1854). See also Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. 91 (1829).

[3] Wheeler v. Clutterbuck, 52 N. Y. 71 (1873).

[4] Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. 446-47 (1848), Walworth, Ch.

[5] Pratt v. Atwood, 108 Mass. 42 (1871), Gray, J.

[6] Walsh v. N. Y. Floating Dry-Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 459 (1879).

[7] Reid v. Lancaster Fire Ins. Co., 19 Hun, 286 (1879).

[8] F. ancien. L. antianus, of a former time, old. Formerly, antient,—2 Bl. Com. 99; 3 id. 274; 4 id. 380.

ancient — demesne, house, lights, wall, writings, qq. v.

2. A corruption or misprint of enceinte, pregnant — infirm: as, an ancient witness. See DEPOSITION.

ANCILLARY.[1] Auxiliary; subordinate; incidental; additional.

The king's court is not ancillary to any other.[2] Thus also are or may be related — one constitutional power to another;[3] implied powers in a corporation;[4] a writ of certiorari to a writ of habeas corpus; a capias, originally, to a summons, judgment or decree, to secure obedience or enforcement; a sequestration to preserve from waste movables on mortgaged property;[5] a commission to aid the court by hearing and report;[6] one bill in equity to another bill;[7] an attachment to another proceeding;[8] an action in aid of an execution at law to the original suit;[9] an act toward the performance of an agreement;[10] an administration (q. v.) subordinate to another;[11] parol testimony in some relations;[12] an outbuilding, to a dwelling-house; a statute, to a constitutional amendment.[13]

ANCIPITIS. See USUS, Ancipitis.

AND. Compare ET.

Construed to mean "or" (and "or" to mean "and") when necessary to give effect to the intention — of parties to contracts, of testators, of law-makers; but not so when the evident intent would thereby be defeated.[14] See further OR, 2.

ANGER. See ASSAULT; MALICE.

ANIMAL. Any irrational being, as distinguished from man.

In a common sense, a quadruped; not, a bird or a fowl.[15]

In discussions in the cases as to what is included by "animals" in the law of property and of larceny, in duty laws, in statutes punishing malicious mischief, and the like, the term is limited by notions of property. . . Steady progress has been made toward the recognition of all sentient life as deserving legal protection, irrespective of the property aspect.[16]

While the use in a particular context or statute may be limited by the general meaning and purpose, the term, in jurisprudence, may include any living creature not human or rational.[1]

In a statute against cruelty to animals includes wild and noxious animals, unless the purpose of the statute or the context indicates a limited meaning.[2]

Animals are distinguished as domitæ naturæ, of a tame disposition; and feræ naturæ, of a wild disposition — wild by nature.

Animals of a "base" nature are such as are not fit for food, but are kept for pleasure, curiosity or whim.

In such animals as are of a tame nature, a man may have as absolute a property as in any inanimate being; because they continue perpetually in his occupation, and will not stray from his house or person unless by accident or fraudulent enticement, in which cases the owner does not lose his property. The stealing or forcible abduction of such property is also felony: for these are things of intrinsic value, serving for the food of man or for the uses of husbandry. But in animals feræ naturæ a man can have no absolute, merely a qualified, property — per industriam, by reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, training, or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty;—propter impotentiam or rationе impotentiæ, on account of their own inability, as, in young animals, until they can fly or run away;— propter privilegium, by virtue of privilege, as of game within a liberty. While these creatures, reclaimed from the wildness of their nature, thus continue qualified or defeasible property they are as much under the protection of the law as if the owner's absolutely and indefeasibly. It is also as much a felony to steal such of them as are fit for food as to steal tame animals; but not so if they are kept only for pleasure, curiosity or whim, as dogs, bears, cats, parrots, singing-birds: because their value is then not intrinsic, but depends purely upon the caprice of the owner, though the taking is such an invasion of property as may amount to a civil injury and be redressed by a civil action.[3]

At common law larceny may be committed of a collar or chain attached to an animal not itself the subject of property.[4]

A property in dogs (q. v.) is now recognized under laws providing for their registration and taxation.[5]

---

[1] An'-cil-lā-ry. L. ancillaris, ancilla, a handmaid.
[2] 3 Bl. Com. 98.
[3] Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 535 (1870).
[4] 1 Pars. Contr. 141.
[5] Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 21 Wall. 136 (1874).
[6] Forbes Street, 70 Pa. 138 (1871).
[7] Christmas v. Russell, 14 Wall. 88 (1871).
[8] Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 314 (1870).
[9] Claflin v. McDermott, 13 F. R. 876 (1882).
[10] 1 Story, Eq. § 768.
[11] 1 Story, Eq. § 583.
[12] Wall v. Dovey, 60 Pa. 218 (1869).
[13] 109 U. S. 20; 111 id. 592. So also an attachment may be, 48 Ark. 200; and one section in a charter to another section, 31 F. R. 218.
[14] Litchfield v Cudworth, 15 Pick. 27 (1833); 14 id. 453; United States v. Fisk, 3 Wall. 447 (1865); Dumont v. United States, 98 U. S. 142 (1878); 55 Vt. 470.
[15] Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. 165 (1871).
[16] [Abbott's Law Dict.

---

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.]
[2] Commonwealth v. Turner, 145 Mass. 300 (Nov. 23, 1887): Pub. Sts. ch. 207, § 58.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 390-94. See also 2 Kent, 349-50; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns. *75 (1822) — as to a deer wounded by one and captured by another person; State v. Krider, 78 N. C. 482 (1878) — as to fish (in a pond?); Swift v. Gifford, 2 Low. 112-15 (187-), cases,— as to a harpooned whale; Ghen v. Rich, 8 F. R. 159 (1881), cases,— as to a dead whale found floating.
[4] 4 Bl. Com. 235.
[5] See Morewood v. Wakefield, 133 Mass. 341 (1882).

The owner of an animal or the person who has the exclusive control of it is liable for injuries which he negligently suffers it to commit. This liability stands upon the ground of actual or presumed negligence. If the injury is committed while trespassing upon land the owner is responsible for damage directly resulting as a natural consequence. In other cases he may be liable although there is no trespass and the animal is rightfully in its place; as where the injury comes from the vicious disposition or mischievous habits of the animal of which the owner had previous actual notice; or where, without actual notice, the disposition and habits are so universal among the species that notice is presumed, as in the case of wild and savage beasts. The owner or keeper of such animals, without actual or implied notice of their character, is bound at his peril to keep them at all times and in all places properly secured, and is responsible to any one who without fault in himself is injured by them.[1]

Animals ferœ naturæ, as a class, are known to be mischievous; and the rule is well settled that whoever undertakes to keep any such animal in a place of public resort is or may be liable for injuries inflicted by it on a party who is without fault. It is not necessary to aver negligence in the keeper, as the burden is upon the defendant to disprove that implied imputation; it is enough to aver ferocity in the animal and knowledge of that fact in the defendant. Certain animals ferœ naturæ may doubtless be domesticated to such an extent they may be classed with tame animals; but as they are prone to relapse into their wild habits and to become mischievous, the rule is that if they do so, and the owner becomes notified, they will thereafter be viewed as not having been thoroughly and safely domesticated.[2]

See ACCESSION; AGIST; ALIVE; AT LARGE; BAIT, 2; CATTLE; CRUELTY, 3; DAMAGE, Feasant; DISTRESS; ESTRAY; FENCE; GAME, 1; IMPLEMENTS; LEVANT; MAIM, 2; NUISANCE; OYSTER; PARTUS; POUND, 2; SOUND, 2 (2); STOCK, 1; TEAM; TRESPASS; VICIOUS; WANTON; WARRANTY, 2; WARREN; WORRY; WOUND.

Harrington v. Miles, 11 Kan. 483-84 (1873), cases: 15 Am. Rep. 356, cases; State v. Doe, 79 Ind. 9 (1881), cases; Jemison v. Southwestern R. Co., 75 Ga. 445 (1885).

[1] Lyons v. Merrick, 105 Mass. 76 (1870), Colt, J.; Hewes v. McNamara, 106 id. 281 (1871); Mann v. Weiand, 81* Pa. 253-55 (1875), cases; Marble v. Ross, 124 Mass. 47-49 (1878), cases; Linnehan v. Sampson, 126 id. 510-11 (1879), cases; Muller v. McKeeson, 73 N. Y. 198-204 (1878), cases; Lynch v. McNally, ib. 349 (1878); State v. Harriman, 75 Me. 562 (1884); 56 Ala. 402; 49 Conn. 113; 69 Ga. 447; 75 Ill. 141; 88 id. 182; 35 Ind. 178; 34 Mich. 288; 27 Pa. 331; 15 id. 188; 51 Vt. 18; 38 Wis. 307; 2 Alb. L. J. 101; 20 id. 6, 104; 46 Am. R. 425.

As to animals trespassing on a railroad track, see Kansas City, &c. R. Co. v. Kirksey, 48 Ark. 376 (1886), cases.

[2] Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 651-56 (1878), Clifford, J., citing many cases. The plaintiff below, one Mrs. Edgar, while visiting Congress Spring park, Saratoga, N. Y., was injured by a deer. The jury awarded her $6,500 damages, and the judgment therefor was affirmed by the circuit court for the northern district of New York and by the United States Supreme Court. See also Twigg v. Ryland, 62 Md. 385-88 (1884), cases: 24 Am. Law Reg. 191, 196-97, cases: Meracle v. Down, 64 Wis. 323 (1885); Laherty v. Hogan, 13 Daly, 533 (1886); State v. Donahue, N. J. L. (1887), cases: 10 Atl. Rep. 150; 26 Am. Law Reg. 773-78 (1887), cases.

"If an ox gore a man or a woman that they die . . and if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death." Exodus, xxi, 28, 29.

ANIMUS. L. Mind; disposition; intention, will.

Animo. With, from, or in, mind or intention: as, in eo animo, ex animo, malo animo, quo animo, qq. v.

Animus, animum (objective form), mind or intention, animo, with intention or design — cancellandi, of canceling; capiendi, of seizing or taking; dedicandi, of dedicating or donating; defamandi, of defaming; donandi, of giving; furandi, of stealing; lucrandi, of gaining; manendi, of remaining; morandi, of staying, remaining; possidendi, of possessing, appropriating; recipiendi, of receiving; republicandi, of republishing; revertendi, of returning; revocandi, of revoking; testandi, of making a will.

ANNEX.[1] To put in permanent connection with; to attach.

As, to annex — a fixture to a freehold; a condition to an estate; a covenant to land; one writing to another, as, an exhibit to a petition or affidavit of claim; one town to another town.[2]

Figuratively, a penalty or punishment is said to be annexed to an act.[3]

Annex incidents. To show what things are customarily treated as incidental and accessorial to the principal thing.[4]

Actual annexation. Such annexation as exists in point of fact; as, that of a fixture to a freehold. Constructive annexation. Exists in inference of law; as, that of a deed to land, that of a key to a house.

A fixture is "annexed to the freehold" when fastened to or connected with it. Mere juxtaposition, or the laying of an object, however heavy, on the freehold, does not amount to an annexation.[5]

A deposition taken under a commission is suffi-

[1] F. annexer: L. annectere, to knit, tie, bind to.

[2] 100 U. S. 530; 74 Me. 180.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 415.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 294.

[5] Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64 (1859): 2 Sm. L. C. 296.

cially annexed or connected to the commission by the envelope and official seal.[1]

Will annexed to letters. See ADMINISTER, 4.

ANNI; ANNO. See ANNUS.

ANNOYANCE. See NUISANCE; USUS, Sic utere, etc.; WANTON.

ANNUALLY. Applied to the payment of interest imports, not an undertaking to pay at the end of a year, but at the end of every year during the period of time, fixed or contingent.[2]

A note payable in five years from date "with interest annually" implies that the interest begins to run from the making of the note.[3] See ANNUS; YEAR.

ANNUITY.[4] A yearly sum stipulated to be paid to another in fee or for life or years, and chargeable only on the person of the grantor.[5]

A yearly sum chargeable upon the person of the grantor.[6]

A "rent-charge" is a burden imposed upon lands.[6]

An annuity is a stated sum payable annually, unless otherwise directed. It is neither "income" nor "profits," nor does it vary with them, though a certain fund may be provided out of which the sum is payable.[7] See INDIAN.

Annuitant. One who is entitled to an annuity.

Annuity table. A table exhibiting the probable longevity of a person at any particular age.

Based upon statistics, and of use in matters of life insurance and dower. See further TABLE, 4.

Life annuity. An annuity limited upon another's life — the engagement or the sum of money promised.[8]

An annuity payable to the annuitant and his heirs is a personal fee; neither curtesy nor dower are incidents thereto. It is assignable, and bequeathable; and may be an asset in case of insolvency. Remedies for its non-payment are: debt, covenant, action of annuity at common law.[9] It is also apportionable; and may be paid to a widow in lieu of dower.[10]

Since an annuity may be regarded as a legacy payable by a yearly instalment, the word "legacy," as used in a will, may comprise the word annuity.[1]

ANNUL. See NULL; REPEAL; RESCISSION; VACATE.

ANNUS. L. A year.

Anni nubiles. Marriageable years.

Infra annos nubiles. Within marriageable years — at common law the age of twelve in girls.[2]

Anno Domini. In the year of our Lord. Abbreviated A. D. See ABBREVIATIONS; YEAR.

Annus luctus. The year of mourning.

Infra annum luctus. Within the year of mourning — sometimes called the "widow's year."

Roman and early Saxon law ordained that a widow should not remarry within a year after her husband's death: an inhibition which seems to have had reference to ascertaining the paternity of children.[3]

Supposed to be the origin also of a custom of wearing mourning dress.

Annus utilis. A serviceable year.

Anni utiles. The years during which a right may be asserted; as, the period during which one is not prevented by disability from availing himself of a statute of limitations.

ANONYMOUS. Designates a case reported with the names of the parties omitted. Abbreviated Anon.

ANOTHER. One other; any other

Larceny of the "personal goods of the United States" is within the words "personal goods of another" in the act of April 30, 1790.[4]

In the sense of another person, a co-party, is used in the titles of cases: as "A. B. v. C. D. and another." Compare ALIUS, Alios.

ANSWER. Response, reply; defense. Compare RESPONDERE.

1. In the sense of a response to a written or oral communication, see LETTER, 3; SILENCE.

2. A statement made in response to a question or interrogation propounded to a suitor, witness, or garnishee, in the course of a judicial inquiry. See further QUESTION, 1.

3. The formal written statement made by a defendant — to charges in a bill in equity, to a libel in admiralty or in divorce.

An answer is the most usual defense made to a bill in equity. It is given in upon oath; but where there are amicable defendants their answer may be taken without oath by consent of the plaintiff. This method

[1] Savage v. Birckhead, 20 Pick. 167 (1838); Shaw v. McGregory, 105 Mass. 100 (1870).

[2] Sparhawk v. Wills, 6 Gray, 164 (1856); Westfield v. Westfield, 19 S. C. 89-90 (1882).

[3] Winchell v. Coney, 54 Conn. 26, 30 (1886).

[4] L. L. annuitas; L. annus, a year.

[5] Coke, Litt. 144 b; 3 Kent, 460; 24 N. J. E. 358; 28 Barb. 216.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 40; 10 Watts, 127; 28 Barb. 216.

[7] Booth v. Ammerman, 4 Bradf. 133-35 (1856), cases; Pearson v. Chace, 10 R. I. 456-57 (1873), cases; Bartlett v. Slater, 53 Conn. 107 (1885), cases.

[8] See 2 Bl. Com. 461.

[9] 3 Kent, 460, 471; Coke, Litt. 285; 4 Ves. 763; 5 id. 708.

[10] Blight v. Blight, 51 Pa. 430 (1866); Rudolph's Appeal, 10 id. 34 (1848); Lackawanna Iron, &c. Co.'s Case, 37 N. J. E. 27 (1883).

[1] Rudolph's Appeal, ante; Exp. M'Comb, 4 Bradf 152 (1856); 12 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 182.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 436; 2 Kent, 78.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 457.

[4] United States v. Maxon, 5 Blatch. 362 (1866); 1 St. L. 116.

of proceeding was borrowed from the ecclesiastical courts.[1]

The parts of an answer are: the title, which tells whose answer it is and to whose bill; a reservation of advantages from any defects in the bill; the substance, whether the facts be of personal knowledge or rest upon information and belief; and a general traverse to the whole bill.

An answer must be responsive to all the material allegations in the bill.[2]

Unless the complainant have two witnesses, or one witness and corroborative circumstances, he will not be entitled to relief. The reason is, by calling upon the respondent to answer his allegations, the complainant admits that the answer will be evidence — equal to the testimony of any other witness; so that he cannot prevail unless the balance of proof is in his favor; to turn the scales, he must at least have circumstances which corroborate such single adverse witness.[3]

The answer must be responsive to the bill, and be sustained by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness corroborated by circumstances equivalent in weight to the testimony of another witness.[4]

If the alleged facts are not known to the defendant he should give his belief, if he has any; if none, he should say so and call for proof; otherwise he waives that branch of the controversy. A mere statement that he is without knowledge is not such admission as waives full proof.[5]

The answer of one defendant cannot be received against another, except where one so succeeds the other that his right devolves on the latter, making them privies in estate.[6]

An answer in equity must be signed by counsel. It must also deny or confess the material parts of the bill; it may confess and avoid (q. v.) the facts. If one of these things is not done the answer may be excepted to for insufficiency, and the defendant be compelled to put in a sufficient answer. A defendant cannot pray anything but to be dismissed the court; if he has any relief to ask he must do it by a cross-bill. After an answer is put in the plaintiff may amend his bill; and the defendant must then answer afresh. If the plaintiff finds sufficient confessed in the answer upon which to ground a decree he may proceed to a hearing upon the bill and answer; and in that case he takes the answer as true. Otherwise he replies generally, averring his bill to be true, certain, and sufficient, and the answer the reverse, as he is ready to prove; to which the defendant rejoins, averring the like on his side.[7]

See ADMIRALTY; ADMISSION, 2; ALLEGATION; AMENDMENT, 1; EQUITY, Bill; MASTER, 4; PLEA, 2; SHAM.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 446–47.

[2] Roach v. Summers, 20 Wall. 170 (1873).

[3] Tobey v. Leonards, 2 Wall. 430 (1864); Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 310–11 (1885), cases; 9 Cranch, 160; 6 Wheat. 468; 4 Cliff. 266–67, 458–59, cases; 107 U. S. 232; 18 Pa. 70.

[4] Vigel v. Hopp, 104 U. S. 441 (1881); Morrison v. Durr, 122 id. 518 (1887); 109 id. 103; 2 Story, Eq. § 1528.

[5] Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 211–12 (1868); 1 Johns. Ch. *107; 5 id. *248.

[6] Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 832 (1824).

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 447–49.

ANTAGONISM. See REPEAL; REPUGNANT.

ANTE. L. Before; hereinbefore.

Older form, anti, against. In compound words, ante, anti, ant, an. Anglo-Saxon, and-. Opposed, post. Compare ANTI; SUPRA.

Ante litem. See LIS, Ante, etc.

Ante natus. See NATUS, Ante, etc.

Antea. Formerly.

ANTECEDENT. See SAID; SECURITY.

ANTE-DATE. See DATE.

ANTENUPTIAL. See NUPTIAL.

ANTI. L. Against; in opposition. Compare ANTE.

As used in compounds illustrated by such words as anti-license, anti-liquor, anti-monopoly, anti-oleomargarine, anti-prohibition (-ists), anti-saloon, anti-slavery.

ANTICIPATION.[1] Taking beforehand, or before a time.

1. Use in the present of what is to accrue or to becomes one's own as income or profit; dealing with income before it is due.

More specifically, alienation by a married woman, who has a separate estate by gift, of income not yet accrued.[2] Compare ADVANCEMENT; TRUST, 1.

2. Objection to issuing a patent, or to a patent granted, upon the ground that its subject-matter is identical with what is or was already known, whether patented or not.

Cases of anticipation are distinguished from cases of patentability or ingenuity, and from cases of new use, of substitution, and of combination.[3] See PATENT, 2.

ANTIENT. See ANCIENT, 1.

ANTIQUATED. See STALE.

ANY. Compare A, 4; EITHER.

In the expression, whether the county will construct "any road or bridge," extends to an indefinite number.[4]

May mean every; thus, in a statute of descents, "any father or mother" may embrace as well the case where all of a class have died in the life-time of the intestate as where only some one or more may have died.[5]

"For the foregoing purposes or any of them" means, in effect, "for the foregoing purposes and every of them."[6]

"Any railroad" may be taken distributively, in-

[1] L. ante-capere, to take beforehand.

[2] See 133 Mass. 174, 175; 3 Gray, 405; 12 Gratt. 425; 9 Ga. 201; 1 Ld. Cas. Eq. 520; 11 Ves. 221; Lewin, Trusts, 123.

[3] Merwin, Pat. Invent. 82.

[4] Dubuque County v. Dubuque, &c. R. Co., 4 Iowa, 4 (1853).

[5] McComas v. Amos, 27 Md. 141 (1868).

[6] Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 289 (1857).

cluding all railroads taken severally; as, in the expression, "any county may subscribe to the stock of any railroad in this State." [1]

"Any former deceased husband" in § 4162, Rev. St. Ohio, refers to any husband who has died; the expression is not confined to the case where a widow has had two or more husbands.[2]

APART. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; SEPARATE, 2.

APARTMENT. See BURGLARY; HOUSE.

APEX. See JUS, Apex, etc.; VEIN.

APOSTLE.[3] In English admiralty practice the copy of the record in an appealed case which is sent to the appellate tribunal.

APOTHECARY. See DRUGGIST; MERCHANT.

Any person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to the prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold.[4]

APPARATUS. See APPENDAGE; PROCESS, 2.

APPAREL. In exemption and duties laws "apparel," "wearing apparel," and "necessary wearing apparel" have their popular import.[5]

Cloth actually appropriated thereto may be regarded as apparel.[6]

In September, 1878, William Astor and family arrived home from Europe, bringing with them wearing apparel bought there for their use, to be worn during the season then approaching, and in quantity not excessive for persons of their means, habits, and station in life. A portion of the articles not having been worn duties were exacted on them, and the circuit court confirmed the action of the collector. The Supreme Court, reversing the lower court, held that under § 2505, Rev. St., exempting from duty "wearing apparel in actual use and other personal effects not merchandise," such articles as fulfill the following conditions are not subject to duty, viz.: 1, wearing apparel owned by the passenger and in condition to be worn at once without further manufacture; 2, apparel brought with him as passenger and intended for use by himself or his family who accompany him, not intended for sale, and not imported for other persons or to be given away; 3, apparel suitable for the season of the year immediately approaching at the time of arrival; 4, apparel not exceeding in quantity, quality, or value what the passenger is in the habit ordinarily of providing for himself and family at that time, and keeping on hand for his and their reasonable wants, in view of their means, habits, and station in life, even though such articles have not been actually worn.[1]

See BAGGAGE; EXEMPTION; PARAPHERNALIA; PIN-MONEY.

APPARENT. 1. Readily seen; evident, self-evident; manifest: as, error apparent upon the face of a record. See APPARERE, De non, etc.; CONSTAT, 1; ERROR, 2 (3).

2. Existing in looks or appearance, and, perhaps, oftener not real than true and real; opposed to actual: as, apparent — authority, right or title; also opposed to non-apparent: as, an apparent or non-apparent easement, q. v.

An apparent right of possession is defeated by proof of a better, i. e., an actual, right.[2]

When the owner of property clothes another with the apparent power of disposition a third party who is thereby induced to deal with that other will be protected as against the owner.[3]

A principal is held for the act of his agent clothed with apparent authority.[4]

The holder of mercantile paper is the apparent owner thereof.

Apparent danger. In the law of justifiable homicide such overt, actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or to do great personal injury as makes killing apparently necessary.[5]

Apparent good order. Shipped "in apparent good order," in a bill of lading, does not change the legal effect of the bill. If a loss occurs the carrier is not precluded from showing that it proceeded from a latent defect in the package.[6]

APPARERE. L. To come into sight: to appear. Compare CONSTAT, 1.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus, eadem est ratio. Concerning things not appearing and things not existing, the rule (reason, conclusion) is the same. Quod non apparet, non est. What does not appear does not exist.

A thing which is not made to appear is regarded as if it could not be made to appear and did not therefore exist.

The record of a court of limited or inferior jurisdiction must show jurisdiction rightfully exercised;[7] but

[1] County of Chicot v. Lewis, 103 U. S. 167 (1880).

[2] Anderson v. Gilchrist, 44 Ohio St. 440 (1886). See also 41 N. J. E. 659; 9 S. C. 117.

[3] Gk. apostolein', to send away.

[4] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 119.

[5] Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 How. 261 (1853); Greenleaf v. Goodrich, 101 U. S. 285 (1879); Re Steele, 2 Flip. 325-26 (1879), cases.

[6] Richardson v. Buswell, 10 Metc. 507 (1845); 33 Me. 585; 55 Barb. 399.

[1] Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 202 (1884), Blatchford, J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 196.

[3] 46 N. Y. 325; 101 U. S. 575.

[4] 96 U. S. 86.

[5] [Evans v. State, 44 Miss. 773 (1870), Simrall, J.; Weeley v. State, 37 id. 349 (1859).

[6] The Oriflamme, 1 Saw. 178 (1870).

[7] 2 How. 341; 12 id. 253.

in courts of record of general jurisdiction all things are presumed to have been rightly done.[1]

A fact essential to the exercise, by a court of general jurisdiction, of a special power conferred upon it, must appear upon the face of the record.[2] See further PRESUMERE, Omnia, etc.

An affidavit is good for what it shows upon its face.[3]

A deed irregularly transcribed is not a record.[4]

An objection not of record will be disregarded.

The contents of a document in dispute must be proved.[5]

APPEAL.[6] 1. To apply to, as for relief; also, the application or action itself. Whence appealable; as, an appealable order.

May denote an application for relief to be obtained by a consideration or review of previous action: as, an appeal from listers to the selectmen of a town upon an alleged grievous assessment.[7]

2. To remove a cause to a higher court for review and retrial; also, the proceeding in itself considered.

Appeals are allowed in suits in equity, proceedings in courts of probate, orphans' or surrogate's courts, and in admiralty; from awards of arbitrators and referees; from municipal and tax assessments; on summary proceedings in criminal matters determined by committing magistrates; and in numerous other matters of code or statutory regulation.

Appeal lies to a final decree or judgment; in a few cases, also, upon an interlocutory order: as, in review of a commitment when authority in the lower court to act is disputed.[8]

Appellant. He who takes an appeal.

Appellee. The defendant in an appealed case.

Appellate. Having cognizance of appealed cases; accessible by appeal; concerning the judicial review of decisions: as, appellate — court, jurisdiction, power.

Appellate jurisdiction, q. v. Power to revise the decisions of the courts only, not the determinations of all inferior officers and boards.[9]

The secretary of the interior and the commissioner of the general land office in revising the acts of subordinate officials exercise "supervisory" rather than appellate power in the sense in which "appellate" is employed in defining the powers of courts of justice.[1]

Appeal (appellatio in civil law) is defined ab inferioris judicis sententia ad superiorem provocare: the removal of a cause from the sentence of an inferior to a superior judge, or, as Blackstone expresses it, a complaint to a superior court of an injustice done by an inferior court.[2]

The remedy as known in England is in a great measure confined to causes in equity, ecclesiastical, and admiralty jurisdiction: as to each of which no jury intervenes. In courts proceeding according to the civil law an appeal removes the whole of the proceedings and usually, though not invariably, opens the facts as well as the law to re-examination.[3]

A process of civil law origin. Removes a cause entirely, subjecting the fact and the law to review and retrial. A "writ of error," which is of common-law origin, removes nothing for re-examination but the law.[4]

While perhaps in most States an appeal from a court of general jurisdiction is in the nature of a writ of error,— whereby the appellate court passes upon the record as to facts and law, does not hear additional evidence, but confines its adjudication to errors appearing upon the record,— in Ohio the appeal itself vacates without revisal all proceedings, and the case is heard upon the same or other pleadings and upon such testimony as may be offered in that court. The subject is taken up de novo, as if the cause had never been tried.[4]

A final decree in chancery is taken to a higher court for review by appeal.[5]

The object of removing a cause from a justice of the peace by an appeal is to obtain a new trial, upon the same issue, in the higher court.[6]

In States which have adopted the name "appeal" for the review allowed of judgments governed by codes of procedure, the proceeding is subject to so much statutory regulation, and in effect is so assimilated to "writ of error," that it seems no longer possible to give a descriptive definition which shall be correct for the various States and distinguish the two modes of review.[7]

If a party to a suit is in no manner affected by what is decided he cannot be said to be a party to the decree, and, therefore, cannot appeal the case.[8]

---

[1] 11 Wall. 209-301.

[2] Chesterfield County v. Hall, 80 Va. 394 (1885).

[3] Lord v. Ocean Bank, 20 Pa. 384 (1853).

[4] McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 361 (1873).

[5] See generally Broom, Max. 163, 166; 102 U. S. 202, 631; 104 id. 439; 4 Mass. 685; 8 id. 401; 55 Pa. 57; 76 Va. 301.

[6] L. appellare, to call upon, address.

[7] Leach v. Blakely, 34 Vt. 136 (1861).

[8] Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 342 (1879).

[9] See Hubbell v. McCourt, 44 Wis. 587 (1878), cases; Auditor v. Atkinson, &c. R. Co., 6 Kan. 505 (1870); Piqua Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 391 (1856).

[1] Hestres v. Brennan, 50 Cal. 217 (1875); R. S. §§ 441, 453, 2478.

[2] United States v. Wonson, 1 Gall. 13 (1812), Story, J.

[3] Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dall. 327 (1796), Elsworth, C. J. See also United States v. Goodwin, 7 Cranch, 110 (1812); 22 How. 128; 103 U. S. 611. As to review of facts in actions at law, see 22 Am. Law Rev. 262-68 (1888), cases.

[4] Mason v. Alexander, 44 Ohio St. 328 (1886), Spear, J.

[5] McCollum v. Eager, 2 How. 61 (1844); 21 id. 445.

[6] Rawson v. Adams, 17 Johns. *131 (1819).

[7] [Abbott's Law Dict. See 12 Mo. Ap. 186; 30 Minn. 144.

[8] Farmers' Loan, &c. Co. v. Waterman, 106 U. S. 269 (1882); 108 id. 168

Appeal bond. An obligation, with sureties, given by an appellant in order to remove a cause by appeal, and conditioned for the payment of damages and costs if he fails to "prosecute the appeal with effect," q. v.

If the judgment is affirmed the sureties, proprio vigore, become liable to the same extent as the principal for the damages and costs. In an appeal to a still higher court new sureties are required.[1]

An appeal bond, or a bond in error, is a formal instrument required and governed by the law, and, by nearly a century's use, has become a formula in legal proceedings, with a fixed and definite meaning. As the important right of appeal is greatly affected by it, it is not allowable, in practice, by a change in phraseology, v. give it an effect contrary to what the statutes intend — as, in Federal practice, the acts of 1789 and 1802: R. S. §§ 1000, 1007, 1010, 1012. It would be against the policy of the law to suffer such deviations and irregularities. The rule followed in some States is a sound one, that if the condition of the bond substantially conforms to the requirements of the statutes it is sufficient, though it contain variations of language; and that if further conditions be superadded the bond is not therefore invalid, so far as it is supported by the statute, but only as to the superadded conditions.[2]

Court of appeals. Any court ordained to review the final decrees of another court; in several States the tribunal of last resort.

The highest court in Kentucky, Maryland, and New York. In Virginia and West Virginia it is known as the "supreme court of appeals;" in Delaware and New Jersey, as the "court of errors and appeals." In Texas the court is inferior to the supreme court. In England designates one of the two subdivisions of the supreme court of judicature as constituted by the acts of 1873 and 1875.

See ERROR, 2 (2, 3), Court of, Writ of; FINAL, 3; PAPER, 5; SUPERSEDEAS.

3. In old English law an accusation by a private subject against another of a heinous crime, demanding punishment on account of the particular injury suffered, rather than for the offense against the public.

Appellor: the accuser; appellee: the accused.

Originated, probably, when a private pecuniary satisfaction, called weregild, was paid to the party injured or to his relatives to expiate enormous crimes.[3]

Abolished in 1819, after the case of Ashford v. Thornton. See BATTEL.

APPEAR. The right to "appear" before a tribunal engaged in the transaction of particular business implies the right to be heard thereabout, — so far, at least, as the party is interested.[1]

Appearance. 1. Being apparent, q. v.

2. Having the form or semblance of. See COLOR, 2; FACIES.

3. Coming into court as a party to a suit; presence in court as a suitor. Used, particularly, of a defendant's presence, in person or by attorney.[2] Opposed, non-appearance.

An entry of appearance upon the record of a cause is to be interpreted by the practice of the particular court. Whatever is held to be a submission to its authority in the cause, whether coerced or voluntary, will be deemed an appearance.[3]

Made by entering of record the name of the party or his counsel, and at the request of either; also, by entering bail, answer, demurrer, or by any other act admitting that the defendant is in court, submitting to the jurisdiction. Originally, when pleadings were oral, made by actual presence in court.

An appearance may be general or common, or special or conditional, according as it is unqualified or unrestricted, or made for a specific purpose — as, to make a motion, or is coupled with a condition; de bene esse, when provisional on an event; voluntary, compulsory, or optional, according as it is entered freely, is compelled by plaintiff's action, or is made by one not obliged to appear, but who applies to do so, to save a right; in person, by attorney, by next friend, by guardian, or by committee, according as the party himself defends, or employs or is represented by another; pro hac vice, when in some special relation; corporal, when by defendant in person.

Corporal appearance is generally required in a criminal trial. In modern practice in civil actions appearing may be constructive or figurative.

An appearance is to be entered by a certain day, called the appearance day; to which day writs are made returnable. It is "general" when it is the stated day ordinarily observed; and "special" when some other day, as, the day appointed in a particular case.

On every return day in the term the person, at common law, had three days of grace beyond the day named in the writ in which to appear, and if he appeared on the fourth day inclusive, quarto die post, it

[1] Babbitt v. Finn, 101 U. S. 15, 18 (1879); Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 539 (1872).

[2] Kountze v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 395–96 (1882), cases; 11 Lea, 72.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 312–17; 110 U. S. 596.

[1] Dundee Mortgage Trust Invest. Co. v. Charlton, 39 F. R. 194 (1887).

[2] See Schroeder v. Lahrman, 26 Minn. 88 (1879); Larrabee v. Larrabee, 33 Me. 102 (1851).

[3] Cooley v. Lawrence, 5 Duer, 610 (1855); Grigg v. Gilman, 54 Ala. 430 (1875).

was sufficient. Therefore, usually the court did not sit till the fourth or appearance day.[1]

An appearance is also entered in a book called the appearance docket, which exhibits, in a brief abstract, all the proceedings had in a cause.

For failure to appear after legal notice given, in cases, judgment may be taken "in default" of an appearance.

On cause shown, by petition to the court, an attorney may be permitted to "withdraw" his appearance, timely notice having first been given to the client.[2]

An appearance by a person admitted to practice is received as evidence of his authority; otherwise as to an attorney in fact.[3]

A general appearance waives all questions as to the service of process, and is, moreover, equivalent to a personal service. Its effect is not disturbed by the withdrawal of the attorney. The question of jurisdiction alone is saved.[4]

But, under the privilege of a special appearance, a person cannot avail himself of the advantage of a general appearance.[5]

See ABIDE· VENIRE.

APPENDAGE. See APPENDANT; INCIDENT; RAILROAD.

Where the question was whether a stereoscope, with views, was a "necessary appendage" to a schoolhouse, the court said that the words quoted, as used in a statute, referred to things connected with the building or designed to render it suitable for use as a schoolhouse.[6]

Under the same statute charts and maps to be hung upon the walls may be called "appendages" or "apparatus."[7]

Certainly a well would be a necessary appendage;[8] and, also, a fence around the school building.[9]

APPENDANT.[10] Annexed to another and superior thing; belonging to something as the principal thing; also, the thing itself thus attached: as, an incorporeal inheritance to another inheritance, one power to another power.[11]

Said of a thing which belongs to another thing as its principal and passes as an incident to the latter.[1]

Or, of a thing used with, related to, or dependent upon, another thing more worthy, and agreeing in nature and quality with that other.[2] See APPENDAGE; APPURTENANCE.

APPERTAIN. One thing may appertain to another without adjoining or touching it.

Proof that pieces of land adjoin would not be proof that one appertained to the other. As a descriptive word in a deed "appertaining" imports use, occupancy; "adjoining" imports contiguity.[3] See ADJOINING; APPURTENANCE.

APPLICATION. 1. A written request, more or less formal, presented to a private person or to an official for the favorable exercise of his authority or discretion: as, an application for insurance[4] (q. v.), for an order of court, for a pardon, for remission of a fine.

2. Devoting, appropriating to an end or demand; also, the use or purpose itself to which a thing or fund has been set apart, distributed, or paid.

Misapplication. Improper or unlawful disposition or application.

It is not sufficient to aver simply that a defendant "willfully misapplied" trust funds: there must be averments to show how the application was made and that it was an unlawful one.[5]

Application of payments. The application of a general payment of money to the discharge of one or more of several demands.

The right must be exercised within a reasonable time after the payment and by an act which indicates an intention to appropriate. Where neither party has exercised the right the law presumes that the debtor intended to pay in the way which, at the time, was most to his advantage. Where, however, the interest of the debtor could not be promoted by any particular appropriation there is no ground for a presumption of any intention on his part, and the law then presumes that the payment was received in the way most advantageous to the creditor.[6]

The rule settled by the Supreme Court of the United States is that the debtor, or the party paying the money, may, if he chooses, direct its appropriation; if he fails so to do the right then devolves upon the cred-

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 278, 290.

[2] United States v. Yates, 6 How. 608 (1848).

[3] See Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 830 (1824); Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 454 (1874).

[4] Eldred v. Michigan Ins. Bank, 17 Wall. 551 (1873); Creighton v. Kerr, 20 id. 12 (1873); 6 How. 608; 29 Kan. 683; 29 Minn. 46.

[5] National Furnace Co. v. Moline Iron Works, 18 F. R. 863 (1884).

[6] School District v. Perkins, 21 Kan. 587 (1879).

[7] School District v. Swayze, 29 Kan. 216 (1883).

[8] Hemme v. School District, 30 Kan. 381 (1883).

[9] Creager v. Wright School District, Sup. Ct. Mich. (1886).

[10] L. ad-pendere, to hang to.

[11] [4 Kent, 316, 404; 2 Bl. Com. 33.]

[1] [Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 Ohio St. 448 (1876).

[2] Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 8 (1810); Coke, Litt. 121 b, 122 a; 3 N. H. 192.

[3] Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 479 (1882), Veazey, J.

[4] See 25 Minn. 539; 133 Mass. 85.

[5] United States v. Britton, 107 U. S. 669 (1883); R. S. § 5209.

[6] Harker v. Conrad, 12 S. & R. 304 (1824), Gibson, J.; Pierce v. Sweet, 33 Pa. 157 (1859).

itor; and if he fails in this respect the law will make the application according to its own notions of justice. Neither party can make it after a controversy upon the subject has arisen between them.[1]

APPOINTMENT. Fixing, establishing: limitation, selection, designation.

1. Selection for the duties of an office or place of trust.

Appointee. The person so designated, until qualified.

A commission, regularly issued, is conclusive evidence of an appointment.[2]

Where a common council voted to ballot for a municipal officer, in pursuance of a power conferred by charter to "appoint" such officer, it was held that the ballot taken was intended to be an election, that is, an appointment.[3]

Appointments to office are intrinsically executive acts, whether made by a court, a municipal council, an executive officer, or other person or body. A particular appointment is complete when the last act required of the appointing power is performed.[4] See OFFICE, 1; RESIGNATION.

2. Exercise of the right to designate the person who is to take the use of realty.[4]

An authority given to another to be exercised over property in a manner and to an extent which he would not otherwise possess.[5]

Also called power of appointment.

Appointor. He who executes the power; the donee. He who confers the power is the donor. Appointee. He in whose favor the power is executed.[6]

General appointment. Such appointment as enables the donee to name, as appointee, whom he pleases — even himself. Special appointment. Such as restricts the donee to naming one or more appointees from among particular persons.

The latter dates from the creation of the power; the former from its exercise.

Where a person, having a general power of appointment, by deed or by will, executes it, the property is deemed in equity a part of his assets, subject to the demands of his creditors in preference to the claims of voluntary appointees or of legatees.[1]

Illusory appointment. Allotment of a nominal, not of a substantial, interest.[2]

The rule at common law was to require some allotment to each person where several appointees were intended. But the rule in equity requires a real, substantial portion in each appointee — a merely nominal allotment being viewed not only as illusory but as fraudulent.[3]

A devise to a corporation for a charitable use is an appointment rather than a bequest.[4]

The donee must be competent to dispose of an estate of his own in like manner. All donees, or their survivors, must join in executing the power. The donor's intention is to be strictly observed. A partial execution may be upheld. The estate vests in the appointee as if conveyed immediately by the donor.[5] See further POWER, 2; USE, 3.

APPORTIONMENT. A division into shares, portions or proportions; distribution into proportionate parts.

Division of a fund, or property, or other subject-matter, in shares proportioned to different demands, or appropriate to satisfy rival claims.[6] Whence non-apportionable, unapportionable.

Thus, we have the apportionment — of an annuity to a part of the year; of a contract, not entire, to the part performed; of dividends, or money, in stocks;[7] of sums payable toward the support or removal of an incumbrance; of freight earned previously to a disaster to an abandoned ship;[8] of loss and damage caused by a collision of vessels, both parties being in fault;[9] of rent, where the leasehold or reversion is transferred, partitioned, levied on for debt, or set-off in dower, or where there are several assignees, or the premises become untenantable;[10] of Representatives, decennially, according to the increase of population;[11] of corporate shares, when more have been subscribed for than the charter allows to be issued.[12]

---

[1] Nat. Bank of the Commonwealth v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 94 U. S. 439 (1876), cases; Nichols v. Knowles, 17 F. R. 495–96 (1881), cases; Bank of California v. Webb, 94 N. Y. 472 (1884), cases; McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 137 (1886), cases; Sanborn v. Stark, 31 F. R. 18 (1887); 21 Cent. Law J. 473–79 (1885), cases. See also 9 Wheat. 730; 6 Cranch, 8; 1 Mass. 323; 88 Ind. 68–69, cases; 62 Miss. 8, 121, 500; 7 Oreg. 228; 59 Tex. 649; 55 Vt. 464, 543; 22 F. R. 570; 13 Am. Dec. 505, cases; 14 id. 694, cases; 1 Story, Eq. § 459 b; 2 Para. Contr. 629.

[2] United States v. Le Baron, 19 How. 79, 73 (1856); 1 Cranch, 137; 10 Pet. 343; 10 Oreg. 590.

[3] State ex rel. Coogan v. Barbour, 58 Conn. 83, 85–90 (1885), cases.

[4] [2 Washb. Real Prop. 302.

[5] [Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 442 (1841), Story, J.

[6] [4 Kent, 316.]

[1] Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 352 (1884), cases; Sewale v. Wilmer, 132 Mass. 134–35 (1882), cases.

[2] See 3 Kent, 343; Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 40 (1855).

[3] Sugden, Powers, 489; 4 Kent 342.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 376.

[5] 4 Kent, 324; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1061–63; 2 Washb. R. P. 317–22, 298, 337.

[6] Abbott's Law Dict.

[7] 3 Kent, 470.

[8] 3 Kent, 333.

[9] 93 U. S. 302; 10 Beued. 658.

[10] 3 Kent, 469–71.

[11] 1 Kent, 230; Act 25 Feb. 1862: 22 St. L. 5.

[12] 1 Johns. Ch. 18; 1 Edw. 308.

At common law periodical payments, due at set times, were not apportionable.[1]

Guilt and negligence are unapportionable. See CONTRIBUTION.

APPRAISE.[2] To value; to estimate at a price, by authority of law.

Appraisement; appraisal; apprizal. The worth of property as estimated by an authorized person; also the act or proceeding by which the estimate is made.

An "apprizal" of property signifies a valuation of it, an estimation of its value, unless some other sense is plainly indicated.[3]

Appraisements are made — of the goods of a deceased; of articles set apart for the share or exemption of a widow; of the assets of an insolvent who has assigned his property for the benefit of creditors or who claims exemption of his statutory amount under proceedings in execution of a judgment; of property taken for public uses; of goods distrained for rent; of the goods of an importer.

Appraiser. One authorized to determine the value of an article or articles of property. See INDIFFERENT, 1.

Mercantile appraiser. An officer whose duty it is to ascertain the amount of business done by persons in the different mercantile pursuits and to regulate the tax or license fees to be paid by them on their business.

Government appraiser. The incumbent of a permanent office, selected by a collector of customs, and charged with the duty of valuing dutiable merchandise.

Merchant appraiser. An appraiser selected by an importer to act with a government appraiser.[4]

Re-appraiser. One chosen to make a second appraisement of dutiable goods.

The importer has a right to be present when re-appraisers view his goods. The re-appraisement is an apprizal on view, and the re-appraisers may ascertain the value of the merchandise by reasonable means, and determine what witnesses, if any, they will examine. The merchant appraiser who may be called in is not an "officer" within the meaning of Art. II of the Constitution; and the exaction of a fee for his compensation is not authorized.[5]

APPREHENSION.[6] Strictly, seizing and taking hold of a man, but may apply to detaining a person already in custody.[1] See ARREST, 2, 3; ATTACH, 2.

APPRENTICE.[2] A learner: a species of servant usually "bound" for a term of years, by indenture, to serve his master and be maintained and instructed by him.[3]

One bound to service for a term of years in order to learn a trade or art.[4] Whence apprenticeship. "Apprentice" is also used in a verbal sense.

"A young person bound by indenture to a tradesman or artificer who, upon certain covenants, is to teach him his mystery or trade." To constitute an apprenticeship something is to be learned: this is the characteristic mark of the service to be performed.[5]

Ex vi termini implies service in some specific profession, trade, or employment.[6]

This form of binding is usually done to persons of trade in order to learn their art and mystery; but it may be done to husbandmen and others. The children of poor persons, till twenty-one years of age, may be apprenticed by the overseers of the poor to such as are thought fitting; and these in turn may be compelled to take them.[7]

The "teacher" is called the master. The contract is signed by the immediate parties. The period continues till twenty-one in a male and eighteen in a female, or longer by consent. The master takes the place of the parent. He may discharge the apprentice for reasonable cause. Each party is supposed to work for the other's interest. At common law the contract is not assignable.[8]

Apprenticeship had its origin in days when the various trades were encompassed with restrictions as to the persons who might enter them. Modern customs, which have so greatly relaxed the rules governing the exercise of the arts and trades, have correspondingly modified the strict characteristics of apprenticeship.[9]

Local statutes and decisions should be consulted.

APPRIZAL. See APPRAISE.

APPROACH. See BRIDGE.

APPROBARE. L. To approve; literally, to test, try, prove good.

Qui approbat, non reprobat. He who approves cannot reject.

One cannot both accept and reject the same thing. One may not both affirm and deny.

---

[1] 3 Kent, 469.

[2] F. apreiser, to value: L. pretium, price.

[3] Cocheco Manuf. Company v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 482 (1871), Doe, J.

[4] Belcher v. Linn, 24 How. 523 (1860): R. S. §§ 2609-10, 2946. See also Oelbermann v. Merritt, 19 F. R. 409 (1884); Oelbermann v. Merritt, 123 U. S. 356 (1887).

[5] Auff Mordt v. Hedden, 30 F. R. 360 (1886), Wheeler, J.

[6] L. ad-prehendere, to lay hold of.

[1] Regina v. Weil, 47 L. T. R. 632 (1883); s. c. 15 Rep. 413.

[2] F. apprendre, to learn: L. apprehendere, to lay hold of, grasp.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 426; 3 id. 26.

[4] [2 Kent, 261.

[5] Hopewell v. Amwell, 3 N. J. L. *425 (1808). See also State ex rel. v. Jones, 16 Fla. 316-18 (1878).

[6] Re Goodenough, 19 Wis. 277 (1865), Dixon, C. J.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 426.

[8] 2 Kent, 261; 1 Bl. Com. 460.

[9] Abbott's Law Dict.

APPROBATE. See ALLEGARE, Allegans contraria, etc.

APPROPRIATE.[1] 1, v. (1) To take to one's self; to take as one's own — for one's self:[2] as, to appropriate running water; to appropriate the personalty of another is a conversion, an embezzlement, or larceny, qq. v. Whence appropriation, appropriator, appropriable. Compare ACQUIRE; OCCUPY.

To appropriate another's goods against his will is to take them from him to one's self with or without violence.[3] See CONVERSION, 3.

(2) To adopt as distinctively one's own: as, to appropriate a design or symbol for a trademark,[4] q. v.

(3) To reserve for a distinct purpose; to destine to a particular end: as, to appropriate property to an exclusive use, or a fund to the discharge of special demand.

A space is not appropriated to the use of passengers on board a vessel as long as one person is allowed an individual use of it.[5]

"Appropriated lands," in a pre-emption law: land applied to some specific use or purpose by virtue of law.[6]

In the expression "appropriate property of any individual to public uses," the term embraces every mode by which property may be applied to the use of the public. Whatever exists which public necessity demands may be thus appropriated.[7] See further DOMAIN, 1, Eminent.

A direction to an executor to "appropriate" funds is an implication that he is assumed to hold that which he is directed to appropriate.[8]

"Appropriations" in a will means a designation to a particular exclusive use.[9]

The "appropriation of public money" is the disposition of public moneys from the treasury by law;[10] — an authority from the legislature, given at the proper time and in legal form, to the proper officers, to apply sums of money out of that which may be in the treasury in a given year to specified objects or demands against the State.[10]

While, as referring to funds, "appropriate" and "apply" are often interchanged, "appropriate" may mean rather to decide that a certain fund shall be devoted to a specific purpose, and "apply" to make the expenditure in fact. See further APPLICATION, 3.

[1] L. appropriare, to make one's own — proprius.
[2] See 8 Oreg. 102; 9 id. 231.
[3] [Waters v. United States, 4 Ct. Cl. 393 (1868).
[4] 100 U. S. 95; 101 id. 53.
[5] United States v. Nicholson, 8 Saw. 164 (1882); R. S. § 4252.
[6] McConnell v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. 360, 359 (1837).
[7] Boston, &c. R. Corporation v. Salem, &c. R. Company, 2 Gray, 25 (1854), Shaw, C. J.
[8] Blake v. Dexter, 12 Cush. 568 (1853), Shaw, C. J.
[9] Whitehead v. Gibbons, 10 N. J. E. 237 (1854).
[10] Ristine v. State, 20 Ind. 338 (1863), Perkins, J

APPROPRIATE. 2, adj. Adapted to the purpose: proper, fit, suitable, q. v.: as, the appropriate departments of the government;[1] appropriate legislation;[2] an appropriate remedy[3] or decree.[4]

APPROVE. 1. To accept as good or sufficient for the purpose intended. Opposed, disapprove. See APPROBARE.

Public sales are made on "approved, indorsed notes" when the purchaser gives his promissory note for the amount of a purchase, indorsed by another and approved by the seller. The approval of the note ratifies the sale.[5]

See SALE, On approval; RATIFICATION.

2. To deem of sufficient security: as, to approve a bond.

"Approved" indorsed on a bond by the judge of a court does not necessarily import more than that the bond is deemed a sufficient security to be accepted. It does not include a direction that the bond is to stand in lieu of another bond and that the other is discharged.[6]

3. To affirm as lawful and proper; to give judicial sanction to: as, to approve the report of an auditor, a master, or trustee. See CONFIRMATION, 3.

4. To concur in the propriety or expediency, the legality or constitutionality of; to give executive sanction to: as, to approve an ordinance proposed by the councils of a city, to approve an act of an Assembly or of Congress. See ACT, 2; PASS, 2; VETO.

5. To confess a felony or treason and accuse another as accomplice in order to obtain a pardon.

Approvement. The confession made in such case, and the act of making it.

Approver. He who makes such a confession.

The accused is the "appellee."

When a person indicted for treason or felony was arraigned he might confess the charge before plea pleaded and appeal or accuse some other as his accomplice, in order to obtain a pardon. This, allowed in capital cases only, was equivalent to an indictment, as the appellee was required to answer the charge. If proven guilty the judgment was against the appellee; and the approver was entitled to a pardon ex debito justitiæ; but if the appellee was acquitted the judgment was that the approver be condemned.[7] See ACCOMPLICE.

[1] 101 U. S. 770.
[2] 100 U. S. 345.
[3] 100 U. S. 311.
[4] 101 U. S. 338.
[5] Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 435 (1838); Guier v. Page, 4 S. & R. 1 (1818).
[6] United States v. Haynes, 9 Bened. 25 (1877).
[7] 4 Bl. Com. 330; Rex v. Rudd, 1 Cowp. 335 (1775).

APPURTENANCE.[1] A right connected with the enjoyment or use of another thing as principal; also, the thing itself out of which the right grows as an incident.

Appurtenant. Connected with or pertaining to a thing of superior nature.

In strict legal sense land can never be appurtenant to land. A thing to be appurtenant to another thing must be of a different and congruous nature; such as an easement or servitude, or some collateral incident belonging to and for the benefit of the land. In Coke, Litt. 121 b, it is said that nothing can be appurtenant unless the thing agrees in quality and nature to the thing whereunto it appurtaineth; as a thing corporeal properly cannot be appurtenant to a thing corporeal, nor a thing incorporeal to a thing incorporeal. There are many other authorities to the same effect. In a case, therefore, where the words of a grant pass land "with its appurtenances" the law, in the absence of controlling words, will deem "appurtenances" to be used in its technical sense; and that construction will not be displaced until it is made manifest from other parts of the grant that some other thing was actually intended.[2]

Something appertaining to another thing as principal, and passing as an incident to such principal.[3]

A right not connected with the enjoyment or use of a parcel of land cannot be annexed as an incident to that land so as to become appurtenant to it.[4]

The expression "appurtenances of a ship" is not to be construed with reference to the abstract naked idea of a ship. The relation which the equipment bears to the actual service is to be looked at. "Appurtenances" is a word of wider extent than "furniture" (q. v.) and may be applied to many things which could not be so described with propriety in a contract of insurance. The tackle, apparel, and furniture form a part of every ship, but that is not a part which is only appurtenant as necessary for a special voyage.[5]

Compare APPENDANT; INCIDENT.

AQUA. L. Water.

Aqua cedit solo. Water passes with land: a grant of land conveys water rights.

One cannot bring an action to recover possession of a piece of water by the name of water only, by calculating its capacity, by superficial measurement, or by a general description, as for a pond, a water-course, etc. His action must be for so much land covered with water.[1]

Aqua currit, et debet currere, ut currere solebat. Water runs and should run as it has been used to run: a running stream is to be let flow in its channel as nature has provided.

Running water must be used according to the order of nature. Thus, rain-water and drainage are to follow nature's channel — the course in which the water, peaceably and openly, has long been permitted to run.[2]

By the common law all riparian owners on the same stream have an equality of right to the use of the water as it naturally flows, in quality and without diminution in quantity except as created by a reasonable use for proper purposes. Hence, one may not throw back, nor divert, nor unreasonably detain, nor deteriorate or poison the water. But exclusive use for twenty years may constitute a conclusive presumption of right.[3]

A riparian owner on a stream must so use his right as not to injure the concomitant right of another owner, and subject to statutory regulations. Where he owns land on one side his use extends to the middle thread of the stream. The right includes a right to erect mill dams and rights of fishery — both which have their source in the ownership of the soil.[4]

A land owner has no better right to stop the flow of a water-course which has its origin on his land than if it arose elsewhere.[5]

No action can be maintained for changing the course or obstructing the flow of mere surface-water by erections on adjoining land. A party cannot by his own act alone convert a flow of surface-water into a stream with the legal incidents of a natural water-course, but the right may be acquired by adverse user for the proper period.[6]

The courts will enjoin as a public and a private nuisance hydraulic mining which becomes injurious to navigation and destructive to the farms of riparian owners.[7]

A person operating a coal mine in the ordinary and usual manner may, upon his own land, drain or pump the water which percolates into the mine into a stream

---

Whiskey Cases (United States v. Ford), 99 U. S. 599 (1878); Oliver v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 592 (1883).

[1] F. apartenir, to belong to: L. ad-per-tinere, to extend through to.

[2] United States v. Harris, 1 Sumn. 37–38 (1830), Story, J. See also Whitney v. Olney, 3 Mas. 281–83 (1823), Story, J.; 39 Ark. 135; 15 Cal. 186; 57 id. 14; 8 Allen, 291, 295; 28 Minn. 262; 58 N. H. 508; 15 Johns. 447; 93 N. Y. 549; 29 Ohio St. 648; 9 Oreg. 398; 10 S. & R. 63; 13 Pa. 495; 58 id. 253; 13 Am. Dec. 657–60, cases; 4 Kent, 467.

[3] [Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. *54 (1836), Thompson, J.

[4] Linthicum v. Ray, 9 Wall. 241 (1869), Field, J.

[5] Swift v. Brownell, 1 Holmes, 473–74 (1875), cases, Shepley, J.; The Witch Queen, 3 Saw. 202–3 (1874), cases; 2 Low. 40.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 18.

[2] Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 412–16 (1856); Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Me. *265 (1832); 2 Bl. Com. 395.

[3] Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 511 (1874), cases; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 400–2 (1827), cases, Story, J.; Silver Spring Bleaching, &c. Co. v. Wanskuck Co., 13 R. I. 615 (1882); 3 Kent, 439.

[4] Holyoke Company v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 506 (1872), Clifford, J.

[5] Howe v. Norman, 13 R. I. 488 (1882).

[6] Dickinson v. Worcester, 7 Allen, 22 (1863), cases. Stanchfield v. Newton, 142 Mass. 110 (1886).

[7] Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Mining Co., 18 F. R. 753 (1884); 16 id. 25. See also 6 Col. 447, 530; 92 N. Y. 490.

which forms the natural drainage of the basin, although the quantity of water may thereby be increased and its quality rendered unfit for domestic purposes by lower riparian owners. The use of the stream by such owners must ex necessitate give way to the interests of the community, in order to permit the development of the natural resources of the country and make possible the prosecution of the business of mining coal.[1]

On the mineral lands of the public domain in the Pacific States and Territories the doctrines of the common law are inapplicable, or applicable only in a very limited extent, to the necessities of miners, and inadequate to their protection; there, prior appropriation gives the better right to running waters to the extent in quantity and quality necessary for the uses to which the water is applied. What diminution of quantity or deterioration in quality will constitute an invasion of the rights of the first appropriator will depend upon the special circumstances of each case; and in controversies between him and parties subsequently claiming the water the question for determination is whether his use of the water to the extent of the original appropriation has been impaired by the acts of the other parties. Whether a court of equity will interfere to restrain acts of invasion upon the rights of the first appropriator will depend upon the character and extent of the injury alleged, whether it be irremedial in its nature, whether an action at law would afford adequate remedy, whether the parties are able to respond for the damages resulting from the injury, and other considerations ordinarily governing a court of equity in the exercise of its preventive process of injunction.[2]

The civil law acts upon the maxim that water is descendible by nature, that its usual flow should not be interfered with, and that its burden should be borne by the land through or over which it naturally flows, rather than by land through which it can be made to flow only by artificial means. The common law does not recognize this principle as to surface-water, but permits one to protect his premises against it, not regarding as injury any resulting inconvenience. The maxim of the civil law, aqua currit, etc., applies generally, in both systems, to running water, subject to such reasonable qualifications as the interests of agriculture require and the enjoyment of private property will permit. As an owner has the right to protect his lands from the violence of the current, or to improve the same by erecting embankments, and as this cannot be done without increasing the flow upon the opposite side, it follows that this must be permitted to some degree by all persons owning lands upon the stream, else the right cannot be exercised by any one of them.[3]

See ALLUVION; ICE; MILL, 1; RIPARIAN; SPRING; THREAD; WATER; WATER-COURSE.

[1] Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 162-63 (1886), cases.

[2] Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 511-16 (1874), cases, Field, J.; Bosey v. Gallagher, ib. 681-85 (1874), cases; Tartar v. Spring Creek Water & Mining Co., 5 Cal. 397 (1855); Sanford v. Felt, 71 id. 250 (1886), cases.

[3] Crawford v. Rambo, 44 Ohio St. 284, 292-97 (1886), cases, Minshall, J. See also Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 143-48 (1881), cases.

Aquarium. See ENTERTAINMENT.

AQUATIC. See AQUA; RIPARIAN.

ARBITRARY.[1] Not governed by fixed rules; not defined by statute; discretionary: as, arbitrary punishment. See DISCRETION; JUDGE.

Without cause or reason shown; as, an arbitrary challenge.[2]

Arbitrarily. In a covenant not "arbitrarily" to withhold assent to an assignment of a lease means, without fair, solid, and substantial cause, and without reason given. A refusal grounded upon advice was held not arbitrary.[3] Compare SATISFACTORY.

ARBITRATION.[4] When the parties injuring and injured submit all matters in dispute, concerning any personal chattel or personal wrong, to the judgment of two or more arbitrators who are to decide the controversy.[5]

A like submission of any matter in dispute.

Although some jealousy is felt in allowing references of questions regarding realty, yet references have been had in cases of partition, disputed boundaries, waste by tenant, title of devisees, and generally upon titles. But crimes and misdemeanors are not subjects.[6]

Arbitrator. A private extraordinary judge chosen by the parties who have a matter in dispute, and invested with power to decide the same.[7]

Compulsory arbitration. When assent in one party is enforced by law, under a rule to refer. Voluntary arbitration. A reference freely consented to by both parties.

At common law, was in pais — by agreement out of court, with no compulsory power over witnesses. In pursuance of 9 and 10 Will. III (1698), c. 15, is by rule of court — by order of a court directing that a submission upon a matter not yet in court shall be made a rule of the court.

The statute enacts that all merchants and others who desire to end any controversy, suit, or quarrel (for which there is no remedy but by personal action or suit in equity) may agree that their submission of the suit to arbitration or umpirage shall be made a

[1] L. arbitrarius, capricious.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 353.

[3] Treloar v. Bigge, L. R., 9 Ex. 154 (1874).

[4] L. arbitrare, to act as umpire: arbiter, a witness, a judge.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 16.

[6] Brown's Law Dict.

[7] [Gordon v. United States, 7 Wall. 194 (1868), Grier, J.: Bouvier; 17 How. 394; 53 Barb. 595.

rule of the king's courts of record, and may insert such agreement in their submission or promise, or as the condition of the arbitration-bond; which agreement being proved upon oath by a witness thereto, the court shall make a rule that such submission and award shall be conclusive.[1]

A bond to abide the decision may be required. The arbitrators are the judges of both the law and the facts. They are not bound to disclose the grounds of their finding. They cannot modify or go beyond the precise question submitted; nor can they do general equity.[2]

Irregularities in appointing arbitrators, or in their proceedings, when apparent on the record, may be corrected by a writ of error; but those which are made so by extrinsic proof can be corrected only by the court below. Every presumption is made in favor of the award, unless flagrant error appears on the record. While the proceedings remain in court (that is, until the arbitrators are appointed), it must appear by the record that everything is regular, but after they are appointed the proceedings are out of court and need not be reduced to writing.[3]

The powers and duties of arbitrators are regulated by statute, and explanatory decisions, in each State.

Arbitrations are regarded favorably. If they settle the rights of the parties, and their award can be rendered certain by reference to documentary evidence, they will be sustained. An award which leaves nothing to be done to dispose of the matter except a ministerial act is sufficient.[4]

See further ABIDE; AWARD, 2; REFER, 1; UMPIRE.

Arbitration of exchange. See EXCHANGE, 3.

ARCHITECT. See LABORER.

Every person whose business it is to plan, design, or superintend the construction of buildings, ships, roads, bridges, canals, or railroads, shall be regarded as an architect and civil engineer: Provided, That this shall not include a practical carpenter who labors on a building.[5] See SPECIFICATION.

ARGUENDO. See ARGUMENTUM.

ARGUMENT. Proof or the means of proving, or inducing belief; a course or process of reasoning; an address to a jury, or a court. See ARGUMENTUM.

When a controverted question of fact is to be submitted to a jury for its determination either party has an absolute right to be heard in argument thereon. The power of the court is limited to imposing reasonable restrictions as to the time to be occupied.[6] See ATTORNEY.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 17.

[2] 7 Morse, Arb. & Award, 181–83, cases.

[3] Wilcox v. Payne, 88 Pa. 157 (1878); Tobey v. County of Bristol, 3 Story, 800, 822 (1845); Corbin v. Adams, 76 Va. 61 (1881); Gaylord v. Norton, 130 Mass. 74 (1881).

[4] Cochran v. Bartle, 91 Mo. 646 (1887), cases.

[5] [Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 121.

[6] Douglass v. Hill, 29 Kan. 529 (1883), cases; Foster v. Magill, 119 Ill. 82 (1886); 18 Cent. Law J. 363–68 (1884), cases.

Argument list. A calendar of causes for discussion and determination before a court in banc, upon questions of law. See BRIEF, 2.

Argumentative. By way of reasoning: as, that a plea must not be argumentative.[1]

Re-argument. A second or additional argument.

Sometimes ordered by a court of review when the court wishes to hear counsel upon a material question of law either not fully discussed in the first argument or passed by unnoticed and developed later in the deliberations of the court.

ARGUMENTUM. L. Argument: literally, that which makes clear or proves. Arguere, to argue.

Arguendo. In reasoning, arguing. Abbreviated arg.

Applied to an observation made by a judge in rendering an opinion, incidental to the point under discussion and, therefore, not authoritative.

Argumentum a simile. Argument from a like case — from analogy.

Argumentum a simile valet in lege. An argument from an analogous case has weight in law. See SIMILIS.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti. Argument from a hardship, q. v.

ARISE. See JUDICIAL, Power.

ARIZONA. See TERRITORY, 2.

ARM OF THE LAW. See INJUNCTION.

ARM OF THE SEA. See SEA.

ARMA. L. Weapons; war, warfare. See ARMS, 2; LEX, Silent leges, etc.; VIS, Vi, etc.

ARMED REBELLION. See WAR.

ARMS. Weapons, offensive or defensive. See ARMA.

1. Aggressive weapons; instruments of attack.

At common law one may carry arms for defense. But going armed with dangerous or unusual weapons by terrifying the people, is a crime against the peace.[1] See DEFENSE, 1.

Playfully or wantonly pointing fire-arms at another, which was an assault at common law, has been made a statutory offense with increased punishment.

Discharging fire-arms within the limits of incorporated towns and cities is generally prohibited.

"A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed."[2]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 308.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 143; 4 id. 149.

[3] Constitution, Amd. Art. II. Ratified Dec. 15, 1791

This right is preserved, also, by the Bill of Rights of each State, and the exercise regulated by statute.

The right to bear arms is not a right granted by the Constitution; nor is it dependent upon that instrument for its existence. The Second Amendment declares that it shall not be infringed — by Congress.[1] See AMENDMENT, 2; POLICE, 2.

While it is true that that Amendment is a limitation upon the powers of Congress only, nevertheless, since all citizens capable of bearing arms constitute the reserved military force of the National government, a State cannot prohibit the people from keeping and carrying arms so as to deprive the United States of their rightful resource for maintaining the public safety.[2]

The right to bear arms for the common defense does not mean the right to bear them ordinarily or commonly, for individual defense, but refers to the right to bear them for the defense of the community against invasion or oppression. In order that he may be trained and efficient in their use, the citizen has the right to keep the arms of modern warfare and to use them in such manner as they may be capable of being used, without annoyance and hurt to others.[3]

By arms, in such connection, is meant such as are usually employed in civilized warfare and constitute the ordinary military equipment.[4] See TREASON; WAR; WEAPON.

2. Anything that may be used for defense or attack: as, staves, sticks, or other missiles, as well as fire-arms. Whence "force and arms." See FORCE, 2; VIOLENCE.

ARMY. See ENLISTMENT; MARTIAL LAW; NATURALIZAITON (R. S. § 2166); REINSTATE; STATION, 1; WAR.

ARPEN; ARPENT. A measure of land in use in this country, in the early French and Spanish times, nearly corresponding to the English acre.[5]

ARRAIGN.[6] To call upon to account or answer.[7]

To call a prisoner to the bar of the court to answer the matter charged upon him in the indictment.[8]

Arraignment. The act or proceeding of arraigning.

At common law the arraignment of a prisoner consists in calling him to the bar; in his holding up his hand — for identification; in reading the indictment to him — that he may understand the charge; in demanding whether he is guilty or not guilty; and in inquiring how he will be tried — the common answer being "By God and my country."[1]

Constitutes no part of the trial, but is a preliminary proceeding. Until the party has pleaded, it cannot be known whether there will be any trial or not.[2]

In a State in which the constitution provides that the trial of crimes shall be by jury and the prisoner pleads "not guilty," it is mere mockery to ask him how he will be tried, for the constitution has already declared how that shall be. As soon as it judicially appears of record that the party has pleaded not guilty there is an issue which the court is bound to direct to be tried by a jury.[3]

Though a formal arraignment may be proper it is not essential to the power of the court to convict, when expressly waived by the accused; especially so since there are no longer the same reasons for the formalities of an arraignment that there were in ancient practice when proceedings were in Latin, and the accused could not appear with counsel, and, after a plea of not guilty, he was required to elect between trial by jury and ordeal or wager of battel.[4] See BATTEL.

The ancient formality is disused. The statutory requirement of furnishing the prisoner with a copy of the indictment takes the place of reading the indictment to him. The record should show that what took place amounted to an arraignment — as, the mention of the prisoner's presence in court, and that he was called upon to plead to the indictment.[5]

ARRAY.[6] Order; arrangement.

The whole body of jurors as arranged upon the panel. Whence challenge to the array.[7] See CHALLENGE, 4.

ARREAR.[8] Back, remaining back: unpaid, though due.

Arrears. Money unpaid after it is due; as, of interest, dividends, rent, taxes, wages, pensions, alimony, dower.

"In arrear" — overdue and unpaid.[9]

---

[1] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 553 (1875), Waite, C. J.

[2] Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 265 (1886), Woods, J.

[3] Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. 177–89 (Ky., 1871), Freeman, J.

[4] Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. 184, supra; 2 Humph. 158–59. See also State v. Reid, 1 Ala. 614–22 (1840), Collier, C. J.; Wright v. Commonwealth, 77 Pa. 470 (1875); 3 Phila. 610; 2 Litt., Ky., 90; 1 Kelly, Ga., 247–51; 2 Story, Const. §§ 1890–90; 8 Am. Rep. 22; 14 id. 380.

[5] See 12 How. 426; 6 Pet. 709; 4 Hall, L. J. 518.

[6] L. ad rationem ponere, to call to account, — 2 Hale, P. C. 216. F. aranier, to speak to, cite: raison, reason.

[7] State v. Weber, 22 Mo. 325 (1855).

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 322.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 322–24. See 1 Steph. Hist. C. L. Eng. 227.

[2] United States v. Curtis, 4 Mas. 236 (1826), Story, J.

[3] United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sumn. 69 (1834), Story, J.; State v. Weber, 22 Mo. 325–27 (1855).

[4] Goodwin v. State, 16 Ohio St. 346 (1865), Day, J

[5] Fitzpatrick v. People, 98 Ill. 260 (1881), Sheldon, J. See also Lynch v. Commonwealth, 88 Pa. 198 (1878); Ray v. People, 6 Col. 231 (1882).

[6] F. arrai, preparation, order.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 359; 4 id. 352.

[8] Old Eng. arere, rere, in the rear: F. riere; L. retro, backward.

[9] Hollingsworth v. Willis, 64 Miss. 157 (1886).

Said of money unpaid at the time it is due, that is, past due.[1]

"Arrear" implies that no part has been paid; "arrears" and "arrearage," that some part has been paid.[2] See RIEN.

ARREST.[3] 1, v. To delay, detain, stay, stop, withhold.

Arrest of judgment. If, while an issue of fact is regularly decided, it appears that the complaint was either not actionable or was not made with sufficient precision, the defeated party may supersede it by arresting or staying the judgment.[4]

Arrests of judgment arise from intrinsic causes appearing upon the face of the record. As, where the declaration varies totally from the original writ; where the verdict materially varies from the pleadings and issue thereon; or, when the case laid in the declaration is not sufficient in law upon which to found an action.[5]

An invariable rule is that whatever matter of law is alleged in arrest of judgment must be such matter as, upon demurrer, would have been sufficient to overthrow the action or plea.[6]

A defendant in a criminal prosecution, at any time before sentence, may offer exceptions to the indictment in arrest or stay of judgment; as, for want of sufficient certainty in setting forth either the person, the time, the place, or the offense.[6]

The motion should be predicated upon some defect which appears upon the face of the record.[7]

2, n. Taking a thing or a person into the custody of the law.

(1) In admiralty practice the technical term for an actual seizure of property.[8]

After an order of discharge from arrest the marshal is to restore the party to formal possession.[9] See ATTACH, 2; RES, 2; SEIZURE.

(2) In civil practice apprehension of a person by virtue of lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action.[10]

Restraint of the person — restriction of the right of locomotion.[1]

The causes are mainly torts — as, frauds upon creditors, breaches of promise to marry, non payment of taxes, non-compliance with the order of a court, professional or official misconduct.

May be made upon original, mesne, or final process.

(3) In criminal practice apprehending or detaining one's person in order to be forthcoming to answer an alleged or suspected crime.[2]

"Apprehension" (q. v.) is sometimes used distinctively for this species of arrest.

Taking, seizing, or detaining the person of another, touching or putting hands upon him in the execution of process, or any act indicating an intention to arrest, constitutes an arrest.[3] Usually effected by means of a —

Warrant of arrest. A written judicial order for the arrest of a person accused or suspected of having committed a crime.

This must be in writing, under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and state the cause of commitment, that it may be examined into, if necessary, upon a writ of habeas corpus.[4]

All processes for the arrest of a party are not included in the word "warrant" as used in the constitutional provision that no warrant shall issue for the arrest of a person but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation. A capias, or writ of arrest in a civil action, is not a warrant in the sense intended, and it is issued, at common law, as a matter of course, without oath. The warrant meant is an authority for the arrest of a person upon a criminal charge with a view to his commitment and trial. The arrest of a person upon a charge of insanity, for the purpose of his confinement, partakes more of the nature of a criminal than of a civil proceeding.[5]

Double arrest. Twice holding a defendant to bail for the same cause of action.

Not allowed except under very special circumstances. There cannot be an arrest in two places for the same cause of action.[6]

False arrest. Any restraint upon the liberty of a person without lawful cause; false imprisonment.

Malicious arrest. An arrest made without probable cause.

The malice necessary to sustain an action is not express malice or the specific desire to vex or injure

---

[1] Wiggin v. Knights of Pythias, 31 F. R. 125 (1887), Hammond, J.

[2] Webster's Dict.

[3] F. arester, to stay: L. re-stare, to stand back, to remain.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 387.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 393–94.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 375. See also Delaware Canal Co. v. Commonwealth, 60 Pa. 371 (1869).

[7] Rountree v. Lathrop, 69 Ga. 589 (1882); People v. Kelly, 94 N. Y. 526 (1884).

[8] Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall. 107 (1869), Field, J.; The Lottawanna, 20 id. 221–22 (1873).

[9] The Maryâ, 10 Bened. 561–62 (1879).

[10] [Gentry v. Griffith, 27 Tex. 462 (1864), Moore, J.

[1] [Hart v. Flynn, 8 Dana, 192 (Ky., 1839), Ewing, J.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 289; Montgomery County v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 176 (1877).

[3] United States v. Benner, Bald. 239 (1830), Baldwin, J.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 137; 4 id. 290–91; 71 N. Y. 376; 92 id. 490; 4 Cr. L. M. 193–99.

[5] Sprigg v. Stump, 7 Saw. 289 (1881), Deady, J.

[6] See Hernandez v. Canobell, 4 Duer, 642 (1855); 14 Johns. *347; 4 Yeates, 206.

another, but the willful doing of an unlawful act to the prejudice or injury of another.[1]

All persons within the jurisdiction of the court are liable to arrest on civil process, except — an ambassador and his servant; an attorney, suitor, or subpœnaed witness as such attending a lawful tribunal; a clergyman at divine service; an elector at a public election; a married woman on her contract; a lawmaker in attendance upon the legislative body; a soldier on military duty; sovereigns, governors of the States; and other persons, as provided in local statutes.

In the case of persons attending a tribunal or a legislature the privilege protects them not only during attendance, but also during the reasonable period required for going and returning, — eundo, morando, et redeundo, going, remaining, and returning.[2]

All persons in the public service are exempt, as a matter of public policy, from arrest upon civil process while thus engaged. The rule is different when the process is issued upon a charge of felony.[3]

May not be made in the presence of a court; nor on Sunday; nor, generally, at night.

When made upon final process merely giving bail does not authorize a discharge.

An unauthorized arrest renders the officer liable to trespass. This occurs when the process is materially irregular or informal, or issued from a court which has no jurisdiction, or when the wrong person is taken under legal process.[4]

All persons are liable to arrest on criminal process — except ambassadors and their servants. It may be made: 1. Under a warrant issued by a justice of the peace when he has jurisdiction; in a case of suspicion he is the sole judge of the probability. 2. By an officer without a warrant — when the peace is broken in his presence; and whenever he has probable cause to suspect that a felony has been committed and that the person he arrests is guilty; also, by watchmen, who keep watch and ward in towns, of all offenders, particularly night-walkers. 3. By a private person without a warrant — when the peace is broken in his presence; and whenever a felony has actually been committed and he has probable cause to know that the person he arrests was the perpetrator. 4. By hue and cry,[5] q. v.

May be made at night, and, for an indictable offense, on Sunday. Must be made within the jurisdiction of the court or at least of the State. The officer may use necessary force; but he may not kill one charged with a misdemeanor, in the act of escaping, and, rarely, one charged with a felony.[1]

One who is not a peace officer, de jure or de facto, by assuming to exercise the duties of such officer does not acquire more authority to make an arrest than any other private individual. In resisting arrest by such a person one may use only force enough to protect himself from the assault, — unless it is necessary to save his own life, or his person from great harm, in which case he may take life.[2]

See further BAIL, 1 (2); CAPERE; DURESS; ESCAPE, 2; HOUSE, 1; IMPRISON; OBSTRUCT, 3; PROSECUTION, Malicious; RESIST; REWARD, 1; SANCTUARY; SUSPICION; WARRANT, 2.

ARRIVAL.[3] Under a law imposing a forfeiture there may be an arrival of a vessel at a port without an actual entry or an attempt to enter the port.[4]

Perhaps an arrival "within" a port cannot be without an entry into the port.[6]

In navigation and revenue laws is sometimes used in the common sense of coming into port, and sometimes in the sense of coming into a port of entry or destination for a particular object connected with the voyage.[5]

Sometimes refers to a coming into a port for any cause or purpose. This may be the literal and general meaning with the lexicographers, but, in several cases, the term denotes a coming in for certain special objects of business and remaining there long enough to render an entry of the vessel proper, and a deposit of her papers with a consul prudent and useful. Thus it is when the vessel enters a port or harbor to close an outward or inward voyage. It is usually a coming to the place of the vessel's destination for her business and waiting to transact it.[6]

A vessel arrives at a port of discharge when she comes or is brought to the place where it is intended to discharge her and where the customary place of discharge is.[7]

As to arrival at destination of goods bailed to a common carrier, see CARRIER.

---

[1] Johnson v. Ebberts, 11 F. R. 129 (1880), cases.

[2] See Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatch. 516 (1880), cases; Atchison v. Morris, 11 F. R. 582 (1882), cases; Larned v. Griffin, 12 id. 590 (1882), cases: s. c. 14 Rep. 258; Nichols v. Horton, 14 F. R. 397, 829 (1882), cases; Jones v. Knauss, 31 N. J. E. 211–16 (1879), cases; Greer v. Young, Sup. Ct. Ill. (1887), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 372 (1887); ib. 377–82, cases; 11 N. E. Rep. 167; Palmer v. Rowan, Sup. Ct. Neb. (1888): 22 Am. Law Rev. 278–80 (1888), cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 316–17; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 389–90.

[3] United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 486 (1868).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 288–89; 1 Bouv. 183, cases.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 289–94; Mitchell v. Lemon, 34 Md. 181 (1870), cases; Fleetwood v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 5 (1882); Neal v. Joyner, 89 N. C. 283–90 (1883), cases; Staples v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 139–41 (1883), cases; Morley v. Chase, 143 Mass. 396 (1887), cases; Cooley, Torts, 174–75, cases.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 293; United States v. Rice, 1 Hughes, 562–66 (1875), cases; Reneau v. State, 2 Lea, 720 (1879). On federal arrests of State prisoners, see 18 Cent. Law J. 163–65 (1884), cases.

[2] Creighton v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 142 (1885).

[3] F. arriver: L. L. ad-ripare, to land, come to shore.

[4] [United States v. Open Boat, 5 Mas. 132 (1828), Story, J.; United States v. Shackford, ib. 447 (1828).

[5] Parsons v. Hunter, 2 Sumn. 422–23 (1836), Story, J.

[6] Harrison v. Vose, 9 How. 379–81 (1850), statutes, Woodbury, J.

[7] Simpson v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co., 1 Holmes, 137–43 (1872), cases, Shepley, J. See also Gronstadt v. Witthoff, 15 F. R. 269, 271 (1883).

ARS. L. Skill in fitting or joining: skill, trade, calling, art.

Cuique, or cuilibet, in sua arte perito, credendum est. To one practiced in his art, confidence should be given.

The opinion of a person versed in a calling is to be received as evidence. Every one, also, is presumed to possess the skill ordinarily requisite to the due discharge of the demands or duties of his vocation.[1] See further EXPERT.

ARSENAL. See LAND, Public.

ARSON.[2] The malicious and willful burning of the house or out-house of another.[3]

The malicious burning of another's house.[4]

Burning any building so situated as to endanger a dwelling-house was felonious arson at common law.[5]

In some States statutes divide the offense into degrees, punishing most severely burnings which involve the greater danger to life. Statutes also impose punishments for the malicious burning of structures not the subject of arson at common law, without extending that name to include them.

At common law an offense against the right of habitation. Actual destruction of some integral part of the wood-work, not personalty, is necessary. The burning is "willful and malicious" when not accidental nor for the public welfare. By "house" is meant a dwelling-house or any out-building within the curtilage, q. v. Brief absence from the house is not regarded. If homicide results the act is also murder.

The offense may be committed by willfully setting fire to one's own house and thereby burning a neighbor's house.[6]

Burning one's own house to defraud insurers has been made indictable.[7] See BELONG; BURN.

ART. 1. A principle put into practice by means of some art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. See ARS.

"The Congress shall have Power . . To promote the Progress of Science and Useful Arts, by securing to . . Inventors the exclusive Right to their . . Discoveries."[8]

In speaking of patenting an "art" the reference is not to an art in the abstract, without a specification of the manner in which it is to operate as a manufacture or otherwise, but to the art thus explained in the specification, and illustrated, when of a character so to be, by a machine or model or by drawings. It is the art so represented or exemplified, like the principle so embodied, which the patent laws protect. In the English patent acts the word "art" is not used at all. And in ours, as well as in the Constitution, the word refers to a "useful art," or to a manufacture which is beneficial, and which, by the same law, is required to be described with exactness as to its mode of operation.[1]

"Useful art" is the general term used in the patent laws. An art may require one or more processes or machines to produce a certain result or manufacture. The arts of tanning, dyeing, making water-proof cloth, vulcanizing India-rubber, smelting ores, and numerous others, are usually carried on by processes, as distinguished from machines.[9]

Without attempting to define the term "art" with logical accuracy we take as examples of it something which, in their concrete form, exhibit what all concede to come within a correct definition, such as the art of printing, that of telegraphy, or that of photography. The art of tanning leather might also come within the category because it requires various processes and manipulations.[2]

Centuries ago discoveries were made in certain arts the fruits of which have come down to us, but the means by which the work was accomplished are at this day unknown. It would hardly be doubted, if one discovered an art thus lost, and it was a useful improvement, that he would be entitled to a patent. He would not literally be the original inventor; but he would be the first to confer on the public the benefit of the invention.[4] See DESIGN, 2; PATENT, 2; PROCESS, 2.

2. A description of the art of book-keeping, though entitled to the benefit of copyright, lays no foundation for an exclusive claim to the art itself.

The object of the one is explanation; of the other use. The former may be secured by copyright; the latter, if at all, by letters-patent.[5]

A copyright may be secured for models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts — painting and sculpture.[6] See COPYRIGHT.

American works of fine arts are importable free of duty.[7] See FURNITURE.

3. Trade; business; calling.

Words of art are understood as in the art or science; other words, in their popular or received import.[8]

When parties who are engaged in a particular business use terms which have acquired a well-defined meaning in that business, the supposition is that they intended the terms to have their ordinary technical meaning.[9]

A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of oranges,

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 75; 2 Kent, 566; 21 How. 101; 9 Mass. 227.

[2] F. arson, incendiarism: L. ardere, to burn.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 220; 40 Ala. 664; 20 Conn. *246.

[4] 2 Bishop, Cr. L. § 8.

[5] Hill v. Commonwealth, 98 Pa. 195 (1881); State v. McGowan, 20 Conn. *246–47 (1850).

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 220–23.

[7] 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 843; 32 Cal. 160; 51 N. H. 176; 19 N. Y. 537.

[8] Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 8.

[1] [Smith v. Downing, 1 Fish. P. C. 70–71 (1850), Woodbury, J.; French v. Rogers, ib. 142 (1850).

[2] Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 267 (1853), Grier, J.

[3] Jacobs v. Baker, 7 Wall. 397 (1868), Grier, J.

[4] Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 497 (1850), Taney, C. J.

[5] Baker v. Selden, 101 U. S. 105 (1879), Bradley, J.

[6] R. S. § 4952.

[7] Act 22 March, 1883: 22 St. L. 521.

[8] Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 How. 261 (1853); Moran v. Prather, 23 Wall. 499 (1874); Greenleaf v. Goodrich, 101 U. S. 284 (1879).

[9] South Bend Iron Works v. Cottrell, 31 F. R. 256 (1887).

the captain engaging to "take the northern passage." The cargo becoming damaged, the charterer libeled the vessel for the loss. The court below found that "northern passage" appeared to be a term of art, unintelligible without the aid of testimony, that the evidence concerning it was conflicting, but that it was immaterial to decide what it meant as the claimant was entitled to the least strict definition and the actual course of the vessel came within that definition. Held, that if the term was a term of art it should have been found by the court; and that if there was no passage known as the "northern," the vessel was bound to take the one which would carry it in a northerly direction through the coolest waters, and the court should have ascertained from the proof what passages vessels were accustomed to take and which passage the contract permitted.[1]

See ABBREVIATIONS; EXPERT; SCIENCE; TECHNICAL; TERM, 1.

ARTICLE.[2] 1. "A distinct portion or part, a joint or a part of a member, one of various things."

A word of separation to individualize and distinguish some particular thing from the general thing or whole of which it forms a part: as, an article in a newspaper, an article of merchandise.[3]

The radical word in the Greek means to join or to fit to as a part. It is only recently that it has been applied to goods or physical property, and then only in the sense of something that is separate and individual in itself, as salt is a necessary article, or a hammer is a useful article.[3]

When a carrier stipulates that he will not be liable in the carriage of baggage for an amount exceeding fifty dollars "upon any article," the reference is to any article coming under the denomination of baggage. The limitation would apply to the articles in a trunk, but not to the trunk as one article. "The article forwarded," in a similar special contract, may cover each of several articles so strapped together as to form one package.[3]

2. In the sense of a distinct portion, one of separate yet co-related parts, a clause in a contract, compact, or other formal document, is used in the expressions:

An article or articles — of agreement, of amendment, of association, of confederation, of impeachment, of partnership, of peace, of war, of separation, of shipping, qq. v.

In popular parlance "to article"[4] means to make and become bound by an article of agreement, q. v.

[1] The John H. Pearson, 121 U. S. 469, 472 (1887), Waite, C. J. Appeal from the Cir. Ct. for Mass.

[2] F. article: L. articulus, a small joint, a joint: Gk. areiv', to fit to as part.

[3] Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly, 195 (1871), Daly, C. J. See also 6 Blatch. 68; 8 id. 257.

[4] See 1 Story, Eq. § 790.

Articled clerk. In England a person bound by indenture to a solicitor, that he may acquire the knowledge pertaining to the business of a solicitor.

Articulately. By separate or distinct propositions: as, to articulately propound in a libel in admiralty. See LIBEL, 2.

3. Precise point of time; the exact moment: as, to be in the article of death — in articulo mortis.

ARTIFICE. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; DECEIT; FRAUD.

ARTIFICIAL. 1. Pertaining to an art, trade, or profession; technical. See ART, 2, 3.

Artificially. A will is said to be "artificially" or "inartificially" drawn, according as it employs or does not employ technical or legal words and phrases and a lawyer-like arrangement of the matter. See CONSTRUCTION.

2. Made or devised by human law; opposed to natural — formed by the laws of God: as, an artificial body or person, q. v.; an artificial day, q. v.

3. Established by agreement between men, conventional; opposed to natural — made by nature: as, an artificial boundary, q. v.

ARTS. See ART.

AS. Compare SUCH.

While the omission of this word is not conclusive when the body of a complaint discloses a representative capacity in the defendant as the ground of action, where the scope and averments of the complaint harmonize with the omission the action may be considered against the defendant as an individual.[1]

As near as may be. See PROCEDURE.

As soon as. See IMMEDIATELY; POSSIBLE; SOON; WHENEVER.

As to. Compare QUOAD.

Recurring at the commencement of several devises does not necessarily indicate the commencement of a complete devise, independent of other limitations.[2]

ASCERTAIN. 1. To render definite or fixed: as, to ascertain the relief due.[3]

"The use in pleading of an averment is to ascertain that to the court which is generally or doubtfully expressed."[4]

[1] Bennett v. Whitney, 94 N. Y. 305 (1884). See also Cook v. Gray, 133 Mass. 110 (1882); 3 Cranch, C. C. 459.

[2] Gordon v. Gordon, 5 L. R., H. L. 254 (1871).

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 65, 465. Swift wrote "A Proposal for correcting and ascertaining the English Tongue," and South (Sermons, V, 286) says that "success is intended for the wicked man, to ascertain his destruction."

[4] Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. 219 (1809).

To make sure or certain; to establish, determine, settle.[1]

This would seem to demand the observance of the usual mode of investigation, to determine the matter in question. Hence, where rent is to be "ascertained" by persons selected by the parties, notice of the time and place of hearing, with an opportunity for offering proofs, should first be given to the parties interested.[2]

2. To acquire information as to a fact; to become possessed of knowledge respecting an event or transaction; to learn the truth as to a matter capable of proof. See INQUIRY, 1; KNOWLEDGE, 1.

ASIDE. See SET ASIDE; STAND ASIDE.

ASPECT. A bill in equity may be framed with a "double aspect," embracing alternative averments, provided that each aspect entitles the complainant to substantially the same relief, and that the same defenses are applicable to each.[3] See RELIEF, 2.

ASPORTARE. L. To carry away.

Cepit et asportavit. He took and carried away. Words formerly used to charge an unlawful removal of personalty.

De bonis asportatis. For goods carried off. The name of an action of trespass for personalty unlawfully removed, withheld or converted. See ASPORTATION.

ASPORTATION. Carrying away or removing a thing — a chattel.

In larceny there must not only be a taking, but a carrying away. Cepit et asportavit was the old law-Latin expression. A bare removal from the place in which the goods are found is a sufficient asportation.[4] See ASPORTARE.

ASS. See CATTLE; HORSE.

ASSAULT.[5] An attempt or offer to beat another, without touching him.[6]

If one lifts up his cane or his fist, in a threatening manner at another, or strikes at but misses him — this is an assault, insultus, which Finch describes to be "an unlawful setting upon one's person."[6]

It is also inchoate violence, which is considerably higher than bare threats; and, therefore, though no actual suffering is proved, the party injured may have redress by action of trespass vi et armis, wherein he recovers damages as compensation for the injury.[6]

An offer or attempt by force to do corporal injury to another.[1]

As if one person strike at another with his hand or a stick, and miss him. If the other be stricken, it is a battery. Or if he shake his fist at another, or present a gun, or other weapon, within such a distance that a hurt might be given; or draw a sword and brandish it in a menacing manner. An intent to do some corporal injury must be coupled with the act.[1]

Any attempt or offer with force or violence to do a corporal hurt to another, whether from malice or wantonness, with such circumstances as denote at the time an intention to do it, coupled with a present ability to carry the intention into effect.[2]

An unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury upon the person of another.[3]

Assailant and the assailed designate, respectively, the person injuring and the person injured.

Abusive words cannot constitute the offense; nor can an act in defense of one's self, wife, child, servant, or property; nor an act in obedience to legal process. Unlawful imprisonment, undue liberty taken by an employer, teacher, physician, dentist, car conductor, or other person in a like position, is, or includes, an assault.

An assault with intent to commit a felony is a higher offense than simple assault.[4]

Remedies: indictment for breach of the peace; action for damages.

Son assault demesne. F. His own assault; his assault in the first instance.

"If one strikes me first, I may strike in my own defense; and, if sued for it, may plead son assault demesne: that it was the plaintiff's own original assault that occasioned it."[5] Compare MANUS, Molliter.

See further BATTERY; DEFENSE, 1; INDECENT; PROVOCATION.

ASSAYER. See COIN.

Any person or persons or corporation whose business or occupation it is to separate gold and silver from other metals or mineral substances with which such gold or silver, or both, are alloyed, combined, or united, or to ascertain or determine the quantity of gold or silver in an alloy or combination with other metals, shall be deemed an assayer.[6]

ASSEMBLY. An intentional meeting, gathering, or concourse of people: of three or

[1] Worcester's Dict.

[2] Brown v. Luddy, 11 Hun, 456 (1877).

[3] Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 325 (1881); Fields v. Helmes, ib. 460 (1881); 17 How. 130.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 232; Croom v. State, 71 Ala. 14 (1881).

[5] L. ad-saltus, a leap at: salire, to leap, spring.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 120; 9 Ala. 82; 39 Miss. 524; 30 Hun, 427.

[1] United States v. Hand, 2 Wash. 437 (1810), Washington, J.; United States v. Ortega, 4 id. 534 (1825); Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 181 (1885).

[2] Traver v. State, 43 Ala. 356 (1869), Peck, C. J.; Hays v. People, 1 Hill, 352-53 (N. Y., 1841).

[3] Cal. Penal Code, § 240; People v. Gordon, 70 Cal 468 (1886).

[4] People v. Devine, 59 Cal. 630 (1881).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 120-21; 4 Blackf. 546; 4 Denio, 448.

[6] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 121.

more persons in one body; — of any number of persons in one place.

Assemblage. May be composed of things as well as persons.[1] — respects things only.[2]

Lawful assembly. Any congregating of people or citizens directed or permitted by the law of the place.

Civil assembly. A meeting of persons for purposes of trade, amusement, worship, or the like.

Political assembly. Any meeting of persons required by the constitution and laws of the place: as, that of law-makers — whence "Assembly" and "General Assembly" — also, that of the Federal electors, and that of voters at "primary assemblies."

Assemblyman. A member of the legislature of a State — possibly, by restriction, of the lower house. See LEGISLATURE.

Popular assembly. Any meeting of the people to deliberate over their rights and duties with respect to government; also, the House of Representatives in Congress, and the more numerous body in the legislature of a State.

"Congress shall make no law" prohibiting or abridging "the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."[3]

The right of the people peaceably to assemble for lawful purposes existed long before the adoption of the Constitution. It is and always has been one of the attributes of citizenship under a free government. It was not therefore a right granted to the people by the Constitution. The government of the United States, when established, found it in existence with an obligation on the part of the States to afford it protection. The First Amendment operates upon the National government alone.[4] See PETITION, Right of.

In every meeting assembled for a lawful purpose there must necessarily exist an inherent power to preserve order and to remove by force any person who creates a disturbance. If it were not so, the guaranty of the constitution would be idle mockery. Religious meetings, for example, would lose their solemnity and usefulness if they could be turned into halls of disputation at the will of any individual.[5] See WORSHIP.

Unlawful assembly. When three or more do assemble themselves together to do an unlawful act, . . and part without doing it or making any motion toward it.[1] See MOB; RIOT; ROUT.

ASSENT.[2] Agreement; approval; compliance; consent; willingness declared. Opposed, dissent.

Implies more than mere acceptance, — is an act of the understanding; while "consent" is an act of the feelings and will.[3] "Assent" respects matters of judgment; "consent" matters of conduct.[4]

Acceptance, approval, consent, ratification, and assent, are often interchanged.[5]

Express assent. Assent openly declared, in words spoken or written. Implied assent. Assent inferred from conduct.

Mutual assent. Assent given by all the parties to an act or contract; the meeting of the minds of the parties to any transaction.

Unless dissent is shown acceptance of a thing done for a person's benefit will be presumed; as in the case of a conveyance or a devise of land.

Assent must be ad idem — to the same thing, and in the same sense.[6]

"Mutual assent," which is the meeting of the minds of both of the parties to a contract, is vital to the existence of the contract. The obligation must be correlative: if there is none on one side there can be none on the other. Moreover, this requisite assent must be the work of the parties themselves: the law cannot supply it.[7]

Mutual assent of the parties to a modification is as indispensable as to the original making of a contract. Where there is a misunderstanding as to anything material the requisite mutuality of assent is wanting, the supposed contract does not exist, and neither party is bound. In the view of the law in such case there has been merely a negotiation resulting in a failure to agree. What has occurred is as if it were not.[8]

See KNOWLEDGE, 1; INQUIRY, 1; PERMIT; PROTEST, 2; RATIFICATION; SATISFY, 1; SILENCE; UNDERSTANDING.

ASSERTORY OATH. See OATH, Official.

ASSESS.[9] 1. To rate or fix the proportion which each person is to pay of a tax; to

[1] Webster's Dict.

[2] Crabbe's Syn.

[3] Constitution, Amd. I. Ratified Dec. 15, 1791.

[4] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 551-52 (1875), Waite, C. J.

[5] Wall v. Lee, 36 N. Y. 142-46 (1865), cases. See also 21 Wend. 149; 1 Gray, 188; 62 Pa. 474; 20 Alb. L. J. 124 (1879), cases.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 146: 3 Coke, Inst. 176.

[2] L. assentire, to agree to.

[3] Webster's Dict.

[4] Crabbe's Syn.

[5] See Welch v. Sackett, 12 Wis. *267 (1860), Dixon, C. J.

[6] See 4 Wheat. 225; 1 Sumn. 218; 12 Mass. 461; 11 N. Y. 441; 1 Pars. Contr. 400; 2 Washb. R. P. 579.

[7] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Young, 23 Wall. 107 (1874), Swayne, J.

[8] Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S. 47-49 (1876), cases, Swayne, J.; First Nat. Bank of Quincy v. Hall, 101 id. 49-50 (1879); 109 id. 97.

[9] From L. assessor, an adjuster of taxes; originally a judge's assistant, one who sat by him: assidere, to sit near to. Compare ASSIZE.

tax. To adjust the shares of a contribution by several persons toward a common object according to the benefit received. To fix the value or the amount of a thing.[1]

To determine by rules of law a sum to be paid; to rate the proportional contribution due to a fund; to fix the amount payable by a person or persons in satisfaction of an established demand.[2]

Assessor. (1) An adviser to a court; an expert.

Nautical assessor. A person, possessing special knowledge in matters of navigation and of maritime affairs, who assists a court of admiralty.[3] Compare ALDERMAN.

(2) One who makes assessments for purposes of taxation or contribution.

A person charged by law with the duty of ascertaining and determining the value of property as the foundation of a public tax.[4]

Assessment. The act or proceeding by which a sum due or payable is determined; also, the sum itself as a payment or obligation.

As, an assessment — of the damages suffered by a plaintiff; of the value of property taken for public use; of money as the equivalent of a benefit or burden caused by a municipal improvement; of losses in insurance; of installments payable upon stock subscriptions; of a sum to be raised by taxation, and of the portions due from individuals.

Strictly speaking, an assessment of taxes is an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within a district. As more commonly employed, consists in listing the persons, property, etc., to be taxed, and in estimating the sums which are to be the guide in an apportionment of the tax between them; — valuation is a part of it.[5]

In a broad sense taxes undoubtedly include assessments, and the right to impose assessments has its foundation in the taxing power of the government; but there is also a broad distinction between them. "Taxes" are public burdens imposed generally upon the inhabitants of the whole State, or upon some civil division thereof, for governmental purposes without reference to peculiar benefits to particular individuals or property. "Assessments" have reference to impositions for improvements which are specially beneficial to individuals or property and which are imposed in proportion to the particular benefits supposed to be conferred. They are justified when the improvements confer special benefits and are equitable only when divided in proportion to such benefits.[1] See INSTALLMENT; JUST, 2; TAX, 2; VALUE.

Used of a business corporation, a rating or fixing, by the board of directors, of the proportion of his subscription which every subscriber is to pay, when notified of it and called upon.[2] See CALL, 2 (1).

Political assessment. See OFFICER.

2. To decide the degree of; to determine the extent of: as, to assess a punishment.

A statute providing that issues of fact in criminal cases shall be tried by a jury, "who shall assess the punishment in their verdict," refers to offenses as to which the limits of punishment are fixed by law and within which a discretion may be exercised.[3]

ASSETS.[4] Property sufficient to answer a demand — made by a creditor or a legatee upon an executor or administrator, or by a creditor upon an insolvent or a bankrupt.

Also, all the property of the estate of a decedent or of an insolvent.

"All the assets" of an insolvent company, of which a receiver takes possession in New York, means all the property, real and personal, of the company.[5]

The property of a deceased person appropriable to the payment of his debts; also, the entire property of a mercantile firm or trading corporation.[6]

Whatever is recovered that is of a salable nature and may be converted into ready money is called "assets" in the hands of the executor or administrator; that is "sufficient" or "enough" (French assez) to make him chargeable to a creditor or legatee, as far as such goods and chattels extend.[7]

Originally, that which is sufficient or

[1] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[2] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[3] See The Clement, 2 Curt. 369 (1855); The Empire, 19 F. R. 559 (1884), cases.

[4] Savings, &c. Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 509 (1873), Wallace, C. J.

[5] [People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 545–46 (1879), Miller, J.: Cooley, Tax. 258; Bur. Tax. 198, § 94.

[1] Roosevelt Hospital v. Mayor of New York, 84 N. Y. 112–13 (1881), cases, Earle, J.; Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 333–36 (1868), cases; Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 561–65 (1878), cases; Stephani v. Bishop of Chicago, 2 Bradw. 252–53 (1878); 1 Handy, 473; 3 Col. 462; 6 id. 113; 1 Wash. T. 576; Cooley, Tax. 147.

[2] [Spangler v. Indiana, &c. R. Co., 21 Ill. 278 (1859), Breese, J.

[3] Territory v. Romine, 2 N. M. 128 (1881); ib. 457.

[4] F. assez, sufficient: L. ad, to, for; satis, enough.

[5] Attorney-General v. Atlantic Mut. Life Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. 282 (1885).

[6] Vaiden v. Hawkins, 59 Miss. 419 (1882), Chalmers, C. J.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 510, 244.

enough in the hands of the executor or administrator to make him chargeable to the creditors, legatees, and distributees of the deceased, so far as the personal property of the deceased, which comes to the hands of the executor or administrator, extends for purposes of administration. In an accurate legal sense, all the personal property of the deceased which is of a salable nature and may be converted into money is deemed assets. But the word is not confined to such property; for all other property of the deceased which is chargeable with, and applicable to, his debts or legacies is, in a large sense, assets.[1]

Though generally used to denote things which come to the representatives of a deceased person, the word includes anything, whether belonging to the estate of a deceased person or not, which can be made available for the payment of debts. Hence we speak of the assets of a money corporation, of an insolvent debtor, of an individual, of a private partnership. The word is likewise used for the "means" which a party has as compared with his liabilities.[2]

In the bankrupt law "assets" included all property chargeable with the debts of the bankrupt that came into the hands or under the control of the assignee.[3]

Legal assets. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable in the hands of his executor or administrator to the payment of debts and legacies. Generally speaking they are such as can be reached by a suit at law against the executor or administrator, either by a common judgment or by a judgment upon a devastavit. More accurately speaking they are such as come into the hands and power of an executor or administrator, or such as, virtute officii, he is intrusted with by law to dispose of in the course of administration,— whatever he takes as executor or administrator, or in respect to his office. Equitable assets. All assets, chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets.[4]

Termed "equitable" because (1) to obtain payment out of them they can be reached only through the instrumentality of a court of equity, and (2) the rules of distribution by which they are governed differ from the rules for the distribution of legal assets. In general they are either created such by the intent of the party or result from the nature of the estate made chargeable.[4]

[1] [1 Story, Eq. § 531.

[2] [Stanton v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 449 (1857); Hall v. Martin, 46 N. H. 342 (1865).

[3] Re Taggert, 16 Bankr. Reg. 358 (1877).

[4] [1 Story, Eq. §§ 551-52.

The property of a decedent available at common law for satisfying creditors is called "legal assets," and will be applied, at common law and in equity, in the ordinary course of administration, which gives debts of a certain nature priority over others. Where, however, the assets are available only in a court of equity they are termed "equitable assets," and, according to the maxim, that equality is equity, will, after satisfying those who have liens upon any specific property, be distributed among the creditors of all grades pari passu, without regard to legal priority.[1]

"Equitable assets" are such as the debtor has made subject to his debts generally, which would not be thus subjected without his act, and which can be reached only by a court of equity. They are divisible among the creditors in ratable proportions.[2]

Personal assets. Assets to which the executor or administrator is entitled; personalty. Real assets. Such assets as go to the heir by descent; assets by descent;[3] also, landed property.

"Personal assets" are chattels, money, and evidences of debt available for paying the debts of a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent.

"Real assets" are such portion of the property of any such individual as consists of realty.

Assets are also immediate and future.[4]

At common law (originally for feudal reasons) lands in the hands of the debtor himself were not assets for the payment of debts; creditors could reach only the personalty and the profits of realty. Upon the death of the debtor, in case of intestacy, the land descended to the heir and the personalty to the executor. A creditor by a simple contract debt for satisfaction could look only to the personalty in the hands of the executor; while a creditor by a specialty in which the heir was named could reach the land itself in such heir's possession — his assets by descent. By will, however, the debtor might charge land with the prior payment of a debt.[5]

For the purpose of founding administration all simple contract debts are assets at the domicil of the debtor. A note given is merely evidence of the debt.[6]

See Accidere, Quando: Account, 1; Administer, 4; Bankruptcy; Bona; Conformity; Creditor's Bill; Insolvency; Legacy; Marshal, 2.

ASSIGN.[7] To point out, specify, signify which of several things; to select, appoint, fix. Whence assignable, assignment.

As, to assign — the particular in which a

[1] [Silk v. Prime, 2 L. Cas. Eq., 4 Am. ed., 358, 358, cases.

[2] Catlin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 243 (1826), Hosmer, C. J. See also Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 712-20 (1884); 2 Johns. Ch. 577.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 244, 340, 510.]

[4] 4 Kent, 354.

[5] Hall v. Martin, 46 N. H. 341 (1865).

[6] Wayman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 656 (1884), cases.

[7] F. assigner: L. assignare, to mark out to.

contract has been broken, that is, "the breach;" the matter in which alleged error was committed by an auditor, master, referee, court; dower, or the third of the deceased husband's realty; counsel for a prisoner on trial; a day for a hearing, trial, argument.

Assignment of errors. A pleading filed in an appellate court by a party who complains of errors committed by the court below.[1] See ERROR, 2 (3).

New or novel assignment. When a plaintiff in his replication, after an evasive plea, reduces a general wrong, as laid in his declaration, to a more particular certainty by assigning the injury afresh, with all its specific circumstances, in such manner as clearly to ascertain and identify it consistently with his general complaint.[2]

Not an admission of the facts alleged in the plea; merely an assertion that the plaintiff will not investigate the subject-matter.[3]

2. To set over something to another person; to transfer, convey.

Generally implies a writing. It is of all the right one has in any particular piece or pieces of property.[4] Compare LEASE.

The meanings vary with the subject-matter, but the general one is to set over or to transfer. As applied to movables, satisfied by a delivery.[5]

Assignable. Subject to lawful transfer; also, so transferable as to vest a right of action.[6] Opposed, non-assignable.

Assignor. He who transfers property to another person.

Assignee. He to whom property is transferred; more particularly he to whom an insolvent or a bankrupt makes over his whole estate for the benefit of his creditors.

In patent law one who has transferred to him in writing the whole interest of the original patent or any undivided part of such whole interest, in every portion of the United States. Compare GRANTEE 2; LICENSEE, 2.

In strict legal parlance does not designate an "indorsee" of paper.[7]

Assignee in fact. A person made an assignee by the act of another.

Assignee in law. A person made an assignee by the act of the law; as, an executor, an administrator, a trustee for creditors.[1]

An executor, as taking by operation of law, may be deemed the assignee in law of the testator. But a legatee or devisee occupies no such position.[2]

Provisional assignee. One to whom the estate of a bankrupt is conveyed until the permanent assignee can be appointed.

Assigns. Assignees — persons to whom a grantee may potentially convey; as, in the phrase in deeds "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns."[3]

Comprehends a line or succession of persons.[4]

Those to whom rights have been transmitted by a particular title, as by sale, gift, legacy, or other transfer or cession. Technically, designated the grantees of real estate in fee-simple; for convenience, came to embrace in its spirit all who succeeded to the title by any other means than by descent.[5]

Comprehends all those who take, immediately or remotely, from or under an assignor, whether by conveyance, devise, descent, or act of the law.[6]

In the phrase "lawful assigns or legal representatives," is used in a cognate sense with "legal representatives." Thus construed it means not assignees in fact, but assignees in law — those upon whom the right is devolved and vested by law, as, assignees in bankruptcy.[7]

Neither the word "assigns" nor the words "assigns forever" have any popular or technical meaning that could qualify a devise to a man and his "heirs."[8]

Includes a mortgagee.[9] See REPRESENTATIVE (1).

Not necessary in a deed as a word of limitation indicating the quantity of the estate granted or to empower the grantee to dispose of the estate.[10]

Assignment. A transfer of property to another for himself or creditors; also, the writing containing the evidence thereof.

The idea is essentially that of a transfer

[1] [Associates of the Jersey Company v. Davison, 29 N. J. L. 418 (1860).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 311. See also 20 Johns. 43; Steph. Pl. 241.

[3] Norman v. Wescombe, 2 M. & W. 360 (1837).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 327; 21 N. J. L. 389.

[5] Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. *591 (1810).

[6] [Thacker v. Henderson, 63 Barb. 279 (1862).

[7] Palmer v. Call, 2 McCrary, 530 (1881).

[1] See 3 Pars. Contr. 480.

[2] Hight v. Sackett, 34 N. Y. 451 (1866); 3 Hun, 419; 46 Ill. 31; 23 Wis. 295.

[3] See Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R., 4 Q. B. *186 (1869); Grant v. Carpenter, 8 R. I. 38 (1864); 34 Ala. 349; 28 Miss. 246; 19 N. Y. 344; 1 Curtis, 193.

[4] Ogden v. Price, 9 N. J. L. 169 (1827).

[5] [Watson v. Donnelly, 28 Barb. 658 (1859).

[6] Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R., 4 Q. B. *186 (1869), Hannen, J.; Brown v. Crookston Agricul. Association, 34 Minn. 547 (1886).

[7] South Pass of Mississippi, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 157 (1878). Compare United States v. Gillis, 95 U. S. 407 (1877).

[8] Lawrence v. Lawrence, 105 Pa. 340 (1884).

[9] Brown v. Crookston Agr. Assoc., 34 Minn. 546 (1886).

[10] Salem Capital Flour Mills Co. v. Stayton Water Ditch & Canal Co., 33 F. R. 154 (1887), Deady, J.

by one party to another of some species of property or valuable interest.[1]

When commercial paper, payable to bearer, is transferred by delivery, both the right of property and the right to sue pass thereby to the transferee; and this is frequently called an "assignment" of such chose in action. But such use of the term, which has grown up under the usages of commerce, is scarcely correct. Assignment proper is a transfer by writing.[2] See BEARER.

Domestic assignment. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, made by a debtor at the place of his domicil. Foreign assignment. Such assignment made in another State or county.[3]

Legal assignment. An assignment of an interest or of property, particularly of personal property, cognizable or enforceable in a court of law. Equitable assignment. A like transfer, and in a special sense referring to a chose in action or a thing not in esse, cognizable by a court of equity.

An "equitable assignment" is an agreement in the nature of a declaration of trust which a chancellor, though deaf to the prayer of a volunteer, never hesitates to execute when it has been made on a valuable or even good consideration.[4]

To make an assignment valid at law the subject must have actual or potential existence at the time of the grant or assignment. But courts of equity will support assignments not only of choses in action and of contingent interests and expectancies, but of things which, having no present actual or potential existence, rest in mere possibility; not indeed as a present positive transfer operative in præsenti, for that can only be of a thing in esse, but as a present contract to take effect and attach as soon as the thing comes in esse; as, an assignment of the oil to be obtained in a whaling voyage now in progress.[5]

To constitute an assignment in equity of a debt or other chose in action no particular form is necessary. Any order, writing, or act which makes an appropriation of a fund amounts to an equitable assignment of the fund. The reason is, the fund being a matter not assignable at law, nor capable of manual possession, an appropriation of it is all that the nature of the case admits of, and therefore it is held good in a court of equity. As the assignee is generally entitled to all the remedies of the assignor, so he is subject to all equities between the assignor and his debtor. But, in order to perfect his title against the debtor, it is indispensable that the assignee should immediately give notice of the assignment to the debtor, for otherwise a priority of right may be obtained by a subsequent assignee or the debt be discharged by a payment to the assignee before such notice.[1]

An agreement to pay out of a particular fund, however clear in terms, is not an equitable assignment: a covenant in the most solemn form has no greater effect. Such intent and its execution are indispensable. The assignor must not retain control over the fund — an authority to collect, or power of revocation. The transfer must be of such a character that the fundholder can safely pay, and is compellable to pay, though forbidden by the assignor. Then the fundholder is bound from the time of notice. A bill of exchange or a check is not an equitable assignment pro tanto. But an order to pay out of a specified fund has always been held to be a valid assignment in equity and to fulfill all the requirements of the law.[2]

May be of part of a debt, without the consent of the debtor.[3] See DEPOSIT, 2; GIFT, 1.

Preferential assignment. An assignment with preferences: made to a trustee in favor of the claim of a particular creditor or creditors; as, that one or more creditors shall be paid in full before others receive anything.[4]

In the nature of a special, rather than of a general, assignment. But the latter is also opposed to a particular assignment or a transfer of part of the debtor's property.

In the absence of prohibitory legislation preferential assignments are valid.[6]

Voluntary assignment. Made of a debtor's own free will, for the benefit of creditors. Compulsory assignment. Made in pursuance of the mandate of law.[6]

A "voluntary assignment" means, presumably, an assignment of all of the debtor's property in trust to pay debts; as contradistinguished from a sale to a creditor in payment of his claim, and from a pledge

[1] [Hight v. Sackett, 34 N. Y. 451 (1866).

[2] Enloe v. Reike, 56 Ala. 504 (1876), Stone, J. See also Andrews v. Carr, 26 Miss. 578 (1853).

[3] As to effect of, see generally 26 Am. Law Reg. 509-12 (1887), cases; May v. First Nat. Bank of Attleboro, Sup. Ct. Ill. (1887), cases: 13 N. E. Rep. 806.

[4] Nesmith v. Drum, 8 W. & S. 10 (1844); Guthrie's Appeal, 92 Pa. 272 (1879); 2 Story, Eq. § 1040.

[5] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1039-40; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story, R. 638-44 (1843); Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. 544 (1873); Traer v. Clews, 115 U. S. 540 (1885), cases; Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. 209-20 (1862); 2 Bl. Com. 442.

[1] Spain v. Hamilton, 1 Wall. 624 (1863), Wayne, J.; Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 516, 514 (1887), cases; 2 Story, Eq. § 1047, cases.

[2] Christmas v. Russell, 14 Wall. 84 (1871), Swayne, J. See also Wright v. Ellison, 1 id. 16 (1863); Trist v. Child, 21 id. 447 (1874), cases; Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 316-17 (1879), cases; Basket v. Hassell, 107 id. 614 (1882); Florence Mining Co. v. Brown, 124 id. 391 (1888); Lewis v. Traders' Bank, 30 Minn. 134 (1883), cases; Goodsell v. Benson, 13 R. I. 230 (1881), cases.

[3] James v. Newton, 142 Mass. 370-73 (1886), cases.

[4] See 2 Kent, 532.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 370; 2 id. § 1036.

[6] See 2 Kent, 397, 532.

or hypothecation as a security in the nature of a mortgage.[1]

A voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors is a contract — a transfer in trust for a nominal consideration and the further consideration of a distribution of the proceeds of the assigned property among all the creditors.[2]

An assignment by a defendant, pendente lite, does not necessarily defeat the suit, but his assignee is bound by what is done against him. The assignee may come in by appropriate application and make himself a party, or he may act in the name of his assignor. Such assignment carries with it an implied license to use the assignor's name to protect the right assigned.[3]

Every demand connected with a right of property, real or personal, is assignable. But not — an officer's pay; a judge's salary; a soldier's pension; an action for fraud, negligence, or tort; a personal service or trust; a naked power; a right of entry for a condition broken; nor, without notice to the insurer, a policy of insurance; nor, at common law, a chose in action, or any right pendente lite.[4]

Where there is no restriction in any statute, in the articles of association or the by-laws, as to the disposition of property, the directors of a corporation may make an assignment for the benefit of its creditors.[5]

The assignee is bound by a covenant that runs with the land. See COVENANT.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors is a trustee for the creditors mainly, but, in some respects, for all parties.[6]

He is but the hand of the assignor in the distribution of his estate among his creditors. He enjoys the rights of the assignor only; he is bound where the assignor would be bound. He is not the representative of the creditors, and is not therefore clothed with their powers; nor is he a bona fide purchaser for value, but a mere volunteer only.[7]

After the trust has been executed the assignor's former interest revests in him, as if it had never been out of him.[8]

The title which vests in an assignee in bankruptcy by the assignment relates back to the date of filing the petition.[9] Such assignee represents the general or unsecured creditors, and his duties relate chiefly to their interests. As to every thing, except fraudulent conveyances and preferences, he takes as a purchaser from the bankrupt with notice of all outstanding rights and equities. Whatever the bankrupt could do to make the assigned property available for the general creditors he may do, and he may recover property conveyed in fraud of the rights of creditors and set aside fraudulent conveyances.[1]

To place parties on equal terms, an assignor of a chose in action cannot be a witness against his assignee unless both are living and the latter's testimony can be obtained. Where there is entirety of interest, declarations of the assignor, made previous to the transfer, bind the assignee; but, otherwise, he cannot disparage the title of an innocent assignee or vendee.[2]

Compare CONVEYANCE, 2; TRANSFER. See CHOSE; BANKRUPTCY; DAMNOSA, Hæreditas; LIS, Pendens: NOVATION; PERISHABLE; PREFER, 2; TRUST, 1; WITNESS.

ASSISE. See ASSIZE.

ASSISTANCE. Help, aid; furtherance.[3]

Writ of assistance. A process issued from a court of equity to enforce a decree; as, to place in possession a purchaser of mortgaged premises sold for a mortgage debt, after he has received a deed.

Power to issue the writ results from the principle that jurisdiction to enforce a decree is co-extensive with jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights of the parties — that the court does complete justice by declaring the right and affording a remedy for its enjoyment. But, as the execution cannot exceed the decree, the writ can issue only against a party bound by the decree.[4]

A purchaser under a decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage has a right to the writ to obtain possession, as against parties and persons made tenants or transferees after the suit was begun.[5]

ASSIZE.[6] Originally, an assembly met for the purpose of ascertaining something judicially: a jury, or court; a session or sitting; then the place where, as also the time when, the session was held, the writ under which it convened, the finding or resolution, and the proceedings as a whole. Hence — a regulation, an ordinance, a statute, — something determined and established; a tax or tribute of a definite amount; also, the reducing a thing to certainty — in number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, time, place.

At first, the jury who tried a cause, "sitting together" for that purpose. Then, by a figure, the

[1] [Dias v. Bouchand, 10 Paige, Ch. 461 (1843), Walworth, Ch.

[2] Blackburne's Appeal, 39 Pa. 165 (1861), Thompson, J.

[3] Exp. South & North Alabama R. Co., 95 U. S. 226 (1877), Waite, C. J.

[4] 1 Pars. Contr. 223; 3 id. 480.

[5] Hutchinson v. Green, 91 Mo. 375–76 (1886), cases.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 480; 3 Pars. Contr. 465, 489.

[7] Re Fulton's Estate, 51 Pa. 211–13 (1865), Agnew, J.; Mellon's Appeal, 3 id. 129 (1858), Strong, J.

[8] Jacoby v. Guier, 6 S. & R. 451 (1821). As to the effect of assignor's fraud upon the assignment, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 901–35 (1887), cases; as to conflict of laws respecting assignments for creditors, 1 Harv. Law Rev. 259–64 (1888).

[9] Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 230–44 (1881), cases; International Bank v. Sherman, 101 id. 406 (1879).

[1] Dudley v. Easton, 104 U. S. 103 (1881), Waite, C. J.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 190, 172.

[3] L. assistere, to approach: ad-stare, to stand by.

[4] Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 291 (1874), cases, Field, J.; Howard v. Milwaukee, &c. R. Co., 101 U. S. 849 (1879); Boyd v. United States, 116 id. 625 (1886).

[5] 2 Jones, Mort. § 1663; Watkins v. Jerman, 36 Kan. 467 (1887), cases.

[6] F. assise, assembly — of judges; decree; impost: O. F. asseoir, to sit near, assist a judge: L. assidere, to sit near or together.

court or jurisdiction which summoned the jury by a commission of assize. Hence, the judicial assemblage held by the king's commission in the various counties were (and still are) termed, in common speech, "the assizes." By still another figure, an action for recovering possession of lands — because the sheriff summons a jury or assize.[1]

Designates the court, the place, or the time where the judges of the superior courts of Westminster try questions of fact, issuing out of those courts, ready for trial by jury. "The assizes" are the sittings of the judges at the various places they visit on their circuits, four times a year in vacation. "Assize" also sometimes denotes a jury, and sometimes a writ.[2]

"Assizes" is the word most in use in modern books. It often signifies a single court.

ASSOCIATE.[3] A person united with another in business, office, enterprise, or other interest.

Associates are persons united, or acting together by mutual consent or compact, in the promotion of some common object.[4]

Associate attorney or counsel. A lawyer who assists another in a cause; co-counsel; a colleague.

Associate in crime. A confederate in the commission of a criminal offense; an accomplice, q. v.

Associate judge or justice. A judge who serves with another on the same bench, in distinction from the "chief" justice, the "president" or "presiding" judge, q. v.

Association. 1. The act or state of being joined in common interest.

2. An organization of persons without a charter, for business, humanity, charity, culture, or other purpose; any unincorporated society or body.

3. A body of persons invested with some, yet not full, corporate rights and powers: as, a joint-stock association; a building and loan association.

When improvement of the members is the predominant idea, "society" seems to be the preferred word; and "company" or "partnership," when the idea is the making of profits.

"Association" ex vi termini implies agreement, compact, union of minds, purpose, and action. May apply to those who are already associated with persons named or those who may come in afterward: as, in acts of incorporation.[1]

Articles of association. The instrument which creates the union between the members of an incorporation, specifies the object and form of organization, the amount and shares of capital, the place of business, the corporators, etc.; and is distinguishable from the charter and the by-laws.

Where individuals voluntarily associate together and adopt a name or description intended to embrace all of its members, and under which its contracts are made and its business carried on, such company can neither sue nor be sued by the name adopted, but in the individual names as partners.[2]

To constitute a "partnership" there must be a community of interests for business purposes. Hence, voluntary associations or "clubs," for social and benevolent purposes and the like, are not proper partnerships, nor have their members the powers and responsibilities of partners. Thus, for example, while the members of a Masonic lodge may not be held as partners for a debt incurred by the lodge, each member who assented to or advised the outlay may be held liable as an individual.[3]

Associations for mutual benevolence among their own members are not associations for purely "charitable uses."[4]

The members of a committee, authorized to effect the incorporation of a voluntary association, who neglect to perfect the re-organization, may be held as partners as between themselves, and non-participating members of the association be relieved from liability.[5]

See BANK, 2 (2); BUILDING; BY-LAWS; CHARTER, 2; CHURCH; CLUBS; COMPANY, 2; CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP; STOCK, 3 (2).

4. Association of words, see NOSCITUR.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 185, 57, 60; 4 id. 269, 424; 3 id. 221; 1 id. 148, 411.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 58-59.

[3] L. associatus, joined to: ad, to; socius, a follower, companion.

[4] [Lechmere Bank v. Boynton, 11 Cush. 382, 379 (1853), Shaw, C. J.

[1] [Lechmere Bank v. Boynton, 11 Cush. 380, ante.

[2] Covington Drawbridge Co. v. Shepherd, 20 How. 228 (1857), Taney, C. J.; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. *585 (1829), Story, J.; 27 Alb. Law J. 326-29 (1883), cases.

[3] See Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 98, 104, 111-12 (1844), cases; Laford v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 514 (1880); Ash v. Guie, 97 Pa. 499 (1881), cases; Re St. James's Club, 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 589 (1852); 3 Kent, 23; cases infra.

[4] Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle, 150 (1835); Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. *535-38 (1860), cases. But some cases hold that Masonic lodges are "charities," — Duke v. Fuller, 9 N. H. 536 (1838); Burdine v. Grand Lodge, 37 Ala. 478 (1861); Indianapolis v. Grand Master, 25 Ind. 518 (1865); Savannah v. Solomon's Lodge, 53 Ga. 93 (1874). Contra, Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge, 73 Me. 428, 434 (1882) — the funds of a "public charity" are derived from gifts and devises, and it is open to the whole public,— Appleton, C. J.

[5] See Ward v. Brigham, 127 Mass. 24 (1879); Volger v. Ray, 131 id. 429 (1881); Ferris v. Thaw, 72 Mo. 446 (1880). As to unincorporated associations, see generally 17 Cent. Law J. 342-45 (1883), cases.

ASSUME. To take to or upon one's self. See ASSUMPSIT.

A person who "assumes a lease" takes to himself or accepts the obligations and the benefits of the lessor under the contract.[1]

"Assumed" may be used in the sense of claimed; as, in saying that assumed facts must be proved before the main fact can be inferred.[2] Compare PRESUME.

ASSUMPSIT.[3] He engaged or agreed to do a thing.

Describes a contract, not under seal, made with another for his benefit; also, the common-law form of an action of trespass upon the case for damages or failure to perform such contract.[4]

"Debt" lies for an ascertained sum. "Assumpsit" originally lay for an unascertained sum, but may now be brought for a fixed sum.

Express assumpsit. An engagement in positive terms to do some particular thing; as, an obligation to pay a promissory note.

Implied assumpsit. An engagement which the law will infer from circumstances; such obligation as reason and justice dictate, and as the law presumes a man has contracted to perform; as, to pay a judgment, a forfeiture, or a penalty.[5]

The presumption in such case is that every man engages to do what duty or justice requires him to do.[6]

Indebitatus assumpsit. He, being indebted, undertook. The species of the action which charges a promise to pay from the mere fact that an indebtedness exists.

Rests upon an implied promise to pay what in good conscience ought to be paid.[6]

Called also common or general assumpsit.

The promise, the consideration (the facts out of which the obligation grows), and the breach, should be averred.[6]

Special assumpsit. The agreement, and the form of action therefor, which rests upon an express undertaking.

In declaring upon a special assumpsit, the undertaking should be set out in the precise terms used.

The action of assumpsit lies for — the worth of work done; the value of goods bought and delivered; money received which should not be retained; money spent for another at his request; a balance due on an account; damages for injury from want of integrity or of care or skill assumed to be possessed or exerted.[1] See COUNT, 4 (1), Common.

Indebitatus assumpsit is founded on what the law terms an implied promise on the part of the defendant to pay what in good conscience he is bound to pay to the plaintiff. . . . The law never implies a promise to pay unless some duty creates the obligation; and never a promise to do an act contrary to duty or to law.[2]

Nunquam indebitatus, he never undertook, is the name of the general issue in the indebitatus species; but has been used, like nil debet, in debt on simple contract.

Non assumpsit. He has not undertaken, or did not undertake. The name of the general denial in the foregoing actions.

Non assumpsit infra sex annos. He did not undertake within six years. The plea of the statute of limitations in these actions.[3] Compare ACTIO, Non accrevit, etc.

See further ACTION, 2; CASE, 3; CONTRACT; COVENANT; DEBET; DEBT; PROMISE.

ASSURANCE.[4] Certainty; warranty; indemnity.

1. Legal evidence of the transfer of title, whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are prevented or removed.[5]

The common assurances of the realm are by matter in pais, by matter of record, by special custom, and by devise.[6]

Collateral assurance. An assurance in addition to, or over and above, some other assurance; as, a bond, to the covenants in a mortgage.

Future assurance. Such transfer in the future as will cure a defect in a title, — as, by removing an incumbrance, by procuring a quitclaim deed. Whence "covenant for future assurance."[6]

2. Insurance; in England, life-insurance. Whence assurer, the assured, re-assurance. See further INSURANCE.

ASTERISK. Indicates the words at which the pages of the first edition of a text-book or volume of reports began; enlarged

[1] Cincinnati, &c. R. Co. v. Indiana, &c. R. Co., 44 Ohio St. 314 (1886).

[2] Jenkins v. State, 62 Wis. 63 (1885).

[3] L. assumpsit, he has undertaken, he undertook: assumere, to take upon one's self.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 158-67; Carrol v. Green, 92 U. S. 513 (1875); Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 id. 143 (1876); Boston, &c. Smelting Co. v. Smith, 13 R. I. 35 (1880), cases.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 158, 159, 162; Lloyd v. Hough, 1 How. 159 (1843); Wallis v. Shelly, 30 F. R. 748 (1887).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 155, 158.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 162; Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 9 (1864); Nash v. Towne, 5 id. 702 (1866); Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 397 (1884); National Trust Co. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400 (1877).

[2] Bailey v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 22 Wall. 628-30 (1874), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 305, 308.

[4] F. assëurer, to make secure: L. ad-sine-cura.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 294.

[6] [4 Kent, 468.

or annotated editions being printed as explained under A, 1, par. 8.

AS'TUTE. When it is said that the courts are "not astute" to do a thing (as, to infer fraud from negligence), the meaning is that they are disinclined, not disposed, to do the particular thing.

Thus, they are not only not predisposed but are reluctant or averse to accepting a conclusion involving intended wrong.

ASYLUM.[1] Retreat, refuge; protection, immunity.

1. A place of refuge and protection for criminals, and debtors.

"Asylum" includes not only place, but shelter, security, protection. Thus, within the meaning of the extradition treaty of 1868 (15 St. L. 629), a fugitive from justice in Italy "seeks asylum" in this country when he claims the use of a Territory as an asylum.[2] See EXTRADITION.

2. Immunity from law; as, the status of a public minister.

3. An institution for the unfortunate. See SECTARIAN.

AT. 1. The prefix at-, the Latin ad, q. v.

2. The English preposition, expressing the relation of presence, nearness in place or time, direction toward.[3]

The word is somewhat indefinite; it may mean "in," "within," or "near." Its primary idea is nearness, and it is less definite than in or on.[4]

"At the terminus" of a road may mean near the terminus.[5]

In ordinary speech, "at" more generally means "within" than "without." Thus, at a town or at a county means at some place within the town or county, rather than at a place without or even at the outermost verge of, but not in, such town or county. In indictments, where the utmost precision is necessary, the fact is generally stated to have been done at the place; and, if it were not done in the place, the venue would be wrong. "At," like "from," has not then, generally speaking, an exclusive signification: as, in the expression that a canal shall begin "at the District of Columbia."[6]

That "at a place" may not be equivalent to in the place, see IN, 1 (1).

Authority to construct a railroad from A to B, or beginning at A and running to B, confers authority to commence the road at some point within A, and to end it at some point within B. "At," like "from" and "to," is to be taken exclusively, according to the subject-matter.[1]

The description of a survey as beginning "at" a tree does not necessarily fix the point at the center of the tree. The deed may be interpreted in conformity with the practical effect given it by the parties, as by actual occupancy to a line beginning at the surface of the tree.[2]

Compare BY; IN, 1; INTO; NEAR; ON; TO; UPON, 1; WITHIN.

At interest. See INTEREST, 3.

At large. 1. In the full extent; in full; at length; in extenso: as, for a court to state at large that a thing should not be done; or for proceedings to be recorded at large, instead of by memoranda.[3]

2. Representing a State or district in its whole extent: as, a delegate, elector, or Congressman at large.

3. Applicable to all of a State, all the States, or the whole territory of the United States; general: as, statutes at large, the United States Statutes at Large.

4. In general; general, as opposed to special, particular, preferred, secured: as, the bearer at large, creditors at large.[4]

5. Unconfined; unrestrained; in the free exercise of natural freedom or propensities: as, an animal suffered to run at large.

"Running at large" means strolling about without restraint or confinement, as, wandering, roving, or rambling at will, unrestrained. The restraint need not be entirely physical; it may depend much upon the training, habits, and instincts of the animal. The sufficiency of the restraint is to be determined more from its effect, its controlling and restraining influence, than from the nature or kind of animal.[5]

Whether, in a given case, physical or moral power over the animal is necessary, depends upon its nature, age, character, habits, discipline, use, and other circumstances.[6]

---

[1] L. asylum, a place of refuge: Gk. a'sylos, undespoiled, unharmed.

[2] Re De Giacomo, 12 Blatch. 395 (1874), Blatchford, J.

[3] Webster's Dict.

[4] State (West Jersey R. Co.) v. Receiver of Taxes, 38 N. J. L. 302 (1876), Dixon, J.; State v. Ray, 50 Ala. 173 (1873), Peters, C. J.

[5] Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cranch, C. C. 606, 604 (1829), Cranch, C. J.; The Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica, &c. R. Co., 6 Paige, 562 (1837); Mason v. Brooklyn, &c. R. Co., 35 Barb. 377 (1861); Homer v. Homer, L. R., 8 C. D. 764 (1878); 28 Alb. L. J. 44.

[1] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343 (1875), cases, Strong, J.; Mason v. Brooklyn City, &c. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 377-78 (1861).

[2] Stewart v. Patrick, 68 N. Y. 454 (1877).

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 392; 95 U. S. 420.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 467.

[5] Russell v. Cone, 46 Vt. 604 (1874), Peck, J.; Bertwhistle v. Goodrich, 53 Mich. 459 (1884).

[6] Jennings v. Wayne, 63 Me. 470 (1874), Dickerson, J. See also 52 Cal. 653; 49 Conn. 113; 53 Iowa, 632; 70 id. 462; 26 Kan. 268; 10 Metc. 382; 10 Allen, 151; 26 Minn. 157; 21 Hun, 249; 50 Vt. 180.

At law. 1. According to the course of the common law; in law, as opposed to "in equity" or according to the principles and procedure in courts of equity or chancery.

2. For the practice of law: as, an attorney or counselor-at-law. See ATTORNEY.

At least. Compare MORE OR LESS.

A publication sixteen months before a certain day was held valid under a statute directing that the publication should be made "at least six months" prior to that day.[1]

When a city charter requires that a resolution ordering work on a street shall lie over "at least four weeks after its introduction," a resolution introduced on a Monday may be acted upon on the fourth Monday thereafter.[2]

At length. See At Large, 1; ENTRY, II, 6.

At maturity. See MATURITY, 2.

At once. At one and the same time.[3]

At par. Of nominal value; worth the face value. See PAR, 2.

At sea. On the voyage. See SEA.

At sight. On view; on presentation. See SIGHT.

ATHEIST. One who disbelieves in the existence of a God who is the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood.[4] See INFIDEL; OATH; RELIGION.

ATLANTIC. See CABLE, Submarine.

The Gulf of Mexico is not the "Atlantic coast."[5]

ATMOSPHERE. See AIR.

ATS. At suit of; equivalent to ads—ad sectam.

ATTACH.[6] 1. To tie to, fasten to, affix, annex, q. v.

2. To lay hold upon by legal authority; to seize, take, arrest. To take or touch,—a precise expression of the thing actually done.[7]

When used without qualification in a statute refers to the taking and holding of the person or property on mesne process, subject to the further order of the court or to the final judgment in the case.[8]

Attachment of the person. A writ in the nature of a capias, directed to the sheriff, and commanding him to attach or take up the defendant, and bring him into court;[1] also, the summary proceeding itself.

Employed to compel the appearance of a defendant; to enforce the attendance of a juror or a witness;[2] to bring before the court one charged with contempt.[3]

The officer makes caption of the person named in the same manner as upon an ordinary process for arrest. Instead, however, of holding him to bail he brings him corporally before the court, that he may do the thing required or show cause why he has not or should not do it. Fines for disobedience are often imposed. See CONTEMPT.

Attachment of property. An actual seizure of goods, that they may be held to satisfy the judgment which the plaintiff may recover.[4]

The object is to take out of the defendant's possession and transfer into the custody of the law, acting through its legal officer, the goods attached, that, if necessary, they may be seized in execution and be disposed of and delivered to the purchaser. Hence, in this sense, to attach is to take actual possession of the property.[5]

Originally, a writ issued out of the court of common pleas, grounded upon the non-appearance of the defendant at the return of the original writ. The sheriff was then commanded to attach him by taking gage, that is, certain of his property, which the defendant forfeited if he did not appear; or by making him find safe pledges or sureties for his appearance.[6]

Also the first and immediate process, without previous summons, upon actions of trespass vi et armis or for other injuries—trespasses against the peace, as deceit and conspiracy, where the violence of the wrong requires a speedy remedy.[6]

Upon execution of a bond to discharge the attachment the latter becomes discharged, the grounds thereof are no longer in controversy, and the obligors become bound absolutely to pay such judgment as may be recovered.[7]

Attachment of vessel. Allowed after libel filed for work done, materials or supplies

[1] Hoffman v. Clark County, 61 Wis. 7 (1884); Ward v. Walters, 63 id. 45 (1885); ib. 314.

[2] Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 348 (1886).

[3] Platter v. Green, 26 Kan. 268 (1881).

[4] Commonwealth v. Hills, 10 Cush. 533 (1853), Dewey, J.

[5] New Haven Saw Mill Co. v. Security Ins. Co., 7 F. R. 847 (1881).

[6] F. attacher, to fasten, tack to: L. attingere, to touch,—8 Conn. 334.

[7] Hollister v. Goodale, 8 Conn. 334 (1831), Hosmer, C. J.; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pennock, 51 Pa. 253 (1865).

[8] [Beardsley v. Beecher, 47 Conn. 414 (1879), Loomis, J.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 443.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 369.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 283.

[4] Dunklee v. Fales, 5 N. H. 528 (1831), Richardson C. J.; Bryant v. Warren, 51 id. 215 (1871).

[5] Hollister v. Goodale, 8 Conn. 334 (1831), Hosmer, C. J. See also Adler v. Roth, 2 McCrary, 447 (1881), cases; 5 Mass. 163; 12 id. 497; 3 Minn. 406; 51 Pa. 253; 55 Vt. 422; 76 Va. 318; 21 W. Va. 211.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 280; Bond v. Ward, 7 Mass. *123 (1810).

[7] Ferguson v. Glidewell, 48 Ark. 201-4 (1886), cases pro and con.

furnished, wharfage due, etc., and is upon the interest of the owner or part-owner.

Domestic attachment. Issues against a resident of the State who is charged with fraud in contracting a debt or with remaining absent or absconding to defraud his creditors. Foreign attachment. Issues against a non-resident who evades service of process — in the view that a levy and sale of his property will serve the purpose of an appearance by him and meet the ends of justice.

A "foreign attachment" is a suit against a personal defendant by name; and, because of inability to serve process on him on account of non-residence, or for other reason mentioned in a statute, the suit is commenced by a writ directing the proper officer to attach sufficient property of the defendant to answer any judgment that may be rendered against him. It is like an admiralty proceeding in rem.[1]

The foundation of the proceeding is that the defendant is beyond, while his property is within, the reach of process.[2]

Attachment of property was introduced at an early date in London, chiefly to operate upon debtors who could not be arrested because not subject to jurisdiction. As these persons were "foreigners" the process was called foreign attachment or attachment of foreigners' goods.[3]

Execution-attachment. An attachment in execution of a judgment. A proceeding in satisfaction of a judgment — by seizing property, rights, or credits in the hands of a debtor or bailee of the defendant.

The proceeding of attachment of property was derived from the customary law of foreign attachment in London, legislatures having modified the use of it, from time to time, as seemed proper. At first it was merely ancillary to other proceedings — in the nature of a proceeding in equity intended to enjoin a person from parting with the property of an absent debtor in order to compel the debtor's appearance, and being, in default of an appearance, an adjudication of the property toward the liquidation of the demand.[4]

Proceedings by attachment are not purely in rem; they are rather proceedings against the interest of the defendant and those claiming under him.[5]

In New England attachment of a defendant's property, rights, and credits is an incident to a summons in all actions based upon contract. Elsewhere, the writ seems to issue only upon cause shown by affidavit, accompanied by a bond designed to secure the defendant in such damage as he may sustain on account of the proceeding. The ground upon which the writ may be obtained and the details of practice vary in the different States. Speaking generally, the remedy is allowed for an ascertainable amount due; the plaintiff acquires such rights as the defendant had at the time of the levy: the levy itself constitutes a lien; and attachments levied simultaneously share pro rata. In many States the defendant may substitute a bond with sureties and thereupon resume possession of the property. An attachment is "dissolved" by final judgment entered for the defendant, or, on motion, for a substantial defect apparent upon the face of the proceedings.[1]

See GARNISH; ORDER, 2, Charging; RECEIPTOR; RES, 2; SEIZURE.

ATTACK. See ASSAULT; COLLATERALLY.

ATTAINDER.[2] Staining; corrupting: pollution of blood; extinguishment of inheritable quality of blood.

When sentence of death is pronounced the immediate, inseparable consequence at common law is attainder: the condemned is without the protection of the law, his estates are forfeited, his blood corrupted.[3]

The word is derived from attincta: the stain or corruption of a criminal capitally condemned. The party attainted lost all inheritable quality — he could neither receive nor transmit property or other rights of inheritance.[4]

Bill of attainder. A legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.[5]

If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties.[5]

Bills of attainder (or acts of attainder as they were called when passed into statutes) were laws which declared certain persons attainted — their blood corrupted so that it lost heritable equality.[6]

"No Bill of Attainder . . shall be passed."[6] "No Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted."[7] "No State shall . . pass any Bill of Attainder."[8]

Within the meaning of the Constitution bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and offices of a judge: it assumes judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon

[1] The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 571 (1866), Miller, J.

[2] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pennock, 51 Pa. 250 (1865); Fitch v. Ross, 4 S. & R. *564 (1818).

[3] See Brandon, For. Att. 4.

[4] See Brandon, For. Att. 4; Drake, Att. §§ 4–5; Waples, Att. §§ 2–4.

[5] Magee v. Beirne, 39 Pa. 63 (1861); Doe v. Oliver, 2 Sm. L. C., 7 Am. ed., 809, cases.

[1] See Brandon; Drake; 1 Bouvier, 202–3. On attaching debts, see 18 Cent. Law J. 468 (1884), cases.

[2] F. ateindre, to convict,— Skeat. F. attaindre, to stain, accuse: L. ad-tingere, to reach to, touch,— Webster. L. attinctus, stained, blackened,— 4 Bl. Com. 380; 39 N. Y. 430; 4 Wall. 387.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 380–89; 2 id. 251–56.

[4] [Exp. Garland, 4 Wall. 387 (1866), Miller, J.

[5] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 323 (1866), Field, J.

[6] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, cl. 3.

[7] Ibid., Art. III, sec. 3, cl. 2.

[8] Ibid., Art. I, sec. 10.

the guilt of the party, without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense. Such bills are generally directed against individuals by name, but they may be against a whole class; and they may inflict punishment absolutely or conditionally.[1]

In England attainders of treason worked corruption of blood and perpetual forfeiture of the estate of the person attainted to the disinherison of those who would otherwise be his heirs. Thereby innocent children were made to suffer because of the offense of their ancestor. When the Constitution was framed this was felt to be a hardship — rank injustice. The provision was intended for the benefit of the children and heirs alone,— a declaration that the children should not bear the iniquity of the fathers. In this light is to be construed the Confiscation Act of 1862.[2]

Courts of justice were employed only to register the edict of Parliament and to carry the sentence into execution.[3]

In England bills of this sort have been usually passed in times of rebellion, of gross subserviency to the crown, or of violent political excitements.[4]

Shortly after the Revolution, acts of attainder were passed in several of the States. In England, by 33 and 34 Vict. (1870), attainder upon conviction is abolished. See TEST. Oath.

ATTEMPT. 1, v. To perform an act toward accomplishing a purpose; to do anything by physical exertion tending to produce an unlawful result.

To make an effort to effect an object; to make a trial or experiment; to endeavor; to use exertion to a purpose.[5]

2, n. In its largest signification, a trial or physical effort to do a particular thing.[6]

Can only be made by an actual ineffectual deed done in pursuance and in furtherance of the design.[7]

Consists of an act of endeavor to commit a particular offense, and an intent by that act alone, or in conjunction with other necessary acts, to commit it.[8]

Both these elements must be specifically charged.[9]

It is impossible to comprehend all cases in a definition that does not necessarily run into a mere enumeration of instances. There must be a combination of intent and act — an intent to commit a crime and an act, done in pursuance thereof, which falls short of the thing intended. While preliminary preparations,— conditions not causes,— may co-exist with a guilty intent, they may not advance the conduct of the party beyond the sphere of mere intent.[1]

While "attempt" conveys the idea of physical effort to do an act, or to accomplish an end, "intent" expresses the quality of mind with which the act is done.[2]

An "intent" implies purpose only; an "attempt" both purpose and actual effort to carry the intent into execution.[3]

"Intent" indicates the purpose existing in the mind; "attempt" the act to be committed.[4]

A statutory punishment for an attempt to poison is not incurred by an unexecuted determination to poison, though preparation is made for the purpose; nor by the actual administration of a substance not poisonous, though believed to be so.[5]

Merely delivering poison to a person and soliciting him to place it in a spring is not "an attempt to administer poison" — the act not approximating sufficiently near to the commission of murder to establish an attempt to commit it, within the Pennsylvania act of March 31, 1860, § 82, which is a copy of 1 Vict. (1837), c. 85, sec. 3.[6]

When the attempt to commit the principal or ultimate offense is made, the distinct offense of attempting is complete.[7]

Every attempt to commit a felony not murder is a misdemeanor; and, generally, an attempt to commit a misdemeanor is a misdemeanor of the same nature. But merely "soliciting" another to do an act is not an attempt to do that act.[8]

It cannot be maintained as a universal principle that an attempt to commit a misdemeanor is, by the common law, a misdemeanor. The law has declared many acts to be misdemeanors where the purpose of the offender was not consummated, although, if consummated, it would have been an offense only of this grade. In such cases there must be an unlawful purpose and an act committed which would carry it into immediate execution, unless prevented by some counteracting force or circumstance.[9] See ADMINISTER, 1.

---

[1] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 323 (1866), Field, J.

[2] Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 210 (1875), Strong, J. See also 2 Bl. Com. 256.

[3] Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall. 601 (1869).

[4] 2 Story, Const. § 1344.

[5] Commonwealth v. McDonald, 5 Cush. 367 (1850), Fletcher, J.

[6] Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 387-88 (1860), cases, Stone, J.

[7] Uhl v. Commonwealth, 6 Gratt. 709 (1849).

[8] State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 212 (1862), Butler, J.; Gray v. State, 63 Ala. 73 (1879).

[1] United States v. Stephens, 12 F. R. 55 (1882), Deady, D. J.; 14 Cal. 160; 60 id. 71; 62 id. 297; 1 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 178, 181; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 668.

[2] [State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 414-15 (1848).

[3] Prince v. State, 35 Ala. 369 (1860); 14 Ga. 59.

[4] Stabler v. Commonwealth, 95 Pa. 321 (1880).

[5] State v. Clarissa, 11 Ala. 60 (1847).

[6] Stabler's Case, supra. See also Regina v. Williams, 47 E. C. L. 589 (1844); Regina v. Lewis, 38 id. 207 (1840); Regina v. St. George, ib. 193 (1840). Compare People v. Bush, 4 Hill, 133 (1843). See 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 221-25.

[7] State v. Decker, 36 Kan. 720 (1887); Kan. Crim. Code, §§ 283, 121.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 221, 241; Stabler's Case, supra; Smith v. Commonwealth, 54 Pa. 211-13 (1867), cases; Kelly v. Commonwealth, 1 Grant, 484 (1858); Rex v. Butler, 25 E. C. L. 441 (1834).

[9] Lamb v. State, Sup. Ct. Md. (1887), Bryan, J., deciding that the solicitation of a woman to take drugs to pre-

ATTEST.[1] To bear witness to: to signify, by subscription of his name, that the person has witnessed the execution of the particular instrument. Compare SIGN; SUBSCRIBE, 1.

In its strict sense to witness or bear witness to. The principal object in requiring that an instrument shall be executed in the presence of witnesses is that they may see that the same is properly and fairly executed. But the ordinary use of the word, as applied to the execution of deeds, requires that the witnesses should attest in writing: the principal end of which seems to be to preserve evidence that the instrument was executed in the presence of the required witnesses.[2]

To "attest" the publication of a paper as a last will, and to "subscribe" to that paper the names of the witnesses, are different things. Attestation is the act of the senses; subscription, the act of the hand: the one is mental, the other mechanical. To "attest" a will is to know that it was published as such, and to certify the facts required to constitute an actual and legal publication; but to "subscribe" a paper published as a will is only to write on the same paper the names of the witnesses for the purpose of identification. There may be a perfect attestation in fact without subscription.[3]

An "attesting" witness, under the Statute of Wills, is one who at the time of attestation would be competent to testify in court to the matter.[4]

The last requisite to the validity of a deed is the attestation or execution of it in the presence of witnesses; necessary rather for preserving the evidence than for constituting the essence of the deed.[5]

The number of witnesses necessary to a valid will, and whether there shall be any at all to a deed, and the particular facts to which they must certify, vary in the different States.[6]

See further DEED, 2; PRESENCE; WILL, 2; WITNESS.

2. To certify to the verity of a copy of a public document.

Referring to judicial writings or copies thereof, as the copy of the record of a judicial process, seems to intend an authentication by the clerk of the court so as to make them receivable as evidence.[1]

ATTORN.[2] To turn over: to transfer service to a new lord; to recognize as landlord the transferee of a leasehold.

Attornment. The consent of a tenant to the grant of his landlord.[3]

The acknowledgment by a tenant of a new landlord, and an agreement to become tenant to the purchaser.[4]

As the feudal obligation between lord and vassal was reciprocal, the lord could not alien his seigniory without the consent of the vassal. This consent was expressed by what was called "attorning" — professing to become the tenant of the new lord: a doctrine afterward extended to all leases for life or years. By 4 and 5 Anne (1706), c. 16, no longer necessary to complete a grant or conveyance.[5]

ATTORNEY.[6] One who is put in the place, stead, or "turn" of another to manage his affairs of law.[7] An attorney-at-law; a lawyer.

A person employed by another to act in his behalf; an agent.

Formerly, one who in any manner acted in behalf of another.[8]

Attorney-at-law. A person whose profession is to represent litigants in the management of their causes before the courts.

Attorney-in-fact. One who serves another as agent in the doing of a particular thing; an agent for the transaction of an act specified in a sealed instrument called a "letter" or "power" of attorney.

An attorney-at-law may act as an attorney-in-fact. Any one who may serve another as agent may be made an attorney-in-fact. Persons are often appointed attorneys-in-fact to transfer certificates of stock, to acknowledge satisfaction of mortgages, to transfer realty, to collect rents,— to attend to all one's business generally in a particular place or country. See DELEGATUS.

Persons acting professionally in legal formalities, negotiations, or proceedings by cure an abortion is not within the act of 1868 of that State,— that the common-law rule was not altered by the act. Same case, 26 Am. Law Reg. 641 (1887); ib. 645–54, cases. See generally 17 Cent. Law J. 26–28, 45–50 (1883) — Irish Law Times (1882).

---

[1] L. attestari, to be a witness to. See TESTIS.

[2] Wright v. Wakefield, 4 Taunt. *223 (1812), Mansfield, C. J.

[3] [Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. 117 (Ky., 1840), Robertson, C. J. See also Re Downie's Will, 42 Wis. 76 (1877); 49 Conn. 249: Webster.

[4] [Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 601 (1874), Gray, C. J.; 9 Pick. 350.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 307. See also Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. 31–39 (1850), cases.

[6] See Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7 (1876); Dyer v. Dyer, 97 Ind. 17 (1883).

[1] Gass, &c. Manuf. Co. v. People, 4 Bradw. 515 (1879), cases, McAllister, J.

[2] At-tŭrn'. F. atorner, to prepare, direct, dispose.

[3] Souders v. Vansickle, 8 N. J. L. 317 (1826).

[4] Lindley v. Dakin, 13 Ind. 389 (1859). See also Willis v. Moore, 59 Tex. 636 (1883); Lyon v. Washburn, 3 Col. 204–5 (1877); 1 Washb. R. P. 98.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 288–89, 72.

[6] F. attorner, to attorn, q. v.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 25.

[8] "Our only High Bishop, only attorney, mediator,"— A Short Catechism (1553). "Attornies are denied me, and therefore personally I lay my claim,"— Shakespeare, Rich. II (1595), Act ii, s. 3. "Baptism by an attorney, by a proxy,"— Donne, Sermons (1640), p. 794.

warrant or authority of their clients, may be regarded as "attorneys-at-law" within the meaning of that designation in this country.[1]

An attorney may be an "attorney-in-fact" or "private attorney," or an "attorney-at-law" or "public attorney." The former is one who is given authority by his principal to do a particular act not of a legal character. The latter is employed to appear for the parties to actions, or other judicial proceedings, and is an officer of the courts.[2]

The word "attorney" alone does not necessarily import that the person is an officer of a court;[3] but, standing unqualified, ordinarily it refers to an attorney-at-law.[4]

In this country the distinction between "attorney" or "solicitor" and "counsel" is practically abolished. The lawyer in charge of a case acts both as solicitor and counsel. His services in the one capacity and in the other cannot be distinguished.[4]

In practice when a member of the bar signs a common-law pleading it is as "attorney;" when he signs an equity pleading it is as "solicitor." The distinction arises merely from the two modes of proceeding. He is counsel and attorney of the court in either case.[5] In courts of admiralty his title is "proctor."

February 5, 1790, the Supreme Court "ordered that counsellors shall not practice as attornies nor attornies as counsellors in this court." August 12, 1801, it was "ordered that counsellors may be admitted as attornies" on taking the usual oath.[6]

Compare ADVOCATE; BARRISTER; COUNSEL; LAWYER; PROCTOR; SERGEANT.

In Federal courts a party may manage his cause personally, as prescribed by the rules of court.[7] So, also, in the courts of the States.

The form of oath taken and subscribed by a person applying for admission to practice before the Supreme Court is as follows: "I, ——, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will demean myself, as an attorney and counsellor of this court, uprightly and according to law, and that I will support the Constitution of the United States."

The order admitting an attorney to practice is a judgment of the court that a party possesses the requisite qualifications and is entitled to appear and to conduct causes. By virtue of this order he becomes an officer of the court, holding office during good behavior.[1]

He is an agent to conduct a suit to judgment and execution. The utmost good faith is exacted of him toward the court and his client. The authority in the court to remove him is intended to secure the exercise of this degree of fidelity.[2]

He is liable in damages for the want of such skill and care as members of the profession commonly possess and exercise in like matters.[3]

He is not answerable for anything said relative to the cause in hand, although it should reflect upon the reputation of another and even prove groundless; but otherwise if he goes out of the way of legitimate comment and willfully asperses character.[4] See SLANDER.

Without consent he cannot buy, except as trustee, an adverse interest touching the thing to which his employment relates.[5]

He has a lien on papers or on a fund in his hands, as well as a right of action, for the worth of his services.[6]

His fee cannot be included in damages sustained. The reasons are: there is no standard by which fees are measured, some attorneys charging more, and some clients being willing to pay more, than others; more counsel are sometimes employed than are necessary; and, if the rule were otherwise, the amount charged by attorneys and allowed by successful clients would be abused.[7]

He is answerable to the court for any misconduct calculated to bring discredit on the court and reproach upon the administration of justice.[8]

The power in a court to remove an attorney is included in the power to admit him to practice. This power will be exercised where his continuance in

---

[1] Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 199 (1879), Clifford, J.

[2] [Hall v. Sawyer, 47 Barb. 119 (1866), Potter, J.

[3] Ingram v. Richardson, 2 La. An. 840 (1847); Clark v. Morse, 16 La. *576 (1841); 6 La. An. 706; People v. May, 3 Mich. 605 (1855).

[4] Re Paschal, 10 Wall. 493 (1870), Bradley, J. See 19 Am. Law Rev. 677 (1885) — as to relation in England; also The Nation, No. 964, p. 508.

[5] Stinson v. Hildrup, 8 Biss. 378 (1878), Drummond, J. See 3 Bl. Com. 25–29.

[6] Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court, 1 Cranch, xv, xvii.

[7] R. S. § 747.

[1] Exp. Garland, 4 Wall. 378 (1866), Field, J.

[2] Rogers v. The Marshal, 1 Wall. 651 (1863), cases; Randall v. Brigham, 7 id. 540 (1868), cases; Re Paschal, 10 id. 491, 496 (1870), cases.

[3] Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 198, 195 (1879); Dundee Mortgage Co. v. Hughes, 20 F. R. 89 (1884): 24 Am. Law Reg. 197, 202–7 (1885), cases; Shattuck v. Bill, 142 Mass. 63–64 (1886), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 238–57 (1887), cases; 22 Cent. Law J. 60 (1886),— from Law Times (Eng.).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 29; Munster v. Lamb, 49 L. T. R. 253 (1883): 28 Alb. Law J. 445; Stewart v. Hall, 83 Ky. 380–81, 383 (1885), cases; Weeks, Att'ys, § 110, cases; Cooley, Const. Lim. 443.

[5] Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 501 (1879), cases, Swayne, J.; Rodgers v. Marshall, 3 McCrary, 76, 89–95 (1881), cases.

[6] Re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483 (1870), cases; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 417 (1877); 2 Kent, 640. As to his lien for services, see generally 18 Abb. New Cases, 23–40 (1886), cases; as to his general or retaining lien, 20 Am. Law Rev. 727–40 (1886), cases; as to his special lien on judgments, ib. 821–47 (1886), cases; 21 id. 70–88 (1887), cases; acting for married women, 20 Cent. Law J. 365–368 (1885), cases.

[7] Oelrichs v. Spain, 15 Wall. 231 (1873), Swayne, J.

[8] Re Paschal, 10 Wall. 491 (1870), cases.

practice is incompatible with a proper respect of the court for itself, and of regard for the dignity of the profession, and where reprimand, suspension, or fine will not accomplish the end. Generally, opportunity to explain his conduct will be afforded him: the proceedings being quasi criminal; but for an act done in the presence of the court no formal allegation is necessary.[1]

It is laid down in all the books that a court has power to exercise summary jurisdiction over its attorneys to compel them to act honestly toward their clients, to punish them by fine and imprisonment for misconduct and contempts, and, in cases of gross misconduct, to strike their names from the roll. If regularly convicted of a felony, an attorney's name will be struck off the roll as of course; because he is rendered infamous. If convicted of a misdemeanor which imports fraud or dishonesty, the same course will be taken; as also for gross malpractice or dishonesty in his profession, or for conduct gravely affecting his character. Although it is not strictly regular not to grant a rule to show cause why he should not be struck off, without an affidavit making charges against him, yet, under the circumstances of a particular case, the want of an affidavit may not render disbarment proceedings void as coram non judice. Where an attorney commits an indictable offense, not in his character of attorney, and does not admit the charge, the rule is not inflexible that the court will not strike his name from the roll until he has been regularly indicted and convicted: there may be cases in which it is proper for the court to proceed without such previous conviction,—as where an attorney who had participated in "lynching" a prisoner made an evasive denial of the charge and failed to offer counter testimony to the evidence of his guilt, in itself clear. The proceeding is intended to protect the court from the official ministration of persons unfit to practice as attorneys therein. It is not a criminal proceeding and does not therefore violate the right of trial by jury. The proceeding, furthermore, when instituted in proper cases, is "due process of law." Special proceedings are provided for by statute in some of the States, requiring a formal information under oath to be filed, with regular proceedings and a trial by a jury. In the Federal courts the circumstances of each case must determine whether and when it is proper to dispense with a preliminary conviction.[2]

See further ADMISSION, 2; AGENT; CARE; CHAMPERTY; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; COMPENSATION, 1; COMPROMISE; FEE, 2; CONTEMPT, 1; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MAINTENANCE; PETTIFOGGER; STIPULATION, 2; TRUSTEE; WOMAN.

[1] Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 354 (1871); Re Paschal, 10 id. 491 (1870); Randall v. Brigham, 7 id. 540 (1868); Exp. Garland, 4 id. 378 (1866); Exp. Steinman, 95 Pa. 220-39 (1880), cases, Sharswood, C. J.

[2] Exp. Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 273, 280, 287 (1882), cases, Bradley, J.; s. c. 13 F. R. 814, 820-23, cases. See also People v. Appleton, 105 Ill. 474 (1883); Farlin v. Sook, 30 Kan. 409 (1883). See generally, Weeks, Attorneys; Forsyth. Hist. Lawyers.

Attorney-general. 1. King's counsel.[1] 2. The head of the department of justice in the government of the United States.

The chief law-officer in the government of each State.

The former has a deputy in each judicial district, known as the "United States district attorney;" and the latter has a deputy in each county, known as the "district" or "county attorney," the attorney for the people, Commonwealth, State, or government. The attorney representing the United States is also often referred to as the attorney or counsel for the government. In the capacity of accusing and trying alleged violators of the criminal law, they are severally spoken of as the "prosecuting attorney"[2] or attorney for the prosecution.

The attorney-general of either government may appear by a special deputy attorney-general; and their subordinates, in districts and counties, by assistant district attorneys.

The attorney-general of the United States is not authorized, by the law creating and defining his office, to give legal opinions at the call of Congress. His duty to render such opinions is limited to calls from the President and the heads of departments,[3] q. v.

He manages government suits before the Supreme Court. His opinions are preserved in a series of reports known as the Opinions of the Attorneys-General, which include decisions rendered from 1791 to date.

The attorney-general of a State advises the governor, and exhibits informations in the name of the State.

Attorney, letter of, or power of. The instrument by which the authority of an attorney-in-fact is set forth.

This is general, when the authority is to act generally in the premises; and special, when limited to a particular act or acts. The former may be, in addition, limited or unlimited.

A power of attorney which authorizes the agent to vote is called a "proxy," q. v.

The authorization may be by parol or under seal: the latter is the method when an act under seal is to be done. The expression "letter" or "power" imports a sealed instrument.

All powers are strictly construed; general terms, in subordination to the particular subject-matter.[4]

The intention of the parties, not the letter, should control. The instrument should be construed to effectuate the object, if it can be ascertained.[5] See SEAL, 1.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 27, 261; 4 id. 308; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 499.

[2] People v. Hallett, 1 Col. 359 (1871).

[3] Duty of Attorney-General, 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 478 (1878), cases; 1 Kent, 306; R. S. § 58.

[4] See Story, Agency, §§ 462, 500; 2 Kent, 642-46; 1 Pars. Contr. 94; 8 Pick. 498.

[5] Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 82 Ky. 251 (1885).

Attorney, warrant of. An instrument authorizing an attorney-at-law to appear in an action on behalf of the maker, or to confess a judgment against him.

The universal rule is to permit gentlemen of the bar to appear in causes without first procuring a warrant of attorney to appear.[1]

Frequently authorizes any attorney of a court of record to confess a judgment against the maker, in favor of a person named. It is generally under seal; and it must be for a sum certain. A common use is as a security in the hands of a creditor; it is then in some places popularly called a "judgment-note." May recite an accompanying bond, stating the terms upon which that was given; and be available only upon a breach of the condition in the bond — as, upon a default in paying money, in which event the creditor may procure a judgment at once without the delay of a suit, and, after that, have execution, etc. The form in general use also provides for the payment of costs and an attorney's commission out of the maker's property; releases the right to claim advantage from errors made in the proceedings; and waives stay of execution and exemption of property from levy and sale. The entry of one judgment exhausts the authority; after that the warrant is merged into the judgment — a higher species of security.[2] See COGNOVIT; CONFESSION, 1, Judgment.

AUCTION.[3] A public sale of property to the most favorable bidder.

A sale by consecutive bidding, intended to realize the highest price by competition for the article.[4]

When the law requires a sale of property to be made at public auction after due notice, it is for the purpose of inviting competition among bidders, that the highest price may be obtained.[5]

Auctioneer. A person who conducts an auction.

May refer to one who sells his own goods, as well as one who sells the goods of another, at public auction.[6]

Every person shall be deemed to be an auctioneer whose business it is to offer property at public sale to the highest and best bidder — excepting judicial or executive officers and executors, administrators, and guardians, acting in their official capacity.[7]

An "auction" sale is a public competitive sale. The person who conducts it is an "auctioneer." It is part of his engagement to invite and excite competition, and to dispose of the property to the highest bidder. The practice originated with the Romans, who gave it the descriptive name of auctio, an increase, because the property was sold to him who offered the most for it. Military spoils were thus disposed of, the sales being conducted sub hasta, under a spear — stuck in the ground. (A modern popular phrase is "under the hammer.") Later came into use sale "by the candle" — while a candle burned one inch; and still later "Dutch auction" — an offer at a price above its value with a gradual lowering until some person purchased the article. In each method competition has been a necessary element.[1]

There may be a sale to the lowest bidder, as when land is sold for non-payment of taxes to any one who will take it for the shortest term.

A price may be set under which no sale will be permitted, provided public notice thereof be given beforehand.

Parties may unite to purchase in good faith.[2]

The conditions of sale should state whether or not the sale is "without reserve" and whether a right to bid is also reserved. A material error in the description of realty makes the sale voidable, q. v. A defaulting purchaser may be made to pay a deficiency on a resale, subject to the former conditions.[3] The auctioneer may not bid for himself nor by an agent, even though he offer a fair price: the reason being, the law will not permit a test to be made between interest and duty. Till a sale has been made he acts for the vendor; after the sale, for some purposes, as, to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, he is agent for the buyer.[4] To exempt a sale of realty from the operation of that statute he must write the buyer's name in the memorandum of sale.[5] He has a special property in goods, and a lien for costs and commissions. If the vendor is undisclosed, he is liable as vendor. He is also liable for the want of due care and skill.[6]

He has all the liabilities of an ordinary agent. If he sells goods "as auctioneer," without naming the principal, he is liable as if selling for himself; and if the title proves defective, independently of the doctrine of implied warranty, he may be sued by the purchaser, as for money had and received, on the ground that the consideration has failed.[7]

See further BID; COMMERCE; CONCERN, For whom; JOBBER; SALE, Public; VENDUE.

---

[1] Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 830 (1824).

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 397.

[3] L. auctio, increase: augeré, to increase.

[4] [Hibler v. Hoag, 1 W. & S. 553 (1841); Campbell v. Swan, 48 Barb. 113 (1865).

[5] Porter v. Graves, 104 U. S. 174 (1881), Miller, J.

[6] City of Goshen v. Kern, 63 Ind. 473 (1878), Howk, C. J.

[7] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 119.

[1] Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 481–82 (1876), Ashburn, J.

[2] See Smull v. Jones, 1 W. & S. 136 (1841); Platt v. Oliver, 1 McLean, 301 (1837); Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 519 (1853); Smith v. Ullman, 58 Md. 189 (1882), cases.

[3] Weast v. Derrick, 100 Pa. 509 (1882).

[4] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 151–56 (1850), cases. As to that statute, see 19 Cent. Law J. 247–49 (1884), cases.

[5] Doty v. Wilder, 15 Ill. 410 (1854), cases; 2 Kent, 540; 13 Am. Dec. 398–400, cases.

[6] 3 Pars. Contr. 12.

[7] Seemuller v. Fuchs, 64 Md. 217 (1885), cases; Edgerton v. Michels, 66 Wis. 129 (1886), cases. Same cases, 24 Am. Law Reg. 250, 260; ib. 263–66, cases.

AUDIRE. L. To hear. Compare OYER.

Audi alteram partem. Hear the other side — the accused, the defendant.

No man is to be condemned unheard.[1] See NOTICE, 1, Judicial.

Audita querela. The complaint having been heard.

An audita querela lies where a defendant, against whom a judgment is recovered and who is therefore in danger of execution, may be relieved upon good matter of discharge which has happened since the judgment: as if the plaintiff has given him a general release, or if the defendant has paid the debt without procuring satisfaction to be entered on the record. In these and like cases, wherein the defendant has good matter to plead, but has had no opportunity of pleading it, an audita querela lies, in the nature of a bill in equity, for relief against the oppression. The writ is directed to the court below; states that the complaint of the defendant has been heard (audita querela defendentis); and, after setting out the matter of the complaint, directs the court to call the parties before it, and, having heard their allegations and proofs, to cause justice to be done between them.[2]

The writ was invented lest in any case there should be an oppressive defect of justice, where a party who has a good defense can not make it in the ordinary forms of law. But the indulgence shown in granting summary relief upon motion has rendered the writ almost useless.[3]

It is a judicial writ, founded upon a record, and directed to the court in which that record remains. It has the usual incidents of a regular suit. It is not a means for obtaining relief from negligence. The same end is now very generally secured by a motion.[3] See MOTION, 2.

AUDIT. Literally, he hears; a hearing. See AUDIRE.

1, v. To hear: to examine and adjust or certify.

2, n. The act or proceeding of officially examining and allowing or certifying, or of rejecting, a charge or account.

Auditor. One who hears: one who officially examines and allows as proper and lawful, or rejects as unlawful, the items of an account or accounts.

An officer of government whose duties are, chiefly, to examine, verify, and approve or reject, the accounts of those who have disbursed public moneys or furnished supplies.[1]

Termed auditor-general, State auditor, county auditor, first auditor, etc. Corresponding in duties is the comptroller (q. v.) of cities, States, and of the United States treasury.[2]

The office of public auditor belongs to the administrative department of government. Even where he is empowered to act upon his official judgment his functions are only quasi judicial.[3]

"To audit" an account is to hear, examine, adjust, pass upon and settle an account, and then to allow it.[4]

"To audit" is to examine and adjust an account or accounts. An "auditor" is a person authorized to examine an account or accounts, compare the charges with the vouchers, examine parties and witnesses, allow or reject charges, and state a balance.[5]

Such is the meaning when it is directed that a board of supervisors shall "audit and allow" the costs and expenses of a hearing to remove a county officer.[6]

In a statute providing that charges for making an examination of an insurance company shall be presented in an itemized bill, which shall be audited by the comptroller, "audit" means hear and examine, pass upon and adjust. In such case also the word plainly refers to a judicial investigation and decision as to the merits of a claim.[6]

An "auditor" is an agent or officer of the court who examines and digests an account for the decision of the court. He prepares the materials on which a decree may be made.[7]

He is an officer, either at law or in equity, assigned to state the items of debt and credit between parties and exhibit the balance.[8]

The term often designates an officer whose duties are properly those of a master.[9]

Originally, an auditor was an officer of the king, whose duty it was, at stated periods, to

---

[1] 1 Cush. 243; 46 N. Y. 119; 41 N. J. E. 659; 16 C. B. 416.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 405-6.

[3] See Avery v. United States, 12 Wall. 307 (1870); 18 Ala. 778; 59 Cal. 139; 24 Me. 304; 20 Md. 320; 10 Mass. 101; 12 id. 270; 144 id. 13; 9 Johns. 221; 17 id. 484; 21 Barb. 435; 34 id. 515; 2 Hill, S. C., 298; 12 Vt. 56; 23 id. 324; 25 id. 168; 42 id. 165; 18 Wis. 571; 15 Am. Dec. 695.

[1] See R. S. § 276.

[2] See R. S. §§ 268-73.

[3] State v. Brown, 10 Oreg. 222 (1882).

[4] Morris v. People, 3 Denio, 391 (1846); 68 Ga. 53.

[5] People ex rel. Benedict v. Supervisors, 31 N. Y. Supr. 419 (1881), Talcott, P. J.; Laws of 1874, ch. 323.

[6] Matter of Murphy, 31 N. Y. Supr. 594 (1881), Learned, P. J.

[7] Field v. Holland, 6 Cranch, 21 (1810), Marshall, C. J.

[8] Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Metc. 218 (1840), Shaw, C. J.

[9] Blain v. Patterson, 48 N. H. 152 (1868), Bellows, J.

examine the accounts of inferior officers and certify to their correctness. Later, the term designated an officer of the court of exchequer whose duty it was to take the accounts of the receivers of the king's revenue and "audit and perfect" them, without, however, putting in any charges; his office being merely to audit the accounts, that is, to ascertain their correctness. . . "To audit" is to examine, settle and adjust accounts — to verify the accuracy of the statements or items submitted.[1]

Where the items are numerous, the testimony questionable, and the accounts complicated, a court may make a general reference, with direction to state specifically such matters as either party may require or as the auditor may deem necessary.[2] See at end of ACCOUNT, 1.

Auditors are called in by the courts to hear matters of detail which a court has not time to hear, and to inform the conscience of the court as to facts which are essential to be known before a particular decree or judgment can be pronounced.[3]

They are appointed to audit the accounts of assignees in insolvency, of trustees to sell realty, of executors, of administrators, of guardians,— when excepted to, or where distribution is to be made of a balance among rival claimants; also, to report upon the expediency of selling or mortgaging the realty of decedents; as to incumbrances affecting the interests of partitioners; sometimes, to report the facts, where a petition has been taken pro confesso but an account showing a balance against the respondent is essential; to examine the accounts of public officers; also, as to the satisfaction of judgments, as to the distribution of the proceeds of forfeited recognizances, of the proceeds of sales, etc. Or, a court may itself sit as a "court of audit," as, an orphans' or surrogate's court, in which at regular intervals large numbers of accounts are presented for approval.

Where the claimants to a fund are numerous the auditor is required to give public notice of the time and place of holding hearings. His specific duties may be defined in the order of his appointment; but statutes provide for his issuing subpœnas, for administering oaths and affirmations, and for procuring the attachment of contumacious witnesses. He reports the facts, not the testimony, and a schedule by which the fund may be distributed according to law. His rulings and recommendations are reviewable by the court upon exception filed by any aggrieved party. He is called upon to admit or reject items of costs, wages, rents, commissions, secured and unsecured claims, etc. In every case the statutes, decisions, rules and practice of the particular jurisdiction should be consulted. Compare MASTER, 4.

AUDITA. See AUDIRE, Audita, etc.

[1] People v. Green, 5 Daly, 200 (1874), Daly, C. J. See 4 Coke, Inst. 107.

[2] Field v. Holland, supra.

[3] Miller's Appeal, 30 Pa. 490 (1858), Woodward, J.

AULA. L. A hall, or palace.

Aula regia or regis. The royal hall, or the king's hall.

A court established by the Conqueror, to advise the king in matters of great moment. It was composed of the king's great officers resident in his palace: the lords high constable, steward, treasurer, the lord chancellor, and others. These were assisted by persons learned in the laws — the king's justiciars or justices, and by the greater barons of parliament. Over all whom presided the chief justiciar.

Here will be noted the change in the meaning of the word "court" from royal household to tribunal of justice.

The court followed the king's household in all his expeditions. That being burdensome to litigants it was ordained by Magna Charta that the court should be held in some certain place — Westminster Hall.

In the reign of Edward I the court was subdivided into four distinct tribunals: chancery, king's bench, exchequer, and common pleas — the last being in a special sense the successor of the original aula regis.[1] See CHANCELLOR, 1.

AUNT. See ANCESTOR; CONSANGUINITY.

AUTER. See AUTRE.

AUTHENTIC.[2] In legal parlance, duly vested with all formalities and legally attested.[3]

Authentication. Official, legal attestation to a thing done: as, of a copy made of an act of legislation, or of the record in a court or other public office.

There does not appear to be any necessary or inherent meaning in the word "authenticated" as used in the act of June 19, 1876, amending Rev. St., § 5271, which relates to extraditions and requires the authentication to be in writing. Authentication in regard to original papers may be made by oral proof. A witness may swear to the verity and identity of the original, and that it would be received in the tribunals of the foreign country as evidence of the criminality of the accused. But when copies are offered they must be authenticated according to the law of the foreign country — for which the certificate of the principal officer of the United States is absolute proof.[4] See FAITH, Full, etc.; LAW, Foreign.

AUTHOR.[5] Within the meaning of the copyright law one who, by his own intellectual labor applied to the materials of his com-

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 37–40; 3 Steph. Com. 397–400.

[2] L. authenticus, written with one's own hand; original.

[3] [Downing v. Brown, 3 Col. 590 (1877): Webster.

[4] Re Fowler, 18 Blatch. 436 (1880), Blatchford, J., s. c. 4 F. R. 311. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 484; 1 Whart. Ev. § 700.

[5] L. auctor, an originator: augere, to increase.

position, produces an arrangement or compilation new in itself.[1]

See generally COPYRIGHT; HISTORY; LETTER, 3; LITERARY; MANUSCRIPT; PHOTOGRAPH; REVIEW, 3; SCIENCE.

AUTHORITY. 1. Power — delegated to an agent or exercised by virtue of an office, trust, or privilege.

Executive authority. Power vested in the President of the United States, or in the governor of a State; also, either of those officials himself considered in his political capacity, as opposed to the judicial and legislative branches of government.[2] Judicial authority. Official power in a court or judge. Legislative authority. Power conferred upon a legislative body.

Express authority. Power stated in terms more or less explicit. Implied authority. Such authority as is or is to be inferred from circumstances.

General authority. Power extending to all acts of a certain nature. Special authority. Authority confined to a single act or transaction.

Limited authority. Power restricted by instructions more or less precise. Unlimited authority. Authority not defined by words or instructions.

Naked authority. Power exercised by an agent solely for the benefit of the principal. Authority coupled with an interest. Power given for value to the agent, or as part of a security.

See further AGENT; DELEGATUS; INTEREST, 2; Coupled, etc.; PARTNER; also, APPARENT; CORPORATE; LAWFUL; POWER, 1; RATIFICATION.

2. The binding force of a constitution, treaty, statute, or ordinance.

Constituted authorities. Officers of government appointed under a constitution. Constituting authorities. The persons who appoint the former as their servants or agents.

3. Whatever is relied upon as declaring the law: (1) a constitution, treaty, statute, adjudication; (2) a text-book or treatise explanatory of organic, statute, or case law. Compare OPINION, 3; PRECEDENT.

AUTHORIZE. To confer power upon; to invest with lawful authority, q. v.

A government contract to be "authorized by law" must be made in pursuance of express authority given by statute or of authority necessarily inferable from some duty imposed upon, or from some power given to, the person assuming the contract.[1]

AUTRE. F. Another. Also spelled auter.

Autre action pendant. Another action pending. See PEND.

Autre droit. Another's right. See further DROIT.

Autre vie. Another's life. See VIE.

AUTREFOIS. F. Another time; formerly.

Autrefois acquit. Formerly acquitted. Autrefois convict. Formerly convicted.

Pleas in bar of a second indictment for an offense of which the accused has already been acquitted or convicted. See further ACQUITTAL; CONVICTION, Former.

AUXILIARY. See ANCILLARY; EQUITY.

AVAIL.[2] To be of use or advantage; to answer the purpose; to have strength, force, or efficacy sufficient to the end:[3] as, in saying that a defense, a plea, or evidence will or will not avail the party.

Available. Suitable to the purpose: as, an available defense or plea; also, admitting of early conversion into ready money.

"Available means" are anything which can readily be converted into money; all that class of securities known in the mercantile world as representatives of value easily convertible into money; not necessarily, nor primarily, money itself.[4]

Avails. Profits, proceeds, funds.[5]

AVER. See AVERMENT.

AVERAGE.[6] Proportional payment: contribution to a loss or expense incurred at sea for the general benefit of several persons or several interests.

In its simple generic sense a loss, injury, or deduction not amounting to a total loss.[7]

General or gross average. That contribution to a loss or expense voluntarily incurred for the preservation of the whole, in [1] [Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatch. 46 (1846), Betts, J. See also 2 Kent, 373-74, 388; R. S. § 4952, cases.

[2] See Commonwealth v. Hall, 9 Gray, 267-68 (1857), Bigelow, C. J.

[1] Fifteen Per Cent. Contracts, 15 Op. A.-G. 236 (1877).

[2] F. avaloir, to be of use: L. valere, to be strong.

[3] [Webster's Dict.

[4] Brigham v. Tillinghast, 13 N. Y. 218-19 (1855).

[5] See 100 Mass. 233; 12 F. R. 871; 2 Bl. Com. 60.

[6] L. averagium: averia, cattle. Service a tenant owes his lord by horse, ox, or carriage therewith.— Blount's Law Dict. (1691). It meant use of horses, carriage, payment for carriage; hence, payment proportional — to horses employed, goods lost at sea, etc.,— Skeat.

[7] [Bargett v. Orient Ins. Co., 3 Bosw. 395 (1858).

which all who are concerned in the ship, freight, and cargo are to bear an equal part proportionable to their respective interests.[1]

Particular average. The damage or loss, short of total, falling directly upon particular articles of property.[1]

The liability or claim upon such articles from loss or damage to something else is "general" average.[2]

The rule as to general average is derived from the Rhodian law as adopted in the Roman jurisprudence. The Digest states the rule thus: If goods are thrown overboard to lighten a ship, the loss incurred for the sake of all shall be made good by the contribution of all. The case of jettison was used to illustrate the general principle. Now, as then, ship and cargo must have been placed in a common imminent peril; there must have been a voluntary sacrifice of property to avert that peril; and, by the sacrifice, the safety of the other property must have been successfully attained.[3]

The principle is that "what is given for the general benefit of all shall be made good by the contribution of all." General average is that contribution which is made by all who are parties to the same adventure toward a loss arising out of extraordinary sacrifices made, or extraordinary expenses incurred, by some of them for the common benefit of ship and cargo. The loss must be of an extraordinary nature, advisedly incurred, under circumstances of imminent danger, for the common benefit of ship and cargo; and it must have aided in the accomplishment of that purpose.[4]

Where the interests are temporarily separated, as by unloading the cargo to repair the vessel, and the expectation of resuming the voyage, from unforeseen circumstances, is not realized, as, for example, inability to make the vessel seaworthy, all the expense of protecting the different interests meanwhile is chargeable to general average.[5]

Passengers' baggage in daily use does not contribute to general average.[6]

AVERMENT.[7] A positive statement of the truth of a fact; a formal allegation in pleading.

Aver. To assert for the truth; to state in positive terms; to allege formally.

Averments are spoken of as "affirmative" and "negative," as "general" and "particular" or "specific," as "material" and "immaterial," as "unnecessary," "impertinent," etc., with substantially the same meaning as are "allegations." See ALLEGATION.

An averment in a declaration is a direct and positive allegation of fact, made in a manner capable of being traversed. It includes the idea of an affirmation to be made out by inference and induction.[1]

"The use in pleading of an averment is to ascertain that to the court which is generally or doubtfully expressed; so that the court may not be perplexed of whom, or of what, it ought to be understood; and to add matter to the plea to make doubtful things clear"—as, an averment in an action of slander.[2]

There is no particular form of words in use. The important matter is that each substantial fact be so averred as to be susceptible of a simple admission or denial. See VERIFY.

AVOCATION. See BUSINESS; EMPLOYMENT; TRADE.

AVOID.[3] 1. To cause to be or become empty: to render useless or void; to make inoperative or of no effect; to nullify. Opposed, affirm, confirm.

Avoidance. Setting aside; nullifying; rendering of no effect.[4] Compare VOID.

Some authorities assert that an infant's deed cannot be avoided except by an act equally solemn with the deed itself; some that it cannot be done by anything short of an entry; others that it may be done simply by another deed delivered to a different grantee. All agree, however, that acts which would be insufficient to avoid such a deed may amount to an affirmance,[5] q. v.

2. In pleading, to repel the consequence or inference which would logically follow a failure to deny the truth of an averment. More fully, to "confess and avoid."

Matter of avoidance. New matter which admits the declaration to be true, but shows, either that the defendant was never liable to the recovery claimed against him or that he has never been discharged from his original liability by something supervenient.[6] See further CONFESSION, 1.

AVOIRDUPOIS. See TON.

AVOW.[7] 1. To declare openly: to acknowledge and justify an act; opposed to disavow.

2. To make an avowry.

Avowant. He who makes an avowry.

Avowry. Upon an action of replevin being brought and a declaration delivered, the [1] Padelford v. Boardman, 4 Mass. 549 (1808).

[2] Bargett v. Orient Ins. Co., ante.

[3] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 13 Pet. 337-38 (1839), Story, J.

[4] McAndrews v. Thatcher, 3 Wall. 370, 376 (1865), Clifford, J. See also 3 Kent, 235.

[5] The Joseph Farwell, 31 F. R. 844 (1887), Toulmin, J.

[6] Heye v. North German Lloyd, 33 F. R. 65 (1887), cases, Brown, J.

[7] F. averer, to affirm as true: L. ad, to; verum, truth.

[1] Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. 262 (1811).

[2] Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. 219 (1809).

[3] M. Eng. avoiden, to make empty, put out of the way.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 308.

[5] Irvine v. Irvine, 9 Wall. 627-28 (1869), Strong, J.

[6] Gould, Plead. 34, 13; 31 Conn. 177.

[7] L. ad-vovere, to vow to: ad-vocare.

distrainor, as defendant, makes "avowry," that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right or in the right of his wife, and sets forth the reason for it, as for rent-arrear, damage done, or other cause.[1]

If he justifies in another's right as his bailiff or servant, he is said to make "cognizance."[1] See COGNIZANCE, 1.

AVULSION.[2] Alluvion or dereliction of land which is sudden and considerable.

As, where the course of a river is changed by a violent flood and thereby a man loses his ground; in which case he has, as his recompense, what the river has left in another place.[2] See further ALLUVION.

AWARD.[4] 1, v. (1) To allow by judicial determination: as, for a court to award a writ of habeas corpus or other process.

(2) To adjudge as due; to allow; to find: as, for a jury or viewers to award damages, for arbitrators to award a claim.

2, n. The decision of a board of arbitrators; the finding of a referee; also, the writing which embodies such determination.

An award is the judgment of the arbitrator upon the matters submitted.[5]

No award. A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, that no legal award was made.

A valid award is equivalent to a judgment on a verdict. Feudal law did not permit a right in realty to pass by a mere award — lest an alienation should be made collusively without the consent of the superior. . . A party who disobeys an award is punishable as for contempt of court, unless the award be set aside for corruption or other misbehavior in the arbitrators.[6]

An award is an act of the parties performed through their agents, and assented to in advance.[7]

It can be impeached only for corruption, partiality, or gross misbehavior in the arbitrators, or for some palpable mistake as to the law or the facts. If so uncertain that it cannot be enforced, it is void.[8]

At common law it must be not only certain but final, disposing wholly of the controversy which properly forms the subject of the reference; otherwise it cannot be enforced.[9]

Before a court of review every presumption will be made in favor of the validity of an award, unless flagrant error appears upon the face of the record itself.[1]

See further ABIDE; ARBITRATION.

AWAY. See ABSENT; CARRY, 1.

Away-going. See CROP.

B.

B. Referring to a page or note, see A, 1.

In colonial times was imprinted with indelible ink upon the cheek of a person convicted of burglary.[2]

As an abbreviation, usually denotes bachelor, bail, bankruptcy, baron, bench, bill, bond, book:

B. B. Bail bond. See C. C. et B. B.

B. C. Bail court; bankruptcy cases.

B. E. Baron of the court of exchequer. See BARON, 3.

B. F. Bonum factum, a proper thing.

Formerly was indorsed upon the paper containing a decree, signifying that it was "approved."

B. R. Bancus regis, king's bench; bankruptcy reports; Bill of Rights.

B. S. Bancus superior, upper bench.

BABY ACT. A term of reproach originally applied to the disability of infancy when pleaded by an adult in bar of recovery upon a contract made while he was under age, but extended to any plea of the statute of limitations.

BACHELOR OF LAWS. See DEGREE.

BACK. To indorse, sign: as, to back a process or writ.

The warrant of a justice of the peace in one county must be backed, that is, signed, by a justice in another county, before it can be executed there. This practice prevailed for a long period prior to authorization by statute.[3]

Under extradition treaties, an officer of government, usually the secretary of state, may indorse or back a warrant of arrest.

BACK-GAMMON. See GAME, 2.

BACK-WATER. See MILL, 1; TAKE, 8.

BAD. 1. When applied to "character," the jury must say whether want of chastity or of honesty was imputed.[4]

The charge of incontinency involved in the words "she is a bad, a loose, character," may be sufficiently averred by an innuendo without a colloquium. Such words of themselves impute incontinency. Whether

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 150; 21 N. J. L. 49.

[2] L. avulsio: avellere, to tear away.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 262; 3 Washb. R. P. 452.

[4] Mid. Eng. awarden: F. eswardir, to examine, judge: warder, to take heed, keep. A thing for the parties to observe,— Skeat; Spel. Gloss.

[5] Halnon v. Halnon, 55 Vt. 322 (1883), Royce, C. J.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 16–18.

[7] Babb v. Stromberg, 14 Pa. 399 (1850), Gibson, C. J.

[8] Herrick v. Blair, 1 Johns. Ch. 101 (1814), Kent, J.; 2 id. 551; Fairchild v. Adams, 11 Cush. 550 (1853); Perkins v. Giles, 53 Barb. 346 (1869); Russell v. Smith, 57 Ind. 406, 408 (1882).

[9] Connor v. Simpson, 104 Pa. 443 (1883); Morse, Arb., &c. 466.

[1] Wilcox v. Payne, 88 Pa. 157 (1878).

[2] Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 348 (1857), Shaw, C. J.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 291.

[4] Riddell v. Thayer, 127 Mass. 490 (1879); Kedroff-vansky v. Niebaum, 70 Cal. 218–19 (1886), cases.

or not the charge is true the jury must decide.[1] See CHARACTER; SLANDER.

2. In pleading — materially defective; ill; not good: as, a bad plea, bad pleading, a bad count. Compare ILL, 2; WELL, 2.

When evidence has not been given on a bad count, a general verdict will be entered on such of the good counts as are supported by proof.[2] See USUS, Utile per inutile, etc.

3. False, faulty: as, bad grammar, q. v.

Bad faith. See FAITH. Compare MALUS.

BADGE. 1. A mark or device worn by an officer of the peace for purposes of identification and perhaps of notification.

On demand, is ordinarily to be shown as evidence of authority to make an arrest.

2. Evidence of character.

A badge of fraud is a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for explanation;[3] as, possession of personalty by the alleged vendor.[4] See POSSESSION, Fraudulent.

"The provisions in the deed of assignment are at most but badges of fraud, susceptible of explanation, like all indicia, and may or may not be evidence of fraudulent intent."[5]

BADGER. To pester or worry; as, to badger a witness.[6] Compare BROWBEAT.

Originally, to follow up or pursue with eagerness, as the badger is hunted. See EXAMINATION, 9.

BAG. The sack, satchel, reticule or other like receptacle in which lawyers carry briefs and papers for use during the preparation, trial, hearing, or argument of cases, was formerly called, from the prevailing color of the material, the "green bag."

In the theatrical performances of Queen Caroline's time the lawyer is represented with a green bag in his hand; and such is the reference in the literature of Queen Anne's time; and, until a recent date, green bags were commonly carried by the majority of legal practitioners. The king's counselors, queen's counselors, the chancery lawyers, and the leaders of the common bar, were honored with the privilege of carrying red, purple, or blue bags. Indeed, the green bag was so uniformly associated with the profession in the reign of Anne that "to say that a man intended to carry a green bag was the same as saying that he meant to adopt the law as a profession."[7]

In the time of Charles II angry clients were accustomed to revile lawyers as "green-bag carriers."[8]

As to petty bag office, see HANAPER; PETIT.

[1] Vanderlip v. Roe, 23 Pa. 84 (1854).

[2] Haldeman v. Martin, 10 Pa. 372 (1849); Chaffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 442 (1886); ib. 497.

[3] Bump, Fraud. Convey. 81.

[4] 101 U. S. 229; 1 Pars. Contr. 522.

[5] Burr v. Clement, 9 Col. 11 (1885).

[6] [Webster's Dict.

[7] 5 Alb. Law J. 225 (1872).

[8] Wycherly, Plain Dealer.

BAGATELLE. See GAME, 2.

BAGGAGE. 1. Whatever a passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of the journey.[1]

A contract to carry a person implies an undertaking to transport such a limited quantity of articles as are ordinarily taken by travelers for their personal use and convenience, the quantity depending upon the station of the party, the object and length of the journey, and other circumstances.[2]

To the extent that the articles carried by a passenger for his personal use exceed in quantity and value such as are usually carried by passengers of like station, pursuing like journeys, they are not baggage for which the carrier, by general law, is responsible as insurer. In cases of abuse by the passenger of the privilege which the law gives him, the carrier secures such exemption from responsibility, not, however, because the passenger, uninquired of, failed to disclose the character and value of the articles carried, but because the articles themselves, in excess of the amount usually or ordinarily carried, under like circumstances, would not constitute baggage within the meaning of the law.

In the case (Fraloff's, infra) in which the doctrine foregoing was enunciated, 275 yards of laces, alleged to be of the value of $75,000, and found by a jury to be worth $10,000, were held to constitute part of the wearing apparel of the defendant in error — a wealthy Russian. They were adapted to and exclusively designed for personal use, according to her convenience, comfort, or tastes, during an extended journey, upon which she had entered. They were not merchandise, and there was no evidence that they were intended for sale or for purposes of business. It was further decided that whether the laces were such articles in quantity or value as passengers of like station and under like circumstances ordinarily carry for their personal use, and to subserve their convenience, gratification, or comfort while traveling, was not a question for the jury, under instruction from the court, but for the court itself as a matter of law.[3]

The liability of the carrier attaches when the property, as baggage, passes into his hands with his consent. He may refuse to receive property not properly baggage, but if he receives it knowingly, and no deception has been practiced upon him, he must carry it safely.[1]

[1] Macrow v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R., 6 Q. B. 622 (1871), Cockburn, C. J. See also Jordan v. Railway Co., 5 Cush. 72 (1849); Connolly v. Warren, 106 Mass. 148 (1870); 6 Hill, 586.

[2] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 274, 278 (1870), Field, J.

[3] N. Y. Central, &c. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 29–30 (1879), Harlan, J.; Waite, C. J., Clifford, Hunt, Swayne, and Bradley, JJ., concurring; Field, Miller, and Strong, JJ., dissenting. See also Haines v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 29 Minn. 161 (1882); Isaacson v. N. Y. Central, &c. R. Co., 94 N. Y. 283 (1884).

The fare paid by a passenger includes the transportation of his baggage. The carrier has a lien therefor, and may detain the baggage until payment is made.[2]

The term has been held to include — a watch,[3] jewelry,[4] an opera glass,[5] surgical instruments,[6] a gun, a pistol,[7] a mechanic's tools,[8] manuscript,[9] books;[10] but not, samples of merchandise,[11] except when the carrier, being made aware of the contents of packages, takes them as baggage;[12] nor gold ornaments for presents;[13] nor money, except as to such limited amount as may be necessary for personal use.[14]

The possession of a baggage check by a passenger is evidence of the receipt of his baggage.[15]

Baggage is to be removed within a reasonable time after arrival, else the carrier may store the articles, charge reasonable rates for such service, and, in case of theft, loss, or destruction, be liable only as a warehouseman,[16] q. v. See also CARRIER.

2. As to the baggage of guests in hotels, see INNKEEPER.

BAIL.[17] 1, v. To deliver personalty to another as a bailment, q. v.

2, v. To deliver a defendant to sureties who give security for his appearance in court at the return of the writ.[18]

n. One or more of such sureties themselves.

A delivery or bailment of a person to his sureties, upon their giving (together with himself as principal) sufficient security for his appearance; he being supposed to continue in their friendly custody, instead of going to jail.[1]

The sureties undertake to surrender the defendant when he is called upon to answer the charge.[2]

Bailable. Admitting of bail; allowing or providing for release upon bail: as, a bailable — offense, action, process.

Bail-bond. The obligation entered into by the surety.

Takes the place of the body of the defendant, and is forfeited by his non-appearance according to the stipulation. It is not receivable under final process. The sheriff, constable, or marshal, as the case may be, is the obligee; in which respect the obligation differs from a recognizance, q. v. The plaintiff sues on the instrument as assignee of the officer to whom it was originally given, and, perhaps, by a writ of scire facias.[3] See C. C. ET B. B.

Bail-piece. A certificate from the record in a case that one or more persons named became bail in a certain sum of money.

Not in the nature of process; merely a record or memorial of the delivery of the principal to his bail, on security given.[4]

Originally written on a small piece of parchment.[5]

A surety may use this certificate as a warrant of arrest, and, by virtue thereof, deliver the principal over to an officer for confinement. See ONUS, EXONERETUR.

Following are the common species of bail:

Bail above, or bail to the action. Sureties who jointly and severally undertake that if their principal, the defendant in an action, is "condemned," he will either pay the judgment or give himself up for imprisonment, or else that they will satisfy the judgment.

Bail below, or appearance bail. Sureties who stipulate that a defendant will appear in court on the day named in the writ.[6]

Bail absolute. A person or persons who obligate themselves, usually to the State or Commonwealth, to pay a specified sum of money, in the event of another person (the principal) failing to account, in due form of law, for money entrusted to him as administrator, guardian, assignee, or other trustee.

Common or straw bail. One or more fictitious sureties whose names are entered as bail for matter of form, and who stipulate

[1] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Swift, ante; Strouse v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 17 F. R. 209 (1883). Left with railway porter, Bunch v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 17 Q. B. D. 215 (1886): 2 Law Quart. Rev. 469–79 (1886), cases. See generally 18 Cent. Law J. 421–24 (1884), cases.

[2] Roberts v. Koehler, 30 F. R. 96 (1887), cases. Cases contra, 26 Am. Law Reg. 296–98 (1887).

[3] Jones v. Voorhees, 10 Ohio, 145 (1840); Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 377 (1875), cases.

[4] McGill v. Rowan, 3 Pa. 453 (1846).

[5] Toledo, &c. R. Co. v. Hammond, 33 Ind. 379 (1870).

[6] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 270 (1870).

[7] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Collins, 56 Ill. 217 (1870).

[8] Porter v. Hildebrand, 13 Pa. 133 (1850).

[9] Hopkins v. Westcott, 6 Blatch. 69 (1868).

[10] Doyle v. Kiser, 6 Ind. 242 (1855).

[11] Stimson v. Conn. Riv. R. Co., 98 Mass. 84 (1867), cases.

[12] Hoeger v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 63 Wis. 100 (1885).

[13] The Ionic, 5 Blatch. 538 (1867); 4 Bosw. 225.

[14] Pfister v. Central Pacific R. Co., 70 Cal. 173 (1886); 31 Conn. 281; 25 Ga. 61; 22 Ill. 278; 33 id. 219; 56 id. 293; 5 Cush. 69; 98 Mass. 375; 41 Miss. 671; 44 N. H. 325; 9 Wend. 85; 25 id. 459; 6 Hill, 596; 30 N. Y. 594; 16 Pa. 67.

[15] 6 Col. 337; Redf. Car. 71, 73.

[16] See generally McCaffrey v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 24 Am. Law Reg. 175–90 (1885), cases.

[17] F. bailler, to deliver, free from.

[18] 3 Bl. Com. 290

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 297; 20 N. H. 161.

[2] Ramey v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 583 (1886).

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 290.

[4] Nicolls v. Ingersoll, 7 Johns. 154 (1810).

[5] 3 Bl Com. 291.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 291.

that a defendant will appear. Special bail. Real, substantial bondsmen.

"Common" or "straw" bail are universal sureties — John Doe and Richard Roe, or other imaginary persons returned by the sheriff — standing pledges, for the purpose intended. They originally answered for the plaintiff in case he was amerced (q. v.) for making a false accusation.[1] See further DOE; STRAW.

"Special" bail may be required, by order of court in such cases as are particularly grievous, or when it is necessary that a defendant should be kept within the jurisdiction. Originally introduced to mitigate the hardships incident to imprisonment.[2]

"All persons shall be Bailable by sufficient Sureties, unless for Capital Offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption great." This provision, quoted from the Great Law[3] of the Province of Pennsylvania, enacted in 1682, is also found in the constitutions of all the States. See EVIDENT.

Bail is taken by committing magistrates, by judges and commissioners of the courts, by clerks of some courts, and by other persons, as provided by statutes; but not, generally speaking, by justices of the peace on charges of homicide and certain other of the more heinous felonies, nor in charges of contempt of a court or of contempt of a legislature by a member thereof.[4]

"Excessive bail shall not be required."[5] What is "excessive" is for the court alone to determine. See EXCESSIVE.

Bail is not required of a municipal corporation; nor, as a rule, of persons in a fiduciary relation, sued as such.

A surety must generally be a freeholder to some amount, subject to process, and able to make a contract and to pay the amount of the bond. Ordinarily, common bail suffices from a defendant who is a freeholder. A non-resident plaintiff may have to furnish bail for the probable costs in his action.

The principal is regarded as delivered to his sureties as jailers of his own choosing. Their dominion is a continuance of the original imprisonment. Whenever they choose they may seize and deliver him up, in their own discharge; and, until this can be effected, they may imprison him. In this action they may be represented by an agent. They may pursue him into another State; they may arrest him on the Sabbath; and, if necessary, they may break and enter his house to arrest him. Being like a re-arrest by a sheriff of an escaping prisoner, they need no process. Their rights are alike in civil and criminal cases.

With the sureties there is an implied engagement by the principal that he will not leave the jurisdiction; and by the plaintiff, that he will do nothing to increase their risk or to affect their remedy.[6] See JUMP.

See also BIND; COMMISSIONER; DEPOSIT, In lieu, etc.; FIDEJUSSOR; JUSTIFICATION, 2; MAINPERNOR; PENALTY; PERFECT; SURETY.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 274, 287, 290, 291, 295.]

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 292, 287.

[3] Chapter LII: Linn, 120. See Wash. Law Rev., Oct. 25, Nov. 1, 15, 1882.

[4] See generally 20 Cent. Law J. 464-66 (1885), cases.

[5] Constitution, Amd. Art. VIII. 4 Bl. Com. 296-99.

[6] See Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 371 (1872), Swayne, J.; Reese v. United States, 9 id. 21 (1869), Field, J.; 3 Bl. Com. 290-92. As to rights of sureties generally, see 1 Kans. Law J. 211-14 (1885), cases.

BAILEE. See BAILMENT.

BAILIFF.[1] Originally, one put in charge of something.

An officer concerned in the administration of justice in a certain province.[2]

1. A servant, in a superior, ministerial capacity.[3]

A private person who has the custody and care of another's property.

He is liable to an action of account-render.[4]

2. An attendant who preserves order in and about the room where court is being held; a tipstaff, q. v.

3. A sheriff's officer or deputy.

Also called a bound or special bailiff.

The due execution of his duties is secured by an obligation with sureties.[5]

BAILIWICK.[6] A word, introduced by the Normans, and equivalent to "county." The liberty, province, or jurisdiction of a sheriff.[7] Compare PRECINCT.

BAILMENT.[8] A delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee.[9]

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods restored by the bailee as soon as the purpose of the bailment shall be answered.[10]

A delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, expressed or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust.[11]

When the identical thing delivered, though in an altered form, is to be restored, the contract is a "bailment," and the title to the property is not changed. But when there is no obligation to restore the specific article, and the receiver is at liberty to return another

[1] The -iff is from the A. S. reeve, officer, steward.— 1 Bl. Com. 116. O. F. bailler, to keep in custody.— Skeat. See BAIL, 2; REEVE.

[2] Coke, Litt. 168 b.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 427.

[4] See Coke, Litt. 172 a; 4 Watts, 422; 28 Ga. 161; 44 Barb. 458; 1 Story, Eq. § 446.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 345.

[6] F. baillie, government; bailler, to have custody of. A. S. wic, dwelling, station, jurisdiction.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 344; 2 id. 37.

[8] F. bailler, to deliver.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 451, 395.

[10] 2 Kent, 559.

[11] Story, Bailm. § 2; Watson v. State, 70 Ala. 14 (1881).

thing of equal value, the title to the property being changed, the contract is a "sale,"[1] q. v.

Bail, v. To deliver a thing to a person upon his engaging to do something to or with it, and then either to return or to account for it.

Bailee. He who thus receives a thing bailed. Bailor. He who thus delivers a thing as bailed.

The purpose of the law of bailments is to ascertain, whenever the loss of or injury to a thing occurs, to what degree of care the bailee was bound and of what degree of negligence he has been guilty.[2]

Three kinds of bailments are recognized: That in which the trust is for the benefit — of the bailor, of the bailee, or of both bailor and bailee. In cases of the first kind, at least slight care is required; in cases of the second kind, great care; in cases of the third kind, ordinary care. The absence of the required degree of care constitutes negligence, for which the bailee is responsible.[3]

Sir William Jones, following the civil law, proposed, in 1790, this division: Depositum, gratuitous custody; deposit, q. v. Mandatum, gratuitous feasance; mandate, q. v. Accommodatum (q. v.), or commodatum, loan for use without pay; accommodation. Pignus, pledge, q. v. Locatio, or locatum, hiring,[4] q. v. See also LOAN, 1.

Each party has a qualified property (q. v.) in the subject of the bailment and may maintain an action with respect to it.[5]

Presumably, the bailor is entitled to the thing. The bailee is to do what the principal directed — restore the article or account to him for it. He "accounts" when he yields to the paramount right of immediate possession in a third person who is found to be the true owner.[6]

See also CARE; CARRIER; INNKEEPER; LARCENY; RES, Perit, etc.

BAIT. 1. To feed: to allure a dumb animal, by scented food, from the premises of its owner or from the highway.

The owner of an animal injured in this way may maintain an action upon the case for damages.

2. To attack with violence; to harass: as, to bait a bull with dogs.[7]

Pursuing rabbits with dogs is not baiting them. The term applies where the baited animal is tied to a stake or confined so that it cannot escape.[1]

BALANCE.[2] 1. Excess on one side of an account.

The conclusion or result of the debit and credit sides of an account.[3]

Implies mutual dealings, and the extension of debit and credit.[3]

2. Residue or remainder; as, the balance of an estate.[4]

General balance. Such sum of money as is due for services rendered by a person to whom two or more articles have been bailed for purposes of transportation, for the bestowal of work and labor, or on account of which money has been expended. See LIEN, Particular.

Net balance. Applied to the proceeds of a sale of stock, means, in commercial usage, the balance of the proceeds after deducting the expenses incident to the sale.[5]

In some States a balance found to be due from an executor, administrator, or guardian, may be entered of record as a judgment.

In suits arising out of mutual accounts the jury may find a balance due to the defendant which, by certificate of the court, becomes a judgment against the plaintiff.

Partial balance. A balance found upon a partial settlement of accounts, as between partners. Final balance. The balance at final settlement of a portion of the items of an account, or of all the items, and for a limited period of time or for the whole period covered by dealings or transactions.

An express promise by a partner to pay a partial balance is the most satisfactory evidence of an intention to separate the items included in the settlement from the rest of the joint affairs.

To constitute such an agreed final balance as will support an action by one partner against his copartner, the balance must have received the assent of both partners, binding them to an admission of its correctness.[6] See ACCOUNT, 1.

BALLET. See THEATER.

BALLOT.[7] n. A ball or a ticket used in voting; a paper embodying a vote; also, the whole number of votes cast. v. To decide by voting.

[1] Mallory v. Willis, 4 N. Y. 85 (1850), cases, Bronson, C. J.; Foster v. Pettibone, 7 id. 435 (1852), Ruggles, C. J.; Hyde v. Cookson, 21 Barb. 108 (1855); Marsh v. Titus, 3 Hun, 550 (1875); Story, Bailm. § 288; 2 Kent, 589. Grain in an elevator is "sold," 19 Cent. Law J. 268–69 (1884), cases.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr. 87.

[3] Story, Bailm. § 4.

[4] Jones, Bailm. 86.

[5] Bl. Com. 395, 452.

[6] The Idaho, 93 U. S. 579–80 (1876), cases, Strong, J.; Robinson v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 16 F. R. 57 (1883), cases. See generally Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Ray. 909 (1704); 1 Sm. L. Cas. 369–454, cases. German Law, 2 Law Quar. Rev. 188–212 (1886).

[7] Pitts v. Millar, L. R., 9 Q. B. 382 (1874).

[1] Pitts v. Millar, ante.

[2] L. bilanx, having two scales.

[3] McWilliams v. Allen, 45 Mo. 574 (1870).

[4] Lopez v. Lopez, 23 S. C. 269 (1885); Skinner v. Lamp, 3 Ired. L. 155 (1842).

[5] Evans v. Waln, 71 Pa. 74 (1872).

[6] 2 Bates, Partn. § 861, cases.

[7] F. ballotte, a little ball for voting.

May refer to the decision of a juror or jurors, or to the preferences of persons qualified to elect the officers of a corporation or of a government.

In French dictionaries, defined as "the act of voting by balls or tickets by putting the same into a box or urn;" also as, "secret voting by means of a ball or ticket." The word did not change its meaning when adopted into the English language.[1]

As applied to elections of public officers, voting by ballot signifies a mode of designating an elector's choice of a person for an office by the deposit of a ticket, bearing the name of such person, in a receptacle provided for the purpose, in such a way as to secure to the elector the privilege of complete and inviolable secrecy in regard to the person voted for.[2]

This privilege of secrecy is the distinguishing feature of ballot voting. The object in view is the independence of the voter.[3]

Voting by ballot is a constitutional method of voting which cannot be changed by a statute. Its perpetuation is meant to secure the right to vote without having the voter's opinion of men or measures inquired into.[3] See TEST, Acts.

The natural import of "balloting at a national, State, or municipal election" is, balloting in and for the election of national, State, or municipal officers. The expression will not apply to ballots casts for or against a regulation like that of granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors.[4]

Ballot-box. A receptacle for ballots; more precisely, such receptacle as is authorized by law.

"To stuff a ballot-box" means unlawfully, fraudulently, and clandestinely to place in a ballot-box, at a lawful election, ballots which have not been voted, with intent to affect the result of the election.[5] See ELECTION, 1; VOTE.

BAN; BANN.[6] Public proclamation or notice.

Banns of matrimony. Publication, by oral announcement, of an intended marriage, in a church or public chapel.

Affords opportunity to interpose legal objection to the marriage.[1]

BANC.[2] The seat occupied by the judges of a court; more particularly, a full bench, when all, or at least a majority, of the judges are present for the decision of questions of law, as distinguished from the practice of one or more members of the court sitting, with a jury, for the determination of questions of fact. Whence "banc days," and "sitting in banc." Compare BANK, 2 (1); BENCH.

BANK. 1. The earth bordering a watercourse, q. v.

The banks of a river are the earth which contains it in its ordinary state of high water.[3] See ALONG; BED, 2; RIPARIAN.

2. A bench.

(1) A judge's seat; also, a court sitting for the decision of matters of law — but for this "banc" is the word more generally used. See BANC; BENCH.

(2) An institution for the deposit, discount, or circulation of money.

May refer to the association, the office or place of business, or the managing officers as a body.[4]

The sense in which "bank" or "banks" is intended to be used is determined by their connection with what is said. An act to be done by a bank means an act to be done by those who have the authority to do it. If it be an act within the franchise for banking, or within the ordinary power of the bank, and it is done by the president and directors, or by their agents, we say the bank did it. If, however, an act is to be done relative to the institution, by which its charter is to be changed, the stockholders must do it, unless another mode has been provided by the charter. In one sense, after it has been done, we may say that the bank did it, but only so because what the stockholders have done becomes a part of the institution.[5]

Banks, in the commercial sense, are banks of deposit, of discount, or of circulation. Speaking strictly, the term "bank" implies a place for the deposit of money, as that is the most obvious purpose of such an institution. Originally, the business of banking consisted only in receiving deposits of bullion, plate, and the like, for safe-keeping. In time, bankers assumed to discount bills and notes, and to loan money

[1] State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. 133 (1877); Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 92 (1871).

[2] Brisbin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 108 (1879), cases, Berry, J. See also Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 541 (1832); People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 57 (1863); Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 92, 95 (1871).

[3] Attorney-General v. Detroit Common Council, 58 Mich. 217 (1885).

[4] Commonwealth v. Howe, 144 Mass. 145 (1887),— upon an indictment for casting more than one ballot, contrary to Pub. Sts. c. 7, § 57.

[5] See R. S. § 5515; Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 379 (1879).

[6] A. S. gebann: L. L. bandum, bannum, a proclamation. Compare ABANDON; CONTRABAND.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 439.

[2] F. banc: L. bancus, a bench.

[3] Pulley v. Municipality No. 2, 18 La. 537 (1841); Stone v. City of Augusta, 46 Me. 127 (1858); Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 415-16 (1851); Houghton v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 372 (1877); Halsey v. McCormick, 13 N. Y. 296 (1855).

[4] See Rominger v. Keyes, 73 Ind. 377 (1881).

[5] Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. 147-48 (1845). Wayne, J.

upon mortgage, pawn, or other security, and, at a still later period, to issue notes of their own intended as a circulating currency and a medium of exchange instead of gold and silver. Modern bankers frequently exercise any two or even all three of these functions; but it is still true that an institution prohibited from exercising more than one of them is a bank, in the strictest commercial sense.[1]

Bank; banker; banking. A banker is one who makes merchandise of money.[2]

"Banking," in its largest sense, includes the business of receiving deposits, loaning money, dealing in coin, bills of exchange, etc., and issuing paper money.[3]

In statutes "bank" usually designates an incorporated institution, and "banker" an unincorporated association exercising "banking privileges."[3]

The business of banking, as defined by law and custom, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand, intended to circulate as money where the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; making loans of money on collateral security; buying and selling bills of exchange; negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, State and national, and municipal and other corporations.[4]

In Massachusetts "bank" applies to institutions incorporated for banking purposes, not to offices kept by individuals or copartnerships doing such banking business as they have been authorized to do.[5]

The term "banker" includes all the business of a money-changer.[6]

Having a place of business where deposits are received and paid out on checks and where money is loaned upon security is the substance of the business of a banker.[7] See MERCHANT.

The terms bank and banker include any person, firm, or company having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order; or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes; or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or for sale.[1]

At common law the right of banking belongs to individuals, and is exercisable at pleasure.[2]

Bankable. Receivable as the equivalent of cash at a bank; receivable for discount by a bank: as, a bankable or non-bankable bill, or other paper.

Bank for savings; savings bank. A bank of deposit for the accumulation of small savings belonging to the industrious and thrifty.[3]

A bank for the receipt of small sums deposited by the poorer class of persons for accumulation at interest.[4]

An institution formed for the purpose of receiving deposits of money for the benefit of the depositors investing the same, accumulating the profit or interest thereof, paying such profit or interest to the depositor, or retaining the same for his greater security, and, further, of retaining the deposit itself.[5]

The primary relation of a depositor is that of a creditor and beneficiary of a trust. In case of insolvency, depositors stand as other creditors, with equal rights to be paid ratably out of the estate.[6]

National bank; national banking association. An institution, created under United States law, for banking purposes, as distinguished from a bank organized under the law of a State[7] — a State bank.

An association may be formed by any number of persons not less than five. They sign "articles of association," and acknowledge an "organization certificate" which states the name assumed, the place where operations are to be carried on, the amount of capital stock and the number of shares thereof, the names and residences of the shareholders, and the shares held by each. Upon filing in the office of the comptroller of the currency these documents, the [1] Oulton v. German Savings, &c. Institution, 17 Wall. 118-19 (1872), cases, Clifford, J.; Bank for Savings v. The Collector, 3 id. 513-14 (1865). See Rominger v. Keyes, 73 Ind. 377 (1881).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 475.

[3] Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 31-32 (1853), Bartley, C. J.; 16 How. 416; 14 Bankr. Reg. 90; 39 La. An. 581.

[4] Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 156 (1887), Matthews, J.

[5] May v. Butterworth, 106 Mass. 76 (1870); 106 id. 513.

[6] Hinckley v. Belleville, 43 Ill. 168 (1867).

[7] Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 710 (1875), Hunt, J. Act 3 March, 1865: 13 St. L. 209, 472.

[1] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 115: R. S. § 3407; Selden v. Equitable Trust Co., 94 U. S. 490-92 (1876).

[2] Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 595 (1839). As to responsibility for correspondents and notaries, see 20 Am. Law Rev. 889-901 (1886), cases.

[3] Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 161 (1887), Matthews, J.

[4] [Bank for Savings v. The Collector, 3 Wall. 513 (1865): McCollough's Com. Dict. 146. See also Johnson v. Ward, 2 Bradw. 274 (1878).

[5] Commonwealth v. Reading Savings Bank, 133 Mass. 19, 21-23 (1882), Devens, J.

[6] See People v. Mechanics' Sav. Inst., 92 N. Y. 9 (1883).

[7] See National Bank Act, 3 June, 1864; R. S. Tit. LXII, §§ 5133-5243.

association becomes, as from the date of the execution of its certificate of organization, a body corporate, empowered to used a corporate seal, have succession for twenty years, make contracts, sue and be sued, elect directors and appoint other officers; to prescribe, by the board of directors, by-laws, not inconsistent with law, for the conduct of general business, and the exercise of its privileges; "to exercise . . all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes." [1]

The name to be adopted is subject to approval by the comptroller.[2] No other bank or banker, except a savings bank authorized by Congress, may use the word "national" as a portion of its title.[3]

Any old association may become a national association by the name prescribed in its organization certificate — the articles of association and the organization certificate being executed by a majority of the directors, the certificate declaring that the owners of two-thirds of the capital stock have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to convert the institution into a national association. The shares may continue for the same amount; and the former directors may be continued in office, with full power to perfect the re-organization, until others are elected.[4] The certificate of the comptroller is conclusive as to the completeness of the organization.[5]

The re-organization of a State bank does not relieve it from its former liabilities: it remains substantially the same institution under another name.[6]

National banking associations constitute no part of the Government. Designating a bank as a depositary of public moneys does not change the character of its organization, or convert its managers into public officers, or render the Government liable for its acts.[7]

An association may exist with or without power to issue circulation.[8] To obtain circulating notes an association must deposit with the comptroller United States bonds, as security for the redemption of such notes as it may issue; whereupon, within limits, notes of various denominations may be furnished by the comptroller. Associations may be authorized to issue notes payable in gold.[9]

One hundred thousand dollars is the minimum capital allowed, except in places not exceeding 6,000 inhabitants, when, by consent of the comptroller, the capital may be $50,000. Where the population exceeds 50,000, the capital must be at least $200,000. This capital is divided into shares of $100 each, which are personalty. Fifty per centum must be paid before organization, and the rest in monthly installments of ten per centum each.[1]

The act of May 1, 1886 (24 St. L. 18), empowers an association to increase its capital stock, in accordance with existing laws, to any sum approved by the comptroller, by a vote of the holders of two-thirds of the stock, notwithstanding the limit fixed in the original articles of association. By a like vote an association may change its name and location, the latter not to be more than thirty miles distant from the former location, after the comptroller has certified his approval.

Title to a share of stock passes when the owner delivers his certificate to the purchaser with authority to transfer the share on the books of the bank.[2] See further STOCK, 3 (2).

A national bank may hold such realty as is necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of business; such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security for debts previously contracted; such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings; such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it — title in the last case not to be held longer than five years.[3]

The circuit courts of the United States have jurisdiction of all suits by or against national banks established in the district for which the court is held,[4] irrespective of the amount in controversy or the citizenship of the parties.[5] State courts of its locality have jurisdiction of suits brought by it.[6] It may be sued in a place in a State other than where it is established.[7]

A national bank may not loan or discount on the security of its own stock, except to prevent loss.[8]

A national bank may go into liquidation and be closed by a vote of the holders of two-thirds of its stock.[9] In case of failure to pay its notes, the comptroller may appoint a receiver to wind it up.[10]

The Government has no priority of demand against an insolvent bank.[11]

National banks being designed to aid the Government in the administration of an important branch of the public service, the States can exercise only such control over them as Congress may permit.[12]

[1] R. S. §§ 5133–36.
[2] R. S. § 5134.
[3] R. S. § 5243.
[4] R. S. §§ 5154–55.
[5] Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 679 (1876).
[6] Coffey v. Nat. Bank of Missouri, 46 Mo. 148 (1870).
[7] R. S. § 5133; Branch v. United States, 12 Ct. Cl. 281 (1876).
[8] National Currency Acts, 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 334 (1865).
[9] R. S. § 5185.

[1] See Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. 284 (1874).
[2] Johnston v. Laflin, 103 U. S. 800, 804 (1880).
[3] R. S. § 5137; 2 Dill. 371.
[4] R. S. § 629, par. 10; 3 Dill. 298; 8 Wall. 506.
[5] 19 Alb. Law J. 182.
[6] Bank of Bethel v. Pahquioque Bank, 14 Wall. 383 (1871); Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130 (1876); 101 Mass. 240.
[7] Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66 (1880).
[8] R. S. § 5136.
[9] R. S. § 5220; 5 Biss. 499.
[10] R. S. § 5234, cases; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 47–50 (1887).
[11] Cook County Nat. Bank v. United States, 107 U. S. 445 (1882).
[12] Farmers', &c. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 33–34 (1875). See Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533 (1869).

Bank-bill; bank-note. A promissory note, issued by a bank under authority of law, payable on demand to the bearer.

Bank-notes differ from ordinary promissory notes only in the recognition of them by general consent, and by the law to an extent, as a substitute and equivalent for legal money. In other respects they are governed by the rules applicable to promissory notes payable to bearer.[1] See CURRENT, 2.

Bank cashier. See CASHIER.

Bank check. See CHECK; EXCHANGE, 2.

Bank director. See DIRECTORS.

Bank president. See ABSTRACT, 1; APPLICATION, 2; DIRECTORS.

Has no power by virtue of his office to bind the bank in an unusual manner, or in any undertaking outside of its customary routine of business. While the directors, or usage, may confer upon him special power, the authority inherent in his position is very slight.[2]

See generally ACCOUNT, 1; ADVANCES; CHARTER, 2; CIRCULATION; COLLECTION; DEPOSIT, 2 (2); DISCOUNT, 2; FUNDS; MONEYED; RESERVE, 7; TAX, 2; USURY.

BANKRUPT.[3] A trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors.[4] See TRADER.

A person found, by the proper court, to be entitled or subject to have his property taken for distribution among his creditors, and he to be discharged from the legal obligation of past claims. In a loose sense, a person as to whose status such an adjudication may or would be made.

Bankrupt law. A law intended to secure the application of a debtor's effects to the payment of his debts, and to relieve him from the burden of them.[5]

Bankrupt system. The law, and the practice thereunder, respecting the division of a bankrupt's property among his creditors.

Bankruptcy. The status or condition of being a bankrupt; also, that branch of the law under which the assets of the estate of a bankrupt may be distributed among his creditors and he be discharged from the indebtedness.

Bankruptcy is a proceeding of an equitable nature — a sequestration of a debtor's property that the creditors may resort to, instead of to an ordinary suit at law or in equity.[1]

The object is equality of distribution of the assets among creditors not legally secured.[2] Another purpose, only second in importance to that, is speedy distribution of assets. Our statutes have been filled with provisions designed to secure the early discharge of the debtor and the speedy settlement of his estate.[3]

Bankrupt laws are for the benefit of the honest trader, his honest creditors, and public commerce.[4]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To establish . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." [5] See UNIFORM.

The English word "bankrupt" had its origin in incidents of trade. Whatever secondary or figurative meaning the word may have acquired, its primary and only legal meaning is that which confines it to traders. . . As a state of "insolvency" usually precedes "bankruptcy," it is not surprising that the two words should sometimes be confounded. Insolvency is the generic term, comprehending bankruptcy as a species. A man may be insolvent without becoming a bankrupt, or having capacity to become such; and a bankrupt may prove to be entirely solvent. Mere insolvency never makes one a bankrupt without the concurrence of some act tending to the injury of his creditors.[6]

The line of partition between bankrupt and insolvent laws is not so distinctly marked as to enable a person to say with precision what belongs exclusively to the one and not to the other class of laws. It is said that laws which merely liberate the person are insolvent laws, and those which discharge the contract are bankrupt laws. Another distinction, more uniformly observed, is, insolvent laws operate at the instance of an imprisoned debtor, bankrupt laws at the instance of a creditor.[7]

Still another feature of insolvent laws is, the debtor is not discharged from the legal obligation to pay demands in full: he remains subject to suits and executions on account of unoutlawed claims.[8]

Fraudulent bankruptcy. Bankruptcy in which the debtor has practiced, or attempted to practice, some fraud upon creditors; as by not disclosing all of his assets, or by creating an unlawful preference.[9]

---

[1] See James v. Rogers, 28 Ind. 451, 453 (1864).

[2] Wheat v. Bank of Louisville, Sup. Ct. Ky. (1887), cases. Same case, 27 Am. Law Reg. 52 (1888); id. 56–60, cases. See also 21 Cent. Law J. 144–46 (1885), cases.

[3] F. banque, a table or counter; route, trace, track: his "banque" was removed and no trace of it left,— 2 Bl. Com. 272. Ital. banca rotta, a broken bench: a money-changer's bench was broken up, on his failing in business,— Skeat. See 3 Story, 453.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 285, 471.

[5] Const. 269; 2 Bl. Com. 474, 476; 109 U. S. 536.

[1] Re Weitzel, 7 Biss. 290 (1876).

[2] International Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 406 (1879); Trimble v. Woodhead, 102 id. 650 (1880).

[3] Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 346–47 (1874), Miller, J.; Jenkins v. International Bank, 106 U. S. 575–76 (1882); R. S. § 5057.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 472, 475.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 4.

[6] Sackett v. Andross, 5 Hill, 343–44, 342 (N. Y., 1843), Bronson, J. See also 41 Conn. 505; 2 Bened. 203.

[7] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 194 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[8] Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 222 (1869).

[9] See 4 Bl. Com. 156.

Private bankruptcy. Has been applied to cases of composition with creditors — resort to court for a discharge being thereby obviated.[1]

Voluntary bankruptcy. That in which the debtor avails himself of the law. Involuntary or compulsory bankruptcy. In which the debtor, by proceedings instituted by one or more creditors, is judicially decided to be bankrupt.

A case of voluntary bankruptcy is in the nature of a suit by the debtor against his creditors.[2]

Act of bankruptcy. An act by a debtor which exposes him to adverse proceedings in bankruptcy.

Under the Act of March 2, 1867, amended by Acts of June 22, 1874, and of July 26, 1876, acts of bankruptcy were certain acts done by a debtor six months before an adjudication was sought: as,— (1) departing from the State to defraud creditors; (2) remaining absent with that intent; (3) concealing himself to avoid service of process; (4) concealing or removing property to prevent its being attached, taken, or sequestered; (5) assigning or giving away property or rights, to delay, defraud, or hinder creditors; (6) being held in custody or imprisoned seven days on account of a claim over one hundred dollars; (7) making, in contemplation of insolvency, a transfer of property, confessing a judgment, procuring or suffering property to be taken on process, with intent to prefer a creditor or to defeat or delay the operation of the bankrupt law; (8) for a bank, banker, broker, merchant, trader, manufacturer, or miner, fraudulently to stop payment of commercial paper, or not to resume payment thereof, for fourteen days; (9) for a bank or banker to fail to pay a depositor within forty days.[3]

A debtor could have a jury trial upon any alleged act of bankruptcy.

Foreigners were exempt from the law; also, a citizen whose provable debts were less than three hundred dollars.

Proceedings were begun in the district court, by petition with annexed schedules of debts and assets. This petition was referred to the "register" — an auxiliary in matters of administration,— who ascertained whether the debts were above two hundred and fifty dollars; if so, the debtor was adjudged a bankrupt and his estate ipso facto became vested in the register. There then issued a warrant to the marshal to notify the creditors. In from ten to ninety days the creditors met and nominated an assignee, who, with his sureties, was to be approved by the court; whereupon, the register deeded the estate to the assignee, who proceeded to settle the business.[1]

Upon the commission of an act of bankruptcy the debtor's property becomes a common fund for the payment of his debts, he losing all right of proprietorship over it.[2]

When there exists no purpose to defraud, delay, or prefer, and the value of the estate remains unimpaired, before proceedings are begun the debtor can deal with the property.

Filing a petition is an attachment and an injunction — a caveat to all the world. After that, a person deals with the insolvent at his peril.[3]

A transfer designed to prevent equality of distribution, made within four months before petition filed, was held to be a fraud.[4] So was giving a note confessing judgment. But in all such cases the intention of the debtor was made the test.[5]

Property illegally transferred was recoverable by the assignee.[6]

Excepting attachments made within a prescribed period, and fraudulent dispositions, the assignee took title subject to all equities, liens, or incumbrances — in the same plight and condition as when the debtor held it.[6]

Under the acts of Congress a voluntary bankrupt was to pay thirty per centum of the provable claims, unless less was accepted by one-fourth in number and one-third in value of the creditors. A majority in number and three-fourths in value could accept a composition.

A discharge, which was a matter of favor, could be had one year after adjudication, an order having first been issued to such creditors as proved debts, to appear and show cause, if they knew of any, why the discharge should not be granted. And a discharge which had been granted could be annulled, within two years, for fraud undiscovered at the time of the discharge.

A discharge is no bar to an action on a judgment recovered after the discharge, in a suit commenced before the bankruptcy, pending when the discharge was granted, and upon a debt provable in bankruptcy.[7]

A United States law supersedes a State law.[8] But

[1] Exp. Vere, 19 Ves. 408 (1812).

[2] Wilson v. City Bank of St. Paul, 17 Wall. 481–88 (1873); United States v. Fox, 95 U. S. 672 (1877).

[3] R. S. § 5021, cases.

[1] See R. S. Tit. LXI: §§ 4972–5132.

[2] 2 Kent, 389; 2 Bl. Com. 474, 476.

[3] International Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 406 (1879).

[4] Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 553 (1876), cases.

[5] Clarion Bank v. Jones, 21 Wall. 325 (1874); Clark v. Iselin, ib. 373 (1874); Watson v. Taylor, ib. 381 (1874); Little v. Alexander, ib. 500 (1874).

[6] Yeatman v. Savings Institution, 95 U. S. 764 (1877); Stewart v. Platt, 101 id. 738 (1879); 2 Bl. Com. 485.

[7] Dimock v. Revere Copper Co., 117 U. S. 559 (1886). See also Boynton v. Ball, 121 id. 457 (1887). See generally as to discharge, Laidley v. Cummings, 83 Ky. 606 (1886); Fuller v. Pease, 144 Mass. 390 (1887).

[8] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 196 (1819); Ogden v. Saunders, 12 id. 213 (1827); Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. 228–31 (1863).

upon the repeal of a Federal law, a previously enacted State law becomes operative again.[1]

The convention which framed the Constitution had in view the English system.[2]

Bankrupt laws were passed by Congress in 1800, 1841, and 1867, but repealed, in each instance, after a comparatively brief operation. That of 1867, with its amendments, was repealed by act of June 7, 1878, the repeal taking effect September 1, 1878, without effect upon pending cases.[3]

Such laws have been in force in England for more than three centuries. They had their origin in the Roman law.[4]

See further ARS, Alienum; CESSIO; COMPOSITION, 3; CONTEMPLATION; DEATH, Civil; HÆREDITAS, Damnosa; INSOLVENCY; PROCESS, 1, Legal.

BANNS. See BAN.

BAPTISTS, SEVENTH-DAY. See SUNDAY.

BAR. 1. A particular portion of a court room.

Named from the space inclosed by two bars or rails: one of which separated the judge's bench from the rest of the room; the other shut off both the bench and the area for lawyers engaged in trials from the space allotted to suitors, witnesses, and others.

Such persons as appeared as speakers (advocates, or counsel) before the court, were said to be "called to the bar," that is, privileged so to appear, speak and otherwise serve in the presence of the judges as "barristers." The corresponding phrase in the United States is "admitted to the bar."

Proceedings in open court are said to take place "at the bar of the court," or simply "at bar." The particular case being argued is the "case at bar;" and a person on trial for a crime is "the prisoner at the bar."

The figurative expression "before the bar of conscience" is not uncommon.

In still another sense "the bar" denotes the members of the legal profession; as in speaking of the bar of a county, of a State, of the United States. Whence, also, are "bar associations," which consist of lawyers united for the purpose of furthering the interests of their profession.

Barrister. A counselor, learned in the law, who pleads before courts, and undertakes the advocacy or defense of causes generally.

Inner barristers. Queen's counsel, admitted within the bar, in seats specially reserved for them.[1]

Outer or utter barristers. Junior counsel, who sit outside the bar. Compare SERGEANT.

Disbar. To expel an attorney from membership in the legal profession. See further ATTORNEY.

2. In a somewhat general way a public bar may be defined as a counter, table, shelf, or other similar device, designed and used for the purpose of facilitating the sale and delivery of liquors there kept to any one who may apply for them, to be then and there drunk, not in connection with meals, lunches or food.[2]

A lunch counter would not be such a bar merely because sales of liquor only are sometimes made there.[3]

3. An impediment; an obstacle. Whence the verbs "bar" and "debar," to prevent, cut off, defeat.

Plea in bar. A plea intended to overthrow an action; a plea which sets up an absolute or peremptory defense, as, payment.

Special plea in bar. New matter avoiding the inference of law on facts previously stated.

Temporary bar. A plea in bar which is effectual for a limited period only: as, "administered fully," until more assets come to hand.[3]

BARBED WIRE. See FENCE.

BARE. Compare NAKED.

BARGAIN.[4] 1, n. A mutual contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell goods or lands, and the other to buy them.[5]

Any mutual undertaking.

"Bargain" more prominently, perhaps, than "agreement," brings into view the mutuality of a contract.[6]

2, v. To transfer in pursuance of a bargain; as, "to grant, bargain, and sell."

Bargainer. He who makes a bargain.

Bargainee. He who is to receive property under the contract of a bargain; the grantee in a deed of bargain and sale. See EARNEST; GRANT, 2: OFFER, 1.

[1] Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 209 (1886).

[2] Nelson v. Carland, 1 How. 272, 277 (1843).

[3] See the Lowell Bill, as to partners, 19 Am. Law Rev. 82 (1885).

[4] Canada South. R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 536 (1883).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 26; The Nation, Dec. 20, 1883, No. 964.

[2] Commonwealth v. Rogers, 135 Mass. 539 (1883), Colburn, J.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; 1 Flip. 4; 60 Md. 125; 1 Oreg. 48.

[4] F. bargaigner, to chaffer: L. L. barca, a bark for merchandise.

[5] Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. *360 (1809), Parsons, C. J.; Packard v. Richardson, 17 id. *131-32 (1821).

[6] Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 85, 90 (1826).

Bargain and sale. A contract whereby the bargainer, for some pecuniary consideration, bargains and sells, that is, contracts to convey, land to the bargainee.[1]

Also used of transfers of personalty.

A contract to convey, for valuable consideration, by any words sufficient to raise a use in the bargainee.[2]

At common law, land can not pass without livery, q. v. In this contract the bargain vests the use, and the Statute of Uses then vests, that is, completes, the possession.[1]

The force of that statute is exhausted in transferring the legal title in fee-simple to the bargainee.[2] See USE, 3.

In a "bargain and sale" of personalty the thing becomes the buyer's the moment the contract is made, whether delivered or not. In an "executory agreement," the thing remains the property of the vendor till the contract is executed.[4]

Catching a bargain. An agreement to purchase an expectant estate at an inadequate price.

Applied to heirs dealing with their expectancies, and to reversioners and remainder-men dealing with property already vested in them, but of which the enjoyment is future, and is, therefore, apt to be underestimated by the giddy, the necessitous, the improvident, and the young.[5]

In most cases have concurred deceit and illusion as to other persons. The father, ancestor, or other relative, from whom was the expectation of the estate, has been kept in the dark. The expectant has been kept from disclosing his circumstances, and resorting to them for advice and relief. This misleads the ancestor, who has been induced to leave his estate, not to his heir or family, but to artful persons who have divided the spoil beforehand.[6]

To maintain parental and quasi parental authority, to prevent the waste of family estates, and to protect the heedless and necessitous from the designs of rapacity, relief is afforded in equity. The purchaser must establish not merely that there is no fraud, but "make good the bargain," that is, show that a fair and adequate (q. v.) consideration has been paid.[7] Compare Unconscionable Bargain.

Strike a bargain. To shake hands in attestation of an agreement; also, to come to an agreement.

From the old custom of shaking hands as necessary to bind a bargain.[8]

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 338; Slifer v. Beates, 9 S. & R. *177 (1822).

[2] [4 Kent, 495.

[3] Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 282 (1866), cases.

[4] Benj. Sales, §§ 308, 310; Smith, Contr. 331; Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 568 (1829).

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 337.

[6] Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. 157, 155 (1750), Hardwicke, Ld. C.

[7] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 335–36.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 448.

Time bargain. A contract for the sale of stocks, provisions, or other commodity or article of merchandise, at a certain price on a future day, the vendor himself intending to purchase the thing, which is the subject of the proposed sale, before the day for the delivery has arrived. See further WAGER, 2.

Unconscionable bargain. Such bargain as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept, on the other,—being an inequitable and unconscientious bargain.[1]

A bargain of so unconscionable a nature and of such gross inequality as naturally leads to the presumption of fraud, imposition, or undue influence.[2]

A court of equity is not bound to shut its eyes to the evident character of a transaction where its aid has been sought to carry into effect an unconscionable bargain, but it will leave the party to his remedy at law; as, in salvage cases.[3]

BARGE. See SHIP, 2; VESSEL.

BARK. See LITERA, Qui hæret, etc.

BARN. See ARSON; BELONG; CURTILAGE.

Within the meaning of a statute against arson, the building need not be used for storing provender.[4]

The word may include a building mainly used for storing tobacco.[5]

BARON.[6] 1. The man—one able to bear arms; one bound to render service to the king.[7] See CURTILAGE, 1.

2. A member of the nobility in the fifth and lowest degree.[7]

3. A judge of the court of exchequer.

"Barons of the realm" only were formerly appointed to the office;[8] as, "Park, B."

4. A lord; a husband.

Baron and femme. Man and woman; husband and wife.[9]

Covert-baron. One under coverture; a wife.[10] See COVERTURE.

[1] Chesterfield v. Janssen, ante.

[2] [1 Story, Eq. § 244.

[3] Mississippi, &c. R. Co. v. Cromwell, 91 U. S. 643 (1875). See Post v. Jones, 19 How. 160 (1856); The Emulous, 1 Sumn. 210 (1832); The Brooks, 17 F. R. 548 (1883); 16 id. 144; 4 Del. Ch. 198; 27 Alb. L. J. 4 (1883).

[4] State v. Smith, 28 Iowa, 568 (1870).

[5] Ratekin v. State, 26 Ohio St. 420 (1875).

[6] L. L. baro, varo: L. vir, a man,—Webster. Ger. bar, a man: beran, to carry,—Skeat.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 398–99.

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 44, 55–56.

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 432.

[10] 1 Bl. Com. 442.

BARRATRY.[1] 1. In maritime law, an act committed by the master or mariners of a ship, for some unlawful or fraudulent purpose, contrary to their duty to the owners, whereby the latter sustain injury.[2]

Consists in willful acts of the master or mariners, done for some unlawful or fraudulent purpose, contrary to their duty to the owners of the vessel.[3]

The act must not be accidental, nor caused by negligence — unless that is so gross as to amount to evidence of fraud. The intention need not be to promote one's own benefit. Any willful act of known criminality, or of malversation, operating to the prejudice of the owner, is barratry.[5]

All definitions agree that fraud is a constituent part of the act.[6]

2. In criminal law, common barratry is the offense of frequently exciting and stirring up suits and quarrels, either at law or otherwise.[7]

The proof must show at least three instances of offending.[8]

"A common barrator is a common mover or stirrer up or maintainer of suits, quarrels, or parties, either in courts or in the country; in the country in three manners: in disturbance of the peace; in taking or detaining of the possession of houses, lands, or goods, etc., which are in question or controversy, not only by force, but also by subtlety and deceit, and for the most part in suppression of truth and right; by false invention, and sowing of calumny, rumors, and reports, whereby discord and disquiet arise between neighbors."[9]

We have here strife and contention, and deceit or fraud, growing out of the compound origin and synonymous uses of the word. In the sense of "strife and contention," the word was used in connection with policies of insurance as late as the middle of the last century.[10]

BARREN. See LEVY; RENT; TRUST, 1.

BARRISTER. See BAR, 1.

BARTER.[1] A contract by which goods are exchanged for goods.[2]

The exchange of one commodity or article of property for another.[3]

The consideration, instead of being paid in money, as in the case of a sale, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of valuation.[4]

An agent empowered to sell cannot barter; and the principal may recover from an innocent transferee.[5] See EXCHANGE, 1; SALE.

BAS-RELIEF. See DESIGN, 2.

BASE. Inferior; of low degree.

Base animal. An animal which is unfit for food. See ANIMAL.

Base coin. Debased coin.[6]

Base fee. An estate in fee that ends whenever an annexed qualification requires it.[7] See FEE, 1.

Base services. Fit only for a person of servile rank.[8]

Base tenant. One bound to servile service.[9] See FEUD.

BASE BALL. See GAME, 2.

BASTARD.[10] One that is not only begotten, but born, out of lawful matrimony.[11]

Such child as is not born either in lawful wedlock, or within a competent time after its determination.[12]

One begotten and born out of lawful wedlock.[13]

The test is whether the husband of the woman who gives birth to the child is its father.[14]

In Virginia, one born out of wedlock, lawful or unlawful, or not within a competent time after the coverture is determined; or, if born out of wedlock, whose parents do not afterward intermarry, and the father acknowledges the child; or who is born in wedlock when procreation by the husband is for any cause impossible.[15]

Bastardize. To make out to be a bastard, an illegitimate or natural child.

---

[1] Sp. barateria, deceit, fraud,—3 Pet. *330.

[2] Marcardier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 8 Cranch, 49 (1814), Story, J.

[3] Lawton v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Cush. 511-12 (1848), Shaw, C. J.; Atkinson v. Great West. Ins. Co., 65 N. Y. 536-40 (1875), cases; 2 Wash. 66.

[4] Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. *230 (1830).

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 134.

[6] Commonwealth v. M'Culloch, 15 Mass. *229 (1818); Com. monwealth v. Tubbs, 1 Cush. 8 (1848).

[7] The Case of Barratry, 8 Coke, *72 (1612).

[8] Atkinson v. Great Western Ins. Co., 4 Daly, 16-20 (1871), Daly, C. J.

[1] F. barat, traffic.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 446.

[3] Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418 (1881), English, C. J.

[4] Washington County v. Thompson, 12 Bush, 241 (1877), Cofer, J.

[5] Guerreiro v. Peile, 3 B. & Ald. 616 (1820).

[6] 6 Wheat. 333.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 109.

[8] [2 Bl. Com. 62, 61.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 148.

[10] F. bastard: fils de bast, son of a packsaddle — muleteers made beds of their saddles,— Skeat.

[11] 1 Bl. Com. 454.

[12] 2 Bl. Com. 247.

[13] 2 Kent, 208.

[14] Wilson v. Babb, 18 S. C. 69-70 (1882), Simpson, C. J.

[15] Smith v. Perry, 80 Va. 570 (1885), Lacy, J.

Bastardy. The offense of begetting an illegitimate child; also, the condition of being an illegitimate child — illegitimacy.

Bastardy process. The statutory mode of proceeding against the putative father of an illegitimate child, to secure maintenance for the child.

Bastardy bond. The obligation entered into by such father with the guardians of the poor, conditioned for the payment of the lying-in expenses, maintenance of the child, and, perhaps, such costs as may have been incurred and such fine as has been imposed.[1]

At common law there was no legal liability upon the father to support his bastard child. Now, at the instance of the mother, he can be made support it, by a "bastardy proceeding."[2]

A bastard is a filius nullius, son of nobody, or filius populi, son of the people. He has no inheritable blood,— has no heir except of his own body. He may, however, take by bequest or devise.[3]

He has a right to maintenance; his settlement is the same as his mother's at his birth; he takes her name, but he may acquire a name by reputation.[4]

Once a marriage is proven, nothing can impugn the legitimacy of issue short of proof of facts showing it to be impossible that the husband could be the father.[5]

By the civil law, and statutes in many States, the subsequent marriage of the parents legitimates children born prior thereto. This seems to be the law in Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Vermont, and Virginia.[6]

See ABANDON, 2 (2); ACCESS; ADULTERINE; CONCEAL, 4; FILIATION; MARRIAGE; PREGNANCY.

BATTEL.[7] Trial by combat or duel.

Also called wager of battel, battle, battaile.

In the nature of an appeal to Providence, under an apprehension and hope that Heaven would give the victory to him who had the right.

Introduced by the Conquerer; and used in the court-martial, or court of chivalry and honor, in appeals of felony, and in writs of right — the last and most solemn decision of real property.[8]

Recognized as the law of the land as late as 1818, in the case of Ashford v. Thornton.[9] Abolished by statute 59 Geo. III (1819), c. 46.[1] Compare ORDEAL: WAGER, 1.

BATTERY.[2] The unlawful beating of another.[3]

Any unlawful touching of the person of another, either by the aggressor or by any person or thing set in motion by him.[4]

The least touching of another's person willfully, or in anger, is a battery. The law cannot draw the line between different degrees of violence, and therefore prohibits the first and lowest stage of it — every man's person being sacred and no other having a right to meddle with it in the slightest manner.[5]

In assessing damages the degree of violence is taken into account. See BEAT.

Every "battery" includes an "assault." The two offenses are joined in indictments, and the assault alone may be proved. Whence "assault and battery," which is — simple, when a mere touching or beating is intended; aggravated, when grievous bodily harm is inflicted, as by breaking a limb or disfiguring the face; felonious, when death is designed, or serious wounding with intent to commit a felony, when the end sought is a felony, at common law or by statute.[6] See ASSAULT.

While "battery" includes "assault," it does not include "an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit bodily harm."[7]

A battery may be lawful or justifiable, or unlawful. It is lawful: (1) when committed under authority, as by an officer in order to preserve the peace, or by a parent, master, teacher, or military officer, each of whom may correct moderately; (2) when in self-defense; that is, of self, wife, husband, child, parent, servant; (3) when in defense of one's own goods or possession. It is unlawful: (1) when it originates in malice — is committed in an angry, spiteful, insolent, or rude manner; (2) when it is the result of censurable carelessness.[8]

A trespasser who uses force may be summarily ejected. A person assailed need not wait till a blow has been dealt him. At the same time resistance must not exceed the degree of necessary defense — for it is the law that punishes. Any resistance in the offender to justifiable apprehension becomes a new battery.[9]

Whatever is attached to the person partakes of its inviolability: as, the skirt of the coat or dress, an object in the hand.

---

[1] See Gleason v. Commissioners, 30 Kan. 493 (1883).

[2] Stowers v. Hollis, 83 Ky. 549 (1886).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 459; 2 id. 247-49; Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. 553, 592 (1860); Gaines v. New Orleans, 6 Wall. 648 (1867); Smith v. Du Bose, Sup. Ct. Ga. (1887): 36 Alb. Law J. 344-48.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 459.

[5] Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. 589, 598 (1848). See also 18 Cent. Law J. 262-68, 305-7 (1884), cases.

[6] See 2 Kent, 210-14.

[7] L. batuere, to strike, beat.

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 337; 4 id. 346; Coke, Litt. § 294 b.

[9] 1 Barn. & Ald. 405.

[1] See generally United States v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 68 (1834), Story, J.

[2] L. batuere, to beat.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 120.

[4] 1 Saund. Pl. & Ev. *141; Kirland v. State, 43 Ind. 153 (1873); 3 Cooley, Bl. Com. 120, note.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 120; Johnson v. State, 17 Tex. 517 (1856).

[6] See 4 Bl. Com. 216; 13 Allen, 317; 17 F. R. 266.

[7] People v. Helbing, 61 Cal. 621 (1882).

[8] See 3 Bl. Com. 120-21.

[9] See 2 Bishop, Cr. L. § 561.

To strike the horse which another person rides or drives is an assault. The owner is liable for a battery when his horse, left near a sidewalk, bites or kicks a passer-by.

The remedy in a civil court is an action of trespass vi et armis for damages; in a criminal court, indictment for assault and battery for the public wrong.[1]

While it is no defense to a civil action for an assault and battery that the acts complained of were committed in a fight engaged in by mutual consent, such consent may go in mitigation of the damages.[2]

See ABET; ARREST, 2; DEFENSE, 1; DURESS; FORCE; MAYHEM, Molliter; INJURY; PROVOCATION; WOUND.

BATTURE. "Accretion," which is the imperceptible augmentation of the soil on the shore of a stream, is called "alluvion" and sometimes "batture."[3]

A marine term, denoting a bottom of sand, stone or rock mixed together, and rising toward the surface of the water. From the French battre, to beat: beaten by the water. . . An elevation of the bed of a river, under the surface of the water; also, sometimes, the same elevation of the bank, when it has risen above the surface of the water or is as high as the land on the outside of the bank.[4] See ACCRETION.

BAWD.[5] One who procures opportunities for persons of opposite sexes to cohabit in an illicit manner.[6]

Bawdy-house. A house of ill-fame; a house kept for the resort and unlawful convenience of lewd people of both sexes; a house resorted to for purposes of lewdness and prostitution.[7]

The prosecution having shown that the defendant is the keeper of a house alleged to be a common bawdy-house, testimony as to the general reputation of the house, of the persons who frequent it, and of the defendant, is admissible, as tending to show the real character of the house.[7]

Keeping a bawdy-house is indictable as a common nuisance at common law.[8] See HOUSE, 1, Of ill-fame; PROSTITUTE.

BAY-WINDOW. See LIGHTS, Ancient.

A jut or bay-window which is maintained without authority of law, which encroaches on the public highway, and is prejudicial to the interests of the community and of the rights of individual property owners, may be declared a public nuisance and its continuance restrained. As, a window built in the second story of a house, sixteen feet above the sidewalk and projecting three and a half feet beyond the property or building line.[1]

BE IT ENACTED. See ACT, 3.

BEACH. The land, between the lines of high and low water, over which the tide ebbs and flows; synonymous with shore, strand, flat.[2]

A deed of land described as bounded "on the beach" does not convey the shore below high-water mark, unless this boundary is controlled by other parts of the description.

Taking sea-weed from an uninclosed beach, and selling stones therefrom from time to time, may operate to disseize the true owner.[3]

BEACON. See COMMERCE; WRECK.

BEANS. See GRAIN.

BEAR. See DATE; INTEREST, 2 (3).

BEARER. He who bears or carries a thing; he who presents for payment a bill, check, or note, transferable by delivery.

A note payable to "A or bearer" is negotiable without indorsement, and payment may be demanded by any bearer as the person whom the maker promised to pay. The transferrer is not liable except on failure of the consideration. The holder is presumed to be owner for value; but any circumstance of suspicion, as theft of the instrument by a former holder, may require the present holder to prove that he gave value for the paper.[4]

The bona fide purchaser of a note payable to bearer, but stolen from the rightful holder, may recover the amount of it from the maker; otherwise, where the note is stolen directly from the maker.[5]

A note payable to bearer is said to be assignable by delivery: but really there is no "assignment" at all. The paper passes by mere delivery, the holder never makes title through any assignment, but claims as bearer. The note is an original promise by the maker to pay any person who shall become bearer; it is, therefore, payable to any and every person who successively holds the note bona fide, not by virtue of an assignment of the promise, but by the original, direct promise moving from the maker.[6]

See BLANK, 2; BOND; COUPON; NEGOTIATE, 2.

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 121; 4 id. 216; Kirland v. State, 43 Ind. 146-56 (1873), cases; State v. Davis, 1 Hill, S. C., 46 (1833).

[2] Barholt v. Wright, Sup. Ct. Ohio (1887), cases: 12 N. E. Rep. 185; 36 Alb. Law J. 3 (1887), cases.

[3] [Zeller v. Yacht Club, 34 La. An. 888 (1882), Todd, J.; 4 Hall's Law J. 518; 12 F. R. 295; 15 Wall. 650.

[4] Morgan v. Livingston, 3 Mart. 111 (1819), Martin, J.; Ib. 11. See Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 436 (1841).

[5] F. baud, gay, wanton: Ger. bald, bold, free.

[6] Dyer v. Morris, 4 Mo. 216 (1835).

[7] State v. Boardman, 64 Me. 529 (1874); McAlister v. Clark, 33 Conn. 92 (1865); State v. Hand, 7 Iowa, 411 (1858); Harwood v. People, 26 N. Y. 191 (1863); State v. Brunell, 29 Wis. 436 (1872), cases.

[8] Martin v. Stillwell, 13 Johns. *275 (1816).

[1] Reimer's Appeal, 100 Pa. 182, 190 (1882); Commonwealth v. Harris, 10 W. N. C. 10-15 (1881),— Philadelphia cases.

[2] [Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray, 328 (1855); 41 Conn. 14; 15 Me. 237; 48 id. 68.

[3] Litchfield v. Ferguson, 141 Mass. 97 (1886).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 468; 2 Pars. Contr. 942; 14 Wall. 296; 17 Blatch. 2.

[5] Branch v. Commissioners, 80 Va. 422-34 (1885), cases.

[6] Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mas. 252 (1817), Story, J.; Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U. S. 592-98 (1882), cases; Chickering v. Carpenter, ib. 666 (1882).

BEARING. See DATE; INTEREST, 2 (3).

BEAST. See ANIMAL.

Beasts of the plow. An ancient expression referring to animals employed in the ordinary uses of husbandry, or other actual labor in a lawful and useful industry.[1] See DISTRESS (3); HORSE.

BEAT. In law, not merely to whip, wound, or hurt; includes any unlawful imposition of the hand or arm.[2]

To commit a battery,[3] q. v.

BED. 1. The right of connubial intercourse; cohabitation, q. v. Whence bed and board. See DIVORCE.

2. The bed of a river is that soil so usually covered by water as to be distinguishable from the banks, by the character of the soil, or vegetation, or both, produced by the common presence and action of flowing water.[4] Compare BANK, 1.

BEE. See ANIMAL.

BEER. See LIQUOR; PROHIBITION, 2.

BEEVES. See NEAT.

BEFORE. See AFTER; ANTE; CORAM; ON.

Before the twenty-eighth of a month means by the twenty-seventh, at least.[5]

Before a given day excludes that day.[6]

Before the court. When a matter, by regular proceeding, is made to engage or receive the direct attention of a court, for the purpose of decision, it is said to be or to be pending "before the court." See DECISION; DICTUM.

A certificate by a clerk that a complaint was sworn to "before said court" raises a presumption that this was done in court.[7]

Before trial. May mean before pleading to the merits,[8] — implies that a suit has been commenced.[9]

BEGGING. See VAGRANT.

The act of a cripple who stands upon a sidewalk and in silence holds out his hand for money from passers-by is "begging for alms."[10]

BEGIN. See AFFIRM, 1; AT, 2; RUN, 5.

[1] Somers v. Emerson, 58 N. H. 49 (1876).

[2] Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 511 (1878).

[3] State v. Beverlin, 30 Kan. 613 (1883).

[4] Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. 427, 381, 416 (1851), Curtis, J.

[5] Metropolitan Nat. Bank of New York v. Morehead, 38 N. J. E. 500 (1884).

[6] Ward v. Walters, 62 Wis. 44 (1885).

[7] Tacey v. Noyes, 143 Mass. 451 (1887).

[8] Winship v. People, 51 Ill. 298 (1869).

[9] Horner v. Pilkington, 11 Ind. 449 (1858).

[10] Re Haller, 3 Abb. N. Cas. 65 (1877).

BEHALF. See INTEREST, 2 (1).

A witness called by a party testifies "in his behalf" though he testifies against his interest.[1]

BEHAVIOR. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one's self; personal carriage and demeanor; bearing, with respect to propriety, morals, and the requirements of law.

Disorderly behavior. See CONTEMPT; DISORDER, 2; ORDER, 4.

Good behavior. Bearing which conforms to the law.

All persons who are not of good fame may be bound over to good behavior — an expression of so great latitude as to leave much to be determined by the discretion of the magistrate.[2] See SUSPICION, 3.

Security to be of good behavior includes more than security to keep the peace; it is demanded with greater caution, and the recognizance is more easily forfeited.[3] See PEACE, 1.

Misbehavior. Improper, unlawful conduct.

A verdict will be set aside for gross misbehavior in the jury, the prevailing party, or his counsel; and an award will be set aside for misbehavior in the arbitrators or referee.[4]

A judge holds office for a specified term, if he shall "so long behave himself well." See TENURE, Of office.

Each house of Congress may punish its members for disorderly behavior.[5]

BEING. Compare IN, 3 (2), ESSE.

An allegation that liquor was sold to S. and W. M., "being" minors, shows with sufficient certainty that those persons were minors.[6]

BELIEF. Conviction of mind, founded on evidence, that a fact exists — that an act was done, that a statement is true.[6]

The difference between "belief" and "knowledge" consists in the degree of certainty. Things which do not make a deep impression on the memory may be said to leave a "belief." Knowledge is firm belief.[7]

"Between mere belief and knowledge there is a wide difference;" for example, as to whether a lode or vein of gold or silver exists in a claim proposed for a patent.[8]

The distinction between the two words has become important where the contents of a paper are to be verified as true to the knowledge of the affiant, ex-

[1] Richerson v. Sternburg, 65 Ill. 279 (1872).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 256; 1 Binn. 98, n.; 2 Yeates, 427.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 337; 4 id. 351.

[4] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 5, cl. 2.

[5] State v. Boucher, 59 Wis. 481 (1884).

[6] Giddens v. Mirk, 4 Ga. 369 (1848). See also State v. Grant, 76 Mo. 246 (1882).

[7] [Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray, 274 (1857), Shaw, C. J.; 9 Cal. 62.

[8] Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Reynolds, 124 U. S. 373 (1888), Field, J.

cept as to a matter stated on "information and belief," which he must state he believes to be true.[1]

That may be ground for "suspicion" which will not evidence "belief."[2]

While a person may have reason to believe and yet disbelieve, he cannot "verily believe" without having good reason in fact.[3]

The grounds of belief are: credulity, experience, probability, induction. Experience constitutes the basis of belief in human testimony. Aid is derived from the experience of others. Belief in such testimony is a fundamental principle of our moral nature. This is strengthened by corroborating circumstances. Probability is determined by experience and reasoning combined. Induction tests probability.[4]

See ANSWER, 3; CERTAINTY; CREDIT, 2; DECEIT; FRAUD; KNOWLEDGE, 1; SUPPOSE; SUSPICION.

BELLIGERENT. See WAR.

BELL-ROPE. See OBSTRUCT, 1.

BELLS. See NUISANCE.

BELONG. In statutes referring to inhabitancy, the poor, etc., designates the place of a person's legal settlement, not merely his place of residence.[5]

Belonging to. In the Pennsylvania statute defining arson, includes all structures (as, for example, a barn) so near a dwelling-house on the same premises as to endanger the safety of the house in case of fire.[6] See ACCESSORY; INCIDENT.

BELOW. Compare ABOVE; INFRA.

BENCH. The judge's seat in a court.

Also, the judges themselves as a tribunal or a professional class: as, the common or common pleas bench, the supreme bench, a full or partial bench. Compare BAR, 1.

King's or Queen's bench. The supreme court of common law in England, now merged into the High Court of Justice.

Abbreviated K. B., and Q. B.

The king in person used to sit in this court: in theory it was always held before the sovereign. During the reign of a queen it is called the "Queen's bench." In the time of Cromwell it was styled the "upper bench." It succeeded the aula regis, q. v. Although supposed to follow the person of the sovereign, it was in fact held at Westminster. It consisted formerly of a chief justice and four associate justices — the sovereign conservators of the peace. The jurisdiction of the court, which was originally criminal and included trespasses, in time included all personal common-law actions between subjects, and actions of ejectment. It had also supervisory power over inferior tribunals, magistrates, and corporations.[1]

Bencher. In England, a dignitary of the inns of court.

Each inn is presided over by a certain number of benchers who exercise the right of admitting candidates as members of their society and of ultimately calling them to the bar. They are selected from members who have distinguished themselves in their profession. They also exercise general supervision over the professional conduct of counselors who are members of the inn.[2]

Bench-warrant. Process of arrest issued against a person charged with a crime or a contempt of court.

1. A process issued against a person under indictment to bring him into court to answer the charge.

2. A process issued by a civil court for the apprehension of a person appearing to be guilty, under verified allegations, of an indictable civil injury; as, where a debtor, insolvent and believed to have defrauded or to be intending to defraud his creditors, is disposing of his effects or is about to remove with them from the jurisdiction.

The process may be issued by a judge on the bench (whence the name "bench" warrant), or by a judge at chambers.

The proceeding is interlocutory,—like a rule on a defendant to show cause why he should not be held to bail in an action ex contractu; and is limited to cases where there appears to be a strong presumption of fraud of some kind on one or more creditors. Hence, fraud is the matter to be alleged, controverted, and substantiated. The remedy is allowed without regard to the place where the fraud was perpetrated, as in actions of tort. The proceeding is not in the nature of a summary conviction, but simply an arrest for debt under the regulated supervision of a judge, instead of the arbitrary and badly controlled discretion of a party. Nor is the proceeding criminal: the fraud is treated as a private injury. The plaintiff files a preliminary affidavit showing, in at least general terms, probable cause to the satisfaction of the court. This affidavit also specifies the nature of the claim, whether a contract or not, and, that the amount of bail may be known, the amount of the claim. A hearing of the proofs is fixed, at which the defendant, who has been previously arrested and imprisoned or bailed, may deny all allegations and demand proof of the alleged facts.[3] See ATTACH, 2.

BENEFICE. A gratuitous donation, as, an estate by feudal tenure; also, an ecclesi-

[1] See Black v. Halstead, 39 Pa. 71 (1861); 56 id. 33; 67 id. 477; 79 id. 384; 81 id. 180; 82 id. 354.

[2] Commonwealth v. Lottery Tickets, 5 Cush. 374 (1850).

[3] Russell v. Ralph, 58 Wis. 332 (1881), cases.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. Ch. III.

[5] Reading v. Westport, 19 Conn. 564 (1849), Church, C. J.; 3 id. 467; 18 id. 425; 8 Vt. 45.

[6] Hill v. Commonwealth, 98 Pa. 195 (1881).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 41; 4 id. 265.

[2] Holthouse's Law Dict.

[3] Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. 520 (1859), Lowrie, C. J.; Act 12 July, 1842.

astical living or church preferment given or held for life.[1]

BENEFICIARY. One who is entitled to the benefit of a contract or of an estate held by another.

The word, though a little remote from the original meaning of the expression "cestui que trust," is more appropriate for one who is a trustee or fide-commissary.[2] See TRUST, Cestui, etc.

As a member of a beneficial society, see BENEFIT.

BENEFIT. Good, advantage; fruit, profit, use; aid.

As, in the expressions, assignment for the benefit of creditors, common or mutual benefit, benefit of a doubt, of clergy, of copyright, of a law. See BETTERMENT; USE, 2.

Only he for whose benefit a thing exists can complain of a non-recognition or abuse of his right; and he who retains the benefit of an act must bear the burden.[3] He who has enjoyed the fruit of an act cannot afterward deny the existence or validity of the act — as, that a bond is not valid,[4] that a law is unconstitutional,[5] or an act ultra vires. See COMMODUM.

Benefit society. An association incorporated for the purpose of receiving periodical payments from members, to be loaned or given to such members as may need pecuniary relief. Sometimes called aid, and beneficial, society.

Sick benefits. Aid, usually money, given to a person during the period of his illness or disability, on account of membership or insurance in a benefit or relief society.[6]

The recognition of a person as a member up to a short time before his death, in connection with the presumption that persons follow such regulations as they are under, is sufficient evidence of good standing to maintain an action upon a certificate.[7]

When a benefit certificate takes effect, so far as to vest an absolute right to the benefit money, at the death of the party to whom it issued, the same rule should hold which prevails as to wills and life policies of insurance, viz., that an express designation of the person is conclusive.[8]

A contract of membership must be read in the light afforded by the constitution and by-laws.[1] See ACCIDENT; ASSOCIATION.

Benefits accepted. See AGENT; ASSUMPSIT; CONTRACT, Implied; ESTOPPEL.

Benefits and burdens. Advantages and disadvantages; profits and losses; rights and duties. See BURDEN.

Beneficial. 1. For the assistance of members, as see Society, above.

2. Entitled to receive the income or profit, as the beneficial owner of an estate. See BENEFICIARY.

3. Contributing to the end in view; supporting or maintaining rather than restricting or defeating; liberal. See CONSTRUCTION; STATUTE, Remedial; RES, 2, Ut, etc.

BENEVOLENCE; BENEVOLENT. "Benevolent," of itself, without anything in the context of a will to restrict its ordinary meaning, clearly includes not only purposes which are deemed charitable by a court of equity, but also any acts of kindness, good will or disposition to do good, the objects of which have no relation to technical charities.[2]

Hence, a devise to be applied "solely for benevolent purposes," in the discretion of a trustee, is not a charity. . . But "benevolent," when coupled with "charitable" or an equivalent word, or used in such connection or applied to such public institutions or corporations as to manifest an intent to make it synonymous with "charitable," has been given effect according to that intent.[3]

"Benevolence" is wider than "charity," in legal signification, but its meaning may be narrowed by the context.[4]

"Benevolent," applied to objects or purposes, may refer to such as are charitable or not charitable, in the legal sense. Acts of kindness, friendship, forethought, or good will, might properly be described as benevolent. It has therefore been held that gifts to trustees to be applied for "benevolent purposes" at their discretion, or to such "benevolent purposes" as they could agree upon, do not create a public charity. . . Where the word is used in connection with other words explanatory of its meaning, and indicating the intent of the donor to limit it to purposes strictly charitable, it has been held to be equivalent to "charitable."[5]

See ASSOCIATION; CHARITY.

[1] [4 Bl. Com. 107; 3 Kent, 494.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. 12 ed. § 321, note.

[3] Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co., 100 U. S. 55 (1879); Jones v. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 id. 628 (1879); Peoples' Bank v. National Bank, ib. 181 (1879).

[4] United States v. Hodson, 10 Wall. 395 (1870).

[5] Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 421 (1880); 106 id. 481.

[6] See Poultney v. Bachman, 31 Hun, 49, 52-55 (1883), cases.

[7] Lazensky v. Knights of Honor, 31 F. R. 592 (1887); Knights of Honor v. Johnson, 78 Ind. 113 (1881).

[8] Thomas v. Leake, 67 Tex. 470 (1887), Willie, C. J. As to beneficiaries generally, see Lamont v. Grand Lodge, 31 F. R. 177, 181 (1887), cases. As to designation of beneficiary, see Hotel-Men's Association v. Brown, 32 id. 11 (1887).

[1] Splawn v. Chew, 60 Tex. 534 (1883); 67 id. 472. See also, generally, 22 Cent. Law J. 562-64 (1886), cases; ib. 277, cases.

[2] Chamberlain v. Stearns, 111 Mass. 268-69 (1873), cases, Gray, J.

[3] De Camp v. Dobbins, 31 N. J. E. 695 (1879), Beasley, C. J.; Thomson v. Norris, 20 id. 523 (1869), cases; 6 N. H. 533.

[4] Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 413-14 (1882), cases, En-

BENZINE. See OIL.

BEQUEATH. A gift of personal property by will.

Bequest. A gift of personalty by will; the clause in the instrument making the gift; the thing itself so given.

When the context requires it "bequeath" will be construed "devise"—which is of realty.[1] See DEVISE; LEGACY; WILL, 2.

BEST. See BID; EVIDENCE; KNOWLEDGE.

A testator made a bequest to his son-in-law in trust "to pay the income or such portion as he may consider best and at such time as he sees fit" to testator's granddaughter, an infant, during her life. Held, that the intent of the testator was to consider the welfare of the granddaughter; that the word "best" had more reference to withholding income than paying it: that the trustee was to pay only as he thought best to pay.[2] See DISCRETION, 2; IF.

BESTIALITY. See SODOMY.

BET.[3] A wager,—the act or the amount.

"Bet" and "wager" are synonymous terms, applied to the contract of betting and wagering and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. They may be laid upon games and upon things that are not games.[4]

A "bet" or wager is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at present uncertain; while the "stake" is the money or other thing thus put upon the chance. Each party gets a chance of gain from others, and takes a risk of loss of his own to them.[5]

"Illegal gaming implies gain and loss between the parties by betting, such as would excite a spirit of cupidity." A "purse," "prize," or "premium" is ordinarily some valuable thing offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter. He has not a chance of gaining the thing offered; if he abide by his offer, that he must give it over to some of those contending for it is reasonably certain. "Bet or stakes" and "bet or wager" have substantially the same meaning.[6]

A bet on an election means on the result of the election.[1] See GAME, 2; WAGER.

BETTER. See EQUITY.

BETTERMENT. 1. An improvement to realty which is more extensive than ordinary repair, and increases, in a substantial degree, the value of the property; melioration.

Betterment Acts. Statutes which secure to a purchaser of land for valuable consideration, without notice of an infirmity in the title, an interest in the land equal to the value of the improvements or melioration he may have made.

The rule of the common law is that the owner of land shall not pay an intruder or occupant for unauthorized improvements. This induces diligence in the examination of titles, and prevents wrongful appropriations. Chancery, borrowing from the civil law, made the first innovation upon the doctrine; and in time held that when a bona fide possessor made meliorations in good faith, under an honest belief of ownership, and the real owner for any reason went into equity, the court, applying the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, and adopting the civil law rule of natural equity, compelled the owner to pay for such industrial accessions as were permanently beneficial to the estate.[2]

The occupant must have peaceable possession, under color of title, and honestly believe that he is the owner of the land. Any instrument having a grantor and grantee, containing a description of the land, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title. Actual notice of an adverse title is proof of the absence of good faith.[3]

2. The additional value which a piece of property acquires from its proximity to a public improvement.[4] See COMPENSATION, 3.

BETWEEN. Often synonymous with "among," especially when employed to convey the idea of division or separate ownership of property held in common.[5]

It is as appropriate to say that property is to be divided "between" as "among" A, B, and C.[5] dicott, J.; Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen, 470 (1865), Gray, J.; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 185 (1882); Adye v. Smith, 44 Conn. 60 (1876).

---

[1] Evans v. Price, 118 Ill. 599 (1886); Ladd v. Harvey, 31 N. H. 538 (1850); Lasher v. Lasher, 13 Barb. 109-10 (1852); Laing v. Barbour, 119 Mass. 525 (1876), cases.

[2] Bartlett v. Slater, 53 Conn. 110 (1885).

[3] For abet, to maintain.

[4] Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 16 (1858), Perkins, J.

[5] Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 539 (1880), Folger, C. J.; Commonwealth v. Wright, 137 Mass. 251 (1884).

[1] Commonwealth v. Avery, 14 Bush, 633 (1879).

[2] Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa, 444-46 (1864), cases, Dillon, J.

[3] Beard v. Dansby, 48 Ark. 186-87 (1886), cases. See generally Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 492-98 (1841): 2 id. 607 (1843); Griswold v. Bragg, 13 Blatch. 206 (1880); Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 376 (1883); Effinger v. Hall, 81 Va. 109-6 (1885), cases; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 79 (1823); Jackson v. Loomis, (N. Y.), 15 Am. Dec. 347, cases; 19 Blatch. 94; 48 Conn. 581; 11 Me. 452; 74 id. 515; 13 Ohio, 308; 14 S. C. 338; 17 Vt. 109; 3 Pomeroy, Eq. § 1241, cases; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 799, 1237-38, cases; 1 Wash. R. P. 139, cases.

[4] See Foster v. Commissioners, 113 Mass. 335 (1882).

[5] Myres v. Myres, 23 How. Pr. 415-16 (1862). See also Ward v. Tomkins, 30 N. J. E. 4 (1878); 20 Conn. 123.

When "between" and "among" follow the verb "divide" their general signification is very similar, and in popular use they are synonymous — though "among" denotes a collection and is never followed by two of any sort, while "between" may be followed by any plural number, and seems to refer to the individuals of a class rather than to the class itself.[1]

"Between" persons implies, strictly speaking, between two parties to a division; but the reference may be to more than two persons.[2]

By the language "equally divided between my grandchildren," a testator may intend division between two families.[3]

Between two places excludes the terminii.[4]

Between two days excludes both days.[5] See DAY.

"Between eleven o'clock P. M. and five o'clock A. M." covers the period intervening between eleven o'clock at night and five o'clock in the morning of the succeeding day.[6]

BEYOND. See SEA.

BI. The Latin prefix, put for dui, twice, or from bis, twice, two.

BIAS.[7] Inclination of mind toward a particular object; an influential power which sways the judgment.[8]

In a juror, being under an influence which so sways his mind to one side as to prevent his deciding the cause according to the evidence.[9]

Not synonymous with prejudice.[9]

May show bias in a witness by relationship, sympathy, hostility, or prejudice.[9] See IMPARTIAL, 1; PREJUDICE.

BIBLE. See BLASPHEMY; CHRISTIANITY; HEARSAY, 4.

BICYCLE. Held to be a "carriage," within a statute forbidding fast driving.[10]

Not a "carriage" liable to toll, under the English Turnpike Act of 1888.[11]

A tricycle capable of being propelled by the feet, or by steam as an auxiliary, or alone, was held to be a "locomotive," within the English Highways and Locomotive Act of 1878.[12]

The park commissioners of New York, in their discretion, may prohibit bicycles in the parks of that city. An ordinance to that effect may be a "regulation" intended by the statute creating their office.[13]

An act which forbids the use of bicycles on a certain road, unless permitted by the superintendent of the road, is not unconstitutional.[1]

In the absence of legislative prohibition, riders of bicycles would seem to have the same rights on highways as those using any other vehicle.[2]

BID. In its most comprehensive sense, to make an offer; in its more ordinary acceptation, to make an offer at an auction;[3] the offer itself.

Also, the price at which a contractor will furnish material or do some other particular thing.

Bid off. One is said to bid off a thing when he bids at an auction and the thing is knocked down to him in immediate succession to his bid and as a consequence of it.[3]

Bidder. One who offers to give a designated price for property on sale at an auction.

By-bidding. Fictitious bidding; running up the price of an article, not to save it from sacrifice, but to mislead bona fide bidders; puffing.

Upset bid. A more liberal bid on property sold at public sale, offered to the court having jurisdiction in the proceeding, in order that the sale already made may be set aside, or confirmation thereof withheld, and that the new bid may be entertained, perhaps along with other bids. Whence upset-bidder, for the person who makes such offer.[4] (Local.)

The article offered for sale is to be delivered to the highest real bidder. If a minimum price is fixed notice thereof must be given. By-bidding, since it deceives and involves falsehood, is a fraud.[5] An agreement not to bid, that is, to prevent competition and possibly to cause a sacrifice of the property, is void, as against public policy. On a breach of a contract to pay a bid the measure of damages is the amount which would have been received if the contract had been kept.[6]

It was formerly the rule in England, in chancery sales, that, until confirmation of the master's report, the bidding would be "opened" upon a mere offer to advance the price ten per centum. But Lord Eldon expressed dissatisfaction with this practice, as tend-

---

[1] Senger v. Senger's Executor, 81 Va. 698 (1886), Richardson, J.

[2] Haskell v. Sargent, 113 Mass. 343 (1873).

[3] Stoutenburgh v. Moore, 37 N. J. E. 69 (1883).

[4] Revere v. Leonard, 1 Mass. *93 (1804).

[5] Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. 352 (1853); 5 Metc. 540.

[6] Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 570 (1884).

[7] F. biais a slant, slope: inclination to a side. L. L. bifacem, one who looks sideways. — Skeat.

[8] [Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 449-50 (1853).

[9] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 406, 566.

[10] Taylor v. Goodwin, L. R., 4 Q. B. D. 228 (1879).

[11] Williams v. Ellis, L. R., 5 Q. B. D. 176 (1880).

[12] Parkyns v. Priest, L. R., 7 Q. B. D. 315 (1881).

[13] Matter of Wright, 29 Hun, 358 (1883).

[1] State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477 (1887).

[2] Cook, Highways. See 69 Law Times, 26 (1880); 28 Solic. J. & R. 4 (1880) — commenting on Taylor's and Williams' cases, ante — notes 10, 11.

[3] Eppes v. Mississippi, &c. R. Co., 35 Ala. 56 (1859), Walker, C. J.

[4] See Yost v. Porter, 80 Va. 855 (1885).

[5] Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 151-62 (1850), cases; 2 Kent, 538.

[6] Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 97-98 (1867), cases; James v. La Crosse, &c. R. Co., ib. 752 (1867); 4 Del Ch. 491; 1 Cowp. 395.

ing to impair confidence in sales, to keep bidders from attending, and to diminish the amount realized, and his views were finally adopted in the statute of 30 and 31 Vict. (1867), c. 48, § 7. . . . In this country his views were followed at an early day by the courts, and the rule has become almost universal that a sale will not be set aside for inadequacy of price unless the inadequacy be so great as to shock the conscience, or unless there be additional circumstances against its fairness; being very much the rule that always prevailed in England as to setting aside a sale after a master's report had been confirmed. . . If the inadequacy of price is so gross as to shock the conscience, or if, in addition to gross inadequacy, the purchaser has been guilty of unfairness, or has taken any undue advantage, or if the owner of the property, or the party interested in it, has been for any other reason misled or surprised, the sale will be regarded as fraudulent and void, or the party injured will be permitted to redeem the property sold. Great inadequacy requires only slight circumstances of unfairness in the conduct of the party benefited by the sale to raise the presumption of fraud.[1]

See ADEQUATE, 1; AUCTION; RESPONSIBLE; SALE, Judicial.

BIGAMY.[2] The offense of having two husbands or wives at the same time, the one de jure and the other de facto.[3]

Strictly speaking, bigamy means "twice married," as its derivation shows. This was never an offense at common law; it was made an offense by the canonists. Polygamy is the proper term; but, by long usage, bigamy has come to mean the state of a man who has two wives, or a woman who has two husbands, at the same time.[4]

Whence bigamist (not a legal term), and bigamous.

The penalties of the offense are not incurred where one of a married couple has been absent and unheard of for a long period, as five to seven years, and the other party marries; nor, in some States, where one is sentenced to imprisonment for a long term, as for life; nor where there has been a legal dissolution of the relation for a cause not involving guilt, as for a contract made within the age of consent.[5]

The first wife is not admitted as a witness against her husband, because she is the true wife; but the second wife, so called, may be, for she is not a wife at all; and so, vice versa, as to the second husband, so called.[1]

The first marriage may be proved by the admissions of the prisoner.[2]

In a criminal prosecution strict proof of an actual marriage is necessary; but in a civil suit an admission, or reputation and cohabitation, suffices.[3]

The act of Congress of July 1, 1862, provided that every person having a husband or wife living, who married another, whether married or single, in a Territory, or other place over which the United States had exclusive jurisdiction, was guilty of bigamy —

And should be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years.[4] That act was amended by act of March 22, 1882, to read as follows:

Section 1. "Every person who has a husband or wife living who, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter marries another, whether married or single, and any man who hereafter simultaneously, or on the same day, marries more than one woman, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of polygamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years; but this section [R. S. § 5352, as amended] shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage whose husband or wife by such marriage shall have been absent for five years, and is not known to such person to be living, and is believed by such person to be dead, not to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been dissolved by a valid decree of a competent court, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been pronounced void by a valid decree of a competent court, on the ground of nullity of the marriage contract."

Sec. 2. If any male person cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than three hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both.

Sec. 5. Cause for challenge of a juror is: living or having lived in the practice of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman; or believing in the practice of bigamy, polygamy, etc. . . An answer shall not be given in evidence in any criminal prosecution under the act. Declining to answer as a witness renders the person incompetent.

Sec. 6. The President may grant amnesty for offenses committed before the passage of the act.

Sec. 7. The issue of Mormon marriages, born before January 1, 1888, are legitimated.

[1] Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 191-93 (1886), cases, Bradley, J. See also Vass v. Arrington, 89 N. C. 13 (1883) — ten per cent. rule; Hansucker v. Walker, 76 Va. 753 (1882); Langyher v. Patterson, 77 id. 470 (1883); Central Pacific R. Co. v. Creed, 70 Cal. 501 (1886); Babcock v. Canfield, 36 Kan. 439 (1887).

[2] L. L. bigamia: bi for Gk. di, double; gamía, for Gk. gámos, marriage. Gk. digamía,— Skeat.

[3] 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 296.

[4] Gise v. Commonwealth, 81 Pa. 432, 430 (1876), Paxson, J. See also 4 Bl. Com. 163; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 430; 1 Law Quar. Rev. 474-76 (1885).

[5] 2 Kent, 79-80; 4 Bl. Com. 164.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 164.

[2] Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, 311 (1880), cases.

[3] The Gaines Cases, 24 How. 605 (1860); 12 id. 472; 6 id. 597; State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (1867), cases: 98 Am. Dec. 241, 251-57, cases; 53 Pa. 132; 14 Tex. 468, 471; 2 Utah, 26.

[4] 12 St. L. 50: R. S. § 5352.

Sec. 8. "No polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid . . shall be entitled to vote at any election . . or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States."

Sec. 9. Declares all registration and election offices vacant, and provides for their being filled by a board of five persons, appointed by the President, until provision be made by the legislative assembly of the Territory as further directed by this section.[1]

Any man is a polygamist or bigamist, within the meaning of the last recited act, who having previously married one wife, still living, and having another at the time when he presents himself to claim registration as a voter, still maintains that relation to a plurality of wives, although from March 22, 1882, until the day he offers to register, he may not in fact have cohabited with more than one woman. . . The crime, under the acts of Congress, consists in entering into a bigamous or polygamous marriage, and is complete when the relation begins.[2] See RELIGION.

The offense of cohabiting with more than one woman, created by § 3 of the act of March 22, 1882, is committed by a man who lives in the same house with two women, and eats at their tables one-third of his time, or thereabouts, and holds them out to the world, by his language or conduct, as his wives. It is not necessary that he and the women, or either of them, shall sleep together.[3] See COHABIT, 2.

The uniform current of authority is, that for the purposes of prosecution the offense of bigamy or polygamy can be committed but once prior to the time the prosecution is instituted.[4]

See further Act of March 3, 1888, under POLYGAMY.

[1] 22 St. L. 30-32. See 116 U. S. 56-57; 118 id. 350.

[2] Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 35, 41 (1885), Matthews, J. Approved, 116 id. 72, infra.

[3] Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55 (1885), Blatchford, J. Afterward, May 10, 1886, the court decided that it had no jurisdiction under the writ of error in the case, as see 118 U. S. 354-55.

[4] Exp. Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 281-86 (1887), cases, Blatchford, J. Snow was convicted of polygamy upon three indictments, exactly alike except that they covered different periods of time, and three sentences were imposed. He complied with the first sentence — paid a fine of $300, and remained in prison six months; and then demanded his release, claiming that his offense had been a continuing one, and that he could not be punished more than once for it. The Supreme Court held that under the theory of the lower court Snow might have been punished under an indictment entered every week during the continuance of the polygamous relation.

BILATERAL. Designates a contract executory on both sides, as, a sale. Unilateral. When one party makes no express agreement, but his obligation is left to implication of law, as, a guaranty. See CONTRACT, Bilateral, etc.

A bilateral record is a record introduced between parties and privies. A unilateral record is a record offered to show a particular fact as a prima facie case for or against a stranger.

BILGED. That state of a ship in which water is freely admitted through holes and breaches made in the planks of the bottom, occasioned by injuries, whether the ship's timbers are broken or not.[1]

BILL.[2] A statement of particulars, in writing, and more or less formal in arrangement.

Distinctive qualifying terms are frequently omitted, the relation or context indicating the sense. Thus "bill," standing alone, is often used for bill of exchange, bill in equity, bill of indictment, etc.

I. IN CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. A formal, public, written declaration of popular rights and liberties — restrictive of governmental power. See further RIGHT, 2, Bill of Rights.

II. IN LEGISLATION. The draft or form of an act presented to a legislature but not enacted. As, a bill of attainder, and money bills, qq. v.

"Act" is the appropriate term for the document after it has been passed by the legislature: it is then something more than a draft or form.[3]

See ACT, 3; PASS, 2; RIDER; SNAKE; TITLE, 2; VETO; YEAS AND NAYS.

III. IN MERCANTILE LAW. A written statement of the amount or items of a demand, or of the terms of an agreement or undertaking, particularly for the payment of money.[4]

As, a bank-bill; a due-bill; a bill rendered, payable, or receivable; a bill of adventure, of credit, of exchange, of lading, of parcels, of sale, of sight; a bill of health, of mortality; a bill obligatory or penal, or single. As to which see the descriptive or qualifying word.

Bill; bill obligatory; bill penal; bill single. A bond without a condition. An instrument acknowledging indebtedness, in [1] Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 39 (1822), Story, J.

[2] L. billa, a writing: bulla, a papal bill; originally a leaden seal,—Skeat.

[3] [Southwark Bank v. Commonwealth, 36 Pa. 450 (1856), Lewis, J.; 4 Wall. 367.

[4] Abbott's Law Dict.

a certain sum, to be paid on a day certain.[1]

Differs from a promissory note in having a seal affixed; yet, by the custom of merchants, binds without seal, witness, or delivery. It is subject to defalcation and set-off.[1]

A "bill" is a common engagement for money, given by one man to another. When with a penalty, called a "penal bill;" when without a penalty, a "single bill;" though the latter is most frequently used. By a "bill" is ordinarily understood a single bond without a condition.[2]

"Bill single," or simply "bill," without condition or penalty, was originally the plainest form. A "bill penal" or "penal bill" had a condition and penalty annexed. A "bill obligatory" in form was like either of these and had a seal. Bonds with conditions have superseded bills penal.

Bill payable. Any demand, usually evidenced by a writing, for money, subsisting against a person. Bill receivable. Any such demand, with respect to the person who is entitled to the money.

"Bills receivable" are promissory notes, bills of exchange, bonds and other evidences or securities, which a merchant or trader holds, and which are payable to him.[3]

Bill rendered. A creditor's written statement of his claim, itemized.

Not assented to by the debtor, as in an account stated. The creditor may sue for a larger sum.[4] See ACCOUNT, 1.

IV. IN LEGAL PROCEDURE. A formal written statement of complaint to a court of justice.[5] As, the original bill in common-law practice; a bill in chancery or equity; a bill of indictment, of information, qq. v.

Also, a written statement or record of proceedings in an action.[1] As, a bill of exceptions, of costs, of particulars, a fee-bill,[5] qq. v.

Bill in chancery; bill in equity. A statement, addressed to a chancellor or a court of equity, of the facts which give rise to a complaint, with a petition for relief.

This may be an original bill or a bill not original, a cross-bill, a supplemental bill, a bill for discovery, of conformity, interpleader, peace or quia timet, review, revivor, foreclosure, a creditor's bill, qq. v.

A bill in equity corresponds to a declaration at law. Its parts are: 1, the address to the court; 2, the names of the parties; 3, the facts of complainant's case — the stating part; 4, a general charge of improper combination — the clause of confederation; 5, the pretenses or excuses respondent may have to offer in defense — the charging part; 6, allegations that the respondent's acts are contrary to equity, and that no adequate remedy is afforded at law — the clause of jurisdiction; 7, a prayer for answers to interrogations — the interrogating part; 8, a prayer for relief; 9, a prayer for process. Parts 4, 5, and 6 are omitted, except where fraud is to be specifically charged as an actual fact. The whole is sworn to by the complainant.

When a person has a cause which is redressible only in equity he commences his suit by preferring to the court a written statement of his case called a "bill in chancery" or a "bill in equity," which is in the nature of a petition to the court, sets forth the material facts, and concludes with a prayer for the appropriate relief or other thing required of the court, and for the usual process against the parties, against whom the relief or other thing is sought, to bring them before the court to make answer in the premises.[1]

The most general division of bills is those which are original and those which are not original. Original bills relate to some matter not before litigated in the court, by the same persons standing in the same interests. These bills may again be divided into those which pray, and those which do not pray, relief.[2]

Bills not original are, first, such as are an addition to, or a continuance or a dependency of, an original bill; or, second, such as are brought for the purpose of cross-litigation, or of controverting, suspending, or reversing some decree or order of the court, or of carrying it into execution. The first class of bills not original furnishes the means of supplying the defects of a suit, of continuing it, if abated, and of obtaining the benefit of it. These means are: by a supplemental bill; by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill; by a bill of revivor; by an original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor; by a bill of revivor and supplement. The second class includes: a cross-bill; a bill of review; a bill to impeach a decree upon the ground of fraud; a bill to suspend the opera-

[1] Farmers', &c. Bank v. Greiner, 2 S. & R. 115, 117 (1815), Tilghman, C. J.

[2] Tracy v. Talmage, 16 Barb. 462 (1854): Jacob's Law Dict.

[3] State v. Robinson, 57 Md. 501 (1881): Bouvier's Law Dict.

[4] Williams v. Glenny, 16 N. Y. 389 (1857).

[5] Abbott's Law Dict.

[1] Story, Eq. Pl. § 7.

[2] Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 16, 17; 16 F. R. 731.

tion of a decree; a bill to carry a former decree into execution; a bill partaking in some measure of one or more of both of these classes of bills.[1]

A cross-bill is brought by a defendant in a suit against the plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. It is an auxiliary to the proceedings in the original suit, a dependency upon it — brings the whole dispute before the court for one decree. The two bills constitute one suit.[2]

New and distinct matters, not embraced in the original bill, cannot be introduced by the cross-bill; and new parties must be introduced by amendment of the bill.[3]

A supplemental bill is brought as an addition to an original bill to supply some defect in its original frame or structure, not the subject of amendment.[3]

May be filed by either party to his own bill, within a reasonable time — even after decree made, when a necessary party has been omitted, when further discovery is requisite, when some matter overlooked needs development, or when it is essential to bring out other matter in order to give full effect to the decree entered or to be entered on the original bill. The bill is not amendable after the parties are at issue, and witnesses have been examined. An answer to the new matter is prayed for.[3]

After hearing the proofs a bill may be so amended as to put in issue matters in dispute and in proof, but not sufficiently in issue by the original bill.[4] See AMENDMENT, 1.

See also ADEQUATE; ANSWER, 3; DEMURRER; DISMISS; EQUITY, FISHING, 2; IMPERTINENCE; MULTIFARIOUSNESS; PARTY, 2; PREJUDICE, 2; RELIEF, 2; REMEDY.

Original bill. 1. An ancient mode of commencing an action at law, particularly in the court of king's bench; sometimes termed a "plaint," and resembled the modern "declaration." Compare WRIT, Original.

2. In equity, a complaint relating to a dispute not before litigated by the same persons in the same interests. See page 121.

True bill. See IGNORE.

[1] Story, Eq. Pl. § 326.

[2] Story, Eq. Pl. § 389; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 145 (1854); Ayres v. Carver, ib. 595 (1854); Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. 14 (1863); Exp. Montgomery, &c. R. Co., 95 U. S. 225 (1877); Ayers v. Chicago, 101 id. 187 (1879); Nashville, &c. R. Co. v. United States, ib. 641 (1879); First Nat. Bank v. Flour Mills Co., 31 F. R. 584 (1887); 2 McCrary, 177; 50 Conn. 62; 105 Ill. 585; 21 W. Va. 247; 2 Daniel, Ch. 1548.

[3] Story, Eq. Pl. § 332.

[4] Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 195 (1886), cases.

BILLA. L. L. A bill: an original bill at law, or a bill of indictment.

Billa cassetur. That the bill be quashed. A judgment, at common law, for defendant, on a plea in abatement.[1] See QUASH.

Billa vera. A true bill.

BILLIARDS. See GAME, 2.

BIND. To place under a legal obligation, particularly that of a bond or covenant; to affect with a contract or a judgment; to affect with a thing done, or with a common relation; to obligate.

As, to bind, and to be bound or to become bound, by a contract made, by a judgment or decree entered or rendered, by legislation, by the act of a privy, a wife, a partner, or other agent, or by the declaration of an accomplice.

Binding. Establishing an obligation; creating a legal duty or necessity. See INSTRUCT, 2.

Binding out. To obligate as an apprentice, q. v.

Binding over. To obligate to appear as a witness, or as a defendant, at the time of trial, or to keep the peace, q. v.

Bound. Brought under an obligation, as by a covenant; charged with responsibility, as with a duty; obligated. See APPRENTICE; BOND; HOLD, 4; INDENTURE; OBLIGATE.

BIPARTITE. See PART, 1.

BIRD. See ANIMAL.

BIRTH. See ABANDON, 2 (2); NATUS; VENTER.

BIS. See BI.

BISSEXTILE. See YEAR.

BITTERS. See LIQUOR.

BLACK. See ACRE; CAP; GOWN; RENT.

BLACKLEG. A person who gets his living by frequenting race-courses and places where games of chance are played, getting the best odds and giving the least he can, but not necessarily by cheating.[2]

BLACK-LISTING. See BOYCOTTING.

An act of Wisconsin, approved April 8, 1887 (Laws, ch. 349), provides that: Any two or more employees who shall agree, combine, and confederate together for the purpose of interfering with or preventing any person or persons seeking employment from obtaining such employment, either by threats, promises or by circulating or causing the circulation of a so-called black-list, or by any means whatsoever, or for the purpose of procuring and causing the discharge of any employee or employees by any means whatsoever,

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 306.

[2] Barnett v. Allen, 3 H. & N. 379 (1858), Pollock, C. B shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a period of not more than one month or by a fine not less than fifty dollars, or by both.

BLACK-MAIL.[1] 1. Rent reserved in work, grain, or the baser money. Opposed, white rent: rent paid in silver.[2]

A rent in grain, cattle, money, or other thing, anciently paid to men of influence, in the north of England, for protection against robbers.[3]

By statute 43 Eliz. (1601), c. 13, for preventing rapine on the northern borders, to imprison or carry away any subject in order to ransom him . . or to give or take any money or contribution, there called black-mail, in order to secure goods from rapine, is felony without benefit of clergy.[4]

2. In common parlance, extortion — the exaction of money for the performance of a duty, the prevention of an injury, or the exercise of an influence.[5]

Imports an unlawful service and an involuntary payment. Not unfrequently, the money is extorted by threats, or by operating upon the fears or the credulity, or by promises to conceal or offers to expose the weakness, the folly, or the crime of the victim. There is moral compulsion which neither necessity nor fear nor credulity can resist. The term, as universally regarded, implies an unlawful act; and though, from its indefiniteness and comprehensiveness, the offense is not classified as a distinct crime, it is nevertheless believed to be criminal. Therefore, to charge a man with "black-mailing" is equivalent to charging him with a crime.[6]

Worcester says that "black-mail" originally meant the performance of labor, the payment of copper coin, or the delivery of certain things in kind, as rent; and that the word was contrasted with "white rent," which was paid in silver. Spelman attributes the term "black" to the color of the coin; Jamieson to its illegality. Dean Swift used the term to signify "hush money," "money extorted under the threat of exposure in print for an alleged offense." Bartlett is the first lexicographer who confines its meaning to that sense, and the use of it to this country. . . The meaning is not legally confined to extortion by threats or other morally compulsory measure. The sense intended in any given case should be determined by a jury.[6] See EXTORTION; THREATENING LETTER.

[1] According to most of the authorities, mail is from the French maille, a small coin. It may come from the German makl, tribute, or from the Gaelic, mal, a rent.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 42-43.

[3] See Termes de la Ley (1721).

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 244. See All the Year, vol. 30, p. 247.

[5] Edsall v. Brooks, 2 Robt. 33-34 (N. Y. Super. Ct. (1864), Monell, J. Same case, 17 Abb. Pr., o. s., 226; 26 How. Pr. 431.

[6] Edsall v. Brooks, 3 Robt. 293-95 (1865), Robertson, C. J. See 122 Mass. 264; 97 N. Y. 313; 12 Tex. Ap. 267.

BLACKS. See CITIZEN; SCHOOL, Separate; WHITE.

BLACKSMITH SHOP. See POLICE, 2.

Is not a nuisance per se. The business may be so carried on as not to annoy persons living in the vicinity.[1] See NUISANCE.

BLACKSTONE, SIR WILLIAM.

Born July 10, 1723. In 1736 he entered Pembroke College, Oxford, where he continued till 1741, when he began to study law. In 1746, at the end of the probationary period, he was called to the bar. Down to 1760 he seems to have been engaged in but two cases of importance. He passed much time in Oxford, taking an active interest in the affairs of the university.

About 1750 he began to plan his Lectures on the Laws of England. In 1753 he delivered his first course at Oxford. The next year he published his Analysis of the Laws of England, for the use of his numerous hearers. This analysis is founded on a similar work by Sir Matthew Hale.

A "broadsheet," dated Oxford, June 25, 1753, announcing that the "course of lectures" would begin "in Michaelmas Term next" (November), and was "calculated" for laymen as well as for lawyers, stated that "To this End it is proposed to lay down a general and comprehensive Plan of the Laws of England; to deduce their History; to enforce and illustrate their leading Rules and fundamental Principles; and to compare them with the Laws of Nature and of other Nations; without entering into practical Niceties, or the minute Distinctions of particular Cases."[2]

Mr. Viner having bequeathed to the University of Oxford a sum of money and the copyright of his Abridgment of Law, for the purpose of instituting a professorship of common law, Blackstone, on October 20, 1758, was elected first Vinerian professor, and, five days later, delivered his "Introductory Lecture on the Study of Law," afterward prefixed to his Commentaries. His lectures became celebrated throughout the kingdom.

He never acquired celebrity as an advocate. In Tonson v. Collins (1 W. Bl. 301, 321), he made an exhaustive argument in favor of the common-law right of literary property.

In 1765 appeared the first volume of his commentaries. The other three volumes were published during the next four years.

In 1766 he resigned the Vinerian professorship. In 1770 he was appointed a judge of the King's Bench, receiving then the honor of knighthood; and, a few months later, became a judge of the court of Common Pleas. In Scott v. Shephard (2 W. Bl. 892), the "squib case," wherein the difference between the actions of trespass and case was discussed, he dissented from the opinion of the majority of the court. See CASE, 3.

He died February 14, 1780. The notes of decisions which he had collected, and prepared for the press, were published in two volumes, in 1781, as directed in his will, by his brother-in-law, James Clitherow, Esq.[3]

[1] Foucher v. Grass, 60 Iowa, 507 (1883).

[2] 2 Law Quar. Rev. 83 (1886) — from a copy of the "broadsheet" found in 1885, in an old book.

[3] See generally Preface to 1 W. Bl. Reports.

American lawyers, with few exceptions, since the Revolution, have drawn their first lessons in jurisprudence from Blackstone's Commentaries. "That work was contemporaneous with our Constitution, and brought the law of England down to that day, and then, as now, was the authoritative text-book on its subject, familiar not only to the profession, but to all men of the general education of the founders of our Constitution."[1]

Blackstone first rescued the law of England from chaos. He did well what Coke tried to do one hundred and fifty years before: he gave an account of the law as a whole, capable of being studied, not only without disgust, but with interest and profit. His arrangement of the subject may be defective; but a better work of the kind has not yet been written, and, with all its defects, the literary skill with which a problem of extraordinary difficulty was dealt with is astonishing. He knew nearly everything, relating to the subject, worth knowing.[2]

"Its institutional value, and especially its historic value as an authentic and faithful mirror of the condition of the English Law as the result of legislation and adjudication, as it then existed, it is difficult to overestimate."[3]

BLAME. See DELICTUM; WRONG.

BLAND'S TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

BLANK.[4] 1, adj. (1) Of a white color: lacking something essential to completeness; not filled in or filled up with a word or words — names, amount, time, place, description, conditions, etc.: as, a blank certificate of stock, power of attorney, assignment, warrant.

(2) Unrestricted: indorsee not named: as, an indorsement, in blank or a blank indorsement, q. v.

2, n. A space left in a written or printed paper, to be filled with words or figures in order to complete the sense.

Blanks. Forms of writs, deeds, leases, powers of attorney, and other instruments, printed with spaces left for writing in names, dates, sums, places, descriptions, conditions, and other matters peculiar to special cases. Often spoken of as legal blanks. See WRITING.

Powers of attorney to transfer stock are often executed in blank, the right to fill in the name of an attorney being implied.[1]

The blanks in a warranty of attorney to confess judgment need not be filled up. The idiom of the language admits of many things being understood which are not directly expressed. This is eminently so with the personal pronouns.[2]

The grantor in a deed conveying realty, signed and acknowledged, with a blank for the name of the grantee, may by parol authorize another party to fill up the blank. In such case before the deed is delivered to the grantee his name must be inserted by the party so authorized.[3]

Where a party to a negotiable instrument intrusts it to the custody of another for use, with blanks not filled, as against the rights of innocent third persons such instrument carries on its face implied authority in the receiver as agent to fill any blanks necessary to perfect it as an instrument;[4] but not to vary or alter material terms by erasing what is written or printed as part, nor to pervert the scope or meaning by filling blanks with stipulations repugnant to what was clearly expressed in the instrument before it was so delivered.[5]

A note payable to bearer and indorsed in blank is transferable by mere delivery, and any bona fide holder is effectually shielded from the defense of prior equities between the original parties.[6]

As between original parties the act of delivering the paper is authority for filling blanks conformably to their mutual understanding. If there is no express agreement the authority is general; and the burden of proof is on the defendant to show such agreement.[7]

In cases of blank indorsements possession is evidence of title.[8]

When blanks material in nature are filled up after execution, the instrument, as a deed, should be re-executed and re-acknowledged; but failure to do so would hardly defeat a vested interest.[9]

See ALTERATION, 2; BEARER; INDORSEMENT.

BLANKET. See INSURANCE, Policy of.

BLASPHEMY.[10] Denying the being or providence of the Almighty, or contumelious reproaching of Christ; also, profane scoffing at the holy scripture, or exposing it to contempt and ridicule.[11]

[1] Knote v. United States, 10 Ct. Cl. 399 (1874), Loring, J.

[2] 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 214–15.

[3] 26 Am. Law Rev. 35 (1888), J. F. Dillon. See also Cooley's Bl. Com. vol. 1, p. v.

See generally preface to Chitty's edition of the Commentaries; 8 Alb. Law J. 290; 13 id. 104; 1 Allibone, Dict. Authors; 1 Am. Jur. 116; 1 Austin, Lect. 71; 104 Eclectic Mag. 708; 15 Law Mag. 292; 14 Leg. Obs. 142; 51 Macm. Mag. 350; 7 Pitts. Leg. J. 106; 5 West. Jur. 529.

[4] F. blanc, white.

[1] Denny v. Lyon, 38 Pa. 101 (1860); German Building Association v. Sendmeyer, 50 id. 67 (1865).

[2] Sweesey v. Kitchen, 80 Pa. 160 (1876), Agnew, C. J.

[3] Allen v. Withrow, 110 U. S. 128–29 (1884), cases.

[4] Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 108 (1859); Angle v. N. W. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 338–39, 331, 337 (1875), cases.

[5] Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 360–61 (1857), cases; Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. 551–52 (1869), cases; 101 U. S. 572; 46 N. Y. 325.

[6] City of Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. 295 (1871).

[7] 3 Kent, 89; Davidson v. Lanier, 4 Wall. 456 (1866), Chase, C. J.

[8] 3 Kent, 90.

[9] 2 Pars. Contr. 563, 723.

[10] Gk. blas-phēmein', to speak ill or evil of.

[11] [4 Bl. Com. 59.

Maliciously reviling God or religion.[1]

An offense at common law. The reviling is an offense because it tends to corrupt the morals of the people and to destroy good order. Such offenses have always been considered independent of any religious establishment or the rights of the church. They are treated as affecting the essential interests of civil society. . . The people of the State of New York, in common with the people of this country, profess the general doctrines of Christianity, as the rule of their faith and practice; and to scandalize the author of these doctrines is not only, in a religious point of view, extremely impious, but even in respect to the obligations due to society is a gross violation of decency and good order. The free, equal, and undisturbed enjoyment of religious opinion, whatever it may be, and free and decent discussions on any religious subject, is granted and secured; but to revile, with malicious and blasphemous contempt, the religion professed by almost the whole community is an abuse of that right. Wicked and malicious words, writings and actions which go to vilify those gospels, continue, as at common law, to be an offense against the public peace and safety. They are inconsistent with the reverence due to the administration of an oath, and, among other evil consequences, they tend to lessen, in the public mind, its religious sanction.[1]

A malicious and mischievous intention is the broad boundary between right and wrong. This is to be collected from the offensive levity, scurrilous and opprobrious language, and other circumstances. The species of the offense may be classed as: 1, denying the being and providence of God; 2, contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ; profane and malevolent scoffing at the scriptures, or exposing any part of them to contempt and ridicule; 3, certain immoralities tending to subvert all religion and morality. It is not necessary to the exercise of liberty of conscience and to freedom of religious worship that a man should have the right publicly to vilify the religion of his neighbors and of his country. It is open, public vilification of the religion of the country that is punished, not to force conscience by punishment, but to preserve the peace by an outward respect to the religion of the country, and not as a restraint upon the liberty of conscience.[2]

Consists in blaspheming the holy name of God, by denying, cursing, or contumeliously reproaching God, his creation, government, or final judging of the world.[3]

This may be done by language orally uttered, which would not be a libel, but it is not the less blasphemy if the same thing be done by language written, printed, and published, although when in this form it also constitutes the offense of libel.[3]

Speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. Purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to Him, as the intelligent creator, governor and judge of the world. A willful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God, by denying his existence or his attributes as an intelligent creator, governor and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in Him as such.[1]

Blasphemous libel. The publication of writings blaspheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule.[2]

Does not consist in an honest denial of the truths of the Christian religion, but in "a willful intention to pervert, insult, and mislead others by means of licentious and contumelious abuse applied to sacred subjects."[3]

The fullest inquiry, and the freest discussion, for all honest and fair purposes, one of which is the discovery of truth, is not prohibited. The simple and sincere avowal of a disbelief in the existence and attributes of a supreme, intelligent being, upon proper occasions, is not prevented. It is the design to calumniate and disparage the Supreme Being, and to destroy the veneration due Him, that is intended.[1]

See CHRISTIANITY; PROFANITY; RELIGION.

BLASTING. See NUISANCE.

If a voluntary act, lawful in itself, naturally results in injury to another, the doer must pay all damages which are the proximate consequence of the act, regardless of the degree of care exercised.[4] See NEGLIGENCE.

BLIND. See READING.

A blind man may make a contract or a will.

The handwriting of an attesting witness who has become blind may be proved as if he were dead — he being first produced and examined, if within the juris diction.[5]

Whether it is negligence for a blind man to travel upon a highway on foot, unattended, is a question for a jury.[6]

[1] People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. 290-98 (1811), Kent, C. J.

[2] Updegraph v. Commonwealth, 11 S. & R. 406, 408 (Pa., 1824), Duncan, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 211-12 (Mass., 1838), Shaw, C. J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 213, 220 (1838), Shaw, C. J.

[2] 3 Greenl. Ev. § 164.

[3] Regina v. Ramsay and Foote, 48 L. T. 734-40 (1883), cases, Coleridge, C. J., quoting Starkie. See Bradlaugh's Case, 4 Cr. Law Mag. 592 (1883); 17 Cent. Law J. 38 (1883) — Law Times (Eng.).

[4] Georgetown, &c. R. Co. v. Eagles, 9 Col. 544 (1886), cases. Eagles recovered damages for direct injury done to the roofs of houses from falling debris, and for loss of rents.

[5] 1 Starkie, Ev. § 341; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 365-67; 1 Whart. Ev. § 401.

[6] Sleeper v. Sandown, 52 N. H. 244, 250 (1872); 20 Am. Law Reg. 507-16 (1881), cases.

BLOCKADE. The investment of a seaport by a competent naval force, with a view of cutting off all communication of commerce.[1]

Every nation, of common right, as a municipal regulation, may declare what places shall be ports of entry and delivery, and enforce the regulation by such means and with such penalties as it pleases. The term does not apply to an embargo, like that of 1808. That exists only where the forces of one nation encompass the ports of another. A blockade interrupts trade and communication to neutrals.[2]

The President has a right to institute a blockade of ports in possession of persons in armed rebellion against the government, on principles of international law. Neutrals have a right to challenge the existence of a blockade de facto, and also the authority of the party exercising the right to institute it. They have a right to enter the ports of a friendly nation for purposes of trade and commerce, but are bound to recognize the rights of a belligerent engaged in actual war to use this mode of coercion for the purpose of subduing the enemy.[3]

Simple blockade. Such blockade as may be established by a naval officer acting upon his own discretion or under direction of superiors, without governmental notification. Public blockade. Is not only established in fact, but is notified, by the government directing it, to other governments.[4]

In the case of a simple blockade, the captors of prize property are bound to prove its existence at the time of the capture; while in the case of a public blockade, the claimants are held to proof of discontinuance in order to protect themselves from the penalties of attempted violation. The blockade of the rebel ports was of the latter sort. It is the duty of the belligerent government to give prompt notice of the discontinuance of a public blockade. If it fails to do so, proof of discontinuance may be otherwise made; but, subject to just responsibility to other nations, it must judge for itself when it can dispense with a blockade.[4]

Evidence of intent to violate a blockade may be collected from bills of lading, from letters and other papers found on board the captured vessel, from acts and words of the owners or hirers of the vessel and the shipper of the cargo and their agents, and from the spoliation of papers in apprehension of capture.[4]

No paper or constructive blockade is allowed by international law.[5] Compare EMBARGO.

BLOOD. 1. Relationship; stock; family; consanguinity.

To be "of the blood" of a person means to be descended from him or from the same common stock. All those are of the blood of an ancestor who may, in the absence of other and nearer heirs, take by descent from him.[1]

A person is "of the blood" of another who has any, however small a portion, of the same blood derived from a common ancestor. When it is intended to express any qualification, the word whole or half blood is used to designate it, or the qualification is implied from the context or from known principles of law. In the common law, "blood" was used in the same sense.[2] See SISTER.

Originally, feuds and estates descended to none not of the "blood of the first purchaser:" because what was given for personal service and merit ought not, it was held, to descend to any but heirs of the person.[3]

See ANCESTOR; ATTAINDER; CONSANGUINITY; DESCENT; PRIVY, 2; PURCHASER; RELATION, 8.

2. Temper of mind; state of the passions; disposition.

Cold blood. Undisturbed use of reason; calm deliberation. See COOLING TIME.

BLOW HOT AND COLD. See ALLEGARE, Allegans contraria, etc.

BOARD. A table.

1. What is served on a table as food; supplies for sustenance.

To board is to receive food as a lodger, or without lodgings, for compensation.[6]

Boarder. If a person comes upon a special contract to board, and to sojourn at an inn, in the sense of the law, he is not a guest, but a boarder.[5]

Where the host is only an innkeeper the presumption is that a temporary sojourner is a guest; but where he also carries on the business of keeping boarders, the question who is a guest and who a boarder is not so easily answered. The duration of the person's stay, the price paid, the extent of the accommodation afforded, the transient or permanent character of his residence or occupation, his knowledge or want of knowledge of any difference of accommodation afforded to or price paid by boarders and guests, are all to be considered.[6]

The keeper of a boarding-house receives only such persons as he chooses; an innkeeper must receive all who come, unless there exists a special reason for refusing entertainment.[7]

[1] 1 Kent, 146–47.

[2] United States v. The William Arthur, 3 Ware, 260–61 (1861).

[3] Prize Cases, 2 Black, 665, 635 (1862), Grier, J.

[4] The Circassian, 2 Wall. 150–51, 135 (1864), Chase, C. J.; 21 W. Va. 856.

[5] The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 50 (1866).

[1] Den v. Jones, 8 N. J. L. 346 (1826); 2 Bl. Com. 203, 229, 227.

[2] Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. *87, *94 (1829), Story, J.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 220, 56; 2 Pet. *87, *94.

[4] Pollock v. Landis, 36 Iowa, 652 (1873).

[5] Story, Bailm. § 477; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 424 (1851); Johnson v. Reynolds, 3 Kan. 261 (1865).

[6] Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 497 (1868), Colt, J. See also 26 Ala. 371; 33 Cal. 597; 25 Iowa, 555; 36 id. 651; 53 Me. 163; 35 Wis. 118; 24 How. Pr. 62; 1 Pars. Contr. 628.

[7] Willard v. Reinhardt, 2 E. D. Sm. 148 (1853); Cady v. McDowell, 1 Lans. 486 (1869), cases.

A keeper of boarders must take at least ordinary care of his patron's property; an innkeeper must exercise the highest degree of care reasonably possible.

A boarder's goods are not now distrainable for rent due by his host.[1]

See further DISTRESS; INN; NECESSARIES; RESIDE. Compare GUEST; LODGER.

2. A table at which a council is held; hence, an authorized assembly. More particularly, a number of persons organized to execute a trust or to perform some other representative or official business.

As, a board — of aldermen,[2] of arbitrators,[3] of directors,[4] of examiners[5] of candidates for admission to the bar, of examiners of patents,[6] of health,[7] of inspectors,[8] of liquidation,[9] of pardons,[10] of property, of public works, of revisers,[11] of supervisors, of trade, of trustees, of viewers,[12] of visitors,[13] poor-board, stock[14] and exchange[15] boards.

BOAT. See VESSEL.

BODY. Compare CORPUS.

1. The physical person. The natural body or such as is formed by the laws of God, as distinguished from an artificial body or such as is devised by human laws.[1]

In an indictment for murder, the trunk, in distinction from the head and limbs.[2]

See ARREST, 2; MAYHEM; SECURITY, Personal.

Heir or issue of the body. See HEIR; ISSUE, 5; TAIL.

Body-lifting or snatching. See BURIAL.

2. A number of individuals considered collectively, usually organized for a common purpose: as, a legislative body.

An artificial body or that devised by human laws.[3]

An artificial body can do only what is authorized by its charter or by law; a natural person or body, whatever is not forbidden by law.[4]

Body corporate or corporate body. An artificial body; a corporation, q. v.

Body politic. The governmental, sovereign power: a city or a State.

A body to take in succession, framed as to its capacity by policy, and, therefore, called by Littleton a body politic; and it is termed a corporation or body politic, because the persons are made into a body, and are of capacity to take, grant, etc., by a particular name.[1]

"Body corporate and politic" is said, in the older books, to be the most exact expression for a public corporation or corporation having powers of government.

The body politic is the "social compact by which the whole people covenant with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good."[2]

While that compact does not confer power upon the whole to control purely private rights, it authorizes laws requiring each to so act as not to injure another — which is the very essence of government.[3] See CORPORATION, Public.

3. The physical part or portion of a thing.

Body of a county or of a State. A county or a State considered in its territorial entirety, as distinguished from a portion of the territory, and from the legal corporation.

Jurisdiction in admiralty extends over a locality within the body of a State connecting with navigable waters although not affected by the ebb and flow of the tide.[4] See COUNTY.

Body of an instrument. The substantial operative part; the essential provisions: as, the body of a contract, note, statute, will. See TITLE, 2.

4. A number of particulars taken together: a systematic collection: as, a body of laws.

BONA. L. 1, adj. Good: a feminine form of bonus, q. v.

2, n. Goods, property: personalty, movables, chattels; assets.

Literally, valuables: the plural of bonum, a thing of value. Fr. biens.

Bona immobilia. Immovables.

Bona mobilia. Movables.

Bona notabilia. Property of sufficient value to be noted in an account.[5]

Debts evidenced by promissory notes are bona notabilia at the domicil of the debtor.[6]

Bona parapherna, or paraphernalia. Goods over and above dower. See PARAPHERNALIA.

---

[1] Riddle v. Welden, 5 Whart. 9, 14 (1839); Stone v. Matthews, 7 Hill, 428 (1844).

[2] Which last word see.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 467.

[4] Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 149 (1860).

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 467.

[6] Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 177 (1868); Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 id. 81 (1870).

[1] Lord Coke, quoted in People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 334 (1835): Vin. Abr. Corp. (A, 2).

[2] Constitution of Massachusetts.

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 124 (1876), Waite, C. J.; 1 Bl. Com. 467.

[4] Genesee Chief, 12 How. 443 (1851); 1 Black, 560; 7 Wall. 637.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 509; 74 Me. 89.

[6] Moore v. Jordan, 36 Kan. 275 (1887), cases; Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654 (1884), cases.

Bona peritura. Perishable property. See PERISHABLE.

Bona vacantia. Unclaimed property.[1]

Bona waviata. Property thrown away. See WAIF.

De bonis. As to goods; concerning property or assets.

De bonis asportatis. See ASPORTARE.

De bonis non. See ADMINISTER, 4.

De bonis propriis. Out of his own property.

Said of a judgment rendered against an executor or administrator, which is to be satisfied out of his property; as, when he has wasted the assets or falsely pleaded "no assets."

De bonis testatoris. Out of the property of the testator.

Describes a judgment rendered against an executor, which is to be satisfied out of the estate of the decedent.

Another form of judgment is de bonis testatoris cum (or quando) acciderint: out of the assets of the testator when they shall have come to hand.

Still another form is de bonis testatoris si, et non si, de bonis propriis: out of the assets of the testator if (there are any), and if not, out of his own property.

Even if it happens that the executor has received assets, still the judgment should be against him, in his representative character, to be levied out of the assets in his hands, when no devastavit is averred and proved, unless it appears that no such assets can be found; in which event the judgment may, if so ordered, be levied out of his own proper goods.[2]

Nulla bona. No goods; no property.

The return to an execution when no property is found on which to make a levy; also, the plea by a garnishee that he has in his possession nothing belonging to or no money due to the debtor.

BOND. That which binds; any instrument in writing that legally binds a party to do a certain thing. "Bond," "obligation," and "instrument in writing" are sometimes used as convertible terms.[3]

A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day appointed.[1] See OBLIGE.

If that be all, the bond is "single" [or "common"]; but there is generally a condition added that if the obligor does a particular act the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force: as, pay rent, perform a covenant, or repay the principal of a sum borrowed, with interest, which principal is usually one-half of a specified penal sum. In case this condition is not performed the bond becomes forfeited, or "absolute," at law, and charges the obligor, while living, and, after his death, descends upon his heir.[1]

A deed or obligatory instrument, in writing, whereby one binds himself to another to pay a sum of money or to do some other act.[2]

Contains an obligation with a penalty, and a condition which expressly mentions what is to be done and the time within which it must be done.[2]

At common law, and at the present time, imports a sealed instrument.[2]

Bonds are either negotiable or non-negotiable. The former pass ownership by mere delivery; the latter, by written transfer, duly signed, sealed, and, perhaps, attested.

Bond-book. A book in which original, perhaps official, bonds are executed or preserved.

Bondsman. One who by a sealed instrument engages that if another person (the principal) fails to do a specified thing he will pay a certain sum of money; a surety, q. v.

Counter-bond. A bond given in a judicial proceeding in opposition to another bond previously furnished by an adversary.

Thus, in replevin, the plaintiff may give a bond for the protection of the officer in taking the property and the defendant execute a counter-bond for holding it.

Forthcoming bond. Security that property levied upon will be produced when wanted. See further FORTHCOMING.

Income bonds. Corporate "income bonds" are bonds payable out of the net income of the corporation by which they are issued.

Such bonds may be negotiable or unnegotiable. They may be payable only out of the net income, or unconditionally. They may bear a fixed rate of interest, or be graduated by the amount of net earnings, or at a certain per centum thereof; and they may or may not have interest-coupons attached.[4]

---

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 298.

[2] Smith v. Chapman, 93 U. S. 43 (1876), cases; McLaughlin v. Winner, 63 Wis. 128-29 (1885), cases; 29 Minn. 296.

[3] [Courand v. Vollmer, 31 Tex. 401 (1868), Morrill, C. J. Compare 108 U. S. 189; 110 id. 739.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 340, 456.

[2] Boyd v. Boyd, 2 Nott & McC. *126 (S. C., 1819), Gantt, J.

[3] Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 673 (1881), Harlan, J.

[4] See 25 Am. Law Reg. 553-61 (1886), cases.

Official bond. An obligation with sureties given by a public officer as security for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. See OFFICER.

Public bond. The obligation of a nation, State, or public corporation, to pay money at or within a specified time; municipal, State, or government bonds.

Holders of government bonds must be presumed to have knowledge of the laws by authority of which they were created and put into circulation, and of all lawful acts done by government officers under these laws. The obligations of the United States under the five-twenty bonds, consols of 1865, are governed by the law-merchant regulating negotiable securities, modified only, if at all, by the laws authorizing their issue.[1]

Refunding bond. An obligation to pay back money in the event of it appearing that the money should not have been paid.

As, a bond to return the whole or a part of a legacy should the assets of the estate be found insufficient to pay all demands upon it.

Other terms descriptive of bonds are: administration, appeal, arbitration, bail, bottomry, distiller's, duty, estrepement, injunction, joint or joint and several, judgment, post-obit, replevin, respondentia, railway aid, qq. v.

In an action of debt upon a non-negotiable bond, the demand is for the penalty. The condition is no part of the obligation. A judgment for the penalty will be released on performance of the condition.[2]

See OBLIGATION, 3, 4; RECOGNIZANCE; CONDITION; DATE; FACE, 1; FAITHFULLY; HOLDER; MORTGAGE; PARTY, 2; PENALTY; SEAL, 1; SURETY.

School-district, city, county, State, railway aid, and other corporation bonds, payable to bearer, have the qualities of negotiable instruments. Therein depends their value, mainly.[3] They are the representatives of money because issued in negotiable form.[4]

The expectation being that they will be put upon distant markets, the purchaser is assured that conditions precedent to their lawful issue have been complied with. He is bound to know the law which confers the power to issue the bonds on the specified contingency; but that that contingency has happened is a question of fact not for him to decide.[5]

If any essential proceeding, prescribed by law, be dispensed with, the bonds will be invalid in the hands of a person not a bona fide purchaser. If a statute is referred to on the face of the bond, a dealer is supposed to know all of its requirements.[1]

When the purchaser has a certificate of a fact he need not inquire whether the fact is as certified.[2]

A recital of circumstances which bring it within the power of the proper authorities to issue the bonds estops denial of the truth of the circumstances.[3] The statute must confer power to issue the bonds, in express terms or by reasonable implication.[4] The holder is chargeable with notice of the statutory provisions and of recitals in the bond.[5]

The corporation acts through its agents, and whenever they have power to decide that a condition precedent has been met (as that the required portion of the voters of a town have petitioned for a subscription in aid of a railroad), their determination of that fact, or their recital of that determination in a series of bonds subsequently issued and held by bona fide purchasers, is binding upon the corporation. The recital is a decision of the fact by the appropriate tribunal; and proof that such recital is incorrect is no defense. But where there is no recital the question is open.[6]

The Supreme Court of the United States has uniformly held that where a statute confers power upon a municipal corporation, after the performance of certain precedent conditions, to execute bonds in aid of the construction of a railroad, or for other like purpose, and imposes upon certain officers — invested with authority to determine whether such conditions have been performed — the responsibility of issuing them when such conditions have been complied with, recitals by such officers that the bonds have been issued "in pursuance of," or "in conformity with," or "by virtue of," or "by authority of," the statute, import, in favor of bona fide purchasers for value, full compliance with the statute, and preclude inquiry as to whether the precedent conditions had been performed before the bonds had issued. But in all such cases the recitals have imported a compliance, in all substantial respects, with the statute giving authority to issue the bonds. Sound public policy forbids enlarging or extending the rule. Where the holder relies for protection upon mere recitals, in order to estop the corporation from showing that the bonds were issued in violation or without authority of law, the recitals should be clear and unambiguous.[7] [1] Morgan v. United States, 113 U. S. 476, 490 (1885), limiting Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700 (1868).

---

[2] Farni v. Tesson, 1 Black, 314 (1861); 2 Bl. Com. 341.

[3] Mercer County v. Hacket, 1 Wall. 95 (1863), Grier, J.; Commissioners of Knox County v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539 (1858), Nelson, J.; Pompton v. Cooper Union, 101 U. S. 204 (1879); Wadsworth v. Supervisors, 102 id. 534 (1880); 19 Blatch. 371.

[4] Bailey v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 22 Wall. 636 (1874).

[5] Town of Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 487, 490, 486 (1875), cases. Strong, J.; Pana v. Bowler, 107 id. 539 (1882); North. Bank of Toledo v. Porter Township, 110 id. 616 (1884); Dixon County v. Field, 111 id. 93–94 (1883), cases.

[1] McClure v. Township of Oxford, 94 U. S. 432 (1876).

[2] Menasha v. Hazard, 102 U. S. 95 (1880); Sherman County v. Simons, 109 id. 735 (1884), cases.

[3] Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 290 (1880), cases; Louisiana v. Wood, ib. 294 (1880); 3 McCrary, 35.

[4] Wells v. Supervisors, 102 U. S. 625 (1880).

[5] Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 695 (1880), cases.

[6] Commissioners v. Aspinwall, Pompton v. Cooper Union, ante; Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 24 How. 287 (1860); St. Joseph Township v. Rogers, 16 Wall. 659–66 (1872), cases; Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 id. 681 (1870).

[7] School District (Iowa) v. Stone, 106 U. S. 187 (1882), Harlan, J.; Pana v. Bowler, 107 id. 539–40 (1882), cases.

A municipal corporation without legislative authority cannot issue bonds in aid of any extraneous object. Every person at his peril must take notice of the terms of the law by which it is claimed the power to issue bonds is conferred. The particular law forms a part of the bonds, as if incorporated in them. The holder is chargeable with notice of all statutory provisions.[1]

Unlike business, the powers of municipal, corporations, unless otherwise directed by express or implied grant, are limited to such as are governmental or administrative, to such as are necessary to conserve the purposes of their organism.[2]

A purchaser takes the risk of the genuineness of an official signature. This includes the official character of him who makes the signature.[3]

A statute which authorizes a town to contract a debt payable in money implies the duty to levy taxes to pay the debt, unless some other source of payment is provided. If there is no power in the legislature to authorize such levy, the statute and forms of contract based thereon are void.[4]

See AID, 1, Municipal; COUPON; STOCK, 3 (2); TAX, 2.

BONE-BLACK. See MANUFACTURE.

BONUS. 1. Lat. Good.

Bona fides. Good faith. See FIDES.

Boni judicis. See JUDEX, 2, Boni, etc.

2. Eng. (1) Not a gift or gratuity, but a sum paid for services, or upon a consideration in addition to or in excess of that which would ordinarily be given.[5]

A State may exact a bonus for the grant of a franchise, payable in advance or in futuro (as, one-fifth of the fare paid by passengers to a railroad company), although it affects the charge which the donee of the franchise will have to exact. Such bonus differs in principle from a tax on transportation between States, which is an interference and regulation of commerce.[6]

(2) A premium paid for the use of money beyond the legal rate of interest.

Although one portion of the sum be called interest and another portion a bonus, the contract is still usurious.[7]

Usury laws cannot be evaded by an understanding which assumes the distinctness of a contract for the payment of additional interest as a bonus.[1]

BOOK. Any literary composition which is printed, or printed and bound into a volume.

1. In copyright law, the form of the publication is not material — the term may include a single sheet.

So held in 1809, under the statute of 8 Anne (1710), § 1;[2] and so held ever since.[3]

Under the copyright act of March 3, 1865, § 4, book includes every volume and part of a volume, together with all maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto; with a copy of any subsequent edition published with additions.[4]

A single sheet of music has been held to be a book;[5] so, a diagram of patterns;[2] but not a mere label,[6] nor a prices-current.[6] The test is the subject-matter, not the size, form, or shape.[5, 6]

Although the legal definition of the word may be more extensive than that given by lexicographers, including a sheet as well as a volume, yet it necessarily conveys the idea of thought or conceptions clothed in language or in musical characters, written, printed, or published. Its identity does not consist merely in ideas, knowledge or information communicated, but in the same conceptions clothed in the same words, making it the same composition. A "copy" of a book must, therefore, be a transcript of the language in which the conceptions of the author are clothed; of something printed and embodied in a tangible shape.[7]

See CHART; COPYRIGHT; PRINT.

2. In post-office law, a pamphlet of twenty-four pages, consisting of a sheet and a half secured together by stitching, with a cover of four pages and a title-page, may be described as a book.[8] See MAIL, 2.

Book-account. An account evidenced by one or more books regularly kept in the particular business or calling.

Book of accounts; or account-book. A book in which are entered the transactions of the owner's business; a creditor's book of entries, exhibiting, in detail, the transactions had with a person alleged to be his debtor.

---

[1] National Bank of the Republic v. City of St. Joseph, 31 F. R. 219 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.

[2] Holmes v. City of Shreveport, 31 F. R. 121 (1887), Boarman, J.

[3] Anthony v. County of Jasper, 101 U. S. 699 (1879), Waite, C. J.

[4] Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 658–67 (1874), cases, Miller, J.; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 500 (1882). See generally Phelps v. Lewiston, 15 Blatch. 151–58 (1878); Smith v. Ontario, ib. 269 (1878); Stewart v. Lansing, ib. 287 (1878); Commonwealth ex rel. Whelen v. Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 66, 81 (1878); Pierce, Railroads, 97–109, cases; 26 Am. Law Reg. 209–22, 608–20 (1878), cases.

[5] Kenicott v. The Supervisors, 16 Wall. 471 (1872), Hunt, J.

[6] Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 473, 457 (1874), Bradley, J. See 3 How. 145–46.

[7] Mutual Sav. Bank v. Wilcox, 24 Conn. *158 (1855).

[1] 3 Pars. Contr. 113–14; 17 Cent. L. J. 103–5 (1883), cases.

[2] Clementi v. Golding, 2 Campb. 32 (1809), Ellenborough, C. J. See 11 East, 244.

[3] Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond, 540, 546 (1862), Leavitt, J.

[4] 13 St. L. 540; Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 62 (1869), Clifford, J.

[5] Coffeen v. Brunton, 4 McLean, 516 (1849).

[6] Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine, 382 (1825?).

[7] Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 565 (1853), Grier, J.; 2 Bl. Com. 406.

[8] United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 351 (1879). See R. S. § 3893.

Action of book-account. A remedy for collecting a balance due upon such dealings as are proper matters of book-account; an action of book-debt.

An account-book, regularly kept, may be received as evidence. And book-accounts are assets.[1] But a tally, a board, a slate, or loose sheets of paper, can hardly be said to constitute a book of accounts.[2] Yet there are not a few decisions to the effect that an account need not be kept in a bound volume.[3]

Book-entries. Particulars of a transaction recorded in a book of accounts.

Book of original entries. A book exhibiting the first or original charges made under a contract concerning merchandise, work and labor done, or services rendered.

To be admissible in evidence, the entries must be contemporaneous with the facts to which they relate; they must be made by a person having personal knowledge of the facts; and they must be corroborated by his testimony, if he is living and accessible, or by proof of his handwriting, if he is dead, insane, or beyond the reach of process. The witness need not remember the facts, if he will testify that he believed the entry to be true as set down.

It is not necessary that the transaction should have been directly between the original creditor and debtor; nor that the entries should have been against the interest of the person making them.[4]

As book-entries are received to prevent a failure of justice, their admissibility is limited by this necessity.[5]

Questions in relation to books of entry as evidence stand upon a new footing since the passage of statutes making parties witnesses. Formerly, the book itself was evidence, and the oath of the party supplementary. Now, the party himself is a competent witness, and may prove his own claim as a stranger would have done before the statutes were passed.[6]

The rule is that books of original entries, properly proved, are evidence of work and labor performed and of goods sold and delivered. To this rule are several exceptions; as, that the invoice book of an agent is not evidence of the sale and delivery of goods nor of goods to be delivered, nor is an entry evidence that is not in the course of the party's business. Books of original entry were formerly received in evidence from necessity. Where the transaction admits of more satisfactory evidence, they should not be received. Now that the parties are witnesses, care is to be taken not to enlarge the rule. In several States the account is not to exceed a sum specified. While there should be some limit to the amount, much more depends upon the nature of the item, and upon the evidence, outside of the book, which naturally exists to prove the item. The charges should be reasonably specific. Lumping charges are not admissible; as, entries like these: "B. Corr, Dr. July 13, 1880. To repairing brick machine, $1,932;" "190 days' work;" "seven gold watches, $308;" "13 dollars for medicine and attendance on one of the general's daughters, in curing the whooping cough."[1]

The books of a corporation are public as to its members, who for a proper purpose may examine them. Inspection of the books of a public office is permitted to any one interested in them, but not, if liable to affect public interests injuriously; of this the head of the department is to judge. Mandamus is the remedy by which to obtain an inspection and copies of such books, in which the petitioner has an interest.[2] See PRODUCE, 1.

Books on medicine, agriculture, science, and the like, not being subjects of cross-examination, are not admissible as evidence. But an approved history, being a quasi-public document, is receivable to prove a general fact of ancient date, a general custom, or any like matter.[3] See EXPERT; HISTORY; SCIENTIFIC.

A record in a Bible or other book, by a deceased relative, as to pedigree (q. v.) is receivable as a declaration.[4]

The results of an examination of many books may sometimes be proved.[5] See ACCOUNT, 1.

Under statutes in some States, school-books and Bibles are exempted from levy and sale.

The pledgee of a book must use it carefully.[6]

See HORN, LETTER, LOG, MINUTE, PAPER, YEAR, BOOK; BAGGAGE; DOCUMENT; LOST, 2; MAIL, 2; OBSCENE; REFRESH; SUBPŒNA, DUCES, etc.

BORN. See CHILD; NATUS.

BOROUGH. 1. A town, whether corporate or not, that sends burgesses to parliament.[7]

2. A town or city organized for purposes of government.[8]

In the United States, not extensively used with any precise meaning. In Connecticut and Pennsylvania,

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 115–18; 55 Vt. 347; 3 Bl. Com. 368.

[2] Richardson v. Wingate, 10 West. Law J. 146 (1853), Matthews, J.

[3] Price v. The Earl, 1 Sm. L. C. 535–77, cases; 2 Harr., Del., 288; 4 id. 532; 12 Bankr. Reg. 390.

[4] Town of Bridgewater v. Town of Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217 (1886), cases.

[5] Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 541 (1873), cases, Field, J.; Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Weide, 9 id. 680 (1869), cases; Burley v. German American Bank, 111 U. S. 216 (1884); 20 Wend. 74–76; 70 Iowa, 376; 132 Mass. 478; 59 Miss. 378; 21 W. Va. 301, 308–11; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 115–17, 120, 151–54, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 678–88, cases.

[6] Nichols v. Haynes, 76 Pa. 176 (1875).

[1] Corr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 170–71 (1882), cases, Mercur, J.; Laird v. Campbell, ib. 159, 165 (1882); Vinal v. Gilman, 21 W. Va. 301 (1883).

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 474–78, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 663, 663, cases.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 440, 497, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 664–70, cases. As to medical books see, especially, Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148 (1883); Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 478 (1883), cases; 60 Cal. 581.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104.

[5] Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 136 (1873).

[6] 2 Pars. Contr. 111.

[7] [1 Bl. Com. 114; 2 id. 82; 41 Mo. 175.

[8] See 1 Steph. Com. 116; 3 id. 191.

a part of a township having a charter for municipal purposes.

Borough and village may be duplicate names for the same thing.[1] See TOWN.

Borough English. A custom prevalent in some parts of England (chiefly in old boroughs) by which the youngest son inherited the father's estate.

So called to distinguish it from the Norman rule of primogeniture, q. v.

The oldest sons were provided for as they grew up; the younger remained at home and might have been left destitute but for this law.[2]

Burgess. 1. An inhabitant of a borough; also, the representative of a borough in the house of commons.

2. A magistrate of an incorporated town.

3. The chief administrative officer of an incorporated town.[3]

BORROW. While often used in the sense of obtaining a thing to be returned in specie, is not limited to that sense. There may be a borrowing where an equivalent is paid annually in the form of interest, though the contract be perpetual and the loan irredeemable.[4]

"Borrowing" imports a promise or understanding that what is borrowed will be repaid or returned, the thing itself or something like it of equal value, with or without compensation for the use of it. To borrow is reciprocal with "to lend."[5] See LOAN.

Under the usury laws of New York the word "borrower" includes any person who is a party to the original contract or in any way liable for the loan.[6]

Power to "borrow money," vested in public authorities, may not include power to issue bonds for the purpose — as, to erect a court-house.[7] See PURPOSE, Public; TENDER, Legal (2).

BOTE.[8] Compensation, recompense; satisfaction, amends.

Synonymous with French estovers, q. v. House-bote: sufficient wood from another's land to repair, or to be burnt in, one's house; whence fire-bote. Plough-bote, cart-bote: wood for making and repairing instruments of husbandry. Hay-bote, hedge-bote: wood for repairing hay, hedges, or fences.[9]

Theft-bote. Where a person who has been robbed takes his goods back, or receives other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute the felon.[1]

Bote is supposed to be preserved in the expressions "What boots it," and "to boot."

BOTTLE. See LEAKAGE; SEAL, 5.

A demijohn holding four gallons is not a "bottle" within the meaning of a statute requiring imported liquors to be put up in packages of not less than one dozen bottles each.[2]

An indictment for the larceny of "bottles" of liquor was held not sustained by proof of the larceny of liquor in bottles belonging to the accused, into which he had drawn the liquor.[3]

BOTTOMRY. A contract in the nature of a mortgage on a ship: when the owner borrows money to enable him to carry on his voyage, and pledges the keel or bottom of the ship as security for the repayment.[4]

"Bottom" was formerly used for ship or vessel.

Bottomry bond. The instrument which evidences a contract of bottomry.

In the sense of the general maritime law, and independent of the peculiar regulations of the positive codes of different commercial nations, a contract for a loan of money on the bottom of a ship, at an extraordinary rate of interest, upon maritime risks, to be borne by the lender for a voyage, or for a definite period.[5]

Blackstone and others speak of bottomry contracts of the owner only, omitting those of the master, which are now the more common, and are strictly for the necessities of the ship.[6]

A contract by which the owner of a ship hypothecates or binds the ship as security for the repayment of money advanced for the use of the ship.[6]

The contract creates a lien on the ship enforceable in admiralty on arrival at the port of destination, but void in the event of loss before arrival. The hazard being extraordinary, the rate of interest is high.[7]

To justify giving the bond, it is essential that there be a necessity, as, for repairs, and a necessity for resorting to the bond to procure the proper funds. There is no such necessity when the master has funds or can get funds on the credit of the owner.[8]

The vital principle is that the case is one of unprovided and real necessity, and that neither master nor owner has funds or credit available.[7]

---

[1] Brown v. State, 18 Ohio St. 507 (1869).

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 75; 2 id. 83.

[3] Wharton's Law Dict.; 1 Bl. Com. 174.

[4] Appeal of Phila. & Reading R. Co., 89 Leg. Int. 96 (Pa., 1882); State v. School District, 13 Neb. 88 (1882).

[5] Kent v. Quicksilver Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 177 (1879), Folger, J.

[6] National Bank v. Lewis, 75 N. Y. 523 (1878), cases.

[7] Lewis v. Sherman County, 1 McCrary, 377 (1881).

[8] A. S. bot, profit; M. E. bote, boote.

[9] [2 Bl. Com. 35; 1 Wash. R. P. 99.

[1] [4 Bl. Com. 133; 16 Mass. 93; 44 N. H. 16.

[2] U. S. v. Demijohns of Rum, 8 F. R. 485 (1880).

[3] Commonwealth v. Gavin, 121 Mass. 54 (1876).

[4] [2 Bl. Com. 457.

[5] The Draco, 2 Sumn. 186, 173–89 (1835), cases, Story, J.

[6] Braynard v. Hoppock, 32 N. Y. 573 (1865), Wright, J.

[7] The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 135 (1869), Chase, C. J.; 26 Wend. 575; 32 N. Y. 573.

[8] The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 233–37 (1838), cases, Story, J

Such contracts seem to have been first recognized among the ancient Rhodians. They are allowed for the benefit of commerce. When bona fide, they will be upheld by the courts with a strong hand. They cover accruing freight, as well as the ship itself. They are to be liberally construed.[1]

There is no prescribed form for a bond. Any words indicating the amount of the loan, the interest to be paid, the names of the contracting parties, the name of the vessel, the limits of the voyage as to ports and time, the nature of the risks, and the period for repayment, will ordinarily be sufficient.

The lien created takes precedence over other liens, except liens for seaman's wages.

The bonds are usually negotiable instruments.

See HYPOTHECATION; RESPONDENTIA.

BOUGHT. See BUY; NOTE, 1.

BOULEVARD. Originally, a bulwark or rampart; afterward, a public walk or road on the side of a demolished fortification; now, a public drive.

Not, technically, a street, avenue, or highway, though a carriage-way over it is a feature. Refers to an area set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement.[2]

BOUND, v. See BAILIFF; BIND; BOND.

BOUND, n.; BOUNDARY. Bound: a limit; boundary: a visible line designating a limit. The terms are often interchanged.[3]

Bounds. The legal, imaginary line by which different parcels of land are divided.

The "bounds of a river" may refer to the center line of the river.[4]

Artificial boundary. An object erected by man for designating the limit of an ownership in land; as, a post, a fence, or other monument.

Natural boundary. Any natural object remaining where placed by nature; as, a spring, a stream, a tree.

Private boundary and public boundary are used.

The most material and most certain calls control those which are less material and less certain. A call for a natural object, as, a river, a stream, a spring, or a marked tree, controls both course and distance.[5]

Courses and distances yield to natural and ascertained objects. Artificial and natural objects called for have the same effect. In a case of doubtful construction the claim of the party in actual possession will be maintained.[6]

Monuments control courses, and specific courses a general course.[1]

On a question of private boundary, declarations of a particular fact, as distinguished from reputation, made by a deceased person, are not admissible unless it is shown that such person had knowledge of that whereof he spoke and was on the land or in possession of it when the declaration was made — as part of the res gestæ.[2]

Where a disputed boundary between States is settled, grants previously made by one of lands claimed by it, and over which it exercised political jurisdiction, but which, on the adjustment of the boundary, are found to be within the territory of the other State, are void, unless confirmed by the latter State; but such confirmation cannot affect the titles of the same lands previously granted by the latter State.[3]

See ABUT; AT, 2; CALL, 2 (2); CONFUSION; DESCRIPTION; LINE, 1; MONUMENT, 1; THREAD.

BOUNTY.[4] Money paid or a premium offered [usually by government] to encourage or promote an object, or procure a particular thing to be done. The context may restrict the meaning.[5]

"A premium offered or given to induce men to enlist into the public service." That is a proper and intelligent definition, indicating clearly that the word is only applicable to the payment made to the enlisted man, as the inducement for his service, and not as a premium paid to the man by whose procurement the recruit is mustered.[6]

Bounties have also been established for those who kill dangerous animals or noxious creatures, or who engage in a particular business or industry which it is desired to encourage, as in a fishery, or in the manufacture of salt.

While bounties are usually paid in money, they may be paid in land. Whence bounty lands, and bounty-land warrants.

Land or money, other than current salary or pay, granted by the government to a person entering the military or naval service, has always been called a bounty; and while it is by no means a "gratuity," because the promise to grant it is one of the considerations for which the soldier or sailor enters the service, yet it is clearly distinguishable from "salary" or pay measured by the time of service.[7]

---

[1] The Albro, 10 Bened. 671-72 (1879), cases; 1 Pet. *435-37; 3 Kent, 353; 2 Bl. Com. 457.

[2] People ex rel. Seaver v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 445 (1873), Fancher, J.

[3] See Webster's Dict.

[4] Walton v. Tift, 14 Barb. 221 (1852).

[5] Newsom v. Pryor, 7 Wheat. 10 (1810), Marshall, C. J.; Brown v. Huger, 21 How. 321 (1858).

[6] County of St. Clair v. Lovingston, 23 Wall. 62 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.

[1] Grand County v. Larimer County, 9 Col. 230 (1886).

[2] Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 364, 363 (1880), cases. See generally 2 Washb. R. P. 630-33, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 145, 301, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 185-91, cases; 28 Am. Law Reg. 546-48 (1880), cases. The highway as a boundary, 36 Alb. Law J. 305-8 (1887), cases.

[3] Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 10 (1887), cases, Bradley, J. Boundary between Georgia and Florida.

[4] L. bonitas, goodness, gratuity: bonus, good.

[5] Fowler v. Selectmen of Danvers, 8 Allen, 84 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[6] Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Pr. 488 (1870), Bacon, J.

[7] Five Per Cent. Cases, 110 U. S. 479 (1884), Gray, J.

General encouragements, held out to all persons indiscriminately, to engage in a particular trade or manufacture, whether in the shape of bounties or drawbacks, or other advantage, are always under legal control and may be discontinued at any time. Thus a law offering a sum for every bushel of salt manufactured in a State is a general law, regulative of internal economy, dependent for its continuance upon the dictates of public policy, and the voluntary good faith of the legislature. Such law does not belong to the class denominated "contracts," except so far as actually executed and complied with.[1]

BOX. See BALLOT-BOX; JURY-BOX.

BOYCOTTING. A combination between persons to suspend or discontinue dealings or patronage with another person or persons because of refusal to comply with a request made of him or them. The purpose is to constrain acquiescence or to force submission on the part of the individual who, by noncompliance with the demand, has rendered himself obnoxious to the immediate parties, and, perhaps, to their personal and fraternal associates.

The persons directly so confederating have hitherto as a class been employees as against either their own employer or the employer of others in a like business, or else of retail dealers as against a particular manufacturer or wholesale dealer.

The means employed have been the withdrawal of the custom and good-will in business of the immediate parties and of such others as they could influence.

The word may refer to the fact of combining or to the resolution as executed.

The practice takes its name from one Boycott, an agent for Lord Erne on certain estates in the western part of Ireland. Having lost favor with the tenants, from evictions and other harsh treatment, they agreed not to work for him, and the tradesmen of the community not to deal with him.

"The word in itself implies a threat. In popular acceptation it is an organized effort to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation and other acts which tend to violence, and thereby coerce him, through fear of resulting injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs."[2]

Any such combination is, and ever has been, at common law, a conspiracy, the unlawfulness consisting in the agreement for the concerted action; and aptly illustrates the well-settled principle that two or more persons may not combine to do toward another what one individual of his own accord might not unlawfully do.

"The doctrine to be gathered from the cases seems to be that a conspiracy of this kind ceases to be legal when the means designed . . are characterized by force, threats, intimidation, molestation, improper interference, or compulsion."[1]

It is against the criminal law for a number of men to band together for the purpose, through the power of combination, of injuring the business of another, by parading before his door, by placarding themselves with the word "boycott," by advising passers-by not to patronize the establishment, by distributing circulars filled with accusations and justifying the boycott, and by other devices calculated to induce the public to keep away from the alleged wrong-doer,—provided that the persons so engaged use force, threats, or intimidation. To constitute intimidation it is not necessary that there should be an overt act of violence or any direct threat by word of mouth: it is enough if the attitude of the accused was intimidating; and this may be shown by their numbers, methods, placards, circulars, and other devices. If the attitude and method is such as to deter any of the complainant's customers, even the most timid, from entering his place of business, or to inspire any portion of the general public with a sense of danger in ignoring their appeals, there is intimidation. In New York procuring money from another with his consent obtained by fear, induced by threat to do or to continue an injury to his property, constitutes "extortion;" and every person present when the money, or the agreement under which it was paid, is obtained, and who aids and abets the person to whom it is paid, by personal participation or by silently acquiescing in the threats made by his associates speaking in their joint behalf, is liable as a principal, and he need not be present when the money is actually received.[2]

Associations have no more right to inflict injury upon others than have individuals. All combinations and associations designed to coerce workmen to become members or to interfere with, obstruct, vex or annoy them in working or in obtaining work because they are not members, or to induce them to become members; or designed to prevent employers from making a just discrimination in the wages paid to the skillful and the unskillful, the diligent and the lazy, the efficient and the inefficient; and all associations designed to interfere with the perfect freedom of employers in the proper management of their lawful business, or to dictate the terms upon which their

[1] Salt Company v. East Saginaw, 13 Wall. 379 (1871), Bradley, J. See also Commissioners v. Woodstock Iron Co., 83 Ky. 153 (1886), cases.

[2] Brace Brothers v. Evans et al., C. P. No. 1, Allegheny Co., Pa. (April 21, 1888), Slagle, J.: 35 Pitts. Leg. J. 399, 405. See "England under Gladstone," McCarthy

[1] 10 Va. Law J. 709 (Sept., 1886), Atkins, J., in Crump v. Commonwealth. Affirmed, May 24, 1888.

[2] People v. Wilzig, 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 403 (O. & T. N. Y. Co., June, July, 1886), Barrett, J. Sometimes called Theiss's Case. N. Y. Penal Code, §§ 552–53. See also People v. Lenhardt, ib. 317 (June, 1886).

business shall be conducted by means of threats of injury or loss, by interference with their property or traffic, or with their lawful employment of other persons, or designed to abridge any of those rights,—are pro tanto illegal combinations; and all acts done in furtherance of such intentions by such means and accompanied by damage are actionable.[1]

An act of Wisconsin, approved April 2, 1887 (Laws, ch. 287), provides that: Any two or more persons who shall combine, associate, agree, mutually undertake, or concert together for the purpose of willfully or maliciously injuring another in his reputation, trade, business or profession, by any means whatever, or for the purpose of maliciously compelling another to do or perform any act against his will, or preventing or hindering another from doing or performing any lawful act, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars.[2]

See further COMBINATION, 2; CONSPIRACY; INJURY, Irreparable; STRIKE, 2. Compare BLACK-LISTING. See also ASSEMBLY, Unlawful; RIOT.

BRAKEMAN. See ADMISSION, 2; NEGLIGENCE.

BRANCH. See RAILROAD.

BRAND. To burn; to mark, stamp.

In common pariance, to mark. What was formerly done by a hot iron in the way of marking packages is now done by the stencil plate. In referring to marks upon packages of merchandise, the use of stencil plates is denominated "branding" quite as often as otherwise. "To brand" has become an equivalent expression with to stamp and to mark.[3] See BURN.

BRAWL. A noisy quarrel; uproar.

"Brawl" and "tumult" are correlative terms. They refer to the same kind of disturbance of the peace, produced by the same class of agents, and well define one and the same offense.[4] See PEACE, 1.

BREACH. Breaking, violation, infraction.

1. A violation of duty or obligation. 2. The part of a declaration which charges the violation of a contract. See DAMAGES.

Breach of close. An unlawful entry upon land. See CLOSE, 3.

Breach of contract or covenant. A failure to observe the conditions of a contract. See CONTRACT; COVENANT.

Breach of pound. The forcible removal of a thing lawfully impounded. Also called pound-breach. See POUND, 2.

Breach of prison. Escape from lawful confinement in a prison. Also called prison-breach. See ESCAPE, 1 (2).

Breach of privilege. Violation of the privilege of a legislature. See PRIVILEGE, 4.

Breach of promise. Failure to solemnize a contract of marriage, q. v.

Breach of the peace. Disturbance of the public order. See PEACE, 1.

Breach of trust. Violation of the duty imposed by an instrument creating a trust; also, willful misappropriation of a thing bailed. See TRUST, 1.

Breach of warranty. Where a contract of warranty is broken in any of its conditions. See WARRANTY.

Continuing breach. Describes acts in violation of one's duty, continuous or repeated at short intervals.

BREAD ACTS. Statutes providing for the sustenance of persons confined in jail for civil causes have been so called.[1]

BREAD AND WATER. To be fed on bread and water was part of the punishment imposed under the Great Law of the province of Pennsylvania (1682) for swearing, profanity, cursing, drunkenness, and offenses of like grade.[2]

This is also sometimes made the diet of persons held in confinement who refuse to obey reasonable prison-rules.

BREAK. 1. To sever by fracture; to part or divide with force or violence; also, to lay open or uncover.

Break bulk. For a bailee to open a box or package intrusted to his custody and fraudulently appropriate the contents.[3] See LARCENY, By bailee.

Break doors. To remove the fastenings of a house with force, so that a person, as, an officer executing process, may enter. See HOUSE.

Break ground. See FREIGHT, Affreightment; SAILING.

---

[1] Old Dominion Steamship Co. v. McKenna, U. S. Cir. Ct., S. D. N. Y. (Feb. 25, 1887), cases, Brown, J.: 30 F. R. 48, 35 Alb. Law J. 208, 26 Am. Law Reg. 423-32, cases, 18 Abb. N. Cas. 262, 281, cases. See also State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 76 (April, 1887): 35 Alb. Law J. 348, 3 N. E. Rep. 849; 9 Cr. Law Mag. 1-17 (Jan., 1887), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 41-69 (Feb., 1887), cases; ib. 509-32 (1887), cases; State v. Stewart, Sup. Ct. Vt. (May, 1887), cases: 36 Alb. Law J. 9-11 (1887); 35 id. 208, 284-26 (1887), cases; 22 Am. Law Rev. 233 (April, 1888), cases; 3 Kans. Law J. 273 (1886).

[2] Compare Penn. Acts 8 May, 1869, 14 June, 1872, 20 April, 1876: Purd. Dig. 1172. Applied, Brace Brothers v. Evans et al., ante.

[3] Dibble v. Hathaway, 11 Hun, 575-76 (1877), Bockes, J.

[4] State v. Perkins, 42 N. H. 465 (1861).

[1] See 49 Conn. 87, 89; 91 U. S. 300; 3 Bl. Com. 416; 1 Brightly, T. & H. § 1426.

[2] Laws of Prov. of Penn., Linn, 110-111.

[3] 1 Pick. 375; 4 Mass. 580.

Break jail or prison. To escape from a place of lawful confinement. See ESCAPE, 1.

Break seals. See SEAL, 1, 4.

2. In burglary and house-breaking, to remove any part of the house, or of the fastenings provided to secure it against intrusion, with intent to commit a felony.

Such breaking is actual when force is used; and constructive when an entry is effected by fraud, conspiracy, or threat.[1] See further BURGLARY.

3. To violate a duty or engagement: as, to break a contract. See BREACH.

4. To establish, in a judicial proceeding, the invalidity of an alleged will. See CONTEST.

BREAST OF THE COURT. This expression, much used by the older writers, seems to mean the sound discretion, the conscience and judgment, of the judge or judges of a court.

During the term the record is in the breast of the court.[2]

In a trial per testes the judge is left to form in his own breast his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined.[3]

The liberty of considering all questions in an equitable light might leave the decision of every question entirely in the breast of the judge.[4]

BREVE. L. A writ; literally, short, brief, q. v. Also, an original writ. Plural, brevia.

Brevia were originally in the form of letters. They tersely stated the matter in question — rem quæ est breviter narrat. The species came to be known by some important word or phrase in the writ itself, or from the subject-matter; and this word or phrase, in turn, was transferred to the form of action in the prosecution of which the writ (breve) was procured.[5]

BREWER. See LIQUOR.

Every person, firm, or corporation who manufactures fermented liquors of any name or description, for sale, from malt, wholly or in part, or from any substitute thereof.[6] Compare DISTILLER.

BRIBERY. 1. In old English, theft, rapine, open violence, official extortion.

The rapacious dignitary was styled the briber, and he was said to bribe when he boldly grasped his prey; now, the tempter is the briber and the recipient the bribed.[7]

2. When a judge, or other person concerned in the administration of justice, takes any undue reward to influence his behavior in office.[1]

Giving (and perhaps offering) to another anything of value or any valuable service, intended to influence him in the discharge of a legal duty. It does not apply to a mere moral duty.[2]

The later and broader doctrine is that any attempt to influence an officer in his official conduct, whether in the executive, legislative, or judicial department of the government, by the offer of a reward or pecuniary consideration, is an indictable common-law misdemeanor.[3]

A candidate for a judgeship who pledges himself, if elected, to serve at a less salary than that provided by law, virtually bribes the masses to vote for him.[4]

Bribery in a judge of the United States courts, of a member of Congress, or of any officer of the United States, is punishable.[5]

The general election laws of Pennsylvania prohibiting bribery include caucuses as well as elections for State officers; and the constitutional prohibition against violation of any "election law" includes any law intended to purify elections, then or thereafter in force.[6] See CANDIDATE.

One who bribes another cannot maintain an action to recover the money.[7] Compare CORRUPT, 2.

BRIDGE. A structure of wood, iron, brick, or stone, ordinarily erected over a river, brook, or lake, for the more convenient passage of persons and beasts and the transportation of baggage.[8]

A structure, usually of wood, stone, brick, or iron, erected over a river or other watercourse, or over a ravine, railroad, etc., to make a continuous roadway from one bank to another.[9]

Formerly and strictly, the word, unqualified, imported a structure that had a pathway. In this sense

[1] See Timmons v. State, 34 Ohio St. 427–31 (1878), cases; 68 N. C. 207; 85 Pa. 54; 2 Chitty, Cr. L. 1092.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 407; 105 Ill. 668, 669.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 336.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 62; 112 U. S. 190.

[5] Coke, Litt. 73 b, 54 b; Steph. Pl. *27.

[6] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 117.

[7] Marsh, Lect. Eng. Lang. 249.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 139; 65 Ill. 65.

[2] Dishon v. Smith, 10 Iowa, 221 (1859).

[3] State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 103 (1868). See also 62 Cal. 493; 135 Mass. 530.

[4] People ex rel. Bush v. Thornton, 25 Hun, 465–66 (1881), cases. See also State v. Elting, 29 Kan. 399, 402–4 (1883), cases; Hall v. Marshall, 80 Ky. 553, 563–66 (1882), cases.

[5] R. S. §§ 5449–51, 5499–5502.

[6] Leonard v. Commonwealth, 112 Pa. 607, 626 (1886).

[7] Clark v. United States, 102 U. S. 322 (1880). See generally People v. Sharp, 10 N. Y. St. R. 522–77 (1887), cases, etc.

[8] Enfield Bridge Co. v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 17 Conn. 56 (1845), Williams, C. J.

[9] Webster's Dict.; Madison County v. Brown, 89 Ind.

a railroad bridge, being in the nature of a viaduct, is not a violation of a franchise for an ordinary toll-bridge.[1] See RAILROAD.

The word includes the structure itself and such abutments as are necessary to make the structure accessible and useful; but exactly what constitutes a bridge in a particular case is a question of fact.[2]

The approaches to a bridge, within reasonable limits, are a part of the bridge.[3] See ABUTMENT.

Free bridge. A bridge owned and maintained, usually by the public, free of charge to travelers. Toll bridge. A chartered bridge, with the right in its owners to collect toll in reimbursement of the cost of construction, repairs, etc.

Private bridge. A bridge for the use of individuals, generally its owners. Public bridge. A bridge which constitutes a part of the public highway, whether free or toll. See TOLL, 2.

A bridge is to be maintained (the repair being equal to the service expected) by its owner, whether a county, a township, a municipality, or a company. But the person or persons, as, a railway company, who makes the structure a necessity, is to make repairs; if he fails in this duty, the public authorities must make them at his expense.[4]

If a bridge is not kept in repair, redress may be had in court by indictment for maintaining a nuisance, by injunction, by quo warranto, by mandamus, and by suit for special damage suffered by any individual person.

A State may erect a bridge over a river, provided inter-State navigation is not thereby unreasonably obstructed.[5]

What the form and character of bridges over a navigable stream should be, that is, of what height and materials, and whether with or without draws, are matters for regulation by the particular State or States authorizing the construction, subject only to the paramount authority of Congress to prevent unnecessary obstruction to free navigation. Until Congress intervenes in such cases, and exercises its authority, the power of the State is plenary. . . Bridges are merely connecting lines of turnpikes, streets, and railroads; and the commerce over them may be much greater than that on the streams which they cross. A break in the line of railroad communication from the want of a bridge may produce greater inconvenience to the public than the obstruction of navigation caused by a bridge with proper draws. In such cases the local authority can best determine which of the two modes of transportation should be favored.[1]

Congress can empower a private corporation to occupy navigable waters within a State, and appropriate the soil under them, in order to construct a bridge for the purposes of inter-State commerce, against the protest of the State.[2]

The act of Congress of June 16, 1886, authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across Staten Island Sound, known as "Arthur Kill," and establishing the same as a post-road, is within the power to regulate commerce, to open up commercial communication between the States. Such privilege may be exercised without the consent of the State in which the structure is to be placed. The grant is, in effect, of the use of the soil, not an assumption of exclusive jurisdiction. The right of the State is not property susceptible of pecuniary compensation as "private property" taken for public use.[3]

Speaking generally, a chartered bridge will not be allowed near another bridge, nor near a ferry, having an older franchise.[4]

See COMMERCE; DRAWBRIDGE; FERRY; NAVIGATION.

BRIEF.[5] A concise statement; an epitome; an abridgment.

Sometimes used in a verbal sense, to reduce to the form of a brief, etc. See STATE, 1.

Brief of title. An abstract of the deeds, judicial proceedings, etc., which affect a title to realty. See further ABSTRACT, 2. Compare also SEA-BRIEF.

1. In very old law, a writ. See BREVE.

2. An abridged statement of a party's case, prepared by his counsel, usually for the information of the court on the matters of law involved.[6] See PAPER, 5.

In England the essentials of a case as prepared in writing by the solicitor or attorney for the use of the barrister who is to conduct the case in court is called "the brief" in the case. In America the term designates the memorandum counsel take into court or to a

---

88 (1883). See 5 South. Law Rev. 733-35 (1880), cases; 37 Me. 461; 122 Mass. 312; 41 Ohio St. 52; 110 U. S. 566; 6 Iowa, 455; Ang. Highw. § 35.

[1] Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land Co., 1 Wall. 149-51 (1863), cases; s. c., 2 Beasley, 508. See also Smith Bridge Co. v. Bowman, 41 Ohio St. 56-58 (1884).

[2] Tollard v. Willington, 26 Conn. 582-83 (1857), cases; Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 442 (1843).

[3] Rush County v. Rushville, &c. R. Co., 97 Ind. 505 (1882); Driftwood Valley Turnpike Co. v. Bartholomew County, 72 id. 226-38 (1880), cases; Whitcher v. Somerville, 136 Mass. 455 (1885).

[4] Penn. R. Co. v. Borough of Irwin, 85 Pa. 336 (1877); Shelby County v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 510-13 (1882), cases.

[5] Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 13 How. 562 (1851); People v. Kelly (East River Bridge), 5 Abb. N. Cas. 382, 420 (1879); 5 McLean, 425.

[1] Hamilton v. Vicksburg, &c. R. Co., 119 U. S. 281-82 (1886), Field, J.

[2] Decker v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co., 30 F. R. 724-28 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.

[3] Stockton, Attorney-General v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 9, 16 (1887), cases, Bradley, J. Same case, 36 Alb. Law J. 371.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 219; 4 id. 167; Enfield Toll Bridge v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 56 (1845), cases.

[5] F. bref; L. brevis, short.

[6] Gardner v. Stover, 43 Ind. 357, 356 (1873).

hearing before an auditor, master, or other commissioner, to assist in elucidating the law, and, perhaps, the facts in a particular case; also, the statement of the law (statutes, decisions, etc.) supposed to apply to a case pending before a court of review, and filed for the information of the court and of opposing counsel.[1]

Briefless. Without briefs; without business requiring the preparation of briefs; without clients.

Within the meaning of the rules of an appellate court, a "brief" is a statement of a case for the information of the court. It should furnish aid in deciding the case—show why the judgment below should be either reversed or affirmed.[1]

After the trial or argument of a cause, though the counsel of one of the parties gives notice that he will furnish the court a brief of authorities, a decision may be rendered without giving time for the preparation of the brief. The reception of briefs being for the assistance of the court, the judges, who are presumed to know the law, are not bound to receive them.[2]

BRING INTO COURT. See PAYMENT.

BRING SUIT. See BROUGHT; SUIT.

BRISTLES. See HAIR.

BRITISH. See STATUTE.

BROKER.[3] An agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade, commerce or navigation, for a compensation commonly called brokerage.[4]

Brokerage. The business of a broker; also, his remuneration or commission. Formerly spelled brokage and brocage.

The term "broker" is no longer limited to a person employed to negotiate contracts for the sale or exchange of goods, but is extended to almost every branch of business — to realty as well as to personalty.[5]

The term is applied, ordinarily, to one acting for others.[6]

A broker is a middleman, an intervenor between the buyer and the seller: a factor or agent who acts for one or the other.[7]

Brokers take their names from the kinds of contracts they negotiate. The more common classes are the following:

Bill and note brokers. These negotiate the purchase and sale of bills of exchange and promissory notes.

They impliedly warrant that the paper is as represented, with respect to the genuineness of signatures, but not as to the solvency of parties.[1]

Their usefulness would be destroyed if a purchaser was to be affected with their knowledge as to the character of the paper they offer in market for discount.[2] See Exchange Broker.

Commercial broker. A person who negotiates sales of merchandise, or contracts for freights, for other persons.

Within the meaning of the internal revenue laws a person who negotiates sales or purchases in the names of the parties primarily liable; not, one authorized to sell in his own name or on his own account.[3]

Any person or firm whose business it is, as a broker, to negotiate sales or purchases of goods, wares, or merchandise, or to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers, or consignors, or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded as a commercial broker.[4]

Exchange broker. A broker who negotiates bills of exchange, foreign or domestic.

Every person, firm, or company, whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank-notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker.[4] Compare Bill and Stock Broker.

Insurance broker. A person who negotiates contracts of insurance.

He is agent for both parties. An insurance agent is, ordinarily, the employee of the insurer only. See INSURANCE, Broker.

Merchandise broker. A broker who negotiates sales of merchandise without having possession or control of it. See FACTOR.

Pawnbroker. A person, usually licensed, who loans money, in small sums, at usurious interest, on the security of pledges of personalty. See further PAWN.

Produce-broker. A person whose occupation it is to buy and sell agricultural or farm-products.[5]

Not, then, one who sells from his own farm, or goes from house to house to sell his own produce.[6]

---

[1] Gardner v. Stover, ante.

[2] Van Dolsen v. Abendroth, N. Y. City, Mar. Ct., 15 Rep. 472 (1883).

[3] In Mid. Eng. an agent, a witness of a transaction. Probably allied to A. S. bru'can, to use, employ,—Skeat.

[4] Story, Agency, § 28; 83 N. Y. 381, infra.

[5] Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 443, 444-49 (1878), cases, Turner, S. J.

[6] Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 710 (1875), Hunt, J.

[7] [United States v. Simons, 1 Abb. U. S. 472-73 (1870), McCandless, J.

[1] Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. 439-41 (1849), cases; Morrison v. Currie, 4 Duer, 82-85 (1854), cases; Aldrich v. Jackson, 5 R. I. 219 (1858).

[2] Moorehead v. Gilmore, 77 Pa. 122. Agency: Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30; 1 Dan. N. Inst. § 740 a

[3] [Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. 329 (1874).

[4] [Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 117, 116.

[5] United States v. Simons, ante.

Real estate broker. A broker who negotiates sales of realty.

He may also negotiate loans on mortgages, let houses, lease lands, collect rents, etc.

Inasmuch as acting for both parties, in an exchange of lands, involves inconsistent duties he can recover remuneration from neither party, notwithstanding an express promise by one of the parties to pay a percentage, unless it clearly appears that each principal had full knowledge of all the circumstances connected with his employment by the other which would naturally affect his action, and had assented to the double employment. When such knowledge and assent are shown, he may recover from either party.[1]

Ship broker. A broker who negotiates sales of ships, freighting of vessels, etc. See Commercial Broker.

Stock broker. A broker who buys and sells shares in corporations. See ORDER, Stop, 2; RINGING UP; STOCK, 8, Exchange.

Ordinarily, a broker never buys or sells in his own name, nor has he possession of the goods; wherein he differs from a "factor" or commission merchant. His business is to bring buyer and seller together; but he need not actually negotiate the bargain. Unless there is a special agreement to the contrary, he earns his commission when he procures a party with whom the principal is satisfied, and who actually contracts for the purchase of the property at a price acceptable to the owner. But he must establish his employment and that his agency was the procuring cause of the sale. Pending an authorized negotiation at private sale, the owner cannot take the business out of the broker's hands, complete the sale, and then refuse to pay the commission.[2] The owner must have a good reason for refusing to fulfill his agreement to pay the broker for his services. Usage, in the absence of an express contract, determines the value of the services.[3] When the broker does not disclose his principal he may be held as principal. See REALIZE.

BRONZES. See FURNITURE.

BROOD. See PARTUS.

BROTHEL. See BAWDY-HOUSE.

BROTHER. See BLOOD, 1; CONSANGUINITY; DESCENT, Canons of.

BROTHERHOODS. See COMMUNITY, 3.

BROUGHT. Commenced.

In the legislation of Congress on the subject of limitation of actions, "commenced" and "brought" mean the same thing.[1]

A suit is brought when it is instituted or commenced.[2] See COMMENCE, Action.

BROWBEAT. To depress or bear down with haughty, stern looks, or with arrogant speech and dogmatic assertions; to bear down by impudence: as, to browbeat a witness.[3] Compare BADGER. See EXAMINATION, 9.

BRUTALITY. See CRUELTY; WHIPPING-POST.

BUBBLE ACT. The statute of 6 Geo. I (1720), c. 18 (enacted after the South Sea project had beggared half the nation), made all unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful subscriptions, then known as "bubbles," subjects of præmunire.[4]

By 6 Geo. IV (1826), the greater portion of that statute was repealed, and illegal companies left to be dealt with by the common law.[5]

"Bubble Acts" and "bubble companies" are still in use in speaking of persons who have been defrauded in subscribing to the stock of companies organized either without real capital or business, or with capital but for dishonest speculation.

BUCKET-SHOP. See WAGER, 2.

BUGGERY. See SODOMY.

BUGGY. See WAGON.

BUILDING. In its broadest sense, an erection intended for use and occupation as a habitation or for some purpose of trade, manufacture, ornament, or use, constituting a fabric or edifice, such as a house, a store, a church, a shed.[6]

A structure of considerable size, intended to be permanent or at least to endure for a considerable time.[7]

The "commencement" of a building imports some work and labor on the ground, the effect of which is apparent, as, beginning to dig the foundation, or other work of like description, which every one can readily recognize as the commencement of a building,[8]—

[1] Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 399-403 (1881), cases.

[2] See McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. 227 (1857); Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348 (1867): 96 Am. Dec. 171-78, cases; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42-44 (1871), cases; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 381-82 (1881), cases; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 105-6 (1882), cases; Viaux v. Old South Society, 133 Mass. 10 (1882); Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 127-28 (1882), cases; Barry v. Schmidt, 57 Wis. 172 (1883); Hamlin v. Schulte, Sup. Ct. Minn. (1887): 26 Am. Law Reg. 106 (1887); ib. 109-15, 543-68 (1887), cases; 20 Cent. Law J. 466-68 (1885), cases; Chic. Leg. Adv. (1885): 9 Va. Law J. 515, 2 Kans. Law J. 242; 22 Cent. Law J. 126-29 (1886), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 705-14 (1887), cases; 26 Cent. Law J. 75-77 (1888), cases.

[3] Koch v. Emmerling, 22 How. 74 (1859).

[1] Goldenberg v. Murphy, 108 U. S. 163 (1883), Waite, C. J.; 119 id. 470.

[2] Berger v. Commissioners, 2 McCrary, 486 (1880): Act of Congress, 1875, § 1.

[3] Webster's Dict.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 117.

[5] 4 Chitty, Bl. Com. 117.

[6] Truesdell v. Gay, 13 Gray, 312 (1859), Bigelow, C. J.

[7] Stevens v. Gourley, 97 E. C. L. 112 (1859), Byles, J.

[8] Brooks v. Lester, 36 Md. 70 (1872).

work being done with the purpose then formed to continue it to the completion of the building.[1]

The idea in all the cases which concern a "new" building is newness of structure in the main mass — the entire change of external appearance, which denotes a different building from that which gave place to it, though into the composition of the new structure some of the old parts may have entered. This newness of construction must be in the exterior, the main plan of the building, not in the interior arrangements.[2]

See ADDITION, 1; ALTER; BURGLARY; ERECT, 1; HOUSE, 1; LOSS, Total; SPECIFICATION, 1; STRUCTURE; SUPPORT, 2.

Building or building and loan associations. Co-operative associations, usually incorporated, for the purpose of accumulating money and loaning it to their members upon the security of their real estate.

Each member makes a monthly payment upon each share of his stock, and such members as borrow from the association pay, in addition, interest upon the sums loaned to them. When the stock, from the payments of the monthly installments upon shares and from the accumulation of interest, reaches its par value, the mortgages given by the borrowers are canceled, and the non-borrowers receive in cash the par of their shares of stock.

Buildings, public. See LAND, Public.

Builder. A person whose business it is to construct buildings, vessels, bridges, canals, or railroads, by contract.[3] See CONTRACTOR.

He who undertakes to build a house impliedly agrees with every person who may have occasion to use it that he will exert, in the construction, such skill, care, and foresight as may be expected of a man of at least ordinary caution.[4]

The occupant of a house likewise agrees not to overload a floor; and, that every part of the premises, in and out of doors, to which the public are admitted, shall be reasonably guarded against accident. See CARE; DUTY, 1; MANSLAUGHTER; NEGLIGENCE; RES, Perit, etc.

As to the expense of changes made in plans and specifications, see Watson v. Jones, under CONTRACT, Executed, and Phillips Construction Co. v. Seymour, under COVENANT.

BULK. See BREAK.

BULLDOZE. See BALLOT; CONSPIRACY.

BULLION. Uncoined gold and silver, either smelted, refined, or in the condition in which it is used for coining.

From an early period, has been associated with or employed as a term denoting money.[5] See BANK, 2 (2).

[1] Kelly v. Rosenstock, 45 Md. 392 (1876), cases.

[2] Miller v. Hershey, 59 Pa. 69 (1868), cases.

[3] See Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 121.

[4] 1 Addison, Torts, § 569; People v. Buddensieck, 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 230, 250-72 (1886), cases.

[5] Counsel v. Vulture Mining Co., 5 Daly, 77 (1874).

BUNDLING. See SEDUCTION.

BURDEN. That which is borne: charge, obligation, duty; also, disadvantage. Compare BENEFIT; INCUMBRANCE; ONUS.

Burdensome. Grievous, oppressive: as, a burdensome contract.

Burden of proof. The obligation imposed upon a party who alleges the existence of a fact or thing necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action, to establish it by proof.[1]

Sometimes spoken of simply as "the burden." See further PROOF, Burden of.

BUREAU. See BOARD, 2; DEPARTMENT; HEALTH; LABOR, 1.

BURGESS. See BOROUGH.

BURGLAR.[2] He that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house with intent to commit a felony.[3]

Burglarious. Intending to commit burglary.[4]

Burglary. Originally, the robbery of a dwelling; now, breaking and entering the house of another in the night-time with intent to commit a felony, whether the felony be actually committed or not.[5]

"House-breaking" describes the same offense, the time not being regarded.

Burglary, or nocturnal house-breaking, has always been looked upon as a very heinous offense; not only because of the terror that it naturally carries with it, but also as it is a forcible invasion and disturbance of that right of habitation which every individual might acquire even in a state of nature.[6]

By "night" is meant the period between total disappearance of daylight in the evening and its reappearance the next morning. The disappearance is total when a face can no longer be discerned. See NIGHT.

By "mansion-house" is meant a dwelling-house: any building actually used for human habitation and not permanently abandoned. It includes incidental out-buildings which are parcel of the dwelling-house. By statutes, extended to stores or shops. A single room may be such habitation: the injured owner being he who has the right of possession. See CURTILAGE.

There must be both a "breaking" and an "entering." "Breaking" means the removal of some portion

[1] People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 66 (1857); Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 357 (1886).

[2] F. burglar, a burg-thief: a house-breaker: L. latro, a robber.

[3] Coke, 3 Inst. 63; 4 Bl. Com. 224; 29 Ind. 80; 34 La. An. 49; 53 Md. 153.

[4] See 14 Tex. Ap. 604.

[5] Anderson v. State, 48 Ala. 666 (1872): 3 Chitty, Crim Law, 1101.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 223.

of the house intended for security against intrusion. This may be by lifting a latch or a window, or by getting in through artifice or conspiracy; but not by raising a window already open, pushing back a door standing ajar, or by other entrance already made, except as to a chimney, which is as much closed as the nature of things will permit. The breaking may be of an inner or chamber door, or for purposes of egress. The least degree of "entering" with any part of the body, or with an instrument held in the hand, is sufficient; and it may be before, as well as after, the breaking.

The "intent" must be to commit a robbery, a murder, a rape, or other felony, whether the crime be actually perpetrated or not. If such specific intent is absent the act is a mere "trespass."[1]

Where the accused had himself, concealed in a chest, transferred to an express car, intending to rob the messenger, his acts were held to constitute a breaking and entering.[2]

The common-law definition has been modified and different degrees of the offense have been established, in some of the States.

See ACCESSARY; ACCOMPLICE; CRIME; DEFENSE, 1; EXTRADITION, 1; FELONY; INDICTMENT; MANSLAUGHTER.

BURIAL. "Burial ground" and "cemetery" may be used synonymously.[3]

To take up a dead body without lawful authority is a misdemeanor at common law. But there can be no larceny of the body, although there may be of the shroud.[4]

Preventing the burial of a dead body is indictable.

After interment, control over a body is in the next of kin. If they differ as to the disposition to be made of it, a court of equity may not afford assistance to either party.[5]

A stone vault in a cemetery used for the interment of dead bodies, though wholly above ground, is not a "building" or "other erection or inclosure," within the meaning of the penal code of New York.[6]

For sanitary reasons, a State may forbid the exhumation and removal of a corpse, without a permit being first procured.[7] See HEALTH; SEPULCHER.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 224; Commonwealth v. Glover, 111 Mass. 402 (1873), cases; Walker v. State, 63 Ala. 50 (1879), cases.

[2] Nichols v. State, 68 Wis. 416 (1887), cases.

[3] Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 104 (1869).

[4] See 28 Alb. Law J. 106-8 (1883), cases; Re Wong Yung Quy, 6 Saw. 442, infra.

[5] See Re Beekman Street, 4 Bradf. Sur. 503 (1856); Bogert v. Indianapolis, 13 Ind. 138 (1859); Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 301 (1862); Pierce v. Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 235 (1872); Craig v. First Presby. Church, 88 Pa. 42, 52 (1878); Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 422 (1881), cases; Griffith v. Charlotte, &c. R. Co., 23 S. C. 39-42 (1885), cases; Johnston v. Marinus, 18 Abb. N. Cas. 72-77 (1886), cases; 10 Alb. Law J. 70 (1874), cases; 16 Am. Law Reg. 155 (1877), cases; 24 id. 591-600 (1885), cases; 19 Am. Law Rev. 251-70 (1885); Bishop, Contr. § 237.

[6] People v. Richards, N. Y. Ct. Ap. (Jan. 17, 1888); Pen. Code, §§ 498, 404.

[7] Re Wong Yung Quy 3 Saw. 442 (1880).

BURNED. See LOST, 2.

BURNING. In the law of arson (q. v.), to materially destroy the integrity of some portion of the house of another.[1]

Burning in the hand and left cheek was anciently a mode of punishment.[2] See C, 2; F, 1; T, 2.

Prior to 30 Geo. III (1790), c. 48, the penalty for treason was being burned alive;[3] and so, anciently, as to arson.[4] But victims seem to have been first deprived of sensation, as by strangling.[5]

As a punishment for military offenses, branding has been used to a very limited extent.

See BRAND; PUNISHMENT; WITCHCRAFT.

Burning fluid. See OIL.

BURSTING. In an insurance policy, which excepts a loss from the bursting of a boiler, synonymous with explosion, q. v.

BUSINESS. A word of large signification, denoting the employment or occupation in which a person is engaged to procure a living.[6]

"Business" and "employment" are synonymous terms, signifying that which occupies the time, attention, and labor of men for purposes of a livelihood or for profit. A calling for the purpose of a livelihood.[7] See EMPLOYMENT; HAPPINESS.

"Labor" may be business, but it is not necessarily so; and "business" is not always labor. The making of a contract is business, but not labor.[8] See LABOR, 1; TRADE.

"Other business," in the expression "works, mines, manufactory, or other business," is ejusdem generis with the species of business described by the preceding words, and imports, in a Wages Act, business of the same general character.[9]

"Ten per cent. on the business" of a partnership may mean ten per centum of the result of the business, that is, of the profits.[10]

Business corporation. In the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, had a broader meaning than "trading" corporation; was held to include a railroad corporation,[11] and an insurance company.[12]

[1] See 40 Ala. 669; 46 Cal. 356; 110 Mass. 403.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 370.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 204, 376, 407.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 222

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 377. See 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 476-77.

[6] Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen, 395 (1861), Merrick, J.

[7] [Moore v. State, 16 Ala. 413 (1849); 52 id. 21; 71 id. 62; 28 N. J. L. 545; 23 N. Y. 244.

[8] [Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 396-403 (1853), cases.

[9] Pardee's Appeal, 100 Pa. 412 (1882).

[10] Funck v. Haskell, 132 Mass. 582 (1882).

[11] Adams v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 1 Holmes, 30 (1870); Winter v. Iowa, &c. R. Co., 2 Dill. 488 (1873).

[12] Re Independent Ins. Co., 1 Holmes, 104 (1872).

While "business" in § 37 of that act had a broader meaning than the word "commercial," used in the same section, such scope was not given it as to supersede "commercial" and "moneyed," or to leave these words without practical signification.[1]

Business hours. The business hours of the community generally.[2]

The hours when business is ordinarily transacted, down to the beginning of the hours of rest in the evening, except as to paper payable at a bank or by a banker.[3]

Business paper. Commercial paper; negotiable instruments. See NEGOTIABLE.

Business usages. See CUSTOM; USAGE.

Course of business. An act done according to the rules or methods which prevail in business generally or in a particular line or branch of business is said to be done in the "due," "ordinary," "regular," or "usual" course of business.

One who takes commercial paper before its maturity, and without notice, actual or otherwise, of any defense thereto, receives the paper in the due course of business and becomes a holder for value.[4]

Under the Bankruptcy Acts sales not made in the usual and ordinary course of the business of the debtor were prima facie evidence of fraud on creditors; as, where a retail dealer disposed of his stock at wholesale.[5]

Place of business. The place where one habitually or chiefly transacts his business duties is his usual or principal place of business.

"Usual place of business" means the place where one's business is carried on openly; the place which has public notoriety as one's usual place of business.[6]

The "principal place of business" is no test of residence, either of a natural person or of a corporation.[7]

See BANK, 2 (2); CARRY ON; COMMERCE; CUSTOM; INCOME; LABOR, 1; LICENSE, 3; MERCHANT; PROFIT, 1; RESIDE; SUNDAY; TAX, 2; TRADE.

BUST. See DESIGN, 2.

BUTCHER. See PEDDLER; POLICE, 2; RETAILER.

BUTTAL. See ABUT.

BUTTERINE. See OLEOMARGARINE.

[1] Sweatt v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 3 Cliff. 351 (1871).

[2] Derosia v. Winona, &c. R. Co., 18 Minn. 154 (1872).

[3] Cayuga County Bank v. Hunt, 2 Hill, 635, 638 (N. Y., 1842); Lunt v. Adams, 17 Me. 231 (1840); Flint v. Rogers, 15 id. 69 (1838).

[4] Brooklyn City R. Co. v. Nat. Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 25-28 (1880), cases.

[5] Act of 1867, § 35; Walbrun v. Babbitt, 16 Wall. 581 (1872), cases.

[6] [Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Pet. *583 (1828); Stevenson v. Primrose, 8 Porter, 155 (Ala., 1838): 33 Am. Dec. 287.

[7] Guinn v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 14 F. R. 324 (1882); McCabe v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 13 id. 827 (1882).

BUY. To acquire by giving a consideration, usually money; to purchase, q. v.

To buy a note, as opposed to discount a note, see DISCOUNT, 2.

Buy in. To cause property to be offered at public sale, and then to become the purchaser thereof. See AUCTION.

Buying titles. See SEISIN, Disseisin.

Buyer. He who becomes the owner of a thing by paying the price asked; he who acquires or purchases; a purchaser.

See CAVEAT, Emptor; REDEEM; SALE; WAGER, 2.

BY. 1. Near, near to; by the side of; beside — all denoting exclusion.

Used descriptively in a grant, not "in immediate contact with," but "near to" the object.[1]

"By land of A" means along the line of A's land.[2]

A grant of land bounded "by" a fresh-water stream, whether navigable or unnavigable, conveys the soil to the middle line of the stream.[3] See ALONG.

A contract for the doing of a thing "by" a certain day means on or before that day.[4] See DAY.

Authorized "by" may mean "in" this State.[5]

By-bidding. See BID.

By-road. See WAY, Private.

By-standers. See TALES.

2. With, through, as the means or mode; as, by the book, by the uplifted hand. See OATH. Compare PER.

3. According to; by authority, direction, or allowance of: as, by agent, by writing filed, by the court, by act and operation of law, by statute, qq. v. See also ACCORDING; FORCE, 2.

Staying proceedings until an issue is determined by final judgment in another case may mean to stay the proceedings "according to" the judgment.[6]

4. May be used instead of "to;" as in the sentence "a person whose name is not known by the complainant."[7]

BY-LAW.[8] 1. A law affecting a single village or township; a rule governing the inhabitants of a locality.

"The by-law [of a borough] has the same effect within its limits, and with respect to the persons upon

[1] Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill, 153 (Md., 1847).

[2] Peaslee v. Gee, 19 N. H. 277 (1848).

[3] The Magnolia v. Marshall, 39 Miss. 110, 117, 134 (1860).

[4] Coonley v. Anderson, 1 Hill, 519, 522 (N. Y., 1841); Rankin v. Woodworth, 3 P. & W. 48 (Pa., 1831). See Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Monta. 437 (1880).

[5] State v. Overton, 16 Nev. 149 (1881).

[6] Haubert v. Haworth, 78 Pa. 83 (1875).

[7] Commonwealth v. Griffin, 105 Mass. 175 (1870).

[8] Scan. byr, a town, a village,— Skeat. A. S. bilage, a private law,— Webster. "A law made obiter, or by the by," Termes de la Ley (1721).

whom it lawfully operates, as an act of Parliament has upon the subjects at large."[1]

2. A rule or law of a corporation for its own government.

An act of legislation; therefore the formalities required by the charter for its passage must be observed. It may be in the form of a "resolution," although that is not necessarily a by-law.[2]

By-laws are the orders and regulations which a corporation, as one of its legal incidents, has power to make, and which is usually exercised to regulate its own action and concerns and the rights and duties of its members among themselves.[3] See CHARTER, 2; ORDINANCE, 1.

C.

C. 1. In connection with references to statutes means chapter. See STATUTE, 2.

2. In Rhode Island, as late as 1785, was branded upon the forehead as part of the punishment for counterfeiting.

3. As an abbreviation, may also denote case, chancellor, chancery, chief, circuit, civil, code, commissioner, common, counsel, court, criminal, crown:

C. A. Chancery appeals; court of appeals.

C. A. V. Curia advisari vult. The court wishes to consider the matter. See further CURIA, Advisari, etc.

C. B. Chief baron; common bench.

C. C. Cepi corpus; chief commissioner; circuit, city, or county court; chancery, civil, criminal, or crown cases; civil code.

C. C. J. Circuit, city, or county court judge.

C. C. P. Code of civil procedure: court of common pleas.

C. D. Commissioners' (patent) decisions.

C. J. Chief justice; circuit judge.

C. J. B. Chief judge in bankruptcy.

C. L. Civil law; common law.

C. L. P. Common law procedure.

C. O. D. Collect (q. v.) on delivery.

C. P. Common pleas (court).

C. q. t. (or c. q. t.). Cestui que trust, q. v.

C. R. Chancery reports; curia regis, the king's court.

C. t. a. (usually, c. t. a.). Cum testamento annexo, with the will attached. See ADMINISTER, 4.

CABINET. See DEPARTMENT; PRESIDENT.

CABLE. See COMMERCE; TELEGRAPH.

The act of Congress approved February 29, 1888 (25 St. L. 41), entitled an act to carry into effect the International Convention of March 14, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables, provides:

"Section 1. That any person who shall willfully and wrongfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet, or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable, in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court."

"Sec. 2. That any person who by culpable negligence shall break or injure a submarine cable in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court."

Sec. 3. The foregoing sections shall not apply to a person who breaks or injures a cable in an effort to save life or limb, or to save his own or any other vessel: Provided, that he takes reasonable precautions to avoid such breaking or injury.

"Sec. 4. That the master of any vessel which, while engaged in laying or repairing submarine cables, shall fail to observe the rules concerning signals that have been or shall hereafter be adopted by the parties to the convention with a view to preventing collisions at sea: or the master of any vessel that, perceiving, or being able to perceive the said signals displayed upon a telegraph ship engaged in repairing a cable, shall not withdraw to or keep at a distance of at least one nautical mile; or the master of any vessel that seeing or being able to see buoys intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid or when out of order or broken, shall not keep at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, or to a fine of not exceeding five hundred dollars."

Sec. 5. The master of any fishing vessel who shall not keep his implements or nets at a distance of at least one nautical mile from a vessel engaged in laying or repairing a cable, or at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile from a buoy intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid or when out of order or broken, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten days, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: Provided, however, that fishing vessels, on perceiving or being able to perceive the said signals displayed on a telegraph ship, shall be allowed such time as may be necessary to obey the notice thus given, not exceeding twenty-four hours, during which period no obstacle shall be placed in the way of their operations.

[1] Hopkins v. Mayor of Swansea, 4 M. & W. *640 (1839), Ld. Abinger, C. B.

[2] Drake v. Hudson River R. Co., 7 Barb. 539 (1849). Compare Compton v. Van Volkenburgh, &c. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 135 (1870).

[3] Commonwealth v. Turner, 1 Cush. 496 (1848), Shaw, C. J.

Sec. 6. A person commanding a ship of war of the United States or of any foreign state for the time being bound by the convention, or a ship specially commissioned by such government or state, may exercise and perform the duties vested in and imposed on such officer by the convention.

Sec. 7. Any person having the custody of the papers necessary for the preparation of the statements provided for in article ten of the convention who shall refuse to exhibit them or shall violently resist persons having authority according to said article to draw up statements of facts in the exercise of their functions, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Sec. 8. The penalties provided for the breaking or injury of a cable shall not be a bar to a suit for damages.

Sec. 9. When an offense against this act shall have been committed by means of a vessel, or of any boat belonging to it, the master of such vessel shall, unless some other person is shown to have been in charge, be deemed to have been navigating the same, and be liable to be punished accordingly.

Sec. 10. Unless the context of this act otherwise requires, the term "vessel" shall be taken to mean every description of vessel used in navigation, in whatever way it is propelled; "master" every person having command or charge of a vessel; and "person" to include a body of persons, corporate or incorporate. "Convention" shall mean the International Convention for the Protection of Submarine Cables, made at Paris, May 14, 1884, and proclaimed by the President of the United States May 22, 1885.

Sec. 11. The provisions of the Revised Statutes, from § 4300 to 4305 inclusive, for the summary trial of offenses against the navigation laws, shall extend to offenses against sections four and five of this act.

Sec. 12. This act shall apply only to cables to which the convention for the time being applies.

Sec. 13. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all offenses against this act and of all suits of a civil nature arising thereunder, whether the infraction complained of shall have been committed within or outside of the territorial waters of the United States: Provided, that in case such infraction is committed outside of said waters the vessel is a vessel of the United States. From decrees and judgments, appeals and writs of error shall be allowed as now provided by law in other cases. Criminal actions and proceedings shall be prosecuted in the district court for the district within which the offense was committed, and when not committed within any judicial district, then in the district court for the district within which the offender may be found; and suits of a civil nature may be commenced in the district court for any district within which the defendant may be found and shall be served with process.

CADET. See GRADUATE.

Naval cadets, by settled usage which has the force of law, are appointed by certificates under the hand and seal of the secretary of war. They are inferior officers who, for purposes of instruction, may be required to serve as officers, non-commissioned officers, or privates.[1]

CADIT. See QUÆSTIO, Cadit.

CÆTERA. See ADMINISTER, 4; ET, Etc.

CALENDAR. 1. The division of time into years, months, weeks, and days, and a register of them.

The pontifex maximus on the first of every month proclaimed — Lat. calare — the month, with its festivals and the time of the new moon. From calare was derived "calendar." The first day of the month in the Roman calendar was called the calendæ, the calends.[2]

Calendar month. A solar month, known as January, February, etc.; distinguished from a lunar month of twenty-eight days. See further MONTH.

2. A list of causes arranged for trial or argument; a list; a docket.[3]

The calendar of a criminal court gives the names of offenders and prosecutors, the nature of the charges, from what magistrates certified, numbers and terms of the cases, and like particulars.

The calendar of a civil court contains the names of the parties plaintiff and defendant, the names of counsel, the nature of the demand in each case, the defense or plea, the number and term of the case, and, in courts of review, the name of the lower court from which removed.

CALIFORNIA. See CHINESE; PUEBLO.

CALL. 1, v. (1) To require a prisoner to present himself and answer the indictment, in the immediate presence of the court, is to call him to or before the bar.[4] See ARRAIGN.

(2) To admit to the rights and privileges of a practitioner of law is to call a student-at-law to the bar.

In England, "call-day" is the day in each term when those who have been students are admitted to practice law.

Call a case. For a judge to announce that a cause is about to be placed on a particular list, or to proclaim that a cause on [1] Babbitt v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 203, 215–17 (1880). See United States v. Morton, 112 U. S. 1, 3 (1884). As to cadet-engineers, see also United States v. Redgrave, 116 id. 474 (1886); United States v. Perkins, ib. 483 (1886).

[2] Rives v. Guthrie, 1 Jones L. 86–87 (N. C., 1853), Nash, C. J.

[3] See Titley v. Kaehler, 9 Bradw. 539 (1881).

[4] [4 Bl. Com. 322.]

such list may now be determined by a trial by a jury or by argument before the court.

Call a list or docket. To inquire publicly in open court as to what causes on a list are ready for trial; also, to call for trial or argument certain causes already set or fixed for such determination.[1]

Whence, in the practice of some courts, the "first," the "second," and perhaps the "third" call of a case or list; also "the call."

Call a jury. To draw the names of persons to serve as a jury, out of the names of all of those who have been summoned as jurors.

Call a party. To call aloud his name in open court, and to command him to appear in order to perform some duty.

Call the plaintiff. At common law, when counsel for the plaintiff perceives that his client has not made out a case, the client may withdraw from the court room: whereupon the crier is required to call the plaintiff. If he does not answer the call (made thrice in succession), judgment of nonsuit is entered.[2]

The nonsuit is more eligible for the plaintiff than a verdict against him.[3]

Call a witness. To call his name aloud in, and perhaps about, the room of the court at which he has been subpœnaed to appear, before an attachment issues for disobedience.

Also, to present a witness for examination in a trial or hearing then in progress.

Recalling a witness, who has been once examined and dismissed, is a matter almost wholly within the discretion of the trial court.[4] See PRODUCE, 1.

2, n. (1) A notice or demand by the directors of a stock corporation upon a subscriber to pay money on account of his shares.

The word may refer to the resolution, its notification, or the time when it becomes payable.[4]

A court of equity may enforce payment of stock subscriptions though there have been no calls for them by the company. . . . Subscriptions are in the nature of a fund for the payment of debts, and calls may be made whenever funds are needed for such payment. . . . A formal call need not be made before a bill in equity is filed: filing the bill is equivalent to a call.[5] See PUT, 3; STOCK, 3 (2).

(2) A designation of the limit of a boundary.

A "locative call" refers to a physical object rather than to a course or distance. See further BOUNDARY.

CALLING. See BUSINESS.

CAMP-MEETING. See WORSHIP.

The Massachusetts statute of 1867, c. 57, which prohibits a person, during the time a camp or field meeting is being held for religious purposes, and within one mile of the place, from maintaining a building for vending provisions or refreshments without permission of the officers of the meeting, and which provides that a person having a regular and established place of business shall not be required to suspend his business, is constitutional.[1]

The Pennsylvania act of May 8, 1878,[2] prohibits disposing of any kind of merchandise, within one mile of any camp-meeting held for religious worship, under a fine of not more than one hundred dollars or imprisonment of not more than six months, or both; the act not applying to persons having written permit from the managers of the meeting, nor to persons regularly engaged in business, nor to farmers who sell the products of their farms upon the same. And the act of March 23, 1876,[3] provides that a judge of the court of common pleas of the particular county may appoint as policemen such persons as the association may designate; each to possess the powers of a constable; to enforce obedience to all reasonable regulations of the association not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the State; to detain offenders twelve hours, if need be, exclusive of Sunday, until they can be carried before the nearest justice of the peace; and to wear a metallic shield with "camp police" and the name of the association inscribed thereon, in plain view — except when employed as detectives.

CAMPBELL'S ACT. See ACTIO, Personalis, etc.

CAN. Compare CASE, 4.

CANAL. Applied to an artificial passage for water, includes the banks, and refers to the excavation or channel as a receptacle for the water.[4]

As used in an Internal Improvement Act, a navigable public highway, for the transportation of persons and property. . . . There must be a canal fitted in all respects for navigation and open to public use before benefits can accrue to the owner to overcome his claim for damages.[5]

The title of owners of land abutting on a canal extends to the line of the canal, subject to the use of the bank by the owners of the canal for purposes of commerce.[6]

[1] See Blanchard v. Ferdinand, 132 Mass. 391 (1882).
[2] 3 Bl. Com. 376.
[3] Keating v. Brown 30 Minn. 10 (1882).
[4] Ambergate, &c. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 4 Ex. R. *543 (1849), Parke, B.
[5] Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 214-15 (1879), Strong, J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 551 (1882).
[2] P. L. 63.
[3] P. L. 9.
[4] Bishop v. Seeley, 18 Conn. *394 (1847).
[5] Kennedy v. City of Indianapolis, 108 U. S. 604 (1882), Waite, C. J.
[6] Morgan v. Bass, 14 F. R. 454 (1882).

A general grant of premises upon the bank of a river, in which is constructed a canal, conveys the grantor's right to the river's center. Where the canal company, as such, has the right only to use the bed and water, at dissolution such right reverts to the proper owners.[1]

Navigable water situated as is the Illinois and Lake Michigan canal,—a highway for commerce between ports and places in different States,—is public water of the United States, within admiralty jurisdiction, although the canal is wholly within the body of the State of Illinois.[2]

See COMMERCE; TOLL, 2.

CANCEL.[3] 1. To draw lines over the face of an instrument, in the form of lattice-work. 2. To obliterate, deface, efface, expunge; to do away with, set aside, strike out of existence. 3. To satisfy, pay.

A deed may be rendered of no effect by delivering it up to be canceled; that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of lattice-work: though the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing it.[4]

To draw cross-lines over the face of an instrument is a common mode of showing an intention thereby to make an end of it as an instrument in force. In earlier times, when few persons could write, the mass of men could manifest their intention, with pen and ink, only by unlettered marks. . . When the instrument is so marked by the maker as to show clearly that the act was designed to be a canceling, that act becomes effectual as a revocation of a will by canceling.[5]

Cancel is not a technical word. In a statute of wills it is presumed to retain its popular meaning. . . A canceled bond or note has meant exclusively a bond or note over which lattice-work lines have been drawn. . . Revocation of a will by cancellation means by any act done to the paper which, in common understanding, is regarded as cancellation when done to any other instrument.[6]

In a contract, may not be equivalent to rescind; may mean no more than "doing away with" an existing agreement upon the terms, with the consequences, mentioned.[7]

Cancellation will be ordered, by a court of equity, of a writing which was obtained without consideration, or which became a nullity, or which may cause injury to the plaintiff, or be used to vex him after the evidence to impeach it has been lost, or which may throw a cloud over his title.[8]

Cancellation destroys a deed, annulling all covenants, as far as the deed is executory. It will not revest in the grantor an estate once completely transferred to another.[1]

"Canceling an executed contract is an exertion of the most extraordinary power of a court of equity. The power ought not to be exercised except in a clear case, and never for an alleged fraud unless the fraud be made clearly to appear; never for alleged false representations unless their falsity is certainly proved, and unless the complainant has been deceived and injured by them."[2] See PATENT, 2.

Compare NULL; RESCISSION; VACATE; VOID.

CANDIDATE. One who seeks or aspires to some office or privilege, or who offers himself for the same.

In a constitutional provision that any person who, while a candidate for office, shall be guilty of bribery, etc., is used in that popular sense: any one who seeks an office, whether nominated or not.[3]

See BRIBERY; LEGAL, Illegal; LIBEL, 3; LIBERTY, 1, Of the press.

CANISTER. See CASE, 4.

CANON.[4] A rule; a law.

Canon law. Ecclesiastical law.

In particular, a body of ecclesiastical laws relative to matters over which the church of Rome had or claims to have had jurisdiction.[5]

Compiled from opinions of the fathers, decrees of councils, and decretal epistles and bulls of the holy see. Received, in England, by immemorial custom, or else by consent of parliament; otherwise, ranked as unwritten law.[6]

Canons of construction. Rules of construction, q. v.

Canons of descent or of inheritance. The rules which regulate the descent of inheritances; the rules according to which estates are transmitted from ancestor to heir.[6] See further DESCENT.

CAP. When a person, who has been sentenced to capital punishment by hanging, is about to be executed, it is customary to place over his head and neck a sack or bag, which, from the color of the material, is called the white cap or black cap, and, generally, the "death cap."

In England and Canada, when a judge formally passes sentence of death upon a prisoner, he usually [1] Day v. Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co., 44 Ohio St. 415 (1886); Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co. v. Bruce, 102 Pa. 33 (1882).

[2] Exp. Boyer, 109 U. S. 632 (1884).

[3] L. L. cancellare, to draw lines across: L. cancelli, lattice-work. Compare CHANCERY.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 309.

[5] Warner v. Warner's Estate, 37 Vt. 362-63 (1864).

[6] Evans's Appeal, 58 Pa. 242-44 (1868), Strong, J. See also Ladd's Will, 60 Wis. 189-99 (1884), cases, Cassoday, J.

[7] Winton v. Spring, 18 Cal. 455 (1861); Weil v. Jones, 28 id. 47 (1878).

[8] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 693-711; 17 Blatch. 145.

[1] See 4 Kent, 452; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 265.

[2] Atlantic Delaine Company v. James, 94 U. S. 214 (1876), Strong, J. Approved, Union R. Co. v. Hull, 124 id. 183 (1888), Harlan, J.

[3] Leonard v. Commonwealth, 112 Pa. 624 (1886): Webster; Const. Penn. Art. VIII, sec. 9.

[4] Gk. kanōn', a reed, rod, rule.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 82, 79, 19. See 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 440; 25 Hen. VIII, c. 19; 1 Eliz. c. 1.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 208.

wears a "black cap." Some writers trace the practice to the ancient custom by which rulers covered the head on occasions of great solemnity; while other writers find its origin in a prohibition against persons in holy orders (from which class the judges were largely selected) imposing the death penalty — as officials of the church. Since it was obligatory that such sentences should be pronounced, the judges, on such occasions, were supposed to lay aside their ecclesiastical character by "covering the clerical tonsure" with the black cap which all judges in early days wore as a part of their official dress.[1]

CAPACITY. Ability to take, do, act: competency, qualification, fitness, power. See CAPAX.

1. Power or fitness to perform a particular legal act; mental qualification: as, capacity to enter into a contract, disposing or testamentary capacity.

Capacity for guilt: will joined with an act.[2]

The test of capacity to make an agreement or a conveyance is, that a man shall have the ability to understand the nature and effect of the act in which he is engaged.[3] See INFLUENCE.

2. Character or function, relation or office, invested or conferred by law: as, capacity to act as an executor, administrator, guardian, trustee, referee, judge, sheriff, or other officer.

Whence also fiduciary, judicial, ministerial capacity; professional capacity; men in public capacity — see LIBEL, 5; DESCRIPTIO, Personæ.

CAPAX. L. Receiving or containing: able, fit for; having capacity, q. v.

Capax doli. Competent to intend wrong, to commit a crime. Doli incapax: incapable of committing crime. See further DOLUS.

Capax negotii. Competent to transact business.

CAPERE. L. To take, seize; to arrest.

Capias. That you take. A common-law writ commanding the sheriff to take a defendant into custody.

Named from the emphatic word in the writ when expressed in Latin.

Has come to designate the whole class of writs by which arrests are made by a constable, sheriff, or marshal. The species are:

Capias ad respondendum. That you take for answering: arrest (and imprison) the defendant so that you have him in person before the court on a certain day to answer the plaintiff's complaint.

Serves the purpose of compelling an appearance in court, on the part of a defendant, in actions of tort, in which damages are claimed, as, in actions for slander, libel, false arrest, malicious prosecution, and other trespasses. Being the species of the writ most frequently issued, is often designated as a or the "capias."[1] See PROCESS, 1.

Capias ad satisfaciendum. That you take for satisfying: arrest (and imprison) the defendant so that you may have him in court on a given day, in order that he may then and there pay the plaintiff such debt, damages, and costs as he may recover. Abbreviated ca. sa.

At common law, after this writ no other process could be issued against a debtor's property. The early use of the writ has been restricted by statutes abolishing imprisonment for debt or facilitating the discharge of debtors, in cases in which no fraud is shown to have been practiced.[2]

Capias in withernam.[3] That you take in reprisal; that you distrain for a distress.

A writ for seizing property of a distrainor on account of property concealed, eloigned, or otherwise withheld by him so that it could not be replevied.[4] See ELOIGN.

Capias utlagatum. That you arrest the outlaw, q. v.

Cepi. I have taken, or arrested. The distinctive word in old Latin forms of returns of service to orders for making arrests.

Cepi corpus. I have taken the body,— arrested the defendant. Abbreviated C. C.

Cepi corpus et bail bond. I have arrested the defendant and discharged him on a bail bond. Abbreviated C. C. et B. B.

Cepi corpus et committitur. I have arrested and imprisoned the defendant. Abbreviated C. C. et C.

Cepi corpus et est custodia. I have arrested the defendant and he is in custody.

Cepi corpus et est languidus. I have arrested the defendant and he is sick. See LANGUIDUS.

Cepi corpus et paratum habeo. I have arrested the defendant and have him in readiness. See ARREST, 2; BAIL, 1 (2).

Cepit. He took. The emphatic word in the Latin writs of trespass for taking personalty, and in declarations in trespass and replevin. Still used as descriptive of the action,

[1] See 22 Am. Law Rev. 121 (1888).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 20.

[3] Eaton v. Eaton, 37 N. J. L. 113 (1874); 2 Bl. Com. 200.

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 414.

[2] See 4 Bl. Com. 319.

[3] With'-er-nam is A. S. widher, against, and néman, to seize.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 149.

as in replevin for a mere taking — when the action is said to be "in the cepit." See Non Cepit.

Cepit et abduxit. He seized or took and led away — a person, or a living chattel.

Cepit et asportavit. He took and carried away — an inanimate thing, goods. See ASPORTARE; CARRY, 1.

Cepit in alio loco. He took in another place — than that declared upon. A plea in replevin justifying the taking and claiming a return.

Non cepit. He did not take. The general issue in replevin: denies taking and detaining.

CAPIAS. See CAPERE, Capias.

CAPITA. See CAPUT, Capita.

CAPITAL.[1] 1, adj. For which death is the penalty: as, a capital offense.

Probably from "decapitation," once a common mode of executing the sentence of death.

Those judgments are capital which extend to the life of the offender, and consist, generally, in his being hanged by the neck till dead.[2] See DEATH, Penalty.

2, n. Money or property invested in a business enterprise.

The actual estate, whether in money or property, which is owned by an individual or a corporation.[3]

The chief thing, the head, the beginning and basis of an undertaking or enterprise. . . "Capital" and "capital stock," in ordinary parlance, when applied to combinations or associations for transacting business, have the same meaning, the former being an abbreviation of the latter.[4]

Used with respect to the property of a corporation or association, the term "capital" has a settled meaning. It applies only to the property or means contributed by the stockholders as the fund or basis for the business or enterprise for which the corporation or association was formed. . . Referring to the property of individuals in any particular business, the term has substantially the same import. It then means the property taken from other investments or uses and set apart for and invested in the special business, and in the increase, proceeds or earnings of which property, beyond expenditures incurred in its use, consists the profits made in the business.[1]

It does not, any more than when used with respect to corporations, embrace temporary loans in the regular course of business.[1] See MONEYED.

"Capital stock," or "shares of capital stock," signifies the sum upon which calls may be made upon the holders of the stock of a corporation, and upon which dividends are declared.[2] See further STOCK, 3 (2).

CAPITATION. See TAX, 2.

CAPTION. 1. A taking, a seizure, q. v.; an arrest; a capture, q. v. See also CAPERE.

Recaption. When any one deprives another of his personal property, or wrongfully detains his wife, child, or servant.[3]

The owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may claim and retake them wherever he finds them, so that it be not attended with a breach of the peace. The owner may have this only opportunity to do himself justice.[3] See DEFENSE, 1.

2. The heading of a legal document, in which is shown the time when, the place where, and the person by whose authority, it was prepared or executed.

This use of the word is not warranted by its derivation — captio, a taking, and not caput, a head; but it is quite common in law books.

Though usual, is not necessary to an affidavit.[4]

When an inferior court, in obedience to the mandate of the king's bench, transmitted an indictment to the crown office, it was accompanied with its history — naming the court in which, the jurors by whom, and the time and place when and where, it was found. All this was entered of record by the clerk of the superior court immediately before the indictment, and was called the "caption," but was not then and is not now a part of the indictment itself.[5]

See AFFIDAVIT; COMMENCE, Indictment; TITLE, 2.

CAPTURE. A taking, seizure. See CAPERE.

In the law of marine insurance, any unlawful taking by force, including a piratical taking as well as such as is made jure belli.[6]

Synonymous with prize (q. v.), as used in Europe. The popular use of a taking by force or violence from without, to which a vessel in the course of a maritime adventure might be exposed, corresponds with the use in marine insurance.[6]

A taking by the enemy of a vessel or its cargo as prize, in time of open war, or by

---

[1] L. capitalis, chief: caput, the head.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 376.

[3] People v. Commissioners, 23 N. Y. 219 (1861), Comstock, C. J.

[4] San Francisco v. Spring Valley Water Works, 63 Cal. 529 (1883), Thornton, J.; Gas Light Co. v. Assessors, 31 La. An. 477 (1879), Manning, C. J.

[1] Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. 286–87 (1874), Field, J.

[2] Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 60, 47 (1875), Swayne, J.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 4.

[4] Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 311 (1875).

[5] People v. Bennett, 37 N. Y. 122 (1867); Exp. Bain, 121 U. S. 7 (1887): Starkie, Cr. Pl. p. 287.

[6] Dole v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 6 Allen, 386–90 (1863), Bigelow, C. J. See Fifield v. Ins. Co. of Penn., 47 Pa. 176–77, 189 (1864), cases.

way of reprisal, with intent to deprive the owner of it.[1]

This was probably the primary idea in instruments of marine insurance. Losses of ships and cargo engaged in commerce, by the public enemy, were the most to be apprehended and provided against. But usage, and the course of decisions by the courts, have very much widened this meaning, and it now may embrace —

The taking of a neutral ship and cargo by a belligerent jure belli; also, the taking forcibly by a friendly power, in time of peace, and even by the government itself to which the assured belongs.[1]

Technically, a taking by military power; a seizure, a taking by civil authority.[2]

"Captured property" may mean property seized or taken from hostile possession by the military or naval forces of the United States.[3]

As to recapture, see POSTLIMINY. See also RANSOM.

CAPUT. L. A head, the head; an individual.

Æstimatio capitis. The value of a head: the worth of a life.

In Saxon law, a prescribed sum to be paid for an unlawful taking of another man's life. In modern law, the amount of damages recoverable for causing a death.

Capita. Heads: bodies; individual persons.

Per capita. By heads: according to the individuals. Opposed, per stirpes, by the ancestor.

In distributing the personalty of an intestate, the persons entitled thereto are said to take per capita when they claim in their own rights as in equal degree of kindred, and not in right of another — per stirpes. This rule of succession was borrowed from the civil law. The common-law rule was the per stirpes rule.[4]

Caput lupinum. A wolf's head: an outlawed felon — who might be knocked on the head like a wolf.[5]

Caput mortuum. A dead head: a matter of no legal validity; a thing void as to all persons and for all purposes.[6]

CAR. See CARRIER, Common; RAILROAD.

Car load. A contract for a certain number of car loads of ice was held not void for uncertainty, that the quantity contemplated could be made certain by averment and proof.[1] See also CARRIAGE, 1.

CARDS. See GAME, 2.

CARE. Attention, caution, circumspection, vigilance, diligence.

Due care. In cases where the gist of the action is negligence, implies not only that a party has not been negligent or careless, but that he has been guilty of no violation of law in relation to the subject-matter or transaction which constitutes the cause of action.[2]

Great care. The degree of attention which a very thoughtful man exercises toward securing his own interests.

Ordinary care. That degree of care which every person of ordinary prudence takes of his own concerns.[3]

In the law of bailment, that degree of care which, under the same circumstances, a person of ordinary prudence would take of the particular thing were it his own.[4]

Ordinary care, skill, and diligence is such a degree of care, skill, and diligence as men of ordinary prudence, under similar circumstances, usually employ.[5]

Ordinary care implies the exercise of reasonable diligence, and reasonable diligence, as between a corporation and its employees, implies such watchfulness, caution, and foresight as, under all the circumstances of the particular service, a corporation controlled by careful, prudent officers ought to exercise.[6]

The same degree of care which a railroad company should take in providing and maintaining its machinery must be observed in selecting and retaining its employees, including telegraphic operators. Ordinary care on its part implies, as between it and its employees, not simply the degree of diligence which is customary among those intrusted with the management of railroad property, but such as, having respect to the exigencies of the particular service, ought reasonably to be observed. It is such care as, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of employees, is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered. . . A degree of care ordinarily exercised in such matters may not be due, or reasonable, or proper care, and therefore not ordinary care, within the meaning of the law.[6]

---

[1] Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co., 6 Wall. 10 (1867), Nelson, J.

[2] United States v. Athens Armory, 2 Abb. C. C. 137 (1868).

[3] United States v. Padelford, 9 Wall. 540 (1869).

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 517, 218; 49 Conn. 222; 143 Mass. 239; 91 N. Y. 445-47.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 220.

[6] See 96 U. S. 195-96.

[1] Schreiber v. Butler, 84 Ind. 576 (1882).

[2] Jones v. Inhabitants of Andover, 10 Allen, 20 (1865), Bigelow, C. J.

[3] 2 Pars. Contr. 87, tit. Bailment.

[4] [Heathcock v. Pennington, 11 Ired. L. 643 (1850), Ruffin, C. J.

[5] Brown v. Lynn, 31 Pa. 512 (1858), Williams, J.

[6] Wabash Ry. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 460-61 (1882), Harlan, J. See also 25 Ind. 197; 74 Me. 497; 104 Mass. 101; 132 id. 426; 58 N. H. 528; 10 Oreg. 254; 41 Eng. C. Law, 425.

Reasonable care. The care and foresight which men of ordinary prudence are accustomed to employ.[1]

Care exercised in proportion to the danger of doing harm to others.[2]

A relative term, with no fixed meaning. The caution which persons of ordinary prudence would exercise in any given case is "reasonable care" in law. That care which under some circumstances would be reasonable care might under other circumstances be gross negligence.[3]

Slight care. The degree of care which every man of common sense, though inattentive to his own affairs, applies to them.[4]

See further CARRIER; CAUTION; DILIGENCE; DUTY, 1; KNOWLEDGE, 1; NEGLIGENCE; PRUDENCE.

CARGO. Goods on board of a vessel.[5]

All the merchandise and effects laden on board a ship, exclusive of persons, rigging, ammunition, provisions, guns, etc. What is laden on board as merchandise.[6]

Generally speaking, the entire load of the ship.[7]

See BOTTOMRY; CHARTER-PARTY; COLLISION, 2; DISPATCH; HYPOTHECATE; SAIL; SALVAGE; SHIP, 2.

CARICATURE. See LIBEL, 5.

CARLISLE TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

CARNAL. See KNOWLEDGE, 2.

CARPENTER. See CONTRACTOR; MANUFACTURER.

CARRIAGE. 1. The act of carrying: transportation, conveyance; also, that which carries or conveys.

To the ordinary mind, does not convey the idea of a railroad or street railway car, nor of a wheeled vehicle for the transportation of merchandise or products used in ordinary business. The idea is a vehicle for the transportation of persons for pleasure or business, drawn by horses or other draught animals over the ordinary streets and highways of the country, and not that of a "car" used upon a railroad or street railway expressly constructed therefor. As yet, in this country, the vehicles used for transporting passengers on railroads and street railways are generally called cars, occasionally coaches; seldom, if ever, carriages. The definition given by the older lexicographers of "carriage" was very general and indefinite, while that given in our own times is more in consonance with the restricted meaning of the word as understood by people in general. In a bill of lading therefore, a "carriage" will not include a street car.[1]

See BICYCLE; CARRIER; FREIGHT; VEHICLE.

2. Manner of carrying one's self, behavior. See BEHAVIOR; LASCIVIOUS.

CARRIER. One who engages to transport persons or property.

Common carrier. One who undertakes, for hire or reward, to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him, from place to place.[2] Private or special carrier. One who agrees in a special case, with some private individual, to carry for hire.[3]

A common carrier holds himself out "in common," that is, to all persons who choose to employ him, as ready to carry for them.[3]

If it is his legal duty to carry for all alike, who comply with the terms as to freight, etc., he is a common carrier; if he may carry or not, as he deems best, he is but a private individual, and may make such contracts as suit himself.[4]

A private carrier, like an ordinary bailee for hire, is only liable for the injury or loss of the goods intrusted to him when it results from the failure of himself or his servant to exercise ordinary care. He is not bound to carry for any person unless he enters into a special agreement to do so.[5] He is not an insurer, but must use care and skill.[6] The bailor must prove negligence.

A common carrier is bound to carry for all who offer such goods as he is accustomed to carry, and who tender reasonable compensation for carrying them. If he refuses to perform his obligation in this respect he may be held liable in damages.[6]

Common carriers are classified as carriers of goods or merchandise, and as carriers of passengers. Their office is quasi public: the public have an interest in the faithful discharge of the duties. Their property, being devoted to a public use, may be regulated by the legislature.[7]

I. Common Carrier of Goods or Merchandise. To him "common carrier" and "carrier" are applied by way of pre-eminence. His relation, at common law, is that of insurer against all losses except such as result from an act of God or of the public enemy. As against any other cause of loss, the law conclu-

[1] [Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co., 6 Duer, 646 (1857).

[2] Dexter v. McCready, 54 Conn. 172 (1886), Park, C. J.

[3] Read v. Morse, 34 Wis. 318 (1874), Lyon, J. See also 100 U. S. 195; 1 Flip. 18.

[4] [2 Pars. Contr. 87; 20 N. Y. 69.

[5] Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mas. 142 (1816), Story, J.

[6] [Thwing v. Great West. Ins. Co., 103 Mass. 406-7 (1869), cases, Gray, J.

[7] Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co., 9 Metc. 366 (1845); 113 U. S. 49.

[1] [Cream City R. Co. v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 63 Wis. 97 (1885), Taylor, J.

[2] Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. 53 (1822), Parker, C. J.

[3] Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 342 (1867), Parker, J. See also 3 Wend. 161; Story, Contr. § 752, a.

[4] Piedmont Manuf. Co. v. Columbia, &c. R. Co., 19 S. C. 364 (1883), Simpson, C. J.

[5] Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush, 702-6 (1879), cases.

[6] The Margaret, 94 U. S. 497 (1876), cases. See also 25 Am. Law Reg. 451-61 (1886), cases.

[7] See Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 130 (1876). See generally 1 Sm. L. Cas. 406-41, cases.

sively presumes negligence on his part — a rule which proceeds upon the ground of public policy. He and his employer are not on equal terms: the property is within his power, and it would be difficult for the owner to prove misconduct. He may limit the operation of this rule by a special agreement — just and reasonable in itself, not against legal policy, and not exempting him from liability for negligence or misconduct.[1]

Toward avoiding the effects of an overpowering cause, ordinary diligence only is exacted.[2]

He may regulate his business by such rules as are in themselves reasonable, consistent with law and public policy, and distinctly made known to shippers.[3]

For a reasonable cause he may refuse to receive goods.

The common law requires him to charge equal rates for the same service, without discrimination.[4]

He has a right to know both the general nature and the value of packages offered for carriage.[5] But the law does not exact of him knowledge of the contents of a package, nor permit him, in cases free from suspicion, to require information as to the contents, as a condition to transportation.[6]

He has a lien for freight, q. v.

On the service of legal process, he may surrender goods into the custody of the law.[7]

The fair result of the cases limits his liability, where no special contract exists, to his own line. But if he undertakes the entire service, he cannot make another carrier the agent of the consignor or consignee.[8]

II. Common Carrier of Passengers. His duty is to carry all persons who apply for transportation, if his accommodations are sufficient and there exists no reasonable objection to the persons.[9]

He may make reasonable regulations for the comfort and safety of the passengers. For non-compliance with a proper regulation, he may expel a passenger. Each passenger is to take at least ordinary care of himself. The carrier is expected to exercise the highest degree of vigilance — he represents that all the means of conveyance are sound, and that his employees will use the utmost of human foresight toward preventing accidents and securing a safe journey.[1]

The engagement of a railroad company is to carry its passengers safely; for an injury arising from a defect in its road, which could have been guarded against by the exercise of proper care, it will be liable in damages. Though a carrier of passengers is not, like a carrier of property, an insurer against all accidents except those caused by an act of God or the public enemy, it is charged with the utmost care and skill in the performance of its duty; which implies not merely the most attention in respect to the movement of cars, but to the condition of the road, and of its ties, rails,— all appliances essential to the safety of the train and passengers. For injuries through negligence, to which the passenger does not contribute by his own act, it is liable.[2]

In guarding passengers from dangers not incident to ordinary railway travel, the rule of liability is less stringent than in the case of the ordinary perils from appliances, servants, and operation of trains; but in no case must the carrier expose the passenger to extra-hazardous dangers that might readily be discovered or anticipated by reasonable and practicable care and foresight.[3]

The standard of duty should be according to the consequences that may ensue from carelessness. The rule has its foundation in public policy. It is approved by experience, and sanctioned by the plainest principles of reason and justice. The courts should not relax it. The terms in question do not mean all the care and diligence the human mind can conceive of, nor such as will render the transportation free from any possible peril, nor such as would drive the carrier from his business. . . The rule is beneficial to both parties. It tends to give protection to the traveler, and warns the carrier against the consequences of delinquency.[4]

---

[1] See Southern Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 267–73 (1874), cases; York Co. v. Illinois Central R. Co., 3 id. 111–13 (1865), cases; N. Y. Central, &c. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 id. 359–64 (1873), cases; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Express Co., 93 U. S. 181 (1876); Brown v. Adams Express Co., 15 W. Va. 816–26 (1879), cases.

[2] Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 189–91 (1869), cases.

[3] New York Central & Hudson River R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 27 (1879).

[4] Rothschild v. Wabash R. Co., 15 Mo. Ap. 245–46 (1884).

[5] Muser v. Holland, 17 Blatch. 414–15 (1880), cases.

[6] Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 535–36 (1872), cases; State v. Goss, 59 Vt. 271 (1886), cases.

[7] 2 Pars. Contr. 207.

[8] Michigan Central R. Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 16 Wall. 3-4 (1872); Ogdensburg, &c. R. Co. v. Pratt, 22 id. 129 (1874); Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Express Co., 93 U. S. 181 (1876); St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Railroad Co., 104 id. 157–59 (1881); Myrick v. Michigan Central R. Co., 107 id. 106–10 (1882), cases; Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Denver, &c. R. Co., 110 id. 680 (1884); Keep v. Indianapolis, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 208, 214–19 (1881), cases; Aigen v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 132 Mass. 425 (1882), cases; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 31 F. R. 248 (1887), cases. On the carriage of freight generally, see 22 Cent. Law J. 79 (1886), cases.

[9] Pearson v. Duane, 4 Wall. 615 (1866).

[1] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 486 (1852); Hall v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 15 F. R. 57, 69–97 (1882), cases.

[2] Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 109 (1886), Field, J.

[3] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, Ill. Sup. Ct. (Nov. 11, 1887): 26 Cent. Law J. 288; ib. 290–92 (1888), cases. The plaintiff took aboard non-union laborers (under police protection) who went into the smoking-car with other passengers, among whom was Pillsbury. The train, while stopping at a crossing (not a station), was boarded by a mob who attacked the laborers, and shot Pillsbury. The company was held liable in damages for his death, on the ground that the attack might have been foreseen and the death of the passenger averted.

[4] Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 296–97 (1876), cases, Swayne, J. See also 26 Cent. Law J. 50–55 (1888), cases; Hyman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Sup Ct. Pa. (1888).

He is liable for the slightest fault. He cannot by special contract exempt himself from liability for negligence or misconduct. The burden of disproving negligence rests upon him. He must show by affirmative evidence that he exercised the requisite degree of care.[1]

What will be misconduct on the part of servants toward a passenger cannot be defined by a rule applicable to every case, but must depend upon the particular circumstances in which they are required to act. In the enforcement of reasonable regulations established by the carrier for the conduct of its business, the servant may be obliged to use force. But the law will not protect the carrier if the servant uses excessive or unnecessary force.[2]

A passenger upon a railroad, taking a drawing-room car, has a right to assume that the car is there under a contract with the railroad corporation, and that the servants in charge of the car are its servants, for whose acts, in the discharge of their duty, it is liable.[3]

The negligence of a servant of a palace-car company whose car forms part of the carrier's train is negligence in the railroad company, though an additional sum has been paid to the former company.[4] See SLEEPING-CAR.

See further ACCIDENT; ACT, 1, Of God; BAGGAGE; BAILMENT; COMMERCE; DELIVERY, 1; EXPRESS COMPANY; LIEN; NEGLIGENCE; PASSENGER; POLICY, 1; RAILROAD; RIGHT, 2, Civil Rights Acts; STOPPAGE; TORT, 2; TUG-BOAT; WAREHOUSEMAN; WHARFINGER.

CARRY. 1. In the law of larceny, "carry" is not the same as "carry away." "Did take and carry away" is the translation of "cepit et asportavit," used in indictments when processes and records were in Latin. "Away" or some other word must be subjoined to "carry" to modify its general signification.[5] See LARCENY.

"Take and haul away" has the same meaning as take and carry away.[6]

2. To bear: as, to "carry a concealed weapon."

Locomotion is not essential.[7] See further WEAPON.

3. When a party becomes entitled to the payment of costs as an incident to a verdict in his favor, the verdict is said to "carry costs." See DAMAGES.

4. That to carry safely is the obligation of a common carrier, see CARRIER.

Carry on. A single act pertaining to a particular business will not constitute one as "carrying on" or engaged in that business.[1]

Making a contract in Colorado to build and to deliver in Ohio certain machinery was held not "carrying on" business in Colorado.[2] See further FIND, 2.

Carry stock. When a broker buys stock and holds it on account of a customer, he is said to "carry stock."[3]

CART. See WAGON.

CARTA. See CHARTA.

CASE. 1. That which happens or comes about; an occurrence; a circumstance to which something applies. Compare CASUS.

In the Revised Statutes, § 5392, limiting perjury to oaths in a case in which the law authorizes an oath to be administered, "case" is not confined to a suit or proceeding in court. The meaning is, the law must authorize the oath under the circumstances existing; as, in justifying bail.[4]

The expression "all cases" often signifies all cases of a particular class only. The generality of the words will be restrained by the context and the general scheme of the instrument.[5]

The words "in case he lives" imply a condition as explicitly as "if," "upon," and the like, and express a contingency.[6] See THEN; UPON, 2.

2. A state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice.[7]

A question contested before a court of justice; an action or suit in law or equity.[8]

An action, suit, or cause, qq. v.

In the sense of "a state of facts involving a question for discussion or decision, a cause or suit in court," will include a question pending before a commission authorized to hear and determine matters pertaining to railroads.[9]

The word is applied in New York to at least three abstract ideas: a suit or action at law; the combination of facts upon which each party relies to sustain

---

[1] Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 456 (1880), cases; Hart v. Penn. R. Co., 112 id. 333–43 (1884), cases; Waterbury v. N. Y. Central, &c. R. Co., 17 F. R. 671, 674–93 (1883), note; 22 Am. Law Rev. 198–202 (1888), cases.

As to contract for non-liability for negligence, see also Griswold v. New York, &c. R. Co., 53 Conn. 385–86 (1885), cases, pro and con.; Lake Shore, &c. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 476 (1886); Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 465 (1886), cases.

[2] New Jersey Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 646–47 (1887), cases. As to servants, see 28 Cent. Law J. 127 (1888) — Justice of the Peace (Eng.).

[3] Thorpe v. N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. Co., 76 N. Y. 402 (1879).

[4] Commonwealth v. Adams, 7 Gray, 45 (1856); Commonwealth v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 247 (1882).

[5] Spittorff v. State, 108 Ind. 172 (1886).

[6] Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 389 (1858), Rice, C. J.

[1] Weil v. State, 52 Ala. 20–21 (1875); United States v. Jackson, 1 Hughes, 532 (1875).

[2] Cooper Manuf. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 735 (1885).

[3] Peckering v. Demerritt, 100 Mass. 421 (1868).

[4] United States v. Volz, 14 Blatch. 17 (1876).

[5] Phillips v. State, 15 Ga. 521 (1854); 27 Ark. 564. 11 Ohio St. 252; 18 Pa. 388; 118 U. S. 491.

[6] Robert's Appeal, 59 Pa. 72 (1868).

[7] Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 596 (1855), Gardiner, C. J.

[8] Exp. Towles, 48 Tex. 433 (1877), Roberts, C. J.

[9] Smith v. City of Waterbury, 54 Conn. 177 (1886).

his side of a controversy; and the aggregation of papers and evidence presented to an appellate court on the argument of an appeal.[1]

Case in judgment. The facts which constitute the case under consideration or already decided.

Case law. That part of the jurisprudence of a country which is deducible from the decisions rendered by the courts; law made by decided cases.

Case reserved. When the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject to the opinion of the court on the special case stated by counsel on both sides with regard to a matter of law.[2]

Case stated. When the parties submit to the court a written statement of the facts in the case as they agree upon them, to obtain a decision upon the question of law arising out of the facts. Also called a "case agreed upon," or "case made."

A case stated is a substitute for a special verdict,[3] q. v.

If a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause in chancery, it is referred, for an opinion, to the king's bench or the common pleas, upon a case stated for that purpose, wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision.[4]

Cases and controversies. By "cases and controversies," in the judicial article of the Constitution, are intended the claims of litigants brought before the courts for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it becomes a case. The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication.[5]

The term "controversies," if distinguishable from "cases," is so in that it is less comprehensive than the latter, and includes only suits of a civil nature.[6] See CONTROVERSY; JUDICIAL, Power.

See also ADMIRALTY; FICTITIOUS; LEADING; MERITS; OVERRULED; REPORT, 1 (3); TABLE, Of cases.

[1] [15 Alb. Law J. 242 (1877).

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 378.

[3] Whitesides v. Russell, 8 W. & S. 47 (1844).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 453.

[5] Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 F. R. 265 (1887), Field, J.

8. In pleading, a term for "action on the case," "trespass on the case," "special action of trespass on the case"—a common-law form of action.

A generic term, embracing many different species of actions, those of most frequent use being assumpsit and trover.[1]

A remedy for all personal wrongs committed without force—where the injury is consequential. Called "case" because the plaintiff's whole cause of complaint is set forth at length.[2]

Where the act done is in itself an immediate injury the remedy is by an action of trespass vi et armis. Where there is only a culpable omission, or where the act is not immediately injurious, but only consequentially and collaterally so, the remedy is by an action on the special case for the damages consequent on such act or omission.[3]

Where any special consequential damage arises, which could not be foreseen and provided for in the ordinary course of justice, the party is allowed, by common law and by statute of Westminster 2, c. 24, to bring a special action on his own case, by a writ formed according to the peculiar circumstances of his particular grievance.[4] See CASUS, Consimili casu.

The action of case lies for a tort not committed with force, actual or implied; for a tort committed forcibly where the matter affected was not tangible, as for an injury to a right of way or to a franchise; for an injury to a relative right; for an injury resulting from negligence; for a wrongful act done under legal process regularly issued from a court of competent jurisdiction; for a wrongful act committed by defendant's servant without his order, but for which he is still responsible; for the infringement of a right given by statute; for an injury done to property of which the plaintiff has the reversion only.

Damages not necessarily resulting from the act complained of must be alleged specially. The plea "not guilty" raises the general issue; and under this plea almost any matter of defense, except the statute of limitations, may be given in evidence. In some States the distinction between "trespass" and "case" has been abolished.

See AMENDMENT, 1; DAMAGES, Special; TRESPASS.

4. A chest, box, or package.

By statute 35 and 36 Vict. (1872), c. 77, s. 23, no explosive or inflammable substance shall be taken into a mine "except in a case or canister," etc. Held, that "case" means something solid and substantial in the nature of a canister, and that a package like a bag of linen or calico was not contemplated.[5]

[1] [Carrol v. Green, 92 U. S. 513 (1875), Swayne, J.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 122, 154.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 123; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892 (1773): 1 Sm. L. C., Part I, *754-69; Cooley, Torts, 70; 36 Conn. 182, 186.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 122-23, 50-51.

[5] Foster v. Diphwys Casson Slate Co., L. R., 18 Q. B. D. 428 (1887).

CASH. In all sales for cash the money must be paid when the property is delivered.[1]

A sale for cash is a sale for the money in hand.[2]

But when a factor is directed to sell grain for cash, evidence may be given of a well-established custom to allow the purchaser to receive the grain, and call for the money in a few days after delivery.[3]

Where goods are sold for cash, but the delivery is unconditional and without fraud or mistake, the title vests in the vendee notwithstanding the cash was not in fact paid.[4]

The idea of a sale on credit is that the vendee is to have the thing sold on his assumption to pay, and before actual payment.[5]

See CREDIT; CURRENT, 2; MONEY; PLACE, 1, Of delivery, payment; SALE; VALUE.

CASHIER. An officer or agent whose business is mainly to take care of the money of an institution, of a private person, or of a firm.

The cashier of a bank is the executive officer through whom the financial operations are conducted. He receives and pays out its moneys, collects and pays its debts, receives and transfers its commercial securities. Tellers and other subordinate officers are under his direction, and are, as it were, the arms by which designated portions of his functions are discharged.[6]

Evidence of powers habitually exercised with the acquiescence of the directors of the bank defines and establishes, as to the public, those powers — provided the charter is not violated.[6]

He is the general financial agent. He acts, or is presumed to act, according to general practice, and the course of business; and this binds the bank in favor of one who possesses no other knowledge.[7]

See AGENT; BANK, 2 (2); CHECK; DEPOSIT, 2.

[1] Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 255 (1836).

[2] Steward v. Scudder, 24 N. J. L. 101 (1853).

[3] Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 49 (1854), cases.

[4] Merchants' Nat. Bank of Memphis v. Nat. Bank of Commerce, 91 U. S. 95 (1875), Strong, J.

See also 24 Am. Law Reg. 514–19 (1885), cases; 20 Cent. Law J. 304–7 (1885), cases; 1 Cal. 45; 54 id. 218; 4 Mass. 245; 103 id. 17; 5 Allen, 91; 27 N. Y. 378; 62 id. 513; 69 id. 148; 9 Johns. 120; 13 id. 144; 39 Barb. 283; 1 Ohio, 189; 34 Pa. 311; 28 Gratt. 165.

[5] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 650 (1870), cases, Swayne, J.

[6] Ibid. 604, 641; Moores v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Piqua, 111 U. S. 156, 169 (1884), cases.

[7] Case v. Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, 100 U. S. 454 (1879); Martin v. Webb, 110 id. 14 (1884); Xenia Bank v. Stewart, 114 id. 224 (1885); Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 115 id. 344 (1885); Bostwick v. Van Voorhis, 91 N. Y. 353 (1883); Merchants' Bank v. Jeffries, 21 W. Va. 504 (1883); 20 Cent. Law J. 126–30 (1885), cases; 133 Mass. 22; Story, Agency, §§ 114–15; Whart. Ag. §§ 684–87; 3 Am. Law Rev. 612–40 (1869), cases; Bank. Mag., July, 1860. As to his signature, see Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 44 Ohio St. 448 (1886).

CASK. See EMPTY.

CASSETUR. See QUASH.

CAST. To transfer, invest with, place upon; as, in saying that the law casts the legal ownership of the property of an intestate upon the administrator,[1] or casts the estate upon the heir.[2]

Cast away. For a vessel to be lost, to be irrecoverable by ordinary means, to perish.[3]

Casting vote. See VOTE.

CASTIGATORY. See SCOLD.

CASTLE. See HOUSE, 1; MANOR.

CASUAL.[4] That which happens by accident or is brought about by an unknown cause. Compare REGULAR.

Casual ejector. A nominal defendant in the action of ejectment at common law.

By a fiction he was supposed to have entered and ejected the lawful possessor.[5]

Casual pauper or poor. A person who is assisted under the poor laws in a district other than that of his lawful settlement. Whence "casuals." See further POOR.

Casualty. An inevitable accident, q. v. "Unavoidable casualty," in common use in leases, comprehends only damage or destruction arising from supervening and uncontrollable force or accident. By strict definition, an event or accident which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent.[6] See ACT, 1, Of God; INSURANCE.

CASUS. L. A thing that happens: an occurrence; a combination of circumstances; an event; a case, q. v.

Casus fœderis. The case of the treaty: the case contemplated in a compact or contract.[7]

Casus fortuitous. An inevitable occurrence or accident.[8]

Casus major. An unusual accident.[9] See ACCIDENT; ACT, 1, Of God.

Casus omissus. A case not provided for. A combination of circumstances overlooked,

[1] 143 Mass. 392; 52 Pa. 232; 7 Wheat. 107

[2] 36 Cal. 332.

[3] 1 Wash. 372; 3 id. 382; 4 Dall. 412.

[4] L. casualis, happening by chance.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 202.

[6] [Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray, 325 (1855), Bigelow, J. See also Thompson v. Tillotson, 56 Miss. 36 (1878).

[7] See 1 Kent, 49.

[8] See 3 Kent, 217, 300; Whart. Neg. §§ 113, 553.

[9] Story, Bailm. § 240.

or deemed unimportant, in a statute or a contract.

Where the letter of a statute would have been enlarged to include an occurrence, had the legislature foreseen it, the courts will bring the case within the spirit of the statute.[1]

But, under this rule, a court may not go so far as virtually to make a law.[2]

Consimili casu. In like case.

To quicken the diligence of the clerks in chancery, who were much attached to ancient precedents, it was provided by statute of Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I (1285), c. 24, that when "in one case a writ shall be found in the chancery, and in a like case falling under the same right and requiring like remedy, no precedent of a writ can be produced, the clerks shall agree in forming a new one; and if they cannot agree, it shall be adjourned to the next parliament." . . This provision might have answered all the purposes of a court of equity.[3]

CATALOGUE. See COPYRIGHT.

CATCHING. See BARGAIN.

CATCHPOLE. Formerly, an officer, as a deputy-sheriff or a constable, who made arrests.

He was supposed to catch the prisoner by the poll—the head, or neck. The term now expresses contempt or derision.

CATTLE.[4] Domestic animals generally; animals useful for food or labor.

"Sheep, oxen, swine, and horses, which we in general call cattle, may be estrays."[5]

Not only domesticated horned animals, but also swine, horses, asses, and mules.[6]

In an indictment "steer" may be used for "cattle" or "neat cattle."[7]

Within the meaning of a penal statute, "buffaloes" may not be cattle.[1]

See ANIMAL; DAMAGE-FEASANT; FEED; FENCE; HEIFER; HOG; HORSE; PERISHABLE; PROVISIONS.

CAUCUS. See BRIBERY.

CAUSA. L. That which operates to produce an effect; that on account of which a thing is done; that which supplies a motive, or constitutes a reason.

Causa causans. The originating, efficient cause; the immediate cause. Causa causæ causantis. The cause of the cause operating; i. e., the near, not the direct, cause.[2] See CAUSE, 1.

Causa mortis. See DONATIO, Mortis, etc.

Causa proxima, non remota, spectatur. The near cause, not the removed, is considered. See at length CAUSE, 1, Proximate, etc.

Causa sine qua non. A cause without which a thing cannot be or exist: as, a cause without which an injury could not have occurred.[3]

Causa turpis. An unlawful motive or purpose: an immoral or illegal consideration.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Out of an illegal consideration an action cannot arise: no court will aid a party who founds his claim for redress upon an illegal act.[4] See further DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

CAUSE. 1. Eng. (1) That which produces or effects a result; that from which anything proceeds, and without which it would not exist.[5]

Proximate cause. The nearest, the immediate, the direct cause; the efficient cause; the cause that sets another or other causes in operation; the dominant cause. Remote cause. The removed, the distant, the indirect, the intermediate cause.

The law concerns itself only with the direct cause of an event — that force or influence which, in the order of causation, is nearest to the effect or result under consideration, and is sufficient of itself to produce the result.

The principle is of frequent application in the law of insurance; and in cases of involuntary negligence, as distinguished from wanton or intentional injuries.

---

[1] See 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 61; 2 id. 260; 4 id. 302.

[2] See United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 91 U. S. 85 (1875); Hobbs v. McLean, 117 id. 579 (1886).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 50-51.

[4] L. L. catalla, movables. In old English, "cattle" had not that meaning,—Marsh, Eng. Lang. 246. From L. capitalis, the head or chief. Compare "pecunia-ry," and "feud." When wealth consisted in heads of cattle (capita, capitalia), the word which designated them came to include all kinds of property. In the Elizabethan age "quick cattle" meant live stock. In time "chattel" denoted dead, inanimate property; and "cattle" sensate possessions. Wiclif, in 1380, translated Luke viii, 44, "a woman that spendid all hir catel in leechis;" and Chaucer, in 1388, wrote that an avaricious man "hath hope in his catel." See Trench, Glossary, 29.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 298.

[6] See United States v. Mattock, 2 Saw. 149-51 (1872); Decatur Bank v. St. Louis Bank, 21 Wall. 299 (1874); Ohio, &c. R. Co. v. Brubaker, 47 Ill. 462 (1868); Toledo, &c. R. Co. v. Cole, 50 id. 186 (1869); Hubotter v. State, 33 Tex. 484 (1870); 27 id. 726; 45 id. 84.

[7] State v. Lange, 22 Tex. 591 (1858); State v. Abbott, 32 Vt. 537 (1860).

[1] State v. Crenshaw, 22 Mo. 458 (1856).

[2] See 12 Wall. 399; 95 U. S. 132; 4 Gray, 398.

[3] 111 U. S. 241.

[4] The Florida, 101 U. S. 43 (1879); 2 Pet. *589; 87 Ind. 273; 45 Iowa, 241.

[5] Webster's Dict.

If we could deduce from the cases the best possible expression of the rule, it would remain after all to decide each case largely upon the special facts belonging to it, and often upon the very nicest discriminations. One of the most valuable criteria furnished by the authorities is to ascertain whether any new cause has intervened between the fact accomplished and the alleged cause. If a new force or power has intervened, of itself sufficient to stand as the cause of the misfortune, the other must be considered as too remote.[1]

No difficulty attends the application of the maxim when the causes succeed each other in the order of time. When one of several successive causes is sufficient to produce the effect (for example, to cause a loss), the law will never regard an antecedent cause of that cause, or the causa causans, q. v. But when there are two concurrent causes, the predominating efficient one must be regarded as the proximate, when the damage done by each cannot be distinguished. And certainly that cause which set the other in motion, and gave to it its efficiency for harm at the time of the disaster, must rank as predominant.[2]

What is the proximate cause of an injury is ordinarily a question for the jury. It is not a question of science or of legal knowledge. It is to be determined as a fact, in view of the circumstances of fact attending it. The primary cause may be the proximate cause of a disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement, as in the oft cited case of the squib thrown in the market-place. The question always is, Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury, a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held that, to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligent or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of attending circumstances. . . We do not say that even the natural and probable consequences of a wrongful act or omission are in all cases to be chargeable to the misfeasance or non-feasance. They are not when there is a sufficient and independent cause operating between the wrong and the injury. In such a case the resort of the sufferer must be to the originator of the intermediate cause. But when there is no intermediate efficient cause, the original wrong must be considered as reaching to the effect, and proximate to it. The inquiry must, therefore, always be whether there was any intermediate cause, disconnected from the primary fault, and self-operating, which produced the injury. Here lies the difficulty. But the inquiry must be answered in accordance with common understanding. In a succession of events an interval may always be seen by an acute mind between a cause and its effect, though it may be so imperceptible as to be overlooked by a common mind. Thus, if a building be set on fire by negligence, and an adjoining building be destroyed without any negligence in the occupants of the first building, no one would doubt that the destruction of the second building was due to the negligence that caused the destruction of the first. Yet in truth, in a very legitimate sense, the immediate cause of the burning of the second building was the burning of the first. The same might be said of the burning of the furniture in the first. Such refinements are too minute for rules of social conduct. In the nature of things, there is in every transaction a succession of events, more or less depending upon those preceding, and it is the province of a jury to look at this succession of events or facts, and ascertain whether they are naturally and probably connected with each other by a continuous sequence, or are dissevered by new and independent agencies, and this must be determined in view of the circumstances existing at the time.[1]

The question is not what cause was nearest in time or place to the catastrophe. The proximate cause is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental or instruments of a superior or controlling agency are not the proximate causes and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result. It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charged with the disaster. The proximate cause is the dominant cause, not the one which is incidental to that cause, its mere instrument, though the latter may be nearest in place and time to the loss.[3]

The jury must determine whether the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together that they become a natural whole, or whether the chain of events is so broken that they become independent, and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the primary cause — the negligence of the defendant.[3]

When several proximate causes contribute to an accident and each is an efficient cause, without the operation of which the accident would not have happened, it may be attributed to all or to any of the causes.[4]

That some agency intervenes between the original wrong and the injury does not necessarily bring the cause within the rule. It is firmly settled that the intervention of a third person, or of other and new

[1] Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. 52 (1868), Miller, J.; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 id. 542 (1873).

[2] Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Transportation Co., 12 Wall. 199 (1870), Strong, J.

[1] Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 474–76 (1876), Strong, J. In this case a mill was destroyed by fire communicated from an elevator, and to the elevator from a boat.

[2] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 130, 133 (1873), cases, Strong, J. See also Crandall v. Goodrich Transp. Co., 16 F. R. 75 (1883).

[3] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 377–78 (1876), cases, Agnew, C. J.; Hoag v. Lake Shore, &c. R. Co., 85 id. 297–98 (1877), cases.

[4] Ring v. City of Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 90 (1879), Earl, J., Reiper v. Nichols, 31 Hun, 495 (1884), cases causes, does not preclude a recovery, if the injury was the natural and probable result of the original wrong.[1]

Everything which induces or influences an accident does not necessarily and legally cause it. . . There can be no fixed rule defining a proximate cause. Much must depend upon the circumstances of each case.[2]

Strictly, the law knows no cause but a responsible human will. When such a will negligently sets in motion a natural force that acts upon and with surrounding conditions, the law regards such human action as the cause of resulting injury.[3]

Whether a particular act of negligence is the proximate cause is a question of fact to be determined by the jury under instructions.[3]

The unlawful act of a third person, though directly induced by the original wrong of the defendant, is not to be attributed to the original wrong as a proximate cause of the damage.[4] See ACT, 1, Of God; BLASTING; CONSEQUENCES; DAMAGES.

(2) The occasion for action; that by reason of which a thing is done; reason or ground for action.

The origin or foundation of a thing, as of a suit or action; a ground of action.[5]

Cause of action. The right which a party has to institute and carry through a proceeding.[6]

The act on the part of the defendant which gives the plaintiff his cause of complaint.[7]

Jurists have found it difficult to define a cause of action. It may be said to be composed of the right of the plaintiff and the obligation, duty, or wrong of the defendant.[8]

A wrong committed or threatened.[1]

A plaintiff must show himself entitled to the relief called for by the facts stated in his complaint. The allegations, the evidence, and the findings should correspond in legal intent.[2]

The expression implies not only a right of action, but that there is some person in existence who is qualified to institute process. The right must be capable of being legally enforced; and so there must be a person to be sued.[3]

The elements are: a right possessed by the plaintiff, and an infringement of such right by the defendant.[3]

Where the distinction between "trespass" and "case" is abolished, the plaintiff in his petition may present such facts as show a blending of those common-law forms of action.[3] See LIMITATION, 3, Statute of.

To "show cause of action" is to exhibit the facts upon which a right of action rests. The practice is resorted to in actions of tort to reduce the amount of bail required, as where it will appear that the cause of action is purely technical or is of a very ordinary nature.

See MERITORIOUS; SPLIT.

For cause. See CHALLENGE, 4; REMOVE, 2.

Good cause. Has no certain meaning in a stipulation for canceling a contract.[4]

Probable cause. Within the meaning of the law relating to actions for malicious prosecutions,—a reasonable cause of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged.[5]

Such a state of facts in the mind of the prosecutor as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person arrested is guilty.[6]

The existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind, acting on the facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor, that the person

---

[1] Billman v. Indianapolis, &c. R. Co., 76 Ind. 168-71 (1881). See also Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Krinning, 87 id. 354-55 (1882), cases; 12 Bradw. 153.

[2] Spaulding v. Winslow, 74 Me. 534-35 (1883), cases. See also Jucker v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 52 Wis. 152-53 (1881), cases; N. Y. Express Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 382-85 (1882); Nelson v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 30 Minn. 77 (1882); Ransier v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 32 id. 334 (1884), cases; Georgetown, &c. R. Co. v. Eagles, 9 Col. 547 (1886), cases; 14 Pet. 99; 10 Wall. 191; 66 Ga. 750; 4 Gray, 412; 76 Mo. 293; 3 Kent, 374; 4 Am. Law Rev. 201-16 (1870), cases; 4 South. Law Rev. 759-68 (1878), cases; Whart. Neg. § 73.

[3] Adams v. Young, 44 Ohio St. 86-91 (1886), cases, Follett, J. Sparks, negligently thrown from a mill smoke-stack, set fire to a stable one hundred feet away, from which a second building, two hundred feet distant, took fire, and from that the building in suit, sixty feet distant. See same and other cases, 25 Am. Law Reg. 568-70 (1886).

[4] The Young America, 31 F. R. 753 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.

[5] United States v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. C. C. 33 (1866): Burrill.

[6] [Meyer v. Van Collem, 28 Barb. 231 (1858).

[7] Jackson v. Spittall, L. R., 5 C. P. *552, 544 (1870), Brett, J.

[8] Veeder v. Baker, 83 N. Y. 160 (1880), Earl, J. See also Rodgers v. Mutual Endowment Association, 17 S. C. 410 (1881).

[1] Miller v. Hallock, 9 Col. 453 (1886), cases, Beck, C. J.

[2] Fruitt v. Anderson, 12 Bradw. 430 (1883).

[3] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Rice, 36 Kan. 600 (1887), Valentine, J.

[4] Cummer v. Butts, 40 Mich. 322 (1879).

[5] Munns v. Dupont, 3 Wash. 37 (1811), Washington, J.; 2 Denio, 617; 97 U. S. 645; 37 Md. 318, 381.

[6] Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 238 (1849), Shaw, C. J. See also Mitchell v. Wall, 111 Mass. 497 (1873); Heyne v. Blair, 62 N. Y. 22 (1875); Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 645 (1878), cases.

charged was guilty of the crime for which he was prosecuted.[1]

When information as to the commission of a crime is believed, and is such, and from such sources, that the generality of business men of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion would prosecute upon it under the same conditions.[2]

The constitutional provision that a warrant of arrest can issue only "upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation," contemplates an oath or affirmation by the person who, of his own knowledge, deposes to the facts which constitute the offense; the mere belief of the affiant is insufficient.[3]

"Probable cause for making an information" does not mean actual and positive cause. The complaint may be made upon information and belief.[4]

Prize courts deny damages or costs where there has been probable cause for a seizure. Probable cause exists where there are circumstances sufficient to warrant a reasonable ground of suspicion, even though not sufficient to justify condemnation.[5]

There is no substantial difference between "probable cause" and "reasonable cause" of seizure.[6] See PROSECUTION, Malicious.

Reasonable cause. A fact which would suggest to persons of average intelligence the same inference or action; such facts as would constrain a person of ordinary caution and sagacity to pursue a particular course of conduct; legal cause or excuse; probable cause.

In the law of homicide, reasonable cause or ground to apprehend harm or death. A bare fear, unaccompanied by any overt act indicative of the supposed intention, will not warrant a killing, if there is no actual danger.[7] See further DEFENSE, 1.

The reasonable cause which will justify a husband or wife in abandoning the other is, in Pennsylvania at least, that which would entitle the party so separating himself or herself to a divorce.[8] See ABANDON, 2 (1).

Reasonable cause to believe a debtor insolvent exists when the condition of his affairs is known to be such that prudent business men would conclude that he could not meet his obligations as they mature in the ordinary course of business.[1]

A recital in the certificate of a magistrate that "satisfactory cause" has been shown for issuing a warrant of arrest is not equivalent to a statement that he is satisfied that there is "reasonable cause" to believe that the charge contained in the preliminary affidavit is true.[2]

To avoid, as a fraudulent preference in the Bankrupt Act, a security taken for a debt, the creditor must have had such knowledge of facts as to induce a reasonable belief of his debtor's insolvency. . . Reasonable cause "to believe" and "to suspect" are distinct, in meaning and effect.[3] See PREFER, 2.

(3) An action at law, a suit at law or in equity; a judicial proceeding.

In any legal sense, action, suit, and cause are convertible terms.[4]

"Case" is more limited, importing a collection of facts with the conclusions thereon. A "cause" pends, is postponed, appealed, removed; whereas a "case" is made, vested, argued, decided, etc.[5]

See ACTION, 2; ADMIRALTY; CASE, 2; CHANCERY: JOINDER; SUIT; TITLE, 2.

2. Fr. A case; a trial.

Cause celebre. A celebrated trial; plural, causes celebres.

In French law, resembles a "State trial" in English law. Among English and American writers, a trial, or a reported case, famous for the parties and the facts involved.

CAUSEWAY. See BRIDGE.

CAUTELA. L. Caution; providence; care; heed.

Ad majorem cautelam. For the sake of the greater caution. Ex abundanti cautela. Out of extreme caution. Ex majore cautela. By way of greater vigilance.

Applied to the use of apparently superfluous words and the doing of things seemingly supererogatory, from an apprehension that otherwise some right may be yielded or prejudiced, some power or privilege waived, or an estoppel created: as where formal, technical, and synonymous terms are employed in instruments; where slightly varying averments are made in pleading: where special statutory power to do a thing is conferred, on the supposition that power may not already exist.[6]

CAUTION. Attention to the effect of a thing about to be done; regard to contingencies; forethought; care. See CAUTELA.

[1] Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 24 How. 551-52 (1860), Clifford, J.

[2] [Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 226-29 (1878), cases, Graves, J. See also Burton v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 33 Minn. 191 (1885), cases; 1 Am. Ld. Cas. 213; 23 Ind. 67; 12 Bradw. 635; 52 Me. 505; 76 Mo. 670; 20 Ohio, 129; 28 Iowa, 49; 45 Tex. 544.

[3] United States v. Tureaud, 20 F. R. 623-24 (1884), cases, Billings, J. See also Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 451 (1880).

[4] State v. Davie, 62 Wis. 308 (1885).

[5] [The Thompson, 3 Wall. 162 (1865), cases, Davis, J.

[6] Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 646 (1878).

[7] Wiggins v. People, 93 U. S. 478-80 (1876), cases, Clifford, J.

[8] Gordon v. Gordon, 48 Pa. 234 (1864); Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. Eq. 337 (1849).

[1] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cook, 95 U. S. 346 (1877), cases, Hunt, J.; Dutcher v. Wright, 94 id. 557 (1876), cases; Stucky v. Masonic Bank, 108 id. 74 (1883).

[2] May v. Hammond, 144 Mass. 152 (1887), cases.

[3] Grant v. First Nat. Bank of Monmouth, 97 U. S. 81 (1877), Bradley, J.

[4] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 112 (1866), Davis, J.

[5] 18 Conn. App. 10.

[6] 6 Wheat. 108; 2 Saw. 150; 59 Pa. 333.

Cautionary. By way of warning; made or done in anticipation of a change in circumstances; providing for an adverse contingency.

Cautionary judgments may sometimes be entered or confessed to bind lands or to charge special bail.

Cautionary orders are intended to provide for indemnity against loss by reason of an injunction issued.[1]

CAVEAT. L. Let him take heed; let him beware.

A formal notice or warning to an officer or a court not to do a specified act; as, not to probate a will, grant letters of administration, issue letters-patent for an invention or for land,—until the person procuring the order can be heard in opposition to the contemplated act or proceeding.[2]

Caveator. He who interposes a caveat. Caveatee. He against whom a caveat is interposed.

Protects the rights of one person against rights which, without it, might arise in favor of another person out of the proposed proceeding. Thus, for example, it secures time to perfect an invention without the risk of a patent being granted to another—allows an opportunity to show priority of invention and title.[3]

Caveat actor. Let the doer beware.

Caveat emptor. Let the buyer beware.

A purchaser of property must examine and judge for himself as to its title and quality, unless dissuaded by representations.

In the absence of fraud or an express warranty, the purchaser of realty has no relief against a defect in the title, or for the unsuitableness of the land for a particular purpose, either of which an examination, which he was free to make, would have revealed. And so as to personalty, in the absence of imposition or of an express assurance, no warranty of title or of quality is implied. The maxim does not apply where a specific article is ordered for a known purpose, nor where merchandise is sold not by sample nor under the inducement of an express warranty, but with opportunity for thorough inspection. In other cases a warranty is implied that the article will reasonably answer the purpose for which it is ordinarily used.

Where there is neither fraud nor warranty, and the buyer receives and retains the goods without objection, he waives his right to object afterward. Where the buyer has no opportunity to inspect, and no warranty is given, the law implies the condition that the thing shall fairly answer the description in the contract.[4]

The fundamental inquiry is whether, under the circumstances of the case, the buyer had the right to rely and necessarily relied upon the judgment of the seller.[1]

The rule applies to a purchaser at a judicial sale: he takes the defendant's interest only.[2]

See COMMENDATIO; DECEIT; DICTUM, Gratis; FRAUD, Actual; SALE, Judicial; SAMPLE; SOUND, 2 (2).

Caveat venditor. Let the seller take heed.

This maxim of the civil law expresses a doctrine contrary to the rule of caveat emptor of the common law. An implied warranty of title on the sale of a chattel is common to both systems; but while in the civil law a fair price implies a warranty also of the soundness of the article, by the common law, as seen above, to make the vendor answerable for the quality there must be either an express warranty or fraud on his part. The civil law maxim applies to executory sales, to contracts for goods to be manufactured or produced, and to sales where the buyer has no opportunity to inspect the article purchased.[3]

Caveat viator. Let the traveler take care.

A traveler upon a highway must use reasonable care in detecting and avoiding defects in the road.[4] See SIDEWALK; STREET.

CEASE. See RATIO, Cessante, etc.

Where a lot was to revert if a school-house "ceased" to stand on it for two years, and none was built, held, that the lot did not revert. A thing cannot "cease" until after it has begun.[5]

Insurance conditioned to be void if the premises "cease to be operated" as a factory was held not void because of a temporary suspension on account of yellow fever.[6]

CEDE. See CESSION.

CEMETERIES. See BURIAL.

CENSUS. A rating, numbering, valuing, assessing.

"Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States . . according to their respective numbers. . . The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct."[7]

In connection with the ascertainment of the number of inhabitants, the act of Congress provides for inquiries as to age, birth, marriage, occupation, and

[1] R. S. § 718.

[2] See Slocum v. Grandin, 36 N. J. E. 488 (1884).

[3] R. S. § 4902.

[4] Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. 309 (1863); Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 id. 388 (1870); 2 Kent, 478; 1 Story, Eq. § 212; 3 Bl. Com. 165.

[1] Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 116, 119-15 (1884), cases; Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 32 (1885); Burwell v. Fauber, 21 Gratt. 463 (1871), cases.

[2] Oslerberg v. Union Trust Co., 93 U. S. 428 (1876); 105 Ill. 339.

[3] See Wright v. Hart, 18 Wend. 453 (1837), Walworth, Ch.; ib. 432; Hargous v. Stone, 5 N. Y. 81-84 (1851), cases.

[4] Cornwell v. Commissioners, 10 Excheq. *774 (1855).

[5] Jordan v. Haskell, 63 Me. 192 (1874).

[6] Pass v. Western Assurance Co., 7 Lea, 707 (1881).

[7] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 2, cl. 3. See R. S. tit. XXXI.

other matters of general interest. For a refusal to answer an inquiry a small penalty is imposed. There is no attempt to inquire into private affairs, nor are the courts called upon to enforce answers to inquiries. Similar inquiries usually accompany the taking of a census of every country, and they are not deemed to encroach upon the rights of the citizen.[1]

CENT. See COIN.

CENTER. See FILUM; ROAD, 1; STREET.

CEPI; CEPIT. See CAPERE, Cepi, Cepit.

CERA. See SEAL, 1.

CERTAIN. Known, established, definite: as, a certain date, a certain instrument. See CERTUM; CUSTOM; DEBT.

Since "uncertain" may include any doubt, whether reasonable or unreasonable, a jury should not be told that if they feel uncertain that a witness is to be believed, they should acquit.[2]

Certainty. 1. Assurance; confident belief: freedom from doubt or failure; also, that which is established beyond question. Compare CONTINGENCY; THEN: WHEN.

The certainty of the law is of the highest consequence. See HARDSHIP.

Moral certainty. A state of impression produced by facts in which a reasonable mind feels a sort of coercion or necessity to act in accordance with it.[3]

The phrase, borrowed from the publicists and metaphysicians, signifies only a very high degree of probability. . . Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is proof to a moral certainty, as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent; each has been used by eminent judges to explain the other.[4] See further DOUBT, Reasonable.

2. Distinctness, accuracy, clearness of statement; opposed to uncertainty and ambiguity, q. v.

Generally refers to written language.

In pleading, statement of alleged facts so clear and explicit as to be readily understood by the opposite party who is to make answer, by the jury which is to find the truth, and by the court which is to pronounce judgment.[5]

Consists in alleging the facts necessary to be stated, so distinctly as to exclude ambiguity and make the meaning of the averments clearly intelligible.[1]

Three degrees of certainty were formerly recognized: Certainty to a common intent — words used in their ordinary sense, but susceptible of a different meaning. This degree was required in defenses and in instruments of an ordinary nature. Certainty to a certain intent in general — the meaning ascertainable upon a fair and reasonable construction, without recurrence to possible facts which do not appear. This degree was required in indictments and declarations. Certainty to a certain intent in particular — such technical accuracy of statement as precluded all question, inference, or presumption. This was required in estoppels and as to disfavored pleas.[2]

A negotiable instrument must have certainty as to payor, payee, amount, time, fact of payment, and, perhaps, place of payment.[3]

A postal card containing the words "Send us pice of counter screen" was held to present a case of incurable uncertainty; and the judge properly refused to submit to the jury to determine whether "pice" meant "piece" or "price."[4]

CERTIFICATE.[5] A writing giving assurance that a thing has or has not been done, that an act has or has not been performed, that a fact exists or does not exist.

To "certify" is to testify to in writing: to make known or establish as a fact. The word is not essential to a "certificate:" it is enough that the law calls a statement a certificate.[6] See CHECK, Certified.

Certificates are such as are authorized or required by law, and such as are purely voluntary. "Authorized or required by law" are: a certificate of a balance due, of costs, of a divorce, that a married woman has been decreed a feme sole trader, that a bankrupt has been discharged, that an alien has been naturalized, that a physician is qualified to practice medicine; a certificate of copyright, or of a trademark registered; a certificate that a document is authentic, or genuine; an officer's return of service of process. "Voluntary" certificates include: certificates of benefits receivable, of check, of deposit, of interest, of loan, of no defense, of search, of stock, of scrip, of transfer, a receiver's certificate, qq. v.

Voluntary certificates are not conclusive evidence of the facts they state, except where, otherwise, an innocent party would be the loser. Certificates required by law of officers are conclusive of the facts

[1] Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 F. R. 250 (1887), Field, J.; R. S. § 2171.

[2] State v. Ah Lee, 7 Oreg. 258 (1879).

[3] Montana v. McAndrews, 3 Monta. 165 (1878), Wade, C. J.: Bur. Circ. Ev. 199.

[4] Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 23 (1875), Gray, C. J. See also United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 164 (1882).

[5] See Andrews v. Whitehead, 13 East, 102, 107 (1810).

[1] [Gould, Pleading, IV, sec. 24.

[2] See Coke, Litt. 303 a; Gould, Plead. III, sec. 52; Steph. Plead. 380; 3 Cranch, C. C. 56; 5 Conn. 423; 9 Johns. 314.

[3] See 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 80, 87; 24 Am. Law Reg. 719-24 (1885), cases; 59 Iowa, 649.

[4] Cheney Bigelow Wire Works v. Sorrell, 142 Mass. 442 (1886).

[5] L. certificatus, assured, made certain.

[6] State v. Schwin, 65 Wis. 213 (1886): Webster

mentioned, but fraudulent procurement may be shown. Certificates authorized by statute are evidence of such facts only as the officer may certify under the statute.[1]

2. A writing made by a court, a judge or an officer thereof, and properly authenticated, to give notice to another court of a thing done in the court a quo. See OPINION, 3, Division of.

CERTIORARI. L. To be certified. A writ by which the record of a proceeding in a lower court is removed into a higher court for review.

The emphatic word in the Latin writ, which read: quia certis de causis certiorari volumus, for as much as concerning certain causes we wish to be certified. From certior, the comparative of certus, known, established. See CERTUM.

After indictment found, a writ of certiorari facias [that you cause to be certified] may be had to certify and remove the indictment, with all the proceedings thereon, from any inferior court of criminal jurisdiction into the court of king's bench.[2]

The writ, at common law, issued out of chancery or the king's bench, directed, in the king's name, to the judges or officers of the inferior courts, commanding them to return, before him, the record of a cause depending before them, that the party may have more sure and speedy justice or such other justice as he shall assign to determine the cause.[3]

The writ has been extended, and the practice under it regulated, by statutes in each State. Speaking generally, it is employed for removing statutory proceedings for completion, when the lower court fails to do so; it serves as an auxiliary process to obtain a full return to other process; it effects a review of the determinations of special tribunals, commissioners, and magistrates; it secures an inspection of the record where a writ of habeas corpus has been sued out. Unless a statute directs otherwise, or palpable injustice will be done, it does not lie to review a decision based on a matter of fact, nor as to a matter resting in discretion; nor does it lie for an error in formality, substantial justice being dispensed.

The application for the writ must disclose a proper case upon its face. The plaintiff may have to furnish security for the demand, with interest and costs, before the writ will operate as a supersedeas, q. v.

The judgment is that the proceedings be quashed or affirmed, in whole or in part. At common law neither party recovered costs.

At common law, also, the writ was granted to a prosecutor as a matter of right, and to a defendant as a matter in discretion.[1]

Will not, in general, be issued where the party has another remedy, as by appeal.[2]

Bill of certiorari. An original bill, in equity, to remove a cause into a higher court.

States the proceedings in the lower court, the incompetency in the powers of such court to do complete justice, etc. Rarely used in the United States.[3]

CERTUM. L. Perceived, determined: definite, known, certain.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be made certain — or reduced to a certainty.

When the law requires certainty, that is accepted for certainty which, by computation or testimony, can be shown to be already certain; as, in questions respecting the sum to be paid on a negotiable instrument, the liquidation of damages for non-performance of a contract, reasonable time, and the like.[4]

CESSANTE. See RATIO, Cessante, etc.

CESSER. A ceasing; formerly, neglect of duty. Also, a yielding up, a cession, q. v.: as, the cesser of an interest conferred by a will.[5]

CESSIO. L. A giving up; surrender. See CESSION.

Cessio bonorum. A surrender of goods. In civil law, an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

Discharged the debtor to the extent of the property made over; and exempted him from imprisonment. French, cession des biens.[6]

CESSION. A yielding up; transfer. See CESSIO.

Cede: to give up, yield up.[7] Compare ABANDON, 1.

Concession. A grant, as of lands, between sovereignties. Recession. A reconveyance by a sovereign.

Thereby public property passes from one government to the other, but private property remains as before, and with it those municipal laws which are designed to secure its peaceful use and enjoyment. As a matter of course, all laws, ordinances, and regulations in conflict with the political character, institu-

[1] See 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 120–36, cases; 10 Oreg. 947.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 320.

[3] [Dean v. State, 63 Ala. 154 (1879); 13 Fla. 393; 15 Blatch. 286; 106 U. S. 31.

[1] See 4 Bl. Com. 321; Exp. Hitz, 111 U. S. 766 (1884).

[2] Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Christian, 89 Ala. 309 (1886), cases.

[3] Story, Eq. Pl. § 308; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 215.

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 78; 2 id. 143; 2 Kent, 480; 2 Black, 504; 99 U. S. 489; 101 id. 638; 9 Col. 279; 73 Ga. 92; 80 Va. 761; 59 Wis. 500; 61 id. 188; 66 id. 497; 67 id. 434.

[5] 91 U. S. 794.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 473; 1 Kent, 492; 15 Wall. 605; 38 F. R. 1.

[7] Somers v. Pierson, 16 N. J. L. 184 (1837).

tions, and constitution of the new government are at once displaced.[1] See LAND, Public; PUEBLO.

CESTUI. He: that one; the one. Also spelled cestuy. See ADDENDA.

Pronounced cĕst'-wē. A law-French term, corresponding to the classic French c' est lui (celui): it is for him that, etc. Plural, cestuis.

Cestui que trust. He for whom a trust exists, or was created: the beneficiary under a trust.[2]

The que is pronounced kē. See further TRUST, Cestui, etc.

Cestui que use. He for whom a use — exists: he for whose benefit land is held by another.[3] See further USE, 3, Cestui, etc.

Cestui que vie. He for whose life — land is held by another:[4] he whose life measures the duration of an estate.[5]

CF. An abbreviation of the Latin conferre, compare.

Used in references to analogous cases or subjects.

CH. An abbreviation of chancellor, chapter, chief.

CHAIN. See ABSTRACT; EVIDENCE, Circumstantial; OBLIGATION, 1.

It is incorrect to speak of a body of circumstantial evidence as a "chain," and allude to the different circumstances as the "links." A chain cannot be stronger than its weakest link. The metaphor may perhaps be correctly applied to the ultimate and essential facts necessary to conviction in a criminal case; but it is not true that every minor circumstance introduced to sustain the ultimate facts must be proven with the same degree of certainty.[6]

CHAIRMAN. See DESCRIPTIO, Personæ.

CHALLENGE.[7] 1. A request to fight — to fight a duel.

Whether made by word or letter, is indictable at common law. Tends to a breach of the peace. He who knowingly carries a challenge for another is guilty of the offense.[8] See PRIZE-FIGHT.

2. Objection to the legality of a vote about to be cast. See BALLOT.

3. Objection to a cause being tried before a particular judge on account of alleged bias, prejudice, interest, or other disqualification.

4. Objection to a juror or jurors drawn to try a cause.

Challenge to the array. An exception to the whole panel in which the jury are arrayed or set in order by the sheriff in his return.[1]

The reason which, before awarding the venire, would be sufficient to cause it to be directed to the coroner or to elisors, will be sufficient to quash the array when made by an officer of whose partiality there is any fair ground of suspicion; also, if the sheriff arrays the panel under the direction of either party.[1]

Challenge to the polls. An exception to particular jurors.

Lies for any matter showing disqualification. Also known as "principal challenge" and as the "challenge for cause."

Challenge for cause. For which a reason is assigned.— to the array or to the polls.

An objection to a particular juror; and may be "general" — that he is disqualified from serving in any case, or "particular" — that he is disqualified from serving in the action on trial.[2]

Challenge for favor. Of the same nature and effect as a principal challenge "propter affectum."

Peremptory challenge. For which no reason is assigned.

Principal challenge. 1. "Propter defectum" — for disability: as, alienage, infancy, unsound mind, insufficient property. 2. "Propter affectum" — for bias or partiality: as, opinion formed; of kin to a party, or of the same fraternity or corporation; his attorney, servant, or tenant, or entertained by him; promised money for verdict; sued by exceptant in an action involving legal malice; being formerly a juror or an arbitrator in the matter; influenced by scruples against the punishment. 3. "Propter delictum" — for an offense committed: as, convicted of treason, forgery, perjury, or other crimen falsi.[3]

A juror unsuccessfully challenged for cause may be challenged peremptorily. In felonies, at common law, thirty-five peremptory challenges were allowed the accused; at present the number is about twenty in capital cases; in civil cases, if allowed at all, only to a very limited extent. The State is allowed peremptory challenges in capital cases, the number varying in the different States.

When a challenge for bias, actual or implied, is disallowed, and the juror is peremptorily challenged and

[1] Chicago & Pacific R. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S. 547 (1885), Field, J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 328.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 328; 4 Kent, 201; 1 Washb. R. P. 163.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 123; ib. 461.

[5] [1 Washb. R. P. 88.

[6] Clare v. People, 9 Col. 123 (1886), Helm, J.

[7] Mid. E. chalenge, a claim: F. chalonge, a dispute, accusation.

[8] See 4 Bl. Com. 150; 3 East, 581; 6 Blackf. 20; 1 Dana, 594.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 359.

[2] Cal. Penal Code, § 1071; 70 Cal. 11.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 361-65; 4 id. 352; 29 Kan. 690; 17 S. & R. 162.

excused, and a competent juror is obtained in his place, no injury is done the accused, if, until the jury is completed, he has other peremptory challenges which he can use.[1]

Experience has shown that one of the most effective means to free the jury-box from men unfit to be there is the exercise of the peremptory challenge. . . The number of challenges must necessarily depend upon the discretion of the legislature, and may vary according to the condition of different communities, and the difficulties in them of securing intelligent and impartial juries.

Originally, by the common law, the crown could challenge peremptorily without limitation as to number. By an act passed in the time of Edward I, the right was restricted to challenges for cause. But, by rule of court, the crown was not obliged to show cause till the whole panel was called. Those not accepted on the call were directed to stand aside; and if a full jury was not otherwise obtained, the crown was required to show cause against those jurors; if no sufficient cause appeared, the jury was completed from them.

The right to challenge is the right to reject, not to select, a juror. If from those who remain an impartial jury is obtained, the constitutional right of the accused is maintained.[2]

Challenges are to be made before the jury is sworn. In the Federal courts the justness of a challenge is determined by the judge, without the aid of triors.[3]

See JURY; OPINION, 2; TRIORS; VOIR DIRE.

CHAMBER. A room in a house, used for purposes of a dwelling, of an office, or of a court. See HOUSE, 1; STAR-CHAMBER; SURVEY, Of land.

Chambers. In London, the offices of barristers.

Chambers, or at chambers. A private room or other place where parties may be heard and orders made by a judge, in such matters as the law does not require shall be considered in open court or by a full court. Of such are acts done in a court room while the court is not in session.

Jurisdiction at chambers is incidental to and grows out of the jurisdiction of the court itself. It is the power to hear and determine, out of court, such questions arising between the parties to a controversy as might well be determined by the court itself, but which the legislature has seen fit to intrust to the judgment of a single judge, out of court, without requiring them to be brought before the court in actual session. It follows that the jurisdiction of a judge at chambers cannot go beyond the jurisdiction of the court to which he belongs, or extend to the matters with which his court has nothing to do.[1]

"A judge at chambers" is simply a judge acting out of court.[2] See VACATION.

CHAMPERTY.[3] A bargain with a plaintiff or defendant, campum partire, to divide the land or other matter sued for between them, if they prevail: whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense. . . The purchasing of a suit or right of suing.[4]

Champart, in the French law, signifies a similar division of profits, being a part of the crop annually due to the landlord by bargain or custom.[4]

Champertor. One who purchases or promotes another's suit; a person chargeable with champerty. Champertous. Infected with champerty.

Champerty is the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute, or some profit out of it.[5]

A common example is (or was) the case of a contract by an attorney to collect a claim for a percentage.[6] Also of a champertous character are: purchases of demands involving litigation, of pretended titles, and like claims which cannot be realized upon except by lawsuit.[7]

As between an attorney and his client, it is essential that the attorney prosecute the suit at his own expense.[8]

Where the right to compensation is not confined to an interest in the thing recovered, but gives a right of action against the party, though pledging the avails of the suit as security for payment, the agreement is not champertous.[9]

Some courts have ruled that if the fact that a suit is being prosecuted upon a champertous contract comes to the knowledge of the court in any proper manner, it should refuse longer to entertain the proceeding. Other courts have held, what seems supported by the better reason, that the fact that there is a champertous contract for the prosecution of a cause of action is no ground of defense thereto, and can only be set up by the client against the attorney when the champertous agreement is sought to be enforced. . . The tendency is to relax the common-law doctrine so as to

[1] Spies v. Illinois (The Anarchists' Case), 123 U. S. 168 (Nov. 2, 1887), Waite, C. J.; Hopt v. Utah, 120 id. 436 (1887).

[2] Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 70-71 (1887), cases, Field, J

[3] R. S. § 819; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 157 (1878).

[1] Pittsburg, Ft. W., &c. R. Co. v. Hurd, 17 Ohio St. 146-47 (1866).

[2] Whereatt v. Ellis, 65 Wis. 644 (1886).

[3] Sham'-perty.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 153. See 2 Story, Eq. § 1043; 4 Hughes, 563; 10 F. R. 533; 53 Ind. 317; 22 Wend. 405.

[5] Stanley v. Jones, 7 Bing. *377 (1831), Tindal, C. J.

[6] See Ackert v. Baker, 131 Mass. 437-38 (1881), cases; McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 416 (1877); Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Johnson, 29 Kan. 227 (1883), cases.

[7] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1043-57.

[8] Phillips v. South Park Com'rs, 119 Ill. 627 (1887).

[9] Blaisdell v. Allen, 144 Mass. 395 (1887), cases.

permit greater liberality of contracting between attorney and client than was formerly allowed, for the reason that the condition of society which gave rise to the doctrine has, in a great measure, passed away. In some States the common-law rule is altogether repudiated.[1]

The English common law and statutes against maintenance and champerty had their origin, if not their necessity, in a different state of society from that which prevails at the present time. When the doctrine was established, lords and other large landholders were accustomed to buy up contested claims against each other, or against commoners with whom they were at variance, in order to harass and oppose those in possession. On the other hand, commoners, by way of self-defense, thinking that they had title to land, would convey part of their interest to some powerful lord, in order, through his influence, to secure their pretended right. The want of sufficient written conveyances, and records of titles, and the feudal relation of villein and liege lord, afforded facilities for the combinations and oppressions which followed this state of things. The power of the nobles became mighty in corrupting the fountains of justice. To remedy these evils, the law against both maintenance and champerty was introduced.[2]

CHANCE. A thing happens by chance to a person which is neither brought about nor pre-estimated by his understanding.[3] See GAME, 2; MEDLEY.

CHANCELLOR.[4] 1. In England, several officers bear this name.

Chancellor of the exchequer. A high officer of the crown, who sometimes sat in court, sometimes in the exchequer chamber, and, with the regular judges of the court, saw that matters were conducted to the king's advantage. His chief duties now concern the management of the royal revenue. Under the Judicature Act of 1873, he is deprived of his judicial functions.[5] See EXCHEQUER.

Lord chancellor. The presiding judge in the court of chancery.

In the courts of the Roman emperors he was a chief scribe or secretary, afterward invested with judicial powers and supervision over other officers. From the empire the name passed to the church: every bishop had a chancellor, the principal judge of his consistory. And when the modern kingdoms were established, almost every state preserved its chancellor, with different jurisdictions and dignities. In all of them he had supervision of such instruments of the crown as were authenticated in the most solemn manner. When seals came into use he had the custody of the king's great seal.[1]

The office is created by delivery of the king's great seal into the custody of the nominee. He becomes a privy counsellor by his office and prolocutor of the house of lords by prescription. He appoints all justices of the peace. Being formerly an ecclesiastic, presiding over the king's chapel, he became keeper of the king's conscience, visitor to all hospitals and colleges of the king's founding, and patron of certain of the king's livings. He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics; he superintends all charitable uses. These powers belong to him apart from the extensive jurisdiction he exercises in his judicial capacity in the court of chancery.[1] See CHANCERY, 1; WOOLSACK.

Vice chancellor. One of a class of equity judges who held court independently of the lord chancellor, but whose decisions were reviewable in his court. They perhaps originally acted in his place.

2. In the United States, the judge of a court of equity.

As a judicial title, in use in Alabama, Delaware, Kentucky, Mississippi, and New Jersey. See CHANCERY, 2.

3. A person sitting as a judge in equity; as in saying that a circumstance in a case would cause a "chancellor" to hesitate to enter a decree in favor of a particular person. See TITLE, Marketable.

CHANCERY.[2] 1. In England, the highest court next to parliament.

Originally consisted of two distinct tribunals: an ordinary court, or court of common law; and an extraordinary court, or court of equity.

The "ordinary court" was the more ancient. It had jurisdiction in proceedings to cancel letters-patent, in cases of traverse of office, and the like, and of personal actions against officers of the court. Whenever any such cause came to an issue of fact, the chancellor, having no power to summon a jury,

[1] Courtright v. Burnes, 18 F. R. 317 (1882), cases, McCrary, J.; ib. 323-29, cases; s. c. 3 McCrary, 63, 68-75, cases. See generally Fowler v. Callam, 102 N. Y. 397 (1886).

[2] Hovey v. Hobson, 51 Me. 64 (1863), Dickerson, J. See also 29 Ala. 680; 70 id. 118, 179; 17 Ark. 624; 40 Conn. 570; 57 Ga. 264; 73 Ill. 13; 89 id. 183; 5 T. B. Mon. 416; 1 Pick. 416; 132 Mass. 388; 4 Mich. 538; 13 Ired. L. 198; 4 Duer, 275; 13 Ohio St. 175; 2 Bart. 457; 29 Wis. 506; 19 Alb. Law J. 468-69 (1879), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 402-8 (1884), cases; 24 id. 198 (1887), cases.

[3] [Goodman v. Cody, 1 Wash. T. 335 (1871).

[4] F. chancelier: L. L. cancellarius: a cancellando, from canceling — illegal letters-patent,— 4 Coke, Inst. 88; 3 Bl. Com. 46. He stood near the screen, cancellus, before the judgment seat,— Skeat. See also 1 Campbell's Lives Ld. Ch. 1-2.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 44, 55.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 46, 47, 49.

[2] Chancelry: L. L. cancellaria, the record-room of a chancellor,— Skeat. L. cancelli, bars, lattice — to keep off the people,— 3 Chitty, Bl. Com. 46.

sent the record to the court of king's bench for trial. Out of this ordinary tribunal also issued original writs under the great seal, commissions of charitable uses, of bankruptcy, of lunacy, etc.; for which the court was said to be always open: whence called the officina justitiæ.[1]

The "extraordinary court" became the court of greatest consequence. When the courts of law, which followed strictly the directions of the original writs, pronounced a harsh or imperfect judgment, application for redress was at first made to the king in person and his counsel; they, in time, referred the matter to the chancellor and a select committee, or, by degrees, to the chancellor alone,—the referee being empowered to mitigate the severity or to supply the defects of the judgment pronounced in the courts of strict law, upon consideration of all the circumstances in each case.[2] See CHANCELLOR.

The equitable jurisdiction of the court grew out of the exigencies of the times and of judicial administration: as from petitions to the king in council; cases as to which the precedents furnished no form of action for a remedy; cases calling for relief from fraud, accident, mistake, forfeiture; cases involving uses and trusts. The well-defined development of its distinct exercise dates from the time of Edward I (about 1300); but its character was crude until the time of Cardinal Woolsey and Sir Thomas Moore, under Henry VIII (1509-47). Lord Bacon reduced the practice to somewhat of a system. But Sir Heneage Finch (about 1660) so laid the foundation of modern equity jurisprudence as to have been called "the father of equity." Later lord chancellors, notably Hardwicke and Mansfield, extended and improved the system.[3]

Under the Judicature Act of 1873 the court of chancery became the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, retaining its former extraordinary jurisdiction; with part of its former ordinary jurisdiction transferred to the Court of Appeal, and the rest to the Courts of Common Law.

A too severe application of common-law rules brought the court of chancery into existence. . . . The body of chancery law is nothing else than a system of exceptions—of principles applicable to cases falling within the letter, but not within the intention, of particular rules.[4]

2. In the United States, "chancery" corresponds to "equity," and a "court of chancery" to a "court of equity," that is, a court exercising equitable powers.

Here equity jurisprudence has grown up chiefly since the close of the last century, the English court of chancery being followed as a model. In some of the States, and in the national tribunals, chancery powers are exercised by the common-law courts.[5] See further EQUITY.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 47-48.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 49-50, 50-53.

[3] See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 41-53; 3 Bl. Com. 53-55; 1 Kent, 494.

[4] Peacock v. Hart, 8 S. & R. 377 (1823), Gibson, J.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 54-58; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 1-42; 3 Story, Const. §§ 505-7, 644-45.

CHANGE. See ALTER; FUNDAMENTAL; PARTY, 2; VENUE.

'CHANGE. See EXCHANGE, 8.

CHANNEL. The main channel is that bed of a river over which the principal body of water flows.[1] See AQUA, Currit, etc.; NAVIGABLE.

CHAPTER. See STATUTE, 2.

CHARACTER. The qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from other persons. These constitute his real character; while the qualities he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character or reputation. . . . "Reputation" may be evidence of character, but it is not character itself.[2]

That which a person really is, in distinction from that which he may be reputed to be.[3]

Character [reputation] is the slow-spreading influence of opinion, arising from the deportment of a man in society.[4]

In many cases it has been said that the regular mode of examining a witness is to inquire whether he knows the general character of the person whom it is intended to impeach, but in all such cases the word "character" is used as synonymous with "reputation." What is wanted is the common opinion, that in which there is general concurrence; in other words, general reputation or character attributed. That is presumed to be indicative of actual character.[5]

General character. The estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided.

Ordinarily, the members of that community are the only proper witnesses to testify to such character. . . . Evidence of character is founded on opinion, and a witness testifying as to the general character of another must have the means of knowing such character.[6]

Good character. Good general reputation for one, several, or many qualities—as, for honesty, chastity, veracity, peaceableness, integrity.

Moral character and conduct may be proven: to afford a presumption that the person is not guilty of a criminal act; to affect the damages where the amount depends upon character and conduct; to impeach or confirm the veracity of a witness.

[1] St. Louis, &c. Packet Co. v. Keokuk Bridge Co., 31 F. R. 757 (1887), Love, J.

[2] [Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 608 (1850), Welles, J.

[3] Andre v. State, 5 Iowa, 394 (1857), Woodward, J.

[4] Trial of Hardy, 24 St. Tr. 1079 (1795), Erskine (Ld.), arguendo.

[5] Knode v. Williamson, 17 Wall. 586 (1873), Strong, J. See State v. Egan, 59 Iowa, 637 (1883).

[6] Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 354 (1829).

In civil suits the character of a party is not admissible in evidence unless the nature of the action involves his general character or directly affects it. In the case of a tort, when the defendant is charged with fraud from mere circumstances, evidence of his general character is receivable to repel it. Such evidence will be rejected, whenever the general character is involved by the plea only and not by the nature of the action. Character in regard to a particular trait is not in issue, unless the trait is involved in the matter charged.[1]

The bad character of the plaintiff may be shown in suits for damages for seduction, breach of promise to marry, slander, libel, and malicious prosecution, qq. v. The burden of proof is on the assailant.[2]

In homicide, evidence of previous good character may be made the basis on which to form a doubt.[3] But when the evidence is positive and satisfactory, good character cannot overcome the presumption of guilt:[4] against facts strongly proven, good character cannot avail.[5]

The old rule, that evidence of the good character of the defendant is not to be considered unless other evidence leaves the mind in doubt, has been much criticised; the weight of authority is now against it. If evidence of reputation is admissible at all its weight should be left to be determined by the jury in connection with all the other evidence in the case. The circumstances may be such that an established reputation for good character, if it is relevant to the issue, would alone create a reasonable doubt, although without it the other evidence would be convincing.[6]

A witness called to impeach the veracity of another witness may be asked: "Is the character of the witness for truth on a par with that of mankind in general?" In English courts the inquiries are: "Are you acquainted with the character of the witness? What is his general character? Would you believe him under oath?"[7]

Courts differ as to whether the general reputation of a witness for truth and veracity is the true and sole criterion of his credit, or whether the inquiry may not properly be extended to his entire moral character and estimation in society. They also differ as to the right to inquire of the impeaching witness whether he would believe the other on his oath. All agree, however, that the first inquiry must be restricted either to his general reputation for truth and veracity, or to his general character; and that it cannot be extended to particular facts or transactions, for the reason that while every man is supposed to be fully prepared to meet those general inquiries, it is not likely he would be prepared, without notice, to answer as to particular acts.[1]

Unwillingness to believe a man under oath must be based upon two facts: that the witness knows the reputation for veracity among the man's neighbors, and that such reputation is bad.[2]

Proof of a general disposition to do a thing is not proof of that thing. Thus, proof of a habit of gambling when drunk is not proof that the person gambled when drunk on a particular day; nor will proof of a habit of loaning money at a usurious interest prove that a loan was made in a particular instance.[3]

See further BAD, 1; CHASTE; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; REPUTATION; SUSPICION, 3.

CHARGE. 1, v. To lay on, to place under or upon, as, a burden, a duty, a trust. Opposed, discharge, q. v.

(1) To place under a duty or obligation with respect to knowing or doing: as, to charge one with notice of such facts or information as inquiry (q. v.) would disclose, or with notice of what the law requires; to charge an acceptor or indorser by presentment.[4]

(2) To impose, upon a person or thing, the duty or obligation of paying money: as, to charge the estate of a decedent with a debt; to charge a legacy upon land devised; to charge a purpart in partition with owelty. See LEGACY; OWELTY.

(3) To enter, in an account, an item of money due. See ACCOUNT, 1.

(4) To place upon one the burden of crime or guilt; to accuse of a wrong or offense; to indict.

The implication is, usually, that the offense has been alleged according to the forms of law — that legal process has issued.[5] See Charge, n. (2, b).

(5) For a jury to be charged with the fate of a prisoner,[6] see JEOPARDY.

(6) To instruct in the nature of a duty imposed: as, for a judge or a coroner to charge a jury.

Chargeable. Subject to charge; capable of being or of becoming charged:[7] as, to be

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 54–55, cases; 4 Wall. 471; 26 Alb. L. J. 364. As to evidence of, in civil cases, see particularly Simpson v. Westenberger, 28 Kan. 757–62 (1882), cases.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 47–56, cases.

[3] Kilpatrick v. Commonwealth, 81 Pa. 216 (1858).

[4] United States v. Freeman, 4 Mas. 510 (1827).

[5] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 325 (1850); 59 Cal. 601; 62 id. 29; 50 Md. 233.

[6] Commonwealth v. Leonard, 140 Mass. 470, 479 (1886), cases, Field, J.; 26 Cent. L. J. 515–19 (1888), cases.

[7] State v. Randolph, 24 Conn. 367 (1856); Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 108 (1882); State v. Rush, 77 Mo. 519 (1883).

[1] Teese v. Huntingdon, 23 How. 11–13 (1859), cases, Clifford, J. See, generally, as to evidence, 25 Cent. Law J. 146 (1887), cases.

[2] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 208 (1887).

[3] Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 471 (1866), cases.

[4] 94 U. S. 432; 101 id. 697.

[5] Day v. Inhabitants of Otis, 8 Allen, 478 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[6] State v. Connor, 5 Coldw. 313 (1868).

[7] 46 Vt. 625; 107 Mass. 426.

chargeable with a loss;[1] a tax chargeable on land; a pauper chargeable upon a district.

"Chargeable," in its ordinary acceptation as applicable to the imposition of a duty or burden, signifies capable of being charged; subject, liable, proper to be charged.[2]

2, n. A burden, duty, obligation, responsibility, or disability — imposed upon a person or attached to a thing. Opposed, discharge (which see).

(1) Charge upon a Thing. Whatever is in the nature of a lien or incumbrance (qq. v.) resting upon an object of property and to be satisfied out of it or out of the proceeds of it: as, a legacy to be paid out of land. Of this nature also are assessments and taxes upon realty,[3] qq. v.

Charges. (a) Pecuniary impositions upon property — real estate.

(b) Book-entries of moneys due.

(c) Expenses incurred in settling an estate.[4] See ACCOUNT, 1.

(d) Referring to litigation, something more than costs, q. v.

(e) In equity pleading, allegations in denial or avoidance of a defense.

Charge and discharge. Describes the mode formerly pursued in accounting before a master: the complainant exhibited the items of his claim in a form called a charge, while the respondent exhibited contrary items or claims by way of discharge — as, a release.[5]

Charging order. An order of court that stock shall stand pledged to the payment of a judgment. See further ORDER, 2.

Charging part. Allegations, in a bill in equity, intended to anticipate and controvert the answer.[6]

Collateral charge. An obligation in a bond binding the heir, executor, and administrator,— descends upon the heirs and holds assets by descent.[7]

Overcharge. In a statute providing for recovery from a railroad company "for any overcharge," signifies, as ordinarily, a charge of more than is permitted by law.[1]

See also RENT-CHARGE; SURCHARGE.

(2) Charge upon a Person. Anything in the nature of a burden, or of a duty or obligation, resting upon one or more individuals.

While in this substantive sense the word "charge" may have a meaning corresponding to any one of the foregoing verbal senses, it distinctly signifies:

(a) The duty of paying money.

(b) Responsibility for a wrong or an offense, as for negligence or crime, particularly the latter — formal accusation of criminal conduct.

An accusation, made in a legal manner, of illegal conduct.[2]

May imply an original complaint made in the first instance preliminary to a formal trial.[3] See INDICTMENT.

(c) Instruction judicially given by the judge of a court to a jury in regard to their duty as jurors, in particular to a traverse jury as to their duty in finding a verdict.

An authoritative exposition of the law which it is incumbent upon the jury to obey.[4]

Delivered to grand jurors before they proceed to consider indictments and presentments; and to petit or common jurors before they retire to deliberate over the evidence in a particular case.

General charge. Instruction upon a case in its entirety. Special charge. Made, at the request of counsel for a party, upon one or more points in the case.

It is clearly error to charge upon a conjectural state of facts, of which no evidence has been offered. The instruction presupposes that there is some evidence before the jury which they may think sufficient to establish the facts hypothetically assumed in the opinion of the court; and if there is no evidence which they have a right to consider, then the charge does not aid them in coming to a correct conclusion, but the tendency is to mislead and embarrass them. It may induce them to indulge in conjectures, instead of weighing the testimony.[5]

Where there is an entire absence of testimony, or it is all one way, and its conclusiveness is free from doubt, it is competent for the court to direct the jury to find accordingly.[6]

---

[1] 101 U. S. 19.

[2] Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 636 (1874).

[3] See Harris v. Miller, 71 Ala. 34 (1881); 59 id. 317; 69 id. 127; 25 id. 398.

[4] [Goodwin v. Chaffee, 4 Conn. 166 (1822).

[5] See Daniel, Chanc. Pract. 1173.

[6] See Story, Eq. Pl. § 31.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 340.

[1] Woodhouse v. Rio Grande R. Co., 67 Tex. 418 (1887), Stayton, A. J.

[2] Tompert v. Lithgow, 1 Bush, 180 (1866).

[3] Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 598 (1880); 16 Nev. 91.

[4] See Commonwealth v. Porter, 10 Metc. 265-66 (1845).

[5] United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 254 (1857), Taney, C. J.; Goodman v. Simonds, ib. 359 (1857); Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. 553 (1869).

[6] Meguire v. Corwine, 101 U. S. 111 (1879); ib. 697.

When, after giving a party the benefit of every inference that can fairly be drawn from all the evidence, it is insufficient to authorize a verdict in his favor, it is proper for the court to give the jury a peremptory instruction for the other party.[1]

The court may sum up the facts, and submit them, with the inferences of law, to the judgment of the jury. But care is to be taken to separate the law from the facts, and to leave the latter, in unequivocal terms, to the jury, as their true and peculiar province.[2]

With the charge of the court upon matters of fact, and with its commentaries upon the weight of evidence, the Supreme Court has nothing to do; such observations are understood to be addressed to the jury merely for their consideration as the ultimate judges of matters of fact, and entitled to no more importance than the jury choose to give them.[3]

But, as the jurors are the triors of the facts, an expression of opinion by the court should be so guarded as to leave the jury free in the exercise of their own judgments.[4]

A general statement will be taken in connection with the facts in the particular case.[5]

In some States the court neither sums up the evidence, nor expresses an opinion upon a question of fact, the charge being strictly confined to questions of law, leaving the evidence to be discussed by counsel, and the facts to be decided by the jury without comment or opinion by the court. But most of the States have adopted the English practice, where the judge always sums up the evidence, and points out the conclusions which in his opinion ought to be drawn from it; submitting them, however, to the judgment of the jury. The judge of a Federal court may express his opinion on the facts.[6]

At a trial by jury in a Federal court the judge may express his opinion upon the facts; the expression, when no rule of law is incorrectly stated and all facts are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury, cannot be reviewed by writ of error; and the power of the court in this respect is not controlled by a State statute forbidding judges to express an opinion upon the facts.[7] Nor can a State constitution prohibit the judges of the Federal courts from charging juries with regard to matters of fact.[8]

No error is committed in refusing a prayer for instructions consisting of a series of propositions, presented as an entirety, if some of them should not be given to the jury.[9]

It is not error to refuse to give an instruction asked for, even if correct in point of law, provided those given cover the entire case and submit it properly to the jury.[1]

Failure to embrace all the issues in one instruction is not error, if they are included in those given, which, on the whole, are correct, not contradictory, nor calculated to mislead.[2]

Although an instruction, considered by itself, is too general, yet if it is properly limited by others, so that it is not probable that it could have misled the jury, the judgment will not be reversed.[3]

If the court has laid down the law fully and correctly, it is not bound to repeat an instruction in terms varied to suit the wishes of a party.[4]

Where a charge embraces several distinct propositions, a general exception to it will not avail the party if any one of the propositions is correct.[5]

Where any portion of the charge is correct, an exception to the entire charge will not be sustained.[6]

A nice criticism of words will not be indulged when the meaning of the instruction is plain and obvious, and cannot mislead the jury.[7]

Exceptions to a charge are made after the jury retire; and each must cover a distinct point or part only. See further DIRECT, 2; INSTRUCT, 2; JURY, Trial by; NONSUIT; POINT.

CHARGE D'AFFAIRES. See MINISTER, 3.

CHARITY. 1. In its widest sense, all the good affections men ought to bear toward each other; in a restricted and common sense, relief of the poor.[8]

The benevolence which limits itself to giving alms to the poor comes within the restricted definition but falls far short of that true charity which has its origin in the two great sources of all good deeds — the love of God and the love of man.[9]

In considering what is lawful to be done on the Lord's day, "charity" includes everything which proceeds from a sense of moral

[1] Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 419 (1886), cases.

[2] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 183 (1828), Story, J.

[3] Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 80 (1830); Story, J.; Hayes v. United States, 32 F. R. 663 (1887), cases.

[4] Tracy v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. 96 (1836), McLean, J.; Games v. Stiles, 14 id. 327 (1840).

[5] Northern Bank v. Porter Township, 110 U. S. 615 (1884), cases; 6 Wheat. 264.

[6] Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 130 (1851), Taney, C. J.

[7] Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 558 (1886), cases, Gray, J.

[8] St. Louis, &c. R. Co. v. Vickers, 122 U. S. 360 (1887).

[9] Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149 (1879); Beaver v. Taylor, 93 id. 54 (1876), cases.

[1] Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall. 566 (1868); Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 295 (1876); The Schools v Risley, 10 Wall. 115 (1869); Wheeler v. Winn, 53 Pa 127-29 (1866).

[2] Muehlhausen v. St. Louis R. Co., 91 Mo. 346 (1886), Norton, C. J.

[3] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 245-46 (1887), cases.

[4] Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon Bank, 122 U. S. 510 (1887), cases.

[5] Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 139 (1868); Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black, 221 (1861).

[6] Boogher v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 103 U. S. 93 (1880), cases.

[7] Rogers v. The Marshal, 1 Wall. 654 (1863).

[8] Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. *405 (1804), Sir William Grant. Approved, Same v. Same, 10 id. *540 (1805), Lord Eldon.

[9] Price v. Maxwell, 28 Pa. 36, 35 (1857), Lewis, C. J duty, or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the relief or comfort of another, and not for one's own benefit or pleasure.[1]

Charity is active goodness. It is doing good to our fellow-men. It is fostering those institutions that are established to relieve pain, to prevent suffering, and to do good to mankind in general or to any class or portion of mankind. The term no doubt takes on shades of meaning from the Christian religion.[2] See further SUNDAY.

2. A gift, devise, or trust, intended to promote a charitable use.

In law, charity and charitable use are convertible terms. The latter was originally employed in contradistinction to "superstitious use," and designated such "good and worthy use" as was deemed not within the purview of statute 23 Hen. VIII (1532), c. 10, which abolished certain uses invented by the clergy. But, inasmuch as that statute swept away many meritorious uses, statute 1 Edw. VI (1547), c. 14, was passed to legalize, as recited in the preamble, several "good and godly uses" — such as schools for educating the youth, provision for the poor, etc. This preamble became the germ of the law of "charitable uses." Before 1547, such uses had never been grouped together as a distinct class, and peculiar principles applied to them. . . Since the enactment of statute 43 Eliz. (1601), c. 4, no uses have been regarded as "charitable" except uses within the letter or spirit of that statute, and these are wholly "public" in nature.[3]

What is a charity is rather a matter of description than of definition.[4]

A charity is a gift for a public use; as, a gift in aid of the poor, to learning, to religion, to a humane object.[5]

A precise definition of a legal charity is hardly to be found in the books. The one most commonly used in modern cases, originating in the judgment of Sir William Grant, confirmed by that of Lord Eldon, in Morice's Case, 9th and 10th Vesey, ante — that those purposes are considered charitable which are enumerated in the statute of 43 Elizabeth, or which by analogy are deemed within its spirit and intendment — leaves something to be desired in point of certainty, and suggests no principle. Mr. Binney, in his argument in the Girard Will Case, p. 41 (1844), defined a charitable or pious gift to be "whatever is given for the love of God, or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense — given for these motives, and to these ends — free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private and selfish;" and this definition was approved in Price's Case, 28th Pa. ante. A more concise and practical rule is that of Lord Camden, adopted by Chancellor Kent, by Lord Lyndhurst, and by the Supreme Court of the United States — "A gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as the rich." Jones v. Williams, Ambl. 652 (1767); Coggeshall v. Pelton, 7 Johns. Ch. 294 (1823); Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Phil. Ch. 191 (1842); Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 506 (1860).[1]

A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift, to be applied consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by creating or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government.[1]

It is immaterial whether the purpose is called "charitable" in the gift itself, if it is so described as to show that it is charitable in its nature.[1]

A testator must be taken to have used the word "charitable" in its legal sense.[2]

The statute of Elizabeth is the principal source of legal charities, — has become the general rule of charities. The signification of the word is chiefly derived from it, and not from the popular understanding of "good affection" between men, nor of relief of the poor.[3]

That statute names as distinct charities: 1, relief of the aged, impotent, and poor; 2, maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners; 3, schools of learning; 4, free schools; 5, scholars in the universities; 6, houses of correction; 7, repair of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea-banks, highways; 8, the education and preferment of orphans; 9, marriage of poor maids; 10, support and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; 11, relief and redemption of prisoners or captives; 12, aid of the poor in paying taxes; 13, setting out of soldiers.[4]

These charities are but instances under three general classes: 1, relief and assistance of the poor and needy; 2, promotion of education; 3, maintenance of public buildings and works. The inquiry in each case

[1] Doyle v. Lynn & Boston R. Co., 118 Mass. 197 (1875), cases, Gray, C. J.

[2] Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich. 7 (1880), Cooley, J.

[3] Owens v. Missionary Society, 14 N. Y. 385, 389, 397, 408 (1856), Selden, J. See also Baptist Association v. Hart, 4 Wheat. 2, 27 (1819); ib., App. 1; 17 How. 151–52, 155; 9 Ves. *405; 30 Kan. 628; 2 Bl. Com. 273; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1135–49.

[4] Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 494 (1860), Wayne, J.

[5] Kain v. Gibboney, 101 U. S. 365 (1879), Strong, J.

[1] Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 555–56 (1867), Gray, J. See also Detwiller v. Hartman, 37 N. J. E. 353 (1883); White v. Ditson, 140 Mass. 352 (1885); Humane Society v. Boston, 142 id. 27 (1886). Definitions collected, Protestant Episcopal Education Society v. Churchman, 80 Va. 762–63 (1885).

[2] Howe v. Wilson, 91 Mo. 49 (1886).

[3] Town of Hamden v. Rice, 24 Conn. *355 (1856), Ellsworth, J.

[4] Ould v. Washington Hospital, 93 U. S. 309–11 (1877), Swayne, J.

is: Is the purpose of the gift within the principle and reason of the statute, although not expressly named in it.[1]

Gifts for repairing a church, for building an organ gallery, for erecting and maintaining a parsonage, for the worship of God, for the advancement of Christianity, for the benefit of ministers of the gospel, have been held to be valid charities.[2]

The statute of Elizabeth was simply remedial and ancillary to the common law.[3] Courts of equity had, and still have, an original and inherent common-law jurisdiction over charities, except in a few States, as in Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia.[4]

While the provisions of the statute of Elizabeth have been re-enacted in some States, in others new purposes have been enumerated. In Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, and Virginia, the statute seems to have been repudiated; in Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, and in some other States, it is still in force.[5]

A good charitable use is "public," not in the sense that it must be executed openly and in public, but in the sense of being so general and indefinite in its objects as to be deemed of common and public benefit. Each individual benefited may be private, and the charity may be distributed in private and by a private hand. Opposed is a "private charity:" not a public or general charity, in view of the statute of Elizabeth or of a court of chancery, but an association for the mutual benefit of the contributors and of no others. Such a case wants the essential element of indefiniteness in the immediate objects, if not that of gratuity in the contribution.[6]

A charitable use is essentially shifting. When a trust defines the beneficiaries with certainty, it is rather private than public. "Charity begins where uncertainty of the beneficiaries begins."[7]

When private property is appropriated to the support of education for the benefit of the public without any view to profit, it constitutes a charity which is purely public.[1]

Trusts for public charitable purposes must be for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons; for, if all the beneficiaries are personally designated, the trust lacks the element of indefiniteness, which is one characteristic of a legal charity. If the founder describes the general nature of the trust, he may leave the details of its administration to be settled by trustees under the superintendence of a court of chancery.[2]

If the general object of a bequest is pointed out, or if the testator has provided a means of doing so by the appointment of trustees with that power, the gift will be treated as sufficiently definite for judicial cognizance.[3]

When a charitable trust has been fully constituted, and the funds have passed into the hands of the institution or organization intended for its administration, the court of chancery becomes its legal guardian and protector, and will take care that the objects of the trust are duly pursued, and the funds rightfully appropriated. But where contributions to a charity are proposed to be made upon certain express conditions, the rights of the donors stand upon contract; and if the conditions are not performed, their obligation to contribute is discharged.[4]

A devise to a corporation in favor of a charity is valid.[5]

There is no implication, in such case, that the corporation is of a "religious" nature.[6]

Where there is a valid devise to a corporation in trust for charitable purposes, the sovereign may enforce the execution of the trust, by changing the administrator, if the corporation be dissolved, or, if not, by modifying and enlarging its franchises, provided the trust be not perverted, and no wrong be done to the beneficiaries.[7]

Equity will not enforce a trust whose object is the propagation of atheism, infidelity, immorality, or hostility to the existing forms of government.[8]

The essentials to a valid charity are: ability in the donor; capacity in the donee; an instrument or means whereby it is given; a thing to be given;[9] a legal purpose; a gift not absolute, but available through the medium of a trust.[9]

Equity will not administer a foreign charity, unless it be valid under the laws of both States, and the [1] Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 551 (1867), cases, Gray, J.

[2] Bishop's Residence Co. v. Hudson, 91 Mo. 676 (1887), cases.

[3] Ould v. Washington Hospital, ante.

[4] Kain v. Gibboney, Ould v. Hospital, ante; Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 2 How. 155 (1844); Howe v. Wilson, 91 Mo. 49 (1886), cases; 80 Va. 773; 107 U. S. 167.

[5] See 1 Bouvier, 304, cases.

[6] Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen, 456, 464 (1865), cases, Gray, J. See also Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174 (1882), cases; s. c. 3 Woods, 443; Beckwith v. The Rector, 69 Ga. 569 (1882); De Wolf v. Lawson, 61 Wis. 480 (1884); Protestant Epis. Education Society v. Churchman, 80 Va. 718 (1885); Kent v. Dunham, 142 Mass. 216, 218 (1886).

[7] Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 98, 91-103 (1882), cases, Ryan, C. J.; Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 384 (1854).

[1] Gerke v. Archbishop Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 247, 243 (1874), White, J.

[2] Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 167 (1883), cases, Gray, J.; American Academy of Arts v. Harvard College, 12 Gray, 596 (1882), Shaw, C. J.

[3] Howe v. Wilson, 91 Mo. 52 (1886), Black, J. See also Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366 (1886).

[4] Printing House v. Trustees, 104 U. S. 727 (1881), Bradley, J.

[5] Perin v. Carey, Vidal v. Girard's Executors, ante.

[6] De Wolf v. Lawson, 61 Wis. 480 (1884).

[7] Girard's Executors v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. 14-18 (1868); Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 182 (1870).

[8] Manners v. Library Company, 98 Pa. 173 (1880), cases; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 189 (1882), cases

[9] Owens v. Missionary Society, 14 N. Y. 385 (1856).

trustee has capacity to receive and carry out the trust.[1]

By the law of England, before the statute of Elizabeth, and by the law of this country at the present day (except where restricted by statute or decision, as in Virginia, Maryland, and New York), trusts for public charitable purposes are upheld under circumstances as to which private trusts would fail. Being for objects of permanent interest and benefit to the public, they may be perpetual in their duration; and the instruments creating them should be so construed as to give them effect if possible, and to carry out the general intention of the donor, when clearly manifested, even if the particular form and manner pointed out by him cannot be followed.[2]

Board of charities. A board of public charities, in several of the States, is a body of commissioners, appointed by the governor of each State (possibly by and with the consent of one of the houses of the legislature), and charged with the duty of examining into the condition of all charitable, reformatory or correctional institutions in the State; having regard, in particular, to the methods of government and instruction, the official conduct of trustees or officers, the finances, buildings, etc.

See AMERICAN; ASSOCIATION, 3; BENEVOLENCE; CY PRES; INDIGENT; LEGACY; MARSHAL, 2; MASSES; MORTMAIN; PROTESTANT; SUBSCRIBE, 2; VISIT, 2.

CHART. As used in the copyright law, does not include sheets of paper exhibiting tabulated or methodically arranged information.

In the Copyright Act of 1790, where the word was first used, a chart was a marine map, as is shown by all the dictionaries of the time. A definition covering such a sheet of paper was introduced into Worcester's dictionary in 1864, and into Webster's in 1865. The word, in the present act, is separated from the word "book," and kept with the word "map" and other words of artistic import, thus showing an intention to continue its use in the sense of a chart of the class of maps, and other works of art.[3] See COPYRIGHT. Compare MAP.

CHARTA. L. Paper; a writing; a charter. See MAGNA CHARTA; OFFICINA: CHARTARUM.

CHARTER. 1. A deed is sometimes called a charter from its materials.[4] See CHARTA.

Charter-land. Land held by deed under certain rents and free services; book-land. Opposed, folk-land; which was held by an assurance in writing.[5] See MANOR.

Charter-party. A contract by which the owner lets his vessel to another for freight.[1]

A contract by which an entire ship, or some principal part thereof, is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determined voyage to one or more places.[2]

All contracts under seal were anciently called "charters," and divided into two parts, one for each party. Whence charta-partita: a writing divided; like an indenture (q. v.) at common law.[3]

Charterer. He who hires a vessel under a "charter-party." Charter-money. The sum agreed to be paid for the use of the vessel.

Charge of navigating the vessel may be retained by the owner or assumed by the hirer.

The contract is generally effected through a broker acting for the ship-owner.

A ship thus chartered is opposed to a "general ship."

The instrument is not usually under seal. It names the vessel, master, and contract parties; and specifies the tonnage, the times and places for loading and discharge, the charter-money, and the allowance for delay. It is a commercial instrument, subject to the rules applicable to other commercial contracts. It is to be construed liberally, in agreement with the intention of the parties, the usages of trade in general and of the particular trade.[4]

An action in rem cannot be maintained for the breach of a charter-party when the voyage was not undertaken, and no part of the cargo delivered on board.[5]

See DEFECT; DISPATCH; FREIGHT; LADING, Bill of; SAIL.

2. The primary meaning — a deed or sealed instrument — is obsolete. Used alone, the word now refers to certain instruments which emanate from government, in the nature of letters-patent.[6]

The king's grants, whether of lands, honors, liberties, franchises, or aught besides, are contained in charters or letters-patent,[7] q. v.

Charter of incorporation. The instrument evidencing the act of a legislature, governor, court, or other authorized department or person, by which a corporation is or was created.

The charter of a private corporation, duly accepted, is an executed contract. It is construed

[1] Taylor v. Trustees of Bryn Mawr College, 34 N. J. E. 101 (1881), cases: 13 Rep. 20.

[2] Russell v. Allen, ante; 13 Wall. 733. See generally 23 Cent. Law J. 364–68 (1886), cases.

[3] Taylor v. Gilman, 24 F. R. 633-34 (1885), cases, Wheeler, J.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 295.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 90.

[1] Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. 164 (1832), Marshall, C. J.

[2] Vandewater v. Mills, 19 How. 91 (1856), Grier, J.; Ward v. Thompson, 22 id. 333 (1859).

[3] 2 Kent, 201.

[4] Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 744 (1864); 113 U. S. 40; 115 id. 353.

[5] The Missouri, 30 F. R. 884 (1887), cases.

[6] See 1 Story, Const. § 161.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 346; 1 id. 108, 473.

strictly, against the corporation, and in favor of the public. Nothing passes but what is granted in explicit terms. The charter of a municipal corporation is not a contract.[1]

The charter of a bank is a franchise, and not taxable if a fair price has been paid for it and accepted in lieu of taxation. No power of sovereignty will be held to be surrendered, unless expressed in terms too plain to be mistaken.[2]

A power reserved by the legislature to alter, amend, or repeal a charter authorizes it to make any alteration or amendment of a charter, granted subject to such power, which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or of any right vested under it, and which the legislature may deem necessary for securing either that object or a public right.[3]

To "create" a charter is to make one which never existed before. To "renew" a charter is to give a new existence to one which has been forfeited, or which has lost its vitality by lapse of time. To "extend" a charter is to give one which now exists greater or longer time in which to operate than that to which it was originally limited.[4]

It is a well settled rule of construction of grants to corporations, whether public or private, that only such powers and rights can be exercised under them as are clearly comprehended within the words of the act or derived therefrom by necessary implication, regard being had to the objects of the grant. Any ambiguity or doubt arising out of the terms used by the legislature must be resolved in favor of the public.[1]

See CORPORATION; FUNDAMENTAL; IMPAIR; RAILROAD; ULTRA VIRES.

CHASE. See GAME, 1.

CHASTE. Actually pure as to conduct and principle; virtuous.

Chaste character. Personal virtue; moral purity.

Refers not to reputation but to moral qualities — to what a person really is.[2]

Actual personal virtue — actually chaste and pure in conduct and principle.

Applies to one who, having fallen, has subsequently reformed and become chaste.[3]

Although a female, from ignorance or other cause, may have so low a standard of propriety as to commit or permit indelicate acts or familiarities, yet, if she have enough of the sense of virtue that she would not surrender her person, unless seduced to do so under a promise of marriage, she cannot be said to be a woman of "unchaste character" within the meaning of a statute punishing seduction under a promise of marriage.[4]

Chastity. The virtue which prevents unlawful sexual commerce.

Offenses against chastity are: fornication, adultery, incest, seduction, lascivious carriage, keeping or frequenting houses of prostitution, bigamy, marrying the husband or wife of another, obscene libels, sodomy, bestiality.

Solicitation of chastity. Inviting another to commit adultery or fornication.

A solicitation is not an attempt. Until some forbidden overt act is committed, the law will not detect and punish the intent. The contrary rule would be impracticable.[5]

Charges of unchaste conduct are seldom made in direct words; usually by insinuation. However made, they are slanderous when they convey to the mind of the hearers the meaning that the person in question is unchaste.[6]

See ATTEMPT; BAD, 1; PRETIUM, Pudicitiæ.

CHATTEL. Things personal include not only things movable, but something more: the whole of which is comprehended under the general name of "chattels," which Coke says is a French word signifying goods — from the technical Latin catalla, which meant, primarily, beasts of husbandry, and,

---

[1] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 634 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; ib. 708, 712, Story, J.

[2] Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 446 (1861); Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 82 (1879).

[3] Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 476 (1883), cases, Gray, J. See also Union Passenger Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia, 101 id. 539-40 (1879); Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 110 id. 352-53 (1884); County of Santa Clara v. South. Pacific R. Co., 18 F. R. 406-8 (1883). Although an attempt to shake or limit the conclusion reached in the Dartmouth College Case was made in Bank of Toledo v. Toledo, 1 Ohio St. 622 (1853), and in other cases at about the same time, the doctrine was re-asserted and even generalized and extended by the Supreme Court in Piqua Branch v. Knoop, 16 How. 369 (1853); Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331 (1855), and cases, ib. 380, 384. Much space would be needed for expounding the decisions which have applied the doctrine, and for tracing its application to different kinds of charters. To do so is the less necessary because the legislatures have become accustomed to grant charters subject to a general reserved power to alter or repeal them. There are, no doubt, a few corporations chartered before 1819, and some created since, without reservation of such power, which are independent of legislative changes made without their assent; but the great mass of private corporations now active are subject to a right reserved to the legislature to make changes. Addison, Contr. *2, Am. ed., A. & W. (1888), note. See also New Orleans v. Great Southern Tel., &c. Co., Sup. Ct. La. (Feb. 23, 1888): 26 Cent. Law J. 223; ib. 234-36 (1888), cases.

[4] Moers v. Mayor, &c. of Reading, 21 Pa. 201 (1853), Black, C. J.

[1] Minturn v. Larue, 23 How. 436 (1859), Nelson, J.; 76 Va. 961; 77 id. 219.

[2] [State v. Carron, 18 Iowa, 375-76 (1865), cases; State v. Prizer, 49 id. 532 (1878); 5 id. 391; 59 id. 636; 70 id. 454; 28 Minn. 52.

[3] Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 608-9 (1850).

[4] State v. Brinkhaus, 34 Minn. 285 (1885), Mitchell, J.

[5] Smith v. Commonwealth, 54 Pa. 211-14 (1867), cases; 14 id. 226; 7 Conn. 270; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 767.

[6] Kedrolivansky v. Niebaum, 70 Cal. 218 (1886).

secondarily, all movables in general. In Normandy, a chattel stood opposed to a fief or feud.[1] See further CATTLE.

Any species of property not real estate or freehold.[2]

Chattel personal. Chattels personal are, strictly, things movable: which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another.[3]

Such are animals, household stuff, money, jewels, grain, garments, and everything else that can be put in motion and transferred from place to place;[3] also, choses in action; and slaves were.

Chattel real. Chattels real, says Coke, are such as concern, or savor of, the realty; as, terms for years of land, estates by a statute-merchant, statute-staple, or the like.

These are called real chattels, as being interests issuing out of, or annexed to, real estate: of which they have one quality, viz., immobility, which denominates them "real;" but want the other, viz., a sufficient, legal, indeterminate duration; and this want it is that constitutes them "chattels." The utmost period for which they can last is fixed and determinate, either for a space of time certain, or till a particular sum of money be raised out of a particular income; so that they are not equal, in law, to the lowest estate of freehold,— a lease for another's life.[4]

See FIXTURE; GOODS; MORTGAGE; PROPERTY; SALE.

CHAUD-MEDLEY. See MEDLEY.

CHEAT.[5] Cheats which are punishable at common law may be described to be deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known rights by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty.[6]

Many acts which would be denounced as cheats by the principles of morality are not legally cheats.[7]

To "cheat and defraud" does not necessarily import the commission of an indictable offense. Therefore, in charging a conspiracy to cheat and defraud, the means proposed must be set out, for the information of the court and of the defendant.[8]

A cheat or fraud, indictable at common law, must be such as would affect the public, such as common prudence cannot guard against: as, using false weights and measures (q. v.), or false tokens (q. v.), or where there is a conspiracy to cheat.[1]

Technically, the offense is "false pretenses." Spoken of one in relation to his vocation, the word is defamatory and actionable.[2]

See COVIN; DECEIT; PRETENSES; SWINDLE.

CHECK.[3] An order on a bank to pay the holder a sum of money at the bank, on presentment of the order and demand of the money.[4]

A draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to the bearer, and payable instantly on demand.[5]

When accepted, it is an appropriation of so much money of the drawer in the hands of the drawee to the payment of an admitted liability on the part of the drawer. The drawer must have an account with the bank, and, perhaps, money on deposit.[6]

The payee of a check, before it is accepted by the drawee, cannot maintain an action upon it against the latter, as there is no privity of contract between them.[7]

A check is not an inland bill of exchange, though like it. Unlike a bill, it is drawn upon a bank or banker and against funds on deposit; acceptance of it stops denial of funds; no grace is allowed on it; it is not due until payment is demanded; the drawer is not discharged by laches in the holder in presenting it for payment, except to the extent of injury done him; and the death of the drawer rescinds authority in the bank to pay the check. In other respects checks are governed by the rules applicable to inland bills of exchange and promissory notes. When drawn outside of the State in which the bank is located, they are like foreign bills of exchange.[8]

A check is to be presented or indorsed over to another holder within such time as is reasonable, taking into view all the circumstances of the case. The holder

---

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 385-86; 19 Ill. 584; 18 Johns. *94.

[2] 2 Kent, 342.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 387.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 386. See Insurance Co. v. Haven, 95 U. S. 251 (1877); Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 113 id. 415 (1885); Putnam v. Westcott, 19 Johns. *76 (1821); 2 Kent, 342.

[5] F. escheat: from fraud used by lords of manors to procure escheats.

[6] Hawkins, Pl. Cr., b. 1, c. 23, § 1.

[7] See People v. Miller, 14 Johns. *372 (1817).

[8] Commonwealth v. Wallace, 16 Gray, 228 (1860), Dewey, J

[1] Rex v. Wheatly, 2 Burr. 1127 (1760), Mansfield, C. J.; 3 Bl. Com. 165. See 7 Johns. *204; 12 id. *372.

[2] Heard, Lib. & Sl. §§ 16, 28, 46; 6 Cush. 185; 5 Wend. 263; 2 Pa. 187.

[3] Mid. E. chek, a stop: F. eschec, a "check at chess-play." Cheque is from exchequer, and erroneous,— Skeat; Webster.

[4] [Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 606 (1854), Shaw, C. J.; 10 Oreg. 35.

[5] 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1566 (1879): 28 Gratt. 170.

[6] See Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 647-48 (1870), cases; Espy v. Bank of Cincinnati, 18 id. 604, 619-20 (1873); Gordon v. Müchler, 34 La. An. 604 (1882); 12 Rep. 514.

[7] First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343-47 (1876), cases; 100 id. 689.

[8] Re Brown, 2 Story, 513 (1843); Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, Espy v. Bank, supra; Levy v. Laclede Bank, 18 F. R. 198 (1883).

can sue the drawer, if payment is refused; and the drawer, in such case, has assumpsit against the bank for breach of contract. The holder cannot sue the bank.[1]

Checks, regular upon their face, pass as money.[2]

A bank is not bound to take notice of memoranda and figures on the margin of a check, which a depositor places there merely for his own convenience, to preserve information for his own benefit; and in such case, the memoranda and figures are not a notice to the bank that the particular check is to be paid only from a particular fund. So, too, a mark on a deposit ticket, if intended to require a particular deposit to be kept separate from other deposits, must be in the shape of a plain direction, else such a duty will not be imposed on the bank.[3]

Certified check. A check marked "good" by the banker.

Implies that there are funds in the bank with which to pay it, that the same are set apart for its satisfaction, and that they will be so applied when the check is presented for payment.[4]

The act of certifying is equivalent to an acceptance of the check. The object is to enable the holder to use the check as money. The bank charges the check to the account of the drawer; credits it in a certified check account; and, when paid, debits that account with the amount. The bank thus becomes the debtor of the holder.[4]

Memorandum check. A check having "Memorandum" or "Mem." written across its face.

A memorandum of indebtedness given by a borrower. In the hands of a third person, for value, has the force of a check without restriction.[5]

The check takes the place of a note, as for a temporary loan. It is not designed to be presented at bank, but is for redemption at the time agreed upon.[6]

Raised check. A check increased in the amount for which it was drawn, by fraudulent alteration, q. v.

When money has been been paid upon a raised check by mistake, neither party being in fault, it may be recovered as paid without consideration. If neither party's negligence caused the injury the holder must bear the loss. When a person sends such paper to the bank upon which it is drawn, for information, the bank is presumed to know the drawer's signature and the state of his account. Unless the attention of the bank officer is directed beyond these two matters, his response that the check is good will be limited to them, and will not be extended to the genuineness of the filling-in or of the check as to the payee or the amount.[1]

See BANK, 2; CASHIER; DEPOSIT, 2; DONATIO, Mortis, etc.; NEGOTIABLE; ORDER, 1.

CHEESE. See OLEOMARGARINE; POLICE, 2.

CHEMISTRY. See CORONER; EXPERT; PROCESS, 2.

CHICKEN. See ANIMAL; DAMAGE-FEASANT; CRUELTY, 8; NUISANCE; TRESPASS; WORRY.

CHIEF.[2] The head: principal; leading; above, higher, or preceding another or others. Compare PRIMARY.

Chief Executive. The President of the United States. See PRESIDENT.

Chief justice. The presiding judge of a court of errors and appeals. See further JUDGE.

In chief. A shortened form of the phrase "examination in chief:" the first examination of a witness by the party who calls him; the direct examination of a witness.[3] See EXAMINATION, 9.

Tenant in chief. See FEUD.

CHILD. 1. An infant — in the popular senses. See ABANDON, 2 (2); ABORTION; CURTESY; VENTER.

2. One of tender years; a young person; a youth. See CRUELTY, 2; INFANT; SERVITUDE, 1, Involuntary.

3. A legitimate descendant in the first degree.

4. A legitimate descendant in any degree; but, in this case, "children" is the word used; offspring, issue or descendants generally.

In common parlance, "children" does not include any other than the immediate descendants in the first degree of the ancestor. But it may include others, as where it appears from a will that there are no other persons in existence who will answer the description of children except descendants of a degree remoter than the first; or, where there could not be any of the first degree at the time or in the event contemplated by the testator; or where he has shown by other words that he used the word "children" as synonymous with descendants, or issue, or to designate or

[1] Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 10 Wall. 156 (1869). See generally 20 Cent. Law J. 339-42 (1888), cases.

[2] Poorman v. Woodward, 21 How. 375 (1858); Downey v. Hicks, 14 id. 249 (1852).

[3] State Nat. Bank of Springfield v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 346 (1888), Blatchford, J.

[4] Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, Espy v. Bank, Bank v. Whitman, ante; Bank of British North America, 91 N. Y. 110 (1883).

[5] Story, Prom. Notes, § 499; 16 Pick. 535; 32 N. J. L. 96; 11 Paige, 612.

[6] See Turnbull v. Osborne, 12 Abb. Pr. 201-7 (1872).

[1] Espy v. Bank of Cincinnati, 18 Wall. 604, 619 (1873).

[2] F. chef, head, top.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 445.

include illegitimate offspring, grandchildren, or step-children. But, ordinarily, the reference is to descendants in the first degree only.[1]

The word is generally a word of purchase; but not so in the case of a grant in the present tense to a man and his children, he having no child, as in Wild's Case.[2]

While the word "children" will include a grandchild,[3] the presumption of law is against such construction.[4]

The word itself intends only legitimate children.[5]

Children become emancipated at twenty-one. Their duties to their parents arise out of natural justice, and compensation. At common law they are not bound to support an infirm or indigent parent; but otherwise, now, by statute. They may defend the parent's person, but may not commit crime at his command.[6]

In a contest for the possession of a child, the welfare of the child is the controlling consideration. The father will be given the custody of it, unless he is shown to be unfit or incompetent for that office, or unless the welfare of the child demands a different disposition.[7]

See further ADOPT, 3; AGE; AGENT; BASTARD; DESCENDANT; DIE, Without, etc.; FAMILY; HEIR; INFANT; ISSUE, 5; NAME, 1; NEGLIGENCE; ORPHAN; PARENT; PATER, Partus, etc.; PERPETUITY; RAISE; SHELLEY'S CASE; WITNESS.

CHINA, DECORATED. See PAINTING.

CHINESE. See BURIAL; CITIZEN; COMMERCE; LAUNDRIES; POLICY, 2; QUARANTINE, 2; RIGHT, Civil Rights Act; TREATY; WHITE.

The Burlingame treaty of July 28, 1868, declares, Art. 6, that "Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel and residence, as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation," and, reciprocally, as to citizens of the United States in China.

Appeals from the Pacific coast induced the Government to request a modification of the treaty. This resulted in the supplemental treaty of November 17, 1880, the first article of which provides that "whenever in the opinion of the government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the government of China agrees that the government of the United States may regulate, limit or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension may be reasonable and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers . . and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse;" and the second article of which provides that "Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation."[1]

The act of May 6, 1882, c. 126 (22 St. L. 58), entitled "An act to execute certain stipulations relating to Chinese," as amended by the act of July 5, 1884, c. 220 (23 St. L. 115) — the words in italics being introduced by the act of 1884, while those in brackets were in the act of 1882, but were stricken out by the amendatory act — provides as follows:

Whereas, in the opinion of the government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof, therefore be enacted,—

Section 1. That from and after the [expiration of ninety days next after the] passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come from any foreign port or place, or, having so come, [after the expiration of said ninety days,] to remain within the United States.

Sec. 2. The master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on such vessel and land, or attempt to land, or permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer, from any foreign place, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars for each and every laborer so brought, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

Sec. 3. The foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of the act to which this act is amendatory, nor shall said sections apply to laborers, [and] who shall produce to such master before going on board such vessel, and to the collector of the port at which such vessel shall arrive, the evidence hereinafter required of his being one of the laborers in this section mentioned; nor shall the foregoing sections

[1] See Treaty of 1868, 16 St. L. 739; Treaty of 1880, 22 St. L. 826; Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536, 542 (1884); Act 1884, ib. 543; 124 id. 627.

[1] See Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige, 339 (1838), Walworth, Ch.; Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 520-21 (1881); Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 42 (1855); Rogers v. Weller, 5 Biss. 168 (1870); Feit v. Vanatta, 21 N. J. E. 84 (1870); Winsor v. Odd Fellows' Association, 13 R. I. 150 (1880); Butler v. Ralston, 69 Ga. 489 (1882); Bates v. Dewson, 128 Mass. 334 (1880).

[2] 3 Coke, *17 (1599); Cannon v. Barry, 59 Miss. 289, 300 (1881), cases; Bannister v. Bull, 16 S. C. 227 (1881).

[3] Re Paton, 41 Hun, 500 (1886); Re Brown, 29 id. 417 (1883), cases.

[4] Pugh v. Pugh, 105 Ind. 555 (1885); 94 id. 407, cases; Smith v. Smith, 24 S. C. 214 (1885).

[5] Minot v. Harris, 132 Mass. 531 (1882).

[6] See 1 Bl. Com. 453; 4 id. 23; 4 Kent, 345; People v. Turner, 55 Ill. 282-86 (1870).

[7] Re Scarritt, 76 Mo. 565, 564 (1882), cases.

apply to the case of any master whose vessel, being bound to a port not within the United States, shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or in stress of weather, or touching at a port on its voyage to any foreign port or place: provided that all laborers brought on such vessel shall not be permitted to land except in case of absolute necessity, and must depart with the vessel on leaving port.

Sec. 4. For the purpose of properly identifying Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of the act to which this act is amendatory, and in order to furnish them with the proper evidence of their right to go from and come to the United States, [of their free will and accord,] as provided by the said act and the treaty between the United States and China dated November 17, 1880, the collector of customs of the district from which any such laborer shall depart from the United States shall, in person or by deputy, go on board each vessel having on board any such laborer, and cleared or about to sail from his district for a foreign port, and on such vessel make a list of all such laborers, which shall be entered in registry books kept for that purpose, in which shall be stated the individual, family, and tribal name in full, the age, occupation, when and where followed, last place of residence, physical marks or peculiarities, and all facts necessary for the identification of each of such laborers, which books shall be safely kept in the custom-house; and every such laborer so departing from the United States shall be entitled to, and shall receive, free of any charge or cost, upon application therefor, from the collector, or his deputy in the name of said collector, and attested by said collector's seal of office, at the time such list is taken, a certificate, signed by the collector or his deputy, and attested by his seal of office, in such form as the secretary of the treasury shall prescribe, which certificate shall contain a statement of the individual, family, and tribal name in full, age, occupation, when and where followed, [last place of residence, personal description, and facts of identification,] of the laborer to whom the certificate is issued, corresponding with the said list and registry in all particulars. In case any laborer, after having received such certificate, shall leave such vessel before her departure, he shall deliver his certificate to the master of the vessel, and, if such laborer shall fail to return to such vessel before her departure from port, the certificate shall be delivered by the master to the collector of customs for cancellation. The certificate herein provided for shall entitle the laborer to whom the same is issued to return to and re-enter the United States upon producing and delivering the same to the collector of customs of the district at which such laborer shall seek to re-enter; and said certificate shall be the only evidence permissible to establish his right of re-entry; and upon [delivery] delivering of such certificate by such laborer to the collector of customs at the time of re-entry, said collector shall cause the same to be filed in the custom-house and duly canceled.

Sec. 5. Any Chinese laborer mentioned in section four being in and desiring to depart from the United States by land, shall have the right to demand and receive, free of charge or cost, a certificate of identification similar to that provided for in section four to be issued to such laborers as may desire to leave the United States by water; and it is hereby made the duty of the collector of customs of the district next adjoining the foreign country to which said laborer desires to go to issue such certificate, free of charge or cost, upon application by such laborer, and to enter the same upon registry books kept as provided for in section four.

Sec. 6. In order to the faithful execution of [articles one and two of the treaty in] the provisions of this act, [before mentioned,] every Chinese person other than a laborer, who may be entitled by said treaty [and] or this act to come within the United States, and who shall be about to come to the United States, shall obtain the permission of and be identified as so entitled by the Chinese government, or of such other foreign government of which at the time such person shall be a subject, in each case, [such identity] to be evidenced by a certificate issued [under the authority of said] by such government, which certificate shall be in the English language, [or, if not, accompanied by a translation into English, stating such right to come,] and shall show such permission, with the name of the permitted person in his or her proper signature, and which certificate shall state the individual, family, and tribal name in full, title or official rank, if any, the age, height, and all physical peculiarities, former and present occupation or profession, when and where and how long pursued, and place of residence [in China] of the person to whom the certificate is issued, and that such person is entitled [conformably to the treaty in] by this act [mentioned] to come within the United States. If the person so applying for a certificate shall be a merchant, said certificate shall, in addition to above requirements, state the nature, character, and estimated value of the business carried on by him prior to and at the time of his application as aforesaid; Provided, That nothing in this act, nor in said treaty, shall be construed as embracing within the meaning of the word "merchant" hucksters, peddlers, or those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation. If the certificate be sought for the purpose of travel for curiosity, it shall also state whether the applicant intends to pass through or travel within the United States, together with his financial standing in the country from which such certificate is desired. The certificate provided for in this act, and the identity of the person named therein, shall, before such person goes on board any vessel to proceed to the United States, be visèd by the indorsement of the diplomatic representative of the United States in the foreign country from which said certificate issues, or of the consular representative of the United States at the place from which the person is about to depart; and such representative whose indorsement is so required is hereby empowered, and it shall be his duty, before indorsing such certificate, to examine into the truth of the statements set forth in said certificate, and, if he shall find that any of the statements therein contained are untrue, it shall be his duty to refuse to indorse the same. Such certificate, visèd as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence of the fact set forth therein, and shall be produced to the collector of customs [or his deputy] of the port at which the person shall arrive, and afterward produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded, and shall be the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person producing the same to establish a right of entry; but said certificate may be controverted, and the facts therein stated disproved by the United States authorities.

Sec. 7. Any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or knowingly utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term of not more than five years.

Sec. 8. The master of any vessel arriving from any foreign place shall, at the same time he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and, if there be no cargo, then at the time of making a report of the entry of the vessel pursuant to law, in addition to the other matter required to be reported, and before landing, or permitting to land, any Chinese passengers, deliver and report to the collector of customs of the district in which such vessels shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board his vessel at any foreign place, and all such passengers on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such passengers, (and if accredited officers of the Chinese or of any other foreign government traveling on the business of that government, or their servants, with a note of such facts,) and the names and other particulars, as shown by their respective certificates; and such list shall be sworn to by the master in the manner required by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo. Any [willful] refusal or willful neglect of any such master to comply with the provisions of this section shall incur the same penalties and forfeiture as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of cargo.

Sec. 9. Before any Chinese passengers are landed from any such vessel, the collector or his deputy shall proceed to examine such passengers, comparing the certificates with the list, and with the passengers; and no passengers shall be allowed to land from such vessel in violation of law.

Sec. 10. Every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any provision of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district into which such vessel may enter, or in which she may be found.

Sec. 11. Any person who shall knowingly bring into, or cause to be brought into, the United States by land, or who shall [knowingly] aid or abet the same, or aid or abet the landing from any vessel of any Chinese person not lawfully entitled to enter, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

Sec. 12. No Chinese person shall be permitted to enter by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate required of persons seeking to land from a vessel. And any person found unlawfully here shall be caused to be removed to the country whence he came, [by direction of the President,] and at the cost of the United States, after being brought before some justice, judge, or commissioner of a United States court, and found to be one not lawfully entitled to remain; and in all such cases the person who brought, or aided in bringing, such person to the United States, shall be liable to the United States for all necessary expenses incurred in such investigation and removal; and all peace officers of the several States and Territories are hereby invested with the same authority as a marshal or United States marshal in reference to carrying out the provisions of this act, or the act of which this is amendatory, as a marshal or deputy marshal of the United States, and shall be entitled to like compensation, to be paid by the same officers. And the United States shall pay all charges for the maintenance and return of any person having the certificate prescribed by law as entitling such person to come into the United States, who may not have been permitted to land by reason of any provision of this act.

Sec. 13. This act shall not apply to diplomatic and other officers of the Chinese or other governments traveling upon the business of that government, whose credentials shall be taken as equivalent to the certificate in this act mentioned, and shall exempt them and their body and household servants from the provisions of this act as to other Chinese persons.

Sec. 14. Hereafter no court shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 15. The provisions of this act shall apply to all subjects of China and Chinese, whether subjects of China or any other foreign power; and the words "Chinese laborers" shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

Sec. 16. Any violation of any provision of this act, or of the act of which this is amendatory, the punishment of which is not otherwise herein provided for, shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 17. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any proceeding, criminal or civil, begun under the act of which this is amendatory; but such proceeding shall proceed as if this act had not been passed.

The convention between the United States and China for excluding Chinese laborers from coming to the United States, signed at Washington March 12, 1888, was as follows: (See ADDENDA.)

"Whereas, on the 17th day of November, A. D. 1880, a treaty was concluded between the United States and China for the purpose of regulating, limiting, or suspending the coming of Chinese laborers to, and their residence in, the United States;

"And whereas the government of China, in view of the antagonism and much deprecated and serious disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States, desires to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States;

"And whereas the government of the United States and the government of China desire to coöperate in prohibiting such emigration, and to strengthen in other ways the bonds of friendship between the two countries;"

Now, therefore, the President of the United States has appointed Thomas F. Bayard, secretary of state, as his plenipotentiary; and the Emperor of China has appointed Chang Yen Hoon, minister of the third rank of the Imperial Court, etc., as his plenipotentiary; and the said plenipotentiaries have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

"The high contracting parties agree that for a period of twenty years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited; and this prohibition shall extend to the return of Chinese laborers who are not now in the United States, whether holding return certificates under existing laws or not.

ARTICLE II.

"The preceding article shall not apply to the return to the United States of any Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of one thousand dollars, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. Nevertheless, every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit, as a condition of his return, with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs, a full description in writing of his family, or property, or debts, as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty; and should the written description aforesaid be proved to be false, the right of return thereunder, or of continued residence after return, shall in each case be forfeited. And such right of return to the United States shall be exercised within one year from the date of leaving the United States; but such right of return to the United States may be extended for an additional period, not to exceed one year, in cases where by reason of sickness or other cause of disability beyond his control, such Chinese laborer shall be rendered unable sooner to return — which facts shall be fully reported to the Chinese consul at the port of departure, and by him certified, to the satisfaction of the collector of the port at which such Chinese subject shall land in the United States. And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required.

ARTICLE III.

"The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed by Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, coming to the United States and residing therein. To entitle such Chinese subjects as are above described, to admission into the United States they may produce a certificate from their government or the government where they last resided, viséd by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart.

"It is also agreed that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to such regulations by the government of the United States as may be necessary to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused.

ARTICLE IV.

"In pursuance of Article III of the Immigration Treaty between the United States and China, signed at Pekin on the 17th day of November, 1880, it is hereby understood and agreed that Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States, shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens. And the government of the United States re-affirms its obligation, as stated in said Article III, to exert all its power to secure protection to the persons and property of all Chinese subjects in the United States.

ARTICLE V.

"Whereas, Chinese subjects, being in remote and unsettled regions of the United States, have been the victims of injuries in their persons and property at the hands of wicked and lawless men, which unexpected events the Chinese government regrets, and for which it has claimed an indemnity the legal obligation of which the government of the United States denies; and whereas the government of the United States, humanely, considering these injuries and bearing in mind the firm and ancient friendship between the United States and China, which the high contracting parties wish to cement, is desirous of alleviating the exceptional and deplorable sufferings and losses to which the aforesaid Chinese have been subjected; therefore, the United States, without reference to the question of liability therefor (which as a legal obligation it denies), agrees to pay on or before the first day of March, 1889, the sum of two hundred and seventy-six thousand six hundred and nineteen dollars and seventy-five cents ($276,619.75) to the Chinese minister at this capital, who shall accept the same, on behalf of his government, as full indemnity for all losses and injuries sustained by Chinese subjects as aforesaid, and shall distribute the said money among the said sufferers and their relatives.

ARTICLE VI.

"This convention shall remain in force for a period of twenty years, beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications; and if, six months before the expiration of the said period of twenty years, neither government shall formally have given notice of its termination to the other, it shall remain in full force for another like period of twenty years."

The act of 1882 was framed in supposed conformity with the provisions of the supplemental treaty of 1880.[1] See REPEAL.

General or ambiguous expressions in the act are to be construed so as to make them conform to the treaty. . . "Chinese laborers" means those who come here with the intention to labor and enter into competition with the labor of the country.[2]

"Laborer" is used in its popular sense, and does not include any persons but those whose occupation involves physical toil, and who work for wages, or with a view of disposing of the product or result of their labor to others.[3]

A Mongolian was not entitled to become a citizen under the Revised Statutes as amended in 1875. He is not a "white person" within the meaning of those words as used in the naturalisation laws.[4] See express prohibition, sec. 14, act of July, 1884, ante.

A Chinaman who left this country between May 6, 1882, and July 5, 1884, and returned after the latter date, is entitled to land upon complying with the requirements of the act of 1882; such provisions of the act of 1884 as relate to evidence of identity not being retroactive.

A person who, while abroad, has lost by theft a certificate issued under § 4 of the act of 1882, may land on his return to the port whence he sailed (no one having meanwhile presented the certificate) on proving these facts, and identifying himself as the person to whom the certificate was issued.

A district court may, under R. S. § 753, issue a habeas corpus where a Chinaman is prevented from landing by the master of a vessel, by direction of the customs authorities, under the provisions of the foregoing acts; there being nothing in those acts, or in the treaty, making the decision of the customs officers final, or ousting the courts of jurisdiction.[5]

CHOLERA. See QUARANTINE, 2.

CHOOSE. See ELECT.

CHOSE.[6] A thing recoverable by an action at law: a thing, personalty.

Chose in action. A thing of which one has the right, but not the possession.[7] Chose in possession. Personalty in possession, in actual enjoyment.

Property in chattels personal may be either "in possession," — where a man has not only the right to enjoy, but has the actual enjoyment of, the thing; or else it is "in action," — where he has only a bare right, without any occupation or enjoyment. In the latter case the possession may be recovered by a suit or action at law: whence the thing so recoverable is called a thing or "chose in action" — as, money due on a bond, or recompense for breach of a contract.[1]

The general definition of "chose in action" is, a right not reduced into possession. A note, bond, or other promise not negotiable, is denominated a chose in action, before the promisor or obligor is liable to an action on it, as well as after. A note for money, payable on time, is a chose in action as soon as made.[2]

The term "chose in action" is one of comprehensive import. It includes the infinite variety of contracts, covenants, and promises which confer on one party the right to recover a personal chattel or a sum of money from another by action. A debt secured by a bond and mortgage is an example.[3]

In its enlarged sense, a chose in action may be considered as any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract.[4]

At common law a chose in action was not assignable. To make over a right of going to law was encouraging, it was thought, litigiousness. But in equity, at an early day, an assignment was viewed as a declaration of trust, and an agreement to permit the assignee to use the name of the assignor, for purposes of recovery — the transferee being rather an attorney in fact than an assignee.[5]

Bills of exchange, by the law-merchant, and promissory notes, by statute of 3 and 4 Anne (1705), c. 9, were made exceptions to the common-law rule; and so were bills of lading, by statute of 18 and 19 Vict. (1855), c. 111. By the Judicature Act of 1873 choses are assignable in all cases.

The assignee, except in the case of negotiable instruments, although without notice, takes the chose subject to all equities existing between the debtor and the assignor.[6]

The assignee cannot proceed in equity to enforce, for his own use, the legal right of his assignor, merely upon the ground that he cannot maintain an action at law in his own name. So held where the owner of letters-patent assigned them, with claims for damages

[1] Re Low Yam Chow, 7 Saw. 548-50 (Sept., 1882).

[2] Re Moncan, 8 Saw. 350-56 (Oct., 1882): s. c. 14 F. R. 44.

[3] Re Ho King, 8 Saw. 428 (1883). See also 13 F. R. 286, 291; 17 id. 634; 18 id. 28; 19 id. 184, 490; 22 id. 519; 23 id. 339, 441.

[4] R. S. § 2169; Re Ah Yup, 5 Saw. 155 (1878); 2 Kent, 72.

[5] United States v. Jung Ah Lung, 124 U. S. 621 (Feb. 13, 1888), affirming 25 F. R. 141. Opinion by Blatchford, J.; Harlan, Field, and Lamar, JJ., dissenting as to identification without the certificate.

[6] Shŏse. F. from L. causa, action, suit at law.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 185.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 388, 396, 442.

[2] Haskell v. Blair, 3 Cush. 535 (1849), Metcalf, J.

[3] Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. 449 (1850), Grier, J.; 37 Alb. Law J. 44-46 (1888), cases.

[4] Magee v. Toland, 8 Port. 40 (Ala., 1839). See also 4 Ala. 351; 72 Ga. 51; 34 La. An. 608; 5 Mas. 82; 4 Denio, 82; 14 S. C. 538; 43 Wis. 32.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 442; 4 id. 135; 1 Pars. Contr. 227.

[6] Hill v. Wanzer, 17 How. 367-68 (1854), cases; 20 Blatch. 277.

for infringement, and the assignee filed a bill to recover the damages. In such case the assignee must bring an action at law, in the name of the assignor, to his own use.[1]

See ASSIGN, 2; ATTACH, 2; CHAMPERTY; DONATIO; HUSBAND.

CHRISTIAN. One who believes or assents to the doctrines of Christianity, as taught by Jesus Christ in the New Testament, or who, being born of Christian parents or in a Christian country, does not profess any other religion, or does not belong to any one of the other religious divisions of man.[2] See NAME, 1.

Christianity. The system of doctrines and precepts taught by Christ; the religion founded by Christ.

Christianity is said to be part of the common law. "Christianity is parcel of the laws of England; and, therefore, to reproach the Christian religion is to speak in subversion of the law."[3]

"The essential principles of natural religion" and "of revealed religion are a part of the common law, so that any person reviling or subverting or ridiculing them may be prosecuted at common law."[4]

"The true sense of the maxim is that the law will not permit the essential principles of revealed religion to be ridiculed and reviled."[5]

Christianity is a part of the common law of Pennsylvania in the qualified sense that its divine origin and truth are admitted, and therefore it is not to be maliciously and openly reviled and blasphemed against, to the annoyance of believers or the injury of the public.[6] Not Christianity founded upon any particular religious tenets; but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men.[7]

The maxim does not mean that Christianity is an established religion; nor that its precepts, by force of their own authority, form part of our system of municipal law; nor that the courts may base their judgments upon the Bible; nor that religious duties may be penally enforced; nor that legal discrimination in favor of Christianity is allowed.[8]

The best features of the common law, especially those which regard the family and social relations, if not derived from, have at least been improved and strengthened by, the prevailing religion and the teachings of its sacred Book. But the law does not attempt to enforce the precepts of Christianity on the ground of their sacred character or divine origin. Some of those precepts, though we may admit their continual and universal obligation, we must nevertheless recognize as being incapable of enforcement by human laws. Those precepts, moreover, affect the heart, and address themselves to the conscience; while the laws of the state can regard the outward conduct only: for which reasons Christianity is not a part of the law of the land in any sense which entitles the courts to take notice of and base their judgments upon it, except so far they can find that its precepts and principles have been incorporated in and made a component part of the law of the State.[1]

The maxim can have no reference to the law of the National government, since the sources of that law are the Constitution, treaties, and acts of Congress.[2]

See further LAW, Common; BLASPHEMY; HOLIDAY; POLICY, 2; RELIGION; SUNDAY.

CHROMO. See COPYRIGHT; PRINT.

CHURCH. A temple or building consecrated to the honor of God and religion; or, an assembly of persons, united by the profession of the same Christian faith, met together for all religious worship.[3]

Among those whose polity is congregational or independent, a body of persons associated together for the purpose of maintaining Christian worship and ordinances.[4]

A "religious society" may be a body of persons associated for worship, omitting the sacraments.[5]

"Church" and "society" popularly denote the same thing: a religious body organized to sustain public worship.[6]

A school-house in which religious services are held on Sunday is not a "church."[7]

The right to organize voluntary religious associations to assist in the expression and dissemination of any religious doctrine, and to create tribunals for the

[1] N. Y. Guaranty Co. v. Memphis Water Co., 107 U. S. 214 (1882), cases. See R. S. § 723.

[2] [Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 50 (1868), Sargent, J. On the "Arrest and Trial of Jesus," see 36 Alb. Law J. 384–88 (1887); Greenleaf, Test. Evangelists, &c.

[3] Taylor's Case, Ventris, 293 (1676), Hale, C. J. See Rex v. Woolston, 2 Strange, 834 (1729); 4 Bl. Com. 59; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 438.

[4] Case of Evans, 2 Burn. Ec. L. 185 (1780), Mansfield, C. J.

[5] Lives of Chief Justices, vol. 3, p. 417, Ld. Campbell.

[6] Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 2 How. 198 (1844), Story, J.

[7] Updegraph v. Commonwealth, 11 S. & R. 399 (1824).

[8] See 18 Alb. Law J. 366 (1878); 21 Am. Law Reg. 201, 299, 587 (1873); People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. *294 (1811), Kent, C. J.; Chapman v. Gillett, 2 Conn. 43 (1816); Updegraph v. Commonwealth, 11 S. & R. 399–401 (1824); State v. Chandler, 2 Harr., Del., 562 (1837); Shover v. State, 10 Ark. 263 (1850); Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio, 389 (1853); Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 56–68 (1861); Sparhawk v. Union Passenger Ry. Co., 54 Pa. 432 (1867); Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 304 (1868); Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 246–54 (1872); 20 Alb. Law J. 265, 285 (1879).

[1] Cooley, Const. Lim. 472, cases.

[2] See Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. 591 (1834); Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, &c. Bridge Co., 13 How. 519 (1851).

[3] Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb. 95 (1850).

[4] [Silsby v. Barlow, 16 Gray, 330 (1860); Anderson v. Brock, 3 Me. *247 (1825).

[5] Society v. Hatch, 48 N. H. 396 (1869).

[6] State v. Midgett, 85 N. C. 538 (1881). See also 9 Cranch, 326; 16 Conn. 291; 3 Harr., Del., 257; 88 Ind. 121; 16 Mass. 498; 3 Paige, Ch. 301; 3 Tex. 298.

decision of controverted questions of faith within the association, and for the ecclesiastical government of all individual members, congregations, and officers within the general association, is unquestioned. All who unite themselves to such a body do so with an implied assent to this government, and are bound to submit to it. . . . Each member is bound by the law of the society,—the written organic law, books of discipline, collections of precedents, usages and customs. The civil courts have only to do with the rights of property: they cannot revise an act of discipline, excommunication, etc., though they may inquire whether such act was the act of the church or of persons who did not constitute the church.

Where property is in dispute, the civil court inquires:

(1) Was the property or fund devoted, by the express terms of the gift, grant, or sale by which it was acquired, to the support of a specific doctrine or belief, or was it acquired for the general use of the society for religious purposes, with no other limitation? If so, when necessary to protect a trust, the court will inquire into the faith or practice of the parties claiming the use or control of the property, and see that it is not diverted from the trust.

(2) Is the society of the strictly independent form of government, owing no submission to any organization outside of the congregation? If so, the rights of conflicting claimants are determined by the ordinary rules which govern voluntary associations—the will of the majority, the decision of chosen officers, or otherwise. Those who adhere to the acknowledged organism by which the body is governed are entitled to the use of the property. No inquiry is made into the opinions of those who comprise the legal or regular organization.

(3) Is the society one of a number united to form a more general body of churches, with ecclesiastical control in the general association over the individual members and societies? The tribunals of such association decide all questions of faith, discipline, rule, custom, or government. When a right of property depends on one of those questions, and that has been decided by the highest tribunal within the organization to which it has been carried, the civil courts accept that decision as final. The local society is but a member of a larger organization, under its control and bound by its judgments.[1]

Church and state. See RELIGION.

See also ASSEMBLY, Civil; BANNS; CANON, LAW; CHRISTIANITY; CONGREGATION; PARISH, 1; PEW; SANCTUARY, 1; SCHISM; SUBSCRIBE, 2; WORSHIP.

[1] Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 713, 722–34 (1871), cases, Miller, J. The litigation grew out of dissension, due primarily to differences of opinion upon the subject of slavery, among the members of the Third or Walnut Street Presbyterian Church, of Louisville, Ky. See also Bouldin v. Alexander, 15 id. 131, 140 (1872); Same v. Same, 103 U. S. 330 (1880); Hennessey v. Walsh, 55 N. H. 515, 526 (1875); Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 232 (1881); Graff v. Greer, 88 Ind. 131–32 (1882), cases; Hadley v. Mendenhall, 89 id. 136, 152–56 (1883), cases; Whitecar v. Michenor, 37 N. J. E. 6 (1883), cases; State v. Rector, 45 N. J. L. 220 (1883); 12 Am. Law Reg. 201, 329, 537 (1873), cases; 15 id. 276–92 (1876), cases; Relations of Civil Law to Church Polity, etc. (1875), Hon. William Strong.

CIDER. See LIQUOR.

CIRCUIT. A division of country visited by a judge for the dispensing of justice, as for the trial of causes; also, the periodical journey itself.

The judges of assize and of nisi prius are twice a year sent around the kingdom to try, by a jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as are then under dispute in the courts at Westminster Hall. Formerly, the itinerant justices made their circuits once in seven years; but Magna Charta directed that they be sent into every county once a year. They usually went in the vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms.[1]

The custom is retained in a few of the States.

Circuit court. See COURT, Circuit.

CIRCUITY. A round-about course: indirect action, or procedure.

Circuity of action. An indirect or round-about mode of suing: where a party by an indirect proceeding makes two or more actions necessary, when justice could be obtained by a single action involving a more direct course.

To prevent circuity of action, a court of equity often entertains jurisdiction upon this ground alone; and to avoid it, cross-demands and judgments are set off against each other.

Circuitus est evitandus. Circuity is to be avoided.[2]

CIRCULAR. 1, adj. Going around or about, from beginning to end: as, circular mileage, q. v.

2, n. In the post-office laws, a printed letter, which, according to internal evidence, is being sent in identical terms to several persons.

The date, names of sender and addressee, and typographical corrections, may be written on such circular.[3]

A circular is a paper intended to be issued to a great number of persons, or for general circulation. In the form of a letter, may be described in an indictment, as, a "letter and circular."[4] See MAIL, 2; POST-OFFICE.

CIRCULATION. Whatever passes from person to person, as, money, currency; also, the fact and the extent of a thing's being circulated.

Certificates of indebtedness issued by a person or a corporation are not taxable as "circulation," under Rev. St., § 3408, unless calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money.[5]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 57–58; 4 id. 422, 424; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 100.

[2] 18 Ct. Cl. 457; 15 M. & W. 208.

[3] Act 3 March, 1879: 20 St. L. 330, 1 Sup. R. S. 456.

[4] United States v. Noelke, 17 Blatch. 557 (1880); Commerford v. Thompson, 2 Flip. 615 (1880).

[5] United States v. Wilson, 106 U. S. 630 (1882). See

The act of February 8, 1875, c. 36, sec. 19 (18 St. L. 311), provides "that every person, firm, association other than national banking associations, and every corporation, State bank, or State banking association, shall pay a tax of ten per centum on the amount of their own notes used for circulation and paid out by them." This act is to be construed in connection with the internal revenue law; is designed to provide a currency for the country, and to restrain the circulation of notes not issued by authority of Congress. An order by A in favor of B, or bearer, upon C for "five dollars in merchandise at retail," paid out by A and used as circulation, is not a note within the meaning of the act. Only such notes as are in law negotiable, so as to carry title in their general circulation from hand to hand, are the subjects of taxation under the act.[1]

A certificate by a national bank that a person named has deposited in it a certain sum, payable to the order of himself on return of the certificate properly indorsed, and understood not to be payable until a day agreed upon, is not forbidden.[2] See BANK, 2 (2); TAX, 2.

CIRCUMSTANCES. 1. Surroundings: the particulars which accompany an act or fact; res gestæ, q. v.

Reference to "surrounding circumstances" is made to ascertain the precise nature of a subject-matter or to explain terms used.

Circumstantial. Consisting in or pertaining to attendant circumstances or facts; afforded by what naturally accompanies: as, circumstantial evidence, q. v. See CASE, 1.

"Circumstance" and "fact" are often interchanged. When a conviction depends upon circumstantial evidence, it often happens that one or more of the ultimate or essential matters may appropriately be called a "circumstance," to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.[3]

2. A person's qualifications, status or condition, material, moral, and perhaps mental.

In a law providing that letters testamentary shall not be granted, unless a bond be filed, to a person whose "circumstances do not afford adequate security" for the due administration of the estate, the reference is not exclusively to pecuniary responsibility. Thrift, integrity, good repute, and stability of character are "circumstances."[4] See PECUNIARY.

"In failing circumstances," applied to a bank, means, in Missouri, a state of uncertainty whether the bank will be able to sustain itself, depending on favorable or unfavorable contingencies, which in the course of business may occur, and over which its officers have no control.[5]

Poverty is not such "extraordinary circumstance" as will defeat the rule of diligence in civil procedure in the Federal courts.[1]

CIRCUS. See THEATER.

CITE. To call, command, summon.

1. To notify a party of a proceeding against him.

2. To refer to or quote in support of a proposition; as, to cite a case or authority.

Citation. 1. Originally, a process to call a party before an ecclesiastical court.[2]

2. Official notice to appear and answer in a proceeding.

In this sense, used in the practice of courts of probate, surrogates' and orphans' courts; and in practice upon writs of error, as, writs from the Supreme Court.

A notice to the opposite party that a thing is about to be done, as, that a record is about to be transferred to another court, where he may appear, or decline to appear, as his judgment or inclination may direct.[3]

"Citation" and "notice" are not synonymous. A citation must be directed to some officer and be served by him; and, if issued by a court having a seal, must be under the seal of such court. It must contain the names of the persons upon whom service is to be had, unless in the case of unknown heirs who are served by publication. A notice is much less formal: it is not necessarily under seal, although issued by a court of record, and it may be served by a person not an officer.[4]

3. The act of quoting an authority; also, the authority itself. Compare PRECEDENT, 2.

CITIZEN. In the Roman government, seems to have designated a person who had the freedom of the city, and the right to exercise all political and civil privileges of the government. There was also, at Rome, a partial citizenship, including civil but not political rights. Complete citizenship embraced both.[5]

One who owes to government allegiance, service, and money by way of taxation, and to whom the government, in turn, grants and guarantees liberty of person and of conscience, the right of acquiring and possessing property, of marriage and the social relations, also Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Pollock, 19 F. R. 408 (1884); United States v. White, ib. 723 (1884).

---

[1] Hollister v. Zion's Co-operative Institution, 111 U. S. 62 (1884): 8 Wall. 533; 96 U. S. 366; Re Aldrich, 16 F. R. 869 (1883).

[2] Hunt, Appellant, 141 Mass. 519 (1886): R. S. § 5183.

[3] Clare v. People, 9 Col. 124 (1886), Helm, J.

[4] Martin v. Duke, 5 Redf. 599 (1882), Rollins, Sur.

[5] Dodge v. Mastin, 17 F. R. 665 (1883).

[1] Whalen v. Sheridan, 10 F. R. 661 (1880); 91 U. S. 249; 96 id. 618.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 100.

[3] [Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 411 (1821), Marshall C. J.

[4] Perez v. Perez, 59 Tex. 324 (1883).

[5] Thomassen v. State, 15 Ind. 151 (1860), Perkins, J.; White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 259–62 (1869).

of suit and of defense, and security in person, estate, and reputation.[1]

A State may deny all her "political rights" to an individual, and he yet be a citizen. The rights of office and suffrage are political purely. A citizen enjoys "civil rights."[2]

For convenience it has been found necessary to give a name to membership in a political community or nation. The object is to designate by title the person and the relation he bears to the nation. For this purpose the words "subject," "inhabitant," and "citizen" have been used, and the choice between them is sometimes made to depend upon the form of the government. "Citizen" is now more commonly employed, however, and as it has been considered better suited to the description of one living under a republican government, it was adopted by nearly all of the States upon their separation from Great Britain, and was afterward adopted in the Articles of Confederation and in the Constitution. Used in this sense it is understood as conveying the idea of membership in a nation, and nothing more.

Whoever was one of the people of either of the States when the Constitution was adopted became ipso facto a citizen — a member of the nation created by its adoption. . . Disputes have arisen as to whether or not certain persons or classes of persons were part of the people at the time, but never as to their citizenship, if they were.

Additions might be made by birth, and by naturalisation.

The Constitution does not, in words, say who shall be natural-born citizens. To ascertain that, resort must be had to the common law, with the nomenclature of which the framers were familiar. At common law, all children born in a country of parents who were its citizens became themselves, upon their birth, citizens. These were natives, or natural-born citizens, as distinguished from aliens or foreigners. Some authorities include as citizens children born within the jurisdiction without reference to the citizenship of their parents. As to this class there have been doubts, but not as to the other class.

Sex has never been made one of the elements of citizenship in the United States. The Fourteenth Amendment did not affect the citizenship of women any more than that of men: it prohibited the State from abridging any of her privileges and immunities (q. v.), as a citizen of the United States, but it did not confer citizenship on her. That she had before its adoption. The right of suffrage was not co-extensive with citizenship before the adoption of the Amendment, nor was it added thereby.[3]

Citizen and "legal voter" are not synonymous terms. Minors and females may be citizens, yet they are not legal voters.[4]

[1] Amy v. Smith, 1 Litt. *342 (Ky., 1822), Mills, J. Approved, Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 51 (1872).

[2] Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 166-67, 170, 175 (1874), Chase, C. J. See also Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 404, 422 (1856), Taney, C. J.; 2 Kent, 258; 3 Story, Const. § 1687; 26 Cent. Mag. 178.

[3] People v. Town of Oldtown, 88 Ill. 205 (1878); United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 202 (1873).

A person may be a citizen of the United States and of a State, and as such have different rights. Citizens are the members of the political community to which they belong. They are the people who compose the community, and who, in their associated capacity, have established or submitted themselves to the dominion of a government for the promotion of their general welfare and the protection of their individual as well as of their collective rights.[1]

By the definition usually given, a citizen is an "inhabitant of a city, town, or place," and so would include every person dwelling in the place named; but the term is subject to various limitations, depending upon the context. It may indicate a permanent resident, or one who remains for a time or from time to time.[2]

Citizenship implies residence with intention of remaining permanently at the particular place.[3] See INHABITANT; RESIDENT.

The word does not necessarily include the element of descent or inheritance, nor of sex, nor of race, nor of right to co-operate in government, nor of property.[4]

Citizenship as affected by the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution:

The object sought by these Amendments was "the freedom of the slave (African) race, the security and firm establishment of that freedom, and the protection of the freedman from the oppressions of those who had exercised dominion over him." But the letter and spirit of the Amendments "apply to all cases coming within their purview, whether the party concerned be African or not."[5]

Amendment XIII. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." Ratified December 18, 1865.

Amendment XIV. "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Ratified July 28, 1868.

Amendment XV. "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged

[1] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 549, 542 (1875), Waite, C. J.; Dred Scott Case, ante.

[2] Union Hotel Co. v. Hersee, 79 N. Y. 461 (1880).

[3] Winn v. Gilmer, 27 F. R. 817 (1886); 25 Am. Law Reg. 706 (1886); ib. 710-14, cases. As affecting citizenship, 31 Alb. Law J. 465 (1885) — consular instructions.

[4] See 16 Alb. Law J. 24, 176 (1877); 25 Am. Law Reg. 1-14 (1886), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 540 (1887), cases; 11 Ohio, 27; Abbott, cases.

[5] Slaughter-House Cases, post.

by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Ratified March 30, 1870.

In the case of each Amendment, Congress is given express power to enforce the provisions thereof by appropriate legislation.

The series have a common purpose: to secure to the negro race all the civil rights the white race enjoy; — to raise the colored race into perfect equality of civil rights with all others in the State; — to take away all possibility of oppression by law because of race or color; — to secure equal protection of the laws.

They are limitations on the power of the States, and enlargement of the powers of Congress. To carry out their purpose they are to be construed liberally.

The XIIIth Amendment forbids all forms of involuntary slavery — African slavery, Mexican peonage, Chinese coolie trade. It declares the personal freedom of all the human race within the jurisdiction of the United States. After the slave had been emancipated, certain States so curtailed his rights that his freedom was of little value: in this originated the XIVth Amendment. The laws being still administered by the white man alone, the XVth Amendment was adopted to make the negro a voter.

The XIVth Amendment conferred citizenship on the negro, defines citizenship in the United States and in the States, and protects the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States from hostile legislation by the States. That is, it not only gave citizenship, but it denies a State power to withhold equal protection of the laws, and gives Congress power to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation, as, by removal of a cause from a State to a Federal court. Its enforcement is left to the discretion of Congress. In an especial sense it makes one law for black and for white. It does not enumerate rights, but speaks in general terms. It confers a new constitutional right: exemption from discrimination between persons and classes of persons by action of any State; it does not refer to action by a private individual.[1]

The XIVth Amendment intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon the others in the same calling and condition, and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than is prescribed to all for like offenses. . . The Amendment does not interfere with the "police power" of the States — a regulation designed not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon any one, but to promote, with as little individual inconvenience as possible, the general good. . . Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the Amendment.[1]

The XIVth Amendment forbids an ordinance which, though expressed in general terms, is directed against a particular class, as Chinese convicts, by imposing a degrading punishment, like that of cutting off the queue.[2]

An administration of an ordinance for carrying on a lawful business (that of a laundry), which makes discriminations founded upon differences of race between persons otherwise in similar circumstances, violates the XIVth Amendment.[3]

The XVth Amendment merely invests citizens of the United States with the constitutional right of exemption from discrimination in the enjoyment of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.[4]

No one of the Amendments confers power on Congress to punish private persons who, acting without authority of the State, invade rights protected by the Amendments.[5]

See further CONSPIRACY; RIGHT, 2, Civil Rights; SCHOOL, Separate; SERVITUDE, 1; SUFFRAGE; VAGRANT; WAR. See also ALIEN, 1; ALLEGIANCE; CHINESE; CORPORATION, Private; DENIZEN; DOMICIL; EXPATRIATION; NATURALIZE; PERSON; PRIVILEGE, 1; STATE, 3 (2); SUFFRAGE; TERRITORY, 2; WHITE.

CITY.[6] 1. An incorporated town or borough, which, in England, is or has [1] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 70–71 (1873), Miller, J. Regarded a "servitude" in property.

Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 306, 310 (1879), Strong, J. S., a negro, tried for murder, had been denied a removal of the cause into a circuit court. Virginia v. Rives, ib. 318 (1879),— in which a mixed jury was denied.

Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 344–48 (1879), Strong, J. That State petitioned for the discharge of one Coles, a county judge, indicted for excluding a colored man from a jury. Bush v. Kentucky, 107 id. 118–19 (1882), cases.

Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 30–31 (1879), Bradley, J. Regarded a regulation of jurisdiction.

Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 385–86 (1880), Harlan, J.; United States v. Woods, 106 id. 637–44 (1882), Woods, J.; United States v. Reese, 92 id. 214, 218 (1875), Waite, C. J.

[1] Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31–32 (1885), Field, J. See also Pace v. Alabama, 106 id. 584 (1882); Railroad Tax Case (County of San Mateo v. South. Pacific R. Co.), 8 Saw. 251, 302 (1882); Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 11, 23, 24 (1883); 23 N. Y. 446.

[2] Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Saw. 552, 562 (1879).

[3] Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 365 (1886).

[4] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 (1875). United States v. Harris, 106 id. 637 (1882).

[5] Le Grand v. United States, 12 F. R. 577, 583–85 (1882).

[6] L. civitas, citizens in a community: civis, a citizen

been the see of a bishop.[1] An incorporated town.[2]

The word "city" may include a town,[3] q. v.

2. A municipal corporation of the larger class, with powers of government confided in officers who are usually elected by popular vote.

A political division of a State, for the convenient administration of the government.[4]

An instrumentality, with powers more or less enlarged, according to the requirements of the public, and which may be increased or repealed at the will of the legislature.[4]

In a few States cities are of the first class, of the second class, etc., according to population.[5]

Under a constitutional power to organize cities and villages, the legislature is authorized to classify municipal corporations, and an act relating to any such class may be one of a general nature.[6]

City purpose. Any public improvement for the common benefit and enjoyment of all the citizens.[7]

Each case must depend largely upon its own facts.[7]

City vouchers are non-negotiable. See under NEGOTIATE, 2.

See generally CHARTER, 2; CORPORATION, Municipal; COUNCIL, 2; FIRE, Department; HEALTH, Board of; OFFICER; ORDINANCE, 1; PARK, 2; POLICE, 3; RECORDER, 2; SEWER; SIDEWALK; STREET; TELEGRAPH.

CIVIL. Pertaining to the citizen (Lat. civis) — the free inhabitant of an independent city, in distinction from the government, the soldier, the peasant, the ecclesiastic, and persons of other classes.[8]

1. Contrasted with barbarous or savage, natural or uncivilized, denotes a state of society reduced to order and regular government: as in speaking of civil — liberty, government, rights, society, qq. v.

2. Originating or existing among, pertaining to, or affecting, fellow-citizens of the same state or nation, and opposed to foreign: as, a civil — commotion, rebellion, war, q. v.

3. Accorded by just and equal laws; as opposed to political or that which is actually or practically enjoyed under law: as, again, civil — rights or liberty, qq. v.

4. Existing in contemplation of law; attributable under municipal law, and contrasted with natural: as, civil — life, death, disability, qq. v.

5. Concerning the rights of and wrongs to individuals considered as private persons, in contradistinction to criminal or that which concerns the whole political society, the community, state, government: as, civil — action, case, cause, code, court, damage, injury, jurisdiction, law, obligation or responsibility, proceeding, procedure, process, remedy, report, side, qq. v.

6. Pertaining to the administration of government, and contrasted with military and ecclesiastical: as, civil — office, officer, tenure, qq. v.

"Civil" is used, in contradistinction to "barbarous" or "savage," to indicate a state of society reduced to order and regular government; to "criminal," to indicate the private rights and remedies of men as members of the community, in contrast to those which are public, and relate to the government; to "military" and "ecclesiastical;" to "natural" or "foreign." In the Constitution, seems to be contradistinguished from "military," to indicate the rights and duties relating to citizens generally, as distinct from those of persons engaged in the land and naval service of the government.[1]

Civiliter mortuus. Civilly dead. See Civil, 4.

CLAIM.[2] A challenge by a man of the propriety [property] or ownership of a thing which he has not in possession, but which is wrongfully detained from him.[3]

In a juridical sense, a demand of some matter as of right made by one person upon another, to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty.[4]

A more limited but equally explicit definition is that given by Lord Dyer in Stowel's Case.[4, 5]

The assertion, demand, or challenge of something as a right, or the thing thus demanded or challenged.[6]

---

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 114.

[2] Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 4 (1878).

[3] People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 236 (1882): Cal. Const., Art. X, sec. 19.

[4] New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 654 (1877), Field, J.

[5] See Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 411 (1877); 77 id. 346; 88 id. 256; 96 id. 422; 106 id. 377; 15 W. N. C. 209; 32 Kan. 431; 32 Mo. 388.

[6] State ex rel. Attorney-General v. Hudson, 44 Ohio St. 139 (1886), cases; Heck v. State, ib. 539 (1886).

[7] People v. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 487 (1879).

[8] A "civil" man once was one who fulfilled all the duties flowing from his position as a civis, and his relations to the other members of the civitas to which he belonged, and "civility" was the condition in which those duties were recognized and observed. Trench, Glossary, &c., 36.

[1] [1 Story, Const. § 791.

[2] L. clamare, to call out, demand.

[3] Stowel v. Zouch, 1 Plow. 359 (1568), Lord Dyer.

[4] Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 615 (1842), Story, J.

[5] Fordyce v. Godman, 20 Ohio St. 14 (1874), Scott, J.

The subject-matter of a claim is the facts or circumstances out of which the claim arises or by reason of which the supposed right accrues.[1]

Something asked for or demanded on the one hand and not admitted or allowed on the other.[2]

When the demand is admitted it is not a mere claim, but a debt. It no longer rests in mere clamor or petition, but is something done upon which an action may be maintained. Thus, "a claim upon the United States" (R. S. § 3477) is something in the nature of a demand for damages arising out of some alleged act or omission of the government, but not yet provided for or acknowledged by law.[3]

Every account upon which any sum of money or other thing is or is claimed to be due to the person presenting it is a claim or demand; but every claim or demand is not an "account." The terms, however, may be used synonymously.[3]

May refer to such debt or demand against a decedent as might have been enforced against him in his life-time by personal action for the recovery of money, and upon which only a money judgment could have been rendered.[4]

Claims against an estate are those in existence at the death of the deceased. Other claims are properly denominated "expenses of administration."[5] See DEMAND, 1.

Referring to public lands, relates to a settler's right or improvement on land the fee of which is in the government.[6]

Within the meaning of Rev. St., § 3438, providing for the punishment of any person who prefers a claim (pension) against the Government, knowing the same to be false, "claim" is not used in the sense of a demand theretofore presented, but of a demand then existing, and known to be wrongful. The act of presenting it in the first instance is denounced as a crime.[7]

Under that section one is guilty who presents a claim which he believes to be just, but seeks to substantiate by the affidavit of a person who, to his knowledge, certifies to a fact of which the affiant knows nothing.[8]

Adverse claim. See POSSESSION, Adverse.

Claim and delivery; claim-bond. See REPLEVIN, 1.

Claim of title. See COLOR, 2. Of title.

Claimant. 1. One who demands a thing as a matter of right.

2. One who has filed a claim as the law requires.[1]

3. In admiralty, a person admitted to defend a libel in rem, q. v.

A bona fide claimant to land is one who supposes that he has a good title and knows of no adverse claim.[2] See FAITH, Good.

Under pre-emption laws "claim" and "claimant" are frequently used in connection with the right to acquire title to a part of the public lands upon compliance with the laws.[6]

Counter-claim. A cross-demand, existing in favor of a defendant. Includes recoupment and set-off.

"Counter" means contrary to, contrary way, opposition; and "claim," the demand of anything that is in the possession of another, the right to demand of another.[4]

The term of itself imports a claim opposed to, or which qualifies, or at least in some degree affects, the plaintiff's cause of action or the right to the relief to which he would otherwise be entitled by his action. "Consists of a set-off or claim by way of recoupment, or is in some way connected with the action stated in the complaint."[5]

Is broader than "set-off;" includes not only demands the subject of set-off and recoupment, but equitable demands.[6]

Under the laws of many States, if the claim and counter-claim are both established, the latter reduces the former; but if the counter-claim alone is established, judgment is recovered for the amount of it. See further SET-OFF.

Non-claim. Omission or neglect to make a demand; failure to assert a claim within the time limited by law.

"An infant shall lose nothing by non-claim, or neglect to demand his right."[7]

A statute of non-claim has all the characteristics of a statute of limitations.[8]

See AFFIDAVIT, Of claim; COURTS, United States; DISCLAIMER; INTERPLEAD; QUITCLAIM; RECLAIM; STALE.

---

[1] Fordyce v. Godman, ante.

[2] Dowell v. Cardwell, 4 Saw. 228 (1877), Deady, J.

[3] Stringham v. Supervisors, 24 Wis. 600 (1869), Dixon, C. J.; 43 id. 644; 56 id. 170, 245; 40 Ala. 147.

[4] Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 32 (1862), Field, C. J.; McCausland's Estate, 52 id. 577 (1878); 9 id. 616; 38 id. 23, 88; 46 id. 160; 9 Oreg. 391; 2 N. Y. 254; 43 id. 413.

[5] Dodson v. Nevitt, 5 Monta. 520 (1885); McLaughlin v. Winner, 63 Wis. 128 (1885).

[6] Bowman v. Torr, 3 Iowa, 574 (1856); United States v. Wilcox, 4 Blatch. 388–89 (1859).

[7] United States v. Rhodes, 30 F. R. 433 (1887), Brewer, J.

[8] United States v. Jones, 29 F. R. 492 (1887), Simonton, J.

[1] [Adams v. Worrill, 46 Ga. 295 (1872).

[2] Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Pa. 459 (1858): 1 Wash. 78. See also 12 F. R. 152.

[3] United States v. Spaulding, 3 Dak. 92–93 (1882).

[4] [Great Western Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 1 Wyom. 49–50 (1872), Fisher, C. J.

[5] Dietrich v. Koch, 35 Wis. 626 (1874), Lyon, J.: 24 How. Pr. 329, 332; 22 Barb. 143; 21 N. Y. 191, 196; 63 id. 549; 40 Ark. 78; 7 Ind. 523; 2 Pars. Contr. 741; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 112 (1886), cases. In actions ex delicto, see 20 Cent. Law J. 363–65 (1885), cases.

[6] Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 112 (1886), cases; Cal. Code Civ. Proc., § 438.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 465.

[8] Williamson v. McCrary, 33 Ark. 470 (1878).

CLANDESTINE. See CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent; DISTRESS; FRAUD.

CLASS. Persons or things ranked together for like action, for similar or uniform treatment, as possessing a common attribute, or as being in the same category.

Used of legatees, obligees, and other persons;[1] of cities;[2] of legislation.[3] See CITY, 2; ENUMERATION; LEGACY.

CLAUSE. A separate portion: a part of a written instrument.

One of the subdivisions of a written or printed document.[4]

Clauses take their names from the nature of the provision intended to be made by them. Of the more common are: clause of jurisdiction — in a bill in equity; clause of accruer; commerce, dictionary, enacting, guaranty, penal, residuary, and sweeping clause, qq. v.

CLAUSUM. L. A close; an inclosure.

Quare clausum fregit (pl. fregerunt). Wherefore he broke the close. The emphatic words in the old Latin writ commanding a defendant to show cause why he made an alleged unlawful entry upon plaintiff's land.

Abridged to trespass quare clausum, qu. cl. fr., and q. c. f. See CLOSE, 3; TRESPASS.

CLEAN. See HAND, 4; LADING, Bill of.

CLEAR. 1, v. To clear out a highway is to clear it out for all the purposes to which it is dedicated.[5]

"Clearing land," in the absence of words of limitation, means removing therefrom all the timber of every size, except taking out the stumps.[6]

2, adj. Free from, as, from taxes: said of an annuity.[7]

Clear yearly value: free from all out-go.[8]

Clearly. "Clearly established by satisfactory proof" is equivalent to established by proof beyond reasonable doubt.[9]

To require insanity, as a defense in homicide, to be proved by evidence which "clearly preponderates" is practically saying that it must be proved beyond all doubt or uncertainty.[10]

[1] 16 Pick. 132; 17 Wend. 52.

[2] 85 Pa. 401; 106 id. 377; 33 Kan. 431; 93 Mo. 393; 44 Ohio St. 139, 539.

[3] 109 U. S. 24.

[4] Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 499 (1883).

[5] Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 528 (1854).

[6] Seavey v. Shurick, 110 Ind. 496 (1886): Harper v. Pound, 10 id. 35 (1857).

[7] Hodgeworth v. Crawley, 2 Atkyns, 393 (1792).

[8] Tyrconnel v. Ancaster, 2 Ves. Sr. 504 (1754).

[9] People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 385 (1882).

[10] Coyle v. Commonwealth, 100 Pa. 580, 577 (1882).

CLEARANCE. A certificate from the collector of customs at a port that a vessel has complied with the customs and health laws, and has permission to sail.[1]

CLEARING-HOUSE. The object of a clearing-house association is to effect at one time and place the daily exchanges between the banks which are members of the association, and the payment of the balances resulting from such exchanges.[2]

Sending a note through the clearing-house is not a formal demand for immediate payment made during business hours, but it is equivalent to leaving the note at the bank for collection from the maker on or before the close of banking hours.[3] See LOAN, Certificate.

CLEARLY. See CLEAR, 2, Clearly.

CLERGY. Persons in holy orders; ecclesiastics, as a class; also, benefit of clergy.

Clergyable. Admitting or entitled to the benefit of clergy.

Benefit of clergy. Exemption from capital punishment, anciently allowed to churchmen, and, later, to laymen.

Originated in the regard princes had for the church, and the ill use made of that regard. In time, extended to the laity, and made to include all felonies. The claimant "prayed his clergy." If he could read a psalm correctly (usually, the fifty-first), he obtained a trial before twelve "clerks," q. v. They heard him on oath, with his witnesses and compurgators, who attested their belief in his innocence.[4]

Abolished in England by 7 and 8 Geo. IV (1827), c. 28; and in Federal practice by act of April 30, 1790. Was part of the common law of the older States.[4]

Clergyman. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

CLERK. 1. A member of the clergy.

The clergy, as they engrossed almost every other branch of learning, were remarkable for their study of the law. The judges were usually created out of the sacred order, and all the inferior officers were supplied by the lower clergy, which occasioned their successors to be denominated "clerks."[5]

2. A person employed to keep records; as, a clerk of a court.

Clerk of courts. The chief clerk of the courts of quarter sessions and oyer and terminer. (Penn.) See PROTHONOTARY; MINUTES, 1.

[1] See R. S. §§ 4197, 4200, 4207.

[2] Nat. Exchange Bank v. Nat. Bank of North America, 132 Mass. 148 (1882).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 356.

[4] See R. S. § 5329; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 986; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 667; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 459-72.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 17.

Clerical error. See ERROR, 2 (1); RECORD, 2, Judicial.

3. A person employed to keep minutes, accounts, and the like.

A person, employed in an office, public or private, for keeping records, whose business is to write or register in proper form the transactions of the tribunal or body to which he belongs.[1]

An employee who attends to sales no further than delivering goods manufactured, and keeping a memorandum of the delivery for a temporary purpose, is not a "clerk" within the meaning of the rule which requires proof of the original entries.[2] See AGENT; SERVANT, 3; ENTRY, II, 1.

CLIENT.[3] One who employs a lawyer professionally.

Clientage. The patronage of clients; professional patronage.

A client is one who applies to an advocate for counsel and defense; one who retains an attorney, is responsible to him for his fees, and to whom the attorney is responsible for the management of the suit.[4]

Sergeants and barristers may take upon them the protection of suitors, plaintiffs and defendants, who are therefore called their "clients," like the dependents upon the Roman orators.[5]

Among the Romans, the "patron" was the legal adviser of the client, maintained and defended him in his lawsuits — cared for his interests, both public and private. The "client" contributed toward the marriage portion of the patron's daughter, to his ransom, to the costs and penalties of lost lawsuits, to the expense of any public office held by the patron. Neither could accuse, testify or vote against the other. The relation resembled kinship. It was the glory of illustrious families to have many clients.[6] See ATTORNEY; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

CLOSE. As a verb and an adjective, preserves its vernacular senses, except in the compound "foreclose," q. v.; as a noun, has the technical meaning noted below.

1, v. (1) To end, terminate, complete: as, to close a bargain or negotiation.[7]

(2) In a statute providing that places where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be "closed on Sundays," the meaning is that sales shall be entirely stopped, the traffic shut off effectually, so that drinking and the conveniences of drinking shall be no longer accessible.[1]

A saloon is not "closed," within the meaning of a law requiring such places to be closed at certain times, as long as it is possible for persons desiring liquor to get in peaceably, whether by an outside entrance or any other, or as long as a customer, who is inside at the time for closing, remains inside. And it is not important that there is no one attending bar, if the liquor is accessible, nor is it important that no liquor is sold.[2]

2, adj. Not proper for public inspection; hence, sealed on the outside: as, a close writ or roll; opposed to patent in letters-patent. See PATENT, 1 (1).

Not admitting corporators generally to vote for officers: as, a close corporation, q. v.

3, n. An interest in the soil.[3]

Taking sheaves from another's close is equivalent to a taking from his land.[3]

A portion of land, as, a field inclosed by a hedge, fence, or other sensible inclosure.[4]

Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil the law entitles a trespass by "breaking his close:" the words of the writ of trespass commanding the defendant to show cause quare clausum querentis fregit. For every man's land is, in law, inclosed and set apart from his neighbor's land.[5] See CLAUSUM; ENCLOSURE; INCLOSE.

CLOTHE. See VEST.

CLOTHING. See APPAREL; EXEMPTION.

CLOUD. "Cloud," and the fuller and more frequent expression "cloud upon the title," import that there is in existence something which shows a prima facie right in a person to an interest in realty in the possession of another.

A cloud exists upon a title where an instrument is outstanding which is void, or an unfounded claim is set up which complainant has reason to fear may at some time be used injuriously to his rights.[6]

Questions as to what constitutes a cloud upon a title and what character of title the complainant must

[1] People v. Fire Commissioners, 73 N. Y. 442 (1878), Allen, J. See also Ross v. Heathcock, 57 Wis. 96 (1883).

[2] Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 72, 74 (1838).

[3] F. client, a suitor: L. cliens, one who hears, listens to advice.

[4] McFarland v. Crary, 6 Wend. 312 (1830).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 28; 2 id. 64.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 21; Wharton's Law Dict.

[7] See 18 Barb. 60; 43 Sup. Ct., N. Y., 454.

[1] Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 282 (1876); People v. Cummerford, 58 id. 331 (1885); 49 id. 337; 52 id. 506. See also 59 Ala. 64; 47 Conn. 276; 65 Ga. 568; 57 Ill. 370; 68 id. 420.

[2] People v. Cummerford, 58 Mich. 328 (1885), cases, Morse, C. J.

[3] Richardson v. Brewer, 81 Ind. 108 (1881).

[4] Lochlin v. Casler, 52 How. Pr. 45 (1875).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 209.

[6] Chipman v. City of Hartford, 21 Conn. 495 (1852); Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 444-45 (1862), cases; Waterbury Savings Bank v. Lawler, 46 Conn. 248 (1878); Teal v. Collins, 9 Oreg. 92 (1881).

have, to secure relief in equity, are decided upon principles long established. Prominent among them are: that the title of the complainant must be clear; that the pretended title, which is alleged to be a cloud upon it, must not only be clearly invalid or inequitable, but must be such as may, in the present or at a future time, embarrass the real owner in controverting it.[1]

Independently of statutes, the object of a bill to remove a cloud upon a title, and to quiet the possession, is to protect the owner of the legal title from being disturbed in his possession or harassed by suits in regard to that title; and the bill cannot be maintained without clear proof of both possession and legal title in the plaintiff.[2]

The remedy is to cancel the instrument;[3] or to annul or modify the proceeding or record which creates the cloud. Where the illegality of an agreement, deed, or other instrument, appears upon the face of it, so that its nullity can admit of no doubt, a court of equity will not direct it to be canceled or delivered up. There can be no danger that lapse of time may deprive the party of his full means of defense. Such a paper cannot, in strictness, be said to create a cloud, nor be a means of vexatious litigation, or of serious injury.[4]

A bill in equity lies to remove a cloud upon the title to realty where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law.[5]

The jurisdiction of a court of equity is an independent source or head of jurisdiction, not requiring any accompaniment of fraud, accident, mistake, trust, account, or any other basis of equitable intervention.[6]

The decree, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, is not a judgment in rem, establishing a title in land, but operates in personam only, by restraining the defendant from asserting his claim, and directing him to deliver up his deed to be canceled, or to execute a release to the plaintiff.[7]

See QUIET. Compare COLOR, 2, Of title.

CLUB LAW. The use of force or violence for the redress of wrong, actual or alleged.

CLUBS. Associations of persons for the promotion of a common purpose.

In this sense "club" has no very definite meaning. Clubs are formed for all sorts of purposes, and there is no uniformity in their constitutions and rules.[8]

A club of persons may own intoxicating liquors, and employ one member as steward to deliver drinks to other members upon the presentation of checks which are sold by the steward, the money received being used to buy other liquors as the property of the club, without violating a law forbidding the keeping of intoxicating liquors with intent to sell them.[1]

By-laws, which vest in a majority the power of expulsion for a minor offense, are, so far, void. The power of disfranchisement which destroys the member's franchise must be conferred by statute; it is never sustained as an incidental power except on conviction for an infamous offense, or for the commission of an act against the society which tends to its injury.[2] See ASSOCIATION.

CO. 1. An abbreviation of company and of county. See COMPANY, 1.

2. The Latin con (q. v.) used as a prefix, and meaning: with, together with, joined with — and, hence, companion, fellow, associate: as in co-administrator, co-conspirator, co-defendant, co-executor, co-heir, co-obligor, co-partner, co-plaintiff, co-salvor, co-surety, co-tenant, co-trespasser — in which the person spoken of possesses the characteristics of another person whose office or relation is more particularly mentioned. See each of those simple words; also JOINT.

COACH. A kind of carriage, distinguished from other vehicles chiefly as being a covered box, hung on leathers, with four wheels.[3] See RAILROAD; WAGON.

COAL. See ACQUA, Currit, etc.; MINERAL; WASTE, 2.

COASTING TRADE. By act of Congress of February 18, 1793, commercial intercourse carried on between different districts in different States, between different districts in the same State, and between different places in the same district, on the seacoast or on a navigable river.[4]

The reference is to vessels engaged in the domestic trade, plying between ports in the United States, as distinguished from vessels engaged in the foreign trade or plying between a port of the United States and a port in a foreign country.[5]

COAT OF ARMS. See HEIRLOOM.

COCK-FIGHTING. See CRUELTY, 3; GAME, 2.

[1] Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 374-75 (1879), cases; Gilman v. Van Brunt, 29 Minn. 272 (1882), cases.

[2] Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 556 (1887), cases, Gray, J.; Hariand v. Bankers' & Merchants' Tel. Co., 32 F. R. 308 (1887).

[3] Fox v. Blossom, 17 Blatch. 356 (1879), cases.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. § 700a.

[5] Russell v. Barstow, 144 Mass. 130 (1887). Where the alleged owner is in possession he cannot maintain a writ of entry without abandoning the possession.

[6] Dull's Appeal, 113 Pa. 510, 515-18 (1886), cases. See also Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 24 (1884); Pomeroy, Eq. J. § 1396.

[7] Harte v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 155 (1884), cases.

[8] Commonwealth v. Pomphert, 137 Mass. 567, 564 (1884). See 59 Ala. 34; 79 Ill. 85; 48 Ind. 21; 89 Iowa, 495; 85 Md. 568; 8 Q. B. D. 373.

[1] Commonwealth v. Pomphert, ante.

[2] Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107 (1865). See generally 5 Alb. Law J. 226 (1872), cases; Dawkins v. Antrobus, 37 Eng. R. 237 (1881); Loubat v. Le Roy, 40 Hun, 546 (1886), cases.

[3] Turnpike Co. v. Nell, 9 Ohio, 12 (1839).

[4] Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow. 747 (1825).

[5] [San Francisco v. Navigation Co., 10 Cal. 507 (1858), cases

CODE.[1] A reduction and revision of the law and procedure of a political community, upon one or more general subjects, and the enactment of this new, systematized statement as one statute.

An enactment of a more or less complete system of law, or of procedure, or of both law and procedure, upon one or more general subjects.

Codification. The act or process of reducing all the law upon one or more general subjects to a code.

The reduction of the existing law to an orderly written system, freed from the needless technicalities, obscurities, and other defects which the experience of its administration has disclosed.[2]

Codify. To reduce to the form of a code. Uncodified: not reduced to a code.

Codifier. One who makes or assists in making a code.

"A code ought to be based upon the principle that it aims at nothing more than the reduction to a definite and systematic shape of the results obtained and sanctioned by the experience of many centuries.[3]

The codes of New York have been the most celebrated and influential in this country. In that State the work of codification began under the constitution of 1846. Commissioners reported as complete the codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure in 1850, the Political Code in 1859, the Penal Code in 1864, and the Civil Code in 1865. Each of these has since been revised. The code of Civil Procedure, with some changes, has been adopted in Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming; and the code of Criminal Procedure, in Arizona, Arkansas, California, Dakota, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. California and Dakota have also adopted the substance of the other three codes. Other States have partial revisions or consolidations sometimes called "codes." The New York codes are said to have also had an influence in framing the system adopted in England by the Judicature Act of 1873.[4]

In 1886 a codification of civil and criminal statutes was adopted in Alabama; a code of civil procedure in Connecticut; and a civil code in Virginia, taking effect January 1, 1888.

A large portion of the modern codes is but declaratory of the common law as expounded by the courts.[1]

A code is a general collection or compilation of laws by public authority; a collection and compilation of general statutes. . . The rule is, that when a statute is revised, or when one statute is framed from another, some parts being omitted, the parts so omitted are annulled. It must be presumed that the legislature has declared its entire will.[2] See REVISE.

CODICIL.[3] A supplement to a will, or an addition made by the testator, annexed to, and to be taken as part of, a testament: being for its explanation, or alteration, or to make some addition to, or else some subtraction from, the former disposition of the testator.[4]

A clause added to a will after its execution; the purpose of which usually is to alter, enlarge, or restrain the provisions of the will, or to explain, confirm, and republish it.[5]

Part of the will, to be construed with it, as one entire instrument. . . But the will is not altered by the codicil, except by express words or necessary implication. It is to be deemed altered by necessary implication where a subsequent provision is inconsistent with and repugnant to a prior provision. But where they can stand together, both shall have effect.[6]

The effect of republication of the will by the addition of a codicil is to bring both instruments to the same date.[4] See WILL, 2.

COERCION. Compulsion: constraint; duress.

Direct or positive coercion. When a person by physical force is compelled to do an act against his will.

Implied or legal coercion. When a person, under legal subjection to another, is induced to do an act involuntarily.

As free will is necessary to accountability, a person acting under coercion has no will. But the command of a superior to an inferior, of a parent to a child, of

---

[1] F. code; L. codex, a tablet, a book. Codify, codifier, and codification are pronounced cŏd'—.

[2] 3 Stephen, Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 351.

[3] Mr. Justice Stephen.

[4] See 19 Alb. Law J. 192 (1879) — David Dudley Field; 1 Kent, 475, note; Edinb. Rev., Oct., 1869; Abbott, Bouvier, Law Dicts.

[1] Cincinnati v. Morgan, 3 Wall. 293 (1865).

[2] Mobile, &c. R. Co. v. Weimer, 49 Miss. 739 (1874). See also Sedgw. Stat. 439. See generally 3 South. Law Rev., o. s., 222 (1874); 2 id., N. s., 215 (1876); 3 id. 573 (1877); 6 id. 1 (1880); 19 Am. Law Rev. 14–17 (1884); 20 id. 1–47, 315–38 (1886); 21 id. 194–209 (1887); 2 Law Q. Rev. 125 (1886); 35 Alb. Law J. 244–47, 264, 321 (1887); 36 id. 224 (1887); 37 id. 221–23 (1888); 26 Cent. Law J. 257 (1888); 22 Am. Law Rev. 1–29, 57–65 (1888); 4 Kans. Law J. 258 (1886) — Law Counselor.

[3] L. codicillus, a little book or writing.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 500. See 4 Kent, 531.

[5] Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. 375 (1831), Shaw, C. J. See Dunham v. Averill, 45 Conn. 79 (1877); Grimball v. Patton, 70 Ala. 631 (1881); Fairfax v. Brown, 60 Md. 58 (1882).

[6] Hatcher v. Hatcher, 80 Va. 173 (1885).

a master to a servant, or of a principal to his agent, does not, ordinarily, amount to coercion.

If a wife acts in company with her husband in the commission of a tort or a crime other than treason, homicide, or other heinous felony, it is presumed, at common law, that she acted under coercion and without guilty intent. But non-coercion may be proved.[1] See DURESS; WILL, 2.

COGNATI. See NATUS, Cognati.

COGNIZANCE.[2] 1. Recognition; acknowledgment.

When a defendant in replevin justifies a distress of goods in another's right as his bailiff or servant, he is said to make cognizance; that is, he acknowledges the taking, but insists that it was legal.[3] Compare AVOWRY; RECOGNIZANCE.

2. Judicial recognition; judicial power; jurisdiction.

A word of the largest import, embracing all power, authority, and jurisdiction: as in the provision that a particular court shall have full cognizance of capital crimes.[4]

COGNOVIT. L. He has confessed or acknowledged it.

Cognovit actionem. He has confessed the action. Sometimes called a cognovit.

An acknowledgment by a defendant that an action brought against him is rightly brought, and that the sum named is due to the plaintiff.[5]

An unsealed confession of judgment given to the plaintiff after suit is brought. A warrant of attorney is under seal and given before suit is entered.[6] See ATTORNEY, Warrant of.

COHABIT.[7] 1. The primary meaning is to dwell with some one, not merely to visit or to see that one.[8]

In criminal statutes, to live together as husband and wife.

As, in the act of Congress of March 22, 1882, c. 47, forbidding polygamy.[9]

To live together in the same house as married persons live together, or in the manner of husband and wife.[1]

2. In a popular sense, sometimes found in statutes and decisions, includes the idea of occupying the same bed, and sexual intercourse.[2]

Cohabitation. As a fact presumptive of marriage, not a sojourn, nor a habit of visiting, nor even a remaining with for a time. . . Neither cohabitation nor reputation of marriage, nor both, is marriage. Conjoined, they are evidence from which a presumption of marriage arises. The legal idea of cohabitation is that which carries with it a natural belief that it results from marriage only. To cohabit is to live or dwell together, to have the same habitation; so that where one lives and dwells there the other always lives and dwells. The Scotch expression, "the habit and repute" of marriage, conveys the true idea better, perhaps, than our own. When we see a man and a woman constantly dwelling together, we obtain the first idea in the presumption of marriage; and when we add to this that the parties thus constantly living together are reputed to be man and wife, and so taken and received by all who know them both, we take the second step in the presumption of the fact of a marriage. Marriage is the cause, these follow as the effect. . . An inconstant habitation and a divided reputation of marriage carry with them no full belief of an antecedent marriage as the cause. Irregularity in these elements of evidence is at once a reason to think that there is irregularity in the life itself which the parties lead: unless attended by independent facts, which aid in the proof of marriage. Without concomitant facts to prove marriage, such an irregular cohabitation and partial reputation of marriage avail nothing in the proof of marriage.[3]

See CONDONATION; DESERTION, 1; LASCIVIOUS; MARRIAGE; REPUTED.

COIN. A piece of metal stamped and made legally current as money.[4]

"Coin" and "coinage" apply to the stamping of metal in some way so as to give them currency.[5]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 28-29; State v. Shee, 13 R. I. 536 (1882), cases; State v. Boyle, ib. 588 (1882); 51 Me. 308; 97 Mass. 547; 106 id. 71; 65 N. C. 398; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 28; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1256; 1 B. & H. Ld. Cr. Cas. 76-87, cases; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 99-110.

[2] Kŏg'-ni-, or kŏn'-i-zans. F. cognoissance, knowledge: L. cognoscere, to know,— Skeat. Also cognisance, and, formerly, conusance.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 150.

[4] Webster v. Commonwealth, 5 Cush. 400 (1850), Shaw, C. J. See also 68 N. Y. 101; 2 Bl. Com. 38; 3 id. 86, 298; 4 id. 278.

[5] Smith, Contracts, 280.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 397.

[7] L. con, with; habitare, to have often, i. e., abide with,— 54 Me. 366.

[8] [Calef v. Calef, 54 Me. 366 (1867), Appleton, C. J.

[9] Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55, 74-75 (1885).

[1] Jones v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 20 (1885), Fauntleroy, J.

[2] See 1 Bishop, Mar. & D. § 777, note, cases; 116 U. S. 75; 4 Paige, 425. As a married right, 19 Cent. Law J. 142 (1884), cases.

[3] Yardley's Estate, 75 Pa. 211 (1874), Agnew, C. J. See also Brinckle v. Brinckle, 84 Leg. Int. 428 (1877); Hynes v. McDermott, 91 N. Y. 459-62 (1883), cases; Teter v. Teter, 88 Ind. 498 (1883), cases; Appeal of Reading Fire Ins. & Trust Co., 113 Pa. 208 (1886), cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 84-85, cases.

[4] United States v. Bogart, 9 Bened. 315 (1878), Wallace, J.; 5 Phila. 403; 16 Gray, 240.

[5] Meyer v. Roosevelt, 25 How. Pr. 105 (1863).

Coin."[1] "No State shall . . ,coin Money" or "make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts."[2] See TENDER, 2 (2), Legal Tender Acts.

The gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece, which, at the standard weight of twenty-five and eight-tenth grains, shall be the unit of value; a quarter-eagle, or two and a half dollar piece; a three-dollar piece; a half-eagle, or five-dollar piece; an eagle, or ten-dollar piece; and a double eagle, or twenty-dollar piece.

The silver coins shall be [a trade-dollar,][3] a half-dollar or fifty-cent piece, a quarter-dollar or twenty-five-cent piece, a dime or ten-cent piece. The weight of [the trade-dollar shall be four hundred and twenty grains troy; the weight of] the half-dollar, twelve grams and one-half of a gram; the quarter-dollar and the dime, respectively, one-half and one-fifth of the weight of said half-dollar.

The standard of both gold and silver coins shall be such that of one thousand parts by weight nine hundred shall be pure metal and one hundred of alloy. The alloy of the silver coins shall be of copper. The alloy of the gold coins shall be of copper, or of copper and silver; but the silver shall in no case exceed one-tenth of the whole alloy.

The minor coins shall be a five-cent piece, a three-cent piece, and a one-cent piece; and their weight, respectively, seventy-seven and sixteen-hundredths grains troy, thirty grains, and forty-eight grains. The alloy of the five and three cent pieces shall be of copper and nickel, three-fourths to one-fourth; the alloy of the one-cent piece, ninety-five per centum of copper and five per centum of tin and zinc.

Any gold coins in the treasury, when reduced in weight by natural abrasion more than one-half of one per centum below the standard weight, shall be recoined.[4]

There shall be coined silver dollars of the weight of four hundred and twelve and a half grains troy of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837 (5 St. L. 137).[5]

Foreign coins. The value of foreign coins as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated annually by the director of the mint, and be proclaimed on the first day of January by the secretary of the treasury.[6]

The valuation thus made is conclusive upon custom-house officers and importers.[7]

All foreign gold and silver coins received in payment for moneys due to the United States shall, before being issued in circulation, be coined anew.[1]

See ATTACHMENT, Execution; CURRENT, 2; MONEY.

COLD. See COOLING.

COLLATERAL.[2] Does not depart from its non-legal, popular signification.

1. Applied to a person or personal relation — that which is by the side, and not in the direct line: as collateral or a collateral — ancestor, charge, consanguinity, descent, heir, inheritance, kindred, kinsmen, relatives, qq. v.

2. Said of a right or a thing — depending upon another as the more important; additional to some other as principal: as collateral or a collateral — assurance, covenant, deed, estoppel, fact, issue, limitation, obligation, promise, security, undertaking, warranty, qq. v.

Collaterally attack or impeach. To question the validity of a thing done in court, in an independent proceeding:[3] as to collaterally attack a judgment or a judicial sale, qq. v.

Not permitted, except for fraud, of a matter regularly adjudicated by proper authority. See ADJUDICATION, Former.

Collaterals. 1. Collateral kinsmen. 2. Collateral securities, q. v.

COLLEAGUE. See ASSOCIATE, Counsel, Judge.

COLLECT. To gather together: to bring into the custody of one person.

1. To gather the assets of a decedent's estate: as for one to collect the goods of the estate for safe-keeping, until a will is proven and an executor qualified, or an administrator appointed.[4]

2. To receive or obtain money.

Collector. (1) A public officer charged with the duty of exacting and receiving payment of moneys due the government, as of taxes, or of customs or revenue duties. See DUTY, 2.

(2) A private person employed to demand and receive payment of money; a collecting agent, q. v.

Collection. The act or fact of claiming and receiving payment of money.

In New York, a guaranty of the collection of a demand, or that it may be collected, or is collectible,

[1] Constitution, Art. I, § 8, cl. 5.

[2] Ibid. § 10, cl. 1. See generally Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 247-54 (1868), Chase, C. J.

[3] Act 3 March, 1887 (24 St. L. 634), provides for the exchange and retirement of the trade-dollar.

[4] R. S. §§ 3511-15.

[5] 1 Sup. R. S. p. 306: Act 28 Feb., 1878.

[6] Act 3 March, 1873: R. S. § 3564.

[7] Arthur, Collector v. Richards, 23 Wall. 246 (1874); Cramer v. Arthur, 102 U. S. 612 (1880); Hadden v. Merritt, 115 id. 25 (1885).

[1] Act 9 Feb., 1793: R. S. § 3566.

[2] L. collateralis, side by side: con, by; latus, side.

[3] See generally 25 Cent. Law J. 387 (1887), cases.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 510.

means that payment can be obtained either by demand or by resort to the proper legal remedy.[1] See RECOVER.

Collect on delivery. The initials C. O. D. mean collect on delivery, that is, deliver upon payment of the charges due to the seller for the price and to the carrier for the carriage of the goods. The initials have acquired a fixed meaning which the courts and juries may recognize from their general information.[2]

The contract of the carrier is not only for the safe carriage and delivery of the goods to the consignee, but also that he will collect the price and the charges due thereon, and return the price to the consignor. Should the goods be destroyed by any other agency than an act of God or of a public enemy, the carrier is liable, as in other cases.[3] See CARRIER, Common.

Collecting agent or agency. A collection to be made by a collecting agent imports an undertaking by such agent himself; not that he receives a claim for transmission to another for collection, for whose negligence he is not to be responsible.[4]

For collection. Indorsed on negotiable paper, restrains negotiability. The indorser may prove that he was not the owner and did not mean to give title to it or to its proceeds when collected. Such indorsement is not intended to give currency or circulation to the paper; its effect is limited to an authority to collect.[5]

There is a marked difference of opinion, expressed in the adjudged cases, respecting the liability of a collecting banker for the manner in which the notary, to whom notes are delivered for presentment and protest, discharges his duty. . . The supreme court of New York, in Allen v. Merchants' Bank of New York,[6] said that "a note or bill of exchange left at a bank and received for the purpose of being sent to a distant place for collection, would seem to imply, upon a reasonable construction, no other agreement than that it should be forwarded with due diligence to a competent agent to do what should be necessary in the premises. The person leaving the note is aware that the bank cannot personally attend to the collection, and that it must therefore be sent to some distant or foreign agent," and that there was nothing which could imply an assumption for the fidelity of the agent. The case being carried to the court of errors, the foregoing decision was reversed, and the doctrine declared that the bank was responsible for all subsequent agents employed in the collection of the paper.[1] The reversal was by a vote of fourteen senators against ten. The decision has since been followed in New York, and its doctrine adopted in Ohio. But in the courts of other States it has been generally rejected and the views expressed by the supreme court approved. In Dorchester and Milton Bank v. New England Bank it was held by the supreme court of Massachusetts that when notes or bills, payable at a distant place, are received by a bank for collection, without specific instructions, it is bound to transmit them to a suitable agent at the place of payment, for that purpose; and that when a suitable sub-agent is thus employed, in good faith, the collecting bank is not liable for his neglect or default.[8]

In the supreme courts of Connecticut, Maryland, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Mississippi, the doctrine of the supreme courts of New York and Massachusetts, in the cases cited, has been approved and followed.[9]

The indorsement upon a check "For collection; pay to the order of A," is notice to purchasers that the indorser is entitled to the proceeds.[3]

Whether a stipulation in a note for the payment of the expenses of collection is enforceable under statutes allowing costs or statutes against usury, or whether such stipulation renders the instrument so uncertain as to destroy its negotiable quality, are questions not uniformly settled.[4]

COLLEGE.[5] 1. In the civil law, corporations were called collegia, from the idea of individuals being gathered together.[6]

Tres faciunt collegium: three form a corporation.[6]

2. An organized assembly.

[1] See Moakley v. Riggs, 19 Johns. 70 (1821); Taylor v. Bullen, 6 Cow. 626 (1827); Cumpston v. McNair, 1 Wend. 469 (1828); Backus v. Shipherd, 11 Wend. 634 (1834); Loveland v. Shepard, 2 Hill, 139 (1841).

[2] State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 73 Me. 279 (1882), Peters, J. See also United States Express Co. v. Keifer, 59 Ind. 267 (1877); American Express Co. v. Leesm, 30 Ill. 333 (1866).

[3] See Pilgreen v. State, 71 Ala. 368 (1882); The Illinois, 2 Flip. 430 (1879); Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252, 254 (1878); Wagner v. Hallack, 3 Col. 184 (1877); Gibson v. American Express Co., 1 Hun, 339 (1874); Baker v. Boucicault, 1 Daly, 26–27 (1860); cases supra.

[4] Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 310–15 (1875), cases: Hunt, Field, Swayne, Davis, Strong, JJ., and Waite, C. J., concurring; Miller, Clifford, and Bradley, JJ., dissenting.

[5] Sweeney v. Easter, 1 Wall. 173–74 (1863), cases.

[6] 15 Wend. 487 (1836), cases.

[1] 22 Wend. 227–44 (1839), cases.

[8] Britton v. Niccolls, 104 U. S. 761–63 (1881), Field, J. See also First Nat. Bank of Lynn v. Smith, 132 Mass. 227 (1882); Exchange Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 381–93 (1884), cases; Central R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Lynchburg, 73 Ga. 383 (1884); Bank of Sherman v. Weiss, 67 Tex. 333–35 (1887), cases. The bank is liable for misappropriation by the agent; Power v. First Nat. Bank of Ft. Benton, 6 Monta. 251 (1887), cases: 35 Alb. Law J. 185–90, cases contra. See 18 Cent. Law J 165–70 (1884), cases; 20 Am. Law Rev. 889–901 (1886), cases.

[9] Bank of the Metropolis v. First Nat. Bank of Jersey City, 19 F. R. 302 (1884), cases.

[4] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Sevier, 14 F. R. 668, 667–75 (1882), cases.

[5] L. con-ligere, to bring together, assemble.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 469.

Electoral college. The body of electors chosen by the people, in pursuance of the XIIth Amendment, to elect a President and a Vice-President of the United States.[1] See ELECTORAL.

3. Referring to an institution of learning, may more naturally apply to the place where a collection of students is contemplated than to the hall or building intended for their accommodation.[2]

In a statute exempting colleges and academies from taxation, means a seminary of learning: not the assemblage of the professors and students, nor the trustees in their corporate capacity, but certain property belonging to them, with the edifices and the lands whereon the same are erected.[3] See ABODE; CHARITY, 2; ENDOWMENT, 2; MEDICAL; PERMANENT; SCHOOL, Public.

COLLISION.[4] A striking together or impact of two bodies — vehicles or vessels, more commonly the latter.

Includes "allision" — when a stationary body is struck by a moving body; also, injuries from one thing being rubbed or pressed against another — as one vessel lying alongside of another.[5]

1. As to collisions between vehicles, see ACCIDENT; CARRIER, Common; NEGLIGENCE; ROAD, 1, Law of.

2. A vessel engaged in commerce is liable for damage occasioned by a collision, on account of the complicity, direct or indirect, of the owner, or the negligence or want of care or skill of the navigator. The reason is, the owner employs the master and the crew. Any fault is imputed to him, and his vessel is liable. Otherwise when the person in fault does not stand in the relation of agent to the owner.[6]

Where neither vessel is in fault, a loss rests where it falls; where both vessels are in fault, the damages are proportioned equally; where one vessel alone is in fault, it pays all damages. When both vessels are in fault, an innocent person, as, a shipper or consignee, who is injured, may recover of either vessel or of its owner all the loss, and may pursue his remedy at common law, or in admiralty by proceedings in rem or in personam.[7] For suits in personam, the United States courts, as courts of admiralty, have not exclusive jurisdiction, the right to any common-law remedy being expressly saved by statute (R. S. § 563).[1]

Under the act of March 3, 1851 (R. S. §§ 4283–87), the owner is entitled to a limitation of liability to the value of his interest in the ship and in her earned freight, at the termination of the voyage,—which may be by loss of the ship at sea. The subsequent repair of a wrecked vessel, giving her increased value, is not an element; nor is any insurance had on the vessel: that being a collateral and personal interest. And the right to proceed for a limitation of liability is not lost by a surrender of the vessel to the underwriters.[2]

The limitation may be claimed by way of defense, or by surrendering the ship or by paying her value into court. The latter method is necessary when the owner desires to bring all claimants into concourse for distribution.[3]

Where both vessels are in fault, the one that suffers least is decreed to pay the other the amount necessary to make them equal; that is, one-half the difference between the respective losses.[4] The decree should be, not in solido for all damages and costs, but severally against each vessel for one-half thereof, any balance unrecovered from one to be paid by the other vessel, and to the extent of her stipulated value beyond the moiety due from her.[5]

Where the collision is between foreign vessels on the high seas, the Federal courts have jurisdiction, the first court that obtains it exercising it under the general maritime law as understood in the courts of the country.[6]

See further ACCIDENT, Inevitable; ACTOR, 1, Sequitur; ADMIRALTY; LIBEL, 4; RES; RESTITUTIO; TUG.

COLLOQUIUM. L. A speaking together: a conversation.

An averment, in an action for slander, that the defendant spoke the words in a certain conversation (in quodam colloquio) he had with another person, concerning the plaintiff.

When the words are actionable in themselves, a colloquium, averring a speaking of and concerning the plaintiff, is sufficient. When the words have a slanderous meaning, not of their own intrinsic force, but by reason of the existence of some extraneous

---

[1] See 2 Story, Const. §§ 1438–74; 15 Alb. Law J. 220 (1877).

[2] [Stanwood v. Peirce, 7 Mass. 460 (1811), Parsons, C. J.

[3] [State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 498 (1854), Haines, J.,—Case of the College of New Jersey.

[4] L. collidere, to strike together.

[5] See The Moxey, 1 Abb. Adm. 73 (1847); Wright v. Brown, 4 Ind. 96 (1853); The City of Baltimore, 5 Bened. 474 (1872).

[6] Sturgis v. Boyer, 24 How. 123 (1860), Clifford, J.; The Clarita, 23 Wall. 11 (1874).

[7] Union Steamship Co. v. N. Y. & Va. Steamship Co., 24 How. 313 (1860), Clifford, J.; The Continental, 14 Wall. 355 (1871); The Atlas, 93 U. S. 302 (1876); The Juniata, ib. 337 (1876); Vanderbilt v. Reynolds, 16 Blatch. 84–91 (1879), cases; The Clara, 102 U. S. 203 (1880), cases; The Benefactor, ib. 214 (1880).

[1] Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118 (1880), cases.

[2] The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 469, 489–506 (1886), Bradley, J.: Waite, C. J., Field, Woods, and Blatchford, JJ., concurring; Matthews, Miller, Harlan, and Gray, JJ., dissenting — ib. pp. 526–41. The other cases, The Scotland, ib. 507, and The Great Western, ib. 520, being considered in the same connection.

[3] The Great Western, 118 U. S. 520 (1886). See also Norwich Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. 104, 116–26 (1871), cases; The Benefactor, 103 U. S. 246 (1880).

[4] The North Star, 106 U. S. 20, 17–22 (1882), cases, Bradley, J. See, as to dividing the loss, 2 Law Q. Rev. 357–63 (1886).

[5] The Stirling, 106 U. S. 647 (1882), cases, Waite, C. J.

[6] The Belgenland, 104 U. S. 355, 361 (1885), cases.

fact, this fact must first be averred as inducement, and then there must be a colloquium, averring a speaking of or concerning the plaintiff. Lastly, the word "meaning," or innuendo, is used to connect the matters thus introduced with the particular words laid, showing their identity, and drawing what is the legal inference from the whole declaration that such was, under the circumstances thus set out, the meaning of the words.[1] See INNUENDO; SLANDER.

COLLUSION.[2] An agreement between persons to defraud another of his rights by the forms of law or to obtain an object forbidden by law.[3] Whence collusive. See FRAUD.

COLONIES. See INDEPENDENCE; LAW, Common; RELIGION; STATE, 2 (2, b); TAX, 2; WRECK.

COLOR. 1. Darkness of skin from presence of African blood.

The phrase "persons of color" embraces, universally, not only all persons descended wholly from African ancestors, but also those who have descended in part only from such ancestors, and have a distinct admixture of African blood.[4]

"Colored" race means "African" race.[5]

In 1866, in Virginia, "colored person" was substituted for "negro," which word before that time included "negro" and "mulatto." The act of February 27, 1866, like the Code of 1849, provided that "every person having one-fourth or more negro blood shall be deemed" a colored person.[6] See CITIZEN; SCHOOL, Separate; WHITE.

2. Appearance; apparent reality, validity, or legality; also, pretense.

Colorable. Existing in aspect merely; not real: as, a colorable abridgment or alteration of a copyrighted production, imitation of a trade-mark, assignment, claim or defense, change of possession, title, qq. v.

Colorless. Without intimation as to motive or preference.

Colorless will. A will characterized by a general intent to effect a stated disposition of property, without intimation as to the motives for making the several gifts, or without indication of preference for any beneficiary, class, or object.

Where a general and a particular intent are expressed, the latter, in a case of doubt as to the testator's meaning, is made to yield to the former.[1] See CY PRES; WILL, 2.

Color of law. Pretense or semblance of legal right or authority.[2] See EXTORTION.

Color of office. Pretense or semblance of official right to do an act by one who has no right; pretended authority of office. See further OFFICER, De facto; OFFICIUM, Colore.

Color of title. That which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title.[3]

The resemblance or appearance of title. Whenever an instrument, by apt words of transfer from grantor to grantee, in form passes what purports to be the title, it gives color of title.[4]

May be made through a conveyance, a bond, a contract, or bare possession under a parol agreement. Whether the title be weak or strong is of no importance. What is color of title is a matter of law for the court. If good faith be a necessary element in the claim, that is for a jury. . . . A claim under a conveyance, however inadequate to carry the true title, and however incompetent the grantor, is such a claim under color of title, and one which will draw to the possession of the grantee the protection of the statute of limitations, other requisites of the statutes being complied with.[5] See POSSESSION, Adverse. Compare CLOUD, On title.

Give color. To admit the appearance of right in favor of an adverse party.

"In trespass, if the defendant desires to refer the validity of his title to the court, he may state his title specially, and at the same time 'give color' to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which a jury are not competent to judge."[6]

"Giving color" is a phrase borrowed from the ancient rhetoricians. In pleading it signifies an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rule that every pleading in confession and avoidance must give color is, that it must admit an apparent right in the opposite party, and rely, therefore, on some new matter by which that apparent right is defeated. . . . The kind of color which is naturally

[1] Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. 6 (1834), Shaw, C. J. See also 23 Pa. 89; 53 id. 421; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 417.

[2] L. colludere, to co-act in a fraud: con-ludere, to play together.

[3] See Baldwin v. Mayor of New York, 45 Barb. 369 (1866): s. c. 30 How. Pr. 30, quoting Bouvier and others.

[4] Johnson v. Town of Norwich, 29 Conn. 408 (1861), Storrs, C. J. See also Van Camp v. Board of Education, 9 Ohio St. 411 (1859); 9 Ired. L. 384; 31 Tex. 67.

[5] Clark v. Directors of Muscatine, 24 Iowa, 275 (1868); People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399–404 (1854); 37 Miss. 209.

[6] Jones v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 542–44 (1885).

[1] See Schouler, Wills, § 476, cases; 1 Redf. Wills, *433, cases.

[2] See United States v. Deaver, 14 F. R. 599 (1882).

[3] Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 56–59 (1855), cases.

[4] Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 466 (1880), Field, J.

[5] Wright v. Mattison, supra. See also 26 Am. Law Reg. 409–19 (1887), cases; 4 Saw. 529; 4 Dill. 555–56; 10 F. R. 536; 33 Cal. 676; 33 Ga. 242; 66 id. 170; 93 Ill. 510; 69 id. 140; 30 Iowa, 486; 33 Md. 358; 27 Minn. 69–63; 79 N. C. 491; 38 Vt. 345; 6 Wis. 536.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 309.

latent in the structure of all regular pleadings in confession and avoidance is "implied color," to distinguish it from the kind which, in instances, is formally inserted in the pleading, and known as "express color." To the latter, the term usually applies.[1]

Colore officii. By color of office. See COLOR, 2, Of office.

COLT. See HORSE.

COLUMBIA. See COURTS, United States; DISTRICT, Of Columbia.

COM. See CUM.

COMBAT. A combat in which both parties enter willingly is "mutual."

A person who enters into a combat armed with a concealed deadly weapon may use it to protect his life, if his adversary, who struck the first blow, resorts to such a weapon; and he will not be guilty of assault with intent to murder unless he intended from the first to use the weapon if necessary to overcome his antagonist.[2] See FIGHT.

COMBINATION. 1. In the law of patents, the union of different elements.

A combination is patentable only when the several elements of which it is composed produce by their joint action a new and useful result, or an old result in a cheaper or otherwise more advantageous way.[3]

Limitations and provisos imposed by the inventor will be construed strictly against him, as in the nature of disclaimers.[4]

A combination may be infringed when some of its elements are employed and for others are used mechanical equivalents known to be such when the patent was granted.[5]

See further NOVELTY; EQUIVALENT, 2; PATENT, 2.

2. In penal and criminal laws (as in a statute providing that one common carrier may not combine with another for any purpose), a coalition, union, mutual agreement, or other blending, for any purpose whatever; as, for creating a monopoly.[6]

A combination between the manufacturers of a patented article (a balance shade-roller), intended not to restrict production but simply to maintain a fair and uniform price, and to prevent the injurious effects to producers and consumers of fluctuating prices caused by undue competition, is not in restraint of trade or against public policy.[1]

A combination is criminal whenever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public or to oppress individuals by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates, and giving effect to the purposes of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief.[2]

The gist of the offense is the conspiracy. If the motives of the confederates be to oppress, or the means unlawful, or the consequences to others injurious, it is a conspiracy. Thus, a confederation to raise or depress the price of stocks, labor, merchandise, or the natural products, is a conspiracy.[3]

A confederation or conspiracy by an associated body of ship-owners, which is calculated to have and has the effect of driving the ships of other persons, and those of the plaintiff in particular, out of a certain line of trade,— even though the immediate object be not to injure the plaintiff but to secure to the conspirators a monopoly of the carrying trade between certain ports,— is, or may be, indictable, and therefore actionable, if private and particular damage can be shown. To warrant the court in granting an interim injunction he who complains must show that he has or will sustain "irreparable damage," that is, damage for which he cannot obtain adequate compensation without the special interference of the court.[4]

"If a large number of men, engaged for a certain time, should combine together to violate their contract, and quit their employment together, . . it would surely be a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, though of such a character that, if done by an individual, it would lay the foundation of a civil action only, and not of a criminal prosecution."[5]

See BOYCOTTING; CONSPIRACY; STRIKE, 2; TRADE, Restraints; TRADES-UNIONS.

COME. See APPEARANCE, 8; RESIDE; VENIRE.

COMES. L. See CONSTABLE; COUNTY.

COMFORT. Whatever is necessary to give security from want, and furnish reasonable physical, mental, and spiritual enjoyment.

So held where an executor was directed to pay the testator's widow as much of a certain fund as is "necessary for her comfort."[6] See AID, 1.

---

[1] Stephen Plead., Tyl. ed., 206, 210. See Gould, Pl. 222; 2 Chitty, Pl. 555.

[2] Aldrige v. State, 59 Miss. 255 (1881), Chalmers, C. J.

[3] Stephenson v. Brooklyn R. Co., 114 U. S. 157 (1885); Thatcher Heating Co. v. Burtis, 121 id. 286, 295 (1887), cases.

[4] Sargent v. Hall Safe and Lock Co., 114 U. S. 86 (1885), cases.

[5] Rowell v. Lindsay, 113 U. S. 102 (1885), cases. See also Booth v. Parks, 1 Flip. 381 (1884), cases; Hill v. Sawyer, 31 F. R. 282 (1887), cases; 20 Wall. 368; 92 U. S. 357; 109 id. 420; 111 id. 103; 17 F. R. 80, cases; 19 id. 509, cases.

[6] Watson v. Harlem, &c. Navigation Co., 52 How. Pr. 353 (1877).

[1] Central Shade-Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 364 (1877); Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346 (1875). See generally as to combinations for stifling competition, 20 Am. Law Rev. 195–216 (1886), cases.

[2] Commonwealth v. Carlisle, Brightly's Rep. 40 (Pa., 1821), Gibson, J. See Commonwealth v. Gallagher, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 64 (1844).

[3] Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, 186–88 (1871), cases. See also Vanarsdale v. Laverty, 69 id. 103, 108 (1871)— an agreement not to employ one as a teacher.

[4] Mogul Steamship Co. v. M'Gregor, Gow & Co., L. R., 15 Q. B. D. 476, 482 (1885), Coleridge, C. J.

[5] Commonwealth v. Hunt et al., 4 Metc. 131 (1842), Shaw, C. J.

[6] Forman v. Whitney, 2 Keyes, 168 (1865)

COMITATUS. See COUNTY, Power of.

COMITY.[1] Courtesy: deference, from good feeling or feeling of equality.

Comity of nations, or between States. Expresses the basis upon which one independent sovereignty applies within its own territory the laws of another sovereignty, in a matter as to which the latter or its citizen is concerned.[2]

Upon this basis rest observances under extradition treaties, q. v. And some adjudications upon the estates of decedents and insolvents are respected, between the States, to the extent that reciprocity obtains.

Comity obtains to permit the corporations of one State to pursue a lawful business in another State.[3]

Judicial comity. The respect which tribunals of independent jurisdictions entertain for the decisions of each other, in the determination of questions involving reference to extra-territorial law.

The Federal courts adopt the construction given to a State's constitution or statutes by the courts of that State, whatever the opinion as to their soundness, except where the highest State court has given different constructions, and rights have been acquired under the earlier construction; in which case they follow the latter;[4] except, also, in interpreting a contract between States, whether the contract is in the shape of a law or of a covenant by State agents;[5] and except in cases where the Constitution, a treaty, or a statute of the United States, provides otherwise.[6] They give a change in construction the same effect in its operation upon existing contract rights that they give to a legislative amendment — they make it prospective.[7] But they are not bound by decisions upon commercial law.[8]

Where the law of a State is not settled, it is the right and the duty of the Federal courts to exercise their own judgment; as they always do in reference to the doctrines of commercial law and general jurisprudence. So, when contracts have been entered into, and rights have accrued thereon under a particular state of the decisions, or where there has been no decision, of the State tribunals, the Federal courts claim the right to adopt their own interpretation of the law applicable to the case, although a different interpretation may be adopted by the State courts after such rights have accrued. But even in such cases, for the sake of harmony and to avoid confusion, the Federal courts will lean to an agreement of views with the State courts if the question seems to them balanced with doubt. As, however, the object of giving to the National courts jurisdiction to administer the laws of the States in controversies between citizens of different States was to institute independent tribunals which it might be supposed would be unaffected by local prejudices, it is their duty to exercise an independent judgment in cases not foreclosed by previous adjudication.[1]

COMMAND. See MANDATE; PROHIBERE; RATIHABITIO.

COMMENCE. In several uses has a somewhat technical import:

Commencement of a building. Work done on the ground the effect of which is apparent. See further BUILDING.

Commencement of an action, prosecution, or suit. Such inception of judicial proceedings as affects the several defendants; as saves the cause from the bar of the statute of limitations, q. v.; or as assures the jurisdiction, when collaterally questioned.

In civil actions, at common law, suing out or issuing the writ "commences" an action; in equity practice, filing the bill, or, perhaps, issuing and endeavoring to serve the subpœna; under codes of procedure, service or publication of the summons.[2] See BROUGHT.

Before an action can be commenced, the cause of action must be complete, — the day for payment must have passed, a precedent condition must have been performed; the plaintiff must have the necessary privity, and as against the particular defendant; in the case of a tort there must be a legal injury (q. v.), and, possibly, the act must not amount to an untried felony; where there is a breach of a public duty, particular damage must have resulted to the plaintiff.[3]

Commencement of an indictment. The most common form (derived from England) is "The jurors of the people of the State of ——, in and for the body of the county of ——, upon their oath present," etc.[4] Compare CAPTION, 2.

---

[1] L. comitas, urbanity: comis, friendly.

[2] See Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 23, 33-38.

[3] Cowell v. Saratoga Springs Co., 100 U. S. 59 (1879); Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Alabama, 107 id. 581, 585 (1882), cases.

[4] Fairfield v. County of Gallatin, 100 U. S. 52 (1879), cases; Caroll County v. Smith, 111 id. 563 (1884), cases.

[5] Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436 (1861); Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 793 (1879).

[6] Oates v. Nat. Bank of Montgomery, 100 U. S. 246 (1879), cases.

[7] Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676 (1879); Douglass v. County of Pike, 101 id. 687 (1879).

[1] Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 33-34 (1882), cases, Bradley, J. See also Pana v. Bowler, ib. 541 (1882), cases; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 id. 439 (1886).

[2] See generally 26 Cent. Law J. 31-33 (1888), cases; 2 McCrary, 189; 4 Woods, 108; 11 F. R. 217; 17 ia. 475; 10 Ark. 120, 479; 19 Cal. 557; 21 id. 351; 45 id. 125; 30 Ga. 873; 1 Ind. 276; 11 id. 48, 354; 8 Iowa, 309; 9 id. 178; 10 id. 308, 418; 16 id. 59; 3 A. K. Marsh. 18; 5 Bush, 435; 15 Mass. 455; 7 Me. 370; 33 Mich. 112; 42 Miss. 241; 36 id. 40; 5 N. H. 225; 47 id. 24; 37 N. Y. 122; 10 Barb. 318; 6 Cow. 471, 519; 17 Johns. 65; 36 Pa. 474; 24 id. 124; 15 id. 233; 1 R. I. 17; 11 Humph. 303; 10 Tex. 155; 28 id. 713; 30 id. 494; 42 Vt. 552; 55 id. 355; 6 W. Va. 336.

[3] See 21 Cent. Law J. 401-12 (1885), cases.

[4] People v. Pennett, 37 N. Y. 122 (1867).

COMMENDATIO. L. Commending; recommending.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A mere recommendation does not bind: the expression of an opinion does not constitute a warranty. Abridged, Simplex commendatio.

A false assertion of value, when no warranty is intended, is not a ground of relief to a purchaser: the assertion is a matter of opinion, which does not imply knowledge, and in which men may differ. Every person reposes at his peril in the opinion of others, when he has equal opportunity to form and exercise his own judgment.[1]

"The law recognizes the fact that men will naturally overstate the value and qualities of the articles which they have to sell." A buyer has no right to rely upon mere "dealer's talk."[2] See CAVEAT, Emptor; WARRANTY, 2.

COMMERCE.[3] In its simplest signification, an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange, become commodities and enter into commerce.[4]

The interchange or mutual change of goods, productions, or property of any kind, between nations or individuals.[5]

"Transportation" is the means by which "commerce" is carried on.[6]

Commercial. Concerning commerce, trade, or traffic; pertaining to the customs of merchants, or to the law-merchant; mercantile: as, commercial or a commercial — broker, corporation, domicil, law, paper, regulation, term, qq. v.

Commercial law is not peculiar to one State nor dependent upon local authority, but arises out of the usages of the commercial world. The Federal courts are not controlled by the decisions of the courts of a State upon matters of commercial law.[7]

Mercantile law is a system of jurisprudence acknowledged by all commercial nations. Upon no subject is it of more importance that there should be, as far as practicable, uniformity of decision throughout the world.[1] See NEGOTIABLE.

Commercial agency. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2.

Commercial traveler. See below, and DRUMMER; MERCHANT.

In some connections "commerce" relates to dealings with foreign nations; "trade," to mutual traffic among ourselves, or to the buying, selling, or exchange of articles among members of the same community.[2]

The application of the term commerce is generally discussed with reference to the provision (called the commerce or commercial clause of the Constitution) that "The Congress shall have Power . . . To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes."[3]

By force of this provision, the subject, the vehicle, the agent, and their various operations, become the objects of commercial regulation by Congress.[4, 5]

Commerce is more than traffic. It embraces, also, transportation by land and water, and all the means and appliances necessarily employed in carrying them on.[6]

A term of the widest import, comprehending intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities.[7]

Commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations, in all its branches.[8]

"To regulate" this trade and intercourse is to prescribe the rules by which it shall be conducted.[9]

Commerce comprehends navigation,[4] including navigation on rivers and in ports;[9] transportation of

[1] 2 Kent, 485, cases; Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen, 214 (1861), Bigelow, C. J.; Hull v. Field, 76 Va. 605 (1882); Tenney v. Cowles, 67 Wis. 594 (1886); Dillman v. Nadlehoffer, 119 Ill. 575 (1887), cases.

[2] Kimball v. Bangs, 144 Mass. 323 (1887), Morton, C. J.; Mooney v. Miller, 102 id. 220 (1869); Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 557 (1881); Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 id. 256 (1888).

[3] L. commercium, trade: con, with; merx, goods.

[4] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 229 (1824), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[5] Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, &c. R. Co., 45 Iowa, 349 (1876), Miller, C. J. See also People v. Raymond, 34 Cal. 497 (1868).

[6] Brooklyn, &c. R. Co. v. Nat. Bank of Republic, 102 U. S. 31–32 (1880); ib. 55.

[1] Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 364 (1857); 12 Am. L. Reg. 473 (1873).

[2] People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 15 (1835), Savage, C. J. See also People v. Brooks, 4 Denio, 436 (1847); Sears v. Commissioners, 36 Ind. 270–80 (1871).

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 3.

[4] Gibbons v. Ogden, ante.

[5] Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, &c. R. Co., ante.

[6] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 568 (1873); 2 Story, Const. §§ 1061–62.

[7] Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 280, 275 (1875), Field, J.; Webber v. Virginia, 103 id. 350 (1880); Walling v. Michigan, 116 id. 454 (1886); Robbins v. Taxing District, 120 id. 497 (1887); 122 id. 358; 128 id. 129.

[8] Henderson v. Mayor of N. Y. City, 92 U. S 270 (1875), Miller, J.; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 id. 203 (1885).

[9] Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 724 (1865); South

passengers;[1] intercourse by telegraph.[2,3] But it does not concern matters of trade and traffic between citizens of the same State; as, a trade-mark or a policy of insurance.[3]

"Commerce with foreign Nations" refers to commerce between citizens of the United States and subjects of foreign countries: foreign commerce. Commerce "among (q. v.) the several States" refers to commerce between citizens of different States: domestic commerce.[3] Commerce "with the Indian Tribes" applies only to cases where the tribe is wholly within the limits of a State.[4]

Commerce being national in its operation is placed under the protecting care of the National government.[5] Commercially this is but one country, and intercourse is to be as free as due compensation to the carrier interest will allow. Local interference is forbidden.[6] The power is vested in Congress to insure uniformity of commercial regulations, where such uniformity is practicable, and as against conflicting State regulations. The non-exercise of the power is equivalent to a declaration that it shall be free from restrictions.[7]

It is not everything that affects commerce that amounts to a "regulation" of it; as, local regulations of ferries, of hackmen, millers, inn-keepers, warehousemen.[8,9]

Each State retains absolute control over its own territory, highways, bridges, corporations, etc.[9]

The powers vested in Congress keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate at all times, and under all circumstances.[9]

Commerce by water was principally in the minds of the framers of the Constitution; transportation on land being then in vehicles drawn by animals.[9]

The Constitutional provision covers property transported as an article of commerce from foreign countries, or from another State, from hostile or interfering State legislation, until mingled with part of the general property of the country, and protects it, after it has entered the State, from burdens imposed by reason of its foreign origin.[1]

In every case where a State law has been held null, it created, in the way of a tax, a license, or a condition, a direct burden upon commerce or interfered with its freedom;[2] it regulated or impeded commerce or discriminated between its own citizens and outsiders, prejudicially to the latter.

For example, a State cannot require a license to sell foreign goods remaining in the packages in which they were imported: that would operate as a tax on the goods.[2,3] Nor may it discriminate against peddlers;[4] nor against commercial travelers or drummers;[5] nor against sewing machine companies.[6] It may not tax sales of foreign liquors, unless domestic liquors are taxed in equal degree;[6] nor tax passengers, freight, or cars brought into, taken from, or carried through its borders to or from other States or countries.[7] It may not exact wharfage solely of a vessel laden with articles not products of the State; nor impose tonnage duties upon foreign vessels, to pay quarantine expenses;[8] nor collect tonnage duties of its own citizens, engaged in commerce within its own limits,[9] except as to a vessel owned by a resident of a city, for city purposes and not for the privilege of trading;[10] nor may it exact a premium for a vessel brought to its ports;[11] nor require a sum for each passenger brought from a foreign country;[12] nor extort money to prevent immigration;[13] but it may require a list of passengers, with their ages, occupations, etc.[14] What it may do to keep out paupers and convicts, in the absence of legislation by Congress, has not as yet been decided.[15]

Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 13 (1876); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 id. 348 (1887); 115 id. 203.

[1] Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow. 713 (1825); People v. Raymond, 34 Cal. 497 (1868).

[2] Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Atlantic, &c. Tel. Co., 5 Nev. 109 (1869).

[3] Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 96, 95 (1879); County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 id. 697 (1880); Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 id. 197 (1885).

[4] United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 417-18 (1865); United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 108 U. S. 494 (1883).

[5] Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 9 (1877).

[6] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 474, 472, 470 (1874).

[7] Gilman v. Philadelphia, and other cases, ante.

[8] State Tax on Railroad Receipts, 15 Wall. 293 (1872).

[9] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 135 (1876).

[1] Welton v. Missouri, and other cases, ante.

[2] Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 103 (1876).

[3] Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 436 (1827); Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566 (1878).

[4] Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418 (1870); Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 454 (1886).

[5] Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676 (1879).

[6] Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S. 123 (1880).

[7] State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 282 (1872); State Tax on Railway Receipts, ib. 284 (1872); Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203 (1885); Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 117 id. 34 (1886); Philadelphia, &c. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 id. 326, 338-46 (1887), cases, Bradley J., explaining State Tax on Railway Receipts, supra.

[8] Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. 581 (1873); Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 id. 577 (1874).

[9] State Tonnage Tax, 12 Wall. 204 (1870).

[10] The North Cape, 6 Biss. 505 (1876); Wheeling, &c. Transportation Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273 (1878).

[11] Steamship Co. v. Port-Wardens, 6 Wall. 31 (1867).

[12] Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283 (1849); People v. Compagnie Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59-60 (1882), cases; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, ib. 374-75 (1882) cases; 92 id. 266-69.

[13] Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275 (1875). But Congress may regulate it by imposing a duty to mitigate incidental evils; Head Money Cases, 112 id. 580 (1884).

[14] City of New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 102 (1837); 92 U. S. 265-69.

[15] Henderson v. Mayor of N. Y. City, 92 U. S. 260 (1875).

A State may not grant an exclusive right to maintain telegraph lines within its borders.[1] Nor may it prohibit the driving of cattle into it, during certain months.[2]

Inter-State commerce cannot be taxed at all, even though the same amount of tax should be laid on domestic commerce, or that which is carried on wholly within the State. The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another State, for the purpose of introducing them into the State in which the negotiation is made, is inter-State commerce. Therefore, a State statute imposing a license tax upon "drummers" and others selling by sample is unconstitutional as applied to citizens of other States.[3]

If the power to tax inter-State or foreign commerce exists, it has no limit but the discretion of the State, and might be exercised in such a manner as to drive away the commerce, or to load it with an intolerable burden, seriously affecting the business and prosperity of other States; and if those States, by way of retaliation, or otherwise, should impose like restrictions, the utmost confusion would prevail in our commercial affairs. This state of things actually existed under the Confederation.[4]

A statute requiring locomotive engineers to be licensed by a board of examiners, and prescribing penalties for its violation, is not unconstitutional, as a regulation of inter-State commerce, even when applied to the case of an engineer operating a locomotive attached to a train running between points in different States.[5]

Some statutes also conflict with the prohibition on the States against levying imposts or duties on imports or exports. But since this provision refers exclusively to articles brought from foreign countries, a State may tax auction sales or other property when there is no discrimination against citizens or products of another State. A purchaser of goods from abroad, which are at his risk until delivered, is not an importer, and the goods may be taxed.[6]

A State may authorize the building of bridges or dams over navigable rivers, provided they do not materially obstruct navigation.[7] See SPAN.

[1] Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 9 (1877).

[2] Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465 (1877).

[3] Robbins v. Taxing District of Shelby County, Tennessee, 120 U. S. 497 (March 7, 1887), Bradley, J.; Waite, C. J., Field, and Gray, JJ., dissenting; 121 id. 246; Exp. Asher, 22 Tex. Ap. 602 (1887): 27 Am. Law Reg. 77 (1888); ib. 89–94, cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 26 (1887).

[4] Philadelphia & Southern Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 340 (1887), Bradley, J.; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 446 (1827), Marshall, C. J.

[5] Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465 (1888), Matthews, J.; Bradley, J., dissenting. Act of Ala. 28 Feb., 1887.

[6] Waring v. Mayor of Mobile, 8 Wall. 110 (1868); Woodruff v. Parham, ib. 123 (1868); Hinson v. Lott, ib. 148 (1868).

[7] Willison v. Blackbird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245 (1829); Wheeling Bridge Case, 18 How. 421 (1855); Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 724 (1865); Escanaba, &c. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 683, 687 (1882), cases.

State legislation is not forbidden on matters either local in nature or operation, or intended to be mere aids to commerce, for which special regulations can more effectually provide; such as harbor pilotage, beacons, buoys, and navigable rivers within a State, if free navigation is not thereby impaired. With respect to all such subjects Congress, by non-action, declares that, until it deems fit to act, they may be controlled by State authority. . . The States have as full control over their purely internal commerce as Congress has over inter-State and foreign commerce. . . But as far as an exercise of the power relates to matters which are purely national in character, and require uniformity of regulation affecting all the States, the power is exclusive in Congress.[1]

It is Congress, not the judicial department, that is to regulate commerce. The courts can never take the initiative on this subject. They interpose to prevent or redress acts done or attempted under the authority of unconstitutional State laws: the non-action of Congress, in the cases, being deemed an indication of its will that no exaction or restraint shall be imposed.[2]

The power in Congress is paramount over all legislative powers which, in consequence of not having been granted to Congress, are reserved to the States. It follows that any legislation of a State, although in pursuance of an acknowledged power reserved to it, which conflicts with the actual exercise of the power of Congress over commerce, must give way before the supremacy of the national authority. As the regulation of commerce may consist in abstaining from prescribing positive rules for its conduct, it cannot always be said that the power to regulate is dormant because not affirmatively exercised. And when it is manifest that Congress intends to leave commerce free and unfettered by positive regulations, such intention would be contravened by State laws operating as regulations of commerce as much as if these had been expressly forbidden. In such cases, the existence of the power in Congress has been construed to be exclusive, withdrawing the subject as the basis of legislation altogether from the States. There are many cases, however, where the acknowledged powers of a State may be so exerted as to affect foreign or inter-State commerce without being intended to operate as commercial regulations. If such regulation conflicts with the regulation of the same subject by Congress, either as expressed in positive laws or as implied from the absence of legislation, such State legislation, to the extent of that conflict, must be regarded as annulled. To draw the line of interference between the two fields of jurisdiction, and to define and declare the instances of unconstitutional encroachment, is a judicial question often of much difficulty, the solution of which, perhaps, is not to be found in any single and exact rule of decision. Some lines of discrimination, however, have been drawn in the various decisions of the Supreme Court.[1]

[1] County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 696–99 (1880), Field, J.

[2] Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 701, 704 (1882), Bradley, J. See generally Re Watson, 16 F. R. 511, 514–31 (1882), cases; Kaeiser v. Illinois Central R. Co., 18 id. 158 (1883).

See further BONUS, 2 (1); IMMIGRATION; INDIAN; INSPECTION, 1; LIEN, Maritime; NAVIGABLE; POLICE, 2; PRIVILEGE, 2; PROHIBITION, 2; QUARANTINE, 2; REGULATE; TAX, 2; TONNAGE; WAREHOUSE; WHARFAGE.

A statute of a State, intended to regulate, to tax, or to impose any other restriction upon the transmission of persons or property or telegraphic messages from one State to another, is not within that class of legislation which the States may enact in the absence of legislation by Congress; and such statutes are void even as to that part of such continuous conveyance as is within the limits of the State.[2]

The case of The Wabash, &c. R. Co. v. Illinois, declared unconstitutional a statute of Illinois which enacted that if any railroad company within that State should charge or receive for transporting passengers or freight of the same class, the same or a greater sum for any distance, than it charged for a larger distance, it should be liable to a penalty for unjust discrimination. The defendant company discriminated against a shipper at Gilman and in favor of a shipper at Peoria, by charging more for the haul from Gilman although eighty-six miles nearer New York City, the place of unloading. This decision was followed by the act of Congress of February 4, 1887, "An act to regulate commerce," known as the Inter-State Commerce Act (24 St. L. 379), which is here reprinted entire: (as amended March 2, 1889, see ADDENDA.)

Section 1. The provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to any adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of trans-shipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one State, and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of such property, shall be reasonable and just; and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

Sec. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business.

[1] Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 473 (1888), Matthews, J. See Tests of Regulation, 1 Harv. Law Rev. 159–84 (1887), cases.

[2] Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 560–77 (Oct. 25, 1886), cases, Miller, J.; Field, Harlan, Woods, Matthews, and Blatchford, JJ., concurring; Waite, C. J., Bradley, and Gray, JJ., dissenting, pp. 577–96, opinion by Bradley, J.

In the case of The Reading Railroad Co. v. Pennsylvania, commonly called the Case of the State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232 (1872), it was held that a tax upon freight taken up within a State and carried out of it, or taken up outside of the State and brought within it, is an unlawful burden on inter-State commerce. In Fargo v. Michigan, 121 U. S. 230 (April 4, 1887), it was held that a State statute which levies a tax upon the gross receipts of railroads for the carriage of freight and passengers into, out of, or through the State, is also unconstitutional. See Reading Railroad Case explained, ib. 240, Wabash Railway Case, ib. 247, and other cases, ib. 242–46. The State may of course tax money after it has passed the stage of compensation for carrying persons or property, ib. 230. The Wabash Railway case ruled the case of The Commonwealth v. Housatonic R. Co., 143 Mass. 266 (Jan. 7, 1887).

Sec. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

Sec. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

Sec. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep for public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its railroad, as defined by the first section of this act. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force upon such railroad, and shall also state separately the terminal charges and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, of at least the size of ordinary pica, and copies for the use of the public shall be kept in every depot or station upon any such railroad, in such places and in such form that they can be conveniently inspected.

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep for public inspection, at every depot where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept for public inspection. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice; but whenever any such reduction is made, notice of the same shall immediately be publicly posted and the changes made shall immediately be made public by printing new schedules, or shall immediately be plainly indicated upon the schedules at the time in force and kept for public inspection.

And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedules of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carriers when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem it practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published; but no common carrier party to any such joint tariff shall be liable for the failure of any other common carrier party thereto to observe and adhere to the rates, fares, or charges thus made and published.

If any such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules or tariffs of rates, fares, and charges as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of said common carrier is situated or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation, in the judicial circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier, to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of transhipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act.

Sec. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination; and no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption made by such common carrier shall prevent the carriage of freights from being and being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage, or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose, and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

Sec. 8. That in case any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, such common carrier shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

Sec. 9. That any person or persons claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may either make complaint to the commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit in his or their own behalf for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this act, in any district or circuit court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person or persons shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies, and must in each case elect which one of the two methods of procedure herein provided for he or they will adopt. In any such action brought for the recovery of damages the court before which the same shall be pending may compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee, or agent of the corporation or company defendant in such suit to attend, appear, and testify in such case, and may compel the production of the books and papers of such corporation or company party to any such suit; the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Sec. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed five thousand dollars for each offense.

Sec. 11. That a commission is hereby created and established to be known as the Inter-State Commerce Commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the term of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the first day of January, A. D. 1887, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any manner pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office. Said commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

Sec. 12. That the commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and for the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Sec. 13. That any person, firm, corporation, or association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society, or any body politic, or municipal organization complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts; whereupon a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If such common carrier, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper.

Said commission shall in like manner investigate any complaint forwarded by the railroad commissioner or railroad commission of any State or Territory, at the request of such commissioner or commission, and may institute any inquiry on its own motion in the same manner and to the same effect as though complaint had been made.

No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant.

Sec. 14. That whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.

All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of.

Sec. 15. That if in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said commission it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, either by the testimony of witnesses or other evidence, that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of this act, or of any law cognizable by said commission, by any common carrier, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining, or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, together with a notice to said common carrier to cease and desist from such violation, or to make reparation for the injury so found to have been done, or both, within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission; and if, within the time specified, it shall be made to appear to the commission that such common carrier has ceased from such violation of law, and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission, and the said common carrier shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law.

Sec. 16. That whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply, in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of five hundred dollars for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining, or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of two thousand dollars or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the attorney-general of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

Sec. 17. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before said commission and be heard, in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested. Said commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations.

Sec. 18. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of three thousand five hundred dollars, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the secretary of the interior.

The commission shall be furnished by the secretary of the interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners, or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigation in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid, on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission and the secretary of the interior.

Sec. 19. That the principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, where its general sessions shall be held; but whenever the convenience of the public or of the parties may be promoted or delay or expense prevented thereby, the commission may hold special sessions in any part of the United States. It may, by one or more of the commissioners, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties, in any part of the United States, into any matter or question of fact pertaining to the business of any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act.

Sec. 20. That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises, and equipment; the number of employees and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance-sheet. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other common carriers, as the commission may require; and the said commission may, within its discretion, for the purpose of enabling it the better to carry out the purposes of this act, prescribe (if in the opinion of the commission it is practicable to prescribe such uniformity and methods of keeping accounts) a period of time within which all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall have, as near as may be, a uniform system of accounts, and the manner in which such accounts shall be kept.

Sec. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the first day of December in each year, make a report to the secretary of the interior, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports issued from the interior department. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

Sec. 22. That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employees, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employees; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act.

Sec. 23. That the sum of one hundred thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1888, and the intervening time anterior thereto.

Sec. 24. That the provisions of sections eleven and eighteen of this act, relating to the appointment and organization of the commission herein provided for, shall take effect immediately, and the remaining provisions of this act shall take effect sixty days after its passage. See ADDENDA.

March 22, 1887, President Cleveland appointed the following commissioners: Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan, for the term of six years; William R. Morrison, of Illinois, for the term of five years; Augustus Schoonmaker, of New York, for the term of four years; Aldace F. Walker, of Vermont, for the term of three years; Walter L. Bragg, of Alabama, for the term of two years. At the first meeting of the commission, March 31, Mr. Cooley was chosen chairman.[1]

April 4, 1887, in the circuit court of Oregon, in a case concerning the transportation of goods by the Oregon and California Railroad (which lies wholly within Oregon), destined for San Francisco, Judge Deady, after explaining that the act "does not include or apply to all carriers engaged in inter-State commerce, but only to such as use a railway or railway and water-craft under common control or management for a continuous carriage or shipment of property from one State to another," held that it does not "apply to the carriage of property by rail wholly within the State, although shipped from one destined to a place without the State, so that such place is not in a foreign country."[2]

June 15, 1887, the commission summarized its conclusions upon the construction to be placed upon the fourth section of the act, in the following language:

First. That the prohibition against a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, as qualified therein is limited to cases in which the circumstances and conditions are substantially similar.

Second. That the phrase "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" in the fourth section, is used in the same sense as in the second section; and under the qualified form of the prohibition in the fourth section carriers are required to judge in the first instance with regard to the similarity or dissimilarity of the circumstances and conditions that forbid or permit a greater charge for a shorter distance.

Third. That the judgment of carriers in respect to the circumstances and conditions is not final, but is subject to the authority of the commission and of the courts, to decide whether error has been committed, or whether the statute has been violated. And in case of complaint for violating the fourth section of the act the burden of proof is on the carrier to justify any departure from the general rule prescribed by the statute by showing that the circumstances and conditions are substantially dissimilar.

Fourth. That the provisions of section one requiring charges to be reasonable and just, and of section two, forbidding unjust discrimination, apply when exceptional charges are made under section four as they do in other cases.

[1] The first and the present secretary of the commission is Edward A. Moseley; and the present auditor is C. C. McCain.

[2] Exp. Koehler, 1 I. C. R. 28; 30 F. R. 867.

Fifth. That the existence of actual competition which is of controlling force, in respect to traffic important in amount, may make out the dissimilar circumstances and conditions entitling the carrier to charge less for the longer than for the shorter haul over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer in the following cases:

1. When the competition is with carriers by water which are not subject to the provisions of the statute.

2. When the competition is with foreign or other railroads which are not subject to the provisions of the statute.

3. In rare and peculiar cases of competition between railroads which are subject to the statute, when a strict application of the general rule of the statute would be destructive of legitimate competition.

Sixth. The commission further decides that when a greater charge in the aggregate is made for the transportation of passengers or the like kind of property for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer distance, it is not sufficient justification therefor that the traffic which is subjected to such greater charge is way or local traffic, and that which is given the more favorable rates is not.

Nor is it sufficient justification for such greater charge that the short-haul traffic is more expensive to the carrier, unless when the circumstances are such as to make it exceptionally expensive, or the long-haul traffic exceptionally inexpensive, the difference being extraordinary and susceptible of definite proof.

Nor that the lesser charge on the longer haul has for its motive the encouragement of manufactures or some other branch of industry.

Nor that it is designed to build up business or trade centres.

Nor that the lesser charge on the longer haul is merely a continuation of the favorable rates under which trade centres or industrial establishments have been built up.

The fact that long-haul traffic will only bear certain rates is no reason for carrying it for less than cost at the expense of other traffic.[1]

Where the conditions are dissimilar there is no prohibition; a doubt should be solved in favor of the object of the law.[2]

Railroads doing an express business are within the act; independent express companies are not.[3]

A road wholly within a State, but used as a means of conducting inter-State traffic by companies owning connecting inter-State roads, is subject to the provisions of the act.[4]

[1] Report, 1887, pp. 64, 84–85. See ib. 18–20. Re Petition of Louisville & Nashville R. Co., and others.

[2] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 31 F. R. 862 (June 21, 1887), Pardee, J.

[3] Re Express Companies, 1 I. C. R. 677–83 (Dec. 28, 1887), Walker, C. See also Report, 1887, pp. 12–14. As to sleeping and parlor car companies, and transporters of mineral oil, see ib. 15.

[4] Heck v. East Tennessee, &c. R. Cos. (Feb. 17, 1888).

The act does not embrace carriers wholly by water, though they may also be engaged in the like commerce and as such be rivals of the carriers which the act undertakes to control. Perhaps the most influential reasons for omitting them were that the evils of corporate management have not been so obvious in their case as in that of carriers by land, and their rates of transportation were so low that they were seldom complained of even when unjustly discriminating. The fact that in their competition with carriers by land they were at a disadvantage had some influence in propitiating public favor, inasmuch as they appeared to operate as obstacles to monopoly and as checks upon extortion.[1]

May 25, 1887, the following rules of practice were adopted by the commission: (See ADDENDA.)

I. When at Washington the commission will hold its general sessions at 11 o'clock A. M. daily, except Saturdays and Sundays, for the reception and hearing of petitions and complaints, and the transaction of such other business as may be brought before it. The sessions will be held at the office of the commission in the Sun Building, No. 1315 F street northwest. When special sessions are held at other places such regulations as may be necessary will be made by the commission.

II. Applications under the fourth section of the act for authority to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property must be made by petition addressed to the commission by the carrier or carriers desiring the relief. The petition must state with particularity the extent of the relief desired and the points at and between which authority is asked to charge less for longer distances; the reasons for the relief sought must also be set forth, and the facts upon which the application is founded. The petition must be verified by some officer or agent of the carrier in whose behalf it is presented, to the effect that the allegations of the petition are true to the knowledge or belief of the affiant. Notice must be published by a petitioner in not less than two newspapers along the line of the road having general circulation, for at least ten days prior to the presentation of a petition, stating briefly the nature of the relief intended to be applied for and the time when the application will be presented, and proof of each publication must be filed with the petition.

III. Upon the presentation of a petition for relief an investigation will be made by the commission at a time and place to be designated, when testimony will be received for and against the prayer of the petition. After investigation the commission will make such order as may appear to be just and appropriate upon the facts and circumstances of the case.

IV. Complaints under section 13 of the act of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act, in contravention of the provisions thereof, must be made by petition, which must briefly state the facts which are claimed to constitute a violation of the act, and must be verified by the petitioner, or by some officer or agent of the corporation, society, or other body or organization making the complaint, to the effect that the allegations of the petition are true to the knowledge or belief of the affiant.

[1] Report of 1877, pp. 11–12.

The complainant must furnish as many written or printed copies of the complaint or petition as there may be parties complained against to be served. When a complaint is made the name of the carrier complained against must be set forth in full, and the address of the petitioner and the name and address of his attorney or counsel, if any, must be indorsed upon the complaint.

The commission will cause a copy of the complaint to be served upon each common carrier complained against, by mail or personally, in its discretion, with notice to the carrier or carriers to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within the time specified.

V. A carrier complained against must answer the complaint made within twenty days from the date of the notice, unless the commission shall in particular cases prescribe a shorter time for the answer to be served, and in such cases the answer must be made within the time prescribed. The original answer must be filed with the commission, at its office in Washington, and a copy thereof must at the same time be served upon the complainant by the party answering, personally or by mail. The answer must admit or deny the material allegations of fact contained in the complaint, and may set forth any additional facts claimed to be material to the issue. The answer must be verified in the same manner as the complaint. If a carrier complained against shall make satisfaction before answering, a written acknowledgment of satisfaction must be filed with the commission, and in that case the fact of satisfaction without other matter may be set forth in the answer filed and served on the complainant. If satisfaction be made after the filing and service of an answer, a supplemental answer setting forth the fact of satisfaction may be filed and served.

VI. If a carrier complained against shall deem the complaint insufficient to show a breach of legal duty, it may, instead of filing an answer, serve on the complainant notice for a hearing of the case on the complaint, and in case of the service of such notice, the facts stated in the complaint will be taken as admitted. The filing of an answer will not be deemed an admission of the sufficiency of the complaint, but a motion to dismiss for insufficiency may be made at the hearing.

VII. Adjournments and extensions of time may be granted upon the application of parties in the discretion of the commission.

VIII. Upon issue being joined by the service of answer, the commission, upon request of either party, will assign a time and place for hearing the same, which will be at its office in Washington, unless otherwise ordered. Witnesses will be examined orally before the commission, except in cases when special orders are made for the taking of testimony otherwise. The petitioner or complainant must in all cases prove the existence of the facts alleged to constitute a violation of the act, unless the carrier complained of shall admit the same, or shall fail to answer the complaint. Facts alleged in the answer must also be proved by the carrier, unless admitted by the petitioner on the hearing.

In cases of failure to answer, the commission will take such proof of the charge as may be deemed reasonable and proper, and make such order thereon as the circumstances of the case appear to require.

IX. Subpœnas requiring the attendance of witnesses will be issued by any member of the commission in all cases and proceedings before it, and witnesses will be required to obey the subpœnas served upon them requiring their attendance or the production of any books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, or documents relating to any matter under investigation or pending before the commission.

Upon application to the commission authority may be given, in the discretion of the commission, to any party to take the deposition of any witnesses who may be shown, for some sufficient reason, to be unable to attend in person.

June 15, 1887, this rule was modified to the extent that where a cause is at issue on petition and answer, each party may proceed at once to take depositions of witnesses in the manner provided by sections 863 and 864 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and transmit them to the secretary of the commission, without making any application to, or obtaining any authority from, the commission for that purpose.

X. Upon application by any petitioner or party amendments may be allowed by the commission, in its discretion, to any petition, answer, or other pleading in any proceeding before the commission.

XI. Copies of any petition, complaint, or answer, in any matter or proceeding before the commission, or of any order, decision, or opinion by the commission, will be furnished upon application by any person or carrier desiring the same, upon payment of the expense thereof.

XII. Affidavits to a petition, complaint, or answer may be taken before any officer of the United States, or of any State or Territory, authorized to administer oaths.

The history of the development of the railroad system of the United States, with relation to inter-State commerce and to the corporate abuses which led to the passage of the foregoing act of 1887, may be summarized as follows: —

When the grant of the power to regulate commerce was made, the commerce between the States was insignificant — carried on by coastwise vessels and other water-craft, sailed or rowed, within the interior. The inter-State commerce on land was little, and its regulation was by the common law. To a few associations of regular carriers of passengers on definite routes exclusive rights were granted, in the belief that otherwise the regular transportation would not be adequately provided for.

For regulation of commerce on the ocean and other navigable waters Congress passed the necessary laws; but not until 1824 (in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden) was it settled that such waters of a State as constitute a highway for inter-State commerce are subject to Federal legislation equally with the high seas. But Congress still abstained from regulating commerce by land — leaving even the Cumberland road, a national highway, to the supervision of the States through which it should be built.

When the application of steam to vessels as a motive power so stimulated internal commerce as to necessitate improved highways, these, both turnpikes and canals, were State creations, the General government merely making some appropriations for canals. It was natural that the States should control these highways, so long as there was no discrimination against the citizens of other States. When, in 1830, steam power was applied to land vehicles, the same reasons for State control prevailed.

For a long time Federal regulation of inter-State commerce was purely negative, merely restraining excessive State power, through the judicial department, in isolated cases. Thus, the corporations monopolizing commerce made the law for themselves — State power and common law being inadequate to complete regulation and National power not yet being put forth. The circumstances of railroad development tended to make this indirect and abnormal lawmaking unequal and oftentimes oppressive. Later, when the promoters of railroads were viewed as public benefactors, laws were passed, under popular clamor, allowing municipalities to use public money and public credit in aid of roads. So much money thus lent (to irresponsible parties) was lost, that constitutional amendments were adopted prohibiting such use of the public money or credit.

The inadequate business of many roads led to destructive competition, to the undue favoring of large dealers, and secret arrangements in the form of special rates, rebates, and drawbacks, underbilling, reduced classification, or whatever else might be best adapted to keep the transaction from a public not deceived but practically helpless through dependence. Intelligent shippers, even the favored ones, realized that any reasonable, non-discriminating, permanent schedule of rates was preferable to one so fluctuating and untrustworthy as to make business contracts virtually lottery ventures.

Special terms were often made with large shippers to increase the volume of business, in order either to attract purchasers of stock, justify some demand for an extension of line or other large expenditure, or to assist in making terms in a consolidation or strengthen the demand for a larger share in a pool.

Whatever the motive, the allowance of a special rate or rebate was not only unjust, wronging and often ruining the small dealer, but it was also demoralizing,— sufferers, doubtful of obtaining redress in the courts, becoming parties to the evil by seeking similar favors.

The discriminations applied to places not less than to persons, often resulting, through necessities artificially created, in charging more for a short than for a long haul on the same line in the same direction, so that towns with superior natural advantages withered away under the mischievous influence.

Not less conspicuous were the evils of the free transportation of persons, causing the corruption of some public officials and subjecting others to unjust and cruel suspicion, all leading to a deterioration of the moral sense of the community. Railroads themselves were in cases the sufferers, the demand for passage often partaking of the nature of blackmail.

In addition to these evils, rates, through the absence of competition or the consolidation of competing roads, were kept oppressively high; they were also changed at pleasure, and without notice. Secret dealings made the public unable to judge of the reasonableness of charges. Such publications of tariffs as were made were so complicated as not to be intelligible to the uninitiated, and rather tended to increase the difficulties.

Still another evil was the strengthening of a class feeling between those whose interests demanded harmony.

The manipulation of capital stocks for the benefit of managers and to the destruction of the interest of the owners resulted in great wrong, directly to individuals and indirectly to the public. The large fortunes amassed in a short time by some officials created in the public mind suspicion and an unfair prejudice against railroad management in general, which developed into an unfortunate breach between the public and all railroad corporations.

In short, the manifest misuse of corporate powers created an irresistible demand for "National legislation, and this very naturally, because the private gains resulting from corporate abuse were supposed to spring, to some extent at least, from excessive burdens imposed upon that commerce which the nation ought to regulate and protect." In response to this demand the act of 1887 lays down rules to be observed by the carriers to which its provisions apply, which are intended to be rules of equity and equality, and "to restore the management of the transportation business of the country to public confidence."[1]

COMMISSION.[2] Doing, performing; execution.

1. An undertaking, without recompense, to do a thing for another person; a gratuitous bailment, q. v.

2. (1) Formal written authority from a court to do something pertaining to the administration of justice: as, a commission to ascertain whether one is a bankrupt, or a lunatic; a commission to take depositions or testimony, qq. v.

A writ or process issued, under seal, by the special order of a court.[3]

(2) Formal authority from a government

[1] See Report of Commission, 1887, pp. 2-10.

That report presents the views of the board upon the following general subjects: The carriers subject to its jurisdiction, pp. 11-15; the long and short haul clause of the act, 15-23; the filing and publication of tariffs, 23-24; general supervision of the carriers subject to the act, 24-27; proceedings before the commission, 27-28; expense of hearings, 28-29; annual reports from carriers, 29-30; classification of passengers and freight, 30-32; voluntary association of railroad managers, 33-36; reasonable charges, 36-41; general observations, 41-42; amendments of the law, 42-43, 14-15.

[2] L. committere, to place with, intrust to: com, with; mittere, to send.

[3] [Tracy v. Suydam, 30 Barb. 115 (1859); Boal v. King, 6 Ham., Ohio, 18 (1833), cases.

for the doing of something belonging to the exercise of its powers.

Imports, ex vi termini, written authority from a competent source.[1] Compare WARRANT, 2.

(3) The body or board of persons intrusted with the performance of some public service or duty: as, to revise statutes, codify laws, fix the boundary lines between States, enforce the inter-State commerce act.

The instrument evidences the fact of the appointment, q. v., and the nature and extent of the powers conferred.[2]

Commissioner. Such person as has a commission, letters-patent, or other lawful authority, to examine any matter or to execute any public office.[3]

An officer of a court, appointed to assist it in administering justice in a particular case or cases. Compare MASTER, 4.

The supreme court of California appoints, and may at any time remove, three persons of legal learning and personal worth to assist the court in the performance of its duties, and in the disposition of the undetermined causes now pending. Each commissioner holds office for the term of four years, and during that period may not engage in the practice of the law. The court appoints one as chief commissioner.[4] Whence C., and C. C.

An officer who assists in the administration of government, being usually charged with administering the laws relating to some one department thereof: as, the commissioner of agriculture, of a circuit court, of a county, of deeds, of education, of fisheries, of the general land-office, of highways, of Indian affairs, of internal revenue, of patents, of pensions.[5] See MINISTERIAL.

Commissioner of bail. An officer authorized to take bail for hearings or trials before a court and jury, in cases admitting of release from confinement when the accused can furnish bail.

Commissioner of the circuit courts. See under COURTS, United States.

Commissioner of deeds. An officer authorized to take acknowledgments and depositions, and to probate accounts.

County commissioners. See COUNTY.

3. Compensation for services rendered. The plural, commissions, is often used.

A percentage on price or value.[1]

A sum allowed as compensation to a servant, factor, or agent, who manages the affairs of another, in recompense for his services.[2]

"Commission" generally signifies a percentage upon the amount of money involved in the transaction, as distinguished from "discount," which is a percentage taken from the face value of the security or property negotiated.[3]

A reasonable commission is allowed to administrators, assignees, auctioneers, brokers, executors, receivers, and other agents or trustees, qq. v. But the service must be completed, and due care and skill and perfect fidelity have been employed. The amount is a reasonable percentage upon the sum received or paid out, and is regulated by custom, or by the discretion of the appointing authority.

Commission merchant. A factor, q. v.

COMMIT. To intrust to; to confide in.

1. To delegate a duty to a person or persons. See COMMISSION; COMMITTEE.

2. To send to a place of confinement a person found to be a lunatic.

May contemplate a sending without an adjudication by a court or a magistrate.[4] See LUNACY.

3. To send to prison a person, charged with or convicted of a crime.

Commitment. The act of sending an accused or convicted person to prison; also, the warrant by virtue of which the incarceration is made.

"To commit" was regarded as the separate and distinct act of carrying a party to prison, after having taken him into custody by force of a warrant of commitment.[5]

Commitment, Warrant of. Written authority to commit a person to prison or custody, until a further hearing in the matter as to which he is charged can be had, or until he is discharged by due course of law; a mittimus; a committitur.

Committing. Authorized to hear charges of crime, and to discharge or take bail for trial before a jury.

Committing magistrate. Any (inferior) officer empowered to hear charges of crime and to commit the accused to prison or accept bail for their appearance before a higher

[1] United States v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. *364 (1832).

[2] Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 155 (1803); Lessee of Talbot v. Simpson, 1 Pet. C. C. 94 (1815); United States v. Vinton, 2 Sumn. 307 (1836).

[3] [Jacob's Law Dict.; 14 N. J. L. 498.

[4] Cal. Statutes, 1885, p. 161. Similar provision was made in Kansas in 1887,—Laws, c. 148; and on March 5, three commissioners were appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate,—36 Kan. R. iii.

[5] See Index, Revised Statutes.

[1] Brennan v. Perry, 7 Phila. 243 (1869).

[2] [Ralston v. Kohl, 30 Ohio St. 98 (1876), Scott, J.

[3] Swift v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 57 (1883).

[4] Cummington v. Wareham, 9 Cush. 585 (1852).

[5] [French v. Bancroft, 1 Met. 504 (1840), Shaw, C. J. See also 112 Mass. 69; 133 id. 400.

court; as, a justice of the peace, some aldermen, mayors, and commissioners of bail.

If the offense is not bailable, or the party cannot find bail, he is to be committed to the county gaol by the mittimus of the justice, or warrant under his hand and seal, containing the cause of his commitment; there to abide till delivered by due course of law.[1]

Commitment for crime being only for safe-keeping, when bail will answer the purpose it is generally taken. The warrant is in the name of the State; is under the hand and seal of the magistrate; shows his authority, and the time and place of issue; describes the prisoner by name; specifies the place of confinement, and is directed to the keeper thereof; states that the party has been charged on oath with a particular offense. When the offense is bailable the direction is "to keep in safe custody for want of sureties, or until discharged by due course of law;" when not bailable, "until discharged by due course of law;" and when for further examination of the charge, "for further hearing."[2] See BAIL, 1 (2); CAPERE, Capias, Cepi.

COMMITTEE. One or more persons to whom a matter is referred for examination, deliberation, superintendence, action, or recommendation.

An individual or a body to which others have committed or delegated a particular duty, or who have taken upon themselves to perform it in the expectation of their act being confirmed by the body they profess to represent or to act for.[3]

More particularly, a person appointed by a court to take charge of the person or the estate, or of both, of a lunatic, habitual drunkard, or spendthrift.

The committee of a lunatic is a bailiff whose power is limited to the mere care of the estate under the direction of the court.[4]

The civil law assigned a tutor to protect the person, and a curator to manage the estate. . . To prevent sinister practices the next of kin was seldom appointed committee of the person, but generally manager of the estate, accountable to the court, to the representative of the lunatic, and to the lunatic himself upon recovery.[5]

But now, for committee of the person, the next of kin is favored; and for committee of the estate, the heir at law.[6]

COMMITTITUR. See COMMIT, 3; INTERIM.

COMMODATUM. See ACCOMMODATUM.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 300; 3 id. 134; 112 Mass. 62.

[2] See 4 Bl. Com. 296-300; 4 Cranch, 129; 17 F. R. 156; 9 N. H. 185; 6 Humph. 391.

[3] Reynell v. Lewis, 15 M. & W. *529 (1846), Pollock, C. B.

[4] Lloyd v. Hart, 2 Pa. 478 (1846), Gibson, C. J.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 306; 3 id. 427.

[6] Shelford, Lunacy, 137, 140, 441.

COMMODITY.[1] Convenience, privilege, profit, gain; popularly, goods, wares, merchandise.

Within the meaning of the constitution of Massachusetts "commodities" embraces everything which may be the subject of taxation,— including the privilege of using a particular branch of business or employment: as, the business of an auctioneer, of an attorney, of a tavern-keeper, of a retailer of liquors.[2]

"Commodity" is a general term, and includes the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business.[3] See MONOPOLY; STAPLE.

COMMODUM. L. Convenience, benefit, advantage.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one advantage shall take of his own wrong-doing — as a cause of action or of defense.

Applies where a partner retires from a firm, and fails to give notice of the change; where a person inadvertently or fraudulently mingles grain of his own with higher-priced grain belonging to another; where a tenant for years or for life cuts down trees and then claims them; where a grantor attempts to dispute the validity of the title he has conveyed; where one party binds another to a condition impossible to be performed, or does something to prevent or hinder performance.

The maxim applies only to the extent of undoing an advantage gained against the right of another, not to taking away a right previously possessed.[4]

Thus, also, an admission, whether of law or of fact, which has been acted upon by another, is conclusive against the person who made it.[5]

Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. He who enjoys the benefit, ought also to bear the burden. He who enjoys the advantage of a right takes the accompanying disadvantage — a privilege is subject to its condition.

Illustrated in the rights and liabilities arising out of the relation of principal and agent, grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, attorney and client, husband and wife, innkeeper and guest, a carrier and the public — the principle pervades the law in all its branches.[6]

On this principle rests the law of alluvion: the [1] L. commodus, convenience.

[2] [Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 256 (1815), Parker, C. J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Lancaster Savings Bank, 123 Mass. 495 (1878); Connecticut Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 133 id. 163 (1882); Gleason v. McKay, 134 id. 424-25 (1883), cases; Hamilton Company v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 640 (1867); 24 How. Pr. 492.

[4] See Broom, Max. *279; State v. Costin, 89 N. C. 516 (1883).

[5] See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 207-9.

[6] See Cooper v. Louanstein, 37 N. J. E. 305 (1883); Mundorff v. Wickersham, 63 Pa. 89 (1869), cases.

owner takes the chances of injury and of benefit arising from situation.[1] Compare ONUS, Cum onere.

COMMON. 1, adj. (1) Belonging to, or participated in, by several or more persons; mutual: as, a common — ancestor, benefit, labor or service, master, property, recovery, tenants in common,[2] qq. v.

(2) Originating with, or subsisting for, the people at large; belonging to, or affecting, the public; not private, but public or general, q. v.: as, a common or the common — bench, carrier, council, fishery, highway, inn, law, nuisance, pleas, right, schools, way, qq. v.

(3) Ordinary, usual, customary, familiar; opposed to special: as, common or a common — appearance, assumpsit, assurance, bail, bar, bond, care or diligence, costs, count, informer, intendment, intent, jury, mortgage, seal, stock, traverse, warranty, qq. v.

(4) Frequent, habitual: as, common offenders — barrator, drunkard, gambler, prostitute, scold, thief, qq. v.

Three distinct acts of sale of liquors are necessary to constitute a "common" seller. Such has been the rule as to common barrator, and other cases of this nature.[6]

(5) Ordinary; manual; opposed to mental or intellectual: as, common labor, q. v.

2, n. The common field; ground set apart for public uses.[4]

The waste grounds of manors (q. v.) were called "commons."[5]

Land appropriated to a public common may not be diverted to other uses, to the prejudice of individuals who have purchased lots adjoining it.[6]

Where privileges of a public nature are beneficial to private property, as in the case of land upon a public square, the enjoyment of the privileges will be protected, by injunction, against encroachment.[7] See DEDICATION, 1.

Common, or right of common. A profit which a man hath in the lands of another: as, to feed his beasts thereon, to catch fish, to cut wood.[1]

Commoner. A person invested with a right of common.

Existed between the owner of a manor and his feudal tenants,— for the encouragement of agriculture. The tenant's right was to pasture his cattle, provide necessary food and fuel for his family, and repair his implements of husbandry, from the lord's land.[2]

An incorporeal hereditament. The right usually meant is common of pasture: the right of feeding beasts on another's land. There was also common of estovers: the liberty of taking necessary wood, for use of house or farm — house-bote, fire-bote, hay-bote, hedge-bote, etc.; common of piscary: the liberty of fishing (q. v.) in another's water; common of turbary: a right to dig turf; common in the soil: a right to dig for minerals, etc. All the species result from the same necessity — the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry.

Commonable beasts. Beasts of the plow; beasts which manure the ground.

Inter-commoning. Where the beasts of adjacent manors have immemorially fed upon adjoining commons.

Commons of pasture were appendant, when regularly annexed to arable land,— for the support of commonable beasts; appurtenant, when annexed to lands in other lordships,— for the support of all kinds of animals, and arose neither from necessity nor from any connection of tenures; in gross or at large, when annexed to a man's person, by grant to him and his heirs; because of vicinage, when the inhabitants of adjoining townships intercommoned.[3] See FEUD.

The right of common, with many of its old common-law incidents, was formerly recognized in this country, particularly in the middle and eastern States.[4]

---

[1] County of St. Clair v. Lovingston, 23 Wall. 69 (1874).

[2] Chambers v. Harrington, 111 U. S. 352 (1884).

[3] Commonwealth v. Tubbs, 1 Cush. 3 (1848), Dewey, J.

[4] Patterson v. McReynolds, 61 Mo. 203 (1875); Crawford v. Mobile, &c. R. Co., 67 Ga. 416 (1881).

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 32.

[6] See Emerson v. Wiley, 10 Pick. 315 (1831); Carr v. Wallace, 7 Watts, 394 (1838); Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 525 (1831); State v. Trask, 6 id. 364 (1834).

[7] Wheeler v. Bedford, 54 Conn. 248-49 (1886), cases: 2 Story, Eq. § 927; High, Inj. § 551. An injunction to prevent inclosing part of a town common or public park, by the owner of a lot adjoining the lot of complainant.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 32.

[2] 3 Kent, 403.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 33-35; 3 id. 237.

[4] See Watts v. Coffin, 11 Johns. *495 (1814),— as to lands in the city of Hudson, Columbia county, N. Y.; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 id. *15 (1819),— town of Livingston, same county; Leyman v. Abeel, ib. *30 (1819),— Catskill patent; Van Rennselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. *639 (1833),— town of Guilderland, Albany county.

See also Western University of Pennsylvania v. Robinson et al., 12 S. & R. *29 (1824), and Carr v. Wallace, 7 Watts, 394 (1838),— both as to one hundred acres of land in the town of Allegheny, Pa. (now constituting the parks in the central portion of the city), in which the State, in 1787, created the right of "common of pasture" in the purchasers of "in-lots" in the plan of lots laid out and sold by the State for the purpose of raising money with which to pay public debts. In 1819 the legislature, without the consent of the owners of those lots, granted fifty acres of these "commons" to the university named, but the supreme court, in Robinson's Case, held that the State

COMMONS, HOUSE OF. See PARLIAMENT.

COMMONWEALTH. The common or public weal: the republic; the state, or a State; the people, qq. v.

"The commonwealth or public polity of the kingdom."[1] Blackstone also wrote it "common wealth."[2]

The legal title of a few of the States, as of Kentucky, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia.

COMMORANT.[3] Inhabiting, dwelling, residing; as, in saying that a person is or is not commorant in a particular place. Whence commorancy.[4]

COMMORIENTES. L. Those who die at the same time, from the same accident or calamity. See SURVIVE, 2.

COMMOTION. A "civil commotion" is an insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to a rebellion, in which there is usurped power.[5]

COMMUNE. See COMMUNISM.

COMMUNICATION. Information imparted by one person to another.

Confidential communication. Information imparted between persons who occupy a relation of trust and duty; a privileged communication.

Privileged communication. 1. Information imparted which the law does not require to be disclosed in a judicial or legislative examination.

Public policy forbids the disclosure of matters which the law regards as confidential, and as to which it will not allow confidence to be violated.[1]

The rule, at common law, does not extend to confessions made to clergymen. This has been changed by statute in some States, as in Iowa, Michigan, Missouri, New York, and Wisconsin.[2]

Confidence between husband and wife, as to the interests of either, is forever inviolable.[3]

A lawyer who has counseled with a client cannot disclose information received from him. The inhibition includes a clerk or a student in the lawyer's office; and applies also to a scrivener or a conveyancer. But a legal adviser may testify as to "negotiations" between clients who later become adversaries. The rule does not cover a disclosure of an intention to break the law, nor testamentary communications, nor information obtained outside of the professional relation.[4]

A communication to a medical attendant is not privileged. A few of the States (among others, those mentioned above) have conferred the immunity, excepting consultations for criminal purposes.[5] See INFORMATION, 1.

State secrets are privileged. This embraces communications to any high officer of state, and consultations with the executive, or a committee of the legislature.[6]

Prosecuting attorneys are privileged as to confidential matters.[7] See ACCOMPLICE.

Communications between a party and a witness, by way of preparation for trial, are privileged.[8]

Neither arbitrators, judges, nor jurors can be compelled to disclose the grounds of their findings.[9] See JURY, Grand.

Ties of blood create no privilege.[10]

Telegrams (q. v.) are not protected.[11]

2. In the law of slander and libel, false matter not actionable, because the circum-

had only the right of soil, subject to the right of common, which latter right the lot-holders could release or modify at pleasure, with the concurrence of the legislature. Some three years later, at the request of a large majority of the lot-owners, the legislature granted ten acres of the same common to trustees representing the Presbyterian Church in the United States, for the uses of a theological seminary. After the lapse of several years, during which more than $25,000 had been expended in improvements, one Carr, who had acquiesced in this disposition of the common ground, by suit in court questioned the validity of the grant to the trustees. The supreme court held that by failing to complain at the proper time he had approved what had been done.

See also Thomas v. Marshfield, Mass., 10 Pick. 364 (1830), and Phillips v. Rhodes, 7 Metc. 322 (1843),— as to rights of common in a beach; and Hall v. Lawrence, 2 R. I. 218 (1852),— which concerned a similar right at Newport, in 1776. On the origin of rights of common, see 3 Law Q. Rev. 373–98 (1837).

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 127.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 9.

[3] Cŏm'-mo-rant. L. commorari, to abide.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 364; 4 id. 273; Wright v. Smith, 74 Me. 497 (1883); Me. Laws, 1876, c. 93.

[5] [Langdale v. Mason, 2 Marsh. Ins. 792 (1780), Ld. Mansfield; May, Ins. § 403.

[1] Totten v. United States, 92 U. S. 107 (1875).

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 247–48, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 596–98, cases.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 254, 334; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 427–32; 112 Mass. 160; 46 Barb. 158; 35 Vt. 379.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 237–46; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 576–93; 74 Me. 543; 101 Mass. 193.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 248; 1 Whart. Ev. § 606; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co., 112 U. S. 254 (1884); Gartside v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 76 Mo. 449–53 (1882), cases, statutes.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 250–51; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 604–5, cases; Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 488–98 (1872), cases; Totten v. United States, 92 U. S. 105 (1875); Hartranft's Appeal, 85 Pa. 433 (1878); Rex v. Hardy, 24 How. St. Tr. 815 (1794); 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 9, 378, 416; 50 Md. 626.

[7] Vogel v. Gruaz, 110 U. S. 311, 316 (1884), cases; 1 Whart. Ev. § 603.

[8] 1 Whart. Ev. § 594.

[9] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 599–601; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 249, 252.

[10] 1 Whart. Ev. § 607; 14 Ill. 89; 8 Wis. 456; L. R., 19 Eq. 649.

[11] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 595, 617.

stances gave the defendant a right to make the statement.

The occasion on which the communication was made rebuts the inference arising, prima facie, from a statement prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and puts it upon him to prove that there was malice in fact — that the defendant was actuated by motives of personal spite or ill-will, independent of the occasion on which the communication was made.[1]

"Privileged" in this connection means simply that the circumstances under which the communication was made were such as to repel the legal inference of malice, and to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of offering evidence of its existence beyond the mere falsity of the charge.[2]

A communication made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, is privileged, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains criminatory matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable.[3]

Where a person is so situated that it becomes right, in the interests of society, that he should tell a third person certain facts, then if he bona fide and without malice does tell them it is a privileged communication. The jury must say whether the statement was made in good faith.[4]

In some instances a voluntary imparting of information will be justified; in others the privilege applies only to information in response to inquiries. The subject may be one that is privileged, and a communication on that subject be unprivileged. If the restraints imposed by law upon the publicity to be given the communication be disregarded, the communication is unprivileged and actionable, although made from the best of motives. The act of communicating defamatory matter to a person with respect to whom there is no privilege is without legal justification or excuse. Good faith and honest belief will not justify defamation.[5]

In the law of libel, privileged communications are: 1. When an author or publisher acted in bona fide discharge of a public or private duty, legal or moral; or in the prosecution of his own rights or interests. 2. Anything said or done by a master in giving the character of a servant who has been in his employment. 3. Words used in the course of a legal or judicial proceeding, however harsh. 4. Publications duly made in the ordinary mode of parliamentary proceedings. . . In these cases the complainant must show express malice, by construction of the matter, or by facts accompanying the matter or the parties.[1]

In some jurisdictions the privilege is spoken of as "absolute," that is, it rests upon grounds of policy, requiring freedom in debate or argument, and in giving testimony — in which cases proof of even actual malice is not received, unless it be as to the last: as, for utterances by a legislator, judge, advocate, or witness; and as "presumptive," that is, in which the plaintiff may prove absence of good faith or actual malice: as, communications in discharge of social duties; when the author or recipient has a legal interest to be promoted; answers to legitimate inquiries; characters given to servants; statements to sellers as to credit of buyers; notices protective of one's interests or in discharge of a corporate duty.[2]

Utterances in the course of church discipline, to or of a member of the church, are not actionable unless express malice be proved.[3] See LIBEL, 5; SLANDER.

COMMUNIS. See ERROR, 1, Communis.

COMMUNISM. A name given to schemes of social innovation which have for their common starting-point the overthrow of absolute rights of ownership in private property as an institution. Most theories further comprehend the regulation of industry and the sources of livelihood, as well as of the domestic relations, and some involve the abrogation of all central authority in a State, and the substitution of that of the commune.[4]

It is the latter feature that constitutes a distinction between communism and socialism.[4] See ANARCHY; GOVERNMENT; NIHILIST.

COMMUNITY.[5] 1. Unity; mutuality: as, community of interest or of intention. See PARTNERSHIP.

2. In Louisiana, Texas, California, and perhaps in New Mexico and Arizona, a species of partnership created between husband and wife by the contract of marriage, in acquisitions of property made or received during the continuance of that relation.

This community is conventional when formed by express agreement in the contract

[1] Wright v. Woodgate, 2 Cromp., M. & R. 577 (1835), Parke, B.

[2] Lewis v. Chapman, 16 N. Y. 373 (1857), Selden, J.

[3] Harrison v. Bush, 5 Ellis & B. *347-48 (1855), Campbell, C. J.

[4] Davies v. Snead, L. R., 5 Q. B. *611 (1870), Blackburn, J. See Waller v. Loch, 7 Q. B. D. 621-22 (1881); Marks v. Baker, 28 Minn. 164-65 (1881), cases; Erber v. Dun, 12 F. R. 530 (1882); Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 id. 214, 216-20 (1882), cases; Locke v. Bradstreet, 22 id. 771 (1885); 26 Am. Law Reg. 681-93 (1887), cases.

[5] King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 421, 419-32 (1887), cases, Depue, J. The plaintiff (above) published in his "mercantile agency notification sheet" the false information that the defendant had executed a chattel mortgage upon her stock of goods.

[1] White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 286-92 (1845), cases, Daniel, J. As to newspaper publications, see 21 Cent. Law J. 86-90, 450-55 (1885), cases.

[2] See O'Donaghue v. M'Govern, 23 Wend. *29 (1840); Howard v. Thompson, 21 id. 325 (1839).

[3] Coombs v. Rose, 9 Blackf. *157 (1846), cases. Contra, Fitzgerald v. Robinson, 112 Mass. 371-78 (1873), cases; Magrath v. Finn, 16 Alb. Law J. 186 (1877) — Irish Common Pleas.

[4] [Worcester's Dict.

[5] L. communis, common of marriage; legal, when it arises by operation of law — as where there is no express stipulation.

At the dissolution of the relation the effects are divided equally, as between heirs.[1]

Statutes upon the subject proceed upon the theory that the marriage, in respect to property acquired during its existence, is a community, of which each spouse is a member, equally contributing by his or her industry to its prosperity and possessing an equal right to succeed to the property after dissolution, in the event of surviving the other. To the community all acquisitions by either, whether made jointly or separately, belong. No form of transfer or mere intent of parties can overcome this positive rule of law. All property is common property, except that owned previous to marriage or acquired after the relation has ceased. The presumption is against separate ownership. A purchase made with separate funds must be affirmatively established by clear and decisive proof. The husband has the entire control of the common property; and it is liable for his debts.[2]

3. A society of people having common rights, interests, or privileges in matters of property, representation, etc.

An association by which each member surrenders his property into one common stock for the mutual benefit of all during their joint lives, with the right of survivorship, reserving to each member the right to secede at any time during his life, is not prohibited by law.[3]

4. A society of people possessing common political interests; a political society. See STATE, 2 (2).

COMMUTATION.[4] Putting one thing for another; substitution.

As, of a tax, for a personal service; an annuity to a tribe of Indians, for goods; rations to a soldier, for money;[5] an artificial limb, for its value in money.[6]

Commutation of punishment. The substitution of a less for a greater penalty or punishment;[7] the change of one punishment for another and different punishment, both being known to the law.[8] See PARDON.

Commutable; commutative. Capable or admitting of substitution; not interchangeable for another — of less or equal value or degree. Opposed, incommutable, incommutative, non-commutable.

COMPACT. An agreement or contract — between independent sovereignties.[1]

Original or social compact. The implied contract of association of individuals in a community, by which, in return for the benefits of the association, the individual surrenders such of his natural freedom as is necessary for the good of society.

Thereby, whatever power the individual had to punish offenses against the law of nature is vested in the magistrate — the sovereign power.[2] See BODY, 2, Corporate.

COMPANY. 1. The member of a partnership (q. v.) whose name does not appear in the name of the firm.

The use of the collective designation "& Co.," as part of the name of a firm, creates a presumption that there is a partner in addition to the person or persons whose names are given; but this presumption is rebuttable. Statutes in Louisiana and New York forbid the use of the addition unless an actual partner is represented by it; but a fanciful title, such as "Eureka Co.," may still be used; and the reference may be to a person under disability. Such statutes are intended to protect persons who give credit to, not those who obtain credit from, a firm.[3]

2. Applied to persons engaged in trade, those united for the same purpose or in a joint concern.[4]

"Company" or "association," when used in the Revised Statutes, acts or resolutions of Congress, in reference to corporations, shall be deemd to embrace the words "successors and assigns of such company or association" in like manner as if these last-named words, or words of similar import, were expressed.[5]

The simple word "company" will include individuals as well as corporations.[6]

Often designates a numerous association, chartered or unchartered. Every unincorporated company is a partnership.

See ASSOCIATION; PARTNERSHIP, Limited; STOCK, 3 (2); BUBBLE; EXPRESS; PROSPECTUS; RAILROAD; TELEGRAPH; TRANSPORTATION.

[1] La. Civ. Code, 2375, 2393; 10 La. 146, 172, 181; 12 id. 668. See as to Texas, Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 172 (1886), cases.

[2] Tibbetts v. Fore, 70 Cal. 244-45 (1886), cases; Schuyler v. Broughton, ib. 263 (1886), cases.

[3] Schriber v. Rapp (Harmony Society), 5 Watts, 351, 360 (1836); Baker v. Nachtrieb, 19 How. 126 (1856); Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 377 (1887).

[4] L. commutare, to exchange with.

[5] United States v. Lippitt, 100 U. S. 663, 670 (1879).

[6] R. S. § 4788.

[7] Lee v. Murphy, 22 Gratt. 799, 793-800 (1872), cases.

[8] Exp. Janes, 1 Nev. 321 (1865).

[1] See 8 Wheat. 92; 11 Pet. 185; 1 Bl. Com. 45.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 233, 299; 3 id. 160; 4 id. 8, 71, 382. See 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 232; Atlantic Monthly, June, 1887, p. 750, article by A. L. Lowell, who undertakes to show that the theory, first propounded in 1594 by Richard Hooker, adopted by Hobbs, Locke, Rousseau, the framers of the constitution of Massachusetts, and Kant, has been made the servant of absolutism, democracy, revolution, and transcendental ethics.

[3] 1 Bates, Partn. §§ 191, 198, cases; Gay v. Seibold, 97 N. Y. 476 (1884); Lauferty v. Wheeler, 11 Daly, 197 (1882); Zimmerman v. Erhard, 83 N. Y. 76 (1880); Kent v. Mojoiner, 36 La. An. 259 (1884).

[4] Palmer v. Pinkham, 33 Me. 36 (1851), Shepley, C. J.

[5] R. S. § 5: Act 25 July, 1866.

[6] Chicago Dock Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 164 (1885).

COMPARATIVE. See JURISPRUDENCE; NEGLIGENCE.

COMPARISON. See HANDWRITING.

COMPENSATION. That return which is given for something else — a consideration: as, the compensation of an office.[1]

Compensatory. Serving as an equivalent; making amends: as, compensatory damages, q. v.

1. Recompense; remuneration: as, for services rendered by an officer, agent, attorney, trustee.

When not fixed by agreement, evidence of the amount ordinarily charged in like cases is admissible. The service, however, must be lawful. An agreement to pay a contingent compensation for professional services in prosecuting a claim against the government, pending in a department, is not unlawful.[2]

In a constitutional provision that the "compensation" of any public officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, applies to officers who receive a fixed salary from the public treasury, not to such minor officers as are paid by fees taxed or allowed for each item of service as it is rendered.[3]

When Congress has said that a sum appropriated shall be "in full compensation" of the services of a public officer, the courts cannot allow him a greater sum. The appropriation of a fixed sum as compensation, followed by the appropriation of a round sum as "additional" pay, evinces an intention not to allow further compensation during the period specified. So, a statute which fixes the annual salary of an officer at a designated sum without limitation as to time, is not abrogated by subsequent enactments appropriating a less amount for his services for a particular fiscal year, but containing no words which expressly or impliedly modify or repeal it.[4] See COMMISSION, 3; CONTINUANCE, 3; COUNT, 4 (1), Common; EXPERT; IMPAIR; LEGAL; SALARY.

2. Remuneration for loss of time, necessary expenditures, and for permanent disability, if such be the result.[5]

As, compensation for personal injuries caused by another's negligence. See DAMAGES.

3. Amends for privation of a thing; an equivalent for property taken for a public use.

Just compensation. Private property cannot be taken for a public use without just compensation being made or secured. This means pecuniary recompense equivalent in value to that of the property.[1]

"Just" intensifies the meaning of "compensation"— imports that the equivalent shall be real, substantial, full, ample.[2]

Nearly all of the authorities agree that "just compensation" consists in making the owner good, by an equivalent in money, for the loss he sustains in the value of his property by being deprived of a portion of it.[3]

In determining the value of land appropriated for public purposes, the same considerations are to be regarded as in the sale of property between private persons. The inquiry is, What is the property worth in the market, viewed not merely with reference to the uses to which it is at the time applied, but with reference to the uses to which it is plainly adapted; that is to say, what is it worth from its availability for valuable purposes. . . So many and varied are the circumstances to be taken into the account that it is perhaps impossible to formulate a rule to govern its appraisement in all cases. Exceptional circumstances will modify the most carefully guarded rule. As a general thing, the compensation is to be estimated by reference to the uses for which the property is suitable, having regard to the existing business or wants of the community, or such as may be reasonably expected in the immediate future.[4]

When an incorporated company appropriates land, the measure of compensation is the difference between the value of the property before and after the taking, and as affected by the taking.[5]

See DOMAIN, Eminent; POLICE, 2; STREET; TAKE, 8.

4. In equity, something to be done for, or money to be paid to, a person, equal in value or amount to the right or thing of which he has been deprived.

Ordinarily decreed as incidental to other relief sought by the bill, or where there is no adequate remedy at law, or where a peculiar equity intervenes.[6]

Compensation may be decreed where the court cannot grant the specific relief prayed for. Thus, if a plaintiff was originally entitled to specific performance of a contract of sale, but it so happens that before the final decree it becomes impracticable for the defendant to make a conveyance, so that the specific relief sought for cannot be decreed, the court will not

[1] Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 123 (1860).

[2] Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548 (1876).

[3] Supervisors of Milwaukee v. Hackett, 21 Wis. 617-18 (1867), Dixon, C. J.

[4] United States v. Fisher, 109 U. S. 143 (1883); United States v. Mitchell, ib. 146 (1883); United States v. Langston, 118 id. 389 (1886).

[5] Parker v. Jenkins, 3 Bush, 591 (1868).

[1] Council Bluffs R. Co. v. County of Otoe, 16 Wall. 674 (1874), Strong, J.

[2] Virginia, &c. R. Co. v. Henry, 8 Nev. 171 (1873). Whitman, C. J.

[3] Bigelow v. West Wisconsin R. Co., 27 Wis. 487 (1871), cases, Lyon, J.

[4] Mississippi, &c. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S 407-8 (1878), Field, J.

[5] See Lake Erie, &c. R. Co. v. Kinsey. 87 Ind 516 21 (1882), cases; Shenango, &c. R. Co. v. Braham, 79 Pa 452 (1875), cases; 39 Ala. 171-72; 42 id. 8; 46 id. 579; 69 Ga. 322; 133 Mass. 255, 433; 34 Miss. 227; 36 id. 300. 17 N. J. L. 47; 20 id. 252; 38 id. 155; 14 Ohio, 175; 9 Oreg 379-80; 2 Kent, 338; Pierce, Railr. 210, 212, 224.

[6] 2 Story, Eq. Ch. XIX.

turn the plaintiff over to seek his damages in an action at law, but will proceed directly to decree him compensation.[1] See CONDITION, Precedent, Subsequent.

5. A mode of extinguishing a debt, and takes place, by mere operation of law, where debts equally liquidated and demandable are reciprocally due.[2]

COMPERUIT. See DIES, Comperuit.

COMPETENT. Answering the requirement of the law; legally able, fit, or qualified; also, proper or admissible as evidence. Whence competency; incompetent, incompetency.

A judge is said to be incompetent to hear a cause in which he is interested; and an infant, or a married woman, incompetent to contract for an article not a necessary.

All witnesses that have their reason, except such as are infamous, or, at common law, are interested in the event of the cause, are competent, but the jury must judge of their credibility,[3] q. v.

Competency is a question for the court. Every witness is presumed to be competent. Ordinarily, incompetency is to be objected to when first known or discovered — before the witness is sworn and his testimony found to be unfavorable.[4] See further EVIDENCE, Competent; WITNESS.

COMPETITION. See MONOPOLY; POLICY, 2; TRADE, Restraints.

Competitive examinations. See SERVICE, 3, Civil.

COMPILE. To copy from various authors into one work. Implies the exercise of judgment in selecting and combining the extracts.[5]

A compiler may take existing materials from sources common to all writers, and, by arranging them in combination in a new form, give them an application unknown before. Others may use the materials, but not his improvement. The "fair use" which is allowable applies to the materials, not to another's plan and arrangement.[6]

A compilation made from original sources is a new work. The fact of originality may be proved by another than the author. . . A compiler is an "author," within the meaning of the Constitution and the copyright laws. . . A compilation, which is the result of labor devoted to gathering from original sources and to arranging in convenient form facts open to be published by any one, is a new work. . "Colorable differences" applies to devices intended to cover a literary piracy, not to real and substantial differences.[1]

A compilation made from voluminous public documents, and arranged to show readily the date and order of historic events, may be copyrighted. Such publications are valuable sources of information and require labor, care, and some skill in their preparation.[2] See further ABRIDGE; PIRACY, 2; REPORT, 1 (2); REVIEW, 3.

COMPLAINT. 1. A formal charge that a person named has committed an offense, preferred before a magistrate or a tribunal authorized to inquire into the probable truth of the accusation.

Refers to a proceeding before a magistrate.[3] But may include an indictment.[4] Implies that an oath has been administered.[5]

A complaint is the initial proceeding in criminal prosecutions and examinations before magistrates, and is made upon oath. If a jurat be attached, and it be properly certified by the magistrate, as is frequently the case, it will be essentially an "affidavit." But a complaint is not necessarily an affidavit, nor are they understood as convertible terms. For, though a complaint may be reduced to writing and subscribed, it need not be certified by the magistrate, since the fact may otherwise appear from his record. And it may be merely formal, made by one who has little, if any, knowledge about the facts, and the examination consist of the depositions of other witnesses. An "affidavit," on the other hand, as the term is ordinarily used, is a sworn statement of facts or a deposition in writing, and includes a jurat — a certificate of the magistrate showing that it was sworn to before him, including the date, and sometimes also the place.[6]

2. The first pleading filed by a plaintiff in a civil action.

The first pleading in an action; containing a statement of the cause of action, with a demand for the appropriate relief to which the party may be entitled.[7]

Complainant. One who prefers a charge of crime; also, he who institutes a civil suit, particularly a suit in equity.

See DECLARATION, 2; PLAINT. Compare AUDIRE, Audita, etc.

COMPLETE. See CAUSE, 2, Of action; INCHOATE; PERFECT.

---

[1] Mason's Appeal, 70 Pa. 29-30 (1871), cases; 77 id. 227; 75 id. 483; 13 Ves. 73, 227.

[2] See Dorvin v. Wiltz, 11 La. 520 (1856); Stewart v. Harper, 16 id. 181 (1861).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 369. As to moral status, see 19 Am. Law Rev. 343-58 (1585), cases; as to mental status, ib. 922-92 (1885), cases.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 50; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 391-411, 418-30.

[5] Story's Ex'rs v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 313 (1847).

[6] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 75-86 (1869), cases.

[1] Bullinger v. Mackey, 15 Blatch. 555, 558 (1879), cases.

[2] Hanson v. Jaccard Jewelry Co., 33 F. R. 203 (1887). Thayer, J.; Drone, Copyr. 152-54, cases.

[3] Commonwealth v. Davis, 11 Pick. 436 (1831).

[4] Commonwealth v. Haynes, 107 Mass. 197 (1871).

[5] Campbell v. Thompson, 16 Me. 120 (1839).

[6] State v. Richardson, 34 Minn. 117-18 (1885), cases, Vanderburgh, J. Extradition Act, R. S. § 5278.

[7] M'Math v. Parsons, 26 Minn. 347 (1879).

COMPOS. L. Having control of; possessing power over.

Compos mentis. Having capacity of mind; sound in mental faculties; of sound mind. Non compos mentis. Not of sound mind; lunatic; insane. See INSANITY.

COMPOSITION. 1. In the law of copyright, the invention or combination of the parts of a work — literary, musical, or dramatic: as, in the case of a letter, discourse, or book; or of an opera; but not of a mere exhibition, spectacle, or scene.[1] See BOOK, 1; COPYRIGHT; DRAMA; OPERA.

2. In the law of patents, a mixture or chemical combination. See PATENT, 2; PROCESS, 2.

3. Payment of part in satisfaction of the whole of a debt. See COMPOUND, 3.

Composition in bankruptcy or insolvency. A contract by which creditors agree to accept a part of their demands, and to discharge the debtor from liability for the rest.

An arrangement between a creditor and his debtor for the discharge of the debt, on terms or by means different from those required by the original contract or by law.[2]

This may be by a composition agreement so called, by a letter of license, or by a deed of inspectorship. See LICENSE; INSPECTION, 3.

A strict composition agreement is an agreement whereby the creditors accept a sum of money, or other thing, at a certain time or times, in full satisfaction and discharge of their respective debts.[3]

Obviates the necessity of a discharge by the court; if made in good faith and fairly and strictly conducted, will be upheld. The agreement is evidenced by an instrument signed by the debtor and the creditors, and called a composition deed, although, at common law, such instrument is not necessary.[4] See ACCORD; BANKRUPTCY; PREFER, 2.

COMPOUND. 1, v. (1) To put parts together to form a whole. See COMPOSITION.

(2) To add interest to principal for a new principal. See INTEREST, 2 (3).

(3) To "compound" a debt is to abate a part on receiving the residue. Demands are compounded when adjusted by payment of part in satisfaction of the whole.[1] See COMPOSITION, 3.

(4) To take goods, or other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute a person for a crime.

Compounding a misdemeanor is sometimes allowed by leave of court, as affecting the individual, he having a right of action for damages. Compounding a felony is, at common law, an offense of an equivalent nature [to the felony], and is, besides, an additional misdemeanor against public justice by contributing to make the laws odious.[2] See BOTE, Theft; LEGAL, Illegal.

By stat. 25 Geo. II (1752), c. 36, advertising a reward for the return of things stolen, "no questions to be asked," subjects the advertiser and the printer to a forfeiture of £50 each.[3]

2. adj. See INTEREST, 2 (3); LARCENY.

COMPRISE. See INCLUDE.

COMPROMISE.[4] An agreement in settlement of a controverted matter.

The yielding of something by each of two parties.[5]

A mutual yielding of opposing claims; the surrender of some right or claimed right in consideration of a like surrender of some counter-claim.[6]

Compromises are highly favored in law.

An "offer" to do something by way of compromise of a controversy, as, to pay a sum of money, to allow a certain price, to deliver certain property, and like offers, made to avoid litigation, is not receivable in evidence against the maker as an admission. If the offer is plainly for a compromise, the rule is to presume it to have been made without prejudice — it is open to explanation. But an admission made during or in consequence of the offer is receivable.[7]

To admit evidence of an offer to compromise litigation would discourage the amicable settlement of disputes. When the object is to buy peace, an offer will be excluded.[8] See PREJUDICE, Without.

If the right surrendered is of doubtful validity, its surrender may be a valuable consideration for the promise.[9]

---

[1] Martinetti v. Maguire, 1 Abb. U. S. 362 (1867); The "Dlante" Case, 15 F. R. 439 (1883); 17 F. R. 595, cases; 9 Am. Law Reg. 33; 23 Bost. L. R. 397.

[2] [4 South. Law Rev. 639–75, 805–42 (1878), cases.

[3] Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. 178 (1838); 20 Cent. Law J. 385–88 (1885), cases; 3 McCrary, 608; 21 Cal. 122; 49 Conn. 105; 75 Ind. 127; 30 Kan. 361; 80 Ky. 614; 71 N. C. 70; 92 Pa. 474; 100 id. 164; R. S. § 5103; 2 Kent, 309, b.

[1] [Haskins v. Newcomb, 2 Johns. *408 (1807), Kent, Chief Justice.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 136. See Smith, Contr. 226.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 133.

[4] L. com-promittere, to mutually promise; to arbitrate.

[5] Bellows v. Sowles, 55 Vt. 399 (1883).

[6] Gregg v. Wethersfield, 55 Vt. 387 (1883); ib. 397; 10 Neb. 360; 2 Wis. *6.

[7] West v. Smith, 101 U. S. 273 (1879), cases; Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 id. 548 (1876); 1 Pet. 222; 16 Op. Att-Gen. 250; 87 Ind. 465; 4 La. 456; 50 Md. 45; 44 N. J. L. 174; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 192; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1090.

[8] International, &c. R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 67 Tex. 27

An administrator may compound a debt, if for the benefit of the estate;[1] and so may a partner for the benefit either of himself or of the firm — statutes in many of the States making a release of one joint debtor not a release of others.[2]

The courts are inclined to favor a compromise fairly made by an attorney at law, and will uphold it for good reason shown.[3] See ACCORD.

COMPTROLLER, or CONTROLLER. One who keeps a counter-roll, a duplicate register, of accounts: an officer charged with the duty of verifying accounts in the fiscal department of government.

In the treasury there are two comptrollers, designated as the first and the second. Their duties are prescribed by statute.[4] See BANK, 2 (3).

In 1880 there was published, by direction of the treasurer, a volume of the decisions of the first comptroller, of a general character; and, in 1881, a second volume. Since 1882, one volume a year has been issued under authority of a resolution of Congress of August 8, 1882. In the introduction to volumes one, two, and three, more especially to volume three, will be found an outline of the nature and extent of the important jurisdiction exercised by the first comptroller, and of the nature of the powers exercised by accounting officers generally, as compared with strictly judicial power.

COMPULSORY. Involuntary; constrained: as, a compulsory — arbitration, assignment, condition, nonsuit, payment, process, qq. v. See VOLUNTARY.

Compulsion. Coercion; duress, qq. v. Compare BOYCOTTING.

COMPURGATORS. Neighbors of a person, made a defendant in a criminal or a civil action, who testified under oath that they believed he swore to the truth.[5] See further WAGER, 1, Of law.

COMPUTARE. L. To sum up; to account, q. v.

Insimul computassent. They settled an account together.

An averment that a balance was struck by the parties to an account, and that the defendant, against whom the balance appeared, promised, by implication of law, to pay it to the plaintiff.[6]

Plene computavit. He has accounted in full.

A plea in the action of account-render that the defendant has fully accounted.

Quod computet. That he account, — computent, that they account.

An interlocutory judgment in account-render or action of account, at law or in equity, that the defendant render an account before an auditor or a master.[1]

COMPUTE. See under CERTUM; COMPUTARE; DAY; TIME.

CON. 1. A form of cum (q. v.), in compound words.

2. An abbreviation of contra, and of conversation, qq. v.

CONCEAL. To hide, keep from view, cover up, secrete; to prevent discovery of; to withdraw from reach; to withhold information.

1. To hide or secrete a physical object from sight or observation.[2]

The act of March 2, 1799, authorizing the seizure of "concealed" goods, subject to duty, requires that the goods be secreted — withdrawn from view. It does not apply to a mere removal, though fraudulent.[3]

To "conceal property" in order to prevent its being taken on process includes not only physical concealment — literal secreting or hiding, but also the doing of any act by which the title of a party is concealed, — his property so covered up that it cannot be reached by process. The provision may apply to realty as well as to personalty.[4]

A horse may be "concealed" by destroying the means of identifying him. The word includes all acts which render the discovery or identification of property more difficult.[5]

A "concealed weapon" is a weapon willfully covered or kept from sight.[6] See further WEAPON.

2. To shelter from observation; to harbor; to protect. See HARBOR, 1.

3. To withdraw to a place where one cannot be found; to abscond, q. v.

"Concealment by a debtor to avoid the service of summons" involves an intention to delay or prevent creditors from enforcing their demands in the ordinary legal modes. It may be by the debtor's secreting himself upon his own premises, or by departing secretly to a more secure place, in or out of the county of his residence.[7]

(1887), cases; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Catholic Bishop, 119 Ill. 531 (1887).

[1] Jeffries v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 110 U. S. 309-10 (1884), cases.

[2] 1 Bates, Partn. §§ 382, 387, cases.

[3] Whipple v. Whitman, 13 R. I. 512-15 (1882), cases; Township of North Whitehall v. Keller, 100 Pa. 108 (1882); Holker v. Parker, 7 Cranch, 452 (1813).

[4] See R. S. §§ 269, 273.

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 341-48.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 164; 61 N. Y. 271.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 164; 1 Story, Eq. § 548.

[2] [Gerry v. Dunham, 57 Me. 339 (1869).

[3] United States v. Chests of Tea, 12 Wheat. 486 (1827).

[4] [O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray, 159 (1855); 4 Cush. 453.

[5] State v. Ward, 49 Conn. 442 (1881).

[6] Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 389 (1858).

[7] Dunn v. Salter, 1 Duv. 345 (1864). See also Frey v. Aultman, 30 Kan. 182, 184 (1883).

Leaving a place, requesting that false information of the person's movements be given, is concealment.[1]

4. To contrive to prevent the discovery or disclosure of a fact.

When the operation of a statute of limitations is to be suspended if the debtor "conceals the cause of action," there must be an arrangement or contrivance of an affirmative character to prevent subsequent discovery.[2]

To "conceal the death of a bastard child" is a misdemeanor. The time was when the mother had to prove, by at least one witness, that the infant was dead-born; if she could not she was presumed to be guilty of murder.[3] See AIDER AND ABETTER.

The fact that the owner of stolen goods does not know of the theft does not amount to a "concealment of the larceny" on the part of the thief, within a provision that where a thief conceals his crime the period of concealment is not to be included within the period of limitation.[4]

5. To neglect or forbear to disclose information; to withhold intelligence of a fact which in good faith ought to be communicated.[5]

In insurance law, concealment is the intentional withholding of any fact material to the risk, which the assured, in honesty and good faith, ought to communicate to the underwriter. . . That is a "material fact" the knowledge or ignorance of which naturally influences the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of the premium.[6] See further REPRESENTATION, 1 (2).

"Fraudulent concealment" is the suppression of something which a party is bound to disclose. The intention to deceive must clearly appear. The test is, whether one party knowingly suffered the other to deal under a delusion.[6]

"Undue concealment," which amounts to fraud in the sense of a court of equity, and for which it will grant relief, is the non-disclosure of those facts and circumstances which one party is under some legal or equitable obligation to communicate to the other, and which the latter has a right not merely in foro conscientiæ, but juris et de jure, to know.[7]

Deliberate concealment is equivalent to deliberate falsehood.[8]

In making a contract, each party is bound to communicate his knowledge of the material facts, provided he knows that the other party is ignorant of them, and they are not open and naked, or equally within the reach of the party's observation, and that there is an obligation to communicate truly and fairly, by confidence reposed, or otherwise.[1] See FRAUD.

Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. It is one thing to conceal, another to be silent.

Silence is not concealment — where matters are equally open for the exercise of judgment. See CAVEAT, Emptor; SILENCE.

CONCEPTION. See QUICKENING; PREGNANCY; VENTER.

CONCERN. To affect the interest of, be of importance to, a person. See INTEREST, 1.

Sales of property for charges by a bailee, or for taxes, "for whom it may concern," mean for the unknown or non-claiming owner.

A policy of insurance "on account of whom it may concern," or with equivalent terms, will be applied to the interests of the persons who ordered it, provided they had authority to insure. Thus, an agent, factor, carrier, bailee, trustee, consignee, mortgagee, or any other lien-holder may insure the property to the extent of his own interest, and, by the use of the words in question, for all other persons, to the extent of their respective interests, when he has previous authority or subsequent ratification.[2]

Concerning. In R. S., § 3894, which provides that no letter "concerning lotteries" shall be carried in the mails, refers to letters sent out to advertise lotteries.[3]

Concerns. Under a statute exempting persons from turnpike tolls when traveling on "ordinary domestic business of family concerns," a physician going to visit his patients is not exempt.[4]

CONCESSION. See CESSION.

CONCLUDE.[5] 1. To close, end, terminate; to finish, complete.

Conclusion. (1) An ending or closing, as of an instrument or a pleading. See DECLARATION, 2; INDICTMENT; PLEA, 2.

(2) The last argument to a court, or the last address to a jury. See BURDEN, Of proof.

(3) An inference or deduction: as, a conclusion of fact, or of law. See PRESUMPTION.

2. To put an end to, close up; to be final; to estop, bar, preclude.[6]

---

[1] North v. McDonald, 1 Biss. 59 (1854).

[2] Boyd v. Boyd, 27 Ind. 429 (1867).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 198, 358.

[4] Free v. State, 13 Ind. 334 (1859).

[5] See Gerry v. Dunham, 57 Me. 339 (1869).

[6] Magee v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 93 (1875), Swayne, J.; Bartholmew v. Warner, 32 Conn. 103 (1864).

[7] 1 Story, Eq. § 207; Paul v. Hadley, 23 Barb. 524 (1857).

[8] Crosby v. Buchanan, 23 Wall. 454 (1874).

[1] 4 Kent, 482, note (a).

[2] Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 536, 538 (1878), Swayne, J.; Robbins v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 16 Blatch. 127 (1879).

[3] Cummerford v. Thompson, 2 Flip. 614 (1880).

[4] Centre Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 216 (1840).

[5] L. claudere, to shut up, close.

[6] See Hilliard v. Beattie, 58 N. H. 112 (1877).

Conclusive. Determinative, decisive; not to be questioned, controverted, or contradicted, nor requiring support. Inconclusive: presumptive, rebuttable.

As, in speaking of a judgment, or of a return of service that is conclusive, and of conclusive and inconclusive evidence or presumptions, qq. v.

A party who fails to assert his right, after receiving notice of a proceeding affecting it, is said to be "concluded" by the judgment.

CONCUBINAGE. "Concubinage" and "prostitution" have no common-law meaning. In their popular sense they include all cases of lewd intercourse,[1] q. v. See also PROSTITUTION.

CONCUR. 1. To go along together; to co-exist: as, in saying that in malicious prosecution malice and want of probable cause must concur.

Concurrent. Co-existing; having effect, operation, or validity at one and the same time: as, a concurrent or concurrent — agreements, covenants, or promises, consideration, jurisdiction, negligence, possession or seisin, remedies, qq. v.

2. To entertain like views; to agree: as, to concur in an opinion, and concurring opinion. Opposed to dissent. See OPINION, 8.

CONDEMN. To pronounce wrong.

1. To sentence; to adjudge.

Condemnation. A sentence or judgment which condemns a person to do, give, or pay something; or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded.

Condemnation money. Money which the law sentences a party to pay;[2] also, in appeal bonds, the damages that may be awarded against the appellant, by judgment of the court.[3]

Bail above or bail to the action undertake that if the defendant is condemned in the action he will pay the costs and the condemnation, or else that they will.[4] See APPEAL, 2, Bond.

2. To declare forfeited: as, to condemn merchandise offered for sale in violation of a revenue law.

In Federal practice, proceedings in such cases are in rem, against the thing as offending. Whence the title of cases: United States v. Chests of Tea, Boxes of Cigars, Gallons of Whiskey. See RES.

3. To confiscate as contraband of war. See CONFISCATE.

4. To declare a vessel to be a prize, or unfit for service.[1] See PRIZE, 3.

5. To adjudge necessary for the uses of the public: as, to condemn private property under the power of eminent domain. See DOMAIN, 2.

A condemnation of lands is a purchase of them in invitum; the title acquired is a quitclaim.[2]

6. To judicially determine that realty, out of its rents and profits, clear of reprises, will not satisfy a judgment within a prescribed period, as, seven years. See INQUEST, Of lands.

CONDITIO. L. A stipulation, proviso, condition, q. v.

Conditio sine qua non. A condition without which (a thing can) not (exist); an indispensable prerequisite.

Melior est conditio. See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

CONDITION. 1. State, status, predicament.[3]

2. A restriction placed upon the use of a thing.[4]

Some quality annexed to real estate by virtue of which it may be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event; also, a quality annexed to a personal contract or agreement.[5]

The uncertain event itself; and the clause, in the instrument, which expresses the contingency.

An estate upon condition is such that its existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated.[6]

An estate upon condition implied in law is where a grant of an estate has a condition annexed to it inseparably, from its essence and constitution, although no condition is

[1] People v. Cummons, 56 Mich. 545 (1885), Campbell, J.

[2] Lockwood v. Saffold, 1 Ga. 74 (1846).

[3] Doe v. Daniels, 6 Blackf. 9 (1841); 107 U. S. 381-92.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 291.

[1] See 1 Kent, 101; 3 id. 103; 3 Wall. 28, 170, 514, 603; 5 id. 1, 28; 11 id. 268, 308; 106 U. S. 3.6.

[2] Lake Merced Water Co. v. Cowles, 31 Cal. 217 (1866).

[3] See Dunlap v. Mobley, 71 Ala. 105 (1881).

[4] See Ayling v. Kramer, 133 Mass. 13 (1882), cases.

[5] [Selden v. Pringle, 17 Barb. 465 (1854); Laberee v. Carleton, 58 Me. 213 (1865).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 152, 154, 340. See also 4 Kent, 126; Adams v. Copper Co., 4 Hughes, 593-94 (1880); 31 Conn. 475; 39 Ga. 207; 31 Mich. 49; 1 Nev. 53; 70 N. Y. 309.

expressed in words; as, that proper use shall be made of a franchise. . . An estate on condition expressed in the grant itself is where an estate is granted with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate shall either commence, be enlarged, or defeated, upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition.[1]

As respects realty, a "charge" is a devise with a bequest out of the subject-matter; and a charge upon the devisee personally is an estate on condition.[2] A "condition" is made by a grantor, and only he or his heir can take advantage of a breach.[3] A "covenant" is made by both grantor and grantee.[4] A "limitation" ends the estate without entry or claim; and a stranger may take advantage of the determination.[5]

Conditional. Subject to, or dependent upon, a condition; opposed to unconditional: as, a conditional — contract, conveyance, fee, guaranty, indemnity, liability, obligation, pardon, sale, qq. v.

Words which create a condition are "provided," "on account of," "if," and other words expressive of the intention. "Upon condition" is appropriate, but does not of necessity create an estate upon condition.[6]

Condition precedent. Such condition as must happen or be performed before the estate can vest or be enlarged. Condition subsequent. A condition upon the failure or non-performance of which an estate already vested may be defeated.[7]

Thus, if an estate for life be limited to A upon his marriage with B, the marriage is a condition precedent. Examples of conditions subsequent are: a grant of a fee-simple with a right to re-enter upon non-payment of the rent reserved; an estate held upon the condition that the grantee does not remarry, or continues to live at a certain place.

A "condition precedent" is one which must happen before either party becomes bound by the contract. A "condition subsequent" is one which follows the performance of the contract, and operates to defeat and annul it upon subsequent failure of either party to comply with the condition.[8]

Whether a qualification, restriction, or stipulation is a condition precedent or subsequent depends upon the intention of the parties, as gathered from the whole instrument.[1]

A condition precedent must be literally observed; a condition subsequent, tending, as it does, to destroy the estate, is not favored, and is construed strictly.[2]

No one can take advantage of a "condition subsequent" annexed to an estate in fee but the grantor or his heir, or the successor of an artificial person; and if they do not see fit to assert their right to enforce a forfeiture on that ground, the title remains unimpaired in the grantee. . . In what manner the reserved right of the grantor must be asserted depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant, that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent. If the grant be a public one, it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office at common law, or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of the property on account of a breach of the condition.[3]

Failure to perform a "condition precedent" bars relief; but equity will relieve against a forfeiture under a "condition subsequent" upon the principle of compensation, when that principle can be applied, giving damages, if damages should be given, and the amount is ascertainable. . . If a "condition subsequent" be possible at the time of making it, and becomes afterward impossible to be complied with, by the act of God, the law, or the grantor, the estate of the grantee, being once vested, is not thereby divested, but becomes absolute.[4]

Where an act is to be performed by the plaintiff before the accruing of the defendant's liability under his contract, the plaintiff must prove either his performance of such condition precedent, or an offer to perform it which the defendant rejected, or his readiness to fulfill the condition until the defendant discharged him from so doing, or prevented the execution of the matter which the contract required him to perform. . . Conditions precedent may be waived by the party in whose favor they are made. . . Where the conditions are dependent and of the essence of the contract, the performance of one depends upon the performance of another, and the prior condition must be first performed. In cases where either party may be compensated for a breach, the conditions are mutual and independent.[5]

When a condition subsequent is broken, relief may be had upon equitable terms; but when the condition is a precedent one, and neither fulfilled nor waived, no right or title vests, and equity can do nothing for the party in default: as, where an assured is to pay the premium before the assurer shall be bound.[6]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 152, 154, 340.

[2] See 4 Kent, 604; 12 Wheat. 498.

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 155; 4 Kent, 122, 127; 21 Wall. 63; 3 Gray, 142; 41 N. J. L. 76; 19 N. Y. 100.

[4] 2 Coke, Litt. 70; 2 Pars. Contr. 81; 6 Barb. 336.

[5] 16 Me. 158; 3 Gray, 142; 5 Neb. 407.

[6] Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. 165 (1866); Sohier v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 19 (1871); Casey v. Casey, 55 Vt. 520 (1883).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 154; Towle v. Remsen, 70 N. Y. 309 (1877).

[8] Story, Contr. §§ 40, 42-43; Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 27-29 (1877), cases; Redman v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 438 (1880); 17 Nev. 415; 35 N. H. 450; 47 Barb. 263.

[1] Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 736, 746 (1864), cases; 70 N. Y. 311; 2 Bl. Com. 156-57; 4 Kent, 130.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 154; 4 Kent, 125; 3 Pet. 374; 9 Wheat. 341.

[3] Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 63 (1874), cases, Field, J.

[4] Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 239 (1873), cases, Swayne, J.

[5] Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 27-29 (1877), cases, Clifford, J.; Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 736, 746 (1864), cases; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693, 696 (1878), cases; The Tornado, 108 id. 352 (1883).

[6] Giddings v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 102 U. S. 111 (1880). See 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1309-11.

Repugnant conditions. Such conditions as tend to the subversion of the estate; such as totally prohibit the alienation or use of property conveyed.

Conditions which prohibit alienations to particular persons, or for a limited period, or subject to particular uses, are not subversive of the estate: they do not destroy or limit its alienable or inheritable character. Hence, property may be conveyed in fee and yet be exempted from use as a slaughter-house, soap-factory, distillery, livery-stable, tannery, machine-shop, or place where intoxicating liquors are manufactured, sold, or stored.[1]

Conditions are also distinguished as: affirmative or positive, prescribing the doing of a positive act, and opposed to such as are negative; as collateral, regarding some act incidental to another act; as compulsory, expressly requiring the doing of an act; as consistent, agreeing with each other or others, and opposed to such as are inconsistent; as copulative, for the doing of related things, and opposed to such as are single, for the performance of one thing only; as disjunctive, for the doing of one of several things; as express, stated in express words, and opposed to such as are implied, imposed by inference of law; as possible, performable, however difficult, and opposed to such as are impossible, or not performable.

Although words in a deed or devise are sufficient to create a condition, the breach of which would forfeit the estate, the courts lean against such a construction, and hold that words which may be treated as a covenant or restriction do not amount to a condition.[2]

See AFTER; CONDONATION; CONTRACT; DEFEASANCE; IF; PERFORMANCE; PROMISE; PROVIDED; REPRESENTATION, 1; SALE; TERM, 2; TRADE; WHEN.

CONDONATION.[3] Forgiveness by a husband or a wife of a breach, in the other, of marital duty.

The free, voluntary, and full forgiveness and remission of a matrimonial offense.[4]

Unless accompanied by that operation of the mind, even cohabitation, without fraud or force, is insufficient to establish condonation.[4]

A mere inference of law from proven facts. It is the remission, by one of the parties, of an offense which the other has committed against the marriage, on condition of being afterward treated with conjugal kindness. While the condition remains unbroken, remedy for the condoned offense is barred. In cases of "connivance" (q. v.) no injury is done.[1]

Condonation of cruel treatment is conditioned upon the treatment ceasing.[2] See DIVORCE.

CONDUCT. See BEHAVIOR; DISORDER, 2; ESTOPPEL, Equitable.

A declaration of the result of a popular election may be included in power conferred upon the managers to "conduct" the election.[3]

CONFECTIONER. See MANUFACTURER; SUNDAY.

Selling liquors by the drink is not part of the business of a confectionery, and is not covered by a "confectioner's" license.[4]

CONFEDERACY.[5] A league, or compact; a combination.

1. An improper agreement or combination alleged against defendants in equity: whence "clause of confederacy" in a bill in equity.

2. A (criminal) conspiracy,[6] q. v.

3. A political confederation, q. v.

CONFEDERATION.[5] A compact. An agreement between states or nations by which they unite for mutual welfare.

Confederation, Articles of. The instrument under which the compact between the Thirteen States was formed.

The full title was "Articles of Confederation and perpetual union between the States of New Hampshire," etc. The Articles were reported July 12, 1776; recommended for adoption November 17, 1777; ratified by eight States July 9, 1778, and by the last State (Maryland) March 1, 1781. The First Congress thereunder met March 2, 1781. The Articles continued in force to March 4, 1789, when the first Congress under the Constitution met.[7] See STATE, 3 (2).

Confederation of Southern States; Confederate States of America. See GOVERNMENT, De facto; MONEY, Lawful; OATH, Of office; STATE, 3 (2); WAR.

---

[1] Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co., 100 U. S. 57-58 (1879), cases, Field, J. See Camp v. Cleary, 76 Va. 143 (1882), cases; Case v. Dwire, 60 Iowa, 444 (1883), cases; Smith v. Barrie, 56 Mich. 317-20 (1885), cases; Munroe v. Hall, 97 N. C. 210 (1887). In wills, see Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366-68 (1886), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 122-26, 462-67 (1884), cases; 20 Alb. Law J. 4-8 (1884), cases.

[2] Adams v. Valentine, 33 F. R. 4 (1887), cases, Wallace, J.

[3] L. condonare, to remit, pardon.

[4] Betts v. Betts, 2 Robt. 696 (N. Y., 1864), Barbour, J.

[1] [2 Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 33-34; 1 id. § 95 a. See also Morrison v. Morrison, 142 Mass. 362-65 (1886), cases; 23 Ark. 615; 23 Ga. 296; 73 Ill. 500; 34 Ind. 369; 60 id. 258; 140 Mass. 528; 32 Miss. 289; 8 Oreg. 294.

[2] Rose v. Rose, 87 Ind. 481 (1882). See generally Ohio Law J., Aug. 23, 1884.

[3] Blake v. Walker, 23 S. C. 526 (1885).

[4] New Orleans v. Jans, 34 La. An. 667 (1882).

[5] L. con-fœderare, to unite by covenant: fœdus, a league.

[6] See State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 284 (1876).

[7] See R. S. p. 7; 1 Story, Const. § 226; Owings v. Speed, 4 Wheat. 420 (1820); 1 Bancroft, Const. 3-113 (1884).

CONFESSIO. L. Acknowledgment; admission; confession.

Confessio facti. Admission of a fact. Confessio juris. Admission of the law — of the effect of a thing in law.

The latter is not received in evidence, for the party may not know the legal effect of a thing, as of an instrument.[1] See DECREE, Pro confesso; IGNORANCE.

CONFESSION. Acknowledgment; admission.

1. In civil law, the admission of a fact as true, existing, binding, or valid.

Confession and avoidance. The act or proceeding by which a party admits the truth of an allegation he proposes to answer, and then states matter intended to avoid the legal inference which may be drawn from the admission.

Some pleas of this sort are in justification or excuse — show that the plaintiff never had any right of action, because the act charged was lawful; while other pleas are in discharge — show that a right of action once existed, but that it is released by some subsequent matter.[2] See AVOID, 2; COLOR, 2; MATTER, 3, New.

Confession of action. A plea confessing the complaint, in whole or in part.[3]

An admission of a cause of action, as alleged in the declaration, to the extent of its terms.[4]

Confession of judgment. A voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court, giving, by consent and without the service of process, what could [might] otherwise be obtained by complaint, summons, and other formal proceedings.[5] See ATTORNEY, Warrant of; COGNOVIT.

2. In criminal law, acknowledgment of guilt.[6]

Direct, indirect, or incidental confession. An acknowledgment of criminal intent, made like an "implied admission" (q. v.) in civil cases.[7]

Judicial confession. A confession made before a magistrate or in a court, in the course of legal proceedings. Extra-judicial confession. Such as is made elsewhere than before a magistrate or in court; and embraces not only explicit and express confessions of crime, but all admissions from which guilt may be implied.[1]

Naked confession. A confession uncorroborated by other proof of the corpus delicti.[2]

Voluntary confession. The presumption is that all confessions are voluntary: free from promise or threat. The state of mind must be brought about by the accused's own independent reasoning.[3]

A confession, when the free prompting of a guilty conscience, unincited by hope or fear, is evidence. It is receivable although obtained by artifice, by liquor given, or under promise of some collateral good, or made to a physician, parent, or spiritual adviser. At common law, an attorney is the only protected confidant.[4]

The practice is to inquire of the witness whether the prisoner had been told, in effect, that it would be better for him to confess, or worse for him if he did not confess. The judge, exercising a legal discretion, and governed by extreme caution, receives or rejects the proposed proof.[5] See further ACCOMPLICE; ADMISSION, 2; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

CONFESSIONAL. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

CONFIDENCE. See COMMUNICATION; CREDIT; FAITH; FIDUCIARY; TRUST, 1; USE, 3.

CONFINEMENT. See PRISON.

CONFIRMATION. Making firm what was before infirm.[6]

1. Affirmation; ratification, q. v.

2. A secondary or derivative conveyance, defined by Coke to be "a conveyance of an estate or right in esse, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased."[7]

3. The judicial sanction of a court: as, the confirmation of a sale.[8]

A decree of confirmation upon a judicial sale is a judgment of the court, which determines the rights of the parties. Before confirmation, the whole proceed-

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 96, 208.

[2] Steph. Pl. 72, 79, 229; 1 Chitty, Pl. 540; 2 id. 644; 3 Bl. Com. 310; 31 Conn. 177.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 303, 307.

[4] Hackett v. Railroad Co., 35 N. H. 397 (1857).

[5] First Nat. Bank of Canandaigua v. Garlinghouse, 53 Barb. 619 (1868).

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 170.

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 214.

[1] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 216; 1 Cliff. 23; 28 Mo. 230.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 217.

[3] Commonwealth v. Sego, 125 Mass. 213 (1878); Speer v. State, 4 Tex. Ap. 479-86 (1878), cases; People v. McGloin, 91 N. Y. 247 (1883).

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. ch. XII.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 219. And see Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 584-87 (1884), cases; 4 Bl. Com. 357; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 112, note; 59 Cal. 457; 68 Ga. 663; 34 La. An. 17-18; 89 N. C. 629.

[6] [Coke, Litt. 295.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 325; 1 Inst. 295; Litt. §§ 515, 516, 531; Langdeau v. Hanes, 21 Wall. 530 (1874).

[8] Langyher v. Patterson, 77 Va. 473 (1883).

ing is in fieri, and under the control of the court. Until confirmation, the accepted bidder is not regarded as the purchaser. Whether the sale will be confirmed depends upon the circumstances of each case, and the sound discretion of the court in view of fairness, prudence, and the rights of all concerned.[1]

CONFISCATE.[2] To transfer property from private to public use; to forfeit property to the prince or state.[3]

Usage tends to confine the word to seizures of property by way of punishment of a breach of allegiance, or in the exercise of rights given by the laws of war.[4]

"Confiscation" is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject. "Condemnation" as prize is the act of a belligerent against another belligerent. Confiscation may be effected by such means, summary or arbitrary, as the sovereign, expressing its will through lawful channels, may please to adopt. Condemnation as prize can only be made in accordance with principles of law recognized in the common jurisprudence of the world. Both are proceedings in rem, but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner to the property, while in prize the tenure of the property is qualified, provisional, and destitute of absolute ownership.[5]

Confiscation Acts of 1861 and 1862. The act of August 6, 1861, and the act of July 17, 1862.[6]

Made in exercise of the war powers of the Government. The right to make such laws exists alike in civil and foreign war. Congress determines what property shall be taken.[7]

The proceedings are justified as an exercise of belligerent rights against a public enemy, and are not a punishment for treason. Hence, the pardon of an act of treason will not restore rights of property previously condemned.[8]

The act of 1862, as explained by a resolution of the same date, provided that forfeiture of realty should not extend beyond the life of the offender. Passing this act was an exercise of war powers, not a criminal proceeding.[9] Its design was to strengthen the Government and to enfeeble the enemy by taking from the adherents of that enemy the power to use their property in aid of the hostile cause. It provided for the seizure and condemnation of the life-estate, with the fee left in the heirs.[1]

The act of 1861 made property a lawful subject of capture and prize. The object of the act of 1862 was to confiscate the property of traitors by way of punishment for countenancing the rebellion.[2]

The act of 1862, generally known as the Confiscation Act, and the joint resolution of the same day explanatory thereof, must be construed together. In a sale of property thereunder, all that could be sold was a right to the property seized, terminating with the life of the offender. Such sale does not affect the rights of a mortgagee in favor of a third person. The property goes to the Government or to the purchaser cum onere.[3]

Debts and credits, which are intangible, are nowhere confiscated.[4] See ATTAINDER; PARDON; PROHIBITION, 2; WAR.

CONFLAGRATION. See FIRE, Department; NECESSITY; TAKE, 8.

CONFLICT. Striking together; meeting in collision; opposition, as of authority, interest, jurisdiction, titles.

Conflict of laws. Opposition of laws upon the same object, whether of the same or of different jurisdictions.

As between different States, there is more or less disagreement in the laws relating to marriage and divorce, legitimacy, pending suits, judgments, intestate estates, assignments by insolvents, bills and notes, remedies, and some other subjects.

The laws of each State affect all persons, property, contracts, acts and transactions within its boundaries. Foreign laws are allowed to bind foreign-made transactions unless they injuriously affect citizens, violate statutes, or are opposed to good morals or public policy. Realty is governed by the law of the place where it is situated; personalty, by the law of the owner's domicil.[5]

See COMITY; COMMERCE; LAW, Foreign; MARSHAL, 1, (2); PLACE, Of contract, delivery, payment; PROPERTY; REPEAL.

CONFORMITY. Agreement; adjustment.

A bill in equity filed by an executor or administrator, when he finds the affairs of the estate so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the

---

[1] Brock v. Rice, 27 Gratt. 815-16 (1876), cases; Terry v. Coles's Executor, 80 Va. 702-7 (1885), cases.

[2] L. confiscare, to transfer to the public purse: fiscus, a purse.

[3] Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. 234 (1796); 12 Mo. Ap. 234.

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 299; 1 Kent, 52.

[5] Winchester v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 48 (1879), Davis, J.

[6] 12 St. L. 319, 590.

[7] Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 308, 312-13 (1870); Alexander's Cotton, 2 id. 419 (1864).

[8] Semmes v. United States, 91 U. S. 27 (1875).

[9] Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. 350, 338 (1869); Miller v. United States, 11 id. 304, 268 (1870); Day v. Micou, 18 id. 160 (1873).

[1] Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 207 (1875); Waples v. Hays, 108 id. 8 (1882).

[2] Kirk v. Lynd, 106 U. S. 319 (1882); Phœnix Bank v. Risley, 111 id. 125 (1884).

[3] Shields v. Schiff, 124 U. S. 356 (1888), Bradley, J.; Avegno v. Schmidt, 35 La. An. 585 (1883): 113 U. S. 300 (1885).

[4] 1 Kent, 64-65. See further 4 Cranch, 415; 6 id. 286; 8 id. 122, 128; 13 Wall. 351; 15 id. 591; 20 id. 92; 2 Dill. 555; Chase, Dec. 259; 111 U. S. 125, 52; 96 id. 176.

[5] See Story, Wharton, Conf. of Laws.

direction of court, is called a "bill of conformity."[1]

The suit is against the creditors generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and a final decree made settling the order and payment of the assets.

So called because the plaintiff undertakes to "conform" to the decree, or because the creditors are compelled to conform thereto.[1]

CONFRONT. To bring face to face.

The constitutional provision that the accused shall be "confronted with the witnesses against him" means that the witnesses on the part of the State shall be personally present when the accused is on trial;[2] or that they shall be examined in his presence, and be subject to cross-examination by him.[3]

If witnesses are absent by the procurement of the accused, competent evidence of the testimony they gave on a previous trial will be received.[4]

A person accused of a crime is deprived of his right of appearing in person and of being confronted with the witnesses against him if the jury view the locus in quo without his presence.[5] See DECLARATION, 1, Dying.

CONFUSION. Mixing, intermixture; intermingling, blending; confounding.

Confusion of boundaries. Where the boundary lines of different titles are conflicting, disputed, or uncertain; also, that branch of equity jurisprudence which ascertains such boundaries, q. v.

Confusion of debts. The concurrence of two adverse rights to the same thing in one and the same person.[6]

Confusion of goods. Intermixture of the goods of different owners so that the separate properties are indistinguishable.

Applies to the mixing of chattels of one and the same general description. "Accession" (q. v.) is where various materials are united in one product.[7]

He who causes a confusion of goods must bear whatever loss or disadvantage results.

The general rule that governs cases of intermixture of property has many exceptions. It applies in no case where the goods intermingled remain capable of identification, nor where they are of the same quality or value; as where guineas are mingled, or grain of the same quality. Nor does the rule apply where the intermixture is accidental, or even intentional, if not wrongful. All authorities agree, however, that if a man willfully and wrongfully mixes his own goods with those of another owner, so as to render them indistinguishable, he will not be entitled to his proportion, or any part, of the property; certainly not, unless the goods of both owners are of the same quality and value. Such intermixture is a fraud. And so, if a wrong-doer confounds his own goods with goods which he suspects may belong to another, and does this with intent to mislead or deceive that other, and embarrass him in obtaining his right, the effect must be the same. . . . Even where the articles are of the same kind and value, the wronged party has a right to the possession of the entire aggregate, leaving the wrong-doer to reclaim his own, if he can identify it, or to demand his proportional part. So held where bales of cotton, of different weight and grade, were purposely intermixed to render identification of particular bales impracticable.[1]

Confusion of rights or titles. In civil law, when titles to the same property unite in the same person.

"Confusion" in the civil law is synonymous with "merger" in the common law.[2]

CONGEABLE.[3] Permissible; done lawfully.

"If his entry were congeable, it will be considered as limited by his right."[4]

CONGREGATION. An assemblage or union of persons for a religious purpose.[5]

A voluntary association of individuals or families, united for the purpose of having a common place of worship, and to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines and duties, and to administer the ordinances.[6] See CHURCH.

CONGRESS. See CONSTITUTION.

"All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."[7]

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the

[1] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 544–45.

[2] Westfall v. Madison Co., 62 Iowa, 427 (1883).

[3] Howser v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. 338 (1865).

[4] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 158–60 (1878), cases; United States v. Angell, 11 F. R. 43 (1881); 34 La. An. 121.

[5] People v. Lowrey, 70 Cal. 198 (1886).

[6] Woods v. Ridley, 11 Humph. 198 (1840); Story, Prom. Notes, § 439.

[7] 1 Schouler, Pers. Prop. 41, 40–54.

[1] The Idaho, 93 U. S. 585–86 (1876), cases, Strong, J. See also Jewett v. Dringer, 30 N. J. E. 291–311 (1878), cases; Queen v. Wernwag, 97 N. C. 393 (1887); 11 Wall. 369; 21 id. 64; 1 Saw. 306; 14 Ala. 695; 44 id. 609; 81 Ill. 293; 36 id. 150; 12 Me. 243; 56 id. 566; 8 Md. 301; 21 Pick. 298; 6 Gray, 134; 14 Allen, 376; 107 Mass. 123; 10 Mich. 423; 22 id. 311; 31 id. 215; 25 Minn. 88; 12 Mo. Ap. 284–85; 33 N. H. 423; 39 id. 557; 57 id. 514; 10 N. Y. 213; 24 id. 595; 6 Hill, 461; 24 Pa. 246; 20 Wis. 615; 20 Vt. 333; 2 Bl. Com. 405; 2 Kent, 365.

[2] Palmer v. Burnside, 1 Woods, 183 (1871).

[3] Cŏn'-ge-able. F. congé, leave: L. commeare, to go and come.

[4] Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 107 (1822), Story, J.; Litt. § 279.

[5] [Runkel v. Winemiller, 4 H. & M'H. 459 (1799).

[6] Baptist Church of Hartford v. Witherall, 3 Paige, Ch. 301 (1832), Walworth, Ch.

[7] Constitution, Art. I, § 1. On the powers of Congress, see 2 Bancroft, Const. VII, VIII; ib. abr. ed. 222–225 (1884),—summarizes the discussions in the original constitutional convention.

People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature." [1]

"No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty-five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." [2]

"Representatives . . . shall be apportioned among the several States . . . according to their respective Numbers . . . excluding Indians not taxed. . ." [3]

"When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies." [4]

"The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers. . ." [5]

"The Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote." [6]

One-third of the Senators are chosen every second year. "If Vacancies happen by Resignation or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies." [7]

"No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen." [8]

"The Vice President . . . shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided." [9]

"The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States." [10]

"The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators." [11]

"The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day." [12]

"Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide." [1]

"Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member." [2]

"Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of each House on any question shall, at the Desire of one-fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal." [3]

"Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting." [4]

"The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." [5]

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his Continuance in Office." [6]

"All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur in Amendments as on other Bills." [7]

It is provided by statute that Representatives shall be chosen in single districts; [8] and that the elections shall take place on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November. [9] Vacancies are filled as may be provided by State laws. [10] Votes must be by written or printed ballot: other votes are of no effect. [11]

For the election of Senators it is provided that the legislature of each State, chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator. [12] At least one

[1] Constitution, Art. I, § 2, cl. 1.
[2] Constitution, Art. I, § 2, cl. 2.
[3] Constitution, Art. I, § 2, cl. 3.
[4] Constitution, Art. I, § 2, cl. 4.
[5] Constitution, Art. I, § 2, cl. 5.
[6] Constitution, Art. I, § 3, cl. 1.
[7] Constitution, Art. I, § 3, cl. 2.
[8] Constitution, Art. I, § 3, cl. 3.
[9] Constitution, Art. I, § 3, cl. 4.
[10] Constitution, Art. I, § 3, cl. 5.
[11] Constitution, Art. I, § 4, cl. 1.
[12] Constitution, Art. I, § 4, cl. 2.

[1] Constitution, Art. I, § 5, cl. 1.
[2] Constitution, Art. I, § 5, cl. 2.
[3] Constitution, Art. I, § 5, cl. 3.
[4] Constitution, Art. I, § 5, cl. 4.
[5] Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 1.
[6] Constitution, Art. I, § 6, cl. 2.
[7] Constitution, Art. I, § 7, cl. 1.
[8] R. S. § 23: Acts 2 Feb., 30 May, 1872.
[9] R. S. § 25: Acts 2 Feb., 1872, 3 March, 1875.
[10] R. S. § 26: Act 2 Feb., 1872.
[11] R. S. § 27: Acts 28 Feb., 1871, 30 May, 1872; 76 Mo. 146.
[12] R. S. § 14: Act 25 July, 1866.

vote must be taken every day, during the session, until a person is chosen.[1] An existing vacancy is filled at the same time and in the same way;[2] and a vacancy occurring during the session is filled by election, the proceedings for which are had on the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized and has had notice of the vacancy.[3]

When Congress convenes, the president of the Senate administers the oath of office to its members;[4] and takes charge of the organization. The clerk of the preceding House of Representatives makes a roll of the Representatives-elect, and places thereon the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the law.[5] If the clerk cannot serve, from sickness, absence, etc., the sergeant-at-arms of the preceding House performs this duty.[6]

In 1866 the salary of members of Congress was fixed at $5,000, and mileage, by the most usual route, at twenty cents a mile. In 1873 the salary was raised to $7,500; and in 1874 reduced to $5,000.[7]

See further, as to powers, such subjects as ACT, 3; BANKRUPTCY; CENSUS; COMMERCE; COIN; CONFEDERATION; CONTEMPT, 2; COPYRIGHT; COURTS, United States; DUTIES; ELECTORAL; FRANK; IMPEACH, 4; JOURNAL; LAND, Public; LOBBY; MARQUE; NATURALIZE; OATH, Of office; PATENT, 2; PIRACY, 1; POST-OFFICE; PRESIDENT; REVENUE; SWEEPING CLAUSE; TENDER, 2, Legal; TENURE, Of office; TERRITORY, 2; TREATY; VETO; WAR; WEIGHTS; WELFARE; YEAS AND NAYS.

CONJUNCTIVE. See DISJUNCTIVE.

CONJURATION. See WITCHCRAFT.

CONNECTING. See CONNECTION, 1.

CONNECTION. 1. "Railroad connection" means either such a union of tracks as to admit the passage of cars from one road to another, or such intersection of roads as to admit the convenient interchange of freight and passengers.[8]

The word conveys no implication of a right to connect business with business.[9]

The "connections" of a steamer, referred to in a policy of insurance, may refer to regular connections only.[10]

Connecting line. In the sense of the Georgia act of 1874, is where any railroad at its terminus, or any intermediate point along its line, joins another, or where two railroads have the same terminus; or where a railroad is adjacent to another and capable of being joined to it by a switch, either at its terminus or where ever along its line they meet or converge, and the right is given to make such connection, whether it be voluntarily granted or not.[1] See COMMERCE.

2. Any relation by which one society is linked or united to another.[2]

3. "Connections" is more vague than "relations." In popular phrase, a wife's relations are her husband's connections; but connections, unless they are also relations, never take by the statute of distributions.[3] See RELATION, 3.

4. "Guilty connection," applied to a man and a woman, imports carnal connection.[4]

CONNIVANCE.[5] Intentional failure or forbearance to see or actually know that a tort or offense is being committed; willful neglect to oppose or prevent; specifically, assent or indifference, by a husband, to immoral behavior by his wife.

It has been repeatedly held, under 20 and 21 Vict. (1857), c. 85, and similar statutes in this country, that a husband's connivance at his wife's prostitution bars subsequent complaint or cause of action on his part. The connivance need not be active: it is sufficient if it be made to appear that there has been a course of criminal conduct of which he actually was or must have been cognizant. Total indifference may justify inference of original consent.

It has also been held that if he once consents to her fall from virtue he cannot complain of any other act naturally resulting from such fall; but that doctrine carried too far would deprive a man of all hope, however repentant he may be, and however he may strive to win his wife to repentance. No authority decides that, under all circumstances, connivance at one act is an absolute bar to a divorce for a prior act as to which consent was not given, expressly or by implication.[6]

To be a bar to a decree for divorce the fact must appear that the libelant either desired and intended, or at least was willing, that the libelee should err. "A corrupt intention," it has been said, "is necessary to constitute connivance."[7]

See COLLUSION; CONDONATION; CRIME, Recriminate; DIVORCE; VOLO, Volenti, etc.

CONSANGUINITY.[8] The connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor;[9] blood-relationship. Opposed, affinity, q. v.

[1] R. S. § 15: Act 25 July, 1866.
[2] R. S. § 16: Act 25 July, 1866.
[3] R. S. § 17: Act 25 July, 1866.
[4] R. S. § 28: Act 1 June, 1798.
[5] R. S. § 31: Acts 21 Feb., 1867, 3 March, 1868.
[6] R. S. §§ 32-33: Act 21 Feb., 1867.
[7] R. S. § 35: Act 26 July, 1866, 3 Mar., 1873, 20 Jan., 1874.
[8] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Catawissa R. Co., 53 Pa. 90, 59 (1866); 60 Md. 269.
[9] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Denver, &c. R. Co., 110 U. S. 676-79 (1884).
[10] Schroeder v. Schweizer Lloyd Mar. Ins. Co., 60 Cal. 478 (1882).

[1] Logan v. The Central R. Co., 74 Ga. 684, 693 (1885).
[2] [Allison v. Smith, 16 Mich. 433 (1868).
[3] Storer v. Wheatley, 1 Pa. 507 (1845), Gibson, C. J.
[4] State v. Georgia, 7 Ired. L. 324 (1847).
[5] L. con-nivere, to close the eyes, wink at.
[6] Morrison v. Morrison, 142 Mass. 363-65 (1886), cases.
[7] Robbins v. Robbins, 140 Mass. 530-31 (1885), cases. See also 2 Bishop, Mar. & D. § 17; 34 Am. Law Reg 98-100 (1886), cases.
[8] L. consanguineus: con, together; sanguis, blood.
[9] 2 Bl. Com. 202.

Consanguinei. Blood relations.

Consanguineal; consanguineous. Of the same blood or ancestor.

The subject is of importance in the law of inheritance and marriage.

Lineal consanguinity. Subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other. Collateral consanguinity. Subsists between persons who descend from the same stock or ancestor, but not one from the other.[1]

The common ancestor is the stirps or root, the stirpes, trunk or common stock, whence the relations branch out.[1]

The method of computing degrees in the canon law, adopted into the common law, is, to begin at the common ancestor (propositus) and reckon downward: and in whatever degree the two persons or the most remote is distant from the common ancestor, that is the degree in which they are related. The method in the civil law is to count upward, from either of the persons related, to the common stock, and then downward to the other, reckoning a degree for each person both ascending and descending.[2]

The canonists take the number of degrees in the longest line; the civilians, the sum of the degrees in both lines.[2]

The canon law rule prevails in the United States.

See ANCESTOR; DESCENT; INCEST.

CONSCIENCE. The moral sense; the sense of right and justice.

Many violations of natural justice are left wholly to conscience, and are without redress, equitable or legal.[4]

Human laws are not so perfect as the dictates of conscience, and the sphere of morality is more enlarged than the limits of civil jurisdiction. There are many duties, belonging to the class called "imperfect obligations," which are binding on conscience, but which human laws do not and cannot undertake to enforce directly. When the aid of a court of equity is sought to carry into execution such a contract, then the principles of ethics have a more extensive sway.[4]

See RIGHT, 1; FAITH.

Conscience of the court. To "inform the conscience of the court" is to furnish a court such data as will enable it to decide a matter discreetly and equitably.

Thus, the verdict of a jury out of chancery is intended to inform the conscience of the chancellor.[5]

Court of conscience. The title of a court for the recovery of debts not exceeding forty shillings, formerly existing in some districts of England, as, in London, for the benefit of trade.

Examinations were summary, on the oath of the parties and witnesses. Such order was made as seemed consonant with equity and conscience. In 1846 jurisdiction was transferred to the county courts.[1]

Rights of conscience. The constitutional declaration that "no human authority can control or interfere with the rights of conscience," refers to the right to worship the Supreme Being according to the dictates of the heart: to adopt any creed or hold any opinion on the subject of religion; and, for conscience sake, to do, or to forbear to do, any act not prejudicial to the public weal.[2]

Where liberty of conscience would impinge on the paramount right of the public it ought to be restrained. . . There are few things, however simple, that stand indifferent in the view of all the sects.[3]

"The constitution of this State secures freedom of conscience and equality of religious right. No man can be coerced to profess any form of religious belief or to practice any peculiar mode of worship, in preference to another. Beyond this, conscientious doctrines and practices can claim no immunity from the operation of general laws made to promote the welfare of the whole people. So long as no attempt is made to force upon others the adoption of a belief, so long is conscience left in the enjoyment of its natural right of individual decision."[3]

See further BLASPHEMY; CONSCIONABLE; EQUITY; HOLIDAY; RELIGION; SUNDAY.

CONSCIONABLE. In accord with strict honesty and justice: as, a conscionable appraisement or inventory of the articles of a decedent's estate. Unconscionable. Contrary to probity, fair-dealing, or what a fair-minded man would do or refrain from doing: as, an unconscionable contract or bargain, q. v.

Conscionable is an ill-contrived word: from conscience-able, or conscible (not now in use).[4]

CONSCIOUS. The expression, in a charge, "conscious of what he (a prisoner alleged to be insane) was doing," refers to the real nature, the true character, of the act as a crime, not to the mere act itself.[5]

CONSENSUAL. See CONSENT.

CONSENSUS. L. Perceiving or feeling alike; agreement; consent.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes the law: the terms of a contract, lawful in

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 203–4; 45 Pa. 432.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 206–7.

[3] 4 Kent, 412; 2 Coke, Litt. *158; 1 Williams, Ex. 364; 45 Pa. 432–33.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 14, 2.

[5] 2 Kent, 490; 1 Story, Eq. § 306; 1 Johns. Ch. 630.

[6] Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 252 (1879).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 81.

[2] Commonwealth v. Lesher, 17 S. & R. 160 (1827), Gibson, C. J.

[3] Specht v. Commonwealth, 8 Pa. 322 (1848).

[4] Skeat, Etym. Dict.

[5] Brown v. Commonwealth, 78 Pa. 128 (1875).

its purposes, constitute the law as between the parties.

Consensus, non concubitus, facit matrimonium. Consent, not intercourse, creates marriage.

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes error: the effect of a mistake is obviated or waived by concurrence.

Applies to an irregularity or a matter of mere form in procedure. A defect in substance, pleaded over, is still demurrable.[1]

Also applies to voluntary payments of illegal exactions, where recovery could have been prevented.[2]

Qui tacet consentire videtur. He who is silent is regarded as consenting: silence gives consent.

A man who is fully aware of what is being done against his interest cannot remain passive and afterward resist the disadvantage his silence has caused.[3] Nor can a person complain of the effect of words uttered in his presence, when he should have denied their truth.[4]

The maxim is to be construed as applying only to those cases where the circumstances are such that a party is fairly called upon to deny or to admit his liability. But if silence may be interpreted as assent where a proposition is made to one which he is bound to deny or admit, so also it may be if he is silent in the face of facts which fairly call upon him to speak.[5] See ESTOPPEL; SILENCE.

CONSENT. Agreement of mind; concurrence of wills; approval. Compare ASSENT; CONSENSUS.

An agreement of the mind to what is proposed or stated by another.[6]

The synonym of assent, acquiescence, concurrence; agreement or harmony of opinion or sentiment.[7]

Implies assent to some proposition submitted. In cases of contract, means the concurrence of wills. Supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers.[8]

The theory of the law in regard to acts done and contracts made by parties, affecting their rights, is, that in all cases there must be a free and full consent to bind the parties. Consent is an act of the reason, accompanied with deliberation. . . Hence, if consent is obtained by meditated imposition, circumvention, surprise, or undue influence, it is to be treated as a delusion, and not as a deliberate and free act of the mind. . . Upon this ground the acts of a person non compos mentis are invalid.[1]

Consent rule. See EJECTMENT.

Consensual. 1. Formed by mere consent.

In civil law, a contract of sale is consensual; not so a contract of loan. In the case of a sale, upon consent given, the parties have reciprocal actions; in the case of a loan, there is no action till the thing is delivered.[2]

2. In the sense of resting upon mere consent, all contracts, except marriage, may be said to be consensual.

See ACQUIESCENCE; AGE; DECREE; DURESS; RATIFICATION.

CONSEQUENCES. Persons of sound mind are held to intend whatever are the natural and necessary consequences of their acts: they are supposed to know what these consequences will be.

Experience has shown the rule to be a sound one, and one safe to be applied in criminal as well as in civil cases. Exceptions to it undoubtedly arise, as where the consequences likely to flow from the act are not matters of common knowledge, or where the act or the consequence is attended by circumstances tending to rebut the ordinary probative force of the act or to exculpate the intent of the agent.[3]

The law does not undertake to charge a person with all the possible consequences of a wrongful act, but only with its probable and natural result; otherwise the punishment would often be disproportioned to the wrong, thereby impeding commerce and the ordinary business of life, and rendering the rule impracticable. Although the damages may arise remotely out of the cause of action, or be, to some extent, connected with it, yet if they do not flow naturally from it, or could not, in the ordinary course of events, have been expected to arise from it, they are not sufficiently proximate to authorize a recovery.[4] See CAUSE, 1; DELIBERATION; INTENT; NEGLIGENCE.

Consequential. See CASE, 8; DAMAGES.

CONSERVATOR. One who preserves, or has the charge of a matter or thing, as, of the peace, q. v.

In Connecticut and Illinois, the committee of a lunatic or distracted person.[5]

[1] See Rogers v. Cruger, 7 Johns. *611 (1808); Morrison v. Underwood, 5 Cush. 55 (1849); Cushing v. Worrick, 9 Gray, 386 (1857); Wilkinson's Appeal, 65 Pa. 190 (1870).

[2] Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. v. United States, 104 U. S. 687 (1881).

[3] See 99 U. S. 581; 20 Conn. 98; 41 N. H. 465; 9 Barb. 17; 2 Pars Contr. 759.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 197.

[5] Day v. Caton, 119 Mass. 515-16 (1876), cases.

[6] Plummer v. Commonwealth, 1 Bush, 78 (1866).

[7] Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 431 (1870).

[8] Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 644 (1887), Simpson, C.

[1] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 222-23.

[2] See Hare, Contracts, 85-86.

[3] Clarion Bank v. Jones, 21 Wall. 337 (1874), Clifford, J. See also Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 167 (1878); 5 Cush. 305; 4 Bl. Com. 197.

[4] Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 115 (1885).

[5] Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. *280 (1824); Hutchins v. Johnson, 12 id. 376 (1837); Nuetzel v. Nuetzel, 13 Bradw. 542 (1883).

The duties of a conservator of the estate of a ward are defined, in a general way, by statute. He acts independently of the ward, and is alone responsible for his acts. Debts incurred by the ward prior to the appointment of the conservator remain claims against the ward alone.[1]

CONSIDERATION.[2] 1. Deliberation, mature reflection.

"It is considered" is equivalent to "it is adjudged" by the court.[3]

The corresponding Latin formula is consideratum est per curiam. It imports that a judgment is the act of the law, pronounced by the court, after due deliberation and inquiry.[4]

The phrase is not an essential part of a judgment in a criminal case.[5]

2. That which the party to whom a promise is made does or agrees to do in exchange for the promise.[6]

The reason which moves a party to enter into a contract. . . The civilians hold that in all contracts there must be something given in exchange, something that is mutual or reciprocal. This thing, which is the price or motive of the contract, is called the consideration.[7]

Something esteemed in law as of value in exchange for which a promise is made.[8]

The "motive" for entering into a contract and the "consideration" of the contract are not the same. Nothing is consideration that is not regarded as such by both parties. It is the price voluntarily paid for a promisor's undertaking. Expectation of results will not constitute a consideration.[9]

That which one party to a contract gives or does or promises in exchange for what is given or done or promised by the other party.[10]

The proper test is detriment to the promisee. All our "considerations" would be "reasons" (causæ) in the Roman law; but it does not follow that all "reasons" — e. g., desire to aid a meritorious object, or to benefit a member of one's own family — are considerations in our sense. And though all "considerations" are reasons, many of them are so slight that as mere reasons they would be entitled to little weight. With us, there must be a material quid pro quo, something given or surrendered in return, no matter how slight, to make the promise binding.[10]

Void for want of consideration are: a promise to make a gift, the promisee surrendering nothing; a warranty given after a sale; a promise to pay for unsolicited past services; a promise to pay toward a religious or charitable object, when purely gratuitous; promises to pay debts that have been released.[1]

Any damage to another, or suspension or forbearance, is a foundation for an undertaking, and will make it binding; though no actual benefit accrues to the party undertaking.[2]

It is not absolutely necessary that a benefit should accrue to the person making the promise. It suffices that something valuable flows from the person to whom it is made; and that the promise is the inducement to the transaction. In the case of a letter of credit given by A to B, the person who, on the faith of that letter, trusts B, has a remedy against A although no benefit accrued to him.[3]

Damage to the promisee constitutes as good a consideration as benefit to the promisor.[4]

Any benefit, delay, or loss to either party. More fully, either a benefit to the party promising, or some trouble or prejudice to the party to whom the promise is made.[5]

If there is a benefit to the defendant or a loss to the plaintiff consequent upon and directly resulting from the defendant's promise in behalf of the plaintiff, there is a sufficient consideration moving from the plaintiff to enable him to maintain an action upon the promise to recover compensation.[6]

A valuable consideration may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other.[7]

"Any damage or suspension of a right, or possibility of a loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the promise of another, is a sufficient consideration for such promise, and will make it binding, although no actual benefit accrues to the party promising." This rule is sustained by a long series of adjudged cases.[8]

The performance of gratuitous promises depends wholly upon the good-will which prompted them, and will not be enforced by the law. The rule is that, to support an action, the promise must have been made upon a legal consideration moving from the promisee to the promisor. To constitute such consideration there must be either a benefit to the maker of the promise, or loss, trouble, or inconvenience to, or a charge or obligation resting upon, the party to whom the promise is made.[9]

---

[1] Brown v. Eggleston, 53 Conn. 119 (1885).

[2] L. considerare, to view attentively.

[3] Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 85 (1862).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 396, 180.

[5] Staff v. Lake, 34 La. An. 1070 (1882); State v. Bassett, id. 1110 (1882); 39 Wis. 393.

[6] Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 197 (1887), Gray, J.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 443.

[8] [Bishop, Contr. § 38, citing definitions.

[9] Pnupot v. Gruninger, 14 Wall. 377 (1871), Strong, J.

[10] 1 Whart. Contr. § 498.

[1] 1 Whart. Contr. §§ 494-95.

[2] Pillans v. Van Mierop, 3 Burr. 1673 (1765), Yates, J.

[3] Violett v. Patton, 5 Cranch, 150 (1809), Marshall, C. J.

[4] Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. 182 (1829), Story, J.; United States v. Linn, 15 id. 314 (1841).

[5] 2 Shars. Bl. Com. 443 (1859).

[6] Platt v. United States, 22 Wall. 507 (1874), Clifford, J

[7] Currie v. Misa, L. R., 10 Ex. 162 (1875), Lush, J.

[8] Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U. S. 143 (1876), Davis, J Purports to quote Pillans v. Van Mierop, supra.

[9] Cottage Street M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass

A valuable consideration may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to the one party, or some extension of time of payment, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other.[1]

Executed consideration. An act already done, or value already given; a consideration already received or wholly past.

Executory consideration. A promise to do or to give something in the future; a consideration to be rendered.[2]

Good consideration. That of blood, or natural affection between near relatives.

Valuable consideration. Money, marriage, work done, services rendered, or the like.

Each is viewed as an equivalent. The former is founded in motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty; the latter in motives of justice.[3]

"Good consideration" sometimes means a consideration which is valid in point of law; and it then includes a meritorious, as well as a valuable, consideration. But it is more often used in contradistinction to valuable consideration.[4]

By "consideration" as defined to be any benefit, delay, or loss to either party to a contract, is all that is meant by "valuable consideration." The distinction between "good" and "valuable" consideration is largely speculative.[5]

Moral consideration. The duty to perform, voluntarily, an obligation which is no longer enforceable in law.

This is sufficient to support an executed contract; and it will serve as a consideration for a new promise: as, a promise to pay a debt contracted in infancy, or outlawed, or discharged by a decree in bankruptcy. In such cases the moral duty was once a legal duty.[6]

The duty to perform a positive promise, not contrary to law or public policy, or obtained by fraud or mistake, is an obligation in morals, and a sufficient consideration for an express promise.[7] See OBLIGATION, 1.

Considerations are also distinguished as: concurrent, such as arise at the same time, or under promises made simultaneously; as continuing, executed in part only; as entire, incapable of division or severance, unapportionable — if part is illegal, all is illegal; as equitable, based upon moral duty, moral; as express, stated in words, oral or written; as gratuitous, founded on no detriment to the promisee;[1] as implied, not stated in words, yet regarded in law as the consideration; as legal, valid in law, and as opposed to such as is illegal, invalid, immoral;[2] as impossible, such as, in the nature of things, cannot be performed, and not such as is merely very difficult;[3] as nominal, consisting of a sum or value purely nominal, as that of "one dollar;" and as sufficient, such as satisfies the requirement of law.

A valid consideration is absolutely necessary to a contract. An engagement without it is a nudum pactum, and totally void; as, a promise to make a gift.[4] The purpose is to prevent the too free-handed, the improvident, the reckless, from binding themselves to the performance of undertakings either wasteful of their means or else affording no reciprocal advantage.[5] But any degree of reciprocity will take an agreement out of this category.[6] See PACT, Nude.

Common examples of valid considerations are: prevention of litigation; forbearance to enforce a well-founded claim; assignment of a debt or right; work and service; trust and confidence; advances made, or liability incurred, in consequence of a subscription of money.

A seal imports a consideration.

Every bond, from the solemnity of the instrument, and every promissory note, from the subscription, carries with it internal evidence that a sufficient consideration has passed.[6]

A good consideration will not avail when the contract tends to defraud creditors or others of their rights. A valuable consideration will always support a contract in a court of common law, and, if adequate, in a court of equity.[7]

However small the consideration, if given in good faith, it will support the contract.[8]

A past consideration will not support a promise unless requested beforehand. A previous request is implied from service accepted or benefits received.[9]

529-30 (1877); cases, Gray, C. J.; University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57 Iowa, 307 (1881).

[1] Nat. Bank of the Republic v. Brooklyn City, &c. R. Co., 102 U. S. 46 (1880), Clifford, J. See also 6 Col. 192; 17 Conn. 517; 58 N. H. 443.

[2] See Bishop, Contr. §§ 76-82, cases; Leake, Contr. 18; 1 Story, Contr. § 22; 1 Whart. Contr. § 493.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 297, 444. See 4 Kent, 464; 1 Story, Eq. § 354; Bishop, Contr. § 42, cases; 58 Ala. 307; 20 Cal. 294-25; 9 Barb. 225.

[4] [1 Story, Eq. § 354. See 3 Cranch, 157.

[5] See 1 Whart. Contr. § 497.

[6] See Bishop, Contr. § 44, cases; 1 Pars. Contr. 431-36; 1 Story, Contr. § 590; 1 Whart. Contr. § 512; Leake, Contr. 86, 615; 2 Bl. Com. 445; 25 How. Pr. 484.

[7] Bentley v. Lamb, 112 Pa. 484 (1886): 25 Am. Law Reg. 635-36 (1886), cases.

[1] 1 Whart. Contr. § 494; M. L. Church v. Kendall, ante.

[2] See 1 Pars. Contr. 479.

[3] [1 Pars. Contr. 460.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 445.

[5] See Broom, Philosophy of Law, 38.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 446; Whart. Contr. § 498, Smith, Contr. 13.

[7] See 2 Bl. Com. 444, 297.

[8] Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 452 (1844); Bish. Contr. § 45, cases.

[9] 1 Pars. Contr. 427, 474.

A consideration subsequently arising may cure a deed defective for want of a consideration.[1]

The consideration of a written contract may be shown by parol.[2]

As to the parties to a deed, the consideration clause is prima facie evidence, with the effect only of a receipt, open to explanation and contradiction, not to defeat the deed as a conveyance, but to show the true consideration.[3]

See further ADEQUATE, 1; CONTRACT; CONVEYANCE, 2, Voluntary; DELIBERATION; FAITH, Good; FORBEARANCE; LEGAL, Illegal; NEGOTIABLE; SECURITY, 1; VALUE, Received; VOID.

CONSIGN.[4] 1. In civil law, for a debtor, under the direction of a court, to deposit with a third person an article of property for the benefit of a creditor.

Consignation. A deposit which a debtor makes, by authority of court, of the thing which he owes, in the hands of a third person.[5]

2. In mercantile law, to send or transmit goods to a merchant or factor for sale. . . The radical meaning of the word, which is of French origin, is to deliver or transfer as a charge or trust.[6]

Modern usage extends the meaning to transmission, by the agency of a common carrier, of merchandise or other movables for custody, sale, etc.

Consignee.[7] The factor or agent to whom merchandise or other personal property is consigned. Consignor. He who makes a consignment of personal property.

Consignment. Property intrusted to a common carrier for delivery to a person named in the bill of lading; also, the act or transaction by which the property is transported. See BAILMENT; CARRIER; FACTOR; LADING, Bill of.

CONSIMILI. See CASUS, Consimili.

CONSISTENT. See CONDITION; CUSTOM; REPEAL.

CONSISTING. Is not synonymous with "including," which implies that there may be other objects in the same category, though not specified. The words "consisting of" will be limited to the things specifically mentioned.[1]

The devise "I give all my worldly goods, consisting of household furniture, money, cattle, likewise my house and the lot I now occupy," was held not to pass other realty than that particularly designated.[1]

CONSOLIDATE. To unite or merge into one; to combine; to amalgamate.

To unite into one mass or body, as, to consolidate various funds; to unite in one, as, to consolidate legislative bills.[2]

Consolidation of actions. A direction that one of several pending actions, involving the same facts and issues, shall be tried, the result of the trial to be an adjudication of all the causes; or else that all the actions proceed to trial and judgment as one suit.

Sometimes termed the "consolidation rule."[3]

Allowed in suits against several insurers; in suits on separate promissory notes of the same date; but not in actions upon independent contracts, nor where claims have different guarantees; nor in actions upon distinct penalties.

The United States courts may consolidate actions of a like nature, or relative to the same question, as they deem reasonable.[4]

Consolidation of associations. Union or merger into one, of two or more companies or corporations organized for the same, or for some related, purpose. In England, "amalgamation."

Whether the consolidation of two companies works a dissolution of both, and the creation of a new corporation, depends upon the intention of the legislature.[5]

A sale by one corporation of all of its property to another corporation, is, as against creditors not assenting thereto, fraudulent and void.[6]

When two companies unite or become consolidated under the authority of law, until the contrary appears the presumption is that the united or consolidated company has all the powers and privileges, and is subject to all the restrictions and liabilities, of the companies out of which it was created.[7]

---

[1] Jones v. N. Y. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 U. S. 627 (1879).

[2] See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 32, 26; 71 Ala. 95; 55 Pa. 504; 37 id. 410; 13 R. I. 95.

[3] Allen v. Kennedy, 91 Mo. 328 (1886), cases.

[4] L. con-signare, to mark, seal: to register, attest. In civil law a consignment of money was sealed up,—Bouvier.

[5] Weld v. Hadley, 1 N. H. 304 (1818).

[6] Gillespie v Winberg, 4 Daly, 330 (1872), Daly, C. J.

[7] Con-si-nee'; con-sin'-or.

[1] Farrish v. Cook, 6 Mo. Ap. 328, 331 (1878).

[2] Indep. District of Fairview v. Durland, 45 Iowa, 56 (1876), Seevers, C. J.

[3] See Gould, Plead., IV, s. 108; Cox, Com. L. Pr. 239; 59 Miss. 126.

[4] R. S. § 921; Keep v. Indianapolis, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 302 (1882): 10 F. R. 455.

[5] Central R. Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 670–76 (1875), cases; Branch v. Charleston, ib. 677, 682 (1875), cases; Green County v. Conness, 109 id. 106 (1883); Tyson v. Wabash R. Co., 11 Biss. 510 (1883); Woodruff v. Erie R. Co., 93 N. Y. 615–16 (1883).

[6] Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, &c. Transp. Co., 4 McCrary, 432 (1892).

[7] Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 147 (1886), cases.

CONSORT. 1. A companion.

Consortship. Fellowship, companionship, consortium, q. v.

2. A vessel that keeps company witl. another vessel.

Consort-ship. A contract between owners of wrecking vessels to share mutually with each other moneys awarded as salvage, whether earned by one vessel or by both.[1]

Prevents mischievous competitions, and collisions. When made for an indefinite time, continues until dissolved by notice; not dissolved by mere removal of a master. Enforceable in admiralty, against property or its proceeds in the custody of the court.[1]

CONSORTIUM. L. Union of lots or chances: companionship; society; conjugal fellowship and assistance.

The right which a husband has to the conjugal fellowship of the wife, to her company, coöperation, and aid in every conjugal relation. . . He is not the master of the wife, and can maintain no action for the loss of her services as his servant. His interest is expressed by the word consortium. Some acts of a stranger to the wife are of themselves invasions of the husband's right and necessarily injurious to him; others may or may not injure him, according to their consequences: in which cases the injurious consequences must be proved, and that the husband actually lost her company and assistance.[2]

Per quod consortium amisit. By which he lost her assistance.

For a common battery upon the person of the wife trespass for damages is to be brought by husband and wife jointly; but, if, by reason of the maltreatment, he is deprived of her company and assistance, he has a separate remedy therefor.[3]

CONSPIRACY.[4] A combination of two or more persons, by some concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish a purpose, not in itself criminal or unlawful, by criminal or unlawful means.[5]

The unlawful combination or agreement of two or more persons to do an act unlawful in itself, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means.[6]

When two or more persons, in any manner or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common, unlawful design. . . A combination formed by two or more persons to effect an unlawful end, they acting under a common purpose to accomplish that end.[1]

The combination of two or more persons to do something unlawful, as a means or as an ultimate end. Many acts not indictable come within this definition. It is sufficient if the end proposed, or the means employed, are, by reason of the power of combination, particularly dangerous to the public interests or injurious to some individual, although not criminal.[2]

At common law the gist of the offense is the unlawful agreement. The offense is complete without an overt act — the law punishes the unexecuted intent.[3]

While, by statute, in many of the States, some overt act is necessary, the final result of such act does not vary the legal character of the offense.[4]

As known at common law conspiracy is not defined in any act of Congress as an offense against the United States, nor is it, therefore, cognizable as such in her courts.[5]

The act of Congress of May 17, 1879,[6] which is a substitute for the act of March 2, 1867,[7] provides that: "If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States in any manner for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy; all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not more than ten thousand dollars, or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or to both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."

Although by that enactment something more than the common-law definition is necessary to complete the offense, to wit, some act done to effect the object of the conspiracy, it remains true that the combination of minds in any unlawful purpose is the foundation of the offense. The conspiracy is for any fraud or offense against the United States.[8]

---

[1] Andrews v. Wall, 3 How. 571 (1845), cases, Story, J.

[2] Bigaouette v. Paulet, 134 Mass. 124 (1883), W. Allen, J. See also Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes, 577 (1745); Bigelow, Ld. Cas. Torts, 328, 333-40, cases; Jones v. Utica, &c. R. Co., 40 Hun, 351 (1886).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 140.

[4] L. con, together; spirare, to breathe, whisper.

[5] [Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. 123, 121 (1842), Shaw, C. J. Approved in Spies et al. v. People (Anarchists' Case), 122 Ill. 213 (1887); Heaps v. Dunham, 95 id. 586 (1880); 3 Greenl. Ev. § 89.

[6] Buffalo Lubricating Oil Co. v. Everest, 30 Hun, 588 (1883); 17 F. R. 147.

[1] United States v. Babcock, 3 Cent. Law J. 144 (1876), Dillon, J.; United States v. Nunnemacher, 7 Biss. 190 (1876).

[2] [Commonwealth v. Waterman, 122 Mass. 57 (1877), cases, Colt, J.

[3] United States v. Walsh, 5 Dill. 60 (1878); United States v. Martin, 4 Cliff. 162-63 (1870), cases; 16 Blatch. 24-25; 97 Pa. 405.

[4] State v. Norton, 23 N. J. L. 40-46 (1850); Hazen v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. 363-64 (1854), cases.

[5] United States v. Martin, 4 Cliff. 160 (1870).

[6] 1 Sup. R. S. p. 484; 21 St. L. 4.

[7] R. S. § 5440.

[8] United States v. Hirsch, 100 U. S. 34-35 (1879). See also 1 Low. 266; 11 Blatch. 168; 16 id. 15, 21; 2 Woods.

As soon as the conspiracy is formed and an act is done in pursuance thereof, the crime is consummated. In three years thereafter the bar of the statute of limitations is complete.[1]

An overt act, being necessary, must be alleged.[2]

Also punishable by acts of Congress are (or have been) conspiracies: to prevent a person from accepting or exercising an office; to deter a person from attending court as a party, witness, or juror; to impede the due course of justice, with intent to deny equal protection of the laws; to prevent a person from supporting a Federal elector or a member of Congress;[3] to destroy a vessel or the goods aboard with intent to injure any underwriter or lender of money;[4] to levy war against the United States;[5] to obtain approval of false claims for lands, pensions, etc.[6]

But no provision of the Constitution authorizes Congress to enact a law under which two or more free white citizens can be punished for conspiracy or going in disguise to deprive another free white citizen of a right accorded by the law of the State to all classes of persons.[7]

At common law a general allegation of a conspiracy to effect an object criminal in itself is sufficient, although the indictment omits all charges of the particular means employed.[8]

When the criminality consists in an unlawful agreement to promote a criminal or illegal purpose, that purpose must be clearly and fully stated in the indictment. When the criminality consists in the agreement to promote a purpose not of itself criminal or unlawful, by the use of fraud, force, falsehood, or other criminal or unlawful means, such intended use of fraud, etc., must be set out in the indictment.[9]

The connection of the members being once shown every act and declaration of each member, in pursuance of the common purpose, is the act and declaration of all.[10]

If one concur, proof of agreement to concur is not necessary. As soon as the union of wills for the unlawful purpose is perfected the offense is complete. The joint assent may be established as an inference from other facts.[1]

It is not necessary to prove that the accused came together and agreed, in terms, to have a common design, and to pursue it by common means. It is enough to prove that they pursued the same objects, often by the same means, one performing one part, another another part of the same, so as to complete it with a view to the attainment of that same end.[2]

Every person entering into a conspiracy already formed is in law a party to all the acts done by any of the other parties, before or afterward, in furtherance of the common design.[3]

It makes no difference in the degree of responsibility that some of the conspirators were not present at the consummation of the design.[4]

If the act of one, proceeding according to the common intent, terminates in a criminal result, though not the particular result meant, all are liable. That is, a person may be guilty of a wrong he did not specifically intend, if it came naturally, or even accidentally, through some other specific or general evil purpose.[5]

He who conspires with others to do such an unlawful act as will probably result in the taking of human life is presumed to have understood the consequences which might reasonably be expected from carrying it into effect, and to have assented thereto.[6]

"He who inflames people's minds, and induces them, by violent means, to accomplish an illegal object, is himself a rioter, though he takes no part in the riot." . . If he awakes into action an indiscriminate power, he is responsible. If he gives directions vaguely and incautiously, and the persons receiving them act according to what he might have foreseen would be the understanding, he is responsible.[7]

Such declarations of a conspirator as are in furtherance of the common design can be introduced against the other conspirators. Declarations which are merely narrative as to what has been or will be done may be admitted against him who made them or in whose presence they were made. . . The rule that the conspiracy must first be established prima facie before the acts of one confederate can be received in evidence against another cannot well be enforced where the proof depends upon a vast number of iso-

175, 197; 3 id. 47; 4 Dill. 128, 145, 407; 5 id. 58; 3 Hughes, 553; 12 F. R. 250; 32 id. 534, infra.

[1] United States v. Owen, 32 F. R. 534 (1887).

[2] United States v. Reichert, 32 F. R. 142 (1887). Field, J.

[3] R. S. §§ 1980, 5518-19.

[4] R. S. § 5364.

[5] R. S. § 5336.

[6] See R. S., Index, "Conspiracy."

[7] United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 637-44 (1882), cases. Declared unconstitutional the act of Congress of April 20, 1871: R. S. § 5519. See also Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678 (1887).

[8] See Commonwealth v. Fuller, 132 Mass. 566 (1882); United States v. De Griff, 16 Blatch. 24-25 (1879), cases; Barras v. Bidwell, 3 Woods, 47 (1876); Hazen v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. 363-64 (1854), cases; Rex v. Gill & Henry, 2 B. & Ald. 205 (1818); 109 U. S. 199; 113 id. 104.

[9] Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. 126 (1842), Shaw, C. J. See also 4 Bl. Com. 136; 3 id. 126; 3 Ala. 360; 6 id. 765; 12 Conn. 101; 30 id. 507; 25 Ill. 17; 30 Me. 132; 48 id. 218; 1 Mich. 220; 4 id. 444; 15 N. H. 394; 16 Johns. 592; 76 N. Y. 247; 41 Wis. 278; 2 Q. B. D. 59; 11 Q. B. 245; 10 Cox, Cr. Cas. 325.

[10] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 111; 64 Ind. 473; 87 id. 28; 88 id. 15; 66 Ga. 636.

[1] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 213 (1887), citing 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 190.

[2] Spies v. People, ib. 170, citing 3 Greenl. Ev. § 93.

[3] Spies v. People, ib. 179, citing 3 Greenl. Ev. § 93.

[4] Spies v. People, ib. 177, 253, citing Williams v. People, 54 Ill. 422 (1870); Brennan v. People, 15 id. 517 (1854); Whart. Hom. § 338.

[5] Spies v. People, ib. 225, quoting 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 636, cases.

[6] Spies v. People, ib. 226, 229, cases; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 225 a.

[7] Spies v. People, ib. 198, 224, 230, quoting Regina v. Sharpe, 3 Cox, C. C. 288 (1848), Wilde, C. J.; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, §§ 640-41; Queen v. Most, L. R., 7 Q. B. D. 244 (1881).

lated circumstances. In any case, where the whole evidence shows that a conspiracy actually existed, it will be considered immaterial whether the conspiracy was established before or after the introduction of the acts and declarations of the members.[1]

A simple conspiracy is not the subject of a civil action unless it results in actual damage to the person aimed at. If such damage, but not the combination, is proven, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict against any defendant shown to have committed an unlawful act.[2]

A bill in equity will not lie against persons (pilots) who have confederated to destroy the business of the owner of a vessel by publications in newspapers, by instituting suits, and in other ways. The injured person has adequate remedies at law for each of those acts.[3]

See ACCOMPLICE; BOYCOTTING; COMBINATION, 2; INDICTMENT; PROSECUTION, Malicious; SEDITION; STRIKE, 2; TRADES-UNIONS.

CONSTABLE.[4] 1. Originally, an officer who regulated matters of chivalry, tournaments, and feats of arms, performed on horseback.

2. An officer appointed to preserve the peace, and to execute the processes of a justice of the peace.[5]

Constabulary. Pertaining to or consisting of peace-officers. Constablery. The jurisdiction of a constable.

High constable. 1. A constable, or "lord high constable," in the primitive sense above noted. 2. The chief police officer in a town or city: the chief constable.

Petty constable. 1. An inferior officer in every town and parish, subordinate to a high constable.[6] 2. An officer charged with keeping the peace within a county or other district, and with executing such processes as are issued by justices of the peace.

Special constable. A person appointed to execute a warrant on a particular occasion or to co-operate in preserving the peace on a special emergency. See ARREST, 2; COUNTY, Power of; MARSHAL, 1 (3); PEACE, 1.

CONSTAT. L. 1, v. It appears: literally, it is established, certain, made manifest. Compare CONSTATE.

Non constat. It does not appear; it does not follow: it is not certain. Non constitit: it did not appear.

"Before judgment, non constat, the accused may be innocent."[1] "Non constat by the record, who gave notice."[2] "Whether the title was to come from him, and when, and on what conditions, non constat."[3] "Non constituit whether a felony was committed till the principal was attainted."[4]

2, n. A certificate of what appears upon record as to a matter in question.

Thus, an exemplification of the enrollment of letters-patent under the great seal was called a "constat."[5]

There may be a possession of a vessel under a claim of title "with a constat of property."[6]

CONSTATE.[7] To establish, ascertain; to evidence, testify, prove.

"Unless there has been some violation of the charter or the constating instruments" of the corporation, "the directors will not be personally liable."[8]

CONSTITUENT. See AGENT.

CONSTITUTED. See AUTHORITY, 2.

CONSTITUTION.[9] Originally, an important decree or edict. Later, the laws and usages which gave a government its characteristic features — the organic law.[10]

The constitution of England consists of customs, statutes, common laws, and decisions of fundamental importance. American constitutions are enacted; but the meaning of much of them is found in decided cases.[10]

The English constitution is a growth. Rights in favor of the Commons were established as follows: (1) In the reign of Henry III (1216–72), participation in levying taxes and in legislation, and control of applications for supplies. (2) In the reign of Edw. III (1326–77), enlarged participation in levying taxes and in legislation; inquiry into public abuses; impeachment of public ministers. (3) In the reigns of Hen. IV, V, and VI (1399–1461), the exclusive right to impose taxes; the right to grant supplies to the sovereign upon redress of grievances; larger participation in legislation; control of the administration; impeachment of ministers; and certain rights of privilege — freedom of speech in Parliament, freedom from arrest

---

[1] Spies v. People, ib. 237–39; State v. Winner, 17 Kan. 298 (1876); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 111; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 414–15.

[2] Buffalo Lubricating Oil Co. v. Everest, 30 Hun, 588 (1883), cases.

[3] Francis v. Flinn, 118 U. S. 385 (1886).

[4] F. conestable: L. comes stabuli, count of the stable.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 355.

[6] [1 Bl. Com. 355.

[1] 16 Wall. 370.

[2] 59 Wis. 652.

[3] 58 Pa. 398.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 323. See also 6 Wheat. 229; 34 La. An. 1134.

[5] Coke, Litt. 225.

[6] The Tilton, 5 Mas. 468 (1830), Story, J.

[7] Con-state'. L. con-stare, to stand firm, be certain, known. See CONSTAT.

[8] Ackerman v. Halsey, 37 N. J. E. 363 (1883), Runyon, Ch.

[9] L. constituere, to make to stand together, to establish.

[10] Lieber, Encyc. Am., tit. Constitution.

during attendance upon Parliament, and the right of deciding upon election returns.[1]

An act of extraordinary legislation by which the people establish the structure and mechanism of their government, and in which they prescribe fundamental rules to regulate the motion of the several parts.[2]

The body of rules and maxims in accordance with which the powers of sovereignty are habitually exercised.[3]

Although, in some sense, every State may be said to have a constitution, the expression "constitutional government" applies to those States only whose fundamental rules or maxims prescribe how those shall be chosen who are to exercise the sovereign powers, and impose restraints upon that exercise, for the purpose of protecting individual rights, and of shielding them against any assumption of arbitrary power.[3]

If the constitution is unwritten there may be laws or documents which declare some of its important principles; as, in England, in the cases of the Magna Charta, Petition of Rights, Habeas Corpus Act, Bills of Rights, and the Common Law as the expositor of those charters.[3]

In America, the principle of constitutional liberty is that sovereignty resides in the people; and, as they could not collectively exercise the powers of government, written constitutions were agreed upon. These instruments create departments for the exercise of sovereign powers; prescribe the extent and methods of the exercise, and, in some particulars, forbid that certain powers, which would be within the compass of sovereignty, shall be exercised at all. Each constitution is, moreover, a covenant on the part of the people with each individual thereof, that they have divested themselves of the power of making changes in the fundamental law except as agreed upon in the constitution itself.[3]

A written constitution establishes iron rules, which, when found inconvenient, are difficult of change; it is sometimes construed by technical rules of verbal criticism rather than in the light of great principles; and it is likely to invade the domain of legislation, instead of being restricted to fundamental rules, and thereby to invite demoralizing evasions. An unwritten constitution is subject to perpetual change at the will of the law-making authority; against which there can be no security except in the conservatism of that authority, and in its responsibility to the people, or, if no such responsibility exists, then in the fear of resistance by force.[1]

Our State constitutions are forms of government ordained and established by the people in their original sovereign capacity to promote their own happiness and permanently secure their rights, property, independence, and common welfare. They are deemed compacts in the sense of their being founded on the voluntary consent or agreement of a majority of the qualified voters of the State. A constitution is in fact a fundamental law or basis of government, and falls strictly within the definition of "law" as given by Blackstone,—a rule of action prescribed by the supreme power in a state, regulating the rights and duties of the whole community. It is in this light that the language of the Constitution of the United States contemplates it; for it declares that this constitution, etc., "shall be the supreme Law of the land."[2]

A constitution is the letter of attorney from the people.[3]

Constitutions guard the rights of personal security, personal liberty, private property, and of religious profession and worship.[4]

Constitutions are mainly for the protection of minorities. In times of excitement and distress, their rights are most likely to be sacrificed.[5]

By the Revolution the transcendent powers of Parliament devolved upon the people. A portion of this power they delegated to the government of the United States. Such as remained they bestowed upon the governments of the States, with certain express limitations and exceptions. The Federal Constitution confers powers particularly enumerated; that of each State is a grant of all powers not excepted. The former is construed strictly against those who claim under it; the latter, strictly against those who stand upon the exceptions, and liberally in favor of the government itself. The Federal government can do whatever is author-

[1] See 4 Bl. Com. Ch. XXXIII; 3 Law Quar. Rev. 204-10 (1887).

[2] Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. 347 (1825), Gibson, J. See also Wabash, &c. R. Co. v. People, 105 Ill. 240 (1883), Walker, J.

[3] [Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 22-23; Const. Lim. 2-3. See also Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 531-32 (1884), Matthews, J.

[1] [Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 22-23.

[2] 1 Story, Const. §§ 338-39.

[3] 1 Sharswood, Bl. Com. *147, note.

[4] 1 Kent, 407.

[5] Bunn v. Gorgas, 41 Pa. 446 (1862).

and, expressly or by clear implication; the government of a State, whatever is not prohibited.[1]

The Federal Constitution went into effect the first Wednesday of March, 1789. September 14, 1786, commissioners from five States met at Annapolis, and recommended that a general convention be held at Philadelphia, to revise the Articles of Confederation. February 21, 1787, the congress of the confederation made a similar recommendation. May 25, 1787, the delegates assembled, organized, and, about four months later, to wit, September 17th, adjourned, having drafted a "Constitution of the United States of America." June 21, 1788, the document, as a constitution, was ratified by the ninth State. September 13, 1788, Congress set the time for choosing Presidential electors, appointing March 4, 1789, as the day, and New York City as the place, when and where the new Government of the United States should begin operations.[2] See CONFEDERATION, Articles of; NATIONAL.

The Constitution was ordained and established by "the people of the United States." It was not necessarily carved out of existing State sovereignties, nor was it a surrender of powers already existing in State institutions, for the powers of the States depend upon their own constitutions; and the people of every State had the right to modify and restrain them, according to their own views of policy or principle. On the other hand, it is clear that the sovereign powers vested in the State governments, by their respective constitutions, remained unaltered and unimpaired, except so far as they were granted to the government of the United States. "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." (Amd. Art. X.) The government, then, can claim no powers which are not granted to it, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication. . . The instrument is to have a reasonable construction, according to the import of its terms; and where a power is expressly given in general terms, it is not to be restricted to particular cases, unless that construction grows out of the context expressly, or by necessary implication. The words are to be taken in their natural and obvious sense, not in a sense unreasonably restricted or enlarged. It unavoidably deals in general language. It did not suit the purpose of the people in framing this great charter of our liberties to provide for minute specifications of its powers, or to declare the means by which these powers should be carried into execution. It was foreseen that this would be a perilous and difficult, if not an impracticable, task. The instrument was intended to endure through a long lapse of ages. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects; and restrictions and specifications, which, at the present, might seem salutary, might, in the end, prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving the legislature, from time to time, to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects, and to mould and model the exercise of its powers, as its own wisdom, and the public interests, require.[1]

The Federal government is one of enumerated powers. The question respecting the extent of the powers actually granted will continue to arise, as long as our system shall exist. There is no phrase in the instrument which excludes incidental or implied powers, and which requires that everything granted shall be expressly and minutely described. Even the Tenth Amendment, framed for the purpose of quieting the excessive jealousies which had been excited, omits the word "expressly," and declares only that the powers "not delegated to the United States, . . nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people;" thus leaving the question, whether the particular power, which may become the subject of contest, has been delegated to the one government or prohibited to the other, to depend upon a fair construction of the whole instrument. A constitution, to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit, and of all the means by which they may be carried into execution, would partake of the prolixity of a legal code, and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. Its nature, therefore, requires that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of the objects themselves. The powers given imply at least the ordinary means of execution. The government which has a right to do an act, and has imposed on it the duty of performing that act, must be allowed to select the means.

But this use of means is not left to general reasoning. To the enumerated powers is added that of making "all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." (Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 18.) "Necessary" (q. v.) does not here import an absolute physical necessity, so strong that one thing to which another may be termed necessary cannot exist without that other. If this clause does not enlarge it cannot be construed to restrain the powers of Congress, or to impair the right of the legislature to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of the government.[2]

The revolution which established the Constitution was not effected without immense opposition. Fears were entertained that the very powers which were

[1] Sharpless v. Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 160-64, 172-73 (1853), cases, Black, C. J.; 17 id. 119; 52 id. 427; 13 Conn. 125; 46 N. Y. 401; 16 How. 428.

[2] See R. S. p. 17; Century Mag., Sept., 1887; Bancroft, Const.

[1] Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 324-27 (1816), Story, J.; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 id. 187 (1824), Marshall, C. J.

[2] M'Culloch v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 405-23 (1819), Marshall, C. J.,—upon the constitutionality of the act of April 10, 1816, incorporating the Bank of the United States. See also Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 441 (1884); Exp. Yarbrough, ib. 651, 658 (1884).

essential to union might be exercised in a manner dangerous to liberty.[1]

The rule laid down in M'Culloch v. Maryland has ever since been accepted as a correct exposition of the Constitution. It is settled that the words "all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" powers expressly granted or vested have a sense equivalent to the words: laws, not absolutely necessary indeed, but appropriate, plainly adapted to constitutional and legitimate ends; laws not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution; laws really calculated to effect objects intrusted to the government. It was needful only to make express grants of general powers, coupled with a further grant of such incidental and auxiliary powers as might be required for the exercise of the powers expressly granted. Perhaps the largest part of the functions of the government have been performed in the exercise of implied powers.[2]

It is indispensable to keep in view the objects for which the powers were granted. If the general purpose of an instrument of any nature is ascertained the language of its provisions must be construed with reference to that purpose and so as to subserve it. And there are more urgent reasons for looking to the ultimate purpose in examining the powers conferred by the Constitution than there are for construing any other instrument. We do not expect to find in a constitution minute details. It is necessarily brief and comprehensive. It prescribes outlines, leaving the filling up to be deduced from these outlines. . . The powers conferred upon Congress must be regarded as related to each other, and all means for a common end. Each is but part of a system, a constituent of one whole. No single power is the ultimate end for which the Constitution was adopted. A subordinate object is itself a means designed for an ulterior purpose. It is impossible to know what those non-enumerated powers are, and what their nature and extent, without considering the purposes they were intended to subserve. Those purposes reach beyond the mere execution of all powers definitely intrusted to Congress and mentioned in detail. . . In the nature of things, enumeration and specification of all the means or instrumentalities, necessary for the preservation and fulfillment of acknowledged duties, were impossible. They are left to the discretion of Congress, subject only to the restrictions that they be not prohibited and be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the enumerated powers. . . The existence of a power may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantive powers expressly defined. . . Congress has often exercised powers not expressly given nor ancillary to any single enumerated power. These are resulting powers, arising from the aggregate powers. Illustrative instances of the recognition and exercise of such powers are found in the right to sue, and to make contracts; the oath required of officers; building a capitol or Presidential mansion; the penal code; the census "of free white persons in the States," as to persons not free and in the Territories; the collection of statistics; carrying the mails, and punishing offenses against the postal laws; improving harbors; establishing observatories, light-houses, break-waters; the registry and construction of ships, and the government of seamen; the United States bank — for the convenience of the treasury and internal commerce, and to which the government subscribed one-fifth of the stock, although the bank was a private corporation doing business for its own profit; priority of debts due to the United States over other creditors; the Legal Tender Acts of 1862 and 1863.[1]

Constitutions are instruments of a practical nature, founded on the common business of human life, adapted to common wants, designed for common use, and fitted for common understandings.[2]

A constitutional provision is "self-executing" or "self-enacting" when it supplies the rule by which the right given may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty imposed may be enforced. It is not self-executing when it merely indicates the principles, without laying down rules by means of which those principles may be given the force of law. . . Some provisions are mandatory; others, without legislation, are dormant.[3]

Constitutional. 1. Relating to the framing or formation of a written constitution: as, a constitutional convention.

2. Based upon, secured, or regulated by a constitution: as, constitutional — governments, liberty, rights.

3. Authorized by a particular constitution, whether written or unwritten.

Unconstitutional. Contrary to the principles or rules of a constitution. Whence constitutionality, unconstitutionality.

An "unconstitutional" law either assumes power not legislative in its nature, or is inconsistent with some provision of the Federal or State constitution.[4]

A State legislature cannot pass a law conflicting with the rightful authority of Congress, nor perform a judicial or executive function, nor violate the popular privileges reserved by the Declaration of Rights, nor change the organic structure of the government, nor exercise any other power prohibited in the consti-

[1] Barron v. Mayor of Baltimore, 7 Pet. 250, 247 (1833).

[2] Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. 614–15 (1869), Chase, C. J. This power (Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8) "was so clearly necessary that without cavil or remark it was unanimously agreed to" by the members of the Constitutional convention; 2 Bancroft, Const. 149.

[1] Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 533–47 (1870), cases, Strong, J.; (Second) Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 439 (1884); Exp. Yarbrough, ib. 658 (1884); Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 571 (1840).

[2] 1 Story, Const. § 451; ib. § 419; 7 Tex. Ap. 210; 24 N. Y. 486. See also Burke v. Hinton, 77 Va. 29 (1883).

[3] Cooley, Const. Lim. 99–101; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. 500 (1841); 92 U. S. 214; 10 F. R. 508; 9 Cal. 341; 33 id. 497; 43 id. 279; 13 Ill. 1; 69 id. 390; 62 id. 38; 64 id. 41; 68 id. 286; 99 Ind. 115; 94 La. An. 214; 2 Mich. 560; 7 id. 488; 29 id. 108; 8 Miss. 14; 69 Mo. 444; 81 Pa. 428; 20 Gratt. 733; 9 W. Va. 708.

[4] Commonwealth v. Maxwell, 27 Pa. 456 (1856).

tution. The judiciary, in clear cases, has always exercised the right to declare such acts void. But beyond this there lies a vast field of power, granted to the legislature by the general words of the constitution, and not reserved, prohibited, or given away to others: their use of which is limited only by their own discretion. The constitution gives a list of the things the legislature may do. For the judiciary to extend that list would be to violate the letter and the spirit of the organic law itself. The people rely for faithful execution of the powers given to the legislature on the wisdom and honesty of that department, and on the direct accountability of the members to their constituents. The mere abuse of power was not meant to be corrected by the judiciary — for judges can be imagined to be as corrupt and wicked as legislators. And the general principles of justice, liberty, and right, not contained or expressed in the body of the constitution itself, are not elements for a judicial decision upon the constitutionality of an enactment.[1]

To justify a court in pronouncing an act unconstitutional, in whole or in part, it must be able to vouch some exception or prohibition clearly expressed or necessarily implied. To doubt is to favor constitutionality. That meaning of words is to be taken which will support the statute.[2]

A separable portion of an act may be unconstitutional, and the rest be valid, provided the law as a whole can be executed.[3]

The rule is to enforce statutes as far as they are constitutionally made, rejecting those provisions only which show an excess of authority, conformably to the settled maxim ut res magis, etc.[4]

The opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility.[5]

"Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. Where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the government, for the court to undertake to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial departments, and to tread on legislative ground."[6]

The duty to declare an act of Congress repugnant to the Constitution is one of great delicacy, only to be performed where the conflict is irreconcilable. Every doubt is to be resolved in favor of constitutionality.[1]

The reasons against the unconstitutionality should at least preponderate; if they are equally balanced, the court should declare the statute valid.[2]

Proper respect for a co-ordinate branch of the government requires the Federal courts to give effect to the presumption that Congress will pass no act not within constitutional power. This presumption should prevail unless the lack of authority is clearly demonstrated. At the same time, the government being one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers, every valid act must find in the Constitution some warrant for its authority.[3]

See AMENDMENT, 2; CITIZEN; COURTS, United States; FEDERALIST; IMPAIR; LAW, Supreme; LEGISLATURE; POLITICS; PREAMBLE, 1; RELIGION; RIGHTS, Bill of; STATE, 3 (2); TAX, 2; TENDER, 2, Legal.

CONSTRUCTION.[4] 1. Putting together, ready for use; building; erecting: applied to houses, vessels,[5] railroads,[6] machines.[7] See BUILD; ERECT; CONTRACTOR.

2. Drawing conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the text, from elements known from and given in the text — conclusions within the spirit, though not within the letter, of the text.[8]

"Interpretation" is the art of finding out the true sense of any form of words; that is, the sense which their author intended to convey.[9]

In common use, "construction" embraces all that is covered by both synonyms.[9]

Rules of construction have for their object the discovery of the true intent and meaning of instruments — the thought expressed.[10]

Where the language is transparent there is no room for the office of construction. There should be no construction where there is nothing to construe.[11]

Liberal construction. Such construction as enlarges or restrains the letter of an agreement or instrument so as more effectually to accomplish the end in view. Also called equitable construction. Strict construction. Such as limits the application

[1] Sharpless v. Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 160-64 (1853), cases, Black, C. J.

[2] Commonwealth v. Butler, 99 Pa. 540 (1882), Sharswood, C. J.; State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 219 (1882).

[3] United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 221 (1875); Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 id. 305 (1885); Presser v. Illinois, 116 id. 263 (1886), cases; Spraigue v. Thompson, 118 id. 90, 95 (1886); Baldwin v. Franks, 120 id. 689 (1887); State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. L. 29 (1882).

[4] Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 575 (1886); 15 Ohio, 645. See also Black v. Trower, 79 Va. 127-28 (1884), cases; Reid v. Morton, 119 Ill. 118, 129 (1886); 83 Ky. 68.

[5] Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128 (1810); County of Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 410 (1879), cases.

[6] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 421, 423 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. 614-15 (1869); Legal Tender Cases, 12 id. 538 (1870).

[1] Mayor of Nashville v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 251 (1867); 20 id. 668.

[2] Cherokee County v. State, 36 Kan. 339 (1887), cases.

[3] United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 635 (1882), Woods, J. See 2 Story, Const. § 1243.

[4] L. construere, to put together.

[5] Sprague, 180; 103 Mass. 227.

[6] 11 Iowa, 17; 115 Mass. 400.

[7] 17 How. 72.

[8] Lieber, Hermen., Ham. ed., 44, 11; 36 N. J. L. 209; 2 Pars. Contr. 491.

[9] [Cooley, Const. Lim. *38.

[10] People v. May, 9 Col. 85 (1885).

[11] Lewis v. United States, 92 U. S. 621 (1875), Swayne, J.; Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 34 (1885).

to cases clearly described by the words used; a close adherence to words. Also called literal construction.[1]

By a liberal interpretation of a letter of guaranty we do not mean that the words should be forced out of their natural meaning: simply that they should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation, so as to attain the object for which the instrument is designed and the purpose to which it is applied.[2]

Other expressions are: artificial, forced or strained, refined, reasonable construction.

A reasonable construction of an instrument, as of the Constitution, means that in case the words are susceptible of two senses, the one strict, the other more enlarged, that should be adopted which is most consonant with the apparent intent.[3]

The object is not to make or modify the instrument, but to find the sense. Hence, the whole document is to be construed together. This is to be done by the court, except when the writing contains technical words, or terms of art, or when it is introduced collaterally, or when its effect depends upon extrinsic circumstances — in which cases the duty devolves upon the jury.[4]

It is a cardinal rule in the construction of all instruments that, if possible, effect should be given to all parts and to every clause, ut res magis, etc.[5]

See further CONDITION; CONSTITUTION; CONSTRUCTIVE; CONTRACT; COVENANT; DEED, 2; EXPOSITIO; EXPRESSIO; FORFEITURE; FRANCHISE, 1; GRANT; IMPAIR; INSTRUMENT, 3; INSURANCE, Policy; NOSCITUR; PUNCTUATION; REPEAL; REPUGNANT; STATUTE; TRUST, 1; USUS, Utile, etc.; VERBUM; WILL, 2; WORD.

CONSTRUCTIVE. Determined by construction: inferred or implied, presumed or imputed; opposed to actual: as,

Constructive — annexation, appropriation, assent or consent, attachment, breaking, close, contempt, conversion, damages, delivery, fraud, larceny, levy, loss, malice, notice, possession, presence, service, taking, treason, trust, qq. v.

CONSUETUDO. L. Custom; usage; practice.

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law.

Consuetudo interpres legum. Custom is the expounder of laws.[6]

Consuetudo loci observanda. The custom of the place is to be conformed to. See CUSTOM.

CONSUL.[1] "Consul," "consul-general," and "commercial agent," in the Revised Statutes, denote full, principal and permanent consular officers, as distinguished from subordinates and substitutes.[2]

"Deputy consul" and "consular agent" denote officers subordinate to such principals, exercising the powers and performing the duties within the limits of their consulates or commercial agencies respectively, the former at the same ports or places, and the latter at ports or places different from those at which such principals are located respectively.[3]

"Vice-consuls" and "vice-commercial agents" denote consular officers, who shall be substituted, temporarily, to fill the places of consuls-general, consuls, or commercial agents, when they shall be temporarily absent or retired from duty.[4]

"Consular officer" includes consuls-general, consuls, commercial agents, deputy consuls, vice-consuls, vice-commercial agents, consular agents, and none others.[5]

The word "consul" shall be understood to mean any person invested by the United States with and exercising the functions of consul-general, vice-consul-general, consul or vice-consul.[6]

A "consul" is an officer of a particular grade in the consular service; in a broad generic sense, the word embraces all consular officers of whatever grade.[7]

Under treaties, consuls have had conferred upon them judicial authority over their own countrymen: as in the decision of controversies in civil cases; the administration of estates; the registering and certifying of wills, contracts, etc. When residing in a country of different political and religious institutions, they have also a limited criminal jurisdiction over their countrymen.[8]

Consuls are approved and admitted by the local sovereign. If guilty of illegal or improper conduct, the exequatur (q. v.) which has been given may be revoked, and they may be punished, or sent out of the country, at the option of the offended government. In

[1] [Bouvier's Law Dict.; 1 Wash. T. 351; 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 87; 23 Cent. Law J. 483 (1886), cases.

[2] Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 449 (1844), Story, J.; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 355 (1862).

[3] [1 Story, Const. § 419.

[4] Goddard v. Foster, 17 Wall. 142 (1872), cases; Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 30 Hun, 613 (1883); 1 Law Quar. Rev. 466 (1885).

[5] May v. Saginaw County, 28 F. R. 632 (1887).

[6] 116 U. S. 622.

[1] L. consulere, to consult.

[2] R. S. § 1674, par. 1.

[3] Ibid., par. 2.

[4] Ibid., par. 3.

[5] Ibid., par. 4.

[6] Act 1 Feb. 1876: R. S. § 4130.

[7] Dainese v. United States, 13 Ct. Cl. 74 (1878).

[8] See R. S. § 4083; 11 F. R. 607.

civil and criminal cases they are subject to the local law in the same manner as other foreign residents owing a temporary allegiance to the state. A trading consul, in all that concerns his trade, is liable as a native merchant.[1]

See further DIPLOMATIC; MINISTER, 3.

CONSUMMATE.[2] Complete, finished, perfected, entire; opposed to inchoate, q. v.

An estate by curtesy is consummate on the death of the wife.[3]

Consummation. In the law of marriage, copulation.[4] See CUM, Copula; MARRIAGE.

CONSUMPTION. See LEGACY; LOAN, 1; TAX, 2, Indirect.

CONTAGIOUS. See DISEASE; DISORDER, 1; HEALTH.

CONTAINED. See PREMISES, 3.

Buggies insured as "contained in" a livery-stable were destroyed while in a factory for repairs. Held, that the words quoted were a warranty as to property whose use did not require removal.[5]

The description of a horse as "contained in" a barn, in a policy against lightning, was held not to be a contract that the horse was to be kept all the time in the barn. "Danger from lightning exists almost wholly in the summer season, when stock of all kinds upon farms is kept in the fields. A policy which covered stock only when in the barn would not furnish indemnity."[6]

Household furniture, described in a policy as "contained in" a certain house, was removed, without the insurer's knowledge, to a house on another street, where it was destroyed by fire. Held, that as the statement of locality was to be construed as a continuing warranty, the insured could not recover.[7]

A seal-skin dolman, insured as wearing apparel by a policy describing it as "contained in" a particular dwelling-house, was burned while in the store of a furrier, to which it had been sent for repair. Held, that the insurer was liable, although the risk was increased: temporary removal or absence being necessarily incident to the use of such property, and presumptively contemplated by the parties.[8]

CONTEMPLATION. Bankrupt and insolvent laws provide that acts done "in contemplation" of bankruptcy or insolvency shall be void.

The bankrupt act of 1841, by the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy," did not intend contemplation solely of being a bankrupt, but contemplation of actually stopping business because of insolvency and incapacity to carry it on.[1]

The debtor must have contemplated more than a state of insolvency,—an act of bankruptcy, or an application to be declared a bankrupt.[1]

In the act of 1867, the phraseology is "in contemplation of insolvency or bankruptcy." This was held not to require an absolute inability to pay all debts in full on a close of business; only that the debtor could not pay his debts in the ordinary course of business.[2]

See BANKRUPTCY; INSOLVENCY.

CONTEMPORANEA. See EXPOSITIO.

CONTEMPT.[3] Disrespect; willful disregard of the authority of a court or legislature.

1. To the head of summary proceedings is referred the method, immemorially used by the superior courts, of punishing contempts by attachment. . . Contempts are either direct [sometimes called criminal], which openly insult or resist the powers of the courts or the persons of the judges who preside there; or else are consequential [sometimes called constructive], which, without such gross insolence or direct opposition, plainly tend to create a universal disregard of their authority.

The principal instances are: 1. Those committed by inferior judges and magistrates — by acting unjustly, oppressively, or irregularly in administering justice; disobeying writs issuing out of the superior courts by proceeding in a cause after it is put a stop to or removed by writ of prohibition, certiorari, error, supersedeas, etc. 2. Those committed by sheriffs, bailiffs, jailors, and other officers of the court — by abusing the process of the law or deceiving the parties; by acts of oppression, extortion, collusive behavior, or culpable neglect of duty. 3. Those committed by attorneys (q. v.), who are also officers of court — by gross fraud and corruption, injustice to their clients, or other dishonest practice. 4. Those committed by jurymen — by making default when summoned, refusing to be sworn or to give a verdict, accepting entertainment at the cost of a party, etc. 5. Those committed by witnesses — by making default when summoned, by refusing to be sworn or examined, by prevaricating in their evidence. 6. Those committed by parties — by disobedience to a rule or order, by non-payment of costs, non-performance of awards, etc. 7. Those committed by any other persons — as

[1] Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 553 (1868), cases; The Anne, 3 Wheat. 445-46 (1818); 1 Kent, 53.

[2] Con-sum'-mate.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 128; 17 Ct. Cl. 178.

[4] See 1 Bl. Com. 435.

[5] London, &c. Fire Ins. Co. v. Graves, 12 Ins. Law J. 808 (1883), cases,—Superior Ct. Ky.: 48 Am. Rep. 84; Longueville v. Western Assur. Co., 51 Iowa, 553 (1879).

[6] Haws v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 114 Pa. 434 (1886).

[7] Lyons v. Providence Washington Fire Ins. Co., 14 R. I. 109 (1883), reversing Same v. Same, 13 id. 347.

[8] Noyes v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 64 Wis. 419-21 (1885), cases.

[1] Arnold v. Maynard, 2 Story, 353 (1854); Morse v. Godfrey, 3 id. 386 (1844); Everett v. Stone, ib. 453 (1844).

[2] Rison v. Knapp, 1 Dill. 194-95 (1870), cases; Martin v. Toof, ib. 206, 211 (1870); Re Smith, 13 Rep. 296 (1881); R. S. § 5110; 4 Bankr. Reg. 203; 21 How. Pr. 420; 61 Wis. 635.

[3] L. contemptus, scorn: tenere, to despise.

in cases of forcible rescue, disobedience to the prerogative writs.

Some of these contempts may arise in the face of the court — as by rude and contumelious behavior, obstinacy, perverseness, prevarication, breach of the peace, or other willful disturbance; others, in the absence of the party — as by disobeying the writ, rule, or other process of the court; perverting a writ or process to purposes of private malice, extortion, or injustice; speaking or writing contemptuously of the court or judges acting in their judicial capacity; printing false accounts (or even true accounts, without permission) of causes pending in judgment; anything, in short, that demonstrates a gross want of that respect without which the authority of the courts, among the people, would be lost.

The process of attachment for contempts must necessarily be as ancient as law itself. Laws without authority to secure their administration from disobedience would be nugatory. The power, therefore, to suppress a contempt by an immediate offender results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be an inseparable attendant upon every superior tribunal.

If the contempt be committed in the face of the court the offender may be instantly apprehended and imprisoned, in the discretion of the judges. But in matters that arise at a distance, if the judges upon affidavit see sufficient ground they may rule the suspected party to show cause why he should not be attached; in a flagrant case the attachment may be issued in the first instance. Once in court, the party must either stand committed or put in bail, in order to answer upon oath such interrogatories as shall be administered to him for the better information of the court with respect to the circumstances of the contempt. These interrogatories are in the nature of a charge or accusation, to be exhibited within a reasonable period, as, four days. If the party can clear ["purge," q. v.] himself upon oath, he is discharged. If he confesses the contempt, the court may fine or imprison him. This mode of trial, which is derived from the courts of equity, is sanctioned by immemorial usage.[1]

While a justice of the peace has no power to punish a contempt committed before him, he may bind the party to answer an indictment for obstructing the administration of justice, and to be of good behavior meanwhile.[2]

The act of Congress of March 2, 1831, "declaratory of the law concerning contempts of court," limits the power of the circuit and district courts to three classes of cases: 1, where there has been misbehavior of a person in the presence of a court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice; 2, where there has been misbehavior of any officer of a court in his official transactions; 3, where there has been disobedience or resistance by any officer, party, juror, witness, or other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of a court.[1]

Such has always been the power of the courts, both of common law and of equity. The exercise of the power has a twofold object: to punish disrespect to the court or its order, and to compel performance of some act or duty. In the former case, the court must judge for itself of the nature and extent of the punishment. In the latter case the party refusing to obey should be fined and imprisoned until he performs the act or shows that it is not in his power to do it.[3]

When a contempt is committed in facie curiæ, the punishment is generally summary; when committed elsewhere, initial proceedings are necessary, with notice, and opportunity to defend. A common initial process is a rule to show cause why an attachment or warrant for contempt should not issue, of which service should be made. In a proceeding to punish for criminal contempt, personal notice of the accusation is indispensable.[2]

2. The power in a legislature to determine the rules of its proceedings, and to punish for disorderly behavior, includes power to enforce its rules in the customary way — by attachment as for contempt.

The necessity for the existence and exercise of this incidental power rests upon the principle of self-preservation.[4]

There is in the Constitution no express authority for the power. Neither House of Congress is a court of judicature, as was Parliament originally. The Houses may punish for disorderly conduct or for failure to attend sessions; may decide contested elections, determine the qualifications of members, impeach officers of government. Where, in an examination necessary to the performance of these duties, a witness proves contumacious, he may be fined and imprisoned; but this can never be extended to an inquiry into his private affairs, on the plea that he is a debtor to the United States — that is a matter exclusively for the judiciary.[5]

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 283–88. See 21 Conn. 199; 65 Ind. 508; 49 Me. 393; L. R., 9 Q. B. 224; 25 Ala. 81; 16 Ark. 384; 25 Miss. 883; 37 N. H. 450; 29 Ohio, 330; 8 Oreg. 497; 13 R. I. 427; 29 Am. Law Reg. 81, 145, 217, 289, 361, 425 (1881).

[2] Albright v. Lapp, 26 Pa. 101 (1856); The Queen v. Lefroy, L. R., 8 Q. B. 137–40 (1873).

[1] Exp. Robinson, 19 Wall. 510–11 (1873), Field, J.; Fischer v. Hayes, 19 Blatch. 13, 18 (1881); Worden v. Searls, 121 U. S. 121–26 (1887): R. S. § 725; 10 F. R. 629–33, cases.

[2] Re Chiles, 22 Wall. 168 (1874), Miller, J.; Exp. Hollis, 59 Cal. 406 (1881). See generally 23 Cent. Law J. 464–66 (1886), cases. History of constructive contempt, 33 Alb. Law J. 145–47 (1886), cases.

[3] Wheeler & Wilson Manuf. Co. v. Boyce, 36 Kan. 356 (1887); Rapalje, Cont. § 96.

[4] 1 Kent, 236–37; 2 Story, Const. §§ 305–17.

[5] Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 181–205 (1880), cases, Miller, J. It had been alleged that Jay Cooke & Co., bankrupts, who were indebted to the United States, were interested in a "real-estate pool" in Washington, D. C., and that their trustee had settled with the associates of the firm to the disadvantage of the creditors. The House of Representatives authorized a committee to be appointed to investigate the matter. Kilbourn, being subpœnaed, appeared before the committee, but refused to give the names of the

The case of Anderson v. Dunn [1] declared that representative bodies possess inherently the power to punish for contempt. For sixty years this decision stood unquestioned. The repeated and unqualified declarations of the principle by courts and text-writers are to be traced to that case. The case of Kilbourn v. Thompson seems to deny that general and unlimited power exists inherently.[2]

A city council is not a legislature; nor is it vested with judicial functions; and its members are not chosen with reference to their fitness to exercise such functions. To allow it the right to imprison for refusal to answer any inquiry the whole body or one of its committee may choose to make would be a dangerous invasion of the rights and liberties of the citizen. . . The legislature cannot confer upon municipal bodies or officers, not courts of justice nor exercising judicial power, authority to imprison and punish without the right of appeal or of trial by jury.[3]

CONTENTS. 1. The clause, in a bill of lading, "shipped in good order . . contents unknown," acknowledges only fair external appearance; it includes no implication as to quantity, quality, or condition of the article: so that a shipper must prove the actual good condition of the contents.[4] See CARRIER.

2. In the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, § 11, in the phrase "any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action," means the sum named therein, payable by the terms of the instrument itself.[5]

An action to recover damages for a refusal to accept and pay for merchandise purchased under an oral contract is a suit to recover the "contents . . of a chose in action," within the act of March 3, 1887. The quoted words were taken from the judiciary act of 1789. Primarily they were intended to apply to commercial instruments, such as promissory notes, acceptances, and bonds, in which the sum promised is familiarly spoken of as the "contents" of such instrument.[1]

A suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract is a suit to recover the contents of a chose in action, within the meaning of § 629, Rev. St.[2]

3. In the House of Lords the "contents" are those who assent to, and the "non-contents" those who oppose, a bill.

CONTEST.[3] To make the subject of litigation; to litigate; to dispute or resist.

Contestable. Disputable; subject to resistance in a court; opposed to non-contestable.

Contestant. A litigant; a suitor.

To contest an election means to deny the legality thereof; to contest a will, to resist the probate of a writing alleged to be a will,— see INFLUENCE; ISSUE, 3, Feigned.

Some policies of insurance, by covenant on the part of the insurer, are not contestable after a certain period, as, three years, for a matter which arose prior to the end of that period.

CONTESTATIO. See LIS, Contestatio.

CONTEXT. See CONSTRUCTION.

CONTIGUOUS. In actual close contact; touching; near.

A relative term; referring to a building, means in close proximity to the same.[4]

A building any particular number of feet, as twenty-five, from a detached dwelling, is not "contiguous" to it.[5]

The charter of a water-works company provided that it should not prevent the city council from granting to persons "contiguous" to the Mississippi river the privilege of laying pipes to the river for their own use. Held, that no lot can be contiguous unless it fronts on the river or is separated only by a public highway, with no private owner intervening, or, possibly, on a block or square so situated.[6] Compare ADJACENT; ALONG.

---

members of the pool, or to produce designated books and papers. The House ordered the speaker to issue his warrant, directed to Thompson, the sergeant-at-arms, to arrest Kilbourn, who, when brought before the House, still refused to impart the desired information. For this contempt he was committed to the custody of Thompson until he would obey the original subpœna, meanwhile to be confined in the common jail of the District. At the end of forty-five days he was released on a habeas corpus, and at once sued the speaker, the committeemen, and the sergeant-at-arms for forcible arrest, and imprisonment. The members of the House were held protected from prosecution; but a verdict for $60,000 damages was recovered against Thompson. This verdict being set aside as excessive, on the second trial $39,000 were awarded. This sum was reduced to $20,000, and paid by order of Congress, with interest, and costs. See MacArthur & Mackey, 401-32 (1883); 23 St. L. 467; Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 F. R. 251-53 (1887).

[1] 6 Wheat. 204 (1821).

[2] Exp. Dalton, 44 Ohio St. 150-53 (1886), cases.

[3] Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 123-24, 120-23 (1876), cases, Gray, C. J.

[4] Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. 283 (1851).

[5] Barney v. Globe Bank, 5 Blatch. 115 (1862).

[1] Simons v. Ypsilanti Paper Co., 33 F. R. 193-94 (1888), Brown, J.

[2] Shoecraft v. Bloxham, 124 U. S. 730 (1888).

[3] L. con-testari, to call to witness.

[4] Arkell v. Commerce Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 193 (1877); 10 Hun, 26.

[5] Olson v. St. Paul, &c. Fire Insurance Co., 35 Minn 433 (1886).

[6] New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Ernst, 32 F. R. 6 (1887), Billings, J., following Water-Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674 (1885), which concerned the St. Charles Hotel, five blocks from the river. Compare New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Co., 125 id. 18 (1888).

CONTINGENCY.[1] An event which may happen; a possibility. A fortuitous event which comes without design, foresight, or expectation.

A remainder which depends upon an uncertainty is a "contingent" remainder. An expense which depends upon some future uncertain event is a "contingent" expense.[2]

"Contingencies," in an estimate of expenses, means expenses not yet ascertained, as yet unknown, uncertain, such as may or may not be incurred.[3]

Contingency with a double aspect. Occurs where remainders are so limited that one is a substitute for the other, in the event of the latter failing, and not in derogation of the latter.[3]

As, a grant to A for life, and if he have a son, then to the son in fee, and if no son, then to B.

Contingent. Possible; liable to occur; dependent upon an uncertainty: as, contingent or a contingent — damage, demand or liability, devise or legacy, estate or interest, fee or compensation, remainder, use, qq. v.

Applied to a use, remainder, devise, bequest, or other legal right or interest, implies that no present right exists, that whether a right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event.[4]

An estate will not be held contingent unless decided terms are used, or it is necessary to infer that a contingency was meant to carry out other parts of the will.[5]

As a rule, contingent interests are assignable, devisable, and descendible.[6]

See also ABSOLUTE; AFTER; CERTAIN; THEN; UPON, 2; WHEN.

CONTINUANCE. 1. After an issue or demurrer has been joined, as well as in previous stages of a proceeding, a day is given, and entered upon the record, on which the parties are to appear from time to time as the exigence of the case may require. The giving of this day is called the "continuance," because thereby the proceedings are continued without interruption from one adjournment to another.[7]

2. Adjournment, postponement, to another term of court.

May be had on account of — the absence of a material witness, who has been subpœnaed, unless the opposite party admits what such witness would testify to; inability to obtain the evidence of a witness out of the State in time for trial; detention of a party in a public service; sickness or death of a party or of counsel; commission outstanding for taking testimony; amendment to pleadings which occasions surprise; filing a bill of discovery. An affidavit to the alleged fact constituting the ground for continuance is required. See AMENDMENT, 1; NISI.

Puis darrein continuance. Since the last adjournment or term of court. A plea by which the defendant takes advantage of a matter which has arisen since he entered his original defense.[1]

As, that the plaintiff, who was then a feme sole, has married; or that she has given a release.[1]

In effect, a pleading of facts occurring since the last stage of the suit, whatever that be, provided it precedes the trial.[2]

Confesses the matter which was before in dispute. Not allowed if a continuance has intervened between the time when the matter arose and when it was pleaded: for the defendant is guilty of neglect, and is, besides, supposed to rely upon his former plea. Nor is it allowed after a demurrer has been determined, or a verdict been given: because relief may be had by motion.[3]

The appointment of a successor in office, after proceedings by mandamus are begun, may be set up by a plea puis darrein continuance.[4] See CONTINUANDO; DISCONTINUANCE.

3. "Continuance in office," in a constitution prohibiting the legislature from increasing the compensation of any public officer during such period, means continuance under one appointment.[5] See COMPENSATION, 1.

CONTINUANDO. L. By continuing; by continuance.

In trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is continually renewed, the declaration may allege that the injury has been committed by continuation from one given time to another. This is called "laying the action with a continuando." The plaintiff is not then compelled to bring a separate action for each day's separate offense. But where the trespass is by one or several acts, each terminating in itself, and being once done cannot be done again, it cannot be laid with a continuando; yet if there be repeated acts of trespass committed (as, cutting a certain number of trees), they may be laid to be done, not continually, but at divers days and times within a given period;[6] or on a given day and "on divers other days and times between" that and another particular day.[7]

[1] L. con-tingere, to touch; to relate to, happen.

[2] People v. Yonkers, 39 Barb. 272 (1863). See also 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 413; 30 Me. 334.

[3] See Fearne, Cont. Rem. 373.

[4] Jemison v. Blowers, 5 Barb. 692 (1849); Haywood v. Shreve, 44 N. J. L. 104 (1882).

[5] Weatherhead v. Stoddard, 58 Vt. 623 (1886), cases.

[6] Kenyon v. See, 94 N. Y. 568 (1884).

[7] [3 Bl. Com. 316.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 296. See Steph. Pl. 64.

[2] [Waterbury v. McMillan, 46 Miss. 640 (1872).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 296; 4 Del. Ch. 352.

[4] Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 480, 483 (1880).

[5] Smith v. City of Waterbury, 54 Conn. 176 (1886).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 212.

[7] Gould, Plead. 86-96; State v. Bosworth, 54 Conn. 1 (1886); 58 N. H. 41.

CONTINUING. Extending from one time or condition to another: as, a continuing — consideration, breach, damage, guaranty, nuisance, qq. v. See also PRESUMPTION.

CONTINUOUS. 1. Uninterrupted; unintermitted; unbroken: as, a continuous adverse use;[1] that a custom (q. v.) must be continuous; a continuous carriage, passage, trip, or voyage.[2] See CARRIER, Common; LADING, Bill of.

2. As applied to an "injury," recurring at repeated intervals, of repeated occurrence; of the same sort of damnification an actual continuous mischief would be.[3] Compare CONTINUANDO.

Non-continuous. A grant of a right or easement (q. v.) in land is "non-continuous" when the use of the premises by the grantee will be only intermittent and occasional, and not embrace the entire beneficial occupation and improvement of the land.[4]

CONTRA. L. Against; in opposition to; to the contrary effect; contrary.

Standing alone (1) denotes opposition of counsel to matters urged in argument, as "A. B., contra;" (2) indicates cases or authorities which do not agree with others cited. See CON, 2; COUNTER.

Contra bonos mores. Against good morals, q. v.

Contra formam statuti. Against the form (q. v.) of the statute.

Contra pacem. Against the peace, q. v.

Contra proferentem. Against the proposer. See VERBUM, Verba fortius, etc.

CONTRABAND.[5] Contrary to a ban — a public proclamation.

Contraband of war. Prohibited by the laws of war. Describes goods which a neutral may not furnish to a belligerent.

Articles manufactured and primarily or ordinarily used for military purposes in time of war are always contraband. Articles which may be used for war or peace according to circumstances are contraband only when actually destined to the use of the belligerent. Articles exclusively used for peaceful purposes are not contraband, though liable to seizure for violation of blockade or siege. Contraband articles contaminate non-contraband, if belonging to the same owner. In ordinary cases the conveyance of contraband articles attaches only to the freight.[1]

Provisions, and money, destined for hostile use, are contraband.[2]

Treaty provisions enumerate the articles which shall be deemed contraband.

CONTRACT.[3] 1, n. (1) An agreement, upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing.[4]

A compact between two or more parties.[5]

An agreement in which a party undertakes to do, or not to do, a particular thing.[6]

In the Constitution, as elsewhere, the agreement of two or more minds, for considerations proceeding from one to the other, to do, or not to do, certain acts. Mutual assent to the terms is of the very essence,[7]

An interchange, by agreement, of legal rights.[8]

A deliberate engagement between competent parties, upon a legal consideration, to do, or to abstain from doing, some act.[9]

A promise from one or more persons to another or others, either made in fact or created by the law, to do or refrain from some lawful thing; being also under the seal of the promisor, or being reduced to a judicial record, or being accompanied by a valid consideration, or being executed, and not being in a form forbidden or declared inadequate by law.[10]

In its widest sense includes records and specialties, but is usually employed to designate simple or parol contracts; i. e., not only verbal and unwritten contracts, but all contracts not of record or under seal. This is strictly the legal signification, inasmuch as the existence of a consideration which is necessary to constitute a parol agreement is not requisite, or rather

[1] 59 Ind. 411; 4 De G. J. & S. 199; 18 F. R. 115.

[2] 4 Saw. 114; 12 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 375.

[3] Wood v. Sutcliffe, 8 Eng. L. & Eq. 220 (1851).

[4] Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 164 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.; Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. E. 262 (1867).

[5] Contrabannum, in mediæval Latin, is merces bannо interdictæ. "The sovereign of the country made goods contraband by an edict prohibiting their importation or their exportation,"— Woolsey, Int. Law, § 192; ib. §§ 192-99. See BAN.

[1] The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 58 (1866), Chase, C. J.

[2] The Commercen, 1 Wheat. 387 (1816); United States v. Dickelman, 92 U. S. 626 (1875); 1 Kent, 138-43.

[3] L. con-trahere, to draw together: for minds to meet.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 442, quoting some previous author.

[5] Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 136 (1810), Marshall, C. J.

[6] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 197 (1819), Marshall, C. J. See also ib. 656, 682; 11 Pet. *572; 109 U. S. 288; 113 id. 464; 71 Ala. 432; 34 La. An. 45; 30 Tex. 422; 4 Tex. Ap. 321.

[7] Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 288 (1883), Field, J.; Chase v. Curtis, 113 id. 464 (1885).

[8] 1 Whart. Contr. § 1.

[9] Story, Contr. § 1; also 1 Pars. Contr. 6.

[10] Bishop, Contr. § 22, where definitions from other books are quoted.

is presumed, in obligations of record and in specialties.[1]

There must be a person able to contract; a person able to be contracted with; a thing to be contracted for; a sufficient consideration; words clearly expressing the agreement; and the assent of both parties to the same thing in the same sense.[2]

A contract is resolvable into proposal and acceptance; the proposal not to bind beyond a reasonable time, and, until accepted, may be conditional. The place and time of acceptance are the place and time of the contract. The assent must be definite; non-refusal is not enough.[3] See UNDERSTANDING. Compare TRANSACTION.

(2) The language, written or unwritten, which evidences a mutual engagement or exchange of promises.

Does not, like "deed," "bond," or "promissory note," necessarily import a written instrument.[4] It applies to agreements obligating both parties, hence not to bills and notes.[5]

Generally, "agreement" is the weaker, more vernacular word, "contract" the more technical and forcible. "Agreement" is more apt to be used of an engagement formed by actual negotiation, but not embodied in the most solemn formality of writing, seal, etc.; "contract," where the intention is to embrace the whole range of enforcible obligations created by mutual consent. "Bargain" seems to be used like "contract" in importing a consideration and full legal obligation; like "agreement" in implying actual negotiation and assent rather than definite legal formalities.

In the best use "contract" does not embrace obligations which society imposes for reasons of general expediency, only obligations founded upon assent of parties; nor a mere moral obligation, unrecognized by law, deducible from a promise unsupported by a consideration; nor a judgment; nor, generally, a charter, nor a license from government; nor is a public office the subject of a contract. Marriage is rather a civil or social status than a contract. Obligations in which there is no apparent mutuality have been excluded: mutuality of assent and of act being of the essence of a contract.

Formerly, lawyers spoke of "obligations" (meaning bonds, in which "obliged" is a formal term), "covenants," and "agreements" — the last word being used as "contract" is now used.[6]

2, v, adj. Agreed to; stipulated; undertaken; incurred.

A "debt contracted" may include a debt founded upon a tort.[7]

[1] Story, Contr. § 1; also 1 Parsons, Contr. 6; Bishop, Contr. §§ 108, 140, 151, 162.

[2] Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 497 (1870).

[3] 1 Whart. Contr. Chap. I.

[4] Pierson v. Townsend, 2 Hill, 551 (1842).

[5] Safford v. Wyckoff, 4 Hill, 456 (1842).

[6] [Addison, Contr. *1–2, Am. ed., A. & W. (1888), note.] See also Bishop, Contr. §§ 191–92, 107.

[7] Re Radway, 3 Hughes, 631 (1877); State v. O'Neil, 7 Oreg. 142 (1879).

Contractual. Arising out of a contract: as, a contractual relation. Whence non-contractual.

Besides the general distinctions noted below, contracts are: accessory, when assuring the performance of another contract; aleatory, when performance depends upon an uncertainty: as, an annuity, a contract of insurance; consensual, when dissolvable by mere consent; dependent, when made to rest upon some connected act to be done by another — opposed to independent, in which the acts have no inter-relation; parol, when verbal or in writing but not under seal — opposed to sealed contract, which is a specialty; personal, when relating to personalty, or else requiring some action of a person — opposed to real, which regards realty, q. v.; quasi, when the relation existing is analogous to that of a contract, and the law attaches similar consequences; separable or severable, when divisible, not entire, q. v.; simple, when evidenced neither by a specialty nor by a record; specialty (q. v.), when under seal; verbal, when simple or parol. See also FIDUCIARY; HAZARDOUS; MARITIME; ONEROUS; QUASI; WAGERING.

More general and important distinctions are the following:

Absolute contract. An agreement to do or not to do something at all events. Conditional contract. An executory contract, the performance of which depends upon a condition — precedent or subsequent.[1]

Bilateral contract. Two promises given in exchange for and in consideration of each other. Unilateral contract. A binding promise not in consideration of another.

A bilateral contract becomes unilateral when one of the promises is fully performed.[2]

In a suit upon a unilateral contract, it is only where the defendant has had the benefit of the consideration, for which he bargained, that he can be held bound.[3]

Divisible contract. A contract the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side. Entire contract.

[1] Story, Contr. §§ 39–40.

[2] Langdell, Sum. Contr. §§ 183, 12; Butler v. Thompson, 92 U. S. 415 (1875); 6 Col. 324.

[3] Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 255 (1882), cases

A contract the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire fulfillment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfillment of any part by the other.[1]

Examples of a divisible contract are an engagement to pay a person the worth of his services as long as he will do certain work; or, to give a certain price for every bushel of so much grain as corresponds to a sample. The criterion is, the extent of the consideration on either side is indeterminate until the contract is performed.[1]

A contract by which one subscribes for a copy of a book, to be published, delivered, and paid for in parts, is entire.[2]

Special contract. (1) A contract under seal; a specialty, q. v.

(2) A contract incidental to another as the original or principal; as, for extra work or material in the construction of a house. See Dermott v. Jones, page 249.

(3) A contract specially entered into, or with peculiar provisions in distinction from such ordinary terms as, in the absence of a particular agreement, the law supplies.

As, that made with an employee for compensation, and that with a common carrier (q. v.) in limitation of his liability at common law.

Express contract. When the agreement is formal, and stated either verbally or in writing. Implied contract. When the agreement is matter of inference and deduction.

The distinction between them is in the mode of proof. In an "implied contract" the law supplies that which, not being stated, must be presumed to have been the agreement intended.[3]

Express contracts are sometimes said to be of record, by specialty, or by simple contract. See DEBT, Of record, etc.; JUDGMENT.

An "express contract" exists where the terms of the agreement are openly uttered and avowed at the time of the making; as, to pay a stated price for certain goods. An "implied contract" is such as reason and prejudice dictate, and which therefore the law presumes that every man undertakes to perform; as, to pay the worth of services requested of another; to pay the real value of goods delivered without agreement as to price. A species of implied contract, annexed to all other contracts, conditions, and covenants, is, that if one party fails in his part of the agreement he will pay the other party any damages thereby sustained.[4]

An implied contract is co-ordinate and commensurate with duty, and whenever it is certain that a man ought to do a particular thing the law supposes him to have promised to do that thing.[1]

In that large class of transactions designated in the law as implied contracts, the assent or convention which is an essential ingredient of an actual contract is often wanting. Thus, if a party obtain the money of another by mistake, it is his duty to refund it, from the general obligation to do justice which rests upon all persons.[2]

A contract may be inferred when it is found that there is an agreement and an intention to create a contract, although that intention has not been expressed in words of contract. A contract is also sometimes said to be implied when there is no intention to create a contract, and no agreement of parties, but the law has imposed an obligation which is enforced as if it arose ex contractu, instead of ex lege.[3]

The distinction between express and implied contracts may well be indicated by saying that the former are actual, the latter constructive, imputed by law rather because justice requires treating parties as if under contract than because of any real supposition that they have contracted.[4]

Joint contract. A contract by which the parties together are bound to perform the obligation or are entitled to receive the benefit of it. Several contract. A contract by which the individuals are separately concerned.

Where there is more than one person on either side the contract will be construed as a joint right or obligation, unless it be made several by the terms of the contract.[5] See further JOINT.

Executed contract. A contract whose object has been performed. Executory contract. One in which a party binds himself to do, or not to do, a particular thing.[6]

A contract may either be "executed," as if A agrees to change horses with B, and they do it immediately, in which case the possession and the right are transferred together; or it may be "executory," as if they agree to change next week. In the latter case the right only vests, and their reciprocal property in each other's horse is "in action;" for a contract executed conveys a chose in possession, a contract executory, a chose in action.[7]

A "contract executed" is one in which nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is completed at the moment the agreement is made. An "executory contract" is a contract to do some future act. A contract to sell personalty is executory, while a completed sale by delivery is ex-

[1] Story, Contr. §§ 25-26; Pars. Contr. 517; 2 McCrary, 769; 3 id. 130, 144-46, cases.

[2] Barrie v. Earle, 144 Mass. 4 (1886).

[3] Story, Contr., § 11; Leake, Contr. 11.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 443; 3 id. 158-66.

[1] Illinois Central R. Co. v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 333 (1880), Drake, C. J. See also 55 Vt. 417; 2 Kent, 450

[2] Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 457 (1864); Milford v. Commonwealth, 144 Mass. 65 (1 87)

[3] Inhabitants of Milford v. Commonwealth, 144 Mass 65 (1887), Field, J.

[4] Addison, Contr. *2, Am. ed., A. & W. (1888), note

[5] Story, Contr. §§ 53-55.

[6] [Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 136 (1810), Marshall, C. J

[7] 2 Bl Com. 443.

ecuted; but as to which is meant the language may not always be decisive. An undertaking may be of the nature of both.[1]

In an "executory contract" it is stipulated by the agreement of minds, upon sufficient consideration, that something is to be done or not to be done by one or both of the parties. Only a slight consideration is necessary. On the other hand, a contract is "executed" where every thing that was to be done is done, and nothing remains to be done; as, a grant actually made. This requires no consideration to support it: a gift consummated is as valid as anything can be.[2]

An executed contract stands for and against all parties. To the extent that an invalid contract is not performed, it is voidable.[3]

While a special contract remains executory the plaintiff may sue upon it. When it has been fully executed according to its terms, and nothing remains to be done but to pay the price, he may sue upon the contract, or in indebitatus assumpsit, and rely upon the common counts. In either case the contract will determine the rights of the parties. But when he has been guilty of fraud, or has willfully abandoned the work, leaving it unfinished, he cannot recover in any form of action. When he has in good faith fulfilled the contract, but not in the manner or not within the prescribed time, and the other party has sanctioned or accepted the work, he may recover upon the common counts in indebitatus assumpsit. In that case he must produce the contract upon the trial, and it will be applied as far as it can be traced; but if, by the fault of the defendant, the cost of the work or material has been increased, so far the jury may depart from the contract prices. In such case the defendant may recoup any damages sustained by plaintiff's deviations from the contract, and not induced by himself, both as to the manner and the time of performance.[4]

Pre-contract. An engagement which renders a person unable to enter into another legal contract; in particular, a contract of marriage which renders void a subsequent marriage.[5]

Sub-contract. A contract, by one who has engaged to do a thing, with another who agrees to do all or a part of that thing. See CONTRACTOR.

A contract, procured by fraud, or for an immoral purpose, or against an express enactment, or in general restraint of trade, or contrary to public policy, will be declared void.

For cases other than those within the Statute of Frauds, there is no prescribed form.

At common law, damages for breach of contract is the only remedy; in equity, specific performance (q. v) may be had. Where one party refuses to perform his part the other has an immediate right of action, and need not wait for the time of performance.[1] See VALUE, Market.

A mere assertion that the party will be unable or will refuse to perform his contract is not sufficient; it must be a distinct, unequivocal, absolute refusal to perform the promise, and be treated and acted upon as such by the promisee.[2]

The complaint must aver a promise and a breach thereof.[3]

It is well settled that the plaintiff may recover as a part of the damages for the breach of a special contract such profits as would have accrued from the contract as the direct and immediate result of its fulfilment.[4] "These are part of the contract itself, and must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the agreement was entered into. But if they are such as would have been realized from an independent and collateral undertaking, although entered into in consequence and on the faith of the principal contract, they are too uncertain and remote to be considered part of the damages."[5] That is, the damages "must be such as might naturally be expected to follow the violation of the contract; and they must be certain in their nature and as to the cause from which they proceed. The familiar rule that the damages must flow directly and naturally from the breach is a mode of expressing the first; and that they must be the proximate consequence, and not be speculative or contingent, are modifications of the last."[6] In cases of executory contracts for the purchase of personalty, ordinarily the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price when the contract is broken. This rule may be varied where

[1] Story, Contr. §§ 22-23.

[2] Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 683 (1877), cases, Swayne, J.

[3] Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 85 (1879).

[4] Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. 9 (1864), Swayne, J.; Chicago v. Tilley, 108 U. S. 146, 154 (1880), cases; Cutter v. Powell, 2 Sm. L. Cas. 1-60, cases; Chitty, Contr., 612; 49 Conn. 206; 20 Kan. 328.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 435; Bishop, Mar. & D. § 58.

[1] Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. 18-20 (1874), cases, Drummond, J.; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. (Hand), 246 (1870); Cort v. The Ambergate, &c. R. Co., 6 E. L. & E. 230, 234-37 (1851), cases.

[2] Benjamin, Sales, 2 ed. § 568. Approved, Smoot's Case, 15 Wall. 48 (1872), cases; Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 503 (1886), cases; Johnstone v. Milling, 16 Q. B. D. 467, 470, 473 (1886), cases.

[3] Du Brutz v. Jessup, 70 Cal. 75 (1886).

[4] Masterton v. City of Brooklyn, 7 Hill, 67 (1845), Nelson, C. J.,—the leading case: United States v. Speed, 8 Wall. 84 (1868); United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 349 (1884); Insley v. Shepard, 31 F. R. 873 (1887). In Masterton's case it was also said that "the plaintiff may recover the difference between the cost of doing the work, and what he was to receive for it, making a reasonable reduction for the less time engaged, and the release from the care, trouble, risk, and responsibility attending the full execution of the contract."

[5] Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. 522 (1851), Bigelow, J.

[6] Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489 (1858). See also Booth v. Rolling Mill Co., 60 id. 492 (1875), cases; White v. Miller, 71 id. 133 (1877), cases; Billmeyer v. Wagner, 91 Pa. 94 (1879); 48 id. 407; 11 Atl. Rep. 300; Kendall Bank Note Co. v. Commissioners, 79 Va. 573 (1884).

the contract is made in view of special circumstances in contemplation of both parties.[1]

When a party sues for a part of an entire indivisible demand, and recovers judgment, he cannot subsequently maintain an action for another part of the same demand.[2]

Where a writing is the sole repository of an agreement, its construction is a matter of law for the court. Words are to be taken in the meaning usually attached to them. But a true interpretation requires that they be applied to the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, and the usual and known course of business. The common meaning of expressions, otherwise clear, may thus be modified by parol, without invasion of the rule which makes the writing the only proper evidence of the agreement.[3]

In construing contracts, especially those of a distinct class (like policies of insurance), in regard to which, owing to long and constant use of forms substantially alike, there has grown up a common and general use of language which may be said to constitute jus et norma loquendi,—it is not safe to adopt the mere etymological meaning of words, nor the definition which lexicographers give them. It is often necessary to ascertain whether a word or phrase has acquired a special or peculiar meaning, or whether it is used with any restricted signification by authors or jurists or those conversant with the business to which it relates.[4]

Contracts are to be construed according to their plain meaning to men of understanding, and not according to forced or artificial constructions.[1]

The court seeks to place itself in the place of the parties, and to view the circumstances as they viewed them.[2]

Where the meaning is not clear the court takes the light of the circumstances in which the contract was made, and the practical interpretation the parties by their conduct may have given it.[1]

When the language is ambiguous, the practical interpretation given by the parties is entitled to great, if not controlling, influence.[3]

Such practical construction will always prevail over the literal meaning.[4]

It is a fundamental rule that the courts may look not only to the language employed, but to the subject-matter and the surrounding circumstances, and avail themselves of the light the parties possessed when the contract was made.[5]

Written instruments are always to be construed by the court, except when they contain technical words or terms of art, or when the instrument is introduced in evidence collaterally, or where its effect depends not merely on the construction and meaning of the instrument but upon extrinsic facts and circumstances, in which case the inference to be drawn from it must be left to the jury. . . It is for the jury to say what is the meaning of peculiar expressions, but it is for the court to decide what is the meaning of the contract.[6]

It is the business of the courts to enforce contracts, not to make or modify them.[6]

The law of contracts, in its widest extent, may be regarded as including nearly all the law which regulates the relations of human life. All social life presumes it, rests upon it: out of contracts, express or implied, declared or understood, grow all rights, all duties, all obligations, all law. Almost the whole procedure of human life is the continual fulfillment of contracts. . . Implied contracts are co-ordinate and commensurate with duty, with what a man ought to do. These, in particular, form the warp and woof of actual life. To compel the performance of contract duties, the law exists. The well-being of society may be measured by the degree in which the law construes contracts wisely; eliminating whatever is of fraud or error, or otherwise wrongful; and carrying them into their full and proper effect and execution. These results the law seeks by means of principles; that is, by [1] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 453 (1888), cases, Matthews, J. The plaintiff brought suit for damages for the non-delivery of a message instructing the addressee to buy 10,000 barrels of petroleum, the price of which, when the message should have been delivered, was $1.17 per barrel, but when received had advanced to $1.35 per barrel. The addressee did not purchase. Held, that the plaintiff, having suffered no actual loss, could recover only nominal damages, not the contingent profit he might have made by buying and selling.

---

In Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. *354 (1854), it was said "the damages for which compensation is allowed are such as naturally and ordinarily flow from the breach; such as may be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract, or such as, according to the ordinary course of things, might be expected to follow its violation." The rule as here expressed has been frequently followed in this country, as see Murdock v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 133 Mass. 15 (1882); Bodkin v. Western Union Tel. Co., 31 F. R. 136 (1887); Poposkey v. Munkwitz, 68 Wis. 330 (1887), cases; and cases ante.

"In an action for a breach of contract to deliver iron the plaintiff recovers the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the refusal to fulfill the contract." Roberts v. Benjamin, 124 U. S. 64 (1888), cases. Blatchford, J.

[2] Baird v. United States, 22 U. S. 432 (1877); Warren v. Comings, 6 Cush. 103 (1850), cases.

[3] Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 387 (1871), Colt, J. See Bishop, Contr. §§ 379–82, cases.

[4] Dole v. New Eng. Mut. Ins. Co., 6 Allen, 386 (1863), Bigelow, C. J.

---

[1] Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 737 (1864), cases; Nash v. Towne, 5 id. 699 (1866), cases.

[2] Goddard v. Foster, 17 Wall. 142 (1872), cases, Clifford, J.; Dewelley v. Dewelley, 143 Mass. 513 (1887): 20 Pick. 503.

[3] Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 54 (1869); Topliff v. Topliff, 122 U. S. 131 (1887).

[4] District of Columbia v. Gallaher, 124 U. S. 510 (1888); Rowell v. Doggett, 143 Mass. 487 (1887).

[5] Merriam v. United States, 107 U. S. 441 (1882), cases, Woods, J. See also United States v. Gibbons, 109 id. 200, 203 (1883).

[6] The Harriman, 9 Wall. 173 (1869); 10 id. 171.

means of truths, ascertained, defined, and so expressed as to be practical and operative.[1]

See further AGREEMENT; ART, 3; ASSENT; ASSIGN, 2; ASSUMPSIT; CERTAINTY; COMPACT; CONDITION; CONSIDERATION, 2; CONTRACTOR; CONTRACTUS; COVENANT; CONVENTIO; CUSTOM; DAMAGES; DESCRIPTION, 4; DISABILITY; DURESS; DUTY, 1; EARNEST; EXCEPTION, 1; FRAUD; GRANT; IMPLIED; INFLUENCE; INSANITY, 2 (4); LEGAL; LET, 1 (2); LETTER, 3; LICENSE, 3; MERGER, 2; NOVATION; OBLIGATION; OFFER, 1; OPTION; PACT; PAROL, 2; PARTNERSHIP; PARTY, 2; PERFORMANCE; PLACE, Of contract; POSSIBLE; PRIVITY; PROMISE; RATIFICATION; READING; REFORM; RES, Perit, Ut res; RESCISSION; REVIVAL; SALE; SATISFACTORY; STULTIFY; SUBROGATION; SUNDAY; TIME; TRADE; USUS, Utile; VALUE; VOID; WAIVER; WAR.

CONTRACTOR. The primary meaning is one who contracts; one of the parties to a bargain; he who agrees to do anything for another.

One who contracts with a government to furnish provisions or supplies or to do work; one who agrees to construct a portion of a work, as, a railroad.[2]

Standing alone, or unrestrained by the context or particular words, may mean a sub-contractor or a person remotely engaged under a contract and doing the work, as well as an original contractor.[3]

Although, in a general sense, every one who enters into a contract may be called a "contractor," yet that word, for want of a better, has come to be used with special reference to a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do specific jobs of work for other persons without submitting himself to their control in respect to the petty details of the work. . . . The true test is to ascertain whether one who renders the service does so in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work and not as to the means by which it is accomplished. . . . If he submits himself to the discretion of his employer as to the details of the work, fulfilling his will not merely as to the result but also as to the means by which that result is to be attained, the contractor becomes a servant in respect to the work.[4]

The ordinary relation of principal and agent, master and servant, does not subsist in the case of an independent employee or contractor who is not under the immediate direction of the employer.[5]

See Phillips Construction Co. v. Seymour, under COVENANT; RESPONDEAT.

CONTRACTUS. L. A drawing together: a meeting of minds; a contract. See FORUM; LOCUS.

Ex contractu. By virtue of a contract. Applied to a right or a duty founded upon a contract relation. Opposed, ex delicto: by force of a wrongful act, or tort.

Whence actions ex contractu and ex delicto. See ACTION, 2; DELICTUM.

The civil law refers the greater part of rights and duties to the head of obligations ex contractu and quasi ex contractu: express and implied contracts.[1]

CONTRADICT. See PAROL; REBUT.

CONTRARY. A verdict "contrary to law" is contrary to the principles of law applicable to the facts which the jury were to try.[2] See AGAINST.

CONTRAVENE. To conflict, oppose. Whence contravention.

A right which militates with another right is sometimes called a "contravening equity."[3]

CONTRIBUTION. The share provided by or due from one of several persons to assist in discharging a common obligation or in advancing a common enterprise.[4]

Contributive; contributory. Helping to bring about a result; directly contributing to an injury: as, contributory negligence, q. v.

"Contributory" is also used in the sense of contributor: a person liable to contribution to the assets of a company which is being wound up, q. v.

A right to contribution exists where a debt owed by several persons jointly is collected from one; when one of two or more sureties pays the sum for which both or all are bound; when one co-devisee or co-distributee pays a charge upon land devised or descended; when a partner pays more than his share of the firm's debts; where recourse to private property is had to pay the debt of an insolvent corporation; where a co-insurer pays the whole loss; where a party-wall or a division-fence is constructed or repaired.[5]

Equal contribution to discharge a joint liability is not inequitable, even as between wrong-doers, although the law will not, in general, support an action to enforce it where the payments have been unequal.[6]

---

[1] 1 Pars. Contr. 1-5; 2 Bl. Com. 443; 3 Law Quar. Rev. 168-79 (1887).

[2] Kent v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 12 N. Y. 631 (1855).

[3] Mundt v. Sheboygan, &c. R. Co., 31 Wis. 457 (1872), Dixon, C. J.; 12 N. Y. 631; 5 How. Pr. 454; 25 Minn. 524.

[4] Shearman & Redf., Neg. §§ 76-77: quoted, 71 Me. 322; 7 Lea, 373; 57 Tex. 510. See also Carter v. Berlin Mills Co., 56 N. H. 52-58 (1876), cases; Edmundson v. Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co., 111 Pa. 319 (1885); 86 id. 159; 17 Mo. 121.

[5] Cunningham v. International R. Co., 51 Tex. 511 (1879), cases. See also Robinson v. Blake Manuf. Co., 143 Mass. 532 (1887); 27 Conn. 274; 45 Ill. 455; 3 Gray, 349; 4 Allen, 133; 11 id. 419; 125 Mass. 232; 66 N. Y. 184; 46 Pa. 213; 57 id. 374; 9 M. & W. 673.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 443.

[2] [Bosseker v. Cramer, 18 Ind. 45 (1862); Candy v Hanmore, 76 id. 128 (1881).

[3] 101 U. S. 739.

[4] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[5] See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 484-505.

[6] Selz v. Unna, 6 Wall. 336 (1867), Clifford, J.; 98 Conn. 455; 1 Bibb, 562.

The remedy in equity is more effective; as, between co-sureties.[1]

But there is "no contribution between wrong-doers." This rule applies appropriately only to cases where there has been intentional violation of law, and where the wrong-doer is to be presumed to have known that the act was unlawful.[2] It fails when the injury grows out of a duty resting primarily upon one of the parties, and but for his negligence there would have been no cause of action against the other. . . A servant is liable to his master for the damages recovered against him in consequence of the negligence of the servant.[3]

A municipality, made to pay damages for an injury resulting from the negligence of a private citizen, may recover the amount from the citizen.[4] See AVERAGE, General; JOINT.

CONTROL. See PROHIBITION; REGULATE.

In a contract by a railroad company concerning the roads which it might "control," held to refer to the immediate or executive control which it exercised by officers and agents acting under instructions from the board of directors.[5]

The "control" is a necessary incident to the "regulation" of the streets of a city.[6]

CONTROLLER. See COMPTROLLER.

CONTROVERSY. Any issue, whether of a civil or criminal nature; a case, q. v.

A dispute arising between two or more persons.[7]

A civil proceeding; as, that the judicial power of the United States shall extend "to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party; — to Controversies between two or more States," etc.[8]

A controversy between citizens is involved in a suit whenever any property or claim of the parties capable of pecuniary estimation is the subject of litigation, and is presented by pleadings for judicial determination.[9]

See further CASE, 2, Cases, etc.; DISPUTE; MATTER; PROBATE; REMOVE, 2.

CONTUMACY.[10] Refusal or neglect to appear or to answer in a court; contempt for the order of a court or legislature. Whence contumacious. See CONTEMPT.

CONUSANCE. See COGNIZANCE.

CONUSOR. See RECOGNIZANCE.

CONVENIENTLY. See SOON.

Whatever it is the duty of an officer to do in the performance of service enjoined by law, and which may be accomplished by the exercise of reasonable diligence, that he can "conveniently" do.[1]

CONVENTIO. L. A coming together: agreement, engagement.

Conventio vincit legem. Agreement takes the place of the law: the express understanding of parties supersedes such understanding as the law would imply.

Parties are permitted to make law for themselves where their agreements do not violate the express provisions of any municipal law nor injuriously affect the interests of the public.[2]

Setting aside the application of a general rule of law is not intended.[3]

CONVENTION. A general term for any mutual engagement, formal or informal. See CONVENTIO.

Conventional. Agreed upon; created by act of parties — by agreement; opposed to legal — created by construction and operation of law: as, a conventional estate for life;[4] a conventional community, q. v.

There are postal conventions between nations; and constitutional conventions by delegates chosen to frame constitutions, q. v. Compare RECONVENTION.

CONVERSATION. 1. The etymological meaning (which see, below) seems to be preserved in the offense termed criminal conversation: adultery regarded as an injury to the husband, entitling him to damages in a civil action.[5]

The abbreviation "crim. con." has acquired a fixed and universal signification which the courts will take notice of without proof.[6]

The development of the word has been substantially as follows: L. conversatio, frequent use, habitual abode, intercourse: conversari, to turn to often, to dwell, live with.

(1) Manner of living; habits of life; behaving, behavior; conduct; life.

---

[1] White, Ld. Cas. 66; 1 Ld. Cas. Eq. 100; 13 Am. Law Reg. 529.

[2] Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 458-61 (1859), cases; The Atlas, 93 U. S. 315 (1876), cases; The Hudson, 15 F. R. 167 (1883), cases; 13 Bradw. 565.

[3] Merryweather v. Nixon, 2 Sm. L. C. 483, 480, cases; Chicago City v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418 (1862); Robbins v. Chicago City, 4 Wall. 657 (1866).

[4] Clinton, &c. R. Co. v. Dunn, 59 Iowa, 619 (1882), cases; Cooley, Torts, p. 145.

[5] Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 8 McCrary, 647 (1882).

[6] Chicago Dock Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 164 (1885).

[7] Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 226 (1872); 33 id. 350; 77 Va. 125.

[8] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2; 2 Dall. 431-32; 109 U. S. 477; Story, Const. § 1668.

[9] Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 20 (1875), Field, J.; Searl v. School District, 124 id. 199 (1888), cases, Matthews, J.

[10] L. contumax, stubborn, obstinate.

---

[1] Guerin v. Reese, 33 Cal. 297 (1867).

[2] Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 467 (1886); 22 N. Y. 249.

[3] Story, Agency, § 368; 14 Gray, 446; 59 Pa. 96; 10 Wall. 644.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 120.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 139.

[6] Gibson v. The Cincinnati Enquirer, 5 Cent. Law J. 331 (1877); Same v. Same, 2 Flip. 125 (1877). See Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118 (1883); 15 Am. Law Reg. 451-60 (1876), cases.

As, in the expressions: "of upright conversation;"[1] "the filthy conversation of the wicked,"[2] — i. e., their lascivious life; "the conversation of the wives . . chaste conversation."[3]

(2) Intimate relation, association; companionship; familiar intercourse.

(3) Sexual acquaintance; illicit intimacy.

2. Familiar discourse; oral communication. See COMMUNICATION; COLLOQUIUM; DECLARATION, 1.

CONVERSION. Changing into another state or condition.

1. Of partnership debts: the changing of their original character and obligation with the consent of the creditors; so that, if they are originally joint debts of all the partners, they become, by consent, the separate debts of one partner; or if they are the separate debts of one partner, they become, by like consent, the joint debts of all the partners.[4]

2. In equity, money which, according to a will or agreement, is to be invested in land is regarded as realty; and land which is to be converted into money is regarded as money, and treated accordingly.[5]

Whence the doctrine of equitable conversion; whence, also, reconversion: the change of property, once converted, into other property of the former species.

The application to deeds and wills of the principle which treats that as done which ought to be done.[6]

A conversion will be regarded as such only for the purposes of the will, unless a different intention is distinctly indicated.[7]

An implied direction to sell land, for the payment of legacies, works an equitable conversion. The immediate effect of such direction is to break the descent, by vesting the estate in the trustee clothed with power to sell, and to confer on the legatees, not an interest in the land, but simply a right to the proceeds of the sale, in designated proportions,— which is a mere chose in action.[8]

When the purpose for which the conversion was to take place totally fails, the property is regarded as being what it is in fact, no conversion then taking place.

"To establish a conversion, the will must direct it absolutely or out and out, irrespective of all contingencies. The direction to convert must be positive and explicit, and the will, if it be by will, or the deed, if it be by contract, must decisively fix upon the land the quality of money. The direction to sell must be imperative."[1]

A naked or merely discretionary power to sell, unless, perhaps, coupled with an interest, does not effect a conversion.[2]

Where land is to be sold, and legatees interested in the proceeds elect to take it as such, it then becomes bound by liens.[3]

There is no conversion where a widow elects to take against a will directing a sale.[4]

To effect a reconversion, an election to take the land, instead of the proceeds, must be by an unequivocal act on the part of all persons interested.[5]

Intention is the governing rule as to conversions.[6]

3. Any unauthorized dealing with another's personalty as one's own.

The exercise of dominion and control over property inconsistent with and in defiance of the rights of the true owner or party having the right of possession.[7]

This may be actual, and either direct or constructive.

It is not necessary that there be a manual taking of the thing, nor that the defendant has applied it to his own use. The one inquiry is: Does he exercise a dominion over it in exclusion or in defiance of the plaintiff's right? If so, that is a conversion, be it for his own or another's use.[8]

Trover and conversion. The action for damages for a conversion, maintainable by him who has the right to immediate possession.[9]

The property may be a deed, a negotiable security, money, a copy of a record, an untamed animal reclaimed, trees or crops severed, liquors adulterated, or goods confused.

Includes using a thing without right, or in excess of license; misuse — detention, delivery in violation of

[1] The King's Bible (1611) — Psalms, xxxix, 14.

[2] 2 Pet. ii, 7.

[3] 1 Pet. iii, 1–2.

[4] Story, Partn. § 369.

[5] Seymour v. Freer, 8 Wall. 214 (1868).

[6] Chew v. Nicklin, 45 Pa. 87 (1863); De Wolf v. Lawson, 61 Wis. 477–78 (1884), cases; Effinger v. Hall, 81 Va. 107 (1885).

[7] Johnson v. Holifield, 82 Ala. 127–28 (1886), cases.

[8] Beatty v. Byers, 18 Pa. 107 (1851).

[1] Anewalt's Appeal, 42 Pa. 416 (1862), cases; Jones v. Caldwell, 97 id. 45 (1881), cases; Hammond v. Putnam, 110 Mass. 235 (1872); 8 Ves. 388; 19 id. 424.

[2] Bleight v. Bank, 10 Pa. 131 (1848); Chew v. Nicklin, 45 id. 84 (1863); Dundas's Appeal, 64 id. 325 (1870).

[3] Brownfield v. Mackay, 27 Pa. 320 (1856); Brolasky v. Gally, 51 id. 513 (1866); Evans's Appeal, 63 id. 183 (1869).

[4] Hoover v. Landis, 76 Pa. 354 (1874).

[5] Beatty v. Byers, 18 Pa. 107 (1851); Evans's Appeal, supra; 8 Va. Law J. 513 (1884).

[6] See generally Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Brown, C. C. *497 (1779); 1 W. & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 1118–71, cases; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 562–71, 790–93; 2 id. §§ 1212–30; 2 Kent, 230, 476; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. 577–78, 582 (1818); 10 Pet. *563; 5 How. 233; 4 Del. Ch. 72; 15 B. Mon. 118; 27 Md. 563; 3 Gray, 180; 63 N. C. 332, 381; 5 Paige, Ch. 172; 6 id. 448; 13 R. I. 507.

[7] Badger v. Hatch, 71 Me. 565 (1880), Barrows, J.

[8] Bristol v. Burt, 7 Johns. *258 (1810), Per curiam.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 152; 127 Mass. 64; 1 Sm. L. C. 230; 89 Ind 245.

orders, or non-delivery and even a wrongful sale, by a bailee; improper seizure or sale by an officer; not an accidental loss, nor mere non-feasance.[1] An original unlawful taking is conclusive; but where the original taking is lawful, and the detention only is illegal, a demand and refusal to deliver is necessary and must be shown.[2]

The action of trover and conversion, though originally for damages against one who had found and appropriated the goods of another, now reaches all cases where one has obtained such goods by any means, and has sold or used them, without assent, or has refused to deliver them on demand.[3]

The measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with legal interest.[4]

As to what is conversion of public moneys by public officers, see Revised Statutes, §§ 5488, 5496.

See further DETINUE; REPLEVIN; TROVER.

CONVEYANCE.[5] A carrying from place to place; also, transmission, transfer, from one person to another.

1. Transportation,—the act, or the means employed.

Public conveyance. A vessel or vehicle employed for the general conveyance of passengers. Private conveyance. A vessel or vehicle belonging to and used by a private individual.[6]

An omnibus used to carry, free of charge, guests of a hotel to and from railroad stations is not a "public" conveyance.[7] See VEHICLE.

2. Transfer of title to realty; and, the instrument by which this is done.

Properly, the term does not relate to a disposition of personalty, although sometimes so used,[8] as see under Fraudulent Conveyance.

The conveyance or transfer of title to vessels is regulated by the act of July 29, 1850, re-enacted into Rev. St. as § 4192.

To "convey" real estate is, by an appropriate instrument, to transfer the legal title from the present owner to another.[9]

In a deed, is equivalent to "grant."[1] See COVENANT, 1.

Imports an instrument under seal.[2]

May include a lease,[3] or a mortgage.[4]

Is simply a deed which passes or conveys land from one man to another,[5] or conveys the property of lands and tenements from man to man.[6] Evidences an intention to abandon the land.[7]

Involves a transfer of a freehold estate.[8]

Absolute conveyance. A conveyance entirely executed; not conditional, as in the case of a mortgage, q. v.

Adverse conveyance. A conveyance opposed to another conveyance; one of two or more conveyances passing or pretending to pass rights which are inconsistent with each other.

As, two or more transfers of absolute ownership in the same piece of land to different persons. See POSSESSION, Adverse.

Conveyances at common law. Some of these may be called original or primary, those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises; others, derivative or secondary, those whereby the benefit or estate originally created is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished.[9]

Original are: feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. Derivative are: release, confirmation, surrender, assignment, defeasance—each of which presupposes some other conveyance precedent.[9]

Conveyances under the Statute of Uses. Such as have force and operation by virtue of that statute.[10]

They are: covenant to stand seized to uses, bargain and sale, lease and release, deed to lead or declare the use of another more direct conveyance, deed or revocation of a use.[11]

At common law, words of conveyance were give, grant, bargain and sell, alien, enfeoff, release, confirm, quitclaim, qq. v. The meaning of these terms has been somewhat modified.[12]

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 152, etc., ante.

[2] 1 Chitty, Pl. 179; 126 Mass. 132; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 644.

[3] Boyce v. Brockway, 31 N. Y. 493 (1865), cases; 61 id. 477; 68 id. 524; 10 Johns. 172. See also 9 Ark. 55; 2 Cal. 571; 19 Conn. 319; 10 Cush. 416; 2 Allen, 184; 36 Me. 439; 35 N. C. 340; 39 N. H. 101; 48 id. 406; 10 Oreg. 84; 9 Heisk. 715; 39 Vt. 480; L. R., 7 Q. B. 629; 9 Ex. 89.

[4] Grimes v. Watkins, 59 Tex. 140 (1883); 46 id. 402; 6 id. 45. As to limitation of actions, see 21 Cent. Law J. 245–47 (1885), cases.

[5] F. convier, to transmit: L. conviare, to accompany.

[6] Ripley v. Insurance Co., 16 Wall. 338 (1872), Chase, C. J.; Oswego v. Collins, 38 Hun, 170 (1885).

[7] City of Oswego v. Collins, 38 Hun, 171 (1885).

[8] Dickerman v. Abrahams, 21 Barb. 561 (1854).

[9] Abendroth v. Town of Greenwich, 29 Conn. 365 (1860); Edelman v. Yeakel, 27 Pa. 29 (1856).

[1] Patterson v. Carneal, 3 A. K. Marsh. 621 (1821); Lambert v. Smith, 9 Oreg. 198 (1881).

[2] Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. 510–11 (1807).

[3] Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 246 (1874).

[4] Odd Fellows' Savings Bank v. Banton, 46 Cal. 607 (1873); Babcock v. Hoey, 11 Iowa, 377 (1860); Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 245 (1871); Rowell v. Williams, 54 Wis. 639 (1882). See N. Y. R. S. 762, § 38; 2 id. 137, § 7.

[5] Brown v. Fits, 13 N. H. 285 (1842); Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 105 (1876).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 309.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 10.

[8] Hutchinson v. Bramhall, 42 N. J. E. 335 (1886).

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 309, 324; 9 Oreg. 187.

[10] 2 Bl. Com. 309, 327.

[11] 2 Bl. Com. 338–39.

[12] Richardson v. Levi, 67 Tex. 367 (1887).

The forms of conveyance are prescribed by statutes in many States; but such statutes are generally deemed directory only, not mandatory; and the common-law modes are recognized as effectual. Conveyance by bargain (q. v.) and sale is the mode ordinarily practiced.

Whatever be the form or nature of the conveyance, if the grantor sets forth on the face of the instrument, by way of recital or averment, that he is possessed of a particular estate in the premises, which estate the deed purports to convey, or if the possession is affirmed in the deed in express terms or by necessary implication, the grantor and persons in privity with him, are estopped from denying that he was so possessed. The estoppel works upon the estate, and binds an after-acquired title.[1] See ABANDON, 1; CONDITION; DEED, 2; DELIVERY, 4; ESTOPPEL; INFLUENCE; RECORD; TRANSFER; UNDER AND SUBJECT.

Fraudulent conveyance. In a general sense, any transfer of property, real or personal,[2] which is infected with fraud, actual or constructive; more specifically, such transfer of realty by a debtor as is intended or at least operates to defeat the rights of his creditors. Voluntary conveyance. A transfer without valuable consideration.

Celebrated statutes upon this subject, adopted by the States, are: (1) 13 Elizabeth (1571), c. 5, which declares void conveyances of lands, and also of goods, made to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors; unless "upon good [valuable] consideration, and bona fide," to a person not having notice of such fraud. (2) 27 Elizabeth (1585), c. 4, made perpetual by 39 Eliz. (1597), c. 18, s. 31, which provides that voluntary conveyances of any estate in lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, and conveyances of such estates with clause of revocation at the will of the grantor, are also void as against subsequent purchasers for value. The effect of the last statute is, that a person who has made a voluntary settlement of landed property, even on his own children, may afterward sell the property to any purchaser, who, even though he has notice of the settlement, will hold the property; but, otherwise, if the settlement is founded on a valuable consideration.[3] These statutes are to be liberally construed in suppression of fraud.[4]

The object of 13 Elizabeth was to protect creditors from frauds practiced under the pretense of discharging a moral obligation toward a wife, child, or other relative. It excepts the bona fide discharge of such obligation. Hence, a voluntary conveyance, as to creditors, is not necessarily void.[5] The object of 27 Elizabeth was to give protection to subsequent purchasers against mere volunteers under prior conveyances. As between the parties such conveyances are binding.[6]

In England, all voluntary conveyances are void as to subsequent purchasers, with or without notice, although the original conveyance was bona fide, upon the ground that the statute infers fraud.[1]

In New York, only voluntary conveyances, originally fraudulent, are held to be within the statute.[2] In Massachusetts, a conveyance, to be avoided, must have been fraudulent, not merely voluntary, at its inception.[3] In Pennsylvania, the grantor must have intended, by his voluntary conveyance, to withdraw his property from the reach of his future creditors;[4] any such creditor must prove that fraud on him was intended: a man need not provide for indebtedness he does not anticipate and which may never occur.[5] And the Supreme Court of the United States holds, what is the settled doctrine generally, that if a person, natural or artificial, solvent at the time, without actual intent to defraud creditors, disposes of his property for an inadequate consideration, or makes a voluntary conveyance of it, subsequent creditors are not injured;[6] that a conveyance for value (as for marriage) will be upheld, however fraudulent the purpose of the grantor, if the grantee had no knowledge thereof.[7]

A deed made to prevent a recovery of damages for a tort is fraudulent and void.[8]

Conveyances to defraud creditors are also indictable; expressly made so by 13 Elizabeth, c. 5, § 3.[9]

The conveyance to a wife, in payment of a debt owing by her husband, is not voluntary, nor fraudulent as to other creditors; but there must have been a previous agreement for repayment.[10]

See further DECLARATION, 1; FRAUD; HINDER; POSSESSION, Fraudulent; PREFERENCE; SETTLE, 4.

Mesne conveyance. A conveyance between others; an intermediate transfer.

Reconveyance. A transfer of realty back to the original or former grantor.

Conveyancer. One who makes a business of drawing deeds of conveyance of land, and, perhaps, of examining titles.

One whose business it is to draw deeds, bonds, mortgages, wills, writs, or other legal papers, or to examine titles to real estate.[11]

[1] Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. 322 (1850), cases; French v. Spencer, 21 id. 240 (1858); Apgar v. Christophers, 33 F. R. 203 (1887), Wales, J.

[2] See Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. *510–11 (1807).

[3] Williams, Real Prop. 76.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 352–58, 362; 4 Kent, 462–64.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 426.

[1] 1 Story, Eq. § 426.

[2] Sterry v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. *269–70 (1814): s. c. 12 Johns. *554 (1815); 6 Cowen, 603; 8 id. 406; 8 Paige, 165.

[3] Beal v. Warren, 2 Gray, 456, 451 (1854).

[4] McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356 (1870).

[5] Harlan v. Maglaughlin, 90 Pa. 297–98 (1879), cases; Hoak's Appeal, 100 id. 62 (1882), cases.

[6] Graham v. La Crosse, &c. R. Co., 102 U. S. 153 (1880), cases, Bradley, J.

[7] Prewit v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 24 (1880), cases. See Barbour v. Priest, ib. 293 (1880); Clark v. Killian, ib. 766 (1880); 17 F. R. 425–28, cases; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. 242 (1823); 1 Am. L. C. *36, 55; Twyne's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. *33, 39; 18 Am. Law Reg. 137.

[8] Johnson v. Wagner, 76 Va. 590 (1882), cases.

[9] Regina v. Smith, 6 Cox, Cr. C. 31, 36 (1852).

[10] Bates v. McConnell, 31 F. R. 588 (1887); ib. 591, note. See generally 24 Am. Law Reg. 489–99 (1885), cases; 22 Cent. Law J. 124 (1886), cases,—remedy by execution.

[11] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 118.

Conveyancing. That branch of the law which treats of transfers of realty.

Includes the examinations of titles, and the preparation of instruments of transfer. In England, Scotland, and some of our larger cities, it is a highly artificial system of law, with a distinct class of practitioners.[1]

CONVICT.[2] 1, v. To find guilty of a criminal offense, by verdict of a jury.

2, n. One who has been found guilty of a crime; in particular, one who is serving a sentence for the commission of a crime.

Convicted. Found guilty of the crime whereof one stands indicted: which may accrue from his confessing the offense and pleading guilty, or by his being found so by verdict of his country.[3]

A man is "convicted" when he is found guilty or confesses the crime before judgment had.[4]

Incapable of holding office or testifying because "convicted of crime" intends a verdict of guilt and judgment thereon.[5]

Conviction. 1. Used to designate a particular stage of a criminal prosecution triable by a jury, the ordinary legal meaning is, the confession of the accused in court, or the verdict returned against him by the jury, which ascertains and publishes the fact of his guilt.[6]

"Judgment" or "sentence" is the appropriate word to denote the action of the court before which the trial is had, declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact thus ascertained.[6] See SENTENCE.

The finding by the jury that the accused is guilty; but, in legal parlance, often denotes the final judgment of the court.[7]

The act of convicting or overcoming one; in criminal procedure, the overthrow of the defendant by the establishment of his guilt according to some known legal mode — a plea of guilty or verdict of a jury.[8]

The term may be used in such connection as to have a secondary or unusual meaning, which would include the final judgment of the court.[8]

In many cases refers to a finding of guilt by a verdict or plea of guilty, and not to the sentence in addition.[1]

Opposed, acquit, acquitted, acquittal, q. v.

Former conviction. A plea that the accused has already been tried and convicted of the offense charged. Opposed, former acquittal.

Second convictions, or even second trials, after legal conviction or acquittal, are not allowed. The pleas of autrefois convict and autrefois acquit are grounded upon the universal maxim of the common law that no man is to be brought into jeopardy of his life more than once for the same offense. The defense must be pleaded, and it must be alleged and proved by the former record that the conviction or acquittal was legal, and based on the verdict of a jury duly impaneled and sworn, else the plea will be subject to demurrer.[2]

A plea which shows that the former sentence has been reversed for error is not a good bar.[3] See further JEOPARDY. Compare ADJUDICATION, Former.

Summary conviction. (1) Such sentence as may be pronounced by a court without the intervention of a jury.

At common law, peculiar to punishment for contempts, q. v.

(2) A trial of an offense against the excise or revenue laws, determined by the commissioner of the particular department or by a justice of the peace.[4]

(3) A sentence pronounced by a committing magistrate, without a hearing and verdict by a jury.

This is what is generally meant. It is provided for by statute, for the punishment of the lighter offenses; and intended to secure the accused a speedy trial, as well as to relieve society and the higher courts of the annoyance of jury trials in petty cases. But the proceeding is in derogation of the constitutional right of trial by jury, and statutory directions are to be strictly pursued. Appeal to a court having a jury is allowed, within a short period, as five days; so that, in reality, these convictions are only submitted to by offenders. See further SUMMARY.

See also INDICTMENT; JURY, Trial by; VAGRANT.

2. Firm belief. See ABIDING; DOUBT, Reasonable.

---

[1] Bouvier's Law Dict.

[2] L. con-vincere, to completely overcome.

[3] [4 Bl. Com. 362.

[4] Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406 (1862), cases; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 223.

[5] Faunce v. People, 51 Ill. 313 (1869); Smith v. State, 6 Lea, 639 (1881).

[6] Commonwealth v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 325–40 (1872), cases, Gray, J.; Dwar. Stat., 2 ed., 683.

[7] Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 109 (1877), cases, Folger, J.; Schiffer v. Pruden, 64 id. 52 (1876); 5 Bush, 204; 48 Me. 127; 3 Mo. 602; 25 Gratt. 853; 12 Ct. Cl. 201.

[8] United States v. Watkinds, 7 Saw. 91–93 (1881), Deady, J.

[1] Quintard v. Knoedler, 53 Conn. 487–88 (1885); Bishop, Stat. Cr. § 348; Whart. Cr. Pr. & Pl. § 935. Quære. In a prosecution, alleging a "former conviction," do not these words denote "final judgment," and can they be predicated of a suspended judgment? — White v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 611, 615 (1884).

[2] Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 525–31 (1878), cases, Clifford, J.

[3] Cooley, Const. Lim. 326–28, cases; 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 651–80; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 435; Moore v. State, 71 Ala. 308 (1882), cases: 4 Cr. Law Mag. 429.

[4] See 4 Bl. Com. 280–83.

CONVINCE. To overcome or subdue: to satisfy the mind by proof.[1] See DOUBT, Reasonable.

COOLING TIME. Time for passion to subside and reason prevail; time for reflection.

A man, when assailed with violence or great rudeness, is inspired with a sudden impulse of anger, which puts him upon resistance before he has had time for cool reflection. If, during that period, he attacks his assailant with a weapon likely to endanger his life, and death ensues, it is regarded as done through heat of blood or violence of anger, and not through malice.[2] See MALICE; PROVOCATION.

COOPER. See MANUFACTURER.

CO-OPERATIVE. See ASSOCIATION; TRADES-UNION.

CO-ORDINATE. See JURISDICTION, 2.

COPARCENARY. The estate held where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons.[3]

Coparceners. Co-heirs are called coparceners, and parceners: they may be compelled to make "partition."

All parceners make but one heir. They have the unities of interest, title, and possession of joint-tenants. No unity of time is necessary; for the heir of a parcener and surviving parcener are coparceners. Parceners always claim by descent; joint-tenants by purchase. They sue and are to be sued jointly. They may not have an action for waste against each other: that can be prevented by partition. Each has a distinct moiety, with no survivorship. Possession being severed by partition, they become tenants in severalty; when one aliens his share they become tenants in common. Where they divide amicably each elects a share by seniority, which is a personal privilege. Under a writ in partition, the sheriff, by the verdict of a jury (or commissioners) divides and assigns the parts.[4]

In the old sense, includes males and females; in modern English usage, is limited to females.[4]

Of comparatively little practical importance at present. With us, heirs take as tenants in common.[5] See HOTCH-POT; PARTITION; TENANT.

COPARTNER. See PARTNER.

COPPERS. See COIN.

COPY. A true transcript of an original writing.[6]

A reproduction or transcript of language, written or printed, or of a design, device, picture, or work of art.[1] Compare TRANSCRIPT.

Certified or office copy. A copy made and attested by the officer who is intrusted with the custody of an original writing, and authorized to make copies.

Every document of a public nature, as to which inconvenience would be occasioned by a removal, and which the party has a right to inspect, may be proved by a duly authenticated copy.[8]

Examined copy. A copy compared with the original, or with an official record thereof.

Exemplified copy. A copy attested under the seal of the proper court; an exemplification (q. v.) of record.

An examined copy of a record is evidence where the removal of the original would inconvenience the public. Fraud or mistake therein can be readily detected.[8] See RECORD, Judicial.

A copy of a will may be received in probate.[4]

Where an original is lost, or withheld after notice to produce, a copy will be received.[8]

To be evidence, a copy must also be complete.[8]

In making examined copies, the comparing witnesses should change hands, so that the listening witness may in turn become the reading witness.[7]

Such copy should be proved by some one who has compared it with the original.[8]

The rule that a copy of a copy is not admissible evidence is correct in itself, when properly understood and limited to its true sense. The rule properly applies to cases where the copy is taken from a copy, the original being still in existence and capable of being compared with it, for then it is a second remove from the original; or where it is a copy of a copy of a record, the record being in existence, by law deemed as high evidence as the original, for then it is also a second remove from the record. But it is quite a difficult question whether it applies to cases of secondary evidence where the original is lost, or the record of it is not deemed as high evidence as the original, or where the copy of a copy is the highest proof in existence.[9]

A letter-press copy is receivable, the original being lost. While secondary at best, a copy from such a copy, the original being lost, has been allowed.[10]

[1] Evans v. Rugee, 57 Wis. 626 (1883).

[2] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 308 (1850), Shaw, C. J. See also Abernethy v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 322 (1882); 71 Ala. 485; 3 Gratt. 594; Whart. Hom. 448; 1 Russ. Cr. 667.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 187-90; 3 id. 227.

[4] 4 Kent, 366.

[5] 1 Washb. R. P. 415.

[6] Dickinson v. Chesapeake, &c. R. Co., 7 W. Va. 412 (1874); Bouvier.

[1] Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 50 (1882), cases; Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 247 (1882), cases; Booth v. Tiernan, 109 U. S. 208 (1883).

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 91.

[4] 1 Williams, Ex. 364.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 508.

[6] Commonwealth v. Trout, 76 Pa. 332 (1874).

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. § 94.

[8] McGinniss v. Sawyer, 63 Pa. 267 (1869).

[9] Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. *677 (1835), Story J.

[10] See Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 363 (1869), cases; 1 Cush. 189; 7 Allen, 561; 3 McCrary, 169; 37 Conn. 555; 57 Ga. 50; 73 Ill. 161; 18 Kan. 546; 19 La. An. 91; 35 Md. 123; 44 N. Y. 172; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 90-109, cases.

COPYHOLD. Lords of manors, from time out of mind, having permitted villains to enjoy their possessions without interruption, in a regular course of descent, the common law, of which custom is the life, gave the villains title to prescribe against the lords, and, on performance of the same services, to hold the lands under the lord's will, that being in conformity with the customs of the manor as preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the courts-baron.[1]

In England, to-day, a copyhold, in a general way, distinguishes a customary tenure from a freehold.

COPYRIGHT. An exclusive right to the multiplication of the copies of a production.[2]

The sole right of printing, publishing and selling one's literary composition or book.[3]

A copyright gives the author or the publisher the exclusive right of multiplying copies of what he has written or printed.[4]

The word may be understood in two senses. The author of a literary composition has an undoubted right at common law to the piece of paper on which his composition is written, and to the copies he chooses to make of it for himself or others. . . The other sense is, the exclusive right of multiplying copies: the right of preventing others from copying, by printing or otherwise, a literary work which the author has published; the exclusive right of printing a published work, that being the ordinary mode of multiplying copies.[5]

The word is used indifferently for common-law copyright: copyright before publication; and statutory copyright: copyright after publication. It is also made a synonym for "literary property" — the exclusive right of an owner publicly to read or exhibit his work; but this is not strictly correct.[6]

A copyright secures the proprietor against the copying by others of the original work, but does not confer upon him a monopoly in the intellectual conception which it expresses. The law originated in the recognition of an author's right to be protected in the manuscript which is the title of his literary property. It does not rest upon the theory that the author has an exclusive property in his ideas or in the words in which he has clothed them. . . No person, for example, can acquire an exclusive right to appropriate the information contained in a translation, chart, map or survey. . . Frequently, it is necessary to determine whether the defendant's work is the result of his own labor, skill, and use of materials common to all, or is an appropriation of the plaintiff's work, with colorable alterations and departures intended to disguise the piracy. He may work on the same original materials, but he cannot evasively use those already collected and embodied by the skill, industry, and expenditure of another.[1]

The earliest evidence of the recognition of copyright is found in the charter of the Stationers' Company, granted by Philip and Mary, and in the decrees of the court of star-chamber. The first statute was 8 Anne (1710), c. 19; passed for the protection and encouragement of learned men. This statute gave the author and his assigns the sole liberty to print his work for fourteen years; the author to be entitled to an extension for another like term. But, the better opinion is that the common law, before that statute, admitted the exclusive right in the author, and his assigns, to multiply copies of his own original literary composition, for injunctions to protect this right were granted in equity. At all events, it has long been settled that the common-law right was taken away by the statute, and, hence, that it has existed, if at all, by force of some subsequent statutory provision.[2]

With us, before the adoption of the Constitution, it may be doubted whether there was any copyright at common law. Some of the States had passed laws recognizing and securing the right. All power in the States to legislate upon the subject became vested in Congress. "The Congress shall have power . . To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the Exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries."[3] Under this authority various general acts have been passed, from that of May 31, 1790, to that of June 18, 1874; all which, as re-enacted, constitute §§ 4948 to 4971 of the Revised Statutes, known as the title or chapter on "Copyrights."

"Any citizen of the United States or resident therein, who shall be the author, inventor, designer, or proprietor of any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, or photograph or negative thereof, or of a painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, and of models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts, and the executors, administrators, or the assigns of any such person shall, upon complying with the provision of this chapter, have the sole liberty of printing, re-

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 95, 90, 147; Williams, R. P. 333.

[2] [Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. 530 (1852), Nelson, J. See R. S. § 4952.

[3] [Stowe v. Thomas, 2 Wall. Jr. 567 (1853), Grier, J.

[4] Perris v. Hexamer, 99 U. S. 675 (1878), Waite, C. J.

[5] Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. C. 919-20 (1854), Parke, B.; Cappell v. Purday, 14 M. & W. 316 (1845), Pollock, C. B.

[6] See Drone, Copyr. 100.

[1] Johnson v. Donaldson, 18 Blatch. 289-90 (1880), cases, Wallace, J. See also Re Brosnahan, 18 F. R. 64-65 (1883).

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 406-7; 2 Kent, 373; Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2408 (1769); Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 454 (1854); 18 id. 165; 2 Story, 100; 5 McLean, 32; 6 id. 128; 15 Alb. Law J. 445, 465 (1877); Drone, 1.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8.

printing, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending the same; and, in case of a dramatic composition, of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others." R. S. § 4952.

"The printing, publishing, importation, or sale of any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph, written, composed, or made by any person not a citizen of the United States nor resident therein," is not to be construed as prohibited. R. S. § 4971. No mention being here made of paintings, drawings, chromos, statues, statuary, models, or designs, there would seem to be nothing to prevent a resident owner from copyrighting any such, although the work of a foreigner.[1] See further PROPRIETOR, 1.

"Engraving, cut, and print" (R. S. § 4952) apply only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts; and no prints or labels designed to be used for any other article of manufacture shall be entered under the copyright law, but may be registered in the patent office.[2] See PRINT.

Manufacturers of designs for molded decorative articles, titles, plaques, or articles of pottery or metal, subject to copyright, may put the copyright mark upon the back or bottom of such articles, or in such other place upon them as it has heretofore been usual for manufacturers to employ.[3]

The period is twenty-eight years from the time of recording the title; with a right of renewal for fourteen years, in the author, inventor, or designer, or his widow or children, being still a citizen or resident. R. S. §§ 4953-54.

A printed copy of the title (not title-page) of the book, map, chart, etc., or a description of the painting, drawing, etc., or a model or design of the work of art, as the case may be, is to be deposited with or mailed to the Librarian of Congress; and, within ten days after publication, two complete copies of the best edition of each book or other article is also to be sent to him.[4]

The print of a type-writer will be accepted. See TITLE, 2, Book.

Notice of copyright must be given by some imprint on the title,— leaf, face, or front-piece. The shortest form is "Copyright, 1888, by A. B." The penalty for an unauthorized notice is one hundred dollars.

"Registered" is not the equivalent of "copyright."[5]

"Right of translation reserved," or "All rights reserved," secures the right to translate or to dramatize the production. See DRAMA; RESERVE, 2.

Assignments must be in writing, and recorded within sixty days.

A separate copyright must be taken out for each volume or number of a periodical, or variety, or description.

In the case of a painting, statue, model, or design, a photograph of "cabinet" size must accompany the description and application.

No affidavit or formal application is required.

At present, 1888, the fees are: fifty cents each for recording a title, description, etc., for a certificate, or a duplicate certificate; and one dollar for each assignment.[1]

The right is infringed when another person produces a substantial copy of the whole or of a material part of the thing copyrighted.[2]

To constitute an invasion of copyright it is not necessary that a large portion of a work be copied in form or in substance. If so much is taken that the value of the original is sensibly diminished, or the labors of the original author substantially, to an injurious extent, appropriated, that is an infringement. Courts look to the nature and objects of the selections made, the quantity and value of the materials used, and the degree in which the use may prejudice the sale or diminish the profits, or supersede the object of the original work.[3]

Evidence of the coincidence of errors, the identity of inaccuracies, affords strong proof of copying; so does coincidence of citation, and identity in plan and arrangement. Equity may not relieve where the amount copied is small and of little value, where there is no bad motive, where there is a well-founded doubt as to the legal title, or long acquiescence or culpable neglect in seeking redress. A copyright thus differs from a patent-right, which admits of no use at all without license.[4]

Recent decisions afford more ample protection to copyright than the earlier ones; they restrict the privilege of subsequent writers within narrower limits.[4, 5]

A production, published under a nom de plume, and not copyrighted, becomes public property; and the use of the assumed name is not a trade-mark which will protect against republication.[6]

An action for the penalty for infringement, provided by R. S. § 4965, abates by the death of the defendant.[6]

See further ABRIDGE; ART, 2; BOOK, 1; CHART; COMPILE; COMPOSITION, 1; DEDICATION, 2; DIRECTORIES; IDENTITY, 2; LETTER, 3; MANUSCRIPT; PHOTOGRAPH; PIRACY, 2; REPORT, 1 (3); REVIEW, 3; SCIENCE; SECURE, 1; TRANSLATION; USUS, Ancipitis, Utile, etc. Compare PATENT, 2; TRADE-MARK.

---

[1] Drone, Copyr. 232. But see Yuengling v. Schile, 20 Blatch. 458-63 (1882).

[2] Act 18 June, 1874: 1 Sup. R. S. 41.

[3] Act 1 Aug. 1882: 22 St. L. 181; amending R. S. §§ 4962, 969.

[4] See Merrell v. Tice, 104 U. S. 561 (1881); Donelly v. Ives, 13 Rep. 300 (S. D. N. Y., 1882); 1 Blatch. 618.

[5] Higgins v. Keuffel, 30 F. R. 627 (1887).

[1] Upon application to the Librarian of Congress, printed directions for securing a copyright will be furnished free of charge.

[2] Perris v. Hexamer, 99 U. S. 674 (1878).

[3] Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 110 (1844); Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 81-83 (1869), cases.

[4] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 74-75, 80 (1869), cases; R. S. §§ 4964-65.

[5] Clemens ("Mark Twain") v. Belford, 11 Biss. 461 (1883): 15 Rep. 227; 14 F. R. 720.

[6] Schreiber v. Sharpless, 17 F. R. 589 (1883). See generally ib. 593-603, cases. R. S. §§ 4964-67, providing penalties for infringements, explained,— Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 613-16 (1888), Miller, J.

CORAM. L. Before; in the presence of.

Coram nobis. Before us. Coram vobis. Before you.

Designate, the first, a writ of error designed to review proceedings before the same court which is alleged to have committed the error; and the second, a writ for a review by a higher court. See further ERROR, 3.

Coram non judice. Before one not a judge; by a court without jurisdiction. See further JUDEX, Coram.

CORD. One hundred and twenty-eight cubic feet.

A contract for the sale of wood or bark by the cord calls for such number of cubic feet.[1]

CORDIALS. See LIQUOR.

CORN. See GRAIN.

CORNER. In the language of gambling speculation, when an article of commerce is so engrossed or manipulated as to make it scarce or plenty in the market at the will of the gamblers, and its price thus placed within their power.[2] See COMBINATION, 2.

CORNERS. See FOUR.

CORODY. See PENSION, 2.

CORONER.[3] 1. An officer who has principally to do with pleas of the crown, or such wherein the king is more immediately concerned.[4]

2. A county officer who inquires into the causes of sudden or violent deaths, while the facts are recent and the circumstances unchanged.[5]

The lord chief justice is the chief coroner of all England; and there are usually four coroners for each county. The office is of equal antiquity with that of sheriff; was ordained with his, to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardship of the county. Much honor formerly appertained to the office, which might be for life.

According to Blackstone, the duties of the office, which are principally judicial, are largely defined by 4 Edw. I (1276), and consist in inquiring (whence coroner's inquest) when any person is slain, or dies suddenly, or in prison, concerning the manner of his death.[6] This must appear upon view of the body, at the place where death happened, by a jury of four to six persons. If any person be found guilty of homicide the coroner is to commit him to prison for further trial, and to inquire as to his property, which is forfeited thereby; and he is also to certify the whole of the inquisition, with the evidence, to the court of king's bench or to the next assizes. Another branch of his office was to inquire generally concerning shipwrecks, and treasure-trove. His ministerial office is as the sheriff's substitute: when exception is taken to the sheriff, for suspicion of partiality, process is awarded to the coroner for execution.[1] See SHERIFF.

The object of an inquest is to seek information and secure evidence in case of death by violence or other undue means. It is the coroner's duty to act only when there is reasonable ground to suspect that a death was so caused; the power is not to be exercised capriciously, and arbitrarily against all reason.[2]

The welfare of society and the interests of public justice alike demand that an inquest should be thorough. Statutory provisions are, therefore, to be liberally construed, with a view to the accomplishment of the end desired. They are to be so construed that the coroner may be thereby authorized to employ such medical, surgical, or other scientific skill as may be necessary, in his judgment, in the particular case, and to charge his county with payment of the reasonable expense thereof.[3]

In Massachusetts, the office was abolished in 1877. The governor appoints as examiners "men learned in the science of medicine," who hold autopsies, and, in cases of death from violence, notify the district attorney and a justice of that fact.[4]

CORPORAL. 1. Relating to the body of a person; bodily: as, corporal punishment, q. v.; corporal seizure or touching. See ARREST, 2; CORPUS.

2. Affecting a thing externally; as, a corporal oath,—taken with the hand upon the Gospels. See OATH.

3. In person: as, a corporal appearance. Compare CORPOREAL.

CORPORATE. See CORPORATION, Corporate.

CORPORATION. A creature of the crown, created by letters-patent.[5]

An artificial being, indivisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law.[6]

As all personal rights die with the person, and as the necessary forms of investing a

[1] Kennedy v. Oswego, &c. R. Co., 67 Barb. 167 (1867). See Buffalo v. O'Malley, 61 Wis. 258 (1884).

[2] Kirkpatrick v. Bonsall, 72 Pa. 158 (1872), Agnew, J.

[3] L. coronator: corona, a crown.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 346.

[5] Commonwealth v. Gray, 5 Cush. 309 (1850), Shaw, Chief Justice.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 346–48; 4 id. 274; 7 Q. B. D. 514; 20 Ga 336; 10 Humph. 346; 73 N. Y. 45.

[2] Lancaster County v. Mishler, 100 Pa. 627 (1882).

[3] Jameson v. Bartholomew County, 54 Ind. 530 (1878), Howk, C. J. See also Dearborn County v. Bond, 88 id. 102 (1882); Sandford v. Lee County, 49 Iowa, 148 (1878); Cook v. Multnomah County, 7 Oreg. 170 (1879); 6 Am. Law Reg. 385–400 (1858).

[4] Laws of 1877, c. 200.

[5] Kirk v. Nowill, 1 T. R. 124 (1786), Mansfield, C. J.

[6] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 636 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; United States Bank v. Deveaux, 5 Cranch, 88 (1809); Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 587 (1839); 1 Black, 295.

series of individuals, one after the other, with the same identical right, would be inconvenient, if not impracticable, it has been found necessary, when for the advantage of the public that particular rights should be continued, to constitute artificial persons who may maintain a perpetual succession. These artificial persons are called "bodies politic," "bodies corporate," or "corporations." [1]

The great object of a corporation is to bestow the character and properties of individuality on a collective and changing body of men.[2]

A private corporation is merely an association of individuals united for a special purpose, and permitted to do business under a particular name, and have a succession of members without dissolution.[3]

The privilege of exercising the particular right, by grant of the sovereign, is a franchise.[4] Compare Corporation Aggregate.

The constitutions of several States provide that the term corporation "shall be construed to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers and privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships." [5]

In England, the tendency seems to have been to confine the term to its original sense as implying nonliability of members for corporate debts; and, if this exemption is not to be accorded, to call the body a "public company." . . The current of American decisions has been to the effect that the word embraces an association formed under general laws, with stockholders, directors, a president, etc.; and that such a body is not a quasi corporation (q. v.), nor a joint-stock company, nor a limited partnership.[6] See ASSOCIATION; COMPANY.

If the essential franchises of a corporation are conferred upon a joint-stock company, it is none the less a corporation for being called something else.[7]

Being the mere creature of law, each possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it, expressly or as incidental to its very existence. These are such as are supposed best calculated to effect the object for which it was created. Among the most important are immortality and individuality: "properties by which a perpetual succession of many members are considered as the same, and may act as a single individual." [1]

The members and their successors are as one person in law, with one will — that of the majority; and with prescribed rules which take the place of natural laws.[9]

The sovereign's consent is necessary to the erection of a corporation. With respect to corporations which exist by force of the common law, as, the king himself and bishops, this consent is implied; so, also, as to corporations, like the city of London, whose charter rests on prescription. His consent is expressly given by act of parliament or by charter. He may grant the power to a subject as his agent.[8]

The powers of a corporation aggregate are: to have perpetual succession; to sue and be sued; to hold lands; to have a common seal; to make by-laws; — with all the rights necessarily incident to these general powers.[4]

The duty of a corporation is to act up to the end or design for which it was created. To enforce this duty all corporations may be "visited" — by the founder or his representative in the case of a lay corporation; by the endower, his heirs or assigns, in the case of an eleemosynary corporation.[5]

A corporation is dissolved by a statute assented to; by the natural death of all its members; by surrender of its franchises; by forfeiture of its charter, through negligence or abuse of its franchises.[6]

The objects for which corporations are created are such as the government wishes to promote. They are deemed beneficial to the country; and it is this benefit that constitutes the consideration of the grant.[7]

The United States may be deemed a corporation; [8] so may a State; [9] and so, a county. All corporations were originally modeled upon a state or nation; whence they are still called "bodies politic." [10] See Municipal and Public Corporation.

The species of corporations are the following:

Aggregate corporation. Consists of many persons united together into one society, and is kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue forever.

Corporation sole. Consists of one person only and his successors, incorporated in order to give them legal capacities and advantages,

[1] 1 Bl Com. 467, 123.

[2] Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. *562 (1830), Marshall, C. J.

[3] [Pembina Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 189 (1888), Field, J.

[4] [2 Bl. Com. 37. See also 4 Ark. 351; 40 Ga. 637; 76 Ill. 573; 6 Kan. 253; 40 N. H. 578; 1 Ohio St. 642; 45 Wis. 392; 1 Hill, N. Y., 630.

[5] Const. N. Y., 1849, Art. 8, § 3; Cal., 1849, Art. 4, § 33; Mich., 1850, Art. 15, § 11; Kan., 1859, Art. 12, § 6; Minn., 1857-58, Art. 10, § 1.

[6] 1 Abbott, 291; Falconer v. Campbell, 2 McLean, 195 (1840); Oliver v. Liverpool, &c. Ins. Co., 100 Mass. 538 (1868); 10 Wall. 566 (1870).

[7] Fargo v. Louisville, &c. R. Co., 10 Biss. 277 (1881).

[1] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 636 (1819); 97 U. S. 666; 101 id. 83; 1 Bl. Com. 468.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 468.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 472-74. As to names of corporations, see 23 Cent. Law J. 531 (1886), cases.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 475-78.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 480.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 485.

[7] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 637 (1819); 101 U. S. 83.

[8] United States v. Hillegas, 3 Wash. 73 (1811).

[9] Indiana v. Woram, 6 Hill, 38 (1843); 2 Johns. Cas. 58, 417; 1 Abb. U. S. 22; 35 Ga. 315.

[10] McIntosh, Hist. Eng. 31-32.

particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had; as, the king, by force of the common law, and a bishop or parson.[1]

A "corporation aggregate" is a collection of individuals united into one collective body, under a special name, and possessing certain immunities, privileges, and capacities in its collective character which do not belong to the natural persons composing it.[2]

A "corporation aggregate" consists of many persons united together into one society, and kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue forever.[3]

A "corporation sole" consists of a single person who is made a body corporate and politic in order to give him some legal capacities and advantages, especially that of perpetuity; as, a minister seized of lands in right of the parish.[3]

A "corporation aggregate" is a true corporation, but a "corporation sole" is one individual, being a member of a series of individuals, who is invested by a fiction with the qualities of a corporation. The capacity or office is here considered apart from the particular person who from time to time may occupy it.[4]

Ecclesiastical corporation. When the members composing the corporation are entirely spiritual persons, as, a bishop, a parson, and the like; for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the church. Lay corporation. A corporation composed of secular persons; and in nature either civil or eleemosynary.

Civil corporation. Such corporation as is erected for a temporal purpose. Eleemosynary corporation. Such corporation as is constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms or bounty of the founder to such persons as he has directed.[5]

Of the "civil" sort are: those erected for the good government of a town or district; those for the advancement and regulation of manufacturers and commerce; those for special purposes — as for medical science, natural history, etc.[6] See Municipal and Private Corporation.

Of the "eleemosynary" kind are hospitals for the relief of the poor, the sick, the impotent; and colleges for the promotion of piety and learning.[6]

"Eleemosynary corporations" are incorporated for perpetuating the application of the bounty of the donor to the specified objects of that bounty[6] — the distribution of the free alms and bounty of the founder as he has directed.[1]

An "eleemosynary corporation" is a private charity, constituted for the perpetual distribution of the alms and bounty of the founder.[2]

A corporation for religious and charitable purposes, endowed solely by private benefactions, is a "private eleemosynary" corporation, although created by a charter from the government.[3]

Close corporation. In this the majority of the persons to whom the corporate powers have been granted, on the happening of vacancies among them, have the right of themselves to appoint others to fill such vacancies, without allowing the corporators in general any choice in the selection of such new officers. Open corporation. In which all the corporators have a vote in the election of officers.[4]

Commercial corporation. See BUSINESS, Corporation.

Foreign corporation. A corporation created by or under the laws of another State, government, or country.[5] Domestic or home corporation. A corporation created under the law of the place where it exists or exercises its powers.

A corporation exists only by force of law, and can have no legal existence beyond the bounds of the sovereignty by which it is created. It dwells in the place of its creation. It is not a "citizen," within the meaning of the Constitution, and cannot maintain a suit in a Federal court against a citizen of a different State from that by which it was created, unless the persons who compose the corporate body are all citizens of that State. The legal presumption is that its members are citizens of the State in which alone the body has a legal existence.[6]

By comity, if not forbidden by its charter nor by the laws of that State, a corporation may exercise its powers in another State.[7]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 469.

[2] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 667 (1819), Story, J.

[3] Overseers of the Poor v. Sears, 22 Pick. 125-28 (1839), Shaw, C. J.; 7 Mass. 447; 22 Wend. 70; 1 Hill, 690; 19 N. Y. 39; 2 Kent, 273.

[4] Maine Anc. Law, 181.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 470-71.

[6] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 640, 647, 660 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[1] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 668, 672-76 (1819), Story, J.

[2] Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 299 (1833); 2 Kent, 274. See also 12 Mass. 557; 9 Barb. 90; 27 id. 306; 8 N. Y. 583; Ang. & A. Corp. § 39.

[3] Society for Propagating the Gospel v. New Haven. 8 Wheat. 480 (1823).

[4] McKim v. Odom, 2 Bland, Ch. 416, n. (1829).

[5] Daly v. National Life Ins. Co., 64 Ind. 6-8 (1878).

[6] Ohio & Mississippi R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 295-96 (1861), cases, Taney, C. J.; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 177-82 (1868), cases; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 id. 283 (1871); Sewing Machine Case, 18 id. 575 (1873); Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535 (1876); Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co., 100 id. 59 (1879); Memphis, &c. R. Co. v. Alabama, 107 id. 585 (1882); Philadelphia Fire Association v. New York, 119 id. 117-18 (1886), cases.

[7] Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352 (1879); St. Louis v. Ferry Co., 11 Wall., 429 (1870).

No State need allow the corporations of another State to do business within its jurisdiction unless it chooses, with perhaps the exception of commercial corporations; but if it does, without limitation, the corporation comes in as it has been created.[1]

The State which recognizes foreign corporations can impose such conditions on its recognition as it chooses, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. If it permits them to do business without limitation, express or implied, they carry with them all their chartered rights, and may claim all their chartered privileges which can be used away from their legal home. By doing business away from home they do not change their citizenship; they simply extend their field of operation.[2]

But a State may not impose a limitation upon the power of a foreign corporation to make contracts within the State for carrying on commerce between the States. . . Doing a single act of business in a State, with no purpose of doing other acts there, does not bring a corporation within a statute requiring a foreign corporation, before it can carry on business in the State, to file a certificate showing places of business, agents, etc.[3]

Undoubtedly a corporation of one State, employed in the business of the general government, may do such business in other States without obtaining a license from them. . . It is not every corporation, lawful in the State of its creation, that other States may be willing to admit within their jurisdiction; such, for example, as a corporation for lotteries. And even when the business is not unlawful the State may wish to limit the number of corporations belonging to its class, or to subject their business to such contract as would be in accordance with the policy governing domestic corporations of a similar character. The States may, therefore, require for the admission within their limits of the corporations of other States such conditions as they may choose. . . The only limitation upon such power arises where the corporation is in the employ of the Federal government, or where its business is strictly commerce, inter-State or foreign.[4]

Moneyed corporation. Any corporation with banking powers, or power to make loans on pledges or deposits, or to make contracts of insurance.[5]

Quasi corporation. A phrase applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute, general or special.[1]

Such auxiliaries of the State as a county, school-district, township, and other like involuntary corporations with liabilities not as great as those of municipal corporations.[2]

Of such are the inhabitants of a school district;[3] commissioners of schools,[4] and boards of education;[5] overseers of the poor:[6] the commissioners or supervisors of a county,[7] q. v.; commissioners of roads;[8] the governor of Tennessee;[9] a levee district organized by statute to reclaim land;[10]—any body invested with corporate powers sub modo, for a few specified purposes only, and which may sue and be sued.[11] See under Public Corporation, Quasi, etc.

Municipal corporation. A public corporation (q. v.) created by the government for political purposes and having subordinate and local powers of legislation; an incorporation of persons inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Merely an agency instituted by the sovereign for the purpose of carrying out in detail the objects of government.[12]

Essentially a revocable agency — having no vested right to any of its powers or franchises — the charter or act of erection being in no sense a contract with the State — and therefore fully subject to the control of the legislature, which may enlarge or diminish its territorial extent or its functions, change or modify its internal arrangement, or destroy its very existence, with the mere breath of arbitrary discretion. While it thus exists in subjection to the will of the sovereign, it enjoys the rights and is subject to the liabilities of any other corporation, public or private. This is the very object of making it a body politic, giving it a legal entity and name, a seal by which to act in solemn form, a capacity to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, a persona standi in judicio, to [1] Relfe v. Rundle, 103 U. S. 225 (1880).

[2] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 11-13 (1881), cases, Waite, C. J.; National Steamship Co. v. Tugman, 106 id. 120-21 (1882), cases; St. Clair v. Cox, ib. 355-56 (1882); Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 id. 537 (1883).

[3] Cooper Manufacturing Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 732 (1885).

[4] Pembina Mining Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 186, 189-90 (1888), cases, Field, J.

[5] See 2 N. Y. Rev. St., 7 ed., 1871; Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 485 (1850); Hill v. Reed, 16 Barb. 287 (1853); 48 id. 464; 6 Paige, 497.

[1] School District v. Insurance Co., 103 U. S. 708 (1880), Miller, J.

[2] Levy Court v. Coroner, 2 Wall. 508 (1864); Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 552 (1875); 7 Mass. 169; 109 id. 213.

[3] 33 Conn. 298; 26 Ind. 310; 27 Iowa, 542; 32 Me. 564; 13 Mass. 193; 23 Mo. 418.

[4] 1 Miss. 328; 18 Johns. 407.

[5] 38 Ohio St. 54.

[6] 44 Ala. 566.

[7] 8 Johns. 422; 20 Barb. 294; 1 Cow. 670; 16 S. & R. 286.

[8] 1 Spears (S. C.), 218.

[9] 8 Humph. 176.

[10] 51 Cal. 406.

[11] 51 Cal. 406; 10 N. Y. 409; 18 Barb. 567; 4 Wheat. 531; Angell & A. Corp. § 24; Boone, Corp. § 10.

[12] Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 180-81 (1870), Sharswood, J., quoting 2 Kent, 275; Glover, Munic. Corp. 1. See also 33 Cal. 142, 145; 69 Ga. 544; 37 Iowa, 544; 26 La. An. 481; 29 Minn. 450-51; 52 Mo. 311; 6 Barr. 171; 2 Utah, 403; 2 Kent, 268; Ang. & A. Corp. § 15.

hold and dispose of property, and thereby to acquire rights and incur responsibilities. These franchises were conferred upon it for the purpose of enabling it the better to effect the design of its institution, the exercise of certain of the powers of government, subordinate to the legislature, over a part of the territory of the State. But all this affects its relations to other persons, natural or artificial; it does not touch its relation to the State, its creator.[1]

In the exercise of its duties, including those most strictly local or internal, a municipal corporation is but a department of the State. The legislature may give it all the powers such a being is capable of receiving, making it a miniature State within its locality; or it may strip it of every power, leaving it a corporation in name only. . . The municipality may act through its mayor, its common council or legislative department, its supervisor of streets, commissioner of highways, board of public works, etc., provided it acts within the province committed to its charge. Whether its agents be appointed or elected is immaterial.[2]

What portions of a State shall be within the limits of a city is a proper subject of legislation — however thick or sparse the settlement.[3]

Property held for public uses — such as public buildings, streets, squares, parks, wharves, fire-engines, engineering instruments: whatever is held for governmental purposes — cannot be subjected to the payment of the debts of the city. Its public character forbids such an appropriation. The obligation of its contracts survives dissolution. Equity will apply its property to the payment of its debts; after which, surplus realty may revert to the grantor, and personalty vest in the State. The private property of individuals cannot be taken for its debts, except through taxation. The doctrine of some States, that such can be reached directly on an execution against the municipality, has not been generally accepted.[4]

The general doctrine that, being the creature of the law, a municipal corporation can only act as provided by its organic law, and that if its agents fail to observe the forms and methods prescribed by that law, in any substantial particular, their acts are not the acts of the corporation,—has been greatly modified, by the decisions of the Supreme Court, in its application to bonds issued by agents when the rights of bona fide purchasers are involved.[5]

A municipal corporation can exercise such powers only as are granted in express words or are necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to those powers, and such as are essential to the declared objects of the corporation.[6]

The earliest form of corporation was, probably, the municipality or city, which necessity exacted for the control or local police of the marts or crowded places of the empire. These cities became a bulwark against despotism.[1] See CITY; ORDINANCE, 1; RIOT.

National corporation. A corporation created by Congress to assist in "carrying into execution" one or more of the powers vested by the Constitution in the government of the United States.

Of such are the national banking associations.[2] See GRANT, 3; LAND, Public.

Political corporation. See Public Corporation.

Private corporation. An association of individuals united for some common purpose, and permitted by the law to use a common name, and to change its members without a dissolution of the association.[3]

Its powers are such as are conferred by statute; and its charter is the measure thereof. The enumeration of these powers excludes all others.[4]

Its charter is a contract, not to be "impaired," q. v.

Public corporation. Such corporation as exists for political purposes only; as, a town, a city, a county. But, strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government.[5]

If, therefore, the foundation be "private," though under the charter of the government, the corporation is private, however extensive the uses to which it is devoted. . . A hospital or a college founded by a private benefactor is a private corporation, although dedicated by its charter to general charity.[6]

In popular meaning nearly every corporation is "public" inasmuch as they are created for the public benefit. Yet if the whole interest does not belong to the government, or if the corporation is not created for the administration of political or municipal power, it is a "private" corporation. Thus, all bank, bridge, turnpike, railroad, and canal companies are private corporations. In these and similar cases, in a certain sense, the uses may be called public, but the corporations are private, as much so as if the franchises were

---

[1] Philadelphia v. Fox, ante.

[2] Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 544, 541 (1875), cases, Hunt, J. See also 108 id. 121; 109 id. 287.

On revoking powers of municipal corporations, see Supervisors v. Luck, 80 Va. 226-27 (1885), cases.

[3] Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 80 (1881); 92 id. 310-12.

[4] Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 501, 511-19 (1880), cases, Waite, C. J.; Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 id. 268 (1876); Claiborne Co. v. Brooks, 111 id. 410 (1884).

[5] Phelps v. Town of Yates, 16 Blatch. 193 (1879), Wallace, J.

[6] Dillon, Munic. Corp. 89, cases; Brenham v. Water Co., 67 Tex. 553 (1887). See generally 26 Cent. Law J. 179 (1888), cases.

[1] McIntosh, Hist. Eng. 31-32; 1 Bl. Com. 468, 472; Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. 574 (1870), Miller, J.

[2] See generally 21 Cent. Law J. 428-29 (1885), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 258-69 (1887), cases.

[3] Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. First Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 330 (1883), Field, J.; County of Santa Clara v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 18 F. R. 402 (1883); 8 Saw. 284; 15 Rep. 674.

[4] Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 82 (1879).

[5] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 668-69 (1819), Story, J.

vested in a single person. The delegation of the right of eminent domain, to be used for private emolument as well as for public benefit, does not clothe a corporation with the inviolability or immunity of public officers performing public functions.[1]

Public corporations are so called because they are but parts of the machinery employed in carrying on the affairs of the State; — auxiliaries of the State in the business of municipal rule; — political divisions of State, originating in the necessities and conveniences of the people. Their officers are local agents of the State.[2]

A public corporation is a mere instrumentality of the State for the better administration of the government in matters of local concern.[3] It is a local agency of the government creating it; its powers are such as belong to sovereignty. Property and revenue necessary for the exercise of these powers become part of the machinery of government. To permit a creditor to seize and sell these, in order to collect a debt, would be to permit him in a degree to destroy the government itself.[4]

A public corporation can exercise no power not given by its charter or some other statute of the State.[5]

It is now well settled that the charter of a public corporation may be changed, modified, or repealed, as the exigencies of the public service or the public welfare may demand; unless the organic law otherwise provides.[6]

Public and other municipal corporations represent the people, and are to be protected against the unauthorized acts of their officers and agents, when this can be done without injury to third parties. This is necessary in order to guard against fraud and peculation. Persons dealing with such officers or agents are chargeable with notice of the power the corporation possesses.[7]

Quasi public corporations: corporations technically private, but yet of a quasi public character having in view some general public enterprise, in which the public interests are directly involved to such an extent as to justify conferring upon them important governmental powers, such as an exercise of the right of eminent domain. Of this class are railroad, turnpike, and canal companies; and corporations strictly private, the direct object of which is to promote public interests, and in which the public have no concern, except the indirect benefits resulting from the promotion of trade, and the development of the resources of the country.[1]

It is a misnomer to attach the name "quasi public corporation" to a railroad company, for it has none of the features of such corporations, if we except its qualified right of eminent domain, which it has because of the right reserved to the public to use its way for travel and transportation. Its road may be a quasi public highway, but the company itself is a private corporation, and nothing more.[2]

Corporate. Relating to a corporation.

Corporate authorities. In the constitution of Illinois, Art. 9, § 5, municipal officers who are either directly elected by the people or are appointed in some mode to which they have given their assent.[3]

Corporate existence. Dates from the time when full authority to transact business is possessed by a corporation, as from the filing of articles with the secretary of State.[4]

Corporate purpose. In some States, as in Illinois, taxation by public corporations must be for corporate purposes. This means such purposes as are germane to the objects of the welfare of the municipality or at least have a legitimate connection with those objects and a manifest relation thereto.[5]

The reference is to a tax which is to be expended in a manner promoting the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levied it.[6]

The purpose must be germane to the general scope of the object for which the corporation was created.[7]

The expression will include money expended for a court-house, jail, poor-house; the opening and keeping of a common highway; the erection and maintenance of a bridge; a donation to secure the location of a school;[8] and, perhaps, also, money expended in developing the natural resources for manufacturing purposes.[9] Compare PURPOSE, Public.

Corporate rights. "Franchises or peculiar privileged grants" of the nature of corporeal property.[10]

[1] Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellenbach, 37 Cal. 577 (1869), Sawyer, C. J.

[2] Pierce v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 155 (1883); 6 Col. 8; 11 Kan. 608; 3 Hill, 567, 570; 1 N. H. 273; 1 Wall. Jr. 275. See generally 22 Cent. Law J. 148 (1886), cases.

[3] Gage v. Graham, 57 Ill. 146-47 (1870), cases.

[4] Hurt v. Salisbury, 55 Mo. 314 (1874).

[5] People v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill. 651 (1874); Livingston County v. Wieder, 64 id. 432 (1872).

[6] Burr v. City of Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455 (1875).

[7] Wrightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 260 (1880), cases; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 id. 121-22 (1883), cases.

[8] County of Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 411-13 (1879), cases.

[9] Hackett v. Ottawa, 99 U. S. 94 (1878), cases.

[10] Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. 154 (1840); 7 Hill, 283; 2 Bl. Com. 37.

[1] Randle v. Delaware & Raritan Canal Co., 1 Wall. C. C. 390 (1849), Grier, J.; Sweatt v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 3 Cliff. 346 (1871).

[2] Commissioners of Laramie County v. Commissioners of Albany County, 92 U. S. 310-312 (1875), cases, Clifford, J.; 2 Kent, 305.

[3] United States v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 393 (1878), Field, J.

[4] Klein v. New Orleans, 99 U. S. 150 (1878), Waite, C. J.

[5] Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 524 (1879).

[6] Thomas v. City of Richmond, 12 Wall. 356 (1870), Bradley, J.

On changes in public corporations affecting property and rights of creditors, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 14-40 (1887), cases.

Corporator. Usually, a member of a corporation, in which sense it includes a stockholder; also, one of the persons who are the original organizers or promoters of a new corporation.[1]

The corporators are not the corporation, for either may sue the other.[2]

Incorporate, v. To form into an artificial body; to create a corporation out of natural persons.

Incorporate, adj. The same as corporate, q. v.

Incorporated. United into one body; constituted a legal entity or person. Unincorporated: not existing as a corporation.

Incorporation. The act of uniting natural persons into a creature of the law; also, a body incorporated, that is, a corporation — a use not favored.

"Incorporation" is the act by which the political institution called a corporation is created.[3]

See further AGENT; AMOTION; BANK, 2 (2); BODY, 2; BOND; BY-LAW, 2; CAPITAL, 2; CHARITY, 2; CHARTER, 2; CONSOLIDATION; DIRECTOR; DISSOLVE, 2; DISTRINGAS; DIVIDEND, 3; DOMAIN, 1, Eminent; FIND, 2; FRANCHISE, 1; INSPECTION, 2; LEGISLATURE; MANAGER; MEETINGS; MINUTES, 2; MORTMAIN; ORGANIZE; PERPETUAL; PERSON; POLICE, 2; PROPERTY; PROSPECTUS; PROXY; RAILROAD; RECEIVER; RESIDENCE; SEAL, 1, Common; SOUL; STOCK, 3; SUCCESSION; TAKE, 8; TAX, 2; TORT, 2; ULTRA VIRES; VISIT, 2; VOTING, Cumulative; WARRANTUM.

CORPOREAL. Having a body: material in nature; substantial; palpable.

Incorporeal. Immaterial; intangible; insensible; existing in thought; ideal.

In the Roman law, res corporales were objects of property apprehensible by the senses; res incorporales objects apprehensible by the mind only. A right of way over another's land, an obligation to pay money, an undivided interest in land, were examples of the latter species of property; while the land itself and the money when paid were examples of the former species.[4]

Hereditaments are spoken of as corporeal and incorporeal. See HEREDITAMENT; CORPUS.

CORPSE. See BURIAL.

CORPUS. L. A body; also, the principal thing, the essential part, the substance.

In several phrases it means the body or person of an individual, as see under CAPERE; HABERE.

The corpus of an estate is the material object, or species of property, of which the estate is composed. It is this which, generally, is vested in a trustee, in distinction from the income of the estate, which is allotted to the beneficiary.[1]

The corpus of a railroad is the roadway, embankment, superstructure, and equipment.[2]

Corpus comitatus. The body of the county. See BODY, 8.

Corpus delicti. The essential element of an offense: the fact that the particular crime alleged has been actually committed.

To warrant a conviction for murder there must be direct proof either of the death, as by the finding and identification of the corpse, or of criminal violence adequate to produce death and exerted in such manas to account for the disappearance of the body. The corpus delicti in murder has two components: death as the result, and the criminal agency of another as the means. Where there is direct proof of the one, the other can be established by circumstantial evidence.[3]

The corpus delicti must be proved like any other fact, that is, beyond a reasonable doubt, and that doubt is for the jury. A confession alone is not regarded as sufficient proof. The State must first produce sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury, and the jury are first to be satisfied, from that evidence, that the crime has been committed.[4]

The doctrine applies to other crimes, as, larceny. The possession of the fruits of a crime may do away with direct proof of the corpus delicti.[5]

Corpus Juris Civilis. See PANDECTS.

CORRELATIVE OBLIGATIONS. See ASSENT.

CORRESPONDENCE. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2; LETTER, 3.

CORROBORATING. See CIRCUMSTANCES; EVIDENCE.

CORRUPT. 1. To taint, vitiate: as, to corrupt the blood, q. v.

2. To do an act for unlawful gain.

Corruption. An act done with intent to gain an advantage not consistent with official duty and the rights of others; something forbidden by law:[6] as, certain acts by arbitra-

[1] [Gulliver v. Roelle, 100 Ill. 147 (1881).

[2] Memphis City v. Dean, 8 Wall. 73 (1868), cases; Davenport v. Downs, 18 id. 627 (1873), cases.

[3] Ang. & A. Corp. § 5; Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 612 (1853).

[4] See Hadley, Rom. Law, 158-61.

[1] See Kountz v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 395 (1882); 67 Pa. 476; 70 id. 501; 75 id. 119.

[2] Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 521 (1878); 106 id. 311.

[3] Ruloff v. People, 18 N. Y. 179, 182 (1858).

[4] Gray v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 386 (1882); Udderzook v. Commonwealth, 76 id. 340 (1874); Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 480-82 (1870), cases; United States v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 25 (1858); 4 Crim. Law Mag. 902-12 (1883).

[5] See examples, 20 Blatch. 236; 10 F. R. 470; 26 Miss. 157; 59 id. 545; 15 Wend. 147; 14 Tex. Ap. 560; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 214; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 324.

[6] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

tors, election or other officers, trustees; a champertous contract; a contract for usury.

In an indictment for corrupt misbehavior in office the act must be distinctly charged as done knowingly and with a corrupt motive.[1]

See AWARD, 2; BRIBERY.

COST.[2] Of an article purchased for exportation: the price given for it, with every incidental charge, paid or supposed to be paid, at the place where the article is exported.[3]

Cost price. The price actually paid for a thing.[4]

COSTS. The expenses of an action recoverable from the losing party.[5]

An allowance to a party for expenses incurred in conducting his suit.[6]

The sums prescribed by law as charges for services enumerated in the fee-bill.[7]

"Fees" are a compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of a cause. Originally, fees were demandable the instant the services were rendered; but indulgence, ripened into a custom, and which has received the sanction of judicial decision, provides that the party should not be called upon to pay them till after the determination of the cause; when, to avoid suit for a trifling demand, it became the practice to include them in the execution as if they were a part of the successful party's costs.[7]

When a party in a litigated proceeding is duly adjudged to pay costs, his liability is not restricted to the disbursements and expenses which the opposite party may be entitled to receive, but extends to the fees of the officers of the court for services rendered therein. When these united sums are taxable in the case they constitute "the costs" for which he is liable. If the successful party collects them, he is trustee of the fees. As against the paying party, all the items are costs.[8]

Includes all charges fixed by statutes, as compensation for services rendered by officers of the court in the progress of a cause.[9]

Bill of costs. A statement of the items of costs incurred in a suit,—presented for taxation to an officer of the court.

In this connection "costs" means taxable costs.[1] The statement gives the names of the witnesses, days in attendance, and mileage.

Carry costs. A verdict is said to carry costs when he for whom it is found becomes entitled to the payment of all costs as an incident to the verdict.

Certificate of costs. A memorandum signed by the judge who tries a cause, that, under the law, a party is entitled to costs.[2]

Cost-bond. The bond or other security required of a party to a proceeding for the payment of such costs, if any, as may be awarded against him.

Costs de incremento. Costs by increase; increased costs—adjudged by the court in addition to such as the jury assess.

Before the statute of Gloucester, costs were enrolled as increase of damages. After the statute, juries taxed the damages, and costs, separately. When the amount so taxed was not sufficient to pay the costs of the suit, the plaintiff prayed that the officer might tax the costs inserted in the judgment: this was the origin of costs de incremento.[3]

Costs of prosecution. Costs incurred in conducting a prosecution; not, expenses in resisting the prosecution.[4]

Costs of suit. The expenses incurred pending a suit, as allowed by the court.[5]

May include commissions upon money collected by execution.[6]

Costs of the day. Costs incurred in preparing for trial on a particular day,—according to notice of trial given by a party.[7]

Costs of the term. May include only the expense of travel and attendance of the party, the clerk's and witnesses' fees.[8]

Costs that have accrued. In the compromise of a suit, costs that would follow the judgment.[9]

Costs to abide event. If the event is the same to the party who had the verdict at the former trial, he gets his costs; otherwise, the costs of the first trial are lost.[10]

---

[1] Boyd v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 55-56 (1883), cases; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 2518.

[2] L. con-stare, to "stand at."

[3] [Goodwin v. United States, 2 Wash. 499 (1811); 2 Mas. 398.

[4] [Buck v. Burk, 18 N. Y. 340 (1858).

[5] [Stanton County v. Madison County, 10 Neb. 308 (1880); State v. Dyches, 28 Tex. 542 (1866).

[6] Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. *248 (1824), Gibson, J.

[7] Apperson v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 390 (1876), Depue, J.

[8] Janes's Appeal, 87 Pa. 431 (1878).

[9] Markham v. Ross, 73 Ga. 105 (1884): Davis v. State, 38 id. 533 (1868).

[1] Doe v. Thompson, 22 N. H. 219 (1850); Childs v. New Haven, &c. R. Co., 135 Mass. 572 (1883).

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 214, 401.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 399; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 372 (1851).

[4] State v. Wallin, 89 N. C. 578 (1883).

[5] [Norwich v. Hyde, 7 Conn. *534 (1829).

[6] Kitchen v. Woodfin, 1 Hughes, 340 (1877).

[7] See 3 Bl. Com. 357; Adams, Eq. 343.

[8] Thurston v. Mining Co., 1 R. I. 288 (1850).

[9] Tallassee Manuf. Co. v. Glenn, 50 Ala. 489 (1876).

[10] Jones v. Williams, L. R., 8 Q. B. 283 (1873); 2 Ex. Div. 267, 354; 3 id. 202.

Double costs; treble costs. 1. English practice. Double costs: common costs and half as much more. Treble costs: three times the amount of the costs incurred by a party in an action; common costs, half of these, and half of the latter.

"Double costs" were estimated by first allowing the prevailing party single costs, including witnesses' expenses, counsels' fees, etc., and then half the amount of the single costs, without deducting counsels' fees, etc. "Treble costs" consisted of single costs, half the single costs, and half of that half.[1]

Payment of treble costs was imposed for violation of certain statutes, as that of 29 Eliz. (1586), c. 4, against extortion by sheriffs on final process. Double and treble costs were repealed by 5 and 6 Vict. (1842), c. 97. Since then, only "party and party" costs, or reasonable costs, are taxable.

2. American practice. Double costs: in New York, and South Carolina, common costs and one-half more. Treble costs: common costs and three-fourths more.[2]

In Pennsylvania, double and treble costs mean double and treble the single costs.[3]

These additional costs seem to be given as compensation in cases of willful trespass or of vexatious litigation.

Interlocutory costs. Such costs as are given on various motions and proceedings in the course of a suit. Final costs. Such as depend upon the final event of the suit. To these the term "costs" generally applies.[4]

Security for costs. Security required of a plaintiff who is a non-resident of the State, that if he is defeated in his action he will pay all the costs thereof.

Until this is furnished he may not be allowed to proceed in his action. The defendant waives his right by taking any step in the cause after he has notice that the plaintiff is a non-resident. A general affidavit of defense may be first required. The law of the particular jurisdiction should be consulted for information as to details.[5]

Taxation of costs. Official adjustment of the amount of costs incurred in a case, or to which the prevailing party is entitled.

Costs are a necessary appendage to a judgment. The maxim is victus victori in expensis condemnatus est, the defeated, to the prevailing party, in the expenses is condemned. The common law allowed no costs to either party. If the plaintiff failed, he was "amerced;" if he recovered, the defendant was "at mercy" for detaining the amount of the debt. This in time was viewed as a hardship, and statute of 6 Edw. I (1277), c. 1, called the Statute of Gloucester, and which has been adopted in the States, was passed, giving costs in all cases where the plaintiff recovered damages. But no costs were allowed the defendant till the statute of 23 Hen. VIII (1531), c. 15, which, with later statutes, gave him, if he prevailed, such costs as the plaintiff would have received had he recovered.[1]

To prevent trifling and vexatious actions of trespass, it was enacted by 43 Eliz. (1600), c. 6, and 22 and 23 Car. (1670), c. 9, that where the jury awarded less damages than forty shillings the plaintiff should be allowed no more costs than damages, unless the judge certified that the freehold or title to the land chiefly camé in question. But 8 and 9 Wm. III (1696), c. 11, provided that in actions wherein it appeared that the trespass was willful and malicious, and so certified by the judge, the plaintiff should recover full costs. These statutes are in force in a few of the States.[2]

The statute of Charles is restricted to actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, and of assault and battery; for in no other case is it possible to give the certificate. Moreover, to entitle the plaintiff to full costs the judge's certificate must be made "at the trial of the cause;" that is, before final judgment.[3] In Pennsylvania currency, the forty shillings are equal to $5.33: the English shilling sterling not having been adopted.[4]

Costs are regulated entirely by statute, as to both item and amount. The Federal fee bill act of 1853, made section 983, Rev. St., provides that: "The bill of fees of the clerk, marshal, and attorney, and the amount paid printers and witnesses, and lawful fees for exemplifications and copies of papers necessarily obtained for use on trial in cases where by law costs are recoverable in favor of the prevailing party, shall be taxed by a judge or clerk of the court, and be included in and form a portion of a judgment or decree against the losing party. Such taxed bills shall be filed with the papers in the cause."

In the Federal courts, the prevailing party in common-law actions recovers costs in all cases, except when otherwise provided by an act of Congress.[5]

Section 968, Rev. St., providing that the prevailing party shall not be allowed costs when the recovery is less than $500, is imperative; the court has no discretion to allow costs where the judgment is under that sum.[6] See MARSHAL, 1 (2); PREVAIL.

The government, at common law, neither pays nor

[1] [Wharton's Law Dict.; 1 Chitty, Pr. 27; Brightly, Costs, 298.

[2] Patchin v. Parkhurst, 9 Wend. 443 (1832); 1 Harp. L. (S. C.) 440.

[3] Welsh v. Anthony, 16 Pa. 256 (1851); 2 Rawle, 201. See 34 N. J. L. 530.

[4] See Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 F. R. 8-9 (1883).

[5] See 1 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 30; 10 Ves. 237; 18 F. R. 105; 13 Rep. 114; 13 How. Pr. 462; 60 Md. 375; 9 Wend. 262.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 399-400; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 372 (1851); Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 781 (1882); 26 Am. Law Reg. 693-96 (1878), cases; 17 F. R. 10-11; 29 Minn. 430.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 214, 401; Winger v. Rife, 101 Pa. 152 (1882).

[3] Simonds v. Barton, 76 Pa. 435-37 (1874), cases; Towers v. Vielie, 1 Johns. Cas. 221 (1799).

[4] Chapman v. Calder, 14 Pa. 358 (1850).

[5] United States v. Treadwell, 15 F. R. 534 (1883); R. S. §§ 823, 983.

[6] Gibson v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 31 F. R. 553 (1887).

receives costs; under statute, it may.[1] In admiralty, costs are left to the discretion of the court.[2] In equity, they are largely within the discretion of the chancellor.[3] In criminal law, in cases of conviction of felony, the prisoner pays the costs if he has property, and, in cases of acquittal, the government pays them; while in misdemeanors the accused, if convicted, is sentenced to pay them; and if acquitted he may be required to pay them where there was prima facie evidence of guilt; or the prosecutor may have to pay them; or, again, they may be divided between the prosecutor and the accused; or there may be authority for the government alone defraying them. If the accused cannot pay them he may have to remain in prison until discharged under the insolvent laws of the State.

Costs do not bear interest.

See ATTORNEY; DAMAGES; DOCKET; FEE, 2.

COUNCIL. 1. An advisory body selected to assist the governor of a State in his official determinations.

King's councils. To assist him in the discharge of his duties, the maintenance of his dignity, and the exertion of his prerogative, the law has assigned the sovereign a diversity of councils with which to advise, to wit: the high court of parliament; the peers of the realm assembled at call; the judges of the courts of law; but, principally, his privy council (by way of eminence the council), an assembly of the king and such as he wills, in his palace.[4]

A governor's council is still retained in a few States.[5]

2. The ordinance-making body in a municipal corporation.

Usually in the plural form "councils;" whereof common and select council are the branches.

The organization and powers of such bodies are determined by statute.[6]

The city council of Boston, for example, is not a "legislature." It has no power to make "laws," but merely to pass ordinances upon such local matters as the legislature may commit to its charge. Neither branch is vested with any judicial functions whatever. Nor are its members chosen with a view to their fitness for the exercise of such functions.[7] See further CITY; CONTEMPT, 2; ORDINANCE, 1; TRIBUNAL.

COUNSEL; COUNSELLOR. See ATTORNEY, 2.

CONSILIUM. See INOPS.

COUNT. 1, v. In the sense of to compute, see ACCOUNT; DISCOUNT.

2. In the sense of to refer to a statute, compare RECITE.

3, n. In the sense of earl or comes, see SHERIFF.

4. In pleading, a distinct statement of the cause of action or of the ground of accusation.

Peculiar, therefore, to a declaration or an indictment. From the French conte: a narrative.

(1) In civil procedure at common law, is sometimes synonymous with declaration, its original signification; but now is generally considered as a part of a declaration, wherein the plaintiff sets forth a distinct cause of action.[1]

Where the plaintiff's complaint embraces a single cause of action and he makes one statement of it that statement is called, indifferently, a "declaration" or a "count." But where his suit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which of course requires a different statement), or when he makes two or more different statements of one and the same cause of action, each statement is called a "count," and all of them, collectively, constitute the "declaration,"[2] q. v.

Common counts. Distinct statements of a cause of action so varied as to correspond with the possible state of the proof.

In the common action of assumpsit, q. v., they are, ordinarily, for money — had and received, paid, lent, or due upon an account stated; perhaps, also, for the worth of work done and materials furnished: whence called "money" counts.[3] See CONTRACT, Implied.

Special count. States the facts peculiar to the case in hand.[4]

One object in inserting two or more counts in a declaration, when there is in fact but one cause of action, is to guard against the danger of an insufficient statement of the cause, where a doubt exists as to the legal sufficiency of one or another of two or more different modes of declaring. But the more usual end proposed is to accommodate the statement of the cause, as far as may be, to the possible state of the proof exhibited on the trial.

In assumpsit, under a declaration containing a special count on a promissory note, and also the common counts, a note varying from the one specially pleaded is admissible under the common counts, as evidence of money had and received, in connection with evi-

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 400; 3 Cranch, 73; 2 Wheat. 395; 12 id. 546; 5 How. 29; 3 Pa. 153.

[2] The Scotland, 118 U. S. 519 (1886).

[3] See 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 1515-21; Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 F. R. 6 (1883), cases.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 227-32.

[5] See 70 Me. 570.

[6] See Dillon, Munic. Corp. 326.

[7] Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 122 (1876), Gray, C. J.

[1] [Cheetham v. Tillotson, 5 Johns. 435 (1809).

[2] Gould, Pl. 158.

[3] See, as to money had and received, Barnett v. Warren, 82 Ala. 557 (1886); 20 Cent. Law J. 326-30 (1885), cases, as to quantum meruit.

[4] See Nash v. Towne, 5 Wall. 702 (1866).

dence that the defendant admitted his indebtedness on the note.[1]

Counts for contract and trespass, being dissimilar in kind, cannot be joined.[2] See BAD, 2; DUPLICITY; JOINDER.

(2) In criminal procedure, each count in an indictment imports a different offense; is, in effect, a separate indictment.[3]

When a verdict is silent as to one or more counts and finds guilt as to others, presumably the jury found the defendant not guilty as to the former counts.[4]

See INDICTMENT; SENTENCE.

COUNTER. Contrary, in opposition to. See CONTRA.

As a prefix, denotes that one thing is, or is placed, in antagonism to some other: as, a counter-affidavit, counter-bond, counter-claim, counter-evidence, counter-plea, counter-proof, counter-statement, counter-surety,— for each of which see the simple substantive. Compare CROSS, 3.

COUNTERFEIT, v. To make something falsely and fraudulently in the semblance of that which is true; also, the thing so made.

n. A spurious imitation intended to resemble something which is not.[5]

Refers, ordinarily, to imitations of money or of securities. But a trade-mark (q. v.) may be counterfeited.

The resemblance of the spurious to the genuine must be such, possibly, as to deceive a person using ordinary caution.[6]

"False, forged, and counterfeit," said of counterfeiting Treasury notes, necessarily imply that the instrument so characterized is not genuine, but only purports to be, or is in the similitude of the genuine instrument.[7]

It is not necessary in an indictment, under § 5457, Rev. St., to allege that the act of counterfeiting was done with intent to defraud; such intent, if an element of the crime, is implied in the allegation of "falsely" making.[8]

On counterfeiting the securities of the United States, see Rev. St. § 5413.[9]

Counterfeiting, passing, or possessing with intent to utter or pass, within the United States, the notes, or other securities of any foreign government, is punishable by fine and imprisonment at hard labor; and so is having in one's possession, without lawful authority, any plate therefor or printing from the same.[1]

Under the power "to define and punish offenses against the law of nations," and to "regulate commerce with foreign nations," Congress may provide for punishing as a crime the counterfeiting, within the United States, of the notes of foreign banks or corporations, although they be not the obligations of the foreign government.[2]

See FALSE; FORGE, 2; GENUINE; GUILT; OBLIGATION, 2; SIMILITUDE; SPURIOUS; UTTER.

COUNTERPART. One of the parts of an indenture which lay opposite or counter to each other.[3] A duplicate copy.

Indentures were originally written twice on the same sheet of parchment with a space in the middle — where it was afterward divided.[3]

When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the parties that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is called the original, and the rest counterparts.[4]

COUNTERSIGN. 1. To sign on the opposite side.

2. To sign in addition to another, as the superior officer, and in attestation of authenticity.[5] See SIGN, Countersign.

COUNTERVAIL. To operate with equal effect: to deserve equal consideration.

An equitable right which is as important or well founded as another which is being pressed for the more favorable recognition, is spoken of as a "countervailing equity."

COUNTRY.[6] 1. In its primary meaning, signifies place; in a larger sense, the territory or dominions occupied by a community, or even waste and unpeopled sections or regions of the earth; but its metaphorical meaning (which is no less definite and well understood) in common parlance, in historical and geographical writings, in diplomacy, legislation, treaties, and international codes, denotes the population, the nation, the state, the government, having possession and dominion over the country.[7] See PLACE, 1.

As used in the revenue laws, embraces all the possessions of a foreign state, however widely separated,

[1] Hopkins v. Orr, 124 U. S. 513 (1888), cases.

[2] Gould, Pl. 159; 3 Bl. Com. 295; 58 N. H. 41.

[3] United States v. Malone, 20 Blatch. 140 (1881): R. S. § 1024; s. c. 13 Rep. 67.

[4] State v. McNaught, 36 Kan. 627 (1887), cases.

[5] Queen v. Hermann, 4 Q. B. D. 287 (1879). See 1 Stew., Ala., 386; 1 Ohio St. 187.

[6] United States v. Bogart, 9 Bened. 315 (1878).

[7] [United States v. Howell, 11 Wall. 432, 436 (1870), Miller, J. See 2 Flip. 557; 13 F. R. 96; Const. Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 6.

[8] United States v. Otey, 31 F. R. 68 (1887).

[9] See also United States v. Bennett, 17 Blatch. 358 (1879); 22 F. R. 390.

[1] Act 16 May, 1884: 23 St. L. 22.

[2] United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 479 (1887), Waite, Chief Justice.

[3] [Burrill's Law Dict.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 296.

[5] See Smith, Eq. 212, 181; 101 U. S. 22.

[6] F. contree: L. contra, opposite: that which lies opposite to a city.

[7] United States v. "The Recorder," 1 Blatch. 228 (1847), Betts, J.

which are subject to the same supreme executive and legislative control.[1] See INDIAN, Country.

2. The inhabitants of a district from which a jury is to be summoned; a jury.

Trial by jury is also called trial per pais, or per patrian, by the country.[2]

By the policy of the ancient law the jury was to come de vicineto, from the neighborhood of the place where the cause of action was laid. For, living in the neighborhood, they were properly the very country, or pais, to which both parties had appealed, and were supposed to know beforehand the characters of the parties and their witnesses. But this convenience being overbalanced by the fact that jurors coming from the immediate neighborhood naturally intermixed their prejudices and partialities in the trial, the early practice became so far relinquished that the jury now comes from the body of the county at large, and not de vicineto, from the particular neighborhood.[3] See VENUE.

Conclude to the country. To tender an issue of fact for trial by a jury.

God and my country. The answer, at common law, of a prisoner arraigned for trial. See ARRAIGN.

Put upon the country. To submit a matter in dispute to a jury.

The full expression, on the part of the plaintiff, is, "And this the said A prays may be inquired of by the country;" on the part of the defendant, "And of this the said B puts himself upon the country."[4] Compare PAIS; PATRIA.

COUNTY. Originally, a province governed by a count,—the earl or alderman to whom the government of the shire was intrusted.[5]

A civil division of the territory of England.[6]

The terms "the county" and the "people of the county" may be convertible; so, too, "the county" and the "commissioners of the county."[7]

The city of St. Louis, under the constitution of Missouri of 1875, though not a county as that word is ordinarily used in the constitution, is in a qualified sense a county, being a "legal subdivision of the State" which bears county relations to the State, and having many important attributes of a county.[8]

A county is not a corporation, but a mere political organization of a certain portion of the territory within the State, particularly defined by geographical limits, for the more convenient administration of the laws and police power of the State, and for the convenience of the inhabitants.[1]

Such organization is invested with certain powers, delegated by the State, for the purpose of civil administration; and for the same purpose is clothed with many characteristics of a body corporate. It is a quasi corporation, for in many respects it is like a corporation. But the power to sue and be sued is expressly conferred by statute.[1]

In the Revised Statutes, or in any act or resolution of Congress, the word county shall include a "parish" or any other equivalent subdivision of a State or Territory.[2]

"Establishing" a county is setting apart certain territory to be in the future organized as a political community, or quasi corporation for political purposes; "organizing" a county is vesting in the people of the territory such corporate rights and powers.[3]

County corporate. A city or town, with more or less territory annexed, to which, out of special favor, the king has granted the privilege to be a county of itself, and not to be comprised within another county.[4]

Similar to this are the counties of Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.[5]

Foreign county. Another county than the one in which a matter arises or is drawn in question.

Body of a county. 1. The territorial limits of a county. See BODY, 3.

2. The people of a county collectively considered. See VENUE.

County bridge. See BRIDGE.

County court. 1. A name for a class of courts having civil jurisdiction in controversies of medium grade, varied powers in the charge and care of persons and estates within legal guardianship, a limited criminal jurisdiction, appellate jurisdiction over justices of the peace, and numerous powers and duties in the administration of county affairs.[6]

2. In England, a court of great antiquity,

[1] Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How. 526 (1855), Taney, C. J. See Campbell v. Barney, 5 Blatch. 221 (1864).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 349; 4 id. 343.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 359-60.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 313.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 116; Eastman v. Clackamas Co., 32 F. R. 29 (1887).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 113.

[7] County Court v. Sievert, 58 Mo. 201 (1874); Carder v. Fayette County, 16 Ohio St. 369 (1865).

[8] State v. Finn, 4 Mo. Ap. 350 (1877).

[1] Hunter v. Commissioners, 10 Ohio St. 520 (1860); Harris v. Supervisors, 105 Ill. 451 (1883); Washer v. Bullitt County, 110 U. S. 564 (1884); Faulkner v. Hyman 142 Mass. 54 (1886); Vincent v. Lincoln Co., 30 F. R 749-53 (1887), cases; 33 Ark. 497; 14 Fla. 321; 2 Kan 128; 50 Md. 245; 8 Minn. 504; 10 Nev. 552; 7 Ohio St 109; 10 F. R. 545.

As to suits by and against counties, see 19 Cent Law J. 185-88 (1884), cases.

[2] Act 13 July, 1866: R. S. §§ 1-2.

[3] State v. Parker, 25 Minn. 219 (1878); 23 id. 40.

[4] [1 Bl. Com. 120.

[5] See State v. Finn, 4 Mo. Ap. 347 (1877).

[6] [Abbott's Law Dict.

incident to the jurisdiction of the sheriff. It seems to have had cognizance of purely personal actions and of some real actions; but it was not a court of record.[1]

Since 1846, a tribunal, established under 9 and 10 Vict. c. 95, in upward of five hundred districts, none within the city of London; and at present invested with a common-law jurisdiction over demands not exceeding £50, an equity jurisdiction where the amount involved does not exceed £500, together with certain jurisdiction in probate, admiralty, and bankruptcy.[2]

County officer. One by whom a county performs its usual political functions,— its functions of government; who exercises "continuously, and as a part of the regular and permanent administration of government, its public powers, trusts, or duties."[3]

He may be the auditor, commissioner, supervisor, treasurer, or other functionary of the county. Local statutes usually designate who shall be considered county officers, and prescribe their duties.

County purpose. May include only the ordinary purposes, as the ordinary expenses, of a county.[4]

County seat. See PERMANENT.

Power of the county. The male inhabitants of a county, over fifteen years of age, whom the sheriff may command to aid him in preserving the peace, executing process, arresting felons, etc.; the posse comitatus.[5]

See SHERIFF; CORONER; WARRANT, 2 (2).

COUPLED. See INTEREST, 2 (2), Coupled.

COUPON.[6] Something "cut off" from another thing: a distinct part of a document or instrument, intended to be separated from the body thereof and used as evidence of something connected with it or mentioned in it.

Coupon bond. Ordinarily, by "coupon" is meant a part of a transferable bond or certificate of loan, designed to be separated therefrom and used as evidence of interest due by the terms thereof. The original or primary obligations are called coupon bonds.

An instrument complete in itself, and yet composed of several distinct instruments, each of which is in itself as complete as the whole together.[1]

Such coupons are merely interest-warrants or interest-certificates — written contracts for the payment of a definite sum of money on a given day.[2]

Most of the bonds of municipal bodies and private corporations are issued in order to raise funds for works of large extent and cost, and their payment is therefore made at distant periods. Coupons for the installments of interest are usually attached, in the expectation that they will be paid as they mature, however distant the period for the payment of the principal. These coupons, when severed from the bonds, are negotiable and pass by delivery. They then cease to be incidents, become in fact independent claims; and they do not lose their validity, if for any cause the bonds are canceled or paid before maturity, nor their negotiable character, nor their ability to support separate actions. Once severed from the bonds, and having matured, they are in effect equivalent to separate bonds for the different installments of interest.[3]

The holder is enabled to collect the interest at the time and place named, or to transfer the coupon to another who may collect it, without the trouble of presenting the bond itself. This is a convenience to the foreign holder. The device tends to enhance the marketableness of interest-bearing securities, and is favored by the courts.[4]

The form does not change their nature. That they are payable at a particular place does not make it necessary to aver or prove a presentation for payment there.[5]

Suit may be maintained upon a coupon without producing the bond; but the provisions in the bond must be recited in such a general way as to explain the relation the coupon originally held, and still holds, to it. Recovery may then be had for the face amount, with interest from the day when payment was unjustly refused, and exchange at the place of payment.[6]

When a coupon upon its face refers to the bond, the purchaser is chargeable with notice of all that the bond contains.[7]

These separable obligations bear interest after their maturity. An unpaid coupon left on a bond is not of itself evidence that the bond is dishonored.[7]

Interest coupons are instruments of a peculiar nature. Title to them passes by mere delivery. A

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 35; 3 Law Quar. Rev. 1-13 (1887).

[2] See 1 Abbott, Law Dict. 299; 59 Law Times, 379 (1875).

[3] [Sheboygan County v. Barker, 3 Wall. 96 (1866), Grier, J. See Re Whiting, 2 Barb. 517 (1848); Re Carpenter, 7 id. 34 (1849); State, ex rel. v. Glenn, 7 Heisk. 472 (1872).

[4] McCormick v. Fitch, 14 Minn. 257 (1869). See also 23 Ohio St. 389; 1 Sneed, 637.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 343; 4 id. 122; Regina v. Brown, 1 Carr. & M. *314 (1841).

[6] Koo'-pŏng. F. from couper, to cut, cut off.

[1] 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1488 (1879). See Myers v. York, &c. R. Co., 43 Me. 239-40 (1857); Ethoven v. Hoyle, 13 C. B. 372 (1853).

[2] Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. 105 (1868), cases.

[3] Clark v. Iowa City, 20 Wall. 589 (1874), cases, Field, J.; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 684 (1880); Walnut v. Wade, 103 id. 696 (1880); Thompson v. Perrine, 106 id. 592 (1882); Kerr v. City of Corry, 105 Pa. 282 (1884).

[4] City of Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. 477, 483-85 (1869), Nelson, J.

[5] Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 695 (1880).

[6] McLure v. Township of Oxford, 94 U. S. 432 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[7] Indiana & Illinois Central R. Co. v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 761-63 (1880), cases.

transfer of possession is presumptively a transfer of title.[1]

When issued by competent authority they pass into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value before maturity, freed from any infirmity in their origin. As with other negotiable paper mere suspicion that there may be a defect of title in the holder, or knowledge of circumstances which would excite suspicion as to his title in the mind of any prudent man, is not sufficient to impair the title of the purchaser. That result will only follow where there has been bad faith on his part.[2]

Being complete instruments, capable of sustaining separate actions without reference to the maturity of the bond, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time when they respectively mature.[3] See BOND; EX. 3; IMPAIR.

Coupon note. A promissory note with coupons attached, which, in number, correspond to the payments of interest.

The original note may be secured by a mortgage. A form in Iowa reads thus:

$ —. —— —— 1889.

On the —— day of ——, 188—, I promise to pay to —— —— or order, —— dollars. Being semi-annual interest to that date on my note for —— dollars, due —— 188—. Payable at ——.

No. —. —— ——.

Coupon stamp. The Government furnishes collectors of its revenue books of stamps having coupons attached, to be used when taxes are paid on spirits.

There are nine coupons to each stamp representing a decimal, all printed between the stamp and the stub. Upon the receipt of a distiller's tax, for example, the officer detaches a stamp with such number of coupons attached as corresponds to the number of proof-gallons in the cask, as shown by the gauger's return. Unused coupons remain with the stub; if detached, they are of no value.[4]

Coupon ticket. Sets or books of tickets issued by carriers of passengers, providing that for each trip had, according to the terms of the contract, a ticket shall be detached or canceled, are called "coupon tickets" or tickets in the "coupon form."

When the carriage is confined to the issuing line, the ticket is a contract to carry according to its own terms; but when there is one ticket for carriage over that line and other tickets as passports over other lines, the first carrier is ordinarily only agent for the others, except in cases of express contract to the contrary.[1] See CARRIER, Common.

COURSE. 1. The direction of a line with reference to a meridian. See BOUNDARY; HEARSAY, 8; MONUMENT, 1.

2. Routine; practice; procedure. Compare CURSUS.

Course of an action. Progressive action in a suit or proceeding not yet determined.[2]

Due course or process of law. Law in its regular administration. See further PROCESS, 1.

"Due course" and "due process" of law mean the same thing.[3]

Of course. Said of a thing done in the common manner of proceeding, and which does not require special allowance of a judge of the court.

Many rules and citations are taken or had, as "of course," by application to the clerk or prothonotary of the court.

3. The usual way or mode; usage; custom.

Course of business, or of trade. The way ordinarily pursued in a particular calling. See BUSINESS; TRADE.

"Due course of trade," with respect to the negotiation of a note, is where the holder has given for it money, goods, or credit at the time of receiving it, or has on account of it sustained some loss or incurred some liability.[4]

Course of a voyage. The customary track between ports. See DEVIATION.

COURT.[5] 1. According to Cowel, the house where the king remains with his reti-

[1] Ketchum v. Duncan, 96 U. S. 662 (1877).

[2] Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 57 (1877), Field, J.; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 110–121 (1864), cases.

[3] Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 675 (1881). See Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 id. 269–340 (1885); generally, 1 Wall. 82, 175, 384; 3 id. 327; 10 id. 68; 11 id. 139; 14 id. 282; 15 id. 355; 19 id. 83; 21 id. 354; 92 U. S. 502, 509; 96 id. 502; 94 id. 351, 463, 741, 801; 96 id. 659; 97 id. 96, 272; 99 id. 112, 362, 434, 499, 686; 101 id. 87, 677; 104 id. 505; 105 id. 370, 733; 106 id. 663; 107 id. 529, 539, 568, 711, 769; 15 Blatch. 343–46; 16 id. 54; 17 id. 4; 18 id. 363; 26 Conn. 121; 53 Ind. 191; 109 Mass. 88; 112 id. 53; 69 Me. 507; 2 Nev. 199; 57 N. H. 397; 82 N. C. 382; 66 N. Y. 14; 44 Pa. 63; 22 Gratt. 833; 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. Ch. XLVII.

[4] R. S. § 3313.

[1] See Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65 (1870); Hudson v. Kansas Pacific R. Co., 3 McCrary, 249 (1882); Keep v. Indianapolis, &c. R. Co., ib. 208, 214–19 (1882), cases; Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 313 (1858); Milnor v. New York & New Haven R. Co., 53 id. 363, 369–71 (1873), cases; Kessler v. New York & Hudson R. Co., 61 id. 541 (1875); Hartan v. Eastern R. Co., 114 Mass. 44 (1873); Wolff v. Central R. Co., 68 Ga. 653 (1882); 23 Conn. 457; 29 Vt. 421; 26 Ala. 733.

[2] Williams v. Ely, 14 Wis. *238 (1861), Dixon, C. J.

[3] Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 569 (1886).

[4] [Kimbro v. Lytle, 10 Yerg. 428 (1837), Reese, J.; Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Col. 608 (1886).

[5] F. cort, curt, court, a court or yard; also, a tribunal: L. cortis, a court-yard, court, palace: L. cors, an inclosure: co-, together; hort-us, a garden, yard,—Skeat. Orig. from L. cers, a pen, a fortified place, a palace,—Müller, Science Lang. 269. Compare CURTILAGE.

nue; also, the place where justice is administered.

These two meanings, in the beginning, were closely connected. For, in early history, when the king was actually the fountain and dispenser of justice, nothing could be more natural than that subjects who had complaints of ill-treatment to make should use the expression "the court," in speaking of the journey to the place where the king was domiciled, and the application to him preferred, usually in the court of the palace, for interference and redress. Anciently, then, the "court," for judicial purposes, was the king and his attendants; later, those who sojourned or traveled with him, to whom he delegated authority to determine controversies and to dispense justice.[1]

The earlier courts were merely assemblages, in the court-yard of the baron or of the king himself, of those whose duty it was to appear at stated times, or upon summons. Traces of this constitution of courts remain in tribunals for the trial of impeachments, and in the control exercised by legislatures over the organization of courts of justice, as constituted in modern times. Indeed, parliament is still the "High Court of Parliament," and in Massachusetts the united legislative bodies are entitled the "General Court."[2]

A place wherein justice is judicially administered.[3]

The more effectually to accomplish the redress of private injuries, courts of justice are instituted to protect the weak from the insults of the strong, by expounding and enforcing those laws by which rights are defined and wrongs prohibited.[4]

As the executive power of the law is vested in the king, courts of justice, which are the medium by which he administers that law, originate with this power of the crown. . . He is represented by his judges.[5]

In every court there must be: an actor, plaintiff, who complains of an injury; a reus, defendant, who is called upon to make satisfaction; and a judex, judicial power to examine the truth of the fact, determine the law arising thereon, and, for injury done, by its officers to apply the remedy.[6]

A tribunal established for the public administration of justice, and composed of one or more judges, who sit for that purpose at fixed times and places, attended by proper officers.[7]

An organized body, with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and other matters brought before it, and aided in this by its officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands and secure order in its proceedings.[1]

Proceedings at another time and place or in another manner than that specified by law, though in the personal presence and under the direction of a judge, are coram non judice, and void.[2]

The definition given by Coke (and Blackstone) lacks fullness: it is limited to the place of a court. There must also be the presence of the officers constituting the court, the judge or judges certainly, and probably the clerk authorized to record the action taken; time must be regarded, too, for the officers of a court must be present at the place and time appointed by law. To give existence to a court, then, its officers, and the time and place of holding it, must be such as are prescribed by law. . . "Open court" conveys the idea that the court must be in session, organized for the transaction of judicial business. It may mean public, free to all.[3]

A permanent organization for the administration of justice; not a special tribunal provided for by law, occasionally called into existence and ceasing to exist with particular exigencies.[4] See further TRIBUNAL.

2. The judge charged with deciding the law in a given case; as opposed to the jury, who are triers of the fact.

The term "court" may mean the "judge" or "judges" of the court, or the judge and the jury, according to the connection, and the object of its use.[5] See JUDGE; JUDICIARY.

For the speedy, universal, and impartial administration of justice the law has appointed a variety of courts, some with a more limited, others with a more extensive, jurisdiction; some to determine in the first instance, others upon appeal and by way of review. Of these the most important are:

Civil court. A court instituted for the enforcement of private rights and the redress of private wrongs; any court which administers civil law. Criminal court. Any tribunal for the redress of public wrongs — crimes and misdemeanors. Ecclesiastical court. Such judicatory as enforces law made by a religious body for its own government. See CHURCH.

Court of law, or court of common law. Any court which administers justice according to the principles and forms of the com-

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 23: Coke, Litt. 58.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 2.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 23-24; 1 id. 270.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 25; 34 Ill. 360; 14 F. R. 178.

[7] Mason v. Woerner, 18 Mo. 570 (1853), Gamble, J.

[1] [Burrill's Law Dict.

[2] See Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 451 (1852); Brumley v. State, 20 Ark. 78 (1859).

[3] Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Iowa, 508 (1877), Beck, J. See Lewis v. Hoboken, 42 N. J. L. 379 (1880).

[4] [Shurburn v. Hooper, 40 Mich. 505 (1879); Streeter v. Paton, 7 id. 348 (1859), Manning, J.

[5] See Gold v. Vermont Central R. Co., 19 Vt. 482 (1847); Michigan Central R. Co. v. Northern Indiana R. Co., 8 Ind. 245 (1851); 13 R. I. 401.

mon law. Court of chancery, or of equity. A court which proceeds wholly according to the principles of equity, q. v.

Court of original jurisdiction. Such court as is to exercise jurisdiction over a matter in the first instance. Court of appellate jurisdiction. Is organized to review causes removed from another court or courts. Court of general jurisdiction. Takes cognizance of all causes, civil or criminal, of a particular nature. Court of limited or special jurisdiction. May have cognizance over a few matters only.

Inferior court. A court subordinate to another; or, a court of limited jurisdiction. Superior court. A court with controlling authority over some other court or courts, and with certain original jurisdiction of its own. Supreme court. A court of the highest jurisdiction; also, a court higher than some other court or courts, but not necessarily of last resort.

Inferior courts. All courts from which an appeal lies are "inferior" to the court to which their judgments may be carried — as are the circuit and district courts of the United States, but they are not, therefore, "inferior courts" in the technical sense as applying to courts of a special and limited jurisdiction, which are created on such principles that their judgments, taken alone, are entirely disregarded, and the proceedings must show their jurisdiction.[1] See further APPARERE, De non, etc.

Superior courts. Courts in Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, and North Carolina, whose jurisdiction extends throughout the whole of a defined district or of the whole State. In a few other States, the title of a court or courts organized in a particular city or county, additional to the general system; as in one or more counties of Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, and Michigan.

Supreme courts. The supreme courts of New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, and Vermont, the "supreme courts of appeal" of Virginia and West Virginia, and the "supreme judicial courts" of Maine and Massachusetts, in addition to their appellate powers, exercise an additional jurisdiction, more or less general, in the issuing of the prerogative writs of mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, etc. In New Jersey the supreme court is the highest court of law of original jurisdiction; and in New York a court, next to the court of appeals, with certain general original jurisdiction coupled with some appellate powers. In Connecticut the court of last resort is called the "supreme court of errors." In most, if not quite all, of the other States, the name supreme court, for a court possessing the general characteristics above described, is applied to the court of last resort.[1] As to the Supreme Court of the United States, see page 278.

Court of record. A court in which the acts and judicial proceedings are enrolled on parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony. . . . All such are the king's courts; no other has authority to fine and imprison: so that the erection of a new jurisdiction with this power makes it instantly a court of record. Court not of record. Originally, the court of a private man, whom the law would not intrust with discretionary power over the fortune or liberty of his fellow-subjects: as, the courts-baron and other inferior jurisdictions where the proceedings were not enrolled or recorded, and which could hold no plea of a matter cognizable by the common law, unless under the value of forty shillings, nor of any forcible injury, not having process of arrest.[2]

The existence or truth of what is done in a court not of record can, if disputed, be tried and determined by a jury; but nothing can be averred against a "record," [2] q. v.

A court of record is a judicial, organized tribunal having attributes and exercising functions independently of the person of the magistrate designated generally to hold it, and proceeding according to the course of the common law.[3]

The power to fine and imprison was not an indispensable attribute of a court of record. In modern law, the fact that a permanent record is kept may not stamp this character upon a court; since numerous courts of limited or special jurisdiction are obliged to keep records and yet are held to be courts not of record.[4]

Courts of record are sometimes distinguished by the possession and use of a seal.

There is high authority for making the fact that a court is a court of record the test which confers upon its proceedings, in a particular case (falling within the general scope of its jurisdiction), the presumption of jurisdiction, rather than the fact that it is a superior court of general common-law powers.[5]

[1] [Kempe v. Kennedy, 5 Cranch, 185 (1809), Marshall, C. J. See M'Cormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. 199 (1825); Exp. Watkins, 3 Pet. *205 (1830); Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 341 (1844); Kennedy v. Georgia State Bank, 8 id. 611 (1850); Exp. Lathrop, 118 U. S. 113 (1886); Cooley, Const. Lim. 508-9. cases.

[1] See 2 Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 24-25, 331. See 10 Watts, 94; 34 Cal. 422; 23 Wend. 377; 37 Mo. 29.

[3] See Exp. Gladhill, 8 Metc. 170 (1844), Shaw, C. J

[4] See 1 Bouvier's Law Dict. 426.

[5] Davis v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 25 (1881); Freeman, Judgm. § 122, cases.

Minor terms descriptive of courts are: Court above or ad quem. To which a cause is taken from another and inferior court. Opposed, court below or a quo: such lower court, from which the cause is removed. Local court. For the trial of causes within comparatively narrow territorial limits; also, the court of a State, as opposed to the court of the United States to which a cause may be removed. Full court. A session of a court at which all the members are present.

Other terms descriptive of special courts will be found explained in their alphabetical places, as see, in addition to the entries following, APPEAL; ARBITRATION; ERROR, 2 (3); IMPEACH, 4; MOOT; MARTIAL; NISI PRIUS; OYER AND TERMINER; PROBATE.

See also phrases beginning BREAST; BY; DAY; FRIEND; LEAVE; OUT; OPEN.

And see related terms, such as ATTORNEY; BENCH; CHAMBER; CLERK; COMITY; CONSTITUTION; CONTEMPT, 1; COSTS; CRIER; DEPOSITION; DISCRETION, 3-5; JUDGE; JUDGMENT; JUDICIAL; JUDICIARY; JURISDICTION, 2; JURY; LAW; NEWSPAPER; NOTICE, 1, Judicial; PAYMENT; PLEADING; PRÆSUMPTIO; PROCEDURE; RECORD, 2; RULE, 2; SESSION; TERM, 4; VACATION.

Compare CURIA; FORUM.

COURTS OF ENGLAND. Statutes of 36 and 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 and 39 Vict. c. 77, both of which went into effect November 1, 1875, consolidated into one supreme court of judicature the high court of chancery, and the courts of queen's bench, common pleas, exchequer, admiralty, probate, and divorce and matrimonial causes. The supreme court has two divisions: the high court of justice and the court of appeal; the former of which has original and some appellate jurisdiction, and the latter appellate and some original jurisdiction. The lord chief justice is president of the former court, the lord chancellor of the latter.

To the high court of justice there are five divisions: chancery; queen's bench; common pleas; exchequer; probate, divorce, and admiralty. To each of these divisions are assigned the judges of the old courts similarly named, and the jurisdictions of those courts. Each division has its series of reports; another series comprises the decisions of the court of appeal — "appeal cases."

Besides these courts of superior jurisdiction are numerous others of inferior or local jurisdiction, and also ecclesiastical courts.[1] See JUDICATURE, Acts.

As to the older English courts, see[2] ADMIRALTY; AULA; CHANCERY; CORONER; COUNTRY, 2; COUNTY, Court, 2; EXCHEQUER; FEUDS; KING; ORDINARY, 2; OYER; PLEA, 1; STAR-CHAMBER.

COURTS OF SCOTLAND. The court of session, the supreme civil court, consists of two divisions of four judges each, who together form the inner house, and of five judges (lords ordinary) who form the outer house. The judges of the outer house are judges of the first instance, with co-ordinate authority, except as to certain classes of cases appropriated to the junior, the second junior, and the third junior lord ordinary, respectively. The inner house, which is mainly a court of review, consists of the first division, presided over by the lord president, and the second division, presided over by the lord justice clerk. No action can be brought in the court of session for an amount under twenty-five pounds.[1]

COURTS OF THE STATES. There is no uniformity among our States as to the number, name, or organization of their courts. Each State has some tribunal of last resort, with numerous subordinate tribunals; but the mode in which they are created, the extent of their jurisdiction, the selection of the judges and their terms of office and duties, are matters upon which each State legislates for itself. By name these courts are: a supreme court, court of appeals, or court of errors and appeals; courts of common pleas, county courts, or circuit courts for one or more counties; orphans', probate, or surrogates' courts; courts of sessions; recorders' courts; city courts; superior courts; district courts; aldermen's or justices' courts.

For an account of which, see those titles, and the names or titles and references on page 275.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES. "The judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."[2]

"The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority; — to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls; — to all Cases of admiralty and

[1] See Preface to 15 Moak's Reports, i-xv; 2 Law Q. Rev. 1-11 (1886).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. Ch. III-VI.

[1] See 37 Alb. Law J. 4-7 (1888)

[2] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 1.

maritime Jurisdiction; — to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party; — to Controversies between two or more States; — between a State and Citizens of another State; — between Citizens of different States; — between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects." [1] See POWER, 3.

The judges are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and they hold office during good behavior.[2]

The oath taken by justices of the Supreme Court, the circuit and the district judges, is as follows:

"I, —— ——, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States: So help me God." [3]

The organization of the system of courts (except as to the Supreme Court) was commenced by the act of September 24, 1789, known as the Judiciary Act, q. v.

The laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise provide, are to be regarded as "rules of decision in trials at common law" in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply.[4]

This includes the rules of evidence prescribed by the laws of the States in which the United States courts sit.[5] See further DECISION, Rules of.

August 8, 1791, Chief Justice Jay, in answer to an interrogation by the attorney-general, announced that "this court consider the practice of the king's bench, and of chancery, in England, as affording outlines for the practice of this court; and that they will, from time to time, make such alterations therein as circumstances may render necessary." [6]

Remedies at common law and in equity are not according to the practice of the State courts, but according to the principles of common law and equity as distinguished in England, whence we derive our knowledge of those principles.[7]

The blending of equitable and legal causes of action in one suit is not permissible. But in suits in equity in the circuit and district courts the forms and modes of proceeding shall be according to the principles, rules and usages belonging to courts of equity. This requirement is obligatory.[1]

In the following cases and proceedings jurisdiction is exclusive in the courts of the United States:[2] 1. Of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States.[3] 2. Of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws thereof.[4] 3. Of all civil causes of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors the right of such remedy as the common law is competent to give. 4. Of all seizures under Federal law not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. 5. Of all cases arising under patent-right[5] or copyright laws.[6] 6. Of all matters in bankruptcy.[7] 7. Of all controversies of a civil nature where a State is a party, except between a State and its own citizens, citizens of other States or aliens.[8]

The courts mentioned have power to issue all writs, not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.[9]

A re-examination, by writ of error, may be had in the Supreme Court, of a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State, where there is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, a State, on the ground of repugnance to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, a treaty or a statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, etc., specially set up or claimed.[10]

The record from the State court of last resort must present a "Federal question," that is, the Constitution, a law, or a treaty, of the United States must have been drawn in question and its authority denied or evaded.[11]

It is not enough that a Federal question was presented for decision. It must affirmatively appear that the decision was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that the judgment rendered could not have been given without deciding it.[12]

---

[1] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2. See 2 Bancroft, Const. 195-206.

[2] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[3] R. S. § 712: Act 24 Sept. 1789.

[4] R. S. § 721, cases.

[5] Potter v. Third Nat. Bank of Chicago, 102 U. S. 165 (1880), cases.

[6] Rules and Orders, Supreme Court, 1 Cranch, xvi.

[7] Thompson v. Central Ohio, &c. R. Cos., 6 Wall. 137 (1867), cases.

[1] R. S. § 913, cases; Hurt v. Hollingsworth, 100 U. S. 103 (1879), cases; Herklotz v. Chase, 32 F. R. 433 (1887).

[2] R. S. § 711: various Acts, and cases.

[3] See 2 Dall. 393; 4 Saw. 634; 53 Pa. 112; 2 Woods, 428.

[4] See 47 Md. 242; 74 Ill. 217; 95 Mass. 301.

[5] See 7 Johns. *145; 66 N. Y. 459; 34 Iowa, 221; 108 Mass. 501; 40 Me. 430; 15 Mich. 265.

[6] See 47 N. Y. 535.

[7] See 119 Mass. 434; 3 Neb. 437; 72 N. Y. 159; 69 N. C. 464.

[8] See 29 Ark. 649; 27 La. An. 329; 2 Hill, N. Y., 159.

[9] R. S. § 716; Rosenbaum v. Bauer, 120 U. S. 450 (1887), cases; 10 Wheat. 51; 15 Wall. 427; 21 id. 289; 94 U. S. 672; 5 Blatch. 303.

[10] R. S. § 709, cases; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 188.

[11] Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 255 (1880).

[12] Brown v. Atwell, 92 U. S. 329 (1875); Home Ins. Co. v. City Council, 93 id. 121 (1876); Gold-Washing, &c.

Writs of error to the State courts have never been allowed as of right, that is, as of course. It is the duty of the justice to whom application is made, under Rev. St. § 709, to ascertain, from the record of the State court, whether any question, cognizable on appeal, was decided in the State court, and whether the case, on the face of the record, will justify re-examination. When the case is urgent the motion for the writ may be permitted to be made in open court. But if it appears that the decision of the Federal question was so plainly right as not to require argument, and especially if it accords with well-considered judgments in similar cases, the writ will not be awarded.[1]

At the trial some title, right, privilege, or immunity must have been "specially set up or claimed" under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States.[2]

The "inferior courts" (which phrase see, page 275) established are: Circuit courts, District courts, Territorial courts, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the Court of Claims.

Congress can vest no part of its power in a State court;[3] nor in a military commission.[4] During the rebellion the President had power to establish provisional courts at the seat of war, as an incident to military occupation.[5] See WAR.

By consent of a State, Congress may impose duties upon the tribunals of a State, not incompatible with State duties.[6]

Supreme Court of the United States. This court, as seen, was established by the Constitution itself.[7]

"In all cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned [page 276], the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."[8]

Congress cannot extend this original jurisdiction, since in all other cases the Court's jurisdiction must be appellate.[9]

But the extent of the appellate jurisdiction is not limited by the Constitution to any particular form or mode; and the appellate is broader than the original jurisdiction.[10]

In view of the practical construction put upon the Constitution by Congress and the courts, the Supreme Court has expressed an unwillingness to say that it is not within the power of Congress to grant to the inferior courts jurisdiction in cases where that Court has been vested by the Constitution with original jurisdiction.[11]

The Court has power to issue a writ of prohibition to a district court proceeding as a court of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; also, a writ of mandamus, in a case warranted by the principles and usages of law, to an inferior Federal court or to a person holding a Federal office; where a State, a public minister, a consul or vice-consul is a party;[12] also, to issue writs of habeas corpus;[13] writs of scire facias, and all other writs not especially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law.[14] The justices, individually, may grant writs of habeas corpus, of ne exeat, and of injunction,[15] qq. v.

The Court exercises appellate jurisdiction as follows: (1) By writ of error from the final judgment of a circuit court, or of any district court exercising the powers of a circuit court, in civil actions brought there by original process, or removed there from the court of a State, and in final judgments of any circuit court in civil actions brought from the district court, where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds $5,000.[16] (2) Upon appeal from the decree of a circuit court in cases of equity and of admiralty, where the sum in controversy, exclusive of costs, exceeds $5,000.[17] (3) And in certain other cases in admiralty, for which see act of February, 1875, 18 St. L. 315. (4) Upon appeal, or error upon a certificate of differ-

Co. v. Keyes, 96 id. 208 (1877); Daniels v. Tearney, 102 id. 417 (1880); Brown v. Colorado, 106 id. 96 (1882); New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Refining Co., 125 id. 29 (1888), cases; 99 id. 71, 99; 107 id. 319; 111 id. 361; 112 id. 127; 114 id. 133; 116 id. 548; 21 Wall. 639.

[1] Spies v. Illinois (The Anarchists' Case), 123 U. S. 163 (Nov. 2, 1887), Waite, C. J.; Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 324 (1868), Chase, C. J. Anarchists' Case commented on, 27 Am. Law Reg. 38-47 (1888), cases; 1 Harv. Law Rev. 306-26 (1888).

[2] Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394 (Jan. 23, 1888), Waite, C. J.; French v. Hopkins, ib. 524 (1888).

[3] Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 330 (1816); 7 Conn. 342; 17 Johns. 9.

[4] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 121 (1866).

[5] The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 132 (1869). As to criminal jurisdiction generally, see United States v. Clark, 26 Am. Law Reg. 708-9 (1887), cases; also, Circuit, etc., Courts, post.

[6] United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 520 (1883); 1 Kent, 400.

[7] To be the "bulwark of a limited Constitution against legislative encroachment," — Federalist, lxxviii.

[8] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2, cl. 2. See Act of 1789, s. 13: R. S. § 687.

[9] Exp. Vallandigham, 1 Wall. 252 (1863), cases.

[10] Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 341-42 (1879), cases.

[11] Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 469 (1884).

[12] R. S. § 688, cases.

[13] R. S. § 751, cases.

[14] R. S. § 716, cases.

[15] R. S. §§ 717, 719, 752, cases.

[16] R. S. § 691, cases: Act 16 Feb. 1875: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 136.

[17] R. S. § 692, cases; Act 16 Feb. 1875. See CIRCUIT COURT, p. 280.

ences of opinion between the judges of a circuit court.[1] (5) Upon appeals in prize cases.[2] (6) In patent and copyright cases; in revenue cases; in alleged abridgment of the rights of citizenship.[3] (7) In cases from the judgment or decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia or of any Territory, when the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds $1,000 and as to the supreme court of the said District $2,500,[4] and of Washington Territory, $2,000;[5] except in cases involving the validity of a patent or copyright, or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States, in which cases appeal or error lies regardless of the sum or value in dispute.[6] In cases in the court of claims, decided for the plaintiff, the sum being over $3,000 or his claim forfeited.[7] (8) In capital cases and cases of bigamy or polygamy from Utah Territory.[8] (9) In cases involving a Federal question, as see page 277.] (10) Where a court dismisses or remands a cause to a State court.

Its criminal jurisdiction includes such proceedings against public ministers or their domestic servants as a court of law can have consistently with the law of nations.[9]

The judges of the Supreme Court consist of a chief justice and eight associate justices, any six of whom constitute a quorum;[10] the latter have precedence according to the dates of their commissions, or, where the dates are the same, according to age.[11]

The number of members was originally five; in 1807, it was made six; in 1837, eight; and in 1863, nine.

The Court holds one term, annually, at Washington City, commencing on the second Monday of October, and such special terms as it may find necessary.[12] Provision is made for adjournments when a quorum does not attend.[13]

The Court appoints a clerk, a marshal, and a reporter of its decisions.[14]

The ceremony observed in opening and closing the Court is as follows: When the marshal appears, at twelve o'clock noon (in advance of the justices), at the north door of the court room, the crier raps on the desk three times, for the audience to come to order and to rise from their seats. When the chief justice enters the door the crier announces "The honorable, the chief justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States!" As the justices seat themselves, after ascending the platform, the crier proclaims: "O yes! O yes! O yes! All persons having business before the honorable, the Supreme Court of the United States, are admonished to draw near and give their attention, for the Court is now sitting. God save the United States and this honorable Court!" At four o'clock P. M., on intimation (usually a gesture) from the chief justice, or at such other time as he may indicate, the crier announces: "This honorable Court is now adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock," or until "Monday, at twelve o'clock."

Circuit courts of the United States. These are courts of the "circuits" into which the country is divided; each circuit being composed of at least three "judicial districts." In number and territorial jurisdiction the courts correspond with the following circuits:

First.— Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island.

Second.— Vermont, Connecticut, and New York.

Third.— New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware.

Fourth.— Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

Fifth.— Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

Sixth.— Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

Seventh.— Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

Eighth. — Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, and Colorado.

Ninth.— California, Oregon, and Nevada.[1]

For the second circuit an additional judgeship was created by the act of March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 492). The "senior judge" sits in election proceedings (R. S. §§ 2011-14), unless absent or unable to serve, in which event the "junior judge" may act.

There are also courts called "circuit courts" for particular districts within Alabama, Arkansas, and Mississippi.[2]

A circuit court consists of a justice of the Supreme Court, called the "circuit justice," a "circuit judge" for the circuit having the same powers as the circuit justice, and the "district judge" of the district where the circuit court is held. Any two of these officials may hold court. The "circuit justice," sitting apart, may try cases; during every two years he must attend

[1] R. S. §§ 698, 697, cases.
[2] R. S. §§ 695-96, cases.
[3] R. S. § 699, cases.
[4] Act 25 Feb. 1879: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 149.
[5] R. S. §§ 702, 706, cases.
[6] R. S. §§ 702, 706, cases.
[7] R. S. § 707, cases.
[8] Act 23 June, 1874: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 103.
[9] R. S. § 4063, cases.
[10] R. S. § 673: Act 10 April, 1869.
[11] R. S. §§ 674-75: Acts 24 Sept. 1789, 25 June, 1868.
[12] R. S. § 684: Acts 23 July, 1866, 24 Jan. 1873.
[13] R. S. § 685: Acts 29 April, 1802, 21 Jan. 1889.
[14] R. S. § 677: various Acts, 1789 to 1867.

[1] R. S. § 604: various Acts, 1789 to 1878.
[2] See R. S. § 608; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 87.

at least one term of court in the district.[1] By consent of the parties the district judge may vote on an appeal from his own decision; but judgment is to be rendered in conformity with the opinion of the presiding judge.[2] When a circuit justice, or all the judges, are disqualified from any cause, a case may be certified to the most convenient circuit, or the judge thereof may be requested to hold the court.[3]

Each court appoints its own clerks and their deputies.[4]

Each court also appoints as "commissioners" as many discreet persons, none of them being a marshal or his deputy, as may be deemed necessary;[5] but they are not considered officers of the court.[6] They are authorized to hold persons to security of the peace, and for good behavior in cases arising under Federal law,[7] to take bail and affidavits required in another circuit or a district court.[8] They may imprison or bail offenders;[9] discharge poor convicts;[10] administer oaths and take acknowledgments;[11] apprehend fugitives from justice.[12] They are required to conform their proceedings in criminal cases to the practice in the State courts as far as practicable.[13] They are impliedly authorized to keep a docket, and entitled to docket fees.[14]

The jurisdiction of the circuit courts is such as Congress confers.[15] A general description of the original jurisdiction is, that it extends (subject to some limitations founded upon residence) to civil suits involving more than $2,000,—(by act of March 3, 1887,—prior thereto $500) exclusive of costs, and arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, or in which the United States are plaintiffs, or in which the controversy is between different States, or citizens of a State and foreign States, citizens, and subjects; also of crimes under the laws of the United States. They have no appellate jurisdiction over the district courts.[16] By act of March 3, 1875,[17] a new definition was given of the jurisdiction, which is very comprehensive, and has been held to be a substitute for and implied repeal of the provisions of the Revision of 1873.[1] See further act of March 3, 1887, page 281.

The $2,000 provision relates to the amount "in dispute," not to the amount claimed.[2] The Supreme Court has power of review where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs.[3]

The matter in dispute may be made up of distinct demands each less than $2,000, and although title be acquired by assignment.[4]

The jurisdiction is co-extensive with the limits of the State.[5] Where there are two districts in a State, a citizen of such State is liable to suit in either district, if served with process.[6]

The fact that a nominal or immaterial party resides in the same State with one of the actual parties will not defeat the jurisdiction.[7]

The court, not being a foreign court, adopts and applies the law of the State.[8]

The facts on which jurisdiction rests must, in some form, appear on the face of the record of each suit; as, for example, the fact of citizenship.[9]

More specifically, the original jurisdiction includes: cases arising under—laws providing internal revenue, postal laws, patent laws, copyright laws; proceedings for penalties incurred by a merchant vessel in carrying passengers; suits by or against a national banking association; matters involving the elective franchise and other civil rights belonging to citizens of the United States; also, exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except when otherwise provided, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of offenses cognizable therein.[10]

In an admiralty cause by consent, and in a patent cause in equity under rules made by the Supreme Court, the court may impanel a jury of five to twelve persons to determine the issue of fact.[11] But except

[1] R. S. § 610: Act 10 April, 1869.

[2] R. S. § 614: Acts 24 Sept. 1789, 29 April, 1802, 2 March, 1867.

[3] R. S. §§ 615, 617: various Acts, and cases; Supervisors v. Rogers, 7 Wall. 175 (1868).

[4] R. S. §§ 619, 624: various Acts.

[5] R. S. §§ 627-28: various Acts.

[6] Exp. Van Orden, 3 Blatch. 167 (1854).

[7] R. S. § 727: various Acts.

[8] R. S. § 945: various Acts.

[9] R. S. §§ 1014-15: various Acts.

[10] R. S. § 1042: Act 1 June, 1872.

[11] R. S. § 1778: various Acts.

[12] R. S. § 5270: Acts and cases.

[13] R. S. § 1014; United States v. Harden, 4 Hughes, 456 (1881).

[14] Phillips v. United States, 33 F. R. 164 (1887).

[15] Sewing Machine Cases, 18 Wall. 577 (1877).

[16] See R. S. § 699: various Acts and cases.

[17] 18 St. L. 470: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 173.

[1] Osgood v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 6 Biss. 332 (1875).

[2] Brooks v. Phœnix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 16 Blatch. 188 (1879).

[3] 1 Sup. R. S. p. 136; R. S. §§ 691-92; 100 U. S. 6, 147, 158, 444, 457; 101 id. 231; 102 id. 177; 103 id. 673, 755; 106 id. 579.

[4] Bernheim v. Birnbaum, 30 F. R. 885 (1887).

[5] Shrew v. Jones, 2 McLean, 78 (1840).

[6] M'Micken v. Webb, 11 Pet. *38 (1837); Vore v. Fowler, 2 Bond, 294 (1869); 10 Blatch. 307.

[7] Walden v. Skinner, 101 U. S. 589 (1879).

[8] Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 271 (1879).

[9] Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Rhoads, 119 U. S. 239 (1886), cases; Menard v. Goggan, 121 id. 253 (1887).

[10] R. S. § 629: Act 3 March, 1875: 18 St. L. 470.

[11] Act 16 Feb. 1875, c. 77: 18 St. L. 315. See 96 U. S. 440; 101 id. 6, 247; 102 id. 218.

ing these cases, reference to referees, and some exceptions in bankruptcy, the trial of all issues of fact is by jury.[1] By stipulation filed, the court may find the facts in the nature of a general or special verdict,[2] q. v.

This court has power to issue writs of error to the district courts on final judgments in civil cases at common law. An appeal may be had to it from a final decree of a district court of equity, admiralty, or maritime jurisdiction, except prize causes where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of fifty dollars, exclusive of costs;[3] the writ of error or appeal being taken out within one year from the removal of any disability.[4] Provision is made for the removal of causes into this court when the district judge is disqualified by interest, etc.[5] The court is always open for interlocutory proceedings in equity causes.[6] The opinion of the presiding judge or justice prevails, in cases of difference;[7] and in criminal proceedings, upon request, the point of difference is to be certified to the Supreme Court, but the cause may proceed, if that can be done without prejudice to the merits.[8] In cases of non-attendance of the judges, the marshal, or the clerk, may adjourn the court.[9] See OPINION, 3, Difference of.

Jurisdiction of writs of error in criminal cases comprises sentences of imprisonment and fines in excess of $300. Within a year thereafter, a petition to the circuit court for a writ of error may be presented; the writ, if allowed, to be accompanied with a bond to prosecute the suit and abide the judgment.[10]

The circuit courts are co-ordinate tribunals, constituting a single system, and the decision of any one of them ought to be regarded as decisive of the question involved, until otherwise determined by the Supreme Court.[11]

The act approved March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 552), provides that the first section of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 St. L. 470), be amended to read as follows:

That the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognisance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of two thousand dollars, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or in which controversy the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners, or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, or a controversy between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, or a controversy between citizens of a State and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable by them. But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process of [or] proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant; nor shall any circuit or district court have cognizance of any suit except upon foreign bills of exchange, to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder of [if[1]] such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment or transfer had been made; and the circuit courts shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the district courts, under the regulations and restrictions prescribed by law.

Sec. 2. That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district[;] any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being non-residents of that State; and when in any suit mentioned in this section there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending, or may be hereafter brought, in any State court, in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, any defendant, being such citizen of another State, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be

[1] R. S. § 648; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 175; 100 U. S. 208.

[2] R. S. § 649; 12 Wall. 275; 19 id. 81; 101 U. S. 569; 20 Blatch. 206.

[3] R. S. §§ 631, 633, 636: Acts and cases.

[4] R. S. § 635: Act 1 June, 1872.

[5] R. S. § 637: several Acts.

[6] R. S. § 638: several Acts.

[7] R. S. § 650: Act 1 June, 1872.

[8] R. S. § 651: Act 1 June, 1872.

[9] R. S. §§ 671-72: several Acts.

[10] Act 3 March, 1879: 20 St. L. 354.

[11] Welles v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 8 Saw. 612 (1883); 1 Flip 382.

[1] Newgass v. New Orleans, 33 F. R. 196 (1888).

made to appear to said circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, or in any other State court to which the said defendant may, under the laws of the State, have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court, without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said circuit court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as relates to such other defendants, to the State court, to be proceeded with therein. At any time before the trial of any suit which is now pending in any circuit court or may hereafter be entered therein, and which has been removed to said court from a State court on the affidavit of any party plaintiff that he had reason to believe and did believe that, from prejudice or local influence, he was unable to obtain justice in said State court, the circuit court shall, on application of the other party, examine into the truth of said affidavit and the grounds thereof, and, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said court that said party will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, it shall cause the same to be remanded thereto. Whenever any cause shall be removed from any State court into any circuit court of the United States, and the circuit court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed, and order the same to be remanded to the State court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court so remanding such cause shall be allowed.

That section 3 of said act shall read as follows:

Sec. 3. That whenever any party entitled to remove any suit mentioned in the next preceding section, except in such cases as are provided for in the last clause of said section, may desire to remove such suit from a State court to the circuit court of the United States, he may make and file a petition in such suit in such State court at the time, or any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the State or the rule of the State court in which such suit is brought to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint of the plaintiff, for the removal of such suit into the circuit court to be held in the district where such suit is pending, and shall make and file therewith a bond, with good and sufficient surety, for his or their entering in such circuit court, on the first day of its then next session, a copy of the record in such suit, and for paying all costs that may be awarded by the said circuit court if said court shall hold that such suit was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto, and also for their appearing and entering special bail in such suit if special bail was originally requisite therein. It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept said petition and bond, and proceed no further in such suit; and the said copy being entered as aforesaid in said circuit court of the United States, the cause shall then proceed in the same manner, as if it had been originally commenced in the said circuit court; and if in any action commenced in a State court the title of land be concerned, and the parties are citizens of the same State, and the matter in dispute exceed the sum or value of two thousand dollars, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value being made to appear, one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants, before the trial, may state to the court, and make affidavit if the court require it, that he or they claim and shall rely upon a right or title to the land under a grant from a State, and produce the original grant, or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of public records shall put it out of his or their power, and shall move that any one or more of the adverse party inform the court whether he or they claim a right or title to the land under a grant from some other State, the party or parties so required shall give such information, or otherwise not be allowed to plead such grant or give it in evidence upon the trial; and if he or they inform that he or they do claim under such grant, any one or more of the party moving for such information may then, on petition and bond, as hereinbefore mentioned in this act, remove the cause for trial to the circuit court of the United States next to be holden in such district; and any one of either party removing the cause shall not be allowed to plead or give evidence of any other title than that by him or them stated as aforesaid as the ground of his or their claim.

Sec. 2. That whenever in any cause pending in any court of the United States there shall be a receiver or manager in possession of any property such receiver or manager shall manage and operate such property according to the requirements of the valid laws of the State in which such property shall be situated in the same manner the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession thereof. Any receiver or manager who shall willfully violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding three thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 3. That every receiver or manager of any property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property, without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed; but such suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice.

Sec. 4. That all national banking associations established under the laws of the United States shall, for the purposes of all actions by or against them, real, personal or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed citizens of the States in which they are respectively located; and in such cases the circuit and district courts shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State.

The provisions of this section shall not be held to affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in cases commenced by the United States or by direction of any officer thereof, or cases for winding up the affairs of any such bank.

Sec. 5. That nothing in this act shall be held, deemed, or construed to repeal or affect any jurisdiction or right mentioned either in sections 641, or in 642, or in 643, or in 722, or in title 24 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or mentioned in section 8 of the act of Congress of which this act is an amendment, or in the act of Congress approved March 1st, 1875, entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil or legal rights."

Sec. 6. That the last paragraph of section 5 of the act of Congress, approved March 3d, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and section 640 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over or disposition of any suit removed from the court of any State, or suit commenced in any court of the United States, before the passage hereof except as otherwise expressly provided in this act.

Sec. 7. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.[1] See ADDENDA.

Section 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, does not apply in determining a question of jurisdiction on an application for the removal of a cause.[2]

The circuit court cannot take cognizance of a suit against a party in a district of which he is not a resident.[3]

Before the act of 1887, a controversy between citizens of different States could be brought in any Federal court where the defendant could be served with process. That act confines the plaintiff to the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant, and that wherein the plaintiff himself resides.[4]

In a case involving a single controversy, where the jurisdiction depends upon citizenship, the right of removal is governed by clause 2 of section 2 of the act of 1887, and can be exercised only by non-resident defendants. Clause 3 of that section, like clause 2 of section 2 of the act of 1875, governs that class of cases only where there are two or more controversies involved in the same suit and one of them is wholly between citizens of different States. Under the act of 1887, the right of removal in the latter cases is limited to one or more of the defendants actually interested in such separable controversy, and does not extend to the plaintiff.[5]

Section 2 of the act of 1887, does not change the practice as to defendants seeking a removal on the ground of prejudice or local influence.[6]

A formal affidavit by the defendant that he believes that he cannot obtain justice because of prejudice or local influence is not sufficient: the fact must be shown by oral testimony or by affidavit. The affidavit may be filed in the State court and a certified copy be sent to the circuit court.[1]

Only when the court can plainly see that its jurisdiction is being fraudulently invoked will it deny the privilege of increasing the ad damnum by amendment.[2]

The Supreme Court cannot review an order remanding a suit removed under the act of 1887, begun, removed, and remanded after that act went into effect.[3] Nor has the court jurisdiction where the suit was removed before the approval of that act, but not remanded until thereafter;[4] nor where the order to remand was made while the act of 1875 was in force, and the writ of error not brought until after the passage of the act of 1887. Until the act of 1875 there was no such jurisdiction; and the provision in that act was repealed by the act of 1887, without reservation as to pending cases, the proviso in the repealing section having reference "only to the jurisdiction of the circuit court and the disposition of the suit on its merits."[5] See further REMOVE, 4.

District courts of the United States. Each State consists of one or more "districts" for the convenient administration of United States law. Each district has its "district court" held by a resident judge.[6]

The judge appoints a clerk of the court, with one or more deputies.[7] A deputy may do any act permissible in the clerk.[8]

The court has jurisdiction over all admiralty and maritime causes, all proceedings in bankruptcy, and all penal and criminal matters cognizable under the laws of the United States, exclusive jurisdiction over which is not vested in the circuit or Supreme Court.

More specifically, this jurisdiction comprises: non-capital crimes committed within the district or upon the high seas, except the cases mentioned in Revised Statutes, Title "Crimes," section 5412; cases of piracy, when no circuit court is held in the district; suits for penalties and forfeitures, in general; suits at common law brought by the United States or any officer thereof; suits in equity to subject realty to the payment of internal revenue

---

See acts of 1877 and 1875 compared, 21 Am. Law Rev. 810-16 (1887).

[1] Fales v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 679 (1887).

[2] County of Yuba v. Pioneer Gold Mining Co., 32 F. R. 188 (1887), Sawyer, J. Contra, ib. 675, 84.

[3] Gavin v. Vance, 13 F. R. 85 (1887), Hammond, J.

[4] Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 32 F. R. 312 (1887), Brewer, J.

[5] Hills v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 33 F. R. 81 (1887), Newman, J

[1] Short v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 33 F. R. 114 (1887), Brewer, J.

[2] Davis v. Kansas City, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 863 (1887).

[3] Morey v. Lockhart, 123 U. S. 56 (1887).

[4] Wilkinson v. Nebraska, 123 U. S. 286 (1888).

[5] Sherman v. Grinnell, 123 U. S. 679 (1887), Waite, C. J.

[6] R. S. § 551: various Acts.

[7] R. S. §§ 555, 558: various Acts.

[8] Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall. 111 (1873). See 1 Woods, 213.

tax; suits for forfeitures or damages as debts due to the United States by Rev. St., section 3490; causes arising under the postal laws; civil causes in admiralty and maritime law; some offenses against civil rights — Rev. St., Title XXIV; suits by or against any national bank within the district; suits by aliens for torts in violation of the law of nations or of a treaty; certain suits against consuls or vice-consuls; and original bankruptcy proceedings.[1]

Trial of issues of fact, except in equity, admiralty and maritime proceedings, is by jury.[2] (See page 277, column 1, page 280, column 2.)

The time for holding the sessions of the various courts is provided for;[3] also, the circumstances under which special terms may be held;[4] also, adjournments by the marshal;[5] and certifying cases into the circuit court, in case of disability or disqualification in the district judge.[6] The judge of one district may be designated to hold court in another district within the same circuit.[7] In cases of vacancy all processes are to be continued to the next stated term after the qualification of a successor; except that in States having two or more districts the judge of any such district may hold court.[8]

Territorial courts of the United States. The Territories are legislative governments, and their courts legislative courts. Congress, in the exercise of its powers in the organization and government of the Territories, combines the powers of both the Federal and State authorities.[9] The phrase "courts of the United States" is sometimes used to include these courts in the Territories, but not so in the Constitution itself.[10]

In Arizona the judicial power is vested in a supreme court and such inferior courts as the legislative council may provide. In the other organized Territories the power is vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace.[11]

The supreme court, which consists of a chief justice and two associate justices, appointed for four years, holds an annual term at the seat of government of the Territory.

Each Territory is divided into three districts, and a district court is to be held by a justice of the supreme court as prescribed by law. Terms for causes in which the United States are not a party are held in the counties designated by the laws of the Territory. The supreme and district courts possess chancery and common-law powers. Review of a final decision in a district court by the supreme court is regulated by the territorial legislature. The district courts have the same jurisdiction, in cases arising under the Constitution and laws, as is vested in the Federal circuit and district courts. A marshal and attorney are appointed by the President and Senate; and a clerk, by each supreme court judge in his district.

An appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court at Washington is allowed where the Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty is brought in question. There is also an appeal where the value in dispute exceeds $1,000; except in Washington Territory, as to which this limit is $2,000.[1]

Justices of the peace are not given jurisdiction where the title to land may be in dispute, or where the claims exceed one hundred dollars. See further TERRITORY, 2.

Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. This court, which may be embraced in the expression "courts of the United States,"[2] was established by the act of March 3, 1863, consists of six justices appointed by the President and the Senate, and has the same jurisdiction as circuit and district courts, with cognizance in divorce cases.

Actions are maintainable against inhabitants of the District, or persons found therein. It has common-law and chancery jurisdiction according to the laws of Maryland of May 3, 1802. It has appellate jurisdiction from the police court of the District, from justices of the peace in cases involving less than fifty dollars, and from the decisions of the commissioner of patents.[3] Any final judgment or decree, involving over $2,500 in value, may be re-examined in the Supreme Court of the United States; and so too, by special allowance, as to cases involving a less amount, where the questions of law are of great importance.[4]

Court of Claims of the United States. The court in which the United States consents to be sued.

Consists of a chief justice and four judges, appointed by the President and the Senate; holds an annual session at Washington, beginning on the first Monday in December. Members of Congress are forbidden to practice in the court. A quorum consists of three judges; and the concurrence of three is necessary to a judgment.[5]

---

[1] R. S. § 563: various Acts.
[2] R. S. § 566: various Acts.
[3] R. S. § 572: various Acts.
[4] R. S. § 581: various Acts.
[5] R. S. § 583: various Acts.
[6] R. S. §§ 587–89, 601: several Acts; 1 Gall. 338; 97 U. S. 146.
[7] R. S. §§ 592–97: various Acts.
[8] R. S. §§ 602–3: various Acts.
[9] Scott v. Jones, 5 How. 374 (1847); Benner v. Potter, 9 id. 241 (1850).
[10] United States v. Haskins, 3 Saw. 271 (1875); 1 Fla. 498.
[11] R. S. § 1907: various Acts.

[1] R. S. §§ 702, 706: various Acts, and cases.
[2] Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 9–10 (1882); Noerr v. Brewer, 1 MacArthur, 507 (1874).
[3] See generally R. S., Index.
[4] Act 25 Feb. 1879: 1 Supl. R. S. p. 149; R. S. § 706.
[5] R. S. §§ 1049–58: Act 23 June, 1874; 1 Ct. Cl. 3–8.

Its jurisdiction extends to all claims founded upon any law of Congress, any regulation of an executive department, any contract, express or implied, with the Government; to claims referred to it by either House of Congress; to set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, and other claims on the part of the United States against plaintiffs in said court.[1]

Its jurisdiction is limited to contracts. To constitute an implied contract there must have been a consideration moving to the United States, or they must have received the money charged with a duty to pay it over, or the claimant must have had a lawful right to it when received.[2]

The court has no equitable jurisdiction.[3]

For torts committed by an officer or agent of the United States, whether a remedy should be furnished, Congress has reserved for its own determination.[4]

The court may enter a judgment on a set-off against the claimant.[5]

An alien may sue, provided the like right is accorded an American citizen to prosecute claims against his government.[6]

The common-law rule which excludes interested parties as witnesses is observed; but, at the instance of the solicitor of the United States, a claimant may be required to testify.[7]

The court may appoint commissioners to take testimony.[8]

Suits in this court are not suits at common law; hence, trial by jury is not a right in a claimant.[9]

The court has never felt bound by the strict rules of pleading incident to actions in courts of common law or in equity. It seeks to administer justice by simple and convenient forms, and makes such interlocutory orders as will lead to the doing of complete justice without prolonged litigation.[10]

The limitation of writs is six years after the claim has accrued, with the usual allowance in cases of disability.[11]

Prior to 1855 claimants were heard by Congress. This court was established, in that year, to relieve Congress, to protect the government by regular investigation, and to benefit claimants by affording them a certain mode of examining and adjudicating claims. Originally it was a court in name, for its power extended only to the preparation of bills to be submitted to Congress. In 1863 the number of judges was increased from three to five, its jurisdiction was enlarged, and it was authorized to render final judgment, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court and to an estimate by the secretary of the treasury of the amount required to pay each claimant. Congress repealed this provision for an estimate — as inconsistent with the finality essential to judicial decisions; since which time the court has exercised all the functions of a court. It is one of those "inferior courts" which Congress may establish.[1]

As at first organized, the court was an auditing board authorized to pass upon claims submitted to it, and to report to the secretary of the treasury. He submitted to Congress, for an appropriation, such confirmed claims as he approved, with no right of appeal in the claimant. The jurisdiction of the court has received frequent additions by the reference of cases to it under special statutes, and by other changes in the general law; but the principle originally adopted of limiting its general jurisdiction to cases of contract, remains.[2]

Appeal lies from it to the Supreme Court in the exercise of the general jurisdiction of the latter. And an appeal taken before the right therefor has expired is not vacated by an appropriation by Congress of the amount necessary to pay the judgment.[3]

The act approved March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 505), provides, That the court of claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect to which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned, jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as "war claims," or to hear and determine other claims, which have heretofore been rejected, or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same.

Second. All set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government of the United States against any claimant against the government in said court: Provided, That no suit

[1] R. S. § 1059: several Acts, and cases.

[2] Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 156 (1877).

[3] Bonner v. United States, 9 Wall. 160 (1869).

[4] Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 344 (1879); Nichols v. United States, 7 Wall. 126 (1868); Gordon v. United States, 2 id. 561 (1864); 8 id. 269.

[5] R. S. § 1061. See 17 Wall. 209; 12 Ct. Cl. 317.

[6] R. S. § 1068. See 6 Ct. Cl. 171, 192; 9 id. 254; 11 Wall. 178.

[7] R. S. §§ 1079-80. See United States v. Clark, 96 U. S. 37 (1877).

[8] R. S. §§ 1071, 1080.

[9] M'Elrath v. United States, 12 Ct. Cl. 317 (1876).

[10] Brown v. District of Columbia, 17 Ct. Cl. 310 (1881), cases.

[11] R. S. § 1069. See 107 U. S. 194.

[1] United States v. Klein, 13 Wall. 144 (1871), Chase, Chief Justice.

[2] Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 344-45 (1879), Miller, J.; Gordon v. United States, 117 id. 697 (1864), Taney, C. J.; 1 Dev. Ct. Cl. 41-53; 17 Ct. Cl. 1-29; 7 South. Law Rev. 781-811 (1882).

[3] United States v. Jones, 119 U. S. 477 (1886), Waite, C. J. Explains Gordon v. United States, and other cases.

against the government of the United States, shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

Sec. 2. That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the court of claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed one thousand dollars, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds one thousand dollars and does not exceed ten thousand dollars. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury.

Sec. 3. That whenever any person shall present his petition to the court of claims alleging that he is or has been indebted to the United States as an officer or agent thereof, or by virtue of any contract therewith, or that he is the guarantor, or surety, or personal representative of any officer, or agent, or contractor so indebted, or that he, or the person for whom he is such surety, guarantor, or personal representative has held any office or agency under the United States, or entered into any contract therewith, under which it may be or has been claimed that an indebtedness to the United States has arisen and exists, and that he or the person he represents has applied to the proper department of the government requesting that the account of such office, agency, or indebtedness may be adjusted and settled, and that three years have elapsed from the date of such application and said account still remains unsettled and unadjusted, and that no suit upon the same has been brought by the United States, said court shall, due notice first being given to the head of said department and to the attorney-general of the United States, proceed to hear the parties and ascertain the amount, if any, due the United States on said account. The attorney-general shall represent the United States at the hearing of said cause. The court may postpone the same from time to time whenever justice shall require. The judgment of said court or of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which an appeal shall lie, as in other cases, as to the amount due, shall be binding and conclusive upon the parties. The payment of such amount so found due by the court shall discharge such obligation. An action shall accrue to the United States against such principal, or surety, or representative to recover the amount so found due, which may be brought at any time within three years after the final judgment of said court. Unless suit shall be brought within said time, such claim and the claim on the original indebtedness shall be forever barred.

Sec. 4. That the jurisdiction of the respective courts of the United States proceeding under this act, including the right of exception and appeal, shall be governed by the law now in force, in so far as the same is applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the course of procedure shall be in accordance with the established rules of said respective courts, and of such additions and modifications thereof as said courts may adopt.

Sec. 5. That the plaintiff in any suit brought under the provisions of the second section of this act shall file a petition, duly verified with the clerk of the respective court having jurisdiction of the case, and in the district where the plaintiff resides. Such petition shall set forth the full name and residence of the plaintiff, the nature of his claim, and a succinct statement of the facts upon which the claim is based, the money or any other thing claimed, or the damages sought to be recovered and praying the court for a judgment or decree upon the facts and law.

Sec. 6. That the plaintiff shall cause a copy of his petition filed under the preceding section to be served upon the district attorney of the United States in the district wherein suit is brought, and shall mail a copy of the same, by registered letter, to the attorney-general of the United States, and shall thereupon cause to be filed with the clerk of the court wherein suit is instituted an affidavit of such service and the mailing of such letter. It shall be the duty of the district attorney upon whom service of petition is made as aforesaid to appear and defend the interests of the government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of petition upon him, unless the time should be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the government, and to file a notice of any counter-claim, set-off, claim for damages, or other demand or defense whatsoever of the government in the premises: Provided, That should the district attorney neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense, as required, the plaintiff may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises; but the plaintiff shall not have judgment or decree for his claim, or any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the court.

Sec. 7. That it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed in the cause, setting forth the specific findings by the court of the facts therein, and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the case, and to render judgment thereon. If the suit be in equity or admiralty, the court shall proceed with the same according to the rules of such courts.

Sec. 8. That in the trial of any suit brought under any of the provisions of this act, no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the government.

Section 1079 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed. The provisions of section 1080 of the Revised Statutes shall apply to cases under this act.

Sec. 9. That the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of this act shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The modes of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, and as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing appeals and writs of error in like causes.

Sec. 10. That when the findings of fact and the law applicable thereto have been filed in any case as provided in section six of this act, and the judgment or decree is adverse to the government, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to transmit to the attorney-general of the United States certified copies of all the papers filed in the cause, with a transcript of the testimony taken, the written findings of the court, and his written opinion as to the same; whereupon the attorney-general shall determine and direct whether an appeal or writ of error shall be taken or not; and when so directed the district attorney shall cause an appeal or writ of error to be perfected in accordance with the terms of the statutes and rules of practice governing the same: Provided, That no appeal or writ of error shall be allowed after six months from the judgment or decree in such suit. From the date of such final judgment or decree interest shall be computed thereon, at the rate of four per centum per annum, until the time when an appropriation is made for the payment of the judgment or decree.

Sec. 11. That the attorney-general shall report to Congress, and at the beginning of each session of Congress, the suits under this act in which a final judgment or decree has been rendered giving the date of each, and a statement of the costs taxed in each case.

Sec. 12. That when any claim or matter may be pending in any of the executive departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department, with the consent of the claimant, may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court of claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall report its findings to the department by which it was transmitted.

Sec. 13. That in every case which shall come before the court of claims, or is now pending therein, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the government," approved March 3, 1883, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing laws or under the provisions of this act, it shall proceed to do so, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice shall require, and report its proceedings therein to either House of Congress or to the department by which the same was referred to said court.

Sec. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the court of claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled an "Act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the government," and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

Sec. 15. If the government of the United States shall put in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover the court may, in its discretion, allow costs to the prevailing party from the time of joining such issue. Such costs, however, shall include only what is actually incurred for witnesses, and for summoning the same, and fees paid to the clerk of the court.

Sec. 16. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

For additional information as to the powers and practice of the United States courts see particular terms, such as ADMIRALTY; BANKRUPTCY; CITIZEN; COMITY; CONSTITUTION; CONTEMPT, 1; COSTS; DEPOSITION; DISCRETION, 3-5; GOWN, 1; JURISDICTION, 2; LAW, Common, Supreme; MARSHAL, 1 (2); PROCEDURE; REMOVAL, 2; RES, 2; STATE, 3 (2); SUIT, 3; VENUE; WITNESS.

COURT-MARTIAL. See MARTIAL.

COURT-YARD. See COURT, 1; CURTILAGE.

COUSIN. Sometimes means a cousin by marriage.

A similar usage obtains as to the words "nephew" and "niece." A person speaking of another by his name and relationship is likely to be most accurate as to the name.[1] See CONSANGUINITY.

COVENANT.[2] 1. A promise under seal: as, a covenant to pay rent.[3]

May be used not in its limited, technical sense of a promise evidenced by a sealed instrument, but in the wider sense of any contract in general.[4]

Although words of proviso and condition may be construed as words of covenant, if such be the apparent intent and meaning of the parties, covenant will not arise unless it can be collected from the whole instrument that, on the part of the person sought to be charged, there was an agreement, or an engagement, to do or not to do some particular act.[5]

A covenant or convention is a clause of agreement in a deed, whereby either party may stipulate for the truth of certain facts, or bind himself to perform, or give, something to or for the other.[6]

Thus, the grantor of land may covenant that he has a right to convey, or for the grantee's quiet enjoyment, or the like; the grantee may covenant to pay rent, or to keep the premises in repair,[6] etc.

[1] Cloak v. Hammond, 82 Law Times, 134, 97 (1886): 35 Alb. Law J. 66.

[2] F. covenant, convenant, agreement: L. convenire, to come together, agree.

[3] [Greenleaf v. Allen, 127 Mass. 253 (1879).

[4] Riddle v. McKinney, 67 Tex. 32 (1886), Gaines, A. J.

[5] Hale v. Finch, 104 U. S. 268-69 (1881), cases, Harlan, J.; 52 Tex. 236.

[6] [2 Bl. Com. 304.

Covenantor. He who makes a covenant. Covenantee. He in whose favor a covenant is made.

Express covenant. A covenant explicitly stated in words. Implied covenant. Such covenant as is inferred or imputed in law from words used.[1]

Express covenants are also called covenants in deed; and implied covenants, covenants in law. Any words, such as "I covenant," "I agree," "I bind myself," plainly showing an intent to be bound, raise an express covenant; while a covenant may be implied from the use of such words as "grant," "bargain and sell," "give," "demise,"[2] q. v.

Joint covenant. A covenant that binds all the covenantors together as one person. Several covenant. Such as binds each covenantor separately. Joint and several covenant. Binds all covenantors together, or each singly.

When the legal interest in a covenant and in the cause of action thereon is joint, the covenant is joint, although in its terms it may be several, or joint and several.[3] See further JOINT.

Dependent covenant. A covenant in which the obligation for performance is conditioned upon performance of another covenant, made prior or at the same time. Independent covenant. In this the duty of performance rests solely upon the terms of the covenant in itself considered, irrespective of the performance or non-performance of any other covenant.

A "dependent covenant" rests upon the prior performance of some act or condition, and until the condition is performed the other party is not liable to an action on his covenant. Under an "independent covenant" either party may recover damages from the other for injuries received by a breach of the covenants in his favor; and it is no excuse for the defendant to allege a breach of covenants on the part of the plaintiff.[4]

If the whole is to be performed on one side, before anything else is to be done on the other side, the covenants are dependent, and performance is a condition precedent. But if something is to be done one side, before the whole can be performed on the other, the covenants are independent. . . A dependent stipulation is a condition, performance of which must be averred and proved in order to a recovery. Mutual and independent stipulations are not conditions, but each party has a remedy by action for non-performance by the other, by showing performance on his own part.[1]

Whether a covenant is dependent or independent is determined, in each case, by the intention of the parties as it appears on the instrument, and by the application of common sense; to which intention, when once discovered, all technical forms of expression must give way.[2]

Mutual covenants. Covenants as to which the thing to be done by one party is the consideration of the thing to be done by the other.

When a specified thing is to be done by one party as the consideration of the thing to be done by the other party, the covenants are mutual, and also dependent, if they are to be performed at the same time; and if, by the terms or nature of the contract, one is first to be performed as the condition of the obligation of the other, that which is first must be done or tendered before the party who is entitled to its performance can sustain a suit against the other party. If a day is fixed for the performance of a mutual covenant, the party whose duty it is to perform or tender performance first must do it on that day, or show his readiness to do it, else he cannot recover for non-performance by the other party. But both at common law and in chancery there are exceptions, growing out of the nature of the thing to be done and the conduct of the parties. The case of part performance, possession, etc., in chancery, where time is not of the essence of the contract, or has been waived by acquiescence, is an example of the latter; and the case of contracts for building houses, railroads, etc., in which the means of the builder and his labor become combined and affixed to the soil, or mixed with materials and money of the owner, afford examples at law.[3]

When mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides they are mutual conditions, the one precedent to the other; where they go to a part only, a remedy lies on one covenant to recover damages for a breach of it, but it is not a condition precedent.[3]

Real covenant. Such a covenant as affects realty, binding it in the hands of the covenantor, his grantee or devisee. Personal covenant. A covenant obligatory upon the maker only, or to the extent of his personalty.

If the covenantor covenants for himself and his "heirs," his covenant is real, and descends upon the heirs, who are bound to perform it, provided they have assets by descent; if he covenants also for his

[1] See Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 34 (1883).

[2] See 4 Kent, 468, 473.

[3] Capen v. Barrows, 1 Gray, 379 (1854), cases, Metcalf, J. See Calvert v. Bradley, 16 How. 596 (1853).

[4] Bailey v. White, 3 Ala. 331 (1842), Collier, C. J.

[1] White v. Atkins, 8 Cush. 370 (1851), cases, Shaw, C. J.; Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 467-68 (1885), cases.

[2] Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 736 (1864), cases; Lewis v. Chisolm, 68 Ga. 44-45 (1883), cases; Neis v. Yocum, 16 F. R. 170 (1883), cases; The Tornado, 108 U. S. 351 (1883) Cutter v. Powell, 2 Sm. L. C. 22-66, cases.

[3] Phillips, &c. Construction Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 650 (1875), Miller, J.

"executors" and "administrators," both his personal and real assets stand pledged for the performance.[1]

A real covenant has for its object something annexed to, or inherent in, or connected with, land or other real property; and runs with the land, so that the grantee is invested with it, and may sue upon it for any breach happening in his time.[2]

Of covenants real the most important are covenants for title, which assure the full enjoyment of whatever the deed purports to convey: the covenants — of seisin, of a right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, against incumbrances, for further assurance, and of warranty, qq. v. In the United States they are sometimes called "full covenants."[3]

Other covenants relating to realty are: a covenant to convey; against nuisances or a particular use; to renew a lease.[4]

An article of agreement for the sale of land is a covenant to convey the land.[5] A covenant of a right to convey means that the covenantor has the capacity and a right to transfer the land in question: the same as a covenant of seisin,[6] q. v.

A covenant "runs with the land" when either the liability to perform it, that is, its burden, or the right to take advantage of it; that is, its benefit, passes to the assignee of the land.[7]

Covenants running with the land are: those annexed to the estate, such as the ancient warranty, now represented by the usual covenants of title; and those which are attached to the land itself, such as the rights of common or easements. Species of the latter class, to be enforceable against the assignees of the covenantor, must "touch and concern" or "extend to the support of" the land conveyed.[8]

On covenants to stand seized to uses, see Uses, 3.

Other terms by which covenants are distinguished are: affirmative, that a thing has been or shall be done, and opposed to negative, not to do a thing; alternative or disjunctive, affording an election between things to be done; auxiliary, relating to another covenant as the principal, and discharged with it; collateral, connected with a grant, but not relating immediately to the thing, and opposed to inherent, affecting the particular property immediately; concurrent, to be performed at the same time with another; declaratory, limiting or directing a use; executed, performed, and opposed to executory, to be performed in the future; general, relating to lands generally and placing the covenantee in the position of a specialty creditor, and opposed to special, relating to particular land and giving the covenantee a lien thereon; transitive, passing over to the representatives of the maker, and opposed to intransitive, limited to the covenantor himself.

A grantor, conveying by deed of bargain and sale, by way of release or quitclaim of all his right and title to a tract of land, if made in good faith, without fraudulent representation, is not responsible for the goodness of the title beyond the covenants in his deed. He conveys nothing more than the estate of which he is possessed at the time; his deed does not pass an interest not then in existence. If the vendee has contracted for a particular estate, or for an estate in fee, he must take the precaution to secure himself by proper covenants of title. This principle is applicable to a deed of bargain and sale by release or quitclaim, in the strict sense of that species of conveyance. If the deed bears on its face evidence that the grantor intended to convey and that the grantee expected to become invested with an estate of a particular description or quality, and that the bargain had proceeded upon that footing, then, although it may not contain covenants of title in the technical sense, still the legal effect of the instrument will be as binding upon the grantor in respect to the estate thus described as if a formal covenant to that effect had been inserted; at least so far as to estop him from ever afterward denying that he was seized of the particular estate at the time of conveyance.[1]

In the absence of a recital estopping the grantor as to the character of his title or the quantum of interest to be conveyed, a covenant of general warranty, where the estate conveyed is the present interest of the grantor, does not operate as an estoppel to pass a title subsequently acquired.[2]

2. An action, or a form of action, at common law to recover damages for the breach of a contract under seal.

A covenant to do or to omit a direct act is a species of express contract, the breach of which is a civil injury. The remedy for any disadvantage or loss is by a writ of covenant, which directs the sheriff to command the defendant generally to keep his covenant with the plaintiff or to show good cause to the contrary. If the defendant continues refractory, or the covenant is already so broken that it cannot be specifically performed, the subsequent proceedings set forth with precision the covenant, the breach, and the loss

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 304.

[2] Davis v. Lyman, 6 Conn. 255 (1826), Hosmer, C. J.

[3] Rawle, Cov. Title, 24-27, 318.

[4] See 4 Kent, 473.

[5] See Espy v. Anderson, 14 Pa. 308 (1850); 11 Ill. 194; 19 Ohio, 347; 4 Md. 498; 19 Barb. 639.

[6] 2 Wash. R. P. 648; 10 Me. 91; 10 Cush. 184.

[7] Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. 505 (1849); Shaber v. St. Paul Water Co., 15 Rep. 389 (1883); Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. *120-83, cases.

[8] Norcross v. James, 140 Mass. 189 (1885), cases, Holmes, J.: 25 Am. Law Reg. 64.

[1] Van Rennselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. 322-23 (1850), cases, Nelson, J.

[2] Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 175-76 (1886), cases, Matthews, J.; Rawle, Cov. Tit. 398.

which has happened thereby; whereupon the jury will give damages in proportion to the injury sustained.[1]

Performance of a condition precedent (q. v.), if there is any such condition, must be averred.[2]

"Debt" will lie where the damages are liquidated.

Under the plea of non est factum (he did not make it), the defendant may show any fact contradicting the making of the instrument; as, personal incapacity, or that the deed was fraudulent, was not executed by all the parties, or was not delivered.

In Pennsylvania the defendant may plead "covenants performed with leave, etc.," that is, with leave, after notice to the plaintiff, to offer in evidence anything that amounts to a lawful defense. "Covenants performed, absque hoc" (without this) admits the execution, but puts the plaintiff to proof of performance. . . . "Covenants performed," although in substance a denial of the breach alleged, is an affirmative plea, and does not put the execution of the instrument in issue. "Absque hoc" puts in issue the performance on the part of the plaintiff as alleged by him. "With leave, etc.," implies an equitable defense, such as arises out of special circumstances, which the defendant intimates he means to offer in evidence.[3]

See CONDITION; CONTRACT; FACTUM, Non est; POSSIBILITY; PROVIDED; SEIZIN; WARRANTY, 1.

COVER. See COVERT; DISCOVERY.

COVERT.[4] 1. Covered, protected: as, a pound covert. See POUND, 2.

2. Implied, inferred: as, a covert condition.

3. Under the disability of marriage; married. Discovert. Unmarried, whether said of a widow or of a spinster.

Covert baron. A wife: under the protection of her husband or baron,[5] q. v.

Feme covert. A married woman: under the wing, protection or cover of her husband.[5]

Coverture. The condition of a woman during marriage. Discoverture. Not subject to the disability of being married.

Used as pleas in abatement, q. v., and in speaking of the rights and liabilities of married women generally. See further DISABILITY; FEME, Covert; HUSBAND.

COVIN.[6] "A contrivance between two to defraud or cheat a third."[7]

"A secret assent determined in the hearts of two or more to the prejudice of another."[8]

Covinous. Collusive, fraudulent.

An example is where a tenant for life or tail secretly conspires with another that he shall recover the land held by such tenant to the prejudice of the reversioner.

COW. See ANIMAL; CRUELTY, 3.

A distinction between cow and heifer may or may not be intended in penal statutes,[1] and in a statute exempting a cow from sale on execution.[2] See HEIFER.

CR. Criminal; crown.

CRAFT. See VESSEL.

CRANK. Has no necessary defamatory meaning, any more than to say of one that he is capricious or subject to vagaries or whims.[3]

Does not necessarily imply that a man has been guilty of a crime, nor tend to subject him to ridicule or contempt. If the word has such import it should at least be averred and proven.[3]

CRAVE. See OYER.

CREATE. See CHARTER, 2.

CREDIBLE.[4] 1. Worthy of belief; deserving of confidence. See CREDIT, 1.

2. Entitled to be heard as a witness; competent. Competent to give evidence, and worthy of belief.

The English statute as to the execution of wills prior to 1838 required witnesses to be "credible." This was held to mean such persons as were not disqualified from giving testimony by imbecility, interest, or crime.[5]

This rule has been followed in Connecticut, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Mississippi, South Carolina, and several other States.[6]

As used in a statute requiring that a will disposing of realty shall be attested by credible witnesses, is equivalent to competent; not as meaning, in the loose popular sense, a person of good moral character and reputation in fact, and personally worthy of belief, but a person entitled to be examined in a court of justice, though subject to have his actual credit weighed and considered by the court or jury; and to be examined upon the question whether the will was duly executed, and by a person of disposing mind.[7]

Credibility. Being entitled to be believed; worthiness of belief.

In deciding upon the credibility of a witness it is usual to inquire whether he is capable of knowing a

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 156-57.

[2] 1 Chitty, Pl. 116.

[3] Farmers', &c. Turnpike Co. v. McCullough, 25 Pa. 304 (1855); 4 Dall. 439; 5 Pa. 189; 8 id. 272; 25 id. 303; 38 id. 75; 70 id. 194; 79 id. 336; 96 id. 239-40. See Act 25 May, 1887: P. L. 271.

[4] Kŭv'-ert. F. couvrir, to cover.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 442.

[6] F. couvenir, to agree, covenant.

[7] Mix v. Muzzy, 28 Conn. 191 (1859): Ld. Ellenborough.

[8] Girdlestone v. Brighton Aquarium, 3 Ex. Div. 142 (1878): Termes de la Ley (1708, 1721).

[1] King v. Cook, 1 Leach, Cr. C. 123 (1774); 2 East, P. C. 616.

[2] Carruth v. Grassie, 11 Gray, 211 (1858); Pomeroy v. Trimper, 8 Allen, 400 (1864).

[3] Walker v. Chicago Tribune Co., 29 F. R. 887 (1887), Blodgett, J.

[4] L. credere, to believe, trust; also, to lend.

[5] 1 Jarman, Wills, 124.

[6] Fuller v. Fuller, 83 Ky. 350 (1885), cases.

[7] [Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. 18 (1839), Shaw, C. J.; Amory v. Fellows, 5 Mass. 298 (1809), Parsons, C. J.; Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 476 (1860), Appleton, J.; 38 Md. 424; 26 Conn. 416; 18 Ga. 40; 58 N. H. 8; 14 Tex. Ap. 72.

thing, and the particular thing, thoroughly; whether he was actually present: what attention he gave to the occurrence; and whether he honestly relates the affair as he remembers it.[1]

Credibility depends upon veracity and capacity to observe.[2] Literal coincidence of oral statements may afford ground for suspicion.[3] Affirmative testimony is the strongest.[4] When the credit due to witnesses is equal, preponderance is to be given to number.[5] Credibility is for the jury.[6] See further CHARACTER; COMPETENCY; IMPEACH, 3; WITNESS.

CREDIT. 1. In its primary sense, as a noun and a verb, imports reliance upon something said or done as the truth: belief or faith in testimony.

Discredit. To diminish the reliance to be placed upon testimony on any account whatever, and not necessarily for want of veracity in a person or for want of genuineness in a document. Compare IMPEACH, 2; INFAMY.

General credit. The general credit of a witness is his character as a credit-worthy man. Particular credit. Credit as a witness in a particular action.[7] See CREDIBLE.

2. The capacity of being trusted.[8]

The trust reposed in an individual, by those who deal with him, that he is able to meet his engagements.[9]

In an enlarged commercial sense, implies reputation and confidence; a basis on which the possessor may trade without immediate payment.[10]

The term also comprehends what is due to another person; and, again, time given in which to pay for a thing bought.

Credit is, strictly, a benefit as a means to procure property, and is not in itself recognised as property. Its whole office is to obtain trust. It is available to another by gift, sale, etc. Given gratuitously, it is a loan; given for a consideration, a sale of credit.[8]

Every contract for labor, not paid for in advance, is a contract upon credit; because the labor, when once performed, cannot be recalled. It is otherwise where property is to be paid for on delivery, for a delivery need not be made.[11]

Credit, bill of. "No State . . shall emit Bills of Credit,"[1] that is, issue paper intended to circulate through the community, for its ordinary purposes as money, and redeemable at a future day.[2]

A paper issued by the sovereign power, containing a pledge of faith, and designed to circulate as money.[3]

The term may cover certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest;[3] but not bills of a bank chartered by a State, even though the State be the sole stockholder,[3] nor, even if it pledges its credit for their payment, in case the bank fails to redeem them.[4]

Credit, letter of. A letter written by one merchant or correspondent to another requesting him to credit the bearer with a sum of money.[5] See LETTER, 3, Of credit.

Mutual credits. In laws of set-off, "a knowledge on both sides of an existing debt due to one party, and a credit by the other party, founded on and trusting to such debt, as a means of discharging it."[6] See ACCOUNTS, Mutual; DEBTS, Mutual.

Creditor. In a strict literal sense, he who voluntarily trusts or gives credit to another, upon bond, bill, note, book, or simple contract, for money or other property. In a liberal sense, he who has a legal demand for money or other property which has come to the hands of another, without the consent of the former, but by mistake or accident, and to the payment or possession of which, or to compensation in damages therefor, he is entitled upon the ground of an implied promise. In a still more general sense, he who has a right by law to demand and recover of another a sum of money on any account whatever.[7]

Not simply a person to whom a debt is due, but a person to whom any obligation is due,— the last not being the usual meaning.[8]

[1] See 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 2, 49, 431; 3 Bl. Com. 369.
[2] 1 Whart. Ev. § 404.
[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 413.
[4] 1 Whart. Ev. § 415.
[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 416.
[6] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 391, 417.
[7] Bemis v. Kyle, 5 Abb. Pr. 283 (1857).
[8] Dry Dock Bank v. American Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. 356 (1850).
[Owen v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 3 Ala. 207 (1842).
[9] [Bridge v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 71 (1861).
[10] Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 365 (1856).

[1] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 1.
[2] Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 431 (1830), Marshall, C. J.
[3] Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 314 (1837), McLean, J.
[4] Darrington v. Bank of Alabama, 13 How. 16 (1851). See Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 443 (1883); Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 id. 283 (1885); 2 Story, Const. §§ 1369-64; 4 Kent, 408.
[5] Mechanics' Bank v. N. Y. & New Haven R. Co., 4 Duer, 586 (1855): McCulloch's Commercial Dict.
[6] 2 Story, Eq. § 1435; Munger v. Albany City Nat. Bank, 85 N. Y. 590 (1881), Folger, C. J.
[7] [Stanley v. Ogden, 2 Root, 261 (1795).]
[8] [New Jersey Ins. Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. L. 309 (1875), Beasley, C. J.

One who has the right to require the fulfillment of an obligation or contract.[1] Compare DEBTOR.

The term may merely designate a person. Thus, although the relation of debtor and creditor has been dissolved, the person who was the "debtor" in a contract for usurious interest may testify against him who was the "creditor."[2]

No one, unsolicited, may make himself the creditor of another.[3] See NEGOTIABLE.

Domestic creditor. A creditor resident within the county or the State of the debtor's domicil, or where his property is situated. Foreign creditor. One who resides within another jurisdiction.[4]

Execution creditor. A creditor who has obtained a levy upon property belonging to his debtor.

Existing creditor. A person who becomes the creditor of another after the latter has made an invalid transfer of his property, and before the invalidity has been removed.[5]

General creditors, or creditors at large. Creditors of an insolvent whose claims are to be satisfied pro rata out of any balance left after the claims of secured or favored creditors have been paid.

Judgment creditor. He whose claim has been merged into a judgment against his debtor, and under which, generally, execution may be had.

Junior creditor. A person who becomes a creditor after some other has become a creditor; also termed a "younger," "later," or "subsequent" creditor, and particularly used with reference to the validity of the liens of judgment creditors.

Lien creditor. A creditor who has for evidence of his claim a judgment, mortgage, or other lien regularly entered of record.

Preferred creditor. A creditor who the law, or the debtor, has directed shall be paid before others. See PREFER, 2.

Secured creditor. A creditor who has the possession of, or a lien upon, property of his debtor, as security for the payment of his claim. Opposed, unsecured creditor.

Subsequent or future creditors; existing creditors; prior creditors. See ASSIGN; CONVEYANCE, Fraudulent; RECEIVER; STOCK, 3 (2); SUFFER.

Creditor's bill. A bill in equity filed by one or more creditors of a deceased person, for an account of the assets and a settlement of the estate of the decedent.

A single creditor may file his bill for payment of his own debt, and seek a recovery of assets for this purpose only. But the more usual course is for one or more creditors to file a bill by and on behalf of himself or themselves, and all other creditors who shall come under the decree, for an account of the assets, and a due settlement of the estate. The principle is that as equality is equity the assets should be distributed without that preference allowed at common law. The usual decree is, quod computet: that the master take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors; and an account of all the personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator, the same to be applied in payment of the debts and other charges, in a due course of administration. Thereafter, a creditor may not carry on a suit at law except as the court of equity may allow.[1]

Such a bill lies for a discovery of assets. The court will proceed to a final decree on the merits. The usual decree is for an account; but where the representative of the deceased admits assets, the decree is for immediate payment.[2]

It is no doubt generally true that a creditor's bill, to subject his debtor's interests in property to the payment of the debt, must show that all remedy at law had been exhausted. And, generally, it must be averred that judgment has been recovered for the debt, that execution has been issued, and that it has been returned nulla bona. The reason is, until such a showing is made, it does not appear, in most cases, that resort to a court of equity is necessary, in other words that the creditor is remediless at law. But a fruitless execution is not necessary to show that the creditor has no adequate legal remedy. Thus, when the debtor's estate is a mere equitable one, which cannot be reached by any proceeding at law, there is no reason for requiring attempts to reach it by legal processes.[3]

In Illinois a creditor's bill is defined to be a bill by which a creditor seeks to satisfy his debt out of some equitable estate of the defendant which is not liable to a levy and sale under an execution at law.[4]

CREDIT-MOBILIER.[5] A company or bank formed for advancing money on personal estate, generally with the declared ob-

[1] Hardy v. Norfolk Manuf. Co., 80 Va. 428 (1885), Lacy, J.

[2] Gifford v. Whitcomb, 9 Cush. 483 (1852), cases, Bigelow, J.; 28 Minn. 153.

[3] Gurnee v. Bausemer, 80 Va. 872 (1885), cases.

[4] On enjoining creditors from proceeding in a foreign jurisdiction, see 28 Cent. Law J. 268 (1886), cases.

[5] McAfee v. Busby, 69 Iowa, 331 (1886); 36 id. 215.

[1] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 546-49; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 44 (1887), cases.

[2] Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 645-46 (1879), cases.

[3] Case v. Beauregard, 101 U. S. 690-91 (1879), cases, Strong, J.

[4] Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 98 (1869): Chancery Code, §§ 36-37.

[5] Krā'-dē-mō-bē-le-ā'. F. crédit, credit; mobilier, movable, personal: L. mobilis, movable.

ject of promoting industrial enterprises, such as the construction of railways, the sinking of mines, and the like.[1]

CREW. See REVOLT; SHIP.

Whenever, in a statute, the words "master" and "crew" occur in connection with each other, "crew" embraces all the officers as well as the common seamen — the ship's company; as, in the act of March 3, 1835, § 2, which punishes cruelty by a master or other officer, toward the crew.[2]

CRIER. One who proclaims: an officer of a court whose duty it is to announce the opening and adjournment of the court; to call the names of suitors, jurors, and witnesses; to proclaim that the acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed is about to be taken, or a special return received of the distribution made of the proceeds of a sale by the sheriff; and to make various other proclamations of a public nature, under the directions of the judges of the court.[3]

On the assembling of the Supreme Court the proclamation made by the marshal is in these words: "The honorable the chief justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. Oyez! oyez! oyez! all persons having business before the honorable, the Supreme Court of the United States, are admonished to draw near and give their attention, for the court is now sitting. God save the United States and this honorable Court."

"Let the cryer make proclamation and say, O yes, O yes, O yes, Silence is commanded in the Court, While the Justices are sitting, upon pain of imprisonment. After silence is Commanded, The Cryer shall make a proclamation saying: All manner of persons that have anything to doe, at this Court, Draw Nigh and give your attendance, and if any person shall have any Complaint to enter, or suit to prosecute, Let them Draw near, and they shall be heard."[4]

CRIM. CON. See CONVERSATION, 1.

CRIME. An act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it.[5] See CRIMEN.

A wrong of which the law takes cognizance as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding prosecuted by the State in its own name or in the name of the people or the sovereign.[6]

A crime is a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community in its social aggregate capacity; a public wrong. Distinguished from a private wrong, which is a civil injury or tort.[1]

Crime and misdemeanor are synonymous terms; though, in common usage, "crimes" denotes such offenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprised under the gentler name of "misdemeanors."[1] See MISDEMEANOR, 2.

In short, the term "crime" embraces any and every indictable offense.[2]

Yet it is not synonymous with "felony."[2]

Capital crime. A crime punishable with death. See PUNISHMENT, Capital.

High crime. Used, with no definite meaning, in prosecutions by impeachment; merely serves to give greater solemnity to the charge.

High crimes and misdemeanors are such immoral and unlawful acts as are nearly allied and equal in guilt to felony, yet, owing to some technical circumstance, do not fall within the definition of felony.[4]

Infamous crime. Offenses which rendered the perpetrator infamous at common law were treason, felony, and the crimen falsi.[5] See further INFAMY.

Statutory crime. An act which has been made a criminal offense by enactment of a legislature. Common-law crime, or crime at common law. Any indictable offense at common law.

All offenses against the government of the United States are of statutory origin: no common-law offense can be committed against it.[6] See LAW, Common.

Crimes may be classified as offenses against the sovereignty of the state; against the public — peace, health, justice, trade, policy, property; against the lives and persons of individuals; against private property; against the currency, and public and private securities; against religion, decency, and morality; against the law of nations, qq. v.

Established principles are: That the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and in the State where the same was committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place as Congress may have directed.[7] No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, nor be subject for the

[1] [Worcester's Dict.

[2] United States v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 212 (1838), Story, J.

[3] See R. S. § 715.

[4] Laws of Province of Penn. (1682): Linn, 128.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 5.

[6] Re Bergin, 31 Wis. 396 (1872). See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 32.

[1] [4 Bl. Com. 5; 3 id. 2.

[2] See People v. Police Commissioners, 39 Hun, 510 (1886); 7 Conn. 185; 60 Ill. 168; 32 N. J. L. 144; 9 Wend. 212; 9 Tex. 340; 24 How. 102; 26 Vt. 208; 41 id. 511; 2 N. Y. Rev. St. 70, § 22.

[3] County of Lehigh v. Schock, 113 Pa. 379 (1886).

[4] State v. Knapp, 6 Conn. 417 (1827): 1 Russ. Cr. 61. See Const. Art. II, sec. 4; 24 How. 102.

[5] People v. Toynbee, 20 Barb. 189 (1855).

[6] United States v. Britton, 108 U. S. 206 (1883); United States v. Walsh, 5 Dill. 60 (1878).

[7] See Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2, cl. 3.

same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life and limb; nor be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.[1] In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.[2] No ex post facto law shall be passed — by Congress or by any State.[3]

The foregoing principles restrict the power of the United States government, and do not affect State legislation. But the same principles, expressed in identically or substantially the same language, are also found in the constitutions of the States, as part of the rights which are declared to be excepted out of the general powers of government, and not delegated to the law-enacting department.

See in detail the names of particular crimes; also ACCESSARY; ACCIDENT; AID, 2; ATTEMPT; BAIL, 2; CAUSE, 2; CHARACTER; COMMIT, 3; COMPACT, Social; COMPOUND, 4; CONFESSION, 2; CONFRONT; CONVICT; COSTS; DAMAGES; DECEIT, 2; DECOY; DEGREE, 2; DELIBERATION, 3; DRUNKENNESS; DUEL; DOUBT, Reasonable; EQUITY; EVIDENCE; EXTRADITION; FACTUM, Ex post; FELONY; FINE, 2; FORFEITURE; GUILTY; IGNORANCE; INDICTMENT; INFAMY; INNOCENT, 2; INSANITY, 2 (6); INTENT; JEOPARDY; JURY, Trial; MERGER, 3; OBSCENE; PARDON; POLICE, 2, 3; PREMEDITATE; PRESENT, 1; PROCESS, 1; PUNISH; RATIFICATION; REVOLT; REWARD, 1; SENTENCE; WAIVER; WILL, 1; WITNESS; WRONG. Compare CRIMEN; DELICTUM.

Criminal. 1, adj. Involving the commission of an offense against the public; also, pertaining to the law upon the subject of public wrongs or crimes. Opposed to civil, q. v.

As, criminal or a criminal — act, action, case, contempt, conversation, court, information, intent, jurisdiction, law, libel, offense, procedure, process, prosecution, qq. v.

2, n. A person who has committed an indictable offense against the public. Compare CONVICT, 2.

Criminate. To exhibit evidence of the commission of an indictable offense; to show or prove to be guilty of crime.

No person "shall be compelled in any Criminal Case to be a witness against himself."[4]

A witness cannot be compelled to answer a question which may expose him to a penalty or punishment.[1] A statement made under compulsion cannot be used to show guilt: confessions (q. v.) are to be free and voluntary.[2] But a party cannot claim this privilege. The danger to prosecution must be real. Exposure to civil liability, or to police prosecution, will not excuse. The court determines as to the reasonableness of the objection. Waiver of part of the privilege waives all. Pardon and statutes of indemnity do away with protection.[3]

If an accused person offers himself as a witness in his own behalf to disprove the charge he thereby waives his privilege as to all matters connected with the offense.[4]

An accused may be cross-questioned as to whether he has not been convicted of other charges of crime.[5]

A party on trial for violating an election law who testifies that he did not write names unlawfully entered in a registration book may be compelled, on cross-examination, to write the names in the presence of the jury, as evidence in rebuttal.[6]

Excriminate. To free from a charge or suspicion of crime; to exculpate. Whence excriminatory.

Incriminate. To charge with crime; to criminate; to inculpate. Whence incriminatory.

Recriminate. To charge crime back upon an accuser; particularly, for the respondent in divorce proceedings to acknowledge the offense charged and to make a counter-accusation against the libelant. Whence recrimination, recriminative, recriminatory.

Recrimination as a bar to divorce is not limited to a charge of the same nature as that alleged in the libel. It is sufficient if the counter-charge is a cause for divorce of equal grade. Thus, in Massachusetts, a respondent charged with adultery may reply that the libelant was at the time serving a sentence in the State prison.[7]

CRIMEN. L. A crime, a fault; literally, a judicial decision, or that which is subjected to a judicial decision; an accusation of wrong.

---

[1] See Constitution, Amd. V.

[2] See Constitution, Amd. VI.

[3] See Constitution, Art. I. sec. 9, cl. 3; sec. 10, par. 1. As to criminal jurisdiction in the Federal courts see under COURTS, United States, and 26 Am. Law Reg. 708–9 (1887), cases.

[4] Constitution, Amd. V.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 451.

[2] Emery's Case, 107 Mass. 180 (1871); United States v. Prescott, 2 Dill. 405 (1872); 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 236.

[3] See United States v. M'Carthy, 18 F. R. 87 (1883); Youngs v. Youngs, 5 Redf. 505, 509–11 (1882), cases; Exp. Reynolds, 20 Ch. D. 294 (1882); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 533–40; 2 Crim. Law Mag. 318. That court to decide, see also Exp. Stice, 70 Cal. 53 (1886).

[4] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 235 (1887); Whart. Cr. Ev. § 432.

[5] State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 92–96 (1886), cases: 35 Alb. Law J. 63.

[6] United States v. Mullaney, 32 F. R. 370 (1887), Brewer, J.

[7] Morrison v. Morrison, 142 Mass. 362 (1886), cases: Handy v. Handy, 124 id. 395 (1878), cases.

Crimen falsi. The crime of deceiving or falsifying. At common law, any offense involving falsehood, and which might injuriously affect the administration of justice by the introduction of falsehood and fraud.[1]

The exact extent and meaning of the expression is nowhere stated with precision. In the Roman law it included every species of fraud and deceit.[1]

Offenses included, at common law, are: forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, suppression of testimony by bribery or by conspiracy to procure the nonattendance of witnesses, conspiracy to accuse an innocent person of crime, barratry, counterfeiting money or an official seal, making or dealing by false weights or measures, falsification of records. To this list others have been added by statute.

The effect of a conviction for a crime of this class is infamy,[2] q. v.

Crimen læsæ majestatis. The crime of wounding majesty: treason, q. v.

Flagrans crimen. A crime being committed. Flagrante crimine. While a criminal act is being committed; literally, a crime in its very heat.

Locus criminis. The place of a crime — where committed.

Particeps criminis. One who takes part in a crime; an accomplice. See PARTICEPS.

CRIMINAL; CRIMINATE. See under CRIME, p. 294.

CRITICISM. See REVIEW, 3.

CROP. That which is cropped, cut, or gathered;[3] the valuable part of what is planted in the earth; fruit; harvest. Compare CULTIVATION; FRUCTUS.

Crop-time. That portion of the year which is occupied in making and gathering the crops.[4]

Away-going crop. A crop sown by a tenant who will be no longer tenant at harvest-time; that is, a crop which is sown before but ripens after the end of the tenant's term.

Where the term of a tenant for years depends upon a certainty, as if he holds from midsummer for ten years, and in the last year he sows a crop, which is not cut before the end of his term, the landlord shall have the crop; for the tenant knew the expiration of his term, and it was his own folly to sow what he could never reap the profit of. Otherwise, however, where the lease depends upon an uncertainty, as, the life of some one, or an act of God.[1]

But now, generally, where the lease ends in the spring, the tenant has the crop of winter grain sown the autumn before; and the straw is part of the crop. See EMBLEMENTS.

Growing crop. Any annual crop raised by cultivation.

In some States, regarded as personalty, and leviable with a right to harvest it; in a few States, realty.

Whether a contract for the sale of a growing crop is for "an interest in or concerning lands," to be in writing under the Statute of Frauds, seems to be answered in conformity with the intention of the parties. And so as to growing grass, growing trees, and fruits; although, according to some cases, emblements only are to be considered as chattels, while the spontaneous growth of the land remains a part of it, at least, until ripe and ready for removal. Whenever the parties connect the land and its growth together the growth comes within the statute.[2]

"The lien of a mortgage on a growing crop continues on the crop after severance, whether remaining in its original state or converted into another product, so long as the same remains on the land of the mortgagor." Such lien is not lost by a tortious removal by a person having constructive notice of the lien; and the mortgagee may maintain an action for the conversion.[3]

Outstanding crop. A crop in the field — not gathered and housed, without regard to its state. It is "outstanding" from the day it commences to grow until gathered and taken away.[4] See FAIR; HARVEST.

Cropper. One who, having no interest in the land, works it in consideration of receiving a portion of the crop for his labor.[5]

One hired to work land and to be compensated by a share of the produce.[6]

He has no estate in the land; his possession is that of the landlord, who must divide off to the cropper his share of the crops. A "tenant" has an estate in the land, and a right of property in the crops. Until division, the right of property and of possession in the whole crop is the tenant's.[7]

Where the contract is that the land-owner shall give the cropper a part of the produce after paying all advances, and the crop has been divided, the cropper is not a tenant, but a mere employee; the ownership of the entire crop is in the land-owner, and if the cropper

[1] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 373. See also Barbour v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 288 (1885).

[2] See United States v. Block, 4 Saw. 212-18 (1877), cases; Barker v. People, 20 Johns. *460 (1823); Webb v. State, 29 Ohio St. 358 (1876).

[3] [Webster's Dict.

[4] Martin v. Chapman, 6 Port. 351 (Ala., 1838).

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 145.

[2] 3 Pars. Contr. 81; 3 Kent, 477; 4 id. 73; 1 Wash. R. P., 4 ed. p. 9; 3 Bl. Com. 10; Freeman, Exec. 118, cases; Benj. Sales, 120; 59 Tex. 637.

[3] Wilson v. Prouty, 70 Cal. 197 (1886); Cal. Civ. Code, § 2972.

[4] Sullins v. State, 53 Ala. 476 (1875), Brickell, C. J.

[5] [Frye v. Jones, 2 Rawle, *12 (1829).

[6] Steel v. Frick, 56 Pa. 175 (1867); Adams v. McKesson, 53 id. 83 (1866).

[7] Harrison v. Ricks, 71 N. C 10 (1874), cases.

forcibly, or against consent, takes the crop from the possession of the owner, the taking constitutes larceny, robbery, or other offense, according to the circumstances.[1] See DISTRESS, 4, 5.

CROSS. 1, v. To intersect, q. v.

Crossing. Before a person enters upon a railroad crossing he must use all his senses, take all the precaution he reasonably can, to ascertain that he may cross in safety.[2]

Cross-walk. See SIDEWALK.

2, n. (1) A mark, instead of his name, made by a person who cannot write, or is disabled from writing. See SIGNATURE.

(2) The character × is sometimes used to indicate "cross-examination."[3]

3, adj. In the inverse order; counter; made by the opposite party.

Applied to things which are connected in subject-matter, but run counter to each other.[4]

As, a cross — action, appeal, bill, demand, error, examination or question, interrogatory, remainder, qq. v.

CROWN. The sovereign; the royal power; also, that which concerns or pertains to the ruling power — the king or queen.

In use, similar to our terms State, Commonwealth, Government, People.[5]

Crown case. A criminal prosecution.

Crown debt. A debt due to the government.

Crown law. Criminal law.

Crown office, or side. The criminal side of the court of King's or Queen's bench.

Crown paper. A list of criminal cases awaiting hearing or decision.

Crown pleas, or pleas of the crown. Criminal causes. Opposed, common pleas: civil actions between subject and subject.

The king, in whom centers the majesty of the whole people, is the person supposed to be injured by every infraction of public rights, and is the proper prosecutor.[6] See KING.

CRUEL. See CRUELTY; PUNISHMENT.

CRUELTY. Ill-treatment; maltreatment; abuse; unnecessary infliction of pain, generally physical; immoderate, unrestrained chastisement; violence; inhuman conduct.

Not usually employed in speaking of a battery, malicious mischief, mayhem, or other like act with respect to which the parties are viewed as members of the community; but in cases where they sustain a special relation, as, that of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, teacher and pupil.

1. Cruelty as between Husband and Wife. Such cruelty as causes injury to life, limb, or health, or creates danger of such injury, or a reasonable apprehension of such danger.[1]

Actual personal violence or the reasonable apprehension of it; such course of treatment as endangers life or health, and renders cohabitation unsafe.[2]

The last definition, which accords with the present doctrine of the English courts,[3] has been frequently approved.[4]

Anything that tends to bodily harm and thus renders cohabitation unsafe; or, as expressed in the older decisions, that involves danger of life, limb, or health.[5]

Not, mere austerity of temper, petulance of manner, rudeness of language, want of civil attention and accommodation, or even occasional sallies of passion that do not threaten harm,—which merely wound the feelings without being accompanied by bodily injury or actual menace.[6]

Extreme cruelty. Any conduct, in one of the married parties, which furnishes reasonable apprehension that the continuance of cohabitation would be attended with bodily harm to the other.[6]

It is now generally held that any unjustifiable conduct, on the part of either the husband or the wife, which so grievously wounds the mental feelings or so destroys the peace of mind as to seriously impair the bodily health or endanger the life, or such as in any other manner endangers the life, or such as destroys the legitimate objects of matrimony, constitutes "extreme cruelty" under statutes, although no personal or physical violence be inflicted or even threatened.[7] Compare INDIGNITY. See DIVORCE.

---

[1] Parrish v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 1, 7, 12 (1884), cases; Taylor, Landl. & T. 21. See also Hammock v. Creekmore, 48 Ark. 265 (1886).

[2] Ormsbee v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 14 R. I. 103-8 (1883), cases.

[3] 18 S. C. 60-64.

[4] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[5] See 106 U. S. 208.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 2, 3 id. 40.

[1] [Bailey v. Bailey, 97 Mass. 378 (1867), cases, Chapman, J.; Peabody v. Peabody, 104 id. 197 (1870).

[2] [Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 344, 339-44 (Pa., 1849), cases, King, J.

[3] Gordon v. Gordon, 48 Pa. 228 (1865), Strong, J.

[4] Jones v. Jones, 66 Pa. 498 (1871), Agnew, J.; May v. May, 69 id. 210-11 (1869); 76 id. 357.

[5] Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. 321 (Va., 1878), Staples, J.

[6] Morris v. Morris, 14 Cal. 279 (1859), Cope, J.

[7] Carpenter v. Carpenter, 30 Kan. 744 (1883), cases Valentine, J. See also Holyoke v. Holyoke, 78 Me. 410-11 (1886), cases; Powelson v. Powelson, 29 Cal. 361 (1863); generally, 19 Ala. 307; 36 Ga. 296; 88 Ill. 248; 57

2. Cruelty to Children. Inordinate chastisement of children of tender years — under fourteen.

Beginning with New York in 1875 (under the act of April 21, of that year), societies for the prevention of cruelty to children have been very generally formed. These societies, by statute, are authorized to prosecute persons who maltreat children, or employ them at hard labor in mines, mills, and factories, beyond a certain number of hours a day, or who sell or employ their services as acrobats or as beggars, or as servants about drinking saloons, places of low amusements, houses of prostitution, and like resorts. Abuses which had been characterized as misdemeanors are thus, in effect, brought within the category of acts of cruelty.[1]

3. Cruelty to Animals. The infliction of pain upon dumb animals, without just cause.

Until within recent years ill-usage of a dumb animal was viewed merely as a wrong to the owner's property; no degree of ill-treatment amounted to a misdemeanor unless so inhuman as to shock, and, indirectly, to demoralize beholders: in which case the act became indictable as a public nuisance.[2]

The present view is that, for its own sake, all sentient life is to be protected from the wanton and unnecessary infliction of pain.[3]

To protect animals from cruelty, societies, similar in scope and power to those for children, have been organized in the United States and Europe.

Under the Great Law of the Province of Pennsylvania, ordained in 1682, those who frequented "such rude and riotous sports and practices as . . bull-baitings, cock-fightings, with such like . . shall be reputed and fined as breakers of the peace, and suffer at least ten days' imprisonment at hard labor in the house of correction, or forfeit twenty shillings."[4]

Severe pain inflicted for the mere purpose of causing pain or of indulging vindictive passion is "cruel;" and so is pain inflicted without justifiable cause, but with reasonable cause to know that it is produced by wanton or reckless conduct.[5]

"Cruelty" includes both the willfulness and cruel temper of mind with which the act is done and the pain inflicted. An act merely accidental, or not giving pain, is not cruel in the ordinary sense.[6]

The distinction is between the infliction of such chastisement as is necessary for the training or discipline by which animals are made useful, and the beating or needless infliction of pain which is dictated by a cruel disposition, by violent passions, a spirit of revenge, or reckless indifference to the sufferings of others.[1]

In the statute of 12 and 13 Vict. (1849) c. 92, cruelty means the unnecessary abuse of any animal — domestic bird or quadruped;[2] and in 45 Vict. (1881) c. 712, the intentional infliction upon any animal of pain that in its kind, degree, object or circumstances, is unreasonable.

Under 12 and 13 Vict. c. 92, § 2, dishorning cattle is not an offense, the operation being skillfully performed.[3]

In the New York act of 1874, c. 12, § 8, cruelty includes every act, omission, or neglect whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is caused or permitted.

By the California act of 1874 cruelty includes every act, omission, or neglect whereby unnecessary or unjustifiable physical pain or suffering is caused or permitted.

The Pennsylvania act of 1869 forbids wantonly or cruelly ill-treating, overloading, beating, or otherwise abusing any animal, or being interested in any place kept for the purpose of fighting or baiting any bull, bear, dog, cock, or other creature.

In the Arkansas act of 1879 "needlessly killing" an animal refers to an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction.[4]

The Tennessee statute of 1881 is designed to protect animals from willful or wanton abuse, neglect, or cruel treatment; not from the incidental pain or suffering that may be casually or incidentally inflicted by the use of lawful means of protection against particular animals.[5]

Letting loose a captive fox to be hunted (and which is captured) by dogs is cruelty, within Mass. Pub. Sts. c. 207, § 58. There is nothing in the general purpose of the statute that prevents it from including all animals, whether wild and noxious or tame and useful, within the common meaning of the word "animal." The statute does not define an offense against the rights of property in animals, nor against the rights of the animals protected by it, but against public morals, which the commission of cruel and barbarous acts tends to corrupt.[6] See MALICE; MAIM, 2; NEEDLESS; TORTURE; WANTON; WOUND.

Ind. 568; 10 Iowa, 133; 13 id. 266; 32 id. 511; 16 Kan. 371, 419; 24 Mich. 482; 26 id. 417; 37 id. 604; 40 id. 498; 45 id. 151; 49 id. 417; 56 id. 543; 8 N. H. 315; 56 id. 144; 24 N. J. E. 388; 30 id. 119, 215; 73 N. Y. 369; 14 Tex. 356; 30 Wis. 254; 26 Alb. L. J. 63.

[1] See Delafield Children (1876); Washington Humane Society Act, 13 Feb. 1885: 28 St. L. 302.

[2] United States v. Jackson, 4 Cranch, C. C. 483 (1834); Grise v. State, 37 Ark. 458 (1881).

[3] State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 394 (1862).

[4] Laws of Prov. of Penn. Ch. XXVI; Linn, 114.

[5] Commonwealth v. Lufkin, 7 Allen, 581 (1863), Hoar, J.

[6] Commonwealth v. McClellan, 101 Mass. 35 (1869), Chapman, C. J.

[1] [State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 394 (1862), Bellows, J.

[2] Bridge v. Parsons, 3 Best & S. 382 (1863): 32 Law J. 95. See Bates v. M'Cormick, 9 Law T. R. 175 (1863); Morrow's Case, 9 Pitts. Law J. 86 (1879).

[3] Callaghan v. Society for Prevention of Cruelty, 37 Eng. R. 818 (1885), cases: 16 Cox's Cr. Cas. 101.

[4] Grise v. State, 37 Ark. 456 (1881).

[5] Hodge v. State, 11 Lea, 582 (1883). See also R. S. Wis. § 4445.

[6] Commonwealth v. Turner, 145 Mass. 300 (1887).

The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is a "charity." There is no pecuniary benefit in it for any of its members; its work in the education of mankind in the proper treatment of domestic animals is instruction in a duty incumbent on us as human beings. Its hospital for animals, if established by a bequest or other gift, would be treated as a charity. It has a humane, legal, and public or general purpose; and, whether expressed or not in the Statute of 43 Elizabeth, comes within the equity of that statute. . . An institution is both benevolent and charitable which educates men in the diseases of the domestic animals, and the proper means of dealing with them, even if it also inculcates the duty of kindness and humanity to them, and provides appropriate means of discharging it.[1]

Common carriers, by land or water, from one State to another, may not confine cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals, for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, without unloading them for rest, water, and feeding, for at least five consecutive hours, unless prevented from unloading by storm or other accidental cause. The hours in transit on connecting roads are to be taken into the account. If such unloaded animals are not properly fed and watered by their owner, the transporter shall care for them, and have a lien for the service. Willful failure to comply with the foregoing provisions exposes the offender to a penalty of $100 to $500. An exception is made in favor of cars and boats in which the animals have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest. Penalties are recoverable by civil action in the name of the United States, in the circuit or district court held within the district where the violation was committed, or the person or corporation resides or carries on business.[2]

The lien is enforceable by petition filed in the district court within the district where it attached, or the owner or custodian of the property resides. The court is to issue process suited to the case for the collection of the debt, costs, penalties, and charges.[3]

CRUISE. Any voyage for a given purpose. Imports a definite place, as well as time of commencement and termination.[4]

CRY. See AUCTION; CRIER; PAIS.

CUCKING-STOOL. See SCOLD.

CUILIBET. See ARS, Cuilibet, etc.

CUJUS. See SOLUM, Cujus, etc.

CUL DE SAC. Fr. The bottom of a bag. A street open at one end; a blind alley.

CULPA. L. A fault; negligence; guilt. Lata culpa. Gross negligence. Levis culpa. Ordinary negligence. Levissima culpa. Slight negligence.[1] Compare DELICTUM; DOLUS.

Whence exculpatory, inculpatory, exculpation.

Culpabilis. Guilty. Non culpabilis. Not guilty.

Non culpabilis was abbreviated upon the minutes "non cul." To this plea the clerk, on behalf of the sovereign, replied that the prisoner was guilty, as he was ready to prove. The formula for this reply was cul. prit., i. e., culpabilis partus verificare.[2]

Whence "culprit." But that word may come from culped, which is from culpe, to charge with a crime;[3] or it may be a corruption of culpate, an accused person.[4]

The expression non cul et de hoc, still used in the records of a few criminal courts of general jurisdiction, is an abridgment of the sentence non culpabilis et de hoc se ponit supra Deum et patriam, not guilty and of this he puts himself upon God and his country. See ARRAIGN; CULPABLE.

CULPABLE. Censurable; criminal. See CULPA.

Applied to an omission to preserve the means of enforcing a right, "censurable" is more nearly an equivalent than "criminal."[5] See NEGLIGENCE, Culpable.

CULTIVATION. See AGRICULTURE; BETTERMENT; CROP; IMPROVE.

Being in a state of cultivation is the converse of being in a state of nature. Whenever lands have been wrought with a view to the production of a crop they must be considered as becoming and continuing in "a state of cultivation" until abandoned for every purpose of agriculture and designedly permitted to revert to a condition similar to the original one.[6]

"Fit for cultivation" refers to that condition of soil which will enable a farmer, with a reasonable amount of skill, to raise regularly and annually by tillage grain or other staple crops.[7]

CULVERT. A water-way or passage, whether of wood or stone, square or arched.[8]

CUM. L. With, together with; along with; in connection with; wholly.

In compounding words, the m remains before b, p, m; assimilates before l, n, r; changes into n before other consonants; is rejected before a vowel or h.

---

[1] Massachusetts Society, &c. v. Boston, 142 Mass. 27-28 (1886), Devens, J.

[2] Act 3 March, 1873: R. S. §§ 4386-89.

[3] Act 27 Feb. 1877: R. S. § 4390.

[4] [The Brutus, 2 Gall. 526, 539, 268 (1815); Marsh. Ins. 196, 199, 520.

[1] Jones, Bailm. 8; Story, Bailm. § 18; 8 Barb. 378; 34 La. An. 1129.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 339; 6 Cal. 282; 2 Sumn. 67.

[3] Webster's Dict.

[4] Skeat's Etym. Dict.

[5] Waltham Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen, 122 (1864).

[6] Johnson v. Perley, 2 N. H. 57 (1819).

[7] Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 581 (1868); 13 Ired. L. 37; 29 Kan. 596.

[8] Ourler v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 60 Md. 367 (1883).

Designates a being or bringing together of several objects; also, completeness, perfection of an act,— intensifies the signification of the simple word. See CON, 1.

Cum copula. With connection; with intercourse.

A promise to marry in the future, cum copula, did not, at common law, constitute a valid marriage; otherwise, for some purposes, by the canon law.[1]

Cum onere. With the charge or incumbrance. See further ONUS, Cum, etc.

Cum testamento annexo. With the will attached. See ADMINISTER, 4.

CUMULATIVE.[2] More of the same kind; superadded to other of the same nature; additional.

As, a cumulative or cumulative — evidence or testimony, legacy, offense, remedy, sentence or judgment, statute, voting, qq. v.

CUR. See CURIA.

CURABLE. See CURE, 2.

CURATOR. L. A guardian; a committee, q. v.

The guardian of the estate of a ward, as distinguished from the guardian of his person.[3]

Curator ad hoc. A guardian for this — special purpose.

Curator ad litem. A guardian for the suit; a guardian ad litem, q. v.

CURE.[4] 1. In the original sense of taking care or charge of, instead of the later sense of healing, is used in the sea-law which requires that a seaman is to be "cured" at the expense of the ship of sickness or injury sustained in the ship's service, to the end of the voyage.[5]

The obligation to "cure," as the old cases say, or to give "medical treatment," as the later cases term it, continues only to the end of the particular voyage.[6]

2. To remedy, correct, remove.

Want of authority in an agent is cured by the principal when he adopts the agent's act.

A general appearance cures antecedent irregularity of process, a defective service, etc.[7]

Formal defects in pleading are cured by pleading over without demurrer.[1]

A verdict cures a defective statement of a title or cause of action.[2] See AID, 2; BAD, 2; CERTAINTY.

Curable. Admitting of remedy or rectification. Incurable. Said of ambiguities, defects in pleading, defects in powers, etc.

Curative. Designed to correct an error or defect.

As, an act passed to relieve from some hardship or inconvenience caused by the careless use of language in a former statute.

An invalid public contract may be confirmed and made binding by curative statutes.[3]

CURED-MEAT. Was given the meaning at the residence (Memphis, Tenn.) of a purchaser, when that differed from the meaning at the residence (Atchison, Kan.) of the seller.[4]

CURIA. L. A court of justice; a court, or the court. Compare FORUM.

Curia advisari vult. The court desires to deliberate — over the matter: the court reserves its decision, for the present. Abbreviated cur. ad. vult., and c. a. v.

Originally, an entry upon the record of a cause, just argued, indicating that a decision would be rendered by and by. Later, it denoted a suspension of judgment until the court could examine the matter fully.

Curia regis. The king's court.

Per curiam. By the court.

A formula by which a judge may express the assent of the court to a thing asked, or by which a court may make any order whatever.

Prefixed to a decision, may imply that the law in the case is too well settled to require either argument or elucidation.[5]

Rectus in curia. Right (unimpeached) in court, or before a court.

The condition of a person who stands before a court with no charge of misconduct preferred against him, or cleared or purged of a charge.

See under ACTUS; AMICUS; CURSUS.

CURRENT.[6] 1. Now running or passing; now present; now being created or received; existing in present time.

As, a current — account, balance, earnings, motion, value, year, qq. v.

---

[1] Cheney v. Arnold, 15 N. Y. 345 (1857); 2 Para. Contr. 79.

[2] L. cumulus, a heap.

[3] Duncan v. Crook, 49 Mo. 117 (1871); 21 Pa. 333; 1 Bl. Com. 460.

[4] L. cura, care, charge.

[5] See Reed v. Canfield, 1 Sumn. 202 (1833); The City of Alexandria, 17 F. R. 898-95 (1883), cases.

[6] The John B. Lyon, 33 F. R. 187 (1887), Blodgett, J.

[7] Creighton v. Kerr, 20 Wall. 12 (1873).

[1] United States v. Noelke, 17 Blatch. 559, 561 (1880).

[2] Lincoln Township v. Cambria Iron Co., 103 U. S. 415 (1880); 7 How. 721; 53 Ind. 283; 87 id. 37; 3 Monta. 452.

[3] Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 147 (1874), cases; Ritchie v. Franklin County, 23 id. 75 (1874).

[4] Treadwell v. Anglo-American Packing Co., 13 F. R. 22 (1882). And see Featherston v. Rounsaville, 73 Ga. 617 (1884).

[5] Letzkus v. Butler, 69 Pa. 281 (1871).

[6] L. currere, to run, flow, move.

2. Circulating as money; received as money; lawful as money.

Current funds. Current money; par funds, or money circulating without any discount.

A bill of exchange drawn for "current funds" entitles the holder to coin or its equivalent.[1]

Gold, silver, or anything equivalent thereto, and convertible at pleasure into the same.[2]

"In current funds," as used in a bank-check, means in money; and the insertion of the words does not impair negotiability.[3]

Commencing with the first issue in this country of notes declared to have the quality of legal tender, it has been a common practice for makers of commercial bills, checks, and notes, to indicate whether the same are to be paid in gold or silver, or in such notes; and the term "current funds" has been used to designate any of these, all being current and declared to be legal tender. It was intended to cover whatever was receivable and current by law as money, whether in the form of notes or coin.[3]

Current money. Money received as such in common business transactions; the common medium in barter and exchange.[4]

Current notes. Bank-notes convertible into specie, or redeemable in gold, silver, or an equivalent.[5]

Current price or value. See VALUE.

Currency. Primarily, a passing or flowing — something which passes from hand to hand. In monetary affairs, not necessarily cash; it is equally applicable to anything used as a circulating medium, and generally accepted as a representative of values of property.[6]

Bank-notes, or other paper money, issued by authority, and continually passing, as and for coin.[7]

The money which passes at a fixed value, from hand to hand; money which is authorized by law.[8]

Includes both coined and paper money; not all bank-notes in circulation, for all such are not necessarily money. Whatever is at a discount is not money nor currency. National bank-notes, although not legal tender, are as much currency as treasury notes, which are legal tender. Therefore, a certificate of deposit promising repayment "in currency" may be deemed negotiable,— it is payable in money.[1]

In an indictment, the words "of the currency current" are equivalent to "current as money."[2] See PAR, 2; TENDER, 2, Legal.

CURSE. See BLASPHEMY.

CURSUS. L. A running: way, mode, practice. See DE, Cursu.

Cursus curiæ lex curiæ. The practice of a court is the law of the court.

Established, inveterate practice will be adhered to: it is supposed to be based upon principles of justice and public convenience. But a court of error does not generally notice the practice of another court. In short, every court, especially every court of equity, makes its own practice.[3] Compare ERROR, 1, Communis.

CURTESY.[4] 1. Where a man marries a woman seized of an estate of an inheritance (that is, of land and tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail), and has by her issue, born alive, capable of inheriting the estate, on her death he holds the land for life as tenant by the curtesy of England.[5]

An estate by the curtesy is the interest to which the husband is entitled upon the death of the wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seized in possession, in fee-simple or in tail, during their coverture, provided they had lawful issue born alive which might by possibility inherit the estate as heir to the wife.[6]

When a man marries a woman, seized at any time during the coverture of an estate of inheritance, in severalty, in coparcenary, or in common, and has issue by her, born alive, and which might by possibility inherit the same estate as heir to the wife, and the wife dies in the life-time of the husband, he holds the land during his life "by the curtesy of England."[7]

---

[1] Galena Ins. Co. v. Kupfer, 28 Ill. 335 (1862).

[2] [Lacy v. Holbrook, 4 Ala. 90 (1842); 9 id. 239; 34 Ill. 292; 9 Ind. 135; 47 Iowa, 672; 44 Pa. 457.

[3] Bull v. First Nat. Bank of Kasson, 123 U. S. 112 (1887), Field, J.

[4] [Stalworth v. Blum, 41 Ala. 321 (1867); 3 T. B. Mon. 166; 21 La. An. 624; 5 Lea, 96; 1 Dall. 124; 9 Mo. 697.

[5] Pierson v. Wallace, 7 Ark. 298 (1847); Fleming v. Nall, 1 Tex. 247 (1846); Moore v. Gooch, 6 Heisk. 105 (1871); 64 N. C. 381; 5 Cow. 187; 5 Humph. 485.

[6] [Chicago Fire, &c. Ins. Co. v. Keiron, 27 Ill. 507 (1862), Caton, C. J.

[7] [Same v. Same, ib. 506, Walker, J.: Wharton.

[8] Butler v. Paine, 8 Minn. 329 (1863): Bouvier.

[1] Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 560-61 (1879), cases, Ryan, C. J. See also 30 Ill. 399; 32 id. 77; 35 id. 163; 14 Mich. 379; 27 id. 197; 61 N. C. 28; 1 Ohio, 115, 119.

[2] Commonwealth v. Griffiths, 126 Mass. 252 (1879).

[3] Broom, Max. 133, 135; 7 Ct. Cl. 332.

[4] L. curialitas, attendance upon the lord's court or curtis; i. e., being his vassal or tenant. Or, "by the courts of England,"— 2 Bl. Com. 126. From F. courtesie, favor (to the husband),— 28 Barb. 345.

[5] [2 Bl. Com. 126.

[6] Westcott v. Miller, 42 Wis. 465 (1877), Cole, J.

[7] Billings v. Baker, 28 Barb. 344 (1859); 4 Kent, 27. See also 7 How. 54; 1 Sumn. 271; 1 McLean, 478; 2

Under old common law, as soon as a child was born the father began to have a permanent interest in the lands, he became one of the pares curtis, did homage to the lord, and was called tenant by the curtesy "initiate." He could do many acts to charge the land, but his estate was not "consummate" till the death of the wife.[1]

The requisites are: a legal marriage; an actual seisin or possession in the wife — wherefore no curtesy can be had in a remainder or a reversion; issue born alive, during the life of the mother, capable of inheriting the estate; and, the death of the wife.[1]

Adopted as a common-law estate in all of the older States, though somewhat modified in some of them. The right is expressly created by statute in Delaware, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wisconsin. In Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia it is recognized by the courts as an existing estate. In California it is not allowed; realty being there held in common, and the survivor taking one-half in severalty. In Georgia the husband takes an absolute estate in all the property. In Kansas he takes one-half absolutely, upon her decease without a will; and if without issue, he takes all absolutely. In Louisiana their relation to their property does not admit of curtesy. In Nebraska the estate is given, unless she had issue by a former husband who would take the estate. In New York it would seem that she may defeat a right by conveyance. In Ohio, Oregon, and Pennsylvania issue is not necessary. In South Carolina he takes his share in fee. In Texas any property is the common property of both. In Dakota, Indiana, Michigan, and Nevada the estate seems to be abolished.

In many of the States curtesy is given, by statute, in equitable estates of which the wife is seized. The right extends to equities of redemption, contingent uses, and moneys directed to be laid out in lands for the benefit of the wife.[2]

In the absence of fraud, a husband who is embarrassed may convey his curtesy to a trustee for the benefit of his wife and children, for a consideration valuable in equity.[3] Compare DOWER.

2. A voluntary act of kindness.

An act of kindness toward another person, of the free will of the doer, without previous request or promise of reward, has sometimes been called a "voluntary curtesy."

From such act the law implies no promise for remuneration. If it were otherwise, one man might impose a legal obligation upon another against his will. Hence the phrases "a voluntary curtesy will not support an assumpsit," but that "a curtesy moved by a previous request will."[4] See PROTEST, 2.

MacA. 63; 15 Ark. 483; 43 Miss. 633; 8 Neb. 525; 14 S. C. 907; 8 Baxt. 361; 6 Mo. Ap. 416, 549.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 127.

[2] See 1 Washburn, Real Prop., 4 ed., 164, 166 (1876).

[3] Hitz v. Nat. Metropolitan Bank, 111 U. S. 722 (1884).

[4] See Lampleigh v. Brathwait, 1 Sm. L. C. *222; Holthouse.

CURTILAGE. 1. Originally, the land with the castle and out-houses, inclosed often with high walls, where the old barons sometimes held court in the open air. Whence court-yard.[1]

2. The court-yard in the front or rear of a house, or at its side; any piece of ground lying near, inclosed, used with, and necessary for the convenient occupation of the house.[2]

A fence or inclosure of a small piece of land around a dwelling-house, usually including the buildings occupied in connection with the dwelling-house, the inclosure consisting either of a separate fence or partly of a fence and partly of the exterior of buildings so within this inclosure.[3]

If a barn, stable, or warehouse be parcel of the mansion-house, and within the same common fence, though not under the same roof nor contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein; for the capital house protects and privileges all its branches and appurtenances, if within the same curtilage or homestall.[4]

It is perhaps unfortunate that this term, which is found in English statutes, and which is descriptive of the common arrangement of dwellings, and the yards surrounding them, in England, should have been perpetuated in our statutes. It is not strictly applicable to the common disposition of inclosures and buildings constituting the homestead of the inhabitants of this country. In England dwellings and out-houses of all kinds are usually surrounded by a fence or stone-wall, inclosing a small piece of land embracing the yards and out-buildings near the house constituting what is called the court. Such precautionary arrangements have not been necessary in this country.[5]

Nothing is implied as to the size of the parcel of land.[6]

In Michigan, includes more than an inclosure near the house.[6]

In § 4347, code of Alabama, defining arson in the second degree, includes the yard or space near a dwelling-house, within the same inclosure, and used in connection with it by the household; as, a barn which opens into such yard, in part separating it from another inclosure.[7]

Under a mechanics' lien law, a jury may determine the necessary curtilage to which a lien extends.[8]

[1] Coddington v. Dry Dock Co., 31 N. J. L. 485 (1863).

[2] [People v. Gedney, 10 Hun, 154 (1877): Bac. Abr.

[3] Commonwealth v. Barney, 10 Cush. 481, 483 (1852), Dewey, J. Approved, 140 Mass. 280.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 225; 1 Hale, P. C. 558; 61 Ala. 58; 31 Me. 523.

[5] People v. Taylor, 2 Mich. 251 (1851).

[6] Edwards v. Derrickson, 28 N. J. L. 45 (1859); Same v. Same, 29 id. 474 (1861).

[7] Washington v. State, 82 Ala. 32 (1886).

[8] Keppel v. Jackson, 3 W. & S. 330 (1842); 5 Rawle, 291.

CURVES. See RAILROAD.

CUSTODIA. L. Keeping, custody; literally, watch, guard, care.

In custodia legis. In the custody of the law. See CUSTODY.

CUSTODY. See CUSTODIA. 1. Care, possession, charge: as, the custody of a child, of a lunatic, of a ward;[1] the custody of a deposit, or of funds.

Custody of property, as contradistinguished from legal possession, is that charge to keep and care for the owner, subject to his direction, and without any adverse right, which every servant possesses with regard to goods confided to his care.[2]

2. Detention by lawful authority.

Custody of the law. Property lawfully taken by virtue of legal process is in the custody of the law.[3]

In this category are goods lawfully levied upon by a marshal, sheriff, or constable; goods impounded;[4] property in the hands of a receiver, q. v.; money paid into court.

Such property, for the time being, is not liable to be again seized in execution by the officer of any other court.[5]

But the court of a State cannot by this device prevent the collection of Federal taxes.[6]

3. A person under lawful arrest is said to be in custody or in the custody of the law. See RESCUE.

A sentence that a prisoner "be in custody till his sentence is complied with," imports actual imprisonment.[7]

CUSTOM.[8] That length of usage which has become law; a usage which has acquired the force of law. Often used synonymously with "usage."[9]

A law established by long usage. A universal custom becomes common law.[10]

"The law or rule which is not written, and which men have used for a long time, supporting themselves by it in the things and reasons with respect to which they have exercised it."[1]

"Usage," strictly speaking, is the evidence of a "custom."[2]

"Custom" is the making of a law; "prescription," the making of a right.[3]

Customary. Originating in long usage: as, customary incidents or rights; customary dispatch, q. v.; customary estate, freehold,[4] service,[5] tenant;[4] customary law: common law.

General customs. The universal rule of the whole kingdom, forming the common law, in its stricter and more usual signification. Particular customs. Such as, for the most part, affect only the inhabitants of particular districts;[6] a local or special custom.

A general custom is a general law.[7]

"General" customs are such as prevail throughout a country and become the law of the country. "Particular" customs are such as prevail in some county, city, town, or other place.[8]

The chief corner-stone of the laws of England is general immemorial custom, or common law, from time to time declared in the decisions of the courts of justice; which decisions are preserved among the public records, explained in the reports, and digested for general use by the sages of the law. . . Our practice is to make custom of equal authority with the written law,— when it is not contradicted by that law. "For, where is the difference, whether the people declare their assent to a law by suffrage, or by a uniform course of acting accordingly?" . . It is one of the marks of English liberty that our common law depends upon custom; which carries this internal evidence of freedom along with it, that it probably was introduced by the voluntary consent of the people.[9] See LAW, Common.

Particular customs are doubtless the remains of that multitude of local customs out of which the common law was collected, at first by Alfred. For reasons that have been long forgotten, particular counties, cities, towns, and manors were indulged with the privilege of abiding by their own customs. Such, for example, are the customs of London. These particular customs must be proved to exist, and appear to be: legal, that is, be immemorial; continued — the right uninterrupted; peaceable — acquiesced in; reason-

---

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 308; 3 id. 427.

[2] [People v. Burr, 41 How. Pr. 296 (1871).

[3] [Gilman v. Williams, 7 Wis. *334 (1859).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 12, 146.

[5] Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 341 (1865), cases.

[6] Keely v. Sanders, 99 U. S. 442 (1878).

[7] Smith v. Commonwealth, 59 Pa. 324 (1868).

[8] F. custume: L. L. costuma: con, together, very; suere, to make one's own — have it one's own way,— Skeat. Compare CUSTOMS; CONSUETUDO.

[9] Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 471 (1872), Folger, J.; Hursh v. North, 40 Pa. 243 (1861); Bishop, Contr. § 444.

[10] Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. 349 (1832), Savage, C. J.

[1] Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. *446 (1838).

[2] See 3 Pars. Contr. 239.

[3] Lawson, Usages & Customs, 15, n. 2.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 149.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 234.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 67.

[7] United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 715 (1832).

[8] Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. 95 (1843); 12 Pet. *446.

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 73-74.

able — no sufficient legal reason be assignable against the custom; certain — ascertained or ascertainable; compulsory — not left to one's option, to use or not to use; and consistent — with each other, if not, then they could never have been assented to. Customs in derogation of the common law are strictly construed.[1]

In few States do any purely local customs, such as have just been explained, exist. And such customs are to be carefully distinguished from "usages of trade or business." These are everywhere allowed their just influence and operation. A usage of trade and business clearly proved to exist, to be ancient, notorious, reasonable, and consistent with law, is permitted to explain the meaning of ambiguous words in written contracts, and to control the mode and extent of their rights where the parties have been silent. But it is never admitted against the expressed agreement of the parties, nor in violation of any statute or well-established rule of law. The current of decisions of late years has been to restrain and limit the allowance and influence of special usages.[2]

The courts take judicial notice of general customs. Particular or special customs are to be alleged and proved.[3]

Evidence of a temporary custom of which the party to be affected has no knowledge is not admissible against him.[4]

Where the object is to interpret a contract it is not necessary to prove all the elements of a custom necessary to make a law.[5]

To establish the validity of a custom the usage must have existed so long as to become generally known, and it must be clearly and distinctly proved. The concurrent testimony of a large number of witnesses increases the probability of its being generally known. This is illustrated in the case of a custom which authorizes the captain of a steamboat to insure it for the benefit of the owner without his express direction.[6]

Evidence of a custom or usage of trade is resorted to in order to ascertain and explain the meaning and intention of the parties to a contract: on the theory that they knew of its existence and contracted with reference to it. It is never received if it is inconsistent with the contract, if it contradicts or varies directly or by necessary implication express stipulations, if it would subvert a settled rule of law, or if there is no contract in reality.[7] See RINGING UP.

The uncontradicted testimony of one witness may be sufficient to establish a custom.[1]

Customary rights and incidents are such as universally attach to the subject-matter of a contract in the place where the contract is made. These also are impliedly annexed to the terms of a contract unless expressly excluded.[2] See USE, 2, Usage; USUS, Malus usus, etc.

Custom of merchants. A system of customs, originating among merchants, and allowed for the benefit of trade as part of the common law.

Of such are certain rules relating to bills of exchange (as, that of allowing days of grace), to mercantile contracts, to the sale, purchase, and barter of goods, to freight, insurance, shipping, partnerships.[3] Constitutes the lex mercatoria or law merchant. See MERCHANT, LAW.

Customs of London. Particular customs relating chiefly to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, and local government.

Good only by special usage; and tried by the certificate of the mayor and alderman, by the mouth of their recorder.[4]

CUSTOMERS. See BOYCOTTING; GOOD WILL.

CUSTOMS. Taxes upon goods or merchandise imported or exported.[5]

The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or imported.[6]

They are the inheritance of the king from almost immemorial time. Denominated, in ancient records, costuma, from the French coustom or coutom, toll or tribute; which in turn is from coust, price, charge, cost.[6]

Customs were exactions maintained by the crown or lords upon the grounds of immemorial usage. In time, only duties upon merchandise, and as regulated by law, remained.

Common phrases are: customs appraiser, customs collector, customs commissioner, customs laws. See DUTIES, 2; REFUNDS; SMUGGLE.

CUT. 1. A wound made with an instrument having an edge.[7] See BATTERY; MAYHEM; STAB; WOUND.

2. An impression made upon paper or cloth from an engraved block or plate. See COPYRIGHT.

Compare COUPON; TAIL. See TIMBER; WASTE.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 76-79; Lindsay v. Cusimano, 12 F. R. 506 (1882); 110 U. S. 499.

[2] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 78; Coxe v. Heisley, 19 Pa. 246-48 (1852), cases, Black, C. J.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 5; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 296, 331.

[4] Wootters v. Kauffman, 67 Tex. 493 (1887), cases.

[5] Carter v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 77 Pa. 290 (1875); Morningstar v. Cunningham, 110 Ind. 333-35 (1886), cases; 1 Cooley, Bl. Com. 76, note.

[6] Adams v. Pittsburgh Ins. Co., 95 Pa. 355-56 (1880), cases.

[7] Bliven v. Screw Company, 23 How. 431 (1859); Insurance Companies v. Wright, 1 Wall. 470-72 (1863); Thompson v. Riggs, 5 id. 679 (1866); Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 id. 390 (1870); Robinson v. United States, 13 id. 365 (1871); Tilley v. County of Cook, 103 U. S. 162 (1880), cases; The Dora Mathews, 31 F. R. 620 (1887), cases.

[1] Wootters v. Kauffman, ante.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 405; 1 Whart. Ev. § 969. See generally Wigglesworth v. Dallison, Dougl. 190 (1779); Sm. L. C., 8 ed., vol. I, pt. II, 928-65, cases.

[3] 2 Pars. Contr. 539; 1 Bl. Com. 75.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 75, 76; 3 id. 334.

[5] See 1 Story, Const. § 949.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 313-14, note (v).

[7] State v. Patza, 3 La. An. 514 (1848), cases.

CUTLERY. A generic term, often used to describe razors, scissors, and shears, as well as knives for table, pocket, and other uses.[1]

"Sheep shears" are included within the word, as used in Schedule C of the Tariff Act of March 3, 1883.[1]

The name of an imported article is not the sole guide by which to classify it for duty; its uses, especially when new and a substitute for other articles, should be considered. Thus "hair clippers" should be rated as "cutlery."[2] See DUTIES.

CY PRES.[3] As near; as near as; as near as can be.

The rule of construction that the intention of a testator, who seeks to create a charity, is to be given effect as far as is consistent with the rules of law[4] is known as the cy près doctrine.

Refers to the judicial power of substituting a charity which approaches another, the original, charity, in nature and character.[5]

Where the particular intention cannot be given effect, the words will be construed so as to give effect to the general intention evinced, and that as near to the particular intention as the law permits.

The doctrine modifies the strictness of the common law, as to a condition precedent to the enjoyment of a personal legacy. When a literal compliance with the condition becomes impossible from unavoidable circumstances, and without default in the legatee, it is sufficient that the condition is complied with as near as it practically can be.[6]

Borrowed from the Roman law, by which donations for public purposes were applied, when illegal cy près, to other and legal purposes.[7] Or, originated in the indulgence shown to the ignorance of testators who devised to the unborn son of an unborn son.[8]

A leading and illustrative case is that of Jackson v. Phillips,[9] decided in Massachusetts in 1867. The will created a trust "for the preparation and circulation of books and newspapers, the delivery of speeches, lectures, and such other means as in their [the trustees'] judgment will create a public sentiment that will put an end to negro slavery in this country," and "for the benefit of fugitive slaves escaping from the slave-holding States." While litigation upon the will was in progress, the Thirteenth Amendment, abolishing slavery, was adopted (1865); and the fund in question was ultimately applied to the New England Branch of the American Freedman's Union Commission.

The general doctrine has been approved in all of the New England States except Connecticut, in Illinois, and in Mississippi. In some States the doctrine has not been decided; in Pennsylvania it obtains where a designated class of beneficiaries become extinct;[1] in Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, it seems to be repudiated.[2, 3]

The Supreme Court of the United States, in its latest decisions, favors the doctrine.[3] See CHARITY, 2.

D.

D. 1. As an abbreviation may signify, in addition to the words noted below, dictionary, dictum, digest, division.

2. In the old action of ejectment stood for demissione, by demise, q. v.

3. In the apportionment of jurisdiction to the United States courts is used for "District:" as, E. D., M. D., N. D., S. D., and W. D.,—eastern, middle, northern, southern, and western district.

D. B. E. De bene esse, conditionally. See DE, Bene, etc.

D. B. N. De bonis non, of effects unadministered. See ADMINISTER, 4.

D. C. District court; District of Columbia.

D. C. L. Doctor of the civil law. See DOCTOR.

D. J. District judge.

D. P. Domus procerum, House of Lords.

D. R. Declaration of Rights.

D. S. Deputy sheriff.

D. S. B. Debitum sine brevi, debt without a writ. See DEBET, Debitum, etc.

DAILY. See DAY.

DAKOTA. See TERRITORY, 2.

DAM. The work or structure raised to obstruct the flow of water in a stream; also,

[1] Simmons Hardware Co. v. Lancaster, 31 F. R. 445 (1887).

[2] Koch v. Seeberger, 30 F. R. 424 (1887).

[3] Cy prés; pronounced, ci-prā'. Law Fr. cy, contracted from icy, now ici, here.

[4] See Coster v. Lorillard, 14 Wend. 308 (1835), Savage, C. J.

[5] [4 Kent, 508 (b) 1; 2 id. 288 (a).

[6] [1 Story, Eq. § 291. See Re Brown's Will, 18 Ch. Div. 65 (1881).

[7] See 1 Story, Eq. § 1169.

[8] Williams, Real Prop. 264.

[9] 14 Allen, 539, 549, 574-96, cases, Gray, J.

[1] Act 26 May, 1876: P. L. 211.

[2] See Bispham, Eq. § 130 (1882); 1 Col. Law T. 8-14 (1887), cases.

[3] See Loring v. Marsh, 6 Wall. 337 (1867); Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 465 (1860); Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 id. 369 (1854); Vidal v. Girard, 2 id. 127 (1844); Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 588 (1867).

See generally 38 Ala. 305; 22 Conn. 54; 30 id. 113; 4 Ga. 404; 25 id. 420; 16 Ill. 231; 35 Ind. 198; 46 id. 172; 18 B. Mon. 635; 49 Me. 302; 50 Mo. 167; 33 N. H. 296; 20 N. J. E. 522; 23 N. Y. 308; 34 id. 584; 17 S. & R. 88; 45 Pa. 27; 63 id. 465; 4 R. I. 439; 7 id. 252; 3 S. C. 509; 27 Tex. 173; 2 W. Va. 310.

the pond of water created by the obstruction.[1] See AQUA, Currit, etc.; MILL, 1; NAVIGABLE; RIPARIAN; TAKE, 8.

DAMAGE. Detriment; deprivation; injury; loss.

Etymologically, a thing taken away; the lost thing, which a party is entitled to have restored, that he may be made whole again.[2] See DAMNUM; LOSS.

Loss caused by malice or negligence in another person, or from inevitable accident. Interchanged with "injury," q. v.

Referring to a collision between vessels, the injury directly and necessarily resulting from the collision.[3]

When a bill of lading recites that the goods are received in good order and that the carrier will "not be accountable for weight, contents, packing, and damage," "damage" refers to injuries to the goods at the time of receipt.[4]

Damage-feasant.[5] Doing damage.

Said of animals trespassing upon land. To insure identification, the injured person may distrain them.[6]

A person is not justified in killing animals or fowls found trespassing upon his land. He should impound them, or sue for the damage they do. They are valuable property, the destruction of which is not necessary to the protection of his rights. A notice of an intention to kill the animals or fowls, if not shut up, is a threat to do an illegal act.[7]

DAMAGES. The compensation which the law will award for an injury done.[8]

A species of property given to a man by a jury as a compensation and satisfaction for some injury sustained.[9]

The plaintiff has no certain demand till after verdict; but when the jury has assessed his damages and judgment is given thereon, he instantly acquires, and the defendant loses, a right to that specific sum. . . The verdict and judgment fix and ascertain the plaintiff's inchoate title; they do not give, they define, his right.[9]

The recompense that is given by a jury to the plaintiff for the wrong the defendant hath done unto him.[10]

A compensation, recompense, or satisfaction to the plaintiff for an injury actually received by him from the defendant.[1]

The legal injury is the standard by which the compensation is to be measured: the injured party is to be placed, as near as may be, in the situation he would have occupied if the wrong had not been committed.[2]

When it is said that a person is or will be responsible (or be required to respond) or liable or answerable "in damages," the meaning is, he may or will be required by law to furnish a money equivalent for the injury he has done.

Actual or single damages. Compensation for the real loss or injury. Increased, double, or treble damages. Single damages, as found by a jury, enhanced by the court.[3]

The statutes of nearly every State provide for the increase of damages where the injury complained of results from neglect of duties imposed for the better security of life and property, and make that increase, in some cases, even quadruple the actual damages. Experience favors this legislation as the most efficient mode of preventing, with the least inconvenience, the commission of injuries. The decisions of the highest courts have affirmed the validity of such legislation. The injury actually received is often so small that in many cases no effort would be made by the sufferer to obtain redress, if the private injury were not supported by the imposition of punitive damages.[4] See FENCE.

Civil damages. Injuries sustained either to one's rights as a citizen of a State and of the United States, or else to his relative rights as a member of a family, and aside from any view of the act complained of as an offense to the public and punishable in the criminal tribunals.

Civil Damage Laws. (1) Statutes which confer upon colored persons individual rights of action in the civil courts for any discrimination against them and in favor of white persons on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. See RIGHT, Civil Rights Act.

(2) Statutes which confer a right of action in a civil court upon the wife, family, or a near

[1] [Colwell v. Water Power Co., 19 N. J. E. 248 (1868).

[2] [Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342 (1873).

[3] Memphis, &c. Packet Co. v. Gaeger Transportation Co., 10 F. R. 396 (1882).

[4] The Tommy, 16 F. R. 601, 608 (1883).

[5] Făz'-ant.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 6-7; 50 Mich. 32.

[7] Clark v. Keliher, 107 Mass. 409 (1871); Johnson v. Patterson, 14 Conn. 3-12 (1840), cases; Matthews v. Fiestel, 2 E. D. S. 90 (N. Y., 1853).

[8] Kansas City, &c. R. Co. v. Hicks, 30 Kan. 393 (1883), Brewer, J.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 438; 3 id. 158.

[10] Coke, Litt. 257 a: Rosenfield v. Express Co., 1 Woods, 137 (1871); 17 N. J. L. 482.

[1] 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253; Dow v. Humbert, 91 U. S. 299 (1875), Miller, J. See also Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 57 (1876); Tetzner v. Naughton, 18 Bradw. 153 (1882); Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 23 (1878); 9 Heisk. 850; 26 Ga. 271; 16 Johns. 143; 55 Vt. 164.

[2] Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 99 (1867), Swayne, J.

[3] See Berry v. Fletcher, 1 Dill. 71 (1870), Dillon, Circ. J.; Lobdell v. New Bedford, 1 Mass. 153 (1804); Welsh v. Anthony, 16 Pa. 256 (1851); 10 Oreg. 342.

[4] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512 (1885), Field, J.

relative of a person who lost his life or who has sustained injuries in consequence of intoxicating liquor having been sold or given to him in violation of law.[1]

The Massachusetts statute contemplates that the habitual drunkenness of a husband or wife, parent or child, is a substantial injury to those bound together in domestic relations, and gives the right to recover damages in the nature of a penalty, not only for any injury to the person or property, but for the shame and disgrace brought upon them. Hence, the right of a son to recover damages does not depend upon the question whether he is dependent upon the father for support or not, but solely upon the relation.[2] See POLICY, 1, Public.

Compensatory damages. Such damages as measure the actual loss, and are allowed as amends therefor. Exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages. Such damages as are in excess of the actual loss, and allowed, in theory, where a tort is aggravated by evil motive — actual malice, deliberate violence or oppression, or fraud.

Exemplary damages are sometimes called "smart money."[3]

All rules of damages are referred to compensation or punishment. Compensation is to make the injured party whole; exemplary damages are something beyond this, and are inflicted with a view to punishing the defendant.[4]

It is undoubtedly true that the allowance of any thing more than an adequate pecuniary indemnity for a wrong suffered is a departure from the principle upon which damages in civil suits are awarded. But although, as a rule, the plaintiff recovers merely such indemnity, yet the doctrine is too well settled now to be shaken that exemplary damages may in certain cases be assessed. As the question of intention is always material in an action of tort, and as the circumstances which characterize the transaction are, therefore, proper to be weighed by the jury in fixing the compensation of the injured party, it may well be considered whether the doctrine of exemplary damages cannot be reconciled with the idea that compensation alone is the true measure of redress. But jurists have chosen to place the doctrine on the ground, not that the sufferer is to be recompensed, but that the offender is to be punished; and, although some text-writers and courts have questioned its soundness, it has been accepted as the rule in England and in most of the States of this country. It has also received the sanction of the Supreme Court. Discussed and recognized in Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 371 (1851), it was more accurately stated in The Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 213 (1858): Mr. Justice Campbell, who delivered the opinion of the court, saying — "whenever the injury complained of has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly, and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not limited to the ascertainment of a simple compensation for the wrong committed against the aggrieved person. The malice spoken of in this rule is not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act: the word implies that the wrong complained of was conceived in the spirit of mischief, or criminal indifference to civil obligations." Although this rule was announced in an action for libel it is equally applicable to suits for personal injuries received from the negligence of others. Redress commensurate with such injuries should be afforded. In ascertaining its extent the jury may consider all the facts which relate to the wrongful act of the defendant, and its consequences to the plaintiff; but they are not at liberty to go further, unless it was done willfully, or was the result of that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentional violation of them. In that case the jury are authorized, for the sake of public example, to give such additional damages as the circumstances require. The tort is aggravated by the evil motive, and on this rests the rule of exemplary damages.[1]

"Exemplary," "punitive," and "vindictive" damages are synonymous terms. In cases of personal torts, such as assault and battery, slander, libel, seduction, criminal conversation, malicious arrests and prosecutions, seizure of goods, where the element of fraud, malice, gross negligence, cruelty, oppression, brutality, or wantonness intervened, exemplary or punitive damages may be recovered. And, since what would be a severe verdict to one of limited means might be but a trifle to one of large means, and the reason of the rule fail, evidence of the defendant's ability to respond in damages may always be given in evidence.[2]

Constructive damages. Such damages as are imputed in law from an act of wrong to another person.

Contingent damages. Such damages as may or may not occur or be suffered; such

[1] See Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 511-30 (1878), cases; 84 Ill. 195; 57 Ind. 171; 48 Iowa, 588; 50 id. 34; 29 Kan. 109; 130 Mass. 366; 133 id. 54-55; 67 Me. 517; 41 Mich. 475; 20 Alb. Law J. 204-5 (1879), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 208-10 (1884), cases.

[2] Taylor v. Carroll, 145 Mass. 96 (1887).

[3] See 36 Conn. 185.

[4] Berry v. Fletcher, 1 Dill. 71 (1870).

[1] Milwaukee & St. Paul R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 492-93 (1875), Davis, J. See also Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 id. 521 (1885); Barry v. Edmunds, 116 id. 562-64 (1886), cases; Denver, &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 id. 609-10 (1887), cases; 1 Kan. Law J. 74, 118-22 (1886), cases; 3 id. 369-75 (1886).

[2] Brown v. Evans, 8 Saw. 490 (1883), cases, Sabin, J.: s. c., 17 F. R. 912. See also Nagle v. Mullison, 34 Pa. 53 (1859), cases; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Scurr, 59 Miss. 461 (1882); Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Guinan, 11 Lea, 103-5 (1883), cases; 71 Ala. 293; 50 Conn. 583; 76 Ill. 228; 92 id. 97; 63 Ind. 57; 89 Mich. 211; 36 Mo. 230; 58 N. H. 342; 56 id. 456; 35 N. Y. 25; 76 Va. 137; 44 Wis. 284; 1 Kent, 630; 2 Sedgw. Dam. 332; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253; 23 Alb. Law J. 44 (1881), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 143-46 (1884), cases.

as depend upon an event which may or may not happen.

Continuing damages. Damages incurred or suffered between two dates, as the beginning and the end of an act, and more or less separated in time. See CONTINUANDO.

Direct or immediate damages. Such damages as result from an act without the intervention of any intermediate controlling or self-efficient cause. Consequential or resulting, indirect or remote damages. Not produced without the concurrence of some other event attributable to the same origin or cause.

"Direct damages" include the damages for all such injurious consequences as proceed immediately from the cause which is the basis of the action, not merely for the consequences which invariably or necessarily result and which are always provable under the general allegation of damages in the declaration; but also other direct effects which have in the particular instance naturally ensued, and, to be recovered for, must be alleged specially. "Consequential damages" are those which the cause in question naturally but indirectly produced.[1]

All "remote damages" are consequential, but all "consequential damages" are by no means remote.[2]

Excessive damages. Damages awarded by a jury, so much larger in amount than what are justly due as to indicate that the jurors must have been influenced by partiality, prejudice, passion, or ignorance; also called inordinate and unreasonable damages. Inadequate damages. Damages which, for some such reason, are grossly less than the sum actually due; also called insufficient damages.

Verdicts for excessive or inadequate damages are set aside by the courts — the evidence of misapprehension or disregard of duty, on the part of the jury being clear beyond question.[3]

General damages. Such damages as by implication of law result from an act, and are awarded in the sound discretion of the jury, without evidence of particular loss.[4] Special damages. Losses which are the natual, but not the necessary, consequence of the act; a loss which is peculiar to the particular case.

Special damages must be particularly averred in the declaration, — for notice to the defendant, and thereby to prevent surprise at the trial. They result as the natural but not as the necessary consequence of the act complained of.[1] See PER, QUOD.

Liquidated damages. Damages definitely ascertained by agreement of the parties or by the judgment of a court. Unliquidated damages. Such damages as are not so determined.

Care must be taken to distinguish between cases of "penalties," strictly so called, and cases of "liquidated damages." The latter properly occur when the parties have agreed that, in case one party shall do a stipulated act or omit to do it, the other party shall receive a certain sum as the just, appropriate and conventional amount of the damages sustained by such act or omission. In cases of this sort courts of equity do not interfere to grant relief, but deem the parties entitled to fix their own measure of damages; provided always that the damages do not assume the character of extravagance, or of wanton and unreasonable disproportion to the nature or extent of the injury. On the other hand, those courts will not suffer their jurisdiction [to grant relief in the case of a penalty, if compensation can be made] to be evaded merely by the fact that the parties have called a sum damages which is, in fact and in intent, a penalty.[2] See further PENALTY.

Nominal damages. A trivial sum awarded where a mere breach of duty or infraction of right is shown, with no serious loss sustained. Substantial damages. A sum awarded as compensation for injury actually suffered; compensatory damages, q. v.

Whenever a right is invaded the law infers damage, and will award, pro forma, some small sum at least; as, one cent, six and one-quarter cents — half of an American shilling, etc.[3]

Failure to show actual damages, and the inference that none have been sustained, do not necessarily render a case trivial.[4]

A judgment for one cent, damages for trespass upon a mining claim, entered upon a special verdict for "nominal damages," if in other respects proper, will not be set aside for uncertainty in the verdict. "Nominal damages" refers to some trifling sum. In such a case the doctrine of de minimis should be invoked.[5]

Prospective damages. A loss which, in all probability, will be sustained by a plaint-

[1] 1 Sutherland, Damages, 19, 20; 50 N. H. 518.

[2] Sedgwick, Damages, 7 ed., 90, 101.

[3] Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 565 (1886); 2 Story, 670; Borland v. Barrett, 76 Va. 137 (1882); Phillips v. London, &c. R. Co., 5 Q. B. D. 78 (1879); 21 Alb. Law J. 62; 86 Ind. 389; 59 Tex. 250; 2 Sedgw. Dam. 334.

[4] See Smith v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 30 Minn. 172 (1883).

[1] See 1 Sutherl. Dam. 763; Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. 579 (1867); Mitchell v. Clark, 71 Cal. 167, 168 (1886); Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Rice, 36 Kan. 602-3 (1887); 38 Cal. 689; 43 Conn. 567; 84 Ill. 195; 121 Mass. 393; 78 Pa. 73; 1 Chitty, Pl. 395; 2 Sedgw. Dam. 606.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. § 1318. See 1 Am. Dec. 331; 30 Am. R. 6; 12 Am. Law Rev. 286-300 (1878), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 282-90, 302-5 (1884), cases.

[3] Mayne, Damages, 5; Sedgwick, Dam. 47.

[4] Paterson v. Dakin, 31 F. R. 685 (1887).

[5] Davidson v. Devine, 70 Cal. 519 (1886).

iff; indemnity for losses which will "almost to a certainty happen."[1] Termed speculative damages when the probability that a circumstance will exist as an element for compensation becomes conjectural.

The lack of certainty in the measurement of damages is no reason for refusing compensation. The law is full of instances where there is the same uncertainty, and where the jury determine what is reasonable compensation. All that is necessary is that there be certainty of damage as a direct result, and not a case of damnum absque injuria.[2]

On a contract to pay money at stipulated periods there may be as many suits as there are installments. On a tort there is but one action, and in that the party must have full justice: hence the courts anticipate a loss likely to occur in the future.[3]

When one party enters upon the performance of a contract, incurs expense therein, and, being willing to perform, is, without fault of his own, prevented by the other party, his loss will consist of two distinct items of damage: his outlay and expenses, less the value of materials on hand; and the profits he might have realized by performance. The first item he may recover in all cases; and the second (the profits), when they are the direct fruit of the contract, and not too remote or speculative. . . If the party injured by the stoppage of a contract elects to rescind the contract he cannot recover for outlay or for loss of profits; only for the value of services actually performed, as upon a quantum meruit.[4]

Damages for the breach of a contract are limited to such as are the natural and proximate consequences of the breach, such as may fairly be supposed to enter into the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract, and such as might naturally be expected to result from its violation.[5] See further under CONTRACT.

But if a party can save himself from loss arising from a breach of contract at trifling expense or with reasonable exertion, it is his duty to do so.[6] See INDEMNITY, 1.

The right to compensation for damages to the person or for personal injuries is well recognized at common law. Any limitation by the legislature to a sum less than the actual damages is in conflict with the right of remedy by due course of law reserved to the individual for injury to his person, in the constitution of each State.[1]

In an action for a personal injury the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensation, so far as it is susceptible of an estimate in money, for the loss and damage caused to him by the defendant's negligence, including not only expenses incurred for medical attendance, and a reasonable sum for his suffering, but also a fair recompense for the loss of what he would otherwise have earned in his trade or profession, and has been deprived of the capacity of earning, by the wrongful act of the defendant. To assist the jury in making such an estimate, standard life and annuity tables, showing at any age the probable duration of life, and the present value of a life annuity, are competent evidence, but not absolute guides.[2]

In a statute providing that actions for tort for assault, battery, imprisonment, or other "damage to the person," shall survive to the representative, the tort must affect the person directly — not the feelings or the reputation, as in cases of breach of promise, slander, and malicious prosecution. The substantial cause of action must be a bodily injury, or damage of a physical character, whether trespass or case lie.[3]

At common law no damages were recoverable for the loss of a human life. The reason was: life transcended all moneyed value; or, because, under feudal law, the property of a felon was forfeited to the crown, so that nothing remained wherewith to satisfy private demands. The life of a subject, as far as capable of proprietorship, was the property of the government; the justice which was to be satisfied was public justice; the deceased and his family were only regarded as members of the state; the public, through the government, inflicted the punishment and received the amercement, and, as far as necessity existed, provided for the family, and, therefore, private redress or satisfaction was excluded. The effect of the action now allowed by statute (as to which see below) is, pro tanto, to relieve the state of a public charge; the suit for damages becomes a private action.[4]

The common-law rule has been changed in most of the States by statutes which follow closely 9 and 10 Vict. (1846), known as "Lord Campbell's Act." Proceeding upon the theory that the widow, the children, and perhaps the parents, have a pecuniary interest in the life of the deceased, these statutes provide that for the benefit of such relatives an action for damages may be maintained against the person by whose wrongful act the deceased lost his life, the act being of such a nature that the deceased, had he survived, could himself have had an action for the personal injury.

The right of recovery, then, being purely statutory, the amount recoverable for a death rests with the dis-

[1] See 2 Addison, Torts, 1391. To realty, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 281-92, 345-59 (1887), cases. As to future damages, see 36 Alb. Law J. 84-89, 104-9 (1887), cases.

[2] Omaha Horse R'y Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co., 32 F. R. 733-34 (1887), Brewer, J.

[3] Miller v. Wilson, 24 Pa. 120 (1854), Black, C. J.; Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 Mich. 283-84 (1884), Cooley, C. J.; 2 Bing. 340.

[4] United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 344-46 (1884), cases, Bradley, J. Approved, Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co., 111 id. 274 (1884).

[5] Murdock v. Boston & Albany R. Co., 133 Mass. 15 (1882), Morton, C. J.

[6] Miller v. Mariners' Church, 7 Greenl. 55-56 (1830); Walker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 99 (1867), cases.

[1] Cleveland, &c. R. Co. v. Rowan, 66 Pa. 400 (1870); Thirteenth Street R'y Co. v. Boudrou, 92 Pa. 481 (1880).

[2] Vicksburg & Meridian R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 554-56 (1886), cases, Gray, J.

[3] Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 145 (1870), cases, Gray, J.

[4] The E. B. Ward, 4 Woods, 149 (1883), Billings, J.; s. c. 17 F. R. 259. See generally Grosso v. Delaware, &c. R. Co., Sup. Ct. N. J. (1888), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 307-9 (1886), cases.

cretion of the legislature. In the District of Columbia this amount is $10,000;[1] in some States, as in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and Pennsylvania, $5,000; but the amount recoverable for personal injuries generally remains unlimited,[2] — in Massachusetts it is $4,000.[3]

In the absence of an act of Congress or a statute of a State giving a right of action therefor, a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained in the courts of the United States to recover damages for the death of a human being on the high seas, or on waters navigable from the sea, which was caused by negligence.[4]

Where the death is caused by negligence the only damages recoverable are for the injury to the relative rights of the surviving members of the family, and are compensatory in nature. Where, therefore, a child is free, lives apart from his parents, and in no way contributes to their support, they cannot maintain an action to recover damages for his death. When the child is not free the parents can recover only the value of his services during minority, and the expenses caused by the injury and death.[5]

In all cases the amount of damages must depend very much on the good sense and sound judgment of the jury upon all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. If the suit is brought by the party there can be no fixed measure of compensation for the pain and anguish of body and mind, nor for the loss of time and care in business, or the permanent injury to health and body. So when the suit is brought by the representative the pecuniary injury resulting from the death to the next of kin is equally uncertain and indefinite.[6]

In some States statutes provide that no action will lie for a wrong committed elsewhere, without proof of the existence of a similar right in the place where the wrong was committed.[7]

See also ACTIO, Personalis; AGGRAVATION; COMMENCE, Action; CONDEMNATION; COSTS; INDEMNITY; INJURY, 2; INNOCENT, 1; INSPECTION, 2; INTEREST, 3; LAY, 2; MALICE; MEASURE; NEGLIGENCE; PROFIT, 2; RECOUP; REMIT, 3; ROAD; SOLATIUM; SOUND, 1; RESTITUTIO; TAKE, 8; TIMBER; TORT; TRESPASS; TROUBLE.

[1] Act of Congress, 17 Feb., 1885: 23 St. L. 307.

[2] See Exp. Gordon, 104 U. S. 517 (1881); Dennick v. Central Railroad of New Jersey, 103 id. 17 (1880); Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 id. 759 (1877); The Charles Morgan, 2 Flip. 275 (1878); Davies v. Lathrop, 12 F. R. 356 (1882); Barrett v. Dolan, 130 Mass. 366 (1881); Laws Conn., 1877, c. 78, s. 1; 24 Conn. 575; 45 Me. 209; 9 Cush. 108; 18 Mo. 162; 16 Barb. 54; 15 N. Y. 432; 44 Pa. 175.

[3] Act of 1887.

[4] The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 204-12 (1886), cases, Waite, C. J.

[5] Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp, 100 Pa. 95, 98 (1882).

[6] Illinois Central R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 105-6 (1866), cases, Nelson, J.; The City of Panama, 101 U. S. 454 (1879); 18 N. Y. 543.

[7] McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 550 (1879), cases; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co., 84 id. 53 (1881), cases. See Richardson v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 98 Mass. 89 (1867), cases; Woodard v. Michigan, &c. R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 122 (1859); Bruce's Adm. v. Cincinnati R. Co., 83 Ky. 174, 180 (1885); Burns v. Grand Rapids, &c. R. Co., Sup. Ct. Ind. (1888), cases: 37 Alb. Law J. 228.

DAMNUM. L. That which is taken away: loss; damage; legal hurt or harm. Plural, damna: legal losses. Damnificatus, injured. Damnosa, hurtful.

Ad damnum. To the loss; "to the damage of plaintiff (so many) dollars."

The clause, at the end of a common-law declaration, in which the plaintiff sets out the money amount of the loss he has suffered in consequence of the act he complains of; also, the amount itself so set out.[1]

Ad quod damnum. To what damage.

A writ, at common law, by which the sheriff was to inquire by a jury what damage it would be to the sovereign, or to a subject, to grant a fair, market, highway, or other like franchise.[2]

An inquisition ad quod damnum designates the remedy given by statute for the assessment of damages suffered from an exercise of the right of eminent domain, or in consequence of some public improvement.

Damnificatus. Injured, damaged, damnified.

Quantum damnificatus. How much he is injured.

The name of an issue by which damages, to be awarded in equity, may be ascertained by a jury.

This was the course in former times, and may still be the practice in cases of a complicated nature; but the same inquiry may now generally be made by a master.[3] See PENALTY.

Non damnificatus. He is not injured.

The plea in the case of an action on a covenant to indemnify and save harmless, — in the nature of a plea of performance.

If there was any injury the plaintiff must reply to such plea. Not the plea when the condition is to "discharge and acquit."[4]

Damnosa hæreditas. A hurtful or burdensome inheritance; an expensive asset.

By the Roman law the heir was liable to the full extent of his ancestor's liabilities.

The term has been applied to property of a bankrupt which is a charge or an expense to the creditors.

The assignee need not regard such property as an asset; he may, instead, leave the creditor to prove his claim; or, possibly, he may assign the burden to

[1] 2 Greenl. Ev. § 260; 108 U. S. 176; 9 Bened. 241

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 271.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 795.

[4] Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 99 (1867), cases; Steph. Pl. 388.

another, as, a pauper; but not so in insolvency, in which case the process is voluntary.[1]

Damnum absque injuria. A loss without injury: deprivation without legal injury; a loss for which the law provides no remedy. Opposed, injuria absque damno: injury without legal damage.

There are many cases of loss for which no relief or equivalent in money can be afforded. Examples: unintended hurt, while due care is being exercised;[2] harm done from taking a medicine prescribed by a person known not to be a physician; patronage drawn off by competition in business;[3] an improvement in a machine, which does not infringe the rights of a prior patentee;[4] waste by a tenant in fee, as affecting the interest of the heir; defamatory words proven to be true.[5]

Every public improvement, while adding to the convenience of the people at large, affects more or less injuriously the interests of some individuals.[6]

When the exercise of a right, conferred by law for the benefit of the public, is attended with temporary inconvenience to private parties, in common with the public in general, they are not entitled to damages therefor.[6]

Damnum fatale. A fated loss; a loss ordained by fate — beyond the control of man.

In the civil law, a loss for which a bailee was not liable: as, a loss by shipwreck, lightning, or other like casualty; also, a loss from fire or from pirates.[7]

Included all accidents occasioned by an "act of God or public enemy," and, perhaps, also, others which would not now be considered as due to "irresistible force."[8] See ACCIDENT, Inevitable; ACT, 1, Of God.

See DE MELIORIBUS, Damnis; REMITTITUR, Damnum.

DANGER. In the law of self-defense "apparent danger" means such overt, actual demonstration, by conduct and acts, of a design to take life or to do some great personal injury, as makes killing apparently necessary for self-preservation.[9] See IMMEDIATE.

[1] 3 Pars. Contr. 466, 492; American File Co. v. Garrett, 110 U. S. 295 (1884), cases.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 294.

[3] Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. 574 (1863).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 219, 125.

[5] Miller v. Mayor of New York, 109 U. S. 395 (1883). See Broom, Max. 1; 1 Sm. L. C. 244; Sedg. Dam. 29, 111; 20 How. 148; 108 U. S. 331; 109 id. 329; 119 id. 284; 29 F. R. 568; 17 Conn. 302; 88 Ky. 218; 97 N. C. 432; 94 N. Y. 129; 86 Pa. 401; 98 id. 84; 113 id. 126; 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 480; 66 Ga. 69, 308; 71 id. 734; 34 La. An. 312, 496, 506, 857, 974, 996; 74 Me. 171; 133 Mass. 489; 11 Lea, 737; 59 Tex. 517; 25 Vt. 49.

[6] Hamilton v. Vicksburg, &c. R. Co., 119 U. S. 285 (1886).

[7] See Story, Bailm. 471; 2 Kent, 594.

[8] Thickstun v. Howard, 8 Blackf. 536 (1847).

[9] Evans v. State, 44 Miss. 773 (1870).

Dangerous. Said of a weapon, means such as is likely to cause death or to produce great bodily harm. See further WEAPON.

Dangers of navigation. The ordinary perils which attend navigation.[1]

Includes dangers arising from shallow waters at the entrance of harbors;[1] also, unavoidable dangers from a bridge across a river.[2]

Dangers of the river. The natural accidents incident to river navigation; not, such accidents as may be avoided by the exercise of that skill, judgment, or foresight which are demanded from persons in the particular occupation.[3]

Includes dangers from unknown reefs, suddenly formed in the channel, and not discoverable by the use of care.[4]

Dangers of the sea or seas. Stress of weather, winds and waves, lightning, tempests, and other extraordinary occurrences, as understood in a marine policy; not, the ordinary perils which every vessel must encounter.[5]

Accidents, peculiar to navigation, of an extraordinary nature, or arising from an irresistible force or overwhelming power which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence.[6]

All unavoidable accidents from which common carriers, by the general law, are not excused unless they arise from the act of God.[7]

The phrases "dangers of the sea," "dangers of navigation," and "perils of the seas," employed in bills of lading, are convertible expressions.[8] See further ACT, 1, Of God; PERIL.

DARE. L. To give; to transfer. See DEDIMUS.

Nemo dat qui non habet. No one gives who does not have.

Nemo dat quod non habet. No one can give what he does not own.

[1] [Western Transportation Co. v. Downer, 11 Wall. 133 (1870).

[2] The Morning Mail, 17 F. R. 549 (1883).

[3] Hill v. Sturgeon, 35 Mo. 213 (1864); 28 id. 323.

[4] Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, &c. Transportation Co., 17 F. R. 478 (1883).

[5] Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co., 8 Pet. 585 (1834), M'Lean, J.

[6] [Tuckerman v. Stephens, &c. Transportation Co., 32 N. J. L. 328 (1867); 33 id. 565.

[7] Dibble v. Morgan, 1 Woods, 411 (1873).

[8] Baxter v. Leland, 1 Abb. Adm. 352 (1848), cases; 3 Ware, 215; 2 Curtis, 8; 56 Barb. 442; 3 Kent, 300.

Qui non habet, ille non dat. He who does not own, cannot transfer.[1] See TRANSFERRE; REDDARE.

DARRAIGN. See DERAIGN.

DARREIN. See CONTINUANCE, Puis, etc.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE CASE. See CHARTER, 2; CORPORATION.

DATE.[2] The primary signification is time "given" or specified,— in some way ascertained and fixed.[3]

The time when an instrument was made, acknowledged, delivered, or recorded; the clause or memorandum which specifies that fact; and the time from which its operation is to be reckoned.[4]

In the ancient form the clause ran: datum apud, etc., specifying the place and time; thence called the datum clause, afterward shortened to "date."

False date. Implies a date purposely incorrect.

Misdate. An erroneous date, made so intentionally or unintentionally.

A date is not a necessary part of a document. Another day than that named may be shown to be the true date, except where there is collusion.[5]

A deed is considered as executed on the nominal date, unless the contrary be made to appear; it speaks from the day of delivery; and it is valid whether it bears no date, or has a false or an impossible date, provided the real day when it was given can be established.[6]

The purpose of a date in a bill or note is to fix the day of payment; if such day is indicated, that is sufficient.[7] See DESCRIPTION; RELATION, 1.

DAY. 1. The time between one midnight and the next succeeding midnight.[8] See NIGHT.

The civil day begins and ends at 12 o'clock P. M. The word "day," used alone in a statute or contract, means, unless restricted to a shorter period, the twenty-four hours.[9]

2. The time between sunrise and sunset; day-time, q. v.

3. The business hours of a day.

Artificial day; solar day. From the rising to the setting of the sun. Natural day. The whole twenty-four hours; midnight to midnight.[1]

Daily. "Advertisement in a daily newspaper" (q. v.) may refer to a paper issued every day of the week but one.[2]

Day in court. A day set for appearing in a court; a day on which a person may be heard as to a matter affecting his rights.

It is an old maxim that every one is entitled to his day in court. This means that day on which the cause is reached for trial in pursuance of the forms and methods prescribed by law.[3] See CONTINUANCE; NOTICE, 1.

Days of grace. Three additional days in which to pay a negotiable bill or note after its maturity. See further GRACE, Days of.

Day's work. See SERVICE, 1.

Day-time. That portion of the twenty-four hours during which a man's person and countenance are discernible.[4] See BURGLARY.

Judicial day; juridical day. A day for judicial proceedings; a day for exercising judicial power; a court day. Opposed, non-judicial, non-juridical day.

Non-judicial days are legal holidays and Sundays. Judicial proceedings in civil matters on such days are generally void. See DIES, Dominicus, etc.; HOLIDAY; SUNDAY.

Peremptory day. A day assigned for a hearing without further postponement.

See APPEARANCE, 3; LAW-DAY; RETURN-DAY; RUNNING DAY. Compare DIES.

"In the space of a day all the twenty-four hours are usually reckoned, the law generally rejecting all fractions of a day, in order to avoid disputes."[5]

Common sense and common justice equally sustain the propriety of allowing "fractions of a day" whenever it will promote the purposes of substantial justice.[6]

---

[1] See 16 Wall. 550; 23 id. 128; 4 Cliff. 311, 360; 71 Ala. 288; 100 Mass. 24; 4 Wend. 619.

[2] L. datum, a thing given.

[3] Bement v. Trenton Locomotive Co., 38 N. J. L. 515 (1866); 2 Bl. Com. 304.

[4] See Orcutt v. Moore, 134 Mass. 48 (1883).

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 976-78, cases; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 12-13, cases.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 304, 307; Raines v. Walker, 77 Va. 92 (1883), cases; 19 How. 73; 33 Me. 446.

[7] Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 83-85, cases; 1 Ames, Bills, etc., 145.

[8] Pulling v. People, 8 Barb. 385 (1850); Kane v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 522 (1879); Haines v. State, 7 Tex. Ap. 33 (1879).

[9] Benson v. Adams, 69 Ind. 354 (1879), cases; Helphenstein v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 65 id. 589 (1879); 2 Bl. Com. 141.

[1] See People v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 137 (1863).

[2] Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30, 33 (1873).

[3] Ketchum v. Breed, 66 Wis. 92 (1886), Cassoday, J.; 31 Va. 759.

[4] Trull v. Wilson, 9 Mass. 154 (1812); 4 Bl. Com. 224.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 141.

[6] Re Richardson, 2 Story, 577 (1843); Lapeyre v. United States, 17 Wall. 198 (1872); United States v. Norton, 97 U. S. 170 (1877); Burgess v. Salmon, ib. 383 (1878); First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 100 id. 689 (1879); Louisville v. Portsmouth Savings Bank, 104 id. 474-79 (1881), cases; 11 F. R. 214; 87 Ill. 239; 69 Ind. 353; 98 Pa. 518.

The maxim is now chiefly known by its exceptions. When private rights depend upon it, the courts inquire into the hour at which an act was done, a decree entered, an attachment laid, or a title accrued.[1]

When an officer has neglected to note upon a writ of execution the hour and minute at which the writ was delivered to him, the precise time may be established by evidence.[2]

It has become the rule in the construction of a contract, when the time to be computed is one or more days, weeks or years, to exclude the day of the date or event, whether by the contract the time is to be reckoned from date, from the day of the date, or from some act or event. The day is not divided, because not only is a day a natural unit of time, but it is a fair presumption that the parties did not intend to divide a day, since the time to be computed is made up of days as units of time; and the day is excluded because to include it would require an act, which, by the contract, was to be done in one day from date, to be done on the day of the date, which is against the apparent intention of the parties. But whenever it is necessary to divide a day in order to carry into effect the intention of the parties, this may be done; and the rule of excluding the day is not applied when a different intention appears on the face of the contract; and no such general rule obtains when acts are to be done within one or more hours, for example, after the date of the contract.[3]

In computing time, days are counted according to the following rules:

1. When a contract, a statute, or a rule of court prescribes a definite number of days within which an act must be done (as, make a payment, take an appeal, file a plea or pleading, serve a notice), the first day is excluded and the last day included: the first and last days are never both included.[4]

2. An intervening Sunday is frequently omitted, especially when the days are less than a week.[5]

3. When the last day is Sunday, or a legal holiday, the act may be done on the day following — except as to days of grace.[6, 5] See further under TIME.

See AFTER; AFTERNOON; AT; BETWEEN; BY; FOR; FROM; ON OR BEFORE; WHEN; WITHIN; — MONTH; TIME; YEAR.

DE. A Latin preposition denoting: away from, out of, arising from; of, about, concerning, with regard to; for, on account of, because of, by.

With adjectives, forms adverbial expressions; as, de novo, anew.

In compounds, denotes separation, departure, removal: cessation or negation of the fundamental idea; sometimes, a strengthening of that idea.

[1] Maine v. Gilman, 11 F. R. 216 (1882), cases.

[2] Hale's Appeal, 44 Pa. 439 (1863).

[3] Hitchings v. Edmands, 132 Mass. 339 (1882), Field, J.; Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 44 (1885), cases.

[4] See 2 Pars. Contr. 364; 19 Conn. 376; 12 Iowa, 186; 9 N. H. 304; 37 Mo. 574; 28 Barb. 284; 16 Pa. 14.

[5] See 31 Cal. 240, 271; 12 Ga. 93; 53 Ill. 87; 46 Mo. 17; 99 Pa. 522; 40 id. 372; 17 Gratt. 109.

[6] See 3 Cush. 137; 27 N. J. L. 68; 20 Wend. 205.

De bene esse. For the well being: provisionally, conditionally. Abbreviated d. b. e.

Characterizes an act or proceeding viewed as sufficient for the time being.

The entry of record of the name of an attorney as counsel for a defendant is termed an appearance de bene esse, when such appearance is not to be conclusive unless subsequently ratified.

The examination of a witness de bene esse may be had when he is an important witness, and there is danger of losing his testimony from death or absence. His deposition (q. v.) may be taken, but not used at trial unless he has since died, or is abroad or beyond reach of process.[1]

De bonis. Of, for, or concerning goods or property. See phrases under BONA.

De cursu. Of course; as a matter of course.

De donis. Concerning grants. See under DONUM.

De facto. In fact; as a matter of fact. Opposed, de jure: by right, by legal right or title. See FACTUM; GOVERNMENT.

De gratia. From favor, indulgence. Opposed, de jure: of right.

De homine replegiando. For replevying a man. See REPLEVIN, 2.

De incremento. Of the increase. See COSTS.

De injuria. Of wrong. See REPLICATION.

De jure. Of or by right. See De facto; De gratia.

De lunatico inquirendo. For inquiry as to lunacy, q. v.

De medietate linguæ. Of half tongue: half of each language or nationality. See MEDIETAS.

De melioribus damnis. Of the better damages; of the abler ones the damages.

Where a loss is assessed against several defendants the plaintiff may elect to claim satisfaction of those most able to pay. See CONTRIBUTION.

De mercatoribus. Concerning merchants, q. v.

De minimis. See LEX, De minimis, etc.

De non apparentibus. See APPARERE, De non, etc.

De novo. From the first; anew. See VENIRE, De novo.

De partitione facienda. For division to be made. See PARTITIO.

De retorno habendo. For having return; to have a return, q. v.

[1] See 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 111; 25 Cent. Law J. 244, 579 (1887), cases.

De son tort. F. Of his own wrong. See TORT, 1.

De terris. Out of the lands.

As, a judgment de terris, for arrears of dower.[1]

De una parte. Of one part or party. See PARS.

De ventre. See VENTER.

De vicineto. From the vicinage or country. See COUNTY, 2; VICINITY.

DEAD. See ALIVE; ANIMAL; BURIAL; DEATH; FREIGHT; PLEDGE.

Dead-head. A person other than an officer, agent, or employee, of a railroad or other company, who is permitted to travel without paying fare.[2] See COMMERCE, Act of 1887, sec. 22, p. 206.

Dead-letter law. See OBSOLETE.

Deadly. See WEAPON.

DEAF. See INFLUENCE; WILL, 2; WITNESS.

A deaf mute who does not and cannot be made to understand any matter of business, except of the most simple character, cannot manage his own affairs or select an agent to transact them.[3]

A statute required that a stationary bell be rung or a whistle sounded at a railroad crossing, before a train passed. A deaf mute who saw a train approaching, as to which no warning was given, attempted to cross the track and was injured. Held, that he could not recover damages.[4]

DEAL. To traffic; to transact business; to trade.[5]

Said of a bank, may mean to buy and sell for gain, and include sales on commission.[6]

Dealer. One who trades, buys or sells;[7] one who buys to sell again;[8] one who makes successive sales a business.[9]

One who slaughters animals and sells the meat as food is not a "dealer" within the meaning of a statute requiring dealers who buy and sell merchandise to take out a license.[10] See PEDDLER; RETAIL.

Dealer's talk. See COMMENDATIO, Simplex, etc.

[1] Haven v. Bartholomew, 57 Pa. 126 (1868).

[2] [Gardner v. Hall, 61 N. C. 23 (1866).

[3] Perrine's Case, 41 N. J. E. 410-12 (1886), cases, Runyon, Ch.: 95 Am. Law Reg. 776 (1886); ib. 778-80.

[4] Ormsbee v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 14 R. I. 102 (1883).

[5] Vernon v. Manhattan Co., 17 Wend. 526 (1837).

[6] Bates v. State Bank, 2 Ala. 465-68 (1841); Fleckner v. United States Bank, 8 Wheat. 349, 351 (1823); 11 Wis. 294.

[7] Berks County v. Bertolet, 13 Pa. 394 (1850).

[8] Norris v. Commonwealth, 27 Pa. 495 (1856); 33 id. 331.

[9] Overall v. Bezeau, 57 Mich. 507 (1877), Cooley, C. J.

[10] State v. Yearby, 82 N. C. 561 (1880); 80 id. 479. See also 44 Ala. 29; 79 Ill. 178; 65 Me. 284; 12 Lea, 262; 21 Vt. 484.

DEATH. Cessation of life; extinction of political existence. See LIFE.

Civil death. Extinction of civil rights.

A bankrupt is regarded as civilly dead;[1] so is an insolvent corporation, to the extent that its property may be administered as a trust fund for creditors and stockholders.[2]

Formerly, if a man was banished or abjured the realm, or entered a monastery, before the law he was civilly dead — civiliter mortuus. Then, a monk, like a dying man, could make a will, or leave his next of kin to administer as if he had died intestate. Since, also, the act determined a lease for life, conveyances for life were usually made for the term of one's "natural life."[3]

A convict, in the penitentiary, is civilly dead, and cannot be sued.[4]

Natural death. Death from the unassisted operation of natural causes; death by visitation of the Creator. Violent death. Death caused by human agency. See CORONER.

A person who for seven years has not been heard of by those who would naturally have heard of him, had he been alive, is presumed to be dead; but the law raises no presumption as to the precise time of death. That he died before the end of that period may be presumed, it appearing that he encountered a special peril or came within the range of some impending or immediate danger which might reasonably be expected to destroy life.[5] See DIE, Without children.

Death by the hands of justice. The execution of a person convicted of crime in any form allowed by law.[6] See under DIE.

Death penalty. Punishment by deprivation of life; capital punishment. Death sentence. A sentence involving death. Death warrant. An order for the execution of a person who has been sentenced to punishment by death.

The manner of inflicting the punishment of death shall be by hanging.[7]

The language of a death-sentence is believed to be substantially as follows: "A B, having been convicted of the felony with which you stand charged, and of the crime of murder in the first degree [or other capi-

[1] International Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 406 (1879).

[2] Graham v. La Crosse, &c. R. Co., 102 U. S. 161 (1880).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 132; 2 id. 257; 6 Johns. 118; Mo. R. S. 1855, p. 642.

[4] Rice County v. Lawrence, 29 Kan. 161 (1883).

[5] Davis v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 633-34 (1878), cases; Newell v. Nichols, 75 N. Y. 86-90 (1878), cases; Evans v. Stewart, 81 Va. 733-38 (1886), cases; Doe v. Nepean, 2 Sm. L. C. 510; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 41; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1274-78, cases; 92 Am. Dec. 704-8, cases.

[6] Breasted v. Farmers' Life & Trust Co., 8 N. Y. 302 (1853).

[7] R. S. § 5394.

tal offense], the sentence of the law is, that for this offense you be taken hence to the jail of the county, whence you came, and thence, at such time as the governor of the State [or, the President of the United States] may, by his warrant, appoint, to the place of execution, and that you be then and there hanged by the neck until you be dead. And may God have mercy upon your soul."

The wording of a recent death-warrant was:

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, —— ——, governor of said commonwealth, to —— ——, high sheriff of the county of Allegheny, sends greeting:

Whereas, At a court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery held at Pittsburgh in and for the county of Allegheny at September session, 1885, a certain —— —— was tried upon a certain indictment charging him with the crime of murder, and was, on the 18th day of November, 1885, found guilty of murder in the first degree, and was thereupon, to wit, November 19, 1885, sentenced by the said court, that he, the said —— ——, be taken thence to the jail of Allegheny county, whence he came, and thence to the place of execution at such time as the governor of this commonwealth by his warrant may appoint, and there and then he be hanged by the neck until he be dead. Now, therefore, this is to authorize and require you, the said —— ——, high sheriff of the county of Allegheny as aforesaid, or your successor in office, to cause the sentence of the said court to be executed upon the said —— —— between the hours of 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., on Thursday, the 23d day of February, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, in the manner directed in the seventy-sixth section of the act of general assembly of this commonwealth, approved the 31st day of March, A. D., 1860, entitled an act to consolidate, revise and amend the laws of this commonwealth relating to penal proceedings and pleadings, and for so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State at Harrisburg this 20th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, and of the commonwealth the one hundred and twelfth.

—— ——,
Secretary of the commonwealth.

Punishment by death is known as "the extreme penalty of the law." It is not viewed as an equivalent, even in murder, nor as retaliation, but as the highest penalty man can inflict, and tending most to personal security.[1] See further CAP; EXECUTION, 3; PUNISHMENT, Capital.

Death watch. Special guard appointed, a few days (perhaps eight to fourteen) before execution, to observe the actions of a prisoner under sentence of death, in order to discover and defeat any plan formed or attempt made to effect his escape, and to prevent him from committing suicide; also, the occasion for taking such extra precaution, and, the number of days during which the precaution is exercised.

The persons who actually perform the service may be designated as the "day" and the "night" watch.

See also ACCIDENT, Insurance; DIE; ABATEMENT, 4; ACTIO, Personalis; AGENT; BURIAL; CONCEAL, 1; DAMAGES; DECEDENT; DECLARATION, 1, Dying; DEODAND; DONATIO; HOMICIDE; INSURANCE; MORTALITY; POISON, 2; REVIVE; SURVIVE. Compare MORS.

DEBAR. See BAR, 3.

DEBATE. See LIBERTY, 1, Of speech; PRIVILEGE, 4.

DEBAUCH. In French, debauche, from the shop: to entice away from work or duty; to entice and corrupt. Referring to a woman, at first meant to seduce, then to seduce and violate: in which twofold sense it is used in law.[1]

DEBENTURE. 1. A custom-house certificate that an importer is entitled to a drawback.[2]

2. A bond in the nature of a charge on government stock, or on the stock of a public company.[3] See DEBET.

A security issued by a public (usually, a railway) company, and may be a mortgage of its lands and stock. It is in the form of a promissory note, subject to strict regulations as to transfers, and has coupons attached for the payments of interest.[4]

The word does not admit of accurate definition. . . It expresses an acknowledgment of a debt by either a corporate body or a large partnership.[5]

"You may have mortgage debentures, which are charges of some kind upon property; or you may have debentures which are bonds. . . You may also have a debenture which is nothing more than an acknowledgment of debt, or you may have an instrument like this in question, which is a statement by two directors that a company will pay."[6]

DEBET. L. He owes; from debere: de habere, to have a thing of some one. Compare ASSUMPSIT.

Debet et detinet. He owes and withholds.

The form of the writ of debt is sometimes in the debet and detinet, and sometimes in the detinet only: that is, the writ states, either that the defendant owes and unjustly detains the debt or thing in question, or only that he unjustly detains it. The writ is brought in the debet as well as in the detinet, when sued by one of the original contracting parties who personally

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 13, 376.

[1] [Koenig v. Nott, 2 Hilt. 329 (N. Y., 1859), Daly, F. J.: 8 Abb. Pr., o. s., 389.

[2] Act of Congress, 2 March, 1799, s. 60.

[3] [Mozley & Whiteley's Law Dict.

[4] [Brown's Law Dict.]

[5] British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Commissioners of Internal Revenue, 44 L. T. 378 (1881), Grove, J. See also Re Rogers' Trusts, 1 Drew. & S. 341 (1860).

[6] 44 L. T. 381, supra, Lindley, J. See Jones, Ry. Sec. § 72.

gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they are bound to the payment; as, by the obligee against the obligor. But if brought by or against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator, this, not being his own debt, shall be sued for in the detinet only. So, also, if the action be for goods, or corn, or a horse, the writ shall be in the detinet only, for nothing but a sum of money, for which I (or my ancestor in my name) have personally contracted, is properly considered my debt.[1]

Debit. He owes. See under DEBT, 2.

Debitum. A thing due or owing; an obligation; a debt, q. v.

Debitum in præsenti, solvendum in futuro. An obligation existing in the present, dischargeable in the future.

Describes any class of obligations complete at the present day, though payable in the future.[2]

Debitum sine brevi. Debt without a writ or declaration. Written also debitum, and debit, sans breve; and abbreviated d. s. b.

1. When an action at common law was begun by original bill, the allegations in which resembled the allegations in a modern declaration, the action was said to be by bill, or by bill without a writ,— other actions being founded upon an original writ.

2. In the practice of several States, a debt confessed by warrant of attorney and entered of record, either with or without a declaration accompanying it. See further ATTORNEY, Warrant of.

Nihil, or nil, debet. He owes nothing. The plea which forms the general issue in an action of debt upon a parol contract.[3]

DEBRIS. See AQUA, Currit, etc.

DEBT. Whatever one owes.[4] See DEBET.

1. A liquidated demand.

A sum of money due by certain and express agreement.[5]

As, by a bond for a determinate sum, by a bill or note, by a special bargain, or as rent reserved on a lease: in which cases the amount is fixed, specific, does not depend upon subsequent valuation to settle it.[6]

Frequently, a sum of money reduced to a certainty, and distinguished from a claim for uncertain damages.

As, in statutes of set-off, where there are mutual debts between plaintiff and defendant. . . If we regard the original, debitum, a thing due or owing, there is no reason why compensation for a breach of contract may not be "due," although not reduced to a certain sum. This enlarged sense, at least, may best answer the intent of the legislature.[1]

A sum of money due by contract.

It is not essential that the contract be express, nor that it fix the precise amount to be paid.[2]

That for which an action of debt will lie — a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. In a less technical sense, any claim for money; in a more enlarged sense, any kind of a just demand.[3]

In its most general sense, that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one is bound to pay to or perform for another.[4]

Standing alone, is as applicable to a sum of money promised at a future day as to a sum now due and payable. The former is a debt owing, the latter a debt due. . . A sum in all events payable is a debt, without regard to the time of payment. A sum payable upon a contingency is not a debt.[5] See DUE, 1.

Liability in a borrower to be sued is not essential.[6]

The idea is that one has bound himself to pay money which he may be compelled to pay.[7]

"Whatever is due to a man under any form of obligation or promise." Coke says that debitum signifies not only a debt for which an action of debt lies, but, generally, any duty to be yielded or paid.[8]

A fixed and certain obligation to pay money or some other valuable thing, in the present or in the future.[9]

Any contract whereby a determinate sum of money becomes due and is not paid, but remains in action, is a "contract of debt."

In this light the word comprehends a variety of acquisitions, usually divided into debts — of record, by special contract, and by simple contract.

A debt of record is a sum of money which appears to be due by evidence of a court of record; a debt by specialty, a sum acknowledged to be due by an instrument under seal; a debt by simple contract is evidenced

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 156.

[2] 13 Pet. 494; 11 Mass. 270; 30 Minn. 7; 29 Pa. 151.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 305; Steph. Pl. 174.

[4] Rodman v. Munson, 13 Barb. 197 (1852).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 154; McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36 Iowa, 226 (1872).

[1] Frazer v. Tunis, 1 Binn. 262 (1808), Tilghman, C. J.

[2] United States v. Colt, 1 Pet. C. C. 146 (1815), Washington, J.

[3] New Haven Saw Mill Co. v. Fowler, 28 Conn. 103 (1859).

[4] Kimpton v. Bronson, 45 Barb. 626 (1866), cases; 7 N. Y. 197; 24 id. 290.

[5] People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 525 (1869).

[6] Mayor of Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 390 (1869).

[7] Scott v. City of Davenport, 34 Iowa, 213 (1872).

[8] New Jersey Ins. Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. L. 301 (1875); Burrill; Bowen v. Hoxie, 137 Mass. 531 (1884); 3 Metc. 526; 113 U. S. 463.

[9] [Appeal of City of Erie, 91 Pa. 402 (1879).

by mere oral testimony or by an unsealed note.[1]

Antecedent debt. See SECURITY (3), Collateral.

Mutual debts. Moneys due or owing by two persons to each other; debts reciprocally due.

"Mutual debts," "dealing together," and "indebted to each other," in statutes of set-off, are of the same import.[2]

"Mutual debts" and "mutual credits," in § 5013, Rev. St., are correlative expressions. What is a debt on one side is a credit on the other. In case of bankruptcy only such credits as must in their nature terminate in debts are the subject-matter of set-off,[3] q. v. Compare CREDIT, Mutual.

Present or existing, prior, and future or subsequent debts. See CONVEYANCE, 2, Fraudulent; SECURITY, 1.

Privileged debt. A debt payable before other debts — in the event of insolvency.

Results from the character of the creditor, as, a State or the United States; or form the nature of the debt, as, funeral expenses.

Priority of payment of debts due to the government is founded upon motives of public policy, to secure revenue.[4]

Public debt. A national or State obligation; a public security; rarely, if ever, the obligation of a town.[5]

"The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void."[6]

2. The non-payment of any such definite sum of money being regarded as an injury, the remedy afforded is known as the action of debt or simply "debt:" the form of action to compel the performance of the contract.

This is the shortest and surest remedy, particularly where the debt arises upon a specialty. But if A verbally agrees to pay B a certain price for a certain parcel of goods, and fails in the performance, an action of debt will lie against A; for this is also a determinate contract: but if he agrees for no settled price, he is liable upon a special "action on the case," according to the nature of the contract.[1]

The action lies whenever a sum certain is due to the plaintiff, or a sum which can readily be reduced to a certainty — a sum requiring no future valuation to settle its amount:[2] a sum which can be ascertained from fixed data by computation.[3]

It is not material in what manner the obligation was incurred or by what it is evidenced, if the sum is capable of being definitely ascertained. Nor is it necessarily founded upon a contract.[3]

The action lies for money only. On an obligation to pay or deliver any other article, covenant is the remedy, and the recovery is of a compensation in damages.[4] See ASSUMPSIT; COVENANT, 2.

Debit. To charge as due or owing; also the sum so charged.

Debtor. One who owes another anything, or is under obligation, arising from express agreement, implication of law, or the principles of natural justice, to render and pay a sum of money to another.[5]

The correlative debtee has been in use.[6]

One who is under obligation to discharge some duty, or to pay damages for its non-performance, is a debtor, as really as one who is under obligation by bond to pay a sum of money.[7]

Joint debtor. One of several persons who jointly owe a sum of money; a co-obligor. See JOINT.

As to "absconding" and "absent" debtors, see those terms; also, CONCEAL, 2.

A person, without request or assent, cannot make another his debtor by paying his debt, as, taxes;[8] otherwise, as to honoring commercial paper, as see ACCEPT, 2.

The rule is that "the debtor must seek the creditor," and pay or tender payment of the debt when due.[9]

Indebted. The state of being in debt, absolutely, and not conditionally — as is a surety or an indorser.[10]

Implies a debt presently payable; as, in an affidavit for an attachment.[11]

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 464-66;*3 id. 154, 166. See 2 Story, 450; 2 Wash. 385; 11 Ark. 355; 15 Ind. 282; 1 Nev. 589; 40 N. J. E. 178; 13 Barb. 77; 38 Ohio St. 570; 51 Vt. 86.

[2] Pate v. Gray, 1 Hempst. 157 (1831).

[3] Libby v. Hopkins, 104 U. S. 307-8 (1881), cases.

[4] United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. *35 (1832).

[5] Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 786 (1861).

[6] Constitution, Amd. XIV, sec. 4.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 155.

[2] Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 542 (1871).

[3] Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 29 (1878); 7 Wall. 79, 80.

[4] Minnick v. Williams, 77 Va. 760 (1883); Story, Contr. § 969.

[5] Stanly v. Ogden, 2 Root, 262 (1795).

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 18.

[7] New Haven Saw Mill Co. v. Fowler, 28 Conn. 103 (1859); 34 Iowa. 218.

[8] Homestead Co. v. Valley R. Co. 17 Wall. 167 (1873); Gurnee v. Bausemer, 80 Va. 872 (1885), cases.

[9] Johnston v. Hargrove, 81 Va. 121 (1885).

[10] See St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow, 9 Mo. 153 (1845).

[11] Trowbridge v. Sickler, 42 Wis. 420 (1877), cases.

Indebtedness. The condition of owing money; also, the amount owed; indebtment.

May include an obligation for future payment equally with that presently due;[1] and may be by contract or tort.[2]

The "indebtedness" that may be created by a city in excess of a certain percentage on its taxable property includes an agreement of any kind to pay money where no suitable provision has been made for the prompt discharge of the obligation.[3]

See ACCORD; ACCOUNT, 1; ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 1; ADMINISTER, 4; BANKRUPTCY; CERTUM; CHARGE, 2 (2); CLAIM; COMPOSITION, 3; CONTRACT; DEMAND; EXEMPTION; EXTINGUISH; FLOATING; FUND; GUARANTY, 2; INCUR; INSOLVENCY; LIABILITY; LIEN; MERGER, 2; NOVATION; PAY; PENALTY; PRE-EXISTING; PREFERENCE; PRIOR; PRISON; RECOGNIZANCE; RECOVERY; RELEASE; RESCISSION; SUBROGATION; TAKE, 8; TAX, 2; TENDER, 2.

DECAPITATION. See CAPITAL, 1.

DECAY. See PERISHABLE; SOUND, 2 (1).

DECEDENT.[4] A deceased person whose estate is being settled. See ADMINISTER, 4; CREDITOR, Bill; DISTRIBUTION, 2; PART, 1; PROBATE; RESIDUE; WILL, 2.

DECEIT. Any device or false representation by which one man misleads another to his injury.

A fraudulent misrepresentation, by which one man deceives another, to the injury of the latter.[5]

Deceit practiced to induce one to enter into a contract may be active, as where falsehood and misrepresentation are actually used by one party to deceive the other; or passive, as where a vendor knows that a purchaser is under a delusion influencing his judgment in favor of purchasing, and yet suffers him to complete his purchase.[6]

Other examples are: where one sells what is not his own, or sells unwholesome provisions;[7] or falsely represents his credit to a mercantile agency.[8]

While every deceit comprehends a lie, it is more than a lie — on account of the view with which it is practiced, of its being coupled with some dealing, and of the injury it is calculated to occasion, and does occasion. But a mere lie thrown out at random without intention to hurt anybody, and which a plaintiff was foolish enough to believe, will not support an action.[1]

Formerly the remedy was by a "writ of deceit;" now, unless otherwise provided by statute, it is by an action of trespass on the case.

Besides the special action on the case there is also an "action of deceit," which gives damages in particular cases of fraud, principally where one man does anything in the name of another, by which he is deceived or injured. But an action on the "case" for damages, in the nature of a writ of deceit, is the usual remedy.[2]

To a recovery it is essential that the defendant: (1) actually made a false representation of a material fact, by words or acts unambiguous in import;[3] (2) knew the falsity, or did not know the truth, of the representation[4] — the word "deceit" of itself imports this;[5] (3) intended that the plaintiff should act upon the representation — the essence of the injury;[1, 6] and that the plaintiff: (1) acted upon the representation; (2) to his actual damage;[7] (3) because he was ignorant of the falsity of the representation, and believed it to be true.[7]

The defendant or his agent must have been guilty of some moral wrong; legal fraud alone will not support the action.[8]

The plaintiff must prove representations of material facts which are false, and which induced him to act; and either that the defendant knew the representations to be false, or that, the facts being susceptible of knowledge, he represented, as of his own knowledge, that they were true, when he had no such knowledge.[9]

It is not only necessary to establish the telling of an untruth, knowing it to be such, with intent to induce the person to whom told to act upon it, but also that he altered his condition in consequence, and suffered damage thereby. If it appears affirmatively that although he altered his condition, after hearing the untruth, he was not induced to do it as a consequence, but did it independently, the action fails.[10]

In a recent case the plaintiff averred that he had been induced to purchase the lease, good-will, and fixtures of a livery-stable, upon false, fraudulent, and deceitful representations by the defendant that he owned the lease, was in peaceable possession, etc.

[1] Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co. v Clarke, 29 Pa. 151 (1857); Law v. People, 87 Ill. 393 (1877).

[2] Mattingly v. Wulke, 2 Bradw. 172 (1878), cases.

[3] Sackett v. New Albany, 88 Ind. 479 (1883); Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 id. 6-7 (1884).

[4] De-ce'-dent.

[5] Farwell v. Metcalf, 61 Ill. 374 (1871), Thornton, J.

[6] [Smith, Contr. 206.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 166.

[8] Eaton v. Avery, 18 Hun, 44 (1879).

[1] Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 56 (1789), Buller, J.; ib. 63, Ashhurst, J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 165.

[3] Halls v. Thompson, 1 Smedes & Mar. 481 (1843), cases.

[4] Gibbs v. Odell, 2 Coldw. 133 (1865), cases; Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 363 (1874).

[5] Farwell v. Metcalf, 61 Ill. 374-75 (1871), cases.

[6] Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 210 (1851), cases; Farwell v. Metcalf, 61 Ill. 375 (1871), cases; Bigelow, Torts, 31.

[7] Cases supra and infra.

[8] Erie City Iron Works v. Barber, 106 Pa. 135, 138, 140 (1884), cases.

[9] Cole v. Cassidy, 138 Mass. 439 (1885), Morton, C. J.; 117 id. 195; 108 id. 382.

[10] Ming v. Woolfolk, 116 U. S. 599, 602-3 (1886), cases, Woods, J.; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 id. 250 (1888); Patterson v. Wright, 64 Wis. 289 (1885).

To support an action of tort, it was held that the plaintiff must show: that the representations were untrue, were known by the defendant to be untrue, were calculated to induce him to act, and he, believing them, was induced to act accordingly; that the representations must have been both false and fraudulent; that a positive statement of a falsehood, or the suppression of a material fact which the defendant ought to have known, would constitute the falsity; that if any essential point, requisite to maintaining the action, was wanting, recovery could not be had; and that the defendant, after judgment against him, was not entitled to an exemption of his property from execution for debt.[1]

Where the fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation is made by the vendor of land, as to its nature, quality, quantity, situation, or title, the representation must be in reference to a material thing unknown to the vendee from want of examination, or from want of opportunity to be informed. And if the buyer trusts to representations not calculated to impose upon a man of ordinary prudence, or if he neglects means of information easily within his reach, he must suffer the consequences of his own folly and credulity. The vendee must show, further, that some deceit was practiced for the purpose of putting him off his guard, or that special confidence was reposed in the representations of the vendor, and that the contract was made upon the strength of that confidence. To support the action there must be fraud as distinguished from mere mistake.[2]

Where the question is as to misrepresentation of facts peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge, "the mere fact that the person deceived to his hurt had means of learning the truth, had he made diligent inquiry, is not necessarily fatal to the right to recover."[3]

Thus, a distinct statement by the seller of a patent-right that he owned the right, knowing it to be false, and with intent to deceive the buyer, and on which statement the buyer acted to his injury, will sustain an action, even if the buyer might have discovered the fraud by searching the records of the patent office.[4]

See AGE, Full; CAVEAT, Emptor; CONCEAL, 5; CONSPIRACY; ESTOPPEL; PROSPECTUS; WARRANTY, 2. Compare DOLUS; FRAUD; PRETENSE.

DECEM. See TALES.

DECENT. See INDECENT.

DECEPTION. 1. In the sense of a false representation to induce credit or confidence, see DECEIT; ESTOPPEL; FRAUD, Actual.

2. In the sense of stratagem to discover crime, see COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; DECOY.

[1] Cox v. Highley, 100 Pa. 249, 252 (1882). See also 1 Chitty, Pr. 832; Bigelow, Torts, 9; Cooley, Torts.

[2] Clark v. Edgar, 12 Mo. Ap. 352 (1882).

[3] Arthur v. Wheeler & Wilson Manuf. Co., 12 Mo. Ap. 340 (1882).

[4] David v. Park, 108 Mass. 502 (1870), cases; Watson v. Atwood, 25 Conn. 320 (1856).

DECISION. The result of the deliberations of one or more persons, official or unofficial; the judicial determination of a question.

Somewhat more abstract or more extensive than "judgment" or "decree,"[1] qq. v.

The "decision" of a court is its judgment; its "opinion" is the reason given therefor. The former is recorded upon its rendition, and can be changed only through an application to the court. The latter is the property of the judges, subject to modification until transcribed in the records.[2]

Decide. Includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the reasons for and against, to see which preponderate, and to be governed by that preponderance.[3]

Judicial decision. The determination of a court, in a cause. Extra-judicial decision. A determination beyond the limits of authority; a ruling which transcends jurisdiction.

A decision determines no more than what is necessary to the case in hand,—does not go beyond the limits of what is required by the exigencies of the case.[4]

At most, decisions are only evidence of what the laws are, and are not of themselves laws. They are often re-examined, reversed, and qualified by the courts themselves, whenever found to be defective, ill-founded, or otherwise incorrect. The laws of a State are understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long established local customs having the force of law.[5]

Decision, rules of. The laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply.[6]

This embraces the statute and common law of a State, including statutes relating to the law of evidence in civil cases at common law.[7] In criminal cases the laws of the State in existence in September 24, 1789, are the rules of decision.[8]

[1] See Abbott, Law Dict.; 26 Moak, 449; 55 Vt. 582.

[2] [Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 27 (1859), Field, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 253 (1855). See 43 Md. 629; 16 Moak, 86.

[4] Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 490 (1879); Trade-Mark Cases, ib. 96 (1879); Wright v. Nagle, 101 id. 796 (1879); State v. Baughman, 38 Ohio St. 459 (1882); 10 Oreg. 114.

[5] Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 18 (1842), Story, J.; Nat. Bank of the Republic v. Brooklyn City, &c. R. Co., 102 U. S. 29 (1880); 1 Bl. Com. 69.

[6] R. S. § 721: Act 24 Sept. 1789, § 34.

[7] M'Niel v. Holbrook, 12 Pet. *89 (1838).

[8] United States v. Reid, 12 How. 361 (1851).

Rules of State practice acted upon by the Federal courts, as obligatory upon them, are also included — they have the efficacy of rules adopted by express order of those courts.[1]

Not included are decisions upon general principles of law, for the reasons already given.[2]

The provision does not apply to proceedings in equity, or in admiralty, or to criminal offenses against the United States. The Federal courts follow the decisions of the highest court of a State on questions which concern merely the constitution or laws of that State; also, a course of those decisions, whether founded on statutes or not, which has become a rule of property within the State; also in regard to rules of evidence in actions at law; also in reference to the common law of the State, and its laws and customs of a local character when established by repeated decisions.[3] See COMITY, Judicial; PROCEDURE.

English decisions. See at end of STATUTE, 2.

Compare DECISUM. See COMITY, Judicial; DICTUM, 2; IMPAIR; OPINION, 1 (2); REPORT, 1 (2).

DECISORY. See OATH, Decisory.

DECISUM. L. Cut off, settled, decided; a decision, a precedent.

Stare decisis, et non quieta movere. To stand by precedents and not to disturb what is settled: follow decided cases; adhere to precedents. Shortened to stare decisis.

Once a point of law is firmly settled by a decision, that decision rules like cases subsequently arising.

When a court has once laid down a principle of law as applicable to a certain state of facts, for the sake of the stability and certainty of the law it will apply that principle to all future cases where the facts are substantially the same.[4]

Stability and certainty in the law are of the first importance. The certainty of a rule is often of more importance than the reason of it.[5]

Where there has been a series of decisions by the highest tribunal, the rule stare decisis is regarded as impregnable — except by legislative enactment.[6] This is true in a special sense where the law has become settled as a rule of property, and titles have been acquired on the strength thereof.[7]

The maxim contemplates points actually involved and argued. The results established, not the reasons assigned, make the case an authority. In considering the soundness of the doctrine enunciated courts of concurrent or of foreign jurisdiction pay regard to the thoroughness of the arguments of counsel, the ability, learning, and jurisdictional authority of the court, and the care and research bestowed in preparing the opinion. The meaning, moreover, is to be drawn from the opinion as a whole.

The maxim is not applied to a case decided contrary to principle, nor to a decision considered merely as a judgment between the immediate parties, nor to decisions upon scientific theories, as, of insanity.[1]

See COMITY, Judicial; COURTS, United States, "Federal question," page 277.

DECLARANT. See DECLARE, 4.

DECLARATION. 1. An assertion or statement explicitly made.

Any statement of material matters of fact sworn to and subscribed is a written declaration.[2]

A declaration which accompanies and qualifies an act is part of it; but when made of a thing that is past it is mere hearsay.[3]

Made contemporaneously, and by a person interested in the matter, a declaration is admissible as original evidence: (1) when the fact of the making is in question; (2) when the inquiry is as to expressions of bodily feelings — their existence or nature;[4] (3) in cases of pedigree,[5] q. v.; (4) when part of the res gestæ.[6]

The declarations of an injured party, made after the injury has happened or the cause of suffering occurred, with regard to the facts of the injury or the cause of the suffering, may not be shown, in an action for damages by such person; nor may his declarations with regard to past suffering or pain, or past conditions of body or mind, be shown. Some authorities seem to oppose the last proposition, especially where the declarations are made to a physician or surgeon while examining the party as a patient. Declarations, however, with regard to present suffering or present condition of the body or mind may generally be shown by any person who heard them; but there are authorities also seemingly opposed to this proposition.[7]

[1] United States v. Douglass, 2 Blatch. 214 (1851); The Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall. 413 (1869).

[2] Swift v. Tyson, ante. See generally Watson v. Tarpley, 18 How. 520 (1855); Thompson v. Phillips, Baldw. 246 (1830); Sonstiby v. Keeley, 11 F. R. 580–81 (1882), cases; Burt v. Keyes, 1 Flip. 61 (1861); 112 U. S. 255.

[3] Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co., 125 U. S. 555 (1888), cases, Miller, J.

[4] Moore v. Albany, 98 N. Y. 410 (1885), Earl, J.

[5] N. W. Forwarding Co. v. Mahaffey, 36 Kan. 157 (1887): White v. Denman, 1 Ohio St. 115 (1853).

[6] Harrow v. Meyers, 29 Ind. 470 (1868); 88 id. 566.

[7] Reed v. Ownby, 44 Mo. 206 (1869); Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 402 (1866); Pioche v. Paul, 28 id. 110 (1863).

[1] See generally 25 Am. Law Reg. 745–57 (1886), cases; 77 Va. 24–25; 68 Ga. 797; 100 Ind. 422; 41 N. J. E. 479; 5 Johns. 258; 22 Barb. 97, 106; 9 Oreg. 470; 10 id. 66; 78 Pa. 500; 87 id. 286; 62 Wis. 138, 151, 194; 63 id. 138, 151, 194; 1 Bl. Com. 69; 1 Kent, 477; Cooley, Const. 57; Wells, Res. Adj., &c. 527, 583.

[2] United States v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 340 (1883), Miller, J.: R. S. § 5392.

[3] Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 416 (1876); Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335 (1856).

[4] Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 404 (1869); Roosa v. Boston Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439 (1882), cases; Commonwealth v. Felch, ib. 23 (1882); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 102; 1 Whart. Ev. § 268.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 103–4; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 202–25.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 108–9, 111–14; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 258–63.

[7] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Johns, 36 Kan. 781–83 (1887),

After one's death his former declarations are admissible as secondary evidence when on a matter: (1) of general interest;[1] (2) of ancient possession;[2] (3) against interest — before the controversy arose, and it was the deceased's duty to know the facts;[3] (4) when in the nature of a dying declaration.

A declaration by an agent binds his principal, and by a partner binds his copartner, when made during the continuance of the relation and while the particular transaction is pending.[4]

After a person has made a sale of personalty he stands as a stranger to the title, and his declaration respecting the title is not binding on the vendee. Such declaration is admissible only when it appears from independent evidence that both vendor and vendee were engaged in a common purpose to defraud the creditors of the vendor, and that the admission had such relation to the execution of the purpose as to constitute part of the res gestæ.[5]

The declaration of a conspirator, to bind his fellows, must be made while acting in furtherance of the common design.[6] See CONSPIRACY.

Declaration of intention. A formal, solemn asseveration by an alien that it is his bona fide intention to become a citizen. See NATURALIZATION.

Declaration of Rights. See RIGHT, 2, Declaration, etc.

Declaration of trust. An acknowledgment that property, the title to which the declarant holds, belongs, in whole or in part, to another; also, the writing in which such acknowledgment is made. See TRUST, 1.

Dying declaration. A statement of a material fact concerning the cause and circumstances of a homicide, made by the victim under the solemn belief of impending death.[7]

Such declaration as is made by the party, relating to the facts of the injury of which he afterward dies, under the fixed belief and moral conviction that his death is impending and certain to follow almost immediately, without opportunity of repentance, and in the absence of all hope of avoidance; when he has despaired of life and looks to death as inevitable and at hand.[1]

An exception to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence is made in the case of dying declarations. The general principle on which they are admitted is, they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth. A situation so solemn is considered as creating an obligation equal to that imposed by a positive oath administered in a court of justice.[2]

The person must have been qualified to testify, and the declaration must be complete. The competency of the evidence is to be determined by the court; its weight by the jury. If resting in memory, the substance of all that was stated may be given. The declaration may be by signs.[3]

Declarations of the deceased are admissible upon a trial for murder only as to those things as to which he would have been competent to testify if sworn as a witness in the cause: they must relate to facts only, not to mere matters of opinion. It is essential to the admissibility of such declarations, and it is a primary fact to be proved by the party offering them, that they were made under a sense of impending death. But it is not necessary that they be stated at the time to be so made; it is enough if it satisfactorily appears in any mode that they were made under that sanction, whether it be directly proved by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, from the opinions of the medical or other attendants expressed to him, or from his conduct or other circumstances of the case. Such declarations must relate to the circumstances of the death; they cannot be received as proof when not connected as res gestæ with the death.[4]

See further ADMISSION, 2; ESTOPPEL; HEARSAY; PAROL, 2, Evidence; RES, Gestæ.

2. A statement in legal form of the plaintiff's cause of action.[5]

The plea by which a plaintiff in a suit at law sets out his cause of action, as the word "complaint" is in the same sense the technical name of a bill in chancery.[6]

The first pleading filed in a suit is the declaration, narratio, count; anciently called the "tale." In this the plaintiff sets forth his cause of complaint at length; cases, Valentine, J. See generally 22 Cent. Law J. 509 (1886), cases.

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 128-40; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 185-200, 252.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 131-46; 1 Whart. Ev. § 201.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 147-55; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 226-37.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 112-14, 174-76; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1192.

[5] Winchester Manuf. Co. v. Creary, 116 U. S. 165 (1885); Jones v. Simpson, ib. 611 (1886); Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 id. 616 (1883); Moses v. Dunham, 71 Ala. 177 (1881); Roberts v. Medbery, 132 Mass. 101 (1882), cases; Scheble v. Jordon, 30 Kan. 354 (1883); Barbour v. Duncanson, 77 Va. 76 (1883); Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 316-19 (1886).

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 111; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1205-6.

[7] People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 435 (1874).

[1] Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 21 (1855), cases.

[2] Rex v. Woodcock, 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 567 (1789), Eyre, Ch. B.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 156.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 151-61 b; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 293; People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 40 (1875); Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 226 (1882).

[4] People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 640, 645 (1881), cases. See generally 19 Cent. Law J. 128-39 (1884), cases; 1 Kan. Law J. 134 (1885), cases.

[5] Smith v. Fowle, 12 Wend. 10 (1834), Savage, C. J.

[6] United States v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 340 (1883), Miller, J.

it being, indeed, only an amplification of the original writ (q. v.) upon which his action is founded, with the additional circumstances of time and place when and where the injury was committed.[1]

A declaration contains a succinct statement of the plaintiff's case, and generally comprises the following parts: (1) The title and the date — the court, day and year, term, and number of the case; (2) the venue — State and county; (3) the commencement — A B, by his attorney or in person, complains of C D, for that, heretofore, etc.; (4) the body — which consists of: (a) the inducement (q. v.) — introductory matter; (b) the averments — allegations of performance of precedents by the plaintiff; (c) the counts — statements of injuries by the defendant; (5) the conclusion — "to the damage of plaintiff —— dollars; and thereupon (or wherefore) he brings suit."[2]

See further AMENDMENT, 1; CONSOLIDATE, Actions; COUNT, 4; CURE, 2; DAMAGES, General; DESCRIPTION, 4; PLEADING; SUIT, 1.

Declaratory. Rendering clear what was before obscure: giving a clear statement; making certain what might remain in doubt; explanatory; elucidatory: as, a declaratory covenant, act, statute, law.

The "declaratory part of the law" is that portion whereby the rights to be observed and the wrongs to be eschewed are clearly defined and laid down.[3]

A "statute declaratory" of the common law states what that law is, as where a custom has almost fallen into disuse or become disputable.[4]

A declaratory statute removes uncertainty as to the rule of law when decisions or prior enactments conflict. It may elucidate existing common or statute law.

Magna Charta was for the most part declaratory of the principal grounds of the fundamental laws of England.[5]

A large portion of our modern codes is but declaratory of the common law as expounded by the courts.[6]

Statutes declaratory of the meaning of former acts are not uncommon. By the courts they are regarded with respect, as expressive of the legislative opinion, and, so far as they can act upon subsequent transactions, they are of binding force. But they cannot operate to disturb rights acquired before their enactment, or to impose penalties for lawful acts done before their passage. The construction of an existing statute is a judicial function.[7] See DECLARE.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 293; 5 Johns. 435.

[2] See 1 Chitty, Pl. 356; 7 Ark. 289; 12 Wend. 10.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 54.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 86.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 127.

[6] Cincinnati City v. Morgan, 3 Wall. 298 (1865).

[7] Stockdale v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 20 Wall. 340 (1873); Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 678 (1881); Salters v. Tobias, 3 Paige, 344 (1832).

Declare.[1] To announce clearly as fact or truth.

1. To aver, affirm, allege in express terms: as, to declare a person innocent or guilty.

2. To announce, pronounce, decide: as, to declare a contract illegal or void, or a statute unconstitutional.

3. To state or set forth as a cause of action.

4. To proclaim as due: as to declare a dividend, q. v.

"In no part of the application did the assured promise that he would not practice any pernicious habit. He 'declared' that he would not. To 'declare' is to state, assert, publish, utter, announce, announce clearly some opinion or resolution; while to 'promise' is to agree, 'pledge one's self, engage, assure or make sure, pledge by contract.' The assured declared, as a matter of intention, that he would not practice any pernicious habit. Was this declaration of future intention false? There is no allegation, much less proof, that it was so. The assured might well have intended to adhere to his declaration in the most perfect good faith, and yet in a moment of temptation have been overcome by this insidious enemy"[2] — intoxicating liquor, from the use of which the assured was attacked with delirium tremens and died.

"Declare and affirm" may be equivalent to promise and affirm.[3]

For a judge to "declare the law," is for him to charge the law arising upon the evidence.[4]

5. To determine what shall constitute; to define.

Declaring that a certain act shall constitute an offense, is "defining" that offense.[5]

Declarant. 1. One who states a thing as a fact; he who asserts a thing for the truth.

2. One who avers the truth of a matter as the basis of a cause of action. See DECLARATION, 2.

DECORATION DAY. See HOLIDAY.

DECOY. "Decoy letters" are, ordinarily, letters prepared and mailed for the purpose of detecting criminals.

It is no objection to a conviction upon evidence produced by means of a decoy letter that the prohibited act was discovered by such a letter addressed to a person who had no actual existence. There is a class of cases in respect to larceny and robbery in which it is held that when one person procures, or originally induces, the commission of the act the doer cannot be convicted — because the taking was not against the will of the owner. Many frauds upon the postal,

[1] L. declarare, to make clear.

[2] Knecht v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 90 Pa. 121 (1879), Paxson, J.

[3] Bassett v. Denn, 17 N. J. L. 433 (1840).

[4] Crabtree v. State, 1 Lea, 270 (1878).

[5] United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 486 (1887).

revenue, and other laws, can effectually be discovered only by means of decoys.[1]

Where the guilty intent to commit crime has been formed, any one may furnish opportunities or even lend assistance to the criminal, to expose him. . . But no court will countenance a violation of positive law or contrivances for inducing a person to commit a crime.[2]

Exceptions to the principle exist in two cases: (1) Where it is a condition to an offense that it should be "against the will" of the party injured, as in prosecutions for rape, highway robbery, and assaults not offenses against the public peace, there must be an acquittal when it appears that the party alleged to be injured invited the commission of the offense. (2) Where there are physical conditions of an offense inconsistent with a trap, so that these conditions cannot exist where there is a trap, the defendant must be acquitted; as when the door of a house is opened by its owner to give a burglar entrance.

Judge Benedict, in United States v. Bott, 11 Blatch. 346 (1873), and Judge Drummond, in Bates v. United States, 10 F. R. 92 (1881), decided that it is no defense to an indictment under Revised Statutes, sec. 3893 (act of July 12, 1876), for sending an obscene book by mail, that the book was sent to a detective who gave a fictitious name. Contra, United States v. Whittier, supra.[3]

A "decoy" or "test" letter should get into the mail in some of the ordinary ways provided by the postal authorities, and as part of the "mail matter."[4]

DECREE.[5] The decision, judgment, or sentence of a court of equity, admiralty, probate, or divorce jurisdiction.

A sentence or order of a court of equity, pronounced on hearing and understanding all the points in issue, and determining the right of all the parties to the suit, according to equity and good conscience.[6]

A judgment in a suit, equitable in nature, rendered by a court exercising equitable powers.[7]

Like a judgment at law, it is the sentence pronounced by the court upon the matter of right between the parties, and is founded on the pleadings and proofs in the cause.[1] See JUDGMENT.

A draft of a decree made by the judge for convenience, that counsel might see in a general way what decree he was prepared to enter, cannot be considered a decree; and in such case the word "decree" on the clerk's docket cannot amount to an entry of the paper as a decree. The word may mean "decree to be entered," or "stands for decree," as well as decree "entered."[2]

Decrees in equity operate only upon the person.[3]

Decretal. In the nature of a final decree.

When an "order" (which is interlocutory, and made on motion or petition), in an event resulting from a direction contained in it, may lead to the termination of the suit in like manner as a decree at the hearing, it is called a "decretal" order.[4]

Interlocutory decree. A decree which directs an inquiry as to a matter of law or fact preparatory to a final decision. Final decree. A decree which finally decides and disposes of the merits of the whole cause, and reserves no further question or direction for the future judgment of the court, so that it will not be necessary to bring the cause again before the court for decision.[5]

A decree is "interlocutory" when it finds the general equities, and the cause is retained for reference, feigned issue, or consideration, to ascertain some matter of fact or law when it again comes under the consideration of the court for final disposition.[6]

A decree is "interlocutory" which leaves anything to be done to afford completely the relief contemplated. Such a decree may always, in a pending cause, on a rehearing, be altered at the sound discretion of the chancellor, however great the lapse of time.[7]

A decree is "final" which finally disposes of the subject of litigation so far as the court making it is concerned. . . It is the last decree necessary to give the parties the full and entire benefit of the judgment. . . A decree is not the less final because some further order may become necessary to carry it into effect.[8]

When the decree decides the right to the property in contest, and directs it to be delivered up, or to be

---

[1] United States v. Whittier, 5 Dill. 39-41 (1878), cases, Dillon, Cir. J.

[2] Ibid., 45. Treat, J.

[3] Note by Francis Wharton, Bates's Case, 10 F. R. 97-100, cases. See also note to Speiden v. State, 3 Tex. Ap. 156 (1871), in 30 Am. Rep. 129, cases; Saunders v. People, 38 Mich. 222 (1878); People v. Collins, 53 Cal. 185 (1878); State v. Jansen, 22 Kan. 498 (1879), cases; Commonwealth v. Cohen, 127 Mass. 282 (1879); Wright v. State, 7 Tex. Ap. 574 (1880); People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137 (1883); 19 F. R. 89; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 262; 25 Alb. Law J. 184 (1882); 15 Irish L. T. 583.

[4] United States v. Rapp, 30 F. R. 822 (1887), Neuman, J.

[5] L. decretum: de cernere, to decide literally, to separate.

[6] 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 986.

[7] See McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 65 (1865); 3 Bl. Com. 451.

[1] Rowley v. Van Benthuysen, 16 Wend. 368 (1836).

[2] Fairbanks v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 32 F. R. 573 (1887), Colt, J.

[3] Wilson v. Joseph, 107 Ind. 491 (1886), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 48 (1887); ib. 50-54, cases.

[4] [Brown, Law Dict.: 22 Mich. 201.

[5] [Beebe v. Russell, 19 How. 285 (1856), Wayne, J.; Whiting v. Bank of United States, 13 Pet. 15 (1839).

[6] Kelley v. Stanberry, 13 Ohio, 421 (1844).

[7] Wright v. Strother, 76 Va. 857, 859 (1882); ib. 69, 169; 77 id. 806.

[8] Mills v. Hoag, 7 Paige, 19 (1837), Walworth, Ch. Cited, 19 How. 285; 10 Wall. 567. See 10 Paige, 181.

sole, or that the defendant pay a sum of money to the complainant, and the complainant is entitled to have such decree carried immediately into execution, the decree must be regarded as a "final" one to that extent.[1]

"The current of decisions fully sustains the rule laid down by the late Chief Justice," [2] in the foregoing case.

It is not unusual in courts of equity to enter decrees determining the rights of parties, and the extent of the liability of one party to another, giving at the same time a right to apply to the court for modification and directions. It has never been doubted that such decrees are "final." They are all that is necessary to give to the successful party the full benefit of the judgment.[3]

A "final decree" conclusively settles all the legal rights of the parties involved in the pleadings.[4] See further FINAL, 3.

A final decree in equity may be modified or set aside: by an appeal within the time prescribed by law; by a bill of review, filed within such time, charging error apparent upon the record; and by an original bill charging fraud or newly discovered evidence.[5]

Decrees are also classified as: decrees by default, against parties who do not appear, in which case the plaintiff takes such decree as he can stand by; decrees by consent, in which the form depends upon agreement; decrees pro confesso, by admission, in which the form depends upon the case made by the bill — as see below; and decrees on the hearing, which vary with the nature of the suit and the relief prayed for.[6]

A bill to "suspend a decree" seeks to avoid or suspend the operation of the decree. A bill to "carry a decree into execution" lies when, from any cause, without further aid, a decree cannot be executed.

A decree taking a bill pro confesso, or in default of an answer, is intended to prepare the case for final decree. Its effect is like that of a default at common law, by which the defendant is deemed to have admitted all that is well pleaded in the declaration. The matters in the bill do not pass in rem judicatam until the final decree is made — which may be against the plaintiff.[1]

The court will decree what is proper upon the statements in the bill assumed to be true.[2]

When a bill contains a joint charge against several defendants one of whom makes default, the correct mode of proceeding is to enter a default and a formal decree pro confesso against such one, and proceed with the cause upon the answers of the other defendants. The defaulting defendant has lost his standing in court: he is not entitled to service of notices; nor to adduce evidence, nor to be heard at the final hearing — he cannot appear in any way. If the suit should be decided against the complainant on the merits, the bill will be dismissed as to all the defendants alike — the defaulter included; but if in the complainant's favor he will be entitled to a final decree against all. A final decree on the merits against the defaulting defendant alone, pending the continuance of the cause, would be incongruous and illegal.[3]

A final decree affirmed by the highest court is conclusive as between the parties,[4] and as binding as a judgment at law.[5] When there are no words of qualification indicating a privilege to take further proceedings, it will be presumed to have been rendered upon the merits.[6]

The language of a decree is construed with reference to the issue put forward by the prayer for relief and the other pleadings, and which these show it was meant to decide.[7] See EQUITY; RELIEF, 2; REVIEW, 2; TERM, 4.

DECREPIT. A "decrepit person" may mean one who is disabled, incapable or incompetent, from physical or mental weakness or defects produced by age or other cause, to such an extent as to render him comparatively helpless in a personal conflict with one possessed of ordinary health and strength.[8]

DEDICATION.[9] Appropriation to public uses of some right or property: as, the dedication of a highway, landing, square, park, land for school purposes; the dedication of an invention, or of a literary or musical composition.

[1] Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 204 (1848), Taney, C. J.; Winthrop Iron Co. v. Meeker, 109 U. S. 183 (1883); District of Columbia v. Washington Market Co., 108 id. 242 (1883); Parsons v. Robinson, 122 id. 114-15 (1887).

[2] Thomson v. Dean, 7 Wall. 346 (1868), cases, Chase, Chief Justice.

[3] Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 587 (1870), Strong, J.; 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 641.

[4] French v. Shoemaker, 12 Wall. 98 (1870). See also 70 Ala. 577; 34 Ark. 130; 9 Fla. 47; 105 Ill. 26; 3 Md. 505; 32 Mich. 201; 2 Miss. 326; 10 Nev. 405; 12 Johns. 508; 14 Wend. 542; 1 Ohio St. 520; 1 Heisk. 526; 1 Wash. T. 174.

[5] Huntington v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 585 (1883).

[6] [Abbott's Law Dict.]

[1] Russell v. Lathrop, 122 Mass. 302-3 (1877), cases; Attorney-General v. Young, 3 Ves. Jr. 209 (1796), cases; Rose v. Woodruff, 4 Johns. Ch. *547 (1820), cases.

[2] Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104, 110-14, 118 (1885), cases.

[3] Frow v. De La Vega, 15 Wall. 554 (1872), Bradley, J.

[4] Re Howard, 9 Wall. 175, 182 (1869); Lyon v. Perin, 125 U. S. 702 (1888), cases.

[5] Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 76 (1853).

[6] Durant v. Essex Company, 7 Wall. 109 (1868), cases.

[7] Graham v. La Crosse R. Co., 3 Wall. 704 (1865); Carneal v. Banks, 10 Wheat. 181 (1825); 1 Story, Eq. §§ 28, 437, 439.

[8] Hall v. State, 16 Tex. Ap. 11 (1884), Willson, J.; Penal Code, Art. 496.

[9] L. dedicare, to devote: dicare, to declare.

1. The act of giving or devoting property to some public use.[1] Whence dedicator.

An appropriation of realty by the owner to the use of the public, and the adoption thereof by the public; as, the dedication of soil for a highway.[2]

Has respect to the possession of the land, not to the permanent estate.[3]

Express, when explicitly made by oral declaration, deed, or vote; implied, when there is acquiescence in a public use.[4]

Made according to the common law or in pursuance of statute. A statutory dedication operates by way of a grant; a common-law dedication, by way of estoppel in pais. May also be made in præsenti to be accepted in futuro.[5]

Is a conclusion of fact, from all the circumstances of each case.[6]

An appropriation of land to some public use, made by the owner of the fee, and accepted for such use by or on behalf of the public.[7]

The vital principle is the animus dedicandi. Time, though often a material ingredient, is not indispensable. A dedication is a conclusion of fact to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each case.[7]

At common law no special form of ceremony is necessary — simply assent in the owner, a public use, and acceptance by the public, which last may be evidenced by user. The assent, which must be clear, is provable by a writing, by parol, or by acts irreconcilable with any other construction; as, where a man makes a plan of lots, with streets, and sells lots by such plan. A use, from which a dedication may be presumed, may be much less than thirty years' continuance.[8]

Acceptance may be presumed where the gift is beneficial; use is evidence that it is beneficial.[9]

An act of Congress which merely "reserves" sections of public lands for school purposes does not work a dedication, in the strict sense.[1]

See EASEMENT; LICENSE, 1; SQUARE; USE, 2, User; WATER-MARK.

2. On dedicating an invention to public use, see PATENT, 2: USE, 2, Public.

3. Publishing an uncopyrighted work is a dedication of such work to the public.[2] See COPYRIGHT; DRAMA.

DEDIMUS. L. We have given. See DARE.

A commission to take testimony, the full name of which is dedimus potestatem, we have given power.

In English practice the writ issues out of chancery, and empowers the person named to perform designated judicial acts: as, to administer oaths, take answers in equity suits, examine witnesses.[3]

With us the term is seldom, if ever, used in any other sense than that of a commission to take testimony by deposition, q. v.

"In any case where it is necessary, in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice, any of the courts of the United States may grant a dedimus potestatem to take depositions according to common usage."[4]

"Common usage" here refers to the usage prevailing in the courts of the State in which the Federal court may be sitting.

Whether the writ is necessary to prevent a "failure or delay of justice" is for the court to determine upon the facts presented. "In any case" includes criminal as well as civil proceedings.[5]

The admissibility of the testimony will be reserved till the time of trial. The testimony may be considered by the court in imposing sentence.[6]

DEDUCTION. See DRAWBACK; REPRISES; SET-OFF.

DEED. 1. A thing done; an act; a matter of fact, as opposed to a matter of law: as, a condition, an estoppel, a seisin in deed. Corresponds to the French pais, q. v.

2. A writing sealed and delivered by the maker — the most solemn and authentic act a man can perform with relation to the disposal of property.[7]

A writing, sealed and delivered; to be duly executed, must be on paper or parchment.[8]

[1] Rees v. Chicago, 38 Ill. 335 (1865).

[2] [Hobbs v. Lowell, 19 Pick. 407-10 (1837), cases, Shaw, C. J.; Brakken v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 29 Minn. 42 (1881).

[3] Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 29 (1884), cases.

[4] See 30 Kan. 637-38, 642; 69 Ga. 546.

[5] City of Denver v. Clements, 3 Col. 479-83 (1877), cases; ib. 485-86.

[6] Quinn v. Anderson, 70 Cal. 456 (1886), cases.

[7] Ward v. Farwell, 6 Col. 69 (1881), Elbert, C. J.; Steele v. Sullivan, 70 Ala. 593-94 (1881), cases; Angell, Highw. 142.

[8] See Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 440 (1832); Irwin v. Dixion, 9 How. 30-31 (1850), cases; Boston v. Lecraw, 17 id. 435-36 (1854); 1 Bond, 81; 11 Ala. 63; 4 Cal. 114; 25 Conn. 235; 12 Ga. 244; 76 Ind. 254; 21 La. An. 244; 34 id. 618; 124 Mass. 64; 27 Mo. 211; 77 id. 561; 33 N. J. L. 18; 22 Wend. 444, 450; 6 Hill, 411; 19 Barb. 193; 26 Pa. 187; 22 Tex. 100; 9 Wis. 244; 23 id. 420; 3 Kent, 451; Angell, Highw. 111.

[9] Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 592-96 (1887), cases.

[1] Minnesota v. Bachelder, 1 Wall. 114 (1863).

[2] Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean, 32 (1849); Pulte v Derby, ib. 328 (1853); Thompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32 (1882).

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 447; 1 id. 352; 2 id. 351.

[4] R. S. § 866: Judiciary Act, 1789, sec. 30.

[5] United States v. Cameron, 15 F. R. 794 (1883); Warren v. Younger, 18 id. 862 (1884); 20 Blatch. 232.

[6] United States v. Wilder, 4 Woods, 475 (1882): 14 F. R. 393.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 295; Wood v. Owings, 1 Cranch, 351 (1808); 3 How. 645.

[8] 4 Kent, 450.

The word in itself imports a written instrument;[1] — a written instrument under seal, containing a contract of agreement which has been delivered by the party to be bound and accepted by the obligee or covenantee.[2]

An instrument or agreement under seal.[3]

This comprehensive meaning includes any writing under seal; as, a bond, lease, mortgage, agreement to convey realty, bill of sale, policy of insurance.

In common use often limited to a writing, under seal, transferring real estate; a deed of conveyance of realty. See CONVEYANCE, 2; TITLE, 1.

In its largest sense includes a mortgage,[4] q. v.

A "good deed" to land means, in a covenant, a conveyance sufficient to pass whatever right a party has in the land, without warranty or personal covenant; it does not imply the conveyance of a good title.[5]

A "good and perfect deed" to land may intend the conveyance of a perfect title clear of all incumbrances, including a right of dower.[6]

A "good and sufficient deed" may refer either to the form of the conveyance or to the interest or title.[7] A "good and sufficient deed of warranty," or "with covenant of warranty," may also refer to the kind of deed or to the quality of the title.[8]

A deed for a "sufficient title" means for a good title — with the usual covenants of warranty.[9] So as to a "good and sufficient conveyance."[10]

A "lawful deed" means a deed conveying a lawful and good title.[11]

Collateral deed. A defeasance, q. v.

Deed poll. A deed not indented, but cut even; a deed made by one party only: as, a sheriff's deed. See POLL, 1.

Deeds under the statute of uses. See USE, 8.

[1] Pierson v. Townsend, 2 Hill, 551 (1842).

[2] McMurty v. Brown, 6 Neb. 376 (1877).

[3] Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 345 (1791). See 1 Ark. 112; 42 N. J. E. 385; 25 Hun, 294; 5 Saw. 603.

[4] Hellman v. Howard, 44 Cal. 104 (1872); People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 391 (1872).

[5] Barrow v. Bispham, 11 N. J. L. 110, 119 (1829).

[6] Greenwood v. Ligon, 18 Miss. 617 (1848); 21 id. 275, 582, 677.

[7] Brown v. Covilland, 6 Cal. 573 (1856); Brown v. Gammon, 14 Me. 279 (1837); Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 16 (1859).

[8] Tindall v. Conover, 20 N. J. L. 215–17 (1843); Joslyn v. Taylor, 33 Vt. 474 (1860); 36 Ill. 69; 5 Mass. 494; 11 N. J. L. 119; 2 Johns. 595; 14 id. 294; 16 id. 269; 20 id. 130; 11 Vt. 47, 549.

[9] Ware v. Starkey, 80 Va. 196 (1885).

[10] Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 45, 50 (1886).

[11] Dearth v. Williamson, 2 S. & R. 499 (1816); Withers v. Baird, 7 Watts, 229 (1838). On void deeds, see McArthur v. Johnson, Phillips' Law, 317 (1867): 98 Am. Dec. 592, 596–98, cases.

Title deed. Any sealed evidence of title, q. v.

Trust deed. An instrument that creates a trust, q. v.; also, a mortgage.

See also COMPOSITION, 3; INSPECTION, 3; SEPARATION; SETTLEMENT, 3.

At common law, the general requisites of a deed are: 1. Persons able to contract and to be contracted with for the purposes intended, and a thing or subject-matter to be contracted for,—all expressed by sufficient names. 2. A sufficient consideration. 3. Writing or printing upon paper or parchment. 4. The matter must be legally and orderly set forth: there must be words sufficient to specify the agreement and bind the parties, which sufficiency the courts decide. The formal parts of a deed conveying realty are: (a) the premises — the names of the parties, recitals explanatory of the transaction, the consideration, the thing granted; (b) the habendum and tenedum (to have and to hold) — defining the nature of the grant; (c) the terms of stipulation upon which the grant is made — the reddendum or reservation; (d) the condition or contingency upon the happening of which the estate will be defeated; (e) the warranty securing the estate; (f) the covenants — stipulating for the truth of facts, or that a thing will be done; (g) the conclusion — mentioning the execution and the time thereof. 5. Reading — when desired. 6. Sealing, and signing. 7. Delivery — absolute or conditional. 8. Attestation — for preserving evidence of the transaction.[1]

The construction of a deed must be favorable, and as near the intent of the parties as the rules of law admit; also reasonable, and agreeable to common understanding. Where the intention is clear too minute a stress is not to be laid upon the strict, precise signification of words. False English will not vitiate. The construction is to be made upon the entire deed. When all other rules fail, the language will be taken most strongly against the party who proposes it. If the words bear different senses, that is preferred which is most agreeable to law. Of two repugnant clauses the first will be received.[2]

A deed is to be so construed, when possible, as to give effect to the intention of the parties. That this may be done, the court will place itself in the situation of the grantor at the date of the transaction with his knowledge of the surrounding circumstances and of the import of the words used.[3]

See further ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; ALTER, 2; BOND; CANCEL; CHARTER, 1; CONDITION; CONSIDERATION, 2; COVENANT; DELIBERATION, 1; DELIVERY, 3; DESCRIPTION, 1; DURESS; ESCROW; EXCEPTION, 1; GRANT, 2; INDENTURE; INFLUENCE; INSANITY, 2 (4); INSTRUMENT, 3; PARCHMENT; PARTY, 2; POSSESSION, Adverse; PREMISES; PRESENTS, (1); PROFERT; PROVIDED; READING; RECITAL; RECORDING; REGISTRY, 2; RELATION, 1; RESERVE, 4; SEAL, 1; SIGN; SPECIALTY; THENCE; WARRANTY, 1; WILL, 2; WRITING.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 296–309.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 379–81; 3 Kent, 432.

[3] Cilley v. Childs, 78 Me. 133 (1886), cases; Moses v. Morse, 74 id. 475 (1883); Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 86 (1884), cases; 87 Ind. 179; 77 Va. 492. By corporate officers, 26 Cent. Law J. 444–45 (1888), cases.

DEEM. When by enactment certain acts are "deemed" to be a crime of a particular nature they constitute such crime, and are not a semblance or a fanciful approximation of it.[1]

"Deemed" and "adjudged," in a penal statute, have the same meaning.[2]

DEFACE. See ALTER, 2; CANCEL.

DEFALCATION.[3] 1. Reduction of a claim by allowance of a counter-claim.

Setting off another account or another contract.[4]

Defalcation was unknown at common law, according to which mutual debts were distinct and inextinguishable except by actual payment or release.[5] See RECOUP; SET-OFF.

"Defalcate" is the verb; "defalk" is obsolete.[6]

2. Misappropriation of trust funds — by a public or corporate officer.

Defaulter. One whose peculations have brought him within the cognizance of the law, to the extent, at least, of excluding him from a public trust.

To apply the epithet to a person who is free from that stigma is defamatory.[7]

DEFAMATORY. Words which produce perceptible injury to the reputation of another are described as defamatory. Whence defamation.

Defamatory words, if false, are actionable. False defamatory words, if written and published, constitute a libel; if spoken, a slander.[8]

A defamatory publication is a false publication calculated to bring the person into disrepute, but it is not necessarily malicious.[9] See FAME; LIBEL, 5; OBLOQUY; SLANDER.

DEFAULT.[10] 1, n. (1) Something wrongful; some omission to do that which ought to have been done.[11]

Non-performance of a duty; as, the non-payment of money due.[12]

In an accountable receipt executed by a person to whom property levied upon was delivered, he promising to deliver the articles whenever demanded, or "in default thereof" to pay the amount of the debt called for in the writ, held, that the reference was to a breach of legal duty.[1]

There can be no default where the omission to do the thing, as to make a payment on a mortgage, has the concurrence of the other party.[2]

A special promise to answer for the default of another must be in writing and signed, as see FRAUDS, Statute of.

A defaulting purchaser is one who fails to complete his purchase at a public sale. See AUCTION.

(2) An omission, neglect or failure to do something required by law, or by a court administering the law.

When a defendant omits to plead within the time allowed for that purpose, or fails to appear at the trial, he "makes default," and the judgment entered in the former case is "a judgment by default."[3]

To "suffer a default" is to let a case go by neglect or inattention, usually designed.

When the plaintiff makes default he may be nonsuited; but a default, in either party, for cause shown, may be "excused" or "saved."

A witness, a juror, and an officer of court, is said to make default when remiss in his attention to duty.

A judgment by default, for the purpose of the particular action, admits the legality of the demand in suit: it does not make the allegations of the declaration or complaint evidence in an action upon a different claim.[4] See INQUIRY, Writ of; NOTICE, 1, Judicial.

2, v. To have judgment entered against one on account of some default: as, that a defendant "shall be defaulted unless he files an affidavit of defense."

Defaulted, adj. Due, but not paid; past due: as, defaulted — interest, coupons, bonds, payment.[5]

DEFAULTER. See DEFALCATION, 2.

DEFEASANCE. A defeating: undoing, overthrow, avoidance, destruction, deprivation. See FEASANCE.

Defeasible. Capable of avoidance or destruction. Indefeasible. Not admitting of abolition or impairment.

Many constitutional rights are spoken of as indefeasible.

Two uses of defeasance are recognized:

1. A collateral deed, made at the same

---

[1] Commonwealth v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 247 (1882).

[2] Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 111 (1877); State v. Price, 11 N. J. L. 218 (1830).

[3] A in -făl- as in fan. L. diffalcare, to abate, deduct, take away.

[4] Houk v. Foley, 2 P. & W. 260 (1830).

[5] Commonwealth v. Clarkson, 1 Rawle, 298 (1829); 6 Mo. 266.

[6] Webster's Dict.

[7] State v. Kounts, 12 Mo. Ap. 513 (1882).

[8] Odgers, Libel & Slander, 1.

[9] Marks v. Baker, 28 Minn. 166 (1881).

[10] F. de-faulte, to want, fail.

[11] Union Trust Co. v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 5 Dill. 22 (1878); Albert v. Grosvenor Investment Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. *128-29 (1867).

[12] Williams v. Stern, 5 Q. B. D. 413 (1879).

[1] Mason v. Aldrich, 36 Minn. 286 (1886), cases.

[2] Union Trust Co. v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., ante.

[3] Page v. Sutton, 29 Ark. 306 (1874): Burrill. See also 54 Ala. 430; 5 Iowa, 265; 29 id. 245; 11 Neb. 398.

[4] Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 356 (1876). See also 3 Col. 277; 6 id. 485; 3 Bl. Com. 397; 24 Cent. Law J. 27 (1887), cases; as against non-residents, 21 Am. Law Rev. 715-31 (1887), cases.

[5] See Foster v. Morse, 132 Mass. 355 (1882).

time with another conveyance, containing conditions upon the performance of which the estate created may be "defeated" or totally undone.[1]

A bond for a reconveyance upon the payment of a specific sum, at a specified time, made at the same time and of the same date as a deed of conveyance.[2]

Formerly, every mortgagor enfeoffed the mortgagee who simultaneously executed a deed of defeasance, considered a part of the mortgage, whereby the feoffment was rendered void on repayment of the money at a certain day. But things that were merely executory, or to be completed by matters subsequent, could always be recalled by defeasances made subsequent to the time of their creation.[1]

It is not of the essence of a mortgage that there should be a defeasance; and there may be a defeasance of a deed of conveyance without constituting it a mortgage. The essence of a defeasance is to defeat the principal deed and make it void ab initio, if the condition be performed.[3]

A defeasance made subsequently to an executed contract must be part of the original transaction. At law, the instrument must be of as high a nature as the principal deed. Defeasances of deeds conveying realty are subject to the same rules as such deeds themselves, as to record and notice to purchasers; but in some States notice of the existence of a defeasance, to be binding, must be derived from the public records.[4]

When an absolute deed is shown to have been originally made as security for a loan of money, a court of equity will treat it as a mortgage, and allow the grantor to redeem the estate, on the ground that the defeasance was omitted from the deed by fraud or mistake.[5]

But to reduce a conveyance to a mortgage the defeasance may be required by statute to be in writing, duly acknowledged and recorded.[6]

2. A defeasance to a bond, recognizance, or judgment recovered is a condition which, when performed, defeats or undoes it, in the same manner as a defeasance to an estate.

The "condition" of a bond is always inserted in the bond or deed itself; a "defeasance" is made by a separate, and frequently by a subsequent, deed. This, like the condition of a bond, when performed, disincumbers the obligor's estate.[7] See CONDITION.

DEFEAT. See DEFEASANCE; CONDITION.

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 327.

[2] [Butman v. James, 34 Minn. 550 (1885), Berry, J.; 4 Pick. 352.

[3] Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 540 (1837), Story, J.

[4] See 21 Ala. 9; 3 Mich. 432; 7 Watts, 261, 401; 13 Mass. 443; 40 Me. 381; 43 id. 206; 14 Wend. 63; 17 S. & R. 70; 8 Washb. R. P. 489.

[5] 2 Kent, 142; Butman v. James, 34 Minn. 550 (1886).

[6] See Penn. Act 8 June, 1881; Mich. R. S. 261; Minn. St. L., 1873, 34, § 23.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 342; 43 Me. 371; 14 N. J. L. 364.

DEFECT. Under the covenant in a charter-party that the vessel is "tight, staunch, and strong," the owner is answerable for latent as well as for visible defects, whereby the cargo is damaged.[1]

See CAVEAT; CHALLENGE; CURE, 2.

DEFENCE. See DEFENSE.

DEFENDANT. One who is called upon in a court to make satisfaction for an injury done or complained of.[2]

A person sued or prosecuted; a respondent.

In the rules in admiralty, framed by the Supreme Court, "defendant" is used indifferently for a respondent in a suit in personam and for a claimant in a suit in rem.[3]

Co-defendant. A joint or fellow defendant.

Defendant above or defendant in error. The party against whom a writ of error is taken.

Material defendant. In equity, a defendant against whom relief is sought; opposed to nominal defendant.

Where a code provided that a bill in equity should be filed in the district where the defendants or a material defendant resides, it was held that the object was to discriminate between defendants whose attitude to the case does and does not, make them real participants in the litigation, that a material defendant was one who is really interested in the suit, and against whom a decree is sought.[4-6]

As employed in sections of a code relating to jurisdiction, the word "defendants" was held to mean not nominal defendants merely, but parties who had a real and substantial interest adverse to the plaintiff, and against whom substantial relief was sought; and that to decide otherwise would encourage colorable practices for defeating jurisdiction in the particular class of cases.[5]

In a judgment, "defendant" may be a collective term, embracing all who by the record are liable under the judgment.[6]

A garnishee is a "defendant in the action," who, in pursuance of a statute, may be restrained from disposing of property to the injury of the attaching creditor.[7]

In the Massachusetts Gen. Sts. c. 146, § 38, providing that, if an execution has not been satisfied, the court, "upon petition of the defendant," may order a stay, if the petitioner gives the adverse party security for the prosecution of the review, refers to the party

[1] Hubert v. Recknagel, 13 F. R. 912 (1882).

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 25.]

[3] Atlantic Mutual Marine Ins. Co. v. Alexander, 16 F. R. 281 (1883).

[4] Lewis v. Elrod, 38 Ala. 21 (1861), Walker, C. J.

[5] Allen v. Miller, 11 Ohio St. 378 (1860).

[6] Claggett v. Blanchard, 8 Dana, 243 (1839).

[7] Almy v. Platt, 16 Wis. 169 (1862).

against whom the judgment sought to be reversed is rendered, not to the defendant in the original action.[1]

Ordinarily, a municipal corporation is not affected by a law which speaks in general terms of defendants, unless expressly brought within the provisions.[2]

Compare LITIGANT; PARTY; PLAINTIFF; RESPONDENT; SUITOR. See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

DEFENSE, or DEFENCE.[3] 1. Resistance of an attack; resistance with force of an attack made with force or violence.

Self-defense. Protection of person or property from injury.

The defense of one's self, or the mutual and reciprocal defense of such as stand in the relation of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant, is a species of redress of private injury which arises from the act of the injured party. In these cases, if the party himself, or a person in one of these relations, be forcibly attacked in his person or property, it is lawful for him to repel force with force. . . The law in this case respects the passions of the human mind and makes it lawful in a man to do himself that immediate justice to which he is prompted by nature, and which no prudential motives are strong enough to restrain. It considers that the future process of the law is by no means an adequate remedy for injuries accompanied with force; since it is impossible to say to what wanton lengths of rapine or cruelty outrages of this sort might be carried unless it were permitted a man immediately to oppose one violence with another. "Self-defense," therefore, as it is, justly called the primary law of nature, so it is not, neither can it be in fact, taken away by the law of society. . . Care must be taken that the resistance does not exceed the bounds of mere defense and prevention: for then the defender would himself become an aggressor.[4]

Homicide in self-defense, upon a sudden affray, is also excusable. This species of self-defense must be distinguished from such as is calculated to hinder the perpetration of a capital crime. This is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault or the like, in the course of a sudden broil or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. . . The right of natural defense does not imply a right of attacking: for, instead of attacking one another for injuries past or impending, men need only have recourse to the proper tribunals of justice. They cannot therefore legally exercise this right of preventive defense but in sudden and violent cases, when certain and immediate suffering would be the consequence of waiting for the assistance of the law. Wherefore, to excuse homicide by the plea of self-defense it must appear that the slayer had no other possible (or at least probable) means of escaping from his assailant.[5] . . The law requires that the person who kills another in his own defense should have retreated as far as he safely can to avoid the violence of the assault before he turns upon his assailant; . . he must flee as far as he conveniently can, by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit, for it may be so fierce as not to allow him to yield a step without manifest danger of his life or enormous bodily harm, and then in his defense he may kill his assailant instantly.[1]

But no one may revenge himself by striking an unnecessary blow, as, when all danger is passed, nor strike when the assault is technical and trivial.[1]

The principles of the law of self-defense may be stated in three propositions: (1) A person who, in the lawful pursuit of his business, is attacked by another under circumstances which denote an intention to take his life, or to do him some enormous bodily harm, may lawfully kill the assailant, provided he uses all the means in his power, otherwise, to save his own life, or prevent the intended harm,—such as retreating as far as he can, or disabling his adversary without killing him, if it be in his power. (2) When the attack upon him is so sudden, fierce, and violent that retreat would not diminish but increase his danger, he may instantly kill his adversary without retreating at all. (3) When, from the nature of the attack, there is reasonable ground to believe that there is a design to destroy his life or commit any felony upon his person, killing the assailant will be excusable homicide, although it should afterward appear that no felony was intended.[2]

The law of self-defense is a law of necessity, real or apparently real. A party may act upon appearances, though they turn out to have been false. Whether they were real or apparently real is for the jury, in a criminal case, to decide upon consideration of all the circumstances out of which the necessity springs. If the jury should find from the evidence that the circumstances were such as to excite the fear of a reasonable man, and that the defendant, acting under the influence of such fear, killed the aggressor to prevent the commission of a felony upon his person or property, he would not be criminally responsible for his death, although the circumstances might be insufficient to prove, by a preponderance of evidence, that the aggressor was actually about to commit a felony.[3]

The right of self-defense does not imply the right of attack, and it will not avail in any case where the difficulty is sought or induced by the party himself. On the other hand, to justify killing an adversary on this ground it is not necessary that the danger apprehended should be real or actually impending. It is only necessary that the defendant should have had reasonable cause to apprehend that there was an immediate design to kill or to do him some great bodily harm, and that there should have been reasonable

[1] Leavitt v. Lyons, 118 Mass. 470 (1875).

[2] Schuyler County v. Mercer County, 9 Ill. 24 (1847).

[3] F. défense: L. defensa: defendere, to strike down or away, ward off, repel. Mid. Eng. defence.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 3; 4 id. 186; 1 id. 130.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 183–84.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 184–85.

[2] Commonwealth v. Selfridge, Sup. Ct. Mass. (1806), Parker, J. Same case, Whart. Homicide, App. No 1; Hor. & T., Cases on Self-Defense, 17; 2 Am. Cr R (Hawley), 259.

[3] People v. Flanagan, 60 Cal. 4 (1881), McKee, J; 42 id. 208, 307; 59 id. 251; United States v. Wiltenberger, 3 Wash. 521 (1819).

sense to apprehend immediate danger of such design being accomplished.[1]

Adjudicated cases hold that among the slayer's acts which abrogate or abridge his right of self-defense are the following: 1. Devices to provoke the deceased to make an assault which will furnish a pretext for taking his life or inflicting serious bodily injury upon him. 2. Provocation of the deceased into a quarrel, causing the fatal affray; but mere words or libelous publications do not amount to such provocation. 3. Preconcert with the deceased to fight him with deadly weapons. 4. Commencing an attack, assault, or a battery upon the deceased. 5. Going with a deadly weapon where the deceased is, for the purpose of provoking a difficulty or bringing on an affray, and by words or acts making some demonstration of such purpose calculated to provoke them.[2]

See ARMS; ASSAULT; BATTERY; FORCE; HOMICIDE; IMMEDIATE; RETREAT; THREAT.

2. That which is offered by a defendant as sufficient to defeat a suit — by denying, justifying, or confessing and avoiding, the cause of action.

A term of art used in common-law pleading in the sense merely of "denial."[3]

When the plaintiff hath stated his case in the declaration, it is incumbent on the defendant within a reasonable time to make his "defense," and to put in a plea; else the plaintiff will recover judgment by default, q. v. . . . Defense, in its true legal sense, signifies not a justification, protection, or guard, which is its popular signification, but an opposing or denial (French, defender) of the truth or validity of the complaint. It is the contestatio litis of the civilians, a general assertion that the plaintiff hath no ground of action, which assertion is afterward extended and maintained in the plea.[4] Compare TRAVERSE.

The right possessed by a defendant, arising out of the facts alleged in his pleadings, which either partially or wholly defeats the plaintiff's claim.[5]

Defenses, in civil procedure, are stated with fullness and particularity in answers to bills and libels, and in affidavits of defense filed to affidavits of claim.

Defense, affidavit of. A sworn written statement of the facts which constitute the defense in a civil action; also called "affidavit of merits." Opposed, affidavit of claim.

The practice which requires affidavits of claims and defense has been systemized in Pennsylvania to a degree of completeness scarcely known elsewhere. The subject is usually discussed in connection with the inquiry, What are the essentials of a "sufficient" affidavit of defense. In that State the practice originated in an agreement between members of the bar at Philadelphia, signed September 11, 1795.[1] After that, statutes extended the practice, until it became general.[2] Yet the courts, by mere rule, could have required defendants to file a statement of defense.[3]

The practice does not conflict with the right of trial by jury. If a defendant presents no defense to be tried by a jury he cannot claim that privilege is denied him. The affidavit is nothing more than a special plea under oath — by which the defendant states the facts of his case for the consideration of the court. Trial by jury in civil cases has never involved the right of the jury to decide the law of the case. That the defendant is obliged to state his plea, or his defense, under oath, is merely a means to prevent delay, by falsehood and fraud. Nor can it be objected, when all the facts have been stated by the defendant which he either knows or is informed of, believes and expects to be able to prove, that the court decides the law arising upon the facts as stated. This is no more than the court does upon a demurrer, a special verdict, a nonsuit or an issue in equity. The affidavit is only a modern mode of making up the issue for the jury. And when, upon a statement of all the facts a defendant can conscientiously swear to, the court finds that the law upon those facts is against him, clearly he has no right to go before a jury. The court has then done no more than it would have a right to do by instruction to the jury when all the evidence is in, with the advantage to the defendant that by his affidavit he has made the evidence to support his own case.[4]

The object is to prevent delay of justice through false defenses.[5] At the same time, the practice being in derogation of the right of trial by jury, regulations are to receive a strict construction.[6]

The procedure, being somewhat summary, the plaintiff, in his affidavit, must have complied with every requirement of the law;[7] otherwise, a judgment given him, for "insufficiency" in the matter relied upon by the defendant, will be reversed, although that matter is really insufficient.[8]

[1] State v. Johnson, 76 Mo. 122, 126 (1882), Norton, J.; State v. Umfried, ib. 408 (1882); 69 id. 469.

[2] Cartwright v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 486, 499 (1883), cases, Hart, J.; Reed v. State, 11 id. 517 (1882); 70 Ala. 7; 71 id. 336-37; 32 Conn. 83; 64 Ind. 340; 89 id. 195; 80 Ky. 36; 14 B. Mon. 108, 614; 38 Mich. 270, 732; 55 Miss. 498; 13 Johns. 12; 89 N. C. 481; 29 Ohio St. 186; 38 Pa. 267-68; 101 id. 393; 45 Vt. 308; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 677; 12 Rep. 268.

[3] United States v. Ordway, 30 F. R. 32 (1887).

[4] Bl. Com. 296. See 33 Ind. 449; 8 How. Pr. 442; 10 M. 148; 24 Barb. 631.

[5] [Utah, &c. R. Co. v. Crawford, 1 Idaho, 773 (1880).

[1] Sellers v. Burk, 47 Pa. 344 (1864); Clark v. Dotter, 54 id. 215 (1867); Detmold v. Gate Vein Coal Co., 3 W. N. C. 567 (U. S. D. C., E. D. Pa., 1876).

[2] 2 Brightly, Purd. Dig. 1356, 1357, pl. 24, note d.

[3] Hogg v. Charlton, 25 Pa. 200 (1855); Harres v. Commonwealth, 35 id. 416 (1860).

[4] Lawrence v. Borm, 86 Pa. 226 (1878), Per Curiam; 19 id. 57; 20 id. 384; Hunt v. Lucas, 99 Mass. 409 (1868), Chapman, C. J.

[5] Wilson v. Hayes, 18 Pa. 354 (1852); Bloomer v. Reed, 22 id. 51 (1853).

[6] Yates v. Burrough of Meadville, 56 Pa. 21 (1867); Wall v. Dovey, 60 id. 212 (1869); Boas v. Nagle, 3 S. & R. 250 (1817).

[7] Knapp v. Duck Creek Valley Oil Co., 53 Pa. 185 (1866).

[8] Gottman v. Shoemaker, 86 Pa. 21 (1877).

The question of insufficiency is brought directly before the court by a rule on the defendant "to show cause why judgment should not be entered against him for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense" — the particulars of the alleged insufficiency being at the same time specified in writing and filed with the rule.

The court considers the facts set out in the affidavit and passes upon their legal sufficiency.[1] For this purpose it takes the facts as true, not to be contradicted even by a record.[2]

It is sufficient to set forth, in the affidavit — facts showing a valid defense which can properly be established;[3] — specifically, and at length, such facts as will warrant the inference of a complete legal defense;[4] — a substantially good defense;[5] — a prima facie good and valid defense.[6]

The defendant must state the grounds and nature of his defense, so that the court may judge how far it will avail against the plaintiff's demand, if established by proof.[7]

The facts are to be averred with reasonable precision; but the evidence by which the defendant will prove them need not be stated.[8] Nor need he meet every objection which fine critical skill may deduce.[9] While an allegation doubtfully stated or clearly evasive is to be disregarded, the defendant is not to be held to a rigor of statement so severe as to catch him in a mere net of form.[9]

The facts are to be averred with reasonable precision, and with certainty to a common intent. Toward sustaining the affidavit a reasonable intendment will be given the language.[10]

But no essential fact is to be left to inference;[11] what is not said is taken as not existing.[12] Furthermore, inasmuch as a party swearing in his own cause is presumed to swear as hard as he can with a good conscience,[13] inferences, when justifiable, are not to be pressed beyond the ordinary meaning of the terms employed.[14]

A material fact which, if it actually exists, would readily and naturally be expressly averred, must be averred.[15]

The practice which requires affidavits of defense is limited to obligations for the payment of a certain sum of money. Hence, it does not apply in actions for torts, nor in actions upon contracts for the payment of an uncertain sum, or where there is no standard by which to liquidate the judgment.[1]

The defendant is to make the affidavit, unless cause, such as sickness or necessary absence, is shown why he cannot make it. Then an agent, and perhaps even a stranger to the transaction, may make it.[2]

When defendant avers facts on information and belief he must add that he expects to be able to prove them or else set out specifically the source of his information or the facts themselves upon which his belief rests.[3] This affords a presumption that proof can be made.[4] Positive averment of truth is enough.[5]

The practice does not permit the filing of a supplementary affidavit of claim to obtain a judgment for an insufficient defense. Such affidavit may be filed for use as evidence at the trial; so, too, as to a supplemental affidavit of defense in reply to a supplemental affidavit of claim. But the court will not consider the sufficiency of either affidavit.[6]

Should the court deem the defense set out in the original affidavit to be probably good but obscurely or otherwise defectively stated, it may allow a supplemental affidavit of defense to be filed.[7] Notice thereof is to be given, to prevent surprise and delay at the time for trial.

There is no rule that such supplemental affidavit must be confined to an explanation of the original defense, and cannot set up a new and different defense; such a course, however, is suspicious, and requires that the new defense be closely scrutinized.[8]

Where judgment has been entered for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense and the record shows it to be according to law, a motion to take it off is addressed to the discretion of the court, and, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, is not the subject of a writ of error.[9]

It would seem that an affidavit of defense, to become part of the record, should be offered in evidence.[10]

Dilatory defense. A defense designed to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the prosecution of a claim, without touching upon the defendant's "meritorious defense." See MERITS.

[1] Stitt v. Garrett, 3 Whart. 281 (1837); Comly v. Bryan, 5 id. 261 (1839); Marsh v. Marshall, 53 Pa. 396 (1866).

[2] Feust v. Fell, 6 W. N. C. 43 (1878); Kirkpatrick v. Wensell, 2 Leg. Chron. 308 (1874).

[3] Leibersperger v. Reading Bank, 30 Pa. 531 (1858).

[4] Bryar v. Harrison, 37 Pa. 238 (1860).

[5] Thompson v. Clark, 56 Pa. 33 (1867).

[6] Chartiers R. Co. v. Hodgens, 77 Pa. 187 (1874).

[7] Walker v. Geisse, 4 Whart. 256 (1838).

[8] Bronson v. Silverman, 77 Pa. 94 (1874).

[9] Lawrence v. Smedley, 6 W. N. C. 42 (Sup. Ct., 1878).

[10] Markley v. Stevens, 89 Pa. 281 (1879); 77 id. 283; 89 id. 281.

[11] Peck v. Jones, 70 Pa. 83 (1871).

[12] Lord v. Ocean Bank, 20 Pa. 384 (1853).

[13] Selden v. Neemes, 43 Pa. 421 (1862).

[14] Marsh v. Marshall, 53 Pa. 396 (1866).

[15] Markley v. Stevens, 89 Pa. 281 (1879).

[1] Borlin v. Commonwealth, 99 Pa. 46 (1881). See 89 id. 26; 90 id. 276.

[2] See City v. Devine, 1 W. N. C. 358 (1875); Clymer v. Fitler, ib. 626 (1875); Blew v. Schock, ib. 612 (1875); Crine v. Wallace, ib. 293 (1875); Burkhart v. Parker, 6 W. & S. 480 (1843); Hunter v. Reilly, 36 Pa. 509 (1860).

[3] Black v. Halstead, 39 Pa. 64 (1861); Thompson v. Clark, 56 id. 33 (1867).

[4] Clarion Bank v. Gregg, 79 Pa. 384 (1875); Rensor v. Supplee, 81 id. 180 (1876).

[5] Eyre v. Yohe, 67 Pa. 477 (1871); Moeck v. Littell, 89 id. 354 (1876).

[6] Anderson v. Nichols, 12 Pitts. Leg. J. 281 (1882).

[7] Laird v. Campbell, 92 Pa. 475 (1880).

[8] Callan v. Lukens, 89 Pa. 134 (1879), Per Curiam.

[9] White v. Leeds, 51 Pa. 187 (1865). See Act 18 April, 1874: P. L. 64; 2 W. N. C. 707.

[10] Maynard v. National Bank, 99 Pa. 280 (1881).

Equitable defense. A defense, in a common-law action, which rests upon equitable or legal and equitable grounds.

Equitable defenses, though admissible under State practice, are not admissible in the United States courts.[1] If a defendant has equitable grounds for relief he must seek to enforce them by a separate suit in equity.[2] See PROCEDURE.

Full defense. In common-law practice, a defense made by the formula he "comes and defends the force and injury when and where it shall behoove him, the damages, and whatever else he ought to defend." Shortened into he "defends the force and injury, when," etc. Opposed, half-defense: made by the words he "comes and defends the force and injury, and says," etc.[3]

General defense. A general denial of the material allegations of a claim.

A general denial is not equivalent to a general issue at common law. It only puts the plaintiff to proof of his substantial allegations. If the defendant has an affirmative defense in the nature of an avoidance he should plead it.[4]

Good, legal, sufficient, or valid defense. A defense which is ample or adequate in law as against the particular demand. Legal defense often stands opposed to equitable defense, q. v.

No defense. Certificates are frequently required by proposed purchasers of mortgages standing in the name of the mortgagee or of his transferee, that the mortgagor has no defense, in equity or law, to a demand for payment thereof.

Peremptory defense. That the plaintiff never had, or has not now, a right of action.

Sham defense. A mere pretense of a defense, set up in bad faith, and without color of fact. See further SHAM.

Whenever one is assailed in his person or property, he may defend himself, for the liability and the right are inseparable. . . . A sentence of a court pronounced against a party without affording him an opportunity to be heard is not a judicial determination of his rights. There must be notice of some kind, actual or constructive. The period is a matter of regulation by positive law, rule of court, or established practice.[5] See DAY, In court; ADMISSION, 2.

[1] Parsons v. Denis, 2 McCrary, 360 (1881); Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 109 (1871).

[2] Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 561 (1887); Phillips v. Negley, 117 id. 675 (1886), cases; Herklotz v. Chase, 32 F. R. 433 (1887).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 296.

[4] Walker v. Flint, 3 McCrary, 510 (1882).

[5] Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 277 (1876), Field, J.

DEFER.[1] To postpone to a future day; as, a deferred payment of principal and interest upon account of a mortgage, or of a dividend upon account of shares of stock. See DIVIDEND, 8; STOCK, 8 (2), Deferred; POSTPONE, 1.

DEFICIENCY. That part of the debt, which a mortgage was made to secure, not realized from the subject mortgaged.[2] See ESTIMATE; MORE OR LESS.

DEFINE. To set bounds to, mark the limits of. See DEFINITIO; DEFINITION.

1. To make clear the design or scope of previous action; to remove doubt or uncertainty as to the meaning or application of; to determine authoritatively, settle officially, decide judicially.

In popular meaning, often, to make clear and certain what was before uncertain or indefinite, to render distinct; but in legislation frequently has a broader signification. Many constitutional laws have been passed conferring powers and duties which could not be considered as merely explaining or making more clear those previously conferred or sought to be, although the word "define" was used in the title. In legislation the word is frequently used in creating, enlarging, and extending the powers and duties of boards and officers, and in defining and providing punishment for offenses — thus enlarging the scope of the criminal law. It may very properly be used in the title of a statute where the object is to determine or fix boundaries, especially where a dispute has arisen concerning them, whether the extent of territory included be enlarged or lessened.[3]

2. To enumerate or prescribe what act or acts shall constitute; to declare to be an offense.

"To define piracies" is to enumerate the crimes which shall constitute piracy.[4]

Declaring that a certain act shall constitute an offense is "defining" that offense.[5]

DEFINITE. Bounded, limited, defined: determinate, precise, fixed, certain. Opposed, indefinite.

A "definite failure of issue" occurs when a precise time is fixed by a will for the failure of issue. An "indefinite failure of issue" is the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no longer any issue of the issue of the grantee, without reference to a particular time or event.[6] See further DIE, Without children.

[1] L. dis-ferre, to put off, delay.

[2] [Goldsmith v. Brown, 35 Barb. 492 (1861).

[3] People v. Bradley, 36 Mich. 452 (1877), Marston, J.

[4] United States v. Smith, 5 Wheat. 160 (1820).

[5] United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 488 (1887).

[6] Huxford v. Milligan, 50 Ind. 546 (1875); 14 N. H. 220; 19 id. 84-85; 16 Johns. 399-400; 20 Pa. 513; 40 id. 22; 2 Redf. Wills, 276, n.

DEFINITIO. L. A bounding, limiting: defining, definition.

Omnis definitio in jure periculosa est. All limitation in law is perilous; defining in law is dangerous. Attempts to define the meaning of words, and to limit the application of statutes, are attended with more or less difficulty.

Thus, it is difficult to frame perfectly accurate definitions of such terms as accident; general agent, special agent;[1] bailment; boarder, guest, lodger; crimen falsi;[2] cruelty; dwelling-house; fraud;[3] internal police;[4] larceny; public policy;[5] reasonable doubt; slight, ordinary, and gross negligence; regulations of commerce as distinguished from police regulations. See those terms.

Thus, also, as there are exceptions to almost every rule of law, and as circumstances alter cases infinitely, when a statute itself imposes no limitation upon its meaning or application, the courts, in construing the statute, as a rule, confine themselves to the circumstances of the case in hand.

DEFINITION. An enumeration of the particular acts included by or under a name; as, the definition of a crime.[6] See DEFINE; DEFINITIO.

Legal definitions, for the most part, are generalizations derived from judicial experience. To be complete and adequate, they must sum up the results of all of that experience.[7]

The meaning given to common words by the leading lexicographers is entitled to weight, yet regard must always be had to the circumstances under which a word (as, traveler) is used in a statute.[8]

The definitions of the standard lexicographers are authority as indicating the popular use of words.[9]

See ETYMOLOGY; INDICTMENT; WORD.

DEFINITIVE. Is generally equivalent to "final" and opposed to interlocutory or provisional. But, in some relations, as when said of a judgment, decree, or sentence, may mean being above review or contingency of reversal.[10] Compare FINAL.

DEFORCEMENT. An injury by ouster or privation of the freehold, where the entry of the present tenant or possessor was originally lawful, but his detainer has become unlawful. . . The holding of any lands or tenements to which another person hath a right.[1]

Deforciant. He who is chargeable with a deforcement.

A deforcement includes as well an abatement, an intrusion, a disseisin, or a discontinuance, or any other species of wrong whatsoever, whereby he that hath right to the freehold is kept out of possession.[1] See AMOTION.

DEFRAUD. See FRAUD.

DEGRADE. See CRIMINATE; LIBEL, 5; REINSTATE; REHABILITATE; SLANDER.

DEGREE.[2] One of a series of progressive steps upward or downward; grade.[3]

1. A remove in the line of relationship.

Levitical degrees. The degree of kinship, set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons may not intermarry.[4]

Adopted in English and American law generally.

2. The grades of guilt or culpability attributed to the same offense committed under different circumstances: as, degrees of negligence, degrees in the law of arson or of murder, qq. v.

When a defendant is charged with an offense which includes others of an inferior degree, the law of each degree which the evidence tends to prove should be given to the jury.[5]

3. The rank to which a student who has attended a law-school is admitted among its alumni. Whence bachelor of laws, doctor of civil law, doctor of laws.

Taken in course, or conferred for supposed attainments,—the last named degree frequently so.

At the inns of court degrees were formerly conferred in the common law upon barristers. Whence the expression "take" and "receive" a degree.

DEHORNING. See CRUELTY, 3.

DEHORS.[6] From beyond; outside of: extraneous, extrinsic, foreign to, unconnected with; aliunde, q. v.

Applied to something as evidence, outside of a record, agreement, will, or other instrument.

Thus, a judgment may be falsified, reversed, or

---

[1] 1 Pars. Contr. 40.
[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373.
[3] 2 Pars. Contr. 769.
[4] 11 Pet. 138.
[5] 2 Pars. Contr. 949.
[6] Marvin v. State, 19 Ind. 184 (1862), Perkins, J.
[7] [Mickle v. Miles, 31 Pa. 21 (1856), Lowrie, J.; Pardee v. Fish, 60 N. Y. 269 (1875).
[8] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 267 (1880).
[9] Burnam v. Banks, 45 Mo. 351 (1870); Dole v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 6 Allen, 386 (1863).
[10] See United States v. The Peggy, 1 Cranch, 109 (1801); 1 Watts, 257; 37 Pa. 255; 96 id. 420; 3 Bl. Com. 401.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 172; Wildy v. Bonney, 26 Miss. 39 (1853).
[2] F. degré: L. de-gradus, a step. Cf. Pedigree.
[3] Webster's Dict.
[4] 1 Bl. Com. 435.
[5] State v. Mize, 36 Kan. 188 (1887), State v. Evans, ib. 497 (1887).
[6] De-hôrz'. A French word, equivalent to the late Latin deforis: foris, foras, out of doors.

made void for a matter dehors the record,— that is, not apparent upon the face of it.[1]

A matter dehors a record may be shown as ground for a new trial.[2]

When doubt arises as to meaning of the words of a written contract, or difficulty as to their application, the sense may be ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument itself.[3]

DEL CREDERE. It. Of trust, credit.

Applied to an agent or factor who guarantees that the persons to whom he sells will perform the contracts he makes with them.[4]

When the person to whom goods or merchandise is consigned for sale undertakes, for additional compensation in case of sale, to guarantee to his principal the payment of the debt due by the buyer, he is said to receive a del credere commission.[5] See COMMISSION, 3; FACTOR.

DELAY. Putting off; postponement.

A conveyance may be made with intent to hinder and delay creditors without any intention to defraud them.[6] See BANKRUPTCY; CONVEYANCE, Fraudulent; HINDER.

Mere delay in enforcing equitable rights is not a defense to an action, except in cases where the statutes of limitation apply, or where the party has slept upon his rights and acquiesced for such length of time that his claim has become stale.[7] See LACHES; LIMITATION, 3, Statute of; STALE.

In the law of marine insurance, see DEMURRAGE; DEVIATION.

DELECTUS. L. Choice; selection.

Delectus personæ. Choice of person. Delectus personarum. Choice of persons or the persons.

The right to choose the person or persons who shall participate in a business or enterprise requiring the exercise of mutual confidence.

In particular, the absolute right which belongs to each member of a firm to decide what new partners, if any at all, shall be admitted to the firm.

In theory a partnership is a voluntary association. For this reason neither the purchaser of the interest of a member, nor his assignee, nor even his executor or heir, becomes entitled to admission into the association, except by consent of the remaining partners or by the terms of their compact.[8]

DELEGATA. See DELEGATUS.

DELEGATE, v. To commit power to another as agent or representative; to empower, depute. n. The person who is to exercise any such power; as, a Territorial delegate. See DELEGATUS.

Delegation. 1. At common law, the transfer of authority; the act of making a delegate or deputy.

2. In civil law, the substitution of one debtor for another: a species of novation.

The change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substitutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor; so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extinguished, and the creditor contents himself with the obligation of the second debtor.[1]

A delegation demands the consent of all three parties; any other novation demands the consent only of the two parties to the new debt.[1] See NOVATION.

DELEGATUS. L. A person chosen or commissioned: a deputy, agent, representative, trustee. Delegata. Deputed, empowered, intrusted.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. Delegated authority cannot be redelegated. Delegatus non potest delegare. A deputy cannot deputize.

Whenever, for personal or other considerations, authority is conferred upon a particular person he cannot lawfully devolve the duties of his appointment or the functions of his office upon any other person, unless allowed so to do by express words, by acts equivalent thereto, or by the usage of trade.

Delegatus potestas, etc., as a general maxim, is correct when duly applied. For, to create a delegate by a delegate, in the sense of the maxim, implies an assignment of the whole power, which a delegate cannot make. A delegate has general powers, which he cannot transfer; but he may constitute another his servant or bailiff to do a particular act.[2]

A special authority is in the nature of a trust. It implies confidence in the ability, skill, or discretion of the party intrusted. The author of such a power may extend it if he will, as is done in ordinary powers of attorney, giving power to a person or his substitute to

---

[1] [4 Bl. Com. 390.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 387.

[3] Sandford v. New York, &c. R. Co., 37 N. J. L. 4 (1874): Shore v. Wilson, 9 Clark & F. 566 (1842), Tindal, C. J.

[4] Exp. White, L. R., 6 Ch. Ap. Cas. *403 (1870), Mellish, L. J.

[5] [Story, Agency, § 33; 50 Barb. 295.

[6] Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 439 (1878).

[7] Williams v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 17 Blatch. 23 (1879).

[8] Kingman v. Spurr, 7 Pick. 238 (1828), cases; Mathewson v. Clarke, 6 How. 140 (1848); Crittenden v. Witbeck, 50 Mich. 419, 420 (1883); Story, Partn. §§ 195, 5; 3 Kent, 55; 1 Pars. Contr. 154; 17 F. R. 571.

[1] Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 454 (1873), Peyton, C. J.; 1 Domat, 919, § 2318.

[2] Hunt v. Burrel, 5 Johns. *137 (1809), cases, Per Curiam.

do the act authorized. But when it is not so extended it is limited to the person named.[1] See DEPUTY.

The utmost relaxation of the rule, in respect to mercantile persons, is, that a consignee or agent for the sale of merchandise may employ a broker, or a sub-agent, for the purpose, when such is the usual course of business.[2]

When the principal recognizes the validity of the services rendered by the subordinate of the appointed agent he cannot repudiate the acts of his employee and escape personal liability for the want of authority to employ him.[3]

Judicial power cannot be delegated.[4] Nor can a legislature delegate its power to any commission or body except as to the functions of local self-government conferred upon municipal corporations, q. v.; and as to some matters of police regulation which the people of a locality may be permitted to accept or reject by vote, as, for example, local option laws.[5] See OPTION, Local.

DELIBERATION. Balancing, weighing: consideration; reflection; meditation, premeditation.

1. When a man passes a thing by deed, there is a determination of the mind to do it, the writing, the signing, the sealing, and the delivery; and hence his deed imports consideration, viz.: the will of the maker.[6]

2. Slander in print is graver than slander by word of mouth, because it is not only disseminated wider, but is accompanied with greater coolness and deliberation.[7]

3. In describing a crime, "deliberate" imports that the perpetrator weighs the motives for the act and its consequences, the nature of the crime, or other things connected with his intentions, with a view to decision thereon; that he carefully considers all these; that the act is not committed suddenly.[8]

If an intention to kill exists, it is willful; if this intention be accompanied by such circumstances as evidence a mind fully conscious of its own purpose and design, it is deliberate.[9]

The statutory rule of deliberation and premeditation requires that the act be "done with reflection" and "conceived beforehand."[1]

"Deliberate" is from Latin words, which mean "concerning" and "to weigh." As an adjective it means that the manner of the performance was determined upon after examination and reflection — that the consequences, chances, and means were weighed, carefully considered and estimated. "Premeditated" means, literally, planned, contrived or schemed beforehand. It is not only necessary that the accused should plan, contrive and scheme, as to the means and manner of the commission of the deed, but that he should consider different means of accomplishing the act. He must "weigh" the modes of consummation which his premeditation suggests, and determine which is the most feasible.[2]

In some States "deliberate and premeditated" are applied to the malice or intent, not to the act, and thus seem to require a purpose brooded over, formed, and matured before the occasion at which it is carried into act.[3]

See further PREMEDITATE; WILL, 1.

DELICT. 1. In civil law, the act by which a person, through fraud or malignity, causes damage to another.

In its enlarged sense includes all kinds of crimes and misdemeanors, even injuries caused voluntarily or accidentally and without evil intention; but is commonly limited to offenses punishable by a small fine or a short imprisonment.[4]

2. A delictum, q. v.

DELICTUM.[5] L. A wrong, whether private or public: an offense, a civil injury or tort, a crime; also, simply a failing or fault, blame, guilt, culpability.[6]

Corpus delicti. The body of the offense; the fact of a crime. See further CORPUS, Delicti.

Ex delicto. Out of fault or a fault; arising from a tort or wrong — misconduct, negligence, crime.

Said of the actions of case, replevin, trespass, and trover. Opposed, ex contractu. See ACTION, 2.

Flagrante delicto. The offense still burning; in the heat of the offense: in the very act of perpetrating a crime or the crime.[7] Compare CRIMEN, Flagrans.

[1] Sanborn v. Carleton, 15 Gray, 408 (1860), Shaw, C. J. See 2 Kent, 633.

[2] Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 223 (1850), cases, Wayne, J. See Story, Agency, § 13.

[3] Commissioners v. Lash, 89 N. C. 170 (1883), Smith, C. J. See 71 Ala. 28; 3 Dak. T. 395; 41 N. J. E. 518; 63 Pa. 85.

[4] Van Slyke v. Trempealeau Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 392 (1876), cases, Ryan, C. J.; Runkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 557 (1887),—as to the President of the United States; Cooley, Const. Lim. 116, cases.

[5] Cooley, Const. Lim. 124, cases. See also Commonwealth v. Smith, 141 Mass. 140 (1886).

See generally 21 Am. Law Rev. 936-54 (1887), cases; 26 id. 74-94 (1888), cases.

[6] Smith, Contr. 14; Williams, R. P. 143.

[7] Addison, Torts, 765.

[8] State v. Boyle, 28 Iowa, 524 (1870), Beck, J.

[9] Commonwealth v. Drum, 58 Pa. 16 (1868), Agnew, J.

[1] Summerman v. State, 14 Neb. 569 (1883), Lake, C. J.; Wharton, Homicide, 180.

[2] Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 433 (1866), Crozier, C. J.

[3] Keenan v. Commonwealth, 44 Pa. 57 (1862), Lowrie, C. J. See 71 Mo. 220; 74 id. 219, 249, 256; 76 id. 104; 23 Ind. 262.

[4] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[5] From de-linquere, to leave a person or thing; then, to be wanting in a matter, fail in duty, offend, transgress. Compare MALUS, Malum.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 363; 1 Kent, 552; 2 id. 241.

[7] See 4 Bl. Com. 307; 5 Cent. Law J. 389.

In pari delicto. In equal wrong: equal in guilt: equally guilty; equally to blame.

The first part either of the maxim in pari delicto, melior est conditio possidentis, in equal fault, the better is the situation of the party in possession; or else of the maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis, in equal fault, the stronger is the situation of the defendant. Also spoken of as the rule of par delictum, equal wrong: parity of unlawful conduct.

Where misconduct is mutual the law will relieve neither party, but leave them where it finds them.

While defendants derive advantage from its application, the rule was not adopted for their benefit, but solely as a principle of general policy.[1]

A court of equity will not aid parties in the consummation or perpetration of a fraud; it will not assist a party to the betrayal of a trust to derive advantage therefrom; it will not undertake to unravel a tangled web of fraud to enable one of the parties to consummate his design. A complainant must come before the court with clean hands.[2]

The court will not enforce alleged rights resting upon a prohibited contract. In the application of the rule it is necessary to give parties a right to plead and to prove the nature of the transaction.[3] Whatever is stated in a contract for an illegal purpose, as, the violation of a statute, the defendant may show as the turpitude of himself and the plaintiff to prevent its enforcement. The objection is allowed on general principles of policy.[4]

Lord Mansfield, in 1760, laid down the doctrine, which has ever since been followed, that if the act be in itself immoral, or a violation of the general laws of public policy, both parties are in pari delicto; but where the law is designed for the protection of the subject against oppression, extortion, and deceit, and the defendant takes advantage of the plaintiff's condition or situation, then the plaintiff shall recover.[5]

Where the illegality consists in the contract itself, and that contract is unexecuted, there is a locus pœnitentiæ, the delictum is incomplete, the contract may be rescinded by either party and money paid recovered. There is no parity where the law protects one party, or one acts under constraint, though the transaction is completed.[6]

If a contract, void as against public policy, is still executory it cannot be enforced, nor will damages be awarded for a breach thereof; but if it is executed the price paid or property delivered cannot be recovered.[1]

The rule is applied to cases of moral turpitude and to acts against public policy; not to cases of innocent mistake.[2]

One who bribes an officer of government cannot recover the money.[3]

In a few special cases, one party, less at fault than the other, has been allowed to maintain an action.[4] Compare NEGLIGENCE, Comparative, Contributory.

See ACTIO, Ex dolo, etc.; CONTRIBUTION; ESTOPPEL; INNOCENCE; LEGAL, Illegal, 2; TORT, 2; TURPITUDE; VOLO, Volenti, etc.

Propter delictum. On account of wrong — a crime or misdemeanor; as, a challenge of a juror for infamy.[5] See CHALLENGE, 4.

DELIRIUM. That state of the mind in which it acts without being directed by the power of volition, which is wholly or partially suspended.[6]

A temporary derangement of mind preceded or attended by a feverish and highly diseased state of the body.[7]

It may vary from slight wandering to violent derangement, and be accompanied, in a greater or less degree, with stupor or insensibility. A continuing insanity will not be presumed, where the malady was temporary and occasional.[7] See INSANITY; INTEMPERATE.

DELIVERY.[8] Transfer of the body or substance; surrender of physical possession or control; tradition. Opposed, non-delivery.

To "deliver" is to give or transfer anything to another person.

---

[1] See Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 343 (1775), Mansfield, C. J.; Smith, Contr. 27, 205, 263, 296.

[2] Farley v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 14 F. R. 114, 117 (1882), Treat, D. J.; Lewis v. Meier, ib. 311 (1882); 2 McCrary, 599.

[3] Funk v. Gallivan, 49 Conn. 128-29 (1881), cases; Heineman v. Newman, 55 Ga. 262 (1875), cases; Myers v. Meinrath 101 Mass. 368 (1869), cases.

[4] Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. 86 (1851), Wayne, J.

[5] Smith v. Bromley, 2 Doug. 697: Thomas v. Richmond, infra.

[6] Thomas v. City of Richmond, 12 Wall. 355-56 (1870), cases, Bradley, J.; Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 58-60 (1880), cases, Woods, J. See also 116 U. S. 685-86; 48 Ark. 491; 101 Mass. 150; 107 id. 259; 25 Pa. 441; 79 id. 242; 25 Barb. 341; 10 Ind. 386; 59 Iowa, 190; 6 Col. 14; 58 N. H. 249; 17 Nev. 177; 76 Va. 423; 2 Story, Contr. § 617; 3 Pars. Contr. 127, 484; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 111.

[1] Setter v. Alvey, 15 Kan. 160 (1875), Brewer, J.

[2] See 55 Barb. 102; 22 Mich. 427; 11 Mass. 376; 4 N. H. 455; 3 N. Y. 230.

[3] Clark v. United States, 102 U. S. 331 (1880).

[4] See White v. Franklin Bank, 22 Pick. 181-90 (1839), cases; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 420 (1880). As to counter-claims, 20 Cent. Law J. 363-65 (1885), cases.

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 363; 2 Kent, 241.

[6] Owing's Case, 1 Bland's Ch. 386 (1828). See 1 Redf. Wills, 91.

[7] [Heirs of Clark v. Ellis, 9 Oreg. 129, 141 (1881), Lord, Chief Justice.

[8] F. delivrer: L. de-liberare, to set free.

A law against "selling or delivering intoxicating liquor to a minor" was held not to include a delivery to a minor for his father.[1] See LIQUOR.

In the sense of release from confinement, used in "jail-delivery." See JAIL.

"Delivery," used alone, is of personal property; of letters, notices, telegrams, qq. v.; of negotiable instruments, q. v.; of sealed instruments; of opinions, charges, verdicts, qq. v.

1. In the law as to gifts, sales, and transportation of personalty, delivery is absolute or conditional, actual or constructive, and symbolical.

Absolute delivery. A transfer without any qualification, expressed or implied. Conditional delivery. A transfer accompanied by one or more conditions which must be fulfilled before the general property vests in the possessor.

A conditional sale may become an absolute sale by an unconditional delivery of the goods, the title then passing to the purchaser. To constitute a conditional delivery it is not necessary that the seller declare the conditions in express terms. It is sufficient if the intent of the parties, that the delivery is conditional, can be inferred from their acts and the circumstances of the case.[2]

Actual delivery. Manual or corporal transfer, made in fact or reality. Constructive delivery. A transfer which while not in reality made is yet viewed in law as as good as made.

"Constructive delivery" is a general term, comprehending all acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the thing sold on the vendee, have been held constructione juris equivalent to acts of real delivery.[3]

Symbolic or symbolical delivery. Handing over one thing as evidence of parting with ownership in another or other things.

Delivery is frequently symbolical; as, delivery of the key to a room containing goods, by marking timber on a wharf or goods in a warehouse, or by separating, measuring, or weighing them; or otherwise constructive, as by delivery of part for the whole;[4] or by delivery of a bill of lading or of a bill of sale. See GIFT, 1.

As between vendor and vendee delivery is not necessary to complete a sale of personalty, especially where impracticable;[5] but as against a third person possession retained by the vendor is evidence of fraud — conclusive, by some authorities, by others, rebuttable.

Symbolical is a substitute for actual delivery, when the latter is impracticable, and leaves the real delivery to be made afterward. Thus, the delivery of a certificate of stock with a power of attorney in blank for making a transfer upon the proper books operates as a symbolical delivery of the stock itself, until the real delivery can be perfected.[1]

To constitute a delivery to a common carrier the latter must accept the goods as a carrier and assume exclusive control over them.[2]

What amounts to a delivery to a carrier may sometimes be a question of fact for a jury; ordinarily, a delivery at his wharf, freight or warehouse, brought to the notice of his servant, would be so considered. A delivery at a wharf may be of itself an incomplete act, to be explained by what precedes or follows.[3]

A common carrier by water must at least give notice to a consignee that the vessel has arrived or that the property has been landed.[4]

Proof of the unexplained non-delivery of property by a bailee upon demand makes a prima facie case of negligence, and, in the absence of evidence excusing the non-delivery, presents a question of fact as to actual negligence for the consideration of a jury.[5]

Property in a situation to be delivered to the consignee on demand may be said to be "awaiting delivery;" property on its way to a distant point to be taken thence by a connecting carrier, to be "awaiting transportation."[6]

Misdelivery. A delivery by a common carrier at such place or time as is not intended by the contract of carriage.

Opposed, a good, sufficient, or legal delivery.

A misdelivery by a carrier is equivalent to a conversion.[7]

See ACCEPT, 1; BAILMENT; CARRIER; PLACE, Of delivery; POSSESSION, Fraudulent; SALE.

As to collections on delivery, see COLLECTION.

Delivery bond. An obligation for the return of goods, or the payment of their value, taken into the possession of the law but now to be restored to the defendant; as, in seizures under revenue laws.[8]

2. Section 3892, Rev. St., is designed to

[1] State v. McMahon, 53 Conn. 415 (1885); Commonwealth v. Latinville, 120 Mass. 386 (1876).

[2] Fishback v. Van Dusen, 33 Minn. 116-18 (1885), cases, Mitchell, J.

[3] Bolin v. Huffnagle, 1 Rawle, *20 (1828).

[4] 1 Bouvier, 502, cases; 89 Ill. 218; 71 N. Y. 293; 2 Bl. Com. 313-15; 1 Pars. Contr. 530; 2 Kent, 506.

[5] Wyoming Nat. Bank v. Dayton, 102 U. S. 59, 62 (1880); Hare, Contr. 450.

[1] Winslow v. Fletcher, 53 Conn. 398-99 (1885); Cooke v. Hallett, 119 Mass. 148 (1875).

[2] Reed v. Philadelphia, &c. R. Co., 3 Houst. 206 (1865); O'Bannon v. Southern Express Co., 51 Ala. 484 (1874).

[3] Hobart v. Littlefield, 13 R. I. 342 (1881), cases; Hallgarten v. Oldham, 135 Mass. 8-12 (1883), cases.

[4] Ostrander v. Brown, 15 Johns. 42 (1818); 3 N. Y. 322; 11 F. R. 234.

[5] Confield v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 93 N. Y. 530 (1883), cases.

[6] Michigan Central R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Manuf. Co., 16 Wall. 327 (1872), cases.

[7] Forbes v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 133 Mass. 156 (1882).

[8] See R. S. § 938; 21 Wall. 98; 110 U. S. 280.

protect letters, (postal-cards, and packets), sent by mail, from embezzlement, and from interference, with the improper designs therein enumerated, until they reach their destination by actual delivery to the persons entitled to receive them.[1]

3. As to the delivery of telegrams, see TELEGRAPH.

4. In the law of sealed instruments, the final, absolute transfer to the grantee of a complete legal instrument sealed by the grantor, covenantor, or obligor. As a popular word, signifies mere tradition.[2]

A deed takes effect only from its tradition or delivery, which may be absolute or conditional.

Absolute delivery. A delivery to the grantee himself. Conditional delivery. To a third person to hold till some condition is performed by the grantee.[3]

In the latter case the instrument is delivered as an "escrow" — as a scrowl or writing, not to take effect as a deed till the condition is performed.[3]

A delivery of a legal obligation made upon condition does not become a legal delivery until the condition is fulfilled.[4]

The delivery of a deed is essential to the transfer of title. It is the final act, without which other formalities are ineffectual. The grantor must part with possession of the deed or the right to retain it; registry may justify a presumption of delivery.[5]

While a delivery of a deed is essential to pass an estate, and there can be no delivery without surrender of the instrument or the right to retain it, such delivery will be presumed, in the absence of direct evidence, from the concurrent act of the parties recognising a transfer of the title.[6]

Surrender and acceptance are necessary to a complete delivery.[7]

Its importance arises from the fact that the deed has taken the place of the livery of seisin of feudal times, when, to give effect to the feoffment of the new tenant, the act of delivering possession in a public manner was the essential evidence of the investiture of title to the land. This diminished in importance until the manual delivery of a piece of turf, and other "symbolic" acts, became sufficient. When all this passed away and the creation and transfer of estates by a written instrument, called the act or "deed" of the party, became the usual mode, the instrument was at first delivered on the land in lieu of livery of seisin. Finally, any delivery of the deed or any act intended to stand for such delivery became effectual to pass the title.[1]

Delivery in fact, by the officers of government, of recorded letters-patent for land, or of a charter, or of a commission to an office, and the like, in which the act of delivering is purely ministerial, may not be essential; it is enforceable by mandamus.[2] Compare LIVERY.

DELUSION. "Insane delusion" and "morbid delusion," as equivalent expressions, are common in medical jurisprudence.

If a person persistently believes supposed facts, which have no existence except in his perverted imagination, and against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of their existence, so far as these imagined facts are concerned he is under a "morbid delusion;" and delusion in that sense is insanity.[3]

"Insane delusion" is an unreasoning and incorrigible belief in the existence of facts which are impossible of existence, either absolutely or under the circumstances, and which, in most cases, relate to something affecting the senses. While the delusion may concern the relations of the party with others, generally it centers around himself, his cares, sufferings, rights and wrongs. It comes and goes independently of the exercise of will; it is not the result of reasoning and reflection, nor can it be dispelled by them. A conviction founded upon evidence, upon a comparison of facts, opinions, and arguments, is not an insane delusion. Such a delusion does not relate to mere sentiments or theories or abstract questions in law, politics, or religion: all which are subjects of opinions,— beliefs founded upon reasoning and reflection, and liable to be changed by stronger external evidence or by sounder reasoning. . . In the law of homicide the subject is important only as it throws light upon the question of knowledge of or capacity to know right and wrong. If a man is under an insane delusion that another is attempting his life and kills him in self-defense he does not know that he is committing an unnecessary homicide. If he insanely believes he has a command from the Almighty to kill, it is difficult to understand how he can know it is wrong for him to kill.[3] See INSANITY.

[1] United States v. McCready, 11 F. R. 225, 234 (1882).

[2] Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. E. 461 (1860), Whelpley, J.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 307; 30 Wis. 646.

[4] McFarland v. Sikes, 54 Conn. 250 (1886).

[5] Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 641 (1865), Field, J.; 5 id. 81; 79 Pa. 15; 4 Del. Ch. 311.

[6] Gould v. Day, 94 U. S. 412 (1876), Field, J. See Ireland v. Geraghty, 15 F. R. 45-46 (1883), cases,— note by M. D. Ewell.

[7] Best v. Brown, 25 Hun, 294 (1881); 6 Barb. 195; 102 Ill. 297; 22 Ind. 39.

[1] United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 398, 397 (1880), cases, Miller, J. See 20 Cent. Law J. 44-48 (1885), cases; 28 id. 8-10 (1886), cases; 26 Am. Law Reg. 451-55 (1887), cases; 4 Kent, 466; 2 Wash. R. P. 577.

[2] Seaman's Friend Society v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 634 (1865), Denio, C. J.; Re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 289 (1869), cases.

[3] United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 170-71, 182 (Jan. 25, 1882), Charge of Judge Cox. See note by Francis Wharton, ib. 189; Commonwealth v. Rogers, 7 Metc. 502 (1844); State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 432 (1870); State v. Jones, 50 id. 395 (1871): Dew v. Clarke, 3 Addams, 79 (1826). As to wills and deeds, Duffield v. Morris's Executor, 2 Harr., Del., 380 (1839); Gass's Heirs v. Gass's Executor, 3 Humph. 283 (1842); Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 401 (1870); in general, Buswell, Insanity, §§ 13-16, cases; 1 Redf. Wills, 40; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 37.

DEMAND. 1. Any account upon which money or other thing is, or is claimed to be, due.[1]

A claim; a legal obligation.[2]

The most comprehensive word in law, except claim. A release of demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights, titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, etc.[3] Includes, also, a cause of action,[4] and a judgment.[5] Is more comprehensive than "debt" or "duty."[6]

The meaning may be restricted, as, to debt upon contract.[7]

Demandant. One who demands a thing as due; specifically, the plaintiff in a real action, as, partition.

Cross-demand; counter-demand. A demand set up as against another demand on which claim is or can be made; a set-off, q. v.

2. A request, made under claim of right, to do some specified thing.

Required, in some cases, to fasten willfulness upon a person who refuses to perform a duty. Thus it is made: for payment of rent, before re-entry; under a contract for marriage, before action can be brought for breach of promise; in cases of illegal harboring of servants, and of illegal detention of personalty; in cases of refusal to obey orders of court; in other matters of contract and of tort.[8]

Demand and refusal are never necessary, except as furnishing evidence of an unlawful taking or detention against the rights of the true owner, in an action of replevin, or of an unlawful conversion in an action of trover. When the circumstances, without these, are sufficient to prove such taking or detention, a demand and a refusal are superfluous.[9]

On demand. In a note, does not make the demand a condition precedent to a right of action; imports that the debt is due and demandable immediately, or at least that the commencement of a suit therefor is a sufficient demand.[10]

When the promise is not to pay the note at a particular place demand must be made upon the maker personally, at his place of business or at his residence, or sufficient excuse for not making demand must be shown. Reasonable diligence must be used to find the maker, his residence and place of business.[1]

A note payable "on demand after date" is not a note "payable on time," within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute of 1874, c. 404.[2]

See CLAIM; INDORSEMENT; PAYMENT; REQUEST; STALE.

DEMENTIA. Mental derangement accompanied by general derangement of faculties.[3]

Characterized by forgetfulness, inability to follow any train of thought, and indifference to passing events.[4]

An impaired state of the mental powers, feebleness of mind caused by disease and not accompanied by delusion (q. v.) or uncontrollable impulse.[4]

May exist without complete prostration.

Senile dementia. That peculiar decay of the mental faculties which occurs in extreme old age, and in many cases much earlier, whereby the person is reduced to second childhood and sometimes becomes[5] wholly incompetent to enter into a binding contract or even to execute a will. It is the recurrence of second childhood by mere decay.[6]

See further INSANITY.

DEMESNE.[6] Own, one's own; original.

Demesne land. Land reserved by the lord of a manor for the use of himself and household.[7]

Ancient demesne. Tenure of manors belonging to the crown in the days of Edward the Confessor and William the Conqueror, and referred to in Domesday book.[8]

Demesne lands of the crown. Reservations of the crown at the original distribution, or such as came to it afterward by forfeiture or other means.[9]

Comprised divers manors, the tenants of which had peculiar privileges.[8]

Seised in his demesne as of fee. Formal words expressing the highest estate a subject can have in land. It is his property or dominicum, since it is for him and his

[1] Stringham v. Supervisors, 24 Wis. 600 (1869), Dixon, Chief Justice.

[2] Hollen v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 447 (1882): Code, § 3591.

[3] Coke, Litt. 291 b; 8 Rep. 299; 1 Denio, 261; 6 W. & S. 226.

[4] Saddlesvene v. Arms, 32 How. Pr. 235 (1866).

[5] Henry v. Henry, 11 Ind. 237 (1858).

[6] Sands v. Codwise, 4 Johns. *558 (1808); Re Denny, &c. Co., 2 Hill, 223 (1842).

[7] Heacock v. Sherman, 14 Wend. 59 (1835).

[8] See 1 Bouvier, 504, cases.

[9] Edmunds v. Hill, 133 Mass. 446 (1882).

[10] Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 494 (1855) cases; Byles, Bills, 409, cases by Sharswood; 2 Pars. N. & B. 639, cases.

[1] Demond v. Burnham, 133 Mass. 341 (1882).

[2] Hitchings v. Edmands, 132 Mass. 339 (1882).

[3] [Hall v. Unger, 4 Saw. 677 (1867), Field, J.

[4] Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 537 (1863), Bell, C. J. See 2 Redf. Sur. 132; 3 Wash. 580; 4 id. 262; 3 Am. L. Reg. 449; 2 Abb. C. C. 511.

[5] 1 Redfield, Wills, 63, 94. Owing's Case, 1 Bland's Ch. 389 (1828).

[6] F.: L. dominium, ownership. Cf. DOMAIN; ASSAULT, Son, etc.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 90.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 99; 1 id. 286.

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 286.

heirs forever, not absolute, but in a qualified or feudal sense; and as of fee, because not purely and simply his own, since it is held of a feudal superior.[1]

The owner of an incorporeal hereditament is said to be "seised as of fee," and not "in his demesne;" since he has no property in the thing itself, but something derived out of it.[1]

"Seised in his demesne as of fee" is an allegation that the person is seised in fee-simple.[2]

DEMIJOHN. See BOTTLE.

DEMISE.[3] In a lease for years creates an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment.[4]

In a lease under seal implies a covenant, and in a lease not under seal a contract, for title in the lessor. "Let" or an equivalent word has the same effect.[5] See LEASE.

Demise and redemise. A conveyance by mutual leases of the same land, or of something out of the same, made by one party to the other; as, in a grant of rent-charge. See next word.

DEMITTERE. L. To demise, lease, let.

Ex demissione. By demise.

Used in entitling common-law actions of ejectment. Abridged ex dem. and d.: as, Doe d., or ex dem., Patterson v. Winn.[6]

Non demisit. He did not let or lease.

A plea to an action for rent on a parol agreement.

DEMONSTRATIO. L. A showing, pointing out: designation, description, demonstration, q. v.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet. Erroneous description does not vitiate. Spoken of as the maxim falsa demonstratio.

When an instrument contains an adequate description of a thing, with convenient certainty as to what was intended to be specified, a subsequent erroneous reference or addition will not vitiate the instrument. This qualification is sometimes expressed by the phrase cum constat de corpore or de persona: when it comports with the subject-matter or with the person.[7]

A false description, whether of subject-matter or parties, does not vitiate the instrument where the error appears upon its face and the writing itself supplies the means of making the correction.[1]

Applied to a devise the rule means that if there be a sufficient description, with reasonable certainty of what was meant to pass, a subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate the devise. The characteristic of cases within the rule is that the description as far as false applies to no subject at all, and as far as true applies to one only.[2]

The maxim is of universal application as far as it means that we may reject, as surplusage, a false description not vital to the object of the controversy.[3]

Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimi. By erroneous description a legacy is not destroyed.

A bequest is not to be held void because of inaccurate language used in speaking of it.[4] See further DEMONSTRATION, 2.

DEMOCRATIC.[5] See GOVERNMENT.

DEMONSTRATION. 1. Proof which excludes possibility of error.[6]

A conclusion from a universal major premise, producing absolute certainty.[7]

Mathematical truth alone is susceptible of this high degree of evidence; matters of fact are proved by moral evidence.[6, 7] See CERTAINTY; EVIDENCE, Moral.

2. Whatever is said or written to designate a person or thing; designation; description.

Demonstrative. Pointing out specifically; designating particularly: as, a legacy payable out of a particular fund. See LEGACY.

An erroneous description does not render an instrument inoperative where the thing or person intended can be identified. As far as inapplicable it will be rejected; particularly so when merely additional to another description or reference which is unambiguous: as where, in the same instrument, land is correctly described by boundaries and wrongly described by parcel or number.[8] See further DEMONSTRATIO; DESCRIPTION.

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 106.

[2] Butrick v. Tilton, 141 Mass. 94 (1886).

[3] F. démettre, to put away, lay down: L. dimittere, demittere.

[4] Stott v. Rutherford, 102 U. S. 109 (1875), cases, Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 34 (1883).

[5] Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. 246-47 (1852), cases; Metcalf, J., quoting Parker, B., in Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68 (1844); Wilkinson v. Clauson, 29 Minn. 93 (1882); 6 Ala. 320; 50 Conn. 509; 18 Mass. 201; 9 N. H. 219; 7 Wend. 210; 26 Mo. 112; 5 Whart. 278; 105 Pa. 472.

[6] 5 Pet. 282 (1831); 7 T. R. 886.

[7] See Thomas v. Thomas, 6 Durnf. & E. 676 (1769), Kenyon, C. J.; Cleaveland v. Smith, 2 Story, 291 (1842); 71 Cal. 147; 65 Wis. 270; 67 id. 289.

[1] Dodd v. Bartholomey, 44 Ohio St. 175 (1886), Minshall, J.

[2] Morrell v. Fisher, 4 Exch. *604 (1849), Alderson, B.; 113 U. S. 447.

[3] Broom, Max. 629; 1 Whart. Ev. § 945.

[4] Broom, Max. 645; 3 Bradf. 144, 149.

[5] In Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 493 (1885), used in a charitable bequest.

[6] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 1.

[7] [1 Whart. Ev. § 7.

[8] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 301. See White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 524 (1876); Springer v. United States, 102 id. 593 (1880); Noonan v. Lee, 2 Black, 504 (1862); Cleaveland v. Smith, 2 Story, 291 (1842); Ham v. San Francisco, 17 F. R. 121 (1883); 105 Ill. 364; 7 Cush. 460; 45 Pa. 481; 4 C. B. 898; 11 id. 208; 14 id. 122; 2 Pars. Contr. 550, n.

DEMURRAGE.[1] 1. The delay or period of delay of a vessel in port.

2. The sum fixed by the contract of carriage as remuneration to the ship-owner for detention of his ship beyond the days allowed for loading or unloading.

It is usual to calculate this sum at so much per day, and to specify the days allowed for demurrage.

An extended freight or reward to the vessel in compensation for the earnings she is improperly caused to lose. Every improper detention may be considered a demurrage, and compensation under that name be obtained for it.[2]

Not allowed for delay caused by unloading in accordance with the custom of the port.[3] See WORKING-DAYS.

DEMURRER.[4] A declaration that "the party will go no further, because the other has not showed sufficient matter against him;" imports that the objector will wait the judgment of the court whether he is bound to proceed.[5]

An admission of the fact, submitting the law to the court.[6]

The tender of an issue in law upon the facts established by the pleading.[7]

Also, the act of tendering such an issue; and, the writing in which the tender is made.

Demur. To object for legal insufficiency; to interpose a demurrer.

Demurrable. Admitting of a demurrer.

Demurrant. One who demurs; a demurrer.

In law, or at common law, an issue upon matter of law is called a "demurrer:" it confesses the facts to be true as stated by the opposite party, but denies that, by the law arising upon those facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff, or that the defendant has made out a legitimate excuse. The party who demurs, demoratur, rests or abides upon the point in question. The form is by averring the declaration or plea, the replication or rejoinder, to be insufficient in law to maintain the action or defense; and, therefore, praying judgment for want of sufficient matter alleged.[8]

A demurrer in equity is nearly of the same nature as a demurrer in law, being an appeal to the judgment of the court whether the defendant shall be bound to answer the plaintiff's bill; as, for want of sufficient matter of equity therein contained; or where the plaintiff, upon his own showing, appears to have no right; or where the bill seeks discovery of a thing which may cause a forfeiture of any kind, or may convict a man of criminal misbehavior. If the defendant prevails the plaintiff's bill is dismissed; if the demurrer is overruled the defendant is ordered to answer.[1]

Demurring is incident to criminal cases when the fact alleged is admitted to be true but the prisoner joins issue upon a point of law in the indictment, by which he insists that the fact as stated is not the crime it is alleged to be. . . Since the same advantage may be had upon a plea of not guilty, or by arrest of judgment when the verdict has established the fact, demurrers to indictments are seldom used.[2]

General demurrer. An exception in general terms to the sufficiency of a pleading as a whole. Special demurrer. Alleges a particular material imperfection.

In a general demurrer at law no particular cause of exception is alleged; in a special demurrer the particular imperfection is pointed out and insisted upon.[3]

In equity practice the formula for a general demurrer is that there is no equity in the bill; in the case of a special demurrer the particular defect or objection is pointed out.[4]

A general demurrer lies for defects of substance; a special demurrer lies for defects of form, and adds to the terms of the former a specification of the particular ground of exception. Thus, alleging a defective title is a fault in substance for which the party may demur generally; but if a title be defectively stated it is a fault in form which must be specifically assigned for cause of demurrer. Under statutes of 27 Eliz. (1585), c. 5, and 4 and 5 Anne (1706), c. 16, unless imperfections, omissions, defects, and other matters of like nature be specifically and particularly set down and shown for cause of demurrer, the court gives judgment according to the very right of the cause without regarding the imperfections, omissions, etc.[5]

Where the objection is to the substance of the allegation, a general demurrer is sufficient; where to a defect in form, a special demurrer is indispensable. But neither demurrer is good unless the objections are apparent upon the face of the bill, from matter inserted or omitted, or from defects in the frame or form of the pleading.[5, 6]

---

[1] L. demorari, to stay: mora, delay.

[2] Donaldson v. McDowell, 1 Holmes, 292 (1873), Shepley, J. See 26 N. Y. 85; 5 Phila. 112; 4 Rand. 510; L. R., 10 Exch. 135; 2 Kent, 159; 2 Pars. Contr. 304; 3 Chitt. Com. L. 426.

[3] The Elida, 31 F. R. 420 (1887).

[4] F. demourer, to tarry, stay, hesitate: L. de-morari, to delay fully, rest: mora, delay.

[5] Leaves v. Bernard, 5 Mod. *132 (1696); 2 Ark. 117; Stephen, Pl. 61; Coke, Litt. 71 b.

[6] [Exp. Vermilyea, 6 Cow. 559 (1826); Havens v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 28 Conn. 89–92 (1859).

[7] Goodman v. Ford, 23 Miss. 595 (1852), Smith, C. J.

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 314.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 446. See 6 Pet. 327.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 333–34.

[3] Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 303 (1866), Clifford, J.: 1 Chitty, Pl. 663; 2 Johns. 428.

[4] Gindrat v. Dane, 4 Cliff. 262 (1874); Story, Eq. Pl. § 455.

[5] Commonwealth v. Cross-Cut R. Co., 53 Pa. 66 (1866): Stephen, Pl. 161; 1 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. 950. See also

A demurrer admits jurisdiction and such matters of fact as are relevant and well-pleaded; but not conclusions of law drawn from the facts,[1] nor matters of inference or argument.[2]

Upon either a general or a special demurrer the opposite party must aver the matter or the form to be sufficient, which is called a "joinder in demurrer," and then the parties are at issue — which the court must determine.[3]

In England special demurrers were abolished by the procedure act of 1852, s. 51.

A party may both demur and plead. By pleading over, the right to demur may be waived.[4] The right to amend, after a demurrer has been sustained, is discretionary with the court.[5]

A demurrer cannot be good in part and bad in part; it must be sustained or fail to the whole extent to which it is interposed.[6]

The court decides for the party who, on the whole, seems best entitled to a judgment.[7] The judgment is as conclusive as a verdict.[8] That a demurrer was made cannot be used as an admission of a fact.[9]

Propositions deducible from the authorities are: (1) A judgment rendered upon a demurrer to a declaration or other material pleading setting forth the facts is as conclusive of matters admitted as a verdict would be, since the facts are established in the former case, as in the latter, by matter of record; and the rule is that facts thus established can never afterward be contested between the same parties or those in privity with them. (2) If judgment is rendered for the defendant, the plaintiff can never afterward maintain against him or his privies any similar action for the same cause upon the grounds disclosed in the declaration: the judgment determines the merits of the cause; a final judgment determining the right ends a dispute, else litigation would be endless.[10]

A demurrer to a complaint because it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is equivalent to a general demurrer to a declaration at common law, and raises an issue which, when tried, will finally dispose of the case as stated in the complaint, on its merits, unless leave to amend or plead over is granted. The trial of such an issue is the trial of the cause as a cause, not the settlement of a mere matter of form in proceeding. There can be no other trial except at the discretion of the court.[11]

Where the demurrer goes to the form of the action, to a defect in pleading, or to the jurisdiction of the court, the judgment will not preclude future litigation on the merits of the controversy in a court of competent jurisdiction upon proper pleadings; and where it goes both to defects of form and to the merits a judgment not distinguishing between the two grounds may be presumed to rest on the former. But where the demurrer is to a pleading setting forth distinctly specific facts touching the merits of the action or defense, and final judgment is rendered thereon, it would be difficult to find any reason in principle why the facts admitted should not be considered for all purposes as fully established as if found by a jury or admitted in open court. If the party against whom a ruling is made wishes to avoid the effect of the demurrer as an admission of the facts he should seek to amend his pleading or answer, as the case may be. Leave for that purpose will seldom be refused upon a statement that he can controvert the facts by evidence. If he does not ask permission the inference may justly be drawn that he is unable to produce the evidence, and that the fact is as alleged in the pleading.[1]

Speaking demurrer. A demurrer which introduces some fact or averment, necessary to support it, not appearing distinctly upon the face of the bill.[2]

Demurrer to evidence. When a record or other matter is produced as evidence, concerning the legal effect of which there arises a doubt, and the adverse party demurs to the same as evidence.[3]

A proceeding by which the court is called upon to say what the law is upon the facts shown in evidence.[4]

The demurrant admits the truth of the testimony, and such conclusions as a jury may fairly draw; but not forced and violent inferences. The testimony is to be taken most strongly against him, and such conclusions as a jury may justifiably draw the court ought to draw.[5]

A demurrer to plaintiff's evidence admits the facts the evidence tends to prove. The court is to make every inference of fact in favor of the plaintiff which a jury might infer. If, then, the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict in his favor, the demurrer should be sustained.[6] See NONSUIT.

Coke, Litt, 72 a; 3 Bl. Com. 315; 1 Chitty, Pl. 642, 16 Am. ed., *694-95.

[1] Gindrat v. Dane, cats.

[2] United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 45-46 (1878), cases; 14 F. R. 498, cases. See 109 U. S. 253, 550; 20 How. 125.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 315.

[4] Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 553 (1876), cases.

[5] United States v. Atherton, 102 U. S. 375 (1880).

[6] First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Howe, 28 Minn. 152 (1881).

[7] See Townsend v. Jemison, 7 How. 706, 714 (1849); 16 Ill. 269; 39 Me. 426; 28 Ala. 687.

[8] Gould, Pl. 444; generally, ib. 428-46.

[9] Pease v. Phelps, 10 Conn. 68 (1834); 26 id. 92.

[10] Gould v. Evansville, &c. R. Co., 91 U. S. 533-34 (1875), cases, Clifford, J.

[11] Alley v. Nott, 111 U. S. 475 (1884), Waite, C. J.; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. secs. 488, 497.

[1] Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 232 (1888), cases, Field, J.

[2] [Brooks v. Gibbons, 4 Paige, 375 (1834), Walworth, Ch. See Edsell v. Buchanan, 2 Ves. Jr. *83 (1793); 1 Sim. 5; 2 Sim. & Stu. 127; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 107.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 372. See Gould, Pl. 446-58; Goodman v. Ford, 23 Miss. 595 (1852), Smith, C. J.

[4] Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 426 (1857), cases, Clifford, J.

[5] Pawling v. United States, 4 Cranch, 221 (1808), Marshall, C. J.; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 121 (1874), cases; 77 Va. 212.

[6] Donohue v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 91 Mo. 360 (1886); 73 id. 219.

Demurrer to interrogatory. The reason a witness offers for not answering a particular question among interrogatories.

DENARIUS DEI. L. God's penny; money given to the church or to the poor; earnest-money, q. v.

DENIAL. See DEFENSE, 2.

DENIZEN.[1] An alien born who has obtained ex donatione regis letters-patent to make him a subject.[2]

Whence denizenize, denizenation or denization,[3] and denizenship. The crown denizenizes; parliament consents to naturalization.

A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of both. He may take lands by purchase or devise, but not by inheritance — for the parent has no inheritable blood.[4] But since 1870, in England, an alien may hold and dispose of property as a natural-born subject.

In South Carolina the status seems to have been created by law.

DENOUNCEMENT. In Mexican law, a judicial proceeding equivalent to the inquest of office at common law.[5]

DENTIST. See CARE; MECHANIC; PHYSICIAN.

DENY. See ADMISSION, 2; DEFENSE, 2; TRAVERSE.

DEODAND.[6] Any personal chattel which was the immediate cause of the death of a rational creature.[7]

The chattel, whether an animal or inanimate object, was forfeited to the king, to be applied to religious uses. Designed, originally, as an expiation for the souls of such persons as were snatched away by sudden death. If any animal killed a person, or if a cart ran over him, it was to be forfeited,— in part, also, as punishment for the supposed negligence in the owner. If the thing was in motion, as, a cart with its loading, all that moved was forfeited; if not in motion, then only the part which was the immediate cause of the death. It mattered not whether the owner was concerned in the killing or not. The right to deodands, in time, was granted to the lords of manors as a franchise.[8]

Abolished by 9 and 10 Vict. (1846) c. 62.

DEPART. See DEPARTURE.

DEPARTMENT. (Adj. Departmental.) The departments of government are the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments.

In our system, it is important that these departments be kept separate, that one be not allowed to encroach upon the domain of another.[1]

While a general separation has been observed between the different departments, so that no clear encroachment by one upon the province of the other has been sustained, the legislative department, when not restrained by constitutional provisions and a regard for certain fundamental rights of the citizen which are recognized in this country as the basis of all government, has acted upon everything within the range of civil government.[2]

The executive business of the general government, under a permission rather than a mandate of the Constitution, is distributed to seven executive "departments" of equal grade.

Administration of the duties of these respective departments is committed directly to a "secretary" or "head," who, with his principal assistants, is appointed by the President as chief executive, with the advice of the Senate.

The departments are designated as of — the interior,[3] justice,[4] the navy,[5] the post-office,[6] state,[7] the treasury,[8] and war.[9] The department of agriculture[10] is of subordinate grade.

The head of a department is required to exercise judgment and discretion in administering the concerns of his office. He exercises his own judgment in expounding the laws and resolutions of Congress under which he is to act. If he doubts, he may call on the attorney-general for counsel. If the Supreme Court should differ with him as to the construction to be placed upon any of these laws it would pronounce judgment accordingly. But the interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments would be productive of nothing but mischief — such power was never intended to be given to them. . . The court by mandamus may direct the doing of a purely ministerial act, but not the exercise of a duty requiring judgment and discretion.[11]

The heads of departments are the President's authorized assistants in the performance of his "executive" duties, and their official acts, promulgated in

---

[1] F. deinsein, a trader "within" the privilege of a city franchise: deins, within,— Skeat.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 374; 6 Pet. 116, note.

[3] Webster's Dict.; 1 Bl. Com. 374.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 374.

[5] [Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477 (1864).

[6] L. deo-dandum, given to God.

[7] [1 Bl. Com. 300.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 300-2.

[1] See Mabry v. Baxter, 11 Heisk. 689-90 (1872).

[2] Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 205 (1888). As to the independence of the departments of government, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 210-27 (1887), cases.

[3] R. S. § 437: Act 3 March, 1849.

[4] R. S. § 346: Act 24 Sept. 1789.

[5] R. S. § 415: Act 30 April, 1798.

[6] R. S. § 388: Act 8 May, 1794.

[7] R. S. § 199: Act 27 July, 1789.

[8] R. S. § 233: Act 2 Sept. 1789.

[9] R. S. § 214: Act 7 Aug. 1789.

[10] R. S. § 520: Act 15 May, 1862.

[11] Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 515-17 (1840), Taney, C. J.; United States v. Macdaniel, 7 id. *15 (1833); Kendall v. United States, 12 id. 616 (1838); Litchfield v. Register and Receiver, 9 Wall. 577 (1869); Carrick v. Lamar, 116 U. S. 426 (1886), cases.

the regular course of business, are presumptively his acts.[1]

When the head of a department is required by law to give information on any subject to a citizen he may ordinarily do this through subordinate officers.[2]

The supervision which the head of a department may exercise over a subordinate does not extend to a matter in which the latter is directed by statute to act judicially.[3]

See COMITY; CONSTITUTIONAL; DOCUMENT, Public; EXECUTIVE; GOVERNMENT; JUDICIARY; LEGISLATURE; MINISTERIAL, 1; PROCLAMATION, 2; REGULATION.

DEPARTURE. Parting from, separation, going away; relinquishment, dereliction.

1. "Departure from the State," said of a debtor, in a statute of limitations, does not mean temporary absence from the State, while his usual place of residence continues therein, but such absence as entirely suspends the power of the plaintiff to commence his action.[4] See ABSCOND; ABSENCE; START.

2. In marine insurance, deviation from the course prescribed.

Imports an effectual leaving of the place behind. If the vessel be detained or driven back, though she may have sailed, there is no departure.[5] See DEVIATION.

3. In pleading, the dereliction of an antecedent ground of complaint or defense for another distinct from and not fortifying the former ground.[6]

In the several stages of the process of pleading a party must not depart or vary from the title or defense he has once insisted on. For this, which is called a "departure," might occasion endless altercation. Therefore the replication must support the declaration, and the rejoinder the plea, without departing from it.[7]

When a party quits or departs from the case or defense which he has first made, and has recourse to another.[8]

Occurs when, for example, the replication or rejoinder contains matter not pursuant to the declaration or plea, not supporting and fortifying it. May arise in the replication or a subsequent pleading. If parties were permitted to wander from fact to fact, forsaking one to set up another, no issue could be joined, nor could there be any termination of the suit. A departure may be in the substance of the action or defense, or in the law on which it is founded.[1]

Taken advantage of by a demurrer, general or special.[2] Compare VARIANCE; DUPLICITY. See ASSIGNMENT, New.

DEPENDENT. 1, adj. Not to be performed until a connected thing is done by another. Opposed, independent, completely obligatory within itself: as, a dependent, or an independent, contract or covenant, qq. v. Compare APPENDENT.

2, n. A person who is dependent for support upon another.[3]

DEPONENT; DEPOSE. See DEPOSITION.

DEPOSIT.[4] 1, v. (1) To give in charge to another person, to commit to the custody and care of another; to leave with for safe-keeping; to deliver to for further action, for a special or a general purpose, explained or understood.

"Deposited," in a statute prescribing the duties of an election inspector, implies that the depositary must safely keep the papers committed to his custody until he surrenders them to the board whose duty it is to canvass the returns and certify the result of the election.[5]

At an election in which a Congressman is voted for, failure to keep the election papers safely as provided by law in Indiana is an offense against the United States government.[6]

(2) Specifically, to deliver money or personalty to another for safe-keeping, without remuneration, until the owner shall request a return of the possession.

2, n.[7] (1) A naked bailment of goods, to be kept for the bailor without reward, and to be returned when he shall require it.[8]

A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust.[9]

---

[1] Rumkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 557 (1887).

[2] Miller v. Mayor of New York, 109 U. S. 385, 394 (1883).

[3] Butterworth v. Hoe, 112 U. S. 50, 55 (1884), cases.

[4] Blodgett v. Utley, 4 Neb. 29 (1875), Maxwell, J.

[5] Union Ins. Co. v. Tysen, 3 Hill, 126 (1842), cases, Cowen, J. See Sloop Active v. United States, 7 Cranch, 100 (1812).

[6] Gould, Pl. 421 — Ch. VIII, sec. 65.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 310.

[8] 1 Chitty, Pl. 674; Steph. Pl. 410; 49 Ind. 112.

[1] 1 Chitty, Pl. 674; Steph. Pl. 410; 49 Ind. 112.

[2] See 5 Ala. 344; 5 Conn. 379; 16 Mass. *92; 44 Mo. 64; 14 Nev. 289; 16 Johns. 206; 20 id. 160; 13 N. Y. 89.

[3] Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 619 (1880); American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 140 Mass. 590 (1886).

[4] L. de-ponere, to lay away, place aside; intrust to.

[5] Re Coy, 31 F. R. 801 (1887), Harlan, J.; Ind. R. S. 1881, c. 56.

[6] United States v. Coy, 32 F. R. 533 (1787), Woods, J.; R. S. § 5515. Affirmed, Sup. Ct., May 14, 1888.

[7] Deposite was the old spelling,—2 Pet. *325; 7 Conn. 495.

[8] Jones, Bailm. 36, 117: 17 Mass. 499; 40 Vt. 260.

[9] Story, Bailm. § 41: 8 Ga. 180; 42 Miss. 544; 29 N. Y. 167.

Also, the thing itself so bailed — goods, money, or other movables.

Depositor. The bailor in a contract of deposit of goods. Depositary. The bailee in a contract; a depositee.[1]

Depository. The place where the goods are received or kept.

General deposit. A deposit which is to be returned in kind. Special deposit. A deposit to be returned in the identical thing.

Quasi-deposit. Possession of another's property obtained by finding it.

A depositary is bound to take only ordinary care of the deposit. What this degree of care is varies with the circumstances of each case. . . He is answerable for gross negligence, which is considered equivalent to a breach of faith. The degree of care necessary to avoid the imputation of bad faith is measured by the carefulness which he uses toward his own property of a similar kind. For although that may be so slight as to amount even to carelessness in another, yet the depositor has no reason to expect a change of character in favor of his particular interest.[2] See BAILMENT; DEPOSITUM.

(2) A delivery of money to a bank or banker upon a contract that an equal sum will be returned on demand; also, the money itself. This, by pre-eminence, is a "deposit."

Whence bank of deposit, bank-deposits, memorandum of deposit, etc.

Depositor. He who delivers money to a bank, subject to his order.

General deposit. In this the depositor parts with title to his money,—lends it to the bank which agrees to return an equivalent sum on demand. Also called an irregular deposit. Special deposit. When the depositor retains title to the thing delivered, which may be bullion, plate, securities, etc., as well as money, and the bank becomes a bailee under obligation to take ordinary care of the article and to return it to the owner when called for.

In the ordinary case of a deposit of money with a banking corporation or banker the transaction amounts to a mere loan, mutuum, or irregular deposit, and the bank is to restore not the same money, but an equivalent sum, when demanded. But in the case of a "special deposit" the very coin or bills are to be restored,— the transaction constitutes a genuine deposit; the banker has no authority to use the money, being bound to return it in individuo.[1]

Originally, a deposit of money was made by placing a sum in gold or silver with a bank or other depositary, to be returned, when called for, in the same identical coin, and without interest, the depositor paying the depositary a compensation for his care. Later, it became customary to make a deposit for a particular period, on interest, or payable at prescribed periods after notice. In time, "deposit" became a symbolical word to designate not only a deposit in its original sense, but all that class of contracts where money in any form was placed with a bank or banker, to be returned in other money on call or at a specified period, and with or without interest. The transaction, in this figurative use of the term, was in reality the same as a "loan" of money between individuals.[2]

Deposits made with bankers may be divided into two classes: that in which the bank becomes bailee of the depositor, the title to the thing remaining with the latter; and that kind of deposit of money, peculiar to banking business, in which the depositor, for his own convenience, parts with title to his money, and lends it to the banker, who, in consideration of the loan and the right to use the money for his own profit, agrees to refund the amount, or any part thereof, on demand.[3]

When the banker specially agrees to pay in bullion or coin he must do so or answer in damages for its value. But where the deposit is general, and there is no special agreement proved, the title to the money deposited passes to the bank, the transaction is unaffected by the character of the money in which the deposit was made, and the bank becomes liable for the amount as a debt, which can be discharged only by such money as is a legal tender. . . When a merchant deposits money with a bank, the rule is, the title to the money passes to the bank, and the latter becomes the debtor to that amount.[4]

Deposits undoubtedly may be made with a banker under such circumstances that the conclusion would be that the title remained in the depositor; and in that case the banker would become the bailee of the depositor, and the latter might rightfully demand the identical money deposited as his property; but where the deposit is general, and there is no special agreement proven inconsistent with such theory, the title to the deposit passes to the banker, and he becomes liable for the amount as a debt which can be discharged only by a legal payment. . . An agreement to refund all or part of a general deposit may be express or implied; if express, it may be to refund with or without interest. The fact that the depositary agreed to pay interest affords strong evidence that the

[1] 108 Pa. 534.

[2] Foster v. The Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 498 (1821), Parker, C. J. See 2 Bl. Com. 453.

[1] Story, Bailm. § 88; State v. Clark, 4 Ind. 316 (1853).

[2] Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 166 (1857), Shankland, J

[3] Marine Bank (of Chicago) v. Fulton Bank (of New York), 2 Wall. 256 (1864), Miller, J. Quoted, Phœnix Bank v. Risley, 111 U. S. 127 (1883), cases; 92 U. S. 370, and 80 N. Y. 96, post. See also 34 La. An. 607; 17 Nev. 152.

[4] Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 678, 680 (1866), Clifford, J Quoted, 92 U. S. 370, post.

title to the money passed out of the depositor by the act of making the deposit.[1]

The power to receive deposits includes all the kinds known and customary in the banking business. National banks have power to receive special deposits gratuitously or otherwise; and when received gratuitously they are liable for their loss by gross negligence. When any such bank has habitually received such deposits, this liability attaches to a deposit received in the usual way. . . The term "special deposits" includes money, securities or other valuables delivered to banks, to be specially kept and redelivered; it is not confined to securities held as collaterals to loans. . . The chief, in some cases the only, deposits received by the early banks were special deposits of money, bullion, plate, etc., for safe-keeping, to be specifically returned to the depositor. . . The definition of the business of banks of deposit, in the encyclopedias, embraces the receiving of the money or valuables of others, to keep until called for by the depositors. And although, in modern times, the business of receiving general deposits has constituted the principal business of the banks, it cannot be said that receiving special deposits is so foreign to the banking business that corporations authorized to carry on that business are incapable of binding themselves by the receipt of such deposits.[2]

Section 5223, Rev. St., which provides that it shall be lawful for a national bank after its failure to "deliver special deposits," is as effectual a recognition of its power to receive them as an express declaration to that effect would have been. The phrase "special deposits," thus used, embraces the public securities of the United States.[3]

It is now well settled that if a bank be accustomed to take special deposits, and this is known and acquiesced in by the directors, and the property deposited is lost by the gross carelessness of the bailee, a liability ensues in like manner as if the deposit had been authorized by the terms of the charter.[4]

The contract between a bank and its depositor is that of debtor and creditor. Money held by a depositor in a fiduciary capacity does not change its character by being placed to his credit.[5]

The right of the depositor is a chose in action, and his check does not transfer the debt, or give a lien upon it to a third person, without the assent of the depositary.[6]

General deposits held by a bank are part of its general fund, and loaned as other moneys. The banker agrees to discharge his indebtedness by honoring checks drawn upon the deposit. When a check on the bank itself is offered, the bank may accept or reject it or receive it conditionally. If, being genuine, it is received as a deposit, when there are no funds, the case is an executed contract, and the thing done cannot be repudiated. Depositors must comply with all reasonable regulations as to depositing and drawing.[1]

It seems to be well settled that a mere check or draft does not operate as an assignment or appropriation of the drawer's deposit in favor of the payee before acceptance by the bank, but the doctrine has not been extended beyond instruments of that character, drawn in the ordinary form; nor to a transaction not restricted to the very terms of such paper.[2]

A general deposit in a bank is so much money to the depositor's credit. It is a debt to him by the bank, payable on demand to his order; not property capable of identification and specific appropriation. A check upon a bank in the usual form, not accepted or certified by its cashier to be good, does not constitute a transfer of any money to the credit of the holder; it is simply an order which may be countermanded, and payment forbidden by the drawer, at any time before it is actually cashed. It creates no lien on the money which the holder can enforce against the bank. It does not of itself operate as an equitable assignment,[3] q. v.

A depositor in a bank who sends his pass-book to be written up and receives it back with entries of credits and debits, and his paid checks as vouchers for the latter, is bound, with due diligence, to examine the pass-book and vouchers, and to report to the bank without unreasonable delay any errors which may be discovered in them; and if he fails to do so, and the bank is thereby misled to its injury, he cannot afterward dispute the correctness of the balance shown by the pass-book.[4] See further BANK, 2; CHECK; TAX, 2.

Deposit, certificate of. A writing, issued by a bank, attesting that the person named has deposited money with it.

A negotiable security, upon the same footing as a promissory note. It is treated as money.[5] See CURRENCY.

---

[1] Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 369-70 (1875), Clifford, J.

[2] Pattison v. Syracuse Nat. Bank, 80 N. Y. 82, 89, 94 (1880), cases, Rapallo, J. Earliest case, Foster v. The Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 478, 496 (1821), Parker, C. J.,—in which the special deposit was a cask containing $58,000 in gold coin.

[3] First Nat. Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 100 U. S. 702, 702 (1879), Swayne, J.: 79 Pa. 106. See further Prather v. Kean, 29 F. R. 498 (1887): 26 Am. Law Reg. 96; ib. 97-98 (1887), cases.

[4] Chesapeake Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54-71 (1881), cases. See 37 N. J. E. 18.

[5] Nat. Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 10 Wall. 157 (1869), cases; Rosenthal v. The Mastin Bank, 17 Blatch. 322-26 (1879), cases.

[1] See Thompson v. Riggs, Scammon v. Kimball, ante; First Nat. Bank of South Bend v. Lanier, 11 Wall. 375 (1870); First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689 (1879); Chesapeake Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. Ins. Co., 104 id. 54, 64-71 (1881), cases.

[2] Coates v. First Nat. Bank of Emporia, 91 N. Y. 26 (1883).

[3] Florence Mining Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 391 (1888), Field, J.

[4] Leather Manufacturers' Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 106 (1886), cases, Harlan, J. See same case, ACCOUNT, 1.

On relation of depositors to bank, see further Fletcher v. Sharpe, Sup. Ct. Ind. (1887), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 71; ib. 74-82 (1887), cases. As to fiduciary depositors, see ib. 25, 29-30 (1887), cases.

[5] Welton v. Adams, 4 Cal. 39 (1854); Gregg v. Union

By virtue of the assurance given, the credit of the bank is added to the credit of the original debtor.[1]

A certificate is a subsisting chose in action and represents the fund it describes, as in cases of notes, bonds, and other securities; so that a delivery of it as a gift constitutes an equitable assignment of the money.[2]

When in the usual form, payable to the order of the depositor, is in the nature of commercial paper, and the payee is chargeable upon his indorsement thereof. Its negotiable character is not affected by the fact that a demand is necessary before an action can be maintained thereon; nor is it changed by a provision therein by which it is made payable in current bank-notes. . . An indorser of the certificate is liable as such, until actual demand made; and the holder is not chargeable with neglect for omitting to make such a demand within any particular time.[3]

A certificate of deposit is, in effect, a negotiable promissory note; and the statute of limitations begins to run from the date of issue, without the necessity of demand of payment.[4]

If lost before it is indorsed by the depositor no title vests in the finder, and the bank cannot require of the depositor indemnity against possible future loss, although the money by the terms of the certificate is payable "on return of the certificate."[5]

By implication of law, contains a promise to repay the money, and cannot be varied by parol evidence.[6]

Deposit company. An association which, having provided a building constructed for protection against loss by theft or fire, and having furnished the same with boxes or safes for the deposit of securities, jewels, papers, etc., invites the public to lease the boxes or receptacles, the association insuring the safety of deposits against the acts of all persons except the depositors themselves.

A fuller name is "safe deposit and trust company."

Where bonds were found to be missing from a box so rented the company was held bound to explain the absence of the bonds, and, in default of evidence of negligence or guilt in the depositor, to pay him the value of the bonds.[7]

The robbery by burglars of securities deposited for safe-keeping in the vaults of a bank is not proof of negligence on the part of the bank.[8]

County Nat. Bank, 87 Ind. 289 (1882), cases; Poorman v. Woodward, 21 How. 275 (1858); 27 N. Y. 378.

[1] Downey v. Hicks, 14 How. 249 (1852).

[2] Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 614 (1882).

[3] Pardee v. Fish, 60 N. Y. 265, 268-69 (1875), cases.

[4] Carran v. Witter, Sup. Ct. Wis. (1887), cases, Lyon, J.; 35 Alb. Law J. 389 (1887), cases.

[5] Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Brown, Sup. Ct. Ohio (1887), cases: 36 Alb. Law J. 26.

[6] Lang v. Straus, Sup. Ct. Ind. (1887), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 115. See generally 24 Cent. Law J. 196 (1887), cases.

[7] Safe Deposit Co. v. Pollock, 85 Pa. 391 (1877).

[8] Wylie v Northampton Bank, 119 U. S. 361 (1886).

Deposit in lieu of bail. One charged with a crime or tort in some cases may make a deposit of money or valuables, instead of furnishing bail for his appearance at the hearing or trial.[1]

Deposit of title deeds. Pledging the title deeds to the owner's estate as security for the repayment of a loan.

In effect an equitable mortgage, q. v.

DEPOSITION.[2] Sometimes is synonymous with "affidavit" or "oath;" but, in its more technical and appropriate sense, is limited to the written testimony of a witness given in the course of a judicial proceeding, at law or in equity.[3]

"Deposition" is a generic expression, embracing all written evidence verified by oath, and thus includes "affidavits;" but, in legal language, a deposition is evidence given by a witness under interrogatories, oral or written, and usually written down by an official person; while an affidavit is the mere voluntary act of the party making the oath, and is generally taken without the cognizance of him against whom it is to be used. Yet the terms may be convertible, as in the rules at law of the Supreme Court.[4]

Depose. Originally, to give testimony under oath, to testify; in present usage, to give testimony which is officially written down for future use. Deponent. One who, being under oath, testifies in writing.

A deponent is a witness who depones (deponit), i. e., places his hand upon the book of the Evangelists while he is being bound by the obligation of an oath. Depose, deponent, and deposition related, originally, then, to the mode in which the oath was administered, not to the testimony itself as oral or written.[5]

Depositions are taken of witnesses out of the jurisdiction, or aged, infirm, sick, or going abroad, upon written interrogatories, the answers to be used as evidence in the event of their death or departure before trial, or of their inability to attend the trial. Testimony in equity, and much in admiralty and divorce, is thus taken, as is also testimony at preliminary examinations in criminal causes; but, in the last case, is not admissible at trial, except, perhaps, by consent of the accused.[6] See further DEDIMUS.

The testimony of any witness may be taken in any civil cause depending in a district or circuit court by deposition de bene esse, when the witness lives at a greater distance from the place of trial than one hundred miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of the district in

[1] See Commercial Warehouse Co. v. Graber, 45 N. Y. 394 (1871); 31 Hun, 231; 18 Abb. N. Cas. 323-24 (1886), cases.

[2] L. de-ponere, to put, place; to lay down or aside.

[3] State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 54 (1850), Green, C. J.

[4] Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatch. 456-57 (1856), Betts, J

[5] [Bliss v. Shuman, 47 Me. 252 (1859), Appleton, J.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 383, 438.

which the case is to be tried, or to a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of trial, before the time of trial, or when he is ancient or infirm.[1]

Such deposition can only be read upon proof that the attendance of the witness upon the trial cannot be procured.[2]

Cases in equity are taken to the Supreme Court from the circuit courts, and the district courts sitting as circuit courts, by appeal, and are heard upon the proofs sent up with the record. "The mode of proof," by section 862, Rev. St., "shall be according to the rules now or hereafter prescribed by the supreme court, except as herein specially provided." The circuit courts are not now by law required to permit the examination of witnesses orally in open court upon the hearing of cases in equity. But if such practice is adopted, the testimony must be taken down, or its substance stated in writing and made part of the record.[3]

Formerly, in England, the mode of examining witnesses in equity was by interrogatories in writing. . . At the December term, 1861, of the Supreme Court, a new practice was introduced. Rule 67 was so amended as to make oral examination the rule, if either party desires it, and examination by written interrogatories the exception.[4]

Congress has not empowered the district and circuit courts to make rules touching the mode of taking testimony. . . Depositions taken under a State law in conflict with the provisions of the act of Congress in relation thereto are not admissible in evidence.[5]

A deposition filed is the property of the court; if the testimony is material it should be used. Some courts hold that it is as competent for one party to read a deposition filed by the other party as to introduce a witness summoned in his behalf.[6] See INTERROGATORY.

DEPOSITUM. L. A naked bailment without reward, and without any special undertaking.[7]

So called because the naked custody is given to another.[8] See DEPOSIT, 1; DEPOT, 1.

DEPOT. 1. In French law, dépôt is the depositum of the Roman and the deposit of the English law.

May mean a place where military stores or supplies are kept.[9]

2. A place where passengers get on and off the cars, and where goods are loaded and unloaded.

All ground necessary or convenient and actually used for these purposes is included.[1] See RAILROAD; STATION, 2.

DEPRIVE. Referring to property taken under the power of eminent domain, means the same as "take."[2]

While the Fourteenth Amendment ordains that no State shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," no definition of the word "deprive" is found in the Constitution. To determine its signification, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain the effect which usage has given it when employed in the same or a like connection.[3] See further TAKE, 8.

DEPUTY.[4] One who acts officially for another; the substitute of an officer — usually of a ministerial officer.

Deputize. To appoint another to act in one's own place or office.

General deputy. A deputy who is empowered to perform all the ordinary duties of an office. Special deputy. A deputy, chosen to do a particular act or acts.

An attorney-general, a district-attorney, a collector of revenue, a mayor, a constable, a marshal, a sheriff, a minister or consul, and other officers, are sometimes said to act by deputy.

There are two kinds of deputies of a sheriff: a general deputy or under sheriff who by virtue of his appointment has authority to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff. He executes process without special power from the sheriff, and may even delegate authority for its execution to a special deputy, who is an officer pro hac vice, to execute a particular writ on some certain occasion. He acts under a specific, not a general, appointment and authority.[5]

The deputy of a ministerial officer may do whatever his principal could do under the circumstances of each case.[6] See DELEGATUS.

DERAIGN.[7] Originally, to confound, disorder; to turn out of course; to displace. In old common law, to prove by disproving,

[1] R. S. §§ 863-75.

[2] Whitford v. Clark County, 13 F. R. 837, 839 (1882), cases; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 45 (1883); Whitford v. Clark County, 119 id. 522 (1886).

[3] Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 4-8 (1875), Waite, Chief Justice.

[4] Bischoffscheim v. Baltzer, 20 Blatch. 231 (1882); s. c. 10 F. R. 3.

[5] Randall v. Venable, 17 F. R. 162 (1883).

[6] Rucker v. Reid, 36 Kan. 470 (1887). As to rules of practice, see 22 Cent. Law J. 581 (1886), cases. Taking before U. S. commissioner, 1 Kan. Law J. 245-49 (1885) — Wash. Law Rep.

[7] Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 498 (1821), Parker, C. J.; 33 Ala. 55; 2 Bl. Com. 453.

[8] Story, Bailm. § 43.

[9] Caldwell's Case, 19 Wall. 264 (1873).

[1] Fowler v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 21 Wis. 79 (1866); Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Rose, 24 Ohio St. 229 (1873); State v. New Haven, &c. R. Co., 37 Conn. 163 (1870); 34 La. An. 624; 110 U. S. 682.

[2] Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167 (1853); Grant v. Courter, 24 Barb. 238 (1857).

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 123 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[4] F. deputé, one deputed: L. deputare, to esteem, allot, destine.

[5] Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 162 (1831), Ewing, C. J.

[6] The Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall. 111 (1873); Re Executive Communication, 12 Fla. 652 (1868).

[7] O. F. derainer, to maintain in a legal action: L. L. de rationare, to contend in law.

or simply to prove; as, to deraign a right, deraign the warranty.[1]

Also spelled darraign, darrain.

DERELICT.[2] Relinquished, deserted, abandoned.

Dereliction. The state of being abandoned or cast away; also, the thing itself of which this is predicated.

1. Land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed.[3] Sometimes called "reliction." See ALLUVION.

2. Anything thrown away or abandoned with intention to relinquish claim of ownership thereto.

In the civil law the voluntary abandonment of goods by the owner, without the hope or purpose of returning to the possession.[4]

Dereliction or renunciation of goods requires both the intention to abandon and external action.[5]

The right of appropriating a derelict is one of universal law. It existed in a state of nature, and is only modified by society, according to the discretion of each community.[6] See ABANDON, 1.

3. Specifically, maritime property entirely deserted.

It is sufficient that the thing is found deserted or abandoned upon the seas, whether it arose from accident or necessity, or voluntary dereliction. . . A thing was not derelict in the civil law unless the owner voluntarily abandoned it without any further claim of property in it.[7]

The abandonment must be final, without hope of recovery or intention to return. It is not sufficient that the crew have left temporarily, as, to procure assistance.[8]

A case of "quasi-derelict" occurs when the vessel is not abandoned, but those on board are physically and mentally incapable of doing anything for their safety.[9] See SALVAGE.

DERIVATIVE. See ACQUISITION; CONVEYANCE, 2.

DERIVED. See DEVOLUTION.

DEROGATION. Partial repeal or abrogation: impairment of utility and force; restriction.

Statutes in derogation of the common law or of common right are to be strictly construed.[1] In this category are: attachment laws;[2] affidavit-of-defense laws;[3] changes in commercial paper sought to be made by local statutes;[4] contracts in restraint of the taxing power;[5] summary convictions.[6]

DESCEND.[7] Sometimes, to "pass by descent or inheritance" or "be inherited by,"— thereby expressing in a single term what otherwise might require a circumlocution. When so used, in statutes, it is usually accompanied by other words which prevent ambiguity: as, "descend to his father," "to his mother," "to his next of kin;" but in these cases these terms so qualify the word "descend" as to give it the effect of "pass by inheritance" to the person named or described. In a will the word cannot be construed to include any but lineal heirs, without clear indication that it was otherwise intended by the testator.[8]

Ordinarily, for an estate to vest by operation of law in the heirs, immediately upon the death of the ancestor.[9]

In a will, does not work a descent in the strict legal sense, as inheritance is through operation of law. It indicates, presumably, a desire that property shall follow the channel into which the law would direct it.[10]

May import devolution by force of the devise made, rather than descent in the legal sense; that is, "to go down."[11]

Descendant. One who has issued from an individual, including a child, a grandchild, and their children to the remotest degree.[12] Correlative, ancestor, q. v.

Often synonymous with "heir."[13]

"Descendants" includes every person descended from the stock referred to.— is co-extensive with "issue," but not as comprehensive as "relatives;"[14]

[1] [Jacob's Law Dict.] "A title deraigned by a sale," Freeman, Executions, § 282.

[2] L. derelictio, complete, neglect: derelinquere, to forsake.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 262.

[4] Jones v. Nunn, 12 Ga. 473 (1853); 2 Bl. Com. 9; 10 Johns. 356.

[5] Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 455 (1883).

[6] Hawkins v. Barney, 5 Pet. *467 (1831).

[7] Rowe v. Brig and Cargo, 1 Mas. 373, 374 (1818), Story, J.; Montgomery v. The Leathers, 1 Newb. 425 (1852); Evans v. The Charles, ib. 330 (1842); 2 Kent, 357.

[8] The Island City, 1 Black, 128 (1861), Grier, J.; The Laura, 14 Wall. 336, 342 (1871); The Hyderabad, 11 F. R. 754-55 (1882), cases.

[9] Sturtevant v. The Nicholaus, 1 Newb. 452 (1852).

[1] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 87.

[2] Mitchell v. St. Maxent's Lessee, 4 Wall. 243 (1866); 101 U. S. 565.

[3] 56 Pa. 21.

[4] Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. 591 (1874).

[5] Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. 575 (1874).

[6] 1 Burr. 613; 4 Bl. Com. 280; 2 Kent, 73.

[7] L. de-scendere, to pass down.

[8] Baker v. Baker, 8 Gray, 119, 120 (1857), Shaw, C. J.; McDowell v. Addams, 45 Pa. 434 (1863).

[9] [Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 40 (1879), Gray, C. J.

[10] Halstead v. Hall, 60 Md. 213 (1883); Dennett v. Dennett, 40 N. H. 498 (1860).

[11] Ballentine v. Wood, 42 N. J. E. 558 (1886).

[12] Jewell v. Jewell, 28 Cal. 236 (1865): Bouvier.

[13] Huston v. Read, 32 N. J. E. 599 (1880).

[14] Barstow v. Goodwin, 2 Bradf. 416 (1853).

nor does it embrace "brothers and sisters;"[1] has not the same signification that "heirs of the body" has, and may be used by a testator as synonymous with "children."[2]

Descent. Passing downward; hereditary succession.

Hereditary succession to an estate in realty. The title whereby a man on the death of his ancestor acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law.[3] See HEIR.

Lineal descent. Descent from father or grandfather to son or grandson; or from mother to daughter, etc. Collateral descent. From brother to brother, cousin to cousin, etc.

Mediate, immediate descent. A descent may be mediate or immediate in regard to the mediate or immediate descent of the estate of right, or the mediateness or immediateness of the pedigrees or degrees of consanguinity.[4]

A descent from a parent to a child cannot be construed to mean a descent through and not from a parent. When an estate is said to have descended from A to B, the obvious meaning is that it is an immediate descent from A to B. "Come by descent" means by immediate descent.[5]

Canons of descent. The rules which regulate the descent of real estates of inheritance; the rules according to which estates are transmitted from ancestor to heir.

At common law these canons are:

I. An inheritance lineally descends to the issue of the person who last died actually seised, in infinitum, and never lineally ascends.

II. The male issue are admitted before the female.

III. Where there are two or more males in equal degree the eldest only inherits; but females altogether.

IV. Lineal descendants, in infinitum, represent their ancestor.

V. On failure of the lineal descendants of the person last seised the inheritance descends to his collateral relations, being of the whole blood of the first purchaser: subject to the last three preceding rules.

VI. The collateral heir of the person last seised must be his next collateral kinsman of the whole blood.

VII. In collateral inheritances male stocks (however remote) are preferred to female (however near); unless the lands have, in fact, descended from a female.[6]

Lord Hale reduced the rules upon the subject of descent, up to whose time they had continued the same some four hundred years, to this series of "canons." Material alteration was not again made in them till 1833,—by stat. 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 106 (amended in 1859 by 22 and 23 Vict., c. 35, ss. 19, 20). By that act, which went into effect January 1, 1834, among other important alterations, the father is made heir to his son, the latter having no issue; all lineal ancestors are rendered capable of being heirs; and relatives of the half-blood are admitted to succeed on failure of relatives in the same degree of the whole blood.[1]

In England title by "descent" was favored by the courts, because land in the hands of the heirs at law by descent was chargeable with payment of the ancestor's debts, and because such title favored the right of escheat upon failure of heirs. On the other hand, land acquired by "purchase" was not liable for debts, and, upon the death of the owner, descended to the heirs on the paternal side, and upon failure of such heirs to the heirs on the side of the mother. Title by descent was considered the worthier, and where a will gave the devisee the same estate he would have taken as heir-at-law he was adjudged to take not under the will, but by descent or operation of law.[2]

The common-law canons of descent tended to prevent the diffusion of landed property, and to promote its accumulation in the hands of a few. The principles sprang from the martial genius of the feudal system. In the United States the English common law of descents, in its essential features, has been rejected; each State has established a law for itself.[3] So far as the British law was taken as the basis of this legislation, it was the statutes of Charles II (1671, 1678), and of James II (1685), respecting the distribution of personalty. The two systems are radically different.[4]

See BLOOD, 1; CAPUT, Per capita; DISTRIBUTION, 2; FEUD; INHERIT; PEDIGREE; PRIMOGENITURE; PURCHASE, 3.

DESCRIPTIO. L. Delineation: designation, description. Compare DEMONSTRATIO.

Descriptio personæ. Description of the person; an addition to a name or signature: as, "chairman," "president," "agent," "assignee," "executor."

An appellation thus used may not so much serve to show the capacity in which a person acts as to identify him as an individual; but circumstances may indicate an intention to qualify or limit liability.[4]

The rule is that if a person merely adds to the signature of his name the word "agent," "trustee," "treasurer," etc., without disclosing his principal, he

[1] Hamlin v. Osgood, 1 Redf. 411 (1862); 30 N. Y. 393; 35 Ga. 420.

[2] Schmauns v. Goss, 132 Mass. 144 (1882).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 201; 46 Miss. 395; 25 Tex. 241.

[4] [Levy v. M'Cartee, 6 Pet. *112 (1832), Story, J.

[5] Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. *90, 91, 94 (1829), Story, J.; 3 Ohio St. 396; 35 Ind. 451.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 208-35; Bates v. Brown, 5 Wall. 715-17 (1866).

[1] Williams, R. P. 93, 95, 96-106.

[2] Donnelly v. Turner, 69 Md. 83 (1882), Robinson, J.

[3] See 4 Kent, 412, 406, n.

[4] Bates v. Brown, ante, 2 Bl. Com. 515; McDowell v. Addams, 45 Pa. 434 (1863). Virginia law, 9 Va. Law J. 199-203 (1885).

[5] See Reznor v. Webb, 35 How. Pr. 364 (1866); DeWitt v. Walton, 9 N. Y. 572 (1854); Rathbon v. Budlong, 18 Johns. *2 (1818).

is personally bound. The appendix is regarded as a mere descriptio personæ. It does not of itself make third persons chargeable with notice of any representative relation of the signer. But if he is in fact a mere agent, trustee, or officer of some principal, and is in the habit of expressing in that way his representative character in his dealings with a particular party who recognizes him in that character, it would be contrary to justice and truth to construe documents thus made and used as his personal obligations, contrary to the intent of the parties.[1]

DESCRIPTION. See DESCRIPTIO.

Enumeration of characteristic qualities; designation; recital. Whence descriptive. Opposed, misdescription: an erroneous description.

1. A description of land is good if it identifies the land.[2]

Where the description in a deed is true in part, that which is false may be rejected. The instrument will take effect if a sufficient description remains to ascertain its application.[3]

Words clearly inconsistent with the rest of a description may be ignored.[4]

Specification of quantity, after a particular description by courses, distances, boundaries, etc., will be held subject to the controlling part of the description. If the purchaser gets the distinct thing contracted for, he cannot complain on account of a deficiency in quantity, unless deception has been practiced.[5]

A misdescription in a deed will not affect the conveyance, if the property is otherwise so described that it can be identified; especially, where the mistake is in a statement regarding the title.[6] See AT, 2; DEMONSTRATIO, Falsa, etc.; MORE OR LESS; ON; THENCE.

2. As to description of a patent, see INVENTION; PROCESS, 2.

3. Where there is a misdescription in a will, either of a person or of the subject-matter, extraneous evidence is always admissible to show who, or what property, was meant.[7] See AMBIGUITY.

4. Where words in a declaration are descriptive of the instrument sued on, the instrument, when offered in evidence, must conform strictly to that description. One bearing a different date will not be admitted. But as the same contract may be made on one day and take effect another, and as a bond may be dated one day to become obligatory on another, either instrument may be counted on as bearing the first date.[8]

An allegation of a matter of substance may be substantially proved; an allegation of a matter of essential description must be proved, in cases, with literal precision. . . Allegations of time, place, quantity, quality, and allegations in aggravation of damages, are not to be strictly proved, unless descriptive. In local actions place is material, and so of the kind and boundaries of land.[9]

The strict rule of pleading which formerly required exact accuracy in the description of premises sought to be recovered, has, in modern practice, been relaxed, and a general description held to be good. The provisions of statutes as to descriptions by metes and bounds have been held to be directory only; a description by name, where the property is well known, is often sufficient, as, to enable a sheriff to execute a writ of possession, or a surveyor to ascertain the precise limits of the location of a mining claim.[10] See ALLEGATION; INDICTMENT.

DESERTION.[11] A willful abandonment of an employment or duty, in violation of a legal or moral obligation.[12]

A soldier deserts his post, a sailor his ship, an apprentice his master, when they depart from the service to which they are bound without permission or contrary to orders. The word implies a separation which is not with the assent of the person deserted.[13] See ABANDON, 2.

1. By a husband or wife — an intentional and wrongful cessation of matrimonial cohabitation.[14]

An actual abandonment of matrimonial cohabitation, with an intent to desert, willfully and maliciously persisted in, without cause. Mere separation is, then, not desertion.[15]

A breach of matrimonial duty, composed of the actual breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation and of an intent to desert.[16]

Not merely a refusal of matrimonial intercourse, which would be a breach or violation

[1] Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 98 (1881), Bradley, J.; Taylor v. Davis, 110 id. 336 (1884); Wall v. Bissell, 125 id. 393 (1888); 24 Law Reg. 781-82 (1885), cases; 102 Ind. 445.

[2] Litchfield v. County of Webster, 101 U. S. 775 (1879).

[3] White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 524 (1876); Coleman v. Manhattan Beach Improv. Co., 94 N. Y. 229 (1883); Brookman v. Kurxman, ib. 276 (1883); 10 Oreg. 88-89; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 301.

[4] Sampson v. Security Ins. Co., 133 Mass. 54-55 (1882).

[5] See 4 Kent, 466; 1 Story, Eq. § 141; 3 Washb. R. P. 630; 102 U. S. 212. Compensation for misdescription, 3 Law Quar. Rev. 54-63 (1887), Eng. cases.

[6] Sherwood v. Whiting, 54 Conn. 333-37 (1886), cases.

[7] Hawkins v. Garland, 76 Va. 153 (1882).

[8] United States v. Le Baron, 4 Wall. 642, 648 (1866).

[9] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 56-66, cases; Whart. Ev. §§ 942, 945, 1004, 1040, cases.

[10] Glacier Mountain Silver Mining Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 480 (1888), Lamar, J.

[11] L. de, apart; serere, to join: to part from.

[12] Lea v. Lea, 8 Allen, 419 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.; Ford v. Ford, 143 Mass. 580 (1887).

[13] Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 470 (1867); Bennett v. Bennett, 43 Conn. 318 (1876).

[14] Ingersoll v. Ingersoll, 49 Pa. 251 (1865); Bishop v. Bishop, 30 id. 412 (1858); Grove's Appeal, 37 id. 447 (1860); McClurg's Appeal, 66 id. 366 (1870); Sower's Appeal, 89 id. 173 (1879).

[15] Bailey v. Bailey, 21 Gratt. 47 (1871); Latham v. Latham, 30 id. 322 (1878); Burk v. Burk, 21 W. Va. 456 (1883).

of a single duty only, but a cessation of cohabitation, a refusal to live together, which involves an abrogation of all the duties resulting from the marriage contract.[1] See ABANDON, 2 (1); NECESSARIES, 1.

2. By a sailor or seaman — an unauthorized leaving or absence from the ship with an intention not to return to her service.[2]

A quitting of the ship and her service, not only without leave and against the duty of the party, but with an intent not again to return to the ship's duty.[3]

3. By a soldier — absence and an intention not to return to the service.[4]

A minor, over eighteen and under twenty-one, who enlists in the army without the consent of his parent or guardian can commit the offense, and the military tribunals may try him therefor.[5]

4. Of property, see ABANDON, 1; DERELICTION, 3.

DESERVING. Denotes worth or merit, without regard to condition or circumstances.[6]

DESIGN. 1. Aim, intent, purpose; object, end in view.

In an indictment for having in one's possession materials for counterfeiting, may refer to the purpose for which the materials were originally designed, and not to criminal intent in the defendant to use them.[7] See INTENT; MALICE; WILL, 1.

2. Giving a visible form to a conception of the mind,— to an invention.[8]

The acts of Congress which authorize patents for designs were intended to give encouragement to the decorative arts. They contemplate not so much utility as appearance. It is a new and original design for a manufacture, whether of metal or other material; a new and original design for a bust, statue, bas relief, or composition in alto or basso relievo; a new or original impression or ornament to be placed on any article of manufacture; a new and original design for the printing of woolen, silk, cotton, or other fabric; a new and useful pattern, print, or picture, to be either worked into, or on, any article of manufacture; or a new and original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture,— one or all of these the law has in view. And the thing invented or produced, for which a patent is given, is that which gives a peculiar or distinctive appearance to the manufacture, or article to which it may be applied, or to which it gives form. The law contemplates that giving new and original appearances to a manufactured article may enhance its salable value, enlarge the demand for it, and be a meritorious service to the public. It is the appearance itself, no matter by what agency caused, that constitutes mainly, if not entirely, the contribution to the public which the law deems worthy of recompense.[1]

The test of identity of design plainly must be sameness of appearance; and mere difference of lines in the drawing or sketch, a greater or smaller number of lines, or slight variances in configuration, if sufficient to change the effect upon the eye, will not destroy the substantial identity. . . . . It is not essential that the appearance should be the same to the eye of an expert. If, in the eye of an ordinary observer, giving such attention as a purchaser usually gives, two designs are substantially the same, if the resemblance is such as to deceive such an observer, inducing him to purchase one supposing it to be the other, the first one patented is infringed by the other.[1]

The differences in designs necessary to take away their identity are such appearances as would attract the attention of an ordinary observer, giving such attention as a purchaser of the articles, for the purposes for which they were intended and purchased, would usually give. There may be an infringement of a patented design without taking the whole of it, but in such cases the part taken must be a part covered by the patent.[2]

Design patents stand on as high a plane as utility patents, and require as high a degree of the inventive or originative faculty. In patentable designs a person cannot be permitted to select an existing form, and simply put it to a new use, any more than he can be permitted to take a patent for a mere double use of a machine; but the selection and adaptation of an existing form may amount to a patentable design, as the adaptation of an existing mechanical device may amount to a patentable invention.[3] See PAINTING; PATENT, 2.

An act of Congress approved February 4, 1887 (24 St. L. 387), provides — That hereafter, during the term of letters patent for a design, it shall be unlawful for any person other than the owner of said letters patent, without the license of such owner, to apply the design secured by such letters patent, or any colorable imitation thereof, to any article of manufacture for the purpose of sale, or to sell or expose for sale any article of manufacture to which such design or colorable imitation shall, without the license of the owner, have been applied, knowing that the same has been so

[1] Southwick v. Southwick, 97 Mass. 328 (1867), Bigelow, C. J.; Magrath v. Magrath, 103 id. 579 (1870).

[2] Coffin v. Jenkins, 3 Story, 113 (1844), Story, J.

[3] Cloutman v. Tunison, 1 Sumn. 375 (1833), Story, J.; The Mary Conery, 9 F. R. 223 (1881); 3 Kent, 155.

[4] Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 343 (1874).

[5] Re Zimmerman, 30 F. R. 176 (1887).

[6] Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 218 (1881), cases, Gray, Chief Justice.

[7] Commonwealth v. Morse, 2 Mass. *131 (1806).

[8] [Binns v. Woodruff, 4 Wash. 52 (1821), Washington, J.

[1] Gorham Company v. White, 14 Wall. 524–28 (1871), cases, Strong J.: Act 29 Aug. 1842; 5 St. L. 543. See Acts 8 July, 1870, and 18 June, 1874: R. S. §§ 4929–33.

[2] Dryfoos v. Friedman, 18 F. R. 825 (1884), Wheeler, J.

[3] Western Electric Manuf. Co. v. Odell, 18 F. R. 321 (1883), Blodgett, J. For the rule as to damages for infringement, see Dobson v. Hartford Carpet Co., 114 U. S. 439, 445 (1885), cases, Blatchford, J.; Dobson v. Dornan, 118 id. 10, 17 (1886).

applied. Any person violating the provisions, or either of them, of this section, shall be liable in the amount of two hundred and fifty dollars; and in case the total profit made by him from the manufacture or sale, as aforesaid, of the article or articles to which the design, or colorable imitation thereof, has been applied, exceeds the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, he shall be further liable for the excess of such profit over and above the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars; and the full amount of such liability may be recovered by the owner of the letters patent, to his own use, in any circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, either by action at law or upon a bill in equity for an injunction to restrain such infringement.

Sec. 2. Remedies by existing law shall not be impaired; but the owner shall not twice recover the profit made from the infringement.

DESIGNATIO. L. Pointing out: designation.

Designatio personæ. Designation of the person — to a contract. Compare DESCRIPTIO.

Designatio unius. See EXPRESSIO, Unius, etc.

DESIGNATION. The use of an expression, instead of the name, to indicate a person or thing. Compare DEMONSTRATION, 2.

DESIRE. In a will, where the object is specified, may raise a trust.[1] See PRECATORY; WANT.

DESPATCH. See DISPATCH.

DESPOIL. Imports the use of violence or of clandestine means to deprive a person of something he possesses.[2]

DESTINATION. See ARRIVAL; PORT, Of destination.

DESTROY. To "destroy a vessel" is to unfit her for service beyond the hope of recovery by ordinary means.[3]

Destroyed instrument. See EVIDENCE, Secondary; LOST, 2.

Destroyed property. See MISCHIEF, Malicious; PERISHABLE; RES, Perit, etc.

DETAINER. A withholding; detention. See DETINERE.

1. Restraint of the person, unassented to. See IMPRISONMENT.

2. Withholding possession of property from the rightful owner. See CONVERSION, 2.

Forcible detainer. Keeping possession of another's realty by force and without authority of law.

The original entry may have been peaceable.[1]

Where one, who has entered peaceably upon land, afterward retains possession by force.[2]

Forcible entry and detainer. See ENTRY, 1.

DETECTIVE. See DECOY; REWARD, 1.

DETENTION. See DETAINER; IMPRISONMENT; REPLEVIN.

DETERIORATION. See PERISHABLE; SOUND, 2 (1).

DETERMINE.[3] To end, terminate; to close; to ascertain, settle.

1. To come to an end: as, for an estate for life to determine at death.[4]

2. To decide: as, to determine a question, a controversy. Compare DEFINE.

Determinable. Liable to come to an end: as, a determinable fee, q. v.

Determination. The ending of a thing — an action or proceeding, some right or privilege; also, the act of ascertaining a matter of fact or of law; and, again, the act of deciding, and the decision itself. Compare PREMEDITATE.

"Determined" and "has become void" both imply that the thing has in effect been brought to an end. But while the former comprehends every mode of terminating or of bringing to an end, the latter applies to termination in one specific mode.[5]

To "finally determine" refers to a final determination in the absolute sense. When a special tribunal has power to hear and determine a matter, its decision, within the scope of its authority, binds all parties. In this category, for example, are the decisions of land officers.[6] Compare SEWER; TRIBUNAL.

DETINERE. L. To hold, keep back, detain.

Detinet. He withholds. Detinuit. He withheld (has withheld). Non detinet. He does not withhold.

Technical words formerly used in actions of replevin to describe the claim, and the denial, that the property was illegally detained. See DETINUE; REPLEVIN. Compare DEBET, Et detinet; CAPERE, Cepit.

DETINUE. An action for depriving one of the possession of personalty acquired originally by lawful means.

Thus, if A lends B a horse, and B refuses to restore it, the injury consists in the detaining, not in the orig-

[1] Vandyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Caines, *84 (1806).

[2] [Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 268 (1850).

[3] United States v. Johns, 1 Wash. 372 (1806).

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 179.

[2] Ladd v. Dubroca, 45 Ala. 427 (1871); 71 id. 571; 1 Russ. Cr. 310; 41 Ill. 285; 4 Bl. Com. 148.

[3] L. determinare, to end, bound: terminus, limit, boundary.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 121, 146; 1 Washb. R. P. 880.

[5] [Sharp v. Curds, 4 Bibb, 548 (1817).

[6] Rector v. Gibbon, 2 McCrary, 286 (1881), cases; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 83 (1871).

inal taking: and possession may be recovered by an action of detinue. To successfully maintain the action it is essential: that the defendant came lawfully into possession of the goods; that the plaintiff has a property in them; that they be of some value; and that they be identified. If the jury find for the plaintiff they must assess the value of the several articles, and damages for the detention. The judgment is that the plaintiff recover the goods, or, if they cannot be had, then their respective values, and the damages awarded for the detention.[1]

The plea of non detinet raises the general issue. In some States this action has yielded to the less technical actions of trover and replevin, qq. v.

DETINUIT. See DETINERE.

DETRIMENT. See CONSIDERATION, 2; DAMAGE; DAMAGES.

DEUS. See ACTUS; DENARIUS; EX VISITATIONE.

DEVASTATION. Wasteful use of trust property; particularly, the property of a deceased person. See DEVASTAVIT.

DEVASTAVIT.[2] L. He has wasted. The technical name for waste by an executor or an administrator; occasionally, extravagance or misapplication of assets by any trustee.[3]

A wasting of assets; any act or omission, any mismanagement, by which the estate suffers loss.[4]

A waste of the estate; as, payment by an executor of his private debt with assets, the payment not being intended to replace money advanced on account of debts of the testator.[5]

One who has reasonable ground to believe that a trustee is going to misapply assets can take no advantage of his own act of connivance.[6]

The assets or their proceeds, as far as they may be traced into the hands of persons affected with notice of the misapplication, may be followed and recovered.[7] See BONA, De bonis propriis.

DEVELOP. See MINERAL; MINE; OPERATE.

DEVEST. See VEST.

DEVIATION. In marine insurance, a voluntary departure, without necessity or reasonable cause, from the usual course of the voyage.[7]

Originally, only a departure from the course of the voyage; now, a material departure from or change in the risk insured against, without just cause.[1]

Unnecessary delay may be tantamount to a deviation. It is understood as part of the contract that the voyage is to be prosecuted in the usual, ordinary route, and the business attended to with at least ordinary diligence. The shortness of the time, when delay is really intended, is immaterial.[2]

Turning aside to save the lives of persons upon a distressed vessel is not a deviation.[3]

Nor is it to touch and stay at a port out of the course of the voyage, if such departure is within the usage of the trade. When a bill of lading provides that the goods are to be carried from one port to another, prima facie a direct voyage is intended; but this may be controlled by usage. Established usages relating to a voyage are impliedly made part of the contract, if nothing is expressed to the contrary.[4] See TOUCH.

DEVICE. See EQUIVALENT, 2; PATENT, 3.

DEVISARE. L. To separate, divide, distribute: to dispose of property by will; to devise.

Devisavit vel non. Did he make a devise or not; did he make a will. An issue, directed by a court of probate or other court of equity, to be tried by a jury in a court of law, to test the validity of a writing purporting to be a will, when it is alleged, and by prima facie proof established, that there was fraud, undue influence, or incapacity in the deceased, at the time of the making of the instrument. See INFLUENCE; INSANITY, 2 (5).

The right of an executor to costs in an issue depends upon the question whether the litigation is for the benefit of those entitled to the estate.[5]

DEVISE. 1, v. Originally, to divide or distribute property; now, to give realty by will. See DEVISARE.

2, n. A disposition of real property, contained in a man's last will and testament.[6]

A testamentary disposition of land.[7]

In England, an appointment of particular lands to a particular devisee,—in the nature of a conveyance by way of appointment.[8]

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 151-52; Story, Eq. §§ 699-711, 906.

[2] Dĕv-as-tā'-vit.

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 508; 3 id. 292; 71 Ala. 240.

[4] [Ayers v. Lawrence, 59 N. Y. 197 (1874); Clift v. White, 12 id. 531 (1855): 2 Williams, Exec. 1629.

[5] Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 327-28 (1879), cases.

[6] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 560-61.

[7] [Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co., 9 Mass. 447 (1812).

[1] Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co., 30 Ohio St. 341 (1876); 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 1.

[2] Coffin v. Ins. Co., ante; 7 Cranch, 26; 3 Wheat. 159; 8 id. 291; Pet. C. C. 98; 3 Kent, 313-14.

[3] 1 Sumn. 400; 2 Wash. 80; 1 Newb. 449; Sprague, 141. See generally 15 Am. Law Rev. 108-20 (1881), cases.

[4] Hostetter v. Gray, 11 F. R. 181 (1882), cases.

[5] Sheets's Appeal, 100 Pa. 197 (1882). See generally 18 Cent. Law J. 83.

[6] [2 Bl. Com. 372.

[7] Fetrow's Estate, 58 Pa. 427 (1868).

[8] Harwood v. Goodright, 1 Cowp. 90 (1774), Mansfield, J.; 17 E. L. & Eq. 198.

Devisor.[1] He who gives realty by will. Devisee. He to whom it is given.

But "devise" is often used in the sense of "bequeath" and "bequest," as referring to a legacy of personalty. In doubtful cases it is safest to adhere to the technical meaning, on the presumption that the testator used the word in that sense; but this rule will give way when it clearly appears that he understood and used the word in the popular sense.[2]

Contingent devise. When the vesting of the interest is made to depend upon the happening of some future event; in which case, if the event never occurs, or until it occurs, no estate vests. Vested devise. A devise which is not subject to a condition, precedent or unperformed. See VEST, 2, Vested.

Executory devise. Such a disposition of lands by will that no estate vests at the death of the devisor, but on some future contingency.[3]

A limitation by will of a future estate or interest in lands or chattels.[4]

Such a limitation of a future estate or interest in lands as the law admits in the case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law.[5]

Not a mere possibility, but a substantial interest, and in respect to transmissibility stands on the same footing with a contingent remainder.[6]

By it a remainder may be created contrary to the general rule, on the supposition that the testator acted without advice. . . An executory devise differs from a "remainder" in that it needs no particular estate to support it; by it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited after a fee-simple; and by means of it a remainder may be limited of a chattel-interest, after a particular estate for life.[7]

A devise in futuro to an artificial being to be created is good as an executory devise.[8]

Although an estate may be devised to one in fee-simple or fee-tail, with a limitation over by way of an executory devise, yet, when the will shows a clear purpose to give an absolute power of disposition to the first taker, the limitation over is void.[9]

"If there be an absolute power of disposition given by the will to the first taker, as if an estate be devised to A in fee and if he dies possessed of the property without lawful issue, the remainder over, or the remainder over the property which he, dying without heirs, should leave, or without selling or devising the same,— in all such cases the remainder over is void as a remainder because of the preceding fee, and it is void as an executory devise because the limitation is inconsistent with the absolute estate or power of disposition expressly given or necessarily implied by the will."[1]

See ACCUMULATION; BEQUEST; DIE, Without children; LAPSE; LEGACY; REMAINDER; RESIDUARY; WILL, 2.

DEVOLUTION. 1. Transfer to a successor in office.

2. A passing from a person dying to a person living: as, the devolution of a title.[2]

"Devolution by law" occurs when the title is such that an heir takes under it by descent from an "ancestor" according to the rules of law applicable to the descent of heritable estates; and in all cases of descent, the estate of the successor is immediately "derived" from the "ancestor" from whom the estate descends.[3]

DI. See DIS.

DIAGRAM. See BOOK, 1.

DICE. See GAME, 2.

DICTA. See DICTUM.

DICTATE. To pronounce orally what is to be written down by another at the same time; as, to dictate a will.[4] See HOLOGRAPH.

DICTIONARY. See DEFINITION; WORD.

No meaning of a word, which has received a construction by law or uniform custom, can be adopted from the dictionaries in conflict with that construction. And where a word, as used, is reconcilable with law or established custom, a different meaning cannot be given to it upon the authority of a lexicographer.[5]

The dictionary clause of a statute is the section which defines what persons, places, things, etc., shall be included within the terms of the statute.[6]

DICTUM. L. A saying, observation, remark. Plural, dicta.

1. A voluntary statement; a comment.

Gratis dictum. A gratuitous remark. A statement one is not required to make, and [1] Dē-vīz'-or; dĕv-ĭ-see'.

[2] Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 528 (1850); Fetrow's Estate, 58 Pa. 427 (1868); 21 Barb. 561; 13 id. 109.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 172.

[4] Brown's Estate, 38 Pa. 294 (1861).

[5] Fearne, Cont. Rem. 386; Jarman, Wills, 864.

[6] Medley v. Medley, 81 Va. 268–72 (1886), cases.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 173–75; Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall. 474–75 (1867); 50 Conn. 407; 2 Mich. 296; 52 N. H. 273; 11 Wend. 278; 31 Barb. 566; 2 Washb. R. P. 679.

[8] Ould v. Washington Hospital, 98 U. S. 313 (1877), cases; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1146, 1160.

[9] Howard v. Carusi, 109 U. S. 730 (1883); Hoxsey v. Hoxsey, 37 N. J. E. 29 (1883); 16 S. C. 325.

[1] 4 Kent, 271.

[2] Parr v. Parr, 7 Eng. Ch. *643 (1833).

[3] Earl of Zetland v. Lord-Advocate, 3 Ap. Cas. 590 (1878). "Devolution of liability," 61 Wis. 330. In Louisiana an appeal may be "devolutive" or suspensive, 21 La. An. 295; 30 F. R. 533.

[4] [Prendergast v. Prendergast, 16 La. An. 220 (1861); Hamilton v. Hamilton, 6 Mart. 143 (1827).

[5] State ex rel. Belford v. Hueston, 44 Ohio St. 6 (1886), Spear, J.

[6] See R. S. §§ 1–5, 5013; 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 87.

for which he is not liable in damages for injury traceable thereto.[1]

As, an assertion by a vendor that his land is fit for a certain purpose, or is worth so much, cost so much, or that he has refused so much for it.[1] See CAVEAT, EMPTOR; COMMENDATIO.

2. An opinion expressed by a judge on a point not necessarily arising in a case.[2]

Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and, being made without argument or full consideration, are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself.[3]

Obiter dicta. Such opinions, uttered "by the way," not upon the point or question pending, but as if turning aside for the time from the main topic to a collateral subject.[3] Often, simply, obiter or an obiter.

An expression of opinion upon a point in a case, argued by counsel and deliberately passed upon by the court, though not essential to the disposition of the case, if a dictum at all, is a "judicial" dictum as distinguished from a mere obiter dictum, i. e., an expression originating alone with the judge who writes the opinion, as an argument or illustration.[4]

To make an opinion a decision there must have been an application of the judicial mind to the precise question necessary to be determined in order to fix the rights of the parties. Therefore the Supreme Court has never held itself bound by any part of an opinion which was not needful to the ascertainment of the question between the parties.[5]

"The case called for nothing more; if more was intended by the judge who delivered the opinion, it was purely obiter."[6]

Dicta are not binding as precedents; at most they receive the respect due to the private opinions of the judges by whom uttered.[7] See DECISION; OPINION, 3.

DICTUS. See ALIAS.

DIE; DYING; DEATH. In several phrases, have a technical meaning:

Die by his own hand or by suicide. In policies of life insurance, used in a proviso exempting the company from liability.

In such case the words mean: (1) That if the assured, being in the possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties, from any cause and by any means, intentionally takes his own life, there can be no recovery; (2) that if the death is caused by the voluntary act of the assured, he knowing and intending that death shall be the result of his act, but when his reasoning faculties are so far impaired that he is not able to understand the moral character, the general nature, consequences, and effects of the act; or when he is impelled thereto by an insane impulse, which he has no power to resist,—such death is not within the contemplation of the parties, and the insurer is liable.[1]

The proviso refers to an act of criminal self-destruction; it does not apply to an insane person who takes his own life intending to take it, and knowing that death would be the result.[2]

"Die by his own hand," "die by suicide," and "commit suicide," are synonymous with voluntary suicide.[3] But the addition of the condition "sane or insane" will relieve the insurer, whatever be the condition of mind of the insured.[4,3]

In 1872, when Terry's Case was decided, there was a conflict of opinion as to the interpretation to be placed upon the words "die by his own hand" or "die by suicide." All authorities agreed that the phrases did not cover every possible case of self-destruction in a blind frenzy or under an overwhelming insane impulse. Some courts held that they included every case in which a man, sane or insane, voluntarily took his own life; others, that insane self-destruction was not within the condition. . . If a man's reason is so clouded or disturbed by insanity as to prevent his understanding the real nature of his act, as regards either its physical consequence or its moral aspect, the case appears to come within the forcible words uttered by the late Mr. Justice Nelson, when Chief Justice of New York, in the earliest American case upon the subject: "Self-destruction by a fellow-being, bereft of reason, can with no more propriety be ascribed to his own hand than to the deadly instrument that he may have used for the purpose;" and, whether it was by drowning, poisoning, hanging or other manner, "was no more his act, in the sense of the law, than if he had been impelled by irresistible physical power."[4]

Die in consequence of a violation of law. Expresses another condition under which a policy of life insurance will be rendered void.

In a recent case it was held that so long as there was a violation of law on the part of the assured, and death as its result, it was immaterial in what manner the death was produced, excepting that there must

---

[1] Medbury v. Watson, 6 Metc. 259 (1843); Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen, 214 (1861).

[2] State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 573 (1867), Beatty, C. J.

[3] Rohrback v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 56 (1875), Folger, J.

[4] Buchner v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 60 Wis. 267-69 (1884), Cassoday, J.

[5] Carroll v. Lessee of Carroll, 16 How. 287 (1853), Curtis, J.; 6 Wheat. 399.

[6] United States v. County of Clark, 96 U. S. 218 (1877), Strong, J.; 107 id. 179.

[7] See 17 F. R. 423, 426.

[1] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 583 (1872), Hunt, J.; 1 Dill. 403.

[2] Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 286 (1876), cases; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Groom, 86 Pa. 96-98 (1878), cases; Cooper v. Massachusetts Life Ins. Co., 102 Mass. 238 (1869), cases; Knights of the Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 444-49 (1882), cases.

[3] Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 232 (1877), cases.

[4] Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 127, 131 (Nov. 5, 1883), cases, Gray, J., quoting Breasted v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 4 Hill, 75 (1843).

have been a direct connection between the criminal act and the death.[1]

In such case "violation of law" means crime; and "known violation of law" indicates a voluntary criminal act. The burden of proof is upon the insurer.[2]

Death from suicide is not a death "in violation of the criminal laws" of New York.[3].

Die without children, heirs, or issue. In a will, as applied to realty, prima facie import an indefinite failure of issue,— total extinction of the testator's family, or the death of all his descendants to the remotest generation.

This has uniformily been the construction, when there were no expressions in the will controlling the legal meaning of the words, or pointing to a definite failure of issue.[4]

As applied to personalty, construed to mean dying without heirs living at the death of the devisee.[5]

When there is anything in a gift or limitation to show that the testator meant a failure of issue in the life-time of the first taker, instead of an indefinite failure, a limitation over is construed as an executory devise in defeasance of a fee-simple, and not as a remainer sustained by an estate-tail.[6]

Whether a presumption that a person died without issue will be indulged depends upon the circumstances shown in each case. If, for instance, circumstances are proven indicating non-marriage or childlessness, then death without issue may be presumed.[7] See further DEFINITE; ISSUE, 5.

DIES. L. A day; the day.

Ad diem. At the day; on the very day: as, the ad diem demand of a bill.[8]

Comperuit ad diem. He appeared at the day. A plea that the defendant in an action upon a bail bond appeared on the day designated in the bond.

Solvit ad diem. He paid on the day. Solvit post diem. He paid after the day. Pleas to actions on bonds for the payment of money.

Dies a quo. The day from which. Dies ad quem. The day to which. The day from which, and the day to which, to compute time.

Dies dominicus. The Lord's day — Sunday. Dies juridicus. A judicial or court day.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Sunday is a non-judicial day — is not a day for court business, except as to the issue and return of criminal process. Whence dies non (juridicus): a non-judicial day.

Dies non juridicus means only that process ordinarily cannot issue, be executed, or returned, and that courts do not sit, on that day. It does not mean that no judicial action can then be had.[1] See SUNDAY.

A civil process awarded or a judgment entered on a holiday is not void.[2] See HOLIDAY.

Quarto die post. On the fourth day thereafter.

On every return-day in the term the person summoned has three days of grace, beyond the day named in the writ, in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, quarto die post, it is sufficient. . . The feudal law allowed three distinct days of citation, before the defendant was adjudged contumacious for not appearing. . . At the beginning of each term, the court does not usually sit for the dispatch of business till the fourth or appearance day.[3]

DIFFERENCES. See OPTION, Contract.

DIFFICULTY. 1. As applicable to what takes place between parties, when it results in a breach of the peace or a flagrant violation of law, is in general use, and well understood.[4]

It is of constant application in legal proceedings, and in the reports of adjudicated cases. It is expressive of a group or collection of ideas that cannot, perhaps, be imparted so well by any other term.[4]

2. In the performance of a covenant, see POSSIBLE.

DIGEST. A compilation presenting the substance of many books in one, under an arrangement (usually alphabetical) intended to facilitate reference.

It reproduces the rules of the decisions by mere quotation and extract.[5]

[1] Murray v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 80 Hun, 429 (1883); Bradley v. Mut. Benefit Co., 45 N. Y. 422 (1871); Cluff v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 95 Mass. 316 (1866).

[2] Cluff v. Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co., 99 Mass. 326 (1868).

[3] Darrow v. Family Fund Society, 42 Hun, 245 (1886).

[4] See Williams v. Turner, 10 Yerg. 289 (1837); Wardell v. Allaire, 20 N. J. L. 9-16 (1842), cases; Davies v. Steele, 38 N. J. E. 170-73 (1884); 37 id. 81; Gray v. Bridgeforth, 33 Miss. 344 (1857); Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. 332 (1860); Re Merceron's Trusts, 4 Ch. Div. 182 (1876); 20 Moak, 759; Snyder's Appeal, 95 Pa. 177-81 (1880), cases; Magrum v. Piester, 16 S. C. 323-24 (1881); Quigley v. Gridley, 132 Mass. 37 (1882), cases; Schmauns v. Göss, ib. 145 (1882).

[5] Wallis v. Woodland, 32 Md. 104 (1869); Moffat v. Strong, 10 Johns. *15 (1813).

[6] Williams, R. P., 4 Rawle's ed., 207, cases; 26 Am. Law Rev. 107-15 (1888), cases.

[7] Bank of Louisville v. Trustees of Public Schools, 86 Ky. 231-32 (1885), cases.

[8] 101 U. S. 565.

[1] State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 193 (1876).

[2] Paine v. Fresco, 1 Co. Ct. R. 562 (Pa., 1886), cases.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 278.

[4] Gainey v. People, 97 Ill. 279 (1881).

[5] [Abbott's Law Dict.

Simply a manual of reference to the original cases, which are the authority.[1]

See ABRIDGMENT; COMPILATION.

DIGGING. May mean excavating, and not be confined to removing earth as distinguished from rock.[2]

DIGNITY. In old English law, a species of incorporeal hereditament.

Dignities bear a near relation to offices. They were originally annexed to the possession of certain estates in land, and created by a grant of those estates. Although now little more than personal distinctions, they are still classed under the head of realty.[3]

DILAPIDATION. See PERISHABLE.

DILATORY. Said of a defense or a plea that resists the plaintiff's present right of recovery by interposing some temporary objection, as that the court has no jurisdiction, that the plaintiff lacks capacity to sue.[4] See PLEA.

DILIGENCE. 1. In the law of bailment and of common carriers of persons is opposed to "negligence," and synonymous with "care" in its three degrees of slight, ordinary, and extraordinary or great.[5]

Due diligence. What constitutes "due diligence," in an action to recover damages caused by negligence, is for the jury; and the burden of proof is with the plaintiff to show the negligence.[6]

Ordinary diligence. That degree of care, attention, or exertion which, under the circumstances, a man of ordinary prudence and discretion would use in reference to the particular thing were it his own property, or in doing the particular thing were it his own concern.[7]

"Common" or "ordinary" diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exert in respect to their own concerns, and not any one man in particular.[8]

See further BAILMENT; CARE; CARRIER; NEGLIGENCE.

2. To charge the indorser of a bill or note, upon non-payment by the maker or acceptor, the exercise of "diligence," "due diligence," or "reasonable diligence" toward notifying the indorser of the fact of non-payment, is required by the law-merchant.

Due diligence. Some effort or attempt to find the party, which the court or judge shall be satisfied is reasonable under the circumstances.[1] See PROTEST, 2.

Diligently inquire. Said of a grand jury, see INQUIRY, 2.

DIMINUTION. Omission; defect; incompleteness.

Where the whole of a record is not properly or not truly certified by an inferior court to the court of review the party injured thereby may allege or "suggest" diminution of the record, and cause it to be rectified[2] — by means of a writ of certiorari, q. v.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICERS. Ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners, chargés d'affaires, agents and secretaries of legation.[3] See CONSUL; MINISTER, 8.

DIPSOMANIA. See INTEMPERATE.

DIRECT. 1, adj. Straight; not circuitous; immediate; the first or original.

Opposed (1) to indirect: as, a direct or indirect — confession, contempt, damage, docket or index, examination, interest, interrogatory or question, tax, qq. v.

Opposed (2) to redirect, the direct over again: as, an examination (q. v.) following a cross-examination.

Opposed (3) to cross: as in direct examination; to collateral: as, the direct line of descent; to circumstantial: as, direct evidence; to contingent or remote: as, a direct interest; to consequential: as, direct damages. See those substantives.

The "most direct route of travel" between two places, within the meaning of a statute giving a sheriff mileage for carrying prisoners to a penitentiary, is the railroad, although it is sixty-four miles long while the highway is but thirty-five.[4] See DISTANCE.

To "proceed direct" to a port is to take a direct course, without deviation or unreasonable delay; not, to leave port immediately.[5]

What cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly.[6]

---

[1] [Bouvier's Law Dict.; 1 Bl. Com. 81.

[2] Sherman v. New York City, 1 N. Y. 320 (1848).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 37; 1 Ld. Raym. 13; 7 Rep. 122.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 301.

[5] See Brand v. Troy, &c. R. Co., 8 Barb. 378 (1850); 19 How. Pr. 219; 29 Ala. 305.

[6] Haff v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 14 F. R. 558 (1882).

[7] Swigert v. Graham, 7 B. Mon. 668 (1847), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[8] City of Rockford v. Hilderbrand, 61 Ill. 160 (1871), Sheldon, J.; 71 Ala. 121; 5 Kan. 180; 71 Me. 41; 6 Metc. 96; 25 Mich. 297; 3 Drewst. 14; 31 Pa. 572.

[1] Bixby v. Smith, 49 How. Pr. 53 (1874); Demond v. Burnham, 132 Mass. 311 (1882); Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Am. L. C. 405; Byles, Bills, 272.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 390; Tidd, Pr. 1109.

[3] R. S. § 1674.

[4] Maynard v. Cedar County, 51 Iowa, 421 (1879).

[5] The Onrust, 6 Blatch. 536 (1869).

[6] New York v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 91 (1883).

2, v. To guide, instruct, charge. Opposed, misdirect, to instruct wrongly, to mislead: as, to direct, and to misdirect, a jury in the law which is to regulate its deliberations and verdict. See further CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

Directory. 1, adj. Containing instructions as to what may be done: as, a directory — statute, clause, trust. Opposed, mandatory, q. v.

"Directory," referring to a charter, means that it is to be considered as giving directions which ought to be followed, not as so limiting the power that it cannot be effectually exercised without observing them.[1] See LEGAL, Illegal; PROHIBITION, 1.

2, n. A board of directors, q. v.

DIRECTORIES. See COPYRIGHT.

Where the commercial value of two society directories depends upon the judgment of the compilers in selecting names, each is original as far as the selection is original. One compiler may not merely copy names from the other's book; but he may use it to verify the orthography of names or the correctness of addresses. The existence of the same errors in the two books raises a presumption of piracy that can be overcome only by clear evidence to the contrary.[2]

DIRECTORS. Persons legally chosen to manage the affairs of a corporation or company.

Directors, board of, or directory. The whole body of such managers, jointly considered.

The directors of a corporation are subject to the obligations imposed upon trustees and agents.[3]

They are officers and agents, and represent the interests of the abstract legal entity, and of those who own the shares of its stock.[4]

To the stockholders they are not as technical trustees, but as mandataries, bound to exercise ordinary skill and diligence. They are not liable for a mistake of judgment, within the scope of their powers; but they are responsible for losses occasioned by embezzlement, willful misconduct, breach of trust, or gross inattention by which fraud has been perpetrated by an agent, officer, or co-director.[5]

They are at least quasi trustees for the creditors of the corporation. When that is insolvent good faith forbids that they use their position to save themselves or one of their number at the expense of other creditors.[6]

The directors of a corporation are its exclusive executive agents, and, as it can act only through them, the powers vested in the corporation are deemed conferred upon its representatives; but they are, nevertheless, trustees for the stockholders. The law recognizes the stockholders as the ultimately controlling power in the corporation, because they may at each authorized election entirely change the organization, and may at any time keep the trustees within the line of faithful administration by an appeal to a court of equity. . . General power in a board of directors "to perform all corporate acts" refers to the ordinary business transactions of the corporation. The stockholders alone can make or authorize fundamental or organic changes.[1]

As a rule, the directors of a corporation are only required, in the management of its affairs, to keep within the limits of its powers and to exercise good faith and honesty. They undertake, by virtue of the assumption of the duties incumbent on them, to perform those duties according to the best of their judgment and with reasonable diligence, and a mere error of judgment will not subject them to personal liability for its consequences. And unless there has been some violation of the charter or the constating instruments, or unless there is shown to be a want of good faith, or a willful abuse of discretion, or negligence, there will be no personal liability. They are personally only bound, in the management of the affairs of the corporation, to use diligence and prudence, such as men usually exercise in the management of their own affairs of a similar nature. But they are personally liable if they suffer the corporate funds or property to be wasted by gross negligence and inattention to the duties of their trust.[2]

That which directors, by proper diligence, ought to have known as to the general course of business in their bank, they may be presumed to have known, in any contest between the corporation and those who are justified by the circumstances in dealing with its officers upon the basis of that course of business.[3]

See CORPORATION; DIVIDEND, 3; MEETING; MINUTES, 2; TRUST, 1.

---

[1] Town of Danville v. Shelton, 76 Va. 311 (1882).

[2] List Publishing Co. v. Keller, 30 F. R. 772 (1887), Wallace, J.

[3] Wardell v. Union Pacific R. Co., 103 U. S. 658 (1880), cases.

[4] Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 589, 587 (1875).

[5] Spering's Appeal, 71 Pa. 20 (1872), cases, Sharswood, J.; United Society of Shakers v. Underwood, 9 Bush, 609 (1873), cases; First Nat. Bank of Ft. Scott v. Drake, 29 Kan. 326-27 (1883); Morse, Banks, 70.

[6] Coons v. Tome, 9 F. R. 532 (1881); s. c. 13 Rep. 136; Drury v. Cross, 7 Wall. 302 (1868); Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 id. 616 (1874); Richards v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 43 N. H. 263 (1861).

[1] Cass v. Manchester Iron, &c. Co., 9 F. R. 640 (1881); s. c. 13 Rep. 167.

[2] Ackerman v. Halsey, 37 N. J. E. 363 (1883), cases, Runyon, Ch. See also Williams v. Hilliland, 38 id. 374 (1884), cases; Chicago City R. Co. v. Allerton, 18 Wall 233 (1873); Bradley v. Farwell, 1 Holmes, 440 (1874), cases.

Directors as fiduciaries, Bent v. Priest, 86 Mo. 476 (1885), cases: 25 Am. Law Reg. 125-33 (1886), cases. Liability of, of national banks, and generally, Movius v. Lee, 30 F. R. 806-7 (1887), cases; Witters v. Sowles, 31 id. 1 (1887), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 172 (1886), cases Powers of, of banks, 22 Cent. Law J. 318 (1886), cases; of corporations generally, 19 id. 305-10, 327-30 (1884), cases; 6 South. Law Rev. 386-413 (1880), cases. Dealing with the corporation, 1 Col. Law T. 1: 3-95 (1888).

[3] Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 15 (1884), Harlan, J

DIS. A prefix or inseparable preposition, used in compounds. In the Latin, corresponds to asunder, apart, in two; and denotes separation, parting from, and hence has the force of a privative or negative.

In a few words, becomes di-; but di- may be a form of de, as in divest.

DISABILITY. Incapacity for action under the law; incapacity to do a legal act.[1]

A personal incapacity; and may relate to power to contract or to sue, and arise from want of sufficient understanding, as in cases of lunacy and infancy; or from want of freedom of will, as in cases of coverture and duress; or from the policy of the law, as in cases of alienage, outlawry, and the like.[2]

Any incapacity of acquiring or transmitting a right, or of resisting a wrong; and arises from the act of the party, of his ancestor, of the law, or of God.[3]

Civil disability. Disqualification created by the law. Physical disability. An infirmity inherent in the constitution of the body or mind.

In a statute providing what shall be done in the event of the death or disability of a public officer, "disability" will cover any cause which prevents the officer from acting, as, his resignation.[4]

Where there are two or more co-existing disabilities in the same person he is not obliged to act until the last disability is removed.[5] Thus, coverture enables a wife to postpone avoidance of a deed made in infancy to a reasonable time after the coverture is ended, without regard to the statute of limitations. One under a disability to make a contract cannot confirm or disaffirm a voidable contract.[6]

Compare CAPACITY; QUALIFY. See ABATE, 5; AFFIRM, 2; RATIFICATION.

Disabling. Disqualifying; incapacitating; restricting; restraining: as, a disabling statute, q. v.

DISAFFIRM. See AFFIRM, 2.

DISAGREE. See JURY; VERDICT.

DISALLOW. See ALLOW.

DISAPPROVE. See ESTOPPEL; PROTEST, 1.

DISBAR. See BAR, 1.

DISBURSEMENT.[7] Paying out money; also, the money itself.

By an administrator — money or currency paid in extinguishment of the liabilities of the decedent or of the expenses of administration.[8]

Also, an expenditure of money necessarily incurred in the regular course of proceedings in an action, and allowable as costs.[1] Compare REIMBURSE. See EARNINGS.

DISCHARGE. As a verb and noun, conveys the idea of relieving of a charge, burden, weight, or of a duty, service, or responsibility.

1, v. (1) To empty of cargo or freight: as, to discharge a vessel; also, to remove that with which a thing is laden: as, to discharge a cargo. See DISPATCH; PORT, Of discharge.

(2) To extinguish, satisfy: as, to discharge a demand, debt, legacy, lien, judgment, incumbrance, obligation, qq. v.

(3) To free from the payment of indebtedness already incurred: as, to discharge a bankrupt, an insolvent, qq. v.

(4) To absolve from contingent pecuniary liability: as, to discharge an indorser, a surety, a guarantor, qq. v.

(5) To relieve from the performance of the duties of a trust: as, to discharge an assignee, administrator, executor, guardian, receiver, qq. v.

(6) To relieve from further service in the consideration of a cause; to dismiss: as, to discharge a jury.

(7) To set at liberty; to free from imprisonment: as, to discharge a prisoner, a convict.

(8) To decline further to entertain a proceeding; to vacate: as, to discharge a rule.

2, n. (1) Relief from some burden or duty: extinguishment or satisfaction of an obligation; exoneration from responsibility, accountability, liability; exemption from service or action; liberation; annulment. See CHARGE, 2.

(2) Any such action in itself considered.

(3) The certificate or document in evidence thereof.

The discharge of a guardian is any mode by which the relation of guardianship is effectually determined and brought to a close: as, by his removal, resignation, or death, by the marriage of a female ward, by the arrival of a minor ward at the age of twenty-one, or otherwise.[2]

To be construed a discharge for money, a paper need not contain the word "discharge;" every receipt for money, which is not an accountable receipt, is a discharge for money.[3]

---

[1] [Wiesner v. Zaun, 39 Wis. 206 (1875): Burrill.

[2] Meeks v. Vassault, 3 Saw. 218 (1874), Sawyer, Cir. J.

[3] See 32 Barb. 480; 103 Ind. 195; 16 Alb. L. J. 292; 3 Bl. Com. 301; Coke, Inst. l. 5, p. 21; l. 8, p. 69.

[4] State v. City of Newark, 27 N. J. L. 197 (1858).

[5] Mercer's Lessee v. Selden, 1 How. 37 (1843).

[6] Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 310 (1880), cases; 77 Va. 73.

[7] F. desbourser, to take out of a purse.

[8] Wright v. Wilkerson, 41 Ala. 272 (1867).

[1] Case v. Price, 9 Abb. Pr. 114 (1859). And see Hanover v. Reynolds, 4 Dem. 385 (1886): N. Y. Code, § 3256.

[2] Loring v. Alline, 9 Cush. 70 (1851), Shaw, C. J.

[3] [Commonwealth v. Talbot, 2 Allen, 162 (1861), cases

DISCLAIMER. The act, declaration, or document by which a person denies, disavows, or renounces some interest or right which he formerly claimed, or which has been imputed or offered to him.[1]

1. In feudal law, when a tenant neglected to render services, and, upon an action brought to recover them, disclaimed to hold of the lord.

In a court of record, a forfeiture of the lands to the lord.[2]

When the tenant, upon a writ of assize of rent, or on a replevin, disavowed his tenure, whereby the lord lost the verdict, the lord could thereupon have a writ of right, sur disclaimer; and, upon proof of the tenure, recover the land as a punishment to the tenant for his false disclaimer.[3]

A disclaimer must be a renunciation by the party of his character of tenant, by setting up a title in another or by claiming title in himself.[4]

2. A formal mode of expressing a grantee's dissent to a conveyance before the title has become vested in him.[5]

Prevents the estate from passing from the grantor.[6]

It is essential that the estate disclaimed would vest but for the disclaimer, unless there be an express condition that the grantee shall elect.[6]

Filed in an action to try title to land, admits the plaintiff's title; and entitles the defendant to his costs, unless he was in possession when the suit was brought.[7]

3. Renunciation of what is or seems to be part of a patentee's claim for invention, and as to which he has no valid claim.

Wherever, through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without any willful default or intent to defraud or mislead the public, a patentee in his specification has claimed more than that of which he was the original and first inventor or discoverer, his patent is valid for all that part which is truly and justly his own, provided the same is a material and substantial part of the thing patented, and definitely distinguishable from the parts claimed without right; and the patentee, upon seasonably recording in the patent office a disclaimer in writing of the parts which he did not invent, or to which he has no valid claim, may maintain a suit upon that part which he is entitled to hold, although in a suit brought before the disclaimer he cannot recover costs. A reissued patent is within the letter and spirit of these provisions.[8]

Drawings cannot be used, even on an application for a reissue;[1] much less, on a disclaimer, to change the patent, and make it embrace a different invention from that described in the specification.[2] See ISSUE, 1.

4. When a defendant denies that he has or claims any right to the thing in demand by the plaintiff's bill, and disclaims, that is, renounces, all claim thereto.[3]

Where the defendant renounces all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff's bill.[4]

Distinct in substance from an answer, although sometimes confounded with it; and it can seldom be put in without an answer.[4]

DISCLOSE. 1. "Disclosing a defense upon the merits" means opening out and letting the judge see whether there really is a defense.[5]

2. An agent is said to "disclose his principal" when he makes known who his principal is; and principals are said to be "disclosed" or "undisclosed." See AGENT; AUCTIONEER.

DISCONTINUANCE. The cessation of an action or an estate.

1. (1) A chasm or gap left by neglecting to enter a continuance in an action.[6]

When a plaintiff fails to follow up his case and leaves a chasm in the proceedings by his laches.[7]

When the plaintiff leaves a chasm in the proceedings, as by not continuing the process regularly from time to time, the suit is discontinued, and the defendant need not attend.[8] See CONTINUANCE; DISMISS.

(2) At common law, the act of the plaintiff in demurring or replying to a plea which answered a part of his declaration.

By not taking judgment for the part unanswered, he was held not to have followed up his whole demand.[9]

2. When, at common law, a tenant in tail granted a larger estate than he could rightfully transfer.

Abolished in England in 1834; but prior thereto had already become obsolete.[10]

---

[1] [Abbott, Law Dict.]

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 275.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 233.

[4] Williams v. Cooper, 39 E. C. L. 334 (1840), Tindal, Chief Justice.

[5] [Watson v. Watson, 13 Conn. 85 (1839).

[6] Jackson v. Richards, 6 Cow. 620 (1827).

[7] Wootters v. Hall, 67 Tex. 513 (1887); Prescott v. Hutchinson, 13 Mass. *442 (1816).

[8] Gage v. Herring, 107 U. S. 646 (1882), cases, Gray, J.; United States Cartridge Co. v. Union Cartridge Co., 112 id. 642 (1884); R. S. §§ 4917, 4922; 17 Blatch. 67-69.

[1] Parker & Whipple Co. v. Yale Lock Co., 123 U. S. 87 (1887), cases.

[2] Hailes v. Albany Stove Co., 123 U. S. 582 (1887).

[3] 1 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 706.

[4] Story, Eq. Pl. § 383.

[5] Whiley v. Whiley, 93 E. C. L. *663 (1858).

[6] Taft v. Northern Transportation Co., 56 N. H. 416 (1876), Cushing, C. J.

[7] Roundtree v. Key, 71 Ala. 215 (1883), Jackson, C. J. Id. 307.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 296.

[9] See Steph. Plead. 241; Gould, Pl. 336.

[10] See 3 Bl. Com. 172; 1 Steph. Com. 510, n.

DISCOUNT. 1. A counting off; an allowance or deduction from a gross sum on any account.[1]

A right which a debtor has to an abatement of the demand against him in consequence of a partial failure of the consideration, or on account of some equity arising out of the transaction on which the demand is founded.[2]

2. The difference between what is paid for a claim evidenced by negotiable paper and the face amount thereof.

A bank of discount furnishes loans upon drafts, promissory notes, bonds, and other securities. . . "Discounting" and "buying" a note are not identical. The latter denotes the transaction "when the seller does not indorse the note and is not accountable for it." . . Power to carry on the business of banking, by discounting evidences of debt, is merely an authority to lend money thereon, with the right to deduct the legal rate of interest in advance.[3]

In Atlantic State Bank v. Savery, 82 N. Y. 291, 302 (1880), it was decided that the purchase of a promissory note for a less sum than its face is a discount thereof within the meaning of the provision of the Banking Act of that State (Laws of 1836, c. 260, § 18), which authorizes associations organized under it to discount bills and notes. And in support of that definition of the terms the court cites the authority of McLeod on Banking, p. 43, where the author says, "The difference between the price of the debt and the amount of the debt is called discount," and "to buy or purchase a debt is always in commerce termed to discount it." In Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 8 Wheat. 350 (1823), Mr. Justice Story said, "Nothing can be clearer than that, by the language of the commercial world and the settled practice of banks, a discount by a bank means a deduction or drawback made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt, payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank," and added that if the transaction could properly be called a sale "it is a purchase by way of discount." Discount, then, is the difference between the price and the amount of the debt, the evidence of which is transferred, and that difference represents interest charged, being at some rate, according to which the price paid, if invested until the maturity of the debt, will just produce its amount. And the advance, therefore, upon every note discounted, without reference to its character as business or accommodation paper, is properly denominated a "loan," for interest is predicable only of loans, being the price paid for the use of money. The specific power given to national banks (Rev. St. § 5136) is "to carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt." So that the discount of negotiable paper is the form according to which they are authorized to make their loans, and the terms loans and discounts are synonymous. It was so held in Talmage v. Pell, 3 Seld. 328, 339 (1852); and in Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 68, 87 (1864), the point decided was that "to discount paper, as understood in the business of banking, is only a mode of lending money with the right to take the interest allowed by law in advance." . . A national bank is restricted to taking no more than seven per centum for the discount of negotiable paper when the person discounting is an indorser thereon.[4] See USURY.

DISCOVERT. See COVERT.

DISCOVERY.[5] A bringing to light; making known for the first time; disclosure; also, that which is found out, revealed, disclosed.

1. Finding a previously unknown country or land. Spoken of as the "right of discovery" or of "original discovery."

The English possessions in America were not claimed by right of conquest, but by right of discovery. According to the principles of international law, as then understood, the Indian tribes were regarded as the temporary occupants of the soil, and the absolute rights of property and dominion were held to belong to the European nations by which any portion of the country was first discovered.[6]

The Europeans respected the right of the natives as occupants, but asserted the ultimate dominion to be in themselves; and exercised, as a consequence, a power to grant the soil while it was yet in the possession of the natives.[7] See OCCUPANCY.

2. In the law of patent rights, refers to something that had existed unknown, until brought to light and utilized.

The Congress shall have power to secure for limited times to inventors the exclusive right to their discoveries.[8]

This does not apply to the discovery of a fundamental truth or abstract principle, in which no one can have an exclusive right; nor to a power of nature, in which the invention is in the application to a useful object. The discovery must be reduced to practice,— be embodied in some practical method for rendering it useful.[9]

In its naked, ordinary sense, a discovery is not patentable. A discovery of a new principle, force, or

[1] [Dunkle v. Renick, 6 Ohio St. 535 (1856).

[2] Trabue v. Harris, 1 Metc. 599 (Ky., 1858), Simpson, Chief Justice.

[3] Farmers', &c. Bank v. Baldwin, 23 Minn. 205-6 (1876), cases.

[4] Nat. Bank of Gloversville v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 276-78 (1881), Matthews, J. See also 14 Ala. 667; 13 Conn. 259; 20 Kan. 450; 42 Md. 592; 48 Mo. 191; 7 N. Y. 343; 18 Barb. 462; 13 Bankr. Reg. 268.

[5] F. decouvrir, to uncover.

[6] Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 409 (1842), Taney, C. J.

[7] Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 572 (1823), Marshall, C. J.; Buttz v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 119 U. S. 67 (1886); 3 Kent, 379.

[8] [Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8.

[9] Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. 570 (1863); Le Roy v. Tatham, 14 How. 174 (1852).

law, operating, or which can be made to operate, on matter, will not entitle the discoverer to a patent. He controls his discovery through the means by which he has brought it into practical action, or their equivalent. It is then an "invention," although it embraces a discovery. Every invention may, in a certain sense, embrace more or less of discovery, for it must always include something that is new; but it by no means follows that every discovery is an invention.[1]

See further INVENTION; PATENT, 2; PRINCIPLE, 2; PROCESS, 3; SECURE, 1; TELEPHONE.

3. In the law regulating the granting of new trials and rehearings, refers to evidence brought to light or obtainable after trial or hearing, and which, could it have been presented upon that occasion, would likely have changed the result. Whence "after-discovered" and "newly-discovered" evidence.

The unconsidered evidence must be such as reasonable diligence, on the part of the party asking for the rehearing, could not have secured at the former trial; it must be material to its object, not merely cumulative, corroborative, or collateral; and be such as ought to produce important results on its merits.[2] See AUDITA QUERELA; REVIEW, 2, Bill of.

4. In the law of limitation of actions, refers to information had of the fact that a mistake was made or fraud perpetrated.

In cases of fraud and mistake a court of equity does not allow the statute of limitations to run until the discovery thereof. This rule has been incorporated into the statute law of many of the States.[3] See further FRAUD; LIMITATION, 3; MISTAKE; RESCISSION.

5. In the law of bankruptcy, refers to the disclosure made, or to be made, by the debtor of the nature, kind, amount, situs, etc., of his assets.[4] See BANKRUPTCY.

6. In equity practice, the disclosure by the defendant of matters important to enable the plaintiff to maintain his rights. Procured by a —

Bill of discovery. Every bill in equity may be deemed such, since it seeks a disclosure from the defendant, on oath, of the truth of the circumstances constituting the plaintiff's case as propounded in his bill. But that which is emphatically called a bill of discovery is a bill which asks no relief but simply the discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or the discovery of deeds, writings, or other things in his possession or power, in order to maintain a right or title of the party asking it in some suit or proceeding in another court.[1]

Not entertainable: where the subject is not cognizable in any court; where the court cannot, in this manner, aid the other court; where the plaintiff is under disability, or has no title to the character in which he sues; where the value in suit is trivial; where the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter or no title to the discovery required, or where an action will not lie; where some other person than the plaintiff has a right to call for the discovery; where the policy of the law exempts the defendant from discovery; where the defendant is not bound to discover his own title; where the discovery is not material to the suit; where the defendant is a mere witness; or where a discovery would criminate him.[2]

At common law, discovery could not be had before trial; hence the resort to chancery. At present it is had, in effect, by bills of particulars, by attachments in execution, by affidavits of defense, by inspection of books and documents, by examination of one's adversary before trial, and by other means specially provided by statute.

For want of the power of discovery at law, courts of equity acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with other courts in all matters of account.[3] See CREDITOR'S BILL; FISHING, 2.

DISCREDIT. See CREDIT.

DISCREPANCY. See AMBIGUITY; DESCRIPTION.

DISCRETION.[4] Discernment of what is right or proper; sound sense; deliberate judgment.

1. Capacity or understanding to discern what is right or lawful, so as to be answerable for one's actions.

Presumed to be enjoyed at fourteen — the "age of discretion;" but, really, the law has fixed no arbitrary period when the immunity of childhood ceases.[5] See AGE; CAPAX; NEGLIGENCE.

2. Foresight, wisdom, sagacity; judgment, action. Sometimes termed personal discretion: limited to a particular individual.

Where there is a trustee in existence, capable of acting in the exercise of a discretion vested in him by

[1] Morton v New York Eye Infirmary, 5 Blatch. 121 (1862), Shipman, J.

[2] Dower v. Church, 21 W. Va. 57 (1882); Codman v. Vermont, &c. R. Co., 17 Blatch. 3 (1879); Whalen v. Mayor of New York, 17 F. R. 72 (1882).

[3] West Portland Homestead Association v. Lownsdale, 17 F. R. 207, 205 (1883); Fritschler v. Koehler, 83 Ky. 82 (1885); Parker v. Kuhn, Neb., March, 1887, cases: 32 N. W. Rep. 74; 2 Story, Eq. § 1521 a.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 483.

[1] [2 Story, Eq. § 1486; 1 id. § 689; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 144, 191.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. § 1489; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 195-215. As against a corporation, see Post v. Toledo, &c. R. Co., 144 Mass. 347 (1887), cases; McComb v. Chicago, &c. R Co., 19 Blatch. 69 (1881); Colgate v. Compagnie Francaise, 23 F. R. 82 (1885), cases.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 437, 382. See 1 Bouv. 536.

[4] L. dis-cernere, to separate, distinguish, perceive

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 453; Nagle v. Allegheny R. Co., 88 Pa. 35 (1879).

the instrument under which he is appointed, equity will not interfere to control that discretion.[1]

A devisee charged with making such provision for designated beneficiaries "as in his judgment will be best," must exercise a proper and honest judgment in determining the nature and amount of the provision, having due regard to the amount of the estate, and the condition and circumstances of the beneficiaries.[2] See BENEVOLENT; EXECUTOR; POWER, 2; TRUST, 1.

3. Applied to public functionaries — a power or right, conferred upon them by law, of acting officially in certain circumstances, according to their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others.

This discretion, to some extent, is regulated by usage, or by fixed principles. Which means merely that the same court cannot, consistently with its dignity, and with its character and duty of administering impartial justice, decide in different ways two like cases. Whether cases are alike is, of necessity, a question for the judgment of some tribunal.[3]

An officer in whom public duties are confided by law is not subject to control by a court in the exercise of a discretion reposed in him as a part of his official functions.[4] See DEPARTMENT; GRANT, 3; SEWER.

4. In legislation, the deliberate, cautious judgment of the law-making body.

The courts will not presume a detrimental exercise of judgment in the legislature. Security against abusive exercise resides in the responsibility of the law-makers to the public.[5] See POLICY, 1; PUBLIC.

5. Equitable determination by a court as to what is just, in a given case.

Judicial discretion. A discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by the law; never, the arbitrary will of the judge.[6]

According to Coke, discernere per legem, quid sit justum: perceiving by or through (or according to) the law, what would be just.[1]

Arises only in the exercise of judicial authority, which presupposes the existence of some cause or controversy submitted for decision in the customary form of judicial proceedings.[2]

Judicial power, as contradistinguished from the power of the laws, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law and can will nothing. When they are said to exercise a "discretion," it is a mere legal discretion, a discretion in discerning the course prescribed by law; and when that is discerned it is the duty of the court to follow it. Judicial power is never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; always for giving effect to the will of the legislature, in other words to the will of the law.[3]

Were the judges to set the law to rights as often as it differs from their ideal of excellence, their corrections would not suit those who came after them, and we should have nothing but corrections; there would be no guide in the decision of causes but the discretion of fallible judges in the court of last resort and no rule by which the citizen might beforehand shape his actions. "The [private] discretion of a judge," said Lord Camden, "is the law of tyrants: it is always unknown; it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper and passion. In the best it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature can be liable."[4]

The determination or disposition of many matters is committed to the sound discretion of the court; as, amendments to pleadings, and petitions; continuances, the order of introducing evidence, the amount of cumulative testimony admissible, the examination of witnesses, the granting or refusing of new trials and of the extraordinary writs, sales and resales of property; custody of children; allowances for maintenance and remuneration.

The universal rule of practice is that orders or decrees involving an exercise of judicial discretion purely are not re-examinable in a court of errors; only a plain abuse of discretion in such cases will be interfered with.[5]

Abuse of discretion, especially a "gross" and "palpable" abuse (the terms ordinarily employed), to justify an interference with the exercise of discretionary

[1] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 794 (1875), cases; Cooper v. Cooper, 77 Va. 208 (1883); Lovett v. Thomas, 81 id. 255 (1885); 78 id. 114; 79 id. 640.

[2] Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300 (1888). As to cases in which personal discretion was conferred upon executors and held not transmissible to the administrator de bonis non by such expressions in wills as think, see, or deem "advisable," "best," "fit," "prudent," "judicious," "wise," see Giberson v. Giberson, 43 N. J. E. 116-21 (1887), note, cases: 37 Alb. Law J. 7-8 (1888), cases.

[3] Judges of Oneida Common Pleas v. People, 18 Wend. 99 (1837).

[4] Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 348 (1868); County of San Mateo v. Maloney, 71 Cal. 208 (1886); 45 id. 639; 52 id. 179.

[5] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 471 (1874).

[6] Tripp v. Cook, 26 Wend. 152 (1841); Platt v. Munroe, 34 Barb. 298 (1861).

[1] See Faber v. Bruner, 18 Mo. 543 (1850).

[2] States v. Judges, 34 La. An. 1116 (1882).

[3] Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 866 (1824), Marshall, C. J.

[4] Commonwealth v. Lesher, 17 S. & R. *164 (1827), Gibson, C. J. See also State v. Cummings, 36 Mo. 278 (1865); Rooke's Case, 3 Coke, 100 (1598); Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2539 (1770); 1 id. 560, 571; 34 Ala. 235; 46 id. 310; 4 Iowa, 283; 25 Miss. 226; 1 Heisk. 774.

[5] Pomeroy's Lessee v. Bank of Indiana, 1 Wall. 598 (1863), cases; Exp. Reed, 100 U. S. 23 (1879); Wills v. Russell, ib. 626 (1879); United States v. Atherton, 102 id. 375 (1880); Tilton v. Cofield, 93 id. 166 (1876).

power, implies not merely error of judgment, but perversity of will, passion, prejudice, partiality, or moral delinquency.[1]

DISCRIMINATION. See CITIZEN; COMMERCE.

DISCUSSION. 1. By the Roman law, a surety was liable for the debt only after the creditor had unsuccessfully sought payment from the principal debtor. This was called the "benefit" or "right of discussion." A like rule obtains in Louisiana.[2]

2. In the sense of debate, see LIBERTY, Of press, Of speech; PRIVILEGE, 4.

DISEASE. Within the meaning of a warranty in a policy of life insurance, not a temporary ailment, unless it be such as indicates a vice in the constitution, or so serious as to have a bearing upon the general health and the continuance of life, or such as in common understanding would be called a disease.[3]

See ACCIDENT, Insurance; DISORDER, 1; EPIDEMIC; HEALTH; INSANITY; INSPECTION, 1; NUISANCE; POLICE, 2; QUARANTINE, 2; SOUND, 2 (2); SUICIDE.

DISENFRANCHISE; DISFRANCHISE. See FRANCHISE, 2.

DISENTAIL. See TAIL.

DISFIGURE. See MAIM, 2.

DISGRACE. See CRIMINATE.

DISGUISE. A man hiding behind bushes is not "in disguise," within the meaning of a statute which makes the county liable in damages to the next of kin of one murdered by persons in disguise.[4] See AMBUSH.

DISHERISON. See INHERIT.

DISHONOR. To refuse or neglect to accept or to pay negotiable paper at its maturity; also, the failure itself in this respect. Opposed, honor, q. v.

The law presumes that if the drawer of a bill of exchange has not had due notice of dishonor he is injured, because otherwise he might have immediately withdrawn effects from the hands of the drawee; and that if the indorser has not had timely notice the remedy against the parties liable to him is rendered more precarious. The consequence, therefore, of neglect of notice is that the party to whom it should have been given is discharged from liability.[1] See PROTEST, 2.

DISINHERIT. See INHERIT.

DISINTEREST. See INTEREST, 2 (1).

DISJOINDER. See JOINDER.

DISJUNCTIVE. Describes a term or an allegation which expresses or charges a thing in the alternative. Opposed, conjunctive. See OR, 2.

DISMISS. To send away; to refuse to entertain further; to send out of court: as, to dismiss a bill in equity for defects in its structure or for insufficiency in law —

Borrowed from proceedings in a court of chancery, where the term is applied to the removal of a cause out of court without further hearing.[2]

"Dismissed" refers to the final hearing of a suit — the end of the proceeding.[3]

A bill in equity will be dismissed where (1) there is a want of certainty in the allegations to show that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded; (2) where the right to relief has been barred by the statute of limitations; (3) where there has been negligence in seeking relief, unexplained by sufficient equitable reasons and circumstances.[4]

After a decree, whether final or interlocutory, has been made, by which the rights of a defendant have been adjudicated, or such proceedings have been taken as entitle him to a decree, the complainant cannot dismiss his bill without the consent of the defendant.[5]

Whenever it becomes apparent to the court that it has no authority to adjudicate the issue presented, its duty is to dismiss the cause.[6]

A dismissal for want of jurisdiction does not conclude the plaintiff's right of action.[7] See DISCONTINUANCE, 1; PREJUDICE, 2.

DISORDER. 1. Disease; physical malady.

A person suffering from a "contagious disorder" may be indicted for exposing himself in a place endangering the public health.[8] See DISEASE; HEALTH; SLANDER, 1.

2. Conduct which disturbs the community. See PEACE, 1.

Disorderly conduct. Any conduct which is contrary to law.[9]

---

[1] People v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 29 N. Y. 431 (1864); White v. Leeds, 51 Pa. 189 (1865); 21 id. 466; 53 id. 158; 67 id. 31; 14 Hun, 3; 78 N. Y. 56; 15 Fla. 317; 52 Ala. 87.

[2] La. Civ. Code, arts. 3014-20.

[3] Cushman v. United States Life Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 77 (1877), cases.

[4] Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 142 (1871).

[1] Byles, Bills, 297; Riggs v. Hatch, 16 F. R. 838, 849-50 (1883), cases.

[2] Boscley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 462 (1852); 3 Bl. Com. 451.

[3] Taft v. North. Transportation Co., 56 N. H. 417 (1876).

[4] Taylor v. Holmes, 14 F. R. 499 (1882).

[5] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Union Rolling Mill Co., 109 U. S. 713 (1883); 69 Ga. 100.

[6] Watson v. Baker, 67 Tex. 50 (1886), cases.

[7] Smith v. McNeal, 109 U. S. 429 (1883), cases.

[8] King v. Vantandillo, 4 Maule & S. 73 (1815); King v. Burnett, ib. 272 (1815); Boom v. City of Utica, 2 Barb. 104 (1848).

[9] State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 541 (1856).

Disorderly house. A house the inmates of which behave so badly as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood.[1]

Includes any gambling house, dance house, bawdy house, prohibited liquor saloon, or other habitation made obnoxious by the habitual recurrence of fighting, noise, or violence.[2]

The keeping may consist in allowing such disorder as disturbs the neighborhood, or in drawing together idle, vicious, dissolute or disorderly persons engaged in unlawful or immoral practices, thereby endangering the public peace and promoting immorality.[3]

A complaint will be supported by proof that one person was disturbed, if the acts are such as tend to annoy all good citizens.[4]

Disorderly person. A person amenable to police regulation, for misconduct affecting the public.[5] See BEHAVIOR.

DISPARAGEMENT. 1. Inequality in rank.

In old law, while a female infant was in ward, the guardian could tender a match "without disparagement" or inequality: lest she might marry the lord's enemy. The Great Charter provided that the next of kin should be notified of the proposed contract.[6]

2. Derogation, belittlement; impeachment.

A tenant may not disparage the title in his landlord; nor may the former owner of property disparage the title he has conveyed.

Declarations by the vendor of realty in disparagement of the grant are never admissible, nor, generally, are the assertions of the seller of a chattel.[7]

See ASSIGNMENT, 2; DECLARATION, 1; ESTOPPEL; LANDLORD.

DISPATCH. As used in charter-parties, relative to the discharge of vessels, has frequently been the subject of definition.

Customary or usual dispatch. In accordance or consistently with all well-established usages of the port of discharge.[8]

The usual dispatch of persons who are ready to receive a cargo.[9]

Excludes a custom by which a charterer may decline to receive a cargo, because it is advantageous to postpone.[9]

"Customary dispatch in discharging "means discharging with speed, haste, expedition, due diligence, according to the lawful, reasonable, well known customs of the port of discharge; the same as "usual dispatch," but not the same as "quick dispatch," which excludes certain usages and customs.[1]

When there is no undertaking to unload the vessel within a specified time, but she is to be discharged "with all possible dispatch," or "with usual dispatch," or "with the customary dispatch of the port," or "within reasonable time," the freighter must use reasonable diligence to do his part toward unloading according to the terms and meaning of the charter party.[2]

DISPAUPER. See PAUPER, 2.

DISPLACE. In shipping articles, to disrate; not, to discharge.[3]

DISPOSE. 1. To alienate, direct the ownership of: as, to dispose of property.

Includes to barter, exchange, or partition; is broader than sell.[4]

Under the power "to dispose of the property of the United States," Congress may lease the public lands. The nature of the disposal is discretionary.[5]

"Dispose," said of an insolvent, in an attachment law, includes any intentional putting of property beyond reach of creditors.[6]

To convey by advancement is to dispose;[7] but to mortgage may not be, within the meaning of a statute.[8]

Disposing mind. Testamentary capacity, q. v. Compare JUS, Disponendi.

2. To place a dead infant upon a wall in a field is to "secretly dispose" of it.[9] See ABANDON, 2 (2).

3. To decide, determine: as, to dispose of a controversy.[10]

DISPOSSESS. See POSSESSION, Dispossession.

DISPROVE. See PROOF; REBUT.

DISPUTE. A fact alleged by one party and denied by the other, with some show of reason; not, a naked allegation without or against evidence.[11] Whence disputable,—see PRESUMPTION.

Matter in dispute. In a statute predicating appellate jurisdiction on the value of [1] State v. Maxwell, 33 Conn. 259 (1866), Hinman, C. J.

[2] See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 1106; 4 Bl. Com. 167.

[3] Thatcher v. State, 48 Ark. 63-64 (1886); 120 Mass. 356; 30 N. J. L. 104.

[4] Commonwealth v. Hopkins, 133 Mass. 381 (1882), cases.

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 169.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 70.

[7] See Roberts v. Medbery, 132 Mass. 101 (1882), cases; Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 616 (1883).

[8] [Smith v. Yellow Pine Lumber, 2 F. R. 399 (1880).

[9] Lindsay v. Cusimano, 10 F. R. 308 (1882).

[1] Lindsay v. Cusimano, 12 F. R. 507 (1882).

[2] Nelson v. Dahl, 12 L. R., Ch. D. 568, 582-84 (1879); Williams v. Theobald, 15 F. R. 468, 473 (1883); Sleeper v. Puig, 17 Blatch. 38-39 (1879), cases; 22 F. R. 790.

[3] Potter v. Smith, 103 Mass. 69 (1869).

[4] Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380 (1879).

[5] United States v. Gratiot, 14 Pet. 538 (1840).

[6] Auerbach v. Hitchcock, 28 Minn. 74 (1881); 62 Tex. 436-37.

[7] Elston v. Schilling, 42 N. Y. 79 (1870).

[8] Bullene v. Smith, 73 Mo. 16 (1880).

[9] Queen v. Brown, 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 246 (1870).

[10] See Exp. Russell, 13 Wall. 669 (1871); 14 Blatch. 13

[11] [Knight's Appeal, 19 Pa. 494 (1852), Black, C. J.

the "matter in dispute" — the subject of litigation, the matter for which suit is brought, on which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined.[1]

Until shown by the record that the sum demanded is not the matter in dispute, that sum will govern in all questions of jurisdiction. . . The amount stated in the body of the declaration is considered — the actual matter in dispute as shown by the record, and not the ad damnum alone.[2]

For the purpose of review the amount is fixed by the amount of the judgment below, not by the amount of the verdict.[3]

The act of March 3, 1887, excludes from the computation interest accrued up to the date of the suit.[4]

When the record is silent as to the value, it is good practice for the court below to allow affidavits and counter-affidavits of value to be filed under direction from the court.[5]

Where the value of land in controversy was necessarily involved in the determination of a case, and found by the court to be $5,000, to effect an appeal the defendant was not allowed to present affidavits showing the value to be $7,000.[6] See CONTROVERSY; REMAND, 2.

DISQUALIFY. See QUALIFY.

DISRATE. See DISPLACE.

DISSEISIN. See SEISIN.

DISSENT. See ASSENT; CONSENT; OPINION, 3.

DISSIMILAR. See SIMILAR.

DISSOLVE. 1. To put an end to, terminate: as, to dissolve a relation; e. g., the marriage relation, — see DIVORCE.

The dissolution of a partnership (q. v.) does not affect contracts made between the partners and others.[7]

"Dissolving a corporation" is sometimes synonymous with annulling its charter or terminating its existence, and sometimes refers merely to the judicial act which alienates the property and suspends the business of the corporation, without terminating its existence.[8] See STOCK, 3 (2).

2. To discharge or relieve from a proceeding which involves a lien or seizure; to open, annul: as, to dissolve an attachment, an injunction, qq. v.

3. As to dissolving parliament, see PROROGUE.

DISSUADE. See JUSTICE, Offenses against.

DISTANCE. Is measured in a straight line, "as the crow flies," or on the horizontal plane.[1]

May refer to the usually traveled road.[2] See ALONG; COURSE, 1; DIRECT, 1; NEAR.

DISTILLER. Any person, firm, or corporation who distills or manufactures spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash for distillation, or the production of spirits.[3]

One who produces alcoholic spirits by distillation.[4] Compare RECTIFIER.

Distilled spirits. The products of distillation, whether rectified or not.[5]

Unlawful distilling of spirits is sometimes termed "illicit."

The business of distilling having been made a quasi public employment, a distiller's books are quasi records.[6] See CRIMINATE.

Distillery. A place where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured; not, then, every structure where the process of distillation, as of paraffine, is used.[7] See CONDITION, Repugnant.

DISTRACTED. In Illinois and New Hampshire, expresses a degree of insanity.

DISTRAIN. See DISTRESS.

DISTRESS.[8] Taking a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure satisfaction for a wrong committed.[9]

A taking of beasts or other personal prop-

---

[1] Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. 339 (1863), Field, J. See 10 La. An. 170; 12 id. 87; 3 Cranch, 159; 3 Dall. 405; 13 Cal. 30; 25 Gratt. 177.

[2] Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 174-76 (1883), cases; The Jesse Williamson, ib. 309-10 (1883); Bruce v. Manchester, &c. R. Co., 117 id. 515 (1886); Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 id. 28-40 (1887); 106 id. 578-80; 110 id. 223; 112 id. 227.

[3] N. Y. Elevated R. Co. v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 118 U. S. 606 (1886).

[4] Moore v. Town of Edgefield, 32 F. R. 498 (1887).

[5] Wilson v. Blair, 119 U. S. 387 (1886).

[6] Talkington v. Dumbleton, 123 U. S. 745 (1887), Waite, Chief Justice.

[7] See 3 Kent. 27.

[8] Re Independent Ins. Co., 1 Holmes, 109 (1872); 2 Harr., Del., 12-16; 2 Kent, 307. As to notice, see 24 Cent. Law J. 588 (1887), cases.

[1] Leigh v. Hind, 17 E. C. L. 774 (1829); 78 id. *688; 85 id. *92; 88 id. *350.

[2] Smith v. Ingraham, 7 Cow. 419 (1827).

[3] Revenue Act 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 117.

[4] R. S. § 3247; United States v. House No. 3, 6 Rep. 391 (1879).

[5] R. S. §§ 3248, 3289, 3299; United States v. Anthony, 14 Blatch. 92 (1877); Boyd v. United States, ib. 317 (1877).

[6] United States v. Myers, 1 Hughes, 534 (1876); R. S. § 3308.

[7] Atlantic Dock Co. v. Libby, 45 N. Y. 502 (1871).

[8] F. destraindre, to strain, press, vex extremely: L. distringere, to pull asunder.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 6; 44 Barb. 488.

erty by way of pledge to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon.[1]

Distrain. To take by distress.

Distrainor; distrainer. He who levies a distress.

Distraint. The act or proceeding by which a distress is made.

The more usual injury for which a distress may be taken is non-payment of rent; but it is also a remedy where another's animals are found damage-feasant (q. v.), and for the enforcement of some duties imposed by statute.[2]

At common law all personal chattels are distrainable, unless expressly exempted. Not distrainable are: (1) Things in which no one can have an absolute property; as, a wild animal. (2) Whatever is in personal use; as, a horse while a man is riding him. (3) Valuable things in the way of trade; as, a horse standing in a shop to be shod, or at an inn, cloth left with a tailor, grain sent to a mill or a market. These are privileged for the benefit of trade. But all chattels found upon the premises are distrainable for rent: if not, fraud could be readily practiced. A stranger to the lease may recover from the tenant. (4) The tools and utensils of one's trade or profession: taking these would prevent the owner from serving society. Beasts of the plow and sheep are privileged, dead goods and other beasts not. To deprive the debtor of the means of earning money would defeat the end for which distress is intended. (5) A thing which cannot be returned in its former good plight: a distress being only a pledge, to be restored after the debt is paid. By 2 William and Mary (1691), c. 5, grain and hay may be taken. (6) A thing fixed to the freehold. By 11 Geo. II (1739), c. 19, the landlord may distrain natural products, and harvest them when matured.[3] See CROP.

All distresses must be by day, except of animals doing damage. The distrainor must enter upon the premises; within six months after the lease ends, where the tenant continues in possession. By 8 Anne (1710), c. 14, and 11 Geo. II (1729), c. 19, the landlord may distrain goods carried off the premises clandestinely, wherever found within thirty days, unless sold to an innocent purchaser. Once inside the house, the distrainor may break open an inner door; by 11 Geo. II, he may, in the day-time, break open any place to which goods have been fraudulently removed, oath being first made, in the case of a dwelling-house, of a reasonable ground to suspect that such goods are concealed therein.[4]

A distress should be for the whole duty at once; but if mistake is made in the value of the articles, or if there is not sufficient upon the premises, a second distress may be taken.[5]

By 52 Hen. III (1270), c. 4, taking an unreasonable distress for rent is amercible. The remedy for an excessive distress is by a special action under that statute — there being, at common law, no trespass.[1]

The things distrained should be impounded. On the way they may be rescued, if the taking was unlawful. Once in the pound, they are in the custody of the law, and may be replevined.[2]

In Pennsylvania, prior to the act of March 21, 1772, a distress could be held only for enforcing payment of rent. That act provides for a sale of the goods, which makes the distress like an execution. The act is similar to that of William and Mary, ante — under which it was decided that a tender after an impounding availed nothing; but the later decisions are that a sale, after tender of rent and costs within five days, is illegal.[3]

In some States a lessor has no power of distress, but, instead, attachment on mesne process, an action of covenant or debt, or assumpsit for use and occupation. In other States the common-law right, greatly modified, is preserved.

What the power of distress was in feudal times may be inferred from the fact that the word came to signify extreme "suffering."[4] See DISTRICT, 1.

Distress infinite. A distress unlimited as to quantity, and repeatable till the delinquent does his duty.

In cases of distress for fealty or suit of court no distress could be considered unreasonable. This sort of distress was used in summoning jurors. The property was to be restored after the duty was performed.[5]

Now resorted to to compel the doing of a thing required by a court, as, to appear, when process cannot be personally served. See ATTACHMENT, Of person; DISTRINGAS; SEQUESTRATION.

See also ELOIGN; LANDLORD; POUND, 2; REPLEVIN; RESCUE, 1.

DISTRIBUTION. 1. Allotment; apportionment; division.

Specifically, division of an intestate's estate according to law.[6]

A decree distributing a fund in court will not preclude an omitted claimant from asserting, by bill or petition, his right to share in the fund.[7]

Distributee. One who receives a share or portion of the assets of an intestate's estate.[8]

Distributive. Due or received upon a legal division: as, a distributive share.

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 231.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 6–7.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 7–10. Articles exempt, 26 Am. Law Reg. 153–58 (1887), cases.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 11.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 11–12.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 12. See 100 Pa. 397, 401, infra; 39 How. Pr. 167; 8 Kern. 299.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 12–15.

[3] Richards v. McGrath, 100 Pa. 400 (1882); 105 E. C. L. 262; 3 Bl. Com. 14. See also Patty v. Bogle, 59 Miss. 493–94 (1882).

[4] 1 Pars. Contr. 517; Taylor, Landl. & T. §§ 556-59.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 231.

[6] Rogers v. Gillett, 56 Iowa, 268 (1881); 102 Ind. 412.

[7] Re Howard, 9 Wall. 184 (1869), cases.

[8] See Henry v. Henry, 9 Ired. L. 279 (1848).

Statutes of distribution. Statutes which regulate the division of an intestate's estate among his widow and heirs or next of kin, after the debts of the estate are paid.

Title to realty vests in the heirs by the death of the ancestor; the legal title to personalty is vested in the executor or administrator, and is transferred to the distributees upon confirmation of the proceedings in distribution.[1]

In thirty or more of the States and Territories the rules for the distribution of personalty are essentially the same as the rules for the descent of realty, where no distinction is made between realty ancestral and non-ancestral, and, where such distinction is made, for the descent of realty non-ancestral.[2]

See AUDIT; DESCENT, Canons of; EQUAL, Equally; PROPERTY.

2. As applied to a publication like a newspaper or a periodical, imports a delivery to persons who have bought or otherwise become entitled to the same.[3]

DISTRICT. A division of territory.

1. Originally, the space within which a lord could coerce and punish — distrain.[4]

The circuit within which a man might be compelled to appear, or the place in which one hath the power of distraining.[5]

2. A division of a State or Territory for any purpose whatever: as, collection district, for the collection of revenue duties; Congressional district, for the election of representatives in Congress; election district, for purposes of elections, municipal, State, or United States; judicial district, for judicial purposes — with its district court, district judge, district attorney, and district clerk; land district, for regulating sales of public lands; school district, for purposes connected with the public schools; tax district, for the levying and collection of taxes.

May designate an area larger or smaller than a county; as, the district from which the jury in a criminal case may be drawn.[6]

A "taxing" district is not necessarily a large division of a State's territory, like a county or parish, as, in the act of Congress of June 7, 1862, § 6; it may be any portion of territory solely for the assessment of taxes.[7] See D, 3; PRECINCT.

District attorney. See ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

District clerk, court, judge. See COURTS, United States.

District of Columbia. Is neither a State nor a Territory. Congress is authorized "to exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States."[1]

Maryland and Virginia ceded territory on the Potomac, which Congress, by act of July 16, 1790, accepted. In December, 1800, the seat of government was removed from Philadelphia. By the act of July 11, 1846, Congress retroceded the county of Alexandria to Virginia. The District constitutes the county of Washington.

A citizen of the District of Columbia is not a citizen of a State.[2]

The laws in force December 1, 1873, were revised and republished, by direction of Congress, in a separate volume known as the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia.[3] See COURTS, page 284; LEVY, 3.

DISTRINGAS. L. That you distrain.

The emphatic word in the writ of "distress infinite" (q. v.), when expressed in Latin. The writ enforced compliance with something required of the person (natural or artificial) named in the writ.

Referring to a defendant who neglected to appear, a process issued from the court of common pleas commanding the sheriff to distrain the defendant from time to time, by taking his goods and the profits of his lands.[4]

The process against a body corporate, which, having been served with a subpœna issued out of chancery, fails to appear in court, is by distringas, to distrain them by their goods and chattels, rents and profits, till they obey the summons.[5]

In detinue, after judgment, the plaintiff had a distringas, to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels.[6]

Distringas juratores. That you distrain the jurors. A writ commanding the sheriff to distrain jurors by their lands and goods, so that they be constrained to appear in court.[7]

Distringas nuper vice comitem. That you distrain the late sheriff. A writ to compel a sheriff who had gone out of office to bring in a defendant, or to sell goods under a fieri facias which he failed to do while in office.[8]

---

[1] Roorbach v. Lord, 4 Conn. 349 (1822).

[2] See 1 Bouvier's Law Dict. 544; 2 Kent, 420, 426.

[3] Dawley v. Alsdorf, 25 Hun, 227 (1881).

[4] [Webster's Dict.

[5] [Jacob's Law Dict.

[6] State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 62 (1885).

[7] Keely v. Sanders, 99 U. S. 448-49 (1878); De Treville v. Smalls, 98 id. 517 (1878).

[1] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, par. 17.

[2] Cissel v. McDonald, 16 Blatch. 152-54 (1879), cases.

[3] See generally Fort Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 528-29 (1885).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 280.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 445. See 37 Hun, 546; 89 N. C. 585.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 413.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 354; 1 Arch. Pract. 365.

[8] See 1 Tidd, Pract. 313.

DISTURBANCE. 1. Interruption of a state of peace; disquiet; disorder: as, the disturbance of a lawful public meeting.[1] See ASSEMBLY; PEACE, 1.

2. A wrong to an incorporeal hereditament, by hindering or disquieting the owner in his lawful enjoyment of it.[2] See ENJOYMENT, Quiet.

It may be of a franchise, a common, a way, or a tenure.[3]

DITCH. See DRAIN.

DISUSE. See USE, 2.

DIVERS.[3] Several; sundry; more than one, yet not many.

In an indictment for the larceny of a number of articles all of one kind, the allegation may be "divers," "divers and sundry," or "a quantity," without stating a specific number, along with an averment of the aggregate value of the whole number.[4]

DIVERSION. Turning a stream, or a part of it, from its accustomed direction or natural course.[5]

DIVEST. See VEST.

DIVIDE. See DIVISION; PARTITION.

DIVIDEND. A portion of the principal or the profits of a thing divided among its several owners.[6]

1. In bankruptcy and insolvency law, assets apportioned among creditors.

2. In the administration of the estates of decedents, a distributive share.[7] See EQUAL.

3. A distribution of the funds of a corporation among its members, pursuant to a vote of the directors or managers.[8]

