Corporate funds derived from the business and earnings of a corporation, appropriated by a corporate act to the use of, and to be divided among, the stockholders.[9]

Referring to a corporation engaged in business, and not being closed up and dissolved,—a fund which the corporation sets apart from its profits to be divided among its members.[1]

The dividends declared by a corporation in business are, and, except under special circumstances, always should be, from profits. Hence, the word frequently carries with it the idea of a division of profits; but that is not necessarily its only meaning. Its special signification, in a particular case, is dependent upon the character of the thing divided.[2]

Does not necessarily imply a pro rata distribution.[3]

Preferred dividend. A dividend paid to one class of shareholders in priority to that to be paid to another class.[4]

Preferential dividend. A preference to a limited extent in the division of the sum to be divided.[5]

Dividends on preferred stock are payable only out of net earnings applicable thereto; they are not payable absolutely and unconditionally, as is interest. Until declared, the right to a dividend is not a debt; and the obligation to declare it does not arise until there is a fund from which it can properly be made. When to declare a dividend, and the amount thereof, is, ordinarily, a matter of internal management. Unless it appears that somebody in particular will be injured, a court of equity will not interfere.[6]

A dividend declared out of earnings is not an asset of the company, but belongs to the shareholder. The corporation holds it as his trustee. Before the dividend is declared, each share of stock represents the owner's whole interest; when he transfers the share, he transfers his entire right; hence, a dividend subsequently declared belongs to the new holder.[7]

A stock dividend does not diminish or interfere with the property of a corporation. It simply dilutes the shares as they existed before. The corporation is just as capable of meeting demands upon it; the aggregate of the stockholders own the same interest they had previously. When stock has been lawfully created, a dividend may be made, provided the stock represents property. There is no statute in New York which requires dividends to be made in cash; and there is no rule or policy of law which condemns a property dividend. The stockholders can take the property divided to them and sell it for cash. But a dividend payable in cash, or payable generally, makes the corporation a debtor.[8]

See EX, 3; STOCK, 3 (2), Preferred.

[1] See 4 Bl. Com. 54; State v. Oskins, 28 Ind. 364 (1867), cases; Wall v. Lee, 34 N. Y. 141 (1865), cases.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 236.

[3] L. diversus, different.

[4] Commonwealth v. Butts, 124 Mass. 452 (1878), cases.

[5] [Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. *299 (1845).

[6] [Commonwealth v. Erie, &c. R. Co., 10 Phila. 466 (1873).

[7] University v. North Carolina R. Co., 76 N. C. 105 (1877).

[8] Williston v. Michigan, &c. R. Co., 13 Allen, 404 (1866).

[9] [Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 556 (1874), Andrews, J.; Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co., 55 Vt. 129 (1882); Pierce, Railr. 120.

[1] Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 79 (1875), Cooley, J.; 108 U. S. 399.

[2] Eyster v. Centennial Board, 94 U. S. 504 (1876), Waite, C. J. See Cary v. Savings Union, 22 Wall. 41 (1874); 18 Barb. 657; 8 R. I. 333; 1 De G. & J. *636-37.

[3] Hall v. Kellogg, 12 N. Y. 335 (1855).

[4] Taft v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 8 R. I. 333 (1866), Bradley, C. J. See 55 Vt. 129, infra.

[5] See Henry v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 1 De Gex & J. *636 (1857).

[6] Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co., 55 Vt. 126, 127, 133 (1882), cases.

[7] Jermain v. Lake Shore, &c. R. Co., 91 N. Y. 492 (1883).

[8] Williams v. Western Union Tel. Co., 93 N. Y. 189

DIVINE. See GOD; LAW; OATH; RELIGION; SUNDAY; WORSHIP.

DIVISION. 1. A setting apart: separation, apportionment, partition, sharing out; also, a separate part or portion, a share, an allotment. See EQUAL; FENCE; WALL.

Divisible. Admitting of separation into distinct parts; separable. Indivisible. Entire; inseparable.

Agreements, covenants, and considerations may or may not be divisible into parts performed or capable of being performed or enforced, or into parts which are lawful and parts which are unlawful.[1] See CONTRACT, Divisible; UTERE, Utile, etc.

Undivided. That a tract of land, held in common, shall remain undivided, implies that the land is not subject to partition, is not to be divided, set off, allotted to individuals in severalty.[2]

2. Difference of opinion; non-concurrence in a decision. See OPINION, 3.

3. Separation of the members of a legislative body, to ascertain the vote cast.

DIVISUM. See IMPERIUM.

DIVORCE.[3] The dissolution or partial suspension, by law, of the marital relation. A dissolution is termed a divorce from the bond of matrimony — a vinculo matrimonii; a suspension, divorce from bed and board — a mensa et thoro.[4]

"Divorced" imports a dissolution, in the largest sense, of the marriage relation.[5]

In England, prior to 1857, the subject of divorce belonged to the ecclesiastical courts and to parliament. Statutes of 20 and 21 Vict. (1857) c. 85, created the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, with exclusive jurisdiction in all matrimonial matters. Divorce causes are now heard in the Probate and Divorce Division of the High Court of Justice, appeal lying to the Court of Appeal.

In this country, formerly, it was common for the legislatures to grant divorces by special acts, but the practice fell into disuse, and is now forbidden in some States, by the constitution. The necessary jurisdiction is generally conferred upon courts possessing equity powers.[6]

The inhibition upon the legislative department against exercising judicial functions, implied from the division of government into three departments, has never been understood to exclude control by the legislature of a State over the marriage relation, notwithstanding that the exercise of such power may involve investigation of a judicial nature. Hence, unless forbidden by the constitution, a legislature may grant a divorce.[1]

Congress is not empowered to legislate upon the subject; and the legislation of the States and Territories is far from uniform. In South Carolina divorce is not allowed for any cause; in New York for adultery only. Elsewhere it is allowed for adultery, cruelty, indignity, willful desertion, or sentence to a State's prison for two years or longer period, habitual drunkenness, pre-contract, fraud (incontinency, or pregnancy), coercion, imbecility or impotency unknown to the other party, consanguinity, and affinity, qq. v.

Common defenses are: connivance, collusion, condonation, recrimination, denial of allegation of desertion or infidelity.

Some of the consequences of a divorce follow directly from the law, others may depend upon the special order of court: the law ends all rights, based upon the marriage, not actually vested; as, dower and curtesy,[2] and the husband's power over the wife's choses in action. The court may allow alimony, and direct the custody of children.

A decree made in one State, being a judgment of record, will be given its original force in every other State. For this purpose, courts of equity, Federal, and State, have jurisdiction.[3] But, otherwise, if the record shows on its face that a party was a non-resident.[4]

A marriage forbidden by a decree of divorce in one State may be contracted in another State not also prohibiting it.[5]

The decree in nature is in rem. It determines the question of the marriage relation, or of the personal status, as against the world, and is therefore conclusive upon parties and strangers.[6]

See, further, the related topics mentioned.

DO; DONE. See ACT, 1; MAKE; FACERE.

190, 192 (1883). See also Bailey v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 22 Wall. 605, 633 (1874); generally, 19 Am. Law Rev. 871–92, 737–62 (1885), cases.

[1] See Oregon Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 70 (1873), cases.

[2] Wellington v. Petitioners, 16 Pick. 98 (1834).

[3] F.: L. divortium, separation,—4 Mo. 142. Divorcement is obsolete.

[4] 2 Bishop, Mar. & D. § 225; 1 Bl. Com. 440.

[5] Miller v. Miller, 33 Cal. 355 (1867).

[6] See Bishop, Mar. & D. §§ 664, 78, 85; 17 Nev. 221. In Delaware, during the session of the legislature for 1886–87, forty-four special acts were passed.

[1] Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 203–9 (1888), cases, Field, J., deciding that the act of Dec. 22, 1852, of the Territory of Oregon, divorcing one Maynard and wife, was constitutional.

[2] See Barrett v. Failing, 111 U. S. 523 (1884), cases.

[3] Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 591, 584 (1858); Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 124 (1869).

[4] Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263 (1877); People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78 (1879); Blackinton v. Blackinton, 141 Mass. 435 (1886), cases; 30 Kan. 717; 24 Iowa, 204.

[5] Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 24 (1881), cases; 16 Am. Law Reg. 65–78, 193–204 (1877), cases; Whart. Confl. Laws, § 135. Marrying again, as bigamy, 17 Cent. Law J. 83–86 (1883), cases; 20 Am. Law Rev. 718–26 (1886), cases. National legislation, 21 Am. Law Rev. 675–78 (1887), cases. The new French act, 1 Law Quar. Rev. 358 (1885).

[6] McGill v. Deming, 44 Ohio St. 657 (1887), cases.

DOCK.[1] 1, v. To clip, cut off a part: to diminish.

Dock an account. To deduct something from a particular account.

Dock an entail. To curtail, destroy, defeat an estate tail.

2, n. (1) The space between wharves. Whence dockage: a charge for the use of a dock;[2] dock-master; dock-warrant. See WHARF.

The occupant of a dock is liable in damages to a person who, while using it, is injured in consequence of a defect permitted to exist, provided the injured person exercised due care.[3]

A dry-dock is not a subject of salvage service. The fact that it floats does not make it a "vessel," which only is a subject of salvage.[4]

(2) A space inclosed within a court room, for occupancy by an accused person while in court awaiting trial or sentence: the prisoner's dock.

DOCKET. 1, v. To abstract — and enter in a book.[5] See DOCK, 1.

To enter in a book called a docket.

2, n. A brief writing; an abstract, an epitome.

Originally, a memorandum of the substance of a document written upon the back or outside of it. In time, these memoranda, particularly those of judgments, were transcribed into books, and the name "docket" thereafter designated the books.

A brief statement in a book of the things done in court in the progress of a cause; also, the book which contains such history; and, again, a volume for the entry of all abstracts of a particular sort.

Whence docket costs, docket entry, docket receipt, docket record, docket fee — see FEE, 2.

Numerous terms are in use descriptive of the nature of the entries in dockets or of the persons by whom they are made. Thus, there may be a prothonotary's or a clerk's docket, a sheriff's or a marshal's docket, the docket of a magistrate, of an alderman or of a justice of the peace, an attorney's private docket; a civil, an equity, or a criminal docket, an appearance and an issue docket, a recognisance docket; a trial docket — often referred to as "the docket;" a judgment and an execution docket; an ejectment, a mechanic's lien, a partition docket; an auditor's report docket.

The docket of judgments is a brief writing or statement of a judgment made from the record or roll, kept with the clerk, in a book alphabetically arranged.[1]

Such docket affords purchasers and incumbrancers information as to the liens of judgments.[2]

Entries in dockets may or may not be "records." They are admissible in evidence when a formal record is not required.[3] See INDEX; JUDGMENT; MINUTES, 1; NOTICE, 1.

DOCTOR. One qualified to teach: a learned man; a person versed in one or more sciences or arts.

Doctor of laws. A title conferred by a college or university upon a person distinguished for his attainments in one or several departments of learning. Whence LL. D., from the Latin legum or legibus doctor.

Doctor of the civil law. A degree conferred upon a person who has pursued a prescribed course of study in general jurisprudence in a law school or university. Abbreviated D. C. L. See DEGREE, 3.

Doctor of medicine or physic. As popularly used, a practitioner of physic, irrespective of the system or school.[4] See PHYSICIAN.

DOCTRINE. The principle involved, applied, or propounded: as, the doctrine of escheat, estoppel, relation; the cy prés doctrine.

DOCUMENT. That which conveys information; that which furnishes evidence or proof; a written or printed instrument.

An instrument on which is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, matter which may be evidentially used.[5]

Documentary. Pertaining to what is written; consisting of one or more documents: as, documentary evidence.

Ancient document. Any private writing thirty or more years old. See WRITING, Ancient.

Foreign document. Such writing as originates in or comes from another jurisdiction.

Judicial document. Any instrument emanating from a court of justice. Legislative, and executive, document. Any

[1] 1, v. Welsh too-, doc-, to cut short, curtail. 2, n. Dutch dokke, a harbor: Gk. doche, receptacle.

[2] City of Boston v. Lecrow, 17 How. 434 (1854); The Buckeye State, 1 Newb. 71 (1856).

[3] Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 230 (1879), cases.

[4] Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 119 U. S. 627 (1887).

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 397; 2 id. 511. In former times spelled "docquet."

[1] Stevenson v. Weisser, 1 Bradf. 344 (N. Y., 1850).

[2] Appeal of First Nat. Bank of Northumberland, 100 Pa. 427 (1882).

[3] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 331 (1851), cases; Re Coleman, 15 Blatch. 426-27 (1879), cases.

[4] [Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Sm. 5 (N. Y., 1855).

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 614.

instrument or record made or kept in the legislative or executive departments of government, and evidence of public business therein.

Private document. An instrument affecting the concerns of one or more individuals. Public document. An instrument or record concerning the business of the people at large, preserved in or emanating from any department of government; also, a publication printed or issued by order of one or both houses of Congress or of a State legislature.

Public documents include state papers, maps, charts, and like formal instruments, made under public auspices. A copy of such document, issued by public authority, is as valid as the original; as, an officially published statute. The term also embraces official records required to be kept by statute.[1]

A public statute proves its own recitals; not so, a private statute. Journals of legislatures and executive documents are prima facie evidence of the facts they recite.[2]

Official registers, kept as required by law, are evidence of the facts they record. They must be identified, be complete, indicate accuracy, and not be secondary.[3]

Parish records of births, baptisms, marriages, and deaths are receivable as evidence when made by the persons whose duty it was to note such facts.[4]

Family records prove family events.

A relative instrument is inadmissible without its correlative. Admission of a part involves the whole document. All the usual incidents accompany the document.[5]

A document is to be proved by him who offers it; otherwise, when produced in pursuance of notice, or by an adverse party who relies on the writing as part of his title. A document sued upon must be proved when its execution has been denied.[6]

In matters of execution the law of the place where the instrument is to have effect governs. A writing void as a contract may be valid as an admission. The identity of a signer is to be proved. An agent's power to execute must first be shown.[7]

See ALTERATION, 2; BOOK; COPY; EVIDENCE; HANDWRITING; INSPECTION, 2; INSTRUMENT, 2, 3; LOST, 2; NEWSPAPER; RECORD; SEAL, 1; STAMP; WRITING.

DOE; ROE. "John Doe" and "Richard Roe" were fictitious persons used as standing pledges (common bail, q. v.) for the appearance of parties at a time when furnishing security for the prosecution of a suit by the plaintiff, and for attendance by the defendant, had become matters of form.[1]

The names may have been first used for the fictitious plaintiff and defendant in the old action of ejectment.[2] See STRAW.

Where defendants, whose real names were not known to the plaintiff, were described as "John Doe and Richard Roe, owners" of a particular vessel, and the true owners voluntarily appeared and filed answers, it was held that the plaintiff need not prove the ownership of the vessel.[3]

DOG. See ANIMAL; GAME, 2; KEEPER, 2; WORRY.

The almost unbroken current of authority is that, although dogs are property, their running at large in cities may be regulated or entirely prohibited; the requirement may be that they be classified, be registered, wear collars, and be destroyed if found running at large in violation of a statute or ordinance.[4]

A dog is a "thing of value," and may be stolen, and burglary may be committed in attempting to steal it.[5]

DOLI. See DOLUS.

DOLLAR. The unit of our currency; — money, or its equivalent.[6]

A silver coin weighing four hundred and twelve- and one-half grains, or a gold coin weighing twenty-five and four-fifths grains, of nine-tenths pure to one-tenth alloy of each metal.[7]

The coined dollar of the United States; a certain quantity and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the government.[8] See further COIN.

A contract to pay in "dollars" means in lawful money of the United States, and cannot be explained by parol; otherwise, of a contract made in another country, or in the late Confederate States, in which last case the reference may be to "Confederate dollars."[9]

"Dollars" will be supplied where the context shows that word omitted.[10]

---

[1] See McCall v. United States, 1 Dak. 321-28 (1876), cases; 1 Sup. R. S. pp. 154, 288.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 685-88; Whiton v. Albany, &c. Ins. Co., 109 Mass. 30 (1871), cases.

[3] 1 Whart Ev. §§ 639-48; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 493, 484, 496.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 649-59; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 493.

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 618-20, 642.

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 689-91, 736.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 700-2, 739 a.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 274, 287, 295.

[2] 3 Steph. Com. 618.

[3] Baxter v. Doe, 142 Mass. 562 (1886); Pub. St. c. 161, § 90.

[4] State v. City of Topeka, 36 Kan. 84 (1886), cases. See generally 20 Alb. Law J. 6-10 (1879), cases.

[5] State v. Yates, C. P. of Fayette Co., Ohio: 37 Alb. Law J. 232 (1888); ib. 348-50, cases.

[6] United States v. Auken, 96 U. S. 368 (1878).

[7] Borie v. Trott, 5 Phila. 366, 404 (1864), Hare, J.

[8] Bank of New York v. Supervisors, 7 Wall. 30 (1868), Chase, C. J.

[9] Thornington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 12 (1868), Chase, C. J.; Cook v. Lillo, 103 U. S. 792 (1880); 35 Ill. 396, 440; 39 N. Y. 98; 1 W. N. C. 223; 33 Tex. 351.

[10] Hines v. Chambers, 29 Minn. 11 (1884); Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 153 (1872).

An instrument in the form of a promissory note for the payment of "25.00 as per deed, 10 per cent. till paid," is a note for twenty-five dollars.[1]

Where a jury found "for the plaintiff in the sum of thirteen hundred and ninety-nine and 48-100," it was held that the omission of the word "dollars" was not such a defect as prevented rendering judgment according to the intent of the jury, although it would have been more regular to have amended the verdict before judgment.[2]

Any mark commonly employed in business transactions to denote the division of figures, obviously representing money, into dollars and cents, is sufficient for that purpose.[3]

"One dollar" — see CONSIDERATION, 2, Nominal.

See generally CURRENCY; MONEY; TENDER, Legal; WAR.

DOLUS. L. Device, artifice, guile, craft, intention to deceive,— especially when used with malus: actual fraud. Evil purpose; unlawful intention, illegal ill-will; legal malice. Compare CULPA.

Doli capax. Able to distinguish between right and wrong; having capacity to intend wrong, to commit crime. Doli incapax. Incapable of meditating wrong.

Capacity for guilt is measured by the strength of the understanding. Under seven years of age, an infant cannot be guilty of felony; under fourteen, though he be prima facie adjudged doli incapax, yet if it appears that he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil, he may be convicted.[4]

Dolus bonus. Craftiness which falls short of fraud; as, adroitness in effecting a sale, not amounting to false representation.

Dolus malus. Actual false representation, intended to injure.

Ex dolo malo. See ACTIO.

See DECEIT; FRAUD.

DOM. As a termination — jurisdiction, property, as in kingdom; or — state, condition, quality, as in freedom, serfdom. Originally, doom — judicial sentence.

Dom-boc or -boc. See DOME.

DOMAIN.[5] 1. Dominion, ownership, property; absolute proprietorship or right of control.[6]

Domain, eminent. The power to take private property for public uses is termed "the right of eminent domain."[7]

"Eminent" imports having preference, being paramount, prerogative, sovereign.

All separate interests of individuals in property are held of the government under the implied reservation that the property may be taken for the public use, upon paying a fair compensation, whenever the public interest requires it. The possession is to be resumed in the manner directed by the constitution and laws.[1]

The ultimate right of the sovereign power to appropriate, not only the public property, but the private property of all citizens within the territorial sovereignty, to public purposes. Vattel says that the right in society or the sovereign to dispose, in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth (property) in the state, is "eminent domain," and a prerogative of majesty.[2]

In every political sovereign community there is, or there, necessarily, the right and the duty of guarding its own existence, and of protecting and promoting the interests and welfare of the community at large. This power, denominated the "eminent domain" of the state, is, as its name imports, paramount to all private rights vested under the government, and these last are, by necessary implication, held in subordination to this power, and must yield in every instance to its proper exercise. The whole policy of the country relative to roads, mills, bridges, and canals rests upon this single power, under which lands have always been condemned; without the exertion of the power no one of these improvements could be constructed. The exercise of a franchise is subject to the power.[3]

The propriety of exercising the right is a political question — exclusively for the legislature to determine.[4]

The mode of exercising the right, in the absence of provision in the organic law prescribing a contrary course, is within the discretion of the legislature. If the purpose be a public one, and just compensation be paid or tendered the owner of the property taken, there is no limitation upon the power of the legislature.[5]

The right of eminent domain exists in the government of the United States, and may be exercised by it within the States, so far as is necessary to the enjoyment of the powers conferred by the Constitution. Such authority is essential to its independent existence and perpetuity. These cannot be preserved if the obstinacy of a private person, or if any other author-

[1] State v. Schwartz, 64 Wis. 432 (1885).

[2] Hopkins v. Orr, 124 U. S. 513 (1888), cases, Gray, J.

[3] Delashmutt v. Sellwood, 10 Oreg. 325 (1882).

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 23.

[5] F. domaine, a lordship: L. dominium, right of ownership. Compare DEMESNE; DOMAIN.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 1.

[7] United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 518 (1883), Field, J.

[1] Beekman v. Saratoga, &c. R. Co., 3 Paige, 72–73 (1831), Walworth, Ch.; Bloodgood v. Mohawk, &c. R. Co., 18 Wend. 13–18 (1837), cases.

[2] Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. *641 (1837), Story, J. Vattel is also quoted in 109 U. S. 519, post.

[3] West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 531–33 (1848), Daniel, J.

[4] Hyde Park v. Cemetery Association, 119 Ill. 149 (1886); 111 Mass. 125.

[5] Secombe v. Milwaukee, &c. R. Co., 23 Wall. 118 (1874); People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 597–98 (1860); Holt v. Council of Somerville, 127 Mass. 410, 413 (1879).

ity, can prevent the acquisition of the means or instruments by which alone governmental functions can be performed. No one doubts the existence in the State governments of the right of eminent domain,—a right distinct from and paramount to the right of ultimate ownership. It grows out of the necessities of their being, not out of the tenure by which lands are held. It may be exercised, though the lands are not held by grant from the government, either mediately or immediately, and independent of the consideration whether they would escheat to the government in case of a failure of heirs. The right is the offspring of political necessity; and it is inseparable from sovereignty, unless denied to it by its fundamental law. But it is no more necessary for the exercise of the powers of a State government than for the exercise of the conceded powers of the Federal government. That government is sovereign within its sphere, as the States are within theirs. . . When the power to establish post-offices and to create courts within the States was conferred upon the Federal government, included in it was authority to obtain sites for such offices and for court-houses, by such means as were known and appropriate. The right of eminent domain was one of those means well known when the Constitution was adopted, and employed to obtain lands for public uses. Its existence, therefore, in the grantee of that power ought not to be questioned. The Constitution itself contains an implied recognition of it beyond what may justly be implied from the express grants. The Fifth Amendment contains a provision that "private property" shall not "be taken for public use without just compensation." What is that but an implied assertion that, on making just compensation, it may be taken. . . This power of the Federal government has not heretofore been exercised adversely; but the non-user of a power does not disprove its existence. In some instances the States, by virtue of their own right of eminent domain, have condemned lands for the use of the general government, and such condemnations have been sustained by their courts, without, however, denying the right of the United States to act independently of the States. . . The proper view of the right of eminent domain seems to be that it is a right belonging to a sovereignty to take private property for its own public uses, and not for those of another. Beyond that there exists no necessity; which alone is the foundation of the right. If the United States have the power, it must be complete in itself. It can neither be enlarged nor diminished by a State. Nor can any State prescribe the manner in which it must be exercised. The consent of a State can never be a condition precedent to its enjoyment. Such consent is needed only, if at all, for the transfer of jurisdiction and of the right of exclusive legislation after the lands shall have been acquired.[1]

The right requires no constitutional recognition. When the use is public, the necessity or expediency of the appropriation is not a subject of judicial cognizance. The power may be delegated to a private corporation, to be exercised in the execution of a work in which the public is interested. Whether attached conditions have been observed is a matter for judicial cognizance.[1]

Ascertainment of the amount of compensation to be made is not an essential element of the power of appropriation. The constitutional provision for "just compensation" is merely a limitation upon the use of the power. It is no part of the power itself, but a condition upon which the power may be exercised. The proceeding for the ascertainment of the value of the property and the compensation to be made is merely an inquisition to establish a particular fact as a preliminary to the actual taking; and it may be prosecuted before commissioners, special boards, or the courts, with or without the intervention of a jury, as the legislative power may designate. All that is required is that it shall be conducted in some fair and just manner, with opportunity to the owners of the property to present evidence as to its value, and to be heard thereon. Whether the tribunal shall be created directly by an act of Congress, or one already established by the States shall be adopted for the occasion, is a matter of legislative discretion.[2]

The right over the shores and the land under the water of navigable streams resides in the State for municipal purposes, within legitimate limitations.[3]

Land taken for one purpose cannot, without special authority from the legislature, be appropriated, by proceedings in invitum, to a different use.[4]

The power of eminent domain expropriates, upon indemnity for public utility; the "police power" is exercised without making compensation—any loss occasioned is damnum absque injuria.[5] See further POLICE, 2; USE, 2, Public.

See also COMPENSATION, 3; LAND, Public; PARK, 2; TAKE, 8.

2. Territory owned and governed; lands.

Domain, public. Public lands, with any buildings thereon, held in trust by the government.

Congress has exclusive power to dispose of the public domain of the United States, and the exercise of the power is limited only by the discretion in that body.[6] See LANDS, Public.

DOME. A judgment, decree, sentence.

Dome-book. Any book of judgments.

Alfred collected the customs of the kingdom and reduced them to a system or code in his "Dom-bec,"

[1] Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 371–74 (1875), cases, Strong, J. Approved, Fort Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 id. 531 (1885); Roanoke City v. Berkowitz, 80 Va. 619, 623 (1885).

[1] Mississippi, &c. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406 (1878).

[2] United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 518–19 (1883), Field, J. See Wagner v. Railway Co., 38 Ohio St. 35 (1882).

[3] Omerod v. New York, &c. R. Co., 13 F. R. 370 (1882)

[4] Prospect Park, &c. R. Co. v. Williamson, 91 N. Y. 552, 561 (1883); Anniston, &c. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, &c. R. Co., 82 Ala. 300 (1886). cases.

[5] Bass v. State, 34 La. An. 496 (1882); Davenport v. Richmond City, 81 Va. 689 (1886); 17 F. R. 114; 81 Pa. 85. See generally 3 Law Q. Rev. 314–25 (1887), cases; 2 Kent, 339; 19 Bost. Law Rep. 241, 301.

[6] West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 540 (1848);

for the use of his tribunals. The volume also contained the maxims of the common law, forms for judicial proceedings, and certain penalties.[1]

The book may be seen, in both Saxon and English, in "The Ancient Laws and Institutes of England," published by the Record Commissioners, Vol. 1, pp. 45–101. At the head of the book stand the Ten Commandments, followed by many Mosaic precepts. After quoting the canons of the apostolic council at Jerusalem, Alfred refers to the commandment "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them," adding, "from this one doom a man may remember that he judge every one righteously: he need heed no other doom-book."[2]

The Commandments and such portions of the Law of Moses as were prefixed to the code became a part of the law of the land. Labor on Sunday was made criminal, and heavy punishments were exacted for perjury.[3]

Domesday-book. A survey of all the lands in England, with the names of their owners, their value, etc., compiled, by direction of the Conqueror, 1081–86.

The completeness of the survey made it "a day of judgment" as to the extent, value, and other qualities of every piece of land. It was practically a careful census, and became a final authority on tenures and titles. The two original volumes are preserved in the Exchequer.[4]

DOMESTIC.[5] Belonging or pertaining to one's own home, State, or country.

1. Residing in the same house with the master he serves: as, a domestic servant; or, simply, a domestic: a house servant; not, an outdoor workman, nor a person hired for a day.[6]

Living about the habitations of men; tame, domesticated: as, a domestic animal, q. v.

2. Relating to the law of the place of a person's domicil.

Having jurisdiction at one's domicil: as, the domestic court, forum, tribunal.

Appointed at the place of residence — of the person lately deceased, or of a ward: as, a domestic administrator, guardian, q. v.

3. Relating to the law, property, trade, or inhabitants of some particular State.

For the benefit of creditors within the debtor's own State: as, a domestic assignment, q. v.; whence, also, domestic creditors.

Maintainable against a resident debtor: as, a domestic attachment, q. v.

Created under the laws of the State in which it transacts business: as, a domestic corporation, q. v.

Rendered by a court of the State where it was first entered or enrolled: as, a domestic decree, or judgment, q. v.

Arising or committed within the borders of a State or among the inhabitants thereof: as, domestic violence, q. v.

4. Relating to the territorial limits or to the jurisprudence of two or more States, or of the whole United States.

Confined within the United States, or, possibly, one State: as, domestic commerce, manufactures, qq. v.

Acquired within a subdivision of a country: as, a domestic domicil, q. v.

Resident within the State or country in question: as, a domestic factor, q. v.

DOMICIL.[1] The place where a person lives or has his home; that is, where one has his true, fixed, permanent home and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning.[2]

The habitation fixed in any place, without any present intention of removing therefrom.[3]

Domiciliate, or domicile. To establish one, or oneself, in a fixed residence.

Domiciliary. Pertaining to one's permanent residence: as, a domiciliary court, the domiciliary administrator or guardian, domiciliary inspection or visitation.

There is a wide difference between domicil and mere residence. While they are usually at the same place, they may be at different places. Domicil is the established, fixed, permanent, ordinary dwelling place

---

United States v. Gratiot, 14 Pet. 536 (1840); 1 Kent, 166, 257; 37 Am. Jur. 121.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 411; 3 id. 65.

[2] See 1 Bl. Com. 65, note by Warren.

[3] Green, Short Hist. Eng. People, 81.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 49, 99; 3 id. 331; Green, Short Hist. Eng. People, 114.

[5] L. domesticus, belonging to a household: domus, a house

[6] Eg. Meason, 5 Binn. 174–84 (1812); Wakefield v. State, 11 Tex. 558 (1874); Richardson v. State, 43 id. 456 (1875); Ullman v. State, 1 Tex. Ap. 221 (1876); Waterhouse v. State, 21 id. 666 (1886). See R. S. § 4063.

[1] Spelled also domicile. F. domicile, a dwelling: L. domicilium, habitation: domus, a house; and -cilium, allied to celare, to hide.

[2] Story, Conf. Laws, § 41; Hannon v. Grizzard, 89 N. C. 120 (1883), Smith, C. J.; 75 Pa. 205.

[3] Putnam v. Johnson, 10 Mass. *501 (1813), Parker, J.; State v. Moore, 14 N. H. 454 (1843); Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. 520 (1848).

or residence of a party, as distinguished from his temporary and transient though actual place of residence. One is his legal residence as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; in other words, one is his home, as distinguished from the place or places to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him.[1]

Primarily a person's domicil is his legal home; but domicil implies more than mere residence in a country.[2]

The domicil of a person may be in one place and his residence in another.[3]

Residence, with no present intention of removal, constitutes domicil.[4]

"Domicil" has a fixed and definite signification. For the ordinary purposes of citizenship there are rules of general, if not of universal, acceptation applicable to it. "Citizenship," "habitancy" and "residence" are severally words which may in the particular case mean precisely the same as "domicil," but frequently they may have other and inconsistent meanings, and while in one use of language the expressions a change of domicil, of citizenship, of habitancy, of residence, are necessarily identical or synonymous, in a different use of language they import different ideas.[5]

In international law, domicil means a residence at a particular place, accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of intending to continue there for an unlimited time.[6]

To ascertain this domicil, it is proper to take into consideration the situation, the employment, and the character of the individual; the trade in which he is engaged, the family he possesses, and the transitory or fixed character of his business are ingredients which may properly be weighed.[7]

Domicil is spoken of: as national, or that of a person's country, and opposed to domestic, or that of a subdivision of a country; as foreign, established in another state; as commercial, the place of one's trade or business; of birth, that of one's parents; acquired, vested by the law; by choice, selected of free will; by law, by operation of law.

Once existing, a domicil continues until another is acquired; when a change is alleged the burden of proof rests upon the party making the allegation. To constitute a new domicil, two things are indispensable: residence in the new locality, and the intention to remain there, facto et animo. Mere absence from a fixed home, however long continued, cannot work the change. Among the circumstances usually relied upon to establish the animus manendi are: declarations, exercise of political rights, payment of personal taxes, a house of residence, a place of business.[1]

A change does not depend so much upon the intention to remain in the new place for a definite or an indefinite period, as upon its being without an intention to return to the former place of actual residence. An intention to return, however, at a remote or indefinite period, will not control, if the other facts which constitute domicil all give the new residence the character of a permanent home and place of abode. The intention and actual fact of residence must concur, when such residence is not in its nature temporary. There is a right of election by expressed intention, only when the facts are to some extent ambiguous.[2]

A domicil of origin is presumed to be retained until residence elsewhere has been shown.[3] A domicil of origin, or an acquired domicil, remains until a new one is acquired. A native domicil is not so easily changed as an acquired domicil, and is more easily lost. A man can have but one domicil at the same time for the same purpose.[3]

Domicil is acquired by residence and the animus manendi, the intent to remain.

A wife's domicil is that of the husband; but she may acquire a separate one, whenever necessary or proper, as, for a suit in divorce,[4] q. v. See also CITIZEN; LEX, Domicilii; RESIDE.

DOMINANT. See EASEMENT, Dominant.

DOMINION. Complete ownership; absolute property.[5]

The right in a corporeal thing, from which arises the power of disposition and of claiming it from others.[7]

Proximate dominion. Obtaining possession by delivery of a thing sold, which,

[1] Town of Salem v. Town of Lyme, 29 Conn. 79 (1860), Hinman, J.

[2] McDonald v. Salem Capital Flour-Mills Co., 31 F. R. 577 (1887).

[3] Lyon v. Lyon, 30 Hun, 456 (1883); Foss v. Foss, 58 N. H. 284 (1878), cases.

[4] Lindsay v. Murphy, 76 Va. 430 (1882).

[5] Borland v. City of Boston, 132 Mass. 93 (1882), Lord, J.

[6] Guier v. O'Daniel, 1 Binn. *350 (1806), Rush, P. J.; State v. Collector, 32 N. J. L. 194 (1867); Mitchell v. United States, 21 Wall. 352 (1874).

[7] Livingstone v. Maryland Ins. Co., 7 Cranch, 542 (1813), Story, J.; The Venus, 8 Cranch, 278 (1814).

[1] Mitchell v. United States, 21 Wall. 353, 352 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.; Desmare v. United States, 93 U. S. 609 (1876); Doyle v. Clark, 1 Flip. 537–38 (1876), cases; Lindsay v. Murphy, 76 Va. 430 (1882); 21 Cent. Law J. 430–32 (1885), cases — Solicitors Journal (London).

[2] Hallet v. Bassett, 100 Mass. 170–71 (1868), cases, Colt, J.; Guier v. O'Daniel, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 747–50, cases.

[3] Ennis v. Smith (Kosciusko's Case), 14 How. 423 (1852).

[4] Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 562 (1879), Swayne, J.

[5] Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 124 (1869); Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 705 (1884), cases; 2 Bishop, Mar. & D. 475; 23 Alb. Law J. 86 (1881), cases.

See generally 13 Am. Law Rev. 261–79 (1879), cases, 11 Cent. Law J. 421–25 (1880), cases; 1 Wall. Jr. 382; 7 Fla. 81, 152; 46 Ga. 277; 74 Ill. 314; 89 Ind. 177; 51 Iowa 79; 20 La. 314; 26 id. 338; 52 Me. 165; 27 Miss. 718, 54 id. 310; 77 Mo. 678; 37 N. J. L. 495; 8 Wend. 142; 8 Paige, 524; 31 Barb. 476; 67 N. Y. 379; 71 Pa. 309; 42 Vt. 352.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. Ch. I.

[7] Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 136 (1851), Hughes, J.

without anything else, being preceded by the title, vests the right in the thing — which is the dominion. Remote dominion. The title which vests a right to a thing sold, and gives a cause of action against the vendor who has not delivered the thing.[1]

Compare DEMESNE; DOMAIN; DOMINIUM.

DOMINIUM. L. Complete ownership of property.

Dominium directum. Immediate ownership,— possession.

Dominium utile. Beneficial ownership,— enjoyment.

Dominium directum et utile. Direct and beneficial ownership: complete ownership and possession in one person. Compare DROIT-DROIT.

DOMINUS. L. Lord or master; owner.

Dominus litis. The actor in a cause; the principal in a suit; the client, as distinguished from his agent or attorney.[2]

Domino perit res. The thing has perished for its owner. See further RES, Perit.

Domino volente. The owner willing.

DOMITÆ. See ANIMAL.

DOMUS. L. A house; the house.

Domus procerum. The house of lords. Abbreviated dom. proc., and D. P.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. His own dwelling is for every one the safest refuge: every man's house is his castle. See further HOUSE, 1.

DONA. See DONUM.

DONATE. See DONATION.

DONATIO. L. A giving; a gift. See DARE; GIFT.

Donatio inter vivos. A gift between living persons: when the maker of a gift is not apprehending death. See further GIFT.

Donatio mortis causa, or causa mortis. A gift in view of death; a death-bed disposition of personalty.

A donation causa mortis takes place when a person in his last sickness, apprehending dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods to keep in case of his decease. Such a gift is to revert to the donor, if he survives, and is not valid as against creditors.[3]

There must have been a transfer of property in expectation of death from an existing illness.[1]

A gift of personal property, by a party who is in peril of death, upon condition that it shall presently belong to the donee, in case the donor shall die, but not otherwise. There must be a delivery by the donor. The gift will be defeated by revocation, or by recovery or escape from the impending peril. It is in no sense a testamentary act. There may be a good donation of anything which has a physical existence and admits of corporal or symbolical delivery. Negotiable instruments, and even bonds and mortgages, may be thus transferred.[2]

A donatio mortis causa must be completely executed, precisely as is required in the case of a gift inter vivos, subject to be devested by the happening of any of the conditions subsequent, that is, upon actual revocation by the donor, by his surviving the apprehended peril, by his outliving the donee, or by the occurrence of a deficiency of the assets necessary to pay the debts of the donor. If the gift does not take effect as a complete transfer of possession and title, legal or equitable, during the life of the donor, it is a testamentary disposition, and good only if made and proved as a will. . . The instrument transferring a chose in action must be the evidence of a subsisting obligation and be delivered to the donee, so as to vest him with an equitable title to the fund it represents, and to devest the owner of all present control over it, absolutely and irrevocably, but upon the recognized conditions subsequent. A delivery which empowers the donee to control the fund only after the death of the donor, when by the instrument itself it is presently payable, is testamentary in character, and not good as a gift.[3]

Recent statutes make valid a wife's death-bed donations of personalty without her husband's assent.[4]

Donatio propter nuptias. A gift in consideration of marriage. In the civil law, the provision made by the husband as the counterpart of the dos or marriage portion brought by the wife.

DONATION. See DONATIO. A contract by which a person gratuitously dispossesses himself of something by transferring it to another to become the latter's property upon acceptance.[5]

[1] Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 136 (1851), ante.

[2] See 4 Hughes, 341.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 514.

[1] Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Story, 755, 763 (1845).

[2] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 606-7; 3 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 1146-51; 2 Kent, 244.

[3] Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 609-10, 614 (1882), cases, Matthews, J.; Same v. Same, 108 id. 267 (1883), 8 Biss. 306-9 (1878), cases. See also 16 Ala. 221; 59 Cal. 665; 38 Ind. 454; 54 N. H. 87; 31 Me. 429; 77 Mo. 173; 30 Hun, 632, 635; 20 Johns. 514; 33 N. Y. 584; 23 Pa. 63; 51 id. 349-50; 39 Vt. 624; 4 Gratt. 479; 1 Am. Law Reg. 1-11 (1852), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 222-26 (1884), cases; 2 Law Q. Rev. 444-52 (1886); 21 Am. Law Rev. 732-63 (1887), cases; Ward v. Turner, W. & T. L. C. Eq. Vol. 1, pt. 2, 1205-51, cases.

[4] Schouler, Wills, § 63, cases.

[5] See Fisk v. Flores, 43 Tex. 343 (1875).

Donate. To give gratuitously or without consideration.[1]

In the act of Indiana of May 9, 1869, enabling a city to aid the construction of a railroad, etc., "donation" means an absolute gift or grant of a thing without any condition or consideration.[2] See AID, 1, Municipal.

Letting the labor of convicts in consideration of their being fed, clothed, etc., by the hirer, is not a "donation" or gratuity.[3]

DONIS. See DONUM.

DONOR; DONEE. 1. The giver, and the recipient, respectively, of personalty. See DONATIO; DONATION.

2. He who confers, and he who is invested with, a power. See POWER, 2.

3. He who gives, and he who receives, lands in tail, q. v.

DONUM. L. A gift. See DARE; DONATIO.

De donis. Respecting gifts — estates-tail.

The first chapter of the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I, 1285) is called the Statute de donis or de donis conditionalibus. It took from donees the power of alienating their estates-tail, thus introducing perpetuities.

At common law an estate-tail was known as a conditional fee — limited to particular heirs; the condition being that if the donee died, without leaving an heir, the estate reverted. Upon the birth of issue the estate became absolute for three purposes: the donee could alien it, and thus bar his issue and the reversioner; he could forfeit it by an act of treason; he could encumber it. As soon as issue was born the donee aliened and immediately repurchased, thereby obtaining a fee-simple absolute for all purposes. To keep estates in the hands of the great families, the statute de donis was passed. It directed that the will of the donor should be observed, and forbade alienation. It abolished the conditional fee and made the estate descend per formam doni, or passed in reversion. The statute continued in force two centuries. In the reign of Edw. IV, it was held[4] that the entail might be destroyed by a common recovery, and the issue, the donee, and the donee's expectant, be barred, on the death of the tenant in tail "without issue." Fines and special laws subsequently effected the same end.[5] See further FEE, 1.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Secret gifts are always viewed with suspicion: secret transfers of property are regarded with distrust.[1] See CONVEYANCE, Fraudulent.

DOOM. See DOME.

DOOR. See HOUSE, 1.

DORMANT. Sleeping: silent, unavowed, undisclosed: as, a dormant partner; secret, not of public record: as, a dormant judgment; in abeyance, suspended: as, a dormant execution. See those substantives.

DOS. L. A marriage portion; dowry. French dot.

In Roman law, property given a husband to aid him in sustaining the burdens of the marriage relation.

In English law, the portion bestowed upon a wife at marriage; also, the portion a widow is entitled to out of the estate of her deceased husband.

Dos rationalibus. A reasonable marriage portion; common-law dower,[2] q. v.

DOTAGE. See DEMENTIA, Senile.

DOTAL. Pertaining to dowry. Opposed, extra-dotal: not part of dowry. See DOS.

DOUBLE. 1. By two married persons: as, double adultery, q. v.

2. On behalf of each of two parties: as, a double agency. See BROKER.

3. For the same cause of action: as, a double arrest, q. v.; double punishment, or satisfaction, q. v.

4. Twofold: as, a contingency with a double aspect, q. v.

5. Upon the same subject-matter, twice over: as, a double assessment or taxation. See TAX, 2.

6. Twice the original: as, double costs, q. v.

7. Increased by the court, over the actual amount: as, double damages.

8. For, by, or from two persons; opposed to single: as, a double deed.

9. Additional; upon the same property, against the same risks, and for the same person; as, double insurance, q. v.

10. Second, duplicated: as, a double payment.

11. Twice the original or true amount: as, a double penalty, q. v.

12. Containing two or more distinct causes of action or defense: as, double pleading. See DUPLICITY.

[1] Goodhue v. City of Beloit, 21 Wis. 642 (1867).

[2] Indiana North & South R. Co. v. City of Attica, 56 Ind. 486, 476 (1877); Wilkinson v. City of Peru, 61 id. 9 (1878).

[3] Georgia Penitentiary Co. v. Nelms, 65 Ga. 503-5 (1880).

[4] Taltarum's Case, Year Book, 12 Edw. IV (1473), c. 19.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 112, 360; Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 283 (1866).

[1] Broom, Max. 289, 290; 4 B. & C. 652; 1 M. & S. 253.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 129, 492, 516; 1 Washb. R. P. 147, 209. 132 Mass. 275; 6 Mart., La., 460.

13. Permissive and commissive: as, double waste, q. v.

DOUBT.[1] Fluctuation of mind arising from want of evidence or knowledge; uncertainty of mind; unsettled opinion.[2]

Equipoise of mind arising from an equality of contrary reasons.[3]

In civil cases, a doubt is to be resolved against the party who might have furnished facts to remove it, but has neglected so to do. In charges of fraud, the presumption of innocence will remove a doubt. In criminal cases, whenever a reasonable doubt exists as to the guilt of the accused he is to receive the benefit of the doubt.

Where, in a civil proceeding, proving the cause of action or the defense will also prove a crime committed by the adverse party, it is not necessary that the proof be of the degree required in a criminal proceeding for the offense, that is, beyond a reasonable doubt. The issue should be determined in accordance with the preponderance of the proof.[4]

Reasonable doubt. "That state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge."[5]

The expression is not easily defined. It does not mean mere possible doubt; because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. . . All the presumptions of law independent of evidence are in favor of innocence; and every person is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty. If upon such proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal.[6]

It is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary; but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it.[7]

If the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether.[8]

"Proof beyond a reasonable doubt" is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which tends to support. It is proof "to a moral certainty," as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent; each has been used by eminent judges to explain the other; and each signifies: Such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible.[1] See CERTAINTY, 1, Moral.

Such doubt must be founded on something growing out of the state of the testimony, which leaves a rational uncertainty as to guilt, and which nothing else in the case removes. The degree of conviction of guilt should be something more than a bare preponderance of belief; something more than the probability of guilt merely outweighing the probability of innocence. The mind should be able to rest reasonably satisfied of the guilt of the accused before a verdict of that character is given.[2]

A doubt founded upon a consideration of all the circumstances and evidence, and not a doubt resting upon conjecture or speculation.[3]

The jury must find the facts established to such a degree of certainty as they would regard sufficient in the important affairs of life. The proof need not necessarily exclude all doubt.[4]

"A doubt which a reasonable man of sound judgment, without bias, prejudice, or interest, after calmly, conscientiously, and deliberately weighing all the testimony, would entertain as to the guilt of the prisoner." The guilt must be established to a reasonable, not an absolute, demonstrative or mathematical, certainty.[5]

An indefinable doubt which cannot be stated, with the reason upon which it rests, is not a reasonable doubt, within the rule that an accused is to be given the benefit of such doubt.[6]

Not any fanciful conjecture which an imaginative man may conjure up, but a doubt which reasonably

---

[1] F. douter: L. dubitare (q. v.), to waiver in mind.

[2] [Webster's Dict.

[3] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[4] Thoreson v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 29 Minn. 107 (1882), cases.

[5] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 320 (1850), Shaw, C. J. Frequently cited, as in 59 Cal. 395; 60 id. 108; 3 Monta. 137, 162; 6 Nev. 340; 26 N. J. L. 615; 103 U. S. 312; 120 id. 440, post,—commented on.

[1] Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 24 (1875), cases, Gray, C. J.; cited, 120 U. S. 440, post.

[2] United States v. Gleason, 1 Woolv. 137 (1867), Miller, J.

[3] United States v. Knowles, 4 Saw. 521 (1864), Field, J.

[4] United States v. Wright, 16 F. R. 114 (1883), Billings, J.

[5] State v. Rounds, 76 Me. 125 (1884), Peters, C. J., quoting State v. Reed, 62 id. 144, 142-45 (1874).

[6] People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 510 (1885); 3 Greenl Ev. § 29.

flows from the evidence or the want of evidence; a doubt for which a sensible man could give a good reason, based upon the evidence; such a doubt as he would act upon in his own concerns.[1]

It is difficult to conceive what amount of conviction would leave the mind of a juror free from a reasonable doubt, if it be not one which is so settled and fixed as to control his action in the more weighty and important matters relating to his own affairs. Out of the domain of the exact sciences and actual observation there is no absolute certainty. The guilt of the accused, in the majority of cases, must necessarily be deduced from a variety of circumstances leading to proof of the fact. Persons of speculative minds may in almost every case suggest possibilities of the truth being different from that established by the most convincing proof. Jurors are not to be led away by speculative notions as to such possibilities.[2]

"The jury are not to go beyond the evidence to hunt up doubts, nor must they entertain such doubts as are merely chimerical or conjectural." To justify acquittal, a doubt must arise from an impartial investigation of all the evidence, and be such that, "were the same kind of doubt interposed in the graver transactions of life, it would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause." "If, after considering all the evidence, you can say you have an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt; . . . you are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if, from the evidence, you believe as men."[3]

An instruction which says that the doubt must be "real," substantial, well-founded, arising out of the evidence, is not reversible.[4]

As to questions relating to human affairs, a knowledge of which is derived from testimony, it is impossible to have the kind of certainty created by scientific demonstration. The only certainty we can have is a moral certainty, which depends upon the confidence placed in the integrity of witnesses, and their capacity to know the truth. If, for example, facts not improbable are attested by numerous witnesses who are credible, consistent, uncontradicted, and had every opportunity of knowing the truth, a reasonable or moral certainty would be inspired by their testimony. In such case a doubt would be unreasonable, imaginary, or speculative, which it ought not to be. It is not a doubt whether the party may not possibly be innocent in the face of strong proof of his guilt, but a sincere doubt whether he has been proved guilty, that is called "reasonable." And even where the testimony is contradictory, so much more credit may be due to one side than the other, that the same result will be produced. On the other hand, the opposing proofs may be so nearly balanced that the jury may justly doubt on which side lies the truth. In such case the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. As certainty advances, doubt recedes. If one is reasonably certain, he cannot, at the same time, be reasonably doubtful, that is, have a reasonable doubt of a fact. All that a jury can be expected to do is to be reasonably or morally certain of the fact which they declare by their verdict.[1] See also EVIDENCE; PREPONDERANCE; PROOF.

Doubtful. Where, at the date of an assignment, certain choses were reported as "doubtful," it was held that the assignee could not be charged with them unless the creditors proved that they might have been collected by due diligence.[2]

DOWER.[3] The interest which the law gives a widow in the realty of her deceased husband. Compare DOWRY.

The life estate, created by law, where a man is seised of an estate of inheritance, and dies in the life-time of his wife.[4]

In the common law, that portion of lands or tenements which the wife has for the term of her life of the lands or tenements of her husband after his decease, for the sustenance of himself and the nurture and education of her children.[5]

Tenant in dower is where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies; the wife shall then have the third part of all the lands and tenements whereof he was seised at any time during the coverture, to hold to herself for the term of her natural life.[6]

Dowable. Entitled to dower, subject to dower; endowable: as, a dowable interest in lands, dowable lands.

Dowager. A widow endowed; particularly, the widow of a person of rank. Dowress. A widow entitled to dower; a tenant in dower.

Endow. To assign dower to; to become invested with rights of dower. Whence endowable. See ENDOW.

The widow must have been the actual wife of the party at the time of his decease. She is endowable of all lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, at any time during the coverture, and of which any issue she might have had might by possibility have been heir. . . There was also dower by custom: as, that the wife should have a quarter, a half, or all of the land; dower ad ostium

[1] [United States v. Jones, 31 F. R. 724 (1887), Speer, J.; ib. 718, note.

[2] Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 439–41 (1887), cases, Field, J.

[3] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 251–52 (1887), cases.

[4] State v. Blunt, 91 Mo. 506 (1887), cases.

[1] United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 164 (Jan. 25, 1882), Cox, J. See Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 312 (1880), cases; 9 Pet. *601; 18 Wall. 545; 70 Ala. 45; 37 Conn. 360; 67 Ga. 153; 39 Ill. 457; 100 id. 242; 104 id. 364; 23 Ind. 170; 64 Iowa, 90; 29 Kan. 141; 1 Duv. (Ky.) 226; 9 Bush, 593; 38 Mich. 482; 44 id. 290; 14 Neb. 540; 42 N. Y. 6; 4 Pa. 274; 88 id. 141–42; 3 Heisk. 28.

[2] Wimbish v. Blanks, 76 Va. 365, 369 (1882).

[3] F. douaire: L. dotare, to endow: dot-, to give.

[4] 4 Kent, 35; 71 Ala. 81.

[5] Coke, Litt. 30 b, 31 a; Sutherland v. Sutherland, 69 Ill. 485 (1873); 4 Kent, 33.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 129–30.

ecclesiæ; when a tenant in fee-simple, at the church door (where marriages were celebrated), after affiance made, endowed the wife with a certain part of his lands; dower ex assensu patris: when a son, by express agreement of his father, endowed his wife with a part of the father's possessions.[1]

Dower ad ostium ecclesiæ and ex assensu patris were abolished by 3 and 4 Will. IV (1833), c. 105. Dower given by the law is the only kind which has ever obtained in this country. . . During the life of the husband the right is a mere expectancy or possibility. Not being a natural right, but being conferred by law alone, the power that gives may increase, diminish, or otherwise alter it, or even wholly take it away. Upon the death of the husband, the right of the widow becomes vested.[2]

The law of the situs determines rights of dower. At common law the widow has dower: in an estate in common; in incorporeal hereditaments; in mines opened by the husband She now has dower in wild lands; in an equity of redemption; in some States only in what her husband dies seised of.

At common law she has no dower: in an inheritance of which her husband had no right of immediate seizin; in a term of years (personalty); in an estate in joint-tenancy, except as widow of the survivor; in an estate held for another's life; in a vested remainder. Nor, generally, has she dower now: in a preemption claim; in shares of a corporation; in an estate held in trust by him, but otherwise as to his equitable estates; in a mortgagee's estate, till irredeemable; in partnership lands, before the debts are paid;[3] in a contract to purchase which he could not enforce.

The right may be defeated by any claim which would have defeated the husband's seisin: at common law, by alienage,— a rule now generally changed; by foreclosure of a mortgage made by him before marriage, or made for purchase-money after marriage; in some States, by sale on an execution for a debt; by sale for taxes; by an exercise of the right of eminent domain; by dedication to a public use; not, by an assignment in insolvency or bankruptcy — as see below.

The right may be barred: by divorce a vinculo, she being the delinquent; by elopement and adultery; by a jointure; by a joint conveyance duly acknowledged,— the common method; by equitable estoppel; by taking what he wills her.

Dower was to be assigned or set out, by right, immediately upon his death. Magna Charta allowed her to occupy his principal "mansion-house" forty days, if on dowable lands. One mode of assigning was by "common right" — by legal process; another mode, "against common right," rested upon her agreement. The former was by metes and bounds; the latter by indenture. Procedure for assignment has been called "admeasurement." As against the heir the value at assignment is regarded; as against an alienee the value at transfer, and, according to numerous decisions, the increase from general improvement.

Two or more widows may be endowable out of the same realty. The estate is a continuation of the husband's. The widow may convey it away; and it may be levied upon.

The right, being no part of his estate, is not affected by proceedings in bankruptcy against him.[4]

A woman who is sui juris may, by ante-nuptial contract, relinquish the right.[5]

Writ of dower. Process to secure an "assignment" of dower.

Writ of dower unde nihil habet — whereof she has nothing: complains that assignment has not been made within time.[6]

See further subjects mentioned, and HUSBAND, PARAPHERNALIA; QUARANTINE, 1; SETTLE, 4; TABLE, 4.

DOWRY. That which the wife gives the husband on account of marriage,— a donation toward his maintenance and the support of the relation.[7]

In Louisiana, "the effects which the wife brings the husband to support the expenses of marriage." Being given to him to be enjoyed during the marriage, the income is his absolutely. He is to administer the property. She cannot deprive him of it. Realty is inalienable during marriage, unless the contract stipulates otherwise.[8]

"Dowry," "dowery," and "dower" are etymologically different forms of the same word. "Dowery" is obsolete. In Massachusetts, neither "dowery" nor "dowry" has ever meant "dower,"[9] q. v.

DRAFT.[10] 1, n. (1) A drawing, delineation, sketch. See COPYRIGHT.

(2) In common speech, a bill of exchange.[11] See EXCHANGE, 2.

Any order for the payment of money drawn by one person upon another.[12]

Also, money checked out of a bank by this means.

The drawer is he who prepares the order; the drawee, he to whom it is addressed.

Drafts, as used in the collection of debts, are not usually negotiable. The office of a draft is to collect for the drawer, from the drawee, residing in another

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 130, 131, 132.

[2] Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 147 (1874); 25 Minn. 464.

[3] Lenow v. Fones, 48 Ark. 560-67 (1886), cases.

[4] Porter v. Lazear, 109 U. S. 86 (1883); Lazear v. Porter, 87 Pa. 513 (1878).

[5] Barth v. Linés, 118 Ill. 332 (1886), cases; Forwood v. Forwood, Sup. Ct. Ky. (1887), cases.

[6] See generally 2 Bl. Com. 136-37; 3 id. 183, 194; 4 Kent, 35-72; Williams, R. P. 223-28; 1 Washb. R. P. *146-262; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 624-32; 3 Pomeroy, Eq., Index; 1 Bouv. 564-67, cases; Mayburry v. Brien, 15 Pet. 21 (1841), cases.

[7] [Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 254 (1855): 1 Parti das, 507.

[8] De Young v. De Young, 6 La. An. 787 (1851); Buard v. De Russy, 6 Rob. 113 (1843); Gates v. Legendre, 10 id 78 (1845).

[9] Johnson v. Goss, 132 Mass. 275-76 (1882).

[10] Originally draught,— Webster.

[11] 2 Bl. Com. 467; 39 N. Y. 100.

[12] [Wildes v. Savage, 1 Story, 30 (1839).

place, money to which the former may be entitled, either on account of balances due or advances upon consignments; and although they may sometimes be used for raising money that is not the necessary or ordinary purpose for which they are employed.[1] See ASSIGNMENT, Equitable; DUPLICATE.

Overdraft. The demand against a depositor in a bank after he has drawn out more money than his balance; also, the act of drawing too much, and the state of the account thereafter.[2]

As between a banking firm and a depositor not a member of the firm, an overdraft is a loan. The payment of the latter's check when no funds stand to his credit is an advance by the firm of its own money, for the repayment of which, with lawful interest, the customer is liable. It is payable absolutely and in full, without abatement or contingency, and so constitutes a loan in all its characteristics. If more than legal interest is paid, the borrower loses the excess above the legal rate, and if the contract stands and is carried out, the loss is absolute and certain. But the situation changes when the person making the overdraft is a member of the firm which advances it.[3]

(3) An allowance to an importer, when a duty is ascertained by weight, to insure good weight.

"Tare" is allowed for the covering on the article.[4]

2, v. To prepare in writing. See DRAW, 3.

Draftsman. In equity practice, a person who prepares pleadings; also, one who manually writes a will.

DRAIN. 1, n. Any hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected and passes off; a ditch.[5] Compare GUTTER.

2, v. To rid land of its superfluous moisture, by deepening, straightening, or embanking the natural water-courses, and supplementing them, when necessary, by artificial ditches.[6]

An easement to drain water through another's land may be acquired by grant or prescription.[7]

Drainage. As a matter of legal definition it cannot be said that sewerage may not, in cases, be included in drainage; yet when the simple word "drainage" is used, as appurtenant to lands, the most obvious suggestion is drainage of water.[8]

See AQUA, Currit, etc.; MEADOW; SEWER.

[1] Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 280 (1883), Ruger, C. J.

[2] [Abbott's Law Dict.; 24 N. J. L. 484.

[3] Payne v. Freer, 91 N. Y. 48 (1883), Finch, J.; 2 Utah, 411.

[4] Napier v. Barney, 5 Blatch. 192 (1863), Nelson, J.

[5] Goldthwait v. East Bridgewater, 5 Gray, 64 (1855).]

[6] People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 639 (1881); ib. 648.

[7] See 3 Kent, 436.

[8] Wetmore v. Fiske, 15 R. I. 359 (1886).

DRAM. In common parlance, implies that the drink has alcohol in it — something that intoxicates.[1]

DRAMA. A public representation of an uncopyrighted play by the author, for his own advantage, is not a dedication of the play to the public.

A spectator may take notes for any fair purpose, as, for comparison with other works, or for comment as a critic. A ticket of admission is a license to witness the play, not to reproduce it, if the spectator can recollect it or stenograph it. In whatever mode a copy is obtained, a subsequent unauthorized representation, operating to deprive the author of his exclusive rights, will be enjoined.[2] See COPYRIGHT; REVIEW, 3; THEATER.

DRAW. 1. To take from a place of deposit; to call for and receive from a fund: as, to draw money from a bank or a trust, to draw a dividend or share.

2. To take names from the authorized receptacle: as, to draw a jury.

3. To write in form, prepare; to draw up: as, to draw, or draw up, a document or writing — deed, bill in equity, will, etc.

4. To produce, gain: as, for money to draw interest.

5. To drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution: as, to draw a traitor, and to be drawn.[3] See TREASON.

Drawback. A remission of money paid as freight, taxes, or other charges. Compare REBATE. See COMMERCE, page 201, Act of 1887, sec. 2.

A refunding of duties paid upon imported merchandise which becomes an export.[4]

Drawbridge; draw. A contrivance by which a section of a bridge across a navigable water is turned upward or at right angles to itself, and parallel with the direction of the stream, so as to admit of the passage of vessels through the open space.[5] See BRIDGE.

Drawee; Drawer. See DRAFT, 1 (2).

Drawing. See COPYRIGHT.

[1] Lacy v. State, 32 Tex. 226 (1869). As to dram-shop keeper, see State v. Owen, 15 Mo. *507 (1852).

[2] Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 32, 45 (1882), cases; Keene v. Wheatley, 9 Am. Law Reg. 33–108 (C. C., E. D. Pa., 1860).

[3] See 4 Bl. Com. 92, 377.

[4] See R. S. tit. XXXIV, Ch. 9.

[5] Hughes v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 18 F. R. 114 (1883). Law as to, Gates v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 64 Wis. 64 (1885).

DRAYMEN. See POLICE, 2.

Drayage. Where, to keep a wharf in repair, a toll was charged on coal taken from the wharf in vessels or warehoused "without drayage," it was held that the reference was to loaded conveyances, and included a tramway supported by pillars resting upon the wharf.[1]

DRED SCOTT CASE. See CITIZEN; SLAVERY.

DREDGE. Originally, a net or drag for taking oysters; now, a machine for cleansing canals and rivers,—a dredger. To dredge is to gather or take with a dredge; to remove sand, mud, etc., with a dredging machine. A dredge is not a "vessel."[2]

DRIFT-STUFF. Matters floating at random, without any discoverable owner, and which, if cast ashore, will probably never be reclaimed, but belong to the riparian proprietor.[3]

A right to "sea manure" is a right to appropriate the random drift and refuse of the ocean, but not goods washed ashore from a wrecked vessel.[3]

DRIP. See EASEMENT.

DRIVER. See LIVERY, Keeper; NEGLIGENCE.

DROIT. F. A right; law abstractly considered.

Opposed to lot; law in the concrete sense. Equivalent to jus in the Roman law. See MONSTRANS.

Autre droit. Another's right. En autre droit. In another's right. Applied to an administrator, executor, guardian, prochein ami, or other representative of another's rights or interest.[4]

Droit civil. A private right independent of citizenship.

Droit-droit. A right upon a right; a double right: rights of possession and of property joined—necessary to a complete title to land. A jus duplicatum.[5]

Droit international. International law.

Droit maritime. Maritime law.

Droit of admiralty. In English law, applied to a ship of the enemy taken by an uncommissioned subject; and to a vessel seized in a port, on the breaking out of war. Also spoken of as an admiralty droit.[6]

Droitural. Used of an action upon a writ of right, as distinguished from a possessory action, upon the fact of, or right to, possession merely.

DRUGGIST. In popular acceptation, one who deals in medicines, or in the materials used in the preparation of medicines—in its largest signification.[1]

Properly, one whose occupation is to buy and sell drugs, without compounding or preparation. More restricted, therefore, than "apothecary,"[2] q. v.

Drugs. Substances used in compounding medicines, in dyeing, and in chemical operations.

"Drugs and medicines," in an insurance policy, includes saltpeter.[3] Whether benzine is a drug is a question of fact.[4] See LIQUOR; MEDICINE; OIL.

Adulterating drugs is a misdemeanor, in most of the States. In some States, competency to compound drugs must be evidenced by a certificate from a board of examiners, or from a reputable school of pharmacy.

The care required of a druggist is proportioned to the danger involved. Actual negligence must be shown before he can be made liable for the consequences of a mistake.[5]

Where a druggist informs a customer that a preparation is poisonous, and correctly instructs him as to the quantity he may take, and the purchaser dies from an overdose taken in disregard of the directions, the druggist is not liable for a failure to label the parcel "poison," as required by a statute.[6]

Nor is he liable when he has carefully compounded a physician's prescription.[7]

Criminal negligence, followed by fatal results, may convict him of involuntary manslaughter, q. v.[8] See POLICE, 2.

DRUMMER. A commercial agent who travels for a wholesale merchant taking orders for goods to be shipped to retail dealers.[9]

An agent, such as is usually denominated a "drummer" or "commercial traveler," who simply exhibits samples of goods kept for sale by his principal, and

[1] Soule v. San Francisco Gas Light Co., 54 Cal. 241 (1880).

[2] The Nithsdale, 15 Up. Can. Law J. 269 (1879).

[3] Watson v. Knowles, 13 R. I. 641 (1882).

[4] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 179.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 199.

[6] See 13 Ves. 71; 3 Bos. & P. 191; 6 Wheat. 264; 8 Cranch, 110.

[1] [Mills v. Perkins, 120 Mass. 42 (1876), Ames, J.

[2] State v. Holmes, 28 La. An. 767 (1876): Webster. Hainline v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 352 (1877); 77 Mo. 128.

[3] Collins v. Farmville Ins. Co., 79 N. C. 281 (1878): Webster.

[4] Carrigan v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 496 (1881).

[5] Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 582 (1882), cases; 16 Ark. 308; 32 Conn. 75; 61 Ga. 505; 13 B. Mon. 219; 15 La. An. 448; 64 Me. 120; 20 Md. 297; 106 Mass. 143; 6 N. Y. 397; 51 id. 746; L. R., 5 Exch. 1.

[6] Wohlfahrt v. Beckert, 92 N. Y. 490, 494 (1883).

[7] Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 505 (1878).

[8] Tessymond's Case, 1 Lewin, 169 (1826).

[9] [Singleton v. Fritsch, 4 Lea, 96 (1879); Montana v. Farnsworth, 5 Monta. 308 (1885); 34 Ark. 557.

takes orders for such goods afterward to be delivered by the principal to the purchasers, payment therefor to be made to the principal, is neither a peddler nor a merchant; nor will a single sale and delivery of goods by such agent out of his samples or other lot of goods constitute him a peddler or merchant.[1] See further COMMERCE, page 199, col. 2; PEDDLER.

In common language a drummer sells goods,— by sample, by procuring orders; and the dealer sells by him as his agent. While in such cases the sale is usually consummated by a delivery at the vendor's place of business to a common carrier, and, perhaps, in another State, a legislature may say that the acts done by the drummer shall of themselves constitute a sale; as, in a statute forbidding sales of liquors by samples or by soliciting orders without first taking out a license.[2]

Article 4665, of the Revised Statutes of Texas, is unconstitutional as to a citizen of another State selling goods by sample, and having no goods in the State.[3]

DRUNKENNESS. The result of excessive drinking of intoxicating liquors; ebriety, inebriation, intoxication; the state which follows from taking into the body, by swallowing or drinking, excessive quantities of such liquors.[4]

Drunk. So far under the influence of intoxicating liquor that the passions are visibly affected or the judgment impaired.[5]

Drunkard. One whose habit is to get drunk, whose ebriety has become habitual. "Drunkard," "common drunkard" and "habitual drunkard," mean the same.[6]

While "common" imports frequency, the law does not specify the number of instances in a given time.[7]

It is impossible to lay down a rule as to when a man shall be deemed an "habitual drunkard." Occasional acts of drunkenness do not make him such: it is not necessary that he be continually intoxicated. He may become intoxicated and yet remain sober for weeks together. The test is, Has he a fixed habit of drunkenness? Is he habituated to intemperance when opportunity offers?[8]

"Habitual" imports formed or acquired by habit; customary; usual; accustomed to intemperance whenever opportunity offers.[9]

An "habitual drunkard" is a person who by frequent repetition has acquired an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated.[1]

The proceeding to determine whether a person is an habitual drunkard, and the legal consequences, are substantially the same as in a case of lunacy, q. v.

1. In civil law. A contract made by one too drunk to understand the consequence of his act is voidable, except when for necessaries or for goods kept after he becomes sober.[2]

If, without fault of his, he is unable to restore the consideration, provision for its repayment may be made in the final decree.[3]

Before a court of equity will grant relief the drunkenness must have been so excessive as to utterly deprive the complainant of the use of his reason. In that condition there can be no serious, deliberate consent.[4]

Total drunkenness in the maker of a note, known to the payee, avoids it as to him. But this defense cannot be set up against the claim of an innocent holder for value. . . A drunken man is responsible to an innocent person for an act done while drunk: he voluntarily produces his disability.[5]

2. In criminal law. "A drunkard," says Lord Coke, "who is voluntarius dæmon, hath no privilege thereby; but what hurt or ill soever he doeth, his drunkenness doth aggravate it."[6]

No other rule would be safe for society.[7]

At common law, as a rule, voluntary intoxication affords no excuse, justification, or extenuation of a crime committed under its influence. But when a statute establishing different degrees of murder requires deliberate premeditation in order to constitute murder in the first degree, the question whether the accused is in such a state of mind, by reason of drunkenness or otherwise, as to be capable of deliberate premeditation, necessarily becomes a material subject for consideration by the jury.[8]

See INTEMPERATE; INTOXICATION; INSANITY; LIQUOR; OPTION, Local; PROHIBITION, 2.

---

[1] City of Kansas v. Collins, 34 Kan. 436–37 (1885), citing twenty-five cases.

[2] State v. Ascher, 54 Conn. 306 (1886).

[3] Exp. Stockton, 33 F. R. 95 (1887).

[4] [Commonwealth v. Whitney, 11 Cush. 479 (1853), Merrick, J.

[5] State v. Pierce, 65 Iowa, 85 (1886); 64 id. 88 (1884).

[6] Commonwealth v. Whitney, 5 Gray, 86 (1855), Thomas, J.

[7] Commonwealth v. McNamee, 112 Mass. 286 (1873).

[8] Ludwick v. Commonwealth, 18 Pa. 174 (1851), Rogers, J.

[9] Trigg v. State, 49 Tex. 676 (1878), Roberts, C. J.

[1] Murphy v. People, 90 Ill. 60 (1878), Per Curiam. See also Mahone v. Mahone, 19 Cal. 629 (1872); Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53 Iowa, 512 (1880); Walton v. Walton, 34 Kan. 198 (1885), cases; Richards v. Richards, 19 Bradw. 468 (1886), cases.

[2] Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 379–89 (1876), cases; 69 Iowa, 82; 2 Kent, 452; 1 Pars. Contr. 383.

[3] Thackrah v. Haas, 119 U. S. 499, 502 (1886); 1 Wash., Va., 164; 64 N. Y. 200.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 230–31; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. § 949.

[5] State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. 207–9 (1871); McSparran v. Neeley, 91 id. 24 (1879); Gore v. Gibson, 13 M. & W. *626 (1845); Bush v. Breinig, 113 Pa. 316 (1886); 26 Am Law Reg. 40–41 (1887), cases; 1 Ames, Cas. Bills & N. 558; 18 Cent. Law J. 65–68 (1884), cases; 2 Kent, 451.

[6] 1 Coke, Inst. 247; 4 Bl. Com. 25; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 165.

[7] United States v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 111 (1820); United States v. McGlue, 1 Curtis, 13 (1851).

[8] Hopt v. People, 104 U. S. 634–35 (1881), cases, Gray, J See also Jones v. Commonwealth, 75 Pa. 406 (1874); Tidwell v. State, 70 Ala. 46 (1881); Honesty v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 301 (1886); 24 Am. Law Reg. 507–11 (1876), cases; 27 id. 159–61 (1879), cases; 28 Am. Jur. 290; Bish

DRY. See EXCHANGE, 2; RENT; TRUST, 1.

DRY-DOCK. See DOCK, 2 (1).

DRY GOODS. See PERISHABLE; SAMPLE.

DUBITARE.[1] L. To doubt.

Dubitante. Doubting.

Affixed to the name of a judge, in a reported case, denotes that he questions the soundness of the decision.

Dubitatur. It is doubted.

Indicates that a proposition as sound law is open to question. Compare QUÆRE.

DUCES. See SUBPŒNA, Duces, etc.

DUE.[2] 1. Owed, or owing; payable; demandable. See DUTY.

Applied to debts, expresses the mere state of indebtment — is equivalent to "owed" or "owing;" and the fact that the debt has become payable.[3]

A debt payable now or in the future is a "debt due." "Debt" itself implies this. But the popular acceptation of "due" is, payable in present time.[4]

When not qualified by a time clause, means that the money or property is due at the time of executing the instrument.[5]

May import indebtedness without reference to the day of payment, or that that day has passed.[6]

May be used not in the sense of "payable," but as importing an existing obligation.[7]

In its largest sense, covers liabilities matured and unmatured.[8]

A debt which has yet to originate cannot properly be said to be a debt which is to become due.[9]

Due-bill. A written acknowledgment that a sum of money is due.

Not payable to order, nor transferable by indorsement.[10]

May be payable in specific property. When no time or place for payment is mentioned, before a suit to recover the amount can be maintained, a demand is necessary.[1]

In Colorado an ordinary due-bill has the character of a promissory note, whether it contains a promise to pay, or words of negotiability, or not.[2] See I O U.

Overdue; past-due. Time for paying gone by, yet not paid; matured and unpaid.

"Overdue" sometimes refers to a right of action against a drawer or indorser: a bill is not then overdue until presented and payment refused. Sometimes it is used in considering whether an indorser has been released by a failure of the holder to present the bill for payment, and to give the indorser notice of its dishonor within time. Sometimes it is applied to a bill which has come into the hands of an indorser so long after its issue as to charge him with notice of its dishonor, and thus subject it in his hands to the defenses which the drawer had against it in the hands of the assignor.[3]

"Past-due interest" means interest which has matured, and is collectible on demand. . . Money may be "owing" which is not "due." A man owes the money represented by his note; but the money is not due until the note matures.[4]

A note overdue, payable to bearer, passes, by delivery, the legal title subject to all equities between the original parties.[5] Indorsing such a note is equivalent to making a new note payable at sight.[6]

Underdue. Not yet payable; unmatured.

In the absence of proof, the law presumes that a note taken is underdue.[7]

See NEGOTIATE, 2; PAYMENT.

2. Required by circumstances; proper; executed by law; timely: as, due care or diligence, qq. v.

3. Regular; appropriate; usual; according to legal form, in legal manner, conformably to law: as, due course or process of law; due form, notice, service, return, qq. v.

The "due execution" of a writing relates to the manner and form of execution by a person competent under the law of the place.[8]

Duly. In due manner; regularly; legally.

In the proper way, regularly, according to law:[9] as, duly acknowledged, notified, served, sworn.

Cr. L. §§ 488–96; 1 Ben. & H. Ld. Cr. Cas. 113–24. Medical Jurisprudence of, 21 Am. Law Rev. 955–69 (1887), cases. Condoning, 26 Cent. Law J. 123 (1888), cases.

[1] Literally, to waver in mind, be of two minds: duo, two,— Müller, Science of Lang. 360.

[2] F. deu: devoir: L. debere, to owe.

[3] United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. *36 (1832), Story, Justice.

[4] Leggett v. Bank of Sing Sing, 25 Barb. 332 (1857); Same v. Same, 24 N. Y. 286 (1862); People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 525 (1869); Collins v. Janey, 3 Leigh, *391 (1831); 16 Moak, 708.

[5] Lee v. Balcom, 9 Col. 218 (1886), Beck, C. J.

[6] Scudder v. Coryell, 10 N. J. L. 345 (1829), Ewing, C. J.; Allen v. Patterson, 7 N. Y. 480 (1852); Bowen v. Slocum, 17 Wis. 190 (1863).

[7] Sand-Blast Co. v. Parsons, 54 Conn. 313 (1886).

[8] People v. Vail, 6 Abb. N. C. 210 (1879).

[9] Thomas v. Gibbons, 61 Iowa, 50 (1883).

See also 19 Pick. 381; 31 Mich. 215; 14 Barb. 11; 26 Tex. 59; Story, Bills, § 233, Prom. Notes, § 440.

[10] See Byles, Bills, *11, n. (t).

[1] Winder v. Walsh, 3 Col. 548 (1877).

[2] Lee v. Balcom, 9 Col. 218 (1886), Beck, C. J.

[3] La Due v. First Nat. Bank of Kasson, 31 Minn. 86 (1883), Mitchell, J.

[4] Coquard v. Bank of Kansas City, 12 Mo. Ap. 265 (1882).

[5] See Nat. Bank of Washington v. Texas, 20 Wall. 66 (1873).

[6] Colt v. Barnard, 18 Pick. 261 (1836); Morgan v. United States, 113 U. S. 499–500 (1885), cases.

[7] New Orleans, &c. Co. v. Montgomery, 95 U. S. 18 (1877).

[8] Cox v. Northwestern Stage Co., 1 Idaho, 376 (1871).

[9] Gibson v. People, 5 Hun, 543 (1875).

"Duly and legally appointed," in an indictment, may be sufficient without stating by whom appointed.[1]

"Duly assigned" may require a transfer in writing.[2]

"Duly convened" means regularly convened.[3]

"Duly presented" means presented according to the custom of merchants.[4]

"Duly recorded" means recorded in compliance with the requirement of law.[5]

4. Just, lawful, legal: as, due rights.[6]

Undue. Improper, wrongful, unlawful: as, undue concealment, influence, qq. v.

DUEL.[7] In ancient law, a fight between two persons for the trial of the truth in a doubtful case.[8]

Actually fighting with weapons in pursuance of an agreement.[9]

If either participant is killed, the offense is murder in the survivor, seconds, and spectators; otherwise, the offense is a misdemeanor.[10]

Under the constitutions of several States, as of Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, participation in a duel disqualifies from holding office.[11]

See AFFRAY; CHALLENGE, 1; COMBAT.

DULY. See DUE, 8.

DUM. L. While. Compare DURANTE.

Dum bene se gesserit. While he behaves well.

Dum fervet opus. While the affair is warm: while the transaction is fresh.

A party's own admission, whenever made, may be given in evidence against him; but the declaration of his agent binds him only when made during the continuance of the agency in regard to a transaction then depending et dum fervet opus.[12] See ADMISSION, 2.

Dum sola. While single, or unmarried.

DUMB. See IDIOT; WILL, 2; WITNESS.

A person who is dumb, uneducated in the use of signs, and merely able to assent or dissent to direct questions by a nod or shake of the head, may be a legal witness, but the jury should be instructed that, because it was not possible to cross-examine him, the weight of his testimony is reduced.[13]

[1] Commonwealth v. Chase, 127 Mass. 13 (1879).

[2] Ragland v. Wood, 71 Ala. 149 (1881); ib. 335; 139 Mass. 16.

[3] People v. Walker, 3 Barb. 305 (1856).

[4] Schofield v. Bayard, 3 Wend. 491 (1830).

[5] Dunning v. Coleman, 27 La. An. 48 (1875).

[6] Ryerson v. Boorman, 8 N. J. E. 705 (1849).

[7] It. duello: L. duellum, a fight between two — duo.

[8] [Jacob's Law Dict.

[9] [Herriott v. State, 1 McMul. 130 (S. Car., 1841).

[10] 4 Bl. Com. 199, 145; 2 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 310-15; 1 Arch. Cr. Pr. 926-39; 1 Russ. Cr. 443; 2 Chitty, Cr. L. 728, 848; 3 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 99-104.

[11] See Commonwealth v. Jones, 10 Bush, 725 (1874).

[12] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 113; Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 415 (1875); 66 Ga. 367.

[13] Quinn v. Holbert, 55 Vt. 298 (1883).

DUNGEON. An underground apartment in a prison, for the confinement of refractory convicts.

DUPLICATE.[1] The double of anything, an original repeated; a document the same as another; a transcript equivalent to the first or original writing; a counterpart: as, a duplicate bond, certificate, check or draft, land-warrant, receipt, will. See ORIGINAL, 2.

A document essentially the same as another.[2]

A document the same in all respects as some other document, from which it is indistinguishable in its essence and operation.[3]

"Duplicate," written across the face of a draft given to replace a lost draft of the same tenor, imports that the draft is to take the place of the original, that no new liability is created by it.[4]

Each duplicate writing is complete evidence of the intention of the parties. The deliberate destruction of one, as, of a duplicate will, creates a presumption that the other was also to be destroyed.[5] See EVIDENCE, Secondary.

Duplicate United States bonds will be issued, when the originals are defaced or destroyed.[6]

DUPLICITY.[7] Double pleading. Alleging two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense when one would be as effectual as both or all.[8]

Because it produces useless prolixity, and tends to confusion, and to the multiplication of issues, regarded as a fault in all pleading.[9]

Predicated of a plea which contains more than one matter. To avoid a multitude of issues in one dispute every plea is to be confined to a single point. "Duplicity begets confusion," that is, defeats the object of all pleading — a single issue upon the same matter.[10]

In criminal practice, joining two or more distinct offenses in one count.[11]

Not applicable to the union of several facts in one matter, nor to matters of explanation, nor where but one of the defenses is valid.

[1] L. duplicatus, two-fold: duplicare, to double.

[2] [Toms v. Cuming, 49 E. C. L. 94 (1845).

[3] Lewis v. Roberts, 103 E. C. L. 29 (1861), Erle, C. J.

[4] Benton v. Martin, 40 N. Y. 347 (1869).

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 74; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 558.

[6] R. S. § 3702.

[7] F. duplicité: L. duplicitatem, doubleness.

[8] [Gould, Plead. 389. Approved, — Sprouse v. Commonwealth, infra.

[9] [Sprouse v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 376 (1886), Lacy, J.

[10] 3 Bl. Com. 308, 311; 1 Chitty, Plead. 236; 10 Me. 53; 24 N. J. L. 344; 2 Johns. 465; 7 Cow. 458; 10 Vt. 353; 11 F. R. 238.

[11] Tucker v. State, 6 Tex. Ap. 253 (1879); State v. Gorham, 55 N. H. 168 (1875); 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 432.

May exist in any part of the pleadings. At common law was a fatal defect, reached by special demurrer; but not now so regarded: in the discretion of the court, tolerated for the furtherance of justice.[1]

See DISCLAIMER, 4; PLEADING; REPUGNANT.

DURANTE. L. During, while. Compare DUM.

Durante absentia. During absence. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Durante bene placito. During good pleasure. See BEHAVIOR.

Durante minore ætate. During minority. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Durante viduitate. During widowhood.

Durante vita. During life.

DURESS.[2] In its more extended sense, that degree of constraint or danger, either actually inflicted or threatened and impending, which is sufficient, in severity or in apprehension, to overcome the mind and will of a person of ordinary firmness.[3]

Actual violence is not necessary to constitute duress, even at common law, as understood in the parent country, because consent is the very essence of a contract, and, if there be compulsion, there is no actual consent, and moral compulsion, such as that produced by threats to take life or to inflict great bodily harm, as well as that produced by imprisonment, is everywhere regarded as sufficient, in law, to destroy free agency, without which there can be no contract, because, in that state of the case, there is no consent.

Text-writers divide the subject into duress per minas and duress of imprisonment. This classification was uniformly adopted in the early history of the common law, and is generally preserved in the decisions of the English courts.

Where there is an arrest for an improper purpose, without just cause, or where there is an arrest for a just cause but without lawful authority, or for a just cause but for an unlawful purpose, even though under proper process, it may be construed as "duress of imprisonment;" and if the person arrested executes a contract or pays money for his release, he may avoid the contract as one procured by duress, and recover the money in an action for money had and received.

"Duress per minas," as defined at common law, is where a party enters into a contract for fear of loss of life, loss of limb, of mayhem, or imprisonment. Many modern decisions of the courts of England still restrict the operation of the rule within those limits.

Those decisions deny that contracts procured by menace of a mere battery to the person, or of trespass to lands, or loss of goods, can be avoided on that account, and the reason assigned is that such threats are not of a nature to overcome the mind and will of a prudent man, because if such an injury is inflicted adequate redress may be obtained in a suit at law.

Cases to the same effect may be found in the reports of decisions in this country, and some of our text-writers have adopted the rule that it is only where the threats uttered excite fear of death, or of great bodily harm or unlawful imprisonment, that a contract, so procured, can be avoided, because, as such courts and authors say, the person threatened with slight injury to the person, or with loss of property, ought to have sufficient resolution to resist such a threat, and to rely upon the law for his remedy.

On the other hand there are many American decisions of high authority which adopt the more liberal rule that a contract procured by threats of battery to the person, or of the destruction of property, may be avoided on the ground of duress, because in any such case there is nothing but the form of a contract.

But all cases agree that a contract procured through fear of loss of life, produced by the threats of the other party, wants the essential element of consent, and may be avoided for duress.[1]

"Duress of imprisonment" is a compulsion by an illegal restraint of liberty. This will avoid an extorted bond. But if a man is lawfully imprisoned, and to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seals a bond or a deed, this is not by such duress.[2]

In the law of homicide, in self-defense, "duress of imprisonment" is where a man actually loses his liberty. "Duress per minas" is where the hardship is only threatened and impending, and is for fear of loss of life, for fear of mayhem, or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason — before a man may kill in self-defense. A fear of battery is no duress; neither is fear of one's house being burned, or of one's goods being taken away and destroyed; because for these a man may have satisfaction in damages,

[1] See 8 Ark. 378; 8 Ind. 96; 32 Mass. 104; 33 Mo. 185; 38 N. H. 415.

[2] Du'-ress. Mid. Eng. duresse: F. duresce: L. duritia, harshness; durus, severe.

[3] Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 214-16 (1868), cases, Clifford, J. Quoted or cited, Baker v. Morton, 12 id. 157 (1870); French v. Shoemaker, 14 id. 332 (1871); United States v. Huckabee, 16 id. 431-32 (1872). See also 26 Alb. Law J. 494-96 (1882), cases; 1 Chitty, Contr., 11 Am. ed., 269-73; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 301-2; 1 Whart. Contr. Pref. iv; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 981, 1099; 1 Story, Eq. § 239; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. § 950, cases.

[1] Brown v. Pierce, ante.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 136; Heckman v. Swartz, 64 Wis. 55-62 (1885); 59 Pa. 444.

but no suitable atonement can be made for loss of life or limb.[1]

"Duress of goods" is by unlawfully seizing or withholding property, or threatening to do so, till some demand be acceded to.

The payment of money by the owner of goods in order to redeem them from the hands of a person who unlawfully withholds them and demands such money, may be treated as a compulsory payment, so that the amount is recoverable, as having been obtained by oppressive means. The owner of the goods may have so urgent occasion for them that the ordinary action would afford imperfect redress.[2]

Duress exists where one, by the unlawful act of another, is induced to make a contract or to perform some act under circumstances which deprive him of the exercise of free will. . . "Duress of the person" is by imprisonment, by threats, or by an exhibition of force which apparently cannot be resisted. . . "Duress of goods" may exist when one is compelled to submit to an illegal exaction in order to obtain them from one who has them in possession but refuses to surrender them unless the exaction is submitted to.[3]

To constitute coercion or duress sufficient to make a payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or believed to be possessed, by the party exacting or receiving the payment over the person or property of another, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by making the payment.[4]

Excessive charges, involuntarily paid to railroad companies refusing to carry or deliver goods, have been recovered on the ground of distress.[5]

Mere vexation and annoyance do not constitute such duress as will justify setting aside a deed, unless insanity ensued and existed at the time of execution.[6]

Threats of lawful prosecution, resorted to to overcome the will through intimidation, will avoid a contract thereby obtained.[7]

Regard is had to age, sex, and condition. If the threats are such as tend to deprive a particular person of his freedom of will he will be relieved from liability, although the same threats would not produce a like effect on a firm and courageous man.[8]

Where there is no arrest made nor force used, simply threats uttered, the question as to the duress by which a promise is alleged to have been obtained is ordinarily one of fact. It must be shown that the threats constrained the will of the promisor.[1]

See COERCION; CONSENT; INFLUENCE; PAYMENT, Compulsory.

DURING. See DUM; DURANTE; FOR.

DUTCH. See AUCTION.

DUTY. 1. What one ought or ought not to do; legal obligation. See DUE.

"Duty" and "right" are correlative terms. Such rights as are due from the citizen are called "civil duties." All social duties are of a relative nature — due from one man to another.[2]

When a right is invaded a duty is violated. A "public duty" is one owing to the community; a "private duty" is an obligation to be observed toward one or more individuals. In an action for non-fulfillment, it is essential to show: the duty, a breach thereof, and the resulting damage. . . When the law "casts a duty" upon one, he is answerable for any damage consequent upon non-performance.[3]

Laws designed to enforce moral and social duties stand on the best and broadest basis. Though it is not every such duty the neglect of which is the ground of an action. For there are what are called in the civil law duties of "imperfect obligation," for the enforcing of which no action lies.[4]

See ASSUMPSIT; CARE; CHARGE; DEMAND; KNOWLEDGE, 1; NEGLIGENCE; OBLIGATION, 1; POWER, 1; PRESUMPTION; RIGHT; UNDERTAKING.

2. An indirect tax, imposed on the importation, exportation, or consumption of goods.[5]

A "custom" is a duty imposed upon imports or exports.[6]

Duties. Things due and recoverable by law. The term, in its widest signification, is hardly less comprehensive than "taxes;" in its most restricted meaning, is applied to "customs," and in that sense is nearly the synonym of "imposts."[6]

Whence dutiable, and non-dutiable.

Ad valorem duty. A sum ascertained by a percentage on the value of the article — not necessarily the actual value. Specific duty. A fixed sum payable upon an article by name.[7]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 131; 4 id. 30; United States v. Haskell, 4 Wash. 406 (1823).

[2] Chitty, Contr. 625. See also White v. Heylman, 34 Pa. 144 (1859); Miller v. Miller, 68 id. 493 (1871); Motz v. Mitchell, 91 id. 117 (1879); Block v. United States, 8 Ct. Cl. 461 (1872); 35 Tex. 77; 59 id. 478; 101 U. S. 470.

[3] Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 574 (1881), Cooley, J.

[4] Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 213 (1877), cases, Field, Justice.

[5] See Garton v. Bristol, &c. R. Co., 28 L. J. Exch. 169 (1859).

[6] Brower v. Collander, 105 Ill. 100 (1882).

[7] Haynes v. Rudd, 30 Hun, 239 (1883); 94 Pa. 347; 31 id. 73.

[8] Jordan v. Elliott, 12 W. N. C. 56, 59 (1882). See generally 24 Cent. Law J. 75 (1887), cases.

[1] Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 226 (1885), cases; Fisher v. Bishop, 36 Hun, 114 (1885), cases. As a defense in civil actions, see 9 Va. Law J. 705-17 (1885), cases.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 123. To whom due, 21 Cent. Law J. 382 (1885), cases.

[3] See Broom, Com. Law, 109, 651 c, 655, 670-80.

[4] Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 63 (1789), Kenyon, C. J.

[5] Cooley, Taxation, 3.

[6] Tomlins, Law Dict.; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. 445 (1868); Hylton v. United States, 3 Dall. *175 (1796); 1 Story, Const. § 952.

[7] See United States v. Clement, 1 Crabbe, 512 (1843); 18 F. R. 394.

Laws regulating the payment of duties are for practical application to commercial operations, and to be understood in a commercial sense. It is to be presumed that Congress intended them to be so understood.[1]

The commercial will prevail over the ordinary meaning of words, where the intent is apparent.[2]

If an article is found not enumerated in the tariff laws, the first inquiry is whether it bears a similitude in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated as chargeable with duty. If it does, and the similitude is substantial, it is to be deemed the same. Though not specifically enumerated, it is provided for under the article it most resembles. If nothing is found to which it bears the requisite similitude, a duty will be assessed at the highest rates chargeable on any of its component materials. Any other construction would leave the law open to evasion.[3] See CUTLERY.

The common-law right of action to recover duties illegally collected is taken away by the statutory remedy. The time for commencing the action is within ninety days after an adverse decision by the secretary of the treasury on appeal, but if he fails to render a decision within ninety days the importer may begin suit at once, or await the decision and sue within ninety days thereafter.[4]

The plaintiff, within thirty days after notice of the appearance of the defendant, must serve a bill of the particulars of his demand, giving, among other items, the date of the appeal, and of the decision of the secretary. This requirement makes it unnecessary to state the same facts in the declaration.[5]

No recovery can be had for duties paid after the importer has received the goods, although paid under protest.[6]

When a reliquidation of duties takes place its date is the final liquidation for the purpose of protest.

A departmental regulation which has been acquiesced in for many years is not to be disregarded without the most urgent reasons.[7]

See APPRAISE; COMMERCE; CUSTOMS; DRAWBACK; ENTRY, II, 2; EXCISE; IMPOST; NEGLIGENCE; NOSCITUR; PAYMENT, Involuntary; PROTEST, 1; REFUNDS; SMUGGLE.

DWELLING. A person has his dwelling where he resides permanently, or from which he has no present intention to remove. See ABODE; DOMICIL; RESIDE.

Dwelling-house. 1. A description of realty, as a dwelling-house, in a deed, may pass a house, the buildings belonging to it, its curtilage, garden, orchard, and the close on which it is built, with reasonable limitations according to the circumstances of the case.[1] See GRANT, 2; CURTILAGE.

Includes such buildings and attachments as are for the ordinary purposes of a house.[2]

2. In a statute against pulling down dwelling-houses to alter a highway, does not include a billiard saloon.[3]

3. In a homestead exemption law, may not embrace a building adapted to purposes of business, as, a saloon, a store, or a public hall.[4]

4. In the New York statute defining arson, includes any edifice usually occupied by persons lodging therein at night; not, a warehouse, barn, shed, or other out-house, unless part of a dwelling-house.[5] See ARSON.

5. In the law of burglary, includes whatever is within the curtilage, even if not inclosed with the dwelling, if used with it for domestic purposes,— all buildings the forcible breaking of which for felonious purposes during the hours of rest would naturally cause alarm, distress and danger.[6]

Must be a habitation of man, and usually occupied by some person lodging in it at night.[7]

Not such habitation is an underground cellar, used for storing ice and beer, with no internal door communicating with the living-rooms in the upper stories, and not under the control of any occupant of the building.[8]

Whether a building is a dwelling-house depends upon the use made of it.[9] See BURGLARY.

Dwelling-place. Some permanent place of abode or residence, with intention to remain there.[10]

See HOUSE; RESIDENCE; POLICE, 3; UTERE, Sic utere, etc.

DYEING. See PROCESS, 2.

DYING. See DEATH; DECLARATION, 1, Dying.

[1] United States v. Casks of Sugar, 8 Pet. 279 (1834); 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 359.

[2] Newman v. Arthur, 109 U. S. 137 (1883); Arthur v. Morrison, 96 id. 110 (1877), cases; Worthington v. Abbott, 124 id. 434 (1888).

[3] Arthur v. Fox, 108 U. S. 128 (1883), Waite, C. J.; R. S. § 2499; Herrman v. Arthur, 127 id. 363 (1888).

[4] Arnson v. Murphy, 109 U. S. 238 (1883); Snyder v. Marks, ib. 193–4 (1883), cases.

[5] Beard v. Porter, 124 U. S. 437 (1888), cases.

[6] Porter v. Beard, 124 U. S. 429 (1888), cases; R. S. § 2011.

[7] Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 613 (1888), cases.

[1] Marston v. Stickney, 58 N. H. 610 (1879), cases.

[2] Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co., 20 N. Y. 55 (1859).

[3] State v. Troth, 34 N. J. L. 377 (1871); 36 id. 494.

[4] Re Lammer, 14 Bankr. Reg. 460 (1876).

[5] See 2 N. Y. Rev. St. 657, §§ 9, 10; 20 Conn. 245; 33 Me. 30; 6 Mich. 142; 13 Gratt. 763.

[6] Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 219 (1883), Cooley, J.

[7] Scott v. State, 62 Miss. 782 (1885).

[8] State v. Clark, 89 Mo. 429–30 (1886).

[9] Davis v. State, 38 Ohio St. 506 (1882). See also 8 Cranch, C. C. 21; 68 N. C. 207; 72 id. 598; 3 S. & R. 199; 16 Gratt. 543; 13 Bost. L. R. 157.

[10] Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 300 (1841); 2 id. 411; 49 N. H. 552.

E.

E. 1. As an abbreviation, ordinarily denotes Easter (term), eastern (district), ecclesiastical, Edward (king), English, equity, or exchequer.

2. In e. g., an abbreviation of the first word of the Latin phrase, exempli gratia, for (in favor of, for the sake of) an example, for instance.

3. The form of the Latin preposition, ex, from, before a consonant sound. See EX, 1.

E contra. From the opposite side; on the contrary.

E converso. On the other hand; conversely.

EACH. Every one of the two or more composing the whole.

Foreign express companies being exempted, in Kentucky, from local taxation by paying a State tax, a provision in the charter of a city authorizing it to tax "each" express company was held not to apply to foreign companies.[1]

A, a testator, gave C and T "two thousand dollars each." The legatees were brother and sister, not related to the testator. C died before A. Held, that the legacy was of two thousand dollars to each legatee individually, and not of four thousand dollars to a class, and that the legacy to C lapsed.[2]

Compare A, 4; ALL; ANY; EVERY.

EAGLE. See COIN.

EAR. See MARK, 1 (2); MAYHEM.

EARL. See SHERIFF.

EARNEST.[3] A thing delivered to a vendor in assurance of a serious purpose to complete the contract of sale.

Giving earnest is one of the alternatives prescribed by the original Statute of Frauds (q. v.) for the validity of a contract for a sale of personalty of the value of £10 or more.[4]

If the purchaser accepts and pays for the goods the earnest-money counts as part of the price; if not, the amount is forfeited.

The idea was taken from the civil law. A deposit with a third person, to be forfeited if the buyer does not complete his purchase, is not earnest.[5]

Whatever may have been thought by old writers respecting the effect, in the transmission of property, of giving and receiving earnest money, it is now considered of no importance, or of the smallest importance.[6]

[1] Adams Express Co. v. Lexington, 83 Ky. 660 (1886).

[2] Claflin v. Tilton, 141 Mass. 343 (1886).

[3] Mid. Eng. ernes, a pledge.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 448; 2 Kent, 389.

[5] Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 55 (1871), cases: Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 105, § 5; Benj. Sales, 2 ed., 260.

[6] The Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 195 (1874), Strong, Justice.

EARNINGS. Money or property gained by labor or services: as, the earnings of a wife, minor, servant, insolvent debtor, corporation.

In a statute of exemptions, the gains of the debtor derived from his services or labor without the aid of capital.[1]

May embrace more than "wages," q. v. May apply to compensation for services rendered which involve more than mere labor, and may include expenditures;[2] or, compensation for expenditures or materials furnished, together with work done or services rendered; but will not include rents, which require no personal service by the lessor.[3]

Gross earnings; net earnings. As a general proposition, the net earnings of a railroad company are the excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures defrayed in producing them, aside from, and exclusive of, the expenditure of capital laid out in constructing and equipping the works themselves.[4] See MORTGAGE, Railroad.

"Net earnings" is often the equivalent of surplus or net profits; and may refer to the surplus for a limited period.[5]

"Gross earnings" and "receipts," in the lease of a railroad, will be taken to mean the same thing, unless other parts of the agreement require a different construction.[6] See TAX, 2.

Separate earnings. Refers to the ownership in married women of the proceeds of their own labor or services.

At common law these belonged to the husband.[7]

In some States, upon petition filed, any married woman may have a decree of court investing her with the absolute right of property in her earnings, wholly free from all claims of her husband or of his creditors, the same as if she were a single woman.

Any married woman in Pennsylvania, with or without cause, may avail herself of the act of 1872; while, to entitle her to become a feme-sole trader, she must bring herself within the act of 1718 or the act of 1855. The act of 1872, by securing her the earnings of her business, impliedly authorizes her to engage in business with consequent liability for her contracts.[8] See FEME-SOLE, Trader; HUSBAND.

[1] Brown v. Hebard, 20 Wis. 330 (1866).

[2] Jenks v. Dyer, 102 Mass. 236 (1869); Somers v. Kelliher, 115 id. 167 (1874): Statute, 1865, c. 43, § 2.

[3] Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 95 (1876).

[4] Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 99 U. S. 420 (1878), Bradley, J. See also St. John v. Erie R. Co., 22 Wall. 148 (1874); 10 Blatch. 271; 108 U. S. 279; 30 Minn. 312.

[5] Cotting v. New York & New England R. Co., 54 Conn. 168 (1886).

[6] Cincinnati, &c. R. Co. v. Indiana, &c. R. Co., 44 Ohio St. 315-16 (1886).

[7] Carter v. Worthington, 82 Ala. 336 (1886).

[8] Bovard v. Kettering, 101 Pa. 183 (1882). Compare Act June 3, 1887: P. L. 332.

Surplus earnings. An amount owned (by a company) over and above capital and actual liabilities.[1]

EARTH. Soil of all kinds, including gravel, clay, loam, and the like, in distinction from the firm rock.[2]

"Hard pan" is a "hard stratum of earth." Earth, then, includes hard-pan.[3] See ALLUVION; LAND; MINERAL.

EASEMENT.[3] A service or convenience which one neighbor has of another by charter or prescription, without profit.[4]

The right which one man has to use the land of another for a specific purpose.[5]

A liberty, privilege, or advantage in land, without profit, distinct from an ownership in the soil.[6]

Easements include all those privileges which the public, or the owner of neighboring lands or tenements, has in the lands of another, and by which the "servient owner," upon whom the burden of the privilege is imposed, is obliged to suffer, or not to do something, on his own land, for the advantage of the public, or for the "dominant owner" to whom the privilege belongs.[7]

The essential qualities of easements are: they are incorporeal; they are imposed upon corporeal property; they confer no right to participation in profits arising from such property; there must be two distinct tenements, the dominant, to which the right belongs, and the servient, upon which the obligation rests.[8]

Easements restrict the enjoyment of natural rights in land, light, air, and water. Attaching to land as incidents or appurtenances, are, among others: the rights of pasture, of way, of taking water, wood, minerals or other product of the soil, of receiving air, light, or heat, of receiving or discharging water, of support to buildings, of carrying on an offensive trade.

An easement is not a tenancy.[9]

Affirmative easement. Such right in another's land as authorizes acts actually injurious to the land; as, a right of way. Negative easement. Such right as is, in its exercise, consequentially injurious; as, forbidding a thing to be done, like that of obstructing light.[1]

Apparent or continuous easement. Depends upon some artificial structure upon, or natural formation of, the servient tenement, obvious and permanent, which constitutes the easement or is the means of enjoying it; as, the bed of a running stream, an overhanging roof. Non-apparent or non-continuous easement. Has no means specially constructed or appropriated to its enjoyment, and is enjoyed at intervals, leaving between these intervals no visible sign of its existence; as, a right of way.[2] See CONTINUOUS, Non-continuous.

Appendant or appurtenant easement. When the grant of the easement is made with reference to other land whereon, or in connection wherewith, it is to be used or enjoyed.

Such easement is appendant or appurtenant to the dominant estate, and passes with it as an incident.

A right in or upon the land of another, to be used by the grantee generally, and not in connection with or dependent upon any other land or estate, is a right in gross,— in bulk. It belongs to, and dies with, the person.[3]

Easement of necessity. A privilege without which the dominant owner could not carry on his trade or enjoy some other property right. Easement of convenience. Enables such owner to prosecute his business or to enjoy some right in real property with increase of facilities or comfort.

Private easement. Exists in favor of one or more individuals. Public easement. Exists in favor of the people generally.

Easements originate in grant, express or implied. They do not change with the persons. Disturbances may be remedied by action on the case, by injunction, or by abatement. They are extinguished by release, merger, necessity, end of prescription, cesser of use for twenty years, renunciation or abandonment shown by decisive acts.[4]

When an easement has once been acquired, mere non-user will not defeat the right; there must be an

[1] People v. Commissioners, 76 N. Y. 74 (1879). See 34 N. J. L. 482.

[2] Dickinson v. Poughkeepsie, 75 N. Y. 76 (1878); Webster.

[3] F. aise, ease, relief: assistance, accommodation, convenience.

[4] Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 433 (1839): Jacob.

[5] Jackson v. Trullinger, 9 Oreg. 397 (1881), Lord, C. J.

[6] Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 165 (1864), Bigelow, C. J. See also 19 Ark. 33; 74 Ill. 185; 24 Iowa, 61; 40 id. 456; 24 Mich. 284; 51 N. H. 330; 70 N. Y. 421; 54 Pa. 369; 44 Tex. 267; 27 Gratt. 87; 109 U. S. 255.

[7] 3 Kent, 419.

[8] Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 421 (1877). See Parsons v. Johnson, 68 id. 65-66 (1877); 70 id. 447-48; Tardy v. Creasy, 81 Va. 556-57 (1886), cases.

[9] Swift v. Goodrich, 70 Cal. 106 (1886).

[1] 2 Washb. R. P. 26, 56-60, 82-85, 453-56; 70 N. Y. 448.

[2] Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. E. 262 (1867), Zabriskie, Ch.

[3] Salem Capital Flour Mills Co. v. Stayton Water-Ditch & Canal Co., 33 F. R. 154 (1887); Washb. Easem. 9, cases.

[4] See Steere v. Tiffany, 13 R. I. 570 (1882); Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 305 (1882); Washb., Easements.

adverse use by the servient estate for a period sufficient to create a prescriptive right.[1]

See AIR; LICENSE, 1; LIGHT; NUISANCE; PROFITS, A prendre; SERVITUDE, 2; SUPPORT, 2; USE, 1, Non-user; WALL; WATER; WAY.

EASTER. See TERM, 4.

EATING-HOUSE. Compare RESTAURANT; SALOON.

Any place where food or refreshments of any kind, not including spirits, wine, ale, beer, or any other malt liquors, are provided for casual visitors, and sold for consumption therein.[2]

A market-stall where meals are furnished to the public is not an eating-house.[3]

EAVES-DROPPING. The nuisance of hanging about the dwelling-house of another, hearing tattle, and repeating it to the disturbance of the neighborhood.[4]

Eaves-droppers. Such as listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales.[5]

Eaves-dropping is a common nuisance, indictable at common law, and punishable by fine and by having to furnish sureties for good behavior.[6]

Consists in privily listening, not in looking or peeping. It is a good defense that the act was authorized by the husband of the prosecutrix.[6]

EBB AND FLOW. See NAVIGABLE.

ECCENTRICITY. See INSANITY.

ECCLESIASTICAL. See CHURCH; CORPORATION.

ECLECTIC. See MEDICINE.

ECONOMITES. See COMMUNITY, 8.

ECONOMY, PUBLIC. See POLICE, 2.

EDITOR. Formerly included not only the person who wrote or selected articles for publication, but also the person who published the paper and put it into circulation. Now, the business of editor is separated from that of publisher and printer.[7]

See LIBERTY, 1, Of the press; NEWSPAPER.

EDUCATION. Includes proper moral, as well as intellectual and physical, instruction.[8]

May be particularly directed to the mental, the moral, or the physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense relates to them all.[1]

An education acquired through the medium of the English language is an "English education." It is the language employed as the medium of instruction that gives distinctive character to the education, whether English or German, and not the branches studied. . . . A "common school education" begins with the rudiments of an education, whatever else it may be made to embrace.[2]

Parents owe to their children the duty of giving them an education suitable to their station in life. Yet the municipal laws of most countries do not constrain parents to bestow such education.[3]

"All persons . . . having children, and all the Guardians or Trustees of Orphans, shall cause such to be instructed in reading and writing; under a penalty of five pounds for each child having capacity in body and understanding."[4]

See CHARITY, 2; SCHOOL.

-EE. See OR, 1.

EFFACE. See ALTER, 2; CANCEL.

EFFECT. 1. That which is produced; result of a cause. See CAUSE, 1.

2. Letters-patent will not be granted for a mere effect; they may be for a new mode or application of machinery to produce an effect. See PATENT, 2.

3. The manner in which a contract, instrument, or law will operate, as ascertained by construction. See TENOR.

"Take effect," "be in force," and "go into operation" are interchangeable.[5]

4. To prosecute with effect: with due diligence to a finality. See further PROSECUTE.

Effected. A condition in a policy of insurance that "every person insuring in this company must give notice . . . of any other insurance effected in his behalf on said property," applies to all other insurance, whether taken out before or after the execution of the policy in question.[6]

EFFECTS. A word of extensive import, frequently used in wills as a synonym for personal estate. In Hogan v. Jackson, 1 Cowp. 304 (1774), Lord Mansfield considered it synonymous with "worldly substance," which means whatever can be turned to value, and therefore that "real and personal effects" means all a man's property.

[1] Curran v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 632 (1886), cases.

[2] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 118.

[3] State v. Hall, 73 N. C. 254 (1875).

[4] State v. Pennington, 3 Head, 300 (Tenn., 1859): 2 Bish. Cr. L. 274.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 168; 1 Hawk. P. C. 132; 1 Russ. Cr. 302.

[6] Commonwealth v. Lovett, 4 Clark, 5 (Pa., 1831): 8 Hax. Pa. Reg. 305.

[7] Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 721 (1877), Field, J.

[8] Rouhs v. Backer, 6 Heisk. 400 (1871); Tenn. Code, § 2621.

[1] Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 146 (1887), Knowlton, J.

[2] Powell v. Board of Education, 97 Ill. 375 (1881).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 450.

[4] Laws of Prov. of Penn., Ch. CXII (1682): Linn, 161.

[5] Maize v. State, 4 Ind. 348 (1853).

[6] Warwick v. Monmouth County Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 44 N. J. L. 83 (1882).

In admiralty, includes ships.[1]

In a will, may include any personalty whatever, and even realty.[2]

Construed to include land where it can be collected from the will that such was the testator's intention.[3]

Used indefinitely in a will, but, in connection with something particular and certain, is limited by association to other things of a like kind. From the subject-matter, intention of something else may be implied; and that may be larger or less.[4]

EFFIGY. See LIBEL, 5.

EFFLUX.[5] In a lease, the ending of the contract period in the regular course of events, as distinct from an earlier termination by a subsequent agreement or by some unexpected event. "Effluxion" was formerly in use.

EGRESS. See INGRESS.

EI INCUMBIT. See PROBATIO.

EIGHT-HOUR RULE. See SERVICE, 1.

EIGN, EIGNE, or EISNE. Eldest, or first-born. A corruption of the French aîné, aisné.

Bastard eigne. A child born before the marriage of its parents. Opposed, mulier puisné: a legitimate child.[6]

EITHER. One or the other of several things; but, sometimes, one and the other.[7] See OR, 2.

May be used, as in a statute, in the sense of "any."[8]

EJECT. To put out or off; to dispossess, evict, oust. See EJECTIO.

Casual ejector. He who ousted the rightful lessee by making a formal entry in order to test the right to possession in court.[9] See EJECTMENT.

EJECTIO.[10] L. Dispossession; ouster.

Ejectione custodiæ. By ejectment of ward. A writ by which a guardian recovered possession of the land or person of his ward.

Ejectione firmæ. For ejectment of "farm," q. v. A remedy where the lessee of a term of years was deprived of possession.

The original of the later and modern action of ejectment,[1] q. v.

EJECTMENT. An action to recover possession of realty, with damages for the wrongful detention. See EJECTIO.

Originally devised for a lessee ousted of his term of years, and who, having but a chattel interest, could not support a real action for recovery of possession. In effect, the action was for the trespass; and the remedy was in damages for the dispossession. Later, it was decided that the lessee could also recover his term. This brought the action into general use; and by the formalities of lease, entry, and ouster (which see below), the action was converted into a method of trying, collaterally, the title of the lessor. Then, as the title was never formally and directly in issue, but the trespass for the expulsion only, the verdict was not pleadable in bar of another trespass. Thus it came that a verdict and judgment were conclusive only as regarded personalty. Afterward, when the fictions were abolished, the idea of a difference as between realty and personalty lingered in many States, a single verdict and judgment was not considered conclusive, and provision was made by statute for a second trial. Where no such provision exists a former action may be a bar.[2]

In the original action the plaintiff had to prove a lease from the person shown to have title, an entry under the lease, and an ouster by some third person. The modified action was brought by a fictitious person as lessee against another fictitious person (the casual ejector) alleged to have committed the ouster. Service was made upon the tenant in possession, with notice from the casual ejector to appear and defend. If the tenant failed to do this, judgment was given by default and the claimant put in possession. If he did appear, he was allowed to defend only by entering into the "consent rule," by which he confessed the fictitious lease, entry, and ouster to have been made, leaving only the title in question. See DOE.

These fictions were abolished in England by the common-law procedure act of 1852, and further changes were made by the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875. In some States the action has never been adopted; in others it has been materially modified by statute; in a few it still exists in its original form. The ancient form is also employed in the circuit courts of the United States sitting in States where the old form was observed when those courts were established.[3]

Ejectment is the remedy to recover a corporeal hereditament — an estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or for years; not, for rent, a right of way, or dower. The plaintiff, at the time of the institution of the suit, must have a right of entry and of possession

[1] The Alpena, 7 F. R. 862 (1881). Arthur v. Morgan, 112 U. S. 499 (1884). See also 1 Hill (S. C.), 155; 15 Ves. 507; 15 M. & W. 450; 16 East, 222.

[2] Smyth v. Smyth, 25 Moak, 477 (1878): 8 C. D. 561; 16 Moak, 710.

[3] Page v. Forest, 89 N. C. 449 (1883), cases.

[4] Ennis v. Smith (Kosciusko's Will), 14 How. 421 (1852), cases, Wayne, J. See also 2 Shars. Bl. Com. 384, n.; 3 Cranch, C. C. 306; 3 Minn. 389; 30 id. 195; 37 Tex. 19.

[5] L. ef(ex)-fluere, to flow out, go by.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 248.

[7] Chidester v. Springfield, &c. R. Co., 59 Ill. 89 (1871).

[8] Lafoy v. Campbell, 42 N. J. E. 37 (1886).

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 201.

[10] From ejicere, to put out: jacere, throw, cast.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 199.

[2] Sturdy v. Jackaway, 4 Wall. 175–76 (1866), cases, Grier, J.; Miles v. Caldwell, 2 id. 40 (1864); Blanchard v. Brown, 3 id. 248 (1865); Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 583 (1879); 3 Bl. Com. 199.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 198–207; 3 Steph. Com. 599–94, 617–30.

under legal title. In the Federal courts of law, the strict legal title prevails. The defendant must be in actual possession, and notice be given to the terre-tenant. The action is maintainable by a joint tenant or a tenant in common against a co-tenant who has dispossessed him. Recovery is upon the strength of the plaintiff's title, not upon the weakness of the defendant's,[1] with proof of injury equivalent to a dispossession. The plea of "not guilty" raises the general issue. The judgment is, that the plaintiff recover his term, or the possession of the land, and damages, which, as a rule, are nominal.[2] See Possession, Adverse; Profits, 1, Mesne.

Equitable ejectment. Ejectment at law, upon an equitable title; in effect, a bill in equity for the specific performance of a contract or obligation to convey land.

In Pennsylvania, whenever a court of equity will presume a trust to have arisen, compel its execution, or enforce an article of agreement, the courts of law by this means will administer the same relief.[3]

Ejectment bill. Generally, a bill in equity will not lie if it is in substance and effect an ejectment bill, and if the relief it seeks can be obtained by an action in ejectment.[4]

EJECTOR. See Eject.

EJUSDEM GENERIS. L. Of the same kind or nature; of the same class.

In the construction of statutes, contracts, and other instruments, where an enumeration of specific things is followed by a general word or phrase, the latter is held to refer to things of the same kind as those specified.[5] See General, 6; Inferior, 2; Other; Vehicle.

ELDEST. The eldest son is the first-born son — the primo-genitus.

The words "shall become the eldest son" of a person living at the date of a will cannot, without an explanatory context, be extended beyond the life-time of that person; they are connected with the heirship of, and right of succession to, a living man.[6]

ELECT.[7] To select, choose; also, selected, chosen, elected: as, a judge-elect, the President-elect.

[1] Nelson v. Triplett, 81 Va. 237 (1885), cases; Butrick v. Tilton, 141 Mass. 96 (1886); Mitchell v. Lines, 36 Kan. 380 (1887).

[2] See Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 102 (1871); Foster v. Mora, 98 U. S. 428 (1878); Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 id. 87 (1882); Holland v. Challen, 110 id. 19 (1883); 112 id. 535; 116 id. 692; 18 Fla. 52; 55 Vt. 569; 76 Va. 288; 107 U. S. 392; Bouvier.

[3] Deitzer v. Mishler, 37 Pa. 86 (1860); 7 id. 158; 14 id. 145, 249; 22 id. 225; 87 id. 286; 1 T. & H. § 36; 2 id. § 1838.

[4] Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568, 572 (1883).

[5] See United States v. Buffalo Park, 16 Blatch. 100 (1879); Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. 165 (1871); Narramore v. Clark, 63 N. H. 167 (1884), cases; Lynchburg v. Norfolk, &c. R. Co., 80 Va. 248-50 (1885), cases; 54 Conn. 467; 8 Pick. 14; 9 Metc. 258; 122 Mass. 575.

[6] Bathurst v. Errington, 2 Ap. Cas. 698 (1877); 20 Moak, 203, 213.

[7] L. eligere, to pick out. See Eligible.

Election. A choosing, or selecting; also, the condition of having been chosen or selected: choice, selection.

Primer election. First choice.

In England, in cases of partition, unless otherwise agreed, the eldest sister (coparcener) has the first choice of purparts.[1]

1. Selection of a person to fill an office in (1) a private corporation,— whence corporate election; or (2) in a department of government — national, State, county, municipal,— whence popular election.[2]

In its constitutional sense, a selection by the popular voice of a district, county, town, or city, or by an organized body, in contradistinction to appointment by some single person or officer.

Voting and taking the votes of citizens for members to represent them in the general assembly or other public stations.[3]

In either of the senses noted, particularly in the case of a popular election, whether a general or a special or local election, choice of persons is effected through the instrumentality of a board or officers of election, within an election district or precinct, or place of known and fixed boundaries, on an appointed election day and between certain election hours, with a prescribed mode for certifying the election returns, and all in conformity with the election laws; followed, too, in cases, by an election contest between opposing candidates.[4]

The doctrine at the foundation of popular government is, that in elections the will of the majority controls; mere irregularities or informalities in the conduct of an election are impotent to thwart the expressed will of the majority.[5]

All fraudulent acts affecting the purity and safety of elections are offenses at common law.[6]

But illegal votes will make void an election only when they affect the result.[7]

A statute which, in addition to the requirements of the constitution, provides that "no person hereafter naturalized shall be entitled to be registered as a voter within thirty days therefrom," is unconstitutional.[8]

[1] Littleton, § 243.

[2] Police Commissioners v. Louisville, 3 Bush, 608 (1868), William, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Kirk, 4 B. Mon. 2 (1843), Ewing, C. J. See also 54 Ala. 205; 13 Cal. 144; 23 Mich. 341; 5 Nev. 121.

[4] See 2 Dill. 219; 41 Pa. 403; 30 Conn. 591; 44 N. H. 643.

[5] Prohibitory-Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 720 (1881). See Commonwealth v. Smith, 132 Mass. 295 (1882).

[6] Commonwealth v. Hoxey, 16 Mass. 385 (1820); Commonwealth v. McHale, 97 Pa. 408 (1881); 91 Pa. 503.

[7] Tarbox v. Sughrue, 36 Kan. 230, 232 (1887), cases. On conducting elections, see 24 Cent. Law J. 487 (1887), cases.

[8] Kinneen v. Wells, 144 Mass. 497 (1887), cases. See also State v. Conner, Sup. Ct. Neb. (1887), cases.

Elective. (1) Pertaining to the right, in the individual, to choose agents of government: as, the elective franchise. q. v.

(2) Bestowed by virtue of a popular election, as opposed to being invested with by appointment: as, the elective system — for filling judicial offices. See JUDICIARY.

Elector. (1) One who has the right of a choice or vote; more particularly, one who has the right of casting a vote for a public officer.[1]

(2) One who, having a right to vote, actually votes.[2]

Electoral. Pertaining to or consisting of electors: as, the "electoral college," on which the formal legal choice of President and Vice-President is made finally to depend.

Presidential electors. Members of the electoral college.

"Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector."[3]

"The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States."[4]

"The Electors shall meet in their respective states, and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; — The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; —

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.[1]

The act of Congress approved February 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 373), to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to regulate the counting of the votes, and the decision of questions arising thereon, provides as follows:

That the electors of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment, at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct.

Sec. 2. That if any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to the said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of electors in such State, by the final ascertainment under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment,

[1] See Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 39 (1875).

[2] See Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 123 (1865); State ex rel. v. Tuttle, 53 Wis. 49 (1881).

[3] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 2. See 2 Bancroft, Const. 165–85.

The electoral vote of the respective States is (1888) as follows: Alabama, 10; Arkansas, 7; California, 8; Colorado, 3; Connecticut, 6; Delaware, 3; Florida, 4; Georgia, 12; Illinois, 22; Indiana, 15; Iowa, 13; Kansas, 9; Kentucky, 13; Louisiana, 8; Maine, 6; Maryland, 8; Massachusetts, 14; Michigan, 13; Minnesota, 7; Mississippi, 9; Missouri, 16; Nebraska, 5; Nevada, 3; New Hampshire, 4; New Jersey, 9; New York, 36; North Carolina, 11; Ohio, 23; Oregon, 3; Pennsylvania, 30; Rhode Island, 4; South Carolina, 9; Tennessee, 12; Texas, 13; Vermont, 4; Virginia, 12; West Virginia, 6; Wisconsin, 11. Total, 401.

[4] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 3.

[1] Constitution, Amend. Art. XII. Ratified Sept. 25, 1805.

to communicate, under the seal of the State, to the secretary of state of the United States, a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by the preceding section to meet, the same certificate, in triplicate, under the seal of the State; and such certificate shall be inclosed and transmitted by the electors at the same time and in the same manner as is provided by law for transmitting by such electors to the seat of government the lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice-President; and section one hundred and thirty-six of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State of a controversy or contest as provided for in section two of this act, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate, under the seal of the State, to the secretary of state of the United States, a certificate of such determination, in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the secretary of state of the United States, as soon as practicable after the receipt at the state department of each of the certificates hereinbefore directed to be transmitted to the secretary of state, shall publish, in such public newspaper as he shall designate, such certificates in full; and at the first meeting of Congress thereafter he shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received theretofore at the state department.

Sec. 4. That Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the president of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the president of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules in this act provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the president of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper, the president of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section three of this act from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the president of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section two of this act to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section two of this act, is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its laws; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

Sec. 5. That while the two Houses shall be in meeting as provided in this act the president of the Senate shall have power to preserve order: and no debate shall be allowed and no question shall be put by the presiding officer except to either House on a motion to withdraw.

Sec. 6. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or other question arising in the matter, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question five minutes, and not more than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Sec. 7. That at such joint meeting of the two Houses seats shall be provided as follows: For the president of the Senate, the speaker's chair; for the speaker, immediately upon his left; the Senators, in the body of the hall upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, secretary of the Senate, and clerk of the House of Representatives, at the clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the clerk's desk and upon each side of the speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next calendar day; Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon. But if the counting of the electoral votes and the declaration of the result shall not have been completed before the fifth calendar day next after such first meeting of the two Houses, no further or other recess shall be taken by either House.

See BALLOT; BRIBERY; CANDIDATE; CONGRESS; DEPOSIT, 1 (1); HOLIDAY; QUALIFIED, 1; VACANCY; VOTE.

2. The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is a clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. This, technically, is "election," or the "doctrine of election," at law and equity.

In equity jurisprudence, presupposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party, who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other.[1]

Thus, one may have an election: to pay money or deliver goods, as a consideration; to observe a contract, or pay damages or forfeit a sum; to retain a security for a debt, or surrender it and share as a distributee in a dividend; to rescind or affirm a voidable contract; between a statutory and common-law remedy; between a joint and a several action; between suing an agent and suing his undisclosed principal; between independent grounds of defense or of action.

A very common example is the choice a widow makes between dower and a testamentary provision.

A person who is entitled to any benefit under a will or other instrument, must, if he claims that benefit, abandon every right or interest the assertion of which would defeat, even partially, any of the provisions of the instrument. But in no case is one to be put to an election unless it is clear that the provisions of the instrument in some degree would be defeated by the assertion of his other rights.[1]

The doctrine rests upon the equitable ground that no man can be permitted to claim inconsistent rights with regard to the same subject, and that any one who asserts an interest under an instrument is bound to give full effect, as far as he can, to that instrument. Or, as it is sometimes expressed, he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will must adopt the contents of the whole instrument, conforming to all its provisions and relinquishing every right inconsistent with it.[2]

An election may be implied as well as expressed. Whether there has been an election must be determined upon the circumstances of the particular case, rather than upon general principles. It may be inferred from the conduct of the party — his acts, his omissions, and his mode of dealing with the property. Unequivocal acts of ownership, with knowledge of the right to elect, and not through a mistake with respect to the condition and value of the estate, will generally be deemed an election to take under a will. It has become a maxim that no one is bound to elect in ignorance of his rights.[3] Compare SATISFY, 2 (2).

3. The right to choose, or the act of choosing, between different actions or remedies, where the plaintiff has suffered one species of wrong from the act complained of.

This right arises where he may sue in tort or upon the contract implied by law in the case; or where he may bring an action of a purely equitable nature, or such as merely seeks a money judgment.[4]

ELECTRICITY. See LIGHTNING; TELEGRAPH; TELEPHONE.

ELEEMOSYNARY. See CHARITY, 2: CORPORATION.

ELEGIT. See EXECUTION, 8, Writs of.

ELEVATED. See RAILROAD.

ELEVATOR. See NEGLIGENCE.

ELIGIBLE. Relates to capacity of holding as well as of being elected to an office.[5]

Ineligible. Refers as well to disqualification to hold, as to disqualification to be elected to, an office.[6]

[1] 2 Story, Eq. § 1075; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 461 et seq.; 54 Me. 456.

[1] Gibson v. Gibson, 17 E. L. & E. 353 (1853), Kinderley, V. C.; 14 Gratt. 548; 76 Va. 123.

[2] Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 846 (1882), Staples, J.

[3] 76 Va. 850, supra; Burroughs v. De Couts, 70 Cal. 370 (1886); Streatfield v. Streatfield (1735), 1 Lead. Cas. Eq., W. & T., 504, 510, 541; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1076–96.

[4] See 22 Cent. Law J. 533–38 (1886), cases.

[5] [Carson v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 331 (1860); 15 Cal. 117; 3 Nev. 566.

[6] State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 99 (1871).

Re-eligible. Capable of election, or of holding office, more than once. See ELECTION, 1; OFFICE.

ELISOR.[1] An elector chosen by a court to return a panel of jurors where the sheriff and the coroner are disqualified.[2]

If exception lies to the coroner, the venire is directed to two clerks of the court, or to two other persons of the county, named by the court and sworn; these two, called "elisors," or electors, indifferently name the jury, and their return is final, no challenge being allowed to their array.[3]

ELOIGN.[3] When the sheriff seeks to replevy goods distrained, and finds them carried out of the county, or concealed, he may return that they are eloigned, elongata, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown.[4] See CAPERE, Capias, Withernam.

When, under ancient practice, he sought to replevy a man and found him conveyed out of bailiwick he made return that the person was elongatus.[5]

Eloignment. Removal of goods distrained, to prevent a replevy.

Eloigner. He who makes an eloignment.

ELOPEMENT.[6] The act in a wife of voluntarily leaving her husband to live with another man.

She thereby forfeits her right of dower, unless the offense is condoned. The husband is not liable for her contracts for necessaries, unless, preserving her purity, she has offered to return and he has refused to receive her.[7]

The "leaving" implies a going beyond the husband's actual control.[8]

ELSEWHERE. In or at another place. Compare ALIBI.

In a will, will pass land wherever situated.[9]

In shipping articles, was construed in subordination to the principal voyage — the words being "to the Pacific ocean, or elsewhere, thence to Boston, with wages payable at Canton."[10]

EM. See EN, 3.

EMANCIPATION.[11] The act by which a person, who is under the power or control of another, is rendered free to act for himself.[1]

Filial emancipation. Enfranchisement of a minor from parental authority.

Attaining majority is, ipso facto, emancipation.

Emancipation proclamation. Issued, January 1, 1863, by President Lincoln as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, during the existence of armed rebellion. It purported to be "a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion;" and declared that all persons held as slaves within designated States, and parts of States, were and henceforward should be free.[2] See CITIZEN, Amendment, XIII.

EMBARGO.[3] The detention, by a government, of ships of commerce in its ports.

A prohibition against sailing.[4]

Civil embargo. Is laid upon ships belonging to citizens of the State imposing it.

Hostile embargo. Is laid upon ships belonging to the enemy.

The effect of a hostile embargo is, that if war does not follow the vessels are restored to their owners; if otherwise, they are confiscated. Bonds for the observance of the prohibition may be required.[5] See BLOCKADE.

EMBASSADOR. See MINISTER, 8.

EMBEZZLEMENT.[6] 1. Appropriation to one's own use of anything belonging to another, whether rightfully or wrongfully in the possession of the taker; theft.

At an early date, spending, wasting, squandering.

"He left an estate to an unthrift son who embezzled it."[7]

"Embezzling or vacating records . . is a felonious offense."[8]

---

[1] E-li'-sor. F. eliseur: L. eligere, to choose.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 354; 91 Pa. 495.

[3] F. éloigner, to remove to a distance: L. L. e-longe, far off.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 149.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 129.

[6] Dutch ontloopen, to run away; by substituting the prefix e- for Du. ont-. A. S. hleapan, to leap, run.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 130; 1 id. 442; 11 Johns. 281; 12 id. 293; 11 Wend. 33; 3 Pick. 289; 7 S. & R. 249; Chitty, Contr. 49; Bish. M. & D. § 625.

[8] Cogswell v. Tibbetts, 3 N. H. 42 (1824).

[9] 3 P. Wms. 56; 3 Atkyn, 254.

[10] Brown v. Jones, 2 Gall. 479 (1815).

[11] L. e-mancipare, to transfer ownership: mancipium (q. v.), purchase by imposition of hand — manus capere.

[1] See Fremont v. Sandown, 56 N. H. 308 (1876): Bouvier.

[2] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 68 (1872). See also 43 Ala. 592; 44 id. 70; 20 La. Ann. 199; 43 Miss. 102; 13 S. C. Eq. 366; 31 Tex. 504.

[3] Spanish embargo, putting a bar (barra) in the way: arrest, stoppage of ships.

[4] [The King William, 2 Wheat. 189 (1817); L. R., 8 C. P. 659.

[5] See Wheaton, Int. Law, 372; The King William, supra; 7 Cranch, 237; 5 Johns. 290.

[6] N. F. embeasiller, to filch,— Webster. Formerly, embesile or -ell; the same as imbécill, to weaken, diminish, subtract from. A shop-boy embezzled his master's store imperceptibly by repeated filching,— Skeat. In early statutes spelled imbesil,— 2 N. M. 208.

[7] Fuller, The Worthies (1662).

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 127 (1769).

"Embezzlers of Charters, Grants, Records, Bonds, Bills, Wills, &c., shall make Double Satisfaction, and be publicly Disgraced as False persons."[1]

"The goods of shipwrecked vessels shall be preserved from spoil and embezzlement."[2]

"He who would embezzle a ship's furniture, would not hesitate to embezzle the cargo."[3]

Section 5467, Rev. St., creates two statutory offenses: that of embezzling a letter in postal custody which has a valuable thing enclosed; and that of taking and stealing such thing out of a letter which has been embezzled. A prosecution may be for one or both offenses.[4]

2. The fraudulent conversion of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted.[5]

A species of theft, consisting in the stealing of property by clerks, agents, servants — persons acting in a fiduciary capacity.[6]

Distinguishable from "larceny" in that the taker comes lawfully into possession of the property.[6]

To "embezzle" is to appropriate to one's own use property or money intrusted to him by his employer.[7]

At common law, had no definite meaning. As an offense, had its origin in efforts made to amend the law of larceny. The first statute was that of 8 Henry VIII (1517), c. 7, in which the descriptive words were "did embezzle or otherwise convert the money to his own use." Statute of 7 Geo. IV (1827) improved and superseded earlier legislation; in it the words are "shall fraudulently embezzle."[8]

Frequently termed "larceny by bailee."

Where the accused is not named as a "bailee," it may be a question of law upon the averments whether or not he was a bailee.[9] See LARCENY.

It is essential: that the accused occupy a fiduciary relation; that he received property (money) in the course of his employment; that the property belonged to his principal; that he converted it with intent to steal and embezzle it.[10]

The indictment must allege that the accused "feloniously did steal, take and carry away" the property.[11]

The details of the crime being statutory, the decisions of other States are to be read with caution.[1]

Many State statutes follow 24 and 25 Vict. (1861) c. 96, §§ 68–72.[2]

In some States the injured person may receive payment for the property embezzled or take security therefor.[3]

In the Revised Statutes, the term designates a variety of offenses having in common the idea that the person has an opportunity to commit them by reason of some office or employment; and that they include some breach of confidence or trust, some misuse of a confidential opportunity: as, conversion by a public officer to his own use of public money intrusted to him for safe-keeping, disbursement, transfer, or other purpose.[4]

See DECOY; PECULATION.

EMBLEMENTS.[5] The vegetable chattels called emblements are the corn [grain] and other growth of the earth which are produced annually, not spontaneously but by labor and industry; thence called fructus industriales.[6]

A growing crop of grass, even if grown from seed, and ready to be cut for hay, cannot be taken as emblements: the improvement is not distinguishable from natural product, although it may be increased by cultivation.[6]

The doctrine of emblements is founded on the uncertainty of the termination of the tenant's estate. Where that is certain there exists no title to emblements.[7]

Nursery trees more nearly resemble emblements than fixtures; emblements being the annual product or fruit of things sown or planted. Hops, berries, and the like, are such, but not the roots and bushes from which they grow. Emblements reared by a tenant entering subsequently to a mortgage pass to the purchaser at a foreclosure sale, unless gathered before the sale.[8]

The word is used both for the crops or grain and for the privilege of reaping or gathering them. See further CROP; FRUCTUS.

---

[1] Great Law of Penn., Ch. L (1682).

[2] Ibid., Ch. CXXXI (1683).

[3] The Boston, 1 Sumn. 356 (1833), Story, J.

[4] United States v. Baugh, 4 Hughes, 508 (1880). See United States v. Long, 4 Woods, 454 (1881).

[5] 2 Bishop, Cr. L. § 326; Pittsburgh, &c. Pass. R'y Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 558 (1886).

[6] United States v. Lee, 12 F. R. 618 (1882), Cox, D. J.; 11 id. 293; State v. Wingo, 89 Ind. 206 (1883); 41 How. Pr. 294; 62 Wis. 63; 4 Tex. Ap. 408.

[7] State v. Wolff, 34 La. An. 1154 (1882), Manning, J.

[8] State v. Wolff, supra; New Mexico v. Maxwell, 2 N. M. 267–68 (1882); United States v. Conant, 9 Cent. Law J. 129 (Cir. Ct., Mass., 1879), cases: R. S. § 5209 — national bank officer or agent; 3 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 152–53.

[9] People v. Johnson, 71 Cal. 392 (1886).

[10] Exp. Hedley, 31 Cal. 112 (1866).

[11] Commonwealth v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 246 (1882): Gen. Sts. c. 161, § 33.

[1] 7 Tex. Ap. 417; 4 id. 407–9, cases; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 331.

[2] 2 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 326–70, 392–462; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1905–42, 2069–2102.

[3] Johnston Harvester Co. v. McLean, 57 Wis. 262 (1883); Fagnan v. Knox, 66 N. Y. 526 (1876). See generally Calkins v. State, 18 Ohio St. 366 (1868): 98 Am. Dec. 126–74, cases.

[4] United States v. Conant, ante; United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 171 (1872): 6 id. 385. See R. S. §§ 5427, 5467, 5486, 5496.

[5] O. F. emblér, emblader, blayer, to sow with grain: bled, blé, corn, grain, "blade."

[6] Reiff v. Reiff, 64 Pa. 137 (1870), Read, J.; 1 Williams, Exec. 670, 672; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 543.

[7] Whitmarsh v. Cutting, 10 Johns. *361 (1813). See at length 2 Bl. Com. 122–23, 145–46.

[8] Hamilton v. Austin, 36 Hun, 142 (1885), Follett, J. See also 19 Am. Law Rev. 24–31 (1885), cases.

EMBRACERY.[1] An attempt to influence a jury corruptly to one side by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainment, and the like.[2]

Embraceer or embracer. One who attempts to influence a jury (or a juror) by corrupt or unlawful means.

EMERGENCY. See ACCIDENT; NEGLIGENCE.

Within the meaning of a statute against practicing medicine without a certificate, except where the services are gratuitous and "the case one of emergency," the reference is to a case in which the ordinary and qualified practitioners are not readily obtainable, not to a case in which the patient has been given up as incurable by physicians of the schools provided for by the statute.[3]

EMIGRATION. See IMMIGRATION; COMMERCE; EXILE, Ne exeat. Compare EXPATRIATION.

EMINENT. See DOMAIN, 1.

EMIT. See CREDIT, 2, Bill of.

EMOLUMENT. Any perquisite, advantage, profit, or gain arising from the possession of an office.

Imports, then, more than "salary" or "fees."[4] See FIX, 3; OFFICE, 1.

EMOTIONAL. See INSANITY.

EMPANEL. See PANEL.

EMPHYTEUSIS.[5] An estate in land, under the Roman law, analogous to a fee-farm, or perpetual lease, in English law.

It gave the occupant, or his transferee, a perpetual lease, conditioned upon payment of rent, and, perhaps, improvement of the land.

Whence emphyteutic.[6]

EMPLOYMENT.[7] Occupation; position involving business; service.

Employ. (1), n. Originally, the poetical form of employment.

(2), v. To engage in one's service; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission and intrust with the management of one's affairs. Used with respect to a servant or laborer, equivalent to "hire."[8]

Employed. May refer to any present occupation, but commonly to continuous occupation.[1]

"Employed" in anything imports not only the act of doing it, but also being engaged to do it, being under contract or orders to do it.[2]

Employe, or employee; employer. "Employe" is from the French, but has become naturalized in our language. Strictly and etymologically it means "a person employed;" but in practice in the French language it ordinarily denotes a person in some official employment.[3]

"Employe" is the correlative of "employer." Neither term is restricted to any particular employment or service. "To employ" is to engage or use another as an agent or substitute in transacting business, or the performance of some service, it may be skilled labor or the service of the scientist or professional man as well as servile or unskilled manual labor.[4]

"Employe" usually embraces a laborer, servant, or other person occupied in an inferior position.[5]

Applies equally to a person within or without an office, whether a servant or a clerk. An "employee in an office" is a person engaged in the performance of the proper duties of an office, whether his duties are carried on within or without the walls of the building in which the chief officer transacts his business.[6]

The English form employee, though legitimate as conforming to analogy, is not sanctioned by the usage of good writers.[7]

See BOYCOTTING; BUSINESS; CONTRACTOR; GIFT; LABOR, 1; NEGLIGENCE; SERVANT; SUNDAY; TRADE.

EMPOWER. See AGENT; AUTHORITY, 1; DELEGATUS; POWER.

EMPTY. Ordinarily, to make void, exhaust, deprive of contents.

Section 3324, Rev. St., which makes it an offense to fail to obliterate a stamp at the time of "emptying" a cask of spirits, does not mean that absolutely every particle of the spirit be drawn off. The emptying intended is such as can be conveniently done by the ordinary method.[8]

Compare OCCUPIED; VACANT.

---

[1] O. F. embracer, to clasp in the arms, embrace.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 140. See Gibbs v. Dewey, 5 Cow. 505 (1826); State v. Sales, 2 Nev. 269 (1866); Hawk. Pl. Cr. 259.

[3] People v. Lee Wah, 71 Cal. 80 (1886).

[4] Apple v. Crawford County, 105 Pa. 303 (1884); Const. Pa. Art. III, § 13.

[5] Accent on -teu-. Gk. emphyteuein, to plant or improve land.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 232; Maine, Anc. Law, 289.

[7] F. employer, to involve, engage, occupy.

[8] McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 599 (1854).

[1] Wilson v. Gray, 127 Mass. 99 (1879), Lord, J.

[2] United States v. Morris, 14 Pet. 475 (1840), Taney, C. J.; 2 Paine, C. C. 745; 22 Ohio, 194; 20 S. C. 4-5.

[3] Gurney v. Atlantic, &c. R. Co., 2 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 458 (1873), Talcott, J.

[4] Gurney v. Atlantic, &c. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 371 (1874), Allen, J.; Krauser v. Ruckel, 17 Hun, 465 (1879).

[5] People v. Board of Police, 75 N. Y. 41 (1878).

[6] Stone v. United States, 3 Ct. Cl. 262 (1867); Peck, J.

[7] Webster's Dict.

[8] United States v. Buchanan, 4 Hughes, 488 (1881).

EN. In; into.

1. The French form of the English and Latin preposition in. See IN, 1, 3 (2).

En autre droit. In right of another. See DROIT.

En fait. In fact; in deed.

En owel main. In equal hand. See OWELTY.

En route. On the way. See ROUTE.

En ventre. In the womb; unborn. See VENTER.

2. As a prefix, coincides with the Latin in.

Some English words are written indifferently en- or in-: as, encumber and incumber, endorse and indorse, enjoin and injoin. In seems to be preferred.

For ease of pronounciation, changes to em-, particularly before a labial: as, in embracery, employ, empower.

ENABLING. Describes an enactment which confers power to do a thing: as, statutes of wills, statutes permitting parties to testify; opposed to disabling or restraining acts or statutes.

ENACT. See ACT, 3, Enact.

ENCEINTE. See ANCIENT, 2; PREGNANCY; VENTER.

ENCHANTMENT. See WITCHCRAFT.

ENCLOSURE. Imports land enclosed with something more than the imaginary boundary line,—some visible or tangible obstruction, as, a fence, hedge, ditch, or an equivalent object, for the protection of the premises against encroachment, as by cattle.[1]

A tract of land surrounded by a fence, together with such fence: as, in a statute limiting one's right to distrain beasts to those doing damage within his enclosure.[2] See CLOSE, 3.

ENCROACH. To intrude upon, make gain upon, occupy, or use the land, right, or authority of another, as if by gradual or partial assumption of right. See PURPRESTURE.

ENCUMBER. See INCUMBER.

END. See AT, 2; FINAL; FINE; TERMINUS.

ENDORSE. See INDORSE.

ENDOW. 1. To confer rights of dower, q. v.

2. To make pecuniary provision for the support of a person or institution.

Endowment. The act of settling a fund upon one; also, such fund itself. Used of a policy of insurance payable at a certain age or at death.

An endowment policy is an insurance into which enters the element of life. In one respect it is a contract payable in the event of a continuance of life; in another, in the event of death before the period specified.[1]

By the endowment of a school, hospital, or chapel is commonly understood, not building or purchasing a site for the institution, but providing a fixed revenue for its support.[2]

The "endowment of a religious or educational corporation" refers to that particular fund, or part of the fund, of the institution, bestowed for its more permanent uses, and usually kept sacred for the purposes intended.[3]

ENEMY. A nation, or a citizen or subject thereof, at war with another nation.

Alien enemy. One who owes allegiance to a government at war with ours, dwelling within our territory or seeking some action from a department of our government.

Enemies of the United States. The subjects of a foreign power in a state of open hostility toward us. Does not embrace "rebels" in insurrection against their own government. An "enemy" is always the subject of a foreign power, who owes no allegiance to our government or country.[4]

"Rebels" and "enemies" may be synonymous for those who have cast off their allegiance and made war upon their own government. Who are enemies in a civil war, the law of nations has not defined; but, within the meaning of a confiscation act, the term may include those who are residents of the territory under the power of the parties resisting the regular government. . . In the case of a foreign war, applies to all who are inhabitants of the enemy's country, though not participants, and even though subjects of a neutral State, or even subjects of the government prosecuting the war against the State within which they reside.[5]

Public enemy. Referring to the undertaking of a common carrier, applies to foreign nations with whom there is open war, and to pirates, who are considered at war with all mankind; does not include robbers, thieves, rioters, insurgents, whatever be their violence, or Indians.[6]

[1] [Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 331 (1866): Act 1797, R. S. 612, § 4; id. 34.

[2] Taylor v. Wilbey, 26 Wis. 44 (1874); 34 id. 666.

[1] Brummer v. Cohn, 86 N. Y. 17 (1881), Andrews, J.

[2] [Edwards v. Hall, 6 De G. M. & G. *87, 83 (1855), Cranworth, Ld. C.

[3] State v. Lyon, 32 N. J. L. 361 (1867), Bedle, J.

[4] United States v. Greathouse, 4 Saw. 466 (1863), Field, J.

[5] Prize Cases, 2 Black, 674 (1862); Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 310-12 (1870); Gates v. Goodloe, 101 U. S. 617 (1879); 20 How. 249; 21 W. Va. 357.

[6] Story, Contr. 752, Bailm. § 526; Southern Express Co. v. Womack, 1 Heisk. 269 (1870); 7 id. 625; State v. Moore, 74 Mo. 418 (1881); League v. Rogan, 59 Tex. 494 (1883); 4 Op. Att.-Gen. 81.

In a policy of marine insurance, "enemies" means "public enemies," those with whom a nation is at war.[1] See CARRIER, Common; TREASON; WAR.

ENFEOFF. See FEOFFMENT.

ENFORCE. See FORCE; PERFORMANCE.

ENFRANCHISE. See FRANCHISE, 2.

ENGAGEMENT. See AGREEMENT; ASSUMPSIT; CONTRACT; PROMISE; UNDERTAKING.

ENGINE. Includes a snare, which is a device or contrivance for killing game.[2]

Engineer. See ADMISSION, 2; COMMERCE.

ENGLAND; ENGLISH. See BOROUGH; CHANCERY; CHARITY, 2; CONSTITUTION; COURT; CY PRES; DESCENT, Canons of; EXTRADITION, 1; FEUD; KING; LATIN; LAW, Common; PARLIAMENT; STATUTE.

ENGRAVING. See COPYRIGHT; PRINT.

ENGROSS. 1. To write in a gross, i. e., a large, hand; to copy in a fair hand: as, to engross an instrument on parchment. Whence engrosser, engrossing.

After a proposed statute has been read and acted upon a sufficient number of times, it is ordered to be engrossed.

"A bill ordered to be engrossed is to be written in a strong gross hand."[3] See GROSS.

2. At common law the offense of engrossing was the getting into one's possession, or buying up, large quantities of corn [grain] or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again.[4]

An injury to the public. If permitted, one or more men could raise the price of provisions at will. The total engrossing of any other commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price, was also an indictable offense.[4] See COMBINATION, 2; CORNER; MONOPOLY.

ENHANCED. In an unqualified sense, is equivalent to "increased," and comprehends any increase of value, however caused or arising.

In Oregon if a husband aliens dowable lands, and they become "enhanced in value" thereafter, they shall be estimated, in setting forth the dower, according to their value when aliened. Held, that "enhanced" included only the value caused by improvements made, and not that which arises fortuitously, or from natural causes.[5]

[1] Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. 498 (1862); Vattel, Law of Nations, 367.

[2] Allen v. Thompson, L. R., 5 Q. B. *339 (1870).

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 153.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 158.

[5] Thornburn v. Doscher, 33 F. R. 812 (1887), Deady, J.; 2 Or. Laws, § 2960. The syllabus (by the court) reads "not arising from improvements."

ENJOIN. See INJUNCTION.

ENJOYMENT. Possession; occupation; use; exercise.

Enjoyment as of right is an enjoyment had, not secretly or by stealth, or by tacit sufferance, or by permission from time to time, on each occasion, or on many occasions, of using it; but an enjoyment had openly, notoriously, without particular leave at the time, by a person claiming to use without danger of being treated as a trespasser, as a matter of right, whether strictly legal by prescription and adverse user or by deed conferring the right, or, though not strictly legal, yet lawful to the extent of excusing a trespass.[1]

Adverse enjoyment. The possession or exercise of an easement or privilege under a claim of right against the owner of land.

If open, and continued without interruption for twenty years, a conclusive prescription of grant arises, provided that during the time there was some one in possession, qualified to resist the claim.[2] Compare POSSESSION, Adverse.

Quiet enjoyment. Peaceable, undisturbed possession of land.

Covenant for quiet enjoyment. A covenant in a conveyance or lease of land, engaging that the grantee or lessee shall be permitted to use the land unmolested.[3]

Every lease implies a covenant for quiet enjoyment. But it extends only to the possession; and its breach, like that of a warranty for title, arises only from eviction by means of title. It does not protect against entry and ouster of a tort-feasor. The tenant may call his landlord into his defense; and, if eviction follows as the result of a failure to defend him, he can then refuse to pay rent, and fall back upon this covenant for quiet enjoyment to recover his damages.[4]

A lease with an express covenant for quiet enjoyment implies a covenant that the lessor has title and power and right to convey it. The implied covenant is broken if the lessor has made a prior and still outstanding lease of part of the premises. A recovery of the premises by the prior lessee is such an eviction as constitutes a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment; and the lessee may recoup his damages from the rent due.[5]

See DEMISE; WARRANTY, 1.

ENLARGE. To extend, increase, lengthen the time of; also, to set at liberty.

Enlarge an estate. To increase the tenant's interest.

Enlarge an order or rule. To extend the time for complying with it.

[1] Tickle v. Brown, 31 E. C. L. 91 (1836), Denman, C. J.

[2] 2 Washb. R. P. 42, 43.

[3] 1 Washb. R. P. 325; 4 Kent, 474, n.

[4] Schuylkill, &c. R. Co. v. Schmoele, 57 Pa. 273 (1868); Mark v. Patchin, 43 N. Y. 171-72 (1870), cases.

[5] McAlester v. Landers, 70 Cal. 83-84 (1886), cases.

To "enlarge" and to "extend" the time for taking testimony may have different meanings in a particular case.[1]

Enlarging statute. Extends a right or a remedy as it exists at common law.[2]

ENLISTMENT. Either the complete act of entering into military service, or the first step taken toward that end.[3]

A technical term, derived from Great Britain. In the English Cyclopædia, defined to be "a voluntary engagement to serve as a private soldier for a certain number of years." Chambers defines it as "the means by which the English army is supplied with troops as distinguished from the conscription prevailing in many other countries."[4]

Has never included entry into service under commission as an officer.[5]

Public policy requires that a minor be at liberty to enter into a contract to serve the state, wherever such contract is not positively forbidden by the state itself. This at least is the common law of England.[6]

Rev. St., §§ 1116-17, authorizes enlistment in the army of men above the age of sixteen, no person under twenty-one to be mustered into service without the written consent of his parents or guardian.

A contract made by a minor over sixteen, without consent, can be avoided only by his parents, they claiming his custody before majority.[7]

Habeas corpus is the judicial proceeding to secure release of a minor whose parents did not consent to his enlisting.[8] See DESERTION, 3.

ENORMIA. L. Wrongs; unlawful acts.

Alia enormia. Other wrongful acts.

After a specific allegation of wrong done by a defendant, the plaintiff may further charge, generally, alia enormia, to the damage, etc.,—"and other wrongs then and there did against the peace," etc. Then, all matters naturally arising from the act complained of may be given in evidence.[9] See DAMAGES, Special.

ENQUIRY. See INQUIRY.

ENROLL. See ROLL; REGISTRY, Of vessels.

ENS. L. A being; a creature.

Ens legis. A creature of the law; an artificial person, a legal entity, a corporation.

[1] James v. McMillan, 55 Mich. 136 (1884).

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 324; 1 id. 87.

[3] Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen, 485 (1864), Gray, J. See Erichson v. Beach, 40 Conn. 286 (1873); Sheffield v. Otis, 107 Mass. 282 (1871).

[4] Babbitt v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 213 (1880), Davis, J.

[5] Hilliard v. Stewartstown, 48 N. H. 280-81 (1869), Perley, C. J.

[6] Commonwealth v. Gamble, 11 S. & R. 94 (1824), Gibson, J.

[7] Re Hearn, 32 F. R. 141 (1887).

[8] Re Baker, 23 F. R. 30 (1885), cases; R. S. § 1117.

[9] 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 268, 273, 278; 1 Chitt. Pl. 397; 3 Mass. 223; 15 id. 194.

ENTAIL. See TAIL.

ENTER. See ENTRY.

ENTERPRISE. See GIFT, 1.

ENTERTAINMENT. Public reception; something connected with the enjoyment of refreshment-rooms, tables, and the like.[1] See INN.

A public aquarium is a "place of entertainment and amusement," when a band plays and the fish are fed.[2] See EXHIBITION; THEATER.

ENTICE. See ABDUCTION; HUSBAND; PERSUADE.

ENTIRE. Untouched: complete; unbroken, whole; undivided, indivisible, inseverable: as, an entire — consideration, covenant, contract,[3] q. v. See SEPARABLE.

An entire claim arising out of one transaction, contract or tort, cannot be divided into separate and distinct claims. A verdict for one portion will bar an action on another.[4] See DAMAGES; MULTIPLICITY.

Entirely. "Entirely satisfied" implies a firm and thorough assent of the mind and judgment to the truth of a proposition; and this may exist, notwithstanding a possibility that the fact may be otherwise.[5]

Entirety. The whole, as opposed to a moiety.

If an estate in fee be given to a man and his wife, they are neither properly joint-tenants, nor tenants in common; for, being one person in law, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seized of the entirety,—the consequence of which is, that neither can dispose of any part without the assent of the other, but the whole must remain to the survivor.[6]

The right, at common law, to control the possession of the estate during their joint lives is in the husband. Subject to the limitation that neither can defeat the right of the survivor to the whole estate, the husband has such rights as are incident to his own property, and which he acquires in her realty. Having the usufruct of all her realty interests, by the weight of authority he may lease the estate during coverture. Statutes enabling married women to hold and dispose of their property as if sole do not affect this species of estate, unless expressly so stated.[7]

The survivor does not take as a new acquisition, but under the original limitation, his (or her) estate being simply freed from participation by the other; so that

[1] Muir v. Keay, L. R., 10 Q. B. 597-98 (1875).

[2] Terry v. Brighton Aquarium Co., L. R., 10 Q. B. 306 (1875). See Howes v. Board of Revenue, 1 Ex. Div. 335 (1876).

[3] See 2 Pars. Contr. 517.

[4] Phillips v. Berick, 16 Johns. 136 (1819).

[5] People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 335 (1870).

[6] [2 Bl. Com. 182.

[7] Pray v. Stebbins, 141 Mass. 223-24 (1886), cases.

if, for instance, the wife survives and then dies, her heirs would take to the exclusion of the heirs of the husband. Nor can partition be made of the estate. During coverture the husband has control of the estate. Upon his death, the wife, or her heir, may enter without action against his alienee — by 32 Hen. VIII (1541), c. 28, which is in force in Kentucky, Massachusetts, Tennessee, and possibly in New York and New Jersey. Divorce of the wife from the husband restores her to her moiety. A grant or devise to them and another invests them with an entirety in one-half only. It is always competent, however, to make husband and wife tenants in common by proper words. The law of the States is not uniform on the subject.[1]

ENTITLE. See TITLE, 2.

ENTRAP. See DECOY.

ENTRY.[2] I. As relates to Property. The act of actually going upon land, or into a building.

At common law, an assertion of title by going upon the land; or, if that was hazardous, by "making continual claim."[3]

Taking possession of lands by the legal owner.[4]

1. An extrajudicial and summary remedy by the legal owner, when another person, who has no right, has previously taken possession of lands or tenements.

The party entitled may make a formal but peaceable entry thereon, declaring that thereby he takes possession, which notorious act of ownership is equivalent to a feudal investiture; or he may enter on any part of the land in the same county in the name of the whole; but if the land lies in different counties he must make different entries. If the claimant is deterred from entering by menaces he may "make claim" as near the estate as he can, with the like forms and solemnities, which claim is in force for a year and a day; and, if repeated once in the like period (called "continual claim"), has the same effect as a legal entry. Such entry puts into immediate possession him that has the right of entry, and thereby makes him complete owner, capable of conveying. But this remedy applies only in cases in which the original entry of the wrong-doer was unlawful, viz., in abatement, intrusion, and disseisin. In discontinuance and deforcement the owner of the estate cannot enter; for, the original entry being lawful, an apparent right of possession is gained, and the owner is driven to his action at law. In cases where entries are lawful, the right of entry may be "tolled," that is, taken away, by descent. Corresponds to recaption of personalty.[1]

Re-entry. The right reserved to consider a lease forfeited and to resume possession of the premises, upon failure in the lessee to perform a covenant; also, any exercise of this right.

This being a harsh power, the courts will restrain it to the most technical limits of the terms and conditions upon which the right is to be exercised.[2]

When for rent in arrear, unless dispensed with by agreement or statute, demand of payment of the rent must first be made.[3]

2. On the subject of entry by a grantor for breach of condition by the grantee, see GRANT, 2.

3. Going upon the landed property of another for any other purpose than those above mentioned.

It is not a trespass to enter upon another's premises to abate a nuisance, retake goods, make repairs, demand rent, distrain, or capture an estray.[4] See TRESPASS, Ab initio.

Forcible entry. An entry made with violence, against the will of the lawful occupant, and without authority of law.

Such entry as is made with a strong hand, with unusual weapons, an unusual number of servants or attendants, or with menace of life or limb; not a mere trespass.[5]

"When a man enters peaceably into a house, but turns the party out of possession by force, or by threats frights him out of possession."[6]

It will be sufficient if the entry is attended with such a display of force as manifests an intention to intimidate the party in possession, or deter him from defending his rights, or to excite him to repel the invasion, and thus bring about a breach of the peace.[7]

Forcible entry and detainer. An offense against the public peace, committed by violently taking or keeping possession of lands and tenements by menaces, force, and arms, and without the authority of law.

The entry now allowed by law is a peaceable one; that forbidden is such as is carried on and maintained by force, by violence and with unusual weapons.[8]

In early days, at common law, any man who had a right of entry upon lands was authorized to enter with

[1] 1 Wash. R. P. 425, cases; 4 Kent, 362; Chandler v. Cheney, 37 Ind. 394-414 (1871), cases; Re Benson, 8 Biss. 118-21 (1877); Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 124 (1883); Hadlock v. Gray, 104 Ind. 598 (1885); 25 Am. Law Reg. 369-74 (1886), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 183-88, 326-29 (1884), cases; 5 Kan. Law J. 5 (1887), cases; Thornton v. Thornton, 3 Rand. 182-90 (Va., 1825), cases; 3 Lead. Cas. R. P. 143-58 (1887), cases.

[2] F. entrer: L. in-trare, to go into.

[3] [Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 674 (1840).

[4] Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 306 (1847).

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 174-79, 5; 2 id. 314.

[2] The Elevator Cases, 17 F. R. 200 (1881).

[3] Johnston v. Hargrove, 81 Va. 121-23 (1885), cases.

[4] Keifer v. Carrier, 53 Wis. 404 (1881).

[5] Willard v. Warren, 17 Wend. 261 (1837).

[6] Bacon, Abridg.: Edwick v. Hawkes, 18 Ch. Div. 211 (1881). See also 8 Ala. 87; 9 Cal. 46; 21 N. J. L. 498.

[7] Ely v. Yore, 71 Cal. 133 (1886), cases.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 148; Reeder v. Purdy, 41 Ill. 285 (1866).

force and arms, and by force and arms retain possession — provided, possibly, that the entry was not by a breach of the public peace. The general revision of the written law upon the use of force by an individual to establish his own rights, made by statute 8 Hen. VI (1429), c. 9, is substantially the origin of existing law upon the subject of forcible entry and detainer. Prosecution under this statute is by indictment. In Massachusetts, unless the entry and detainer is accompanied by an actual breach of the peace, the process is substantially a civil proceeding. Under either procedure the court will award restitution of the premises.[1]

The purpose of statutes forbidding forcible entry and detainer is, that, without regarding the actual condition of the title to property, where a person is in the peaceable and quiet possession of it he shall not be turned out by strong hand, by force, by violence, or by terror. The party so using force and acquiring possession may have the superior title or may have the better right to the present possession, but the policy of the law is to prevent disturbances of the public peace, to forbid any person righting himself, in a case of that kind, by his own hand and by violence, and to require that the party who has in this manner obtained possession shall restore it to the party from whom it has been obtained; and that, when the parties are in statu quo, in the position they were in before the use of violence, the party out of possession must resort to legal means to obtain his possession, as he should have done in the first instance.[2]

If a claimant (a railroad company) of real estate, out of possession, resorts to force, amounting to a breach of the peace, to obtain possession from another claimant (also a railroad company) who is in peaceable possession, and personal injury arises therefrom, the party using the force is liable in damages, compensatory and punitive, for the injury, without regard to the legal title, or to the right of possession.[3]

4. Entrance into a dwelling-house with the whole or a part of the body, or with any implement for the purpose of committing a felony. See BURGLARY.

II. As a matter of Writing. Setting down in written characters; placing upon the record: recording.

1. Setting down in a book of accounts the particulars of a business transaction.

Original entry. The first statement made by a person in his account-books, charging another with money due upon a contract between them. Whence "book of original entries."[4] See further BOOK, Entries.

Short entry. It was a custom in London for bankers to receive bills for collection and to enter them immediately in their customers' accounts, but never to carry out the proceeds in the column to their credit until actually collected. This was called "short entry" or "entering short."[1]

2. The transaction by which an importer obtains entrance of his goods into the body of the merchandise of the country.

Until the entire transaction is closed, by a withdrawal and payment of the duties upon all the goods covered by the original paper called the entry for warehouse, the "false entry" contemplated by the act of Congress of March 3, 1863, is not completed.[2]

In the statutes in relation to duties, but one entry is referred to — the original entry provided, regulated, and defined by sections 2785-90, Rev. St. "Entry for withdrawal" is a misnomer.[3]

3. Filing or inscribing upon the records of a land-office the written proceedings required to entitle a person to a right of pre-emption or of homestead in public lands.

The act by which an individual acquires inceptive right to a portion of the unappropriated soil of the country, by filing his claim in the office of the "entry-taker," an officer who corresponds in his functions to the register of land-offices.[4] See LAND, Public; PRE-EMPTION, 2.

4. Depositing for copyright the title or description of a book or other article.

Whence "Entered according to Act of Congress," etc. See COPYRIGHT.

5. Recording in due form and order a thing done in court: as, an appearance made, a judgment rendered. Styled "docket" or "record" entries.

When a written order is signed by the judge and filed with the clerk, who enters a brief statement thereof in his "minute-book, the order, although not then recorded in the order-book, is "entered," within the meaning of a law limiting the time for appeal.[5]

In a literal sense, writing up a judgment in a docket is "entering" it; as, entering the judgment of a justice of the peace.[6]

6. In the practice of legislative bodies, the orderly inscription in a journal of any action or determination required to be preserved in writing.

The constitution of Iowa requires that a proposed amendment "shall be entered" in the journals of the two houses of Assembly "with the yeas and nays."

[1] Hodgkins v. Price, 132 Mass. 200 (1882), Lord, J.; Presbrey v. Presbrey, 13 Allen, 284 (1866); 10 Oreg. 485.

[2] Iron Mountain & Helena R. Co. v. Johnson, 119 U. S. 611 (1887), Miller, J.

[3] Denver & Rio Grande R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 605 (1887), Harlan, J. As to civil action, see 22 Cent. Law J. 292 (1886), cases.

[4] See generally Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 376-77 (1886), cases; Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 213 (1886).

[1] Blaine v. Bourne, 11 R. I. 121 (1875), Potter, J.

[2] [United States v. Baker, 5 Bened. 35 (1871), Blatchford, J.; 12 St. L. 737.

[3] United States v. Seidenberg, 17 F. R. 230 (1883), Pardee, J.

[4] Chotard v. Pope, 12 Wheat. 588 (1827), Johnson, J.

[5] Uren v. Walsh, 57 Wis. 102 (1883); R. S. Wis § 3042.

[6] Conwell v. Kuykendall, 29 Kan. 707, 710 (1883); Kan. Comp. Laws, 1879, ch. 81, § 115.

This means that the amendment shall be spread at length thereon, and the yeas and nays set out in the journal in full. But instances where "to enter" and "entered" do not mean to spread at length may be cited. The object to be obtained must be considered in each case.[1] See YEAS AND NAYS.

III. As a Remedy. A "writ of entry," at common law, was a proceeding by which the possession of land, wrongfully withheld from its owner, could be recovered.

A real action, possessory in nature. In a greatly modified form, has been used in this country. In England, superseded by the action of ejectment, and, later, abolished.[2]

ENUMERATION. Separate mention.

The enumeration of particular things in an instrument may include others of the same class; there is no absolute rule that such enumeration includes things of a different class, when the general terms are broad enough to include them.[3] See EJUSDEM GENERIS; EXPRESSIO, Unius, etc.; GENERAL, 6; OTHER.

ENURE. See INURE.

ENVELOPE. See LETTER, 8; PUBLICATION, 2.

ENVOY. See MINISTER, 8.

EO. L. On that, in that; at the same. See Is.

Eo die. On the same day, at the same time; as, eo die, writ issued.

Eo instante. At the same moment or instant.

Eo nomine. In or under the same name; as, interest eo nomine.

EPIDEMIC. See DISEASE; HEALTH.

When, in a policy of insurance, it does not appear that the word "epidemics" was understood by the parties in any other than its popular sense, evidence is not admissible to change that meaning. The insurer may stipulate for exemption from liability for any disease that may by possibility prevail to an extent which could be called epidemic.[4]

EQUAL.[5] Compare EQUIVALENT.

Like or alike in quality, degree, amount, or merit; corresponding; uniform; the same: as, equal provision, equity, protection, rights.

Equal to. Not less than: as, in an agreement to keep the number of boats in a freight line "equal to" the number leased.[6]

Equally. In a will, may mean not that shares are to be held in the same manner, but as equal in quantity.[1]

A per capita division is intended by "divided equally," whether the devisees are children and grandchildren, brother or sisters, nephews or nieces, or strangers in blood to the testator.[2]

When a testator designates the objects of his gift by their relationship to a living ancestor, they take equal shares, per capita. But this rule will be controlled by the general intention of the testator.[3]

"Equality is equity," and where distribution is to be made among two or more, without anything to indicate the proportions, the presumption is that the shares are equal.[4]

An estate given to two persons, "equally to be divided" between them, is, under a deed, a joint tenancy; under a will, a tenancy in common. In the case of a deed is implied no more than the law has annexed to the estate, viz., divisibility; in the case of a will, the devisor may be presumed to have meant what is most beneficial to both devisees.[5]

Equality. Uniformity, likeness; sameness: as, of civil liberty. See CITIZEN, Amendment, XIV; EQUITY; TAX, 2.

EQUITABLE. See EQUITY, Equitable.

EQUITY.[6] 1. The point of contact between the law of nations (q. v.) and the law of nature was "equity;" a term which some derive from a Greek word denoting the principle of equal distribution: but that origin is to be preferred which gives the term the sense of "leveling." The civil law of Rome recognized many arbitrary distinctions between classes of men and property. The neglect of these distinctions was that feature of the law of nature which is depicted in equity. It was first applied, without ethical meaning, to foreign litigants.[7]

2. Equality of right; exact justice between contending parties; fairness in determining conflicting claims; justice.

3. That portion of natural justice which is

[1] Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 557, 556 (1883), Seevers, J.

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 180.

[3] Corwin v. Hood, 58 N. H. 402 (1878); Re Swigert, 119 Ill. 89 (1886).

[4] Pohalski v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 252 (1873); affirmed, 56 N. Y. 640 (1874).

[5] L. æqualis: æquus, even, level, exact; just, right, fair.

[6] Stewart v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 517 (1875).

[1] Bannister v. Bull, 16 S. C. 227 (1881).

[2] Purnell v. Culbertson, 12 Bush, 370-71 (1876), cases.

[3] Young's Appeal, 83 Pa. 63 (1876), cases; Risk's Appeal, 52 id. 271 (1866); Harris's Estate, 74 id. 453 (1873); Walker v. Griffin, 11 Wheat. 375 (1826).

[4] Lewis's Appeal, 89 Pa. 513 (1879). See also 37 Ala. 208; 20 Conn. 122; 120 Mass. 135; 46 Md. 186; 37 Miss. 59; 46 N. H. 489; 30 N. J. E. 595; 33 id. 520; 70 N. Y. 512; 33 Ohio St. 328; 104 Pa. 637; 10 Gratt. 275; 4 Ired. E. 244; 5 id. 324; 6 id. 437; 10 Ves. 166; 8 Beav. 579; 4 Kent, 375; Roper. Leg. 88, 156.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 193; 5 Cow. 221.

[6] L. æquitas, the quality of being æquus, even, level, equal, q. v.

[7] Maine, Ancient Law, p. 55.

made up of the decisions of the judges of the English court of chancery in the exercise of their extraordinary jurisdiction. See further CHANCERY.

"In this sense, equity is wider than law, and narrower than natural justice, in the extent of the subject-matters within its jurisdiction: it cannot be defined in its content otherwise than by an enumeration of the matters."

Not the chancellor's sense of moral right nor of what is equal and just, but a complex system of established law.[1]

That portion of remedial justice exclusively administered by a court of equity, as contradistinguished from the portion exclusively administered by a court of common law.[2]

In the most general sense we are accustomed to call that equity which, in human transactions, is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which properly arises ex æquo et bono. In this sense it answers precisely to the definition of justice, or natural law, given by Justinian in his Pandects. And the word jus is used in the same sense in the Roman law. . . It would be a great mistake to suppose that equity, as administered in England and America, embraced a jurisdiction as wide and extensive as that which arises from the principles of natural justice above stated. Probably the jurisprudence of no civilized nation ever attempted so wide a range of duties for any of its judicial tribunals. Even the Roman law, which has been justly thought to deal to a vast extent in matters ex æquo et bono, never affected so bold a design. On the contrary, it left many matters of natural justice wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, and kindness, or even to positive engagements of parties, where they are not founded in what constitutes a meritorious consideration. . . A still more limited sense of the term is that in which it is used in contradistinction to strict law — strictum et summum jus. Thus, Aristotle has defined the very nature of equity to be the correction of the law, wherein it is defective by reason of its universality. It is of this equity, as correcting, mitigating, or interpreting the law, that, not only civilians, but common-law writers, are most accustomed to speak.[3]

The general purpose of equity is to moderate the rigor of the law, supply its deficiencies, and bring it into harmony with conscience and moral justice.[4] See CONSCIENCE.

The term "equity" is also used, elliptically, for a court of equity or a court administering the principles of equity: as when it is said that equity will reform an instrument, or will afford relief or redress.

And "equities" is often employed to denote the several rights or interests, whatever they may be, belonging to one person or party, which will receive recognition and enforcement in a court of equity.[1]

"This court held that there was no equity in the bill, on the ground that, if the plaintiff had any right of action for money had and received, it was an action at law."[2] See DEMURRER, General.

Court of equity. The essential difference between a court of equity and a court of law consists in the different modes of administering justice in them, in the modes of proof, of trial, and of relief.[3]

A court of equity — (1) adapts its decrees to all the varieties of circumstances which may arise, and adjusts them to all the peculiar rights of all the parties in interest; whereas a court of common law is bound down to a fixed and invariable form of judgment in general terms, altogether absolute, for the plaintiff or the defendant. (2) It can administer remedies for rights which a court of common law does not recognize at all; or, which, if recognized, are left wholly to the conscience and good-will of the parties. Such are trusts, many cases of losses and injuries by mistake, accident, and fraud; cases of penalties and forfeitures; cases of impending irreparable injuries, or meditated mischiefs; cases of oppressive proceedings, undue advantages and impositions, betrayals of confidence, and unconscionable bargains. (3) Remedies in a court of equity are often different, in nature, mode, and degree from remedies in a court of law, even when each has jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Thus, a court of equity, if a contract is broken, will often compel specific performance; whereas a court of law can only give damages for the breach. So, a court of equity will interfere by way of injunction to prevent wrongs; whereas a court of common law can grant redress only, when the wrong is done. (4) The modes of seeking and granting relief differ. A court of law tries a contested fact by means of a jury; and the evidence is generally drawn from third persons, disinterested witnesses. But a court of equity tries causes without a jury; and, addressing itself to the conscience, requires the defendant, under oath, to give his knowledge of the facts stated in a bill in the nature of a bill of discovery,[4] q. v.

Perhaps the most general, if not the most precise, definition of a court of equity is, that it has jurisdiction in cases of rights, recognized and protected by the municipal juris-

[1] Savings Institution v. Makin, 23 Me. 366 (1844), Shepley, J.

[2] [1 Story, Equity Jurisprudence, § 25.

[3] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 1-3, 6, 8. See also 1 Pomeroy, Eq., pp. 36-38, 308-21.

[4] 3 Pars. Contr. 393.

[1] See 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 146.

[2] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 547 (1888), Miller, J.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 426.

[4] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 28-31. See also 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 129-45.

prudence, where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy cannot be had in the courts of common law.[1]

In America, this branch of jurisprudence has grown up chiefly since the formation of the National government. It follows the model of the English court of chancery; except that, in some States, and in the National tribunals, it is administered by the common-law courts; in some the jurisdiction is very imperfect, in others scarcely known.[2]

The great advantage possessed by a court of equity is not so much in its enlarged jurisdiction as in the extent and adaptability of its remedial powers. Generally its jurisdiction is as well defined and limited as that of a court of law. It cannot exercise jurisdiction when there is an adequate and complete remedy at law. It cannot assume control over that large class of obligations called imperfect obligations, resting upon conscience and moral duty only, unconnected with legal obligations. Generally its jurisdiction depends upon legal obligations and its decrees can only enforce remedies to the extent and in the mode established by law. It cannot, by avowing that there is a right but no remedy known to the law, create a remedy in violation of law, or even without authority of law. It acts upon established principles not only, but through established channels.[3]

Courts of law and of equity are independent. They act upon different principles, and, except where some recognized ground of equity jurisdiction is concerned, are each alike bound to recognize the validity and conclusiveness of the record of what the other has done. Equity, in such cases, does not contradict but supplements. It does in this way what right and justice require, and what, from the inflexibility of the principles upon which a court of law proceeds, it could not do.[4]

When a court of equity has once acquired jurisdiction of a cause it may go on to a complete adjudication, even to the extent of establishing legal rights and granting legal remedies.[5]

A too severe application of the common-law rules forced the courts of chancery into existence in England. The body of the chancery law is nothing more than a system of exceptions; of principles applicable to cases falling within the letter but not within the intention of particular rules. The exercise of equity powers, in every government of laws, is conclusive proof of a necessity that they be lodged somewhere. Every rule, from its universality, must be defective. A legislature can do little more than mark out general principles; their application, as well as the more minute details, must in general be left to the courts, as cases arise.[6]

The absence of a plain and adequate remedy at law affords the only test of equitable jurisdiction, and the application of this principle to a particular case must depend altogether upon the character of the case as disclosed in the pleadings.[1]

Where there is plain, adequate and complete relief at law, the defendant has a right to a trial by jury.[2]

The office and jurisdiction of a court of equity, unless enlarged by express statute, are limited to the protection of rights of property. It has no jurisdiction over the prosecution, the punishment, or the pardon of crimes, or over the appointment and removal of public officers. To assume such a jurisdiction would be to invade the domain of the courts of common law, or of the administrative department of government. Any jurisdiction over criminal matters that the English court of chancery ever had became obsolete long ago, except as incidental to its peculiar jurisdiction for the protection of infants, or under its authority to issue writs of habeas corpus for the discharge of persons unlawfully imprisoned.[3]

Equity does not enjoin against a crime as a crime. But injunctions have often been granted against acts injurious to individuals, though they have also amounted to a crime against the public.[4]

The equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts is derived from the Constitution and laws of the United States, and is not affected by State statutes. Section 913 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that the modes of proceeding in equity causes shall be according to the principles, rules, and usages which belong to courts of equity, refers to the principles, rules, and usages by which the English court of chancery was governed at the time of the passage of the Judiciary Act in 1789.[5]

The test of equity jurisdiction in the Federal courts — namely, the inadequacy of the remedy at law — is the remedy which existed when the Judiciary Act of 1789 was adopted, unless subsequently changed by Congress.[6]

The practice in a court of equity is regulated by law or rule, and cannot be varied by the agreement of parties.[7] See PROBATE, Court of.

Bill in equity. The document by which a suit is begun in a court of equity.

Is in the style of a petition; and in the nature of a declaration at law. Sets forth the circumstances of the case at length, alleging that a trust relation exists, or that some fraud, accident, mistake, or peculiar hardship exists or has been or is attempted; avers want of adequate relief at law; asks for a subpœna

[1] 1 Story, Eq. § 33.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 54–58.

[3] Reese v. City of Watertown, 19 Wall. 121-22 (1873), Hunt, J.

[4] Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 167 (1876), Swayne, J.

[5] Walters v. Farmers' Bank, 76 Va. 18 (1881); 1 Story, Eq. § 65; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 181.

[6] Pennock v. Hart, 8 S. & R. 378 (1822), Gibson, J.

[1] Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 79 (1866), Davis, J.; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 351–52 (1886), cases.

[2] Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 278 (1856); Parker v. Winnipiseogee, &c. Co., 2 Black, 551 (1862), cases; Smith v. Bourbon County, 127 U. S. 111 (1888).

[3] Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 210 (1888), cases, Gray, J.

[4] Sparhawk v. Union Passenger R'y Co., 54 Pa. 418 (1867), Strong, J.

[5] Strettell v. Ballou, 3 McCrary, 47 (1881), McCrary, J.; Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet. 658 (1832); 3 Wheat. 212; 4 id. 115; 13 How. 271; 2 Black. 551; 1 McCrary, 162.

[6] McConihay v. Wright, 121 U. S. 206 (1887).

[7] Nickerson v. Atchison, &c. R. Co., 30 F. R. 86 (1886).

to compel respondent to answer the charges, and, perhaps, for an injunction. Calls into court as parties all persons interested in the subject-matter. Should contain no scandalous or impertinent matter. Filing the bill is followed, in different suits, by service of the subpœna, sequestration, appearance, demurrer, plea to the jurisdiction or to the person, answer, amendments, supplemental bills, cross-bills, decree or reference to a master for a report as to the facts and the form of a decree, exceptions to the report, final hearing, final decree, bill of review, appeal to a higher court. See further BILL, IV.

Better equity. A claim to property superior, in contemplation of a court of equity, to another claim.

In this category is a second mortgagee who has no knowledge of the existence of a prior unrecorded mortgage.

Countervailing equity. Such equity as offsets or counteracts another equity; an adverse counter-balancing right or equity.

Equal equity. Equality of equitable right.

Exists between persons who have been equally innocent and equally diligent.[1]

Equity of a statute. The intention of the law-maker, as evinced by the spirit and reason of an enactment. See further STATUTE.

Equity of redemption. The reasonable time within which a mortgagor may redeem his estate after forfeiture. See further REDEEM.

Equity of settlement; wife's equity. See SETTLE, 8.

Secret equity. An interest or claim, cognizable in a court of equity, of which notice has been withheld from one or more interested persons or from the public generally.

Equitable. 1. According to natural right or justice; just and right in a particular case, as distinguished from the strict rule of a general, positive law. Opposed, inequitable.

2. That which can be sustained or made available or effective in a court of equity, or upon principles of equity jurisprudence.[2] Opposed, legal.

The remedies for the redress of wrongs and the enforcement of rights are: (1) those which are administered in courts of common law; and (2) those which are administered in courts of equity. Rights which are recognised and protected, and wrongs which are redressed, by the former courts are called "legal" rights and "legal" injuries. Rights which are recognized and protected, and wrongs which are redressed, by the latter courts only, are called "equitable" rights and "equitable" injuries. The former are said to be rights and wrongs at common law, and the remedies, remedies at common law; the latter, rights and wrongs in equity, and the remedies, remedies in equity.[1]

It is customary to speak of "equitable" (and legal) — action, assets, assignment, consideration, conversion, defense, estate, estoppel, execution, interest, jurisdiction, levy, lien, mortgage, owner, plaintiff, remedy, title, value, waste, qq. v.

In the Federal courts, the distinction between legal and equitable proceedings is strictly maintained; distinct proceedings must be instituted for the enforcement of equitable rights.[3]

Separate courts of equity exist in Alabama, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey, and Tennessee. In Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, and West Virginia, chancery powers are exercised by the judges of the common-law courts. In the other States, the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished, but certain equitable remedies are still administered under the statutory form of the civil action.[3]

In a given case equity jurisdiction may be exclusive of the law, auxiliary to it, remedial of it, or concurrent with it — that is, executive, adjustive, or protective.[4]

Maxims embodying fundamental principles upon which equity jurisprudence rests, are: Equity, once having had, does not lose, jurisdiction; follows the law — in affording redress;[5] assists the vigilant; suffers no right to be without a remedy; suffers the law to prevail, where there is equal equity or equality; delights in equality — is equality;[6] requires that he who seeks equity must do equity — must come with clean hands;[7] as to the particular transaction in review;[8] looks on that as done which ought to be done[9] — imputes intention to fulfill obligations; delights to do justice, and that not by halves. Nothing can call forth a court of equity into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence.[10]

See further terms in this title, and, especially, ACCI-

[1] See Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. *210 (1836).

[2] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[1] 1 Story, Eq. § 25.

[2] See Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 102 (1871).

[3] See Bispham, Eq. § 15; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 56–58.

[4] Smith, Manual Eq. 33.

[5] 107 U. S. 11; 110 id. 284, 291.

[6] 101 U. S. 406; 109 id. 512.

[7] 108 U. S. 225; 109 id. 526.

[8] 26 Wend. 166; 1 Black, 93.

[9] 3 Wheat. 578; 50 Conn. 111.

[10] 1 How. 189, 168; 95 U. S. 160. See generally 1 Story, Eq. §§ 59–74; 1 Pomeroy, Eq., Ch. I, § 363; early English equity (uses and contracts), 1 Law Quar. Rev. 162–74 (1885), O. W. Holmes, Jr.; common law and conscience in the ancient court of chancery, ib. 443–54 (1885), L. Owen Pike; the administration of equity through

DENT; ADEQUATE, 2; DISCOVERY, 6; ELECTION, 2; FICTION; FRAUD; HEARING; IGNORANCE; ISSUE, 4; MASTER, 4; MISTAKE; PARTY, 2; PATENT, 2; PEACE, 1, Bill of; PERFORMANCE, Specific; PREJUDICE, Without; QUIA TIMET; RECEIVER, 2; REFORM; RELIEF, 2; RESCISSION; SATISFACTION, (2); SEQUESTRATION, 2; SET-OFF; TRUST, 1; USE, 3.

EQUIVALENT.[1] 1, adj. (1) Equal in force or power, in effect or import: as, equivalent — terms, stipulations.

(2) Equally good: as, the equivalent chemical action of fluids.[2]

2, n. A device or machine operating on the same principle and performing the same functions, by analogous means or equivalent combination, as another device or machine.[3]

Only those things are equivalents which perform the same functions in substantially the same way. Thus, celluloid is not an equivalent for hard rubber.[4]

The substantial equivalent of a thing is the same as that thing itself. Two devices which perform the same functions in substantially the same way, and accomplish substantially the same result, are the same, though they differ in name and form.[5]

A patentee is protected against equivalents for any part of his invention. But a process is not infringed by the use of any number of its stages less than all of them.[6]

Equivalents may be claimed by the patentee of an invention consisting of a combination of old elements or ingredients, as well as of any other valid patented improvement, provided the arrangement of the parts comprising the invention is new, and will produce a new and useful result. The term as applied to such an invention is special in its signification and somewhat different from what is meant when applied to an invention consisting of a new device or an entirely new machine.[7]

An equivalent for an ingredient of a combination of parts that are old must be one which was known at the date of the original patent as a proper substitute for the ingredient left out. An equivalent in such case performs the same function as the other.[8] See COMBINATION, 1; PATENT, 2.

EQUIVOCAL. See AMBIGUITY.

ER. The Teutonic form of the Latin or in terminations.

Annexed to words of English origin. See OR, 1.

ERASURE. See ALTERATION, 2.

ERECT.[1] 1. To lift up, build, construct: as, to erect — a building, a fixture.

A house cannot be said to be erected until substantially completed; before that it is a structure, not a "building erected" for a purpose.[2]

Removing a building is not erecting it;[3] nor is elevating and materially enlarging it.[4] But erecting or repairing may include painting.[5]

An erection is a construction.[6]

A public grant conditioned on the "erection" of buildings is satisfied by the purchase of buildings already erected.[7] See STRUCTURE.

2. To found, form, institute, establish, create: as, to erect — a new county, a district for election or judicial purposes, a corporation.[8]

ERIE, LAKE. See LAKES.

ERMINE. 1. The mustela erminea, Armenian rat; the fur of which is pure white in winter time.

2. The dignity of judges, whose state robes, lined with the fur of the ermine, are regarded as emblematical of purity.[9] Whence judicial ermine, for judicial integrity. See GOWN, 2.

ERRATUM. L. Error.

In nullo est erratum. In nothing is there error. The emphatic words of a joinder of issue on an assignment of error, as originally expressed.

By this plea the defendant admits a fact regularly assigned.[10] The plea is in the nature of a demurrer.[11] See ERROR, 2 (3), Writ of.

ERRONEUS. See ERROR, 2 (2), Erroneous.

ERROR. 1. Lat. A wandering; a mistake; an error. Compare ERRATUM.

---

common-law forms, ib. 455–65 (1885), S. G. Fisher; brief survey of equity jurisdiction, 1 Harv. Law Rev. 55–72, 111–131, 355–87 (1887), cases, C. C. Langdell.

[1] L. æquus, equal, valere, to be strong, be worth.

[2] Tyler v. City of Boston, 7 Wall. 330 (1868).

[3] See McCormick v. Talcott, 20 How. 405 (1857), Grier, Justice.

[4] Goodyear Vulcanite Co. v. Davis, 102 U. S. 230, 222 (1880), Strong, J.

[5] Union Paper-Bag Machine Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S. 125 (1877), Clifford, J.

[6] Goodyear Co. v. Davis, supra; Crouch v. Boemer, 103 U. S. 797 (1880).

[7] Imhaeuser v. Buerk, 101 U. S. 655 (1879), Clifford, J.

[8] Gill v. Wells, 22 Wall. 2, 28 (1874), cases, Clifford, J. See Gage v. Herring, 107 U. S. 647 (1882); 1 Wall. 573; 8 id. 328.

[1] L. erectus, set up, upright: erigere, eregere, to raise or set up.

[2] McGary v. People, 45 N. Y. 161 (1871), Allen, J.

[3] Brown v. Hunn, 27 Conn. 332 (1858).

[4] Douglass v. Commonwealth, 2 Rawle, 264 (1830).

[5] Martine v. Nelson, 51 Ill. 423 (1869).

[6] Trask v. Searle, 121 Mass. 231 (1876); 2 Allen, 159.

[7] Kiefer v. German American Seminary, 46 Mich. 641 (1881).

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 469–71, 472, 474.

[9] [Webster's Dict.

[10] Burkholder v. Stahl, 58 Pa. 377 (1868).

[11] Bragg v. Danielson, 141 Mass. 195 (1886); 9 Mass. 532; 7 Wend. 55.

Communis error facit jus. A common error makes the law. Long-continued practice, though originally erroneous, establishes the rule of law.

A maxim or procedure, purely; briefly stated as the rule of communis error.

A received doctrine shall not be overturned or abandoned, even though its soundness in principle may be questioned. "It is more material that the law should be settled than how it is settled." [1]

"We are not inclined by a technical exposition of an act to unsettle rights honestly acquired and upon which many persons have rested for years." [2]

The executive branch of a government must necessarily construe the laws which it executes; and its construction, which has been followed for years, without interference by the law-making power, should not be departed from without the most cogent reasons. A long-continued practice under such circumstances ripens into an authoritative construction. The law, in its regard for the public good, goes so far, in some cases, as to hold that communis error facit jus; but courts should be slow to set up a misconception of the law as the law.[3]

Long acquiescence in repeated acts of legislation on particular matters is evidence that those matters have been generally considered by the people as properly within legislative control. Such acts are not to be set aside or treated as invalid, because upon a careful consideration of their character doubts may arise as to the competency of the legislature to pass them.[4]

See CONSENSUS, Tollit, etc.; EXPOSITIO, Contemporanea, etc.

2. Eng. (1) A mistake; an omission.

Clerical error. A failure to reduce the intent of parties to writing, not affecting the intent itself.

Attributable to carelessness or miswriting; and disregarded or corrected.

Also, a mistake of a clerk in preparing a record. See MISPRISION, 2.

(2) An unintentional deviation from the truth in a matter of fact, and from the law in a matter of opinion or decision.

Such irregularity, misconception, or wrong application of the law as directs that the proceeding should be reversed on appeal or writ of error.

[1] Forsythe, Hist. Lawyers, 395, quoting Lord Eldon.

[2] Kostenbader v. Spotts, 80 Pa. 437-38 (1876); 13 id. 561; 78 id. 308; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175 (1863); Herndon v. Moore, 18 S. C. 354 (1882): 2 Whart. Ev. § 1242.

[3] Harrison v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 170 (1885); Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 613 (1888), cases.

[4] Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 204 (1888), Field, J., on the power of a legislature to grant a divorce by a special act; also, Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 261 (1867).

Applied where the practice of a colony differed from the requirements of the law of England as to a wife's acknowledging a deed,—1 Dallas, *13, 17.

Erroneous. Deviating from the law.

What is "illegal" lacks authority of or support from law. "Erroneous rulings" always mean such as deviate from or are contrary to law. "Erroneous" alone never designates a corrupt or evil act. "Erroneous and illegal" means deviating from the law because of a mistaken construction.[1]

An "erroneous judgment" is rendered according to the course and practice of the courts, but contrary to law. An "irregular judgment" is contrary to the course and practice of the courts.[2]

(3) A writ of error: as in saying that error lies or does not lie, that a judgment may be reversed or was reversed "on error," and in speaking of the plaintiff and the defendant "in error."

Assignment of error; specification of error. The statement of the error which an inferior tribunal is alleged to have committed; also, the paper containing such statement.

Spoken of as "cross," when made upon the same matter as is alleged for error by the opposite party; as "general," when upon more matters than one; and as "specific," when upon some one matter in particular. General assignments of error are not tolerated.

Court of errors. A court for correcting errors made in administering the law in subordinate tribunals. See PAPER, 5.

Error coram nobis; error coram vobis. When a writ was had to re-examine a judgment, in a civil or criminal cause, in the court of king's bench, by that court itself, it was called "a writ of error coram nobis," that is, error before us—the sovereign; when to re-examine a judgment rendered in the common pleas, in a civil case only, by the king's bench, it was called "a writ of error coram vobis," that is, error before you—the chief justice and associates.

The writ coram vobis was also brought before the same court in which the error was committed to supply or rectify a mistake of fact not put in issue or passed upon by the court; such as the death of a party when the judgment was rendered, coverture of a female party, infancy and failure to appoint a guardian, error in the process, or mistake of the clerk. But if the error was in the judgment itself the writ did not lie.

The two expressions are now applied, respectively, to a writ to review proceedings, not carried to judgment, had in the same court (before us), and to a writ issued to bring up for revision a record of what was done in an inferior court.

[1] [Thompson v. Doty, 72 Ind. 338 (1880), Elliott, J.

[2] Wolfe v. Davis, 74 N. C. 599 (1876), Reade, J. See Koonce v. Butler, 84 id. 228 (1881).

What was formerly done by the writ coram nobis is now attained by motion and affidavit.[1]

Error in fact. Such matter of fact, not appearing on the record, as renders the judgment entered unsupportable in law; as, infancy or coverture in a party.

A fact that might have been taken advantage of in the court below is not assignable for error; nor is a fact that contradicts the record.[2]

Error in law. Any substantial defect in the proceedings not cured by the common law nor by statute, injurious to and not waived by the complainant, and made to appear on the record, is assignable for reversal; also, any incorrect decision on a right of either party, as presented by the pleadings, special verdict, bill of exceptions, or opinion filed.

Reviewable errors in law are: those apparent upon the face of the record,—available on general demurrer or in arrest of judgment; and, those brought up by a bill of exceptions,—objections to the admission or rejection of evidence and errors in the charge of the court.

Error of fact. When a fact is unknown, or is erroneously supposed to exist.

Error of law. When a person is acquainted with the existence or non-existence of a fact, but is ignorant of the legal consequence, he is under an error of law.[3] See IGNORANCE.

No error. The form of the judgment of the court of appeals of Connecticut, affirming the decision of the lower court.

Writ of error. A commission by which the judges of one court are authorized to examine a record upon which a judgment was given in another court, and, on such examination, to affirm or reverse the same according to law.[4]

An original writ, and lies only where a party is aggrieved by some error in the foundation, proceedings, judgment, or execution, of a suit in a court of record.[5]

The supervisory court is called "the court of error."

In the nature of a suit or action, when to restore one to the possession of a thing withheld from him. Submits the judgment to re-examination; operates only upon the record — which is removed into the supervisory tribunal; is the more usual mode of removing suits at common law, and the more technically proper where a single point of law, and not the whole case, is to be re-examined.[1]

Must be regular in form and duly served. To operate as a supersedeas and stay of execution, must be issued and returned within a given period from the date of the judgment.[6]

On review nothing is error that is not made to appear on the face of the record. Error will be inferred only when the inference is inevitable. Every error apparent is open to re-examination.[8]

A writ of error lies in all cases where a court of record has given a "final" judgment, or made an award in the nature of a judgment, or where a judgment has been arrested, or, on an appeal from a justice, has been dismissed; also, on an award of execution.[4]

Proceedings in a court of error assimilate themselves to proceedings in a court of original jurisdiction. The writ of error in a general way recites the cause of complaint, and it is left to the assignments of error to specify it as a declaration specifies the cause of action. The plea in nullo est erratum raises the issue. Like a declaration, therefore, each assignment must be complete in itself, that is, be self-sustaining. Whatever is part of it must be parcel of it. The burden rests upon the plaintiff to make out his assignments affirmatively.[8] See ERRATUM.

A writ of error lies from inferior criminal jurisdictions to the court of king's bench, and from the king's bench to the house of peers; and may be brought for "notorious mistake" in the judgment or other part of the record, or for an irregularity, omission, or want of form, in the process. . . To reverse a judgment in the case of a misdemeanor, allowed, not of course, but on sufficient probable cause shown to the attorney-general,— then grantable of common right and ex debito justitiæ. But a writ to reverse an attainder in a capital case is only allowed ex gratia; and not without express warrant under the king's sign-manual, or at least by consent of the attorney-general.[6]

See APPEAL, 2; CERTIORARI; EXCEPTIONS, 4, Bill of; PROSECUTE, With effect; REVIEW, 2, Bill of; SUPERSEDEAS.

ESCAPE.[7] 1, n. (1) Flight from custody, of a person under lawful arrest.

[1] Pickett v. Legerwood, 7 Pet. 147-48 (1833); Exp. Lange, 18 Wall. 195 (1873), cases; Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 416-17 (1881); 1 Flip. 343; 3 Chitty, Bl. Com. 406; 4 Crim. Law Mag. 364, 371; 34 Pa. 95.

[2] Tidd, Pr. 1169; 2 Bac. Abr. 492.

[3] [Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. 360 (1828), Savage, C. J.

[4] Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 409 (1821), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[5] Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427 (1857), Clifford, J.

[1] Cohens v. Virginia, ante.

[2] Slaughter-House Cases, 10 Wall. 290 (1869), cases; Kountz v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 381-85 (1882); Murdock v. City of Memphis, 20 Wall. 621 (1875).

[3] 6 Wheat. 409-11, ante; 20 How. 427; 16 Wall. 363, 386; 100 U. S. 690.

[4] Pontius v. Nesbit, 40 Pa. 310 (1861).

[5] Burkholder v. Stahl, 58 Pa. 376 (1868), Thompson, C. J.; Bragg v. Danielson, 141 Mass. 195 (1886).

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 391; 4 Burr. 2550. See also 3 Dall. 327; 7 Cranch, 111; 61 Ala. 484; 3 Col. 293; 6 Fla. 289; 13 Ga. 148; 20 id. 535; 1 Wash. T. 319.

[7] F. escaper, to slip out of one's cape: L. ex cappa,— Skeat. F. escamper, to flee: Ger. champf, combat,— Webster.

(2) Allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place.[1]

Actual escape. Complete corporal freedom. Constructive escape. Any unauthorized relaxation of custody.

Negligent escape. Effected without the keeper's knowledge or consent. Voluntary escape. Expressly consented to by the keeper.[2]

Any liberty given for the briefest period, and not sanctioned by law, is an escape. But the court must have had jurisdiction, the process have been regular, and the place and time proper. At common law an escape is a misdemeanor in the prisoner; and, if the offense is a felony, a voluntary escape is a like felony, and a negligent escape is a misdemeanor, in the officer. An escape resulting from an act of God or of the public enemy will be excused.[3]

Formerly, when imprisonment was the only mode to enforce satisfaction of a judgment for money, to permit an escape was to lose the amount of the debt. Hence, on an escape, the sheriff was held for the whole debt.[4]

An officer of the United States who voluntarily suffers a prisoner in custody under the law of the United States to escape shall be fined not more than two thousand dollars or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.[5]

2, v. To be passed by unobserved; to be overlooked.

"To escape taxation" does not mean to be taxed insufficiently, but to have avoided notice, to be passed unobserved, to have evaded taxation.[6]

3, n. Means of retreat. See DEFENSE, 1; FIRE, Escape.

ESCHEAT.[7] In feudal law, the determination of the tenure or dissolution of the bond between lord and tenant from extinction of the blood of the latter by natural or civil means.[8]

Thus, if the tenant died without heirs of his blood, or if his blood was corrupted by commission of treason or felony, whereby the inheritable quality was blotted out, the land "fell back" to the lord of the fee — the tenure being determined by breach of the condition.[9] See ATTAINDER.

The word, originally French or Norman, signifying chance or accident, now denotes obstruction of the course of descent, and determination of tenure, by some unforeseen contingency; in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor.[1] See DESCENT.

2. In the United States, a reversion of property to the State in default of a person who can inherit it.

Depends upon positive statute, which makes the State the heir of the property. Nothing about it but the name is feudal.[2]

Escheator. An officer who takes charge of escheated estates for the government.

ESCROW.[3] An instrument delivered to a third person to hold till some condition is performed by the proposed grantee. A scrowl or writing not to take effect as a "deed" till the condition is performed.[4]

As defined by the common law, a written instrument delivered to a third person to take effect upon the happening of a contingency. Originally applied to a deed; then to written contracts generally.[5]

Nothing passes unless the condition is performed. There can be no delivery, as an escrow, to the grantee himself. When justice requires, it may take effect by relation back to the first delivery.[6] See DELIVERY, 4.

ESNECY. Eldership; the privilege of the eldest. The right in the oldest coparcener first to choose a purpart.

ESPLEES.[7] The products of the land: herbage, hay, grain; rents, services, etc.[8]

ESQUIRE.[9] 1. A title of dignity next below knight, and above gentleman.

2. A title acquired by virtue of office; as, justices of the peace, the higher officers of the courts, and others who bear any office of trust under the crown.

3. A title given to a member of the legal

---

[1] 2 Bish. Crim. L. §§ 917, 1026; 1 Russ. Cr. 416; Colby Sampson, 5 Mass. *312 (1809), Parsons, C. J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 415, 290, 165. See also 32 Ark. 126; 8 ed. L. 151; 25 N. H. 258; 46 N. J. L. 358; 29 Pa. 446; 3 Head, 137.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 129.

[4] Dow v. Humbert, 91 U. S. 300 (1875), cases.

[5] R. S. § 5409.

[6] Lehman v. Robinson, 59 Ala. 240 (1877).

[7] O. Eng. eschete: F. eschet, that which falls to one: eshoir, to happen. See CHEAT.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 72.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 244.

[2] Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 501 (1863). See Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 17 (1874); 4 Kent, 424; 1 Washb. R. P. 24, 27; 2 id. 443; Williams, R. P. 121.

[3] F. escrowe, scroll

[4] [2 Bl. Com. 307.

[5] Alexander v. Wilkes, 11 Lea, 225 (1883), Cooper, J.

[6] See County of Calhoun v. American Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 127 (1876), cases; Shoenberger v. Hackman, 37 Pa. 94 (1860); Baum's Appeal, 113 id. 58, 65 (1886), cases; Daggett v. Daggett, 143 Mass. 520 (1887), cases; 28 Am. Law Reg. 697-99 (1880), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 127-28 (1884), cases — Solic. Jour.; 4 Cranch, 219; 14 How. 73; 59 Cal. 309, 620; 14 Conn. 270; 34 id. 92; 14 Ga. 145; 34 Ill. 29; 77 id. 480; 29 Minn. 249; 30 id. 315; 2 Johns. 253; 26 N. Y. 492; 14 Ohio St. 309; Smith, Contr. 7.

[7] Es-plees'. L. esples: L. explere, to fill up.

[8] 8 Cranch, 249; 9 Barb. 293; 11 S. & R. *275.

[9] F. escuyer, escuier, a shield-bearer: ecu, escu: L. scutum, a shield.

profession, by virtue of length of enjoyment.[1]

4. In the United States, a title of courtesy. Abbreviated Esq., 'Squire or Squire.

ESSE. See IN ESSE.

ESSENCE. See TIME.

ESSOIGN.[2] In old law, an excuse for non-appearance.

"Essoign-day" was for hearing such excuses,—the first day of each term.[3]

ESTABLISH.[4] To settle certainly, fix permanently, what was before uncertain, doubtful, or disputed; as, to establish a boundary line.[5]

To set or fix firmly, settle or found permanently, erect something.[6]

Authority to establish a thing contains authority to do acts which will produce or bring into existence something; as, authority to establish a market.[6]

In a grant of power "to establish" a market, a dispensary, etc., means to permanently create or found.[7]

To establish a company for any business means to make complete and permanent provision for carrying on that business.[8]

A county seat is permanently established at a place when placed there with the intention that it shall remain.[9] See COUNTY.

The right to establish a market includes the right to shift it from place to place, as convenience demands; but gives no right to build one on the public highway.[10] Compare PERMANENT.

Power to establish includes the power to discontinue post-offices, unless the exercise is restrained by Congress.[11]

In the Constitution the word is used in somewhat different senses: "to establish justice" seems to mean to settle firmly, fix unalterably, dispense or administer justice; "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy," is equivalent to to make or to form, and not to fix or settle unalterably or forever; "to establish post-offices and post-routes" means to create, found, and regulate; to "establish this Constitution" signifies to create, ratify, confirm it.[12] See further RELIGION.

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 406.

[2] F. essoine, excuse.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 277.

[4] F. establir: L. stabilis, steady, firm: stare, to stand.

[5] Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 237 (1870), Nesmith, J.

[6] [Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 21 Barb. 298, 296 (1854); 27 id. 260; 28 id. 65.

[7] Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 361 (1856).

[8] Davidson v. Lanier, 4 Wall. 455 (1866).

[9] Newton v. Mahoning County, 100 U. S. 562 (1879); Mead v. Ballard, 7 Wall. 290 (1868); Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 796 (1879); 13 Ill. 463.

[10] Wartman v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 210 (1859).

[11] Ware v. United States, 4 Wall. 632 (1866).

[12] 1 Story, Const. § 454.

ESTATE.[1] 1. Standing: condition, category, state, status.

2. Position; rank in life; degree: as, an addition of estate.[2] See ADDITION, 2; NECESSARIES.

Estates of the realm. The three branches of the English legislature: the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons.[3]

3. (1) (Subjective idea.) Estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments: such interest as the tenant has therein.[4]

In Latin status, the condition or circumstances in which the owner stands with regard to his property.[4]

Does not import a fee or even a freehold, but any legal interest in land.[5]

The quantity of interest which a person has, from absolute ownership down to naked possession.[6]

The condition, in respect to property, of an individual: as, in speaking of the estate of an insolvent or of a deceased person. Here, indebtedness, as well as ownership, is part of the idea. Debts and assets together constitute the estate; if an estate consisted of assets only, the expression insolvent estate would be a misnomer.[7]

(2) (Objective idea.) The thing itself of which one is owner; any species of property, real or personal. Equivalent to the more technical expression, "things real and things personal." More specifically, realty, land, "landed estate."[8]

Sometimes excludes realty; sometimes is a word of mere local description, as, "my estate at" such a place. But when it can be construed to intend all one's realty it carries a fee, as, in devises.[9]

Unless limited by some special epithet or some association, construed to mean all one's property; but "real" or "personal" puts the matter beyond cavil.[10]

[1] F. estat: L. status: stare, to stand.

[2] State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 124 (1838).

[3] See 1 Bl. Com. 153, 157.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 103; 66 Ga. 711; 2 Wall. 500.

[5] Inhabitants of Sunbury v. Inhabitants of Stow, 13 Mass. *464 (1816).

[6] Jackson v. Parker, 9 Cow. 81 (1828), Savage, C. J.; Moody v. Farr, 33 Miss. 195 (1857).

[7] See Abbott's Law Dict., Estate, 4; Davis v. Elkins, 9 La. 142 (1835).

[8] See Sellers v. Sellers, 35 Ala. 241 (1859).

[9] See Bates v. Sparrell, 10 Mass. 324 (1813); Godfrey v. Humphrey, 18 Pick. 539 (1837); Leland v. Adams, 9 Gray, 175 (1857), cases; Canedy v. Jones, 19 S. C. 201 (1882).

[10] Hooper v. Hooper, 9 Cush. 128 (1851); Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pet. 539 (1828); Cook v. Lanning, 40 N. J. E. 372 (1885). See also 3 Cranch, 97; 2 MacA. 70; 2 Cranch, C. C. 640; 16 Conn. 1; 46 Ill. 32; 55 Me. 287; 32 Miss. 107; 14 N. J. L. 58, 68; 14 N. J. E. 51; 40 id. 36-37, 372; 6 Johns. 185; 11 id. 365; 8 R. I. 384; 26 Vt. 260.

An estate may be viewed: I. As to the quantity of interest,— measured by the duration and extent; and is 1, freehold: which is (a) for the life of the tenant, or (b) of inheritance — absolute or fee-simple, and limited or fee-tail; 2, not of freehold: which is (a) for a term of years, (b) at will, (c) at sufferance; 3, upon condition, (a) expressed, or implied, (b) in pledge — mortgage, (c) by statute merchant or staple, (d) by elegit.

II. As to the time the interest is to be enjoyed. This is: 1, in immediate possession; and 2, in the future, or in expectancy — (a) a remainder, preceded by a particular estate, (b) a reversion, preceded by a remainder, and executed or vested, or executory and contingent, and (c) an executory devise.

III. As to the number and connections of the tenants. An estate is held 1, in severalty, 2, in joint-tenancy, 3, in coparcenary, 4, in common.[1]

IV. As to the tribunal in which that interest or right will be recognized and enforced. When that is a court of law, the estate is legal; when a court of equity, equitable. Otherwise the same rules apply to these estates: they are alike descendible, devisable, and alienable.[2]

See CONDITION; COPARCENARY; CURTESY; DESCENT; DOWER; ENTIRETY; EXECUTION, 3; FAST, 1; FEE, 1; FREEHOLD; LIFE; MERGER, 1; PERPETUITY, 2; PRIVY, 2; PROPERTY; REMAINDER; REVERSION; SEPARATE, 2; SEVERALTY; STAPLE; SUFFERANCE; TAIL; TENANT; TRUST, 1; VEST; USE, 2; YEARS, Estate for.

ESTIMATE. Implies a computation or calculation.

The particular idea intended to be expressed by the word must be determined by the subject-matter under consideration, together with the context of any pertinent instrument. Where a redeeming mortgagee stated in his affidavit that there was unpaid on the mortgage, "as near as he could estimate," a specified sum, it was held that this was equivalent to saying that he had computed the sum.[3]

Where a tract of land, "estimated to contain 1,000 acres," was sold by written agreement, for a price in gross, it was held that acquiescence for many years would raise a presumption that the purchaser understood that the sale was in gross; also, that where land is exchanged for other land the liability of the vendor for a deficiency should not be enforced with the same strictness as in the case of a sale for money. The evidence did not disclose any fraudulent assurance calculated to deceive the purchaser.[4]

ESTOPPEL.[5] 1. A stop; obstruction, bar; hindrance, preclusion.

2. That which concludes, and "shuts a man's mouth from speaking the truth."[6]

A man shall always be estopped by his own deed, and not permitted to aver or prove anything in contradiction to what he has once solemnly and deliberately avowed.[1]

A special plea in bar — when a man has done some act or executed some deed which estops or precludes him from averring anything to the contrary.[2]

Estoppel by deed. By some matter contained in a valid sealed instrument.

Estoppel by record. By adjudication of a competent court of record.

Viewed as an admission or determination under circumstances of such solemnity that the law will not allow the fact so admitted or established to be afterward drawn in question between the same parties or their privies. To litigate the fact again would be to impeach the correctness of the former decision. The conclusion being indisputable, so are the premises.

Collateral estoppel. The collateral determination of a question by a court having general jurisdiction over the matter.[4] See ADJUDICATION; RECORD.

Equitable estoppel, or estoppel in pais. An estoppel by virtue of some act or action not under seal nor of record in a court.

"Equitable" is the modern epithet,— derived from the courts of equity.

The doctrine that "what I induce my neighbor to regard as true is the truth as between us, if he has been mislead by my asseveration."[5]

Proceeds upon the ground that he who has been silent as to his alleged right when he ought in good faith to have spoken, shall not be heard to speak when he ought to be silent.[6]

Presupposes error upon one side and fault or fraud upon the other, and some defect of which it would be inequitable for the party against whom the doctrine is asserted to take advantage.[7]

The vital principle is, that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. Ch. VII–XII; 1 Ld. Cas. R. P. ix; 2 id. ix.

[2] Avery v. Durfrees, 9 Ohio, 147 (1839); 5 Wall. 261; 16 id. 229; 28 id. 125; 95 U. S. 312.

[3] Van Buskirk v. Clark, 37 Hun, 208 (1885).

[4] Lawson v. Floyd, 124 U. S. 108 (1888), Miller, J.

[5] F. estoper, to impede, stop.

[6] Armfield v. Moore, 1 Busb. L. 161 (N. C., 1853): Lord Coke; Stebbins v. Bruce, 80 Va. 397 (1885).

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 295.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 308.

[3] Burden v. Shannon, 99 Mass. 203 (1868), cases; Sawyer v. Woodbury, 7 Gray, 502 (1856).

[4] Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 223 (1854), Redfield, C. J.

[5] Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 76 (1880), Harlan, J.

[6] Morgan v. Chicago & Alton R. Co., 96 U. S. 720 (1877), Swayne, J.; Bank of United States v. Lee, 13 Pet. 119 (1839).

[7] Morgan v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., supra; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 645 (1870), cases, Leather Manuf. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 108–9 (1886), cases; Continental Nat. Bank v. Bank of Commonwealth, 50 N. Y. 583 (1872).

otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. . . . A change of position would involve fraud and falsehood. This remedy is available only for protection, and cannot be used as a weapon of assault. It accomplishes that which ought to be done between man and man, and is not permitted to go beyond this limit.[1]

The primary ground of the doctrine is, that it would be a fraud to assert what one's previous conduct had denied, when on the faith of that denial others have acted.[2]

In application there must be some intended deception in conduct or declarations, or such gross negligence as amounts to constructive fraud. But conduct founded on ignorance of one's rights seldom works such result.[3]

One should be estopped from asserting a right of property, upon which he has, by his conduct, misled another, who supposed himself to be the owner, to make expenditures. It is often applied where one owning an estate stands by and sees another erect improvements on it in the belief that he has the title or an interest in it, and does not interfere to prevent the work or inform the party of his own title. There is in such conduct a manifest intention to deceive, or such gross negligence as to amount to constructive fraud. The owner, therefore, in such a case, will not be permitted afterward to assert his title and recover the property, at least without making compensation for the improvements. But this salutary principle cannot be invoked by one who, at the time the improvements were made, was acquainted with the true character of his own title, or with the fact that he had none.[4]

It never takes place where one party did not intend to mislead, and the other party is not actually misled.[5]

An estoppel by conduct involves: a misrepresentation or a concealment of a material fact, made with knowledge of the facts, to one who is ignorant of the truth, made with intention that he should act upon it, and leading him to act upon it.[6]

The representation must be credited as true, and the thing of value be parted with, the credit be given, or the liability be incurred, in consequence thereof.[7]

Where a party gives a reason for his conduct and decision touching a thing involved in controversy, he is estopped, after litigation has begun, from changing the ground and putting his conduct upon another and different consideration.[1]

The only case in which a representation as to the future can be held to operate as an estoppel is when it relates to an intended abandonment of an existing right, and is made to influence others, and by which they have been induced to act. An estoppel cannot arise from a promise as to future action with respect to a right to be acquired upon an agreement not yet made.[2]

Binds parties and privies,[3] but not, one not sui juris, as, an infant,[4] nor a married woman.[5]

The principle is a means of repose; it promotes fair dealing. It cannot be made an instrument of wrong or oppression, and it often secures justice where nothing else could.[6] It is meant to prevent fraud; is invoked to hold one to facts as he alleged them, although false, and not to prove them different from the allegation.[7]

The meaning is not that equitable estoppels are cognizable only in courts of equity, for they are commonly enforced in actions at law. But it does not follow, because equitable estoppels may originate legal as distinguished from equitable rights, that it may not be necessary in particular cases to resort to a court of equity to make them available. All that can properly be said is, that to justify a resort to a court of equity, it is necessary to show some ground of equity other than the estoppel itself, whereby the party entitled to the benefit of it is prevented from making it available in a court of law. In other words, the case shown must be one where the forms of law are used to defeat that which, in equity, constitutes the right.[8]

Is not applicable to the government in a criminal prosecution.[9]

See DISPARAGE, 2; FRAUD; GRANT, 2; LACHES; LEASE; RATIFICATION, 1; SALE, Conditional; STAND BY.

[1] Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580 (1879), Swayne, J.; Baker v. Humphrey, 101 id. 499 (1879), cases.

[2] Hill v. Epley, 31 Pa. 334 (1858), Strong, J.; Gregg v. Von Phul, 1 Wall. 281 (1863), cases; Dair v. United States, 16 id. 4 (1872).

[3] Henshaw v. Bissell, 18 Wall. 271 (1873), cases, Field, J.; Fowler v. Parsons, 143 Mass. 406 (1887).

[4] Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 456 (1882), Field, J. See Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. *354 (1815), Kent, Ch.

[5] Brown v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 541 (1864); Jewett v. Miller, 10 id. 406 (1852); Catlin v. Grote, 4 E. D. Sm. 304 (1855).

[6] Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 333 (1872), Foster, J.; Denver Fire Ins. Co. v. McClelland, 9 Col. 24 (1885); Griffith v. Wright, 6 id. 249 (1882); 41 N. H. 385; 43 id. 285; 11 id. 31; 30 N. Y. 541.

[7] Jones v. McPhillips, 82 Ala. 116 (1886), cases. Stone, Chief Justice.

[1] Ohio & Mississippi R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 267 (1877), cases, Swayne, J.

[2] Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 547–48 (1877), cases, Field, J.

[3] Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 805 (1866); Ketchum v. Duncan, 96 U. S. 666 (1877).

[4] Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 313 (1880).

[5] Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns. 167 (1819); Keen v. Coleman, 39 Pa. 299 (1861); Bigelow, Estop. 376; 27 Am. Law Reg. 50–52 (1888), cases.

[6] Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 420 (1880).

[7] Pendleton v. Richey, 32 Pa. 63 (1858); Keating v. Orne, 77 id. 93 (1874).

[8] Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 253 (1887), Matthews, J. See also, generally, 17 Blatch. 14; 18 id. 33; 6 Biss. 373; 11 id. 209; 2 Flip. 699; 13 F. R. 208; 16 id. 479; 71 Ala. 247; 3 Col. 535; 50 Conn. 86; 2 Dak. 185; 1 Idaho, 469; 105 Ill. 322; 13 Bradw. 99; 72 Ind. 480; 76 id. 390; 30 Kan. 640; 29 Minn. 473; 74 Mo. 67; 42 N. Y. 447; 75 id. 561; 100 Pa. 262, 558; 13 R. I. 265; 76 Va. 314; 10 Wis. 453; 1 Sm. L. C. 651, note; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 801–21; Herman, Estoppel; 2 Whart. Ev., Index.

[9] Justice v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 217 (1885), cases.

ESTOVERS.[1] Maintenance; support; necessaries. Compare BOTE.

Common of estovers; estovers. The liability of taking necessary wood from another's land for fuel, fences or other agricultural purpose.[2] See COMMON, 2, Right of.

ESTRAY.[3] An animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about; at common law, a wandering animal whose owner is unknown.[4]

A wandering beast whose owner is unknown to the person who takes it up.[5]

Estrays are such valuable animals as are found wandering in any manor or lordship, and no man knoweth the owner of them. . . Any beasts may be estrays that are by nature tame or reclaimable, and in which there is a valuable property, as, sheep, oxen, swine, and horses, which we in general call "cattle." . . For animals upon which the law sets no value, as a dog or a cat, and animals ferœ naturæ, as, a bear or a wolf, cannot be considered estrays. . . The finder is bound, so long as he keeps the animal, to feed and care for it; but he may not use it at labor.[6]

By early English law, estrays were the property of the king, or of his grantee — the lord of the manor where found. Modern statutes provide that they shall be impounded, for return to the owner, on payment of expenses.[7] See USE, 2.

ESTREAT.[8] An extract or copy of an original writing or record, — especially of a fine or amercement, certified to and to be levied by an officer.

A recognizance is "estreated" when forfeited by failure of the accused to comply with the condition, as by failure to appear: it is then "extracted," that is, taken from among the other records and sent to the exchequer, the party and his sureties having become, by breach of the condition, the king's absolute debtors.[9]

ESTREPEMENT.[10] Permanent injury, destruction; waste.

Writ of estrepement. This lay at common law, after judgment in a "real" action, and before possession was delivered by the sheriff, to stop any waste which the vanquished party might be tempted to commit.

Now, by an equitable construction of the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I (1280), c. 13, and in advancement of the remedy, a writ of estrepement, to prevent waste, may be had in every stage, as well of such actions wherein damages are recovered, as of those wherein only possession is had; for, peradventure, the tenant may not be able to satisfy the demandant his full damages. It is, then, a writ of preventive justice.[1]

The same object being attainable by injunction, the writ became obsolete in England, and was impliedly abolished by Stat. 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1834), c. 27, § 36.

In Pennsylvania, after an action in ejectment has been begun, the plaintiff may have the writ to prevent destruction of the premises: he having first given a bond, with sureties, conditioned to indemnify the defendant against damage. The court hears the parties in a summary manner, and makes such order as seems just; and it may order an inspection of the premises.[2]

ET. L. And.

The original of &, which in old books is used for et.[3]

Et alius. And another. Et alii. And others (as plaintiffs). Et alios. And others (as defendants). Abbreviated et al., and, sometimes, for the plural, et als.,[4] which, strictly, should stand for et alios.

Et al., in every-day use in writs, pleadings, styles of cases, and entries in minutes and dockets, means "and another," or "and others," as the case may be.[5]

Et cætera. And other things; and others; and the like; and so forth; and in other relations or capacities. Also, sometimes, and other persons. Abbreviated etc., &c.

Used in pleadings to avoid repetitions, relates to things unnecessary to be stated.[6]

A recognizance "for defendant's appearance, &c.," at a time and place, was held to mean for appearance and non-departure.[7]

Added to the reservation of a way for a particular use, as "for the purpose of carting, &c.," is, from vagueness, without meaning or effect.[8]

In a warrant for land, "&c.," in the expression "Ingersoll, &c.," without explanation, was held to have no meaning, and disregarded.[9]

---

[1] F. estoffer, to furnish, maintain.

[2] See 1 Bl. Com. 441; 2 id. 35; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. 639 (1833); Livingston v. Ketcham, 1 Barb. 592 (1849).

[3] F. estraier, to wander: rove about the streets or ways: estree: L. strata, a street, way, — Skeat. L. L. extravagare: L. extra, on the outside, without; vagare, vagari, to wander, rove.

[4] Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Oreg. 208 (1871), Prim, C. J.: Burrill's Law Dict.

[5] Roberts v. Barnes, 27 Wis. 425 (1871), Dixon, C. J.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 297.

[7] See 1 Bl. Com. 297-98; 2 id. 14; 2 Kent, 359; 18 Pick. 426; 132 Mass. 29; 27 Conn. 473; 29 Iowa, 437; 60 Md. 88; 39 Mich. 451; 69 Mo. 205; 82 N. C. 175; 14 Tex. 430.

[8] F. estrait: L. ex-trahere, to draw out, extract.

[9] 4 Bl. Com. 253.

[10] Es-trēpé. F. estreper to destroy, strip: L. ex-tirpare, to root out.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 225-26.

[2] 2 Brightly, Tr. & H. §§ 1857-58, cases.

[3] See 2 Ves. Sr. *153.

[4] 76 Va. 36; 77 id. xi; 6 Gratt.

[5] Renkert v. Elliott, 11 Lea, 262 (1883); Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 633 (1872); 3 La. An. 313; 10 id. 164; 12 id. 282; 14 Pa. 161.

[6] Dano v. Missouri, &c. R. Co., 27 Ark. 568 (1872), McClure, C. J.

[7] Commonwealth v. Ross, 6 S. & R. *498 (1821).

[8] Meyers v. Dunn, 49 Conn. 76 (1881).

[9] Smith v. Walker, 98 Pa. 140 (1881).

May import other purposes of a like character to those already named.[1]

Et infra. See Et supra.

Et non. And not. See TRAVERSE, Absque hoc.

Et sequitur. And what follows. Plural, et sequuntur. Abbreviated et seq.

Refers to pages or paragraphs following a particular page or paragraph cited.

Et supra. And (that) above: the authority or quotation foregoing. Abbreviated et sup. Opposed, et infra: and (that or those) below, or following.

Et uxor, or uxores. And wife, or wives. Abbreviated et ux.

Denotes that a wife or wives are parties to a deed.

ETYMOLOGY. See DICTIONARY.

Legislative language is to be received, not necessarily according to its etymological meaning, but according to its probable acceptance, and especially in the sense in which the legislature is accustomed to use the same words. Illustrated in the expression to "connect" railroad tracks of different gauges.[2]

The courts construe words according to the common parlance of the country. Hence, a corporation engaged in removing petroleum from place to place is a "transportation" company.[3] See STATUTE.

EUNDO. See ARREST, 2.

EVANGELICAL. See CHARITY, 2; INDIGENT.

EVASION. A subtle endeavoring to set aside the truth or to escape the punishment of the law.[4]

Evasive. Tending to evade; avoiding: as, an evasive — affidavit, answer, plea, argument.

Parties are sometimes said to evade, or to seek to evade, the jurisdiction of a particular court, the operation of an obnoxious law, the payment of a tax, service of process.

EVENT. 1. That which comes to pass; result; end; final determination.

"The relator is to pay or receive costs, according to the event of the suit."[5]

2. Occurrence: as, an uncertain event. See AFTER; CONDITION; REMAINDER; WAGER, 2; WHEN.

3. Accident; casualty: as, a fortuitous event. See ACCIDENT, Inevitable.

EVERY. Originally, "everich" — ever each; each one of all.[1]

Includes all the separate individuals which constitute the whole, regarded one by one; as, in the expression, "every person not having a license shall be liable to a fine."[2]

In a statute "every railroad" may mean all railroads.[3] See ALL.

Compare A, 4; ANY; EACH.

EVICTION.[4] It is difficult to define this word with technical accuracy. Latterly, it has denoted what formerly it was not intended to express. In the language of pleading a party evicted was said to be expelled, amoved, put out. The word, which is from evincere, to dispossess by a judicial course, formerly denoted expulsion by the assertion of a paramount title, and by process of law. It is now popularly applied to every class of expulsion or amotion.[5]

A wrongful act by a landlord, which results in the expulsion or amotion of his tenant from the land.[6]

An act of a permanent character done by the landlord to deprive, and which has the effect of depriving, the tenant of the use of the demised thing or a part of it.[7]

To constitute an eviction which will operate as a suspension of the rent, it is not necessary that there should be an actual physical expulsion of the tenant from any part of the premises.[8]

Any act of a permanent character, done by the landlord, or by his procurement, with the intention and effect of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the premises demised, or a part thereof, to which he yields and abandons possession.[8]

A definition has sometimes been given by which, to constitute an eviction, there must be an amotion of the tenant from the demised premises by, or in consequence of, some act of the landlord in derogation of the rights of the tenant, and with intent to determine the tenancy, or to deprive the tenant of the enjoyment

[1] Schouler, Petitioner, 134 Mass. 427 (1883); Dickerson v. Stoll, 24 N. J. L. 553 (1854); Gray v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 11 Hun, 75 (1877). See 105 Mass. 21; 9 Kan. 153; 1 Cow. 114; 4 Daly, 68; 4 Metc., Ky., 211; 10 Mod. R. 152; 6 E. L. & E. 238.

[2] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Catawissa R. Co., 53 Pa. 59 (1866).

[3] Columbia Conduit Co. v. Commonwealth, 90 Pa. 309 (1879); L. R., 10 Ch. Ap. 156.

[4] Jacob's Law Dict.; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 61.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 254.

[1] Brown v. Jarvis, 2 De Gex, F. & J. *172 (1860), Campbell, Ld. Ch.

[2] State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 221 (1883), Simpson, C. J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 81 Va. 367 (1886).

[4] L. evictus: evincere, to overcome, vanquish.

[5] Upton v. Townend, 84 E. C. L. *64, 80 (1855), Jervis, Chief Justice.

[6] [Ibid. *70, Crowder, J.

[7] Ibid. *72, Willes, J.

[8] Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 203 (1870), Gray, J.; McAlester v. Landers, 70 Cal. 82 (1886), cases.

of the premises, or some part thereof. The emotion may be by physical expulsion by the landlord, or by abandonment by the tenant upon some act of the landlord which amounts to an eviction at the election of the tenant. The intent with which the act is done may be an actual intent accompanying and characterizing the act, or it may be inferred from the act itself. . . Generally the question as to what acts of the landlord, in consequence of which the tenant abandons the premises, amount to an eviction, is a question of law, and includes the question whether the acts constitute proof of the intent.[1]

Sometimes spoken of as "actual" or "constructive," and as "partial" or "total."

The idea that the ouster must be by process of law has long since been given up. The rule now is that covenants for quiet enjoyment or of warranty are broken whenever there has been an involuntary loss of possession by reason of the hostile assertion of an irresistible title. Moreover, the eviction may be "constructive" — caused by the inability of the purchaser to obtain possession by reason of the paramount title.[2]

Eviction from all or part or the premises suspends the entire rent for the time being. The tenancy is not thereby ended, but the rent and all remedy for its collection is suspended. To have the effect of suspending the rent the eviction must be effected before the rent becomes due, for rent already overdue is not forfeited. The rule is the same although the rent is payable in advance and the eviction occurs before the expiration of the period in which the rent claimed accrues.[3]

A lawful act upon an adjoining estate, done to improve that estate, is not an eviction.[4]

EVIDENCE.[5] That which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the fact or point in issue.[6]

Originally, the state of being evident, that is, plain, apparent or notorious; but, by inflection, is applied to that which tends to render evident or to generate proof. Evidence is, then, any matter of fact the effect, tendency, or design of which is to produce in the mind a persuasion, affirmative or disaffirmative, of the existence of some other matter of fact.[7]

Includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved.[1]

In the technical sense, almost synonymous with instrument of proof. In the popular sense, conclusive testimony; that which produces full conviction.[2]

Evidence includes "testimony," which is a mode of proof; yet the two terms are often interchanged.[3]

"Proof" is applied, by accurate logicians, to the effect of evidence, not to the medium by which truth is established.[4]

"Evidence" includes the reproduction, before the determining tribunal, of the admissions of parties, and of facts relevant to the issue. "Proof," in addition, includes presumptions either of law or of fact, and citations of law. In this sense proof comprehends all the grounds on which rests assent to the truth of a specific proposition. Evidence, in this view, is adduced only by the parties, through witnesses, documents, or inspection; proof may be adduced by counsel in argument, or by the judge in summing up a case. Evidence is but a part of the proof: it is part of the material on which proof acts.[5] See PROOF; TESTIMONY.

What is required in the trial of an issue is judicial, as distinguished from moral, truth. . . No evidence which is not admitted on the trial is to be permitted by the determining tribunal to influence its conclusions. . . Absolute truth can be reached by us, from the limitation of our faculties, not objectively, as it really exists, but subjectively, as it may be made to appear to us. . . That formal proof may express real proof is the object of jurisprudence.[6]

Evidence, to be believed, must not only proceed from the mouth of a credible witness, but it must be credible in itself — such as the common experience and observation of mankind can approve as probable under the circumstances.[7]

Evidential; evidentiary. Furnishing, or relating to evidence: as, evidentiary facts.

Evidence, v. To render clear or evident; to establish by written testimony. Whence evidenced.

Evidences. Bills of exchange, promissory notes, government, municipal, and corporation bonds, and other instruments for the payment of money, are spoken of as "evidences of debt" or indebtedness.[8]

Evidence is considered with reference to its nature and principles, its object, and the rules which govern

[1] Skally v. Shute, 132 Mass. 370-77 (1882), cases, W. Allen, J.; 113 id. 481; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 243.

[2] Frits v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 370 (1884), cases, Mitchell, J.

[3] Hunter v. Reiley, 43 N. J. L. 482 (1881), cases, Scudder, J. See also 4 N. Y. 270; 3 Kent, 464.

[4] Royce v. Guggenheim, ante. See also 55 Ala. 71; 5 Conn. 497; 69 Ill. 212; 70 id. 541; 5 Ind. 393; 18 id. 428; 32 Iowa, 76; 15 La. An. 514; 25 Minn. 528; 31 id. 370; 43 Pa. 410; 91 id. 322; 22 Gratt. 130.

[5] L. evidens, visible: evidere, to see clearly.

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 367.

[7] 1 Best, Evidence, § 11.

[1] 1 Greenleaf, Evidence, § 1; 15 Ct. Cl. 606; 56 Ala. 98.

[2] McWilliams v. Rodgers, 56 Ala. 98 (1876), Stone, J.

[3] Coke, Litt. 283; 13 Ind. 399; 17 id. 372; 66 id. 123.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 1.

[5] 1 Wharton, Law of Evidence, § 3.

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 4-5.

[7] Daggers v. Van Dyck, 37 N. J. E. 132 (1883), Van Fleet, V. C.

[8] See R. S. § 5136.

in the production of testimony; also, with reference to the means of proof, or the instruments by which facts are established.[1] See NOTICE, Judicial.

Moral evidence. Matters of fact are proved by moral evidence alone; by which is meant, not only that kind of evidence which is employed on subjects connected with moral conduct, but all evidence not obtained from either intuition or demonstration. Demonstrative or mathematical evidence. Applies to mathematical truth, and excludes all possibility of error.[2] See further CERTAINTY, Moral; DEMONSTRATION; DOUBT, Reasonable.

Direct or positive evidence. Proof applied immediately to the fact to be proved, without any intervening process. Circumstantial evidence. Proof applied immediately to collateral facts, supposed to have a connection, near or remote, with the fact in controversy.[3]

Direct or positive evidence is evidence to the precise point in issue; as, in a case of homicide, that the accused caused the death. Circumstantial evidence is proof of a series of other facts than the fact in issue, which by experience have been found so associated with that fact, that, in the relation of cause and effect, they lead to a satisfactory and certain conclusion: as, when footprints are discovered after a recent snow, it is certain some animated being passed over the snow since it fell; and, from the form and number of the footprints, it can be determined with equal certainty whether they are those of a man, a bird, or a quadruped. Such evidence, therefore, is founded on experience and observed facts and coincidences, establishing a connection between the known and proved facts and the facts sought to be proved.[3]

Circumstantial evidence consists in reasoning from facts which are known or proved, to establish such as are conjectured to exist.[4]

The advantage of circumstantial evidence is, that, as it commonly comes from different sources, a chain of circumstances is less likely to be falsely prepared and falsehood is more likely to be detected. The disadvantage is, that the jury have not only to weigh the evidence of facts, but to draw just conclusions from them; in doing which they may be led to make hasty or false deductions: a source of error not existing in the consideration of positive evidence. Hence, each fact necessary to the inference must be distinctly and independently proved by competent evidence; and the inference must be fair and natural, not forced or artificial.[1]

Crimes are secret. Direct testimony is often wanting. The laws of nature and the relation of things to each other are so linked and combined together as to furnish a medium of proof as strong as direct testimony. . . . A body of facts may be proved, of so conclusive a character as to warrant a firm belief of fact, as strong as that on which discreet men are accustomed to act in relation to their most important concerns.[1]

In the abstract, circumstantial evidence is nearly, if not quite, as strong as positive evidence; in the concrete, it may be much stronger.[3]

Circumstantial evidence is often more convincing than direct testimony. A number of concurrent facts, like the rays of the sun, all converging to the center, may throw not only a clear light but produce a burning conviction. A cord of sufficient strength to suspend a man may be formed of threads.[3]

Prima facie evidence. Such evidence as in judgment of the law is sufficient to establish the fact, and, if not rebutted, remains sufficient for that purpose.[4]

Evidence which, standing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it is introduced.[5]

That which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence.[6]

Primary or best evidence. The highest evidence of which a case in its nature is susceptible. That kind of proof, which, under any possible circumstances, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Secondary evidence. Such evidence as, in the nature of the case, supposes that better evidence exists or has existed.[7]

A written instrument is itself always regarded as the primary or best possible evidence of its existence and contents. All evidence falling short of this in its degree is secondary; as, a copy of the instrument, or a witness's recollection of the contents.[7]

That the best evidence shall be produced means that no evidence shall be received which is merely "substitutionary" in its nature, as long as the "original" can be had. The rule excludes only that evidence which itself indicates the existence of more original sources of information. But where there is

---

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 3.

[2] [1 Greenl. Ev. § 13. See Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 541 (1873); 58 Wis. 58.

[3] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 310-12 (1850), Shaw, C. J. See also People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 202-3 (1867); People v. Morrow, 60 id. 144 (1882).

[4] People v. Kennedy, 32 N. Y. 146, 145 (1865), Denio, C. J.; 62 Wis. 63; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 1069.

[1] Webster's Case, 5 Cush. 311, ante; Commonwealth v. Howe, 132 Mass. 259 (1882).

[2] Commonwealth v. Harman, 4 Pa. 271-73 (1846), Gibson, C. J.

[3] Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 473 (1866), Grier, J.

[4] Kelly v. Jackson, 6 Pet. *632 (1832), Story, J.; Lilienthal's Tobacco v. United States, 97 U. S. 268 (1877).

[5] Emmons v. Westfield Bank, 97 Mass. 243 (1867), Foster, J.

[6] Cal. Code Civ. Proc., § 1833; 70 Cal. 570.

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 84, 82; 3 Bl. Com. 367.

no substitution, only a selection of weaker instead of stronger proofs, or an omission to supply all the proofs capable of being produced, the rule is not infringed. . . Until shown that the production of primary evidence is out of the party's power, no other proof of the fact is admitted. . . The distinction is one of law, and refers to the quality, not to the strength, of the proof. Evidence which carries on its face no indication that better remains behind is not secondary, but primary. If there are several distinct sources of information it is not ordinarily necessary to show that they have all been exhausted, before secondary evidence can be resorted to.[1]

The general test is immediateness, not authority. No primary testimony is rejected because of faintness.[2]

Secondary evidence is admissible when it is the best the party has it in his power to produce. The rule promotes the ends of justice and guards against fraud, surprise, and imposition. There may be degrees of secondary evidence.[3]

When the evidence is the best obtainable, it should be admitted, unless that would contravene some established rule of law. Thus, in an action against a common carrier for the loss of a pearl ring, the plaintiff was allowed to point out a pearl corresponding in size, color, and general appearance to the one lost, and an expert to testify to the value of the selected pearl.[4] See further COPY; LOST, 2; PHOTOGRAPH; PRODUCE, 1.

Presumptive evidence. Evidence afforded by circumstances from which, if unexplained, the jury may or may not infer or presume other circumstances or facts.[5] See PRESUMPTION.

Conclusive evidence. Such evidence as, being uncontradicted, controls the decision; also, such evidence as the law does not allow to be contradicted.

Parol evidence. Evidence which need not be in writing; evidence extrinsic to the language of an instrument, and brought forward to throw light upon its meaning. See further PAROL.

Hearsay evidence. The narrative of what one has heard from another, and not what he knows of his own personal knowledge. See further HEARSAY.

Relevant evidence. Such evidence as is applicable to the issue; evidence which will assist in arriving at the truth or falsity of the allegation; evidence which supports a party's theory of his case. Irrelevant evidence. Evidence which does not tend to support the issue; impertinent testimony.

Relevant evidence is also spoken of as admissible, and irrelevant as inadmissible, under the pleadings; that is, as proper, or improper, to be received.[1]

All evidence must have relevancy to the question in issue, and tend to prove it; if not a link in the chain of proof, it is not receivable.[2]

Where there is evidence before the jury — whether it be weak or strong — which tends to prove the issue on the part of either side, it is error for the court to wrest it from the exercise of their judgment. It should be submitted under instructions.[3]

But the court cannot tell the jury that any legal results follow from evidence which "tends" to prove the issue.[4]

If the evidence relates to the transaction under consideration, or is connected with it, and is not too remote, it is competent. "It is relevant to put in evidence any circumstance that tends to make the proposition at issue more or less improbable."[5]

The possibility of error goes to the weight of evidence, and is not a ground for rejecting it. The spirit of the law permits a resort to every reasonable source of information upon a disputed question of fact. Unless excluded by some positive exception, everything relative to the issue is admissible; and this is extended to every hypothesis pertinent to the issue.[6]

Material evidence. Evidence important to a just determination of the issue; capable of affecting the result. Immaterial evidence. Evidence not directly pertinent to the issue; not important enough to change the result.

Cumulative evidence. Evidence of the same kind to the same point.[7]

Additional evidence to support the same point, and of the same character with evidence already produced. From the Latin cumulare, to heap up.[8]

Evidence which simply repeats, in substance and effect, or adds to, what has been testified to.[9]

Evidence which merely multiplies witnesses to a fact

---

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 82, 84, cases; Clifton v. United States, 4 How. 247 (1846).

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. Ch. III; id. §§ 90, 677.

[3] Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 246 (1873), cases, Swayne, J.; Riggs v. Taylor, 9 Wheat. 486 (1824); Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 43 (1882); 12 F. R. 402; 33 Mich. 88; 38 Ohio St. 125.

[4] Berney v. Dinsmore, 141 Mass. 44 (1886).

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

[1] See 3 Col. 12; 43 Pa. 170; 11 S. & R. 134.

[2] Thompson v. Bowie, 4 Wall. 471 (1866).

[3] Hickman v. Jones, 9 Wall. 201 (1869), Swayne, J.

[4] City of Providence v. Babcock, 3 Wall. 244 (1865); 1 id. 368; 8 id. 268.

[5] Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 264 (1885), Holt, J.; 1 Whart. Ev. § 21.

[6] Bell v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 696, 697 (1887), Minshall, J.; 1 Whart. Ev. § 20.

[7] Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. 248 (1837), cases, Morton, Justice.

[8] People v. Superior Court, 10 Wend. 294 (1833), Savage, C. J.

[9] [Parshall v. Klinck, 43 Barb. 212 (1864), E. D. Smith, Justice.

before investigated, or only adds other circumstances of the same general character.[1] See TRIAL, New.

Competent evidence. That which the nature of the fact to be proved requires as the appropriate proof in the particular case: as, the production of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry; that is, the best evidence.[2] Incompetent evidence. Inappropriate, improper evidence.

Satisfactory or sufficient evidence. That amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudicial mind, beyond reasonable doubt.[3]

The circumstances which will amount to this degree of proof can never be previously defined; the only test of which they are susceptible is, their sufficiency to satisfy the mind and conscience of a common man, and so convince him that he would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of the highest importance to his own interests.[3]

Questions respecting the competency and admissibility of evidence are entirely distinct from those which respect its sufficiency or effect. The former are conclusively within the province of the court; the latter belong exclusively to the jury.[4]

Minor terms descriptive of species of evidence: affirmative as opposed to negative evidence; adminicular or ancillary evidence; corroborative evidence; extrinsic as opposed to intrinsic evidence; inculpatory as opposed to exculpatory evidence; newly or after-discovered evidence; rebutting evidence; state's evidence by an accomplice; substitutionary evidence, qq. v.

The object of evidence being to prove the point in issue, fundamental rules regulating its production are: 1. The evidence must correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue. 2. It is sufficient if the substance of the issue be proved. 3. The burden of proving a proposition or issue rests upon the party holding the affirmative. 4. The best evidence of which the case is susceptible must be produced.[5]

The general rules of evidence are the same in civil and criminal cases.[6]

The mode of conducting trials, the order of introducing evidence, and the time when it shall be introduced, belong largely to the practice of the court where the fact is tried.[7]

The rules of practice in jury trials are necessarily somewhat flexible as to the order of proof, the number of witnesses, and the time, manner, and extent of the cross-examination. In ordinary cases the plaintiff begins and introduces all of his substantive evidence before the defendant opens his defense; so, the defendant introduces all his substantive evidence before the plaintiff rebuts. But the judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may relax either rule.[1]

The order of admissibility is regulated by the court. The Federal courts, in civil cases at common law, observe as rules of decision the rules of evidence of the State in which they sit, except when otherwise provided by the Constitution or an act of Congress.[2]

A party who objects or excepts to evidence must state his reasons therefor.[3]

See further ADMISSION, 2; ANSWER, 3; BOOK; CHARACTER; CHARGE, 2 (2, c); COMPROMISE; CRIME; DECLARATION, 1; DEED; DEMURRER; DEPOSITION; DOCUMENT; DOUBT; ESTOPPEL; EXAMINATION, 9; EXCEPTION, 4; FACT; HANDWRITING; INSPECTION, 2; INSANITY; LAW; LETTER, 3; NONSUIT; NOTICE, 1, Judicial; OFFER, 2; OPINION, 1; PRACTICE; PROCEDURE; REBUT; RECORD; RES, Gestæ; SCINTILLA; STENOGRAPHER; WEIGHT, 2; WITNESS.

EVIDENT. Clear to the mind; obvious; plain; apparent; manifest; notorious; palpable.

Under the constitutional provision that bail must be taken in capital cases except where the "proof is evident," bail will be denied if the evidence adduced on the application would sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree.[4]

EVIL. See MALICE; MALUM; WRONG.

EX. 1. The Latin preposition — out of, proceeding from, from, of, by, on, on account of, by virtue of, according to; also,— beyond. See EXTRA.

In composition intensifies or else has little effect upon the signification. Before a consonant becomes simply e; the x remains before the vowels and c, p, q, s, t; assimilates with a following f; is dropped before other consonants.

In French es: as, in estreat, estrepe, escrow.

2. Prefixed to the name of an official, denotes that he formerly held the office designated: as, ex-attorney-general, ex-judge, ex-minister, ex-marshal, ex-sheriff.

Prefixed to a word denoting a civil status or condition, indicates that the person referred to formerly occupied that relation: as, ex-convict, ex-partner, ex-wife.

---

[1] Waller v. Graves, 20 Conn. 310-11 (1850), cases, Church, C. J. See also 2 Ark. 358; 42 Conn. 519; 27 Ga. 464; 28 Me. 383; 34 N. J. L. 156; 7 Barb. 278.

[2] [1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 2, 32; 107 U. S. 332.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2; 30 Me. 481.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2; 2 Pet. 44, 133, 149.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 50; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 409 (1869).

[6] 4 Wheat. 472; 12 id. 469; 91 U. S. 488; 57 Wis. 157; 4 Bl. Com. 356.

[7] Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 623 (1879).

[1] First Unitarian Society v. Faulkner, 91 U. S. 417-18 (1875), Clifford, J.

[2] R. S. § 721: Act 1789; Potter v. Third Nat. Bank of Chicago, 102 U. S. 165 (1880), cases, Harlan, J.

[3] State v. Taylor, 36 Kan. 334 (1887), cases. French law of evidence, 19 Am. Law Rev. 880 (1885).

[4] Exp. Foster, 5 Tex. Ap. 645-47 (1879); Exp. Gilstrap, 14 id. 240, 264 (1883).

3. Prefixed to other words, denotes absence or privation of the notion conveyed by the simple word; without: as, ex-coupon, ex-dividend, ex-interest.

"Ex-dividend" is used of sales of stocks which reserve to the seller the dividend presently payable. See DIVIDEND, 3.

A sale of bonds "ex-July coupons" means a sale reserving the coupons, a sale in which the seller receives, in addition to the purchase-price, the benefit of the coupons, which benefit he may realize either by detaching them or receiving from the buyer an equivalent consideration.[1]

Ex abundantia cautela. Out of excessive care. See CAUTELA.

Ex æquo et bono. By what is fair and good: in justice and fair dealing. See ASSUMPSIT; EQUITY.

Ex antecedentibus, etc. See INTERPRETATIO.

Ex arbitrio judicis. By discretion of the magistrate or judge.

Ex colore. Under color of. See COLOR, 2.

Ex comitate. Out of courtesy. See COMITY.

Ex contractu. Out of a contract. See ACTION, 2.

Ex curia. Out of court.

Ex debito justitiæ. Out of an obligation of justice: as a matter of legal right. See DEBITUM; GRACE.

Ex delicto. Out of a fault or wrong. See ACTION, 2; DELICTUM.

Ex demissione. By demise, q. v. Abbreviated ex dem.

Ex dolo malo. Out of fraud. See DOLUS.

Ex facie. From appearance. See FACIES.

Ex facto. From a thing done. See FACTUM.

Ex gratia. Out of favor, by indulgence. See GRACE.

Ex hypothesi. Upon the supposition or theory.

Ex industria. From fixed purpose: intentionally.

Ex lege. From, or by force of, the law.

Ex maleficio. On account of misconduct: by reason of an illegal act. See MALEFICIUM.

Ex mero motu. Out of pure free-will. See MOTION, 1.

Ex mora. From delay, or default.

[1] Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 445 (1884), Andrews, J.

Ex necessitate. From necessity; necessarily.

Ex necessitate legis. From urgency of the law.

Ex necessitate rei. From urgency of the thing or case.

Ex nudo pacto. Out of an engagement without a consideration. See PACTUM.

Ex officio. By virtue of office. See OFFICIUM.

Ex parte. On behalf of. Abbreviated ex p., and exp. See PARS.

Ex post facto. After the fact. See FACTUM, Ex post facto.

Ex proprio. Of his or its own.

Ex proprio motu. Of his own volition. See MOTION, 1.

Ex proprio vigore. Of its own inherent force. See VIGOR.

Ex relatione. On the information of. Abbreviated ex rel. See RELATION, 2.

Ex tempore. Extemporaneously.

Ex testamento. From the will. See TESTAMENTUM.

Ex turpi causa. Out of an unlawful engagement. See ACTIO, Ex turpi, etc.

Ex uno disce omnes. From one (act) learn all. Compare FALSUS, In uno, etc.

Ex vi termini. By force of the word.

Ex vi terminorum. From the very meaning of the language. See TERMINUS, 3.

Ex visceribus. From the vitals: from the inherent nature; of the essence.

Ex visceribus verborum. From the natural meaning of the words.

Ex visitatione Dei. By divine dispensation: from natural cause.

Ex voluntate. From free will.

EXACTION. A wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law does not allow,— when he wrests a fee or reward where none is due.[1]

"Extortion" is where he extorts more than is due.[1] See EXTORTION; PAYMENT, Involuntary.

EXAMINATION.[2] A weighing, balancing: search, investigation; hearing, inquiry. Compare INSPECTION; VIEW.

Examined. Compared with the original: as, an examined copy, q. v.

[1] [Coke, Litt. 368; Jacob's Law Dict.

[2] L. examinare, to weigh carefully: examen, tongue of a balance.

Examining. Conducting an examination: as, the examining counsel.

Examiner. A person charged with the duty of making or conducting an examination: as, an examiner — in chancery or equity, of customs, of national banks, of patents, of titles, in divorce, lunacy, partition, qq. v.

1. Examination of a bankrupt or of a debtor. Interrogation as to the state of his property.[1]

2. Examination of an accused person. Investigation, by an authorized magistrate, of the grounds of an accusation of crime against a person, with a view to discharge him or to secure his appearance at trial, and to preserve the evidence.

Had before a justice of the peace, an alderman, or other magistrate, a United States commissioner, and, possibly, before a judge. On a prima facie case bail will be required, or a commitment made; otherwise, the accused is discharged. The examination may be waived. The accused has no right to the assistance of counsel; and, in many cases, he himself is not examined.

3. Examination of an invention. Of an alleged new invention, for which application for a patent has been made, to ascertain whether it is sufficiently new and useful, or whether it interferes with any other invention.[2] See PATENT, 2.

4. Examination of a long account. By a referee, of the proofs of the correctness of the items composing a long account.[3] See ACCOUNT, 1.

5. Examination of a married woman. Of a wife, separate and apart from her husband, to learn whether her acknowledgment of a mortgage, conveyance, or other deed is voluntary, without coercion of her husband. Also called her private or separate examination.[4]

Where a statute requires a "private" examination of the wife, to ascertain that she acts freely and not by compulsion of her husband, but prescribes no precise form of words to be used in the certificate of acknowledgment, it is sufficient if the words of the acknowledgment have the same meaning, and are in substance the same with those in the statute.[5]

Such statutes provide for privacy from the husband only. A certificate "privately examined apart from and out of the hearing" of the husband, can mean nothing less than that he was not present when she was examined, and satisfies a statute (of Maryland) requiring an examination "out of the presence."[1] See further ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2.

6. Examination of a national bank. By an officer of the United States treasury, to discover whether the bank is complying with the law as to issues, reserve, etc.[2]

7. Examination of a student-at-law. This is preliminary to his admission to practice, as a test of qualification.

8. Examination of a title. A search to determine whether the title to land, proposed for conveyance or mortgage, is free from defects, and marketable, q. v.

Whence examiners of titles, and abstract or brief of title. See ABSTRACT, 2; CONVEYANCER; TITLE, 1.

9. Examination of a witness. The interrogation or questioning of a witness, to elicit his personal knowledge as to one or more facts.

Direct examination, or examination in chief. The first examination, on behalf of the party who calls the witness. Opposed, 1, to examination in pais, or on the voir dire: a preliminary questioning intended to test competency; 2, to cross-examination: by the adverse party, confined to the subject-matter elicited upon the direct examination.

Re-direct examination. Follows the cross-examination, and is confined to matters brought out under it.

Re-cross examination. Follows the re-direct examination, and is restricted to the new or additional information or answers given thereunder.

Re-examination. The re-direct or the re-cross examination in the same hearing; also, another and distinct examination in a subsequent trial.

Separate examination. Is of a witness apart from or out of the hearing of another or other witnesses.

Cross-examination, which is the right of the party against whom a witness is called, is a means of separating hearsay from knowledge, error from truth, opinion from fact, inference from recollection; of ascertaining the order of the events as narrated by the witness in his examination in chief, the time and place when and where they occurred, and the attending circumstances; and of testing the intelligence, memory, impartiality, truthfulness, and integrity of the witness.[3]

[1] See R. S. §§ 5086–87.
[2] R. S. § 4808.
[3] See Magown v. Sinclair, 5 Daly, 66 (1874).
[4] 1 Bl. Com. 444.
[5] Dundas v. Hitchcock, 12 How. 269 (1851).

[1] Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 807 (1866).
[2] See R. S. § 5240.
[3] The Ottawa, 3 Wall. 271 (1865), Clifford, J.

Cross-examination is "the crucial test" of truth. A witness may not be cross-examined as to facts and circumstances not connected with matters stated in his direct examination; if a party wishes to examine him as to such facts and circumstances he must call him as a witness in the subsequent progress of the case;[1] that is, "make him his own witness."

Greater latitude is allowed in the cross-examination of a party than in that of another witness. Still, this, in its course and extent, where directed to matters not inquired into in the principal examination, is largely subject to the control of the court in the exercise of a sound discretion,—as is the cross-examination of other witnesses.[2]

A party may ask questions to show bias or prejudice, or to lay a foundation to admit evidence of a prior contradictory statement.[3]

An adverse party may now generally be called in chief "as for cross-examination" whenever his testimony may be needed to make out a prima facie cause of action or defense.

The court may order the separate examination of a witness. Refusal to answer a proper question is a contempt of court. The court itself may examine. Prompting is not permitted. On the direct examination leading questions are generally prohibited. The extent and severity of an examination rests with the court. Examination is not allowed as to a conclusion of law, nor, in chief, as to motive, nor as to an opinion. Answers are privileged. The substance of a conversation or of an absent writing may be given. Vague impressions are inadmissible. Answers are according to recollection and belief. A witness may refresh his memory from memoranda.[4]

On cross-examination leading questions may be put. All such questioning is to be on the subject of the examination in chief. Collateral facts cannot be introduced to test memory. A witness is not compelled to criminate himself; nor to answer a question imputing disgrace, unless the question is material. May inquire as to religious belief, motive, veracity, bias, and the res gestæ. And may draw inferences from refusal to answer.[5]

Re examination is permitted as to a matter requiring explanation, and as to new matters introduced by the opposition. For this reason a witness may be recalled.[6]

Re-cross examination is discretionary with the court.[6]

See CALL; CONFRONT; CRIMINATE; EVIDENCE; EXPERT; IMPEACH, 3; PREJUDICE; QUESTION, 1; REFRESH; VOIR; WITNESS.

EXAMPLE. See DAMAGES, Exemplary; PRECEDENT.

[1] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 461 (1840), Story, J.; Houghton v. Jones, 1 Wall. 704 (1863).

[2] Rea v. Missouri, 17 Wall. 542 (1873), cases, Bradley, J.; Schultz v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 67 Wis. 617 (1886); Kaapp v. Schneider, 24 id. 71 (1869); 3 Dak. 78.

[3] Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 625 (1879), cases; Schuster v. Stout, 30 Kan. 531 (1883).

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 491-515, cases.

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 527-47, cases.

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 572-75, cases.

EXCAVATE. See DIGGING.

EXCEEDING. See MORE OR LESS.

Under an indictment for embezzlement, alleging the gross receipt of a sum "exceeding" a sum named, proof may be made of the receipt of any amount, although it exceed that sum.[1]

EXCELLENCY. "His Excellency" is the title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the governor of that State; also, by custom, to the governors of the other States, and to the President of the United States.[2]

EXCEPTANT. See EXCEPTION.

EXCEPTIO. L. A keeping out; an exclusion; exception.

Exceptio probat regulam. The exception proves, that is, either confirms or tests, the rule: "proves," by not being within the reason; "tests" the form in which expressed, by observing whether exceptions must be allowed.

EXCEPTION. Something withheld, not granted or parted with; the exclusion of a thing, or the thing or matter itself as excluded; an objection made. Compare REGULAR.

Exceptant. One who takes or files objection to a thing done or proposed.

1. In a deed or contract, excludes from the operation of the words some part of the subject-matter then in being.

A clause in a deed whereby the donor or lessor, excepts somewhat out of that which he had granted by his deed.[3]

Always part of the thing granted, and the whole of the part excepted. A "reservation" is of a thing not in being, but newly created. The terms are often used in the same sense.[4] See RESERVE, 4.

2. In a statute, excludes from the purview a person or thing included in the words.

Exempts absolutely from the operation of the enactment. A "proviso" defeats the operation conditionally.[5]

[1] State v. Ring, 29 Minn. 78, 82 (1882).

[2] "The style of the Executive, as silently carried forward from the committee of detail, was still 'his Excellency;' this vanished in the committee of revision,"—2 Bancroft, Formation of the Const. 210, 187.

[3] [Darling v. Crowell, 6 N. H. 423 (1833).

[4] State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 21 (1856); Kister v. Reeser, 98 Pa. 5 (1881); Green Bay, &c. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 66 Wis. 465-66 (1886); 24 Am. Law Reg. 716-22 (1886), cases; 2 McLean, 391; 41 Me. 311; 51 id. 498; 10 N. H. 310; 37 id. 167; 4 Johns. 81; 3 Wend. 635; 1 Barb. 407; 19 id. 192; 28 Ohio St. 568; 47 Pa. 197; 5 R. I. 419; 6 Abb. N. Cas. 321; 81 Va. 28.

[5] Waffle v. Goble, 53 Barb. 522 (1868).

If an exception occurs in the statutory description of an offense it must be negatived, or the party will be brought within the description; but if it comes by way of proviso and does not alter the offense, merely states what persons are to take advantage of it, then the defense must be specially pleaded or else be given in evidence under the general issue, according to circumstances.[1]

An exception ought to be of that which otherwise would be included in the category from which it is excepted. "Where an exception is incorporated in the body of the clause, he who pleads the clause ought also to plead the exception, but when there is a clause for the benefit of the pleader, and afterward follows a proviso which is against him, he shall plead the clause and leave it to the adversary to show the proviso."[2]

See ACT, 8, Enact; GENERAL; PROVIDED; PROVISO.

8. In equity and admiralty practice, a formal allegation that a previous adverse proceeding is insufficient in law.

4. In common-law practice, a formal notice, following the denial of a request or the overruling of an objection, made in the course of a trial, that the exceptant intends to claim the benefit of his request or objection in future proceedings; as, upon a writ of error.[3]

It is also used to signify other objections in the course of a suit. Thus, there may be exception taken to bail or security, to the ruling of a judge or master, to an appraisement, award, decree, report, or return.

Bill of exceptions. An "exception" being an objection to or a protest against a ruling or decision of the court upon a question of law,— taken or stated at the time of the ruling, unless otherwise prescribed,— a "bill of exceptions" is a written statement of the exceptions duly taken by a party to the decisions or instructions of a judge in the trial of a cause, with so much of the facts, or other matter, as is necessary to explain the rulings.[4]

Every bill must be settled, allowed, and signed by the judge, in the manner, upon the notice, and within the time pointed out by statute.[4]

Its sole office is to make matters which are extrinsic, or out of the record, part of the record.[5]

If, in his directions or decisions, the judge who tries a cause mistakes the law by ignorance, inadvertence, or design, counsel, by statute of Westminster 2, 13 Edw. I (1286), c. 31, may require him publicly to "seal a bill of exceptions," stating the point in which he is supposed to err. Should the judge refuse to seal the bill, the party may have a writ commanding him to seal it, if the fact alleged be truly stated: and if he returns that the fact is untruly stated, when the case is otherwise, an action will lie against him for a false return. This bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal, examinable, after judgment entered in the court below, in the next immediate superior court, upon a writ of error.[1]

The principles of the statute of Westminster have been adopted in all of the States; in the Federal courts, bills are still drawn as at common law under the statute.[2]

The object is to secure a record which may be reviewed. In theory, the bill states what occurred while the trial was going on. Exception must be taken at the moment a ruling is made, or before verdict.[3]

A bill should present only the rulings of the court upon some matter of law, as, the admission or rejection of evidence, and should contain only so much of the testimony, or such a statement of the proofs made or offered, as may be necessary to explain the bearings of the rulings upon the issues.[4]

It is not usual to reduce the bill to form and to obtain the signature of the judge during the progress of the trial; the statute of Westminster did not require it. The exception need only be noted at the time it is made, and may be reduced to form within a reasonable time after the trial is over.[5]

It is sufficient if the judge simply signs the bill.[6]

It was early held that a bill must be signed within the term, unless by consent or special order. Otherwise the judge might be asked to sign a bill after his recollection of facts had faded, and parties might be burdened with unnecessary delay and expense. While the rule may have been established when short-hand reports were not usual, the Supreme Court considers the rule still obligatory.[7]

At common law, a writ of error might be had for an error apparent on the record or for an error in fact, but not for an error in law not appearing on the record; hence, anything alleged ore tenus and overruled could not be assigned for error. To remedy this evil was the object of the statute of Westminster. Under its provisions a bill of exceptions is founded on some objection in point of law to the opinion and direction of the court, either as to the competency of a witness, the admissibility or the legal effect of evidence, or

[1] Simpson v. Ready, 12 M. & W. *740 (1844), Alderson, B.

[2] United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 177, 178 (1872), Clifford, J.,— quoting Treby, C. J., in Jones v. Axen, 1 Ld. Ray. 120 (1692), and Steel v. Smith, 1 B. & Al. 99 (1817).

[3] Abbott's Law Dict.

[4] Saint Croix Lumber Co v. Pennington, 2 Dak. 470 (1881), Shannon, C. J.; 1 N. M. 115.

[5] Kitchell v. Burgwin, 21 Ill. 45 (1858); 20 id. 225; 3 Col. 200, 235, 251; 5 Hill, 579; 7 Baxt. 56; 77 Va. 250.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 372.

[2] Pomeroy v. Bank of Indiana, 1 Wall. 599 (1863).

[3] Railway Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120 (1880), Waite, C. J.; Hanna v. Maas, 122 id. 26 (1887), cases, Gray, J.

[4] Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 136 (1868), Field, J.; Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149 (1879); Moulor v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 id. 337 (1884); New York, &c. R. Co. v. Madison, 123 id. 526 (1887), cases.

[5] Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 354 (1880), cases, Strong, J.

[6] Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 555 (1876), cases.

[7] Marine City Stave Co. v. Herreshoff Manuf. Co., 32 F. R. 824 (1887), cases.

other matter of law arising from facts not denied in which either party is overruled by the court. The seal attests that the exception was taken at the trial. If the bill contains matter false or untruly stated, the judge ought to refuse to affix his seal. The substance of the bill should be reduced to writing while the thing is transacting. An exception not tendered at the trial is waived.[1]

The statute of Westminster did not apply to criminal cases. At common law, no bill of exceptions was permitted in such cases; the right depends upon enactment.[2]

See CHARGE, 2 (2, c); ERROR, 2 (3), Writ of; SEAL, 2.

EXCESSIVE. Surpassing in amount, degree, or extent that which is usual, reasonable, proper or lawful in the particular case: as, excessive — bail, damage, distress, fine, taxation, qq. v.

To constitute bail excessive it must be per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved, or the peculiar circumstances appearing must show it to be so in the particular case.[3]

EXCHANGE.[4] A reciprocal contract for the interchange of property, each party being both a vendor and a vendee.[5]

(1) Of personalty: a commutation of goods for goods.[6]

The giving of one thing and the receiving of another thing.[7]

"A contract by which the parties mutually give, or agree to give, one thing for another, neither thing, or both things, being money only."[8]

A "sale" is the giving of one thing for that which is the representative of all values — money.[9] The distinction between a "sale" and an "exchange" is rather one of shadow than of substance. In both cases the title is absolutely transferred; and the same rules of law are applicable to the transaction, whether the consideration is money or a commodity.[10] See SALE.

(2) Of realty: a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other.[11]

The estates exchanged must be equal in quantity; not in value, for that is immaterial, but in interest: as, a fee-simple for a fee-simple.[12]

Power to "sell and exchange" lands includes power to partition them.[1]

An exchange is as much within the statute of frauds as is a sale.[2]

At common law, the contract carried a warranty of title, with a right to re-enter one's original possession, if evicted from the later acquisition.[3]

A person seeking specific performance of a contract for an exchange of lands must prove: the contract; that the consideration has been paid or tendered; such part performance that a rescission would be a fraud on the plaintiff, and could not be compensated by a recovery of damages at law; and that delivery of possession has been made in pursuance of the contract, and acquiesced in by the other party.[4] See DEED, 2.

2. An abridgment of bill of exchange: an open letter of request from one man to another, desiring him to pay a sum named therein to a third person on his account. In common speech, a "draft."[4]

A written order or request from one party to another for the payment of money to a third person or his order, on account of the drawer.[5]

Originally invented among merchants in different countries, for the more easy remittance of money.

He who writes the letter is called the drawer; he to whom it is written, the drawee; he to whom it is payable, the payee.

When both drawer and drawee reside in the same country, the bill is termed an "inland" bill; when in different countries, a "foreign" bill.[6]

A foreign bill is usually drawn in three counter parts or duplicates, and numbered as the "first," "second," and "third" of exchange. The first instrument that reaches the drawee is paid. Each mentions the others, and all three together compose a "set" of exchange. The device obviates delays.[7]

Exchange is "at par" when the price of a draft is the face of it; "at a premium" or "above par," when the price is more than the face; "at a discount" or "below par," when the price is less than the face. The price paid is the "rate" of exchange.

"Arbitration of exchange:" converting the currency of one country into that of another, through the medium of an intervening currency. "Course of exchange:" the quotations for a given time. "Par of exchange:" the value of the money of one country in that of another,— either real or nominal. "Re-exchange:" the expense incurred on a bill dishonored

[1] Wheeler v. Winn, 53 Pa. 126 (1866), Woodward, C. J.

[2] Haines v. Commonwealth, 99 Pa. 419 (1882), Sharswood, C. J.

[3] Exp. Ryan, 44 Cal. 558 (1872), Wallace, C. J.; 6 Q. B. D. 206.

[4] F. eschanger: L. ex-cambiare, to barter, put one thing for another, change.

[5] See Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 528 (1882).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 446.

[7] 1 Pars. Contr. 521.

[8] Cal. Civil Code, § 1804; Gilbert v. Sleeper, 71 Cal. 392-93 (1886).

[9] 1 Pars. Contr. 521; 2 Bl. Com. 446.

[10] [Commonwealth v. Clark, 14 Gray, 372 (1860), Bigelow, J.

[11] 2 Bl. Com. 323.

[12] 2 Bl. Com 323; 7 Barb. 638; 21 Wis. 123.

[1] Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380 (1879).

[2] Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 517 (1866).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 323.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 466; 61 N. Y. 255; 33 Ga. 188.

[5] [Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 U. S. 709 (1879), Clifford, J.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 466.

[7] See Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 108 (1859).

in a foreign country, where made payable, and returned to the drawer.[1]

By the act of issuing a bill the drawer agrees that, if it is not paid according to its terms, he will pay it. His liability is fixed by due presentment, demand, and notice of dishonor.[2]

A bill payable at sight, or at a date subsequent to acceptance, must be duly presented for payment, or a party conditionally liable will be discharged.[3]

The acceptor is the principal debtor; the drawer and indorsers are sureties. Discounting a bill is neither acceptance nor payment. Acceptance is an engagement to pay the bill according to its tenor and effect when due. A bill is paid only when there is an intention to discharge and satisfy it.[4]

On the question of timely presentation for payment, the law of the place where a foreign bill is payable governs.[5]

Proof of failure of consideration is a good defense as between the immediate parties — drawer and acceptor, and payee and drawee. But as between remote parties, an action will not be defeated unless there is an absence or failure of the two considerations: that which the defendant received for his liability, and that which the plaintiff gave for his title. These remote parties are the payee and acceptor, or the indorser and acceptor. The rule presupposes that the payee or indorsee became the holder of the bill before it was overdue and without knowledge of facts which impeach the title as between the immediate parties.[6]

The essential characteristic of a draft or bill of exchange is the order of one party upon another for the payment of money. . . The instruments in suit are in strictness bank-checks. They have all the particulars in which such instruments differ or may differ from regular bills of exchange. They are drawn upon a bank having funds of the drawer for their payment, and they are payable upon demand, although the time of payment is not designated. A bill of exchange may be so drawn, but it usually states the time of payment, and days of grace are allowed upon it. There are no days of grace upon checks. The instruments here are also drawn in the briefest form possible in orders for the payment of money, which is the usual characteristic of checks. A bill of exchange is generally drawn with more formality, and payment at sight, or at a specified number of days after date, is requested, and that the amount be charged to the drawer's account. When intended for transmission to another State or country they are usually drawn in duplicate or triplicate, and designated as first, second, or third of exchange. A regular bill of exchange, it is true, may be in a form similar to a bank-check, so that it may sometimes be difficult, from their form, to distinguish between the two classes of instruments. But an instrument drawn upon a bank and simply directing payment to a party named of a specified sum of money, at the time on deposit with the drawee, without designating a future day for payment, is to be treated as a check. If the instrument designates a future day for payment, it is, according to the weight of authorities, to be deemed a bill of exchange, when, without such designation, it would be treated as a check. . . A check implies a contract on the part of the drawer that he has funds in the hands of the drawee for its payment on presentation. If it is dishonored the drawer is entitled to notice; but, unlike the drawee of a bill of exchange, he is not discharged from liability for the want of such notice, unless he has sustained damage or is prejudiced in the assertion of his rights by the omission.[1]

See further ACCEPT, 2; ASSIGNMENT, Equitable; CHECK; COLLECTION; CURRENT, Funds; FORGERY; INDORSE; DRAFT; DUE, 1; HONOR, 1; LETTER, Of credit; NEGOTIATE, 2; NOTE, Promissory; NOTING; PROTEST, 2.

8. A place where merchants and brokers meet for business, at specified hours. Contracted into 'Change.

Called "stock" exchange, "produce" exchange, "petroleum" exchange, "grain" exchange, "pork" exchange, etc., from the nature of the business in which contracts, for the purchase and sale of securities or commodities, are made. The distinctive word may designate the association itself, as well as the place where its meetings are held.

All the members of an exchange, considered together, usually constitute the board of exchange. Membership in a board may be qualified by any conditions the creators could lawfully impose. Thus, provision in the constitution of a board, whose members are limited in number and elected by ballot, that a member, upon failing to perform his contracts or becoming insolvent, may assign his seat to be sold and the proceeds be first applied for the benefit of members of the exchange to whom he is indebted, is lawful.[2]

Merchants may voluntarily associate together, and prescribe for themselves regulations to establish, define, and control the usages or customs that shall prevail in their dealings with each other. These are useful institutions, and the courts enforce their rules whenever parties deal with them, in which case the regula-

[1] See Adams v. Addington, 16 F. R. 91 (1883), cases.

[2] Cummings v. Kent, 44 Ohio St. 95-98 (1886), cases.

[3] Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, ante.

[4] Swope v. Ross, 40 Pa. 188 (1861), Strong, J.

[5] Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 549 (1882).

[6] Hoffman v. Bank of Milwaukee, 12 Wall. 190-91 (1870), cases, Clifford, J. See generally Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 364 (1857); as to unification of the law, 2 Law Quar. Rev. 297-312 (1886).

[1] Bull v. Bank of Kasson, 123 U. S. 105, 109-11 (1887), cases, Field, J.

The instruments in suit read thus:

"$500. The First National Bank, Kasson, Minn., Oct. 15, 1881. Pay to the order of Mr. A. La Due five hundred dollars in current funds.

E. E. FAIRCHILD, Cashier.

To Ninth National Bank, New York City.

[Indorsed:] Pay to the order of M. Edison, Esq.

A. LA DUE.

M. EDISON.

[2] Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523 (1876), Miller, J.

tions become a part of the contract. Part of these regulations may be observed, and part discarded.[1]

See ARBITRATION; BARGAIN, Time; BROKER; CORNER; WAGER, 2.

EXCHEQUER.[2] The treasury department of the English government.

Established by William I; regulated by Edward I. Consisted of two divisions: one, for the receipt of revenue; the other, for the administration of justice in matters of revenue, and known as the court of exchequer, and presided over by the chancellor of the exchequer. This court originally had limited equity jurisdiction; then the chancellor, the Lord Chief Baron, sat apart in a hall called the exchequer chamber. Its present jurisdiction does not differ materially from other co-ordinate courts of common law.[3] See CHANCELLOR, 1, Of the Exchequer.

EXCISE.[4] An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail trade.[5] Whence excise duty, excise law.

An inland imposition, sometimes upon the consumption of a commodity, and sometimes upon the retail trade; sometimes upon the manufacturer, and sometimes upon the vendor.[6]

A term of very general signification, meaning tribute, custom, tax, tollage, assessment.[7]

Though often synonymous with tax, may have a distinct signification. It is based on no rule of appointment or equality, as is a tax. It is a fixed, absolute and direct charge laid on merchandise, products or commodities, without regard to the amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any supposed relation between money expended for a public object and a special benefit occasioned to those by whom the charge is to be paid.[8]

Under the constitution of Massachusetts the legislature may impose reasonable excises upon "produce, goods, wares, merchandise and commodities" within the State; also, upon any business or calling, franchise or privilege conferred by or exercised therein.[1]

See COMMODITY; DUTY, 2; IMPOST; TAX, 2.

EXCLUSIO. See EXPRESSIO.

EXCLUSIVE. That which debars, deprives, or excepts: as, an exclusive right, privilege, or jurisdiction, which is possessed, enjoyed or exercised independently of another or others.[2] Opposed, inclusive.

See ENUMERATION; ONLY; POSSESSION, Adverse.

EXCULPATORY. See CULPA; FAULT.

EXCUSE. A reason for doing or not doing a thing.

Excusable. 1. Admitting of excuse; exempting from liability or responsibility: as, an excusable default, an excusable misdelivery by a carrier.

2. Done under circumstances of accident or necessity, and without legal malice: as, an excusable homicide, q. v.

Ignorance of a fact may excuse; ignorance of the law never excuses. Infants, lunatics, married women, and persons under duress or necessity are sometimes excused for acts done or sought to be enforced. See IGNORANCE; KNOWLEDGE, 1; NOTICE.

EXEAT. See EXIRE, Ne exeat.

EXECUTE.[3] To complete or perfect what the law directs to be done; to complete as an effective instrument.

1. Referring to a conveyance, mortgage, lease, will, contract, note, or other document, may mean, as in popular speech, to sign, or to sign and deliver; but in strict legal understanding, when said of a deed or bond, always means to sign, seal, and deliver.[4]

Until a promise has been performed it is termed "executory;" after performance, "executed." Obviously, one of two mutual promises may have become executed while the other yet remains executory; as where a seller pays the price, and the buyer promises delivery in the future. So, one or more of several connected promises of one party may be executed while his other engagements remain executory. What is usually meant by speaking of a contract as executory or executed is not that it is so as an entirety, but that the promise particularly under discussion is so. Thus, to speak of a sale for cash, of goods to be delivered in the future, as an executory contract, would be natural if the seller's obligation to deliver were the

---

[1] Dillard v. Paton, 19 F. R. 624 (1884), Hammond, J. Goddard v. Merchants' Exchange, 9 Mo. Ap. 290 (1880), cases; Thorne v. Prentiss, 88 Ill. 99 (1876); 20 Cent. Law J. 444-50 (1885), cases; 45 Ill. 113; 80 id. 134; 18 Abb. Pr. 271; 2 Mo. Ap. 100; 20 Wis. 48; 47 id. 670.

[2] F. eschequier, chess-board — from the cloth that originally covered the table or counter.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 44, 56.

[4] A misspelling of Old Dutch aksūs, aksys: F. aise, a tax, — Skeat; Webster.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 318.

[6] Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. 445 (1868), Swayne, J.; Tax on Capital of Banks, 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 219 (1877); Michigan Central R. Co. v. Collector, 100 U. S. 595 (1879).

[7] Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 256 (1815), Parker, C. J.

[8] Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 274 (1865), Bigelow, C. J.; Commonwealth v. People's Savings Bank, 5 id. 431 (1863).

[1] Connecticut Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 133 Mass. 161 (1882).

[2] See 3 Story, C. C. 131; 2 Dall. 211; 8 Blackf. 361; 29 Kan. 541; 36 id. 366; 60 Md. 80; 93 N. Y. 328.

[3] F. executer: L. ex-sequi, to follow out, follow to the end, perform.

[4] See Hepp v. Huefner, 61 Wis. 151 (1884); 32 Ark. 453; 9 Cal. 430; 17 Ohio, 545; 12 Ired. L. 221; 37 Mich. 459; 22 Minn. 551.

matter chiefly in question; but if the controversy related to the buyer's payment the contract would be called executed. And "executed" is (although "executory" is not) applied to contracts in a sense relating to the completion of the written instruments in which they are embodied, and not to performance of their substance. In this sense "to execute" means to complete the paper as an effective instrument; to sign it, and to seal and deliver it whenever these formalities are essential to its inception.[1]

2. Referring to a power or trust: to perform or fulfill the requirements thereof; to give effect thereto according to the intent of the creator or of the law.

3. Referring to a decree, judgment, writ or process: for the officer addressed to carry out the command therein contained.

"Executed," indorsed on a writ, means that the officer complied with the mandate.[2]

4. Referring to a criminal: to put him to death. Whence to execute the sentence, and executioner. See DEATH, Penalty.

Executed. Completed, finished, performed, perfected; vested. Executory. Yet to be completed, incomplete, not yet effective, finished, perfected, or vested: as, an executed or executory — agreement, consideration, contract, devise, estate, remainder, sale, trust, use, writ, qq. v.

Executive. Carrying out; pertaining to the enforcement of the laws: as, the executive department, executive business; also, the officer who superintends the enforcement of the laws. See DEPARTMENT; DOCUMENT; GOVERNMENT; OFFICER; PRESIDENT.

Execution. 1. Doing or performing a thing required.

2. Completion of the obligation of an instrument by the final act of delivering it. See Execute, 1.

3. Putting the sentence of the law in force.[3]

The act of carrying into effect the final judgment of the court; also, the writ which authorizes this.[4]

A writ issuing out of a court, directed to an officer thereof, and running against the body or goods of a party.[5]

Dormant execution. A writ of execution which has been delivered to the proper officer, but is held in abeyance or unexecuted; a writ as to which action has been deferred by suggestion of the creditor.

A levy for any other purpose than to realize money is fraudulent as against a subsequent execution.

Equitable execution. The appointment of a receiver to take charge of property of an equitable nature.[1]

Execution-creditor. A creditor who has prosecuted his claim to execution; in distinction from a creditor who has obtained a judgment upon which he has not issued, from a mortgage creditor, and from a general creditor, q. v.

Writ of execution. A written command or precept to the sheriff or other ministerial officer, directing him to execute the judgment of the court.[2]

Process authorizing the seizure and appropriation of the property of a defendant for the satisfaction of the judgment against him.[3]

A judicial process, issuing upon some record enrolled in court; as, at common law, to repeal a patent.[4]

Execution is "the end and fruit of the law:" it gives the successful party the fruits of his judgment.[5]

At common law, the officer may be commanded to take — the body of the defendant, his goods, his goods and the profits of his lands, his goods and the possession of his lands, or, his body, goods, and lands.[6]

Property is held by the competent authority which first actually attaches it.[7] This is known as the rule in Payne v. Drewe.[8] See JURISDICTION, Exclusive.

At common law, all writs of execution were to be sued out within a year and a day after final judgment; otherwise, the judgment was presumed to have been satisfied. By statute, the lien of such judgment may be revived by a scire facias,[9] q. v.

All proceedings under a levy of execution have relation to the time of the seizure of the property.[10]

Writs of execution, named from the operative words in them when all kinds of processes were in Latin, are:

Fieri facias (abbreviated fi. fa.), that you

[1] Addison, Contr. *2, Am. ed., A. & W. (1888), note.
[2] Wilson v. Jackson, 10 Mo. 337 (1847); State v. Williamson, 57 id. 198 (1874).
[3] 3 Bl. Com. 412; 9 Ohio, 150.
[4] [Lockridge v. Baldwin, 20 Tex. 306 (1857).
[5] Brown v. United States, 6 Ct. Cl. 178 (1870).

[1] Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 217-22 (1872), cases.
[2] [Kelley v. Vincent, 8 Ohio St. 420 (1858).
[3] Lambert v. Powers, 36 Iowa, 20 (1872), Beck, C. J.
[4] [Stearns v. Barrett, 1 Mas. 164 (1816). See also Labette County Commissioners v. Moulton, 112 U. S. 223 (1884); 20 Ill. 155; 11 Wend. 635; 9 Ohio, 150.
[5] United States v. Nourse, 9 Pet. *28 (1835).
[6] 3 Bl. Com. 414. See 2 Tidd. Pr. 993.
[7] Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 594 (1857), cases; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176 (1884), cases.
[8] 4 East, 547 (1804), Ellenborough, C. J.
[9] 3 Bl. Com. 421.
[10] Freeman v. Dawson, 110 U. S. 270 (1883), cases.

cause to be made out of the goods, or lands, or both the amount of the claim.

Applies to personalty, realty, chattels real, and choses in possession. May be concurrent with an attachment in execution. A single fieri facias may exhaust the personalty of the debtor, and an alias fieri facias be issued to sell his realty. But an alias fieri facias may denote a second or new levy upon either personalty or realty. A sale of realty upon a single fieri facias may also be by express authorization from the debtor.[1]

Levari facias (abbreviated lev. fa.), that you cause be levied — out of the land specified. Used to collect a charge upon land: as, a mortgage, mechanic's lien, municipal claim, taxes, and the like.

May issue after a scire facias has been determined in favor of the creditor, as, after judgment on a scire facias upon a mortgage.[1] See ADDENDA

Venditioni exponas (abbreviated vend. ex.), that you expose for sale — realty embraced in a levy made under a preceding fieri facias, and condemned under proceedings in extent, q. v.

Regarded as a completion of a previous execution, by which the property is appropriated, not as an original or independent proceeding.[2]

Attachment-execution. Reaches a chose in action, money and other property in the hands of a stranger, to which the defendant has no present right of possession; also called an "execution-attachment." See ATTACH, 2.

Liberari facias, that you cause to be delivered — to the creditor, such portion of the premises, not sold under a previous levari facias, as will satisfy the claim, according to the valuation of the inquest, to hold as his own free tenement. See EXTENT, 2.

Elegit, he has chosen. Delivers chattels to the creditor at an appraised value, and, if they are not sufficient, then one-half of the defendant's freehold, till the rents and profits pay the debt.

Then plaintiff "elected" this writ, rather than a fieri facias, or a levari facias, which last writs gave satisfaction only to the extent of chattels and present profits of lands. Authorized by statute of Westminster 2, c. 18. Prior thereto, possession of land could not be taken, the feudal principle being that service was not transferable to a stranger. The writ is still in use, enlarged or narrowed in operation.[3]

Mandamus-execution. Enforces payment of a judgment against a municipality. See further MANDARE, Mandamus.

Sequestration. Reaches the revenues of a corporation, a life-estate, or the property of an absconding debtor. See SEQUESTRATION, 2.

Capias ad satisfaciendum, that you take for satisfying. Process under which the officer arrests and detains the debtor till the judgment is satisfied. See CAPERE, Capias.

Testatum execution, certifies that the debtor has property in another county. Issues into another county than that in which the record remains. See TESTIS, Testatum.

Writs and processes of execution are: those which point out specifically the thing to be seized, and those which command the officer to make or levy certain sums of money out of the property of a party named. In the first class the officer has no discretion, but must do precisely what he is commanded. Therefore, if the court had jurisdiction to issue the writ it is a protection to the officer. In the second class the officer must determine at his own risk whether the property he proposes to seize is legally liable to be taken. For a mistake he is responsible to the extent of the injury. As to this he exercises judgment and discretion — as to who is the owner of the property, the kind that may be taken, and the quantity.[1]

If a writ be sued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, directing an officer to seize specifically described property, as in admiralty, replevin, or ejectment cases, it is a protection to the officer, when he is sued in trespass for executing it. If, however, it in general terms authorizes him to seize property, without a specific description, he acts at his own risk as regards the ownership of the property.[2]

See JURISDICTION, 2, Concurrent; LEVY, 2; MINISTERIAL, 1; WRIT.

EXECUTOR. He to whom another commits by will the execution of his last will and testament.[3] Feminine form, executrix. Correlative, testator, testatrix.

He so closely resembles an "administrator" that that term will not amount to a substantial misdescription in a deed or prosecution.[4]

Acting executor. Such executor, of two or more, as actually performs the duties of the trust.

General executor. An executor whose power is unlimited as to time, place, or subject-matter. Special executor. An executor who serves for a limited time, in a particular place, or as to a part of the estate.

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 417.

[2] Mitchell v. St. Maxent's Lessee, 4 Wall. 243 (1866).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 418; 2 id. 161; 4 Kent, 431, 436; Hutchinson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 254 (1885); 8 Ala. 561; 10 Gratt. 332.

[1] Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 343-44 (1865), Miller, J.

[2] Sharp v. Doyle, 102 U. S. 689 (1880), Miller, J.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 503; 1 Ga. 330; 55 Md. 194; 21 Wend. 436; 60 Barb. 175; 5 Hun, 21; 5 Humph. 458.

[4] Sheldon v. Smith, 97 Mass. 35-36 (1867), cases: id. 401.

Instituted executor. Has the option to serve before another who is named as substitute — the substituted executor.

Rightful executor. The executor named in the will; the lawful executor. Executor de son tort. An executor of his own wrong: he who, without authority, does such acts as only the rightful executor may do.

At common law an executor de son tort is one who, without authority from the deceased or the court of probate, does such acts as belong to the office of an executor or administrator.[1]

Not unauthorized are, acts of kindness in providing for the family of the deceased or in preserving the estate.[2]

An executor de son tort is liable to all the trouble of an executorship without the profits or advantages.[3]

Sole executor. The one person named to serve as executor. Co-executor, joint-executor. One of two or more executors.

A wife, with her husband's consent, or a minor over seventeen, or other person of sound mind, may be an executor. He takes title from the will; is a personal representative, identified in interest with the testator; holds the estate in trust for creditors and legatees. His power being founded upon the special confidence the deceased had in him, he is not ordinarily required to furnish security for the faithful performance of the duties of the trust.

He is to do the things set forth in the will: to bury the deceased, prove the will, give notice of letters issued, make an inventory, collect the money and personal effects,[4] pay the debts and legacies, and file an account or accounts.

Contract rights pass to him, but not contract duties of a purely personal nature. He can buy no part of the estate; nor let assets lie unproductive; nor use the estate for his own benefit. He may be surcharged in his accounts.

He is held to the care of a man of ordinary prudence, and to the most scrupulous good faith.

If he honestly exercises a discretion conferred upon him by the will he cannot be held liable for a loss occasioned by an honest error of judgment.[5]

The act of one co-executor is the act of all: each is liable for the other's wrong, effected through negligence or connivance. All sue and are to be sued together. Death vests all rights and duties in the survivor.

The rule is that each co-executor has complete power to administer the estate. A payment therefore to one is payment to all.[1]

At common law executors have a joint authority and a joint interest in the property of the estate. They are esteemed in law as one person, and, as such, represent the testator, although each may be responsible only for his own acts.[2]

Whether an executor may be imprisoned for not paying over an amount due upon final account, the statutes and decisions of the States are not in accord. In Vermont and South Carolina, though refusal to pay is a contempt of court, imprisonment is not allowed under the constitutional inhibition against imprisonment for debt.[3]

See ADMINISTER, 4; ASSETS; BONA; CHARGE; COMMISSION, 8; DEVASTAVIT; DEVISAVIT; DONATIO; FUNERAL; GOODS; IMPROVIDENT; INVENTORY; LEGACY; LETTERS; PERISHABLE; POWER, 2; PROBATE; REPRESENTATIVE, (1); SETTLE, 4; TRUST, 1; VOUCHER; WITNESS.

EXEMPLARY. See DAMAGES.

EXEMPLIFICATION. An official transcript of a record, for use as evidence.

Primary evidence; in the United States courts, by act of May 26, 1790, which does not exclude other proof and is to be strictly followed. The seal of the court is essential. An exemplification of the record of the record of a deed is admissible; of a foreign will, or grant, may be proven by a certificate.[4] See further COPY; EVIDENCE, Secondary; FAITH, Full, etc.; LOST, 2; RECORD.

EXEMPTION.[5] The privilege of being excepted, excused, or freed from the operation of a law.

Used especially of goods not liable to seizure under the law of distress for rent;[6] of merchandise not subject to duties under the internal revenue laws;[7] of the property of bankrupts and insolvents excepted from sale under execution laws;[8] and of the property of a decedent not subject to administration.

Also, the property itself, in the aggregate.

---

[1] Emery v. Berry, 28 N. H. 481 (1854), Eastman, J.

[2] See 29 Minn. 421-22; 17 Ark. 125; 5 Heisk. 194; 26 N. H. 495; 1 Baxt. 9; 30 Conn. 329; 12 Ga. 588; 38 id. 364; 26 Me. 361; 8 Miss. 437; 19 Mo. 196.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 507.

[4] See generally Wall v. Bissell, 125 U. S. 387, 389 (1888), cases.

[5] Cooper v. Cooper, 77 Va. 203 (1883); 75 id. 747; 24 Gratt. 225; 28 id. 442; 32 id. 262.

[1] Stone v. Union Sav. Bank, 13 R. I. 25 (1880); 8 Ga. 388; 2 Williams, Exec. 946.

[2] Caskie v. Harrison, 77 Va. 94 (1882); Peter v. Beverley, 10 Pet. *533, 564 (1836); Wilson's Appeal, 115 Pa. 95 (1887); M'Cormick v. Wright, 79 Va. 533 (1884), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 147 (1887), cases.

See generally Williams, Exec.; Schouler, Ex. & Adm., and Wills; 2 Kent, 409; 1 Pars. Contr. 127; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 58-60 (1848); Hill v. Tucker, 13 id. 466-67 (1851); Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 327 (1879); Colt v. Colt, 111 id. 581 (1884); Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 id. 333 (1886); 9 Gratt. 559; 21 id. 200, 759.

[3] Re Bingham, 32 Vt. 335 (1859); Golson v. Holman, Sup. Ct. S. C. (1888): 26 Cent. Law J. 521-22 (1888), cases.

[4] See 2 Whart. Ev. Ch. III, §§ 95-119; 1 Greenl. Ev § 501; 7 W. Va. 413.

[5] L. ex-imere, to take out, remove, free.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 6.

[7] R. S. § 3187.

[8] R. S. § 5045.

Exempt. Excepted from the burden or operation of law; also, a person so excepted, excused, or relieved.

Exemption laws. Specifically, laws which except a part of a debtor's property from seizure on execution, or other process, as not liable to the payment of his debts.

This property, in its nature and extent, varies in the different States. In some it extends only to the merest implements of household necessity; in others it includes the library of the professional man, however extensive, and the tools of mechanics; and in many it embraces the homestead in which the family resides. The creditor, when he parts with the consideration of his debt, knows that the property so exempt cannot be seized in payment.[1]

Exemption in favor of debtors is favored by liberal interpretations. The exemption law of a State bars an execution on a judgment in favor of the United States.[2]

Exemption laws seek to promote the general welfare of society by taking from the head of a family the power to deprive it of certain property by contracting debts which will enable creditors to take such property in execution. Parties ought not, therefore, to be permitted to contravene the policy of the law by contract.[3]

Waiver of the right, if permitted at all, must be in distinct and unequivocal terms, and not rest upon inference.[4]

Widow's exemption. For the benefit of the widow and children of a decedent.[5]

See AGRICULTURE; EXPRESSIO, Unius, etc.; HEIFER; HOMESTEAD; HORSE; IMMUNITY; IMPLEMENT; PRIVILEGE; TAX, 2; TEAM; TOOL; WAGON; WORKS.

EXEQUATUR. L. Let it be executed, performed, discharged.

1. In French practice, placed at the foot of a judgment obtained in another jurisdiction, authorized execution upon the judgment within the jurisdiction to which it was exemplified.

2. An order issued by the foreign department of a state to which a consul or commercial agent is accredited, that he be permitted to discharge the duties of his appointment.

Consuls on exhibiting proof of their appointment receive an exequatur, or permission to discharge their functions within the limits prescribed, which permission can be withdrawn for any misconduct.[1]

EXERCITOR. L. Exerciser: manager.

Exercitor maris. In civil law, he who equips a vessel; in English and American law, the managing owner of a vessel.[2]

EXHIBIT.[3] 1, v. To produce, offer, or expose for inspection: as, to exhibit an account, a balance, a bill in equity, a complaint or information, written interrogatories, a bill or note for payment.[4]

2, n. A document produced and identified for use as evidence, before a jury, referee, master, or in the course of pleading.

Where there are several such documents it is customary to identify them as "Exhibit A," "B," or A 1, A 2, etc.; and, when produced in evidence, to mark upon them also the date, and the stenographer's or commissioner's name.

A document cannot be proved as an exhibit when it requires more to substantiate it than proof of the execution or of the handwriting.[5]

"Ex. A" was held to mean "Exhibit A."[6]

EXHIBITION. Compare ENTERTAINMENT; LICENSE, 3; PRIZE-FIGHTING.

Unless skating rinks are so conducted as to be clearly shown to be "public performances or exhibitions," they cannot be brought within a statute requiring a license to be taken out for such "performances or exhibitions."[7]

EXIGENCY. Going forth; issuing: mandate; urgency. See EXIRE.

A sheriff must execute a writ addressed and delivered to him, according to its exigency, without inquiring into the regularity of the proceeding.

The "exigency of a bond" refers to the event upon the happening or not happening of which the bond is to become operative, by changing a contingent to an absolute liability.

EXIGENT. See OUTLAWRY.

EXIRE. L. To go away, go out; to issue.

Exit. It has gone forth; it has issued.

The exit of a writ means simply the issuing of that particular writ; and the word "exit," as a docket entry, indicates that the writ has in fact been formally issued.

Ne exeat. That he do not depart. A writ in equity practice issued to prevent a

[1] Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 726 (1875), Miller, J.

[2] Fink v. O'Neil, 106 U. S. 280 (1882), cases; R. S. § 916.

[3] Kneettle v. Newcomb, 22 N. Y. 249 (1860); Crawford v. Lockwood, 9 How. Pr. 547 (1854); Harper v. Leal, 10 id. 276 (1854). Contra, McKinney v. Reader, 6 Watts, 34 (1837); Case v. Dunmore, 23 Pa. 93 (1854); 24 id. 426; 31 id. 225.

[4] O'Neil v. Craig, 56 Pa. 161 (1867); Commonwealth v. Boyd, ib. 402 (1867). Exemptions of personalty, Kansas cases, 2 Kan. Law J. 146-49 (1885), cases.

[5] Hufman's Appeal, 81 Pa. 329 (1876); Nixon's Appeal, 6 W. N. C. 496 (1878).

[1] Woolsey, Intern. Law, § 100; 13 Pick. 528.

[2] See 3 Kent, 161.

[3] L. ex-hibere, to hold out or forth.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 450; Byles, Bills, 206; 2 Conn. 38.

[5] Lake v. Skinner, 1 Jac. & W. 9, 15 (1819); Plunkett v. Dillon, 4 Del. Ch. 222 (1871), cases. See generally Commercial Bank v. Bank of New York, 4 Hill, 519 (1842).

[6] Dugan v. Trisler, 69 Ind. 555 (1880).

[7] Harris v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 240 (1885).

defendant from withdrawing his person and property beyond the jurisdiction of the court before a judgment and execution can be had against him.

In effect, a process to hold to bail, or to compel a party to give security to abide the decree. Not granted in the Federal courts unless a suit in equity is already commenced, and satisfactory proof is made that the defendant designs quickly to depart from the United States.[1]

The full form of the writ is ne exeat republica; the original in England was ne exeat regno or regnum.

The constitutions of the States declare that all persons have a natural right to emigrate from the State.[2]

EXISTING. See CREDITOR; PRE-EXISTING; PREVIOUS; PRIOR.

"Existing laws," in the saving clause of an act, refers to laws in force at the passage of the act.[3]

EXIT. See EXIRE, Exit.

EXONERATION; EXONERETUR. See ONUS, Exoneretur.

EXP. See EX, Parte.

EXPATRIATION.[4] Voluntarily leaving one's native or adopted country to become a citizen in another country.

Expatriate. To leave one's country, renouncing allegiance to it, with the purpose of making a home and becoming a citizen in another country.

Includes more, then, than changing one's domicil.[5]

Act of Congress of July 27, 1868, declares that "the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" disavows the claim made by foreign states that naturalized American citizens are still the subjects of such states; and enacts, further, that "any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of the United States which denies, restricts, impairs, or questions the right of expatriation, is declared inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the republic."[6]

The right is inalienable, and extends to individuals of the Indian race.[7]

The contrary is the English doctrine, expressed in the maxim nemo potest exuere patriam.[8]

[1] R. S. § 717; Lewis v. Shainwald, 7 Saw. 416-17 (1881), cases.

[2] 2 Kent, 34; 1 Bl. Com. 366; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1465-74; 2 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 1698-1714; Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 708 (1873).

[3] Lawrie v. State, 5 Ind. 526 (1854). See 63 Ill. 117; 88 Iowa, 215.

[4] L. ex patria terra, from one's fatherland.

[5] Ludham v. Ludham, 31 Barb. 489 (1860).

[6] R. S. §§ 1999, 2000; 9 Op. Att.-Gen. 356 (1859).

[7] United States, ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, 5 Dill. 453 (1879).

[8] 2 Kent, 36; Morse, Citizenship, § 179; 21 Am. Law Reg. 69-79 (1873); Canad. Law Times, Oct. 1883.

EXPECTANCY. A present, vested, contingent right to the future enjoyment of land. A future estate; an estate in expectancy, or, simply, an expectant estate or interest.

Expectant. Contingent as to enjoyment; also, the person entitled thereto.

An expectancy is always an estate in remainder, or a reversion. The idea is that the time of enjoyment is postponed — depends upon some subsequent circumstance or contingency. It is an executory estate, as opposed to an estate in actual, present possession — an estate executed.[1]

In New York, any present right or interest which by possibility may vest in possession at a future day.[2]

See BARGAIN, Catching.

EXPENDITURE. An actual payment of money.

To incur an expenditure is to make a payment, to expend money. To incur a liability and to incur an expenditure are different things.[3]

EXPENSE; EXPENSES. Vary in meaning with the intention of parties and testators, and the circumstances of particular cases.[4] See COSTS.

EXPERIMENT. See INVENTION.

EXPERT.[5] A person instructed by experience.[6]

A skilled or experienced person; a person having skill, experience or peculiar knowledge on certain subjects or in certain professions; a scientific witness.[7]

On questions of science, skill, trade, art or others of like kind, a person of skill, sometimes called an expert, may not only testify to facts, but may give his opinion. His qualification must first be shown to the court.[8]

Whether a witness who is called as an expert has the requisite qualifications to enable him to testify is a preliminary question for the court, the decision of which is conclusive, unless it appears upon the evidence to have been erroneous or to have been founded upon some error in law.[9]

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 163.

[2] 1 N. Y. Rev. St. 723, § 10; ib. 735, § 35; 7 Paige, 78; 20 Barb. 462. See also 17 F. R. 333; 10 Ohio St. 106; 1 Story, Eq. § 334.

[3] Improvement of South Pass, 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 139 (1878).

[4] See 1 Minn. 48; 1 Cliff. 158; 8 N. J. E. 506; 12 Ct. Cl. 179; 98 E. C. L. 199.

[5] L. expertus, practiced, experienced, skilled.

[6] Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1 Iowa, 167, 166 (1855): 2 Best Ev. 513; 54 Cal. 517.

[7] Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 394 (1858): Burrill; 59 Me. 77; 41 N. H. 547; 50 id. 454; 48 Vt. 377.

[8] Congress, &c. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 65 (1878), cases, Clifford, J.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 440; 20 Johns. 75.

[9] Perkins v. Stickney, 132 Mass. 218 (1882).

An expert may be asked his opinion upon a case hypothetically stated, or upon a case in which the facts have been established; but he may not determine from the evidence what the facts are, to give an opinion upon them.[1]

When the subject of a proposed inquiry is not a matter of science but of common observation, upon which the ordinary mind is capable of forming a judgment, an expert may not state his opinion.[2]

An expert testifies as a specialist. He may be examined on foreign laws, and as to scientific authorities. Whether a conclusion belongs to him or not is for the court to say. He may give an opinion as to a condition known in his specialty; as, the opinion of a physician, surgeon, lawyer, scientist, practitioner in a business, artist, one familiar with a market, or with values generally, or cognizant of damage done. On sanity, friends and attendants may give their opinion. An expert may explain his opinion. His testimony is to be jealously scrutinized, particularly when given ex parte.[3]

The opinions of witnesses are constantly taken as to the result of their observations on a great variety of subjects. All that is required is that the witnesses should be able properly to make the observations, the result of which they give; and the confidence bestowed on their conclusions will depend upon the extent and completeness of their examination, and the ability with which it is made.[4]

The testimony of an expert has not the weight of testimony from observation. His statements are mere opinions, and entitled to such weight only as his experience justifies.[5]

The weight of authority is that he cannot be compelled to give a professional opinion without compensation.[6]

If specially feed, the jury may consider the effect on his credibility.[7]

See DESIGN, 2; HANDWRITING; INSANITY, 2 (6); INSPECTION, 2; SCIENCE.

EXPLOSION. Sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report.[8]

There is no difference in common use, between "explode" and "burst." . . The ordinary idea is that "explosion" is the cause, while "rupture" is the effect.[1]

An insurance against "loss or damage by fire" covers a loss arising in part from an explosion and in part from combustion of gunpowder.[2] See FIREWORKS.

EXPORT. To carry away: send out of a country. Exports: merchandise sent from one country to another.

As used in the Constitution, Art. 1, secs. 8, 10, does not include articles transported from one State into another.[3] See further IMPORT.

EXPOSE. To set out, bring into view; display, exhibit; show: as, to expose property to sale,[4] to expose the person.[5] See INDECENT.

EXPOSITIO. L. A setting out — the meaning of language; explanation; interpretation.

Contemporanea expositio optima et fortissima in lege. The explanation of the time is the fittest and strongest in law. Contemporaneous interpretation is the most satisfactory.

Words in constitutions, treaties, statutes, — old writings generally, will be given the sense and scope they had with the makers or framers. The courts will not disturb the construction put upon a doubtful law by long usage.[6]

Contemporaneous construction "can never abrogate the text, it can never fritter away its obvious sense, it can never narrow down its true limitations, it can never enlarge its natural boundaries."[7]

The contemporaneous construction of a statute by those charged with its execution, especially when it has long prevailed, is entitled to great weight, and should not be disregarded or overturned except for cogent reasons, and unless it be clear that such construction is erroneous.[8] Compare ERROR, 1, Communis, etc.

---

[1] Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9, 26 (1872), Strong, J.

[2] Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 472 (1876), cases; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 id. 618 (1884); Carter v. Boehm, 1 Sm. L. C. 286, cases.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 434–56, cases.

[4] Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 437–38 (1887), cases.

[5] United States v. Pendergast, 32 F. R. 198 (1887).

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. § 379, cases: Sprague, 276; 5 South. Law Rev. 793–809 (1880), cases; 6 id. 706–18 (1880), cases; 12 Cent. Law J. 193 (1881), cases; 21 Am. Law Rev. 571–77 (1887), cases; Medico-Leg. J., Sept., 1883; 59 Ind. 15; 18 Abb. Pr. 207, 240.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 456, 380; Harvey v. Packet Co., 8 Biss. 99 (1877). See generally Ware v. Starkey, 80 Va. 804 (1885); 18 Bradw. 343; 70 Iowa, 432, 474; 30 Minn. 411; 2 Utah, 189; 41 N. Y. 547; 43 Pa. 12; 3 Tex. Ap. 157.

[8] United Life, &c. Ins. Co. v. Foote, 23 Ohio St. 348 (1872).

[1] Evans v. Columbian Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 151–52 (1870).

[2] Scripture v. Lowell Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 10 Cush. 356 (1852). See also 56 Md. 81; 21 Wend. 367; 3 Phila. 323; 19 C. B. N. S. 126.

[3] Exp. Martin, 7 Nev. 142 (1871); Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 131 (1868).

[4] Adams Express Co. v. Schlessinger, 75 Pa. 256 (1874); 12 Vt. 212.

[5] 2 Bishop, Cr. L. § 318; 46 N. J. L. 16.

[6] Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 464 (1884).

[7] 1 Story, Const. § 407.

[8] United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 253 (1888), cases, Harlan, J.; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 418 (1821), Marshall, C. J.; Harrison v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 171 (1885); United States v. Saylor, 31 F. R. 548 (1887). See also 5 Cranch, 22; 12 Wheat. 210; 99 U. S. 265; 101 id. 461; 107 id. 406; 113 id. 571, 733; 116 id. 622; 31 F. R. 263; 6 Col. 92; 9 id. 93; 6 Conn. 89; 119 Ill. 345; 36 Kan. 111; 83 Ky. 103; 17 Mass. *144; 44 N. J. L. 22; 16 Ohio St. 519; 70 Pa. 208; 73 id. 84; 94 id. 249; 14 S. C. 195; 66 Wis. 468.

EXPRESS. 1. To declare in terms, state in words, mention distinctly, avow openly.

Express; expressed. Openly uttered and avowed; stated or mentioned in words, oral or written; made known; opposed to implied: left to implication or inference; as, express or an express or expressed — abrogation, assumpsit or undertaking, condition, consent, consideration, contract, covenant, dedication, malice, repeal, trust, warranty,[1] qq v. See also EXPRESSIO.

(2) Intended for a special service; contracting for expedition in the transportation of packages: as, express — company, business, facilities, matter.

Express car. See BURGLARY, p. 141, n. 2.

Express companies are organized to carry small and valuable packages rapidly, in such manner as not to subject them to the danger of loss and damage which attends the transportation of heavy and bulky articles of commerce.[2] See PACKAGE.

Express companies are common carriers. Originally formed to transport money, treasure, and other valuables, they have become carriers of goods and merchandise generally.[3]

Before railroads came into use, common carriers by land delivered parcels to the consignees. Railway companies were held bound only to carry goods to their destination, and put them safely in a warehouse. To remedy this defect in the railway transportation of packages of great value in small compass, express companies were instituted. They undertake to deliver to the consignee in person.[4]

The style "express forwarders" does not necessarily make them simple forwarders.[5]

What they are is to be determined by the nature of their business, not by contracts made respecting their liability.[6]

Express business. Involves the idea of regularity, as to route or time, or both. In the act of June 30, 1864, § 104 (13 St. L. 276), does not cover what is done by a person who carries goods at special request, not running regular trips nor on regular routes.[7]

The regulation of the business of an express company upon the property of a railroad company, in the absence of legislation, is for the parties themselves to determine. . . In a few States, by recent statutes or by judicial interpretation, railroad companies are required to furnish equal facilities to all express companies desiring to use their property. . . But the reason is obvious why special contracts are necessary. The transportation required is of a kind which must, if possible, be had for the most part on passenger trains. It requires not only speed, but reasonable certainty as to the quantity that will be carried at one time. As the things carried are to be kept in the personal custody of the messenger of the express company, a certain amount of car space must be set apart, and, as far as practicable, be put in the exclusive possession of the expressman in charge. As the business to be done is "express" it implies access to the train for loading at the latest, and for unloading at the earliest, convenient moment. All this is inconsistent with the idea of an express business on trains free to all express carriers. Passenger trains are primarily for the transportation of passengers and their baggage. This must be done with reasonable promptness and comfort to the passenger. The express business is in a degree subordinate to the passenger business, and it is consequently the duty of the railroad company in arranging for the express to see that there is as little interference as possible with the wants of passengers. This implies a special understanding as to the amount of car space that will be afforded, and the conditions on which it is to be occupied, the particular trains that can be used, the places at which they shall stop, the price to be paid, etc. It by no means follows that because a railroad company can serve one express company in one way it can as well serve another company in the same way. . . As long as the public are served to their reasonable satisfaction, it is a matter of no importance who serves them. The railroad company performs its whole duty when it affords the public all reasonable express accommodations. The company may choose its own means of carriage, always provided they are such as to insure reasonable promptness and security.[1]

See CARRIER, Common.

EXPRESSIO. L. Definite statement or enumeration; expression.

Expressio unius, exclusio alterius. The statement of one thing is the exclusion of another. Sometimes put, inclusio unius, etc.,— "including one excludes all others."[2] Still another form is, expressum facit cessare tacitum: the expressed controls the

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 448; 101 U. S. 670.

[2] Southern Express Co. v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 10 F. R. 213 (1882), Miller, J. See 2 Redf. Railw. 15, Carriers, 50, § 38: American Union Express Co. v. Robinson, 72 Pa. 278 (1872).

[3] Southern Express Co. v. Cook, 44 Ala. 473 (1870).

[4] 2 Redf. Railw. 21; United States Express Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 151 (1875).

[5] Christenson v. American Express Co., 15 Minn. 283 (1870).

[6] Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Express Co., 93 U. S. 181–85 (1876).

[7] Retzer v. Wood, 109 U. S. 187 (1883).

[1] Express Cases: Railroad Companies (Memphis & L., St. Louis, I. M. & S., and Missouri, K. & T.) v. Express Companies (Southern and Adams), 117 U. S. 1, 29 (1886), Waite, C. J. Commented on, Pfister v. Central Pacific R. Co., 70 Cal. 183 (1886). See also 57 Me. 194; 115 Mass. 416; 4 Brewst. 563. Contra, 2 F. R. 465; 3 id. 593, 775; 4 id. 481; 6 id. 427; 8 id. 799; 10 id. 213, 869; 15 id. 568; 18 id. 671, 672; 19 id. 21.

[2] 12 F. R. 414; 6 Col. 83, 94.

unmentioned; an unequivocal statement prevails over an implication.[1]

Express mention of one act, condition, stipulation, class or number, person or place, implies the exclusion of another or others not mentioned. The maxim restricts what is implied by what is expressed, what is general by what is particular and specific.[2]

The mode provided in a constitution for its amendment is the only mode in which it can be amended. The ordinary rule is, that where power is given to do a thing in a particular way, there affirmative words, marking out the way, by implication prohibit all other ways.[3]

It would have been impracticable for the framers of the Constitution to have enumerated all the means by the use of which the powers expressly conferred upon the government of the United States should be exercised. A sovereign must have a choice of means by which to exercise sovereign powers.[4] See NECESSITY.

Offenses not mentioned in a treaty of extradition are excluded from its operation.[5]

A special provision in an act for levying a tax of a fixed per centum excludes the levy of a higher, although necessary, tax.[6]

The creation of specific means for exercising powers of municipal government excludes all other means.[7]

The charter of a corporation is the measure of its powers, and the enumeration of those powers implies the exclusion of others.[8]

A general statement of the duties for which a bond is given will be construed to include only such other duties of the same kind as were not specifically enumerated.[9]

The expression, in a policy of insurance, that a vessel should proceed to a port in Cuba and thence to Europe, implies that she should visit no other port in Cuba.[10]

An express guaranty of a bill or note cannot be converted into an indorsement.[11]

Where a party specifies an objection to the admission of evidence it must be considered that he waives or has no ground for other objections.[12]

The maxims express the principle of the rule that excludes such parol testimony as would vary the terms of a written instrument.

They also serve to prevent fraud and perjury.[13] They are never more applicable than when applied to the interpretation of a statute.[1]

See INCIDENT; REMEDY; SURPLUSAGE.

EXPRESSIONS, GENERAL. See CONSTRUCTION; DICTUM, 2; EXPRESSIO, Unius, etc.; OPINION, 8.

EXPULSION. See AMOTION; FRANCHISE, Disfranchise; EVICTION.

EXPUNGE. See ALTER, 2; CANCEL; SCANDAL, 2.

EXPURGATORY. See OATH.

EXTEND. To stretch or lengthen out; to continue, enlarge, expand. Compare ENLARGE; EXTENT; RENEW.

To extend a charter is to give one which now exists greater or longer time in which to operate than that to which it was originally limited.[2]

In its primary sense, when applied to a railroad track or other line, may import a continuation of the line without a break. But power to authorize a railway "to extend the location of its tracks" may be held to include the location of an additional track, not connected with existing tracks except by those of another corporation.[3]

For proper cause shown, a court will usually extend the time within which a thing was previously directed to be done; as, the taking of testimony.[4]

Extension. Imports the continuance of an existing thing.[5]

Since the act of March 2, 1861, c. 88 (12 St. L. 249), patents are granted for the term of seventeen years, and further extension is forbidden, except as to designs.[6]

In the construction of statutes a term of an inferior class will not be extended to a superior class. See GENERAL, 6.

Creditors extend, that is, increase the time of payment of their claims, by agreeing to wait a certain time after the claims become due.

EXTENT. 1. In common parlance, varies somewhat in meaning according to the subject to which it is applied, and as that changes, it may as well refer to time as to

---

[1] 71 Ala. 87; 82 id. 629; 62 Cal. 639; 4 Wash. C. C. 185.

[2] Broom, Max. 651, 664.

[3] Re Constitutional Convention, 14 R. I. 651 (1883), cases. See also Smith v. Stevens, 10 Wall. 326 (1870).

[4] 2 Story, Const, § 1243.

[5] United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 420 (1886).

[6] United States v. County of Macon, 99 U. S. 590 (1878).

[7] Mayor of Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. 475 (1873).

[8] Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 82 (1879).

[9] South v. Maryland, 18 How. 402 (1855).

[10] Hearne v. Marine Ins. Co., 20 Wall. 493 (1874).

[11] Central Trust Co. v. Nat. Bank of Wyandotte, 101 U. S. 79 (1879).

[12] Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 665 (1878).

[13] See Smith v. McCullough, 104 U. S. 25 (1881); 109 id. 628; 18 Ct. Cl. 117, 457; 31 F. R. 220; 32 id. 50, 554; 4 Del. Ch. 135; 66 Ga. 108; 87 Ind. 291; 59 Iowa, 77; 36 Kan. 637; 34 La. An. 225; 98 Mass. 29; 117 id. 448; 10 Minn. 113; 30 id. 297; 44 N. J. L. 45; 3 N. Mex. 56; 73 N. Y. 440; 59 Pa. 178; 71 id. 88, 429; 75 id. 63, 195, 501; 80 id. 412; 19 S. C. 147; 80 Va. 327, 373, 374; 60 Wis. 252; 62 id. 41; 66 id. 382, 565; 67 id. 89; L. R., 3 Exch. 177; 2 Para. Cont., 6 ed., 515 (r, t).

[1] Coast-Line R. Co. v. City of Savannah, 30 F. R. 649 (1887).

[2] Moers v. City of Reading, 21 Pa. 201 (1853).

[3] South Boston R. Co. v. Middlesex R. Co., 121 Mass. 489 (1877), Morton, J. See also Volmer's Appeal, 118 Pa. 166 (1887); 19 W. N. C. 133.

[4] See James v. McMillan, 55 Mich. 136 (1884).

[5] Brooke v. Clarke, 1 B. & Al. *403 (1818).

[6] See R. S. § 4934.

space, or proportion; especially so, when applied to interests, as in patents, for a particular term of years.[1]

2. At common law, a writ of execution by which the defendant's body, lands, and goods may all be taken at once, to compel payment of a debt. At present, concerns lands only.

Originally enforced a recognizance or debt acknowledged on a statute merchant or staple. The sheriff caused the lands and tenements to be appraised to their full "extended" value that it might be known how soon the debt would be satisfied.[2] Compare STATUTE, Merchant.

Sometimes denotes a writ by which the creditor may obtain possession of the debtor's land till the debt be paid.[3] See INQUEST, Of lands.

EXTENUATION. See AGGRAVATION.

EXTINGUISH.[4] To put out or quench: to destroy, annihilate; to pay in full, satisfy: as, to extinguish a debt, an estate, a right to rent, a right of way, the rights of a corporation.

Extinguishment. Whenever a right, title or interest is destroyed or taken away by the act of God, operation of law, or act of the party.[5]

Extinguishing one debt by substituting another is always a question of intention.[6]

See RELEASE; MERGER, 1; SATISFY, 2.

EXTORTION.[7] That abuse of public justice which consists in an officer's unlawfully taking, by color of his office, from any man, any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due.[8] Whence extorsively.

Obtaining money or other valuable thing by compulsion, actual force, or the force of motives applied to the will.[9]

The wrongful exaction of money. The law, at the time of payment, creates an obligation to refund. Notice to refund is not necessary, therefore, unless to serve to rebut the inference that the payment was voluntary or made through mistake.[10]

No public officer may take other fees or rewards than such as are given by virtue of some statute.[1]

The taking or obtaining of anything from another by a public officer by means of illegal compulsion or oppressive exaction. The offense, by § 3169, Rev. St., is the same as extortion at common law.[2]

Compare EXACTION; BLACKMAIL; OPPRESSION. See PAYMENT, Involuntary; PROTEST, 1.

EXTRA. A Latin preposition and adverb, contracted from extera (parte): exter, or exterus, outward: ex, out.

1. On the outside: outside; without; beyond.

2. Except; besides.

3. In extra costs, extra services, extra wages, and the noun extras, supposed to be an abbreviation of "extraordinary:" beyond what is common, additional to what is due or expected.

See Dermott v. Jones, under CONTRACT, Executed.

Extra-dotal. Beyond dower. See DOTAL.

Extra-hazardous. Specially risky. See HAZARD.

Extra-judicial. Beyond the jurisdiction; not judicial; outside of, or out of, court: as, an extra-judicial — act, admission, decision, oath. See JUDGE; JUDICIAL.

Extra-official. Outside the duties of an office, q. v.

Extra-territorial. Beyond the territory, q. v.

EXTRACT. See COPY; ESTREAT; EVIDENCE, Secondary; REVIEW, 3.

EXTRADITION.[3] Surrender, by one government to another, of a person who has fled to the territory of the former to escape arrest and punishment under the criminal laws of the latter. Whence extradite, extraditable, non-extraditable.

International or foreign extradition. Exists between independent nations. Inter-State extradition. Exists between individual States of the same nation or union.

For a crime committed against the law of a State, extradition of the offender from a foreign country must be negotiated through the Federal government, conformably to the existing treaty.

1. As between nations, the surrender of a fugitive is a matter of conventional arrange-

---

[1] Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 698 (1846).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 420.

[3] See 1 Troub. & H. (Pa.) § 1222.

[4] L. extinguere, to quench.

[5] Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 348 (1854): 3 Bac. Abr.; 20 Ga. 403; 4 McCord, 101; 28 N. J. L. 20.

[6] Potter v. McCoy, 26 Pa. 462, 460 (1856). See 3 W. & S. 277; 4 Watts, 379; 6 Fla. 25; 35 N. H. 421; 12 Barb. 128; 29 Vt. 488.

[7] L. extorquere, to twist or wring out.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 141; 3 Cow. 603.

[9] [Commonwealth v. O'Brien, 12 Cush. 90 (1853), Shaw, Chief Justice.

[10] United States Bank v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 19 (1832). See also 3 Saw. 474; 14 F. R. 597; 35 Ark. 442: 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 390; 4 Conn. 480; 2 Sneed, 162; 7 Pick. 287.

[1] R. S. §§ 3169, 5481: United States v. Waltz, 3 Saw 474 (1875).

[2] United States v. Deaver, 14 F. R. 597 (1882), Dick, District Judge.

[3] L. ex-tradere, to deliver over.

ment, not a matter of right. The obligation is not imposed by the law of nations. Deliveries not provided for by treaty stipulation have been made in many cases, but always upon the principle of comity.[1]

The trespass of a kidnaper, unauthorized by either government, is not a case provided for in the treaties hitherto made, and the remedy for the trespass is by a proceeding by the government whose law he may have violated, or by the party injured. How far a forcible transfer, made with no reference to the existing treaty, may be set up against the right to try the accused, is for the State court to decide: it presents no question upon which the Supreme Court can review the decision.[2]

Treaties have been made between the United States and the following foreign states, for crimes specified and defined in the treaties themselves respectively:

Great Britain, Aug. 9, 1842 (8 St. L. 576).

France, Nov. 9, 1843 (8 St. L. 582); Feb. 24, 1845 (ib. 617); Feb. 10, 1858 (11 id. 741).

Hawaiian Islands, Dec. 20, 1849 (9 St. L. 961).

Swiss Confederation, Nov. 25, 1850 (11 St. L. 587).

Prussia and Germanic Confederation, June 16, 1852 (10 St. L. 964); Nov. 16, 1852 (ib. 964).

Bavaria, Sept. 12, 1853 (10 St. L. 1022).

Hanover, Jan. 18, 1855 (10 St. L. 1138).

Two Sicilies, Oct. 1, 1855 (11 St. L. 651).

Austria, July 3, 1856 (11 St. L. 691); re-declared Sept. 20, 1870 (17 id. 835).

Baden, Jan. 30, 1857 (11 St. L. 713); re-declared July 19, 1868 (16 id. 733).

Sweden and Norway, March 21, 1860 (12 St. L. 1225).

Venezuela, Aug. 27, 1860 (12 St. L. 1143).

Mexico, Dec. 11, 1861 (12 St. L. 1199); re-declared July 10, 1868 (15 id. 688).

Hayti, Nov. 3, 1864 (13 St. L. 711).

Dominican Republic, Feb. 8, 1867 (15 St. L. 473).

Italy, March 23, 1868 (11 St. L. 629); Jan. 21, 1869 (16 id. 767); June 11, 1884 (24 id. 1001).

Salvador, May 23, 1870 (18 St. L. 693, 796).

Nicaragua, June 25, 1870 (17 St. L. 815).

Peru, Sept. 12, 1870 (18 St. L. 719).

Orange Free State, Dec. 22, 1871 (18 St. L. 751).

Ecuador, June 28, 1872 (18 St. L. 756).

Belgium, March 19, 1874 (18 St. L. 804); June 13, 1882 (22 id. 972).

Ottoman Empire, Aug. 11, 1874 (19 St. L. 572).

Spain, Jan. 5, 1877 (19 St. L. 650); Aug. 7, 1882 (22 id. 991).

Netherlands, May 23, 1880 (21 St. L. 769).

Luxemburg, Oct. 29, 1883 (23 St. L. 808).

Japan, April 29, 1886 (24 St. L. 1015).[1]

Treaties have also been made with Indian tribes by which they stipulate to surrender persons accused of crime against the laws of the United States; and some provide for the mutual extradition of offenders.[2]

Treaties also provide for the mutual surrender of deserting seamen.

Most of the treaties prescribe the evidence required to authorize an order of extradition.

All hearings under treaty stipulation or convention shall be held on land, publicly, and in a room or office easily accessible to the public.[3] . . On the hearing of any case, upon affidavit being filed by the person charged, that he cannot safely go to trial without certain witnesses, what he expects to prove by each of them, that he is not possessed of sufficient means and is actually unable to pay the fees of such witnesses, the judge or commissioner before whom the hearing is had may order that they be subpœnaed, the costs to be paid as similar fees are paid in the case of witnesses subpœnaed in behalf of the United States.[4] . . Fees and costs shall be certified to the secretary of state of the United States, who shall authorize payment of the same out of the appropriation to defray the expenses of the judiciary, and shall cause the amount to be reimbursed by the foreign government by whom the proceeding may have been instituted.[5] . . Where any depositions, warrants, or other papers or copies thereof shall be offered in evidence upon the hearing of any case, the same shall be received as evidence for all the purposes of such hearing if they shall be legally authenticated so as to entitle them to be received for similar purposes by the tribunals of the foreign country from which the accused shall have escaped, and the certificate of the principal diplomatic or consular officer of the United States resident in such foreign country shall be proof that any deposition, warrant, or other paper or copies thereof, so offered, are authenticated in the manner required by this act.[6]

The complaint made before the United States commissioner should show on its face that he who makes it is a representative of the foreign government.[7]

[1] Re Metzgar, 5 How. 188 (1847); United States v. Davis, 2 Sumn. 482 (1837); United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 411 (1886); 12 Blatch. 391; 59 N. H. 110; 14 How. 112; 16 Alb. Law J. 444; 1 Kent, 36; Woolsey, Int. Law, §§ 77–80.

[2] Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436 (Dec. 6, 1886), Miller, J. Ker, who was charged with larceny in Cook county, Illinois, fled to South America. He was apprehended in Peru by one Julian (who had proper extradition papers), forcibly placed on board the United States vessel Essex, transferred at Honolulu to the City of Sydney, carried to San Francisco, and thence taken to Cook county, where he was convicted and sentenced. Same case, 110 Ill. 627; 51 Am. R. 706; 35 Alb. L. J. 69.

As to abducting an escaped criminal from another State, see Mahon v. Justice, Jailer, etc., 127 U. S. 700 (1888), in which case Mahon, residing in West Virginia, was, by persons acting as private citizens, forcibly and without process conveyed back to Kentucky, to be tried for murder. The circuit court of Kentucky, and, later, the Supreme Court of the United States, refused to discharge him upon a writ of habeas corpus.

[1] See generally R. S. §§ 5270–80; 23 Cent. Law J. 247 (1886) — London Times.

[2] See 11 St. L. 612, 703.

[3] Act 3 August, 1882, sec. 1: 22 St. L. 215.

[4] Ibid., sec. 3.

[5] Ibid., sec. 4.

[6] Ibid., sec. 5. Sec. 2 prescribes the fees to be paid to commissioners. Sec. 6 repeals Act 19 June, 1876 R. S. § 5271.

[7] In re Herris, 32 F. R. 583 (1887).

Most of the treaties exclude "political offenses" from their operation, that is, offenses incidental to and forming part or a political disturbance.[1]

Some treaties also provide that a citizen or subject of the country on which the demand is made shall not be surrendered.

Under the Ashburton Treaty of 1842, between Great Britain and the United States, a fugitive who has been surrendered to this country cannot lawfully be tried for any other offense than that for which he was extradited — at least until he has had an opportunity to return to the country from which he was taken. National honor requires that good faith be kept in this regard.[2]

Act of 33 and 34 Vict. (1870) c. 52, sec. 3, provides that a fugitive shall not be surrendered to a foreign state unless provision is made "by the law of that state, or by arrangement," that, "until he has been restored or had an opportunity of returning to her Majesty's dominions," he shall not "be detained or tried in that foreign state for any offense committed prior to his surrender, other than the extradition crime."[3]

2. Extradition as between the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, is regulated by the Constitution and by statutes. The former provides that "A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime."[4]

The words "treason, felony, or other crime" embrace every act forbidden and made punishable by a law of the State. The words "treason and felony" were introduced to guard against any restriction of the word "crime," and to prevent the provision from being construed by the rules and usages of independent nations in compacts for delivering up fugitives from justice. According to these usages, even where the obligation to deliver the fugitive was admitted, persons who fled on account of "political offenses" were almost always excepted; and the nation upon which the demand is made also uniformly exercises a discretion in weighing the evidence of the crime, and the character of the offense. . . And as the States, although united as one nation for certain specified purposes, are yet, as far as concerns their internal government, separate sovereignties, independent of each other, it was deemed necessary to show, by the terms used, that this compact was not to be regarded as an ordinary treaty for extradition between nations altogether independent of each other, but was intended to embrace political offenses against the sovereignty of the State, as well as all other crimes. And as treason was "felony" it was necessary to insert those words, to show, in language that could not be mistaken, that political offenders were included in it. For this was a compact binding the States to aid each other in executing their laws and preserving order within their respective confines. . . As early as 1643, certain plantations in New England pledged themselves to deliver up fugitives from justice found within their borders. The advantages derived from this compact doubtless suggested the introduction into the Articles of Confederation of the provision that "If any person guilty of, or charged with treason, felony, or other high misdemeanor in any State, shall flee from justice, and be found in any of the United States, he shall upon demand of the Governor or Executive power, of the State from which he fled, be delivered up and removed to the State having jurisdiction of the offense. Full faith and credit shall be given in each of these States to the records, acts and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other State." (Art. IV, sec. 2-3.) The colonies, having learned from experience the necessity of this provision for the internal safety of each of them, and to promote concord and harmony among all their members, incorporated it in the Constitution substantially in the same words, but substituting the word "crime" for "high misdemeanor," thereby showing the deliberate purpose to include every offense known to the law of the State from which the party charged had fled. . . The compact gives the right to the executive authority of the State to demand the fugitive from the executive authority of the State in which he is found. The right to "demand" implies that it is an absolute right; and it follows that there must be a correlative obligation to deliver, without reference to the character of the crime charged, or to the policy or laws of the State to which the fugitive has fled. This is the construction put upon this Article in the act of Congress of 1793, a statute passed by many who had been framers of the Constitution.

If the duty of providing by law the regulations necessary to carry the compact into execution had been left to the States, each State might have required different proof to authenticate the judicial proceeding upon which its demand was to be founded; and as the duty of the governor of the State in which the fugitive is found is merely ministerial, without the right to exercise either executive or judicial discretion, he could not lawfully issue a warrant to arrest an individual without a law of the State or of Congress to authorize it. These difficulties presented themselves in 1791, in a demand by the governor of Pennsylvania upon the governor of Virginia, and both of them

[1] 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 70; 2 Law Quar. Rev. 177-87 (1886), cases; Kentucky v. Dennison, post.

[2] United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 411-33 (Dec. 6, 1886), cases, Miller, J.; Waite, C. J., dissenting. Same case, 26 Am. Law Reg. 241-46 (1887), cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 267 (1887); 35 Alb. Law J. 204-8 (1887), cases, S. T. Spear. See also 19 Cent. Law J. 22-24 (1884), cases. Evidence under treaty with Great Britain, Exp. McPhun, 30 F. R. 57 (1887). Our state department and extradition, 20 Am. Law Rev. 540 (1886).

[3] See also Exp. Coy, 32 F. R. 911 (1887), Turner, J.; ib. 917, cases; Re Miller, 23 id. 32 (1885), cases. Clarke, Extrad. XXXVI; Spear, Inten. Extrad. 158-59; 14 Alb. Law J. 85-99 (1876); 6 Can. Law J. 227; 8 Blatch. 131. See generally 10 Am. Law Rev. 617 (1876); 17 id. 315-49 (1883).

[4] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 2, cl. 2.

brought the subject before the President, who immediately submitted the matter to the consideration of Congress. This led to the act of February 12, 1793. Difficulty as to authenticating the judicial proceeding was removed by the Article in the Constitution which declares that "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records, and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof." (Art. IV, sec. 1.) The provision for the delivery of fugitives was doubtless in mind when this power was given to Congress.

The act of 1793, as re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, reads as follows: "Sec. 5278. Whenever the executive authority of any State or Territory demands any person as a fugitive from justice of the executive authority of any State or Territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of the indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any State or Territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the State or Territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the State or Territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent appears within six months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the State or Territory making such demand shall be paid by such State or Territory." "Sec. 5279. Any agent, so appointed, who receives the fugitive into his custody, shall be empowered to transport him to the State or Territory from which he fled. And every person who, by force, sets at liberty or rescues the fugitive from such agent while so transporting him, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than one year." (1 St. L. 302, ch. 7, §§ 1, 2.)

The judicial acts which are necessary to authorize the demand are plainly specified in the foregoing enactment; and the certificate of the executive authority is made conclusive as to their verity when presented to the executive of the State where the fugitive is found. He has no right to look behind them, or to question them, or to look into the character of the crime specified in the judicial proceeding. His duty is merely ministerial — to cause the party to be arrested and delivered to the agent of the State where the crime was committed. The words "it shall be the duty" were not used as mandatory and compulsory, but as declaratory of the moral duty which the compact between the United States and each State created, when Congress had provided the mode of carrying it into execution. There is no power delegated to the general government to use coercive means to compel the governor of a State to discharge his duty in this respect.[1]

It is within the power of each State, except as her authority may be limited by the Constitution, to declare what shall be offenses against her laws, and citizens of other States, when within her jurisdiction, are subject to those laws. In recognition of this right, the words of the clause in reference to fugitives from justice were made sufficiently comprehensive to include every offense against the demanding State, without exception as to the nature of the crime. The demand may be made upon the governor of a Territory. Upon the executive of the State in which the accused is found, rests the responsibility of determining, in some legal mode, whether he is a fugitive from the justice of the demanding State. He does not fail in his duty if he makes it a condition precedent to surrender that it be shown by competent proof that the accused is in fact a fugitive from such State.[1]

The accused is entitled to have the lawfulness of his arrest inquired into, by a court of the State or of the United States, by a writ of habeas corpus. . . It must appear to the governor of the State on whom the demand is made that the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the demanding State, by an indictment or an affidavit, certified as authentic by the governor of the latter State; and that the person is really a fugitive from the justice of that State. The first of these prerequisites is a question of law, always open upon the face of the papers to judicial inquiry, on an application for a discharge. The second is a question of fact, which the governor upon whom the demand is made must decide, upon such evidence as he may deem satisfactory. A certified copy of the law alleged to have been broken need not be furnished. The courts of the United States take judicial notice of the laws of all the States. To be a "fugitive from justice" it is not necessary that the accused should have left the State after an indictment found, or to avoid a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that, having within a State committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he has left its jurisdiction and is found within the territory of another.[2]

[1] Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Dennison, Governor of Ohio, 24 How. 66, 99–110 (1860), Taney, C. J. This was a motion for a rule on Dennison to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued by the Supreme Court, commanding him to cause one Lago to be surrendered to the authorities of Kentucky. Lago, a free man of color, after being indicted for assisting a slave to escape, fled to Ohio. The governor of that State, on the advice of the attorney-general, refused to deliver up the fugitive, on the ground that the act for which Lago was indicted was neither "treason," nor "felony" nor any "other crime," either at common law or under the laws of Ohio.

[1] Exp. Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 650, 652 (1885), Harlan, J. Reggel was indicted in Pennsylvania for obtaining goods by false pretenses, and fled to Utah.

[2] Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 94–97 (1885), Matthews, J. Roberts petitioned the District Court for the Southern District of Georgia for a discharge, alleging that he was illegally restrained of his liberty by Reilly, agent of the State of New York, in which

A State may legislate in aid of the enactments of Congress.[1] And, as seen above, the courts of a State may pass upon the legality of an arrest.[2]

The provision is a national police regulation.[3]

See FUGITIVE; REQUISITION; EXPRESSIO, Unius, etc.

EXTRAORDINARY. 1. The utmost; the highest under the circumstances: as, extraordinary care or diligence. See CARE; NEGLIGENCE.

2. Out of the common order; not usual or regular: as, extraordinary jurisdiction, remedies. See CHANCERY, 1; MINISTER, 8.

Poverty or financial embarrassment is not an "extraordinary circumstance," within the meaning of a statute excusing laches in proceeding with a cause.[4]

As between ship-owner and insurer, the former is bound to provide against ordinary, while the latter insures against extraordinary perils. By "extraordinary" is not meant what has never been previously heard of, or is within former experience, but what is beyond the ordinary, usual, or common.[5]

EXTRAVAGANT. See IMPROVIDENT; SPENDTHRIFT.

EXTREME. See CRUELTY; PENALTY.

EXTREMIS. See IN EXTREMIS.

EXTRINSIC. See EVIDENCE.

EYE. See MAYHEM; SECURITY, Personal.

F.

F. 1. Was anciently branded upon the ear or face of a person guilty of falsity, fighting, or of a felony admitted to clergy.

Abolished by 7 and 8 Geo. IV (1827), c. 28, s. 6.

2. Stands for words sometimes abbreviated: as, first, French.

F. F. Fieri facias. See EXECUTION, 8, Writs of.

F. J. First judge or justice.

FABRICATE. In a statute against "fabricating" a voting paper, imports an act done with criminal intent; implies fraud or falsehood, a false or fraudulent concoction, by one knowing that it is wrong and contrary to law.[1] Compare FORGE, 2.

FAC. See FACERE.

FACE. 1. As a thing is made: impression; expression; appearance, q. v.: as, the face of a bill, bond, note, check, draft, judgment, record.

A purchaser must look at the face of a bond,[2] q. v. A contract, on its face, may be ultra vires.[3]

2. The sum, less interest, which appears to be due by an instrument or record: as, the face of a judgment.[4]

3. Presence; sight; front; view: as, for parties or witnesses to meet face to face; that is, front to front, and, perhaps, facing the court or jury. See CONFRONT; CONTEMPT.

4. Mere appearance or aspect; phase; semblance, likeness: as, an act intended to give an honest face to a transaction. See INTENTION.

FACERE. L. To make, do, perform. Compare FIERI.

Fac simile. Made like in appearance; a copy.

Said of counterfeits, designs, signatures, trade-marks, qq. v.

Facias. That you make or cause to be made. See EXECUTION, 8, Writs of.

Facies. Appearance; view. See PRIMUS, Prima, etc.

Factum. A thing done; a fact. See FACTUM.

Qui facit per alium, facit per se. He who acts through another acts by himself. The act of the agent is the act of the principal — within the scope of the employment.

The authorized act of an agent is imputed to his employer.

An act done by one under the command and direction of the owner of a vessel, with his approbation and for his benefit, is as much his own act in contemplation of law as if done by himself. To this extent at least the maxim applies. And it is not material whether the act is done in his absence from, or his presence in, the scene.[5] See AGENT; CONTRACTOR.

Roberts stood indicted for the larceny of railroad bonds.

[1] Exp. Ammons, 34 Ohio St. 518 (1878); Wilcox v. Nolz, ib. 520 (1878), cases.

[2] Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 637 (1884).

[3] See generally Re Leary, 10 Bened. 208, 205-22 (1879); 18 Blatch. 430; 8 Law. 370; 2 Flip. 183; 16 F. R. 93; 7 Op. Att.-Gen. 6; 8 id. 306, 396, 521; 63 Ind. 344; 50 Iowa, 106; 34 Ohio St. 71-79; 4 Tex. Ap. 662; 60 Wis. 594; 18 Alb. Law J. 146-51; 2 West Coast Rep. 599.

Rules proposed by Inter-State Conference, 36 Alb. Law J. 220 (Sept. 10, 1887). The new extradition bill, 57 id. 88-93 (1888), A. T. Spear.

[4] Whalen v. Sheridan, 10 F. R. 662 (1880); Müller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 251 (1875).

[5] Moses v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 1 Duer, 170 (1852); The Titania, 19 F. R. 105 (1883).

[1] Aberdare v. Hammett, L. R., 10 Q. B. 165-66 (1875).

[2] 1 Wall. 93; 5 id. 734.

[3] 96 U. S. 267.

[4] See Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Iowa, 270 (1871).

[5] United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. 472 (1827). Story, J. See also 1 Bl. Com. 474; 91 U. S. 312; 48 Ark

FACT. Anything done, or said; an act or action; an actual occurrence; a circumstance; whatever comes to pass; an event. See FACTUM.

Subjects of jurisprudence are facts and laws: facts are the source and cause of laws. From facts proceed rights and wrongs. By fact is meant anything the subject of testimony. Perception is a fact. If any emotion is felt, as joy, grief, anger, the feeling is a fact. If the operation of the mind is productive of an effect, as intention, knowledge, skill, the possession of this effect is a fact. If any proposition be true, whatever is affirmed or denied in it is a fact.[1]

"Fact" and "truth" are often used in common parlance as synonymous; as employed in pleadings they are widely different. A fact in pleading is a circumstance, act, event or incident; a truth is a legal principle which declares or governs the facts and their operative effect.[2]

An act, deed, circumstance, or event is none the less a fact because reached as a conclusion of law.[3] See CIRCUMSTANCES, 1.

After the fact; before the fact. See ACCESSARY; FACTUM, Ex post, etc.

Collateral fact. A fact not directly connected with the matter under consideration.

Material fact. Such a fact as influences action in favor of or against a thing about to be done; such a fact as is essential to the right of action or defense. Immaterial fact. A fact not important to a determination; not essential to a conclusion; not necessary to be alleged, nor to be proved if alleged.

In fire insurance any fact is material, the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence an insurer in making the contract, in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of insurance.[4] See CONCEAL, 5.

Verbal fact. (1) A fact which, if stricken out, would have the effect produced by striking out the controlling member (verb) of a sentence, or the controlling sentence from its context.

(2) A declaration accompanying a thing done, explanatory of it, unfolding its nature and quality; as, what is said about sickness or affection, where either is the subject of inquiry.[5]

In fact. In reality; in a matter of fact. Opposed, in law: in a matter of law; empowered by law; imputed in law: as, an attorney in fact, and an attorney at-law; error or fraud in fact and in law. See ATTORNEY; ERROR, 2 (2); FRAUD; PAIS.

"Fact" is contrasted with "law." Law is a principle, fact is an event; law is conceived, fact is actual; law is a rule of duty, fact is that which accords with or contravenes the rule.[1]

Questions, issues, conclusions, and errors are of law or of fact, or of mixed law and fact.

Facts, not evidence, are to be pleaded; and are proven by moral evidence. Questions of fact are said to be solved by the jury, questions of law by the court.

See DEMURRER; IGNORANCE; INQUIRY; JURY; KNOWLEDGE, 1; LAW; MISTAKE; NOTICE, 1; PRESUMPTION; RES, Gestæ; ULTIMATE.

FACTOR.[2] An agent who is commissioned by a merchant or other person to sell goods for him and receive the proceeds.[3]

A commercial agent, transacting the mercantile affairs of other men, in consideration of a fixed salary or certain commission, and, principally, though not exclusively, in the buying and selling of goods.[4]

An agent employed to sell goods or merchandise, consigned or delivered to him, by or for his principal, for a compensation called his "factorage" or commission.[5]

Often called a "commission merchant" or "consignee;" and the goods received by him a "consignment." When, for an additional compensation in case of sale, he undertakes to guarantee the payment of the debt due by the buyer, he is said to receive a del credere commission; that is, a commission of trust or credit.[6]

A factor or commission merchant may buy and sell in his own name, and he has the goods in his possession. A "broker" cannot ordinarily buy and sell in his own name and has no possession of the goods.[6]

Domestic factor. A factor who resides in the same country with his principal. A foreign factor resides in a different country.

A factor may sell sufficient of the merchandise to reimburse himself for advances, or to meet liabilities incurred, unless he has agreed not to do so, or the consignor is ready to reimburse him. He must obey the orders of his principal.[7]

330; 22 Ind. 471; 15 La. An. 456; 1 Pick. 476; 10 Mass. 155; 3 Gray, 361; 11 Metc. 71; 18 Me. 127; 58 N. H. 53; 9 Pa. 13; 98 id. 9; Story, Ag. § 440; Whart. Max. 165.

[1] Ram on Facts, Ch. I.

[2] Drake v. Cockroft, 4 E. D. Smith, 37 (1855), Woodruff, J. See Lawrence v. Wright, 2 Duer, 674-75 (1853).

[3] Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 277 (1886).

[4] Boggs v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 68 (1860); Clark v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 40 N. H. 338 (1860).

[5] See Reaver v. Taylor, 1 Wall. 642 (1863); Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 id. 404-5 (1869), Swayne, J.

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] L. facere, q. v.

[3] Cotton v. Hiller, 52 Miss. 13 (1876), Simrall, C. J.

[4] Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 527 (1827), Hosmer, C. J.

[5] Story, Agency, §§ 33, 37; Duquid v. Edwards, 50 Barb. 295 (1867); Whart. Ag. § 784; Exp. White, L. R., 6 C. Ap. 408 (1871); 1 Pars. Contr. 78; 1 Bl. Com. 427.

[6] Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. 330 (1874), Bradley, J. See also Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 156 (1873).

[7] Brown v. M'Gran, 14 Pet. 494 (1840).

To the extent of advances and charges, he has a lien, a special property, in the merchandise; and he may pledge articles to the amount of that lien. He may protect his possession by a suit against a trespasser. He cannot sell to his own creditor in payment of his debt; nor can he delegate his authority without assent of the principal. Before he has effected a sale, the principal may reclaim possession by paying advances, interest thereon, and expenses.[1] The principal may sue and be sued on a contract made by the factor in his own name.[2]

If guilty of gross negligence in conducting the business, he forfeits all claim to compensation for his services.[3] See further AGENT.

Factor's Act. Statute of 6 Geo. IV (1826), c. 94. Empowered a factor to pledge the goods, and protected persons who believed him to be the real owner.

Statute of 5 and 6 Vict. (1842) further enabled him, as if the true owner, to enter into any agreement respecting the goods by way of "pledge, lien or security," excepting as to antecedent debts; and this, notwithstanding the lender is aware that the borrower is a factor only. Similar legislation exists in the States.

Factorizing process. Trustee process; garnishment,[4] q. v.

FACTORY. A contraction of "manufactory,—a building, or collection of buildings, appropriated to the manufacture of goods."

Includes the building, the machinery necessary to produce the particular goods, and the engine or other power requisite to propel such machinery.[5] See CONTAINED.

FACTUM. L. A thing done; a deed; a fact. Compare FAIT.

De facto. In point of fact: actual. Opposed, de jure: by right, rightful.

Said of a blockade (q. v.) actually maintained;[6] of actual duress;[7] of a wife or husband whose marriage may be annulled;[8] of a person in office under apparent right or under color of right—as by an appointment or election not strictly legal;[9] and of a vacancy (q. v.) in an office; of a government (q. v.) actually in power in place of the lawful government;[1] of increase of stock.[2]

Ex facto jus oritur. Out of the fact the law arises: the law attaches to facts.

Ex post facto. From an after fact—a subsequent matter; after the fact or act.

"No State shall . . pass any . . ex post facto Law."[3]

That is, a law concerning, and after, a fact, or thing done, or action committed.[4]

Relates to penal and criminal proceedings, which impose punishments or forfeitures, not to civil proceedings which affect private rights retrospectively.[5]

Embraces only such laws as impose or affect penalties or forfeitures. A retrospective act is not therefore necessarily such a law.[6] See RETROSPECTIVE.

Includes every law: (1) That makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. (2) That aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when committed. (3) That changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed. (4) That alters the rule of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense, to convict the offender.[7]

A law which imposes a punishment for an act not punishable at the time it was committed; or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed; or changes the rules of evidence by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required.[8]

The term necessarily implies a fact or act done, "after" which the law in question is passed. Whether it is ex post facto or not relates, in criminal cases, to which alone the phrase applies, to the time at which the offense charged was committed. If the law complained of was passed after the commission of the offense, it is as to that ex post facto, though whether of the class forbidden by the Constitution may depend on other matters. But so far as this depends on the time of its enactment, it has reference solely to the

[1] Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 223 (1850), cases; United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 42 (1874); Mechanics', &c. Ins. Co. v. Kiger, 103 U. S. 355 (1880); Steiger v. Third Nat. Bank, 2 McCrary, 508 (1881); Goodenow v. Tyler, 1 Am. L. C. 788, 797; Laussatt v. Lippincott, ib. 805, 812; 73 Ill. 103; 5 S. & R. 540; 70 E. C. L. 418; 2 Kent, 622.

[2] Higgins v. McCrea, 116 U. S. 680 (1886), cases.

[3] Fordyce v. Pepper, 16 F. R. 516, 520-21 (1883), cases.

[4] See Drake, Attach. § 451.

[5] Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 227 (1884). See 76 Va. 1012; 8 Md. 495.

[6] 1 Kent, 44.

[7] 15 Gray, 471.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 435; 4 Kent, 36.

[9] 2 Kent, 295; 1 Bl. Com. 371; 27 Minn. 298; 3 Mont. 420; 55 Pa. 468.

[1] 92 U. S. 133; 96 id. 185; 97 id. 616; 43 Ala. 213; 49 Miss. 703; 47 Pa. 170.

[2] 95 U. S. 668.

[3] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10. See 2 Bancroft, Const. 213.

[4] Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 390-91 (1798), Chase, J.

[5] Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 110 (1834), cases, Story, J.

[6] Locke v. New Orleans, 4 Wall. 172 (1866).

[7] Calder v. Bull, supra; State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 532 (1880).

[8] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 326 (1866), Field, J.; 9 Wall. 38.

date at which the offense was committed to which the new law was sought to be applied. . . Any law passed after the commission of an offense which "in relation to that offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage," is an ex post facto law, and forbidden.[1]

Does not involve a change of place of trial.[2]

Illustration: a State may not disqualify from further employment as such, teachers and clergymen who took part in the late rebellion.[3]

A statute which simply enlarges the class of persons who may be competent to testify is not ex post facto as to offenses previously committed. Such alteration in the law relates to the mode of procedure only, in which no one can be said to have a vested right, and which the State, upon grounds of public policy, may regulate at pleasure.[4]

Factum probandum. The fact to be proved.[5]

Ipso facto. By the fact itself; by the mere fact; from the effect of the fact or act.

The mere fact of a collision between trains is evidence ipso facto of negligence.[6] Attaining twenty-one years of age ipso facto emancipates from the disabilities of infancy.

Non est factum. It is not his deed. The name of the issue joined in an action on a specialty, by a defendant who denies that he executed the instrument.[7]

FACULTY. A special privilege or license granted to a person permitting him to do something which otherwise the law would not allow.

FAILURE. 1. The state or condition of being wanting; a falling short; deficiency or lack; defect, want, absence; default; defeat.

Failure of consideration. Want or absence of a legal consideration.

This may be either partial or total.[8] See CONSIDERATION.

Failure of evidence. Absence of legal evidence.

Total failure of evidence. Not only the utter absence of all evidence, but also failure to offer proof, either positive or inferential, to establish one or more of the many facts, the establishment of all of which is indispensable to the finding of the issue for the plaintiff.[1]

Failure of issue. Want or non-existence of descendants; more particularly, lack of issue who may take an estate limited over by an executory devise.

This may be definite or indefinite. See further DIE, Without children.

Failure of justice. Defeat of right and justice from want of legal remedy.

Failure of record. Neglect to produce a record relied upon in a plea.

Failure of title. Defect or want of title.

When discovered before the money has been paid, the purchaser may deduct an amount equal to the value of the land of which he is deprived.

Failure of trust. Defeat of a proposed trust from want of constituting facts or elements or of law to effectuate the object.

2. Default; omission; neglect; non-performance, q. v.; as, failure to perform a contract, q. v.

3. Inability to pay debts, from insolvency; suspension of payment: as, failure in business, a failing debtor.

Failing circumstances. In a statute, may imply that the insolvent is about failing and closing his affairs, knowing his inability to continue in business and meet his payments.[2] See BANKRUPTCY; INSOLVENCY.

FAIR. 1, adj. Equal; just; proper; reasonable; equitable. See EQUITY.

Fair abridgment. A real substantial condensation of copyrighted materials, as the result of labor and judgment. See ABRIDGE.

Fair average crop. Takes into account the nature of the season and unforeseen events beyond the control of a prudent, faithful overseer.[3]

Fair criticism. See REVIEW, 3.

Fair knowledge or skill. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill.[4]

Fair preponderance. Of evidence — a preponderance perceptible upon fair consideration.[5]

Fair sale. A sale conducted with fairness as respects the rights of the parties affected.[6]

---

[1] Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 225, 227, 235, 238, 250 (1882), Miller, J. Approved, Hopt v. Utah, infra.

[2] Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 37 (1869).

[3] Locke v. New Orleans, ante.

[4] Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 589-90 (1884), Harlan, J. See Pacific Coast Law J., May 26, 1883; 25 Am. Law Reg. 680-95 (1886), cases.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

[6] 91 U. S. 492.

[7] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; 1 Litt. 158; 6 Rand. 86; Gould, Pl. 300-2.

[8] See Torinus v. Buckham, 29 Minn. 131 (1882).

[1] Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. 28 (Md., 1835).

[2] Utley v. Smith, 24 Conn. 310 (1855); Bloodgood v. Beecher, 35 id. 482 (1868).

[3] Wright v. Morris, 15 Ark. 450 (1855).

[4] Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 382 (1883).

[5] [State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 225 (1882); Bryan v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 63 Iowa, 466 (1884); City Bank's Appeal, 54 Conn. 274 (1886); 86 Pa. 268.

[6] [Lalor v. M'Carthy, 24 Minn. 419 (1878).

Fairly. Equitably; reasonably.

In "fairly merchantable," conveys the idea of mediocrity in quality, or something just above that.[1]

May be deemed synonymous with "equitably."[2]

But is not synonymous with "truly:" language may be truly yet unfairly reported.[3] See FAITHFULLY.

Fairness. In speaking of a sale, "fairness and good faith" refers to the fair dealing which usually characterizes business transactions.[4]

2, n. In English law, a species of market held by grant from the crown.[5]

In the United States, "fairs" are governed by the law as to partnerships and sales. See MARKET.

FAIT. F. A fact. Compare FACTUM.

Before or at full age an infant may avoid a matter in fait; and a matter of record, during majority.[6]

Wife de fait: a wife de facto.

FAITH. Belief; confidence; reliance; credence; trust, q. v. Fair intent of purpose; honesty, openness, uprightness; sincerity; fidelity to a representation, promise, or duty.

Good faith. Honest, lawful intent; the condition of acting without knowledge of fraud and without intent to assist in a fraudulent or otherwise unlawful scheme. Bad faith. Guilty knowledge or willful ignorance.

The corresponding Latin expressions are bona fides, and mala fides. See FIDES.

A creditor,[7] holder, possessor,[8] purchaser,[9] or transferee in good faith is one who has loaned money or purchased property fairly, in the usual course of business, and without being cognizant of, or implicated in, any intent which the borrower or seller may have had to evade the claims of his creditors or to defraud some person interested in the matter.[10]

The title of a person who takes negotiable paper before it is due, for a valuable consideration, can only be defeated by showing bad faith in him, which implies guilty knowledge or willful ignorance of the facts impairing the title of the party from whom he received it. The burden of proof lies on the assailant of the taker's title.[11]

A purchaser in good faith of negotiable paper for value, before maturity, takes it freed from all infirmities in its origin, unless it is absolutely void for want of power in the maker to issue it, or its circulation is by law prohibited by reason of the illegality of the consideration. His transferee, with notice of the infirmities, may equally recover.[1]

A party who, before its maturity and for a valuable consideration, purchases mercantile paper from the apparent owner thereof, acquires a right thereto which can only be defeated by proof of bad faith or of actual notice of such facts as impeach the validity of the transaction.[2]

A holder in good faith is a purchaser for value without notice, or his successor.[3]

The bad faith in the taker of negotiable paper which will defeat a recovery by him must be something more than a failure to inquire into the consideration upon which it was made or accepted, because of rumors or general reputation as to the bad character of the maker or drawer.[4] See further NEGOTIATE, 2; NOTICE, 1; LOST, 2.

One who buys at a voluntary sale from his debtor, crediting the consideration on a pre-existing debt, is not a bona fide purchaser for value: he advances nothing, and, if the title fails, loses nothing.[5]

The highest good faith is exacted of a person dealing with a trustee respecting the trust property. See TRUST, 1; FIDUCIARY.

Full faith and credit. "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof."[6]

For the history of this provision, see EXTRADITION, page 441.

A record must be authenticated as prescribed by act of May 26, 1790.[7] The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State (authenticated as herein prescribed) "shall have such faith and credit given to them, in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from which they are taken."[8]

The judgments of the courts of the United States have invariably been recognized as upon the same

[1] Warner v. Arctic Ice Co., 74 Me. 479 (1883).

[2] Satcher v. Satcher, 41 Ala. 40 (1867).

[3] Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. E. 239 (1865).

[4] Morgan v. Hazlehurst Lodge, 53 Miss. 683 (1876).

[5] See 1 Bl. Com. 274.

[6] 1 Pars. Contr. 333.

[7] See 66 Ga. 722; 30 Minn. 272.

[8] See 31 Md. 454; 8 Wheat. 79; 12 Tex. 223; 24 id. 379.

[9] See 71 Ala. 221; 44 Conn. 459; 65 Barb. 231; 7 Johns. Ch. 65; 2 Utah, 52.

[10] [1 Abbott's Law Dict. 536; 111 U. S. 80.

[11] Hotchkiss v. Tradesmen's, &c. Nat. Banks, 21 Wall. 359 (1874), cases; Dresser v. Missouri, &c. Co., 93 U. S. 94–96 (1876), cases: Collins v. Gilbert, 94 id. 754 (1876), cases.

[1] Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51, 59 (1877), cases, Field, J.; Bowditch v. New England Life Ins. Co., 141 Mass. 296 (1886).

[2] Swift v. Smith, 102 U. S. 444 (1880), Strong, J.

[3] McClure v. Township of Oxford, 94 U. S. 432 (1876), Waite, C. J.

[4] Goetz v. Bank of Kansas City, 119 U. S. 560 (1887), Field, J. See, in general, 22 Cent. Law J. 427–42 (1886), cases.

[5] Overstreet v. Manning, 67 Tex. 661 (1887); 61 id. 648.

[6] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 1.

[7] Caperton v. Ballard, 14 Wall. 241 (1871).

[8] Act 26 May, 1790, c. 11; Act 27 March, 1804, c. 56; R. S. § 905.

footing, so far as concerns the obligation created by them, with domestic judgments of the States.[1]

A judgment duly rendered in one State is conclusive as to the merits of the case in every other State.[2]

But want of jurisdiction over the party, or matter, may be shown dehors, and even in contradiction of the record.[3]

The Federal courts give the judgment of a State court the force and effect to which it is entitled in the courts of the State.

No greater effect can be given to any judgment of a court of one State in another State than is given to it in the State where rendered. Any other rule would contravene the policy of the provision of the Constitution and laws of the United States on that subject.[4]

The evils which would result from a general system of re-examination of the judicial proceedings of other States are apparent. The framers of the Constitution intended to attribute to the "public acts, records, and judicial proceedings" of each of the States positive and absolute verity, so that they cannot be contradicted, or the truth of them denied, any more than in the State where they originated.[5]

The duty to follow the courts of a State, upon questions arising upon the construction of its own statutes, rests upon comity. . . The provision relates only to the conclusiveness of judgments as between parties and privies.[6] See COMITY; LAW, Foreign.

The Federal courts, exercising their original jurisdiction, take notice, without proof, of the laws of the several States; but, as no State court is charged with a knowledge of the laws of another State, in the Supreme Court, when acting under its appellate jurisdiction, whatever was matter of fact in the court whose judgment is under review, continues matter of fact.[7]

Faithfully. When a public officer gives a bond conditioned faithfully to discharge his official duties, "faithfully" implies that he has assumed the measure of responsibility laid on him by law had no bond been given. Everything is unfaithfulness which the law does not excuse.[8]

"Fairly and impartially," in the expression "faithfully, fairly, and impartially," add something to the force of the word "faithfully," and should not be omitted from a statutory form of an oath of office.[1]

A bond that one will "well, truly, firmly, and impartially" perform the duties of an office, is not invalid as varying from the statutory form "for the faithful performance of his duties."[2]

FALCIDIAN LAW, or PORTION. In the reign of Augustus, on motion of Publius Falcidius, it was enacted (40 B. C.) that a testator could not bequeath away from his heir more than three-fourths of his estate.[3]

In principle, adopted in Louisiana, and perhaps elsewhere.

FALL. A life estate is sometimes said to "fall into," that is, to merge with, the fee.

FALSA. See FALSUS.

FALSE. Somewhat more than erroneous, untrue, or illegal: distinctively characterizes a wrongful act known to involve an error or untruth.[4]

As, false or a false — action, answer, claim, date, imprisonment, oath, swearing, testimony or witness, personation, pretenses, representation, return, token, signature, weights and measures, writing, qq. v. Compare SHAM.

Falsehood. Any untrue assertion or proposition; a willful act or declaration contrary to the truth.[5]

Does not necessarily imply a lie or willful untruth.[6]

See COMMENDATIO, Simplex; CONCEAL; CRIMEN, Falsi; DECEIT; ESTOPPEL; FALSUS, In uno; FRAUD; OATH; PERJURY.

Falsely. Applied to forging an instrument, implies that the writing is false, not genuine, fictitious, not true,— without regard to the truth or falsehood of the statement it contains,— the counterfeit of something which is or has been genuine, which purports to be a genuine instrument when it is not such.[6] See further COUNTERFEIT: FORGERY.

Falsify. 1. To represent a fact falsely.

2. To tamper with a document by interlineation, obliteration, or otherwise. See ALTERATION, 2; RECORD.

3. To prove a thing to be false, particularly an item of debit in an account.

---

[1] Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 10-11 (1882), cases.

[2] M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 326 (1839).

[3] Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 462-64 (1873), cases; Pennoyer v. Neil, 95 U. S. 729 (1877); 30 Gratt. 266.

[4] Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 529 (1873); Robertson v. Pickrell, 111 U. S. 611 (1883); Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 119 id. 622 (1887).

[5] 2 Story, Const., 3 ed., § 1310.

[6] Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 3 McCrary, 609, 613 (1882), cases; 11 F. R. 381, 384.

[7] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 119 U. S. 622 (1887).

[8] State v. Chadwick, 10 Oreg. 468 (1881); 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 318.

[1] Perry v. Thompson, 16 N. J. L. 73 (1837).

[2] Mayor of Hoboken v. Evans, 31 N. J. L. 343 (1865).

[3] See Hadley, Rom. Law, 322.

[4] See People v. Gates, 13 Wend. 320-21 (1835).

[5] Putnam v. Osgood, 51 N. H. 207 (1871); Roso. Cr. Ev. 362.

[6] [State v. Young, 46 N. H. 270 (1865).

Falsification. Applied to some item among debts which is wholly false or in some part erroneous.[1] See further SURCHARGE.

FALSUS; FALSA. L. Deceptive; erroneous; false.

Crimen falsi. The offense of deceiving or falsifying. See further CRIMEN, Falsi.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet. An erroneous designation does not impair. See further DEMONSTRATIO.

Falsa grammatica non vitiat chartam. Bad grammar does not invalidate an instrument. See further GRAMMAR.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. False in one (particular), false in all. Deliberate falsehood in one matter will be imputed to related matters.

If the circumstances respecting which testimony is discordant be immaterial, and of such a nature that mistakes may easily exist, and be accounted for in a manner consistent with the utmost good faith and probability, there is much reason for indulging the belief that the discrepancies arise from the infirmity of the human mind, rather than from deliberate error. But where the party speaks to a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, as in relation to the country of his birth, or his being in a vessel on a particular voyage, or living in a particular place, if the fact turn out otherwise, it is extremely difficult to exempt him from the charge of deliberate falsehood; and courts of justice, under such circumstances, are bound upon principles of law, morality, and justice, to apply the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.[2]

The maxim is applied to discredit the testimony of witnesses; it is the foundation of the old rule which excluded the testimony of infamous persons. Holds good where the party calling the witness is cognizant of the falsehood, or where the falsehood affects the credibility of the witness's testimony. Never applied to misstatements which are wholly inadvertent, or attributable to the ordinary fluctuations of memory. Proper where the special falsity is of a nature to imply falsity as to the whole case; and where contradictions are so numerous as to show imbecility of memory.[3]

He who would embezzle a ship's furniture would not hesitate to embezzle the cargo.[4]

FAME. Report or opinion generally diffused; repute, reputation; public estimation; name.

Defame. To maliciously injure a name; to slander. Whence defamation, q. v.

Good fame. Favorable reputation. Ill-fame. Evil fame or name; ill-repute.

"Ill-fame" distinctively describes a person who visits gaming houses, bawdy-houses, and other forbidden resorts, as well as the resorts themselves. While in popular parlance the term designates bawdy-houses, with no reference to their "fame," some courts allow proof of the fact to be aided by proof of the fame.[1] See further HOUSE, Of ill-fame.

Infamous. Not of good repute; incompetent to testify by reason of conviction of crime. Whence infamy, q. v.

FAMILY.[2] Originally, servants; in its modern comprehensive meaning, a collective body of persons living together in one house, or within the curtilage.[3]

In popular acceptance includes parents, children, servants — all whose domicil or home is ordinarily in the same house and under the same management and head.[4]

In its limited sense signifies father, mother, and children; in its ordinary acceptation, all the relatives who descend from a common root; in its most extensive scope, all the individuals who live together under the authority of another, including even servants.[5]

The most comprehensive definition is, a number of persons who live in one house and under one management or head.[6]

No specific number of persons is required; nor that they eat where they live, nor that they be employed in or about the house.[6]

Children, wife and children, blood relatives, or the members of the domestic circle; according to the connection.[7]

Includes children over age, if they have no home elsewhere.[8]

Family arrangement. An arrangement between members of a family as to the disposition of their property.

---

[1] [Bailey v. Westcott, 6 Phila. 527 (1868), Sharswood, J.; 2 Barb. 592; 2 Edw. Ch. 23.

[2] The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 339 (1822), Story, J.

[3] See 1 Whart. Ev. § 412; 30 F. R. 577; 18 Fla. 462; 97 Mass. 406; 62 Miss. 28; 91 Mo. 439; 14 Neb. 101; 44 N. Y. 172; 15 Wend. 602; 81 Va. 154; 3 Wis. 645.

[4] The Boston, 1 Sumn. 356 (1833).

[1] See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 1088; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 44; 38 Conn. 467; 132 Mass. 2; 74 Me. 158; 29 Minn. 196, 195.

[2] L. familia, household: domestics: famulus, a servant.

[3] Wilson v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 680 (1869); Roco v. Green, 50 id. 488 (1878).

[4] Cheshire v. Burlington, 31 Conn. 329 (1863); 51 Mich. 494.

[5] Galligar v. Payne, 34 La. An. 1058 (1882), Bermudez, C. J.: 15 Rep. 464.

[6] Poor v. Hudson Ins. Co., 2 F. R. 438 (1880).

[7] Spencer v. Spencer, 11 Paige, 160 (1844), Walworth, Ch. See also Muir v. Howell, 37 N. J. L. 39 (1883), cases; Race v. Oldridge, 90 Ill. 252 (1878); 3 Woods, 494; 53 Iowa, 707; 56 id. 389; 125 Mass. 377; 128 id. 334; 137 id. 55.

[8] Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 Mich. 280 (1884); Exemp. Law

Family Bible. Containing entries of family incidents,— births, marriages, and deaths, made by a parent, since deceased, will be received in evidence.[1] See PEDIGREE.

Family council, or meeting. In Louisiana, a meeting of the relatives or friends of a minor or other person incompetent to act for himself, may be held, by judicial appointment, to advise upon the interests of such person.[2]

Family physician. The physician who usually attends and is consulted by the members of a family as their physician.[3]

It is not necessary that he should invariably attend and be consulted by each and all the members of the family.[3]

Family use. Such use as is appropriate to the individual needs of the members of a household, and to the needs of the household in its collective capacity.[4]

To supply water for family use in a city includes supplying city buildings, such as a jail, and hospitals, poorhouses, schools, and other institutions.[4]

Groceries kept by a merchant as part of his stock are not "provisions found on hand for family use," within the meaning of an exemption law.[5]

Head of a family. The person who controls, supervises or manages the affairs about a house.

Where there is a husband or father, he is ordinarily the head; but there may be a head where there is no marriage relation.[6] Compare HOUSEHOLDER; PATER.

FARE. See BRIDGE; CARRIER; FERRY; PASSENGER; RAILROAD; TOLL, 2.

FARM.[7] 1. Provision; rent; tenure by rent. 2. Land rented; land devoted to purposes of agriculture.

Farm, or feorme, is an old Saxon word signifying provision. It came to be used instead of rent or render, because anciently the greater part of rents were reserved in provisions — corn [grain], poultry, etc., till the use of money became more frequent. So that a farmer, firmarius, was one who held his lands upon payment of rent or feorme; though at present, by a gradual departure from the original sense, the word "farm" signifies the very estate or lands so held upon farm or rent.[1]

That which is held by a person who stands in the relation of a tenant to a landlord.[2]

An indefinite quantity of land, some of which is cultivated.[3]

"Farm" and "homestead farm" are words of large import. In England, farm commonly implies an estate leased. The word is collective, consisting of divers things gathered into one, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, etc. In the United States, it is a parcel of land used, occupied, managed, and controlled by one proprietor.[4] See CROP.

"To farm," in a lease of mineral lands, means to bring the minerals up to light for purposes of commerce, and make them profitable to lessor and lessee.[5]

See AGRICULTURE; EXEMPTION; IMPLEMENT; PLANTATION; TOOL.

Fee-farm. To let lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of for life or years; also, the land itself so held on perpetual rent.

Fee-farm rent. A rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee.[6] Compare, FEUD, To feu.

To farm let. A technical expression in a lease creating a term for years.

Usual, but not essential.[7]

To farm out. To rent for a term of years; also, to give over something to another for a share of the income or profit: as, to farm out revenues, or taxes.

FARO. See GAME, 2.

FASHIONS. See PERISHABLE.

FAST. 1. As descriptive of days, see HOLIDAY.

2. Referring to an estate — real, of the nature of realty.[8]

3. Moving more than a specified number of miles, as eight, per hour.[9]

[1] See 1 Whart. Ev. § 219; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; 53 Ga. 535; 30 Iowa, 301.

[2] See La. Civ. Code, Art. 305-11; 6 Mart. 455.

[3] [Price v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 519 (1871); Reid v. Piedmont, &c. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. 424 (1874).

[4] Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 120 (1877).

[5] State v. Conner, 73 Mo. 575 (1881).

[6] See 17 Ala. 486; 41 Ga. 153; 90 Ill. 250; 110 id. 533; 11 Iowa, 266; 48 id. 186: 52 id. 431; 53 id. 706; 20 Mo. 75; 45 id. 483; 69 id. 415; 51 N. H. 253; 9 Wend. 426; 5 S. C. 493; 33 Gratt. 18.

[7] A. S. feorm, food, property, use: L. L. firma, a feast, tribute: firmus, durable. From the "fixed" rent,— Skeat. L. firmus: firmare, to make fast. Farms were at first enclosed or fortified with walls; or, the leases were made more certain by signature,— Webster.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 318, 57.

[2] [Lane v. Stanhope, 6 T. R. 353 (1795), Kenyon, C. J.; 4 Best & S., Q. B. 931.

[3] Commonwealth v. Carmatt, 2 Binn. *238 (1810), Tilghman, C. J.

[4] Aldrich v. Gaskill, 10 Cush. 158 (1852), Shaw, C. J.; Black v. Hill, 32 Ohio St. 318 (1877): Shep. Touch. 93.

[5] [Price v. Nicholas, 4 Hughes, 619 (1878).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 43; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 497 (1852); 2 Washb. R. P., 4 ed., 274.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 317.

[8] See 6 Johns. 185; 9 N. Y. 502.

[9] Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Peyton, 76 Ill. 340 (1875).

4. In Georgia, describes a bill of exceptions by which the proceedings in an injunction case, or other case in equity of an extraordinary nature, may be reviewed by the supreme court without the delay incident to ordinary cases.[1]

FAT CATTLE. See PERISHABLE; PROVISIONS.

FATHER. See ANCESTOR; BASTARD; CHILD; CONSANGUINITY; DESCENT; MOTHER; NAME, 1; PARENT. Compare PATER; PARTUS.

FAUCES TERRÆ. L. The jaws of the land: projecting headlands inclosing an arm of the sea.[2] See SEA.

FAULT. 1. An improper act due to ignorance, negligence or willfulness,[3] qq. v. Compare CULPA; DELICTUM.

In averments in pleadings, has substantially the same meaning as "negligence."[4]

Attributed to a carrier, may mean actual negligence.[5]

2. Defect; blemish.

With all faults. In the absence of fraud in the vendor, a sale "with all faults" covers such defects as are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods as those described.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the meaning in trade.[6]

FAVOR. See CHALLENGE, 8; PREFER, 2; PREJUDICE.

FEALTY.[7] The oath or obligation of a vassal, under the feudal system, to be faithful to his lord and defend him against all enemies.[8]

The original of the oath of allegiance, q. v. See also FEUD.

FEAR. See AFFRAY; DEFENSE, 1; DURESS; INFLUENCE; QUIA TIMET; ROBBERY.

FEASANCE.[9] A doing; a performing or performance.

Gratuitous feasance. A voluntary service — rendered or undertaken.

The essence of bailment by mandate, q. v.

Malfeasance. The doing of an act wholly wrongful and unlawful. Misfeasance. A default in not doing a lawful act in the proper manner — omitting to do it as it should be done. Non-feasance. Any omission to perform a required duty at all, or a total neglect of duty.[1]

Misfeasance may amount to non-feasance; as, in cases of gross negligence.[2] See TRUSTEE.

See DAMAGE, Feasant; DEFEASANCE; TORT, 2, Feasor.

FEBRUARY. See HOLIDAY; YEAR, Leap-year.

FEDERAL.[3] 1. Pertaining to a league or compact between independent sovereignties. 2. Composed of states which retain only a portion of their original sovereignty; relating to the constitution, treaties, or laws, or the power or government of the organization thereby formed.

Appropriate to our General Government, the government of the United States, considered as a Union of States or local governments. The word "National" recognizes the State governments and the government of the Union as distinct systems.[4]

In the second sense are the common expressions Federal or federal — amendments, Constitution, courts, elections, decisions, judges, laws and statutes, question, government, officer. In these phrases the word of contrast is "State:" as, State constitutions, courts, laws, etc. See those titles.

FEDERALIST. A publication issued from 1787 to 1789, and consisting of papers, written by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay, intended to prepare the people for accepting the Constitution.

Of its eighty-five numbers, Jay wrote five, Madison twenty-nine, and Hamilton fifty-one. "They form a work of enduring interest, because they are the earliest commentary on the new experiment of mankind in establishing a republican form of government for a country of boundless dimensions."[5]

In itself a complete commentary on the Constitution. The opinions expressed in it have always been considered as of great authority. Its intrinsic merit entitles it to high rank; and the part which two of its authors [Madison, the chief author, and Hamilton] performed in framing the Constitution, put it very much in their power to explain the views with which it was framed. These essays, published while the

---

[1] See Sewell v. Edmonston, 66 Ga. 353 (1881).

[2] 5 Wheat. 106; 1 Story, 259; 1 Kent, 367.

[3] See 5 Ct. Cl. 489.

[4] Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 411 (1882).

[5] School District v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 102 Mass. 555 (1869).

[6] Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 247–48 (1875), cases; 4 Pars. Contr. 590.

[7] L. fidelitas: fides, confidence, trust, faith.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 367; 2 id. 45, 53; 44 Pa. 499.

[9] F. faire: L. facere, to make, do.

[1] Coite v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 114–15 (1865), Butler, J.

[2] Story, Agency, § 218; 1 Woolw. 374–75; 3 Pet. 223.

[3] L. fœdus, a league, treaty, compact.

[4] See United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 549 (1875).

[5] 2 Bancroft, Formation Const. 336.

Constitution was before the nation for adoption or rejection, and written in answer to objections founded upon the extent of its powers, and on its diminution of State sovereignty, are entitled to more consideration where they frankly avow that the power objected to is given, and defend it.[1]

FEE. 1. (1) In feudal law, an allotment of land in consideration of military service; land held of a superior, on condition of rendering him service, the ultimate property remaining in him. Opposed to allodium. See ALLODIAL.

The districts of land allotted by the conquering general to his superior officers, and by them dealt out again in smaller parcels, were called feoda, feuds, fiefs, or fees — a conditional stipend or reward.[2] See, at length, FEUD.

"Fee," at its origin, related to the quality of the estate. It now denotes the quantity of interest the owner has in land.[3]

(2) An estate of inheritance — the highest and most extensive interest a man can have in a feud.

Fee-simple. An absolute inheritance, clear of any condition, limitation or restriction to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral.[4]

"Fee," with or without the adjunct "simple," is used in contradistinction to the fee-conditional of the common law, and to fee-tail created by statute.

Tenant in fee-simple, or tenant in fee, is he that has lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever — generally, absolutely and simply; without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure or to the disposition of the law.[4]

The term "fee" alone implies an inheritable estate. "Simple" or "absolute" adds nothing to the comprehensiveness of the original term. In modern estates, fee, fee-simple, and fee-simple absolute are synonymous.[4]

"An estate in fee-simple is where a man has an estate in land or tenements to him and his heirs forever."

Limitation of the power of sale for a limited period, as for five years, is not inconsistent with a fee-simple estate.[5]

Called a "fee-simple" because it signifies a pure inheritance, clear of any qualification or condition. It is an estate of perpetuity, and confers an unlimited power of alienation.[1]

That "heirs" or other appropriate word of perpetuity in a deed conveying land is essential to pass a fee-simple estate is not a rule admitting of no exception. When, for example, a mortgage evidences an intention to pass the entire estate as security, and express provisions cannot otherwise be carried into effect, the instrument will pass such an estate, although no formal word of perpetuity is employed.[2]

A "fee limited" is an estate of inheritance clogged or confined with a condition or qualification of some sort. This may be one of the following estates:

Base, qualified, or determinable fee. Has a qualification subjoined thereto, and terminates whenever the qualification is at an end.[3]

As, a grant "to A and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale," that is, as long as they continue tenants. This estate is a fee, because it may endure forever, yet the duration depends upon a circumstance, and this debases the purity of the donation.[3]

Conditional fee. At common law, a fee restrained to particular heirs, exclusive of others; as, to the heirs "of a man's body," by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral heirs; or to the "heirs-male of his body," in exclusion of collaterals, and of lineal females.

Called "conditional" from the condition, expressed or implied in the donation, that if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the owner. Such fees were strictly agreeable to the nature of feuds, when they first ceased to be mere estates for life, and had not yet become absolute estates in fee-simple. . . As soon as the grantee had issue born, his estate was supposed to become absolute; at least to enable him to alien the land, and thereby bar not only his own issue, but also the donor of his reversion; to subject the land to forfeiture for treason; and to charge the land with incumbrances, so as to bind the issue. If the tenant did not in fact alien the land, the course of descent was not altered by fulfillment of the condition; the land, by the terms of the donation, could descend to none but the heirs "of his body," and, therefore, in default of them, reverted to the donor. Hence, to subject the land to the ordinary course of descent, the donees of these conditional fee-simples aliened as soon as issue was born, and afterward repurchased the lands, which gave them a fee-simple absolute that would descend to the heirs in

[1] Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 418 (1821), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 45, 104-6.

[3] Wendell v. Crandall, 1 N. Y. 495 (1848); Taul v. Campbell, 7 Yerg. 325 (1835).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 106, 105.

[5] Jecko v. Taussig, 45 Mo. 169 (1869).

[6] Libby v. Clark, 118 U. S. 255 (1886), Miller, J., quoting 4 Com. Dig., Estates, 1.

[1] 4 Kent, 5; 1 Barb 575; 11 Wend. 277; 12 Johns. 177; 52 Me. 261; 54 id. 426; 2 Oreg. 32; 42 Vt. 690; 23 N. J. E. 308.

[2] Brown v. National Bank, 44 Ohio St. 273 (1886), cases, Owen, C. J.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 109. See also 8 Law Quar. Rev. 709 (1887); 5 Dill. 411; 94 Ill. 93; 19 Allen, 168; 1 Wharf 427; 1 Barb. 575; 11 id. 28; 35 Wis. 36.

general, according to the course of the common law. The courts favored "this subtle finesse of construction," to shorten the duration of these conditional estates. But the nobility, to perpetuate possessions in their own families, procured the enactment of the statute de donis conditionalibus, 13 Edw. I (1286), c. 1. This statute revived, in some sort, the ancient feudal restraints, by enacting that the will of the donor should be observed, and that the tenements should go to the issue, if any; if none, should revert to the donor.[1] See further DONUM, De donis.

A "fee-simple" is the largest estate a man can have in lands, being an absolute estate in perpetuity. The essential matter is that such an estate is so brought into existence that it may continue forever. Where an estate is granted subject to some condition in the instrument creating it, or to some condition implied by law to be thereafter performed, it is called a "conditional fee." A "determinable fee" embraces all fees which are determined by some act or event expressed, in their limitation, to circumscribe their continuance, or inferred by law as bounding their extent. In its broader sense, a determinable fee embraces what is known as a conditional fee. When it becomes an established fact that the event which may terminate the estate will never occur, a determinable fee enlarges into a fee-simple absolute. So, when the condition upon which a conditional fee rests has been performed, the estate becomes an absolute fee.[2]

Fee-tail. Upon the construction of the statute of de donis, the judges held that the donee had no longer a conditional fee-simple, but a particular estate, which they denominated a "fee-tail;" and the donor had the ultimate fee-simple, expectant on the failure of issue; i. e., the reversion.[3]

The term "fee-tail" was borrowed from the feudists, among whom it signified any mutilated or truncated inheritance, from which the heirs general were "cut" off; being from a verb tailare, to cut.[3]

Estates tail general. Where lands and tenements are given to one and the "heirs of his body begotten." Estate tail-special. Where the gift is restricted to certain heirs of the donee's body; as, to the "heirs of his body, to be begotten by his present wife."

An estate in general or special tail given to a man and the heirs-male of his body begotten is an "estate in tail-male general;" given to a man and the heirs female of his body begotten, is an "estate tail-female."[4]

Estate tail after possibility of issue extinct. Where one is tenant in special tail, and a person, from whose body the issue was to spring, dies without issue, or, having left issue, that issue becomes extinct.[1]

As the word "heirs" is necessary to create a fee, "body," or some other word of procreation, is necessary to make a fee-tail.[2]

"Issue forever," and "posterity," have been held not less extensive than "heirs of the body." "Children," or equivalent words, will not create the estate. Where such estates are forbidden, estates which formerly would have been deemed such are now held to be estates in fee-simple, and words will be given this construction if possible.[3]

Growth of the estate tail: (1) Permission was granted the heirs of the tenant to succeed him as their deceased ancestor. (2) "Heirs" acquired a breadth of meaning sufficient to admit collaterals. (3) Collaterals were excluded by limiting the estate to a man and the "heirs of his body." (4) This limitation was construed to be a conditional gift — the condition being "issue;" and, a child being born, the estate became a fee-simple, alienable, etc. (5) The statute de donis created the estate tail as it at present exists.

See FEUD; RECOVERY, Common; SHELLEY'S CASE; TAIL. See also ABEYANCE; DEMESNE; DESCENT; ESCHEAT; FARM, Fee-farm; FELONY; HEIR.

2. Compensation for services,[4] paid to an attorney, an officer of the law, a physician, or an expert.

A sum of money paid to a person for a service done by him to another.[5]

A recompense allowed by law to an officer for his labor and trouble.[6]

Contingent fee. Compensation payable upon an event more or less uncertain, as, upon success in a lawsuit.

An attorney may contract with his client for a contingent fee, but the law will see that the transaction is fair, and that no undue advantage has been taken of the necessities or the ignorance of the client.[7]

County commissioners may employ counsel to collect a claim due the county, for a reasonable compensation only.[7]

An agreement to pay for services of a legitimate character in prosecuting a claim against the United States, in an executive department, violates neither law nor public policy. When the amount of compensation is not agreed upon, evidence of what is ordinarily charged in cases of the same character is admissible.[8]

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 110-11; Pierson v. Lane, 70 Iowa, 62 (1882); 3 Kent, 11.

[2] Fletcher v. Fletcher, 88 Ind. 420 (1883); Nebraska, ...

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 112; 11 Wend. 278.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 113-14.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 124.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 114.

[3] Brand v. Elzey, 83 Ky. 442-43 (1885), Holt, J.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 28.

[5] Bloor v. Huston, 28 E. L. & E. 360 (1854), Maule, J.

[6] Harbor Master v. Southerland, 47 Ala. 517 (1872); 2 Bac. Abr. 463; Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. 248 (1824); Camp v. Bates, 13 Conn. 79 (1838); Williams v. State, 2 Sneed, 162 (1854).

[7] County of Chester v. Barber, 97 Pa. 455, 463 (1881), cases.

[8] Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 557 (1876), cases: Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 id. 45 (1883).

But a contract for lobbying services stands upon a different footing.[1]

Docket fee. A fee payable to counsel, as part of the costs of record, usually for the use of the successful party.

In Federal practice, "docket fees" in civil cases are a lump sum substituted for the small "fees" formerly allowed attorneys and solicitors, chargeable to and collectible from their clients. This sum is only taxable as costs against the losing party "in cases where by law costs are recoverable in favor of the prevailing party."[2]

In a law case where there is a final trial before a jury, the attorney's fee of twenty dollars, allowed by Rev. St. §§ 823-24, is always to be taxed; and it is for the court to determine who is the prevailing party.[3]

A solicitor for an intervenor in an equity case who prevails is not entitled to the fee; the termination not being such "a final hearing in equity" as is meant by the statute. A special master in chancery is not a referee within the statute.[4] See MARSHAL, 1 (2); PREVAIL.

At common law, an attorney's fee was not recoverable by an action. The reason was, fees were originally given as a gratuity, an honorarium, expressive of gratitude. The rule is traceable to the relation between patron and client in ancient Rome: the patron practiced for honor and influence. See HONORARIUM.

Fee-bill. A schedule prescribing the charges to be paid by litigants for the various orders, notices, pleadings, writs, depositions, hearings, transcriptions, etc., had or procured in the conduct of causes.

Some of these charges are payable in advance; others abide (q. v.) the event of the suit. The schedule is prepared by or in pursuance of legislative enactment, or by order of the particular court. See FOLIO.

The term is also used to designate the maximum charges the members of a bar association may make.

See ATTORNEY; COSTS; EXPERT; RETAINER; SALARY.

FEED. Referring to cattle and hogs, may mean to make fit for market by feeding.[5]

FEEDER. See RAILROAD.

FEIGNED. See ISSUE, 2.

FELLOW. See PARTNER; SERVANT.

FELO DE SE. L. 1. A felon (q. v.) of himself. He that deliberately puts an end to his own existence, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the consequence of which is his own death; a self-murderer.[1] See further SUICIDE.

2. A destroyer of itself; a thing that defeats its own purpose.

In this category are: a construction of a proclamation,[2] or instrument,[3] in effect nugatory of the purpose thereof; a bill for peace which makes litigation;[4] a decree which, instead of removing a cloud from a title, places another upon it; unauthorized action by a court.[5]

FELONY.[6] An offense which, at common law, occasioned a total forfeiture of lands or goods, or both, and to which capital or other punishment could be added, according to the degree of guilt. . . In general acceptation, comprises every species of crime which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of lands and goods.[7]

The term is incapable of definition, and descriptive of no offense. It conveys no distinct idea. Its origin has puzzled law-writers. It comprehended two descriptions of punishment, the one capital, with the forfeiture of lands and chattels; the other not capital, with forfeiture of chattels only, and burning in the hand, to which imprisonment could be added.[8]

A vague term, definable by the statutes and decisions of each State for itself.[9]

In general, includes capital and State's prison offenses.[10]

The laws of the United States contain no definition.[11]

Tested by the common law, the term has no determinate meaning, and can apply to no case in this country except treason, where limited forfeiture of estate is allowed. But, technically, that is a crime of a higher grade than felony, although it imports also felony. If it be conceded that capital punishment imports a felony, there can be no felonies, at common law, except capital crimes. But that test is untechnical and founded in error. The notion of "moral degradation" by confinement in a penitentiary has grown into a general understanding that that constitutes any offense a felony. This modern idea has come into general use by force of State legislation on the subject.[12]

---

[1] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 450 (1874).

[2] Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 F. R. 2 (1883): R. S. §§ 823, 824, 983. See generally Coy v. Perkins, 13 F. R. 111, 113-16 (1882), cases; Re Rand, 18 id. 99 (1883).

[3] Williams v. Morrison, 32 F. R. 682 (1887), Thayer, J.

[4] Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 664 (1887), Thayer, J.

[5] Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 102 (1872).

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 189; 2 id. 499; 3 C. B. 461.

[2] 2 Black, 678.

[3] 9 Mo. 152; 36 Pa. 136.

[4] 18 How. 266.

[5] 30 Minn. 204.

[6] Fee, feud; and lon, price or value,—4 Bl. Com. 95. L. L. felonem, from felo, fello, a traitor, rebel,—Skeat.

[7] [4 Bl. Com. 94-98; 3 Col. 68; 10 Mich. 182; 23 N. Y. 257; 99 id. 216.

[8] Lynch v. Commonwealth, 88 Pa. 192 (1878), Agnew, Chief Justice.

[9] Bruguier v. United States, 1 Dak. 7 (1867).

[10] See State v. Felch, 58 N. H. 2 (1876), cases; 20 Cal. 117; 48 Me. 218; 94 Ill. 501; 55 Ala. 241; 4 Ohio St. 562.

[11] See R. S. § 4090.

[12] United States v. Coppersmith, 2 Flip. 551-58 (1880).

From an early day, and as a necessity, the State legislatures have passed laws defining and enumerating felonies as those crimes punishable by confinement in the penitentiary; and such confinement has come to be the test in nearly every State.[1]

The term as used in acts of Congress is not susceptible of definition.[1]

As a rule, the grade of the offense is determined by the nature of the punishment prescribed. A crime which might be punished by imprisonment in a State's prison was a felony, in New York, prior to the adoption of the Penal Code.[2]

Offenses made felonies by statute are called statutory felonies, in contradistinction to common-law felonies — murder, manslaughter, rape, arson, burglary, theft, and robbery.

The common-law procedure in the prosecution and punishment, without forfeiture, continues as the characteristic by which felony is distinguished from treason on the one hand and from misdemeanor on the other.

Felon. One who has committed a felony.

Felonious; feloniously. Generally, so indispensable in an indictment for felony, that no other word will be recognized as equivalent.[3]

See ASSAULT; CRIME; DAMAGES; HOMICIDE; INFAMY; MISPRISION.

FEMALE. See FEME; GENDER; VENTER; WOMAN.

FEME; or FEMME. F. A woman; a wife.

Feme is the older form: L. femella, femina, a young woman. Plural, femes, femmes.

Feme covert, or feme-covert. A married woman.

By marriage, husband and wife are one person in law. Under his protection and "cover," she does everything; and is therefore called in law-French a feme-covert; while her condition is called "coverture," [4] q. v.

Feme sole, or feme-sole. A single woman: one who has never been married, who has been judicially separated from her husband, or whose marriage has been dissolved by divorce from, or by the death of, the husband.

Feme-sole trader. A married woman who trades on her own account as if unmarried.

Originated in a custom of London. Recognized in several States by statutes which enable the wives of mariners at sea, and wives whose husbands from any cause, as, drunkenness or profligacy, desert them, or refuse or neglect to provide for them.

A judicial decree is not a prerequisite. The statutes being designed to suspend the marital rights of the husband in consequence of the acts enumerated, and to relieve the wife from her marital obligations, the establishment of those acts is all that is required of her. The statutes are remedial, and to be interpreted benignly.[1] Compare EARNINGS, Separate.

Her privileges extend no further than to contracts connected with her trade.[2]

A married woman who, in matters of property, is independent of her husband, is a feme sole as to such property, and may deal with it as if she were unmarried.[3] See HUSBAND.

FENCE. A line of obstacle, composed of any material that will present the desired obstruction.[4]

Partition fence. As contemplated in a statute, a fence on the line between two proprietors, where there is no road, alley, or other thing which would prevent the erection of such a fence.[5] See WALL.

Fences are regulated by local laws. Boundary fences are to be built on the line, and, when made as intended by law, the cost is borne equally between the parties. A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners.[6]

In some States, steam railway companies are required by statute to protect their tracks by fences. Failure to comply with its contract to fence renders a company liable for injuries to children and animals, consequent thereon.[7]

A statute requiring a railroad to maintain fences and cattle-guards on the sides of its road, and, if it does not, making it liable in double the amount of cases, Hammond, J. See United States v. Staats, 8 How. 44–45 (1850); United States v. Watkids, 7 Saw. 90–94 (1881), cases; People v. Lyon, 99 N. Y. 210 (1885).

---

[1] United States v. Coppersmith, ante.

[2] People v. Lyon, 99 N. Y. 216 (1885).

[3] See Reed v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 664 (1883); State v. Yates, 21 W. Va. 763 (1883); 64 N. C. 273; 34 N. H. 510; 2 Utah, 457.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 442; 2 id. 292, 433, 497; 32 Barb. 258; 63 Ill. 162; 21 How. 589.

[1] Black v. Tricker, 59 Pa. 13, 16 (1868), Thompson, C. J.; 2 S. & R. 189; 6 W. & S. 346; 14 W. N. C. 191.

[2] McDowall v. Wood, 2 N. & Mc. *242 (S. C., 1820); Newbiggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay, 165 (S. C., 1798); ib. 113.

[3] Taylor v. Meads, 34 L. J. Ch. 207 (1865); 21 Cent. Law J. 47–49 (1885), cases; 24 Am. Law Reg. 353–68, 659–62 (1885), cases; 1 Story, Eq. § 243; 2 Kent, 150.

[4] [Allen v. Tobias, 77 Ill. 171 (1875), Breese, J.

[5] Hewit v. Jewell, 59 Iowa, 38 (1882), Seevers, C. J.: Iowa Code, § 1495; 58 Iowa, 256; Jacobs v. Moseley, 91 Mo. 462 (1886).

[6] See 15 Conn. 526; 50 Iowa, 237; 59 id. 38; 2 Me. 72; 11 Mass. 294; 2 Metc., Mass., 180; 28 Mo. 556; 12 Mo. Ap. 558; 3 Wend. 142; 32 Pa. 65; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 617; 2 Washb. R. P. 79; 3 Kent, 438.

[7] See Hayes v. Michigan Central R. Co., 111 U. S. 228 (1884); 50 Conn. 128; 62 Ga. 679; 68 Ind. 297; 22 Kan. 359; 63 Me. 308; 24 Minn. 394; 25 id. 328; 31 Miss. 157; 46 id. 573; 69 Mo. 91, 215; 6 Mo. Ap. 397; 18 Hun, 108; 18 Pa. 290; 1 Thomp. Neg. 501, cases.

damages occasioned thereby to animals, does not deprive it of its property without due process of law or deny it the equal protection of the laws. The additional damages are by way of punishment for negligence; and the sufferer may receive them, rather than the State.[1]

In California, fences erected upon the line between the roadway of a railroad and the land of coterminous properties are not part of the "roadway" to be included by the State board in its valuation of the property of the corporation, but are "improvements" assessable by the local authorities of the proper county.[2]

At common law, the owner of land was not bound to fence it. In Massachusetts, prior to the statute of 1841, c. 125, there was no provision for fences along railroads, and the common law as to the owners and occupiers of adjoining lands applied. Neither had a right to trespass, himself or by his servants or cattle, on the land of the other, and neither could require the other to prevent trespasses by maintaining a fence.[3]

Constructing a barbed-wire fence along a highway is not in itself an actionable wrong, in the absence of statutory inhibition, although animals may attempt to enter the enclosure. If the land owner keeps in good order such fences as are usually built, there is no liability for injury to animals. He is not bound to use boards in constructing a wire fence. But he must not let a fence of any kind become a trap for passing animals, which may be allured from the road to the inadequately fenced enclosure, by the presence of other animals or by the sight of pasture.[4]

See APPENDAGE; CLOSE, 3; ENCLOSURE; OBSTRUCT, 1; TIMBER.

FEOD. See FEUD.

FEOFFMENT. 1. The gift of a feud; infeudation. See FEUD.

Enfeoff. To give a feud.

Feoffor. The grantor of a feud.

Feoffee. The grantee of a feud.

2. The gift of any corporeal hereditament,[5] by delivery of possession upon or within view of the land.[6]

The most ancient method of conveyance. The aptest word was "do" or "dedi," I give or have given. As the personal abilities of the feoffee were the inducement, his estate was confined to his person, and subsisted for life. By a feoffment, later, a fee-simple was frequently created. With livery of seisin (q. v.), the feoffee had an estate at will.[6] At present, land is transferred only by deed or will.

[1] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512 (1885).

[2] Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 118 U. S. 414 (1886).

[3] Boston, &c. R. Co. v. Briggs, 132 Mass. 26 (1882), cases.

[4] Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504 (1887); also Haughey v. Hart, 62 Iowa, 96 (1883). In general, 22 Cent. Law J. 196 (1886), cases.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 310.

[6] 2 N. H. 260.

FERÆ NATURÆ. See ANIMAL.

FERMENTED. See LIQUOR.

FEROCIOUS. See ANIMAL.

FERRY.[1] A place where persons and things are taken across a stream or body of water, in boats, for hire.[2]

May refer to the water traversed or to the landing-place or places.[3]

Ferry franchise. A right conferred to land at a particular point upon a stream, and to secure toll for the transportation of passengers and property from that point across the stream.[4]

The essential element is the exclusive right to transport persons, their horses, vehicles, and personal goods, from one shore to the other, over the intervening water, for the toll.[5]

Ferriage. The price or fare to be paid for crossing a ferry; also, the transportation itself.[6]

Ferryman. At common law, one who had the exclusive right of transporting passengers over rivers or other water-courses, for hire, at an established rate.[7]

The grant of a ferry franchise in its nature implies the taking of toll. The only ferries known in some places, as in Massachusetts, are toll ferries.[8]

The ordinary ferry is a substitute for the ordinary bridge, for the accommodation of the public generally. The railroad ferry is a substitute for the railroad bridge, being the continuation of the railroad tracks across a stream of water; it is not a grant of an exclusive ferry franchise.[9]

One may lawfully transport his own goods in his own boat where another has an exclusive right of ferry.[10]

A State may impose a license fee, directly or through a municipal corporation, upon the ferry-

[1] A. S. ferian, to convey across, carry, go.

[2] [Akin v. Western R. Co., 20 Barb. 310 (1857); Same v. Same, 20 N. Y. 376 (1859); Newton v. Cubitt, 12 C. B. *58 (1862); 14 Bradw. 381.

[3] Schuylkill Bridge Co. v. Frailey, 13 S. & R. *424 (1825); State v. Hudson, 23 N. J. L. 209 (1851).

[4] [Mississippi Bridge Co. v. Lonergan, 91 Ill. 513 (1879); 23 id. 369; 2 Gilm. 169.

[5] [Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 678 (1886), cases, Smith, C. J.; s. c. 55 Am. R. 633. Approved, Mayor of New York v. Starin, 106 N. Y. 11 (1887).

[6] [People v. San Francisco, &c. R. Co., 35 Cal. 619 (1868).

[7] Clarke v. State, 2 McCord, 48 (S. C., 1822).

[8] Attorney-General v. Boston, 123 Mass. 468 (1877), cases.

[9] Mayor of New York v. New England Transfer Co., 14 Blatch. 168 (1877), cases.

[10] Alexandria, &c. Ferry Co. v. Wisch, 73 Mo. 655 (1881). See also 3 Bl. Com. 219; 2 id. 37; 5 Cal. 470; 20 Geo. 529; 42 Me. 20; 11 Mich. 53; 58 Miss. 796; 20 N. Y 370; 77 Va. 218-19; 2 Dill. 332.

keepers living in the State, for boats which they use in conveying, from a landing in the State, passengers and goods across a navigable river to a landing in another State.[1]

Any person who invades the rights of the owner of a ferry franchise by running a ferry himself, is liable for any damages he causes the owner, and may be restrained from a continuance. But, probably, the courts would not restrain the operation of a ferry demanded by public convenience simply because the rightful owner of the franchise neglects or refuses to use it. Such franchise does not include the carrying of merchandise without the presence of the owners; this is the business of a common carrier, and may be done without interference with such franchise. The grant of a franchise may be perpetual.[2]

See BRIDGE; CARRIER, Common; COMMERCE; FRANCHISE, 1; LICENSE, 3; NUISANCE; TOLL, 2; TONNAGE; VEHICLE.

FEU. See FEUD.

FEUD.[3] Land held of a superior, on condition of rendering him service. Opposed to allodium, the absolute or ultimate property, which continued to reside in the superior.[4] See ALLODIAL.

A tract of land held by a voluntary and gratuitous donation, on condition of fidelity and certain services.[5]

The constitution of feuds originated in the military policy of the Celtic nations, a policy which was continued in their acquisitions after the fall of the Roman empire. To secure those acquisitions, large districts of land were allotted by the conquering general to his superior officers, and by them, in smaller parcels, to the inferior officers and most deserving soldiers. These allotments were called feods, feoda, feoffa, feus, fiefs, fiefs, and fees — conditional stipends or rewards. The condition annexed was, that the possessor should do service faithfully, at home and in war, to him by whom they were given; for which purpose he took the oath of fealty (q. v.), and for a breach of this condition and oath, by not performing the stipulated service or by deserting the lord in battle, the lands were to revert to him who granted them.[6]

Allotments, thus acquired, mutually engaged such as accepted them to defend them; and, as they all sprang from the same right of conquest, no part could subsist independently of the whole; wherefore, all givers as well as all receivers were mutually bound to defend each other's possessions. But as that could not be done effectually in a tumultuous, irregular way, government, and, to that purpose, subordination, was necessary. Every receiver of lands was therefore bound, when called upon by his benefactor, or the immediate lord of his feud or fee, to do all in his power to defend him. Such benefactor or lord was likewise subordinate to and under command of his immediate benefactor or superior; and so upward to the prince or general himself; and the several lords were also reciprocally bound, in their respective gradations, to protect the possessions they had given.[7]

Feudal; feodal. Relating to a feud or feuds: as, feudal services or tenures, the feudal law or system.

Feudalism. The feudal system; the principles and constitution of feuds.

Feudalize. To reduce to feudal tenure.

Feudary. Held by or concerning feudal tenure: also, the tenant of a feud.

Feudatory; feudatary. A feudal proprietor, or person who received a feud.

Feudist. One versed in feudal law.

Feudal system. A system of military tenure of landed property, adopted by the general assembly of the principal landholders of the realm (Brittany) for self-protection.

Prevailed from the ninth to the thirteenth centuries, attaining maturity under the Conqueror — 1066-1087. Something similar had been in use among the Saxons. The fundamental maxim was, all lands were originally granted by the sovereign, and are, therefore, held mediately or immediately of the crown.

The grantor was the proprietor or lord; the king was "lord paramount;" his immediate tenants were "lords mesne" — tenants in capite, in chief; their tenants were "tenants paravail:" they made profit (avail) out of the land.

At first, grants were held at the will of the lord; then, for a certain period; next, by the grantee and one or more sons; about 1000 A. D., they became hereditary.

Ceremonies observed were: presentation of the prospective tenant; the grant — dedi et concessi, I have given and granted; corporal investiture — putting a robe on the tenant, before witnesses; homage or manhood — professing to "become his (the lord's) man . . . of life, and limb and earthly honor." The service to be rendered was called the rent. See DELIVERY, 1.

The grant was made upon the personal ability of the grantee to serve in war, and do suit at court. Hence, he could not alien, nor exchange, nor devise, nor encumber, without consent of the lord. For those reasons, also, women and monks were never made grantees.

The grantor assumed to protect the grantee in his enjoyment of the land, and was to supply other land of equal value if the tenant was deprived of the grant.

The services were: frees — such as a freeman or soldier might perform; or bases — fit for one of servile rank. In quantity and time they were also certain or uncertain.

[1] Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365, 370 (1882), Woods, J.

[2] Mayor of New York v. Starin, 106 N. Y. 1, 9 (1887), cases.

[3] L. fides, faith, and Teut. ead, odh, or od, property, estate in land, — or, vieh, cattle, property; i. e., land held on pecuniary consideration: A. S. feah, cattle.

[4] [2 Bl. Com. 105.

[5] Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 499 (1863).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 45-46.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 45-46.

The tenure was: 1. Frank-tenure: on consideration of military service and homage. When such service was free but uncertain, the tenure was termed "knight-service," or "tenure in chivalry"—the most honorable of all. When the service was both free and certain, as fealty, or fealty and rent, the tenure was termed "free-socage." 2. Villeinage: "pure," when the service was base and uncertain; and "privileged," when the service was base but certain. The last species was called "villain socage." See SOCAGE.

Inseparably incident to tenure in chivalry were: aids, relief, primer seisin, wardship, marriage, fines for alienation, and escheat, qq. v.

Under the great survey, made in 1086, the realm was divided into sixty thousand knight's fees, corresponding to the number of men in the army.

Personal service was gradually changed into pecuniary assessments; and, finally, by statute of 12 Chas. II (1661), military tenures were abolished.[1]

In the United States, while lands are generally declared to be allodial, feudal principles, adopted as part of the common law of England, continue to be recognized.

The feudal system, to perpetuate estates in the same family, favored the heir-at-law. Hence, English courts have placed the narrowest construction on the words of wills.[2]

The Revolution threw off the dominion of the mother country, and established the independent sovereignty of the colonies or States. In Pennsylvania, for example, an act was passed, November 27, 1779, for vesting the estates of the late proprietaries in the Commonwealth. The manors and lands which had been surveyed for them were excepted, and a pecuniary compensation provided. The "province" had been a fief, held immediately of the crown. The Revolution, and subsequent legislation, emancipated the soil from the chief characteristic of the feudal system. After this change, the proprietaries held their lands as other citizens—under the Commonwealth, by a title purely allodial. Lands are now held mediately or immediately of the State, but by titles cleared of the rubbish of the dark ages, excepting only the feudal names of things no longer feudal. . . The State sold her lands for the best price she could get, and conferred upon the purchasers the same absolute estate she held, excepting the fifth part of any gold or silver found, and six acres in the hundred for roads; and these have been reserved, as everything else has been granted, by contract. Her patents acknowledge a pecuniary consideration, and stipulate for no fealty, escheat, rent-service, or other feudal incident. The State is the lord paramount as to no man's land. When any of it is wanted for public purposes, the State, in virtue of her political sovereignty, takes it, but she compels herself, or those who claim under her, to make full compensation to the owner.[3]

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 43-102; 4 id. 418-39; 1 id. 410; 1 Washb. R. P. 18.

[2] Bosley v. Bosley's Executrix, 14 How. 397 (1852).

[3] Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 500 (1863), Woodward, J.; Hubley v. Vanhorne, 7 S. & R. 188 (1821), Gibson, J.; 3 id. 447; 9 id. 333. See Green, Short Hist. Eng. Peop. 128-14.

Subinfeudation. Subletting part of a feud; carving smaller holdings out of a feudal estate.

Since this deprived the superior lord of his profits of wardship, marriage, and escheat, which fell into the hands of the middle lord, it was restricted by Magna Charta, c. 32 (9 Hen. 3, 1225), and by Quia Emptores (18 Edw. 1, 1290) entirely suppressed, and alienation, in the modern sense, introduced.[1]

To feu; a feu. A right to the use of lands, houses, and other heritable subjects, in perpetuity, in consideration of an annual payment in grain or money, called feu-duty, and certain other contingent burdens. Whence, also, feu farm, feu holding.

Practically, a sale for a stipulated annual payment equivalent to chief rent. Modern feu-duties are generally paid in money. On this footing almost all the house property in towns, and suburban-villa property, in Scotland, is held.[2] Compare FARM, Fee farm.

See also ABEYANCE; ATTAINDER; ATTORNMENT; DEMESNE; DESCENT, Canons of; ESCHEAT; FEE, 1; FEOFFMENT; PRIMOGENITURE; PUEBLO; RELIEF, 1; TENURE, 1; VILLAIN; WARD, 3.

FI. FA. See EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

FIAT. See FIERI.

FICTION.[3] That which is feigned, assumed, pretended. The legal assumption that something is true which is or may be false; an assumption of an innocent and beneficial character, made to advance the ends of justice. Compare ESTOPPEL; PRESUMPTION.

An allegation in legal proceedings that does not accord with the actual facts; and which may therefore be contradicted for every purpose except to defeat the beneficial end for which the fiction is allowed.[4]

Fictions of law are highly beneficial and useful; especially as "no fiction extends to work an injury:" the proper operation being to prevent mischief or remedy an inconvenience that might result from a general rule. The maxim is, in fictione juris semper subsistit æquitas.—in a fiction of law equity always subsists; a legal fiction is consistent with justice.[5]

But not admitted, where life, liberty, or personal safety is in jeopardy.[6]

Illustrative examples: that the king was the original proprietor of all lands.[7] That an original capias had been granted, when a testatum capias issued into

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 91; 44 Pa. 498.

[2] Chamber's Encyclopedia.

[3] L. fictio: fingere, to invent.

[4] [Strafford Bank v. Cornell, 2 N. H. 337 (1821).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 43, 283. See Best, Presump., 27; 2 Burr. 1062.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 230.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 418.

another county.[1] That a summons issues in an amicable action. That a person bailed is in the custody of his bail. That a feigned issue is based upon a wager made. That what ought to be done is done, and relates back to the time when it was to be done.[2] The doctrine of abeyance.[3] That a term of court consists of a single day.[4] That a writ of error actually removes the record, instead of a transcript of the record.[5] That every person knows what is passing in the courts.[6] That the possession of one who has a right of lien is the possession of the law.[7] That the law takes no notice of a fraction of a day.[8] The doctrine of equitable conversion.[9] The doctrine of representation in an agent, and in a decedent; and some features of the early action of ejectment.

Fiction makes several corporations out of what is really one, in order to give each State control over the charters it grants.[10]

Fictio, in old Roman law, is properly a term of pleading, and signifies a false averment which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as, that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object was to give jurisdiction. . . Legal fiction may be used to signify an assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged while its operation is modified. The "fact" is that the law has been wholly changed; the "fiction" is that it remains what it always was. . . Fictions are particularly congenial to the infancy of society. They satisfy the desire for improvement, while they do not offend the disrelish for change. Thus they become invaluable expedients for overcoming the rigidity of law.[11]

Fictitious. 1. Not real; feigned: as, a fictitious — action, case, issue, name, party, payee.

A fictitious case is a suit brought upon facts with respect to which no real controversy exists.

Any attempt, by a mere colorable dispute, or where the appellant has become the sole party in interest, to get up a case for the opinion of the court, where there is no real and substantial controversy, is an abuse reprehended by all courts, and punishable as a contempt.[12]

2. Imaginary; unsubstantial: as, fictitious bail, q. v.

3. Not made in good faith: as, a fictitious bid, q. v.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 283.
[2] 3 Bl. Com. 438.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 107.
[4] Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 766 (1875).
[5] Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 356 (1880).
[6] 3 Pars. Contr. 232.
[7] 3 Pars. Contr. 234.
[8] 3 Pars. Contr. 504 (g).
[9] 1 Pars. Contr. 134.
[10] Horne v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 18 F. R. 50 (1883).
[11] Maine, Ancient Law, 24-25.
[12] Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. 255 (1850), Taney, C. J; Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 1 Black, 426 (1861); Bartmeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 134-35 (1873).

FIDES. L. Trust, confidence, reliance; credence, belief, faith.

Bona fides. Good faith. Bona fide. In, with, or by good faith. Mala fides. Bad faith. Mala fide. In, with, or by bad faith. Uberrima fides. The best faith, the severest good faith. Uberrima fide. With the strictest good faith. See FAITH, Good, Bad.

Fidei commissum (pl. commissa). A thing committed to one's faithfulness; a bequest or devise in trust; a trust.

Fidei commissarius. The beneficiary under a donation in trust; a fidei or fide commissary; a cestui que trust.

A fidei commissum (usually created by a will) was the disposal of an inheritance, in confidence that the transferee would convey it or dispose of the profits at the will of another. It was made the business of a particular magistrate, the prætor fidei commissarius, to enforce observance of this confidence. The right thereby given was looked upon as vested, and entitled to a remedy. These fidei commissa were the originals of modern uses and trusts.[1] See USE, 3.

Fide-jussio or fidejussio. A giving or being surety; suretyship; bail.

Fidejussor. A surety; bail in admiralty.

He is absolutely bound to pay the costs and condemnation at all events.[2]

Admiralty may take a fidejussory caution or stipulation in cases in rem, and in a summary manner award execution to the prevailing party. Delivery of property on bail being given, is implied.[3]

Fides servanda. Faith must be kept; the good faith of a transaction will be given effect.

A maxim with regard to sales of personalty. If there is no express warranty, general rules of implication should be adopted with this maxim in view. A warranty will be implied only when good faith requires it.[4]

FIDELITY. See FAITH; FIDES; INSURANCE; TRUST, 1.

FIDUCIARY.[5] Held, founded, resting upon an actual trust: as, a fiduciary — capacity or character, contract or relation, debt, debtor, creditor.

Fiducial. Of the nature of a trust.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 327; 1 Story, Eq. § 321; 2 id. §§ 965-67; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. § 151. See 3 La. An. 432; 2 How. 619; 15 id. 357.
[2] 3 Bl. Com. 291, 108.
[3] Brig Alligator, 1 Gall. 149 (1812); United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 40 (1878).
[4] McCoy v. Artcher, 3 Barb. 330 (1848); 28 id. 594; 1 Metc., Mass., 551.
[5] L. fiduciarius: fiducia, confidence: fides, q. v

A fiduciary debt is founded or arises upon some confidence or trust, as distinguished from a debt founded simply upon contract.[1]

A fiduciary relationship is one in which, if a wrong arises, the same remedy exists against the wrong-doer on behalf of the principal as would exist against a trustee on behalf of the cestui que trust.[2]

In the New York laws allowing arrest as a remedy for debts incurred in a fiduciary capacity, "fiduciary" imports trust, confidence; refers to integrity or fidelity rather than to credit or ability; contemplates good faith rather than legal obligation.[3]

A debt contracted in a fiduciary capacity was not released by a discharge in bankruptcy.[4] This applied to technical trusts only, not to trusts implied from contracts of agency or bailment.[5]

"Fiduciary" and "confidential" relation seem to be used by the courts and law-writers as convertible expressions. It is a peculiar relation which exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legatees, or distributees, appointer and appointee under powers, partner and part-owners. In these and like cases the law, to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence, affection, or sense of duty which the relation creates, requires the utmost of good faith in all transactions between the parties.[6]

See FRAUD; INFLUENCE; TRUST, 1.

FIEF. See FEUD.

FIELD. 1. A lot in a town may be a field.[7] But a one-acre lot used for cultivating vegetables is a "garden."[8] See AGRICULTURE.

2. "In the field," said of a soldier, means in the military service for the purpose of carrying on a particular war.[9]

FIERI. L. To be done; to be made. Compare FACERE.

Fiat. Let it be done. An order or allowance by a judge or court.

Fiat justitia. Let justice be done.

Fieri facias. Cause to be made. See EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

In fieri. In course of being done; not yet completed. Opposed, in esse, q. v.

FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT. See CITIZEN.

FIGHT. Does not necessarily imply that both parties should give and take blows. It is sufficient that they voluntarily put their bodies in position with that intent.[1] See COMBAT; DUEL; MAYHEM; PRIZE-FIGHTING.

FIGURES. Numerals.

Arabic, 1893; Roman, MDCCCXCIII.

The objection to using Arabic figures in formal documents is that they may be readily altered. In some States they are not allowed in complaints and indictments, except in setting forth copies. It is considered better to date formal instruments by writing the day and year in words; and to write in words in the body of a bill, note, or receipt the sum for which it is given. See DESCRIPTION, 4; FOLIO, 2; FORGERY; WORDS.

FILE.[2] 1. At common law, a thread, string or wire, upon which writs or other exhibits are fastened for safe-keeping and ready reference.[3]

2. To exhibit or present to a court in the regular way: as, to file a bill in equity, a libel in admiralty or divorce, a petition, answer, exception, writ of error.

Also, to leave a paper with an officer for action or preservation; and, to indorse a paper, as received into custody, and give it its place among other papers,—to file away.

Files. Collections of papers, orderly arranged; also, papers under official custody.

On file. Kept in an orderly collection; in its proper place.

Filing a paper consists in placing it in the proper official custody, by the party charged with this duty, and the making of the proper indorsement by the officer.[4]

A paper is filed when delivered to the proper officer, and by him received, to be kept on file.[5]

---

[1] Crisfield v. State, &c., 55 Md. 194 (1880), Robinson, J.

[2] Re West of England Bank, Exp. Dale, 11 Ch. D. 778 (1879), Fry, J.; Connecticut Mut. Ins. Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 104 U. S. 68 (1881).

[3] Stoll v. King, 8 How. Pr. 299 (1853), cases; Frost v. M'Carger, 14 id. 137 (1857); Sutton v. De Camp, 4 Abb. Pr. 484 (1868); 1 Code R. 86, 87; 5 Duer, 86.

[4] R. S. § 5117.

[5] Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. 208 (1844); Hennequin v. Clews, 111 U. S. 681 (1884); Woodward v. Towne, 127 Mass. 42 (1879), cases; 104 id. 248; 15 Gray, 547-49; 16 Conn. 223; 77 N. Y. 497; 18 Rep. 468; 9 Bened. 495-97, cases; 5 Biss. 324.

[6] Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 497 (1881): 1 Story, Eq. § 218. As to fiduciary depositors in banks, see Naltner v. Dolan, 108 Ind. 500 (1886): 26 Am. Law Reg. 29-30 (1887), cases.

[7] State v. McMinn, 81 N. C. 587 (1879); Commonwealth v. Josselyn, 97 Mass. 412 (1867).

[8] Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. 510 (1872).

[9] Sargent v. Ludlow, 42 Vt. 729 (1870).

[1] State v. Gladden, 73 N. C. 155 (1875); Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 148 (1872).

[2] L. filum, a thread.

[3] [Gorham v. Summers, 25 Minn. 86 (1878); 27 id. 18, 23; 16 Ohio St. 548; 14 Tex. 339.

[4] Phillips v. Beene, 38 Ala. 251 (1863).

[5] Peterson v. Taylor, 15 Ga. 484 (1854); Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 148 (1882); Amy v. Shelby County, 1 Flip. 104 (1872); 6 Ind. 309; 2 Blackf. 247; 2 Iowa, 91; 29 id.

An allegation that "no certificate has been filed" in the office of the register, is equivalent to "has not been left for record."[1]

An affidavit of claim is "filed with" a declaration when both are filed at the same time. And this is not affected by their being detached, or by the place of deposit in the office.[2] See LODGE, 1 (2).

In modern practice, "the file" is the manner adopted for preserving papers; the mode is immaterial. Such papers as are not for transcription into records are folded similarly, indorsed with a note or index of their contents, and tied up in a bundle — "a file."

FILIAL. See EMANCIPATION; PARENT.

FILIATION. The relation or tie between a child and its parent, especially its father; also, ascertainment of paternity, affiliation.

Affiliation. Judicial determination of paternity — that a man is the father of a bastard. See FILIUS.

The mother's testimony must be corroborated.[3]

FILIUS. L. A child; a son.

Filius nullius. The child of nobody. Filius populi. The child of the people. A bastard, q. v.

FILUM. L. A thread; a line — the middle line of a stream or road.

The imaginary line drawn through a stream or highway at which the titles of the opposite owners presumably meet.[4]

Filum aquæ. The line of the water; water-line.

Ad filum aquæ. To the line of the water.

Medium filum aquæ. The middle line of the water. See RIPARIAN.

Filum viæ. The line of the way.

Medium filum viæ. The middle line of the road.

FINAL.[5] 1. Pertaining to the end; to be paid at the close of a cause: as, final costs. Opposed, interlocutory, q. v.

2. The last: as, a final account, balance, settlement, qq. v.

3. Putting an end to; conclusively determined in a particular court: as, a final — adjudication, decree, disposition, judgment, order, sentence, qq. v. Opposed, interlocutory: ending or concerning some intermediate matter or issue; also opposed to preliminary, as in final injunction, q. v. Compare DEFINITIVE.

A final judgment or decree puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy for which he sues.[1]

A judgment or decree which determines the particular case is final.[2]

A decree is final when the court has completed its adjudication of the cause.[3]

It has long been well settled that a judgment or decree, to be final, must terminate the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case, so that if there should be an affirmance in the appellate court, the court below would have nothing to do but to execute the judgment or decree it had already rendered. It has not always been easy to decide when decrees in equity are final within this rule, and there may be some apparent conflict in the cases on that subject, but in the common-law courts the question has never been a difficult one. If the judgment is not one which disposes of the whole case on its merits, it is not final. Consequently it has been uniformly held that a judgment of reversal with leave for further proceedings in the court below cannot be brought before the Supreme Court on a writ of error.[4]

Thus, a decree of sale in a foreclosure suit, which settles all the rights of the parties and leaves nothing to be done but to make the sale and pay out the proceeds, is final for purposes of appeal.[5]

FIND. 1. To come lawfully into the possession of lost or abandoned personalty.

The finder has a clear title against all the world except the true owner, who has not shown any intention to abandon.[6] He stands in the place of the owner, is a trustee for the owner. The place of finding creates no exception. After the original owner is known and accessible, any keeping with intention to appropriate is larceny. Reasonable diligence to learn who the rightful owner is should be used. Necessary expenses incurred in preserving the property or in discovering the owner are a lien.[7]

Thus, as between the finder and the owner of a paper-sack in which bank-notes are found, the notes are the property of the finder;[8] so, also, as between 468; 135 Mass. 580; 138 id. 196; 55 Mo. 301; 65 id. 590; 13 Barb. 326; 2 Caldw. 468; 14 Tex. 339.

[1] Wood v. Union Gospel Church Association, 68 Wis. 13 (1885).

[2] Hossler v. Hartman, 82 Pa. 53 (1876).

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 414.

[4] See 3 Kent, 427, 428, 432, 434.

[5] L. finalis; finis, limit, end.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 398, 452.

[2] Weston v. Council of Charleston, 2 Pet. 464 (1829), Marshall, C. J.

[3] Green v. Fisk, 103 U. S. 519 (1880), Waite, C. J.

[4] Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 106 U. S. 3 (1882), cases, Waite, C. J.; Dainese v. Kendall, 119 id. 54 (1886), cases.

[5] Grant v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 106 U. S. 431 (1882). See St. Louis R. Co. v. Southern Express Co., 108 id. 28 (1883); 17 Johns. 548; 59 Cal. 557; 50 Me. 401; 14 Blatch. 130.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 9; 2 Kent, 290.

[7] Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588 (1877), cases; Griggs v. State, 58 Ala. 425 (1877), cases; N. Y. & Harlem R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 178 (1874); Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Sm. L. C. 636–66, cases.

[8] Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 288–91 (1878), cases.

the finder and the keeper of a hotel in which money or other thing of value is found.[1]

The owner of a tannery neglected to remove all of the hides he had placed in the vats. The land was sold, and, forty years later, a laborer discovered the hides. Held, that the representative of the owner was entitled to them.[2]

Property is not lost, in the sense of the rule, if it was intentionally laid on a table, counter, or other place, by the owner, who forgot to take it away. In such case the proprietor of the premises is entitled to the custody. Whenever the surroundings show that the article was deposited in its place, the finder has no right of possession against the owner of the building. An article casually dropped is also within the rule.[3]

See ABANDON, 1; ESTRAY; REWARD, 2; TREASURE-TROVE; TROVER.

2. A corporation engaged in business within a State is said to be "found" doing business there.[3]

To give the Federal courts jurisdiction in personam over a foreign corporation, in the absence of a voluntary appearance, it must appear, as a fact, that the corporation is carrying on business in such foreign State or district; that such business is transacted or managed by some agent or officer representing the corporation, and some local law must make the corporation amenable to suit there.[4]

The presence of the chief officers of a corporation in a State other than that of its creation does not change its residence, nor does the fact that the officers take into such State corporate property for exhibition and advertisement, bring the corporation into the State as an "inhabitant," or so that it can be "found" there.[5]

Corporations are citizens of the State under whose laws they are created. They cannot, by engaging in business in another State, acquire a residence there.[6]

3. "Find" and "found," said of a defendant as to whom a summons or other process has been issued, have a technical meaning, the equivalent of the Latin inventus, come upon, met.[7]

Opposed, "not found:" non est inventus, he has not been found; abbreviated n. e. i.

"Not found" is an abridged form of return which usage sanctions. It imports that the defendant was not found within the meaning of the precept, that is, after proper effort to find him in the due execution of the precept.[1] See RESIDE.

4. To arrive at as a conclusion; to conclude or terminate formally: as, to find an indictment, a verdict.

If the grand jury are satisfied of the truth of an accusation, they indorse upon it "a true bill." The indictment is then said to be "found." To this at least twelve jurors must agree. Opposed, "not found."[2]

Finding. The decision of a judge, arbitrator, jury, or referee.

Finding against evidence. A finding which negatives the existence of a fact admitted by the pleadings; also, a finding not sustained by the evidence.[3]

General finding; special finding. Issues of fact in civil cases in any circuit court may be tried and determined by the court, without the intervention of a jury, whenever the parties, or their attorneys of record, file with the clerk a stipulation in writing waiving a jury. The finding of the court upon the facts, which may be either general or special, shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury.[4]

The parties are concluded by the propositions of fact which the evidence, in the opinion of the court, establishes. Whether general or special, the finding has the same effect as the verdict of a jury; and its sufficiency to sustain the judgment is the only matter for review.[5] — the "sufficiency" of the finding, not of the facts, is meant.[6]

Special finding. A statement of the ultimate facts on which the law must determine the rights of the parties.[7]

The finding of a referee should have the precision of a special verdict; it should specify with distinctness the facts found, and not leave them to be inferred.[8] See VERDICT, Special.

FINE.[9] 1. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, actual or fictitious, by leave of the king or of his justices, whereby

[1] Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 379 (1879), cases, Trunkey, J.

[2] Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 452 (1883), cases.

[3] R. S. § 739; Exp. Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 378 (1877); Blackburn v. Selma, &c. R. Co., 2 Flip. 535 (1879); Robinson v. Nat. Stock-Yard Co., 12 F. R. 361 (1882); Mohr Distilling Co. v. Insurance Cos., ib. 474, 476 (1882), cases; Merchants' Manuf. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 18 id. 358, 360 (1882), cases.

[4] United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 29 F. R. 17 (1886), cases, Jackson, J.; 32 id. 437.

[5] Carpenter v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 32 F. R. 434 (1887), Brewer, J.

[6] Fales v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 678-79 (1887), cases

[7] Carter v. Youngs, 42 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 172 (1877), Sanford, J.

[1] International Grain Ceiling Co. v. Dill, 10 Bened. 96 (1878), Choate, J.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 305.

[3] Silvey v. Neary, 59 Cal. 98 (1881); Harris v. Harris, ib. 620 (1881).

[4] R. S. § 649.

[5] R. S. § 700; Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 81 (1876), cases; Tyng v. Grinnell, 92 U. S. 469 (1875), cases; 18 Wall. 254; 103 U. S. 556; 112 id. 604.

[6] Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 688 (1880).

[7] Norris v. Jackson, 9 Wall. 127 (1869), cases.

[8] Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 637 (1879).

[9] L. finis, end.

lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties.[1]

It put an "end" to controversies concerning the matter. The plaintiff began an action of covenant upon a supposed agreement to convey to him. The defendant (the deforciant) then applied to the court for leave to settle the matter; which he did by acknowledging that the lands were the right of the complainant. The "note" of the fine was an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; it named the parties, the land, and the agreement. The "foot" or conclusion recited the parties, day, year, place, and before whom acknowledged or levied. The party levying the fine was called the "cognizor;" he to whom it was levied, the "cognizee." The proceeding was a solemn conveyance on record, and bound parties, privies, and strangers — after five years.[1]

The object oftenest sought by "levying a fine" was the barring of an estate tail. The statute of fines, 11 Hen. VII (1496), c. 1, and 32 Hen. VIII (1541), c. 36, were abolished by 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1833), c. 74, which substituted a disentailing deed by the tenant in tail.[2]

The object of a fine was to quiet titles more speedily than by the ordinary limitation of twenty and twenty-five years. One of two contesting claimants could compel an assertion or abandonment of the pretensions of his adversary in one-fifth the usual period of delay. . . In use in New York down to 1830.[3]

Compare RECOVERY, Common. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2.

2. A pecuniary punishment for an offense, inflicted by sentence of a criminal court. A penalty; a forfeiture.[4]

A sum of money imposed by a court according to law, as a punishment for the breach of some penal statute. Never applied to damages or compensation for loss.[5]

A pecuniary penalty.[6]

A "fine" is an amercement imposed upon a person for a past violation of law; "exemplary damages" have reference rather to the future than the past conduct of the offender, and are given as an admonition not to repeat the offense.[7]

Excessive fines shall not be imposed.[8]

This applies to national, not to State, legislation. The Supreme Court cannot, on habeas corpus, revise a sentence on the ground that the fine is excessive.[1]

See AMERCE; PARDON; PUNISH.

FINGER. See MAYHEM.

FINIS. See FINAL; FINE.

FINISHED. See FINAL; PERFECT.

Moving into a house may not estop the owner to deny that it was finished, within the meaning of his acceptance of an order "to be paid when the house is finished."[9]

FIRE. A policy of insurance against fire includes every loss necessarily following directly from the occurrence of a fire.[2] See CAUSE, 1, Proximate; EXPLOSION; INSURANCE; LIGHTNING.

Fire-arm. A weapon acting by the force of gunpowder.[4] See ARMS, 2; LOADED; WEAPON.

Fire department. A city which is authorized to maintain water-works and a fire department, and which collects taxes for those purposes, is not responsible for the negligence of its fire department in permitting private property to be burned.[5]

Fire-escape. An act which directs that certain buildings shall be provided with fire-escapes by the "owners," does not apply to an owner in fee, not in possession, who has leased the premises, but to the tenant. Being a penal statute, it cannot be extended by implication to parties who do not clearly come within its terms.[6]

Fire ordeal. See ORDEAL.

Fireworks. Percussion caps, designed for signaling railway trains are "explosive preparations," within the meaning of a statute regulating the keeping of such articles, although they may not be "fireworks" as the latter term is known to commerce.[7]

Set on fire. A statute giving damages against any one who shall "set on fire" the woods of another, does not apply to an accidental firing by a locomotive engine, without negligence.[8]

See ARSON; NECESSITY; RES, Perit, etc.; SALVAGE; TAKE, 8.

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 349–57.

[2] Williams, Real Prop. 47–49.

[3] McGregor v. Comstock, 17 N. Y. 162, 166 (1858); 6 id. 495. See also Guthrie v. Owen, 10 Yerg. 341 (1837).

[4] Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray, 374 (1858), Metcalf, J.

[5] Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 15 (1879), Valentine, J.; Jockers v. Borgman, 29 id. 122 (1883), cases, Horton, C. J.

[6] New Mexico v. Baca, 2 N. M. 190 (1882). See also 1 Ind. 315; 4 Iowa, 300; 6 Neb. 87; 4 Lans. 140; 15 Rich. 90; 14 Tex. 398.

[7] Schafer v. Smith, Sup. Ct. Ind. (1877): 4 Cent. Law J. 272.

[8] Constitution, Amd. Art. VIII.

[1] Exp. Watkins, 7 Pet. *574 (1833); Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. 480 (1866). As to the power in associations to impose fines upon members, see 27 Am. Law Reg. 370–74 (1888), cases.

[2] Robbins v. Blodgett, 121 Mass. 584 (1877).

[3] Brady v. North Western Fire Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 445 (1863).

[4] Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 509 (1875); Evins v. State, 46 id. 88 (1871); Hutchinson v. State, 62 id. 3 (1878); Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417 (1878).

[5] Robinson v. Evansville, 87 Ind. 334, 336–37 (1882): 85 id. 130; 17 B. Mon. 720: 19 Ohio St. 19; 16 Gray, 297; 104 Mass. 87; 122 id. 311; 69 Pa. 420; 38 Conn. 368; 53 Mo. 159; 18 Wis. 83; 33 id. 314; 39 Iowa, 575; 51 Ala. 139; Dill. Munic. Corp. § 774.

[6] Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222 (1884); Lea v. Kirby, 10 Cin. Law Bul. 449.

[7] Bliss v. Lilley, 113 E. C. L. 133 (1862).

[8] Missouri, &c. R. Co. v. Davidson, 14 Kan. 349 (1875). Liability of railroad companies for causing fires, 4 South. Law Rev. 703–69 (1878), cases.

FIRM. See PARTNERSHIP; SIGNATURE; TRADE-MARK.

FIRST. 1. Preceding all others; foremost, earliest, preferred: as, first — mortgage, occupant, purchaser, taker, term; first of exchange, qq. v.

2. In a will, may not import precedence of one bequest over another.[1]

Compare PRIMA; PRIMARY.

FISCAL. See CONFISCATE; FORFEITURE.

FISH; FISHERY. 1. The right to take fish at a certain place or in particular waters is a "fishery."

Common of fishery or piscary.[2] A liberty of fishing in another's waters. Free fishery. The exclusive right of fishing in a public river. Several fishery. The owner of this is also owner of the soil, or derives his right from such owner; a separate fishery.[3]

A common of fishery is not an exclusive right, but is enjoyed in common with certain other persons. A free fishery is a franchise, obtained by grant or prescription, and is distinct from ownership in the soil.[4]

The right to take fish in waters upon the soil of a private proprietor, for one's own use, is not an easement, but a right of profit in lands. It can be acquired only by grant or prescription. But neither prescription, nor custom, nor dedication raises a general right in the public to enter upon private land to fish in the waters thereon.[5]

Each State owns the bed of all tide-waters within its jurisdiction, unless it has granted them away; also, the tide-waters themselves, and the fish in them, as far as capable of ownership while running. The ownership is that of the people in their united sovereignty. The title thus held is subject to the paramount right of regulating navigation, granted to the United States. The fisheries remain under the exclusive control of the State. The State has the right, in its discretion, to appropriate its tide-waters and the beds to be used by its people as a common for taking and cultivating fish [oysters], so far as may be done without obstructing navigation. Such appropriation is a regulation of the use by the people of their common property. The right in the people comes from citizenship and property combined. It is a property right, not a mere privilege or immunity of citizenship. As the State may grant the exclusive use of any part of its common property to one of its citizens, so it may confine the use to its own citizens.[6]

Oysters are fish, within the meaning of a covenant not to retail fish.[7]

Oysters which have been taken, and thus become private property, may be planted in a place subject to the flow of the tide and where there are none naturally, and remain private property.[8]

The owner has the same absolute property in oysters that he has in inanimate things or in domestic animals. Oysters planted in public waters will not be considered abandoned to the public unless planted where oysters naturally grow. If they interfere with the rights of navigation, they may be removed as a nuisance; but a private person, not the owner, may not convert them to his own use.[9]

In the exercise of its police power, a State may grant to individual citizens the exclusive right to plant and to remove oysters under the public waters.[10] See AQUA, Currit, etc.

Fish commissioner. An act of Congress approved February 9, 1871, provides for the appointment of a commissioner of fish and fisheries, with power to preserve and increase food fishes throughout the United States.[11] Some of the States have a board of commissioners, with like powers.

An act approved January 20, 1888, amends the foregoing act so that it reads: There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of scientific and practical acquaintance with the fish and fisheries to be a commissioner of fish and fisheries; that he shall receive a salary at the rate of five thousand dollars a year, be removable at the pleasure of the President, and shall not hold any other office or employment under the authority of the United States or any State.[12]

Fish laws. See GAME, 1; SEA.

2. Referring to a bill in equity or to interrogatories, "fishing" imports seeking to pry into the title or individual affairs of an adverse party.

A "fishing bill" is a bill in which the plaintiff shows no cause of action, and endeavors to compel the defendant to disclose a cause in the plaintiff's favor.[13]

A bill in equity that seeks a discovery upon general, loose, and vague allegations is styled a "fishing

---

[1] Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 330 (1871): 57 id. 523.

[2] L. piscarius, relating to fishes or fishery: piscis, a fish.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 34, 39-40; 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 663.

[4] 3 Kent, 329. See 1 Whart. 132.

[5] Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 225-26 (1868), Depue, J. See also Cole v. Eastman, 133 Mass. 67 (1882), Devens, Justice.

[6] McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 394-97 (1876), cases, Waite, C. J. See also Boggs v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 989 (1882); M'Candlish v. Commonwealth, ib. 1004 (1882).

[7] Caswell v. Johnson, 58 Me. 166 (1870).

[8] Fleet v. Hegeman, 14 Wend. 42 (1835); State v. Sutton, 2 R. I. 434 (1853); Lowndes v. Dickerson, 34 Barb. 586 (1861).

[9] State v. Taylor, 27 N. J. L. 119 (1858), Green, C. J. See also Johnson v. Loper, 46 id. 321 (1884).

[10] People v. Thompson, 30 Hun, 457 (1883).

[11] R. S. § 4395.

[12] 25 St. L. 1.

[13] [Carroll v. Carroll, 11 Barb. 298 (1851), Mitchell, J.

bill;" any such bill will be at once dismissed upon that ground alone.[1]

A party has no right to any discovery except of facts, deeds, and other writings necessary to the title under which he claims.[2] See DISCOVERY, 6.

FIT. See CULTIVATION; DISCRETION, 2.

FIX.[3] 1. To render finally liable: as, to fix bail, q. v.

2. To set for trial or hearing: as, to fix a case on a list.

3. To prescribe the rule by which a thing is to be determined: as, a constitutional direction that the general assembly shall fix the compensation of all officers.[4]

A salary is "fixed" when it consists of a stipulated rate for a definite period. Pay or emolument is fixed when the amount is agreed upon and the service defined.[5]

A salary, pay or emolument is fixed by law when the amount is named in a statute; and, by regulation, when named in a general order, promulgated under provision of law, and applicable to a class or classes of persons.[6]

FIXTURE. A thing fixed or affixed to another thing.

A thing fixed in a greater or less degree to realty.[6]

Anything annexed to the freehold; that is, fastened to or connected with it.[7]

A chattel annexed to the freehold, but removable at the will of the person who annexed it.[8]

Does not necessarily import a thing affixed to the freehold. The word is modern, and generally understood to comprehend any article which a tenant has the power of removing.[9]

As a rule, articles, to become fixtures, must either be fastened to the realty or to what is clearly a part of it, or they must be placed upon the land with a manifest intent that they shall permanently remain there, and should be peculiarly fitted to something that is actually fastened upon it, and essential to its profitable enjoyment.[1]

If the building, or permanent fixture, is erected upon or attached to the realty by the owner of the realty, it is not the subject of conveyance as personalty, even by the owner of the freehold. . . If a building is erected without the assent of the landowner, it becomes at once a part of the realty, and is the property of the owner of the freehold. A building, resting upon blocks and not firmly attached to the freehold, placed upon another's land by his assent, continues to be personalty even though there is no express agreement that the owner shall remove it.[2]

Articles that may assume the character of realty or personalty, according to circumstances, are "fixtures" — things substantially and permanently affixed to the soil, though in their nature removable. The old notion of physical attachment is, by some courts, regarded as exploded. Whether a structure is a fixture depends upon the nature and character of the act by which the structure is put in its place, the policy of the law connected with its purpose, and the intent of those concerned in the act. Other courts still hold that it is essential that the article should not only be annexed to the freehold, but that it should clearly appear that a permanent accession was intended.[3]

A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when attached by the roots, imbedded in it, permanently resting upon it, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent.[4]

The persons between whom questions ordinarily arise in relation to fixtures are: vendor and vendee, including mortgagor and mortgagee; heir and executor; landlord and tenant; executor of tenant for life, and reversioner or remainder-man.

The rule of the common law is that whatever is once annexed to the freehold becomes part of it, and cannot afterward be removed, except by him who is entitled to the inheritance. The rule, however, was never inflexible or without exceptions. It was construed most strictly between executor and heir, in favor of the latter; more liberally between tenant for life or in tail and remainder-man or reversioner, in favor of the former; and with much greater latitude between landlord and tenant, in favor of the tenant. But an exception of a much broader cast, and almost as ancient as the rule itself, is of fixtures erected for purposes of trade. Upon principles of public policy, and to encourage trade and manufactures, fixtures erected to carry on a business have been allowed to be removed by the tenant during his term, and are deemed personalty for many other purposes.[5]

---

[1] Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 F. R. 263 (1887), Sawyer, Cir. J.; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 325, cases.

[2] 2 Story, Eq. § 1490; Lewis v. Shainwald, 7 Saw. 413 (1881), cases.

[3] L. fixum: figuere, to fasten, attach.

[4] Cricket v. State, 18 Ohio St. 21 (1868).

[5] [Hedrick v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 101 (1880), Davis, J.

[6] [2 Kent, 343.

[7] Elwes v. Mawe, 2 Sm. L. C. 177, 187, cases.

[8] [Hallen v. Runder, 1 Crom., M. & R. 276 (1834), Parke, B.

[9] Sheen v. Rickie, 5 M. & W. *182 (1839), Parke, B. See also Rogers v. Gilinger, 30 Pa. 189 (1858); 2 W. & S. 116.

[1] Farmer's Loan, &c. Co. v. Hendrickson, 25 Barb. 489 (1857), Strong, P. J.

[2] Washburn, Real Prop. 3.

[3] Washb. R. P. 6 (18); Hill v. Sewald, 53 Pa. 273-75 (1866); Meigs's Appeal, 62 id. 33 (1869); Capen v. Peckham, 35 Conn. 93-94 (1868); Voorhees v. McGinnis, 48 N.Y. 282 (1872); Stout v. Stoppel, 30 Minn. 58 (1882), cases.

[4] Cal. Civil Code, § 660.

[5] Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. *143, 147 (1829), Story, J. As between vendor and vendee, see Fratt v. Whittier

As between mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagor may remove that which is not a fixture, and which was placed upon the ground after the mortgage was executed.[1]

The law imposes no obligation on a landlord to pay the tenant for buildings erected on the demised premises. The common-law rule is that all buildings become part of the freehold. The innovation on this rule has extended no further than the right of removal while the tenant is in possession.[2]

Rolling-stock is inseparably connected with its railroad in its entire length, and is part of the security of lienholders.[3]

Trees reared in nursery grounds for sale as merchandise possess none of the legal characteristics of fixtures. Fixtures are articles which have an existence independent of the freehold, and are afterward annexed to and become part of it.[4] See EMBLEMENTS.

But there is no universal test for determining whether an article, personal in nature, has acquired the character of realty. In each case regard is to be had to the nature of the chattel itself, the injury that would result from its removal, and the intention in placing it upon the premises with reference to trade, agriculture, or ornament.[5] See MACHINERY; STORE.

FLAG. See LAW, Of the flag.

The act of April 4, 1818, as re-enacted in Rev. St. §§ 1791-92, directs that the flag of the United States shall be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union thereon shall be thirty-seven stars, white in a blue field; that on the admission of a new State one star shall be added, such addition to take effect on the fourth of July next succeeding such admission.

FLAGGING. See PAVE.

FLAGRANS. L. Burning, flaming up: in actual execution or commission. Whence flagrant, flagrancy.

Flagrante bello. War raging: during hostilities. See WAR.

Flagrante crimine or delicto. While the offense is being perpetrated: in the very act. See DELICTUM, Flagrante.

FLAT. A place within a river, cove, creek, or harbor, more or less under water; "a shallow or shoal water."[1]

FLEE. See FUGITIVE.

Flee to the wall. Signifies that a person must use every reasonable means of escape before he may kill a man who assails him with apparently felonious intent.

To excuse homicide on the plea of self-defense it must appear that the slayer had no other possible (or at least probable) means of escaping from his assailant.[2] See DEFENSE, 1; RETREAT.

FLEET. A celebrated prison in London. Named from a river or ditch near by. Used chiefly for debtors and bankrupts, and for persons charged with contempt of the courts of chancery, exchequer, and common pleas. Abolished in 1842; and torn down in 1845.[3]

FLOAT. A certificate authorizing the holder to enter a certain amount of land.[4]

Floating debt. That mass of valid claims against a corporation, for the payment of which there is no money in the treasury specifically designated, nor any taxation or other means of raising money particularly provided.[5] Compare FUNDING.

FLOGGING. Beating with lashes; whipping, q. v.

Abolished in the army by act of August 5, 1861;[6] in the navy by act of June 6, 1872.[7]

FLOOD See ACT, 1. Of God; ALLUVION.

FLOOR. A section of a building between horizontal planes.

The words, used in a lease, the "first floor" are equivalent to the "first story" of the building, and naturally include the walls, unless other words control such meaning. A covenant by a lessee not to underlet any part of the premises is not broken by his allowing a third person, in consideration of an annual payment, to place a sign upon the outside wall, for a stated time.[8]

FLOTSAM. Floating. Goods lost by shipwreck which continue to float on the

---

56 Cal. 126, 128-33 (1881), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 485 (1886), cases. See also Carpenter v. Walker, 140 Mass. 419 (1886); Hedderick v. Smith, 103 Ind. 203 (1885), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 24-28, 664-66 (1886), cases.

[1] Cope v. Romeyne, 4 McLean, 384 (1848).

[2] Kutter v. Smith, 2 Wall. 497, 499 (1864), Miller, J.

[3] Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. St. Paul R. Co., 2 Wall. 644 (1864); ib. 645-49, Mr. Carpenter's brief. See also Freeman v. Dawson, 110 U. S. 270 (1883), cases.

[4] Hamilton v. Austin, 36 Hun, 141-42 (1885), Follett, J.

[5] Coburn v. Litchfield, 132 Mass. 448 (1882), cases, Morton, C. J.; Thomas v. Davis, 76 Mo. 76 (1882); 6 Am. Law Rev. 412-26 (1872), cases; 2 Flip. 200; 70 Ala. 230; 9 Cal. 119; 9 Conn. 67; 16 Ill. 421, 482; 18 Ind. 231; 35 id. 387; 8 Iowa, 544; 21 id. 177; 44 id. 60; 10 Kan. 314; 54 Me. 266; 14 Mass. 352; 30 Minn. 58; 16 Miss. 444; 42 id. 71, 732; 43 id. 349; 32 Mo. 206; 76 id. 119; 5 Mo. Ap. 293; 3 Neb. 131; 8 id. 192; 3 Nev. 82; 6 id. 248; 7 id. 37; 41 N. H. 503; 57 id. 514; 14 N. J. L. 395; 24 id. 287; 38 id. 457; 24 N. J. E. 260; 20 Wend. 656; 10 Barb. 157, 496; 11 id. 43; 35 id. 58; 51 id. 45; 12 N. Y. 170; 20 id. 344; 35 id. 379; 48 id. 278; 66 id. 489; 93 id. 311; 1 Ohio St. 524; 22 id. 563; 2 R. I. 15; 26 Gratt. 752; 17 Vt. 408; 28 id. 428; 34 Wis. 671; 6 Am. L. Rev. 412; 17 Am. Dec. 686, 690.

[1] Stannard v. Hubbard, 34 Conn. 376 (1867).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 184; 3 id. 3-4.

[3] Cowell; Tomlins; Hayden, Dict. Dates.

[4] Marks v. Dickson, 20 How. 504 (1857).

[5] [People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374 (1877), Folger, J. See Cook v. Saratoga Springs, 23 Hun, 59 (1880).

[6] R. S. § 1342, art. 98.

[7] R. S. § 1642, art. 49.

[8] Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 8 (1887), W. Allen, J.

water. Compare JETSAM. See DRIFT-STUFF; WRECK.

FLOWERS. See LARCENY; PERISHABLE.

FOAL. See PARTUS.

FOEDAL. See FEUD.

FŒDUS. See FEDERAL; CONFEDERATION.

FŒNUS NAUTICUM. L. Marine interest.

Sometimes designates a loan of money to be employed in an adventure by sea, upon condition to be repaid with extraordinary interest, in case the voyage is safely performed.[1] See INSURANCE, Marine.

FŒTICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

FOLIO.[2] 1. A leaf.

References to old law-books are by the folio, instead of the page. See A, 1, par. 2.

2. A certain number of words, established by usage or law, as a unit of measurement for estimating the length of a document.

Originated in some estimate of the number of words that a folio ought to contain.

The number has varied, in different jurisdictions, from seventy-two, to ninety, and one hundred.

By the act of February 26, 1853, § 3, a folio is one hundred words, counting each figure a word.[3]

FOLLOW. See PROSECUTE; PROSEQUI; PURSUE; SUIT.

Follow copy. See TELEGRAPH.

Follow a fund or property. See IDENTITY, 2.

Follows the person. See PROPERTY, Personal.

FOOT. See POSSESSIO, Pedis.

Foot-way. See BRIDGE; SIDEWALK.

FOR. 1. On account of, by reason of, because of; in behalf of; as agent for.[4] See AGENT.

2. May mean "during."

As, in Neb. code, § 947, which requires public notice of the time and place of the sale of realty upon execution to be given "for at least thirty days" before the day of sale, by advertisement in some newspaper. One publication thirty days before the sale would not, therefore, be sufficient.[5]

For account. See CONCERN.

For collection. See COLLECTION, 2.

For cause. See CAUSE, 2.

For that. Introduces a positive allegation. For that whereas introduces a recital.

For use. A, "for use, etc.," for the benefit of some other, the assignor. See USE, 2.

For whom it may concern. In an insurance policy, for all persons who may have an insurable interest. See further AUCTION; CONCERN.

FORBEARANCE. Suspension of an existing demand.[1]

Delay in enforcing a right.

In statutes against usury, giving additional time, after the time originally limited for the return of a loan has passed.[2]

An agreement to forbear bringing a suit for a debt due, although for an indefinite time, and even although it cannot be construed to be an agreement for perpetual forbearance if followed by actual forbearance for a reasonable time, is a good consideration for a promise.[3] See CONSIDERATION, 2; SURETY.

FORCE.[4] Compare VIGOR; VIS.

Strength; power.

1. Strength applied or exerted; power in action or motion; active power; compulsion; resistance; also, unlawful violence,—violence, q. v.

Actual force. Force applied in point of fact. Implied force. Force inferred from the doing of an unlawful act. See BATTERY; CASE, 3; KIDNAPING; RAPE; ROBBERY.

Enforce. To constrain, or compel; to give effect to: as, to enforce an order of court; Congress may enforce constitutional prohibitions by appropriate legislation; to enforce a contract.

Power to enforce the collection of a fine implies power to give a receipt which will discharge the party.[6]

Enforcement Act of 1870. See RIGHT, 2, Civil (2).

Force and arms. Charges violence in declarations and indictments for trespasses; as, in trespass for entering a close.[6] See HAND, 2; TRESPASS.

Force and fear. Is ground for annulling a contract, when the fear would affect a mind of ordinary firmness. See DURESS.

---

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 458.

[2] L. in folio: folium, a leaf, sheet.

[3] 10 St. L. 168: R. S. § 828. See Amy v. Shelby County, 1 Flip. 104 (1872); Cavender v. Cavender, 3 McCrary, 384 (1882); Jerman v. Stewart, 12 F. R. 275 (1882); 38 Mich. 639.

[4] Strong v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 105 (1865).

[5] Lawson v. Gibson, 18 Neb. 139 (1885). See also Whitaker v. Beach, 12 Kan. 493 (1874); 16 Ohio, 562.

[1] Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 370 (1857), cases.

[2] [Dry Dock Bank v. American Life Ins., &c. Co., 3 N. Y. 355 (1850).

[3] Howe v. Taggart, 133 Mass. 287 (1882), cases.

[4] F. force; L. fortis, strong, powerful.

[5] People v. Charisterson, 59 Ill. 158 (1871).

[6] 2 Chitty, Pl. 846, 850; 2 Steph. Com. 364; 3 id. 372.

Force to force. Resistance to unlawful violence,— allowed to the extent of the violence. See ASSAULT; BATTERY; DEFENSE, 1.

Irresistible force. Human agency in its nature and power absolutely uncontrollable.[1] See ACCIDENT; ACT, 1, Of God; CARRIER, Common; ENEMY, Public.

Forced; forcible; forcibly. (1) Against the will or consent: as, a forcible abduction, dispossession, entry and detainer, sale, qq. v.

(2) Against the will and under express protest: as, a forced payment, q. v.

"Forcibly" doing an act is merely doing the act with force.[2]

"Violently" may not be equivalent to "by force," in an indictment for rape.[3]

All civil injuries are either without force or violence, as in cases of slander and breach of contract; or else are coupled with force and violence, as in cases of battery and false imprisonment.[4]

The government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exerted through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This power does not derogate from a State the right to execute its laws at the same time and place. The one does not exclude the other, except where both cannot be exercised at the same time; then the Federal authority prevails.[5] See WAR.

(3) Arrived at by violence done to language; strained; unnatural: as, a forced construction, q. v.

2. Power to persuade or convince, or impose an obligation; legal effect or operation; binding effect; validity; efficacy. See VOID.

By force of. By virtue of; by reason of; in consequence of.[6]

FORECLOSURE. A closing up, shutting out, barring, preclusion.

1. Specifically, the extinguishment of a mortgagor's equity of redemption beyond possibility of recall.[7]

A mortgage is foreclosed in the sense that no one has the right to redeem it, or to call the mortgagee to account under it.[8]

In no sense can the term be applied to a mortgage until sale of the property has been effected.[9]

Foreclosure takes place where a mortgagor has forfeited his estate by non-payment of money due upon the mortgage, but still retains his equity of redemption. In that case, the mortgagee may file a bill of foreclosure to compel the debtor to redeem his estate presently (as, within six months), or, in default, to be forever closed or barred from the right. This is known as strict foreclosure. In Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, New York, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and other States, the mortgagee obtains a decree for a sale of the land, the proceeds to be applied to satisfying incumbrances in the order of their priority.[1]

A suit to foreclose a mortgage, not seeking a personal judgment, is essentially a proceeding in rem.[2] See MORTGAGE; REDEMPTION.

2. Also applied to the suit by a pledgee to extinguish the pledgor's right to redeem the personalty, after default made; and to proceedings to collect charges or liens upon other specific property, as, a foreclosure of a mechanic's lien.

FOREIGN.[3] 1. That which belongs or pertains to another country, nation, or sovereignty; or to another State, or division of a State.[4]

As, foreign or a foreign — administrator, allegiance, assignment, attachment, charity, coin, commerce or trade, corporation, county, court, creditor, decree, divorce, document, domicil, exchange or bill of exchange, factor, guardian, judgment or sentence, law, minister, patent, port, vessel, voyage, qq. v.

Foreigner. A citizen or subject of another country or nation; an alien, q. v.

A naturalized citizen is no longer a foreigner.[5]

See BANKRUPTCY; CITIZENSHIP; COPYRIGHT; PATENT, 3.

2. Irrelevant; impertinent; extrinsic; not germane: as, matter or testimony foreign to the issue. Compare ALIUNDE; DEHORS.

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a jury, grand or petit.

From the persons summoned and accepted as grand jurors, the court appoints the foreman, who has power to administer oaths to witnesses.[6] The first

---

[1] Story, Bailm. § 25.

[2] United States v. Bachelder, 2 Gall. 19 (1814), Story, J. See 115 Mass. 563.

[3] State v. Blake, 39 Me. 324 (1855).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 118.

[5] Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 395 (1879), Bradley, J.

[6] Fischer v. Hope, &c. Ins. Co., 40 N. Y. Super. 299 (1876).

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 159.

[8] Puffer v. Clark, 7 Allen, 85 (1863), Hoar, J.

[9] Duncan v. Cobb, 32 Minn. 464 (1884).

[1] See Hatch v. White, 2 Gall. 154 (1814), Story, J.; Sprague v. Martin, 29 Minn. 229 (1882); Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 188 (1882); 44 Ohio St. 275; 4 Kent, 180; 2 Washburn, R. P. 261, note; Williams, R. P. 409; Daniel, Ch. Pr. 1204.

[2] Martin v. Pond, 30 F. R. 18 (1887), cases.

[3] F. forain, alien, strange: L. foras, out of doors, abroad.

[4] See Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. *56 (1831).

[5] Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Pet. *349 (1828).

[6] [R. S. § 809; United States v. Plumer, 3 Cliff. 71 (1867).

person drawn and accepted upon a petit jury becomes its foreman. A jury speaks through its foreman.

FOREST. Forests were waste grounds, belonging to the king, replenished with beasts of chase, which are under his protection.[1]

For the preservation of the king's game there were particular laws, privileges, courts, and offices belonging to the king's forests. Part of the king's ordinary revenue consisted of fines levied for offenses against the forest laws.[1] See GAME, 1.

FORESTALLING. Buying or contracting for merchandise or victual on its way to market; dissuading persons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persuading them to enhance the price when there: any of which practices makes the market dear to the fair dealer.[2]

So described in statute 5 and 6 Edw. VI (1552), c. 14.

At common law, such practices were an offense against public trade; otherwise, since 7 and 8 Vict. (1844) c. 24. Compare ENGROSS, 2; MONOPOLY; REGRATING.

FOREVER. Compare PERMANENT.

Used of the location of a county seat, may mean until changed by law.[3]

In a conveyance, was held not to impart inheritable quality.[4]

FORFEIT.[5] 1. To divest or to suffer divestiture of property, without compensation, in consequence of a default or offense. 2. To pay money as a mulct, or for a default or wrong.

To take away all right from one person and transfer it to another.[6]

In a contract that a party shall "forfeit" a specified sum on a breach, equivalent to "penalty."[7]

Forfeitable. Admitting of divestiture or loss by way of punishment or for neglect; opposed to non-forfeitable: as, a forfeitable or non-forfeitable policy of insurance.

Forfeiture. Lands or goods whereof the property is gone away or departed from the owner.[8]

A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they go to the party injured, as a recompense for the wrong which either he alone or the public together with himself has sustained.[1]

Forfeitures were called bona confiscata by the civilians, because they belonged to the fiscus or imperial treasury; and now, by us, foris facta, that is, such whereof the property is gone away or departed from the owner.[9] Compare CONFISCATE.

Forfeitures of estates were for breaches of the condition that the tenant should not do any act incompatible with the estate.[8]

A penalty by which one loses his rights and interest in his property.[4]

Property rights are forfeitable: by commission of crime; by alienation contrary to law (as, in mortmain, to an alien); by non-performance of a condition; by waste; and by bankruptcy.[8]

Goods and chattels were totally forfeited by conviction of treason, misprision of treason, felony, petit larceny, flight upon charge of treason, etc.[6]

In theory, the guilty person wholly abandoned his connection with society.[7]

At common law, a forfeiture transferred title to the sovereign. In a statute, may mean that the State by indictment shall recover a sum to be levied of the person's property as a "fine."[8]

"Forfeiture" has frequently been spoken of as equivalent to conveyance or grant.[8]

Forfeitures are not favored. They are often the means of oppression and injustice. Hence, the courts are prompt to seize upon any circumstances that indicate an election to waive a forfeiture; as, the course of action of an insurance company. Where adequate compensation can be made, the law in many cases, and equity in all cases, discharges the forfeiture, upon such compensation being made.[10]

Equity never lends its aid to enforce a forfeiture or penalty.[11]

A clause of forfeiture in a law is construed differently from a similar clause in an engagement between individuals. A legislature always imposes a forfeiture

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 289; 2 id. 38, 414-16; 3 id. 73; 4 id. 415, 420, 423, 432, 437.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 158; 10 Phila. 361.

[3] Casey v. Harned, 5 Iowa, 14 (1857); 1 La. An. 315.

[4] Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 593 (1871), cases.

[5] F. forfait, a crime punishable by fine, a fine: L. L. foris-facere, to trespass. lit. "to do beyond:" foris, out of doors, abroad, beyond; facere, to do,—Skeat; 1 Bl. Com. 299.

[6] [Walter v. Smith, 5 B. & Ald. 157 (1822), Best, J.

[7] Taylor v. The Marcella, 1 Woods, 304 (1873); 17 Barb. 360; 15 Abb. Pr. 273.

[8] [1 Bl. Com. 299.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 267.

[10] 1 Bl. Com. 299. See 1 Kent, 67; 1 Story, 134; 13 Pet. 157.

[11] 2 Bl. Com. 153.

[4] Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300 (1856).

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 267; 20 How. Pr. 370.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 421.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 299; 4 id. 381.

[8] Commonwealth v. Avery, 14 Bush, 638 (1879).

[9] Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 211 (1875), cases, Strong, J.

[10] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 239, 242 (1877), cases, Bradley, J.; Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, ib. 577 (1877); Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 206 (1883).

[11] Marshall v. Vicksburgh, 15 Wall. 149 (1872), cases; McCormick v. Rossi, 70 Cal. 474 (1886); Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 167 (1886).

as a punishment inflicted for a violation of some duty enjoined by law; whereas individuals can only make it a matter of contract.[1]

Provisions for forfeiture are regarded with disfavor and construed with strictness — when applied to contracts, and the forfeiture relates to a matter admitting of compensation or restoration; but there is no leaning against a forfeiture intended to secure the construction of public works where compensation cannot be made for the default, nor where the forfeiture is imposed by positive law.[2]

Where an act works a forfeiture of goods, the government may at once seize them.[3] Where an absolute forfeiture is the penalty, title accrues in the government when the penal act is committed. But where the forfeiture is in the alternative (property, or its value), title does not vest till an election is made.[4]

Where property is seized for condemnation for forfeiture, some notification of the proceedings, beyond the mere seizure, may be necessary.[5]

Failure to pay a premium of life insurance (q. v.) at the time specified involves an absolute forfeiture, for which, unless waived by the company, relief cannot be had.[6] See WAR.

Forfeitures for common-law offenses have been generally abolished.

See ATTAINDER; BOND; CHARTER, 2; CONDITION; DOWER; FELONY; LAND, Public; PARDON; PENALTY; RECOGNIZANCE; SEARCH-WARRANT.

FORGE.[7] 1. A mechanical contrivance by which iron is made or manufactured from the ore.

But a blacksmith's forge is not a "forge or furnace for manufacturing iron."[8]

2. To make in the likeness of something else.[9] Compare FABRICATE.

Forger. A person guilty of forgery.

Forgery. At common law, the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right.[10]

"The word is taken metaphorically from the smith, who beateth upon his anvil and forgeth what fashion and shape he will."[11]

In common speech, also, the altered instrument itself.

The fraudulent making of a false writing, which, if genuine, would be apparently of some legal efficacy.[1]

May be committed as to any writing, which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another man's liability, or the evidence of his right.[2]

Imports a false making (which includes every alteration of or addition to a true instrument) — a making malo animo, of any written instrument for the purpose of fraud and deceit: with intent to deceive.[3]

In general terms, forgery is the false making or material alteration of, or addition to, a written instrument for the purpose of fraud and deceit. It may be — the making of a false writing purporting to be that of another; the alteration in some material particular of a genuine instrument by a change of its words or figures; the addition of some material provision to an instrument otherwise genuine; the appending of a genuine signature to an instrument for which it was not intended. The false writing may purport to be the instrument of a person or firm existing or fictitious; or of a person having the same name as the accused. As a rule, it must purport to be the writing of another than the person who made it.[4]

May be committed by making a note in the name of a fictitious person, in an assumed name, or in the name of a bank which does not exist. It is not necessary that the note be one which, if genuine, would be a valid and binding obligation. It is sufficient that the instrument purports to be good. To relieve from the character of forgery, the want of validity must appear upon the face of the paper itself.[5]

It is immaterial whether the forgery is committed by means of printing, stamping, an engraved plate, or by writing with a pen.[6]

---

[1] Maryland v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 3 How. 552 (1845), Taney, C. J.

[2] Farnesworth v. Minnesota, &c. R. Co., 92 U. S. 68 (1875), Field, J.; 2 Story, Eq. § 1326.

[3] Henderson's Spirits, 14 Wall. 56 (1871), cases; Thatcher's Spirits, 108 U. S. 682 (1880).

[4] The Mary Celeste, 2 Low. 356 (1874), cases.

[5] Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274 (1876).

[6] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 30 (1876): 100 Pa. 180. As to fire insurance, see Smith v. St. Paul Fire & Mar. Ins. Co., 3 Dak. T. 80 (1882).

[7] F. forge: L. fabrica, a workshop; faber, a workman, smith: fa-, to make.

[8] [Rogers v. Danforth, 9 N. J. E. 296 (1853).

[9] State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 394 (1856).

[10] 4 Bl. Com. 247; L. R., 1 C. C. R. *203.

[11] 3 Coke, Inst. 169.

[1] 2 Bishop, Cr. L. §§ 524, 528, note.

[2] 3 Greenl. Ev. § 103, cases.

[3] Rex v. Coogan, 2 East, P. C. 852-53 (1803): Commonwealth v. Ayer, 3 Cush. 152 (1849); Garner v. State, 5 Lea, 215 (1880); State v. McKiernan, 17 Nev. 228 (1882).

[4] Commonwealth v. Baldwin, 11 Gray, 198 (1858), Thomas, J.

[5] United States v. Turner, 7 Pet. *134 (1833); United States v. Mitchell, Baldw. 366 (1831); 11 F. R. 55.

[6] Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 467-71 (1888), cases. Benson, by falsely representing himself in the City of Mexico as Marcus Meyer, agent for Henry E. Abbey, under whom Adelina Patti was to appear at the Teatro Nacional, in December, 1886, sold $25,000 to $30,000 worth of tickets of admission. In February, 1888, Benson was arrested in the city of New York, and committed for his return to Mexico, in accordance with the extradition treaty of 1861, the circuit court having refused to release him upon a writ of habeas corpus. "About the only contest" made by him before the Supreme Court was that the tickets were not forgeries, mainly because the name of Mr. Abbey, who was represented as having authorized their issue and sale, was not "in writing," i. e., made in script, by the use of a pen. Ib. 464-65.

The crime is generally defined to be "the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's rights." The intent to defraud is its essence. There must be a possibility of some person being defrauded. Where the effect, if successful, would be to defraud a particular person, he should be named in the indictment, if known; if otherwise, a general allegation of the intent should be made. The question of intent is for the jury; but such intent, to be proved, must be alleged. The nature of the offense is a species of false pretenses or fraud; hence the importance of setting forth the intent, and the name of the person, if known.[1]

It is sufficient if the forgery would have the effect of defrauding a particular person. A person may not fraudulently sign his own name (in this case to a money-order) although identical with the name of the person who should have signed.[2]

Forgery of a bill or note is by counterfeiting a signature, or by filling up a paper with a genuine signature, so as to make it appear to be signed as maker, or indorser, or other party.[3]

"False, forged, and counterfeit," in the act of February 25, 1862 (12 St. L. 347), necessarily implies that the instrument so characterized is not genuine, but only purports to be, or is in the similitude of, such instrument.[4]

"False or forged," applied to an instrument in writing, means that the instrument is counterfeit or not genuine,— that some one has attempted to imitate another's personal act, and, by means of such imitation, to cheat and defraud.[5]

To falsely make an affidavit is one thing; to make a false affidavit is another. It is the false making that is forgery.[6]

Making and uttering an instrument as agent, under a false assumption of authority, is not forgery.[6]

In charging forgery, the variance or the omission of a letter, to be material, must change the word attempted to be written into another word having a different meaning. The rigor of the old English law in this respect was due to the barbarous punishments imposed. The insertion or omission of a word or words will not create a variance unless the sense is thereby altered. Illustrations of harmless changes are: "to H. C. P. or order," "B. A. or bearer," "pay to bearer," "undertood" for understood, "Fayelville" for Fayetville, "Jna." for Jno.[7]

Money paid under a mistake of fact can be recovered. Hence, where one pays money on forged paper by discounting or cashing it, he can always recover it, provided: that he has not himself contributed materially to the mistake by his own fault or negligence; and that by an immediate or sufficiently early notice he enables the party to whom he paid it to indemnify himself as far as possible. The doctrine is favored that even negligence in making the mistake is no bar to a recovery.[1]

See ALTER, 2; COUNTERFEIT; FAITH, Good; GENUINE; MISTAKE; OBLIGATION, 2; ORDER.

FORGIVE. See CONDONE; MERCY; PARDON.

FORGOTTEN PROPERTY. See FIND, 1.

FORM. 1. Established method of expression or practice; a fixed way of proceeding. Compare COURSE, 2.

2. The model of an instrument or legal proceeding; a formula.[2] See BLANKS.

Opposed to substance. That without which the right sufficiently appears to the court is "form." Whatever is wanting or imperfect, by reason whereof the right appears not, is a defect of substance.[3]

Matter of form is whatever relates, not to the purpose or object of an instrument, or to a right involved in, or affected by, it, but merely to the language or expression, without affecting the issue presented, the evidence requisite, the right of a party, or a step necessary in furtherance of legal proceedings.

Formal. Belonging or essential to the form or frame of a thing; not of the substance: as, a formal defect or irregularity, a formal party, q. v.; also, according to regular method of procedure. Opposed, substantial, real. See DEMURRER.

Form of action. The peculiar technical mode of framing the writ and pleadings appropriate to the particular injury which the action is intended to redress.[4]

Forms of action. The classes into which actions at law are divided. Distinguishable, by peculiarities in the writs and pleadings, at common law, as account, annuity, assumpsit, covenant, debt, detinue, ejectment, replevin, trespass on the case; in some juris-

[1] State v. Gavigan, 36 Kan. 326 (1887), Horton, C. J.

[2] United States v. Long, 30 F. R. 679 (1887).

[3] 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst., 2 ed., § 1341; 11 Gratt. 822.

[4] United States v. Howell, 11 Wall. 432, 437 (1870).

[5] State v. Wilson, 28 Minn. 54 (1881), Mitchell, J.; State v. Young, 46 N. H. 270 (1865); Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155 (1878), cases; State v. McKiernan, 17 Nev. 228 (1882), cases.

[6] United States v. Cameron, 3 Dak. T. 140 (1882).

[7] People v. Phillips, 70 Cal. 64–66 (1886), cases.

[1] 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst., 2 ed., § 1369, cases; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 754 (1876), cases; Frank v. Lanier, 91 N. Y. 116 (1883), cases.

See also 4 Wash. 726; 66 Ga. 53; 19 Iowa, 299; 29 id. 493, 495; 52 id. 68; 2 Me. 365; 50 id. 409; 3 Gray, 441; 114 Mass. 318; 16 Minn. 473; 46 N. H. 267; 1 Wend. 200; 9 id. 141; 17 id. 229; 91 N. Y. 113; 15 Ohio, 721; 1 Ohio St. 187; 2 Binn. 529; 3 Phila. 351; 32 Pa. 529; 89 id. 432; 37 Tex. 592; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 495, 2 Cr. Pr. § 398; 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 1022; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1418; 2 Arch. Cr. Pr. 797; 4 Cr. L. Mag. 545, 865.

[2] See Webster's Dict.

[3] [Heard v. Baskerville, 1 Hob. *233; 109 U. S. 274.

[4] Broom, Com. Law, 118 (m).

dictions are or have also been included, injunction, mandamus, scire facias.

In Kansas there is but one form of action, called a civil action. The plaintiff, for cause of action, states the actual facts, without common-law forms or fictions.[1]

In Pennsylvania, by an act approved May 25, 1887 (P. L. 271), the forms of action are assumpsit, to which the plea of the general issue is "non assumpsit," with the privilege of pleading payment, set off, and the statute of limitation; and trespass, in which the only plea is "not guilty."

Where the common law forms have been abolished, the principles governing them at common law are frequently invoked.

Where the formal distinctions between actions are abolished, the declaration states the facts which constitute the cause of action. . . When the facts are plainly and distinctly stated, the action will be regarded as either in tort or in contract; having regard, first, to the character of the remedy such facts indicate; and, second, to the most complete and ample redress which, upon the facts stated, the law can afford.[2] See ACTION, 2; CODE.

Form of the statute. The provision or enactment, the prohibition or direction, of a statute.

Against the form of the statute. A technical phrase used in an indictment for a statutory offense; the "conclusion against the statute."

"Against the form of the statute in such case made and provided" is the usual expression, but any equivalent expression will be sufficient — any phrase which shows that the offense charged is founded on some statute.[3]

Formality. Established order or method, rule of proceeding or expression. Opposed, informality.[4]

Compare REFORM; UNIFORM. See MANNER; SUBSTANCE; TECHNICAL.

FORMA. L. Form; formality; character.

Occurs in the phrases in forma pauperis, and pro forma, qq. v.

Formaliter. In form; formally.

FORMEDON. A writ which lay for a person who, being interested in an estate-tail, was liable to be defeated of his right by a discontinuance of the estate.

He claimed per formam doni. It was in the remainder, reverter, or descender. Abolished by 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1834), c. 27.[5]

[1] St. Louis, &c. R. Co. v. Chenault, 36 Kan. 55 (1886); Losch v. Pickett, ib. 222 (1887); Kansas, &c. R. Co. v. Rice, ib. 599 (1887): Civ. Code, § 10.

[2] New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Hurst, 36 Miss. 667 (1859); Gulf, &c. R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 548 (1883).

[3] United States v. Smith, 2 Mas. 150 (1820), Story, J.

[4] 16 S. & R. 118.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 193; 3 id. 191.

FORMER. See ACQUITTAL; ADJUDICATION; CONVICTION; RECOVERY.

FORNICATION.[1] Illicit carnal intercourse by an unmarried person with a person of the opposite sex.[2]

Sexual intercourse between a man, married or single, and an unmarried woman, as to the unmarried party.[3]

Illicit carnal connection is called by different names according to the circumstances which attend it. Unaccompanied with any facts which tend to aggravate it, it is "simple fornication." When it causes the birth of an illegitimate child, it is "fornication and bastardy." When the person who commits it is married, it is "adultery." When the parties are related within certain degrees of consanguinity or affinity, it becomes "incest." Where it is preceded by fraudulent arts (including a promise of marriage) to gain the consent of the female, who is under the age of consent, and of good repute, it is "seduction." But the body of all these offenses is the illicit intercourse; in each case, the essential fact which constitutes the crime is fornication. On an indictment for any offense, below the grade of felony, of which illicit connection forms an essential part, the defendant may be found guilty of fornication.[4]

In a few States, fornication is not punishable by statute.

To charge another with fornication is actionable per se.[5] See SLANDER.

See ADULTERY; BAD, 1; BAWD; MERETRICIOUS; POLYGAMY; PROSTITUTION, 2.

FORNIX. L. Fornication.

Originally, a vault, an arch, — a brothel.

Fornix et cætera. Fornication and the rest: fornication and bastardy, qq. v.

FORO. See FORUM.

FORSWEAR. To swear falsely.

Does not necessarily import perjury, q. v. One may swear to what is not true before an officer not qualified to administer an oath.[6]

FORT. Implies something more than a mere military camp, post, or station; a fortification or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, stockade, or parapet.[7] See LAND, Public.

FORTE ET DURE. See PEINE.

[1] From fornix, q. v.

[2] [Montana v. Whitcomb, 1 Monta. 362 (1871), Wade, Chief Justice.

[3] Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 271 (1877), Perkins, C. J. See also 3 Monta. 54; 51 Wis. 461; 4 Bl. Com. 65.

[4] Dinkey v. Commonwealth, 17 Pa. 129-30 (1851), Black, C. J.

[5] Page v. Merwin, 54 Conn. 434 (1886).

[6] See Heard, Libel & Sl. §§ 16, 34; 1 Johns. 505; 2 id. 10; 13 id. 48, 80; 12 Mass. 496; 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 368.

[7] United States v. Tichenor, 8 Saw. 153 (1882), Deady, J.; s. c. 12 F. R. 424.

FORTHCOMING. Describes a bond given to a sheriff, conditioned that property seized by him shall be produced or forthcoming when lawfully required.[1]

Also said of a person released on bail, q. v.

FORTHWITH. Has a relative meaning, and will imply a longer or a shorter period, according to the nature of the thing to be done.[2]

1. Immediately; without delay; directly.[3]

2. Within reasonable time; with convenient celerity; with reasonable diligence.[4]

With due diligence, under the circumstances.[5]

As soon as, by reasonable exertion confined to the object, an act may be done.[6]

In some matters of practice, within twenty-four hours.[7]

See IMMEDIATELY; INSTANTER; POSSIBLE; TIME, Reasonable.

FORTUITOUS. Resulting from chance, or unavoidable cause; casual; inevitable: as, a fortuitous collision or event.[8] See ACCIDENT.

FORTUNE-TELLING. See WITCHCRAFT.

FORTY DAYS. See QUARANTINE, 1.

FORUM. The place where court was held in cities of the Roman empire; the place where redress is to be sought; place of jurisdiction; jurisdiction; a judicial tribunal, q. v.; a court; the bar of a court.

From fero, to lead out of doors: what is outside; an outside space; a public place, a market place. Compare CURIA; LOCUS.

Foro. In the court of. Whence foro cœli, foro conscientiæ, etc.

Forum cœli. The court of heaven.

Forum conscientiæ. The bar of conscience, q. v.

Forum contractus. The court of the place where a contract is made.

Forum domesticum. The home tribunal.

Forum domicilii. The court of one's domicil, q. v.

Forum rei. 1. The court of the defendant — of the place where he resides.

2. The court of the thing — of the locality where a thing in controversy is or is found.

Forum rei gestæ. The court of the thing done — at the place of the transaction.

Forum rei sitæ. The court of the place where a thing is situated. See PLACE, 1; RES.

Forum seculare. A secular court.

FORWARDER. A person who receives and transports merchandise at his own expense of time and money, in consideration of a compensation paid him by the owner or consignee; and who has no concern in the means of transportation, nor any interest in the freight; a "forwarding merchant."[1]

He is a warehouseman and agent for a compensation to forward goods.[2]

An agreement "to forward" goods may still amount to a contract for carrying.[3] See CARRIER, Common.

FOSSIL. See MINERAL.

FOUND. See FIND; OFFICE; TROVER.

FOUR. Has no technical meaning.

Four corners. All parts; the whole.

Take by the four corners: construe an instrument as a whole.

Four seas. The waters surrounding England.

Within the four seas: within her territorial jurisdiction.

On all-fours. Said of cases precisely alike. See ALL-FOURS.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. See CITIZEN.

FOURTH OF JULY. See HOLIDAY.

FOWL. See ANIMAL; CRUELTY, 3; DAMAGE, Feasant; NUISANCE; TRESPASS; WORRY.

FOX HUNTING. See CRUELTY, 3.

FRACTION. See DAY.

FRAIS. F. Cost, price; expense.

Frais jusqu'a bord. Expenses to the board (vessel); free on board.

In an invoice of imported goods, excludes cartage and commissions paid to the shipping merchant who receives and places the goods on board ship for exportation. Such charges are not dutiable.[4] See FREE, On board.

FRANCE. See LAW, Civil; SALIC.

---

[1] See 61 Ga. 520; 11 Gratt. 522.

[2] Moffat v. Dickson, 3 Col. 314 (1877), Elbert, J.

[3] See Inman v. Western Ins. Co., 12 Wend. 460 (1834); Whitemore v. Smith, 50 Conn. 379 (1882); Hull v. Mallory, 56 Wis. 356 (1882); 22 E. C. L. 527; L. R., 4 Q. B. D. 471.

[4] See Burgess v. Boetefeur, 7 Mar. & G. *494 (1844); Bennett v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 277 (1876), cases; 44 Ohio St. 427.

[5] Edwards v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 75 Pa. 378 (1874).

[6] [3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 112.

[7] Champlin v. Champlin, 2 Edw. *329 (N. Y., 1834).

[8] See Story, Bailm. § 25.

[1] See Story, Bailm. § 502, cases.

[2] Bush v. Miller, 13 Barb. 488 (1852); Angell, Car. § 75.

[3] Blossom v. Griffin, 13 N. Y. 575 (1856).

[4] Bartels v. Redfield, 16 F. R. 337 (1883); ib. 841; Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 607 (1888).

FRANCHISE.[1] 1. A royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject.[2]

A special privilege conferred by government upon individuals, and which does not belong to citizens of the country generally, of common right.[3]

A generic term covering all rights granted to a corporation by the legislature. Whence "corporate franchises."[4]

A corporate franchise is a legal estate vested in the corporation as soon as it is in esse. Not a mere naked power, but a power coupled with an interest.[5]

A privilege conferred by the immediate or antecedent legislation of an act of incorporation, with conditions expressed or necessarily inferential from its language, as to the manner of its exercise and for its enjoyment.[6]

To ascertain how it is brought into existence, the whole charter must be consulted.[6]

Generalized, and divested of the special form which it assumes under a monarchical government based on feudal traditions, a franchise is a right, privilege or power of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their mere will and pleasure, but should be reserved for public control and administration, either by the government or directly, or by public agents, acting under such conditions and regulations as the government may impose in the public interest, and for the public security.[7]

Such rights and powers must exist under every form of society. They are always educed by the laws and customs of the community. Under our system, their existence and disposal are under the legislative department, and they cannot be assumed or exercised without legislative authority. Thus, no private person can establish a public highway, or a public ferry, or railroad, or charge tolls for the use of the same, or exercise the right of eminent domain or corporate capacity, without authority from the legislature, direct or derived.[1]

The word is used as synonymous with privilege and immunity of a personal character; but in law imports something which the citizen cannot enjoy without legislative grant. What members obtain in a religious, benevolent, or scientific association incorporated under general or special laws, is membership.[2]

A corporation is itself a franchise belonging to the members of the corporation, and the corporation, itself a franchise, may hold other franchises. The different powers of the corporation are franchises.[3]

The essential properties of corporate existence are quite distinct from the franchises of the corporation. The franchise of being a corporation belongs to the corporators, while the powers and privileges vested in, and to be exercised by, the corporate body as such, are the franchises of the corporation. The latter has no power to dispose of the franchise of its members, which may survive in the mere fact of corporate existence, after the corporation has parted with all its property and all its franchises. The franchise to be a corporation is not a subject of sale and transfer, unless made so by a statute, which provides a mode for exercising it.[4]

Often synonymous with rights, privileges, and immunities, though of a personal and temporary character; so that, if any one of these exists, it is loosely termed a "franchise." But the term must always be considered in connection with the corporation or property to which it is alleged to appertain. The franchises of a railroad corporation are the rights or privileges which are essential to the operations of the corporation, and without which its road and works would be of little value; such as the franchise to run cars, to take tolls, to appropriate earth for the bed of its road, or water for its engines, and the like. These are positive rights or privileges without the possession of which the road could not be successfully worked. But immunity from taxation is not a franchise.[5]

The franchises of a railroad company are in a large measure designed to be exercised for the public good, which exercise is the consideration for granting them. The company cannot, therefore, render itself incapable of performing its duties, or absolve itself from the obligation, without the consent of the State.[6]

A franchise is property and nothing more;[7] it is in-

[1] Frăn'-chĭz. F. franchise, privileged liberty: franc, free.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 37; 127 U. S. 40.

[3] Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 595 (1839), Taney, Chief Justice.

[4] Atlantic & Gulf R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 365 (1878), Strong, J.

[5] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 700 (1819), Story, J.; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. 606 (1867). See also 3 Kent, 458; 73 Ill. 547; 45 Mo. 20; 15 Johns. 387.

[6] Woods v. Lawrence County, 1 Black, 409 (1861), Wayne, J.

[7] California v. Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 40 (1888), Bradley, J.

[1] California v. Pacific R. Co., ante.

[2] Board of Trade v. People, 91 Ill. 82 (1878), cases, Scott, J.

[3] Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 507 (1856), Perley, C. J.

[4] Memphis R. Co. v. Commissioners, 112 U. S. 619 (1884), cases, Matthews, J.; Willamette Manuf. Co. v. Bank of British Columbia, 119 id. 191 (1886).

[5] Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 223 (1876), cases, Field, J.; East Tennessee, &c. R. Co. v. County of Hamblen, 102 U. S. 275-77 (1880), cases; State v. Maine Central R. Co., 66 Me. 512 (1877).

[6] Thomas v. West Jersey R Co., 101 U. S. 83-84 (1879), cases, Miller, J.; Baisley v. St. Louis, &c. R. Co., 119 Ill. 72-73 (1886).

[7] West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 534 (1848); 23 Cal. 422; 17 Conn. 40; 25 id. 30.

corporeal property. As such it is liable for debts and subject to the right of eminent domain.[1]

The ordinary franchise of a railway company is to condemn, take, and use lands for the purpose of a public highway, and to take tolls from those who use it as such. Land, in itself, is not a franchise. A franchise is an incorporeal hereditament; a liberty proceeding from the commonwealth.[2]

A grant of a corporate franchise by an act of legislation, accepted by the grantee, is a contract between the State and the grantee, the obligation of which a subsequent legislature cannot impair.[3]

Exclusive rights to public franchises are not favored; if granted they will be protected, but they are never presumed.[4]

A corporation cannot dispose of its franchises to another corporation without legislative authority.[5]

A grant of corporate franchises is necessarily subject to the condition that the privileges conferred shall not be abused, or be employed to defeat the ends for which they were conferred; and that when abused or misemployed, they may be withdrawn by proceedings consistent with law. . . A corporation is subject to such reasonable regulations as the legislature may from time to time prescribe, as to the general conduct of its affairs, serving only to secure the ends for which it was created, and not materially interfering with the privileges granted to it.[6]

See BONUS; GRANT, 3; MONOPOLY; RAILROAD; TAX, 2; TOLL, 2; WARRANTUM.

2. In a popular sense, the political rights of subjects and citizens are called franchises: as, the electoral franchise — the right of suffrage.[7]

The right of voting for a member to serve in parliament is called the "parliamentary franchise;" the right of voting for an alderman or town councilor, the "municipal franchise."[8]

Elective franchise. The right of choosing governmental agents.[9]

Enfranchise. 1. To make free of a city or state. 2. To invest with political freedom and capacity.

Disfranchise. To deprive of a franchise conferred; to suspend or withdraw the exercise of a corporate or political right or privilege.[1]

FRANK.[2] Free.

Frankalmoign. Tenure in consideration of religious services (alms).[3]

Frankpledge. Surety for general good behavior, anciently required of freeborn persons.

Franktenement. A freehold. See FEUD.

To frank. To send free.

Franking privilege. The liberty of sending postal matter through the mails free of charge.

Has existed, in theory, for the public good. The act of January 31, 1873, repealed former laws, from and after July 1, 1873.[4] The act of March 3, 1875, secs. 3, 5, 7, permits members of Congress, and certain executive officials, to send free, public documents (q. v.), acts of Congress, and seeds supplied by the commissioner of agriculture.[5] The acts of March 3, 1877, sec. 7, and of March 3, 1879, sec. 1, provide that the privilege shall be enjoyed until the first Monday of December following the expiration of the individual's term of office[6] — the fourth of March.

The privilege is also spoken of as the member's "frank."

FRATERNITY. See ASSOCIATION; COMMUNITY, 3.

FRATRICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

FRAUD.[7] Craft, cunning; cheating, imposition, circumvention.

An artifice to deceive or injure.[8]

An intention to deceive.[9]

Defraud. To cheat; to deceive; to deprive of a right by an act of fraud.

To withhold from another what is justly due him, or to deprive him of a right, by deception or artifice.[10]

Fraud, in the Roman civil law, meant any cunning, deception, or artifice, used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. This corresponds to "positive fraud" in modern law.[11]

---

[1] 2 Washb. R. P. 24; 1 Redf. Ry. §§ 1, 4, 10, cases.

[2] Shamokin Valley R. Co. v. Livermore, 47 Pa. 468 (1864), Agnew, J.

[3] Chincleclamonche Lumber, &c. Co. v. Commonwealth, 100 Pa. 444 (1882); The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51 (1865).

[4] Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 796 (1879).

[5] Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 484, 478 (1882).

[6] Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 574, 580 (1885), Harlan, J. See also 66 Cal. 106-7; 36 Conn. 266; 47 id. 602; 21 Ill. 69; 37 id. 547; 95 id. 575; 30 Kan. 657; 13 Bush, 185; 28 La. An. 493; 45 Md. 379; 15 N. Y. 170; 27 id. 619; 68 id. 555; 1 Oreg. 37; 39 Tex. 478; 77 Va. 212.

[7] Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 507 (1856), Perley, C. J.

[8] Mozley & Whiteley's Law Dict.

[9] See State v. Staten, 1 Coldw. 255 (1869).

[1] See People v. Medical Society, 24 Barb. 577-78 (1857).

[2] F. franc, free.

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 101; 2 Kent, 281.

[4] 17 St. L. 421.

[5] 1 Sup. R. S. 154.

[6] 1 Sup. R. S. 288, 454.

[7] From fraus, q. v.

[8] Byles, Bills, 133.

[9] Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 211 (1851), Catron, J. On definitions of, see 3 Law Quar. Rev. 419-28 (1887), cases.

[10] Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. 186 (1851); People v. Kelley, 35 id. 452 (1862).

[11] [1 Story, Eq. § 186. See 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 121.

The common law asserts as a general principle that there shall be no definition of fraud.[1]

The courts have never laid down as a general proposition what shall constitute fraud, or any rule, beyond which they will not go, lest other means of avoiding equity should be found.[2]

In the sense of a court of equity, fraud properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence, justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another.[3]

Consists in deception practiced, in order to induce another to part with property or surrender some legal right, and which accomplishes the end desired.[4]

Consists in the suppression of the truth — suppressio veri, or in the assertion of what is false — suggestio falsi.

No one can be permitted to say, in respect to his own statements upon a material matter, that he did not expect to be believed; and if they are knowingly false, and willfully made, the fact that they are material is proof of an attempted fraud, because their materiality, in the eye of the law, consists in their tendency to influence the conduct of the party who has an interest in them, and to whom they are addressed.[5]

Fraud is sometimes said to consist of "any kind of artifice employed by one person to deceive another." But the term admits of no positive definition, and cannot be controlled in its application by fixed rules. It is to be inferred or not, according to the special circumstances of every case.[6]

Actual, positive, moral fraud; fraud in fact. Fraud as a matter of fact, involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong. Implied, constructive, legal fraud; fraud in law. Fraud as a conclusion of law, and may exist without imputation of bad faith or immorality.[7]

When a party intentionally misrepresents a material fact, or produces a false impression, in order to mislead another, or to entrap or cheat him, or to obtain an undue advantage over him, there is a "positive fraud" in the truest sense. There is an evil act with an evil intent. And the misrepresentation may be as well by deeds or acts, as by words; by artifice to mislead, as well as by positive assertions.[8]

By "constructive frauds" are meant such acts or contracts, as, although not originating in any actual evil design, or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with positive fraud, and, therefore, are prohibited by law, as within the same reason and mischief, as acts and contracts done malo animo. The doctrine is founded in an anxious desire of the law to apply the principle of preventive justice, so as to shut out the inducements to perpetrate a wrong, rather than to rely on mere remedial justice, after a wrong has been committed.[1]

An "actual fraud" is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he must have known to be a positive fraud. "Constructive frauds" are acts, statements, or omissions which operate as virtual frauds on individuals, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design.[2]

A breach of duty is a constructive fraud.[3]

In the sense of bankrupt acts, "a debt fraudulently contracted by a person occupying a fiduciary relation" involves positive fraud, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong.[4]

Fraud in fact in the transfer of chattels consists in the intention to prevent creditors from recovering their just debts, by an act that withdraws the debtor's property from their reach. And an act that, though not fraudulently intended, yet has a tendency to defraud creditors, if it vests the property of the debtor in his grantee, is void for legal fraud. Legal fraud is tantamount to actual fraud. Actual fraud is for the jury; legal fraud, where the facts are undisputed or are ascertained, is for the court.[5]

Fraudulent. Infected with fraud, actual or legal; as, a fraudulent — bankruptcy, claim, concealment, conveyance or gift, possession, representation, qq. v. Compare VOID.

When an act charged in an indictment is fraudulent, it is not necessary to use the word "fraudulent" in the indictment itself.[6]

---

[1] 2 Pars. Contr. 769.

[2] [1 Story, Eq. § 186.

[3] [1 Story, Eq. § 187.

[4] Alexander v. Church, 53 Conn. 562 (1885), Park, C. J., quoting Cooley, Torts, 474; Judd v. Weber, 55 Conn. 377 (1887), Loomis J.

[5] Claflin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 95 (1884), Matthews, J.; 27 Me. 308; 7 Bing. 105; 56 N. H. 401; 58 id. 245; 3 B. & Ad. 114.

[6] Fenner v. Dickey, 1 Flip. 36 (1861), Wilson, J.

[7] [Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 709 (1877), Harlan, J.

[8] [1 Story, Eq. § 192. See also Ackerman v. Ackerman, 44 N. J. L. 175 (1882), Depue, J.; 29 Conn. 588, note.

[1] 1 Story, Eq. § 258. See People v. Kelly, 35 Barb. 457 (1862).

[2] Smith, Manual of Equity, 71.

[3] Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 502 (1879).

[4] Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 704 (1877); Hennequin v. Clews, 111 id. 676, 679-81 (1884), cases; Strang v. Bradner, 114 id. 559 (1885).

[5] McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356 (1870), Sharswood, J.; Hanson v. Eustace, 2 How. 688 (1844).

See generally Bigelow, Law of Fraud, 137, et seq., cases; Willink v. Vanderveer, 1 Barb. 607 (1847); Birchell v. Strauss, 28 id. 293 (1858); People v. Kelly, 35 id. 456 (1862); Vulcan Oil Co v. Simons, 6 Phila. 564 (1868); 2 Pomeroy, Eq. § 858; 2 Ala. 5 3; 5 id. 601; 7 Ark. 171; 6 Ga. 614; 47 id. 109; 27 Me. 308; 29 N. H. 354; 3 Den. 236.

[6] United States v. Caruthers, 15 F. R. 309 (1882).

Fraudulently. With a deliberately planned purpose and intent to deceive and thereby gain an unlawful advantage.[1]

The ordinary means of fraud are false representations and concealments. The more numerous is the implied or constructive class — which includes all frauds on public policy: agreements to influence testators, to facilitate or restrain marriages, in restraint of trade, for public offices, to suppress criminal proceedings, champertous and other corrupt considerations; all frauds by persons in confidential relations: as, by a guardian, adviser, minister of religion, attorney, doctor, agent, trustee, executor, administrator, debtor, creditor, surety; all frauds upon persons peculiarly liable to be imposed upon: as, bargains with expectant heirs, remaindermen, reversioners, common sailors; and all virtual frauds on individuals irrespective of any confidential relation or liability to imposition: as, forbidden practices at auctions, misuse of the Statute of Frauds, clandestine marriages, frauds on marital rights, frauds under 13 Eliz. c. 5, 96, fraudulent dealing with trustees, appointments, etc.[2]

The fraud must relate directly and distinctly to the contract, if a contract and must affect its very essence. If the fraud be such that had it not been practiced the contract would not have been made, the fraud is material. Whether it is or is not material, in a given case, is a question for a jury, possibly under instructions.[3]

The length of time that the intent to defraud precedes the act is not material, provided there is the relation of design and its consummation. Concealment by mere silence is not enough. There must be some trick or contrivance intended to exclude suspicion and prevent inquiry. There must be reasonable diligence; and the means of knowledge are the same thing in effect as knowledge itself. The circumstances of the discovery must be fully stated and proved, and the delay which had occurred shown to be consistent with the requisite diligence.[4]

Fraud binds the injured person, as a cause of action, only from the time of discovery.[5]

The bar of the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered. Where ignorance has been produced by affirmative acts of the guilty party in concealing the facts, the statute will not bar relief, provided that suit is brought within proper time after the discovery. Nor is relief barred where the party injured has remained in ignorance without fault or want of diligence on his part.[6]

The weight of authority is, that, in equity, where the injured person remains in ignorance of fraud without want of care on his part, the bar does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered, though there be no special circumstances or efforts in the guilty party to conceal knowledge. On the question as it arises in actions at law, there is a decided conflict of authority. Some courts make concealed fraud an exception on purely equitable principles. The English courts, and the courts of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and other States, hold that the doctrine is equally applicable to cases at law.[1] See LIMITATIONS, Statute of.

A court of equity has an undoubted jurisdiction to relieve against every species of fraud. 1. The fraud, which is dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition. 2. It may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself; such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other. 3. It may be presumed from the circumstances and condition of the parties contracting, — from weakness or necessity. 4. It may be inferred from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, as being an imposition and deceit on persons not parties to the agreement.[2]

There is no fraud in law without some moral delinquency; there is no actual legal fraud which is not also a moral fraud. This immoral element consists in the necessary guilty knowledge and consequent intent to deceive — sometimes designated by the technical term the "scienter." The very essence of the legal conception is the fraudulent intention flowing from the guilty knowledge. . . There may be actual fraud in equity without any feature or incident of moral culpability. A person making an untrue statement, without knowing or believing it to be untrue, and without any intent to deceive, may be chargeable with actual fraud in equity. . . Forms of fraudulent misrepresentations in equity are: 1. Where a party makes a statement which is untrue, and has at the time actual knowledge of its untruth. 2. Where he makes an untrue statement and has neither knowledge nor belief as to the truth. 3. Where he makes an untrue statement and has no knowledge of the truth, and there are no reasonable grounds for his believing it to be true. 4. But where he makes a statement of fact which is untrue, honestly believing it to be true, and this belief is based upon reasonable grounds which actually exist, there is no fraud. Yet, 5, in that case, if he afterward discovers the truth, and suffers the other party to continue in error, and to act upon the belief that no mistake has been made, this, from the time of discovery, becomes a fraudulent representation. 6. If a statement of fact actually untrue is made by a person who honestly believes it to be true, but under such circumstances that the duty of knowing the truth rests upon him, which, if fulfilled, would have prevented him from making the statement, such misrepresentation may be fraudulent in equity.[3]

[1] Bank of Montreal v. Thayer, 2 McCrary, 5 (1881), McCrary, Cir. J.

[2] See 1 Story, Eq. Ch. VI; Smith, Man. Eq. Ch. IV; 2 Pars. Contr. Ch. XII.

[3] 2 Pars. Contr. 770; Bishop, Contr. §§ 641, 652.

[4] Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 143, 140 (1879), cases, Swayne, J.

[5] Dresser v. Missouri, &c. R. Co., Construction Co., 96 U. S. 94–96 (1876), cases.

[6] Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 347–50 (1874), cases, Miller, J.: Fritschler v. Koehler, 83 Ky. 82 (1885).

[1] Tyler v. Angevine, 15 Blatch. 541–42 (1879), cases, Blatchford, J.

[2] Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sr. *155 (1750), Hardwicke, L. C. Same case, 1 L. C. Eq., 4 Am. ed., 773.

[3] 2 Pomeroy, Equity, §§ 884–89, cases.

Fraud avoids a contract ab initio — vitiates all contracts whether intended to operate against a party, a stranger, or the public generally. The guilty party cannot allege his own fraud in order to avoid his own act; and he may be liable in damages where real injury is done. The agreement cannot be adopted in part: all must be disaffirmed or none.[1]

Fraud is never presumed. The burden of proving it rests upon him who alleges it. It is a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances in each case.[2]

Allegations of fraud must be specific in time, place, persons, etc., so that the defendant may meet the charge, and the court see whether ordinary diligence to discover the fraud has been used.[3]

Being a term which the law applies to certain facts, where, upon the facts, the law adjudges fraud, it need not be expressly alleged.[4]

Gross negligence tends to show fraud.[5]

All avenues that facilitate the detection of fraud are to be kept open and free from bars and estoppels.[6]

The presence of fraud is a fact, the evidence of which must satisfy an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt.[7]

Circumstantial evidence is, in most cases, the only proof that can be adduced.[8]

While the common law affords reasonable protection against fraud in dealing, it does not go to the romantic length of giving indemnity against the consequences of indolence and folly, or of careless indifference to the ordinary and accessible means of knowledge.[9]

A court of equity will not grant relief when the complainant has a complete, effectual, direct, certain and adequate remedy in a court of common law.[10]

Statutes make many different acts frauds, and provide for punishment by criminal proceedings. Remedies available at law are: an action on the case in the nature of a writ of deceit for damages; and an action for money received, by which the tort is waived. Remedies in equity: rescission of the contract; specific performance; injunction; declaration of trust ex maleficio.[1] See those titles.

See particularly CAVEAT, Emptor; CONCEAL, 5; COVIN; DECEIT; EQUITY; ESTOPPEL; FORGERY; GUILTY; IDENTITY, 2; INFLUENCE; INNOCENCE; INSOLVENCY; MISTAKE; RATIFICATION; REFORM; REPRESENTATION, 1; RESCISSION; TRUST, 1.

Statute of Frauds. Statute of 29 Charles II (1678), c. 3 — "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries."

Its object was to prevent the facility to perpetrate frauds and the temptation to commit perjury, held out by the enforcement of obligations depending for their evidence upon the unassisted memory of witnesses, by requiring certain transfers of land and certain cases of contracts to be reduced to writing and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, or by their agents thereunto lawfully authorized in writing.

Its policy is to impose such requisites upon private transfers of property, as, without being hinderances to fair transactions, may be either totally inconsistent with dishonest practices, or tend to multiply the chances of detection.[2]

Every day's experience more fully demonstrates that the statute was founded in wisdom, and absolutely necessary to preserve the titles to real property from the chances, the uncertainty, and the fraud attending the admission of parol testimony. When courts of equity have relaxed the rigid requirements of the statute, it has always been for the purpose of hindering the statute, made to prevent frauds, from becoming the instrument of fraud.[3]

The substance of the statute has been re-enacted in the States; and other points, coming within its general policy, have been added.[4]

I. As applying to Realty. The statute enacts that all leases, estates, and interest in lands, made without writing signed by the parties or their agents lawfully authorized in writing, shall have the force and effect of estates at will only (sec. 1); except leases not exceeding three years from the making, which reserve at least two-thirds of the improved value of the land (sec. 2); and that no lease, estate, or interest shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered unless by writing signed by the assignor, grantor, etc., or his agent authorized in writing, except assignments, etc., by operation of law (sec. 3).[5] See under FRUCTUS.

II. As applying to Equity. Enacts that all declarations or creations of trusts of land shall be in writing signed by the declarant or creator (sec. 7), except trusts arising by construction of law, or transferred by act of law (sec. 8); that all grants or assignments of trusts

---

[1] Foreman v. Bigelow, 4 Cliff. 543-49 (1878), cases, Clifford, J. See also Feltz v. Walker, 49 Conn. 96 (1881), cases, Carpenter, J.

[2] Hager v. Thompson, 1 Black, 91 (1861); Humes v. Scruggs, 94 U. S. 28 (1876); 2 Pars. Cont. 784.

[3] See Stearns v. Page, 7 How. 829 (1849); Moore v. Greene, 19 id. 70 (1856); Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall. 95 (1864); Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 591 (1882).

[4] Stimson v. Helps, 9 Col. 36 (1885); Kerr, Fraud, &c. 866, cases.

[5] First Nat. Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 100 U. S. 702 (1879), cases.

[6] Pendleton v. Richey, 32 Pa. 63 (1858); 11 Wend. 117; 4 Kent, 269.

[7] Young v. Edwards, 72 Pa. 267 (1872).

[8] Rea v. Missouri, 17 Wall. 543 (1873); Craig v. Fowler, 59 Iowa, 208 (1882); Moore v. Ullman, 80 Va. 311 (1885), cases.

[9] 2 Kent, 484, cases; Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 622-24 (1886), cases.

[10] Green v. Spaulding, 76 Va. 411, 417 (1882); 1 Story, Eq § 33.

[1] See Pasley v. Freeman, 2 Sm. L. C. 92-113, cases.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 262; 2 Whart. Ev. § 853; 3 Pars Contr. 3.

[3] Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 517 (1866), Grier, J.

[4] Browne, Stat. Fr., Appendix.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 297; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 854-68, 883.

shall also be in writing, signed by the grantor or assignor (sec. 9); and that estates pur autre vie may be taken in execution for debt, or be deemed assets by descent for the payment of debts (sec. 10).[1]

III. As applying to Common Law. Enacts that no action shall be brought whereby: (1) To charge an executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer for damages out of his own estate.[2] (2) To charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. See PROMISE, Original; GUARANTY, 2. (3) To charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage. See SETTLEMENT, Marriage. (4) To charge any person upon any contract or sale of lands, or any interest in or concerning them. See LAND. (5) To charge any person upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof,— unless, in each case (1-5), the agreement or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith or by his agent thereunto lawfully authorized in writing (sec. 4).[3]

If the performance of the contract depends upon a contingency which may happen within a year, the contract need not be in writing. It is sufficient if the possibility of performance exists.[4]

(6) That in a contract for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, for the price of ten pounds or upward, the buyer must actually receive and accept part of the goods, etc., or give something in earnest or in part payment, or the parties, or their agents, sign some note or memorandum of the bargain (sec. 17).[5] See EARNEST; PAYMENT, Part.

(7) That judgments against lands shall bind purchasers from the day of signing, and against goods when the writ of execution is delivered to the sheriff (secs. 14, 15).

(8) Provides for additional solemnities in the execution of wills.[6] See WILL, 2, Statute of wills.

The provisions as to the transfer of interests in land, and to promises, which at common law could be effected by parol, that is, without writing, comprise all that in professional use is meant by the statute.

The theory is that the writing required in any case will secure an exact statement and the best evidence of the terms and conditions of a promise made.[7] See AGREEMENT; PAROL, Evidence.

See also PERFORMANCE, Part; VERBUM, Verba illata.

Statute of 9 Geo. IV (1829), c. 14, called Lord Tenterden's Act, enlarged the application of the Statute of Frauds, by rendering a written memorandum necessary in cases of a promise: to bar the Statute of Limitations; by an adult to pay a debt contracted during his infancy; as to a representation of ability in trade, upon the strength of which credit is to be given; and as to contracts for the sale of goods, not yet made or finished, amounting to ten pounds or upward.[1]

FRAUS. L. A cheating; deceit; imposition: fraud. Compare DOLUS.

Fraus est celare fraudem. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud. Concealment (q. v.) may amount to fraud.

Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in general expressions.

Pia fraus. Pious fraud: evasion of law to advance the interests of a religious institution. See MORTMAIN.

FREE. Not subject to restraint or control; having freedom of will; at liberty; also, that on which no charge is made. Compare FRANK.

1. Liberated from control of parent, guardian, or master; sui juris: said of a child, ward, apprentice.

2. Individual; exclusive; privileged; independent; opposed to common: said of a fishery, a warren, and formerly of a city or town, qq. v. See also MUNICIPIUM.

3. Clear of offense, guiltless, innocent; also, released from arrest, liberated: used of persons acquitted or released from imprisonment.

4. Open to all citizens alike: as, a free school, q. v.

5. Not arbitrary or despotic; assuring liberty; defending individual rights against encroachment by any person or class: as, a free government, free institutions.[2]

6. Certain; honorable; becoming a freeman; opposed to base: as, free-socage, q. v.

7. That for which no charge is made for use; opposed to toll: as, a free bridge, q. v.

Not gained by purchase: as, free admission, free passage.

Free on board. In a contract for the sale and delivery of goods "free on board" vessel, the seller is under no obligation to act until the buyer names the ship to which the delivery is to be made: until he knows that he could not put the articles on board.[3] Compare FRAIS.

8. Neutral: as in saying that "free ships make free goods."

Freely. Without constraint, coercion, or compulsion.[4] See DURESS; WILL, 1.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 337, 259; 2 Whart. Ev. § 903.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 466; 3 Pars. Contr. 19.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 159; 3 Pars. Contr. 19, 29, 31, 35; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 878-80; Mahan v. United States, 16 Wall. 146 (1872); Becker v. Mason, 30 Kan. 700-2 (1883), cases.

[4] Stowers v. Hollis, 83 Ky. 548-49 (1886), cases; Doyle v. Dixon, 97 Mass. 211 (1867): 93 Am. Dec. 85-90, cases.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 448; 3 Pars. Contr. 39; 2 Whart. Ev. § 869; 1 Law Q. Rev. 1-24 (1884); 37 Alb. L. J. 492 (1888).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 376, 500, 515; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 884-900.

[7] Browne, Stat. Fr. § 316.

[1] Smith, Contr. 95; Reed, St. Frauds.

[2] Webster's Dict.

[3] Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 508 (1888), cases.

[4] Dennis v. Tarpenny, 20 Barb. 374 (1855); Meriam v. Harsen, 2 Barb. Ch. 209 (1847).

Freedman. One made free; a manumitted slave. See CITIZEN, Amendments; LIBERTY, 1.

Freeman. One born or made free as to civil rights.

In the constitutions of Pennsylvania of 1776 and 1790, "freemen" described citizens who were capable of electing or being elected representatives of the people in the Provincial Council or General Assembly. The term with this meaning was brought by William Penn from England. A freeman is one in possession of the civil rights enjoyed by the people generally. This freedom of civil rights was termed his "free-law," and was liable to forfeiture for disloyalty and infamy. . . . The language of the amended constitution of 1838 was "white freeman." [1]

In those constitutions, referring to the right of suffrage, does not include females.[2]

Freehold. The possession of soil by a freeman. Such estate as requires actual possession of the land. Such estate in lands as is conveyed by livery of seisin, or, in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto; as, by receipt of rent.[3]

An estate in real property, of inheritance or for life; or, the term by which it is held.[4]

Any estate of inheritance or for life, in real property, whether it be a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament.[5]

Also, the land itself. See ABATEMENT, 1; WASTE, 1.

Freeholder. The actual owner of land.

He was originally a suitor of the courts, a juror, voted for members of parliament, and could defend his title to land.[6]

Such as holds a freehold estate, that is, lands or tenements, in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life.[7]

One who owns land in fee, or for life, or for some indeterminate period. The estate may be legal or equitable.[8]

One who has title to real estate, irrespective of the amount or value thereof.[9]

A freeholder whose estate is worth a specified sum, clear of incumbrances, is, by the law of some localities, privileged from arrest in civil actions; and he may not be required to furnish security for the performance of a legal obligation. See further ARREST, 2.

[1] McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. 115-18 (1868), Agnew, J.
[2] Burnham v. Luning, 9 Phila. 241 (1871).
[3] [2 Bl. Com. 104, 209.
[4] Gage v. Scales, 100 Ill. 221 (1881), Craig, C. J.
[5] 4 Kent, 24.
[6] 2 Bl. Com. 120.
[7] Bradford v. State, 15 Ind. 353 (1860): Jacob.
[8] State v. Ragland, 75 N. C. 13 (1876), Rodman, J.
[9] [People v. Scott, 8 Hun, 567 (1876), Talcott, J

Freehold estates are: 1. Of inheritance — (a) absolute, as tenancy in fee-simple; (b) limited: qualified or base, and conditional — later, fees-tail. 2. Not of inheritance. These are chattel interests in lands. They are for life, and either conventional or legal; the lowest species is the estate for the life of another.[1] See CONDITION; FEE, 1; FEUD; SHELLEY'S CASE.

FREIGHT. Merchandise transported or to be transported; also, compensation for that service.

In its widest sense, may include fare, for it is that "with which anything is fraught or laden for transportation;" and, by a figure of speech, the price paid for the transportation.[2]

The burden or loading of a ship, or the cargo which she has on board; likewise, the hire agreed upon between the owner or master of a vessel for the carriage of goods from one port or place to another.[3]

Goods carried; and the price to be paid for the carriage, or for the hire of a vessel under a charter-party or otherwise.[4]

Compensation for the carriage of goods.[5]

In policies of marine insurance, freight means the earnings or profit derived by the ship-owner or the hirer from the use of the ship himself, or from letting it to others, or from carrying goods for others. Does not include cargo or goods laden on board, which are insured under the term goods, cargo, merchandise, or word of like import; nor profit which the owner of the cargo expects to derive from the transportation.[6]

Affreightment. The contract for the use of a vessel.

Dead freight. Money paid or due for unoccupied capacity in a vessel.[7]

The amount of freight to be paid rests upon contract expressed in the charter-party or bill of lading, or else is implied in law — for a reasonable sum.[8]

In the absence of a different stipulation, freight is only payable when the merchandise is in readiness

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 120; 80 Va. 844.
[2] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Sly, 65 Pa. 211 (1870), Sharswood, J.
[3] [Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. 533 (1858), Wayne, J.
[4] [Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray, 112 (1857), Shaw, C. J. See also 1 Mas. 12; 3 id. 344; 1 Sprague, 219; 1 Ware, 188; 13 East, 325; L. R., 7 C. P. 348.
[5] Palmer v. Gracie, 4 Wash. 123 (1821).
[6] [Minturn v. Warren Ins. Co., 2 Allen, 91 (1861), Bigelow, C. J.
[7] See Gray v. Carr, L. R., 6 Q. B. *523 (1871); Phillips v. Rodie, 15 East, 264 (1812).
[8] Palmer v. Gracie, 4 Wash. 123 (1821).

to be delivered to the person having the right to receive it.[1]

Freight pro rata itineris not being earned where, from necessity, cargo is accepted before arrival at the port of destination, in a case of average, there can be no contribution on it.[2]

Freighter. He who loads a vessel, under a contract of hire or of affreightment.[3]

The ship-owners undertake that they will carry the goods to the place of destination, unless prevented by the dangers of the seas, or other unavoidable casualty; and the freighter undertakes that, if the goods be delivered at the place of destination, he will pay the stipulated freight. . . If the ship be disabled from completing her voyage, the owner may still entitle himself to the whole freight by forwarding the goods by some other means to their destination; but he has no right to any freight if they be not so forwarded, unless the forwarding be dispensed with, or there be a new bargain made. If the ship-owner will not forward them, the freighter is entitled to them without paying anything. The general property in the goods is in the freighter; the ship-owner has no right to withhold the possession from him, unless he has either earned his freight or is going on to earn it.[4]

See AVERAGE; CHARTER, 1, Party; COMMERCE; DISPATCH; FRAIS; INSURANCE, Marine; LADING, Bill of; RESTITUTIO; SEAWORTHY.

FRENCH. Law-French, which is used in old law-books and legal proceedings, exhibits many terms and idioms not employed in classic French.

Under William the Norman and his sons, all the public proceedings of the courts, including arguments and decisions, were expressed in Norman law-French. In the thirty-sixth year of Edward III (1363), it was enacted that all pleas should be shown, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, but be entered and enrolled in Latin, which, being a dead language, was immutable. However, the practitioners and reporters continued to take notes in the customary law-French. This law-French differs as much from modern French as the diction of Chaucer differs from the diction of Addison. English and Norman being concurrently used for several centuries, the two idioms assimilated and borrowed from each other.[5]

"The constitution of the aula regis, and the judges themselves, were fetched from Normandy; in consequence, proceedings in the king's courts were carried on in Norman."[6]

Norman-French, as employed about the courts, was often intermixed with scraps of Latin and pure English.[7] See LATIN.

[1] Brittain v. Barnaby, 21 How. 533 (1858).

[2] The Joseph Farwell, 31 F. R. 844 (1887).

[3] See 3 Kent, 173; 3 Johns. 105.

[4] Hunter v. Prinsep, 10 East, 394 (1808), Ellenborough, C. J. Approved, The Tornado, 108 U. S. 347, 349 (1883), Blatchford, J.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 317-18.]

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 416.

[7] 2 Hume, Hist. Eng. 115.

FREQUENT, v. A single visit to a place, or once passing through a street, cannot be said to be a "frequenting" that place or street.

May be used in contradistinction to "found," which applies to the case of a person apprehended in a building or inclosed ground, where the necessary inference would be that the purpose was unlawful, in which case it would be enough to show that the party was in the place only once.[1]

Webster's definition "visiting often, resorting to often or habitually," expresses the popular understanding. What amounts to "frequenting" a street must depend upon circumstances.[2]

FRESH. See SUIT, 1.

FRESHET. See ACT, 1, OF GOD; BED, 2; WATER-COURSE.

FRIDAY, GOOD. See HOLIDAY.

FRIEND. Compare AMI; AMICUS.

One favorably disposed to another person.

Friend of the court. A disinterested by-stander who furnishes information to the judge trying a cause, or to a court, on a matter of law or fact of which notice may be taken without proof. Usually, a member of the bar of the court. See AMICUS, Curiæ.

Next friend. One who acts for another who is not sui juris: a representative for the special office of carrying on a suit in court.

An infant sues by his "next friend," and defends by his guardian ad litem. Similarly, a married woman, who has an interest which conflicts with the interest of her husband, may sue him by her "next friend" — any acquaintance. The next friend may be held for the costs of unsuccessful litigation; and he may be required to file his authority to appear.[3]

FRIVOLOUS. Is applied to an answer, plea, or objection which upon its face is clearly insufficient in law, and apparently made for purposes of delay or to embarrass an adversary.

An answer is frivolous when it controverts no material allegation in the complaint, and presents no tenable defense;[4] when it sets up a matter which may be true in fact, but forms no defense. A sham or false answer may be good in form, but false in fact.[5] See SHAM.

To constitute a pleading frivolous, it must be ap-

[1] Clark v. The Queen, 14 Q. B. D. 98 (1884), Grove, J.; Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. IV (1825), c. 83.

[2] Ibid. 101-2, Hawkins, J.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 300; Herzberg v. Sachse, 60 Md. 433 (1883).

[4] Lefferts v. Snediker, 1 Abb. Pr. o. s. 42 (1854); Brown v. Jennison, 3 Sandf. L. 732 (1851); Lerdall v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 430 (1881); 7 id. 383.

[5] People v. McCumber, 18 N. Y. 321 (1858).

parent on mere inspection, without examination or research, that it is utterly invalid.[1]

When it needs argument to prove that an answer or demurrer is frivolous, it is not frivolous.[2]

A pleading seen to be frivolous, upon bare inspection, will be stricken off by the court.[3]

FROM. Compare AFTER; AT; TO.

1. Is taken inclusively according to the subject-matter; as, in a grant of power to construct a railroad "from" a place.[4]

"From" a street may mean from any part of the street; not, necessarily, from its inner or nearest line.[5]

"From the city" was held to mean from any point within the city.[6]

2. In computing time "from" a day, the rule is to exclude that day.[7] See DAY.

3. Descent "from" a parent means by act of the parent.[8] See DESCENT.

4. An indictment that charges stealing corn "in" the field may be fatally defective under a statute which makes stealing "from" a field a felony.[9]

FRUCTUS. L. Fruit, fruits; increase; profit.

Fructus industriales. Cultivated fruits. Fructus industriæ. Fruit of labor, or industry; emblements, the products of planting and cultivation. Fructus naturales. Nature's growths; natural fruits: increase by the unassisted powers of nature; as, the fruits of uncultivated trees, the young of animals, and wool.

Although the cases are not uniform, there is abundant authority for holding that crops, such as corn, wheat, rye, potatoes, and the like, called fructus industriales, are regarded as the representatives of the labor and expense bestowed upon them, and as chattels, while yet growing; and, hence, as such, go to the executor, may be seized upon execution as chattels, and be sold or bargained by parol; while growing grass and trees and the fruit on them, called fructus naturales, are a part of the soil of which they are the natural growth, descend with it to the heir, and, until severed, cannot be seized upon execution, and, under the statute of frauds, cannot be sold or conveyed by parol. But if the owner of the fee, by a conveyance in writing, sells these natural products of the earth, which grow spontaneously without cultivation, to be taken from the land, or sells the land reserving them to be cut and removed by himself, the law regards this action as equivalent to an actual severance.[1] See CROP; EMBLEMENTS; FRUIT.

Fructus legis. The fruit of the law — execution.

Fructus pendentes. Hanging fruits. Fructus stantes. Standing fruits; fruits united to the thing which produces them.

See USUS, Fructus.

FRUIT. Increase; profit; product; enjoyment.

Natural fruits. The natural product of trees, bushes, and other plants. Artificial fruits. Such things as interest on money, loaned or due.

Figurative expressions are: fruits of crime; that execution is the fruit of a judgment.

See FRUCTUS; EMBLEMENTS; LARCENY; PERISHABLE.

FUGITIVE. Used only in the sense of a "fugitive from justice:" a person who commits a crime within a State, and withdraws himself from its jurisdiction without waiting to abide the consequences of his act.[2]

Acts of limitation of criminal prosecution do not apply to persons "fleeing from justice."[3]

"Fleeing from justice" (act of 1790) is, leaving one's home or residence or known place of abode, with intent to avoid detection or punishment for some public offense against the United States. An offender may flee by secreting himself, or by not being usually and publicly known as being within the district.[4]

"A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice," etc., are the words of the Constitution relating to extradition of offenders.[5]

There must be an actual fleeing. "Who shall flee" does not include a person who was never in the place from which he is said to have fled.[6]

Defendant may plead either specially or generally; if specially, the government may reply "He fled," etc. Defendant may not demur.[7] See at length EXTRADITION.

---

[1] Cahoon v. Wisconsin R. Co., 10 Wis. *298 (1860), cases.

[2] Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. 559 (1876), Ryan, C. J.

[3] Taylor v. Nyce, 3 W. N. C. 433 (Pa., 1877).

[4] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343 (1875), cases.

[5] City of Pittsburgh v. Cluley, 74 Pa. 261 (1873).

[6] Appeal of West Penn. R. Co., 99 Pa. 161 (1881). See also 33 Me. 67; 52 id. 252; 7 Allen, 487; 7 Barb. 416; 9 Wend. 346; 3 Head, 596; 2 Mas. 137.

[7] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 190 (1864); Best v. Polk, 18 id. 119 (1873). See also 19 Conn. 376; 52 Ga. 244; 24 Ind. 194; 13 B. Mon. 460; 18 Me. 198; 9 N. H. 304; 24 Barb. 9; 9 Cranch, 104; 1 Gall. 248.

[8] Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. *91 (1829); Case v. Wildridge, 4 Ind. 54 (1853).

[9] State v. Shuler, 19 S. C. 140 (1883).

[1] Kimball v. Sattley, 55 Vt. 291 (1883), cases, Veazey, J.; ib. 540; 118 Mass. 125; 40 Md. 212.

[2] [Re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 150 (1867), Beasley, C. J.

[3] See Act of 1790, § 32: R. S. § 1043; Act of 1804, § 3: R. S. § 1046.

[4] United States v. O'Brian, 3 Dill. 383 (1874), Dillon, Cir. J.

[5] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[6] Jones v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 106 (1878). See also United States v. Smith, 4 Day, 128 (1809); United States v. White, 5 Cranch, C. C. 44 (1836).

[7] United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 168 (1872); United States v. Norton, 91 U. S. 566 (1875); 3 Crim. Law Mag. 787–810 (1882), cases on points of practice.

FULFILL. See PERFORM.

FULL. Not wanting in any essential quality; complete; entire; whole; perfect; adequate.

Full age. The age of twenty-one years; majority. See AGE.

Full blood. Whole blood. See BLOOD.

Full court. All the members of a court sitting together.

Full defense. A general defense. See DEFENSE, 2.

Full faith and credit. Entire confidence and efficacy. See further FAITH, Full.

Full price. A price which is fair or reasonable. See PRICE.

Full proof. Proof to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt. See PROOF.

Fully. See ADMINISTER, 4.

In full. 1. Completed, filled up, not blank; as, an indorsement (q. v.) which names the indorsee.

2. For all that is due, and not on account: as, a receipt in full, satisfaction in full, qq. v.

FUNCTUS. See OFFICIUM, Functus, etc.

FUND; FUNDS.[1] A deposit of resources; stock or capital; money invested for a specific object; revenue: as, the fund of a bank, or of a trust.[2]

"Funds," as employed in commercial transactions, usually signifies money.[3]

A "fund" is merely a name for a collection or an appropriation of money.[4]

While the restricted meaning of "funds" is cash on hand, the broader meaning includes property of every kind, when such property is specially contemplated as something to be used or applied in the payment of debts. Thus, for example, as employed in a statute, may comprehend all the resources of a corporation.[5]

Current funds. Current money; currency, q. v.

Funded debt. The term "fund" was originally applied to a portion of the national revenues set apart or pledged to the payment of a particular debt. And a "funded debt" was a debt for the payment of the principal or interest of which some fund was appropriated.[1]

Funding. Has been applied to the process of collecting together a variety of outstanding debts against corporations, the principal of which was payable at short periods, and borrowing money upon the bonds or stocks of the corporation to pay them off; the principal of such bonds or stocks being made payable at periods comparatively remote. The word is never used to describe an ordinary debt growing out of a transaction with an individual and represented by a single instrument.[1]

Fundholder. A person to whose custody money is committed, or into whose care trust funds come. Compare STAKEHOLDER.

No funds. No resources or assets, as when it is said that a trustee has "no funds;" also no money on deposit to one's credit, as when a draft drawn upon a bank is returned "no funds."

If a formal demand is made, during banking hours, by the holder of a note, at the bank where it is payable, and there are no funds, it is the duty of the bank to say that there are "no funds;" and there is then a breach of the contract on the part of the maker, and notice thereof would bind the indorsers. There is no necessity for a personal demand upon the maker elsewhere. But if no such demand is made, and the note is only sent or placed in the bank for collection, then the maker has till the close of business hours to make payment. Sending a note through the clearing-house is not a formal demand for immediate payment made during business hours, but is equivalent to leaving the note at the bank for collection from the maker on or before the close of banking hours.[2] See ASSIGNMENT, Equitable.

Public funds. The stock of a public debt; securities of government.[3]

Sinking fund. Money, arising from particular taxes or duties, appropriated toward the payment of the principal and interest of a public loan.[4]

See IDENTITY, 2; MARSHAL, 2.

FUNDAMENTAL. See CONSTITUTION.

Alterations in a charter which are not "fundamental," and are authorised by the legislature, may be effectually accepted by a majority of the stockholders — a majority per capita or of the shares voted, as the case may require. Alterations which actually

[1] F. fond, a merchant's stock: L. fundus, bottom. Whence "fundamental."

[2] See Webster's Dict.

[3] Galena Ins. Co. v. Kupfer, 28 Ill. 335 (1862). See 91 N. Y. 65; 24 N. J. E. 358.

[4] People v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 34 Barb. 135 (1861).

[5] Miller v. Bradish, 99 Iowa, 280 (1896), Seevers, J.

[1] Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 367, 379 (1865), Selden, J.

[2] Nat. Exchange Bank v. Nat. Bank of North America, 132 Mass. 148 (1882).

[3] See 1 Bl. Com. 331.

[4] See Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 367 (1865); Union Pacific R. Co. v. Buffalo County, 9 Neb. 453 (1880); Bank for Savings v. Mayor of New York, 102 N. Y. 313, 325 (1886).

change the nature and purposes of the corporation, or of the enterprise for the prosecution of which it was created, are "fundamental." [1]

FUNERAL. See BURIAL.

"Funeral expenses" may include the cost of carriage-hire, vault, and tombstone, besides the cost of shroud, coffin, grave, etc.[2]

But not, charges for dinner and horse-feed furnished to persons attending the funeral. See EXECUTOR.[3]

FURNITURE. That which furnishes, or with which anything is furnished or supplied. Whatever may be supplied to a house, a room, or the like, to make it habitable, convenient, or agreeable. Goods, vessels, utensils and other appendages, necessary or convenient for housekeeping. Whatever is added to the interior of a house or apartment for use or convenience.[4]

Relates, ordinarily, to movable personal chattels; but is very general, in meaning and application, and the meaning changes, so as to take the color of, or to accord with, the subject to which it is applied.[5]

Household furniture. Those vessels, utensils, or goods, which, not becoming fixtures, are designed, in their manufacture, originally and chiefly for use in the family, as instruments of the household and for conducting and managing household affairs. Does not include a trunk or a cabinet box.[6]

Embraces everything about a house that has been usually enjoyed therewith, including plate, linen, china, and pictures.[7]

A bequest of household furniture ordinarily comprises everything that contributes to the convenience of the householder or to the ornament of the house. Does not include the furniture of a school-room in a boarding-school.[8]

As used in a bequest, includes bronzes, statuary, and pictures placed in various parts of the house to render it more agreeable as a place of residence, if comporting with the testator's means and the general style of furnishing the house.[9] See CONTAINED; IMPLEMENTS.

Furniture of a ship. Includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy.[1] See APPURTENANCE.

FURS. See PERISHABLE.

FURTHER. Additional: as, further — assurance, compensation, proof, qq. v.; also, subsequent or later: as, a further hearing, q. v.

"Any further tax," used with relation to some other tax, must mean any additional tax besides that referred to, and not any further like tax.[2]

FUTURE. That which may or will be hereafter: as, future — advances, damage, earnings, estate, qq. v. See also DEVISE, Executory; EXPECTANCY; REMAINDER; SALE; TIME; USE, 2.

Futures. The expression "dealing in futures" has grown out of those purely speculative transactions in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none is ever intended or executed. The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or to pay the price. Instead, a percentage or "margin" is paid, which is increased or diminished as the market rates go up or down, and accounted for to the buyer. This is simply speculation and gambling; mere wagering on prices within a given time.[3]

"One person says: I will sell you cotton (for example) at a certain time in the future for a certain price. You agree to pay that price, knowing that he has no cotton to deliver at the time, but with the understanding that, when the time for delivery arrives, you are to pay him the difference between the market value of the cotton and the price you agreed to pay, if cotton declines, and, if it advances, he is to pay you the difference between what you promised to give and the advanced market price."[4]

There is no gambling unless both sides gamble; and from the intent or belief of one party it is not fair to presume a like intent or belief as to the other party.[5]

See further WAGER, 2.

---

[1] Mower v. Staples, 32 Minn. 286 (1884), cases, Berry, Judge.

[2] Donald v. McWhorter, 44 Miss. 29 (1870); Matter of Luckey, 4 Redf. 95 (1879); 14 S. & R. 64.

[3] Shaeffer v. Shaeffer, 54 Md. 633 (1880). See, in general, McClellan v. Filson, 44 Ohio St. 188–89 (1886), cases.

[4] Bell v. Golding, 27 Ind. 179 (1866), Ray, C. J. See also Crossman v. Baldwin, 49 Conn. 491 (1882).

[5] [Fore v. Hibbard, 68 Ala. 412 (1879), Manning, J.

[6] Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 350 (1856), Sawyer, J.

[7] Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. E. 96 (1886); M'Micken v. M'Micken University, 2 Am. Law Reg. 489 (1863); 2 Jarm. Wills, 862; 63 N. H. 295.

[8] Hoopes's Appeal, 60 Pa. 227 (1869), cases, Sharswood, J.

[9] Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 227 (1878), Colt, J. See also 33 Me. 535; 14 Mich. 506; 1 Johns. Ch. 399, 1 Robt. 21; 13 R. I. 20; 30 Vt. 224; 2 Munf. 234; 5 id. 272; 18 Wis. 163; 1 Ves. Sr. 97; 1 Jarman, Wills, 591, 596, note; 2 Williams, Ex. 1017.

[1] Weaver v. The S. G. Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 369, 359 (1849), Grier, J.

[2] Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. 147 (1845).

[3] King v. Quidnick Company, 14 R. I. 138 (1883), Stiness, J. See also Hatch v. Douglas, 48 Conn. 127 (1880), Carpenter, J.

[4] Cunningham v. Nat. Bank of Augusta, 71 Ga. 403 (1883), cases, Blanford, J.; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Watson, 30 F. R. 653 (1887).

[5] Bangs v. Hornick, 30 F. R. 98 (1887), cases. See generally Marshall v. Thurston, 3 Lea, 740 (1879), cases; Bartlett v. Smith, 13 F. R. 263 (1882); Irwin v. Millar, 110 U. S. 499, 508–11 (1884), cases; Kirkpatrick v. Adams, 20 F. R. 297, 298 (1884); Beadles v. McElrath, Sup. Ct. Ky. (1887): 3 S. W. Rep. 152, note.

G.

G. In a few words, originally beginning with u or w, prefixed to the form which comes through the French, as, in guard for ward; in law-French, equivalent to our w.

Whence, also, the doublets gage and wage, guaranty and warranty, guardian and ward, garnish and warn; also seen in warden, warren, and award.[1]

G. S. General statutes.

GAGE. See G; MORTGAGE.

GAIN. See BET; EARNINGS; INCOME; LUCRUM; PROFIT.

GALLON. The gallon of our commerce conforms to the old wine-measure of two hundred and thirty-one cubic inches.[2]

GALLOWS.[3] A beam laid over and fastened to one or two posts, from which a criminal, condemned to death, is suspended. See DEATH, Penalty.

GAMBLE. To play a game of chance or skill for stakes, or to bet on the result of the game; to game or play for money.

Gambler. One who follows or practices games of chance or skill with the expectation and purpose of thereby winning money or other property.[4]

Common gambler. Applied to a person who furnishes facilities for gambling,—one who, for gambling purposes, keeps or exhibits any gambling table, establishment, device or apparatus.[5]

Gambling. Anything which induces men to risk their money or property without other hope of return than to get for nothing a given amount from another person.[6]

Gambling device. An invention to determine who wins and who loses among those that risk their money on a contest or chance of any kind.[7]

Gambling house. Keeping a structure of any kind for purposes of gambling, is an indictable offense at common law.[1]

Gambling policy. A policy of life insurance issued to a person who has no pecuniary interest in the life insured.[2]

See further GAME, 2; HOUSE, 1.

GAME. 1. Wild animals pursued for amusement or profit. In its most comprehensive sense includes beasts, birds or fowl, and fishes.

Game laws. Statutes regulating the taking or killing of animals of a wild nature. Another designation is Game and Fish Laws. See FISH, 1.

Game laws are designed to preserve insectivorous birds, and the breeds of fowl and quadrupeds valuable to man for food and for sport. The details of these regulations must be sought for in the statutes of the several States.[3] See PROPERTY, Qualified.

In English law, a "chase" is the liberty of keeping beasts of chase or royal game in an uninclosed space, protected even from the owner of the land, with right to hunt them thereon. A "park" is an inclosed chase, extending over a man's own grounds. A "forest," in the hands of a subject, is the same as a chase. At common law, it was once unlawful to kill beasts of park or chase, except as to such persons as possessed one of these franchises.[4]

In 1831 the law was modified to enable any one to obtain a license to kill game, on the payment of a fee.[5]

See CRUELTY, 3; WARREN.

Game; games; gaming; gambling. A device or play the terms of which are that the winner shall receive something of value from the loser. The act of playing a game for stakes.

"Gaming," without the prefix "unlawful," seems usually to imply something of an unlawful nature, by betting on the sport. "Persons may play at a game which is not in itself unlawful, without gaming; but if money is staked it becomes gaming."[6]

"Gaming" is the risking of money, between two or more persons, on a contest or chance of any kind, where one must be the loser and the other the gainer.[7]

Implies something which in its nature de-

[1] See Ayers v. Findley, 1 Pa. 501 (1845), Gibson, C. J.; Webster's Dict.

[2] Duty on Ale, &c., 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 359 (1879); R. S. § 2504, Sch. D.

[3] Gāl'-lus. Mid. Eng. galwes, pl. of A. S. galga, cross, gibbet.

[4] Buckley v. O'Niel, 113 Mass. 193 (1873), Ames, J.

[5] People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 291–95 (1876), cases.

[6] Brua's Appeal, 55 Pa. 296 (1867), cases; Smith v. Bouvier, 70 id. 325 (1872); 14 Bush, 741; 49 Mich. 387; 78 E. C. L. 535.

[7] [Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 362 (1872); State v. Bryant, Mo. Sup. Ct. (1887): 2 S. W. Rep. 836; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1466.

[1] People v. Sponsler, ante; 2 Whart. Cr. Law, § 1466.

[2] Gambs v. Covenant Life Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 47 (1872).

[3] See 19 Kan. 127; 128 Mass. 410; 7 Mo. Ap. 553; 60 N. Y. 10; 95 U. S. 465; L. R. 2 C. P. 558.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 38, 416.

[5] See Appleton's New Am. Cyc. VIII; Wharton's Law Dict.

[6] Bishop, Stat. Crimes, § 960, quoting Campbell, C. J., in Regina v. Ashton, 16 E. L. & E. 346 (1882). See Ansley v. State, 36 Ark. 67 (1880); Re Lee Tong, 18 F. R. 253 (1883).

[7] Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 362 (1872), Bennett, J.

pends upon chance, or in which chance is an element.[1]

"Gaming" is an offense against the public police or economy. It tends to promote idleness, theft, and debauchery among those of the lower class; and among persons of a superior rank it has frequently been attended with the sudden ruin and desolation of families, and an abandoned prostitution of every principle of honor and virtue, and often has ended in self-murder itself.[2]

Playing at a game of chance for mere recreation is lawful.[3]

"Illegal gaming" implies gain and loss between the parties by betting, such as would excite a spirit of cupidity.[4]

A "game of chance" is such a game as is determined entirely or in part by lot or mere luck, and in which judgment, practice, skill, adroitness, and honesty have no office at all, or are thwarted by chance. In a "game of skill" nothing is left to chance.[5]

A "gaming table" is any table kept and used for playing games of chance. It need not be necessary to the game, nor made in any particular way.[6]

"Gaming" implies games. "To game" is to play at any sport or diversion; to play for a stake or prize; to use cards, dice, billiards, or any other instrument according to certain rules with a view to win money or any other thing waged upon the issue of the contest; to practice playing for money or any other stake; to gamble. "Game" embraces every contrivance or institution intended to furnish sport, recreation, or amusement. When a stake is laid upon the chances, the game becomes "gaming." "Games" become unlawful by being prohibited by statute.[7]

In common usage, "betting" and "gaming" are employed interchangeably; yet not always so. If two persons play at cards for money, they are said to be gambling or gaming. They are gambling because they lay a wager or make a bet on the result of the game. To say that they are betting is equally appropriate. If two persons lay a wager upon the result of a pending election, it will be said that they are betting, not gaming. There is no gaming in which the element of the wager is wanting, but there is betting which the term gaming does not commonly embrace. It is so common to apply gaming or gambling to any species of immoral betting that the precise meaning intended in a given case can be learned only from the connection. The terms are often applied to transactions which are illegal in the sense only of being immoral, but which involve the element of wager, as in the case of option contracts. But while such contracts are probably not gaming in the sense of any criminal law, there could be nothing to prevent their being legislated against under that head, when they are of the nature of gaming and embody its evils. . . Base-ball and horse-races are games, and any "pooling" scheme in betting thereon is gaming, and the place where the pools are sold is a pooling room or place.[1]

The means or device for either gaming or gambling may be — backgammon,[2] bagatelle,[3] billiards,[4] candy prize-packages,[5] cards,[6] cock-fighting,[7] dog-fights,[8] faro,[9] gift-enterprises[10] (q. v.), horse-racing,[11] keno,[12] loto,[13] poker or draw-poker,[14] pool,[15] raffle with dice,[16] rondo,[17] stocks,[18] tan, tantan,[19] ten-pins.[20]

A discharge will not be granted to an insolvent debtor who has spent property in gaming: his is fraudulent insolvency.[21] Property so acquired is an asset, which may not be spent in gaming; and the mode of acquisition cannot be inquired into.[22]

Money lost by gaming is not recoverable.[23]

Statutes which allow gaming are to be strictly construed.[24]

See BET; LICENSE, 3; LOTTERY; MORALS; OR, 2; POOLING-TABLE; SPECULATION; STAKEHOLDER; WAGER, 2.

GANANCIAL. "Ganancial property," in Spanish law, is the community of gains, acquisitions, profits, made during marriage out of the property of either husband or wife or of both.[25]

[1] Bew v. Harston, L. R., 3 Q. B. 456 (1878), Cockburn, C. J. See also Bell v. State, 5 Sneed, 509 (1858).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 171.

[3] 4 Chitty, Bl. Com. 171.

[4] People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 141 (1828).

[5] State v. Gupton, 8 Ired. L. 273 (1848), Ruffin, C. J.

[6] Toney v. State, 61 Ala. 3 (1878); Whitney v. State, 10 Tex. Ap. 377 (1881); Walz v. State, 33 Tex. 335 (1870).

[7] People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 203, 210 (1883), Cooley, J.

[1] People v. Weithoff, ante.

[2] 55 Ala. 198.

[3] 22 Gratt. 22.

[4] 22 Ala. 54; 49 id. 87; 40 Ill. 294; 15 Ind. 474; 50 id. 181; 60 id. 457; 75 id. 586; 39 Iowa, 42; 41 id. 550; 34 Miss. 606; 8 Cow. 139; 28 How. Pr. 247; 17 Ohio St. 32.

[5] 3 Heisk. 488.

[6] 36 Ark. 67.

[7] 8 Metc. 232; 11 id. 79; 1 Humph. 486; 4 Sneed, 614; 3 Keb. 465; 3 Camp. 140.

[8] 1 Carr. & P. 613.

[9] 4 Cranch, C. C. 707, 719; 5 id. 378, 390; 53 Cal. 246.

[10] 5 Sneed, 507; 3 Heisk. 488.

[11] 23 Ark. 726; 30 id. 426; 9 Col. 214; 4 Harr., Del., 554; 69 Ga. 609; 23 Ill. 493; 51 id. 184, 473; 9 Ind. 35; 1 Allen, 563; 51 Mich. 212; 18 Me. 337; 16 Minn. 299; 4 Mo. 536, 599; 31 id. 35; 1 N. M. 621; 13 Johns. 88; 8 Gratt. 593; L. R., 6 Q. B. 514, 130.

[12] 48 Ala. 122; 27 Ark. 355, 360; 7 La. An. 651.

[13] 1 Mo. 722.

[14] 2 Monta. 437; 32 Gratt. 884.

[15] 39 Mo. 420; 51 Mich. 203, 214; 120 Mass. 273; 8 Lea, 411; L. R., 6 Q. B. 514.

[16] 26 Ala. 155; 15 Ark. 71; 5 Rand. 652; 14 Gray, 26, 309; 21 Tex. 692.

[17] 15 Ark. 259.

[18] 70 Pa. 325.

[19] 70 Cal. 516; 18 F. R. 253.

[20] 29 Ala. 32; 32 N. J. L. 158; 11 Ired. L. 273. See generally 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1465; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749; 29 Me. 457; 8 Gray, 488; 38 N. H. 426.

[21] R. S. §§ 5132, 5110.

[22] Re Marshall, 1 Low. 462 (1870).

[23] 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 507.

[24] Alcardi v. Alabama, 19 Wall 639 (1873).

[25] Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 256, 265 (1855), Leonard, J.

"The right to gananicas is founded in the partnership which is supposed to exist between husband and wife, because, she bringing her fortune in dote, gift and paraphernalia, and he his in the estate and property which he possesses, it is directed that the gains, which result from the joint employment of this mass, be equally divided."[1]

That property which husband and wife, living together, acquire during matrimony by a common title, lucrative or onerous; or that acquired by either or both, by purchase or industry; also, the fruits of the separate property which each brings to the matrimony or acquires by lucrative title during the continuance of the partnership. The gain is common to both.[2]

GAOL. See JAIL.

GARDEN. See CURTILAGE; FIELD, 1; MESSUAGE.

GARDENING. See AGRICULTURE.

GARNISH.[3] 1. To warn, make aware, notify. 2. To attach property or a debt due or belonging to a defendant.

Garnishee. One warned by legal process in respect to the interest of a third party in property held by him.[4]

One in whose hands money or goods have been attached: he is "warned" not to pay the money nor to deliver the property to the defendant.[5]

The best reporters do not use garnishee as the verb.[6] The person warned is garnisheed; the fund or property is garnished.

Garnishment. The process of warning or citation.[4]

Originally, a notice to a person not a party to a suit, to appear in court and explain his interest in the subject-matter of the litigation or to furnish other information.

Now, the act or proceeding of attaching money or property belonging to a judgment debtor but in the possession of a third person. Otherwise known as "factorizing," "garnishee," or "trustee process."

In the nature of an equitable attachment of the debt or assets of the principal defendant in the hands of a third person. Its object is to reach such assets and apply them in discharge of the principal debt.[7]

The office of a garnishment is to apply the debt due by a third person to the defendant in a judgment to the extinguishment of that judgment, or to appropriate effects belonging to a defendant in the hands of a third person to its payment.[1]

There must be a debt due from the garnishee to the defendant in the judgment, payable at the time of the service of the writ, or to become payable. The debt must be at least a cause of action.[2]

The person warned becomes a mere stakeholder, with a right to such defense against the new claimant as he has against the judgment-debtor. The proceeding is substantially an attachment, q. v. It arrests the property in the hands of the garnishee, interferes with the owner's or creditor's control over it, subjects it to the judgment of the court, and thus operates as a seizure. It is effected by serving notice as directed by statute.[3]

GAS COMPANIES. See MONOPOLY; POLICE, 2.

GASOLINE. See OIL.

GATES. See WAY, Right of.

GAVELKIND.[4] A particular custom in vogue in Kent (though perhaps general till the Conquest) which ordained that all sons alike should succeed to their father's estate.

The estate was not subject to escheat for attainder; the tenant could alien by enfeoffment at fifteen, and could devise by will. It was a species of socage tenure modified by custom.[5]

GAZETTE. Originally, a piece of money current at Venice; next the price at which sheets of news were sold; then the sheets themselves.[6]

The official publication of the English government; also called the "London Gazette."

It is evidence of acts of state, and of all political acts performed by the Queen; orders of adjudication in bankruptcy are also published in it.

"When the defendant cannot be found to be served with a subpœna in chancery, a day for him to appear, being first appointed, is inserted in the Lon-

---

[1] [Cutter v. Waddingham, ante.

[2] [Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 634 (1857), Hemphill, C. J.

[3] F. garnir: A. S. warnian. See G.

[4] [Smith v. Miln, 1 Abb. Adm. 380 (1848), Betts, J.

[5] [Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. L. 348 (1834): 3 Jacob, 175; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pennock, 51 Pa. 254 (1865).

[6] 22 Alb. Law J. 181 (1880).

[7] Bethel v. Judge of Superior Court, 57 Mich. 381 (1885), Champlin, J.

[1] Strickland v. Maddox, 4 Ga. 394 (1848); Western R. Co. v. Thornton, 60 id. 306 (1878); Curry v. Woodward, 50 Ala. 260 (1873); Harris v. Miller, 71 id. 32 (1881); Rose v. Whaley, 14 La. An. 374 (1859); Schindler v. Smith, 18 id. 479 (1866); Perkins v. Guy, 2 Monta. 20 (1873); Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Gates, 10 Oreg. 515 (1882); Godding v. Pierce, 13 R. I. 533 (1882); Steen v. Norton, 45 Wis. 414 (1878); Bickle v. Chrisman, 76 Va. 691 (1882).

[2] Lane's Appeal, 105 Pa. 65 (1884).

[3] Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 297 (1870), Strong, J.; Schuler v. Israel, 120 id. 506 (1887); 24 Am. Law Reg. 625–34 (1885), cases. Inter-State exemptions, 21 Cent. Law J. 425–28 (1885), cases.

[4] "Gave all kinde,"—1 Coke, Litt. 140 a.

[5] See 1 Bl. Com. 75; 2 id. 84; Williams, R. P. 124–26.

[6] Trench, Glossary.

don Gazette. In default of appearance, the bill will be taken pro confesso." [1]

GENDER. See MAN.

In the Revised Statutes, and in acts and resolutions of Congress, passed subsequently to February 25, 1871, words imparting the masculine gender may be applied to females.[2]

GENEALOGY. See AFFINITY; CONSANGUINITY; PEDIGREE.

GENERAL. 1. Relating to a whole genus (q. v.) or kind, to a whole class or order; [3] whether of persons, relations, things, or places.

Opposed (1) to local, private, or special (see 6, below): as, general or a general — custom, jurisdiction, law, practice, restraint, statute, usage, qq. v.

Opposed (2) to partial: as, a general assignment, q. v.

Opposed (3) to particular: as, general average, a general challenge, a general lien, qq. v.

Opposed (4) to private or individual: as, a general ship, q. v.

Opposed (5) to specific: as, a general — intent, legacy, malice, qq. v.

Opposed (6), and chiefly, to special: as, general or a general — agent, appearance, appointment, charge, covenant, damage, demurrer, deposit, deputy, issue, executor, finding, guaranty, guardian, monition, occupant, order, owner, property, return, return-day, rule, session, sessions, tail, traverse, verdict, warranty, qq. v.

2. Belonging to, concerning, or affecting two or more persons or classes of persons, or persons in the same category; and opposed to individual: as, general — assets, creditors, meeting, partners, qq. v.

3. Common; obtaining among acquaintances or in the community at large: as, general — credit, reputation, qq. v.

4. Representing or pertaining to the public at large, whether constituting a State or the United States; State, or National: as, the general assembly, a general election, the general government, qq. v.

5. Over all others; chief, superior, head: as, in attorney-general, postmaster-general, solicitor-general. Contradistinguished from deputy, district, local, special.

6. Inclusive of many species or individuals; comprehensive; generic: as, a general — term, word, expression.

Maxims: general words are taken in their general sense; general expressions are restrained within the subject-matter; special provisions derogate from general provisions; a general clause does not extend to things included in a prior special clause.

Deceivers deal in general expressions; fraud lurks in general expressions; error attends upon general expressions.

"Where general words follow an enumeration of particular cases, such words apply only to cases of the same kind as those expressly mentioned." Thus, a land-warrant is not to be included in an act punishing forgery of "an indenture, certificate of public stock, or debt, treasury note, or other public security." [1] See NOSCITUR, A sociis.

The meaning of general words will be restricted to carry out the legislative intent.[2]

Where particular words, in a statute, are followed by words of a general character, the latter are to be restricted to the objects particularly mentioned. If the act begins with words which speak of things or persons of an inferior degree and concludes with general words, the latter are not to be extended to a thing or person of a higher degree. If a particular class is mentioned and general words follow, they must be treated as referring to matters of the same kind, thus subordinating general terms to the preceding particulars.[3]

"General words in any instrument or statute are strengthened by exceptions, and weakened by enumeration." [4]

See further EJUSDEM GENERIS; VIDERE, Videlicet.

GENERIC. See GENERAL; GENUS.

GENTLE. Imports that a horse is docile, tractable, and quiet; not, that he has received special training.[5]

GENTLEMAN. "One who bears court armor, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family." [6]

Originally, a man of gentle blood; now, a person of any rank from the upper to the lowest verge of the middle classes.[7]

A journeyman butcher may be described as a gentleman.[8]

On a jury list, as, "A. B., gent.," implies that the person has either no occupation or no occupation known to the officials who made out the list. See ADDITION, 2.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 445.

[2] R. S. § 1. See also Atchison, County Judge v. Lucas, 83 Ky. 464 (1885).

[3] Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 376 (1869).

[1] United States v. Irwin, 5 McLean, 183–84 (1851).

[2] Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. 165 (1871).

[3] Barbour v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 100 (1885), Holt, J.

[4] Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 161 (1853), Black, C. J.; 66 Wis. 395.

[5] Bodurtha v. Phelon, 3 Allen, 348 (1861).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 406: Coke, 2 Inst. 668.

[7] [Smith v. Cheese, 1 C. P. D. 61 (1875), Grove, J.

[8] Re European Bank, L. R., 7 Ch. Ap. 300 (1872).

GENUINE. Belonging to the original kind or stock; native; hence, not false, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit: as, a genuine note.[1]

Genuineness. Of an instrument — predicates that it is the act of the party as represented; that the signature is not spurious, that nothing has been added to or taken away from it that would lay the party changing the instrument or signing the name liable to forgery.[2]

See COUNTERFEIT; FALSE; FORGE, 2; SPURIOUS.

GENUS. L. Kind; class; nature.

Used in the phrases alieni generis, ejusdem generis, in genere, sui generis, qq. v. See also GENERAL.

GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES. See TRADE-MARK.

GESTÆ. See RES, Gestæ.

GIFT. See GIVE.

The gratuitous transfer of personalty.[3]

The transfer of property without consideration.[4]

The thing itself so transferred.

An immediate, voluntary and gratuitous transfer of his personal property by one to another, the transfer being executed by delivery.[5]

A word of the largest signification, applied to either realty or personalty.[6]

As a general rule, delivery is essential.[7]

A true and proper gift is always accompanied with delivery of possession — after which the gift is executed in the donee; and it is not in the donor's power to retract it, unless it be prejudicial to creditors, or the donor was under some legal incapacity, as, infancy, coverture, duress, or was imposed upon. If the gift does not take effect by immediate possession it is not properly a gift, but a contract.[8]

A gift may be to a charity not in existence. See CHARITY, 2.

To complete a gift of money in trust, it is not necessary that the beneficiary should be informed of the fact of the gift.[9]

Where the local law does not forbid, the United States government may take property by gift.[1]

A naked promise to give, without some act sufficient to pass title, is not a gift, — a locus pœnitentiæ exists.[2]

See ADVANCEMENT; DONATIO; DONUM; INFLUENCE; ONEROUS; POSSESSION; PRESENTS, 2; SERVICE, 3, Civil Service.

Gift enterprise. In common parlance, a scheme for the division or distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, among those who have taken shares in the scheme.[3] See GAME, 2.

2. At common law, also, the creation of an estate-tail.[4]

GIRARD WILL CASE. See CHARITY, 2; ORPHAN.

GIST.[5] The ground upon which a thing rests; the essence of an obligation or proposition.

The "gist of an action" is the cause for which an action will lie, — the ground or foundation of a suit, without which it would not be maintainable, — the essential ground or object of a suit, and without which there is not a cause of action.[6]

That without which there is no cause of action; comprehends, therefore, whatever is indispensable in law to a right of recovery. Hence, if anything of this kind be omitted, the defect is incurable.[7]

GIVE. 1. To transfer gratuitously, without an equivalent.[8] See GIFT.

2. To furnish or supply: as, to give liquor to a minor.[9]

3. To find, furnish, supply: as, to give bail or security.

4. To forbear to sue; to extend time: as, to give time to a debtor. See FORBEARANCE.

5. To admit an apparent right in another: as, to give color. See COLOR, 2.

---

[1] [Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 492 (1868).

[2] [Cox v. North Western Stage Co., 1 Idaho, 380 (1871), Whitson, J.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 441.

[4] Kehr v. Smith, 20 Wall. 34 (1873), Davis, J. See also Gray v. Barton, 55 N. Y. 72 (1873); Chadsey, Administrator v. Lewis, 6 Ill. 155 (1844); Hynson v. Terry, 1 Ark. 87 (1833). As to the difference, in a liquor law, between "gift" and "sale," see Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 194, 197 (1859); Holley v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 512 (1883).

[5] [Flanders v. Blandy, 45 Ohio St. 113 (1887), cases, Dickman, J.: 26 Am. Law Reg. 587-92 (1887), cases. In general, 19 Cent. Law J. 422-26 (1884), cases.

[6] See Allen v. White, 97 Mass. 507 (1867).

[7] Adams v. Adams, 21 Wall. 191 (1874).

[8] Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 137-43 (1878), cases.

[1] Dickson v. United States, 125 Mass. 313-16 (1878), cases; 52 N. Y. 530; 94 U. S. 315, 321.

[2] Pearson v. Pearson, 7 Johns. 26 (1810). Delivery, when not essential, 31 Alb. Law J. 426-29, 445-48 (1885), cases.

[3] Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17 (1881), Niblack, J; Act of Congress 13 July, 1866: 14 St. L. 120.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 315.

[5] Jist. O. F. gist, it lies: the point wherein the matter lies.

[6] First Nat. Bank of Flora v. Burkett, 101 Ill. 334 (1882), Walker, J. See also Re Murphy, 109 id. 33 (1884).

[7] Gould, Plead. 162: Ch. IV, § 12.

[8] See 1 Iowa, 282; 2 N. Y. 153; 33 Conn. 297; 2 Ala. 555, 23 Me. 219; 8 Cow. 38; 14 Wend. 38.

[9] Commonwealth v. Davis, 12 Bush, 240 (1876); Halley v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 512 (1883); Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 194 (1856).

6. To expound; to administer, apply: as, to give law.

7. To surrender voluntarily to an officer of the law: as, to give one's self up.

GLANDERS. See HEALTH, Boards of.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. See COSTS.

GO. The first word of a few idiomatic or technical expressions. See GOING.

Go bail. To become surety on a bail-bond, q. v.

Go to. 1. To be given to, to descend to.[1]

2. A circumstance which concerns or affects one's competency or credibility as a witness, or the jurisdiction of the court, is sometimes said to "go to" the competency, to the jurisdiction, to the question, etc.

"When mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions."[2]

"A demurrer may go to the form of the action, to a defect in pleading, or to the jurisdiction of the court."[3]

Go to prison. To be committed or sentenced to a jail, penitentiary, or other place of confinement for persons accused or convicted of a criminal offense. See PRISON.

Go to protest. Said of commercial paper which becomes protested for non-payment or non-acceptance: to become dishonored. See PROTEST, 2.

Go without day. For an acquitted person to be dismissed from court with no day set for reappearing — sine die; also, the record entry in such a case.

GOD. In the generally received sense, occurs in a few expressions:

Act of God. See ACT, 1, Of God.

God and my country. A prisoner, upon arraignment, answered (or answers) that he would be tried "By God and my country."

The practice arose when he elected a trial by ordeal or by a jury. The original form was, likely, By God or by my country: the answer was meant to assert innocence by a readiness to be tried by either mode.[4] See further ARRAIGN.

God's penny. Earnest-money; originally, a small coin given to the church or to the poor.

So help you God. See OATH.

See CHRISTIANITY; LAW, Divine; RELIGION.

[1] Irvin's Appeal, 106 Pa. 181 (1884).

[2] Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall. 736 (1864).

[3] Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 229 (1888).

[4] See 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 416; 4 Bl. Com. 323.

GOING. See CROP; GO; RATE, 1.

Going concern. A corporation which, although it may be insolvent, still continues to transact its ordinary business.[1]

Going witness. A witness who is about to go out of the jurisdiction of the court in which his testimony will be desired. See DEPOSITION.

GOLD. See COIN; MINE; MONEY; TENDER, 2.

GOOD. Generally speaking, preserves its popular, untechnical meanings. Compare BAD; BONUS.

1. Orderly, lawful: as, good behavior q. v.

2. Fair, honorable: as, good fame, or character, q. v.

3. Valid, valuable: as, a good consideration, q. v.

4. Legally sufficient: as, a good — count, deed, defense, ground, qq. v.

5. With lawful intent: as, good faith, q. v.

6. Genuine, not spurious; also, collectible: as, a good note.[2]

7. Responsible; able to pay a money obligation.

In this sense bondsmen, indorsers, partners, and wrong-doers are spoken of as "good."

In this sense, also, is "good" written upon the face of a check. See CHECK, Certified.

8. Welfare, prosperity, happiness: as, the public good; also whatever promotes the general welfare of society: as, good morals, "the greatest good." See MORALS; POLICE, 2; WELFARE.

GOOD FRIDAY. See HOLIDAY.

GOODS. Has a very extensive meaning.

In penal statutes, is limited to movables which have intrinsic value, and does not include securities, which merely represent value. In wills, when there is nothing to restrain its operation, includes all the personal estate.[3]

In a limited sense, articles of merchandise; not fixtures, nor chattels real; but may include animals.

In a merchant's store, refers to the merchandise and commodities kept for sale.[4]

[1] White, &c. Manuf. Co. v. Pettes Importing Co., 39 F. R. 865 (1887).

[2] See Polk v. Frash, 61 Ind. 206 (1878); Corbet v. Evans, 25 Pa. 310 (1855); 16 Barb. 342; 14 Wend. 231; 1 Cush. 473; 18 Pick. 321; 4 Metc. 48; 26 Vt. 406.

[3] Keyser v. School District, 35 N. H. 483 (1857), Perley, C. J.; United States v. Moulton, 5 Mas. 545 (1830), Story, J.; Jarman, Wills, 692; 44 N. Y. 310.

[4] Curtis v. Phillips, 5 Mich. 113 (1858).

Goods and chattels. Includes only personal property which is visible, tangible, and movable; not, a right of action;[1] nor, a thing real.

The expression is equivalent to goods, wares, and merchandise.[2]

The precise import depends upon the subject-matter and the context.[3] See CHATTEL.

Goods and merchandise. In the business of commerce, commodities bought and sold by merchants and traders.[4]

Goods, wares, and merchandise. In duty-laws, the word "merchandise" may include goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported.[5]

In the Statute of Frauds, the expression does not include fixtures, but does include growing crops. Promissory notes and shares in an unincorporated company, and even money, have been held to be within it;[6] also, cattle.[7]

The words of the Statute have never been extended beyond securities which are subjects of common sale and barter, and which have a visible and palpable form. They do not, therefore, include an interest in an unpatented invention.[8] See MERCHANDISE.

See BONA, 2; CONFUSION, 1; DISTRESS; DURESS; EXECUTION, 8; PERISHABLE; PROPERTY, Personal.

GOOD-WILL. Favorable reputation.

The probability that the old customers will resort to the old place.[9]

The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence, or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices.[1]

The benefit or advantage which accrues to the firm, in addition to the value of their property, derived from their reputation for promptness, fidelity and integrity in their transactions, from their mode of doing business, and other incidental circumstances, in consequence of which they acquire general patronage from constant and habitual customers.[2]

Every positive advantage that has been acquired by a proprietor, in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business.[3]

Good-will is a firm asset; whether it survives to a partner has not been uniformly decided; after a voluntary dissolution, each partner has a right to use the old firm name, unless otherwise agreed; it is the subject of sale like other personalty.[4]

GOSPELS. See BLASPHEMY; CHARITY, 2; CHRISTIANITY; INDIGENT; OATH, Corporal.

GOVERNMENT.[5] 1. The controlling power in society.[6]

The aggregate of authorities which rule a society.[7]

That form of fundamental rules by which the members of a body politic regulate their social action, and the administration of public affairs, according to established constitutions, laws, and usages.[8]

2. The state, the commonwealth, the people; as, in criminal practice.

3. In a commercial sense "governments" signifies securities of government, State or United States.

[1] Kirkland v. Brune, 31 Gratt. 131 (1878).

[2] Passaic Manuf. Co. v. Hoffman, 3 Daly, 512 (1871).

[3] Gibbs v. Usher, 1 Holmes, 351 (1874); Jarman, Wills, 731; Addison, Contr. 31, 201, 912.

[4] Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co., 45 Barb. 223 (1866): 44 N. Y. 310 (1871); The Marine City, 6 F. R. 415 (1881), cases. See also Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. 9, 13 (1838).

[5] R. S. § 2766. See The Elizabeth & Jane, 2 Mas. 407 (1822); 2 Sumn. 362; 4 Blatch. 136.

[6] 2 Pars. Cont. 330-32; 2 Kent, 510, note; Benj. Sales, § 111.

[7] Weston v. McDowell, 20 Mich. 357 (1870).

[8] Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 285 (1875), Gray, C. J.; 1 Woolw. 217; 3 Daly, 512; 6 Wend. 355; 40 Ind. 593; 55 Iowa, 520; 2 Bl. Com. 387.

[9] Crultwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. *346 (1810), Eldon, Ld. C.; Bradford v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 252 (1869); Chittenden v. Witbeck, 50 Mich. 420 (1883); Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co., 54 id. 222 (1884); 128 U. S. 522.

[1] Story, Partnership, § 99. See also 33 Cal. 624; 65 Ga. 14; 1 Mo. Ap. 601; 44 N. H. 343; 70 N. Y. 473; 36 Ohio St. 522; 60 Pa. 121; 19 How. Pr. 26.

[2] [Angier v. Webber, 14 Allen, 215 (1867), Bigelow, C. J.; Munsey v. Butterfield, 133 Mass. 494 (1882).

[3] Glen & Hall Manuf. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 230 (1874), Dwight, C.

[4] See Barber v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 15 F. R. 312, 315-22 (1883), cases; 14 Am. Law Reg. 1-11, 329-41, 649-59, 713-25 (1885), cases; 13 Cent. Law J. 162-65 (1881), cases; 19 id. 362-68 (1884), cases; 19 Alb. Law J. 502-3 (1879), Eng. cases; 3 Kent, 64; 1 Pars. Cont. 153; 62 Pa. 81; 5 Ves. 539; 15 id. 218, 227.

[5] O. F. govener: L. gubernare, to steer a ship, to rule. Whence "ship of state."

[6] 1 Sharswood, Bl. Com. 48.

[7] Francis Lieber: 1 Bouv. 715.

[8] Winspear v. Township of Holman, 37 Iowa, 544 (1873): Young, Science Gov., p. 13.

The government of a state being the most prominent feature, or that most readily perceived, "government" is frequently used for "state." Similarly, government is also used for "administration."[1]

The object of government is to secure to the governed the right to pursue their own happiness; that is, the happiness of the individuals who compose the mass. In this consists civil liberty.[2] See HAPPINESS; LIBERTY, 1, Civil.

Government is formed by depriving all persons of a portion of their natural rights. The rights they enjoy under government are not conferred by it, but are those of which they have not been deprived. It is only by a deprivation of all persons of a portion of their rights that it is possible to form and maintain government. . . Its organization means a surrender by each of a portion and the control of his reserved rights, and the power of the government to control all persons in the exercise of these reserved rights must be conceded. Salus populi suprema lex. In the maintenance of the government and the general welfare, individual rights, whether of natural persons or corporate bodies, must yield to the public good, and the General Assembly is invested with the sole power of determining under what restraints all persons, whether natural or artificial, shall pursue their various vocations, unless restricted by constitutional limitation.[3]

Government is a moral relation, necessarily resulting from the nature of man. . . The wants and fears of individuals in society tend to government. Blackstone supposes that sovereignty resides in the hands of the law-makers. Our idea is that government is a mere agency established by the people for the exercise of those powers which reside in them. The powers of government are, in strictness, delegated powers, and, as such, trust powers, capable of revocation. A written constitution is but the letter of attorney.[4] See COMPACT, Social.

Government is an abstract entity. It speaks and acts through agents; these hold offices under law, constitutional or statutory, with prescribed duties and limited authority.[5]

The theory of our government is that all public stations are trusts, and that those clothed with them are to be animated in the discharge of their duties solely by considerations of right, justice, and the public good. The correlative duty resting upon the citizen is to exhibit truth, frankness, and integrity.[6]

Constitutional government. Applies to a state whose fundamental rules and maxims not only define how those shall be chosen or designated to whom the exercise of sovereign powers shall be confided, but also impose efficient restraints on the exercise for the purpose of protecting individual rights and privileges, and shielding them against any assumption of arbitrary power.[1] See CONSTITUTION.

Government de facto. A government that unlawfully gets possession and control of the rightful legal government, and maintains itself there, by force and arms, against the will of the rightful government, and claims to exercise the powers thereof. Government de jure. The rightful, legal government.[2]

A government de facto, in firm possession of any country, is clothed with the same rights, powers, and duties as a government de jure. . . In all cases where the United States have been called upon to recognize the government or independence of any other country, they have looked only to the "fact," and not to the right.[3]

A government de facto is (1) such as exists after it has expelled the regularly constituted authorities from the seat of power and the public offices, and set its own functionaries in their places, so as to represent in fact the sovereignty of the nation; or (2) such as exists where a portion of the inhabitants of a country have separated themselves from the parent state and established an independent government. As far as other nations are concerned, the former is treated in most respects as possessing rightful authority; its contracts and duties are enforced; its acquisitions are retained; its legislation is in general recognized; and the rights acquired under it are, with few exceptions, respected after the restoration of the authorities which were expelled. The validity of the acts of the latter depends entirely upon its ultimate success. If it fails to establish itself permanently, all such acts perish with it; if it succeeds and becomes recognized, its acts are upheld as those of an independent nation.

The late Confederate government was distinguished from each of those. It was simply the military representative of the insurrection against the authority of the United States. When its military forces were overthrown, it perished, and with it all enactments and other acts. Legislative acts of the several States, so far as they did not tend to impair Federal supremacy, or the rights of citizens under the Constitution, are valid and binding.[4] See MONEY, Lawful; OATH, Of office.

Local government; municipal government. See CORPORATION, Municipal.

[1] Francis Lieber: 1 Bouv. 715.

[2] 1 Sharswood, Bl. Com. 128, 127.

[3] Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 102 Ill. 569 (1882), Walker, J.

[4] 1 Sharswood, Bl. Com. 48–49. See also Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 290 (1885).

[5] The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 676 (1868), Miller, J.

[6] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 450 (1874), Swayne, J.; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 820 (1879).

[1] Calhoun, Works, I, II; Cooley, Principles Const. Law, 22.

[2] Chisholm v. Coleman, 43 Ala. 213 (1869), Peck, C. J.

[3] Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S. 133 (1875), Swayne, J.

[4] Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 185 (1877), Field, J. See also Thornington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 8–9 (1868), Chase, C. J.; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S. 616, 610 (1878), cases, Clifford, J.; Fifield v. Ins. Co. of Pennsylvania, 47 Pa. 170–88 (1884).

Federal, General, National, United States Government; States governments. In the United States, powers of government are of four classes: (1) Those which belong exclusively to the States. (2) Those which belong exclusively to the National Government. (3) Those which may be exercised concurrently and independently by both. (4) Those which may be exercised by the States, but only until Congress shall see fit to act upon the subject.[1]

When the government of the United States was formed, some of the attributes of State sovereignty were partially, and others wholly, surrendered and vested in the United States.[2] The special powers delegated to it are principally such as concern the foreign relations of the country, the rights of war and peace, the regulation of foreign and domestic commerce, and other subjects of general importance.[3] Its peculiar duty is to protect one part of the country from encroachments by another upon the national rights which belong to all.[4] Its authority extends over the whole territory of the Union; it acts upon the States and the people of the States. It is, so far as its sovereignty extends, supreme. No State can exclude it from exercising its powers, obstruct its authorized officers against its will, or withhold cognizance of any subject which the Constitution has committed to it,—otherwise it would cease to exist.[5] Congress may make all laws necessary (q. v.) and proper for carrying into execution the powers delegated to it.[6] The powers not delegated, nor prohibited to the States, in the Constitution, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.[6] Every addition to its power is a corresponding diminution of the powers of the States.[7] The rights of each sovereignty are to be equally respected. Both are essential to the preservation of our liberties and the perpetuity of our institutions.[8] See CONSTITUTION.

The departments of government are the legislative, which deals mainly with the future; the executive, which deals with the present; and the judicial, which is retrospective, dealing with acts done or threatened, promises made, and injuries suffered.[9]

The theory of government, State and National, is opposed to the deposit of unlimited power anywhere.[1] The Constitution reposes unlimited power in no department of the National government. The lines of separation are to be closely followed to avoid encroachment.[2] A co-ordinate branch will be decided to have transcended its powers only when that is so plain that the duty cannot be avoided.[3] See DEPARTMENT.

The power of governing being a trust committed by the people to the government, no part of the power can be granted away, as, the power to tax. The several agencies can govern according to their discretion, but cannot give away or sell the discretion of their successors.[4]

Republican form of government. See REPUBLIC, Republican, etc.

See further ALLEGIANCE; ANARCHY; APPRAISER; CITIZEN; COURT; DOMAIN; ELECTION, 1; FAITH, Full, etc.; FRANCHISE; GIFT, 1; INDEPENDENCE; INDIAN; JUDICIARY; JURISDICTION; KING; LACHES; LAW, Common; LEGISLATION; LIBERTY, 1; LIMITATIONS, Statute of; MAGNA CHARTA; MAY; MINISTER, 3; OFFICE; PEOPLE; POLICE, 2; POLICY, 1; PRIVILEGE, 1; RELIGION; REVENUE; SEDITION; SERVICE, 3; SOVEREIGNTY; STATE, 3; SUIT; TAX, 2; TORT; TREASON.

GOVERNOR. See GOVERNMENT; VETO.

GOWN. 1. That worn by the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States has always been a long robe of black silk.

A portrait of the first chief justice, John Jay, represents him in a borrowed robe, with broad scarlet facings and collar and sleeves of the same color. This gave rise to the tradition that the justices wore red gowns in the early days of the court.

In the higher tribunals of the States, scarlet gowns were worn, in some instances, as late as 1815.[5]

2. In England, the silk gown is the professional robe worn by those barristers who have been appointed of the number of her Majesty's counsel, and is the distinctive badge of Queen's counsel, as the stuff gown is of the juniors who have not obtained that dignity.

Accordingly, when a barrister is raised to the degree of Queen's counsel, he is said to "get a silk gown." The right to confer this dignity resides with the Lord Chancellor, who disposes of this branch of his patronage according to the talents, the practice, the seniority, and the general merits of the junior counsel.[6]

"The rules as to the robes worn by British judges have been transmitted orally. Scarlet is the color for the judges sitting in banc on the first day of the term; also in banc on such days as appear with red letters in

[1] Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 568 (1873), Swayne, J.; 100 U. S. 386, 390.

[2] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 549 (1875); Tennessee v. Davis, 100 id. 263 (1879); Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. 456 (1871).

[3] 1 Sharswood, Bl. Com. 49.

[4] Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. 10 (1877).

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 18.

[6] Constitution, Amd. Art. X.

[7] Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 346 (1879).

[8] Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 394 (1879).

[9] See Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 46 (1825); 21 Am. Law Rev. 399–417 (1887), cases; 1 Law Quar. Rev. 80–99 (1885); 4 R. I. 324; 11 Pa. 489; 29 Mich. 451; 58 N. H. 453.

[1] Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 663 (1874).

[2] Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 190 (1880).

[3] Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 96 (1879).

[4] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 820 (1879).

[5] See The Century, Dec. 1882.

[6] See 5 Alb. Law J 225 (1872); Jeaffreson, Courts & Lawyers, 180; Brown, Law Dict.

the calendar. On circuit, at the opening of the commission, scarlet robes are worn by both judges, should two be present. After the commission is opened, the judge who sits in the crown court and tries prisoners continues to wear scarlet until all the prisoners are dealt with. He is hence termed by criminals 'the red-gown judge.' The judge who tries nisi prius cases removes his scarlet, puts on black, and is called 'the black-gown judge.' The scarlet robes worn in winter in town, and on circuit, whether in summer or winter, are trimmed with ermine, but in town in summer these robes are trimmed with gray silk. When on circuit, the senior or 'red-gown judge' sits in the crown court at the first town in the circuit, while the junior judge takes nisi prius cases, but at the next place 'the red gown judge' becomes 'the black-gown judge,' and so they alternate throughout the circuit. On ordinary days the judges sitting in banc wear dark blue or purple robes, which in winter are trimmed with ermine, and in summer with bronze silk."

GRACE. Favor, indulgence, toleration; opposed to right, strict right: as, that a thing done in court is allowed as a matter of grace.

Act of grace. An act of pardon or amnesty, qq. v.

Days of grace. Certain days, in addition to the time specified in a bill or note, in which payment may be made, before it can be lawfully protested.

In common speech this period is termed "grace;" as in saying that "grace" is or is not allowed on a particular instrument.

Originally allowed by the custom of merchants as a matter of favor or indulgence. This custom received the sanction of the courts, and so grew into law. The statute of 3 and 4 Anne (1705), which made promissory notes negotiable, also conferred this right to days of grace. That statute has been generally adopted in our States.

In the absence of an express contract to the contrary, the allowance now enters into every bill or note of a mercantile character, and forms a part of it, so that the paper, in fact and in law, is usually due on the last day of grace.

Demand is made on the last day, and interest is charged on all the days. If the last day is Sunday or a legal holiday, the paper is due the preceding day.

Checks are not entitled to the favor; nor are sight drafts, nor judgment notes.[1]

The number of days varies from three to thirty. Three is the limit in the United States; except in Vermont, where, it seems, no grace at all is allowed. In Louisiana, an inland bill or note is due without grace for purposes of set-off. In New York, bills on bank corporations are not entitled to the favor.

In Great Britain and Ireland, Berlin, and Vienna, the number of days is three; in Frankfort-on-the-main, four; in Sweden, six; in Bremen, and Denmark, eight; in Hamburg, twelve; in Spain, fourteen on foreign bills. No grace is recognized in Amsterdam, Antwerp, France, Genoa, Germany (generally, since 1871), Leghorn, Leipsic, or Naples.[1]

The law of the place of payment is regarded. He who claims the benefit of a foreign law or usage must prove the existence of the law.[2] See PLACE, Of payment; MATURITY, 2.

Grace widow. A widow by grace, by decree of a court; a wife living apart from her husband; a grass widow.

GRADE. 1, v. To reduce to a certain degree of ascent or descent.

The power to grade a street is co-extensive with the duty.[3] See OVER, 1; PAVE.

2, n. Degree, order, rank. See DEGREE.

Grades of crime. These are higher or lower according to the measure of punishment, and the consequences resulting to the convicted party.[4]

Grade and rank. Navy officers are classified — 1, according to duty, office, or title; 2, according to relative importance or honor; 3, according to compensation. All of these classes come within the normal meaning of the words "grade or rank." The law designates some of them as grades or ranks by name, others only by description.[5] See RANK; TITLE, 5.

GRADUATE. In the universities, a student who has honorably passed through the prescribed course of study and received a certificate to that effect.

A cadet-engineer who has successfully completed his academic course, passed the closing examination, and received from the Academic Board a certificate to that effect, has hitherto been called a "graduate." The act of August 5, 1882 (22 St. L. 285), did not make such graduates "naval cadets."[6] See CADET; TITLE, 5; ALCOHOL.

GRAFT. In equity, describes the right in a creditor, who holds a mortgage upon property to which the mortgagor had an imperfect title, to a lien upon the premises, after the debtor has acquired a good title.[7]

GRAIN. See CROP.

Includes or may include: flax-seed,[8] millet and sugar-cane seed,[9] oats,[10] peas.[11]

[1] See Byles, Bills, 209, 210; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. *31-35 (1828), cases, Marshall, C. J.; Cookendorfer v. Preston, 4 How 326 (1846); Bell v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 115 U. S. 379-83 (1885), cases.

[1] See Byles, Bills, 205; Chitty, Bills, 11 ed. (1878); Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 550 (1882).

[2] See Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 216, 247.

[3] Smith v. Washington City, 20 How. 148 (1857).

[4] People v. Rawson, 61 Barb. 631 (1872).

[5] Rutherford v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 343 (1883); McClure v. United States, ib. 347 (1883).

[6] Leopold v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 546, 557 (1883), Schofield, J.

[7] See La. Civ. Code, art. 3271; 9 Mass. *36.

[8] Hewitt v. Watertown Ins. Co., 55 Iowa, 294 (1880).

[9] Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 457 (1866).

[10] Smith v. Clayton, 29 N. J. L. 361 (1863).

[11] State v. Williams, 2 Strob. L. 477 (S. C., 1848). See Park. Ins. 112; 1 Marsh. Ins. 223, n.

"Corn" in the text of Blackstone's commentaries means grain.[1] "Corn-laws" regulated trade in breadstuffs.

In this country, in statutes of modern date, corn means Indian corn, maize;[2] and either shelled or in the ear.[3]

See also AGRICULTURE; EMBLEMENTS; PERISHABLE; PROVISIONS; SEED.

GRAMMAR. False grammar (syntax) alone never invalidates written instruments: falsa, or mala, grammatica non vitiat chartam.[4]

See BLANK, 2; PUNCTUATION.

GRAND. Great; greatest; chief; advanced in rank; opposed to common, petit or petty, q. v.

As, in grand jury or inquest, grand larceny; and, also, as in grandchild and grandparent, qq. v.

GRANGER CASES. See Munn v. Illinois, CHARTER, 2, Private; POLICY, 1, Public.[5]

GRANT. 1. At common law, the method of transferring the property of incorporeal hereditaments, or such things whereof no livery can be had.[6]

An incorporeal hereditament was said to lie in grant; and a corporeal hereditament, in livery. A grant differed little from a feoffment (q. v.), except in the subject-matter; the same words were used.[6]

2. A generic term applicable to all transfers of realty.[7]

Any conveyance of realty.[8]

"Hereby granted" imports an immediate transfer of interest.[9]

To constitute a grant, it is not indispensable that technical words be used; any words that manifest the same intention will suffice.[10]

Statute of 8 and 9 Vict. (1845) c. 106, made all corporeal rights, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold, to be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 10, 152, 156, 218; 4 id. 159.

[2] Kerrick v. Van Dusen, 32 Minn. 318 (1884); Commonwealth v. Pine, 2 Pa. Law J. R. 412 (1844); Sullins v. State, 53 Ala. 475 (1875); Wood v. State, 18 Fla. 969 (1882); 46 Tex. 402.

[3] State v. Nipper, 95 N. C. 655 (1886).

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 379; State v. Shaw, 59 N. H. 74 (1877); 112 U. S. 216; 63 Iowa, 65; 70 Pa. 237; 80 Va. 599; 1 Whart. Cr. 199; Broom, Max. 535.

[5] See also 19 F. R. 698.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 317; Williams, R. P. 147; 5 Mass. 471; 16 N. Y. 75; 1 Black, 358.

[7] 3 Washb. R. P. 181, 358, 378; Durant v. Ritchie, 4 Mas. 69 (1825).

[8] McVey v. Green Bay R. Co., 42 Wis. 535-36 (1877); Lambert v. Smith, 9 Oreg. 198 (1881).

[9] Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 496, 500 (1887).

[10] East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 33 N. J. E. 252 (1880); Barksdale v. Hairston, 81 Va. 765 (1886), cases.

Grant and demise. In a lease for years, create an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment.[1] See DEMISE.

Grant, bargain, and sell. In a deed, do not import a general covenant of seisin or against incumbrances, but a covenant that the grantor has done nothing whereby the estate granted may be defeated,— for quiet enjoyment, at least.[2]

They imply a covenant against incumbrances, including taxes.[3] See COVENANT, Implied; SUFFER.

A grant of personalty is termed an assignment or a bill of sale. See ASSIGNMENT, 2; GIFT, 1; SALE, Bill of; TITLE, 1.

3. Any concession by the public, being evidenced by an enactment or record; in particular, a transfer of public land, or the creation of a franchise by charter, or of a monopoly by letters patent, or of an exclusive privilege by certificate of copyright.

Described as a legislative, government, official, public, State, or United States grant.

Grantor. He who makes a grant.

Grantee. 1. He to whom a grant is made.

2. One who has transferred to him, in writing, the exclusive right, under a patent, to make and use, and to grant to others to make and use, the thing patented, within and throughout some specified portion of the United States.[4] See ASSIGNEE; LICENSEE.

The king's grants are matter of public record. Whether of lands, honors, liberties, franchises, or aught besides, they are contained in charters, or letters patent. . . The manner of granting by him does not differ from that by a subject more than the construction of his grants, when made. (1) A grant by the king, at the suit of the grantee, shall be taken most beneficially for the king; whereas the grant of a subject is construed most strongly against the grantor. (2) A subject's grant shall be construed to include many things, besides what are expressed, if necessary for the operation of the grant. Therefore, in a private grant of the profits of land for one year, free ingress, egress, and regress, to cut and carry away those profits, are inclusively granted. But the king's grant shall not enure to any other intent than that which is previously expressed in the grant. (3) When it appears, from the face of the grant, that the king is mistaken or deceived in a matter of fact or of law, or if his own title be different from what he supposes, or if the

[1] Scott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 109 (1875), cases.

[2] 4 Kent, 460; 2 Ala. 535; 5 id. 586; 12 id. 159; 7 Ill. 148; 19 id. 235; 21 id. 220; 50 Pa. 480.

[3] Blossom v. Van Court, 34 Mo. 390 (1864). See further 4 Oreg. 235; 1 Conn. 79; 1 T. B. Mon. 30; 32 Me. 339; 8 Barb. 463; 5 Tenn. 124; 25 Cal. 175; 32 Ill. 348; 60 Mo. 138; Rawle, Cov. Tit. 481-97, cases.

[4] Act 4 July, 1836, §§ 13, 14; Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatch. 211 (1858).

grant be informal, or if he grants an estate contrary to the rules of law,— the grant is absolutely void.[1]

By a grant everything passes which is necessary to the full enjoyment of the right, title, or estate which is included in the words. A grant of a mere way carries an easement only — the ownership of the soil not being essential to the free use of the right. But a grant of an estate designated only by the particular use for which the land is appropriated will pass the fee; as, a grant of "a house," "a wharf," "a mill," "a well," "a barn," and the like.[2]

With respect to "public grants," the rule is, that rights, privileges, and immunities not expressly granted are reserved. Nothing can be presumed against the State. There would be no safety to public interests in any other rule. The rule applies with special force where the claim would abridge or restrain a power of government, as, the power of taxation.[3]

Where a statute operates as a grant of public property to an individual, or the relinquishment of a public interest, and there is a doubt as to the meaning of its terms, or as to its general purpose, that construction should be adopted which will support the claim of the government rather than that of the individual. Nothing can be inferred against the State. Such acts are usually drawn by interested parties; and they are presumed to claim all they are entitled to. The rule serves to defeat any purpose concealed by the skillful use of terms, to accomplish something not apparent upon the face of the act, and thus sanctions only open dealing with legislative bodies.[4]

A more liberal rule of construction is allowable in interpreting a grant from one State or political community to another, than is permitted in interpreting a private grant.[5]

Where power or jurisdiction is delegated to any public officer or tribunal, and its exercise is confided to his or their discretion, acts done are binding as to the subject-matter; and individual rights will not be disturbed collaterally for anything so done. The only questions which can arise between an individual claiming a right under the acts and the public, or a person denying its validity, are power in the officer and fraud in the party. All other questions are settled by the decision made by the tribunal or officer, whether executive, legislative, judicial, or special, unless an appeal is provided for, or other revision, by some appellate or supervisory tribunal, is prescribed. In no case have documents of title, executed by officers of the government, been held sufficient where the fact in issue was whether the government had any title to convey, to establish the fact in dispute, as against parties claiming a pre-existing, adverse, and paramount title themselves.[1]

No one can grant what he does not own.[2] See DARE, Nemo, etc.

See CHARTER, 2; CONDITION; DEED, 2; DELIVERY; DISCLAIMER, 2; DISPARAGEMENT, 2; INCIDENT; LAND, Public; PATENT 1 (1), 2.

4. To confer, bestow, allow, permit, award, issue: as, to grant a rule to show cause, letters testamentary or of administration, a writ of certiorari, habeas corpus, or mandamus.

GRASS. See CROP.

GRASS WIDOW. See GRACE.

GRATIA. See E, 2; GRACE.

GRATIS. See DICTUM, Gratis.

GRATUITOUS CONTRACT or SERVICE. See CONSIDERATION, 2; DEPOSIT, 1; SUBSCRIBE, 2.

GRATUITY. See BONUS, 2; BOUNTY; CHARITY, 2; DEPOSIT, 1; TRUST, 1.

GRAVAMEN. L. Burden, weight.

That part of a charge which weighs most heavily against the accused; the essence of an accusation.

The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of an action.[3]

GRAVE. See BURIAL; SEPULCHRE.

GREAT. See CARE; CHARTER, 1; SEAL, 1. Compare GRAND; GROSS; MAGNUS.

Greater. Larger; superior; chief; principal.

The greater includes the less.

The greater power of making wholly new legislation includes the lesser power of altering old legislation.[4]

The withdrawal or extinguishment of the greater carries the less; thus, the withdrawal or extinguishment of a franchise authorizes the withdrawal or extinguishment of every right which is a part of the franchise.[5]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 346-48, 121, 380.

[2] Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 164 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.; Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray, 110 (1856), cases; United States v. Appleton, 1 Sumn. 500 (1833); Bank of British North America v. Miller, 7 Saw. 163 (1881), cases; Green Bay, &c. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 66 Wis. 464-65 (1886); Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 1, 11 (1887), cases; 26 Am. Law Reg. 722-26 (1887), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 446 (1884)— Solic. Journ.

[3] The Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 225 (1873), Field, J. See also Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 id. 62 (1874); Heydenfeldt v. Daney Gold, &c. Co., 93 U. S. 638 (1876); Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 id. 371 (1882), cases; Ruggles v. Illinois, 108 id. 531 (1883), cases Hannibal, &c. R. Co. v. Missouri River Packet Co., 125 id. 271 (1888), cases; Swann v. Jenkins, 82 Ala. 492 (1886); Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Co., 30 F. R. 828 (1887), cases. Limitation on legislative grants, 26 Am. Law Reg. 65-71 (1887), cases.

[4] Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 437 (1884), Field, J.

[5] Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 205 (1882), Gresham, J.

[1] Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 280 (1888), cases, Matthews, J., quoting United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. *727 (1832), cases.

[2] 23 How. 175; 1 Wall. 254; 11 id. 459; 94 U. S. 389; 95 id. 10; 34 La. An. 791.

[3] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 66.

[4] Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 384 (1879).

[5] Atlantic & Gulf R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 365 (1878); 54 Ga. 401; Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 478 (1882); 21 Wall. 175; 111 U. S. 270.

Upon indictment for a particular crime, the accused may be convicted of a less offense included in the crime charged. But at common law, under an indictment for felony, there cannot be conviction for a misdemeanor.[1] See ACQUITTAL, Former.

See MAJOR, In se; MERGER.

GREEN. See BAG.

GREENBACK. A popular name applied exclusively to United States treasury notes.

When an indictment charges larceny of treasury notes, the proof may be that the notes were "greenbacks."[2]

Originally, a nick-name or slang word, derived from the color of the engraving on the back of the currency. The fact that the word, from its convenience, has come into common use, does not make it of itself a proper designation in an indictment.[3] See TENDER, Legal.

GRETNA-GREEN. A "Gretna-Green marriage" was a marriage solemnized in Scotland by parties who went there to avoid the delay and formalities required in England.

Gretna-Green, being the nearest place across the boundary line, was the more generally resorted to. Statute of 19 and 20 Vict. (1856), c. 96, requires that at least one of the parties shall have his or her usual place of residence in Scotland, or shall have lived there twenty-one days preceding the marriage.[4]

In the United States, the term describes marriages celebrated between residents of a State who go to a place beyond and yet near to the boundary line of an adjoining State, on account of some advantage afforded by the law of that State.

GRIEVOUS. See ASSAULT; INJURY.

GROCERIES. See PROVISIONS.

Whether wines and liquors are groceries is a question of fact.[5]

Shovels, pails, baskets, and the like, are not, although usually kept in a country grocery store.[6] See FAMILY, Use.

GROSS. Great, large; entire, undiminished, whole; general; extreme. See ENGROSS.

Gross average. General average upon ship, cargo, and freight. See AVERAGE.

Gross earnings. The whole amount of earnings received. See EARNINGS; PROFIT, Net.

Gross neglect or negligence. Extreme want of care; the absence of ordinary or reasonable care and skill. See CARE; NEGLIGENCE.

Gross receipts. All receipts had, undiminished by expenses or other deductions. Compare EARNINGS, Gross.

In gross. 1. In the entirety; as, a sale in gross, q. v.

2. Independent of; not annexed to another: as, a common, a power, a right in gross. See COMMON, 2; EASEMENT, Appendant; POWER, 2.

GROUND. 1. Land; soil; earth. See LAND.

May include an improved town lot.[1]

Ground-rent. A rent reserved as the consideration of a conveyance of land in fee-simple.

Ground-landlord. The grantor of such an estate.

Rent payable to the grantee, who erects and leases houses upon the land, is called the "builder's rent." See further, RENT, Ground-rent.

2. "Good ground" to believe or to act means simply good cause.[2]

Ground of action. The foundation, basis, or data, upon which a cause of action rests.

GROWING. See CROP.

GRUDGE. See MALICE; PREJUDICE.

GUARANTEE.[3] 1, v. (1) To engage to do a thing; to assure, stipulate, or covenant solemnly.

"The United States shall guarantee to every State . . a Republican (q. v.) Form of Government."[4]

(2) To engage that another will do as he has promised.

2, n. The person with whom such engagement is made.

Guarantor. He from whom the engagement proceeds.

To guarantee may be equivalent to to promise.[5]

Guaranteed. Warranted, preferred: as, guaranteed stock.[6] See STOCK, 3 (2).

Guaranty. (1) Solemn assurance, covenant, or stipulation that something shall be

[1] Hunter v. Commonwealth, 79 Pa. 505 (1875), cases.

[2] Hickey v. State, 23 Ind. 23 (1864), Davison, J.

[3] Wesley v. State, 61 Ala. 287 (1878), Manning J. See Grant v. State, 55 id. 209 (1876).

[4] See 2 Steph. Com. 259, note; Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. 193 (1861).

[5] Niagara Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 135 (1863).

[6] Fletcher v. Powers, 131 Mass. 335 (1881).

[1] Ferree v. School District, 76 Pa. 379 (1874).

[2] Supervisors v. Pabst, 64 Wis. 244 (1885).

[3] F. garantir, to warrant, lit., to guard, keep. See G.

[4] Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 4.

[5] Thayer v. Wild, 107 Mass. 452 (1871); McNaughton v. Conklings, 9 Wis. *320 (1859).

[6] Taft v. Hartford, &c. R. Co., 8 R. I. 333 (1866).

or be done: as, the guaranties in the Constitution and Amendments thereto.

Guaranty clause. Specifically, section four of article four of the Constitution, guaranteeing a republican form of government to each State. See GUARANTEE, 1.

(2) Distinctively, a promise "to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage" of another person.

This by the statute of frauds (q. v.) must be in writing and be signed by the guarantor.

The contract by which one person is bound to another, for the fulfillment of the promise or engagement of a third party.[1]

Usually, a collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it.[2]

An undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him.[3]

May also mean security or lien; as, in an agreement that lumber should be held as guaranty for the payment of a debt.[4]

An engagement to pay in default of solvency in the debtor, provided due diligence be used to obtain payment from him. A contract of "suretyship" is a direct liability to the creditor for the act to be performed by the debtor; whereas a "guaranty" is a liability only for his ability to perform this act. A "surety" assumes to perform the contract for the principal debtor if he should not; a "guarantor" undertakes that his principal can perform, that he is able to perform. The undertaking of a "surety" is immediate and direct, that the act shall be done, and, if not done, then he is to be responsible at once; but from the nature of the undertaking of a "guarantor," nonability (insolvency) must be shown.[5]

A "guarantor" insures the solvency of the debtor; a "surety" insures the debt itself. A surety must demand proceedings, with notice that he will not continue bound unless they are instituted; whereas a guarantor may rely upon the obligation of the creditor to use due diligence to secure satisfaction of his claim.[6]

To enable a creditor to enforce a contract of guaranty, he must exercise "due diligence" to enforce payment from the principal. That is, the creditor must bring suit within a reasonable time after the maturity of the claim, and duly prosecute the same to judgment and execution, unless it appears that such proceedings can produce no beneficial results.[1]

Absolute guaranty; conditional guaranty. A guaranty that a note is collectible is a conditional promise binding upon the guarantor only in case of diligence. To perfect the obligation so as to render him liable thereon, the guarantee must use diligence in the endeavor to collect his note, for it is a condition precedent. The inchoate obligation does not become absolute until the guarantee has performed the condition on his part.[2]

Continuing guaranty. An undertaking to be responsible for moneys to be advanced or goods to be sold to another from time to time.[3]

General guaranty; special guaranty. A special guaranty operates only in favor of the person to whom it is addressed; a general guaranty is open for acceptance by the public generally.

Guaranties are sometimes further classified as such as are limited to a single transaction, and such as embrace continuous or successive dealings.

A guaranty is a contract in and of itself; but it also has relation to some other contract or obligation with reference to which it is collateral; and it always requires a consideration. When executed at or about the time of the execution of the main contract, as part of one transaction, one consideration may support both contracts; so also where the guaranty is executed in pursuance of the assignment of the main contract.[4]

The real party in interest is now entitled to maintain an action for damages arising from a breach of such contract in his own name, although he was not originally privy to it. That is, both equitable and legal assignments now are equally cognizable in a court of law.

A special guaranty contemplates a trust in the addressee, and no cause of action arises thereon, except upon compliance with its conditions by such person. Until a right of action has arisen, the guaranty is not assignable.

A consideration is necessary; if it is not acknowledged, it must be proved.

Guaranties are construed so as to accord with the apparent intention of the parties. Where the lan-

[1] 2 Pars. Contr. 3, 26; Story, Prom. Notes, § 457; 3 Kent, 121.

[2] See Dole v. Young, 24 Pick. 252 (1837), Shaw, C. J.; Parker v. Culvertson, 1 Wall. Jr. 160 (1846); Hill v. Smith, 24 How. 286 (1858).

[3] Gridley v. Capen, 72 Ill. 13 (1874), Breese, C. J.

[4] Wilkie v. Day, 141 Mass. 72 (1886).

[5] Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 440 (1866), Agnew, J.

[6] Kramph v. Hatz, 52 Pa. 529 (1866), Woodward, C. J. See also 21 Cent. Law J. 6-9 (1885), cases.

[1] National Loan, &c. Society v. Lichtenwalner, 100 Pa. 103 (1883), cases, Paxson, J.; 26 Am. Law Reg. 129-47, 201-218 (1887), cases; 18 F. R. 126; 27 Conn. 37; 2 N. Y. 549; 60 id. 444; 11 Ohio St. 168; 13 R. I. 119; 7 Humph. 539; 20 Vt. 503.

[2] Edwards, Bills, 238; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1769; Allen v. Rundle, 50 Conn. 20-22 (1882), cases.

[3] Buck v. Burk, 18 N. Y. 343 (1858), Selden, J.; Addison, Contr. 668.

[4] Briggs v. Latham, 36 Kan. 209 (1887), Valentine, J.

guage is ambiguous, the surrounding circumstances may be looked at. When the meaning is ascertained, the guarantor is entitled to the application of the strict rule governing the contracts of sureties, and cannot be held beyond the plain terms of the contract.[1] See further CONSTRUCTION, Liberal.

As a principle, a guaranty is not negotiable; it may, perhaps, be made so by negotiable language.[2]

The negotiation of a bill or note is not a guaranty.[3]

The rule requiring notice of the acceptance of a guaranty applies only where the instrument is merely an offer or proposal, acceptance of which is necessary to mutual assent. Made at the request of the guarantee, its delivery constitutes the contract. The same result follows where the agreement to accept is contemporaneous with the guaranty, and is its consideration. An unconditional guaranty of advances is a waiver of demand of payment, and notice of the debtor's default to the amount of the advances, etc. Delay in giving notice, when required, is a defense to an action to the extent of the loss or damage proved. Notwithstanding that the contract is the obligation of a surety, it is to be construed as a mercantile instrument in furtherance of its spirit, and, literally, to promote the convenience of commercial intercourse.[4]

See FRAUDS, Statute of, III (2); LETTER, 3, Of credit; PROMISE, Collateral; SURETY; WARRANTY.

GUARDIAN.[5] 1. A keeper, protector, conservator; a warden.

Guardian of the peace. A person charged with the duty of securing or protecting the public peace; a conservator of the peace. See PEACE, 1.

Guardian of the poor. A person specially elected or appointed to administer the poor-laws. See POOR.

2. One that legally has the care and management of the person or the estate, or both, during his minority, of a child whose father has died.[6] Correlative, ward.

The authorized agent, appointed by law, to take care of the ward's estate and manage his affairs.[7]

Domestic guardian. A guardian appointed at the place of the infant's domicil. Foreign guardian. A guardian appointed under the law of another State than that of the infant's domicil.

Their rights and powers are local. By comity only is anything conceded in another State to the claims of the guardian of the domicil. It is usual, however, to appoint in a foreign State the guardian of the domiciliary court.[1]

Guardian ad litem. A person appointed by a court to look after the interests of an infant when his property is involved in litigation.[2]

He manages the defense of an infant defendant, where there is no parent, or other guardian. The power of appointing such a guardian is incident to every court.[3]

He is a species of attorney, whose duty is to prosecute for the infant's rights, and to bring those rights directly under the notice of the court. He can do nothing to the injury of the infant. His duty ends when the suit ends, when it is prosecuted to final judgment. Since he may be required to pay the costs of the action, a person cannot be compelled to serve against his consent. Anciently the custom was to appoint an officer of the court. He may have reimbursement for costs and expenses out of the infant's estate.[4] See FRIEND, Next.

General guardian. A guardian who has general charge of the person and property of a fatherless minor. Special guardian. A guardian charged with the management of some particular interest; as, a guardian ad litem, or a guardian of the estate or of the person only.[5]

Guardian of the estate. A guardian who has been lawfully invested with the power of taking care and managing the estate of an infant. Guardian of the person. A guardian lawfully invested with the care of an infant, whose father is dead.[6]

At common law, a general guardian performs the office of tutor of the person and curator of the estate as distinguished in the Roman law.[7]

Statute or statutory guardian. A guardian appointed by last will; also, a guardian appointed by a court in pursuance of a statute.

[1] Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 276-81 (1883), cases, Ruger, C. J.; How v. Kemball, 2 McLean, 103 (1840), cases; 2 How. 449; 69 Barb. 355.

[2] Story, Prom. Notes, § 481; 36 Kan. 211.

[3] Central Trust Co. v. Cook County. Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 70 (1879), cases.

[4] Davis v. Wells, 104 U. S. 159, 163-66 (1881), cases, Matthews, J.

[5] F. garder: A. S. weard-; Ger. warten, to watch, have ward. See G.

[6] Bass v. Cook, 4 Port., Ala., 392: Reeves, Dom. Rel. 311.

[7] Waldrip v. Tulley, 48 Ark. 300 (1886), Smith, J.

[1] Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 631-32 (1880), Bradley, J.

[2] See N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 438 (1880); Colt v. Colt, 111 id. 578 (1884).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 427.

[4] Leopold v. Meyer, 10 Abb. Pr. o. s. 40 (N. Y. Com. Pleas, 1860), cases; Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Heisk. 20 (1873); Simmons v. Baynard, 30 F. R. 533 (1887): 2 Story, Eq. § 1352; Turrentine v. Daly, 82 Ala. 208 (1886),—final account; Cates v. Pickett, 97 N. C. 26 (1887),—selling land (local); Hinton v. Bland, 81 Va. 592-93 (1886),—of lunatic; Story, Eq. Pl. § 70.

[5] See Colt v. Colt, 111 U. S. 578 (1884).

[6] Nicholson v. Spencer, 11 Ga. 609 (1852).

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 460.

Testamentary guardian. A person named for the office of guardian in the will of the father of the minor.

Instituted by Statute 12 Charles II (1660), c. 24.[1]

Guardian by chancery. A guardian appointed by a court of equity or of probate.

Guardian in chivalry. The lord of the heir of a tenant in capite, and of body and lands, with no duty to account for profits.

Guardian by common law, or in socage. Where a minor was entitled to an estate in lands, his next of kin, to whom the estate could not descend, became such guardian until the minor attained fourteen.

Guardian by nature. The father, and, after his decease, the mother. Has charge of person and estate, and is controlled by a court of equity or probate.

Guardian for nurture. Either of the parents till the child is fourteen, but relates to the care of the person solely.

Guardian ad interim or interim. Serves while another guardian is out of the jurisdiction.[2]

In general, guardians exist either by nature or by appointment of a court. At common law, a person became such by relation to the minor, without judicial appointment. In the province of York, on failure of the father to name a guardian by will, the ordinary made the appointment. The power to appoint and to pass upon accounts has been generally conferred by statutes upon the probate courts.

At fourteen, the child may choose a guardian.

A guardian is a temporary parent. The lord chancellor is the general guardian of all infants in England; in the States, the court of probate is the general guardian, the nominal guardian being but an agent or officer of the court.[3]

The reciprocal duties of the persons depend upon the nature of the guardianship. A guardian of the person has a right to the obedience of the ward, but not to his services; and owes the ward protection, but not support. The guardian of the estate is to support and educate the ward in a manner suited to the ward's station in life.

Ordinary skill, prudence, and caution are all that are required of a guardian. Many of his duties are regulated by statute. He may lease the ward's realty; and he receives the rents and profits thereof. He may sell personalty without an order of court, but not realty; nor may he so convert personalty into realty. If he uses money, or neglects to invest it for an unreasonable period, he is chargeable with interest: and if he trades with the money, the ward may demand the principal with either interest or the profits. He is liable for waste as to realty, and for negligence as to personalty. He cannot waive the ward's rights.[1]

The relation ceases at twenty-one. As to the person of a female ward, ceases with marriage to a minor; and as to both person and estate, upon marriage to an adult. Continues, as to his estate, after the marriage of a male ward. But neither may marry without the consent of the guardian.

The court will remove a guardian for misconduct; may require a change in his sureties; may compel him to file an account; may appoint an interim guardian; will regulate the maintenance and education (q. v.) of the ward; and may even control the actions of a testamentary guardian.[2]

After the ward becomes of age the guardian is bound to exercise proper care of his property until he has duly accounted for it, and delivered up possession.[3]

See Committee, 1; Curator; Discharge, 1; Invest; Tutor; Ward, 3; Witness.

GUBERNATORIAL. See Government.

GUEST. A traveler, wayfarer, or a transient comer to an inn for lodging and entertainment. It is not now deemed essential that the person should have come from a distance.[4]

As inns are instituted for travelers, a neighbor or friend who lodges in an inn is not deemed a guest. A traveler who is accepted becomes instantly a guest. The length of time a man is at an inn makes no difference; so, although he is not strictly transient, he retains his character as a traveler. He may, by special contract to board and sojourn, make himself a "boarder." Numerous late cases hold that a special agreement as to time and price does not absolutely disturb the relationship of innkeeper and guest. These cases indicate a tendency to conform the old rule to the changes made in hotel keeping in modern times.[5]

See further Boarder; Inn; Lodger; Residence.

GUILTY.[6] 1. The state or condition of one who has committed a crime, a civil in-

[1] See 2 Kent, 224-25; Schouler, Dom. R. 400; 4 Johns. Ch. 380; 12 Ill. 431; 37 Cal. 661.

[2] See 1 Bl. Com. 461-63; 2 id. 67, 88; 2 Kent, 220; Reeves, Dom. R. 311; 1 Pars. Contr. 133; De Krafft v. Barney, 2 Black, 710 (1862); Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452 (1884); 6 Conn. 500; 33 id. 327.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 463; 3 id. 141; 2 id. 461.

[1] See Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 463-70 (1884), cases; Boaz v. Milliken, 83 Ky. 638 (1886); Eyster's Appeal, 16 Pa. 372 (1851).

[2] See Reeves, Dom. R. 311; Schouler, Dom. R. § 283; 1 Pars. Contr. 134-37; Lord v. Hough, 37 Cal. 660-69 (1869); 1 Johns. Ch. 109.

[3] Hudson v. Bishop, 32 F. R. 521 (1887).

[4] Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 6 (1885), cases, Cole, C. J. See also Russell v. Ryan, Sup. Ct. Del. (1886), Comegys, Chief Justice.

[5] See Story, Bailm. § 477; 2 Pars. Contr. 150; Hancock (Mrs. Gen.) v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 5, 10 (1883), cases; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 330-44 (1854), cases; Calye's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 241-47, cases; Coggs v. Bernard, ib. 401-6, cases; 16 Ala. 666; 26 id. 377; 33 Cal. 557; 35 Conn. 183; 25 Iowa, 553; 53 Me. 163; 100 Mass. 495; 145 id. 244; 12 Mich. 52; 53 Mo. 547; 33 N. Y. 577; 61 id. 34; 36 Pa. 452; 62 id. 92; 41 Vt. 5; 35 Wis. 118.

[6] A. S. gylt, a fine for an offense; an offense.

jury, or a contempt of court. 2. As a plea, the judicial confession of a crime charged.

Not guilty. A plea denying the commission of a crime or a tort.

The plea of "not guilty" raises the general issue; it denies the whole indictment or declaration. In civil law, applicable in delicts sounding in trespass or case, for misfeasance or non-feasance, in ejectment, in garnishment, and in interpleader.[1]

When an accused person is arraigned (q. v.), the clerk inquires: "How say you, A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is recorded, constitutes his plea. If "not guilty," the trial proceeds.

The plea waives objection to the complaint for misnomer or for neglect to add a place of residence.[2]

Where guilty knowledge is an ingredient of a crime, evidence of the commission of other kindred offenses about the same time is admissible as tending to prove that ingredient. Many cases of fraud require the application of the same principle,— as fraud involves intent, and intent can be deduced only from a variety of circumstances. Collateral facts, each insufficient in itself, whose joint operation tends to support the charge, or to disprove it, are then receivable.[3]

Where a statute prohibits an act being done, or being done under certain circumstances, without making knowledge or intent an ingredient in the offense, the person doing the act is bound at his peril to see that the circumstances are such as do not make it unlawful.[4]

Jurors are not called to pass upon a defendant's innocence, but solely whether or not the State has proven beyond reasonable doubt an affirmative proposition, to wit, his guilt.[5]

See CONFESSION, 2; CONVICT; CRIME; DOUBT; INTENT; NEGLIGENCE; WILL, 1. Compare CULPA.

GUITEAU'S CASE.[6] See DELUSION; DOUBT, Reasonable; INSANITY, 2 (6).

GUN. See BAGGAGE; SHOOTING-MARK; TOOL; WEAPON.

GUNPOWDER. See EXPLOSION; POLICE, 2.

GUTTER. See DRAIN.

An ordinance requiring lot-owners to keep the "gutters" opposite their premises in good repair, and free from obstructions, was held to refer to the ordinary open gutters along the streets, and not to a blind ditch or culvert covered with planks and soil.[7]

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; 4 id. 338; Gould, Pl. 284.

[2] State v. Drury, 18 R. I. 540 (1893); 41 N. H. 407; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 791. On withdrawal of plea, see 23 Cent. Law J. 75 (1886), cases.

[3] United States v. Clapboards, 4 Cliff. 303-5 (1874), cases, Clifford, J.; Commonwealth v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 18-21 (1882), cases; People v. Gibbs, 93 N. Y. 473 (1883); 19 Cent. Law J. 408 (1884).

[4] United States v. Curtis, 16 F. R. 187 (1883), cases, Brown, J.; Halstead v. State, 41 N. J. L. 589-96, 577-84 (1879), cases, Beasley, C. J.

[5] McNair v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 84 (1883).

[6] Reported in 10 F. R. 161. See also 13 Rep. 138, 717.

[7] Gilluly v. City of Madison, 63 Wis. 518 (1885).

H.

H. As an initial, may denote habeas, Henry (king), Hilary, hoc, house.

H. B. House bill.

H. C. Habeas corpus; House of Commons.

H. L. House of Lords.

H. R. House of Representatives.

Abbreviations of the Latin hoc, this, formerly more in use than at present, are: h. a. for hoc anno, this year; h. t. for hoc titulo, this title; h. v. for hoc verbo or his verbis, this word or these words;— the last two being employed as references.

HABENDUM. See HABERE, Habendum.

HABERE. L. To grasp, lay hold of: to have, hold.

Habeas corpus. That you have the body. The emphatic words of several common-law writs issued to bring persons into court for a designated purpose. See particularly, 6, below.

1. Habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum. That you have the body for doing and receiving. Removes an action into a superior court: commands the judge of the inferior court to produce the body of the defendant, with a statement of the cause of his detention (whence called, also, habeas corpus cum causa), to do and to receive whatever the higher court shall decree.

Applicable where the simpler writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum is inadequate; and grantable of right, without motion. Operates as a supersedeas.

2. Habeas corpus ad prosequendum. That you have the person for prosecuting. Removes a prisoner to the jurisdiction wherein it is alleged he committed a crime.

3. Habeas corpus ad respondendum. That you have the person for answering. Removes a prisoner that he may be charged with a new action in a higher court.

4. Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum. That you have the person for satisfaction. Removes a prisoner into a superior court that he may there be charged with process of execution.

5. Habeas corpus ad testificandum. That you have the person for testifying. Removes a person from a place of detention that he may give testimony before a court.[1]

6. Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. That you have the body for submitting to and receiving. Commands the person who has another in detention to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatever the judge or court awarding the writ shall consider (q. v.) in that behalf.[1]

[1] See generally Exp. Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 228, 251 (1886), cases.

This last, the great and efficacious prerogative writ, is commonly called The Writ of Habeas Corpus. It is the best and only sufficient defense of personal freedom.[2]

It is the remedy which the law gives for the enforcement of the civil right of personal liberty. . . The judicial proceeding under it is not to inquire into the criminal act complained of, but into the right to liberty notwithstanding the act. The prosecution against the prisoner is a criminal proceeding, but the writ of habeas corpus, which he may obtain, is not a proceeding in that prosecution. On the contrary, it is a new suit brought by him to enforce a right, which he claims, as against those who are holding him in custody under the criminal process. If he fails to establish his right to his liberty, he may be detained for trial for the offense; but if he succeeds, he must be discharged from custody. The proceeding is one instituted by himself for his liberty, not by the government to punish him for his crime. It is of a wholly civil nature.[3]

The writ was likely used at first to effect relief from private restraint. Trace of early use is found in Year Book 48 Edw. III, 22 (1375); was well understood in the time of Henry VI (1422–61); became available against the crown in the reign of Henry VII (1485–1509); in the time of Charles I (1625–49), was adjudged a constitutional remedy.[4]

The availability of the writ, as it obtained at common law, has been facilitated by statutes, particularly by 31 Charles II (1680), c. 2, called the Habeas Corpus Act, another Magna Charta, and by 56 Geo. III (1816), c. 100.[5] Acts having the same general nature and object exist in the various States. A case outside of a statute is governed by the common law.[6]

The general principles were settled long before our national independence, and were in mind when the power was given to the Federal courts and judges.[7]

The Constitution provides that "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it."[8]

This provision has been copied into the constitutions of the States.

Congress, by act of March 3, 1863, authorized the President to suspend the privilege of the writ whenever, during the rebellion, in his judgment, the public safety might require it.[1]

Suspension of the writ simply denies to the person arrested the privilege of its use, to obtain his liberty.[2]

Not a writ of error, though in some cases, in which the court issuing it has appellate power over the court by whose authority the petitioner is held in custody, it may be used with the writ of certiorari for that purpose. Used alone, its purpose is to enable the court to inquire, first, if the petitioner is restrained of his liberty. If he is not, the court can do nothing but discharge the writ. If there is such restraint, the court can then inquire into the cause of it, and, if the alleged cause be unlawful, it must discharge the prisoner. Wives restrained by husbands, children withheld from the proper parent or guardian, persons held under arbitrary custody by private individuals, as in a madhouse, as well as those under military control, may become subjects of relief by the writ. But something more than moral restraint is necessary: there must be actual confinement or the present means of enforcing it.[3]

The writ is of right, in the nature of a writ of error, grantable on cause shown. The usual course is for the court on application to issue the writ, and, on its return, to hear and dispose of the case; but where the cause of imprisonment is fully shown by the petition, the court may determine that the prisoner, if produced, would or would not be entitled to a discharge.[4]

The writ affords relief only where the proceedings below are entirely void, for any cause, as for want of jurisdiction,[5] or because of the unconstitutionality of a statute.[6]

The reviewing power of the Supreme Court, in a criminal case, is confined to determining whether the lower court had jurisdiction to try and sentence for the offense.[7]

Ordinarily, the Supreme Court can issue the writ only under its appellate jurisdiction,— except in cases affecting public ministers or consuls, or those in which a State is a party.[8]

The act of March 27, 1868 (15 St. L. 44), took from the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review on appeal the decision of a circuit court upon a writ of habeas corpus; and it has no jurisdiction to review such decision on a

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 130; Exp. Bollman, 4 Cranch, 97–99 (1807), Marshall, C. J.; Tidd, Pr. 296–301, 739.

[2] Exp. Yerger, 8 Wall. 95 (1868).

[3] Exp. Tom Tong, 108 U. S. 559 (1883), Waite, C. J.; Exp. Bollman, 4 Cranch, 101 (1807).

[4] See Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 145.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 133; 8 Wall.95; 3 Hallam, Const. Hist. 19.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 137.

[7] Exp. Parks, 93 U. S. 21 (1876); Exp. Yeager, 8 Wall. 95 (1868).

[8] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 9, cl. 2.

[1] 12 St. L. 755. See generally R. S. §§ 751–66, cases.

[2] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 3, 115 (1866); Exp. Merryman, 9 Am. Law Reg. 524 (1861), Taney, C. J.; Exp. Field, 5 Blatch. 67 (1862); 21 Ind. 370, 472; 44 Barb. 98; 16 Wis. 360; 1 Pac. Law Mag. 360.

[3] Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 571–72 (1885), Miller, J.

[4] Exp. Milligan, supra.

[5] Exp. Parks, 93 U. S. 21 (1876).

[6] Exp. Rollins, 80 Va. 316 (1885), cases.

[7] Exp. Curtis, 106 U. S. 375 (1882); Exp. Carll, ib. 538 (1882), cases, Waite, C. J.

[8] Exp. Hung Hang, 108 U. S. 552 (1883), cases; State v. Neel, 48 Ark. 299 (1886), cases: 2 Kan. Law J. 295–99 (1885), cases.

writ of error. It may still issue its own writ of habeas corpus.[1]

A circuit court may discharge a person restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution, although held on an indictment for an offense against a State.[2]

Congress has prescribed the jurisdiction of the Federal courts under the writ; but as it has never particularly prescribed the mode of procedure, they have followed in substance the rules of the common law. The legislatures of the States not only provide what courts or officers may issue the writ, but, to a considerable extent, have regulated the practice under it.[3]

See EXTRADITION; INDIAN.

Habendum. To have; for having. Habendum et tenendum: to have and to hold.

The initial, emphatic word in that clause of a deed which follows the granting part. Determines what estate or interest is granted; may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, the estate granted in the premises, q. v.[4]

Habere facias possessionem. That you cause to have possession. Habere facias seisinam. That you cause to have seisin.

If the plaintiff recovers in any action whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded him, the writ of execution is an habere facias seisinam, or writ of seisin, of a freehold; or an habere facias possessionem, or writ of possession, of a chattel interest. These are writs commanding the sheriff to give actual possession to the plaintiff of the land recovered.[5]

At present, an habere facias possessionem puts into possession of the land a plaintiff who has been successful in an action of ejectment; and the writ of habere facias seisinam is in vogue in some States in connection with the action of dower.[6]

Habere facias visum. That you cause to have a view. A writ, and the characteristic phrase in the same, which directed the sheriff to have land viewed by a jury.

Habilis. Having: capable, suitable; fit.

By the canon law, if the parties are habiles ad matrimonium, it is a good marriage, whatever their ages.[7]

HABIT.[8] A person's habits refer to his customary conduct, to pursue which he has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts.[9]

It would be incorrect to say that a man has a habit of anything from a single act.[9]

Habitual. According to or by force of habit or frequent use; originating in a fixed habit; habituated.

See CHARACTER; DRUNKARD; INTEMPERATE.

HABITANCY. Embraces the fact of residence at a place, together with the intent to regard it and make it a home.

It is difficult to give an exact definition.[1] See INHABITANT.

HABITATION. See DWELLING.

HÆRES. L. Heir. In Roman law, resembled an executor in English law. See HEIR, 2.

Hæreditas. Inheritance. See DAMNUM, Damnosa, etc.

Hæres natus. An heir born; an heir by descent. Hæres factus. An heir by appointment; a devisee.[2]

Nemo est hæres viventis. No one can be the heir of a living person.

No person can be the actual complete heir of another till that other is dead. Before that time the person next in the line of succession is called the "heir apparent," or "heir presumptive."[3]

HÆRET IN CORTICE. See LITERA QUI hæret, etc.

HAIR. May not include bristles.[4]

Hair clippers. See CUTLERY.

HALF. See BLOOD; COIN; DEFENSE, 2; MOIETY; ORPHAN; SISTER.

HALLOWEEN. See NIGHTWALKERS; WANTONNESS.

HALLUCINATION. See INSANITY.

HAMMER. "Under the hammer" refers to public sales by a sheriff or auctioneer.

In Rome, auctioneers stood beside a spear fixed upright in the forum; and the goods were said to be sold sub hasta, under the spear.

HANAPER.[5] A bag or basket, kept in offices of the court of chancery to receive dues paid for the seals of charters, patents, commissions, and writs; then, the exchequer of chancery.

Writs issuing out of the ordinary court of chancery (relating to the business of the subject) and the returns thereto were, according to the simplicity of ancient times, originally kept in hanaperio; and others (relating to affairs of the crown) were preserved in a little sack or bag; and thence has arisen the distinction of "hanaper office" and "petty-bag office," both

---

[1] Exp. Royall, 112 U. S. 181 (1884); Exp. Yerger, 8 Wall. 103 (1868).

[2] Exp. Royall, 117 U. S. 241 (1886).

[3] See generally People ex rel. Tweed v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 559 (1875); 18 Cent. Law J. 368-70 (1884), cases.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 298; 4 Kent, 468; 3 Washb. R. P. 436.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 412; Tidd, Pr. 1081; 2 Arch. Pr. 58.

[6] See Brightly, T. & H. (Pa.) §§ 1802, 1807.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 436.

[8] L. habitus: habere, to have oneself, be in a condition.

[9] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 354 (1881), Field, J.

[1] Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. 234 (1835), Shaw, C. J.

[2] See Borland v. Nichols, 18 Pa. 43 (1849).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 208.

[4] Von Stade v. Arthur, 13 Blatch. 251 (1876).

[5] L. L. hanaperium, a large vase; a vessel to keep cups in; hanapus, a cup, bowl. Whence hamper.

of which belong to the common-law court in chancery.[1] See PETIT, Petty Bag.

HAND. 1. As the member of the body with which a thing is held, an instrument used, force or action originated or exerted, or a deed done, is in frequent use. See ARRAIGN; BURN; DEATH; MAYHEM. Compare MAIN; MANUS.

Handbill. A written or printed public notice of something to be done; as, of a judicial sale of property.

The number, time, and manner of posting such bills is regulated by local statute or rule of court.

Hand-money. The price or earnest given to bind a bargain, after shaking hands, or instead thereof; the consideration of a hand-sale. See EARNEST.

Hand-sale. Anciently, among northern nations, shaking of hands was necessary to bind a bargain; a custom retained in verbal contracts.[2]

Uplifted hand. Refers to an oath taken by raising the right hand toward Heaven.

Whip-hand. The right hand; the side of a road toward the right hand. See ROAD, 1, Law of.

2. Force; violence.

Strong hand. "With strong hand" implies a degree of criminal force, more than "with force and arms." Statutes relating to forcible entry (q. v.) use the words in describing the degree of force which makes an entry or detainer criminal, and entitles the prosecutor, under some circumstances, to restitution and damages.[3]

"With force and arms" are merely formal words in the action of trespass, and if issue be taken upon them, the plaintiff is not bound to prove any actual force.[3]

3. Chirography; penmanship; handwriting.

Whatever one has written with his hand; not merely his usual style of chirography.[4]

Comparison of hands, or of handwriting. Proving penmanship by its likeness to other writing, admitted or proven to be genuine.

The rule of the common law is to disallow a comparison of hands as proof of signature. An exception is, that if a paper, admitted to be in the hands of a party or to be subscribed by him, is in evidence for some other purpose, the signature or paper in question may be compared with it by the jury.[1]

A paper, otherwise irrelevant, may not be put in evidence merely to enable the jury to make a comparison.[2]

When a witness is called to prove a signature from his knowledge of the signer's writing, he should be first cross-examined as to his means of knowledge.[3]

Handwriting is proved by the writer, by his admission, by his writing in court, or by a witness who has either seen him write or is familiar with his hand. The witness may be tested by other writings. In England, comparison is permitted only as to test paper already in court. In some States, comparison with other papers is allowed. Test papers made for the purpose are inadmissible. An expert in handwriting may say whether in his opinion a hand is feigned or natural.[4]

All evidence of handwriting, except in the single instance where the witness saw the document written, is in its nature comparison of hands. It is the belief which the witness entertains upon comparing the writing in question with the exemplar in his mind derived from previous knowledge. Any witness, otherwise disinterested, who has had the opportunity of acquiring such an exemplar, is competent to speak of his belief. It is one of the few instances in which the law accepts from witnesses belief in facts, instead of facts themselves. If, from having seen the party write or from correspondence with him, the witness has become familiar with his hand, he may testify his belief as to the genuineness of the writing in question. Technically, comparison of handwriting means a "comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person." . . (1) Evidence as to the genuineness of a paper may be corroborated by a comparison, to be made by the jury, between that paper and other well authenticated writings. (2) A mere expert may not make the comparison. (3) Witnesses having knowledge of the party's handwriting may testify as to the paper; but they are not to make the comparison. (4) Test documents should be established by the most satisfactory evidence. (5) An expert may be examined to prove forged or simulated writings, and to give conclusions of skill; but not to compare a writing, as a note, in suit, with other test papers, and express his opinion, when he had no knowledge of the defendant's handwriting.[5]

The rule is that a witness who is introduced to prove

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 49; Yates v. People, 6 Johns. *363 (1810).

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 448.

[3] King v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 362 (1799), Lawrence, J.; Harvey v. Brydges, 14 M. & W. *443 (1845), Parke, B.; Lawe v. King, 1 Saund. 81 (1668).

[4] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 301 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

[1] Moore v. United States, 91 U. S. 274 (1875); Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. *767 (1832); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 578.

[2] United States v. Jones, 20 Blatch. 236 (1882).

[3] Frew v. Clark, 80 Pa. 181 (1875).

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 705-40, cases; Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 301 (1850).

[5] Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 12, 13, 17 (1862), cases, Woodward, J. See also Ballentine v. White, 77 id. 26 (1874); Aumick v. Mitchell, 82 id. 218 (1876); Reese v. Reese, 90 id. 94 (1879); Berryhill v. Kirchner, 96 id. 492 (1880); Lessee of Clark v. Courtney, 5 Pet. *344 (1831); Winn v. Patterson, 9 id. 674-75 (1835); Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 413, 297 (1888), cases.

the handwriting of a person must have personal knowledge of it, either by having seen him write, or by having seen writing admitted by him to be his or, with his knowledge, acted upon as his, or so adopted into the ordinary business of life as to create a reasonable presumption of its genuineness. Exceptions are, first, where the paper is not old enough to prove itself, and yet is so old that living witnesses cannot be had: then, other writings proven to be genuine, or to have been acted upon as such by all parties, may be offered, and experts, by comparison, may give their opinion as to the genuineness; or, second, where other writings admitted to be genuine are already in the case, when the jury may make the comparison without expert aid. The civil and ecclesiastical law permitted the testimony of experts as to handwriting by comparison. The rule varies in the different States. In some, comparison is allowed between the writing in question and any other writing shown to be genuine, whether already in the case or not, or relevant or not; while in others, it is only permitted as between the disputed paper and one already in the case and relevant to it.[1] See FORGERY; SUBSCRIBE.

Under hand and seal, or witness my hand, etc. Said of an instrument of writing, and refers, specifically, to the name or signature thereto. See SEAL, 1.

4. Condition or attitude before the law; as, in the expression —

Clean hands. Upright before the law; free from fault; in a position to ask the intervention of a court of equity.

Hand down. To decide, declare, announce.

Hand down an opinion. When a member of a court of errors and appeals has written an opinion in a case and delivered it to the clerk for transmission to the court whose decision has been under review, the opinion is said to be "handed down."

HANGING. The judgment in a capital case is, that the prisoner "be hanged by the neck till dead."[2]

Hanged is preferred to hung, as the past participle.

Hangman. One who executes a prisoner condemned to death by suspension by the neck; also, he who holds the office of public executioner. See DEATH, Penalty.

HAPPEN. See CONTINGENCY; OCCUR.

HAPPINESS. The foundation of ethics or natural law is "that every man should pursue his own true and substantial happiness."[1]

But as utility contradicts the common sense and feeling of mankind, utility is not the standard of right and wrong.[2]

The object of all government is to promote the happiness and prosperity of the community by which it is established.[3]

Happiness is an inalienable right. In its pursuit all avocations, honors, positions, are alike open to every one.[4]

The right of men to pursue their happiness means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give them their highest enjoyment.[5]

The right to follow any of the common occupations of life is an inalienable right; it was formulated as such under the phrase "pursuit of happiness" in the Declaration of Independence. This right is a large ingredient in the civil liberty (q. v.) of the citizen. No legislature may deny the right to all but a few favored individuals, by investing the latter with a monopoly.[6] See PRIVILEGE, 2.

HARBOR. 1, v. To receive and conceal clandestinely; to secrete, so that another who has the right of custody shall be deprived thereof: as, to harbor a wife, child, apprentice, fugitive slave.[7]

2, n. A haven or port. See COMMERCE; LADING; PORT; WHARF.

HARD. See HARDSHIP; LABOR, 1.

HARDPAN. See EARTH.

HARDSHIP. Refers to an argument why a thing should or should not be allowed because of the severity of the law as applied to the particular case.

Where a statute is clear and imperative, of no avail.[8]

Settled principles cannot, with safety to the public, be disregarded to remedy the hardship of a special case.[9]

---

[1] Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 262-63 (1885), Holt, J. See also Rose v. First Nat. Bank of Springfield, 91 Mo. 401-3 (1886), cases; Bell v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 696, 698 (1887), cases; Smyth v. Caswell, 67 Tex. 573 (1887); as to evidence of identity, 22 Cent. Law J. 316 (1886), cases.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 403.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 41.

[2] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 41.

[3] Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 547 (1837), Taney, C. J.

[4] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 321 (1866), Field, J.

[5] Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 757 (1884), Field, J.

[6] Butchers' Union Co., &c., supra, 111 U. S. 762 Bradley, Harlan, Woods, JJ.

[7] See Driskill v. Parrish, 3 McLean, 643 (1847); Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. 227 (1847); Van Metre v. Mitchell, 2 Wall. Jr. 317 (1853); 24 Ga. 71; 26 id. 593; 5 N. H. 428, 10 id. 247; 1 Abb. Pr. 259; 2 N. Car. Law R. 249.

[8] The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 620 (1870).

[9] Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 293 (1880); 25. 404.

The certainty of the law is of more importance than individual convenience. Inconvenience and hardship are considerations for the legislature.[1]

See POLICY, 1, Public; POSSIBILITY.

HARDWARE. See CUTLERY.

HARVEST. Referring to a season of the year, the time when crops of grain and grass are gathered; does not apply to second crops cut out of harvest time.[2] See CROP; EMBLEMENTS.

HAUL. See CARRY, 1.

HAVE. See MAY, May have.

"To have and to hold," in a deed, defines the extent of ownership in the matter granted.

Rejected, if repugnant to the rest of the deed.[3] See further HABERE, Habendum.

HAWKER. The primary idea of a "hawker and peddler" is that of an itinerant or traveling trader, who carries goods about for sale, and actually sells them, in contradistinction to a trader who sells goods in a fixed place of business. Superadded to this (though perhaps not essential), by a "hawker" is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but who seeks for purchasers, either by outcry or by attracting attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them, by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish.[4]

A "hawker and peddler" is an itinerant trader, who goes from place to place, or from house to house, carrying for sale and exposing to sale the goods, wares or merchandise which he carries.[5]

He generally deals in small and cheap articles, such as he can conveniently carry in a cart or on his person. He may be required to take out a license.[6]

Hawking. Embraces the business of one who sells, or offers goods for sale, on the streets by outcry, or by attracting the attention of persons by exposing his goods in a public place, or by placards, labels, or signals.[6]

HAZARD.[1] Danger, peril, risk, but not necessarily the greatest degree.[2]

Hazardous. Involving danger; accompanied with risk; perilous: as, a hazardous contract.

"Hazardous," "extra hazardous," "specially hazardous," and "not hazardous," have distinct meanings in the business of fire insurance. What goods are included under any one designation may not be so well known as to dispense with proof.[3] See INSURANCE; RISK.

Games of hazard. See GAME, 2.

HEAD. 1. He who provides for a family, q. v.

2. The responsible person; the chief; the principal: as, the head of a department of government, q. v.

3. Compare CAPUT; POLL.

Headnote. A statement of the points decided in a case, and preceding the printed report thereof. See SYLLABUS.

HEALTH. Exemption from disease; freedom from sickness or pain; exemption from prevailing or unusual disease or contagion.

A person is "healthy" who is free from disease or bodily ailment, or that state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment.[4]

The degree of health ordinarily enjoyed by men in health, and the physical ability which men of sound bodies ordinarily possess, places one in the class of the "healthy and able-bodied," within the meaning of poor-laws, although there may be casual or temporary illness, or bodily unsoundness.[5]

"Sound health," as used in contracts for life insurance, does not mean absolute freedom from bodily infirmity or tendency to disease.[6] See INTEMPERATE.

Public health. The wholesome sanitary condition of the community at large; the exemption of a municipality or region from any prevailing and unusual disease or mortality; general health; health of the people.

Laws to secure the general health of the people at large are called "public-health laws;" and the officers charged with administering them, the "public-health board," or "public-health officers," or, briefly, the "health-board" or "health-officers."

---

[1] Silliman v. United States, 101 U. S. 471 (1879); Stewart v. Platt, ib. 738 (1879); 3 How. 61; 21 Wall. 178; 102 Ill. 221.

[2] Wendall v. Osborne, 63 Iowa, 102, 103 (1884), Beck, J.

[3] Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 168 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[4] [Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. 495 (1853), Shaw, Chief Justice.

[5] Commonwealth v. Farnum, 114 Mass. 270 (1873), Endicott, J.; Morrill v. State, 38 Wis. 437 (1875)

[6] Graffty v. Rushville, 107 Ind. 506 (1886), Mitchell, J.

[1] F. hasard, accident; unfortunate throw of dice: sar, a die.

[2] Butterfoss v. State, 40 N. J. E. 330 (1885).

[3] See Pindar v. Continental Fire Ins. Co., 38 N. Y. 364 (1868).

[4] Bell v. Jeffreys, 13 Ired. L. 357 (1852), Pearson, J.

[5] Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 209 (1843), Royce, Judge.

[6] Morrison v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows' Mut. Life Ins. Co., 59 Wis. 170 (1884), Lyon, J. See Moulor v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335 (1884); May, Ins. § 295, cases.

Bill of health. A certificate given by the authorities of the port from which a vessel clears, showing the state of the public health at the port.

Clean bill of health. A certificate that no infectious disease exists; opposed to a touched or suspected bill, or a bill actually foul.

Board of health. A board of officials specially charged with the preservation of the general health of the people at large.

Their jurisdiction is, ordinarily, a municipality, or a State.

National Board of Health. Established by act of Congress of March 3, 1879, ch. 202, § 1 (20 St. L. 484). Consists of seven members appointed by the President, and four members detailed from the departments. Their duties are to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the heads of departments and State executives, to make necessary investigations at any place in the United States, or at foreign ports, and to make rules guarding against the introduction of contagious diseases into the country and their spread from State to State.[1]

The preservation of the public health is one of the chief purposes of local government. Hence, municipal corporations are liberally endowed with power to prevent and abate nuisances. Public policy requires that health-officers be not disturbed in the exercise of their powers, unless clearly transcending their authority.[2]

All sanitary cordons and preventive regulations come under the right of preventing more serious injuries by stifling the sources of evil. In doing this, health-officers must not interfere with the natural rights of individuals.[3]

Power in boards of health to abate nuisances and the causes of them, and to enforce sanitary regulations, are very great. The courts have excused an excessive exercise of power in cases where there was great peril to the public health. But an exercise which is clearly unlawful, and has no great public necessity to excuse it, will be restrained, however praiseworthy the motive. The people "shall be secure in their persons and houses from unreasonable searches and seizures."[4]

By statute of 1 James I (1603), c. 31, a person infected with the plague, or dwelling in an infected house, could be compelled to keep his house. If he went into company, he could be punished by whipping, be bound to good behavior, or be adjudged guilty of felony. By 26 Geo. II (1753), c. 26, quarantine of ships from infected countries was regulated.[1]

In England the public health is secured by various statutes, principally by the Public Health Act, 11 and 12 Vict. (1848), c. 63, the Local Government Acts of 1858, and amendments thereto. These statutes give large powers to the local authorities for removing nuisances, regulating burials, checking the sale of injurious food and drink, and otherwise preventing disease.

The preservation of health is an absolute right of personal security.[2]

Injuries to a man's health occur when, by any unwholesome practices of another, a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigor or constitution: as, by the sale of bad provisions, by the exercise of a noisome trade, or by the neglect or unskillful management of his physician, surgeon, or apothecary. For such, a special action of trespass on the case for damages lies.[3]

An act (supplementary) of New Jersey, approved March 12, 1880, makes animals with contagious diseases common nuisances; another act (also supplementary), approved March 12, 1884, makes horses affected with glanders common nuisances; and both acts authorize destruction of the animals under prescribed conditions. Held, that the acts are within the police powers of the State; that they are not within the prohibition of the Fourteenth Amendment, because, although they authorize the abatement of nuisances in advance of a judicial adjudication of the fact of nuisance, yet they do not make the determination as to that fact conclusive, and only permit acts, in abating a particular nuisance, to be justified by proof of its actual existence; thirdly, that the conditions under which the officials may act, by the statute of 1880, are mere limitations upon their power for the benefit of the owners of animals, and their adjudication that such conditions exist will not protect them, unless the existence of the common nuisance is shown.[4]

See ADULTERATE; DISEASE; POLICE, 2; QUARANTINE, 2; SOUND, 2 (2).

HEARING. 1. The trial of a suit in equity. 2. The session of any court, or of an adjunct thereof, for considering the proofs in a cause. 3. An examination of the testimony offered against a person charged with crime.

As applied to equity cases, "hearing" means the same as "trial" at law.[5]

Final hearing. The trial of an equity case upon its merits; as distinguished from

[1] R. S., 1 Sup. p. 480.

[2] Hart v. Mayor of Albany, 3 Paige, 218 (1832); 1 Dillon, Munic. Corp. §§ 369, 374.

[3] Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 13-14 (1848).

[4] Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. 94 (1873), cases, Peirce, J. See also Butterfoss v. State, 40 N. J. E. 325 (1885).

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 161; King v. Vantandillo, 4 M. & S. 73 (1815); King v. Burnett, ib. 272 (1815).

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 129, 131.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 122.

[4] Newark & South Orange Horse Ry. Co. v. Hunt, Sup. Ct. N. J. (Feb. 27, 1888), cases, Magie, J. Same case, 37 Alb. Law J. 356.

[5] Vannevar v. Bryant, 21 Wall. 43 (1874); Jones v. Foster, 61 Wis. 29 (1884); 19 Wall. 225; 3 Dill. 463; 40 Ind. 179.

the hearing of any preliminary question arising in the cause, termed "interlocutory."[1]

Further hearing. An adjourned or continued hearing.

Re-hearing. A new hearing in a matter once decided; consideration under a re-examination or re-argument.[2]

A petition for the re-hearing of a case may be required to be made at the term when the cause was first decided.

See NOTICE, 1; JURISDICTION, 2; PROCESS, 1, Due; REMAND, 1; TERM, 4; TRIAL; WAIVER. Compare AUDIRE; OYER; PRESENCE.

HEARSAY. What is heard as rumored; testimony not a matter of personal knowledge with the witness.

That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person.[3]

In the largest sense, interchangeable with non-original evidence. This is generally inadmissible, because of the depreciation of truth from passage through fallible media; because of non-discrimination by juries between primary and secondary evidence; and because it is irresponsible in its first exhibition.[4]

Because it wants the sanction of an oath, and affords no opportunity for cross-examination, is excluded.[5]

Supposes that better testimony may be had; is intrinsically too weak to satisfy the mind; under its color fraud might be practiced.[6]

Admissible in the following cases: 1. As to a witness — what was said in a former trial by a person now dead, out of the jurisdiction, subsequently incompetent, insane, or sick.[7]

2. As to depositions in perpetuam. But the testimony must be ephemeral; taken conformably to the rules of evidence; be deposited in court; and the cause be not delayed.[8]

3. As to matters of general interest, and ancient possession. But the witnesses must be disinterested. Includes declarations of deceased persons as to boundaries.[9] Ancient documents, in proper custody, prove ancient possessions.[10]

4. As to pedigree and relationship: birth, marriage, and death. Common family tradition is receivable; also, statements of deceased relatives made before a dispute arose; also, family records, epitaphs, armorial bearings, and the like.[1] See PEDIGREE.

5. As to declarations against interest by deceased persons. This means against pecuniary or proprietary interest; not as to incidental matters, and although better evidence may be had. But must be brought home to an imputed declarant.[2]

6. As to business entries. By a deceased or absent partner or clerk, and made in the regular course of business, admitted. So of notes by surveyor, counsel, bank messenger, notaries, and others. But the entry must have been made contemporaneously with the transaction, confined to the matter it was the person's duty to record, and, in its nature, original.[3] See further ENTRY, II, 1.

7. As to general reputation when material.[4] See CHARACTER; REPUTATION.

8. To refresh memory, as to extrinsic incidents of testimony; as, dates, places, etc.[5] See REFRESH.

9. As to res gestæ. Includes declarations coincident with business acts, and torts; not, if the acts are in themselves inadmissible, or there exists opportunity for concoction.[6] See RES, Gestæ.

10. As to declarations concerning a party's own health and state of mind. These chiefly regard statements as to injuries and motives.[7]

See further DECLARATION, 2; EVIDENCE; HISTORIES.

HEARSE. See WAGON.

HEATHEN. See OATH; RELIGION.

HEAVY. As applied to different articles, is a comparative term.

Whether a bale of cotton is a "heavy article" or "an article of measurement," within the meaning of a railroad charter, is a question of fact, to be determined by a jury, and regulated by proof of custom.[8]

HEIFER. A female calf of the bovine species, from the end of the first year until she has had a calf.[9]

"Heifer" and "steer" describe animals of the bovine species advanced to an age beyond that of a calf. A more definite description is "yearling heifer," and "yearling steer."[10] See Cow.

---

[1] Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 171 (1869), Paine, J.; Jones v. Foster, 61 id. 29 (1884); Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. 343 (1873).

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 453.

[3] 1 Greenl Ev. § 99: [1 Phill. Ev. 169.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 170–75, cases.

[5] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 163, 98, 124.

[6] Mima Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cranch, 295 (1813), Marshall, C. J.; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 581 (1884); 1 Wheat. 8; 8 Wall. 409.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 177–80, cases.

[8] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 181–84, cases.

[9] See Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 321 (1888), cases.

[10] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 185–200, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 127–40.

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 201–25, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 103–7, cases.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 226–37, cases.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 238–51, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 115–23, cases.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 252–56, cases.

[5] 1 Whart. Ev. § 257, cases.

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 258–67, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 108, 112–14, cases.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 268–69, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 102, 110, cases.

[8] Elder v. Charlotte, &c. R. Co., 13 S. C. 281 (1879); Bonham v. Same, ib. 276 (1879).

[9] Freeman v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 435 (1838).

[10] Milligan v. Jefferson County, 2 Monta. 546 (1877). See also 7 Vt. 465; 40 id. 641; 11 Gray, 211; 8 Allen, 563; 16 Kan. 294.

HEIR. See HÆRES. 1. At common law, he upon whom the law casts the estate immediately on the death of the ancestor.[1] Correlative, ancestor, q. v.

Uncontrolled by the context, the person appointed by law to succeed to the real estate in case of intestacy.[2]

Simply one who succeeds to the estate of a deceased person.[3]

Whoever succeeds to property of an intestate.[4]

In a will, unexplained and uncontrolled by the context, construed according to its strict technical import,— the person who, by the statute of descent, would succeed to the real estate in case of intestacy. A term of description of a class of persons who, in the prescribed contingency, take the estate.[5]

He upon whom the law casts an estate of inheritance immediately on the death of the owner.[6]

The primary meaning is, the person related to one by blood, who would take the latter's real estate if he died intestate. The proper primary meaning of "next of kin" is, the person related by blood, who takes personal estate of one who dies intestate.

In New York "heirs," applied to the successors of personalty, means next of kin, and does not therefore include a widow or a husband of an intestate. In a few cases in other States "heirs," applied to personalty, has been held to mean those who by the statute of distributions take the personalty in case of intestacy. There is much confusion in the English cases upon the subject.[7]

No rule can be stated under which all the decisions can be classified. In general, where there is a gift to a person or his heirs, the word "heirs" denotes succession or substitution; the gift being primarily to the person named, or, if he is dead, then to his heirs in his place. In such cases, it has often been held that the word should be construed to mean the persons who would legally succeed to the property according to its nature or quality; and that the heirs at law would take the realty, and the next of kin or persons entitled to inherit personalty would take the personal estate. But where the gift is directly to the heirs of a person, as a substantive gift to them of something which their ancestor was in no event to take, this element of succession or substitution is wanting, and the heirs take as the persons designated in the instrument to take in their own right; and in such cases the courts have usually held that the word "heirs" must receive its common-law meaning — the persons entitled to succeed to real estate in a case of intestacy.[1]

"Heir" is a word of law; "son," "child," and the like, are words of nature.

"Heirs" may be used in deeds,[2] as it is often used in wills, for "children" or "issue,"[3] or grandchildren.[4]

May mean "devisee," "legatee," or "distributee."[5]

May be used where there is no subject to be inherited.[6]

A "widow" is an heir in a special, limited sense only.[7]

A "husband" is neither the heir nor next of kin of his wife, in any technical sense.[8]

In a devise, "heir" is a word of limitation.[9] See SHELLEY'S CASE.

Collateral heir. A relative not of the direct line of descent, but of a collateral line.

Heir apparent. He whose right of inheriting is indefeasible, provided he outlives the ancestor.[10]

In this sense, "heir" is in popular use.

Heir at law; heir at common law, or heir general. He upon whom the law casts the realty of an intestate.[11]

Heir of the body or natural heir. An heir begotten of the body; a lineal descendant.[12]

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 201; Bailey v. Bailey, 25 Mich. 188 (1872).

[2] Gauch v. St. Louis M. L. Ins. Co., 88 Ill. 256 (1878), Schoefield, C. J.; Fabens v. Fabens, 141 Mass. 399 (1886).

[3] McKinney v. Stewart, 3 Kan. 392 (1869), Valentine, J.; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 151-52 (1874); Fountain County Coal, &c. Co. v. Beckleheimer, 102 Ind. 76 (1884).

[4] [Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 203 (1886), Willie, C. J.

[5] Clark v. Cordis, 4 Allen, 480 (1862), Bigelow, C. J. See also Lombard v. Boyden, 5 id. 254 (1862); Loring v. Thorndike, ib. 269 (1862); Rand v. Sanger, 115 Mass. 128 (1874); Minot v. Harris, 132 id. 530-31 (1882), cases; Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 298 (1880); 101 Ind. 194; 65 Iowa, 80; 18 B. Mon. 829; 40 Miss. 758; 15 N. J. L. 404.

[6] Lavery v. Egan, 143 Mass. 392 (1887), Field, J.

[7] [Pillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 24-29 (1884), cases, Earl, J.

[1] Fabens v. Fabens, 141 Mass. 399-400 (1886), cases, C. Allen, J.

[2] Heard v. Horton, 1 Denio, 167-70 (1845), cases; See v. Derr, 57 Mich. 373 (1885).

[3] Haly v. Boston, 108 Mass. 579 (1871); Taggart v. Murray, 53 N. Y. 228 (1873); Jones v. Lloyd, 33 Ohio St. 578-80 (1878), cases; Eldridge v. Eldridge, 41 N. J. E. 91 (1886), cases; 42 id. 559; Myrick v. Heard, 31 F. R. 244 (1887).

[4] Woodruff v. Pleasants, 81 Va. 40 (1885).

[5] Sweet v. Dutton, 109 Mass. 591 (1872); Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 151 (1874); Elsey v. Odd Fellows Relief Society, 142 Mass. 226 (1886).

[6] Aspden's Estate, 2 Wall. Jr. 445 (1853).

[7] Unfried v. Heberer, 63 Ind. 72 (1878); Rusing v. Rusing, 25 id. 63 (1865); Eisman v. Poindexter, 52 id. 401 (1876); Clark v. Scott, 67 Pa. 452-53 (1871), cases.

[8] Ivins's Appeal, 106 Pa. 184 (1884).

[9] Daly v. James, 8 Wheat. 534 (1823); 99 Ind. 190.

[10] 2 Bl. Com. 208; 8 Bush, 115; 51 Barb. 137; 22 Me. 257.

[11] Aspden's Estate, 2 Wall. Jr. 433-38 (1853).

[12] Smith v. Pendell, 19 Conn. 111 (1848); Williams v. Allen, 17 Ga. 84 (1855); Roberts v. Ogbourne, 37 Ala. 178 (1861); Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 276-77 (1874).

Heir presumptive. He who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born.[1]

Heiress. A female heir; but, in law-language, "heir" includes both sexes.

At common law, "heir" is a word of inheritance, necessary to the grant of an estate larger than a life interest.[2] This nicety is a relic of feudal strictness.[3] Unless changed by statute, the rule requiring the use of the word is imperative: no synonym will supply its place; nor will any word of perpetuity.[4]

To bind his heirs, an obligor must use the word "heir" or its equivalent; not so, to bind an administrator or an executor.[5]

See ADOPT, 3; DESCENT; HEIRLOOM; HEREDITAMENT; INHERIT; PURCHASE, 2; RIGHT, 1.

2. In civil law, he who is called to the "succession" (q. v.), whether by the act of the deceased or by operation of law.

The universal successor is the "testamentary heir;" and, in cases of intestacy, the next of kin by blood is the "heir by intestacy" or "heir-at-law." The former corresponds to the executor, the latter to the administrator, of the common law. The "heir" administers both the real and the personal estate.[6] See HEIRS.

Heirloom. Such personalty as, contrary to the nature of chattels, goes by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor of the last proprietor.[7]

"Loom" is in Saxon geloma, leoma: limb, member; so that "heirloom" is a limb or member of the inheritance. Heirlooms are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold: as, charters, deeds, and other evidences of title to land, with the chests containing them; chimney-pieces, pumps, old fixed or dormant tables, benches and the like; also, the ancient jewels of the crown. Of the same nature is a monument or tombstone, a pew in a church, and like articles which, by special custom, cannot be devised away from the heir.[7]

Or, again, "loom" meant, at first, an implement for weaving, and, later, any household article—a table, cupboard, bedstead, wainscot, and the like. These came to be called "heir-looms" because, by special custom, they went to the heir of the owner at his decease, with the house in which they were used.[1]

Heirlooms are properly portraits, coats of arms, paintings, and such like, of the former owners of an inheritance.[2]

A bill in equity will lie for the specific delivery of an heirloom to the rightful owner.[3]

Heirlooms do not seem to be recognized by the law of this country.[4]

HELD. See HOLD, 1.

HELP. See AID, 1.

In an action by A to recover money promised him if he would "help" B to effect the sale of land, it was admitted that A had rendered the required services, and the parties in their pleadings construed the agreement to be that A should use his best effort to bring about the sale. Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to explain the word.[5]

HENCE. Compare SO.

HEREAFTER. Will of itself make a statute prospective, and save pending suits.[6]

HEREBY. See GRANT, 2.

HEREDITAMENT. Anything that may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed.[7]

The word is almost as comprehensive as property.[8]

Corporeal hereditament. Such thing as affects the senses, as may be seen and handled. Incorporeal hereditament. Is not the object of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled; is a creature of the mind, exists only in contemplation.[9] See CORPOREAL.

Corporeal hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects; all which may be comprehended under the general denomination of "land."[9]

An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal), or concerning, annexed to, or exercisable within the same. Its effects and profits may be objects of the senses: as, an annuity to a man and his heirs, rents, commons, ways, offices, franchises; and, formerly, advowsons, tithes, dignities, and corodies or pensions,[10] qq. v.

The right to a seat in a board of exchange is an incorporeal hereditament.[11]

---

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 208.

[2] St. Clair County Turnpike Co. v. Illinois, 96 U. S. 68 (1877).

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 107.

[4] 1 Washb. R. P. 56.

[5] Shep. Touch. 369; Coke, Litt. 209, a.

See also 44 Cal. 253; 40 Ga. 562; 45 Me. 250; 63 id. 379; 45 Pa. 201; 5 id. 461; 69 id. 190; 10 R. I. 509; 9 Ired. L. 370.

[6] 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 344; Story, Confl. Laws, § 506.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 427–29, 17.

[1] Cowell; Coke, Litt. 18 b; Shep. Touch. 432.

[2] Brown's Law Dict.

[3] Pusey v. Pusey, 1 White & T., L. C. *1109–11; 1 Story, Eq. § 709.

[4] 1 Washb. R. P., 4 ed., 20. See Moseley's Estate, 5 W. N. C. 102 (1877).

[5] Hooker v. Hyde, 61 Wis. 209 (1884).

[6] State v. Hicks, 48 Ark. 520 (1886).

[7] 1 Coke, Inst. 6; 5 Conn. 518; 13 N. Y. 159; 26 Barb 338; 5 Wend. 453.

[8] 3 Kent, 401.

[9] [2 Bl. Com. 17–18; 28 Barb. 340.

[10] 2 Bl. Com. 20–21.

[11] Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 524 (1876).

In principle there is no difference, as to the acquisition of rights, between corporeal and incorporeal objects. But, with regard to possession alone, as affecting title, a difference is introduced by reason of the statute of limitations. A grant of land, conferring an entire title, is not presumed from mere possession short of the statutory period. The statute makes all the provisions deemed necessary for quieting possessions of a corporeal nature, thereby removing these cases from the operation of the common law. Conclusive presumption of title to an incorporeal hereditament is afforded by twenty years' adverse, exclusive, undisturbed possession.[1]

See DEMESNE, Seized, etc.; DISTURBANCE; EJECTMENT; GRANT, 1.

HEREDITARY. 1. Subject to inheritance, q. v.

2. Transmitted to descendants: as, hereditary insanity, q. v.

HEREIN. May refer to the section, the chapter, or the entire enactment in which it is used.[2]

HEREINBEFORE. Compare ANTE.

In the clause, in a will, "I give . . . to the persons, societies and corporations to whom I have hereinbefore made bequests . . . " means, as the same now are or exist.[3]

HERESY. See RELIGION.

HERETOFORE. In time past.[4] See JURY, Trial by.

HERIOT.[5] A render of the best beast or other good (as the custom may be) to the lord on the death of the tenant of a copyhold estate.[6]

Also called "heriot-custom." "Heriot-service" was, substantially, a rent due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands.[7]

HERITABLE. See INHERITANCE.

HERMENEUTICS. "Legal hermeneutics" are the rules, as a system, for discovering the meaning of written language.[8]

HIDALGO. See PUEBLO.

HIDE. See ABSCOND; CONCEAL.

HIDES. See FUR.

HIGH. Elevated above another; superior; supreme.

In some connections, the use is pleonastic.

1. Having authority to preserve the peace within a district larger than some other's: opposed to petty: as, a high constable, q. v.

2. Supreme; above others: as, high court.

3. The more heinous: as, high crimes and misdemeanors, q. v.

4. Uninclosed; below low water-mark: as, the high sea, q. v. See also WATER-MARK.

5. Charged with the largest executive functions: as, high sheriff, q. v.

6. Directed against the government: as, high treason; opposed to petty treason. See TREASON.

7. Belonging to, or for use by, the public at large: as, in highway. See WAY.

Highest. 1. Superior to any other: as, the highest bid, q. v.

2. The most scrupulous: as, the highest good faith, q. v.

HILARY. See TERM, 4.

HINDER. To "hinder and delay" creditors is to do something which is an attempt to defraud them; to put some obstacle in the path, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before the creditor can realize what is owed him out of the debtor's property.[1]

The hindering and delaying which vitiates an assignment is such as is sought through covin or malice on the part of the debtor for his benefit. The fraudulent intent is a question of fact.[2] See CONVEYANCE, Fraudulent; DELAY.

HIRING. A contract for the use of personalty, or for services. A species of bailment for a price or recompense.

1. As to things. A contract whereby the possession and a transient property is transferred for a particular time or use, on condition to restore the goods as soon as the time is expired or the use performed, together with the price, expressly agreed upon or left to be implied by law according to the value of the service.[3]

The hirer acquires a temporary property in the thing, accompanied with an implied condition to use it with moderation; while the owner or lender retains a reversionary interest in the thing, and acquires a new property in the price or reward. Of such is the loan of money on interest.[4]

2. As to services. The contracts classed under this head are contracts for work, for

[1] Cornett v. Rhudy, 80 Va. 712-14 (1885), cases.

[2] See State ex rel. Smiley v. Glenn, 7 Heisk. 485, 475, 480 (1872).

[3] Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 464 (1873).

[4] Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 157 (1873); 12 N. Y. 427, 458; 1 N. J. L. 272.

[5] A. S. heregeatu, military apparel.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 97.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 421-25.

[8] See Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm.

[1] Burnham v. Brennan, 42 N. Y. Super. 68 (1877), Curtis, C. J.: 74 N. Y. 597 (1878).

[2] Burr v. Clement, 9 Col. 8-10 (1885), cases.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 453. See 2 Kent, 456; Story. Bailm. § 359; 24 Am. Law Reg. 238-43 (1885), cases.

the safe-keeping of personalty, and for the carriage of persons or personalty.

"Storage" and "carriage" are in more common use than any inflections of hire, to designate a contract for the custody of ordinary merchandise, or for the transportation of persons or property.[1]

The idea of "hiring" may be involved in "employment," but its application is not restricted to any particular mode of use.[2]

See BAILMENT; DEPOSIT, 1; LOCATIO.

HISTORIES. See BOOK.

Historical facts, of general and public notoriety, may be proved by reputation; and that reputation may be established by historical works of known character and accuracy. But evidence of this sort is confined in a great measure to ancient facts, which do not presuppose better evidence in existence; and where, from the nature of the transaction, or the remoteness of the period, or the public and general reception of the facts, a just foundation is laid for general confidence. The work of a living author who is within reach of process is not of this nature. He may be called as a witness, and examined as to the sources and accuracy of his information. If the facts are of recent date, and within the knowledge of many persons living, from whom he derived his materials, his book is not the best evidence.[3]

HITHERTO. Restrains the meaning of a phrase to a period of time then elapsed.[4]

HOC. See under H.

HODGE-PODGE. See HOTCHPOT.

HOE. See WEAPON, Deadly.

HOG. Hogs are "cattle," within the meaning of a guaranty of drafts against shipments of "cattle."[5]

And also within a statute requiring fencing to protect lands from "straying cattle."[6]

Hogs are "swine;" and the word "hog" will also include a "sow."[7]

In a statute punishing larceny, the live animal or its carcass may be meant;[8] and the word will describe a pig four or five months old.[9]

See ANIMAL; CATTLE.

HOLD. 1. To decide, adjudge, decree.

Whence held, decided, ruled, adjudged: as, the court "held" the evidence admissible, or the defendant not liable. In head-notes to reports of cases, follows the statement of the facts and introduces the decision of the court thereon.

2. To deduce as a rule or principle; to maintain on the strength of decided cases: as, the authorities "hold" so and so.

3. To assert, declare, maintain; to occupy the position of propounding as a fact or as law: as, the plaintiff "holds" the affirmative of the issue. See BURDEN, Of proof.

4. To cause to be bound or obligated; to confine or restrain: as, "to hold him to his contract," "the obligor is held and firmly bound," "persons held to service;" "hold" and "held to bail," or "for court," or "for trial." Compare BIND.

5. To sit for a specified purpose; to sit to administer justice: as, to "hold court," "hold pleas;" to "hold an election;" to "hold a hearing" or "session."

6. To possess by virtue of a lawful title: as, "hold a note" or "bond;" "hold lands" or "property," "to have and to hold" described premises; "hold office;" "hold" a fund, or lien, a policy of insurance, a share, stakes, stocks, etc. Compare TENURE.

Whence also free*hold*, lease*hold*.

"Holding," relating to ownership in property, embraces two ideas: actual possession of some subject of property, and being invested with the legal title. It may be applied to anything the subject of property, in law or in equity.[1]

Under an act forbidding a foreign corporation to "acquire and hold" land, a conveyance is not necessarily void. The holding may be subject to the right of escheat.[2]

Holder. One who has possession of anything. One who possesses by virtue of a lawful title:

As, a bondholder, fundholder, lienholder, officeholder, property holder, policy-holder, shareholder, stakeholder, stockholder, qq. v.

Holder in good faith; holder for value; innocent holder. He is a holder of negotiable paper or bonds for value, who pays real, in contradistinction from apparent, value, without notice of any fraud or illegality affecting the instrument.[3]

[1] [1 Abbott's Law Dict. 565.

[2] Hightower v. State, 73 Ga. 484 (1884).

[3] Morris v. Lessee of Harmer's Heirs, 7 Pet. *558 (1833), Story, J. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 497; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 664, 838.

[4] Mason v. Jones, 13 Barb. 479 (1852).

[5] First Nat. Bank of Decatur v. Home Savings Bank of St. Louis, 21 Wall. 299 (1874).

[6] Child v. Hearn, L. R., 9 Ex. 181 (1874).

[7] Rivers v. State, 10 Tex. Ap. 179 (1881).

[8] Whitson v. Culbertson, 7 Ind. 195 (1855); Hunt v. State, 55 Ala. 140 (1876); Reed v. State, 16 Fla. 564 (1878).

[9] Lavender v. State, 60 Ala. 60 (1877).

[1] Witsell v. Charleston, 7 S. C. 99 (1875). See also Godfrey v. Godfrey, 17 Ind. 9 (1861); Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 297 (1874); Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 120 (1840); 39 N. J. E. 547.

[2] Hickory Farm Oil Co. v. Buffalo, &c. R. Co., 32 F. R. 22 (1887); Runyan v. Lessee of Coster, 14 Pet. 122 (1840).

[3] Montclair Township v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 161, 169 (1882), Harlan, J.; Story, Prom. Notes, § 195; Byles, Bills, 117, 119, 124.

If any previous holder of bonds in suit was a bona fide holder for value, the plaintiff, without showing that he himself paid value, can avail himself of the position of such previous holder.[1]

See further BEARER; CHECK; FAITH, Good; NEGOTIATE, 2.

Holding over; hold over. (1) Retaining possession of premises after a lease has expired, and without fresh leave from the owner.

Such tenant holds "at sufferance," and his estate is destroyed when the owner makes actual entry, or gives notice to quit. Being once in possession, the law supposes a continuance authorized. The tenant may be required to account for profits made.[2] See DETAINER, 2; ENTRY, I, 1; QUIT, 2.

(2) Continuing to exercise the functions of an office after the end of one's term, and before a successor is qualified.

In many cases statutes, and in others common-law rules, to prevent an interregnum in an office, authorize the incumbent to continue to serve until a successor has been regularly qualified. See VACANCY.

HOLIDAY. A secular day on which the law exempts all persons from the performance of contracts for labor or other personal service, from attendance at court, and from attention to legal proceedings.

Legal or public holidays are appointed by statute law, or are authorized by custom having the force of law. These are New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Decoration day, Independence day, Thanksgiving day, Christmas day; in some States good Friday; general election days; and other days appointed by the President or the governor of the State for thanksgiving, fasting, or other observance.

On these days public business is suspended, and the presentment and protest of paper is excused, as on Sunday. Falling on Sunday, the Monday succeeding is generally observed; paper becoming due on such Monday is payable on the Saturday preceding. Paper due on Decoration day or Good Friday is generally payable on the secular day next previous thereto.[3]

The observance of a holiday binds no man's conscience. It is his privilege to labor or not, as he prefers.[4]

The expression "legal holiday" of itself imports a dies non juridicus.[5] See SUNDAY.

HOLOGRAPH.[1] An instrument written entirely in the hand of one person, as, by a grantor, or testator. Spelled also olograph. Whence holographic, and olographic.[2]

An olographic will being "one that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the deceased," a will partly written upon a printed form is not such.[3] Opposed, dictated will.

Generally speaking, holograph wills require no attestation.[4]

HOMAGE. See ALLEGIANCE; FEUD.

HOME. While children "remain at home," in a will, may refer to the household of which the testator was head.[5] See HOUSEHOLD.

Where a person takes up his abode, without any present intention to remove therefrom permanently.[6] See further ABODE; DOMICIL; HOUSE; RESIDENCE.

Homestall. In ancient law, a mansion house.[7]

"Stall" and "stead" were Anglo-Saxon for place, seat, fixed spot, station.

Homestead. The home-stall, home-place. The dwelling-house, at which the family resides, with the usual and customary appurtenances, including outbuildings of every kind necessary and convenient for family use, and lands used for the purposes thereof.[8] Whence homesteader.

In its popular sense, whatever is used, being either necessary or convenient, as a place of residence for the family, as contradistinguished from a place of business.[9]

Sometimes used as a verb; as, he "homesteaded his pre-emption."[10]

Homestead laws. Constitutional or stat

[1] Montclair Township v. Ramsdell, ante.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 150; 3 id. 210; Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 601 (1885).

[3] See Penn. Acts 25 May, 1874, 12 April, 1869, 2 April, 1873; N. Y. Stat. 1873, c. 577.

[4] Richardson v. Goddard, 23 How. 43, 41 (1859).

[5] Lampe v. Manning, 33 Wis. 676 (1875); 14 Bank. Reg. 868.

[1] Gk. holo-graphos, wholly written.

[2] See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581; Code Civ. 970.

[3] Cal. Civ. Code, § 1277: Re Estate of Rand, 61 Cal. 468 (1882): 14 Rep. 716; 3 Woods, 77.

[4] See 3 Jarman, Wills (R. & T.), 767, note.

[5] Manning v. Woff, 2 Dev. & B., Eq. 12 (N. C. 1838).

[6] Warren v. Thomaston, 43 Me. 418 (1857); 3 id. 229; 15 id. 58; 19 id. 293; 35 Vt. 232.

[7] Dickinson v. Mayer, 11 Heisk. 521 (1872); 4 Bl. Com. 225.

[8] Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 227 (1867), Sanderson, J.; Estate of Delaney, 37 id. 179 (1869); 4 id. 28; 16 id. 181. See also 63 Ala. 238; 31 Ark. 465; 48 id. 236; 54 Ill. 175; 12 Kan. 257; 77 N. C. 384; 7 N. H. 245; 36 id. 166; 46 id. 53; 51 id. 266; 63 id. 428; 6 Tex. 102; 23 id. 498; 42 id. 37; 28 Vt. 672; 46 id. 292; 1 Wash. R. P. 352.

[9] Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 228, 236-37 (1867); Re Crowey, 71 id. 303 (1886).

[10] Timber Cases, 11 F. R. 81 (1881).

ntory provisions for the exemption of a certain amount or value of realty, occupied by a person as his homestead, from a forced sale for the payment of his debts. In some States restraints are placed upon alienation by the owner, and in some the property descends to the widow and minor children free from liability for his debts. The estate is like an estate for life.[1]

It is settled: 1. That the object of the homestead law is to protect the family of the owner in the possession and enjoyment of the property. 2. That that construction must be given such laws which will best advance and secure their object. 3. To divest a homestead estate, there must be a literal compliance with the mode of alienation prescribed by statutes.[2]

While a very limited estate in the land, perhaps even a leasehold, may support a claim, some estate is essential.[3]

Where the "joint consent" of a husband and wife is essential to the alienation of a homestead, the better rule is to have it evidenced by their signatures to the same instrument, before the same officer, and in the presence of each other.[4]

The act of May 20, 1862, is the first homestead law of the general government. By it a quantity of land not exceeding 160 acres is given to any person who is the head of a family, or who is twenty-one, and a citizen or intends to become such, on condition of settlement, cultivation, and continuous occupancy as a home for the period of five years.[5] See ABANDON; OWNER.

HOMICIDE.[6] The killing of any human creature.[7]

A generic term, embracing every mode by which the life of one man is taken by the act of another.[8]

Criminal homicide consists in the unlawful taking by one human being of the life of another in such a manner that he dies within a year and a day from the time of the giving of the mortal wound.[1]

If committed with malice, express or implied, it is murder; if without malice, manslaughter. The injury must continue to affect the body of the victim till death. If death ensues from another cause, no murder or manslaughter has been committed. . . The person who unlawfully sets the means of death in motion, whether through an irresponsible instrument or agent, or in the body of the victim, is the guilty cause of the death at the time and place at which his unlawful act produces its fatal result.[2]

Homicidal. Involving or directed toward the killing of a fellow man: as, homicidal intent, or monomania.

"Homicide," as a term, does not necessarily import crime: it includes acts which are crimes. The distinctions denoted by "fratricide," "matricide," "parricide," "patricide," "regicide," "sororicide," are not observed in law. But "prolicide," destroying offspring, "fœticide," killing an unborn child, "infanticide," killing an infant soon after its birth, and "suicide," killing one's self, are employed in senses which involve, more or less, commission of crime.

Killing is justifiable, excusable, or felonious.

Justifiable homicide. When a life is taken in the performance of a duty or the exercise of a right.

This is (1) owing to some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or design, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and is, therefore, without blame. Or, it is (2) for the advancement of public justice — by permission: as, where an officer kills a person who resists lawful arrest; where one kills a person charged with felony; killing in dispersing a riot, or by a jailer to prevent an escape. In these cases there must be an apparent necessity. Of this character, also, is killing in war; and so were deaths in trials by battle. To this grade likewise belong killings to prevent forcible or atrocious crimes: as, robbery, murder, burglary, arson; but not mere larceny from the person, nor house-breaking in the day-time. A husband or father may kill for attempted rape [2] — flagrante crimine.

Where one in defense of his person, habitation, or property kills another, who manifestly intends and endeavors by violence or surprise to commit a forcible or atrocious felony, such killing is justifiable homicide. In that case, also, the justification must depend upon the circumstances as they appear to the prisoner.[3]

Excusable homicide. When a life is lost by an accident in the lawful doing of a proper act, or is taken to prevent death or grievous injury to another person.

[1] See Barney v. Leeds, 51 N. H. 261 (1871); Fink v. O'Neil, 106 U. S. 275 (1882); 10 Am. Law Reg. 641-56, 705-17 (1862), cases; 20 id. 1-17, 137-50 (1871), cases,— as to the Southern States; Thompson, Homest, &c. § 1; 4 Cal. 26, 33; 33 id. 226; 11 Ga. 89; 1 Iowa, 439; 18 Tex. 615; 34 Wis. 657; 61 id. 374; 102 U. S. 321; 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. 754.

[2] Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 644 (1887), cases, Simpson, Commissioner.

[3] Myrick v. Bill, 3 Dak. 293 (1884), cases.

[4] Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 645 (1887).

[5] R. S. §§ 2289-2317; Seymour v. Sanders, 3 Dill. 441 (1874). Waiving the right, Linkenhoker's Heirs v. Detrick, 31 Va. 44, 56 (1885), cases.

[6] F. homicide, manslaughter: L. homicidium; or, a man-killer: L. homicida: homo, a man; cædere, to kill.

[7] 4 Bl. Comm. 177.

[8] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 303 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 6-8 (1869), cases, Gray, J.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 178-82.

[3] Parrish v. Commonwealth, 31 Va. 1, 14-16 (1884), cases. See in general, 26 Am. Law Reg. 706-8 (1887), cases; committed from necessity, 1 Law Quar. Rev. 51-61 (1885).

This is (1) by misadventure, where a man doing a lawful act without intention to hurt, unfortunately kills another: as, where the head of a hatchet flies off and kills a by-stander; where a parent, teacher, or officer causes death from moderate punishment of a child, or of a criminal. The act is in itself lawful; the effect is accidental. This species of homicide is to be distinguished from manslaughter. Or, it is (2) in self-defense, upon a sudden affray, and with no avenue of escape from manifest danger to life or great bodily harm.[1]

Felonious homicide. Killing a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse.[2]

The killing may be of one's self or of another person. When without malice, the crime is manslaughter; when with malice, murder.[3]

See further DEFENSE, 1; INSANITY, 2 (6); MALICE; MANSLAUGHTER; MURDER; PROVOCATION; RETREAT; SUICIDE; THREAT.

HOMO. L. A human being; man, a man, a person.

Literally, a creature of the earth — humus. Derivatives: homage, homicide.

De homine replegiando. For replevying a man. See REPLEVIN, 2.

Liber homo. A free man; also, in Roman law, a freedman.

Liber et legalis homo. A free (good) and lawful person: a juror, who was to be neither a bondsman nor infamous.[3]

Novus homo. A new man; a man pardoned of crime.

HOMOLOGATE.[4] To say the like.[5]

Homologation. Approbation; confirmation; ratification, whether by a party or a court.

In use in civil and Scotch law.

HONESTE VIVERE. See LAW.

HONESTY. When a transaction is as compatible with honesty as with dishonesty, the former is always presumed.[6]

A person who keeps in his employ a servant found to be dishonest cannot have recourse to the guarantor of the servant's integrity for a loss occurring during subsequent service.[7] See CONSCIENCE; EQUITY; FAITH; TRUST, 1.

HONOR. v, 1. To accept a bill of exchange, or to pay a promissory note, according to its tenor.

Dishonor. To neglect or refuse to accept or pay commercial paper when due. See further DISHONOR.

Act of honor. An instrument drawn by a notary, after a bill has been protested, or on behalf of a friend of the maker, who wishes to protect the maker's credit, by an acceptance. See PROTEST, 2, Supra, etc.

2, n. A term of respect given, in the course of address, to persons occupying the higher judicial positions: as, "his honor," "your honor," "their honors;" also, "honorable court."

HONORARIUM. L. A gift for services rendered.

A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money; in particular, a donation to an advocate at law, who was deemed to practice for honor and influence, and not for fees.[1] See FEE, 2.

HOOK. "To hook" may not be equivalent to "to steal."[2]

HORN-BOOK. A name formerly given to an elementary treatise upon any subject.

Horn-book law. Elementary or rudimentary law.

A "horn-book" was originally a sheet containing the alphabet, mounted on wood and protected with transparent horn, or simply pasted on a slice of horn.[3]

HORSE. A generic term, including, ordinarily, the different species of the animal, however diversified by age, sex, or artificial means.[4]

In a given connection may not include a "gelding, mare, or colt."[4]

In an action against a railroad company for damages for killing a "horse," an amendment of the complaint describing the animal as a "mare" does not introduce a new cause of action.[5]

An "ass" or "jackass" may be considered as a horse, within the meaning of an exemption law.[6]

So may a "mule" be, within a statute giving a remedy for injuries to "horses and cattle" by a railroad company.[7]

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 182–88.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 188–201.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 340, 362.

[4] Gk. homologein, to assent, agree; homos, the same; log-, leg-, to speak.

[5] Syndics v. Gardenier, 9 Mart. o. s. 546 (1821).

[6] Chapman v. McIlwrath, 77 Mo. 44 (1882).

[7] Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 110 (1886); Brandt, Sure. § 368.

[1] McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 105 (1853); 3 Bl. Com. 28; 19 Pa. 95; Weeks. Atty's, 536.

[2] Hays v. Mitchell, 7 Blackf. *117 (1844).

[3] See Ency. Britannica.

[4] Banks v. State, 28 Tex. 647 (1866); Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. 264 (1871); Owens v. State, 38 Tex. 557 (1873); Turley v. State, 3 Humph. 324 (1842); State v. Dunnavant, 3 Brev. 10 (S. C., 1811).

[5] South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Bees, 82 Ala. 349 (1886), cases.

[6] Richardson v. Duncan, 2 Heisk. 222 (1870); Ohio, &c. R. Co. v. Brubaker, 47 Ill. 463 (1868).

[7] Toledo, &c. R. Co. v. Cole, 50 Ill. 186 (1869); Brown v. Bailey, 4 Ala. 413 (1842).

A colt may be exempt as a "horse" or as a "work-beast," if the debtor has nothing more nearly answering the description of a horse.[1]

A "span of horses" means two horses which may be connected together or united for the purposes of a team. A colt four months old is not exempt from sale on execution, as forming with its dam a "span of horses," within the meaning of a statute.[2]

But an uncastrated colt two years old is not a "stallion."[3]

A stallion, not kept for farm work, is not a "horse" exempt from execution.[4]

A horse not broken to harness may still be a "work-horse" — an animal of the horse kind fit for service.[5]

The exemption of a horse from execution may include everything essential to its beneficial use, as, a bridle, a saddle, etc.[6]

See ANIMAL; BATTERY; CATTLE; DECEIT; GENTLE; HEALTH, Boards of; HIRING; IMPLEMENTS; LIVERY-STABLE; MANAGEABLE; SOUND, 2 (2); TEAM; WARRANTY, 2.

Horse-racing. See GAME, 2.

Horse-railway. See RAILROAD.

HORTICULTURE. See AGRICULTURE.

HOSPITAL. See CHARITY, 2.

HOSTELER. See HOTEL; INN.

HOSTILE. See EMBARGO; ENEMY; POSSESSION, Adverse.

HOTCHPOT.[7] Blending properties belonging to two or more persons in order to make an equal division.

Also spelled hodge-podge, hotch-potch, hotspot.

As, where advancements (q. v.) are treated as returned, and the estate as a whole divided anew.

"Hotch-pot meant, originally, a pudding: for in a pudding is put one thing with other things."[8]

By this metaphor our ancestors meant that lands in partition among co-parceners, given in frank-marriage, and lands descending in fee-simple, should be mixed or blended together, and then divided in equal portions among all the daughters of their ancestor. . . An incident to an estate is co-parcenary. If, to advance a daughter in marriage, an estate-tail in lands was given her, and afterward lands descended from the donor to her and her sisters in fee-simple, she had no share in the latter unless she agreed to divide her advancement in equal proportion with the lands so descended. Hereby two sorts of lands were mixed and then divided equally.[1]

HOTEL. What in France was known as a hotelerie,[2] and in England as a common "inn" of the superior class found in cities and large towns.[3] See INN; TAVERN.

HOUMAS GRANTS. Certain grants of land in Louisiana; as to the history of which see the case cited hereto.[4]

HOUR. See BUSINESS; DAY; SERVICE, 1; TIME.

HOUSE. 1. A dwelling-house; a building divided into floors and apartments, with four walls, a roof, doors, and chimneys.

But not necessarily precisely this.[5]

Involves the ideas of an edifice or structure, and the abode or residence of human beings.

Criminal statutes constantly use "house" as equivalent to "building." A term indicating the particular purpose to which a building is applied may be prefixed; as in state-house, court-house, school-house. In "out-house," buildings that are not dwellings, but merely appendages to some dwelling, are included. When a dwelling is meant, "dwelling-house" or "mansion-house" is usually and properly employed.[6]

While "house" is broader than "dwelling-house," it is narrower than "building."[7]

Does not necessarily mean a whole building; is often applied to a separate apartment.[8,7]

May mean "messuage" — land and structure; as in a will, and in statutes exempting property from taxation.[9]

The law of England has so particular and tender a regard to the immunity of a man's house that it styles it his "castle" and will not suffer it to be violated with impunity. Whence the aphorism, "every man's house is his castle." For this reason, no outside door can, in general, be broken open to execute civil process; though, in criminal causes, the public safety supersedes private. Hence, also, in part, arises the

---

[1] Winfrey v. Zimmerman, 8 Bush, 588 (1871); Mallory v. Berry, 16 Kan. 295 (1876). Compare Carruth v. Grassie, 11 Gray, 211 (1858); Johnson v. Babcock, 8 Allen, 583 (1864).

[2] Ames v. Martin, 6 Wis. *362 (1858).

[3] Aylesworth v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 30 Iowa, 460 (1870).

[4] Robert v. Adams, 38 Cal. 383 (1869); Allman v. Gann, 29 Ala. 242 (1856).

[5] Noland v. Wickham, 9 Ala. 171 (1846); Winfrey v. Zimmerman, 8 Bush, 588 (1871).

[6] Cobbs v. Coleman, 14 Tex. 598 (1855); Dearborn v. Phillips, 21 id. 451 (1858).

[7] F. hochepot, shake-pot; a medley,— Skeat.

[8] Littleton, §§ 267, 55; 3 Coke, Litt, ch. 12.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 190-91, 517. See Comer v. Comer, 119 Ill. 179 (1886).

[2] From hostel, Latin hospes, a stranger who lodged at the house of another; also, the master of a house who entertains travelers or guests.

[3] Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly, 21 (1867), Daly, F. J.; ib. 200; 54 Barb. 316; 4 Duer, 116; 33 Cal. 557.

[4] Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412 (1884).

[5] Daniel v. Coulsting, 49 E. C. L. *125 (1845), Tindal, C. J.; Surman v. Darley, 14 Me. & W. 185 (1845); 2 Man. & R. 514; 8 Barn. & C. 461; 1 Car. & K. 533.

[6] State v. Powers, 36 Conn. 79 (1869), Parke, J.; 4 Bl. Com. 221, 224; 7 Biss. 271.

[7] State v. Garity, 46 N. H. 62 (1865).

[8] Quinn v. People, 71 N. Y. 563-74 (1878), cases; Commonwealth v. Bulman, 118 Mass. 456 (1875).

[9] Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. 101 (1846); McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 358 (1868); Council of Richmond v. State, 5 Ind. 387 (1854); Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 165 (1875).

animadversion of the law upon eavesdropping, nuisances, incendiaries; and for this reason a man may assemble people together lawfully, to protect and defend his house.[1]

A man may defend his house even to the taking of life, if apparently necessary to prevent persons from forcibly entering it against his will, and when warned not to enter and to desist from the use of force. But the law does not sanction taking life to prevent a mere trespass upon real estate.[2] See DOMUS, SUA, etc.

A landlord might not formerly break open a house to make a distress; that would be a breach of the peace. But when he was once in the house, he might break open an inner door.[3] See Mansion-house.

Ancient house. A house which has stood for twenty years.

In England, such house acquires a prescriptive right to support from the adjoining soil. In the United States, as a rule, each land-owner has a right to the support of his ground in its natural state from the adjoining land, but not for buildings.[4] See SUPPORT, 2.

House-breaking. Breaking and entering the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit a felony therein, irrespective of the time of day. Compare BURGLARY.

Household. A family; also, pertaining or appropriate to a house or family: as, household furniture, goods, stuff. See FURNITURE.

Persons who dwell together as a family.[5]

Household goods. Articles of a permanent nature, not consumed in their enjoyment, that are used, purchased or otherwise acquired by a person for his house.[6]

Not then, such articles as potatoes, bacon, vinegar, and salt, especially when held for sale or barter.[6]

Householder. The head of a household; the person who has charge of, and provides for, a family or household.[7] See EXEMPTION; FAMILY.

In a statute requiring jurors to be householders, means something more than occupant of a room or house; implies the idea of a domestic establishment, of the management of a household.[1]

House of correction. A prison for the confinement, after conviction, of paupers who refused to work, and vagrants.

Established in the reign of Elizabeth.[2]

For idle and disorderly persons, parents of bastards, beggars, servants who run away, trespassers, rogues, vagabonds, spendthrifts, and the like.[3]

House of ill-fame. A brothel or bawdy-house.

A synonym for "bawdy-house." Has no reference to the fame of the place, but denotes the fact; proof of the fact may be aided by proof of the fame.[4]

Such resorts are public nuisances: they draw lewd persons, endanger the peace, and corrupt the manners.[5]

A flat-boat may be kept as such a house.[6]

A house of prostitution is a constant menace to the good order of the community. It is a nuisance and the keeping of it a misdemeanor at common law. Its suppression, with punishment, are proper subjects of police regulation. In one form or another the authority to prohibit and suppress is given to cities and towns.[7]

See further FAME, Ill-fame; BAWDY-HOUSE; LEWD; PATRONIZE.

House of refuge. A public institution for the confinement of incorrigible youth.

Mansion-house. In the law of burglary, a dwelling-house.

If a house, stable, or warehouse be parcel of the mansion-house, and within the same common fence, though not under the same roof or contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein; for the capital house protects and privileges all its branches or appurtenances, if within the curtilage or home-stall. A chamber in a college is the mansion-house of the owner. So also is a room or lodging in any private house the mansion, for the time being, of the lodger, if the owner does not dwell in the house, or if he and the lodger enter by different doors. But a tent or booth is not a mansion-house: the law regards thus highly nothing but permanent edifices.[8]

Public-house. (1) "Public" may be applied to a house, either on account of the proprietorship, as, a court-house, which belongs

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 223. See also 3 Kan. Law J. 294, 314 (1886) — Chic. Leg. Adv.

[2] Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 229 (1878).

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 11. See particularly Semayne's Case, 5 Rep. 91 (1605): 1 Sm. L. C. (H. & W.) 228; Curtis v. Hubbard, 4 Hill, 437 (1842); Nash v. Lucas, L. R., 2 Q. B. 593 (1867).

[4] See 2 Kent, 437.

[5] Arthur v. Morgan, 112 U. S. 499 (1884), Blatchford, J., defining household effects subject to duty under R. S. § 2505.

[6] [Smith v. Findley, 34 Kan. 316, 323 (1885), Horton, Chief Justice.

[7] Griffin v. Sutherland, 14 Barb. 458 (1852); Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. 475 (1838); Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. 402 (1820); 52 Ala. 161; 6 Bush, 429; 15 B. Mon. 447; 110 Ill. 533; 57 Miss. 298; 2 Tex. Ap. 448.

[1] Aaron v. State, 37 Ala. 113 (1861); 21 id. 261; 17 id. 482; 6 Baxt. 522.

[2] 3 Steph. Com. 225; 4 Bl. Com. 370, 377.

[3] Tomlin; Laws, Prov. of Penn. (1682).

[4] State v. Smith, 29 Minn. 195 (1882); 28 Mich. 213; 29 Wis. 435; 38 Tex. 603; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 1088; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1451.

[5] Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 471 (1846); State v. Main, 31 id. 574 (1863); McAlister v. Clark, 33 id. 92 (1865); State v. Garing, 74 Me. 153 (1882); Commonwealth v. Lavonsair, 132 Mass. 3 (1882).

[6] State v. Mullen, 35 Iowa, 207 (1872).

[7] Rogers v. People, 9 Col. 452 (1886), Helm, J.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 224-26.

to the county, or from the purposes for which it is used, as, a tavern, a store-house, or a house for retailing liquors.[1]

Statutes against gaming in "public-houses" have particularly in view houses that are public on account of the uses to which they are put. Whether any specified house is public is a question of law, although the general question whether a place is public may be a question of fact.[1] Compare PLACE, Public.

(2) An hotel or inn, qq. v.

See BAY-WINDOW; CLEARING; CURTILAGE; DISORDERLY; DOMICIL; DWELLING; FAMILY; FINISHED; FLOOR; GRANT, 2; HEALTH; HEIRLOOM; INCIDENT; LAND; MESSUAGE; NUISANCE; SEARCH; SERVANT, 1. Compare DOMUS.

2. A body of persons organized for the performance of business or duties of a public nature; in particular, a legislative assembly, or a branch thereof.

May mean the entire number of members;[2] or merely the members present doing business.[3]

House of Commons, or of Lords. See PARLIAMENT.

House of Representatives. See ASSEMBLY; CONGRESS.

Lower House. The popular branch of a legislature; the house of representatives. Upper House. The Senate.

HUCKSTER. Compare HAWKER.

HUE-AND-CRY.[4] In old common law, pursuing, with horn and voice, felons and such as dangerously wounded another.

Statute of 13 Edw. I (1285), c. 1–4, directed that every county should be so well kept, that immediately upon felonies being committed, fresh suit should be made from town to town and from county to county, and that hue and cry should be raised upon the felons, and that they that kept the town should follow with hue and cry with all the town and the towns near, until the fugitives were taken. . . By statute of 27 Eliz. (1585), c. 13, no hue and cry was sufficient unless made with both horsemen and footmen. . . The whole district was liable to be amerced, according to the law of Alfred, if a felon escaped. . . Hue and cry could be raised either by the precept of a justice, or by a peace-officer, or by any private man who knew that a felony had been committed. The party raising it communicated all the circumstances he knew as to the crime and the person of the felon.[1]

HUMANE SOCIETIES. See CRUELTY.

HUNDRED. A civil division of a county.

Consisted of ten tithings. So called, because it was equal to a hundred hides of land; or because it furnished one hundred men in time of war.[2]

Hundredor. An inhabitant of a hundred; also, a qualified juryman within a hundred; and, also, the executive officer of a hundred.[2]

HUNG. Is sometimes applied to a jury which fails to agree upon a verdict.

HURDLE. In old English law, a species of sledge, on which traitors were drawn to the place of execution.[3] See TREASON.

HURON. See LAKES.

HUSBAND. A man who has a wife; a man legally bound in wedlock to a wife.

"Husband and wife" describes persons connected by the marriage tie, and the relation signifies those mutual rights and obligations which flow from the marriage contract.[4]

At common law, husband and wife are one person in law, and he is that person; that is, the legal existence of the woman is suspended or at least incorporated into that of the husband, under whose protection she performs everything. Hence, he cannot grant her anything, nor contract with her; but she can be his agent, and take a bequest from him. He must provide her with necessaries, or she can contract for them on his credit. He pays her ante-nuptial debts; such of her personalty as is in her possession, or as he reduces to possession, is his; likewise, the profits of her lands. Her estate is liable for his debts. She is sued and sues with him, unless he is civilly dead. They cannot give evidence for or against each other. He may chastise her moderately. Either one may have security of the peace against the other. For any crime, committed in his presence, except treason and murder, she is presumed to act by his coercion. The injuries to his rights are abduction, adultery, and beating.[5]

By the common law, her money and earnings belonged to him absolutely. The idea was that as he was bound to support the wife and the family, he was entitled to whatever she possessed or acquired. Such property then being absolutely his own, was subject to his disposal without regard to the necessities of the family, and might be taken in execution by his creditors.[6]

As, at common law, the personal property of the wife

---

[1] Shihagan v. State, 9 Tex. 431 (1853); 10 id. 275, 545; 12 Ala. 492; 19 id. 526; 20 id. 51; 27 id. 31, 47; 25 id. 78; 29 id. 40, 46; 30 id. 19, 524, 532, 550; 31 id. 371; 32 id. 596; 35 id. 390.

[2] Re Executive Communication, 12 Fla. 656 (1868).

[3] Southworth v. Palmyra, &c. R. Co., 2 Mich. 288 (1851); Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 669 (1856); Freilsen v. Mahan, 21 La. An. 103 (1869).

[4] Hue: F. huer, to hoot, shout; or, to foot, i. e., up foot and cry: run and cry after the felon,—Wood, Inst. 370. F. cry de pais.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 293–94; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 187.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 116; 3 id. 34, 161, 359; 4 id. 245, 294, 352, 411.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 92, 376.

[4] People v. Hovey, 5 Barb. 118 (1849). See Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 330 (1884).

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 442; 2 id. 433; 3 id. 139; 4 id. 28; Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 243 (1879).

[6] Jackson v. Jackson, 91 U. S. 124 (1875), Field, J.

passed to the husband upon marriage, she was deprived of this means of supporting her children, and all legal duties growing out of the marriage were imposed upon him. . . Even where the wife possesses separate property, it has been held, independently of statutory obligation, that she is not compelled to support the children of the marriage.[1] See EARNINGS, Separate.

She is always under his power. Hence, the disabilities and safeguards the law places around her. He is liable for her frauds, torts, and breaches of trust.[2] He, she, or both, may have a remedy for an injury to her person or reputation,[3]—the right of action in herself alone being given by statute.

Unless the existing claims of creditors are thereby impaired, his settlement of property upon her is valid. And he may now make the transfer directly to her, instead of through a third person.[4]

An ante-nuptial settlement upon her is valid, if the consideration is legal, and she is not a participant in a fraud intended upon creditors.[5] See SETTLE, 4.

A gift between them is invalid as against creditors.[6]

She is now the owner of her separate estate, as if a feme sole, in most of the States, the common-law rule having been greatly relaxed.[7]

But if she allows her money to go into his business, and be mixed with his property, and he uses it for purposes of credit, the property all becomes his and he cannot convey it back in fraud of creditors.[8] See SEPARATE, 2.

And her separate estate may be held for improvements which she permits him, being insolvent, to make to it.[9]

Either may act as agent for the other, with or without compensation; and the husband's creditors, where he so uses his skill without an agreement for remuneration, are not thereby defrauded.[10]

He has an action for enticing her away, even as against a parent. Proof of something done tending to prevent or dissuade her from living with him is necessary.[1]

She may sue a person who maliciously induces him to abandon her, for damages for the loss of support and of his society.[2] See CONSORTIUM.

Either person may prove the marriage collaterally. She cannot be compelled to incriminate him. In bigamy, the lawful wife cannot prove the marriage. Neither can testify as to a confidential communication, except by consent. Under enabling statutes, either may testify for or against the other. In suits by or against a stranger, they may contradict each other. In divorce proceedings, their testimony is closely scrutinized.[3]

In the Federal courts she is not a competent witness for or against him in a criminal case, on the score of public policy.[4]

See also ABANDON, 2 (1); ABDUCTION; ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 2; ADULTERY; BIGAMY; COERCION; COHABITATION; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; CONDONATION; COVERT; CRUELTY, 1; CURTESY; DESERTION, 1; DISABILITY; DIVORCE; DOWER; DOWRY; ELOPEMENT; ENTIRETY; FAMILY; FEME; HEIR, 1; JOINTURE; KIN, Next of; MARRIAGE; NECESSARIES, 1; PARAPHERNALIA; PIN-MONEY; QUARANTINE, 1; RELATION, 3; RELICT; UNITY, 2; WHIPPING-POST; WIDOW; WIFE; WITNESS; WOMAN.

HUSBANDRY. See AGRICULTURE.

HUSH-MONEY. See BLACKMAIL.

HUSTINGS.[5] 1. A temporary court held for the election of members of parliament; also a court held in London before the lord mayor, recorder, and sheriffs, with jurisdiction over actions for the recovery of land within the city, except by ejectment.[6]

"Hustings (hustengum) is a court of common pleas held before the mayor and aldermen of London, and it is the highest court they have, for error or attaint lies there of a judgment or false verdict in the sheriff's court. . . Other cities and towns have had a court of the same name."[7]

2. A local court in Virginia.

The Hustings Court of the city of Richmond has exclusive original jurisdiction of all presentments, indictments and informations for offenses committed within the city (except prosecutions against convicts in the penitentiary), and concurrent jurisdiction of

---

[1] Gleason v. City of Boston, 144 Mass. 27 (1887).

[2] Trust Co. v. Sedgwick, 97 U. S. 308 (1877); 2 Kent, 149; 4 Saw. 608.

[3] Shaddock v. Clifton, 22 Wis. 110 (1867): 94 Am. Dec. 591-94 (1888), cases.

[4] Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 225 (1879), cases; Clark v. Killian, 103 id. 766 (1880).

[5] Prewit v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 24 (1880), cases.

[6] Spelman v. Aldrich, 126 Mass. 117 (1879), cases.

[7] Radford v. Carwile, 13 W. Va. 576, 85 (1878), cases; Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52 (1881), cases; McClellan v. Filson, 44 Ohio St. 190 (1886); 20 Am. Law Rev. 356 (1886).

[8] Humes v. Scruggs, 94 U. S. 27 (1876), cases. Her contracts, under statutes, 19 Am. Law Rev. 359-79 (1885), cases.

[9] 23 Cent. L. J. 293 (1886), cases.

[10] See generally, wife as husband's agent, 31 Alb. Law J. 206-7 (1885), cases; he as her agent, with compensation, 30 id. 444-45 (1885), cases; without compensation, King v. Voos, Sup. Ct. Oreg. (1887), cases; 26 Am. Law Reg. 246, 250-53 (1887), cases; 26 Cent. Law J. 259-62 (1888), cases. As to his carrying on business in her name, after she pays some bills, 26 Am. Law Reg. 781-84 (1887), cases.

[1] Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. 441 (1856); Modisett v. McPike, 74 Mo. 639 (1881).

[2] Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 626-34 (1878), cases. Effect of abandonment on her power to contract, 20 Am. Law Reg. 745-53 (1887), cases.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 421-33, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 333-47, cases.

[4] United States v. Jones, 32 F. R. 569 (1887); id. 571, note. See generally 25 Am. Law Reg. 353-65, 417-31 (1886), cases.

[5] A. S. husting, a place of council: hus, house; thing, cause, council.

[6] See 3 Bl. Com. 80; 3 Steph. Com. 293, note.

[7] Termes de la Ley (1721).

cases within a space of one mile around the city on the north of James river. Also exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals allowed by any State law, or ordinance of the city, from the judgments of the police justices courts, and of all causes removable from them; of proceedings for the condemnation, for public use, of lands, and of motions to correct erroneous assessments on realty; also, concurrent jurisdiction of actions for unlawful or forcible entry or detainer.[1]

HYDRAULIC MINING. See AQUA, Currit, etc.

HYGIENE. See ALCOHOL.

HYPOTHECATION.[2] In Roman law, a pledge without possession by the pledgee,—the possession remaining in the pledgor.[3]

A security whereby realty or personalty is appropriated or pledged for the discharge of a debt or engagement, with no transfer of property or of possession, the debt being viewed as tacked to and following the thing.[4]

There is no pure hypotheca in our law. Approaches to it are, bottomry bonds, maritime liens of material-men, and seaman's wages.[5]

Hypothecary; hypothecator. One who proposes and makes a contract of hypothecation.

Hypothecation bond. A bottomry or respondentia bond.

Evidences a marine hypothecation of a vessel or its cargo, for necessary repairs or supplies.[6]

The hypothecation of a vessel is authorized by the necessity of obtaining the means to prosecute the voyage, and inability to get the required funds in any other way.[7]

Established rules as to marine hypothecation are: 1. Liens for repairs and supplies, or for funds to pay for the same, are enforceable only upon proof that the same were necessary, or believed to be necessary. 2. Where proof is made of the necessity, and of credit given to the ship, a presumption arises of a necessity for the credit. 3. Necessity is proven when such circumstances of urgency are shown as would induce a prudent owner, if present, to order the repairs or supplies, or to provide funds for the cost on the security of the ship. 4. An order by the master is sufficient proof of such necessity to support an implied hypothecation in favor of a material-man or lender of money who acts in good faith. 5. To support an hypothecation by bottomry, evidence of actual necessity is required. If the fact of necessity is left unproved, evidence is required of due inquiry and of reasonable ground of belief that the necessity was real and exigent.[1]

If communication with the owner is practicable, that must first be had.[2]

Hypothecation bonds must be recorded by collectors of customs.[3] See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

HYPOTHESIS.[4] In criminal practice, a theory proposed in explanation of the facts in a case, and to establish either guilt or innocence.

Hypothetical. Assumed for the purpose of inference or of opinion.

An hypothetical case consists of a statement of assumed facts intended to be propounded to an expert, in order to elicit his opinion. Thus, an expert in insanity may say whether a person, under indictment for murder, would be likely to be predisposed to emotional insanity, upon a statement of facts, admitted or assumed, supposed to exhibit his individual and family history. See Dexter v. Hall, EXPERT.

I.

I. As an abbreviation, is used for institutes, internal, Irish.

I. C. C. Inter-State commerce commission (reports).

I. e. (Usually i. e.) Id est, that is (to say).

I O U. "I owe you." A popular designation of a due-bill or memorandum of debt.

Consists of those letters, a sum of money, and the debtor's signature. As it contains no direct promise to pay, it is not a promissory note, but a mere acknowledgment of indebtedness.[6]

IB. See IDEM.

IBI. See RATIO, Ibi, est, etc.

IBID; IBIDEM. See IDEM.

ICE. Uncut, is an accession or increment to the land.[6]

A riparian proprietor upon an unnavigable stream, having title to the middle of the stream, owns the ice that forms over his half of the water.[6]

---

[1] See Code, 1887, § 3072.

[2] L. hypotheca: Gk. hypo, under; tith-, to place; to obligate, charge.

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 159.

[4] See Herman, Mortgages, §§ 3, 1; Taylor v. Hudgins, 42 Tex. 247 (1875).

[5] Story, Bailm., 9 ed., § 288; The Young Mechanic, 2 Curtis, 410 (1855).

[6] The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 140-41 (1869), Chase, C. J.; The Julia Blake, 107 U. S. 418 (1882), cases, Waite, C. J.; 16 Blatch. 472.

[7] Delaware Mut. Safety Ins. Co. v. Gossler, 96 U. S. 648 (1877), cases; The Emily Souder, 17 Wall. 671, 669 (1873), cases.

[1] The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 141-42 (1869), Chase, C. J.

[2] The Julia Blake, 16 Blatch. 484-85, 490-94 (1879), cases: 107 U. S. 432, ante.

[3] R. S. §§ 4192, 4382.

[4] Gk. hypothesis, a placing under: supposition.

[5] See 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 36, cases; 1 Parsons, Notes, &c. 25; Story, Prom. Notes, 14; Smith v. Sheldon, 35 Mich. 47 (1876).

[6] Washington Ice. Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 54 (1881). See also Bigelow v. Shaw, Sup. Ct. Mich. (1887), cases; 34 Cond. 462; 33 Ind. 402; 8 Mich. 18; 30 N. Y. 519; 15 How. Pr. 376.

But he has no proprietary interest in ice that forms upon the water of a navigable stream adjacent to his own shore, unless he first takes and secures it.[1]

Since the owner of land bordering upon a flowing stream may use a reasonable quantity of the water, he may detain a reasonable portion until it freezes, and cut and sell the ice. But he may not interfere with the beneficial enjoyment of the water by owners below him.[2]

Ice upon a pond or stream is of such an ephemeral nature as to be more like personal than real property. It may be sold by parol as personalty.[3] See CARLOAD.

To thaw a neighbor's ice is an unlawful conversion of it.[4]

Ice fields upon navigable rivers must be so guarded that pedestrians will be protected against accident.[5]

As to the duty of removing ice from pavements, see SIDEWALK.

Ice-cream. See MANUFACTURER; SUNDAY.

ID. See IDEM; CERTUM; IS.

IDAHO. See TERRITORY, 2.

IDEM. L. The same.

Referring to a volume, the same series or set; also, the same book or page. Abbreviated id. Compare IS.

Ibidem. In the very same place: the same section, page, or book. Abbreviated ibid., ib.

Idem sonans. Sounding the same; substantially identical in sound.[6] Plural idem sonantia.

Applies to the names of persons substantially the same in sound, though different in spelling. In searches for liens, all spellings of a name which are pronounced alike are to be noted; and in pleadings, substantial identity in sound is generally sufficient.

Difference of meaning in the original language, as in the German, is not material. Appearance and sound, alone, are important. The initial being the same, allowance must be made for slight differences in the spelling — to which the eye will be directed. Then, a slight difference should put one on inquiry. But the rule does not apply to judgments entered in different initials from those which are usual in English: as, in Yoest for Joest.[7]

Examples of not fatal variances: Bupp and Bopp;[1] Charleston and Charlestown;[2] Heckman and Hackman;[3] Hutson and Hudson;[4] Japheth and Japhath;[5] Jeffers and Jeffries;[6] Lewis and Louis;[7] Penryn and Pennyrine;[8] Ricketts, Rickets, and Ricket;[9] Shaffer and Shafer;[10] Woolley and Wolley.[11] Examples of fatal variances: Hanthorn and Hawthorn;[12] Spints and Sprinz;[13] Whortman and Workman.[14]

A name need not be correctly spelled in an indictment. When substantially the same sound is preserved, variant orthography makes no difference.[15]

Whether one name sounds like another may be a question for a jury.[16]

If the two names, spelled differently, do not necessarily sound alike, the question whether they are idem sonans is one of fact for the jury.[17] See NAME, 1.

IDENTITY. Sameness.

1. In larceny, trover, detinue, and replevin, the thing in question must be identified; so in torts, for damage done to specific property; and so in all indictments where the taking of property is the gist. Identity of person must be proven in all criminal prosecutions.[18]

In the ordinary case of buying and selling for cash, the identity of the parties is entirely immaterial; and in many cases where that matter is material, a party is estopped by his dealing with the other from saying that he was mistaken as to the person.[19] See ARRAIGN; CONFUSION, Of goods; DESCRIPTION; NAME.

2. Property transferred in fraud of creditors may be subjected to the payment of their claims upon identification of the property; as, in the case of personalty given to a wife.[20]

One who obtains property by fraud acquires no title to it, but he and all transferees with notice are trustees for the original owner, who may recover the property as long as it can be traced and identified in its

[1] Wood v. Fowler, 26 Kan. 690 (1882), cases: 14 Rep. 267.

[2] Myer v. Whitaker, 15 Abb. N. C. 176 (1878), cases; Stevens v. Kelley, 78 Me. 450 (1886), cases: 35 Alb. Law J. 42–3 (1887), cases.

[3] Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 322 (1879): 32 Am. Rep. 164–68 (1880), cases.

[4] Aschermann v. Best Brewing Co., 45 Wis. 266 (1878). As to value, when unlawfully replevied, see Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 125 U. S. 426 (1888), cases.

[5] Woodman v. Pitman, 79 Me. 456 (1887).

[6] Commonwealth v. Stone, 103 Mass. 421 (1869).

[7] Bergman's Appeal, 88 Pa. 123 (1878); Heil's Appeal, 99 id. 458 (1881).

[1] Myer v. Fegaley, 39 Pa. 429 (1861).

[2] Alvord v. Moffatt, 10 Ind. 366 (1858).

[3] Bergman's Appeal, 88 Pa. 120 (1878).

[4] Cato v. Hutson, 7 Mo. 142 (1841).

[5] Morton v. McClure, 22 Ill. 257 (1859).

[6] Jeffries v. Bartlett, 75 Ga. 232 (1885).

[7] Marr v. Wetzel, 3 Col. 5 (1876).

[8] Elliott v. Knott, 14 Md. 121 (1859).

[9] Stanley v. Noble, 59 Iowa, 410 (1882).

[10] Rowe v. Palmer, 29 Kan. 337 (1883).

[11] Power v. Woolley, 21 Ark. 462 (1860).

[12] Marx v. Hanthorn, 30 F. R. 586 (1887).

[13] United States v. Spints, 18 F. R. 377 (1883).

[14] City of Lafayette v. Wortman, 107 Ind. 404 (1886).

[15] Smurr v. State, 88 Ind. 506 (1883), cases; 107 id. 410.

[16] Siebert v. State, 95 Ind. 479 (1884). See 1 Bish. Cr. Pr. § 688; 1 Whart. Cr. L. 309.

[17] Commonwealth v. Warren, 143 Mass. 569 (1887), in which "Celestia" and "Celeste" were found to be the same name; other cases cited.

[18] See 4 Bl. Com. 396; 2 Crim. Law Mag. 287; 34 La. An. 1082.

[19] Clement v. British American Assurance Co., 141 Mass. 303 (1886), Morton, C. J.

[20] Phipps v. Sedgwick, 95 U. S. 9 (1877).

original or substituted form.[1] See ad fin. TRUST, 1; CONCEAL, 1.

2. Of literary composition, consists in the sentiment and the language: the same conception clothed in the same words must necessarily be the same composition.[2]

3. Identity of designs, etc. See DESIGN, 2; PATENT, 2.

IDEO. See CONSIDERATION, 1.

IDIOCY. Not the condition of a deranged mind, but the total absence of all mind.[3]

A congenital disorder, consisting in a defect or sterility of the intellectual powers.[4]

Idiot. One that hath had no understanding from his nativity.[5]

A person who has been defective in intellectual powers from birth, or from a period before the mind received the impression of any idea.[6]

He is presumed never likely to attain any understanding. But a man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or like common matters. One born deaf, dumb, and blind is looked upon by the law as in the same state with an idiot.[7]

See INSANITY; LUNACY.

IDLENESS. See VAGRANCY.

IF. Implies a condition precedent, unless controlled by other words.[8]

A word of condition, or of conditional limitation.[9]

To sell property "if it be thought best" means, if in the course of the administration of the estate it should be found necessary or advisable to take that course.[10] See BEST.

"If," in a judge's charge, may not save it from assuming the existence of a fact.[11]

See CONDITION; PROVIDED; WHEN.

-IFF. See PLAINTIFF; SHERIFF.

[1] Third Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Stillwater Gas Co., 36 Minn. 78 (1886), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 253 (1887); id. 256-60, cases; Fletcher v. Sharpe, 108 Ind. 279 (1886), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 71; id. 74-82 (1887), cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 315-21 (1887), cases; 2 Harv. Law Rev. 28-39 (1888), cases.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 405.

[3] Owings' Case, 1 Bland, Ch. 396 (Md., 1828).

[4] Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. 314 (N. Y., 1841); 1 Redf. Wills, 59, 61, 64.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 303; 88 Ill. 502.

[6] [Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 435 (1865), Cooley, J.; Chitty, Med. Jur.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 303-4. See 4 Johns. Ch. 441; 3 Ired. Ch. 385; Ray, Med. Jur. Ins. 86, 743; 1 Whart. & St. Med. J. § 1; Taylor, Med. J. 789-91.

[8] Crabbe, R. P. § 2152.

[9] Sutton v. West, 77 N. C. 431 (1877); Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 105 (1869); 18 N. J. L. 36.

[10] Chandler v. Rider, 102 Mass. 271 (1869).

[11] Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 413 (1883).

IGNOMINY. Shame, disgrace, dishonor: as, in a statute excusing a witness from answering to save himself from ignominy.[1] See CRIMINATE.

IGNORAMUS. See IGNORARI.

IGNORANCE. Want of knowledge or information, whether of a matter of fact or of a matter of law. See ILLITERATE.

Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this, that the mind, capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties.[2]

Voluntary ignorance. Exists when one by reasonable exertion might have acquired knowledge. Involuntary ignorance does not proceed from choice; could not be overcome by the use of any known means.

Ignorance of a fact sometimes excuses; ignorance of law, never. In the law of crimes, ignorance of a fact is regarded as a defect of will. It occurs where a man intending to do a lawful act does that which is unlawful: the deed and the will do not concur.[3] See GUILTY.

If ignorance of what one might know were admitted as an excuse, the laws would become of no effect.[4] See PRESCRIBE.

"If ignorance of the law was admitted as a ground of exemption, the courts would be involved in questions which it were scarcely possible to solve, and which would render the administration of justice next to impossible; for in almost every case ignorance would be alleged, and, for the purpose of determining the point, the court would be compelled to enter upon questions of facts insoluble and indeterminable." So, if a person will not read or does not know what he signs, or is misinformed as to the effect, he alone is responsible.[5]

The maxim that "ignorance of the law excuses no one" is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed. [6]

When parties have acted under a mutual mistake of law, and the party jeopardized can be relieved without substantial injustice to the other side, a court of equity will afford redress, especially if the one to be benefited by the mistake invokes the aid of equity to put him in a position where the mistake will become advantageous to him.[7]

[1] Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Iowa, 221 (1874).

[2] Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 279 (1860).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 27.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 46.

[5] Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 50-51 (1875), cases, Hunt, J. See also Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. 1, 13-15 (1828); 17 Cent. Law J. 422-27 (1883), cases; 18 id. 7-10 (1884), cases; 2 Flip. 116; 3 Col. 555; 13 Ill. 395; 60 Md. 355; 50 Mich. 551, 594; 23 Miss. 194; 76 Va. 315; 62 Wis. 332; 1 Johns. Ch. 515; 2 id. 60; 6 id. 170; Bisp. Eq. § 187; 1 Story, Eq. Ch. V; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 838-71.

[6] Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. L. 244 (1882), cases.

[7] Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N. J. E. 551, 558-60 (188[illegible] cases.

When a party in one State makes a contract with direct reference to the law of another State, he will be held to know the law of the latter State.[1] See LAW, Foreign.

See also ESTOPPEL; IGNORARI; INQUIRY, 1; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MISTAKE; REFORM.

IGNORANTIA. See IGNORARI.

IGNORARI. Not to know or know of; to have no knowledge of.

Ignoramus. We do not know it; we ignore it.

If the grand jury think an accusation groundless, they endorse on the back of the bill "ignoramus:" we know nothing of it — the truth does not appear.[2]

Modern expressions are: "not a true bill;" "no bill;" "not found." A fresh bill may be referred to a subsequent jury.[3]

Ignorantia. Non-information: ignorance.

Ignorantia facti excusat; ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of the law does not excuse.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Ignorance of the law excuses no one. See IGNORANCE.

IGNORE. To refuse to find a bill of indictment. See IGNORARI.

IL-. A prefix from the Latin in, not; negatives the sense of the simple word. See IN, 8.

ILL. 1. Contracted from evil: as in ill-fame.

2. Contrary to rule or practice: as in ill-pleading; ill for want of certainty. Compare BAD, 2; WELL, 2.

ILLEGAL. See LEGAL; ERROR, 2 (2), Erroneous.

ILLEGITIMATE. See LEGITIMATE.

ILLEVIABLE. See LEVY.

ILL-FAME. See HOUSE, Of ill-fame.

ILLICIT.[4] Disallowed: forbidden by law; unlawful; illegal: as, illicit intercourse, trade, distilling.

Illicit intercourse. Fornication, or adultery.

Illicit trade. In marine insurance, trade made unlawful by the law of the country to which the object or vessel is bound.[5]

[1] Huthsing v. Bosquet, 3 McCrary, 575, 576 (1882), cases; Storrs v. Barker, 10 Am. Dec. 316, 323-28, cases; Story, Confl. L. §§ 76, 233, 274.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 305.

[3] United States v. Watkins, 3 Cranch, C. C. 506 (1829).

[4] L. illicitus, not allowed: in-licere.

[5] 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 614; 2 La. 337, 338; 3 S. & R. 73; 4 Id. 29; 5 Binn. 403.

ILLITERATE. Without knowledge of written language; ignorant.

To induce an illiterate person, by false reading, to subscribe an agreement, may be a fraud upon his rights, and may even amount to an indictable deceit.[1] See INFLUENCE; READING.

ILLNESS. See BENEFITS; DISEASE; HEALTH; LANGUIDUS.

ILL-PLEADING. See ILL, 2.

ILL-TREATMENT. See CRUELTY; MALTREATMENT.

ILLUSION. See INSANITY. Compare DELUSION.

ILLUSORY. See APPOINTMENT, 2.

ILL-WILL. See MALICE; PREJUDICE.

IM-. A prefix from the Latin in, not; in, into, upon. See IN, 8.

IMAGINE. See TREASON.

IMBECILITY. Without strength, impotent.

In a petition for divorce by a wife for corporal imbecility in the husband, it is necessary to show a permanent, incurable impotency to consummate the marriage. "Corporal imbecility" does not, ex vi termini, import such impotency.[2] See DIVORCE.

On mental imbecility, see [3] INSANITY.

IMMATERIAL. See MATERIAL.

IMMATURE. See MATURE.

IMMEDIATE. Direct; present; near — in time, or kinship.

That which is produced directly by the act to which it is ascribed, without the intervention or agency of any distinct, intermediate cause: as, immediate interest.[4]

In the law of self-defense, "immediate" generally signifies present in time and place. Thus "immediate danger" of losing life or of sustaining great bodily injury, means that the danger is then and there present and the injury apparently about to be inflicted.[5]

"Immediate delivery," among dealers in coal, means a delivery within the present or, in cases, within the succeeding month.[6]

An action is said to be prosecuted for the immediate (direct) benefit of a person;[7] and devises are made to immediate issue.[8]

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 304; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1243, cases; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 156.

[2] Ferris v. Ferris, 8 Conn. 167 (1830). See generally 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 321-39, cases.

[3] Delafield v. Parish, 5 N. Y. Sur. 115 (1857). See generally 1 Wharton & St. Med. J. § 691; Taylor, Med. J. 789.

[4] Fitch v. Bates, 11 Barb. 473 (1851): Bouvier.

[5] Bailey v. Commonwealth, 11 Bush, 691 (1876), Cofer, J.; United States v. Baldridge, 11 F. R. 558 (1882): R. S. § 5515; s. c. 3 Cr. Law Mag. 850.

[6] Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 153 (1873).

[7] Butler v. Patterson, 13 N. Y. 298 (1855).

[8] Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 179 (1860).

Immediately. Within reasonable time.

Never, or very rarely, employed to designate an exact portion of time.[1] Compare FORTHWITH.

IMMEMORIAL. See CUSTOM; MEMORY.

IMMIGRATION. Moving into a country, usually to acquire citizenship.

The act of Congress of August 3, 1882 (22 St. L. 214), which levies a duty of fifty cents for every foreign passenger coming by vessel to the United States, to be paid to the collector of customs of the port, by the owner or agent of the vessel, is a valid regulation of commerce with foreign nations. The duty is a license fee, a tax on the owner of the vessel, and on the business of bringing in alien passengers. It is not a capitation tax. The contribution is designed to mitigate the evils incident to immigration from abroad, by raising a fund for that purpose.[2]

See COMMERCE; EXPATRIATION; CHINESE.

IMMORAL. See MORALS.

IMMORTALITY. See CORPORATION.

IMMOVABLES. See MOVABLE.

IMMUNITY.[3] Exemption from a duty, obligation, penalty, or service, which the law requires of citizens in general.

Freedom from what otherwise would be a duty or burden.[4]

The Fourteenth Amendment secures immunity from inequality of legal protection, as to life, liberty, or property.[5]

Immunity from taxation, as of the property of a railroad corporation, not being a franchise, but a personal privilege, is not transferable even under a decree of foreclosure.[6]

See further PRIVILEGE, 1; PROHIBITION, 1; TAX, 2.

IMPAIR. To make worse: to diminish in quantity, value, excellence, strength; to lessen in power; to deteriorate.[7] To relax, weaken, injure.

Impair health. See INTEMPERATE.

"No State shall . . . pass any . . Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts."[8]

To relieve the distress which followed the war of the Revolution, paper money was issued, worthless lands, and other property of no use to the creditor, were made a tender in payment of debts, and the time of payment stipulated in contracts was extended by law. These were the peculiar evils of the day. So much mischief was done and so much more apprehended, that general distrust prevailed, and confidence between man and man was destroyed. . . To restore public confidence, the framers of the Constitution prohibited the use of any means by which the same mischief might again be produced: they established the principle that contracts should be inviolable.[1]

The reference is to contracts respecting property, under which an individual may claim a right to something beneficial to himself.[2] The contracts protected are such as relate to property rights, not governmental. It may not be easy to tell on which side of the line a particular case is to be put.[3] There was no intention to restrain the States in the regulation of their civil institutions, adopted for internal government.[3]

The prohibition does not include grants for public purposes, which are in effect mere regulations of internal police.[4] See further MONOPOLY; POLICY, 1, Public.

"Obligation" means the law which binds the parties to perform their undertaking.[5] See OBLIGATION, 3.

The prohibition applies to implied as well as to express, and to executory as well as to executed, contracts: as, a grant of lands by a State to an individual;[6] or, a compact between States;[7] or, a grant of corporate powers[8] — unless a right of revocation or alteration is reserved in the grant or by a general law.[9]

But it does not include all contracts by a State with its public officers or municipal corporations.[10] After a public officer has rendered the services required of

---

[1] See Thompson v. Gibson, 8 M. & W. *286–89 (1841); McLure v. Colclough, 17 Ala. 100 (1849); Gaddis ads. Howell, 31 N. J. L. 316 (1865); Lockwood v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 47 Conn. 556–68 (1880), cases; 11 F. R. 555; 44 Ind. 460; 51 Md. 512; 14 Neb. 151–52; 20 Barb. 466; 29 Pa. 198; 40 id. 289; 75 id. 378; 43 Wis. 318, 479; 62 id. 244; 5 Biss. 476; 43 Ill. 155; 13 N. J. L. 313; L. R., 4 Q. B. 471; 20 Moak, 466, 468.

[2] The Head-Money Cases, 18 F. R. 135 (1883), Blatchford, J.: s. c. 112 U. S. 580 (1884), Miller, J.

[3] L. immunis, free from public service: in, not; munus, duty.

[4] Lonas v. State, 3 Heisk. 306 (1871).

[5] Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 310 (1879).

[6] Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 223 (1876), cases.

[7] Webster's Dict.; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600 (1877).

[8] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10. Gouverneur Morris, of the committee on style, resolute not "to countenance the issue of paper money, and the consequent violation of contracts," of himself added "No State shall pass laws altering or impairing the obligation of contracts." In the shorter form adopted by the convention, "an end was designed to be made to barren land laws, laws for the installment of debts, and laws closing the courts against suitors,"—2 Bancroft, Hist. Const. 214 (1882).

[1] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 204, 206, 199 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[2] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 628 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 416 (1850); Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 557 (1879); Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. *572 (1837); 2 Bancroft, Hist. Const. 213; Federalist, No. 44.

[3] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 820, 816 (1879).

[4] East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co., 10 How. 535 (1850).

[5] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 197 (1819), supra.

[6] Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 137 (1810).

[7] Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 84 (1823).

[8] Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 628 (1819); Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 437 (1869).

[9] Holyoke Company v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 522 (1872).

[10] Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 416–17 (1850).

him under an enactment which fixes the rate of compensation (q. v.), the obligation to pay for the services at that rate is perfected and rests on the remedies which the law then gives for its enforcement.[1]

A charter granted to a private corporation, which in effect is a mere license, may be withdrawn;[2] so may any other engagement which is a mere gratuity;[3] but not, without consent of the bona fide bondholder, power given a municipality to levy a tax with which to pay its bonds.[4] And a State may not tax mortgage bonds, secured on property within it, held by non-residents.[5]

Liability for a tort, created by statute, although reduced to judgment, is not such a debt by contract as is contemplated.[6]

Imprisonment for debt, not being regarded as a part of a contract, may be abolished.[7]

The prohibition extends to provisions of a State constitution, as well as to ordinary legislation.[8]

The existing laws of the place where, or in reference to which, the contract is made, affecting its validity, construction, discharge, or enforcement, form part of the contract. The remedy, or means of enforcing the contract, is part of the obligation.[9]

Judicial construction being a part of a statute, a change of decision is the same in effect as a new enactment.[10]

The Constitution intended to prohibit a law interpolating a new term or condition foreign to the original agreement.[11]

In short, any deviation from the terms of the contract, by postponing or accelerating the period of performance which it prescribes, by imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, or by dispensing with the performance of those which are expressed, however minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract, impairs its obligation.[12]

Diminishing value by legislation is impairment.[13]

But it is not necessarily impaired by a reasonable change in the mode of enforcing it;[14] unless it substantially lessens the rights of the creditor;[15] nor is it impaired, necessarily, by a new statute of limitations.[1] In modes of proceeding and forms to enforce a contract, the legislature has control, and may enlarge, limit, or otherwise alter them, provided it does not deny a remedy or so embarrass it with conditions or restrictions as seriously to impair the value of the right.[2,3] See REMEDY; BOUNTY.

The prohibition in the Constitution refers to enactments to which the State gives the force of law; it does not apply to decisions of the courts, or acts of executive or administrative boards or officers, or doings of corporations or individuals. . . "When the State court decides against a right claimed under a contract, and there was no law subsequent to the contract, this (the Supreme) court clearly has no jurisdiction. When the existence and the construction of a contract are undisputed, and the State court upholds a subsequent law, on the ground that it did not impair the obligation of the admitted contract, it is equally clear that this court has jurisdiction. When the State court holds that there was a contract conferring certain rights, and that a subsequent law did not impair those rights, this court has jurisdiction to consider the true construction of the supposed contract, and, if it is of opinion that it did not confer the rights affirmed by the State court, and therefore its obligation was not impaired by the subsequent law, may on that ground affirm the judgment. So, when the State court upholds the subsequent law, on the ground that the contract did not confer the right claimed, this court may inquire whether the supposed contract did give the right, because, if it did, the subsequent law cannot be upheld. But when the State court gives no effect to the subsequent law, but decides, on grounds independent of that law, that the right claimed was not conferred by the contract, the case stands just as if the subsequent law had not been passed, and this court has no jurisdiction."[4]

IMPANEL. See PANEL.

IMPARLANCE.[5] Opportunity for a conference.

1. An indulgence granted a defendant to defer pleading to the action until a subsequent term.

[1] Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 134 (1885).

[2] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 820, 816 (1879).

[3] West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Supervisors, 93 U. S. 595 (1876).

[4] Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall. 535, 544 (1866); Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358 (1880).

[5] State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. 325 (1872).

[6] Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285 (1883); Chase v. Curtis, 113 id. 464 (1885).

[7] Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 717, 720 (1880), cases.

[8] Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331 (1855); New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 672 (1885), cases; Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 id. 131 (1885).

[9] Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. 317 (1872); Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600 (1877), cases; 102 id. 532.

[10] Douglass v. County of Pike, 101 U. S. 687 (1879).

[11] West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 533 (1848).

[12] Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 84 (1823), Washington, J.

[13] Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 327 (1848).

[14] Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. 378 (1827).

[15] Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311 (1843); Woodruff v. Trapnall, 10 How. 190 (1850); Hawthorne v. Calef, 2 Wall. 23 (1864); Gunn v. Barry, 15 id. 623 (1872); Walker v. Whitehead, 16 id. 318 (1872); Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 774, 778 (1882); 101 id. 339.

[1] Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 675 (1881), cases; Gilfillan v. Union Canal Co., 109 id. 401 (1883); Mitchell v. Clark, 110 id. 642 (1883).

[2] Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 717, 720 (1880), cases.

[3] See also Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 233 (1882), cases; Civil Rights Cases, 109 id. 12 (1883); Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Palmes, ib. 256 (1883); Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, ib. 285 (1883); Nelson v. St. Martin's Parish, 110 id. 720 (1884); Parker v. Buckner, 67 Tex. 23 (1886); 25 Am. Law Reg. 81-97 (1886), cases; 2 Story, Const. §§ 1368-91.

[4] New Orleans Water-works Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Co., 125 U. S. 18, 30, 38 (1888), cases, Gray, J.; Kreiger v. Shelby R. Co., ib. 39 (1888).

[5] F. parler, to speak.

Before the defendant puts in his defense he is entitled to demand one imparlance, or licentia loquendi, to see if he can end the matter amicably without further suit, by talking with the plaintiff; a practice supposed to have arisen in obedience to the precept "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way," Matt. v. 25. The Roman law of the Twelve Tables likewise directed the parties to make up the matter while going to the prætor.[1]

General imparlance. That just defined, and grantable of course. Special imparlance. Saved all exceptions to the writ or count, and was granted by the prothonotary. More special imparlance. Saved all exceptions whatsoever, and granted at the discretion of the court.[2]

Imparlances are no longer recognised in this country, where, after appearance by the defendant, the cause stands continued until the end of the time within which the plea is to be filed. See CONTINUANCE.

2. Stay of execution.[3]

IMPARTIAL.[4] 1. Applied to a juror, indifferent as he stands unsworn;[5] has not formed an opinion as to the issue.[6]

"In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed," etc.[7] Compare INDIFFERENT; PREJUDICE, 1.

The courts are not agreed as to the knowledge upon which an opinion must rest to render a juror incompetent, or whether the opinion must be accompanied by malice or ill-will; but all unite in holding that it must be founded on some evidence, and be more than a mere impression. Some say it must be positive; others, that it must be decided and substantial; others, that it must be fixed; others again, that it must be deliberate and settled. All concede, however, that if hypothetical only, the partiality is not so manifest as to necessitate setting the juror aside.[8]

2. As understood in conditions annexed to bonds, see FAITHFULLY.

IMPEACH.[9] 1. To call to account: as, to impeach a tenant for waste.[10]

2. To impugn, call in question, seek to disparage: as, to impeach the authenticity of a document, the irregularity or legality of a judgment or sale, one's title to negotiable paper or to property. See DISPARAGE, 2; FACIES, Prima; JUDGMENT.

3. To seek to prove unworthy of belief; to discredit: as, to impeach the veracity of a witness.

To charge or accuse of want of veracity; and, to establish such charge.[1]

To accuse, blame, censure. Thus, to impeach one's official report or conduct is to show that it was occasioned by some partiality, bias, prejudice, inattention to or unfaithfulness in the discharge of that duty; or, that it was based upon such error that the existence of those influences may justly be inferred from the extraordinary character or grossness of that error.[2]

Unimpeached. Not discredited, undiscredited; not shaken in character or worth, professed or attributed. Unimpeachable. Not to be questioned as to credit; irreproachable; blameless.

After a witness has been examined in chief, his credit may be impeached in various modes besides that of exhibiting the improbabilities of his story by a cross-examination: (1) By disproving the facts stated by him, by other witnesses. (2) By general evidence affecting his credit for veracity. (3) By proof that he has made statements out of court contrary to what he has testified at the trial. But this is only in matters relevant to the issue; and, beforehand, he must be asked as to the time, place, and persons involved in the supposed contradiction: upon the general question he may not remember whether he has said so or not; and justice requires that his attention be first called to the subject. Then he may correct or explain the former statement.[3]

By calling, the party represents his witness as worthy of credit or at least as not so infamous as to be wholly unworthy of credit. For him to attack the witness's veracity would be bad faith to the court, and give the power to destroy if the witness spoke unfavorably, and to make good if he spoke favorably. Hence, at common law, while a party may contradict, and to that extent discredit, he cannot ordinarily "impeach" his own witness.[4]

An adverse witness who contradicts his former statement, thereby surprising the party calling him, may be examined as to his former statement, when

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 299.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 301.

[3] Act 19 May, 1828, § 2: R. S. § 988.

[4] L. im-pars, not of a part or party.

[5] Littleton, 155 b.

[6] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 154 (1878): Coke, Litt. 155 b.

[7] Constitution, Amd. Art. VI.

[8] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 155 (1878), Waite, C. J., citing 11 Leigh, 659; 10 Gratt. 658; 13 Ill. 635; 2 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 196; 74 Pa. 458; 84 id. 151. See also Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 646 (1886), cases.

[9] F. empeecher, to prevent, hinder, bar: L. impedicare, to impede; or impingere, to thrust against.

[10] 2 Bl. Com. 283; 6 Fla. 490.

[1] [White v. McLean, 47 How. Pr. 199 (1874).

[2] Bryant v. Glidden, 36 Me. 47 (1853), Shepley, C. J.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 461–62. See Becker v. Koch, 104 N. Y. 401 (1887), cases; Conrad v. Griffey, 16 How. 46–47 (1853), cases.

[4] United States v. Watkins, 3 Cranch, C. C. 442 (1829); Commonwealth v. Donahoe, 133 Mass. 408 (1882); Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Oreg. 410 (1882); Stearns v. Merchants' Bank, 53 Pa. 492–99 (1866), cases.

it would appear that deception has been practiced, the examiner being guilty of no laches.[1]

May impeach an opposing witness by a former statement contradicting that made in his examination in chief;[2] but cannot contradict on a collateral matter. May contradict answers as to motive; question veracity; show bias or conviction of infamous crime.[3] May attack the impeaching witness, and sustain the impeached, but not by proof of former consistent statements. Corroboration is discretionary in the court.[4]

To impair his credibility, a witness may be cross-examined as to specific facts tending to disgrace or degrade him, although irrelevant to the main issue. The range of cross-examination depends upon the appearance and conduct of the witness and other circumstances. It is only where the discretion in the court has been abused, to the prejudice of a party, that error will lie.[5] See CHARACTER; CREDIT, 1; EXAMINATION, 9; REPUTATION.

4. To convict of such misconduct as justifies removal from office.

Articles of impeachment. The formal statement of charges of misconduct preferred against an officer.

Like an indictment for crime, must be sufficiently certain in averment to admit of a defense being framed, and to be used in bar of another accusation upon the same subject-matter in case of acquittal.

Court of impeachment. The tribunal before which articles of impeachment are presented and the charges tried.

Charges which will warrant an impeachment may not sustain an indictment. The prosecution is conducted before some branch of the political power, or before a quasi political tribunal.

"The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."[6]

"The House of Representatives . . . shall have the sole Power of Impeachment."[6]

"The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: and no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present." "Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of Honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law."[1]

The Senate has sat as a court of impeachment in the cases of Judge Chase, in 1804; Judge Peck, in 1831; Judge Humphreys, in 1862; and of President Johnson, in 1868.[2]

Proceedings under the constitutions of the States, for the trial of State officials, are similar to the foregoing. See JUDGE; PARDON.

IMPEDE. See OBSTRUCT.

IMPERFECT. See DUTY, 1; PERFECT.

IMPERIUM. L. Dominion; authority; jurisdiction.

Divisum imperium. A divided jurisdiction; jurisdiction belonging to more than one tribunal, or exercised alternately between powers.

As, the jurisdiction of common-law and admiralty courts exercised between high and low water-mark; the jurisdiction exercised concurrently by common-law and equity courts.

Imperium in imperio. A power within a power; a sovereignty within a sovereignty; a jurisdiction within a jurisdiction.[3]

IMPERTINENCE. The introduction of any matter in a bill, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which is not properly before the court for decision at any particular stage of the suit.[4]

The court will not strike out the matter unless its impertinence clearly appears; for if erroneously stricken out, the error is irremediable; if left to stand, the court may set the matter right in taxing the costs. Matter which is scandalous (q. v.) is also impertinent.[4]

The test is, would the matter, if put in issue, be proper to be given in evidence.[5]

Impertinent. See PERTINENT.

IMPLEAD. See PLEA, 2.

IMPLEMENTS. Things necessary in any trade, without which the work cannot be performed; also, the furniture of a house. Implements of household are tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscot, and the like.[6]

Rarely, if ever, includes an animal.[6]

As used in a statute of exemptions, does not include a horse and cart.[7]

---

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 549-67, cases.

[2] Ferry v. Breed, 117 Mass. 165 (1875); 35 Vt. 68.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 568-71, cases. See generally Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 433-39 (1884), cases.

[4] State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 92-96 (1886), cases, Johnston, J. See also Pullen v. Pullen, 43 N. J. E. 136 (1887), cases; State v. Thomas, Sup. Ct. N. C. (Dec. 21, 1887), cases.

[5] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 4.

[6] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 2, cl. 5.

[1] Constitution, Art. I. sec. 3, cl. 6-7. See 2 Bancroft, Const. 193.

[2] See Story, Const. § 791; 2 Am. Law Rev. 547-67 (1868); 6 Am. Law Reg. 257-83 (1867), T. W. Dwight; id. 641-80 (1867), W. Lawrence; 4 Bl. Com. 259-61.

[3] 17 Wall. 328; 106 U. S. 562; 37 Pa. 292.

[4] Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 266-70; Wood v. Mann, 1 Sumn. 588-89 (1834), Story, J.; 3 Story R. 13; 15 F. R. 561.

[5] Woods v. Morrell, 1 Johns. Ch. *106 (1814), Kent, Ch. See also Hood v. Inman, 4 id. *433 (1820).

[6] Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. 82 (1846).

[7] Enscoe v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 99 (1876); Wallace v. Collins, 5 Ark. 46 (1843).

A music teacher's piano is an "implement of business."[1] Compare TOOLS.

IMPLICATION. An inference of something, not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed.[2]

Implied. Infolded: involved in language or intention; resting upon inference; imputed in law.[3] Opposed, expressed, constructive, qq. v.

Where it is the duty of a defendant to do an act, the law imputes a promise to fulfill that obligation.[4] See ASSUMPSIT.

What is clearly implied in a statute, pleading, contract, will, or other instrument, is as much a part of it as what is expressed.[5] See INCIDENT.

IMPORT. 1, v. To bring from a foreign jurisdiction or country merchandise not the product of this country.[6]

n. Most commonly imports: the goods or other articles brought into this country from abroad — from another country.[7] Opposed, export, exports, q. v.

"No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws . . and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Controul of the Congress."[8]

This does not relate to articles imported from one State into another; only to articles imported from foreign countries.[9]

Nothing is imported till it comes within the limits of a port. The term "imports" covers nothing not actually brought into our limits.[10]

Imposing a license tax on importers is an indirect tax on imports.[11]

See COMMERCE; DUTY, 2; ENTRY, II, 2; IMPOST; INSPECTION, 1.

2. As to import of language, see PURPORT.

IMPOSE. See TERM, 2.

IMPOSITION. See DECEIT; EXTORTION; FRAUD; MISTAKE; REFORM.

IMPOSSIBILITY. See POSSIBILITY.

IMPOST. A custom or tax levied on articles brought into a country.[1]

A duty on imported goods and merchandise. In a larger sense, any tax or imposition. Synonymous with duty; comprehends every species of tax or contribution not included under the ordinary terms "taxes and excises."[2]

IMPOTENCE. See IMBECILITY; INSPECTION, Of person.

IMPOUND. See POUND, 2.

IMPRESSION. 1. A cause in which a question arises for the first time is termed a "case of the first impression."[3]

2. Effect produced upon the mind of a juror.[4] See OPINION, 2.

IMPRIMUS. See PRIMUS; FIRST, 2.

IMPRISONMENT. Detention of another against his will, depriving him of the power of locomotion.[5] Compare PRISON.

Confinement of the person in anywise; as, keeping a man against his will in a private house, arresting or forcibly detaining him in the street.[6]

In the penal legislation of Arkansas, the word "imprisonment," used alone, means imprisonment in a county jail or local prison. Confinement in a penitentiary is not meant, unless expressly so stated.[7]

In Louisiana, "imprisonment," unqualified, in penal statutes, is used in contradistinction to "imprisonment at hard labor."[8]

Duress of imprisonment. A compulsion by an illegal restraint of liberty, until one does some act, as, seal a bond.[9] See further DURESS.

False, or unlawful, imprisonment. Any confinement or detention of the person without sufficient authority.[10]

---

[1] Amend v. Murphy, 69 Ill. 338 (1873). See also 28 Iowa, 359; 124 Mass. 418; 6 Gray, 298; 45 N. H. 552.

[2] Re City of Buffalo, 68 N. Y. 173 (1877), Folger, J.

[3] See Homan v. Earle, 58 N. Y. 271 (1873); 13 Abb. Pr. 413.

[4] Bailey v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 22 Wall. 639 (1874), cases.

[5] United States v. Babbit, 1 Black, 61 (1861), cases; 20 Wall. 493; 101 U. S. 82, 209; 110 id. 658.

[6] [United States v. The Forrester, 1 Newb. 94 (1856).

[7] [Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 437 (1827), Marshall, C. J.

[8] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 2.

[9] Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 181 (1868), cases; Brown v. Houston, 113 U. S. 628 (1885).

[10] Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. 632 (1850); Arnold v. United States, 9 Cranch, 120 (1815); 4 Metc., Mass., 282.

[11] Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419 (1827); Warring v. Mayor of Mobile, 8 Wall. 110 (1868).

[1] Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 437 (1827), Marshall, Chief Justice.

[2] Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. 445 (1868), cases, Swayne, J.; 1 Story, Const. § 669. See also 8 Wall. 181; 14 Mo. 335; 9 Rob., La., 324; 1 Story, Const. § 949; Federalist, No. 30.

[3] 103 U. S. 168; 21 Pa. 175; 98 id. 104.

[4] See Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 283 (1878).

[5] United States v. Benner, Baldw. 239 (1830).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 136; 3 id. 127.

[7] Cleaney v. State, 36 Ark. 80 (1880).

[8] State v. Hyland, 36 La. An. 710 (1884).

[9] [1 Bl. Com. 136, 131.

[10] 3 Bl. Com. 127.

May consist in detaining another by threats of violence, thereby preventing him from going where he wishes by a reasonable apprehension of personal danger.[1]

A violation of the right of personal liberty. May arise by executing a lawful process at an unlawful time, as, on Sunday. Remedies: habeas corpus, and an action for damages,[2] qq. v.

An action will lie for the misuse or abuse of process, beyond the fact of arrest and detention.[3]

Imprisonment for debt. No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any State . . on Federal process . . where imprisonment for debt is abolished. The State course of proceeding is to be followed.[4]

"No crime known to the law brought so many to the jails and prisons (one hundred years ago) as the crime of debt, and the class most likely to get into debt was the most defenseless and dependent, the great body of servants, of artisans, of laborers."[5]

See ARREST, 2; COMMITMENT; FELONY; LABOR, 1; PROSECUTION, Malicious.

IMPROVE. To cultivate, as, land.

"Improved land" is such as has been reclaimed, is used for purposes of husbandry, and is cultivated as such,—whether the appropriation is for tillage, meadow or pasture.[6]

Improvement. 1. Amelioration in the condition of property by the outlay of labor or money.

Includes repairs or additions to buildings, the erection of fences, the annexation of fixtures, etc.[7] See BETTERMENT; ESTOPPEL.

As used in a will, relative to property, construed according to the subject-matter. A gift of the improvement of land may constitute a freehold estate, for the devisee's life; of plate, pictures, furniture, it would be the possession and use; of money, securities, or stocks, it would be the income.[8]

Bedding oysters is not an "improvement," within the meaning of a statute authorizing riparian owners to make improvements on navigable streams. The mere depositing of the oysters in the water implies no essential union or relation between the main land and the soil under the water contiguous; and therefore does not effect an improvement of the land implied in something created or constructed, attached to the shore.[1]

Internal improvements. Works within the State, by which the public are supposed to be benefited; such as the improvement of highways and channels of travel and commerce.[2] See AID, 1, Municipal.

Under improvement. Used, occupied, employed, turned to profitable account.[3]

2. An addition of some useful thing to a patentable object. See further INVENTION; PATENT, 2; PROCESS, 3.

IMPROVIDENT. In a statute excluding from an administratorship or executorship a person improvident in habits, the reference is to such habits of mind and conduct as render a man unfit for the duties of the trust.[4] Compare INCAPABLE; SUITABLE, 1.

Improvidently. Designates a rule, order, or decree, had or made prematurely or inconsiderately.

IMPULSE. A sudden impelling.

An irresistible impulse to commit an act known to be wrong does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense. The law does not recognize an impulse as uncontrollable which yet leaves the reasoning powers — including the capacity to appreciate the nature and quality of the particular act — unaffected by mental disease.[5] See INSANITY.

IMPUNITY. Applies to something which may be done without penalty or punishment.[6]

IMPUTE. See KNOWLEDGE, 1; IMPLICATION.

IN. Introduces English, French, and Latin phrases:

1. English. (1) The preposition: within, inside of, surrounded by.[7]

Under a statute requiring notices to be posted "in" public places, a posting "at" such places may not be sufficient.[8]

---

[1] [Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 493 (1838); Smith v. State, 7 Humph. 43 (1846). See also 35 Ind. 15, 286; 43 id. 65; Baldw. 600; 12 Ark. 43; 133 Mass. 399; 81 N. C. 528; 9 Johns. 117; 5 Vt. 588; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 553.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 127, 138; 4 id. 218; Castro v. De Uriarte, 12 F. R. 253 (1882).

[3] Wood v. Graves, 144 Mass. 367-68 (1887), cases.

[4] R. S. § 990; The Blanche Page, 16 Blatch. 8 (1879).

[5] 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 98 (1883).

[6] [Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. 203 (1825). See also 40 Cal. 58; 8 Allen, 213; 68 Pa. 396.

[7] See Schenley's Appeal, 70 Pa. 102 (1871); Schmidt v. Armstrong, 72 id. 356 (1872); French v. Mayor of New York, 16 How. Pr. 223 (1858); 32 Iowa, 254; 34 id. 559; 1 Cush. 93; 22 Barb. 260; 78 N. Y. 1, 581; 18 N. J. L. 424.

[8] Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. *375 (1831), Shaw, C. J.

---

[1] Hess v. Muir, 65 Md. 586, 598 (1886).

[2] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Commissioners, 4 Neb. 456 (1876); Dawson County v. McNamar, 10 id. 281 (1880); Traver v. Merrick County, 14 id. 333 (1883); Blair v. Cuming County, 111 U. S. 370-73 (1884), cases.

[3] Chase v. Jefts, 58 N. H. 281 (1878).

[4] [Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 454 (1856): s. c. 14 Barb. 660; Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 47 (1845).

[5] People v. Hain, 62 Cal. 122 (1882).

[6] Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 153 (1871).

[7] See Mayor of New York v. Second Avenue R. Co., 31 Hun, 245 (1883).

[8] Hilgers v. Quinney, 51 Wis. 71 (1881)

In a bond payable "in twenty-five years" means, at the end of that period, not within nor at any time during the period.[1]

"The city of Wichita claims that when the act was passed there was no Gilbert's addition in the city, upon which the act could operate. Such addition may have been in the town or city, considering the collective body of people in that vicinity as the town or city, and not merely the corporate limits."[2]

In action. See ACTION, 2; CHOSE.

In banc or bank. See BANK, 2 (1).

In blank. See BLANK.

In case. See CASE, 1.

In chief. See CHIEF.

In court. See OUT, Of court.

In equity. See EQUITY; LAW.

In evidence. See EVIDENCE.

In fact. See FACT.

In full. See INDORSEMENT, 2; RECEIPT, 2.

In gross. See GROSS.

In kind. See KIND.

In law. See FACT; LAW.

In like manner. See LIKEWISE.

In mercy. See MERCY.

In possession. See POSSESSION.

In that case or event. See THEN; UPON, 2.

In the peace. See PEACE, 1.

In the presence. See PRESENCE.

In the same manner. See MANNER.

(2) The adverb: not out, within; invested with title or possession: as, "in" by descent, "in" by purchase.

2. French. Used for en — equivalent to the English and Latin in.

In autre droit. In another's right. See DROIT.

In pais or pays. In the country: in deed. See PAIS.

In ventre. In the womb. See ABORTION; VENTER.

3. Latin. (1) An inseparable particle, meaning not. Like the English un, negatives the sense of the simple word.

Before l, changes to il, as in illegal; before b, m, p, (labials), changes to im, as in imbecile, immaterials; before r, changes to ir, as in irregular, irrelevant. Compare EN, 2; NON.

(2) A preposition, denoting rest or motion within or into a place or thing. Opposed to ex, coming out from within. May be translated in, into, within, among; to, toward, at; on, upon; against. Compare EN, 1.

In adversum. Against a resisting party. Compare In invitum.

In æquali jure. In equal right. See JUS.

In articulo mortis. At point of death. See ARTICLE, 3.

In banco. In bank. See BANK, 2 (1).

In bonis. In property. See BONA.

In capita. Among the persons. See CAPUT.

In capite. In chief. See CHIEF.

In cujus rei testimonium. In testimony of which thing; in testimony whereof.

In consimili casu. In like cause. See CASUS, Consimili.

In custodia legis. In possession of the law. See CUSTODY.

In dubiis. In matters of doubt.

In esse. In existence; opposed to in posse, q. v. See REMAINDER; SALE.

In extenso. At length; fully. See AT LARGE, 1.

In extremis. (a) At the end, the last. See ARTICLE, 3; NUNCUPATIVE.

(b) Under stress of apparent necessity.

A movement in extremis by a vessel is not chargeable as a fault in the master or pilot, though erroneous and useless.[1]

In facie ecclesiæ. Before the church. See DOWER.

In favorem libertatis. In favor of liberty.

In favorem vitæ. In favor of life.

In fictione. See FICTION.

In fieri. In the to be made: in the making; in process of being made, created, completed: not completed.

During the term of a court, proceedings are said to be in fieri.[2]

In fine. At the end — of the page, title, etc. Abridged in fin., in f.

In forma pauperis. As a poor person. See PAUPER, 1.

In foro conscientiæ. Before the bar of conscience. In foro domestico. Before the home tribunal. In foro seculari. Before the civil court. See FORUM.

In fraudem legis. In evasion of the law.

In futuro. At a future time.

[1] Allentown School District v. Derr, 115 Pa. 446 (1887).

[2] City of Wichita v. Burleigh, 36 Kan. 41 (1886).

[1] The Alabama, 17 F. R. 864 (1883), cases; 11 id. 922; 112 U. S. 526.

[2] 18 Wall. 193; 109 U. S. 499; 70 Ala. 402; 87 Ind. 26; 3 Bl. Com. 407.

In genere. In kind; opposed to in specie, q. v.

In gremio legis. In the bosom, protection, of law. See LEX.

In hac parte. On this side.

In hæc verba. In these words. See VERBUM.

In hoc. In this; as to this.

In individuo. In the undivided state: entire.

In infinitum. To infinity; indefinitely.

In initio. In the beginning; from the first.

In integrum. In the unbroken state: whole, entire.

In invitum. Against one not assenting: unwillingly; as, a tax levied in invitum. See INVITUS.

In judicio. By judicial procedure; in court.

In jure. In right: rightfully.

In limine. At the threshold: at first inception; at first opportunity.

An objection to testimony must be offered in limine.[1]

In litem. In the suit. See OATH, In litem.

In loco parentis. In the place of the parent.

Guardians and teachers are said to stand in loco parentis. See further PARENS.

In misericordia. In mercy. Abridged in m'ia. See MERCY.

In mitiori sensu. In the milder meaning. See SLANDER; SENSUS.

In mortua manu. In dead hand — mortmain, q. v.

In nubibus. In the clouds: in abeyance.

In nullo erratum. In nothing is there error. See ERRATUM.

In odium spoliatoris. In hatred of a despoiler. See ALTERATION, 2; SPOLIATION.

In pari causa. In an equal cause: equal right. In pari delicto. In equal wrongdoing. See DELICTUM.

In pari materia. On like subject. See MATERIA; REPEAL.

In perpetuam rei memoriam. For preserving evidence of the matter.

In personam. Against the person; opposed to in rem, q. v. See PERSONA.

In pios usus. For religious purposes. See USE, 3, Pious.

[1] 109 U. S. 70, 71; 121 id. 400.

In posse. In possibility; opposed to in esse, q. v.

In præparatorio. In preparation: being fitted out.[1]

In præsenti. At present time. See MARRIAGE.

In propria persona. In his own person. See PERSONA.

In propria causa. In his own suit. See CAUSA.

In quo. In which. See LOCUS.

In re. In the matter of: in regard to. See RES.

In rem. Against a thing — property; opposed to in personam, q. v. See RES.

In rerum natura. In the nature of things; in existence.

In se. In itself.

In solido; in solidum. For the whole; as an entire thing; exclusive of another.

In the case of a joint and several obligation, each obligor is liable for the whole amount; so, possession by a partner accrues to all copartners.

In specie. In the very thing; also, according to the precise terms; opposed to in genere, in kind. See DEPOSIT, 2; DISTRESS (4); GENUS; LOSS, 2; SPECIES.

In statu quo. In the condition in which — a person or thing was formerly. See STATUS; RESCISSION.

In terrorem. For a warning: as a threat.

In testimonium. In witness whereof.

In thesi. For a proposition: in statement.

In totidem verbis. In the very words: word for word. See VERBUM.

In toto. In the whole: entirely; absolutely.

In transitu. In passage; on the way. See STOPPAGE.

INABILITY. See ABILITY; DISABILITY.

INACCURACY. See AMBIGUITY.

INADEQUATE. See ADEQUATE.

INADMISSIBLE. See ADMISSION, 1.

INALIENABLE. See ALIEN, 2.

INAUGURATION. See OATH, Of office.

In order to vest official authority in a President or governor elect, it is only necessary that he take the oath of office.

INCAPABLE. Referring to a person disqualified from administering upon an estate, is not limited to mere mental or physical incapacity; includes the idea of unfitness, unsuitableness.[1] Compare IMPROVIDENT.

[1] 107 U. S. 71.

INCAPACITY. See CAPACITY.

INCENDIARY. See ARSON.

INCERTA. See CERTUM.

INCEST.[2] Illicit intercourse between persons within those degrees of consanguinity as to which marriage is forbidden by law.[3]

There may be a certain power exerted, resulting from age, relationship, or other circumstance, which overcomes the objections of the female, without amounting to that violence which would constitute rape.[4]

Incestuous adultery or fornication. The crime of adultery or fornication aggravated by the additional crime of incest.

While cognizable as an offense under the canon law, incest does not seem to have been punishable by indictment at common law. It is now punishable by statutes, which also prescribe the prohibited degrees of kinship.[5]

Where a defendant in an action for libel alleged that the plaintiff had committed incest from which she was pregnant, and did not attempt to prove the latter act, the plaintiff was held entitled to a verdict.[6] See IGNORANCE; POLYGAMY.

INCHASTITY. See CHASTITY; INCEST.

INCHOATE.[7] Commenced, but not completed; not fully in existence or operation; inceptive; incomplete; imperfect. Opposed, consummate, q. v.

Designates a right, title, or claim, not yet complete.[8] Thus, a marriage between minors is inchoate and incomplete.[9] Before the husband's death, right to dower is inchoate.[10] The right of an unborn child to take by descent is inchoate.[11] A legacy transfers an inchoate property to the legatee, perfected by assent of the executor.[12]

The right to a copyright may be inchoate.[13] From the moment of his invention, an inventor has an inchoate property in his invention, which he may complete by taking out a patent.

A purchaser at a judicial sale acquires an inchoate right to the property.[1] An informer, by commencing suit, obtains an inchoate property in the penalty, consummated by judgment.[2] The law forbids the inchoate step to an illegal act.[3] See PERFECT.

INCIDENT.[4] Whatever inseparably belongs to, is connected with, or inheres in another thing as principal; less properly, a thing connected with another, even separably.[5]

Incidcnt; incidental. Connected with something of more worth or importance; occupying a subordinate relation; accessory; collateral.

The "incidental" labor for which a mechanic's lien may be filed in Colorado must be directly done for, connected with, or actually incorporated into the building or improvement, and not indirectly and remotely associated with the construction.[6]

Customary incidents. Such incidents as originate in usage or custom.[7]

Annex incidents. Show what things are to be treated as incidental to another thing the subject of a contract.[8]

Parol evidence is admissible to annex incidents.

The rule is that the incident follows the principal. "When the law doth give anything to one, it giveth, impliedly, whatever is necessary for enjoying the same."[9]

When the use of a thing is granted, everything is granted by which the grantee may enjoy such use. The grantor is presumed to intend to make the grant effectual.[10]

Thus, whatever is part and parcel of a house, mill, or factory is conveyed eo nomine.[11] Land covered by the eaves of a house goes with a grant of the house.[12] The use of a front-door, entry, windows, closets, pumps, etc., is incident to the tenancy of a room in a house, unless otherwise agreed. The key is an incident to a building; so are the title-deeds to the land; so is rent to the reversion;[13] and so is a remainder to the particular estate. The right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law.[14]

---

[1] Drews' Appeals, 58 N. H. 320 (1878), cases.

[2] F. inceste: L. incestus: in, not; castus, pure.

[3] Daniels v. People, 6 Mich. 386 (1859); Territory v. Corbett, 3 Monta. 55 (1877); Commonwealth v. Lane, 113 Mass. 463 (1873); 39 Mich. 124; 44 Pa. 310.

[4] Raiford v. State, 68 Ga. 672 (1882).

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 64; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 502, 1 Mar. & D. § 312, St. Cr. § 727; 2 Kent, 83; State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 68-70 (1886), cases.

[6] Edwards v. Kansas City Times Co., 32 F. R. 613 (1887).

[7] In'-cō-āte. L. inchoare, to begin.

[8] Trenier v. Stewart, 101 U. S. 802 (1879).

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 436.

[10] 2 Bl. Com. 130.

[11] Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige, Ch. 35 (1830).

[12] 2 Bl. Com. 512.

[13] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 66 (1869).

[1] Delaplaine v. Lawrence, 10 Paige, 602 (1844).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 437.

[3] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 451 (1874).

[4] L. incidere, to fall upon or into.

[5] See Neal v. East Tennessee College, 6 Yerg. 209 (1834).

[6] Rara Avis Mining Co. v. Bouscher, 9 Col. 388 (1886).

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. § 969.

[8] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 294.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 36.

[10] Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Shortsleeves, 16 Blatch. 382 (1879), cases.

[11] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 286, 294, cases.

[12] Sherman v. Williams, 113 Mass. 484 (1873).

[13] 2 Bl. Com. 111, 176.

[14] 1 Washb. R. P. 54.

A vessel is incident to its keel; the frame to a picture; the halter to a horse sold; wool upon a pelt to the pelt; wages to freight; interest to its principal; the subscription list to a newspaper establishment; the custody of goods by an innkeeper to the contract for entertainment; such subordinate acts by a special agent as are usually done in connection with the principal act.[1]

Some writs are incidents to the other writs. Power to make rules of court is incidental to the general power invested in every court of record.[2] Power to call for proofs, to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to fine or imprison for non-attendance or non-production, is incidental to the power to hear and determine causes.[3] Costs follow a judgment as an incident thereto.

Power to make by-laws is incident to general corporate powers.

See further ACCESSORY; APPENDAGE; APPENDANT; APPURTENANT; CESSION; COMMAND; GRANT, 2, 3; JOINDER; MACHINERY; MESSUAGE; PRINCIPAL, 1; PROHIBITION, 1; RAILROAD.

INCIPITUR. L. It is begun: the beginning.

Formerly, when parties came to an issue, the plaintiff entered it, with all prior pleadings, on an issue-roll; later, only the commencement of the pleadings was entered. This was termed entering the incipitur—the beginning.[4]

INCLOSE. "Inclose" and "include" are of the same derivation. One of their common significations is, to confine within.[5] See INCLUDE.

Inclosure. A tract of land surrounded by an actual fence, and such fence.[6] See CLOSE, 3.

A testator directed his executors "to inclose with an iron fence the Friends' meeting-house grounds, the school-house grounds, and the Friends' burial-ground." These three grounds were adjoining. Held, that there was no latent ambiguity as to his intention to inclose each of the grounds on all sides.[7]

INCLUDE.[8] To confine within; to comprise, embrace, comprehend. See INCLOSE.

Including. A legacy of "one hundred dollars, including money trusteed" at a bank, was held to intend a gift of one hundred dollars only.[9]

Inclusive. Embraced; comprehended; opposed to exclusive. See DAY; CONSISTING.

INCLUSIO. See EXPRESSIO.

INCOME. That which comes in, or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures. Applied to the affairs of an individual, conveys the same idea that "revenue" expresses when applied to the affairs of a state or nation. Sometimes, is synonymous with "profits," the gain as between receipts and payments.[1] See PROFIT, 1. Compare EARNINGS.

The "income of an estate" is the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management, or the rent which may be obtained for the use of it. "Rent and profits," "income," and "net income" of the estate, are equivalent expressions.[2]

The income from a profession, trade, or employment, which may be taxed, is the result of the business for a given period, the net result of many combined influences: the creation of capital, industry, and skill.[3]

In the ordinary commercial sense, "income," especially when connected with the word "rent," may mean net or clear income. But one may say that his "income" from a certain property amounts to a particular sum, and yet be speaking merely of the accruing rent, without regard to insurance, taxes, or repairs. Outside of business circles we can never know whether net or gross income is meant without further inquiry. "Produce" or "product," as a substituted word, may relieve a will from obscurity.[4]

"Income" is the gain which accrues from property, labor, or business. It is applicable to the periodical payments, in the nature of rent, usually made under mineral leases.[5]

May mean "money," and not the expectation of receiving or the right to receive money at a future time. A note is ground for expecting income, and, in the sense of a statute taxing incomes, the amount thereof is to be returned when paid.[6] See BOND.

An absolute gift of all of the income of property, without limitation as to time, is a gift of the property itself.[7]

INCOMMUTABLE. See COMMUTATION.

INCOMPATIBLE. Offices are said to be "incompatible and inconsistent" when,

---

[1] 2 Pars. Contr. 57.

[2] 25 Pa. 516; 3 Binn. 417, 277.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 309.

[4] See 3 Steph. Com. 566, n.; 1 Arch. Pr. 350.

[5] [Campbell v. Gilbert, 57 Ala. 571 (1877), Brickell, Chief Justice.

[6] Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 44 (1874); Pettit v. May, 5 id. 672 (1674); Porter v. Aldrich, 29 Vt. 331 (1856); Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 580 (1878); 8 Hun, 269.

[7] Appeal of Hall, 112 Pa. 52 (1886).

[8] L. includere, to shut in, keep within.

[9] Brad[illegible] v. Darling, 132 Mass. 218 (1882).

[1] [People v. Supervisors of Niagara, 4 Hill, 23 (1842), Bronson, J.

[2] Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. *203 (1828), Weston, J. Compare Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 532, 590 (1885).

[3] Wilcox v. County Commissioners, 103 Mass. 546 (1870), Ames, J.

[4] Thompson's Appeal, 100 Pa. 481-82 (1882), Gordon, J.; Sim's Appeal, 44 id. 347 (1863).

[5] Eley's Appeal, 103 Pa. 306 (1883), Sterrett, J.

[6] United States v. Schillinger, 14 Blatch. 71 (1876); Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. 63 (1872).

See also 14 La. An. 815; 9 Mass. 372; 3 Duer, 426; 30 Barb. 637; 4 Abb. N. C. 400; 1 Wil. (Ind.) 219; 16 F. R. 14.

[7] Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 259 (1885); Sproul's Appeal, 105 Pa. 441 (1884); 2 Roper, Leg. 371.

from the multiplicity of business, they cannot be executed by the same person with care and ability; or, when their being subordinate and interfering with each other induces a presumption that they cannot both be executed with impartiality and honesty.[1]

Incompatibility. See DIVORCE.

INCOMPETENT. See COMPETENT.

INCOMPLETE. See INCHOATE; PERFECT.

INCONCLUSIVE. See CONCLUDE, 2.

INCONSISTENT. See CONDITION; INCOMPATIBLE; REPUGNANT.

INCONTESTABLE. See CONTEST.

INCONVENIENCE. See HARDSHIP.

INCORPORATE. See CORPORATE.

INCORPOREAL. See CORPOREAL.

INCORRIGIBLE. See REFORMATORY.

INCREASE. That which grows out of land or is produced by the cultivation of it.[2] Compare ACCRETION; EARNINGS; INCOME; PROFIT.

Increased costs. See COSTS.

INCREDIBLE. See CREDIT.

INCREMENT. See ACCESSORY; INCIDENT; ICE.

INCRIMINATE. See CRIMINATE.

INCULPATE. See CULPA.

INCUMBENT. 1. Resting as a duty or obligation.

2. One who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of an office.[3] See VACANCY.

INCUMBIT. See PROBARE, Probatio.

INCUMBRANCE.[4] A burden, an obstruction, impediment.

Whatever charges, burdens, obstructs, or impairs the use of an estate in land, or prevents or impairs its transfer.[5]

An estate or interest in or a right to land, to the diminution of its value.[6]

Every right to or interest in land which may subsist in a third person to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the conveyance.[7]

An outstanding lease is such an incumbrance.[8]

So is a subsisting lien of a mechanic or materialman.[9]

Incumber. To charge or burden with a lien, or an estate. Disincumber. To relieve of such charge or burden.

Incumbrancer. He who places a charge upon his interest in realty, as, by a mortgage, or a judgment confessed.

"Incumbrance" is broader than "lien." An "incumbrancer" is one who has a legal claim upon an estate. An absolute conveyance is an incumbrance, in the fullest sense of the term.[10]

Unincumbered. Not bound by or subject to anything in the nature of a lien or burden: as, an unincumbered title.[11]

Incumbrances are spoken of as prior, subsequent; first, second, etc.

Covenant against incumbrances. A stipulation that there are no charges against land which will diminish its value.

The mere existence of any such charge constitutes a breach of the covenant. If in the present tense, does not run with the land. The covenantee may extinguish the claim, and recover therefor.[12]

But in a policy of fire insurance a warranty concerning "incumbrances of all kinds" includes only such as are created by the act or consent of the parties, not those created by law.[13]

See BURDEN; CHARGE; LIEN; ONUS, Cum onere; UNDER AND SUBJECT.

INCUR. See EXPENDITURE.

Men contract debts affirmatively; they incur liabilities — the liability is cast upon them by act or operation of law. "Incur" implies, then, something not embraced in the words "debts and contracts."[14]

INCURABLE. See CURE, 2.

INDEBITATUS. See ASSUMPSIT.

INDEBTED. See DEBT.

---

[1] People v. Green, 46 How. Pr. 170 (1873): 4 Inst. 100; Bac. Abr. See also Commonwealth v. The Sheriff, 4 S. & R. *277 (1818); Commonwealth v. Binns, 17 id. *220 (1828); State v. Buttz, 9 S. C. 179 (1877); Constitution, Art. I, sec. 6, cl. 2.

[2] De Blane v. Lynch, 23 Tex. 27 (1859).

[3] State v. McCollister, 11 Ohio, 50 (1841); County of Scott v. Ring, 29 Minn. 403 (1882).

[4] F. encumbrer, to load: combrer, to hinder: L. cumbrus: L. cumulus, a heap. Also spelled encumbrance; encumber, disencumber.

[5] Anonymous, 2 Abb. N. C. 63 (1876).

[6] Newcomb v. Fiedler, 24 Ohio St. 466 (1873).

[7] Rawle, Cov. Tit. 94; Kelsey v. Remer, 43 Conn. 188 (1875); Alling v. Burlock, 46 id. 510 (1878); Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 369 (1884), cases. See also 51 Me. 73; 4 Mass. 627; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242.

[8] Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 369 (1884), cases.

[9] Redmon v. Phœnix Fire Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 300 (1881).

[10] Warden v. Sabins, 36 Kan. 169 (1887), Horton, C. J.

[11] Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. 376 (1856); 5 Abb. Pr. 23.

[12] See 20 Ala. 137, 156; 6 Conn. 249; 4 Ind. 533; 8 id. 171; 10 id. 424; 19 Mo. 480; 20 N. H. 369; 25 id. 229; 10 Ohio, 317; 5 Wis. 17; 27 Vt. 739; Rawle, Cov. Tit. 89; 2 Washb. R. P. 658; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242; Tud. L. C. 60.

[13] Hosford v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 404 (1888).

[14] [Crandall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. 56 (1857): 5 Abb. Pr. 169. See also 14 Barb. 202; 4 Duer, 101.

INDECENT. Whatever shocks the sense of decency in people generally.

At common law, indictable as a misdemeanor. Examples: Exposure of the person in public, exhibiting pictures of nude persons. What are acts of indecency is generally to be decided by a jury.

Indecent assault; indecent exposure; indecent prints or publications. These offenses (largely self-defining) are punishable, in England, under statute 24 & 25 Vict. (1861) c. 100, s. 52; in the United States, by statute in each State; in Pennsylvania, by the Crimes Act of March 31, 1860, § 44.[1]

In Rev. St. § 3893, which forbids mailing indecent matter, "indecent" means immodest, impure, not simply coarse, nor even profane.[2]

But a sealed letter is not within the prohibition.[3]

Public indecency. Has no fixed legal meaning; is too vague to imply, of itself, a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, have usually limited the operation of the expression to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,—acts which have a direct bearing on the public morals, and affect the body of society.[4]

The place is "public" if the exposure is such that it is likely to be seen by a number of casual observers.[5]

Where the bodily injury from an indecent assault is trifling, the gravamen of an action for damages must be the mental suffering. In such case evidence is always admissible to show that the plaintiff was a woman of unchaste character.[6]

In an action for defamation, words which in their common acceptation charge the crime of public indecency are actionable per se.[7]

See LEWD; MORALS; OBSCENE.

INDEFEASIBLE. See DEFEASANCE.

INDEFINITE. See DEFINITE.

INDEMNITY.[8] 1. Compensation for a loss sustained. 2. An engagement to make good loss that may be sustained: a bond of indemnity.[9]

[1] See Cooley, Const. Lim. 748; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 2385, 2544; 2 Chitty, Cr. L. 42; 1 Russ. Cr. 326; 2 S. & R. 91; 126 Mass. 52; 2 C. & K. 933.

[2] United States v. Smith, 11 F. R. 663, 665 (1882), Barr, District Judge.

[3] United States v. Loftis, 12 F. R. 671 (1882), Deady, J.

[4] McJunkins v. State, 10 Ind. 145 (1858), Hanna, J. See Jennings v. State, 16 id. 335 (1861); Ardery v. State, 56 id. 328 (1877).

[5] Van Houten v. State, 46 N. J. L. 17 (1884), Beasley, Chief Justice.

[6] Mitchell v. Work, 13 R. I. 646 (1882), cases.

[7] Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430 (1884), cases.

[8] L. indemnitas: in-demnis, unharmed, free from damnum, hurt, loss.

[9] See Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 467 (1870); 2 McCord, 282.

Indemnify. To compensate for loss, sustained or anticipated.

Indemnitor. He who undertakes to protect another from loss that may be incurred on account of an act or action by the latter in behalf of the former. Opposed, indemnitee.[1]

Property insurance is a contract for indemnity. Officers selling personalty, under executions, require bonds of indemnity against damages recoverable for trespass.[2] Persons who distribute trust moneys require bonds for pro rata repayment in the event of unexpected claims arising; and settlements and wills may contain clauses of indemnity for the protection of executants.

There is difference between an agreement to indemnify and an agreement to pay.[3]

See DAMNUM. Damnificatus; INJUNCTION; INSURANCE; SURETY.

3. Statutes designed to relieve the occupant of an office who has failed to do some act necessary fully to qualify him for the discharge of the duties of the office, or to exempt from punishment persons guilty of offenses, have been called "acts of indemnity." See AMNESTY.

INDENTURE.[4] A deed: a writing sealed and delivered.[5]

A deed inter partes, or a mutual deed.[6]

Named from being indented or cut on the top or the side by a waving line or a line of indenture so as to fit the counterpart from which it is supposed to have been separated.[6]

Formerly, when there were more parties than one to a sealed instrument, a copy for each was made, and cut or indented (in acute angles instar dentium: like the teeth of a saw, but, later, in a waving line) on the top or side, to tally with the other; which deed, so made, was called an "indenture." Both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters between them and through which the parchment was cut so as to leave half on each part. Later, the indenting was not through any word at all; and, in time, the term "indenture" served merely to give name to the species of deed. The part executed by the grantor was the original, the others counterparts. Where all the parties executed every part, each part was an original. Opposed, deed-poll.[7]

By 8 and 9 Vict. (1845), c. 106, the necessity for indenting was abolished in the case of ordinary deeds, and by 24 Vict. (1861), c. 9, as a requisite in gifts of land to charities.[7]

[1] 30 Minn. 321; 15 id. 461.

[2] 87 Ill. 243.

[3] Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 99 (1867).

[4] L. L. indentare, to notch: L. dens, a tooth.

[5] Overseers of Hopewell v. Overseers of Amwell, 6 N. J. L. 175 (1822).

[6] Bowen v. Beck, 94 N. Y. 89 (1883).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 296; 2 Washb. R. P. 587; Williams, R. P. 146-47; 1 Reeve. Hist. Eng. Law, 89.

Indent. n. Any contract or obligation in writing; but may have a narrower signification.[1]

INDEPENDENCE. The Declaration of Independence, the state paper issued July 4, 1776, by the "Representatives of the United States of America," was, "that these United Colonies, are and of Right ought to be, Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved; . . . and that as Free and Independent States they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do."[2]

The inherent rights which lie at the foundation of all action between fellow-men are happily expressed in the preamble, viz.: "We hold these truths to be self-evident" — that is, so plain that their truth is recognised upon their mere statement,—"that all men are endowed"— not by edicts of emperors, or decrees of Parliament, or acts of Congress, but "by their Creator with certain inalienable rights"— that is, rights which cannot be bartered, given, or taken away except in punishment of crime,—"and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and to secure these"— not grant them —"governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."[3] See CONFEDERATION; HAPPINESS.

Independence Day. See HOLIDAY.

INDEPENDENT. See DEPENDENT; COVENANT.

INDEX. A portion of a book exhibiting, in alphabetical order, and in more or less detail, the contents of the whole volume; or, a book in itself containing, in like order, references to the contents of a series of volumes. Latin plural, indices; English plural, indexes.

Direct index. Exhibits the names of grantors, lessors, mortgagors, and other parties of the first part to recorded instruments. Indirect or reverse index. Gives the names of grantees, lessees, mortgagees, and other like parties to whom recorded instruments were executed; also called ad sectam index: literally, at the suit of, that is, originally, containing instruments made or delivered to plaintiffs.

Indexes, directed by statute to be made, are designed to facilitate the examination of records, not to protect the interests of persons whose conveyances are recorded. In such case the failure of the officer to make the index will not prejudice the title of a grantee or mortgagee.[1] See IDEM, Sonans.

INDIAN. Includes descendants of Indians who have an admixture of white or negro blood, provided they retain their distinctive character as members of the tribe from which they trace descent.[2]

The United States adopted the principle originally established by European nations, that the aboriginal tribes were to be regarded as the owners of the territories they respectively occupied.[3] See DISCOVERY, 1.

Indians who maintain their tribal relations are the subjects of independent governments, and as such not in the jurisdiction of the United States, because the Indian nations have always been regarded as distinct political communities between which and our government certain international relations were to be maintained. These relations are established by treaties to the same extent as with foreign powers. They are treated as sovereign communities, possessing and exercising the right of free deliberation and action, but, in consideration of protection, owing a qualified subjection to the United States.[4]

If the tribal organization of Indian bands is recognized by the political department of the National government as existing; that is to say, if the government makes treaties with and has its agent among them, paying annuities, and dealing otherwise with "head men" in its behalf, the fact that the primitive habits and customs of the tribe have been largely broken into by intercourse with the whites, does not authorize a State government to regard the tribal organization as gone, and the Indians as citizens of the State where they are and subject to its laws.[5]

When members leave their tribe and become merged into the mass of the people they owe complete

[1] United States v. Irwin, 5 McLean, 183-84 (1851).

[2] See Rev. Stat., 2 ed., pp. 3-6.

[3] Butchers' Union Co. v. Cresent City Co., 111 U. S. 756 (1884), Field, J.

[1] Nichol v. Henry, 89 Ind. 54, 58-59 (1883); Bedford v. Tupper, 30 Hun, 176 (1883). See also 35 Ala. 28; 50 Ga. 327; 19 Ill. 486; 29 La. An. 116; 31 id. 38; 44 Mich. 128; 46 Mo. 472; 87 N. Y. 257; 16 Ohio St. 548; 76 Pa. 398; 82 id. 116; 11 W. N. C. 567; 24 Vt. 327, 338; 4 Biss. 437, 445; Cooley, Torts, p. 387, cases.

[2] Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 836 (1847). See Relation of Indians to Citizenship, 7 Op. Att.-Gen. 746, 750 (1856); Campan v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 435 (1861).

[3] United States v. Rogers, 4 How. 567 (1846); Johnson v. M'Intosh, 8 Wheat. 574, 584 (1823); United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 381-82 (1886); 3 Kent, 378; 2 Washb. R. P. 521.

[4] Exp. Reynolds, 18 Alb. Law J. 8 (U. S. D. C., W. D. Ark., 1878), Parker, J. See also Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. *16 (1831); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 id. 515, 584 (1832); Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 403 (1856); Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288 (1886); 2 Story, Const. §§ 1097-1100; 3 Kent, 308-18; 50 Mich. 585.

[5] The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, 756 (1866), Davis, J.

allegiance to the government of the United States and are subject to its courts.[1]

A white man who is incorporated with a tribe by adoption does not thereby become an Indian, so as to cease to be amenable to the laws of the United States or to lose the right to trial in their courts.[2]

Under the Constitution "Indians not taxed" are not counted in apportioning representatives and direct taxes among the States; and Congress has power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes. The tribes are alien nations, distinct political communities, with whom the United States have habitually dealt either through treaties or acts of Congress. The members owe immediate allegiance to their several tribes, and are not part of the people of the United States. They are in a dependent condition, a state of pupilage, resembling that of a ward to his guardian. Indians and their property, exempt from taxation by treaty or statute of the United States, cannot be taxed by any State. General acts of Congress do not apply to Indians, unless so expressed as to clearly manifest an intention to include them. The alien and dependent condition of the members of the tribes cannot be put off at their own will, without the assent of the United States. They have never been deemed citizens, except under explicit provisions of treaty or statute to that effect; nor were they made citizens by the Fourteenth Amendment.[3]

While the government has recognized in the Indian tribes heretofore a state of semi-independence and pupilage, it has the right and authority, instead of controlling them by treaties, to govern them by acts of Congress: they being within the geographical limits of the United States, and necessarily subject to the laws which Congress may enact for their protection and that of the people with whom they came in contact. A State has no power over them as long as they maintain their tribal relations: the Indians then owe no allegiance to the State, and receive from it no protection.[4]

In construing a treaty, if words be used which are susceptible of a more extended meaning than their plain import, as connected with the tenor of the treaty, they should be considered as used in the latter sense. How the words were understood by the unlettered people, rather than their critical meaning, should form the rule of construction.[5]

The relations between the United States and the different tribes being those of a superior toward an inferior who is under its care and control, its acts touching them and its promises to them, in the execution of its own policy and in the furtherance of its own interests, are to be interpreted as justice and reason demand in all cases where power is exerted by the strong over those to whom they owe care and protection. The inequality between the parties is to be made good by the superior justice which looks only to the substance of the right, without regard to technical rules framed under a system of municipal jurisprudence, formulating the rights and obligations of private persons, equally subject to the same laws. . . A treaty is not to be read as rigidly as a document between private persons governed by a system of technical law, but in the light of that larger reason which constitutes the spirit of the law of nations.[1]

Indian country. That portion of the United States declared such by act of Congress; not, a country owned or inhabited by Indians in whole or in part.

As, in the act declaring it a crime to introduce spirituous liquors in such country.[2]

Applies to all the country to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, whether within a reservation or not, and whenever acquired.[3]

Indian Territory. An act approved February 15, 1888 (25 St. L. 33), provides that any person hereafter convicted in the United States courts having jurisdiction over the Indian Terrritory or parts thereof, of stealing any horse, mare, gelding, filly, foal, ass or mule, when said theft is committed in the Territory, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not more than fifteen years, or by both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person convicted of any robbery or burglary in the Territory shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding fifteen years, or both, at the discretion of the court; Provided, That the act shall not be construed to apply to any offense committed by one Indian upon the person or property of another Indian, or so as to repeal any former act in relation to robbing the mails or robbing any person of property belonging to the United States; nor shall the act affect or apply to any prosecution now pending, or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

SEC. 3. That all acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That such acts shall remain in force for the punishment of persons who have heretofore been guilty of the crime of larceny in the Territory.

See COMMERCE; EXPATRIATION; EXTRADITION, 1. GRAIN; PARTUS; PUEBLO.

INDICATE. See SHOW.

INDICIA. L. Marks; signs; appearances; color.

In civil law, circumstantial evidence — facts which give rise to inferences. In common law, indications

[1] Exp. Reynolds, ante.

[2] United States v. Rogers, 4 How. 567 (1846); 2 Op. Att.-Gen. 693; 4 id. 258; 7 id. 174.

[3] Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 90–100, 102 (1884), cases, Gray, J.

[4] United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 381–82 (1886), cases, Miller, J. Act 3 March, 1871: R. S. § 2079; 119 U. S. 27.

[5] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. *582 (1832), M'Lean, J.

[1] Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S. 28 (1886), Matthews, J. On Indian citizenship, see 20 Am. Law Rev. 183–93 (1886), cases.

[2] United States v. Seveloff, 2 Saw. 311 (1873); Pelcher v. United States, 3 McCrary, 510, 515 (1882), cases; United States v. Martin, 8 Saw. 473 (1883), cases; Forty-Three Cases of Brandy, 14 F. R. 539–42 (1882), cases; United States v. Earl, 17 id. 75 (1883), cases; United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 415–19 (1865).

[3] Exp. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, 561 (1883). See also United States v. Le Bris, 121 id. 287 (1887): R. S. § 2139 of character: as, indicia of authority, of fraud, of title.[1] See BADGE, 2.

INDICTMENT.[2] A written accusation of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, preferred to and presented upon oath by a grand jury.[3]

Indict. To charge with crime by means of an indictment. Indicted. Charged by indictment. Indictor and indictee are not now in use. Indictable. Admitting of prosecution by indictment.

Bill of indictment. The written accusation presented to the grand jury, and found by them to be a "true bill" or "not a true bill."

The indictment intended by the Fifth Amendment is the presentation to the proper court, under oath, by a grand jury, duly impaneled, of a charge describing an offense against the law for which the party may be punished.[4]

No change can be made in the body of such instrument without a re-submission to the grand jury — except where statutes prescribe otherwise. But changes may be made in the "caption."[4]

The object of indictment is, first, to furnish the accused with such a description of the charge against him as will enable him to make his defense, and avail himself of his conviction or acquittal for protection against a further prosecution for the same offense; and, second, to inform the court of the facts alleged, so that it may decide whether they are sufficient in law to support a conviction if one should be had.[5]

The object is, that the defendant may know what to meet; that he may plead a former acquittal or conviction; and that he may take the opinion of the court before which he is indicted, by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment, or, the opinion of a court of error on the sufficiency of the statements in the indictment.[6]

Facts are to be stated, not conclusions of law alone. A crime is made up of acts and intent; and these must be set forth with reasonable particularity of time, place, and circumstances. Every ingredient of the offense must be clearly alleged. Where the definition of an offense includes generic terms, the indictment must state the species.[7]

Where the offense is a common-law offense, the technical words of the common law must be used; where the offense is statutory, the substance of the words may be followed.[1]

For a statutory offense, the charge must be so laid as to bring the case within the description of the offense given in the statute, alleging distinctly the essential requisites. Nothing is to be left to implication or intendment. It is sufficient to pursue the words of the act, or, if that would leave an ambiguity, then the substance and legal effect of the words.[2]

The rule that a statutory offense need not be charged in the words of the statute does not apply to technical terms and words of art which have acquired a conventional meaning and cannot be dispensed with, such as "murdered," "feloniously," and the like. But every material ingredient, constituting the description of the offense in the statute, whether an act done, knowledge had, an intent or purpose entertained, or the existence of any collateral fact, must be affirmatively stated in plain, direct, intelligible language.[3]

Where the statute simply designates the offense, and does not in express terms name its constituent elements, the information must sometimes be expanded beyond the statutory terms.[4]

When a statute contains provisos and exceptions in distinct clauses, it is not necessary to state that the defendant does not come within the exceptions, or to negative the provisos. But if the exceptions are contained in the enacting clause, it will be necessary to negative them, that the description of the crime may in all respects correspond with the statute.[5]

Where an offense may be committed by doing any one of several things, the indictment may, in a single count, group them together, and charge the defendant with having committed them all, and a conviction may be had of any one of the things, without proof of the commission of the others.[6]

Several offenses of the same class or kind, growing out of the same transaction, though committed at different times, may be joined in the same indictment in separate counts.[7]

Where the same offense is charged in different

[1] 60 Mo. 420; 1 Pars. Contr. 45.

[2] F. indicter, to accuse: L. L. indicare, to point out: L. indicere, to proclaim.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 302. See also 4 Col. 202; 12 Conn. 452; 4 Mich. 424; 72 Mo. 106; 13 Wend. 317; 24 id. 570; 11 Ohio, 71; 19 Ohio St. 255.

[4] Exp. Bain, 120 U. S. 1, 6-9 (1887), cases, Miller, J. And see 26 Am. Law Reg. 446-47 (1887), cases.

[5] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 558 (1875), Waite, C. J.

[6] United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 350-51 (1879), Blatchford, J.; Bradlaugh v. The Queen, L. R., 3 Q. B. 616 (1878).

[7] United States v. Cruikshank, supra; United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 173-77 (1872), cases; United States v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483 (1888), cases.

[1] United States v. Bachelder, 2 Gall. 18 (1814), Story, J.; Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 78 (1885), cases.

[2] United States v. Staats, 8 How. 44 (1850), Nelson, J.

[3] Edwards v. Commonwealth, 19 Pick. 125 (1837), Shaw, C. J. See 4 Bl. Com. 307, 227; 11 F. R. 240; 2 Flip. 319; 87 Ind. 70; 30 Kan. 365, 612; 17 Nev. 286; 50 Pa. 249; 77 Va. 54.

[4] State v. Gavigan, 36 Kan. 327 (1887); 30 id. 365. See generally State v. Campbell, 29 Tex. 46 (1867), cases: 94 Am. Dec. 252-58 (1888), cases.

[5] 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 283 b, 284: United States v. Britton, 107 U. S. 670 (1882); United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 173-74 (1872), cases.

[6] Bork v. People, 91 N. Y. 13 (1883); State v. Gray, 29 Minn. 144 (1882), cases.

[7] United States v. Wentworth, 11 F. R. 52 (1882); Exp. Peters, 12 id. 461 (1880); ib. 464, cases: R. S. § 1024.

counts, the whole indictment may be submitted to the jury, with instructions, if they find the defendant guilty upon any count, to return a general verdict of guilty; otherwise, where one count is had, and the evidence thereon is submitted with the rest, against objection.[1] See BAD, 2.

For a common-law offense, the conclusion of an indictment is "against the peace and dignity" of the commonwealth or State; for a statutory offense, "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided."[2] See AMENDMENT, 1; FORM, 2, Of statute.

An indictment is to be distinguished from a presentment and an information, qq. v.

See also ABBREVIATIONS; CAPTION, 2; CHALLENGE, 2; COMMENCEMENT; CONFESSION, 2; COPY; CRIME; DEMURRER; DIVERS; EVIDENCE; EXCEEDING; IDEM, SONANS; IDENTITY, 1; IGNORE; INDORSE, 1; INFAMY; JEOFAIL; JOINT; JURY; NEGATIVE; OR, 2; NOLLE PROSEQUI; NOLO CONTENDERE; PLACE, 1; QUASH; SENTENCE; THEN AND THERE; VERBUM, In hæc.

INDIFFERENT. 1. Said of an appraiser, where property has been taken in execution: impartial, free from bias.[3]

2. Said of a juror: that the mind is in a state of neutrality as respects the person and the matter to be tried; that there exists no bias, for or against either party, calculated to operate upon him; that he comes to the trial with a mind uncommitted and prepared to weigh the evidence in impartial scales.[4] Compare IMPARTIAL.

INDIGENT. See PAUPER; POOR.

A gift "to aid indigent young men" of a certain town or State "in fitting themselves for the evangelical ministry," is not void for uncertainty. The words "indigent" and "evangelical" are sufficiently definite, within ordinary intelligence. "They describe a man who is without sufficient means of his own, and whom no person is bound and able to supply, to enable him to prepare himself for preaching the Gospel."[5]

INDIGNITY. What acts or course of conduct will amount to such indignities as constitute a cause for divorce seems to be nowhere defined, and they are perhaps incapable of exact specification.

In Pennsylvania, a single act of indignity is not enough: there must be such a course of conduct, or continued treatment, as renders the wife's condition intolerable and her life burdensome. Indignities to the person need not be such as would endanger life or health; they may be such as would render life too humiliating to be borne.[1]

In North Carolina, the indignity must be such as may be expected seriously to annoy a woman of ordinary good sense and temper, and must be continued in, so that it may appear to have been done willfully or at least consciously.[2]

That condition which renders life burdensome must be shown to exist in fact, and not be merely inferred from facts.[3] Compare CRUELTY, 1.

INDIRECT. See DIRECT.

INDISPUTABLE. See PRESUMPTION.

INDIVIDUAL. Pertaining or belonging to a single or distinct person, considered apart from a number of persons jointly associated or involved; personal; private: as, individual — assets, liability. See LIABILITY; PARTNERSHIP; CONTRIBUTION.

Individuals. See POLICE, 2; WELFARE.

INDIVISIBLE. See DIVISION, 1.

INDORSE.[4] 1. To write upon the back of any instrument or paper: as, to indorse a deed with the day or book of its record; to indorse a pleading filed with the time of receipt, payment of costs, etc.; to indorse a warrant of arrest prior to action under it in another county.[5]

In many cases, simply to write upon. In this sense words may be indorsed upon the face of a paper, even upon the face of a bill of exchange or promissory note.[6]

While the word has no definite technical meaning, other than that of some writing "upon the back," its particular meaning is always determined by the context, if in writing, and by its connection, if in spoken words.[7]

Indorsement. Has its primitive and popular sense of something written on the outside or back of a paper, on the opposite side from which something else had been previously written, when the context shows that that sense is necessary to give effect to

[1] Commonwealth v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 133 Mass. 391-92 (1882); 16 Gray, 11, 17; 120 Mass. 372.

[2] See Insall v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 144 (1883); Holden v. State, 1 id. 234 (1876), cases.

[3] Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 307 (1815); Mitchell v. Kirtland, 7 id. *231 (1828); Fitch v. Smith, 9 id. *45 (1831).

[4] People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. 122 (1827).

[5] Storr's Agricultural School v. Whitney, 54 Conn. 352 (1887), cases, Pardee, J.: 35 Alb. Law J. 387, cases. Compare Hunt v. Fowler, 121 Ill. 269 (1887), cases: 36 Alb. Law J. 113; ib. 115. cases.

[1] May v. May, 62 Pa. 210 (1869).

[2] Miller v. Miller, 78 N. C. 106 (1878).

[3] Cline v. Cline, 10 Nev. 474-77 (1881), cases.

[4] F. endosser, to put on the back of: en, L. in, on; dos, L. dorsum, the back. Indorse seems to be preferred to endorse.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 468; Hartwell v. Hemmenway, 7 Pick. 119 (1828); Marian, etc. Gravel Road Co. v. Kessinger, 66 Ind. 553 (1879).

[6] Commonwealth v. Butterick, 100 Mass. 16 (1868); 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 570 a.

[7] Commonwealth v. Spilman, 124 Mass. 329 (1878); Davis v. Town of Fulton, 52 Wis. 662 (1881).

the pleading or other instrument in which it occurs.[1]

2. For the person to whom or to whose order a bill of exchange or a promissory note is payable, to write his name on the back of such bill or note in order to assign over his property therein.[2]

That is the common meaning, but it is not impossible to indorse by placing the name upon the face of the bill or note.[3]

Indorser. He who writes his name upon a negotiable instrument prior to transferring it by delivery. Indorsee. He to whom the instrument is delivered; the transferee.

Indorsement. The act by which a bill or note payable to order is transferred; the transfer of the legal title to any such instrument.

As far as it operates as a transfer of the instrument, it is an executed contract; and also, since it imports, unless restricted, future liability in the indorser, it is an executory contract. But every contract, whether executed or executory, evidenced by a written instrument, must be delivered and accepted. Hence, to complete a contract of indorsement, in addition to writing the name of the payee on the back, the further act of delivering the instrument to the person to whom title is to be transferred is necessary. Indorsing, then, imports delivery.[4]

Accommodation indorsement. In effect, a loan of the indorser's credit without consideration.

Blank indorsement. The form in which the indorser does not name the transferee.

Indorsement in full. Contains the name of the transferee.[5]

Irregular indorsement. An indorsement which departs from common practice as to the place where the name should be written.[6]

Qualified indorsement. By this form the indorser limits or modifies his liability as ordinarily understood.

The words used are "without recourse:" without liability in case of non-acceptance or non-payment. They are written after the indorser's signature.[7]

Evidence that an indorsement in blank was "without recourse" is inadmissible.[1] See further RECOURSE.

Restrictive indorsement. Restrains negotiability to a particular person, or for a special purpose.[2]

"Unqualified" and "unrestricted" designate that form of indorsement which is most common — the wholly unmodified form. And this, the ordinary contract, imports: as to a bill, that the indorser will pay it at maturity, if, on presentment for acceptance, it is not accepted, and he is duly notified of the dishonor; and as to a bill or note, that the indorser will pay it if it is not duly paid by the acceptor or maker, and he is duly notified; that it is genuine; that the signatures of the immediate parties, and, in the better opinion, of prior indorsers, are genuine; that it is a valid and subsisting obligation according to the ostensible relations of the parties; that the original parties, and, in the better opinion, prior indorsers, could bind themselves as they have assumed to do; and that the indorser has a lawful title and the right to transfer it.[3]

An indorser's contract is a new one, as compared with the maker's. He is not a surety, as is sometimes said, for a surety is a joint promisor with the principal.[4]

The maker is liable without demand of payment — his undertaking being unconditional; but the indorser undertakes to pay only if the maker does not pay, which makes it necessary for the holder to take proper steps to obtain payment from the maker, from which it follows that his contract is that due diligence shall be used to that end.[5]

An indorser is only conditionally liable. His responsibility is a contingent one, and, ordinarily, performance of the condition to make demand of the maker and give notice of his default in due time is an essential part of the title of one who asserts an indorser's liability. The reason is, that the indorser, if looked to for payment, may have the earliest opportunity to take steps for his own protection. There is much inconsistency in the decisions whether demand and notice is necessary when they by no possibility could have enabled him to protect himself. The best considered cases hold that he is entitled to notice although he has taken indemnity from the maker — since that may prove insufficient. In general, every indorser ought to have notice whenever he has a remedy over against the maker. Where, by agreement with the maker, the indorser has become the principal debtor, no notice is needed — for the indorser then has no remedy over.[6]

---

[1] Powell v. Commonwealth, 11 Gratt. 830 (1854).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 468.

[3] Haines v. Dubois, 30 N. J. L. 269 (1863), cases; Commonwealth v. Butterick, ante; Clark v. Sigourney, infra.

[4] Clark v. Sigourney, 17 Conn. 519 (1846).

[5] See Byles, Bills, 150-51, by Sharswood.

[6] See 24 Cent. Law J. 3-6 (1887), cases.

[7] Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 138, 146; Hailey v. Falconer, 28 Ala. 539 (1856).

[1] Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 30, 36-39 (1881), cases. See generally, as to parol explanations of indorsements, 18 Cent. Law J. 382-86 (1884), cases.

[2] See Armour Banking Co. v. Riley County Bank, 30 Kan. 165 (1883); 11 R. I. 119. Suffixes as descriptio personæ, Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 602-7 (1888), cases.

[3] See 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 498.

[4] Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. 688 (1874), cases.

[5] Cox v. Nat. Bank of New York, 100 U. S. 713 (1879), cases.

[6] Ray v. Smith, 17 Wall. 415 (1873), Strong, J.

An indorser may sue all prior parties concurrently or successively, but can have only one satisfaction.[1]

Contracts of indorsement are to be construed according to the law of the place where made, unless it appears that they are to be performed according to the laws of another State.[2]

See further ACCEPT, 2; ACCOMMODATION; ASSIGN, 2; BEARER; BLANK; DESCRIPTIO PERSONAE; EXCHANGE, 3, Bill of; FAITH, Good; GUARANTY; NEGOTIATE, 2; NOTE, 2; PROTEST, 2.

INDUCEMENT. 1. In pleading, matter merely introductory to the essential ground or substance of the complaint or defense, or explanatory of it or of the manner in which it originated or took place.[3]

Being explanatory, it does not, in general, require exact certainty. Matter unnecessarily stated may be stricken out, or need not be proved.[4]

Thus, in trover, the loss and the finding of the goods, and, in nuisances, the possession of the subject injured, are alleged by way of inducement.[5]

Thus, also, in a suit upon a negotiable coupon, explanation of the relation the bond and the coupon have held, is by way of inducement: in the nature of a preamble, stating the circumstances under which the contract to pay interest was made.[6]

Commonly commences with the word "whereas." The importance of stating matter of inducement has been much relaxed by legislation. See AMENDMENT, 1.

2. In the sense of motive, see CONFESSION, 2; CONSIDERATION.

INDULGENCE. See FORBEARANCE; FAVOR; SURETY.

INEBRIATE. See INTEMPERATE.

INELIGIBLE. See ELIGIBLE.

INEQUITABLE. See EQUITY, Equitable.

INEVITABLE. See ACCIDENT; NECESSITY.

INFAMY. The condition of being without repute, honor, or character: disqualification to testify as a witness or to sit as a juror, on account of conviction of a heinous offense. Whence infamous.

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger. . ."[8]

"Infamous crime" is descriptive of an offense that subjects a person to infamous punishment or prevents his being a witness. The fact that an offense may be or must be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary does not necessarily make it, in law, infamous.[1]

The Fifth Amendment had in view the rule of the common law, governing the mode of prosecuting those accused of crime, by which an information by the attorney-general, without the intervention of a grand jury, was not allowed for a capital crime, nor for any felony; rather than the rule of evidence, by which those convicted of crimes of a certain character were disqualified to testify as witnesses. In other words, of the two kinds of infamy known to the law of England before the Declaration of Independence, the Constitutional Amendment looked to the one founded on the opinions of the people respecting the mode of punishment, rather than to that founded in the construction of law respecting the future credibility of the delinquent. The leading word "capital" describing the crime by its punishment only, the associated words "or other infamous crime" must, by an elementary rule of construction, be held to include any crime subject to infamous punishment, even if they should be held to include also crimes infamous in their nature, independently of the punishment affixed to them. Having regard to the object and the terms of the Amendment, as well as to the history of its proposal and adoption, and to the early understanding and practice under it, no person can be held to answer, without presentment or indictment by a grand jury, for any crime for which an infamous punishment may be lawfully imposed by the court. The test is whether the crime is one for which the statutes authorize the court to award an infamous punishment, not whether the punishment ultimately awarded be an infamous one; when the accused is in danger of being subjected to an infamous punishment if convicted, he has the right to insist that he shall not be put upon his trial except on the accusation of a grand jury. What punishments shall be considered as infamous may be affected by the changes of public opinion from one age to another. For more than a century, imprisonment at hard labor in the State prison or penitentiary has been considered an infamous punishment, in England and America. Such imprisonment with or without hard labor is at present considered infamous punishment.[2]

The term "infamous" — without fame or good report — was applied at common law to certain crimes, upon conviction of which a person became incompetent to testify as a witness. This was upon the theory that a person would not commit a crime of such heinous character, unless so depraved as to be wholly insensible to the obligation of an oath, and, therefore, unworthy of credit. These crimes are treason, felony, and the crimen falsi. As to what or whether all species of the last are infamous, there is

[1] Brooklyn City, &c. R. Co. v. Nat. Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 35–37 (1880), cases.

[2] Briggs v. Latham, 36 Kan. 259–61 (1887), cases.

[3] [Gould, Plead. 42.

[4] City of Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. 482 (1869); 1 Chitty, Pl. 290.

[5] Constitution, Amd. V.

[1] United States v. Maxwell, 3 Dill. 276 (1875), cases, Dillon, Cir. J.; People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 297 (1876); Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 348–49 (1857)

[2] Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 350–52 (1886). Gray, J.; Exp. Wilson, 114 id. 429, 422–39 (1885), cases, Gray, J.; Parkinson v. United States, 121 id. 281 (1887). See also Star-Route Cases (United States v. Brady), 3 Cr. Law Mag. 69 (1881).

disagreement among the authorities. . . A crime is not infamous, within the Fifth Amendment, unless it not only involves the charge of falsehood, but may also injuriously affect the public administration of justice by the introduction therein of falsehood and fraud.[1]

Under the Constitution and statutes there are no infamous crimes except those therein denounced as capital, or as felonies, or punished with disqualification as witnesses or jurors. If Congress makes a crime non-infamous, it can be pursued through information. . . Stealing from the mails has not been made infamous.[2]

In early times the character of the crime was determined by the punishment inflicted, but in modern times the act itself, its nature, purpose, and effect, are looked at in determining whether it is infamous or not. Passing counterfeit money is not an infamous crime.[3]

Infamous persons are such as may be challenged as jurors propter delictum; and, therefore, they shall never be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury with whom they are too scandalous to associate.[4]

See CRIMEN, Falsi; TURPITUDE.

INFANT.[5] A person under the age of legal capacity; a minor.

Infancy. The status of one who has not attained his majority; minority; non-age.

An infant has a mind, but it is immature, insufficient to justify his assuming a binding obligation.[6]

He can do no legal act that will bind him, except enter into an apprenticeship, contract for necessaries and teaching,[7] and, perhaps, enlist in the army or navy.[8] He may deny or avoid any other contract during his majority or after he comes of age. At common law, also, a male under fourteen, and a female under twelve, cannot make a will.[9] But an infant may serve as agent. He sues by his guardian or next friend, and he defends by his guardian, perhaps by a special guardian ad litem.[10]

Under the age of discretion he is not punishable criminally.[11]

If he understands the nature of an oath, he may give evidence.[12]

At common law, the father is liable for torts committed by an infant.[1]

His disabilities are really privileges: to secure him from loss by improvident acts.[2]

In England, the lord chancellor is the general guardian of all infants. The origin of the jurisdiction of the court of chancery is in the crown as parens patriæ.[3]

See further ABANDON, 2 (2); AFFIRM, 2; AGE; DISABILITY; CAPAX; CHILD; DISCRETION, 1; FRIEND, Next; GUARDIAN; LACHES; NECESSARIES, 1; NEGLIGENCE; OATH; ORPHAN; PARENT; RATIFICATION; VOID; WARD, 3

INFANTICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

INFEOFFMENT. See FEOFFMENT.

INFER. To bring a result or conclusion from something back of it, that is, from some evidence or data from which it may logically be deduced.[4]

To "presume" is to take or assume a matter beforehand, without proof — to take for granted.[4]

Inference. A deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true.[5] See PRESUMPTION.

INFERIOR. 1. The lower of two grades of authority or jurisdiction; subordinate: as, an inferior court or tribunal, an inferior officer. Opposed, superior. See COURT; OFFICER.

2. Of less worth or importance; the less significant: as, when it is said that terms of a lower class cannot be extended by construction to include terms or members of a higher class.

Thus, the term "animals," meaning quadrupeds, will not be held to include "birds."[6] See GENERAL; SUPERIOR.

INFIDEL. One who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or the generally recognized features of the Christian religion.[7] See ATHEIST; OATH.

Infidelity. See CHARITY, p. 170, col. 2.

INFINITE. See DISTRESS.

INFIRM. 1. Legally insufficient; lacking legal efficacy; incomplete; invalid. See FAITH, Good; NEGOTIABLE.

2. As to physical and mental infirmity, see INFLUENCE; INSANITY.

---

[1] United States v. Block, 4 Saw. 212 (1877), Deady, J.; Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 25 (1881).

[2] United States v. Wynn, 3 McCrary, 276 (1882), Treat, Judge.

[3] United States v. Yates, 6 F. R. 866 (1881), Benedict, J.; United States v. Petit, 11 id. 58 (1882); United States v. Field, 16 id. 778 (1883); ib. 779–82, cases.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 370. See also 59 Pa. 116; 17 Fla. 185; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 972.

[5] L. in, not; fans, speaking: fari, to speak.

[6] Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 21 (1872).

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 465.

[8] 4 Binn. 487; 5 id. 423; 30 Vt. 357.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 497; 1 id. 463.

[10] 1 Bl. Com 464.

[11] 4 Bl. Com. 22.

[12] See Commonwealth v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 570–80 (1886), cases.

[1] 18 Cent Law. J. 3–7 (1884), cases.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 464.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 141; L. R., 10 Eq. 530.

[4] Morford v. Peck, 46 Conn. 385 (1878), Loomis, J.

[5] Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 336 (1878).

[6] Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. 164 (1871); United States v. Mattock, 2 Saw. 149–51 (1872).

[7] Gibson v. American Mut. Life Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 584 (1868), Hunt, C. J.; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 55 (1868); Omichund v. Barker, 1 Sm. L. C. 739–54, cases.

INFLUENCE. Most frequently used in connection with "undue," and refers to persuasion, machination, or constraint of will presented or exerted to procure a disposition of property — by gift, conveyance, or will.

The influence which is undue in cases of gifts inter vivos differs from that which is required to set aside a will. In testamentary cases, undue influence is always defined as coercion or fraud, but, inter vivos, no such definition is applied. Where parties occupy positions in which one is more or less dependent upon the other, courts of equity hold that the weaker party must be protected, and they set aside his gifts if he had not proper advice independently of the other.[1]

Influence, to vitiate an act, must amount to force and coercion destroying free agency; it must not be the influence of affection or attachment; not the mere desire of gratifying the wishes of another. There must be proof that the act was obtained by coercion, by importunity which could not be resisted; that it was done merely for the sake of peace; so that the motive was tantamount to force or fear.[2]

Undue influence is often defined by the courts to be a "fraudulent and controlling influence." In any application, the phrase savors of what is meant by fraud.[3]

When a person, from infirmity and mental weakness, is likely to be easily influenced by others, a transaction entered into by him, without independent advice, will be set aside, if there is any unfairness in it. Thus, where there is great weakness of mind in a grantor, arising from age, sickness, or other cause, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, and the consideration is grossly inadequate, a court of equity, upon proper and seasonable application of the person injured, his representatives or heirs, will set the conveyance aside. In such case, it is sufficient to show: great mental weakness — not amounting to insanity or extreme imbecility; and, inadequacy of consideration.[4]

Influence obtained by modest persuasion and arguments addressed to the understanding or by mere appeal to the affections, cannot be termed "undue;" but influence obtained by flattery, importunity, superiority of will, mind, or character, or by what art soever that human thought, ingenuity, or cunning may employ, which would give dominion over the will of the testator to such an extent as to destroy free agency or constrain him to do, against his will, what he is unable to refuse, is "undue."[5]

The undue influence for which a deed or will will be annulled must be such that the party making it has no free will but stands in vinculis. "It must amount to force or coercion, destroying free agency." The ground upon which courts of equity grant relief is that one party by improper means has gained an unconscionable advantage over another. Each case must be decided on its own merits.[1]

Where a testator embraced spiritualism as practiced by his beneficiary, and became possessed by it, and this belief was used by the beneficiary to alienate him from his only child, his will was set aside.[2]

See DURESS; FRAUD; INSANITY, 2 (5); READING; SPIRITUALISM.

INFORMALITY. See FORMALITY.

INFORMATION.[3] Knowledge imparted or obtained. See BELIEF; COMMUNICATION.

In a statute intended to prevent physicians from disclosing "information" acquired from patients, comprehends knowledge acquired in any way while attending a patient, whether by the physician's own insight, or by verbal statement from the patient, from members of his household, or from nurses or strangers, given to aid the physician in the performance of his duty. Knowledge, however communicated, is information.[4]

An answer to a decoy letter written in a fictitious name, giving "information" of an article reputed to prevent conception, was held not to be within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene matter.[5]

2. A complaint preferred on behalf of the government in a civil cause.

Bill of information. A bill in equity filed by the attorney-general, or other proper officer, in behalf of the state or of those [1] Haydock v. Haydock, 34 N. J. E. 575 (1881): Huguenin v. Baseley, 2 L. C. Eq., 4 Am. ed., 1271, 1192–1290, cases.

[2] Goodwin v. Goodwin, 59 Cal. 561 (1881): Jarm. Wills, Perk. Notes, 41; Layman v. Conrey, 60 Md. 292 (1883).

[3] Wessell v. Rathjohn, 89 N. C. 383 (1883).

[4] Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 511–12 (1876), Field, J. Approved, Griffith v. Godey, 113 id. 95 (1885); Crebs v. Jones, 79 Va. 332 (1884). See also Harding v. Wheaton, 2 Mas. 336 (1821), Story, J.; Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat. 103, 119 (1826), Marshall, C. J.

[5] Schofield v. Walker, 58 Mich. 106 (1885), quoting probate court of Kent county.

[1] Conley v. Nailor, 118 U. S. 127, 133, 134–35 (1886), cases, Woods, J.

See further, as to gifts or conveyances, Nichols v. McCarthy, 53 Conn. 314–21 (1885), cases; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 141 Mass. 331–33 (1886), cases; Dunn v. Dunn, 42 N. J. E. 431 (1886); Davis v. Dean, 66 Wis. 110–11 (1886), cases; Bingham v. Fayerweather, 144 Mass. 51 (1887), cases; June v. Willis, 30 F. R. 11, 14 (1887), cases; Hall v. Knappenberger, Sup. Ct. Mo. (1888): 26 Cent. Law J. 317; ib. 319–22 (1888), cases; 3 McCrary, 650; 59 Cal. 560; 12 Mo. Ap. 293, 314; 34 N. J. E. 570; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 237–38; — as to wills, 22 Cent. Law J. 173 (1886), cases; 28 Ala. 107; 69 Ga. 89; 22 Kan. 79; 99 Mass. 112; 58 Mich. 106; 63 N. Y. 504; 88 id. 357; 41 Pa. 317; 43 id. 46; 76 id. 114.

[2] Thompson v. Hawks, 14 F. R. 902 (1883), Gresham, D. J.; ib. 905, note. See Lyon v. Home, L. R., 6 Eq. *655 (1868); Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369 (1874); Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 543 (1881); 26 Am. Law Reg. 523–31 (1887), cases.

[3] L. in-formare, to put into shape: forma, form. See INFORMATUS.

[4] Edington v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 5 Hun, 8 (1875): 2 N. Y. R. S. 406, § 73.

[5] United States v. Whittier, 5 Dill. 42 (1876).

whose rights are the objects of its protection.[1]

One method of redressing such injuries as the crown may receive from the subject is by an information filed in the exchequer by the king's attorney-general. This is a suit for recovering money or other chattel, or for obtaining satisfaction in damages for any personal wrong committed in the lands or other possessions of the crown. It differs from an information filed in the court of king's bench, in that this is instituted to redress a private wrong by which the property of the crown is affected; that is, is calculated to punish some public wrong, or heinous misdemeanor. It is grounded on no writ under seal, but merely on the intimation of the king's officer, who "gives the court to understand and be informed of" the matter in question; upon which the party is put to answer, and trial is had, as in suits between subject and subject. The most usual informations are those of intrusion or trespass committed on the lands of the crown; and debt upon any contract for moneys due to the king, or for forfeiture upon breach of a penal statute. There is also an information in rem, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the crown, and no man appears to claim them.[2]

In the United States, the more familiar informations are informations in the nature of a quo warranto, proceedings against persons alleged to be usurping a franchise or office; and qui tam informations — actions upon penal statutes, part of the penalty being for the use of the plaintiff; and proceedings to recover forfeitures under the revenue laws. See further QUI TAM; WARRANTUM; REVENUE.

3. A complaint lodged with a magistrate clothed with power to commit to prison, that a person named is guilty of a criminal offense.

The purpose is to effect a summary conviction of the accused, or a holding to bail for indictment and trial. In the latter case, a paper, called the "information," containing the details of the complaint, the names of the witnesses, the hearing or hearings had, the judgment, items of costs, etc., is transmitted to the grand jury for use in finding their bill of indictment, and perhaps accompanies the indictment into court before the trial jury.[3]

4. A criminal proceeding at the suit of the king, without a previous indictment or presentment by a grand jury.[4]

An "indictment" is an accusation found by the oath of a grand jury; an "information" is the allegation of a law-officer.[5]

An information was filed in the king's bench at the mere discretion of the proper law-officer of the government, and ex officio. It is sometimes called a "criminal" information.[1]

Prosecution by criminal information as at common law having been used for oppression, the statute of 4 and 5 William & Mary (1693), c. 18, was passed, requiring express leave of court to institute the proceeding.[2]

Under the laws of the United States, informations are resorted to in cases of illegal exportation of goods,[3] of smuggling,[4] and for offenses, not infamous, against the elective franchise.[5] See further INFAMY.

Informer. He who prefers a charge against another person by way of an information in a court exercising penal or criminal jurisdiction.

Common informer. A person who sues for forfeitures created by penal statutes.[6]

Whether the information he gives applies to customs, internal revenue, criminal matters, or forfeitures for any reason, an informer is one who gives the information which leads directly to the seizure and condemnation, regardless of the questions of evidence furnished, or interest taken in the prosecution.[7] See ACTION, 2, Popular; QUI TAM; MOIETY; PARDON.

INFORMATUS. L. Instructed; informed.

Non sum informatus. I am not informed. A judgment by default, when a defendant's attorney declares he has no instruction to say anything by way of answer or defense.[8]

INFRA. L. Below, beneath, under, within; during. Opposed, supra.

Used alone, refers to a citation or other matter further on, as in the text or at the foot of the particular page. Whence also ut infra, as (see) below.

Infra ætatem. Under age.

Infra annos nubiles. Within marriageable years.

Infra annum luctus. Within the year of mourning. See ANNUS, Luctus.

Infra corpus comitatus. Within the body of the county. See COUNTY, Body of.

Infra hospitium. Within the inn,—said of property in charge of an innkeeper.

Infra sex annos. Within six years. See ANNUS.

---

[1] [1 Bouvier's Law Dict. 245.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 261; 4 id. 308. See also 3 Pick. 224; 6 Leigh, 588; 15 Johns. *337.

[3] See Goddard v. State, 12 Conn. *451 (1838).

[4] [4 Bl. Com. 308.

[5] United States v. Borger, 19 Blatch. 253 (1881); 4 Tex. 246.

[1] See 2 Story, Const. § 1786; 3 id. § 659; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 141; Edwards v. Brown, 67 Mo. 379 (1878); State v. Concord, 20 N. H. 296 (1850).

[2] See 4 Bl. Com. 311.

[3] 1 Gall. 3.

[4] 1 Mass. 482, 500; 1 Wheat. 9; 9 id. 381.

[5] Act 31 May, 1870: R. S. § 1022.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 161; 2 id. 437.

[7] The City of Mexico, 32 F. R. 106 (1887), cases, Locke, Judge.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 397.

INFRINGEMENT.[1] Breaking, infraction, violation; a trespass, transgression, invasion.

Infringer. One who invades or violates another's right.

Infringement, with its inflections, is used of a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or common right; more often of the usurpation of an exclusive right. It has acquired a use almost technical in reference to the law of copyrights, patents, and trade-marks: an infringement of any one of which consisting in violating the exclusive right another person has secured to make, sell, or use the thing in question.

In determining the question of the infringement of a patent right, the court or jury, as the case may be, are not to judge about similarities or differences by the names of things, but are to look at the machines or their several devices or elements in the light of what they do, or what office or function they perform, and how they perform it, and to find that one thing is substantially the same as another, if it performs substantially the same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same result, always bearing in mind that devices in a patented machine are different in the sense of the patent law when they perform different functions or in a different way, or produce a substantially different result.[2]

Where a defendant, who had been enjoined from using an invention, asked that he might give bond so that he could continue to use the invention and fill contracts therefor, it was held that a bond would not be adequate protection to the complainant's rights. The defendant also asked that the life of the injunction be limited to a day when, it was alleged, the patent would expire; but the court held that the time being in litigation the question could be disposed of on a motion to dissolve when that time arrived. It was further decided that the court had no authority to restrain the complainant from publishing the fact that the injunction had been issued.[3]

A right of action for the infringement of a patent survives to the personal representative of the patentee, and he may transfer the right to another person.

There is no Federal statute of limitations in force respecting infringements committed since June 22, 1874. State statutes of limitations have no application.[4]

See COPYRIGHT; DESIGN, 2; PATENT, 2; PROFIT, 2; TRADE-MARK. Compare INTERFERENCE.

INGRESS. The right of entry upon land in a prescribed way.

"Egress" is the right of going off the premises to other points in any lawful way. "Regress" is the right of returning in any of these ways.

A grant of a right of "ingress, egress, and regress" is of a right of way from the locus a quo to the locus ad quem, and from the latter forth to any other spot to which the grantee may lawfully go, or back to the locus a quo.[1]

INHABITANT.[2] Implies a more fixed and permanent abode than "resident;" frequently imports many privileges and duties to which a mere resident could not lay claim or be subject.[3]

One domiciled: one who has his domicil or fixed residence in a place, in opposition to a mere "sojourner."[4]

A person may be an inhabitant without being a citizen; and a citizen may not be an inhabitant, though he retains his citizenship.[5]

A legal voter; as, in a statute requiring that a subscription in aid of a railroad must be approved by the inhabitants of a town.[6]

In a figurative sense, a corporation may be said to inhabit the place where its members reside; and since, in a legal sense, it may be an occupier of land, any such corporation in England has been called an inhabitant. But an ordinary business corporation, keeping an office merely as a place for transacting business, cannot be said to inhabit the town where such office happens to be.[7]

Inhabitancy. A fixed and permanent abode or dwelling-place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. Not the same as "domicil," when applied to successions to personalty.[8] See HABITANCY.

See BELONG; CITIZEN; DOMICIL; RESIDENCE.

INHERIT. To take property by descent as an heir.

As used by a testator, may refer to lands devised or conveyed by an ancestor.[9]

---

[1] L. in-fringere, to break into, in upon.

[2] Union Paper-Bag Machine Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S. 125 (1877), Clifford, J. Approved, Cantrell v. Wallick, 117 id. 695 (1886), Woods, J.

[3] Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Carpenter, 32 F. R. 545 (1887), Shiras, J.

[4] May v. County of Logan, 30 F. R. 250 (1887), cases, Jackson, J.

[1] Somerset v. Great Western Ry. Co., 46 L. T. 884 (1882).

[2] L. in-habitare, to dwell in: habitare, to have (oneself) often: habere, to have.

[3] Supervisors of Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 206 (1866); 19 Wend. 13.

[4] Barnet's Case, 1 Dall. *153 (1785); Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 98–99 (1882).

[5] Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mas. 46 (1828), Story, J.

[6] Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 694 (1880).

[7] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Hartford, 3 Conn. 25 (1819). See also 1 Dall. 480; 2 Pet. Adm. 450; 3 Ala. 547; 4 id. 630; 2 Conn. 20; 32 id. 47; 28 Ga. 121; 3 Ill. 403; 6 Ind. 83; 37 Me. 369; 2 Gray, 484; 132 Mass. 98–99; 45 N. H. 87; 23 N. J. L. 527; 36 id. 368; 8 Wend. 141; 10 id. 186; 4 Barb. 521; 48 id. 51; 1 Bradf. 83; Cooley, Const. Lim. 755.

[8] Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 140 (1831); 132 Mass. 98; 9 F. R. 229.

[9] De Hay v. Irving, 5 Denio, 646, 654 (1846); 112 U. S. 380.

May refer to a distributive share of the proceeds arising from the sale of land.[1]

Disinherit. To direct by will that an heir shall receive no part of the testator's estate. See INOFFICIOUS.

Heritable. Capable of taking, or of passing, by descent.

Inheritance. An estate which descends, or may descend, to the heir upon the death of the ancestor;[2] also, the fact of receiving an estate as heir.

Estates of freehold are estates of inheritance, absolute or limited; and estates not of inheritance, or for life only.[3]

In its popular acceptation, "inheritance" includes all the methods by which a child or relative takes property from another at his death, except by devise, and includes as well succession as descent. As applied to personalty, signifies succession.[4]

An estate acquired by inheritance is one that has descended to the heir, and been cast upon him by the single operation of law.[5]

Shifting inheritance. An inheritance liable to be defeated by the birth of a nearer heir.

Does not prevail in the United States, where change of title from the living person is made by deed, rather than by the statute of descent, as in England where the canons of descent are designed to accumulate property in the hands of a few. By the rule of shifting inheritances, "If an estate is given to an only child, who dies, it may descend to an aunt, who may be stripped of it by an after-born uncle, on whom a subsequent sister of the deceased may enter, and who again will be deprived of the estate by the birth of a brother."[6]

See DESCENT; FREEHOLD; HEIR, 1; SUCCESSION, 1; WASTE, 1.

INHIBITION.[7] Forbidding; interdiction; prohibition.

A writ to forbid a judge from proceeding in a cause, or an individual from doing some act. Nearly the same as "prohibition" (q. v.) at common law, and "injunction" in equity.[8]

INITIALS. See IDEM, SONANS; NAME, 1.

INJUNCTION.[9] A remedial writ, formerly issued almost exclusively by a court of chancery, to restrain the commission of a threatened act, or the continuance of an act.

A judicial process operating in personam, and requiring the person to whom it is directed to do or to refrain from doing some particular thing.[1]

Enjoin. To prohibit by an injunction.[2]

Preliminary injunction. An injunction granted at the outset of a suit brought to restrain the doing of a threatened act, until the rights of the disputants have been determined. Called also an interlocutory or provisional injunction, or an injunction pendente lite; and, also, a mandatory or preventive injunction, according as the order is to do or refrain from doing the particular act. Opposed, final injunction: issued upon final adjudication of the rights in question. Being designed to effect permanent relief, is frequently termed the perpetual injunction.

The object of a preliminary or interlocutory injunction is, in general, simply preventive — to maintain things in the condition they are in at the time, until the rights and equities of the parties can be considered and determined after a full examination. Such injunction is never awarded, except when the right or equity of the plaintiff is clear, at least supposing the facts of which he gives prima facie evidence to be ultimately established. All injunctions are generally processes of mere restraint; yet final injunctions may certainly go beyond this and command acts to be done or undone. They are then called "mandatory;" and often are necessary to do complete justice. But the authorities are clear that an interlocutory or preliminary injunction cannot be mandatory. . . Injunction as a measure of mere temporary restraint is a mighty power to be wielded by one man. . . An interlocutory injunction may be granted on an ex parte application; when it is upon notice it is upon ex parte affidavits.[3]

As a preliminary injunction is in its operation somewhat like judgment and execution before trial, it is only to be resorted to from a pressing necessity to avoid injurious consequences which cannot be repaired under any standard of compensation.[4]

As it is, in fact, the result of an interlocutory decree in advance of a regular hearing and plenary proofs, it should never be granted except where irreparable injury is threatened; and the court should be

[1] Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 426 (1873).

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 201.

[3] 2 Bl. Com. 104, 120.

[4] Horner v. Webster, 33 N. J. L. 413 (1867).

[5] Estate of Donahue, 36 Cal. 332 (1868).

[6] 2 Christ. Bl. Com. 208 n; Bates v. Brown, 5 Wall. 713-19 (1866), cases.

[7] L. in-hibere, not to have: to keep in, hold in, check.

[8] See Termes de la Ley; Wharton's Law Dict.; 6 Q. B. D. 420.

[9] L. injunctio: injungere, to bid, command.

[1] High, Injunctions, § 1.

[2] See 31 Alb. Law J. 181, 220, 240, 279 (1885).

[3] Audenried v. Philadelphia & Reading R. Co., 68 Pa. 375-78 (1871), cases, Sharswood, J. See generally 18 Cent. Law J. 323-26, 343-46 (1884), cases.

[4] Mammoth Vein Coal Co.'s Appeal, 54 Pa. 188 (1867), Thompson, J. See also Ballantine v. Harrison, 37 N. J. E. 561 (1883); Stanford v. Lyon, ib. 113 (1883).

satisfied that in attempting to prevent such injury as to one party it will not bring like injury upon the adverse party.[1]

An injunction is generally a preventive, not an affirmative, remedy. But it is sometimes used in the latter character to carry into effect a court's own decree; as, to put into possession the purchaser under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage.[2] Where granted without a trial at law, it is upon the principle of preserving the property until a trial at law can be had. A strong prima facie case of right must be shown, and there must have been no improper delay. In granting or refusing the writ, the court exercises a careful discrimination.[3]

A court of equity may substitute a bond of indemnity for an injunction, if the ends of justice will thereby be promoted; especially if a public interest may suffer by the continuance of an injunction.[4]

An injunction is available to stay proceedings at law; to restrain the transfer of stocks, notes, bills, and other evidences of debt; to restrain the transfer of the possession or title to property; to restrain one from setting up an inequitable defense at law; to restrain the infringement of a patent, a copyright, a trade-mark; to prevent the removal of property or the evidence of title to property or of indebtedness out of the jurisdiction; to restrain the commencement of proceedings in a foreign court; to restrain an illegal act by municipal officers; to prevent the creation or the continuance of a nuisance; to restrain acts of waste.

A court of equity has no power to enjoin the prosecution of an offense in a court of common law.[5]

But there must be no plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law. The writ will not be granted at all while the rights between the parties are undetermined, except, as seen, where irreparable injury will be done. The petition or bill must sufficiently appraise the respondent as to what duty is required of him.[6]

An injunction must be respected while in force, although improperly granted; but it cannot affect the rights of a person who is not a party or privy to the proceeding.[7]

In England, a common injunction has been issued as of course when the defendant failed to enter his appearance or to answer the bill within the prescribed time; and a special injunction, by leave of court, upon proof of the charges and notice to the adverse parties. At present, it seems, that any court of that country may issue injunctions of all kinds.[8]

See ADEQUATE, 2; EQUITY; INJURY, Irreparable.

[1] Wagner v. Drake, 31 F. R. 853 (1887); High, Inj. §§ 7-10, cases.

[2] Walkley v. City of Muscatine, 6 Wall. 483 (1867).

[3] Parker v. Winnipiseogee, &c. Co., 2 Black, 552 (1862), cases.

[4] Northern Pacific R. Co. v. St. Paul, &c. Co., 4 F. R. 888 (1880).

[5] Sucss v. Noble, 31 F. R. 855 (1887); Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 210 (1888), cases.

[6] See R. S. §§ 718-20; 1 Hughes, 607; 3 F. R. 507; 4 Dill. 600; 2 Woods, 621.

[7] Roberts v. Davidson, 83 Ky. 282 (1885).

[8] 1 Story, Eq. § 892.

INJURIA. L. Wrong; injury. A tortious act, whether willful and malicious, or accidental.[1] Compare DELICTUM.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. From matters of long standing no injury arises.

Acquiescence with a state of things as it has long existed, operates as a waiver or abandonment of one's right therein. See ESTOPPEL.

Damnum absque injuria. Loss without such injury as the law recognizes. See further DAMNUM.

De injuria. Of (his own) wrong. See REPLICATION.

Volenti non fit injuria. To him who wills a thing there can be no injury. See further VOLO, Volenti.

INJURY. A privation of legal right; a wrong; a tort. See INJURIA.

A wrong done to a person; a violation of his right.[2]

"Injury" is the wrongful act or tort which causes harm or injury to another. "Damages" are allowed as an indemnity to the person who suffers loss or harm from injury. "Injury" denotes the illegal act; "damages," the sum recoverable as amends for the wrong.[3]

Civil injury. A private wrong; an infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to an individual considered as an individual.

It affects an absolute or relative right, and is committed with force and violence, as in battery and false imprisonment; or without force, as in slander and breach of contract. Public injuries are public wrongs or crimes,[4] q. v.

Results from non-feasance, misfeasance, or malfeasance; and affects the person, personalty, or realty. See TAKE, 8.

Irreparable injury. Injury of such nature that the party wronged cannot be adequately compensated in damages, or when the damages which may result cannot be measured by any certain pecuniary standard.[5]

All that is meant is, that the injury would be a grievous one, or at least a material one, and not adequately reparable in damages. The term does not mean that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury.[6]

[1] Wright v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 7 Bradw. 446 (1880).

[2] Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. *302 (1845).

[3] North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 319 (1885), Elliott, J.; 25 Am. Law Reg. 101, 112-15 (1886), cases.

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 2, 118.

[5] [Wilson v. Mineral Point, 33 Wis. 164 (1875): High, Injunc. § 460.

[6] Sanderlin v. Baxter, 76 Va. 306 (1882): Kerr, Injunc. 199; Moore v. Steelman, 80 Va. 340 (1885), cases; Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 326 (1875).

The word "irreparable" is unhappily chosen to express the rule that an injunction may issue to prevent wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages estimable only by conjecture and not by any accurate standard.[1]

In the sense in which used in conferring jurisdiction upon courts of equity, does not necessarily mean that the injury complained of is incapable of being measured by a pecuniary standard.[2]

Literally, anything is irreparable injury which cannot be restored in specie. In law nothing is irreparable which can be fully compensated in damages. To entitle a party to an injunction, he must show that the injury complained of is irreparable because the law affords no adequate remedy.[3]

Injuriously affect. See TAKE, 8.

See further ADMISSION, 2; CASE, 3; CAUSE, 1; CONTINUOUS, 2; CONTINUANDO; DECLARATION, 1; INSPECTION, 2, Of person. Compare DAMAGE; REDRESS; RELIEF; TORT; WRONG.

INJUSTICE. See JUSTICE, 1.

INK. See WRITING.

INLAND. See COMMERCE; EXCHANGE, Bill of; NAVIGATION.

In the act of July 2, 1864, § 7, that no property seized upon "any of the inland waters of the United States," by the naval forces, shall be regarded as maritime prize, "inland" applies to all waters upon which a naval force could go, other than bays and harbors on the sea-coast.[4]

INN. A house where the traveler is furnished with everything which he hath occasion for whilst upon his way.[5]

A public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it.[6]

A house kept open publicly for the lodging and entertainment of travelers in general, for a reasonable compensation.[7]

The leading ideas of all the definitions are, that an inn is a house for the entertainment of travelers and wayfarers, at all times and seasons, who properly apply and behave with decency, and this as guests for a brief period, not as lodgers or boarders, by contract, for the season.[1]

Synonymous with "tavern" and "hotel;" not with "boarding-house," "restaurant," or "lodging-house."[2]

Innkeeper. A person who makes it his business to entertain travelers and passengers, and provide lodging and necessaries for them, their horses and attendants.[3]

He is a guest at an inn or hotel who is away from home and receives accommodations at the house as a traveler. See further GUEST.

An innkeeper's liability for a loss to his guest is the same in character and extent as the liability of a common carrier. In the absence of proof that the loss was occasioned by the hand or through the negligence of the hotel keeper, or by a clerk or servant employed by him, the guest cannot recover the amount of the loss from the keeper.[4]

His responsibility approximates to insurance when an article (a valise) is entrusted by a guest to his keeping.[5]

An innkeeper impliedly engages to entertain all persons who apply; and an action on the case will lie against him for damages, if, without good reason, he refuses to admit a traveler. To frustrate, in that way, the end of the institution, was held to be disorderly behavior. Indeed, for an unreasonable refusal to receive travelers, the proprietor could even be indicted and his inn suppressed.[6]

The common-law liability of an innkeeper has been generally changed by statute. He is not now liable for money, jewelry, or other valuables, lost or stolen, if he provides a safe for their keeping and duly notifies guests thereof. Nor should he be held liable for goods stolen from a room furnished for the display of samples of merchandise.[7]

He is not liable as an innkeeper for the loss of

[1] Commonwealth v. Pittsburgh, &c. R. Co., 24 Pa. 160 (1854), cases.

[2] Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 Mich. 485 (1885), Champlin, J.

[3] Brace Brothers v. Evans et al., C. P. No. 1, Allegheny Co., Pa. (April 21, 1888), Slagle, J.: 35 Pitts. Leg. J. 406, cases. A boycotting case. "The business lost, and which will be destroyed by defendants' acts, cannot be restored. If permitted, plaintiffs may build up a new business, but the old one cannot be replaced. It is gone irreparably." See also Breuschke v. The Furniture Makers' Union, Sup. Ct. Cook Co., Ill. (188–); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 42 N. J. E. 314 (1886); Emack v. Kane, 3 Ry. Corp. Law J. 317 (1888).

[4] Porter v. United States, 106 U. S. 612 (1882).

[5] Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & A. 285 (1820), Bayley, J.

[6] Wintermute v. Clarke, 5 Sandf. 247 (1851), Oakley, C. J.; Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 185 (1868); 36 Barb. 462.

[7] 2 Kent, 595.

[1] Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 307 (1849).

[2] People v. Jones, 54 Barb. 316–17 (1863), cases; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 596 (1867), cases.

[3] Bacon, Abr., Inn. B.; Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 56 (1863); Howth v. Franklin, 20 Tex. 801 (1858).

[4] Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 224 (1878), cases; 66 Ga. 206; 1 Bl. Com. 430; 2 Kent, 592; Story, Bailm. § 470.

[5] Murray v. Marshall, 9 Col. 482 (1886), cases.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 166; 4 id. 167.

[7] Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, 385–86 (1887), cases. The plaintiff, a traveling salesman, engaged a room in the Planters' House, city of St. Louis, for the exhibition of articles of jewelry. During his occupancy of the room, articles valued at $12,600 were stolen, without neglect in him or in the proprietor of the hotel. Held, that the relation of innkeeper and guest did not exist as to the use made of the sample room; also, that knowledge in the proprietor that the articles were brought into his hotel to be exhibited for sale, did not relieve the owner from serving written notice upon the proprietor, as required by statute in Missouri, that he had such merchandise in his possession.

money deposited with him for safe-keeping by a person not a guest.[1]

The owner of a steamship is not an innkeeper.[2]

See BOARD, 1; HOTEL; LIEN, Common-law; LODGER; RESIDE; RESTAURANT; RIGHT, 2, Civil Rights Acts; TAVERN.

Inns of court. Originally, town-houses in which the nobility and gentry resided when in attendance at court; later, schools for the study of law.

The name was given to law societies which occupied certain "Inns," as Lincoln's Inn, Gray's Inn. The buildings were originally private residences, or hospitia — town-houses. They retained, in their new use, their former names; in them lectures were read, and degrees conferred in the common law.[3] See BENCHER.

INNER. See BARRISTER.

INNOCENCE. Being free from the guilt of crime, fraud, or negligence.

Innocent. Not chargeable with fault, fraud, or wrong: as, an innocent purchaser or holder.

1. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer through the fraud or wrong of a third party, the loss falls upon him who gave the credit; as, where one signs his name to blank paper which is afterward fraudulently made a promissory note.[4]

If one of two innocent parties must suffer for a deceit, it is more consonant to reason that he who "puts the trust and confidence in the deceiver (agent, cashier, etc.) should be the loser, rather than the stranger."[5]

The loss should fall on him who by reasonable diligence could have protected himself.[6]

He who gave the power to do the wrong must bear the burden of the consequences.[7]

In the negotiation of commercial paper, a holder is not innocent where there is any circumstance to excite the suspicion of a man of ordinary caution as to a defect or irregularity in the paper, or a want of power in any party thereto.[8] See FAITH, Good; KNOWLEDGE, 1.

2. In the law of criminal procedure, innocence is presumed until the contrary is proven. That is, a reasonable doubt of guilt is a ground of acquittal, where, if the probative force of the presumption were excluded, there might be a conviction. This presumption or probative evidence is not applicable in civil cases or in revenue seizures — where the issue depends upon the evidence, but the defendant is not put to his defense until a prima facie case is made out by the plaintiff.[1]

Innocence is always presumed, except as against the publisher of a libel.[2]

See DOUBT, Reasonable; INTENT; LIBEL, 5.

INNUENDO. L. With the meaning; thereby meaning. A clause in a pleading explanatory of a preceding word or averment.

The same in effect as "that is to say." While used almost exclusively in actions for defamation, it may be inserted in declarations in other actions, to explain the meaning of a written instrument.[3]

In a declaration for slander or libel, explains the words uttered; annexes to them their proper meaning. It cannot enlarge or extend the sense of expressions beyond their usual, natural import, unless something is put upon the record by way of introductory matter with which they can be connected. Then, words which are equivocal or ambiguous, or fall short in their natural sense of importing any defamatory charge, may have fixed to them a meaning certain and defamatory, extending beyond their ordinary import.[4]

If the words impute an infamous crime punishable by law, an innuendo, undertaking to state the same in other words, is superfluous; if they do not, an innuendo cannot aid the averment, as it is a clear rule of law that an innuendo cannot introduce a meaning broader than that the words naturally bear, unless connected with proper introductory averments.[5]

See COLLOQUIUM; LIBEL, 5; SLANDER.

INOFFICIOUS. An inofficious will is one in which natural affection and the claims of near relationship have been disregarded.[6]

The civil law defines an inofficious or undutiful will to be such as substantially departs from the disposition of the estate which would be made in case of intestacy.

In America, authority to make a will implies the power to discriminate between, or to disinherit, next of kin; and the fact of such discrimination raises no presumption of undue influence.[7]

See TESTAMENTUM, Inofficiosum.

INOPERATIVE. See OPERATIVE, 2.

INOPS CONSILII. L. Without legal counsel.

Devises by will are more favored in construction than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made

[1] Arcade Hotel Co. v. Wiatt, 44 Ohio St. 45–46 (1886). As to lien, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 679–95 (1887), cases.

[2] Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 277 (1875), cases. See, in general, 25 Am. Law Reg. 904–6 (1886), cases; 1 Sm. Ld. Cas. 401–6, cases.

[3] See 1 Bl. Com. 23–25; 3 id. 39.

[4] Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 111 (1859), cases.

[5] Carpenter v. Longan 16 Wall. 273 (1872).

[6] Nat. Savings Bank v. Creswell, 100 U. S. 613 (1879).

[7] People's Bank v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 183 (1879).

[8] Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 646 (1870); 34 La. An. 180; 34 N. Y. 30.

[1] Lilienthal's Tobacco v. United States, 97 U. S. 267 (1877); 15 Gray, 415; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1245.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 36; 1 Cr. Law Mag. 1; 4 id. 643, 845.

[3] See Whitsett v. Womack, 8 Ala. 482 (1845).

[4] Beardsley v. Tappan, 1 Blatch. 591 (1850), cases, Nelson, J.; Young v. Cook, 144 Mass. 41–42 (1887), cases.

[5] Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 233 (1875), cases, Clifford, J. See also 8 Biss. 268; 29 Kan. 518; 50 Mich. 640; 5 Johns *438; 53 Pa. 418; 59 id. 488; 114 id. 558.

[6] Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 L. J. R., Q. B. 248, 244 (1870), Cockburn, C. J.

[7] Stein v. Wilzinski, 4 Redf. 450 (1880).

with great caution, forethought, and advice. In this principle originated executory devises.[1]

INQUEST. An inquiry by a jury, duly impaneled by the proper officer, into any cause, civil or criminal; also, such jury itself. Compare INQUIRY, 2, 3.

Coroner's inquest. An inquiry by a coroner, assisted by a jury, into the manner of death of one who has been killed, or died suddenly or in prison. See CORONER.

Grand inquest. The grand jury, q. v.

Inquest of lands; sheriff's inquisition. In Pennsylvania, after a sheriff has levied upon a debtor's realty, he summons a jury of at least six men who ascertain whether the rents and profits of the estate, beyond all reprises, will be sufficient, within seven years, to satisfy the judgment and costs of suit. The right to the proceeding is frequently waived.[2]

Inquest of office. A method of redressing an injury which the crown (state) receives from a subject.

An inquiry made by a sheriff, coroner, escheator, or commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels; as, reversions accruing to the crown, escheats, forfeitures, whether one is a lunatic and what property he has, the fact of a wreck, of treasure-trove, etc. Also known as "office found,"[3] q. v.

INQUIRY. A seeking: search, investigation. Compare INQUEST.

1. When there are facts sufficient to put a man of ordinary caution upon inquiry, the means of knowing and knowledge itself are, in legal effect, the same thing. See further KNOWLEDGE, 1; NOTICE, 1.

2. In the oath of grand jurors "diligently inquire" means diligently inquire into the circumstances of the charges, the credibility of the witnesses, and, from the whole, judge whether the accused ought to be put upon trial.[4]

3. A writ by which the sheriff is directed to summon a jury to ascertain the damages due from a defendant against whom there has been an interlocutory judgment, entered either by default or by confession, the amount not being ascertainable by mere calculation.[5]

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 381, 172, 115, 106.

[2] See 1 Bright. T. & H. Pr. §§ 1222-36.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 258; 2 Kent, 16, 23.

[4] Respublica v. Shaffer, 1 Dall. *237 (1788).

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 398; Hanley v. Sutherland, 74 Me. 213 (1882), cases; McHenry v. Union Passenger Ry. Co., 14 W. N. C. 404 (Pa., 1884).

INQUISITION. See INQUEST; INQUIRY.

INSANITY.[1] Disorder of mind from disease or defect in the brain; disease of the mind.

1. In pathology. A condition in which the intellectual faculties, or the moral sentiments, or the animal propensities,— any one or all of them,— have their free action destroyed by disease, whether congenital or acquired. . . "A disease of the brain, affecting one or more of the mental faculties — intellectual or emotional.[2]

A manifestation of disease of the brain, characterized by a general or partial derangement of one or more faculties of the mind, and in which, while consciousness is not abolished, mental freedom is perverted, weakened, or destroyed.[3]

By "disease" is here meant structural change due to injury, malformation, malnutrition, non-development, or other cause.[3]

Insanity is due: I. To defective development of faculties; called idiocy or imbecility, resulting from congenital defect, or from an obstacle to development, supervening in infancy. II. To lesion of faculties subsequent to development; called mania, intellectual or affective, and either general or partial, or dementia, consecutive to mania, or to injury to the brain, or else senile.[4]

Most of the definitions, so called, are merely sententious descriptions of the disease. It is impossible to frame a perfectly consistent definition. No words can comprise the different forms and characters the malady may assume. The more common forms are mania, monomania, and dementia; each of which implies a derangement of the faculties of the mind from their normal or natural condition. Idiocy (q. v.) is more properly the absence of mind than derangement of its faculties; it is congenital, and consists not in the loss or derangement of the powers, but in the destitution of powers never possessed. Mania is derangement accompanied with more or less excitement, amounting, in cases, to a fury. The individual is subject to hallucinations and illusions; is impressed with the reality

[1] L. insanitas, unsoundness of mind: in, not; sanus, healthy, whole, sound.

[2] Tuke (Bucknill & T.), Insanity, ed. 1858, p. 88.

[3] Hammond, Treatise on Insanity, 265 (1881). See also Ray, Med. Jurisp. of Ins. § 54; Elwell, Malpr. &c. 338.

[4] Ray, Med. Jurisp. of Ins. (1871), § 56. See further 25 Cent. Law J. 195-218 (1887), cases.

of events which have never occurred, and of things which do not exist; and acts more or less in conformity with these particulars. The mania may be general, and affect all or most of the operations of the mind; or partial, and be confined to particular subjects — which last constitutes monomania. An absence of reason on one matter, indeed on many matters, may exist, and at the same time the patient exhibit a high degree of intelligence and wisdom on other matters. The cases show a want of entire soundness of mind or partial insanity. This form does not necessarily unfit the patient for transacting business on all subjects. Dementia is derangement accompanied with general enfeeblement of the faculties. It is characterized by forgetfulness, inability to follow any train of thought, and indifference to passing events. There is not usually equal weakness exhibited on all subjects, nor in all the faculties. Matters which, previously to the existence of the malady, the patient frequently thought of, are generally retained with greater clearness than less familiar subjects. One faculty, as, the memory, will be greatly impaired, while other faculties retain some portion of their original vigor. The disease is of all degrees, from slight weakness to absolute loss of reason. These three forms of insanity,— mania, monomania, dementia,— present themselves in an infinite variety of ways, seldom exhibiting themselves in any two cases exactly in the same manner.[1]

Emotional insanity. The condition of one, in possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties, whose passions convert him into a maniac, and, while in this condition, he commits an act in question.

Impulsive insanity. Exists when one is irresistibly impelled to the commission of an act.[2]

To be distinguished from the case where, being in possession of his reasoning faculties, the person is impelled by passion merely.[3] See IMPULSE.

Moral insanity. Describes a mind which, while undisturbed by hallucination or illusion, and qualified to judge between right and wrong, is yet powerless to control conduct according to knowledge; as, in kleptomania.

Consists in a morbid perversion of the feelings, affections or active powers, without any illusion or erroneous conviction impressed upon the understanding.[1]

2. In medical jurisprudence. The law, being neither a medical nor a metaphysical science, has no theory on the subject of diseases of the brain. It seeks practical rules which may be administered, without inhumanity, for the security of society, by protecting it from crime. It holds every man responsible who is a free agent. "Insanity" is really not a legal term.

Questions involving sanity arise in determining what degree of unsoundness will make void a marriage, disqualify for the duties of an office or trust, render incompetent or discredit as a witness, advise commitment to an asylum, or negative consent in the commission of certain crimes. On these and kindred subjects, no uniform test has been established: each case is to be decided from a consideration of its own circumstances.[2]

In the Revised Statutes and in any act or resolution of Congress passed subsequently to February 1, 1871, the words "insane person" and "lunatic" include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and insane person.[3]

In particular, questions as to legal capacity arise in connection with the receiving of testimony, with the right to exercise the elective franchise; in proceedings to place a person or his property in charge of a committee or trustee; in discussions as to the validity of contracts, and deeds; upon contests as to the validity of wills; and with regard to punishment for crime.

(1) As to giving testimony. A person affected with insanity is admissible as a witness, if it appears to the court, upon examining him and competent witnesses, that he has sufficient understanding to apprehend the obligation of an oath, and to be capable of giving a correct account of the matters he has seen or heard in reference to the questions at issue.[4]

(2) As to exercising the elective franchise. A person who is capable of doing ordinary work, and transacting business, who knows what money is and its value, makes his own contracts and does his own trading, or a person vacillating and easily persuaded, or a person who has been laboring under some kind of illusion or hallucination, but not so as to incapacitate him for the general management of business, which illusion or hallucination is not shown to extend to political matters, cannot be denied the privilege of the elective franchise on the ground of a want of mental capacity.[5]

(3) As to proceedings de lunatico. The inquiry is as

[1] Hall v. Unger, 2 Abb. U. S. 510-15 (1867), Field, J., Cir. Ct., 9th Cir., Dist. Cal.

[2] Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 590 (1872).

[1] Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 291 (1869); Prichard, Ins. 16, 19, 30. See Taylor v. Commonwealth, 109 Pa. 270 (1885). Moral mania, 3 Law Quar. Rev. 339 (1887).

[2] People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 483 (1878); United States v. McGue, 8 Curtis, 13 (1851).

[3] R. S. § 1.

[4] District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521 (1882), Field, J.; Regina v. Hill, 5 Cox, Cr. C. 266 (1850).

[5] Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 499, 502 (1878), Sheldon, J

to the individual's fitness to manage his own affairs, and to conduct himself with safety to himself and others. See further LUNACY.

(4) As to contracts and deeds. The inquiry is, what degree of mental capacity is essential to the proper execution of the act; and was that capacity possessed at the time of the execution. Different degrees are requisite for contracts of a complicated character, and for a single transaction of a simple nature.

The law presumes every adult sane, his will standing as the reason for his conduct. Whoever denies his sanity must establish the position. Testimony as to previous or subsequent insanity will not answer, unless the insanity be shown to be habitual, that is, continuous and chronic. Habitual insanity, once shown, is presumed to continue.[1]

The burden of proof is upon him who alleges incapacity, unless it is shown that he was insane prior to the date of the contract; then the burden shifts, and the person claiming under the contract must show that it was executed during a lucid interval. Partial insanity, in the absence of fraud or imposition, will not avoid a contract, unless it exists with reference to the subject of it at the time of its execution; but in cases of fraud it may be considered in determining whether a party has been imposed upon.[2]

In a policy of insurance, "sane or insane" refers to intended self-destruction, whether the insured was of sound mind or in a state of insanity. To avoid the policy, the insured must have been conscious of the physical nature of his act, and intended by it to cause his death, although at the time he was incapable of judging between right and wrong, and of understanding the moral consequences of what he was doing.[3] See further SUICIDE.

(5) As to testamentary capacity. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory: he ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. It is sufficient if he has such a mind and memory as will enable him to understand the elements of which the matter is composed — the disposition of his property in its simple forms. Bodily health may be in a state of extreme infirmity, and he yet have sufficient understanding to direct how his property shall be disposed of. His capacity may be perfect to dispose of his property by will, and yet be inadequate to the transaction of other business, as, the making of a contract. . . He expresses the previously formed deliberations of his own mind. Soundness is to be judged from his conversation and actions at the time the will is made.[4]

The mere fact that a testator is subject to insane delusions is no sufficient reason why he should be held to have lost his right to make a will, if the jury are satisfied that the delusions have not affected the general faculties of his mind and cannot have influenced him in any particular disposition of his property.[1]

Want of the requisite soundness is incapable of definition suited to all cases. Each case is largely to be tested by its own facts.[2]

The best considered cases put the question upon the basis of knowing and comprehending the nature of the transaction.[3]

Old age, failure of memory, eccentricity, ignorance, credulity, vacillation of purpose, irritability, passion, prejudice, meanness, and even degrees of idiocy, may all exist along with adequate capacity.[4]

When the due execution of a paper, rational in its provisions and consistent in its details, language, and structure, has been proven, the propounder has made out a prima facie case. The burden of showing that the testator was not of disposing mind then shifts to to the contestant.[5] See further INFLUENCE.

(6) As to responsibility for crime. The decisions show "a steady amelioration, in the light of advancing medical knowledge." They have regard to the possession of the faculty of understanding right from wrong. But some, in addition, regard the power of choosing between acts.

All well considered cases, since 1843, in both England and America, are founded upon the doctrine laid down by the fourteen judges in M'Naghten's Case,[6] that "the jurors ought to be told in all cases that every man is presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that, to establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the commitment of the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did not know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong."

That rule, however, is not universal. In some States the question is left to the jury, in a general way, whether insanity caused the act; in others, knowledge of right and wrong is the test; and in others, to that test is coupled an inquiry as to the power to control action.

---

[1] Hall v. Unger, 2 Abb. U. S. 513-15 (1867); 8 Conn. 39; 7 Ga. 484; 32 Ind 126; 56 Me. 246; 58 id. 453; 33 Md. 23; 4 Neb. 115; 23 N. J. E. 509; 9 Gratt. 704.

[2] McNett v. Cooper, 13 F. R. 586, 590 (1882), cases; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9, 20 (1872), cases; Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 95 (1885).

[3] Bigelow v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 287 (1876), cases, Davis, J.

[4] Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. 585-86 (1820), Washington, J. Approved, 1 Redf. Wills, 30; 29 Pa. 302,—in many cases.

[1] Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 L. J. R., Q. B. 237, 248 (1870), Cockburn, C. J.

[2] Thompson v. Kyner, 65 Pa. 378 (1870).

[3] 1 Redfield, Wills, *124; 18 Cent. L. J. 282-86 (1884), cases; 26 Alb. L. J. 384-86 (1882), cases.

[4] See generally 2 N. J. E. 11; 3 id. 581; 5 John. Ch. 158; 87 Ind. 18; 50 Mich. 456; 9 Oreg. 129; 33 Pa. 409; 65 id. 377; 8 W. N. C. 203.

[5] Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 261 (1885), Holt, J.; 18 Cent. Law J. 282-87 (1884), cases.

[6] M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F. 210, 200 (House of Lords), per Tindal, Ld. C. J.; United States v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 120 (1858), Clifford, J.; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 158.

The right and wrong test seems to prevail in Alabama, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Wisconsin, and in the Federal courts.[1] To that test seems to be added the power to control acts, in Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.[2] While in Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, and New Hampshire, responsibility would seem to be left in broad terms to the jury.[3]

The required proof of insanity is either preponderance of testimony, or satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden to establish a prima facie case rests upon the accused; after which the prosecution may rebut.

The defendant is not entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt whether he was or was not insane.[4] See DOUBT, Reasonable.

That the accused is more ignorant and stupid than common men, of bad education, and of bad passions and bad habits, does not excuse. Those qualities are but the common causes of crime.[5]

To constitute the crime of murder, the assassin must have a reasonably sane mind. "Sound memory and discretion," in the old common-law definition of murder, means that. The condition of mind of an irresponsibly insane man cannot be separated from his act. If he is laboring under disease of his mental faculties to such extent that he does not know what he is doing, or does not know that it is wrong, he is wanting in that sound memory and discretion which make a part of the definition of murder. As insanity is the exception, the law presumes sanity. It is for the defendant to prove insanity in the first instance, to show that the presumption is a mistake as far as it relates to him. Mind can only be known by its outward manifestations,—the language and conduct of the man. By these his thoughts and emotions are read, and according as they conform to the practice of people of sound mind, who form the large majority of mankind, or contrast harshly with it, we form our judgment as to his soundness of mind. . . Was the accused's ordinary, permanent, chronic condition of mind such, in consequence of disease, that he was unable to understand the nature of his actions, or to distinguish between right and wrong in his conduct? Was he subject to insane delusions that destroyed his power of so understanding? And did this continue down to and embrace the act for which he is tried? If so, he was simply an irresponsible lunatic. The answer of the judges in M'Naghten's Case has not been deemed entirely satisfactory, and the courts have settled down upon the question of knowledge of right and wrong as to the particular act, or rather the capacity to know it, as the test of responsibility. . . Distinction must be made between mental and moral obliquity; between a mental incapacity to understand the distinctions between right and wrong, and a moral indifference and insensibility to those distinctions. Indifference to what is right is not ignorance of it, and depravity is not insanity.[1]

The opinion of a non-professional witness as to the mental condition of a person, in connection with a statement of the facts and circumstances, within his personal knowledge, upon which that opinion is formed, is competent evidence. In a substantial sense, and for every purpose essential to a safe conclusion, the mental condition of an individual, as sane or insane, is a fact, and the expressed opinion of one who has had adequate opportunities to observe his conduct and appearance is but the statement of a fact. Insanity is a condition, which impresses itself as an aggregate on the observer.[2]

See DELIRIUM; DELUSION; INTELLIGENCE; LUCID INTERVAL; WILL, 1.

INSCRIPTIONS. See EVIDENCE, Secondary.

INSENSIBLE. See SENSE.

INSIMUL. See COMPUTARE, Insimul.

INSINUATION. Suggestion; information communicated: as, at the insinuation of the plaintiff, the court made a particular order.

INSOLVENCY. Sometimes, the insufficiency of the entire property and assets of an individual to pay his debts — the general and popular meaning. In a more restricted sense, inability to pay debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business.

The term is used in the latter sense when traders and merchants are said to be insolvent, also in bankrupt laws. With reference to persons not engaged in trade and commerce, the term may have a less restricted meaning.[3] Opposed, solvency, q. v.

In the sense of the Bankrupt Act, means that a party, whose business affairs are in question, is unable

[1] 25 Ala. 21; 71 id. 393; 24 Cal. 230; 62 id. 54, 120; 10 Conn. 136; 46 id. 330; 1 Houst. Cr. 249; 42 Ga. 9; 45 id. 57; 25 La. An. 302; 34 id. 186; 57 Me. 574; 3 S. & M. 518; 64 Mo. 591; 4 Neb. 407; 21 N. J. L. 196; 52 N. Y. 467; 75 id. 159; Phil. L. R. 376; 3 Heisk. 348; 40 Tex. 60; 20 Gratt. 860; 40 Wis. 304; 57 id. 56; 1 Cliff 118.

[2] 31 Ind. 492; 88 id. 27; 25 Iowa, 67; 41 id. 232; 1 Duv. 234; 7 Met. 500; 13 Minn. 341; 23 Ohio, 146; 4 Pa. 264; 76 id. 414; 78 id. 128; 88 id. 291; 100 id. 573.

[3] 31 Ill. 385; 11 Kan. 32; 17 Mich. 9; 19 id. 401; 43 N. H. 224; 50 id. 369. See generally 16 Cent. L. J. 282–86 (1883), cases; 17 id. 408–10 (1883), cases; 36 Alb. Law J. 326–31 (1887), cases.

[4] State v. Johnson, 91 Mo. 443 (1886); United States v. Ridgeway, 31 F. R. 144 (1887). As to "reasonable doubt," see also 18 Cent. Law J. 402–5 (1884), cases.

[5] United States v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 109 (1820), Story, J.; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550 (1883). See also 16 Cent. Law J. 282–86 (1883), cases; 4 Crim. Law Mag. 512–14 (1883), cases; Med. Leg. J., Sept. 1883; Wash. Law R., May, 1883.

[1] United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 163, 166, 167–68, 182–83 (Jan. 25, 1882), Cox, J.; note and cases to same, pp. 189–203, by Dr. Wharton.

[2] Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 618–20 (1884), Harlan, J.; 1 Whart. & S. Med. J. § 257.

[3] Toof v. Martin, 13 Wall. 47 (1871), Field, J. See Clarion Bank v. Jones, 21 id. 338 (1874); Cunningham v. Norton, 125 U. S. 90 (1888).

to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of his daily business.[1]

Insolvency is owing debts in excess of the value of one's tangible property. Without debts there can be no insolvency. Poverty and insolvency are not synonymous terms within the meaning of a statute conferring the right to administer upon an estate.[2]

Insolvent. 1, adj. Not possessing the means with which to pay debts in full; concerning one so involved. In the last sense "insolvency" is frequently used. Thus we have insolvent debtor, trader, criminal, circumstances; and insolvent or insolvency laws.

2, n. A person who is not pecuniarily able to pay his debts as they fall due; also, a person whose property, if distributed pro rata among his creditors, would not be sufficient to pay their claims in full.

Insolvency or insolvent laws. Laws passed by the individual States for the distribution, among creditors, of the property of persons who are unable to pay their debts in the ordinary course of business.

In strictness, "bankrupt" laws apply only to traders or merchants, and "insolvent" laws to all other persons. Insolvent laws are bankrupt laws passed by the States. Bankrupt laws discharge absolutely; insolvent laws leave future acquisitions liable. State laws are suspended while a national law is in operation.[3]

See BANKRUPTCY; CAUSE, 1 (2), Probable; CIRCUMSTANCES, 2; CONTEMPLATION; PREFERENCE.

INSPECTION. A looking at: examination; view. Whence inspector, inspectorship.

1. An official examination of articles of food or of merchandise, to determine whether they are suitable for market or commerce.[4]

"No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws."[5]

The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country; to fit them for exportation, or, it may be, for domestic use. They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce, or of commerce among the States, and prepare it for that purpose. They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State, not surrendered to the general government: all of which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves.[1]

The scope of inspection laws is not confined to articles of domestic produce or manufacture, or to articles intended for exportation, but applies to articles imported, and to those intended for domestic use as well.[2]

Recognized elements of inspection laws have always been quality of the article, form, capacity, dimensions, and weight of package, mode of putting up, and marking and branding of various kinds; all these matters being supervised by a public officer having authority to pass or not pass as lawful merchandise, as it did or did not answer the prescribed requirements. It is not necessary that all these elements should coexist to make a valid inspection law. Quality alone may be the subject of inspection, or the inspection may be made to extend to all of the above matters. These laws are none the less inspection laws because they may have a remote and considerable influence upon commerce. Congress may interpose if a statute, under the guise of an inspection law, goes beyond the limit prescribed by the Constitution.[3]

A State may not require the payment of an assessment or fee for each passenger upon an ocean vessel who is inspected to ascertain if he has leprosy, and impose a fine upon the owners of the vessel for nonpayment.[4] See POLICE, 2.

Inspection laws have exclusive reference to personal property; they never apply to free human beings. A State cannot make a law designed to raise money to support paupers, to detect or prevent crime, to guard against disease, and to cure the sick, an inspection law, within the constitutional meaning of that word, by calling it so in the title. . . An inspection is something which can be accomplished by looking at or weighing or measuring the thing to be inspected, or applying to it at once some crucial test. When testimony is to be taken and examined, it is not inspection in any sense whatever.[5]

2. In the reception of evidence, a substitution of the eye for the ear.

---

[1] Buchanan v. Smith, 16 Wall. 308 (1872), Clifford, J.; Wager v. Hall, ib. 599 (1872); Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 557 (1876); May v. Le Claire, 18 F. R. 166 (1882); Re Bininger, 7 Blatch. 264, 278 (1870), cases.

[2] Bowersox's Appeal, 100 Pa. 438 (1882); Daniels v. Palmer, 35 Minn. 347-50 (1886), cases.

See also 1 Dill. 195; 2 Low. 401; 1 Woods, 434; 2 id. 401; 9 Cal. 45; 33 id. 625; 20 Conn. 69; 2 Ind. 57; 88 id. 578; 19 La. An. 183, 197; 4 Cush. 134; 3 Gray, 600; 8 Allen, 114; 123 Mass. 13; 9 N. Y. 594; 15 id. 9, 199; 43 id. 75; 25 Hun, 169; 4 Hill, 652; 57 N. H. 458; 2 N. J. E. 173; 9 id. 457; 12 Ohio, 336; 13 Gratt. 683; 116 E. C. L. 1090; 2 Bl. Com. 285, 481; 2 Kent, 389.

[3] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 195 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; 2 Mas. 160; 12 Wheat. 280.

[4] See 2 Woods, 290; 20 Blatch. 303.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 2.

[1] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 203 (1824), Marshall, C. J.; 8 Cow. 46; 64 Pa. 105.

[2] Neilson v. Garza, 2 Woods, 290 (1876), Bradley, J.; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 433 (1827), Marshall, C. J.

[3] Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 55, 54, 51-54, note (1882), cases, Blatchford, J.

[4] People v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 8 Saw. 640 (1883), Sawyer, Cir. J.

[5] People v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 61-63 (1882), Miller, J.: 20 Blatch. 296; 10 F. R. 357; Story, Const. § 1017; Cooley, Const. Lim. 730.

Inspection of documents, or of records. Refers to the right of a party to a suit to inspect and take copies of writings or records, in the possession of his opponent or of a public officer, which are material to the maintenance of his case.

In civil practice, independently of the old doctrine of profert and oyer, a rule may be granted to compel the production and permit the copying of such papers as are essential to the maintenance of a contested right. But surrender of the documents will not be ordered. The doctrine applies to public, corporation, and private documents, in which the petitioner has an interest, and which are not of an incriminating nature. Previous demand must have been made, and the documents must be under respondent's exclusive control.[1] See DISCOVERY, 6, Bill of; PRODUCE, 2; RECORD, Nul tiel.

Inspection of the person. In an action for damages for personal injuries, the plaintiff may be required by the court, upon application, to submit his person to an examination for the purpose of ascertaining the character and extent of his injuries.

The courts have held in divorce cases, that an examination may be ordered of a defendant alleged to be impotent.[2]

Trial by inspection. When, for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue the object of the senses, the judge, upon the testimony of his own sense, decides the point in dispute.[3]

When the fact, from its nature, must be evident to the court either from ocular demonstration or other irrefragable proof, there the law departs from its usual custom, the verdict of twelve men, and relies upon the judgment of the court alone; as, in allegations of non-age, that plaintiff is dead when one calling himself plaintiff appears, that a man is an idiot; and in references to the almanac. But in all these cases, the judges, if they conceive a doubt, may order it to be tried by jury.[3]

Inspection is to be regarded rather as a means of dispensing with evidence than as evidence itself. That which the court or jury sees need not be proved. It is valuable as an ingredient of circumstantial evidence. A common illustration is where juries are taken to view the scene where the events of litigation occurred. . . All materials and objects in any way part of the res gestæ may be produced at the trial of the case. But inspection alone is not relied upon when more exact proof can be produced.[1]

3. Supervision; trusteeship.

Deed of inspectorship. An assignment by a debtor of his property, by which he is allowed to manage the property for a specified time, under the inspection of certain individuals, appointed by the body of the creditors, whose duty is to see that the property is disposed of in the manner most conducive to the interests of the creditors.[2] See COMPOSITION; LIQUIDATOR.

INSTALLMENT.[3] One of the several portions of a debt, payable at different periods.

Where, for the purpose of collection, an assessment for benefits accruing from a public improvement is divided into installments, each one may be regarded as an assessment, and a statute of limitations run against it as a distinct claim.[4]

Buying or selling personalty upon the installment plan is upon the scheme of different portions of the price at stipulated intervals. When the seller, at his option, may remove the property for breach of contract, replevin will not lie, until after demand and refusal to surrender.[5] See SALE, Conditional; LIEN, Secret.

INSTANCE. Application to set aside a proceeding for irregularity must be made as early as possible — "in the first instance."[6]

Instance court. That branch of the English court of admiralty which has cognizance of all matters pertaining to intercourse upon the high seas except prizes.[7]

INSTANTER. L. Without delay: within twenty-four hours.[8] See IMMEDIATELY.

INSTAR. L. Like; resembling; equivalent to.

Instar omnium. Representative of all.

Money is said to be instar omnium as to values;[9] one act, as to the purpose of all acts;[10] and one case, as to the reasoning in all cases of its class.[11]

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 742-56, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 471-78, 559-62, cases; Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 304-6 (1882), cases; Commonwealth, ex rel. Sellers v. Phœnix Iron Co., 105 Pa. 115-19 (1884), cases; 23 Am. Law Reg. 395-400 (1884), cases; 22 Cent. Law J. 341 (1886), cases.

[2] See generally Schroeder v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 376-83 (1877); Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 474 (1883); 19 Cent. Law J. 144-48 (1884), cases; 2 Bish. M. & D. § 590, cases.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 332-33.

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 345-47, cases; 25 Law J. 3-7 (1887), cases.

[2] [4 South. Law Rev. 639 (1878), cases.

[3] Spelled, also, instalment.

[4] Pelton v. Bemis, 44 Ohio St. 57 (1886); Ryall v. Prince, 82 Ala. 266 (1886).

[5] Cushman v. Jewell, 7 Hun, 525 (1876); Smith v. Newland, 9 id. 553 (1877); 89 Ill. 238; 20 Kan. 137; 27 Mich. 209, 463; 33 id. 94; 41 N. Y. 155; 70 id. 466; 13 Rep. 511.

[6] 3 Chitty, Bl. Com. 287.

[7] See 3 Kent, 355, 378; 18 Johns. 292.

[8] Moffat v. Dickson, 3 Col. 315 (1877).

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 266; 2 id. 466; 3 id. 231.

[10] 4 Bl. Com. 155.

[11] 4 W. N. C. (Pa.) 500.

INSTITUTE. 1. To commence: as, to institute an action, proceeding, suit.

2. To appoint: an instituted executor is one chosen by the testator.

3. To establish upon a permanent basis. Whence institutional.

Institutes. Text-books exhibiting the established principles of jurisprudence; comprehensive treatises upon elementary law; commentaries upon law.

Institution. A permanent establishment, as contradistinguished from an enterprise of a temporary character.[1] See PERMANENT.

Sometimes describes the establishment or place where the business or operations of a society or association are carried on; at other times, designates the organized body.[2]

INSTRUCT. 1. To give orders to an agent in relation to the duties of his employment.

Section 251, Rev. St., empowering the secretary of the treasury to issue regulations for the government of collectors of revenue, makes a distinction between "instructions" and "regulations," which is inherent in the nature of the two things. An instruction is a direction to govern the conduct of the particular officer to whom it is addressed; a regulation affects a class or classes of officers.[3]

2. To direct a jury as to their duties under the law in a cause about to be submitted to them for a verdict.

Binding or peremptory instruction. Directs the kind of verdict the jury should return.

The jury may be instructed to find for the defendant, where, if the verdict were against him, the court would set it aside.[4]

The practice saves time and costs; gives the certainty of applied science to the results of judicial investigation; draws clearly the line which separates the provinces of the judge and the jury, and fixes where it belongs the responsibility which should be assumed by the court.[5]

Misinstruct. To charge a jury erroneously with respect to the law in the case pending before them.

See ADVISE; CHARGE, 2 (2, c); JURY, Trial by.

[1] Indianapolis v. Sturdevant, 24 Ind. 395 (1865).

[2] Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 244 (1874); Appeal Tax Court v. St. Peter's Academy, 50 Md. 345 (1878).

[3] Landram v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 86 (1880).

[4] Griggs v. Houston, 104 U. S. 553 (1881); Montclair v. Dana, 107 id. 162 (1882); 93 id. 143; 106 id. 30; 122 id. 411; 3 McCrary, 268; 17 F. R. 133.

[5] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 647 (1870), Swayne, J.

INSTRUMENT. 1. An implement or tool, qq. v.

2. Whatever may be presented as evidence to the senses of an adjudicating tribunal,—a document, witness, or even a living thing produced for inspection.[1]

A means of proof; the means by which the truth is in fact established, and whether written or unwritten.[2]

3. Anything reduced to writing: a "written instrument" or "instrument of writing;" more particularly, a document of a formal or solemn character.

Common descriptive epithets: commercial, negotiable, sealed and unsealed instruments.

"Instruments in writing," associated in a statute with "bonds," "laws," "deeds," and "records," has a restrictive connotation. Independently of such surroundings, the expression, by itself, does not comprehend all written papers, but only written papers of a class. An instrument is "something reduced to writing as a means of evidence." Returns of births, marriages, and deaths, to a department of government, are not "instruments."[3]

A generic term for bills, bonds, conveyances, leases, mortgages, promissory notes, wills, and like formal or solemn writings. Scarcely includes accounts, letters in ordinary correspondence, memoranda, and similar writings, with respect to which the creation of evidence to bind the party, or the establishment of an obligation or title, is not the primary motive.[4]

Instruments will be so construed as to carry into effect the intention of the parties, but there must always be sufficient words to enable the courts to ascertain what this intention was. The rule that courts will so construe an instrument as to make it effective, does not mean that they will inject into it new and distinct provisions. Thus, that an instrument may have effect as a conveyance, it must contain words importing a grant.[5]

See ALTERATION, 2; CAPTION, 2; CANCEL; DATE; DESCRIPTION; FORGERY; LOST, 2; PAPER; PRESENTS (1); PROFERT; REDUNDANCY; REFORM; REPUGNANT; SEAL, 1; SIGN; SPECIALTY; SPOLIATION; SUBSCRIBE; WRITING.

INSUFFICIENT. See SUFFICIENT.

INSULT. See ASSAULT; PROVOCATION.

INSURANCE. Making sure, secure, safe: indemnity against loss; a contract to pay money in the event of pecuniary loss from a specified cause.

Assurance. Formerly used in the sense of insurance; is sometimes limited to risks upon lives. Whence "assurer" and "assured."

[1] [1 Whart. Ev. § 615.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 3, 306-8.

[3] State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. L. 34 (1882), Beasley, C. J.

[4] [Abbott's Law Dict.; Hankinson v. Page, 31 F. R. 186 (1887).

[5] Hummelman v. Mounts, 87 Ind. 180 (1882).

There are instances in which "the assured" refers to the person for whose benefit the contract is effected, and "the insured" to the person whose life is insured. The application of either term to the party for whose benefit the insurance is effected, or to the party whose life is insured, has generally depended upon its collocation and context in the policy.[1]

Insurer. The party who engages to make the indemnity. Insured, n. He who is to receive the indemnity: also, the person the continuance of whose life has been made the subject of a contract.

The subjects of insurance are property, life, and health. In fire and marine insurance, the subject is property; in life and accident insurance, the lives, and health or freedom from physical injuries, of human beings. Contracts are also made upon the fidelity of agents and trustees, and upon the honesty of customers as debtors; upon titles to realty; upon valuables against theft; upon plate-glass windows against breakage; upon steam-boilers against explosion; upon the lives and good condition of domestic animals. There are also other species. The commonest kinds are accident, fire, life, and marine insurance. In general, insurance is applicable to protect men against uncertain events which may in any wise be of disadvantage to them.[2]

Insurance is a contract whereby one, for a consideration, undertakes to compensate another if he shall suffer loss.[3]

A contract of insurance is an agreement, by which one party, for a consideration (usually paid in money, either in one sum or at different times during the continuance of the risk), promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest.[4]

A contract between A and B, that, upon A's paying a premium equivalent to the hazard run, B will indemnify him against a particular event.[5]

Policies of insurance against fire and marine risks are contracts of indemnity,—the insurer engaging to make good, within limited amounts, the losses sustained by the assured in their buildings, ships, and effects. The contract called life assurance is a mere contract to pay a certain sum of money on the death of a person, in consideration of the due payment of a certain annuity for his life. This last species in no way resembles a contract of indemnity.[1]

Guaranty insurance is instituted as a substitute for private suretyship, to aid persons in obtaining places of trust and responsibility, and to protect employers from the unfaithfulness of their employes.[2]

The word "insurance," in common speech and with propriety, is used quite as often in the sense of contract of insurance, or act of insuring, as in that expressing the abstract idea of indemnity or security against loss.[3]

A contract of life assurance is not an assurance for a single year, with a privilege of renewal from year to year by paying the annual premium, but an entire contract of assurance for life, subject to discontinuance and forfeiture for non-payment of any of the stipulated premiums. The payment of each premium is not, as in fire policies, the consideration for insurance during the next following year. It often happens that the assured pays the entire premium in advance, or in five, ten, or twenty annual installments. Each installment is, in fact, part consideration of the entire insurance for life. The annual premiums are an annuity, the present value of which is calculated to correspond with the present value of the amount insured, a reasonable percentage being added to the premiums to cover expenses and contingencies. The whole premiums are balanced against the whole insurance. . . All the calculations of the insurance company are based on the hypothesis of prompt payments. Forfeiture for non-payment is a necessary means of protecting itself from embarrassment. The insured parties are associates in a great scheme. This associated relation exists whether the company be a mutual one or not. Each is interested in the engagements of all; for out of the co-existence of many risks arises the law of average, which underlies the whole business. An essential feature of the scheme is the mathematical calculations referred to, on which the premiums and amounts assured are based. And these calculations, again, are based on the assumption of average mortality, and of prompt payments and compound interest thereon.[4]

[1] Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 504 (1883), Field, J.

[2] See May, Ins. § 73.

[3] May, Ins. § 1.

[4] Commonwealth v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 160 (1870), Gray, J. Approved, 71 Ala. 443; 30 Kan. 587; 72 Mo. 159.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 458; Cummings v. Cheshire County Fire Ins. Co., 55 N. H. 458 (1875), Foster, C. J.

[1] Dalby v. The Indian & London Life Assur. Co., 80 E. C. L. *387 (1854), Parke, B. See also Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Girard Life Ins. Co., 100 Pa. 180 (1882).

[2] May, Ins. §§ 73, 540.

[3] Funke v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Association, 29 Minn. 354 (1882), cases; 44 N. J. L. 87.

[4] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 30-31 (1876), Bradley, J.; Klein v. New York Life Ins. Co., 104 id. 88 (1881); Thompson v. Knickerbocker Life Ins.

A policy of marine insurance is a contract of indemnity against all losses accruing to the subject-matter of the policy from certain perils during the adventure. This subject-matter need not be strictly a property in the ship, goods, or freight.[1]

The contract of insurance sprang from the law maritime, and derives all its material rules and incidents therefrom. It was unknown to the common law. Its first appearance in any code or system of laws was in the law maritime as promulgated by the various maritime states and cities of Europe. It grew out of the doctrine of contribution and general average, which is found in the maritime laws of the ancient Rhodians. By this law, if ship, freight, or cargo was sacrificed to save the others, all had to contribute their proportionate share of the loss. This division of loss suggested a previsional division of risk; first, among those engaged in the same enterprise; and, next, among associations of ship-owners and shipping merchants. Hence, too, the earliest form of the contract was that of mutual insurance. The next step was that of insurance upon premium. Capitalists, familiar with the risks of navigation, were found willing to guarantee against them for a small consideration or premium paid. This, the final form, was in use as early as the beginning of the fourteenth century.[2]

Insurable interest. (1) In life insurance. Any reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of another creates an insurable interest in such life. Examples are, the interest of a man in his own life, in the life of his wife or child; the interest of a woman in her husband; a creditor's interest in the life of his debtor; interest in one's own life for a relative or friend; the interest of two or more in their joint lives for the survivor. The essential thing is, that the policy is obtained in good faith, and not for the purpose of speculating upon the hazard of a life in which the insured has no interest.[3]

It is not easy to define with precision what will in all cases constitute an insurable interest, so as to take the contract out of the class of wager policies. It may be stated generally, however, to be such an interest, arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefits from the continuance of his life. It is not necessary that the expectation of advantage or benefit should be always capable of pecuniary estimation; for a parent has an insurable interest in the life of his child, and a child in the life of his parent, a husband in the life of his wife, and a wife in the life of her husband. The natural affection in cases of this kind is considered as more powerful, as operating more efficaciously, to protect the life of the insured than any other consideration. But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded upon the relations of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured.[1]

Otherwise, the contract is a mere wager, by which the party taking the policy is directly interested in the death of the assured. Such policies have a tendency to create a desire for the event. They are, therefore, independently of any statute on the subject, condemned as being against public policy. For which reasons, a person who has procured a policy upon his own life cannot assign it to a party who has no insurable interest in his life.[1]

(2) In fire and marine insurance. These being contracts of indemnity, the insured must have some interest in the property at the time of injury.[2]

But he need not have either a legal or equitable title. If he has a right in or against the property, which some court will enforce, a right so dependent for value upon the continued existence of the property alone as that a loss of the property will cause him pecuniary damage, he has an insurable interest.[3]

A right of property is not indispensable. Injury from its loss or benefit from its preservation may be

Co., ib. 252 (1881); Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 17 Blatch. 146–47 (1879); 100 Pa. 180.

[1] Lloyd v. Fleming, L. R., 7 Q. B. 302 (1872), Blackburn, J.; 3 Kent, 253.

[2] New England Mut. Marine Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 31–33 (1870), Bradley, J.

[3] Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 460, 457 (1876), Bradley, J.

[1] Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 779, 782 (1881), Field, J. Approved, Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 id. 505 (1883). See also 32 Alb. Law J. 385–88, 403–6 (1885), cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 27 (1887), cases; 22 How. 388; 13 Wall. 619; 15 id. 643; 8 Saw. 620; 16 F. R. 652; 41 Ind. 116; 101 Mass. 564; 13 N. Y. 31; 20 id. 32. On assigning life policies, see McCrum v. Missouri Life Ins. Co., 36 Kan. 148 (1887), cases; 18 Cent. L. J. 346–49 (1884), cases; 24 Am. Law Reg. 753–69 (1885), cases. Rights in policy for the benefit of a wife after the death of her husband, 27 id. 377–81 (1888), cases.

[2] Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, supra.

[3] [Rohrback v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 54 (1875), Folger, J. See also Buck v. Chesapeake Ins Co., 1 Pet. 151 (1828); 12 Iowa, 287; 42 id. 18 sufficient. Hence, an agent, factor, bailee, carrier, trustee, consignee, mortgagee, or other lien-holder, may insure to the extent of his interest; and by the clause "on account of whom it may concern," for all others to the extent of their interests, where there is previous authority or subsequent ratification.[1]

The owner of an equity of redemption (an equitable interest) has an insurable interest equal to the value of the buildings, whether personally liable for the mortgage debt or not. And so has the holder of a mechanic's lien.[2]

From the nature of the contract of insurance as a contract of indemnity, the insurer, when he has paid the assured the amount of the indemnity agreed upon, is entitled, by way of salvage, to the benefit of anything that may be received, either from the remnants of the goods or from damages paid by third persons for the loss.[3]

The insurance which a person has on property is not an interest in the property itself, but is a collateral interest, personal to the insured.[4]

Insurance agent. An insurance company is responsible for the acts of its agent within the general scope of the business intrusted to his care, and no limitation on his power, unknown to strangers, will bind them.[5]

Insurance broker. If the insured employs an insurance broker to place insurance for him, he is his agent, and not that of the company. But if, acting on behalf of an agent of the company, the broker solicits the insurance, he is the agent of the company.[6]

Insurance company. An association, usually incorported, which makes a business of entering into contracts of insurance.

Mutual insurance company. This is composed of the persons insured, in their lives or property. They contribute pro rata upon the amount they have insured (and, possibly, a sum per capita, annually or otherwise) to a fund, out of which losses and expenses are paid.

The theory is that the premiums paid, or to be paid, constitute a fund for the liquidation of losses. They may be paid by note or cash.[1]

Mutuality exists when the members contribute cash or assessable notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss.[2]

Stock insurance company. In this the members contribute a capital which is liable for losses and expenses, and the insured pay premiums.

There are companies which combine both schemes.

Insurance loss. The occurrence of a casualty insured against — the loss of a life or lives, the impairment of health, or the destruction of property, with consequent damage.

Insurance policy. A contract for insurance reduced to writing. Called, briefly, "a policy;" practically, a bond of indemnity.

Implies a contract in writing, the usual mode among prudent persons.[3]

But, unless prohibited by positive regulations, may be by parol.[4]

The contract may be either made or changed by parol.[5]

Blanket or floating policy. Is issued to a factor or warehouseman, and intended to cover margins uninsured by other policies, or to cover the limited interest of the factor or warehouseman.[6]

Endowment policy. In one respect, a contract payable in the event of a continuance of life; in another respect, in the event of death before the period specified.[7]

Interest policy. States or intends that the insured has a real and substantial interest in the thing insured. Opposed, wager policy.[8]

Open or running policy. Enables a merchant to insure goods shipped at a distant port when it is impossible for him to be advised of the particular ship upon which they

[1] Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 538 (1878), cases, Swayne, J.; Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 id. 543 (1876), cases.

[2] Insurance Co. v. Stinson, 108 U. S. 29 (1880).

[3] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie Transportation Co., 117 U. S. 321 (1886), cases, Gray, J.

[4] The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 494 (1886), cases. Contracts as effected by changes of title, 19 Am. Law Rev. 895-915 (1885), cases. After-acquired titles, 21 Cent. Law J. 500-8 (1885), cases. On assigning fire and marine policies, see 1 Harv. Law Rev. 388-98 (1888), cases.

[5] Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, 235 (1871), cases. See also 25 Conn. 53, 465, 542; 26 id. 42; 37 N. H. 35; 19 N. Y. 305; 23 Pa. 50, 72; 26 id. 50; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1848; May, Ins. §§ 118-55.

[6] Mohr Distilling Co. v. Ohio Fire Ins. Co., 13 F. R. 74 (1882); May, Ins. § 123. See also Haden v. Farmers', &c. Fire Association, 80 Va. 683 (1885); Kyte v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 144 Mass. 46 (1887).

[1] State v. Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 91 Mo. 318 (1886), cases.

[2] Spruance v. Farmers', &c. Ins. Co., 9 Col. 77 (1885), cases.

[3] Manny v. Dunlap, 1 Woolw. 374 (1869); 11 Paige, 556.

[4] Humphry v. Hartfield Fire Ins. Co., 15 Blatch. 511 (1879), cases; Relief Fire Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 94 U. S. 574 (1876), cases.

[5] Cohen v. Continental Fire Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 398 (1887), cases.

[6] Howe Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 541 (1876).

[7] Brummer v. Cohn, 86 N. Y. 17 (1881).

[8] See Sawyer v. Dodge County Ins. Co., 37 Wis. 530 (1875); May, Ins. § 33.

are laden, and when, therefore, he cannot name the ship in the policy.

The usual words are the cargo "on board ship or ships," with a condition that the particular ship, as soon as known, shall be declared to the underwriter, whose agreement is that the policy shall attach if the vessel is seaworthy. From the uncertainty attending the unknown condition of the vessel, a high rate of premium is demanded.[1]

Paid-up policy. A policy upon which all the annual premiums are paid, or considered as paid, at one time.

A policy of life insurance containing a provision that a default in payment of premiums shall not work a forfeiture, but that the sum insured shall then be reduced and commuted to the annual premiums paid, confers the right on the assured to convert the policy at any time, by notice to the insurer, into a paid-up policy for the amount of premiums paid.[2]

Time policy. In this the duration of the risk is fixed by definite periods. In a voyage policy the duration is determined by geographical limits.[3]

Valued policy. When the parties, having agreed upon the value of the interest insured, to save the necessity of further proof, insert the valuation in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages.[4] See VALUE, Equitable.

Wager policy. In this the insured party has no interest in the matter insured, only an interest in its loss or destruction.

Void, as against public policy or positive law. But precisely what interest is necessary to take a policy out of this category has been the subject of much discussion. In life insurance it is at least essential that the policy be obtained in good faith, and not for speculation upon the hazard of a life in which the insured has no interest. In marine and fire insurance, where the insurance is strictly an indemnity, the difference is not so great.[5] See further Insurable Interest; WAGER, 2.

Insurance risk or peril. The event or casualty insured against. See PERIL; RISK.

Double insurance. A second insurance upon the same interest, against the same perils, in favor of the same person.[6]

In such case the policies are considered as one; the insurers are liable pro rata, and are entitled to contribution to equalize payments made on account of losses.[1]

Over insurance. Insurance upon property in an amount exceeding the value. See VALUATION, Over.

Premium of insurance. The consideration in a contract of insurance.

Usually paid in money, in one sum, or at different times during the continuance of the risk. The amount may be secured by a premium note. See PREMIUM.

Re-insurance. Insurance upon an underwriter's contracts of insurance.[2]

Contracts of re-insurance, by which one insurer causes the sum which he has insured to be re-assured to him by a distinct contract with another insurer, with the object of indemnifying himself against his own responsibility, though prohibited for a time in England by statute, are valid by the common law, and have always been lawful in this country; and in a suit upon such a contract, the subject at risk and the loss thereof must be proved in the same manner as if the original assured were the plaintiff.[3]

When a policy of insurance contains contradictory provisions, or has been so framed as to leave room for construction, rendering it doubtful whether the parties intended the exact truth of the applicant's statements to be a condition precedent to a binding contract, the court should lean against that construction which imposes upon the assured the obligations of a warranty. It is the language of the company which the court is invited to interpret, and it is both reasonable and just that its own words should be construed most strongly against itself.[4]

As to fire and marine insurance, see ABANDON, 1; ACCIDENT; AVERAGE; CAPTURE; CONCEAL, 5; CONTAINED; CONTRIBUTION; DEPARTURE, 2; DEVIATION; FREIGHT; HAZARDOUS; LOSS, 3; OCCUPIED; PREMISES, 3; REFORM; REPRESENTATION, 1; SEIZURE, 2; UNDERWRITER; VALUATION.

As to life insurance, see DECLARE, 4; DISEASE; EPIDEMIC; FORFEITURE; INTEMPERATE; REPRESENTATION, 1; SUICIDE; TRUE.

INSURRECTION. A rising against civil or political authority; the open and active opposition of a number of persons to the [1] Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. 405-6 (1859), cases, Nelson, J.; 38 Ohio St. 134; 3 Kent, 258, 272; May, Ins. § 31.

[2] Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 264, 272 (1884), Bradley, J.

[3] May, Ins. § 34.

[4] See 3 Kent, 272; May, Ins. § 30; Wood, Ins. § 41; 38 Ohio St. 134; 100 Mass. 475.

[5] Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 460 (1876), Bradley, J.; 2 Bl. Com. 460; 3 Kent, 275; May, Ins. § 33.

[6] See Turner v. Meridan Fire Ins. Co., 16 F. R. 454, 460-65 (1883), cases; May, Ins. § 440.

[1] Sloat v. Royal Ins. Co., 49 Pa. 14, 18 (1865); 2 Wood, Fire Ins. §§ 372-407.

[2] See Commercial Ins. Co. v. Detroit Fire & Mar. Ins. Co., 38 Ohio St. 15-16 (1882); May, Ins. § 11; Phillips, Ins. § 374.

[3] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 328 (1886), cases, Gray, J.; Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 id. 485, 510 (1882); 2 Kent, 278-79.

[4] First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 678 (1877), Harlan, J.; Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 id. 282 (1883); Moulor v. American Ins. Co., 111 id. 341-42 (1884); Dwight v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 103 N. Y. 347-48 (1886), cases; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 666 (1888), cases.

execution of law in a city or a state; a rebellion; a revolt.[1] See MOB; WAR.

INTELLIGENCE. Discernment; understanding; knowledge.

The possession of intelligence is not a test of sanity; for with it there may be an absence of power to determine the nature of the act, and its effect upon the subject.[2]

INTEMPERATE. If the rule or habit is to drink to intoxication when occasion offers, and sobriety or abstinence is the exception, then the charge of "intemperate habits" is established. It is not necessary that the custom be an every-day rule.[3]

"Sober and temperate" does not imply total abstinence from intoxicating liquor. The moderate, temperate use of intoxicating liquors is consistent with sobriety.[4]

While in a very clear case a court may assume that certain facts disclose a case of habitual intemperance, or that they warrant the opposite conclusion, in the main these are questions to be submitted to the jury.[5]

A life policy provided that it should be void if the insured "became so far intemperate as to impair health, or induce delirium tremens." The trial court charged that the "impairment of health" was not the indisposition arising from a drunken debauch, but that arising from such frequency of use as indicated an injurious addiction to the practice. Held, that it was for the jury to decide whether death was caused by an excessive use of stimulants.[6]

See DRUNKENNESS; HABIT; INTOXICATE.

INTENDMENT. The correct understanding or intention of the law; the true meaning or correct policy of a law.

INTENT; INTENTION. Design; determination; purpose.

"Intent" implies purpose only — refers to the quality of the mind with which an act is done. "Attempt" (q. v.) implies an effort to carry intent into execution.[7]

Common intent. The ordinary meaning of words.

Criminal intent. Evil, malicious will expressed in a criminal act.

While crime proceeds from a criminal mind, ignorance of the law is not a defense.

General intent. A purpose to do something in general: as 1, to benefit a class of persons or objects by a charitable devise; 2, to violate law. Opposed, 1, particular intent: an intent, expressed in a will, which cannot be given effect,— see CY PRES; and, 2, specific intent: applied to an act done with a particular design.

When an act, in general terms, is indictable, a criminal intent need not be shown, unless, from the language or effect of the law, a purpose to require the existence of such intent can be discovered. To introduce into the law the requisite of a guilty mind it must appear that such was the intent of the law-maker.[1]

Neglect to discharge a duty, or indifference to consequences, is, in cases, equivalent to a specific criminal intent.[2]

"Act" and "intention," in the phrase "die by his own act or intention," mean the same as "act" alone, for act implies intention.[3]

A criminal intent and a criminal act make a crime. But here a "specific intent" and a "criminal intent" are not to be confounded: they have nothing in common except as mental operations. The former determines the object toward which the act shall be directed; the latter that the act so directed shall be done. The former, as part of the criminal act, must be alleged and proved as any other portion of the act; the latter is neither alleged nor proved, but inferred from the commission of the act. Thus, a criminal act presumes criminal intent, though the accused was intoxicated; but where the existence of a specific intent is necessary to the act, a degree of drunkenness incompatible with the formation of that intent negatives the act and disproves the crime.[4] See further CRIME; INDICTMENT; MALICE; PREMEDITATE.

Intention is judged of with reference to voluntary action.[5]

When guilty knowledge is an ingredient of an offense, evidence may be given of the commission of other acts of a like character where they are necessarily connected in time or place or as furnishing a clue to the motive.[6] See further GUILTY.

Intention may be proved inductively by collateral facts; as, in trespass, slander, libel, fraud, adultery, questions of good faith, of prudence, etc.[7]

---

[1] County of Allegheny v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 417 (1879): Worcester's Dict.

[2] Ortwein v. Commonwealth, 76 Pa. 421 (1874); Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 86 (1883).

[3] Tatum v. State, 63 Ala. 152 (1879), Stone, J.

[4] Brockway v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 9 F. R. 253 (1881). See Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 354 (1881); 122 id. 512; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Reif, 36 Ohio St. 599 (1881); 62 Cal. 178; 34 Iowa, 222; 70 N. Y. 605; 9 R. I. 346; 1 F. & F. 735.

[5] Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon Bank, 122 U. S. 506 (1887), Miller, J.

[6] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 743-44 (1887); N. W. Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon Bank, 122 id. 505 (1887), distinguished.

[7] Prince v. State, 35 Ala. 369 (1860), cases.

[1] Halsted v. State, 41 N. J. L. 552, 589-91 (1879), cases, Beasley, C. J. See also United States v. Baysaud, 16 F. R. 883 (1883).

[2] United States v. Thomson, 12 F. R. 245 (1882).

[3] Chapman v. Republic Ins. Co., 6 Biss. 240 (1874).

[4] See 3 Greenl. Ev. §§ 13-19; 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 428-93; Broom, Com. 876, 887-88; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 110-13; Commonwealth v. Hersey, 2 Allen, 179-81 (1861), cases.

[5] Re Bininger, 7 Blatch. 267 (1870).

[6] People v. Gibbs, 93 N. Y. 473 (1883); 58 id. 555.

[7] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 31-37, cases.

At common law, an intention to commit a felony does not amount to the felony, though it did, by statute, where the intention was to commit treason.[1]

An intention to commit a fraud has been given the force and effect of fraud.[2]

"Intent to injure and defraud" charges embezzlement, forgery, and like offenses.[3]

As men seldom do unlawful acts with innocent intentions, the law presumes a wicked intent from any such act; but the prima facie case thus made out may be rebutted by showing the contrary. Thus, in murder, malice is presumed from the fact of killing.[4]

Every person of sound mind is presumed to intend the necessary, natural, or legal consequences of his deliberate act.[5] This presumption may be conclusive, as when the consequences must necessarily follow the act; or be disputable, rebuttable by evidence of want of intention, where the consequences do not necessarily follow the act. Thus, where one voluntarily points a loaded pistol at a vital part, the law declares that the natural, inevitable consequence of that act is to kill, provided the pistol be fired; and the individual cannot be heard to say that he had no intent to kill. So, when a debtor procures his property to be taken on legal process, the effect being to defeat or delay the operation of a bankrupt act, he is held to have intended that effect.[6] The intention is the turning point in an issue to decide whether a judgment against an insolvent was obtained with a view to give a preference.[7]

Persons of sound mind and discretion are understood to intend, in the ordinary transactions of life, that which is the necessary and unavoidable consequences of their acts, as they are supposed to know what the consequences of their acts will be in such transactions. This rule applies in civil and criminal cases. Exceptions may arise; as, where the consequences likely to flow from the act are not matters of common knowledge, or where the act or the consequence is attended by circumstances tending to rebut the ordinary probative force of the act or to exculpate the intent of the agent — as, that the holder of a warrant to confess judgment could enter judgment to get a preference.[8] See further CONSEQUENCES.

Intention is gathered from all the things done, said, written; in ordinary documents, any words expressing it may be used. In wills it is "the pole-star of interpretation," when no rule of law is violated. In construing writings generally, the courts strive after the intention, putting themselves in the place of the party or parties.[9]

See ABANDON; CONTRACT; DOMICIL; GRANT; IGNORANCE; STATUTE; WILL.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 221.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr. 772.

[3] United States v. Taintor, 11 Blatch. 378 (1873).

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 34.

[5] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 167 (1878).

[6] Re Bininger, 7 Blatch. 268, 277 (1870), cases.

[7] Little v. Alexander, 21 Wall. 500 (1874).

[8] Clarion Bank v. Jones, 21 Wall. 337 (1874), Clifford, Justice.

[9] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 287-89. As to presumptions, see 20 Alb. Law J. 66-70 (1884), cases; evidence of, 22 Cent. Law J. 271 (1886), cases.

INTER. L. In the midst; among; between.

Used in Latin phrases, and in compound words; in the latter, the simple words are sometimes separated by a hyphen.

Inter alia. Among other things.

Inter alios. Among other persons — as to strangers. See RES, Inter, etc.

Inter.com. See INTERIM, Committitur.

Inter conjuges. Between husband and wife.

Inter pares. Between equals — in capacity or opportunity.

Inter partes. Between persons — the immediate parties to an instrument. See PARS, Inter, etc.

Inter rusticos. Among the unlearned.

Inter se, or sese. Between themselves.

Inter vivos. Between living persons. See GIFT.

INTERCOMMON. See COMMON, Right of.

INTERCOURSE. Between nations and the States, see COMMERCE. Between persons, see ACCESS; COHABIT.

INTERESSE. L. To be of interest to: interest. See INTEREST, 1.

Interesse termini. Interest in a term.

"A bare lease does not vest any estate in the lessee, but only gives a right of entry, which right is his interest in the term, or interesse termini."[1]

The right to the possession of a term at a future time.[2] See TERMINUS, 2.

Pro interesse suo. To the extent of his interest.

A party may intervene in litigation instituted by others, pro interesse suo.[3]

INTEREST. I. Lat. It interests, concerns, is of importance to.

Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be an end to lawsuits. The general welfare requires that litigation be not interminable.

No maxim is more firmly established or of more value in the administration of justice. It prevents repeated litigation between the same parties in regard to the same subject.[4]

It prevents multiplicity of suits.[5]

In it originates the rule against circuity of action;

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 144, 314.

[2] 4 Kent, 106; 72 Mo. 542.

[3] 106 U. S. 505.

[4] United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65 (1878); Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 39 (1864); 3 Bl. Com. 308.

[5] Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 485 (1876); 71 Pa. 177; 2 Pars. Contr. 690.

and it states the principle upon which rest statutes of set-off and of limitations.

For this reason, the prevention of litigation is a valid consideration.[1]

For this reason, also, but one action lies for all the articles converted by one act.[2]

It is the policy of the law to settle in one suit the interests of all parties in the subject-matter, leaving as little room as possible for multiplicity of actions.[3]

2. Eng. (1) Concern, advantage, good; share, portion, part, participation.[4]

Concern, advantage, benefit. Such relation to the matter in issue as creates a liability to pecuniary gain or loss from the event of the suit.[5] Opposed, disinterest.

In this sense a witness is said to be incompetent, and a judge or juror disqualified, from interest.

At common law, a party could testify for himself only when he alone knew the matter to be proved. This was to prevent absolute failure of justice, where his right to relief was shown by other evidence.[6]

An interest disqualifying a witness, at common law, must be legal, real, substantial, present, certain, vested, and ex parte. Interest in the question is not meant, nor inclination arising from relationship, friendship, or other motive.

The meaning is that parties legally interested in the result are incompetent. This interest is to be real, not merely apprehended, and in the event of the cause. The true test regards gain or loss by the judgment. The degree is not regarded. A remote, contingent, uncertain interest does not disqualify. One may testify against his interest; and an offer to release an interest qualifies. Equal interest on both sides does not disqualify. Objection for interest must be made before examination. Precisely what interest disqualifies is largely a question for the court.[7]

But the common-law rule has been generally abrogated. The effect of interest upon credibility is now left to the jury to determine.[8] See further PARTY, 2; WITNESS.

(2) Right of property in a thing.

May denote the property itself, objectively considered.[9]

A claim to advantage or benefit; any right, in the nature of property, less than title; title to a share.[1]

Spoken of as present or vested, contingent or future, chattel or landed, beneficial, reversionary, undivided, legal, equitable, etc.

The quantum depends upon the title in the possessor. As respects realty, this may be freehold or less; as respects chattels, it is joint,—shared with other persons; or several or sole, —possessed by one person exclusively, or by more than one, their interests then not being in common.

The chief use of the word is to designate some right which cannot or need not be defined with precision. In some connections it includes title; in others, advantages less than title. Sometimes it is added to words of more definite meaning by way of precaution that no conceivable claim shall be omitted; sometimes it signifies an undefined share.[1] Compare CLAIM; DEMAND.

Community of interest. See COMMUNITY, 1.

Coupled with an interest. Said of an agency in which the agent has a business interest, along with his principal.

A power coupled with an interest is where the grantee has an interest in the estate as well as in the exercise of the power.

It is determined to exist or not according as the agent is found to have such estate or not before the execution of the power. If his interest is only a right to share the proceeds which result from the execution of the power, he has no such power.[2]

Such a power survives the person giving it, and may be executed after his death. This refers to an interest in the thing itself, a power which accompanies, or is connected with, an interest.[3]

Equitable interest. Such interest as is cognizable in a court of equity. Legal interest. An interest cognizable in a court of common law.

Immediate interest. See IMMEDIATE.

Interest or no interest. Refers to a policy of insurance which is to be valid whether the insured has or does not have an insurable interest,[4] q. v.

Opposing interest. At the meeting of the creditors of a bankrupt to elect an assignee, if no choice was made, the judge, or, if there was "no opposing interest," the register, appointed a person. This meant, not merely an interest contending by vote for the election of a particular person, but an interest in

[1] 1 Pars. Contr. 438; Smith, Contr. 179.

[2] Phillips v. Berick, 16 Johns. 140 (1819). See also 105 Ill. 108.

[3] Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 205 (1886); 2 Kan. Law J. 280 (1885); 6 Tex. 446; 30 F. R. 911; 41 N. J. E. 443; 7 Mass. 432; 99 id. 203; 4 Allen, 473; 16 Gray, 27; 5 id. 197; 1 id. 302; 24 Pick. 61; 22 id. 53; 21 id. 253; 20 id. 290; 15 id. 286.

[4] Fitch v. Bates, 11 Barb. 473 (1851).

[5] Bouvier, Law Dict.; Inhabitants of Northampton v. Smith, 11 Metc. 394-96 (1846), cases, Shaw, C. J.

[6] United States v. Clark, 96 U. S. 41 (1877); 3 Bl. Com. 370; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348.

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 386-430, cases.

[8] 1 Whart. Ev. § 419; 30 Hun, 557; 63 Pa. 156; 64 id. 39; 65 id. 126; 32 Tex. 141.

[9] Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 517 (1884).

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[2] Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 259 (1886); Brown v. Pforr, 38 id. 550 (1869); Hartley's Appeal, 53 Pa. 212 (1866); Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 310 (1886).

[3] Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 203 (1823), Marshall, C. J.; Walker v. Walker, 125 U. S. 343 (1888); 59 Tex. 392.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 480.

opposition to the power of appointment by the register.[1]

(3) Increase by way of compensation for the use of money; price or reward for the loan of money; a premium for the hire of money; a reasonable equivalent for the temporary inconvenience the lender of money may feel by the want of it.[2]

Compensation allowed by law, or fixed by the parties, for the use or forbearance of money, or as damages for it detention.[3]

A compensation for the loan or use of money.[4]

The measure of damages for money withheld upon contract.[5]

Though interest, eo nomine, may be a creation of statute law, it is allowed as mulct or punishment for some fraud, delinquency, or injustice of the debtor, or from some injury done by him to the creditor.[6]

Simple interest. Interest computed solely upon the principal of the loan. Compound interest. Is reckoned upon the principal for the first period, and thereafter upon both principal and accrued interest; interest upon interest.

"Compound interest" signifies the adding of the growing interest of any sum to the sum itself, and then the taking of interest upon this accumulation.[7]

At interest. In ordinary parlance "money at interest" refers more to money loaned than to interest-bearing notes and accounts received for property sold.[8]

Ex-interest. Said of a sale of stocks or bonds without interest already or soon payable. See Ex, 8.

With interest. When a note is made payable at a future day, "with interest" at a prescribed rate per annum, such interest does not become due or payable before the principal, unless there is a special provision to that effect.[1]

The rate, or sum, depends upon the usual or general inconvenience of parting with the loan, and the hazard of losing it entirely. Where the hazard is peculiarly great, as in contracts of bottomry and respondentia, policies of insurance, and annuities upon lives, the rates are high. Charging an exorbitant rate, in an ordinary case, is usury,[2] q. v.

As compensation for the use or detention of money, has its origin in the usages of trade, by contract, or by statute. Hence, the rules in regard to it are as diversified as the trade, habits of the people, and their peculiar laws may be.[3]

Spoken of as lawful or legal, and unlawful or illegal, excessive or usurious, as marine or maritime, etc.

Follows the principal as an incident.

Not chargeable upon claims against the assets of an insolvent from the date of the assignment, or against the estate of a decedent from the day of death; nor upon an advancement; nor upon costs.

Where not stipulated as part of a contract, given as damages for detaining money, property, or services, and from the day of default.[4]

In torts, allowance as damages rests in the discretion of the jury. Has been allowed upon money obtained by fraud or detained by an officer.[5]

The practice of the treasury department of the United States has always been not to pay interest upon claims against the government, without express statutory authorization; and Congress has repeatedly refused to pass any general law for the allowance of interest.[6]

Compound interest is not recoverable, unless there has been a settlement, or a judgment whereby the aggregate amount of principal and interest due is turned into a new principal; or where there is a specific agreement to do so.[7]

If interest upon interest were allowed in all cases, debts would increase beyond all ordinary calculation and endurance; common business could not stand the overwhelming accumulation.[8]

See Bonus; Coupon, Bond; Damages; Deposit, 2; Discount, 2; War.

INTERFERENCE. Is used in the Revised Statutes prescribing proceedings when an application is made for a patent which [1] R. S. § 5084; Re Jackson, 7 Biss. 287 (1876).

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 454.

[3] Brown v. Hiatts, 15 Wall. 185 (1872), Field, J.; Insurance Co. v. Piaggio, 16 id. 336 (1872), cases; Aurora City v. West, 7 id. 105 (1868), cases; Redfield v. Ystalyfera Iron Co., 110 U. S. 176 (1884); 12 F. R. 864; 2 McCrary, 394; 8 Saw. 169.

[4] Turner v. Turner, 80 Va. 381 (1885).

[5] Loudon v. Taxing District, 104 U. S. 774 (1881). See also 2 Cal. 568; 28 Conn. 20; 42 id. 528; 3 Dak. 460; 66 Ga. 501; 3 N. Y. 355; 87 id. 437; 13 Barb. 76; 30 Pa. 341; 34 id. 211.

[6] Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. 609-18 (1825), cases; Heidenheimer v. Ellis, 67 Tex. 428 (1887), cases.

[7] Camp v. Bates, 11 Conn. 501 (1836); Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 677 (1881), cases; 105 Ill. 553; 34 Pa. 212.

[8] Wasson v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, 107 Ind. 212 (1886).

[1] Tanner v. Dundee Land Investment Co., 12 F. R. 648 (1882).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 454.

[3] Stokely v. Thompson, 34 Pa. 211 (1859).

[4] United States v. Hills, 4 Cliff. 521-22 (1878), cases.

[5] Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 139 (1868); Fraser v. Bigelow Carpet Co., 141 Mass. 127-28 (1886), cases.

[6] Angarica v. Bayard, 127 U. S. 260 (1888), cases.

[7] Stokely v. Thompson, Camp v. Bates, supra.

[8] Connecticut v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. *14 (1814), Kent, Ch. See generally Selleck v. French, 1 Conn. 32 (1814); 1 Am. L. C. 500-35, cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 293 (1887), cases.

may interfere with a pending application or with an unexpired patent.[1] See PATENT, 2.

INTERIM. L. Inter ipsum (tempus), within that time: in the meantime, meanwhile; provisionally.

Ad interim. For the time intervening.

Interim committitur. In the meantime, let him be committed; meanwhile he will be kept in prison.

Abridged to "inter. com.," has been used for the docket entry in cases where, until some further action can be taken or proceeding be had, a prisoner is remanded to jail; as, in a case of conviction for murder, when sentence of death is pronounced, to be carried into execution at a distant day.

Interim officer. One appointed when another, the principal, is absent, is incapable of acting, or has not yet been chosen or fully qualified.

Sometimes termed the ad interim officer. Such is a provisional assignee, trustee, curator, guardian.

Interim order. An order taking effect provisionally, or until further direction; in particular, an order made pending an appeal.

Interim receipt. A deposit or protection receipt for money paid on a proposed contract of insurance; also, ad interim receipt.

Holds the applicant secure until his proposal is accepted or rejected. If the risk is not approved, the money is returned, less the premium for the time being.[2]

INTERLINEATION. See ALTERATION, 2; BLANK, 2.

INTERLOCUTORY.[3] Intervening — happening, accruing, or imposed between the commencement and the termination of proceedings — during the progress of an action at law or of a suit in equity: as, interlocutory — costs, decree, judgment, order, report, qq. v. Compare FINAL.

INTERMARRIAGE. See MARRIAGE.

INTERMIXTURE. See ACCESSION.

INTERN.[4] To imprison by restricting to a limited territory: as, to intern a political prisoner within a city or upon an island.

INTERNAL. See IMPROVEMENT; REVENUE.

INTERNATIONAL. See EXTRADITION; LAW; NATION.

INTERNUNCIO. See MINISTER, 3.

INTERPLEAD. To become parties litigant; to determine a dispute by judicial action.

Interpleader; bill of interpleader. Where a person, who owes a debt to one of the parties in a suit, but, till the determination of it, he knows not to which one, desires that they may interplead, that he may be protected in making the payment.[1]

The stakeholder prays that the court judge between the claimants, to whom the thing belongs, and that he be indemnified. He alleges that the persons have preferred a claim against him, and for the same thing, that he has no beneficial interest in the matter, and that he cannot determine, without hazard, to which of them the thing or right belongs.[2]

The plaintiff must have no interest in the thing, no adequate remedy at law, and be ignorant of the rights of the claimants.[3]

If the thing claimed is a sum of money, the holder may pay it into court.

The bill will not lie if the complainant sets up an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and the relief sought relates to that interest. The relief sought, in a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader, must be equitable.[4]

In cases of adverse independent legal titles, the party holding the property must defend himself as well as he can at law.[5]

INTERPRETATIO. L. Expounding, explanation: construction, interpretation, q. v.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus, fit optima interpretatio. From what things go before and come after, the best explanation is had. A doubtful word or passage may be best understood by reference to the whole instrument — deed, will, contract, statute. Intention may be read in the light of surrounding circumstances.[6] Compare NOSCITUR, A sociis.

INTERPRETATION. Is used interchangeably with "construction." Opposed, misinterpretation.

The act of finding out the true sense of any form of words, that is, the sense their

[1] See R. S. § 4904; Gold Separating Co. v. Disintegrating Co., 6 Blatch. 310 (1869).

[2] See May, Ins. §§ 57-59.

[3] L. inter-loqui, to speak in between.

[4] L. internus: intra, within.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 448.

[2] Atkinson v. Marks, 1 Cow. 703 (1823).

[3] Howe Machine Co. v. Gifford, 66 Barb. 599 (1872). See also 2 Paige, Ch. 200; 2 Story, Eq. Ch. XX.

[4] Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 571 (1884), cases.

[5] 2 Story, Eq. § 820; Third Nat. Bank v. Lumber Co., 132 Mass. 410 (1882), cases. See generally McMunn v. Carothers, 4 Clarke, Pa., 134-36 (1848); 3 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 1319-29.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 379; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 201, 437; 71 Pa. 301; 76 Va. 714.

author intended; and of enabling others to derive from them the same idea.[1]

Properly precedes construction, but does not go beyond the written text.[2] See further CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATIO.

INTERPRETER. One who translates the testimony of witnesses speaking a foreign tongue, for the benefit of the court and jury.

His re-statement is not hearsay; it may be impeached for inaccuracy.[3]

INTERROGATORY. One of a series or set of written questions prepared by counsel for the examination of a party to a suit in equity.

A formal question, in writing, for the judicial examination of a party or a witness.[4]

Direct or original interrogatory. An interrogatory exhibited by the party who calls a witness in the first instance. Counter or cross interrogatory: is exhibited by the adverse party.

Fishing interrogatory. Inquries after a matter as to which proponent has no right to a discovery.

Suggestive interrogatory. Indicates the answer desired.

Interrogatories accompany bills in the nature of discovery, proceedings for contempt, attachment in execution against garnishees, commissions to take testimony out of court. They are subject to the same rules as examinations in court.[5]

See CHANCERY, Bill in; DEPOSITION; DISCOVERY, 6; EXAMINATION, 9; QUESTION, 1.

INTERSECT. Ordinarily, to cross.[6]

A railroad which runs along a turnpike so as to require a change in the traveled path, does not intersect the turnpike.[6]

Roads intersect at their middle lines.[7]

INTER-STATE. See COMMERCE; EXTRADITION, 2; STATE, 3 (2).

INTERVAL. See LUCID INTERVAL.

INTERVENE.[8] To file a claim or a defense in a suit instituted by or against others.

Intervener; intervenor. One who applies to be heard as an original party in another's suit, he being interested in the result of the suit.

Intervention. The act or proceeding by which one, on his own motion, becomes a party to a suit pending between others: as, in a case in equity or in admiralty. Opposed, non-intervention.

INTESTATE. 1, adj. Without a will; the status of a person who dies without having disposed of his property by means of a will, and the condition in which the property itself stands before the law: as, intestate — estate, property, laws. Opposed, testate.

2, n. A person who has died without leaving a valid will: as, an intestate, an intestate's estate or property.[1] Opposed, testator.

Intestacy. Dying without a will; the state or condition of one who dies without having made a valid testamentary disposition of his property. Opposed, testacy.

Intestable. Without capacity to make a valid will; also, incapable of transfer by will. Opposed, testable. See further TESTACY; DISTRIBUTION, 2; DESCENT.

INTIMATE. Compare ACQUAINTED.

That a man has been "intimate" with another's wife, does not of necessity import criminality.[2]

INTIMIDATION. See BOYCOTTING; DURESS; ELECTION, 1; FEAR; STRIKE, 2.

INTOXICATE. To become inebriated or drunk.[3]

Intoxicated. Drunk, from use of spirituous liquor.[4]

Whenever any other idea is intended other words are used; as, in saying that a person is intoxicated or drunk with opium, ether, or laughing gas.[4]

Intoxicating liquor. "Intoxicating liquors or mixtures thereof" are liquors which will intoxicate and which are commonly used as beverages for such purpose; also, any mixture of such liquors as, retaining their intoxicating qualities, it may fairly be presumed may be used as a beverage and become a substitute for the ordinary intoxicating drinks.[5]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, beer will always be presumed to be an intoxicating liquor.[6]

But "intoxicating" and "spirituous" not being

---

[1] Lieber, Herm. 23; 14 How. Pr. 272; 36 N. J. L. 209; 1 Bl. Com. 59.

[2] 2 Pars. Contr., 7 ed., 491 (a).

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. § 493.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 438; 4 id. 287; 5 N. J. L. 772.

[5] See Bischoffsheim v. Baltzer, 20 Blatch. 231 (1882).

[6] State v. New Haven, &c. R. Co., 45 Conn. 344 (1877).

[7] Springfield Road, 73 Pa. 129 (1873); 74 id. 259.

[8] L. inter-venire, to come in between.

[1] See 2 Bl. Com. 294.

[2] Adams v. Stone, 131 Mass. 433 (1881).

[3] Mullinix v. People, 76 Ill. 213 (1875).

[4] State v. Kelley, 47 Vt. 296 (1875).

[5] Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 767 (1881), Brewer, J.; State v. McGinnis, 30 Minn. 53 (1882).

[6] State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 484 (1883); Griffitt v. State, 58 Wis. 41 (1883), cases; 6 Kan. 371; 16 Mo. 389; 14 Ohio, 586; 12 Gray, 29; 63 N. Y. 277; 11 R. I. 593.

synonymous, an indictment for unlawful sales of "spirituous and intoxicating" liquors is not supported by proof of sales of liquors which are intoxicating but not spirituous.[1]

See further CONDITION; DRUNKENNESS; LIQUOR; POLICY, Public.

INTRA. See INFRA; ULTRA.

INTRINSIC. See VALUE.

INTROMISSION. Dealings in stock, goods, or cash of a principal, coming into the hands of his agent, to be accounted for by the agent.[2]

INTRUDER. A person who enters upon land when he has no right.[3] Compare SQUATTER. See LAND, Public.

Intrusion. Injury by ouster, or amotion of possession from the freehold: the entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion.[4]

INUNDATION. See ACT, 1, Of God; WATERCOURSE.

INURE.[5] To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of some one; to take or have effect; to operate.

As, that discharge of the principal inures to the benefit of the surety; that confirmation of a title inures to the grantee; that a grant by the state inures to the intent expressed.[6]

Inurement. Use, user, usage.

Passage of title by inurement and estoppel is the work of the common law and legislation.[7]

INVALID, adj. See VALID.

INVALID, n. See WITNESS.

INVASION. See WAR.

INVEIGLE. See KIDNAPING; PERSUADE.

INVENTION.[8] Finding out, by some effort of the understanding; not merely putting two things together, although never done before.[9]

The process of thought and experiment by which some new machine, composition, design, improvement or other article or thing is brought into existence; also, the thing itself thus produced.

The applicant for a patent must be the first as well as the original inventor; and a subsequent inventor, although an original inventor, is not entitled to a patent, if the invention is perfected and put into actual use by the first and original inventor. Until an invention is perfected and adapted to use, it is not patentable. An invention resting in mere theory, or in intellectual notion, or in uncertain experiments, and not actually reduced to practice and embodied in some distinct machinery, apparatus, manufacture, or composition of matter, is not patentable.[1]

The patent law requires a thing to be new as well as useful. To be new, it must be the product of original thought or inventive skill, and not a mere formal and mechanical change of what was old and well-known. But the effect produced by change is often an appropriate, though not a controlling, consideration in determining the character of the change itself.[2]

Merely turning down and cementing the edges of celluloid collars in the form of a hem is not invention.[3]

It is becoming more and more difficult to distinguish between skill and invention. As the standard of skill in mechanics is raised, the standard of invention is also raised.[4]

Useful invention. Such invention as may be applied to some beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention which is injurious to the morals, the health, or the good order of society.[5]

All improvement is not invention; to entitle it to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties, and involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art.[6]

The improvement must be distinct from the conception which originated the original article or product. A mere carrying forward or new or more extended application of the original thought, a change only in form, proportion, or degree, the substitution of equivalents, doing substantially the same thing in the same way by substantially the same means with better results, is not such invention as will sustain a patent.[7]

---

[1] Commonwealth v. Livermore, 4 Gray, 20 (1855).

[2] Stewart v. M'Kean, 29 E. L. & Eq. 391 (1855), Alderson, B.

[3] [O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 16 Abb. N. Cas. 88 (1885).

[4] 3 Bl. Com. 169; 9 Ill. 170.

[5] L. in ure, in operation, work, use. Preferred to enure.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 347.

[7] Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 583, 584 (1879).

[8] F. inventer, to devise: L. in venire, to come upon, find out.

[9] Earle v. Sawyer, 4 Mas. 5 (1825), Story, J.

[1] Reed v. Cutter, 1 Story, 596, 599 (1841), Story, J.

[2] The Stanley Works v. Sargent & Co., 8 Blatch. 346 (1871), Shipman, J. See also Smith v. Goodyear Co., 93 U. S. 495 (1876); Washburn & Moen Manuf. Co. v. Haish, 10 Biss. 72-75 (1880); Western Electric Light Co. v. Chicago Electric Light Manuf. Co., 11 id. 427 (1882); Gardner v. Herz, 118 U. S. 180 (1886), cases, Blatchford, J.; Pomace Holder Co v. Ferguson, 119 id. 338 (1886), cases.

[3] Celluloid Manuf. Co. v. Zylonite Novelty Co., 8 F. R. 617 (1887).

[4] Wilcox v. Bookwalter, 31 F. R. 229 (1887).

[5] Bedford v. Hunt, 1 Mas. 308 (1817), Story, J.; 3 Wis. 442; 13 N. H. 318.

[6] Pearce v. Mulford, 102 U. S. 118 (1880), Strong, J.

[7] Smith v. Nichols, 21 Wall. 119 (1874), Swayne, J. See also Stephenson v. Brooklyn R. Co., 114 U. S. 154 (1885), cases.

Inventor. He who originally contrives or devises a new article or thing.

Inventors are a meritorious class generally, and favored in law.[1] Acts intended to determine the value, utility, or success of an invention are liberally construed.[2] But inventors must comply with statutory conditions. They cannot, without cause, hold an application pending more than two years.[3]

Exact description is requisite: that the government may know what it has granted, and what will become public property when the patent expires; that licensees may know how to use the invention; and that subsequent inventors may know what portion of the field has been occupied.[4]

While an agreement to assign in gross a man's future labors does not address itself favorably to the courts, an inventor may dispose of his invention and bind himself to assign to the purchaser any improvements he may thereafter make; and a pecuniary interest in the sale of the patent does not seem to be necessary to the validity of such a bargain.[5]

See further ORIGINALITY; PATENT, 2; TELEPHONE CASE; USE, 2, Useful.

INVENTORY.[6] A list or schedule of articles of property.

A list or schedule, or enumeration of the articles of property, setting out the names of the different articles, either singly or in classes.[7]

Accounts of the items of property levied upon are called inventories; and insolvents file inventories of assets. A more common use is in the administration of the estates of decedents. The representative, at the outset, files an inventory of the assets. This is made by two or more fair-minded persons as sworn appraisers. The representative is then charged with the amount of the inventory. Articles not converted into money, and disbursements, may afterward be allowed as credits. The inventory exhibits to creditors, legatees, and distributees, the nature and amount of the estate.

The inventory made by a landlord who distrains for rent should be full enough to inform the tenant of the articles distrained, for which he may have a writ of replevin.[8]

INVENTUS. See FIND, 3.

INVEST. 1. To clothe with power or authority. See VEST.

2. In common parlance, to put out money on interest.

To place money so that it will yield a profit; as commonly understood, to give money for other property.[1]

Includes, but is not restricted to, "loan."[2]

Does not universally import preservation or a permanent keeping for the purpose of collecting income. "It is not uncommon to hear it said that the best investment of money is in paying debts."[3]

Invested. A sum represented by anything but money is invested.[4]

Money loaned is invested in a debt against the borrower, regardless of the evidence.[5]

Investment. Laying out money in such manner that it may produce a revenue, whether the particular method be a loan or the purchase of stocks, securities, or other property. In common parlance, putting out money on interest, either by way of loan or by the purchase of income-producing property.[6]

An investment of money in the business of another is more than a loan: it is a contribution to the capital.[7]

Neglect by a trustee to invest moneys in his hands is a breach of trust, and ground for removal.[8]

The rule is everywhere recognized that a trustee, when investing property in his hands, is bound to act honestly and faithfully, and to exercise a sound discretion, such as men of ordinary prudence and intelligence use in their own affairs. In some jurisdictions, no attempt has been made to establish a more definite rule; in others, the discretion has been confined, by the legislature or the courts, within strict limits.[9]

INVESTIGATION. Inquiry by observation, experiment, or discussion.[10]

The Penal Code of New York, § 79, makes it compulsory upon persons concerned in bribery to testify "upon any trial . . . or investigation" thereof, their testimony not to be used against them in any subsequent proceeding. This does not refer to an "investigation" in the course of a criminal prosecution, but to any inquiry in the conduct of which persons may be called by authority to testify, and hence includes an inquiry directed by the legislature, and conducted by any of its committees.[11]

---

[1] Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 674 (1846).

[2] Jennings v. Pierce, 15 Blatch. 45–46 (1878), cases; Lyman v. Maypole, 19 F. R. 735, 737–44 (1884), cases.

[3] Plaining-Machine Co. v. Keith, 101 U. S. 485 (1879).

[4] Tucker v. Tucker Manuf. Co., 4 Cliff. 400 (1876), Clifford, J.; Parker v. Stiles, 5 McLean, 55 (1849).

[5] Aspinwall Manuf. Co. v. Gill, 32 F. R. 700 (1887), Bradley, J.

[6] L. in-venire, to find.

[7] [Silver Bow Mining Co. v. Lowry, 5 Monta. 621 (1885).

[8] Richards v. McGrath, 100 Pa. 400 (1882); 59 Wis. 408.

[1] Neel v. Beach, 92 Pa. 226 (1879).

[2] Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 127 (1871).

[3] New England Life Ins. Co. v. Phillips, 141 Mass. 540, 543 (1886).

[4] Parker Mills v. Commissioners, 23 N. Y. 244 (1861).

[5] Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 140 (1862). See also 2 Cow. 678; 1 Edw. 513; 10 Gill. & J. 299.

[6] Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. E. 186 (1884), Van Fleet, V. C. See also People v. Utica Ins. Co., 15 Johns. *392 (1818).

[7] Lyon v. Zimmer, 30 F. R. 410 (1887).

[8] Cavender v. Cavender, 114 U. S. 473 (1885), cases.

[9] Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 465–70 (1884), cases, Gray, J.; New England Trust Co. v. Eaton, 140 Mass. 535 (1886), cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 217–34 (1886), cases.

[10] Wright v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 290 (1868).

[11] People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427 (1887).

INVESTITURE. A grant of land in feudal ages was perfected by the ceremony of corporal investiture: open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of other vassals.

Made by putting a vestis, a robe, upon the tenant. Perpetuated memory of the transaction at a time when writing was little known.[1] See DELIVERY, 1.

INVIOLABLE. See IMPAIR.

INVIOLATE. See JURY, Trial by.

INVITATION. See NEGLIGENCE.

INVITUS. L. Against the will; unwilling.

Ab invito. From an unwilling person.

In invito. Against a resisting party.

Frequently applied to proceedings against a party who opposes the demand made upon him, and also to the judgment or decree made in such case. Taxes are said to be levied in invitum.

Invito domino. The owner being unwilling.

Said of the "taking" in larceny.

INVOICE.[2] A document transmitted from the shipper to his factor or consignee, containing the particulars and prices of the goods shipped.[3]

A written account of the particulars of merchandise shipped to a purchaser, factor or consignee, with the value or prices and charges annexed.[4]

Invoice cost or price. Sometimes, the prime price or cost of goods, whether there is an invoice in fact or not.[5]

An invoice is not a bill of sale, nor is it evidence of a sale. It is a mere detailed statement of the nature, quality, and cost or price of things invoiced, and is as appropriate to a bailment as to a sale. It does not of itself necessarily indicate to whom the things are sent, or even that they have been sent at all. Hence, standing alone, it is never regarded as evidence of title.[6] See BOOK-ENTRIES.

INVOLUNTARY. See VOLUNTARY.

IPSE. L. He himself. Ipsud, it itself; the very same.

Ipsissimis verbis. In the identical words. See VERBUM.

Ipso facto. By the mere fact.

Ipso jure. By the law itself.

IRON CLAD OATH. See OATH, Of office.

IRREGULAR. See ERRONEOUS; REGULAR.

IRRELEVANT. See RELEVANT.

IRREPARABLE. See INJURY.

IRRESISTIBLE. See ACCIDENT; FORCE.

IRRESPONSIBLE. See RESPONSIBLE.

IRREVOCABLE. See REVOKE.

IRRIGATION. See AQUA, Currit, etc.; RIPARIAN.

IS. L. That one; he.

Inflections: id, ei, ejus, eo, qq. v.

ISSINT.[1] Introduced a statement that special matter amounted to a denial — "the general issue with an issint."[2]

ISSUABLE. See ISSUE, 3.

ISSUE.[3] 1, v. To send out: as, to issue a writ or process.

A process is "issued" when made out and placed in the hands of a person authorized to serve it, with a bona fide intent to have it served.[4]

n. A causing to go forth: as, the issue of an order or writ, the issue of letters patent or letters testamentary. Compare EXIRE, Exit.

Re-issue; re-issued. Refer, in particular, to a continuation of an original patent. Whence re-issuable.

Whenever a patent is inoperative or defective, by reason of a defective or insufficient specification or claim of more than the applicant has a right to as new, if the error has arisen by inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without deceptive intention, the commissioner of patents, on the surrender of such patent, shall cause a new patent to issue in accordance with the corrected specification. The surrender takes effect from the issue of the amended patent, and runs for the unexpired term of the original patent. But new matter may not be introduced.[5]

The surrender of valid patents, and the granting of re-issued patents thereon, with expanded or equivocal claims, where the original was clearly neither "inoperative nor invalid," and whose specification is neither "defective or insufficient," is a great abuse of the privilege granted, and productive of great injury to the public.[6]

A re-issue must be for the same invention, and, in

---

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 53, 311.

[2] A corruption of envois, Eng. plural of F. envoi, a sending.

[3] Le Roy v. United Ins. Co., 7 Johns. *354 (1811).

[4] Pipes v. Norton, 47 Miss. 76 (1872), Tarbell, J.; 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 160.

[5] Sturm v. Williams, 6 Jones & S. 342 (1874); 7 Johns. *354.

[6] Dows v. Nat. Exch. Bank of Milwaukee, 91 U. S. 630 (1875), Strong, J. See 2 Wash. 124, 155; 4 Abb. Ap. Dec. 78.

[1] Norm. F., thus. so.

[2] Gould, Pl. 313; 4 Rawle, 83.

[3] F. issir: L. ex-ire, to go out.

[4] Mills v. Corbett, 8 How. Pr. 502 (1853); Bragg v. Thompson, 17 S. C. 378 (1882).

[5] R. S. §§ 4916, 4895.

[6] Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. 577 (1863), Grier, J.; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 371 (1881).

judgment of law, is only a continuation of the original patent.[1]

If, on comparing a re-issue with its original, the former appears on its face to be for a different invention from that described or indicated in the latter, it must be declared invalid.[2]

A re-issue can only be granted for the same invention which was originally patented. If it were otherwise, a door would be opened to the admission of the greatest frauds. Claims and pretensions shown to be unfounded at the time, might, after the lapse of a few years, a change of officers in the patent office, the death of witnesses, and the dispersion of documents, be set up anew, and a reversal of the first decision be obtained without an appeal, and without any knowledge of the previous investigations on the subject. New light breaking in upon the patentee as the progress of improvement goes on, and as other inventors enter the field, and his monopoly becomes less and less necessary to the public, might easily generate in his own mind an idea that his invention was really broader than had been set forth in the specification of his patent. It is easy to see how such new light would naturally be reflected in a re-issue of the patent, and how unjust it might be to third parties who had kept pace with the march of improvement.[3]

By a curious misapplication of the law it has come to be principally resorted to for the purpose of enlarging and expanding patent claims. And the evils which have grown from the practice have assumed large proportions. Patents have been so expanded and idealised, years after their first issue, that thousands of mechanics and manufacturers, who had just reason to suppose that the field of action was open, have been obliged to discontinue their employments, or to pay an enormous tax for continuing them.[4]

The patentee has no rights except such as grow out of the re-issued patent. No damages can be recovered for any acts of infringement committed prior to the re-issue. The reason is, the original patent, which is surrendered, becomes extinguished by a re-issue.[5]

Whether there was an "inadvertent" mistake in the specification, is, in general, a matter of fact for the commissioner of patents to decide; but whether the application for re-issue is made within a reasonable time is a matter of law, which the courts may determine by comparing the re-issued patent with the original, and, if necessary, with the records in the patent office when presented by the record.[6]

A patentee who imposes words of limitation upon his claim, especially so when required by the patent office in taking out his re-issue, is bound by such limitations in subsequent suits on the re-issued patents.[7] See PATENT, 2.

2, v. To put into circulation; to emit, q. v.: as, to issue bank notes, bonds, script.

n. All of a class or series of like securities or instruments for the payment of money put forth at one time.[8]

3, n. The disputed point or question.[9]

A single, certain, and material point, arising out of the allegations or pleadings of the parties, and generally made by an affirmative and a negative.[10]

When the parties come to a point which is affirmed on one side, and denied on the other, they are said to be "at issue." All debate is then contracted into a single point, which must be determined in favor of one of the parties.[11]

Issuable. Permitting an issue to be framed: as, issuable matter, or plea; to plead issuably.

Issue, exitus, is the end of all pleadings. It is upon a matter of law or of fact. An issue upon a matter of law is called a demurrer, q. v. An issue of fact is where the fact only, and not the law, is disputed.[12]

When either side denies the facts pleaded by his antagonist, he usually "tenders an issue." If the denial comes from the defendant, the form is "And of this he puts himself upon the country;" if from the plaintiff, the form is "And this he prays may be inquired of by the country" — a jury. Thereupon the other party subjoins "And the said A does the like." Which done, the issue is said to be "joined," both parties agreeing to rest the fate of the cause upon the truth of the fact in question.[13]

Thus also in equity, the plaintiff may aver, in reply, that his bill is true, certain, and sufficient, and defendant's answer the reverse, which he is ready to prove as the court shall award; upon which the defendant rejoins, averring the like on his side.[14]

Collateral issue. An issue upon an incidental matter.[15]

Feigned issue. As no jury is summoned to attend a court of equity, a matter of fact, strongly controverted, is directed to be tried at the bar of a court of law, upon a "feigned" issue. This is an action wherein the plaint-

[1] Read v. Bowman, 2 Wall. 604 (1864), Clifford, J.

[2] Ball v. Langles, 102 U. S. 130 (1880), cases, Strong, J.

[3] Swain Turbine & Manuf. Co. v. Ladd, 102 U. S. 413 (1880), Bradley, J.; Parker & Whipple Co. v. Yale Lock Co., 123 id. 37, 97 (1887).

[4] Miller v. Bridgeport Brass Co., 104 U. S. 353 (1881), Bradley, J.

[5] Peck v. Collins, 103 U. S. 664 (1880), Bradley, J. See also ib. 791; Heald v. Rice, 104 id. 749 (1881); Wing v. Anthony, 106 id. 147 (1882); Moffitt v. Rogers, ib. 423, 428 (1882), cases; 18 Blatch. 534; 17 F. R. 235.

[6] Mahn v. Harwood, 112 U. S. 359-60 (1884), cases, Bradley, J.; Hoskin v. Fisher, 125 id. 223 (1888), cases.

[7] Crawford v. Heysinger, 123 U. S. 606 (1887), cases, Blatchford, J.

[8] See 8 Mich. 104; 2 McCrary, 449; 17 Barb. 341.

[9] Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 438 (1884).

[10] Simonton v. Winter, 5 Pet. *149 (1831); Gould, Pl. 279.

[11] 3 Bl. Com. 313. See 2 Ark. 104; 30 Conn. 488; 55 Ga. 61; 9 Gill, 258; 2 N. J. E. 157; 51 Wis. 77.

[12] 3 Bl. Com. 314-15; 2 N. J. E. 157; 51 Wis. 76.

[13] 3 Bl. Com. 313, 315; 57 N. H. 164.

[14] 3 Bl. Com. 448.

[15] See 4 Bl. Com. 306.

iff, by a fiction, declares that he laid a wager with the defendant, and then re-avers the truth of the fact, and therefore demands the amount of the wager. The defendant admits the wager, but denies the truth of the fact, whereupon the issue is joined, which is directed to be tried out of chancery. This issue is also used in the courts of law by consent, to determine some disputed right without the formality of pleading, and to save time and expense.[1]

A frequent use is in the trial of issues devisavit vel non, q. v.

A feigned issue is a mode of procedure adopted from the civil law by courts of law as well as courts of equity as a means of having some question of fact arising incidentally, and to be made the foundation of an order or decree, determined by the verdict of a jury. It is called a "feigned" issue for the reason that its object is not the establishment of a legal right on which a judgment shall regularly follow, but the ascertainment by a formal issue of some issue of fact arising in another cause, and material to the decision of the latter. For convenience of trial the issue must be given the form of a common-law action, with appropriate pleadings, and an issue thereon; but, nevertheless, the nature and purpose of the issue give it character as a feigned issue or otherwise, and not the form in which the issue is expressed.[2]

Formal issue. Framed according to rule; opposed to informal issue.

General issue. Traverses and denies the whole declaration, without offering any special matter whereby to evade it. Leaves everything open — the fact, the law, and the equity of the case.

Special issue. Denies some one substantial point as decisive of the whole cause.[3]

Common general issues: nil or nihil debet; non assumpsit; non cepit; non detinet; non est factum; not guilty; nul tiel record; nulla bona; plene administravit; rein en arreare, qq. v.[4]

Material issue. Framed upon a matter decisive of the question in dispute. Immaterial issue. Framed upon a point not decisive of the right.[5]

In equity practice, a material issue is an issue upon a fact which has some bearing upon the equity sought to be established.[6]

Matter in issue. That matter upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts by his pleadings.[1]

4, n. Issues: rents and profits of realty: as, in the expression, "rents, issues, and profits."[2]

5, n. Heirs of the body; all ones lineal descendants indefinitely: as, in the expressions, issue of body, failure of issue, die without issue.[3]

In wills and deeds of settlement, while "issue" is construed to include grandchildren, "child" or "children" is not, unless a contrary intent is clear.[4]

"Issue" necessarily includes children; but "children" does not include more remote issue.[5]

In a will, "issue" means, prima facie, the same as "heirs of the body," and in general is to be construed as a word of limitation. But this construction will give way if there be on the face of the instrument sufficient to show that the word was intended to have less extended meaning, and to be applied only to children or to descendents of a particular class or at a particular time.[6]

In a devise, "issue" is a word of purchase or of limitation, as best answers the intention; in a deed, it is always a word of purchase.[7]

Issue of body. Is more flexible than "heirs of the body;" courts more readily interpret the former as synonymous with "children" and a mere description of persons.[8]

See CHILD; DESCEND; DIE, Without issue; FAILURE; HEIR; SHELLEY'S CASE; TAIL; WILL, 2.

ITA. See LEX, Ita, etc.

ITEM.[9] 1. In like manner; after the same manner; likewise; also; again.

2. A particular in an account or bill. See ACCOUNT, 1; BALANCE.

Formerly used in wills to mark a new paragraph or division after the first paragraph — which was the in-primis.[10] See ALSO; FIRST.

ITINERANT. See CIRCUIT.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 452.

[2] American Dock, &c. Co. v. Trustees of Public Schools, 37 N. J. E. 269 (1883), Depue, J.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; 4 id. 340; 55 Vt. 97; Gould, Pl. 282–315.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 305; Gould, Pl. 284.

[5] [Wooden v. Waffle, 6 How. Pr. 151 (1851).

[1] King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 16 (1844), Parker, C. J.; 55 id. 592; 58 id. 117, 471; 4 F. R. 390; 18 Blatch. 457.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 280; Perot's Appeal, 102 Pa. 256 (1883).

[3] Holland v. Adams, 3 Gray, 193 (1855), Shaw, C. J.; 140 Mass. 267; 60 N. H. 451.

[4] Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 42 (1855); Adams v. Law, 17 How. 421 (1854).

[5] Bigelow v. Morong, 103 Mass. 289 (1869).

[6] Taylor v. Taylor, 63 Pa. 483 (1870), Sharswood, J.; Kleppner v. Laverty, 70 id. 72 (1871); Robins v. Quinliven, 79 id. 335 (1875); Wister v. Scott, 105 id. 200, 214–16 (1884), cases; Reinoehl v. Shirk, id. (1885), cases; Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 519 (1881), cases; Magnum v. Pleister, 16 S. C. 324 (1881); Atkinson v. M'Cormick, 76 Va. 799 (1882).

[7] 2 Washb. R. P., 4 ed., 604; 4 T. R. 299; 13 N. J. 177; 63 Pa. 483; 28 id. 102; 40 id. 65; 100 id. 540.

[8] Daniel v. Whartenby, 17 Wall. 643 (1873).

[9] L. ita, so; or, is, id, that same.

[10] See Hopewell v. Ackland, 1 Salk. *329 (1710).

J.

J. The initial letter of judge and justice, words frequently abbreviated:

J. A. Judge-advocate.

J. A. G. Judge-advocate general.

J. J. Junior judge.

JJ. Justices or judges.

J. P. Justice of the peace.[1]

Other abbreviations: A. J., associate judge or justice; C. J., chief justice; F. J., first judge; L. J., law judge; P. J., president or presiding judge. See JUDGE.

JAC. Jacobus: James, king James.

JACKASS. See title HORSE.

JACTITATION.[2] An assertion repeated to another's inquiry.

Jactitation of marriage. When a person gave out that he was married to another, whereby common reputation of their matrimony might ensue. Upon proof of the wrong, the boaster, made respondent to a libel in the ecclesiastical court, was enjoined to perpetual silence.[3]

Under canon law, false claims of right to a church sitting, and of title to certain tithes, were also species of jactitation.

The law of Louisiana has allowed an action of jactitation for slander of title.

JACTUS. See JETTISON.

JAIL.[4] A house or building used for the purposes of a public prison, or where persons under arrest are kept.[5]

Originally, a place where persons were confined to await further judicial proceeding; as, a debtor, till he paid his debt, a witness, or an accused person, till the trial came on. A "prison" was for confinement as punishment.[6]

Every county has two gaols: one for debtors,—any house where the sheriff pleases; the other for matters of the crown,— the county or common gaol.[7]

Jailer. The keeper of a jail.

Formerly, a servant of the sheriff. He keeps safely persons committed to him by lawful authority.[8]

Jail delivery. A commission to members of the courts of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery, empowering them to try and to deliver every person held in provisional confinement, when the judges arrived at the circuit town.

This commission was at first special, issued for individual cases, but in time became general, or for all persons so confined. Under this practice the jails were cleared, and all offenders tried, punished or delivered, twice each year.[1]

Jail liberties, or limits. A limited region of liberty for a person imprisoned for debt.

Equivalent expressions are: "prison bounds," and "rules of the prison."[2] Compare INTERN.

See IMPRISONMENT; PRISON.

JANITOR. A person employed to take charge of rooms or buildings, to see that they are kept clean and in order, to lock and unlock them, and, generally, to care for them.[3]

JEOFAIL.[4] Mistakes in pleading are helped by the statute of amendments and jeofails: so called because when a pleader perceives a slip in the form of his pleadings and acknowledges the error (jeo faile, I have failed), he may amend it.[5]

These statutes did not extend to proceedings in criminal cases. They cut off niceties in pleading which had disgraced the courts, and permitted writs of error only for material mistakes.[6] See AMENDMENT, 1.

JEOPARDY.[7] Hazard; danger; peril.[8]

1. The act of March 3, 1825, § 22, prescribes additional punishment for any person who, in robbing the mail, puts the life of the carrier in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon. Held, that if the carrier's life is in danger, or if he has a well-grounded fear for his life, from a threat to use a weapon, his life is put in jeopardy, provided a robbery is committed.[9]

2. "Nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb."[10]

The constitutions of the several States contain a like provision.

"Jeopardy of life or limb" originally referred to trial by battel,[11] q. v.

---

[1] Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 481 (1843).

[2] L. jactitare to utter.

[3] [3 Bl. Com. 93; 1 Chitty, Pr. 459.

[4] Formerly, gaol: F. gaole, a prison: L. L. gabiola, gabia, a cage: L. cavea, a cave.

[5] State v. Bryan, 89 N. Car. 533 (1883), Merrimon, J.

[6] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[7] [Jacob's Law Dict.

[8] [1 Bl. Com. 346.

[1] See 4 Bl. Com. 269; Law Mag. & R., May, 1883; Great Law of Pa. (1683): Linn, 120.

[2] See United States v. Knight, 14 Pet. 312, 314 (1840).

[3] Fagan v. Mayor of New York, 84 N. Y. 352 (1881).

[4] Jĕf'-fāl. F. j'ai failli, I have erred, failed.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 407.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 375, 439; 3 id. 407. See Wildor v. Gilman, 55 Vt. 504 (1883).

[7] F. j'ai perdu, I have lost; jeu perdu, a lost game, or jeu parti, a divided game: of equal chance; hence, risk, peril,— Skeat.

[8] See United States v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 38-62 (1834), cases, Story, J.; 4 Wash. 402; 44 Wis. 287.

[9] R. S. § 5472; United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 98 (1830).

[10] Constitution, Amd. V. Ratified, Dec. 15, 1791.

[11] McFadden v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. 16 (1855), Black, C. J.

"Jeopardy" has, in the Constitution, its technical common-law sense; it applies only to strictly criminal prosecutions. There is no case where a conviction has been held a bar to a civil action for damages.[1]

A person is in legal jeopardy when put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, under an indictment or information sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance — that is, empanelled and sworn.[2]

A prisoner is in jeopardy when a jury has been empanelled and sworn to try him upon a capital charge.[3]

The discharge of the jury without the prisoner's consent, after it has been sworn, is allowable only in a case of absolute necessity; if made without such necessity, it will operate as an acquittal.[3]

The provision, properly interpreted, refers only to treason and felonies; but it is made to include misdemeanors. It does not extend to proceedings for the recovery of penalties, nor to application for sureties of the peace.[4]

A prisoner who is indicted for murder, convicted of murder in the second degree, and granted a new trial, cannot, on the second trial, be convicted of a higher crime than murder in the second degree.[5]

Where a new trial is granted to one found guilty of manslaughter under an indictment for murder, he may again be tried for murder.[6]

See further CONVICTION, Former; PUNISHED, Twice; VEXATION.

JETTISON, or JETSAM.[7] Any throwing overboard; a throwing overboard for the preservation of ship and cargo; also, to cast overboard.[8] Sometimes designated as jactus or the jactus.

Jetsam is where goods cast into the sea, sink and remain under water.[9] Opposed, flotsam, ligan. See further AVERAGE, General; WRECK.

[1] See United States v. Gibert, ante.

[2] Cooley, Const. Lim. 327–28, cases.

[3] Hilands v. Commonwealth, 111 Pa. 4 (1886), cases, Mercur, C. J. See also People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 18 (1886); 24 Cent. Law J. 563 (1887), cases; 18 id. 43–45, 63–65 (1884), cases; 17 Am. Law Rev. 735–53 (1883), cases; 4 Cr. Law Mag. 31–36, 487–506 (1883), cases; 71 Ala. 369; 38 Cal. 467; 41 id. 211; 48 id. 324, 331; 59 id. 359; 1 Idaho, 763; 5 Ind. 290; 18 id. 215; 14 id. 39; 26 id. 366; 59 Iowa, 473; 78 Ky. 96; 1 Gray, 490; 105 Mass. 189; 38 Me. 574, 586; 23 Pa. 12; 12 Vt. 93; L. R., 1 Q. B., 289; 2 Benn. & H., Ld. Cr. Cas. 337.

[4] 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 990.

[5] State v. Belden, 33 Wis. 120, 124 (1873), cases; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 849; Cooley, Const. Lim. 328. Contra, State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572 (1870); State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 241 (1871), cases; United States v. Harding, 1 Wall. Jr. 127 (1846).

[6] Commonwealth v. Arnold, 83 Ky. 11 (1886), cases.

[7] O. F. jett-er, to throw; -son, together. L. jactus, thrown.

[8] Butler v. Wildman, 3 B. & Al. 236 (1820).

[9] 1 Bl. Com. 292; 1 Story, Eq. § 490; 3 Kent, 135; Gibsone v. The Jessup, &c. Paper Co., 14 Rep. 644 (1882); 19 How. 162, 10 id. 305; 14 F. R. 59; 19 id. 162.

JEWEL. An ornament of the person, such as an ear-ring, a pearl, a diamond, prepared to be worn.[1]

A watch is not carried as a jewel or ornament, but as an article of ordinary wear, and of hourly use. It is as necessary to a guest at an inn in his room as out of it, in the night as in the day-time.[2]

Jewelry. In a statute which prohibits peddling jewelry without a license, a term of the largest import, including all articles under the genus.[3]

As generally used, includes articles of personal adornment, and imports that the articles are of value in the community where they are used. . . If by a pleasing combination of materials, by an attractive arrangement of parts, an article is produced bearing a general resemblance to real jewelry ornaments, and suitable for similar uses, it may fairly be called "imitation jewelry."[4] See BAGGAGE.

JEWS. See SUNDAY.

JOBBER. A merchant who purchases goods from importers and sells to retailers.[5]

JOHN DOE. See DOE.

JOINDER. Joining; coupling; uniting. See JOINT.

Joinder in demurrer. Accepting the issue tendered by defendant. See DEMURRER.

Joinder of actions or causes of action. Stating more than one cause in the same declaration. See COUNT, 4.

Joinder of issue. Acceptance of an issue of fact tendered by one's opponent. See ISSUE, 3.

Joinder of offenses. Incorporating two or more distinct charges of crime in one indictment.

Joinder of parties. Uniting two or more persons in one action as co-plaintiffs or as co-defendants.[6] See PARTY, 2.

Mis-joinder. Joining in an action as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants persons who ought not to be joined.

Non-joinder. Failure to join persons as co-parties.[7]

JOINT. Joined; united; done by or against, or shared between, two or more persons in union.[8] Compare CO, 2.

[1] Cavendish v. Cavendish, 1 Brown, Ch. *463 (1785).

[2] Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 541 (1871): 4 Hand, 539.

[3] Commonwealth v. Stephens, 14 Pick. 373 (1833), Shaw, C. J.

[4] Robbins v. Robertson, 33 F. R. 710 (1888).

[5] Steward v. Winters, 4 Sandf. Ch. *590 (1847): Webster's Dict.; L. R., 7 P. C. 104.

[6] See 1 Chitty, Pl., 16 Am. ed., 53; Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 170 (1882).

[7] See Heinlen v. Heilbron, 71 Cal. 560 (1887).

[8] [Abbott's Law Dict.

Joint and several. Said of an obligation in which all the obligees are to be held either collectively or as individuals. Compare SOLE.

As, a joint, or a joint and several — action or suit, bond, contract or covenant, interest, obligation; a joint — administration, executor or trustee, adventure, creditor, debtor, indictment, judgment or decree, life, party, tenant, trespass, stock company, qq. v.

Parties are not said to be joint merely because they are connected in an interest which is common to them both: they must be so connected as to be in some measure identified. They have not several and respective shares which being united make a whole; but these together constitute one whole, which, whether it be an interest or an obligation, belongs to all. Hence arises an implied authority to act for each other.[1]

A joint and several contract contains distinct engagements — that of each contractor individually, and that of all jointly; and different remedies may be pursued upon each. In co-partnerships there is no such several liability.[2]

Every contract for a joint loan is in equity deemed, as to the borrowers, a joint and several contract — the larger security.[3]

Even without satisfaction, a judgment against one of two or more joint contractors is a bar to an action against the others, within the maxim transit in rem judicatam; the cause of action being changed into a matter of record, which has the effect of merging the inferior into the higher remedy.[4]

"A covenant is to be construed as joint or several according to the interests of the parties appearing upon the face of the obligation, if the words are capable of such construction; but it will not be construed as several by reason of several interests, if it be expressly joint."[5]

Where the obligation is joint and several, the obligee may elect to sue the obligors jointly or singly. Hence, if he obtains a joint judgment, he cannot then sue the obligors separately — the contract being merged into a judgment; nor can he maintain a joint action after a recovery in a separate action against one party.[6]

If one of two joint obligees (sureties) dies before the principal, his representative cannot be charged — the obligee having elected to take a joint judgment at law or a joint and several obligation. Equity can give relief only when the joint obligation does not express the meaning of the parties.[7] See REFORM.

[1] 1 Pars. Contr. 21.

[2] Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 235-41 (1867), cases.

[3] 1 Story, Eq. § 162.

[4] United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 44 (1878), cases.

[5] Farni v. Tesson, 1 Black, 315 (1861): Parke, B.; Calvert v. Bradley, 16 How. 596 (1853); Seymour v. Western R. Co., 106 U. S. 321 (1882), cases.

[6] Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 347-48 (1877), cases.

[7] United States v. Price, 9 How. 91-95 (1850), cases; Pickersgill v. Lahens, 15 Wall. 142-44 (1872), cases; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 162-64.

Persons engaged in committing the same trespass are joint and several trespassers. Like joint and several contractors, all, or one, may be sued in one action. Where more than one is sued, they may sever in their pleas, and the jury may find several verdicts. But the acceptance of any one verdict is a satisfaction of all the others, except as to costs, and is a bar to another action.[1] See CONTRIBUTION.

Before the Supreme Court, where the judgment or decree is joint, all the parties against whom it is rendered must join in a writ of error or an appeal, in order, first, that the successful party may enforce the judgment or decree against the parties who do not desire a review; second, that the same question on the same record may be decided at the hearing.[2]

The parties non-assenting to the review may be severed. The party whose interest is affected by the alleged error may carry up the case alone, by summons and severance.[3]

Joint-debtor Acts. In most of the States legislative acts have been passed, called Joint-debtor Acts, which, as a substitute for outlawry, provide that if process be issued against several joint-debtors or partners, and served on one or more of them, and the others cannot be found, the plaintiff may proceed against those served, and, if successful, have judgment against all.

Such judgments are generally held to bind the common property of the joint-debtors, as well as the separate property of those served with process; and, while they are binding personally on the former, they are regarded as either not personally binding at all or only prima facie binding on the latter.[4]

JOINTURE. 1. Originally, an estate limited to both husband and wife; but in common acceptation extends also to a sole estate limited to the wife only, and made in satisfaction of her whole dower. In the latter sense, as defined by Lord Coke, "a competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements; to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least."[5]

One mode of barring the claim of a widow to dower is by settling upon her an allowance previous to marriage, to be accepted by her in lieu thereof. This is called a jointure.[6]

[1] Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 10 (1865); The Atlas, 93 U. S. 315 (1876); Sessions v. Johnson, 95 id. 348 (1877).

[2] Masterson v. Herndon, 10 Wall. 416 (1870).

[3] Simpson v. Greeley, 20 Wall. 157 (1873), cases; Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 163 (1886); 121 id. 632.

[4] Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 168 (1875), Bradley, J. See generally 36 Alb. Law J. 245-49, 265-69 (1887), cases.

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 137: 1 Coke, Inst. 36.

[6] 1 Washb. R. P. Ch. VIII. See also Grogan v. Garrison, 27 Ohio St. 60 (1875); Vance v. Vance, 21 Me. 364 (1842); 3 Miss. 602; 19 Mo. 469; 3 Metc., Ky., 151; 12 Bush. 513.

Although once common in England, of little moment since the Dower Act of 3 and 4 Wm. IV (1833), c. 105, placed the subject of the wife's dower under the control of the husband in all cases where special provision is not made in her favor; which is usually done by marriage settlements. See SETTLE, 4.

Jointures, where recognized, are legal or equitable in nature, and may be made before or after marriage. They have been regulated largely by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII (1536), c. 10,— the Statute of Uses.[1] See USE, 3, Statute, etc.

2. An estate in joint-tenancy.

JOURNAL. A record of the proceedings of a legislative body.

"Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, on the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal."[2]

The constitutions of the States contain similar provisions.

The journal is a public record of which the courts may take judicial notice. If it appears that an act did not receive the requisite vote, or that it was unconstitutionally adopted, the court may adjudge it void.[3]

No court has assumed to go beyond the proceedings of the legislature, as recorded in its journals, on the question whether a law has been adopted. Many cases follow The King v. Arundel, Hobart, *109 (1617), adopting the attested enrollment as conclusive on the question of passage. But in many States, Ohio among them, the journals, which are required to be kept by the constitution, are regarded. In the time of Hobart the journals were not records, but "remembrances for forms of proceedings to the record"— the enrolled bill.[4] See ENTRY, II, 6; YEAS AND NAYS.

JOURNEY. Originally, a day's travel; now applied to travel by land from place to place, without restriction as to time, and without the ordinary habits, business, or duties of the person, to a distance from his home, and beyond the circle of his friends or acquaintances; as, in a statute against carrying concealed weapons, except while traveling on a journey.[5]

Travel in the neighborhood of one's home, though in another county, is not contemplated in the Tennessee act of 1870.[6]

Journeyman. A servant by the day — whether the work is done by the day or by the piece.[1]

JR. See JUNIOR, 1; NAME, 1.

JUDEX. 1. In Roman law, when a suit was commenced, the parties appeared before the praetor, who made a preliminary examination to find the precise point in controversy. From the statements of the parties he constructed a formula, or brief technical statement of the issue. He then appointed a judex to try the case according to the issue, to condemn or acquit the accused, and to make return of his judgment.[2]

2. In civil law, a magistrate who conducted the proceedings in a cause from its first inception, and finally decided it.

3. In English law an officer who administers justice in a court of law; a judge.

Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the part of a good judge to enlarge his jurisdiction — in order to prevent a failure of justice.

Lord Abinger said "that the maxim of the law is to amplify its remedies, and without usurping jurisdiction, to apply its rules to the advancement of substantial justice."[3] Lord Mansfield suggested that the reading should be "ampliare justitiam."[4] The idea is about this, that the law provides a remedy for every wrong.[5]

Coram judice. Before a judge. Coram non judice. Before one not a judge. That is, before a court clothed, or not clothed, with jurisdiction in the matter.[6] See JURISDICTION.

Nemo debet esse judex in propria sua causa. No one should be judge in his own cause. No one can be at once judge and party.

In a state of mere nature each individual is his own judge; which is one of the evils society is intended to remedy. The power is now lodged in the civil magistrate.[7]

JUDGE.[8] A public officer whose function is to declare the law, to administer justice in

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 180.

[2] Constitution, Art. I. sec. 5, cl. 3.

[3] Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 549-53 (1883), cases; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 280-81 (1884); Cooley, Const. Lim. 135, cases; 2 Story, Const. § 801; 94 U. S. 263; 40 Ark. 209; 95 Ill. 181; 45 id. 119; 11 Ind. 424; 26 Pa. 450; 5 W. Va. 85.

[4] State, ex rel. Herron v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 362-405 (1886), cases pro and con. See also Attorney-General v. Rice, Sup. Ct. Mich. (1887): 26 Am. Law Reg. 304-11, cases; 37 Alb. Law J. 426-33, 449-55 (1888), cases.

[5] Gholson v. State, 53 Ala. 521 (1875), Brickell, C. J.

[6] Smith v. State, 3 Heisk. 511 (1872).

[1] Hart v. Aldridge, 1 Cowp. 55 (1774), Mansfield, C. J.

[2] See Hadley, Rom. Law, 60.

[3] Russell v. Smith, 9 M. & W. *818 (1842).

[4] Rex v. Phillips, 1 Bur. *304 (1757).

[5] Reynolds v. Hoxsie, 6 R. I. 468 (1860); 1 Story, Eq. §§ 49-50; Bacon, Aph. 96; 12 C. B. 413; 17 Mass. 310; Broom, Max. 81, 84.

[6] See Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 316 (1879).

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 8. See 64 Pa. 184-85; 98 N. Y. 396; 39 Tex. 447; 6 Q. B. 753; 18 id. 491.

[8] F. juger: L. jus dicare, to pronounce the right. See JUDEX.

a court of law, to conduct the trial of causes between litigants according to legal forms and methods.[1]

As sometimes used, includes any officer appointed or commissioned to decide a litigated question or questions: as, a justice of the peace, a referee, master, arbitrator. It is in this sense that jurors are said to be "judges of the fact."[2]

Frequently interchanged with "justice." See JUSTICE, 3.

Originally, the king determined causes; but in time he delegated the power to judges of his courts, which power is merely an emanation of the royal prerogative. A judge is the law's vicegerent; he is the law speaking.[3]

Associate judge or justice. A fellow member of a court, learned (or unlearned) in the law, and of equal (or unequal) authority in the decision of causes. Chief or president judge or justice. The member of a court who presides at its sessions and in its deliberations, directing the business before it, assigning causes to his associates for written opinions of the court, signing orders, and the like. See LEARNED.

The supreme court is composed of a chief justice and eight associate justices; any six of whom constitute a quorum.[4]

Various courts of appeal are composed of a chief justice and associate judges or justices. "Associate" does not here import inferiority in any sense. But it is otherwise where the associates are laymen: then, while the laymen are judges, and consult with the president judge, their authority is inferior, and they do not have an equal vote.

Law judge. A judge learned in the law; as opposed to a judge, perhaps an "associate" justice, who has not had legal training. See J.

Senior judge. In the Ohio act of April 7, 1882, the judge who has served the longest under his present commission.

In Nevada, the senior justice in commission is chief justice, and when the commissions of any two bear the same date, they determine by lot who shall be chief justice. In Kentucky, the judge having the shortest time to serve is styled the chief justice. Similar provisions are found in California, Georgia, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, and West Virginia, while in nineteen States there is no provision for the selection of a chief justice, no such officer seeming to be known, and in the remaining States the matter is either determined by the governor, or by the legislature, or the choice is made by the court itself. In the newer States of the west and south, the policy of short determinate terms is favored, while in many of the older Atlantic States the policy of priority by reason of service is recognized. The policy of Ohio accords with the former class.[1]

The duties of a judge, in forming his judgment, are: to gather the materials (facts, law, authorities) on which to form his opinion; to estimate authorities at their proper value as guides; to solve the difficulties presented; and, aided by his own knowledge and reason, and the arguments of counsel, with an unprejudiced mind to make a decision; and, in so doing, to regard the nature of the case, as new, as within some rule, or as governed by precedent.[2]

Maxims: a judge is to expound, not to make, the law; must hear both sides; cannot punish an injury done to himself; cannot be a witness or a judge in his own cause; is not to act upon his personal judgment or from a dictate of private will, but to pronounce according to law and justice; ought ever to regard equity; should have two salts: the salt of wisdom and the salt of conscience. See DISCRETION, 5.

The power and jurisdiction of a judge constitute the office of a judge. The constitutional grant of this power is incapable of any limitation but that attached to the grant; and the object is to secure independence in the judiciary. But the aggregate of the duties of a judge may be diminished by the division of his district or by the election of an assistant.[3]

Upon a judge as such no functions can be imposed except those of a judicial nature. Judicial authority, conferred upon a court, is to be exercised by the judges organized as a court.[4]

All judicial officers are exempt from liability for their judicial acts done within their jurisdiction; and judges of subordinate and general authority are exempt even where the judicial act is in excess of their jurisdiction, unless, perhaps, when done maliciously or corruptly. Judges of limited and inferior authority are protected when they act within their jurisdiction.[5]

It is a general principle of the highest importance to the proper administration of justice that a judicial officer, in exercising the authority vested in him, should be free to act upon his own convictions, without apprehension of personal consequences to himself. This rule exists for the benefit of the public, and was established to secure the independence of the judge. Should

[1] See Opinion of Commission, 57 N. Y. 405 (1874); 8 Heisk. 650.

[2] See 4 Dall. *229; 3 Yates, 314; 3 Cush. 564.

[3] [1 Bl. Com 267; 3 id. 24.

[4] R. S. § 673.

[1] State ex rel. Belford v. Hueston, 44 Ohio St. 5, 10–11 (1886), Spear, J.

[2] [Ram, Leg. Judg. 4.]

[3] Commonwealth v. Gamble, 62 Pa. 343 (1869). See Commonwealth v. Harding, 87 id. 343 (1878); Bredin's Appeal, 109 id. 337 (1885).

[4] United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40 (1851); 2 Dall. 409; 19 Wall. 107, 655; 6 Kan. 500; 114 Mass. 247. On exercising executive powers, see 2 Kan. Law J. 306–16, 354 (1885), cases.

[5] Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 535–39 (1868), cases, Field, J. See also Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 25–37 (1878), cases; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 495, 498–500 (1878), cases; Johnston v. Moorman, 80 Va. 140–48 (1885), cases.

he act with partiality, maliciously, corruptly, arbitrarily, or oppressively, he may be removed from office by impeachment, and vote of the legislature.[1]

No man can be a good judge who does not feel free to follow the dictates of his own mind. In a country where the people rule, and where popular clamor is apt to sway the multitude, nothing is more important than that the judges should be kept independent. The settled law of the Supreme Court is that where any judicial officer, a justice of the peace included, acts within his jurisdiction, he is not amenable to a civil action for damages. His motives cannot be inquired into.[2]

An act may be so entirely in excess of jurisdiction as to make it the arbitrary or unlawful act of a private person.[3]

See BRIBERY; CERTIFICATE; CHARGE, 2 (2, c); COURT; DECISION; GOWN; JUDGMENT; JUDICIAL; JURISDICTION, 2; JURY; JUS, Dicere; LEGISLATION, Judicial; NOTES, 1; OPINION, 3; PREJUDICE; PRESIDE.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE. The advising and prosecuting officer in military law or before a court-martial.

He may be the judge-advocate general, or a deputy judge-advocate. In conducting a trial, he represents the United States, the accused, and the court. The officer highest in rank present is president of the court.

The officer who may order a court-martial is competent to appoint the judge-advocate; the appointment for a regimental or a garrison court-martial is made in the same manner as for a general court-martial.

Without the order of the court, he may summon necessary witnesses; and he may compel the attendance of any person not in the military service. When it is possible, he should send subpœnas through regular military channels. He also conducts the examination of witnesses, observing the established rules of evidence.

By order of the court he may be assisted by a clerk, preference being given to a soldier.

At the close of the trial, without delay, he should transmit the proceedings to the officer having authority to confirm the sentence.[4]

Communications relating to questions of military justice or proceedings of military courts, upon which the opinion of the judge-advocate general is desired, are to be forwarded through proper channels to the adjutant-general, when such questions cannot be decided by an intermediate authority. But questions of an abstract, general character will not be considered.[5] See MARTIAL, Court, etc.

JUDGMENT. The saying of the law; the sentence of the law, pronounced by the court, upon the matter contained in the record.[1]

The determination of the law as the result of proceedings instituted in a court of justice.[2]

The final determination of the rights of the parties in the action.[3]

An adjudication of the rights of the parties in respect to the claim involved.[4]

The conclusion that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law and fact. This conclusion depends not upon the arbitrary caprice of the judge, but upon settled, invariable principles of justice. The judgment, in short, is the remedy prescribed by law for the redress of injuries; the suit or action is the vehicle or means of administering it.[6]

A step by which a plaintiff, if successful, obtains what he is seeking. It declares, does not create, a right. May be set aside or reversed, and gives no right superior to that which the plaintiff had before he obtained it.[6]

In its comprehensive sense, embraces not only judgments strictly so called, but also definitive decrees and orders in the nature of judgments.[7]

In criminal law, denotes the action of the court before which a trial is had, declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact ascertained by his conviction.[8] See CONVICTION; SENTENCE.

What is ordered and adjudged by the court, not merely what is entered, constitutes the judgment.[9]

The more common judgments rendered are: for plaintiff — by confession, or by default; for defendant — by non suit, non prosequitur, retraxit, nolle prosequi, discontinuance, or stet processus; for either plaintiff or defendant — upon a demurrer, an issue of nul tiel record, or a verdict,[10] qq. v.

Accumulative judgment. A sentence to imprisonment for a term to commence after a previous term has expired. See SENTENCE, Cumulative.

---

[1] Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. 347-54 (1871), cases, Field, J.

[2] Cooke v. Bangs, 31 F. R. 641-42 (1887), Brewer, J.

[3] Lange v. Benedict, 99 U. S. 71 (1878).

[4] Regulations of the Army of the United States, pp. 88, 89, 92 (1881).

[5] Ibid. p. 87.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 395; Davidson v. Smith, 1 Biss. 351 (1860).

[2] Mahoning County Bank's Appeal, 32 Pa. 160 (1858); 51 id. 375.

[3] Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 Barb. 408 (1866); N. Y. Code, § 245; 76 N. Y. 557; Kan. Civ. Code, § 395.

[4] McNulty v. Hurd, 72 N. Y. 521 (1878), Church, C. J.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 396; Re Sedgeley Avenue, 88 Pa. 519 (1879); Zeigler v. Vance, 3 Iowa, 530 (1856).

[6] Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 466 (1864).

[7] Re Road in Shaler Township, 108 Pa. 253 (1885), Sterrett, J.

[8] Commonwealth v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 325 (1872); Commonwealth v. Gloucester, 110 id. 496 (1872). See also 3 Ark. 299; 7 id. 398; 3 Col. 531; 2 Fla. 123; 5 id. 450; 50 Ga. 285; 1 Idaho, 459; 74 Ind. 550; 70 Iowa, 89; 3 La. An. 35, 634; 3 Metc., Mass., 520; 32 Md. 150; 12 Minn. 437; 3 Neb. 254; 31 N. J. L. 473; 68 N. C. 355; 19 S. C. 507; 31 Vt. 150; 10 Wis. 241.

[9] Houston v. Clark, 36 Kan. 414 (1887): Freeman, Judgm. § 38, cases.

[10] See 3 Bl. Com. 395-96.

Domestic judgment. A judgment rendered by a court at the domicil of the parties. Foreign judgment. That rendered under some other and independent or foreign jurisdiction.

An action of debt lies upon a foreign judgment.[1] At common law such a judgment was prima facie evidence of the debt adjudged to be due. It may be shown that the court had no jurisdiction or that the judgment was obtained by fraud. A domestic judgment, at common law, could not be collaterally impeached, if rendered in a court of competent jurisdiction; but only by a writ of error, a petition for a new trial, or a bill in chancery.[2]

Judgments recovered in one State, when proved in the courts of another, differ from judgments recovered in a foreign country in no other respect than that of not being re-examinable upon the merits, nor impeachable for fraud in obtaining them, if rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties.[3]

Though the judgment be set out in full in the complaint, the action, whether debt or assumpsit, will not be held to be brought on such judgment as a record, if the complaint alleges that by reason of the judgment the defendant became indebted.[4] See FAITH, Full, etc.; LAW, Foreign.

Final judgment. Such judgment as at once puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has or has not entitled himself to the remedy for which he sues. Interlocutory judgment. Is upon some intermediate plea, proceeding, or default, and does not finally determine or complete the suit.

The "interlocutory judgment" most frequently spoken of is that incomplete judgment whereby the right of the plaintiff is established, but the quantum of damages is not ascertained.[5]

A "final judgment" at once puts an end to the action, by determining that the plaintiff is, or is not, entitled to recover, and the amount in debt or damages to be recovered.[6]

No judgment is final which does not terminate the litigation between the parties.[7]

A motion for a new trial prevents a judgment from becoming effectual as a final judgment, until the date of the order refusing the new trial.[1]

All that is required is that the judgment should determine the issues involved in the action. It may be that some future order may become necessary to carry the judgment into effect.[2]

A judgment being the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action, it must be final — that is, it must settle the matter which it purports to conclude. The reasons announced form no part of it.[3]

A judgment is "interlocutory" when given in the course of a cause before final judgment.[4] See further DECREE, Final.

A judgment for damages, estimated in money, is sometimes called by text writers a specialty or "contract by record," because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered; and, by a fiction of law, a promise to pay is implied where such legal obligation exists. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction wanting the assent of parties into one which necessarily implies it, as, a judgment for a tort.[5]

In some decided cases, and in text books, judges and jurists have spoken of judgments as "contracts." They have been so classified with reference to the remedies upon them. But, strictly, as said by Lord Mansfield, in 1764, "a judgment is no contract, nor can be considered in that light: for judicium redditur in invitum," — consent and consideration are both wanting.[6]

The judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, as a plea, a bar; or, as evidence, conclusive between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another court. The judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court, for a different purpose. But the judgment of neither a court of concurrent nor of exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within the jurisdiction; nor of any matter indirectly cognizable; nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment.[7]

A judgment is valid upon its face, if it appears that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 160, 438.

[2] Michaels v. Post, 21 Wall. 426 (1874), cases; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 id. 461-69 (1873), cases; Glass v. Blackwell, 48 Ark. 55-56 (1886), cases; 17 Am. Law Rev. 411-22 (1883), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 203-6 (1884), cases; Columbia Jurist, 1886: 3 Kan. Law J. 178, 192 (1886), cases; R. S. § 906; 21 W. Va. 115.

[3] Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 4 (1885), cases.

[4] Mellin v. Horlick, 31 F. R. 867-88 (1887), cases.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 398, 396-97.

[6] Mahoning County Bank's Appeal, 32 Pa. 160 (1858).

[7] St. Clair County v. Lovingston, 18 Wall. 628 (1873); id. 586; Weston v. City Council, 2 Pet. *464 (1829); United States v. Abatoir Place, 109 U. S. 162 (1882), cases; 118 id. 48.

[1] Brown v. Evans, 18 F. R. 56-61 (1883), cases.

[2] Perkins v. Sierra Nevada Co., 10 Nev. 411 (1876), cases. See also 3 Ala. 226; 9 Ark. 352; 1 Cal. 28; 6 Conn. 61; 21 id. 284; 5 Fla. 450; 40 Ga. 320; 9 Iowa, 46; 24 Pick. 300; 3 Wend. 35; 9 Oreg. 441; 37 Tex. 390.

[3] Butt v. Herndon, 36 Kan. 372 (1887), cases, Horton, Chief Justice.

[4] Nacoochee Hydraulic Mining Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 320 (1869); Mora v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 13 Abb. Pr. 307 (1861).

[5] Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 289 (1883).

[6] O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 430-31 (1884), cases, Earl, J.; Bidleson v. Whytel, 3 Burrow, 1548 (1764).

[7] Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 How. St. Tr. 355 (1776), De Grey, Ld. C. J.: s. c. 2 Sm. L. C. *784; 2 Gall. 229; 17 Pick. 7-14; 2 Kent, 119.

of the parties, and that a judgment had in fact been rendered.[1]

All defenses admissible against a judgment where it was recovered are admissible in an action upon it in another State. Want of jurisdiction is a good defense. Whether fraud in procuring it is, seems to depend upon the practice in the forum where the action is brought.[2] See JURISDICTION.

A distinction between erroneous and void judgments is universally recognized.[3] See ERROR, 2 (2), Erroneous.

At common law, a judgment was not a lien upon realty; a lien arose from the power to issue a writ of elegit, by statute of 13 Ed. I (1286), c. 18. The right to extend the land fixed the lien upon it. The reason was, lands answered for feudal duties, and a new tenant could not be forced upon the lord.[4]

Judgments rendered in the courts of the United States are liens upon the defendant's realty in all cases where similar judgments of the State courts are made liens by the law of the State.[5] See ADDENDA.

The lien of a judgment is co-extensive with the territorial limits of the court in which the judgment is rendered.[6]

Judgment-docket. A public record intended to afford purchasers and subsequent incumbrancers reliable information in regard to the existence or lien of judgments.

If the entry of a judgment is wrong in name, amount, or time, a third person who does not know of the error, will be protected against loss from having acted upon the reliability of the record statements.[7] See IDEM, Sonans.

See AMENDMENT, 1; CONFESSION, 1; CONVICTION; CREDITOR; DEBT; DECREE; DEFAULT; DEMURRER; EXECUTION, 3; JOINT AND SEVERAL; MERGER, 2; OPEN, 1 (4); PREJUDICE, Without; PRÆSUMPTIO, Omnia; RECOVERY; RENDER, 4; REVERSAL; REVIEW, 2; SATISFACTION; SIGN; TERM, 4; TERRE-TENANT; VALID.

JUDICATURE. The state or profession of those employed in the administration of justice; judiciary; jurisdiction; a tribunal.

"Parliament was originally a court of judicature."

Judicature Acts. Statutes of 36 and 37 Vict. (1873), c. 66, and of 38 and 39 Vict. c. 77, with their supplements.

These statutes made important changes in the organization of the courts, and in principles of procedure. The first went into effect Nov. 1, 1875.[8] See COURTS, of England.

[1] Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 79 (1874); Moore v. Town of Edgefield, 32 F. R. 501 (1887), cases.

[2] Freeman, Judgments, § 576, cases.

[3] Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 464 (1880), cases.

[4] Morsell v. First Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 360 (1875), cases; Shrew v. Jones, 2 McLean, 78 (1840).

[5] Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 438 (1862), cases.

[6] Lombard v. Bayard, 1 Wall. Jr. 196 (1848).

[7] Appeal of Nat. Bank of Northumberland, 100 Pa. 497 (1882); Moore v. McKinley, 60 Iowa, 373 (1882).

[8] Preface to 15 Eng. Rep., by Moak; 2 Law Q. Rev. 1-11 (1886).

JUDICIAL. Whatever emanates from a judge as such, or proceeds from a court of justice.[1]

Pertaining to the administration of justice by a judge or court; also, authorized by law.

Extra-judicial. Outside of lawful procedure; emanating from a person who is a judge but not from him as a judge; not sanctioned by law.

As, judicial or a judicial — act or action, admission or confession, authority, capacity, circuit, cognizance, comity, construction, day, decision or determination, department, dictum, discretion, district, document, ermine, notice, oath, office or officer, opinion, power, proceeding, proof, question, record, report, sale, separation, trial, writ, qq. v.

Extra-judicial is applied, almost exclusively, to an act or action, an admission or a confession, a decision or an opinion, and to an oath.

Judicial act. An act done in the exercise of judicial power: an act performed by a court, touching the rights of parties, or property, brought before it by voluntary appearance or by the prior action of ministerial officers.[2] See MINISTERIAL.

A "judicial act" determines what the law is, and what the rights of parties are, with reference to transactions already had. A "legislative act" prescribes what the law shall be in future cases.[3]

Judicial action. What shall be adjudged between litigants, and with which is the right of the case, is judicial action, by hearing and determining it.[4]

Where any power is conferred upon a court, to be exercised by it as a court, in the manner and with the formalities used in its ordinary proceedings, the action of the court is to be regarded as judicial, irrespective of the original nature of the power.[5]

Judicial action is the application to persons or things of legal sequences from facts agreed or judicially ascertained. There must therefore be parties, an issue, and a judgment.[6]

[1] Re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 82, 84 (1860), Selden, J.

[2] Flournoy v. Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 173-74 (1861).

[3] Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 761 (1878), Field, J.; Mabry v. Baxter, 11 Heisk. 690 (1872).

[4] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 718 (1838), Baldwin, J.

[5] Tindal v. Drake, 60 Ala. 177 (1877), Stone, J. See also Re Saline County Subscription, 45 Mo. 53 (1869); Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 495 (1865); Re Zborowski, 66 id. 97 (1877).

Judicial power. The power of interpreting law — of declaring what the law is or has been.[1]

"The judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. . . . The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;" — to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls; — to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; — to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party; — to Controversies between two or more States; — between a State and Citizen of another State; — between Citizens of different States; — between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.[2]

This provision embraces alike civil and criminal cases. A case "arises" under the Constitution, a law, or a treaty, when its correct decision depends upon the construction of either. Cases arising under the laws are such as grow out of the legislation of Congress, whether they constitute the right or privilege, or claim or protection, or defense of the party, in whole or in part, by whom they are asserted. A case may arise out of the implication of the law.[3]

How jurisdiction shall be acquired by the inferior courts, whether it shall be original or appellate, and the manner of procedure in its exercise, are not prescribed. These subjects are remitted without check or limitation to the wisdom of Congress.[4]

Except in the cases in which the Supreme Court is given by the Constitution original jurisdiction, the judicial power is to be exercised as Congress may direct.[5]

A proceeding to ascertain the compensation for land taken for a public use is a "suit at law," within the meaning of the Constitution and acts conferring jurisdiction on the Federal courts.[6]

See CASE, 2; COURTS, United States; POWER, 3.

JUDICIARY. 1. Pertaining to the department of government which expounds the laws.

2. The body of officers who administer the law; the judges taken collectively; the bench. Frequently spoken of as the Federal and the State judiciary.

Elective judiciary. When the judges of the courts of a State are chosen by popular vote they are said to constitute an "elective judiciary." Opposed, appointed judiciary. See JUDGE.

Judiciary Act. The act of Congress of September 24, 1789, under which the Federal courts were originally organized.[1]

The bill was prepared by Oliver Ellsworth.

The wisdom and forethought with which the act was drawn have been the admiration of succeeding generations. It remains to the present day, with a few unimportant changes, the foundation of our system of judicature, and the law which confers, governs, controls, and limits the powers of all the Federal courts, except the Supreme Court, and which largely regulates the exercise of its powers.[2]

JUDICIUM. See JUDGMENT.

JUMP BAIL. A colloquial expression describing the act of the principal in a bail-bond in violating the condition of the obligation by failing to do the thing stipulated, as, not appearing in court on a particular day to abide the event of a suit or the order of court, but, instead, withdrawing or fleeing from the jurisdiction.

JUNIOR. 1. Although usually attached to a person's name, is not regarded as a part thereof.

"Junior" and "senior" are words of description, constitute no part of a name, and may be added or omitted in different counts in an indictment without affecting its sufficiency.[3] See NAME, 1.

2. Younger; opposed to senior: as, junior counsel.

3. Younger in time; later or more recent; opposed to prior: as, a junior judgment, execution, writ, creditor, patent, survey.

JURA. See JUS.

JURAL. Pertaining to natural or positive right.[4]

JURAT. From the Latin juratum, sworn; the emphatic word in the Latin form of the certificate to an affidavit or deposition that it was sworn to.

The common form is "Sworn to (or affirmed) and subscribed before me this —— day of ——, 1889." See AFFIDAVIT.

---

[1] [Wolfe v. M'Caull, 76 Va. 880 (1881).

[2] Constitution, Art. III. sec. 1, 2.

[3] Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 379 (1821), Marshall, C. J.; Osbourn v. United States Bank, 9 id. 820 (1824); Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 264 (1879); The City of Panama, 101 id. 460 (1879); Manhattan R. Co. v. Mayor of New York, 18 F. R. 195 (1883); 2 Story, Const. § 1647.

[4] Mayor of Nashville v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 251 (1867), Swayne, J.

[5] New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 141 (1880), Harlan, J. See Ames v. Kansas, 111 id. 463-72 (1884), cases; 65 Barb. 448; 55 N. Y. 150.

[6] Searl v. School District, 124 U. S. 199 (1888), cases; Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Jones, 29 F. R. 193 (1886).

[1] See 1 St. L. 73.

[2] United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 414 (1865), Miller, J.; Jones v. Foreman, 66 Ga. 377 (1881).

[3] Geraghty v. State, 110 Ind. 104 (1886): 59 id. 499; 19 Paige, 177; 7 Johns. 549; 17 Pick. 200; 131 Mass. 184.

[4] [Webster's Dict.

JURE; JURIS. See Jus.

JURIDICAL. Pertaining to the distribution of justice; used or recognized in courts of justice.[1] Opposed, non-juridical; as, that Sunday is a non-juridical day.

JURISCONSULT. The juris consulti, or jurisconsults, were experts in the law, resorted to by all persons concerned in the administration of justice, both officials and advocates, and even private persons who wanted advice as to their legal rights.[2]

Often, especially in earlier times, they were elderly men who, after passing through the series of political distinctions, found an agreeable occupation for their advanced years in giving to their fellow-citizens the benefit of their knowledge and experience.[3]

2. A person who is familiar with international or public law.

JURISDICTION.[4] 1. Governmental authority.

In extradition treaties, more than mere physical, territorial, quasi territorial, or treaty jurisdiction; has the enlarged meaning which is equivalent to "authority, cognizance, or power of the courts."[5] See State, 3 (2); Territory, 1.

2. Power to hear and determine a cause.[6]

Power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between parties to a suit, to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them.[6]

Relates to the exercise of judicial powers.[7]

Refers to the power of the court over the parties, the subject-matter, the res or property in contest, and the authority of the court to render the judgment or decree which it assumes to make.[8]

By jurisdiction over the "subject-matter" is meant the nature of the cause of action or relief sought; and this is conferred by the sovereign authority which organizes the court, and is to be sought for in the general nature of its powers or in the authority specially conferred. Jurisdiction of the "person" is obtained by the service of process, or by the voluntary appearance of the party in the progress of the cause. Jurisdiction of the "res" is obtained by seizure under process of the court, whereby it is held to abide such order as the court may make concerning it.[1] See Notice, 1, Judicial.

Hence, want of jurisdiction may be shown as to the subject-matter, the person, or, in proceedings in rem, as to the thing.[2]

Any movement by a court is the exercise of jurisdiction. . . If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction.[3]

Jurisdiction is coram judice whenever a case is presented which brings the power into action.[4]

Opposed, non-jurisdiction: the want of jurisdiction.

Jurisdictional. Concerning, also exhibiting, the power to hear and determine a cause; opposed to non-jurisdictional: as, a jurisdictional amount, fact, limit, question; non-jurisdictional facts.[5]

Original jurisdiction. Jurisdiction conferred upon, or inherent in, a court in the first instance. Appellate jurisdiction. Power to review the final judgment, order or decree, of some inferior court.[6]

The essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction is, that it revises and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted, and does not create that cause. It implies that the subject-matter has been already instituted and acted upon by some other court whose judgment or proceedings are to be revised.[7]

Exclusive jurisdiction. Jurisdiction confined to a particular tribunal or grade of courts. Concurrent or co-ordinate jurisdiction. Exists co-extensively and contemporaneously in courts of equal or of different grade or systems.

Exclusive jurisdiction is necessarily original, though original jurisdiction is not necessarily exclusive.[8]

The rule that among courts of concurrent jurisdiction the one which first obtains jurisdiction has the exclusive right to decide every question arising in the case, is limited to suits between the same parties or privies, seeking the same relief, and to such questions

---

[1] [Webster's Dic.

[2] Hadley, Rom. Law, 61, 59; Cushing, Rom. Law, §§ 5-6; Maine, Anc. Law, 35-38.

[3] L. jus, right; dicere, to proclaim.

[4] Exp. Vogt, 18 Int. Rev. Rec. 18.

[5] United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. *709 (1832), Baldwin, J.; Cornell v. Williams, 20 Wall. 249 (1873).

[6] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. *718 (1838), Baldwin, J.

[7] Reid v. Morton, 119 Ill. 130 (1886).

[8] Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 316 (1870), Miller, J.; 19 Cent. Law J. 102-4 (1884), cases; 25 id. 435 (1887), cases.

[1] Cooper v. Reynolds, ante.

[2] Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 461-68 (1873), cases.

[3] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, ante.

[4] United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. *709 (1832). See also 2 How. 338; 7 Saw. 385; 17 F. R. 724; 25 Ala. 91; 71 id. 477; 11 Ark. 544; 26 id. 436; 10 Cal. 292; 43 id. 368; 44 id. 88; 16 Fla. 332; 54 Iowa, 79, 157; 17 La. An. 70; 27 id. 71; 57 Me. 154; 3 Metc., Mass., 462; 74 Mo. 423; 34 N. J. L. 422; 39 id. 262; 53 N. Y. 450; 72 id. 231; 36 Barb. 244; 13 Pa. 630; 32 id. 357; 42 Tex. 339; 43 id. 440; 44 Wis. 454.

[5] 106 U. S. 581, 582, 635.

[6] See Exp. Batesville, &c. R. Co., 39 Ark. 87 (1882).

[7] 2 Story, Const. § 1761; Piqua Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 390 (1856); Auditor of State v. Atchison, &c. R. Co., 6 Kan. 505 (1870).

[8] Commonwealth v. O'Connell, 8 Gray, 465 (1857).

as arise ordinarily and properly in the progress of the first suit brought.[1]

The forbearance which courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, administered under a single system, exercise toward each other, whereby conflicts are avoided, by avoiding interference with the process of each other, is a principle of comity, with perhaps no higher sanction than the utility which comes from concord; but between State courts and those of the United States, it is something more. It is a principle of right and of law, and therefore of necessity. It leaves nothing to discretion or mere convenience. These courts do not belong to the same system, so far as their jurisdiction is concurrent; and although they co-exist in the same place, they are independent and have no common superior. They exercise jurisdiction in different planes.[2]

Where a court, whether State or Federal, has legal custody of persons or property, the courts of the other jurisdiction will not arrest such persons or property. The possession of the officer is the possession of the court, and such action would invade the jurisdiction of the court.[3]

Where, in attachment proceedings in a State court, the sheriff is unable to make actual seizure because the property is in the possession of a United States marshal under an attachment from a Federal court, the creditor, though residing in the same State with the defendant, may, upon service of notice of his claim upon the marshal, intervene in the Federal court, and, upon showing a properly adjudicated claim, secure a right to share in the proceeds of the sale of the property.[4]

Limited or special jurisdiction. Jurisdiction which is confined to particular causes, as, those involving demands for money up to a certain sum. General jurisdiction. Extends to all cases comprised within a class or classes of causes, in particular to causes of a civil nature.[5]

Inferior jurisdiction is opposed to superior jurisdiction, civil to criminal jurisdiction, equitable and statutory to common-law jurisdiction.[6]

In chancery, ordinary jurisdiction is that wherein the common law is observed; extraordinary, that of equity and good conscience. See CHANCERY.

Where there is a lack of jurisdiction, a judgment is void; where there is a wrongful or defective exercise of the power, the judgment is voidable,[1] q. v.

Jurisdiction once acquired is effectual for all purposes, and exclusive.[2] But the court must proceed according to the established modes governing the class to which the case belongs, and must not transcend the law in the extent or character of its judgment.[3]

Jurisdiction having attached in the original case, everything done within the power of that jurisdiction, when collaterally questioned, is to be held conclusive of the rights of the parties, unless impeached for fraud. Every intendment is to be made to support the proceeding. Infinite confusion would ensue were the rule otherwise.[4]

The record of a court of special jurisdiction must show its jurisdiction: nothing is presumed in its favor; otherwise, as to a court of general jurisdiction.[5] See further APPARERE, De non, etc.

Jurisdiction is given by the law; consent can neither give nor take it away,[6] — except, perhaps, as to jurisdiction over the person.[7]

Where there is collusion to give jurisdiction, the court will dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction.[8]

When a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed without a reservation as to pending cases, such cases fall with the law.[9]

See COURT; JUDGMENT; JUDICIAL, Power; JUDEX, 2, Boni, etc.; PROHIBITION, 1.

JURISPRUDENCE.[10] The science of law; the practical science of giving a wise interpretation to the laws and of making a just application of them to cases.[11] Whence jurisprudential.

Comparative jurisprudence. The study of different systems of laws, or the laws of different nations.

Equity jurisprudence. That portion of remedial justice which is administered in courts or equity.[12]

[1] Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 345 (1865); Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294 (1884), cases; Smith v. Bauer, 9 Col. 380 (1886).

[2] Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 182 (1884), Matthews, J.; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. 516 (1858).

[3] Senior v. Pierce, 31 F. R. 627 (1887), cases; Melvin v. Robinson, ib. 634 (1887), cases; Judd v. Bankers', &c. Tel. Co., ib. 183 (1887), cases.

[4] Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131 (1888), cases, Matthews, J.

[5] See Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 283 (1883).

[6] As to conditional statutory jurisdiction, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 481–506 (1887), cases.

[1] Gray v. Bowles, 74 Mo. 423 (1881).

[2] French v. Hay, 22 Wall. 253 (1874), cases; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 206 (1876), cases.

[3] Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 282 (1876), cases; United States v. Walker, 109 id. 267 (1883).

[4] Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 250 (1873), Swayne, J.

[5] See Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 365–66 (1873), cases; Mousseau's Will, 30 Minn. 205 (1883), cases; Dick v. Wilson, 10 Oreg. 490 (1883), cases; Wade v. Handcock, 76 Va. 625 (1882), cases.

[6] Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 451 (1874), cases; Santom v. Ballard, 133 Mass. 465 (1882).

[7] Grimmett v. Askew, 48 Ark. 156 (1886); 49 N. Y. 208.

[8] Williams v. Nottawa, 104 U. S. 209 (1882); Coffin v. Haggin, 13 Rep. 547 (1882): Act 3 March, 1875, § 5.

[9] Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 401 (1878), cases; Sherman v. Grinnell, 123 id. 690 (1887).

[10] L. jus, right; providens, foreseeing.

[11] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[12] [1 Story, Eq. § 25; Jackson v. Nimmo, 3 Lea, 669 (1879).

Medical jurisprudence. See MEDICINE, Medical, etc.

JURIST. One versed in the science of law.

Juristic; juristical. Pertaining to the science of law; concerning a jurist, or jurisprudence.

A "jurist," if anything more than a fine word for a lawyer, means a lawyer who is mainly eminent through his familiarity with the theoretic side of the law. Savigny and Austin, for instance, were jurists in this sense. But a judge who has a wide practical acquaintance with cases, and knows how to administer the law found in them, is more than a "jurist:" he is an excellent lawyer and judge.[1]

JUROR. See JURY.

JURY.[2] A body of persons sworn, or affirmed, to decide a matter of fact in controversy in a court of justice.

A body of men composed of the peers or equals of the person whose rights it is selected or summoned to determine; that is, of his neighbors, fellows, associates, persons having the same legal status in society.[3] See PEER.

The persons are, individually, jurors or jurymen.[4]

The term usually imports a tribunal of twelve men presided over by a court hearing the allegations, evidence, and arguments of the parties; a common or petit jury,[5] q. v.

But it may import more or less than twelve, as when the reference is to a grand jury, a coroner's or a sheriff's jury.[6]

The common-law jury of twelve persons has seldom been allowed in courts of special, inferior, or limited jurisdiction, such as police courts, courts of justices of the peace, probate courts, courts of equity, or in reviewing courts.[7]

Grand jury. Twenty-four [twenty-three] freeholders returned by the sheriff to each session of the court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery, to inquire, present, and do all other things commanded them.[8]

Having been first instructed in their duties by the judge, they withdraw to hear accusations by bills of indictment, whether there is sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer before the petit jury. They inquire for the body of the county; and find a bill to be "true" or "not true" by vote of at least twelve members.[1]

The institution serves to protect persons from being put to the trouble and expense of a trial upon groundless accusation; constitutes a security against vindicative prosecutions by the government, political partisans, or private enemies.[2]

The institution of the grand jury is of very ancient origin. For a long period its powers were not clearly defined; it seems at first to have both accused and tried public offenders. At the time of the settlement of this country, it was an accusing tribunal only, without whose action no person charged with a felony, except in certain special causes, could be put upon trial. In the struggles which arose in England between the powers of the king and the rights of the subject, it often stood as a barrier against persecution in his name. Thus it came to be regarded as an institution by which the subject was rendered secure against oppression from unfounded prosecutions of the crown. In this country, from the popular character of our institutions, there has seldom been any contest between the government and the citizens which required the existence of the grand jury as a protection against oppressive action of the government. Yet the institution was adopted and is continued from considerations similar to those which give it its chief value in England, and is designed as a means, not only of bringing to trial persons accused of public offenses upon just grounds, but also as a means of protecting the citizen against unfounded accusation, whether it comes from the government, or is prompted by partisan passion or private enmity. No person shall be required, according to the fundamental law of the country, except in cases mentioned, to answer for any of the higher crimes, unless this body, consisting of not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-three good and lawful men, selected from the body of the district, shall declare, upon careful deliberation, under the solemnity of an oath, that there is good reason for his accusation and trial.[3]

While there is now no danger to the citizen from the oppressions of a monarch, or from any form of executive power, it remains true that the grand jury is as valuable as ever in securing individual citizens from an open and public accusation of crime, and from the trouble, expense, and anxiety of a public trial before a probable cause is established by the presentment and indictment of a grand jury.[4]

Objection to the qualification of grand jurors, or to the mode of summoning or impanelling them, must be

---

[1] The Nation, No. 935, p. 456 (May 31, 1883).

[2] F. jurée, a body of sworn men: L. jurare, to bind by oath.

[3] Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 308 (1879), Strong, J.

[4] Fife v. Commonwealth, 29 Pa. 439 (1857).

[5] See State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 63–64 (1885); 57 Ill. 172; 16 Ind. 496; 70 Iowa, 51–52; 14 Minn. 439; 12 N. Y. 190; 2 Barb. 33; 17 Nev. 370; 4 Ohio St. 177; 2 Wis. 28; 57 id. 75; 2 Dall. 335.

[6] Fitchburg R. Co. v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 3 Cush. 85 (1849); Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 33 (1872).

[7] State v. City of Topeka, 36 Kan. 86 (1886).

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 302.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 302.

[2] 2 Story, Const. § 1785.

[3] Charge to Grand Jury, 2 Saw. 668–69 (1872), Field, J.; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 555 (1884); Exp. Bain, 121 id. 10 (1887).

[4] Exp. Bain, 121 U. S. 12 (1887), Harlan, J., quoting Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 329 (1857).

made by a motion to quash, or by a plea in abatement, before pleading in bar.[1]

A grand jury is a component part of the court, and is under its general supervision and control. Individual jurors may be punished for contempt consisting in willful misconduct or neglect of duty; but they are independent in their actions in determining questions of fact, and no investigation can ever be made as to how a juror voted, or what opinion he expressed on a matter before him.

Investigations before a grand jury must be made in accordance with the well-established rules of evidence, and it must hear the best legal proofs of which the case admits.

Whether a witness is an expert must be first determined by the court.

Evidence of confessions should not be admitted, except under the direction of the court, or, perhaps, unless the prosecuting officer makes the preliminary inquiries necessary to render such testimony admissible.

Since they are sworn "to inquire and a true presentment make," they may order the production of other evidence than that adduced by the prosecution, which they believe exists and is within reach.

A witness's testimony before a grand jury is not a confidential communication.

It is a high contempt of court for a person voluntarily to communicate with a grand jury with reference to a matter which may come before them.

The court is the only proper source from which a grand jury may obtain advice as to a question of law.

Courts sometimes permit the district attorney, or his assistant, to go before a grand jury, when requested by the foreman or when necessary for a proper administration of justice. These officers may then assist in examining witnesses; may advise in matters of procedure, according to well-settled practice; may read statutes upon which bills of indictment are founded; but they may not advise as to the sufficiency of evidence.[2]

While grand jurors are sworn to secrecy, the later doctrine is that, to prevent justice from being defeated, a member may testify what evidence was given before the body.[3]

Local statutes regulate the qualifications, summoning, organization, and duties of grand juries.[4]

Common, petit, or traverse jury. Common jury. Originally, a jury summoned to try matters of an ordinary nature.

Not for each separate cause, as at first, but consisting of one panel for every cause, of forty-eight to seventy-two jurors, twelve of whose names are drawn for the jury itself.[5]

Petit jury. The lesser jury, which passes finally upon the truth of the fact in dispute; a common jury of twelve men.

Traverse jury. The jury which passes upon the truth of the facts traversed or denied; a common or petit jury.

Mixed jury. A right to which every colored man is entitled is, that in the selection of jurors to pass upon his life, liberty, or property, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against them because of color.

This is a different thing from a right to have the jury composed in part of colored men. A mixed jury in a particular case is not essential to the equal protection of the laws.[1] See CITIZEN, Amendment, XIV.

Special or struck jury. Originally, drawn in causes of too great nicety for the discussion of ordinary freeholders, or where the sheriff was suspected of partiality.[2]

The sheriff produced his freeholder's book, and an officer took indifferently forty-eight names. From these names each side struck off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four were returned upon the panel, from which a jury of twelve men were selected.[3]

Of rare occurrence. The method of selection is regulated by local law, and varies as to details in different jurisdictions. In some States the jury is granted as of course upon application; but generally it must appear that a fair trial cannot be otherwise had, or that the intricacy or importance of the case requires men specially qualified for the service.[4]

Trial by jury. A trial by a common-law jury, a body of twelve men.[4]

A trial by one's peers; secured, originally, by Magna Charta. The bulwark of the subject's liberties.[5]

In the time of Henry II, trial by twelve men generally superseded trial by an indefinite number of suitors of court, which was in common use in Saxon times.[6]

The very spirit of trial by jury is, that the experience, practical knowledge of affairs, and common sense of jurors may be appealed to, to mediate the inconsistencies of the evidence, and reconcile the extravagances of the opposing theories of the parties.[7]

"In courts at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial

[1] United States v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 71 (1883), cases.

[2] United States v. Kilpatrick, 16 F. R. 765 (1883), Dick, J.

[3] State v. Grady, 12 Mo. Ap. 363 (1882), cases; 4 Crim. Law Mag. 171-87 (1883), cases; 21 Cent. Law J. 104-6 (1885), cases and statutes.

[4] See generally Thompson & M., Juries, Ch. XXVII-XXXIV; Proffatt, Jury Trials, §§ 41-61.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 357.

[1] Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 323 (1879).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 357.

[3] See Thompson & M., Juries, §§ 12, 14, cases; Proffatt, Jury Trials, §§ 71-75, cases; Abb. N. Y. Dig., tit. Trial, §§ 196-206; 1 T. & H. Pr. (Pa.) § 636.

[4] People v. Justices, 74 N. Y. 407 (1878).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 349; 4 id. 414. See also State v. Kemp, 34 Minn. 63-64 (1885).

[6] 12 Alb. Law J. 143. See generally 11 Am. Law. Rev. 24-50 (1876); 1 Kan. Law J. 100-3 (1885); ib. 357; 4 id. 161 (1886); 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 252-72.

[7] Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 334 (1882), Matthews, J. See also Sioux City, &c. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 664 (1873), Hunt, J.

by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." [1]

This relates to trials in the Federal courts; the States are left to regulate trials in their courts in their own way. The Constitution only secures trials in State courts according to the settled course of judicial proceedings. [2]

The right does not extend to cases of equity jurisdiction; as, in claims for damages for alleged infringement of letters-patent. [3]

An application for trial by a jury in a patent case by a defendant against whom an injunction is asked may be granted in the discretion of the court; but if the question can be determined more properly by a chancellor, the application should be refused. [4]

The constitutions of the several States provide that "trial by jury shall be as heretofore, and the right thereof remain inviolate."

The legislature may withhold trial by jury from new offenses created by statute and unknown to the common law, as in the case of the Sunday Law, and of numerous enactments in the nature of police regulations for preserving the peace; from new jurisdictions created by statute and clothed with no common-law powers, as, in Pennsylvania, in the case of the Justices' Hundred Dollar Law, and of the authorities that enforce the liability of counties for property destroyed by mobs; from proceedings which, though in common-law courts, are out of the course of the common law, as in motions for summary relief against judgments; and, in equity suits. Proceedings in orphans' courts, and many in quarter sessions, are other examples. Trial may be denied to municipal corporations. In these instances it is no invasion of the rights of the citizen to provide some other mode of trying contested facts, because "heretofore," that is, at the common law which antedated our constitutions, trial by jury did not exist in such cases. [5]

The meaning is that a jury trial is to be preserved in all cases in which it existed prior to the adoption of the constitution. The right is preserved, not extended; it remains "inviolate" — that is, not disturbed or limited, [6] as ample and complete as when the constitution was adopted. [1]

The provision is intended to secure a benefit or right to a party to a suit which he may avail himself of or waive at its election; and the legislature may make reasonable laws regulating the mode in which the right shall be enjoyed. [2]

The right "to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county wherein the offense shall have been committed," is waived by the accused, when, upon his application, the place of trial is changed to another county. [3]

An accused person cannot waive the right unless waiver is expressly authorized. [4] See WAIVER.

See CONVICTION, Summary; DEFENSE, 2, Affidavit of.

Questions of law are to be determined by the court; questions of fact by the jury. In this regard the authority of each is absolute. [5]

The jury should take the law as laid down by the court, and give it full effect; but its application to the facts, and the facts themselves, it is for them to determine. [6] The court may not enter their distinctive province. These are the check and balance which give to trial by jury its value. [6]

Where the facts are undisputed, their effect is for the judgment of the court; where different minds may honestly draw different conclusions from the facts, as where care or negligence is to be inferred, the question is for the jury. [7]

What is said by the court as to the weight of evidence is advisory, in nowise intended to fetter the exercise of the juror's independent judgment. With this limitation, it is the right and duty of the court to aid them by recalling the testimony to their recollection, by collecting its details, by suggesting grounds of preference where there is contradiction, by directing their attention to the most important facts, by eliminating the true points of inquiry, by resolving the evidence, however complicated, into its simpler elements, and by showing the bearing of its several parts and their combined effect, stripped of every consideration which might otherwise mislead or confuse them. How this duty shall be performed depends upon the discretion of the judge. Without this aid, chance, mistake, or caprice may determine the result. [6]

In civil cases, the jury are to find for the party in whose favor the evidence preponderates. In criminal

[1] Constitution, Amd. VII. Ratified, Dec. 15, 1791.

[2] Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 92 (1875), cases, Waite, C. J.; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 id. 296 (1877); Callan v. Wilson, 127 id. 547 (1888).

[3] Herdsman v. Lewis, 20 Blatch. 206 (1882); Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 788 (1869); Cawood Patent, 94 U. S. 695 (1876); Marsh v. Seymour, 97 id. 348 (1877); 2 Flip. 712; 13 Rep. 129; 68 Pa. 130; 73 id. 169.

[4] Keyes v. Pueblo Smelting, &c. Co., 31 F. R. 560 (1887).

[5] Rhines v. Clark, 51 Pa. 101 (1865), Woodward, C. J.; Haines v. Levin, ib. 414 (1865); Appeal of Borough of Dunmore, 52 id. 374 (1866); La Croix v. County Commissioners, 50 Conn. 327 (1882), cases.

[6] Re Rolfs, 30 Kan. 762 (1883). Brewer, J. Refers to Byers v. Commonwealth, 42 Pa. 94–96 (1862), Strong, J., as presenting a "clear and forcible discussion of the subject." See also Van Swartow v. Commonwealth, 94 Pa. 134 (1854), Black, C. J.; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 552–55 (1888), cases.

[1] State v. City of Topeka, 36 Kan. 76 (1886), Valentine, J.

[2] Foster v. Morse, 132 Mass. 355 (1882), cases.

[3] Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69 (1883); ib. 74–75, cases.

[4] Wartner v. State, 102 Ind. 52–53 (1884), cases. On abolishing trial by jury, see 20 Am. Law Reg. 661 (1881). The system of jury trial, 21 Am. Law Rev. 859–68 (1887), Hon. Samuel F. Miller.

[5] Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 439 (1875). As to questions of fact for the court, see 27 Cent. Law J. 4–8 (1888), cases.

[6] Hickman v. Jones, 9 Wall. 201–2 (1869), cases. Swayne, J.

[7] Sioux City, &c. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 663 (1873). Hunt, J.; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Sayder, 98 U. S. 398 (1878).

trials, the accused is entitled to the legal presumption in favor of innocence, which, in doubtful cases, is always sufficient to turn the scales in his favor.[1] See further DOUBT, Reasonable.

The jury are no more the judges of the law in a criminal case, upon the plea of not guilty, than they are in a civil case, tried upon the general issue. In each case, their verdict, when general, is necessarily compounded of law and fact. In each, they determine the law and the fact. In each, they have the physical power to disregard the law, as laid down by the court. But they have not the moral right to decide the law according to their own notions or pleasure. On the contrary, the most sacred constitutional right of every person accused of a crime is that the jury should respond as to the facts and the court as to the law. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the law; and it is the duty of the jury to follow the law, as laid down. This is the only protection of the citizen. If the jury were at liberty to settle the law for themselves, the effect would be, not only that the law itself would be uncertain, from the different views juries might take of it; but, in case of error, there would be no remedy for the injured party; for the court would not have any right to review the law as it had been settled by the jury. Indeed, it would be almost impracticable to ascertain what the law, as settled by the jury, actually was. On the other hand, if the court should err, in laying down the law, remedy may be had by a motion for a new trial or by a writ of error. Every person accused as a criminal has a right to be tried by the fixed law of the land.[2]

The jurors have the power to give a general verdict upon the general issue, which includes the question of law, as well as of fact; but when, by pleading, special verdict or demurrer to evidence, the law is separated from the fact, they have no right to decide the law, but must follow it as laid down by the court.[3]

The right of a trial by a jury in a criminal case is not more distinctly secured than it is in a civil case. The right exists only in respect to a disputed fact. Where the facts constituting guilt are undisputed, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict of guilty.[4]

The jury judge of the law in criminal cases. Having the power, they have a right to give a verdict contrary to the instructions of the court upon the law. The court may present the considerations which should induce them to follow its instructions, but should not give a binding instruction which it would be powerless to enforce by granting a new trial if the instruction should be disregarded. This power is one of the most valuable securities guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. Judges may be partial and oppressive, from political or personal prejudice.[1]

By reason of the experience of the judge the jury will doubtless highly regard his opinion, and incline to adopt it rather than a contrary view presented by counsel; but his instructions are only advisory, the jury are not bound to follow them; and hence the defendant may present views and interpretations of the law differing from those stated by the court. The argument must of course be confined to the issue, and be presented in a respectful manner; and the court may restrict the time within reasonable bounds.[2]

It is not improper to instruct the jury that if they can say upon their oaths that they know the law better than the court itself, they have a right to do so; but that before saying this it is their duty to reflect whether from their study and experience they are better qualified to judge of the law than the court.[3]

The reasons for constituting the jury the "judges of the law and the fact" in criminal cases, seem to have been: 1. Having the power to pass upon the law by a general verdict, their right to do so necessarily followed. 2. Up to the time of the prosecutions in England for seditious utterances, the right, while admitted to exist, was seldom exercised, but the condition of affairs in the time of Judge Jeffreys caused a vigorous assertion of the right.[4]

In capital cases, the jurors are kept together until discharged; but pending a trial for a misdemeanor, they may be permitted by the court, without the knowledge of the defendant, to separate, without vitiating their verdict.[5]

Facts found by a jury may be revised by a motion for a new trial, or by a writ of error.

Jury box. The space set apart for a jury while engaged in a trial.

A revolving barrel is a "box," within the requirement of a statute that names of jurors, before being drawn, shall be placed in a box and shaken together.[6]

Jury commissioner. An officer who provides panels of jurors for the successive terms of a court.

---

[1] Lilienthal's Tobacco v. United States, 97 U. S. 266 (1877), Clifford, J.

[2] United States v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 243 (1835), Story, Judge.

[3] Stettinius v. United States, 5 Cranch, C. C. 573, 584–89 (1839), cases, Cranch, C. J. See also United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 108 (1830); State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 19–31 (1849), cases; Robinson v. State, 66 Ga. 518 (1881); Malone v. State, ib. 542–43 (1881).

[4] United States v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 209–10 (1873), Hunt, J. Contra, United States v. Taylor, 3 McCrary, 300–5 (1882), cases, McCrary, J.

[1] Kane v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 525–27 (1879), Sharswood, C. J.

[2] State v. Verry, 36 Kan. 420 (1887), cases, Johnston, J.

[3] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 25 (1887), cases.

[4] See 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 313, et seq.

"The jurors were necessarily the judges in all cases of life, limb, crime, and disherison of the heir in capite. The king could not decide, for he would then have been both prosecutor and judge, neither could his justices, for they represent him." Bracton, 119; 2 Litt. § 368; 3 Coke, Litt. 288*a*.

See generally 3 Cr. Law Mag. 484 (1883), Wade, C. J.; 4 id. 15–27 (1882); 17 Am. Law Rev. 398–410 (1883); 26 Alb. Law J. 404 (1882).

[5] United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 374 (1879), cases; Commonwealth v. Walsh, 132 Mass. 10 (1882), cases. On improper interference with juries, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 666–73 (1887), cases.

[6] Commonwealth v. Bacon, 135 Mass. 525 (1883).

Jury list. A paper containing the names, occupations, and place of residence of a panel of jurors.

Jury process. The writ by which a jury is summoned.

Jury wheel. A revolving receptacle in which are placed, at designated intervals, the names of persons qualified for service as jurors, and from which panels are drawn.

See further ARRAY; CALL, 3; CHALLENGE, 4; CHARGE, 2 (2, c); CONTEMPT, 1; COUNTRY, 2; ELISOR; EMBRACERY; FOREMAN; IMPARTIAL; INDIFFERENT; INDICTMENT; LABOR, 2; MEDIATAS LINGUAE; OPINION, 2; PAPE; PANEL; PRIVILEGE, 2; PROCESS, 1, Due; PUNISHED, Twice; QUALIFY, 2; RIGHT, 2, Civil Right's Acts; STAND ASIDE; TALES; TRIOR; VAGRANT; VENIRE; VERDICT; VICINAGE; VIEW; WAIVER; WITHDRAWING.

JUS. L. Right; law, in the abstract; justice; jurisprudence. Plural, jura. Other forms are jure, juris. See below.

Lex is law in the concrete sense. See EQUITY.

Alieni juris. See Sui juris.

Apex juris. A subtlety of the law; a legal nicety. A doctrine carried to an extreme of refinement.

Apices juris non sunt jura. Subtleties of the law are not (do not define) rights — law or equity.[1]

Jus accrescendi. Right of survivorship. See SURVIVE, 2.

Jus ad rem. Right to a thing. Jus in re. Right in a thing. Denote, the first, a right without possession — an inchoate right, an incomplete title; the second, a right with possession — a perfected title.

A lien with possession is a jus in re; a lien resting in a contract, a jus ad rem.

In civil law, a jus ad rem obtains mediately and from relation to a particular person; a jus in re, immediately and absolutely, and is the same as against all persons.[2] See RES.

Jus dare. To make the law. Jus dicere. To say what the law is; to apply the law.

Jus dicere, non dare. To declare, not to make, the law. The duty of a judge is to apply the law as made, not to legislate.

The courts administer the law as they find it; they are not to make or modify it. Hence, considerations as to expediency are to be addressed to the law-making body.[3] See HARDSHIP.

Jus dispondendi. The right to part with a thing, — to give property away as the owner pleases. See WILL, 2.

Jus et norma. See USUS, Norma, etc.

Jus fiduciarum. See USE, 2.

Jus gentium. The law of all nations; the law which natural reason establishes among all races of men; also, international law.[1]

Jus mariti. The right of the husband — in the wife's movable property. See Jure uxoris.

Jus personarum. Rights of persons. Jus rerum. Right of things. See Jura.

Jus possessionis. Right of possession.

Jus postlimini. The right of reprisal, — postliminy, q. v.

Jus precarium. See USE, 3, p. 1072.

Jus privatum. Private right: law regulating the affairs of individuals. Juris privati. Of private right. Jus publicum. Public right: law regulating affairs of the state. Juris publici. Of public right.[2]

When private property is "affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati" (Hale, Ld. C. J.). Property becomes clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. In such cases the owner in effect grants to the public an interest in the use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created.[3]

Jus proprietatis. Right of property: proprietorship.

Jus representationis. The right of representation, or of being represented, by another.

Jus scriptum. Written law; statute law. Compare LEX, Scripta.

Jus tertii. Right in a third person.

Thus, a tenant may plead a new attornment; a bailee may show that his bailor has parted with his right.[4]

Jura personarum. Rights of persons. Jura rerum. Rights in things. The rights which concern or are annexed to the persons of men; and such rights as a man may acquire over external objects.[5]

---

[1] See Broom, Max. 188; 2 Story, 143; 5 Conn. 334.

[2] See 2 Bouv. 30; 2 Bl. Com. 312; 20 Wall. 163.

[3] 1 Cranch, 177; 21 Wall. 178; 100 U. S. 288, 406, 738; 108 id. 515; 50 Conn. 189; 1 Bl. Com. 79.

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 43.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 9; 37 Wis. 442, 445.

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 126, 130 (1876), cases. Waite, C. J.

[4] 93 U. S. 580; 2 Pars. Contr. 204.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 122; 2 id. 1.

Jura summa imperii. Supreme rights of dominion.

Jure alluvionis. By right of alluvion. See ALLUVIO.

Jure divino. By Divine right or law.

Jure humano. By human law.

Jure naturæ. By the law of nature.

Jure uxoris. The right of the wife. See Jus mariti.

Juris et de jure. Of right and by right — by law.

Applied to an irrebutable presumption; as, that a man at Rome cannot be at London the same day. Opposed, a presumption juris.[1] See PRESUMPTION.

Juris privati. See Jus privatum.

Strictum jus. Severe right or law; law in its rigor as opposed to equity. Stricti juris. Of strict right. Strictissimi juris. Of the strictest right. Subject to the strictest construction, the most rigorous application, of law.

Applied to a license or a grant highly advantageous to the receiver; to maritime liens (q. v.) which are not extended by construction, analogy, or inference;[2] to a claim against a surety (q. v.), whose obligations are never increased by presumptions and equities.[3]

Sui juris. Of one's own right; of capacity to act for one's self. Opposed, non sui juris: not of one's own right; and, alieni juris: of the right of another — under another's control.

What one sui juris may himself do, he may delegate to another to do for him.[4]

Sui juris cannot be accurately used to denote the possession of any degree of physical or mental power.[5]

Roman citizens were either sui juris (men of their own right), acting for themselves independently of family control, or alieni juris (subject to another's right), subject to the control of one who stood as the head of the family. Both enjoyed alike the rights of freemen.[6]

JUST. 1. Probable; reasonable: as, just cause to make an arrest, to suspect one of crime. See CAUSE, Probable.

2. Fair, adequate, equivalent: as, just compensation, q. v.

In the assessment of property for general taxation, a "just" or equal valuation is more important than an absolutely "true" one; therefore it is no answer to a complaint of unequal valuation, that the property is assessed at its "true cash value."[1]

JUSTICE.[2] 1. Rendering to every man his due.

The dictate of right according to the common consent of mankind generally or of the portion associated in one government or governed by the same principles and morals.[3]

"In a judicial sense, exact conformity to some obligatory law." The doing of justice is, then, the performance toward another of whatever is due him in virtue of a perfect and rigorous right, the execution of which he may demand by forcible means.[4]

In its nature justice is preventive, and remedial.

Every man for an injury done him may have right and justice, freely without sale, fully without denial, and speedily with delay.[5]

A refusal or neglect of justice is remedied by a procedendo, a mandamus, or a prohibition.[6]

Offenses against justice are: embezzling or vacating records; personating others in court; obstructing the execution of process; escape; breach of prison; rescue; receiving stolen goods; common barratry; maintenance; champerty; compounding prosecutions; conspiracy; perjury; bribery; embracery; false verdict; negligence of public officers; oppression by magistrates; extortion by officers,[7] qq. v.

See CONSCIENCE; EQUITY; FUGITIVE; TRIAL, Speedy.

2. A justice of the peace: an inferior judicial officer. See PEACE, Justice of.

3. Is interchanged with judge.

"Circuit justice" and "justice of the circuit" designate the justice of the Supreme Court allotted to a circuit; and "judge," applied generally to any circuit, will also include such justice.[8]

The members of most supreme courts are styled "justices" — chief justice, associate justice, etc. See JUDGE.

JUSTICIAR. See CHANCELLOR.

JUSTIFIABLE. See BATTERY; HOMICIDE.

JUSTIFICATION. Making an act a matter of right.

1. Allegation of a reason why defendant might lawfully do the act complained of.

In libel, common as a plea on the ground of privilege, or of truth and public advantage. The effect

---

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 1232–37; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15 (1).

[2] Vandewater v. Mills, 19 How. 89 (1856).

[3] Leggett v. Humphreys, 21 How. 75 (1858); Smith v. United States, 2 Wall. 235 (1864).

[4] Story, Agency, § 11.

[5] 38 N. Y. 455; 47 id. 317; 63 id. 104; 15 Alb. L. J. 327.

[6] Hadley, Rom. Law, 107, 119.

[1] Dundee Mortgage Trust Investment Co. v. Charlton, 32 F. R. 194 (1887).

[2] L. justitia: justus, rightful.

[3] [Duncan v. Magette, 25 Tex. 253 (1860), Roberts, J.

[4] Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 528 (1851), Scott, J., quoting Burlamaqui.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 141: Magna Charta, c. 29.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 109.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 127.

[8] R. S. § 605.

then is that the plaintiff never had any right of action, because the act charged was lawful.[1] See SLANDER.

2. Proof that bail is sufficient.

Made by oath of the person proposed, that he possesses the qualifications required by law.

K.

K. As an abbreviation, commonly denotes king. Compare Q.

K. B. King's bench, q. v.

K. C. King's council, or counsel, qq. v.

KEEP. Varies in meaning with the connections in which it is found — the context or circumstances.

Keep a gaming table. Implies a use not merely temporary.[2]

Keep a nuisance. See MAINTAIN.

Keep a woman. In popular acceptation, imports an illicit relation.[3]

Keep an inn. Keep a house for the entertainment of travelers and others, for pay.[4]

Keep down interest. Pay interest periodically as it becomes due.[5]

Keep house. May be said of a trader who secretes himself in his house to avoid his creditors.[6]

Keep in repair. See REPAIR.

Keep liquor. Keeping spirituous liquor for sale is having possession and control of it with intent and readiness to make a sale or sales.

This may be a long-continued practice or it may be instantaneous.[7]

Keep open. Implies a readiness to carry on the usual business in a store, saloon, etc.[8]

To allow general access, for purposes of traffic, although the outer entrance is closed.[9]

Keep the peace. To avoid disturbing the peace; to prevent others from breaking the peace.

Keeper. 1. A person placed in charge of attached personalty.[10]

2. One who assists in superintending a gaming-house.[1] See DISORDERLY HOUSE.

3. One who harbors a dog upon his premises is responsible, as keeper of the animal, for injuries done by him.[2]

4. Owner, proprietor. See INN; LIVERY-STABLE; SALOON.

Keeper of the king's conscience. The lord chancellor — formerly an ecclesiastic.

Keeper of the seal. See SEAL, 1.

KENO. See GAME, 2.

KENT, JAMES.

Was born in Putnam county, New York, July 31, 1763, and died December 12, 1847.

His grandfather was a clergyman, his father a lawyer; and both were graduates of Yale college.

He entered Yale in 1777, and was graduated with distinction in 1781. In July, 1779, the students being dispersed by the invasion of New Haven by the British troops, he withdrew to a small town, where he chanced to read a copy of Blackstone's Commentaries, the perusal influencing him in deciding to study law.

He was admitted to the bar in 1785, and began the practice at Poughkeepsie, where he had pursued his studies.

In 1790, and in 1792, he was elected to the legislature from Duchess county. He was an active Federalist, and had the friendship of Jay and Hamilton.

In 1793, he removed to New York city, and in the following year began to deliver lectures in the law department of Columbia college. The attendance upon the course for 1795 did not encourage him to deliver another course. The first three lectures were afterward published, but the sale of copies did not repay the expense of publication.

In 1796, he was appointed one of the two masters in chancery in New York city, and was also re-elected to the legislature; and the next year he was made recorder of the city.

In 1798, he was appointed a judge of the supreme court, in which capacity he continued sixteen years, during ten of which he was chief justice. At that time there were neither reports nor precedents of the court; the judges pronounced their opinions orally and at very irregular intervals; the law itself was embryonic and unsettled. Kent decided cases without delay, and, in cases of importance, delivered written opinions. The most of these opinions have been preserved in the three volumes of Johnson's Cases (1779–1803), the fourteen volumes of Johnson's Reports (1806–1817), and the seven volumes of Johnson's Chancery Reports (1814–1823). The large number of per curiam opinions in eighth Johnson, all of one term, are by him, although not so indicated. "English authorities did not stand high in those feverish times, and this led me," he wrote, "to bear down opposition, or to shame it, by

[1] Steph. Pl. 234; 3 Bl. Com. 306.
[2] United States v. Smith, 4 Cranch, C. C. 660–63 (1835).
[3] Downing v. Wilson, 36 Ala. 719 (1860).
[4] [State v. Stone, 6 Vt. 298 (1834).
[5] Regina v. Hutchinson, 32 E. C. L. *211 (1854).
[6] Cumming v. Baily, 6 Bing. *370 (1830).
[7] State v. Haney, 58 N. H. 379 (1878).
[8] Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 477 (1868).
[9] Commonwealth v. Harrison, 11 Gray, 308 (1858).
[10] See Cutter v. Howe, 122 Mass. 543 (1877).

[1] Stevens v. People, 67 Ill. 590 (1873).
[2] Barrett v. Malden, &c. R. Co., 3 Allen, 101 (1861); Commonwealth v. Palmer, 134 Mass. 537 (1883); Cummings v. Riley, 52 N. H. 369 (1872); Grant v. Ricker, 74 Me. 488 (1883).

exhausting research and overwhelming authority. Our jurisprudence was probably on the whole improved by it. . . The judges were Republicans, kindly disposed to everything French; and this enabled me, without exciting alarm or jealousy, to make free use of such [French] authorities, and thereby enrich our commercial law."

From 1814 to 1823, he presided over the court of chancery in the State of New York. The seven volumes of Johnson's Chancery Reports contain his decisions for that period, and present an extended and learned exposition of equity jurisprudence. "For the nine years I was in that office," he further wrote, "there was not a single decision or dictum of either of my predecessors — Livingston, and Lansing, 1777 to 1814 — cited or even suggested to me. I took the court as if it were an institution never before known in the United States. I had nothing to guide me, and was left at liberty to assume all such English chancery practice and jurisdiction as I thought applicable under our constitution. . . I was only checked by the senate as a court of errors."

He left no aspect of a case unexamined and undecided. His dicta have furnished the basis of countless adjudications.

In 1823, being in his sixty-first year, and, under the constitution, no longer qualified for judicial office, he resumed residence in New York city, and was re-elected to the chair in Columbia law school which had been vacant since he left it in 1795. Here he delivered the lectures which constituted the substance of his "Commentaries on American Law," as first published. "Having got heartily tired of lecturing, I abandoned it, and it was my son that pressed me to prepare a volume of lectures for the press. I had no idea of publishing them when I delivered them. I wrote a new volume and published it. This led me to remodel and enlarge, and now the third volume will be out in a few days; and I am obliged to write a fourth to complete my plan."

The first volume of the Commentaries was published in 1826, the second in 1827, the third in 1829, and the fourth in 1830. Up to the time of his death, in 1847, he had revised five other editions. His son Judge William Kent superintended the preparation of the seventh edition in 1852, the eighth in 1854, the ninth in 1858, and the tenth in 1860. The eleventh edition was prepared by Judge George F. Comstock, in 1866, the twelfth by Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., in 1873, and the thirteenth by C. M. Barnes, in 1884.

Of part of Kent's judicial labors Story said that "to unfold the doctrines of chancery in our country and to settle them upon immovable foundations, it required such a man with such a mind, at once liberal, comprehensive, exact, and methodical; always reverencing authorities and bound by decisions; true to the spirit yet more true to the letter of the law; proving principles with a severe and scrupulous logic, yet blending with them the most persuasive equity." Story also wrote that the Commentaries were new proof of the author's accurate learning, extensive research, and unwearied diligence.[1]

[1] See autobiographical letter of 1828, first published in 1873, in 1 South. Law Rev. 382; re-published in 6 Alb. Law J. 40. See also 13 Alb. Law J. 206-10 (1876); American Cyclopaedia.

KEROSENE. See Oil.

KEY. See Donatio, Mortis, etc.; House.

KIDNAPING.[1] The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from his or her own country, and sending or taking him or her into another country.[2]

The equivalent of abduction, q. v.

Bringing into the United States any person inveigled or kidnaped in any other country with intent to hold such person to involuntary servitude (q. v.) is a felony, punishable with as much as five years imprisonment and five thousand dollars fine.[3]

Physical force is not necessary. The crime is usually committed by threats. It is sufficient to show a mind operated upon by falsely exciting the fears, by threats, or other undue influence, amounting substantially to a coercion of the will, as a substitute for violence. The condition of the person kidnaped, the age, education, condition of mind, and other circumstances, are to be considered.[4] See Extradition.

KILL. See Defense, 1; Homicide; Wanton.

KIN; KINDRED. Relationship by blood; persons legitimately related by blood.[5]

Next of kin. Nearest of blood relatives.

"Next of kin," "nearest of kin," "nearest of kindred," and "nearest blood relatives" primarily indicate the nearest degree of consanguinity, in which sense also they are most frequently used.[6]

Does not include a husband or wife, unless plainly so intended.[7]

Nor does it ordinarily include a widow; but it may include such one, as, in a will.[8]

Refers to the relatives of an intestate. In general, no one comes within the term who is not included in the provisions of the statutes of distribution.[9]

See Consanguinity; Descent; Heir; Relation, 3; Widow.

KIND. Originally, race, kin; now, genus, generic class.

[1] Orig., to steal a child: kid, slang for child; nap, to nab. Formerly spelled kidnapping.

[2] [4 Bl. Com. 219.

[3] Act 23 June, 1874: 1 Sup. R. S. 103.

[4] See Moody v. People, 20 Ill. 318-19 (1858); State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 565-67 (1837); Click v. State, 3 Tex. 283 (1848); 2 Bish. Cr L. §§ 750-56.

[5] McCord v. Smith, 1 Black, 470 (1861); 62 Ga. 145; 11 Cush. 25; 72 N. Y. 315; 16 Wis. 635.

[6] Swasey v. Jaques, 144 Mass. 138, 137 (1887), cases, Field, J.

[7] Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 431 (1873), cases; Wetter v. Walker, 62 Ga. 145 (1878).

[8] Keteltas v. Keteltas, 72 N. Y. 315 (1878), cases.

[9] Steel v. Kurtz, 28 Ohio St. 196 (1876). See also 1 Bradf. 495; 28 Md. 412; 67 N. Y. 339; 34 Hun, 15; 39 Barb. 28; 34 id. 410; 43 id. 162; 63 N. C. 242; 17 Ohio St. 367; 4 R. I. 4; 62 Wis. 135.

In kind. A payment of money, the delivery or deposit of an object, as of rent, or services rendered, are made or rendered "in kind," when of a thing or services which correspond in class or general nature to that intended. Opposed, in specie: in the identical state or condition, in exact terms. See DEPOSIT, 2, General. Compare GENUS.

KING; QUEEN. 1. The person in whom is invested the supreme executive power of the government of Great Britain.

2. Sovereign power; government; commonwealth; state.

The crown is hereditary, in the feudal path for succession to landed estates as marked out by the common law; but this does not imply an indefeasible right. Therefore, in his political capacity, the king never dies.[1]

His duty is to govern according to law; disobedience to his command is a high contempt or a misprision.[2]

As the fountain of justice, he is always ubiquitous — always present in his courts; hence he cannot be non-suit, and does not appear by attorney.[3]

He is the steward of the public, to dispense justice to whomsoever it is due.[4]

In foreign affairs he represents the nation: sends and receives ambassadors; makes treaties; proclaims war, and peace; issues reprisals, grants, safe-conducts. In domestic affairs he is part of the supreme legislative power: may negative a new law, and is bound by none unless specially named; is the general of the kingdom — raises armies, defends the kingdom; confines subjects within the realm, recalls them from abroad; is the general conservator of the peace — erects courts, prosecutes offenders, pardons crimes, issues proclamations; is the fountain of office and privilege; is the arbiter of domestic commerce — erects marts, regulates weights and measures and the coinage of money; and is the supreme head of the church — convenes and dissolves synods, nominates bishops, and receives appeals.

His revenue is ordinary: ecclesiastical and temporal — from demesne lands of the crown, from the courts of justice, royal fish, wrecks, jetsam, flotsam, ligan, royal mines, treasure-trove, waifs, estrays, forfeitures for offenses and for deodands; from escheats, and from the custody of lunatics; and extraordinary: aids, subsidies granted by the Commons — now a tax, charged with the civil list, and with which the expenses of the civil government are defrayed.[5]

In the king there can be no negligence; no delay bars his right.[6] See TEMPUS, Nullum, etc.

"The king can do no wrong." This means either that whatever is exceptional in the conduct of public affairs, is not to be imputed to him; or, that the prerogative extends not to an injury: in his political capacity the king is absolute perfection.[1]

The maxim has no place in our systems of constitutional law. The Constitution admits that heads of departments may do wrong, and provides for their impeachment.[2]

A wrong attempted in the name of a State is imputable to its government.[3]

Statutes of parliament are generally cited by the name and the year of the sovereign in whose reign they were passed. In the subjoined table the Roman numerals indicate the year of accession:

1. William I, 1066.	20. Henry VIII, 1509.
2. William II, 1087.	21. Edward VI, 1547.
3. Henry I, 1100.	22. Mary, 1553.[4]
4. Stephen, 1135.	23. Elizabeth, 1559.
5. Henry II, 1154.	24. James I, 1603.
6. Richard I, 1189.	25. Charles I, 1625.
7. John, 1199.	26. The Commonwealth, 1649.
8. Henry III, 1216.	27. Charles II, 1649.[5]
9. Edward I, 1273.	28. James II, 1685.
10. Edward II, 1307.	29. William and Mary, 1689.
11. Edward III, 1327.	30. William III, 1695.[6]
12. Richard II, 1377.	31. Anne, 1702.
13. Henry IV, 1399.	32. George I, 1714.
14. Henry V, 1413.	33. George II, 1727.
15. Henry VI, 1422.	34. George III, 1760.
16. Edward IV, 1461.	35. George IV, 1820.
17. Edward V, 1483.	36. William IV, 1830.
18. Richard III, 1483.	37. Victoria, June 20, 1837.
19. Henry VII, 1485.

See BENCH; COUNCIL; COUNSEL; COURT, 1; CROWN; FEUD; GOVERNMENT; PARLIAMENT; PATENT, 1; PATRIA; PEACE, 1; PREROGATIVE; TENURE, 1; TREASON; UBIQUITY, 1.

KISS THE BOOK. Placing the Bible to the lips in attestation of the obligation of an oath just administered. See further OATH.

KLEPTOMANIA. See INSANITY.

KNIGHT. See FEUD.

KNOCK DOWN. See AUCTION; BID OFF.

KNOT. See MILE.

KNOW ALL MEN, etc. See PRESENTS, 1.

KNOWLEDGE. 1. A being aware of: information, cognizance; notice.

Absolute knowledge can be had of few things.[7]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 191, 193, 196.
[2] 1 Bl. Com. 233; 4 id. 122.
[3] 1 Bl. Com. 270; 3 id. 94.
[4] 1 Bl. Com. 266.
[5] 1 Bl. Com. Ch. VII, VIII.
[6] 1 Bl. Com. 247.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 246; 2 id. 243; 3 id. 254; 4 id. 32.
[2] Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 343 (1879).
[3] Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 290 (1885).
[4] In 1554, married Philip of Spain; hence, Philip and Mary, 1554-58.
[5] Ascended the throne in 1660; his regnal years are counted from 1649 — when Charles I died.
1-4, Normans; 5-12, Plantagenets; 13-15, House of Lancaster; 16-18, House of York; 19-23, House of Tudor; 24-25, 27-31, House of Stuart; 32-37, House of Hanover.
[6] Mary died in 1694.
[7] Story v. Buffum, 8 Allen, 38 (1864).

Knowledge and belief. Nothing more than firm belief. Belief applies to the impression on the memory. The difference is in degree.[1] See further BELIEF.

Personal knowledge. Actual knowledge of the truth or falsity of a matter, not derived from another person.[2]

An affidavit filed in an application for a change of venue, alleging that the defendant had not theretofore "full knowledge" of a particular fact, was held to be too indefinite, as an averment. "Full knowledge might never come to him; but he had knowledge, and, for aught that appears, it might have been sufficient to satisfy his mind."[3]

Knowledge is imputed from a duty to exercise ordinary care. Inquiry is a moral duty where the circumstances are such that a person of ordinary prudence would refuse to act.[4]

One who has reason to believe that a fact exists knows that it exists.[5]

Where there is enough to put one concerned upon inquiry, the means of knowledge and knowledge itself are, in legal effect, the same thing.[6]

When a party is about to perform an act which he has reason to believe may affect the rights of third persons, an inquiry as to the facts is a moral duty, and diligence an act of justice. Whatever fairly puts a party upon inquiry in such case is sufficient notice in equity, where the means of knowledge are at hand; and, if he omits to inquire and proceeds to act, he does so at his peril, as he is then chargeable with all the facts which by a proper inquiry he might have ascertained.[7]

Knowledge of facts which will enable a party to take effectual action is implied in such terms as "acquiescence," "estoppel," "waiver,"[8] qq. v.

Equal knowledge on both sides makes contracting parties equal.

Information in the agent is information in the principal;[9] but not so, if professional confidence would be betrayed, as, between an attorney and his client.[1] See further AGENT.

Knowingly. Imports that an accused person knew what he was about to do, and with such knowledge proceeded to commit the offense charged.[2]

Known; unknown. In the laws of taxation and seizures of property, apply to owners whose residence is, and is not, known. See NOTICE, 1.

See FRAUD; GUILTY; IGNORANCE; IGNORE; INFORMATION, 1; INNOCENCE; INQUIRY; INTENT; PERMIT; REPRESENTATION, 1; RESCISSION; WILL, 1; WITTINGLY. Compare NOSCITUR; SCIRE.

2. Sexual bodily connection: carnal knowledge.[3]

"Carnally knew" is the technical phrase used in charging rape, q. v.

KU KLUX. See United States v. Harris, CONSPIRACY.

L.

L. An abbreviation, chiefly of large, Latin, law, leading, lord:

L. C. Leading case; lord chancellor.

L. F. Law French; levari facias.

L. J. Law Journal; law judge.

L. JJ. Law judges.

L. L. Law, late, or low Latin, q. v.

L. R. Law reports.

L. S. Locus sigilli, place of the seal, q. v.

LL. Laws.

LL. B. Bachelor of laws. LL. D. Doctor of laws. LL. M. Master of laws. See DEGREE, 3.

LABEL. See BOOK, 1; COPYRIGHT; TRADE-MARK.

LABOR. 1, n. Manual exertion of a toilsome nature.[4]

This is the meaning in statutes, unless plainly used in another sense. Toil, or that which does or may produce weariness, and not mere business, is the idea conveyed by the word as ordinarily employed in Sunday laws.[4]

Technically, embraces all sorts of services, whether physical or mental, or whether the

[1] Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray, 274 (1857). See Harrison v. Beard, 30 Kan. 532 (1883).

[2] See West v. Home Ins. Co., 18 F. R. 622 (1883).

[3] McCann v. People, 88 Ill. 103 (1878). Compare White v. Murtland, 71 id. 259 (1874); Roberts v. People, 9 Col. 463 (1886).

[4] Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 68-69 (1869), cases.

[5] Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co., 101 U. S. 566 (1879).

[6] Jones v. Guaranty, &c. Co., 101 U. S. 633 (1879), Swayne, J.; Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 id. 637 (1880); Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 367 (1857).

[7] Angle v. N. W. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 342 (1875), cases, Clifford, J. See also Commissioners of Leavenworth Co. v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 18 F. R. 210 (1883); Martin v. Smith, 1 Dill. 96 (1870), cases; Filmore v. Reithman, 6 Col. 129 (1881), cases; Effingar v. Hall, 81 Va. 106 (1885), cases.

[8] Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581 (1878), Swayne, J.

[9] Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 327 (1879); Rogers v. Palmer, 102 id. 263 (1880).

[1] The Distilled Spirits, 11 Wall. 366-67 (1870), cases. As to presumptions of knowledge, in general, see 18 Alb. Law J. 7-9 (1883), cases.

[2] United States v. Claypool, 14 F. R. 128 (1882); Gregory v. United States, 17 Blatch. 330 (1879). See generally 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 114-18.

[3] Commonwealth v. Squires, 97 Mass. 61 (1867), cases.

[4] Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 401 (1853), Thurman, J.; More v. Clymer, 12 Mo. Ap. 15-16 (1882); Richmond v. Moore, 107 Ill. 427-28 (1883).

main ingredient is manual toil or professional or other skill; but in the narrower and popular signification, is restricted to physical toil.[1]

In its most extended sense, includes every possible human exertion, mental or physical.[2]

Common labor. Ordinary manual labor, as distinguished from intellectual labor.

In the Sunday law of Ohio, embraces "trading, bartering, selling, or buying any goods, wares, or merchandise."[3]

Gaming is not an act of "common labor" or of one's usual vocation.[4]

Hard labor. State's prison convicts often are sentenced to perform "hard labor." This imports nothing more than ordinary industry at some mechanical trade.[5]

Imprisonment at hard labor may be changed to mere imprisonment, where an act provides for imprisonment only.[6]

Where hard labor is prescribed as part of the punishment it must be included in the sentence; but where mere imprisonment is required, a Federal court is authorized, in its discretion, to order its sentence to be executed at a place where, as part of the discipline, hard labor is required.[7]

When the use of the word "hard" may be treated as surplusage, the sentence will still stand.[8]

Hard labor was first introduced into English prisons in 1706. See further IMPRISONMENT; INFAMY.

Laborer. One who labors in a toilsome occupation.[9]

One who gains a livelihood by manual toil; one who depends on hand work, not on head work, for a living.[10]

He is a species of servant, hired by the day or week, and not part of the family of the employer.[11]

In statutes giving laborers a lien or priority, or a special remedy, "laborer" means a person engaged in manual occupation, rather than one engaged in a learned profession.[12]

Within the meaning of lien laws "labor" has been held to include the services of an architect;[13] but not of one who superintends the erection of a building;[1] nor of a civil or consulting engineer;[2] nor of the foreman of a mine;[3] nor of an overseer of a plantation;[4] nor of a teamster;[5] nor of a time-keeper and superintendent;[6] nor of a cook in a hotel.[7]

Bodily labor bestowed upon a subject which before lay in common to all men, gives the most reasonable title to an exclusive property therein.[8]

Labor is property. As such it merits protection. The right to make it available is next in importance to the rights of life and liberty. It lies, to a large extent, at the foundation of most forms of property, and of all solid individual and national prosperity.[9]

The act of Congress of February 26, 1885 (23 St. L. 333), makes it unlawful for any person to assist or encourage the importation or migration of foreigners under contract to perform labor or service of any kind, made previous to the importation. The penalty is a forfeiture of one thousand dollars for every laborer brought into the country; and the master of any vessel who knowingly brings in such emigrant laborer shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, pay a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months. The act excepts foreigners engaged as private secretaries, servants or domestics of foreigners, skilled workmen performing labor in a new industry, professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, domestic servants, and relatives and friends assisted to come here for settlement.

That act was amended by the act of February 23, 1887 (24 St. L. 414), empowering the secretary of the treasury to execute the original act, and, for that purpose, to make contracts with State officers — to take charge of immigration, to examine ships as to the condition of passengers, to report to the collector of the port any persons within the prohibition of the act, and that such persons shall not be permitted to land, but shall be sent back to the country whence they came, at the expense of the owners of the vessel in which they emigrated.

Labor, bureau of. An act approved June 27, 1884 (23 St. L. 60), provides that there shall be established in the department of the interior a bureau of labor, to be under the charge of a commissioner of labor, appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate. The commissioner shall hold office for four years, and, until his successor shall be qualified, unless sooner removed, at a salary of $3,000 a year. He "shall collect information upon the subject of la-

[1] Weymouth v. Sanborn, 43 N. H. 173 (1861), Bellows, Judge.

[2] Brockway v. Innes, 39 Mich. 48 (1878); Peck v. Miller, ib. 597 (1878).

[3] Cincinnati v. Rice, 15 Ohio, 240-41 (1846).

[4] State v. Conger, 14 Ind. 396 (1860).

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 370, 377.

[6] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 169 (1878).

[7] Exp. Karstendick, 93 U. S. 396 (1876); United States v. Coppersmith, 2 Flip. 553 (1880).

[8] Weaver v. Commonwealth, 29 Pa. 448 (1857). See Re Edwards, 43 N. J. L. 555 (1881), cases.

[9] Blume v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 401 (1853).

[10] Pennsylvania, &c. R. Co. v. Leuffer, 84 Pa. 171 (1877); Caraker v. Mathews, 25 Ga. 576 (1858); Re Hoking, 8 Saw. 439-40 (1883).

[11] [1 Bl. Com. 426.

[12] 18 La. An. 20; 13 Minn. 475; 26 N. J. E. 29, 339; 24 N. Y. 482; 37 id. 640; 76 id. 50; 35 Pa. 423; 90 id. 47. Contra, 12 Bush. 75; 41 Me. 397; 6 Mo. Ap. 445.

[1] 2 Monta. 443.

[2] 38 Barb. 340; 39 Mich. 47; 84 Pa. 171.

[3] 16 Hun, 186; 17 id. 463. Contra, 11 Nev. 304; 104 U. S. 177.

[4] 81 N. C. 340.

[5] 46 N. Y. 521; 100 Pa. 550; 49 Wis. 169.

[6] 14 Kan. 566.

[7] 77 Pa. 107. See generally Flagstaff Mining Co. v. Collins, 104 U. S. 177-79 (1881), cases.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 5.

[9] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 127 (1872), Swayne, Judge.

bor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity." The secretary of the interior, upon the recommendation of the commissioner, shall appoint a chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year, and such other employees as may be necessary for the bureau. During the necessary absence of the commissioner, or when the office shall become vacant, the chief clerk shall perform the duties of the commissioner. The commissioner shall annually report in writing to the secretary of the interior the information collected and collated by him, and such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau.

See AUTHOR; CHINESE; EMPLOYMENT; LIEN, Mechanic's; MATERIAL-MAN; OCCUPANCY; SERVANT, 2; STRIKE, 2; SUNDAY; TRADE; WAGES.

2, v. To influence a jury against its duty; to persuade a juror not to appear at court.

The first lawyer who came from England to practice in Boston is said to have been sent back for "laboring" a jury.

LACHES.[1] Neglect, negligence; default.[2]

Inexcusable delay in asserting a right.

An infant loses nothing by non-claim or neglect to demand his rights; nor, in general, shall any other "laches" or negligence be imputed to him.[3]

Neglect to do something which by law a man is obliged to do.[4]

Such neglect or omission to do what one should do as warrants the presumption that he has abandoned his claim, and declines to assert his right.[5]

The term implies knowledge of one's rights.[6]

The law of laches was dictated by experience, and is founded in a salutary policy. The lapse of time carries with it the memory and the life of witnesses, the muniments of evidence, and other means of proof. The law is necessary to the peace, repose, and welfare of society.[7]

If the case of the plaintiff, as stated in his bill, will not entitle him to a decree, the judgment of the court may be required by demurrer whether the defendant ought to be required to answer the bill.[8]

Where, from delay, no correct account can be taken, and any conclusion the court may arrive at must at best be conjectural, and the original transaction has become so obscured by lapse of time, loss of evidence, and death of parties, as to render it difficult to do justice, the case is one of "laches," and the court will not relieve the plaintiff.[1]

The question is one of fact, is an equitable defense determinable by the particular facts.[2]

Laches is not imputable to the government: upon considerations of public policy. The government acts through agents, and these are so numerous and scattered that the utmost vigilance would not save the public from serious loss, if the doctrine applied.[3]

The rule is essential to the preservation of the interests and property of the public. The state's agents have not the incentive of personal interest to prosecute her claims.[4]

See ESTOPPEL; DELAY; DISABILITY; LIMITATION, 8; REFORM; RESCISSION; STALE.

LADING. That which constitutes a load; burden; freight.

Laden. May not mean "fully" laden.[5]

Bill of lading. A contract by which a common carrier engages to carry and deliver goods to the consignee, or to the order of the shipper.[6]

A written acknowledgment, signed by the master of a vessel, that he has received the goods therein described from the shipper, to be transported on the terms therein expressed, to the described place of destination, and there to be delivered to the consignee or parties therein designated.[7]

A receipt as to quantity and a description of the goods, and a contract to deliver them, acknowledging the goods to be on board. As between the original parties, being like a receipt, is open to explanation.[8]

Usually executed in triplicate: one part each for the consignor, the carrier, and the consignee.

Termed a "clean bill" when silent as to the place of stowage. The understanding is that the goods are to be stowed "under" deck; parol evidence of an agreement for stowage "on" the deck is inadmissible.[9]

A bill of lading is a symbol of property, and, when properly indorsed, operates as a delivery of the property itself, investing the indorsee with a constructive custody, which serves all the purposes of an actual possession, and so continues until there is a valid and

---

[1] Läsh'-es. F. lache (läsh), indolent, lax: L. laxus, loose.

[2] [1 Bl. Com. 247; 3 id. 317; 4 id. 402.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 465.

[4] Sebag v. Abitbol, 4 Maule & S. 462 (1816), Ellenborough, C. J.

[5] Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 30 (1885), Richardson, J.

[6] Massie v. Heiskell, 80 Va. 805 (1885).

[7] Brown v. County of Buena Vista, 95 U. S. 161 (1877), Swayne, J. See also 77 Va. 576, 588.

[8] Lansdale v. Smith, 106 U. S. 392-98 (1882), cases.

[1] Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 22, 29 (1885), cases.

[2] Pike v. Martindale, 91 Mo. 285 (1886), Ray, J.

[3] United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. 735 (1824), Story, J.

[4] Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall. 70 (1873); United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489 (1878); United States v. City of Alexandria, 19 F. R. 609 (1883); United States v. Barnes, 31 F. R. 709 (1887), cases.

[5] Searight v. Stokes, 3 How. 169 (1845).

[6] [The Farwell, 8 Biss. 64, 71 (1877), Dyer, J.

[7] The Delaware, 14 Wall. 600 (1871), cases, Clifford, J.

[8] See 14 Wall. 600, supra; 105 U. S. 8, post; 1 Biss. 379; 5 Ala. 432; 3 Iowa, 103; 33 id. 32; 34 Me. 559; 16 Mich. 113; 9 Mo. 194; 4 Denio, 330; 14 Wend. 28; 12 Barb. 310; 4 Ohio, 346; 28 Vt. 124; L. R., 2 C. P. 43.

[9] 14 Wall. 602, 579, supra; 2 Wharf. Ev. § 1079.

complete delivery under and in pursuance of the bill of lading, to the person entitled to receive the property.[1]

It is not a representative of money; does not pass from hand to hand as a bank-note or coin. It is a contract for the performance of a certain duty, at the same time that it is a symbol of ownership of the goods covered by it, a representative of those goods, and regarded as so much cotton, grain, iron, or other merchandise which is sold or pledged by a transfer of the bill.[2]

In the hands of the holder, a bill of lading is evidence of ownership, special or general, of the property mentioned in it, and of the right to receive the property at the place of delivery. Notwithstanding that it is designed to pass from hand to hand, with or without indorsement, and is efficacious for its ordinary purposes in the hands of the holder, it is not a negotiable instrument in the sense that a bill of exchange or a promissory note is negotiable. Its transfer does not preclude, as with them, inquiry into the transaction in which it originated, because it has come into the hands of a person who has innocently paid value for it. The doctrine of bona fide purchaser applies only in a limited sense. It may therefore be shown that neither the master of a vessel, nor the shipping agent had the authority to bind the vessel or its owner by giving a bill for goods not received for shipment.[3]

The holder of a lost or stolen bill of lading is no more protected in his title than the buyer of lost or stolen property.[3]

The transfer and delivery of a bill of lading of goods, by the consignee to a person who advances money upon them, is not in effect a mortgage, but vests in the lender a property in the goods which entitles him to maintain an action against one who wrongfully converts them. It is not necessary for the person to whom an inland bill is delivered for valuable consideration to take possession of the property upon its arrival, or to give notice to the person who has the actual possession of the property. Delivery to an unauthorized person, who does not produce the bill, is a conversion.[4]

Placing in a bill a direction to notify a certain person is a plain indication, in the absence of further directions, that he is not the consignee.[5]

When a shipper attaches his bill to a draft upon the consignee, he intends that the goods shall be delivered only upon payment of the draft.[1]

When indefinite in its terms, a bill will be construed reasonably, according to the presumed intention to be gathered from the situation of the parties, and their relations to the ship and to each other.[2]

See DAMAGE; FREIGHT.

LAGAN. See LIGAN.

LAITY. See LAY, 1.

LAKE. See RIPARIAN; TIDE.

A grant of land to a natural pond or lake extends only to the water's edge. . . Mere proprietorship in the surrounding lands will not, in all cases, give ownership to the beds of natural non-navigable lakes, regardless of their size. Each case depends largely upon its own facts.[3]

Lakes Ontario, Erie, Superior, etc., are inland seas. Different States border on them on one side, and a foreign nation on the other. A great and growing commerce is carried on upon them, subject to all the incidents and hazards that attend commerce on the ocean. Hostile fleets have encountered on them, and prizes been made; and every reason which exists for the grant of admiralty jurisdiction to the general government on the Atlantic seas applies with equal force to the lakes. . . The lakes and the waters connecting them, although not tide-waters, are undoubtedly public waters, and within the grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in the Constitution.[4]

See ADMIRALTY; SEA, High.

LAMB. See SHEEP.

LAND. 1. Comprehends all things of a permanent, substantial nature; being a word of very extensive signification.[5] Real property; realty.

All corporeal hereditaments — ground, soil or earth, with all objects under or upon the same, as, trees, herbage, water, minerals, buildings. By the simple word "land" everything terrestrial passes.[6]

Land often passes by other terms; as, house, mill, messuage, qq. v.

The "tunnels, tracks, substructures, superstructures, stations, viaducts, and masonry" of a railroad are "land," within the meaning of a tax law.[7]

[1] Hieskell v. Farmers', &c. Bank, 89 Pa. 155 (1879), cases; Dows v. Nat. Exchange Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 629 (1875), cases; Moors v. Kidder, N. Y. Ct. Ap. (1888): 27 Am. Law Reg. 107, 115–17, cases.

[2] Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co., 101 U. S. 564 (1879), Strong, J.; Steiger v. Third Nat. Bank, 2 McCrary, 499–500 (1881); Wertheimer v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 17 Blatch. 422 (1880), cases.

[3] Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 8 (1881), Miller, J.; Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Knight, 122 id. 87 (1887); Seeligson v. Philbrick, 30 F. R. 601 (1887).

[4] Forbes v. Boston & Lowell R. Co., 133 Mass. 154–58 (1882), cases, Morton, C. J.

[5] Furman v. Union Pacific R. Co., 106 N. Y. 579 (1887); North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 123 U. S. 727 (1887).

[1] Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., 32 F. R. 54 (1887), cases; The John K. Shaw, ib. 491 (1887), cases.

[2] Gronstadt v. Witthoff, 15 F. R. 265 (1883).

[3] State of Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 197, 206 (1883), cases, Gresham, J.; Forsyth v. Smale, 7 id. 201 (1876), cases; Smith v. City of Rochester, 92 N. Y. 473 (1883), cases.

[4] The Propeller Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 453, 457 (1851), Taney, C. J.; Act 26 Feb. 1845: 5 St. L. 726. See also The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 562 (1866); The Eagle, 8 id. 20 (1868).

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 16; 3 id. 217.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 16; 33 Miss. 464; 1 N. Y. 564; 33 Ind. 403; 5 Conn. 517; 9 id. 377.

[7] People, ex rel. New York & Harlem R. Co. v. Commissioners, 101 N. Y. 322 (1886).

Everything essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment of the designated property, in the absence of language indicating a different intention in a grantor, passes by a conveyance of the property.[1]

Lands. The same as land; one piece will satisfy the term.[2]

Landed. Consisting of realty: as, landed — estate, property, security.

"Landed estate" is an interest in or pertaining to lands. A "landed proprietor" is a person who has an estate in lands, whether highly improved or not.[3]

Improved land. Reclaimed, cultivated land; land used for purposes of husbandry. Wild land. Land in a state of nature.[4] See IMPROVE; SEATED; VACANT.

"Improved land" has no precise legal meaning.[5]

Interest in lands. In the Statute of Frauds, does not include ripe though ungathered fruits, or crops annually removed; otherwise as to such produce of the soil as is capable of permanent attachment to it.[6] See FRAUDS, Statute of.

Land warrant. The evidence in writing which the state, on good consideration, gives that the person therein named (the warrantee) is entitled to the quantity of land specified.[7]

The issue of the warrant and the rights of the warrantee are regulated by statute. The application marks the inception of the title, and prevails against a later settler with notice; but not so as to a warrant and survey which differ from the application.[8]

Presumption of abandonment from neglect to return a warrant is rebutted by possession in the warrantee.[9]

A warrant descriptive of the land confers title from date, if followed up with diligence in obtaining a survey.[10]

Shifted land warrant. A warrant which calls for the survey of other land than that surveyed.

When fairly made, returned, and accepted by the proper authorities, holds the land from the time of acceptance, provided there is no intervening opposing right.[11]

[1] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 187 (1864), cases.

[2] Birch v. Gibbs, 6 Maule & S. 116 (1817).

[3] St. Mary v. Harris, 10 La. An. 677 (1855), Merrick, Chief Justice.

[4] Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. 208 (1825).

[5] Bond v. Fay, 8 Allen, 215 (1864), Hoar, J.

[6] 1 Whart. Ev. § 866, cases.

[7] Neal v. East Tennessee College, 6 Yerg. 205 (1834).

[8] Mix v. Smith, 7 Pa. 75 (1847); 5 Binn. 204.

[9] Burford v. McCue, 53 Pa. 427 (1866).

[10] Fox v. Lyon, 27 Pa. 9 (1856); 33 id. 474; 34 id. 74; 43 id. 197; 73 id. 316.

[11] Smith v. Walker, 98 Pa. 141 (1881).

Public lands. "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States."[1] See TERRITORY, 2.

"Public lands" is habitually used in legislation to describe such lands as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws.[2]

In the act of July 4, 1866, applied to all unsurveyed lands, whether previously granted or not, and distinguishes such lands from surveyed and segregated lands, where the right of private proprietorship has attached.[3]

The laws prescribe with particularity the manner in which portions of the public domain may be acquired by settlers. They require personal settlement upon the lands desired and their inhabitation and improvement, and a declaration of the settler's acts and purposes to be made in the proper office of the district, within a limited time after the public surveys have been extended over the lands. By them a land department has been created to supervise the steps required for the acquisition of the title of the government. Its officers are required to receive, consider, and pass upon the proofs furnished as to the alleged settlements upon the lands, and their improvement, when pre-emption rights are claimed, and, in case of conflicting claims to the same tract, to hear the contesting parties. The proofs offered in compliance with the law are to be presented, in the first instance, to the officers of the district where the land is situated, and from their decision an appeal lies to the commissioner of the general land-office, and from him to the secretary of the interior. For mere errors of judgment as to the weight of evidence on these subjects, by any of the subordinate officers, the only remedy is by an appeal to his superior of the department. The courts cannot exercise any direct appellate jurisdiction over the rulings of those officers or of their superior in the department in such matters, nor can they reverse or correct them in a collateral proceeding between private parties. It would lead to endless litigation, and be fruitful of evil, if a supervisory power were vested in the courts over the action of the numerous officers of the land department, on mere questions of fact presented for their determination. It is only when those officers have misconstrued the law applicable to the case, as established before the department, and thus have denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to them, or where misrepresentations and fraud have been practiced, necessarily affecting their judgment, that the courts can, in a proper proceeding, interfere and refuse to give effect to their action. . . The misconstruction of the law, which will authorize the interference of the court, must be clearly manifest, and not alleged upon a possible finding of the facts from the evidence different from that reached by them. And where fraud and misrepresentations are relied upon as grounds of interference, they should be stated with such fullness and particularity as to show that they must necessarily have affected the action of the officers of the department.[1]

[1] Constitution, Art. IV. sec. 3, cl. 2.

[2] Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 763 (1875), Davis, J.; Wirth v. Branson, 98 id. 118 (1878), cases.

[3] Heydenfeldt v. Daney Mining Co., 10 Nev. 314 (1875), Hawley, C. J.

The testimony proving fraud in the government officials must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing. A bare preponderance of evidence which leaves the issue in doubt is not sufficient. To raise a suspicion of wrong-doing in its own officers, is not enough to justify the government in casting upon the defendant, alleged to be a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the supposed fraud, the burden of establishing his title.[2]

The government can proceed by a bill in equity to have a decree of nullity and an order of cancellation of a patent issued in mistake, or obtained by fraud, where it has a direct interest or is under obligation to make good a title to an individual, or duty to the public requires such action.[3]

There was a time when a party who settled in advance of the public surveys was regarded as a trespasser, to be summarily ejected. But all this has been changed within the last half century. The settlers of Oregon, and of California, organized a provisional government embracing guaranties of all private rights. When the laws of the United States were extended over the country, the regulations for the occupation of the land were respected, and the rights acquired under them recognized and enforced. In no instance have the claims of an intruder upon the prior bona fide possession of others, or in disregard of those rights, been sustained. When the legal title has passed from the United States to one party, when in equity, and in good conscience, and by the laws of Congress, it ought to go to another, a court of equity will convert the holder into a trustee of the true owner, and compel him to convey the legal title.[4]

Congress has the sole power to declare the dignity and effect of titles emanating from the United States. All legislation declares the patent the superior and conclusive evidence of legal title. Until its issuance, the fee is in the government, which, by the patent, passes to the grantee, who may recover the possession by ejectment.[5]

The certificate which is given vests an equitable right to demand the patent after such further proceedings as the laws, and the course of business in the departments, require. The fact of the issue of a patent is a matter of record, a copy of which may be so easily obtained that no necessity exists for accepting the receipt of a register as a substitute; if never issued, it is obvious that the title remains in the United States.[1]

All that can be claimed as to the effect of documents of title executed by officers of the government is, that they pass such an estate as the government itself, on whose behalf the official acts appear to have been done, had at the time, but do not conclude the fact that the estate conveyed was lawfully vested in the grantor.[2]

Lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads do not revert after condition broken until a forfeiture has been asserted by the United States, either through judicial proceedings instituted under authority of law for that purpose, or through some legislative action legally equivalent to a judgment of office found at common law. Legislation to be sufficient must manifest an intention by Congress to reassert title and to resume possession. As it is to take the place of a suit and a judgment establishing the right, it should be direct, positive, and free from all doubt or ambiguity.[3]

When the United States acquire lands within a State by purchase, with the consent of the legislature of the State, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings, the Constitution confers upon them exclusive jurisdiction of the tract; but when they acquire such land in any other way, their exclusive jurisdiction is confined to the structures and land used for public purposes. A State making a grant may prescribe conditions not inconsistent with the effective uses of the property for the purposes intended; as, by reserving the right to tax private property within the limits of the tract.[4]

An act of Congress approved March 3, 1887 (24 St. L. 476), provides that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the Territories or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts heretofore created: Provided, That the prohibition of this section shall not

[1] Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 425-26 (1881), cases, Field, J.; Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 id. 450-52 (1882), cases; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72, 80-85 (1871), Miller, J.

[2] Colorado Coal & Iron Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307 (1887), cases, Matthews, J. See further Doolan v. Carr, 125 id. 624-25 (1888), cases.

[3] United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U. S. 273 (1888); United States v. Beebe, 127 id. 342 (1888).

[4] Rector v. Gibbon, 111 U. S. 284-87, 291 (1884), cases, Field, J. See especially Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. 307, 312-15 (1873), Miller, J.

[5] Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436 (1839).

[1] Langdon v. Sherwood, 124 U. S. 83 (1888), Miller, J. See also Fenn v. Holme, 21 How. 488 (1858); Hooper v. Scheimer, 23 id. 249 (1859); Foster v. Mora, 98 U. S. 425 (1878).

[2] Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 283 (1888); Herron v. Dater, 120 id. 464 (1886).

[3] St. Louis, &c. R. Co. v. McGee, 115 U. S. 473-74 (1885), cases, Waite, C. J.; New Orleans Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 124 id. 129 (1888), cases; Southern Pacific R. Co. v. Orton, 32 F. R. 457 (1879); Same v. Poole, ib. 451 (1887); Denny v. Dodson, ib. 899 (1887).

[4] Fort Levenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525, 530 538 (1885), Field, J.; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. McGlinn, ib. 545 (1885); Foley v. Shriver, 81 Va. 568, 571-75 (1886). cases apply to cases in which the right to hold or dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights, so far as they may exist by force of any such treaty shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force, and no longer.

Sec. 2. That no corporation or association more than twenty per centum of the stock of which is or may be owned by any person or persons, corporation or corporations, association or associations, not citizens of the United States, shall hereafter acquire or hold or own any real estate hereafter acquired in any of the Territories or of the District of Columbia.

Sec. 3. That no corporation other than those organized for the construction or operation of railways, canals, or turnpikes shall acquire, hold, or own more than five thousand acres of land in any of the Territories; and no railroad, canal, or turnpike corporation shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own lands in any Territory, other than as may be necessary for the proper operation of its railroad, canal, or turnpike, except such lands as may have been granted to it by act of Congress. But the prohibition of this section shall not affect the title to any lands now lawfully held by any such corporation.

Sec. 4. That all property acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the attorney-general to enforce every such forfeiture by bill in equity or other proper process. And in any suit or proceeding that may be commenced to enforce the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties, multifariousness, or other matters not affecting the substantial rights either of the United States or of the parties concerned in any such proceeding arising out of the matters in this act mentioned.

Similar legislation has been enacted in several of the Western States.

An act approved March 9, 1888 (25 St. L. 45), provides that the foregoing act shall not apply to or operate in the District of Columbia, so far as relates to the ownership of legations, or the ownership of residences by representatives of foreign governments, or attaches thereof.

See, as to public lands, BOUNTY; DOMAIN, 1; GRANT, 3; PATENT, 3; PRE-EMPTION; PROCLAMATION, 2; RESERVE, 3; RESTORE; SCHOOL; TIMBER.

See generally ABANDON, 1; AIR; ALLUVION; ALONG; CONVERSION, 2; COVENANT, Real; CROP; DEDICATION, 1; DEED, 2; DERELICT; DESCRIPTION, 1; DOMAIN, 1; DONATION; EASEMENT; EJECTMENT; ENTRY, I, III; ESCHEAT; ESTATE, 3; EVICTION; EXECUTION; FARM; FEUD; FIXTURES; GRANT, 2, 3; HEREDITAMENT; HOMESTEAD; ICE; INCLOSE; INCUMBRANCE; LIEN; MAP; MEADOW; MINE; MINERAL; MORTGAGE; NUISANCE; OCCUPY; PARCEL, 2; PARTITION; RAILROAD; REALTY; RUN; SUPPORT, 2; SURVEY; TAKE, 8; TAX, 2; TENEMENT; TENURE, 1; TITLE, 1; TRESPASS; WALL; WATER; WOODS. Compare SOLUM; TERRA.

2. Place; country; sovereignty; territorial jurisdiction: as, in inland, law of the land.

LANDING. A place on a river or other navigable water for lading and unlading goods, or for the reception and delivery of passengers. . . The terminus of a road on a river or other navigable water, for the use of travelers, and the loading and unloading of goods.[1]

Whether it is public or private, depends on the character of the road which leads to it.[2]

Either the bank or wharf to or from which persons or things may go from or to some vessel in the contiguous water; or the yard or open place used for deposit and convenient communication between the land and the water.[3]

A road to it is essential to make it public, unless where it may be used only in connection with transportation by water. Obstructing the road one hundred yards from the landing is not obstructing the landing itself.[3]

A landing for loading and unloading boats engaged in the coal trade differs from that of a harbor or place to lay up boats empty or laden.[3] See RIPARIAN.

LANDLORD. 1. He of whom land is held subject to the rendering or payment of rent or service.[4] Correlative, tenant, q. v.

One who owns lands or tenements which he has rented to another or others.

In feudal times, the proprietor of lands. He gave the possession and use to another person, in consideration of a return in services or goods, and retained the ultimate property in the fee.[5] See FEUD.

Landlord and tenant. Describes the relation which subsists between the parties to a contract for the occupation of land or buildings thereon.

Arises by implication from the use of lands; or is created in express terms by a lease. Paying rent acknowledges, prima facie, a tenancy.

Landlord's warrant. Written authority from a landlord, to a constable or other person, to levy upon property of his tenant, and, within the time prescribed by law or by agreement, to make public sale of the same, in order to constrain the tenant to observe one or more of the conditions in the contract for occupancy, as, that he will pay rent as it becomes due.

After the tenant has entered, the landlord's rights respect the rent and the reversion. If the tenant is to repair, the landlord is not liable for a nuisance from

[1] State v. Randall, 1 Strobh. 111 (S. C., 1846), Frost, J.
[2] State v. Graham, 15 Rich. L. 310 (S. C., 1868), Wardlow, A. J.
[3] Hays v. Briggs, 74 Pa. 385 (1873).
[4] Hosford v. Ballard, 39 N. Y. 151 (1868).
[5] Patty v. Bogle, 59 Miss. 498 (1881).

son-repair. The landlord's principal obligation is for quiet enjoyment. Unless otherwise stipulated, he pays taxes, municipal assessments, ground-rent, interest upon a mortgage, and insurance. The tenant, upon entry, is invested with all the rights incident to possession; must so use the premises as not to injure private persons or the public, or the owner's reversion; and must make reasonable repairs. His estate may merge in the fee by his purchase or by descent, and he may surrender his lease to the landlord.

See further DISCLAIMER, 1; DISPARAGEMENT, 2; DISTRESS; EJECTMENT; EMBLEMENTS; ENTRY, I; EVICTION; FIXTURES; GROUND; LEASE; MONTH; QUIT, 2; RENT; TENANT; USE, 2, Occupation; WAIVER; WASTE.

LANDMARK. See MARK, 1 (2); MONUMENT, 1.

LANDSCAPE. The law does not recognize any easement or right of property in a landscape or prospect.

Therefore the owner of a villa has no right to abate, as a nuisance, a building which mars the prospect.[1] See LIGHT.

LANGUAGE. See ART, 8; CONSTRUCTION; FRENCH; LATIN; LIBEL, 5; SLANDER.

LANGUIDUS. L. Sick; ill.

The return made by an officer, when a person, who is to be arrested, is so sick that to remove him would endanger his health or life.

Such defendant may be left in the charge of a deputy.

LAPSE.[2] A failure, defeat; also, to fail, pass by or aside.

Lapsed. Failed in its destination; become ineffectual.

Said of a devise or legacy when the devisee or legatee dies before the testator, or before a given age or event;[3] of land when the right to pre-empt it is lost; of a patent to land when a petitioner neglects to complete his application and secure a grant; of a policy of insurance which is allowed to expire for non-payment of one or more premiums; of time when a reasonable period in which to assert a right has passed.

LARCENY.[4] Theft; the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another.[5]

The wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away by any person of the mere personal goods of another, from any place, with the felonious intent to convert them to his (the taker's) own use, and make them his property, without the consent of the owner.[1]

A taking and a carrying away of personal property with an intent to steal it.[2]

Larcenist. One guilty of larceny.

Larcenous. Of the nature of larceny.

Grand larceny. Larceny of goods above the value of twelve pence.[3]

Mixed or compound larceny. Includes the aggravation of a taking from one's house or person.[3]

Petit larceny. When the goods are of the value of twelve pence or under.[3]

Simple larceny. Plain theft, unaccompanied by any other atrocious circumstance.[3]

"Petit larceny" having ceased to exist in England by 7 and 8 Geo. IV. (1827), c. 29, and largely in the United States, the single word "larceny" means "grand larceny," not of the compound sort. Further, having no "simple larceny," we have no use for the correlative "grand."[4]

Larceny is an offense against the right of private property. The "taking" implies a want of consent in the owner: therefore, a delivery to another upon trust cannot become the ground of a larceny at common law. But if the bailee opens a package and takes away a part he is guilty of larceny; for then the animo furandi is manifest. Nor was it, at common law, more than a breach of trust for a servant to run away with goods committed to him.[6] See EMBEZZLEMENT, 2.

There must be a "carrying away"—some removal from the place where the goods are found.[6] See CARRY AWAY.

The intent must be "felonious"—animo furandi; taking to use and return is a mere trespass.[7]

The property must be "personalty." At common law, taking a tree, flowers, fruit, or title-deeds is a trespass upon the land. But if any such object was severed by the owner, or by the thief at another time, that act made it personalty. Statutes have made felonious, appropriations of many such articles as, formerly, constituted trespasses.

---

[1] Bowden v. Lewis, 13 R. I. 191 (1881); Aldred's Case, 9 Rep. 57, b, 58 b: 5 Coke, *58 (1611).

[2] L. labi, lapsus, to fall, slip.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 513; 94 Am. Dec. 156, cases; 13 East, 534; 9 B. Mon. 206.

[4] Contracted from latrocinγ: L. latrocinium, robbery: latro, a robber, free-booter,—4 Bl. Com. 229. O. F. larrecin: F. larcin. The y is an English addition,—Skeat.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 229: 3 Coke, Inst. 107.

[1] 2 East, Pl. Cr. 553. "The most approved definition"—Ransom v. State, 22 Conn. *156 (1852), Storrs, J.

[2] Commonwealth v. Adams, 7 Gray, 44 (1856), Metcalf, J. See also State v. South, 28 N. J. L. 29–30 (1859), cases, Green, C. J.; State v. Wingo, 89 Ind. 206 (1883): 4 Cr. Law M. 661, 664–69 (1888), cases; 70 Ala. 9; 62 Cal. 141; 66 Ga. 193–94; 94 N. Y. 90, 95; 31 Hun, 58; 1 McAll. 196; 5 Cranch, C. C. 493; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 757.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 229, 239; 59 Cal. 391.

[4] 2 Bish. Cr. Law, §§ 757–58, cases.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 230; 59 Miss. 279; 62 Wis. 62.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 231; 76 Mo. 245.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 232; 82 Ala. 51.

Formerly, also, bonds, bills, notes, and other evidences of debt, having no intrinsic value and not importing property in the possession of the holder, were not subjects of larceny.

"Property" includes money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt.[1]

Nor, at common law, are animals, at their natural liberty and unreclaimed, which are unfit for food, as, dogs; for these a civil action for damages may be had.[2]

Obtaining possession of personalty by fraud, with intent to convert the same to one's own use, the owner intending to part with the possession only, is larceny.[3]

See CRIME; DECOY; INDICTMENT; LUCRUM; PRETENSES, False; ROBBERY.

LARGE. See AT LARGE; ENLARGE; GREAT; GROSS.

LASCIVIOUS.[4] Lustful; wanton; lewd.

Any wanton act between persons of different sexes, who are not inter-married, originating in lustful passion, and not otherwise punished as a crime against chastity or public decency, is called "lascivious carriage." May also include an indecent act against the will of another.[5]

To sustain an indictment under the Virginia act of 1878, forbidding lascivious cohabitation, the evidence must establish that the parties, not being married, lewdly and lasciviously associated and cohabited, that is, lived together in the same house and as man and wife live together.[6] See LEWD; MORALS.

LAST. See SAID; WILL, 2.

LATE. 1. Existing not long ago, but now departed this life:[7] as, the late A. B.

2. Last or recently in a place: as, A. B, late a resident, etc.[8]

3. Recently in office: as, A. B, late sheriff. Compare EX, 2.

LATENT.[9] 1. Not observable; not apparent: as, latent defects in an article of merchandise or machinery, or in an animal. See CAVEAT, Emptor; NEGLIGENCE.

2. Applying equally to two or more different things; opposed to patent: as, a latent ambiguity, q. v.

LATERAL.[10] Proceeding from, or connected with, a side or one side: as, a lateral railroad, lateral support, qq. v. Compare BILATERAL; COLLATERAL.

[1] Cal. Penal Code, § 7; 70 Cal. 533.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 232-35; 72 N. Y. 349, infra.

[3] Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325 (1878): 125 id. 393 (1878), cases; Phelps v. People, 72 N. Y. 334, 348 (1878), cases.

[4] L. lascivus: laxus. loose.

[5] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[6] Jones v. Commonwealth, 80 Va. 18, 20 (1885), cases.

[7] Pleasant v. State, 17 Ala. 191 (1850), Dargan, C. J.

[8] Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 233, 236 (1857).

[9] L. latens: latere, to lie hid.

[10] L. latus, a side.

LATH. See TIMBER.

LATIN. Compare FRENCH.

Pleadings and records were at first written in the Latin language; later, in the Norman or law-French. The arguments of counsel and the decisions of the courts were likewise in Latin.

"Law-Latin" is a technical language, easily apprehended, and durable. On these accounts it is suited to preserve memorials intended for perpetual rules of action.

In the time of Cromwell (1649-60), records were written in English. Upon the restoration of Charles II (1660), that innovation was discountenanced: practitioners found the Latin the more concise and significant. Statute of 4 Geo. II (1730), c. 26, directed that proceedings should again be written out in English, that the common people might understand somewhat of processes, pleadings, record entries, etc. But the translations of many phrases, names of writs and processes (such as nisi prius, fieri facias, habeas corpus), sounded so ridiculous that, two years later, by 6 Geo. II, c. 14, all technical terms were allowed to remain in Latin. As regards its technical expressions, the law merely stands upon the same footing as other studies.[1]

The conciseness, expressiveness, and condensability of the Latin language fitted it for preserving the principles of jurisprudence. The civil and canon laws were in Latin, and quoted in the original, as often as translated. After the Conquest, the conflict between Saxon and French promoted the use of an available neutral speech. As the use and knowledge of Latin declined, misuse of its terms became frequent. See ARRAIGN.

LAUNCH. A vessel already in the water cannot be "launched," the meaning of which in such cases is, "to cause to move or slide from the land into the water."[2]

LAUNDRIES. See CHINESE.

A city ordinance which makes it an offense to keep a laundry wherein clothes are cleansed for hire, within the limits of the larger part of a city, without regard to the character of the structure or the appliances used for the purpose, or the manner in which the occupation is carried on, is unconstitutional.[3]

To make an occupation, indispensable to the health and comfort of civilized man, and the use of the property necessary to carry it on, a nuisance, by an arbitrary declaration in a city ordinance, and suppress it as such, is to confiscate the property and to deprive its owner of it without due process of law. It also abridges the liberty of the owner to select his own occupation and methods in the pursuit of happiness, and thereby prevents him from enjoying his rights, privileges and immunities, and deprives him of the equal protection of the laws, secured to every person by the Constitution.[3]

The ordinances of San Francisco giving the board of supervisors authority, in their discretion, to refuse

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 317-23; 4 id. 418.

[2] Homer v. Lady of the Ocean, 70 Me. 352 (1879).

[3] Re Sam Kee, 31 F. R. 680 (1887), Sawyer, J.

permission to carry on laundries, except when located in buildings of brick or stone, are unconstitutional.[1]

So is an ordinance providing that permission shall be granted only upon recommendation of twelve citizens and taxpayers in the particular block.[2]

So is an ordinance which makes it an offense for any person to carry on a laundry for pay, within the habitable portion of the city.[3]

But an ordinance prohibiting washing and ironing between certain hours of the night may be constitutional.[4]

LAW.[5] 1. A rule of action dictated by a superior being.[6] The command of a superior.[7]

A command addressed by the sovereign of the state to his subjects, imposing duties, and enforced by punishments.[8]

Laws are made for the government of actions.[9]

The parts of a law are: the "declaratory" part, which defines the right to be observed and the wrong to be eschewed; the "directory" part, which enjoins observance of the right and abstaining from the wrong; the "remedial" part, which provides a method to recover a right or to redress a wrong; and, the "vindicatory" part, which prescribes the penalty for a transgression.[10]

2. In an important use "law" excludes the methods and remedies peculiar to equity and admiralty, and confines the idea to the action of tribunals proceeding by fixed rules, and employing remedies operative directly upon the person or property of the individual; as, in the expressions, a court of law, a remedy at law, an action at law, at law.[11] Compare Common Law.

3. A positive law; an enactment; an act of the legislative department of government; a statute.[12]

4. "Law" and "the law" frequently refer to systematized rules of action,—the science of jurisprudence as a study or a profession.

The primary end of law is to maintain and regulate the absolute rights of individuals.[1]

The law is a science which distinguishes the criterions of right and wrong, and teaches to establish the one and to prevent, punish, or redress the other.[2]

Locke's division of law: divine law—the law of God, natural or revealed; civil law—the municipal law; law of reputation—morality.

Austin's division: divine law—the revealed law of God; positive human law—municipal law; positive morality—morality; laws metaphorically so called—the laws of animate and inanimate nature.[3]

The "laws of a state" usually mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long established local customs having the force of laws. The decisions of the courts are only evidence of what the laws are.[4]

The term "laws" includes not only written expressions of the governing will, but also all other rules of property and conduct in which the supreme power exhibits, and according to which it exerts, its governmental force.[5]

Natural law, or law of nature. The rule of human action prescribed by the Creator, and discoverable by the light of reason.[6]

Divine or revealed law. The law of nature, imparted by God himself.[6]

Law of nations, or international law. The law which regulates the conduct and mutual intercourse of independent states with each other by reason and natural justice.[7]

Law of the flag. The law of the nation to which a vessel belongs.

Civil law. The law of citizens: the law which the people of a state ordain for their own government.

(1) By "the civil law," absolutely taken, is understood the civil or municipal law of the Roman empire, as comprised in the institute, code, and digest of the emperor Justinian, and the novel constitutions of himself and predecessors.[8]

Whatever strength these imperial laws may have obtained in Great Britian is due to immemorial usage

---

[1] Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 365 (1886), Matthews, J.

[2] Re Quong Woo, 13 F. R. 229 (1882), Field, J.

[3] Re Tie Loy, 26 F. R. 611 (1886)—Stockton Case, Sawyer, J.

[4] Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703 (1885), Field, J.; Barbier v. Connolly, ib. 27 (1885).

[5] A. S. lagu, that which is laid, set, fixed: L. lex. Compare Statute, Constitution.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 38.

[7] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 39.

[8] 2 Stephen, Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 76: Austin.

[9] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 166 (1878), Waite, Chief Justice.

[10] [1 Bl. Com. 53.

[11] [Abbott's Law Dict.; Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 17 F. R. 469 (1883).

[12] See Walter v. Greenwood, 29 Minn. 89 (1882).

[1] [1 Bl. Com. 124.

[2] [1 Bl. Com. 27. See 25 Tex. 253.

[3] Austin, Jurisp., Lect. I, sec. 8. See Maine, Anc Law, Ch. V.

[4] Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 18 (1842), Story, J.

[5] Phelps v. The City of Panama, 1 Wash. T. 529 (1877), Greene, A. J.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. xxiv, 39-42; 11 Ark. 527; 54 Am. Dec. 317.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. xxiv, 43.

[8] 1Bl. Com. 80, 14; 5 La. 493.

in particular cases and in particular courts, or to introduction by express consent of Parliament.[1] See PANDECTS.

(2) The laws which a community or state has established for the regulation of its own affairs, as distinguished from the law of nations; also, that portion of such laws which regulates dealings between subjects or citizens, in distinction from criminal law, military law, maritime law, and the general law-merchant. Compare Municipal Law.

Organic law. The fundamental law of a community or state, whether written or unwritten.

Positive law. May refer to law actually existing at a given time, or to enacted law.

General law. Relates to a whole genus or kind, to a whole class or order. Opposed, local or special law. See Public Law.

A law which affects a class of persons or things less than all, may be a "general" law.[2]

A general law may not import universality in the subjects or in its operation.[3]

General laws relate to or bind all within the jurisdiction of the law-making power, limited as that power may be in its territorial operation or by constitutional restraints.[4]

A "special" law is such as, at common law, the courts would not notice unless it were pleaded and proved like any other fact.[5]

That a statute be "public" it is not necessary that it be equally applicable to all parts of the State. All that is required is that it apply to all persons within the territorial limits described in the act. "Special" laws provide for individual cases. "Local" laws, while applicable to all persons, are confined in their operation to certain prescribed or defined territorial limits.[6]

Public law. (1) International law.

(2) A law involving public interests. Opposed, private law: a law for the benefit of an individual or individuals.

In one sense "public" law designates international law, as distinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state; and in another sense, a law or statute that applies to the people generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it, as opposed to a "private" law which affects an individual or a small number of persons.[1]

Legislative acts concerning public interests are necessarily "public" laws. These may be abolished at the will of the legislature. . . The Dartmouth College Case has no application where a statute is a public law relating to a public subject within the dominion of the general legislative power of the State, and involving the public rights and public welfare of the entire community.[2]

Foreign law. A law of another sovereignty or nation.

Foreign laws and usages are to us matters of fact,[3] and must be proved as facts; but not so with the law of nations.[4]

The existence of a foreign law is not judicially noticed, unless proved as a fact. A written law is proved by a copy properly authenticated; unwritten law, by the testimony of experts, that is, by those acquainted with the law. As to the manner of authentication there is no general rule, except this: that no proof shall be received which presupposes better attainable testimony. A written law may be verified by an oath, or by an exemplification of a copy, under the seal of the state, or by a copy proved to be a true copy by a witness who has examined and compared the copy with the original, or by a certificate of an officer authorized to give a copy, the certificate being duly proved. But these modes are not exclusive of others, especially of codes and accepted histories.[5]

The courts of one state not being presumed to know, are not bound to take judicial notice of, the laws of another State. In this respect they are foreign to each other. The Supreme Court, exercising an appellate jurisdiction, takes judicial notice of the laws of every State, because those laws are known to the court below as laws alone, needing no averment or proof.[6] See COMITY; FAITH AND CREDIT.

Municipal law. The rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong;[7] also, the laws of a locality.

The municipal laws of England are the unwritten or common law, and written or statute laws.[8] See Written Law.

Pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law,

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 80, 14; 5 La. 493.

[2] Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 376 (1869), Sanderson, J.

[3] Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 8 (1878), Beasley, C. J.; ib. 125.

[4] Sedgwick, Stat. & Const. Law, 80: People v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 589 (1876); 102 id. 219, 229.

[5] Hingle v. State, 24 Ind. 34 (1865), Fraser, J.; 26 id. 681; 27 id. 95.

[6] State v. Commissioners of Baltimore County, 29 Md. 520 (1868), Alvey, J. See also 17 Cal. 547; 19 Iowa, 63; 22 id. 391; 26 id. 340; 46 N. J. L. 473, 513; 29 N. J. E. 126, 391; 106 Pa. 377.

[1] Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 786 (1861), Peck, J.

[2] Newton v. Commissioners of Mahoning County, 100 U. S. 557-59 (1879), cases, Swayne, J.

[3] Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 20 (1875).

[4] The Scotia, 14 Wall. 188 (1871).

[5] Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 426 (1852), cases, Wayne, J.; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 551 (1883); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 287-316, cases.

[6] Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 4, 6 (1886), cases, Gray, J.; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 id. 751 (1887). See generally 19 Cent. Law J. 296-99, 342-47 (1884), cases.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 44; 15 Barb. 114.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 63.

commercial law, and the law of nations. Is now more usually applied to the customary laws that obtain in any particular city, or province, and which have no authority in neighboring places.[1]

Defines the just and necessary limits of natural liberty.[2]

A city ordinance (q. v.) is not a law in this sense.

A constitution is a law in the sense that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.[3] See further IMPAIR.

Common law. The law common to all the realm. A collection of maxims and customs, of higher antiquity than memory or history can reach.[4]

Nothing else but custom, arising from the universal agreement of the whole community.[5]

Custom handed down by tradition, use, and experience.[6] See Unwritten Law.

Reason dealing by the light of experience with human affairs.[7]

A system of elementary principles and of general juridical truths, which are continually expanding with the progress of society.[8]

Common law develops with new ideas of right and justice.[9]

Common law grows out of the general customs of the country, and consists of definitions of them and of those ancillary principles that naturally accompany them, or are deduced from them. The common law of our country or century is not necessarily the common law of another, because customs change. It is a sort of law created by the people themselves. When the judges declare it, they merely discover and declare what they find existing in the life of the people as a rule of their relations. When the custom ceases, the law ceases. It is this law that people emigrating take with them — by tacit adoption, as far as is consistent with their new circumstances.[10]

The term may be used in distinction to "statute law," to "equity law," and the "Roman law" or "civil law."

Every country has its common law. Ours is composed partly of the common law of England, and partly of our own usages. When our ancestors emigrated from England they took with them such of the English principles as were convenient for the situation in which they were about to place themselves. . . By degrees, as circumstances demanded, we adopted the English usages, or substituted others better suited to our wants, till at length, before the time of the revolution, we had formed a system of our own, founded in general on the English constitution, but not without considerable variations.[1]

The common law of England is not to be taken in all respects as that of America. Our ancestors brought with them its general principles, and claimed it as their birthright; but they brought with them and adopted only that portion which was applicable to their situation.[2]

The common law of England can be made part of our Federal system only by legislative adoption. The United States has no common law. Each State may have its own local customs and common law. The power of the United States is expressed in the Constitution, laws, and treaties. The English common law was adopted by the original Thirteen Colonies only so far as it suited their conditions, from which circumstance what is common law in one State is not so considered in another. The judicial decisions, the usages and customs of the respective States, determine to what extent the common law has been introduced into each State.[3]

The old common law is the basis of all State laws, modified as each sees fit.[4]

It has been repeatedly held that the common law of England, up to the time of the Declaration of Independence, is as much a part of our system of jurisprudence as it is of that of Great Britain. The decisions of the common-law courts of the country show what that common law is. We have modified the law by enactments and practice.[5]

The common law being the substratum of the jurisprudence of the Thirteen States by which the Constitution was adopted, and the framers being educated under it, the terms of the instrument are to be construed by the common law.[6]

Nor have the Federal courts jurisdiction of common-law offenses. The laws of the Federal govern-

---

[1] [Wharton's Law Dict.

[2] [1 Shars. Bl. Com. 127.

[3] Ohio, &c. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. 515 (1870); Pacific R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 id. 36 (1873); Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 31 N. J. E. 728 (1879); Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 135 (1886).

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 67; 2 id. 95.

[5] [1 Bl. Com. 472.

[6] [1 Bl. Com. 17.

[7] Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 584 (1879), Swayne, J.

[8] Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 240 (1872).

[9] Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 531 (1884).

[10] Effinger v. Lewis, 32 Pa. 369 (1859), Lowrie, C. J.; 37 id. 19. See also Jacob v. State, 3 Humph. 514-15 (1842); Morgan v. King, 30 Barb. 13-15 (1858).

[1] Guardians of the Poor v. Greene, 5 Binn. *558 (1813), Tilghman, C. J.

[2] Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. *144 (1829), Story, J. See also 1 Story, Const. § 157; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 561 (1837); Clawson v. Primrose, 4 Del. Ch. 652-53 (1873); Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 435 (1793).

[3] Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. *658-59 (1834), M'Lean, J.

[4] The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 572 (1874); Clark v. Clark, 17 Nev. 128 (1882).

[5] Brown v. Philadelphia, &c. R. Co., 9 F. R. 185 (1881)

[6] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 66-67.

ment, as stated, are embodied in the Constitution, acts of Congress, and treaties made by its authority.[1]

The Federal courts do not enforce the common law in municipal matters in the States because it is Federal law, but because it is the law of the State.[2]

The common law is necessarily referred to by the Federal authorities for definitions.[3] It is a general repository of rules, principles, and forms.[4]

Because the Federal criminal jurisprudence has no substratum of common-law crimes upon which to draw for elements of an offense, the courts must follow the statutes exclusively; using the common law, if necessary, only for definitions of terms.[5]

When acts of Congress use words which are familiar in the law of England, they are supposed to be used with reference to their meaning in that law.[6]

By "common law" and "law," the framers of the Constitution meant not merely suits which the common law recognized; but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights and remedies were regarded; or, where, as in admiralty, a mixture of public law and of maritime law and equity were often found in the same suit.[7] See JUDICIAL, Power.

While we have no general system of judicial national common law, in matters not subject to judicial jurisdiction, we have a complete system of "executive national common law," which frequently differs from the common law administered in the courts. . . In the administration of the various executive departments, usages have prevailed and are growing up; national and international common-law principles have been, and are being, announced and settled; construction has been, and is being, given to all the written laws,—an entire system of executive national common law is in full operation. This grows out of executive administration, and the perfect independence of co-ordinate departments.[8]

There is no common law of the United States, in the sense of a "national customary law," distinct from the common law of England, as adopted by the several States each for itself, applied as its local law, and subject to such alteration as may be provided by its own statute. A determination in a given case of what that law is may be different in a court of the United States from that which prevails in the judicial tribunals of a particular State. This arises from the circumstance that the courts of the United States, in cases within their jurisdiction, where they are called upon to administer the law of the state in which they sit or by which the transaction is governed, exercise an independent though concurrent jurisdiction, and are required to ascertain and declare the law according to their own judgment. . . There is, however, one clear exception to the statement that there is no national common law. The interpretation of the Constitution is necessarily influenced by the fact that its provisions are framed in the language of the English common law, and are to be read in the light of its history. The code of constitutional and statutory construction which, therefore, is gradually formed by the judgments of the Supreme Court, in the application of the Constitution and the laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof, has for its basis so much of the common law as may be implied in the subject, and constitutes a common law resting upon national authority.[1]

One of the merits of the common is that, instead of being a series of detailed practical rules, established by positive provisions, and adapted to the precise circumstances of particular cases, which would become obsolete when the course of business ceased or changed, it consists of a few comprehensive principles, founded on reason, natural justice, and enlightened public policy, modified and adapted to the circumstances of all the cases which fall within it. These general principles are rendered precise, specific, and adapted to practical use, by usage, which is the proof of their general convenience, but still more by judicial exposition; so that, when in a course of proceeding by tribunals of the highest authority, the general rule has been modified, limited and applied, according to particular cases, such exposition, when settled and acquiesced in, becomes itself a precedent, and forms a rule of law for future cases under like circumstances. The effect of this expansive character of the common law is, that while it has its foundations in the principles of equity, natural justice, and that general convenience which is public policy,—although these general considerations would be too uncertain for practical purposes, in the business of an active community,—yet the rules of that law, so far as cases have arisen and practices actually grown up, are rendered precise and certain by usage and judicial precedent. Another consequence is, that when new practices spring up, new combinations of facts arise, and cases are presented for which there is no precedent in decision, they must be governed by the general principle, applicable to cases most nearly analogous, but modified and adapted to new circumstances, by considerations of fitness and propriety, of reason and justice, which grow out of those circumstances. Hence, when a new practice or course of business arises, the rights and duties of

[1] Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 13 How. 563 (1851), M'Lean, J.

[2] Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 700 (1882), Bradley, J. See Livingston v. Jefferson, 4 Hughes, 606 (1811); 1 Kent, 378.

[3] United States v. Durkee, 1 McAllister, 201 (1856).

[4] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 303, 323 (1850).

[5] United States v. De Groat, 30 F. R. 766 (1887), Hammond, J.

[6] United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U. S. 280 (1888). The Judiciary Act of 1789, § 3, which created the office of attorney-general, without accurate definition of his powers, in saying that "there shall be appointed a meet person, learned in the law," etc., must have had reference to the similar office, with the same designation, existing under the English law. And see, as to a treaty between Mexico and the United States, Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 466 (1888).

[7] Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. *447 (1830), Story, J. See Fenn v. Holme, 21 How. 486 (1858), cases; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 497 (1883), cases.

[8] 3 Lawrence, Compt. Dec. xxii-iv; United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. *15 (1833).

[1] Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 478 (1888), cases, Matthews, J.

parties are not without a law to govern them; the general considerations of reason, justice, and policy, which underlie the rules of the common law, will still apply, modified and adapted, by the same considerations, to the new circumstances. If these are such as give rise to litigation, they, like previous cases, soon come to be settled by judicial exposition, and the principles thus settled come to have the effect of precise and practical rules.[1]

Law of the States. The general system of law regulating the relative rights and duties of persons within the jurisdiction of a State, operating upon them even when engaged in inter-State commerce, and subject to be modified by State legislation, whether consisting in that customary law which prevails as the common law of the land in each State, or as a code of positive provisions expressly enacted, is nevertheless the law of the State in which it is administered, and derives its force and effect from the actual or presumed exercise of its legislative power.

This law does not emanate from the authority of the National government, nor flow from the exercise of any legislative powers conferred upon Congress, nor can it be implied as existing by force of any other legislative authority than that of the several States in which it is enforced. It has never been doubted that this entire body and system of law, regulating in general the relative rights and duties of persons within the territorial jurisdiction of the State, without regard to their pursuits, is subject to change at the will of the legislature of each State, except as that will may be restrained by the Constitution of the United States. It is to this law that persons within the scope of its operation look for the definition of their rights and for the redress of wrongs. It is the source of all those relative obligations and duties enforceable by law, the observance of which the State undertakes to enforce as its public policy. And it was in contemplation of the continued existence of this separate system of law in each State that the Constitution was framed and ordained with such legislative powers as are therein granted expressly or by reasonable implication.[2]

Written law; unwritten law. The municipal laws of England are: (1) The unwritten or common law, which includes customs, general and particular, and particular laws. General customs, or the common law properly so called, are founded on immemorial universal usage, whereof judicial decisions are the evidence. Particular laws are such as, by special custom, are adopted and used only in particular courts, and under the control of the common and statute laws; namely, the Roman civil, and canon laws. (2) The written or statute law; being acts of legislative bodies, to supply what is defective, or to amend what is amiss, in the unwritten laws.[1] See STATUTE.

Law of the land. (1) The general public law of a State, binding upon all the members of the community under all circumstances, and not partial or private laws, affecting the rights of private individuals or classes of individuals.[2] Also, due process of law. See PROCESS, 1, Due, etc.

(2) "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land."[3]

This means that the Federal Constitution, laws and treaties, are to be of paramount obligation when State and Federal laws conflict — the principle on which the authority of the Constitution is based.[4] See GOVERNMENT.

The term "law" accompanies many common words as a prefix or adjective, in senses largely self-explanatory: as, law-adviser, law-blanks, law-clerk, law-firm, law-publications, law-writer, law-language, law-terms, law-Latin, law-judge, law-maxims, law-maker, law-officer, law-practice, law-reports, law-side, law-student.

Maxims: The contract makes the law. The law aids the vigilant; forces no one to do a vain, useless, or impossible thing; injures no one — never works an injury; does nothing in vain; regards not trifles; regards equity; always gives a remedy; speaks to all with one mouth — is no respector of persons. What is just and right is the law of laws.

Law day. The day appointed in a mortgage for the payment of the money; originally, the time after which all legal rights were to be forfeited.[5]

Compare LEX. See BY-LAW; CANON; CHURCH; CODE; COMMERCIAL; CONSTITUTION; LYNCH; MARITIME; MARTIAL; MERCHANT; MILITARY; PAMPHLET; POLITICAL.

See also ACT, 3; BILL, II; CONFLICT; COURT; DECIS-

[1] Norway Plains Co. v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 1 Gray, 267–68 (1854), Shaw, C. J. See also, in general, 22 Am. Law Rev. 1–29, 30–56, 57–65 (1888); 21 id. 270–84 (1887).

[2] Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 475 (1888), Matthews, Justice.

[1] [1 Bl. Com. 63–91, XXIV.

[2] Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 301 (1886), cases, Scholfield, J. See also 61 Ill. 118; 5 Mich. 254; 50 Miss. 479; 48 N. H. 61; 20 Barb. 199; 67 Pa. 479; 6 R. I. 146; 6 Heisk. 189; 30 Wis. 146.

[3] Constitution, Art. VI, par. 2.

[4] Exp. Siebold, 100 U. S. 399, 392 (1879), Bradley, J.; Exp. Wall, 107 id. 289 (1882); 21 Cent. Law J. 147–48 (1885), cases; Cooley, Const. Lim. 353.

[5] Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 345, 365, 367 (1860); 11 id. 365; 10 Conn. 280; 24 Ala. 149; 70 id. 265–66; 17 F. R. 778.

SON; FORUM; JUDGE; JUDGMENT; JURY; LAWFUL; LAWYER; LEARNED; OUTLAW; PLACE, 1; PRESCRIPTION, 1; PROTECTION; PROVIDED; RELIGION; REPEAL; RETROSPECTIVE; RIGHT; ROAD, 1; SANCTION; TECHNICAL; UNIFORM.

LAWFUL. In accordance with the law of the land; according to the law; permitted, sanctioned, or justified by law.

Unlawful. Implies that an act is done or not done as the law allows or requires.[1]

"Lawful," "unlawful," and "illegal," refer to that which in its substance is sanctioned or prohibited by the law. "Legal" occasionally refers to matter of form alone. Thus, an oral agreement to convey land, though void by law, is not "unlawful:" it is "illegal," because not in lawful form.[2]

"Lawful" properly implies a thing conformable to or enjoined by law; "legal," a thing in the form or after the manner of law or binding by law.[3] See further LEGAL.

A "lawful" writ, warrant, or other process does not imply a process legally sufficient, but is the same as "legal" process or process "of law." A writ or warrant issuing from any court, under color of law, is a "legal" process, however defective.[4]

The insertion of "unlawfully" in an indictment may not dispense with the necessity of specifically alleging the elements of the offense.[5]

But the charge of an offense in the precise words of the statute will dispense with the addition of "unlawfully."[6]

"It shall be lawful" may, or may not, impose an imperative duty.[7]

Other expressions are: lawful age;[8] lawful and unlawful assembly, q. v.; lawful and unlawful condition or covenant, qq. v.; lawful deed, q. v.; lawful discharge;[9] lawful goods;[10] lawful issue;[11] lawful juror;[12] lawful money,[13] q. v.; lawful trade;[14] lawful authorities.[15]

Compare JURIDICAL; LEGITIMATE; ILLICIT; VALID; VOID.

LAWSUIT. An action between adversary parties; opposed to an ex-parte proceeding.

May include an arbitration.[16] See LIS, Pendens; MAINTENANCE, 1.

LAWYER.[1] A popular term for a person whose business it is to know and to practice law: give advice, prepare papers, conduct proceedings, etc.

The term does not discriminate between the functions of an advocate, attorney, barrister, counsellor, conveyance, proctor, and solicitor.

Any person who, for fee or reward, prosecutes or defends causes in courts of record, or other judicial tribunals of the United States, or of any of the States, or whose business is to give legal advice in relation to any cause or matter whatever.[2] See ATTORNEY.

LAY. 1, adj. (1) Pertaining to the laity, not of the legal profession.

Layman. A person not admitted to practice law; one not learned in the law.[3]

(2) Not ecclesiastical; organized for secular purposes: as, a lay corporation, q. v.[4]

2, v. To state, name, allege, charge: as, to lay an offense, damages, venue.[4] Compare LIE, 1 (2).

Lay days. Days allowed for loading and unloading the cargo of a vessel.[5] See WORKING-DAYS.

Lay out. In highway laws, embraces, ordinarily, all the acts necessary to the complete establishment of a highway.[6]

May include every order of municipal authorities by which private property is taken for public use.[7]

To locate and establish a new highway.[8]

May mean to take and maintain a road.[9]

"Lay out and complete a street:" to determine the time at which it shall be graded, finished, and fitted for travel; to make a de facto street.[10]

"Lay out" and "lay off" a road: to lay down the whole ground covered, specifying the width.[11]

LEAD, v. To conduct in the way of duty. More frequently, "mislead." See INSTRUCT, 2.

Lead a use. To declare or specify what use.[12]

Lead a witness. To suggest, by interrogation, the nature of the answer or answers

---

[1] State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 468 (1887).

[2] [Bouvier's Law Dict.]

[3] [Crabbe, Syn. 579, ed. 1879.

[4] Nason v. Staples, 48 Me. 128 (1857).

[5] Commonwealth v. Byrnes, 126 Mass. 249 (1879), cases.

[6] United States v. Thompson, 6 McLean, 56 (1853).

[7] See 17 N. J. L. 169; 1 Edw. 84; 11 Ad. & E. 223

[8] 4 Md. Ch. 228.

[9] 1 Wheat. 447; 12 id. 377.

[10] 1 Johns. Cas. 1; 2 id. 77, 120.

[11] 3 Edw. 1; 10 B. Mon. 188; 21 Tex. 804.

[12] 10 Yerg. 524.

[13] 16 Ark. 85; 3 Ind. 358; 2 How, 244; 3 id. 717.

[14] 15 Wend. 18; 3 T. R. 782.

[15] 8 Pet. 449; 9 id. 711.

[16] Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. 434, 441 (1827).

---

[1] -yer is a suffix, as in sawyer.

[2] Revenue Act 13 July, 1866, § 79: 14 St. L. 121.

[3] Gk. laos, the people.

[4] A. S. lecgan, to cause to lay: licgan, to lie.

[5] 3 Kent. 202.

[6] [Cone v. Hartford, 28 Conn. 375 (1859), Storrs, C. J.; 19 id. 597.

[7] Fuller v. Springfield, 123 Mass. 291 (1877), Gray, C. J.

[8] Foster v. Park Commissioners, 133 Mass. 329 (1882), Field, J.

[9] Charlestown, &c. R. Co. v. County Commissioners, 7 Metc. 84 (1843).

[10] Bowman v. Boston, 5 Cush. 8 (1849); Fernald v. Boston, 12 id. 578-79 (1853).

[11] Small v. Eason, 11 Ired. L. 97 (1850).

[12] See 2 Bl. Com. 363.

it is desired that the witness shall make. See Leading Question.

Lead in a cause or trial. To have the chief management of one side of a matter in litigation. See Leading Counsel.

Leading case. A decision which is regarded, more or less generally, as settling the law upon the question involved.

The idea may have been originally that such case stands first, in time, in a series of cases — takes the lead, is followed by others, enunciates the rule.

Decisions, with and without annotations, and illustrative of different branches of the law, have been collected and styled "Leading Cases."

Leading counsel. That attorney, of two or more employed upon the same side of a cause, who has the principal management of his client's case.

Leading question. A question which plainly suggests the answer wanted from a witness. See further QUESTION, 1.

LEAD-WORKS. See NUISANCE.

LEAF. See FOLIO.

LEAGUE. The jurisdiction of the United States extends into the sea a marine league or three geographical miles,[1] q. v.

LEAKAGE. An allowance for loss by leaking.

When bottles which have been filled and corked are found partly empty, while still whole, and the corks in their places, the deficiency, whether called "ullage" or "wantage" or by any other name, can only have arisen from leakage.[2]

LEANING. The courts are said to lean or to have a leaning against a particular construction or result, when some rule of policy or expediency directs them to presume in favor of another view or result.[3]

LEAP. See YEAR.

LEARNED. Judges who have been regularly educated in the law by study and practice are said to be "learned in the law," in distinction from judges, not possessing such qualifications and said to be "not learned" or "unlearned" in the law, who formerly, as advisers or associates, sat with such law-judges.

LEASE.[4] A conveyance of any lands or tenements (usually in consideration of rent or other annual recompense,) made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor has in the premises.[1]

A conveyance of the whole interest constitutes an assignment.[2]

Also, to convey the use of realty by a lease. See LET, 2.

A contract for the possession and profits of land and tenements on the one side, and a recompense of rent or other income on the other; in other words, a conveyance to a person for life, or years, or at will, in consideration of a return of rent or other recompense.[3]

The creation of an estate for years, commonly called a term. While this is both the ordinary and the strictly legal signification, the word may be used in a different sense.[4]

A lease for years is a contract for the possession and profits of lands for a determinate period, with the recompense of rent.[5]

A conveyance by the owner of an estate to another of a portion of his interest therein, for a term less than his own, in consideration of a certain annual or stated rent, or other recompense.[6]

Lessor. A person who grants a lease.

Lessee. He to whom a lease is made.

The usual words are "demise, grant, and to farm let."[7] It is not necessary that "lease" be used. Whatever is equivalent will be equally available, if the words assume the form of a license, covenant, or agreement, and the other requisites of a lease as a contract are present.[8]

A lessee entering into possession under a lease is estopped, while retaining possession, to deny his landlord's title. This arises from the nature of the contract of lease, which is for the possession and use, for a prescribed period, of the lessor's property, under considerations to him by way of rent or otherwise. It implies an obligation to surrender the premises to the lessor on the termination of the lease, that is, at the expiration of the time during which the owner has stipulated that the lessee may have the use and possession of his property. The lessee cannot be allowed

[1] Acts 5 June, 1794, 20 April, 1818; 1 Story, Laws, 352; 3 id. 1694.

[2] Cory v. Boylston Ins. Co., 107 Mass 144 (1871).

[3] See First Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 673 (1877), Harlan, J.; 111 id. 341-42.

[4] F. laisser, to let go: L. laxare, to slacken, let go.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 317.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 317; 105 Pa. 473; 13 R. I. 353.

[3] Branch v. Doane, 17 Conn. 411 (1845), Storrs, J., quoting 4 Cruise, Dig. 67. See also 24 Me. 545; 21 N. J. L. 388; 42 N. J. E. 333; 7 Cow. 326; 1 Pars. Contr. 505.

[4] Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corporation v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 167-69 (1864), Bigelow, C. J.

[5] United States v. Gratiot, 14 Pet. 538 (1840), Thompson, J.; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 101 U. S. 78 (1879).

[6] Gray v. La Fayette County, 65 Wis. 570 (1886), Lyon, J.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 317.

[8] Moore v. Miller, 8 Pa. 268 (1848), Coulter, J.

to controvert the title of the lessor without disparaging his own, and he cannot set up the title of another without violating that contract by which he obtained and holds possession, and breaking that faith which he has pledged, and the obligation of which is still continuing and in full operation.[1]

A lease may be at will, for years, for life, of perpetual duration,— for any period which will not exceed the interest of the lessor, and subject to a condition, which is a qualification annexed to the estate by the grantor, or lessor, whereby the estate or term granted may, among other things, be defeated or terminated.[2]

A lease not to exceed three years from the making need not be in writing. But in Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Ohio, Vermont, and perhaps in other States, a parol lease creates merely a tenancy at will.[3]

Lease and release. A conveyance for transferring a fee-simple.

Invented after the Statute of Uses was enacted. A lease (a bargain and sale) for years was made by the tenant of the freehold. This, unrecorded, made the bargainor stand seized to the use of the bargainee, and vested in the latter the use of the term; whereupon the statute immediately vested the possession. The bargainee, being in possession, could receive a release of the freehold and reversion, which was made the next day — and this supplied the place of livery of seisin, and amounted to a feoffment.[4]

Leasehold. An estate in land for a fixed term of years.

The disposition has been to assimilate leaseholds, at least for long terms, to real estate. The courts have sometimes construed the words "realty" and "lands" to include them. Some of the States have by statute made them real estate.[5]

At common law, a leasehold interest in land is personal property, and subject to levy and sale as such.[6]

Perpetual lease. A lease unlimited in respect to length of term; a fee-farm. See FARM.

Short lease; long lease. In common speech, refer, somewhat indefinitely, to the period of time a lease is to run.

Sublease; underlease. A lease of premises already leased, made by the first lessee. Whence sub-lessee, under-lessee: a sub-tenant, an under-tenant.[1]

See CONDITION; CROP; DEMISE; ENJOYMENT; FLOOR; GRANT, 2, 3; LANDLORD; MINERAL; MONTH; NUISANCE; PARTIES; RELEASE; RENT; SURRENDER, 3; WAIVER; YEARS; YIELDING.

LEAST. See AT LEAST.

LEAVE. 1. To die seized of or owning.[2]

2. To dispose of by will: as, for a decedent to "leave" property to a certain person.[3]

3. To die with kindred surviving.

"Leave" no issue, referring to realty, means an indefinite failure of issue; referring to personalty, a definite failure of issue.[4]

A posthumous child may be said to be a child whom an intestate "leaves" at his death.[5] See DIE, Without children.

Leave of court. Permission given by a court to do something; as, to withdraw an appearance, or a paper filed.

Compare DESERTION; LICENSE; START.

LECTURES. Compare DRAMA.

Where persons are admitted, as pupils or otherwise, to hear public lectures, it is upon the implied confidence and contract that they will not use any means to injure or take away the exclusive right of the lecturer in his lectures, whether that be to publication in print or to oral delivery.[6]

A professor in a university, orally delivering lectures of his own composition, does not so communicate them to the public as to entitle a hearer, without permission, to republish them.[7]

LEDGE. See VEIN.

LEDGER. See BOOK, Of accounts.

LEGACY.[8] A bequest, or gift, of goods and chattels by testament.[9]

A bequest of personalty; but will be construed to apply to realty, if the context requires it.[10] Compare DEVISE.

Legatee. The person to whom the gift is made.

---

[1] Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 614-15 (1883), Field, Justice. Quotes Marshall, C. J., in Blight's Lessee v. Rochester, 7 Wheat. 547 (1822). See also Rector v. Gibbon, 111 U. S. 284 (1884); Tilyou v. Reynolds, 108 N. Y. 563 (1888), cases.

[2] Warner v. Tanner, 38 Ohio St. 120 (1882), cases, Okey, C. J.

[3] 1 Washb. R. P. 614.

[4] 2 Bl. Com. 339; 4 Kent, 462.

[5] Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flip. 317, 318 (1878), Hammond, Judge.

[6] Freeman v. Dawson, 110 U. S. 270 (1884), cases. Effect of destruction of the estate, 94 Am. Dec. 662-65, cases. Implied warranties, 24 Cent. Law J. 149 (1887), cases.

[1] See University Publishing Co. v. Piffet, 34 La. An. 602 (1882); 24 Cent. Law J. 314 (1887), cases.

[2] [McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 363 (1872).

[3] Thorley v. Thorley, 10 East, 458 (1809).

[4] Hall v. Chaffee, 14 N. H. 231 (1843), cases.

[5] Pearson v. Carlton, 18 S. C. 57 (1882). See 1 Roper, Leg. 1553.

[6] Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 45 (1882), cases.

[7] Caird v. Sime, H. L., 12 Ap. Cas. 326 (1887): 36 Alb. Law J. 291; 26 Am. Law Reg. 754; ib. 762-69 (1887), cases. Commented on, 36 Alb. Law J. 258-60 (1887): London Law Times.

[8] Mid. Eng. legacie: L. legatum, a bequest: legare, to appoint as deputy.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 512.

[10] Burwell v. Mandeville, 2 How. 578 (1844), cases; Pratt v. McGhee, 17 S. C. 432-34 (1882), cases; Bacon v. Bacon, 55 Vt. 248 (1882), cases.

Demonstrative legacy. A bequest of a sum of money payable out of a particular fund or thing. A pecuniary legacy, given generally, but with demonstration of a particular fund as the source of its payment.[1]

A "demonstrative" legacy differs from a "specific" legacy in this respect, that if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause it is nevertheless entitled to come off the estate as a general legacy; and it differs from a "general" legacy in this, that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies.[2]

All cases proceed upon the principle that whether a legacy is demonstrative or specific must be decided by the intent of the testator as it appears from the will; and that, where a legacy is held to be demonstrative, a general intent is shown to have it paid without reference to the fund on which it is primarily charged.[3]

The rule that demonstrative legacies, or such as are payable out of a specific fund, are preferred, as to that fund, in a case of deficiency of assets to pay all legacies, is a rule of intention merely.[4]

General legacy. A legacy so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money, distinguished from all others of the same kind. Specific legacy. A bequest of a part of the testator's personal estate which is so distinguished.[5]

A legacy is "general" where its amount or value is a charge upon the general assets, and where, if these are sufficient to meet all the provisions of the will, it must be satisfied. A legacy is "specific" when it is limited to a particular thing, subject, or chose in action, so identified as to render the bequest inapplicable to any other; as, the bequest of a horse, a picture, a jewel, or a debt due from a person named, and, in special cases, even of a sum of money.[6]

A "specific" legacy is one that can be separated from the body of the estate and pointed out so as to individualize it, and enable it to be delivered to the legatee as a thing sui generis.[7]

A "general" legacy may or may not be a part of the testator's property; but a "specific" legacy must be a part, severed or distinguished.[8]

To make a legacy "specific" it must appear by express words, or by inference resting upon a strong, solid, rational interpretation of the will, that the testator intended that the legatee should take the particular thing and nothing else.[1]

If the thing specifically bequeathed does not remain at the death of the testator, there is no legacy.[2]

Vested legacy. When the interest of the legatee is so fixed as to be transmissible to his personal representatives, although he dies before the period arrives for payment of the money. Contingent legacy. When, from the terms of the bequest, or from the uncertainty of the event, upon which the legacy is made payable, no immediate interest passes to the legatee, but his title to the legacy depends upon his being in a condition to receive it when due.[3]

Where a legacy is given to a person to be paid or payable at or when he shall arrive at the age of twenty-one, or at a future definite period, the interest in the legacy vests immediately on the testator's death, the time being annexed to the payment and not to the gift of the legacy. This rule is positive except when clearly overborne by the expressed or necessarily implied intention of the testator.[4]

When there is a substantive bequest of money to be paid at a future time, the legacy is "vested." When there is no antecedent bequest, independent of the period fixed for payment, the legacy is "contingent."[5]

In England, when a legacy is given to a person "as," "if," "when," or "provided" he arrives at a certain age, or "at" that time, and there is no other controlling evidence of intention, the legacy is contingent. The rule is a correct one where the words "if" or "provided" are used, and in cases where the other words are used in giving a legacy to a minor if there is a provision for intermediate support or other evidence of an intention to give contingently.[6] See WHEN.

The words "in case" imply a condition as explicitly as "if," "upon," and the like, and express a contingency.[7]

A direction to pay when the legatee attains a certain age, the interest of the fund being given him in the meantime, shows that a present gift is intended, and the legacy vests in interest at the death of the testator. But a direction to pay at a future period vests in interest immediately, if the payment be post-

---

[1] Glass v. Dunn, 17 Ohio St. 424 (1867).

[2] Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. 316 (1869); 1 Roper, Leg. 191, 198. See also 47 Ala. 554; 56 Md. 122; 23 N. H. 154; 16 N. Y. 365; 19 Gratt. 438; 1 Ld. Cas. Eq., W. & T., *274.

[3] Stevens v. Fisher, 144 Mass. 127 (1887), cases, Devens, Judge.

[4] Rambo v. Rumer, 4 Del. Ch. 9 (1866); 1 Rop. 192.

[5] Tift v. Porter, 8 N. Y. 518 (1853); Schofield v. Adams, 12 Hun, 369 (1877): 1 Rop. 191.

[6] Langdon v. Astor's Executors, 3 Duer, 543 (1854), Duer, J.

[7] Harper v. Bibb, 47 Ala. 553 (1872), Peters, J.

[8] [Bothamley v. Sherson, L. R., 20 Eq. 308-9 (1875), Jessel, M. R. See also Bradford v. Haynes, 20 Me. 107 (1841); Loring v. Woodward, 41 N. H. 394 (1860); Re Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 601 (1867); Smith v. McKittrick, 51 Iowa, 551-52 (1879); Ashburner v. Maguire, 2 Ld. Cas. Eq., W. & T., *267, 274, 320, cases; 2 Williams, Ex. [1158], cases.

[1] Wyckoff v. Perrine, 37 N. J. E. 120-21 (1883): 1 Rop. 234.

[2] Hoke v. Herman, 21 Pa. 305 (1853), cases.

[3] 1 Roper, Leg. 550.

[4] Bayard v. Atkins, 10 Pa. 17-18 (1848), cases; Pennock v. Eagles, 102 id. 294 (1883).

[5] Bowman's Appeal, 34 Pa. 23 (1859), cases; Reed's Appeal, 118 Pa. 220 (1888).

[6] Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 285-86 (1866). See also House v. Ewen, 37 N. J. E. 374 (1883).

[7] Roberts' Appeal, 59 Pa. 72 (1868).

poned for the convenience of the estate or to let in some other interest.[1]

Ordinarily, an unqualified gift of the use, income and improvement of personal estate vests an absolute interest.[2]

A rule of construction is, that when a bequest is made to individuals by name, although they in fact constitute a class, the intention to give to them individually is indicated, and thus the share of one dying before the testator will become intestate property. But this rule, founded on the supposed wish of the testator, may be controlled by those portions of the will, if such exist, which indicate an intent that such shall not be the result. If it appears from the whole will that the testator intended that his beneficiaries should take as a class, the share of one who dies before the testator will go to the survivors.[3]

When a legacy is given to a class as "the children" of a person, and no period is fixed for the distribution of the legacy, it is considered as due at the testator's death, and none but children born or begotten previously are entitled to share in it. Where there is postponement of the division of a legacy given to a class until a period subsequent to the testator's death, any one who answers the description so as to come within the class at the time for division will be entitled to a share, though not in esse at the death of the testator, unless the will shows an intention in the testator to limit his bounty to such of the class as would answer the description when the will took effect by his death. Where the bequest is in terms immediate, and so intended to be, and the description of persons to take is general, there none that do not fall within the description at the time of the testator's death can take.[4] See EACH.

Other descriptive terms applied to legacies are: absolute, vesting at once, unconditionally; accumulative, cumulative, or additional, superadded to another legacy; alternative, of one of two things; conditional, dependent upon some event, contingent; lapsed, where the legatee dies before the testator, or before a specified event; residuary, of the residuum (q. v.) of the estate.

The want of permanency in the condition of different kinds of personal property has occasioned much difficulty in construing bequests of future interests in chattels personal. Without considering such bequests, and having in view only general bequests of personal property or money, the rule is that, by means of an express trust, personal property may be subjected to any limitations not inconsistent with the rule against perpetuities, and it is established that, by or without creating an express trust, an executory bequest of personal property to take effect on a contingency that must happen, if at all, on the death of the first taker, may be a valid bequest[1].

In cases of deficiency of assets, general legacies "abate" proportionably; but a specific legacy not at all, unless there is not sufficient without it. Demonstrative legacies abate as between themselves, and pari passu with specific legacies, but are preferred to general legacies.[2] See ABATEMENT, 2.

Specific legacies are invariably liable to "ademption;" as a rule, general and demonstrative legacies are not.[3] See ADEMPTION.

A legacy equal to or greater than a debt is a "satisfaction" of the debt; less than the debt, it is not a satisfaction pro tanto. But slight circumstances will rebut this presumption. Where there are two legacies of equal amounts, the legatee takes one only; otherwise, if the amounts are unequal.[4]

A bare direction that a devisee shall pay money to a legatee creates a personal obligation. To constitute a "charge upon the land" devised, there must be express words to that effect or a necessary implication that such was the intention.[5]

Realty will not be charged with the payment of debts and legacies when there is personalty more than sufficient to pay them, unless the intention to charge the realty and exonerate the personalty is clear.[6]

When the testator has not created an express trust fund wherewith to pay legacies, but has made a general residuary disposition of his whole estate, blending realty and personalty in one fund, the realty is constructively charged with the legacies.[7]

If a legacy is made a personal charge on a devisee, acceptance of the devise imposes a personal liability on him, and he takes as a purchaser in fee; but if the legacy is charged on the estate, he takes as a beneficial devisee.[8]

A devise or bequest to a person for the benefit of himself and others, though accompanied with power to sell, lease, use, or expend, does not confer an absolute property in the first taker, nor make the object liable for his debts.[9]

A legacy is the transfer of an inchoate interest, and not perfected until the executor consents to pay it. His duty is first to see that the debts of the estate are

[1] Cropley v. Cooper, 19 Wall. 174 (1873), cases, Swayne, J.; 2 Bl. Com. 513.

[2] Chase v. Chase, 132 Mass. 474 (1882), cases; 26 Cent. Law J. 373-76 (1888), cases.

[3] Towne v. Weston, 132 Mass. 516 (1882), cases.

[4] Chasmar v. Bucken, 37 N. J. E. 418 (1883), cases, Runyon, Ch. On legacies given in a particular character, see 8 Va. Law J. 198, 266, 325, 396 (1884), cases: 18 Cent. Law J. 87, 104, 126, 146 (1884).— Journ. Jurisp.

[1] Hooper v. Bradbury, 133 Mass. 306, 308 (1882), cases, Field, J.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 513; 4 Ves. 150; 11 Pa. 72; 1 Story, Eq. § 555.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 1111.

[4] See 2 Story, Eq. § 1110; 3 Duer, 541; 9 Barb. 87.

[5] Walter's Appeal, 95 Pa. 307 (1880), cases; Cable's Appeal, 91 id. 329 (1879).

[6] Eaverson's Appeal, 84 Pa. 178 (1877): 1 Rop. 699.

[7] Lewis v. Darling, 16 How. 10-11 (1853), cases; Allegheny Nat. Bank v. Hays, 12 F. R. 664 (1882); Newsom v. Thornton, 82 Ala. 402 (1886), cases.

[8] Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 534 (1879), Baker, J.

[9] Wetherell v. Wilson, 1 Keen, 15 Eng. Ch. R., 61 (1831), cases; 1 Jarm. Wills (Bigelow's ed.), *398, cases; Burt v. Herron, 66 Pa. 402 (1870); Biddle's Appeal, 80 id. 264 (1876); Pennock's Estate, 20 id. 268 (1853).

paid. Interest is payable after a year from the death of the testator.[1]

LEGAL.[2] 1. Pertaining to the understanding, the exposition, the administration, the science and the practice of law: as, the legal profession, legal advice; legal blanks, newspaper, qq. v.

2. Allowed or authorized by law: as, legal—discretion, holiday, interest, tender, trade, qq. v.

3. Implied or imputed in law; opposed to actual: as, legal malice, q. v.

4. Sufficient to meet the requirements of law: as, legal—charity, condition, consideration, contract, covenant, cruelty, notice, obligation,[3] qq. v.

5. Appointed or designated by law: as, a legal representative, q. v.

6. Cognizable in a court of law; as opposed to equitable, cognizable in chancery: as, legal—assets, defense, estate, interest, owner, proceedings, remedy, right, title, waste, wrong, qq. v.

"Legal" looks more to the letter, and "lawful" to the spirit, of the law. "Legal" is more appropriate for conformity to positive rules of law; "lawful" for accord with ethical principle. "Legal" imports rather that the forms of law are observed, that the proceeding is correct in method, that rules prescribed have been obeyed; "lawful" that the act is rightful in substance, that moral quality is secured. "Legal" is, moreover, the antithesis of "equitable," and the equivalent of "constructive."[4] Compare VALID.

Illegal. Contrary to law.

1. Without authority or support of law, either common or statute.

2. In violation of law; in contravention of the direction, requirement, or prohibition of a law considered with reference to its letter or policy. Compare ERROR, 2 (2), Erroneous; VOID.

"Illegal" and "unlawful" are synonyms.[5]

Legality. The quality of conforming to law. Illegality. The quality of being in conflict with law; also, an act or thing contrary to some law.[6]

A contract may be "illegal" because contrary to a constitution or a statute, or inconsistent with sound policy and good morals as to the consideration or the thing to be done.[1]

Illegality is of two sorts: it exists at common law, or is created by some statute. A contract illegal at common law is so because it violates morality, is opposed to public policy, or is tainted with fraud.[2]

Some authorities hold that, though an illegal contract will not be executed, yet, when it has been executed by the parties themselves, and its illegal object has been accomplished, the money or thing which was the price of it may be a legal consideration between the parties for a promise, express or implied, and a court will not unravel the transaction to discover its origin.[3]

A party to a contract, the making of which, although prohibited by law, is not malum in se, may, while it remains executory, rescind it and recover money advanced to the other party who had performed no part of the contract.[4]

There is a distinction between a contract made in excess of power and a contract prohibited by statute or public policy; as there is between suing for the breach of an executory contract and suing to recover the value of property received and retained under a contract executed on the part of the plaintiff.[5]

If in any case it appears from the evidence that the claim of the complaining or moving party is against public policy or the law, so that in no event could he recover a final judgment, whatever be the nature or extent of the testimony upon the point at issue, the tribunal should not hesitate to dismiss the proceeding.[6]

Within the condemned category are: agreements to pay—for supporting a candidate for a public office, or for not being a candidate: for procuring an office; for procuring a government contract; for lobby services on a claim against the government; for not bidding on a contract to carry the mail; for procuring signatures for a pardon; for suppressing evidence; for a conveyance of what may come from an ancestor; for promoting a marriage; for influence in making a will;[4] for part of the fee one may get as special counsel for the government, designated by the plaintiff;[7] for a percentage on arms sold to a foreign gov-

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 512–14.

[2] L. legalis: lex, law.

[3] See Mattoon v. Monroe, 21 Hun, 92 (1880).

[4] [2 Abbott's Law Dict. 24.]

[5] State v. Haynorth, 3 Sneed, 65 (1855). See also Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 199 (1868).

[6] See Hurd, Hab. Corp. 227; 1 Abb. Pr. 429; 31 Cal. 225; 67 Mo. 642–43.

[1] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 448–49 (1874), cases; Yates v. Robertson, 80 Va. 484 (1885).

[2] Smith, Contracts, 178.

[3] Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 500 (1872), cases, Strong, J. See also Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 268 (1826); McBlair v. Gibbes, 17 How. 236 (1854), cases; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 81 (1863), cases; Thomas v. City of Richmond, 12 id. 355 (1870), cases; Clarke v. Lincoln Lumber Co., 59 Wis. 662–65 (1884), cases; 31 id. 254; 10 Biss. 63; 102 U. S. 420.

[4] Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 58–60 (1880), cases, Woods, J.

[5] Slater Woolen Co. v. Lamb, 143 Mass. 421–22 (1887), cases.

[6] Lee v. Johnson, 116 U. S. 52 (1885), Field, J. See also Farley v. St. Paul, &c. R. Co., 14 F. R. 114 (1882).

[7] Meguire v. Corwine, 101 U. S. 111 (1879), cases.

ernment through the influence of a consul of that government.[1]

See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.; ESTOPPEL; FRAUD; MANDATORY; PROHIBITION, 1; RATIFICATION; USUS, Utile.

Legalize. To give the authority of law to that which lacks such authority: as, to legalize a nuisance; length of time will not legalize a nuisance; slavery was a legalized social relation.

To confirm or make valid what has been already done.[2]

LEGATE. See MINISTER, 3.

LEGATEE. See LEGACY.

LEGES. See LEX.

LEGISLATE.[3] To make a law or laws; to exercise sovereignty, q. v.

Legislation. The enactment of a law or laws.

General legislation. Legislation for all the people of a State or union of States. Local or special legislation. Legislation for individuals or a section of country.

A private bill is apt to attract little attention. It involves no great public interest, and usually fails to excite much discussion. Not unfrequently the facts are whispered to those whose duty it is to investigate, vouched for by them, and the passage of the measure is thus secured. If the agent is truthful and conceals nothing, all is well; if he uses nefarious means with success, the spring-head and stream of legislation are polluted.[4] See LOBBY.

Local and special legislation, as preventing uniformity, and for other reasons, is much restricted by modern constitutions.[5]

Judicial legislation. The making of law by the decisions of the courts; often, an expression of contempt for such judicial interpretation of a statute as passes by the intent of the law-maker and virtually makes a new law.[6] See JUS, Dare; LAW, Common.

Legislative. 1. For the enacting of laws: as, a legislative body.

2. Pertaining to the law-making body: as, legislative — construction, discretion, intent, power.

"Legislative power" is the power to enact laws or to declare what the law shall be.[7]

3. Done by enactment: as, a legislative act.

Legislator. A law-maker; a member of a law-making body. See ARREST, 2 (2, 3); COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1; LIBERTY, 1, Of speech.

Legislatorial. Pertaining to a legislature.

Legislature. The law-making power in a State.

The intent of the law-maker is the law.

One legislature cannot bind another.[1]

The journal of a legislative body is evidence for all legal purposes.[2]

It is no part of the duty of the judiciary to go behind a law duly certified to inquire into the observance of form in its passage.[3]

The action of a legislature should not be held invalid unless it is so beyond reasonable doubt; and it is then so held, not because of judicial supremacy over a co-ordinate branch of the government, but because the law must be declared and the fundamental law maintained.[4]

Well-settled rules of construction forbid courts assuming to declare an act void because in their opinion it is opposed to a spirit supposed to pervade the constitution, but not expressed in words.[5]

The legislature is to judge of the wisdom and policy of enactments, and no court has the right to overrule that judgment, even to the extent of its own powers, unless the legislature has clearly exceeded its functions.[6]

See further ACT, 3; BILL, II; CONGRESS; CONSTITUTIONAL; CONTEMPT, 2; CORPORATION, Municipal; DISCRETION, 4; DOCUMENT; GOVERNMENT; JOURNAL; LOG-ROLLING; POLICE, 2; POLICY, 1; RATIFICATION; SNAKE; STATUTE; UNIFORM; VETO; YEAS AND NAYS.

LEGITIMACY.[7] Lawfulness; in particular, the civil condition of a child born in lawful wedlock. Opposed, illegitimacy.

Legitimate. 1, v. To confer a legal status upon: as, to legitimate a bastard.

2, adj. (1) Born in lawful wedlock, or within a competent time afterwards.[8] Opposed, illegitimate.

(2) Authorized, constitutional, or lawful: as, the legitimate government.

Legitimation. Changing the civil status of a bastard to the status of a lawful child.

---

[1] Oscanyan v. Winchester Arms Co., 103 U. S. 273-77 (1880), cases; 116 id. 52.

[2] [Barker v. Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 128 (1869).

[3] L. lex, legis, law; latio, a proposing.

[4] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 451 (1874), Swayne, J.

[5] Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 633 (1880).

[6] See Bishop, Contr. § 1123.

[7] Wolfe v. M'Caull, 76 Va. 880 (1881).

[1] Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 559 (1879).

[2] Southwark v. Commonwealth, 26 Pa. 450 (1851).

[3] Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 412 (1877).

[4] Sullivan v. Berry, 88 Ky. 206 (1885).

[5] State ex rel. Herron v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 374 (1886).

[6] Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 562 (1886). As to constitutional regulations of proceeding, see 24 Am. Law Reg. 153-70 (1885), cases.

[7] L. legitimus, lawful: lex, law.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 446; 70 Iowa, 412; 3 Kan. 52; 91 N. Y. 315, 320; 18 Hun, 509; 1 Grant (Pa.), 381; 2 Kent, 208. As to proof of legitimacy, see 18 Cent. Law J. 262-67 (1884), cases.

Legitimatize; legitimize. To make lawful; to legitimate, q. v.

In most of the States, subsequent marriage of the parents, and recognition by the father, legitimizes an illegitimate child.[1] See BASTARD.

LEND. See HIRE.

LESS. See MORE OR LESS.

LESSEE; LESSOR. See LEASE.

LET. 1, v. To give leave to; to permit.

(1) To grant the use of realty for a compensation. Correlative, to hire.

Re-let. To let again or anew.

Sub-let. To let to a third party as a second lessee. See further LEASE. Compare FARM, Let.

(2) To award: as, to let a contract after proposals have been considered.[2] Whence letting, sub-letting.

The act of May 17, 1878, regulates the advertisement of "mail-lettings" by the postmaster-general.[3]

2, n. In old English, interruption, obstruction, impediment: as "without let or hinderance."

LETTER. 1. One of the characters which constitute the alphabet.

Many letters of the alphabet, standing alone, denote abbreviations (q. v.) of words; and all the letters, in their order, may be used to mark exhibits, q. v.

2. Verbal expression, as opposed to the spirit and reason, of language: as, "the letter" of a document, of a law. See LITERA; CASUS, Omissus; SPIRIT.

3. A written communication, sealed or unsealed.[4]

A letter is certainly a "writing." If addressed by one person to another, while we may call it a letter, it is also a writing, whether the characters are made with the pen, by type, or in any other manner.[5]

The word "letter" will include the envelope in which it is sent; as, in a notice to produce a letter.[6]

That a sealed letter is not a publication, see PUBLICATION, 2.

The postmark on a letter is prima facie evidence that the letter was in the post-office at the time and place specified.[7]

A letter is presumed to reach its destination at the regular time, and to be received by the addressee, if living at the place and usually receiving letters there; as, in cases where notice of the protest of paper is to be sent to an indorser.[1] See PROTEST, 2.

Congress has forbidden interference with the rapid transportation of the mails; detaining or opening letters, secreting the contents, or otherwise tampering with the mails; competition by private persons; sending obscene, scurrilous, disloyal letters or publications; and letters and circulars regarding illegal lotteries.[2] See DELIVERY, 2; EMBEZZLEMENT, 1; LOTTERY; OBSCENE.

Negotiations merge into a contract the moment a stamped letter assenting to the proposed terms is mailed.[3] See further OFFER, 1.

That a witness may refresh his memory by referring to a letter, see REFRESH.

If a letter offered in evidence purports to be a reply to a letter referred to, the latter must be called for, in order to be put in evidence with it.[4] See VERBUM, Verba illata.

The author of letters, whether they are literary compositions, familiar letters, or letters of business, possesses the exclusive copyright in them. No person, other than he or his representative, not even the addressee, has a right to publish them upon any account, except upon such occasions as require or justify their public use; as, in a lawsuit, a letter necessary to establish one's rights, or a letter sent to a paper to vindicate the writer's reputation. For the stronger reason the addressee may not publish them for profit. In short, the addressee has but a limited right or special property in letters, as a trustee or bailee, for particular purposes, either of information or protection, or of support of his own rights and character. The general property belongs to the writer, whatever the character of the letters. An exception is made in favor of the government, as to official letters by public officers.[5]

The receiver of private letters cannot make them the subject of sale without the writer's consent. Therefore, a contract to sell letters written to another person who advertised remedies for diseases, the purchaser intending to send an advertisement to the writers, is contrary to good morals, and void.[6] See MANUSCRIPT.

---

[1] See Succession of Caballero v. The Executor, 24 La. An. 580 (1872).

[2] See Eppes v. Mississippi, &c. R. Co., 35 Ala. 55 (1859).

[3] 20 St. L. 61, 141, 356.

[4] United States v. Bromley, 12 How. 97 (1851).

[5] United States v. Gaylor, 17 F. R. 441 (1883); United States v. Britton, ib. 732 (1883).

[6] United States v. Duff, 19 Blatch. 10 (1881).

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 40, cases; Bussard v. Levering, 6 Wheat. 102 (1821); Lindenberger v. Beall, ib. 104 (1821); Riggs v. Hatch, 17 F. R. 838 (1883); ib. 842-50, cases; Rosenthall v. Walker, 111 U. S. 193 (1884), cases; Montelius v. Atherton, 6 Col. 227 (1882); Breed v. First Nat. Bank, ib. 238 (1882).

[1] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 40, and cases, ante.

[2] See R. S. §§ 3890-94; United States v. McCready, 11 F. R. 225 (1882).

[3] Darlington Iron Co. v. Foote, 16 F. R. 646 (1883). Blake v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 169 (1886).

[4] Harvey v. Pennypacker, 4 Del. Ch. 454 (1872); 41 Ga. 186; 33 Iowa, 508; 14 Allen, 285; 104 Mass. 319; 7 Mich. 331; 19 Minn. 396.

[5] Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story, 110-13 (1841), cases. Story, J. See also Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379 (1855).

[6] Rice v. Williams, 32 F. R. 438, 440-42 (1887), cases, Eng. and Am.

The courts will enjoin an improper use of a letter by the addressee.[1]

Letter-book. A book containing copies of letters, the copies being made by mechanical process.

A letter in such a book is prima facie evidence after notice to produce the original.[2] See COPY.

Letter-carrier. An employee of the post-office who delivers letters directly to addressees at their street and number.[3]

Letter-head. See SIGN.

Letter of advice. A communication from a factor to his principal, respecting their common business; also, a letter from the drawer of a bill of exchange informing the drawee of some fact respecting the bill. See ADVICE.

Letter of credit. A letter written by one merchant or correspondent to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a sum of money.[4]

A letter of request whereby one person requests some other person to advance money or give credit to a third person, and promises that he will repay or guarantee the same to the person making the advancement.[5]

Special letter of credit. A letter addressed to a particular individual by name, and gives no other person a right to act upon it.

General letter of credit. A letter addressed to any and every person, and gives any one authority to advance money upon it.[6]

The language should receive a reasonable interpretation, according to the intent as disclosed by the instrument and the surrounding circumstances. Any ambiguity should be taken most strongly against the party who induces the other to give credit to the supposed intent.[7]

To construe the words with wise and technical care would not only defeat the intentions of the parties, but render such instruments too unsafe a basis to rely upon for extensive credits.[8] See further EXCHANGE, 2, Bill of; GUARANTY (2).

Letter of recommendation. If the person who gives a commercial letter of recommendation honestly states his opinion, believing at the time that he states the truth, he is not liable in an action of deceit, although the representation turns out to be untrue.[1] See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2.

Letter-press. See Letter-book.

See also CIRCULAR, 2; COMMUNICATION; DECOY; MAIL, 2; POST, 2; PREJUDICE, 2; REFER, 2; THREAT.

4. An instrument attesting the grant of a right or of authority. In this sense "letters" is used where only one instrument is referred to. Compare PRESENTS (1).

Letters missive. (1) In England, a communication from the lord chancellor to a peer, made a defendant in equity, requesting him to appear and answer the bill.[2]

(2) In civil law, the papers sent, on appeal, to the court of review; letters dimissory; apostles, q. v.

Letter of attorney. An instrument conferring power of attorney upon an agent. See ATTORNEY, Power of.

Letter of license. See LICENSE.

Letter of recall. Informs a government that a minister sent to it has been called home.

Letters of administration. The instrument by which a person is empowered to take charge of the property of an intestate (generally), to collect the credits and pay the debts of the estate. Compare Letters Testamentary. See further ADMINISTER, 4.

Letters of marque and reprisal. See MARQUE.

Letters patent. Open letters: an unsealed document addressed by a government to all persons whom it may concern. Opposed, letters close: a document directed to a particular person, for some special purpose, and therefore closed up and sealed.

Letters patent evidence grants from the government, as, of land, or a franchise.[3] See further PATENT, 2; GRANT, 3.

Letters requisitory. See Letters Rogatory.

Letters rogatory. A request by one court of another court in an independent

[1] United States v. Tanner, 6 McLean, 128 (1854); Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 id. 32 (1849); 2 Story, Eq. §§ 944-49.

[2] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 116; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 72, 133; 119 U. S. 494.

[3] See R. S. §§ 3865, 3874, 3980, 3996; 1 Sup. R. S. pp. 95, 414, 415.

[4] Mechanics' Bank v. New York, &c. R. Co., 4 Duer, 586 (1855); McCulloch, Com. Dict.

[5] 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. p. 666; Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 384 (1886), cases.

[6] Union Bank v. Coster, 3 N. Y. 214 (1850).

[7] Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 385-89 (1886), cases.

[8] Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 449 (1844), Story, J. See generally Mechanics' Bank v. New York, &c. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 630 (1856); Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufman, 93 id. 279, 282, 285, 291 (1883), cases; Pollock v. Helm, 54 Miss. 5-6 (1876) cases; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. *122-23 (1833), cases; State Nat. Bank v. Young, 14 F. R. 890 (1883), cases; Byles, Bills, 99; Story, Bills, § 640.

[1] Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 198 (1851).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 445; 1 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 306.

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 346.

jurisdiction, that a witness be examined under interrogatories sent with the request.

Coming from the court of a foreign country, the witness may be compelled to appear and depose in the circuit court to which the letters are sent.[1] Compare DEDIMUS.

Letters testamentary. The instrument under which a person named as executor in a will formally takes charge of the estate, and proceeds to carry out the directions in the will.[2] Compare Letters of Administration. See further EXECUTOR.

LEVANT ET COUCHANT.[3] Rising up and lying down.

Where lands are not sufficiently fenced to keep out cattle, the landlord, at common law, cannot distrain them until they have been long enough on the land to have lain down and risen up to feed — one night at least. After that period the law presumes that the owner may have notice that his cattle have strayed, and it is negligence not to have taken them away.[4]

LEV. FA.; LEVARI FACIAS. See EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

LEVEE. An embankment intended to prevent inundation.

A State, in the exercise of police powers, has the exclusive right to determine the propriety, location, and mode of building levees within her borders. After she has so decided, and contracted for the enterprise, a person, on whose land the levee is to be built, cannot require that it be constructed differently; and, in case of non-compliance with his demand, he cannot hold the State liable for compensation for the property taken or for any injury sustained.[5] See COMPENSATION, 3.

LEVITICAL. See DEGREE, 1.

LEVY.[6] 1. To raise, lift up; to create, erect, construct; to institute: as, to levy a fine. See FINE, 1.

Levy war. To constitute levying war against the United States, there must be an assemblage of persons with force and arms to overthrow the government or resist the laws.[7] See WAR; TREASON.

2. (1) To do the acts by which a sheriff sets apart and appropriates, for the purpose of satisfying the command of a writ of execution, a part or the whole of a defendant's property.[1a]

(2) The taking possession of property by an officer.[2]

Generally, all that is required is that the property should be present before the officer, subject to his control, and that he openly state that he levies upon it by virtue of an execution. He must perform some act which not only indicates an intention to seize the property, but he must reduce the property to possession, or at least bring it within his immediate control. A "pen-and-ink" levy is not sufficient. He must do some act which, if not protected by the writ, would make him a trespasser.[3] See CUSTODY, Of law; DISTRESS.

Equitable levy. Filing a creditor's bill and serving process creates a lien in equity upon the effects of the judgment debtor, aptly termed an "equitable levy."[4]

3. (1) To exact by authority of government: as, to levy a tax, or troops. (2) That which is called for or obtained by the requisition: as, a levy of men, a tax levy.

"Levy" is synonymous with "collect" or "raise" by execution. To "assess" a tax is to declare it payable.[5] See TAX, 2.

Levy court. The body charged with the administration of the ministerial and financial duties of Washington county, District of Columbia, as to roads, bridges, the poor, taxes, etc.

Its functions were those which in the States are performed by county commissioners, overseers of the poor, county supervisors, and similar bodies.[6] Abolished by Acts 21 Feb. 1871, 22 June, 1874: R. S., D. C., 10.

LEWD.[7] Given to unlawful indulgence of lust; dissolute; lustful; proceeding from unlawful lust.[8]

---

[1] See R. S. §§ 875, 4071–74, 4761–62; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 266; Weeks, Dep. §§ 128–30; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 320.

[2] See Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 243 (1875).

[3] F.: L. levantes et cubantes. Eng. pronunciation, le'-vant; couch'-ant.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 9; 1 B. & A. 711; 5 T. R. 48.

[5] Bass v. State, 34 La. An. 494 (1882), Bermudez, C. J. Contra, Hollingsworth v. Parish of Tensas, 17 F. R. 109 (1883).

[6] F. lever: L. levare, to raise.

[7] United States v. Greathouse, 4 Saw. 465–66, 475–79 (1863), Exp. Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75 (1807); Burr's Case, id. 471, 473, 125 (1807), Marshall, C. J.; 2 Dall. 346, 348.

[1] [Lloyd v. Wyckoff, 11 N. J. L. 227 (1830); 22 id. 383.

[2] Pracht v. Pister, 30 Kan. 573 (1883).

[3] Chittenden v. Rogers, 42 Ill. 105 (1866), cases; Crisfield v. Neal, 36 Kan. 282 (1887), cases; Long v. Hall, 96 N. C. 293 (1887).

See also 9 Ala. 519; 23 How. 469; 10 B. Mon. 120; 27 La. An. 265, 539; 28 Miss. 283; 24 N. J. L. 150; 14 N. Y. 270; 29 id. 471; 31 id. 102; 3 Wend. 446; 14 id. 123; 19 id. 495; 23 id. 462, 490; 16 Johns. 287; 34 Barb. 553; 10 Ohio St. 488; 9 Pa. 349; 37 id. 500; 46 id. 294; 58 id. 70; 77 id. 108.

[4] Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249 (1864); 7 Dana, 110.

[5] Vallé v. Fargo, 1 Mo. Ap. 345, 351–53 (1876).

[6] Levy Court v. Coroner, 2 Wall. 507 (1864).

[7] Old Eng. lewd, ignorant, vile: A. S. læwed, enfeebled, ignorant, lay; base, licentious.

[8] State v. Lawrence, 19 Neb. 313 (1886): Webster's Dict.; Snow v. Witcher, 9 Ired. L. 348 (1849).

Before a person can be convicted of "lewd and lascivious cohabitation," it must appear on the face of the indictment that both parties lewdly and lasciviously associated "together" or "with each other."[1]

A "lewd house" is a house in which fornication or adultery is practiced; a house given to the unlawful indulgence of lust.[2]

But the sexual cohabitation of persons who have in good faith but illegally married is not "lewd and lascivious."[3]

Lewdness. An offense against morality by frequenting houses of ill-fame, or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency.[4]

Includes illicit sexual intercourse, and the irregular indulgence of lust, whether public or private; as, in the nuisance of keeping a house for lewdness.[5]

No particular definition of what constitutes "open and gross lewdness" is given in statutes prohibiting it. The indelicacy of the subject forbids it, and does not require of the court to state what particular conduct will constitute the offense. The common sense of the community, as well as the sense of decency, propriety, and morality which most people entertain, is sufficient to apply the statutes to each case, and point out what particular conduct is rendered criminal by it.[6]

The word "open" qualifies the intention of the perpetrator of the the act; it does not fairly imply that the act must be public, in the sense of being in a public place, or in the presence of many people. The offense does not depend upon the number present; it is enough if it be an intentional act of lewd exposure, offensive to one or more persons present. "Open" in such cases is opposed to "secret."[7]

Compare BAWD; OBSCENE; OPEN, 2 (2).

LEX. L. That which is laid, or fixed: the law, q. v.

In Roman law, often synonymous with jus, q. v.; also, a written law, a statute, an enactment; the law of the Twelve Tables. In old English law, a collection of laws; as, the Roman or civil law.

Lex denoted law in its concrete sense; jus, in the general or abstract sense; like loi and droit in French, and gesetz and recht in German.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law let there be no departing.

If the language of a statute expresses a single meaning, effect must be given to it.[8] Compare Ita lex, etc.; see STATUTE.

[1] State v. Foster, 21 W. Va. 775 (1883).

[2] Clifton v. State, 53 Ga. 244 (1874).

[3] Commonwealth v. Munson, 127 Mass. 470 (1879).

[4] [4 Bl. Com. 64.

[5] Commonwealth v. Lambert, 12 Allen, 179 (1866).

[6] State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 577 (1846), Williams, C. J.

[7] Commonwealth v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 54 (1880), Colt, J.

[8] Broom, Max. 622; 66 Pa. 186.

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not concern itself with trifles.

To this maxim there are numerous exceptions and reservations. Every legal right, regardless of its extent or value, may be enforced; and every wrong, however slight, has its remedy.[1]

Every felonious taking of property is criminal. Any rude, violent, or insolent touching of another's person is a battery; and any apprehension whatever is an arrest. Any stepping upon another's land is a trespass.[2] In burglary, thrusting any part of the body within the building is an entering. And in arson, the extent of the burning is not regarded, only that some integral part be destroyed. In petty misdemeanors, shades of guilt are not distinguished.[3]

One cent may do for earnest-money, or as a consideration.[4] Any indulgence whatever to the debtor will discharge the surety, q. v. A trust accepted for a moment is thoroughly accepted.[5] If land abide in the husband as his own a single moment, the wife has dower.[6]

But for a trifling deficiency in the quantity of land a purchaser may not rescind.[7] Trifling waste is not considered.[8] Ground made by alluvion, little by little, belongs to the adjoining land.[9]

Where the new evidence is slight, a new trial will be refused. In practice, trifling defects and deviations are not noticed Equity will not relieve where the injury is trifling.[10] See SCINTILLA.

Ita lex scripta est. The law is so written. The law, as enacted, must be applied.

Where an act allowed an appeal from the granting of a preliminary injunction, but none for a refusal of it, the court observed "Whether the reason be sufficient for the distinction or not, it is enough for us to say, Ita lex scripta est — the legislature has plainly so declared.[11] See HARDSHIP.

Lex domicilii. The law of the place of domicil. Lex fori. The law of the forum: the place where a remedy is sought. Lex loci. The law of the place.

"Lex loci:" lex loci contractus, the law of the place where the contract is entered into or is to be performed. It may mean lex loci domicilii, the law

[1] 5 Hill, 170; 20 Barb. 651.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 209.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 36.

[4] 3 Pars. Contr. 52.

[5] Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 139 (1871).

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 132.

[7] D'Wolf v. Pratt, 42 Ill. 198 (1866).

[8] 3 Bl. Com. 228.

[9] 2 Bl. Com. 16, 262.

[10] See generally 4 Barb. 614; 6 Duer, 596; 6 Exch. 869; 4 Durnf. & E. 753; 59 Cal. 267; 70 id. 521; 58 N. H. 39; 37 Hun, 14; 22 Pa. 363; 57 id. 52, 432; 78 id. 129; 97 Mass. 83; 118 id. 175; 76 Va. 906; 57 Wis. 110; 61 id. 264, 615; 66 id. 288; 67 id. 247; 21 Alb. Law J. 186, cases; Broom, Max. 142.

[11] Hilbish v. Catherman, 60 Pa. 444 (1869). See also 39 id. 136; 54 id. 508; 66 Ga. 317; 30 Kan. 762; 3 McCrary, 275; 111 Mass. 408; 1 Bl. Com. 33.

of the domicil; or lex loci rei sitæ, the law of the place where the subject-matter is situated; or lex fori, the law of the place of remedy. See PLACE, 1, Of contract.

Lex mercatoria The law-merchant. See MERCHANT.

Lex neminem cogit ad vana seu inutilia peragenda. The law forces no one to do vain or useless things.[1]

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. The law does not require impossible things.[2] See POSSIBLE.

Lex non scripta. The unwritten law; the law of custom; the common law. Lex scripta. The written law; statute law.[3]

Lex rei sitæ. The law of the place where the thing in dispute is situated. See Lex Loci.

Lex solutionis. The law of the place of performance.

Lex talionis. The law of retaliation, q. v.

Lex terræ. The law of the land.

Lex vigilantibus favet. The law sustains the watchful. See VIGILANS.

Salus populi, suprema lex. The welfare of the people is the highest law.

Individual interests yield to the public welfare; as, in destroying private property to stay a conflagration, or to aid the common defense in time of war. The powers of taxation, of eminent domain, and of general or internal police, all rest upon this principle.[4] See POLICE, 2.

Silent leges inter arma. Or, inter arma silent leges. Laws are silent amidst arms.

The law of military necessity supersedes all civil law. In time of war administration of the municipal law may be suspended.[5] See MARTIAL, LAW.

LEXICOGRAPHERS. See DICTIONARY.

LIABLE.[6] 1. Bound, bound for, obligated; responsible, answerable, accountable, chargeable with: as, liable for money.

2. Subject to; exposed to.

That a vessel shall be "liable" to forfeiture for using a certificate of registry to which it is not entitled, implies that the government may not discover or enforce the forfeiture.[7]

Liability. 1. The state of being bound or obliged in law or justice.[1]

That condition of affairs which gives rise to an obligation to do a particular thing to be enforced by action.[2]

May include every form of punishment to which a man subjects himself by violating the common laws of the country.[3]

2. Obligation to pay money; indebtedness; a debt.[4] See INCUR.

A man's liability for a demand is measured by the amount of property that may be taken from him to satisfy the demand.[5]

Conditional or contingent liability. A liability which is not "absolute," but depends upon an uncertain event; as, the liability that an indorser will be required to pay the note.

Before demand and notice, the claim of the holder of a note against the indorser is a contingent liability.[6] See INDORSEMENT, 2.

As soon as a surety's obligation becomes absolute he may require the principal to exonerate him, although the creditor may not have demanded payment.[7] See SURETY.

Individual liability. (1) That of a member of an association for the obligations of the whole body. See STOCK, 3 (2).

(2) That of one of two or more wrong-doers for the acts of all. See CONTRIBUTION.

Joint liability. When two or more persons are bound as one person to do a thing; as, to pay money. Joint and several liability. When two or more persons together, or any one of them singly, may be required to do the thing.

Limited liability. A liability restricted in any way; in particular the liability of a partner for the debts of a limited partnership, q. v.; also, of a ship-owner for loss or damages to goods,[8] as see COLLISION, 1.

---

[1] Broom, Max. 242-51; 110 U. S. 460; 14 Gray, 78; 8 Johns. 598; 102 N. Y. 347; 44 Ohio St. 171; 7 Pa. 206, 214.

[2] Broom, Max. 242; 8 Cranch, 246; 17 N. H. 411; 55 id. 211; 55 Vt. 152.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 63.

[4] 6 How. 545; 94 U. S. 645; 97 id. 33; 30 F. R. 55; 105 Ill. 246; 97 N. C. 479; 17 Wend. 285; 23 N. J. L. 590.

[5] 4 Inst. 70; 30 F. R. 179; 79 Va. 641.

[6] F. and L. id., to bind.

[7] The Mary Celeste, 2 Low. 354 (1874).

[1] Joslin v. New Jersey Car Spring Co., 36 N. J. L. 145 (1873). See also McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36 Iowa, 226 (1873); Choate v. Quinichett, 12 Heisk. 432 (1873).

[2] Haywood v. Shreve, 44 N. J. L. 104 (1882). See also Wood v. Currey, 57 Cal. 209 (1881).

[3] United States v. Ulrici, 3 Dill. 534 (1875); R. S. § 13

[4] See Stanton v. Wilkeson, 8 Bened. 357, 365 (1876), McGaffin v. City of Cohoes, 74 N. Y. 389 (1878).

[5] The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 503 (1886), Bradley, J.

[6] Re Loder, 4 Bened. 308, 329 (1870); French v. Morse, 2 Gray, 111 (1854).

[7] Ardesco Oil Co. v. North America Mining & Oil Co., 66 Pa. 381 (1870).

[8] Providence, &c. Steamship Co. v. Hill Manufacturing Co., 109 U. S. 578 (1883).

Vicarious liability. An obligation incurred as agent or representative.

LIBEL.[1] 1. In the civil law, the declaration in an action.

2. In ecclesiastical law, the formal complaint.[2]

Simple, when the cause of action is briefly set forth; articulate, when stated in distinct averments.

3. A petition for a decree of divorce from the marriage relation; a statement in writing of charges of such misconduct in a husband or wife as will justify a dissolution of the contract of marriage, presented to a court empowered to grant divorces.

Filed by the husband in his own person, or for the wife by her next friend (q. v.), at the place of domicil; alleges, under oath, a legal marriage contracted and existing, the cause of complaint or the grounds for a divorce, non-collusion in the proceeding, and residence for the required period; and prays that the respondent be subpœnaed to appear and answer, and that, after the evidence has been heard, a decree of absolute divorce be granted.[3] See DIVORCE.

4. The first proceeding taken in a suit in admiralty; also, to proceed against some res or subject-matter: as, to libel a vessel for materials furnished, for wages due, for damages suffered.

Thus, for example, a libel for a collision avers jurisdiction in the court; describes the vessel, her condition, ownership, whereabouts, etc.; states the time and place of the collision, and how, by negligence, it happened, and the extent of the damage done; and prays that process issue against the offending ship, that all persons interested in her be cited to appear and answer, and that the court decree relief in the premises.[4] See ADMIRALTY.

Libel, in the foregoing senses, corresponds to the "declaration" at common law, to the "complaint" or "petition" of modern codes, and to the "bill" filable in equity practice.

Libelant.[5] The person who institutes proceedings in an ecclesiastical court, in a court of divorce, or in admiralty.

Libelee. The person who is called upon to answer the charge exhibited in a libel.

5. Slander by written or printed words, pictures, signs, or the like.[6]

Malicious defamation of a person made public either by printing, writing, signs or pictures, in order to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule.[1] See DEFAMATORY.

That species of defamation which is effected by writing or printing or by pictures and signs.[2]

A publication without justification or lawful excuse, which is calculated to injure the reputation of another, by exposing him to hatred or contempt.[3]

Any publication the tendency of which is to degrade and injure another person, or to bring him into contempt, ridicule, or hatred, or which accuses him of a crime punishable by law, or of an act odious and disgraceful in society.[4]

Every publication, either by writing, printing, or pictures, which charges upon or imputes to any person that which renders him liable to punishment, or which is calculated to make him infamous, or odious, or ridiculous, is prima facie a libel, and imputes malice in the author or publisher toward the person concerning whom such publication is made.[5]

Every publication in writing or in print which charges upon or imputes to a merchant or business man insolvency or bankruptcy, or conduct which would prejudice him in his business or trade, or be injurious to his standing and credit as a merchant or business man.[6]

A false and malicious publication concerning the person, which exposes him to public ridicule, hatred, or contempt, or hinders virtuous men from associating with him.[7]

A censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign, made with a mischievous and malicious intent toward government, magistrates, or individuals.[8]

[1] Mid. Eng. libel, a brief writing: L. libellus, a little book, a pamphlet. Libellus famosus, a defamatory pamphlet,—4 Bl. Com. 150; 3 id. 100; 5 Coke, *125; 2 Bin. *517.

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 100; 3 Steph. Com. 314.

[3] See Hancock's Appeal, 64 Pa. 470 (1870); Realf v. Realf, 77 id. 31 (1874).

[4] See Dunl. Adm. Pr. 113; 7 Cranch, 389, 394; 9 Wheat. 386, 401; 3 Mas. 503; 2 Gall. 485.

[5] Lī'-bel-ant. Also spelled libellant.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 125.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 150.

[2] White v. Nichols, 3 How. 285 (1845), Daniel, J.

[3] Whitney v. Janesville Gazette, 5 Biss. 331 (1873), Davis, J.

[4] Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 116 (1825), Story, J.

[5] White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 291 (1845), Daniel, J.; Steele v. Southwick, 1 Am. L. C. *106–17, cases.

[6] Erber v. Dun, 12 F. R. 531 (1882), Caldwell, D. J.

[7] Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 268 (1886), Pardee, J.

[8] People v. Croswell, 3 Johns. Cas. *354 (1804), Alexander Hamilton. "That definition is drawn with the utmost precision,"—Steele v. Southwick, 9 Johns. *215 (1812), Kent, J. See also 6 Conn. 407; 7 id. 268; 27

Words of comparison may be as libelous as those in importing a direct charge: they tend to bring the person into ridicule and contempt.[1]

Words relating merely to the quality of articles made, produced, furnished, or sold by a person, though false and malicious, are not actionable without special damage,—unless they attack the individual.[2]

Libeler.[3] One chargeable with a libel.

Libelous. Of the nature of, pertaining to, a libel or libels.

Blasphemous libel. See BLASPHEMY.

Criminal libel. Such defamatory publication as tends to cause a breach of the public peace.

Seditious libel. Such publication as tends to disturb the tranquillity of society by exciting the people against the government.[4] See SEDITION.

The communication of a libel to one person is a publication,[5] q. v.

Where the publication is in terms so clear that no circumstances are required to make it clearer, the question of libel or no libel is one of law for the court.[6]

Every libel tends to a breach of the peace, by provoking the person libeled to break it. In criminal prosecutions this tendency is all that the law considers; it pays no regard to the falsity, except, perhaps, as a matter in aggravation of guilt, enhancing the punishment.[7]

Upon this principle is explained Lord Mansfield's observation that "the greater the truth, the greater the libel;" that is, in criminal law, the greater the appearance of truth in malicious invective, the more it tends to produce a disturbance of the peace by stirring up the object of it to revenge, perhaps to bloodshed.

The maxim used to be "the greater the truth, the greater the libel:" the injurious publication of the truth about a person would be more likely to sting him to a breach of the peace than would the publication of a falsehood which he could refute. But now, under the sixth section of Lord Campbell's Act, 6 and 7 Vict. (1843) c. 96, the defendant, in an action for criminal libel, may prove not only that his assertion was true, but also that it was for the public benefit that the statement should be published. The statute does not apply in cases of blasphemous, obscene, or seditious libels.[8]

Remedies: indictment for the public offense; an action on the case for damages for the private injury.[1]

Author, printer, and publisher are alike liable.

As to signs or pictures, it is necessary to show, by innuendoes and averments of the defendant's meaning, the import and application of the scandal, and that special damage has followed.[2]

In a civil action, the libel must appear to be false as well as scandalous; for, if the charges are true, the plaintiff has received no legal injury. Therefore it is that the defendant may "justify," that is, prove the truth.[3]

The truth of the matter, as a defense, must be specially set up, for use by way of justification or in mitigation of damages. It makes no difference that the matter is not libelous per se, so long as it shows on its face personal animosity equivalent to actual malice.[4]

Innocence is not presumed; nor is proof of malice required: proof of the publication alone is sufficient. Justification, excuse, or extenuation proceed from the defendant.[5]

If the charge is false, malice need not be proved: it is implied. The only perfect answer and bar is the truth of all of the publication. The words are to be taken in their ordinary sense; and they are actionable per se if directly calculated to degrade, or to injure one in his business.[6] A witness may not give his opinion as to the meaning of the words.[7]

Malice may consist either in a direct intention to injure another or in a reckless disregard of his rights and of the consequences that may result to him.[8]

The essence is malice: the mind must be at fault. If the language is actionable, the publication is presumed to have been malicious, unless the occasion rendered it prima facie privileged — which circumstance will rebut the legal inference of malice, and place the burden of proving malice in fact upon the plaintiff.[9]

The rules applicable are about the same as in slander. But, because effected with greater coolness and deliberation, and more permanent and extensive in its operation, libel is treated with sterner rigor.[9]

The later constitutions declare, as a right, that "No conviction shall be had in any prosecution for the publication of papers relating to the official conduct of officers or men in public capacity, or in any other matter proper for public investigation or infor-id. 61; 3 Del. 407; 3 Harring. 407; 5 Ind. 364; 70 Iowa, 214; 68 Me. 295; 60 Md. 175; 4 Mass. 168; 2 Pick. 113; 28 Mich. 375; 30 Minn. 43; 11 Neb. 281; 3 Johns. 354; 9 id. 215; 24 Wend. 440; 25 id. 198; 87 Pa. 390; 13 R. I. 327; 4 McCord, 321; 4 Wis. 238; 6 M. & W. 108; 15 id. 344, 435; 2 Kent, 13; Towns. Sland. 75, § 20, cases; Stark. Sl. 4.

---

[1] Solverson v. Peterson, 64 Wis. 201 (1885), cases.

[2] Dooling v. Budget Publishing Co., 144 Mass. 259 (1887), cases.

[3] Spelled also libeller.

[4] See Queen v. O'Brien, 4 Crim. Law Mag. 424 (1883).

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 150.

[6] Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 266 (1886), cases.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 125; 4 id. 150.

[8] Odgers, Libel & Sland. *388-90; Folkard's Starkie, Sland. & Lib. *21-22; Queen v. O'Brien, 4 Cr. Law M. 494 (1883); Saffyn's Case — De Libellis Famosis, 5 Coke, *125 (1606).

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 125.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 126.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 126; 4 id. 151.

[4] Donaghue v. Gaffy, 53 Conn. 51-52 (1885).

[5] White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 291 (1845); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 35.

[6] Whitney v. Janesville Gazette, 5 Biss. 331 (1873); Dexter v. Spear, 2 Mas. 115 (1825); Commonwealth v. Morgan, 107 Mass. 199 (1871).

[7] Gribble v. Pioneer Press Co. Sup. Ct. Minn. (1887); 26 Am. Law Reg. 797-802 (1887), cases.

[8] Gott v. Pulsifer, 122 Mass. 239 (1877), cases, Gray, Chief Justice.

[9] Stewart v. Hall, 83 Ky. 380, 382 (1885).

mation, where the fact that such publication was not maliciously or negligently made shall be established to the satisfaction of the jury; and in all indictments for libels the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases."[1]

In discussions, in good faith, of the public conduct and qualifications of public men, the defendant is not bound to prove the exact truth of his statements and the soundness of his inferences, provided that he is not actuated by express malice, and that there is reasonable ground for such utterances.[2]

Voters have the constitutional right publicly to discuss and canvass the qualifications of candidates for public office, and information honestly communicated at a public meeting, to the effect that a candidate had been charged by a reputable citizen with grave misconduct, is a privileged communication, and the person is not liable in an action of libel, although the falsity of the charge could have been discovered by inquiry. In such a case, in the absence of proof of actual malice, the court may nonsuit the plaintiff.[3]

Charges of crime, which are false, made in a newspaper, against a candidate, though made without malice, and in honest belief of their truth, are not privileged communications; but, if published in good faith, after proper investigation, this fact may go in mitigation.[4]

The constitutional provision referred to does not apply to a civil action for damages.[5]

See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2; DAMAGES; INNUENDO; LIBERTY, Of the press, Of speech; MAINER; MALICE; NEWSPAPER; REVIEW, 3; RUMOR; SHYSTER; SLANDER.

LIBER. See HOMO.

LIBERAL. See CONSTRUCTION, 2.

LIBERARI. See EXECUTION, 3, Writs of.

LIBERTY.[6] 1. The condition of a freeman; freedom from restraint; freedom.

In its broad sense, the right not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation.[1]

Natural liberty. Consists in the power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the laws of nature.[2] Political or civil liberty. The power of doing whatever the laws permit;[3] that liberty of a member of society, which is no other than natural liberty so far restrained by human laws as is necessary for the general advantage of the public.[4]

"Moral liberty" or "natural liberty" is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consonant to their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and that they do not in any way abuse it to the prejudice of any other man.[5]

"Civil liberty" is the power of doing whatsoever we will, except when restrained by just and equal laws. "Political liberty" is that condition in which a man's civil liberty is fully secured.[6]

In constitutional law "liberty" means, not merely freedom to move about unrestrained, but such liberty of conduct, choice, and action as the law gives and protects. Liberty is classified as natural, civil, and political liberty. "Natural liberty" is commonly employed in a somewhat vague and indeterminate sense. One man will understand by it a liberty to enjoy all those rights which are usually regarded as fundamental, and which all governments should concede to all their subjects; but as it would be necessary to agree what these are, and the agreement could only be expressed in the form of law, the natural liberty, so far as the law could take notice of it, would be found at last to resolve itself into such liberty as the government of every civilized people would be expected by law to define and protect. Another by natural liberty may understand that freedom from restraint which exists before any government has imposed its limitations. But as without government only a savage state could exist, and any liberty would be only that of the wild beast, in which every man would have an equal right to take or hold whatever his agility, courage, strength, or cunning could secure, but no available right to more, it is obvious that a natural liberty of the sort would be inconsistent with any valuable right whatever. A right in any valuable sense can only be that which the law secures to its possessor, by requiring others to respect it, and to abstain from its violation. Rights, then, are the offspring of law; they are born of legal restraints. "Civil liberty" is the condi-

[1] Penn. Const. Art. I, sec. 7. Compare Const. Ala. I, 5, 13; Ark. II, 6; Cal. I, 9; Col. II, 10; Conn. I, 5-7; Del. I, 5; Fla. D. R. 10; Ga. I, 9; Ill. II, 4; Ind. I, 9-10; Iowa, I, 7; Kan. B. R. 11; Ky. XIII, 9-10; La. 4; Me. I, 4; Mass. I, 16; Mich. IV, 42, VI, 25; Minn. I, 3; Miss. I, 4; Mo. II, 14; Neb. I, 5; Nev. I, 9; N. H. I, 22; N. J. I, 5; N. Y. I, 8; N. C. I, 20; Ohio, I, 11; Oreg. I, 8; R. I. I, 20; S. C. I, 7-8; Tenn. I, 19; Tex. I, 8; Vt. I, 13; Va. I, 14; W. Va. I, 7-8; Wis. I, 3.

[2] Crane v. Waters, 10 F. R. 620-21 (1882), cases, Lowell, C. J.; Express Printing Co. v. Copeland, 64 Tex. 354 (1885), cases: 24 Am. Law Reg. 644-48 (1885), cases.

[3] Briggs v. Garrett, 111 Pa. 404 (1886), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 112-14 (1884), cases.

[4] Bronson v. Bruce, 59 Mich. 467 (1886), cases. See also Crane v. Waters, 10 F. R. 619 (1882); 21 Cent. Law J. 86-90 (1885), cases.

[5] Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 392 (1878). See generally Cooley, Const. Lim. 414-26, 431-42, cases.

[6] L. libertas; liber, free.

[1] Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 106 (1885), Earl, J. See also People v. McCoy, Cr. Ct. Cook Co., Ill., 20 Chic. Leg. N. 151 (1888) — on right of a physician to advertise.

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 125; 20 Barb. 231.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 6.

[4] Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 515 (1848): Burlamaqui.

[5] 1 Shars. Bl. Com. 6.

tion in which rights are established and protected, by means of such limitations and restraints upon the action of individual members of the political society, as are needed to prevent what would be injurious to other individuals, or prejudicial to the general welfare. This condition may exist in any country, but its extent and securities must depend largely upon the degree of political liberty which accompanies it. "Political liberty" may be defined as consisting in an effectual participation of the people in the making of the laws.[1]

The Constitution provides that "No person shall be . . deprived of . . liberty . . without due process of law." Liberty here means freedom from all restraints but such as are justly imposed by law;[2] more, then, than freedom from physical restraint or the bounds of a prison: freedom to go where one may choose, and to act in such manner, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, as his judgment may dictate for the promotion of his happiness; that is, to pursue such callings and avocations as may be most suitable to develop his capacities, and give them their highest employment.[3]

"Civil liberty" exists only where every individual has the power to pursue his own happiness according to his own views, unrestricted, except by equal, just, and impartial laws.[4]

Every member of a political community must necessarily part with some of the rights which, as an individual, not affected by his relation to others, he might have retained. Such concessions make up the consideration he gives for the obligation of the body politic to protect him in life, liberty, and property.[5]

Personal liberty. Consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law.[6]

Next in importance to personal security, q. v. Violated by false imprisonment, q. v. The right forbids that a man be excluded from his country unless by sentence of law.[7]

See ARREST, 2 (2, 3); HABEAS CORPUS; IMPRISONMENT; LIFE; MAGNA CHARTA; POLICE, 2; RIGHT, 2 (2), Absolute.

Liberty of conscience. See CONSCIENCE; RELIGION.

Liberty of speech. The right to state facts and express an opinion.

Members of legislatures, "for any Speech or Debate in either House, . . shall not be questioned in any other Place."[1] But a printed and published speech might not bear this privileged character.

Counsel, in presenting his client's view of a case, may use language derogatory to adverse persons; but if he goes out of the way of fair criticism, pertinent to the matters in dispute, and maliciously defames a party or witness, he becomes liable to damages in an action for the slander.[2] See further ATTORNEY.

Liberty of the press. Consists in laying no previous restraints upon publication; not, in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published.[3]

Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public: to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done [down to 1694], is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man. But to punish dangerous or offensive writings, which, when published, shall on a fair and impartial trial be adjudged of a pernicious tendency, is necessary for the preservation of peace and good order, of government and religion, the only solid foundations of civil liberty. Thus the will of the individual is left free; the abuse only of that free will is the object of legal punishment.[4]

"The liberty of the press consists in the right to publish, with impunity, truth, with good motives, and for justifiable ends, whether it respects government, magistracy or individuals."[5]

The right, in the conductor of a newspaper, to print whatever he chooses without any previous license.[6]

"Congress shall make no law . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press."[7]

Provisions of like import are embodied in the constitutions of the States. Thus, the constitution of New York provides that "Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press."[8]

That a legislature may not pass any such law, ap-

[1] [Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 225-26, Torts, 8-10.

[2] Constitution, Amd. Art. V; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 127 (1872), Swayne, J., dissenting.

[3] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 142 (1876), Field, J., dissenting. See also People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386 (1885).

[4] Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 758 (1884), Field, J., dissenting; ib. 762.

[5] Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 536 (1883), Waite, C. J.

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 134.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 127; 1 id. 124, 137.

[1] See Constitution, Art. I, sec. 6, cl. 1.

[2] See 3 Chitty, Pr. 887; Maulsby v. Reifsnider, Md. Sup. Ct. (1888), cases.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 151.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 152.

[5] People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. *394 (1804), Kent, Judge.

[6] Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 182 (1878), Green, P. J. See, at length, Commonwealth v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 219 (1838), Shaw, C. J.; Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 176-77 (1882).

[7] Constitution, Amd. Art. I.

[8] N. Y. Const. Art. I, sec. 8. See references LIBEL, 5; also, State v. Judge of District Court, 34 La. An. 748 (1882).

plies to all citizens, whether in private or official station [1]

During a political canvass, every person has a right to speak, write and publish "his sentiments" and opinions, and to discuss the character, fitness, qualifications, habits, opinions, defects, merits or lack of them, of any candidate for office, in such form and manner as to him shall seem proper, subject, in law, only to responsibility for the abuse of that right. For such discussions the law sets up no standard of morality, taste, humanity or decency, but leaves those matters wholly to the censorship of the moral sense of the people, except that when such writings or publications are libelous in their character, and are not privileged, the publisher must be able, on a criminal prosecution, to show to a jury not only that they are true, but that they were published with good motives and for justifiable ends. But these provisions will be searched in vain to find any right to publish as genuine any false or forged letter or instrument purporting to be the act of another, although he be a candidate for office. In such a case, neither the forger nor the publisher of the forgery is writing or publishing his sentiments or opinions within the protection of the constitution, or discussing any question within the range of his lawful rights and privileges.[2]

The general liberty of the press must be construed in subordination to the right of any person calumniated thereby to hold it responsible for an abuse of that liberty.[3]

Liberty of circulating is as essential to the liberty of the press as liberty of publishing. Hence, printed matter excluded from the mails may be transported otherwise, as merchandise.[4]

Liberty of worship. See RELIGION.

2. The expression "improper liberties," taken with a woman, is ambiguous. It may mean no more than undue familiarities, but it may also refer to unlawful sexual commerce.[5] See BATTERY.

3. A franchise; also, the place or district where any such special privilege is enjoyed: as, the northern liberties of Philadelphia, the northern and eastern liberties of Pittsburgh. See FRANCHISE, 1.

Jail liberties. See JAIL.

LIBRARY. The room or place where books are kept, or the books in the aggregate.[6]

LICENSE.[7] Permission or authority: as, a license to do a particular thing.[8] See PERMIT.

Licensor. He who has given a license.

Licensee. He who has received a license.

Letter of license. An agreement whereby the creditors of an insolvent debtor consent to a temporary suspension of their rights, and bind themselves not to sue or molest the debtor for a specified time, during which he is allowed to carry on his business at his own discretion.[1] See COMPOSITION, 3.

More specific significations of license are:

1. Authority given to do some one act, or a series of acts, on the land of another, without passing any estate in the land: as, a license to hunt on another's land, or to cut down trees.[2]

"A mere license passes no interest . . only makes an action lawful, which, without it, would have been unlawful." If the instrument passes an interest, it is a grant.[3]

Imports leave, permission, sufferance, authorization: as, a license to enter upon land to erect a party-wall.[4]

In this sense, license is contrasted with easement, which implies an interest in another's land, distinct from the ownership of the soil, and enjoyable at all times; and with lease, which transfers the right to take the profits of the land.[5]

Any such license may be oral, or implied from acts, and executed or executory. An executory license, not founded on a consideration nor coupled with an interest, may be revoked.

A mere license to a party, without words showing it was meant to be assignable, is the grant of a personal power to the licensee, and not transferable.[6]

A license to do a particular act need not be in writing: it amounts to nothing more than an excuse for an act which would otherwise be a trespass. But a permanent right to hold another's land for a particular purpose, and to enter upon it at all times without his consent, is an important interest, which ought not to pass without writing.[7]

A licensee (of a mine) is not a lessee.[8]

---

[1] Louthan v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 196 (1884).

[2] People v. Morey, N. Y. (1881), Davis, J.

[3] Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 393 (1878).

[4] Exp. Jackson, 96 U. S. 733, 735 (1877).

[5] State v. Carr, 60 Iowa, 455 (1883), Day, C. J.

[6] Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. 9 (1834), Shaw, C. J.

[7] F. licence: L. licentia, freedom to act: licere, to be left free, to be allowable.

[8] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 213 (1824), Marshall, C. J.; 22 How. 240.

[1] [4 South. Law Rev. 639 (1878), cases.

[2] Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. *537 (1814), Parker, C. J.; Cheever v. Pearson, 16 Pick. 273 (1834), Shaw, C. J.; Morgan v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 327 (1878); 19 Ark. 32-33; 41 N. J. L. 75; 31 Pa. 477.

[3] Washburn v. Gould, 3 Story, 162 (1844), Story, J.: Thomas v. Sorrell, 1 Vaugh. 351 (1706), Vaughan, C. J.; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. *844 (1845).

[4] Sun Printing, &c. Association v. Tribune Association, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 140 (1878), Sanford, J.; 7 How. Pr. 84.

[5] See 1 Washb. R. P. 398; 19 Ark. 33; 74 Ill. 185; 40 Iowa, 456.

[6] Troy Iron, &c. Factory v. Corning, 14 How. 216 (1852); Oliver v. Rumford Chemical Works, 109 U. S. 82 (1883), cases.

[7] Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. *537 (1814), Parker, C. J.

[8] Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 129 (1886), cases.

A license creates no interest in the land. It is a mere power or authority, founded on personal confidence, not assignable, and revocable at pleasure, unless subsidiary to a valid grant, to the beneficial enjoyment of which its exercise is necessary, or unless executed under such circumstances as to warrant the interposition of equity. This is the result of the best considered cases. The doctrine of early cases, which converted an executed license into an easement, is now generally discarded as being "in the teeth of the statute of frauds."[1] See NEGLIGENCE; TICKET, Theater.

2. Any conveyance of a patent short of the entire monopoly, for the whole country or a particular district.[2]

Licensee. One who has transferred to him, in writing or orally, a less or different interest than the interest in the whole patent or an undivided part of such whole interest, or an exclusive sectional interest.[3] Compare ASSIGNEE; GRANTEE.

A license to make and use a patented invention, as, a machine, need not be in writing, nor recorded. It conveys neither an interest in a patent itself, nor a power authorizing a third person to construct the invention.[4]

A similar use of the words license and licensee obtains in the law of copyright. See DRAMA.

3. In popular understanding, a permission to do something which without the license would not be allowed. This is also the legal meaning.[5]

Permission granted by some competent authority to do an act which, without such commission, would be illegal.[6]

Evidence of permission to exercise a trade or calling in consequence of the payment of a tax or duty.[7]

Essentially the granting of a special privilege to one or more persons, not enjoyed by citizens generally, or, at least, not enjoyed by a class of citizens to which the licensee belongs.[8]

Vocations which need special surveillance, and others which are fit subjects for the exaction of a revenue, are restricted to persons who procure a formal permit. This system enables the authorities to register all such licensees, and to hold them to answer for any disobedience of law. These licenses are always in writing, in an official form, and run for a limited term.[1]

A "license" to be produced as a defense in a criminal prosecution is the right to do the thing in any mode permitted or not prohibited by law.[2]

Comprehends cases in which statutes declare that persons of certain occupations may do the thing, as, druggists, officers of the law, and other persons allowed to sell or distribute liquors.[3]

In this sense, contrasted with contract. Thus, lottery charters are not contracts, but mere licenses, and, as such, subject to future legislation.[4] See LOTTERY.

The privilege of running street cars may be in pursuance of a license, not of a contract, from the city authorities.[5]

Also contrasted with tax. A "license" is a right granted by some competent authority to do an act which, without such license, would be illegal. A "tax" is a rate or sum of money assessed on the same person, property, etc., of the citizen. A license is issued under the police power. If the fee required for a license is intended for revenue, its exaction is an exercise of the power of taxation.[6]

A "tax" upon a business is no more the granting of permission to engage in it than is the levying of a tax upon the property employed in the business. The distinction between a "tax" upon a business, and what might be termed a "license," is, that the former is exacted by reason of the fact that the business is carried on, the latter, as a condition precedent to the right to carry it on. In the one case the individual may rightfully engage in the business without paying the tax. A license may exist without the imposition of a tax, and a tax may be imposed without the granting of a license.[7]

A license issued under the act of Congress of June 30, 1864, "to provide internal revenue," conveys no authority to carry on the business within a State. The requirement of paying for such a license is only a mode of imposing taxes on the business.[8]

---

[1] Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 97-99 (1882), Vanderburg, J. See Jackson v. Philadelphia, &c. R. Co., 4 Del. Ch. 181 (1871), cases; 14 Ct. Cl. 327, cases.

[2] [Curtis, Patents, § 212.

[3] Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatch. 211 (1858): Act 4 July, 1836, §§ 13, 14; Kelly v. Porter, 17 F. R. 519 (1883); ib. 538; 15 Barb. 310; 5 Fish. Pat. Cas. 411; 1 id. 327; 1 Holmes, 149; 21 Wall. 205; 12 Blatch. 202.

[4] Baldwin v. Sibley, 1 Cliff. 155 (1858); Brooks v. Byam, 2 Story, 541 (1843).

[5] Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 419 (1875), Cooley, J.

[6] State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 226 (1882), cases, Okey, C. J.; 50 Ga. 530; 11 Neb. 547.

[7] [United States v. Cutting, 3 Wall. 443 (1865), Grier, J.

[8] State v. Frame, 39 Ohio St. 413 (1883), McIlvaine, J.; Anderson v. Brewster, 44 id. 587 (1886).

[1] [Abbott's Law Dict.]

[2] Commonwealth v. Carpenter, 100 Mass. 206 (1868), cases.

[3] Commonwealth v. Kennedy, 108 Mass. 294 (1871), cases.

[4] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814 (1879).

[5] Union Passenger Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia, 101 U. S. 528 (1879).

[6] Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 537 (1874), Trippe, J. See also Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 49 (1862); Burch v. Savannah, 42 Ga. 596 (1871); Fuller v. State, 48 Ala. 293-94 (1872); Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 102 Ill. 560, 566-68 (1882), cases.

[7] Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 558-59 (1886), Minshall, J.; Anderson v. Brewster, ib. 588 (1886); Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 537 (1874).

[8] License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462 (1866), Chase, C. J.

It is the generally received doctrine that, in the case of useful employments, prohibition cannot be exercised under authority to license.[1]

The power to license is a police power, although it may also be exercised for the purpose of raising revenue.[2]

A license authorizing a person to retail spirituous liquors does not create a contract between him and the government. The effect is merely to permit him to carry on the trade under certain regulations and to exempt him from the penalties provided for unlawful sales.[3]

A licensee to keep a pool-table for hire takes his license subject to such conditions as the legislature may see fit to impose at any time.[4]

See DRUMMER; LOTTERY; POLICE, 2; PROHIBITION, 2.

LICENTIA. See IMPARLANCE.

LICENTIOUSNESS. 1. Doing as one pleases, without regard to the rights of others. See LIBERTY, Natural.

2. Lewdness, q. v.

LICITATION.[5] Where the co-heirs or co-proprietors of a thing by undivided interest put it up at auction among themselves, that it may become the property of the one who will offer the most for it.

The thing remains charged with unpaid shares.[6]

Where there is disagreement between the owners of a vessel, there may be "licitation" and partition for a moiety by order of a court. The petition prays for a sale, and distribution of the proceeds. The proceeding is justified by the necessity, in the interests of commerce, and the relief of the parties, when they have reached a present actual inability to use the vessel.[7]

LIDFORD LAW. See LYNCH LAW.

LIE. 1, v. (1) To exist, subsist: as, to "lie in grant:" said of an incorporeal right; a corporeal right is said to "lie in deed." See GRANT, 1.

(2) To be maintainable, sustainable: as, an "action lies." Compare LAY, 2.

(3) To be concealed, or in ambush: as, to lie in wait. See LYING.

2, n. A willful untruth; a falsehood. See DECEIT; DECOY; ESTOPPEL; FALSEHOOD; FRAUD; REPRESENTATION, 1; SLANDER.

LIEGE. See ALLEGIANCE; FEUD; LORD, 1.

LIEN.[1] A tie that binds property to a debt or claim for its satisfaction.[2]

Originally, a tie or bond. In the metaphorical sense in which it is used in law, such hold or claim upon a thing, for the satisfaction of a debt, duty or demand, that it cannot be taken away until the same be satisfied and paid.[3]

A hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another, as a security for some debt or charge.[4]

A right to possess and retain property, until some charge attaching to it is paid or discharged.[5]

In its widest sense, includes every case in which personal or real property is charged with the payment of a debt.[6]

Lienor. He who is invested with a right of lien; he who may enforce a lien.[7]

Liens exist at common law, arising from usage, express contract or contract implied from dealings; they are recognized in equity and in admiralty; and are created also by statutory enactment. Common-law liens are displaced by surrender of possession. Liens by contract depend upon the terms of the contract, and statutory liens upon the construction of the statutes.[8]

A court of equity will relieve as against a lien at law, if, from difficulties, the parties are unable to obtain justice at law.[9]

---

[1] City of Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673 (1876).

[2] Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 373 (1882); State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 225 (1882).

[3] Calder v. Kurby, 5 Gray, 598 (1855), Bigelow, J. See also Van Hook v. City of Selma, 70 Ala. 368 (1881), cases; Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 724 (1881), cases; La Croix v. County Commissioners, 50 Conn. 329 (1882), cases; Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 49 (1862); State v. Holmes, 38 N. H. 227 (1859).

[4] Commonwealth v. Kinsley, 133 Mass. 579 (1882), cases.

[5] L. licitatio; liceor, to offer a price.

[6] Hache v. Ayraud, 14 La. An. 179 (1859): Pothier.

[7] The Annie Smith, 10 Benod. 110-17, 135, 138 (1878), cases.

[1] LÏ-en. F. lien, band, bond, tie: L. ligare, to bind.

[2] Stephani v. Bishop of Chicago, 2 Bradw. 253 (1878), Pleasants, J.

[3] Stansbury v. Patent Cloth Manufacturing Co., 5 N. J. L. 441 (1819), Kirkpatrick, C. J.

[4] Hardy v. Norfolk Manufacturing Co., 80 Va. 418 (1885), Lacy, J.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 506.

[6] Sullivan v. Portland, &c. R. Co., 4 Cliff. 226 (1874), Clifford, J.

See also 19 Am. Law Rev. 783-89 (1885), cases; 1 Mas. 221; 2 Story, 131; 13 Ala. 434; 12 Fla. 85; 46 Ga. 568; 39 Ill. 594; 69 Me. 427; 1 Mich. 472; 44 Miss. 518; 85 N. C. 432; 49 N. H. 352; 50 id. 75; 46 N. Y. 17; 4 Johns. 112; 12 Wend. 262; 26 id. 472; 49 Barb. 244; 11 Ohio St. 68; 7 Oreg. 434; 30 Pa. 277; 32 id. 360; 81 id. 132; 7 Heisk. 290; 2 Utah, 91; 21 Vt. 602; 48 Wis. 253; 2 East, 235; 15 id. 554; 2 Camp. 582.

[7] See 10 Benod. 557.

[8] 1 Story, Eq. § 506; Wilkie v. Day, 141 Mass. 78 (1886), cases; 4 Cliff. 225; 2 Flip. 413. Effect of taking security, 20 Cent. Law J. 405-7 (1885), cases.

[9] 2 Story, Eq. § 1216, a; 1 Ves. Jr. 416.

I. The civil law, under the head of mortgage and privilege, embraces the peculiar securities which in the common and maritime law, and in equity, are termed liens. See Maritime Lien.

II. At common law, the essence of a lien is the right of possession or retainer, until the charge is satisfied. Meanwhile, the chattel is regarded as in the custody of the law. The doctrine is based upon principles of natural equity and of commercial necessity; it also prevents circuity of action.[1] See Particular Lien.

Common-law liens are acquired by bailees: tradesmen, carriers, innkeepers, farriers; by non-bailees: vendors, salvors, impounders of estrays, finders — for a reward earned, but not for trouble and expense; and by usage of trade.

III. In equity liens are most largely recognized and liberally treated. They may exist without possession; and they are enforced by decree of foreclosure and sale. Such are vendors' liens, liens by deposit of deeds, partnership liens, liens pendente lite, liens of agreement. See Lien by Agreement, Vendor's Lien.

A lien in equity is not, in strictness, a jus in re or a jus ad rem; that is, neither a property in the thing itself, nor a right of action for the thing. It is a charge upon the thing; a right to possess and retain the property, until some charge attaching to it is paid or discharged.[2]

IV. In maritime law, liens do not require possession. They obtain for supplies furnished, for seaman's wages, for damages from collision. See Maritime Lien.

V. Liens created by statute cover cases where possession is not had with consent of the owner, or where exclusive possession is impossible. Such are the liens of mechanics, builders of houses, ship-builders, log-drivers, material-men, some claims of judgment and mortgage creditors, the claims of municipal corporations, and of mutual insurance companies.[3] See Judgment Lien, Mechanic's Lien, Municipal Lien.

Statutory liens have, without possession, the same operation and efficiency that existed as to common-law liens with possession. Thus, a personal chattel on the premises, sold in the ordinary course of trade, without knowledge of the lien, is not subject to its operation.[4]

A statutory lien implies a security upon the thing before a warrant to seize it is levied. It ties itself to the property from the time it attaches to it, and levy and sale are the means of enforcement. That is, proceedings are not necessary to fix the status of the property. Thus, for example, in the absence of this statutory lien, it is necessary for a landlord to take proceedings to acquire a lien on the property of his tenant.[1]

Although a lien on land constitutes no property or right in the land itself, still it confers a right to levy on the same to the exclusion of other adverse interests acquired subsequently to the judgment, and when the levy is actually made, the title of the creditor generally relates back to the time of the judgment, so as to cut out intermediate incumbrances. Different regulations, however, prevail in different jurisdictions, and in some States neither judgments nor decrees for the payment of money, except in cases of attachment on mesne process, create a preference in favor of the creditor until the execution issuing on the same has been duly levied on the land.[2]

Equitable lien. Such lien as exists in equity, and of which a court of equity alone can have cognizance. In most instances, this lien arises from some constructive trust.[3]

An equitable lien exists in favor of the assignee of a debt, on the money in the hands of the debtor.[4] See ASSIGNMENT, Equitable.

If a mortgagor is bound to insure the premises for the benefit of the mortgagee, the latter, to the extent of his interest in the property destroyed, has an equitable lien upon the money due on a policy taken out by the mortgagor. This is the law though the mortgagee may insure at the mortgagor's expense.[5] See Vendor's Lien.

General lien. See Particular Lien.

Judgment lien. At common law, a judgment is not a lien upon the land of the debtor; but now, in most of the States, by statute, a lien attaches immediately upon the judgment being regularly docketed. See JUDGMENT.

Lien by agreement. A party by agreement may create a charge in the nature of a lien on realty or personalty whereof he is the owner or in possession, which a court of equity will enforce against him and volunteers or claimants under him with notice of the agreement.[6]

[1] 3 Pars. Contr. 234.

[2] Exp. Foster, 2 Story, 144–45 (1842), cases, Story, J.; 1 Story, Eq. § 506; 2 id. § 1215.

[3] 3 Pars. Contr. 241.

[4] Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 386 (1876), cases, Clifford, J.

[1] Morgan v. Campbell, 22 Wall. 390–92 (1874), cases, Davis, J.

[2] Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 437 (1862), Clifford, Judge.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 1217.

[4] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 447 (1874), cases; Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 316–17 (1879).

[5] Wheeler v. Factors & Traders' Ins. Co., 101 U. S. 442 (1879), cases, Bradley, J.

[6] Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 316–17 (1879), cases, Harlan, J.

Lien by deposit of deed. See DEPOSIT, 2.

Lien of a mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

Lien pendente lite. See LIS, Pendens.

Maritime lien. This "privilege" or lien is adopted from the civil law, and imports a tacit hypothecation.

It is the subject-matter of the contract which must be maritime, not the mere object — the ship. Thus, no lien exists for compressing cotton upon land and before an affreightment contract, binding upon the ship, is made.[1]

A jus in re, without right of possession; divested by a proceeding in rem peculiar to admiralty. This lien is "secret," that is, it may operate to the prejudice of general creditors, and of purchasers without notice; wherefore, it is a stricti juris, and cannot be extended by construction, analogy, or inference.[2]

Does not depend upon possession, being a right affecting the right itself, which gives a proprietary interest in the thing and a right to proceed against it to recover that interest. The lien adheres to the proceeds in case of sale, follows the same, and may be attached in admiralty.[3]

Confers upon its holder such a right in the thing that he may subject it to condemnation and sale to satisfy his claim or damages. When the lien arises from a tort committed at sea, it travels with the thing, wherever it goes and into whosesoever hands it may pass. The object of the proceeding in rem is to make the right available, to carry it into effect.[4]

A collision impresses upon a wrong-doing vessel a maritime lien. This the vessel carries with it. The lien is inchoate at the moment of the wrong, but becomes perfected by subsequent proceedings. It is in the nature of the hypothecation of the civil law. It may be lost by laches.[5]

Advances made upon the credit of a ship for necessary repairs or supplies in a foreign port create a maritime lien. The lien is a jus in re, an incumbrance on the property of the ship, which is not divested by the death or insolvency of the owner. The process in rem obtains the thing itself or a satisfaction out of it. The interest is insurable.[6]

A carrier by water has a lien for freight. The lien is not an hypothecation, which remains a charge after possession is given, but analogous to the common-law lien of a carrier by water, who is not bound to deliver the goods until the charges are paid, and, if he delivers them, the lien is lost.[7]

Liens equalling or exceeding the whole value of the vessel should be enforced with diligence; otherwise they will be postponed for laches in favor of subsequent liens of navigation acquired without notice. By the general maritime law, liens ex delicto are inferior to liens ex contractu. A prior lien for supplies is entitled to a preference, as a mere question of rank, and independent of the equitable marshaling of securities or remedies, over a subsequent lien for damage upon the same voyage.[1]

The plaintiff may waive the lien in rem in admiralty and pursue his remedy by a suit in personam; or, he may institute an action at law, if the common law is competent to give a remedy.[2]

Liens on vessels encumber commerce and are discouraged. While the owner is present, no lien is acquired by a material-man; nor is any lien acquired where the vessel is supplied or repaired in a home port. A lien attaches to a foreign vessel only in a case of necessity and in the absence of the owner.[3]

See ADMIRALTY; CHARTER-PARTY; FREIGHT; HYPOTHECATION.

Mechanic's lien. A lien allowed to a person who furnishes materials or labor toward the construction or improvement of property, as, a building, or a vessel.

Not intended to secure the contractor, but those who lose by confiding in him. The owner of the property is compelled to take care of the material-man and the laborer. The lien prevents one portion of creditors from being paid at the expense of the labor and property of other creditors.[4]

When such liens were unknown, the builder could collect the contract price of the work from the owner, and refuse to pay his subordinates, who could not sue the owner nor reclaim what they had contributed. Now, the claims having been regularly filed, the property may be sold to pay them.[5] See INCIDENTAL; LABORER.

Municipal lien. A claim filed by the proper officer of a city or borough against property specially benefited by a public improvement; as, for the opening, grading, paving, or curbing of a street, the laying of water-pipes, the construction of a sewer, and other like municipal claims.

Such liens are of purely statutory origin. The details of the work of improvement are provided for by ordinance of councils. The requirements of the law must be substantially complied with.[6]

[1] The Paola R, 32 F. R. 174 (1887), cases.

[2] Vandewater v. Mills, 19 How. 89 (1856), cases, Grier, J.; 18 F. R. 743; 10 id. 489–96, cases.

[3] The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 598 (1874), Clifford, J.

[4] The Rock Island Bridge, 6 Wall. 215 (1867), Field, J.

[5] The China, 7 Wall. 68 (1868), cases, Swayne, J.; The Belfast, ib. 642 (1868), cases.

[6] Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Baring, 20 Wall. 163 (1873), cases, Clifford, J.

[7] Bags of Linseed, 1 Black, 112 (1861), Taney, C. J.

[1] The Young America, 30 F. R. 792–800 (1887), cases.

[2] Norton v. Switzer, 93 U. S. 356 (1876); Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall. 190 (1870). See The Woodland, 104 U. S. 180 (1881).

[3] People's Ferry Co. v. Beers, 20 How. 401 (1857); The Edith, 94 U. S. 518 (1876); 2 Law Q. Rev. 303 (1886).

[4] Winder v. Caldwell, 14 How. 445 (1852), Grier, J.; Bullock v. Horn, 44 Ohio St. 425 (1886).

[5] For whom mechanics' liens are created, see 21 Cent. Law J. 306–9 (1885), cases. On the property of married women, 23 id. 293 (1886), cases. As to the waiver of, 19 id. 262–65 (1884), cases.

[6] See 38 Pa. 339; 18 id. 26, 195; 25 id. 128; 61 id. 255, 399; 65 id. 146; 69 id. 352; 72 id. 89; 79 id. 346; 80 id. 505; 82 id. 360; 85 id. 366.

Particular lien. The right to retain a particular piece of property until a claim against it alone is paid. General lien. A right to retain property generally, on account of charges attaching to any or all article or articles.

The earliest form of lien was specific in nature. Where not arising from a contract of sale, this form was confined to transactions in which the justice or necessity of the case peremptorily demanded its allowance. The right to a general lien existed at first only by express contract, but it was in time allowed to be claimed, by implication, from the general usage of trade, or the mode of dealing between the parties.[1] See BALANCE.

Partnership lien. See PARTNERSHIP.

Secret lien. By this lien the vendor of personalty, who has delivered possession to the purchaser, is treated as the owner until the purchase money has been paid.

Such arrangement, when it has served to give false credit to the vendee, will be held to be a constructive fraud upon the creditor. The property will be viewed as the vendee's. The transaction is not changed by assuming the form of a lease. The courts look at the purpose rather than at the form of the contract. For these reasons chattel-mortgages are required to be recorded.[2] See Maritime Lien; SALE, Conditional.

Vendor's lien; vendee's lien. A vendor's lien on land holds for any part of the purchase-money which remains unpaid, against all persons except a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice.

A vendee's lien arises in cases where he pays the purchase-money prematurely, and the vendor, from inability or other cause, does not complete the title. Both are equitable liens.[3]

An equitable lien also exists in favor of the vendor of goods, provided no innocent third party has acquired an interest in them, where the vendee by fraud conceals his insolvency and his intention not to pay, and induces the owner to sell on credit.[4]

The seller of realty has a lien for the unpaid purchase-money; the buyer has an equitable title only.[5]

This is true, though the seller made an absolute conveyance by deed, and though the consideration is expressed to have been paid; unless there was an express or implied waiver of the lien. Such lien is not affected by the vendor's taking the bond or bill single of the vendee, or his negotiable promissory note, or his check, if unpaid, or any other instrument involving merely his liability. Intent not to rely exclusively upon such security may always be shown. The lien may be enforced against the vendor or vendee, as the case may be, and all holding under him, except bona fide purchasers without notice.[1]

The vendee is treated as the equitable owner of the land, and the vendor as the owner of the money. The purchaser may devise the land, even before a conveyance is made, and it will pass to his heir. The vendor stands seized for the benefit of the purchaser. In fine, equity treats contracts respecting lands as if they had been specifically executed.[2]

See IDEM, SONANS; MARSHAL, 2; OTHERS; REGISTRY; TAX, 2.

LIFE. 1. For purposes of inheriting or receiving a beneficial interest, begins with conception.[3]

2. Under the common law as to abortion, began with quickening,[4] q. v.

3. For the purpose of transferring civil rights, begins with birth.[5]

Civil life. Ends with extinction of civil rights. Natural life. Ends with natural death.

As we have no civil death, nor, practically, any forfeiture of land, there is now no occasion to use the expressions.[6] Compare DEATH, Civil, Natural.

Joint lives. A gift or grant to two or more persons, to be enjoyed while any two of them are alive, is spoken of, most frequently in English books, as for the joint lives of the beneficiaries.

"No person shall . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."[7]

"Life" here means something more than mere animal existence. The inhibition extends to all those limbs and faculties by which life is enjoyed — life and whatever God has given with it, for its growth and enjoyment.[8]

"Life, liberty, and property" comprehend every right known to the law.[9]

To secure rights of life and liberty, governments are instituted. The foregoing constitutional provision secures the individual from the arbitrary powers of

[1] 3 Pars. Contr. 235.

[2] See Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 672 (1876); 37 Ill. 370; 46 id. 488; 15 Conn. 384; 47 Barb. 648; 5 Cranch, 461; 4 Wash. 591; Story, Sales, § 313.

[3] 3 Pars. Contr. 277-78; 4 Kent, 151.

[4] Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 633 (1876), cases; 19 Cent. Law J. 2-7, 24-29 (1884), cases.

[5] Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. 125 (1874), cases.

[1] Cordova v. Hood, 17 Wall. 5-6 (1873), cases, Strong, J.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. § 790, cases; Gunton v. Carroll, 101 U. S. 426 (1879); 2 Black, 460; 2 McCrary, 103, 106; 3 id. 493-94, cases; 17 F. R. 304; 68 Ga. 159; 34 La. An. 166. As to priority of liens, see 37 Alb. Law J. 308-10 (1888), cases; as to assigning liens, 25 Am. Law Reg. 393-97 (1886), cases.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 130.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 129.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. 121.

[6] Constitution, Amd. Art. V.

[7] Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 142 (1876), Field, J.

[8] Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 320 (1866); Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 id. 136 (1873).

government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice.[1]

See DAMAGES; DEATH; HOMICIDE; LIBERTY, Personal; PUNISHMENT; PROCESS, 1, Due, etc.; SECURITY, 1, Personal; SURVIVE, 2. Compare NATUS; VIE; VIVERE.

Life annuity. A yearly income during life. See ANNUITY.

Life assurance or insurance. Insurance upon a life or lives.

Life policy. A policy of insurance upon a life. Life risks. The obligations of a company insuring lives — a life company. See INSURANCE.

Life estate. A right in realty (usually), limited by one or more lives.

Conventional life estate. Is created by the act of the parties. Legal life estate. Is created by construction and operation of law.[2]

Legal life estates comprise: tenancy in tail after possibility of issue is extinct; tenancy in curtesy; tenancy in dower. Conventional life estates comprise: an estate for the term of the grantee's own life; an estate for the life of another or the lives of others. That for another's life is the lowest species of freehold. A grant not fixing the term nor mentioning heirs is construed a life-estate. So is an estate held on the uncertain contingency that it may possibly last for life. And so also is a conveyance to a woman as long as she remains a widow, or during coverture; or as long as one shall live in a certain house or place; or, till a sum be paid out of the income of an estate.[3]

LIFT. A promissory note is said to be lifted when any person liable upon it pays it or substitutes another obligation for it.

LIGAN. Goods sunk in the sea, but tied to a buoy that they may be found again.[3] Compare FLOTSAM; JETTISON.

LIGHT. The right to the free access of the sun's rays to one's windows.

A species of easement; spoken of as "the right to light and air," also as "ancient lights:" because the possessor must have enjoyed them for at least twenty years before claiming the right.

At common law, light belongs to the first occupant during the time he holds possession. In England, this doctrine is still recognized, the right arising by prescription, or from an express or implied grant. In this country, the doctrine has been repudiated; at most, the right can be acquired only by express grant.[4] See BAY-WINDOW; OCCUPANCY.

False light. See WRECK; YACHT.

LIGHTNING. A policy of insurance which provides that the insurer shall be liable for fire by lightning, does not cover damage where there is no ignition.[1]

A tornado, due to electrical disturbance, and causing results like those produced by lightning, may be "lightning;" and expert testimony is receivable that lightning accompanying a tornado was the proximate cause of a loss.[2]

Where a horse is described in a policy against fire, to which is attached a clause of indemnity against lightning, "as contained in" a specified building, the animal need not be kept in the building all the time: it may be pastured in an adjoining field, and, if killed there by lightning, the insurance is recoverable.[3]

LIKE. Not, necessarily, identical with.[4]

Likeness. Resemblance; similitude. See COPY; EQUAL; MANNER; NOSCITUR; PHOTOGRAPH. Compare INSTAR; QUASI; SIMILIS.

Likewise. In a will, may mean "also," rather than "in like manner."[5]

A devise commencing with "likewise" was held to be subject to a contingency mentioned in connection with a preceding gift.[6]

LIMB. See BODY, 1; MAYHEM.

Limb of the law. A metaphorical expression, of uncertain origin, for a member of the legal profession.

LIMIT.[7] To mark out, define, indicate the extent or duration of.

"To limit" an estate is to define the period of its duration. The words employed are thence termed "words of limitation," and the act itself "limiting" the estate. See Limitation, 2.

Marking out an estate in lands, as, for a life, in tail, or in fee-simple, is "limiting" it.[8]

Limitation. Boundary; circumscription; restriction; curtailment; termination. See PROVIDED.

1. In constitutional law, the bound set to legislative power: as, constitutional limitation. See CONSTITUTION.

[1] United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 554–55 (1875); Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 234 (1819).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 120.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 292.

[4] See Story v. Odin, 12 Mass. *160 (1815), cases; Swansborough v. Coventry, 9 Bing. (23 E. C. L.) 503–04 (1832), cases; Haversick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 370 (1859); Mullen v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 142–44 (1869), cases; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 208–11 (1874), cases; Ray v. Sweeney, 14 Bush, 8–16 (1878), cases; Hayden v. Dutcher, 31 N. J. E. 218–24 (1878), cases; Tunstall v. Christian, 80 Va. 4 (1885), cases; 2 Bl. Com. 14; 3 Kent. 466; 2 Washb. R. P. 62.

[1] Babcock v. Montgomery Co. Mut. Ins. Co., 4 N. Y. 331–37 (1850), cases.

[2] Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 440–41 (1882); Same v. Same, 62 id. 443 (1885). See Kenniston v. Mut. Ins. Co., 14 N. H. 341 (1843).

[3] Haws v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc. 114 Pa. 431 (1886).

[4] United States v. Wallace, 116 U. S. 400 (1886).

[5] State Bank v. Ewing, 17 Ind. 74 (1861).

[6] Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105 (1857).

[7] F. limite: L. limitem; limes, a boundary.

[8] Williams, Real Prop. 140.

2. In deeds and devises, marking out an interest in property; the restricted duration of an estate.

Collateral limitation. Gives an interest for a prescribed period, but makes the right of enjoyment depend upon some collateral event.

As, an estate vested in one person till another shall go to Rome, or to one and his heirs till the construction of a certain cathedral shall be finished.[1]

Conditional limitation. Where an estate is so expressly confined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for a longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail.[1]

As, when land is granted to a man "while" he continues unmarried, or "until" out of the income he shall make a specified amount. In such case the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens, and the next subsequent estate becomes immediately vested without any act to be done by him who is next in expectancy.[2]

"An estate upon condition" enures beyond the time when the contingency happens, unless the grantor, his heir or assign, takes advantage of the breach of the condition.[3]

A condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled, or there be a breach of it.[4]

A "condition" determines an estate after breach, upon entry or claim by the grantor or his heir, or the heir of the devisor. A "limitation" marks the period which determines the estate without any act on the part of him who has the next expectant interest. Upon the happening of the prescribed contingency, the estate first limited comes at once to an end, and the subsequent estate arises. A "conditional limitation" is, therefore, of a mixed nature, partaking both of a condition and of a limitation: of a condition, because it defeats the estate previously limited; of a limitation, because upon the happening of the contingency the estate passes to the person having the expectant interest, without entry or claim.[4] See CONDITION.

If the event upon which the estate is limited may by possibility not occur within the term of a life in being and twenty-one years afterward, it is too remote. . . Regard is had to possible not to actual events. That a limitation might include objects too remote is fatal to its validity, irrespective of the event.[5] See ALIENATION.

Limitation over. See DEVISE, Executory.

Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event without action, entry, or claim, before it would or might otherwise expire by force of or according to the general limitation.

May be created by the words "until," "so long as," "if," "while," "during." The estate determines as soon as the contingency happens, and the subsequent estate becomes immediately vested.[1]

Words of limitation. Language which marks out the nature of an estate; opposed to "words of purchase."

When it is said, with reference to a conveyance to A and his heirs, that "heirs" is a word of limitation and not of purchase, the meaning is, that "heirs" marks out the nature of the estate taken by A — a fee-simple; and that his heirs take nothing directly (i. e., by purchase) under such limitation.[2]

"Words of limitation" are such as limit or mark out the estate to be taken by a grantee. At the present day, when the heir is perhaps the last person to get the estate, these words are regarded simply as formal means conferring powers and privileges on the grantee — as mere technicalities. In ancient times such words meant what they said, and gave the estate to the "heirs" or the "heirs of the body" of the grantee, after his decease, according to the letter of the gift.[3] See IF; PROVIDED; REMAINDER; SHELLEY'S CASE; THEN; WHEN.

3. In statutes regulating judicial proceedings, the time beyond which a plaintiff cannot lay his cause of action.[4]

A bar to the alleged right of the plaintiff to recover in the action, created by or arising out of the lapse of a certain time after the cause of action has accrued, as appointed by law.[5]

Refers to the time which is prescribed by the authority of the law during which a title may be acquired to property by virtue of simple adverse possession and enjoyment, or the time at the end of which no action at law or in equity can be maintained.[6]

In the Roman law, called præscriptio.

But the word also applies to criminal proceedings,

---

[1] See 4 Kent, 128; 1 Washb. R. P. 215-16.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 155; The Fifty Associates v. Howland, 11 Metc. 102 (1846).

[3] [2 Bl. Com. 155. See also 4 Kent, 121.

[4] Proprietors of Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 3 Gray, 147 (1855), Bigelow, J. See also 4 Hughes, 594; 16 Me. 160; 5 Neb. 407; 73 N. C. 125; 5 R. I. 212; 76 Va. 145; 18 Ves. 433; 2 Washb. R. P. 457-60.

[5] Donohue v. McNichol, 61 Pa. 78 (1869): 3 Gray, 153; 8 id. 85, 97; 15 Eng. Ch., 2 K., 54; 8 Sim. 615; 10 id. 57; 1 Jarm. Wills, 233.

[1] Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. 340 (1868): Smith, Ex. Int. 12; Fearne, Rem. 10-13; 2 Bl. Com. 155.

[2] [Mozley & W. Law Dict.

[3] Williams, Real Prop. 245; 2 Washb. R. P. 604.

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 307.

[5] Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 300 (1866), Clifford, J.

[6] Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 622 (1885), Miller, J., quoting Angell, Lim. Actions.

as to which the period is extended in some proportion to the gravity of the offense. An indictment for murder may be found at any time during the life of the alleged felon. The limitation for other offenses varies from years to days, as from ten years to sixty days. At common law, there is no absolute limitation.[1]

Under the laws of the United States, offenses not capital, except as provided in Rev. St., § 1046, may not be prosecuted after three years.[2]

The statute begins to run from the cessation of criminal conduct, as that of carrying concealed weapons.[3]

The most important English statute relating to civil suits is the famous Statute of Limitations of 21 James I (1624), c. 16; the general principles of which underlie, or are embodied in, the American statutes. At the same time, each State has its distinctive legislation, relating to both civil and criminal suits. Provisions of like nature exists in acts of Congress. Equity and admiralty courts apply the principle of these statutes as a matter of discretion. The periods of time vary with the law of the place or courts.[4]

The purpose of such statutes is to preserve the peace, and to prevent perjuries which might ensue if men were allowed to bring actions for injuries committed at any distance of time.[5]

The statutes confer no right of action. They restrict the period within which the right, otherwise unlimited, might be asserted. They are founded upon the general experience that claims which are valid are not usually allowed to remain neglected. The lapse of years, without any attempt to enforce a demand, creates, therefore, a presumption against its original validity, or that it has ceased to subsist. The presumption is made by these statutes a positive bar; and they thus become statutes of repose, protecting parties from the prosecution of stale claims, when by loss of the evidence by the death of some witnesses, and the imperfect recollection of others, or the destruction of documents, it might be impossible to establish the truth. Their policy is to encourage promptitude in the prosecution of remedies. For this purpose they prescribe what is supposed to be a reasonable period.[6]

Statutes of limitation are necessary to the welfare of society. The lapse of time carries with it the means of proof. They do not impair the remedy: they require its application within the reasonable time specified.[7]

The common law fixed no time for bringing actions. Limitations derive their authority from statutes.[8]

The statutes are entitled to the same respect as other statutes, and are not to be explained away.[1]

Affecting existing rights, they are not unconstitutional, if a reasonable time is given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect.[2] See IMPAIR; REMEDY.

They apply, in terms, to legal remedies. Courts of equity are bound only in cases of concurrent jurisdiction. In other cases, these courts act by analogy, not in obedience to the statutes.[3]

But a court of equity will not apply the statute, by analogy, when it would be against conscience to do so — when wrong and injustice would be wrought.[4]

If the facts on which any right of action is based have been fraudulently concealed, or if the fraud is such as conceals itself, the statute runs from the discovery of the fraud, or of such information as, diligently followed up, would discover it.[5]

When the object is to obtain relief against a fraud, the bar of the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered or becomes known to the party injured by it. . . . In suits in equity, where relief is sought on the ground of fraud, the authorities, without conflict, hold that where the ignorance of the fraud has been produced by affirmative acts of the guilty party in concealing the facts from the other, the statute will not bar relief, provided that suit is brought within proper time after the discovery of the fraud. We also think that in suits in equity the decided weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that where the party injured by the fraud remains in ignorance of it, without any fault or want of diligence or care on his part, the bar of the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered, though there be no special circumstances or efforts on the part of the party committing the fraud to conceal it from the knowledge of the other party. On the question as it arises in actions at law, there is in this country a very decided conflict of authority. Many courts hold that the rule is sustained in courts of equity only on the ground that these courts are not bound by the mere force of the statute as courts of common law are, but only as they have adopted its principle as expressing their own rule of applying the doctrine of laches in analogous cases. They, therefore, make concealed fraud an exception on purely equitable principles. On the other hand, the English courts, and the courts of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and others of great respectability, hold that the doctrine is equally applicable to cases at law. . . . The weight of judicial authority, as stated, is in favor of applying the rule to suits at law as well as in equity. This is founded in a sound and philosophical view of the principles of the [1] See Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. §§ 316–29, cases; 1 Bish. Cr. Pr. § 405; 3 Bl. Com. 307.

[2] R. S. § 1044; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 204.

[3] United States v. Owen, 32 F. R. 537 (1887).

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 307; Levy v. Stewart, 11 Wall. 249 (1870).

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 307.

[6] Riddlesbarger v. Hartford Ins. Co., 7 Wall. 390 (1868), Field, J. See also Spring v. Gray, 5 Mas. 523 (1830), Story, J.

[7] Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 603 (1877); Levy v. Stewart, 11 Wall. 249 (1870); United States v. Wiley, ib. 513 (1870); 17 F. R. 140.

[8] United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489 (1878).

[1] United States v. Wilder, 13 Wall. 256 (1871); Spring v. Gray, 5 Mas. 523 (1830).

[2] Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 632–33 (1877), cases.

[3] Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 466 (1880). See also Chewett v. Moran, 17 F. R. 823–24 (1883), cases; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 257 (1885), cases.

[4] Buckingham v. Ludlum, 37 N. J. E. 147 (1883); 17 F. R. 871.

[5] Yancy v. Cothran, 32 F. R. 689 (1887), cases. The courts have engrafted this rule on R. S. § 5057.

statutes of limitations. They are enacted to prevent frauds; to prevent parties from asserting rights after the lapse of time had destroyed or impaired the evidence which would show that such rights never existed, or had been satisfied, transferred, or extinguished, if they ever did exist. To hold that by concealing a fraud, or by committing a fraud in a manner that it concealed itself until such time as the party committing it could plead the statute of limitations to protect it, is to make the law which was designed to prevent fraud the means by which it is made successful and secure. And we see no reason why this principle should not be as applicable to suits tried on the common-law side of the court's calendar as to those on the equity side. . . When there has been no negligence or laches on the part of a plaintiff in coming to the knowledge of the fraud which is the foundation of the suit, and when the fraud has been concealed, or is of such a character as to conceal itself, the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered by, or becomes known to, the party suing, or those in privity with him.[1]

The California statute applies to suits in equity as well as actions at law; and the statute provides all exceptions to the running in ended to be allowed. The remedy at law being complete, there is no ground for equitable relief.[2]

The presumption of a statute of limitations extends only against individuals: their personal interest induces vigilance in the enforcement of their claims. It does not extend against the state, which acts through numerous agents, having no such incentive to prosecute her claims. She, therefore, is not embraced in a statute, unless expressly designated or necessarily included by the nature of the mischiefs to be remedied.[3] See LACHES; TEMPUS, Nullum, etc.

The statute runs against a cestui que trust from the time he learns that the trustee repudiates the trust and claims to hold the estate as his own;[4] from the time that the trust is openly disavowed by the trustee insisting upon an adverse interest which is clearly made known to the beneficiary.[5]

The statute does not begin to run till the cause of action is complete and the party capable to sue; but, once begun, nothing stops the running. In civil matters, part payment, or an explicit acknowledgment that a claim is still due, will take a case out of the statute.

A disability to prevent the statute from running must exist at the time the action accrues; and, after the statute has once commenced to run, no subsequent disability will interrupt it.[1]

A defendant who desires to avail himself of the statute as a defense must raise the question in pleading, on the trial, or before judgment.[2]

See further ACCRUE, 2; ACKNOWLEDGMENT, 1; CONCEAL, 4; COUPON, Bond; PAYMENT, Part; POSSESSION, Adverse; PROMISE, New; REPOSE; SAVE; STALE; STATUTE, English.

Limited. Confined; restricted in duration, extent, or scope: as, a limited — administration, divorce, fee, jurisdiction, liability, partnership, qq. v. Compare ABSOLUTE.

LINE.[3] 1. Exterior limit; limit of possession or ownership; boundary.

If a boundary line runs to or by the line of an object, such as a house or a lot, ordinarily the exterior limit is intended. And the grantor in a deed may use the word in this sense with respect to the line of a street. But the general rule is that a grantee takes only to the middle of a street as a boundary, unless the deed or the character of the locality indicates a different intention. It will not ordinarily be presumed that the grantor intends to reserve a narrow strip of land, of no special use to him, and of no value, should the way be discontinued.[4] See further ALONG; BOUNDARY; THREAD; WALL.

2. A connected series, as, of facilities, means of conveyance, transportation, or transmission.

As, a continuous line, intersecting lines, competing lines of railroad or telegraph communication. See CARRIER, Common; CONNECTION, 1; EXTEND; PARALLEL; TELEGRAPH.

3. The connection between persons descended from a common ancestor: course of descent.

Direct line. Persons immediately descended one from the other. Collateral line. Persons descended from the same ancestor, but not from each other.

Paternal line. Descent as traced through the father. Maternal line. Descent traced through the mother.

These lines are in turn spoken of as ascending, and descending: proceeding upward, and downward.

Lineal; lineage. Lineal implies immediate descent, direct course of descent:[5] as,

[1] Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 347–50 (1874), cases, Miller, J. See also United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 347 (1888); Smith v. Clay, Ambl. 645 (1767): 3 Brown, Ch. *639–43, Ld. Camden; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 1 Jac. & W. 138–41 (1820), Pulmer, M. R.; Gresley v. Monsley, 4 De G. & J. *95–96 (1859), cases; Jackson v. McNabb, 39 Ark. 116 (1882), Eakin, J.; Angell, Lim. 25.

[2] Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kissane, 32 F. R. 429 (1887), Sawyer, J.; Norris v. Haggin, 28 id. 282 (1886).

[3] Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall. 70 (1873); United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 489 (1878); United States v. Nashville, &c. R. Co., 118 id. 125 (1886), cases; United States v. Beebe, 17 F. R. 36, 39–41 (1883), cases: 127 U. S. 344–47 (1888), cases.

[4] United States v. Taylor, 104 U. S. 222 (1881), cases; 4 Hughes, 312, 317: 37 N. J. E. 144; 59 Tex. 150, cases.

[5] Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 386 (1887), cases, Gray, J.

[1] McDonald v. Hovey, 110 U. S. 621 (1884), cases: R. S § 1008.

[2] Retzer v. Wood, 109 U. S. 187 (1883), cases.

[3] L. linea, thread, string.

[4] Hamlin v. Fairpoint Manuf. Co., 141 Mass. 56 (1886), cases.

[5] See 2 Bl. Com. Ch. XIV.

lineal — consanguinity, descent, warranty, qq. v. See also ANCESTOR; PEDIGREE.

LINGUA. See MEDIETAS.

LINK. A "link in the chain of evidence," a "link in the chain of title," a "link in the record," are common figurative expressions.

Such "links" may often be supplied by presumption,[1] q. v. See also CHAIN.

LIQUIDATE.[2] To clear off, clear up, clear away.

1. To clear away, to lessen debts, to pay.

To liquidate a balance is, in common parlance, to pay it.[3]

2. To determine the amount to be paid: as, to liquidate a debt, a demand, damages.

Liquidated. A debt or demand is liquidated when the amount due is agreed upon by the parties, or is fixed by the operation of law.[4] Unliquidated. Undetermined, unascertained.

Liquidated account. Has its amount certain and fixed, by act of the parties or operation of law.[5]

Liquidated damages. When the amount thereof is ascertained.[6] See DAMAGES, Liquidated.

Liquidated debt. Has certainty as to what is due.[6]

Liquidated demand. Has the amount ascertained, settled, by agreement or otherwise.[7]

Liquidating. The member who settles the affairs of a partnership, by adjusting claims and paying debts, is called the "liquidating" partner. See Liquidator.

Liquidation. The act or matter of adjusting claims of indebtedness, or for damages.[8]

Board of Liquidation. In Louisiana, in 1874, an agency of the State government to carry into effect a plan of consolidating its outstanding debt and converting it, with the consent of creditors, into a uniform bond, with the same rate of interest, and providing additional security for the payment of the new bonds.[9]

When, after duties have been liquidated, a reliquidation takes place, the date of the latter is the final liquidation for purposes of protest.[1]

Liquidator. One who settles up the business affairs of an insolvent — individual, partnership, or company.

Under the English bankruptcy act of 1869, the creditors of an embarrassed person may resolve that his affairs shall be liquidated by a trustee, with or without a committee of inspection. The property of the debtor thereupon vests in the trustee, who has the powers of a trustee in bankruptcy. By resolution, at a general meeting, the creditors may close the liquidation and discharge the trustee. See WIND UP; BANK, 2 (2), National.

LIQUOR. "Liquors" commonly includes all liquors that are spirituous, vinous, inferior fermented, and malt.[2]

Intoxicating liquor. Any kind of liquor that will intoxicate, whether distilled or fermented.[3]

In Massachusetts, any beverage that contains more than three per centum of alcohol, by volume, at sixty degrees Fahrenheit.[4]

Spirituous liquor. Distilled liquor. All spirituous liquor is intoxicating; yet all intoxicating liquor is not spirituous, as, fermented liquor.[5]

"Spiritous" was held to mean "spirituous" liquor.[6]

Vinous liquor. Liquor made from the juice of the grape.[7]

Liquor dealer. Selling an occasional drink out of a bottle was held not to constitute carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer.[8]

Liquor shop. A house where spirituous liquors are kept and sold.[9]

Ale. Held to be within the terms of a statute prohibiting the sale of "strong or spirituous liquors" without license.[10] See Cider.

---

[1] See 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 1347, 1354.

[2] L. L. liquidare, to make liquidus, clear.

[3] [Fletcher v. United States, 8 Wheat. 362 (1823), Story, J.; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 61 (1887).

[4] Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 332 (1854); 48 Conn. 365.

[5] Nisbet v. Lawson, 1 Ga. 287 (1846).

[6] Roberts v. Prior, 20 Ga. 562 (1856).

[7] Mitchell v. Addison, 20 Ga. 53 (1856).

[8] See Martin v. Kirk, 2 Humph. 531 (1841). Durkee v. Board of Liquidation, 103 U. S. 647 (1880); Board, &c. v. Louisville R. Co., 109 id. 221, 228 (1883); N. O. Board, &c. v. Hart, 118 id. 140 (1886).

[1] Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 608 (1888).

[2] People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. 248-49 (1855); State v. Brittain, 89 N. C. 576 (1883).

[3] State v. Reynolds, 47 Vt. 299 (1875); Commissioners v. Taylor, 21 N. Y. 173 (1860).

[4] Mass. Act 23 April, 1880, 191, c. 239, § 5.

[5] Commonwealth v. Grey, 2 Gray, 502 (1854). See State v. Haymond, 20 W. Va. 21 (1882), cases; State v. Oliver, 26 id. 425-26, 431-33 (1885), cases.

[6] Commonwealth v. Burke, 15 Gray, 408 (1860).

[7] Adler v. State, 55 Ala. 24 (1876); 38 Iowa, 467.

[8] United States v. Jackson, 1 Hughes, 531 (1875): R. S. §§ 3242, 3244.

[9] Wooster v. State, 6 Baxt. 534 (1873).

[10] Nevin v. Ladue, 3 Denio, 43, 437 (1846); 20 Barb. 246; 105 Mass. 480; 30 Conn. 55; 33 Ind. 206; 12 Mo. 389; 44 N. H. 511.

Beer. The courts will take judicial notice that "lager beer" is a malt liquor.[1]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, beer will be presumed to be an intoxicating liquor.[2]

In section six of the Illinois Dram-shop act, "intoxicating liquor" means spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors. Proof, therefore, of a sale of beer (to a minor) without showing the kind of beer, and whether malt, vinous, or spirituous, is not sufficient to sustain an indictment. There are kinds of beer which are neither a malt liquor nor intoxicating.[3]

When a witness testifies to the sale of beer under circumstances which make the sale of any intoxicating liquors unlawful, the prima facie inference is that the beer was of that quality declared by statute to be an intoxicating liquor.[4]

Whether a particular kind, as, "Schenck beer," is intoxicating, may be a question of fact for a jury; that it contains alcohol may not be conclusive upon this point.[5] So as to "hop beer."[6]

"Strong beer" is within the meaning of the term "strong or spirituous liquors," in a statute to suppress intemperance.[7]

Cider. An averment of the sale of "intoxicating liquor" was held sustained by proof of the sale of unfermented cider.[8]

Whether ale and cider, after fermentation, are intoxicating liquors, is a question for a jury.[9]

Neither cider nor crab-cider are included within the term "spirituous liquors, wine, ale, porter, beer, or any drink of like nature."[10]

Gin. The court will take judicial notice that gin is an intoxicating liquor.[11]

Pop. Where the charge was selling "intoxicating liquors," and the proof was a malt liquor of an intoxicating quality called "pop," a conviction was sustained.[12]

Rum. This is a spirituous liquor, within a statute against selling such liquor without first paying a license tax.[13]

Wine. Is a fermented, not a spirituous, liquor.[14]

Whether "blackberry wine" is a spirituous liquor was left to a jury to decide.[15]

"Champaigne wine" was held to be a liquor.[1]

"Port wine" is an intoxicating liquor.[2]

Alcohol and gum-camphor mixed do not constitute a "spirituous liquor."[3]

Whatever is generally and popularly known as intoxicating liquor, such as whiskey, brandy and gin, is within the prohibitions of the Kansas act of 1881, and may be so declared as matter of law by the courts,—that act prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors except for medical, scientific, and mechanical purposes, and providing that no one shall sell for the excepted purposes without a druggist's permit from a probate judge. Whatever is generally and popularly known as medicine, an article for the toilet, or for culinary purposes, recognized, and the formula for its preparation prescribed, in some standard authority, and not among the liquors ordinarily used as intoxicating beverages, such as tincture of gentian, paregoric, bay rum, cologne, essence of lemon, are not within the statute, and may be so declared as matter of law by the courts, notwithstanding such articles contain alcohol and may produce intoxication. But as to articles intermediate between these two classes, articles not known to the United States dispensatory or other standard authority, compounds of intoxicating liquors with other ingredients, whether provided for a single case, or compounded upon a formula and sold under a specific name, as, bitters, cordials, tonics, whether they are within or without the statute, is a question of fact for the jury alone. The test is this: If the compound be such that the distinctive character and effect of intoxicating liquor are gone, that its use as an intoxicating beverage is practically impossible, by reason of the other ingredients, then it is not included within the statute. But if the intoxicating liquor remains as a distinctive force and the compound is reasonably liable to be used as an intoxicating beverage, then it is within the statute.[4]

Any State may prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for use as a beverage.[5]

At common law, traffic in intoxicating liquors was a lawful business. The original of the statutes licensing the traffic is found in 5 and 6 Edw. VI (1552), c. 25.[6]

In the exercise of the police power, a State may commit the sale of liquor to any class of persons the legislature deems peculiarly fit for the duty.[7]

Under a statute which imposes a fine for selling liquor to a minor, no conviction can be had if the accused exercised reasonable caution, and honestly believed that the purchaser was of age.[8]

An injunction will not be granted by a Federal court

[1] Watson v. State, 55 Ala. 158 (1876).

[2] State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 484 (1883): 6 id. 371; 16 Mo. 389; 14 Ohio, 586; Briffit v. State, 58 Wis. 39, 44 (1883): 3 Park. Cr. R. 9; 21 N. Y. 173; 63 id. 277; 11 R. I. 522.

[3] Hansberg v. People, 120 Ill. 21, 25 (1886), cases.

[4] Myers v. State, 93 Ind. 253 (1883), cases: 5 Crim. Law Mag. 360–63 (1884), cases; Commonwealth v. Magee, 141 Mass. 118 (1886).

[5] Commonwealth v. Bios, 116 Mass. 56 (1874).

[6] State v. McCafferty, 63 Me. 223 (1874).

[7] Excise Commissioners v. Taylor, 21 N. Y. 173 (1860).

[8] Commonwealth v. Dean, 14 Gray, 99 (1859).

[9] State v. Biddle, 54 N. H. 379 (1874); 69 Me. 133.

[10] State v. Oliver, 26 W. Va. 422, 425, 427 (1885).

[11] Commonwealth v. Peckham, 2 Gray, 514 (1854).

[12] Godfriedson v. People, 88 Ill. 284 (1878).

[13] United States v. Angell, 11 F. R. 34 (1881).

[14] Caswell v. State, 2 Humph. 402 (1841); State v. Moore, 5 Blackf. 118 (1839); 19 Conn. 493.

[15] State v. Lowry, 74 N. C. 121 (1876.)

[1] Kizer v. Randleman, 5 Jones L. 428 (N. C., 1858).

[2] State v. Packer, 80 N. C. 439 (1879).

[3] State v. Haymond, 20 W. Va. 18 (1882).

[4] Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 766–68 (1881), Brewer, J., citing 38 Iowa, 426; 130 Mass. 68; 33 Vt. 659. See generally 5 Crim. Law Mag. 360–65 (1884), cases.

[5] Prohibitory-Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 722 (1881), cases.

[6] State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 219 (1882), Okey, C. J.

[7] Koester v. State, 36 Kan. 32 (1886).

[8] Kreamer v. State, 106 Ind. 192 (1885), cases: 25 Am Law Reg. 517 (1885); ib. 518–21, cases pro and con to prevent a State court from enforcing its decree restraining plaintiff from selling liquors, and abating his saloon as a nuisance, under State law, after the case has been removed to the Federal court. The injury to the plaintiff may be fully compensated at law, in the event of the removed case being decided in his favor.[1]

A person who knowingly purchases liquor from one unauthorized to sell it does not aid and abet the crime.[2]

See further ALCOHOL; BAR, 2; BOTTLE; COMMERCE; CONDITION; DISTILLER; DRAM; DRUMMER; DRUNKARD; HEALTH; INDIAN COUNTRY; INTEMPERATE; INTOXICATE; KEEP; MERCHANT; MORALS; OPTION, Local; POLICE, 2; PRIVILEGE, 2; PROHIBITION, 2; REPEAL; RETAIL; SALOON; TAVERN.

LIS. A dispute, a controversy; a suit at law.

Lis alibi pendens. An action pending elsewhere: a plea that a suit is pending in another court for the same cause of action.

Not good when the litigation is in a court of foreign jurisdiction. The rule is modified by courts of equity and admiralty, which will require a plaintiff who has a suit elsewhere for the same cause, and with an equally advantageous remedy, to elect which he will prosecute.[3]

Lis mota. A controversy begun.

A declaration which is hearsay evidence is receivable of a matter of general interest, provided it be made ante litem motam — before any controversy arose upon the particular matter. People are not wholly indifferent in view of threatened litigation. The rule was familiar to the Roman law; but in that law lis mota referred to the commencement of the action. With us, lis has its earlier and larger sense of controversy, strife. Opposed to ante litem motam is post litem motam.[4]

Lis pendens. A suit in progress: a suit pending. Pendente lite. While a suit pends; during the continuance of litigation.

Administration may be granted pendente lite, till the validity of an alleged will be determined. An allowance to a wife, as complainant or respondent in proceedings for a divorce, is alimony pendente lite. And he who buys realty, in actual litigation in court, is a purchaser pendente lite, or a holder with notice of lis pendens, and affected in his title by the result.

A purchase made of property actually in litigation, pendente lite, for a valuable consideration, and without express or implied notice in point of fact, affects the purchaser as if he had such notice.[5]

The doctrine of lis pendens is that realty, or, to some extent, personalty, when put in litigation by a suit in equity, will, if the suit is prosecuted with reasonable diligence, be bound by the final decree, notwithstanding any intermediate alienation. The doctrine is founded on the policy that property which is specifically sued for shall abide the result of the suit; for, otherwise, by successive alienations, the litigation might be indefinitely prolonged. It relates only to changes of ownership, but assumes that the property itself will remain either identically the same or be at least traceable into some new form in which it can be reached. The doctrine will not be extended without strict necessity. A bill in equity seeking to recover the value of wood cut upon realty, the title of which was held to be in the complainant, cannot be maintained: it would be in effect an action of trover and conversion.[1]

The doctrine, as generally understood, is not based upon presumptions of notice, but upon a public policy imperatively demanded by a necessity which can be overcome in no other manner.[2]

Lis pendens is said to be general notice to all the world. The doctrine rests upon public policy, rather than upon notice: the law does not allow parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to property in dispute so as to prejudice the opposite party. A lis, to affect a person's power of alienation, must be a lis in which a decree could be entered against him as to the property. In the earlier cases it was held that lis pendens was notice to all the world.[3]

Among the actions to which the doctrine applies are suits: to foreclose unrecorded mortgages, and vendors' liens, to set aside a decree of partition, to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty, to enforce a charge against realty whatever the form of the action. Actions in the nature of creditors' bills have been considered as giving notice to subsequent purchasers of the particular property in controversy.[4]

The rule does not apply to negotiable securities purchased before maturity. And the considerations which exclude the operation of the rule apply whether they were created during the suit or before its commencement, and to controversies as to their origin or transfer.[5]

He who intermeddles with property in litigation does so at his peril, and is as conclusively bound by the results of the litigation, whatever they be, as if he had been a party from the outset.[6]

A lis pendens, duly prosecuted, and not conclusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpœna after the bill is filed. This is no more than the adoption of a rule in a real action at

[1] Wagner v. Drake, 31 F. R. 851 (1887).

[2] State v. Teahan, 50 Conn. 100 (1882): 22 Pick. 476; 24 id. 306; contra, 2 Head, 135.

[3] Lynch v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 17 F. R. 628 (1883), Lowell, J., citing 22 Ch. Div. 397; 23 id. 226.

[4] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 181; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 193, 213; 4 Campb. *417; 1 Pet. 337; 77 Va. 689.

[5] 1 Story, Eq. § 405.

[1] Gardner v. Peckham, 13 R. I. 103–104 (1880), Durfee, C. J., citing Bellamy v. Sabine, 1 De G. & J. *566 (1857).

[2] Freeman, Judg. § 191, cases.

[3] Dovey's Appeal, 97 Pa. 160 (1881), Paxson, J.; 1 De G. & J. 580; 2 Rand. 93.

[4] Smith v. Kimball, 36 Kan. 435 (1887), cases.

[5] County of Warren v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 105–7 (1877), cases, Bradley, J.; County of Cass v. Gillett, 100 id. 598 (1879).

[6] Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S. 168 (1876), cases, Swayne, Justice.

common law, where, if the defendant aliens after the pendency of the writ, the judgment will overreach such alienation. The rule may sometimes operate with hardship, especially where the notice is constructive, as in many cases, but general convenience requires it.[1]

Litis contestatio. A statement in denial; a defense: as, a general answer of denial; in admiralty, a joinder of general issue.[2]

Litis dominus. See DOMINUS.

Litis magister. He who controls a suit.[3]

LIST. 1. A catalogue, roll, or statement, more or less orderly in arrangement, of names, causes, issues, etc.[4] Compare CALENDAR, 2; MEMORANDUM.

Argument list. Consists of causes for argument on issues of law. See ARGUMENT.

Call list. See CALL.

Civil list. (1) A statement of civil causes. Criminal list. A list of criminal cases.

(2) The civil officers of a government; also, appropriations to support such officers; in England, the expenses of the sovereign's household.[5]

Jury list. A calendar of the jurors summoned, or in attendance upon a court.

Trial list. A calendar of causes ready for trial by jury.

See also LLOYD'S LIST; SUBSCRIPTION.

2. A schedule of the polls and ratable estate of the inhabitants upon which taxes are to be assessed.[6]

The same as "grand list." A list that represents real estate may answer the requirement of a statute.[6]

Listed. Said of the persons or property so noted or enumerated.

Lister. The person whose business is to prepare such formal statements.

Compare ENLISTMENT; INVENTORY; REGISTER.

LITERA. L. Letter; written character. Literæ. Letters, writings, documents.

Qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice. He who clings to the letter, sticks in the bark. He who regards the mere words of an instrument cannot arrive at its meaning.[1] See CONSTRUCTION.

LITERAL. According to the words, language, or exact terms: as, a literal construction of a document, a literal performance of a contract. See LITERA; OBLITERATION.

LITERARY. Applied to property, refers to the right an author has in his own composition, so that no other person, without his leave, may publish or make profit of the copies: the production of an original work by the exertion of the rational powers.[2] See COPYRIGHT; OCCUPANCY.

In statutes exempting property devoted to literary purposes from taxation, "literary" has no fixed legal signification, but is to be taken in its ordinary meaning. "Literary institutions" are those in which the positive sciences are taught, or persons eminent for learning associate for purposes connected with their professions. It is not then, properly used, descriptive of a school for the instruction of youth.[3]

Literary associations. See ASSOCIATION.

LITHOGRAPH. See COPYRIGHT; NOSCITUR.

LITIGATE.[4] To carry on or defend a suit, at law or in equity.

Litigant. A party to a lawsuit,— usually an active party.

Litigation. A contest in a court of justice; a judicial proceeding. See INTEREST, 1, Rei publicæ, etc.; LIS, Pendens.

Litigious. 1. Subject to judicial recognition. 2. Too ready to go to law; over-fond of lawsuits.

Once, a thing which created litigation.

LITIS. See LIS.

LITTER. See PARTUS.

LITTORAL.[5] Belonging to the shore; riparian.[6]

---

[1] Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 576-80 (1815), cases, Kent, Ch. See generally 4 Cent. Law J. 27-29 (1877), cases; 26 id. 411-17 (1888), cases; 14 Am. Dec. 774; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 405-7; 3 Pars. Contr. 232.

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 296; Story, Eq. Pl. § 877.

[3] 37 N. J. E. 397.

[4] See Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 100 (1843); Williams v. Hempstead County, 39 Ark. 179 (1882).

[5] See 1 Bl. Com. 332.

[6] Wilson v. Wheeler, 55 Vt. 452 (1882), Royce, J.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 379; 118 U. S. 538; 3 How. 255; 59 Iowa, 133; 2 Ga. 252; 22 Pick. 557; 38 N. Y. 433; 74 id. 389; 79 Pa. 241, 483; 74 id. 201; Sedgw. Const. Laws, 253.

[2] [2 Bl. Com. 405; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer, 379 (1855); 2 Kent, 306-15; Keene v. Wheatley, 9 Am. Law Reg. 44 (1860); 17 Cent. Law J. 268-71 (1883), cases.

[3] Council of Indianapolis v. McLean, 8 Ind. 332 (1856); Kendrick v. Farquhar, 8 Ohio, 197 (1837).

[4] L. lis, dispute; agere, to carry on.

[5] L. litus, the sea-shore.

[6] 17 How. 426; 7 Cush. 94; 3 Kent, 427.

LIVE. 1, v. In a devise of "the farm on which F. now lives," held equivalent to subsist, obtain a livelihood, rather than to dwell or reside.[1]

A child en ventre will take under a devise to the testator's children "living" at his death.[2]

Occasional acts of intercourse will not constitute "living together." See ADULTERY; COHABIT; DOMICIL; RESIDE.

2, adj. Within a duty law, "live animals" was held to include singing birds.[3]

But "live stock" was held not to include fowls.[4] See STOCK. 1; TEAM.

LIVERY.[5] Delivery; tradition.

The act or the form by which possession of land was formerly given or received.

Livery in chivalry. When the heir-male at twenty-one, or an heir-female at sixteen, sued out a delivery of his or her lands from the guardian.[6]

Livery of seisin. Pure feudal investiture, or delivery of corporal possession of land or of a tenement.[7]

Was absolutely necessary to complete a donation; the last act by which a feoffment was perfected. It preserved the testimony of the grant in the community. It was necessary to the grant of an estate of freehold in a corporeal hereditament; impossible in the case of an incorporeal hereditament; and not essential to a lease for years or other chattel interest. Hence, a freehold could not be made to commence in futuro, the actual manual tradition of the land being wanting. Livery in deed. Livery actually made on the land, before witnesses. Livery in law. Livery made in sight of the land. Both were succeeded by delivery in writing.[7]

Land granted by livery of seisin, without defining the quantity of the estate, was treated as a life-estate. Where there was a delivery of possession, without defining the term, there arose only a tenancy at will.[8] See further DELIVERY, 1.

LIVERY-STABLE. A place where horses are groomed, fed, and hired, and where vehicles are let.[9]

Livery-stable keeper. One whose business is to keep horses for hire, or to let, keep, feed, or board, horses for others.[10]

A livery-man is bound to keep safe horses, or fully disclose the character of the horse to the driver at the time of letting him.[1]

A person who hires a public hack and gives the driver directions as to the place to which he wishes to be conveyed, but exercises no other control over him, is not responsible for his negligence, nor prevented from recovering from a railroad company for injuries suffered from a collision of its train with the hack, caused by the negligence of both the managers of the train and the driver.[2]

See BAILMENT; CONDITION; NUISANCE.

LIVELIHOOD. See BUSINESS; EMPLOYMENT; TRADE; SLANDER.

LIVING. See LIFE; LIVE, 1.

LLOYD'S. An association in London whose members underwrite each other's marine policies.

Named from Lloyd's coffee-house, the resort of seafaring men and those who did business with them, in the times of William the Third and Anne — 1690–1700.

Lloyd's lists. Accounts of the arrivals, departures, casualties, and losses to ships.

Lloyd's bonds. Sealed acknowledgments of debt by a borrowing company, with covenants for payment.[3]

LOAD. Compare LADEN.

Of a wagon, does not include the weight of any part of the vehicle, nor the weight of the driver.[4] See CAR.

Loading off shore prohibited. These words, in a policy of marine insurance, are capable of being construed by the court without the aid of extrinsic evidence. In the absence of such evidence, they may be held to prohibit loading while the vessel lies at anchor away from the shore, and not to forbid loading at a bridge pier.[5]

LOADED. Charged, and ignitible.

Plugging the touch-hole may destroy a weapon's use as a "loaded" fire-arm. So, too, may the removal of the flint or the priming from a blunderbuss.[6]

A box containing powder and detonators, arranged

---

[1] Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. 449 (1874).
[2] Picot v. Armistead, 2 Ired. Eq. 230 (1842).
[3] Reiche v. Smythe, 7 Blatch. 235 (1870).
[4] The Matilda Lewis, 5 Blatch. 522 (1867).
[5] F. livrée, a thing delivered, a delivery.
[6] [2 Bl. Com. 68.
[7] [2 Bl. Com. 313–16; 2 Utah, 45.
[8] Effinger v. Lewis, 32 Pa. 370 (1859).
[9] Williams v. Garignes, 30 La. An. 1035 (1878).
[10] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 116.

[1] Huntoon v. Trumbull, 12 F. R. 844 (1880).
[2] Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 371 (1886), cases, Field, J.; criticising Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115 (1847). The last case was expressly overruled in The Bernina, 12 P. D. 58–99 (1887), cases. See cases collected, Noyes v. Town of Boscawen, Sup. Ct. N. H., 27 Am. Law Reg. 118 (1888); id. 129–32; 35 Alb. Law J. 326, 330 (1887), cases; St. Clair Street Ry. Co. v. Eadie, 43 Ohio St. 95–96 (1885), cases; 24 Am. Law Reg. 710–16 (1885), cases.
[3] See 2 Steph. Com. 129, 108, n.; Arn. Mar. Ins., 4 ed., 135; 1 Lindley, Partn. 284; L. R., 2 Ex. 225; 4 Ch. Ap. 748; 11 M. & W. 116; 5 C. & P. 432; 2 Bing. 241; 30 Law Times, 538, 551; 45 Fortn. Rev. 523.
[4] Howe v. Castleton, 25 Vt. 167 (1853).
[5] Johnson v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 87, 90 (1875).
[6] Rex v. Harris, 24 E. C. L. 254 (1831); Reg. v. Lewis, 38 id. 207 (1840); Rex v. Carr, 1 Russ. & Ry. 377 (1819); Reg. v. Gamble, 10 Cox, C. C. 545 (1867).

to ignite on opening, is not a loaded weapon.[1] See further WEAPON.

LOAN.[2] 1. Referring to a chattel, a bailment without reward; also, the thing itself so bailed.

Loan for consumption. Contemplates a return of the article in kind: strictly, a barter or an exchange.[3] Compare MUTUUM. See LEGACY.

Loan for use. A bailment of goods to be used by the bailee temporarily, or for a certain time, without reward.[4] See BAILMENT; HIRING.

2. (1) Referring to money, never implies a return of the identical coin or notes; yet the idea of a reward for the use is not excluded.

The delivery by one party, the lender, to, and the receipt by, another party, the borrower, of a given sum of money, upon an agreement, express or implied, to repay the sum with or without interest.[5]

(2) The advance upon a note discounted, without reference to its character as business or accommodation paper.[6]

See DISCOUNT; INTEREST, 2 (3); USURY.

Loan association, or society. See BUILDING, Association.

Loan certificate. During times of financial panic, in New York City, and perhaps elsewhere, what are known as "loan certificates" are issued by the clearing-house to the associated banks, to the amount of seventy-five per centum of the value of the collaterals deposited by the borrowing banks with the loan committee of the clearing-house.

LOBBY.[7] 1. The part of a hall of legislation not appropriated to official use.

2. The persons who occupy such space on business concerning proposed legislation.

Lobbying. Seeking to influence the vote of a member of the legislature by bribery, promise of reward, intimidation, or other dishonest means.[8]

Lobby services. Services rendered in procuring the passage or defeat of a bill pending before a legislative body, by persons who influence individual legislators in private.

Lobbying is a felony, by the constitutions of California and Georgia. By the constitutions of several States, any person may be compelled to testify in any investigation or proceeding to establish lobbying, but his testimony cannot be used against him, except to prove perjury.[1]

A contract to take charge of a claim before Congress and prosecute it as agent and attorney for the claimant, is void as against public policy. Such contract is distinct from one for purely professional services as an attorney, within which are included: drafting a petition which sets forth the claim, attending to the taking of testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments, and submitting them to a committee or other authority, with other services of like character intended to reach only the understanding of the persons sought to be influenced.[2]

LOCAL. See LOCUS.

Relating to a place: belonging to a particular district; confined to a limited region. Opposed to general, personal, transitory, qq. v.

As, local or a local — act, action, allegiance, commerce, court, custom, government, law, legislation, option, statute, venue, qq. v.

The local character of an improvement may depend upon the special benefit which will result to the property adjoining or near the locality in which the improvement is made.[3]

LOCALITY. See PLACE, 1.

LOCATE. See LOCUS; PERMANENT.

1. To ascertain the place where a thing belongs: as, to locate a call in a survey.

Locative. Referring to a physical object by which the boundary of land may be identified.[4] See CALL, 2 (2).

2. Said of a building: to erect, put up; not, necessarily, to complete.[5]

3. To select the line upon which a road or way is to be constructed. Whence relocate.

The ordinary meaning of the words "to locate" a way is "to ascertain and determine the place of" the way, and in this sense they might well be used in connection with the technical words "to lay out."[6]

In statutes relating to ways, "location" sometimes

[1] Rex v. Mountford, 32 E. C. L. 593 (1835).

[2] A. S. læn, a lending.

[3] Story, Bailm. § 439; 3 Mas. 478; 8 N. Y. 433; 4 Ohio St. 68.

[4] Story, Bailm. §§ 6, 219; 2 Kent, 573; 20 Barb. 348; 16 Ga. 25; 7 Pet. 109.

[5] [Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 167 (1864), Mullin, J. See also 17 N. J. L. 206; 13 Barb. 75.

[6] Nat. Bank of Gloversville v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 277 (1881), Matthews, J.

[7] L. L. lobia, portico, gallery: G. loube, arbor, bower.

[8] Const. California, Art. IV, sec. 35.

[1] 1 Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, § 153.

[2] Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441, 449-50 (1874), cases, Swayne, J.; Oscanyan v. Winchester Arms Co., 103 U. S. 275 (1880).

[3] State v. District Court of Ramsey County, 33 Minn. 307 (1885); 22 id. 507.

[4] See Johnson v. Pannel, 2 Wheat. 211 (1817); McDowell v. Peyton, 10 id. 463 (1825); 3 Bibb, 414.

[5] Waldron v. Marcier, 82 Ill. 550 (1876); Moule v. Plank Road Co., 6 How. Pr. 39, 40 (1851).

[6] Foster v. Park Commissioners, 123 Mass. 382 (1883), Field, J.

means the land included within the limits of the way as laid out, and sometimes is synonymous with "laying out" — establishing a new highway.[1] See ABANDON, 1; EXTEND; RAILROAD; TAKE, 8.

Locator. (1) He who places, that is, bails, a thing with another for a compensation. See LOCATIO.

(2) One who locates, or is entitled to locate, land. See 4, infra.

The claim of a "locator," in Kentucky, is for a portion of the land in compensation for his services.[2]

4. To appropriate land as a mining claim. See MINING, Claim.

LOCATIO. L. A placing: letting out for hire. See LOCUS.

Writers who follow the civil law have divided contracts of hiring into: 1. Locatio rei, the hiring of a thing, personalty or realty. 2. Locatio operis faciendi, hiring for work to be done or care to be bestowed. To which class belong: the undertakings of a mechanic, artisan, tailor, of a warehouseman, wharfinger, quasi-agister, postmaster. 3. Locatio operis mercium vehendarum, a hiring of the labor of carrying goods. To this class belong: a private carrier, with or without pay; a common carrier of goods — express, freight, transfer, packet companies; quasi-carriers — telegraph companies, innkeepers. This class also embraces common carriers of passengers.[3] See BAILMENT.

LOCK. See NAVIGATION.

LOCK-OUT. See STRIKE, 2.

LOCK-UP. A lock-up house: a place for the temporary confinement of law-breakers. See PRISON.

LOCO. See LOCUS.

LOCOMOTIVE. See BICYCLE; RAILROAD.

LOCUM. See LOCUS.

LOCUS. L. Place: locality, territory, jurisdiction; stead, situation; space, room, period; opportunity. Compare SITUS.

Loco parentis. In the situation of a parent.

Predicated of a person who assumes the parental character, or discharges the parental duties. See further PARENS.

Locum tenens. Holding the place: a representative. See ACTIVE.

Locus contractus. The place of contract; where a contract is made or is to be performed. See further LEX, Loci.

Locus criminis. The place of crime: where a crime was perpetrated.

Locus delicti. The place of wrong: where an offense was committed. See DELICTUM.

Locus in quo. The place in which: where an alleged thing was done, as, a trespass committed; or, where land in dispute lies — the place in question.

"The locus in quo was not a legally established street."[1] See ALIBI; VIEW.

Locus pœnitentiæ. Place for repentance: an interval or opportunity in which to reconsider and withdraw, as, from a proposed contract, or from unlawful action.

Thus, the law affords a person an opportunity to withdraw from any illegal contract before it has been executed;[2] to recall a bid made at a sale of realty before his name has been written down; to decide not to complete a gift; for a return to a deserted wife or husband within a prescribed period; to go on and perform a contract, after a declaration made not to be bound by it;[3] to abandon any criminal intention. See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

Locus regit actum. The place governs the act: the law of the locality regulates the thing to be done.[4] See LEX, Loci.

Locus rei sitæ. The place of the situation of a thing. See LEX, Loci.

Locus sigilli. Place of the seal, q. v.

Locus standi. Place for standing: right to be heard.[5]

LODE. See VEIN.

LODGE. 1, v. (1) To make, prefer: as, to lodge a complaint or information.

(2) To deposit with; to file with, as, for transcribing.

A deed sent to a county clerk for record, unaccompanied with the fee, and, therefore, pigeon-holed by him, is not "lodged" with him so as to be notice to a subsequent creditor of the vendor.[6] See FILE.

2, n. A fraternity or brotherhood. See ASSOCIATION; CLUBS.

LODGER. One who occupies hired apartments in another's house; a tenant of part of another's house.[7] See DISTRESS.

In the present state of the decisions, it is not possible to frame a definition which will accurately distinguish between a boarder, a guest, and a lodger.[8] See BOARDER; GUEST; INNKEEPER; RESIDENCE.

---

[1] Foster v. Park Commissioners, 133 Mass. 332, 329 (1882); 117 id. 416; 6 Bradw. 179.

[2] Hollingsworth v. Barbour, 4 Pet. 473 (1830).

[3] 2 Kent, 585; Jones, Bailm. 35; 2 Pars. Contr. 121, 130, 136.

[1] 4 Wall. 194; 2 id. 42; 109 U. S. 562.

[2] 2 Wall. 154; 4 id. 518; 12 id. 355; 117 U. S. 502; 72 Pa. 213.

[3] 8 Biss. 16.

[4] 18 Blatch. 154; 91 U. S. 406.

[5] 93 U. S. 277.

[6] Dickerson v. Bowers, 42 N. J. E. 296 (1886).

[7] Ullman v. State, 1 Tex. Ap. 222 (1876): Burrill's Law Dict.

[8] See 16 Ala. 666; 9 Pick. 280; 36 Barb. 460; 1 Tex. Ap.

LOG. See MILE.

Log-book. Vessels making foreign voyages, or of the burden of seventy-five tons or more, from an Atlantic to a Pacific port, or vice versa, must have an official log-book.[1]

The entries shall be of matters occurring during the voyage, such as offenses by the crew, punishments inflicted, any case of illness, injury, death, birth, marriage, discharges of seamen. For neglect of this duty the master is punishable by fine.[2]

LOGIC. See EVIDENCE; PLEADING; PRESUMPTION; REASON.

LOG-ROLLING. Embracing in one bill distinct matters, none of which, perhaps, could singly obtain the assent of the legislature, and procuring its passage by a combination of the minorities in favor of the separate measures.[3] See TITLE, Of act.

LOGS. The stems or trunks of trees cut into convenient lengths for the purpose of being afterward manufactured into lumber of various kinds.

So held in a statute creating a lien in favor of persons who furnish supplies to men engaged in taking logs out of the forest.[4]

A person using a public stream by floating logs is not responsible at common law to a riparian proprietor for damages occasioned by the stranding of logs upon his land, if the driver has used reasonable effort to retain the logs within the stream.[5]

LONDON. See CUSTOM; FEME SOLE; FLEET; GAZETTE; RACK.

LONG. See ACCOUNT, 2; LEASE.

LONGEVITY. See TABLE, 4.

LOOKOUT. A person, upon board a vessel, stationed in a favorable position to see and near enough to the helmsman to communicate with him, and exclusively employed in watching the movements of other vessels.[6]

LOOM. See HEIRLOOM; FIXTURE.

LOOSE. See ANIMAL; AT LARGE; ESTRAY.

220; 12 Mod. 255; L. R., 6 C. P. 327; 8 Q. B. D. 195; 9 id. 245; 13 id. 79; 51 L. T. R. 124; 30 Moak, 19; Wood, Landl. & T. 177.

[1] R. S. § 4290.

[2] R. S. §§ 4291-92. See 1 Whart. Ev. § 648, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 495, cases.

[3] [Walker v. Griffith, 60 Ala. 369 (1877), Manning, J.; 36 Kan. 340.

[4] Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393 (1881), Taylor, J. See 40 Me. 145.

[5] Carter v. Thurston, 58 N. H. 104, 107 (1877), cases.

[6] Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 462 (1851), Taney, C. J. See also Reed v. Steamboat New-Haven, 18 How. Pr. 485 (1859).

LORD. 1. A feudal superior; one of whom an estate was held.

He was a lord paramount or a lord paravail. Liege lord was contradistinguished from "liege man." Landlord was originally used in this sense. See FEUD.

2. In England, a title of nobility, belonging, strictly, to the degree of a baron, but applied to the whole peerage.[1]

Lords spiritual. A constituent part of parliament, being two archbishops and twenty-four bishops.[2]

Lords temporal. All the peers of the realm, by whatever title distinguished, and forming another constituent part of parliament.[2]

House of lords. The branch of parliament consisting of the lords spiritual and the lords temporal. See PARLIAMENT.

3. A title bestowed upon persons occupying certain high offices.

Lord advocate. The principal prosecuting officer employed on behalf of the crown. See ADVOCATE.

Lord chancellor. The presiding judge in the court of chancery. See CHANCELLOR, 1.

Lord commissioner. A person charged with the execution of any high public office put into commission.

In lieu of the lord treasurer and the lord high admiral of former times, there are now the lords commissioners of the treasury, and the lords commissioners of the admiralty; there are also lords commissioners of the great seal, etc.

Lord justices. 1. Persons appointed to administer government temporarily during an emergency. 2. Two judges appointed, under an act of 1851, to assist the lord chancellor in hearing appeals.[3]

Lord lieutenant. 1. The principal officer of a county. 2. The representative of the crown in Ireland.[4]

Lord mayor. The chief officer of the corporation of London.

Lord mayor's court. The highest court of record, of law and equity, within the city of London.[5]

Lord treasurer. An officer who had charge of the royal revenues.

[1] [1 Bl. Com. 396.

[2] [1 Bl. Com. 155-57.

[3] 2 Steph. Com. 477; 3 id. 331.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 412; 4 id. 272

[5] See 3 Bl. Com. 81.

His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury.[1]

LORD, YEAR OF, See YEAR.

Lord's day. See SUNDAY.

LOSS. 1. Privation; injury; damage. See DAMAGE; DAMAGES.

A community of profits implies a community of losses: losses are, in a sense, nothing more than a diminution of profits.[2]

2. Damage to or the entire destruction of an insured subject by a contemplated peril.

Actual loss. Where there is a real destruction of the subject. Constructive loss, or constructive total loss. When the injury is so great that the insured may abandon the remnant to the insurer.

Partial loss. When the subject is damaged but not destroyed. Total loss. When the subject is wholly destroyed.

Total loss. The total destruction of the thing insured; also, such damage to the thing, though it may remain in specie, as renders it of little or no value to the owner.[3]

Actual total loss. When the subject insured wholly perishes, or its recovery is rendered irretrievably hopeless.[4]

It is not necessary to a total loss that there be an absolute extinction or destruction of the thing insured, so that nothing can be delivered. A destruction in specie, so that while some of its component elements or parts may remain, the thing which was insured, in the character or description by which it was insured, is destroyed, is a total loss.[5]

As applicable to a building, means, not that its materials were utterly destroyed, but that the building, though part of it remains standing, has lost its identity and specific character as a building, and, instead, has become a broken mass, or cannot longer properly be designated as a building. Absolute extinction is not meant. "Wholly destroyed" may be an equivalent expression.[6]

As long as a vessel exists in specie in the hands of the owner, although she may require repairs greater than her value, a case of "utter loss," within the meaning of a bottomry and respondentia bond, does not arise and she continues subject to the hypothecation.[7]

"Freight" may be lost in the sense that by reason of the perils insured against the ship has been prevented from earning freight; and, also, in the sense that it is lost to the owner, after it has been earned, by some circumstance unconnected with the contract between the assured and the underwriters on the freight.[1]

See AVERAGE; INDEMNITY; INSURANCE; OCCUR.

Proof of loss. A written and sworn statement, made to an insurance company by the beneficiary, of the fact of a loss.

In fire insurance, analogous to the "protest" in marine insurance. The time when the loss occurred, the cause of it, the value of the property, the name of the owner, incumbrances, and like facts, are usually required to be furnished.

Waiver of "preliminary proof of loss" by an insurer may be proved indirectly by circumstances, as well as by direct proof; and so also may authority in an agent to make the waiver be proved.[2]

Preliminary proof of a death is not required, when the insurer, on being notified thereof, denies his liability and declares that the insurance will not be paid.[3]

LOST. 1. The finder of lost property has a valid claim against all persons but the true owner. See further FIND, 1.

2. The contents of any written instrument lost, or destroyed, may be proved by competent evidence. Judicial records and all other kinds of documents of a kindred nature are within the rule.[4]

If a note has been destroyed by fire, it may be said to be "lost."[5]

If a bill of exchange or a promissory note, indorsed in blank and payable to bearer, be lost or stolen, and be purchased in good faith without knowledge of want of ownership in the vendor, the holder's title is good.[6]

The rule is otherwise as to a bill of lading, q. v.

A lost will may be established by evidence, as in the case of a lost deed, all persons interested being first made parties. The declarations of the testator may be shown, as well to establish its contents as to show the improbability of its destruction by him. The burden is on the party alleging that a will existed, to prove its execution and contents by strong, positive, and convincing evidence.[7]

Although a will is required to be attested by two witnesses, a lost will may be established by the testi-

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 38, 45, 56.

[2] Priest v. Chouteau, 12 Mo. Ap. 256 (1882).

[3] [Livermore v. Newburyport Mar. Ins. Co., 1 Mass. *279 (1804), Sedgwick, J.

[4] Burt v. Brewers', &c. Ins. Co., 9 Hun, 384 (1876); Burrill's Law Dict.

[5] Great Western Ins. Co. v. Fogarty, 19 Wall. 640, 643 (1873), cases, Miller, J.

[6] [Oshkosh Packing, &c. Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 81 F. R. 204 (1887), Dyer, J.; May, Ins. § 421 a, cases; 1 Wood, Ins. § 107, cases.

[7] Delaware Mut. Safety Ins. Co. v. Goesler, 96 U. S. 645, 653 (1877), cases, Clifford, J.

[1] Scottish Mar. Ins. Co. v. Turner, 20 E. L. & E. 42 (1853), Ld. Thuro.

[2] Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 546 (1876); 36 Md. 102.

[3] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 709 (1885), cases.

[4] Burton v. Driggo, 20 Wall. 134 (1873), cases; 18 How. 246; 11 Wall. 672.

[5] McGregory v. McGregory, 107 Mass. 543 (1871).

[6] Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co., 101 U. S. 564 (1879), Strong, J. See Adams v. Edmunds, 55 Vt. 363 (1883).

[7] Southworth v. Adams, 11 Biss. 260 (1882), cases.

mony of a single witness; and probate may be granted to the extent to which the provisions are proved.[1]

When an abstract or summary of a lost or destroyed record, deed, deposition, will, or other instrument is offered as the best evidence obtainable, the witness must be sufficiently acquainted with the original, and the court be satisfied that the original is non-producible, and evidence if produced. The loss may be inferentially proved, or admitted. A probable custodian must be inquired of, and search in the proper place be proved — the decree of search being proportioned to the importance of the document.[2]

The maker of paper which has become lost is liable to the owner, after notice of the loss, if he redeems the paper without requiring the holder to establish his title. The holder should be required to furnish indemnity against other claimants.[3] See DEPOSIT, Certificate of; EVIDENCE, Secondary; PROFERT.

LOT. 1. Any appeal or resort to chance for determining a result or for deciding a question. See GAME, 2; LOTTERY.

A verdict arrived at by drawing lots will be set aside.[4]

2. Allotment; share; parcel.

Used of land, does not imply anything as to the size of the parcel.[5]

In a homestead law, held not synonymous with "tract" or "parcel," but to mean a city, town or village lot, according to the official survey.[6]

Under a devise of the "house and lot in which I now reside," the devisee will take the lot which the testator, prior to the date of his will, had separated from other lands. "Lot" generally describes a small parcel of land.[7]

In-lots lie within the boundary of a town or city; out-lots lie outside such boundary.

See DEDICATION, 1; FIELD, 1; MAP; STREET.

LOTO. See GAME, 2.

LOTTERY.[8] Has no technical meaning. A result of the accepted definitions is: where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it.[9]

A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance.[1]

A distribution of prizes — something valuable — by chance or lot, a valuable consideration being given for the chance to draw the prize.[2]

The decision of a question by lot is not a lottery. The term in criminal law refers to something in which there are supposed prizes and blanks. The disposal of any species of property by any of the schemes or games of chance popularly regarded as innocent comes within the terms of the law.[1]

Decided to be lotteries have been: a "gift-exhibition;"[3] a "gift-sale" of books;[4] "prize-candy" business;[5] "prize-concerts;"[6] "prize-tickets" to induce subscriptions to a newspaper;[7] raffles at fairs;[8] drawing works of art;[9] "playing policy."[10]

Lottery-ticket dealer. Any person, association, firm, or corporation, who makes, sells, or offers to sell, lottery tickets, or fractional parts thereof, or any token, certificate, or device, representing, or intending to represent, a lottery ticket, or any fractional part thereof, or any policy of numbers in any lottery, or who manages any lottery, or prepares schemes of lotteries, or superintends the drawing of any lottery.[11]

State lottery. A lottery licensed and regulated by legislative enactment — for the service of the state, or of individuals. Private lottery. A lottery instituted or managed for the benefit of one or more private persons, an association or a society.

Lottery schemes, which were formerly very common,[12] are now generally proscribed. Statute of 10 and

---

[1] Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 354, 356 (1886), cases; Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards, 1 L. R., P. D. 154, 217 (1876).

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 129–51, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 558, cases. As to lost wills, see also 31 Alb. Law J. 365–67, 385–89 (1885), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 29 (1886), cases.

[3] Bainbridge v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 289–98 (1885), cases; Cobb v. Tirrell, 141 Mass. 46 (1886).

[4] Goodman v. Cody, 1 Wash. T. 329 (1871); s. c. 84 Am. R. 808, note.

[5] Edwards v. Derrickson, 28 N. J. L. 44 (1859).

[6] Wilson v. Proctor, 28 Minn. 17 (1881).

[7] Phillipsburgh v. Bruch, 37 N. J. E. 486 (1883).

[8] A. S. hlot, share, lot.

[9] Hull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 424, 427 (1874), Folger, J., quoting Perley, C. J., in State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 335 (1856). Approved, Wilkinson v. Gill, 74 N. Y. 66 (1878), Church, C. J.; People v. Noelke, 94 id. 141 (1883): Penal Code, § 323; State v. Willis, 78 Me. 73 (1886), Peters, C. J.

[1] Commonwealth v. Manderfield, 8 Phila. 459 (1870); State v. Lovell, 39 N. J. L. 461 (1877); Randle v. State, 42 Tex. 585 (1875).

[2] United States v. Olney, 1 Deady, 464 (1868), Deady, J.; 1 Abb. U. S. 275. See also 30 F. R. 501; 40 Ill. 467; 59 id. 160; 94 Ind. 426; 73 Mo. 650; 16 Nev. 142; 89 N. C. 573; 3 Oreg. 291; 41 Tex. 297.

[3] Wooden v. Shortwell, 32 N. J. L. 470 (1852); State v. Shorts, 32 id. 298 (1868); Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160 (1871); Chavannah v. State, 49 Ala. 396 (1873); Buckalew v. State, 62 id. 334 (1878); Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39 (1878); Kohn v. Koehler, 21 Hun, 466 (1880).

[4] State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 329, 334 (1856).

[5] Hull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 424 (1874); Holoman v. State, 2 Tex. Ap. 610 (1877).

[6] Commonwealth v. Thacker, 97 Mass. 583 (1867); Negley v. Devlin, 12 Abb. Pr. 210 (1872); State v. Overton, 16 Nev. 136 (1881).

[7] State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 650 (1881).

[8] Commonwealth v. Manderfield, 8 Phila. 459 (1870).

[9] Governors of Almshouse v. American Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228, 240 (1852).

[10] Wilkinson v. Gill, 74 N. Y. 63 (1878).

[11] Revenue Act, 13 July, 1866, § 9: 14 St. L. 116.

[12] Governors of Almshouse v. American Art Union, 7 N. Y. 237 (1852); 2 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 28.

11 Will. III (1699), c. 17, prohibited them as public nuisances; and statute of 6 and 7 Will. IV (1836), c. 66, forbade advertising foreign lotteries.[1] Similar statutes exist here; where also, circulars concerning lotteries are not mailable matter.[2]

The effect of Rev. St. § 3894, prohibiting the mailing of lottery circulars, etc., is to make any matter concerning lotteries unmailable, and to subject the sender to the penalty therein provided. When a city, to induce people to buy its bonds, holds out prizes to be drawn by chance, the mailing of circulars concerning such drawings is a mailing of lottery circulars within that section.[3]

A mere license to draw a lottery, not inseparable from the essential functions of a corporation, not acted on, and under which no rights have been vested, may be repealed by a succeeding legislature.[4]

Lotteries are a malum prohibitum. They are a species of gambling, and wrong in their influences. They disturb the checks and balances of a well-ordered community. The right to suppress them is governmental, exercisable in discretion. Any one who accepts a lottery charter does so with the implied understanding that the people, through their proper agency, may resume it whenever the public good requires it. All that one can get by such a charter is a suspension of certain governmental rights in his favor, subject to withdrawal at will. He has a license to enjoy the privilege on the terms named for the specified time, unless it be abrogated by the sovereign power. It is a permit, good as against existing laws, but subject to future legislation and constitutional control or withdrawal.[5] See DECOY; POLICE, 2.

A grant in the constitution of a State of the privilege of establishing a lottery, to a corporation, is not subject to repeal by the legislature.[6]

No other form of gambling operates so extensively in its dealings, or demoralizes so many people. It is this extensive reach, and not merely its speculative purposes, that makes lottery-gambling so dangerous.[7]

LOUISIANA. The territory of Louisiana was ceded by Spain to France, October 1, 1800, and by France to the United States, April 30, 1803.[8]

The State is governed by the civil law; the first body of which, called the "Digest," and adopted in 1808, was in substance the same as the Code Napoleon, with modifications from the Spanish law. Revised and enlarged to suit statutory changes, since 1825 the Digest has been known as the "Civil Code." Punishment for crimes is prescribed by reference to their names; for the definitions, the common law of England is resorted to. The code presents the leading principles of evidence; for application, recourse is had to treatises. The lex mercatoria, as an independent system of law, is recognized. The English law as to realty has never been received. In other respects, the law of the State may be said to be like the laws of the other States.[1] See LIQUIDATION, Board of.

LOVE. See CONSIDERATION, 2.

LOW-WATER. See WATER.

LOYALTY. See ALLEGIANCE; TREASON.

LUCID INTERVAL. A period of mental clearness enjoyed by an insane person, during which he is capable of performing an act which will be binding in law.

Not a restoration to reason, but a restoration so far as to be able, beyond doubt, to comprehend and do the act, with such reason, memory, and judgment as to make it a legal act.[2]

An act done in a lucid interval by one who has been found to be a lunatic is binding on him, but the proof of the lucid interval must be clear.[3]

The expression once meant respite, intermission, cessation, relaxation.[4] See LUNATIC.

LUCRATIVE. Refers to an office to which there is attached a compensation for services rendered.[5]

LUCRUM. L. Gain, profit, advantage, benefit.

Lucri causa. For the sake of gain.

A civil-law expression, corresponding to animus furandi in the common law. Describes the intention with which personalty is taken in theft — the felonious intention to profit by the act of conversion. But respectable modern authorities hold that it is sufficient if the taking be fraudulent, with an intent to deprive the owner of his property; as, a taking for the purpose of destroying.[6]

LUGGAGE. May consist of any articles intended for the use of a passenger while traveling or for his personal equipment.[7]

"Baggage" and "luggage" mean the same thing. The latter term prevails in England. See further BAGGAGE.

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 168; 1 C. B. 974.

[2] Act 12 July, 1876: R. S. § 3894; ib. §§ 3851, 3929, 4041; 9 Biss. 429; 14 Blatch. 245; 1 F. R. 417, 426.

[3] United States v. Zeisler, 30 F. R. 499 (1887).

[4] Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 3 Woods, 222, 248 (1879).

[5] Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 821 (1879), Waite, C. J.; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 168 (1850); State v. Woodward, 89 Ind. 114 (1883); People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 142-48 (1883); Kohn v. Koehler, 21 Hun, 470-71 (1880); Justice v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 214 (1885).

[6] New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U. S. 265 (1886).

[7] People v. Reilly, 50 Mich. 388 (1883).

[8] See at length Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 438-40 (1884).

[1] See 2 Bouvier's Law Dict. 130.

[2] Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del. Ch. 268 (1861), Harrington, Ch. See 3 Brown, Ch. 234, 443; 2 C. & P. 415; 1 Redf. Wills, 68, 108-18, cases.

[3] Re Gangwere's Estate, 14 Pa. 417, 428 (1850).

[4] See Trench, Glossary, 114-15.

[5] State v. Kirk, 44 Ind. 405 (1873), Downey, C. J.; 35 id. 111; 8 Blackf. 329.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 232; United States v. Durkee, 1 McAll. 201-5 (1856), cases; Hamilton v. State, 35 Miss. 219 (1858); Keely v. State, 14 Ind. 36 (1859); Williams v. State, 52 Ala. 418 (1875); 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 843.

[7] California Civil Code, sec. 2181; 70 Cal. 178.

LUMBER. Timber sawed or split for use in building. Material essential for building any kind of a house ordinarily used for business or by families.[1] See TIMBER.

LUNACY. See LUNATIC.

LUNAR. See MONTH.

LUNATIC.[2] One who has had understanding, but by disease, grief, or other accident, has lost the use of his reason. One that has "lucid intervals,"[3] q. v.

A person who sometimes has understanding and sometimes not.[4]

In the Revised Statutes, and in any act or resolution of Congress passed since February 25, 1875, "insane person" and "lunatic" includes every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and insane person.[5]

Lunacy. Insanity; in particular, acquired as opposed to congenital insanity.[6]

Commission of lunacy. Authority in writing, from a court, to inquire into the mental condition of a person alleged to be of unsound mind; an inquisition de lunatico inquirendo.[7]

A lunatic has nothing which the law recognizes as a mind; has no mental conclusions; cannot discern between right and wrong; can assent to nothing. He is not capable, therefore, to make a will, a contract, or to commit a crime; and is incapable, also, to avoid a contract.[8]

While a person of unsound mind remains a minor, an ordinary guardian is all the custodian of either his person or estate that is necessary; and an act done by such guardian in relation to his estate is as valid as if done by a committee appointed to take charge of him and his estate, as a person of unsound mind.[9]

By the common law, a lunatic must make compensation to persons injured by his acts, although, being incapable of criminal intent, he cannot be indicted and punished.[10]

See COMMITTEE, 1; INSANITY; STULTIFY.

LUST. See LEWD.

LUXURY. See SUMPTUARY.

[1] Ward v. Kadel, 38 Ark. 180 (1881), Eakin, J.

[2] L. luna, the moon: moon-struck.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 303.

[4] Re Barker, 2 Johns. Ch. *333 (1816), Kent, Ch.

[5] R. S. § 1.

[6] See 1 Redf. Wills, 62-63; 1 Bland, Ch. 386.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 304; 3 id. 427.

[8] Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 20-25 (1872), cases, Strong, J.

[9] Francklyn v. Sprague, 121 U. S. 215, 229 (1887); 2 Ves. Sr. 408.

[10] Morain v. Devlin, 132 Mass. 88 (1882), Gray, C. J., citing 2 East, 92, 104; 17 Vt. 499; 32 Md. 581; 4 Barr. 64; 3 Wend. 393-94; 23 Iowa, 343; 78 Pa. 412; 9 Mass. 225; 9 Gray, 85. As to jurisdiction over the estates of insane persons, see 21 Am. Law Rev. 1-13 (1887). On the lunacy laws of England, see 1 Law Q. Rev. 150 (1885).

LYING. See LIE.

Lying at wharf. Floating in the space of water called the dock.[1]

Lying in grant. Refers to the means of transfer of an incorporeal hereditament, q. v.

Lying in wait. In ambush, to kill another person.

Implies waiting, watching, secrecy; evidences that deliberation which marks murder in the first degree.[2]

But is not synonymous with "concealed."[3]

LYNCH LAW. The action of private individuals, organized bodies of men, or disorderly mobs, who, without legal authority, punish by hanging, or otherwise, real or suspected criminals, without trial according to the forms of law.

American lexicographers refer the origin of the term to the practice, in the seventeenth century, of a Virginia farmer named Lynch. Others trace it to the act of one Lynch, mayor and warden of Galway, Ireland, in 1493, who "hanged his own son out of the window for defrauding and killing strangers, without martial or common law." Others, again, trace it to the Anglo-Saxon, linch, to beat with a club, to chastise.[4]

During the war of Independence, one Lynch was president judge of the county court of Pittsylvania, Virginia. The court in that State for the trial of felonies sat at Williamsburg, two hundred miles distant. Horse thieves, who had established posts from far north, through Virginia, into North Carolina, were frequently arrested and remanded to Williamsburg for trial. Not only was the attendance of witnesses, at that distance, rendered uncertain, but when they did appear they were sure to be confronted by false witnesses for the outlaws. Moreover, the difficulty of conveying the accused to Williamsburg was increased, and the sitting of the court made uncertain, by the presence of the British under Cornwallis. Accordingly, the justices of the county court of Pittsylvania assembled, and Judge Lynch proposed that, since for Pittsylvania the court at Williamsburg had practically ceased to exist, and, in consequence, heinous crimes went unpunished, the court over which he presided should try all felonies committed in the county: that is to say, the place of trial was to be changed by mere resolution. The plan was adopted, with good results: the thieves were disbanded, many being hanged, which was the lawful penalty. This change of forum was against the words of the law, but justified, Lynch and others held, by the circumstances.[5]

Whatever excuse may exist for the execution of lynch law in savage or sparsely settled districts, in order to oppose the ruffian elements which the ordi-

[1] Dewees v. Adger, 2 McCord, 105 (1822).

[2] See Riley v. State, 9 Humph. 651 (1849); State v. Abbott, 8 W. Va. 769 (1875); 2 Va. 488; 1 Leigh, 598.

[3] People v. Miles, 55 Cal. 207 (1880).

[4] [Ency. Britannica.

[5] See 18 Harper's Magazine, 794-96 (1859).

sary administration of law is powerless to control, it certainly has no excuse in a community where the laws are duly and regularly administered.[1]

M.

M. 1. A person convicted of manslaughter, in England, was, in former times, branded with an "M" on the left thumb.

2. Treasury notes issued under the act of Congress of October 12, 1888, had an M printed on the face to signify that they bore interest at the rate of one mill per centum.[2]

3. The initial letter of other words often abbreviated: as, Mary (queen), master, maxims, mileage, mortgage.

M. D. Middle district. See D, 2.

M. L. Mechanic's lien. See LIEN.

M. R. Master of rolls. See ROLL, 2 (2).

M. T. Michaelmas term. See TERM, 4.

MACADAMIZE. See PAVE.

MACHINE.[3] In the law of patents, includes every mechanical device, or combination of mechanical powers and devices, to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result.[4]

A concrete thing, consisting of parts or of certain devices and combination of devices. The principle of a machine is "its mode of operation," or that peculiar combination of devices which distinguishes it from other machines. A mere principle or idea cannot constitute a machine.[5]

Patentable inventions pertaining to machines are: 1. Entire machines; as, a car for a railroad, a sewing-machine. 2. Separate devices of a machine; as, the coulter of a plow, the driver of a reaping-machine. 3. New devices of a machine in combination with old elements, all embraced in one claim, or with separate claims for what is new, together with a claim for the new combination of all the elements. 4. Devices or elements of a machine in combination, all being old.[6]

All that the law requires of an inventor of a machine is that he shall describe the manner of constructing and using it in such full, clear, and exact terms as will enable any one skilled in the art to which it pertains to make and use the machine; and that he shall explain the principle thereof, and the best mode in which he contemplated applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions. Under these provisions, it has been held that a patentee is not generally limited to the literal import of his description of his invention, but that, in construction, he may make such modifications of it as do not involve a departure from its principle or a material change in its mode of operation.[1] See EQUIVALENT, 2; MODE, Of operation; PATENT, 2; PROCESS, 2.

Machinery. Means somewhat more than machine. Includes whatever is necessary to the working of a machine; as, dies used in manufacturing tinware, the saw in a sawmill, the pipes of a gas company.[2]

When cars, though used at times, and at other times detached, are formed into a train, to which propelling force is imparted by means of a locomotive, the entire train constitutes machinery connected with or used in the particular business.[3]

In determining whether machinery becomes a fixture, regard must be had to the object, and to the effect and mode, of annexation.[4] See FIXTURE.

An employee who knows that machinery which he is operating is so defective as to be dangerous, protests against further use of it, receives no assurance that the defect will be remedied, but continues to use it, voluntarily assumes the incidental risks.[5] See NEGLIGENCE.

MADE. See MAKE.

MAGISTER. L. Master, ruler.

Magister litis. He who controls a suit.[6]

Magister navis. He who governs a vessel.[7]

Magister societatis. The manager of a partnership; a managing partner or agent.[8]

MAGISTRATE.[9] A governor, ruler, officer. Correlative, the people.

[1] Exp. Wall. 107 U. S. 275 (1882), Bradley, J. Wall, an attorney-at-law, was disbarred by the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Florida for advising in a case of lynching, and sought reinstatement by a mandamus from the Supreme Court.

[2] United States v. Hardyman, 13 Pet. 178 (1839).

[3] F. machine: Gk. mêchanê', a device.

[4] Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 267 (1853), Grier, J.

[5] Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. 570 (1863), Grier, J.

[6] Sanford v. Merrimac Hat Co., 4 Cliff. 405 (1876), Clifford, J. And see Georgia Pacific R. Co. v. Brooks, Sup. Ct. Ala. (1888); also Union Sugar Refinery v. Matthiessen, 2 Fish. P. C. 605 (1865).

[1] Grier v. Castle, 17 F. R. 524 (1883), McKennan, J. See Winans v. Denmead, 15 How. 342 (1853); Gill v. Wells, 22 Wall. 24 (1874); Stevens v. Pritchard, 4 Cliff. 418 (1876).

[2] Seavey v. Central Ins. Co., 111 Mass. 541 (1873); Pierce v. George, 108 id. 78 (1871); State v. Avery, 44 Vt. 629 (1872); Commonwealth v. Lowell Gas Light Co., 12 Allen, 78 (1866); Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 26, 33 (1874).

[3] Georgia Pacific R. Co. v. Brooks, Sup. Ct. Ala. (1888).

[4] Pierce v. George, 108 Mass. 78, 81 (1871): 11 Am. R. 314-17, cases; Ottumwa Woolen Mill Co. v. Hawley, 44 Iowa, 60-64 (1876), cases: 24 Am. R. 726-32, cases.

[5] Galveston, &c. R. Co. v. Drew, 59 Tex. 10 (1883); Whart. Neg. 221, 859, cases.

[6] 37 N. J. E. 397.

[7] Story, Ag. § 36.

[8] Story, Partn. § 95.

[9] L. magister, q. v.

Supreme magistrate. One in whom the sovereign power of the state resides. Subordinate magistrate. Derives his authority from, and is accountable to, the former, and acts in an inferior, secondary sphere.[1]

Of the former are Parliament and the king; of the latter, sheriffs, coroners, justices of the peace, constables, surveyors of highways, overseers of the poor.[2]

The President is the chief magistrate of the nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of the States.

It is difficult to fix a definite meaning to the word "magistrate," a generic term importing a public officer, exercising a public authority. A consul at a foreign port is a magistrate.[3]

A person clothed with power as a public civil officer. . . The appellation is not confined to justices of the peace, and other persons ejusdem generis, who exercise general judicial powers; but it includes others, whose main duties are strictly executive.[4]

Magisterial. Belonging or pertaining to the office or duties of a magistrate.

Magistracy. The office or position of a magistrate, or of all governmental officers as a body or class.

Magistrate's court. In Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a court, not of record, for police and civil cases, with jurisdiction not exceeding one hundred dollars.

The constitution of 1874 established one such court for every thirty thousand inhabitants. The term of office is five years. The magistrates are elected on a general ticket by the voters at large; and they are compensated by a fixed salary paid by the county. No increase of civil jurisdiction is allowable; and no political duties may be conferred upon them.[5]

MAGNA CHARTA. The Great Charter: the principal guaranty of English liberties, obtained June 19, 1215, from King John. With some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III, his son.

By 25 Edw. I (1296), allowed as part of the common law; and copies were to be read twice a year in the churches.

Contained few new grants — was declaratory of the grounds upon which the fundamental law rested. Redressed grievances incident to feudal tenures, and removed some forms of oppression by the crown.[6]

Copies are preserved in the British Museum. The original was in Latin; in the statute-book it is printed in Latin and English in parallel columns. It consisted of thirty-seven chapters or distinct statutes. The first chapter confirms the pre-Norman liberties; the seventh chiefly concerns dower, and quarantine; the eighth relates to the collection of crown debts, their priority, sureties, etc.; the ninth perpetuates the right of self-government in London, and certain boroughs; the tenth provides that the court of common pleas should be held in some fixed place; the fourteenth forbids excessive fines; the twenty-ninth provides that life, liberty, and property shall be forfeited only by judgment of the subject's peers or by the law of the land, and that justice and right are not to be sold, denied, or deferred; the thirtieth directs that foreign merchants shall be treated as English merchants are treated while abroad; the thirty-sixth relates to gifts to religious houses; the thirty-seventh recites that the charter was bought of the crown with a fifteenth of the movable property, in consideration whereof the king, for himself and his heirs, covenanted not to infringe the liberties specified.

Many of its provisions have been modified by later legislation; and many are preserved in the bills of rights or constitutions of the States.

The concessions of Magna Charta were wrung from the king as guaranties against the oppressions and usurpations of his prerogatives. . . The actual and practical security for English liberty against legislative tyranny was the power of a free public opinion represented by the Commons.[1]

The words of Magna Charta stood for very different things at the time of the separation of the American colonies from what they originally represented. . . It is more consonant to the true philosophy of our historical legal institutions to say that the spirit of personal liberty and individual right, which they embodied, was preserved and developed by a progressive growth and wise adaptation to new circumstances and situations of the forms and processes found fit to give, from time to time, new expression and greater effect to modern ideas of self-government.[1]

MAIL.[2] 1. A small piece of money; rent. Extant in black-mail, q. v.

2. A bag, valise, or portmanteau, used in the conveyance of letters, papers, packets, etc., by any person acting under the authority of the postmaster-general, from one post-office to another.[3]

Each bag so used is a mail, of which there may be several in the same vehicle; as, the way-mail, the general, the letter, or the newspaper mail.[3]

In its original signification, a wallet, sack, budget, trunk or bag; and in connection with the post-office, the carriage of letters, whether applied to the bag into which they are put, the vehicle by which they are transported, or any other means employed for their carriage and delivery by public authority.[4]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 146, 338.

[2] Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. 528 (1833), Shaw, C. J.

[3] Gordon v. Hobart, 2 Sumn. 404-5 (1836), Story, J., after quoting Blackstone, supra.

[4] Const. Penn., Art. V, sec. 12.

[5] See 1 Bl. Com. 127-28; 2 id. 58, 77; 3 id. 38; 4 id. 423.

[1] Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 531, 529, 530 (1884), Matthews, J.

[2] 1. F. maile, bit of money. 2. F. malle, a trunk.

[3] United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 105 (1830), Baldwin, J.

[4] Wynen v. Schappert, 6 Daly, 560 (1878), Daly, C. J.

The term came into use referring to the valise which postillions or carriers had behind them and in which they carried letters, at an early period. After the establishment of post-offices, post-routes, and post-chases, it became, as it is now, a general word to express the carriage and delivery of letters by public authority [1]

In an entry of having posted notice of dishonor, "mailed" implies that the postage was prepaid.[2]

Mail matter. Letters, packets, etc., received for transmission, and to be transmitted, by post to the person to whom directed.[3]

Mailable; non-mailable. Refer to matter which may, or may not, be sent through the mails.

Mailable matter shall be divided into four classes: 1. Written matter — letters, postal cards, and all matters wholly or partly in writing, except as otherwise provided. 2. Periodical publications — all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and are within the conditions described. 3. Miscellaneous printed matter — books, transient newspapers, and periodicals, circulars, and other matter wholly in print, proof-sheets, corrected proof-sheets, and manuscript copy accompanying the same. 4. Merchandise — all matter not embraced in the foregoing classes, which is not in form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of the mail bag, or harm the postal employee, and is above the weight of four pounds for each package, except in the case of single books, and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or official matter emanating from any department of the government or from the Smithsonian Institution, or which is not declared non-mailable by act of July 12, 1876, or matter appertaining to lotteries, gift concerts, or fraudulent schemes or devices.[4] Also non-mailable are: obscene books, scurrilous and disloyal letters; which matter shall be held subject to the order of the postmaster-general.[5]

An act approved January 20, 1888 (25 St. L. 1), amending the act of March 3, 1879, §§ 22, 23 (1 Sup R. S. p. 457), provides, That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, or sign thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit: the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, index figures of subscription book either printed or written, the printed title of the publication and the place of its publication, the printed or written name and address without addition of advertisement of the publisher or sender, or both, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end, the correction of any typographical error, a mark, except by written or printed words, to designate a work or passage to which it is desired to call attention; the words "sample copy" when the matter is sent as such, the words "marked copy" when the matter contains a marked item or article; and publishers or news agents may inclose in their publications, bills, receipts, and orders for subscriptions thereto, but the same shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, place of publication, subscription price of the publication to which they refer and the subscription due thereon. Upon matter of the third class or upon the wrapper or envelope inclosing the same or the tag or label attached thereto the sender may write his own name, occupation, and residence or business address, preceded by the word "from," and may make marks other than by written or printed words to call attention to any word or passage in the text, and may correct any typographical errors. There may be placed upon the blank leaves or cover of any book or printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription not of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon the wrapper or envelope of third-class matter or the tag or label attached thereto may be printed any matter mailable as third class, but there must be left on the address side a space sufficient for a legible address and necessary stamps. With a package of fourth-class matter prepaid at the proper rate for that class, the sender may inclose any mailable third-class matter, and may write upon the wrapper or cover thereof, or tag or label accompanying the same, his name, occupation, residence or business address, preceded by the word "from," and any marks, numbers, names, or letters for purpose of description, or may print thereon the same, and any printed matter not in the nature of a personal correspondence, but there must be left on the address side or face of the package a space sufficient for a legible address and the necessary stamps. In all cases directions for transmitting, delivery, forwarding, or return shall be deemed part of the address; and the postmaster-general shall prescribe suitable regulations for carrying this section into effect.

Sec. 2. That matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing in addition to the original matter other than as authorized in the preceding section shall not be admitted to the mails, nor delivered, except upon payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed, unless by direction of the postmaster-general such postage shall be remitted; and any person who shall knowingly conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit or cause the same to be deposited for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty of ten dollars.

Letter postage was reduced to two cents per half ounce or fraction thereof by act of March 3, 1883.[1]

[1] Wynen v. Schappert, ante.

[2] National Butchers', &c. Bank v. De Groot, 43 N. Y. Supr. 344 (1878). See also Blake v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 163 (1886).

[3] United States v. Rapp, 30 F. R. 820 (1887), Neuman, J.

[4] Act 3 March, 1879: 1 Sup. R. S. pp. 454–56.

[5] Act 8 June, 1872: R. S. § 3893; Act 3 March, 1879, § 21: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 456.

[1] See 22 St. L. 455. As to rates on other classes, see Act 9 June, 1884 (second class): 23 St. L. 40; Act 3

Mail-route; mail service. See POST-OFFICE; ROUTE.

See also ACCESSARY; FRANK; INDECENT; LETTER, 3; OBSCENE; OBSTRUCT, 2; OFFER, 1.

MAIM.[1] 1. To commit mayhem, q. v.

Although both at common law and under our present more liberal practice, it is necessary, in charging the offense of maiming, or mayhem, to set forth what member of the body was actually injured or destroyed, yet under a charge of assault with intent to maim or wound, it has never been necessary to do more than to allege the intent in the words of the statute, without setting forth particularly the manner in which the injury was to be inflicted.[2]

2. Referring to a domestic animal, implies inflicting some permanent injury upon it.

"Disfiguring" is a lower grade of the same offense.[3] See WOUND.

MAIN. 1, adj. Eng. Great, high: as, the main sea, q. v.

2, n. F. A hand.

En owel main. In equal hand. See OWELTY.

Ouster le main. Take out of the hand. See OUSTER.

See MAINER; MAINOR; MAINPERNOR; MAINPRISE; MAINTAIN; MANNER; MORTMAIN.

MAINER. See MAIN, 2.

When a libel is produced written by a man's own hand, and the author is not known, he is "taken in the mainer," and that throws the burden of proof upon him.[4]

MAINOR. A thing stolen, in the hands of the thief.

At common law, when a thief was taken "with the mainour," that is, with the thing stolen in manu, in his hand, he might be brought into court, arraigned and tried without indictment. "Mainour" also designated the article itself which was stolen.[5]

The practice was abolished in the reign of Edward the Third.[6]

MAINPERNOR.[6] A surety that a defendant would appear and answer all charges.

"Bail" are sureties for a specified matter, expressly stipulated. They may imprison or surrender at any time; whereas, "mainpernors" can do neither.[6]

Mainprise. The writ or proceeding by which a defendant was committed to mainpernors.[7]

MAINTAIN.[1] 1. To keep up, sustain, preserve.

To maintain a partition fence is to keep it in repair, and, if destroyed, to rebuild it.[2]

A building is not maintained, but a nuisance may be, by prosecuting it in the building.[3]

To maintain a railroad implies no power to change the location after construction.[4]

It is difficult to define what are "works of maintenance" toward a railway. "Maintenance" is a very large term, and useful or reasonable ameliorations are not excluded. You may maintain by keeping in the same state, or by keeping the same state and improving the state, always bearing in mind that it must be maintenance as distinguished from alteration of purpose.[5]

See PROHIBITION, 1.

2. In pleading, to support what has already been brought into existence.[6]

3. To assist in, to promote. See Maintenance, 1.

4. To provide for the support of a person. See Maintenance, 2.

Maintenance. Support; preservation, continuance. Has two special applications:

1. An unlawful taking in hand, or upholding of quarrels or sides, to the disturbance or hinderance of common right.[7]

An officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it.[8]

Assisting another person in a lawsuit, without having any privity or concern in the subject.[9]

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up and continuing the litigation.[10]

Maintainor. One chargeable with maintenance.

At common law, maintenance is an offense against public justice: it keeps alive strife and contention, and perverts the remedial process of the law into an

---

March, 1879 (second, third, fourth classes): 1 Sup. R. S. 455; also, R. S. §§ 3896–3913.

[1] F. mehaing, abatement of strength from hurt; mutilation.

[2] Ridenour v. State, 38 Ohio St. 273 (1882).

[3] State v. Harris, 11 Iowa, 415 (1860); Regina v. Bullock, 11 Cox, Cr. C. 127 (1868).

[4] Rex v. Beare, 1 Ld. Ray. 417 (1698).

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 307; 3 id. 71.

[6] F. main, hand; pernor, taker.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 128.

[1] F. maintenir; L. manu tenere, to hold by the hand, to uphold.

[2] Rhodes v. Mummery, 48 Ind. 218 (1874).

[3] Commonwealth v. Kimball, 105 Mass. 467 (1870), cases. See also State v. Main, 31 Conn. 574 (1863).

[4] Moorhead v. Little Miami R. Co., 17 Ohio, 340, 358 (1848).

[5] Sevenoaks, &c. R. Co. v. London, &c. R. Co., L. R. 11 Ch. D. 625 (1879), Jessel, M. R.

[6] Moon v. Durden, 2 Excheq. *30 (1848); Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Godman, 104 Ind. 492 (1885).

[7] Coke, Litt. 368 b; 51 Me. 63.

[8] 4 Bl. Com. 135; 44 N. H. 303; 30 Wis. 233.

[9] Wickham v. Conklin, 8 Johns. *228 (1811).

[10] 2 Pars. Contr. 766; 35 Vt. 69.

engine of oppression. "Champerty" and "barratry" are species.[1]

But a master may maintain, that is, abet and assist, his servant, and a parent uphold his child, in a law-suit.[2]

The ancient English doctrine respecting maintenance has found little favor here.[3] See CHAMPERTY.

2. Provision for the sustenance of a person — a minor, wife, widow, parent.

Separate maintenance. An allowance made for a wife by her husband.

If a husband, without just cause, deserts his wife, leaving her without adequate means of support, a court of equity will compel him to provide a reasonable amount for her.[4] See NECESSARIES.

MAIZE. See GRAIN.

MAJESTY. See PREROGATIVE.

MAJOR; MAJUS. L. The greater; opposed to minus, the lesser, the less.

Major in se continet minus. The greater comprises the less within itself.

Omne majus continet in se minus. The greater includes the less. Omne majus trahit ad se minus. The greater draws the less to itself — the accessory follows its principal.[5] See GREATER; MAJORITY.

Major vis. The stronger agency. See VIS, Major.

MAJORITY.[6] 1. The civil condition of one who is of the full age of twenty-one years.[7] Opposed, minority. See AGE; WHEN.

2. The greater number or portion; more than half of all electors, votes or voters. Opposed, minority. Compare PLURALITY.

A director of a school board who does not vote is not virtually absent: he is viewed as not voting at all or else as voting for the candidate who has the minority.[8]

A majority cannot arbitrarily deprive the minority of opportunity to deliberate, and, if possible, convince their fellows.[9] See HOUSE, 2.

In corporations, within the scope of the corporate authority, the majority rule Beyond this they have no right to go, and one may insist upon their stopping at the limits.[1]

See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP; PROXY.

Qualified voters who absent themselves from an election are presumed to assent to the will of the majority of those who vote, unless the law providing for the election declares otherwise.[2]

Good of the majority; majority rule. The majority of the members in communities have always claimed the right to govern the whole society.[3] See POLICE, 2; WELFARE.

MAKE. 1. To prepare, subscribe, verify and file: as, to make answer.

2. To transfer for the benefit of a creditor or creditors: as, to make an assignment.

3. To sign, seal, and deliver; to execute: as, to make a bill, deed, note.

4. To agree to, or to execute: as, to make a contract.

5. To fail to do a thing required in the conduct of legal proceedings: as, to make default.

6. To produce, create: as, to make an issue.

7. To collect or procure under an execution: as, to make the money; money made.

8. To swear or affirm to, in due form: as, to make oath, or affirmation.

9. To transfer: as, to make over.

10. To prepare and read in open court: as, to make a presentment.

11. To certify what was done under the mandate of a writ: as, to make a return.

Compare FACERE; FIERI; MANUFACTURE.

Maker. Specifically, he who executes a promissory note. But "law-maker" means a legislator; and "the law-maker," the individual, or body that enacts a law or laws.

MAL.[4] A prefix denoting ill, evil, unskillful, unlawful.[5]

As, in maladministration, maldistribution, malfeasance, malpractice, maltreatment. See MIS.

MALA. See MALUS.

MALADMINISTRATION. See MAL; ADMINISTER, 4.

MALE. See DESCENT; GENDER; ISSUE, 5; MAN; PRONOUNS.

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 135

[2] 1 Bl. Com. 429, 430.

[3] Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 488 (1857). See 3 Cow. 547; 18 How. 507; 54 Ala. 66; 40 Conn. 570; 3 Harr. (Del.) 208; 57 Ga. 263; 11 Mass. 549; 5 Pick. 359; 2 Mo. Ap. 4; 11 Humph 56; 10 Heisk. 341; 2 Story, Eq. §§ 1048-57; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 122.

[4] See Garland v. Garland, 50 Miss. 700-716 (1874), cases; Van Arsdalen v. Van Arsdalen, 30 N. J. E. 359 (1879).

[5] 1 Story, Ag. § 172; 118 U. S. 587; 1 Gray, 336; 74 Pa. 468.

[6] L. major, the greater.

[7] See 8 Op. Att.-Gen. 62.

[8] Commonwealth v. Wickersham, 66 Pa. 134 (1870). See 95 U. S. 369.

[9] Commonwealth v. Cullen, 13 Pa. 144 (1850).

[1] Leo v. Union Pacific R. Co., 18 F. R. 283 (1884).

[2] County of Cass v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 369 (1877), cases, Miller and Bradley, JJ., dissenting. See also 22 Alb. Law J. 44-47 (1880), cases; 48 Ill. 263; 69 Ind. 505; 22 Minn. 53; 35 Mo. 103.

[3] See 1 Story, Const. § 330.

[4] F. mal: L. male: malus, bad.

[5] See Minkler v. State, 14 Nev. 183 (1880).

MALEFICIUM. L. Wrong-doing; unlawful action; injury; tort.

Ex maleficio. On account of misconduct. See TRUST, 1, Trustee.

MALFEASANCE. See MAL; FEASANCE.

MALICE.[1] Wicked intention to do an injury.[2]

In law, any improper and sinister motive; not necessarily spite and hatred.[3]

Wantonness; willful disregard of right and duty; doing an act contrary to a man's own convictions of duty.[4]

The state of mind in which one willfully does that which he knows will injure another's person or property.[5]

Not limited to acts done from hatred, revenge, or passion; includes all acts wantonly or willfully done, that is, acts which any man of reason, knowledge, and ability must know to be contrary to his duty.[6]

In homicide, a wicked, malignant, and revengeful act, flowing from a heart regardless of social duty, and fatally bent on mischief.[7]

In trespass, when the injury has been wanton, or gross and outrageous.[8] Not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act, but an act conceived in a spirit of mischief, or of criminal indifference to civil obligation.[9]

Thus, in malicious prosecution, the term is quite comprehensive, and includes many phases of wrong motive and conduct. There may be ill-will, malevolence, spite, a spirit of revenge, or a purpose to injure without cause, but it is not necessary there should be. If the prosecution is willful, wanton or reckless, or against the prosecutor's sense of duty and right, or for ends he knows or is bound to know are wrong and against the dictates of public policy, it is malicious.[10]

In a newspaper publication, malice in uttering false statements may consist either in a direct intention to injure another, or in a reckless disregard of his rights, and of the consequences that may result to him.[1] Want of knowledge may aggravate the malignity of the case by showing an indiscriminate malice and indifference to the peace of the innocent.[2]

Actual malice; malice in fact; express malice. Malice existing as a matter of fact.

Express malice in homicide exists when one, with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design, doth kill another; which design is evidenced by external circumstances discovering that inward intention; as, lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do bodily harm.[3]

Express malice consists in the deliberate intention of doing any bodily harm to another, unauthorized by law.[4]

Express malice means a deliberate intention and design to commit the offense in question.[5]

Constructive malice; implied malice; legal malice. Malice inferred from acts; malice imputed in law.

Implied malice, or malice in law, is malice inferred from an act, presumed from a deliberate act, though no particular enmity can be proved. As, where a man kills another without provocation — which evidences an abandoned heart; or where a criminal kills a person who is endeavoring to make a lawful arrest; or where a person, intending to commit another felony, kills a man — as, shoots at A and kills B against whom he has no ill-intent; or, a killing by an abortionist. Any such killing is murder, because of the previous felonious intent, which the law transfers to the act. Indeed, all felonious homicide is presumed to be malicious until the contrary appears.[6]

Implied malice is malice which has no existence in fact, but which the law imputes to the guilty party.[7]

Implied malice exists where mischief is intentionally done without just cause or excuse.[8]

Malice aforethought or prepense. In homicide, not so properly spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, as an evil

---

[1] F. malice: L. malitia, badness. See MALITIA.

[2] Tuttle v. Bishop, 80 Conn. 85 (1861).

[3] Mitchell v. Wall, 111 Mass. 498 (1873), cases.

[4] United States v. Ruggles, 5 Mas. 192 (1828), Story, J.

[5] Territory v. Egan, 3 Dak. 130 (1882), Kidder, J.

[6] United States v. Coffin, 1 Sumn. 398 (1833), Story, J.; Wiggin v. Coffin, 3 Story, 7 (1839); Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 117 (1825); United States v. Harriman, 1 Hughes, 528 (1876).

[7] United States v. Ruggles, supra. See also 37 Ind. 114; 89 id. 198; 26 Ga. 156, 275; 30 Miss. 673; 31 Mo. 147; 19 Iowa, 447; 35 Mich. 16.

[8] Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 371 (1851).

[9] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 214 (1858), Campbell, J.; Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 493 (1875).

[10] Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 229 (1878), Graves, J.; Re Murphy, 109 Ill. 33 (1884); Ramsey v. Arrott, 64 Tex. 623 (1885).

---

[1] Gott v. Pulsifer, 122 Mass. 239 (1877), Gray, C. J.; Lothrop v. Adams, 133 id. 479 (1882); Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 398 (1878); Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 177 (1882); Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 264; Townshend, Sl. & Lib. § 87.

[2] Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 117 (1825), Story, J.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 199.

[4] People v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 393 (1852).

[5] [Anthony v. State, 21 Miss. 264 (1850).

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 199–201.

[7] Darry v. People, 10 N. Y. 138 (1854).

[8] Parke v. Blackiston, 3 Harr. 378 (Del., 1841).

See, on express and implied malice, 34 Cal. 53; 12 Fla. 125; 3 Ga. 324; 26 id. 156; 101 Ill. 391; 1 Ind. 353; 2 La. An. 969; 37 Me. 468; 9 Metc. 104; 15 Pick. 337; 30 Miss. 684; 25 Mo. 151; 48 id. 161, 323; 11 S. & R. 40; 32 Tex. 641; 33 id. 645; 8 Tex. Ap. 109; 4 B. & C. 255; 9 Cl. & F. 32; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. Law Eng. 118–21.

design in general; the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and a malignant heart.[1]

Is not confined to homicide committed in cold blood, with settled design and premeditation, but extends to all cases of homicide, however sudden the occasion, when the act is done under such cruel circumstances as are the ordinary symptoms of a wicked, depraved, and malignant spirit.[2]

Includes not only anger, hatred, and revenge, but every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. Is not confined to ill-will toward one or more individual persons, but is intended to denote an action flowing from any wicked and corrupt motive, a thing done malo animo, where the fact has been attended with such circumstances as carry in them the plain indication of a heart regardless of social duty, and fatally bent on mischief. Therefore, murder is implied from any deliberate or cruel act against another, however sudden. . . The words do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take life and the actual execution of that intent, but they rather denote purpose and design, in contradistinction to accident and mischance.[3]

Whenever a homicide is shown to have been committed without lawful authority and with deliberate intent, it is sufficiently proved to have been with malice aforethought. It is not necessary to prove that any special or express hatred or malice was entertained by the accused toward the deceased. It is sufficient to prove that the act was done with deliberate intent, as distinct from an act done under the sudden impulse of passion, in the heat of blood, and without previous malice.[4] See MURDER.

Particular malice; personal malice. Particular malice is ill-will, grudge, a desire to be revenged on a particular person.[5]

Personal malice is spite against some particular individual. It is one of the two varieties of malice in fact, the other being what Blackstone terms "universal" malice, or malice against the world generally, without reference to individuals: as, where a person discharges a gun into a multitude, or starts out to kill and does kill the first man he meets.[6]

Malicious. Characterizes an act not only when it arises from personal spite, but when it is a wanton and intentional injury, when it is willful.[7]

In a legal sense, describes any unlawful act done willfully and purposely to the prejudice and injury of another.[1]

The intentional doing of a wrongful act with knowledge of its character, and without cause or excuse.[2]

Describes the state of mind in which many acts (crimes and torts) are done: as, malicious — abandonment, arrest, battery, burning, communication, desertion, injury, intention, libel, mischief, prosecution, publication, qq. v.

Maliciously. With deliberate intention to injure; willful: as, the malicious burning of a building.[3]

Maliciously suing out an attachment means not only malevolent intention to do injury, but also that careless disregard of the rights of others which, without real ill-will, the law implies as malice.[4]

In a spirit of wicked revenge toward a person, or of wanton cruelty toward an animal.[5]

In misdemeanors and felonies, imports a criminal motive, intent or purpose.[6]

See DELIBERATION, 3; DAMAGES, Exemplary; INTENT; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MOTIVE.

MALITIA. L. Vicious will; evil design; wickedness; malice. Compare DOLUS; MALUS.

Malitia supplet ætatem. Viciousness makes up for age; a wicked design supplies the want of years.

Between seven and fourteen an infant is prima facie incapable of criminal intention. Evidence of mischievous discretion will rebut this presumption.[7]

MALO. See MALUS.

MALPRACTICE.[8] Unskillful treatment by a physician or surgeon, in consequence of which the patient is injured more or less seriously, perhaps permanently.

Spoken of as ignorant, negligent, or willful.

Some authorities hold that the offense, however occasioned, is a misdemeanor: it implies a violation of confidence.[9]

The patient may have a civil action for damages.

The majority of the cases arise from amputations,

---

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 198.

[2] United States v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 91 (1820), Story, J.

[3] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 304-6 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

[4] United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 162, 165 (1882), Cox, J.; Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 229 (1878); Spies et al. v. People, 122 id. 174 (1887).

[5] Brooks v. Jones, 11 Ired. L. 261 (1850).

[6] See 4 Bl. Com. 200; Brown's Law Dict. See generally 1 Curtis, 4; 1 Dak. 458; 29 Ga. 594; 29 Kan. 427; 13 Mo. 382; 16 Nev. 307; 49 N. H. 399; 13 Wend. 159; 58 Pa. 9; 14 Tex. Ap. 286, 300, 331; Law Mag. & Rev., Aug. 1882.

[7] Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 118 (1825), Story, J.

[1] [Commonwealth v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 340 (1834), Shaw, C. J.

[2] Rounds v. Delaware, &c. R. Co., 3 Hun, 335 (1874). See also 9 Metc. 106; 29 Tex. 256; 76 Va. 132.

[3] Tuttle v. Bishop, 30 Conn. 85 (1861).

[4] Jerman v. Stewart, 12 F. R. 268 (1882), Hammond, District Judge.

[5] Commonwealth v. Walden, 3 Cush. 559 (1849). See also 7 Ala. 728; 1 Minn. 292; 3 Yerg. 278.

[6] Commonwealth v. Brooks, 9 Gray, 303 (1857); Commonwealth v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 345 (1874). That a malicious act of itself gives no right of action, see 18 Cent. Law J. 424-28 (1884), cases.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 465; 4 id. 2, 23; 2 Kent, 233.

[8] L. malpraxis, bad or faulty practice. See MAL.

[9] See 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 863; 1 Pr. 43; 2 Russ. Cr. 277; 3 Mass. 134; 8 Mo. 561; 3 C. & P. 629; 4 id. 423.

fractures, and dislocations. The surgeon must know and apply what is settled in his profession, and bring to the performance of an operation at least ordinary skill; and the patient must not directly contribute, to an extent that cannot be distinguished, to the results of the treatment he afterward complains of.[1] See CARE; MALTREATMENT.

MALTREATMENT. Synonymous with bad treatment.

Does not imply, necessarily, conduct that is either willfully or grossly careless. Results from ignorance, negligence, or willfulness. This, at least, is the meaning, as applied to the treatment of a wound by a surgeon.[2] Compare MALPRACTICE.

Maltreatment of animals. See CRUELTY, 3.

MALUM. See MALUS.

MALUS. L. Bad; evil. Compare MAL.

Mala. Bad; in or with that which is bad, evil, unlawful.

Mala fides. Bad faith; opposed to bona fides. See FIDES.

Mala grammatica. Bad grammar, q. v.

Mala mens. Bad mind: fraudulent or criminal intention.

Mala praxis. Bad treatment: malpractice, q. v.

Malo. With or in bad, evil, unlawful.

Malo animo. With bad intent; maliciously.

Malo sensu. In the bad meaning. See SLANDER.

Malum. Evil, an evil, a wrong. Plural, mala.

Malum in se. Evil in itself; an act pernicious in its very nature. Malum prohibitum. A forbidden evil; an act made wrong by legislation.

Crimes and misdemeanors, such as murder, theft, and perjury, are mala in se, and contract no additional turpitude from being declared unlawful by a human legislature. But it is otherwise as to things in themselves indifferent: these become right or wrong, just or unjust, duties or misdemeanors, as the municipal legislator sees proper for promoting the welfare of society, and more effectually carrying on the purposes of civil life.[3]

Some crimes and misdemeanors are mala in se: offenses against divine law, natural or revealed; but by far the greater part are mala prohibita: such as derive their guilt merely from prohibition by the laws of the land.[1]

MALVERSATION. Any punishable fault committed in the exercise of an office.

Originally, a term in French law.[2]

MAN. 1. Includes all human beings, or any human being whether male or female: as, in the expressions, offenses against man, manslaughter, material-man, remainderman, warehouseman, and perhaps bondsman. Compare HOMO; PERSON.

2. Restricted to males — adults: as, in alderman, assemblyman, congressman, juryman, talesman.

In a statute, "single man" and "married man" may be taken in a generic sense, and the former include an unmarried woman.[3]

"When any man shall die leaving minor children and no widow," in a statute of descents, "man" will include a woman who dies leaving a minor child, and no husband.[4] See GENDER.

3. In feudal law, a vassal. See FEUD.

Man of straw. See STRAW.

MANAGE.[5] To direct, control, govern, administer, oversee.

It is not easy to establish a rule as to what may be considered "unmanageableness" in a horse, and much depends upon the circumstances of each case.[6]

Management. 1. The management of an engine consists in part of the management of whatever generates the motive force.[7]

2. The body of persons who have charge of the affairs of a corporation. See DIRECTOR.

Manager. 1. An officer of a corporation chosen to superintend its affairs.

An ambiguous word, since it may mean either a person retained generally to represent the principal in his absence, or one who has the superintendence of a particular contract or job, in which latter case he is like a fellow-workman.[8]

General manager. The person who really has the most general control over the affairs of a corporation, and who has knowledge of all its business and property, and who can act in emergencies on his own responsibility.

---

[1] See Hibbard v. Thompson, 109 Mass. 288 (1872), cases; Potter v. Warner, 91 Pa. 366 (1879): 36 Am. Rep. 668, 670, cases; Elwell, Malp. 55; 9 Conn. 209; 13 B. Mon. 219; 27 N. H. 460; 7 N. Y. 397; 25 Ohio St. 86; 22 Pa. 261; 68 id. 168; 39 Vt. 447. As to criminal liability for death, see 27 Alb. Law J. 104-5 (1883), cases.

[2] Commonwealth v. Hackett, 2 Allen, 142-43 (1861), Bigelow, C. J.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 54, 57.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 420; 4 id. 5-10; 101 U. S. 821; 108 id. 150; 31 F. R. 451.

[2] F.: L. male, ill, unlawful; versatio, behavior.

[3] Silver v. Ladd, 7 Wall. 226 (1868).

[4] Smith v. Allen, 31 Ark. 271 (1876).

[5] F. manege, control of a horse, handling: L. manus, a hand.

[6] Spaulding v. Winslow, 74 Me. 536 (1883): 3 Cliff. 61; 100 Mass. 49; 125 id. 526; 132 id. 49; 73 N. Y. 365; 81 Pa. 50; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1207, cases.

[7] Smith v. Old Colony, &c. R. Co., 10 R. I. 28 (1871).

[8] Murphy v. Smith, 19 C. B. N. S. 390 (1865), Erle, C. J.

He may be considered as the "principal officer." [1]

Managing agent. An agent having general supervision over the affairs of a corporation.[2]

Distinguishes a person, representing a corporation, who is invested with general power, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, from an ordinary agent or employee who acts in an inferior capacity, and under the discretion and control of superior authority, both in regard to the extent of the work and the manner of executing it.[3]

Such agent need not have charge of the whole business of the corporation.[4]

In several cases in New York, it has been held that "managing agent" means a person exercising the functions of an officer in the control and management of the business of a company or corporation, and does not include a person having charge of some special work, as, a baggage-master in respect to baggage, or a person employed to purchase horses and feed, or an assistant secretary, or a person who sells tickets, or who has charge of the transfer of the stock and the transmission of assessments. The adjudications have not gone so far as to hold that no agent is a "managing agent" who does not participate in the control of every part of the corporate business, and of every corporate act. Still less has such construction been given where it would defeat justice, and enable a corporation to violate the law with impunity.[5] See PRINCIPAL, 4, Vice.

2. In England and Canada, the chief executive officer of a branch bank.

3. A member of the impeaching branch of a legislature, selected to assist as counsel at a trial.

MANDANT. See MANDATE, 3.

MANDARE. L. To enjoin, command; literally, to put into one's hand.

Mandamus. We command; we command you.

The emphatic word in the Latin form of the writ of that name: a command issuing in the king's name, directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within the king's dominions, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty, and which the court has previously determined, or at least supposes, to be consonant to right and justice.[1]

A high prerogative (discretionary) writ of a most extensively remedial nature, where justice is refused or neglected. It issues where a party has a right to have a thing done or has no other specific means of compelling its performance: as, to compel admission or restoration to an office or franchise of a public nature; for the production or inspection of public documents; to compel a judge of an inferior court to do justice according to the powers of his office, as to admit an attorney to practice.[2]

A proceeding to compel officers and others to act in the discharge of the duties and trusts imposed upon them. It is not designed to review their action when discretion may be exercised, or where action depends upon facts to be determined by them.[3]

The courts are disposed to confine the remedy to cases where there is no other adequate specific remedy. . . The writ affords a summary and specific remedy where without it the party will be subjected to serious injustice.[4]

In modern practice, in effect, is nothing more than an ordinary action at law between the parties, and not regarded as a prerogative writ. It came into use by virtue of the prerogative power of the English crown, and was subject to rules and regulations long since disused.[5]

It may be said to be an established remedy to oblige inferior courts and magistrates to do that justice which they are in duty, and by virtue of their office, bound to do.[6]

The writ lies where the plaintiff has a clear legal right to the performance of an official or corporate act, by a public officer or corporation, and no other adequate, specific remedy exists.[7]

Regularly the writ lies against a public officer to compel the performance of a public duty; never to restore to a private office or to execute a private right; and, as a rule, never where the applicant has another adequate remedy.[8]

Its office is to compel the performance of a duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent. The

[1] Wheeler & Wilson Manuf. Co. v. Lawson, 57 Wis. 404 (1883), cases, Orton, J.; 110 U. S. 6.

[2] Upper Mississippi Transportation Co. v. Whittaker, 16 Wis. 235 (1862), Paine, J.

[3] [Reddington v. Mariposa Land, &c. Co., 19 Hun, 408 (1879), Ingalls, J.

[4] Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co., 35 Hun, 371 (1885).

[5] Hat-Sweat Manuf. Co. v. Davis Sewing-Machine Co., 31 F. R. 295 (1887), cases, Brown, J.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 110; 1 Cranch, 169; 5 Pet. *122; 12 id. *614.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 110, 264.

[3] Scripture v. Burns, 59 Iowa, 72 (1882), Beck, J. See also 22 N. J. L. 47; 28 N. Y. 114.

[4] Tawas, &c. R. Co. v. Judge of Iosco County, 44 Mich. 479, 488 (1880): 24 id. 468; Huston, &c. R. Co. v. Commissioner of Land Office, 36 Tex. 399 (1872): King v. Baker, 3 Bur. 1267 (1762); State v. Board of Liquidators, 29 La. An. 267 (1877).

[5] Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 97 (1860), Taney, C. J.; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 675 (1880); State v. Lewis, 76 Mo. 379–81 (1882); High, Extr. Rem. 4.

[6] Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 323 (1879), Strong, J.

[7] Smalley v. Yates, 36 Kan. 523 (1887), cases, Horton, Chief Justice.

[8] Tobey v. Hakes, 54 Conn. 274–75 (1886), cases.

law seeks to enforce a personal obligation, whatever the facts or relations out of which the duty grows. It is a personal action, resting upon the averred and assumed fact that the defendant has neglected or refused to perform a personal duty, to the performance of which by him the relator has a clear right. Hence, demand, and refusal, to do the thing, is necessary.[1]

The writ is grounded on a suggestion of right in the petitioner, and a denial of justice; whereupon, in order more fully to satisfy the court that there is probable ground for such interposition, a rule is made (except where probable ground is manifest) directing the party complained of to show cause why a mandamus should not issue; and if he shows no sufficient cause, the writ itself is issued, at first in the alternative; to do thus or show some reason to the contrary; to which an answer is made at a certain day; and if the respondent shows an insufficient reason, there issues a peremptory mandamus: to do the thing absolutely; to which perfect obedience is required.[2] A rule first issues to show cause why a peremptory writ should not issue. After due service, the respondent makes return to the charge contained in the rule — by denying the matters or setting up new matter, or he moves to quash the rule, or demurs to the allegations. A matter charged and denied must be proved by the relator, and new matter in avoidance, if denied by the relator, must be proved by the respondent. Several defenses may be set up.[3]

The appropriate functions of the writ are the enforcement of duties to the public by officers and others, who neglect or refuse to perform them, and for which there is no other specific remedy. The presentation of a prima facie case of duty in the respondent and an obligation to perform it precedes the granting of an alternative writ, and this is considered as done when the court has awarded the writ. The respondent is bound to deny the allegations in the writ, or else by a demurrer or by a traverse of the facts, generally or by confession and avoidance, show cause why he should not. In case of traverse, the facts relied upon must be set forth clearly, specifically, and certainly, so that the court may see at once that the facts, if established or admitted, are sufficient as the alternative for obedience to the writ.[4]

The writ does not lie to control judicial discretion, except when that discretion has been abused; but it is a remedy when the case is outside of the exercise of this discretion, and outside of the jurisdiction of the court or officer to which or to whom the writ is addressed. A peculiar and common use is to restrain inferior courts and to keep them within their lawful bounds.[5]

The writ does not abate by expiration of the term of office, where there is a continuing duty irrespective of the incumbent.[6]

There is a preponderance of authority in favor of the doctrine that private persons may move for a mandamus to enforce a public duty, not due to the government as such, without the intervention of the government law-officer. The principal reasons urged against the doctrine are that the writ is prerogative — a reason which is of no force in this country, and no longer in England, — and that it exposes the defendant to be harassed with many suits — but the writ, being discretionary with the court, will not be unnecessarily granted.[7]

The writ lies to restore an attorney who has been disbarred unlawfully, and for cases where there is a legal right without any other remedy;[8] to compel satisfaction of a judgment against a municipality, by the levy of a tax, if the authorities have taxing power, and the creditor is unable to obtain payment by execution.[9] But not to compel the officers of a State to perform their political duties, as, to levy a tax for the payment of bonds, the payment being repudiated by the State.[10]

The Supreme Court has power to issue the writ in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law to the Federal courts or officers, where a State, an ambassador or other public minister or consul is a party.[11] Application for the writ to a subordinate court is "warranted by the principles and usages of law" in cases where the subordinate court, having jurisdiction, refuses to hear and decide the controversy, or where such a court, having heard the cause, refuses to render judgment or enter a decree, but not to re-examine a judgment or decree, nor to direct what judgment or decree shall be rendered, nor where remedy by appeal or writ of error lies.[12]

Mandatum. L. A gratuitous bailment. See MANDATE, 3.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When anything is commanded, commanded also is everything by which it can be effected.

The law authorizes the doing of every thing necessary to accomplish what it commands; as, where effect is to be given to a statute. For this reason, also, a constable may order by-standers to assist him to compel offenders to keep the peace, and the sheriff command citizens to join the posse.[13] Compare GRANT, 2, 3; INCIDENT.

---

[1] United States v. Boutwell, 17 Wall. 607 (1873), Strong, Justice.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 110, 264; 52 Wis. 426; 40 Tex. 682.

[3] Exp. Newman, 14 Wall. 166-67 (1871), cases, Clifford, J.

[4] Commonwealth, ex rel. Armstrong v. Commissioners of Allegheny County, 37 Pa. 279 (1860): Tapping, Mand. 347; 32 Pa. 218; 34 id. 496.

[5] Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 328 (1879): Exp. Burtis, 108 U. S. 238 (1880), cases; 100 id. 186.

[6] Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 488 (1880), cases.

[7] Union Pacific R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 355-56 (1875), cases.

[8] Exp. Bradley, 7 Wall. 376 (1868).

[9] Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 518-21 (1880).

[10] Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 (1882).

[11] R. S. §§ 688, 716, cases.

[12] Exp. Newman, 14 Wall. 165 (1871), cases. As to jurisdiction in the Federal courts, see 19 Am. Law Rev. 505-46 (1885), cases.

[13] 8 Cush. 345; Broom, Max. 485.

MANDATARY. See MANDATE, 3.

MANDATE.[1] 1. A charge, command; a judicial command.[2]

Includes a writ, process or other written direction issued pursuant to law out of a court, or made pursuant to law, by a court, or a judge, or a person acting as a judicial officer, and commanding a court, board or other body, or an officer or other person named or otherwise designated therein, to do or refrain from doing an act therein specified.[3]

The rescript or precept promulgated upon the decision of a cause by the Supreme Court is called a mandate. It embodies what shall be done by the lower court.

Mandatory. Involving a command; opposed to directory, q. v.

Many statutory requisitions, intended for the guidance of officers in the conduct of business, do not limit their power or render its exercise in disregard of the requirements ineffectual. Such are regulations designed to secure order, system, and dispatch in proceedings. Provisions of this character are not mandatory unless accompanied by negative words importing that the acts shall not be done in any other manner or time than that designated. But when the requirements, as, in a tax sale, are intended for the protection of the citizen, and to prevent a sacrifice of his property, and by a disregard of which his rights might be and generally would be injuriously affected, they are not directory but mandatory. They must then be followed or the acts done will be invalid. The power of the officer is limited by the manner and conditions prescribed for its exercise.[4] Compare PROHIBITION, 1.

2. In a few of the States, the writ of mandamus, q. v.

3. A contract by which a lawful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be performed without reward.[5]

Mandant or mandator. The bailor in a contract of mandate. Mandatary. The bailee in such contract. See BAILMENT.

MANDATUM. See MANDARE, Mandatum.

MANIA.[6] 1. Mental derangement accompanied with excitement.

2. Madness, irresistible impulse, insanity.

Dipsomania. A madness for drink. Kleptomania. An uncontrollable impulse to steal. Mania a potu. A frenzy for drinking. Monomania. Insanity upon one subject only. See further INSANITY.

MANIFEST.[1] 1. Apparent by examination, without need of evidence to make it more clear; open, palpable, incontrovertible. Synonymous with evident, visible, plain, obvious to the understanding from an examination: as, that there is error in an assessment from inspection of the roll or return.[2]

2. A document showing of what goods a cargo consists, where laden on board, for whom laden, to whom consigned, etc.[3]

MANKIND. See MAN, 1.

MANNER.[4] A word of large signification, but cannot exceed the subject to which it belongs: the incident cannot be extended beyond the principal.[5]

The power to direct the "manner," the mode, the way, in which an act shall be done, and the power to do the act itself, are, obviously, not identical. To prescribe the manner of election or appointment to an office is an ordinary legislative function; to make an appointment is an administrative function.[6]

In like manner. Assessment of damages "in like manner," as prescribed by a former act, may refer merely to the general method.[7]

In the same manner. By similar proceedings, so far as such proceedings are applicable to the subject-matter.[8]

That a mining tax shall be enforced "in the same manner" as a certain annual tax, does not necessarily mean within the same time.[9]

Manner and form. Words used in tendering an issue, general or special. When of the substance of the issue, they put in issue the circumstances to the principal matter denied,— time, place, manner, etc.; otherwise, when not of the substance. When the circumstances are originally and in themselves material, and therefore to be proved as stated, the words "in manner and form" are of the substance. The words put in issue all material circumstances, and no other.[10] See MODE; MODUS.

---

[1] Mandare, q. v.

[2] See McKelsey v. Lewis, 3 Abb. N. Cas. 63 (1877).

[3] N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 2; People ex rel. Munsell v. Oyer & Terminer, 36 Hun, 281 (1885).

[4] French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. 511 (1871), Field, J. See also 20 How. 290; 3 McCrary, 333, 349; 13 F. R. 512, 508, cases.

[5] Story, Bailm. § 137. See also 8 Ga. 178; 5 La. An. 807, 672; 10 Minn. 421; 42 Miss. 543; 35 Mo. 492; 58 N. H. 17.

[6] Gk. mani'a, mental excitement, frenzy, rage.

[1] L. manifestus, lit., struck by the hand: palpable; apparent, evident.

[2] Matter of Hermance, 71 N. Y. 486 (1877), Allen, J.

[3] See 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 593.

[4] F. manier, habitual: main, hand.

[5] Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 54 (1874), Agnew, C. J. See Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 447 (1870); 70 N. Y. 483.

[6] State, ex rel. Attorney-General v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 560 (1857).

[7] Thirty-fourth Street, Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 31 (1876).

[8] Phillips v. County Commissioners, 122 Mass. 260 (1877).

[9] State v. Eureka Consolidated Mining Co., 8 Nev. 29 (1872). See United States v. Morris, 1 Curtis, 26 (1851).

[10] [Gould, Plead 212; Steph. Pl. 213.

MANOR.[1] 1. A tract of land held by a lord or other personage.

Out of this tract the grantee or lord reserved a "demesne" contiguous to his castle. On one part of the rest were settled "military tenants" sufficient in number to perform the services their employer owed to his lord; on another part dwelt the "socage tenants," who farmed the land and paid rents in cattle, grain, etc.; and on a third part were the "villains," who served at base or servile labor at dictation. Roads, commons, and waste ground took up the remainder of the district. "Book" or "charter land" was held by deed under fixed rents and free services. "Folk land" was held by no assurance in writing, but distributed among the common people, and reserved at the pleasure of the lord. The "court-baron" redressed misdemeanors and nuisances within the manor, and settled disputes between tenants as to property, before at least two freeholders as a jury.[2] See DEMESNE; COPYHOLD; FEUD.

2. In the older parts of the United States (the interior of New York and eastern Pennsylvania, for example), land held on a fee-farm rent, and descending to the oldest son of the proprietor — the patroon.[3] See FEUD.

MANSION. See HOUSE, 1; MANOR.

MANSLAUGHTER. The wrongful killing of another person without malice, express or implied.

Voluntary manslaughter. A killing upon a sudden heat; a killing upon a sudden quarrel, in the first transport of passion and before reason has time to resume her empire.[4]

Killing after passion has subsided is murder. Not, then, the same as excusable homicide in self-defense.

Involuntary manslaughter. A killing in the doing of an act unlawful in itself, or a lawful act in an unlawful or careless way.[4]

As, where a workman flings a piece of timber into the street and kills a man; where the owner allows a vicious animal to run at large; where one fires off a pistol, against law, and kills another, or drives a locomotive engine at an unlawful speed; where one corrects a child immoderately. When no more is intended than a civil trespass, a killing is "voluntary" manslaughter; but where a felony is intended, a killing is murder.[4]

Manslaughter is the killing of another without malice. It is "voluntary" when the act is committed with a real design and purpose to kill, but through the violence of sudden passion, occasioned by some great provocation, which, in tenderness to the frailty of human nature, the law considers sufficient to palliate the criminality of the offense. It is "involuntary" when the death is caused by some unlawful act, not accompanied with any intention to take life. . . The true nature of manslaughter is, that it is homicide mitigated out of tenderness to the frailty of human nature.[1]

Where there is no evil intent, it is not necessary that the killing should be the result of an unlawful act; it is sufficient if it is the result of reckless or foolhardy presumption, judged by the standard of what would be reckless in a man of ordinary prudence under the same circumstances.[2]

In the courts of the United States, the crime is punishable by imprisonment not exceeding ten years, and by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars.[3]

See HOMICIDE; MALICE; MURDER.

MANSTEALING. See KIDNAPING.

MANU. See MANUS.

MANUAL. See DELIVERY; LABOR, 1. Compare CORPOREAL.

MANUFACTURE.[4] Making an article by hand; making an article, either by hand or by machinery, into a new form, capable of being used, in ordinary life. In some instances, may refer to the process performed upon what is found in a natural state, in others, to a subsequent process.[5]

To manufacture is to change and modify natural substances so that they become articles of value and use. The publisher of a newspaper is not a "manufacturer."[6]

The meaning has expanded as workmanship and art have advanced; so that now nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions as new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes devised and directed by human skill, or by the use of machinery, are now commonly designated as "manufactured." Making flour from wheat is "manufacturing."[7]

---

[1] F. manoir, mansion: L. manere, to remain, reside.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 90.

[3] See People v. Van Rensselaer, 5 Seld. 291 (1853); The Century Magazine, Dec. 1885: Manor of Gardnier Island.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 191-93. Approved, 87 Ind. 154; 78 Ky. 177; 23 Ill. 21; 34 La. An. 88; 7 N. J. L. 243; 31 Pa. 201; 8 Gratt. 605.

[1] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 304, 307 (1850), Shaw, C. J.; United States v. Outerbridge, 5 Saw. 622 (1868), Field, J.

[2] Commonwealth v. Pierce, 138 Mass. 174 (1884), cases, Holmes, J. The defendant, who publicly practiced as a physician, caused a patient to be kept in flannels saturated with kerosene, for three days, from which treatment she died. Same case, 24 Am. Law Reg. 117, 124-20, cases. As to deaths from accidents, see 21 Cent. Law J. 267-69 (1885), cases.

[3] Act 13 March, 1875: 1 Sup. R. S. 177. See 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 307; 2 Bish. Cr. L. Ch. XXIII; 4 Crim. Law Mag. 669, 679.

[4] L. manu, by the hand; facere, to make.

[5] [Lawrence v. Allen, 7 How. 794, 793 (1849), Woodbury, J. See also Schrieffer v. Wood, 5 Blatch. 216 (1864).

[6] Re Capital Publishing Co., 3 MacAr. 412 (1879), MacArthur, J.; Re Kenyon, 1 Utah, 47 (1872).

[7] Carlin v. Western Assurance Co., 57 Md. 526 (1881),

The application of labor to an article, either by hand or by mechanism, does not make the article necessarily a "manufactured" article, within the meaning of that term as used in the tariff laws. Thus, scouring wool does not make the resulting wool a manufacture of wool; nor does cleaning and ginning cotton make the resulting cotton a manufacture of cotton; nor (case in issue) are shells cleaned by acid, and then ground on an emery wheel, and some afterward etched by acid, and all intended to be sold for ornaments, as shells.[1]

Pressed and baled hay is not a "manufactured article."[2]

Cutting and storing ice is not "manufacturing:" the material is in no way changed or adapted to a new or different use.[3]

Nor is mining coal "manufacturing."[4]

Animal charcoal or bone-black, and bone-dust, are "manufactures of bone."[5]

"Manufactures of metals" mean manufactured articles in which metals form a component part; not articles in which metals have lost their form entirely, and become the chemical ingredients of new forms, as, white lead, nitrate of lead, oxide of zinc.[6]

"Domestic manufactures," in a State statute, refer to manufactures within its jurisdiction.[7]

Manufacturer. One "engaged in the business of making raw materials into wares suitable for use."

The builder or repairer of vessels is not, then, a manufacturer.[8]

Not, necessarily, one who produces a new article out of materials entirely raw. He is, who gives new shapes, new qualities, new combinations to matter which has already gone through some artificial process.[9]

A cooper who makes barrels from staves was held not to be a manufacturer within an exemption law.[10]

An ice-cream confectioner is not a manufacturer;[10] nor is the publisher of a newspaper, as seen above.[11]

A person who slaughters hogs, adding to their value by certain processes and by combination with other materials, whereby they are converted into bacon, lard, and cured meats, with a view of making gain or profit, is taxable as a manufacturer.[1]

See ART; DESIGN, 2; MECHANIC; PROCESS, 2; TRADE-MARK.

MANUMISSION. Giving liberty to one who has been in servitude, with the power of acting except as restrained by law.[2]

MANURE. See WASTE, 2.

Made upon a farm, from consumption of its products, is part of the realty. Made from hay brought upon the land, has been held to be personalty, especially when gathered into heaps. If abandoned in a highway by the owner of the animals, the first taker has a right to it.[3]

Manure which had accumulated in a public street, the fee of which belonged to the borough, was raked into heaps by the plaintiff during the evening of one day, to be removed the next evening. In this he was prevented by the defendant, who carted the manure away to his own land. In an action of trover by the plaintiff for the value of the manure, it was held: That the manure was personalty; that it belonged originally to the owners of the animals that dropped it, but was to be regarded as abandoned by such owners; that the first occupant had a right to appropriate it; that after the plaintiff had added to its value by the labor of raking it into heaps he was entitled to it; and that he had a reasonable time in which to remove it.[4]

MANUS. L. A hand. F. main, q. v.

Manu brevi. With short hand: briefly.

Manu forti. With strong hand: forcibly. See HAND, 2.

Molliter manus imposuit. He laid hands upon him lightly.

A plea justifying an assault or trespass, committed to preserve the peace, to prevent a crime, or to protect one's habitation.[5]

MANUSCRIPT.[6] A writing of any kind, as opposed to printed matter or a picture; a book, paper or document in written characters.

In copyright law, an unpublished literary production, however prepared; not, then, a picture or painting.[7]

At common law, the sole proprietorship in manuscript, before publication, is in the author or his assignee; but an unqualified publication, such as is made by printing and offering copies for sale, dedicates the

---

Ritchie, J. See also Holden v. Clancy, 58 Barb. 597 (1871).

[1] Hartranft v. Wiegmann, 121 U. S. 609, 615 (1887), cases, Blatchford, J.

[2] Frazee v. Moffitt, 20 Blatch. 268 (1882).

[3] Hittinger v. Westford, 135 Mass. 262 (1883). Contra, Attorney-General v. Belle Island Ice Co., 63 Mich. – (1886).

[4] Byers v. Franklin Coal Co., 106 Mass. 131 (1870).

[5] Schrieffer v. Wood, 5 Blatch. 216 (1864). See also 100 Mass. 183; 9 N. J. E. 289; 4 Lans. 511.

[6] Meyer v. Arthur, 91 U. S. 570 (1875).

[7] Commonwealth v. Giltinan, 64 Pa. 108 (1870).

[8] People v. N. Y. Floating Dry-Dock Co., 63 How. Pr. 458 (1882): Webster's Dict.; s. c., 92 N. Y. 489 (1883).

[9] New Orleans v. Le Blanc, 34 La. An. 597 (1882), Bermudez, C. J.

[10] New Orleans v. Mannessier, 32 La. An. 1075 (1880).

[11] See Norris v. Commonwealth, 27 Pa. 496 (1856).

[1] Engle v. Sohn, 41 Ohio St. 691 (1885).

[2] Fenwick v. Chapman, 9 Pet. *472 (1835), Wayne, J.

[3] 1 Washb. R. P. 6, cases; 11 Conn. 525; 68 Me. 204; 13 Gray, 53; 110 Mass. 94; 2 Ired. L. 326; 44 N. H. 120; 48 id. 147; 49 id. 62; 28 N. J. L. 581; 15 Wend. 169; 17 Pa. 262; 43 Vt. 93; 2 Chip. (Vt.) 114.

[4] Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 500, 505 (1871), cases.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 121.

[6] L. manu, by hand; scriptum, written.

[7] Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 537, 544 (1872), cases, Clifford, J.

contents to the public, unless the sole right of printing, publishing, and vending is secured by copyright. In communicating the contents of his manuscript, the author may impose such restrictions as he pleases upon the extent of its use.[1]

At common law, the author has a property in his manuscript, and may obtain redress against one who deprives him of it, or by improperly obtaining a copy endeavors to realize a profit by its publication. The copyright law protects this property which an author has at common law, and which would be protected by a court of chancery.[2]

See further BAGGAGE; COPYRIGHT; LETTER, 3; MAIL, 2; WRITING.

MAP. A transcript of the region which it portrays, narrowed in compass so as to facilitate an understanding of the original.[3]

Maps showing boundaries are receivable in evidence, if it appears that they were made by persons having adequate knowledge.[4]

Where one map appears to have been substantially copied from a copyrighted map, there is clearly an infringement, which a court of equity will enjoin, with an order that an account be taken of the profits made by the infringer.[5] See APPENDAGE; CHART; VERBA, Illata.

MARAUDER.[6] A soldier who commits larceny or robbery near camp, or while wandering from the army.[7]

A rover in quest of plunder; a plunderer.[8]

MARGIN.[9] In a broker's contract for the sale of stocks: security against loss on the part of the agent,— money or other property.[10]

Additional collateral security against loss to the broker, while he is carrying stock for his employer.[11]

See FUTURES; OPTION; WAGERING.

MARINE.[12] 1, adj. Pertaining to the high seas, to navigation or commerce upon the sea, to the perils of the sea. Compare MARITIME.

Marine contract. A maritime contract, q. v.

Marine court. In the city of New York, a court exercising the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, with cognisance of actions under city laws for penalties from twenty-five to one hundred dollars, and claims for services rendered upon the high seas where the State courts have jurisdiction, though the amount exceeds one hundred dollars. The court exercises no real admiralty powers.

Marine insurance. See INSURANCE, Mariné.

Marine interest. Extra interest paid for the loan of money upon bottomry or respondentia bonds, qq. v.

Marine league. See LEAGUE.

Marine risk. A peril necessarily incident to navigation.

Marine tort. A maritime tort, q. v.

2, n. Any person employed on a vessel to assist in the main purpose of the voyage.[1]

Mariner. A person employed upon a merchant ship or a ship-of-war.

Includes common sailors, a cook, porter, steward, purser, clerk, engineer, surgeon, captain, admiral — whoever has to do with the equipment and preservation of the vessel, or the welfare of the crew.[2]

MARITAGIUM. L. A daughter's marriage portion.

In feudal law, the right in a lord, of whom land was held by knight-service, to control the marriage of his vassal's daughter. See FEUD; MARITAL; MARRIAGE, 2.

MARITAL.[3] Pertaining or belonging to a husband: as, marital rights, and duties. See JUS, Mariti; SEPARATE, 2.

MARITIME.[4] Pertaining to navigation or commercial intercourse upon the seas, great lakes and rivers.

Maritime. Primarily, bordering on the sea: as, a maritime town, coast, nation; secondarily, belonging to those who border on the sea: as, maritime laws, rights, pursuits.

Marine. Primarily, of or pertaining to the sea: as, marine productions; secondarily, transacted at sea: as, marine service; or, again, doing duty on the sea: as, marine forces.[5]

Maritime cause. An action the subject-matter of which arises out of the business or

---

[1] Parton v. Prang, ante.

[2] Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. 656, 661 (1834), M'Lean, J. See also Story, Eq. §§ 943-51; Paige v. Banks, 13 Wall. 608 (1871).

[3] Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 108 (1859), Flandrau, J.

[4] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 139, cases; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 194, 668, 670, cases.

[5] Chapman v. Ferry, 18 F. R. 539 (1883).

[6] F. maraud, a rogue, vagabond: marir, to stray, wander.

[7] [Curry v. Collins, 37 Mo. 328 (1866).

[8] Webster's Dict.

[9] L. margin-, margo, a border, brink.

[10] Markham v. Jaudon, 49 Barb. 465 (1867), Leonard, Presiding Justice.

[11] McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 55 Barb. 64 (1869), Potter, J.

[12] L. marinus: mare, the sea.

[1] The Ocean Spray, 4 Saw. 105, 111 (1876), Deady, J.

[2] 1 Conk. Adm. 107; 80 N. Y. 71; 7 How. 89; 3 Sumn. 115; 1 Bl. Com. 419.

[3] L. maritus, a married man.

[4] MAR'-I-TIME. L. maritimus: mare, the sea.

[5] Webster's Dict.; Crabbe's Synonyms.

commercial relations of persons upon the public navigable waters — seas, rivers, lakes. See ADMIRALTY.

Maritime contract. A contract which relates to commerce, or navigation upon the high seas, or navigable lakes or rivers. See ADMIRALTY.

Maritime court. A court exercising the powers of a court of admiralty, q. v.

Maritime interest. Marine interest, q. v. See also Maritime Loan.

Maritime jurisdiction. Such as is exercised in the cognizance of maritime causes; the jurisdiction exercised in admiralty, q. v.

Maritime law. The law of the sea. The body of principles and usages which, by the consent of civilized communities or nations, has been adopted to regulate the affairs of men engaged in navigation and marine commerce.

No single nation can change the law of the sea. That law is of universal obligation. Like all the laws of nations, it rests upon the common consent of civilized communities. It is of force, not because it was prescribed by any superior power, but because it has been generally accepted as a rule of conduct. Many of the usages which prevail, and which have the force of law, doubtless originated in the positive prescriptions of some single state, which were at first of limited effect, but which, when generally accepted, became of universal obligation — as in the cases of the Rhodian law, the Amalphitan table, the ordinances of the Hanseatic League, parts of the ordinances of Louis XIV, the British orders in council of 1863, and our act of Congress of 1864. These have become the law of the sea by reason of their acceptance as such. Of these, courts take judicial notice without proof.[1] See OLERON; RHODIAN.

While the general maritime law is the basis of the maritime law of the United States, as well as of other countries, it is only so far operative as it has been adopted by our laws and usages. It has no inherent force of its own. The general system, familiar to lawyers and statesmen, was meant when it was declared that "The judicial Power shall extend . . to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction."[2] Thus adopted, it became the maritime law of the United States operating uniformly.

The question as to the limits of maritime law and admiralty jurisdiction is judicial, and no law can make it broader or narrower than the judicial power may determine those limits to be. But what the law is within those limits depends on what has been received as law in the maritime usages of this country, and on such legislation as may have been competent to affect it.[3]

The French writers on maritime subjects are distinguished for their learning and acumen. The principal text law on which they rely, prior to the Code of Commerce adopted in the present century, is the Ordonnance de la Marine of 1681.[1]

Maritime lien. A lien upon a vessel, for money advanced, labor done, supplies furnished, seamen's wages due, damages from collision, etc., authorized by the maritime law. See further LIEN, Maritime.

Maritime loan. A contract by which the lender, in consideration of the sum, which he will lose, if the thing upon which he has made the loan should perish by inevitable casualty, is authorized to stipulate for an interest or extraordinary profit, in case the thing arrives at the proper port.[2]

Maritime property. See ABANDON, 1; DERELICTION, 2.

Maritime service. A service which is performed upon a public navigable water and has some relation to commerce or navigation — some connection with a vessel employed in trade, with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her cargo or crew.[3]

Maritime tort. A wrong committed upon a navigable water over which a court of admiralty exercises jurisdiction; in no case, a tort committed or consummated upon land.[4]

See generally ADMIRALTY.

MARK. 1, n. (1) A sign made on paper, instead of a signature. Consists of two lines traced across each other between the Christian name and the surname, with "His" written above, and "mark" below, the crossed lines.

Marksman. One who signs by means of a mark.

The method of the Saxons was for such as could not write to subscribe their names to a deed, and, whether they could write or not, to affix the sign of the cross; which custom our illiterate vulgar to this day keep up by signing a cross for their mark, when unable to write their names.[5]

Binds an intelligent maker as to parties accepting the document on the faith of the mark. If the maker is able to write, a mark for his name is presumed ac-

[1] The Scotia, 14 Wall. 187-88 (1871), Strong, J.

[2] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2.

[3] The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 572-76 (1874), Bradley, J

[1] The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 496 (1886).

[2] The Draco, 2 Sum. 184 (1835): Valin.

[3] [Cope v. Valette Dry-Dock Co., 4 Woods, 267 (1883), Woods, J.

[4] See The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 33 (1865), Nelson, J. Approved, Exp. Phenix Fire Ins. Co., 118 U. S. 618 (1886). See also The Arkansas, 17 F. R. 837-88 (1883).

[5] 2 Bl. Com. 305.

cidental, or as an incomplete signature. A mark made by an attesting witness is verified as is the mark of a party.[1] See CANCEL.

(2) A label, token, or impression; a sign, badge, index: as, post-mark, trade-mark,[2] qq. v.

Ear-mark. A mark placed upon a thing by which to identify it.

Land-mark. A monument indicating the boundaries of land. See Mark, 2 (2).

2, v. (1) To point out, settle, define, describe — with or without visible boundaries: as, to mark and lay out the bounds and rules of a prison.[3]

(2) To determine by marks on the ground: as, to mark a boundary line.[4]

(3) To note or enter upon a record: as, to mark for use — indicate upon the record of a suit or judgment for whose benefit the same is maintained or exists.

Marked ballot. A ballot so prepared as to indicate to by-standers the nominee for whom it is to be cast. See BALLOT.

MARKET.[5] 1. A place for public traffic; also, a franchise or liberty to have a place for such resort.[6]

A place where comestibles [eatables], perishable in their nature, are sold for the daily consumption of the people.[7]

A designated place in a town or city to which all persons can repair who wish to buy or sell articles there exposed to sale.[8]

The privilege within a town to have a market; as now used, includes the idea of land and buildings or suitable erections for the accommodation of those who attend the market to sell or buy the articles brought there for sale.[9] See ESTABLISH.

2. Buying and selling generally; trade, traffic, irrespective of place — as, in market price or value, q. v.

Market overt. Open market; a public market.

In England, a sale of anything vendible therein is good as between the parties, and binding on all who have a property in the thing. But a sale out of market overt of stolen goods does not alter the ownership, and the owner may take them wherever he finds them.[1]

A fair or market held at stated intervals in particular places by virtue of a charter or permission. To this our ordinary markets bear no resemblance.[2]

There is no law recognizing the effect of sales in market overt in any of the United States.[3]

The privilege given by law to a sale in market overt, of binding property against the true owner, was originally intended to encourage markets and commerce. . . The property must still be so openly exposed that the vendor may conclude that no person but the true owner would dare expose it for sale. . . The privilege arose when there was great simplicity of practice between buyers and sellers, in markets and fairs. Shops were few, and persons whose goods were taken feloniously would know where to resort to find them. The privilege was designed to protect buyers: if a man did not pursue his goods to market where they were openly sold he ought not to interfere with the right of the bona fide purchaser; but he can require that the goods be exposed, and the whole transaction completed, so as to give him opportunity to pursue the goods. Therefore, a sale by sample is not such a sale as is entitled to the privilege.[4]

Market place. Usually a market-house.[5]

In a rule of charges, either a district of country in which trade in one or several articles is so habitually conducted as to furnish a criterion of the value of the thing or things sold, or, the point to which the trade of a district centers.[6]

Market price or value. A price established by public sales in the way of ordinary business, as, of merchandise.[7]

The price at which the owner or the producer of goods holds them for sale; the price at which they are freely offered in the market; such price as he is willing to receive when the goods are sold in the ordinary course of trade.[8]

---

[1] See Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. 66 (1866); 1 Whart. Ev. § 696, cases; 1 Williams, Ex. 63; 1 Jarm. Wills, 69, 119; 2 Curt. 334; 3 id. 752; 18 Ga. 396; 16 B. Mon. 102; 19 Mo. 609; 24 Pa. 502.

[2] See Adams v. Heisel, 31 F. R. 280 (1887).

[3] Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 165 (1831), Ewing, C. J.

[4] Keller v. Young, 78 Pa. 170 (1875).

[5] L. mercatus, traffic: mercari, to trade: merx, merchandise.

[6] See 2 Bl. Com. 37.

[7] New Orleans v. Morris, 3 Woods, 102, 107 (1877), cases, Billings, D. J.

[8] Caldwell v. City of Alton, 33 Ill. 419 (1864), Breese, Justice.

[9] Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 21 Barb. 296, 298 (1854), Marvin, J.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 449.

[2] Fawcett v. Osborn, 33 Ill. 496 (1863), Breese, J.

[3] See 2 Kent, 324; 1 Johns. 478; 8 Cow. 241; 33 Ill. 411.

[4] Crane v. London Dock Co., 117 E. C. L. *820, 818 (1864), Blackburn, J., Cockburn, C. J. See Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. *176 (1836); The Case of Market Overt, 2 Tud. L. C. *713–35, cases.

[5] Smith v. City of Newbern, 70 N. C. 18 (1874).

[6] [Hilliard Flume Co. v. Woods, 1 Wyom. 397 (1873), Peck, J.

[7] Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 343 (1843), Wells, J.

[8] [Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 125, 142 (1865),

"Market value," "actual market value," and "fair market value" mean the same. The only other possible meaning of the word "actual" is value in actual market, as contradistinguished from a hypothetical, notional, or ideal value, which may be affixed to an article in a particular case, for a particular reason. What men in the ordinary dealings of society, between man and man, would consider to be the fair actual market value of property, is the actual market value.[1] See further VALUE, Market.

Market stall. The purchase of a stall or stand in a public market confers an easement or exclusive right to occupy the stall, with its appendages, for the purposes of the market, and subject to the regulations thereof.[2]

Marketable. Vendible in market; merchantable; free from plausible or reasonable objection: as, a marketable title to land. Opposed, unmarketable.[3] See MERCHANTABLE; TITLE, 1, Marketable.

Municipal market. Consists in a place for the sale of provisions and articles of daily consumption; in convenient fixtures; in a system of police regulations, fixed market hours, provision made for lighting, watching, cleaning, for detecting false weights and unwholesome food, and other arrangements calculated to facilitate the intercourse and insure the honesty of buyer and seller; also, in proper officers to preserve order and enforce obedience to rules.[4]

Every municipal corporation that has power to establish ordinances to promote the general welfare, and preserve the peace, may fix the times or places of holding public markets for the sale of food, and make such other regulations concerning them as may conduce to the public interest. The right to establish a market includes the right to shift it from place to place, as the convenience or necessities of the people demand; but no right is implied to build it upon a public highway.[5]

The court of the clerk of market has been incident to every market, to punish misdemeanors therein, especially the use of false weights and measures.[6]

See ENGROSS, 2; FORESTALLING; INSPECTION, 1; MERCHANDISE; OTHERWISE; REGRATING; STAPLE; TOLL, 2.

Gwayne, J.; Cases of Champagne, 1 Bened. 251 (1867), Blatchford, J.

[1] Sherry Wine Case, 2 Bened. 267-68 (1868), Blatchford, J.

[2] Rose v. Mayor of Baltimore, 51 Md. 256, 268 (1878).

[3] 1 Pars. Contr. 584, cases.

[4] [City of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 10 Ohio, 261 (1840), Lane, C. J.

[5] Wartman v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 209 (1859), Black, C. J. See Gall v. City of Cincinnati, 18 Ohio St. 563, 567 (1869); Mayor of Savannah v. Wilson, 49 Ga 476 (1873).

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 275; 1 id. 274.

MARQUE,[1] LETTER OF. Permission granted by one ruler to make reprisals on the country of another ruler, with particular reference to the apprehension of the latter's subjects within the march or limit of the former's country.[2]

Marque and reprisal. Reprisal: taking in return; marque: passing the "frontier" to do so.

Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable by the law of nations whenever the subjects of one state are injured by those of another and justice is denied by the state to which the oppressor belongs. By virtue of such commission the bodies and goods of subjects of the offending state may be seized until satisfaction is made, wherever they happen to be found. The custom is dictated by nature herself; but in society, that the private sufferer should not be left to act as judge in his own cause, the sovereign power is called upon to determine when reprisals may be made.[3]

A private armed vessel or privateer is a vessel owned and officered by private persons, but acting under a commission from the state, usually called letters of marque: originally, letters of license to go across the boundary and make reprisals.[4]

"The Congress shall have Power . . to grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal."[5] "No State shall . . grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal."[6]

MARRIAGE.[7] 1. The private relation which includes the reciprocal duties of husband and wife.[8]

An engagement by which a single man and a single woman of sufficient discretion take each other for husband and wife.[9]

Also, the act or ceremony by which such engagement is solemnized.

As between the immediate parties, under the law, a civil contract; as between them and the State, a status or relation.[10]

"Matrimony" is the state into which the parties enter.

Although marriage is a sacred obligation, it is still a civil contract regulated by law.[11]

Statutes may regulate the mode of entering into

[1] F. marque, a boundary, limit, frontier.

[2] [Skeat, Etym. Dict.

[3] 1 Bl. Com. 258.

[4] Woolsey, Int. Law, § 127. See Wheat. Int. L. § 290.

[5] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 11.

[6] Ibid. sec. 10. See 2 Story, Const. § 1356.

[7] F. mariage; L. maritare; maritus, a husband. Compare MARITAL.

[8] [1 Bl. Com. 433.

[9] Milford v. Worcester, 7 Mass. *52 (1810), Parsons, Chief Justice.

[10] McCabe v. Berge, 89 Ind. 229 (1883). See also 44 Ala. 674; 30 Ga. 176; 9 Ind. 50; 19 id. 57; 4 Mo. 126; 50 N. Y. 184; 4 R. I. 101; 13 id. 96.

[11] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 165 (1878), Waite, Chief Justice.

the contract, but they do not confer the right. A marriage valid at common law is valid under a statute unless the statute contains express words of nullity.[1]

Marriage is an institution founded upon mutual consent. That consent is a contract, but sui juris. It supersedes all other contracts between the parties, and, with certain exceptions, it is inconsistent with the power to make new ones. It may be entered into by persons under the age of lawful majority, but it can neither be canceled nor altered at will. An entire failure of the power to fulfill by one party, as in the case of permanent insanity, does not release the other from the pre-existing obligation. Perhaps the only element of a "contract," in the ordinary acceptation, that exists, is that the consent of the parties is necessary to create the relation. Marriage is the most important transaction of life; it is the basis of the entire fabric of all civilized society.[2]

While marriage is often termed by text-writers and in decisions of courts a civil contract — generally to indicate that it must be founded upon agreement of the parties, and does not require any religious ceremony for its solemnization — it is something more than a mere contract. The consent of the parties is of course essential to its existence, but when the contract to marry is executed by the marriage, a relation between the parties is created which they cannot change. The relation once formed, the law steps in and holds the parties to various obligations and liabilities. It is an institution, in the maintenance of which in its purity the public is deeply interested.[3]

Being a contract, an action is maintainable for damages for "breach of promise" to marry, though the defendant is an infant. Either party may bring it. Anything accepted in satisfaction is a discharge. If the plaintiff is of bad character, the defendant may rescind.[4]

The breach of promise is not a tort, though it may resemble a tort in its consequences.[5]

Contracts in restraint or in procuration of marriage are void, as against sound policy.

Canonical disabilities which at common law made the contract voidable were: pre-contract; consanguinity or affinity within near degrees; corporal infirmities. Civil disabilities which made the contract void ab initio were: prior marriage; want of age — under fourteen in a boy, and twelve in a girl, but rendered valid by consent at age; want of consent of parent or guardian, which is statutory; want of reason.[6]

A clergyman, or a magistrate, need not be present. For civil purposes, reputation and cohabitation are sufficient evidence. But in adultery, bigamy, and criminal conversation, strict proof of marriage is necessary.[1] It is not presumed where cohabitation would be unlawful.[2] In Massachusetts, two persons cannot marry themselves, though their intent is good, witnesses are present, and a certificate has been taken taken out.[3]

To a valid marriage, consent is all that is necessary. If made per verba de præsenti, by words in the present tense, though not consummated by cohabitation, or per verba de futuro, by words of the future tense, and followed by consummation (q. v.), it amounts to a valid marriage, in the absence of civil regulations to the contrary. It may be proved by reputation, declarations, conduct and other circumstances usually accompanying the relation;[4] and by what would be proof where the marriage took place.[5]

Where no ceremonies are required, and no record is made to attest the marriage, some public recognition of it is necessary as evidence of its existence. The protection of the parties and their children and considerations of public policy alike require this recognition; and it may be made in any way which can be seen and known, such as living together as man and wife, treating and speaking of each other in the presence of third parties as being in that relation, and declaring the relation in documents executed by them while living together. From such recognition the reputation of being married will obtain among friends and acquaintances, which is of itself evidence of a persuasive character.[6]

In the absence of civil or statutory regulations, the mutual present assent to immediate marriage, by persons capable of assuming that relation, is sufficient without any formal solemnization. Such a contract constitutes a marriage at common law, and its validity will be sustained, unless some statute expressly declares it to be void. Furthermore, marriage, being a natural right, existing before the statutes, is favored by the law, and statutory regulations, if the language will permit, are to be construed as merely directory.

The legislature has power to prescribe reasonable regulations, and a provision punishing those who solemnize marriage contrary to statutory command is within legislative authority. Punishment may be inflicted for disregarding statutory conditions, without rendering the marriage itself void.

Most statutory regulations are wise and salutary. They give publicity to a contract which is of deep concern to the public, discourage deception and seduction, prevent illicit intercourse under the guise of matrimony, relieve from doubt the status of parties who live together as man and wife, and the record required

---

[1] Meister v. Moore, 96 U. S. 78 (1877), Strong, J. At common law, 12 Va. Law J. 1-13 (1888), cases.

[2] Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 147 (1874), Swayne, J.

[3] Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 210-11 (1888), cases, Field, Judge. See Bish. Mar. & D., ed 1864, § 3, cases.

[4] 1 Chitty, Bl. Com. 433; 18 Cent. Law J. 441-46 (1884), cases.

[5] Malone v. Ryan, 14 R. I. 617 (1884).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 434; 2 id. 202, 70.

[1] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 83-87, cases; Commonwealth v. Stump, 53 Pa. 132 (1866).

[2] Williams v. Williams, 46 Wis. 464 (1879); 49 Tex. 556.

[3] Commonwealth v. Munson, 127 Mass. 459 (1879), cases.

[4] Richard v. Brehm, 73 Pa. 144 (1873); Jewell v. Jewell, 1 How. 231, 233 (1843); 17 F. R. 16; 1 Bl. Com. 43.

[5] Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. 587 (1848).

[6] Maryland v. Baldwin, 112 U. S. 495 (1884), Field, J As to presumption of, see 31 Alb. Law J. 106-9, 127-30 (1885), cases.

to be made furnishes evidence of the legitimacy of their offspring.[1]

Marriage is a valuable consideration: no other is so much respected. While of the highest value, it is not reducible to a value which can be expressed in dollars.[2]

Articles of marriage. A memorandum between persons intending marriage as to settlement of property.

Furnishes the data for a formal settlement.

Marriage brokage or brokerage. The act of negotiating a marriage; also, compensation for such service.

Mixed marriage. A union between persons of different races; in particular, between a Caucasian and an African.

A State may forbid whites and blacks to intermarry. The XIVth Amendment does not prohibit such legislation. The relation is a privilege belonging to persons as members of society, and as citizens of the States in which they reside.[3]

The rule that if valid where celebrated, then valid everywhere, does not apply to a marriage involving polygamy or incest, nor to those prohibited from motives of public policy.[4]

Marriage license. An official permit to marry.

In Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Washington Territory, and perhaps in other States and Territories, persons intending to be married must apply for a license, or cause notice of their intention to be entered of record in a designated public office. Substantial compliance with the provisions of such laws is generally all that is required.

Marriage portion. The property which a woman brings to her husband at marriage. See DOWRY.

Marriage settlement. A conveyance whereby, in consideration of marriage, property is secured as a provision for the wife, children, or husband. See SETTLE, 3.

See BIGAMY; COHABIT; DIVORCE; DOWER; GRETNA GREEN; HUSBAND; INCEST; JACTITATION; RELIGION; SOLEMNIZE.

[1] State v. Walker, 36 Kan. 303-4, 307 (1887), Johnston, J.: Teter v. Teter, 101 Ind. 129 (1884); Beverlin v. Beverlin, 29 W. Va. 735 (1887), cases. As to foreign marriages, see 27 Cent. Law J. 189-86 (1888), cases.

[2] Prewit v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 24 (1880), cases; 7 Pet. 398; 5 Allen, 458.

[3] Exp. Kinney, 3 Hughes, 9, 17-18 (1879); Ex rel. Hobbs, 1 Woods, 537 (1871); Exp. Francois, 3 id. 367 (1879); Green v. State, 58 Ala. 192-97 (1877); 59 id. 60.

[4] Kinney's Case, 30 Gratt. 865 (1878), cases; Greenbow v. James, 80 Va. 636, 639-41 (1885), cases; Story, Confl. L. § 113; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 545.

2. In feudal law, a power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his ward in matrimony.

While the infant was in ward, the guardian could tender her a suitable match, without disparagement or inequality. If the infant declined the match, she forfeited, as the value of the marriage, as much as a jury would assess, or as any one would bona fide give for such an alliance.[1]

MARRIED WOMAN. See HUSBAND; WOMAN.

MARSHAL.[2] 1, n. (1) In old English law, the title of several officers of different grades and powers, judicial or executive.

The lord-marshal presided in the court of chivalry; the knight-marshal had judicial authority within the king's palace; the marshal of the king's bench was prison-keeper to that court; the marshal of the exchequer had the custody of debtors of the revenue; the marshal to the judge of assize swore in the grand jury. And the marshalsea was the seat or court of the marshal of the king's house, instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants.[3]

In Connecticut, the executive officer of the courts is first mentioned (1649) as the "marshal." At the May session of the General Court in 1698, it was enacted that the "marshal of the colony" be called the High Sheriff, and the "county marshal" the County Sheriff. Formerly, and within the memory of persons still living, the sheriff was the marshal at all public processions.[4]

2. An officer of the United States whose chief duty is to execute the processes of its courts.

He and his deputies have in each State the same power in executing the laws of the United States as the sheriffs and their deputies in such States may have in executing the laws thereof.[5]

He is appointed for a term of four years, for each district. He chooses his own deputies, but they are removable by the circuit or district court. He attends these courts, and executes their lawful precepts directed to him under authority of the United States. He may command necessary assistance in executing the laws.[6]

He cannot perform all his duties without the aid of other persons as deputies, general and special. A statute conferring upon him the powers of a sheriff does not take away powers already vested.[7]

When process, issued under a particular law, as, a revenue law, is lawfully issued to him for service, in executing it he acts under the authority of that law.

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 70.

[2] F. mare-schal, a horse-servant, a groom; later, a title of honor,— Skeat.

[3] See 3 Bl. Com. 37, 39, 75, 76, 285.

[4] See Appendix to 53 Conn. 609-10.

[5] R. S. § 788.

[6] R. S. §§ 776-83, 943-44.

[7] The Gorgas, 10 Bened. 463, 471 (1879): Act 1861, ch. 25, § 7: R. S. 788; 10 F. R. 80?; 12 id. 855.

And so as to all persons who assist him in the performance of his official duty.[1]

The marshal, in preserving arrested property, acts as a bailee, and is responsible to parties interested for its proper care. In the absence of a statute or rule of court, he should be paid his fees when he delivers the property to the person entitled to it.[2]

The clerks employed by the marshal to keep his accounts are not officers of the court, and so are entitled to fees and mileage if used as witnesses for the Government. Unless a deputy marshal, who is an officer, be actually engaged in waiting upon the court, he is entitled to per diem and mileage if summoned as a witness for the Government.[3]

See COSTS; EXECUTION, 8; FEE, 2, Docket; JURISDICTION, 2, Concurrent; SHERIFF.

(3) In the western and southwestern States, an officer of the peace, appointed by authority of a city or borough, who holds himself in readiness to answer such calls as fall within the general duties of a constable or sheriff.

"The marshal elected for the county of St. Louis shall have the same power, be subject to the like proceedings, and incur the same liabilities, on all process placed in his hands, as the sheriff of the county has, and is subject to, in similar cases."[4]

Such marshal is elected in the same manner as the sheriff of that county, for a term of two years. He gives bond to the State. He attends on the criminal and the probate courts, and executes all processes issued by them, or by a judge or clerk thereof, or by the county court of St. Louis.

2, v. To arrange or rank in order.

Marshaling assets, funds, mortgages, securities. Such arrangement of different funds, under administration, as will enable all the parties having equities thereon to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding the intervening interests, liens, or other claims of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a portion of the funds.[5]

The principle is that he who has a right to resort to two funds, in one of which alone another party has a subsidiary lien, shall be compelled to exhaust the one to which the other cannot resort, before coming upon the one in which both have an interest.[6]

The equitable principle that where a creditor has a lien on two funds in the hands of the same debtor, and another creditor has a lien only on one of the funds, the former may be compelled to levy his debt out of the fund to which the latter cannot resort; or, what is tantamount thereto, if the former takes his money out of the fund in which alone the latter has a lien, he may, to that extent, be subrogated to the rights of the former as against the other fund. Both funds must be in the hands of the common debtor of both creditors.[1] See Marshaling Liens.

Marshaling boundaries. See BOUNDARY.

Marshaling charities. The doctrine that where there are funds of pure and mixed personalty applicable to the payment of debts and charitable legacies, the latter being charged upon the pure personalty and the debts upon the remainder of the fund, and there is a deficiency of assets, the charity legacies will be held to have failed in the proportion of the mixed to the pure personalty.[2]

Marshaling liens. The doctrine that where realty, bound by a judgment or a mortgage, has been alienated in separate parcels to various persons at different times, such parcels may be subjected to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation.

The first purchaser has a right to suppose that the part he leaves with the mortgagor will be first subjected to the payment of the mortgage; and a second purchaser, who buys all or a part of the residue, should not be placed in a better position than that of his grantor.[3] See Marshaling Assets.

Marshaling words. See CONSTRUCTION.

MARSHALSEA. See MARSHAL, 1 (1).

MARTIAL.[4] Belonging to war, or to an army or a navy.

Court-martial. A tribunal which has jurisdiction of offenses against the law military by soldiers in the army, navy, or militia.

In the strictest sense, a court of justice, organized in pursuance of statutory regula-

[1] Davis v. South Carolina, 107 U. S. 600 (1882). As to his duties and responsibilities, see Lammon v. Feusier, 111 id. 17 (1884); Covell v. Heyman, ib. 176 (1884); 3 Wall. 334; 10 id. 308; 109 U. S. 216, 219.

[2] The Georgeanna, 31 F. R. 405 (1887).

[3] Exp. Burdell, 32 F. R. 681 (1887); United States v. Meigs, 95 U. S. 748 (1877).

[4] Missouri Statutes, sec. 26.

[5] [1 Story, Eq. §§ 558, 633.

[6] Nat. Savings Bank v. Creswell, 100 U. S. 641 (1879), Miller, J

[1] Exp. Kendall, 17 Ves. *523 (1811), Eldon, Ld. C. See also Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 308 (1803); 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. *78–111; 2 White & T. id. 228–358, cases; 25 Cent. Law J. 228–31 (1887), cases; 11 Biss. 294; 15 F. R. 170; 32 Pa. 108; 77 Va. 248; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 558–64, 633–45; Bisph. Eq. § 341; 1 Pomeroy, Eq. §§ 410, 390; 3 id. § 1414.

[2] [2 Story, Eq. § 1180 a. See Philanthropic Society v. Kemp, 4 Beav. 581 (1841).

[3] Nat. Savings Bank v. Creswell, 100 U. S. 640–49 (1879), cases.

[4] L. mars, god of war.

tion, and taking cognizance of the duties which the citizen assumes when he enters into the military service of the country.[1]

In cases fitted for its determination, its judgment is final, conclusive, and authoritative.[1]

Courts-martial derive their jurisdiction from and are regulated by an act of Congress, in which the crimes that may be committed, the manner of charging the accused, and of trial, and the punishments, are expressed in terms; or they get jurisdiction by a fair deduction from the definition of the crime that it comprehends, and that Congress meant to subject to punishment, or from the practice of the courts-martial of the nations generally. If such a court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the charge it has been regularly convened to try, or if it inflicts a punishment forbidden by law, the civil courts, at the instance of the aggrieved, may inquire into the want of jurisdiction, and give redress by habeas corpus.[2]

Their jurisdiction extends to the trial and punishment of acts of officers which tend to bring disgrace upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, in a civil position, in a social relation, or in private business.[3]

Any such court is a court of limited and special jurisdiction. When the object of its creation has been accomplished it is dissolved. To give effect to a sentence, it must appear affirmatively and unequivocally that the court was legally constituted, that it had jurisdiction, that all statutory regulations governing its proceedings had been complied with, and that its sentence was conformable to law. There are no presumptions in its favor as to these matters. . . The sentence of a general court-martial, in time of peace, to the effect that a commissioned officer be cashiered (dismissed from service), is inoperative until approved by the President in person; and that he approved it must be stated in positive terms, and not be left to be inferred argumentatively.[4]

Courts-martial are spoken of as general, regimental, and garrison. Those for the regulation of the militia are held in the States, and, in the main, resemble the courts provided for the army of the United States.[5] See JUDGE ADVOCATE.

Martial law. The law of military necessity in the actual presence of war, administered by the general of the army.

Of necessity it is arbitrary, but it must be obeyed.[1]

It is the will of the general who commands the army. It supersedes all existing civil laws; and is regulated by a known system or code of laws. The commander is the legislator, judge, and executioner. There may or may not be a hearing upon the charges, at his will. This law is resorted to only in cases of necessity; which is to be shown affirmatively by the commander who assumes to exercise it.[2]

In time of insurrection it cannot be applied to citizens in States in which the courts are open and their process unobstructed.[3]

For any abuse of the authority, the officer ordering and the person committing the act may be liable as trespassers.[4]

Martial law is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its decisions; in reality it is no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as law. The necessity of order and discipline in the army alone gives it countenance; and therefore it is not permitted in time of peace, when the courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land.[5]

"Martial law" is exercised over all classes of persons indiscriminately, in the actual presence of war. "Military law" governs persons in the military service only, in time of peace as well as in time of war, by regulations previously defined; and is a permanent branch of the law of the land. See MILITARY; WAR.

MASONIC LODGES. See ASSOCIATION, page 85, note 4.

MASSES. Whether gifts to a Roman Catholic church for paying for masses are legal "charities," has been variously decided.

A devise to a church to be devoted to paying for the repose of the testator's soul is not a devise to a "charitable or religious use."[6]

Such a devise or bequest is certainly a "religious use." If, therefore, in Pennsylvania, it is made within one month before death, it falls within the prohibition of the act of April 26, 1855.[7]

"Masses are religious ceremonials or observances, . . and come within the religious or pious uses which are upheld as public charities." In the case cited, the language of the will was that the residue of the estate should be disposed of "for charitable purposes, masses," etc.[8]

A bequest of all the residue of a testator's estate to his executors "for the purpose of having prayers offered for the repose of my soul, the souls of my fam-

---

[1] Records of Courts-Martial, 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 138-89 (1865); Approval of Court-Martial Sentence, 15 id. 297-303 (1877), note.

[2] Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. 82-83 (1857), cases, Wayne, J. See also Barrett v. Hopkins, 2 McCrary, 131 (1881); Re White, 17 F. R. 723 (1883); Keyes v. United States, 109 U. S. 340 (1883), cases.

[3] Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 183 (1886), Gray, J.

[4] Runkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 555-57 (1887), cases, Waite, C. J.; Articles of War, No. 65, 2 St. 359, 367, c. 29.

[5] See, as to the army, R. S. § 1342, arts. 61-121; as to the navy, § 1624, art. 8; as to the militia, §§ 1649, 1658.

[1] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U. S. 526 (1875), Waite, C. J.: s. c. 11 Ct. Cl. 439.

[2] Re Egan, 5 Blatch. 321-23 (1866), Nelson, J.

[3] Exp. Milligan, 4 Wall. 107, 123, 127 (1866).

[4] See Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 128 (1851).

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 413. See 7 How. 59-88; 15 id. 115; 16 id. 144; 8 Op. Att.-Gen. 365-74; 39 Ala. 658; 44 Ill. 153; 21 Ind. 377; 2 Story, Const. § 1342; North Am. Rev., Oct 1861; 1 Lieber, Civ. Lib. 130.

[6] Re Estate of Power, 35 Leg. Int. 68 (Pa., 1878).

[7] Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142, 146 (1880).

[8] Schouler, Petitioner, 134 Mass. 427 (1883).

fly, and the souls of all others in purgatory," is invalid, for want of a defined beneficiary.[1] See CHARITY, 2.

MASTER.[2] A person authorized to control another or others in some relation, or charged with the execution of a service as an assistant to a court of equity.

1. He to whom an apprentice is indentured.

"Master and servant" expresses the relation between the parties. See further APPRENTICE.

2. He who hires another to serve him as a domestic or as a common laborer; an employer.[3]

"Master and servant" expresses the relation in private life, founded in convenience, whereby a man calls in the assistance of others when his own skill and labor is not sufficient to answer the cares incumbent upon him.[4] See further SERVANT.

3. Any person having the chief charge or command of the employment and navigation of a vessel.[4] See SHIP, 2.

4. An officer of a court of chancery to whom was referred a bill alleged to contain scandalous or impertinent matter.[5]

An officer whose duty was to make inquiries, when so directed by the court, into matters which, from the constitution of the court, it could not conveniently, without assistance, make for itself, and to report to the court his findings or conclusions.[6]

Clerks, commissioners, and referees now perform many matters formerly entrusted to masters. Their chief duties are to make inquiries, take accounts, sell estates, and adjust other matters, before there can be a final disposition of a cause.[7]

A master is appointed in an equity case to sift the testimony and to collate and report the facts. He is both an examiner and master. Having heard the witnesses and familiarized himself with the case, he is competent to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and to judge of the evidence. By his being fully possessed of the case, the dispute is likely to be confined to the real grounds of the controversy.[8]

The document exhibiting his findings and conclusions is called his "report;" the office of which is to present the case to the court in such a manner that intelligent action may be had; and it is this action that finally determines the rights of the parties.[9]

He must follow the directions contained in the order of his appointment.[1]

The court will review the report only as to matters specified in exceptions filed thereto, and the parts of the evidence particularly referred to.[2] It may set aside the report for manifest error in law or fact, or recommit it, if the means of correction are furnished.[3]

When, by reason of the large amount of equity business, it is impossible for a court to examine every case in detail, its attention may be brought directly to the points of the contest by a preliminary hearing before a master, who can take time to examine the case thoroughly, and report upon it intelligently and accurately. The effect is to eliminate what is undisputed, and to develop the true points of contest. The proceeding before the master develops the rights and liabilities of the parties for the court's consideration; the party dissenting from the master's views bringing the points into review by exceptions. What shall be referred to a master, general or special, is a matter in the discretion of the court. . . Properly speaking, no report is conclusive. That would be to make the judgment of an officer performing an ancillary service superior to the judgment of the court itself. When he reports facts directly proved by the witnesses, the court will give his report great weight, because of his superior opportunities for judging of the credibility of the witnesses and the effect of their testimony. But when the fact is a deduction merely from the facts reported by him, his conclusion is simply a result of reasoning, of which the court is as competent to judge as he. Hence, the report is neither a decision nor an infallible guide, but a serviceable instrumentality to aid the court in performing its own functions.[4] See FINAL.

The compensation of masters, whose functions are judicial, may be measured by the standard of judicial salaries.[5] See COSTS; FEE, 2.

Master of the rolls. One of the judges of the English court of chancery.

He formerly had the custody of the rolls of all patents and grants which passed the great seal, and of the records of chancery. He presided in the Rolls Court, as assistant to the lord chancellor. His jurisdiction is now transferred to the supreme court of judicature.[6]

MATE. See MARINER; SHIP, 2.

MATERIA. L. Substance: matter, subject, subject-matter.

In pari materia. Upon like (equal) matter; in regard to the same matter.

[1] Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, 316 (1888), cases. See generally 32 Alb. Law J. 367-70 (1885), cases.

[2] F. maister: L. magister: magnus, great. Compare MAGISTRATE.

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 423.

[4] R. S. § 2768; 20 Wend. 132; 41 How. Pr. 73.

[5] [3 Bl. Com. 442, 450.

[6] [Holthouse's Law Dict.]

[7] Beebe v. Russell, 19 How. 285-86 (1856).

[8] Backus's Appeal, 58 Pa. 192 (1868), Agnew, J.

[9] North Carolina R. Co. v. Swasey, 23 Wall. 410 (1874), Waite, C. J. See also Hatch v. Indianapolis, &c. R Co., 11 Biss. 138 (1882).

[1] Felch v. Hooper, 4 Cliff. 494 (1878).

[2] Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat. 126 (1826).

[3] Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Windsor Manuf. Co., 17 Blatch. 21 (1879); Kisor's Appeal, 62 Pa. 435 (1869).

[4] Phillips's Appeal, 68 Pa. 137 (1871), Agnew, J., Sproull's Appeal, 71 id. 137 (1872); Clark's Appeal, 62 id. 451 (1869); Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 149 (1888)

[5] Middleton v. Bankers' & Merchants' Tel. Co., 32 F R. 524 (1887).

[6] 1 Spence, Eq. *357-60.

Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together. Such statutes relate to the same person or thing or the same classes. They are usually general laws made at different times, in reference to the same subject.[1]

The rule does not apply where the language of an act is free from uncertainty.[2]

The rule applies to a section of a statute construed with reference to prior statutes;[3] to sections of a revised code;[4] and to constitutional provisions having a common purpose.[5]

The legislature is presumed to have had former statutes before it, and to have been acquainted with their judicial construction.[6]

Where divers statutes relate to the same thing, all are to be considered, in construing any one of them.[6]

MATERIAL. 1, n. Any article used in building or repairing houses, ships, etc.[7] More often, materials.

Material-man. One who has furnished any merchandise or stuff for the erection or repair of a building, vessel, or other structure. See CASE, Mixed; LABOR, 1; LIEN, Mechanic's.

2, adj. Of the substance; essential; important. Opposed, immaterial: formal; not vital; unnecessary: as, a material or immaterial — alteration, amendment, averment or allegation, fact, issue, matter, party, representation, testimony, witness, qq. v. See also MATTER.

MATERNAL. See ANCESTOR; CONSANGUINITY; LINE, 3.

MATHEMATICAL. See EVIDENCE.

MATRICIDE. See HOMICIDE.

MATRIMONY. Marriage, as a relation or status.

Matrimonial causes. In England, certain suits, involving rights relating to marriage, which have constituted a branch of ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

As, suits for jactitation of marriage, for restitution of conjugal rights, for judicial separation and dissolution, for alimony.

By the Divorce Act of 1857, these causes passed under the cognizance of a court created by the act, and are included in the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice. See DIVORCE.

MATRONS, JURY OF. See VENTER, 1.

[1] See 7 Conn. 456; 9 Barb. 311; 10 Oreg. 62; 97 U. S. 28; 101 id. 281, 771.

[2] Barnes v. The Railroads, 17 Wall. 302 (1872).

[3] Roberts v. Briscoe, 44 Ohio St. 600 (1886), cases.

[4] Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 306 (1879).

[5] Steele v. Lineberger, 72 Pa. 241 (1872).

[6] United States v. Freeman, 3 How. 564 (1845).

[7] See 71 Pa. 298, 36 Wis. 29.

MATTER. 1. Whatever is perceptible by the senses; any material. See MATERIA; MATERIAL; PATENT, 2.

2. The subject of legal action, consideration, complaint or defense.

The fact or facts constituting the whole or a part of a ground of action or defense.[1]

3. Some substantial or essential thing; opposed to form,[2] q. v.

Material matter. Anything essential to the understanding or determination of an issue or proceeding. Immaterial matter. Anything not of importance to an adjudication.

In a pleading, an "immaterial matter" is anything stated therein which, if established on the trial, would not entitle a party to, or aid him in obtaining, the relief demanded, or in sustaining the defense pleaded.[3]

Matter in controversy. See CONTROVERSY.

Matter in deed. See DEED, 1; ESTOPPEL.

Matter in dispute. See DISPUTE.

Matter in issue. See ISSUE, 3.

Matter in mitigation. See AGGRAVATION.

Matter in pais. See PAIS; DEED, 1.

Matter of aggravation. See AGGRAVATION.

Matter of avoidance. See CONFESSION.

Matter of course. See COURSE, 2.

Matter of fact. See FACT.

Matter of form. See FORM; CONCENSUS, Tollit, etc.

Matter of law. See LAW; FACT.

Matter of record. See RECORD; ESTOPPEL.

Matter of substance. See FORM.

New matter. In pleading, matter not previously alleged or pleaded in avoidance.[4]

"New matter constituting a defense" is not pleaded by averments which simply deny the allegations of the complaint, but only when they constitute a statement of facts the proof of which avoids the legal conclusion otherwise to be drawn from the statement of facts in the complaint. It is in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance.[5]

Special matter. Facts of a particular nature which a defendant, under a plea of [1] Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 332 (1862), Perkins, J.

[2] Douglas v. Beasley, 40 Ala. 148 (1866).

[3] Johns v. Pattee, 55 Iowa, 667 (1881), Seevers, J.

[4] See 3 Bl. Com. 309, 313.

[5] Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 234 (1881): Pomeroy, Rem. §§ 690-92.

the general issue, may give in evidence in his defense.

The character of the matter is indicated in a notice served upon the plaintiff.

Subject-matter. See SUBJECT, 2 (1).

MATURE; MATURITY.[1] 1. In a will, may import maturity of mind and character, the combined result of age and education.[2]

2. Applied to bonds or similar instruments, and to negotiable instruments generally, refer to the time fixed for payment,—the termination of the period they have to run.[3] Opposed to immature, immaturity. See DUE; NEGOTIATE, 2.

"At maturity" includes the whole day, unless expressly limited to a certain hour.[4]

When a promissory note payable on a certain day bears interest "after maturity," interest should be computed from the day fixed for payment, not from the last day of grace.[5]

MAXIM.[6] "A proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proof, argument, or discourse. . . A conclusion of reason."

So called quia maxima ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, et quod maxime omnibus probetur,[7] because its value is the highest and its authority the most reliable, and because it is accepted by all persons as the very highest.

The authority of the maxims which are part of the common law rests entirely upon general reception; and the only method of proving that this or that maxim is a rule of the common law is by showing that it has always been the custom to observe it. These maxims are known, and their validity determined, by the judges of the courts.[8]

The principles and axioms of law, which are general propositions flowing from abstracted reason, and not accommodated to times or men, are wisely deposited in the breasts of the judges to be applied to such facts as come properly ascertained before them.[9] See LAW, Common.

When a principle has been so long practiced and so universally acknowledged as to become a maxim, it is obligatory as part of the law.[10] See EQUITY, p. 409.

The Latin maxims in this book will be found translated and explained under the word of most importance in each maxim, with cross-references to and from corresponding English words.

MAY. Though primarily importing permission, is often used, in construing statutes, in the sense of "shall" or "must."

Where public interest or private right requires that a thing should be done, "may" is construed to mean "must."[1]

Equivalent to "must" or "shall" when important rights of an accused person depend upon it, and when the context and general purpose of a statute require it.[2]

Construed "must" in all cases where the legislature meant to impose a positive and absolute duty, and not merely a discretionary power. The ordinary meaning of the language must be presumed intended, unless that would defeat the object of the provision.[3]

But it is only where it is necessary to give effect to the clear policy and intention of the legislature that such liberty can be taken with the plain words of statutes.[4]

When power is given to public officers, and the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language used, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory.[5] See REQUIRE.

May be. The expression, in a statute, that "the county court in which any part of the route of the said railroad may be," may subscribe to the stock, is to be construed with reference to the situation of the subject-matter. Used of a railroad already built, "may be" would be equivalent to "exists," "is built," "in operation," or the like. But referring to a road not yet built, not located or surveyed, nor organized, it must have a different meaning.[6]

May have. Possessions that a testator "may have" do not necessarily refer to future time.[7]

"May have" and "may have been" are presumably retrospective.[8]

---

[1] L. maturus, completed as to period; ripe.

[2] Condict v. King, 13 N. J. E. 380 (1861).

[3] United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 91 U. S. 85 (1875), Davis, J.

[4] Leigh v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co., 26 La. An. 438 (1874).

[5] Wheeless v. Williams, 62 Miss. 369 (1884).

[6] L. maxima (sententia), the greatest sentiment: an opinion of the greatest weight or authority.

[7] Coke, Litt. 67 a, 11 a.

[8] 1 Bl. Com. 68.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 379. See 15 West. Jur. 337; Broom, and Wharton, on Maxims.

[10] Hendrickson v. Evans, 25 Pa. 444 (1855).

[1] People v. Supervisors, 68 N. Y. 119 (1877); People v. Supervisors, 51 id. 406-7 (1873), cases.

[2] State v. Neuner, 49 Conn. 233 (1881), cases; Commonwealth v. Smith, 111 Mass. 407 (1873).

[3] Thompson v. Lessee of Carroll, 22 How. 434 (1859), Grier, J.

[4] Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 64 (1828), Story, J.

[5] Supervisors v. United States, 4 Wall. 446-47 (1866), cases, Swayne, J.; Jones v. Statesville, 97 N. C. 86 (1887). See also Leighton v. Maury, 76 Va. 870 (1882); Exp. Lester, 77 id. 673 (1883); 9 How. 259; 5 Wall. 705; 95 U. S. 170; 17 F. R. 814; 2 Flip. 373; 7 Ct. Cl. 334; 12 Ala. 698; 28 id. 28; 45 Cal. 696; 70 Ill. 590; 77 id. 273; 7 Ind. 122; 18 id. 27; 53 Me. 438; 61 id. 566; 107 Mass. 197; 125 id. 201; 141 id. 104; 11 Minn. 101; 35 id. 186; 39 Mo. 521; 48 id. 167, 390; 3 Neb. 224; 4 id. 150; 11 Nev. 260; 39 N. H. 435; 27 N. J. L. 407; 24 N. Y. 495; 52 id. 27; 91 id. 537; 81 Pa. 349; 8 Phila. 625; 1 Wash. T. 51; 9 Wis. 309; 36 id. 498; 64 id. 347; 73 E. C. L. 755.

[6] County of Calloway v. Foster, 93 U. S. 573 (1876).

[7] Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. *442 (1812).

[8] Heeney v. Brooklyn Benevolent Society, 33 Barb. 363 (1861).

May in anywise. Not always the same as "may by any possibility," or "may under any circumstances."[1]

May or may not give. Where a statute provides that for willful neglect, punitive damages may or may not be given in the discretion of the jury, it is error to instruct a jury that they "should" give punitive damages if they found willful neglect.[2]

But an erroneous instruction that if the defendant was guilty of willful neglect the jury "ought" to award punitive damages, is not cured by another instruction that they "could" find any sum as punitive damages.[3]

May pay. In an agreement for re-insurance, may mean "liable to pay."[4]

May receive. An agreement to credit on a note any amount the payee may receive, may refer to money thereafter received.[5]

May saw. An agreement to sell all the plank one may saw during a winter was held not to bind the defendant to saw any plank at all.[6]

"May summon" the master of a vessel to show cause why process should not issue against the vessel, means shall be at liberty, is permitted, to summon him.[7]

MAYHEM.[8] Violently depriving another of the use of a member proper for his defense in fight.[9]

Violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him the less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or to annoy [disable] his adversary.[10]

A battery, attended with the aggravating circumstances that the party injured is forever disabled from making as good a defense against future external injuries as he otherwise might have done. Among the defensive members are not only arms and legs, but a finger, an eye, a foretooth, and some others; not, however, a jaw-tooth, the ear, or the nose, the loss of which does not weaken. The injury is also a crime, being an atrocious breach of the king's peace, and tending to deprive him of the aid of a subject.[11] See DURESS.

[1] Gregory v. Kanouse, 11 N. J. L. 63 (1829).

[2] Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Ky. 138 (1885).

[3] Kentucky Central R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 127 (1885).

[4] Fame Ins. Co.'s Appeal, 83 Pa. 405 (1877); 30 Leg. Int. 60.

[5] Greene v. Robinson, 41 Conn. 470 (1874).

[6] Wemple v. Stewart, 22 Barb. 160 (1856).

[7] The Shelbourne, 30 F. R. 52 (1887).

[8] F. mehaing, abatement of strength from hurt. See MAIM.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 121.

[10] 4 Bl. Com. 205.

[11] 3 Bl. Com. 121; 4 id. 205; 1 id. 130; 8 Port. (Ala.) 472; 10 Ala. 928; 62 Cal. 542; 5 Ga. 404; 7 Mass. 245; 17 Wend. 392; 3 Binn. 595; 6 S. & R. 224; 4 Wis. 168; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1001; Whart. Cr. Pr. § 260, n; R. S. § 1342, art. 58; 8 C. & P. 167.

MAYOR.[1] The chief or executive magistrate of a city.[2]

His principal duty is to enforce the laws of the city. He may also preside over the mayor's court, which has jurisdiction, concurrent with the courts of other committing magistrates, over offenses perpetrated within the city limits, and of special matters given by statute. See MAGISTRATE.

McKEAN'S TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

MEADOW. A tract which lies above the shore of a sea or stream, and is overflowed by spring and extraordinary tides only, and yields grasses which are good for hay.[3]

A "sedge-flat" is not a meadow.[4]

The statutes which have long existed in many States, authorizing the majority of the owners of adjacent meadow or swamp lands to have commissioners appointed to drain and improve the whole tract, and to assess the expense upon all the proprietors in proportion to the benefits received, have often been upheld as reasonable regulations.[5] See AQUA, Currit, etc.

MEANDER-LINE.[6] In surveying, a line which follows the course of a stream.

The meander-lines run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers are run, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as a means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction.[6]

MEANING. See CONSTRUCTION; INNUENDO; PURPORT.

MEANS. 1. Agency, instrumentality. 2. Property, resources; money.

In patent law, see PROCESS, 2.

Attempt by other means. In a statute punishing setting fire to property, contemplates physical means.[7]

[1] F. maire: L. maiorem: majorem, greater. "Mayor" is the Spanish spelling,— Skeat. In 1189, Rich. I substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. See 25 Wend. 50; 4 Bl. Com. 413.

[2] Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 577 (1859).

[3] Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 429 (1867).

[4] Head v. Amoskeag Manuf. Co., 113 U. S. 22 (1885), cases; Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 id. 610 (1885), cases. See Neponset Meadow Co. v. Tileston, 133 Mass. 189 (1882).

In Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488 (1887), the Supreme Court reviewed the legislation of Congress respecting swamp lands, the departmental construction of that legislation, and the decisions of the court and of the highest courts of many of the States concerning such legislation.

[5] From the river Meander, in Asia Minor,— 23 N. Y. 500, infra.

[6] St. Paul, &c. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 272 (1868). See also Jones v. Pettibone, 2 Wis. 307 (1853); The Seneca Nation v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 500 (1861); Bristol v. Carroll County, 95 Ill. 85 (1880).

[7] McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 53 (1874).

Means necessary to an end. Any means calculated to produce the end.[1] See NECESSARY.

Means of satisfaction in hand. Referring to a creditor, property or money of the debtor in the creditor's possession, which he may lawfully appropriate to the debt.[2] See AVAILABLE.

Means of support. May embrace all the resources from which the necessaries and comforts of life are or may be supplied, such as lands, goods, salaries, wages, or other sources of income.[3]

MEASURE. See WEIGHT, 1; INSPECTION, 1; MORE OR LESS.

Measure of damages. The rule by which damage is to be estimated.[4] See DAMAGES.

MEAT. See CURED.

MECHANIC. An artisan or artist.[5]

A workman employed in shaping and uniting materials, such as wood or metal, into some kind of structure, machine, or other object, requiring the use of tools.[6]

He is usually, perhaps always, a manufacturer; but a manufacturer is not always a mechanic. A miller is not a mechanic.[6]

Nor is a photographer.[6]

Nor is a dentist; and his tools, therefore, are not the "tools of a mechanic."[7]

A dentist, in one sense, is a professional man; in another sense his calling is mainly mechanical and the tools he employs are used in mechanical operations.[6]

See BUILDER; LIEN; TOOL; TRADE.

MEDIATE. Remotely related; indirectly connected; incident to some other; opposed to immediate: as, mediate — descent, powers, qq. v. See IMMEDIATE.

MEDICAL. See MEDICINE.

MEDICINE. The practice of medicine includes the application of medicines and drugs for the purpose of curing, mitigating or alleviating bodily diseases; while the practice of "surgery" is limited to manual operations usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances.[8]

One who undertakes to cure disease by mere manipulation is not engaged in practicing either medicine or surgery.[1]

"Allopathic practice" of medicine means the ordinary method commonly adopted by the great body of learned physicians, taught in their institutions, established by their highest authorities, and accepted by the larger portion of the community. By "eclectic practice" is intended a different system, unusual and eccentric, not countenanced by the class referred to, but characterized by them as spurious and denounced as dangerous.[2]

See DRUGGIST; DRUGS; LIQUOR; PHYSICIAN.

Medicine-chest. All vessels over a given size are required, by acts of Congress, to keep a medicine-chest.[3]

Medical. Pertaining to medicine, or the study or practice of medicine.

Medical adviser. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 1.

Medical attendance. Is not restricted to professional medical services rendered; will include nursing, as, within a statute for the relief of paupers.[4]

A medical attendant is one to whom the care of a sick person has been intrusted.[5]

Medical college. Is not a "benevolent, charitable, scientific, or missionary society."[6]

The courts cannot be too scrupulous in examining the asserted rights of colleges to graduate matriculants with the degree of doctor of medicine.[7]

The power of the legislature to prescribe reasonable conditions calculated to exclude from the profession persons unfitted to discharge its duties cannot be questioned. Statutes for the accomplishment of this purpose, which have been common, generally require that the practitioner shall be a graduate of an institution for medical instruction, or shall have a certificate of qualification from some recognized body of men learned in the science, and shall be of good moral character.[8] See EMERGENCY.

Medical evidence. Testimony furnished by physicians or surgeons, or standard treatises prepared by them. See EXPERT; SCIENCE.

Medical examination. See INSPECTION, 2, Of person.

Medical jurisprudence. Treats of matters

---

[1] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 414 (1819); 35 N. J. L. 546.

[2] Perrine v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 29 Ala. 576 (1858); Knighton v. Cuery, 62 id. 408 (1878).

[3] Schneider v. Hosier, 21 Ohio St. 112 (1871), McIlvaine, J.; Meidel v. Anthis, 71 Ill. 246 (1874), Breese, C. J. And see Sharpley v. Brown, 43 Hun, 375 (1887).

[4] See Sedgwick, Damages, 29.

[5] Berks County v. Bertolet, 13 Pa. 525 (1850), Rogers, Judge.

[6] Story v. Walker, 11 Lea, 517 (1883), Cooper, J.

[7] Whitcomb v. Reid, 31 Miss. 569 (1856).

[8] Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 337 (1868), Cooley, C. J.

[9] Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun, 633-35 (1881).

[1] Smith v. Lane, ante.

[2] Bradbury v. Bardin, 34 Conn. 453 (1867), McCurdy, J.; Same v. Same, 35 id. 581 (1869). Bardin had falsely represented that his practice, made the subject of a sale, was regular allopathic.

[3] 1 Story, Laws, 106; 2 id. 971; R. S. §§ 4569-70.

[4] Scott v. Winneshiek County, 52 Iowa, 580 (1879).

[5] Edington v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 5 Hun, 6 (1875).

[6] People v. Cothran, 27 Hun, 345 (1882).

[7] People v. Gunn, 30 Hun, 325 (1883).

[8] State v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 327 (1884), cases.

requiring medical knowledge and skill, as well as knowledge of law; forensic medicine.

Medical lectures. See LECTURES.

Medical services. May include the professional services of a medical clairvoyant.[1]

Medical or medicinal uses. See LIQUOR.

Medico-legal. Pertaining to matters of both law and medicine.

MEDIETAS LINGUÆ. L. Half of a tongue: a jury composed one-half each of aliens and denizens or natives; or, a jury one-half of whom are of the nationality of one of the parties to a suit.[2]

Medietatis linguæ, or de medietate linguæ. Of half a (mixed) tongue: half of each language or nationality.

At common law, when an accused person spoke only a foreign language, and the fact was made known to the court, a petit jury was immediately awarded, without the ordinary precept, one-half of the jurors speaking English, and one-half the language of the alien.[3] The principle never had application to this country.[4]

MEDIUM, SPIRITUAL. See INFLUENCE; PRETENSES, False.

MEDLEY. A melee; confused fight; affray.

Chance-medley. A casual affray. A killing in self-defense upon a sudden encounter.

Chaud-medley.[5] An affray in the heat of blood or passion.

Both terms are about obsolete.

MEET AND PASS. See ROAD, 1, Law of.

Does not apply to travelers who come together in different directions from roads which intersect.[6]

MEETING. "General meetings" of the members of a corporation occur at stated times fixed by the constitution or by-laws; "special meetings" are called for special purposes. The former are also called "stated meetings."[7] See MINUTES, 2.

MELIOR. See DELICTUM, In pari, etc.

MELIORATION. See BETTERMENT, 1; IMPROVEMENT.

MEMBER. 1. Of the person, see MAYHEM, 2. A person, see AMOTION; BAR, 1; CHURCH; CORPORATION.

MEMORANDUM. L. Be it remembered; let it be remembered. Latin plural, memoranda; English plural, memorandums. The word is now Anglicised.

Writings for which no technical forms were prescribed began with this word. At present it denotes any informal document preserving evidence of a fact or agreement. See REFRESH.

Memorandum check. A check given by a borrower of money, to be held by the lender for redemption at a time specified. See CHECK.

Memorandum clause. Words in a policy of insurance limiting the liability of the insurer to the articles and risks specified.

Memorandum of agreement. Articles of agreement, q. v. Under the Statute of Frauds (q. v.), a note or writing signed by the party to be charged or by his agent thereunto duly authorized.

A memorandum is a note to help the memory, a memorial, a record. A list of articles purchased, or a note of things to be done by a friend or agent, specifying persons, places, modes of doing the business, etc., is a memorandum, although in form a letter. It is well settled that a letter may be a sufficient memorandum under the Statute of Frauds.[1]

Memoritur. It is remembered: from memory.

"Memoritur proof" of a lost document will be received of a witness acquainted with the original.

MEMORIZATION. See DRAMA; LECTURES.

MEMORY. 1. The mental faculty by which passed impressions are reproduced. See REFRESH.

2. Mental capacity; understanding: as, sane memory, sound and disposing mind and memory. See MIND.

Legal memory; memory of man; time of memory. Originally, indefinite, but by statute in 1276, made to begin with the reign of Richard I, 1189. At another time the period was practically sixty years. In 1832, it was changed to twenty years.[2]

---

[1] Bibber v. Simpson, 59 Me. 182 (1871).

[2] See 3 Bl. Com. 360; 4 id. 352.

[3] United States v. Antz, 4 Woods, 180 (1882): s. c. 16 F. R. 124.

[4] State v. Sloan, 97 N. C. 501 (1887).

[5] F. chaud, heat,—4 Bl. Com. 184; 1 Russ. Cr. 660. F. chaude mêlée, an affray in hot blood,—Trench, Eng. Past & Pres., 335.

[6] Lovejoy v. Dolan, 10 Cush. 497 (1852).

[7] See Warner v. Mower, 11 Vt. 391 (1839)

[1] Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 517 (1865), McCurdy, J

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 31.

Immemorial. Beginning or occurring time out of mind: as, an immemorial custom, q. v.

MEN. See MAN.

MENACE. See ASSAULT; DEFENSE, 1; DURESS.

MENAGERIE. See ANIMAL.

MENIAL. See SERVANT.

MENS. L. The intellect; judgment, intention, mind. See AGGREGATIO; COMPOS.

Mala mens. Bad mind; fraudulent intention.

Mens legis. The intent of the law.

Mens rea. Criminal intent.

MENSA. See DIVORCE.

MENTAL. See LABOR, 1; MIND.

MERCANTILE. Pertaining to merchandise; having to do with the business or relations of merchants. See MERCHANT; MERCHANDISE.

Mercantile agency. See COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2.

Mercantile law. The law-merchant.

Mercantile paper. See MERCHANT, Law.

Mercantile partnership. A partnership which habitually buys and sells,— buys for the purpose of afterward selling.

A coal and oil association is not such a partnership.[1]

MERCHANDISE.[2] Defined in the early dictionaries as "commodities or goods to trade with."[3]

"Objects of commerce, wares, goods, commodities; whatever is usually bought or sold in trade." Provisions daily sold in market, horses, cattle, and fuel are not usually included, and realty never. The word conveys the idea of personalty used by merchants in the course of trade, and is usually, if not universally, applied to property which has not yet reached the hands of the consumer. The baggage (q. v.) of a passenger is not merchandise.[4]

Has no fixed legal signification; comprehends whatever is usually bought and sold, what merchants commonly trade in.[5]

Is limited to things that are ordinarily bought and sold,— the subjects of commerce and traffic; things that have an intrinsic value, in bulk, weight, or measure, and which are bought and sold.[1]

Does not apply to mere evidence of value, as, a note, a policy of insurance, a bill of lading, and the like, although some of these are sometimes bought and sold.[1]

May include shares in a joint-stock company.[2]

And may even embrace animate property; as, in a common count for goods sold and delivered.[3]

In duty-laws, includes goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported.[4]

See BAGGAGE; COMMERCE; GOODS; INSPECTION, 1 INVOICE; MAIL, 2; MERCANTILE; MERCHANT; TRADE MARK; WARES.

MERCHANT.[5] Originally, one who traded with foreign countries; at present, one whose business is to buy and sell merchandise.[6]

One who buys to sell again, and who does both, not occasionally or incidentally, but habitually and as a business.[7]

One who buys and sells an article; not, then, a manufacturer who sells his own productions.[8]

A banker is a merchant, according to both the commercial and the civil law.[9]

A commercial traveler is not a merchant: he does not sell his own goods.[10]

Nor is a brewer;[8] nor an apothecary, selling liquor for medical uses;[11] but a hotel-keeper is, if he sells liquors, tobacco, etc., in his hotel;[12] so may be the keeper of a boarding-stable;[13] but not a stock-speculator.[14]

Commission merchant. A factor, q. v.

Forwarding merchant. See FORWARDER.

Law-merchant; law of merchants. A system of law consisting of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice

[1] Commonwealth v. Natural Gas Co., 32 Pitts. L. J. 310 (1883).

[2] L. mercari, to trade: merx, traffic.

[3] Passaic Manuf. Co. v. Hoffman, 3 Daly, 512 (1871).

[4] The Marine City, 6 F. R. 413, 415-16 (1881), Brown, District Judge.

[5] Kent v. Liverpool, &c. Ins. Co., 26 Ind. 297-98 (1866), Elliott, J.

[1] Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., 2 Story, 53-54 (1841), cases, Story, J.

[2] Pray v. Mitchell, 60 Me. 435 (1872); Fine v. Hornsby, 2 Mo. Ap. 64 (1876).

[3] Weston v. McDowell, 20 Mich. 357 (1870); United States v. One Sorrel Horse, 22 Vt. 656 (1847).

[4] [R. S. § 2766. See also 6 Pet. 163; 11 Biss. 55; 40 Ind. 593; 55 Iowa, 520; 20 Pick. 13; 5 Mich. 112; 44 N. Y. 305; 43 Pa. 350; 47 Wis. 615.

[5] L. mercator: merx, traffic, merchandise.

[6] See Thomson v. Hopper, 1 W. & S. 469 (1841).

[7] Commonwealth v. Natural Gas Co., 32 Pitts. L. J. 310 (1883).

[8] Josselyn v. Parson, 50 L. R., 7 Ex. 129 (1872).

[9] Brown v. Pike, 34 La. An. 578 (1882).

[10] Exp. Taylor, 58 Miss. 481 (1880).

[11] Anderson v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush, 571 (1873).

[12] Campbell v. Finck, 2 Duv. 107 (1865).

[13] Re Odell, 17 Bankr. Reg. 73 (1877).

[14] Re Woodward, 8 Bened. 565 (1876).

have established to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world.[1]

On mercantile questions, such as relate to bills of exchange and the like, in marine causes relating to freight, average, demurrage, insurance, bottomry, and others of a similar nature, the law-merchant, which is a branch of the law of nations, is followed.[2]

The law-merchant was not made: it grew. Customs have sprung from the necessity and convenience of business and prevailed in duration and extent until they acquired the force of law. This mass of our jurisprudence has thus grown, and will continue to grow, by successive accretions. It is the outcome of time and experience, wiser law-makers, if slower, than legislative bodies.[3]

The rules applicable to commercial paper were transplanted into the common law from the law-merchant. They had their origin in the customs and course of business of merchants and bankers, and are now recognized by the courts because they are demanded by the wants and convenience of the mercantile world.[4] See PAPER, 4.

Merchants' accounts. Within the meaning of the exception in statutes of limitations, accounts between merchants for merchandise, consisting of debts and credits, unsettled and mutual.[5] See ACCOUNT, 1.

Merchant appraiser. See APPRAISER.

Merchant vessel. See VESSEL.

Merchantable. Vendible in market. Merchandise is vendible because of its fitness to serve its proper purpose. As applied to forage, merchantable means edible.[6]

The terms used in defining the word are "ordinary quality," "marketable quality," "bringing the average price," "at least of medium quality or goodness," "good, lawful merchandise of suitable quality," "good and sufficient in its kind," "free from any remarkable defect."[7]

See CUSTOM; MARKET; MERCHANDISE; STATUTE-MERCHANT.

MERCY.[8] Compassion; leniency; clemency.

1. At common law, the conclusion of a judgment for the plaintiff was that the defendant "be in mercy" (misericordia), that is, be fined for his delay of justice; and when the judgment was for the defendant, the conclusion was that the plaintiff be in mercy for his false claim.[1] See AMERCE.

2. Justice is to be administered with mercy: it is reserved for the sovereign or his deputy to extend mercy wherever he thinks it deserved, holding a court of equity in his own breast to soften the rigor of the law in such criminal cases as merit an exemption from punishment.[2] See PARDON.

3. Deeds of mercy in Sunday laws, see SUNDAY.

MERE. See MOTION, 1; RIGHT.

MERETRICIOUS.[3] Pertaining to unlawful sexual relation.

If persons under legal incapacities wed, the union is meretricious.[4]

MERGER.[5] A sinking: absorption, coalescence, union, extinguishment — of a lesser estate, obligation, right, or wrong, by a larger one; the smaller ceasing to exist, and the greater not increasing.

1. Merger of estates. Whenever a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated; or, in law phrase, is "merged," that is, sunk or drowned in the greater.[6]

As, where the reversion of a fee-simple descends to or is purchased by the tenant for years or life.

Consists in a thorough coalescence, indissoluble union of merging estates; each retaining its rights and advantages, while imparting to the other the whole of its peculiar attributes.[7]

The extinguishment, by act of law, of one estate in another by the union of the two estates.[8]

The whole title, legal as well as equitable, must unite in the same person.[9]

While a merger at law follows inevitably upon the union of a greater and lesser estate in the same ownership, it does not so follow in equity. There the doctrine is not favored, and the estates will be kept separate where such is the intention of the parties, and justice requires it.[10]

Merger is a matter of intention, declared or pre-

---

[1] 3 Kent, 2.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 67; 1 id. 75, 273.

[3] Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 651 (1870), Swayne, J.

[4] Woodbury v. Roberts, 59 Iowa, 349 (1882), Beck, J.

[5] Fox v. Fisk, 7 Miss. 346 (1842).

[6] Wood v. United States, 11 Ct. Cl. 685 (1875), Loring, Judge.

[7] Warner v. Arctic Ice Co., 74 Me. 478 (1883), cases, Symonds, J. See 9 Oreg. 411; 34 Barb. 206.

[8] F. merci, pardon: L. merces, fine, pains.

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 376; 4 id. 379.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 397; 1 Kent, 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

[3] L. meretrix, a courtesan: mereri, to earn money.

[4] 1 Bl. Com. 436.

[5] L. mergere, to sink under water.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 177; Mangum v. Piester, 16 S. C. 330 (1881); Little v. Bowen, 76 Va. 727 (1882).

[7] [Den v. Vanness, 10 N. J. L. 106 (1828), Ewing, C. J.; Duncan v. Smith, 31 id. 327 (1865), Beasley, C. J.

[8] State v. Koch, 47 Mo. 584 (1871), Wagner, J.

[9] Jordan v. Cheney, 74 Me. 362 (1883).

[10] Smith v. Roberts, 91 N. Y. 475 (1883), cases; Hill v. Pixley, 63 Barb. 208 (1873); Cook v. Brightly, 46 Pa. 444 (1864).

sumed. The person in whom the estates meet may prevent it. Thus, the owner of the fee in land may acquire and hold a mortgage interest therein.[1]

2. Merger of agreements, contracts, obligations. When an engagement by simple contract is afterward confirmed or continued by a sealed instrument, or when the demand or right of one party as against the other under their sealed or unsealed engagement is transformed into a judgment.

The simple contract becomes lost, sunk, as it were, and swallowed up in that under seal, and becomes totally extinguished.[2]

A judgment on a note, or a contract, merges the note, or the contract, and no other suit can be maintained on the same instrument.[3]

A judgment against one of several joint-contractors on a bond merges the contract into the higher security. The instrument, in either case, is thereafter functus officio.[4] See GREATER; JOINT.

Extinguishment by merger takes place between debts of different degrees, the lower being lost in the higher, and, being by act of law, it is dependent upon no particular intention. It takes place only where the debt is one, and the parties to the securities are identical. Hence, there is no merger where a stranger gives a bond for a simple contract debt, or confesses judgment for a debt. . . . The debt remains the same, though the old evidence of it melts into the new one, and the creditor merely gains a higher security. . . . In merger there is a change only of the security; in satisfaction by "substitution" there is a change of the debt.[5] See SECURITY, Collateral.

All verbal agreements between the parties to a written contract, made before or at the time of the execution of the contract, are considered as merged into the written instrument, and are inadmissible to vary its terms or to affect its construction. But oral agreements subsequently made, on a new and valid consideration, and before the breach of the contract, in cases falling within the rules of common law, and not within the Statute of Frauds, stand upon a different footing. They may have the effect to enlarge the time of performance specified in the contract, or may vary any other of its terms, or they may waive or discharge it altogether.[6] See PAROL, Evidence.

3. Merger of wrongs. When a private wrong and a public offense [a felony] is committed by one and the same act.[7]

At common law, under an indictment for a felony, conviction cannot be had of a lesser offense included within it, if such lesser offense is a misdemeanor. This rule has been changed by statute.[1]

Formerly, the civil action for damages suffered by the individual was suspended until he had performed his duty to society by an endeavor to bring the offender to justice in a court of criminal law.[2] See WAIVER.

MERIT. Sufficiency in law; legal validity.

A person is the "meritorious" cause of action, when the cause or the consideration on which the action is founded originated with or was occasioned by him.

Thus, in an action by a husband and wife upon an agreement entered into with her before marriage, she is the meritorious cause of action.[3]

Merits. Embraces more than the questions of law and of fact involved; all that a party may of right claim in reference to his case.[4]

The real or substantial grounds of action or of defense, in contradistinction to some technical or collateral matter raised in the course of the suit.[5]

An "affidavit of merits" represents that upon the substantial facts of the case justice is with the affiant.[6]

In ordinary acceptation, the abstract justice of a case, without regard to technical or arbitrary rules of law. In legal signification, the combined questions of law and of fact presented by the pleadings in the case. But in a given case, may mean the strict legal rights of the parties, as distinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court.[6]

"Pleading to the merits" distinguishes pleas which answer the cause of action, and on which a trial may be had, from those of a different character.[7]

MESNE.[8] Middle, intermediate, intervening: as, mesne or a mesne — assignment, incumbrance, lord, process, profits, qq. v.

MESSAGE.[9] 1. A communication from the President to Congress.

---

[1] Winona, &c. R. Co. v. County of Deuel, 3 Dak. 21 (1882), cases.

[2] [Smith, Contr. 23.

[3] Eldred v. Michigan Ins. Bank, 17 Wall. 545 (1873); Beazley v. Sim, 81 Va. 648 (1886).

[4] United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 45 (1878); Candee v. Smith, 98 N. Y. 351 (1885); 6 Wall. 231; 95 U. S. 347.

[5] Jones v. Johnson, 3 W. & S. 277 (1842), Gibson, C. J.

[6] Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 41 (1859), cases, Clifford, J.; Hawkins v. United States, 96 U. S. 689 (1877), cases.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 6.

[1] State v. Durham, 72 N. C. 449 (1875); Commonwealth v. Dean, 109 Mass. 351 (1872); 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 786, 804.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 6.

[3] See 1 Chitty, Contr. *181.

[4] Blakely v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 134 (1877), Willard, C. J.; Dill v. Moon, 14 id. 339 (1880).

[5] [Holthouse's Law Dict. See 18 Pa. 354; 65 id. 476.

[6] St. John v. West, 4 How. Pr. *331-32 (1850), Selden, J.

[7] Rahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. *532 (1860), Paine, J.; Oatman v. Bond, 15 id. *25 (1862).

[8] F. mesne: L. medius, middle.

[9] F. message: L. mittere, to send.

"He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." [1]

An "annual message" is delivered at the commencement of each session; a "special message," when particular information is to be communicated; a "veto message," where a bill is returned unsigned. Prior to Jefferson's administration, messages were delivered orally.[2]

The sovereign of England communicates with the houses of Parliament by message, at the hands of a minister of the crown or a member of the royal household.[3]

2. In the sense of a communication by telegraph, see TELEGRAPH.

MESSENGER. 1. "One who bears a message or errand; the bearer of a verbal or written communication, notice, or invitation from one person to another or to a public body; an office servant."

Does not apply to public officer acting in an original capacity in the discharge of duties imposed by law, but presupposes a superior whose servant the messenger is and whose mandate he executes, not as a deputy, with power to discriminate and judge, or to bind his superior, but as a mere bearer and communicator of the will of his superior. In this sense a county treasurer is not a "public messenger." [4]

2. An officer who is given charge of a bankrupt's estate until an assignee has been qualified.

See BANK, 2; EXPRESS, Company.

MESSUAGE.[5] The best writers represent this word as synonymous with house, and as embracing an orchard, garden, curtilage, adjoining buildings, and other appendages of a dwelling-house.[6]

A grant of a messuage, or of a messuage with the appurtenances, will carry the dwelling-house and adjoining buildings, and its orchard, garden, and curtilage.[7] See CURTILAGE; GRANT, 3; LAND; MILL, 1.

METALS. See ASSAYER; COIN; MANUFACTURE; MINERAL; ORE.

METEOR. See ACCRETION.

METES. See BOUNDARY.

METHOD. Placing several things and performing several operations in the most convenient order; also, a contrivance or device.[1] See PROCESS, 2.

METRE, or METER. The ten-millionth part of a quadrant of a terrestrial meridian — from the equator to the north pole. Practically, the length of a platinum bar intended to be equal to one ten-millionth of the meridian which passes through Paris, and equivalent to 39.368 American inches.

Metric system. A system for measuring length, capacity, surface, and weight, founded upon the metre as a unit.

The act of July 28, 1866, re-enacted in Rev. St. §§ 3569-70 (where tables of equivalents are given), authorized the use of the system, and directed that standards be furnished to each of the States.

MEXICAN TITLES. See PUEBLO.

MICHAELMAS. See TERM, 4.

MICHIGAN, LAKE. See LAKES.

MIDDLE. See NAME, 1; THREAD.

MIGHT. See SHELLEY'S CASE.

MIGRATION. "Migration" and "importation," as used in sec. 9, art. I, of the Constitution, refer to the different conditions of persons of the African race as regards freedom and slavery. When the free black man came here, he migrated; when the slave came, he was imported — as property.[2]

MILE. Has no technical meaning, except in the expression "mile circular" or "circular mile:" one of the whole number of miles traveled in going to and returning from a place.

In admiralty, while "knot" denotes the rate of speed, "mile" commonly expresses distance covered by speed — the result of speed. In English statutes, "marine league" indicates the three-mile belt from shore, but not always so; in United States statutes, the distance from shore in which admiralty jurisdiction shall be limited, "mile" being used in other cases. In the business of our navy department, "mile" means "marine mile" or "admiralty knot." The "land mile" is the more common to landmen; the "sea mile" to seamen. While the former is 5280 feet, the latter is 6086.7.[3]

Mileage. A payment of so much a mile to one who travels on public business: as, the charge allowed a sheriff or marshal for executing a writ.

---

[1] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 3.

[2] See 2 Story, Const., 4 ed. p. 368, note.

[3] May, Parlm. Pr. Ch. 17.

[4] Pfister v. Central Pacific R. Co., 70 Cal. 177 (1886), Searls, C.; Act 4 April, 1864. Quotes Webster's Dict.

[5] Mess'-wĭge. F. mesuage, manor-house: L. L. masa, mansa, farm, dwelling.

[6] Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. 333 (1837), Dewey, J. See also 2 Bing. 617; 29 E. C. L. 433; 5 T. R. 48; Williams, R. P. 13.

[7] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 187 (1864): Shep. Touch. 94.

[1] Hornblower v. Boulton, 8 F. R. 106 (1799); 2 B. & Ald. 350.

[2] People v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 62 (1882), Miller, J.

[3] Rockland, &c. Steamboat Co. v. Tessenden, 79 Me. 146-48 (1887), Peters, C. J.

Within the meaning of Rev. St. § 829, mileage is to be computed from the place where the process is returnable to the place of service.[1] See DIRECT, 1; DISTANCE; NEAR; RADIUS.

MILITARY. See MARTIAL; MILITIA; WAR.

. Pertaining to soldiers in war, or to war; relating to the army.

Military bounty-lands. See BOUNTY.

Military cause. A cause arising out of the military law.

Military court or tribunal. A court for the administration of the military law; a court-martial.

A military tribunal exists under the Constitution in time of war. Should Congress fail to create such tribunals, they must be constituted and proceed according to the laws and usages of civilized warfare. In time of peace they may exist only under the power in Congress "To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces."[2] See JUDGE-ADVOCATE.

Civil courts have no authority to review, or in any manner interfere with, the action of military tribunals regularly engaged in the exercise of their appropriate jurisdiction. Thus, the civil courts cannot discharge a minor, who enlisted in the army in violation of Rev. St. § 1117, who is in custody, awaiting trial before a court-martial, upon a charge of desertion.[3]

Military government or jurisdiction. There are under the Constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction: one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war outside the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within the States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of States maintaining adhesion to the National Government, when the public danger requires its exercise.

The first, which may be called jurisdiction under "military law," is found in acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second, which may be distinguished as "military government," supersedes, as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and is exercised by the military commander under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third, which may be denominated "martial law" proper, is called into action by Congress, or temporarily, when the action of Congress cannot be invited, and in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President, in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war, within districts where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights.[1]

Military law. Regulations for the government of persons employed in the army; the law applicable to military service and affairs.

The body of the military law of the United States is contained in the "Act establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," approved April 30, 1806, with supplements thereto. The first section of the act contains one hundred and one articles (whence called "the articles of war"); it describes the various offenses, the punishments to be inflicted, and the manner of summoning, as well as the organization of courts-martial.[2]

There are also various usages which constitute an unwritten law, for application to cases in which there are no express provisions.[3] See MARTIAL, LAW.

Military offenses. The common-law distinction between felonies and misdemeanors does not apply to military offenses.

A homicide committed by a military guard, without malice, while performing his supposed duty, is excusable, unless manifestly beyond the scope of his authority, or such that a man of ordinary sense would know was illegal. The circuit courts have jurisdiction of a homicide committed within a military reservation.[4]

Military post or station. See STATION.

Military service. Employment in the army or in matters connected with war.[5]

Military tenures. See FEUD.

Military testament. The will of a soldier in service. See WILL, 2 Nuncupative.

MILITIA. Soldiers enrolled for discipline, and not for other military service except in times of insurrection, invasion, and perhaps of riot.

"The Congress shall have power . . . To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions; To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress."[6]

[1] Re Crittenden, 2 Flip. 213 (1878).

[2] Military Commissions, 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 296 (1865), Speed, A. G.

[3] Re Zimmerman, 30 F. R. 176 (1887), Sawyer, J.

[1] Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 141-42, 123 (1866), Chase, C. J., and Wayne, Swayne, and Miller, JJ., dissenting.

[2] See R. S. Tit. XIV, XV, XVI.

[3] Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 28 (1827).

[4] United States v. Clark, 31 F. R. 710 (1887), Brown, J.; s. c. 26 Am. Law Reg. 703-9 (1887), cases.

[5] See 18 Wall. 84; 18 Iowa, 513.

[6] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 15, 16.

This provision authorizes Congress to delegate to the President the power to call out the militia for the purposes named, and to make his decision conclusive as to the necessity for the call.[1]

The militia are "a body of armed citizens trained to military duty, who may be called out in certain cases, but may not be kept on service like standing armies, in times of peace." That is the case as to the active militia of the State. The men comprising it come from the body of the militia, and when not engaged at stated periods in drilling and other exercises, return to their usual vocations, as is usual with militia, and are subject to call when the public exigencies demand it. . . The word "troops" conveys the idea of an armed body of soldiers whose sole occupation is war or service, answering to the regular army. The organization of the active militia bears no likeness to such a body of men. It is simply a domestic force as distinguished from the regular troops, and is only liable to be called into service when the exigencies of the State make it necessary.[2]

The act of Congress of May 2, 1792, is the first legislation relating to the militia. Under it, and its supplements, the militia can be used to suppress rebellion against the national government. The President, who, as seen, is to judge of the exigency, may address his request either to the governor of the State or to an officer of the militia. In actual service, the militia are subject to the same rules as the regular troops The President specifies the term of service, which may not exceed nine months.[3]

The right voluntary to associate together as a military company or organization, and to drill or to parade with arms, without, and independent of, an act of Congress or a law of the State authorizing the same, is not an attribute of national citizenship. Military organization and military drill and parade under arms are subjects especially under the control of the government of each country. They cannot be claimed as a right independent of law. Under our political system they are subject to the regulation and control of the State and Federal governments, acting in due regard to their respective prerogatives and powers.[4] See MOB.

MILK. See ADULTERATE;[5] OLEOMARGARINE; PEDDLER.

MILL. 1. Mill, mill-dam, mill-privilege, mill-site, and like expressions, are construed to include land, buildings, and machinery or other fixtures necessary or useful to attain the object proposed in the erection.[1] See GRANT, 8; TOLL, 2.

A statute of a State which authorizes any person to erect and maintain on his land a water mill and mill-dam upon and across any stream not navigable, paying to the owners of lands flowed damages assessed in a judicial proceeding, does not deprive such owners of their property without due process of law. The right to the use of running water is publici juris, and common to all the proprietors of the bed and banks of a stream. Each has a right to a reasonable use of the water as it flows past his land, not interfering with a like reasonable use by those above or below him. One reasonable use is the use of the power, inherent in the fall of the stream and the force of the current, to drive mills. That power cannot be used without damming up the water, and thereby causing it to flow back. If the water thus dammed up by one riparian proprietor spread over the land of others, they could at common law bring successive actions against him for the injury done them, or even have the dam abated. Before the Mill Acts, therefore, it was often impossible for a riparian proprietor to use the water-power at all, without the consent of those above him. The purpose of these statutes is to enable any riparian proprietor to erect a mill and use the water-power of the stream, provided he does not interfere with an earlier exercise by another of a like right or with any right of the public; and to substitute for the common-law remedies a new form of remedy by which any one whose land is flowed can have assessed, once for all, either in a gross sum or by way of annual damages, adequate compensation for the injury. . . General mill acts exist in some twenty or more States.[2] See AQUA, Currit, etc.; NUISANCE; WATER.

Miller. See MECHANIC.

2. The tenth of a cent. See COIN; M, 2.

MIND. The rational faculty, or the understanding; the state of the mental faculties; inclination, desire, purpose, intent; also, memory, recollection.[3]

Disposing mind. Testamentary capacity, q. v.

Mind and memory. At common law, and in statutes of wills, are convertible terms.[4]

Sound mind. Mind can only be known by its outward manifestations — language and conduct. As these conform to the practice of the majority of mankind, or contrast harshly with it, judgment is formed as to a man's soundness of mind.[5]

---

[1] Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 28 (1827); Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 34 (1849); 8 Mass. 547.

[2] Dunne v. People, 94 Ill. 120, 123 (1879), cases, Scott, Justice.

[3] See R. S. Tit. XVI.

[4] Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 267 (1886), Woods, J. See generally 2 Story, Const. §§ 1199–1215, cases; 2 Bancroft, Const. 147–49; 1 Kent, 262–66, cases; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. 12 (1820); 1 Kan. Law J. 261–66 (1885).

[5] On punishing adulteration of, see especially 22 Am. Law Rev. 104 (1888), cases.

[1] See 35 Conn. 158; 41 Ga. 162; 3 Mas. 280; 6 Me. 436; 16 id. 63; 32 id 993; 39 Mich. 777; 20 Barb. 635; 76 N. Y. 23; 35 Wis. 41; 37 Vt. 622.

[2] Head v. Amoskeag Manuf. Co., 113 U. S. 9, 16–19, 28 (1885), Gray, J.

[3] See 15 Wall. 589; 8 Del. 119.

[4] Re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 286 (1869).

[5] United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 167 (1882), Cox, J.; ib. 202–3, cases; 2 Harr., Del., 879.

Unsound mind. Includes every species of insanity or mental unsoundness.[1]

Weak mind. When a person, from infirmity and mental weakness, is likely to be easily influenced by others, a transaction entered into by him without independent advice will be set aside, if there is any unfairness in it.[2]

See CAPACITY, 1; DOUBT; FAITH; INFANT; INFLUENCE; INTENT; INSANITY; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MALICE; MURDER; REASON; WILL, 1. Compare MENS.

MINE.[3] 1, v. To draw or lead — a way or passage underground, a subterraneous duct, course or passage, whether in search of metals or to destroy fortifications.[4]

2, n. An opening or excavation in the earth for the purpose of extracting minerals.

Applied to coal, is generally equivalent to a worked vein.[5]

The right to mines, as a branch of the royal revenue, had its original in the king's prerogative of coinage, in order to supply him with materials; and therefore mines which are properly "royal" are only those of gold and silver. By 1 and 8 W. & M. (1689, 1696), no mines are to be royal, but the king may have the precious metals for a price named in the statutes.[6] See ROYALTY.

Statutes in various States declare that a patent passes the entire interest of the State.[7]

Mining claim. A parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock; also, one's right of property in such land.

Mineral locations, made prior to the passage of any mineral law by Congress, have always been governed by the local rules and customs in force at the time of the location.[8]

The location of a mining claim is the act of appropriating such parcel according to certain established rules. It usually consists in placing on the ground, in a conspicuous position, a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel, according to the local customs or, since the statute of 1872, according to the provisions of that act. The location, which is the act of taking the parcel of mineral land, in time becomes, among the miners, synonymous with the mining claim originally appropriated. One claim may include several or many locations.[9]

The right of location upon the mineral lands of the United States is a privilege granted by Congress, but it can only be exercised within the limits prescribed by the grant. A location can only be made where the law allows it to be done. A relocation on lands actually covered at the time by another valid and subsisting claim is void. A location is made by taking possession and working on the ground, recording and doing whatever else is required by the acts of Congress and local regulations. A claim perfected under the law is property in the highest sense, which may be bought, sold, and conveyed, and which will pass by descent. Actual possession is not necessary, but the locator must do the requisite amount of work within the prescribed time. The paramount title remains in the United States; the locator acquires the exclusive right of possession. A relocation may be made only when the rights of the former locator have ended.[1]

Known mine. Within the meaning of the mining laws, no lands are "known mines" unless at the time that the rights of a purchaser accrued there was upon the ground an actual and opened mine, which had been worked, or which was capable of being worked.[2]

If a lode or vein of gold or silver is "known to exist" within a placer claim when the patent is applied for, the patentee cannot recover its possession, even as against an intruder. Having no title to such lode or vein by reason of its exception from his patent under Rev. St. § 2333, he cannot enforce any legal right to it, being bound to rely upon the strength of his own title, not upon the weakness of his adversary's. The statute speaks of acquiring a patent with knowledge of the existence of a vein or lode within the boundaries of the claim; not of the effect of the intent of the party to acquire a lode which may or may not exist, of which he has no knowledge. Nor does it render belief, after examination, in the existence of a lode, knowledge of the fact. There may be difficulty in determining whether such knowledge in a given case was had; but between mere belief and knowledge there is a wide difference. Questions as to what kind of evidence is sufficient to prove the required knowledge should be settled as they arise.[3]

Mining partnership. A distinct association, with different rights and liabilities attaching to its members, from an ordinary trading partnership.

---

[1] McCammon v. Cunningham, 108 Ind. 547 (1886).

[2] Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 511-12 (1876), Field, J.

[3] L. L. minare, to lead; hence, to follow a vein, to excavate. Whence mineral.

[4] Bell v. Wilson. L. R., 1 Ch. Ap. *309 (1866), Turner, L. J., quoting Ency. Metrop.

[5] Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Appeal, 85 Pa. 346 (1877).

[6] 1 Bl. Com. 294.

[7] 3 Kent, 378, n; 17 Cal. 199. As to the United States, see 107 U. S. 526; 108 id. 510; 2 Black, 17; 3 Wall. 304.

[8] Glacier Mining Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 482 (1888).

[9] Smelting Company v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 649 (1881), Field, J.; R. S. § 2324.

[1] Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 284, 281-88 (1881), Waite, C. J.; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 id. 762 (1876); R. S. § 2319; Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 535 (1885). See generally Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 id. 449, 457 (1882); Jackson v. Roby, 109 id. 441 (1883); Chambers v. Harrington, 111 id. 350 (1884).

[2] Colorado Coal & Iron Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 325 (1887), cases, Matthews, J.

[3] Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Reynolds, 124 U. S. 383 (1888), Field, J.; Noyes v. Mantle, 127 id. 353 (1888). As to mining on public lands, see 26 Cent. Law J. 354-61 (1888), cases.

A member may convey his interest without dissolving the partnership; and the death or insolvency of a member will not work a dissolution. But a member may not pledge the credit of the association.[1]

Such partnership exists where the owners of a mine co-operate in working it.[2]

See ADIT; MINERAL; AQUA, Currit, etc.; LAND, Public; ORE; VEIN: WASTE.

MINERAL. That which is mined.

Though frequently applied to substances containing metals, in its proper sense includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines.[3]

A fossil, or what is dug out of the earth. In its enlarged sense, comprises all the substances which form, or have formed, part of the solid body of the earth, both external and internal, and which are now destitute of, and incapable of supporting, animal or vegetable life.[4]

Petroleum is a mineral, and as much a part of the realty as timber or coal.[5]

A right to experiment for oil, and to sever and remove it upon giving a portion to the lessor, is a license to work land for minerals; and so coupled with an interest as not to be revocable at the pleasure of the licensor.[6]

Where the grantor in a deed conveying realty reserved certain timber and "all minerals," and the grantee claimed the mineral oil, the court said: "It is true that petroleum is a mineral; but so are salt and other waters, impregnated or combined with mineral substances; so are rocks, clays, and sand: anything dug from mines or quarries; in fine, all inorganic substances are classed under the general name of 'minerals.' If the reservation embraced all these things, it is as extensive as the grant. That something may be retained for the vendor, 'minerals' must then be limited in its meaning. The parties doubtless thought and wrote, not as scientists, but as business men using the language of every-day life; and in popular estimation petroleum is not regarded as a mineral substance any more than is animal or vegetable oil, and it can, indeed, be so classified only in the most general or scientific sense."[7]

Minerals beneath the surface may be conveyed by a deed, distinct from the right to the surface. They constitute a corporeal hereditament, and pass by apt words, with delivery of the deed and registration.[8]

The law recognizes horizontal divisions of land. A severance of the surface from the underlying strata may be created, either by reservation or express grant; after severance, a mineral right is an independent interest. Thus, one person may own the iron-ore, another the coal, another the limestone, another the petroleum, and another the surface.[1]

But each proprietor must so use his own property as not to injure another proprietor.[2]

A tenant for life cannot open and operate a new mine: it would injure the inheritance; but his right to operate previously opened mines, and work them, even to exhaustion, cannot be questioned.[3]

What is termed a mineral lease is frequently found to be an actual sale of a portion of the land. It differs from an ordinary lease in this, that, although both convey an interest in land, the latter merely conveys the right to its temporary use and occupation, while the former conveys absolutely a portion of the land itself. . . If the entire interest of the lessor is conveyed, in the whole or a portion of his land, the conveyance cannot properly be regarded as a "demise," but as an "assignment."[4]

See MINE; AQUA, Currit, etc.; LAND, Public; QUARRY; VEIN; WASTE, 1.

MINISTER.[5] 1. An officer of a court charged with the execution of processes.

Ministerial. Done or executed, or serving, under the authority of, or in obedience to, another person as superior: as, a ministerial — act, duty, office, officer, trust, writ. Opposed to judicial: involving the exercise of discretion.

A ministerial act is one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, and without regard to, or the exercise of, his own judgment upon the propriety of the act to be done.[6]

As, the act of bringing a party into court;[6] selecting jurors;[7] delivering a patent to land after the right thereto is complete.[8]

A ministerial duty, the performance of which may, in proper cases, be required of the head of a department of government, by judicial process, is one in re-

[1] Kahn v. Smeltiug Co., 102 U. S. 645 (1880); Bissell v. Foss, 114 id. 260 (1885), cases; 42 Cal. 370; 79 Va. 160; 50 E. C. L. 685.

[2] Higgins v. Armstrong, 9 Col. 46 (1885); 5 id. 111.

[3] Rosse v. Wainman, 14 M. & W. 872 (1845), Parke, B.

[4] [Bainbridge, Mines, &c., 1, cases.

[5] Appeal of Stoughton, 88 Pa. 198 (1878).

[6] Furst v. Halderman, 53 Pa. 229 (1866).

[7] Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 43-44 (1882), Gordon, J. See also Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. E. 128, 132-36 (1854).

[8] Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475 (1858).

[1] Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. 430-31 (1860); Sanderson v. City of Scranton, 105 id. 472 (1884); 31 id. 476, 482; 1 Maule & S. 84; 2 Barn. & Ald. 554; 2 Strange, 1142; 11 M. & W. 33; L. R., 4 Eq., 19; 2 Exch. 800; 6 id. 644; 5 E. L. & E. 526; 2 Dr. & S. 395.

[2] Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 Mich. 604, 609-10 (1883), cases.

[3] Eley's Appeal, 103 Pa. 307 (1883), cases.

[4] Sanderson v. City of Scranton, 105 Pa. 472-73 (1884), Clark, J. On opinions as to the value of a silver or gold mine, see Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 252 (1888).

[5] L. minister, a servant.

[6] Flournoy v. Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 173-74 (1861), Perkins, J.; 54 id. 377; 15 F. R. 16; Roins v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 501 (1878).

[7] Exp. Virginia, 100 U. S. 348 (1879).

[8] Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 261 (1879).

spect to which nothing is left to discretion. It is a simple, definite duty, arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist, and imposed by law.[1]

See EXECUTION, 3, Writ of; JUDGE; OFFICER; SHERIFF.

2. A person ordained to preach the gospel.[2] See ORDAIN, 2.

3. In laws respecting foreign relations, a person invested with and exercising the principal diplomatic functions.[3]

"The President . . shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls. . ."[4]

Foreign minister. In the diplomatic sense, a minister who comes from another jurisdiction or government.[5]

The modern law of nations recognizes a class of public officers, who, while bearing various designations, chiefly significant in the relation of rank, precedence, or dignity, possess in substance the same functions, rights, and privileges,— being agents of their respective governments for the transaction of diplomatic business abroad, possessing also such powers as their respective governments may please to confer, and enjoying, as a class, established legal rights and immunities of person and property in the governments to which they are accredited as the representatives of sovereign powers.

Disregarding questions of dignity, these diplomatic agents might all be denominated ambassadors, because they are immediate officers of the sovereign; or envoys, because they are persons sent; or ministers, because engaged in public service or duty; or procurators, because they are the proctors of their respective governments; or legates, because officially employed as the substitute of the superior; or nuncios, or internuncios, because they are messengers to or between governments; or deputies, because they are deputed; or commissioners, because they hold and discharge commissions; or chargés d'affaires, because they are charged with business; or agents, because they act for their governments. All these, and other designations of public ministers, are found in the history of modern negotiations, the name having no fixed relation to the functions or powers, or true nature of the office.

In the simple indication of duties these public ministers would be divisible into three subdivisions of differences: ministers, representatives, and agents: ordinary, and extraordinary, that is, special; resident, and non-resident or transient; and plenipotentiary, and not plenipotentiary or with limited powers.

But, in process of time, sometimes to flatter the pride of the sovereign represented, or that of the representative, or that of the government addressed; at other times to indicate shades of differences in functions, or in the place or manner of exercising them, and for other causes, arbitrary and artificial distinctions have grown up, in the use of titles, or names, which for the most part are independent of, or absolutely contrary to, the truth and substance of the things they pretend to designate. Thus it is that "ambassador," in origin the most equivocal of all the titles — for "ambascia" is "officium vel ministerium quodcunque, nobile et ignobile," and "ambisciata" at this day is any message, though borne by a household servant — has come, notwithstanding its humble origin, to designate a diplomatic agent of the highest rank in the class, because taken to be the most direct representative of the sovereign; in this, reviving its original use of the personal client or agent of the chief or prince. Thus it is that the Papal See appoints peculiar ministers assumed to belong to the highest rank, under the name of "legate" or "nuncio," both in nature as ordinary, and the latter as humble, as any in the whole category. Thus it is that the ordinary "envoy," or agent of regular and ordinary functions, is by mere titular exaggeration turned into "envoy extraordinary," while another agent, who is no more a resident minister than he, and just as much an "extraordinary" envoy, is denominated merely a "minister resident." Thus it is, also, that in one of the varieties of agents, to "envoy extraordinary," which is false, is added "minister plenipotentiary," which is inexact in fact and by specialty of application: for it is not usual to give any diplomatic agent general "plenipotentiary" powers, but limited ones; and such powers, whatever they may be, as are given to envoys ordinary and extraordinary are frequently given to commissioners, ministers resident, or even chargés d'affaires. And thus it is that "chargés d'affaires," in itself quite as general as any title, and often borne by persons exercising as high functions as any other, has settled into the designation of a mere provisional officer, in dignity of the lowest rank. Thus, also, while "commissioner," which in fact is more comprehensive than the others, like "deputy," when held by a person having foreign diplomatic functions, as distinguished from functions [illegible] or administrative, has come to have something of a specific meaning by reason of its vagueness, as implying

[1] Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. 498 (1866), Chase, C. J. See also Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. 87, 98 (1845); South v. Maryland, 18 How. 396, 402 (1855); Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 234-44 (1881), cases; 7 Ct. Cl. 293; 49 Ala. 311; 39 Ark. 85; 12 Conn. 464; 12 Ohio St. 132; 40 Wis. 175.

[2] See 1 Mass. 32; 5 id. 524; 6 id. 401; 7 id. 60, 230; 14 id. 333; 2 Pick. 403; 1 Me. 102; 11 id. 487.

[3] R. S. § 4130: Act 1 Feb. 1876; 19 St. L. 2.

[4] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[5] Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. *56 (1831), Thompson, J.

a diplomatic agent whose functions are undefined as respects the nature of his powers or the place of exercising them,— the term has more commonly been held to denote a minister the range of whose duties and powers is not confined to a particular court and does not depend on his presentation there.

The Constitution, specifying "ambassadors" as examples of a class, empowers the President to appoint these and other "public ministers," that is, any such officers as by the law of nations are recognized as "public ministers," without making the appointment of them subject, like "other (non-enumerated) officers," to the exigency of an act of Congress. In a word, the power to appoint diplomatic agents, and to select any one out of the varieties of the class, according to his judgment as to the needs of the public service, is a constitutional function of the President, not derived from nor limitable by Congress, but requiring only the ultimate concurrence of the Senate; and so it was understood in the early practice of the government.[1]

The United States has never sent an "ambassador."[2]

The power to appoint a representative includes the power to remove him.[3]

"In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls . . the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction."[4]

The purpose was to keep open the highest court of the nation for the determination, in the first instance, of suits involving a diplomatic or commercial representative of a foreign government. This was due to the rank and dignity of such representatives. . . . They may sue in any court they choose that is open to them. As to consuls, the commercial representatives of foreign governments, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was made concurrent with the district courts. Congress may confer jurisdiction, in cases of consuls, upon the subordinate courts of the Union.[5]

See ALIEN, 1; ARREST, 2 (2, 3); ASYLUM; CONSUL; EXEQUATUR, 2.

MINOR.[6] A person not twenty-one years old; an infant, q. v.

Minority. 1. The civil condition of a minor; infancy.

2. The smaller number of votes or voters. See MAJORITY.

3. The smaller number of citizens. See CONSTITUTION.

MINSTRELS. See THEATER.

MINT. The United States mint was established by act of April 2, 1792, and located at Philadelphia. There are branch mints at San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson, and Denver.[1] See COIN.

MINUS. See MAJOR; MINOR; DIMINUTION.

MINUTES.[2] 1. Official memoranda of what takes place in a court; made by the clerk, and preserved in his "minute-book."

From these memoranda the record is afterward made, the minutes themselves not being considered part of the record.

The courts are to take notice how the records of their own and of other courts are in fact made and kept. The clerk must of necessity take down the doings of the court in brief notes. This he usually does in a minute-book called the "docket," from which a full, extended, and intelligible record is afterward to be made up. Until they can be so made, these short notes must stand as the record.[3]

But it is not the office of the clerk's minutes to indicate the legal questions raised upon the trial of a case.[4]

2. The record of the proceedings had before the board of directors of a corporation; usually made by the secretary.

Failure to make minutes will not invalidate a corporate act, even where the charter directs that they be made or kept. If not kept, or if lost, destroyed, or for other reason not produced after request duly made, secondary evidence of the proceeding will be admitted.[5]

MIS.[6] A prefix denoting error, fault, defect, wrong; also, ill or bad. Compare MAL.

MISADVENTURE. An accident, usually resulting in the death of a person, where a lawful act is being done.

Homicide by misadventure is where a man, doing a lawful act without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.[7]

MISAPPLY. See APPLICATION, 2.

MISAPPROPRIATE. See APPROPRIATE, 1 (1).

MISBEHAVIOR. See BEHAVIOR.

MISCARRIAGE. 1. Erroneous doing; faulty behavior; a wrongful act incurring liability in damages.[8] See FRAUDS, Statute of.

---

[1] Ambassadors and Public Ministers, 7 Op. Att.-Gen. 190-93 (1855), Caleb Cushing.

[2] 1 Kent, 39, n. See 1 Bl. Com. 253.

[3] Exp. Hennen, 13 Pet. 259 (1839).

[4] Constitution, Art. III, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[5] Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 464 (1884); Börs v. Preston, ib. 252, 255 (1884), cases.

[6] L. minor, less, younger.

[1] See R. S. § 3495; 1 Story, Laws, 227.

[2] L. minuta (scriptura), small hand or writing: copies for parties were in larger hand,— 8 Toullier, n. 413.

[3] Pruden v. Alden, 23 Pick. 187 (1839), Shaw, C. J.

[4] Scott v. Morgan, 94 N. Y. 514 (1884); Johnson v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 377 (1882); 34 La. An. 369.

[5] See Angell & Am. Corp. 291 a; Green's Brice's Ultra Vires, 522; 12 Wheat. 75; 96 U. S. 271; 111 Mass. 315; 32 Vt. 633.

[6] A. S. missian, to fail to hit, reach, attain, find. F. mes-; L. minus, less, bad.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 182.

[8] See Kirkham v. Marter, 2 B. & A. *616 (1819).

2. Destroying a foetus before birth is termed "procuring a miscarriage."[1] See ABORTION.

3. A "miscarriage of justice" imports a failure or defect in the administration of justice.

MISCEGENATION.[2] The intermarriage of persons of different races. See MARRIAGE, Mixed.

MISCHARGE. See CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

MISCHIEF. Injury, damage, detriment, harm.

Malicious mischief. Injury to private property amounting to a crime. Such damage as is done, not animo furandi, with an intention of gaining by another's loss, but either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or black and diabolical revenge.[3]

The injury must have been done out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or wicked revenge.[4]

It is difficult to state with precision what acts constitute malicious mischief at common law. The subject has been so much legislated upon, and at such an early day, that its common-law limits are indistinct. Blackstone classes it with larceny and forgery, and, after defining it as above, adds that "any damage arising from this mischievous disposition, though only trespass at common law, is now, by a multitude of statutes, made penal in the highest degree"—several statutes having elevated the offense to a felony.

Some judges, giving "trespass," as there used, its modern meaning, have denied, against the weight of authority, that the offense of malicious mischief exists under the common law of this country. But Blackstone meant by that word what we mean by "misdemeanor."

The offense includes malicious physical injuries to the rights of another which impair utility or materially diminish value.

Thus, it has been considered an offense at common law maliciously—to destroy another's horse, cow, or other beast; to cast a carcass into a well in use; to poison chickens; to tear up a promissory note; to break a window; to set fire to barrels of tar; to destroy a corn crib; to injure trees or plants; to break up a boat; to deface tombs; to strip a building of pipes or sheeting; to injure a telephone wire.[5]

MISCONDUCT. "Misconduct in office" was held to apply to a wrongful performance of an authorized act.[1] See ARBITRATOR; ATTORNEY; MISDEMEANOR, 1; VERDICT.

MISDATE. See DATE.

MISDELIVERY. See DELIVERY.

MISDEMEANOR. 1. Misconduct; misbehavior, not amounting to a crime, in discharging the duties of a public office.

As, in a statute enacting that whenever a sheriff shall have been guilty of any default or misdemeanor in office, the party aggrieved may apply to a court for leave to prosecute his official bond.[2] Compare MISCONDUCT.

2. Any indictable offense under the grade of felony.[3]

Where a municipal ordinance prohibits an act not punishable at common law or by statute, and provides, as a penalty, a fine, and, in default of payment thereof, imprisonment in the county jail, the violation of such ordinance is not a misdemeanor under a statute defining a misdemeanor to be "an act or omission punishable by fine and imprisonment or by fine or imprisonment."[4]

The provision in the Constitution that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury," construed in the light of the principles of the common law, embraces not only felonies punishable by confinement in the penitentiary, but also some classes of misdemeanors the punishment of which may involve deprivation of liberty. The word "crime," in its more extended sense, comprehends every violation of public law; in a limited sense, it embraces offenses of a serious or atrocious character.[5]

Misdemeanant. A person convicted of a misdemeanor. (Rare.)

See further CRIME; FELONY.

MISDESCRIPTION. See DESCRIPTION.

MISDIRECTION. See CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

MISERICORDIA. See MERCY, 1.

MISFEASANCE. See FEASANCE.

MISFORTUNE. See ACCIDENT; HOMICIDE; MISADVENTURE.

MISINSTRUCTION. See CHARGE, 2 (2, c); INSTRUCT, 2.

MISINTERPRETATION. See INTERPRETATION.

MISJOINDER. See JOINDER.

MISLAID. See FIND, 1.

---

[1] See Smith v. State, 33 Me. 60 (1851); Commonwealth v. Railing, 113 Pa. 37 (1886).

[2] L. miscere, to mix; genere, to beget.

[3] [4 Bl. Com. 243.

[4] [Commonwealth v. Walden, 3 Cush. 561 (1849). See also 101 Ill. 394; 110 Mass. 402; 49 Miss. 337; 27 N. J. L. 128; 3 D. & B. (N. C.) 131; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1065-82, cases.

[5] State v. Watts, 48 Ark. 57-59 (1886), Battle, J.; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1067, 1076, cases; 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 568-69, cases.

[1] State v. Leach, 60 Me. 66 (1872). See also 37 How Pr. 20; 1 Den. 267.

[2] State ex rel. Blinebury v. Mann, 21 Wis. 687 (1867).

[3] See 4 Bl. Com. 5; 6 Ark. 190; 65 Ill. 60; 9 Wend 222; 12 id. 314; 26 Hun, 60; 9 Humph. 50; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 624.

[4] City of Oshkosh v. Schwartz, 55 Wis. 483 (1882).

[5] Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 549 (1888), Harlan, J.

MISLEAD. See CHARGE, 2 (2, c); INSTRUCT, 2.

MISNOMER. Misnaming: giving a wrong name to a person, in an instrument or document of any nature.[1] See ALIAS, 1; NAME, 1.

MISPLEADING. See PLEADING.

MISPRISION.[2] 1. Formerly, any dereliction or offense which had no distinctive name.[3]

Any such high offense as is under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon; is contained in every act of treason and in every felony.[4]

Negative misprision. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed. Positive misprision. The commission of something which ought not to be done.

The concealment of treason, of a felony, or of treasure-trove, were examples of negative misprisions. Positive misprisions included all contempts and high misdemeanors: as, the maladministration of officers in public employment, embezzling public money; contempts of the executive department: as, refusing to advise in public councils, refusing to help defend the realm, neglecting to join the posse comitatus, disobeying any lawful command; contempts against the king's person and government: as, speaking against them, wishing them ill, acts lessening them in esteem; contempts against the king's title not amounting to treason or præmunire: as, denying his right to the crown in common discourse; also, contempts against the courts of justice.[4]

2. Misapprehension of duty; a clerical error, by an inferior judicial officer.

"The omission of the clerk to enter on the record the judgment upon the demurrer, or to state its waiver, if it was abandoned, would be merely a clerical mistake; and it is well settled at common law that a misprision by a clerk, if the case be clearly that alone, though it consists of the omission of an important expression, is not ground to reverse a judgment, where substance enough appears to show that all that was required was properly done."[5]

"Inasmuch as the statute provides what judgment shall be rendered on joint debts where only one party is served, this [the entry of 'defendant' for 'defendants'] is a mere clerical misprision."[6] See RECORD, Judicial.

MISREADING. See READING.

MISRECITAL. See RECITAL.

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 302; 4 id. 334; 77 Mo. 370.

[2] Mis-prizh'-un. F. mépris, neglect, contempt: mé, amiss; prendre, to take.

[3] See 3 Coke, Inst. 36.

[4] 4 Bl. Com. 119; 1 Hawk. P. C. 60; R. S. §§ 5390, 5333.

[5] Townsend v. Jemison, 7 How. 720 (1849).

[6] Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 648 (1884).

MISREPRESENTATION. See REPRESENTATION, 1.

MISTAKE. Some intentional act, or omission, or error, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence.[1]

When a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, an act which but for the erroneous conviction he would not have done or omitted.[2]

That result of ignorance of law or of fact which has misled a person to commit that which if he had not been in error he would not have done.[3]

An erroneous mental conception that influences the will and leads to action.[4]

The doing of an act under an erroneous conviction, which act, but for such conviction, would not have been done.[5]

Mistake of fact. Takes place either when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist. Mistake of law. When a person, having full knowledge of facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect.[6]

Mistake of judgment. See DIRECTORS; DISCRETION; SEWER.

Mutual mistake. A mistake reciprocal and common to both parties; as, the parties to a contract when each alike labors under the same misconception with respect to its terms.[7]

The rule is that a mistake of law affords no ground for relief, and that a mistake of fact may furnish such ground. In the latter case the fact must be material to the act or contract, that is, must be essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction, and must also be such fact as the complainant could not by reasonable diligence get knowledge of, when put upon inquiry. When the fact is known to one party, and unknown to the other, the ground of relief is, not the mistake or ignorance of material facts alone, but the unconscientious advantage taken by the conceal-

[1] 1 Story, Eq. § 110; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Hay, 119 Ill. 504 (1887).

[2] Bispham, Eq. § 185.

[3] Bruse v. Nelson, 35 Iowa, 160 (1872): Jeremy.

[4] West Portland Homestead Association v. Lowndale, 17 F. R. 616 (1883), Deady, J., citing 2 Pom. Eq. § 839.

[5] Cummins v. Bulgin, 37 N. J. E. 477 (1883), Van Fleet, Vice-Chancellor.

[6] Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 124 (1860), Dixon, C. J.

[7] [Botsford v. McLean, 45 Barb. 481 (1866), E. D. Smith, J.; Massie v. Heiskell, 80 Va. 801 (1885).

ment. If the parties act fairly, one not being bound to communicate the facts to the other, a court of equity will not interfere.[1]

To entitle a plaintiff to relief in equity the mistake must be clearly established.[2]

"We think that no case can be found where a court of equity has relieved a party on account of a mistake which was made through the mere carelessness and negligence of the party asking relief, where there rested a duty upon him toward the other party to use due care and diligence not to make a mistake."[3]

Relief for a mistake of law cannot be granted in a Federal court.[4]

See further CONSENSUS, Tollit, etc.; IGNORANCE; KNOWLEDGE, 1; MISPRISION, 2; PAYMENT, Voluntary; RECEIPT; RECORD, 2; REFORM; RESCISSION; WILL, 2.

MISTRIAL. See TRIAL.

MISUNDERSTANDING. See ASSENT; MISTAKE.

MISUSER. See USE, 1.

MITIGATION.[5] Lessening the degree of; diminution as to the severity of; reduction of the amount of: as, of damages, punishment or penalty.

The criteria by which the sufficiency of a pleading is ordinarily determined, that is, materiality and relevancy, may not be strictly applied to allegations in an answer of facts by way of mitigation. Such allegations should not be stricken out on motion, unless it is clear that under no possible circumstances could the matter pleaded have the bearing claimed for it.[6] See AGGRAVATION.

MITIORI. See SENSUS.

MITTIMUS. L. We send: a warrant of commitment, q. v.

MIXED. Partaking of two or more natures or characteristics; of two or more species, characters, races, etc.

Mixed action. An action in its nature both real and personal. See ACTION, 2; EJECTMENT.

Mixed case. A case involving principles of law and equity or admiralty. See ADMIRALTY.

Mixed jury. A jury of white and black persons. See JURY.

Mixed larceny. Larceny characterized by circumstances of aggravation; compound larceny, q. v.

Mixed marriage. A marriage contracted between persons of different races. See MARRIAGE.

Mixed property. Property of the nature of both realty and personalty. See PROPERTY.

Mixed question. A question involving matters of law and of fact.

Mixed schools. Schools for the education of different races; specifically, of the white and black races. See SCHOOL.

MIXTION. See CONFUSION.

MOB. A "rebellious mob" commits high treason; a "common mob" commits a riot: the latter wants a universality of purpose to make it rebellious.[1]

The Pennsylvania act of May 31, 1841, which makes the county of Philadelphia liable for property destroyed by a mob, and which was extended to Allegheny county by the act of March 20, 1849, is not repealed by the constitution of 1874. The act is both remedial and penal, and must be liberally construed. The fact that county authorities are unable to quell a riot does not limit the liability of the county for damages done thereby. The act embraces every kind of riotous disturbance.[2]

See ASSEMBLY, Unlawful; INSURRECTION; RIOT.

MOBILIA. L. Movable things; movables, q. v.

Mobilia non habet situm. Movables have no situs.[3]

Mobilia personam sequuntur, immobilia situm. Movables follow the person, immovables the locality. The use and transfer of personalty is regulated by the law of the domicil of the owner; the use and disposition of realty, by the law of the place where situated.[4] See PLACE, 1; PROPERTY; SITUS.

---

[1] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 140–47; Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 60–63 (1876), cases; 8 Wheat. 211; 1 Pet. 1; 13 id. 26; 2 McCrary, 440; 10 Bened. 408; 13 F. R. 256–60, cases; 14 id. 498; 15 id. 368; 7 Ga. 64; 94 N. Y. 247; 9 Cow. 685–87, 674; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 411.

[2] Baltzer v. Raleigh, &c. R. Co., 115 U. S. 645 (1885), cases; Cummins v. Bulgin, 37 N. J. E. 477 (1883); Benson v. Markoe, Sup. Ct. Minn. (1887), cases; 18 Cent. Law J. 7–10 (1884), cases; 1 Law Q. Rev. 298–313 (1885), cases; 2 id. 78–82 (1886), cases; 1 Story, Eq. § 157.

[3] Brown v. Bosworth, 58 Wis. 339 (1883), Taylor, J.; Hurd v. Hall, 12 id. *124–28 (1860), cases, Dixon, C. J.

[4] Allen v. Galloway, 30 F. R. 467 (1887), cases.

[5] L. mitis, soft, mild.

[6] Bradner v. Faulkner, 93 N. Y. 515, 518 (1883).

[1] [Angell, Ins. § 136; Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co., 50 Pa. 341 (1855).

[2] County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 404 (1879): Pittsburgh Riot of July 20–24, 1877. See also Solomon v. Kingston, 24 Hun, 562 (1881); Hart v. Bridgeport, 13 Blatch. 289 (1876); Wing Chung v. Los Angeles, 47 Cal. 351 (1874); Atchison v. Twine, 9 Kan. 356 (1872); Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118 (1871); Baltimore v. Poultney, 25 Md. 107 (1866); Darlington v. New York City, 31 N. Y. 187–89 (1865); 16 Alb. Law J 109 (1877), cases and statutes; Wis. Act 1886.

[3] 4 Johns. Ch. 472.

[4] 4 Kent, 513; 2 id. 67; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 668; Story Confl. L. §§ 376, 424.

MODE. The manner in which a thing is done: as, the mode of proceeding, the mode of process.[1] See MODUS.

Mode of operation. In specifications for letters patent, where the invention falls within the category of machines, a claim for the mechanism and also for the mode of operation generally, is void.[2]

MODEL. A copy or imitation of the thing intended to be represented.[3]

A model of an invention need not be furnished, unless required by the commissioner of patents; and, when required, it is not to exceed one foot in any of its dimensions, except as to working models of complicated machines.[4] See INVENTION.

MODERATE.[5] 1. L. adv. Moderately; reasonably.

Moderate castigavit. He punished with moderation.

A plea justifying a battery by one who has a right to correct another. See BATTERY.

2. Eng. adj. Reasonable; proper.

What is a "moderate speed" for a vessel depends not upon the speed of the vessel herself, but upon the position she is in, whether in a crowded channel or on the open sea.[6]

MODIFICATION. See CONTRACT.

MODUS. L. Manner; way.

Modo et forma. In manner and form. See MANNER.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. Manner and agreement overrule the law. The terms and effect given to an agreement, not contrary to law, may control a rule of law.[7] See CONVENTIO.

Modus legem dat donationi. The manner gives law to a gift. A donor may attach to his gift such condition as he pleases.[8]

MOIETY.[9] A half; an undivided half.

Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. See PARTITION; ENTIRETY.

Moieties, being half of the penalty or forfeiture, were formerly paid to informers under the laws forbidding smuggling. The act of June 22, 1874, abolished the practice, directed that all fines should be paid into the Treasury, and that whatever compensation might be due to informers should be reported to Congress for action.[10]

[1] See 10 Wheat. 29; 9 Pet. 856; 14 id. 316; 16 id. 313; 1 How. 306.

[2] Hatch v. Moffitt, 15 F. R. 252 (1883).

[3] State v. Fox, 25 N. J. L. 602 (1856).

[4] See R. S. § 4930.

[5] L. mŏd-e-rā'(or rä')-tŭs. Eng. mod'-ĕr-āte.

[6] The Elysia, 46 L. T. 840 (1882).

[7] 13 Pick. 491; 22 N. Y. 252; 59 Pa. 389.

[8] Broom, Max. 459; Whart. Max. 259.

[9] F. moitié; L. medietatem, a half.

[10] 1 Sup. R. S. p. 77; United States v. Auffmordt, 19 F. R. 898, 898 (1884).

MOLLITUR. See MANUS.

MONASTERY. See DEATH, Civil.

MONEY. An universal medium, or common standard, by comparison with which the value of all merchandise may be ascertained; a sign which represents the respective values of all commodities.[1]

In its strict technical sense, coined metal, usually gold or silver, upon which the government stamp has been imposed to indicate its value; in its more popular sense, any currency, tokens, bank-notes, or other circulating medium, in general use as the representative of value.[2]

A generic term; includes, but is not confined to, coin; whatever is lawfully and actually current in buying and selling, of the value and as the equivalent of coin. By universal consent, bank-notes, lawfully issued, actually current at par in lieu of coin, are money. "Paper money" is as accurate an expression as "coined money."[3]

The lawful currency of a country; that which may be tendered and must be received in discharge of a subsisting debt.[4]

A simple bequest of "money" will not carry securities. When it can be gathered from the will that the testator used the word in the sense of personal estate, that intention will be given effect.[5]

Power to coin and regulate the value of money is one of the ordinary prerogatives of sovereignty. The power is vested in the national government in order to produce uniformity of value and to prevent the embarrassment of a perpetually fluctuating medium.[6]

Lawful money. "Lawful money of the United States" is lawful money of any State or Territory.[7]

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 276, 329; 2 id. 446; 3 id. 231; 2 Story, Const. § 1118.

[2] Kennedy v. Briere, 45 Tex. 309 (1876), Moore, A. J.; Block v. State, 44 id. 622 (1876).

[3] Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 557 (1879), Ryan, Chief Justice.

[4] Morris v. Edwards, 1 Ohio, 204 (1823). See also 2 Cranch, C. C. 43; 3 T. B. Mon. 166; 15 Pick. 173; 34 Mich. 490; 6 N. J. L. 226; 5 Humph. 140; 71 Ala. 554.

[5] Glendenning v. Glendenning, 9 Beav. 324 (1846); Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen, *3 (1837); Dowson v. Gaskoin, ib. *14 (1837); Smith v. Davis, 1 Grant, 158 (1858); Paul v. Ball, 31 Tex. 10 (1868); Blood v. Fairbanks, 48 Cal. 171 (1874); Smith v. Burch, 92 N. Y. 231–34 (1883), cases; 2 Redf. Wills, 111, 437; Jarm. Wills, Ch. 24; 2 Williams, Ex. 1025.

[6] 2 Story, Const. § 1122; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 602 (1870); 1 Bl. Com. 276.

[7] Cocke v. Kendall, Hempst. 236 (1834); 1 Dall. *125, 175; 7 Wall. 247.

Nothing is "lawful money of the United States" but gold or silver coin, United States treasury notes, or fractional currency. National bank notes are not such money.[1] See further TENDER, 2, Legal.

The notes issued by the Confederate States had no real value; they were made current as dollars by irresistible force. They were the only measure of value the people had, and their use was a matter of almost absolute necessity. This use gave them a sort of value, insignificant and precarious enough it is true, but always having a sufficiently definite relation to gold and silver, the uniform measure of value, that it was always easy to ascertain how much gold and silver was the equivalent of a sum expressed in this currency. The notes were considered as if issued by a foreign government temporarily occupying our territory. Contracts for payments in this currency were not regarded for that reason only, as made in aid of the foreign invasion in the one case, or of the domestic insurrection in the other. They had no necessary relation to the hostile government. They were transactions in the ordinary course of civil society, and, though they might indirectly and remotely have promoted the ends of the unlawful government, were without blame, except when proved to have been entered into with an actual intent to further invasion or insurrection. Such contracts should be enforced after the restoration of peace.[2]

Deferred payments under a contract for the sale of land, made in 1856, came due during the war and were paid to the representative of the vendor in Confederate money. Held, that, as against the heirs of the vendor who did not ratify it, the payment did not extinguish the indebtedness: that lawful money of the United States was contemplated.[3]

Money bills. In the constitution of Massachusetts, bills before the legislature that transfer money or property from the people to the State; not bills that appropriate from the treasury of the State. Bills for revenue.[4]

Money counts. Claims in an action of assumpsit (q. v.) for money expended in behalf of the defendant or received by him for the plaintiff.[5] See COUNT, 4 (1), Common.

Money judgment. A judgment for a sum of money, rather than for other property. Opposed to personal judgment.

Money made. See MAKE, 7.

Money-order. The act of June 8, 1872, c. 355, provided for the establishment of the money-order system of the United States.[1]

Moneyed capital. As used in Rev. St., § 5219, forbidding a State to tax shares of stock in national banks at a greater rate than is assessed upon other "moneyed capital" in the hands of individual citizens of the State, embraces capital employed in national banks, and capital employed by individuals when the object of their business is the making of profit by the use of their moneyed capital as money.

It does not include moneyed capital in the hands of a corporation, even if its business be such as to make its shares moneyed capital when in the hands of individuals, or if it invests its capital in securities payable in money.[2]

Moneyed corporation. See CORPORATION.

Moneys. Is not more extensive than "money."[3]

Public money. In the statutes of the United States, ordinarily, the money of the government, received from the public revenues or intrusted to its officers charged with the duty of receiving, keeping, or disbursing the same.[4] See REVENUE.

See APPROPRIATE, 1 (3); ATTACH, 2; AVAILABLE; BAGGAGE; BANK, 2; CAPITAL, 2; CHATTEL; CHECK; CIRCULATION; CONDEMNATION; COIN; CONVERSION, 2; CORRUPTION; CREDIT, Bill of; CURRENCY, 2; DEPOSIT, 2; DOLLAR; DUE; GOODS; GREENBACK; IDENTITY, 2; INCOME; INTEREST, 3; INVEST, 2; PAYMENT; POUND, 1; PRICE; PURCHASE-MONEY; SPECIE; SUM; TAX, 2; TREASURE-TROVE; USURY. Compare ASS.

MONITION.[5] A process, in the nature of a summons, issued by courts proceeding according to the civil law; in particular, by admiralty courts.[6]

[1] Hamilton v. State, 60 Ind. 194 (1877).

[2] Thornington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 11-13 (1868), Chase, C. J.; Effinger v. Kenney, 115 U. S. 566, 569-76 (1885); Wilmington, &c. R. Co. v. King, 91 id. 3 (1875); Stewart v. Salamon, 94 id. 434 (1876); Cook v. Lillo, 103 id. 792 (1880); Rives v. Duke, 105 id. 140 (1881).

[3] Opie v. Castleman, 32 F. R. 511 (1887), Jackson, J.

[4] Opinion of the Justices, 126 Mass. 601, 593 (1878).

[5] See Brand v. Williams, 29 Minn. 239 (1882).

[1] See R. S. §§ 4027-48; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 155. Compare 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88.

[2] Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 155-57 (1887), Matthews, J. See on same subject, Bank of Redemption v. Boston, 125 id. 60 (1888); Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall. 480, 483 (1874); First Nat. Bank of Utica v. Waters, 19 Blatch. 242 (1881); Evansville Nat. Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 322 (1881); Boyer v. Boyer, 113 id. 689 (1885); McMahon v. Palmer, 102 N. Y. 176, 188 (1886); Wasson v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, 107 Ind. 206 (1886); Richards v. Town of Rock Rapids, 31 F. R. 508 (1887); Tennessee v. Whitworth, under TAX, 2.

[3] Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns. *12 (1816); 1 Johns. Ch. 231; 9 Barb. 35; 4 Jones, Eq. 244.

[4] Branch v. United States, 13 Ct. Cl. 289 (1876).

[5] L. monere, to make to think, advise.

[6] See St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 484 (1883).

General monition. A citation or summons to all persons interested to appear and show cause why the libel should not be sustained and the prayer for relief granted. Special monition. A similar warrant giving special notice to persons named, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. Mixed monition. Contains directions to all persons interested and a special summons to particular persons.[1]

Acts of Congress and the rules and practice of the courts prescribe the time and manner of notice and service of the several writs. A writ may issue upon libel or information against a promissory note to attach, seize, or arrest it.[2] See RES, 2.

MONK. See DEATH, Civil.

MONOGRAPH.[3] A discourse or treatise, frequently in pamphlet form, upon a special subject, usually a branch to a more general division; as, on the removal of causes from a State court to the United States circuit court. Whence monographic, monographical.

MONOMANIA. See MANIA.

MONOPOLY.[4] A license or privilege allowed by the sovereign for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using of anything whatsoever; whereby the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before.[5]

An exclusive right granted to a few, of something which was before of common right. Lord Coke's definition is "an institution by the king, by his grant, commission, or otherwise, to any persons or corporations, of or for the sole buying, selling, making, working or using of every thing, whereby any persons or corporations are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade."[6]

A grant which gives to one person, or to one association of persons, an exclusive right to buy, sell, make, or use a given thing or commodity, or to pursue a designated employment.[1]

The prerogative of granting such rights having been abused, the courts adjudged them illegal,[2] and Parliament, by statute of 21 James I (1624), c. 3, abrogated the practice, except with respect to patents for fourteen years. A patent resembles a contract more nearly than it resembles a monopoly, in the common-law sense of the latter term.[3]

All such grants relating to any known trade or manufacture have been held by all the judges of England to be void at common law as destroying the freedom of trade, discouraging labor and industry, restraining persons from getting an honest livelihood, and putting it in the power of the grantees to enhance the price of commodities.[4]

A legislative grant of an exclusive right to supply water or gas to a municipality and its inhabitants is a grant of a franchise vested in the State, in consideration of the performance of a public service, and, after performance by the grantee, is a contract protected by the Constitution from impairment. Such franchise is violated by a grant to an individual of the right to supply his premises with water (or gas) by the same means, namely, by pipes laid through the public streets. In making such grants, a State legislature does not part with the police power and duty of protecting the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, as one or the other may be involved in the exercise of that franchise by the grantee.[5]

Though the use of a street for water mains may not be of common right, yet when the use would assist in the maintenance of a claim of exclusive right to sell water, the courts, in view of the constitutional declaration that monopolies "shall never be allowed," will give no sanction to a contract entered into by the city resulting in a monopoly. The exercise of such a franchise, involving, as it does, a use of the public streets, is subject to control.[6]

---

[1] [Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 132.

[2] Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall. 103 (1869).

[3] Gk. mŏnŏs, single, one; graphein, to write.

[4] Gk. mŏnŏs, sole, exclusive; pōlein, to sell.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 159.

[6] Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 607 (1837), Story, J.; 3 Coke, Inst. 181. See also Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 102 (1872).

[1] City of Benham v. Benham Water Co., 67 Tex. 561 (1887), Stayton, A. J.

[2] Case of Monopolies (Darcy v. Allein), 6 Coke, 84 (1601). See Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 761 (1884); Norwich Gas Light Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co., 25 Conn. 36 (1856); Slaughter-House Cases, infra.

[3] Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 18 (1829); Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 494 (1850); Turrill v. Michigan, &c. R. Co., 1 Wall. 491 (1863); 111 U. S. 763.

[4] Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 102 (1872), Field, J. dissenting: 18 id. 138 (1873). See also 19 Pick. 54; 13 Allen, 372; 1 Wash. T. 284.

[5] New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674 (1885), Harlan, J.; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co., ib. 683, 691 (1885); New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., ib. 650 (1885); New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Refining Co., 125 id. 18 (1888). See also Memphis v. Water Co., 5 Heisk. 495 (1871). See generally Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Texas, &c. R. Co., 11 F. R. 625 (1882); ib. 632–34, note.

[6] [City of Benham v. Benham Water Co., 67 Tex. 561 (1887). Compare Norwich Gas Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co., 25 Conn. 19 (1856); State v. Cincinnati Gas Co., 18

Plaintiff by its charter was given the exclusive horse-railway franchise of Omaha for fifty years. Defendant, under a city ordinance, consented to by the people, undertook to lay a cable tramway on streets occupied by the plaintiff. The court refused to enjoin the defendant, holding that the grant of the monopoly was of forms of transportation then known, and not of such as might subsequently be devised.[1]

"The fuel company has placed itself in the position of seeking to obtain from the railroad company, not merely favorable rates, but a discrimination against other parties. The result will be the building up of a monopoly in the coal business. A party who voluntarily enters into such a contract is in no position to ask the courts that anything be strained in his behalf. If the fuel company could make similar contracts with other transportation companies, running to other fields, it would soon be master of the coal business of the northwestern country. It would have the monopoly of that business, and could dictate prices to the consumer and starvation wages to the producers; and, when the first contracts had expired, it could dictate transportation rates to the railroad companies. . . It is impossible to disintegrate the contract, and say that one part is good and the other bad. The parties entered into it as a whole, and the courts should not try to divide it in order to uphold parts. If one part is void and the rest valid, the contract must be read as an entirety, and the whole declared void. Any other doctrine would result in building up monopolies. Persons who enter into such contracts need never expect, no matter what the conduct of the other party, recognition in courts of justice."[2]

See COMBINATION, 2; HAPPINESS; POLICE, 2; PRIVILEGE, 1, Special; RAILROAD; TRADE-MARK; TRUST, 2.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT. F. Manifestation or plea of right; showing title.

A method, at common law, of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown of either real or personal property. When the right of the party, as well as the right of the crown, appears upon record, that party shall have monstrans de droit, which is putting in a claim of right grounded upon facts already acknowledged and established and praying the judgment of the court, whether the king or his subject has the right. The remedy was extended by statutes to almost all cases where a subject based his claim against the crown upon an inquisition of office. When the evidence of the subject's right was not of record, he formerly presented a "petition de droit" in which he set out the facts constituting his claim, whereupon a commission issued to inquire of the truth of the suggestion. Either proceeding could be prosecuted in the chancery or exchequer courts. The judgment, if against the crown, was that of ouster le main or amoveas manus.[1]

MONTH. At common law, twenty-eight days, unless otherwise expressed: a uniform period, falling into a quarterly division of weeks.[2]

Astronomical month. One-twelfth of the period during which the sun passes through the zodiac.

Calendar month. A month known as January, February, March, etc. See CALENDAR, 1.

Civil month. The same as solar month.

Lunar month. Twenty-eight days, the period of one revolution by the moon.

Solar month. One of the months in the Gregorian calendar, of twenty-eight to thirty-one days.

Monthly. Once each calendar month; as, a monthly trip.[3]

The common law construed "month" as a lunar month; the general commercial law, as a calendar month. The common-law courts in time adopted the latter rule in construing commercial instruments, while they adhered to the former rule in construing common-law papers.[4]

The term "month" is not technical. When parties have not given it a definition, and there is no legislative provision on the subject, it will be construed in its ordinary sense of calendar month.[5]

When parties contract for the performance of an act during the first half of a month of thirty-one days, the act is to be done by noon of the sixteenth day.[6]

A letting by parol for a sum certain per month, without anything said about a year, constitutes a lease from month to month. If the tenant holds over for more than a year he remains a tenant from month to month; and one month's notice to him to quit is sufficient.[7]

Ohio St. 262 (1868); Memphis v. Memphis Water Co., 5 Heisk. 495 (1871); Crescent City Gas Co. v. New Orleans Gas Co., 27 La. An. 138 (1875).

[1] Omaha Horse-Railway Co. v. Cable Tramway Co., 30 F. R. 324 (1887), Brewer, Cir. J. Compare Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Company, 1 Wall. 116 (1863).

[2] Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern R. Co. v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 31 F. R. 657, 659 (1887), Brewer, J. On limitation on grants, see 26 Am. Law Reg. 65-71 (1887), cases.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 256-57; 3 Steph. Com. 656-57; Brown v. Commonwealth, 5 Leigh, *516 (1834); Flott v. Commonwealth, 12 Gratt. 576 (1855).

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 141.

[3] Pacific Mail S. Co. v. United States, 18 Ct. Cl. 88 (1883).

[4] See Redmond v. Glover, Dudley, 107 (Ga., 1832); 2 Whart. Contr. § 896, cases; Bish. Contr. § 1339, cases.

[5] Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. 190 (1864). See also 2 Dall. 302; 4 id. 143; 3 Cranch, C. C. 218; 21 Ala. 42; 31 Cal. 173; 5 Conn. 357; 2 Harr., Del., 548; 16 Ind. 275; 8 Me. 163; 17 Md. 260; 2 Mass. 170; 4 id. 460; 19 Pick. 522; 37 Miss. 567; 72 N. C. 146; 29 N. H. 385; 4 Wend. 512; 10 id. 393; 8 Cow. 260; 1 Johns. Cas. 99; 3 Johns. Ch. 74; 15 Johns. 119, 358; 28 N. Y. 444; 6 W. & S. 179; 6 S. & R. 539; 2 Vt. 138; 1 Wash. T. 518.

[6] Grosvenor v. Magill, 37 Ill. 240 (1865).

[7] Hollis v. Burns, 100 Pa. 206 (1882); Taylor, Land. & T. § 57.

MONUMENT.[1] 1. A memorial; a permanent landmark.

Artificial monument. A mark made by man; as, a post, or a clearing.

Mural monument. A memorial made in a wall.

Natural monument. Some natural object, like a spring, a stream, or a tree.

In the determination of monuments, boundaries control courses and distances, because less liable to mistakes. But the rule ceases with the reason for it. If they are inconsistent with the calls for other monuments, and it is apparent that they were inadvertently inserted, they will be rejected as false and repugnant.[2] See further BOUNDARY; HEARSAY, 3.

2. Something designed to perpetuate the memory of a person or event.[3]

MOOT.[4] To debate, make the subject of contention.

For exercise in arguing; for the purpose of pleading or trying mock causes or issues: as, a moot court.

Moot; mooted. Debated, undecided: as, a mooted question.

The courts will not give an opinion upon a moot or fictitious case.[5] See FICTITIOUS.

MORAL.[6] 1. Conformed to rules of right: as, a moral character, q. v.

2. Condemned on ethical considerations; perpetrated or existing in fact: as, moral fraud, q. v.

3. Not of legal sanction; not imposed or enforced by positive law; opposed to legal, immoral: as, a moral — consideration, duty, obligation, qq. v. See also RIGHT, 1.

4. Inhering in the affections, inclinations, and temper: as, moral insanity, q. v.

5. Sufficient in degree to authorize action; established by proof, beyond a reasonable doubt: as, moral — certainty, evidence, proof, qq. v.

Morals. Manners, conduct, deportment.

Offenses against good morals include indecency, obscenity, lascivious carriage, exposures of the person, public drunkenness, gambling, and the like.[7]

A contract opposed to good morals, that is, sound morality, will not be enforced by the courts; as, an obligation resting upon any immoral consideration, a contract which is an incentive to crime, offensive to decency, or pernicious in its consequences. See LEGAL, Illegal.

As the end of human law is to regulate the behavior of men as members of society, they have no concern with other than social or relative duties. The man who keeps his wickedness to himself, and does not offend against the rules of public decency, is out of the reach of such laws. But if he makes his vices public, though they be such as seem principally to affect himself, they then become, by their example, of pernicious effects to society; and, therefore, it is then the business of human laws to correct them. Public sobriety is a relative duty, enjoined by the laws.[1]

See OBSCENE; POLICE, 2; RELIGION; SUNDAY.

MORE OR LESS. The addition of these or like qualifying words provides against accidental variations arising from slight and unimportant excesses or deficiencies in number, measure, or weight.[2]

They qualify a statement of an absolute and definite amount, so that neither party to a contract can avoid it by reason of a deficiency or surplus occasioned by no fraud or want of good faith, if there is a reasonable approximation to the quantity named. They create "an absolute contract for a specific quantity within a reasonable limit."[3]

Where land is sold at a fixed price per acre, and the vendor misrepresents the number of acres, the vendee is entitled to an abatement on the purchase price, though the deed contains the phrase "more or less."[4]

Where a person purchased at a judicial sale, held to pay the debts of a decedent, one hundred and twenty-eight acres of land in a tract supposed to contain forty acres, his heirs may recover the excess or enforce payment therefor.[5] See ABOUT; DESCRIPTION, 1; ESTIMATE; LEX, De minimis, etc.

MOREOVER. See ALSO.

MOREY LETTER. See page 621, n. 2.

MORMONISM. See POLYGAMY.

MORTAL. See WOUND.

MORTALITY, BILL OF. 1. An official record of deaths.

---

[1] L. moneo, to remind, advise.

[2] White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 524–25 (1876); Land Co. v. Saunders, 106 id. 316 (1880); Morse v. Rogers, 118 Mass. 578 (1875), cases.

[3] See Mead v. Case, 33 Barb. 204 (1860); Cooke v. Millard, 65 N. Y. 363 (1875).

[4] A. S. mot, a meeting.

[5] Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 135 (1873).

[6] L. mos, mor-, manner, custom.

[7] See 2 Bl. Com. 42; 36 N. Y. 226.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. 124; 4 id. 41–42; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 76.

[2] Brawley v. United States, 96 U. S. 172, 171 (1877), Bradley, J.; Norrington v. Wright, 115 id. 204 (1885).

[3] Cabot v. Winsor, 1 Allen, 550 (1861), Bigelow, C. J. See also 1 Pet. C. C. 49; 4 Mas. 418–22, cases; 99 Mass. 232–35, cases; 108 id. 344; 9 Ct. Cl. 244; 11 id. 522; 17 Ves. 394; 2 B. & Ad. 106; 19 Ark. 102; 69 Ga. 511; 3 Marsh. J. J. 421; 5 id. 181; 5 Bush, 663; 29 Md. 305; 3 Md. Ch. 24; 4 id. 95; 24 Miss. 597; 24 Mo. 574; 40 id. 79; 62 id. 405; 4 N. J. E. 212; 14 N. Y. 143; 83 id. 116; 9 S. & R. 80; 13 id. 143; 24 Tex. 345; 59 id. 604; 21 W. Va. 333, 647; 81 Va 183; 12 Rep. 565.

[4] Tyler v. Anderson, 106 Ind. 189–91 (1886), cases: 24 Am. Law Reg. 570 (1885); ib. 574–80, cases.

[5] Miller v. Craig, 83 Ky. 623 (1886).

2. The district included in such record; as, that a person resides within the bill of mortality.[1]

MORTGAGE.[2] A transfer of property as security for a debt.[3]

In most of the States, not now regarded as a conveyance, but as a mere lien or incumbrance upon the property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other pecuniary obligation.[4]

In effect, a sale with a power of defeasance, which may ultimately end in an absolute transfer of the title.[5]

The conveyance of an estate by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it.[6]

The legal ownership is vested in the creditor; but, in equity, the mortgagor remains the actual owner, until he is debarred by his own default or by judicial decree.[8]

In equity, a mortgage is a security — an incident to the debt it secures. In law, as between the parties, it is a transfer of the legal title, leaving in the mortgagor a right to redeem.[7]

Mortgages are not sales, transfers or conveyances, in the usual acceptation of those terms, but securities for the payment of money.[8]

A mortgage is but a mere security for the debt, and collateral to it. The debt has an independent existence, and remains notwithstanding a release of the mortgage. The debt is the principal, the mortgage an incident, though not an indispensable incident. An assignment of the debt will, in equity, carry the mortgaged property with it.[9]

A mortgage is an estate held in dead pledge: where a man borrows a sum of money and grants the lender an estate in fee, on condition that if he repays the money on a day mentioned in the deed he may reenter on the estate; or (the more usual way) the lender will reconvey the estate to him. In case of non-payment, the land is forever dead and gone from the borrower and the lender's estate is no longer conditional but absolute. In effect, a mortgage is an estate defeasible upon a condition subsequent.[1]

An agreement to pay "a mortgage" refers to the mortgage debt.[2]

Mortgagor. He who makes a mortgage.[3]

Mortgagee. He to whom a mortgage is given.

The estate transferred is a trust, a qualified estate and security. When the debt is discharged, there is a resulting trust for the mortgagor. It is, therefore, only in a loose and general sense that it is called a "lien;" and then only by way of contrast to an estate absolute, and indefeasible.[4] As between the mortgagor and strangers, the mortgage is a lien, a security, not an estate; as between the parties, or their privies, it is a grant which operates to transfer the legal title to the mortgagee, and leaves the mortgagor only the right to redeem. The legal title is in the mortgagee until redemption, and bills to redeem are entertained upon the principle that the mortgagee holds for the mortgagor when the debt has been paid or tendered.[6]

Under the old theory the mortgage was the conveyance of a conditional estate, which became absolute upon breach of condition. But the courts of equity, viewing the transaction as one of security and not of purchase, interfered and gave the mortgagor the right to redeem after a breach and forfeiture, upon discharge of the obligation within reasonable time. The mortgagee, after the close of the reasonable period unused, could sue to foreclose this equity of redemption. To this proceeding the holder of the equity was an essential party — his equity being regarded as the real and beneficial estate, subject to transfer and to seizure and sale. Hence, the owner of the property must be heard as to the existence of the obligation alleged, before a sale can be made.[6]

The obligation and the mortgage are inseparable, the latter being an incident. An assignment of the obligation carries the mortgage with it, while an assignment of the mortgage alone is a nullity. The mortgage can have no separate existence. When the obligation is discharged, the mortgage expires. This dependent relation is the controlling consideration, and takes a case out of the rule applied to choses in action.[7]

---

[1] See 3 Bl. Com. 369; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310.

[2] F. mort, dead; gage, pledge, q. v.

[3] Conard v. Atlantic Insurance Co., 1 Pet. 441 (1828), Story, J. May also be used in verbal senses, Brown v. National Bank, 44 Ohio St. 274 (1886).

[4] Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 293 (1874), Field, J.; Neslin v. Wells, 104 U. S. 440 (1881).

[5] Willamette Manuf. Co. v. Bank of British Columbia, 119 U. S. 198 (1886), Miller, J.

[6] 4 Kent, 136; Cowles v. Dickinson, 140 Mass. 376 (1886); 49 Conn. 318-19; 2 Dak. 263; 34 La. An. 800; 10 S. C. 368-75.

[7] Marks v. Robinson, 82 Ala. 77 (1886), Stone, C. J.

[8] Judge v. Connecticut Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 523 (1882), Devens, J.; Friezen v. Allemania Fire Ins. Co., 30 F. R. 358 (1887).

[9] Hatch v. White, 2 Gall. 154 (1814), Story, J.

[1] [2 Bl. Com. 157; 1 Washb. R. P. 477. See also 2 Sumn. 533; 17 F. R. 778; 18 id. 391; 9 Cal. 407, 426; 10 Conn. 294; 6 Del. 326; 4 Fla. 347; 17 Ill. 261; 27 Ind. 472; 44 Me. 299; 55 id. 355; 6 Gray, 153; 83 Ky. 395; 7 Mich. 527; 6 Neb 389; 11 N. H. 574; 34 N. J. L. 502; 9 N. Y. 213; 23 Wend. 668; 38 Tex. 442; 9 Wis. 508; 12 id. 420. As to essential formalities, see 23 Cent. Law J. 221 (1886).

[2] Tuttle v. Armstead, 53 Conn. 181 (1885).

[3] Pronounced as if spelled mortgage-or, i. e., gej-or. Mortgage*or* and -er are rare, in law publications. Compare PLEDGOR.

[4] Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 441 (1828), Story, Justice.

[6] Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. 529 (1870), Strong, J.; Hutchins v. King, 1 id. 58 (1863); 107 U. S. 392.

[6] Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 292 (1874), Field, J.

[7] Carpenter v. Longan, 16 Wall. 274 (1872), Swayne, J.; Myer v. Western Car Co., 102 U. S. 10 (1880).

A bond being the principal thing containing the obligation, and a mortgage a security to insure the performance of that obligation, the terms of the bond control.[1]

The mortgagor may sell fixtures, timber, or minerals; otherwise, the means of paying the lien would be taken from him, and a purchaser of the products of the realty would have to get the assent of lien creditors, to be safe from constructive fraud.[2]

It is the land that is pledged, not the rents and profits; they belong to the tenant in possession, unless otherwise agreed. As long as the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession, he is entitled to the income of the estate. If the mortgagee wishes to receive the rents he must take means to obtain the possession. The mortgagor contracts to pay interest, not rent.[3]

The mortgagee may sue on the obligation, bring ejectment, or file a bill for foreclosure and sale;[4] or, he may, perhaps, enter upon the land.[5]

Under a decree of foreclosure, the title of the purchaser takes effect by relation to the date of the mortgage and defeats any subsequent lien.[6]

In a "pledge," the possession passes out of the pledgor; in a mortgage it need not pass. Again, the general property passes by a mortgage; by a pledge, only a special property passes.[7] See PLEDGE.

A "conditional sale" is a purchase with an agreement to resell; in a mortgage a debt still subsists.[8] See SALE, Conditional.

An instrument "once a mortgage is always a mortgage."[9]

The interest of the mortgagee is not subject, at common law, to levy and sale.[10]

A court of equity will not undertake to determine the validity of a title prior to the mortgage, and adverse to both mortgagor and mortgagee.[11]

Chattel mortgage. A mortgage of personal property.[12]

A bill of sale with a defeasance incorporated in it.

A seal is not necessary. If the transaction rests on good consideration and is bona fide, the mortgagor may retain possession,—in obedience to the wants of trade.[1]

The nature of the agreement must be such that by the mere non-performance of the condition by the mortgagor the title will be transferred to the mortgagee. In a "pledge," possession only is transferred.[2]

Common mortgage. A mortgage that, under common-law rules, cannot be foreclosed before the lapse of a year and a day after breach of the condition. Sharp or tight mortgage. Allows no days of grace, or a limited number (as, thirty, sixty, or ninety days), after a default in paying interest, principal, premiums of insurance, taxes, etc., before foreclosure proceedings may be begun.

These distinctions may obtain in localities only, and be merely colloquial.

Equitable mortgage. 1. A mortgage of an equitable interest. 2. The lien of a vendor of realty for unpaid purchase-money, q. v. 3. A lien upon realty, recognized in a court of equity, as security for money loaned or due; as, in the case of a deposit of title-deeds with a creditor. Legal mortgage. A conveyance expressly intended to be a mortgage.

It may be laid down as a rule, subject to few exceptions, that wherever a conveyance, an assignment, or other instrument transferring an estate, is originally intended between the parties as a security for money, or for any other incumbrance, whether this intention appears from the same instrument or from any other, it is always considered in equity as a mortgage, and, consequently, is redeemable upon the performance of the conditions or stipulations thereof.[3]

A court of equity will treat a deed, absolute in form, as a mortgage, when it is executed as security for a loan of money. The court looks beyond the terms of the instrument to the real transaction, and any evidence, oral or written, tending to show this is admissible. While the written language used cannot be qualified or varied from its natural import, inquiry into the object of the parties in executing the instru-

[1] Indiana, &c. R. Co. v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 761 (1880).

[2] Angier v. Agnew, 98 Pa. 589 (1881), cases.

[3] Kountz v. Omaha Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 392 (1882), Bradley, J.; Teal v. Walker, 111 id. 250 (1884); Freedman's Saving Co. v. Shepherd, 127 id. 502 (1888), cases. As to lien of mortgagee on insurance money, see 88 Alb. Law J. 188-191 (1888), cases.

[4] Gilman v. Illinois, &c. R. Co., 91 U. S. 617 (1875), cases.

[5] Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. 530 (1870).

[6] Osterberg v. Union Trust Co., 93 U. S. 428 (1876).

[7] Huntington v. Mather, 2 Barb. 543 (1848); Chamberlain v. Martin, 43 id. 610 (1865).

[8] Slowey v. McMurray, 27 Mo. 116 (1858); Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 527 (1837). Mortgages as choses in actions, 37 Alb. Law J. 44-46 (1888), cases.

[9] Dean v. Nelson, 10 Wall. 171 (1869).

[10] Morris v. Barker, 82 Ala. 274-75 (1886), cases.

[11] Hefner v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 123 U. S. 75 (1887), cases, Gray, J. On the assumption of mortgages, see 18 Cent. Law J. 23-27 (1884), cases.

[12] 2 Kent, 516.

[1] Gibson v. Warden, 14 Wall. 247 (1871), Swayne, J.; Robinson v. Elliott, 22 id. 523 (1874); 8 W. Va. 40.

[2] Parshall v. Eggart, 52 Barb. 371 (1868); Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 428, 441 (1868); Evans v. Darlington, 5 Blackf. 322 (1840); 4 Kent, 138. As to description of property, see 24 Cent. Law J. 339 (1887), cases.

See also 18 Ark. 112; 36 Cal. 428; 8 Ill. 463; 16 Ind. 390; 97 Mass. 452, 489; 7 Mich. 47; 6 Ired. L. 319; 9 N. Y. 217; 54 id. 23; 8 Johns. 98; 23 Wend. 668; Penn. Act 26 April, 1887: P. L. 32.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 1018; 2 Washb. R. P. 479, cases; 4 Kent, 142; 3 Pars. Contr. 280.

ment is always permissible. This serves to prevent fraud or oppression, and to promote justice.[1]

First mortgage. Implies a lien prior to all other liens. Second mortgage. Is without intervening liens between it and the first mortgage.[2]

Mortgage-bonds. As individual holders of mortgage-bonds issued by a railroad corporation, and secured by the same mortgage, have mutual contract interests and relations, there is nothing inequitable, when the power exists, in subjecting a small minority to the will of a decided majority, in re-organizing the mortgage indebtedness when the corporation is embarrassed.[3] See Railroad-Mortgage.

Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage upon realty given to secure a balance due upon a conveyance thereof.

Favored over mortgages for loans. See PURCHASE-MONEY.

Railroad-mortgage. Railroad-mortgages constitute a peculiar class of securities. A trustee is appointed who represents the mortgagees. In the execution of his trust he may exercise his discretion within the scope of his powers. He is to follow the voice of the majority of the bondholders: they acting in good faith, and their request being consistent with the nature of the trust. He represents them in legal proceedings, and whatever binds him binds them.[4]

The trustees of a railroad-mortgage having obtained a decree for possession of the road are also entitled, there being no debts for current expenses, to receive profits earned since the suit was begun, the effect of the decree being to establish their right of possession when suit was entered.[5]

See ADVANCES, Future; CONDITION; DEFEASANCE; EMBLEMENTS; FIXTURE; FORECLOSURE, 1; LIEN, Equitable; MARSHAL, 2, Liens; PLEDGE; RECEIVER, 2; RECORD; REDEEM; RES, In rem; TABULA; TACKING; TERRE-TENANT; UNDER AND SUBJECT.

MORTMAIN.[1] Originally, a purchase of land by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. But these purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which the lands became perpetually inherent in one "dead hand," occasioned the appellation to be applied to such alienations alone.[2]

The members of ecclesiastical bodies were at that time reckoned as "dead" in law.

The statutes in England which prohibit corporations from taking lands by devise, even for charities, except in special cases, are called the Statutes of Mortmain, mortua manu, for the reason of which Sir Edward Coke offers many conjectures.[3]

The word now designates all prohibitory laws which limit, restrain, or annul gifts, grants, or devises of lands or other corporeal hereditaments to charitable uses.[3]

Amortize, or admortize. To alien lands in mortmain. Whence amortization, amortizement.

By allowing lands to become vested in objects endowed with perpetuity of duration, in former times, the lords were deprived of escheats and other feudal profits, and the general policy of the common law, which favored the free circulation of property, was frustrated, although the power of purchasing lands was incident to corporations. Numerous statutes restraining alienation in mortmain were passed, the effect of which was to deprive corporations of the power of acquiring realty without a general or particular license from the crown. These restraints were subsequently relaxed in particulars, including gifts for purposes of charity. The statute of 9 Geo. II (1736), c. 36, is known as the Mortmain Act, by pre-eminence.[4]

The English statutes have not been re-enacted in this country, except in Pennsylvania, where they have extended to prohibiting the dedication of property to superstitious uses, and to grants to corporations without a statutory license.[5] See CHARITY, 2.

MORTUARY. A customary gift due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of a parishioner.[6]

MORTUUS. L. Dead. See CAPUT, Mortuum.

[1] Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 336 (1877), cases, Field, J.; Teal v. Walker, 111 id. 246 (1884), cases; Horbach v. Hill, 112 id. 144 (1884); Coyle v. Davis, 116 id. 108 (1885); Jackson v. Lawrence, 117 id. 681 (1886), cases; Cadman v. Peter, 118 id. 80 (1886), cases; Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 411–412 (1886), cases; Kemper v. Campbell, 44 Ohio St. 210 (1886); 1 Cranch, 218; 1 How. 118; 38 Ala. 643; 36 Me. 115; 21 Mo. 325; 38 N. H. 22; 18 N. J. L. 244; 2 N. M. 318; 7 Johns. Ch. 40; 20 Ohio, 464; 64 Pa. 319; 100 id. 18, 113; 6 Humph. 99; 59 Tex. 208, 425; 76 Va. 668; White & Tud. L. C., Am. ed., 241, cases.

[2] Green's Appeal, 97 Pa. 347–48 (1881); 79 id. 168; Minnesota, &c. R. Co. v. Sibley, 2 Minn. 24 (1858); Clark v. Edgar, 12 Mo. Ap. 353 (1882).

[3] Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 535 (1883).

[4] Shaw v. Little Rock, &c. R. Co., 100 U. S. 611–12 (1879), Waite, C. J.: 121 id. 86. See also Fosdick v. Schall, 99 id. 252 (1878); Burnham v. Bowen, 111 id. 776 (1884); Woodworth v. Blair, 112 id. 8 (1884).

[5] Dow v. Memphis, &c. R. Co. 124 U. S. 654 (1888), Waite, C. J.; Sage v. Memphis, &c. R. Co., 125 id. 361, 377 (1888). As to claims for labor and materials, over the lien of railroad-mortgages, see 21 Cent. Law J. 125–29 (1885), cases; as to foreclosure of, 20 Am. Law Rev. 867–88 (1886), cases.

[1] F. mort main, dead hand.

[2] 2 Bl. Com. 268; 1 id. 479.

[3] 2 Story, Eq. § 1137, note; Yates v. Yates, 9 Barb. 333 (1850); Plowd. 193.

[4] Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 495 (1860); Downing v. Marshall, 23 How. Pr. 84 (1861); 2 Bl. Com. 269; Williams, R. P. 67; 8 H. L. C. 712.

[5] Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. *320 (1821); Goundie v. Water Co., 7 Pa. 239 (1847). See Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 353 (1879).

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 425.

Mortuum vadium. Dead pledge, q. v.

Mortuus est. He is dead,—a return to process.

MOTHER. See ANCESTOR; BASTARD; CONSANGUINITY; PARENT; PARTUS.

MOTION.[1] 1. Desire, will; instance.

A person does a thing of his "own motion," when he acts voluntarily, without being required to do it. And "mere motion" refers a court's objecting to a proceeding for irregularity, sua sponte,—ex mero motu, or ex propria motu.

2. An application to the court, by a party or his counsel, to obtain some rule or order which may become necessary in the progress of a cause.[2]

An application for a rule or order, made viva voce to a court or judge.[3]

It is distinguished from the more formal applications for relief by petition or complaint. The grounds of the motion are often required to be stated in writing and filed.[3]

Making such application is termed "moving" the court; and the motion itself is spoken of as granted or allowed, refused, denied, withdrawn, etc.

A motion is "of course" when it is a matter of mere routine; and "special," when granted after hearing had. It is "ex parte" when applied for by one party with no notice to his adversary; and "on notice" or "with notice" when opportunity to resist is afforded the adversary.

"Motion-day" is the time when motions are ordinarily entertained.

Movent. He who makes a motion before a court: as, the movent for a new trial. (Rare.)

Motions and rules may be defined in a general way as instruments or means of facilitating the progress of a cause or the transaction of the business of litigation, by correcting clerical steps, or amending errors not fatal; by accommodating the case to changes of circumstances since its commencement; by meeting exigencies unforeseen or unprovided for; by removing difficulties in the development of the case which stop progress; or by advancing the case in any way toward its final and proper disposition.[4]

MOTIVE. Inducement; incentive to action.

In cases of proof by circumstantial evidence, the motive for doing an alleged act often becomes not only material but controlling, and in such cases the facts from which the motive may be inferred must be proved.[1]

Litigation would be endless if the motives of those who are simply enforcing a legal claim were legitimate subjects of inquiry.[2]

See INTENT; MALICE; PREDOMINANT; PREMEDITATE; PROSECUTION, Malicious.

MOURNING. See ANNUS, Luctus.

MOVE. A consideration issuing from or furnished by a party is said to "move" from him.[3] See also MOTION.

Movable. That which can be changed in place, or carried from place to place. Movables. Such things in themselves considered. Opposed to immovable, immovables.

The law attaches no technical meaning to "movable property," used in a will. "Movable," applied to property, ordinarily signifies capable of being put out of one place into another; that the property is susceptible of locomotion or change of place. But this is predicable of that only which is corporeal or tangible. Obviously, a judgment is not of this character.[4]

"Movables," standing alone, comprehends personal property generally.[5]

See FIXTURE; MOBILIA; PERSONALTY.

MR.; MRS. See NAME, 1.

MULATTO. A person begotten between a white and a black; not, therefore, the issue of a white and a mulatto.[6] See COLOR; WHITE.

MULCT.[7] A fine imposed for an offense; a penalty.

Defendants in actions of tort, against whom damages are awarded, are sometimes said to be "mulcted in damages;" and parties who will be required to pay the costs of an issue or issues determined against them, as "mulcted in the costs."

MULE. See title CATTLE; HORSE.

MULIER PUISNE. See EIGN.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS.[8] Blending in one bill in equity matters which in their nature are distinct and independent.

Improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them.[9]

---

[1] L. movere, to move.

[2] [3 Bl. Com. 304.

[3] People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 650 (1871); Funk v. Israel, 5 Iowa, 441 (1857).

[4] Mitchell, Motions & Rules, 10.

[1] People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 143-49 (1872), Church, Chief Justice.

[2] Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 175 (1882): 8 Gray, 409; 72 N. Y. 39; 24 Pa. 308; 27 Vt. 505; 32 id. 737.

[3] See 22 Wall. 507; 121 Mass. 529.

[4] Strong v. White, 19 Conn. 245 (1848), Storrs, J.; 96 Ill. 448.

[5] Penniman v. French, 17 Pick. 405 (1835).

[6] Inhabitants of Medway v. Inhabitants of Natick, 7 Mass. *89 (1810); Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 278 (1850).

[7] L. mulcta, a fine.

[8] L. multus, many; fari, to speak: claiming various things.

[9] Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 271, 530; 104 U. S. 251; 98 id. 604.

Embracing in the same bill distinct matters, which do not affect all the defendants alike.[1]

A bill is subject to this defect, if one of two complainants has no standing in court, if they set up antagonistic causes of action, or the relief for which they respectively pray involves totally distinct questions, requiring different evidence and leading to different decrees.[2]

But charging different sources of right does not introduce the vice.[3]

It is impracticable to lay down any rule as to what constitutes multifariousness, as an abstract proposition. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and be left, necessarily, to the sound discretion of the court. It cannot be objected to, as of right, except by demurrer, plea, or answer; and not at all, at so late a period as the hearing, or in the appellate court. But it may be taken by the court sua sponte, when necessary to the administration of justice.[4]

As a rule, the court will not subject parties to the expense, vexation, and delay of several suits, where the transactions constituting the subject of the litigation, or out of which the litigation arises, are so connected by their circumstances as to render it proper and convenient that they should be examined in the same suit, and full relief given by one comprehensive decree.[5]

A different rule would often prove oppressive and mischievous, and result in no benefit to a litigant whose object was not simply to harass his adversary, but to ascertain his legal rights.[6]

MULTIPLICITY.[7] Instituting two or more actions having the same issue.

Obviated, in a court of equity, by a bill of peace; in a court of law, by a rule to consolidate the actions.

To prevent a multiplicity of suits at law, a court of equity will take cognizance of a matter in cases of account, agency, apportionment, general average, contribution, suretyship, confusion of boundaries, rents and profits, waste, and partnership.[8] See INTEREST, 1, Rei, etc.

MULTITUDE. Some authorities say that ten persons, or more, make a multitude; others, that the law has not designated the number.[1]

But two persons (riotous) are insufficient.[2]

MUNICIPAL.[3] 1. Pertaining to a city, or a community within a state, possessing rights of self-government: as, a municipal or municipal — aid, bond, corporation, court, lien, market, officer, ordinance, qq. v.

2. Pertaining to a free state: as, in municipal law, which at first referred to the customs of a free town, and then to the rule by which particular districts, communities, or nations were or are governed.[4] See LAW, Municipal; ORDINANCE, 1.

Municipality. 1. A division of a state for governmental purposes; a city, a municipal corporation,[5] qq. v.

2. The officers of a city, considered collectively.

MUNIMENT.[6] Means of supporting or defending; proofs: as, the muniments of evidence.[7]

Any written evidence by which the owner of land may defend his estate or title. Whence muniments of title, muniment room or office.

MURAL. See MONUMENT, 1.

MURDER.[8] The unlawful killing of another with malice.[9]

When a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied.[10]

The killing of any person in the peace of the commonwealth, with malice aforethought, either express or implied by law.[11]

---

[1] [Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 433 (1868), Davis, J.

[2] Walker v. Powers, 104 U. S. 245, 250 (1881), cases, Miller, J.; Daniell, Ch. Pr. 335.

[3] Welford, Eq. Pl. 98; Cumberland Valley R. Co.'s Appeal, 62 Pa. 227-28 (1869).

[4] Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 412, 411 (1845), cases, Story, J.; Story, Eq. Pl. § 747; Barney v. Latham, 103 U. S. 205 (1880); Hill v. Hill, 79 Va. 592 (1884).

[5] Sheldon v. Keokuk Packet Co., 10 Biss. 473 (1881), Harlan, J.: 8 F. R. 770; United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 98 U. S. 604 (1878); De Wolfe v. Sprague Manuf. Co., 49 Conn. 292-98, 302 (1881); Mining Debris Case, 8 Saw. 628, 636 (1883): 16 F. R. 32; 8 id. 378, 703; 18 Blatch. 420; 19 id. 531; 30 Conn. 323; 68 Ga. 60; 14 Ill. 25; 2 Gray, 467; 9 Mich. 71; 32 N. H. 25; 58 id. 421; 66 Barb. 12; 13 R. I. 413.

[6] Potts v. Hahn, 32 F. R. 662 (1887).

[7] L. multus, many; plex, plic-, fold.

[8] Story, Eq., Index; Eq. Pl., 284; 1 Pomeroy, Eq., § 242, et seq.

[1] Coke, Litt. 257.

[2] Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 597 (1870).

[3] L. municipium, a free town,— 1 Bl. Com. 44.

[4] [1 Bl. Com. 44. See generally Horton v. School Commissioners, 43 Ala. 607 (1869); Winspear v. District Township, 37 Iowa, 544 (1873).

[5] [Kilgore v. Magee, 8 Pa. 411 (1877).

[6] L. munire, to fortify.

[7] 95 U. S. 161.

[8] Teut. moerda, secret killing,—4 Bl. Com. 195. Morth, secret,—3 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 25-26. A. S. morthor, morth; Mid. Eng. morthre, mordre: L. mort-, death,—Skeat. Ary. mar, dust: die, kill,—2 Müller, Science Lang. 336.

[9] United States v. Magill, 1 Wash. 465 (1806).

[10] Coke, 3 Inst. 47; 4 Bl. Com. 195; Harrison v. Commonwealth, 79 Va. 377 (1884).

[11] Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 304 (1850), Shaw, C. J.

The unlawful killing of a human being in the peace of the people, with malice aforethought, either express or implied.[1]

There are three degrees of murder in Minnesota and Wisconsin; and two in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

In Pennsylvania, which was the first State to establish degrees, "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree."[2]

Similar statutes have been passed in many other States. Their common object is to class the more deliberate and atrocious forms of homicide as murder in the first degree, punishable with death; while forms which exhibit an instantaneous intent, or which are marked by circumstances extenuating guilt, are classed as murder in the second degree, punishable with fine and long imprisonment.[3]

A premeditated intention to destroy life is indispensable to murder in the first degree. An unlawful killing may be presumed to be murder, but not in the first degree. The burden of proof lies on the State.[4]

In California, a killing, in the first degree, must be premeditated, except when done in the perpetration of certain felonies. There must be manifested express malice, proved by circumstances independent of the killing,— a deliberate intention "to take away the life of a fellow-creature." Where such intention is proved by the circumstances preceding or connected with the homicide, there is no question of "implied" malice; and, unless the express malice is affirmatively proved, a defendant cannot be convicted of murder in the first degree, even though his commission of the homicide is proved, and there is no evidence that it is manslaughter or that the killing was justifiable or excusable; but in such case the verdict should be murder in the second degree.[5]

Malice is always presumed where one person deliberately injures another. It is the deliberation with which the act is performed that gives it character. It is the opposite of an act performed under uncontrollable passion, which prevents cool reflection in forming a purpose.[1]

Malice aforethought, or a wicked intention to kill, previously and deliberately formed, is an essential ingredient, and must be plainly charged in the information or indictment. It is not necessary, however, that these identical words, or any particular form of words, be used. Any words clearly expressing this element are sufficient.[2]

See ABORTION; ACCESSARY; ANARCHIST CASE; BLOOD, 2; CORPUS, Delicti; DEFENSE, 2; DEATH, Penalty; DELIBERATION, 3; DRUNKENNESS; DUEL; HOMICIDE; INDICTMENT; INSANITY, 2 (6); INTENT; JEOPARDY, 2; MALICE; MANSLAUGHTER; PLACE, 1; PREMEDITATE; PUNISHMENT, Capital; SUICIDE; WILL, 1; WOUND; YEAR AND DAY.

MUSEUM. Not only collections of curiosities for the entertainment of the sight, but also such as interest, amuse, and instruct the mind.[3]

MUSIC; MUSICAL. See BAGGAGE; BOOK, 1; COMPOSITION, 1; COPYRIGHT; IMPLEMENT; OPERA; TOOL.

MUST. See MAY; SHALL.

MUSTER. Applies to a parade of soldiers already enrolled, armed, and trained; but "mustering in" implies that the persons are not already in the service.[4]

MUTE.[5] See WITNESS.

A prisoner is said to "stand mute" when, being arraigned for treason or felony, he either makes no answer at all, or answers foreign to the purpose, or with such matter as is not allowable, and will not answer otherwise; or, upon having pleaded not guilty, refuses to put himself upon the country.[6]

Standing mute means, then, simply refusing to plead or answer to an indictment. The plea of "not guilty" is entered, and the trial proceeds.[7]

---

[1] Illinois Crim. Code, sec. 140.

[2] Act 31 March, 1860, § 74: 1 Purd. Dig. 498, pl. 141. See Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 238 (1874), Ryan, C. J.; State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 19 (1886).

[3] See United States v. Guiteau, 10 F. R. 163, 165 (1882); 52 Ala. 348; 29 Ark. 243; 39 Cal. 694; 44 id. 96; 48 id. 65; 49 id. 167; 59 id. 430; 40 Conn. 136; 1 Dak. 458; 14 Fla. 499; 18 id. 496; 33 Ga. 303; 49 id. 482; 55 id. 31; 5 Ind. 400; 23 id. 231; 54 id. 128; 88 id. 26; 33 Iowa, 270; 101 Mass. 1; 30 Mich. 16; 35 id. 16; 16 Minn. 75; 54 Mo. 153; 51 id. 549; 64 id. 191, 319, 391; 6 Neb. 138; 49 N. H. 399; 16 N. Y. 68; 53 id. 164; Wright (O.), 20; 5 Oreg. 216; 31 Pa. 56; 44 id. 56; 58 id. 9; 8 Phila. 401; 33 Tex. 638; 36 id. 523; 77 Va. 283–84; 36 Wis. 238.

[4] Johnson v. Commonwealth, 24 Pa. 389 (1855), Lewis, Chief Justice.

[5] People v. Knapp, 71 Cal. 6 (1886), cases, McKinstry, Judge.

[1] Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 229 (1878), Walker, J.; Spies et al. v. People (Anarchists' Case), 122 id. 174 (1887).

[2] State v. McGaffin, 36 Kan. 318 (1887), Johnston, J. As to corpus delicti, see People v. Palmer, Ct. Ap. N. Y. (1888), cases. On blood corpuscles, see 19 Am. Law Reg. 529, 598 (1880); 26 id. 21 (1887).

[3] Bostwick v. Purdy, 5 Stew. & Port. 109 (Ala., 1833).

[4] Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen, 498 (1864), Gray, J.; R. S. § 1342.

[5] L. mutus, dumb.

[6] 4 Bl. Com. 324; United States v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 66–67 (1834).

[7] See R. S. § 1082; United States v. Borger, 19 Blatch. 251–52 (1881), cases; Re Smith, 13 F. R. 25–27 (1882), cases; State v. Ward, 48 Ark. 39 (1886).

MUTILATE.[1] 1. To lacerate, wound, maim. See MAIM; CRUELTY, 3.

2. To commit mayhem, q. v. See also WOUND.

3. To render imperfect — which is something less than to "destroy:" as, to mutilate a will.

The courts speak of "records mutilated by erasures" and "by corrupt interlineations." Purposely taking from a will the signature of the testator deprives it of an essential part, and makes it so imperfect that it loses its legal force. The manner in which that is effected is not of controlling importance.[2] See SPOLIATION.

MUTINY.[3] Insurrection against authority; revolt against discipline; resistance of officers, by sailors, soldiers, or marines.

Mutinous. Tending toward mutiny: as, mutinous conduct or words.[4] See REVOLT.

MUTUAL.[5] Interchangeable; reciprocal; imposing like duties and obligations; affecting two or more persons in a common transaction or relation.

As, mutual — accounts, assent, covenant, credits, debts, insurance, mistake, obligations, promises, qq. v. See also COMPROMISE; CONTRIBUTION; BARGAIN.

Mutuality. Of contract: an obligation on each party to do or permit to be done something in consideration of the act or promise of the other.[6]

Mutuality of obligation is generally necessary to the validity of a contract; to be binding, the contract must be enforceable by either party.[7] See ASSENT; CONTRACT.

MUTUUM. L. A loan of chattels to be consumed by the borrower and returned to the lender in kind and quantity.[8] See DEPOSIT, 2.

Mutuant; mutuary. The lender, and the borrower, respectively, in such a contract.

MYSTERY.[9] A trade, art, or occupation.[10]

MYSTIC. In Louisiana, a "mystic testament" is a will under seal.[11]

[1] L. mutilare, to maim: mutilus, maimed.

[2] Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 568 (1881), Elliott, C. J.

[3] F. meute, sedition.

[4] See R. S. §§ 1624, 4596; Sim. Ct. Mar. § 170; Hick. Nav. Ct. Mar., Ch. 21; 1 Bl. Com. 415.

[5] L. mutuus, reciprocal: mutare, to change.

[6] Spear v. Orendorf, 26 Md. 43 (1866), Bowie, C. J.; Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. 516 (1867).

[7] Smith v. Cansler, 83 Ky. 371 (1885).

[8] [Story, Bailm §§ 228, 47.

[9] F. mestier, a trade: L. minister-, employ.

[10] 2 Coke, Inst. 668; 2 Hawk. P. C., 23, § 111; 15 Me. 124.

[11] See La. Civ. Code, a. 1567; 10 La. 328; 15 id. 88.

N.

N. As an abbreviation, ordinarily stands for new, non, northern, note:

N. A. Non allocatur, it is not allowed. See ALLOCATUR.

N. B. Nulla bona, no property. See BONA, 2, Nulla.

N. D. Northern district. See D, 3.

N. E. I. Non est inventus, he has not been found. See FIND, 3.

N. P. Neither party; nisi prius; notary public, qq. v.

N. R. New reports: non-resident; not reported.

N. S. New series.

NAKED. 1. Nude; uncovered.

Publishing photographs of girls bare to the waist will not support an indictment for publishing obscene pictures of "naked" girls.[1]

2. Incomplete, wanting in the quality that would invest with full power.

Naked authority. The authority of an agent who acts wholly for the benefit of his principal. See AUTHORITY, 1.

Naked confession. A confession of guilt not induced by promise of a reward or fear of a threat. See CONFESSION, 2.

Naked contract. An agreement without consideration. See OBLIGATION, 1; PACT.

Naked deposit. A bailment without reward. See DEPOSIT, 2.

Naked trust. A passive or dry trust, q. v.

NAM. L. For; because.

Sometimes used to introduce maxims.

NAME. 1. A designation by which a person, natural or artificial, is known.

It is merely a custom for males to take the name of their parents, and not obligatory.[2]

When two names have the same original, or one is an abbreviation or corruption of the other, but both in common usage are the same, the use of one name for the other is not a material misnomer.[3]

When a person is known equally well by two names he may be sued or indicted by either name, or by both.[4]

When a nickname is used, evidence will be received as to the true name. Such a name is but an alias for the true name.[5]

[1] Commonwealth v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 47 (1878).

[2] Petition of Snook, 2 Hilt. 568 (1859).

[3] Gordon v. Holiday, 1 Wash. 289 (1805); 13 Mo. 92.

[4] Eagleston v. Son, 5 Robt. 640 (1866); Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 250 (1868).

[5] Knapp v. Fuller, 55 Vt. 313 (1883); President, &c. v. Norwood, 1 Busb. Eq. 67 (1852)

The rule that the middle name is really no part of one's name has not been extended to the Christian name; on the contrary, the law presumes that every person has a Christian name. Where there is a mistake in the name used in the writ, and the writ is yet served on the right person, he is thereby informed that he is the person meant, and he should plead the misnomer in abatement. A non-resident, to whom a wrong name is given in an order of publication, receives no legal notice.[1]

The law recognizes only one Christian name. There are cases countenancing, if not establishing, that the omission of a middle letter is not a misnomer or variance; if so, the middle letter is immaterial, and a wrong letter may be disregarded.[2]

Signing by initials satisfies the statute of frauds.[3] And a legatee may be designated by initials.[4] The effect of designating a candidate for election by his initials has been variously decided.[5]

"Jr." or "Sr." is not part of a name.[6] Nor is "Mrs." a part.[7] When father and son have the same name, the use of the name presumptively designates the father.[8]

Identity of name is prima facie evidence of identity of person.[9]

As to names having the same sound, see IDEM, SONANS.

At common law, a man may lawfully change his name. He is bound by any contract into which he may enter in his adopted or reputed name, and by his recognized name he may sue and be sued.[10]

As to the use of a name as part of a trade-mark, see that title.

2. A man's name, as the synonym of his power and personality, is often put for the man himself. Thus, an agent is said to buy "in the name" of his principal when he buys for him, declaring his agency. A man invests "in his own name" (as executor) when he invests openly for himself, though he only receives evidence (bonds) of the investment.[1]

See ADDITION, 2; ALIAS, 1; FORGERY; MISNOMER; SIGNATURE. Compare NOMEN.

Namely. See WIT.

NARCOTICS. See under ALCOHOL.

NARRATIO. A statement of the facts constituting the ground of action in a cause; a declaration, q. v. Abbreviated narr., nar.

Narrator. One who files a declaration.

NASCITURUS. See NATUS.

NATION. Implies a body of men united together to procure their mutual safety and advantage by means of their union. . . "State" and "nation" frequently import the same thing.[2] See STATE, 3.

But "nation" is more nearly synonymous with "people." While a "state" may embrace different nations or peoples, a nation is sometimes so divided politically as to constitute several states.[3]

National. Belonging to, affecting, or pertaining to, a particular nation: as, national domicil, the national government. Often opposed to State, and nearly synonymous with Federal, q. v.: as, in national bank (q. v.), or national banking association.

The word national was excluded from the Constitution because it might seem to present the idea of the union of the people without bringing into view that the one republic was formed out of many states. Toward foreign powers the country presented itself as one nation.[4]

No bank or banker other than a national banking association, and except a savings bank authorized by Congress, may use the word "national" as a portion of its title.[5]

International. Concerning, or existing between, distinct nations or independent sovereignties: as, international — comity, commerce, copyright, extradition, qq. v.

Law of nations; international law. That law which regulates the conduct and mutual intercourse of independent states

---

[1] Skelton v. Sackett, 91 Mo. 379–80 (1886); 37 id. 301.

[2] Keene v. Meade, 3 Pet. *7 (1830), cases; Games v. Stiles, 14 id. 327 (1840); Commonwealth v. O'Hearn, 132 Mass. 553 (1882); State v. Black, 12 Mo. Ap. 534 (1882), cases; State v. Feeny, 13 R. I. 628 (1882). See also 32 Cent. Law J. 487 (1886), cases; 17 Ala. 179; 89 Ill. 457; 52 Ind. 347; 20 Iowa, 98; 10 Miss. 391; 26 N. H. 561; 14 Barb. 261; 5 Johns. 84; 19 Ohio, 423; 4 Watts, 339; 7 W. & S. 406; 14 Tex. 402; 28 id. 772; 26 Vt. 599.

[3] Addison, Contr. 46, n; 1 Denio, 471.

[4] Abbot v. Massie, 3 Ves. *148 (1796). See also Minor v. State, 68 Ga. 321 (1879).

[5] Cooley, Const. Lim. 766; 38 Me. 559; 16 Mich. 283; 8 Cow. 102; 4 Wis. 429.

[6] Commonwealth v. Perkins, 1 Pick. 388 (1823); 8 Conn. 280; 22 Me. 171; 9 N. H. 519.

[7] Elberson v. Richards, 42 N. J. L. 70 (1880).

[8] Brown v. Benight, 3 Blackf. 39 (1833).

[9] Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 47 (1882), cases; State v. Kelsoe, 76 Mo. 507 (1882); 25 Pa. 133; 68 id. 200; 53 id. 427.

[10] Linton v. First Nat. Bank of Kittanning, 10 F. R. 897 (1882), cases; Commonwealth v. Trainor, 123 Mass. 414 (1877). See generally 32 Cent. Law J. 230, 244 (1886), cases.

---

[1] Carpenter v. Carpenter, 12 R. I. 548 (1880), Durfee, Chief Justice.

[2] Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 52 (1831), Thompson, J.; Vattel, Law of Nations, § 1; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 720 (1868).

[3] Cooley, Princ. Const. Law, 20, Const. Lim. 1; 1 Story, Const. § 207; Langford v. Monteith, 1 Idaho, 617 (1876).

[4] 2 Bancroft, Const. 208; ib. abr. ed. 356 (1884).

[5] R. S. § 5243: Act 3 March, 1873.

with each other, by reason and natural justice.[1]

A system of rules, deducible by natural reason, and established by universal consent among the civilized inhabitants of the world, in order to decide disputes, regulate ceremonies and civilities, and insure the observance of justice and good faith in their mutual intercourse. This general law is founded upon the principle that different nations ought in time of peace to do one another all the good they can, and in time of war as little harm as possible, without prejudice to their own real interests. And, as none of these states will allow a superiority in the other, no one can dictate or prescribe the rules of this law to the rest; but such rules must necessarily result from those principles of natural justice in which all the learned of every nation agree; or they depend upon mutual compacts or treaties, in the construction of which there is no judge to resort to but the law of nature and reason,—the only law in which all the parties are equally conversant and to which they are equally subject.[2]

International law is part of the universal law of reason, justice, and conscience.[3] The principal offenses against the law of nations are: violations of safe-conducts or passports; infringement of the rights of ambassadors; piracy;[4] injuring a state at peace with the United States by exercising a commission to serve a hostile state, arming a vessel to cruise for such hostile state, assisting its armed vessel or setting afloat a military expedition for it.[4]

The nation injured by the subject of another first demands satisfaction and that justice be done on the offender by the state to which he belongs; and if that be refused, the sovereign then avows himself an abettor of his subject's crime.[5]

Public international law comprises the rights and duties of sovereign states toward each other. Private international law comprises the rights and duties of the subjects of different states toward each other—refers to the power of the state to act upon the persons and property within the limits of its own territory.[6]

The rules of private international law are: 1. Every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory—as to all property, persons, and contracts. 2. No state can, by its laws, directly affect or bind property out of its territory, or persons not resident therein. 3. Whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depends solely upon the laws of the latter, that is, upon the comity exercised by it.[6]

See COMITY; DISCOVERY, 1, Right of; INDIAN; MERCHANT, LAW; PUBLICIST; TREATY; WAR.

[1] 1 Bl. Com. xxiv, 43.

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 67–68.

[3] Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 574 (1880). See Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cranch, 198 (1815); 1 Op. Att.-Gen. 27; 7 id. 18, 229; 37 Miss. 230.

[4] Wharton, Cr. Law, 130.

[5] See Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 18–23; Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 630 (1880).

NATIVE. See CITIZEN.

NATURA. L. Disposition; nature. See ANIMAL.

NATURAL; NATURE. Are employed with little or no deviation from the vernacular meaning: as, in natural—affection or love, allegiance, birth, boundary, child, day, death, duty or obligation, equity, fruits, guardian, law, life, liberty, monument, obligation, person, presumption, right, qq. v. With some of these terms, opposed to artificial, with others to civil, and political. See also ACT, Of God; ALLUVION; CAUSE, 1.

Naturally. In the usual course of things; as, in the rule, that the damages recoverable for breach of a contract are such as naturally arise.[1]

Nature of the transaction. "Without knowledge of the nature of the transaction" may be a very misleading expression.[2]

NATURALIZE. To make an alien a citizen or as if native-born.

Naturalization. The act or proceeding by which an alien becomes a citizen.[3]

"The Congress shall have Power . . To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization."[4]

Before the adoption of the Constitution, each State exercised this right. The provision quoted vests the power exclusively in the Federal government. A State may make a person its own citizen.[5]

The original status of an alien is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown. Naturalization is strictly a judicial act. The action of the court must be recorded as its judgment; if valid, it is final. In the absence of proof of its loss or destruction, the record can be proved only by itself, or by an extract. Naturalization cannot be proved by parol.[6]

The provisions of the Revised Statutes, Title XXX, respecting naturalization, are as follows:

"Sec. 2165. An alien may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States in the following manner, and not otherwise:

"First. He shall declare on oath, before a circuit or district court of the United States, or a district or supreme court of the Territories, or a court of record of any of the States having common-law jurisdiction, and a seal and a clerk, two years, at least, prior to his admission, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever

[1] Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 164 (1886).

[2] King v. Ward, 74 Me. 351 (1883).

[3] [1 Bl. Com. 374; 9 Wheat. 827; 9 Op. Att.-Gen. 359.

[4] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 4.

[5] See R. S. §§ 2165–74, 5395, 5424–29; 2 Wheat. 259; 7 How. 556; 19 id. 393, 419; 4 Dill. 425; 5 Cal. 300; 36 id. 658; 56 How. Pr. 5.

[6] Charles Green's Son v. Salas, 31 F. R. 106 (1887), Speer, J. On citizenship by naturalization, see 18 Am. Law Reg. 593–612, 665–76 (1879), cases.

all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and, particularly, by name, to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which the alien may be at the time a citizen or subject," [1]

"Second. He shall, at the time of his application to be admitted, declare, on oath, before some one of the courts above specified, that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounces and abjures all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty; and, particularly, by name, to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject; which proceedings shall be recorded by the clerk of the court." [2]

"Third. It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting such alien that he has resided within the United States five years at least, and within the State or Territory where such court is at the time held, one year at least; and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same; but the oath of the applicant shall in no case be allowed to prove his residence." [3]

"Fourth. In case the alien applying to be admitted to citizenship has borne any hereditary title, or been of any of the orders of nobility in the kingdom or state from which he came, he shall, in addition to the above requisites, make an express renunciation of his title or order of nobility in the court to which his application is made, and his renunciation shall be recorded in the court." [3]

Fifth. Any alien residing within the United States before January 29, 1795, may be admitted as a citizen on due proof made to any court specified that he has resided two years within the United States, and one year, immediately preceding his application, within the State or Territory where such court is held, and on his declaring on oath that he will support the Constitution, and that he renounces allegiance, etc., as particularized in the sections preceding.[3]

Sixth. Any alien who was residing within the United States between June 18, 1798, and June 18, 1812, and who has continued so to reside, may be admitted as a citizen without previous declaration of intention to become such; but whenever any person, without a certificate of such declaration, makes application to be admitted, the court must be satisfied that he was a resident before June 18, 1812, and has continued so to reside; and his residence for five years immediately preceding his application must be proved by the oath of citizens; and such residence shall be set forth, with the names of such citizens, in the record of the court admitting the applicant.[3]

The declaration of intention, required by section 2165, may be made before the clerk of any of the courts therein named; and all declarations as heretofore made are as valid as if made before one of said courts.[1]

"Sec. 2166. Any alien, of the age of twenty-one years and upward, who has enlisted, or may enlist, in the armies of the United States, either the regular or volunteer forces, and has been, or may be hereafter, honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States, upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and he shall not be required to prove more than one year's residence within the United States previous to his application to become such citizen; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to such proofs of residence and good moral character as are now provided by law, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States." [2]

"Sec. 2167. Any alien, being under the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in the United States three years next preceding his arriving at age, and who has continued to reside therein to the time he may make application to be admitted a citizen thereof, may, after he arrives at the age of twenty-one years, and after he has resided five years within the United States, including the three years of his minority, be admitted a citizen of the United States without having made the declaration required in the first condition of section 2165; but such alien shall make the declaration required therein at the time of his admission; and shall further declare, on oath, and prove to the satisfaction of the court, that, for two years next preceding, it has been his bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States; and he shall in all other respects comply with the laws in regard to naturalization." [3]

"Sec. 2168. When any alien, who has complied with the first condition specified in section 2165, dies before he is actually naturalized, the widow and children of such alien shall be considered as citizens of the United States, and shall be entitled to all rights and privileges as such, upon taking the oaths prescribed by law." [4]

"Sec. 2169. The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens [being free white persons, and to aliens] of African nativity and to persons of African descent." [5]

"Sec. 2170. No alien shall be admitted to become a citizen who has not for the continued term of five years next preceding his admission resided within the United States." [6]

"Sec. 2171. No alien who is a native citizen or subject, or a denizen of any country, state, or sovereignty with which the United States are at war, at the time of his application, shall be then admitted to become a citizen of the United States; but persons resident within the United States" June 18, 1812, "who had before that day made a declaration, according to law, of their intention to become a citizen or who were on that day entitled to become citizens without making

[1] Acts 14 April, 1802, 26 May, 1824, 1 Feb. 1876.
[2] Act 14 April, 1802.
[3] Acts 22 March, 1816, 24 May, 1828.

[1] Act 1 Feb. 1876.
[2] Act 17 July, 1862.
[3] Act 26 May, 1824.
[4] Act 26 March, 1804.
[5] Acts 14 July, 1870, 16 Feb. 1875.
[6] Act 3 March, 1813.

such declaration, may be admitted to become citizens thereof, notwithstanding they were alien enemies at the time and in the manner prescribed by the laws heretofore passed on that subject. . . "[1]

"Sec. 2172. The children of persons who have been duly naturalized under any law of the United States, or who, previous to the passing of any law on that subject, by the government of the United States, may have become citizens of any one of the States, under the laws thereof, being under the age of twenty-one years at the time of the naturalization of their parents, shall, if dwelling in the United States, be considered as citizens thereof; and the children of persons who now are, or have been, citizens of the United States, shall, though born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, be considered as citizens thereof."[2]

"Sec. 2174. Every seaman, being a foreigner, who declares his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States in any competent court, and shall have served three years on board of a merchant-vessel of the United States subsequent to the date of such declaration, may, on his application to any competent court, and the production of his certificate of discharge and good conduct during that time, together with the certificate of his declaration of intention to become a citizen, be admitted a citizen of the United States; and every seaman, being a foreigner, shall, after his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and after he shall have served such three years, be deemed a citizen of the United States for the purpose of manning and serving on board any merchant-vessel of the United States, anything to the contrary in any act of Congress notwithstanding; but such seaman shall, for all purposes of protection as an American citizen, be deemed such, after the filing of his declaration of intention to become such citizen."[3]

See ALIEN, 1; CHINESE; CITIZEN; INDIAN.

NATUS. L. Born; already born; alive. Agnati. Persons related through a male as their father — ad eum nati. Cognati. Persons related through a woman as their mother. Anglicised "agnates" and "cognates."

In Roman law, the agnate family consisted of such cognates (blood-relations) as could trace their lineage through males alone (father, grandfather, etc.) up to a common male ancestor, whose family-name they all bore, and to whose patria potestas they would have been subject had he lived to their time. But persons brought into a family by adoption became agnates; and those who passed out of it either by adoption or emancipation ceased to be agnates (though still cognates).[4]

Ante natus. Born before; a child born before another person, or prior to a particular event. Post natus. Born after; afterborn.

[1] Acts 14 April, 1802, 30 July, 1813.

[2] Act 14 April, 1802.

[3] Act 7 June, 1872.

[4] Hadley, Roman Law, Lect. VI, p. 129; 2 Bl. Com. 235.

Nasciturus. Yet to be born; unborn.

NAUTICAL. See ASSESSOR, 1.

NAVAL. See GRADUATE; NAVY.

NAVIGABLE.[1] Refers to waters which afford a channel for commerce or intercourse. Opposed, non-navigable, unnavigable.

Capable of being used for purposes of navigation, of trade and travel, in the ordinary modes, without reference to the extent or manner of use; sufficiently wide, deep, and free from obstructions to be useful for purposes of trade and transportation.[2]

"Navigable waters" has three distinct meanings: 1, as synonymous with "tide-waters," being waters, salt or fresh, wherever the ebb and flow of the tide from the sea is felt; 2, as limited to tide-waters capable of being navigated for some useful purpose; 3, as including all waters, whether within or beyond the ebb and flow of the tide, which can be used for navigation.[3]

A river, navigable in its general character, does not change its legal characteristics by a disturbance which, at a point, breaks the continuity of actual navigation.[4]

Congress has power "to regulate commerce," and "commerce" includes navigation. But the power does not extend to such small creeks and coves as are not navigable for any general purpose useful to commercial business.[5] See further COMMERCE.

The admiralty and maritime jurisdiction granted to the Federal government by the Constitution extends to all navigable lakes and rivers, where commerce is carried on between States or with a foreign nation.[6] See LAKES.

With us the ebb and flow of the tide is no test, as at common law and in England. There, no waters are navigable to any considerable extent which are not subject to the tide; from which circumstance tide-water and navigable water there signify substantially the same thing. Some of our rivers are navigable hundreds of miles above tide-limits. The test with us is navigable capacity. Those are public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact; when they are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. And they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contradistinc-

[1] L. navigabilis: navis, a ship; -igare, to drive.

[2] Sullivan v. Spotswood, 82 Ala. 166-68 (1886), cases.

[3] Reservation at Niagara, 16 Abb. N. Cas. 159 (1884).

[4] Commonwealth v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 447 (1871), Gray, J.

[5] Groton v. Hurlburt, 22 Conn. 183-86 (1852); Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 186 (1824).

[6] The Genesee Chief, 12 How. 443 (1851); The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 561 (1866).

tion to the navigable waters of the States, when they form, in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water [1]

The capacity of use by the public for purposes of transportation and commerce affords the true criterion. If the river be capable in its natural state of being used for purposes of commerce, no matter in what mode the commerce may be conducted, it is navigable in fact and becomes in law a public river or highway. The essential point is whether the river is such that it affords a channel for useful commerce.[2]

The navigable waters of the United States include such as are navigable in fact, and which, by themselves or their connections, form a continuous channel for commerce with foreign countries or among the States.[3]

In the absence of legislation by Congress, a State may authorize a navigable stream within its limits to be obstructed by a bridge or highway.[4]

If, in the opinion of a State, its commerce will be benefited by improving a navigable stream within its borders, it may authorize the improvement, although increased inconvenience and expense may thereby attend the business of individuals.[5]

That the navigable streams shall be highways without any tax, impost, or duty, has reference to navigation in its natural state. The constitutional provision did not contemplate that such navigation might not be improved by artificial means, and that for the expense a State should not exact reasonable tolls.[6]

There is no common law of the United States which prohibits obstructions and nuisances in navigable rivers, unless it be the maritime law; but no precedent exists for the enforcement of such law. There must be a direct statute of the United States in order to bring within the scope of its laws, as administered by courts of law and equity, obstructions in navigable streams within the States. Such obstructions are, or may be, offenses against the laws of the State, but not against Federal laws which do not exist. On the ground that the litigant parties are citizens of different States, the circuit courts may take jurisdiction.[1] See BRIDGE.

Navigation. The science or business of conducting vessels or materials over navigable waters.[2]

Moving an unfinished vessel about in the course of her construction is not "navigation."[3]

Inland navigation. Navigation carried on within a country, on its rivers or other bodies of water, without reference to their magnitude, if such bodies are not so connected with the ocean, in the commerce of the world, as to be considered a part of the ocean or highway of nations.[4]

Rules of navigation. Regulations designed to prevent collisions between vessels.

A leading system is that promulgated by the corporation of the Trinity House, October 30, 1840; but each commercial country has its own rules, made up of principles of the general maritime law, and of special enactments. Important legislation by Congress went into effect September 1, 1864 [5]

Sailing rules and regulations prescribed by law furnish the paramount rule of decision, when they are applicable; but where a disputed question arises, with regard to which neither they nor the rules of the Supreme Court regulating the practice in admiralty have made provision, evidence of experts as to the general usage is admissible.[6]

See ADMIRALTY; PURPRESTURE; REGULAR; RHODIAN; SEA; SPAN.

NAVY. See GRADUATE; JUDGE-ADVOCATE; MARTIAL; WAR; WARRANT, 2.

"The Congress shall have Power . . To provide and maintain a Navy; To make Rules for the Government and regulation of the . . naval Forces." [7]

This power authorizes the United States to buy or build vessels of war, to establish a naval academy, to punish desertion and other crimes, and to make other needful rules for the government of persons enlisted in the naval force, and the regulation of all affairs connected with naval warfare.[8]

NAYS. See YEAS.

NE. L., and F. Not; lest.

Ne exeat. L. That he does not depart the jurisdiction. See further EXIRE, Ne exeat.

---

[1] The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 563 (1870), Field, J.; Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 689 (1882).

[2] The Montello, 20 Wall. 441–43 (1874), cases, Davis, J. See also Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Brooks, 39 Ark. 409 (1882).

[3] Miller v. Mayor of New York, 109 U. S. 385, 395 (1883), Field, J.

[4] Cardwell v. American Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205, 206–12 (1885), cases. See generally Shaw v. Oswego Iron Co., 10 Oreg. 375 (1882); Smith v. City of Rochester, 92 N. Y. 479 (1883); 93 id. 155–56; 18 Blatch. 212; 7 Saw. 127, 141; 16 Op. Att.-Gen. 338; 33 Ala. 593; 6 Cal. 443; 20 Conn. 217; 5 Ind. 8; 28 id. 270; 3 Iowa, 1; 50 Me. 479; 21 Pick. 344; 8 Mich. 320; 10 N. J. E. 211; 35 N. Y. 459; 23 Ohio St. 523; 43 Pa. 219.

[5] Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543 (1886).

[6] Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U. S. 296 (1887); Huse v. Glover, 119 id. 548 (1886).

[1] Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 8 (1888), cases, Bradley, J.

[2] See Gerrish v. Brown, 51 Me. 262 (1863); Harrigan v. Connecticut River Lumber Co., 129 Mass. 584 (1880).

[3] The Joshua Levinese, 9 Bened. 339 (1878).

[4] [American Transportation Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 400 (1858), Manning, J.: 24 How. 37 (1860); 26 F. R. 772–73.

[5] 13 St. L. 58; The Scotia, 14 Wall. 185–86 (1871); 1 W. Rob. Adm. 488.

[6] The City of Washington, 92 U. S. 39 (1875).

[7] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 13–14.

[8] See Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. 78–79 (1857).

Ne unques accouple. F. Never joined — in lawful matrimony. Denies, in an action for dower, the validity of the marriage.

Ne unques executor. F. Never executor. A plea denying that a plaintiff is a lawful executor.

Ne varietur. L. Let it not be changed. Words written upon a bill or note for identification.[1]

NEAR. As applied to space, has no precise meaning; is a relative term, depending for its signification on the subject-matter, and the circumstances under which it is to be applied to surrounding objects.[2, 3]

A statute which authorizes commissioners to build bridges over streams "near county or town lines," empowers those officials to determine the location of a particular bridge, as, within a mile or other reasonable distance from a town line, regard being had to expense, accessibility, etc.[3]

The location of a railroad twenty-five hundred feet from another road may be "near" the latter road.[3]

A statute which forbids liquor-selling "near" an election ground prohibits a sale within a mile and a quarter of such ground.[4]

Between the shoulder blades is "near" the shoulders.[5]

An allegation of a failure to keep a road in repair "near the house of K.," whereby the plaintiff was injured, does not describe the spot with sufficient certainty.[6] Compare ADJACENT; ON; VICINITY.

As near as. An affidavit that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in an amount specified "as near as" the plaintiff can determine, is insufficient.[7]

Nearest. The "three nearest towns" not interested in taking land, may refer to the situation of the towns to each other, not to the tract to be viewed.[8]

Provision that a cause shall be removed to some adjoining county, the court-house of which is "nearest the court-house of the county in which the suit is pending," does not necessarily mean the nearest by geometrical measurement, but the most convenient of access and nearest to the usually traveled route.[9] See PRACTICABLE.

NEAT. "Beeves" may include neat stock, but all "neat stock" are not beeves.[1]

NECESSARIES.[2] Refers to things essential or proper for the support of a wife, infant, or ward, and to the maintenance of a vessel.

1. In the rule as to supplying a wife or an infant, and recovering from the husband, parent, or guardian, "necessaries" is not used in its strictest sense, nor limited to that which is required to sustain life. Things proper and suitable to each individual, according to his circumstances and condition in life, are necessaries, if not supplied from some other source.[3]

It is not desirable to attempt to prescribe a universal rule for the specific determination of what are and what are not necessaries. In a general way, it may be said that whatever naturally and reasonably tends to relieve distress, or materially and in some essential particular to promote comfort, either of body or mind, may be deemed to be a necessary, for which a wife, under proper circumstances, may pledge her husband's credit. Each case is to be determined by its own circumstances.[4] See HUSBAND.

The necessaries for which a minor may bind himself are for suitable food, shelter, clothing, washing, medicine, medical attendance, and education. But what is proper in quantity and quality depends upon what the court or jury may think, in each case, regard being had to the condition and station in life.[5] Cf. WANT.

2. To bring an article within the description of necessaries for a vessel it need not appear that the voyage could not by any possibility be made without the article. It is sufficient if the article forms a part of the natural and reasonable outfit of the vessel, or of the business in which she is engaged.[6]

Those things which pertain to the navigation of the vessel, and which are directly incidental to and connected with her navi-

---

[1] See Brabston v. Gibson, 9 How. 278 (1850); Fleckner v. United States Bank, 8 Wheat. 349 (1823).

[2] [Fall River Iron Works v. Old Colony, &c. R. Co., 5 Allen, 227 (1862), Bigelow, C. J.; Barrett v. County Court, 44 Mo. 202 (1869); Kirkbride v. Lafayette County, 108 U. S. 211 (1883); 1 Gray, 367; 39 N. J. E. 435.

[3] Insley v. Shepard, 31 F. R. 872 (1887), Blodgett, J.; Ill. Act. 28 March, 1883, § 106.

[4] Manis v. State, 3 Heisk. 315 (1871).

[5] Fassett v. Roxbury, 55 Vt. 554 (1883).

[6] Kellogg v. Inhabitants of Northampton, 4 Gray, 67 (1855).

[7] Hawes v. Clement, 64 Wis. 152 (1885).

[8] Reed v. Hanover Branch R. Co., 105 Mass. 304 (1870).

[9] Shaw v. Cade, 54 Tex. 307 (1881).

[1] Castello v. State, 36 Tex. 334 (1871); Hubotter v. State, 32 id. 484 (1870).

[2] L. necessarius, needful.

[3] Davis v. Caldwell, 12 Cush. 513 (1853), Shaw, C. J.

[4] Conant v. Burnham, 133 Mass. 504 (1882), C. Allen, J.; Hamilton v. Lane, 138 id. 360 (1885); Skelton v. Pendleton, 18 Conn. 423 (1847), cases; Harris v. Dale, 5 Bush, 63 (1868).

[5] Munson v. Washband, 31 Conn. 306-8 (1863), cases, Hinman, C. J.; Breed v. Judd, 1 Gray, 458 (1854); Trainer v. Trumbull, 141 Mass. 530 (1886), cases: 25 Am. Law Reg. 698-99 (1886), cases; Ayers v. Burns, 97 Ind. 243 (1883), cases; 36 Alb. Law J. 283; 35 W. R. 806.

See generally Re Steele, 2 Flip. 328 (1879), cases.

[6] The Plymouth Rock, 7 Bened. 449 (1874), Benedict, Judge.

gation; that is, those things which directly aid in keeping her in motion for the purpose of receiving, carrying, and delivering cargoes.[1]

This is the meaning in the twelfth Admiralty Rule, which provides that in suits by material-men for supplies, repairs, or other necessaries furnished to a foreign ship or a ship in a foreign port, the libelant may proceed against the ship and freight in rem, or against the master or owner in personam, and that in cases of domestic ships the proceeding shall be in personam only. Under the foregoing definition, a claim for storing sails would not be a subject of admiralty jurisdiction.[1]

See NECESSARY; PROVISIONS.

NECESSARY. Frequently imports no more than convenient, essential, or useful to some end in view. The term admits of degrees: a thing may be necessary, very necessary, or absolutely necessary.[2]

To employ "means necessary to an end" is generally understood as meaning to employ means calculated to produce the end, not as being confined to some single means without which the end would be unattainable.[2]

It is in the looser sense that the word is used in Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 8, of the Constitution, empowering Congress to pass laws "necessary and proper" for carrying its express provisions into effect. When the framers intended an indispensable necessity, as in Art. X, sec. 1, they coupled the word "absolutely" with it.[3] See CONSTITUTION.

What is "necessary to the beneficial enjoyment of an estate" cannot reasonably be held to be limited to absolute physical necessity, but to what is reasonably necessary.[3]

"Necessary help" for the warden of a prison includes the services of a physician.[4]

A statute exempting from execution "necessary household furniture" includes more articles than such as are absolutely indispensable,— articles which, to the common understanding, are required for comfort and convenience. But "necessary" is not to have the liberal sense given it in the rule as to "necessaries," [4] q. v.

"Necessary implication," in construing a will, means so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that imputed cannot be supposed.[5]

Referring to taking private property for public uses, "necessary" means expedient.[1]

In a statute requiring a railroad to construct a farm-crossing when "necessary" for the use of the proprietors of adjoining lands, held equivalent to "reasonably convenient."[2]

"Necessary repairs" to a vessel means such as are reasonably proper under the circumstances; not merely such as are indispensable for the safety of the ship or the accomplishment of the voyage.[3]

See BAGGAGE; NECESSITY; SUNDAY.

NECESSITAS. L. Necessity.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private.

A private right or necessity must yield to the public good; as in the exercise of the powers of eminent domain and taxation.[4]

Necessitas vincit legem. Necessity overcomes law,— is paramount to any rule of law.[5] See NECESSITY.

Trinoda necessitas. A threefold necessity or burden.

In England, anciently, when lands were granted free of services, they were still subject by implication, under a certain trinoda necessitas, to the expense of repairing bridges and forts, and of repelling invasions.[6]

NECESSITY. Constraint upon the will, whereby a man is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves; and which, it is to be presumed, his will, if left to itself, would reject.[7]

An inevitable or unavoidable necessity is regarded as a defect of will, and excuses an act otherwise criminal in nature.[7]

Moral necessity; physical necessity. Moral necessity arises where there is a duty incumbent upon a rational being which he ought at the time to perform. It presupposes a power of volition and action, under circumstances in which he ought to act, but in which he is not absolutely compelled to act by overwhelming superior force. It means a sense of duty, when it becomes imperative by its urgency upon his conscience and judgment. That is not a physical necessity where

[1] Hubbard v. Roach, 9 Biss. 376-77 (1880), Dyer, J.

[2] M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 413 (1819), Marshall, C. J.; Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 440 (1884); 23 Ind. 143-45; 47 N. J. L. 328-29.

[3] Pettingill v. Porter, 8 Allen, 6 (1864).

[4] State v. Hobart, 13 Nev. 420 (1878).

[5] Hitchcock v. Holmes, 43 Conn. 529 (1876).

[6] [Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. *466 (1812). See also 6 M. & W. 403; 4 De G., M. & G. 85; 15 N. Y. 558; 9 Yerg. 164.

[1] Stuyvesant v. Mayor of New York, 7 Cow. 606 (1827); 7 Johns. Ch. 315; 5 R. I. 325.

[2] Chalcraft v. Louisville, &c. R. Co., 113 Ill. 88 (1885).

[3] The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 237 (1838), Story, J. See generally 50 Cal. 302; 50 Conn. 155, 253; 27 Ind. 191; 5 Iowa, 432; 13 Mass. 278; 112 id. 3-4; 3 Pa. 331.

[4] Bacon, Maxims.

[5] Cooley, Const. Lim. 747.

[6] West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 542, 545 (1848); 2 Bl. Com. 102.

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 27.

the agent is called upon to exercise judgment and discretion, to act or not to act.[1]

A master may sell his vessel, in case of wreck or irreparable disaster — the necessity being extraordinary, paramount, actual and not merely apprehended: a question which the court passes upon.[2] See HYPOTHECATION.

At common law, to prevent the spreading of fire, in a case of actual necessity, any one might destroy realty or personalty with no responsibility in him and no remedy in the owner.[3] See FIRE.

Work of necessity. In the exception to the prohibition of labor, business, or work on the Lord's day, the reference is not to a physical or absolute necessity. Any labor, business, or work which is morally fit and proper to be done on that day, under the circumstances of the case, is a work of necessity.[4]

Not limited to labor for the preservation of life, health, or property from impending danger. The necessity may grow out of, or be incident to, the general course of trade or business, or even be an exigency of a particular trade or business. For example, a danger of navigation being closed may make it lawful to load a vessel on Sunday, if there is no other time to do so. So, as to keeping a blast furnace open. If absolute necessity were intended, it would be unlawful to prepare a meal.[5] See SUNDAY.

NEED. See WANT.

Needful. Rules "needful" for the government, good order, and efficiency of a school refer to such rules as will best advance the pupils in their studies, tend to their education and mental improvement, and promote their interest and welfare.[6]

Needless. Characterizes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction. In an act authorizing indictment for "needlessly killing" an animal, cannot reasonably be construed as characterizing an act which might by care be avoided.[7] See CRUELTY.

Needlessly. The requirement that compensation must be made or secured before private property can be "needlessly disturbed," indicates that some disturbances might be "needful," such as running a survey, locating a line of railroad, and such others as the legislature may specify.[8]

Needy. A devise to a trustee of an estate to be distributed among the testator's "next of kin who may be needy, in such proportions and at such times as in his opinion may be best," was held valid as to the class designated "the next of kin," but invalid, for uncertainty, as to the individuals to be selected as (the most) "needy."[1]

NEGATIVE. Is used in an untechnical sense, in opposition to affirmative or positive; as, negative or a negative — allegation, averment, condition, covenant, easement, evidence, statute, qq. v.

Whoever asserts a right dependent for its existence upon a negative must establish the truth of the negative, except where the matter is peculiarly within the knowledge of the adverse party — as, that the latter has no license for selling liquor.[2]

It is not a maxim of law that a negative is incapable of proof. When the negative ceases to be a simple one, — when it is qualified by time, place, or circumstance, — much of the objection is removed; and proof of a negative may reasonably be required when the qualifying circumstances are the direct matter in issue, or the affirmative is either probable in itself, or supported by a presumption, or peculiar means of proof are in the hands of the party asserting the negative. . . When a presumption is in favor of a party who asserts the negative, it affords an additional reason for casting the burden of proof on his adversary; it is when a presumption is in favor of the party who asserts the affirmative that its effect becomes visible, as the opposite side is then bound to prove his negative. One class of exceptions to the rule, that the burden of proof rests on the party holding the affirmative, includes the cases in which the plaintiff grounds his right of action upon a negative allegation which is an essential element in his case. . . So, where the negative allegation involves a charge of criminal neglect of duty, or fraud, or the wrongful violation of actual lawful possession of property, the party making the allegation must prove it; for in those cases the presumption of law is in favor of the party charged.[3] See AFFIRM, 1.

Negative pregnant. The statement of a negative proposition in such a form as may imply or carry with it the admission of an affirmative.

A fault, within the rule that a pleading must not be ambiguous in meaning.[4]

---

[1] [The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 248 (1838), Story, J.

[2] The Henry, 1 Blatch. & H. 469-71 (1834).

[3] Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 18-19 (1879), cases; The Tornado, 108 id. 342 (1883).

[4] Flagg v. Millbury, 4 Cush. 244 (1849), Wilde, J.

[5] McGatrick v. Wason, 4 Ohio St. 572-74 (1855), Thurman, C. J.; Burns v. Moore, 76 Ala. 342 (1884), cases. See also 55 Ga. 126; 31 Ill. 473; 76 Ind. 310; 56 Md. 415; 97 Mass. 407, 411.

[6] State, ex rel. Bowe v. Board of Fond du Lac, 63 Wis. 237 (1885).

[7] Grise v. State, 37 Ark. 456 (1881).

[8] McClain v. People, 9 Col. 194 (1886).

[1] Fontaine v. Thompson, 80 Va. 229, 232, 234 (1885), cases.

[2] Goodwin v. Smith, 72 Ind. 113 (1880); 67 id. 375, 68 id. 254; 78 N. Y. 480; 37 Am. R. 141, cases; Gould, Pl. 98, 344.

[3] Best, Ev. (Am. ed., 1883), §§ 270, 273, 276, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 78, 80. Approved, Colorado Coal & Iron Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 317 (1887), Matthews, J. See 1 Whart. Ev. § 356, cases.

[4] Steph. Pl. 408-9; Gould, Pl. 298; 16 M. & W. 708; 13 Wall. 307; 107 U. S. 275.

NEGLECT. Omission or forbearance to do a thing that can be done or that is required to be done.[1]

Does not generally imply carelessness or imprudence; simply, an omission to do or perform some work, duty, or act.[2]

Willful neglect. An intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in which the public has an interest, or which is important to the person injured, in either preventing or avoiding injury.[3] See FAULT; NEGLIGENCE.

NEGLIGENCE.[4] Failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person would not have done.[5]

The essence of the fault lies in omission or commission. The duty is dictated and measured by the exigencies of the occasion.[6]

The measure of care against accident which one must take to avoid responsibility is that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution would use if his interests were to be affected, and the whole risk were his own.[6]

The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do.[7]

Failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury.[8]

The want of care and diligence, and the degree of one is in inverse proportion to the degree of the other.[9]

The absence of care according to the circumstances.[10]

Where the duty is defined, a failure to perform it is of course negligence, and may be so declared by the court.[10]

A failure to perform some act required by law, or doing the act in an improper manner.

The law determines the duty; the evidence shows whether the duty was performed.[1]

Willful negligence, against which a carrier may not exact exemption, means gross omission of duty, involving intentional or willful misconduct.[2]

When a person inadvertently omits or fails to do some act required in the discharge of a legal duty to another, whether such duty arises from contract or from the nature of his employment, and as an ordinary or natural consequence damage ensues to that other person, such omission constitutes actionable negligence.[3]

What facts will constitute that diligence which the law requires must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The omission must be considered in relation to the business in which the person, who is to exercise the care, is engaged, and with reference to the persons, whether adults or children, who may be injured by the want of care.[3]

Negligence is only actionable when it involves a breach of duty toward the person injured.[4]

In its degrees, negligence ranges between pure accident and actual fraud. "Fraud" commences where negligence ends. Negligence is evidence of fraud, not fraud in itself.[5]

The difference between negligence and "willfulness," in a civil action for damages, is in the degree only, not in the essence of the wrong-doing.[6]

Comparative negligence. The doctrine obtains in several of the States that a plaintiff, though guilty of negligence contributing to the injury complained of, may still recover damages, if his negligence is slight, and that

---

[1] [Malone v. United States, 5 Ct. Cl. 489 (1869).

[2] Rosenplaenter v. Roessle, 54 N. Y. 268 (1873). See also 6 Gray, 294; 2 Grant, 60; 13 Conn. 52; 53 How. Pr. 122.

[3] Kentucky Central R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 128 (1885), Holt, J.

[4] L. negligentia: negligere, to neglect.

[5] [Baltimore, &c. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 441 (1877), Swayne, J.; The Lizzie Frank, 31 F. R. 478 (1887).

[6] Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 538 (1872), cases, Field, J.

[7] Blyth v. Birmingham Water Works Co., 11 Ex. 784 (1856), Alderson, B.; 26 E. L. & E. 508.

[8] Cooley, Torts, 630.

[9] Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch, C. C. 111 (1802).

[10] Philadelphia, &c. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 295 (1875).

[1] Nolan v. New York, &c. R. Co., 53 Conn. 471 (1885), Carpenter, J.

[2] Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Harris, 67 Tex. 169 (1886), Stayton, A. J.

[3] Galveston City R. Co. v. Hewitt, 67 Tex. 478 (1887), Stayton, A. J.

[4] Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504 (1887), — for the value of a horse injured by a barbed-wire fence along a highway. See other definitions, Whart. Neg. § 3; 10 F. R. 711; 13 id. 69; 17 id. 68; 19 id. 637; 3 McCrary, 352; 29 Ala. 302; 16 Ark. 308; 34 Cal. 75; 55 id. 596; 39 Conn. 210; 89 Ill. 353; 94 id. 352; 29 Iowa, 99; 5 Kan. 178; 80 Ky. 84; 10 Bush, 677; 34 La. An. 144, 181; 29 Minn. 3; 30 id. 433; 70 N. C. 390; 25 N. H. 549; 33 N. J. L. 440; 38 id. 11; 41 N. Y. 529; 91 id. 305; 20 Hun, 600; 62 Barb. 150; 40 Pa. 402; 67 id. 361; 78 id. 219; 89 id. 312; 2 R. I. 409; 19 S. C. 24, 29, 497; 46 Tex. 356; 59 id. 376; 55 Vt. 487; 9 W. Va. 252; 17 id. 196; 53 Wis. 633; 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 129.

[5] Gardner v. Heartt, 3 Denio, 237 (1846); 20 Ill. 235; 48 N. H. 41.

[6] Field v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 14 F. R. 336 (1882).

of the defendant gross in comparison therewith. But there must at least be no want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff.[1]

Contributory negligence. The absence of reasonable care and caution in a given case, on the part of a complainant.[2]

If the complainant's fault, whether of omission or commission, has been the proximate cause of his injury, he is without remedy against one also in the wrong.[3]

Any want of ordinary care, even in a slight decree, which directly contributes to the injury.[4]

Where the plaintiff alone is negligent he can have no relief. Where the defendant also is negligent in the same connection, the question is whether the damage was occasioned entirely by the improper conduct of the defendant; or, whether the plaintiff himself so far contributed to the misfortune by his own improper conduct, that but for such conduct the misfortune would not have happened. In the former case the plaintiff may recover, in the latter case not.[5]

The negligence of the plaintiff must have been the proximate cause of the injury.[6]

Where a passenger is injured by the negligence of a carrier, an act done by the passenger to avoid impending danger does not constitute contributory negligence, although it helped produce his injuries.[7]

Contributory negligence is to be proved by the defendant by a preponderance of evidence.[8]

Criminal negligence. In some of the States acts of gross negligence by common carriers of passengers or their employees have been made punishable as criminal offenses.[9]

Culpable negligence. The omission to do something which a reasonable and prudent man would do, or the doing of something which such a man would not do, under the circumstances.[1]

Involves a breach of duty toward the person complaining.[2]

Gross, ordinary, and slight negligence. "Gross negligence" is the omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property or interests.[3]

"Gross negligence" is a relative term. It implies a greater want of care than is implied by "ordinary negligence," — or, simply, the absence of the care that was necessary under the circumstances.[4]

The expressions "gross negligence" and "ordinary negligence," strictly speaking, are indicative rather of the degree of care and diligence which is due from a party and which he fails to perform, than of the amount of inattention, carelessness, or stupidity which he exhibits. If very little care is due, and he fails to bestow that little, it is called "gross negligence." If very great care is due, and he fails to come up to the mark required, it is called "slight negligence." And if ordinary care is due, such as a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs, failure to bestow that amount of care is called "ordinary negligence." In each case, the negligence, whatever epithet we give it, is failure to bestow the care and skill which the situation demands; and hence it is more accurate, perhaps, to call it simply "negligence." This is the tendency of modern authorities.[5]

The Supreme Court has disapproved of attempts to fix the degrees of negligence by legal definitions. "The law furnishes no definitions which can be applied in practice, but leaves it to the jury to determine in each case what the duty was, and what omissions amount to a breach of it."[6]

---

[1] Wabash, &c. R. Co. v. Moran, 13 Bradw. 76 (1883). cases, Bailey, P. J.; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. O'Connor, ib. 65-66 (1883), cases; Union Ry. & Transit Co. v. Kallaber, 12 id. 404 (1883). See Kansas Pacific R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 180 (1883); 124 Mass. 50.

[2] [Washington, &c. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 401 (1872).

[3] Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 371 (1886), Field, J.

[4] Neanow v. Uttech, 46 Wis. 590 (1879).

[5] Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 442 (1877), cases, Swayne, J.

[6] Cornwall v. Charlott, &c. R. Co., 97 N. C. 11 (1887).

[7] Ladd v. Foster, 31 F. R. 881 (1887), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 559 (1886) — Irish Law Times. See generally Wells v. Coe, 9 Col. 160-62 (1886), cases; Farley v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 81 Va. 784-85 (1886); 36 Alb. Law J. 324-25 (1887), cases. By passengers on street cars, 24 Am. Law Reg. 739-42 (1885), cases.

[8] Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 298 (1876); Washington, &c. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 406-8 (1872), cases; 16 F. R. 76, 160; 62 Cal. 334; 59 Iowa, 186; 84 La. An. 1086; 101 Mass. 464-65; 92 Pa. 432, 479-81.

[9] See Cook v. Western, &c. R. Co., 72 Ga. 48 (1883).

[1] Woodman v. Nottingham, 49 N. H. 392 (1870).

[2] Rush v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 36 Kan. 135 (1887).

[3] [Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 367 (1857), Clifford, J.

[4] Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 495 (1875), cases, Davis, J.

[5] New York Central R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 382-83 (1873), cases, Bradley, J.; Steamboat New World v. King, 16 How. 474 (1853); Griswold v. New York, &c. R. Co., 53 Conn. 390 (1885).

[6] Milwaukee, &c. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 494 (1875), Davis, J. See also as to gross negligence, 3 Mas. 132, Story, J.; 14 F. R. 710; 30 Ala. 496; 23 Conn. 443; 73 Ill. 357; 45 Mo. 22; 22 Barb. 151; 38 Ohio St. 639; Story, Bailm. § 17; as to ordinary, 5 Kan. 180; 10 id. 288; 7 B.

Where neither fraud nor collusion, nor privity of contract exists, a party will not be held liable for his act of negligence, unless the act is one immediately dangerous to the lives of others.[1]

The limit of the doctrine relating to actionable negligence is, that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining such loss. Such a restriction upon the right to sue for a want of care in the exercise of an employment or the transaction of business is plainly necessary to restrain the remedy from being pushed to an impracticable extreme. There would be no bounds to actions and litigious intricacies, if the ill effects of negligence could be followed down the chain of results to the final effect.[2]

An adult must give that care and attention to his own protection that is ordinarily exercised by persons of intelligence and discretion. From an infant of tender years less discretion is required and the degree depends upon his age and knowledge. The caution required is according to the maturity and capacity of the child,—a matter to be determined in each case by circumstances.[3]

One is bound to exercise reasonable care to anticipate and prevent injury to a child of such tender years as to have little discretion, although a trespasser.[4]

The rule is that a master is exempt from liability to a servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant. It is implied in the contract that the servant risks the dangers which ordinarily attend the business — among which is the carelessness of those in the same employment, with whose habits, conduct, and capacity he has an opportunity to become acquainted, and against whose neglect he may guard himself. It is implied, also, that in the selection of the physical means the master will not be wanting in proper care. His negligence in that regard is not a hazard usually attendant upon the business; nor is it one the servant is presumed to risk, for he has, ordinarily, no connection with their purchase, preservation, or maintenance. Although the master's liability is not that of a guarantor of the absolute safety or perfection of apparatus provided for use, yet he is bound to exercise the care which the exigency reasonably requires, in furnishing such as is adequate and suitable. It is for the jury to say whether in relying upon a promise given to repair, and using machinery after he knew its defective condition, the servant was in the exercise of due care. In such case the burden of proving contributory negligence is upon the master.[1]

Where the master has expressly promised to remedy a defect, the servant can recover for an injury caused thereby within such a period of time after the promise as it would be reasonable to allow for its performance, and for an injury suffered within any period which would not preclude all reasonable expectation that the promise might be kept.[2]

Usually, where some instrument or appliance has become unsafe and the danger from its use is not imminent or obvious, the servant may use it for a short time with the expectation that the master will remedy the defect. Where the master has been informed of a defect, and agrees to remedy it, the servant may continue for a reasonable time in the employment, so as to give the master an opportunity to fulfill his promise. Where the danger is one to which the servant is not exposed in the ordinary course of his employment, but is one which he is required to immediately encounter by special command of a superior, without time for reflection, he may obey without being guilty of contributory negligence or forfeiting his right to recovery in case injury results. When the danger is not always obvious or imminent, and both employer and employee, with full knowledge, enter upon or continue the contract of employment, neither is guilty of culpable negligence; while if the danger is obvious and imminent, and it is encountered by the servant, then both are equally guilty — that of the employee being culpable contributory negligence.[3]

When one enters the employment of another he assumes all the ordinary risks attendant upon it; and where a number of persons enter a common employment for another, all being upon a common footing, and one receives an injury by the neglect of another, they are the agents of each other, and no recovery can be had against the employer. The English rule has been that it did not matter if the injured servant was subordinate to the neglectful one and under his control; or if they were engaged in different grades of the service. To hold the master responsible he must have had personal connection with the injury, provided he was not neglectful in selecting and retaining his servants. This rule seems to prevail in many courts in

Mon. 668; 61 Ill. 160; 71 Me. 41; 6 Met. 26; 25 Mich. 297; 24 N. Y. 181; 40 id. 29; as to slight, 35 N. Y. 27; 3 Oreg. 145; 64 Tex. 151; 43 Wis. 509.

[1] Savings Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 204 (1879), cases.

[2] Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 8 (1874), Beasley, C. J.; Gordon v. Livingston, 12 Mo. Ap. 267, 272 (1882).

[3] Washington, &c. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 408 (1872), cases, Hunt, J.; Union Pacific R. Co. v. Fort, 17 id. 553 (1873); Sioux City, &c. R. Co. v. Stout, ib. 660 (1873); Collins v. South Boston R. Co., 142 Mass. 313 (1886), cases; 124 id. 57; 91 N. Y. 420; 43 Pa. 220–23; 88 id. 520; 100 id. 149.

[4] Kentucky Central R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 125–27 (1885), cases. See generally as to young and inexperienced persons, Hickey v. Taaffe, 105 N. Y. 26 (1887), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 734–43 (1887), cases; 25 id. 891–94 (1886), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 33, 459 (1886), cases.

[1] Hough v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 100 U. S. 213–26 (1879), cases, Harlan, J.; Union Pacific R. Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. 557 (1873); Packet Company v. McCue, ib. 508 (1873); Tuttle v. Detroit, &c. R. Co., 122 U. S. 195 (1887); North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. 64 (1885).

[2] Hough v. Texas, &c. R. Co., 100 U. S. 225 (1879), cases.

[3] Rush, Adm'x v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 36 Kan. 136–38 (1887), Valentine, J. See as to the effect of a promise to remedy a defect, Indianapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20 (1887), cases: 37 Alb. Law J. 169, 171, cases; 25 Am. Law Reg. 617–32 (1886), cases; 92 Am. Dec. 213–21, cases. Presumption, where the appliance is within control of the defendant, Sheeler v. Chesapeake, &c. R. Co., 81 Va. 199 (1885); 20 Am. R. D. 245–47, 261, cases. Want of knowledge, as a defense, 20 Cent. Law J. 163–66 (1885), cases.

this country, except that if the injured party be in a different grade of the service, the employer may be responsible; the establishment of the rule being largely due to the opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in the case of Farwell v. Boston, &c. R. Co., 4 Metc. 57 (1842). The courts of Ohio and Kentucky have extended the rule; and the leaning in New York is in the same direction: they holding not only that the master is liable for an injury to one servant by another in a different grade of employment, but, also, when engaged in the same common employment, provided the neglectful one is superior to or in control of the injured one.[1]

Carriers of passengers must exercise ordinary care. According to the best considered adjudications, and upon the clearest grounds of necessity and good faith, "ordinary care," in the selection and retention of servants and agents, implies that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably require. It is such care, as, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of employees, is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered. Ordinary care implies the exercise of reasonable diligence, and reasonable diligence implies, as between employer and employee, such watchfulness, caution, and foresight as, under all the circumstances of the particular service, a corporation controlled by careful, prudent officers ought to exercise. A degree of care "ordinarily exercised in such matters" may not be due, or reasonable, or proper care, and therefore not ordinary care.[2]

The occupant of land or a structure, who "invites" another to come upon it for a lawful purpose, is liable to such person, not chargeable with contributory negligence, for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land and its approaches, if such condition was known to the occupant and he suffered it to exist without giving notice to those likely to act upon the invitation. An invitation will be inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage; while a "license" will be inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using it. Each case rests largely upon its own circumstances.[1]

A passive acquiescence in a certain use of land by others involves no liability; but if the owner or occupier directly or by implication induces persons to enter or pass over his premises, he thereby assumes an obligation that they are in a safe condition, suitable for such use.[3]

While a railroad company is not bound to the same degree of care in regard to a mere stranger who is even unlawfully upon its premises that it owes to passengers, it is not exempt from responsibility to such stranger for an injury arising from its negligence or tortious act.[3]

What is negligence and what is ordinary care must be submitted to the jury, if there be any dispute or reasonable doubt as to the facts claimed to establish the alleged negligence, or as to the just inferences to be drawn therefrom. If, however, the facts be admitted or ascertained, it is the province of the court to declare the law thereon.[4]

See further BAILMENT; CARE; CARRIER; CASE, 8; CAUSE, 1; CHECK; COLLISION; CONSEQUENCES; DAMAGES; DILIGENCE; FAULT; FIRE; FRAUD; INJURY; JURY; LACHES; LIVERY-KEEPER; PRUDENCE; SERVANT, 8; TELEGRAPH; TORT, 2.

NEGOTIATE.[5] 1. To conduct business: to discuss the terms of a bargain; to endeavor to effect an agreement; to conclude a contract.[6]

2. To transfer by indorsement or delivery.

A bill of exchange is "negotiated" when it has passed into the hands of the payee,

[1] Louisville, &c. R. Co. v. Moore, 83 Ky. 683-84 (1886), cases, Holt, J. See further, as to master and servant, and fellow-servants, Herbert v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 3 Dak. 50-58 (1882), cases; Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 412 (1882), cases; Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. McKenzie, 81 Va. 73-75, 84-85 (1885), cases; Little Rock, &c. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 347 (1886), cases; Sanborn v. Modera Flume, &c. Co., 70 Cal. 265-68 (1886), cases; Rogers v. Ludlow Manuf. Co., 144 Mass. 200 (1887); Rice v. King Philip Mills, ib. 235 (1887); Porter v. West. N. Car. R. Co., 97 N. C. 75 (1887); 24 Am. Law Reg. 462-67 (1885), cases; 25 id. 481-93 (1886), cases; 26 id. 635-41 (1887), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 316-23, 555-59 (1886), cases. As to contracts limiting the liability of the employer, see Lake Shore, &c. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 476 (1886), cases: 26 Am. Law Reg. 45-47 (1887), cases; 26 Alb. Law J. 64-67 (1882), cases.

[2] Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 459-61 (1882), cases, Harlan, J.; Randall v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 109 id. 483 (1883); Armour v. Hahn, 111 id. 318 (1884), cases; Chicago, &c. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 id. 382-83 (1884), cases: 20 Cent. Law J. 87 (1885), cases; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 id. 647 (1886); Atchison, &c. R. Co. v. Moore, 29 Kan. 644 (1883); Peschel v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 62 Wis 340 (1885); 2 McCrary, 235, 243; 3 id. 430-36; 11 Biss. 362; 14 F. R. 833-46; 39 Ark. 1, 26; 3 Cal. 499; 50 Conn. 433, 457; 88 Ill. 270; 125 Mass. 485; 130 id. 102; 22 Minn. 185; 86 Pa. 429-40; 100 id. 301, 306.

[1] Bennett v. Louisville, &c. R. Co., 102 U. S. 580 (1880), cases, Harlan, J. See also Nickerson v. Tirrell, 127 Mass. 239 (1879), cases; Converse v. Walker, 30 Hun, 601 (1883); Parker v. Portland Publishing Co., 69 Me. 173, 176 (1879), cases; McKee v. Bidwell, 74 Pa. 218, 223 (1873); American Steamship Co. v. Landreth, 108 id. 264 (1885); 111 id. 423; Marshall v. Heard, 59 Tex. 226 (1883), cases.

[2] Crogan v. Schiele, 53 Conn. 205-7 (1885), cases.

[3] Sioux City, &c. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 661 (1873), Hunt, J.

[4] Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 70 (1881), cases; Abbott v. Chicago, &c. R. Co., 30 Minn. 483 (1883); Mares v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 3 Dak. T. 343-44 (1884), cases. That the Government is not liable for the negligence of its employees, see Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 515 (1888), cases.

[5] L. negotiare, to do business: negotium.

[6] See Inhabitants of Palmer v. Ferry, 6 Gray, 422 (1856); Yerkes v. National Bank, 69 N. Y. 386 (1877); Coles v. Shepard, 30 Minn. 448 (1883).

or indorsee, or other holder for value, who thereby acquires a title to it.[1]

Negotiable. Capable of being transferred by assignment; also, a thing which may be transferred by a sale and indorsement or delivery:[2] as, a negotiable or a non-negotiable instrument, negotiables and non-negotiables.

A note, to be negotiable, must not be encumbered by a collateral agreement to be determined by a jury.[3]

The tendency is to enlarge the rule as to the negotiability of paper. Stipulations which do not render uncertain the amount to be paid, or the time of payment, but which tend to increase the value of the instrument, do not impair its negotiability.[4]

At common law, no contract was assignable with a right in the assignee to sue in his own name. To this rule bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable to order or bearer, were made exceptions by the law-merchant. They may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, and such a transfer is called "negotiation." It is a mercantile business transaction, and the capability of being thus transferred, so as to give the indorsee a right to sue on the contract in his own name, is what constitutes negotiation. The term expresses, at least primarily, this mode and effect of transfer.[5]

As to bills and notes, other consequences follow: e. g., liability of an indorser after notice of non-payment; non-availability, as to a bona fide indorser for value, before maturity, in the regular course of business, of an equity good as against the original payee, or the fact that the paper was lost or stolen. But "negotiability" may exist without these consequences. Thus, a past-due note or bill payable to order or bearer is negotiable, but defects then existing,—all prior equities, and the defense that the paper was lost or stolen,—attach to it.[6]

Vouchers for money due, certificates of indebtedness for services rendered or for property furnished for the use of a city, orders or drafts drawn by one city officer upon another, or any other device of the kind, used for liquidating the amounts due public creditors, are not negotiable. To make such instruments negotiable, in the broad sense, rendering them in the hands of bona fide holders absolute obligations to pay, would be an abuse of their character, convert municipal corporations into trading companies, and put it in the power of corrupt officials to bankrupt a community.[7]

Nor does the term apply to securities to pay for extensive public works, the expense of which is beyond the immediate resources of reasonable taxation, and capable of being spread over a long period.[8]

County warrants are not negotiable, in the sense of the law-merchant, so that when held by a bona fide purchaser, evidence of their invalidity, or defenses available against the original payee, would be excluded. The transferee takes them subject to all defenses which existed as against the instrument in the hands of such payee.[1]

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are distinctively negotiable instruments. They are the representatives of money, and circulate as money. They are held sacred in the hands of a bona fide holder, for value, without notice. Without this they could not perform their peculiar functions. On account of their negotiable quality and convenience in mercantile affairs, they are favored by the courts. Possession is prima facie evidence of title. Nothing short of fraud, not even gross negligence, will invalidate title from mere possession.[2]

If, in a suit brought by the indorsee or transferee of a negotiable instrument, the maker or acceptor, or a party who is primarily bound by the original consideration, proves that there was fraud or illegality in the inception of the instrument, the burden of proof is thrown on the plaintiff to show that he is a holder for value.[3]

As between the payee of a promissory note, payable to order, and not indorsed, and a stranger having possession, the payee is prima facie the legal owner; so that mere possession cannot avail the holder in an action by the payee.[4]

If any previous holder was a bona fide owner for value, the plaintiff, by showing that he paid value, can avail himself of the position of such holder. In cases to the contrary, there was no bona fide previous holder; yet in such case the plaintiff has recovered advances made before he learned that prior parties were not bona fide holders.[5]

See further ASSIGN, 2; BANK, 2 (2); BEARER; CERTAINTY; CIRCULATION; COLLECTION; COUPON, Bond;

[1] Baring v. Lyman, 1 Story, 416 (1841), Story, J.

[2] Walker v. Ocean Bank, 19 Ind. 250 (1862), Hanna, J.

[3] Woods v. North, 84 Pa. 409 (1877); Garretson v. Purdy, 3 Dak. 182–88 (1882), cases.

[4] Schlesinger v. Arline, 31 F. R. 649–52 (1887), cases.

[5] Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co., 101 U. S. 562–64 (1879), cases, Strong, J. See also Paine v. Central Vt. R. Co., 118 id. 160 (1886), cases.

[6] Mayor of Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. 477–78 (1873), Bradley, J.

[1] Wall v. County of Monroe, 108 U. S. 77–78 (1880), Field, J.; County of Ouachita v. Wolcott, ib. 559 (1880), Miller, J.

[2] Shaw v. North Penn. R. Co., 101 U. S. 564 (1879), cases; Perley v. Perley, 144 Mass. 107 (1887), cases. See also, as to the effect of negligence, Credit Co. v. Howe Machine Co., 54 Conn. 383–84 (1886), cases; 23 Cent. Law J. 149–54 (1886), cases. Why negotiable paper is favored, Merchants' Bank v. McClelland, 9 Col. 611 (1886), cases.

[3] Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 542 (1883), cases, Woods, J. See also Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 364–65 (1857), cases; Smith v. Sac County, 11 Wall. 154 (1870), cases; Hotchkiss v. National Banks, 21 id. 359 (1874), cases; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 754 (1876), cases; 2 McCrary, 568; 11 Biss. 66; 4 Hughes, 524; 18 Ct. Cl. 399; 133 Mass. 151; 38 Mich. 299; 52 Miss. 919; 15 Mo. 342; 73 N. Y. 273; 29 Wis. 191.

[4] Durein v. Moeser, 36 Kan. 443 (1887), cases.

[5] Butterfield v. Town of Ontario, 32 F. R. 802 (1887), cases. As to diligence required in collecting from indorsers, guarantors, and sureties, see 21 Cent. Law J. 6–9 (1885), cases; 36 Am. Law Reg. 129–47, 201–18 (1887), cases.

DISCOUNT, 2; DISHONOR; DRUNKENNESS; EXCHANGE, 8, Bill of; FACE, 1; FAITH; FORGERY; HOLDER; INDORSEMENT; LADING, Bill of; LOST, 2; MATURE, 2; MERCHANT, Law; NOTE, 2; ORDER, 1; PAPER, 4; PAROL, Evidence; PLACE, 1, Of payment; PRESENT, 2 (1); PROTEST, 2; RENEW; RETIRE, 2; SECURITY; SIGHT; SUSPICION; TURPITUDE; VALUE, Received. WARRANT, 2 (2).

NEGRO. See CITIZEN; COLOR, 1; MULATTO; PARTUS; RIGHTS, Civil; SLAVERY; WAR; WHITE.

NEIGHBOR. See POLICE, 2, Public; UTERE, Sic utere, etc.

Neighborhood. See COUNTRY; VICINITY.

NEMO. L. No man; no one.

Nemo allegans, See TURPITUDE.

Nemo dat. See DARE.

Nemo bis vexari. See VEXARI.

Nemo debet judex. See JUDEX.

Nemo debet testis. See TESTIS.

Nemo exuere patriam. See EXPATRIATION.

Nemo hæres viventis. See HÆRES.

Nemo plus juris. See TRANSFERRE.

Nemo tenetur accusare. See ACCUSARE.

NEPHEW; NIECE. The immediate descendants, male and female, respectively, of brothers and sisters.

May be shown, by circumstances, to include grand-nephews and grand-nieces, even a great-grand niece,[1] or a nephew or niece by marriage.[2] See CONSANGUINITY.

NET; NETT.[3] The quantity, amount, or value of an article or commodity, after all tare and charges are deducted.[4]

That which remains after deducting all charges or outlay; as, net — earnings,[5] balance, income, proceeds, profits, value, weight, qq. v.

NEUTRALITY. Siding with neither party in a war; sustaining a relation of amity to belligerents.

Neutrality is "strict," and "imperfect;" and imperfect neutrality is either "impartial" or "qualified."[6]

NEVER INDEBTED. See DEBT, 2.

NEW. 1. Applied to the same subject or object, stands opposed to old, as in "new patent:" more or less efficacious, or possessing new properties by a combination with other ingredients, not from a mere change of form produced by mechanical division.[1] See NOVELTY.

2. In technical phrases, varies only slightly, if at all, from the popular signification: as, in new — acknowledgment, assets, assignment, buildings, evidence or proofs, matter, parties, promise, trial, qq. v. Cf. RENEW.

New for old. In adjusting losses in marine insurance, the rule has been to apply the old materials toward paying for new, on a valuation of one-third for the old.[2] See BUILDING; RESTITUTIO, 2.

Newly discovered evidence. See DISCOVERY, 8.

NEW MEXICO. See PUEBLO; TERRITORY, 2.

NEW YEAR'S. See HOLIDAY.

NEWGATE. An underground prison in Connecticut, in use for more than fifty years after the close of the Revolution.

The place, for its horrors, has been compared to the Black Hole of Calcutta.[3]

NEWSPAPER. A publication containing a narrative of recent events and occurrences, published regularly at short intervals from time to time.[4]

In the usage of the commercial world, "a publication in numbers, consisting commonly of single sheets, and published at short intervals, conveying intelligence of passing events."[5]

As ordinarily understood, a publication which contains, among other things, what is called the general news, the current news, or the news of the day; not, a publication which does not usually contain such news, and is not intended for general circulation.[6]

Such a newspaper is adapted to the general reader. Where the object of the publication of a summons is considered, the reasonableness of such a construction of the word as requires the publication to be made

[1] Cromer v. Pinckney, 3 Barb. Ch. 475 (1848), cases.

[2] Green's Appeal, 42 Pa. 80 (1862); Merrill v. Morton, 43 L. T. 750 (1881).

[3] F. net, pure: clean, clear.

[4] Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. *202-3 (1828).

[5] St. John v. Erie R. Co., 22 Wall. 148 (1874); 10 Blatch. 271; 99 U. S. 420; 50 Ga. 350; 71 Pa. 74.

[6] See Woolsey, Int. Law, Ch. 11; 1 Kent, 116; R. S. § 5286: United States v. Rand, 17 F. R. 142 (1883); United States v. Quincy, 6 Pet. 445 (1832); 3 Whart. Cr.-L. §§ 2778-2802.

[1] See Lessee of Pollard's Heirs v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 364 (1840); Glue Co. v. Upton, 97 U. S. 6 (1877).

[2] Eager v. Atlas Ins. Co., 14 Pick. 143-45 (1833), cases; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 129, 385.

[3] See 1 McMaster, Hist. Peop. U. S. 98.

[4] Attorney-General v. Bradbury, 7 Exch. 103 (1851), Martin, B. Postal Law,— "The Household Narrative of Current Events."

[5] 4 Op. Att.-Gen. 11 (1842). Postal Law,— "The Shipping and Commercial List and New York Price Current."

[6] [Beecher v. Stephens, 25 Minn. 147 (1878), Berry, J

where it will be likely to meet the eye of the general reader, is apparent. The "Northwestern Reporter," while a legal newspaper, is not a newspaper in the ordinary sense.[1]

In another case a paper devoted to disseminating legal news among lawyers and business men was held to be a newspaper.[2]

A newspaper is of itself a public print, and imports publicity. The word "public" need not therefore be used in describing the paper.[3]

A "daily newspaper" is published every day of the week except one, whether Sunday or any other day, as, Monday.[4]

A statute providing that laws of a general character shall be published "in a daily and weekly newspaper," contemplates publication in the daily and weekly editions as a single insertion, and not as a separate insertion in each edition.[5]

A paper which is composed and issued in a place is "published" at that place, although the press-work is done elsewhere.[6]

A paper made up partly of a "patent inside," printed in another State, is printed "in the county where it is issued," within the meaning of a statute regulating publication of notice in actions against non-residents.[7]

Since, in nearly all counties, newspapers are published but once a week, a legislature, in prescribing publication a certain number of weeks, will be presumed to have intended publication once a week.[8]

A newspaper may be admissible in evidence to impute knowledge of a fact, as, the dissolution of a partnership; when verified, to prove prices-current, but not, generally, for other purposes. Knowledge derived from a newspaper is provable inferentially, as, from familiarity with the paper.[9]

When the publication of news is made in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, without intent to defame, and without negligence, a person injured may be restricted in his recovery to actual damages.[10]

Fair reports of what takes place before legislative bodies and their committees, and in the courts, are privileged — the report being confined to the proceedings, and without defamatory headings or comments.[11]

The law favors publicity of legal proceedings, as far as attainable without injustice being done to any person immediately concerned. The public being permitted to attend, may be served with reports of, judicial inquiries, provided these reports are so full and impartial as not to convey a false impression. . . A report must be strictly confined to the actual proceedings, and contain no defamatory comments. . . It has been held that the publication of ex parte proceedings, or merely preliminary examinations, is not privileged. Reports of these tend "to prejudge those whom the law presumes innocent; to cause the judgment of conviction to be pronounced before trial; to poison the sources of justice — the mass of the people from whom jurors are drawn."[1]

But it is not lawful to publish even a correct account of the proceedings in a case in court, if the account contains matter of a blasphemous or indecent nature.[2]

See CONTEMPT, 1; COMMUNICATION, Privileged, 2; DISTRIBUTION, 3; EDITOR; MAIL, 2; OPINION, 2; PACKET; PROCLAMATION, 3; REVIEW, 3; SCIENCE; SUNDAY; WEEK.

NEXT. Nearest.

A return of process to the "next term" means to the next term to which the law directs return.[3]

A writ of attachment was issued in September, 1880, returnable to the "next March term, 1880." Held, that the writ being returnable to an impossible day, all proceedings were void.[4]

NICKEL. See COIN.

NICKNAME. See NAME, 1.

NIECE. See NEPHEW.

NIGHT. In the law of burglary, there must not be day-light enough to discern a face.[5]

It will not avail the prisoner that there was light enough from the moon, street-lamps, and buildings, aided by snow, to discern the features of another person.[6]

Within the meaning of a statute forbidding the keeping open of tippling-houses on the Sabbath day and night, "night" includes the time between midnight on Saturday and the dawn of Sabbath morning.[7]

See DAY.

---

[1] [Beecher v. Stephens, ante.

[2] Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51 (1874), — "Chicago Legal News." See also Kellogg v. Carrico, 47 Mo. 159 (1870), — "Legal Record and Advertiser."

[3] Bailey v. Myrick, 50 Me. 181 (1860).

[4] Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30 (1872), — "San Francisco Chronicle."

[5] Montgomery Advertiser Co. v. Burke, 93 Ala. 333 (1886).

[6] Bayer v. Hoboken, 44 N. J. L. 131 (1882), — "Hoboken Advertiser."

[7] Palmer v. McCormick, 30 F. R. 82 (1887).

[8] Greenwood v. Murray, 28 Minn. 123 (1881), — "St. Paul Daily Evening Dispatch."

[9] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 671-75, cases.

[10] Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 Mich. 447 (1868); Perrott v. New Orleans Times, 25 La. An. 170 (1873).

[11] See Pittock v. O'Niel, 63 Pa. 253 (1869); Storey v. Wallace, 60 Ill. 51 (1871); Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10 (1878); Bathrick v. Detroit Post and Tribune Co., 50 id. 630, 644 (1883).

[1] See Cooley, Const. Lim. 448-51; Rex v. Fisher, 2 Campb. *570-71 (1811), Ellenborough, C. J.; Stanley v. Webb, 4 Sandf. 21, 30 (1850), Campbell, J.; 16 Alb. Law J. 327 (1877), cases; 18 id. 142 (1878), cases; Rex v. Lee, 5 Esp. 123 (1804); Stiles v. Nokes, 7 East, 493 (1806); Lewis v. Clement, 3 B. & Ald. 702 (1820).

[2] King v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 167 (1819); ib. 161. See generally Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 243-59, cases; Starkie, Sl. & Lib. 173, 186, cases; Townshend, Sl. & Lib. §§ 217-22, cases; as to privileged communications, 21 Cent. Law J. 86-90, 450-55 (1885), cases.

[3] Rivers v. Hood, 72 Ga. 194 (1883).

[4] Holzman v. Martinez, 2 N. M. 272 (1880). See also 7 Ga. 107; 1 Mass. 411; 4 Johns. Ch. 96; 64 Ill. 356.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 224.

[6] State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 179 (1879).

[7] Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 295 (1875).

Night-walkers. Those who are abroad during the night and sleep by day, and are of suspicious appearance and demeanor.[1]

"Those who eave-drop men's houses, cast men's gates, carts, and the like into ponds, or commit other outrages or misdemeanors in the night, or shall be suspected to be pilfering, or otherwise like to disturb the peace, or that be persons of evil fame or report generally, or that shall keep company with any such, or with other suspicious persons in the night."[1]

Watchmen and constables may arrest night-walkers and commit them to custody till morning.[2]

NIHIL; NIL. L. Nothing.

Nil is the contracted form.

Various returns to process are termed returns of nihil.

Nihil or nil debet, or indebitatus. He owes nothing. See DEBET, 2.

Nihil or nil dicit. He says nothing. A judgment in default of a plea or an answer. See RETRAXIT.

Nihil est. There is nothing.

A fuller answer to the command of a summons than is non est inventus. It means that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick,— no dwelling-house, no family, no residence, no personal presence.[3]

Nihil habet. He has nothing. The return when the officer has been unable to find the defendant.

Nihil alone is often used. It is used as the return to a scire facias that the defendant, or his bail, has nothing by which the officer can "make known" to them,— two such returns being sometimes considered equal to a service. Thus, two "nihils" in a suit on a mortgage may equal a personal service. The name is also given to the return that nothing is subject to garnishment. Compare BONA, 2, Nulla.

NIHILIST. 1. One who denies that anything can be known or shown to exist.[4] See NIHIL; OATH.

2. In Russia, a member of a secret society whose aim is the overthrow of authority as at present constituted, the ulterior view of the more advanced members being the establishment of a socialistic or communistic republic.[4] See ANARCHY; COMMUNISM; GOVERNMENT.

NISI. L. Unless; conditionally.

A rule or order which is to become absolute (q. v.) "unless" cause to the contrary be shown is termed a rule nisi.

The continuance of a case nisi is to a time certain unless something shall occur to cause action to be taken upon the case before that time.[1]

Nisi prius. Unless before.

Formerly, was applied to a court holding jury trials. The two words were the most emphatic in the venire for summoning the jurors.

This use of the word originated in a fiction. An issue of fact was to be tried at Westminster by a jury from the county wherein the cause arose, "unless before" the day set the judges, upon their circuit, came to that county.[2]

It being found a burden to compel the parties, witnesses, and jurors to go — say from Westmoreland, to try actions of trifling value at Westminster, the practice obtained to continue such actions in the court at Westminster until the itinerant justices, of whom two were of the Westminster bench, came to the county where the cause arose, whereupon the cause was remanded from Westminster for trial. For a period, the proceedings were returned to Westminster for judgment. Holding trials in this manner became the principal civil employment of the justices.[3]

An advocate is said to be a good nisi prius lawyer when he possesses the qualifications required to attain success in the management of trials at nisi prius.

NO. See AWARD; BILL; DEFENSE, 2; FUNDS; GOODS. Compare NUL; NULLUS. See also NUMBER.

NO MAN'S LAND. See INDIAN, Country.

NOBILITY. See TITLE, 4.

NOISE. See AIR; DISORDER; NUISANCE; POLICE, 2.

If a use of property is objectionable solely on account of the noise which it makes, it is a nuisance, if at all, by reason of the effect upon the health or comfort of those who are within hearing. The right to make a noise for a proper purpose must be measured with reference to the degree of annoyance which others may reasonably be required to submit to. In connection with the importance of the business from which it proceeds, that must be determined by the effect of noise upon people generally, and not upon those, on the one hand, who are peculiarly susceptible to it, or those on the other who by long experience have learned to endure it without inconvenience; not upon those whose strong nerves and robust health enable them to endure the greatest disturbances without suffering, nor upon those whose mental or physical condition makes them painfully sensitive to everything about them. That this must be the rule in regard to public nuisances is obvious. It is the rule as well, and for reasons nearly if not quite as satisfactory, in relation to private nuisances. Upon a question whether one can lawfully ring his factory bell, or run his noisy

[1] State v. Dowers, 45 N. H. 544 (1864), Bellows, J.; Thomas v. State, 55 Ala. 260 (1876); State v. Russell, 14 R. I. 506 (1884).

[2] 4 Bl. Com. 292.

[3] Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. 138 (1859).

[4] [Worcester's Dict.

[1] Commonwealth v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 208 (1887).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 59.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 352.

machinery, or whether the noise will be a private nuisance to the occupant of a house near by, it is necessary to ascertain the natural and probable effect of the sound upon ordinary persons in that house — not how it will affect a particular person who happens to be there to-day, or who may chance to come to-morrow.[1]

Where a noisy nuisance is complained of, it is a question of degree and locality. If the noise is very slight, and the inconvenience merely fanciful, or such as would be complained of by people of elegant and dainty modes of living, and inflicts no serious or substantial discomfort, a court of equity will not take cognizance of it. But if unusual and disturbing noises are made, and particularly if they are regularly and persistently made, and if they are of a character to affect the comfort of a man's household, or the peace and health of his family, and to destroy the comfortable enjoyment of his home, a court of equity will prevent continuance of such injuries.[2]

NOLLE. L. To not wish or desire: non velle. Compare VOLO.

Nolle prosequi. To not care to proceed. A record entry that the prosecutor does not care to proceed further in the particular case.

An agreement not to proceed further in that suit, as to the particular person or cause of action to which it is applied.[3]

Said of a judgment in a criminal case by which the attorney-general, or other representative of the state, voluntarily declares that he will not further prosecute a suit or indictment, or a particular count, or as to a particular defendant.[4]

Sometimes spoken of as allowing a nolle.

Not a bar to another prosecution for the same offense,[1] but such termination as will allow an action for malicious prosecution.[2] See PROSEQUI.

Nolo contendere. I do not care to dispute it.

A plea in effect the same as a plea of "guilty," so far at least as regards proceedings on the particular indictment.[3]

NOM. See NOMEN, Nomine.

Nom de plume. See COPYRIGHT.

NOMEN. L. A name.

Nomen collectivum. A class name.

Thus, "heir" may include all the heirs of a person, and "misdemeanor" includes many different species of offenses.

Nomen generalissimum. A very general name: a comprehensive term.

Such are the terms crime, demand, draft, estate, goods, grant, heir, house, instrument, interest, land, merchandise, obligation, offense.

Nomine. By name; under the name of.

NOMINAL. Existing in name only; apparent, formal, not real or substantial: as, nominal — damages, date, partner, party, qq. v.

NOMINEE. See CANDIDATE: OFFICER; RESIGNATION.

NON. L. Not; no.

A particle of negation, whether occurring as a single word or as a prefix to a word of affirmative signification.

Used with words of Latin origin. Un is used with words of Anglo-Saxon origin.

1. Pure Latin phrases:

Non accrevit. See ACCRESCERE.

Non assumpsit. See ASSUMPSIT.

Non cepit. See CAPERE.

Non compos. See MENS.

Non constat. See CONSTAT, 1.

Non cul; non culpabilis. See CULPA.

Non damnificatus. See DAMNUM.

Non demisit. See DEMITTERE.

Non detinet. See DETINERE.

Non est factum. See FACERE.

Non est inventus. See FIND, 3.

Non juridicus. See DIES.

Non obstante. See p. 1140.

Non prosequitur. See PROSEQUI.

[1] Rogers v. Elliott, 146 Mass. 351 (March 2, 1888), cases, holding that a person who by reason of a sunstroke was peculiarly susceptible to the noise caused by the ringing of a church bell, situated directly opposite his house in a thickly populated district, cannot, in the absence of evidence of express malice, or that the bell was objectionable to persons of ordinary health and strength, maintain an action against the custodian of the church for sufferings caused by the ringing of the bell.

[2] Appeal of Ladies' Decorative Art Club, 22 W. N. 75 (April 23, 1888). Affirmed the lower court in enjoining the hammering of brass by the pupils of an art school located in a thickly populated square in the city of Philadelphia, to which the plaintiff, with his family, had moved five years after the school had been opened, and into an adjoining house. Ball v. Ray, 8 Ch. Ap. 467 (1872), and Broder v. Saillard, 2 Ch. Div. 692 (1876), followed. See also Yocum v. Hotel St. George Co., 18 Abb. N. Cas. 340 (1886), cases,— in which the noise and vibration caused by an electric engine and dynamos was enjoined; 23 Cent. Law J. 510 (1886) — Solicitors' Jour. (London).

[3] Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 74 (1828), Story, J.

[4] Commonwealth v. Casey, 12 Allen, 318 (1866), cases.

[1] State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 166, 173 (1875), cases.

[2] Woodworth v. Mills, 61 Wis. 44, 50-53 (1884), cases; Graves v. Dawson, 113 Mass. 419 (1882), cases. See generally 5 Crim. Law Mag. 1-16 (1884), cases.

[3] Commonwealth v. Horton, 9 Pick. 206 (1829); Commonwealth v. Tilton, 8 Metc. 232 (1844); United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 232 (1869), cases.

Non sui juris. See JUS.
Non sum informatus. See INFORMATUS.
Non usurpavit. See USURP.
2. Illustrative English compounds:
Non-acceptance. See ACCEPT, 2.
Non-access. See ACCESS.
Non-age. See AGE.
Non-apparent. See EASEMENT.
Non-appearance. See APPEARANCE, 3.
Non-assessable. See ASSESS, 1.
Non-claim. See CLAIM.
Non-combatants. See WAR.
Non-commissioned. See OFFICER.
Non-contestable. See CONTEST.
Non-continuous. See CONTINUOUS.
Non-court. See DAY, Judicial.
Non-delivery. See DELIVERY.
Non-discovery. See DISCOVERY.
Non-intercourse. See ACCESS.
Non-feasance. See FEASANCE.
Non-fulfillment. See PERFORMANCE.
Non-joinder. See JOINDER.
Non-jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.
Non-payment. See PAYMENT.
Non-negotiable. See NEGOTIATE, 2.
Non-performance. See PERFORMANCE.
Non-resident. See RESIDENT; TAX, 2.
Non-sane. See INSANITY.
Non-service. See SERVICE, 6.
Non-taxable. See TAX.
Non-use; non-user. See USE, 1.

NONSUIT. Not following: failure in a plaintiff to make advance in his cause: a giving up or renunciation of his suit.

If the plaintiff is guilty of a delay or default against a rule of law, as, by not filing a pleading within the allotted time, he is adjudged "not to follow" or pursue his remedy as he ought to do, and thereupon a "nonsuit" or non prosequitur is entered, and he is said to be "nonpros'd."[1]

"The plaintiff thereupon became nonsuit, and commenced this action" in the circuit court.[2]

After a nonsuit, and payment of costs, the plaintiff may begin suit again. After a retraxit — an open and voluntary renunciation of a suit — he forever loses his right of action.[3]

Compulsory or involuntary, and voluntary, nonsuit. When the plaintiff perceives that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain the issue it is usual for him to be "voluntarily nonsuited," or to withdraw himself.[4]

For if he was not present when the jury came in to deliver their verdict, no verdict could be received.[5]

An "involuntary" or "compulsory" nonsuit is for neglect, in the plaintiff, either to appear, or, having appeared, for failure to present evidence sufficient in law to support a verdict in his favor.[6]

In either case, the court, at the request of the defendant or his counsel, may enter a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff.

Judgments of involuntary nonsuit are not allowed in the Federal courts.[7]

Before the evidence in a case is left to the jury, there is a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which the jury can find a verdict for the party producing it. If there is not sufficient evidence, the judge may instruct the jury to find against the failing party. This has superseded the practice of demurrer to evidence: by which a party admits the truth of the testimony and the conclusions of fact the jury may fairly draw, but contests the legal sufficiency of the testimony.

If the court is satisfied that, conceding all the inferences which the jury could justifiably draw from the testimony, the evidence is insufficient to warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, the court should say so to the jury.[8]

It would be an idle proceeding to submit evidence to a jury when they could justly find one way only.[9]

See DEFENSE, Affidavit of; INSTRUCT, 2; SCINTILLA.

NORMAN. See FEUD; FRENCH; LATIN; SEAL, 1.

NORTH. Not synonymous with "northerly" or "northwardly." And "northly" and "northwardly" may mean due north.[10]

Northern passage. See ART, 3.

NORTHAMPTON TABLES. See TABLE, 4.

NOSCITUR. L. It is known.

Noscitur a sociis. It is known from its associates or associations. A word or a par-

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 295-96, 316; 7 Q. B. D. 332; 12 Vt. 490.
[2] Bucher v. Chesire R. Co., 125 U. S. 557 (1888).
[3] 3 Bl. Com. 376.

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 376.
[2] See Pratt v. Hull, 13 Johns. 334 (1816); Runyon v Central R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 556 (1856).
[3] Oscanyan v. Arms Company, 103 U. S. 264 (1880).
[4] Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 121 (1874), cases, Miller, J.; Randall v. Baltimore, &c. R. Co., 109 U. S. 482 (1883), cases; Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 435 (1857), cases; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 32 (1882), cases; Carter v. Goff, 141 Mass. 125 (1886), cases; 69 Ga 619; 15 Kan. 244; 58 Me. 384; 106 Mass. 271; 40 Mo. 151; 89 N. C. 464; 49 N. J. L. 671; 91 N. Y. 141; 64 Pa. 201; 13 S. C. 23, 32.
[5] North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Chicago, 123 U. S. 733 (1887).
[6] See Garvin v. Dean, 115 Mass. 378 (1874); Howard v College of the Holy Cross, 116 id. 120 (1874); 1 Johns 156; 21 Barb. 404; 1 Bibb, 58.

agraph is to be read in the light of its context or surroundings.

A word is best understood by the meaning of associated words.[1]

Where "printed matter" was named in a list with engravings, maps, charts, and illustrated papers, it was held that printed pictures (lithographs) were naturally associated with those articles.[2]

When several particulars are enumerated, followed by a general provision, the latter will be limited to things of like kind.[3]

In a penal act, "things," in the expression "obscene books, pamphlets, ballads, printed paper or other things," means other things of like kind.[4]

The principle extends to the interpretation of every species of writing, as, letters, libels, contracts, wills, as well as statutes.[5] It is analogous to the principle of circumstantial evidence.[6]

NOSE. See MAYHEM.

NOT. In its untechnical sense begins several phrases. Compare NE; NON.

Not a true bill. See IGNORE.

Not found. See IGNORE.

Not guilty. See GUILTY.

Not proven. See PROOF.

NOTARY.[7] Anciently, a scribe who took notes or minutes, and made short drafts of writings and instruments, both public and private.[8]

Notary public. An officer who publicly attests deeds or writings to make them authentic in another country, principally in business relating to merchants.[9]

An officer who confirms and attests the truth of writings, to render them available as evidence.

Notarial. Pertaining to, originating with, a notary: as, a notarial act, a notarial seal.

Some of his chief duties are connected with mercantile transactions, as in noting (q. v.) paper presented for payment and dishonored.

At common law, a minor could be a notary.[10]

"N. P.," for notary public, is in common use. The courts take judicial notice of the meaning of the abbreviation.[1]

In the absence of positive law prescribing otherwise, it is enough that the impress of a die seal used by him be readily identified upon inspection. The courts take judicial notice of the seals of notaries public, foreign as well as domestic, for they are officers recognized by the commercial law of the world.[2]

The use of the seal of another person was held not to invalidate the certificate of acknowledgment to a chattel mortgage.[3]

See PROTEST, 3; SEAL, 1.

NOTE. 1. A brief statement in writing; a memorandum,[4] q. v. See also REFRESH.

Bought note; sold note. Where a broker is employed to buy and sell goods he gives the buyer a note of the sale called a "sold note," and the seller a like note called a "bought note," in his own name, as the agent of each, and thereby they are respectively bound, if he has not exceeded his authority.[5] "What he delivers to the seller is called the sold note: to the buyer the bought note."[6]

Judge's notes. Memoranda taken by the judge who tries a cause, of the testimony of witnesses, of documents admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, etc.

They are no part of the record, and he is not required to take them.[7]

2. A written promise to pay money; a "promissory note."

Judgment note. A promissory note with a power of attorney authorizing entry of judgment by confession, in default of payment.

Not generally negotiable, but transferable by formal assignment under seal. See further ATTORNEY, Warrant of.

Promissory note. A plain and direct engagement, in writing, to pay a sum specified at the time therein limited to a person therein named, or, sometimes, to his order, or often to the bearer at large.[8]

---

[1] Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 708 (1877); Pickering v. McCullough, 104 id. 317 (1881); Adams v. Bancroft, 3 Sumn. 386 (1838).

[2] Arthur v. Moller, 97 U. S. 368 (1878).

[3] Harwood v. City of Lowell, 4 Cush. 313 (1849).

[4] Commonwealth v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 47 (1878); 105 id. 488.

[5] 1 Bl. Com. 60.

[6] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 11. See also 31 F. R. 187; 54 Conn. 467; 3 Dak. 102; 35 Ohio St. 563; 61 Wis. 582; 69 id. 38.

[7] L. notarius, one who makes notes, a scrivener: nota, a note.

[8] Byles, Bills, 262.

[9] Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Port. 531 (Ala., 1838), Collier, Chief Justice

[10] United States v. Bixby, 10 Biss. 528 (1881).

[1] Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 200 (1850).

[2] Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 548-49 (1882), cases, Field, J.; The Gallego, 30 F. R. 274 (1887); Story, Bills, § 277; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 5.

[3] Muncie Nat. Bank v. Brown, Ind. Sup. Ct. (1887): 27 Alb. Law J. 68.

[4] See Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 492 (1817).

[5] [Story, Agency, § 28, 9 ed., text and note.

[6] 1 Benj. Sales, § 275; ib. §§ 294-302, cases. See also Butler v. Thomson, 92 U. S. 416-17 (1875), cases; 1 Whart. Ev. § 75, cases.

[7] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 166.

[8] 2 Bl. Com. 467.

A written engagement by one person to pay, absolutely and unconditionally, to another person therein named, or to his order or to the bearer, a certain sum of money at a specified time or on demand, or at sight.[1]

No precise words of contract are necessary, provided they amount, in legal effect, to a promise to pay.[2]

Held to be valid notes were the following: "Due A. $225, payable on demand;" "I acknowledge myself indebted to A. $109, to be paid on demand for value received;" "I. O. U. $85 to be paid May 5th."[3]

A bank-bill is a promissory note, in an indictment for stealing or forging a promissory note.[4]

Giving a new note for an old one which had become due, the amount and makers of the two notes being the same, will not be treated as payment or extinguishment of the old note or of the pre-existing debt, unless the parties so expressly agree; but will be regarded merely as an extension of credit upon the debt; and the surrender of the old note will not of itself raise a presumption of such agreement to extinguish the old note by the new one, it being considered as a conditional surrender and that its obligation is received, if the new note is not paid. And the new note will not be regarded as a payment of the old even when it is so expressly agreed, if such agreement was obtained by the concealment of any material fact affecting the security of the debt; nor does the presumption of payment apply where the creditor abandons some security which he held when he takes the new note.[5]

Taking a note, bill or check in payment of another note is generally conditioned upon the payment of the latter — except, perhaps, in Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont.[6]

Raised note. A negotiable promissory note increased in the amount called for on the face, by fraudulent alteration.

If the maker is not chargeable with negligence in putting in circulation an instrument susceptible of alteration so as to deceive a person of ordinary caution, he is not liable upon his raised note.[7]

See further ALTERATION, 2; BEARER; CERTAINTY; CHECK; COLLECTION; DUE, 1; EXCHANGE, 2; FORGERY; GENUINE; GRACE; I O U; LOST, 2; NEGOTIABLE; PATENT, 2; PAYMENT; POST-NOTE.

[1] Hall v. Farmer, 5 Denio, 486 (1848), cases, Beardsley, C. J. See also 13 Bradw. 101; 24 Ill. 170; 95 id. 144; 21 La. An. 122; 49 Me. 518; 60 Md. 585; 10 Neb. 287; 6 Cow. 108; 6 Humph. 304; 47 Wis. 555; 53 id. 606.

[2] Cowan v. Halleck, 9 Col. 578 (1886), cases.

[3] 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 39, cases.

[4] Commonwealth v. Butts, 124 Mass. 452-53 (1878), cases; 126 id. 56, 252.

[5] Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Good, 21 W. Va. 466, 464-67 (1883), cases, Snyder, J.; Green v. Russell, 132 Mass. 536 (1882).

[6] Henry v. Conley, 48 Ark. 271-72 (1886), cases; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst § 1260.

[7] Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Clark, 51 Iowa, 264 (1879), cases.

NOTICE.[1] In its untechnical sense, is equivalent to information, intelligence, knowledge.[2]

1. In its legal sense, embraces a knowledge of circumstances that ought to induce suspicion or belief, as well as direct information.[3]

Actual notice. Notice directly and personally given to the party to be notified.

Constructive notice. When the party, by circumstances, is put upon inquiry, and must be presumed to have had notice, or, by judgment of law, is held to have had notice.[4]

Whatever fairly puts a party upon inquiry, where the means of knowledge are at hand, is constructive notice of all the facts a proper inquiry might have ascertained.[5]

Express is used by some writers for actual notice, and implied for constructive.

A subsequent purchaser has actual notice of record when he has actual knowledge of such facts as would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of the right or title in conflict with that which he is about to purchase.[6]

Constructive notice is a legal inference from established facts;[7] no more than evidence of notice, the assumption of which is so violent that the court will not allow of its being controverted.[8]

Thus, if a mortgagee has a deed put into his hands which recites another deed showing a title in a third person, the court will conclusively presume that he has notice of that fact.[9]

Constructive notice is resorted to from the necessity of finding a ground of preference between equities otherwise equal, but the doctrine cannot be applied in support of a charge of direct personal fraud.[9]

The doctrine of constructive notice depends upon two considerations: first, that certain things existing in the relation or the conduct of parties, or in the case between them, beget a presumption so strong of actual knowledge, that the law holds the knowledge to exist because it is highly improbable that it should not

[1] L. notitia, a being known.

[2] Wile v. Town of Southbury, 43 Conn. 54 (1875), Pardee, J.; United States v. Foote, 13 Blatch. 420 (1876).

[3] Pringle v. Phillips, 5 Sandf. 165 (N. Y., 1851), Duer, J.

[4] Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 156 (1853); Johnson v. Dooly, 72 id. 299 (1884).

[5] Angle v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 342 (1875), cases, Clifford, J. As to proving actual notice, see Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 202 (1887).

[6] Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498, 521-23 (1878), cases pro and con; 1 Harv. Law Rev. 1-16 (1887), cases.

[7] Birdsall v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 249 (1864).

[8] Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anstr. 438 (1791), Eyre, C. B. Approved, Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 511 (1883), cases.

[9] Wilde v. Gibson, 1 H. L. Cas. 623 (1848), Cottenham, Lord Chancellor.

exist; second, that policy and the safety of the public forbid that a person should deny knowledge while he is so acting as to keep himself ignorant, or so that he may keep himself ignorant, and all the while his agent know, and he himself, perhaps, profit by that knowledge.[1]

Constructive notice is knowledge imputed by the court on the presumption, too strong to be rebutted, that the knowledge must have been communicated.[2]

To confine actual notice within the narrow limits of actual knowledge, as a definition, is to render the former next to impossible of application. To insist that it must be imparted in words, verbal or written, is too exclusive on its face to render the definition of utility. "Constructive notice" (so-called) is dependent upon actual facts, and "actual notice" upon conclusions of law. The only necessity for drawing the distinction nicely is where actual notice is imperatively demanded.[3]

The doctrine of constructive notice from possession is applied as a shield to protect him who has equitable rights.[4]

A party to a suit is constructively present in court during the entire term at which his cause is set for hearing, and, as the doings of the court are matters of record, he is chargeable with notice of all that is done during the term affecting the suit.[5]

There must be notice of some kind, actual or constructive, to a valid judgment affecting one's rights; and, until given, the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter or the person. This affords opportunity to be heard upon the claim or charges made, and is a summons to him to appear and speak, if he has anything to say, why the judgment should not be rendered.[6]

A person not notified of an action nor made a party thereto, and who had no opportunity or right to control the defense, introduce or cross-examine witnesses, or to prosecute a writ of error, is not bound by the judgment that may be rendered.[7] But, unless so directed or intended by statute, the notice need not be "personal."[8] See CITE, 2; INDICTMENT; KNOWLEDGE, 1; PROCESS, 1, Due; RECORD; SERVICE, 3.

[1] Kennedy v. Green, 3 Mylne & K. 719 (1834), Brougham, L. C.

[2] 1 Story, Eq. § 399, cases.

[3] 19 Am. Law Rev. 74, 89 (1885), W. P. Wade; Wade, Notice, Ch. I, II, cases.

[4] Gill v. Hardin, 48 Ark. 412 (1886); Groton Savings Bank v. Batty, 30 N. J. E. 151 (1878). See generally 23 Alb. Law J. 126-27 (1881), cases; 24 Cent. Law J. 290 (1887), cases; 10 id. 313-14 (1880), cases.

[5] Railroad Co. v. Blair, 100 U. S. 662 (1879).

[6] Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 277 (1876), Field, J.; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 id. 727 (1877); St. Clair v. Cox, 106 id. 353 (1882); Freeman v. Alderson, 119 id. 188 (1886); Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 id. 292 (1888), cases; Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 11 (1887); 18 Blatch. 28; 12 F. R. 398, 401; 9 Oreg. 210.

[7] Hale v. Finch, 104 U. S. 265 (1881): Brooklyn City, &c. R. Co. v. National Bank, 102 id. 21 (1880).

[8] Betancourt v. Eberlin, 71 Ala. 468 (1882), cases.

Judicial notice. The knowledge which a judge will officially take of a fact without proof.

A court will notice, judicially, a thing in the common knowledge and use of the people throughout the country: as,— the general customs and usages of merchants; the seals of notaries; things which must happen according to the laws of nature; the coincidence of the days of the week with those of the month, the meaning of words in the vernacular language; the customary abbreviations of Christian names; the accession of the Chief Magistrate to office, his leaving it, and the appointment of members of his Cabinet; the election and resignation of Senators; the appointment of marshals and sheriffs, but not of their deputies; of the ports and waters where the tide ebbs and flows; of the boundaries of the States, and of judicial and collection districts.[1] So, of law, statutory, constitutional, and military, the law-merchant, maritime law, and the ecclesiastical laws of Christendom as part of the common law.[2] See LAW, Foreign. Executive and judicial documents are judicially noticed. The public seal of the state and the seals of courts are self-proving. The existence of foreign sovereignties is also noticed; likewise, judicial officers and judicial practice.[3] So is the course of the seasons; the limitation of life as to age; the demonstrable conclusions of science and of political economy; the familiar principles of psychological and physical laws; leading political appointments; leading public events; leading domestic geographical features. In fine, whatever is known to all intelligent persons in the community, is received as true beyond dispute; for notoriety needs no proof.[4] Yet the power is to be exercised with caution. The requisite notoriety must exist. Every reasonable doubt is to be resolved in the negative.[5]

The courts of the United States take judicial notice of the public statutes of the several States.[6]

Record notice. The contents of a record, or of that which is legally recorded in a public record, is supposed to be known to all the world.

Not demandable by the parties to an instrument, or by such other persons as have actual notice.[6] See RECORD; REGISTRY.

Without notice. A brief expression for "without notice of fraud or other fact invalidating title."

Most frequently applied to an innocent holder of commercial paper. See NEGOTIABLE.

2. A letter or memorandum containing in-

[1] Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 42-43 (1875), cases, Swayne, Justice; 104 id. 42.

[2] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 276-86, cases: 24 Kan. 715.

[3] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 317-26, cases.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 327-40, cases. See generally 24 Am. Law Reg. 553-73 (1885), cases.

[5] Knower v. Haines, 31 F. R. 513 (1887); Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 751 (1887); Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 id. 6 (1885), cases.

[6] Moore v. Simonds, 100 U. S. 145 (1875).

formation by advertisement, posting, or personal service. See PLACE, 1, Public; PROCLAMATION; PUBLICATION.

A notice required by common law need not be in writing; otherwise as to a notice which a statute directs to be given.[1] See Notify.

"Legal notices" was held not to include proceedings of a common council, within the meaning of a law providing for advertising certain notices.[2]

Notices, known by various names and in great number, are in daily use: as, notice — of acceptance of a bill of exchange; of an action about to be brought against a justice of the peace; to admit the genuineness of a document; of appearance; of dishonor, nonpayment, protest; of lis pendens; of a motion for an order or rule; to plead to a declaration or to a bill; to produce (q. v.) papers at a trial; to quit possession of leased premises.

The duty of an insured to pay his premium on the day specified is the same whether notice be given or not of the day. And banks are not obliged to give notice of the approaching maturity of a promise to pay a note or bill.[3]

Notify. In legal proceedings, and in respect to public matters, imports notice given by some person whose duty it is to give it, in some manner prescribed, and to some person entitled to receive it.[4]

The word does not require a written notice, unless expressly so stated.[5]

Notification. In the law requiring that the holder of dishonored paper shall give notice of that fact to antecedent parties, "notice" does not mean mere knowledge, but actual notification.[6]

NOTING. The minute made on a bill of exchange by the officer at the time of refusal of acceptance or payment.

Consists of his initials, the month, day, year, and his charges for minuting, and is considered as preparatory to protest.[7]

NOTORIOUS.[8] 1. Manifest to all persons; generally known; open: as, a notorious act of ownership,[9] a notorious mistake in a record,[1] a custom (q. v.) which has become notorious.

Referring to adverse possession (q. v.), denotes that the possession must be more than secret, and unknown to the disseised owner.[2]

In Maryland, whether intestacy be so "notorious" as not to require proof, so that letters may issue forthwith, is a matter within the knowledge and judgment of the probate judge.[3]

See also ENTRY, I, 1; NOTICE, Judicial; OPEN, 2 (13).

2. Known to discredit or disadvantage; of bad or questionable repute. See FAME, Ill-fame.

NOVATION.[4] The substitution of one debtor for another, or of a new for an old obligation, which is thereby extinguished.[5]

The doctrine is of civil-law origin. The common-law equivalent is "assignment" or "merger."

The requisites are: a previous valid obligation; agreement of all parties to the new contract; extinguishment of the old contract; and a valid new contract.[6]

In the civil law, the substitution may be in the debt, the debtor, or the creditor.[7]

The new creditor may maintain an action in his own name, founded upon the assignment and the express promise of the debtor to pay him. Without this promise, the assignee must sue in the name of the assignor.[8]

See ASSIGNMENT, 8; DELEGATION, 2.

NOVEL. See ASSIGNMENT, 1.

NOVELTY.[9] The quality in an invention of being "new:" this pertaining to the general relations of the invention to the existing state of the art. See NEW, 1.

Want of novelty will defeat an application for a patent, invalidate a patent already issued, and defeat an action for an infringement.

When a machine is new and its product or manufacture old, the machine is patentable. When the machine is substantially old and the product new, the product is patentable. When both are new, both are patentable. And so of processes and their results. Patentability may exist as to either, neither, or both, according to the fact of novelty or the opposite.[10]

It is not sufficient that the thing is new and useful; and the author must find it out by mental labor and

[1] Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. 225 (1847); Lane v. Cary, 19 Barb. 538–39 (1855), cases; People v. Croton Aqueduct Board, 26 id. 248 (1857); Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 id. 411 (1866), cases; Vinton v. Builders', &c. Association, 109 Ind. 353 (1886).

[2] MacArthur v. City of Troy, 24 Hun, 55 (1881).

[3] Thompson v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 258 (1881), Bradley, J.

[4] Potwine's Appeal, 31 Conn. 384 (1863), Butler, J. See also Minard v. Douglas County, 9 Oreg. 210 (1881); 50 Mich. 277.

[5] Vinton v. Builders', &c. Association, 109 Ind. 353 (1886).

[6] Byles, Bills, § 271, cases.

[7] [Byles, Bills, § 263; 4 Term, 175.

[8] L. notorius, manifest: notus, known.

[9] 3 Bl. Com. 174.

[1] 4 Bl. Com. 391.

[2] Sheaffer v. Eakman, 56 Pa. 153 (1867), Strong, J.

[3] Eslin v. District of Columbia, 22 Ct. Cl. 162 (1887).

[4] L. novatio: novus, new.

[5] [Guichard v. Brande, 57 Wis. 536 (1883), Cole, C. J.

[6] Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 509 (1877), Biddle, C. J.; 64 id. 413.

[7] Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 454 (1873).

[8] Mowry v. Todd, 12 Mass. 284 (1815), Parker, C. J.; Derby v. Sanford, 9 Cush. 264 (1852); 8 Paige, Ch. 238; 9 Baxt. 10.

[9] L. novellitas, newness: novus, new.

[10] Rubber Company v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 796 (1869), Swayne, J.

intellectual creation. If the result of accident, it must be what would not occur to all persons skilled in the art, who wished to produce the same result. There must be some addition to the common stock of knowledge, not merely the first use of what was known before.[1]

A new combination, if it produces new and useful results, is patentable, though all the constituents were well known and in common use before the combination was made. But the results must be a product of the combination, not a mere aggregate of several results, each the complete product of one of the combined elements. Combined results are not necessarily a novel result, nor are they an old result by a new and improved manner. Merely bringing old devices into juxtaposition, and allowing each to work out its own effect, without the production of something novel, is not invention.[2]

The combination must produce a different force or effect, or result in the combined forces or processes, from that given by the separate parts. There must be a new result produced by their union: if not so, it is only an aggregation of separate elements. Thus, sulphur, mixed with India-rubber, produces vulcanized rubber — a new article. The action of a stem-winding watch is another instance. In each case the result comes from the combined effect of the several parts, not from the separate action of each part. The required result does not follow from attaching a piece of rubber to a lead-pencil.[3]

The combination must form either a new machine of a distinct character and function, or produce a result due to the joint and co-operating action of all the elements, and which is not the mere adding together of separate combinations. Otherwise, it is a mechanical juxtaposition, not a vital union.[4]

The design of the patent laws is to reward those who make some substantial discovery or invention, which adds to our knowledge and makes a step in advance in the useful arts, not to grant a monopoly for every trifling device, every shadow of a shade of an idea, which would spontaneously occur to any skilled mechanic or operator in the ordinary progress of manufactures. Such an indiscriminate creation of exclusive privileges would tend to obstruct rather than stimulate invention.[5]

The application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of application, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated.[6]

See further COMBINATION, 1; PATENT, 2.

[1] Earle v. Sawyer, 4 Mas. 5 (1825), Story, J.

[2] Halles v. Van Wormer, 20 Wall. 368 (1873), Strong, J.

[3] Reckendorfer v. Faber, 92 U. S. 357-58 (1875), Hunt, Justice.

[4] Pickering v. McCullough, 104 U. S. 318 (1881), Matthews, J.

[5] Atlantic Works v. Brady, 107 U. S. 201 (1882), Bradley, J.; Phillips v. Detroit, 111 id. 608 (1884); 17 F. R. 850.

[6] Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Locomotive Truck Co., 110 U. S. 494 (1884), cases, Gray, J.

NOVUS. See NOVATION; NOVELTY; VENIRE, De novo.

NOW. See IMMEDIATELY; NUNC.

NOXIOUS. See ANIMAL; CRUELTY, 8; NUISANCE.

To constitute the offense of administering a "noxious thing," within the meaning of the statute of 24 and 25 Vict. (1861), c. 100, s. 58, the thing must be noxious in itself, not merely so when taken in excess, and although it may have been administered with intent to injure or annoy.[1] See ADMINISTER, 1.

NUDE. See INDECENCY; NAKED, 1; OBSCENE; OBLIGATION, 1; PACT.

NUDUM. See PACTUM.

NUGATORY.[2] Of no force; ineffectual; null, q. v.

"Laws without competent authority to secure their administration from disobedience and contempt would be vain and nugatory."[3]

A direction in a will may be "nugatory and void."[4] See FELO DE SE, 2.

NUISANCE.[5] Whatever unlawfully annoys or does damage to another. As an injury to realty: anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage.[6]

That which annoys and disturbs one in the possession of his property, rendering its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him.[7]

An actionable nuisance is anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights.[8]

Something which produces real discomfort or annoyance through the medium of the senses; not from delicacy of taste or a refined fancy. The injury must be physical, not purely imaginative.[9]

A person who is injured by a "continuing nuisance" may maintain an action against the original tort feasor who creates it, or against any grantee who continues it after a request to abate it.[10]

[1] Regina v. Hennah, 19 Moak, 570 (1877); The Queen v. Cramp, 29 id. 314 (1880).

[2] L. nugatorius, worthless, useless, futile: nugax, trifling.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 296.

[4] Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Metc. 533 (1845).

[5] F. nuisance, a hurt: nuire: L. nocere, to hurt.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 6, 216; 49 Conn. 117; 39 Ga. 218; 32 Tex. 210.

[7] Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 329 (1883), Field, J.

[8] Railroad Co. v. Carr, 38 Ohio St. 453 (1882): Cooley Torts, 655.

[9] Westcott v. Middleton, 43 N. J. E. 496 (1887).

[10] Prentiss v. Wood, 132 Mass. 486 (1882), cases. See Sloggy v. Dilworth, Sup. Ct. Minn. (1888), cases: 36 Cent. Law J. 442-43 (1888), cases.

Cases of nuisance which rest for their sanction upon the intent of the law under which they are created, the paramount power of the legislature, the principle of the "greatest good of the greatest number," and the importance of the public benefit and convenience involved in their continuance, are termed "legalized nuisances."[1]

Private nuisance. Anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. Public or common nuisance. Doing a thing to the annoyance of the public, or neglecting to do a thing which the common good requires.[2]

Examples: a house so close to another as to cause rain-water to fall upon its roof; animals kept so near a dwelling-house that the stench taints the air; any offensive trade, as, a tanner's, a tallow-chandler's, lead-works the fumes of which poison the herbage; diverting water that naturally runs to another's land; corrupting or poisoning running water by maintaining a dye-house or a lime-kiln; obstructing a right of way; a ferry or bridge unlawfully near another; disorderly houses; and all lotteries.[3]

A business which is lawful, carried on reasonably, and does not necessarily affect health, comfort, or the ordinary uses and enjoyment of property in the neighborhood, is not a nuisance in fact or in anticipation.[4]

As the atmosphere cannot rightfully be infected with noxious smells or exhalations, so it should not be caused to vibrate by ringing bells, in a way to wound the sense of hearing.[5]

Noise (as, the ringing of a factory bell), which constitutes an annoyance to a person of ordinary sensibility to sound, such as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of life, and impair the reasonable enjoyment of his habitation, is a nuisance to him, the continuance of which may be restrained by injunction.[6] See NOISE.

If a party may acquire a prescriptive right to continue a nuisance, it can only be by continuous use for twenty years. No acquiescence short of that period will bar one from complaining of the nuisance, unless by some act or omission he has induced the party causing the nuisance to incur large expenditures, or to take some action upon which an estoppel may be based.[7]

Relief is had by abatement,[1] injunction, action for damages, or criminal prosecution.

A public nuisance can only be redressed by public prosecution, unless the complainant suffers damage differing in kind from that sustained by the public at large.[2]

In regard to public nuisances, the jurisdiction of courts of equity seems to be of a very ancient date. The jurisdiction is applicable not only to public nuisances, strictly so called, but to purprestures upon public rights and property. An indictment lies to abate public nuisances, properly so called, and to punish the offender; and an information lies in equity to redress the grievance by injunction.[3]

The ground of this jurisdiction is the ability of courts of equity to give a more speedy, effectual, and permanent remedy than can be had at law. They cannot only prevent nuisances that are threatened, and before irreparable mischief ensues, but arrest or abate those in progress, and, by perpetual injunction, protect the public against them in the future; whereas courts of law can only reach existing nuisances, leaving future acts the subject of new proceedings. This is a salutary jurisdiction, especially where a nuisance affects the health, morals, or safety of the community. Though not frequently exercised, the power undoubtedly exists.[4]

Courts of law afford redress by giving damages against the wrong-doer, and, when the cause of the annoyance is continuous, courts of equity will restrain the nuisance. . . Grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion.[5]

The measure of damages is not simply the depreciation of the property; the jury may take into consideration personal discomfort, and any causes which produce a constant apprehension of danger.[6]

See ABATEMENT, 3; AIR; BLACKSMITH SHOP; DAMAGES; HEALTH; INJUNCTION; PARDON; POLICE, 2; PURPRESTURE; UNDERTAKER.

NUL. No, no one, none. Law-French, from Latin nullus, q. v.

Nul agard. No award, q. v.

[1] Fertilizing Company v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 670 (1878), Swayne, J.

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 216; 4 id. 166; 40 Ark. 87; 49 Conn. 117; 7 Ga. 311; 80 Ky. 138, 146; 30 Me. 174; 74 id. 271; 34 Mich. 473; 80 N. Y. 582; 37 Ohio St. 516; 17 Tex. 502; 1 McLean, 381.

[3] 3 Bl. Com. 216-20; 4 id. 167-69.

[4] Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. 290 (1868); Strawbridge v. Philadelphia, 13 Rep. 216 (1882).

[5] Harrison v. St. Mark's Church, 3 W. N. C. 384 (1877); 15 Alb. Law J. 248, 345.

[6] Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 290 (1882), cases. See further, as to a planing-mill, Hurlburt v. McKone, 55 Conn. 31 (1887), cases.

[7] Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 584 (1876), cases.

[1] See Bowden v. Lewis, 13 R. I. 191 (1881); 19 Cent. Law J. 42-45 (1884), cases.

[2] School District v. Neil, 36 Kan. 619-20 (1887), cases; Hogan v. Central R. Co., 71 Cal. 86 (1886).

[3] 2 Story, Eq. §§ 921-22.

[4] Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 672-73 (1887), cases, Harlan J. That an injunction will not be granted where there is a remedy at law, see Sellers v. Parvis Co., 30 F. R. 164 (1887).

[5] Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 331 (1883); Georgetown v. Alexandria Canal Co., 12 Pet. 91 (1838); Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 13 How. 518 (1851); Mississippi, &c. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black, 485 (1862); Parker v. Winnipiseogee Co., ib. 545 (1862); 49 Md. 277; 50 id. 516; 10 Oreg. 170, 172; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 856; Whart. Cr. L. § 1410.

[6] Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 335 (1883).

Nul disseisin. No disseisin: the general issue in a real action.

Nul tiel corporation. No such corporation: a plea denying the existence of a corporation.

Nul tiel record. No such record: a plea denying the existence of the alleged record upon which an action has been brought. See RECORD, Nul, etc.

Nul tort. No wrong: a plea denying wrong alleged, in a real action. See TORT, 1.

Nul waste. No waste: a plea denying alleged waste, q. v.

NULL. As nothing; as if not existing, made, or done; without force or effect; invalid. See NUGATORY; NULLUS.

Nullity. An act which has no more effect than if it had not been done; a proceeding of no legal effect or efficacy.

Such a defect as renders the proceeding in which it occurs totally void, of no avail or effect whatever, and incapable of being made so.[1] See VOID.

NULLUS. L. No person; nothing; no.

Nulla bona. No goods. See BONA, 2.

Nullius filius. See FILIUS.

Nullum arbitrium. No award, q. v.

Nullum commodum. See COMMODUM.

Nullum simile. See SIMILIS.

Nullum tempus. See TEMPUS.

NUMBER.[2] See ANY; DESCRIPTION; DIVERS; INDICTMENT; TRADE-MARK; UNUSUAL.

"A number of days" and "some days" may mean two or more days, but neither expression necessarily includes more than two days.[3]

The plural number includes the singular. Thus, in construing a penal statute, "houses" will apply to a house, "notes" to a note, etc.[4]

NUMERALS. See FIGURES; NUMBER.

NUNC PRO TUNC. L. Now for then.

Said of a thing done in the present time which is to have the same effect as if it had been done at a time gone by, when it should have been done.[5]

Thus, when a party has omitted to take some step which he ought to have taken, as, to file the service of a notice or a pleading, the court will sometimes permit him to do it after the proper time has passed, and accord to it the effect it would have had if regularly done in due season.

A decree nunc pro tunc is admissible where a decree, which was ordered or intended to be entered, was omitted by inadvertence of the court.[1]

Courts always have power over their own records to make them conform to what was actually done at the time, nunc pro tunc.[2]

Every court has a right to judge its own records and minutes; and if it appear that an order made at a former term was not entered of record, it may at any time direct it to be entered as of the term when made, whether the proceeding be criminal or civil.[3]

Whether an order for entry of judgment nunc pro tunc shall be made is a matter of discretion with the court, to be exercised as justice may require, in view of the circumstances of the case.[4]

See ACTUS, Curiæ; LACHES; TERM, 4.

NUNCIO. See MINISTER, 3.

NUNCUPATIVE.[5] Originally, to pronounce or declare publicly in solemn words. In the civil law, to pronounce orally or in words without writing; to dictate.[6] Whence nuncupatory, nuncupation.

A nuncupative will depends upon oral evidence, being declared by the testator in extremis before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing.[7]

"Last sickness," referring to the making of a nuncupative will, means in extremis; that is, the law contemplates sudden and severe illness immediately preceding physical dissolution, when there is neither time nor opportunity to make a written will, in which case, of necessity, a will must be verbal.[8] See further WILL, 2.

NUNQUAM. See ASSUMPSIT.

NUPTIAL. "Ante-nuptial" and "post-nuptial" refer, respectively, to a contract entered into or other act done by a woman before marriage, and after marriage. See HUSBAND; SETTLE, 4.

NURSERY TREES. See EMBLEMENTS.

NURSING. See MEDICAL, Attendance.

NURTURE. See GUARDIAN.

---

[1] [Salter v. Hilgen, 40 Wis. 365 (1876); Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 id. 471 (1880); MacNamara, Nullities, &c., 4; 35 Tex. 530.

[2] L. numerus. The Eng. "No." is from numero, in number.

[3] Chase v. Cleveland, 44 Ohio St. 513 (1886).

[4] See R. S. § 1; 1 Bl. Com. 88; State v. Main, 31 Conn. 574 75 (1863), cases; State v. Nichols, 83 Ind. 228 (1882), cases; 87 id. 54; 71 Ala. 157; 29 Kan. 734; 54 Mich. 243, 247; 77 Mo. 245 11 Biss. 111.

[5] See Secou v. Leroux, 1 N. Mex. 390 (1866).

[1] Gray v. Brignardello, 1 Wall. 627 (1863); Mitchell v. Overman, 103 U. S. 65 (1880).

[2] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 125 (1877).

[3] Benedict v. State, 44 Ohio St. 684-85 (1887), cases.

[4] Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 596 (1887), cases.

[5] Nun-cu'-pa-tive, or -nun-'. L. nuncupare: nomine, by name; capere, to take, call.

[6] [Succession of Morales, 16 La. An. 269 (1861).

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 500; 4 Kent, 576; 1 Jarm. Wills, 130, 136.

[8] Carroll v. Bonham, 42 N. J. E. 627 (1886), note. See generally 2 Law Q. Rev. 444-52 (1886); 26 Am. Law Reg. 570-73 (1887), cases.

O.

O. Is sometimes used as an abbreviation:

O. C. Old code; orphans' court.

O. S. Old series.

OATH. 1. Calling God to witness the truth of what is said.[1]

A solemn adjuration to God to punish the affiant, if he swears falsely.[2]

A religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven, if he does not speak the truth.[3]

Assurance of the truth of an assertion by an appeal to an object which is regarded as high and holy.[4]

Belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, entertaining just ideas of the moral attributes of the Supreme Being, and a firm persuasion that he superintends and will finally compensate every action in human life,— these are the foundation of all judicial oaths; which call God to witness the truth of those facts which, perhaps, may be known only to Him and the party attesting.[5]

The sanction of an oath is a belief that the Supreme Being will punish falsehood; and, whether that punishment is administered by remorse of conscience or in any other mode in this world, or is reserved for the future state of being, cannot affect the question, as the sum of the matter is a belief that God is the avenger of falsehood.[6]

"Oaths were instituted long before the beginning of the Christian era, and were always held in the highest veneration. The substance of an oath has nothing to do with Christianity. The forms have always been different in different countries. But still the substance is the same, which is that God in all of them is called upon to witness to the truth of what we say. . . Such infidels who believe a God and that he will punish them if they swear falsely," may be admitted as witnesses. And "such infidels (if any such there be) who either do not believe a God, or, if they do, do not think that he will either reward or punish them in this world or in the next, cannot be witnesses in any case nor under any circumstances, . . because an oath cannot possibly be any tie or obligation upon them."[7] See ATHEIST; INFIDEL.

Assertory oath. See Official Oath.

Corporal oath. An oath taken by kissing or laying the hand upon a copy of the Gospels.

Synonymous with "solemn oath" or an oath taken with the uplifted hand. "So called from the ancient usage of touching the corporale or cloth that covered the consecrated elements."[1]

Applies to any bodily assent to the oath.[2]

Judicial oath. An oath administered in some judicial proceeding, under direction of law. Extra-judicial oath. An oath taken without direction or authority of law.

In the Revised Statutes or any act or resolution of Congress, passed subsequently to February 25, 1871, a requirement of an "oath" shall be deemed complied with by making affirmation, in judicial form.[3] See AFFIRM, 4.

An extra-judicial oath, when false, does not expose the person to punishment for perjury. A common form for the judicial oath, which is usually administered by the clerk of the court to the witness, who either kisses a copy of the Gospels or raises his right hand toward Heaven, is, in substance: "You do swear that, in this issue joined between A and B, you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God," — or "as you shall answer at the Great Day." But the form deemed most obligatory by the witness will always be used.[4]

The testimony of living witnesses personally cognizant of the facts of which they speak, given under the sanction of an oath in open court, where they may be subjected to cross-examination, affords the greatest security of truth.[5]

A child under seven may testify if the court be first satisfied, by examination, that he appreciates the obligation of an oath.[6]

In English practice, it is usual for the judge to examine the child as to his competency to testify, and if found incompetent to defer trial till such a time as he may, by instruction, be qualified to take an oath. Some American authorities favor this practice.[7]

Perjury (q. v.) consists in taking a false judicial oath.[8]

The time and form of administering oaths, as well

---

[1] Parkes v. Parkes, 25 E. L. & E. 619 (1852).

[2] Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 355 (1841).

[3] King v. White, 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 482 (1786).

[4] [Savigny, Röm. Recht. VIII, 48.

[5] 4 Bl. Com. 43.

[6] Blocker v. Burness, supra. See also Chappell v. State, 71 Ala. 324 (1882); Bush v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 248, 250 (1882); 7 Conn. 79; 10 Ohio, 123; 13 Vt. 366.

[7] Ormichund v. Barker, Willes, 545, 547, 549 (1744), Willes, C. J.; 1 Sm. L. C. 194. See also Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mas. 19 (1827); United States v. Kennedy, 3 McLean, 175 (1843); Bush v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 248-49 (1882); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 395-96, cases; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 328; 15 Mass. 184.

[1] Jackson v. State, 1 Ind. 185 (1848): Webster's Dict.

[2] State v. Norris, 9 N. H. 101 (1837).

[3] R. S. §§ 1, 5013.

[4] 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 386-88. "All witnesses shall give or deliver in their testimony, by solemnly promising to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, to the matter or thing in question." — Great Law of Penn. (1682), Ch. XXXVI: Linn, 116.

[5] Chaffee v. United States, 18 Wall. 541 (1873).

[6] Hughes v. Detroit, &c. R. Co., Sup. Ct. Mich. (1887), cases.

[7] Commonwealth v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 579-80 (1886), cases.

[8] United States v. Grottkau, 30 F. R. 672 (1887).

as the persons empowered to administer them, are regulated by statute.[1]

Oath decisory; decisive oath. In civil law, where a party to a suit was not able to prove his charge and offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary.[2]

This the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again; otherwise the matter was taken as confessed. The sacramentum decisionis.[3]

Oath in litem. In civil law, an oath taken by the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, and to prevent a defeat of justice.[3]

Oath of office; official oath. An oath taken by an officer that he will faithfully discharge the duties of his office.

An assertory oath is an oath required by law upon induction to office. A promissory oath is an official oath that the person will discharge the duties required of him. The breach of these oaths may not involve perjury.[4]

The form of official oaths is prescribed by statute or the constitution. Thus, "Before he [the President] enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:— I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."[5]

"The Senators and Representatives . . and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution. . ."[6]

"No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability."[7]

The political disabilities imposed by that amendment were removed by act of May 22, 1872, except as to Members of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in judicial, military, and naval service, heads of departments, and foreign ministers.[1]

Act of May 13, 1884, repeals Rev. St. § 1756, and provides that office-holders in the civil, military, and naval service, except the President, shall take the oath prescribed in § 1757; the repeal not to affect the oaths prescribed for the performance of duties in special or particular subordinate employments.[2]

Rev. St. § 1757, directs that the following oath shall be taken and subscribed to: "I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God."[3] See AMNESTY; OFFICER.

Suppletory oath. The oath of a party, administered in order that he may furnish the measure of proof required of a fact: as, his oath to the correctness of his books of account and of the justness of the claim he makes.

Its original is found in the civil law, which requires the testimony of two persons to a fact: plena probatio, full proof; the testimony of one person being semi-plena probatio, half-full proof. To make up the complement, when there is one witness only, the party may be examined in his own behalf, and the oath administered is called the "suppletory oath."[4]

Test oath. See TEST, Oath.

2. As to profane oaths, see BLASPHEMY; PROFANITY.

OBIT. L. A corruption of obiit or obivit, he died or has died.

Post obit, or post obitum. After he died, or after death.

[1] See Oaks v. Rodgers, 48 Cal. 197 (1874); Arnold v. Middletown, 41 Conn. 206 (1874).

[2] 3 Bl. Com. 342. See Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 290.

[3] See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348; 1 Pet. 591, 596; 16 id. 203; 9 Wheat. 486; 16 Johns. 193.

[4] See State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49, 54 (1850).

[5] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1, cl. 8.

[6] Constitution, Art. VI, cl. 3.

[7] Constitution, Amd. Art. XIV, sec. 3. Ratified July 28, 1868.

[1] See 17 St. L., ch. 193, p. 142. Proceedings to remove disqualified office-holders were discontinued by proclamation of President Grant, June 1, 1872. Ib. Ap. No. 11, p. 956.

[2] See 23 St. L. 21-22, ch. 50, sec. 2.

[3] Act 2 July, 1862, ch. 128: 12 St. L. 502. By Act 24 Jan. 1865: 13 St. L. 424, made to embrace attorneys of the courts of the United States. See Exp. Garland, 4 Wall. 374 (1866).

[4] [3 Bl. Com. 370.

Post-obit bond. An agreement, for money, to pay a larger sum, exceeding legal interest, upon the death of a person from whom the obligor has expectations, if he survive him.[1]

Being a fraud upon the expectations of the ancestor, such obligations are annullable in equity.[2]

OBITER. L. On the way, by the way; in passing. Applied to an opinion given by a judge incidentally or as an illustration, and not as part of the decision of the court. See further DICTUM.

OBJECT. 1. The thing aimed at, the end sought to be accomplished.[3]

Whatever is presented to the mind or to the senses; whatever, also, is acted or operated upon affirmatively, or intentionally influenced by any thing done, moved or applied thereto.[4]

"Objects charged with internal tax" is equivalent to "subjects of taxation."[4]

2. A person who is to be benefited by a distribution of the property or income of a trust is spoken of as "the object" of the power or of the donor's or testator's bounty. See TRUST, 1.

OBJECTION. See EXCEPTION, 4; PROTEST, 1.

OBLIGATE; OBLIGE.[5] Oblige: To place, or become held, under a bond or legal duty.

As, in the saying that one "obliges himself" by a written instrument;[6] that the civil and canon laws "oblige," as far as adopted.[7]

"Every act that causes damage to another 'obliges' him to repair it." That is, the wrong done creates an obligation — brings into existence the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties.[8]

Obligate: To promise, perhaps more or less formally, to do or to refrain from doing some act; to covenant in writing; to execute an instrument under seal.

Has about superseded "oblige" in legal expression.

Obligatory.[9] A "writing obligatory" means, simply, a written contract under seal.[10]

[1] [Boynton v. Hubbard, 7 Mass. *119 (1810), Parsons, C. J.; Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sr. *125, 157 (1750).

[2] 1 Story, Eq. §§ 342–44.

[3] Paxton v. Baum, 57 Miss. 536 (1882).

[4] Wells v. Shook, 8 Blatch. 257 (1871), Woodruff, J.

[5] F. obliger: L. ob-ligare, to bind together, to constrain. Obligatio, a tying up, a binding.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 340.

[7] 1 Bl. Com. 18.

[8] La. Civ. Code, Art. 2315; United States v. New Orleans, 17 F. R. 497 (1883).

[9] Ob'-ligatory.

[10] Watson v. Hoge, 7 Yerg. 350 (1835).

Obligation. A ligament or tie; something which binds one to do or not to do an act.[1]

1. In its most extensive sense, synonymous with "duty."[2]

Natural or moral obligation. An obligation which cannot be enforced by action, but which is nevertheless binding in conscience and according to natural justice.[3] Opposed, civil or legal obligation.

When an action upon a civil obligation is barred by an act of limitations, or by a discharge under a bankrupt law, or as having been entered into during infancy or coverture, the natural obligation still subsists; it is a sufficient consideration for a new contract; and money paid upon account of it cannot be recovered.[4] See CONSIDERATION, Moral.

Perfect obligation. An obligation which gives to the opposite party the right of compulsion. Imperfect obligation. An obligation which is not binding, as between man and man; a duty not enforceable by human law.[5] See ASSENT; DUTY, 1; EQUITY; JOINT AND SEVERAL; RIGHT, 2.

In Roman law, a contract was a pact (q. v.), a convention plus an obligation. So long as the pact remained unclothed with the obligation, it was "nude" or "naked." An obligation was "juris vinculum, quo necessitate, adstringimur alicujus solvendæ rei" (Justinian, Inst. III, 13, 1). The obligation is the "bond" or "chain," with which the law joins persons together in consequence of their voluntary acts. Obligatio may signify a right as well as a duty. The picture is that of a "legal chain," and the two ends were equally regarded.[6]

The obligation was a personal relation between two parties, a debtor bound to render some service, a creditor to receive it. The debt was a binding (obligatio), the payment a releasing (solutio), of the person. The creditor's hold was on the person (later, on the property) of the debtor. The imperfect obligatio (naturalis) could not, like the perfect (civilis), be enforced by a direct action, but might have force in indirect ways. Natural obligations arose from transactions which would have created civil ones, but for some defect in form or in legal capacity. Civil obligations were those stricti juris, subject to a literal and rigorous construction, and those bonæ fidei, in which the aims

[1] [Blair v. Williams, 4 Litt. *36, 66 (Ky., 1823).

[2] Crandall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. 55–56 (1857); Sibilrud v. Minneapolis, &c. R. Co., 29 Minn. 60 (1882).

[3] [Goulding v. Davidson, 25 How. Pr. 484 (1863); Tebbetts v. Dowd, 23 Wend. *332 (1840).

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 445; Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 371 (1855); Chitty, Contr. 10; Langd. Contr. § 71; Leak, Contr. 66.

[5] [Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 128 (1867); Vattel, Law of Nations, *lxii, § 17.

[6] Maine, Ancient Law, 312–14. See also Goodsell v. Benson, 13 R. I. 289 (1881), note; Hare, Contr. 64.

of the parties and the demands of reason and equity were considered.[1]

2. A legal duty; a legal liability.[2]

A valid, subsisting obligation consists of a legal debt or duty, and the remedy to enforce it.[3]

3. An undertaking under seal; also, the instrument or writing by which it is evidenced.[4]

A bond, or other writing in the nature of a bond. In a popular sense, any act by which a person becomes bound to or for another, or to perform something.[5] See BOND.

Obligee. He to whom an obligation or bond is given.

Obligor. He who enters into a bond or obligation.[6]

A "co-obligor" is a person who is jointly bound, by the same instrument, with another person.

Obligation is a generic word, including every kind of contract by which parties bind themselves. Used without limitation, will include a coupon bond payable to bearer.[7]

An obligation is "a deed in writing, whereby one man doth bind himself to another to pay a sum of money or do some other thing." No precise form of words is necessary. Any memorandum under seal, whereby a debt is acknowledged to be owing, will obligate the party to pay. The terms must at least create a debitum in præsenti, though the solvendum may be in futuro, even after the death of the obligor.[8]

Obligation of a contract. The law which binds a party to a contract to perform his undertaking.[9]

The power and efficacy of the law which applies to and enforces performance of the contract, or the payment of an equivalent for non-performance.[10]

"No State shall . . . pass any . . . Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts."[1]

The constitutions of the several States contain a similar restriction upon the exercise of legislative power.[2]

The reference is to the means provided by law by which a contract can be enforced,— by which the parties can be obliged to perform it.[3]

The "obligation" is found in the terms of the agreement, sanctioned by moral and legal principles.[4]

It includes everything within the obligatory scope of the contract.[5]

Implies a duty, that may be enforced by law, to perform the contract according to its terms.[6]

Consists in the remedy given by law to enforce the contract. While this remedy may be changed by an enactment, it cannot be taken away or lessened, at least not without leaving the parties "a substantial remedy," according to the course of justice as it existed when the contract was made.[7] See further IMPAIR.

4. An instrument for the payment of money.

"Obligation or other security of the United States," in the Crimes Acts, means, all bonds, certificates of indebtedness, national currency, coupons, United States notes, Treasury notes, fractional notes, certificates of deposit, bills, checks, or drafts for money, drawn by or upon authorized officers of the United States, stamps, and other representatives of value issued by any act of Congress.

Any person who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits, or alters any such obligation or security, shall be punished by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, and imprisoned not more than fifteen years.[8]

See MERGER, 2.

OBLITERATION. Is not confined to effacing letters or words so that they cannot be read. A line drawn through a writing (testamentary) obliterates it, though left as

[1] Hadley, Rom. Law, 235, 245, 252, 255.

[2] Crandall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. 55-56 (1857).

[3] Cocke v. Hoffman, 5 Lea, 112 (1880); 6 Barb. 583.

[4] Smith v. Ellington, 14 Ga. 333 (1853); Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 id. 330 (1854).

[5] Strong v. Wheaton, 38 Barb. 624 (1861). See also 2 Bl. Com. 340; 1 Ark. 112; 6 Minn. 353; 38 L. T. R. 378.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 340. Obli-jee'; obli-gor'.

[7] [Sinton v. County of Carter, 23 F. R. 535, 538 (1885).

[8] Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 451 (1887), Alvey, C. J., quoting Shep. Touch. 367, and holding that the words "At my death, my estate or my executor may pay Ann Cover $3,000 — David Engel," created neither an obligation to pay money, nor, under the Maryland act of 1864, a will.

[9] [Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 197 (1819), Marshall, C. J.

[10] Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 318 (1827), Trimble, J. See also Wachter v. Famachon, 62 Wis. 121-22 (1885).

[1] Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10, cl. 1.

[2] Consult Story, Const. § 1373; Cooley, Const. Lim. 273-94.

[3] Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 206 (1880), Field, J.; Seibert v. Lewis, 122 id. 295 (1887).

[4] Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. *572 (1837), M'Lean, J.

[5] Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 600 (1877).

[6] [Wachter v. Famachon, 62 Wis. 121 (1885), Orton, J.

[7] Bank of Louisville v. Trustees of Public Schools, 83 Ky. 227 (1885); McCracken County v. Mercantile Trust Co., 84 id. 348-52 (1886), cases. See also 1 How. 311; 15 id. 301; 8 Wheat. 1; 16 Wall. 317; 70 Ala. 151-62; 9 Cal. 83; 31 Conn. 265; 38 Ga. 369; 15 Iowa, 130; 4 Litt. *36; 29 Minn. 527-32, 546; 41 Pa. 446; 11 R. I. 354; 27 Vt. 602; 18 Gratt. 270.

[8] R. S. § 5413: Act 30 June, 1864.

legible as before.[1] See ALTERATION, 2; CANCEL.

OBLOQUY.[2] Censure; reproach.

To expose one to obloquy is to expose him to censure and reproach, these words being synonymous with "obloquy."[3]

OBSCENE.[4] Includes what is foul or indecent, and what is immodest or calculated to excite impure desires.[5]

Is applied to language spoken, written, or printed, and to pictorial productions.

Obscene, lewd, or lascivious publications of an indecent character, are neither mailable[6] nor importable.[7]

He who deposits such publications in the mails, and he who receives the same for circulation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of one hundred to five thousand dollars, with imprisonment for one to ten years, or both.[8]

The test is whether the tendency of the matter is to deprave and corrupt the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences, and into whose hands a publication of the sort may fall. A book need not have words which are in themselves obscene, in order to be obscene. Regard is had to the idea conveyed by the words used, in any substantial part of the publication. "Obscenity" is that form of indecency which is calculated to promote general corruption of morals. "Lewdness" has a tendency to excite lustful thoughts. . . The indictment need not specify in what respect a picture is unlawful. . . One may have what views on religion he pleases, and publish the same, but not in connection with obscene matters sent through the mails.[9]

The prohibition applies to an obscene writing or letter inclosed in a sealed envelope.[10]

The purpose is to exclude from the mails only such articles as are impure and immodest and tend to corrupt the morals.[11]

The fact that the publications were sent in the real or supposed interest of science, philosophy, or morality is immaterial.

The indictment should allege a scienter. An allegation that the accused "knowingly deposited" the objectionable matter cannot be extended to embrace an averment of scienter.[1]

The fact that post-office inspectors used test or decoy letters to bring to justice a person suspected of mailing obscene literature does not discredit their testimony.[1]

Any offense, which, in its nature and by its example, tends to the corruption of morals, as, the exhibition of an obscene picture, is indictable at common law.[2]

Whether matter published is obscene or not, is a question of law for the court. If the matter is too gross to be spread upon the records that fact may be averred as an excuse for not setting the matter out. But this rule is not general.[3] See VERBUM, In hæc.

See also BOOK, 1; DECOY; INDECENT; NAKED, 1; POLICE, 2; PUBLICATION, 2.

OBSOLETE. Worn out: old and not enforced. Obsolescent. Falling into disuse.

"It must be a strong case to justify the court in deciding that an unrepealed act is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such case may not exist: where there has been a non-user for a great number of years; where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief, if suddenly brought into action; where a long practice, inconsistent with it, has prevailed, and, especially, where from other and later statutes it might fairly be inferred that, in the apprehension of the legislature, the old one was not in force."[4] See REPEAL.

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS. L. Resist beginnings, first encroachments, a wrong at inception.

Courts are watchful against stealthy encroachments upon constitutional rights.[5]

OBSTRUCT. To pile up or against: to render passage difficult or impossible; to impede or retard action, hinder or prevent from performing a duty or service.

1. To obstruct travel is to stop up and wholly prevent travel upon a road, or render the road unfit for travel.[6]

A fence along a highway is an obstruction thereof, if it prevents public travel from being perfectly safe,

---

[1] Evans's Appeal, 58 Pa. 244 (1868), Strong, J. See also 123 Mass. 102; 22 N. J. E. 463; 25 Am. R. 35; 19 Alb. L. J. 328; 1 Williams, Ex. 144.

[2] L. ob-loqui, to speak against: contradict.

[3] Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 275 (1886), Foote, J.

[4] L. obscenus, repulsive, foul.

[5] [United States v. Loftis, 12 F. R. 673 (1882), Deady, D. J.: Worcester's Dict.; s. c., 8 Saw. 194.

[6] Act 12 July, 1876; R. S. §§ 3893–94; 1 Sup. R. S. p. 229, Act 3 March, 1879: 1 Sup. R. S. p. 456.

[7] R. S. § 2191; 22 St. L. 489.

[8] R. S. § 3894. See ADDENDA.

[9] United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 336, 360–62, 366–69 (1879), cases, Blatchford, J. Definitions approved, United States v. Slenker, post.

[10] United States v. Gaylord, 11 Biss. 438 (1883), Treat, J.; Same v. Same, 17 F. R. 438 (1883), Drummond, J.; United States v. Hanover, ib. 444 (1883), cases; United States v. Fero, 18 id. 900 (1884), cases; Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 421 (1885).

[11] Exp. Doran, 32 F. R. 76 (1887).

[1] United States v. Slenker, 32 F. R. 694 (1887), cases, Paul, J.; United States v. Wightman, 29 id. 636 (1886), cases, and note.

[2] Commonwealth v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. *91, 101 (1815), Tilghman, C. J.

[3] McNair v. People, 89 Ill. 441 (1878); 92 id. 182. See generally 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1432; Bradlaugh v. The Queen, L. R., 3 Q. B. D. 607 (1878).

[4] Wright v. Crane, 13 S. & R. *452 (1825), Tilghman, C. J. See also Snowden v. Snowden, 1 Bland, Ch. 556 (1829); Hill v. Smith, 1 Morris, *79 (Iowa, 1840).

[5] Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 635 (1886).

[6] [Newburyport Turnpike Corporation v. Eastern R. Co., 23 Pick. 329 (1839); 21 N. J. E. 27; 78 Pa. 23.

although it does not extend across the road.[1] See OPEN, 1 (7).

The primary purpose of streets is use by the public for travel and transportation, and the rule is that any obstruction or encroachment which interferes with such use is a public nuisance. But there are exceptions to the rule, born of necessity and justified by public convenience. An abutting owner engaged in building may temporarily encroach upon the street by the deposit of building materials. A tradesman may convey goods to or from his adjoining store. A coach or omnibus may stop to take up or set down passengers, and use for public travel may be temporarily interfered with in a variety of other ways without the creation of a nuisance; but all such interruptions and obstructions must be justified by necessity. It is not sufficient that the obstructions are necessary with reference to the business of him who creates and maintains them. They must also be reasonable with reference to the rights of the public, who have interests which may not be sacrificed or disregarded. Whether an obstruction is necessary and reasonable must generally be a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence relating thereto.[2]

One who wrongfully pulls a signal rope and stops a train does not "obstruct" the train.[3]

2. "Any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars."[4]

When acts which create an obstruction of the mails are in themselves unlawful the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, although to attain another end may have been his primary object. The prohibition has no reference to acts lawful in themselves, from the execution of which a temporary delay to the mails unavoidably follows.[5]

The offense is complete when one or more persons unlawfully prevent the moving of a railroad train carrying the mails.[6]

3. Obstructing an officer executing lawful process is an offense against public justice.[7]

The offense is committed when he is prevented by actual violence, or by threats of violence which it is in the power of the offender to enforce, from executing the writ.[8] See RESIST.

[1] Mosher v. Vincent, 39 Iowa, 609 (1874); State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 392 (1885). So as to obstructing a railroad track, State v. Kilty, 26 Minn. 423 (1881). In Nashville, &c. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 368 (1871), held that such "obstruction" was not for expert testimony.

[2] Callanan v. Gilman, 107 N. Y. 365 (1888), cases.

[3] Commonwealth v. Killian, 109 Mass. 374 (1872). See Reg. v. Hardy, L. R., 1 C. C. 280 (1870), as to false signal.

[4] R. S. § 3995: Act 8 June, 1872.

[5] United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 486 (1866), Field, J.

[6] United States v. Kane, 19 F. R. 42 (1884). See also United States v. Claypool, 14 id. 127 (1882).

[7] 4 Bl. Com. 129.

[8] United States v. Lowry, 2 Wash 170 (1806); United States v. Lukins, 3 id. 337 (1818); 1 Idaho, 211; 15 Mo. 497; 25 Vt. 421.

OBTAIN. See ACQUIRE.

In a statute punishing false pretenses, may refer to obtaining some benefit to the party, rather than to defrauding or depriving another of his property.[1]

OCCASIONAL. See REGULAR.

OCCUPY.[2] To hold in possession; to hold or keep for use; as, to occupy an apartment.[3]

Implies actual use, possession or cultivation by a particular person: as, in a devise of land "occupied" by the testator.[4]

"Occupy" and its inflections may well enough be used in the sense of possess; "occupancy" and "occupant" for assuming property which has no owner; "occupation" and "occupier" for the more general idea of possession.[5]

Occupied; unoccupied. As used in policies of insurance, are always construed with reference to the character of the building, the purposes for which it is designed and the uses contemplated by the parties as expressed in the contract.

The occupancy of a dwelling, and of a barn or a mill, is in each case essentially different in its scope and character. "Occupied" always implies a substantial and practical use of the building for the purposes for which it is intended, and as contemplated by the terms of the policy. A dwelling-house is occupied when human beings habitually reside in it, and unoccupied when no one lives or dwells in it.[6]

Occupation of a dwelling-house, within the meaning of a policy of insurance, requires that there be in the house the presence of human beings as at their customary place of abode, not absolutely and uninterruptedly continuous, but the house must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage.[7] See VACANT.

Within the meaning of a tax law, the owner of land may be in occupation of it by his tenant; so that "unoccupied" will mean untenanted.[8] See USE, 2.

Occupancy. Possession; actual control; occupation,[9] q. v.

[1] People v. General Sessions, 18 Hun, 400 (1878); Regina v. Garrett, 1 Dears. C. C. 242 (1853), Parke, B.

[2] L. occupare, to lay hold of.

[3] Missionary Society v. Dallas, 107 U. S. 342 (1882); Webster's Dict.

[4] Jackson v. Sill, 11 Johns. *214 (1814), Thompson, C. J.; Inhabitants of Phillipsburgh v. Bruch, 37 N. J. E. 485–86 (1883), cases.

[5] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[6] Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 44 N. J. L. 223 (1882), Green, J. See also 112 Mass. 422; 136 id. 491.

[7] Herrman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 169 (1881), Folger, C. J.; Barry v. Prescott Ins. Co., 35 Hun, 603 (1885).

[8] State v. Reinhardt, 31 N. J. L. 218 (1865); Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Kiernan, 83 Ky. 478 (1885); Stensgaard v. National Fire Ins. Co., 36 Minn. 181 (1886).

[9] See Walters v. People, 21 Ill. 178 (1859); 38 id. 262; 110 Mass. 175; 113 id. 518; 25 Barb. 54; 36 Wis. 73.

Title by occupancy is the taking possession of those things which before belonged to nobody.[1]

The foundation of property, of holding those things in severalty which by the law of nature, unqualified by that of society, were common to all mankind.[1]

Thus, at common law, one may take to his own use goods of an alien enemy; movables returned into the common stock of things by abandonment; the benefits of the elements — light, air, water; and wild animals. Other examples of title acquired by first occupancy are: emblements; additions to property by accession, or by wrongful confusion of goods; an author's right in his literary composition; the right to the exclusive use of a trade-mark, or of a firm name.[2]

Lest this property should determine by the owner's dereliction, or death, whereby the thing would again become common, society has established contracts, conveyances, wills, and heirships, by which to continue the property of the first occupant.[3] See DISCOVERY, 1.

Occupant; occupier. The "first occupant" is he who first declared his intention to appropriate a thing to his own use, and actually took it into possession.[4]

An "occupant" has the actual use or possession of a thing.[5]

An "occupier" is one in the use and enjoyment of a thing.[6]

May imply that the person is in the actual bona fide possession of land as a resident.[7] See ABANDON, 1; FIND, 1.

Occupation. 1. Actual possession of real property.[8] See USE, 2.

2. Employment at a particular business; engagement; vocation; calling; trade.[9] See EMPLOYMENT; PROFESSION; TRADE; TAX, 2.

OCCUR. Generally, to happen.[10]

"After a loss shall occur," in a policy of insurance, refers to the time when liability becomes fixed, by proofs of loss, etc., — when the insurer may lawfully be compelled to pay the amount of the loss.[11]

Occurrence. See RES, Gestæ.

OCTO. See TALES.

OF. By; belonging to; upon.

In the expression "bounded north of the heirs of A," held to mean by.[1]

The infirmary "of" a county is equivalent to "the property of" or "belonging to" the county.[2]

Entered "of record" means upon a record or records; in the appropriate office as a matter of public record.

"Of force" means of binding force, obligatory although possibly not enforced.[3]

Of course. See COURSE, 2.

OFFENSE.[4] The transgression of a law;[5] a crime.[6]

Any crime or act of wickedness. As a genus, comprehends every crime and misdemeanor; as a species, signifies a crime not indictable but punishable summarily or by the forfeiture of penalty. Offenses are: treasons, felonies or major offenses, and misdemeanors or minor offenses.[7]

Includes also such violations of municipal ordinances as are punishable by fine or imprisonment.[8]

Offenses are spoken of as capital and non-capital, as cumulative, criminal, political, etc. See CRIME; EXTRADITION; MISDEMEANOR, 2; WRONG, Public.

OFFER. 1. A proposition to do a thing.[9]

May be convertible with "attempt,"[10] q. v.; but "offering" does not mean the same as "promising" a reward to a voter.[11]

An offer of a bargain by one person to another imposes no obligation upon the former until it is accepted by the latter according to the terms in which the offer was made. Any qualification of, or departure from, those terms invalidates the offer, unless agreed to by the person who made it. Until the terms of the agreement have received the assent of both parties the negotiation is open and imposes no obligation upon either party.[12]

An offer to sell, subject to acceptance, binds the party offering, but not the other party until acceptance. And so, also, as to an optional purchase, based upon a sufficient consideration.[13]

An offer to do a thing, as, to insure property, made by mail, binds the person making the offer, according

[1] 2 Bl. Com. 258.
[2] 2 Bl. Com. 400, 407.
[3] 2 Bl. Com. 8–11, 400. See 110 U. S. 374.
[4] 2 Bl. Com. 258.
[5] Redfield v. Utica, &c. R. Co., 25 Barb. 58 (1851); City of Bangor v. Rowe, 57 Me. 439 (1869).
[6] [Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Iowa, 242 (1870).
[7] Hussey v. Smith, 1 Utah, 132 (1873); 3 Op. Att.-Gen. 126 (1880); id. 182 (1837); Abbott v. Upham, 18 Metc. 174 (1847); O'Neale v. Cleaveland, 3 Nev. 492 (1867).
[8] Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 690 (1862); McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 id. 211 (1886); Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Iowa, 242 (1870).
[9] See Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 506 (1881).
[10] Jenanson v. Humboldt Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 95 (1878).
[11] Hay v. Star Fire Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 243 (1879).

[1] Hannum v. Kingsley, 107 Mass. 361 (1871).
[2] Davis v. State, 38 Ohio St. 506 (1882).
[3] See 1 Paine, 336; 21 Barb. 475.
[4] Spelled also offence. O. F. offence, offense: L. offensa: of-fendere, to dash against.
[5] Moore v. Illinois, 14 How. 19 (1852).
[6] People v. Police Commissioners, 39 Hun, 510 (1886). See also 1 Oreg. 192; 3 Tex. 314; 18 Gratt. 955.
[7] [Wharton's Law Dict.
[8] State v. Cantieny, 34 Minn. 9 (1885).
[9] People v. Ah Fook, 62 Cal. 494 (1881).
[10] Commonwealth v. Harris, 1 Pa. Leg. Gaz. R. 457 (1871).
[11] State v. Harker, 4 Harring. 561 (1845).
[12] Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. 228 (1819), Washington, J. See also Tilley v. County of Cook, 103 U. S. 161 (1880), cases: 12 Mo. Ap. 384.
[13] Butler v. Thompson, 92 U. S. 415–16 (1875); Langd. Contr. § 151.

to the terms tendered, if an answer is transmitted in due course of mail accepting the terms, unless a withdrawal reaches the addressee before his letter announcing acceptance has been transmitted.[1]

The contract is deemed complete the moment the letter assenting to the latest proposition is mailed.[2]

The offer may be of such a nature that the person making it has a right to expect an answer by return mail.[3]

A proposal to accept, or an acceptance, upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer, and puts an end to the negotiation, unless the party who made the original offer renews it, or assents to the modifications suggested. The other party, having once rejected the offer, cannot afterward revive it by tendering an acceptance of it. If the offer does not limit the time for its acceptance, it must be accepted within a reasonable time. If it does, it may, at any time within the limit and so long as it remains open, be accepted or rejected by the party to whom, or be withdrawn by the party by whom, it was made.[4] See ASSENT; COMPROMISE; TENDER, 2.

2. A proposal made to the court by counsel, at the trial of a cause, to put in as evidence testimony then about to be adduced.

The court may require such "offer" to be reduced to writing, stating clearly what it is proposed to prove, and the purpose thereof; and then either admit or reject the offer.

OFFICE.[5] 1. A right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging.[6]

The right, and correspondent duty, to execute a public or private trust, and to take the emoluments belonging to it.[7]

That function by virtue whereof a person has some employment in the affairs of another.[8]

A public station or employment, conferred by the appointment of government, and embracing the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties.[9]

Offices may be classed as civil and military; and civil offices as political, judicial, and ministerial. Judicial offices are those which relate to the administration of justice. Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a superior. Political offices are such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer.[1]

A civil office, at common law, is regarded as a burden which, in the interest of the community and of good government, the appointee is bound to bear. Hence, an office cannot be laid down without the consent of the appointing power, in order that public interests may not suffer. A resignation is complete when the proper authority accepts it, or, what is tantamount, appoints a successor.[2]

Public offices are trusts, held solely for the public good. They are conferred from considerations of the ability, integrity, and fitness of the appointee. Whatever introduces other elements to control the appointing power must necessarily lower the character of the appointments, to the detriment of the public. Agreements for compensation to procure these appointments tend to introduce such elements, and are therefore viewed as inconsistent with sound morals and public policy.[3]

The incumbent of an office has not, under our system of government, any property in it. His right to exercise it is not based upon any contract or grant. It is conferred as a trust to be exercised for the benefit of the public. Such salary as may be attached to it is designed to enable the incumbent the better to perform the duties by the more exclusive devotion of his time thereto. A public office and its creation is a matter of public, not of private law. The decisions of some States proceed upon the ground that an incumbent has a property in his office and that he cannot be deprived of his right without the judgment of a court; a view supported by the doctrines of the common law which regarded an office as an hereditament, but which has no foundation in a representative government.[4]

An office of constitutional creation is beyond the control of the legislature, except as prescribed in the constitution. The salary or compensation provided by the constitution is an incident to the office, and cannot be detached from it.[5]

---

[1] Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. 400 (1850), Nelson, J.

[2] Darlington Iron Co. v. Foote, 16 F. R. 646 (1883).

[3] Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. 387 (1848); Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525 (1878).

[4] Minneapolis, &c. R. Co. v. Columbus Rolling Co., 119 U. S. 151 (1886), cases, Gray, J.; 7 Am. Law Rev. 433–56 (1872), cases; 2 Kent, 477.

[5] L. officium, doing a service: duty; function.

[6] 2 Bl. Com. 36.

[7] 3 Kent, 454.

[8] Matter of Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 243 (1877), Allen, J.

[9] United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 393 (1867), Swayne, J. See also 103 U. S. 8; 2 Bened. 306; 12 Rep. 483; 43 Ala. 245; 26 Cal. 389; 30 Ga. 274; 45 Ill. 414; 6 Cush. 181; 40 Miss. 629; 89 N. C. 133; 29 Ohio St. 348; 7 id. 556; 26 Pa. 77; 62 id. 349; 32 Wis. 127; 4 id. 646.

[1] Twenty Per Cent. Cases, 13 Wall. 575 (1871), cases, Clifford, J.

[2] Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S. 473 (1880), cases, Bradley, J. See also 15 Op. Att.-Gen. 3, 207, 449; 10 F. R. 463–64; 39 Ark. 211.

[3] Tool Company v. Norris, 2 Wall. 55 (1864), cases, Field, J.

[4] State, ex rel. Attorney-General v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 109, 113 (1886), cases, Minshall, J.

[5] Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 492, 490–97 (1885), cases.

2. A place for transacting business, public or private.[1]

Office book. See DOCUMENT, Public; RECORD.

Office copy. See COPY.

Office found. At common law, an alien may take realty by act of the grantor, and hold it until "office found;" that is, until the fact of alienage is authoritatively established by a public officer, upon an inquest held at the instance of the government.

The proceeding which contains the finding is technically designated as "office found." It removes the fact from the region of uncertainty and makes it a matter of record. It was devised as a means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record, without which he could neither take nor part with anything. Some equivalent proceeding was essential at civil law. The proceeding was necessary before the sovereign could devest title.[2] See INQUEST, Of office.

Officer. One lawfully invested with an office.[3]

One invested by a superior authority, particularly by government, with the duty of transacting affairs of a certain class; an incumbent of an office; a person designated to execute some function of government.[4]

The word "officer" is very elastic. As applied to the military establishments of the army and navy, it would be more definite, perhaps, and somewhat so as applied to the civil establishments, where there are indicia of authority to point them out; but, as used in statutes, the term often cannot be so confined. Even by common understanding in the army and navy, as well as in the civil service, there are distinctions, social, technical, and arbitrary, that frequently influence the judicial determination of administrative regulations. One of the earliest definitions of "officium" is "that function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another, as of the king or another person." "The word principally implies a duty, and then, the charge of such duty; and it is a rule that where a man hath to do with another's affairs against his will, and without his leave, that is an office."[5]

In the Revised Statutes or any act or resolution of Congress passed since February 25, 1871, reference to any "officer" includes any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such office, unless the context shows that a more restricted sense is meant.[1]

One who receives no certificate of appointment, takes no oath of office, has no term or tenure of office, discharges no duties and exercises no powers depending directly on the authority of law, but simply performs such duties as are required of him by the persons employing him, and whose responsibility is limited to them, is not an officer. "Office" implies authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power of the state.[2]

City officer. One whose functions relate exclusively to the local affairs of a city.

State officer. One whose duties concern the State at large or the general public.[3]

Civil officers. Within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 4, of the Constitution, all officers of the United States who hold their appointments under the national government, whether their duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or in the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers in the army or navy.[4]

What is necessary to constitute a person an officer of the United States, in any of the various branches of its service, was very fully considered in United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 509-10 (1878), in which case it was distinctly pointed out that, under the Constitution, all its officers were appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, or by a court of law, or the head of a department, and the heads of the departments were defined to be what are now called the "members of the cabinet." Unless a person in the service of the government, therefore, holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the President, or of one of the courts of justice or heads of departments authorized by law to make such an appointment, he is not, strictly speaking, an officer of the United States. Where Congress may have used the word "officer" in a more popular sense, it is the duty of the court to ascertain such meaning and to be governed accordingly.[5]

Commissioned officer; non-commissioned officer. Whenever the United States statutes speak of "officers" of the army, they refer to commissioned officers. "Non-commissioned officers" are not officers in the sense in

---

[1] See Commonwealth v. White, 6 Cush. 183 (1850); Shaw v. Morley, L. R., 3 Ex. 140 (1868).

[2] Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 212 (1879), Field, J.; Hauenstein v. Lynham, ib. 484 (1879); Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 621 (1813); 3 Bl. Com. 259.

[3] [Bouvier's Law Dict.

[4] [Abbott's Law Dict.

[5] United States v. Trice, 30 F. R. 493-94 (1887), cases. Hammond, J.; Cowell, Dict; 4 Jac. Dict. 433; 2 Toml. Dict. 664.

[1] [R. S. § 1.

[2] Olmstead v. Mayor of New York, 42 N. Y. Super 487-88 (1877).

[3] Burch v. Hardwicke, 30 Gratt. 33-35 (1878), cases.

[4] 1 Story, Const. § 792.

[5] United States v. Mouat, 124 U. S. 307 (1888), Miller, J.; United States v. Hendee, ib. 313 (1888).—in which the word is used in a general sense which would include a pay-master's clerk. See also United States v Smith, ib. 532 (1888), deciding that a clerk in the office of a collector of customs is not a public officer within R. S. § 3639.

which the latter term is generally used.[1] See CADET.

Executive officer. A person in whom resides power to execute the laws.[2]

Judicial officer. A person concerned in deciding or administering the law. See JUDICIAL.

Legislative officer. A person empowered to assist in enacting laws.

Ministerial officer. A person whose duty it is to execute the mandate of a superior officer. See MINISTER, 1.

Officer de facto. Not a mere usurper (q. v.), nor yet within the sanction of law, but one who, "colore officii," claims and assumes to exercise official authority, is reputed to have it, and the community acquiesces accordingly. Officer de jure. An officer of right, a rightful officer.[3]

A de facto officer is one who discharges the duties of an office under color of title. One who, having been elected to an office, assumes to exercise its duties without having attempted to qualify, is without color of title and not such an officer.[4]

One who acts as an officer de facto is estopped from denying that he is such an officer, even on a criminal prosecution for malfeasance in office.[5]

The validity of an act done by one in a public station is not, as a rule, to be tried by his title. State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 458–77 (1871), which contains an exhaustive examination of the cases, decides that competent authority in the appointing or electing body is not requisite to make a de facto officer.[6]

The acts of an officer de facto are held to be valid, because the public good requires it.[7] His acts, within the sphere of the powers and duties of the office, are as binding as the acts of an officer de jure:[8] as, for example, the act of a judge de facto.[9]

There can be no officer, either de jure or de facto, if there be no office to fill. The doctrine which gives validity to acts of officers de facto, whatever defects there may be in the legality of their appointment or election, is founded upon considerations of policy and necessity, for the protection of the public and individuals whose interests may be affected thereby. Offices are created for the benefit of the public, and private parties are not permitted to inquire into the title of persons clothed with the evidence of such offices and in apparent possession of their powers and functions. For the good order and peace of society, their authority is to be respected and obeyed until in some regular mode prescribed by law their title is investigated and determined. Endless confusion would result if in every proceeding before such officers their title could be called in question. But the idea of an officer implies the existence of an office which he holds.[1]

In ordinary cases, where an election of officers of a corporation has been omitted, the old officers may continue to act as officers de facto, beyond their regular term (though not compelled to do so), and their acts will bind the corporation; but not so, where the functions of the corporation have been abrogated or superseded.[2]

Public officer. A person who has some duty to perform concerning the public.[3]

Where an individual has been appointed or elected in a manner required by law, has a designation or title given him by law, and exercises functions concerning the public, assigned to him by law, he must be regarded as a "public officer."[4]

It is well settled that a court of equity has no jurisdiction over the appointment and removal of public officers, whether the power of removal, as well as that of appointment, is vested in executive or administrative boards or officers, or is intrusted to a judicial tribunal. The jurisdiction to determine the title to a public office belongs exclusively to the courts of law, and is exercised either by certiorari, error, or appeal, or by mandamus, prohibition, or quo warranto, according to the circumstances of the case, and the established mode of procedure.[5]

Superior officer; inferior officer. These expressions designate, respectively, an official high, or low, in grade or rank, or one in authority over, or subordinate to, another.

The President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate shall appoint

---

[1] Babbitt v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 214 (1880); R. S. §§ 1280, 1293.

[2] Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 146 (1854).

[3] Hussey v. Smith, 99 U. S. 24 (1878), cases.

[4] Creighton v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 147 (1885), Pryor, J.

[5] People v. Bunker, 70 Cal. 215 (1886), cases.

[6] State, ex rel. Herron v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 368 (1886).

[7] Hussey v. Smith, 99 U. S. 24 (1878), cases; Koontz v. Burgess of Hancock, 64 Md. 134 (1885).

[8] Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S. 132 (1875), cases.

[9] Bolling v. Lersner, 91 U. S. 596 (1875), cases. A decree by a judge whose commission had expired four days before was held valid in Cromer v. Boinest, 27 S. C. 426 (1887), cases. See, as to a justice of the peace holding over, Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Oreg. 456 (1887), cases: 36 Alb. Law J. 95–98 (1888), cases.

[1] Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 442–43 (1886), Field, J.; ib. 442–49, cases; 36 Alb. Law J. 506–10 (1887), cases.

[2] Burkley v. Levee Commissioners, 93 U. S. 263 (1876), Bradley, J.; Mining Co. v. Anglo-Californian Bank, 104 id. 192 (1881); Cole v. Black River Falls, 57 Wis. 113 (1883), cases; 7 Ala. 538; 38 Conn. 471; 69 Ill. 529; 48 Me. 80; 27 Minn. 293; 3 Monta. 430; 17 Nev. 170; 33 N. J. L. 201; 24 Wend. 539; 73 N. C. 550; 21 Ohio St. 618; 55 Pa. 472; 59 Tex. 344; 33 Gratt. 513; 2 Kent, 295.

[3] Hill v. Boyland, 40 Miss. 625 (1866), cases.

[4] Bradford v. Justices, 33 Ga. 336 (1862). See also 49 Ala. 89; 45 Ill. 400; 29 Ohio St. 348; 34 N. Y. 398; 52 Vt. 104.

[5] Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 212 (1888), cases, Gray J. As to the judicial control of public officers, see 24 Cent. Law J. 172 (1886), cases.

Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law; but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments."[1]

"Inferior officer" here means one subordinate to those officers in whom the power of appointment may be vested by act of Congress, to wit, the President, the courts of law, and the heads of departments.[2]

The rule of official obligation, as imposed by law, is that the officer shall perform the duties of his office honestly, faithfully, and to the best of his ability. This is the substance of all official oaths. In ordinary cases, to expect more than this would deter upright and reasonable men from taking office. This is substantially the rule by which the common law measures the responsibility of those whose official duties require them to have the custody of property, public or private. If a more stringent obligation is desirable, it must be prescribed by statute or exacted by express stipulation.[3]

No public officer is responsible in a civil suit for a judicial determination, however erroneous it may be, or however malicious the motive which produced it.[4]

The government does not guarantee the integrity of its officers nor the validity of their acts. It prescribes rules for them, requires an oath for the faithful discharge of their duties, exacts a bond with stringent conditions; provides penalties for their misconduct or fraud; but there its responsibility ends. They are but the servants of the law; if they depart from its requirements the government is not bound.[5]

Official. 1. An officer, q. v.

2. Pertaining to the functions of an office: as, an official — act, bond, certificate, communication, oath, report and reporter, qq. v. Opposed, (1) extra-official: beyond or outside of the legitimate functions of one's office: as, an extra-official act; (2) unofficial: as, an unofficial report, q. v.

See further AMOTION; ARREST, 2 (2, 3); COLOR, 2; COMPENSATION, 1; CONTINUANCE, 3; CORPORATION; COUNTY; DISABILITY; EMBEZZLEMENT; EMOLUMENT; EXTORTION; FEE, 2; GOVERNMENT; IMPEACH, 4; INCOMPATIBLE; LIBERTY, 1, Of the press; MAGISTRATE; MARSHAL, 1; MISDEMEANOR, 1; OATH, Of office; OBSTRUCT, 3; OFFICIUM; ONUS, Cum onere; PERSONATE; POWER, Appointing; QUALIFY; RANK; REINSTATE; RESIGNATION; REVENUE; SERVICE, 3, Civil; SHERIFF; TENURE, 2; TORT; VACANCY; WARRANT, 2; WRIT.

[1] Constitution, Art. II. sec. 2, cl. 2.

[2] Collins v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 574 (1878).

[3] United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 342 (1872), Bradley, J. See also People v. Faulkner, 31 Hun, 325 (1884); 74 Me. 264.

[4] East River Gas-Light Co v. Donnelly, 93 N. Y. 559 (1883).

[5] Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 31 (1884), Field, J. See also 1 Addison, Torts, 31, note by Wood.

OFFICINA JUSTITIÆ. L. The shop of justice: the ordinary side of the court of chancery (q. v.), because out of it issued, and to it returned, all writs.[1]

OFFICIUM. L. Duty, authority, office. See INOFFICIOUS.

Colore officii. Under color of office: under semblance or pretense of authority.

Implies an illegal (but not a corrupt) claim of authority, by reason of holding a particular office, to do a thing in question.[2] See Virtute Officii; COLOR, 2.

Ex officio. From the nature of the office. Ex officio authority is authority by virtue of one office to perform the duties of some other office.[3]

But making a person an ex officio officer does not merge the two offices into one.[4]

Functus officio. Discharged his or its office; exhausted his power; fulfilled the purpose.

Applied to a person whose official authority has ceased, and to a thing which once possessed virtue or force: as, for example, an agent who has fully executed his agency; a referee who has rendered his decision; a bill, note, or mortgage which has been paid or merged into a judgment; a trust deed given to secure a note, after the note has been paid.[5]

An officer arresting a party cannot arrest him upon an exhausted first writ — it has become functus officio.[6]

Virtute officii. By virtue of office; officially.

A peace officer, virtute officii, may arrest for crime committed in his presence.

An act done virtute officii is an act within the authority of the officer, but in doing it he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law imposes in him. An act done colore officii is of such a nature that the office gives no authority to do it.[7]

OFFSPRING. See PARTUS; PATER.

OIL. See MINERAL; RESIDUUM, 2.

Whether benzine is a "chemical oil or burning fluid" is a question for a jury.[8]

[1] 3 Bl. Com. 273, 50.

[2] See Burrall v. Acker, 23 Wend. 606 (1840); Kelly v. McCormick, 28 N. Y. 321 (1863); Mason v. Crabtree, 71 Ala. 481 (1882).

[3] Clay County v. Simousen, 1 Dak. 425 (1877).

[4] People v. Leet, 13 Ill. 268 (1851); People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 76 (1869); Territory v. Ritter, 1 Wyom. 318, 333 (1875).

[5] See 93 U. S. 382; 103 id. 167; 82 Ill. 383; 7 Barb. 23; 23 Tex. 561; 81 Va. 648.

[6] Cook v. Bangs, 31 F. R. 646 (1887).

[7] People v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 187 (1850); Seeley v. Birdsall, 15 Johns. *269 (1818); 74 Ga. 618; 1 Bl. Com. 349.

[8] Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co., 92 Pa. 19 (1879); Carrigan v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 426 (1881).

Benzine is a "rock or earth oil," made from petroleum.[1]

If a policy of insurance forbids the keeping of gasoline or benzine on the premises, authority to use gasoline gas does not warrant keeping either fluid there for any other purpose than for the manufacture of gas.[2]

OLD. See NEW.

Referring to a road, does not necessarily mean long-existing, ancient. May be so opposed to a "new" road as to mean simply a road already laid out and used.[3]

Old people. See DEMENTIA; INFLUENCE.

OLEOMARGARINE.[4] Artificial butter made out of animal fat, milk, and other substances; imitation butter.

A patentee is not authorized by the patent laws to manufacture and sell the patented article in violation of the laws of a State.[5]

Statutes prohibiting the sale of articles made in imitation and designed to take the place of genuine butter, unless the packages are so labeled or marked as to prevent deception upon those who desire to purchase butter made from cream only, are constitutional.[6]

The legislature of a State may prohibit the sale of oleomargarine, suine, and like compositions, as an exercise of the police power, q. v.[7]

The New York act of 1884 was held to be unconstitutional in so far as it prohibited the making or using of any compound designed as a substitute for butter or cheese, however wholesome, and however openly and fairly the character of the substitute may be avowed. "Such enactment conflicts with the constitutional right of liberty in every citizen to adopt and follow such industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, as he may see fit."[8] But the act of 1885, which forbids the manufacture or sale of products not made from unadulterated milk in imitation or resemblance, or designed to take the place of butter, is constitutional. It is not necessary, under the latter act, that the buyer should be deceived, or that there should be an attempt to deceive him; and evidence of the presence of unnecessary coloring matter, designed to make the oleomargarine resemble dairy butter, will justify conviction.[9]

The Pennsylvania act of May 21, 1885, is within the power to legislate for the public health. That some persons suffer loss from prohibiting the manufacture and sale of the substance cannot defeat the purpose of the act; nor either can the opinion of individuals that the legislature mistook the necessity for such a law. And the further fact that the pure substance may be wholesome is irrelevant in a judicial inquiry: the legislature may still restrict or prohibit traffic in the substance. If there is probable ground for believing that entire prohibition of traffic in any preparation is the only way effectually to prevent its being fraudulently substituted for the real article, then such prohibition may be upheld as a reasonable police regulation, although the preparation is in fact innocuous. On this principle, mixing milk and water, and adulterating confections and provisions, have been made penal offenses.[1]

That statute of Pennsylvania, which was designed "to protect the public health, and to prevent adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof," does not deny to persons the equal protection of the laws, nor deprive them of property without compensation as required by law, nor of any right of liberty or property without due process of law,—within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. "The (Supreme) court is unable to affirm that this legislation has no real or substantial relation to such objects" as are expressed in the title of the act.[2]

An act of Congress, approved August 2, 1886 (24 St. L. 209), provides, section 1, that for the purpose of the act "butter" shall be understood to mean "the food product usually known as butter, and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter."

Sec. 2. "That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated 'oleomargarine,' namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine-oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine-oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef-fat, suet, lard, lard-oil, vegetable-oil annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter."

Sec. 3. Imposes special taxes as follows: $600 upon manufacturers for sale; $480 upon wholesale dealers — those who sell in the original packages, except such as sell only their own production; $48 upon retail dealers.

Sec. 4. Besides being liable for said tax, every per-

[1] Buchanan v. Exchange Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 29 (1874); Bennett v. North British Ins. Co., 81 id. 275 (1880); Morse v. Buffalo Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 534 (1872).

[2] Liverpool, &c. Ins. Co. v. Gunthur, 116 U. S. 113, 126 (1885).

[3] People v. Griswold, 67 N. Y. 61 (1876).

[4] O'-le-o-mär'-ga-rine.

[5] Re Broenahan, 18 F. R. 62 (Mo., 1882).

[6] People v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236 (1883); Pierce v. State, 63 Md. 592 (1885).

[7] State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110 (1882); Commonwealth v. Powell, 1 County Ct. R. 94 (Pa., 1885).

[8] People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 386 (1885); People v. Ahrenberg, 103 id. 388 (1886); Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69 (1886); People v. West, 44 Hun, 163 (1887), cases: Taylor v. State, Tex. Ap. (1886), cases.

[9] People v. Arensburg, 105 N. Y. 123 (1887): 106 id. 368 (1886).

[1] Powell v. Commonwealth, 114 Pa. 256, 292 (1887), Sterrett, J. See Commonwealth v. Waite, 93 Mass. 264 (1865), and Commonwealth v. Evans, 132 id. 11 (1882),—as to selling milk mixed with water; 26 Am. Law Reg. 88-91 (1887), cases; 26 Am. Law Rev. 97-104 (1888), cases.

[2] Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 684 (1888). Harlan, J.; Field, J., dissenting.

son who carries on the business of manufacturer without having paid the tax therefor, shall be fined, for each offense, from $1,000 to $5,000; every person who so wholesales, from $500 to $2,000; and every person who so retails, from $50 to $500.

Sec. 5. Every manufacturer shall conduct his business under such regulations as the commissioner of internal revenue, with the secretary of the treasury, may require as to notices, inventories, bonds, books of account, signs, surveillance of officers, etc. The bond shall be in a penal sum of not less than $5,000, and may be increased from time to time.

Sec. 6. All oleomargarine shall be packed in wooden packages, not before used for the purpose, each containing not less than ten pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded according to the regulations; and all sales by manufacturers or wholesale dealers shall be in original stamped packages. Retail dealers may sell only from such packages, in quantities not exceeding ten pounds, and shall pack in suitable wooden or paper packages, marked and branded as prescribed. A person who knowingly violates this section shall be fined, for each offense, not more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not more than two years.

Sec. 7. Every manufacturer shall securely affix, by pasting, on each package, a label giving his number, district, and State, that he has complied with the law, and that persons are not again to use the package, or the stamp, nor to remove the contents without destroying the stamp. Neglecting to affix, and removing, the label, are finable $50 for each package in respect to which the offense is committed.

Sec. 8. Upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be collected a tax of two cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer. The tax levied shall be represented by coupon stamps, engraved, issued, destroyed, etc., as are stamps relating to tobacco.

Sec. 9. When any manufacturer has removed for sale or consumption oleomargarine without the use of proper stamps, the commissioner of internal revenue, within two years at most, upon satisfactory proof, shall estimate, and make an assessment for the amount, and certify the same to the collector. The tax shall be in addition to the penalties imposed by law for such sale or removal.

Sec. 10. Regulates importation from foreign countries.

Sec. 11-12. The penalty for knowingly purchasing or receiving for sale oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped is $50 for each offense; and for oleomargarine as to which the special tax has not been paid, $100, with forfeiture of the articles or the value thereof.

Sec. 13. Provides as penalties for not destroying stamps upon emptied packages, fines up to $100 and imprisonment not more than one year.

Sec. 14. Provides for employing analytical chemists and microscopists, regularly and in particular cases; and for appeals from the decisions of the commissioner of internal revenue to a board of final decision, consisting of the surgeons-general of the army and navy, and the commissioner of agriculture.

Sec. 15. Packages subject to tax, without stamps or marks as provided, and oleomargarine adjudged deleterious to the public health, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Willfully removing or defacing stamps, marks, or brands on packages regularly taxed, is a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $100 to $2,000, and imprisonment thirty days to six months.

Sec. 16. Provides for exporting to foreign countries, without payment of tax or stamping, under prescribed regulations, each package being branded "Oleomargarine" in plain Roman letters at least one half an inch square.

Sec. 17. Any manufacturer who defrauds or attempts to defraud the United States of the tax shall forfeit the factory and apparatus used, and all oleomargarine and raw material on the premises, and be fined $500 to $5,000, and be imprisoned six months to three years.

Sec. 18. For any forbidden act, for which no specific penalty is imposed, the penalty shall be $1,000; if done by a manufacturer or a wholesale dealer, he shall forfeit all the oleomargarine owned by him.

Sec. 19. Penalties may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 20. The commissioner of internal revenue, with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, may make regulations needful for carrying the act into effect.

Sec. 21. The act shall go into effect on the ninetieth day (Oct. 31, 1886) after its passage.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A code of maritime laws, promulgated during the twelfth century from the island of Oleron, off the coast of France.

The code was greatly improved, if not indeed wholly compiled, by Richard the First (1189-99), the island being then a possession of England, and became the substructure of the maritime constitutions of all the nations in Europe.[1]

OLOGRAPH. See HOLOGRAPH.

OMITTED. See BLANK, 2; CASUS, Omissus.

OMNIS. L. Every; every thing, every one; all.

Omne majus. See MAJOR.

Omnia præsumuntur. See PRÆSUMERE; SPOLIATION.

Omnia rite. See PRÆSUMERE.

Omnibus. For all: containing two or more independent matters. Applied to a count in a declaration, and to a bill of legislation, and perhaps to a clause in a will, which comprises more than one general subject.[2] See TITLE, 2, Of act.

Omnis definitio. See DEFINITIO.

Omnis ratihabitio. See RATIHABITIO.

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 418; 4 id. 423; 1 Chitty, id. 418; Coke, Litt. 2; 3 Kent, 12; 1 Pars. Ship. & Adm. 9; 1 Pet. Adm. R. Ap.

[2] See 14 Md. 193; 64 Pa. 428; 107 U. S. 153.

ON. Upon; at; near to.

A deed described land as "on a railroad." Held, in a suit to set aside the conveyance for misdescription, that "on," as denoting contiguity or neighborhood, may mean as well "near to" as "at."[1] See CONTAINED.

A vessel may be in distress "on the shore" without being actually in contact with the shore.[2]

"On a decree" being made means after the decree is made — contemporaneously or immediately after.[3] See UPON, 2.

On account. See ACCOUNT, 1.

On account of. See CONCERN; CONDITION.

On condition. See CONDITION; PROVIDED.

On default. See DEFAULT.

On demand. See DEMAND.

On file. See FILE.

On or about. Unless otherwise provided by statute, may not recite a date or an occurrence with sufficient certainty.

An allegation in an indictment that the accused did the act "on or about" a certain day may be void for uncertainty, as not showing but that the action is barred by lapse of time.[4]

The actual day may be before or after the day stated.[5]

On or before. An act to be done "on or before" a day named, permits a doing on that last day.[6]

ONCE A WEEK. See NEWSPAPER; WEEK.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

ONERARI. See ONUS.

ONEROUS.[7] Burdensome, oppressive. See ONUS.

In the civil law, referring to a contract: made for some consideration, however small; referring to a gift: subject to charges imposed on the donee.

ONLY. Solely; alone.

A clause in an act of sale restricting a warranty to troubles, evictions, etc., arising from the acts of the "vendor only," will be limited to that person exclusively.[8]

ONTARIO, LAKE. See LAKES.

ONUS. L. A charge, burden, incumbrance.

Cum onere. With the charge or disadvantage.

Part of the maxim transit terra cum onere, land passes with the charge,— is transferred as incumbered.

Every benefit is to be enjoyed cum onere.[1] The right to engage in a restricted business is a privilege cum onere.[2] If a legatee accepts the bequest, it is with the disabilities annexed, cum onere.[3]

The incumbent of a public office takes it cum onere,— with a liability of having new labors imposed upon him without any countervailing addition to his salary.[4] See COMPENSATION, 1.

Exoneretur. Let the burden, the liability, be removed; let him be discharged. A note indorsed on a bail-piece that the surety is relieved.

Allowed when the condition imposed is fulfilled by an act of God, an act of the obligee or of the law.[5] When of right, to be applied for; and the matter thereof is pleadable in defense. When of favor, available only on order of court.[6]

Onerari non. Not to be charged. A plea that defendant should not be held indebted.

Onus probandi. Burden of proof, q. v.

OP. An abbreviation of opinion.

OPEN. 1, v. (1) To begin: as, to open an argument. See AFFIRMATIVE (1).

(2) To order a resale: as, to open biddings received on judicial sale for irregularity, fraud, or gross inadequacy of price.[7] See further BID.

(3) To proclaim as convened and ready for the transaction of judicial business: as, to open court. Compare Open, 2, (6); CRIER.

(4) To set aside, vacate: as, to open a decree, a judgment.

(5) To restore or recall to its conditional state: as, to open a rule made absolute, in order to admit of cause being shown against the rule.

(6) To explain the nature of the issue, and the evidence to be offered: as, to open a trial, a hearing, a case.[8]

(7) To admit the public to its use; to clear of obstructions: as, to open a street or road.[9]

---

[1] Burnam v. Banks, 45 Mo. 349, 351 (1870).

[2] The Mac, 46 L. T. 907 (1882).

[3] Bradley v. Bradley, L. R., 3 P. D. 50 (1878).

[4] United States v. Winslow, 3 Saw. 342 (1875).

[5] Conroy v. Oregon Construction Co., 23 F. R. 73 (1885).

[6] Wall v. Simpson, 6 J. J. Marsh. 155 (1831); James v. Benjamin, 72 Ga. 185 (1883); Scheerer v. Manhattan Ins. Co., 16 F. R. 720 (1883).

[7] Pronounced ŏn'-er-ous.

[8] New Orleans, &c. R. Co. v. Jourdain, 34 La. An. 648 (1882).

[1] Mundorff v. Wickersham, 63 Pa. 89 (1869), cases.

[2] Finch v. United States, 102 U. S. 272 (1880).

[3] Rogers v. Law, 1 Black, 261 (1861).

[4] State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. L. 33 (1882).

[5] Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 369 (1872).

[6] Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. 358 (1835), Story, J.

[7] See Tripp v. Cook, 26 Wend. 156-57 (1841); 31 Miss. 514; 13 Gratt. 639; Sugd. Vend. 90.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 366; 10 F. R. 825; 89 N. C. 543; 10 Oreg. 176.

[9] [State v. Commissioners, 37 N. J. L. 14 (1874), Beasley, C. J.

Whenever a public road is traveled it is in fact opened, although nothing may have been done by the overseers for the purpose of opening it.[1]

A road which is not closed or inclosed, shut up or obstructed, must be an opened road.[2]

A highway laid out and established through wild and unfenced lands, and afterward used and traveled by the public, is "lawfully opened."[3]

2, adj. (1) Subject to adjustment or dispute; still continuing: as, an open account, q. v.

(2) Public; overt, q. v.: as, an open act of crime. See (10); PATENT, 1.

(3) With names of witnesses not named, or time and place not fixed: as, an open commission to take testimony.

(4) Unperformed: as, a contract left open.

(5) In which all members have a voice in the election of officers: as, an open corporation, q. v.

(6) In session, organized for the transaction of judicial business; or public, free to all: as, open court.[4] See Open, 1, (3); CHAMBERS.

Courts of equity are said to be always "open."[5]

(7) In the presence of witnesses; public: as, an open entry upon land.[6]

(8) In a condition admitting the filing of objections: as, open to exception.

(9) With no property applicable to the payment of debts: as, open insolvency.[7]

(10) Opposed to secret.

Indecent exposure of the person to one individual of the opposite sex constitutes "open" lewdness, q. v.

(11) Not restricted as to person, time, or, perhaps, as to price: as, an open order to sell realty.

(12) With the value of the subject to be ascertained in case of loss: as, an open policy of marine insurance, q. v.

(13) An instruction that if a defect in a sidewalk was "open and notorious" the defendant is chargeable with notice, is not erroneous. "Open" would not imply the existence of an "open hole" in the sidewalk, but "not concealed, not hidden, exposed to view, apparent," a secondary signification in which the word is frequently used.[8]

Keep open. See KEEP. Open door. See HOUSE.

OPERA. A composition of a dramatic kind set to music and sung, accompanied with musical instruments, and enriched with appropriate costumes, scenery, etc.[1]

Opera house. The house in which operas are represented.[1]

A dedication to the public of the arrangement of a musical composition for the piano does not dedicate what it does not contain and what cannot be reproduced from it, and an unauthorized person does not therefore possess the right to perform such composition as set for an orchestra, although he have an opportunity to copy it. An opera is more like a patented invention than a common book, as to the rule that he who obtains similar results, better or worse, by similar means, though the opportunity is furnished by an unprotected book, should be held to infringe the rights of the composer.[2]

A performance on the stage is not such a publication as will destroy the exclusive common-law right of the author and his assigns to a dramatic or lyrical composition of this sort, though the composer as an alien is not entitled to the benefits of our law of statutory copyright.[3] See COMPOSITION, 1, Musical; COPYRIGHT; DRAMA; THEATER.

Opera glass. See BAGGAGE.

OPERATE. For associates "to operate on lands" purchased, was held to include selling timber to be cut and removed.[3]

Operation. 1. Of a law: its practical working and effect.[4] See UNIFORM.

Operation of law. The application of legal rules to a given set of facts: as, to succeed to property by act and operation of law. See MERGER.

2. In patent law, see PATENT, 2; MODE.

Operative. 1, n. An employee, a servant,[5] q. v. See also PROPRIETOR, 2.

2, adj. Effective: the "operative words" in an instrument contain its essential terms or conditions.

Inoperative provisions are such as cannot be enforced. See LEGAL, Illegal; SURPLUSAGE.

OPINION. An inference or conclusion drawn by a witness, expert, juror, judge or court, or counsel; and regards either or both facts and law. See VALUE, 1081.

1. The exception to the rule that the opinion of a witness is not competent evidence is not confined to the case of expert testimony. While it is necessary that the witness should first state the facts upon which he bases his opinion, it is not necessary to do so where the facts are not capable of reproduction in

[1] Wilson v. Janes, 29 Kan. 250 (1883).
[2] City of Topeka v. Russam, 30 Kan. 559 (1883).
[3] State v. Wertzel, 62 Wis. 190 (1885).
[4] Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Iowa, 504 (1877).
[5] 3 Bl. Com. 48.
[6] See Thompson v. Kenyon, 100 Mass. 111 (1868).
[7] See Hardesty v. Kinworthy, 8 Blackf. *305 (1846).
[8] Kelleher v. City of Keokuk, 70 Iowa, 475 (1883).

[1] Rowland v. Kleber, 1 Pittsb. 71 (1858).
[2] Thomas v. Lennon, 14 F. R. 849 (1883), cases, Lowell, Cir. J.
[3] Eaton v. Smith, 20 Pick. 157 (1838).
[4] Geebrick v. State, 5 Iowa, 496 (1857).
[5] See 1 Pa. L. J. 368; 2 Cranch, 240, 270.

such a way as to bring before the minds of the jury the condition of things upon which he bases his opinion. Such evidence is competent from the necessity of the case.[1]

Facts which are made up of a great variety of circumstances and a combination of appearances, which, from the infirmity of language, cannot be properly described, may be shown by witnesses who observed them; and, where their observation is such as to justify it, they may state the conclusions of their own minds. In this category may be placed matters involving magnitude or quantities, portions of time, space, motion, gravitation, value, and such as relate to the condition or appearances of persons or things. On the same principle, the emotions or feelings of persons, such as grief, joy, hope, despondency, anger, fear, and excitement, may be likewise shown.[2] See CHARACTER; EXPERT; REPRESENTATION, 2.

2. The courts are not agreed as to the knowledge upon which the opinion of a juror must rest in order to render him incompetent, or whether the opinion must be accompanied by malice or ill-will; but all hold that it must be founded upon evidence, and be more than a mere impression,—if hypothetical only, the partiality is not so manifest as necessarily to set the juror aside. For an opinion need not make him impartial. An impression formed from reading newspapers does not necessarily unfit one for the service.[3]

Upon the trial of the issue of fact raised by a challenge to a juror, in a criminal case, on the ground that he has formed and expressed an opinion as to the issue, the court is practically called upon to say whether the nature and strength of the opinion are such as in law necessarily raise the presumption of partiality. The question is one of mixed law and fact—the latter to be tried upon evidence. The finding ought not to be set aside, unless the error is manifest, unless it be clearly made to appear that, upon the evidence, the court should have found that the juror had formed such an opinion that he could not in law be deemed impartial. The case must be one in which it is manifest that the law left nothing to the conscience or discretion of the court.[4]

"Those strong and deep impressions which close the mind against the testimony which may be offered in opposition to them, which will combat that testimony and resist its force, do constitute a sufficient objection" to a juror.[5]

"Sanford's impressions [based upon rumor or newspaper statements] were not such as would refuse to yield to the testimony that might be offered, nor were they such as to close his mind to a fair consideration of the testimony."[1]

Prejudice against crime will not of itself disqualify a man as a juror.[2]

A statute of Illinois, in force since July 1, 1874, provides that it shall not be a cause of challenge that a juror has read in the newspapers an account of the commission of the crime charged, nor shall the fact that he has formed an opinion or impression, based upon rumor or newspaper statements (about the truth of which he has expressed no opinion), disqualify him, if he shall upon oath state that he believes he can fairly and impartially render a verdict in accordance with the law and the evidence, and the court shall be satisfied of the truth of such statement. "It is not a test question whether the juror will have the opinion which he has formed from newspapers changed by the evidence, but whether his verdict will be based upon the account which may here [before the trial court] be given by witnesses under oath." A similar statute was enacted in New York in 1872, in Michigan in 1873, in Ohio in 1880, in Nebraska in 1885; all which have been sustained by express decision or treated as valid by the highest courts of those States. The rule of the statute of Illinois, as construed, is not materially different from that adopted by the courts in many of the States without legislative action; and the same is not repugnant to the guaranty for an impartial jury in criminal trials.[3] See further CHALLENGE, 4; IMPARTIAL; PREJUDICE, 1; RELIGION.

3. The view of the facts in a case entertained by the judge who presides at the trial.

It is no longer an open question that a judge of a court of the United States, in submitting a case to the jury, may, in his discretion, express his opinion upon the facts; and that when no rule of law is incorrectly stated, and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury, such expressions of opinion are not reviewable on writ of error.[4] See further CHARGE, 2 (2, c).

The statement of the reasons advanced by a judge or court in support of a decision rendered. See DECISION; DICTUM, 2; JUDGMENT.

Concurring opinion. An opinion that agrees with the conclusions in another opinion rendered in the same case. Dissenting opinion. An opinion that does not agree with the views expressed by the majority of a court in its opinion. Whence dissentients. (Rare.)

Judicial opinion. A ruling upon a question directly involved in an argument or cause. Extra-judicial opinion. A ruling upon a point either only incidentally raised

[1] Jones v. Fuller, 19 S. C. 66 (1882); Commonwealth v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 133 (1875); Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 234 (1875); 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 511, 450.

[2] State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10 (1886), cases, Johnston, J.

[3] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 155-56 (1878), cases; 19 Blatch. 255; 47 Conn. 530-31; 49 id. 376; 6 Col. 456.

[4] Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 156 (1878), Waite, C. J. Approved, Spies v. Illinois, 123 id. 179 (1887).

[5] United States v. Burr, 1 Burr's Trial, 416 (1807), Marshall, C. J.

[1] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 262 (1887).

[2] Spies et al. v. People, 122 Ill. 263-64 (1887).

[3] The Anarchists' Case,—Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 167-69 (1887), cases, Waite, C. J.

[4] Rucker v. Wheeler, 127 U. S. 93 (1888), cases.

or else without any bearing whatever; a dictum, q. v.

Whenever, in any civil suit or proceeding in a circuit court held by a circuit justice and a circuit judge or a district judge, there occurs any "difference of opinion" between the judges as to any matter or thing to be decided, ruled, or ordered by the court, the opinion of the presiding justice or judge shall prevail, and be considered the opinion of the court for the time being.[1]

In criminal proceedings the point shall, "upon the request of either party or their counsel, be stated under the direction of the judges, and certified, under seal of the court, to the Supreme Court at their next session." But the cause may proceed "if in the opinion of the court, further proceedings can be had without prejudice to the merits." Where the judges disagree as to the imprisonment or punishment, none shall be permitted.[2]

Where, on a certificate of division from a circuit court, the Supreme Court is equally divided in opinion, the case will be remitted to the court below to enable it to take such action as it may be advised.[3]

The Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction of the case, if the certificate, instead of being confined to the single points of law, presents either questions of fact or the whole case for adjudication.[4]

A certificate of division can be resorted to only when "a question" has occurred in which the judges differ, and where "the point" of disagreement may be distinctly stated. It cannot be resorted to to present a question of fact, a question of fact and law, or a difference of opinion on the general case.[5]

Each question certified must be upon a distinct point of law, clearly stated, and not upon the whole case, nor whether upon the evidence judgment should be for one party or for the other.[6]

4. A statement, often in writing, made by an attorney, of what he supposes the law to be with reference to a matter or case. See ATTORNEY, At law.

OPPOSING. See INTEREST, 2 (2).

OPPOSITE. See ADVERSE; PARTY.

OPPRESSION. An act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, domination, or use of excessive authority.[7] Compare EXTORTION.

To make an act oppressive on the part of an officer under Rev. St., § 3169, subdivision 1, it must be done willfully, "under color of law," and "without legal authority."[1]

OPTIMUS. See USUS, 1076.

OPTION. Right of choice, selection or election.

A covenant in a lease giving the option to purchase is in the nature of a continuing offer to sell.[2]

The option to avoid or accept a sale by a trustee is to be exercised within a reasonable time.[3]

Buyer's option. A right on the part of a purchaser to take and pay for the purchase at any time within a given period.[4]

Local option. Refers to a law which enables voters to decide whether licenses to sell intoxicating liquors within their particular district or locality shall or shall not be granted.

The weight of authority favors the constitutionality of local option laws. A legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate power to determine some fact or the state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. There are many things, upon which wise and useful legislation must depend, which cannot be known to the law-making power, and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation.[5] Compare PROHIBITION, 2.

Option contract. An agreement between the so-called "buyer" and "seller" of a commodity (or a security for money) that they will adjust the account between them at a future day by one paying the other the difference in the market value of the article on that day as compared with the value on the day of "sale."

A contract for the sale of property to be delivered at a future time at the option of the purchaser, there being no understanding by both parties that the property is to be delivered, but rather that the obligation is to be satisfied by the payment of differences, is void.[6]

The question of the legality of sales by option de-

[1] R. S. §§ 650, 652.

[2] R. S. § 651; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629 (1882).

[3] Hannauer v. Woodruff, 10 Wall. 482 (1870); Silliman v. Hudson River Bridge Co., 1 Black, 582 (1861). See generally Durant v. Essex Company, 7 Wall. 110 (1868).

[4] Weeth v. New Eng. Mortgage Co., 106 U. S. 605 (1882), cases.

[5] California Natural Stone Paving Co. v. Molitor, 113 U. S. 609 (1885).

[6] Williamsport Bank v. Knapp, 119 U. S. 360 (1886), cases; Jewell v. Knight, 123 id. 432-33 (1887), cases.

[7] United States v. Deaver, 14 F. R. 595 (1882), Dick, District Judge.

[1] United States v. Deaver, ante.

[2] Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. 564 (1869), cases.

[3] Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 591 (1875).

[4] [Pickering v. Demerritt, 100 Mass. 421 (1868), Foster, Judge.

[5] Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 498, 494-508 (1873), cases; Halley v. State, 14 Tex. Ap. 510-12 (1883); Menken v. Atlanta, Sup. Ct. Ga. (1887); State v. Pond, Sup. Ct. Mo. (1888); 12 Am. Law Reg. 129-43 (1873), cases; 12 Cent. Law J. 123-27 (1881), cases; 35 Ark. 69; 42 Conn. 364; 4 Harr., Del., 479; 42 Ind. 547; 33 Iowa, 134; 14 Bush, 671; 42 Md. 71; 108 Mass. 27; 109 id. 199; 62 Mo. 168; 36 N. J. L. 720; Cooley, Const. Lim. 125.

[6] Melchert v. American Union Tel. Co., 11 F. R. 198 (1882), cases; ib. 201-5, cases: s. c. 3 McCrary, 521.

pends in part on local legislation, in part on judicial precedent, and in part on the special tendency of the adjudicating court with respect to political economy.[1] See further FUTURES; PUT, 2; WAGER, 2.

OR. 1. The ending -or, in assignor, consignor, covenantor, devisor, donor, grantor, obligor, payor, vendor, warrantor, and like words, designates the actor or doer; while -ee, designates the recipient — the person toward whom the action is directed, for whom the thing is done, as in assignee, consignee, devisee, etc. Originally, a Latin suffix.

The corresponding active form of appellee, appointee, distributee, drawee, patentee, transferee, is, for the most part, the English suffix -er; as, drawer, transferrer, etc.[2]

2. The disjunctive particle "or" will be read "and" when such change will give effect to the evident intention of law makers, testators, or contracting parties.[3]

It cannot be construed "and" in a penal statute when the effect is to aggravate the offense.[4]

"Or" may be used in the sense of "to wit," explaining what precedes. In this sense an indictment may adopt the words of the statute; as, "a bank-bill or promissory note," a horse of "a bay or brown color." But "spirituous or intoxicating liquor" may be bad for uncertainty.[5]

An indictment for betting on a game of "hazard or skill" is unobjectionable.[6]

Under a statute against permitting gaming in a "dram-shop," an indictment for gaming in a "dram-shop or grocery" is not bad for the surplusage.[7] See AND.

ORAL. In spoken words: as, an oral agreement, oral evidence.

When a pleading sets up a contract and does not allege that it was in writing, it will be taken to have been oral.[8] See ORE TENUS; PAROL, 2.

ORATOR.[9] A petitioner in a court of equity; a complainant or plaintiff.

Oratrix is the feminine form of the word in Latin.

ORCHARD. See MESSUAGE.

ORCHESTRA. See OPERA.

[1] 11 F. R. 201, ante, Dr. Wharton.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 140 (a); Coke, Litt. § 57.

[3] United States v. Fisk, 3 Wall. 447 (1865); Dumont v. United States, 98 U. S. 142 (1878); 14 Ct. Cl. 300; 41 Iowa, 593; 20 Pick. 378, 477; 105 Mass. 185; 50 Mich. 531; 64 N. C. 493, 563; 74 id. 402; 24 N. J. L. 686; 24 N. Y. 463; 40 id. 97; 89 Pa. 326; 88 id. 223; 20 Tex. 488; 24 Wis. 394; 1 Williams, Ex. 962; 9 East, 366; 16 id. 67; 31 L. J. Ex. 58.

[4] State v. Walters, 97 N. C. 490 (1887), cases.

[5] Commonwealth v. Grey, 2 Gray, 502 (1854), cases; 7 Gratt. 592.

[6] State v. Hester, 48 Ark. 40 (1886); Mans. Dig. § 1835.

[7] Ballentine v. State, 48 Ark. 48 (1886).

[8] Schreiber v. Butler, 84 Ind. 588 (1882).

[9] L. orator: orare, to petition.

ORDAIN. 1. To make, enact, establish: as, to ordain a constitution, a system of courts.[1] See ORDINANCE.

1. To appoint, institute, clothe with authority.

A minister is ordained when invested with ministerial functions or sacerdotal power.[2]

ORDEAL. An ancient species of trial by appeal to Providence.

Fire ordeal was performed by taking in the hand, unhurt, a piece of red-hot iron of one to three pounds weight, or by walking barefooted and blindfolded over nine red-hot ploughshares laid lengthwise at unequal distances. Escaping uninjured was adjudged evidence of innocence. This species was for persons of rank.

Water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, or by casting the person into a pond or river. Escaping unscalded, or floating without the action of swimming, as the case might be, was deemed evidence of innocence. This species was for the common people.

Either species could be performed by a deputy; whence the expression "go through fire and water" for another. The cold-water ceremony was also a test for the possession of witches. Both species were abolished by 3 Henry III (1219).[3] Compare BATTEL, Trial by.

ORDER. A command, direction, mandate.

1. An informal note requesting the payment of money, or the delivery of personalty, to a person named or to the bearer of the note.[4]

The word does not import exclusively a written instrument.[5]

On a promissory note, bill of exchange, or check, makes the paper negotiable (q. v.), although impersonal words are used.[6]

By the law-merchant, the purchaser of negotiable paper, payable to order, unless it be indorsed by the payee, takes the paper subject to any defense the payor may have against the payee.[7]

In statutes against forgery, a written direction addressed by one who either has in fact, or in writing professes to have, control over a fund or thing, to another who either purports in the writing to be under obligation to obey, or who is in fact under such obligation, commanding him how to appropriate the fund or thing. There are two kinds of orders: such

[1] 1 Wheat. 304; 4 id. 402.

[2] Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 139 (1821); Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 512 (1820).

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 342; 110 U. S. 529-30; 2 Am. Jur. 280 (1829); 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. Eng. 250.

[4] See Hinnemann v. Rosenback, 39 N. Y. 100 (1868).

[5] Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 456 (1841).

[6] Mechanics' Bank v. Straiton, 3 Keyes, 306 (N. Y., 1867).

[7] Osgood v. Artt, 17 F. R. 575 (1883); Cassidy v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Minn. 86 (1882).

as are orders on their face: and such as may be shown to be orders by averment and proof.[1]

See STORE-ORDERS.

2. Any direction of a court, other than a judgment or decree, made in a cause.

The judgment or conclusion of the court upon any motion or proceeding.[2]

An "order" is a decision made during the progress of the cause, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue, and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment. A "final judgment" is the determination of the court upon the issue presented, which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit in relation to the subject-matter of the litigation, and puts an end to the suit.[3]

An "order" is interlocutory, and made on motion or petition. A "decree" is final, and made at the hearing of the cause.[4]

Cautionary order. See CAUTION.

Charging order. In England, an order granted to a judgment creditor, that property of his debtor in public stocks shall stand charged with the payment of the amount of the judgment, with interest and costs.[5] See Stop Order, 1.

Decretal order. An order which, from a direction contained in it, may terminate the particular suit, like a decree made at the hearing.[6]

Interlocutory order. An order made during the progress of a suit upon some incidental matter. Opposed, final order. See INTERLOCUTORY.

Order nisi. A conditional order, to become absolute unless something be done by a specified time. See RULE, 2, Absolute.

Order of filiation. See FILIATION.

Stop order. (1) In English practice, an order in aid of a "charging order" (q. v.); granted, in certain cases, by a vice-chancellor, upon a fund in chancery.

(2) An order given to a broker to await a certain figure in the price of a particular bond or stock before he buys or sells, and then to "stop" buying or selling, as the case may be.[1]

Usually signifies that the broker has received and is bound to obey a direction of his principal to sell at a price prescribed, when that price is reached.[2]

The order may describe the price by referring to circumstances and contingencies; a definite figure need not be named.[3]

3. A rule of court.

Whence general and special orders. See RULE, Of court.

4. Conduct, demeanor; usually, good order, public order: quiet behavior, peaceable deportment. See DISORDER, 2; PEACE, 1.

ORDINANCE. 1. A rule or regulation adopted by municipal corporation. See ORDAIN, 1.

An ordinance of the councils of a municipality, though binding upon the community affected by it, is not a "law" in the legal sense: it is not prescribed by the supreme power in a State, from which alone a law can emanate, and it is not of general authority throughout the Commonwealth.[3]

The terms "by-law," "ordinance," and "municipal regulation" have substantially the same meaning, and are defined to be "the laws of the corporate district, made by the authorized body, in distinction from the general law of the State." They are local regulations for the government of the inhabitants of the particular place.[4]

The same act may constitute an offense against the law of a municipality and the law of the State.

Ordinances relating to the health, comfort, convenience, good order, and general welfare of the inhabitants are authorized by the general police power of the city.[5] See POLICE, 2.

The ordinances of a city are to its charter as the statutes of a State are to the constitution.[6]

The same exemption from judicial interference applies to all legislative bodies so far as their discretion extends. The fact that threatened legislative action may disregard constitutional restraints does not affect the question. A municipal corporation is generally clothed with other than legislative powers, and in their exercise may be brought under the control of the courts.[7]

2. Formerly, a state paper, operative as a fundamental law, yet not describable as either a constitution or a statute.

---

[1] Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 100-1 (1882); Bishop, Stat. Cr. § 327.

[2] Gilman v. Contra Costa Co., 8 Cal. 57 (1857), Murray, C. J.

[3] Loring v. Illesley, 1 Cal. *27 (1850), Bennett, J.

[4] [Brown's Law Dict.

[5] See 3 Steph. Com. 597; 9 M. & W. 49; 11 id. 57; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14-16; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1.

[1] Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 443 (1884).

[2] Wronkow v. Clews, 52 N. Y. Super. 178 (1885), Sedgwick, C. J.

[3] Baldwin v. Philadelphia, 99 Pa. 170 (1881), Paxson, J.

[4] State v. Lee, 29 Minn. 451-53 (1882), cases, Vanderburg, J.

[5] Exp. Wolf, 14 Neb. 33 (1883).

[6] Quinette v. St. Louis, 76 Mo. 402 (1882).

[7] Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 F. R. 507 (1887), Field, J.

An "act of parliament" was established by the king, lords, and commons; an "ordinance" by one or two of them. While the right of the commons to participate in legislation existed in a state of growth, an ordinance was an experimental act passed for a time only, and, as it were, on trial, and which might afterward either be converted into a statute, that is, a permanent act, or else be continued for a time, or discharged altogether.[1]

Ordinance of July 13, 1787. This was adopted by the Continental Congress and confirmed by the First Congress under the Constitution, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river.

When a State was admitted into the Union from the Northwest Territory, the ordinance, it has always been held, ceased to have any operative force in limiting its powers of legislation as compared with the powers possessed by the original States. The new State at once became entitled to and possessed all the rights of dominion and sovereignty which belonged to those States.[2] See TERRITORY, 2; SCHOOL.

ORDINARY.[3] 1, adj. Common, usual, reasonable: as, ordinary — care, diligence, skill, losses, qq. v. Opposed to extraordinary, q. v. See also NEGLIGENCE.

2, n. A judicial officer who has jurisdiction, in England, in ecclesiastical causes; in the United States, in matters respecting the probate of wills, the administration of estates, guardianships, and related subjects.[4]

ORDINATION. See ORDAIN, 2.

ORE. See MINE; MINERAL; WASTE, 1.

A deed conveyed all the zinc and other ores, except franklinite existing separate from the zinc. Held, that the grantee took both ores when the franklinite was mixed mechanically with the zinc; also, that what was meant by "zinc" might be explained by evidence outside of the deed.[5]

ORE TENUS. L. By mouth, by word of mouth; orally, verbally.

Oral evidence is evidence ore tenus.[6] In early times, pleadings were ore tenus, or viva voce, in court, and minuted down by the clerk, whose minutes were called the "parol."[7]

ORGANIC. See LAW, Organic.

ORGANIZE. In the sense of to constitute, to qualify for the exercise of appropriate functions, may refer to a government, a court, a legislative body, a board of deputies or other officers. See TERRITORY, 2.

Organizing an incorporation refers to the choice and qualification of officers necessary for the transaction of business.[1]

ORIGINAL.[2] 1, adj. The first in order or time; primary; principal; leading: as, an original — acquisition, bill, compact, conveyance, copy, entry, jurisdiction, occupant, owner, party, patentee, proceeding, process, promise, writ, qq. v.

2, n. An original document or instrument.

Duplicate originals; single original. "Single" when there is but one original instrument; "duplicate" when there are two.

In the case of a printed document, all the impressions are originals, or in the nature of duplicate originals, and any copy will be primary evidence.[3] See COPY.

Originality. In the law of patents, the finding out, the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyments of mankind.[4] See INVENTION.

ORNAMENT. See APPAREL; BAGGAGE; JEWEL.

ORPHAN.[5] A fatherless child; a minor who has lost either or both parents.

A child who has lost one or both of its parents.[6]

Stephen Girard devised property to the city of Philadelphia in trust for the founding of a college for white male orphans, preference being given to orphans born in that city. Francis Lieber, who drew up the plan of government, was of the opinion that the word "orphan," meant a fatherless child. In support of this opinion he had the private views of Chancellor Kent and Judge Story, and, subsequently, a decision by the supreme court of Pennsylvania.[7]

In Wisconsin, a devise for the benefit of the "Roman Catholic orphans" of a diocese was held void for un-

---

[1] [4 Coke, Inst. 25; Coke, Litt. 159 b; Barr. Stat. 41 (*); 3 Reeves, Eng. Law, 146.

[2] Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 9 (1888), cases. See at length R. S. pp. 13–16; 3 Scribner's Mag. 408 (1888).

[3] L. ordinarius, regular; also, an overseer: ordo, order.

[4] See 2 Bl. Com. 494, 506.

[5] New Jersey Zinc Co. v. Boston Franklinite Co., 15 N. J. E. 418, 447 (1863). As to the duty on zinc, see act 3 March, 1883, Sch. C: 22 St. L. p. 501; as to oxide of zinc, Sch. A, p. 494.

[6] 3 Bl. Com. 373.

[7] 3 Bl. Com. 398, 408; 2 id. 291.

[1] New Haven, &c. R. Co. v. Chapman, 33 Conn. 66 (1871).

[2] L. origo, beginning; oriri, to rise.

[3] 1 Greenl. Ev. § 558; 1 Whart. Ev. § 74.

[4] Conover v. Roach, 4 Fish. 16 (1857), Hall, J.

[5] Gk. ὀρφανός, bereft, destitute.

[6] Beardsley v. Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 493 (1885), Pardee, J.

[7] See Soohan v. Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 1, 24–33 (1859).

certainty, for the reason, among others, that it did not appear whether whole or half orphans were meant.[1]

Orphans' court. In Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and perhaps in other States, the title of the court having jurisdiction to settle the estates of decedents. See GUARDIAN, 2; PROBATE, Court of.

ORTHOGRAPHY. See GRAMMAR; IDEM, Sonans.

OSTENSIBLE. See PARTNER.

OTHER. Following an enumeration of particulars, embraces unenumerated particulars of like nature only, unless a broader sense is obviously intended.[2]

A statute gave a lien to "mechanics, tradesmen, or others," for labor or material. Held, that "or others," following the enumeration of particular cases, was applicable only to persons in the same category.[3] See EJUSDEM.

Other action pending. See PEND.

Otherwise. Shall not stand in market with a "cart, wagon, sleigh, or otherwise" to vend merchandise, applies to the subject-matter and includes a box, bench, or stall.[4]

Take "by purchase or otherwise" is authority to take by devise.[5]

Others. In the expression "tenant and others" refers to persons who are not tenants.[6]

Compare ALIAS; ALITER; ALIUNDE; ALIUS; AUTRE.

OUGHT. See MAY.

OUSTER.[7] Amotion of possession: dispossession.[8]

Originally, an injury affecting a right in realty. Amotion of a freehold is by abatement, intrusion, disseisin, discontinuance, deforcement. Amotion of a chattel real is by dispossessing a tenant holding by statute-merchant, statute-staple, elegit, or under an estate for years.[9]

A wrongful dispossession or exclusion of a party from real property who is entitled to the possession.[9]

An entry upon the land of another is an ouster of the legal possession arising from the title, if made under claim and color of right; otherwise, it is a mere trespass. The "intention" guides the entry, and fixes its character.[1] Compare AMOTION.

Judgment of ouster. In proceedings by quo warranto, excludes an intruder from a public office.[2]

Ouster le main. Out of his hands. See WARD, 3. Compare RESPONDEAT, Ouster.

OUT. See WITHOUT.

Out of court. He who has no legal status in a court is said to be "out of court;" that is, he is not before the court: as, a plaintiff who shows he is unable to maintain his action. Having no locus standi is an equivalent phrase.

OUTCRY. See AUCTION; HUE AND CRY, RAPE.

OUTER. See BAR, 1.

OUTFIT. Originally, objects connected with a ship necessary for sailing her, and without which she would not be navigable.[3]

Referring to a whaling vessel, is explainable by proof of usage.[4]

OUTGOING. See PARTNER.

OUT-HOUSE. See HOUSE, 1.

OUTLAW; OUTLAWRY.[4] 1. Outlawry is putting a man out of the protection of the law, so that he is incapable of bringing an action to redress an injury, and forfeits his goods and chattels to the king.

If, after outlawry, the defendant appears publicly, he may be arrested on a writ of capias utlagatum [that you take or seize the outlaw] and be committed till he appears in court, in person or by attorney. Being merely to compel appearance, any cause, however slight, will reverse the judgment. The punishment under an indictment for a misdemeanor is the same as under a civil action,—forfeiture of goods. But an outlawry in treason or felony amounts to a conviction and attainder. Anciently, an outlawed felon was said to have a caput lupinum,—he might be knocked on the head like a wolf by any one, because, having renounced all law, he was to be dealt with as in a state of nature; yet now, no man may kill him, except in endeavoring to arrest him. And any person may arrest him, under criminal prosecution, either of his own head or by warrant. If any point be omitted or misconducted, the whole proceeding is illegal, and, after reversal upon a writ of error, the accused may defend himself against the indictment. An outlaw could represent another person under protection of the law.[5]

---

[1] Heiss v. Murphy, 40 Wis. 290 (1876).

[2] Harlow v. Tufts, 4 Cush. 453 (1849); Commonwealth v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 47 (1878); ib. 433; 112 id. 411; 6 Cush. 142; 20 Pick. 201; 14 Gray, 440; 140 Mass. 463; 40 Barb. 574; 67 N. Y. 149; 9 Ohio, 11; 3 Brewst. 325; 9 Tex. 521; 23 How. 117; 117 U. S. 610.

[3] The City of Salem, 31 F. R. 618 (1887); Oregon Laws, 1876, No. 9.

[4] Commonwealth v. Rice, 9 Metc. 258 (1845).

[5] Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 388 (1861).

[6] Kenney v. Sweeney, 14 R. I. 582 (1884).

[7] F. outre: L. ultra, beyond.

[8] [3 Bl. Com. 167, 196.

[9] Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 497 (1862), Butler, J.; Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 357 (1886), Searls, C.

[1] Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. 52 (1837); Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 357 (1886).

[2] Campbell v. Talbot, 132 Mass. 177 (1882).

[3] [Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co., 9 Metc. 364-65 (1845).

[4] Mid. Eng. outlawe: Icel. útlagi, out of (beyond) the law,—Skeat.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 284; 4 id. 319; 46 Ala. 188; 87 Me. 391.

2. Referring to a claim, as, a debt due on a promissory note, "outlawed" means barred by the statute of limitations.[1]

OUTRAGE. See DAMAGES, Exemplary; WRONG.

OUTSTANDING. 1. Not gathered or harvested: as, an outstanding crop, q. v.

2. Due, but not paid; overdue; uncollected: as, an outstanding draft, bond, premium, or other demand or indebtedness.

3. Existing as a distinct interest in lands: as, an outstanding title.

OVER. 1. Does not necessarily mean vertically above: as, in an indictment for playing cards in a room over a saloon.[2]

"Over" and "under" are not precisely opposites. A railroad constructed "under" a turnpike means at a level lower than the turnpike; and the railroad may be said to pass "over" the turnpike when both are at the same level.[3]

2. A devise over is a devise to one person contingent upon the failure or defeat of a gift to some other person.

To endorse over; to make over: to transfer. See also HOLD, Over.

Overcharge. See CHARGE, 2 (1).

Overdraft. See DRAFT, 2.

Overdue. See DUE, 1.

Over-insurance. See INSURANCE.

Overplus. See SURPLUS.

Overrule. See RULE, 1.

Overseer. See POOR; WAY, Highway.

OVERT.[4] Open; public; opposed to covert. An overt act is something actually done toward carrying out intention, as, to commit treason, or to effect the object of a conspiracy.[5]

An attempt to steal, accompanied by an overt act toward its commission, constitutes an attempt to commit larceny. An overt act must be such as will apparently result, in the natural course of events, if not hindered by extraneous causes, in the commission of the crime itself. Mere preliminary preparations are not overt acts.[6]

See ACCOMPLICE; CONSPIRACY; TREASON.

Market overt. A public market, q. v.

Pound overt. A common public pound, q. v.

OWE. See DEBERE; DEBT; DUE; DUTY.

OWELTY.[1] Money paid, or secured, by one co-tenant to another, to equalize a partition of their realty.

Somewhat in the nature of purchase-money for land.[2]

A court of equity, with a view to the more convenient and perfect partition or allotment of the premises, may decree a pecuniary compensation to one of the parties for owelty or equality of partition, so as to prevent injustice or unavoidable inequality.[3]

Where equal partition in value cannot be made of any shares or purparts, the inquest shall equalize them by valuing them respectively, and award that any one or more shall be subject to the payment of such sum of money as shall be equal to the difference in value of any other share or shares, and shall return the same with their inquest; which sum or sums, when final judgment shall be rendered on the writ, shall be a lien on the lands designated to pay the same.[4]

OWNER. He who has dominion over a thing, which he may use as he pleases, except as restrained by the law or by an agreement.[5]

Will include the person in possession and control of any article of personalty, as, the one who hires a carriage.[6]

In a charter providing for notice to the owner of land to be taken for a street, includes a mortgagor.[7]

Includes any person having a claim or interest in real property, though less than an absolute fee.[8]

In a tax law, may refer to one having a freehold.[9]

Absolute ownership, or an estate in fee, may not be contemplated; as, in a homestead exemption law.[10]

The precise meaning depends upon the subject-matter. May designate the person in actual possession and occupancy of premises.[11]

---

[1] Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 392 (1854); Waters v. Tompkins, 2 Crompt., M. & R. *726 (1835); 24 Mich. 22.

[2] Patterson v. State, 12 Tex. Ap. 222 (1882).

[3] Newburyport Turnpike Corporation v. Eastern R. Co., 23 Pick. 329 (1839); Boston, &c. R. Co. v. Mayor of Lawrence, 2 Allen, 108 (1861).

[4] F. overt: ovrir, to open.

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 21, 79, 86, 307; 5 How. 228; 55 Vt. 505.

[6] Sipple v. State, 46 N. J. L. 197 (1884).

[1] Pronounced ō*w*′-el-ty. "A half French or half Latin word, from owe,"—Webster. F. owel, equal; en owel main, in equal hand or part.

[2] Reed v. Fidelity Ins. Trust, &c. Co., 113 Pa. 578 (1886).

[3] 1 Story, Eq. § 654, cases.

[4] Penn. Act 7 April, 1807, § 5: 2 Purd. 1293, pl. 20; 6 Phila. 183; 8 Pa. 122.

[5] See Dow v. Gould Mining Co., 31 Cal. 649 (1867).

[6] Camp v. Rogers, 44 Conn. 298 (1877).

[7] Whiting v. New Haven, 45 Conn. 303 (1877).

[8] See Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 171 (1878).

[9] Davis v. Cincinnati, 36 Ohio St. 26 (1880).

[10] Tyler v. Jewett, 82 Ala. 98 (1886).

[11] Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 229 (1884). See, as to land taken for public use, 57 N. H. 110; 36 N. J. L. 184; 4 N. Y. 66; 26 Pa. 238; as to property exempt, 25 Barb. 88;

Equitable owner. He for whom another holds property; a cestui que trust; a beneficiary, q. v. Legal owner. He who holds the property for the other.

General owner. He in whom a title is vested primarily and principally. Special owner. An owner for a particular purpose; as, a bailee. See AGENT; FACTOR; PROPERTY, General.

Joint owner; part owner. One of two or more persons who own a thing, especially, a vessel; a co-owner.

Designates a class of persons distinct from partners, who own property jointly, but in a different manner and by a different tenure.[1]

Reputed owner. One who, from all appearance, or from supposition, is the real owner of a thing; as, of property subject to taxation or to assessment for a municipal improvement.

A bankrupt, by English law, is the reputed owner of all property in his apparent possession.[2]

Ownership. The right by which a thing belongs to an individual, to the exclusion of all other persons.[3]

In the law of Louisiana, perfect ownership is perpetual; imperfect, such as will terminate at a certain time or on a condition being fulfilled.[4]

OXEN. See TEAM.

OYER.[5] At common law, a defendant may "crave oyer" of the writ, bond or other specialty upon which the action is brought; that is, petition to "hear" it read.[6]

The generality of defendants, in times of simplicity, being supposed incapable to read, the whole of an instrument sued upon was entered verbatim on the record. The defendant could then take advantage of any part not stated in the declaration.[6]

Oyer occurs where the plaintiff in his declaration, or the defendant in his plea, finds it necessary to make profert [production] of a deed, probate, letters of administration, or other instrument under seal, and the other party prays that it may be read to him. The effect is to make the instrument a part of the pleadings.[1]

Giving a copy, or setting forth the instrument in full,—the modern practice,—attains the end sought by oyer, as originally understood.

When the court deems that knowledge of the contents of a particular writing is proper and essential to a party to a suit, it may order that he have a copy, although the writing being unsealed is, strictly, not the subject of oyer.[2]

Oyer and terminer. Hear and terminate or determine. "Terminer" for determiner.

A court held, originally, before commissioners (of whom two were judges of the courts at Westminster) twice in every year in each county, for the trial of all charges of treason, felony, and misdemeanor.[3] Now, a court of original jurisdiction for the trial of crimes of the higher grades.

OYEZ;[4] OYES. Hear ye! give heed; attend.

Public criers began by exclaiming oyes,— corrupted into O yes![5] Still used by the criers of courts to command attention when a proclamation is about to be made. See CRIER.

OYSTER. See FISHERY; IMPROVEMENT.

P.

P. As an abbreviation, denotes page, Parliament, part, patent, penal, people, perpetual, placitum, pleas, poor, practice, precedents, president (judge), private, privy, probate, protest, public:

P. C. Patent cases; penal code; pleas of the crown; political code; practice cases; precedents in chancery.

P. h. v. Pro hac vice, for this occasion. See PRO, etc.

P. J. President judge. See JUDGE.

P. L. Pamphlet laws; poor laws; public laws.

P. M. Post meridiem, after midday. See AFTERNOON; DAY.

P. P. Propria persona, in his own person. See PROPRIUS.

---

20 Ohio St. 473; as to a homestead, 38 Mich. 168; 21 Minn. 101, 107; 2 N. M. 101; as to mechanics' liens, 3 Kan. 499; 25 N. J. E. 284; 9 N. Y. 435; 11 Barb. 13; 2 E. D. Smith, 681; 12 Abb. Pr. 129; 2 Ohio St. 114, 123; as to tax laws, 2 Gray, 189; 22 Wall. 263; as to dower, 2 Ill. 314; 3 Kan. 499; as to bailments, 2 Cranch, C. C. 83; 23 Wall. 35; as to a fire-escape, 105 Pa. 322; as to a factory, 9 Metc. 562; as to infected animals, 76 Ill. 490.

[1] Breck v. Blair, 129 Mass. 128 (1880); 133 id. 318; 18 F. R. 549, 547; Story, Partn. §§ 89, 412.

[2] See 2 Bl. Com. 488; 2 Steph. Com. 166, 200.

[3] Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. 597 (1850); Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protec. Co., 59 Pa. 477 (1858).

[4] Marshall v. Pearce, 34 La. An. 559 (1882).

[5] Pronounced ō'-yer. L. F. oyer: L. audire, to hear.

[6] [3 Bl. Com. 299.

[1] Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 436 (1857), Clifford, J.; 58 N. H. 313.

[2] Mealey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 23 F. R. 26 (1885), in which case the court refused to direct the defendant to file the application and the medical examination in the clerk's office. See also Sneed v. Wister, 8 Wheat. 695 (1823); 1 Chitty, Pl. *430.

[3] 4 Bl. Com. 269.

[4] Norm. F. oyes; oyer, to hear.

[5] See 4 Bl. Com. 340 (u).

P. S. Public statutes.

PACK. To "pack a jury" is to improperly and corruptly select a jury sworn and impaneled to try a cause.[1]

PACKAGE. See CONTENTS, 1; PARCEL, 1.

In an express receipt stipulating that if the value of the property is not disclosed the shipper will not demand more than fifty dollars for the loss of each "package," means a small parcel or bundle, the appearance of which gives no adequate information of the value. A bale of cotton is not such a package.[2]

A wagon-box in which paintings are packed for transportation was held to be a "package or parcel."[3]

As used in a revenue law, held to mean a bundle (of matches) put up for transportation or commercial handling; a thing in form to become, as such, an article of merchandise or delivery from hand to hand.[4]

PACKET. A small bundle.

Within the meaning of a prohibition against the private conveyance of letters and packets, held to include newspapers.[5]

PACT. An agreement, engagement.

In Roman law, a pact was the utmost product of the engagements of individuals agreeing among themselves, and it distinctly fell short of a contract. Whether it ultimately became a contract depended upon the question whether the law annexed an obligation to it. A contract was a pact (or convention) plus an obligation. So long as the pact remained unclothed with the obligation it was called "nude" or "naked."[6]

Nude pact. An agreement to do or pay anything on one side without compensation on the other;[7] a promise without a consideration. See CONSIDERATION, 2; PACTUM.

PACTUM. L. An agreement, engagement, pact.

Nudum pactum. An undertaking not supported by a consideration.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. From a bare agreement no action arises; no cause of action can be based upon a mere promise, without a legal consideration. See PACT.

PAIN. See DAMAGES; DECLARATION, 1.

PAINE. See PEINE.

PAINS, BILL OF. See ATTAINDER.

PAINTING. See COPYRIGHT; PRINT.

Does not include a colored working model and design for carpets and rugs, of no value as a work of art.[1]

Paintings on porcelain, and decorated china, are subject to different import duties.[2]

PAIS; PAYS. F. Country.

Cry de pais. Hue and cry raised by the country.

En or in pais. In the country; out of court; in fact: said of a matter not of record, as, an estoppel, q. v. See also DEED, 1.

Per pais. By the country, by a jury.[3] See COUNTRY, 2.

PAMPHLET. Within the meaning of post-office and copyright laws, see BOOK, 2; COPYRIGHT; OBSCENE.

Pamphlet laws. In Pennsylvania, the statutes enacted at each session (biennial) of the legislature, as issued in book form.

The official publication. Particular laws are referred to by their number, as, Act of June 3, 1887, P. L. 224.

PANDECTS. A compilation of the civil law, prepared by direction of the emperor Justinian, and issued as law, A. D. 533.

Called pandects ("all-receiving") from the multiplicity of its sources. Consists of fifty books, with numerous titles, and the matter of about nine thousand extracts, varying from a single line to several octavo pages of average size. Most of the extracts are taken from the law-writings of Ulpian, Paulus, and Papinian. The work, which is also called the Digest, forms the largest fraction of the Corpus Juris Civilis.[4]

PANEL. 1. The sheriff returns the names of jurors summoned in a panel (a little pane, or oblong piece of parchment) annexed to the writ of venire.[5]

A schedule containing the names of persons whom the sheriff returns to serve on trials.[6]

2. The body of jurors summoned and in attendance upon a court.

Includes the jurors returned upon a special venire, after the regular panel has been exhausted.[7] See TALES.

---

[1] [Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 289 (1837); 100 U. S. 309; 11 Lea, 284.

[2] Southern Express Co. v. Crook, 44 Ala. 475 (1870). But see Lamb v. Camden, &c. R. Co., 2 Daly, 480 (1869).

[3] Whaite v. Lancashire, &c. R. Co., L. R., 9 Ex. 69 (1874).

[4] United States v. Goldback, 1 Hughes, 530 (1875); R. S. § 3437.

[5] United States Mail, &c., 4 Hughes, 276 (1843).

[6] Maine, Ancient Law, 313. See Hadley, Rom. Law, 226.

[7] 2 Bl. Com. 445. See 22 Wall. 215; 107 U. S. 544; 60 Md. 436; 76 Va. 520.

[1] Woodward v. London, &c. R. Co., L. R., 3 Ex. D. 121 (1877).

[2] Arthur v. Jacoby, 103 U. S. 677 (1880).

[3] See 2 Bl. Com. 294; 3 id. 394; 4 id. 349.

[4] See Hadley, Rom. Law, 10-15; 1 Bl. Com. 82; Hare, Contr., Index.

[5] 3 Bl. Com. 353; Coke, Litt. 158 b.

[6] Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 575 (1878).

[7] People v. Coyodo, 40 Cal. 592 (1871).

Impanel; empanel. To make out the list of persons selected as jurors; to enter names on the panel.[1]

PAPER. 1. Within the meaning of the revenue law, a book is not "paper or manufacture of paper."[2]

2. In a statute against sending obscene papers, includes a letter.[3]

3. In the sense of a printed sheet or sheets containing the current news, see NEWSPAPER.

4. A commercial, business, or negotiable instrument.

Accommodation paper. See ACCOMMODATION.

Commercial paper. Paper governed by the rules established upon the customs of merchants: bills of exchange, promissory notes, negotiable bank-checks.[4]

Negotiable promissory notes and bills of exchange, in the strictest sense.[5]

Negotiable paper given in the due course of business.[6]

That class of paper which is transferable by indorsement and delivery, and between private parties is exempt, in the hands of innocent holders, from inquiry into the circumstances under which it was put into circulation.[7] See further CURRENT, 2; NEGOTIABLE.

Paper credit. Bills of exchange and promissory notes.[8]

Paper money. See TENDER, Legal.

5. In the language of the courts, has several meanings, somewhat technical.

Standing alone, "a paper" often designates a pleading or other writing rendered necessary by the contentions between the litigants.

Lawyers speak of "making out," of "serving," and of "filing papers;" and judges are said to "take the papers" in a case just argued, for use in arriving at a decision; and, before a court of error, the record includes all "papers filed" in the court below.

Paper book. A collection of the written proceedings in a cause, for the use of the court at argument, and pending subsequent deliberations.

A copy of the record delivered to the judges of a court of appeal.[1]

By ancient practice in England, on motion days the court began by calling upon the senior barristers to move, in the order of seniority. The next day the same practice was repeated; and thus it happened that sometimes weeks elapsed before the juniors could be heard. Lord Mansfield changed this practice by going through the entire bar before returning to the seniors. He also ordered that motions requiring argument should be put down on a paper (a list), which the court would go through before entering upon the general call of the bar. The days for hearing these matters became known as "paper days," and the briefs required to be furnished the judges, in analogy to the demurrer and issue books of the previous practice, were called "paper books."[2]

Paper title. Describes a claim of title which, while evidenced by one or more writings, is without substantial legal foundation or validity.

6. In a few of the States, a writing issued by a justice of the peace to a constable, directing him to do some ministerial act, as, to make a levy.[3]

7. In international and constitutional law, a document more or less formal or solemn; as, in state paper, paper blockade. See BLOCKADE.

Compare DOCUMENT; INSTRUMENT, 8; WRITING.

PAR. L. Equal; alike.

1. Par delictum. Equal fault.

Pari delicto, and in pari delicto. In equal wrong. See further DELICTUM.

Par oneri. Equal to the burden, disadvantage, damage, or detriment.

Pari causa. In equal right; upon like or equivalent footing.

Pari materia. On a like subject. See further MATERIA.

Pari passu. By equal step; at equal rate: without preference or priority, as of one creditor over another, in marshaling assets, q. v.

See INTER, Pares; PEER; UMPIRE.

2. Nominal value; face value.

"Currency at par" means currency equal to gold.[4]

---

[1] State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 175 (1846); Porter v. Cass, 7 How. Pr. 443 (1852).

[2] Pott v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 735 (1881).

[3] Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 422-25 (1885).

[4] [Re Chandler, 4 Bankr. Reg. 215 (1870), cases.

[5] Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. 593 (1874), Clifford, J.

[6] Re Sykes, 5 Biss. 114 (1870), Blodgett, J.

[7] The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 675 (1868), Miller, Justice.

[8] [2 Bl. Com. 466.

[1] [3 Bl. Com. 317.

[2] 1 Chitt. Arch. 95; Tidd, Pr. 507, 727; Steph. Pl. 95; 3 Campb. Lives Ch. J., ch. 34; Mitch. Motions & R. 26, note.

[3] See Ewart v. Davis, 76 Mo. 134 (1882); 41 Ind. 333

[4] Crim v. Sellers, 37 Ga. 326 (1867); 63 N. C. 147.

"Par bank notes" imply a state of equality or equal value; an equality of actual with nominal value.[1]

"Par value" implies a dollar in money for every dollar in security.[2]

"At par," "above par," and "below par" denote, respectively, (1) at face or nominal value; (2) higher than nominal value, that is, at a premium; and (3) below nominal value, that is, at a discount. See EXCHANGE, 2.

PARAFFINE. See DISTILLERY.

PARALLEL. Compare ALONG.

For two lines of street railroad to be parallel, within the meaning of a statute, it may not be necessary that the routes should be parallel for the whole length of each or of either route. Substantial parallelism may be all that is contemplated.[3]

PARAMOUNT.[4] Above, higher, superior, pre-eminent.

As, a paramount equity, incumbrance, title — the origin and source of another title, as, the title of a landlord in comparison with that of his tenant. Compare PARAVAIL.

The Constitution and laws of the United States are said to be of paramount importance.[5]

PARAPHERNALIA.[6] The apparel and ornaments of a wife, suitable to her rank and degree.[7]

A term borrowed from the civil law.

Paraphernal. Pertaining to paraphernalia; also, to property declared to be given the wife in consideration of the marriage.[8]

At common law, such articles as constituted the wife's paraphernalia she became absolutely entitled to at the death of her husband, over and above her jointure or dower, and in preference to all other representatives. The husband could not bequeath, although he might sell or give them away. After his death, the wife retained them against all persons, except creditors when there was a deficiency of assets and the apparel and ornaments were not of a necessary kind.[9]

In the United States, the continued ownership and enjoyment of all of a married woman's separate property are secured to her by legislation.[9] See HUSBAND; SEPARATE, 2.

PARAVAIL.[10] Downward; inferior, subordinate: as, a title paravail, a tenant paravail. Opposed, paramount, q. v. See FEUD.

PARCEL. 1. A small bundle or package, q. v.

In an indictment, may not sufficiently describe property alleged to have been stolen.[1]

2. A piece of land of indeterminate extent, but usually not large; a lot of ground.[2]

Within the meaning of a tax law, held to apply to a whole section of land.[3]

PARCENER. See COPARCENARY.

PARCHMENT. Sheepskin dressed for writing.

Formerly, extensively used for preserving evidence of grants and commissions issued by government, of judicial records, and of private conveyances of property. See RECORD, Judicial; WRITING.

PARDON.[3] Forgiveness, release, remission.[4]

An act of grace, proceeding from the power entrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual, on whom it is bestowed, from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed.[5]

An act of grace by which an offender is released from the consequences of his offense, so far as such release is practicable and within the control of the pardoning power.[6]

In the form of a deed, to the validity of which there must be both a delivery and acceptance.[6]

Absolute pardon. Frees the offender without condition. Conditional pardon. Has a condition annexed, on the performance of which the validity depends.[7]

General pardon. Extends to all offenders — of one or more classes; amnesty. Special or particular pardon. Relieves one individual only.

"Pardon" is a remission of guilt; "amnesty," oblivion or forgetfulness.[8]

"The President . . shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment."[9]

---

[1] Bachman v. Roller, 9 Baxt. 410 (1877).

[2] Delafield v. Illinois, 26 Wend. 234 (1841); 22 Pa. 480.

[3] Cronin v. Highland Street R'y Co., 144 Mass. 254 (1887).

[4] F. par amount, by what is above, at the top.

[5] 1 Black, 23; 2 id. 500; 92 U. S. 33; 100 id. 384, 386, 392, 397, 399, 605; 101 id. 451, 452.

[6] Gk. pará, beyond, pherna, pherné, what is brought — dowery: pherein, to bring.

[7] [2 Bl. Com. 436.

[8] See Cambre v. Grabert, 33 La. An. 247 (1881).

[9] 4 Ired. L. 301; 48 N. Y. 212; 74 id. 116.

[10] F. par, by, avaler, to descend, be under; or par avails, by the avails — referring to the person who got the profits of the land.

[1] Regina v. Bonner, 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 18 (1855).

[2] Martin v. Cole, 38 Iowa, 141, 147 (1874).

[3] F. pardon: L. L. per-donare, to remit a debt, forgive.

[4] Exp. Wells, 18 How. 309-12 (1855), cases, Wayne, J.

[5] United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 160 (1833), Marshall, C. J.

[6] Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 158 (1877), cases, Field, J. See also 44 Ga. 361; 43 N. J. L. 241; 24 Tex. Ap. 79.

[7] [4 Bl. Com. 398; 8 Biss. 323-26; 48 Iowa, 264.

[8] Exp. Law, 35 Ga. 296 (1866). See generally 5 Cr. Law Mag. 457-600 (1885), cases.

[9] Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 1.

This includes the power to commute sentences.[1]

In the Constitution, the word "pardon" conveys the idea of the power exercised by the English crown, or by its representatives in the colonies: "a work of mercy, whereby the king, either before attainder, sentence or conviction, or after, forgiveth any crime, offense, punishment, execution, right, title, debt or duty, temporal or ecclesiastical."[2]

An absolute pardon releases the offender from all disabilities imposed by the offense, and restores him to all his civil rights. In contemplation of law, the pardon so far blots out the offense that afterward it cannot be imputed to him to prevent the assertion of his legal rights,— gives him a new credit and capacity, and rehabilitates him to that extent in his former position. It does not make amends for the past, nor afford relief for what has been suffered by imprisonment, forced labor, or otherwise.[3]

The king could not by previous license make dispunishable an offense malum in se; nor release a recognizance to keep the peace; nor discharge an informer's moiety; nor remit a forfeiture to the aggrieved; nor relieve from punishment for maintaining a common nuisance. The exercise of such a power would have been against reason and the common good.[4]

A pardon may be granted before conviction. The power in the President, except in cases of impeachment, is unlimited, extends to every offense known to the law, and is not subject to legislative control.[5]

Grantable before indictment;[6] and then pleadable in bar,[7] in arrest of judgment,[8] or in stay of execution.[9] Void, if the sovereign was deceived. Construed beneficially for the offender. Allowed for all offenses, except when private justice is chiefly concerned; as, in a common nuisance, which is in the nature of a private injury to individuals, the prosecution being vested in the state to avoid multiplicity of suits. But no pardon can be granted after an information is made upon a penal statute in which the informer acquires a property in the penalty; nor in cases of legislative impeachment. When lawful, makes the offender a new man; acquits him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures; operates not so much to restore his former, as to give him a new, credit and capacity.[10]

Although pardon restores to competency as a witness one convicted of felony, the conviction may still be used to affect his credit.[10]

See ACCOMPLICE; REPRIEVE; RESPITE.

PARENS. L. A parent; a father.

In loco parentis. In the place of the parent.

Said of a person invested with the rights and charged with the duties of the parent of a child, as, a guardian, and, in some sense, a teacher, and the faculty of a school.[1]

Parens patriæ. Father of the country. In England, the sovereign; in the United States, the state.

The sovereign is, theoretically, guardian over all infants and committee over all lunatics.

As much of the royal prerogative as belonged to the king in his capacity of universal trustee enters into our political state as into the principles of the British constitution.[2]

PARENT. The lawful father, or the mother, of another person. Compare PARENS.

Parent and child. The relation or status subsisting between father, or mother, and offspring; as, in speaking of the law of parent and child.[3]

There is no implied contract on the part of a father to pay wages to a child that remains with him and renders him service after becoming of age. The child must show an express contract, before recovery can be had.[4]

See ANCESTOR; CHILD; CONFESSION, 2; FATHER; GUARDIAN; INFANT.

PARES. See PEER.

PARI. See PAR, 1.

PARISH.[5] 1. A circuit of ground committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having the cure of souls therein.[6] Whence parochial.

A corporation established solely for the purpose of maintaining public worship.[7]

Parish church. A select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association; also, the building in which the public worship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrated.[8]

A "parochial church" is a consecrated place, having attached to it the right of burial and the administration of the sacraments.[9]

2. In Louisiana, a division of the State known elsewhere as a "county," q. v.

Parish court. A local court in one of the parishes of that State.

PARK. 1. In English law, an inclosed chase, extending over a man's own grounds;

[1] Exp. Wells, ante.
[2] Exp. Wells, ante: Coke, 3 Inst. 233.
[3] Knote v. United States, ante.
[4] Exp. Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 380 (1866), cases, Field, J.
[5] 4 Bl. Com. 316.
[6] 4 Bl. Com. 337.
[7] 4 Bl. Com. 376.
[8] 4 Bl. Com. 402.
[9] 4 Bl. Com. 398–402; 28 Pa. 297.
[10] Bennett v. State, 24 Tex. Ap. 79 (1887).

[1] See 1 Bl. Com. 460; 24 N. J. L. 683; 19 Ves. 412.
[2] Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 239 (1873); New York Life Ins. Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 432 (1880); 17 How. 393; 3 Bl. Com. 427; 4 Kent, 508.
[3] See 1 Bl. Com. 446; 3 id. 140.
[4] Byrnes v. Clark, 57 Wis. 21 (1883), cases.
[5] Gk. paroikia, neighborhood, district.
[6] [1 Bl. Com. 111.
[7] Inhabitants of Milford v Godfrey, 1 Pick. 97 (1822); Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 499 (1820).
[8] Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 292 (1815), Story, J.

literally, an inclosure.[1] See ANIMAL; GAME, 1.

2. An inclosed place in a city or village, set apart for ornament or to afford the benefits of air, exercise, or amusement.[2]

A piece of ground adapted and set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement. It is not a street or road, though carriages may pass through it.[3]

In the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the wer to take private property for a public park is not open question. The judgment of the legislature as the existence of the public necessity, when fairly ercised, is not revisable by the courts.[4] See COMMON, Right of; DEDICATION, 1; SQUARE.

PARLIAMENT.[5] The supreme legislature of Great Britain, consisting of the queen, or king, the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons.

Assembles, at the queen's summons, at least once in three years. Each constituent has a negative in making laws. The powers are absolute. Each house judges of its own privileges. Members are entitled to the privileges of speech, person, domestics, and property. The distinctive duties of the house of lords are to sit as a court of review, and to mature bills affecting the peerage. The distinctive duties of the house of commons are to impose taxes, to vote money for the public service, and to determine matters concerning the election of its members. Bills are read twice in each house, committed, engrossed, and then read a third time. Concurrence in the three branches makes a bill a law. The houses may "adjourn" themselves; but the queen alone can "prorogue" (postpone) or "dissolve" parliament.[6] See CONTEMPT, 2; HOUSE, 2; KING.

PARLOR CAR. See CARRIER, Common; SLEEPING-CAR.

PAROCHIAL. See PARISH, 1.

PAROL.[7] 1. Anciently, the pleadings in a cause were viva voce, and thence called "the parol." See ORE TENUS.

2. Not committed to writing: that is, oral, verbal; also, written but not sealed.

At common law prior to the Statute of Frauds, no distinction was made between an agreement by word of mouth and an agreement in writing without a seal.

"Oral" and "verbal" are less comprehensive.

