QUANTUM TENENS DOMINO EX HOMAGIO, tantum dominus tenenti ex dominio debet praeter solam reverentiam; mutua debet esse domini et homagii fidei tatis connexio. As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual. Co. Litt. 64.

QUANTUM VALEBAT (Lat. as much as it was worth). In pleading. When goods are sold without specifying any price, the law implies a promise from the buyer to the seller that he will pay him for them as much as they were worth.

The plaintiff may, in such case, suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as the said goods were worth, and then aver that they were worth so much, which the defendant has refused to pay. See the authorities cited under the article "Quantum Meruit."

QUARANTINE

—In Maritime Law. The space of forty days, or less, during which the crew of a ship or vessel coming from a port or place infected or supposed to be infected with disease are required to remain on board after their arrival, before they can be permitted to land.

The term is applied in modern usage to any isolation by law of infected persons or places.

—In Real Property. The space of forty days, during which a widow has a right to remain in her late husband's principal mansion immediately after his death. The right of the widow is also called her "quarantine."

QUARE (Lat.) In pleading. Wherefore.

This word is sometimes used in the writ in certain actions, but is inadmissible in a material averment in the pleadings, for it is merely interrogatory; and therefore, when a declaration began with complaining of the defendant, "wherefore with force, etc., he broke and entered" the plaintiff's close, it was considered ill. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (B 5, 4); Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See "Trespass."

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM. See "Ejectment."

QUARE IMPEDIT (Lat. why he hinders). In English law. A real possessory action which can be brought only in the court of common pleas, and lies to recover a presentation when the patron's right is disturbed, or to try a disputed title to an advowson. See "Disturbance;" Mireh. Advowson, 265; 2 Saund. 336a.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT (Lat. why he incumbered). A writ or action which lay against a bishop after judgment in an action quare impedit, where he had incumbered the church with a clerk pending the action. 3 Bl. Comm. 248.

QUARE INTRUSIT (Lat. why he intruded). A writ that formerly lay where the lord proffered a suitable marriage to his ward, who rejected it, and entered into the land, and married another, the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

QUARE NON ADMISIT (Lat. wherefore he did not admit). A writ to recover damages against a bishop who does not admit a plaintiff's clerk. It is, however, rarely or never necessary; for it is said that a bishop, refusing to execute the writ ad admittendum clericum, or making an insufficient return to it, may be fined. Watson, Cler. Law, 302.

QUARE NON PERMITTIT. An ancient writ, which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn against the proprietary. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 6.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT. (Lat. why he obstructs.) The name of a writ formerly used in favor of one who, having a right to pass through his neighbor's grounds, was prevented enjoying such right, because the owner of the grounds had obstructed the way.

QUARREL. A dispute; a difference. In law, particularly in releases, which are taken most strongly against the releasor, when a man releases all quarrel he is said to release all actions, real and personal. 8 Coke, 153.

QUARRY. A place whence stones are dug for the purpose of being employed in building, making roads, and the like.

When a farm is let with an open quarry, the tenant may, when not restrained by his contract, take out the stone; but he has no right to open new quarries. See "Waste."

QUARTER DAYS. The four days of the year on which rent payable quarterly becomes due.

QUARTER SALES. In New York a certain fraction of the purchase money is often conditioned to be paid back on alienation of the estate; and this fine on alienation is expressed as a "tenth sales," a "quarter sales," etc. 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 285; 7 Hill (N. Y.) 253; 7 N. Y. 490.

QUARTER SEAL. In Scotch law. The seal kept by the director of the chancery in Scotland is so called. It is in the shape and impression of the fourth part of the great seal. Bell, Dict.

QUARTER SESSIONS. A court bearing this name, mostly invested with the trial of criminals. It takes its name from sitting quarterly, or once in three months.

The English courts of quarter sessions were erected during the reign of Edward III. See St. 36 Edw. III.; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 278.

QUARTER YEAR. In the computation of time, a quarter year consists of ninety-one days. Co. Litt. 135b; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, lib. 40; Rev. St. N. Y. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3.

QUARTERING. A barbarous punishment formerly inflicted on criminals by tearing them to pieces by means of four horses, one attached to each limb.

QUARTERING OF SOLDIERS. Furnishing soldiers with board or lodging or both. Const. U. S. Amend. art. 3, provides that "no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

QUARTEROON. One who has had one of his grandparents of the black or African race.

QUARTO DIE POST (Lat. fourth day after). Appearance day, which is the fourth day inclusive from the return of the writ; and if the person summoned appears on that day, it is sufficient. On this day, also, the court begins to sit for despatch of business. These three days were originally given as an indulgence. 3 Bl. Comm. 278; Tidd, New Prac. 134. But this practice is now altered. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.

QUASH. In practice. To overthrow or annul.

Distinguished from "dismiss." The term "quash," as applied to writs, is predicated of some defect in the writ itself, or in the form of the writ, which defect does not reach the merits of the case; the usual practice being to grant a new writ on the original petition. Dismissal is applied to the removal or disposal of the cause itself, and not to the mere annulment of the writ. 24 Miss. 457.

QUASHAL. The act of quashing.

QUASI (Lat. as if; almost). A term used to mark a resemblance, and which supposes a little difference between two objects. Dig. 11. 7. 1. 8. 1; 60 Ill. 402. Civilians use the expressions quasi contractus, quasi delictum, quasi possessio, quasi traditio, etc.

QUASI AFFINITY. In civil law. The affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to the kindred of the other, but who have never been married. For example, my brother is betrothed to Maria, and afterwards, before marriage, he dies. There then exists between Maria and me a quasi affinity.

The history of England furnishes an example of this kind. Catherine of Arragon was betrothed to the brother of Henry VIII. Afterwards, Henry married her, and under the pretense of this quasi affinity he repudiated her, because the marriage was incestuous.

QUASI CONTRACT. A liability similar to that created by contract, but not really arising by the consent of the parties.

Quasi contracts are said to be founded in general.

(1) On a record, as the liability on a judgment.

(2) On a statutory, official, or customary duty, as the obligation of a husband for necessaries furnished his wife, even against his orders; or the liability of a vessel for half pilotage on refusing the first pilot offering himself. 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450.

(3) On the doctrine that no one shall be permitted to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another; as the liability of an infant to pay for necessaries (141 Mass. 530), or the liability to repay money paid by mistake (Keener, Quasi Cont. 16).

The distinction between "quasi contract" and "implied contract" appears to be one of degree, rather than of principle. It has been said that implied contract extends to those cases where there was an intent to contract, or at least no intent not to contract; but in many cases commonly assigned to implied contracts, the only evidence of intent to contract is in the imputed knowledge that the law would impose a given liability, and this element is absent from but few quasi contracts. On the other hand, the test of definite intention not to contract would exclude many liabilities properly classified as quasi contractual, e. g., that for money paid by mistake.

It may be said, generally, that quasi contracts embrace those cases where there was a positive intention not to contract, and cases where there was no intent to contract, and the party was more remote from any inferred intent than in cases of implied contract, but the exact line of demarcation cannot, in the present state of legal nomenclature, be drawn.

QUASI CONTRACTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The act of a person, permitted by law, by which he obligates himself towards another, or by which another binds himself to him, without any agreement between them.

By article 2272 of the Civil Code of Louisiana, which is translated from article 1371 of the Code Civil, quasi contracts are defined to be "the lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties." In contracts, it is the consent of the contracting parties which produces the obligation; in quasi contracts no consent is required, and the obligation arises from the law or natural equity, on the facts of the case. These acts are called "quasi contracts" because, without being contracts, they bind the parties as contracts do.

Bracton makes use of the term "quasi ex contractu," and includes contracts that impliedly arise from the relations of agency, wardship, the division of common property, the distribution of an inheritance, an action growing out of a testament, a suit to require a sum paid not due, and such like. 253 Ill. 173.

There is no term in the common law which answers to that of "quasi contract." Many quasi contracts may doubtless be classed among "implied contracts." There is, however, a difference to be noticed. For example, in case money should be paid by mistake to a minor, it may be recovered from him by the civil law, because his consent is not necessary to a quasi contract; but by the common law, if it can be recovered, it must be upon an agreement to which the law presumes he has consented, and it is doubtful, upon principle, whether such recovery could be had.

Quasi contracts may be multiplied almost to infinity. They are, however, divided into five classes,—such as relate to the voluntary and spontaneous management of the affairs of another, without authority (negotiorum gestio); the administration of tutorship; the management of common property (communio bonorum); the acquisition of an inheritance; and the payment of a sum of money or other thing by mistake, when nothing was due (indebiti solutio).

Each of these quasi contracts has an affinity with some contract. Thus, the management of the affairs of another without authority, and tutorship, are compared to a mandate; the community of property, to a partnership; the acquisition of an inheritance, to a stipulation; and the payment of a thing which is not due, to a loan.

QUASI CORPORATIONS. A term applied to those bodies which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized by statutes or immemorial usage as persons or corporations aggregate, with power to sue and be sued in their aggregate capacity. 2 Kent, Comm. 274; 9 Mass. 247; 1 Me. 361.

A body having capacity to make contracts in respect to county affairs, and having perpetual succession, is a quasi corporation (2 Wall. [U. S.] 501), e. g., the overseers of the poor (18 Johns. [N. Y.] 407).

QUASI DELICT. In civil law. An act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, causes injury to another.

A quasi delict may be public or private. The neglect of the affairs of a community, when it is our duty to attend to them, may be a crime; the neglect of a private matter, under similar circumstances, may be the ground of a civil action. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, c. 43, p. 265.

QUASI DEPOSIT. A kind of involuntary bailment, which takes place where a person acquires possession of property lawfully, by finding. Story, Bailm. § 85.

QUASI EASEMENT. An "easement," in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor's land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a "quasi easement." Gale, Easem. 516.

QUASI ENTAIL. A quasi entail exists when an estate pur autre vie is limited to a person and the heirs of his body.

QUASI EX CONTRACTU. See "Quasi Contractus."

QUASI FEE. An estate gained by wrong; for wrong is unlimited and uncontained within rules. Wharton.

QUASI OFFENSES, or QUASI CRIMES. Wrongs against the general or local public which have not been declared crimes (68 Ill. 375); e. g., bastardy proceedings, which are commonly said to be quasi criminal.

Offenses for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is responsible, the perpetrator being presumed to act by command of the responsible party.

Injuries which have been unintentionally caused.

QUASI PARTNERS. Partners of lands, goods, or chattels, who are not actual partners, are sometimes so called. Poth. de Societe, Append. note 184. See "Part Owners."

QUASI PERSONALTY. Things which are movable in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblements (fructus industriales), fixtures, etc., or fictitiously, as chattels real, leases for years, etc.

QUASI POSSESSION. Such use as is to a right what possession is to a thing. When the enjoyment is exercised by means of possession of the thing, which is the subject of the right, the idea of quasi possession does not arise, and the term is confined to those rights which merely give a limited power of using the thing, as in case of easements. The term is little used, "enjoyment" being more frequently employed.

QUASI POSTHUMOUS CHILD. In civil law. One who, born during the life of his grandfather or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who, by the death of his father, became his heir in his lifetime. Inst. 2. 13. 2; Dig. 28. 3. 13.

QUASI PURCHASE. This term is used in the civil law to denote that a thing is to be considered as purchased from the presumed consent of the owner of a thing; as, if a man should consume a cheese, which is in his possession and belonging to another, with an intent to pay the price of it to the owner, the consent of the latter will be presumed, as the cheese would have been spoiled by keeping it longer. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 691.

QUASI REALTY. Things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but movable in themselves, as heirlooms (or limbs of the inheritance), title deeds, court rolls, etc. Wharton.

QUASI TENANT AT SUFFERANCE. An under tenant, who is in possession at the determination of an original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over.

QUASI TORT. Though not a recognized term of English law, it may be conveniently used in those cases where a man who has not committed a tort is liable as if he had. Thus, a master is liable for wrongful acts done by his servant in the course of his employment. Broom, Com. Law, 690; Underh. Torts, 29. Austin rejects "quasi torts," or "quasi delict," altogether. Austin, Jur. 959.

QUASI-TRADITIO (Lat.) In civil law. A term used to designate that a person is in the use of the property of another, which the latter suffers and does not oppose. Lec. Elm. § 396. It also signifies the act by which the right of property is ceded in a thing to a person who is in possession of it; as, if I loan a boat to Paul, and deliver it to him, and afterwards I sell him the boat, it is not requisite that he should deliver the boat to me to be again delivered to him. There is a quasi tradition or delivery.

QUASI TRUSTEE. A person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee. Lewin, Trusts (4th Ed.) 592, 638.

QUASI USUFRUCT. In the civil law. A name given to a usufructuary interest in consumable things. See "Usufruct."

QUATER COUSIN. "The very name of cater, or (as it is more properly written) quater cousins, is grown into a proverb, to express, by way of irony, the last and most trivial degree of intimacy and regard." Bl. Law Tr. 6.

QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT (Law Lat.) Runs upon four feet; runs upon all fours. A term used to denote an exact correspondence. See "All Fours." Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit, no simile holds in everything. Co. Litt. 3a. "It does not follow that they (a trust and an equity of redemption) run quatuor pedibus." 1 W. Bl. 145.

QUATUORVIRI (Lat. four men). In Roman law. Magistrates who had the care and inspection of roads. Dig. 1. 2. 3. 30.

QUAY. A wharf at which to load or land goods. Sometimes spelled "key."

In its enlarged sense, the word "quay" means the whole space between the first row of houses of a city and the sea or river. 5 La. 152, 215. So much of the quay as is requisite for the public use of loading and unloading vessels is public property, and cannot be appropriated to private use, but the rest may be private property.

QUE EST MESME (Law Fr.) Which is the same. See "Quae est Eadem."

QUE ESTATE (Lat. quem statum, or which estate). A plea by which a man prescribes in himself and those whose estate he holds. 2 Bl. Comm. 270; 18 Viner, Abr. 133-140; Co. Litt. 121a; Hardr. 459; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 499.

QUEAN. A worthless woman; a strumpet. The meaning of this word, which is now seldom used, is said not to be well ascertained. 2 Rolle, Abr. 296; Bac. Abr. "Slander" (U 3).

QUEEN. A female sovereign.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. By St. 2 Anne, c. 11, all the revenue of first fruit and tenths was vested in trustees forever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Bl. Comm. 286; 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 260-268.

QUEEN CONSORT. The wife of a reigning king. 1 Bl. Comm. 218. She is looked upon by the law as a feme sole, as to her power of contracting, suing, etc. Id.

QUEEN DOWAGER. The widow of the king. She has most of the privileges belonging to a queen consort. 1 Bl. Comm. 229.

QUEEN GOLD. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who has made a voluntary fine or offer to the king of ten marks or upwards, in consideration of any grant or privilege conferred by the crown. It is due of record on the recording of the fine. It was last exacted in the reign of Charles I. It is now quite obsolete. 1 Bl. Comm. 220-222; Fortesc. de Laud. 398; Jacob.

QUEEN REGNANT. She who holds the crown in her own right. She has the same duties and prerogatives, etc., as a king. St. 1 Mar. I. st. 3, c. 1; 1 Bl. Comm. 218; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 94.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) ADVOCATE. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i. e., he acts as counsel for the crown is ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence, it seems that he ranks after the attorney general. 3 Steph. Comm. 275, note; Man. S. ad L. 19 Append. IV.

QUEEN'S BENCH. The English court of king's bench is so called during the reign of a queen. 3 Steph. Comm. 403.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) COUNSEL. In English law. Barristers called within the bar, and selected to be the queen's (or king's) counsel, learned in the law; answering in some measure to the advocates of the revenue (advocati fisci) among the Romans. They cannot be employed in any cause against the crown, without special license. 3 Bl. Comm. 27; 3 Steph. Comm. 386.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) EVIDENCE. Testimony of an accomplice in a felony, admitted as evidence for the crown against his accomplices. 4 Steph. Comm. 398. See "State's Evidence."

QUEEN'S PRISON. In English law. A prison appropriated to the debtors and criminals confined under process, or by authority of the superior courts at Westminster, the Marshalsea court and Palace court, and the high court of admiralty, and also to persons imprisoned under the bankrupt law. It was established by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, consolidating into one the queen's bench, the Fleet, and the Marshalsea prisons. 3 Steph. Comm. 254.

QUEM REDDITUM REDDIT. A real action, by which the grantee of a rent could compel the tenants to atton to him.

QUEMADMODUM AD QUESTIONEM facti non respondent iudices, ita ad questionem juris non respondent juratores. In the same manner that judges do not answer to questions of fact, so jurors do not answer to questions of law. Co. Litt. 295.

QUERELA (Lat.) An action preferred in any court of justice. The plaintiff was called querens, or complainant, and his brief, complaint, or declaration was called querela. Jacob. See "Audita Querela."

QUERELA CORAM REGE A CONCILIO discutienda et terminanda. A writ by which one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUERELA INOFFICIOSI TESTAMENTI (Lat. complaint of an undutiful or unkind will). In civil law. A species of action allowed to a child who had been unjustly disinherited, to set aside the will, founded on the presumption of law, in such cases, that the parent was not in his right mind. Calv. Lex.; 2 Kent, Comm. 327; Bell, Dict.

QUERENS (Lat. from queri, to complain). In old English practice. A plaintiff; the plaintiff or complaining party. Bracton, fols. 98b, 214, 240, et passim; 8 Coke, 153b. The complaining party in a personal action; as petens (demandant) was, in a real action. Actor, sive sit petens sive querens. Bracton, fol. 106b. But querens was used in assizes. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7.

QUESTA (Law Lat.) In old records. A quest; an inquest, inquisition, or inquiry, upon the oaths of an impanelled jury. Cowell.

QUESTION.

—In Old Criminal Law. A means sometimes employed in some countries, by torture, to compel supposed great criminals to disclose their accomplices or to acknowledge their crimes.

This torture is called "question" because, as the unfortunate person accused is made to suffer pain, he is asked questions as to his supposed crime or accomplices. This is unknown in the United States. See Poth. Proc. Crim. sec. 5, art. 2, § 3.

—In Evidence. An interrogation put to a witness, requesting him to declare the truth of certain facts as far as he knows them.

Questions are either general or leading. By a general question is meant such a one as requires the witness to state all he knows, without any suggestion being made to him; as, "Who gave the blow?" A leading question is one which leads the mind of the witness to the answer, or suggests it to him; as, "Did A. B. give the blow?"

The Romans called a question by which the fact or supposed fact which the interrogator expected or wished to find asserted in and by the answer was made known to the proposed respondent a "suggestive" interrogation; as, "Is not your name A. B.?" See "Leading Question."

—In Practice. A point on which the parties are not agreed, and which is submitted to the decision of a judge and jury.

When the doubt or difference arises as to what the law is on a certain state of facts, this is said to be a "legal question;" and when the party demurs, this is to be decided by the court. When it arises as to the truth or falsehood of facts, this is a "question of fact," and is to be decided by the jury.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS. A writ of nuisance which lay against one who acquired, by descent or alienation, the thing which caused the nuisance. It was given by 15 Edw. I. Formerly only the person causing it was liable. Cowell.

QUI ABJURAT REGNUM AMITTIT REGNUM, sed non regem; patriam, sed non patriam patriae. He who abjures the realm leaves the realm, but not the king; the country, but not the father of the country. 7 Coke, 9.

QUI ACCUSAT INTEGRAE FAMAE SIT et non criminosus. Let him who accuses be of clear fame, and not criminal. 3 Inst. 26.

QUI ACQUIRIT SIBI ACQUIRIT HAEREDIBUS. He who acquires for himself acquires for his heirs. Tray. Lat. Max. 496.

QUI ADIMIT MEDIUM DIRIMIT FINEM. He who takes away the means destroys the end. Co. Litt. 161.

QUI ALIQUID STATUERIT PARTE INAUDITA ALTERA, aequum licet dixerit, haud aequum facerit. He who decides anything, a party being unheard, though he should decide right, does wrong. 6 Coke, 52; 4 Bl. Comm. 483.

QUI ALTERIUS JURE UTITUR, EODEM jure uti debet. He who uses the right of another ought to use the same right. Poth. Tr. de Change, pt. 1, c. 4, § 114; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 421.

QUI APPROBAT NON REPROBAT. He who approbates does not reprobate, i. e., he cannot both accept and reject the same thing.

QUI BENE DISTINGUIT BENE DOCET. He who distinguishes well, learns well. 2 Inst. 470.

QUI BENE INTERROGAT BENE DOCET. He who questions well, learns well. 3 Bulst. 227.

QUI CADIT A SYLLABA CADIT A TOTA causa. He who falls in a syllable falls in his whole cause. Bracton, fol. 211; St. Wales, 12 Edw. I.; 3 Bl. Comm. 407.

QUI CONCEDIT ALIQUID; CONCEDERE videtur et id sine quo concessio est irrita, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. He who grants anything is considered as granting that without which his grant would be idle, without which the thing itself could not exist. 11 Coke, 52; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 32.

QUI CONFIRMAT NIHIL DAT. He who confirms does not give. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2069.

QUI CONTEMNIT PRAECEPTUM CONTEMNIT PRAECEPTUM. He who contemns the precept contemns the party giving it. 12 Coke, 96.

QUI CUM ALIO CONTRAHIT, VEL EST, vel debet esse non ignarus conditionis ejus. He who contracts knows, or ought to know, the quality of the person with whom he contracts, otherwise he is not excusable. Dig. 50. 17. 19; 2 Hagg. Consist.; Story, Conf. Laws, § 76.

QUI DAT FINEM DAT MEDIA AD FINEM necessaria. He who gives an end gives the means to that end. 3 Mass. 129.

QUI DESTRUIT MEDIUM DESTRUIT FINEM. He who destroys the means destroys the end. 11 Coke, 51; Shep. Touch. 342; Co. Litt. 161a.

QUI DOIT INHERITER AL PERE DOIT inheriter al filz. He who ought to inherit from the father ought to inherit from the son. 2 Bl. Comm. 250, 273; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 459.

QUI EVERTIT CAUSAM EVERTIT CAUSAM futurum. He who overthrows the cause overthrows its future effects. 10 Coke, 51.

QUI EX DAMNATO COITU NASCUNTUR inter liberos non computentur. They who are born of an illicit union should not be counted among children. Co. Litt. 8. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 289; Bracton, 5; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 460.

QUI FACIT ID QUOD PLUS EST FACIT id quod minus est, sed non convertitur. He who does that which is more does that which is less, but not vice versa. Bracton, 207b.

QUI FACIT PER ALIUM FACIT PER SE. He who acts by or through another acts himself; i. e., the acts of an agent are the acts of the principal. 1 Bl. Comm. 429; Story, Ag. § 440; 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1273, 1335, 1336; 7 Man. & G. 32, 33; 16 Mees. & W. 26; 8 Scott, N. R. 590; 6 Clark & F. 600; 10 Mass. 155.

QUI HABET JURISDICTIONEM ABSOLVENDI Habet jurisdictionem ligandi. He who has jurisdiction to loosen has jurisdiction to bind. 12 Coke, 59.

QUI HAERET IN LITERA HAERET IN cortice. He who adheres to the letter adheres to the bark. Co. Litt. 289; 5 Coke, 4b; 11 Coke, 34b; 12 East, 372.

QUI IGNORAT QUANTUM SOLVERE DEBEAT non potest improbus videre. He who does not know what he ought to pay does not want probity in not paying. Dig. 50. 17. 99.

QUI IN JUS DOMINIUMVE ALTERIUS succedit jure ejus uti debet. He who succeeds to the right or property of another ought to use his right, i. e., holds it subject to the same rights and liabilities as attached to it in the hands of the assignor. Dig. 50. 17. 177; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 420, 425.

QUI IN UTERO EST PRO JAM NATO HABETUR quoties de ejus commodo quaeritur. He who is in the womb is considered as born whenever his benefit is concerned.

QUI JURE SUO UTITUR NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. He who uses his legal rights harms no one.

QUI JUSSU JUDICIS ALIQUOD FECERIT non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. He who does anything by command of a judge will not be supposed to have acted from an improper motive, because it was necessary to obey. 10 Coke, 76; Dig. 50. 17. 167. 1.

QUI MALE AGIT ODIAT LUCEM. He who acts badly hates the light. 7 Coke, 66.

QUI MANDAT IPSE FECISSE VIDETUR. He who commands a thing to be done is held to have done it himself. Story, Bailm. § 147.

QUI MELIUS PROBAT MELIUS HABET. He who proves most recovers most. 9 Viner, Abr. 235.

QUI TACET CONSENTIRE VIDETUR UBI TRACTATUR DE EJUS COMMODO. He who is silent is considered as assenting, when his advantage is debated. 9 Mod. 38.

QUI TACET NON UTIQUE FATETUR, SED TAMEN VERUM EST EUM NON NEGARE. He who is silent does not indeed confess, but yet it is true that he does not deny. Dig. 50. 17. 142.

QUI TAM (Lat. who as well). An action under a statute which imposes a penalty for the doing or not doing an act, and gives that penalty in part to whosoever will sue for the same, and the other part to the commonwealth, or some charitable, literary, or other institution, and makes it recoverable by action. The plaintiff describes himself as suing as well for the commonwealth, for example, as for himself. Esp. Pen. Actions. 5, 6; 1 Viner, Abr. 197; 1 Salk. 29, note; Bac. Abr.

QUI TARDIUS SOLVIT MINUS SOLVIT. He who pays tardily pays less than he ought. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 38.

QUI TIMENT CAVENT ET VITANT. They who fear take care and avoid. Off. Ex. 162; Branch, Princ.

QUI TOTUM DICIT NIHIL EXCIPIT. He who says all excepts nothing.

QUI VULT DECIPI, DECIPIATUR. Let him who wishes to be deceived be deceived. De Gex, M. & G. 687, 710; Shep. Touch. 56.

QUIA (Lat.) In pleading. Because. This word is considered a term of affirmation. It is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117, note 4; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 77).

QUIA DATUM EST NOBIS INTELLIGI. Because it is given to us to understand. Formal words in old writs. Rat. Parl. 4 Hen. IV.

QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM (Law Lat.) In old practice. Because the lord hath remised or remitted his court. A clause inserted at the conclusion of a writ of right, where it was brought, in the first instance, in the king's court; the lord in whose court baron it regularly ought to be first brought having waived or remitted his right. 3 Bl. Comm. 195; Id. Append. No. i § 4.

QUIA EMPTORES (Lat. because the purchasers). The title of St. Westminster III. (18 Edw. I. c. 1), which provided that from thenceforth it should be lawful for every freeman or freeholder to sell his lands or tenements or part thereof at his pleasure, so that, however, the feoffee should hold such lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by the same services and customs by which his feoffor before held them. So called from its initial words: Quia emptores terrarum et tenementorum de feodis magnatum, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 91; Barr. Obs. St. 167. See the New York case, 2 Seld. 467.

QUIA ERRONICE EMANAVIT. Because it issued erroneously, or through mistake. A term in old English practice. Yelv. 83

QUIA TIMET (Lat. because he fears). A term applied to preventive or anticipatory remedies. According to Lord Coke, "there be six writs of law that may be maintained quia timet, before any molestation, distress, or impleading; as, first, a man may have his writ or mesne before he be distrained; second, a warrantia chartae, before he be impleaded; third, a monstraverunt, before any distress or vexation; fourth, an audita querela, before any execution sued; fifth, a curia claudenda, before any default of inclosure; sixth, a ne injuste vexes, before any distress or molestation. And these are called brevia anticipantia, writs of prevention." Co. Litt. 100. And see 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 125.

These writs are generally obsolete. In chancery, when it is contemplated to prevent an expected injury, a bill quia timet is filed. See "Bill Quia Timet."

QUICK DISPATCH. A term used in charter parties to express the promptness with which the cargo will be delivered to the vessel for loading. It signifies delivery as rapidly as the vessel can receive it. 2 Fed. 607.

It is a stronger term than "customary quick dispatch," and supersedes the custom of the port. 2 Low. (U. S.) 361.

QUICK WITH CHILD. The state of a woman pregnant with a quick child, i. e., a foetus which has quickened. 9 Metc. (Mass.) 263. A woman's condition from the time of conception and the commencement of gestation. 49 N. Y. 89. In an English case, "quick with child" was distinguished from "with quick child," the former phrase being said to signify merely "having conceived" (8 Car. & P. 262), but this distinction is not recognized (22 N. J. Law, 57).

QUICQUID ACQUIRITUR SERVO, ACQUIRITUR DOMINO. Whatever is acquired by the servant is acquired for the master. 15 Viner, Abr. 327.

QUICQUID DEMONSTRATAE REI ADDITUR SATIS DEMONSTRATAE FRUSTRATA EST. Whatever is added to the description of a thing already sufficiently described is of no effect. Dig. 33. 4. 1. 8; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 562.

QUICQUID EST CONTRA NORMAM RECTI EST INJURIA. Whatever is against the rule of right is a wrong. 3 Bulst. 313.

QUICQUID IN EXCESSU ACTUM EST, LEGE PROHIBITUR. Whatever is done in excess is prohibited by law. 2 Inst. 107.

QUICQUID JUDICIS AUCTORITATI SUBJICITUR NOVITATI NON SUBJICITUR. Whatever is subject to the authority of a judge is not subject to innovation. 4 Inst. 66.

QUICQUID PLANTATUR SOLO, SOLO CEDIT. Whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to it. Wentw. Off. Ex'r, 145; Amb. 113; 3 East, 51. See "Fixtures."

QUICQUID RECIPITUR, RECIPITUR SECUNDUM MODUM RECIPIENTIS. Whatever is received is received according to the intention of the recipient. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 727; Halk. Max. 149; Law Mag. 1855, p. 21; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 461; 2 Barn. & C. 72; 14 Sim. 522; 2 Clark & F. 681; 2 Crompt. & J. 678; 14 East, 239, 243c.

QUICQUID SOLVITUR, SOLVITUR SECUNDUM MODUM SOLVENTIS. Whatever is paid is to be applied according to the intention of the payor. 2 Vern. 606. See "Appropriation."

QUICQUID SOLVITUR, SOLVITUR SECUNDUM MODUM SOLVENTIS; QUICQUID RECIPITUR, RECIPITUR SECUNDUM MODUM RECIPIENTIS. Whatever money is paid is paid according to the direction of the payor; whatever money is received is received according to that of the recipient. 2 Vern. 606; Broom, Leg. Max. 810.

QUICUNQUE HABET JURISDICTIONEM ORDINARIAM EST ILLIUS LOCI ORDINARIUS. Whoever has an ordinary jurisdiction is ordinary of that place. Co. Litt. 344.

QUICUNQUE JUSSU JUDICIS ALIQUID FECERIT NON VIDETUR DOLO MALO FECLASSE, QUIA PARERE NECESSE EST. Whoever does anything by the command of a judge is not reckoned to have done it with an evil intent, because it is necessary to obey. 10 Coke, 71.

QUID JURIS CLAMAT (Law Lat. what right he claims). In old English practice. A writ which lay for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, where the particular tenant would not attorn, for the purpose of compelling him. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

QUID PRO QUO (Lat.) What for what; something for something. An equivalent, or consideration; that which is given in exchange for another thing; that which is done in consideration of another thing. Cowell; 2 P. Wms. 219.

QUID SIT JUS, ET IN QUO CONSISTIT INJURIA, LEGIS EST DEFINIRE. What constitutes right, and what injury, it is the business of the law to declare. Co. Litt. 158b.

QUIDAM (Lat. some one; somebody). In French law. A term used to express an unknown person, or one who cannot be named.

A quidam is usually described by the features of his face, the color of his hair, his height, his clothing, and the like, in any process which may be issued against him. Merlin, Repert.

QUIDQUID ENIM SINE DOLO ET CULPA VENDITORIS ACCIDIT IN EO VENDITOR SECURUS EST. For concerning anything which occurs without deceit and wrong on the part of the vendor, the vendor is secure. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198.

QUIET ENJOYMENT. The name of a covenant in a lease, by which the lessor agrees that the lessee shall peaceably enjoy the premises leased. This covenant goes to the possession, and not to the title. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 471; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 120; 2 Dev. (N. C.) 388; 3 Dev. (N. C.) 200. A covenant for quiet enjoyment does not extend as far as a covenant of warranty. 1 Aik. (Vt.) 233.

The covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken only by an entry, or unlawful expulsion from, or some actual disturbance in, the possession. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 471; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 483; 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 281; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 105; 9 Metc. (Mass.) 63; 4 Whart. (Pa.) 86; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 340. But the tortious entry of the covenantor, without title, is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 376.

QUIETA NON MOVERE. Not to unsettle things which are established. 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, 22.

QUIETARE (Law Lat.) To quit, acquit, discharge, or save harmless. A formal word in old deeds of donation and other conveyances. Cowell.

QUIETE CLAMARE, or QUIETUM CLAMARE. To quitclaim or renounce all pretensions of right and title. Cowell; Fleta.

QUIETUS (Lat. freed or acquitted).

—In English Law. A discharge; an acquittance.

An instrument by the clerk of the pipe and auditors in the exchequer, as proof of their acquittance or discharge as accountants. Cowell.

Discharge of a judge or attorney general. 3 Mod. 99.

—In American Law. The discharge of an executor by the probate court. 4 Mason (U. S.) 131.

QUIETUS REDDITUS. In old English law. Quit rent (q. v.) Spelman.

QUILIBET POTEST RENUNCIARE JURI pro se inducto. Any one may renounce a law introduced for his own benefit. To this rule there are some exceptions. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 393; 1 Exch. 657.

QUINQUE PORTUS. The Cinque Ports (q. v.).

QUINQUEPARTITE. In five parts.

QUINSIEME, or QUINZIME (Law Fr. and Eng.) In old English law. A fifteenth; a tax so called. Cowell. See "Fifteenths."

QUINTO EXACTUS (Lat.) In old English law. The fifth call or last requisition of a defendant sued to outlawry.

QUIRE OF DOVER. In English law. A record in the exchequer, showing the tenures for guarding and repairing Dover Castle, and determining the services of the Cinque Ports. 3 How. St. Tr. 868.

QUIRITARIAN OWNERSHIP. In Roman law. Ownership in the strict forms of law; legal title, as distinguished from the equitable title known as "Bonitarian ownership."

QUISQUIS EST QUI VELIT JURIS CONSUITUS haberi, continuet studium, velit a quocunque doceri. Whoever wishes to be held a jurisconsult, let him continually study, and desire to be taught by everybody.

QUISQUIS PRAESUMITUR BONUS; ET semper in dubiis pro reo respondendum. Every one is presumed good; and in doubtful cases the resolution should be ever for the accused.

QUIT RENT. A rent paid by the tenant of the freehold, by which he goes quit and free,—that is, discharged from any other rent. 2 Bl. Comm. 42.

In England, quit rents were rents reserved to the king or a proprietor, on an absolute grant of waste land, for which a price in gross was at first paid, and a mere nominal rent reserved as a feudal acknowledgment of tenure. Inasmuch as no rent of this description can exist in the United States, when a quit rent is spoken of, some other interest must be intended. 5 Call (Va.) 364. A perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee simple is sometimes known by the name of "quit rent" in Massachusetts. See "Ground Rent;" "Rent."

QUITCLAIM. In conveyancing. A form of deed of the nature of a release, containing words of grant as well as release. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 606.

The term is in constant and general use in American law to denote a deed substantially the same as a release in English law. It presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance, or a subsisting estate and possession. Thornton, Conv. 44. It is a conveyance at common law, but differs from a release in that it is regarded as an original conveyance in American law, at least in some states. 6 Pick. (Mass.) 499; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 374; 3 Conn. 398; 9 Ohio, 96; 5 Ill. 117; Rev. St. Me. c. 73, § 14; Code Miss. 1857, p. 309, art. 17. The operative words are "remise, release, and forever quitclaim." Thornton, Conv. 44. Covenants of warranty against incumbrances by the grantor are usually added.

QUITE CLAMAUNCE (Law Fr.) Quitclaim. Britt. c. 85.

QUITTANCE. A discharge or release; abbreviated from "acquittance."

QUO ANIMO (Lat. with what intention). The intent; the mind with which a thing has been done; 17 Ill. 501; as, the quo animo with which the words were spoken may be shown by the proof of conversations of the defendant relating to the original defamation. 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 296.

QUO JURE, WRIT OF. In English law. The name of a writ commanding the defendant to show by what right he demands common of pasture in the land of the complainant who claims to have a fee in the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 299.

QUO LIGATUR, EO DISSOLVITUR. By the same mode by which a thing is bound, by that is it released. 2 Rolle, 21.

QUO MINUS (Lat.) The name of a writ. In England, when the king's debtor is sued in the court of the exchequer, he may have a writ quo minus by which he avers the wrong done by him by defendant, quo minus sufficiens existit (by which he is less able) to pay the king's debt. This was originally necessary to give jurisdiction to the court of exchequer.

QUO MODO QUID CONSTITUITUR EODEM MODO DISSOLVITUR. In the same manner by which anything is constituted, by that it is dissolved. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 74.

QUO WARRANTO (Lat. by what authority).

—In Old Practice. The name of a writ (and also of the whole pleading) by which the government commences an action to recover an office or franchise from the person or corporation in possession of it.

The writ commands the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear before the court to which it is returnable, to show (quo warranto) by what authority he claims the office or franchise. It was a writ of right, a civil remedy to try the mere right to the franchise or office, where the person in possession never had a right to it, or has forfeited it by neglect or abuse. 33 Miss. 523; 3 Bl. Comm. 262, 263.

The action of quo warranto was prescribed by the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I), and is a limitation upon the royal prerogative. Before this statute, the king, by virtue of his prerogative, sent commissions over the kingdom to inquire into the right to all franchises, quo jure quove nomine illi retinent, etc.; and, as they were grants from the crown, if those in possession of them could not show a charter, the franchises were seized into the king's hands without any judicial proceeding. Like all other original civil writs, the writ of quo warranto issued out of chancery, and was returnable alternatively before the king's bench or justices in eyre. 2 Inst. 277-283, 494-499; 2 Term R. 549. See 4 Term R. 381; 2 Strange, 819, 1196.

—In Modern Practice. The writ of quo warranto has given place to an information in the nature of quo warranto. 3 Bl. Comm. 263; 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 382; 58 N. H. 113. Such informations ordinarily issue in the name of the attorney general, either ex officio, or on the relation of some private person.

The remedy by quo warranto is the proper one to try title to public (1 Ark. 279; 33 Miss. 509) or corporate office (20 Fla. 784; 61 Pa. 339), or to revoke a charter or franchise (8 Vt. 489; 45 Wis. 579).

The judgment on an information in the nature of quo warranto is not punitive, but extends only to ouster from the office or franchise usurped. 3 Bl. Comm. 263; 4 Wis. 567.

QUOAD HOC (Lat. as to this; with respect to this). A term frequently used to signify, as to the thing named, the law is so and so.

QUOCUMQUE MODO VELIT, QUOCUMQUE MODO POSSIT. In any way he wishes, in any way he can. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484, 492.

QUOD A QUOQUE POENAE NOMINE exactum est id eodem restituere nemo cogitur. That which has been exacted as a penalty no one is obliged to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 46.

QUOD AB INITIO NON VALET, IN TRACTU TEMPORIS NON CONVALESCET. What is not good in the beginning cannot be rendered good by time. Merlin, Repert. verb. Regio de Droit. This, though true in general, is not universally so. 4 Coke, 26; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 166, 172, note.

QUOD AD JUS NATURALE ATTINET, omnes homines aequales sunt. All men are equal as far as the natural law is concerned. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

QUOD AEDIFICATUR IN AREA LEGATA cedit legato. Whatever is built upon land given by will passes with the gift of the land. Amos & F. Fixt. (2d Ed.) 246; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 377.

QUOD ALIAS BONUM ET JUSTUM EST, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What is otherwise good and just, if sought by force or fraud, becomes bad and unjust. 3 Coke, 78.

QUOD ALIAS NON FUIT LICITUM Necessitas licitum facit. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise were unlawful. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

QUOD APPROBO NON REPROBO. What I accept I do not reject. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 636.

QUOD ATTINET AD JUS CIVILE, SERVI pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines aequali sunt. So far as the civil law is concerned, slaves are not reckoned as persons, but not so by natural law, for, so far as regards natural law, all men are equal. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

QUOD BILLA CASSETUR. That the bill be quashed. The common-law form of a judgment sustaining a plea in abatement, where the proceeding is by bill, i. e., by a capias instead of by original writ.

QUOD CLERICI BENEFICIATI DE Cancellaria. A writ to exempt a clerk of the chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament, etc. Reg. Orig. 261.

QUOD CLERICI NON ELIGANTUR IN officio ballivi, etc. A writ which lay for a clerk who, by reason of some land he had, was made, or was about to be made, bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer, to obtain exemption from serving the office. Reg. Orig. 187.

QUOD COMPUTET (Lat. that he account). The name of an interlocutory judgment in an action of account render. Also the name of a decree in the case of creditors' bills against executors or administrators. Such a decree directs the master to take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors, to cause the creditors, upon due and public notice, to come before him to prove their debts, at a certain place and within a limited period, and also directs the master to take an account of all personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator. Story, Eq. Jur. § 548. See "Judgment."

QUOD CONSTAT CLARE, NON DEBET verificari. What is clearly apparent need not be proved. 10 Mod. 150.

QUOD CONSTAT CURIAE OPERE Testium non indiget. What appears to the court needs not the help of witnesses. 2 Inst. 662.

QUOD CONTRA JURIS RATIONEM Receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. What has been admitted against the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 50. 17. 141; 12 Coke, 75.

QUOD CONTRA LEGEM FIT, PRO INFACTO habetur. What is done contrary to the law is considered as not done. 4 Coke, 31. No one can derive any advantage from such an act.

QUOD CUM (Lat.) In pleading. For that whereas. A form of introducing matter of inducement in those actions in which introductory matter is allowed to explain the nature of the claim; as, assumpsit and case. Hardr. 1; 2 Show, 180.

This form is not allowable to introduce the matter which constitutes the gravamen of the charge, as such matter must be stated by positive averment, while quod cum introduces the matter which depends upon it by way of recital merely. Hence, in those actions, as trespass vi et armis, in which the complaint is stated without matter of inducement, quod cum cannot be properly used. 2 Bulst. 214. But its improper use is cured by verdict. 1 Browne (Pa.) 68; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 86).

QUOD CURIA CONCESSIT. L. Lat. Which the court granted. A phrase in the old reports. Yearb. M. 4 Hen. VI. 19. Id. M. 9 Hen. VI. 40. 6 Mod. 28.

QUOD DATUM EST ECCLESIAE, Datum est Deo. What is given to the church is given to God. 2 Inst. 590.

QUOD DEMONSTRANDI CAUSA ADDITUR rei satis demonstratae, frustra fit. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain. 10 Coke, 113.

QUOD DUBITAS, NE FECERIS. When you doubt about a thing, do not do it. 1 Hale, P. C. 310.

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ given by St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. c. 4), to the owners of a particular estate, as for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or in fee tail, who are barred of the right of possession by a recovery had against them through their default or nonappearance in a possessory action, by which the right was restored to him who had been thus unwarily deformed by his own default. 8 Bl. Comm. 193.

QUOD ENIM SEMEL AUT BIS EXISTIT praetereunt leges. That which never happens but once or twice, legislators pass by. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

QUOD EST EX NECESSITATE NUNquam Introducitur, nisi quando necessarium. What is introduced of necessity is never introduced except when necessary. 2 Rolle, 512.

QUOD EST INCONVENIENS, AUT CONTRA rationem non permisum est in lege. What is inconvenient or contrary to reason is not allowed in law. Co. Litt. 178.

QUOD EST NECESSARIUM EST LICITUM. What is necessary is lawful. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 76.

QUOD FACTUM EST, CUM IN OBSCURO sit, ex affectione cujusque capiti interpretationem. When there is doubt about an act or expression, it receives interpretation from the (known) feelings or affections of the actor or writer. Dig. 50. 17. 168. 1.

QUOD FIERI DEBET FACILE PRAESUMITUR. That is easily presumed which ought to be done. Halk. Max. 153.

QUOD FIERI NON DEBET, FACTUM VALET. What ought not to be done, when done, is valid. 5 Coke, 38; 12 Mod. 438; 6 Mees. & W. 58; 9 Mees. & W. 636.

QUOD FUIT CONCESSUM. Which was granted.

QUOD IN JURE SCRIPTO "JUS" APPELLATUR, id in lege Angliae "rectum" esse dicitur. What in the civil law is called "jus," in the law of England is said to be "rectum" (right). Co. Litt. 260; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 1.

QUOMODO QUID CONSTITUITUR EO- dem modo dissolvitur. In whatever mode a thing is constituted, in the same manner is it dissolved. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 74.

QUONIAM ATTACHIAMENTA (Law Lat.) Since the attachments. One of the oldest books in the Scotch law; so called from the two first words of the volume. Bell, Dict. Still sometimes cited in argument, in the Scotch courts. 7 Wilson & S. 9.

QUORUM. Used substantively, quorum signifies the number of persons belonging to a legislative assembly, a corporation, society, or other body, required to transact business. There is a difference between an act done by a definite number of persons, and one performed by an indefinite number. In the first case, a majority is required to constitute a quorum, unless the law expressly directs that another number may make one. 88 Pa. St. 42; 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 394; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 402. In the latter case, any number who may be present may act, the majority of those present having, as in other cases, the right to act. 1 Barn. & C. 492.

In the absence of special provision, a majority is a quorum (12 Metc. [Mass.] 99; 13 Ind. 581), but sometimes the law requires a greater number than a bare majority to form a quorum. In such case, no quorum is present until such a number convene.

In the absence of a rule of procedure to the contrary, the presence of a quorum in a legislative body can only be ascertained from the votes recorded on the particular matter submitted (117 N. C. 158); but a rule authorizing the presiding officer to count members present and not voting to make up a quorum is within the power of a legislative body (144 U. S. 1).

QUORUM PRAETEXTA, NEC AUGET nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat prae missa. "Quorum praetexta" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms that which went before. Plowd. 52.

QUORUM UNUS. One of the quorum. In England it was formerly the practice to appoint certain justices of the peace, one of whom must be present for the transaction of certain business, such justices being named in the commission of all the justices (quorum aliquem vestrum A. B., C. D., etc., unum esse volumus). Such justices were called "justices of the quorum." The present practice is to name all the justices, so that the designation is of no practical importance.

QUOT. In Scotch law. The twentieth part of the movables, computed without computation of debts, was so called.

Formerly the bishop was entitled, in all confirmations, to the quot of the testament. Ersk. Inst. 3. 9. 11.

QUOTA. A proportionate share of anything required to be paid, supplied, or furnished.

QUOTATION. The listed price bid, offered, or paid for properties or commodities currently dealt in.

QUOTIENS DUBIA INTERPRETATIO LI- bertatis est, secundum libertatem respon- dendum erit. Whenever there is a doubt between liberty and slavery, the decision must be in favor of liberty. Dig. 50. 17. 20.

QUOTIES IN STIPULATIONIBUS AM- bigua oratio est, commodissimum est id ac- cipi quo res de quo agitur, in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject matter may be in safety. Dig. 41. 1. 80; Id. 50. 16. 219.

QUOTIES IN VERBIS NULLA EST AM- biguitas ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. When there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made. Co. Litt. 147; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 850.

QUOTUPLEX (Lat.) Of how many kinds; of how many fold. A term of frequent occurrence in Sheppard's Touchstone. Shep. Touch. 37, 50, 117, 160 et passim.

QUOUSQUE. A Latin adverb, which signifies how long, how far, until.

In old conveyances, it is used as a word of limitation. 10 Coke, 41.

In practice, it is the name of an execution which is to have force until the defendant shall do a certain thing. Of this kind is the capias ad satisfaciendum, by virtue of which the body of the defendant is taken into execution, and he is imprisoned until he shall satisfy the execution. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3371.

QUOVIS MODO (Lat.) In whatever manner. 10 East, 476.

QUUM (Lat.) When.

QUUM DE LUCRO DUORUM QUAERATUR, melior est conditio possidentis. When the gain of one of two is in question, the condition of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

QUUM IN TESTAMENTO AMBIGUE AUT etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credibile et cogitatum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning of the testator. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 437. See Brissonius, "Perperam."

QUUM (CUM) PRINCIPALIS CAUSA non consistit ne ea quidem quae sequuntur locum habent. When the principal does not hold its ground, neither do the accessories find place. Dig. 50. 17. 129. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 438; 1 Poth. Obl. 413.

QUUM QUOD AGO NON VALET UT ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When what I do is of no force as to the purpose for which I do it, let it be of force to as great a degree as it can. 1 Vent. 216.

QUYKE. In old records. Quick; living; a quick or live beast. Cowell.

QY (Law Fr.) Who; which. Kelham.

R

RACHAT (Fr.) Ransom; relief. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 3, art. 19; Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, § 21; Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 5.

RACHATER (Law Fr.) To redeem; to repurchase, or buy back. Kelham.

RACHETUM (Fr. racheter, to redeem). In Scotch law. Ransom; corresponding to Saxon weregild, a pecuniary composition for an offense. Skene de Verb. Sign.; Jacob.

RACHIMBURGII, or RACHINBURGII (Law Lat.) In old European law. Rachenburgers or Rakenburghs; judges among the Salians, Ripuarians, and some other nations of Germany who sat with the count (comes) in his court called mallum, and were generally associated with him in all matters. L. Salic. tits. 52, 59; L. Ripuar. tit. 32, § 3; Capit. Carol. lib. 5, c. 14; Spelman. The word was found by Spelman in an old MS. copy of the laws of Canute. Montesquieu writes it rathimburges. Esprit des Loix, liv. 30, c. 18.

RACK. An engine with which to torture a supposed criminal, in order to extort a confession of his supposed crime, and the names of his supposed accomplices. It is unknown in the United States, but, known by the nickname of the "Duke of Exeter's Daughter," was in use in England. Barr. Obs. St. 366; 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 227.

RACK RENT. In English law. The full extended value of land left by lease, payable by a tenant for life or years. Wood, Inst. 192.

RADECHENISTRES. A word used in Domesday Book, which Spelman interprets to mean "freemen." Domesday Book, fol. 18, tit. "Glowc. Berchelay;" Spelman.

RADOUR. In French law. A term including the repairs made to a ship, and a fresh supply of furniture and victuals, munitions, and other provisions required for the voyage. Pardessus, note 602.

RAENCON (Law Fr.) A ransom, or fine. Ou par ranceoun ou par amercement. Artic. sup. Chart.

RAFFLE. A form of lottery by which the price of an article is divided into shares, and the article awarded by chance to one of the shareholders. Cent. Dict.

RAGEMAN, or RAGMAN. A statute, so called, of justices assigned by Edw. I. and his council, to go a circuit through all England, and to hear and determine all complaints of injuries done within five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign. Spelman.

RAGMAN'S ROLL, or RAGIMUND'S ROLL. A roll, called from one Ragimund, or Ragimont, a legate in Scotland, who, summoning all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which, they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome. Wharton.

RAILROAD, or RAILWAY. The terms "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous. 30 Minn. 524. Their significance varies with the context, being used sometimes to include all appurtenances (173 Ill. 521, 46 N. J. Law, 289; 58 Pa. St. 252), and sometimes as including only the immovable structure, graded and railed for the use of trains (93 U. S. 442). Ordinarily, when used without qualifying words, the term "railroad" means those railroads specially laid out and graded having parallel rails of iron or steel for the wheels of carriages drawn by steam or other motive power, to run upon, 156 Ill. 294, but in some connections it has been held to include street or horse railroads. 24 Ill. 52.

RAISE. To create; to bring into existence. The term is used in various senses, thus, to "raise" a use is to create it; to "raise" an issue is to file such a plea as to make an issue. Facts are said to "raise" a presumption when they give rise thereto.

RAISING PORTIONS. A term used in old English law for the charging of a devise to one child of testator, with the payment of certain sums to others.

RAN (Saxon). Open theft or robbery. Cowell.

RANGE. In the United States government surveys of lands, the "townships" (q. v.) are ranged in tiers east or west of a given meridian, such ranges therefore being a row of towns in a north and south direction. The "towns" are tiers lying at right angles to the ranges.

RANGER. A sworn officer of the forest to inquire of trespasses, and to drive the beasts of the forest out of the deforested ground into the forest. Jacob.

RANK. The order or place in which certain officers are placed in the army and navy, in relation to others. The term is sometimes applied to debts or securities to indicate their precedence in respect to order of payment.

—In English Law. Excessive; too large in amount; as a rank modus. 2 Bl. Comm. 30.

RANKING. In Scotch law. Determining the order in which the debts of a bankrupt ought to be paid.

RANSOM. A price of redemption of a captive or prisoner of war, or of captured property.

—In Old English Law. A price paid for the pardon of some great offense. It differs from amercement in that it excuses from corporal punishment. Cowell.

RANSOM BILL. A contract for payment of ransom of a captured vessel, with stipulations of safe-conduct, if she pursue a certain course and arrive in a certain time. If found out of time or course, the safe-conduct is void. Wheaton, Int. Law, 107*. The payment cannot be enforced in England, during war, by an action on the contract, but can in this country. 1 Kent, Comm. 104, 105; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 141; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 325.

RAPE.

—In Criminal Law. Unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by force and without her consent.

(1) Carnal knowledge is essential (67 Wis. 552), but by statute in most states, the slightest penetration is enough (see 45 Conn. 256; 102 N. Y. 234), though, at common law, emission was essential (1 East, P. C. 439). (2) The carnal knowledge must be unlawful; thus, forcible carnal knowledge by a man of his wife against her will is not rape. 1 Hale, P. C. 629. (3) The carnal knowledge must be by force, but constructive force, as by threats or intimidation, is sufficient (39 Fla. 155; 45 Conn. 263; 139 Ind. 531); and where the woman is insane or insensible, it has been said that the force necessary to accomplish the act is sufficient (53 Ark. 425; 50 Iowa, 189); but the weight of authority is that fraud (2 Swan [Tenn.] 394; 6 Ala. 765), as by personating the woman's husband (11 Cox, C. C. 191; 7 Conn. 54), will not take the place of force (but see 94 Ind. 96). (4) The carnal knowledge must be without the woman's consent. The phrase "against her will" is sometimes substituted, but it means no more than "without her consent." 22 Wis. 445; 25 Mich. 356. Unless asleep or insensible (12 Cox, C. C. 311), or intimidated by threats (9 Car. & P. 748), the woman must resist "to the uttermost" (19 Wend. [N. Y.] 192; 13 Mich. 427), to the point of inability longer to resist (59 N. Y. 374); and acquiescence, however tardy or reluctant, prevents the offense from being rape (82 Va. 653; 124 Ill. 576).

—In Old English Law. A division of a county similar to a hundred, but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one.

RAPE OF THE FOREST (Law Lat. rap-tus forestae). In old English law. Trespass committed in a forest by violence. Cowell; Spelman; LL. Hen. I. c. 11.

RAPE REEVE. In English law. The chief officer of a rape (q. v.) 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

RAPINA (Lat. from rapere, to drag, or carry away forcibly).

—In the Civil Law. The violent taking from the person of another of money or goods for the sake of gain; robbery from the person. Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 23, Nos. 1, 2; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 2, § 1071.

—In Old English Law. Open and violent larceny from the person; robbery. St. 14 Car. II. c. 22; Cowell; 4 Bl. Comm. 242.

RAPTOR. In old English law, a ravisher.

RAPTU HAEREDIS. A writ for taking away an heir holding in socage, of which there were two sorts: One when the heir was married; the other when he was not. Reg. Orig. 163.

RAPUIT (Lat. from rapere, to ravish). In old English law. Ravished. A technical word in old indictments. 2 East, 30; Wharton, Am. Crim. Law, § 401.

RASE (Law Lat. raseria; from Lat. rasus, shaved or scraped). In old English law. Strike; struck measure; that in which the commodity measured was made even with the top of the measure, by scraping or striking off all that was above it. An old ordinance for bakers, brewers, etc., provided that toll should be taken "by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel." Cowell quotes the provision, but strangely overlooks the meaning it so clearly expresses, and makes rase (raseria) to be "a measure of corn, now disused."

RASURA (Law Lat.; from Lat. radere, to scrape). In old English law. A rasure. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 3, 4.

RASURE (Law Fr. rasure, rasoure; from Lat. rasura, from radere, to scrape). A scraping off; the removal of one or more words from an instrument, by scraping the writing off or out. One of the modes by which a deed or other instrument may be avoided, or rendered of no effect. 2 Bl. Comm. 308; Shep. Touch. 55, 63, 71; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 29, § 4. "Rasure" is properly distinguished from "obliteration," which is effected by marking out the writing with pen and ink, or blotting it out by other means; but the terms are sometimes used as synonymous. See 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 499.

RASUS, or RASUM (Law Lat. from radere). In old English law. Rased; erased. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 12. A rase; a measure of onions, containing twenty fiones, and each fionis twenty-five heads. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 12.

Struck; scraped off. Mensura rassa, struck measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1.

RATAM REM HABERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To hold a thing ratified; to ratify or confirm it (comprobare, agnoscere). Dig. 46. 8. 12. 1, et per tot.

RATE OF EXCHANGE. In commercial law. The actual price at which a bill, drawn in one country upon another country, can be bought or obtained in the former country at any given time. Story, Bills, § 31.

RATE TITHES. Tithes charged pro rata on personal property kept within the parish for less than a year.

RATIFICATION. An agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us.

Express ratifications are those made in express and direct terms of assent. Implied ratifications are such as the law presumes from the acts of the principal; as, if Peter buy goods for James, and the latter, knowing the fact, receive them and apply them to his own use.

It is applied in the sense of "confirmation" to various transactions, but it has been said that it applies properly only to agency. 73 Me. 487.

RATIHABITIO (Lat. from ratius, approved, and habere, to hold). In civil and old English law. A holding as approved; approval or ratification.

RATIHABITIO MANDATO AEQUIPARATUR. Ratification is equal to a command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 771; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 302.

RATIHABITION. Confirmation; approbation of a contract; ratification.

RATING.

—In Commerce. The estimate put on the credit and financial resources of a person. There are various institutions or persons who furnish ratings. They are called "mercantile agencies."

—In Shipping. The order or class of a vessel according to her magnitude or force.

RATIO (Lat.) A reason; a cause; a reckoning of an account.

RATIO DECIDENDI. The ground of decision.

RATIO EST FORMALIS CAUSA CONSUETUDINIS. Reason is the source and mold of custom.

RATIO EST LEGIS ANIMA; MUTATA legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of the law being changed, the law is also changed. 7 Coke, 7.

RATIO EST RADIUS DIVINI LUMINIS. Reason is a ray of divine light. Co. Litt. 232.

RATIO ET AUCTORITAS DUO CLARISSIMA mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world. 4 Inst. 320.

RATIO IN JURE AEQUITAS INTEGRA. Reason in law is perfect equity.

RATIO LEGIS. The reason or occasion of a law; the occasion of making a law. Bl. Law Tr. 3.

Grotius distinguishes between "ratio" and "mens," the meaning or intent of a law.

RATIO LEGIS EST ANIMA LEGIS. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

RATIO NON CLAUDITUR LOCO. Reason is not confined to any place.

RATIO POTEST ALLEGARI DEFICIENTE lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. Reason may be alleged when the law is defective, but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent. Co. Litt. 191.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM. Alimony.

RATIONALIBUS DIVISIS, WRIT DE. The name of a writ which lies properly when two men have lands in several towns or hamlets, so that the one is seised of the land in one town or hamlet, and the other of the other town or hamlet by himself, and they do not know the bounds of the town or hamlet, nor of their respective lands. This writ lies by one against the other, and the object of it is to fix the boundaries. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

RATIONE (Lat.) By reason; on account. Ratione impotentiae, on account of inability. A ground of qualified property in some animals ferae naturae, as in the young ones, while they are unable to fly or run. 2 Bl. Comm. 394; Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione loci, by reason of place. A ground of ownership in rabbits and hares. Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione privilegii, by reason of privilege. A ground of ownership in birds or beasts of warren. Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione soli, on account of the soil; with reference to the soil. Said to be the ground of ownership in bees. 2 Bl. Comm. 393.

Ratione tenurae, by reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure. 3 Bl. Comm. 230; 1 Maule & S. 435. A phrase in old pleading. Not the same as "by reason of being owner and proprietor." Le Blanc, J., 1 Maule & S. 441. Ratione tenurae implies ex vi termini, something originally annexed to the holding. Id.

RATIONE MATERIAE (Lat.) By reason of the subject matter.

RATIONE PERSONAE (Lat.) By reason of the person concerned; from the character of the person.

RATIONE TENURAE (Law Lat.) By reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure. 3 Bl. Comm. 230.

RATIONES. In old law. The pleadings in a suit. Rationes exercere, or ad rationes stare, to plead.

RATTENING. The act of trade unionists in causing the tools, clothes, or other property of a workman to be taken away or hidden, in order to compel him to join the union or cease working. It is an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, § 7.

RAUNSON, or RAUNSONE (Law Fr.) In old English law. Ransom; a fine; a severe kind of fine. Sur peyne de raunsonne, on pain of ransom. Britt. c. 11. Per raunsonne simple ou graund, solonc le fait, by an ordinary or a great ransom, according to the fact. Id. Puny par prison et greve raunsonne. Id. c. 48.

RAVISHED. In pleading. A technical word necessary in an indictment for rape.

No other word or circumlocution will answer. The defendant should be charged with having "feloniously ravished" the prosecutrix, or woman mentioned in the indictment. Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Hawk. P. C. 2, c. 25, § 56; Cro. Car. 37; 1 Hale, P. C. 628; 2 Hale, P. C. 184; Co. Litt. 184, note (p); 2 Inst. 180; 1 East, P. C. 447. The words "feloniously did ravish and carnally know" imply that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the woman. 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 70. See 3 Chit. Crim. Law, 812.

RAVISHMENT. In criminal law. An unlawful taking of a woman, or of an heir in ward; rape.

RAVISHMENT DE GARD (Law Fr.) An abolished writ, which lay for a guardian by knight's service or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 140; 12 Car. II. c. 3.

RAVISHMENT OF WARD. In English law. The marriage of an infant ward without the consent of the guardian. It is punishable by St. Westminster II. c. 35.

RE (Lat.) In the matter of.

RE, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura, vestes, sumere pacta solent.

From the thing [itself], from words, from writing, from consent, from delivery, from union, agreements usually take their vestments. A couplet formerly in use, framed to express (in aid of the memory) the six different modes in which obligation might be contracted, which were fancifully termed its "vestments," or garments, that is, the forms in which it was clothed. It is twice quoted by Bracton, who explains the six forms in detail. Bracton, fol. 16b; Id. fols. 99-101. It is thus expressed in the prose of Britton: Obligation doit estre vestus de v. maneres de garnementz; de chose, de parole, de escript, de unite, de volounte, de bail, de joynture. Britt. c. 28. It seems to be a mere extension of the fourfold division of the Institutes; Aut re, aut verbis, aut literis, aut consensu. Inst. 3. 14. 2. And see Dig. 44. 7. 52.

RE. FA. LO. An abbreviation of recordari facias loquelam (q. v.)

REAL.

—At Common Law. A term which is applied to land in its most enlarged signification. "Real security," therefore, means the security of mortgages or other incumbrances affecting lands. 2 Atk. 806; 2 Ves. Sr. 547.

—In Civil Law. That which relates to a thing, whether it be movable or immovable, lands or goods; thus, a "real injury" is one which is done to a thing, as a trespass to property, whether it be real or personal, in the common-law sense. A real statute is one which relates to a thing, in contradistinction to such as relate to a person.

REAL ACTION.

—In the Civil Law. One by which a person seeks to recover his property which is in the possession of another. Dig. 50. 16. 16. It is to be brought against the person who has possession.

—At Common Law. One brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Steph. Pl. 3.

They are docturnal when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry, which lie in the per, the per et cui, or the post, upon disseisin, intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d'ancestor, aiel, besaiel, cosinage, or nuper obiit. Comyn, Dig. "Actions" (D 2).

These actions were always local, and were to be brought in the county where the land lay. Bracton, 189, 414. They are now pretty generally laid aside in practice, upon account of the great nicety required in their management, and the inconvenient length of their process,—a much more expeditious method of trying titles being since introduced by other actions, personal and mixed. See Stearns, Real Actions; Booth, Real Actions; Bac. Abr. "Actions;" Comyn, Dig. "Actions;" 3 Bl. Comm. 118.

REAL ASSETS. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 244, 302; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 436. See "Assets."

REAL BURDEN. In Scotch law. Where a right to lands is expressly granted under the burden of a specific sum, which is declared a burden on the lands themselves, or where the right is declared null if the sum be not paid, and where the amount of the sum, and the name of the creditor in it, can be discovered from the records, the burden is said to be real. Bell, Dict.

REAL CHATTELS. See "Chattel."

REAL CHYMIN (Law Fr.) In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway (regia via). Y. B. P. 6 Edw. III. 48.

REAL COMPOSITION. An agreement made, in England, between the owner of land and the incumbent of a parish, with the consent of the ordinary and the patron of the living, that the land shall for the future be discharged from payment of tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompense given in lieu and satisfaction thereof. But since St. 13 Eliz. c. 10, no real composition can be made for any longer term than three lives, or twenty-one years, and such compositions are now rarely heard of. 2 Bl. Comm. 28. See St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100, § 2, making valid all compositions confirmed in a certain manner.

REAL CONTRACT.

—At Common Law. A contract respecting real property. 3 Rawle (Pa.) 225.

—In Civil Law. Those contracts which require the interposition of a thing (rei) as the subject of them; for instance, the loan for goods to be "specifically returned."

Contracts are divided into those which are formed by the mere consent of the parties and therefore are called "consensual," such as sale, hiring, and mandate, and those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as the loan of money, deposit, or pledge, which, from their nature, require the delivery of the thing, whence they are called "real." Poth. Obl. p. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 2.

REAL COVENANT. A covenant connected with a conveyance of realty, whereby an obligation to pass something real is created, or which is so connected with the realty that he who has the latter is entitled to the benefit of, or is bound to perform, the former. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 145; Shep. Touch. 161; Platt, Cov. 60, 62.

A covenant which is so connected with the realty as to apply to the owner thereof, either in reference to benefit or obligation, whether he be a party to the instrument creating the covenant or not.

A covenant by which the obligor undertakes to pass something real. Co. Litt. 384b; Stearns, Real Actions, 134. See 4 Kent, Comm. 472.

A covenant by which the covenantor binds his heirs. 2 Bl. Comm. 304.

Very considerable confusion exists among the authorities in the use of the term "real covenants." The definition of Blackstone, which determines the character of covenants from the insertion or noninsertion of the word "heir" by the covenantor, is pretty generally rejected. See Platt, Cov. 61; 2 Bl. Comm. 304, note, 305, note. Of the other definitions, that which makes a real covenant an obligation to pass realty is the most ancient. Upon such a covenant the remedy was by voucher or warrantia chartae, and not by the action of covenant.

Together with the disuse of real actions, these covenants gave place to the more modern covenants which furnish the basis of a personal action for damages, and the term

"real covenants" lost its ancient significance, and acquired its modern one, as given in the latter part of the first and in the second definition. The covenant to stand seised approaches perhaps more nearly than any covenant still in use to the ancient real covenant.

Covenants are real only when they have entered into the consideration for which land, or some interest therein to which the covenant is annexed, passed between the covenantor and covenantee. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 662, 663.

In England, all covenants for title are held to be real covenants; in the United States, those only which are future in their operation come under this description. 10 Ga. 311.

The object of these covenants is, usually, either to preserve the inheritance, as to keep in repair (3 Lev. 92; 9 Barn. & C. 505; 8 Cow. [N. Y.] 206; 17 Wend. [N. Y.] 148; 1 Dall. [U. S.] 210; 6 Yerg. [Tenn.] 512; 6 Vt. 276; 25 Pa. St. 257; 38 Eng. Law & Eq. 462; to keep buildings insured, and reinstate them if burned (Platt, Cov. 185; 5 Barn. & Adol. 1; 6 Gill & J. [Md.] 372); to continue the relation of landlord and tenant, as to pay rent (5 East, 575; 1 Doug. 183; 1 Wash. C. C. [U. S.] 375; do suit to the lessor's mill (5 Coke, 18; 1 Barn. & C. 410; grind the tenant's corn (2 Yeates [Pa.] 74; 9 Vt. 91); for the renewal of leases (12 East, 469); or to protect the tenant in his enjoyment of the premises, as to warrant and defend (Shep. Touch. 161; 2 Mass. 433; 5 Cow. [N. Y.] 137; 1 Paige, Ch. [N. Y.] 455); to make further assurance (Cro. Car. 503); for quiet enjoyment (Cro. Eliz. 373; 3 Barn. & Ald. 392; 1 C. B. 402; 1 Dev. & B. [N. C.] 94; 23 Me. 383); never to claim or assert title (7 Me. 97; 3 Metc. [Mass.] 121); to remove incumbrances (17 Mass. 586); to release suit and service (Co. Litt. 384b); to produce title deeds in defense of the grantee's title (4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 393; 10 Law Mag. 353-357; 1 Sim. & S. 449); to supply water to the premises (4 Barn. & Ald. 266); to draw water off from a mill pond (19 Pick. [Mass.] 449); not to establish another mill on the same stream (17 Wend. [N. Y.] 136); not to erect buildings on adjacent land (4 Paige, Ch. [N. Y.] 510); to use the land in a specified manner (13 Sim. 228); generally to create or preserve easements for the benefit of the land granted (4 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 122; 1 Brandf. [N. Y.] 40; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 240; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 648). See "Covenant."

REAL ESTATE. Landed property, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. Wharton.

REAL-ESTATE BROKER. One who engages in the purchase and sale of real estate as a business and occupation, and so holds himself out to the public in that character and capacity.

REAL EVIDENCE. All evidence of which things (or persons regarded as things) is the source; evidence arising from physical indications or appearances. Thus, the production of a dead body is real evidence of the corpus delicti.

REAL INJURY. In the civil law. An injury arising from an unlawful act, as distinguished from a verbal injury, which was done by words. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 2, c. 15, notes 3, 4.

REAL LAW.

—At Common Law. A popular term used to denote such parts of the system of common law as concern or relate to real property.

—In Civil Law. A law which relates to specific property, whether movable or immovable.

If real law in any given case relate to immovable property, it is limited in its operation to the territory within which that is situate, real estate being, both by the common and continental laws, subject exclusively to the laws of the government within whose territory it is situate. Story, Conf. Laws, 426, 428. See "Lex Rei Sitae."

REAL PARTY. Practice statutes frequently require that actions be brought in the name of the "real party in interest." As so used, the term means the person having the real beneficial interest in the obligation sued on. Thus, the assignee of a demand is the real party in interest (68 N. Y. 30), as is the person for whose benefit a contract is made by another (138 N. Y. 468; 112 N. Y. 1).

REAL PROPERTY. Something which may be held by tenure, or will pass to the heir of the possessor at his death, instead of his executor, including lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether the latter be corporeal or incorporeal. 1 Atk. Conv.

In respect to property, "real" and "personal" correspond very nearly with "immovables" and "movables" of the civil law. By the latter, "biens" is a general term for property; and these are classified into movable and immovable, and the latter are subdivided into corporeal and incorporeal. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Biens."

By "immovables" the civil law intended property which could not be removed at all, or not without destroying the same, together with such movables as are fixed to the freehold, or have been so fixed and are intended to be again united with it, although at the time severed therefrom. Tayl. Civ. Law, 475.

The same distinction and rules of law as to the nature and divisions of property are adopted in Scotland, where, as by the Roman law, another epithet is applied to immovables. They are called "heritables," and go to the heir, as distinguished from "movables," which go to executors or administrators. So, rights connected with or affecting heritable property, such as tithes, servitudes, and the like, are themselves heritable, and in this it coincides with the common law. Ersk. Inst. 192.

In another respect, the Scotch coincides with the common law, in declaring growing crops of annual planting and culture not to be heritable, but to go to executors, etc., although so far a part of the real estate that they would pass by a conveyance of the land. Ersk. Inst. 193; Williams, Ex'rs, 600.

Though the term "real," as applied to property, in distinction from "personal," is now so familiar, it is one of a somewhat recent introduction. While the feudal law prevailed, the terms in use in its stead were "lands," "tenements," or "hereditaments;" and these acquired the epithet of "real" from the nature of the remedy applied by law for the recovery of them, as distinguished from that provided in case of injuries, contracts broken, and the like. In the one case, the claimant or demandant recovered the real thing sued for,—the land itself,—while, ordinarily, in the other he could only recover recompense in the form of pecuniary damages.

The term, it is said as a means of designation, did not come into general use until after the feudal system had lost its hold, nor till even as late as the commencement of the seventeenth century. One of the earliest cases in which the courts applied the distinctive terms of "real" and "personal" to estates, without any words of explanation, is said to have been that of Wind c. Jekyl (A. D. 1719) 1 P. Wms. 575; Williams, Real Prop. 6, 7. See "Land;" "Tenement;" "Hereditaments;" "Fixtures."

REAL REPRESENTATIVE. He who represents or stands in the place of another with respect to his real property is so termed, in contradistinction to him who stands in the place of another with regard to his personal property, and who is termed the "personal representative." Thus, the heir is the real representative of his deceased ancestor, and the executor or administrator is the personal representative.

REAL RIGHT. In Scotch law. That which entitles him who is vested with it to possess the subject as his own, and, if in the possession of another, to demand from him its actual possession.

It is distinguished from a personal right, which is that of action against a debtor, but without any right in the subject which the debtor is obliged to transfer to him. Real rights affect the subject itself; personal rights are founded in obligation. Ersk. Inst. 479.

By analogy, the right which a claimant in an action of replevin seeks to enforce at common law would be a real one, while the compensation which a plaintiff seeks in an action of assumpsit or of trover, being a pecuniary one, would be personal.

REAL SECURITY. Security consisting of a lien on realty.

REAL SERVITUDE. Praedial servitude (q. v.).

REAL STATUTES. In the civil law. Statutes which have property for their principal object, and do not speak of persons, except in relation to property. Story, Conf. Laws, § 13.

REAL THINGS, or THINGS REAL. In common law. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Comm. 15. Things substantial and immovable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them. 1 Steph. Comm. 156. This expression is in strictness clearly pleonastic, the sense of thing (res) being already implied in the word "real," as will at once appear by giving it a Latin form, res reales.

REAL WARRANTICE. In Scotch law, an enfroffment of one tenement given in security of another.

REAL WRONG. In old English law. An injury to the freehold.

REALITY. In foreign law. That quality of laws which concerns property or things (quae ad rem spectant). Story, Conf. Laws, § 16. See "Personalty."

REALM. A kingdom; a country. 1 Taunt. 270; 4 Campb. 289; Rose, 387.

REALTY. A term sometimes used as a collective noun for real property or estate,—more generally to imply that that of which it is spoken is of the nature or character of real property or estate.

The quality of being real, or relating to lands and tenements; things real. 1 Steph. Comm. 156.

REASONABLE ACT. This term signifies such an act as the law requires. When an act is unnecessary, a party will not be required to perform it as a reasonable act. 9 Price, 43; Yelv. 44; Platt, Cov. 342, 157; 42 Mo. 88.

REASONABLE AID. The ordinary or customary aids were so termed. See "Aids."

REASONABLE AND PROBABLE CAUSE. A term sometimes used to express the cause which will justify the institution of a criminal prosecution. It does not appear to differ in meaning from "probable cause," which is the more usual expression. 97 U. S. 642. See "Probable Cause."

REASONABLE CARE. Such care and diligence as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances. It is synonymous with "ordinary care." 34 Wis. 318; 79 Ga. 44.

The term is altogether a relative one, dependent on the circumstances, and the nature of the duty owed. See 25 Md. 521.

REASONABLE CERTAINTY. To establish a fact to a reasonable certainty requires that degree of proof of certainty which the jurors would be willing to act upon in their own grave and important concerns; that is, the degree of proof should be such that the fact is established beyond a reasonable doubt. "A reasonable doubt" and "reasonable certainty" and "moral certainty" mean one and the same thing. 72 Ill. App. 579.

REASONABLE DOUBT. "The term 'reasonable doubt' is almost incapable of any definition which will add much to what the words themselves imply." Mitchell, J., in 38 Minn. 439.

The most commonly quoted definition is that of Chief Justice Shaw: "An abiding conviction to a moral certainty" (5 Cush. [Mass.] 320); but it has been held that "moral certainty is not equivalent to an absence of reasonable doubt" (47 Ala. 78). It has been defined by negation as not a vague or whimsical doubt (34 Iowa, 520), not a mere conjecture (36 Ala. 211), etc. A practical definition upheld in some jurisdictions is that it is such a doubt as would cause a man to hesitate before acting in his own most important business concerns (10 Minn. 407); but this has been disapproved (1 Dak. 452), and, in general, no affirmative equivalent has ever been given which has not been disapproved in another jurisdiction.

REASONABLE PART. In old English law. That share of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children after his decease. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 122.

REASONABLE TIME. The term is entirely relative and dependent on circumstances. "Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione iusticiariorum." Co. Litt. 50.

So much time as is necessary under the circumstances for a reasonably prudent and diligent man to do, conveniently, what the contract or duty requires should be done, having a regard for the rights and possibility of loss, if any, to the other party to be affected. 126 Ark. 38, 189 S. W. 361, Ann. Cas. 1917 E 521.

REASONABLY. The adverb reasonably, whatever it may originally have meant, as now used, qualifies the condition of things as well as the conduct of persons. One of its definitions is, "in a moderate degree not fully, moderately, tolerably." 3 Ill. App. 610.

REASSURANCE. When an insurer is desirous of lessening his liability, he may procure some other insurer to insure him from loss, for the insurance he has made. This is called "reassurance."

REATTACHMENT. A second attachment of him who was formerly attached, and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Reg. Orig. 35.

REBATE. In mercantile law. Discount; the abatement of interest in consequence of prompt payment; the repayment of a part on compliance with some condition.

REBEL. A citizen or subject who unjustly and unlawfully takes up arms against the constituted authorities of the nation, to deprive them of the supreme power, either by resisting their lawful and constitutional orders in some particular matter, or to impose on them conditions. Vattel, liv. 3, § 328. In another sense, it signifies a refusal to obey a superior, or the commands of a court.

REBELLION. In criminal law. The taking up arms traitorously against the government; the forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued.

If the rebellion amount to treason, it is punished by the laws of the United States with death. If it be a mere resistance of process, it is generally punished by fine and imprisonment. See Dalloz; Pen. Code, 209.

REBELLION, COMMISSION OF. In old English practice. A writ issuing out of chancery to compel the defendant to appear.

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY. A gathering of twelve persons or more, intending, going about, or practicing unlawfully and of their own authority to change any laws of the realm; or to destroy the inclosure of any park or ground inclosed, banks of fish ponds, oneys in any warren, dove houses, the same shall remain void, or that they shall have way in any of the said grounds; or to destroy the deer in any park, fish in ponds, conveys in any warren, dove houses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents or prices of victuals, etc. See Cowell.

REBOUTER. To repel or bar. The action of the heir by the warranty of his ancestor is called "rebut" or "repel."

REBUS SIC STANTIBUS (Lat.) At this point of affairs; in the condition of things.

REBUT. To contradict; to do away. Thus, every homicide is presumed to be murder unless the contrary appears from evidence which proves the death; and this presumption it lies on the defendant to rebut, by showing that it was justifiable or excusable. Alis. Sc. Crim. Law, 48.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION. In the law of evidence. A presumption which may be rebutted by evidence. Otherwise called a "disputable" presumption. A species of legal presumption which holds good until disproved. Best, Pres. § 25; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33.

REBUTTER. In pleading. The defendant's third pleading, being his answer to the surrejoinder.

REBUTTING EVIDENCE. That evidence which is given by a party in the cause to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence on the other side. The term "rebutting evidence" is more particularly applied to that evidence given by the plaintiff to explain or repel the evidence given by the defendant.

RECALL A JUDGMENT. To reverse a judgment on a matter of fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled or revoked; and when it is reversed for an error of law, it is said simply to be reversed, quod judicium revesetur.

RECAPTION. The act of a person who has been deprived of the custody of another, to which he is legally entitled, by which he peaceably regains the custody of such person; or of the owner of personal or real property, who has been deprived of his possession, by which he peaceably retakes possession.

The rule of law is that one who has been wrongfully deprived of a person to whose custody he has a right (3 Bl. Comm. 4; 15 Barb. [N. Y.] 590; 13 Pick. [Mass.] 36; 19 Ga. 27), or of property, real or personal, to the possession of which he is entitled (11 N. H. 540; 13 Wend. [N. Y.] 256; 25 Vt. 620; 18 Minn. 355; 5 Watts [Pa.] 543), may, without legal process, retake the same wherever he may find it, if he can do so without a breach of the peace (11 Pick. [Mass.] 387; 73 N. Y. 529), though it is held in England (10 C. B. [N. S.] 713), and in some states (6 Rand. [Va.] 457; 59 Ill. 234), that so much force as is necessary may be used.

RECAPTURE. The recovery from the enemy, by a friendly force, of a prize by him captured.

RECEDITUR A PLACITIS JURIS, POTIUS quam injuria et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be receded from rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bac. Max. reg. 12; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 9. This applies only to such maxims as are called placita juris. These will be dispensed with rather than crimes should go unpunished, quia salus populi suprema lex, because the public safety is the supreme law.

RECIPTOR. In Massachusetts. A name given to the person who, on a trustee process being issued and goods attached, becomes surety to the sheriff to have them forthcoming on demand, or in time to respond to the judgment, when the execution shall be issued; upon which the goods are bailed to him. Story, Bailm. § 124. See "Attachment."

RECEIVER. One who receives money to the use of another to render an account. Story, Eq. Jur. § 446.

A person standing indifferent between the parties, who is appointed by the court to take the charge and management of property pending litigation, or for the benefit of the persons who may ultimately be entitled to it. 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 421; 80 Ill. 468.

Receivers are appointed in various proceedings and for various special purposes, but the general design of a receiver is to hold and protect the subject of litigation, whether it be specific property, or the assets of an insolvent.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE DUCHY of Lancaster. An officer of the duchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the duchy.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE PUBLIC revenue. In English law. An officer appointed in every county to receive the taxes granted by parliament, and remit the money to the treasury.

RECEIVER OF THE FINES. An English officer who receives the money from persons who compound with the crown on original writs sued out of chancery. Wharton.

RECEIVERS AND TRIERS OF PETITIONS. The mode of receiving and trying petitions to parliament was formerly judicial rather than legislative, and the triers were committees of prelates, peers, and judges, and, latterly, of the members generally. Brown.

RECEIVERS' CERTIFICATES. Certificates of indebtedness issued by a receiver, as surety for money borrowed, to carry on the receivership. They are usually made a first lien on the property. See 117 U. S. 434.

RECEIVERS OF WRECK. Persons appointed by the English board of trade. The duties of a receiver of wreck are to take steps for the preservation of any vessel stranded or in distress within his district; to receive and take possession of all articles washed on shore from the vessel; to use force for the suppression of plunder and disorder; to institute an examination on oath with respect to the vessel; and, if necessary, to sell the vessel, cargo, or wreck. Merch. Ship. Act 1854, § 439 et seq.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS. The offense of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen.

(1) The property must have been received, but constructive receipt is sufficient

(95 N. C. 626; 6 Cox, C. C. 353), and at common law it must have been received from the thief (13 Ired. [N. C.] 338); but under the statutes, the rule seems otherwise (38 Fla. 3; 52 Neb. 727). (2) The property must have been, at the time, stolen property in fact and law. 9 Cush. 284. (3) The receiver must know at the time that it was stolen (78 N. C. 491; 60 Ill. 119), but knowledge of circumstances from which any man of ordinary observation could have known that it was stolen is enough (33 Ala. 434; 96 Iowa, 299). (4) The property must be received with fraudulent intent, but the intent need not be lucri causa, an intent to aid the thief being sufficient. 101 Ill. 16; 26 Tex. App. 205. An intent to hold for a reward is a fraudulent intent. 37 Ohio St. 63.

RECENS SECTA (or INSECUTIO) (Law Lat.) In old English law. Fresh suit; fresh pursuit; pursuit of a thief immediately after the discovery of the robbery. 1 Bl. Comm. 297.

RECEPTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The name sometimes given to an arbitrator, because he had been received or chosen to settle the differences between the parties. Dig. 4. 8; Code, 2. 56.

RECESSION. A regrant; the act of a returning the title of a country to a government which formerly held it, by one which has it at the time; as, the recession of Louisiana, which took place by the treaty between France and Spain, of October 1, 1800. See 2 White, Coll. 516.

RECESSUS (Lat. from recedere, to go back). In old English law. A going from; a going off or out of land. Cum libero accessu et recessu, with free access and recess [ingress and egress]. Bracton, fol. 231b.

RECESSUS MARIS (Lat.) In old English law. A going back; reliction or retreat of the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 6.

RECETOUR, or RECETTOUR (Law Fr.) In old English law. A receiver or harbinger of a felon; an accessory after the fact. Britt. c. 24. One who received and concealed a returned outlaw. Id. c. 12.

RECETTEMENT (Law Fr.) In old English law. Receiptment; the receiving and harboring a felon. Del consentement ou del recettement de ceux felons a escient, of consenting to or harboring such felons knowingly. Britt. c. 1.

RECHASER (Law Fr.) To drive back. Y. B. M. 11 Hen. VI. 4.

RECHATE (Law Fr.) Ransom. Faire rechat' du char et du saunk, to make ransom of flesh and of blood. Y. B. M. 7 Edw. II. 214.

RECHATER (Law Fr.) To ransom; to buy back. Kelham.

RECIDIVE. In French law. The state of an individual who commits a crime or misdemeanor, after having once been condemned for a crime or misdemeanor; a relapse.

Many statutes provide that, for a second offense, punishment shall be increased. In those cases the indictment should set forth the crime or misdemeanor as a second offense.

The second offense must have been committed after the conviction for the first. A defendant could not be convicted of a second offense, as such, until after he had suffered a punishment for the first. Dalloz.

RECIPROCAL CONTRACT. In civil law. One by which the parties enter into mutual engagements.

They are divided into perfect and imperfect. When they are perfectly reciprocal, the obligation of each of the parties is equally a principal part of the contract, such as sale, partnership, etc. Contracts imperfectly reciprocal are those in which the obligation of one of the parties only is a principal obligation of the contract; as, mandate, deposit, loan for use, and the like. In all reciprocal contracts, the consent of the parties must be expressed. Poth. Obl. note 9; Civ. Code La. arts. 1758, 1759.

RECIPROCITY. Mutuality; state, quality, or character of that which is reciprocal.

RECITAL. The repetition of some former writing, or the statement of something which has been done. It is useful to explain matters of fact which are necessary to make the transaction intelligible. 2 Bl. Comm. 298.

—In Contracts. The preliminary statement of facts explanatory of the purpose for which the contract is made, or the reasons which led to its execution.

—In Pleading. A statement of matter introductory to an averment.

RECLAIM. To demand again; to insist upon a right, as, when a defendant for a consideration received from the plaintiff has covenanted to do an act, and fails to do it, the plaintiff may bring covenant for the breach, or assumpsit to reclaim the consideration. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 47.

RECLAIMING BILL. In Scotch law. A petition for review of an interlocutor, pronounced in a sheriff's or other inferior court. It recites verbatim the interlocutor, and, after a written argument, ends with a prayer for the recall or alteration of the interlocutor, in whole or in part. Bell, Dict. "Reclaiming Petition;" Shaw, Dig. 394.

RECOGNITION. Adoption; ratification (q. v.) An acknowledgment that something which has been done by one man in the name of another was done by authority of the latter.

A recognition by the principal of the agency of another in the particular instance, or in similar instances, is evidence of the authority of the agent, so that the recognition may be either express or implied. As an instance of an implied recognition may be mentioned the case of one who subscribes policies in the name of another, and, upon a loss happening, the latter pays the amount. 1 Campb. 43, note (a); 4 Campb. 88; 1 Esp. 61.

RECOGNITIONE ADNULLANDA PER vim et duritiam facta. A writ to the justices of the common bench for sending a record touching a recognition, which the recognizor suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear the recognizance may be annulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

RECOGNITORS. In English law. The name by which the jurors impaneled on an assize are known. 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 174.

RECOGNIZANCE. An obligation of record, entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with a condition to do some act required by law, which is therein specified. 2 Bl. Comm. 341; 53 Ill. 436; 68 Ill. App. 203.

The liability of bail above in civil cases, and of the bail in all cases in criminal matters, must be evidenced by a recognizance, as the sheriff has no power to discharge upon a bail bond being given to him in these cases. See 4 Bl. Comm. 297.

RECOGNIZE. To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. III. § 4; Bracton, 179. To enter into a recognizance.

RECOGNIZEE. He for whose use a recognizance has been taken.

RECOGNIZOR. He who enters into a recognizance.

RECOLEMENT. In French law. The reading and re-examination by a witness of a deposition, and his persistence in the same, or his making such alteration as his better recollection may enable him to do after having read his deposition. Without such re-examination, the deposition is void. Poth. Proc. Crim. § 4, art. 4.

RECOMMENDATION. A commendatory account given by a person of another to a third person.

—In Feudal Law. A transfer of allodial lands by the owner to the king, and the return of the same to be held on feudal tenure

RECOMMENDATORY. Advisory. "Preca-tory" is the more usual term.

RECOMPENSATION. In Scotch law. An allegation by the plaintiff of compensation on his part, made in answer to a compensation or set-off pleaded by the defendant in answer to the plaintiff's demand.

RECOMPENSE. A reward for services; remuneration for goods or other property.

In maritime law, there is a distinction between "recompense" and "restitution." When goods have been lost by jettison, if at any subsequent period of the voyage the remainder of the cargo be lost, the owner of the goods lost by jettison cannot claim restitution from the owners of the other goods; but in the case of expenses incurred with a view to the general benefit, it is clear that they ought to be made good to the party, whether he be an agent employed by the master in a foreign port, or the shipowner himself.

RECOMPENSE OF RECOVERY IN value. A phrase applied to the matter recovered in a common recovery, after the vouchee has disappeared, and judgment is given for the demandant. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2098.

RECONDUCTION. In civil law. A renewing of a former lease; relocation. Dig. 19. 2. 13. 11; Code Nap. arts. 1737-1740.

RECONTINUANCE. This word seems to be used to signify that a person has recovered an incorporeal hereditament of which he had been wrongfully deprived. Thus, "A. is disseised of a manor, whereunto an advowson is appendant, an estranger [i. e., neither A. nor the disseisor] usurpes to the advowson; if the disseisee [A.] enter into the manor, the advowson is recontinued again, which was severed by the usurpation. * * * And so note a diversitie between a recontinuance and a remitter; for a remitter cannot be properly, unless there be two titles; but a recontinuance may be where there is but one." Co. Litt. 363b.

RECONVENIRE (Lat.) In the canon and civil law. To make a cross demand upon the actor or plaintiff. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 14, and note (r).

RECONVENTIO (Lat. from reconvenire, q. v.) In the civil and canon law. A cross demand by the reus (defendant) upon the actor (plaintiff); a proceeding in the nature of a cross bill in equity. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 1, note 40; Calv. Lex.; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 9; Gilb. For. Rom. 45, 46; Story, Eq. Pl. § 402. Considered to be the origin of a cross bill. Id.

RECONVENTION.

—In the Civil Law. A species of cross bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 402.

—In Louisiana and Texas. A plea in the nature of set-off, by which any matter connected with or incident to the subject of the main action may be asserted. See 11 La. 309; 5 Tex. 502.

RECONVERSION. That imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled, and the converted property restored, in contemplation of law, to its original state. Rapalje & L.

RECOPIACION DE INDIAS (Spanish). A collection of Spanish colonial law, promulgated A. D. 1680. See Schmidt, Civ. Law, introd. 94.

RECORD. Record, in its broadest sense, is a written memorial, public or private, of what has been said or done. It is ordinarily applied to public records only, in which sense it is a written memorial made by a public officer, judicial, legislative, or executive, authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done. 6 Call (Va.) 78; 1 Dana (Ky.) 595; 49 Maine 345; 101 Ill. App. 490.

Any record required by law to be kept by an officer, or which he keeps as necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty, is a public record. 15 Wall. (U. S.) 123; 123 Ind. 197; 1 Pa. St. 224.

A judicial record is the written memorial of proceedings had in court, kept by the proper officers of the court.

The common-law record was an enrollment of the pleadings, a statement in formal language of each proceeding had in the progress of the cause, and the judgment. Steph. Pl. 61.

The more common modern practice is to file the pleadings, etc., with the clerk's entries of proceedings on the trial without enrollment.

—In Appellate Practice. The term "record" is used in two senses, as comprising, generally, all the matters certified and transmitted by the lower court to show the proceedings therein, and in a more limited sense as signifying only the record proper, and not the abstract or bill of exceptions. In this limited sense, it includes the pleadings (22 Ill. 326), the process, and the return thereof (22 Me. 442), the verdict (60 Ill. App. 580) or findings (34 Minn. 330), and judgment (60 Ill. App. 580), but not the clerk's minutes (94 N. Y. 508), the opinion of the court below (140 Ill. 637) interlocutory motions or orders (82 Ind. 524; 109 Ill. 245), the evidence (23 Mich. 526; 91 U. S. 127), though documentary (87 Ind. 221), nor the instructions (72 U. S. 663; 119 Ind. 35).

RECORD, CONVEYANCES BY. Extraordinary assurances; as private acts of parliament, and royal grants.

RECORD, COURTS OF. Those whose judicial acts and proceedings are enrolled in parchment, for a perpetual memorial and testimony, which rolls are called the "records of the court," and are of such high and supereminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question. Every court of record has authority to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority. 3 Broom & H. Comm. 21, 30. See "Court."

RECORD, DEBTS OF. Those which appear to be due by the evidence of a court of record; such as a judgment, recognizance, etc. 2 Broom & H. Comm. 655.

RECORD OF NISI PRIUS. In English law. A transcript from the issue roll. It contains a copy of the pleadings and issue. Steph. Pl. 105.

RECORD, TRIAL BY. See "Trial."

RECORDA SUNT VESTIGIA VETUSTATIS ET VERITATIS. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth. 2 Rolle, 296.

RECORDARI. A writ in vogue in North Carolina to bring up the proceedings of a justice of the peace into a court of record. It is an adoption of the English writ, Recordari facias loquelam (q. v.). It is used to review matters apparent of record, or when the remedy by appeal is lost without the fault of the party, its general nature and scope being similar to that of certiorari. See 65 N. C. 211; 82 N. C. 236; 89 N. C. 198.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM (Lat.) In English practice. A writ commanding the sheriff that he cause the plaint to be recorded which is in his county, without writ, between the parties there named, of the cattle, goods, and chattels of the complainant taken and unjustly distrained as it is said, and that he have the said record before the court on a day therein named, and that he prefix the same day to the parties, that then they may be there ready to proceed in the same plaint. 2 Sellon, Prac. 166.

RECORDATUR (Lat.) An order or allowance that the verdict returned on the nisi prius roll be recorded. Bac. Abr. "Arbitration," etc. (D).

RECORDER. A judicial officer of some cities, possessing generally the powers and authority of a judge. 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 299. But see 1 Const. (S. C.) 45.

The recorder in New York city was the chief judge of the criminal courts. There were recorders in various other cities in New York state, and also in the counties thereof, having various powers. See Rev. St. N. Y.

Anciently, "recorder" signified to recite or testify on recollection, as occasion might require, what had previously passed in court; and this was the duty of the judges, thence called "recordeurs." Steph. Pl. note 11.

An officer appointed to make record or enrollment of deeds and other legal instruments authorized by law to be recorded.

RECOUPE, or RECOUP (from Law Fr. recouper, to cut again, or to cut out and keep back). To diminish a claim for damages by cutting out or keeping back a part. Cowell interprets it, "to defalk or discount." Where a man had ten pounds issuing out of certain lands, and he disseised the tenant of the land, in an assize brought by the disseisee, the disseisor might recoupe the rent in the damages, in order to avoid circuity of action. 5 Coke, 30a. An executor de son tort is not allowed to retain or recoupe any part of the deceased's goods to satisfy his own debt. Id.; 3 Campb. 282.

This old word has been revived to a considerable extent in modern law. "Where a man brings an action for breach of a contract between him and the defendant, and the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated, the defendant may if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoupe his damages, arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. The law will cut off so much of the plaintiff's claim as the cross damages may come to." Cowen, J., 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 156. See "Recoupment."

RECOUPMENT (Fr. recouper, to cut again). In practice. That right of the defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from the plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract upon which he sues, or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed upon him in the making or performance of that contract. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 483; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 109; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; 13 N. Y. 151; 3 Ind. 72, 265; 4 Ind. 533; 7 Ind. 200; 9 Ind. 470; 7 Ala. (N. S.) 753; 13 Ala. (N. S.) 587; 16 Ala. (N. S.) 221; 27 Ala. (N. S.) 574; 12 Ark. 699; 16 Ark. 97; 17 Ark. 270; 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 528; 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 239; 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 454; 3 Mich. 281; 4 Mich. 619; 39 Me. 382; 16 Ill. 495; 11 Mo. 415; 18 Mo. 368; 25 Mo. 430.

"Recoupment is distinguished from set-off in these three essential particulars: (1) In being confined to matters arising out of and connected with the transaction or contract on which suit is brought; (2) in having no regard to whether such matters are liquidated or unliquidated; (3) in not being the subject of statutory regulation, but controlled by the common law." 3 Mich. 281. Recoupment belongs to cases where the same contract lays mutual duties and obligations on two parties, and on an action by one for a breach of duty, the other presents a claim of breach of duty under the same contract. In set-off, the position of the defendant is that, though he may owe the plaintiff what he claims, a part or the whole of such debt is paid in reason and justice by a distinct unconnected debt which plaintiff owes him. 2 Pars. Cont. 740.

This is not a new title in the law, although it seems recently to have assumed a new signification. Originally it implied a mere deduction from the claim of the plaintiff, on account of payment in whole or in part, or a former recovery, or some analogous fact. 3 Coke, 65; 4 Coke, 94; 5 Coke, 2, 31; 11 Coke, 51, 52. See note to 6 Nev. & M. 467; Viner, Abr. "Discount," pl. 3, 4, 9, 10; 28 Vt. 413. This meaning has been retained in many modern cases, but under the name of "deduction" or "reduction of damages." 11 East, 232; 1 Maule & S. 318, 323; 5 Maule & S. 6, 10; 4 Burrows, 2133. See "Set-Off."

RECOURSE. See "Without Recourse."

RECOURSSE (Fr.) In French law. Recapture. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, § 23.

RECOVEREE. In old conveyancing. The party who suffered a common recovery.

RECOVERER. The demandant in a common recovery, after judgment has been given in his favor, assumes the name of "recoverer."

RECOVERY. The restoration of a former right, by the solemn judgment of a court of justice. 3 Murph. (N. C.) 169.

A common recovery is a judgment obtained in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in suit. Bac. Tr. 148.

A true recovery, usually known by the name of "recovery" simply, is the procuring a former right by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; as, for example, when judgment is given in favor of the plaintiff when he seeks to recover a thing or a right.

Common recoveries are considered as mere forms of conveyance or common assurances. Although a common recovery is a fictitious suit, yet the same mode of proceeding must be pursued, and all the forms strictly adhered to, which are necessary to be observed in an adversary suit. The first thing, therefore, necessary to be done in suffering a common recovery is that the person who is to be the demandant, and to whom the lands are to be adjudged, shall sue out a writ or praecipe against the tenant of the freehold; when such tenant is usually called the "tenant to the praecipe." In obedience to this writ, the tenant appears in court, either in person or by his attorney; but, instead of defending the title to the land himself, he calls on some other person, who, upon the original purchase, is supposed to have warranted the title, and prays that the person may be called in to defend the title which he warranted, or otherwise to give the tenant lands of equal value to those he shall lose by the defect of his warranty. This is called the "voucher vocatio," or "calling to warranty." The person thus called to warrant, who is usually called the "vouchee," appears in court, is impleaded, and enters into the warranty, by which means he takes upon himself the defense of the land. The defendant then desires leave of the court to imparl, or confer with the vouchee in private, which is granted of course. Soon after the demandant returns into court, but the vouchee disappears or makes default, in consequence of which it is presumed by the court that he has no title to the lands demanded in the writ, and therefore cannot defend them; whereupon judgment is given for the demandant, now called the "recoverer," to recover the lands in question against the tenant, and for the tenant to recover against the vouchee lands of equal value in recompense for those so warranted by him, and now lost by his default. This is called the "recompense of recovery in value;" but as it is customary for the crier of the court to act, who is hence called the "common vouchee," the tenant can only have a nominal and not a real recompense for the land thus recovered against him by the demandant. A writ of habere facias is then sued out, directed to the sheriff of the county in which the lands thus recovered are situated, and on the execution and return of the writ the recovery is completed. The recovery here described is with single voucher; but a recovery may be, and is frequently, suffered with double, treble, or further voucher, as the exigency of the case may require, in which case there are several judgments against the several vouchees.

Common recoveries were invented by the ecclesiastics in order to evade the statute of mortmain, by which they were prohibited from purchasing, or receiving under the pretense of a free gift, any land or tenements whatever. They have been used in some states for the purpose of breaking the entail of estates. See, generally, Cruise, Dig. tit. 36; 2 Wm. Saund. 42, note 7; 4 Kent, Comm. 487; Pigot, Comm. Rec. passim.

All the learning in relation to common recoveries is nearly obsolete, as they are out of use. Rey, a French writer, in his work Des Institutions Judiciaires de l'Angleterre (tom. ii. p. 221), points out what appears to him the absurdity of a common recovery. As to common recoveries, see 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 435; 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 330; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 244; 4 Yeates (Pa.) 413; 1 Whart. (Pa.) 139, 151; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168; 6 Pa. St. 45; 2 Halst. (N. J.) 47; 5 Mass. 438; 6 Mass. 323; 8 Mass. 34; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 292.

RECREANT. A coward; a poltroon. 3 Bl. Comm. 340.

RECRIMINATION. In the law of divorce. The defense that the plaintiff has been guilty of such a matrimonial offense as is a ground for divorce. At common law only an offense of the same nature as that for which plaintiff sued was available in recrimination (1 Hagg. Consist. 144; 4 Ecc. 360); but in the United States, the courts refuse, in the absence of statute, to measure the comparative turpitude of the several statutory grounds of divorce, and any one may be pleaded in recrimination (21 N. J. Eq. 331; 72 Wis. 136).

Recrimination is based on the maxim that suitors in equity must come with clean hands, and, if established, is a complete defense.

RECTE (Lat.) In the civil law. Rightly. Dig. 50. 16. 73. As to the interpretation of this word, see Id.

RECTITUDO. Right or justice; legal dues; tribute or payment. Cowell.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIAE. A writ which lay at common law where a man had right of advowson of a church, and, the parson dying, a stranger had presented. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 30.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRAE ET HAEREDIS. A writ of right of ward of the land and heir. Abolished.

RECTO DE DOTE. A writ of right of dower, which lay for a widow who had received part of her dower, and demanded the residue, against the heir of the husband or his guardian. Abolished. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, § 26.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of right of dower whereof the widow had nothing, which lay where her deceased husband, having divers lands or tenements, had assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby was driven to sue for her thirds against the heir or his guardian. Abolished.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE. A writ of right of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood; as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee simple. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 9.

RECTO QUANDO (or QUIA) DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. A writ of right, when or because the lord had remitted his court, which lay where lands or tenements in the seignory of any lord were in demand by a writ of right. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 16.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER. An abolished writ on disclaimer.

RECTOR. In ecclesiastical law. One who rules or governs. A name given to certain officers of the church.

RECTOR PROVINCIAE (Lat.) In the Roman law. The governor of a province. Code, 1. 40.

RECTORY. In English law. Corporeal real property, consisting of a church, glebe lands, and tithes. 1 Chit. Prac. 163.

RECTUM (Lat.) Right; also a trial or accusation. Bracton; Cowell.

RECTUM ESSE. To be right in court.

RECTUM ROGARE. To ask for right; to petition the judge to do right.

RECTUM, STARE AD. To stand trial or abide by the sentence of the court.

RECTUS IN CURIA (Lat. right in court). The condition of one who stands at the bar, against whom no one objects any offense, or prefers any charge.

When a person outlawed has reversed his outlawry, so that he can have the benefit of the law, he is said to be rectus in curia. Jacob.

RECUPERATIO, I. E., AD REM, PER INJURIAM EXTORTAM SIVE DETENTAM, PER SENTENTIAM JUDICIS RESTITUTIO. Recovery, i. e., restitution by sentence of a judge of a thing wrongfully extorted or detained. Co. Litt. 154a.

RECUPERATIO EST ALICUJUS REI IN CAUSAM, ALTERIUS ADDUCTAE PER JUDICEM ACQUISITIO. Recovery is the acquisition by sentence of a judge of anything brought into the cause of another. Co. Litt. 154a.

RECUPERATORES (Lat.) In Roman law. A species of judges originally established, it is supposed, to decide controversies between Roman citizens and strangers concerning the right to the possession of property requiring speedy remedy, but gradually extended to questions which might be brought before ordinary judges.

After the enlargement of their powers, the difference between them and judges, it is supposed, was simply this: If the praetor named three judges, he called them recuperatores; if one, he called him judex. But opinions on this subject are various. Colman, De Romano judicio recuperatorio. Cicero's oration. (Pro Coecin. 1, 3) was addressed to recuperators.

RECURRENDUM EST AD EXTRAORDINARIUM QUANDO NON VALET ORDINARIUM. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

RECUSANT. In English law. A person who refuses to make the declarations against Catholicism, and promotes, encourages or professes the Catholic religion.

RECUSATIO TESTIS. In the civil law. Rejection of a witness on the ground of incompetency.

RECUSATION. In civil law. A plea or exception by which the defendant requires that the judge having jurisdiction of the cause should abstain from deciding, upon the ground of interest, or for a legal objection to his prejudice.

A recusation is not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but simply to the person of the judge. It may, however, extend to all the judges, as when the party has a suit against the whole court. Poth. Proc. Civ. ch. 2, § 5. It is a personal challenge of the judge for cause. See 2 La. 390; 6 La. 134.

The challenge of jurors. Code Prac. La. arts. 499, 500. An act, of what nature soever it may be, by which a strange heir, by deeds or words, declares he will not be heir. Dig. 29. 2. 95. See, generally, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; 5 Mart. (La.) 292.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. An ancient record, wherein are registered the holders of lands per baroniam in the time of Henry III., the number of hides of land in certain counties before the Conquest, and the ceremonies on the coronation of Eleanor, wife of Henry III., compiled by Alexander de Swenford, archdeacon of Salop, and treasurer of St. Paul's, who died in 1246, 31 Hen. III; Jacob; Cowell.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.) Referring particular things to particular persons. For example, when two descriptions of property are given together in one mass, both the next of kin and the heir cannot take, unless in cases where a construction can be made reddendo singula singulis, that the next of kin shall take the personal estate, and the heir-at-law the real estate. 14 Ves. 490. See 11 East, 513, note; Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (L).

REDDENDUM (Lat.) That clause in a deed by which the grantor reserves something new to himself out of that which he granted before. It usually follows the tenendum, and is generally in these words, "yielding and paying." In every good reddendum or reservation these things must concur, namely: It must be in apt words; it must be of some other thing issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself, nor of something issuing out of another thing; it must be of a thing on which the grantor may resort to distrain; it must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the deed. See 2 Bl. Comm. 299; Co. Litt. 47; Shep. Touch. 80; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 24, § 1; Dane, Abr. Index.

REDDENS CAUSAM SCIENTIAE. Giving the reason of his knowledge.

—In Scotch Practice. A formal phrase used in depositions, preceding the statement of the reason of the witness' knowledge. 2 How. St. Tr. 715.

REDDERE, NIL ALIUD EST QUAM ACCEPTUM RESTITUERE; seu, reddere est quasi retro dare, et redditur dicitur a redeundo, qula retro it. To render is nothing more than to restore that which has been received; or, to render is, as it were, to give back, and it is called "rendering" from "returning," because it goes back again. Co. Litt. 142.

REDDIDIT SE (Lat.) In English practice. An indorsement made on the bail piece when a certificate has been made by the proper officer that the defendant is in custody. Comyn, Dig. "Bail" (Q 4).

REDDITARIUM (Law Lat. from redditus). In old records. A rental, or rent roll. Cowell.

REDDITION. A judicial confession or acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering. Cowell.

REDDITUS SICCUS. See "Reditus Siccus."

REDDOUR (Law Fr.) A rendering. Kelham.

REDEEM. See "Redemption."

REDEEMABLE RIGHTS. Rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, etc., upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted.

REDELIVERY. A yielding and delivering back of a thing.

REDEMISE. A regranting of land demised or leased.

REDEMPTIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. A ransom, or fine. St. Marlb. c. 1. Spelman calls it the heaviest kind of fine (multa gravissima), and makes it to be the same with the Saxon "were" or "weregild."

REDEMPTION (Lat. re, red, back, emptio, a purchase). A purchase back by the seller from the buyer. It is applied to denote the performance of the conditions upon performance of which a conditional sale is to become ineffective as a transfer of title, or, more strictly, a right to demand a reconveyance becomes vested in the seller. In the case of mortgages, this right is a legal right until a breach of conditions, when it becomes an equitable right, and is called the "equity of redemption."

The term is applied to the statutory right of one whose property is sold at various forced sales other than mortgage foreclosure (e. g., for taxes) to buy the same back within a fixed time, ordinarily for the price paid by the purchaser, with interest and costs.

REDEMPTION, EQUITY OF. See "Equity of Redemption."

REDEMPTIONES (Lat.) Heavy fines. Distinguished from misericordia (q. v.).

REDEUNDO (Lat.) Returning; in returning; while returning. 3 East, 89; 2 Strange, 985.

REDHIBERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To have again; to have back; to cause a seller to have again what he had before. Dig. 21. 1. 21. pr.

The returning of a thing purchased to the seller.

REDHIBITION. In civil law. The returning of a thing purchased to the seller, on the ground of some defect or fraud. Calv. Lex. The avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders its use impossible, or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. Civ. Code La. art. 2496.

This is essentially a civil-law right. The effect of the rule expressed by the maxim caveat emptor is to prevent any such right at common law, except in cases of express warranty. 2 Kent, Comm. 374; Sugd. Vend. 222.

REDHIBITORY ACTION. In civil law. An action instituted to avoid a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold which renders its use impossible, or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. Civ. Code La. art. 2496.

REDHIBITORY DEFECT (or VICE). In the civil law. A defect in an article sold, for which the seller may be compelled to take it back; a defect against which the seller is bound to warrant. Poth. Contr. Sale, No. 203.

REDISSEISIN. In old English law. A second disseisin of a person of the same tenements, and by the same disseisor, by whom he was before disseised. 3 Bl. Comm. 188; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 29. Called in the statute of Marlbridge (chapter 8) a repeated disseisin.

The name of a writ which lay in such case (breve de redisseisina). Reg. Orig. 206b.

REDITUS ALBI (Lat.) A rent payable in money; sometimes called "white rent," or "blanchefarm." See "Alba Firma."

REDITUS ASSISUS. A set or standing rent.

REDITUS CAPITALES. Chief rent paid by freeholders to go quit of all other services.

REDITUS NIGRI. A rent payable in grain, work, and the like. It was also called "black mail." This name was given to it to distinguish it from reditus albi, which was payable in money.

REDITUS QUIETI. Quit rents (q. v.)

REDITUS SICCUS. Rent seck. See "Rent."

REDMEN. Customary tenants required to ride on the business or errands of their lord.

REDOBATORIS (Law Lat.) Those that buy stolen cloth, and turn it into some other color or fashion, that it may not be recognized; redubbers. Barr. Obs. St. (2d Ed.) 87, note; 3 Inst. 134; Britt. c. 29.

REDRAFT. In commercial law. A bill of exchange drawn at the place where another bill was made payable, and where it was protested, upon the place where the first bill was drawn, or, when there is no regular commercial intercourse rendering that practicable, then in the next best or most direct practicable course. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 406. See "Re-Exchange."

REDRESS. The act of receiving satisfaction for an injury sustained. For the mode of obtaining redress, see "Remedies;" 1 Chit. Prac. Anal. Table.

REDUBBOURS (Law Fr.; Law Lat. redobatores, q. v.) In old English law. Persons who knowingly bought stolen clothes, and changed them into another form; achatauntz ascient dras embles, et les atirent en auter forme. Britt. c. 29; Cowell.

REDUCTION. In Scotch law. An action brought for the purpose of rescinding, annulling, or cancelling some deed, bond, contract, or other instrument in writing. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 4. pp. 158, 159. See Bell, Dict.

REDUCTION EX CAPITE LECTI. By the law of Scotland, the heir in heritage was entitled to reduce all voluntary deeds granted to his prejudice by his predecessor within sixty days preceding the predecessor's death; provided the maker of the deed, at its date, was laboring under the disease of which he died, and did not subsequently go to kirk or market unsupported. Bell, Dict. Abolished 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81.

REDUCTION IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. One form of the action of reduction, in which falsehood and forgery are alleged against the deed or document sought to be set aside. Bell, Dict.

REDUCTION INTO POSSESSION. The act of exercising the right conferred by a chose in action, so as to convert it into a chose in possession; thus, a debt is reduced into possession by payment.

REDUNDANCY. In pleading. The averment of matter foreign to the issue, or the needless repetition of immaterial averments. 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 660.

RE-ENTRY. The resuming or retaking of that possession of lands and tenements which one has lately foregone. See "Entry."

REEVE. An ancient English officer of justice, inferior in rank to an alderman. He was a ministerial officer appointed to execute process, keep the king's peace, and put the laws in execution. He witnessed all contracts and bargains, brought offenders to justice, and delivered them to punishment, took bail for such as were to appear at the county court, and presided at the court or folcmote. He was also called "gerefa."

There were several kinds of reeves; as, the shire gerefa, shire reeve, or sheriff; the heh gerefa, or high sheriff, tithing reeve, burgh or borough reeve.

RE-EXCHANGE. The expense incurred by a bill's being dishonored in a foreign country, where it is made payable and returned to that country in which it was made or indorsed, and there taken up. 11 East, 265; 2 Campb. 65.

It is the sum for which a sight bill must be drawn at the time and place of dishonor at the then rate of exchange on the place where the drawer or indorser sought to be charged resides, in order to realize, at the place of dishonor, the amount of the dishonored bill, and the expenses consequent on its dishonor. 2 Daniell, Neg. Inst. § 1445. See "Redraft."

REFALO. A word composed of the three initial syllables, re. fa. lo., for recordari facias loquelam. 2 Sellon, Prac. 160; 8 Dowl. 514.

REFECTION (Lat. re, again, facio, to make). In civil law. Reparation; re-establishment of a building. Dig. 19. 1. 6. 1.

REFEREE. The person to whom a reference (q. v.) is made.

REFEREE IN CASE OF NEED. A person whose name may be inserted in a bill of exchange by the drawer or an indorser, to whom the holder may resort in case the bill is dishonored by nonacceptance or nonpayment. The usual form is "in case of need, apply to _____." Chit. Bills, 165; N. Y. Neg. Inst. Law, § 215.

REFERENCE. A sending or direction to a person or place.

—In Contracts. A statement in a writing, wherein it points to another for the matters therein contained.

—In Mercantile Law. A direction or request by a party who asks a credit to the person from whom he desires it to some other person named, in order to ascertain the character or mercantile standing of the former.

—In Practice. The sending of a pending cause, or some question therein, by the court in which it is pending, to a private person to hear and determine the cause, or some question therein, or to take evidence and report the same, with or without his opinion thereon, to the court.

Distinguished from arbitration. The submission of a controversy to a private person by the parties is sometimes called "reference," but the term "reference" properly applies only to reference by a court in the exercise of its powers as such, whether it be with or without the consent of the parties. The cases in which reference may be made, and the powers and duties of referees, are governed by varying statutes. Generally speaking, any cause may be referred with the consent of the parties, and any cause in which there is no constitutional right to a jury trial may be referred, in the discretion of the court. Whether the referee merely report evidence or determine the cause, his report must be confirmed by the court appointing him, and the court has extensive power of revision on motion to confirm.

REFERENCE IN CASE OF NEED. See "Referee in Case of Need."

REFERENCE TO RECORD. Under the English practice, when an action is commenced, an entry of it is made in the cause book according to the year, the initial letter of the surname of the first plaintiff, and the place of the action, in numerical order among those commenced in the same year, e. g., "1876, A. 26;" and all subsequent documents in the action (such as pleadings and affidavits) bear this mark, which is called the "reference to the record."

REFERENDARIUS (Lat.) An officer by whom the order of causes was laid before the Roman emperor, the desires of petitioners made known, and answers returned to them. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

REFERENDARY. In Saxon law. A master of requests; an officer to whom petitions to the king were referred. Spelman.

REFERENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.) Referring individual or separate words to separate subjects; making a distributive reference of words in an instrument; construing distributively. 11 East, 322; 2 Powell, Dev. 112.

REFERENDUM (Lat.) In international law. A note addressed by an ambassador to his government, submitting to its consideration propositions made to him touching an object over which he has no sufficient power, and is without instructions. When such a proposition is made to an ambassador, he accepts it ad referendum; that is, under the condition that it shall be acted upon by his government, to which it is referred.

—In Political Economy. A system of legislation, whereby proposed laws are submitted to the popular vote.

REFORM. To reorganize; to rearrange. Thus, the jury "shall be reformed by putting to and taking out of the persons so impanelled." St. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 12; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A).

To reform an instrument in equity is to make a decree that a deed or other agreement shall be made or construed as it was originally intended by the parties, when an error or mistake as to a fact has been committed. A contract has been reformed although the party applying to the court was in the legal profession, and he himself drew the contract, it appearing clear that it was framed so as to admit of a construction inconsistent with the true agreement of the parties. 1 Sim. & S. 210; 3 Russ. 424. But a contract will not be reformed in consequence of an error of law. 1 Russ. & M. 418; 1 Chit. Prac. 124.

REFORMATORY. All places and institutions in which efforts are made either to cultivate the intellect, instruct the conscience, or improve the conduct; places in which persons voluntarily assemble, receive instruction, and submit to discipline, or are detained therein for either of these purposes by force. 49 Conn. 35. Ordinarily applied to penal or quasi penal institutions; but it was said in the case above cited to be a term of too uncertain signification to support a bequest for the purpose of building a reformatory.

REFRESH THE MEMORY. To revive the recollection of a subject by referring to something connected with it. Commonly applied to the right of a witness to refer, even on the stand, to memoranda made by him at the time of a transaction, but which are not of themselves evidence, to refresh his recollection. See 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 301; 6 Pick. (Mass.) 222; 2 Conn. 213.

REFRESHER. In English practice. A fee paid to counsel on the trial of an action, in addition to the retainer paid him with his brief. In the practice of the queen's bench division, a refresher is usually paid to counsel for every day a trial lasts after the first day.

REFULLUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A flowing back. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 4.

REFUND. To pay back by the party who has received it, to the party who has paid it, money which ought not to have been paid.

On a deficiency of assets, executors and administrators cum testamento annexo are entitled to have refunded to them legacies which they may have paid, or so much as may be necessary to pay the debts of the testator; and in order to insure this they are generally authorized to require a re-funding bond. See Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (H).

REFUSAL. The act of declining to receive or to do something. In some cases, a neglect to perform a duty will be construed as a refusal; but, ordinarily, demand is essential to refusal. 6 Gray (Mass.) 224.

Refusal is sometimes used in the sense of "option;" thus, to "give a refusal" of property means to give an option of buying it.

REFUTANTIA (Law Lat.) In old records. An acquittance or acknowledgment of renouncing all future claim. Cowell.

REG. GEN. An abbreviation of regula generalis. 6 East, 1.

REGAL FISH. Whales and sturgeons. 2 Steph. Comm. 19, note 448.

REGALE (Law Lat.) In old French law. A payment made to the seigneur of a fief, on the election of every bishop or other ecclesiastical feudatory, corresponding with the relief paid by a lay feudatory. Steph. Lect. 235.

REGALIA. This seems to be an abbreviation of "jura regalia," royal rights, or those rights which a king has by virtue of his prerogative. Hence owners of counties palatine were formerly said to have "jura regalia" in their counties as fully as the king in his palace. 1 Bl. Comm. 117.

Some writers divide the royal prerogative into majora and minora regalia, the former including the regal dignity and power, the latter the revenue or fiscal prerogatives of the crown. 1 Bl. Comm. 117.

REGALIA FACERE. To do homage or fealty to the sovereign by a bishop when he is invested with the regalia.

REGALITY. A territorial jurisdiction in Scotland conferred by the crown. The lands were said to be given in liberam regalitatem, and the persons receiving the right were termed "lords of regality." Bell, Dict.

REGARD (Law Fr.) Reference; relation. Kelham. Respect. Id. Reward; fee; a perquisite or allowance. Id.

REGARD, COURT OF. See "Court of Regard."

REGARD OF THE FOREST. In old English law. The oversight or inspection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs. Manw. For. Law.

REGARDANT (Fr. seeing or vigilant). A villein regardant was one who had the charge to do all base services within the manor, and to see the same freed of annoyances. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bl. Comm. 93*.

REGARDATOR (Law Lat.) In old forest law. A regarder (q. v.) Regardatores nos- tri eant per forestas ad faciendum regardum, our regarders shall go through the forests to make regard. Cart. de Foresta, 9 Hen. III. c. 5.

REGARDER (Law Lat. regardator; from Law Fr. regardeur, an inspector). In forest law. An officer of the forest, appointed to supervise all other officers. Crompt. Jur. 153; Manw. For. Laws; Cowell.

REGIE INCONSULTO (Lat.) In English law. A writ issued from the sovereign to the judges, not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until advised. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 97.

REGENCY. The authority of the person in monarchical countries invested with the right of governing the state, in the name of the monarch, during his minority, absence, sickness, or other inability.

REGENT. A ruler; a governor. The term is usually applied to one who governs a regency, or rules in the place of another.

In the canon law, it signifies a master or professor of a college. Dict. Canonique.

It sometimes means simply a ruler, director, or superintendent; as in New York, where the board who have the superintendence of all the colleges, academies, and schools are called the "Regents of the State of New York."

REGIA DIGNITAS EST INDIVISIBILIS, et quaelibet alia derivativa dignitas est similiter indivisibilla. The kingly power is indivisible, and every other derivative power is similarly indivisible. 4 Inst. 243.

REGIA VIA (Lat.; Law Fr. real chymin). In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway. Co. Litt. 56a.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM (Lat.) An ancient book purporting to contain the law of Scotland, and said to have been compiled by King David, who reigned 1124-1153. It is not part of the law of Scotland, though it was ordered to be revised with other ancient laws of Scotland by parliaments of 1405 and 1407. Stair, Inst. p. 12, § 16; Id. p. 508, § 27. So Craig, Inst. 1. 8. 11; Scott, Border Antiq. prose works, 7, 30; but Ersk. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 1, § 32, and Ross, Lect. 11, p. 60 et seq. maintain its authenticity. It is cited in some modern Scotch cases. 2 Swin. 409; 3 Bell, H. L. Sc. It is, according to Dr. Robertson, a servile copy of Glanville. Robertson, Hist. Charles V., vol. 1, note 25, p. 262; Ersk. Inst. 1. 1. 3.

REGICIDE (Lat. rex, king, cedere, to kill, slay). The killing of a king, and, by extension, of a queen. Theorie des Lois Criminelles, vol. 1, p. 300.

REGIDOR. In Spanish law. One of a body, never exceeding twelve, who formed a part of the ayuntamiento, or municipal council, in every capital of a jurisdiction in the colonies of the Indies. The office of regidor was held for life; that is to say, during the pleasure of the supreme authority. In most places the office was purchased. In some cities, however, they were elected by persons of the district, called capitulares. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

REGIME DOTAL. In French law. The dot, being the property which the wife brings to the husband as her contribution to the support of the burdens of the marriage, and which may either extend as well to future as to present property, or be expressly confined to the present property of the wife, is subject to certain regulations which are summarized in the phrase "regime dotal." The husband has the entire administration during the marriage; but, as a rule, where the dot consists of immovables, neither the husband nor the wife, nor both of them together, can either sell or mortgage it. The dot is returnable upon the dissolution of the marriage, whether by death or otherwise. Brown.

REGIMIENTO. In Spanish law. The body of regidores, who never exceeded twelve, forming a part of the municipal council, or ayuntamiento, in every capital of a jurisdiction. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

REGISTER, or REGISTRAR. An officer authorized by law to keep a record called a "register" or "registry;" as, the register for the probate of wills.

REGISTER OF WRITS. A book preserved in the English court of chancery, in which were entered, from time to time, all forms of writs once issued. St. Westminster II. c. 25.

It is spoken of as one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 159; 4 Inst. 150; 8 Coke, pref.; 3 Bl. Comm. 183*. It was first printed and published in the reign of Hen. VIII. This book is still in authority, as containing, in general, an accurate transcript of the forms of all writs as then framed, and as they ought still to be framed in modern practice. But many of the writs now in use are not contained in it; and a variation from the register is not conclusive against the propriety of a form, if other sufficient authority can be adduced to prove its correctness. Steph. Pl. 7, 8.

REGISTERED BONDS. A "registered" bond is one which is payable to a particular individual whose name is entered on the books of the corporation debtor as the registered owner. 2 Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations 1920.

REGISTER'S COURT. In American law. A court in the state of Pennsylvania, which has jurisdiction in matters of probate.

REGISTRARIUS (Lat.) An ancient name given to a notary. In England this name is confined to designate the officer of some court the records or archives of which are in his custody.

REGISTRUM BREVIUM (Lat.) The name of an ancient book which was a collection of writs. See "Register of Writs."

REGISTRY. A book, authorized by law, in which writings are registered or recorded.

REGLAMENTO (Spanish). In Spanish colonial law. A written instruction given by a competent authority, without the observance of any peculiar form. Schmidt, Civ. Law, introd. 93, note.

REGNAL YEARS. A table of the English regnal years will be found in this work under title "King."

REGNANT. One having authority as a king; one in the exercise of royal authority.

REGNI POPULI. A name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

REGNUM ECCLESIASTICUM. The ecclesiastical kingdom. 2 Hale, P. C. 324.

REGNUM NON EST DIVISIBILE. The kingdom is not divisible. Co. Litt. 165.

REGRANT. In the English law of real property, when, after a person has made a grant, the property granted comes back to him (e. g., by escheat or forfeiture), and he grants it again, he is said to have regranted it. The phrase is chiefly used in the law of copyholds. Thus, before the fines and recoveries act, one mode of barring an entail in copyhold was a preconcerted forfeiture by the tenant, followed by a regrant to him in fee by the lord.

REGRATING. In criminal law. Every practice or device, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other merchandise, is so denominated. 3 Inst. 196; 1 Russ. Crimes, 169.

In the Roman law, persons who monopolized grain, and other produce of the earth, were called dardanarii, and were variously punished. Dig. 47. 11. 6.

REGRESS. Returning; going back; opposed to "ingress."

REGULA (Lat.) In practice. A rule. Regula generalis, a general rule; a standing rule or order of a court. Frequently abbreviated Reg. Gen.

REGULA CATONIANA (Lat.) In the Roman law. The rule of Cato; a rule respecting the validity of dispositions by will. See Dig. 34. 7.

REGULA EST, JURIS QUIDEM IGNORANTIAM CULQUE NOCERE, FACTI VERO IGNORANTIAM NON NOCERE. The rule is, that ignorance of law does not excuse, but that ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct. Dig. 22. 6. 9; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 232. See Irving, Civ. Law (4th Ed.) 74.

REGULA PRO LEGE, SI DEFICIT LEX. In default of the law, the maxim rules.

REGULAR CLERGY. Monks who lived according to the rules of their respective houses or societies, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who did their duties "in seculo," and hence were called secular clergy. 1 Bl. Comm. 387, note.

REGULAR DEPOSIT. One where the thing deposited must be returned. It is distinguished from an "irregular deposit." See "Deposit."

REGULAR PROCESS. Regular process is that which has been lawfully issued by a court or magistrate having competent jurisdiction.

REGULARITER (Law Lat.) In old English law. Regularly; strictly; according to rule; as a general rule. Bracton, fol. 87b. 223.

REGULARITER, NON VALET PACTUM DE RE MEA NON ALIENANDA. Regularly, a contract not to alienate my property is not binding. Co. Litt. 223.

REGULARS. In ecclesiastical law. Those who profess and follow a certain rule of life (regula), belong to a religious order, and observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Wharton.

REGULATE. To direct, govern, or restrict. A governmental power to regulate does not include a power to prohibit. 39 N. J. Law, 44; 70 Mich. 396.

REGULUS (Lat.) In Saxon law. A title sometimes given to the earl or comes, in old charters. Spelman.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat. do you cause to regain seisin). When a sheriff in the habere facias seisinam had delivered seisin of more than he ought, this judicial writ lay to make him restore seisin of the excess. Reg. Jud. 13. 51. 54.

REHABILITATION. The act by which a man is restored to his former ability, of which he had been deprived by a conviction, sentence, or judgment of a competent tribunal.

REHEARING.

—In Appellate Practice. A second consideration, on further argument, given to a cause after decision.

—In Chancery Practice. A retrial of the issues; a new trial. See "New Trial."

REI (Lat.; plur. of res, q. v.) In the civil law. In a special sense, persons from whom a thing is demanded (ii unde petitur). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 17, § 841. Defendants. In a general sense, parties to an action; litigating parties (ii quorum de re disceptatur), including both the actor and the reus proper. Id. Parties to a contract. Id.

REI INTERVENTUS (Lat.) When a party is imperfectly bound in an obligation, he may, in general, annul such imperfect obligation; but when he has permitted the opposite party to act as if his obligation or agreement were complete, such things have intervened as to deprive him of the right to rescind such obligation. These circumstances are the rei interventus. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 328, 329; Burton, Man. Scot. 128.

REI TURPIS NULLUM MANDATUM est. A mandate of an illegal thing is void Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3.

REIF (Scotch; from Saxon reaf). In old Scotch law. Robbery. Skene ad Leg. Alexandri R. c. 2, par. 2; Cowell.

REINSURANCE. Insurance effected by an underwriter upon a subject against certain risks with another underwriter, on the same subject, against all or a part of the same risks, not exceeding the same amount. In the original insurance, he is the insurer; in the second, the assured.

REIPUBLICAE INTEREST VOLUNTATES defunctorum effectum sortiri. It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.

REISA. L. Lat. (from Sax. raese, a rush). In old European law. A sudden military expedition; a sally. Spelman.

REISSUABLE NOTES. Bank notes which, after having been once paid, may again be put into circulation.

They cannot properly be called "valuable securities" while in the hands of the maker, but, in an indictment, may properly be called "goods and chattels." Ryan & M. 218. See 5 Mason (U. S.) 537; 2 Russ. Crimes, 147. And such notes would fall within the description of "promissory" notes. 2 Leach, C. C. 1090, 1093; Russ. & R. 232.

REJOINDER. In common-law pleading. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. The second pleading of defendant in the common-law series.

REJOINING GRATIS. Rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication, without a notice to rejoin or demand of rejoinder. Wharton, "Rejoinder;" 1 Archb. Prac. 280, 317; 10 Mees. & W. 12. But judgment cannot be signed without demanding rejoinder. 3 Dowl. 537.

RELATIO EST FICTIO JURIS ET INTENTA ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. 3 Coke, 28.

RELATIO SEMPER FIAT UT VALEAT dispositio. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

RELATION (Lat. re, back, fero, to bear). —In Civil Law. The report which the judges made of the proceedings in certain suits to the prince were so called. These relations took place when the judge had no law to direct him, or when the laws were susceptible of difficulties. It was then referred to the prince, who was the author of the law, to give the interpretation. They were made in writing, and contained the pleadings of the parties and all the proceedings, together with the judge's opinion, and prayed the emperor to order what should be done. This ordinance of the prince thus required was called a "re-script." Their use was abolished by Justinian (Nov. 125).

—In Contracts and Conveyances. A fiction of law whereby an act done at one time operates as if done at another time. 79 Ill. 467. An act so operating is said to do so by relation.

All the several parts and ceremonies necessary to complete a conveyance shall be taken together as one act, and operate from the substantial part by relation. Thus a deed given by a sheriff, upon a previous sale on execution, relates back to, and, in judgment of law, is executed at the time of the sale. 79 Ill. 467. An entry in a United States land office on which a patent issues relates to the entry, and takes date with it. 21 How. 228.

A deed not acknowledged until long after its execution has been held to take effect from its date, the acknowledgment operating as of that time by relation. 75 Mo. 613.

RELATIVE. One connected with another by blood or affinity; a relation; a kinsman or kinswoman. In an adjective sense, having relation or connection with some other person or thing; as, relative rights, relative powers.

RELATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance. Burr. Circ. Ev. 121, note (d).

RELATIVE POWERS. Those which relate to land. So called to distinguish them from those which are collateral to it.

These powers are appendant; as, where a tenant for life has a power of making leases in possession. They are in gross when a person has an estate in the land, with a power of appointment, the execution of which falls out of the compass of his estate, but, notwithstanding, is annexed in privity to it, and takes effect in the appointee out of an interest appointed in the appointer. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1930.

RELATIVE RIGHTS. Those to which a person is entitled in consequence of his relation with others; such as the rights of a husband in relation to his wife; of a father as to his children; of a master as to his servant; of a guardian as to his ward.

In general, the superior may maintain an action for an injury committed against his relative rights. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 2277-2296; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3491; 4 Bouv. Inst. notes 3615-3618. See "Action."

RELATIVORUM COGNITO UNO, COGNOSCITUR ET ALTERUM. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is known. Cro. Jac. 539.

RELATOR. A rehearser or teller; one who, by leave of court, brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto, or other writ issuing in the name of the state, on the relation of a private person.

RELATRIX (Law Lat. and Eng.) In practice. A female relator, or petitioner. 14 Pet. (U. S.) 500, 517.

RELAXARE (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. To release. Relaxavi, relaxasse, have released. Litt. § 445. In 10 Coke, 52b, reference was made to a case in 4 Edw. VI., where it was said that lazare is properly to set prisoners in fetters at liberty, and relaxare is to do it quickly; and metaphorice relaxare is to set at liberty fettered estates and interests, and to make them free and absolute.

RELAXATIO (Law Lat. from relaxare, q. v.) In old conveyancing. A release; an instrument by which a person relinquishes to another his right in anything. Y. B. P. 13 Hen. VI. 9; Spelman. A deed of release. See "Release."

• RELAXATION. In old Scotch practice. Letters passing the signet (q. v.) by which a debtor was relaxed (released) from the horn; that is, from personal diligence. Bell, Dict. See "Horning."

RELEASE. The giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists, or the right is to be exercised or enforced.

Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it, or some estate in the same. Shep. Touch. 320; Litt. 444; Nelson, Abr.; Bac. Abr.; Viner, Abr.; Rolle, Abr. In the former class, a mere right is surrendered; in the other, not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the releasee.

An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means.

An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement. See Poth. Obl. notes 608, 609.

A release by operation of law is one which, though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, the others are also released by operation of law. 3 Salk. 298; Hob. 10, 66; 4 Mod. 380; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 207.

—In Estates. The conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein. Shep. Touch. 320. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the tenement, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished. Burton, Real Prop. 15*. A discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to one that held some former estate in possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 324.

The words generally used in such conveyance are "remised, released, and forever quitclaimed." Litt. § 445.

Releases of land are, in respect of their operation, divided into five sorts:

(1) Releases that inure by way of passing the estate, or mitter l'estate; e. g., a release by joint tenant to co-joint tenant, which conveyance will pass a fee without words of limitation.

(2) Releases that inure by way of passing the right, or mitter le droit; e. g., by disseisee to disseisor.

(3) Releases that inure by enlargement of the estate. Here there must be an actual privity of estate at the time between releasor and releasee, who must have an estate actually vested in him capable of enlargement.

(4) Releases that inure by way of extinguishment; e. g., a lord releasing his seigniorial rights to his tenant.

(5) Releases that inure by way of feoffment and entry; e. g. if there are two disseisors, a release to one will give him a sole estate, as if the disseisee had regained seisin by entry, and enfeoffed him. 2 Bl. Comm. 325*. See 4 Cruise, Dig. 71; Gilb. Ten. 82; Co. Litt. 264; 3 Brock. (U. S.) 185; 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 487; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 143; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 195; 7 Mass. 381; 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158; 2 N. H. 402; 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 299; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 456.

The technicalities of English law as to releases are not generally applicable in the United States. The corresponding conveyance is a quitclaim deed. 2 Bouv. Inst. 416; 21 Ala. (N. S.) 125.

—In Admiralty. An instrument under seal of the court, commanding the marshal to release a ship or other property arrested in a proceeding in rem on the giving of bail by the owner.

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENLARGING AN ESTATE. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENTRY AND FEOFFMENT. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF EXTINGUISHMENT. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING A RIGHT. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING AN ESTATE. See "Release."

RELEASE TO USES. The conveyance by a deed of release to one party to the use of another is so termed. Thus, when a conveyance of lands was effected, by those instruments of assurance termed a "lease" and "release," from A. to B. and his heirs, to the use of C. and his heirs, in such case C. at once took the whole fee simple in such lands; B., by the operation of the statute of uses, being made a mere conduit pipe for conveying the estate to C., and B. was called the "releasee to uses."

RELEASEE. A person to whom a release is made.

RELEASOR. He who makes a release.

RELEGATIO (Lat.) A kind of banishment known to the civil law, which did not take away the rights of citizenship, which deportatio did.

Some say that relegatio was temporary, deportatio perpetual; that relegatio did not take away the property of the exile, and that deportatio did; but these distinctions do not seem always to exist. There was one sort of relegatio for slaves, viz., in agros; another for freedom, viz., in provincias. Relegatio only exiled from certain limits; deportatio confined to a particular place (locus poenae). Calv. Lex.

RELEGATION (from Lat. relegatio, q. v.) In old English law. Banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133.

RELEVAMEN (Law Lat. from relevare, to lift up). In old English law. Relief; one of the incidents of the feudal tenure. Lib. Rames, § 310; Spelman. In Domesday Book it is called relevamentum; in the laws of Edward the Confessor, relevatio; in Magna Charta, and generally in old English and Scotch law relevium. Domesday Book, tit. "Berocscire, Walingford;" LL. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

RELEVANCY. Applicability to the issue joined. That quality of evidence which renders it properly applicable in determining the truth or falsity of the matters in issue between the parties to a suit. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

RELEVANT. In the law of evidence. Having relation; applicable. Relevant evidence is evidence applicable to the issue.

RELEVER. (L. Fr.) To relieve; to pay a relief. Britt. c. 69.

RELEVIVM. L. Lat. [from L. Fr. relevare, to raise or lift again.] In old English and Scotch law. Relief; one of the incidents of the feudal tenure. Bract. fol. 84. Spelman.

RELICT. A widow; as A. B., relict of C. B.; A. B., widow of C. B.

RELICTA VERIFICATIONE (Lat. his pleading being abandoned). In pleading. A confession of judgment made after plea pleaded, viz., a cognovit actionem, accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea.

RELICION (Lat. relinquo, to leave behind). An increase of the land by the retreat or recession of the sea or a river. Sometimes called "dereliction."

If the reliction be gradual, the land belongs to the riparian owner, but if it be sudden, and considerable, it belongs to the state (13 N. Y. 296; 1 Gill & J. [Md.] 249), unless the land has been previously lost by submergence (100 N. Y. 424).

RELIEF.

—In Feudal Law. A sum payable by the new tenant, the duty being incident to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant. At one time, the amount was arbitrary; but afterwards the relief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bl. Comm. 65.

—In Practice. A general name for the remedy sought or allowed in any action, legal or equitable.

RELIEVE. In feudal law. To hold or depend; thus, a tenant was said to relieve of the crown. Now obsolete.

RELIGION (Lat. re, back, ligo, to bind). Real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow men.

Any system of faith and worship; as the religion of the Turks, of Hindoos, of Christians; true and false religion. 200 Ill. 572.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATION. Any corporation the charter powers of which are to be used in aid of the propagation and practice of a religious belief, but the fact that a corporation is under the control of members of a particular church does not make it a religious corporation. Nor does the fact that a board of trustees of a corporation college is to be elected by an association of churches, constitute it a sectarian or religious corporation. Corporations organized under acts authorizing the incorporation of religious societies or congregations are not to be classified as ecclesiastical corporations, but are civil corporations and subject to the same principles of law, and the same control by the civil courts, as any other civil corporation. 1 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 141.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. As secured by the provisions of the constitution of the United States, and of the several states, means freedom from any establishment of a religion, from compulsory support of religious instruction, from compulsory attendance on religious worship, and from restraints on the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience, or upon the expression of religious belief. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 575.

The full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not violate the laws of morality and propriety, or infringe personal rights. 13 Wall. (U. S.) 728. But freedom from restraint on the exercise of religion does not permit one to break the law, violate peace and good order, or interfere with another's liberty of action, 63 Mich. 396, because his unlawful acts were in the exercise of his religion, or according to the dictates of his conscience. 98 U. S. 166.

RELIGIOUS MEN (Law Lat. religiosi). Such as entered into some monastery or convent. In old English deeds, the vendee was often restrained from aliening to "Jews or religious men," lest the lands should fall into mortmain. Religious men were civilly dead. Blount.

RELIGIOUS TEST. A belief in certain dogmas of religion which are prerequisite to the holding of a civil office, or the exercise of any civil right. "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." Const. art. 6, § 3.

RELIGIOUS USE. See "Charitable Uses."

RELINQUISHMENT. A forsaking, abandoning, or giving over a right; for example, a plaintiff may relinquish a bad count in a declaration, and proceed on a good; a man may relinquish a part of his claim in order to give a court jurisdiction. The word has no exact technical significance.

RELIQUA. The remainder or debt which a person finds himself debtor in upon the balancing or liquidation of an account. Hence reliquary, the debtor of a reliqua; as also a person who only pays piecemeal. Enc. Lond.

RELIQUI (Lat.) In the civil law. The rest. Held to signify "all" (universos, omnes). Dig. 50. 16. 95. 160.

RELOCATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A renewal of a lease on its determination on like terms as before. It may be either express or tacit. The latter is when the tenant holds over with the knowledge and without objection of the landlord. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 379.

RELOCATION. In Scotch law. A reletting or renewal of a lease; a tacit relocation is permitting a tenant to hold over without any new agreement.

REM domino vel non domino vendente duobus.

In jure est potior venditione prior.

Where one, whether owner or not owner, sells a thing to two persons, the party who is first sold to has the better right. A Latin couplet quoted in Fleta (lib. 3, c. 15, § 8).

REMAINDER. The remnant of an estate in lands or tenements expectant on a particular estate created together with the same at one time. Co. Litt. 143a.

To constitute a valid remainder at common law, the estate in remainder must be created (1) on purchase (2 Washb. Real Prop. 586); (2) at the same time with a particular estate (2 Bl. Comm. 167); (3) less than a fee (Id. 164); and (4) must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines, so that the freehold shall not remain in abeyance (Id. 168); but (5) the remainder must rest on the natural termination of the particular estate, and not be in defeasance of it (Fearne, Cont. Rem. 13).

—In the United States. The term "remainder" is applied to various estates in expectancy, limited on precedent estates which do not fulfill all the requirements of the common law.

Remainders are either vested or contingent.

(1) A vested remainder is one by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent. A determinate remainderman in esse at the time of its creation is essential to a vested remainder.

A future estate is vested where there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the lands on the ceasing of the immediate or precedent estate. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. c. 1, tit. 2, § 13. This definition has been justly criticised so far as it is intended to be declaratory of the common law, in that it omits the essential that the person who shall take the remainder shall be ascertained before the termination of the particular estate.

(2) A contingent remainder is one where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 2 Bl. Comm. 169.

A remainder which, as regards the possession or enjoyment, depends on a contingency other than the survival of the re-mainderman. Smith, Ex. Int. § 171.

It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment, which marks the difference between a vested and a contingent interest. 4 Kent, Comm. 206; 2 Cruise, Dig. 270.

REMAINDERMAN. One who is entitled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired.

RECALLARE. (L. Lat.) In old European law. To summon to court a second time; to resummon. Spelman.

REMAND. To send back.

—Of Prisoner. The ordering of a prisoner's return to custody pending proceedings, or on a determination that he is not entitled to release.

—Of a Cause. The sending it back to the same court out of which it came, for the purpose of having some action on it there. March, 100.

REMANENT PRO DEFECTU EMPtorum (Lat. remanent, they remain, pro defectu, through lack, emptorum, or buyers). In practice. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, that the same remains unsold for want of buyers; in that case, the plaintiff is entitled to a venditioni exponas. Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (C 8).

REMANENTIA (Law Lat. from remanere, q. v.) In old English law. A remainder. Spelman.

A perpetuity, or perpetual estate (pro perpetuo). Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; Bracton, fol. 244; Reg. Maj. lib. 2, c. 23.

REMANERE (Lat.)

—In Old English Practice. To remain; to stop or stay; to "demur," in the old sense of the word. Primo queratur a tenente si aliquid velit vel sciat dicere quare assisa debeat remanere, it first should be inquired of the tenant if he will or know to say anything why the assize should stay,—that is, why it should not proceed. Bracton, fol. 184b. Non propter minorem aetatem petentium remanebit assisa, the assize shall not stay on account of the nonage of the demandants. Id. fol. 276. Hence the term remanet, in modern practice.

REMANET (Lat.) In practice. The causes which are entered for trial, and which cannot be tried during the term, are remanets. Lee, "Trial," 1 Sellon, Prac. 434; 1 Phil. Ev. 4.

REMEDIAL LAW. That part of the body of the law which contains the remedies by which rights are enforced and wrongs redressed, and the rules by which the substantive law (q. v.) is applied.

REMEDIAL STATUTE. A statute having for its object either to redress some existing grievance, or to introduce some regulation or proceeding conducive to the public good. 58 Ill. 247; 30 Ill. App. 109; or remove some defect in the law, and thus giving a more perfect remedy for private wrongs. Used usually in contradistinction to "penal statute," but sometimes to "declaratory statute."

A penal law may be also remedial, and a statute may be remedial in one part and penal in another. 103 Ill. 390.

REMEDY. The means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. "The being put in possession of that right whereof the party injured is deprived." 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 407.

The procedure whereby redress is secured, as distinguished from the right to be enforced. 103 U. S. 717.

It includes every original application to a court of justice for a judgment or an order. Thus, the application for admission to practice as an attorney or counselor is a remedy. 22 N. Y. 67, 87.

—In Old English Law. A remainder. Co. Litt. 49a; 2 Coke, 51a.

(1) Equitable remedies are those obtainable only in a court of equity.

(3) Cumulative or concurrent remedies are such as are provided in addition to other existing remedies, and whose existence does not preclude a resort to the old remedy. A resort to one of the two remedies, however, precludes a subsequent resort to the other. See "Election."

(4) Specific or exclusive remedies are such as repeal all pre-existing remedies for the same wrong.

REMEDY OVER. The remedy of him who is primarily liable against him who is secondarily liable for the same debt.

REMEMBRANCERS. In English law. Officers of the exchequer, whose duty it is to remind the lord treasurer and the justices of that court of such things as are to be called and attended to for the benefit of the crown. Cowell; St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99.

REMANAUNT (Law Fr.) Remaining; to come after; remainder. A remanaunt, for ever after. Kelham.

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUITCLAIM. The ordinary effective words in a release. These words are, in this country, sufficient to pass the estate in a primary conveyance. 7 Conn. 250; 24 N. H. 460; 21 Ala. (N. S.) 125; 7 N. Y. 422. "Remise" is a French word synonymous with "release." See "Quitclaim."

REMISSION (Lat. re, back, mitto, to send).

—In Civil Law. A release of a debt. It is conventional when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a creditor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature, constituting the obligation. Civ. Code La. art. 2195.

Forgiveness or pardon of an offense.

It has the effect of putting back the offender into the same situation he was before the commission of the offense. Remission is generally granted in cases where the offense was involuntary, or committed in self-defense. Poth Prcc. Civ. sec. 7, art. 2, § 2.

—At Common Law. The act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246.

REMISSIUS IMPERANTI MELIUS PARETUR. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed. 3 Inst. 233.

REMIT. To annul a fine or forfeiture. This is generally done by the courts where they have a discretion by law; as, for example, when a juror is fined for nonattendance in court, after being duly summoned, and, on appearing, he produces evidence to the court that he was sick and unable to attend, the fine will be remitted by the court.

—In Commercial Law. To send money, bills, or something which will answer the purpose of money.

REMITTANCE. In commercial law. Money sent by one merchant to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, draft, or otherwise.

REMITTEE. A person to whom a remittance is made. Story, Bailm. § 75.

REMITTER. To be placed back in possession.

When one having a right to lands is out of possession, and afterwards the freehold is cast upon him by some defective title, and he enters by virtue of that title, the law remits him to his ancient and more certain right, and, by an equitable fiction, supposes him to have gained possession under it. 3 Bl. Comm. 190; Comyn, Dig. "Remitter."

REMITTERE (Lat. from re, again, and mittere, to send). In old English practice. To send back; to give up or relinquish; to remise or release. Postea jus suum remisit, et quietum clamavit, afterwards remised and quitclaimed his right. Bracton, fol. 313b.

To remand on habeas corpus. 3 How. St. Tr. 161.

REMITTIT DAMNA (Lat. he releases damages). An entry on the record, by which the plaintiff declares that he remits the damages or a part of the damages which have been awarded him by the jury, is so called.

In some cases, a misjoinder of actions may be cured by the entry of a remittit damna. 1 Chit. Pl. *207.

REMITTITUR DAMNUM (or DAMNA). In practice. The act of the plaintiff upon the record, whereby he abates or remits the excess of damages found by the jury beyond the sum laid in the declaration. See 1 Saund. 285, note 6; 4 Conn. 109; Bouv. Inst. Index.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD. After a record has been removed to the supreme court, and a judgment has been rendered, it is to be remitted or sent back to the court below, for the purpose of retrying the cause, when the judgment has been reversed, or of issuing an execution when it has been affirmed. The act of so returning the record, and the writ issued for that purpose, bear the name of "remittitur."

REMITTOR. A person who makes a remittance to another.

REMONSTRANCE. A petition to a court or deliberative or legislative body, in which those who have signed it request that something which it is in contemplation to perform shall not be done.

REMOTE CAUSE. See "Proximate Cause."

REMOTE DAMAGES. Damages are too remote to be actionable when not the legal and natural consequence of the act complained of. Sweet.

Remote damages are such as are the unusual and unexpected result, not reasonably to be anticipated from an accidental or unusual combination of circumstances,—a result beyond and over which the negligent party has no control. 175 Ill. 406; 131 Ill. App. 295; 123 Ill. App. 25. See "Damages;" "Proximate Damages."

REMOTE EVIDENCE. Evidence so disconnected from the fact to be proved as to be irrelevant thereto. See "Evidence."

REMOTO IMPEDIMENTO, EMERGIT Actio. The impediment being removed, the action arises. 5 Coke, 76; Wingate, Max. 20.

REMOVAL OF CAUSE. The removal of a cause from the court in which it was commenced to another court, in which it thereafter proceeds. The term seems literally to include change of venue and removal to a reviewing court, but to these it is rarely applied, being ordinarily used to denote the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court, where a federal question is involved, or the parties are citizens of different states, or one of them is an alien (see Act Cong. March 3, 1887), or to proceedings under state statutes for the transfer of a cause to another of concurrent jurisdiction.

REMOVER. In practice. A transfer of a suit or cause out of one court into another, which is effected by writ of error, certiorari, and the like. 11 Coke, 41.

REMUNERATION. Reward; recompense; salary. Dig. 17. 1. 7.

RENANT, or RENIANT. In old English law. Denying. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 2.

RENCONTNER. A sudden meeting; as opposed to a duel, which is deliberate.

RENDER. In the civil law. To yield; to return; to give again. It is the reverse of "prender." See "Rendition of Judgment."

RENDITION OF A JUDGMENT. The judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy as ascertained by the pleadings and verdict. 195 Ill. App. 181.

The announcement of the decision of the court, as by a verbal decision entered in the minutes, the filing of findings, etc.

It differs from "entry of judgment," which is the formal entry of the judgment upon the records. 80 Cal. 166. But see 9 Minn. 318.

RENEGADE. One who has changed his profession of faith or opinion; one who has deserted his church or party.

RENEWAL. A change of something old for something new; as, the renewal of a note; the renewal of a lease. See "Novation;" 1 Bouv. Inst. note 800.

RENOUNCE. To give up a right; for example, an executor may renounce the right of administering the estate of the testator; a widow, the right to administer to her intestate husband's estate.

RENOUNCING PROBATE. Giving up the right to be executor of a will, wherein he has been appointed to that office, by refusing to take out probate of such will. Toller, Ex'rs, 42; 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 230, 231; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, § 79; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, § 16.

RENOVARE (Lat.) In old English law. To renew. Annuatim renovare, to renew annually. A phrase applied to profits which are taken and the product renewed again. Amb. 131.

RENT. A return or compensation for the possession of some corporeal inheritance, and is a certain profit, either in money, provisions, or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in return for their use.

Some of its common-law properties are that it must be a profit to the proprietor, certain in its character, or capable of being reduced to a certainty, issuing yearly, that is, periodically, out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself. Co. Litt. 47; 2 Bl. Comm. 41.

At common law there were three species of rent,—rent service, having some corporeal service attached to the tenure of the land, to which the right of distress was necessarily incident; rent charge, which was a reservation of rent, with a clause authorizing its collection by distress; and rent seck, where there was no such clause, but the rent could only be collected by an ordinary action at law. These distinctions, however, for all practical purposes, have become obsolete, in consequence of various statutes both in England and in this country, allowing every kind of rent to be distrained for without distinction. See Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 370.

RENT CHARGE. See "Rent."

RENT ROLL. A list of rents payable to a particular person or public body.

RENT SECK. See "Rent."

RENT SERVICE. See "Rent."

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS. The profits arising from property generally (Gen. St. Mass. 1360, p. 537; Rev. St. N. Y. st. 1849), for better protection of property of married women.

This phrase in the Vermont statute has been held not to cover "yearly profits." 26 Vt. 741.

RENTS OF ASSIZE. The certain and determined rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors are called "rents of assize," apparently because they were assized or made certain, and so distinguished from a redditus mobilis, which was a variable or fluctuating rent. 3 Cruise, Dig. 314; Brown.

RENTS RESOLUTE. Rents anciently payable to the crown from the lands of abbeys and religious houses; and after their dissolution, notwithstanding that the lands were demised to others, yet the rents were still reserved and made payable again to the crown. Cowell.

RENTAL. A roll or list of the rents of an estate, containing the description of the lands let, the names of the tenants, and other particulars connected with such estate. This is the same as "rent roll," from which it is said to be corrupted.

Derived from or pertaining to rent, as rental value.

RENTAL BOLLS. In Scotch law. When the tithes (tiends) have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly. Bell, Dict.

RENTAL RIGHTS. In English law. A species of lease usually granted at a low rent and for life. Tenants under such leases were called "rentalers" or "kindly tenants."

RENTE. In French law. A word nearly synonymous with our word "annuity."

RENTE FONCIERE. In French law. A rent which issues out of land; and it is of its essence that it be perpetual, for if it be made but for a limited time, it is a lease.

It may, however, be extinguished. Civ. Code La. arts. 2750, 2759. See "Ground Rent."

RENTE VIAGERE. In French law. An annuity for life. Civ. Code La. art. 2764.

REO ABSENTE (Lat.) Defendant being absent.

REP SILVER. In old records. Money paid by servile tenants for exemption from the customary duty of reaping for the lord. Cowell.

REPAIRS. That work which is done to an estate to keep it in good order. It does not include additions and adaptations of the premises to new uses. 24 N. J. Eq. 358.

REPARATION. The redress of an injury; amends for a tort inflicted. See "Remedy."

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE (Lat.) The name of an ancient writ, which lies by one or more joint tenants against the other joint tenants, or by a person owning a house or building against the owner of the adjoining building, to compel the reparation of such joint property. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 295.

REPATRIATION. The regaining of a nationality once lost; the converse of "expatriation."

REPEAL. The abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act.

A repeal is "express," as, when it is literally declared by a subsequent law, or "implied," when the new law contains provisions contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the former law, or which, though reconcilable, are manifestly designed to furnish an exclusive rule.

A law may be repealed by implication, by an affirmative as well as by a negative statute, if the substance, is inconsistent with the old statute. 1 Ohio, 10; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 96; Harper (S. C.) 101; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 691.

Repeal is express where the repealing act explicitly refers to an existing law, and declares its repeal.

Where statutes are repugnant, there is, of course, an implied repeal. An implied repeal also results from an act covering the whole subject matter, and obviously designed as a substitute (84 Ill. 590; 123 N. Y. 485), or by a revision or codification of the law (78 Wis. 457; 30 Vt. 344).

REPELLITUR A SACRAMENTO INFAMIS. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath. Co. Litt. 158; Bracton, 185.

REPELLITUR EXCEPTIONE CEDENDARUM ACTIONUM. He is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 409, 414.

REPATORY. In French law. A word used to denote the inventory or minutes which notaries are required to make of all contracts which take place before them. Dalloz.

REPETITION.

—In Civil Law. The act by which a person demands and seeks to recover what he has paid by mistake or delivered on a condition which has not been performed. Dig. 12. 4. 5.

The name of an action which lies to recover the payment which has been made by mistake, when nothing was due.

Repetition is never admitted in relation to natural obligations which have been voluntarily acquitted, if the debtor had capacity to give his consent. 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 386.

In order to entitle the payer to recover back money paid by mistake, it must have been paid by him to a person to whom he did not owe it, for otherwise he cannot recover it back,—the creditor having, in such case, the just right to retain the money. Repetitio nulla est ab eo qui suum recepit.

How far money paid under a mistake of law is liable to repetition has been discussed by civilians; and opinions on this subject are divided. 2 Poth. Obl. (Evans Ed.) 369, 408-437; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 111, note 2.

—In Scotch Law. The act of reading over a witness' deposition, in order that he may adhere to it or correct it, at his choice. The same as recolement (q. v.) in the French law. 2 Benth. Ev. bk. 3, c. 12, p. 239. See "Legacy."

REPETITUM NAMIUM. A repeated, second or reciprocal distress; withernam. 3 Bl. Comm. 148.

REPETUNDAE, or PECUNIAE REPETUNDAE. In Roman law. The terms used to designate such sums of money as the socii of the Roman state, or individuals, claimed to recover from magistratus, judices, or publici curatores, which they had improperly taken or received in the provinciae, or in the urbs Roma, either in the discharge of their jurisdictio, or in their capacity of judices, or in respect of any other public function. Sometimes the word "repetundae" was used to express the illegal act for which compensation was sought. Wharton.

REPETUNDARUM CRIMEN (Lat.) In the Roman law. The crime of bribery or extortion in a magistrate, or person in any public office. Calv. Lex.; Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 12, No. 73; Dig. 48. 11; Code, 9. 27.

REPLEADER. In pleading. Making a new series of pleadings.

Judgment of repleader differs from a judgment non obstante veredicto in this, that it is allowed by the courts to do justice between the parties where the defect is in the form or manner of stating the right, and the issue joined is on an immaterial point, so that it cannot tell for whom to give judgment (7 Mass. 312; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 124; 19 Pick. [Mass.] 419); while judgment non obstante is given only where it is clearly apparent to the court that the party who has succeeded has, upon his own showing, no merits, and cannot have by any manner of statement (1 Chit. Pl. 568). See 19 Ark. 194.

REPLEGIARE (Lat.) To replevy; to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. See "De Homine Replegiando."

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS (Lat.) A writ brought by one whose cattle are impounded or distrained, upon security given to the sheriff to pursue or answer the action at law. 7 Hen. VIII. c. 4; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68; New Book of Entries, "Replevin;" Dyer, 173; Reg. Orig. 81.

REPLEGIARE FACIAS (Lat.) A writ of replevin, which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice in regard to the matter in his own county court. It was abolished by statute of Marlbridge, which provided a shorter process. 3 Bl. Comm. 147*.

REPLEVIABLE, or REPLEVISABLE. Property is said to be repleviable or replevisable when proceedings in replevin may be resorted to for the purpose of trying the right to such property. Brown.

REPLEVIN.

—At Common Law. A form of action which lay to regain the possession of personal chattels taken from the plaintiff unlawfully.

It differs from "detinue" in this, that it requires an unlawful taking as the foundation of the action; and from all other personal actions in that it is brought to recover the possession of the specific property claimed to have been unlawfully taken.

—In the United States. By statutes in nearly all the states, the actions of replevin and detinue have been merged, the action being usually called "replevin," but sometimes "claim and delivery," so that such action lies for either the unlawful taking or the unlawful detention of property, i. e., either in the cepit or the detinet.

REPLEVISH. In old English law. To let one to mainprise upon surety. Cowell.

REPLEVY. To redeliver goods which have been distrained to the original possessor of them, on his giving pledges in an action of replevin. It signifies, also, the bailing or liberating a man from prison, on his finding bail to answer. See "Replevin."

REPLIANT. One who makes a replication.

REPLICATIO (Lat.) In the civil law and old English pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's exception or plea; corresponding with and giving name to the replication in modern pleading. Inst. 4. 14. pr.

REPLICATION (Lat. replicare, to fold back).

—In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's plea or answer.

—In Equity. The plaintiff's avoidance or denial of the answer or defense. Story, Eq. Pl. § 877.

A general replication is a general denial of the truth of the defendant's plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff's suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 329, 330.

A special replication was one which introduced new matter to avoid the defendant's answer. It might be followed by rejoinder, surrejoinder, and rebutter. Special replications have been superseded by the practice of amending bills. 1 How. (U. S.) Introd. 55; 17 Pet. (U. S.) Append. 68. A replication must be made use of where the plaintiff intends to introduce evidence, and a subpoena to the defendant to rejoin must be added, unless he will appear gratis. Story, Eq. Pl. § 879.

A replication may be filed nunc pro tunc after witnesses have been examined under leave of court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 881; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (by Jeremy) 323.

—At Law. The plaintiff's reply to the defendant's plea. It contains a statement of matter, consistent with the declaration, which avoids the effect of the defendant's plea, or constitutes a joinder in issue thereon.

REPLY. In its general sense, a reply is what the plaintiff, petitioner, or other person who has instituted a proceeding says in answer to the defendant's case.

—In Code Pleading. The second pleading of the plaintiff, corresponding to the common-law replication.

—In Trial Practice. The argument of plaintiff in answer to that of defendant.

REPONE (from Lat. reponere, to put back). In Scotch practice. To replace; to restore to a former state or right. 2 Alia. Crim. Prac. 351.

REPORT. An official or formal statement of facts or proceedings.

A printed or written account of the judicial determination of a case. In this sense, the term is used ordinarily in the plural to denote the published volumes of reports of decisions.

REPORTARE (Law Lat.) In old English practice. To report.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST. In old English law. An act whereby certain forest grounds, being made purlieu upon view, were by a second view laid to the forest again,—put back into the forest. Manw. For. Law; Cowell.

REPRESENT. To state or assert.
To act as substitute or agent for another.

REPRESENTATION.

—In Practice. A doctrine by which a particular party, though not before the court in person, is so far represented by others that his interest receives such actual and efficient protection that the decree may be held to be binding upon him. 209 Ill. 141.

—In Insurance. The stating of facts by one applying for a policy of insurance, whether in writing or orally, expressly or by plain implication, preliminary and in reference to making the insurance, obviously tending to influence the insurer as to entering into the contract. 1 Phil. Ins. § 524; 12 Md. 348; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 324; 2 N. H. 551; 6 Gray (Mass.) 221.

A representation is to be distinguished from a "warranty," which is a statement of facts by the insured, which is a part of the contract. 21 Conn. 19; 49 Me. 200.

There is no certain rule to determine whether particular statements are representations or warranties. Statements expressly declared to be warranties (78 Hun. [N. Y.] 222), or incorporated in the policy, actually (39 N. J. Law, 89) or by reference (45 N. Y. 80), are warranties, but otherwise the question is one of intent; the use of the word "warrant" not being conclusive (59 N. Y. 557), and a statement will be declared a representation unless the contrary intent is clear (98 Mass. 381).

The importance of the distinction lies in the fact that breach of any warranty avoids the policy, while breach of a representation is fatal only when such representation is material to the risk. 98 Mass. 381.

—In Scotch Law. The name of a plea or statement presented to the lord ordinary of the court of session when his judgment is brought under review.

REPRESENTATION OF PERSONS. A fiction of the law, the effect of which is to put the representative in the place, degree, or right of the person represented.

The heir represents his ancestor (Bac. Abr. "Heir and Ancestor" [A]; the devisee, his testator; the executor, his testator; the administrator, his intestate; the successor in corporations, his predecessor; and, generally speaking, they are entitled to the rights of the persons whom they represent, and bound to fulfill the duties and obligations which were binding upon them in those characters.

Representation was unknown to the Romans, and was invented by the commentators and doctors of the civil law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 1, c. 3, note 180. See Ayliffe, Pand. 397; Dalloz, "Succession," art. 4, § 2.

REPRESENTATIVE. One who represents or is in the place of another. One having lawful authority to act in behalf of the property and bind the owner in regard thereto. 104 Ill. 554.

In legislation, it signifies one who has been elected a member of that branch of the legislature called the "house of representatives."

The executor or administrator of a deceased person is called the "personal representative," to distinguish him from the "real representative," or heir at law. 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 520.

REPRESENTATIVE ACTION OR SUIT.

A representative action or suit is one brought by a member of a class of persons on behalf of himself and the other members of the class.

REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY.

A form of government where the powers of the sovereignty are delegated to a body of men, elected from time to time, who exercise them for the benefit of the whole nation. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 31.

REPRESENTATIVE PEERS.

Those who, at the commencement of every new parliament, are elected to represent Scotland and Ireland in the British house of lords. Brown.

REPRIEVE (from Fr. repandre, to take back). In criminal practice. The withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, which operates in delay of execution. 4 Bl. Comm. 394. It is a deferring of sentence to a definite day, as opposed to an indefinite "suspension." 1 Park. Cr. R. 266. See "Pardon."

REPRISALS. The forcibly taking a thing by one nation which belonged to another, in return or satisfaction for an injury committed by the latter on the former. Vattel, bk. 2, c. 18, § 342; 1 Bl. Comm. c. 7.

(1) General reprisals take place by virtue of commissions delivered to officers and citizens of the aggrieved state, directing them to take the persons and property belonging to the offending state wherever found.

(2) Negative reprisals take place when a nation refuses to fulfill a perfect obligation which it has contracted, or to permit another state to enjoy a right which it justly claims.

(3) Positive reprisals consist in seizing the persons and effects belonging to the other nation, in order to obtain satisfaction.

(4) Special reprisals are such as are granted in times of peace to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the citizens or subjects of the other nation.

Reprisals are used between nation and nation to do themselves justice, when they cannot otherwise obtain it. Congress has the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 11.

Reprisals are made in two ways,—either by embargo, in which case the act is that of the state, or by letters of marque and reprisal, in which case the act is that of the citizen, authorized by the government. See 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 334.

REPRISES. The deductions and payments out of lands, annuities, and the like are called "reprises," because they are taken back. When we speak of the clear yearly value of an estate, we say it is worth so much a year ultra reprises, besides all reprises.

In Pennsylvania, lands are not to be sold when the rents can pay the incumbrances in seven years, beyond all reprises.

REPROBATA PECUNIA LIBERAT SOLVENTUM. Money refused liberates the debtor. 9 Coke, 79. But this must be understood with a qualification. See "Tender."

REPROBATION. In ecclesiastical law. The propounding exceptions either against facts, persons, or things; as, to allege that certain deeds or instruments have not been duly and lawfully executed; or that certain persons are such that they are incompetent as witnesses; or that certain things ought not, for legal reasons, to be admitted.

REPROBATOR, ACTION OF. In Scotch law. An action or proceeding intended to convict a witness of perjury, to which the witness must be made a party. Bell, Dict.

REPROBUS. (Lat.) In old English law. Bad or spurious; reprobate. A term applied to money which might be rejected or refused.

REPUBLIC. A commonwealth; that form of government in which the administration of affairs is open to all the citizens. In another sense, it signifies the state, independently of its form of government. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. n. 28, and n. 202, note.

REPUBLICATION. An act done by a testator, from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator, with a view of giving it full force and effect.

The republication is express when there has been an actual re-execution of it (1 Ves. Jr. 440; 2 Rand. [Va.] 192; 9 Johns. [N. Y.] 312); it is implied when, for example, the testator by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, except in the alterations after mentioned" (3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 85). The will might be at a distance, or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republished. 1 Ves. Sr. 437; 3 Bing. 614; 1 Ves. Jr. 486; 4 Brown, Ch. 2.

REPUDIATION.

—In Civil Law. A term used to signify the putting away of a wife or a woman betrothed.

Properly, "divorced" is used to point out the separation of married persons; "repudiation," to denote the separation either of married people, or those who are only affianced. Divortium est repudium et separatio maritorum; repudium est renunciatio sponsalium, vel etiam est divortium. Dig. 50. 16. 101.

A determination to have nothing to do with any particular thing; as, a repudiation of a legacy is the abandonment of such legacy, and a renunciation of all right to it.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

REPUDIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A breaking off of the contract of espousals, or of a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated "divorce," but this was not the proper sense. Dig. 50. 16. 191.

REPUGNANCY (Lat. re, back, against, pugnare, to fight).

—In Contracts. A disagreement or inconsistency between two or more clauses of the same instrument. In deeds, and other instruments inter vivos, the earlier clause prevails, if the inconsistency be not so great as to avoid the instrument for uncertainty. Hardw. 94; Owen, 84; 2 Taunt. 109; 15 Sim. 118; 2 C. B. 880; 13 Mees. & W. 534.

In wills, the latter clause prevails, under the same exceptions. Co. Litt. 112b; Plowd. 541; 2 Taunt. 109; 6 Ves. 100; 2 Mylne & K. 149; 1 Jarm. Wills, 411. See 23 Am. Jur. 277; 1 Pars. Cont. 26.

Repugnancy in a condition renders it void. 2 Salk. 463; 2 Mod. 285; 11 Mod. 191; 1 Hawks (N. C.) 20; 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 192. And see, generally, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 272; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 54; 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 677.

—In Pleading. An inconsistency or disagreement between the statements of material facts in a declaration or other pleading; as, where certain timber was said to be for the completion of a house already built. 1 Salk. 213.

Repugnancy of immaterial facts, or of redundant and unnecessary matter, if it does not contradict material allegations, will not, in general, vitiate the pleadings. Co. Litt. 303b; 10 East, 142; 1 Chit. Pl. 233. See Lawes, Pl. 64; Steph. Pl. 378; Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 6); 1 Viner, Abr. 36; 19 Viner, Abr. 45; Bac. Abr. "Amendments, etc." (E 2), "Pleas" (I 4).

REPUGNANT (Lat. repugnans, from repugnare, to fight against). Contrary to; in conflict with. A condition repugnant to the nature of the estate to which it is annexed is void. 1 Steph. Comm. 281.

REPUTABLE. Reputable means "worthy of repute or distinction," "held in esteem," "honorable," "praiseworthy." 123 Ill. 245.

The term "reputable person" has reference to a person's real character as distinguished from his reputation. 165 Ia. 189, 144 N. W. 1021.

REPUTATIO EST VULGARIS OPINIO ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge. 4 Coke, 107.

REPUTATION. The opinion generally entertained in a community regarding any matter. Thus, certain matters of pedigree may be proved by common repute.

Most commonly used in the sense of personal reputation, the opinion entertained regarding a man in a community.

"Reputation" is to be distinguished from "character" (q. v.) Character is what a person is; reputation is what he is supposed to be. Character is injured by temptations and wrongdoings; reputation, by slanders and libels. Abbott. See 26 N. Y. 203.

REPUTED. Accepted by general, vulgar, or public opinion. Thus, land may be reputed part of a manor, though not really so, and a certain district may be reputed a parish or a manor, or be a parish or a manor in reputation, although it is in reality no parish or manor at all. Brown.

REPUTED MANOR. In feudal law. A name sometimes applied to a manor which has, by becoming separated from the services by which it was formerly held, ceased to be a manor in fact.

REQUEST (Lat. requiro, to ask for).

—In Contracts. A notice of a desire on the part of the person making it that the other party shall do something in relation to a contract. Generally, when a debt is payable immediately, no request need be made. 10 Mass. 230; 3 Day (Conn.) 327; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 319.

—In Pleading. The statement in the plaintiff's declaration that a demand or request has been made by the plaintiff of the defendant to do some act which he was bound to perform, and for which the action is brought.

A general request is that stated in the form, "although often requested so to do" (licet saepe, requisitus), generally added in the common breach to the money counts. Its omission will not vitiate the declaration. 2 H. Bl. 131; 1 Wils. 33; 1 Bos. & P. 59; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 100.

A special request is one provided for by the contract expressly or impliedly. Such a request must be averred (5 Term R. 409; 1 East, 204; 3 Bulst. 297; 3 Campb. 549; 2 Barn. & C. 685) and proved (1 Saund. 32, note 2). It must state time and place of making, and by whom it was made, that the court may judge of its sufficiency. 1

Strange, 89; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 69, 70); 1 Saund. 33, note; 2 Vent. 75. See "Demand."

In wills, see "Precatory Words."

REQUEST, LETTERS OF. See "Letters of Request."

REQUEST NOTES. In English law. Certain notes or requests from persons amenable to the excise laws, to obtain a permit for removing any excisable goods or articles from one place to another.

REQUISITION. The act of demanding a thing to be done by virtue of some right.

The demand made by the governor of one state on the governor of another for a fugitive from justice.

The term "requisition" is sometimes used to denote the surrender of fugitives from one state to another; "extradition" being confined to surrender of fugitives by a foreign country.

When, as is more common, "extradition" is used to embrace both interstate and international extradition, "requisition" is applied to the formal request of the governor for the surrender, and not to the other proceedings.

REQUISITIONS ON TITLE. In English conveyances. Objections to the title shown by an abstract pointed out by the purchaser's solicitor to the vendor's solicitor.

REREFIEFS. In Scotch law. Inferior fiefs; portions of a fief or feud granted out to inferior tenants. 2 Bl. Comm. 57.

RERUM ORDO CONFUNDITUR, SI UNICUIQUE JURISDICTIO NON SERVATUR. The order of things is confounded if every one preserves not his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. Proem.

RERUM PROGRESSU OSTENDUNT multa, quae in initio praecaveri seu praevideri non possunt. In the course of events, many mischiefs arise which at the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen. 6 Coke, 40.

RERUM SUARUM QUILIBET EST MODERATOR ET ARBITER. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters. Co. Litt. 223.

RES (Lat. things). It has a general signification, including both corporeal and incorporeal things. 3 Inst. 182.

The terms res, bona, biens, used by jurists who have written in the Latin and French languages, are intended to include movable or personal, as well as immovable or real, property. 1 Burge, Confl. Laws, 19. See "Biens;" "Bona;" "Things."

By res, according to the modern civilians, is meant everything that may form an object of rights, as in opposition to persona, which is regarded as a subject of rights. Res, therefore, in its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds; while in its restricted sense it comprehends every object of rights except actions. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 151, § 146. This has reference to the fundamental division of the institutes that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions.

The term is used in many special senses, among these being a business matter or question (Dig. 48. 19. 38. 5); equity (Dig. 48. 8. 1. 3); an inheritance (Calv. Lex.); a suit; the subject matter of a suit (Story, Conf. Laws, § 592a); substance; property; ownership (Calv. Lex.); a contract (Dig. 50. 16, 6); truth (Dig. 48. 10. 1. 4); empire (Tayl. Civ. Law, 62).

These have been variously divided and classified in law, e. g., in the following ways: (1) Corporeal and incorporeal things; (2) movables and immovables; (3) res mancipi and res nec mancipi; (4) things real and things personal; (5) things in possession and choses (i. e., things) in action; (6) fungible things and things not fungible (fungibiles vel non fungibiles); and (7) res singulae (i. e., individual objects) and universitates rerum (i. e., aggregates of things). Also persons are for some purposes and in certain respects regarded as things.

RES ACCIDENT LUMINA REBUS. One thing throws light upon others. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 149.

RES ACCESSORIA (Lat.) In the civil law. An accessory thing; that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 155, § 152. Otherwise termed accessio. Id. § 153.

RES ACCESSORIA SEQUITUR REM principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 433. For a definition of res accessoria, see Mackeld. Civ. Law, 155.

RES ADJUDICATA. See "Res Judicata."

RES CADUCA. In the civil law. A fallen or escheated thing; an escheat. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 2, c. 9, No. 60.

RES COMMUNES (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which, though a separate share of them can be enjoyed and used by every one, cannot be exclusively and wholly appropriated; as, light, air, running water. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 156; Ersk. Inst. 1. 1. 5. 6.

RES CONTROVERSA. In the civil law. A matter controverted; a matter in controversy; a point in question; a question for determination. Calv. Lex.

RES CORONAE. In old English law. Things of the crown; such as ancient manors, homages of the king, liberties, etc. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 6, § 3.

RES CORPORALES. In the civil law. Corporeal things; things which can be touched, or are perceptible to the senses. Dig. 1. 8. 1. 1; Inst. 2. 2; Bracton, fols. 7b, 10b, 13b.

RES DENOMINATUR A PRINCIPALIORI parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Coke, 47.

RES EST MISERA UBI JUS EST VAGUM et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

RES FUNGIBILES (Lat.) In the civil law. Fungible things.

RES FURTIVAE (Law Lat.) In Scotch law. Goods which have been stolen. Bell, Dict.

RES, GENERALEM HABET SIGNIFICATIONEM, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, naturae sive speciei, comprehendit. The word "things" has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species. 3 Inst. 432; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 415.

RES GESTAE. The facts surrounding or accompanying a transaction which is the subject of legal proceedings.

The phrase is generally used in the law of evidence; the rule being that evidence of words or acts may be admissible (notwithstanding the rule against derivative evidence) on the ground that they are part of the res gestae, provided that the act they accompanied is in itself admissible in evidence, and that they reflect light upon or qualify that act. Thus, the declaration of a railroad engineer as to the cause of an accident, made immediately thereafter, was held admissible in an action against the railroad company. 55 Pa. St. 396. And in criminal cases, remarks of defendant (25 Grat. [Va.] 921), or by the injured person (10 Mo. App. 111; 34 Iowa, 131), are admissible if connected with the transaction, and connected with both in point of time and causal connection; but remarks of persons not in some manner connected with the transaction are inadmissible (99 Mass. 438).

No inflexible rule can be laid down as to the necessary proximity in point of time between the declaration and the act under investigation. See 9 Tex. App. 440; Id. 619; 71 Ga. 128. Perhaps the most extreme holding is that declarations of a deceased some hours before the homicide, that she was to meet defendant on business that evening, were held admissible as part of the res gestae in connection with evidence that she went out that evening to meet some one. 62 Minn. 474.

RES IMMOBILES. In the civil law. Immovable things; including land and that which is connected therewith, either by nature or art, such as trees and buildings. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 160.

RES INCORPORALES. In the civil law. Incorporeal things; things which cannot be touched; such as those things which consist in right. Inst. 2. 2; Bracton, fols. 7b, 10b. Such things as the mind alone can perceive.

RES INTEGRA (Lat. an entire thing; an entirely new or untouched matter). A term applied to those points of law which have not been decided, which are untouched by dictum or decision. 3 Mer. 269; 1 Burge, Conf. Laws, 241.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA (Lat.) A technical phrase which signifies acts of others or transactions between others.

Neither the declarations nor any other acts of those who are mere strangers, or, as it is usually expressed, any res inter alios acta, are admissible in evidence against anyone. When the party against whom such acts are offered in evidence was privy to the act, the objection ceases; it is no longer res inter alios. 1 Starkie, Ev. 52; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1300; 4 Man. & G. 282. See 1 Metc. (Mass.) 55.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA ALTERI NOCERE NON DEBIT. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Co. Litt. 132; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 403; 11 Q. B. 1028.

RES INTER ALIOS JUDICATAE NULLUM ALIIS PRAEJUDICIUM FACIANT. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR. The thing speaks for itself. A phrase used in actions for injury by negligence, where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence.

RES JUDICATA. A legal or equitable issue which has been decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

To constitute a matter res judicata, so that, in a subsequent action, it cannot be drawn in question, (1) the court deciding the issue must have had jurisdiction (10 Pet. [U. S.] 474); (2) there must be identity of the subject matter of the action (7 Johns. [N. Y.] 20); (3) identity of the cause of action (8 Conn. 268; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 429), though the form of action may be different if it be of the same general class, or if the remedies be concurrent (12 Gray [Mass.] 428; 28 Minn. 450; 82 Ky. 505); (4) identity of parties (4 Mass. 441; 5 Me. 410; 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 464), but privies of the parties are bound (see "Privy;" 52 N. H. 162; 98 N. Y. 351); (5) identity of capacity in which they sue or are sued (4 C. B. 884; 21 Ala. 813); (6) and there must have been a final determination of the issues (143 Mass. 413; 104 Ill. 369); (7) on the merits (91 U. S. 526; 42 Mich. 459); (8) upon the particular issue (7 Gray [Mass.] 502), but the adjudication is final upon every matter which might have been litigated under the issues made (102 N. Y. 452).

—In Proceedings in Rem. Identity of parties is not essential, the adjudication attaching to the res. See 1 Metc. (Mass.) 204.

RES JUDICATA FACIT EX ALBO NIGRUM, EX NIGRO ALBUM, EX CURVO RECTUM, EX RECTO CURVUM. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 840.

RES JUDICATA PRO VERITATE ACCIPITUR. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Co. Litt. 103; Dig. 50. 17. 207; 2 Kent, Comm. 120; 13 Mees. & W. 679. See "Res Judicata."

RES MANCIPI (Lat.) In Roman law. Those things which might be sold and alienated, or of which the property might be transferred from one person to another.

The division of things into res mancipi and res nec mancipi was one of ancient origin, and it continued to a late period in the empire. Res mancipi (Ulph. Frag. xix.) are praedia in italico solo, both rustic and urban; also, jura rusticorum praediorum or servitutes, as via, iter, aqueductus; also slaves, and four-footed animals, as oxen, horses, etc., quae collo dorsove domantur. Smith. To this list may be added children of Roman parents, who were, according to the old law, res mancipi. The distinction between res mancipi and nec mancipi was abolished by Justinian in his Code. Id.; Cooper, Inst. 442.

RES MOBILES. In the civil law. Movable things; things which may be transported from one place to another, without injury to their substance and form. Things corresponding with the chattels personal of the common law. 2 Kent, Comm. 347.

RES NOVA (Lat.) Something new; something not before decided.

RES NULLIUS (Lat.) A thing which has no owner. A thing which has been abandoned by its owner is as much res nullius as if it had never belonged to any one.

The first possessor of such a thing becomes the owner; res nullius fit primi occupantis. Bowyer, Comm. 97.

RES PER PECUNIAM AESTIMATUR, ET NON PECUNIA PER RES. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to the thing. 9 Coke, 76; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 922.

RES PERIIT DOMINO (Lat. the thing is lost to the owner). A phrase used to express that, when a thing is lost or destroyed, it is lost to the person who was the owner of it at the time. For example, an article is sold; if the seller have perfected the title of the buyer so that it is his, and it be destroyed, it is the buyer's loss; but if, on the contrary, something remains to be done before the title becomes vested in the buyer, then the loss falls on the seller.

RES PERIT DOMINO SUO. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1456, 1466; Story, Ballm. 426; 2 Kent, Comm. 591.

RES PRIVITAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Things the property of one or more individuals. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 157.

RES PROPRIA EST QUAE COMMUNIS non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 261, 270.

RES PUBLICAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Things the property of the state. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 157; Ersk. Inst. 2. 1. 5. 6.

RES QUAE INTRA PRAESIDIA PERDUCTAE nondum sunt, quanquam ab hostibus occupatae, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 9, § 16; Id. lib. 3, c. 6, § 3.

RES RELIGIOSAE (Lat.) In civil law. Things pertaining to religion; places where the dead were buried. Thevenot Dessaulles, Dict. du Dig. "Chose."

RES SACRA NON RECIPIT AESTIMATIONEM. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

RES SACRAE (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which had been publicly consecrated.

RES SANCTAE (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which were especially protected against injury of man.

RES SUA NEMINI SERVIT. No one can have a servitude over his own property. 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 151.

RES TRANSIT CUM SUO ONERE. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

RES UNIVERSATIS (Lat.) Those things which belong to cities or municipal corporations. They belong so far to the public that they cannot be appropriated to private use, such as public squares, market houses, streets, and the like. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 446.

RESCEIT, or RECEIT. The admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as, when an action is brought against a tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case the reversioner may move that he may be received to defend his right, and to plead with the demandant. Jacob; Cowell.

The admittance of a plea when the controversy is between the same two persons. Co. Litt. 192; 3 Nelson, Abr. 146.

RESCEU, or RESCUE (Law Fr.) Received. Novae Narr. 5b; Kitch. Cts. Resceux (plur.); Britt. c. 2.

RESCISSIO (Lat. from rescindere, to annul or avoid). In the civil law. An annulling, avoiding, or making void; abrogation; rescission. Code, 4. 44; Poth. Contr. No. 331.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS. The abrogation or annulling of contracts. It differs from the waiving of some of the terms of the contract. 59 Conn. 561.

The term is generally, but not uniformly, applied to abrogation by the parties, either by consent, or by one party; "cancellation" being the usual term for abrogation by decree of court. It requires concurrent action by both parties; a meeting of minds. 59 Conn. 561. See Waiver.

RESCISSORY ACTIONS. In Scotch law. Actions which are brought to set aside deeds. Patterson, Comp. 1058, note.

Proper improbation is an action brought for declaring writing false or forged.

Reduction improbation is an action whereby a person who may be hurt or affected by a writing insists on producing or exhibiting it in court, in order to have it set aside, or its effects ascertained under the certification that the writing, if not produced, shall be declared false and forged.

In an action of simple reduction, the certification is only temporary, declaring the writings called for null until they be produced, so that they recover their full force after their production. Ersk. bk. 4, tit. 1, § 5; Id. bk. 4, tit. 1, § 8.

RESCOUS. An old term, synonymous with "rescue" (q. v.).

RESCRIPT.

—In Canon Law. A term including any form of apostolical letter emanating from the pope. The answer of the pope in writing. Dict. Dr. Canonique.

—In Civil Law. The answer of the prince, at the request of the parties, respecting some matter in dispute between them, or to magistrates, in relation to some doubtful matter submitted to him.

The rescript was differently denominated according to the character of those who sought it. They were called "annotations" or "subnotations," when the answer was given at the request of private citizens; "letters" or "epistles," when he answered the consultation of magistrates; "pragmatic sanctions," when he answered a corporation, the citizens of a province, or a municipality. See "Code."

—At Common Law. A counterpart.

In Massachusetts it is used to denote the statement of the decision of the supreme judicial court as an appellate tribunal, and the accompanying brief statement of the reasons for the decision sent to the court from which the case was brought.

RESRIPTION. In French law. A rescription is a letter by which the maker requests some one to pay a certain sum of money, or to account for him to a third law. To rescue. Rescussit, he rescued. Reg. 225.

According to this definition, bills of exchange are a species of rescription. The difference appears to be this, that a bill of exchange is given when there has been a contract of exchange between the drawer and the payee; whereas the rescription is sometimes given in payment of a debt, and at other times it is lent to the payee.

RESCUE.

—In Criminal Law. The forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest or imprisonment. 4 Bl. Comm. 131.

A deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 911.

Taking and setting at liberty, against law, a distress taken for rent, services, or damage feasant. Bac. Abr. "Rescoua." See "Resceu."

—In Maritime Law. The retaking by a party captured of a prize made by the enemy. There is still another kind of rescue which partakes of the nature of a recapture,—it occurs when the weaker party, before he is overpowered, obtains relief from the arrival of fresh succors, and is thus preserved from the force of the enemy. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 224, 271; Halleck, Int. Law, cxxxv.

"Rescue" differs from "recapture." The rescuers do not, by the rescue, become owners of the property, as if it had been a new prize, but the property is restored to the original owners by the right of postliminium.

RESCUSSOR. The party making a rescue is sometimes so called; but more properly he is a "rescuer."

RECUSSUS (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. rescous). In old English law. Rescue; forcible liberation or release. Spelman.

RESCUTERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To rescue. Rescussit, he rescued. Reg. Orig. 117; 3 P. Wms. 484. Rescusserunt, they rescued. Reg. Orig. 118.

RESCYT (Law Fr.) Resceit; receipt; the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of crime. Britt. c. 23.

RESEANTISA (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. reseance). In old English and Scotch law. Residence. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 3, § 2; Spelman.

RESEAUNT, or RESEANT (Law Fr.) Abiding; dwelling; residing. Britt. c. 98.

RESEISER (Law Lat. reseisire). In old English law. A taking back of seisin. A taking again of lands into the hands of the king, whereof a general livery or ouster le main was formerly issued, contrary to the form and order of law. Staundf. Pr. Reg. 26; Cowell.

RESERVANDO. Reserving. In old conveyancing. An apt word of reserving a rent. Co. Litt. 47a.

RESERVATIO NON DEBET ESSE DE PROFICUIS IPSIS QUILA EA CONCEDUNTUR, SED DE REDDITU NOVO EXTRA PROFICUA. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Co. Litt. 142.

RESERVATION. That part of a deed or instrument which reserves a thing not in esse at the time of the grant, but newly created. 2 Hilliard, Abr. 359.

The creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence as such in a thing or part of a thing granted, by means of a clause inserted by the grantor in the instrument of conveyance.

A "reservation" is distinguished from an "exception" in that it is of a new right or interest; thus, a right of way reserved at the time of conveying an estate, which may have been enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right. 42 Me. 9.

A reservation may be of a life estate (28 Vt. 10; 33 N. H. 18; 3 Jones [N. C.] 37, 38; 23 Mo. 373; 3 Md. Ch. 230); of a right of flogage (41 Me. 298); right to use water (41 Me. 177; 9 N. Y. 423; 16 Barb. [N. Y.] 212); right of way (25 Conn. 331; 6 Cush. [Mass.] 254; 10 Cush. [Mass.] 313; 10 B. Mon. [Ky.] 468); and many other rights and interests (83 N. H. 507; 9 B. Mon. [Ky.] 163; 5 Pa. St. 317). See 6 Cush. (Mass.) 162; 4 Pa. St. 173; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 73.

RESET. The receiving or harboring an outlawed person. Cowell.

RESET OF THEFT. In Scotch law. The receiving and keeping stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, with a design of feloniously retaining them from the real owner. Alis. Crim. Law, 328.

RESETTER. In Scotch law. A receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen.

RESIANCE. In old English law. A man's residence or permanent abode. Such a man is called a "resiant." Kitch. Cts. 33.

RESIANT, RESIENT, or RESYAUNT (from Law Fr. reseant, resident). In old English law. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident; a resident. Kitch. Cts. 33; Cowell; 2 Inst. 99. "Resiants and inhabitants within a manor." 3 Leon. 8, case 21.

RESIANTIA, or RESEANTIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Resiance; residence. Spelman. See "Resiance."

RESIDENCE (Lat. resedeo). Personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode. 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 251; 105 Mass. 93; 23 Wis. 607.

A residence is different from a domicile, although it is a matter of great importance in determining the place of domicile. 13 Mass. 501; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 370; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 251; 2 Gray (Mass.) 490; 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11; 11 La. 175; 5 Me. 143. See "Domicile." "Residence" and "habitation" are usually synonymous. 2 Gray (Mass.) 490; 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 574, note. "Residence" indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include so much as "domicile," which requires an intention continued with residence. 19 Me. 293; 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 576.

RESIDENT. One who has his residence (q. v.) in a place.

RESIDENT FREEHOLDER. One who resides within a certain city, county, or state, and owns a freehold estate in lands therein. 29 Wis. 419; 68 Ind. 214.

RESIDENT MINISTER. In international law. The second or intermediate class between ambassadors and envoys, created by the conference of the five powers at Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1818. They are accredited to the sovereign. 2 Phillim. Int. Law, 220*. They are said to represent the affairs, and not the person, of the sovereign, and so to be of less dignity. Vattel, bk. 4, c. 6, § 73. The fourth class is charges-d'affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. 2 Phillim. Int. Law, 220; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 6.

RESIDERE (Lat.) In old English law. To sit down; to sit still; to rest; to remain or continue. See "Resident."

RESIDUARY CLAUSE. The clause in a will by which that part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises. 4 Kent, Comm. 541*; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014, note 2.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE. The person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised after satisfying previous devises.

RESIDUARY ESTATE. What remains of testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. He to whom the residuum of the estate is devised or bequeathed by will. Rep. Leg. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index. See "Legacy."

RESIDUE. That which remains of something after taking away a part of it; as, the residue of an estate, that which remains after payment of debts, charges, and particular legacies and devises. 68 Pa. St. 332.

A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate by lapse, or as void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded. 15 Ves. 416; 2 Mer. 392. See 7 Ves. 391; 1 Brown, Ch. 589; 4 Brown, Ch. 55; Rep. Leg. Index; Jarm. Wills.

RESIGNATION (Lat. resignatio; re, back, signo, to sign). The act of an officer by which he declines his office, and renounces the further right to use it. It differs from "abdication" (q. v.)

As offices are held at the will of both parties, if the resignation of an officer be not accepted, he remains in office. 4 Dev. (N. C.) 1.

RESIGNATION BOND. In ecclesiastical law. A bond given by an incumbent to resign on a certain contingency. It may be conditioned to resign for good and sufficient reason, and therefore lawful; e. g., to resign if he take a second benefice, or on request, if patron present his son or kinsman when of age to take the living, etc. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. But equity will generally relieve the incumbent. 1 Rolle, Abr. 443.

RESIGNATION EST JURIS PROPRII spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right. Godb. 284.

RESIGNEE. One in favor of whom a resignation is made. 1 Bell, Comm. 125, note.

RESILIRE (Lat.) In old English law. To draw back from a contract before it is made binding. Literally, to leap back or start back. Adhunc possunt partes resilire, the parties may yet draw back. Bracton, fol. 38; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 3. The Scotch law, with its accustomed closeness, renders this word resile.

RESIST. (Lat.) The opposition of force to force. The word retains the exact classical meaning. 37 Wis. 201.

RESOLUCION. In Spanish colonial law. An opinion formed by some superior authority on matters referred to its decision, and forwarded to inferior authorities for their instruction and government. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 93, note 1.

RESOLUTION (Lat. re, back, again, solvo, to loose, to free). A solemn judgment or decision of a court. This word is frequently used in this sense in Coke and some of the more ancient reporters. An agreement to a law or other thing adopted by a legislature or popular assembly.

—Governing Bodies.

Acts that are done by a city council in its ministerial capacity may be in the form of resolutions. Resolutions are special and temporary, applicable only to a single matter of passing moment. 186 Ill. 571; 174 Ill. 445; 184 Ill. 51; 262 Ill. 396. Distinction between "resolution" and "ordinance." See "Ordinance."

—Distinguished from By-law.

While a by-law may be in the form of a resolution, a resolution is not necessarily a by-law. The distinction between the two has been said to lie in the fact that a resolution applies to a single act of the corporation whereas a by-law is a permanent and continuing rule which is to be applied on all future occasions. 1 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 977.

—In Civil Law. The act by which a contract which existed and was good is rendered null.

"Resolution" differs essentially from "rescission." The former presupposes the contract to have been valid, and it is owing to a cause posterior to the agreement that the resolution takes place; while rescission, on the contrary, supposes that some vice or defect annulled the contract from the beginning. Resolution may be by consent of the parties, or by the decision of a competent tribunal; rescission must always be by the judgment of a court. 7 Tropl. de la Vente, note 689; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 551; Dalloz.

RESOLUTIVE. In Scotch conveyancing. Having the quality or effect of resolving or extinguishing a right. Bell, Dict.

RESOLUTO JURE CONCEDENTIS RESOLVITUR JUS CONCESSUM. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 179; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 417.

RESOLUTORY CONDITION. One which has for its object, when accomplished, the revocation of the principal obligation; for example, I will sell you my crop of cotton if my ship America does not arrive in the United States within six months. My ship arrives in one month; my contract with you is revoked. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 764.

RESON (Law Fr.) Reason; truth; right; title; justice; act; argument; charge; expression; method; case; article; point. Kellham.

RESORT (from Fr. resorter, q. v.) To go back. "It resorted to the line of the mother." Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 11.

The act of visiting; assembly; meeting; concourse; frequent assembling. 90 Ill. 220.

RESORTER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To go back. A force resortera le tenement au seignour del fee, the tenement must necessarily go back to the lord of the fee. Britt. c. 119.

RESPECTARE, or RESPECTUARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To respite. Fortescue de L. L. Angliae, c. 53, note; Reg. Orig. 319. Respectuabitur, shall be put off. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 21.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS habendo. A writ for respiting a sheriff's account, addressed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

RESPICIENDUM EST JUDICANTI, NE quid aut durius aut remissius construatur quam causa deprecit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiae gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more leniently or more severely construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. 3 Inst. 220.

RESPIRATION (Lat. re, back, spiro, to breathe). Breathing, which consists of the drawing into, inhaling, or, more technically, "inspiring," atmospheric air into the lungs, and then forcing out, expelling, or technically, "expiring," from the lungs the air therein. Chit. Med. Jur. 92, 416, note (n).

RESPITE.

—In Civil Law. An act by which a debtor who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment transacts (i. e., compromises) with his creditors and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. Code La. art. 3051.

A forced respite takes place when a part of the creditors refuse to accept the debtor's proposal, and when the latter is obliged to compel them, by judicial authority, to consent to what the others have determined in the cases directed by law.

A voluntary respite takes place when all the creditors consent to the proposal of the debtor to pay in a limited time the whole or a part of his debt.

A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

—In Criminal Law. A temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence. It differs from a "pardon," which is an absolute suspension, and from a "reprieve," in that it is ordinarily for an indefinite time.

RESPITE OF HOMAGE. To dispense with the performance of homage by tenants who held their lands in consideration of performing homage to their lords. Cowell.

RESPONDE BOOK. In Scotch law. A book of record of the chancery, in which are entered all nonentry and relief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery. Stair, Inst. p. 296, § 28; Ersk. Inst. 11. 5. 50.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER (that he answer over). In practice. A form of judgment anciently used when an issue in law upon a dilatory plea was decided against the party pleading it. See "Abatement."

RESPONDEAT RAPTOR, QUI IGNORARE NON POTUIT QUOD PUPILLUM ALIENUM ABDUXIT. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. Let the principal answer. 4 Inst. 114; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1337; 4 Bouv. Inst. Note 3586; 3 Lev. 352; 1 Salk. 408; 1 Bing. N. C. 418; 4 Maule & S. 259; 10 Exch. 656; 2 EL. & Bl. 216; 7 EL. & Bl. 426; 1 Bos. & P. 404; 1 C. B. 578; 6 Mees. & W. 302; 10 Exch. 656.

He who expects to derive advantage from an act which is done by another person for him must answer for any injury which such person may inflict upon a third party. 243 Ill. 488.

RESPONDENT. One who answers a judicial proceeding. Applied to the party against whom a writ as of quo warranto is brought.

—In Chancery Practice. The party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in chancery. The correlative is "petitioner" or "complainant."

—In Appellate Practice. The party who answers an appeal. Sometimes called "appellee." The correlative is "appellant."

—In Civil Law. One who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor. Dig. 2. 8. 6.

RESPONDENTIA. In maritime law. A loan of money, on maritime interest, on goods laden on board of a ship, upon the condition that, if the goods be wholly lost in the course of the voyage, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall lose his money; if not, that the borrower shall pay him the sum borrowed, with the interest agreed upon.

The contract is called "respondentia" because the money is lent mainly, or most frequently, on the personal responsibility of the borrower. It differs principally from bottomry (q. v.) in the following circumstances: Bottomry is a loan on the ship; respondentia is a loan upon the goods. The money is to be repaid to the lender, with maritime interest, upon the arrival of the ship in the one case, and of the goods in the other. In most other respects, the contracts are nearly the same, and are governed by the same principles. In the former, the ship and tackle, being hypothecated, are liable, as well as the borrower; in the latter, the lender has, in general, it is said, only the personal security of the borrower. Marsh. Ins. bk. 2, c. 1, p. 734. The general term, including both respondentia and bottomry, is "hypothecation" (q. v.)

RESPONDERA SON SOVERAIGNE. His superior or master shall answer. Articuli sup. Charta, c. 18.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET (Lat. ought not to reply). In pleading. The prayer of a plea where the defendant insists that he ought not to answer, as, when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chit. Pl. *433.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM (Lat.) In Roman law. Opinions given by Roman lawyers.

Before the time of Augustus, every lawyer was authorized, de jure, to answer questions put to him; and all such answers, responsa prudentum, had equal authority, which had not the force of law, but the opinion of a lawyer. Augustus was the first prince who gave to certain distinguished jurisconsults the particular privilege of answering in his name, and from that period their answers required greater authority. Adrian determined in a more precise manner the degree of authority which these answers should have, by enacting that the opinions of such authorized jurisconsults, when unanimously given, should have the force of law (legis vicem), and should be followed by the judges, and that when they were divided, the judge was allowed to adopt that which to him appeared the most equitable. The opinions of other lawyers held the same place they had before—they were considered merely as the opinions of learned men. Mackeld. Man. Introd. § 43; Mackeld. Hist. Dr. Rom. §§ 40, 49; Hugo, Hist. Dr. Rom. § 313; Inst. 1. 2. 8; Inst. Expl. note 39.

RESPONSALIS (Law Lat.)

—In Old English Law. One who answered or gave answer for another (qui responsum defert). The term seems to be used by Glanville in the sense of "attorney." Glanv. lib. 12, c. 1; Steph. Pl. Append. note (5). But Bracton makes a clear distinction between the two offices, and is followed by Fleta. Bracton, fol. 212b. But see Id. fol. 361b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6. Lord Coke defines responsalis to be "he that was appointed by the tenant or defendant, in case of extremity and necessity, to allege the cause of the party's absence, and to certify the court upon what trial he will put himself, viz., the combat or the country." Co. Litt. 128a.

—In the Canon Law. A proctor; one who excuses an absent party. Cowell.

RESPONSALIS AD LUCRANDUM VEL PETENDUM. He who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned; a proctor, attorney, or deputy. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 169.

RESPONSIBILITY. The obligation to answer for an act done, either civilly or criminally, and to repair any injury it may have caused.

RESPONSIBLE. Able to pay the sum which may be required of him; able to discharge an obligation. Webster; 26 N. H. 527.

RESPONSIO (Lat.) An answer.

RESPONSIO UNIUS NON OMNINO AUDI-tur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260. This is a maxim of the civil law, where everything must be proved by two witnesses.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRAM (Lat.) In civil law. A restoring parties to the condition they were in before entering into a contract or agreement on account of fraud, infancy, force, honest mistake, etc. Calv. Lex. The going into a cause anew from the beginning. Calv. Lex.

RESTITUTION. The return of property to the owner or person entitled to it.

—In Maritime Law. The placing back or restoring articles which have been lost by jettison. This is done when the remainder of the cargo has been saved, at the general charge of the owners of the cargo; but when the remainder of the goods is afterwards lost, there is not any restitution. Stev. Av. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 1, note 8.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. In ecclesiastical law. A compulsory renewal of cohabitation between a husband and wife who have been living separately.

A suit may be brought in the divorce and matrimonial court for this purpose whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without sufficient reason, by which the party injured may compel the other to return to cohabitation. 3 Bl. Comm. 94; 3 Steph. Comm. 11; 1 Add. Ecc. 805; 3 Hagg. Ecc. 619.

RESTITUTION OF MINORS. In Scotch law. A minor, on attaining majority, may obtain relief against a deed previously executed by him, which may be held void or voidable, according to circumstances. This is called "restitution of minors." Bell, Dict.

RESTITUTION, WRIT OF.

—In Common-Law Practice. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. 2 Tidd, Prac. 1186.

—In Criminal Practice. A writ which lay on conviction of an offense involving the asportation of property to compel the criminal to restore the same.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIU. A writ addressed to the sheriff, to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 169.

RESTORE. To return what has been unjustly taken; to place the owner of a thing in the state in which he formerly was.

RESTRAINING ORDER. An order restraining the doing of any act; more commonly called an "injunction."

—In English Law. An order under St. 5 Vict. c. 5, § 4, by which the Bank of England, or any other public company, may be restrained from permitting a transfer of shares until the rights of certain parties thereto have been adjudged.

RESTRAINT OF ALIENATION. Restriction of the power of aliening realty. See "Perpetuity."

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Restriction of freedom of traffic. Restraint of trade of individuals may be general, or may be partial, in being limited as to time or territory. Contracts in general restraint of trade are void (8 Mass. 223); while those in partial restraint are valid (42 N. J. Eq. 185; 11 Ohio St. 349; 68 N. Y. 300), unless the time be so long, or the territory so extensive, that it amounts to a general restraint (36 Cal. 342). Contracts or combinations which operate in restraint of public trade are ordinarily void, though the restraint be put partial. 68 N. Y. 558.

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT. An indorsement which confines the negotiability of a promissory note or bill of exchange by using express words to that effect, as, by indorsing it payable to A. B. only. 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 512; 2 Murph. (N. C.) 138; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1138.

RESTS. Periodical balancings of an account (particularly in mortgage and trust accounts), made for the purpose of converting interest into principal, and charging the party liable thereon with compound interest. Mozley & W.

RESULTING TRUST. A trust raised by implication or construction of law, and presumed to exist from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction.

All trusts created by implication or construction of law are often included under the general term "implied trust;" but these are commonly distinguished into implied or resulting and constructive trusts; resulting or presumptive trusts being those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; constructive trusts, such as are raised independently of any such intention, and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and the operation of law. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1095; Hill, Trustees, 91; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 510; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 198; 3 Swanst. 585; 1 Ohio, 321; 6 Conn. 285; 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 373; 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 93. See "Trust."

RESULTING USE. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffor who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 100.

The doctrine, at first limited to the case of an apparently voluntary conveyance with no express declaration, became so extended that a conveyance of the legal estate ceased to imply an intention that the feoffee should enjoy the beneficial interest therein; and if no intent to the contrary was expressed, and no consideration proved or implied, the use always resulted to the feoffor. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 100. And if part only of the use was expressed, the balance resulted to the feoffor. 2 Atk. 150; 2 Rolle, Abr. 781; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 451; Co. Litt. 23a. And, under the statute, where a use has been limited by deed, and expires, or cannot vest, it results back to the one who declared it. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 494; 15 Me. 414; 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 323; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 388. And see Cro. Jac. 200; White & T. Lead. Cas. 258; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 132 et seq. See "Use."

RESUME WORK. In mining law, is to actually begin work anew with a bona fide intention of prosecuting it as required by the statute (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324). 104 Cal. 229.

RESUMMONS (Law Lat. resummonitio). In practice. A second summons. The calling a person a second time to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated upon any occasion, as the death of a party, or the like. Cowell.

RESUMPTION (Law Lat. resumptio). In old English law. The taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements as before, upon false suggestion or other error, he had delivered to the heir or granted by letters patent to any man. St. 31 Hen. VI. c. 7; Cowell.

RESURRENDER. Where copyhold land has been mortgaged by surrender, and the mortgagee has been admitted, then, on the mortgage debt being paid off, the mortgagor is entitled to have the land reconveyed to him, by the mortgagee surrendering it to the lord to his use. This is called a "resurrender." 2 Dav. Conv. 1332n.

RETAIL. To sell by small parcels, and not in the gross. 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 279; 7 Metc. (Mass.) 308.

RETAIN. In practice. To engage the services of an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause. See "Retainer."

RETAINER. The act of withholding what one has in one's own hands, by virtue of some right. See "Administrator;" "Executor;" "Lien."

—In Practice. The act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it, when he is plaintiff, or defending it, when he is defendant. 200 Ill. 353.

The word is also used to denote the fee which the client pays his attorney when he retains him to act for him, and thereby prevents him from acting for his adversary. 200 Ill. 353; 38 Kan. 668.

In English practice, a much more formal retainer is usually required than in America. Thus it is said by Chitty (3 Prac. 116, note [m]), that, although it is not indispensable that the retainer should be in writing, unless required by the other side, it is very expedient. It is therefore recommended, particularly when the client is a stranger, to require from him a written retainer, signed by himself, and, in order to avoid the insinuation that it was obtained by contrivance, it should be witnessed by one or more respectable persons. When there are several plaintiffs, it should be signed by all, and not by one for himself and the others, especially if they are trustees or assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent. The retainer should also state whether it be given for a general or a qualified authority. See 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 830; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 296; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 464; 1 N. H. 23; 28 N. H. 302; 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 275; 27 Miss. 567.

RETAINING FEE. A fee given to counsel on being consulted, in order to insure his future services. See "Retainer."

RETAKING. The taking one's goods, wife, child, etc., from another, who, without right, has taken possession thereof. See "Recap-tion."

RETALIATION. In international law. A term including both reprisal and retorsion (q. v.)

RETELLIA (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. retailer, to cut again). In old English law. Retail; the cutting up again, or division of a commodity into smaller parts. Nec in grosso, nec ad retalkam, neither in gross (by wholesale), nor at retail. Reg. Orig. 184.

RETARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To suspect; to accuse. Retatus de murthero, accused of murder. Assis. de Clarendon, temp. Hen. II. § 1; Spelman. De furto retatus, charged with theft. Cowell.

RETENTION. In Scotch law. The right which the possessor of a movable has of holding the same until he shall be satisfied for his claim either against such movable or the owner of it; a lien.

General retention is the right to withhold or detain the property of another, in respect of any debt which happens to be due by the proprietor to the person who has the custody, or for a general balance of accounts arising on a particular train of employment. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 90, 91.

Special retention is the right of withholding or retaining property or goods which are in one's possession under a contract, till indemnified for the labor or money expended on them.

RETONSOR (Law Lat. from retandere, q. v.) In old English law. A clipper of money. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 122.

RETORNA BREVIUM. In old English law. The return of writs by sheriffs and bailiffs, which is only a certificate delivered to the court on the day of return, of that which he hath done touching the execution of their writ directed to him. This must be indorsed on back of writ by officer. 2 Lilly, Abr. 476. Each term has return days, fixed, as early as 51 Hen. III., at intervals of about a week, on which all original writs are returnable. The first return day is regularly the first day in the term; but there are three days' grace. 2 Bl. Comm. 277.

RETORNO HABENDO. In practice. A writ issued to compel a party to return property to the party to whom it has been adjudged to belong, in an action of replevin.

Thus, where the property taken was cattle, it recites that the defendant was summoned to appear to answer the plaintiff in a plea whereof he took the cattle of the said plaintiff, specifying them, and that the said plaintiff afterwards made default; wherefore it was then considered that the said plaintiff and his pledges of prosecuting should be in mercy, and that the said defendant should go without day, and that he should have return of the cattle aforesaid. It then commands the sheriff that he should cause to be returned the cattle aforesaid to the said defendant without delay, etc. 2 Sellon, Prac. 168.

RETORSION. The name of the act employed by a government to impose the same hard treatment on the citizens or subjects of a state that the latter has used towards the citizens or subjects of the former, for the purpose of obtaining the removal of obnoxious measures. Vattel, liv. 2, c. 18, § 341; De Martens, Precis, liv. 8, c. 2, § 254; Kluber, Dr. des Gens, sec. 2, c. 1, § 234; Manning, Comm. 105.

RETOUR. In Scotch law. To return a writ or brief to the office in chancery from which it issued. Hubback, Ev. Success. 597. See "Retour of Service."

RETOUR OF SERVICE. In Scotch law. An authenticated copy of the verdict of a jury (called a "service") taken under a brief of succession, by which the legal character of a party as heir is judicially established. Hubback, Ev. Success. 597; 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 80. See Bell, Dict.

RETRACTATION, or RETRACTION. In probate practice. A withdrawal of a renunciation.

RETRACTO O TANTEO. In Spanish law. The right of revoking a contract of sale; the right of redemption of a thing sold. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 13, c. 2, § 4.

RETRACTUS AQUAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Retreat of the water; ebb, or low water; the retreat of tide. Plac. Cor. Rege, Pasch.; 30 Edw. I. apud Cantuar. Rot. 58; Cowell.

RETRACTUS FEUDALIS (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. The power which a superior possessed of paying off a debt due to an adjudging creditor, and taking a conveyance to the adjudication. Bell, Dict.

RETRAHERE (Lat. from re, back, and trahere, to draw). In old English practice. To draw back; to withdraw. Si simpliciter se retrahat a brevi, non tamen se retrahit ab actione,—nisi expresse dicat quod se retrahat ab utroque, if he merely withdraw himself from the writ, he does not thereby withdraw himself from the action, unless he expressly says that he withdraws himself from both. Bracton, fol. 182b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, § 1.

RETRAIT (Fr. from retraire, to draw back). In old French and Canadian law. The taking back of a fief by the seignior, in case of alienation by the vassal. Dunkin's Address, 93.

A right of pre-emption by the seignior, in case of sale of the land by the grantee. Id. 40.

RETRAXIT (Lat. he has withdrawn.) In practice. The act by which a plaintiff withdraws his suit. It is so called from the fact that this was the principal word used when the law entries were in Latin.

A "retraxit" differs from a "nonsuit;" the former being the act of the plaintiff himself, for it cannot even be entered by attorney (8 Coke, 58; 3 Salk. 245; 8 Pa. St. 157, 163), and it must be after declaration filed (3 Leon. 47; 8 Pa. St. 163); while the latter occurs in consequence of the neglect merely of the plaintiff. A retraxit also differs from a nolle prosequi. The effect of a retraxit is a bar to all actions of a like or a similar nature (Bac. Abr. "Nonsuit" [A]); a nolle prosequi is not a bar even in a criminal prosecution (2 Mass. 172). See 2 Sellon, Prac. 338; Bac. Abr. "Nonsuit;" Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (X 2).

RETREAT TO THE WALL. A figurative phrase used to express the duty of one assailed to retreat as far as he can with safety before resisting the assault with force, such a retreat being essential to the right to kill in self-defense. 4 Bl. Comm. 185.

RETRO (Lat.) Back; backward; behind. Retrofeodum, a rere fief, or arriere fief. Spelman.

RETROACTIVE. The same as "retrospective" (q. v.)

RETROCESSION. In civil law. When the assignee of heritable rights conveys his rights back to the cedent, it is called a "retrocession." Ersk. Inst. 3. 5. 1; Dict. de Jur.

RETROSPECTIVE. Looking backward. A retroactive law is one which applies to cases existing at its passage, so as to impose new duties or attach new disabilities with reference to past transaction, or to impair vested rights.

RETTE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An accusation or charge. Quant clerk est prise par rette de felony, when a clerk is taken on a charge of felony. St. Westminster I. c. 2.

RETTET (Law Fr.) In old English law. To accuse; to charge; to lay to the charge; to account; in old English, to arret, or arrect. Ceo purra il retter a sa negligence, he must charge this to his own negligence. Britt. c. 59. Ceo poies retter a vostre folly demesne, you may lay this to your own folly. Y. B. H. 10 Edw. III. 8. Il serra rette la folly, it shall be accounted the folly. Litt. § 261.

RETTUM (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. rette, q. v.) In old English law. An accusation, a charge. Si clericus aliquis pro crimine aliquo vel retto—arrestatus fuerit, if any clerk shall have been arrested for any crime or charge. St. Marl. c. 28 (27).

RETURN.

—Of Writs or Process. The redelivery of a writ or process by the officer charged with its execution to the court from which it issued, with an account of the manner in which he has executed it. The account indorsed on or affixed to process or writs by the officer, stating the manner of its execution.

—To Writs. The answer made by one to whom an alternative writ (as of habeas corpus or quo warranto) is directed.

—On Appeal or Error. The papers or record transmitted from the lower to the appellate court.

RETURN DAY. A day appointed by law when all writs are to be returned which have issued since the preceding return day. The sheriff is, in general, not required to return his writ until the return day. After that period he may be ruled to make a return.

RETURN OF PREMIUM. In insurance. A repayment of a part or the whole of the premium paid. Policies of insurance, especially those on marine risks, not unfrequently contain stipulations for a return of the whole or a part of the premium in certain contingencies (2 Phil. Ins. xxii. § 11); but in the absence of any such stipulation, in a case free of fraud on the part of the assured, if the risk does not commence to run, he is entitled to a return of it, if paid, or an exoneration from his liability to pay it, subject to deduction settled by stipulation or usage; and so, pro rata, if only a part of the insured subject is put at risk (2 Phil. Ins. c. xxii. § 1); and so an abatement of the excess of marine interest over the legal rate is made in hypothecation of ship or cargo in like case (Id. § 7; Boul. P. Dr. Com. tit. 9, § 13, tom. 3, p. 63 (Ed. of 1822); Poth. Cont. a la Grosse, note 39.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM. A judicial writ, similar to the retorno habendo. Cowell.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE. A judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict. It is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Jud. 27.

REUS (Lat.) In civil law. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. Reus est qui cum altero litem contestatam habet, sive id egit, sive cum eo actum est.

A party to a contract. Reus credendi is he to whom something is due, by whatever title it may be; reus debendi is he who owes, for whatever cause. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50.

REUS EXCIPIENDO FIT ACTOR. The defendant, by a plea, becomes plaintiff. Bannier, Tr. des Preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Ev. 294, § 252.

REUS LAESAE MAJESTATIS PUNITUR, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Coke, 124.

REUS PROMITTENDI. See "Reus Stipulandi."

REUS STIPULANDI. In the civil law. The party to a stipulation is so called if he is the creditor or obligee, and the debtor or obligor to such a stipulation is called the "reus promittendi." Where there are several creditors or several debtors jointly entitled to or jointly liable under a stipulation, they were respectively called "correi;" i. e., joint rei. Brown.

REVE, or GREVE (Lat. gerefa, or refa, from raefan, to seize). In English law. A chief officer or superintendent (praepositus, praefectus). Properly, according to Spelman, a collector or exactor of public moneys or fines.

Shire reve, the reve or chief officer of the shire (pagi praepositus). Hence, sheriff.

Tun greve, the reve or chief officer of a town (villae praepositus). Afterwards simply called "reve," and bailiff. Spelman. See "Reeve."

REVE LAND. In Domesday Book we find land put down as "thane lands," which were afterwards converted into reve lands, i. e., such lands as, having reverted to the king upon death of his thane, who had it for life, were not since granted out to any by the king, but vested in charge upon account of the reve or bailiff of the manor. Spelman, Feuds, c. 24. Coke was mistaken in thinking it was land held in socage.

REVE MOTE. In Saxon law. The court of the reve, reeve, or shire reeve. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 6.

REVENDEICATION. In civil law. An action by which a man demands a thing of which he claims to be owner. It applies to immovables as well as movables; to corporeal or incorporeal things. Merlin, Rept.

Revendication, in another sense, corresponds very nearly to the "stoppage in transitu" of the common law. It is used in that sense in Code de Commerce, art. 577. Revendication, says that article, can take place only when the goods sold are on the way to their place of destination, whether by land or water, and before they have been received into the warehouse of the insolvent (failli) or that of his factor or agent authorized to sell them on account of the insolvent. See Dig. 14. 4. 15; Id. 18. 1. 19. 53; Id. 19. 1. 11.

REVENUE. (L. Fr. and Eng.) That which returns, or is returned; a rent. Income; annual profit received from lands or other property. Cowell.

REVERSAL.

—In International Law. A declaration by which a sovereign promises that he will observe a certain order, or certain conditions, which have been once established, notwithstanding any changes that may happen to cause a deviation therefrom; as, for example, when the French court consented for the first time, in 1745, to grant to Elizabeth, the czarina of Russia, the title of empress, it exacted as a reversal a declaration purporting that the assumption of the title of an imperial government by Russia should not derogate from the rank which France had held towards her.

Letters by which a sovereign declares that, by a particular act of his, he does not mean to prejudice a third power. Of this we have an example in history. Formerly the emperor of Germany, whose coronation, according to the Golden Bull, ought to have been solemnized at Aix-la-Chapelle, gave to that city, when he was crowned elsewhere, reversals, by which he declared that such coronation took place without prejudice to its rights, and without drawing any consequences therefrom for the future.

—In Practice. The decision of a superior court by which the judgment, sentence, or decree of the inferior court is annulled.

REVERSER. In Scotch law. The proprietor of an estate who grants a wadset (or mortgage) of his lands, and who has a right, on repayment of the money advanced to him, to be replaced in his right. Bell, Dict.

REVERSIO (Law Lat. from reverti, to return). In old English law. The returning of land to the donor. Fleta, lib. 3, cc. 10, 12.

REVERSION. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. The return of land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant is over. Co. Litt. 142b.

The reversion arises by operation of law, and not by deed or will, and it is a vested interest or estate, and in this it differs from a "remainder," which can never be limited unless by either deed or devise. 2 Bl. Comm. 175; Cruise, Dig. tit. 17; Plowd. 151; 4 Kent, Comm. 349; 19 Viner, Abr. 217. A reversion is said to be an incorporeal hereditament. 4 Kent, Comm. 354; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 37, 47, 63; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1850. See "Remainder."

REVERSIONARY INTEREST. The interest which one has in the reversion of lands or other property. The residue which remains to one who has carved out of his estate a lesser estate. See "Reversion." An interest in the land when possession shall fall. Cowell.

REVERSIONARY LEASE. One to take effect in futuro. A second lease, to commence after the expiration of a former lease. Wharton.

REVERSIONER. A person who is entitled to an estate in reversion.

REVERSOR. In Scotch law. A debtor who makes a wadset, and to whom the right of reversion is granted. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 1. A reversioner. Jacob.

REVERTER. Reversion. A possibility of reverter is that species of reversionary interest which exists when the grant is so limited that it may possibly terminate. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 63.

REVEST. To vest again. A seisin is said to re-vest, where it is acquired a second time by the party out of whom it has been divested. 1 Roper, Husb. & Wife, 353.

It is opposed to "divest." The words "re-vest" and "divest" are also applicable to the mere right or title, as opposed to the possession. Brown.

REVESTIRE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To return or resign an investiture, seisin, or possession that has been received; to re-invest; to re-enfeoff. Spelman.

REVIEW. A second examination of a matter; ordinarily applied to a re-examination of a judicial or official determination. It is a general term, embracing re-examination obtained by every variety of procedure, as by motion for new trial, appeal, writ of error, bill of review, etc.

REVIEW, BILL OF. In equity practice. A bill in the nature of a writ of error, filed to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a decree made upon a former bill, which decree has been signed and enrolled. Story, Eq. Pl. § 403.

REVISING BARRISTERS. In English law. Barristers appointed to revise the list of voters for county and borough members of parliament, and who hold courts for that purpose throughout the country, being appointed in July or August. 6 Vict. c. 18; 3 Chit. St.

REVIVAL.

—Of Contracts. An agreement to renew the legal obligation of a just debt after it has been barred by the act of limitation or lapse of time is called its "revival."

—Of Judgment. At common law, the act by which a judgment which has lain dormant or without any action upon it for a year and a day is again restored to its original force.

When a judgment is more than a day and a year old, no execution can issue upon it at common law; but till it has been paid, or the presumption arises from lapse of time that it has been satisfied, it may be revived and have all its original force, which was merely suspended. This may be done by a scire facias, or an action of debt on the judgment. See "Scire Facias."

Where the common-law rule is not in force, the bringing of suit on a judgment to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations is termed "revival."

—Of Action. The continuation of an action which has abated by the death or disability of a party, or a transfer of the cause of action. At common law, this was effected by a bill in equity (see "Bill of Revivor"), but in most of the states, a proceeding on application to the court in which the action was pending has been substituted.

REVIVOR. In equity practice. A bill used to renew an original bill which, for some reason, has become inoperative.

The purpose of a revivor is to renew a dormant judgment and to give it its original force as a lien on the judgment debtor's property. 209 Ill. 249. See "Bill of Revivor."

REVOCAION OF AGENCY. An agency is dissolved or determined in several ways:

- I. By the act of the principal, either
 - (a) Express, as
 - (1) By direct and formal writing, publicly advertised;
 - (2) By informal writing to the agent privately;
 - (3) By parol. 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198.
 - (b) Implied from circumstances, as by appointing another person to do the same act, where the authority of both would be incompatible. 78 Ky. 413.

The exceptions to the power of the principal to revoke his agent's authority at mere pleasure are

- (1) When the principal has expressly stipulated that the authority shall be irrevocable, and the agent has also an interest in its execution. 86 Ill. 142.
- (2) Where an authority or power is coupled with an interest, or is given for a valuable consideration, or is a part of a security, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable. 40 Ill. 109.

(3) Where an agent's act in pursuance of his authority has become obligatory, for nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam. 121 N. Y. 582.

II. By the agent's giving notice to his principal that he renounces the agency; but the principal must sustain no damage thereby; otherwise the agent would be responsible therefor. 37 Mich. 481.

III. By operation of law, as

(a) By the expiration of the period during which the agency was to exist or to have effect. 62 Ga. 216.

(b) By a change of condition or of state, producing an incapacity of either the principal or the agent, as

- (1) Marriage of a feme sole principal. 22 Tex. 365.
- (2) Mental disability established by inquisition, or where the party is placed under guardianship. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 495.
- (3) Bankruptcy, except as to such rights as do not pass to the trustee under the adjudication. 6 Biss. (U. S.) 405.
- (4) Death, unless the authority is coupled with an interest in the thing vested in the agent. 18 Beav. 179.
- (5) Extinction of the subject of the agency.
- (6) Cessation of the principal's powers.
- (7) Complete execution of the trust confided to the agent, who then is functus officio. 100 N. Y. 413; Wharton.
- (8) A state of war also terminates all agencies requiring intercourse between belligerent nations. 100 Mass. 561.

REVOCAION OF PROBATE. The vacation or recall of an order admitting a will to probate.

REVOCAIONE PARLIAMENTI. An ancient writ for recalling a parliament. 4 Inst. 44.

REVOCATUR (Lat. recalled). A term used to denote that a judgment is annulled for an error in fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled, revocatur; not "reversed," which is the word used when a judgment is annulled for an error in law. Tidd, Prac. 1126.

REVOLT. The endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his will to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to some other person. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 417.

A confederacy or combination must be shown. 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 582; 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 305; Crabbe, Dict. Ct. 558. The vessel must be properly registered (3 Sumn. [U. S.] 342); must be pursuing her regular voyage (2 Sumn. [U. S.] 470). The indictment must specifically set forth the acts which constitute the crime. Wharton, Prec. § 1061, note. And see 1 Mason (U. S.) 147; 5 Mason (U. S.) 402, 404; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 448; 4 Washb. C. C. (U. S.) 402, 528; 2 Curt. (U. S.) 225; 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 213.

REWARD. An offer of recompense by the government, or by a private person, to whoever will perform some special act.

A reward is an offer, revocable at any time before performance. When accepted by performance, it becomes a contract. 92 U. S. 73.

REWME (Old Eng.; from Law Fr. reume). In old records. Realm; kingdom. "In the name of Fader, Son, and Holy Ghost, I, Henry of Lancaster, challenge this reume of Ynglonde and the croun, with all the members and the appurtenances, als I that am descendit be right line of the blode comyng fro the gudē Lord King Henry therde, and thorgho that right that God, f his grace, hath sent mee, with helpe of my kyn and of my frendes to recover it; the which reume was in poynt to be ondone for default of governance and undoyng of the gude laws." Claim of Henry, Duke of Lancaster (afterwards Henry IV.), to the crown of England. 1 How. St. Tr. 152.

REX (Lat.) In old English law. King; a king; the king.

REX DEBET ESSE SUB LEGE QUIA lex facit regem. The king ought to be under the law, because the law makes the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 239.

REX EST LEGALIS ET POLITICUS. The king is both a legal and political person. Lane, 27.

REX EST LEX VIVENS. The king is the living law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

REX EST MAJOR SINGULIS; MINOR universis. The king is greater than any single person; less than all. Bracton, lib. 1, c. 8.

REX HOC SOLUM NON POTEST FACERE quod non potest injuste agere. The king can do everything but an injustice. 11 Coke, 72.

REX NON DEBET ESSE SUB HOMINE sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 46, 111; Bracton, 5.

REX NON POTEST FALLERE NEC FALLI. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rudiments of Law, 438.

REX NON POTEST PECCARE. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle, 304; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 9, 308; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 51; 1 Bl. Comm. 246.

REX NUNQUAM MORITUR. The king never dies. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 49; Branch, Max. (5th Ed.) 197; 1 Bl. Comm. 249.

RHANDIR. In gavelkind law. A gavel was divided into four rhandirs, each consisting of four tenements.

RHODIAN LAWS. A code of maritime laws adopted by the people of Rhodes, who had by their commerce and naval victories obtained the sovereignty of the sea, about nine hundred years before the Christian era. There is reason to suppose this code has not been transmitted to posterity, at least not in a perfect state. A collection of marine constitutions, under the denomination of "Rhodian Laws," may be seen in Vinnius; but they bear evident marks of a spurious origin. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 4, p. 15. See "Code."

RIAL OF PLATE. A Spanish coin computed in custom-house calculations at ten cents. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626.

RIAL OF VELLON. A Spanish coin computed in custom-house calculations at five cents. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626.

RIBALDUS (Law Lat.; from Fr. ribauld, ribaud). In old European law. A worthless person; a vagabond; a rogue or ruffian. Spelman. It was not always, however, used in a bad sense, but sometimes denoted an inferior attendant or servant. Id.

RIBAUD. A rogue; a vagrant. It is not used.

RICHARD ROE, otherwise TROUBLE-SOME. The casual ejector and fictitious defendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer invoked.

RICOHOME (Spanish). In Spanish law. A nobleman; a count or baron. 1 White, Recop. 36.

RIDER. A schedule or small piece of paper or parchment added to some part of the record; as, when on the reading of a bill in the legislature a new clause is added, this is tacked to the bill on a separate piece of paper, and is called a "rider."

RIDER (or RIDDER) ROLL. In old English practice. A schedule or small piece of parchment added to some part of a roll or record. Cowell; Blount. A supplementary roll. 2 Tidd, Prac. 730.

RIDING. In English law. An ascertained district; part of a county. This term has the same meaning in Yorkshire that division has in Lincolnshire. 4 Term R. 459.

RIEN. A French word which signifies "nothing." It has generally this meaning; as, rien en arriere; rien passe per le fait, nothing passes by the deed; rien per descent, nothing by descent. It sometimes signifies not, as, rien culpable, not guilty. Doct. Plac. 435.

RIEN CULP (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Not guilty. Y. B. H. 9 Hen. VI. 16; Id. M. 10 Hen. VI. 53.

RIEN DIT (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Says nothing (nil dicit). Y. B. M. 8 Hen. VI. 16.

RIEN EN ARRERE (Law Fr. nothing in arrear). In pleading. A plea which alleges that there is nothing remaining due and unpaid of the plaintiff's demand. It is a good plea, and raises the general issue in an action for rent. 2 Wm. Saund. 297, note 1; 2 Chit. Pl. 486; 2 Ld. Raym. 1503.

A plea in an action of debt for rent. 1 Tidd, Prac. 650; Roscoe, Real Actions, 475.

A plea to an avowry in replevin. Roscoe, Real Actions, 638; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 566. A quasi general issue. 2 Seld. (N. Y.) 141.

RIEN LUY DOIT (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Owes him nothing. The plea of nil debet. Y. B. M. 8 Hen. VI. 16.

RIEN PASSA UAR LE FAIT (Law Fr. nothing passed by the deed). In pleading. A plea which avoids the effect of a deed, where its execution cannot be denied, by asserting that nothing passed thereby; for example, an allegation that the acknowledgment was before a court which had not jurisdiction.

RIENS, RIEN, or RYEN (Law Fr.) Nothing. Litt. § 53.

RIENS LOUR DEUST (Law Fr. not their debt). The old form of the plea of nil debet. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 332.

RIENS PER DESCENT (Law Fr. nothing by descent). The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and has no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. Cro. Car. 151; 1 Tidd, Prac. 645; 2 Tidd, Prac. 937.

RIER COUNTY (Law Lat. retrocomitatus). In old English law. After-county, i. e., after the end of the county court. A time and place appointed by the sheriff for the receipt of the king's money after the end of his county, or county court. Cowell. Fleta (lib. 2, c. 67) calls it the day after the county (dies crastinus post comitatum). It is opposed to "open county" (that is, open county court), in St. 2 Edw. III. c. 5.

RIFFLURA, RUFFLURA, or RUFLURA (Law Lat.; from old Eng. rufflyn, to disorder). In old English criminal law. A slight removal of the skin; a scratch (scarificatio, decortatio). Bracton, fols. 144, 145; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 8; Spelman.

RIFLETUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A coppice or thicket. Cowell.

RIGA. In old European law. A species of service and tribute rendered to their lords by agricultural tenants. Supposed by Spelman to be derived from the name of a certain portion of land called, in England, a "rig" or "ridge," an elevated piece of ground, formed out of several furrows.

RIGHT. In the most abstract sense, justice, equity. The word also denotes, among other things, property, interest, power, prerogative, immunity, and privilege, and in law is most frequently applied to property in its restricted sense. As an enforceable legal right, it means that which one has a legal right to do. 57 Ore. 201; Ann. Cas. 1913A 66.

That which a person, having it, is entitled to keep and enjoy, and to be protected by law in its enjoyment; as the right of personal liberty, and other rights of persons. See 1 Bl. Comm. 129.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from him, or not in his possession. In this sense, "right" has the force of "claim," and is properly expressed by the Latin jus. Lord Coke considers this to be the proper signification of the word, especially in writs and pleadings, where an estate is turned to a right, as by discontinuance, disseisin, etc. Co. Litt. 345a.

That interest which a person actually has in any subject of property, entitling him to hold or convey it at pleasure. 57 Ore. 201; Ann. Cas. 1913A 66. An estate in esse in conveyances. Co. Litt. 345a. In this sense "right" (jus) has the force of ownership or property. Lord Coke comparing the terms of right and title observes that "title" is the more general word, for every right is a title, but every title is not such a right for which an action lies." Co. Litt. 345b. Sir Matthew Hale distinguishes between the right of an estate and the title of an estate. Hale, Anal. § 32.

Classification:

(1) Rights are perfect and imperfect. When the things which we have a right to possess, or the actions we have a right to do, are or may be fixed and determinate, the right is a perfect one; but when the thing or the actions are vague and indeterminate, the right is an imperfect one. If a man demand his property which is withheld from him, the right that supports his demand is a perfect one, because the thing demanded is or may be fixed and determinate; but if a poor man ask relief from those from whom he has reason to expect it, the right which supports his position is an imperfect one, because the relief which he expects is a vague, indeterminate thing. Rutherford, Inst. c. 2, § 4; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, § 4.

(2) Rights are also absolute and qualified. A man has an absolute right to recover property which belongs to him. An agent has a qualified right to recover such property when it had been intrusted to his care, and which has been unlawfully taken out of his possession.

(3) Rights might, with propriety, be also divided into natural and civil rights; but as all the rights which man has received from nature have been modified and acquired anew from the civil law, it is more proper, when considering their object, to divide them into political and civil rights.

Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government. These political rights are fixed by the constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers, and of being elected. These are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses.

Civil rights are those which have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government. These consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, of exercising the paternal and marital powers, and the like. It will be observed that every one, unless deprived of them by a sentence of civil death, is in the enjoyment of his civil rights, which is not the case with political rights, for an alien, for example, has no political, although in the full enjoyment of his civil, rights.

(4) Civil rights are divided into absolute and relative. The absolute rights of mankind may be reduced to three principal or primary articles: The right of personal security, which consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation; the right of personal liberty, which consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatsoever place one's inclination may direct, without any restraint unless by due course of law; the right of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution save only by the laws of the land. 1 Bl. Comm. 124-139.

(5) The relative rights are public or private. The first are those which subsist between the people and the government; as, the right of protection on the part of the people, and the right of allegiance which is due by the people to the government; the second are the reciprocal rights of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, and master and servant.

(6) Rights are also divided into legal and equitable. The former are those where the party has the legal title to a thing; and in that case his remedy for an infringement of it is by an action in a court of law. Although the person holding the legal title may have no actual interest, but hold only as trustee, the suit must be in his name, and not, in general, in that of the cestui que trust. 1 East, 497; 8 Term R. 332; 1 Saund. 158, note 1; 2 Bing. 20. The latter, or equitable rights, are those which may be enforced in a court of equity by the cestui que trust. See, generally, Bouv. Inst. Index.

RIGHT CLOSE, WRIT OF. An abolished writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively. 1 Steph. Comm. 224.

RIGHT IN ACTION. A chose in action (q. v.)

RIGHT IN COURT. See "Rectus in Curia."

RIGHT OF ACCESS. The right of a riparian owner to pass to and from the waters of the lake within the width of his premises as they border on the lake. 202 Ill. 431.

RIGHT OF ACTION. The right to bring suit; a legal right to maintain an action, growing out of a given transaction or state of facts, and based thereon. See "Action."

By the old writers "right of action" is commonly used to denote that a person has lost a right of entry, and has nothing but a right of action left. Co. Litt. 363b.

RIGHT OF DISCUSSION. In Scotch law. The right which the cautioner (surety) has to insist that the creditor shall do his best to compel the performance of the contract by the principal debtor before he shall be called upon. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF DIVISION. In Scotch law. The right which each of several cautioners (sureties) has to refuse to answer for more than his own share of the debt. To entitle the cautioner to this right, the other cautioners must be solvent, and there must be no words in the bond to exclude it. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF ENTRY. A right of entry is the right of taking or resuming possession of land by entering on it in a peaceable manner.

RIGHT OF HABITATION. In Louisiana. The right of dwelling gratuitously in a house the property of another. Civ. Code La. art. 623; 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. c. 2, p. 325; 14 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 279, p. 330.

RIGHT OF POSSESSION. The right to possession which may reside in one man, while another has the actual possession, being the right to enter and turn out such actual occupant; e. g., the right of a disseisee. An apparent right of possession is one which may be defeated, by a better; an actual right of possession,—one which will stand the test against all opponents. 2 Bl. Comm. 196*.

RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION. The right to purchase the land at the government price, in preference to any other person, and before it is offered at public sale. 54 Ill. 55.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY. The abstract right (merum jus) which remains after the actual possession has been so long gone that the right of possession is also lost, and the law will only allow recovery of the land by a writ of right. It, together with possession and right of possession, makes a perfect title; e. g., a disseisor has naked possession, the disseisee has right of possession and right of property. But after twenty years without entry, the right of possession is transferred from the disseisee to the disseisor; and if he now buys up the right of property which alone remains in the disseisee, the disseisor will unite all three rights in himself, and thereby acquire a perfect title. 2 Bl. Comm. 197-199*.

RIGHT OF RELIEF. In Scotch law. The right which the cautioner (surety) has against the principal debtor when he has been forced to pay his debt. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF SEARCH. See "Search, Right of;" 1 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 153, note; 1 Phillim. Int. Law, 325.

RIGHT OF WAY. The term imports an easement of way, and not a public highway. 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 432.

An easement of perpetual use, a charge or burden upon the land of one for the benefit of another. 57 Ore. 203; Ann. Cas. 1918A 67; 34 Cyc. 1767.

RIGHT PATENT. The name of an ancient writ, which, Fitzherbert says, "ought to be brought of lands and tenements, and not of an advowson, or of common, and lieth only of an estate of fee simple, and not for him who has a lesser estate, as tenant in tail, tenant in frank marriage, or tenant for life." Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 1.

RIGHT TO BEGIN. In practice. The party who asserts the affirmative of an issue has the right to begin and reply, as on him is the burden of proof. The substantial affirmative, not the verbal, gives the right. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 136; 6 Ohio St. 307; 2 Gray (Mass.) 260.

RIGHT, WRIT OF. A procedure for the recovery of real property after not more than sixty years' adverse possession; the highest writ in the law, sometimes called, to distinguish it from others of the droitural class, the "writ of right proper." Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. 3 Steph. Comm. 392.

RIGHTS IN GROSS. A class of rights which one may have in another's land without their being exercised in connection with the occupancy of other lands, in which cases the burden rests upon the land in favor of a person or individual. 116 Ill. 19.

RIGOR JURIS (Law Lat.) Strictness of law. Latch, 150. Distinguished from gratia curiae, favor of the court. Id.

RING DROPPING. In criminal law. A phrase applied in England to a trick frequently practiced in committing larcenies. It is difficult to define it. It will be sufficiently exemplified by the following cases: The prisoner, with some accomplices, being in company with the prosecutor, pretended to find a valuable ring wrapped up in a paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for "a rich brilliant diamond ring." They offered to leave the ring with the prosecutor if he would deposit some money and his watch as a security. The prosecutor, having accordingly laid down his watch and money on a table, was beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others took away his watch and money. This was held to amount to a larceny. 1 Leach, C. C. 238; 2 East, P. C. 678. In another case, under similar circumstances, the prisoner procured from the prosecutor twenty guineas, promising to return them the next morning, and leaving the false jewel with him. This was also held to be larceny. 1 Leach, C. C. 314; 2 East, P. C. 679. In these cases the prosecutor had no intention of parting with the property in the money or goods stolen. It was taken, in the first case, while the transaction was proceeding, without his knowledge, and in the last, under the promise that it should be returned. See 2 Leach, C. C. 640.

RINGA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A belt; a girdle; a sword belt. Bracton, fol. 5b; Spelman.

RINGING OUT. A usage prevailing on the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, by which merchants having contracts with the same brokers both for grain sold and grain bought, purchased and sold for the same delivery, settle between themselves by paying the difference one way or the other. 130 Ill. 78. See "Ringing Up."

RINGING THE CHANGE. In criminal law. A trick practiced by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a spurious coin. For example, the prosecutor having bargained with the prisoner, who was selling fruit about the streets, to have five apricots for sixpence, gave him a good shilling to change. The prisoner put the shilling into his mouth, as if to bite it in order to try its goodness, and, returning a shilling to the prosecutor, told him it was a bad one. The prosecutor gave him another good shilling, which he also affected to bite, and then returned another shilling, saying it was a bad one. The prosecutor gave him another good shilling, with which he practised this trick a third time, the shillings returned by him being in every respect bad. 2 Leach, C. C. 64. This was held to be an uttering of false money. 1 Russ. Crimes, 114.

RINGING UP. Is nothing more or less than the setting off of one trade against another—a thing which occurs in great cities in mercantile transactions. Payments being made through checks upon bank, credit balances being set off against each other. The closing up of transactions on the board of trade for the purchase and sale of grain, by setting off one trade against another, is necessarily no more illegal or improper than is the setting off of credit balances by merchants through checks on banks. 68 Ill. App. 573; 4 Ill. App. 63; 6 Ill. App. 325. See "Ringing Out."

RINGS, GIVING. The giving of golden rings by a newly-created serjeant-at-law to every person of rank at court, from the princes of the blood, through the lords in parliament and the justices and barons of the courts, down to the meanest clerk of common pleas, to each one according to his dignity. The expense was not less than forty pounds English money. Fortesq. (Amos Ed.) 190; 10 Coke, Introd. 23.

RIOT. In criminal law. A tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 1. See 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 209; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 72; 3 Rich. (S. C.) 337; 5 Pa. St. 83. "Riot" includes both "unlawful assembly" and "rout" (q. v.), and the further element that there shall be not only a step towards carrying out the unlawful intent of the assembly, but that they shall proceed therein in a violent and tumultuous manner.

RIOT ACT. St. 1 Geo. I. st. 2. c. 5, providing that, if any twelve persons or more are committing a riot, any sheriff, mayor, or certain other officers shall by proclamation in the king's name command them to disperse (which is familiarly called "reading the riot act"), and that, if they refuse to obey, and remain together for the space of one hour after such proclamation, they are all guilty of felony.

RIOTOSE (Law Lat. riotously.) A formal and essential word in old indictments for riots. 2 Strange, 834. Riotose et routose, riotously and routously. 2 Salk. 593.

RIOTOUS ASSEMBLY. In English criminal law. The unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more, to the disturbance of the peace, and not dispersing upon proclamation. 4 Bl. Comm. 142; 4 Steph. Com. 273.

RIOTOUSLY. In criminal pleading. A technical word properly used in an indictment for a riot, and ex vi termini implying violence. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 488, 490, note (f); 2 Sess. Cas. 13, cited Id. In the English forms, "riotously and routously" is the expression invariably used. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, ubi supra; 3 Burrows, 1262. And this has been adopted in American practice. Wharton, Prec. Indict. (Ed. 1857) 849 et seq.

RIPA (Lat.) The banks of a river, or the place beyond which the waters do not in their natural course overflow.

An extraordinary overflow does not change the banks of the river. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50. See "Bank;" "River."

RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR. The word "riparian" has reference to the bank, and not to the bed of the stream. Those who own the land bounding on the watercourse are called riparian proprietors or riparian owners. They have a qualified property in the soil to the thread of the stream. 141 Ga. 202; Ann. Cas. 1915C 1025; 9 Ann. Cas. 1229, note. See Littoral Proprietor.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS. The rights of the owners of lands on the banks of rivers and streams, 3 Kent, Comm. 427-432. See "Riparian Proprietor."

RIPARUM USUS PUBLICUS EST JURE gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 5. pr.; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 5; Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 6, § 12.

RIPATICUM (L. Lat.) In old European law. A revenue derived from the banks of rivers. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 56.

RIPUARIAN LAW. A code of laws of the Franks, who occupied the country upon the Rhine, the Meuse, and the Scheldt, who were collectively known by the name "Ripuarrians," and their laws as "Ripuarrian Law."

RISCUS (Law Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. A chest for the keeping of clothing. Calv. Lex.

—In Old Pleading. A trunk. Cro. Jac. 664.

RISICUM (Law Lat.) In old insurance law. Risk; hazard; peril. Straccha, Gloss. 16; Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12.

RISK. In insurance law. The event insured against.

Not the "danger," but the circumstances which give rise to it. 1 Hurlst. & N. 334.

RISTOURNE (Fr.) In insurance law. The dissolution of a policy or contract of insurance, for any cause. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 16.

RITE (Lat.) In due form. "The rule of presumption is ut res rite acta est" (that a thing is done in due form). Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 248. See "Omnia Præsumuntur Rite, etc."

RIVER. A natural stream of water flowing betwixt banks or walls in a bed of considerable depth and width, being so called whether its current sets always one way, or flows and reflows with the tide. Woolr. Waters, 40; 16 N. H. 467.

—In Old Law. Rivers were either public or private. Public rivers are divided into "navigable" and "not navigable;" the distinction being that the former flow and reflow with the tide, while the latter do not. Both are "navigable" in the popular sense of the term. Angell, Tide Waters, 74, 75; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; 4 Barn. & C. 602; 5 Taunt. 705.

Rivers, when naturally unfit for public use, as above described, are called "private rivers." They are the private property of the riparian proprietors, and cannot be appropriated to public use, as highways, by deepening or improving their channels, without compensation to their owners. 16 Ohio, 540; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; 8 Pa. St. 379; 10 Me. 278; 1 McCord (S. C.) 580. And see "Watercourse."

—In Modern Use. Rivers are ordinarily classified as navigable or nonnavigable, according to the fact, and not according to the flow of the tide, and the distinction between public and private rivers is accordingly obsolete. See "Navigable."

RIVATION. In old English law. The use of a river for the purposes of fishing, etc. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 2.

RIVUS (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. A trench for water to pass. Defined by Ulpian, a place sunk for a distance along, where water may run (locus per longitudinem depressus quo aqua decurrat). Dig. 43. 21. 1. 2.

—In old English Law. The channel of a watercourse. Bracton, fol. 233; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 10. Both these writers adopt the definition of the Digests (supra) word for word.

RIX DOLLAR. The name of a coin. The rix dollar of Bremen is deemed, as money of account at the custom house, to be of the value of seventy-eight and three-quarters cents. Act March 3, 1843. The rix dollar is computed at one hundred cents. Act March 2, 1799, § 61.

RIXA (Lat.) In civil law. A dispute; a quarrel. Dig. 48. 8. 17.

RIXATRIX (Lat.) A common scold.

R'NA. A contraction of regina (queen). 1 Inst. Cl. 12.

R'N'S. A contraction of respondes (answer). Y. B. H. 3 Hen. VI. 32.

ROAD. A passage through the country for the use of the people. 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421. A way of travel whether it be a private way or a public thoroughfare; commonly used as denoting a way for public travel in the country, as distinguished from the streets in a village or city. 167 Mich. 673. See "Way."

—In Maritime Law. An open passage of the sea, which, from the situation of the adjacent land and its own depth and wideness, affords a secure place for the common riding and anchoring of vessels. Hale de Port. Mar. pt. 2, c. 2. This word, however, does not appear to have a very definite meaning. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 4, 5.

ROADSTED. In maritime law. A known general station for ships (statio tutissima nautis), notoriously used as such, and distinguished by the name, and not any spot where an anchor will find bottom and fix itself. Sir Wm. Scott, 1 Rob. Adm. 232.

ROBARIA (Law Lat. from roba, a robe or garment). In old English law. Robbery. In its original sense, the violent taking of one's robe (roba) or garment. Spelman. Bracton writes the word roberia (q. v.); Fleta, robberia.

ROBATOR (Law Lat. from roba, a robe). In old English law. A robber. Robatores, robbers. Hove. Part. Post. in Rich. I. A. D. 1198. Sturdy thieves, who, falling upon the persons of men, plunder them of their goods (latrones validi, qui in personas hominum insilientes, bona sua diripiunt). Spelman. So called, originally, because they spoiled travellers of their robes or garments. Id. Bracton writes the word robbator.

ROBBER. One who commits a robbery; one who feloniously and forcibly takes goods or money to any value from the person of another by violence or putting him in fear.

ROBBERY. The felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another from his person or in his presence by violence or by putting him in fear. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 852.

Robbery includes "larceny" (q. v.), and all the elements that are necessary to constitute larceny are also necessary. The aggravating circumstances necessary to constitute robbery, as distinguished from simple larceny, are: (1) The property must be taken from the person of another (1 Hale, P. C. 532; 39 Ga. 583); but property taken in the presence of the owner is, in contemplation of law, taken from his person (1 Hale, P. C. 532; 72 Iowa, 432; 84 Ga. 660). (2) The taking must not only be without his consent, but it must be accomplished either by violence or by putting him in fear. 25 Ind. 403; 106 Ga. 692; 87 Va. 257; 12 Ga. 320. See "Putting in Fear."

ROBBOUR, or ROBOUR (Law Fr. from robber, to rob). A robber. De robbours et de larouns, of robbers and of thieves. Britt. c. 15; Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 55.

ROBERDSMEN, or ROBERSMEN. In old English law. Persons who, in the reign of Richard I., committed great outrages on the borders of England and Scotland. Said to have been the followers of Robert Hood, or Robin Hood. 4 Bl. Comm. 245; 3 Inst. 187.

ROBERIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Robbery. In robberia, in robbery; in the manner of a robber; as a robber. Bracton, fol. 146.

ROD. A measure sixteen and a half feet long; a perch.

ROGARE (Lat.) In Roman law. To ask or solicit. Rogare legem, to ask for the adoption of a law; to propose it for adoption. Derivatively, to vote for a law so proposed.

Laws were passed in assemblies of the people, the consul asking, "Velitis jubeatis quirites?" "Do you so order, citizens?" and those in favor of the law answering, "Uti rogas volo vel jubeo," "As you ask I will or order." When the vote was by ballot, an affirmative vote was marked "U. R." (uti rogas).

ROGATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. An asking for a law; a proposal of a law for adoption or passage. Derivatively, a law passed by such a form.

ROGATIO TESTIUM. This in making a nuncupative will, is where the testator formally calls upon the persons present to bear witness that he has declared his will. Williams, Ex'rs, 116; Browne, Prob. Prac. 59.

ROGATIONES, QUESTIONES, ET POSITIONES debent esse simplices. Demands, questions, and claims ought to be simple. Hob. 143.

ROGATOR (Lat. from rogare, q. v.). In the Roman law. The proposer of a law, Tayl. Civ. Law, 195.

ROGATORY, LETTERS. See "Letters Rogatory."

ROGO (Lat.) In the Roman law. I ask. A common word in wills. Dig. 30. 108. 13. 14; Id. 31. 77. 25.

ROGUE. A French word, which in that language signifies proud, arrogant. In some of the ancient English statutes, it means an idle, sturdy beggar, which is its meaning in law. Rogues are usually punished as vagrants. Although the word "rogue" is a word of reproach, yet to charge one as a rogue is not actionable. 5 Bin. (Pa.) 219. See 2 Dev. (N. C.) 162; Hardin (Ky.) 529.

ROIAUME (Law Fr.) Realm; kingdom. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

ROIEN. (L. Fr.) Queen. 1 And. 44.

ROLE D'EQUIPAGE. The list of a ship's crew; the muster roll.

ROLL. A schedule of parchment which may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe or tube. Jacob.

In early times, before paper came in common use, parchment was the substance employed for making records, and, as the art of bookbinding was but little used, economy suggested, as the most convenient mode, the adding of sheet to sheet, as was found requisite, and they were tacked together in such a manner that the whole length might be wound up together in the form of spiral rolls.

The records of a court or office.

ROLLS, MASTER OF THE. See "Master of the Rolls."

ROLLS OF PARLIAMENT. A series of rolls commencing in the reign of Edward I., and forming, according to Mr. Hubback, by far the most important branch of the public records of the kingdom, from their antiquity, and the multiplicity of subjects which, in the earlier periods of English history, came before the parliament. Some of these rolls are kept in the Chapter House at Westminster, others in the Tower, and the rest in the Chapel of the Rolls. Hubback, Ev. Success. 600-613.

ROLLS OF THE TEMPLE. In English law. In each of the two temples is a roll called the "calf's head roll," wherein every bench, barrister, and student is taxed yearly; also meals to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calf's head, provided in Easter term. Orig. Jur. 199.

ROLLS OFFICE OF THE CHANCERY. An office in Chancery Lane, London, which contains rolls and records of the high court of chancery, of which the master of the rolls is keeper. It was formerly called domus conversorum, having been appointed by Henry III. for the use of converted Jews, but for irregularities they were expelled by Edward II., when it was put to its present use. Blount, Enc. Lond.

ROMAN LAW. In a general sense, this comprehends all the laws which prevailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the collections of Justinian (now generally denominated the "civil law"). 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 9, § 18.

In a more restricted sense, the Germans understand by this term merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them. Id. note. In England and the United States, however, there seems a propriety in limiting its application to all the laws of the times anterior to Justinian, distinguishing the collections of that emperor by the term "civil law." Butler, Hor. Jur. 30. It is clear that a large portion of the Roman law was excluded from the Corpus Juris Civilis.

ROMESCOT (from Rome, and Saxon, scet, tribute). In old English law. An annual tribute of one penny from every family, paid to Rome at the feast of St. Peter. Otherwise called "Romepenny," "Peterpence," and "Rome fee" (Rome feah). Spelman; Cowell.

ROMNEY MARSH. A tract of land in the county of Kent, England, containing twenty-four thousand acres, governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge in the reign of King Henry III.; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 3 Steph. Comm. 442, note (a); 3 Bl. Comm. 73, note (t); 4 Inst. 276.

ROOD OF LAND. The fourth part of an acre.

ROOT. In a figurative sense, the term "root" is used to signify the person from whom one or more others are descended.

ROOT OF DESCENT. The same as "stock of descent."

ROOT OF TITLE. The document with which an abstract of title properly commences is called the "root" of the title.

ROSTER. A list of persons who are in their turn to perform certain duties required of them by law. Tytler, Mil. Law, 93.

ROTA (Lat.) A court; a celebrated court of appeals at Rome, of which one judge must be a German, one a Frenchman, two Spaniards, and eight Italians. Enc. Brit. Its decisions had great weight, but were not law, although judged by the law. Sacciae Trac. de Com. et Comb. § 1, quaest. 7, pars. 2, ampl. 8, num. 219, 220, 253, 254. There was also a celebrated rota or court at Genoa about the sixteenth century or before, whose decisions in maritime matters form the first part of Straccha de Merc.

ROTHER BEASTS. In old English law. Horned cattle. Cowell.

ROTTEN BOROUGHS. Small boroughs in England, which, prior to the reform act, 1832, returned one or more members to parliament.

ROTULUS WINTONIAE. The roll of Winton. An exact survey of all England, made by Alfred, not unlike that of Domesday; and it was so called because it was kept at Winchester, among other records of the kingdom; but this roll time has destroyed. Ingulph. Hist. 516.

ROTURE (Fr.) In old French and Canadian law. A free tenure without the privilege of nobility; the tenure of a free commoner. See Dunkin's Address, 6.

ROTURIER. In old French law. One not noble. Dict. de l'Acad. Franc. A free commoner; one who did not hold his land by homage and fealty, yet owned certain services. Howard, Dict. de Normandie.

ROUBLE. The name of a coin. The rouble of Russia, as money of account, was formerly deemed and taken at the custom house to be of the value of seventy-five cents. Act March 3, 1843.

ROUND ROBIN. A circle divided from the center, like Arthur's round table, whence its supposed origin. In each compartment is a signature, so that the entire circle, when filled, exhibits a list, without priority being given to any name. A common form of round robin is simply to write the names in a circular form. Wharton.

ROUP. In Scotch law. Sale by auction; auction. Index to Burton, Law Scot.; Bell, Dict. "Auction."

ROUT. In criminal law. A disturbance of the peace by persons assembled together with an intention to do a thing which, if executed, would have made them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution of their purpose.

It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this, that it may be a complete offense without the execution of the intended enterprise. Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 14; 1 Russ. Crimes, 253; 4 Bl. Comm. 140; Viner, Abr. "Riots, etc." (A 2); Comyn, Dig. "Forcible Entry" (D 9).

ROUTOUSLY. In pleading. A technical word, properly used in indictments for a rout as descriptive of the offense. 2 Salk. 593.

ROY EST L'ORIGINAL DE TOUTS FRANCHISES. The king is the origin of all franchises. Kielw. 138.

ROY N'EST LIE PER ASCUN STATUTE, si il ne soit expressement nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 307; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 69.

ROY POET DISPENSER OVE MALUM prohibitum, mais non malum per se. The king can grant a dispensation for a malum prohibitum, but not for a malum per se. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 307.

ROYAL ASSENT. The royal assent is the last form through which a bill goes previously to becoming an act of parliament. It is, in the words of Lord Hale, "the complement and perfection of a law." The royal assent is given either by the sovereign in person or by royal commission by the sovereign himself, signed with his own hand.

It is rarely given in person, except when at the end of the session the sovereign attends to prorogue parliament, if he should do so.

ROYAL FISH. Whales and sturgeons,—to which some add porpoises,—which, when cast on shore or caught near shore, belong to the king of England by his prerogative. 1 Edw. I.; 17 Edw. V. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 5; 17 Edw. II. c. 11; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 3; Britton, c. 17; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 45, 46.

ROYAL HONORS. In diplomatic language, by this term is understood the rights enjoyed by every empire or kingdom in Europe, by the pope, the grand duchies of Germany, and the Germanic and Swiss confederations, to precedence over all others who do not enjoy the same rank, with the exclusive right of sending to other states public ministers of the first rank, as ambassadors, together with other distinctive titles and ceremonies. Vattel, bk. 2, c. 3, § 38; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 3, § 2.

ROYAL MINES. Mines of silver and gold belong to the king of England, as part of his prerogative of coinage, to furnish him with material. 1 Bl. Comm. 294*.

ROYAL PREROGATIVE. An arbitrary power vested in the executive which is discretionary and uncontrolled. 161 Mich. 691.

ROYALTY. A payment reserved by the grantor of a patent, lease of a mine or similar right, and payable proportionately to the use made of the right by the grantee. 1 Exch. Div. 310.

A payment reserved by the patentee of an article on giving a license, or by the author of a book in contracting for its publication or sale, proportionate to the sales under such license or contract.

—In Old English Law. Royal prerogatives.

RUBRIC (from Lat. ruber, red). In Scotch law. The title of a statute. So termed because anciently it was written in red letters. Bell, Dict.

RUBRIC OF A STATUTE. Its title, which was anciently printed in red letters. It serves to show the object of the legislature, and thence affords the means of interpreting the body of the act; hence the phrase, of an argument, "a rubro ad nigrum" (q. v.) Wharton.

RULE ABSOLUTE. One absolutely requiring an act to be done, as distinguished from a rule nisi (q. v.)

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE. See "Shelley's Case, Rule In."

RULE IN WILD'S CASE. See "Wild's Case, Rule In."

RULE NISI. In practice. A rule obtained on motion ex parte to show cause against the particular relief sought. Notice is served on the party against whom the rule is obtained, and the case is then heard like other motions, except that the party showing cause is entitled to open and reply. The rule is made absolute unless (nisi) good cause is shown against it. Graham, Prac. p. 688; 3 Steph. Comm. p. 680.

RULE OF COURSE. See "Of Course."

RULE OF PROPERTY. A rule of law affecting the ownership or transfer of property. The term is ordinarily used in connection with rules established by judicial decision, it being a general principle of law that decisions which have become rules of property, i. e., under which property rights have been acquired, will not be overruled, though erroneous. 30 Miss. 256; 4 N. Y. 261. See "Stare Decisis."

RULE OF THE WAR OF 1756. In international law. A rule relating to neutrals was the first time practically established in 1756, and universally promulgated, that "neutrals are not to carry on, in times of war, a trade which was interdicted to them in times of peace." Chit. Law Nat. 166; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 186; 4 C. Rob. Adm. Append.; Reeve, Shipp. 271; 1 Kent, Comm. 82.

RULE OF TRIENNIAL COHABITATION. An old rule of the canon law which prevailed in the ecclesiastical courts of England and which required the parties to live together for three years, and, if at the end of that time, the marriage remained unconsummated, impotence was to be presumed. But this is seldom applied since the law of evidence has been altered, permitting the parties to take the stand as witnesses in their own cause. It has been lately modified by the English courts and does not apply when the court is satisfied by other evidence. This rule only applies when the impotence is left to be presumed from continued non-consummation; for when the impotence is clearly proved alunde, the court has never resorted to it. 162 Ill. 372.

RULE TO PLEAD. A rule issuing as of course to plaintiff under the common-law practice requiring defendant to plead to the declaration within a time specified.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE. An order made by the court, in a particular case, upon motion of one of the parties calling upon the other to appear at a particular time before the court, to show cause, if any he have, why a certain thing should not be done.

This rule is granted generally upon the oath or affirmation of the applicant; but upon the hearing, the evidence of competent witnesses must be given to support the rule, and the affidavit of the applicant is insufficient.

RULES. Certain limits without the actual walls of the prison, where the prisoner, on proper security previously given to the proper authority, may reside. These limits are considered, for all legal and practical purposes, as merely a further extension of the prison walls.

A general principle of law, recognized as such by authorities, and stated usually in the form of a maxim. It is called a rule because in doubtful and unforeseen cases it is a rule for their decision; it embraces particular cases within general principles. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 17; 1 Bl. Comm. 44; Domat, liv. prel. tit. 1, § 1; Ram, Judgm. 30; 3 Barn. & Adol. 34; 2 Russ. 216, 580, 581; 4 Russ. 305; 10 Price, 218, 219, 228; 1 Barn. & C. 86; 7 Bing. 280; 1 Ld. Raym. 728; 5 Term R. 5; 4 Maule & S. 348.

An ordinance made by a court having competent jurisdiction.

Rules of court are either general or special. The former are the laws by which the practice of the court is governed; the latter are special orders made in particular cases. 22 Ill. 173.

See "Rule Nisi."

RULES OF COURT. See "Rules."

RULES OF THE KING'S BENCH prison. In English practice. Certain limits beyond the walls of the prison, within which all prisoners in custody in civil actions were allowed to live, upon giving security by bond with two sufficient sureties, to the marshal, not to escape, and paying him a certain percentage on the amount of the debts for which they were detained. Bagley, Pr.; Holthouse.

RULES OF THE ROAD. See "Law of the Road."

RUMPERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To break; to revoke. Rumpitur testamentum cum, in eodem statu manente testatore, ipsius testamenti jus vitatur, a testament is broken when, the testator remaining in the same state, the legal force of the testament itself is destroyed. Inst. 2. 17. 1. A testament was thus broken (ruptum) by the subsequent adoption of a child, or by the making of a subsequent testament. Id. 2. 17. 1. 2. 3. See Dig. 28. 3.

RUNCINUS (Lat.) A nag. 1 Thomas Co. Litt. 471.

RUNNING ACCOUNT. An open, unsettled account, as distinguished from a stated and liquidated account. "Running accounts mean mutual accounts and reciprocal demands between the parties, which accounts and demands remain open and unsettled." Blackford, J., 1 Ind. (Carter) 335.

RUNNING DAYS. Days counted in succession, without any allowance for holidays. The term is used in settling lay days or days of demurrage.

RUNNING LANDS. In Scotch law. Lands where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Bell, Dict.

RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A metaphorical expression, by which is meant that the time mentioned in the statute of limitations is considered as passing. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 861.

RUNNING WITH THE LAND. A technical expression applied to covenants real which affect the land.

A covenant is said to run with the land when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of the land. 4 Ill. App. 436. See "Covenants Running with the Land."

RUNNING WITH THE REVERSION. A covenant is said to "run with the reversion" when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that reversion.

RUN OF THE MINE. (Sometimes abbreviated R. O. M.) Coal just as it is mined, hauled out of the mine and dumped into the cars.

RUNRIG LANDS. Lands in Scotland where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Anciently this kind of possession was advantageous in giving a united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By the act of 1695, c. 26, a division of these lands was authorized, with the exception of lands belonging to corporations. Wharton.

RUPTA (Law Lat.) In old records. A band or troop. Cowell; Spelman.
Ruptarii, soldiers; troopers. Id.

RUPTUM (Lat. from rumpere, q. v.) In the civil law. Broken. A term applied to a will; ruptum testamentum. Inst. 2. 17. 3; Dig. 28. 3.

RURAL. That which relates to the country, as rural servitudes. See "Urban."

RURAL SERVITUDE (Lat. servitus prae-dii rustici). In the civil law. A servitude annexed to a rural estate (praedium rusticum). 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 338, § 309.

RUSE DE GUERRE (Fr.) Literally, a trick of war; a stratagem. It is said to be lawful among belligerents, provided it does not involve treachery and falsehood. Gro-tius, Dr. de la Guerre, liv. 3, c. 1, § 9.

RUSTICI (Lat. from rus, country).

—In Feudal Law. Natives of a conquered country. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 27, §§ 9-11; 2 Bl. Comm. 413.

—In Old English Law. Inferior country tenants, churls, or chorls (Saxon, ceorles), who held cottages and lands by the services of plowing, and other labors of agriculture, for the lord. Par. Ant. 136; Cowell.

RUSTICUM JUDICIUM (Law Lat.) In maritime law. A rough or rude judgment or decision. 3 Kent, Comm. 231; Story, Bailm. § 608a.

RUTA ET CAESA (Lat.) In the civil law. Things dug, as sand and lime, and things cut, as wood, coal, etc. Dig. 19. 1. 17. 6. Words used in conveyancing.

RUTARII, or RUTTARII (Law Lat.) In old records. Stipendiary forces; mercenary soldiers. Cowell. This word occurs in the articles of King John's Magna Charta, (chapter 4), but is omitted in the charter itself.

RYBAUD (Law Fr.) In old English law. A ruffian; a vagabond. Brownl. pt. 2. 340.

S

S. A common abbreviation of scilicet in the old books.

S. C. An abbreviation for "same case," indicating, when inserted between two citations of cases, that the case is reported in both places.

S. F. S. In the civil law, an abbreviation of sine fraude sua, without fraud on his part.

S. P. An abbreviation of sine prole, without issue.

An abbreviation of "same point," or "same principle," indicating, when inserted between two citations of cases, that the second one involves the same doctrine as the first.

SS. An abbreviation used in that part of a record, pleading, or affidavit, called the statement of the venue, or county in which it is made, as "City and County of New York, ss." Commonly translated or read, "to wit," and supposed to be a contraction of scilicet.

It has been otherwise explained to be a mark used to denote a separate section or paragraph. 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Am. Ed.) 305, note (t).

SA ET LA (Law Fr.) Here and there. Kelham.

SABBATH. Commonly used for "Sunday." Though such use is incorrect, it is sanctioned by usage. See 64 N. C. 591.

SABBATH BREAKING. Violation of penal laws regulating the observance of the Sabbath.

SABBATUM. The Sabbath; also peace. Domesday Book.

SABINIANS. A sect of lawyers whose first chief was Atteius Capito, and the second Caelius Sabinus, from whom they derived their name. Clef des Lois Rom.

SABLE. The heraldic term for black. It is called "Saturn" by those who blazon by planets, and "diamond" by those who use the names of jewels. Engravers commonly represent it by numerous perpendicular and horizontal lines, crossing each other. Whar-ton.

SABULONARIUM (Law Lat. from sabulo). In old records. A gravel pit, or the free use of it. Cowell.

SAC, or SAK (Law Lat. saca, sacha; from Saxon, sac, a cause, sake). In old English and Scotch law. The cognizance which a lord had in his court of causes and suits arising among his vassals or tenants. The privilege which a lord had, within his manor, of holding pleas of trespasses and other controversies arising there, and of imposing levying, and collecting of his tenants, fines, and amerements in regard of the same. Spelman; Bracton, fol. 154b. A privilege touching plea, or correction of trespasses of men within a manor. Minshew, cited in Cowell; Rastal, Expos.

A forfeiture. Id.

SACABURTH, or SACABERE (from sac, cause, and burth, pledge. He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Britton, c. 15, 29; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 32; Cowell.

SACCABOR, SACABURTH, or SACABERE. In old English law. He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit.

SACCULARII (Lat. from saccus, a bag or purse). In the civil law. Persons who cheated in wares or money, by means of sacks or bags which they carried with them (vetitas in sacco artes exercentes). Dig. 47. 11. 7 and glossary in margin. Blackstone, referring to this passage, translates the word "cutpurses." 4 Bl. Comm. 242. But this is hardly warranted by the text.

SACCUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A sack; a quantity of wool weighing thirty or twenty-eight stone. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 10. According to Cowell, twenty-six stone. Two ways made a sack, and twelve sacks a last. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 2.

A sack or pack; a pack saddle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 21.

In a MS. compotus or household book of Bolton Priory, in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, the ductor sacorum is mentioned among the liberi servientes (free servants) of the priory, and is translated "sackman."

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA. In old English law. A service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the sovereign for the use of the army. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 16.

SACQUIER. In maritime law. The name of an ancient officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandise otherwise. Laws of Oleron, art. 11, published in an English translation in an appendix to 1 Pet. Adm. xxv. See "Arrameur;" "Stevadore."

SACRA (Lat.) In the Roman law. The right to participate in the sacred rites of the city. Butler, Hor. Jur. 27.

SACRAMENTALES (Law Lat. sacramentum, oath). Compurgatores (q. v.); jurors. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

SACRAMENTI ACTIO. In the Roman law. General legis actio, to which resort might be had failing a right to use any of the four shorter forms of action.

SACRAMENTUM (Law Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A gage in money laid down in court by both parties that went to law, returned to him who had the verdict on his side, but forfeited by the party who was cast, to the exchequer, to be laid out in sacris rebus, and therefore so called. Varro, lib. 4, de Ling. Lat. c. 36.

An oath, as a very sacred thing. Ainsworth; Vicat.

The oath taken by soldiers to be true to their general and country. Id.

—In Old Common Law. An oath. Carpenter; Cowell; Jacob.

SACRAMENTUM DECISIONIS (Lat.) The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him. 3 Bl. Comm. 342.

SACRAMENTUM FIDELITATIS. In old English law. The oath of fealty. Reg. Orig. 303.

SACRAMENTUM HABET IN SE TRES comites, veritatem, justitiam et iudicium; veritas habenda est in iurato; justitia et iudicium in iudice. An oath has in it three component parts,—truth, justice, and judgment; truth in the party swearing; justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. 2 Inst. 160.

SACRAMENTUM SI FATUUM FUERIT, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. 2 Inst. 167.

SACRILEGE (from Lat. sacrilegium, from sacra, sacred things, or sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal).

—In English Criminal Law. Larceny from a church. 4 Steph. Comm. 164. The crime of breaking a church or chapel, and stealing therein. 1 Russ. Crimes, 843. See "Sacrilegium." This does not seem to be recognized as a distinct crime, in American jurisprudence.

—In Old English Law. Profanation of holy things; the alienation to laymen or to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons, and to pious uses. Cowell.

SACRILEGIUM (Lat. from sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal). In the civil law. The stealing of sacred things, or things dedicated to sacred uses; the taking of things out of a holy place. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

The violation of an imperial rescript or constitution. Sacrilegii instar est rescripto principis obviari, it amounts to sacrilege to oppose or hinder the execution of the prince's rescript. Code, l. 23. 5; 1 Bl. Comm. 74. The text of the Code here referred to, reads, Sacrilegii instar est—divinis obviare beneficiis.

SACRILEGUS (Lat.) In the civil and common law. A sacrilegious person; one guilty of sacrilege; he who takes away anything that is given for the divine and true service of God.

SACRILEGUS OMNIUM PRAEDORUM cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Coke, 106.

SACRISTAN. A sexton, anciently called sagerson, or sagiston; the keeper of things belonging to divine worship.

SADBERGE. A denomination of part of the county palatine of Durham. Camd. Brit.

SAEMEND. An umpire, or arbitrator. Anc. Inst. Eng.

SAEPE CONSTITUTUM EST, RES INTER alios iudicatas aliis non praeiudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

SAEPE VIATOREM NOVA NON VETUS orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. 4 Inst. 34.

SAEPENUMERO UBI PROPRIETAS verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently, where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Coke, 27.

SAEVITIA (Lat.) Cruelty of one spouse to the other. To constitute saevitia there must be such a degree of cruelty as to endanger the party's suffering bodily hurt. 1 Hagg. Consist. 35; 2 Mass. 150; 3 Mass. 321; 4 Mass. 587.

SAEVITIAM. (Lat.) Cruelty. 16 Ill. 90.

SAFE-CONDUCT. A passport or permission from a neutral state to persons who are thus authorized to go and return in safety, and, sometimes, to carry away certain things in safety.

According to common usage, the term "passport" is employed on ordinary occasions for the permission given to persons when there is no reason why they should not go where they please; and "safe-conduct" is the name given to the instrument which authorizes certain persons, as enemies, to go into places where they could not go without danger unless thus authorized by the government.

The name of an instrument given to the captain or master of a ship to proceed on a particular voyage. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, description, and destination of the ship, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires. This document is indispensably necessary for the safety of every neutral ship.

Act Cong. April 30, 1790, § 27, punishes the violation of any safe-conduct or passport granted under the authority of the United States, on conviction, with imprisonment, not exceeding three years, and a fine at the discretion of the court. See "Passport;" 18 Viner, Abr. 272.

SAFEGUARD. A protection of the king to one who is a stranger, who fears violence from some of his subjects for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

SAFE-PLEDGE. A surety given that a man shall appear upon a certain day. Bracton, lib. 4, c. 1.

SAGES DE LA LEY (Law Fr.) Sages of the law; persons learned in the law. A term applied to the chancellor and justices of the king's bench.

SAGIBARO (Law Lat. from sac, or sag, a cause, and baro, a man). In old European law. A judge or justice; literally, a man of causes (vir causarum), or having charge or supervision of causes (causis et litibus prepositus). Spelman. One who administered justice and decided causes in the mal-lum, or public assembly. Id.; L. Salic. tit. 56, §§ 2-4; LL. Inae, c. 6.

SAID. Before mentioned. A word of reference to what has been already spoken of or specified. 172 Ill. 465.

In contracts and pleadings it is usual and proper, when it is desired to speak of a person or thing before mentioned, to designate them by the term "said" or "afore-said," or by some similar term; otherwise the latter description will be ill for want of certainty. 2 Lev. 207; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 18); Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 63.

If there is a question as to which of the antecedent things or propositions specified is referred to, it is generally, 172 Ill. 465, but not necessarily, held to be the last. 10 Ind. 372.

SAIGA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A German coin of the value of a penny, or of three pence. L. Alaman. tit. 6, æ 2; L. Boior. tit. 8, c. 2, § 3; Spelman.

SAIL. In insurance law. To move, on the prosecution of a voyage; to make a movement for the purpose of proceeding to sea. Cowen, J., 3 Hill (N. Y.) 126; Lord Denman, C. J., 1 Crompt., M. & R. 809, 818. The least locomotion, with readiness of equipment and clearance satisfies a warranty to sail. 3 Barn. & Adol. 514.

SAILING INSTRUCTIONS. In maritime law. Written or printed directions, delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed for the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy, or by any other accident.

Without sailing instructions, no vessel can have the full protection and benefit of convoy. Marsh. Ins. 368.

SAILORS. Seamen; mariners. See "Seaman."

SAINT MARTIN LE GRAND, COURT of. A writ of error formerly lay from the sheriff's courts in the city of London to the court of hustings, before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs, and thence to justices appointed by the royal commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin le Grand, and from the judgment of those justices a writ of error lay immediately to the house of lords. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

SAINT SIMONISM. An elaborate form of noncommunitistic socialism. It is a scheme which does not contemplate an equal, but an unequal, division of the produce. It does not propose that all should be occupied alike, but differently, according to their vocation or capacity; the function of each being assigned, like grades in a regiment, by the choice of the directing authority, and the remuneration being by salary, proportioned to the importance, in the eyes of that authority, of the function itself, and the merits of the person who fulfills it. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. 258.

SAIO (Law Lat.) In Gothic law. The ministerial officer of a court or magistrate, who brought parties into court (qui reos protraxit in iudicium), and executed the orders of his superior. Spelman thinks the word may be derived from the Saxon sagol, or saiol, a staff, giving it the sense of the modern "tipstaff."

SAIREMENT (Law Fr.) An oath. Kelham.

SAISIE ARRET. In French law. An attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

SAISIE EXECUTION. In French law. A writ of execution by which the creditor places under the custody of the law the movables of his debtor, which are liable to seizure, in order that out of them he may obtain payment of the debt due by him. Code Prac. La. art. 641; Dalloz. It is a writ very similar to the fieri facias of the common law.

SAISIE FORAINE. In French law. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which he inhabits. Dalloz. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

SAISIE GAGERIE. In French law. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized, in order to obtain the rent due to him. It is similar to the "distress" of the common law. Dalloz.

SAISIE IMMOBILIERE. In French law. A writ by which the creditor puts in the custody of the law the immovables of his debtor; that out of the proceeds of their sale he may be paid his demand.

SAISINA (Law Lat.) An old form of seisina (q. v.)

SAKE. In old English law. A lord's right of amercing his tenants in his court. Kielw. 145.

Acquittance of suit at county courts and hundred courts. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 7.

SALADINE TENTH. A tax imposed in England and France, in 1888, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I., of England, and Philip Augustus, of France, against Saladin, sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. By this tax, every person who did not enter himself a crusader was obliged to pay a tenth of his yearly revenue, and of the value of all his movables, except his wearing apparel, books, and arms. The Carthusians, Bernardines, and some other religious persons, were exempt.

SALARIIUM (Lat. from sal, salt).

—In the Civil Law. An allowance of provisions. Calv. Lex.

A stipend, wages, or compensation for service. Id.; Dig. 7. 1. 7. 2; Id. 44. 7. 61. 1.

An annual allowance or compensation. Id.

—In Old European Law. The rents or profits of a sala, hall or house. Cowell.

SALARY (from "salarium," sal, salt, the medium of payment to the Roman soldiers). The periodical allowance or compensation to a person for his official or professional services or for his regular work. 193 Mich. 476; 105 Cal. 212; 10 Ind. 85.

A reward or recompense for services performed.

It is applied to the reward paid to a public officer for the performance of his official duties.

Salary is also applied to the reward paid for the performance of other services; but if it be not fixed for each year, it is called "honorarium." Poth. ad Pand. According to M. Duvergier, the distinction between "honorarium" and "salary" is this: By the former is understood the reward given to the most elevated professions for services performed; and by the latter, the price of hiring of domestic servants and workmen. 19 Toullier, Dr. Civ. n. 268, p. 292, note.

There is this difference between "salary" and "price,"—the former is the reward paid for services or for the hire of things; the latter is the consideration paid for a thing sold. Lec. Elm. §§ 907, 908.

"Salary" and "wages" have been held to be synonymous (24 Fla. 29), but in other cases, distinctions have been suggested,—one, that salary is per annum compensation (42 Alb. Law J. 332), and another, that the difference lies in the more or less honorable character of the services for which they are paid. 99 Pa. St. 542.

SALE. An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the "seller," gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the "buyer" or "purchaser," who, on his part, agrees to pay such price. Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 6; Noy, Max. c. 42; Shep. Touch. 244; 2 Kent, Comm. 363; Poth. Vente, note 1. A transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money. Benj. Sales, § 1.

This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this, that in the latter the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. 3 Salk. 157; 12 N. H. 390; 10 Vt. 457. It differs from "accord and satisfaction," because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price. An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter. See 11 Pick. (Mass.) 311.

(1) An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever.

(2) A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfillment of some condition. See 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 588; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 522; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; 8 Vt. 154; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 326; Coxe (N. J.) 292; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 430.

(3) A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal or a sheriff, in obedience to the mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guaranty a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized. This kind of a sale is sometimes called a "judicial sale."

(4) A private sale is one made voluntarily, and not by auction.

(5) A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales sometimes are voluntary, as, when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and the buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced, when the same rules do not apply.

(6) A voluntary sale is one made freely without constraint by the owner of the thing sold. This is the common case of sales, and to this class the general rules of the law of sale apply.

SALE AND RETURN. When goods are sent from a manufacturer or wholesale dealer to a retail trader, in the hope that he may purchase them, with the understanding that what he may choose to take he shall have as on a contract of sale, and what he does not take he will retain as a consignee for the owner, the goods are said to have been sent on "sale and return."

The goods taken by the receiver as on sale will be considered as sold, and the title to them is vested in the receiver of them. The goods he does not buy are considered as a deposit in the hands of the receiver of them, and the title is in the person who sent them. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 268.

SALE NOTE. A memorandum given by a broker to a seller or buyer of goods, stating the fact that certain goods have been sold by him on account of a person called the "seller" to another person called the "buyer." Sale notes are also called "bought and sold notes." See "Bought Note."

SALFORD HUNDRED COURT OF RECORD. An inferior and local court of record having jurisdiction in personal actions, where the debt or damage sought to be recovered does not exceed £50, if the cause of action arise within the Hundred of Salford. St. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 130; 2 Exch. 346. See "Hundred."

SALIQUE (or SALIC) LAW. The name of a code of laws, so called from the Salians, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul under their king Pharamond.

The most remarkable law of this code, which is sometimes itself called the Salic law, is that which regards succession. De terra vero salica nulla portio haereditatis transit in mulierem, sed hoc virilis sextus acquirit; hoc est, filii in ipsa haereditate succedunt, no part of the salique land passes to females, but the males alone are capable of taking; that is, the sons succeed to the inheritance. This has ever excluded females from the throne of France.

SALOON. The term does not necessarily imply a place for the sale of intoxicants. 36 Tex. 364. But see 105 Mass. 40.

SALT SILVER. One penny paid at the feast day of St. Martin, by the tenants of some manors, as a commutation for the service of carrying their lord's salt from market to his larder. Par. Ant. 496.

SALUS (Lat.) Health; prosperity; safety.

SALUS POPULI EST SUPREMA LEX. The safety of the people is the supreme object of the law. Bac. Max. reg. 12; Broom, Leg. Max. 1; 13 Coke, 139, 196 Ill. 503.

SALUS UBI MULTI CONSILIARII. In many counsellors there is safety. 4 Inst. 1.

SALUTE (Lat. salus). A gold coin stamped by Henry V. in France, after his conquests there, whereon the arms of England and France were stamped quarterly. Stow. Chron. 589; Cowell.

SALUTEM (Lat.) Health; greeting; prosperity; salvation. An expression of salutation used by the Romans in the commencement of their letters or epistles, generally abbreviated. S. "C. Plinius Cornelio Tacito suo, S." Plin. Ep. i. 6 et passim. In legal instruments, it was written at length, Titius Seio salutem. Dig. 17. 1. 60. Ille illi salutem. Id. 59.

A formal word in the commencement of Roman deeds and charters, which, during the later periods of the empire, were written in an epistolary form. See "Epistola." After Christianity had become established, salutem seems to have been used in its religious sense of "salvation."

A formal word in the commencement of old English deeds, probably derived from the Roman practice above noticed. Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos praesentes literas indentatae pervenerint, A. de B. salutem in Domino sempiternam; Sciatis me dedisse, etc., to all Christian people to whom these presents [present letters] indented shall come, A. of B. sends greeting [or salvation], in our Lord everlasting. Litt. § 372.

A formal word invariably used in the address of old English writs, which commenced in the epistolary form. Rex vice comiti, etc., salutem, the king to the sheriff, etc., greeting. Reg. Orig. & Jud. per tot. Translated "greeting," and retained in modern English and American writs. See "Breve." Called by Finch the "salutation" of the writ. Finch, Law, bk. 4, c. 1.

SALVA GARDIA (Law Lat.) Safeguard. Reg. Orig. 26. See "Safeguard."

SALVAGE. In maritime law. A compensation given by the maritime law for service rendered in saving property or rescuing it from impending peril on the sea or wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake, where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 210, 416; 12 How. (U. S.) 466; 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 420; 5 McLean (U. S.) 359.

Occasionally used to designate the property saved. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1488; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 595.

There are three things essential to the right to salvage:

(1) The peril. In order to found a title to salvage, the peril from which the property was saved must be real, not speculative merely (1 Cranch [U. S.] 1); but it need not be such that escape from it by any other means than by the aid of the salvors was impossible. It is sufficient that the peril was something extraordinary,—something differing in kind and degree from the ordinary perils of navigation. 1 Curt. [U. S.] 353; 2 Curt. [U. S.] 350. All services rendered at sea to a vessel in distress are salvage services. 1 W. Rob. Adm. 174; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 71. But the peril must be present and pending, not future, contingent, and conjectural. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 216; 3 Hagg. Adm. 344. It may arise from the sea, rocks, fire, pirates, or enemies (1 Cranch [U. S.] 1), or from the sickness or death of the crew of master (1 Curt. [U. S.] 376; 2 Wall. Jr. [U. S.] 59; 1 Swab. 84).

(3) The place. In England it has been held that the services must be rendered on the high seas, or, at least, extra corpus comitatus, in order to give the admiralty court jurisdiction to decree salvage; but in this country it is held that the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction to decree salvage for services rendered on tide waters and on the lakes or rivers where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on, although infra corpus comitatus. 12 How. (U. S.) 466; 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 420; 5 McLean (U. S.) 359.

SALVAGE CHARGES. In insurance. All those costs, expenses, and charges necessarily incurred in and about the saving and preservation of the property imperilled, and which, if the property be insured, are eventually borne by the underwriters. Stev. Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE LOSS. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. It also means, among underwriters and average adjusters, a mode of settling a loss, under a policy, in cases where the goods have been necessarily sold at a port short of the port of destination, in consequence of the perils insured against.

In such cases, though the property be not abandoned to the underwriter, the principle of abandonment is assumed in the adjustment of the loss. The underwriter pays a total loss. The net proceeds of the sale of the goods, after deducting all expenses, are retained by the assured, and he credits the underwriter with the amount. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1480; Stev. Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE SERVICE. In maritime law. Any service rendered in saving property on the sea, or wrecked on the coast of the sea. Story, J., 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 210.

SALVIAN INTERDICT. See "Interdictum Salvianum."

SALVO (Lat.) Saving; excepting; without prejudice to. Salvo me et haeredibus meis, except me and my heirs. Salvo jure cujuslibet, without prejudice to the rights of any one.

SALVOR. In maritime law. A person who saves property or rescues it from impending peril on the sea or when wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake where interstate commerce is carried on, and who is under no pre-existing contract or obligation of duty by his relation to the property to render such services. 1 Hagg. Adm. 236; 1 Curt. (U. S.) 378.

SALVUS PLEGIUS (Law Lat.) A safe pledge; called, also, "certus plegius," a sure pledge. Bracton, fol. 160b.

SAME. The ordinary meaning of the word "same" is "identical;" "identical in substance or numerically;" "of one nature, degree or amount." 248 Ill. 166.

"The same" generally refers to the next preceding antecedent. Co. Litt. 20b, 385b; 26 Bea. 160; but the word "same" may grammatically refer to more than one antecedent. 45 L. J. Ch. 216; 1 Ch. D. 605.

SAMPLE. A small quantity of any commodity or merchandise, exhibited as a specimen of a larger quantity, called the "bulk." A fair representation of the whole; a part shown as a specimen. 33 Gratt. (Va.) 904.

When a sale is made by sample, and it afterwards turns out that the bulk does not correspond with it, the purchaser is not, in general, bound to take the property on a compensation being made to him for the difference. 1 Campb. 113. See 2 East, 314; 4 Campb. 22; 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 20; 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 413, 566; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 395; 6 N. Y. 73, 95; 13 Mass. 139; 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 538; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 37; 14 Mees & W. 651.

SANAE MENTIS (Lat.) In old English law. Of sound mind. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

SANCTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. That part of a law by which a penalty was ordained against those who should violate it. Inst. 2. 1. 10.

SANCTION. That part of a law which inflicts a penalty for its violation, or bestows a reward for its observance. Sanctions are of two kinds,—those which redress civil injuries, called “civil sanctions,” and those which punish crimes, called “penal sanctions.” 1 Hoffm. Leg. Outl. 279; Rutherford, Inst. bk. 2, c. 6, § 6; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. 86; 1 Bl. Comm. 56.

SANCTUARY. A place of refuge, where the process of the law cannot be executed.

Sanctuaries may be divided into religious and civil. The former were very common in Europe,—religious houses affording protection from arrest to all persons, whether accused of crime or pursued for debt. 4 Bl. Comm. 332. This kind was never known in the United States.

Civil sanctuary, or that protection which is afforded to a man by his own house, was always respected in this country. The house protects the owner from the service of all civil process in the first instance, but not if he is once lawfully arrested and takes refuge in his own house. See “House;” “Arrest.”

No place affords protection from arrest in criminal cases. A man may therefore, be arrested in his own house in such cases, and the doors may be broken for the purpose of making the arrest. See “Arrest.”

SANCTUS, or SANCTUM (Lat. from sancire). In the civil law. That which is guarded and fenced round against injury (quod ab injuria hominum defensum atque munitum est). Dig. 1. 8, pr. Derived by Marcian, in the Digests, from sagmina, which were certain herbs carried by the legates of the Roman people to secure them from harm. Id. § 1.

SAND GAVEL. A payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use. Cowell.

SANE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from Lat. sanus). Sound. De non sane memorie of unsound memory, non compos mentis. Litt. § 405.

SANG, or SANC. Blood. These words are nearly obsolete.

SANGUINE, or MURREY. An heraldic term for “blood color,” called, in the arms of princes, “dragon’s tail,” and, in those of lords, “sardonyx.” It is a tincture of very infrequent occurrence, and not recognized by some writers. In engraving, it is denoted by numerous lines in saltire. Whar-ton.

SANGUINEM EMERE (Lat.) In feudal law. A redemption by villeins, of their blood or tenure, in order to become free-men.

SANGUINIS CONJUNCTIO BENEVOLENTIA devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection. 5 Johna. Ch. (N. Y.) 1, 18.

SANIS. A kind of punishment among the Greeks, inflicted by binding the malefactor fast to a piece of wood. Enc. Lond.

SANITARY. Pertaining to, or designed to secure, sanity or health; relating to the preservation of health. 133 Ill. 579.

SANITARY AUTHORITIES. In the English law bodies having jurisdiction over their respective districts in regard to sewerage, drainage, scavenging, the supply of water, the prevention of nuisances and offensive trades, etc., all of which come under the head of “sanitary matters” in the special sense of the words. Sanitary authorities also have jurisdiction in matters coming under the head of “local government” (q. v.) Public Health Act 1875, passim.

SANITY. The state of a person who has a sound understanding; the reverse of insanity (q. v.)

SANS CEO QUE. The same as absque hoc (q. v.)

SANS IMPEACHMENT DE WAST (Law Fr.) Without impeachment of waste. Litt. § 152. See “Absque Impetitione Vasti.”

SANS JOUR (L. Fr.) Without day.

SANS NOMBRE (Fr. without number). In English law. A term used in relation to the right of putting animals on a common. The term common sans nombre does not mean that the beasts are to be innumerable, but only indefinite, not certain (Willes, 227); but they are limited to the commoner’s own commonable cattle, levant et couchant, upon his lands, or as many cattle as the land of the commoner can keep and maintain in winter. 2 Brownl. 101; Ventr. 54; 5 Term R. 48; 1 Wm. Saund. 28, note 4.

SANS RECOURS (Fr. without recourse). Words which are sometimes added to an indorsement by the indorsee to avoid incurring any liability. Chit. Bills, 179; 7 Taunt. 160; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 193; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 159; 12 Mass. 172; 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 325. See “Without Recourse.”

CANUS (Lat.) Sound. 151 Ill. 165.

SAPIENS INCIPIT A FINE; ET QUOD primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last; and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Coke, 25.

SAPIENS OMNIA AGIT CUM CONSILIO. A wise man does everything advisedly. 4 Inst. 4.

SAPIENTIA LEGIS NUMMARIO PRETIUM NON EST AESTIMANDA. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 168.

SAPIENTIS JUDICIS EST COGITARE TANTUM SIBI ESSE PERMISSUM, QUANTUM COMMISSUM ET CREDITUM. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163.

SARCULATURA (Law Lat.) In old records. Weeding corn; a tenant's service of weeding for the lord. Cowell.

SART. In old English law. A piece of woodland, turned into arable. Cowell. See "Assart."

SARUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The city of Salisbury in England. Spelman.

SASINE. In Scotch law. The symbolical delivery of land, answering to the livery of seisin of the old English law. 4 Kent, Comm. 459.

SASSONS. The corruption of Saxons. A name of contempt formerly given to the English, while they affected to be called "Angles." They are still so called by the Welsh. Apparently this corresponds to the Scotch and Irish rendering of "Saxon" by the word "Sassenach."

SATISDARE. In the civil law, to guarantee the obligation of a principal.

SATISDATIO (Lat. satis, and dare). In civil law. Security given by a party to an action to pay what might be adjudged against him. It is a satisfactory security, in opposition to a naked security or promise. Vicat; 3 Bl. Comm. 291.

SATISFACTION (Lat. satis, enough, facio, to do, to make). In practice. An entry made on the record, by which a party in whose favor a judgment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

SATISFACTION PIECE. In English practice. An instrument of writing in which it is declared that satisfaction is acknowledged between the plaintiff and defendant. It is signed by the attorney, and on its production and the warrant of attorney to the clerk of the judgments, satisfaction is entered on payment of certain fees.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE. That which is sufficient to induce a belief that the thing is true; in other words, it is credible evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3049.

SATISFIED OUTSTANDING TERM. Where a long term had been created in trustees to raise money for a purpose, and the money had been paid, but the trustees had not released to the freeholder, and the lease had not provided for its own extinguishment on the purpose becoming satisfied, the estate so remaining in the trustees was called a "satisfied outstanding term." It came to be a mode of protecting the rightful owner of the freehold, but the estate was abolished by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, § 2, and it never existed in the United States. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *311.

SATIUS EST PETERE FONTES QUAM SECTARI RIVULOS. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Coke, 118. It is better to drink at the fountain than to sip in the streams.

SATURDAY'S STOP. A space of time from evensong on Saturday till sun rising on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England. Cowell.

SAUNKEFIN (Law Fr.) End of blood; failure of the direct line in successions. Spelman; Cowell.

SAUVAGINE (Law Fr.) Wild animals. De pessons et de autre sauvagine. Britt. c. 33, fol. 65.

The wild disposition of an animal (fera natura). Mes si ele eschape et repregne la sauvagine en son natural estate, but if it escape, and resume its wildness, in its natural estate. Id.

SAUVEMENT (Law Fr.) Safely. Sauvement gardes, safely kept. Britt. c. 87.

SAVANT. (L. Fr.) Saving; knowing. Kelham.

SAVER-DE-FAULT. To excuse. Termes de la Ley.

SAVING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A creditor is said to "save the statute of limitations" when he saves or preserves his debt from being barred by the operation of the statute. Holthouse. Thus, in the case of a simple contract debt, if a creditor commence an action for its recovery within six years from the time when the cause of action accrued, he will be in time to save the statute.

SAVINGS BANKS. In American law. Institutions for the safe custody and increase of the savings of the industrious poor, and persons of small means. They are banks to receive deposits of money, however small, which is to accumulate at interest, and to be paid out to the depositors as required.

Any institution in the nature of a bank formed for the purpose of receiving deposits of money for the benefit of the persons depositing; to accumulate the produce of so much thereof as shall not be required by the depositors, their executors or administrators, at compound interest, and to return the whole, or any part of such deposit, and the produce thereof, to the depositors, or their personal representatives, deducting out of such produce so much as shall be required for the necessary expenses attending the management of such institution, but deriving no power whatsoever from any such deposit or the produce thereof. 2 Bradwell (Ill.) 274.

SAVOUR. To partake of the nature of; to bear affinity to.

SAVOY. One of the old privileged places, or sanctuaries. 4 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 227, note.

SAXON LAGE. The law of the West Saxons.

SC., or SCIL. An abbreviation for "scilicet," that is to say.

SCABINI. In old European law. The judges or assessors of the judges in the court held by the count. Assistants or associates of the count; officers under the count. The permanent selected judges of the Franks. Judges among the Germans, Franks, and Lombards, who were held in peculiar esteem. Spelman.

SCACCARIUM. A chequered cloth, resembling a chess board, which covered the table in the exchequer, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the court of exchequer, or curia scaccarii, derived its name. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

SCALAM. The old way of paying money into the exchequer. Cowell.

SCALE. In early American law. To adjust, graduate or value according to a scale. "The court scaled the debt." Marshall, arg. Wash. (Va.) 5, 6. A term used after the establishment of American independence, to signify a process of adjusting the difference in value between paper money and specie, rendered necessary by the great depreciation of the former. The act of assembly of Virginia of February 10, 1781, establishing a scale of depreciation, and declaring that outstanding current money contracts should be regulated by such scale, as at the date of such contracts, is called "An act for scaling paper money contracts." 2 Wash. (Va.) [41] 52; Id. [98, 99] 127; Id. [103, 104] 132, 134.

SCALPER, or SCALPING. See "Gambling Contract."

SCAMNUM (or SCANNUM) CADUCUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The cucking stool, or ducking stool. Cowell.

SCANDAL. A scandalous verbal report or rumor respecting some person.

SCANDALOUS MATTER. In equity pleading. Unnecessary matter criminatory of the defendant or any other person, alleged in the bill answer, or other pleading, or in the interrogatories to or answers by witnesses. Adams, Eq. 306. Matter which is relevant can never be scandalous (Story, Eq. Pl. § 270, 15 Ves. 477); and the degree of relevancy is of no account in determining the question (Cooper, Eq. Pl. 19; 2 Ves. Jr. 24; 6 Ves. 514; 11 Ves. 256; 15 Ves. 477). Where scandal is alleged, whether in the bill (2 Ves. Jr. 631), answer (Mitf. Eq. Pl. [Jeremy Ed.] 313), or interrogatories to or answers of witnesses (2 Younge & C. 445), it will be referred to a master at any time (2 Ves. Jr. 631), and, by leave of court, even upon the application of a stranger to the suit (6 Ves. 514; 5 Beav. Rolls, 82), and matter found to be scandalous by him will be expunged (Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 266, 862; 4 Hen. & M. [Va.] 414), at the cost of counsel introducing it, in some cases (Story, Eq. Pl. § 266). The presence of scandalous matter in the bill is no excuse for its being in the answer. 19 Me. 214.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM (Law Lat. slander of great men). In old English law. Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm. 1 Vent. 60. This was distinct from mere slander in the earlier law, and was considered a more heinous offense. Buller, N. P. 4. See 3 Bl. Comm. 124; 64 Ill. 296. The doctrine never prevailed in the United States (151 Mass. 50), and is said to be obsolete in England (Odgers, Lib. & Sland. 136).

SCAPELLARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To chop; to chip or haggle. Spelman.

SCAPHA (Lat.) In the Roman law. A boat; a lighter. Dig. 14. 2. 4, pr. A ship's boat. Id. 6. 1. 3. 1; Id. 21. 2. 44; Loc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 2, § 6.

SCARA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A troop (turma); a division of an army. A phalanx (cuneus). Spelman.

SCAUGE, SCHEVAGE, SCHEWAGE, or shewage. A kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7. Cowell.

SCAVIDUS. The officer who collected the scavage money. Cowell.

SCAVER, Scavoir. L. Fr. to know; knows. Kelham.

SCEATTA, or SCAETTA (Saxon). A Saxon coin of less denomination than a shilling. Spelman.

SCHAN PENNY, SCHARN PENNY, or schorn penny. A small duty or compensation. Cowell.

SCHEDULE. In practice. When an indictment is returned from an inferior court in obedience to a writ of certiorari, the statement of the previous proceedings sent with it is termed the "schedule." 1 Saund. 309a, note 2.

Schedules are also frequently annexed to answers in a court of equity, and to depositions and other documents, in order to show more in detail the matter they contain than could otherwise be conveniently shown.

The term is frequently used instead of "Inventory."

SCHEME. In English law, a scheme is a document containing provisions for regulating the management or distribution of property, or for making an arrangement between persons having conflicting rights. Thus, in the practice of the chancery division, where the execution of a charitable trust in the manner directed by the founder is difficult or impracticable, or requires supervision, a scheme for the management of the charity will be settled by the court. Tud. Char. Trusts, 257; Hunt, Eq. 248; Daniel, Ch. Prac. 1765.

SCHETES. Usury. Cowell.

SCHIREMAN. A sheriff; the ancient name for an earl.

SCHIRRENS GELD. A tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court. Cowell.

SCHISM BILL. The name of an act passed in the reign of Queen Anne, which restrained Protestant dissenters from educating their own children, and forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any conventicle or dissenting place of worship. The queen died on the day when this act was to have taken effect (August 1, 1714), and it was repealed in the fifth year of Geo. I. Wharton.

SCIENCE. Science signifies knowledge, the knowledge of many. It springs from the recognition of the existence of general truths or laws, to which the relation of things and their operation upon each other conform. These laws or truths ascertained by the investigation of men devoted to particular departments of inquiry, methodically digested and arranged so as to be attainable, constitute science. 3 Bosworth (N. Y.) 13. It is not synonymous with "art". Eg., Rifle shooting, though it may be an art, is not a science. Fletcher Encyclopedia Corporations 241.

SCIENDUM (Lat.) In English law. The name given to a clause inserted in the record, by which it is made "known that the justice here in court, in this same term, delivered a writ thereupon to the deputy sheriff of the county aforesaid, to be executed in due form of law." Lee, Dict. "Record."

SCIENDUM EST (Lat. it is to be known, or understood). A phrase frequently used in the civil law, in the commencement of paragraphs or other divisions of a subject, as preliminary to some explanation, or as calling attention to some particular rule. Sciendum itaque est, omnia fidei commissa primis temporibus infirma fuisse, it is to be known, then, that all trusts were, in their origin, weak. Inst. 2. 23. 1.

SCIENTER (Lat. knowingly). The allegation of knowledge on the part of a defendant or person accused, which is necessary to charge upon him the consequences of the crime or tort.

A man may do many acts which are justifiable or not, as he is ignorant or not ignorant of certain facts. He may pass a counterfeit coin, when he is ignorant of its being counterfeit, and is guilty of no offense; but if he knew the coin to be counterfeit, which is called the scienter, he is guilty of passing counterfeit money.

SCIENTIA SCIORUM EST MIXTA IGNORANTIA. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Coke, 159.

SCIENTIA UTRISQUE PAR PARES CONTRAHENTES FACIT. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burrows, 1910.

SCIENTII ET VOLUNTI NON FIT INJURIA. A wrong is not done to one who knows and wills it.

SCI. FA. An abbreviation of scire facias. (q. v.)

SCILICET (Lat. scire, to know, licet, it is permitted; you may know; translated by "to wit," in its old sense of "to know"). That is to say; to wit; namely. It is often abbreviated "sc." or "scil."

It is a clause to usher in the sentence of another, to particularize that which was too general before, distribute what was too gross, or to explain what was doubtful and obscure. It neither increases nor diminishes the premises or habendum, for it gives nothing of itself. It may make a restriction when the preceding words may be restrained. Hob. 171; 1 P. Wms. 18; Co. Litt. 180b, note 1.

When the scilicet is repugnant to the precedent matter, it is void; for example, when a declaration in trover states that the plaintiff on the third day of May was possessed of certain goods which, on the fourth day of May, came to the defendant's hands, who afterwards, to wit, on the first day of May, converted them, the scilicet was rejected as surplusage. Cro. Jac. 428. And see 6 Bin. (Pa.) 15; 3 Saund. 291, note 1.

Stating material and traversable matter under a scilicet will not avoid the consequences of a variance (1 McClel. & Y. 277; 4 Taunt. 321; 6 Term R. 462; 2 Bos. & P. 170, note 2; 1 Cow. [N. Y.] 676; 4 Johns. [N. Y.] 450; 2 Pick. [Mass.] 223); nor will the mere omission of a scilicet render immaterial matter material (2 Saund. 206a; 3 Term R. 68; 1 Chit. Pl. 276, even in a criminal proceeding (2 Campb. 307, note). See 3 Term R. 68; 3 Maule & S. 173.

SCINTILLA (Lat.) A spark; a remaining particle; the least particle. "A scintilla of equity." Henley, Lord Keeper, 1 W. Bl. 180. "There is not a scintilla of intention, upon the face of the will, to show the contrary." Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 322. "Not a scintilla of benefit." Id.; 1 Maule & S. 509. See 6 Maule & S. 180.

SCINTILLA JURIS (Lat. a spark of law or right). A legal fiction resorted to for the purpose of enabling feoffees to uses to support contingent uses when they come into existence, thereby to enable the statute of uses (27 Hen. VIII.) to execute them. For example, a shifting use; a grant to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs, until C. perform an act, and then to the use of C. and his heirs. Here the statute executes the use in B., which, being coextensive with A.'s seisin, leaves no actual seisin in A. When, however, C. performs the act, B.'s use ceases, and C.'s springs up, and he enjoys the fee simple; upon which the question arises, out of what seisin C.'s use is served. It is said to be served out of A.'s original seisin; for upon the cessor of B.'s use it is contended that the original seisin reverted to A., for the purpose of serving C.'s use, and is a possibility of seisin, or scintilla juris. See 4 Kent, Comm. 238 et seq., and the authorities there cited, for the learning upon this subject; Burton, Real Prop. 48, 49; Wilson, Springing Uses, 59, 60; Washb. Real Prop.

SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE. Any material evidence which, taken as true, would tend to establish the issue in the mind of a juror. It has been stated that to warrant the submission of a case to the jury "a mere scintilla of evidence is sufficient." The propriety of this test has been emphatically denied. Wignl. Ev. § 2494.

SCIRE DEBES CUM QUO CONTRAHIS. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 Mees. & W. 405, 632; 13 Mees. & W. 171.

SCIRE FACIAS (Lat. that you make known). The name of a writ (and of the whole proceeding) founded on some public record.

Its principal use was to revive a judgment on which execution had not issued for a year and a day (see "Revival"), or to enforce some obligation of record, as a recognition on appeal (24 Pa. St. 69).

Scire facias is also used by government as a mode to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture of a corporate charter, where there is a legal existing body capable of acting, but who have abused their power. It cannot, like quo warranto (which is applicable to all cases of forfeiture), be applied where there is a body corporate de facto only, who take upon themselves to act, but cannot legally exercise their powers. In scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter, the government must be a party to the suit; for the judgment is that the parties be ousted, and the franchises be seized into the hands of the government. 2 Kent, Comm. 313; 10 Barn. & C. 240; Yelv. 190; 5 Mass. 230; 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 140; 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1; 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 365; 4 Gill (Md.) 404.

Scire facias is also used to suggest further breaches on a bond with a condition, where a judgment has been obtained for some, but not all, of the breaches, and to recover further installments where a judgment has been obtained for the penalty before all the installments are due. 1 Wm. Saund. 58, note 1; 4 Md. 375.

As to the effects of the judgment, and the principle of forfeiture, see "Quo Warranto."

The pleadings in scire facias are peculiar. The writ recites the judgment or other record, and also the suggestions which the plaintiff must make to the court to entitle him to the proceeding by scire facias. The writ, therefore, presents the plaintiff's whole case, and constitutes the declaration, to which the defendant must plead. 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 297. And when the proceeding is used to forfeit a corporate charter, all the causes of forfeiture must be assigned in distinct breaches in the writ. And the defendant must either disclaim the charter, or deny its existence, or deny the facts alleged as breaches, or demur to them. The suggestions in the writ disclosing the foundation of the plaintiff's case must also be traversed if they are to be avoided. The scire facias is founded partly upon them and partly upon the record. 2 Inst. 470, 679. They are substantive facts, and can be traversed by distinct pleas embracing them alone, just as any other fundamental allegation can be traversed alone. All the pleadings after the writ or declaration are in the ordinary forms. There are no pleadings in scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter to be found in the books, as the proceeding has been seldom used. There is a case in 1 P. Wms. 207, but no pleadings. There is a case also in 9 Gill (Md.) 379, with a synopsis of the pleadings. Perhaps the only other case is in Vermont, and it is without pleadings. A defendant cannot plead more than one plea to a scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter. St. 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, and St. 9 Anne, c. 20, allowing double pleas, do not extend to the crown. 1 Chit. Pl. 479; 1 P. Wms. 220.

There are various special forms of the writ designated in accordance with the purpose for or the record on which it is brought. The principal are:

Scire facias sur mortgage, being a writ of scire facias issued upon the default of a mortgagor, requiring him to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed.

Scire facias ad disprobandum debitum, being a writ in use in Pennsylvania, which lies by a defendant in foreign attachment against the plaintiff, in order to enable him, within a year and a day next ensuing the time of payment to the plaintiff in the attachment, to disprove or avoid the debt recovered against him. Act relating to the commencement of actions (section 61), passed June 13, 1836.

Scire facias ad audiendum errores, being a writ which is sued out after the plaintiff in error has assigned his errors. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 20; Bac. Abr. "Error" (F).

Scire facias ad rehabendam terram, being a writ which lay for an execution debtor to recover back his land taken on execution after he has satisfied the debt. Fost. Scire Facias, 58.

SCIRE FECI (Lat. I have made known). In practice. The return of the sheriff, or other proper officer, to the writ of scire facias, when it has been served.

SCIRE FIERI INQUIRY. In English law. The name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

The history of the origin of the writ is as follows: When, on an execution de bonis testatoris against an executor, the sheriff returned nulla bona and also a devastavit, a feri facias, de bonis propriis, might formerly have been issued against the executor, without a previous inquisition finding a devastavit and a scire facias. But the most usual practice upon the sheriff's return of nulla bona to a feri facias de bonis testatoris was to sue out a special writ of feri facias de bonis testatoris, with a clause in it, et si tibi constare, poterit, that the executor had wasted the goods, then to levy de bonis propriis. This was the practice in the king's bench till the time of Charles I.

In the common pleas, a practice had prevailed in early times upon a suggestion in the special writ of feri facias of a devastavit by the executor, to direct the sheriff to inquire by a jury whether the executor had wasted the goods, and if the jury found he had, then a scire facias was issued out against him, and, unless he made a good defense thereto, an execution de bonis propriis was awarded against him.

The practice of the two courts being different, several cases were brought into the king's bench on error, and at last it became the practice of both courts, for the sake of expedition, to incorporate the feri facias inquiry and scire facias into one writ, thence called a "scire fieri inquiry,"—a name compounded of the first words of the two writs of scire facias and feri facias, and that of inquiry, of which it consists.

This writ recites the feri facias de bonis testatoris sued out on the judgment against the executor, the return of nulla bona by the sheriff, and then, suggesting that the executor had sold and converted the goods of the testator to the value of the debt and damages recovered, commands the sheriff to levy the said debt and damages of the goods of the testator in the hands of the executor, if they could be levied thereof; but if it should appear to him by the inquisition of a jury that the executor had wasted the goods of the testator, then the sheriff is to warn the executor to appear, etc. If the judgment had been either by or against the testator or intestate, or both, the writ of feri facias recites that fact, and also that the court had adjudged, upon a scire facias to revive the judgment, that the executor or administrator should have execution for the debt, etc. Clift, Entr. 659; Lilly, Entr. 664.

Although this practice is sometimes adopted, yet the most usual proceeding is by action of debt on the judgment, suggesting a devastavit, because in the proceeding by scire fieri inquiry the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the executor appears and pleads to the scire facias. 1 Saund. 219, note 8. See 2 Archb. Prac. 934.

SCIRE LEGES, NON HOC EST VERBA earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 8. 17.

SCIRE PROPRIE EST, REM RATIONE et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Co. Litt. 183.

SCITE. The setting or standing of any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground on which it stood. Jacob.

SCOLD. A woman who, by her habit of scolding, becomes a nuisance to the neighborhood, is called a "common scold." See "Common Scold."

SCOLDING. Scolding is mere clamor, railing, personal reproof. 137 Wis. 506, 517.

SCOT (Law Lat. scottum, scottus, scotta; from Saxon sceat, a part or portion). In old English law. A tax, or tribute; one's share of a contribution. Or rather, a contribution of several.

Camden, following Matthew of Westminster, defines this word to mean, "that which is gathered together into one heap, from several things" (illud quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur). Cowell. Spelman observes that it properly signifies what the authors of the middle ages called conjectus (a throwing together), because it was thrown together by several into one (from Saxon sceote, to throw or cast, whence sceotan, to shoot). It is found associated with the word "lot," in the laws of William the Conqueror, and other early records; scot and lot (or, in the Saxon form, an hlot & an scote), signifying a customary contribution laid upon all subjects, according to their ability. Cowell; Spelman, voc. "Scot," "Lot."

SCOT AND LOT. In English law. The name of a customary contribution laid upon all the subjects according to their ability.

SCOTALE. An extortion by officers of the forests who kept ale houses, and compelled people to drink there under fear of their displeasure. Charta de Foresta, c. 7; Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, 216.

SCOTCH PEERS. Peers of the kingdom of Scotland. Of these sixteen are elected by the rest, and represent the whole body. They are elected for one parliament only. See 6 Anne, c. 23, amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 52, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 87, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 35.

SCOTS. Assessments by commissioners of sewers.

SCOTTARE. To pay scot, tax, or customary dues. Cowell.

SCRAWL. A mark which is to supply the place of a seal. 2 Pars. Cont. 100. See "Scroll."

SCRIBA (Lat. from scribere, to write). A scribe; a secretary. Scriba regis, a king's secretary; a chancellor. Spelman.

SCRIBERE EST AGERE. To write is to act. 2 Rolle, 89; 4 Bl. Comm. 80.

SCRIP. A certificate or schedule. Evidence of the right to obtain shares in a public company; sometimes called "scrip certificate," to distinguish it from the real title to shares. Wharton; 15 Ark. 12. The possession of such scrip is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated. Add. Cont. 203*. It is not goods, wares, or merchandise, within the statute of frauds. 16 Mees. & W. 66.

SCRIPT. The original or principal instrument, where there are part and counterpart.

SCRIPTAE OBLIGATIONES SCRIPTIS tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio, contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and obligations of naked agreement by naked agreement to the contrary.

SCRIPTORIUM (Law Lat. from scribere, to write). In old records. A place in monasteries, where writing was done. Spelman.

SCRIPTUM (Lat. from scribere, to write). In old conveyancing. A writing; a thing written. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25. This word, alone, does not import or signify a deed, that is, an instrument under seal. 2 Strange, 814.

Scriptum indentatum, a writing indented; an indenture or deed. Reynolds, J., 2 Strange, 815.

Scriptum obligatorium, a writing obligatory. The technical name of a bond in old pleadings. T. Raym. 393. Any writing under seal. Id.

SCRIPTUM INDENTATUM (Law Lat.) A writing indented; an indenture or deed.

SCRIPTURA (Lat. from scribere, to write). In old English law. The act or fact of writing. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

SCRIVENER. A person whose business it is to write deeds and other instruments for others; a conveyancer.

Money scriveners are those who are engaged in procuring money to be lent on mortgages and other securities, and lending such money accordingly. They act, also, as agents for the purchase and sale of real estates.

To be considered a money scrivener, a person must be concerned in carrying on the trade or profession as a means of making a livelihood. He must, in the course of his occupation, receive other men's moneys into his trust and custody, to lay out for them as occasion offers. 3 Campb. 533; 2 Esp. Cas. 555.

SCROLL. A printed or written mark intended to supply the place of a seal. See "Seal."

SCRUET ROLL (called, also, scruet finium, or simply scruet). In old English law. A record of the bail accepted in cases of habeas corpus. The award was set down in the remembrance roll, together with the cause of commitment, the writ and return were put on file, the bail was recorded in the scruet. 3 How. St. Tr. 134, 135, arg. For remembrance roll, see Reg. Michael. 1654, § 15.

SCRUTATOR (Lat. from scrutari, to search). In old English law. A bailiff whom the king of England appointed in places that were his in franchise or interest, whose duty was to look after the king's water rights; as flotsam, jetsam, wreck, etc. 1 Harg. Tr. p. 23; Pat. 27 Hen. VI. parte 2, m. 20; Pat. 8 Ed. IV. parte 1, m. 22.

SCUTAGE (from Lat. scutum, a shield). Knight service. Litt. § 99. The tax which those who, holding by knight service, did not accompany the king, had to pay on its being assessed by parliament. Escuage certain was a species of socage where the compensation for service was fixed. Litt. §§ 97, 98; Reg. Orig. 88; Wright, Ten. 121-134.

SCUTAGIO HABENDO. See "De Scutagio Habendo."

SCYRA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Shire; county; the inhabitants of a county. Writ cited, Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 119.

A fine imposed upon such as neglected to attend the scyre gemote courts, which all tenants were bound to do.

SCYRE GEMOTE. The name of a court among the Saxons. It was the court of the shire, in Latin called curia comitatus, and the principal court among the Saxons. It was holden twice a year for determining all causes, both ecclesiastical and secular.

SE DEFENDENDO (Lat.) Defending himself.

Homicide se defendendo may be justifiable. See "Self-Defense."

SEA. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land, and which extends from pole to pole, covering nearly three-quarters of the globe. Waters within the ebb and flow of the tide are to be considered the sea. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 526.

A large body of salt water communicating with the ocean is also called a sea; as, the Mediterranean sea, etc.

Very large inland bodies of salt water are also called seas; as, the Caspian sea, etc.

The open sea is public and common property, and any nation or person has ordinarily an equal right to navigate it or to fish therein (1 Kent, Comm. 27; Angell, Tide Waters, 44-49; 1 Bouv. Inst. 170, 174), and to land upon the seashore (1 Bouv. Inst. 173, 174); but it is generally conceded that every nation has jurisdiction to the distance of a cannon shot, or marine league, over the waters adjacent to its shore (2 Cranch [U. S.] 187, 234; Bynkershoek, Qu. Pub. Jur. 61; Vattel, 207).

SEA BATTERIES. Assaults by masters in the merchant service upon seamen at sea.

SEA LAWS. Maritime laws, as those of Oleron, Wisbuy, and the Hanse Towns.

SEA LETTER, or SEA BRIEF. In maritime law. A document which should be found on board of every neutral ship. It specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination. Chit. Law Nat. 197; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192.

SEA REEVE. An officer in maritime towns and places, who takes care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, watches the shore, and collects the wreck.

SEAL. Anciently, wax with an impression. Sigillum est cera impressa quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. 3 Inst. 169; 21 Pick. (Mass.) 417; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 362.

In more modern law, wax, wafer, or any tenacious substance upon which an impression may be made. 5 Cush. (Mass.) 359; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 239.

In many of the states, a scroll made with a pen or printed (4 Ill. 12), such as the letters "L. S." (5 Wis. 549), or the word "Seal" (28 Grat. [Va.] 627), is held sufficient, and in some states this holding is independent of statute (4 Ark. 195; 5 Cal. 315). See "L. S."

SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES. The seal used by the United States in congress assembled shall be the seal of the United States, viz.:

Arms: Paleways of thirteen pieces, argent and gules; a chief azure; the escutcheon on the breast of the American eagle displayed proper, holding in his dexter talon an olive branch, and in his sinister a bundle of thirteen arrows, all proper, and in his beak a scroll, inscribed with this motto, "E Pluribus unum."

For the Crest: Over the head of the eagle which appears above the escutcheon, a glory, or breaking through a cloud proper, and surrounding thirteen stars, forming a constellation argent on an azure field.

Reverse: A pyramid unfinished. In the zenith, an eye in a triangle, surrounded with a glory proper. Over the eye, these words, "Annuit coeptis." On the base of the pyramid, the numerical letters MDCCLXXVI, and underneath, the following motto, "Novus ordo seclorum." Resolution of Congress, June 20, 1782; Gordon, Dig. art. 207.

SEAL OFFICE. In English practice. The office at which certain judicial writs are sealed with the prerogative seal, and without which they are of no authority. The officer whose duty it is to seal such writs is called "sealer of writs."

SEAL PAPER. A document issued by the lord chancellor, previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the lords justices and vice chancellors. The master of the rolls in like manner issued a seal paper in respect of the business to be heard before him. Smith, Ch. Prac. 9.

SEALS. In Louisiana. A method of taking the effects of a deceased person into public custody.

On the death of a person, according to the laws of Louisiana, if the heir wishes to obtain the benefit of inventory and the delays for deliberating, he is bound, as soon as he knows of the death of the deceased to whose succession he is called, and before committing any act of heirship, to cause the seals to be affixed on the effects of the succession by any judge or justice of the peace. Civ. Code La. art. 1027.

In ten days after this affixing of the seals, the heir is bound to present a petition to the judge of the place in which the succession is opened, praying for the removal of the seals, and that a true and faithful inventory of the effects of the succession be made. Civ. Code La. art. 1028.

In case of vacant estates, and estates of which the heirs are absent and not represented, the seals, after the decease, must be affixed by a judge or justice of the peace within the limits of his jurisdiction, and may be fixed by him either ex officio or at the request of the parties. Civ. Code La. art. 1070. The seals are affixed at the request of the parties when a widow, a testamentary executor, or any other person who pretends to have an interest in a succession or community of property, requires it. Id. art. 1071. They are affixed ex officio when the presumptive heirs of the deceased do not all reside in the place where he died, or if any of them happen to be absent. Id. art. 1072.

The object of placing the seals on the effects of a succession is for the purpose of preserving them, and for the interest of third persons. Code Civ. La. art. 1068.

The seals must be placed on the bureaux, coffers, armoires, and other things which contain the effects and papers of the deceased, and on the doors of the apartments which contain these things, so that they cannot be opened without tearing off, breaking, or altering the seals. Code Civ. La. art. 1069.

The judge or justice of the peace who affixes the seals is bound to appoint a guardian, at the expense of the succession, to take care of the seals and of the effects, of which an account is taken at the end of the proces verbal of the affixing of the seals. The guardian must be domiciliated in the place where the inventory is taken. Code Civ. La. art. 1079. And the judge, when he retires, must take with him the keys of all things and apartments upon which the seals have been affixed. Id.

The raising of the seals is done by the judge of the place, or justice of the peace appointed by him to that effect, in the presence of the witnesses of the vicinage, in the same manner as for the affixing of the seals. Code Civ. La. art. 1084.

SEALED AND DELIVERED. In conveying. The common formula of attestation of deeds and other instruments, written immediately over the witnesses' names. This has been retained without change from the old practice, when sealing alone, without signing, constituted a sufficient execution or authentication. 2 Bl. Comm. 306. See 15 Ohio, 107.

In England, it has been held that the words "sealed and delivered," in an attestation, does not import signing. 5 Maule & S. 581; 3 Maule & S. 512; 4 Taunt. 213. But the contrary has recently been held in the supreme court of the United States. 8 How. (U. S.) 10, citing 6 Man. & G. 386.

SEALED INSTRUMENT. A writing, the maker of which has affixed his seal, or that which is the legal equivalent of a seal, in addition to his signature. Formerly the seal alone was sufficient if it identified the maker.

SEALING A VERDICT. In practice. The putting a verdict in writing, and placing it in an envelope, which is sealed. To relieve jurors after they have agreed, it is not unusual for the counsel to agree that the jury shall seal their verdict and then separate. When the court is again in session, the jury come in and give their verdict in all respects as if it had not been sealed; and a juror may dissent from it if since the sealing he has honestly changed his mind. 8 Ohio, 405; 1 Gilm. 333; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3257.

SEAMAN. A sailor; a mariner; one whose business is navigation. 2 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 232; Code de Commerce, art. 262; Laws of Oleron, art. 7; Laws of Wisbuy, art. 19.

In a statute, it has been held to include persons engaged in fresh-water navigation. 2 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 268.

The term "seamen," in its most enlarged sense, includes the captain as well as other persons of the crew; in a more confined signification, it extends only to the common sailors. 3 Pardessus, note 667. But the mate (1 Pet. Adm. [U. S.] 246), the cook and steward (2 Pet. Adm. [U. S.] 268), and engineers, clerks, carpenters, firemen, deck hands, porters, and chamber maids, on passenger steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship (1 Conkl. Adm. 107; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 582; 1 Sumn. [U. S.] 170), are considered, as to their rights to sue in the admiralty, as common seamen; and persons employed on board of steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide water are within the admiralty jurisdiction; while those employed in ferryboats are not (Gilp. Dist. Ct. 203, 532). Persons who do not contribute their aid in navigating the vessel or to its preservation in the course of their occupation, as musicians, are not to be considered as seamen, with a right to sue in the admiralty for their wages. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 516. See "Lien."

SEAMANSHIP. The skill of a good seaman; an acquaintance with the art of navigating and managing a ship or other vessel.

SEARCH.

—In Criminal Law. An examination of a man's house, premises, or person, for the purpose of discovering stolen or contraband goods, or proof of his guilt in relation to some crime or misdemeanor of which he is accused.

The constitution of the United States (Amend. art. 4) protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures. 3 Story, Const. § 1895; Rawle, Const. c. 10, p. 127; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500; 1 U. S. St. at Large, 651; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 447.

—In Practice. An examination made in the proper lien office for mortgages, liens, judgments, or other incumbrances against real estate. The certificate given by the officer as to the result of such examination is also called a "search."

Conveyancers and others who cause searches to be made ought to be very careful that they should be correct with regard to the time during which the person against whom the search has been made owned the premises, to the property searched against, which ought to be properly described, and to the form of the certificate of search.

SEARCH, RIGHT OF. In international law. The right existing in a belligerent to examine and inspect the papers of a neutral vessel at sea. On the continent of Europe this is called the "right of visit." Dalloz, "Prises Maritimes," notes 104-111.

The right does not extend to examine the cargo, nor does it extend to a ship of war, it being strictly confined to the searching of merchant vessels. The exercise of the right is to prevent the commerce of contraband goods. Although frequently resisted by powerful neutral nations, yet this right appears now to be fixed beyond contravention. The penalty for violently resisting this right is the confiscation of the property so withheld from visitation. Unless in extreme cases of gross abuse of his right by a belligerent, the neutral has no right to resist a search. 1 Kent, Comm. 154; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 319.

The right of search—or rather of visitation—in time of peace, especially in its connection with the efforts of the British government for the suppression of the slave trade, has been the subject of much discussion (Wheaton, Right of Search; Life of General Cass [by Smith] cc. 25, 26; Webster, Works, vol. 6, 329, 335, 338), and the documents relating to this subject communicated to congress from time to time, and most of the works on international law, may be profitably examined by those who desire to trace the history and understand the merits of the questions involved in the proposed exercise of this right. See, also, Edinburgh Review, vol. 11, p. 9; Foreign Quarterly Review, vol. 35, p. 211; 3 Phillim. Int. Law, Index, tit. "Visit and Search."

SEARCH WARRANT. In practice. A warrant requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house, or other place, therein specified, for stolen, contraband or illicit property therein, and, if the same shall be found upon such search, to bring the goods so found, together with the body of the person occupying the same, who is named, before the justice or other officer granting the warrant, or some other justice of the peace, or other lawfully authorized officer.

SEARCHER. In English law. An officer of the customs, whose duty it is to examine and search all ships outward bound, to ascertain whether they have any prohibited or unaccustomed goods on board.

SEASHORE. That space of land on the border of the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; or, in other words, that space of land between high and low water mark. Harg. Tr. 12; 6 Mass. 435, 439; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 182; 5 Day (Conn.) 22; 12 Me. 237; 2 Zab. (N. J.) 441; 27 Eng. Law & Eq. 242; 4 De Gex. M. & G. 206. See "Tide;" "Tide Water."

SEATED LANDS. In the early land legislation of some of the United States, "seated" is used, in connection with "improved," to denote lands of which actual possession was taken. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 468.

SEAWANT. In old American law. The Dutch name for wampum, or Indian money, which consisted of perforated beads, manufactured from the inside of shells, and strung together. O'Callaghan's N. Netherlands, i. 60, 61. Id. ii. 543.

SEAWEED. A species of grass which grows in the sea. When cast upon land, it belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the seashore, upon the grounds that it increases gradually, that it is useful as manure and a protection to the ground, and that it is some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, 323. See 5 Vt. 223.

The French differs from our law in this respect, as seaweeds there, when cast on the beach, belong to the first occupant. Dalloz, "Propriete," art. 3, § 2, note 128.

SEAWORTHINESS. In maritime law. The sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit, for the trade or service in which it is employed. 5 M. & W. 414, 9 L. J. Ex. 48.

Any sort of disrepair left in the ship, by which she or the cargo may suffer, is a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness. A deficiency of force in the crew, or of skill in the master, mate, etc., is a want of seaworthiness. 1 Campb. 1; 14 East, 481; 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234.

If the assurance attaches before the voyage commences, it is enough that the state of the ship be commensurate to the then risk; and, if the voyage be such as to require a different complement of men, or state of equipment in different parts of it, as if it were a voyage down a canal or river and thence across to the open sea, it would be enough if the vessel were, at the commencement of each stage of the navigation, properly manned and equipped for it. 5 M. & W. 414; 8 Ib. 895; 9 L. J. Ex. 48. And if there was once a sufficient crew, their temporary absence will not be considered a breach of the warranty. 2 Barn. & Ald. 73; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 183. A vessel may be rendered not seaworthy by being overloaded. 2 Barn. & Ald. 320.

It can never be settled by positive rules of law how far this obligation of seaworthiness extends in any particular case, for the reason that improvements and changes in the means and modes of navigation frequently require new implements, or new forms of old ones; and these, though not necessary at first, become so when there is an established usage that all ships of a certain quality, or those to be sent on certain voyages, or used for certain purposes, shall have them. 2 Pars. Mar. Law. 134. Seaworthiness is, therefore, in general, a question of fact for the jury. Id.

137; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 184; 1 Bouv. Inst. 441.

SEBASTOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence. Religious insanity; demonomania.

SECK. A want of remedy by distress. Litt. § 218. See "Rent." Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. Co. Litt. 151b, note 5.

SECOND DELIVERANCE. In practice. The name of a writ given by the statute of Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. c. 2), founded on the record of a former action of replevin, 2 Inst. 341. It commands the sheriff, if the plaintiff make him secure of prosecuting his claim and returning the chattels which were adjudged to the defendant by reason of the plaintiff's default, to make deliverance. On being nonsuited, the plaintiff in replevin might, at common law, have brought another replevin, and so ad infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. The statute of Westminster restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from so doing, but allows him this writ, issuing out of the original record, in order to have the same distress delivered again to him, on his giving the like security as before. 3 Bl. Comm. 150; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68.

SECOND DISTRESS. By 17 Car. II. c. 7, § 4, in all cases where the value of the cattle distrained shall not be found to be of the full value of the arrears distrained for, the party to whom such arrears are due, his executors or administrators, may distrain again for the said arrears; but a second distress cannot, it seems, be at all justified, where there is enough which might have been taken upon the first, if the distrainer had then thought proper; for a man who has an entire duty, as rent, for example, shall not split the entire sum, and distrain for one part of it at one time, and for the other part of it at another time, and so toties quoties for several times, for that would be great oppression. Whar-ton.

SECOND-HAND EVIDENCE. Hearsay, because the facts were perceived or discovered by some other than the witness testifying or by an agency extraneous to that producing the evidence offered.

SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF. The name of a writ issued in England against a commoner who has a second time surcharged the common. 3 Bl. Comm. 239.

SECONDS. Assistants at a duel. They are equally guilty with the principals under many of the statutes against duelling. See "Duelling."

SECONDARY. In English law. An officer who is second or next to the chief officer; as, secondaries to the prothonotaries of the courts of king's bench or common pleas; secondary of the remembrancer in the exchequer, etc. Jacob.

—In Medical Practice. Secondary is the term for a disease which is not the primary cause of death. 39 L. J. Ex. 214; L. R. 5 Ex. 302; 34 L. J. C. P. 28; 17 C. B. N. S. 122.

SECONDARY (or DERIVATIVE) CONVEYANCES. Those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 324*.

SECONDARY EASEMENT. A kind of appurtenance or appurtenancy of one easement to or upon another easement, passing with the principal easement, as being necessary or convenient to the enjoyment of the same. 116 Ill. 20.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. That species of proof which is admissible on the loss of primary evidence, and which becomes by that event the best evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3055. See "Evidence."

SECONDARY USE. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a "shifting use," as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that, when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs. 1 Steph. Comm. 546.

SECRET COMMITTEE. A secret committee of the house of commons is a committee specially appointed to investigate a certain matter, and to which secrecy being deemed necessary in furtherance of its objects, its proceedings are conducted with closed doors, to the exclusion of all persons not members of the committee. All other committees are open to members of the house, although they may not be serving upon them. Brown.

SECRET PARTNERSHIP. See "Partner."

SECRET TRUSTS. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal promise by the legatee or devisee that he will hold it in trust for another person, this is called a "secret trust." The English rule is, that if the secret trust would have been valid as an express trust, it will be enforced against the legatee or devisee, while if it would have been invalid as an express trust, e. g., by contravening the provisions of the mortmain act, the gift fails altogether, so that neither the devisee or legatee, nor the object of the trust, takes any benefit by it. Lewin, Trusts, 51; Watson, Comp. Eq. 54.

SECRETARY OF DECREES AND INJUNCTIONS. An officer of the English court of chancery. The office was abolished by St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, § 23.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION. An officer employed to attend a foreign mission, and to perform certain duties as clerk.

His salary is fixed by the act of congress of May 1, 1810 (section 1), at such a sum as the president of the United States may allow, not exceeding two thousand dollars.

The salary of a secretary of embassy, or the secretary of a minister plenipotentiary, is the same as that of a secretary of legation.

Private secretaries of a minister must not be confounded with secretaries of embassy or of legation. Such private secretaries are entitled to protection only as belonging to the suite of the ambassador.

The functions of a secretary of legation consist in his employment by his minister for objects of ceremony; in making verbal reports to the secretary of state or other foreign ministers; in taking care of the archives of the mission; in ciphering and deciphering despatches; in sometimes making rough draughts of the notes or letters which the minister writes to his colleagues or to the local authorities; in drawing up proces verbaux; in presenting passports to the minister for his signature, and delivering them to the persons for whom they are intended; and, finally, in assisting the minister, under whom he is placed, in everything concerning the affairs of the mission. In the absence of the minister, he is admitted to conferences, and to present notes signed by the minister.

SECRETARY OF STATE. The word "secretary" is synonymous with the word "clerk" or "scribe," and it means a person employed to write orders, records and the like, so that the title "Secretary of State," in and of itself implies an officer who is charged with the duties of keeping the official records of the State,—not only as regards the acts and doings of the chief executive, but of the legislative branch as well. 254 Ill. 34.

SECTA (Lat. sequor, to follow). The persons, two or more in number, whom the plaintiff produced in court, in the ancient form of proceedings, immediately upon making his declaration, to confirm the allegations therein, before they were called in question by the defendant's plea. Bracton, 214a. The word appears to have been used as denoting that these persons followed the plaintiff into court; that is, came in a matter in which the plaintiff was the leader, or one principally concerned. The actual production of "suit" was discontinued very early (3 Bl. Comm. 295), but the formula "et inde producit sectam" (for which, in more modern pleadings, "and thereupon he brings suit" is substituted) continued till the abolition of the Latin form of pleadings (Steph. Pl. 429, 430). The count in dower and writs of right did not so conclude, however. 1 Chit. Pl. 399. A suit or action. Hob. 20; Bracton, 399b. A suit of clothes. Cowell; Spelman.

SECTA AD CURIAM. A writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court baron. Cowell.

SECTA AD FURNUM. Suit due a public bake house.

SECTA AD JUSTICIAM FACIENDAM. In old English law. A service which a man is bound to perform by his fee.

SECTA AD MOLENDRINUM. A service arising from the usage, time out of mind, of carrying corn to a particular mill to be ground. 3 Bl. Comm. 235. A writ adapted to the injury lay at the old law. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 123.

SECTA AD TORRALE. Suit due a man's kiln or malt house. 3 Bl. Comm. 235.

SECTA CURIAE. Suit at court. The service due from tenants to the lord of attending his courts baron, both to answer complaints alleged against themselves, and for the trial of their fellow tenants. 2 Bl. Comm. 54.

SECTA EST PUGNA CIVILIS; SICUT actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, for as the plaintiffs are armed with actions, and, as it were, girt with swords, so, on the other hand, the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended, as it were, by helmets. Hob. 20; Bracton, 339b.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUAE habet eniciam partem. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the coheirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. 177.

SECTA QUAE SCRIPTO NITITUR A scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 65.

SECTA REGALIS. A suit so called by which all persons were bound twice in the year to attend in the sheriff's tourn, in order that they might be informed of things relating to the public peace. It was so called because the sheriff's tourn was the king's leet, and it was held in order that the people might be bound by oath to bear true allegiance to the king. Cowell.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA pro pluribus haereditatibus. A writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Cowell.

SECTATORES. Suitors of court who, among the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 22.

SECTION. A division of land one mile square, containing six hundred and forty acres, established by the United States government survey of the public domain. See "Range;" "Section of Land;" "Township."

SECTION OF LAND. A parcel of government land containing six hundred and forty acres. The lands of the United States are surveyed into parcels of six hundred and forty acres; each such parcel is called a "section."

These sections are divided into half-sections, each of which contains three hundred and twenty acres, and into quarter-sections of one hundred and sixty acres each. See 2 Washb. Real Prop.

SECTORES (Lat.) In Roman law. Bidders at an auction. Bab. Auct. 2.

SECUNDUM. According to.

—Secundum Aequum et Bonum. According to what is just and right.

—Secundum Allegata et Probata. According to that which is alleged and proved.

—Secundum Consuetudinem Manerii. According to the custom of the manor.

—Secundum Formam Statuti. According to the form of the charter (deed).

—Secundum Formam Doni. According to the form of the gift or grant. See "Formedon."

—Secundum Formam Statuti. According to the form of the statute.

—Secundum Legem Communem. According to the common law.

—Secundum Naturam est, Commoda Cujusque rei eum Sequi, quem Sequuntur Incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

—Secundum Normam Legis. According to the rule of law; by the rule of law.

—Secundum Regulam. According to the rule; by rule.

—Secundum Subjectam Materiam. According to the subject matter. 1 Bl. Comm. 229. All agreements must be construed secundum subjectam materiam, if the matter will bear it. 2 Mod. 80, arg. Delivery must be secundum subjectam materiam. 2 Kent, Comm. 439.

SECURITAS.

—In old English Law. Security; surety.

—In the Civil Law. An acquittance or release. Spelman; Calv. Lex.

SECURITATEM INVENIENDI. An ancient writ, lying for the sovereign, against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of the kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth as the crown shall think fit. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 115.

SECURITATIS PACIS. In old English law. Security of the peace. A writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened. Reg. Orig. 88.

SECURITY. That which renders a matter sure; an instrument which renders more certain the performance of a contract. Anything that makes money more assured in its payment, or more readily recoverable, as distinguished from a mere evidence of debt.

A person who becomes the surety for another, or who engages himself for the performance of another's contract. See 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 481.

SECURITY FOR COSTS. Security given by a party to an action to pay any costs which may be adjudged against him therein.

Such security is required by statute in various cases, as on appeal, on the bringing of suit by a nonresident, etc.

SECURITY FOR GOOD BEHAVIOR. Giving surety of the peace (q. v.)

SECURIUS EXPEDIUNTUR NEGOTIA commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one eye. 4 Coke, 46.

SECUS (Lat.) Otherwise.

SED NON ALLOCATUR (Lat. but it is not allowed). A phrase used in the old reports to signify that the court disagreed with the arguments of counsel. "It was argued," etc., "sed non allocatur."

SED PER CURIAM (Lat. but by the court). An expression sometimes found in the reports, after the opinion of a single judge, to introduce that of the court which differs from that of the single judge.

SED VIDE (Lat.) But see.

SEDERUNT, ACTS OF. In Scotch law. Certain ancient ordinances of the court of session, conferring upon the courts power to establish general rules of practice. Bell, Dict.

SEDITION. In criminal law. The raising commotions or disturbances in the state. 195 Mich. 293. It is a revolt against legitimate authority. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 14; Dig. 49. 16. 3. § 19, not amounting to insurrection. Excitement of discontent against the government, or of resistance to lawful authority; conduct tending to treason, but without an overt act. 195 Mich. 293.

The distinction between "sedition" and "treason" consists in this, that though the ultimate object of sedition is a violation of the public peace, or at least such a course of measures as evidently engenders it, yet it does not aim at direct and open violence against the laws, or the subversion of the constitution. Alis. Crim. Law, 580.

The obnoxious act of July 14, 1798 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 543), was called the "sedition law," because its professed object was to prevent disturbances.

In the Scotch law, sedition is either verbal or real. Verbal is inferred from the uttering of words tending to create discord between the king and his people; real sedition is generally committed by convocating together any considerable number of people, without lawful authority, under the pretense of redressing some public grievance, to the disturbing of the public peace. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 14.

SEDUCTION.

—As a Tort. At common law, the act of a man in inducing a woman to have unlawful sexual intercourse with him. The use of seductive arts was not essential. The woman herself had no action for damages except in case of a breach of a marriage promise, the only civil remedy being that of her parent, based on loss of services. 89 Ill. 543; 49 Mich. 540.

By statute in many states, the woman has the right to sue in her own name, but such statutes generally provide that the seduction must be under promise of marriage, or by seductive arts and devices.

—As a Crime. The crime is statutory, and consists generally in inducing an unmarried female of previous chaste character to submit to sexual intercourse by promise of marriage, or, in some states, by other seductive means.

"The exact amount or what kind of seductive art is necessary to establish the offense cannot be defined. Every case must stand on its own peculiar circumstances, together with the condition in life, advantages, age, and intelligence of the parties." 32 Iowa, 262. The intercourse must be accomplished by artifice and deception, and not by a yielding of the woman from mere lust. 79 Ala. 14.

Where a promise of marriage is required, it need not be valid, if it is believed by the woman to be so. 26 N. Y. 203. The woman must be induced by the promise to submit. 108 Ind. 406.

"No one can contend with any degree of plausibility that a virtuous female can be seduced without any of those arts, wiles, and blandishments so necessary to win the hearts of the weaker sex. To say that such a one was seduced by simply a blunt offer of wedlock in futuro, in exchange for sexual favors in presenti is an announcement that smacks too much of a bargain and barter, and not enough of betrayal. This is hire or salary, not seduction." 97 Mo. 668.

SEIGNIOR, or SEIGNEUR. Among the feudists, this name signified lord of the fee. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 23. The most extended signification of this word includes not only a lord or per of parliament, but is applied to the owner or proprietor of a thing; hence the owner of a hawk, and the master of a fishing vessel, is called a "seigneur." 37 Edw. III. c. 19; Barr. Obs. St. 258.

SEIGNIOR IN GROSS. A lord without a manor, simply enjoying superiority and service

SEIGNIORAGE. A royalty or prerogative of the sovereign, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed.

—In the United States. The mint charge for coining bullion.

SEIGNIORESS. A female superior.

SEIGNIORY. In English law. The rights of a lord, as such, in lands. Swinb. Wills, 174.

SEISED IN DEMESNE AS OF FEE. The precise technical phrase to express a fee simple in possession in a corporeal hereditament, the words "in demesne" signifying that he is seised as owner of the land itself, and not merely of the seignory or services; and the words "as of fee" importing that he is seised of an estate of inheritance in fee simple. 2 Bl. Comm. 105; Steph. Comm. 22.

SEISI. In old English law. Seised; possessed.

SEISIN. The completion of the feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the feud, and performed the rites of homage and fealty. Stearns, Real Actions, 2.

Possession with an intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest. 8 N. H. 58; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 35; 115 Ill. 183.

Immediately upon the investiture or livery of seisin, the tenant became tenant of the freehold; and the term "seisin" originally contained the idea of possession derived from a superior lord of whom the tenant held. There could be but one seisin, and the person holding it was regarded for the time as the rightful owner. Litt. § 701; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 136. In the early history of the country, livery of seisin seems to have been occasionally practiced. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 34, note; Colony Laws (Mass.) 85, 86; Smith, Landl. & Ten. (Morris Ed.) 6, note.

Seisin and ownership, as to corporeal hereditaments, in the common law sense of the term, mean practically the same thing. 115 Ill. 182.

In Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, seisin means merely "ownership," and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice. Walk. Am. Law, 324, 330; 4 Day (Conn.) 305; 4 Mass. 489; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 224; 6 Metc. (Mass.) 439. A patent by the commonwealth, in Kentucky, gives a right of entry, but not actual seisin. 3 Bibb (Ky.) 57.

Seisin in fact is possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest.

Seisin in law is a right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. Cowell; Comyn, Dig. "Seisin" (A 1, 2). See "Livery of Seisin."

SEISIN, LIVERY OF. See "Livery of Seisin."

SEISIN OX. In Scotch law. A perquisite formerly due to the sheriff when he gave possession to an heir holding crown lands. It was long since converted into a payment in money, proportioned to the value of the estate. Bell, Dict.

SEISINA (Law Lat.) Seisin.

SEISINA FACIT STIPITEM. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bl. Comm. 209; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 466; 1 Steph. Comm. 367; 4 Kent, Comm. 388, 389; 13 Ga. 233.

SEISINA HABENDA. A writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste on a felony committed, etc. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEIZIN. See "Seisin."

SEIZING OF HERIOTS. Taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant. 2 Bl. Comm. 422.

SEIZURE. In practice. A forcible taking possession. 52 L. J. Q. B. 343; 10 Q. B. D. 432. The act of taking possession of the property of a person condemned by the judgment of a competent tribunal to pay a certain sum of money, by a sheriff, constable, or other officer lawfully authorized thereto, by virtue of an execution, for the purpose of having such property sold according to law to satisfy the judgment. The taking possession of goods for a violation of a public law; as, the taking possession of a ship for attempting an illicit trade. 2 Cranch (U. S.) 187; 4 Wheat. (U. S. 100); 1 Gall. (U. S.) 75; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 127, 567; 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404.

SELECT. Choice; to choose; to take one thing rather than another. 61 Ill. 119. To pick out or take from among a number. There can be no selection, where there is nothing left. One may take the whole, but he cannot select the whole. 21 Ill. 104.

SELECTI JUDICES (Lat.) In Roman law. Judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the praetor, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged and sworn. 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

SELECTMEN. The name of certain town officers in several states of the United States, who are invested by the statutes of the states with extensive powers for the conduct of the town business.

SELF-DEFENSE. The protection by force of one's person or property from unlawful injury. The force used must be no more than is reasonably necessary to repel the threatened injury, and must be proportioned to the nature of the injury apprehended. Thus, an assault with the hand cannot be repelled by the use of a deadly weapon. 77 Ind. 274; 34 Ohio St. 98.

As a general rule, an assault threatening death or serious bodily injury, the infliction of which would amount to a felony, may be resisted to the taking of life (23 Ohio St. 186; 8 Mich. 150), but not an assault which is but a misdemeanor (2 N. Y. 193).

Unlawful injury to property may be resisted by force short of the taking of life (148 Mass. 529; 56 Vt. 703), but the taking of life in defense of property is only justifiable when it is necessary in order to prevent a felony attempted by violence or surprise, as burglary, robbery, or arson (4 Bl. Comm. 180; 25 Grat. [Va.] 887; 31 Conn. 479), but not secret felonies, such as larceny (71 Ala. 330).

SELF-DESTRUCTION. See "Suicide."

SELF-EXECUTING—CONSTITUTIONAL provisions. Constitutional provisions are self-executing when it appears they shall take immediate effect, and ancillary legislation is not necessary to the enjoyment of the right thus given, or the enforcement of the duty thus imposed; a provision complete in itself. 265 Mo. 26; 175 S. W. 940; Ann. Cas. 1916 D 6; 54 Colo. 117; 129 Pac. 198.

—Order. A self-executing order is one requiring no ministerial act to become effective. 164 Iowa 417.

SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE. Evidence which either serves or disserves the party is so called. This species of evidence is either self-serving (which is not in general receivable), or self-disserving, which is invariably receivable, as being an admission against the party offering it, and that either in court or out of court. Brown.

SELION OF LAND. A ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less. Termes de la Ley.

SELLER. One who disposes of a thing in consideration of money; a vendor.

This term is more usually applied in the sale of chattels; that of "vendor" in the sale of estates. See "Sale."

SELLER THE MONTH. The term as used on the board of trade means that the seller has until the last day of the month in which to make a delivery of any grain contracted to be sold. 79 Ill. 353.

SEMAYNE'S CASE. This case decided, in 2 Jac. I., that "every man's house [meaning his dwelling-house only] is his castle," and that the defendant may not break open outer doors in general, but only inner doors, but that (after request made) he may break open even outer doors to find goods of another wrongfully in the house. Brown.

SEMBLE (Fr. it seems). A term frequently used before the statement of a point of law which has not been directly settled, but about which the court have expressed an opinion, and intimated what a decision would be.

SEMEL CIVIS SEMPER CIVIS. Once a citizen always a citizen. Tray. Lat. Max. 555.

SEMEL MALUS SEMPER PRAESUMITUR ESSE MALUS IN EODEM GENERE. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Cro. Car. 317.

SEMESTRIA. In the civil law, the collected decisions of the emperors in their councils.

SEMESTRIS, or SEMESTRE (Lat. from sex, six, and mensis, month). Of, or for six months. Dig. 27. 1. 41; St. Westminster II. c. 5; 2 Inst. 361.

SEMI-MATRIMONIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. Half-marriage. Concubinage was so called. Tayl. Civ. Law, 273.

SEMI-NAUFRAGIUM (Lat.) A term used by Italian lawyers, which literally signifies "half-shipwreck," and by which they understand the jetsam, or casting merchandise into the sea to prevent shipwreck. Loche, Esp. du Code de Com. art. 409. The state of a vessel which has been so much injured by tempest or accident that to repair the damages, after being brought into port, and prepare her for sea, would cost more than her worth. 4 Bost. Law Rep. 120.

SEMI-PROOF. In civil law. Presumption of fact. This degree of proof is thus defined: "Non est ignorandum, probationem semiplenam eam esse, per quam rei gestae fides aliqua fit iudici; non tamen tanta ut jure debeat in pronuncianda sententia eam sequi." Mascardus, de Prob. vol. 1, quaest. 11, note 1, 4.

SEMPER (Lat.) Always.

SEMPER IN DUBIIS BENIGNIORA PRAEFERENDA SUNT. In dubious cases, the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

SEMPER IN DUBIIS ID AGENDUM EST, UT QUAM TUTISSIMO LOCO RES SIT BONA FIDE CONTRACTA, NISI QUUM APERTE CONTRA LEGES SCRIPTUM EST. Always, in doubtful cases, that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

SEMPER IN OBSCURIS QUOD MINIMUM EST SEQUIMUR (SEQUERE). In obscure cases we always follow that which is least. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 613, note; 3 C. B. 962.

SEMPER IN STIPULATIONIBUS ET IN CAETERIS CONTRACTIBUS ID SEQUIMUR QUOD ACtum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was done (i. e., agreed). Dig. 50. 17. 34.

SEMPER ITA FIAT RELATIO UT VALEAT DISPOSITIO. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

SEMPER NECESSITAS PROBANDI INCUMBIT EI QUI AGIT. The claimant is always bound to prove; the burden of proof lies on him.

SEMPER PARATUS (Lat. always ready). In pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has always been ready to perform what is demanded of him. 3 Bl. Comm. 303. The same as tout temps prist.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO LEGITIMATIONE PUERORUM, ET FILIATIO NON POTEST PROBARI. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Co. Litt. 126. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 303; 5 Coke, 98b.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO MATRIMONIO. The presumption is always in favor of the validity of a marriage.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO NEGANTE. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Clark & F. 534; 3 El. & Bl. 723.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO SENTENTIA. Presumption is always in favor of the sentence. 3 Bulst. 42.

SEMPER QUI NON PROHIBET PRO SE INTERVENIRE, MANDARE CREDITUR. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent, Comm. 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; Id. 43. 3. 12. 4.

SEMPER SEXUS MASCULINUS ETIAM FOEMININUM CONTINET. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32. 62.

SEMPER SPECIALIA GENERALIBUS INSAUNT. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

SEN. This is said to be an ancient word which signified "justice." Co. Litt. 61a.

SENATE. The name of the less numerous of the two bodies constituting the legislative branch of the government of the United States, and of the several states.

SENATOR. A member of a senate.

SENATORES SUNT PARTES CORPORIS REGIS. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staundf. 72 (E); 4 Inst. 53, in marg.

SENATORS OF THE COLLEGE OF JUSTICE. The judges of the court of session in Scotland are so called. Act 1540, c. 93.

SENATUS CONSULTA. Ordinances (public acts) of the Roman senate.

SENATUS CONSULTUM MARCIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Marcian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Quintus Marcius and Spurius Postumus, in relation to the celebration of the Bacchanalian mysteries. This decree has been preserved entire to the present day, and is given in full by Dr. Taylor, with a commentary abounding in curious learning. Tayl. Civ. Law, 546-584. It was obtained from a copper plate dug up about the year 1640, in the territories of J. Bapt. Cigala, in the kingdom of Naples, and now in the imperial library at Vienna. Id. 547.

SENATUS CONSULTUM ORFICIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Orfician decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Orficius and Rufus, in the reign of the Emperor Marcus Antonius, by which children, both sons and daughters, were admitted to the inheritance of their intestate mothers. Inst. 3. 4. pr.

SENATUS CONSULTUM PEGASIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Pegasian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulship of Pegasus and Pusio, in the reign of Vespasian, by which an heir, who was requested to restore an inheritance, was allowed to retain one-fourth of it for himself. Inst. 2. 23. 5. This was declared by Justinian to be superseded by the Senatus Consultum Trebellianum (q. v.) Id. 2. 23. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 23, § 668.

SENATUS CONSULTUM TREBELLIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Trebellian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Trebellius Maximus and Annaeus Seneca, in the reign of Nero, by which it was provided that, if an inheritance was restored under a trust, all actions which, by the civil law, might be brought by or against the heir should be given to and against him to whom the inheritance was restored. Inst. 2. 23. 4; Dig. 36. 1. See the words of the decree, Id. § 2.

SENATUS CONSULTUM ULTIMAE NECESSITATIS (Lat.) A decree of the senate of the last necessity. The name given to the decree which usually preceded the nomination of a dictator. 1 Bl. Comm. 136.

SENATUS CONSULTUM VELLEIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Velleian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulship of Velleius, by which married women were prohibited from making contracts. Dig. 16, 1; Story, Conf. Laws, § 425.

SENATUS DECRETA. In the civil law. Decisions of the senate; private acts concerning particular persons merely.

SENDA. In Spanish law. A path; the right of a path; the right of foot or horse path. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 6, § 1.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO quod non teneat placita de libero tenemento. A writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185. Abolished.

SENESCHALLUS (Lat.) A steward. Co. Litt. 61a.

SENILE DEMENTIA. A gradual impairment of the mental faculties by reason of physical decay and resulting in second childhood.

SENILITY. Old age; a state of mental impairment resulting from old age. See 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 232.

SENIOR. The elder. This addition is sometimes made to a man's name, when two persons bear the same, in order to distinguish them. In practice, when nothing is mentioned, the senior is intended. 3 Miss. 59.

Used in reference to securities conveyances, etc., it signifies first in point of time.

SENORIO. In Spanish Law. Dominion or property.

SENSU HONESTO. To interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the person concerned.

SENSUS VERBORUM EST ANIMA LEGIS. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Coke, 2.

SENSUS VERBORUM EST DUPLEX, MITIS ET ASPER, ET VERBA SEMPER ACCIPIENDA SUNT IN MITIORE SENSU. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Coke, 13.

SENSUS VERBORUM EX CAUSA DICENDI ACCIPIENDUS EST, ET SERMONES SEMPER ACCIPIENDI SUNT SECUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject matter. 4 Coke, 14.

SENTENCE. A judgment or judicial declaration made by a judge in a cause. The term "judgment" is more usually applied to civil, and "sentence" to criminal, proceedings. A sentence (in criminal proceedings) is the order of court made in the presence of the defendant, and entered of record, pronouncing the judgment, and ordering the same to be carried into execution in the manner prescribed by law. Clark, Crim. Law Tex. 580.

Sentences are final, when they put an end to the case; or interlocutory, when they settle only some incidental matter which has arisen in the course of its progress. See Aso & M. Inst. bk. 3, tit. 8, c. 1.

SENTENTIA (Lat.) In civil law. Sense; import; as distinguished from mere words. Calv. Lex.

The deliberate expression of one's will. Tayl. Civ. Law, 532.

The sentence of a judge or court. Inst. 4. 11. 4.

SENTENTIA A NON JUDICE LATA NE-mini debet nocere. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6, § 7.

SENTENTIA CONTRA MATRIMONIUM
nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Coke, 43.

SENTENTIA FACIT JUS, ET LEGIS INterpretatio legis vim obtinet. The sentence makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

SENTENTIA FACIT JUS, ET RES JUDIcata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesmere, Postn. 55.

SENTENTIA INTERLOCUTORIA REVO-cari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory sentence or order may be revoked, but not a final. Bac. Max. reg. 20.

SENTENTIA NON FERTUR DE REBUS non liquidis. Sentence is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

SEPARALE. (L. Lat.) In old English law. Several; a several or separate share or portion. A separate property.

SEPARALITER (Lat. separately). A word sometimes used in indictments to show that the defendants are charged separately with offenses which, without the addition of this word, would seem, from the form of the indictment, to be charged jointly; as, for example, when two persons are indicted together for perjury, and the indictment states that A. and B. came before a commissioner, etc., this is alleging that they were both guilty of the same crime, when by law their crimes are distinct, and the indictment is vicious; but if the word separaliter is used, then the affirmation is that each was guilty of a separate offense. 2 Hale, P. C. 174.

SEPARATE ACKNOWLEDGMENT. A married woman's acknowledgment of a deed, taken apart and privately from her husband.

SEPARATE DEMISE IN EJECTMENT. A demise in a declaration in ejectment used to be termed a "separate demise" when made by the lessor separately or individually, as distinguished from a demise made jointly by two or more persons, which was termed a "joint demise." No such demise, either separate or joint, is now necessary in this action. Brown.

SEPARATE ESTATE. That which belongs to one only of several persons; as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1519.

The separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her, and over which her husband has no right in equity. It may consist of lands or chattels. 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 407; 1 Const. (S. C.) 452; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3996.

SEPARATE EXAMINATION. See "Separate Acknowledgment."

SEPARATE MAINTENANCE. The maintenance of a woman by her husband on an agreement to live separately. An allowance made by a husband to his wife for her separate support and maintenance. Bouvier. See 2 Rep. Husb. & Wife, 267 et seq.; 2 Steph. Comm. 309.

SEPARATIM. In old conveyancing. Severally. A word which made a several covenant. 5 Coke, 23a.

SEPARATION. A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement.

SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO. A partial dissolution of the marriage relation. By the ecclesiastical or canon law of England, which had exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, marriage was regarded as a sacrament, and indissoluble. This doctrine originated with the Church of Rome, and became established in England while that country was Catholic; and though, after the Reformation, it ceased to be the doctrine of the Church of England, yet the law remained unchanged until the recent statute of 20 & 21 Vict. (1857) c. 85. Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 274, 278. Hence, as has been seen in the article on divorce, a valid marriage could not be dissolved in England except by what has been termed the "omnipotent power of parliament."

This gave rise, in the ecclesiastical courts, to the practice of granting divorces "from bed and board," as they used to be called, or "judicial separation," as they are called in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 7. Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 277, 278. From England this practice was introduced into this country; and though in some of the states it has entirely given way to the divorce a vinculo matrimonii, in others it is still in use, being generally granted for causes which are not sufficient to authorize the latter. See "Divorce."

SEPARATION ORDER. In England, where a husband is convicted of an aggravated assault upon his wife, the court or magistrate may order that the wife shall be no longer bound to cohabit with him. Such an order has the same effect as a judicial decree of separation on the ground of cruelty. It may also provide for the payment of a weekly sum by the husband to the wife and for the custody of the children. Sweet.

SEPARATISTS. Seceders from the Church of England. They, like Quakers, solemnly affirm, instead of taking the usual oath, before they give evidence. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 82.

SEPTUM. An inclosure; any place paled in. Cowell.

SEPULCHRE. The place where a corpse is buried. The violation of sepulchres is a misdemeanor at common law.

SEPULTURA. An offering to the priest for the burial of a dead body.

SEQUAMUR VESTIGIA PATRUM NOSTRORUM. Let us follow the footsteps of our fathers. Jenk. Cent. Cas.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO. A writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned, then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued. Old Nat. Brev. 163.

SEQUELA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Suit; process or prosecution. Sequela causae, the process of a cause. Cowell.

SEQUELA CURIAE. Suit of court. Cowell. See "Suit."

SEQUELA VILLANORUM. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord. Par. Ant. 216.

SEQUELS. Small allowances of meal or manufactured victuals made to the servants at a mill where corn was ground, by tenure, in Scotland. See "Thirlage."

SEQUESTER.

—In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. To renounce. Example: When a widow comes into court and disclaims having anything to do or to intermeddle with her deceased husband's estate, she is said to "sequester." Jacob.

—In Chancery Practice. To take possession under a writ of sequestration. See "Sequestration."

SEQUESTRARI FACIAS. A writ issued for the purpose of enforcing a judgment against a beneficed clergyman when a fi. fa. has been issued and returned nulla bona. It commands the bishop of the diocese to enter into the benefice, and sequester the rents, tithes, and profits until the debt is satisfied. The bishop executes the writ by issuing a sequestration. Chit. Gen. Prac. 1284; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 927; Smith, Actions (11th Ed.) 397. See "Levari Facias;" "Writ."

SEQUESTRATIO. In the civil law. The separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both parties that contend for it. It is twofold,—"voluntary," done by consent of all parties; and "necessary," when a judge orders it. Brown.

SEQUESTRATION.

—In Chancery Practice. A remedy by writ for the taking of property, and the rents and profits thereof, either to enforce a decree, 19 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 540, or to preserve the subject matter of the suit. See 3 Bl. Comm. 444. The writ issued sometimes to the sheriff, but usually to four or more commissioners.

While the remedy is now practically superseded by executions against real estate, receivership proceedings and kindred remedies, it has not been abolished or prohibited and may be resorted to whenever it is deemed necessary. 19 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 540. See 6 Fed. 766; 11 Paige (N. Y.) 603.

—In Contracts. A species of deposits which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person, who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. Code La. art. 2942; Story, Bailm. § 45. See 19 Viner, Abr. 325; 1 Vern. 58, 420; 2 Ves. Jr. 23.

—In Louisiana. A mandate of the court, ordering the sheriff, in certain cases, to take into his possession, and to keep, a thing of which another person has the possession, until after the decision of a suit, in order that it be delivered to him who shall be adjudged entitled to have the property or possession of that thing. This is what is properly called a "judicial sequestration." See 1 Mart. (La.) 79; 1 La. 439; Civ. Code La. arts. 2941, 2948.

In this acceptation, the word "sequestration" does not mean a "judicial deposit," because sequestration may exist together with the right of administration, while mere deposit does not admit it.

SEQUESTRATOR. One to whom a sequestration is made.

A depository of this kind cannot exonerate himself from the care of the thing sequestered in his hands, unless for some cause rendering it indispensable that he should resign his trust. Civ. Code La. art. 2947. See "Stakeholder."

Officers appointed by a court of chancery, and named in a writ of sequestration. As to their powers and duties, see 2 Madd. Ch. Prac. 205; Blake, Ch. Prac. 103.

SEQUESTRO HABENDO. In English ecclesiastical law. A judicial writ for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another. Upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration. Reg. Jur. 36.

SEQUI DEBET POTENTIA JUSTITIAM, non praecedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. 2 Inst. 454.

SERF. In feudal law. A term applied to a class of persons who were bound to perform very onerous duties towards others. Poth. des Personnes, pt. 1, tit. 1, a. 6, § 4.

There is this essential difference between a "serf" and a "slave:" The serf was bound simply to labor on the soil where he was born, without any right to go elsewhere without the consent of his lord, but he was free to act as he pleased in his daily action; the slave, on the contrary, is the property of his master, who may require him to act as he pleases in every respect, and who may sell him as a chattel. Lepage, c. 3, art. 2, § 2.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. An officer appointed by a legislative body, whose duties are to enforce the orders given by such bodies, generally under the warrant of its presiding officer.

SERIATIM (Lat.) In a series; severally; as, the judges delivered their opinions seriatim.

SERIOUS ILLNESS. An illness attended by danger, giving rise to apprehension; any permanent or material impairment of health. The term does not include the ordinary diseases of the country, but refers to those severe attacks which often leave a permanent injury and tend to shorten life. 24 Okla. 218, 20 Ann. Cas. 288; 85 Ill. 542; 65 Mich. 306, 32 N. W. 610.

SERJEANTIA IDEM EST QUOD SERVITUM. Serjeanty is the same as service. Co. Litt. 105.

SERJEANT OF THE MACE. In English law. An officer who attends the lord mayor of London, and the chief magistrates of other corporate towns. Holthouse.

SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. A very ancient and the most honorable order of advocates at the common law.

They were called, formerly, "countors," or "serjeant-countors," or "countors of the bench" (in the old law Latin phrase, banci narratores), and are mentioned by Matthew Paris in the life of John II., written in 1255. They are limited to fifteen in number, in addition to the judges of the courts of Westminster, who are always admitted before being advanced to the bench.

The most valuable privilege formerly enjoyed by the serjeants was the monopoly of the practice in the court of common pleas. A bill was introduced into parliament for the purpose of destroying this monopoly, in 1755, which did not pass. In 1834, a warrant under the sign manual was directed to the judges of the common pleas, commanding them to open the court to the bar at large. The order was received and complied with. In 1839, the matter was brought before the court and decided to be illegal. 10 Bing. 571; 6 Bing. N. C. 187, 232, 235. St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54, has since extended the privilege to all barristers. 3 Bl. Comm. 27, note.

SERJEANTS' INN. The inn to which the serjeants at law belonged, near Chancery Lane; formerly called "Faryndon Inn."

SERJEANTY. In English law. A species of service which cannot be due or performed from a tenant to any lord but the king, and is either grand or petit serjeanty.

SERMO INDEX ANIMI. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Coke, 118.

SERMO RELATA AD PERSONAM, intelligi debet de conditione personae. A speech relating to the person is to be understood as relating to his condition. 4 Coke, 16.

SERMONES SEMPER ACCIPIENDI sunt secundum subjectam materiam, et conditionem personarum. Language is always to be understood according to its subject matter, and the condition of the person. 4 Coke, 14.

SERVAGE. In feudal law. Where a tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, found one or more workmen for his lord's service. Tomlins.

SERVANDA EST CONSUETUDO LOCI ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed. 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 190, 219.

SERVANT. One who serves; one who serves another (termed his master), under a contract of hire; one who serves or undertakes to serve another for a stipulated consideration or wage. 2 Kent's Com. 258-261; one employed to perform an inferior and menial service, 17 Ill. App. 200; a hireling who makes a part of a man's family, employed for money, to assist in the economy of the family, or in matters connected with it. 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 353.

Bequests to servants construed. Williams Exs. 1152; 27 Bea. 226; 26 Bea. 1472; L. J. Ch. 162; 9 Hare 551; 2 Vern. 546; 16 Ves. 486; 11 L. J. Ch. 223. Servants who take priority in bankruptcy. Mont. & McA. 95, 194; 6 Jur. 898; 42 L. J. Bank. 49; 21 W. R. 523.

SERVANT IN HUSBANDRY. A person, whether male or female, whose chief employment is in works of husbandry. 3 E. & E. 549; L. J. M. C. 84; 23 L. J. M. C. 138.

SERVI. Bondsmen, or servile tenants. They were of four sorts: (1) Such as sold themselves for a livelihood; (2) debtors sold because they were unable to pay their debts; (3) captives in war, retained and employed as perfect slaves; (4) nativi, servants born as such, solely belonging to the lord. There were also said to be servi testamentales those which were afterwards called "covenant servants." Cowell.

SERVI REDEMPTIONE. Criminal slaves in the time of Henry I. 1 Kemble, Sax. 197 (1849).

SERVICE.

—In Feudal Law. That duty which the tenant owed to his lord by reason of his fee or estate.

The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base, and in respect of their quantity, and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

—In Civil Law. A servitude.

—In Practice. The execution of a writ or process. Thus, to serve a writ of capias signifies to arrest a defendant under the process (Kirby [Conn.] 48; 2 Aik. [Vt.] 338; 11 Mass. 181); to serve a summons is to deliver a copy of it at the house of the party, or to deliver it to him personally, or to read it to him. Notices and other papers are served by delivering the same at the house of the party, or to him in person.

Service of process is either (1) actual, or (2) constructive; constructive service being such as is by law conclusively presumed to give notice, e. g., by publication or posting.

Actual service is either (a) personal, by actual delivery of the process to the person to be served, or (b) substituted, being by such a disposition as the law deems to be the equivalent of personal service, e. g., by leaving at his dwelling house.

When the service of a writ is prevented by the act of the party on whom it is to be served, it will, in general, be sufficient if the officer do everything in his power to serve it. 1 Man. & G. 238.

SERVICE OF AN HEIR. By the former law of Scotland, before an heir could regularly acquire a right to the ancestor's estate, he had to be served heir. See Bell, Dict.

SERVICE, SECULAR. Worldly service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical. Cowell.

SERVICES FONCIERS. These are in French law the easements of English law.

SERVIDUMBRE. In Spanish law. A servitude. The right and use which one man has in the buildings and estates of another, to use them for the benefit of his own. Las Partidas, 3. 31. 1.

SERVIENS-AD-CLAVAM. A serjeant-at-mace.

SERVIENS AD LEGEM. Sergeant-at-law.

SERVIENS DOMINI REGIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. King's serjeant; a public officer, who acted sometimes as the sheriff's deputy, and had also judicial powers. Bracton, fols. 145b, 150b, 330, 358.

SERVIENT. In civil law. A term applied to an estate or tenement by or in respect of which a servitude is due to another estate or tenement. See "Easement."

SERVILE EST EXPILATIONIS CRIMEN; sola innocentia libera. The crime of theft is slavish; innocence alone is free. 2 Inst. 573.

SERVITIA PERSONALIA SEQUUNTUR personam. Personal services follow the person. 2 Inst. 374; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 11, § 1.

SERVITIIS ACQUIETANDIS. A judicial writ for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services. Reg. Jur. 27.

SERVITIUM. In feudal and old English law. The duty of obedience and performance which a tenant was bound to render to his lord by reason of his fee. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 65a.

SERVITIUM FEODALE ET PRAEDIALE. A personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 16.

SERVITIUM FORINSECUM. A service due, not to the chief lord, but to the king.

SERVITIUM, IN LEGE ANGLIAE, REGULARITER accipitur pro servitio quod per tenentes dominis suis debetur ratione feodi sui. Service, by the law of England, means the service which is due from the tenants to the lords by reason of their fee. Co. Litt. 65.

SERVITIUM INTRINSECUM. The ordinary service due the chief lord from his tenants.

SERVITIUM LIBERUM. A service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called "liberi homines," and distinguished from vassals, as was their service, for they were not bound to any of the base services of plowing the lord's land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the court, etc. It was called, also, "servitium liberum armorum."

SERVITIUM MILITARE. Knight service; military service. 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

SERVITIUM REGALE. Royal service, or the rights and prerogatives that, within a royal manor, belong to the lord of the same, which are generally reckoned to be the following, viz.: Power of judicature, in matters of property, and of life and death, in felonies and murder, a right to waifs and strays; assessments; minting of money; and assize of bread, beer, and weights and measures. Cowell.

SERVITIUM SCUTI. Service of the shield; that is, knight service.

SERVITIUM SOKAE. Service of the plow; that is, socage.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. Such servants or messengers of the marshal belonging to the king's bench as were heretofore sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court, being now called "tipstaves." Blount; 2 Hen. IV. c. 23.

SERVITUDE.

—In Civil Law. The subjection of one person to another person, or of a person to a thing, or of a thing to a person, or of a thing to a thing.

A right which subjects a land or tenement to some service for the use of another land or tenement which belongs to another master. Domat, Civ. Law (Cushing Ed.) § 1018.

(1) A mixed servitude is the subjection of persons to things, or things to persons.

(2) A natural servitude is one which arises in consequence of the natural condition or situation of the soil.

(3) A personal servitude is the subjection of one person to another. If it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do. This right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi contracts. Lois des Bat. p. 1, c. 1, art. 1.

(4) A real or predial servitude is a charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another proprietor. Code La. art. 643. When used without any adjunct, the word "servitude" means a real or predial servitude. Lois des Bat. p. 1, c. 1. Real servitudes are divided into rural and urban.

(a) Rural servitudes are those which are due by an estate to another estate, such as the right of passage over the serving estate, or that which owes the servitude, or to draw water from it, or to water cattle there, or to take coal, lime, and wood from it, and the like.

(b) Urban servitudes are those which are established over a building for the convenience of another, such as the right of resting the joists in the wall of the serving building, of opening windows which overlook the serving estate, and the like. Dalloz.

This term is used as a translation of the Latin term servitus in the French and Scotch law (Dalloz; Paterson, Comp.), and by many common-law writers (3 Kent, Comm. 434; Washb. Easem.), and in the Civil Code of Louisiana. "Service" is used by Wood, Taylor, Harris, Cowper, and Cushing in his translation of Domat. Much of the common-law doctrine of easements is closely analogous to, and probably in part derived from, the civil-law doctrine of servitudes.

—In Modern Law. Real servitudes are known as "easements," the term "servitude" being used only in the sense of the burden imposed by an easement.

SERVITUS (Lat.) In Roman law. Servitude; slavery; a state of bondage; a disposition of the law of nations by which, against common right, one man has been subjected to the dominion of another. Inst. 1. 2. 3; Bracton, 4b; Co. Litt. 116.

A service or servitude; a burden imposed by law, or the agreement of parties, upon one estate for the advantage of another, or for the benefit of another person than the owner.

Servitus actus, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus altius non tollendi, a servitude preventing the owner of a house from building higher than his neighbor. Inst. 2. 3. 4; Paterson, Comp.

Servitus aquae ducendae, a right of leading water to one's own land over that of another. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus aquae educendae, a right of conducting water from one's own land unto a neighbor's. Dig. 8. 3. 29.

Servitus aquae hauriendae, a right of drawing water from another's spring or well. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus cloacae mittendae, a right of having a sewer through a neighbor's estate. Dig. 8. 1. 7.

Servitus fumi immitendi, a right of conducting smoke or vapor through a neighbor's chimney or over his ground. Dig. 8. 5. 8.

Servitus itineris, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. This includes a servitus actus. Inst. 2. 3.

Servitus luminum, a right to have an open place for receiving light into a chamber or other room. Domat, 1. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 4.

Servitus oneris ferendi, a servitude of supporting a neighbor's building.

Servitus pascendi, a right of pasturing one's cattle on another's land. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam, a right of driving one's cattle on a neighbor's land to water.

Servitus praedii rustici, a rural servitude.

Servitus praedii urbani, an urban servitude.

Servitus praediorum, a servitude on one estate for the benefit of another. See "Praedia."

Servitus projiciendi, a right of building a projection into the open space belonging to a neighbor. Dig. 8. 2. 2.

Servitus prospectus, a right of prospect. Dig. 8. 2. 15. This may be either to give one a free prospect over his neighbor's land or to prevent a neighbor from having a prospect over one's own land. Domat, 1. 1. 6.

Servitus stillicidii, a right of having the water drip from the eaves of one's house upon a neighbor's house or ground.

Servitus tigni immitendi, a right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall. Inst. 2. 3. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

Servitus viae, a right of way on foot or horseback, or with a loaded beast or wagon, over a neighbor's estate. Inst. 2. 3.

See, generally, Inst. 2. 3; Dig. 8. 2; Dict. de Jur.; Domat, Civ. Law; Bell, Dict.; Washb. Easem.

SERVITUS EST CONSTITUTIO JURE gentium qua quis domino alieno contra naturam subicitur. Slavery is an institution by the law of nations, by which a man is subjected to the dominion of another, contrary to nature. Inst. 1. 3. 2; Co. Litt. 116.

SERVITUS NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR. A servitude not to hinder lights; the right of having one's lights or windows unobstructed or darkened by a neighbor's building, etc. Inst. 2. 3. 4.

SERVITUS NE PROSPECTUS OFFENDATUR. A servitude not to obstruct one's prospect. Dig. 8. 2. 15.

SERVITUS TIGNI IMMITTENDI. The servitude of letting in a beam; the right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall. Inst. 2. 3. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

SERVITUS VIAE. The servitude or right of way; the right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

SERVUS. A slave.

SESS, or ASSESS. Rate or tax.

SESSIO. A sitting; a session. Sessio parliamenti, the sitting of parliament. Cowell.

SESSION. The time during which a legislative body, a court, or other assembly sits for the transaction of business; as, a session of congress, which commences on the day appointed by the constitution, and ends when congress finally adjourns before the commencement of the next session; the session of a court, which commences at the day appointed by law, and ends when the court finally rises. A term.

SESSION COURT. See "Court of Session."

SESSION, GREAT, OF WALES. A court which was abolished by St. 1 Wm. IV. c. 70. The proceedings now issue out of the courts at Westminster, and two of the judges of the superior courts hold the circuits in Wales and Cheshire, as in other English counties.

SESSIONS. A sitting of justices in court upon their commission, or by virtue of their appointment, and most commonly for the trial of criminal cases. The title of several courts in England and the United States, chiefly those of criminal jurisdiction.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In English law. Sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of the powers which are confided to them as such.

(1) Petty sessions (or petit sessions) are sittings held by one or more justices for the trial of minor offenses, admitting to bail prisoners accused of felony, and the like purposes.

When sitting for purposes of preliminary inquiry, the public cannot claim admittance; but it is otherwise when sitting for purposes of adjudication.

(2) Special sessions are sittings of two or more justices on a particular occasion for the exercise of some given branch of their authority, upon reasonable notice given to the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which they are convened. See St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33.

The counties are distributed into divisions, and authority given by various statutes to the justices acting for the several divisions to transact different descriptions of business, such as licensing ale-houses, or appointing overseers of the poor, surveyors of the highways, etc., at special sessions. 3 Steph. Comm. 43, 44.

(3) General sessions of the peace are courts of record, holden before the justices, whereof one is of the quorum, for execution of the general authority given to the justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament.

The only description of general sessions now usually held is the court of general quarter sessions of the peace; but in the county of Middlesex, besides the four quarter sessions, four general sessions are held in the intervals, and original intermediate sessions occasionally take place. They may be called by any two justices in the jurisdiction, one being of the quorum, or by the custos rotulorum and one justice, but not by one justice or the custos rotulorum alone.

(4) General quarter sessions of the peace. See "Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace."

SESSIONAL ORDERS. Certain resolutions which are agreed to by both houses at the commencement of every session of the English parliament, and have relation to the business and convenience thereof; but they are not intended to continue in force beyond the session in which they are adopted. They are principally of use as directing the order of business. Brown.

SET. This word appears to be nearly synonymous with "lease." A lease of mines is frequently termed a "mining set." Brown.

SET ASIDE. To annul; to make void; as to set aside an award.

When proceedings are irregular, they may be set aside on motion of the party whom they injuriously affect.

SET LINE. A line with baited hooks fastened to it set or anchored for taking fish; a line to which a number of baited hooks are attached and which supported by a buoy, is extended on the surface of the water. 3 Johns Univ. Cyc., 390; 69 Vt. 413; 4 Encyc. Dic., 4216.

SET OF EXCHANGE. The different parts of a bill of exchange, taken together. Each part is a perfect instrument by itself; but the parts are numbered successively, and upon payment of any one, the others become useless. See Chit. Bills (1836 Ed.) 175; Pars. Notes & Bills.

SET-OFF. In practice. A demand, growing out of a distinct transaction, which a defendant makes against the plaintiff in the suit for the purpose of liquidating the whole or a part of his claim. See 7 Fla. 329.

A set-off was unknown to the common law, according to which mutual debts were distinct, and inextinguishable except by actual payment or release. 1 Rawle (Pa.) 293; Babington, Set-Off, 1.

St. 2 Geo. II. c. 22, which has been generally adopted in the United States, with some modifications, in cases of mutual debts, however, allowed the defendant to set his debt against the other, either by pleading it in bar, or giving it in evidence, when proper notice had been given of such intention, under the general issue. The statute, being made for the benefit of the defendant, is not compulsory (8 Watts [Pa.] 39); the defendant may waive his right, and bring a cross action against the plaintiff (2 Campb. 594; 5 Taunt. 148; 9 Watts [Pa.] 179).

It seems, however, that in some cases of intestate estates and of insolvent estates, perhaps owing to the peculiar wording of the law, the statute has been held to operate on the rights of the parties before action brought or an act done by either of them. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 293; 3 Bin. (Pa.) 135; Bac. Abr. "Bankrupt" (K). See 7 Gray (Mass.) 191, 425.

Set-off takes place only in actions on contracts for the payment of money, as, assumpsit, debt, and covenant. A set-off is not allowed in actions arising ex delicto; as upon the case, trespass, replevin, or detinue. Buller, N. P. 181; 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 162.

The matters which may be set off may be mutual liquidated debts or damages; but unliquidated damages cannot be set off. 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 560; 34 Pa. St. 239; 34 Ala. (N. S.) 659; 20 Tex. 31; 2 Head (Tenn.) 467; 2 Metc. (Ky.) 143; 3 Iowa 163; 8 Iowa 325; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; 8 Conn. 325; 6 Halst. (N. J.) 397; 5 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 232. The statutes refer only to mutual unconnected debts; for at common law, when the nature of the employment, transaction, or dealings necessarily constitutes an account consisting of receipts and payments, debts and credits, the balance only is considered to be the debt, and therefore in an action it is not necessary in such cases either to plead or give notice of set-off. 4 Burrows, 2221.

Distinguished from counterclaim and recoupment. Counterclaim is a term of statutory origin, and includes both set-off and recoupment, and something more. It embraces all sorts of claims which a defendant may have against a plaintiff in the nature of a cross action or demand, or for which a cross or separate action would lie. 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84.

In recoupment, the defendant's claim must arise from the same transaction as the plaintiff's, and in this it is distinguished from set-off, which must arise in a distinct claim. See "Recoupment."

SETTER. In Scotch law. The grantor of a tack or lease. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 153.

SETTLEMENT. A residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper.

It is obtained in various ways, to wit: By birth; by the legal settlement of the father, in the case of minor children; by marriage; by continued residence; by the payment of requisite taxes; by the lawful exercise of a public office; by hiring and service for a specified time; by serving an apprenticeship; and perhaps some others, which depend upon the local statutes of the different states. See 1 Bl. Comm. 363; 1 Doug. 9; 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 103, 565; 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 179.

—In Contracts. A determination by agreement. 113 Iowa 211. An agreement by which two or more persons who have dealings together so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain the balance due from one to the other; payment in full.

The conveyance of an estate for the benefit of some person or persons.

See "Marriage Settlement."

SETTLEMENT, ACT OF. See "Act of Settlement."

SETTLEMENT, DEED OF. A deed made for the purpose of settling property, i. e., arranging the mode and extent of the enjoyment thereof. The party who settles property is called the "settlor;" and usually his wife and children or his creditors or his near relations are the beneficiaries taking interests under the settlement.

SETTLEMENT, EQUITY OF. See "Equity to a Settlement."

SETTLING DAY. The day on which transactions for the "account" are made up on the English stock exchange. In consols, they are monthly; in other investments, twice in the month.

SEVER. In practice. To separate; to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other codefendants.

SEVERAL. Separate; distinct. A several agreement or covenant is one entered into by two or more persons separately, each binding himself for the whole; a several action is one in which two or more persons are separately charged; a several inheritance is one conveyed so as to descend or come to two persons separately by moieties. "Several" is usually opposed to "joint."

SEVERAL ACTIONS. Separate actions, the opposite of "joint actions," in which the plaintiffs combine their causes. See "Joinder of Actions."

SEVERAL COUNTS. See "Count;" "Indictment."

SEVERAL COVENANT. A covenant by two or more, separately; a covenant made so as to bind the parties to it severally or individually.

SEVERAL DEMISES. Prior to the common-law procedure acts of 1852-1860, it was necessary, in England, that the plaintiff in ejectment should make a demise, and that he should have the legal estate in him for that purpose. Wherefore, in case of any doubt whether the legal estate was in A., or in B., or in C., it was usual, in framing the declaration, to insert a demise by each, and the declaration was then said to contain several demises; but now no demise at all is necessary to an action of ejectment. See "Ejectment."

SEVERAL FISHERY. A right to fish in private water, either exclusively, or in conjunction with the owner of the soil. 1 Kent, Comm. 410, and note.

SEVERAL INHERITANCE. An inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moieties, etc.

SEVERAL TAIL. An entail severally to two; as, if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten. Here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety. Cowell.

SEVERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

SEVERALLY. To separate is to disunite, to divide, to disconnect, to sever. 9 Ill. App. 370.

SEVERALTY, ESTATE IN. An estate which is held by the tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 179; Cruise, Dig. 479, 480.

SEVERANCE. The separation of a part of a thing from another; for example, the separation of machinery from a mill is a severance, and in that case the machinery, which, while annexed to the mill, was real estate, becomes by the severance personalty, unless such severance be merely temporary. 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587.

—In Pleading. When an action is brought in the name of several plaintiffs, in which the plaintiffs must of necessity join, and one or more of the persons so named do not appear, or make default after appearance, the other may have judgment of severance, or, as is technically called, judgment ad sequendum solum.

But in personal actions, with the exception of those by executors, and of detinue for charters, there can be no summons and severance. Co. Litt. 139.

After severance, the party severed can never be mentioned in the suit, nor derive any advantage from it.

When there are several defendants, each of them may use such plea as he may think proper for his own defense; and they may join in the same plea, or sever, at their discretion (Co. Litt. 303a), except, perhaps, in the case of dilatory pleas (Hob. 245, 250). But when the defendants have once united in the plea, they cannot afterwards sever at the rejoinder, or other later stage of the pleading. See, generally, Brooke, Abr. "Summ. and Sev.;" 2 Rolle, 488; Archb. Civ. Pl. 59.

—Of Estates. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed.

A severance may be effected in various ways, namely: By partition, which is either voluntary or compulsory; by alienation of one of the joint tenants, which turns the estate into a tenancy in common; by the purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants, so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only. Comyn, Dig. "Estates by Grant" (K 5); 1 Bin. (Pa.) 175.

SEWAGE. That which passes through a sewer. A secondary meaning is derived from the usual character of the contents of a sewer and as used in that sense the word signifies the refuse and foul matter solid or liquid, which it so carried off. 67 Conn. 494.

SEWER (Law Lat. sewera, severa). A fresh-water trench compassed in on both sides with a bank. Callis, Sewers (80) 99. Callis calls it "a small current or little river;" "a diminutive of a river;" "a common public stream." Id. 100. A passage to carry water into the sea or a river. Cowell. A ditch or trench carried through marshy places, to carry off the water. Spelman.

In its modern and more usual sense, a sewer means an underground or covered channel used for the drainage of two or more separate buildings, as opposed to a "drain," which is a channel used for carrying off the drainage of one building or set of buildings in one curtilage. See "Drain" (2).

SEXTANS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing two unciae; the proportion of two-twelfths, or one-sixth. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note.

SEXTERY LANDS. Lands given to a church or religious house for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan. Cowell.

SEXTUS DECRETALIUM. The sixth decretal.

SEYSINA. (L. Lat.) In old English law. Seisin; possession of lands; or of a freehold estate in lands. Bract. fol. 38b, 39.

SHACK, COMMON OF. The right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field to turn out their cattle after harvest to feed promiscuously in such field.

SHALL

—British Cases. Great care is to be employed in using or construing this word. Its various meanings range under two general classes according as it is used, as implying futurity; or as implying a mandate, or giving permission or direction.

—Futurity. If something is agreed to be done if or when something else "shall" happen, this contemplates futurity. Past occurrences will not satisfy the condition precedent. 3 Drew. 617; 25 L. J. Ch. 850; 27 L. T. O. S. 289; 29 L. J. Ch. 911; 7 W. R. 135; 5 Jur. N. S. 56.

"Shall be born," in the absence of a context, are words of futurity; and, in a will, mean persons born after its date. 50 L. J. P. C. 45; 6 App. Ca. 471.

The phrase, in a divesting clause, if done of property "shall become bankrupt" seems "to mean, simply being bankrupt," 29 L. J. Ch. 843; and it is immaterial whether the bankruptcy has happened before, or shall have happened after, the making of the instrument. 1 D. G. & S. 282; 16 L. J. Ch. 245. So, too, in an independent testamentary gift to issue of a deceased member of a class, the words "shall die" or "shall happen to die" do not necessarily point to a future death, so as inevitably to exclude the issue of a member of the class who may have died before the date of the will. 30 L. J. Ch. 789; 1 Dr. & Sm. 497; 1 Mer. 320; 2 Jarm. 771. So "a surrender to such uses as the testator 'shall' by will appoint, applied to a will antecedently executed, it being considered that the surrender referred to that will which should be in existence at testator's death." 1 Jarm. 58; 1 T. R. 435n. See May.

—Whether Mandatory or Directory. In its ordinary signification, "shall" is mandatory and not permissive. It is to be so construed unless by the context it appears that a different meaning was intended or when it is necessary to effectuate the chief purpose of the statute. 122 N. E. 268 (Mass.); 217 Mass. 430; 106 N. E. 618.

—"Shall" and "May." "Shall" and "May" are often held to be convertible terms in ascertaining legislative intention. 108 Ill. App. 614, 615; 77 Ill. 271; 184 Ill. 597.

As where, in a statute, no right or benefit to anyone depends upon its imperative use it may be held to be directory. 249 Ill. 294.

The word has not often been construed as "may," and as importing only power or authority. 153 Mass. 200.

—Mandatory. Whenever a statute declares that a thing "shall" be done, the natural and proper meaning is that a peremptory mandate is enjoined. But where the thing has reference to the time or formality of completing any public act, not being a step in a litigation, or accusation; or, of creating an executed contract whereof the benefit has been, or but for the act of the beneficiary might be, received, the enactment will generally be regarded as merely directory, unless there be words making the thing done void if not done in accordance with the prescribed requirements.

The word "shall" has been held mandatory as regards time for appeals from justice's courts, 4 C. B. N. S. 264; 27 L. J. C. P. 224; 29 L. J. M. C. 108; 31 L. J. M. C. 92; except when the appeal is hindered by the offices of the court being closed, L. R. 2 Q. B. 410; 9 B. & S. 27, note; or by respondent not being found, 27 L. J. M. C. 273; E. B. & E. 469. As regards time for appeal from county court, 27 L. J. Q. B. 319; 51 L. J. Q. B. 110. As regards application for special case, 19 Q. B. D. 168; 56 L. J. M. C. 122; 57 L. T. 368; 21 Q. B. D. 188; 36 W. R. 800. As regards requirements for creating mortgage of a ship, 29 L. J. Ch. 827. As regards contracts being under seal, 27 L. J. C. P. 314; 51 L. J. Q. B. 292; 16 Q. B. D. 446. As regards provisions for arbitration, 57 L. J. Q. B. 181; 36 W. R. 468; 2 L. J. Ex. 150. As regards sealing and signing by directors of contracts by railway and dock companies, 18 L. J. Ex. 345; 5 Ex. 442; 21 L. J. Ex. 117. As regards building contracts, 18 L. J. Ex. 282.

—Directory. In the following cases the word "shall" was sustained as being directory merely as regards the time fixed for the appointment of overseers. 2 Stra. 1123; 10 L. J. M. C. 166; 9 Dowl. 1001; and as regards the time for the election of guardians for the Borough of Norwich, 1 B. & Ad. 310; for appointment of surveyors of highways, 4 East 142; for holding quarter sessions, 5 L. J. O. S. M. C. 95; 7 B. & C. 6.

As regards the transmission of a conviction by justices to the next quarter sessions. 13 Q. B. 216; 18 L. J. M. C. 78.

As regards the time and manner of making out the lists of persons entitled to vote, or the time when the lists of voters are to be signed and delivered to the sheriff or returning officer. 25 L. J. C. P. 141; 17 C. B. 334; 30 L. J. C. P. 33; 9 C. B. N. S.

1; 55 L. J. Q. B. 12; 16 Q. B. D. 244; 54 L. T. 183; 50 J. P. 631.

As regards stamping the official mark on the back of a ballot paper. 55 L. J. Q. B. 273; 16 Q. B. D. 739; 54 L. T. 651; 34 W. R. 609; 50 J. P. 519.

As regards consent of father to the marriage of a minor. 8 B. & C. 29; 6 L. J. O. S. M. C. 67; 2 M. & R. 230.

As regards the questions to be asked a recruit. 16 Q. B. 48; 20 L. J. Q. B. 73.

As regards the particulars to be stated in a doctor's certificate for the detention of a lunatic. 16 L. J. M. C. 18; 9 Q. B. 651.

As regards the formalities prior to a sale by a bankruptcy assignee. 2 L. J. Ex. 179; 1 Cr. & M. 450; 3 Tyr. 339.

As regards the provisions in a private act as to the mode of keeping the register of proprietors in an incorporated company. 1 M. & G. 448; 2 Ib. 606.

As regards the countersigning, by secretary, of a bill or note of a joint-stock company. 9 C. B. 574; 19 L. J. C. P. 305; 1 H. & N. 165; 25 L. J. Ex. 348.

SHAM PLEA. One which is palpably false in fact, though it be good in form.

SHARE. A portion of anything. Sometimes shares are equal; at other times they are unequal.

In companies and corporations, the whole of the capital stock is usually divided into equal portions, called "shares." See "Capital Stock." The proportion which descends to one of several children from his ancestor is called a "share." The term "share and share alike" signifies in equal proportions.

SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE. In equal shares or proportions.

SHARE WARRANT. A share warrant to bearer is a warrant or certificate under the seal of the company, stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to a certain number or amount of fully paid up shares or stock.

SHARPING CORN. A customary gift of corn, which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plow irons, harrow tines, etc. Blount.

SHAVE. Sometimes used to denote the act of obtaining the property of another by oppression and extortion; but it also denotes the buying of existing notes and other securities for money, at a discount. 2 Denio (N. Y.) 293, 300.

SHEADING. A riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tine-wald Court or annual convention. King, Isle of Man, 7.

SHEEP SILVER. A service turned into money, which was paid because anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN. "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, 'the heirs' are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." 1 Coke, 104.

This rule has been the subject of much comment. It is given by Mr. Preston (1 Prest. Est. pp. 263-419) as follows: "When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." See 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282; Harg. Tr. 489, 551; 2 Kent, Comm. 214.

If the limitation be to "heirs of the body," he takes an estate tail; if to "heirs" generally, a fee simple. 1 Day (Conn.) 299; 2 Yeates (Pa.) 410.

It does not apply where the ancestor's estate is equitable, and that of the heirs legal. 1 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 419.

SHEPWAY, COURT OF. A court held before the lord warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lay from the mayor and jurors of each port to the lord warden in this court, and thence to the queen's bench. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48.

SHEREFFE. The body of the lordship of Caerdiff in South Wales. Pow. Hist. Wal. 123.

SHERIFF (Sax. scyre, shire, reva, keeper). A county officer representing the executive or administrative power of the state within his county.

The office is said by Camden to have been created by Alfred when he divided England into counties; but Lord Coke is of opinion that it is of still greater antiquity, and that it existed in the time of the Romans, being the deputy of the earl (comes), to whom the custody of the shire was originally committed, and hence known as vice comes. Camden, 156; Co. Litt. 168a; Dalton, Sheriff, 5.

The office was anciently of great dignity, and conferred considerably judicial power. 1 Bl. Comm. 117; 3 Bl. Comm. 80.

In the United States, he is the chief peace officer of the county, is the custodian of the county jail, and executes the civil and criminal process and mandates of the courts within his county.

SHERIFF CLERK. The clerk of the sheriff's court in Scotland.

SHERIFF DEPUTE. In Scotch law. The principal sheriff of a county, who is also a judge.

SHERIFF GELD. A rent formerly paid by a sheriff, and it is prayed that the sheriff in his account may be discharged thereof. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III.

SHERIFF TOOTH. In English law. A tenure by the service of providing entertainment for the sheriff at his county courts; a common tax, formerly levied for the sheriff's diet. Wharton.

SHERIFF'S COURT. In Scotch law. A court having an extensive civil and criminal jurisdiction.

Its judgments and sentences are subject to review by the court of session and court of justiciary. Alis. Prac. 25; Paterson, Comp. 941, note.

SHERIFF'S COURT IN LONDON. A tribunal having cognizance of personal actions under the London (city) small debts act of 1852 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 157, § 3). See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 121; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 127; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, § 99; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157.

The sheriff's court in London is one of the chief of the courts of limited and local jurisdiction in London. 3 Steph. Comm. 449, note (1); 3 Bl. Comm. 80, note (j).

SHERIFF'S JURY. In practice. A jury composed of no determinate number, but which may be more or less than twelve, summoned by the sheriff for the purposes of an inquisition or inquest of office. 3 Bl. Comm. 258.

SHERIFF'S OFFICERS. Bailiffs, who are either bailiffs of hundreds or bound bailiffs.

SHERIFF'S TOURN. A court of record in England, held twice each year, within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, before the sheriff, in different parts of the county.

It is, indeed, only the turn or circuit of the sheriff to keep a court leet in each respective hundred. It is the great court leet of the county, as the county court is the court baron; for out of this, for the ease of the sheriff, was taken the court leet or view of frank pledge (q. v.) 4 Steph. Comm. 339; 4 Bl. Comm. 273.

SHERIFFALTY. The office of sheriff.

SHERIFFWICK. The jurisdiction of a sheriff. Doctor & Stud. dial 2, c. 42, p. 232. Called, in modern law, "bailwick." The office of a sheriff. Finch, Law, bk. 4, c. 25.

SHERRERIE. A word used by the authorities of the Roman Church, to specify contemptuously the technical parts of the law, as administered by nonclerical lawyers. Bac. Abr.

SHEWER. In the practice of the English high court, when a view by a jury is ordered, persons are named by the court to show the property to be viewed, and are hence called "shewers." There is usually a shewer on behalf of each party. Archb. Prac. 339 et seq.

SHEWING. In English law. To be quit of attachment in a court, in plaints shewed and not avowed. Obsolete.

SHIFTING CLAUSE. A shifting clause in a settlement is a clause by which some other mode of devolution is substituted for that primarily prescribed. Examples of shifting clauses are: The ordinary name and arms clause, and the clause of less frequent occurrence, by which a settled estate is destined as the foundation of a second family, in the event of the elder branch becoming otherwise enriched. 3 Dav. Conv. 273. These shifting clauses take effect under the statute of uses.

SHIFTING USE. Such a use as takes effect in derogation of some other estate, and is limited expressly by the deed, or is allowed to be created by some person named in the deed. Gilb. Uses (Sugden Ed.) 152, note; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 284.

For example, a feoffment in fee is made to the use of W. and his heirs till A. pays £40 to W., and then to the use of A. and his heirs. A very common application is in the case of marriage settlements. Williams, Real Prop. 243. The doctrine of shifting uses furnished a means of evading the principle of law that a fee could not be limited after a fee. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. 284 et seq.; Williams, Real Prop. 242; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 452; 1 Vern. 402; 1 Edw. Ch. 34; Plowd. 25; Poll. 65. See "Use."

SHIP. A vessel employed in navigation; for example, the terms the ship's papers, the ship's husband, shipwreck, and the like, are employed whether the vessel referred to be a brig, a schooner, a sloop, or a three-masted vessel.

A vessel with three masts, employed in navigation. 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 530; Weskett, Ins. 514. The boats and rigging (2 Marsh. Ins. 727), together with the anchors, masts, cables, and such-like objects, are considered as part of the ship (Pardessus, note 599; Dig. 22. 2. 44).

SHIP BREAKING. In Scotch law. The offense of breaking into a ship. Arkley, 461.

SHIP BROKER. One who transacts business relating to vessels and their employment between the owners of vessels and merchants who send cargoes.

SHIP DAMAGE. In the charter parties with the English East India Company these words occur. Their meaning is, damage from negligence, insufficiency, or bad stowage in the ship. Doug. 272; Abb. Shipp. 204.

SHIP MASTER. The captain or master of a ship. He controls and manages the ship and cargo, and represents the owners for certain purposes.

SHIP MONEY. A tax levied on ports, towns, cities, boroughs, and counties to provide money for equipping the navy. It existed in England, and was finally abolished in the reign of Charles I. after he had attempted to restore it. This attempt, and Hampden's resistance, was one cause which led to the king's death.

SHIP'S HUSBAND. In maritime law. An agent appointed by the owner of a ship, and invested with authority to make the requisite repairs, and attend to the management, equipment, and other concerns of the ship. He is the general agent of the owners in relation to the ship, and may be appointed in writing or orally. He is usually, but not necessarily, a part owner. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 97. He must see to the proper outfit of the vessel in the repairs adequate to the voyage, and in the tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship; must have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy; must see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores according to the necessities of the voyage; must see to the regularity of the clearances from the custom house, and the regularity of the registry; must settle the contracts, and provide for the payment of the furnishings which are requisite to the performance of those duties; must enter into proper charter parties, or engage the vessel for general freight under the usual conditions, and settle for freight and adjust averages with the merchant; and must preserve the proper certificates, surveys, and documents, in case of future disputes with insurers and freighters, and to keep regular books of the ship. Bell, Comm. § 428; 4 Barn. & Adol. 375; 13 East, 538; 1 Younge & C. 326; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 144; 16 Conn. 12. These are his general powers; but of course they may be limited or enlarged by the owners; and it may be observed that, without special authority, he cannot borrow money generally for the use of the ship, though, as above observed, he may settle the accounts for furnishings, or grant bills for them, which form debts against the concern, whether or not he has funds in his hands with which he might have paid them. 1 Bell, Comm. § 499. Although he may, in general, levy the freight which is by the bill of lading payable on the delivery of the goods, it would seem that he would not have power to take bills for the freight, and give up the possession of the lien over the cargo, unless it has been so settled by the charter party.

He cannot insure or bind the owners for premiums. 17 Me. 147; 2 Maule & S. 485; 13 East, 274; 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 595; 11 Pick. (Mass.) 85; 5 Burrows, 2627; Paley, Ag. (Lloyd Ed.) 23, note 8; Abb. Shipp. pt. 1, c. 3, § 2; Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 8, § 2; Livermore, Ag. 72, 73.

As the power of the master to enter into contracts of affreightment is superseded in the port of the owners, so it is by the presence of the ship's husband, or the knowledge of the contracting parties that a ship's husband has been appointed. 2 Bell, Comm. 199. The ship's husband, as such, has no lien on the vessel or proceeds. 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 427.

SHIP'S PAPERS. The papers or documents required for the manifestation of the ownership and national character of a vessel and her cargo, and to show her compliance with the revenue and navigation laws of the country to which she belongs.

The want of these papers or any of them renders the character of a vessel suspicious (2 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 14); and the use of false or simulated papers frequently subjects the vessel to confiscation (15 East, 46, 70, 364; Molloy, bk. 2, c. 2, § 9), or avoids an insurance unless the insurer has stipulated that she may carry such papers (Id.)

A ship's papers are of two sorts: First, those required by the law of the particular country to which the ship belongs; as, the certificate of registry or of enrollment, the license, the crew list, the shipping articles, clearance, etc.; and, second, such as are required by the law of nations to be on board of neutral ships as evidence of their title to that character; as the sea brief or letter, or passport, the proofs of property in the ship, as bills of sale, etc., the charter party, the bills of lading, the invoices, the crew list or muster roll, the log book, and the bill of health. McCulloch, Comm. Dict. "Ship's Papers." See Glenn, Int. Law, Append. p. 365, for a list of ship's papers required by the laws of various nations.

SHIPPER. The consignor of goods to a ship or common carrier for transportation.

SHIPPING. A generic term for all marine craft, and for the things and matters which are incident to it.

SHIPPING ARTICLES. An agreement, in writing or print, between the master and seamen or mariners on board his vessel (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners), declaring the voyage or voyages, term or terms of time, for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. It is also required that at the foot of every such contract there shall be a memorandum, in writing, of the day and the hour on which each seaman or mariner who shall so ship and subscribe shall render himself on board to begin the voyage agreed upon.

SHIPWRECK. The loss of a vessel at sea, either by being swallowed up by the waves, by running against another vessel or thing at sea, or on the coast.

SHIRE. In English law. A district or division of country. Co. Litt. 50a.

SHIRE CLERK. He that keeps the county court.

SHIRE GEMOT (spelled also, scire gemote, scir gemot, scyre gemote, shire mote; from the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly).

The Saxon county court.

It was held twice a year before the bishop and alderman of the shire, and was the principal court. Spelman. "Gemotum;" Cunningham, "Shire;" Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 28.

SHIRE MAN, or SCYRE MAN. Before the Conquest, the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined.

SHOP. A building in which goods and merchandise are sold at retail; where a retail trade is carried on; a blacksmith's shop is rather a warehouse than a shop. 7 J. P. 132. See "Stores".

SHOPA. In old records, a shop. Cowell.

SHORE (Lat. litus, littus). Land on the margin of the sea, or a lake, or river. That space of land which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; the space between high and low water marks. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1. c. 6; Angell, Tide Waters, 67, c. 3; 8 Mich. 27. See "Seashore." The shore of a fresh water river is where the land and water ordinarily meet. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 547. But this is more properly called the "bank" (ripa). A river in which the tide does not ebb and flow has no "shores," in the legal sense of the term. Walworth, C., 4 Hill (N. Y.) 375. And a lake without tides cannot properly be said to have a shore. Angell, Tide Waters, ubi supra. And see 3 Grat. (Va.) 655; 13 How. (U. S.) 391.

SHORE LINE. The term "shore line," in natural fresh water rivers, is usually used as meaning low water mark. 224 Ill. 57.

SHORT CAUSE. In English chancery practice, and in some of the United States, a cause the trial of which will take but a short time, and which may accordingly be put on a special calendar for speedy trial. See 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 94; 247 Ill. 112.

SHORT INTEREST. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT NOTICE. In English practice. Four days' notice of trial. Wharton, "Notice of Trial at Common Law;" 3 Chit. St. 148; 1 Crompt. & M. 499. Where short notice has been given, two days is sufficient notice of continuance. Wharton.

SHORT SELLING. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT SUMMONS. Process returnable in a shorter time than the ordinary summons or writ. It exists in New York and in other states.

SHOULD. A mandatory word. 163 Ill. 315.

SHOWING CAUSE. The presentation, on a hearing appointed for that purpose, of reasons and facts to control the action of the court in respect to a certain specified order or determination.

SHRIEVALTY. The office of sheriff; the period of that office.

SHYSTER. A lawyer who conducts business in a knavish or dishonest way.

SI. In Latin phrases. If.

SI A JURE DISCEDAS VAGUS ERIS, ET erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Co. Litt. 227.

SI ALICUJUS REI SOCIETAS SIT, ET finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 439.

SI ALIQUID EX SOLEMNIBUS DEFICIAT, cum aequitas poscit subveniendum est. If anything be wanting from required forms, when equity requires, it will be aided. 1 Kent, Comm. 157.

SI ASSUETIS MEDERI POSSIS NOVA non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Coke, 142.

SI CONSTET DE PERSONA. If it be certain who is the person meant.

SI CONTINGAT (Lat. if it happen). Words of condition in old conveyances. 10 Coke, 42a.

SI INGRATUM DIXERIS, OMNIA DIXERIS. If you affirm that one is ungrateful, in that you include every charge. A Roman maxim. Tray. Lat. Max.

SI ITA EST. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 192.

SI JUDICAS, COGNOSCE. If you judge, understand.

SI MELIORES SUNT QUOS DUCIT amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Co. Litt. 392.

SI NON APPAREAT QUID ACTUM EST erit consequens, ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est, frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

SI NON OMNES (Lat. if all cannot). In English practice. A writ of association of justices whereby, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more may proceed with the business. Cowell; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 111 (C), 186a; Reg. Orig. 202, 206.

SI NULLA SIT CONJECTURA QUAE DUCAT ALLO, VERBA INTELLIGENDA SUNT EX PROPRIETATE, NON GRAMMATICA SED POPULARI EX USU. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary sense. 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

SI PLURES CONDITONES ASCRIPTAE FUERUNT DONATIONI CONIUNCTIM, OMNIBUS EST PARENDEUM; ET AD VERITATEM COPULATIVE REQUIRITUR QUOD UTRAQUE PARS SIT VERA, SI DIVISIM, CUILIBET VEL ALTERI EORUM SATIS EST OBTEMPERARE; ET IN DIJUNCTIVIS, SUFFICIT ALTERAM PARTEM ESSE VERAM. If some conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Co. Litt. 225.

SI PLURES SINT FIDEJUSSORES, QUODQUE ERUNT NUMERO, SINGULI IN SOLIDUM TENENTUR. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 21. 4; Id. 4. 116; 1 W. Bl. 388.

SI PRIUS (Law Lat.) In old practice. If before. Formal words in the old writs for summoning juries. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12.

SI QUID UNIVERSITATI DEBETUR SINGULIS NON DEBETUR, NEC QUOD DEBET UNIVERSITAS SINGULI DEBENT. If anything is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Bl. Comm. 484.

SI QUIDEM IN NOMINE, COGNOMINE, PRAENOMINE, AGNOMINE LEGATARIJ ERRAYERIT; CUM DE PERSONA CONSTAT, NIHILOMINUS VALET LEGATUM. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, praenomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 574; 2 Domat, bk. 2, tit. 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

SI QUIS (Lat.) In the civil law. If any one. Formal words in the praetorian edicts. The word "quis," though masculine in form, was held to include women. Dig. 50. 16. 1.

SI QUIS CUSTOS FRAUDEM PUPILLO FECERIT, A TUTELA REMOVENDUS EST. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 39.

SI QUIS PRAEGNANTEM UXOREM RELIQUIT, NON VIDETUR SINE LIBERIS DECESSISSE. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

SI QUIS UNUM PERCUSSERIT, CUM ALIUM PERCUTERE VELIT, IN FELONIA TENETUR. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. 3 Inst. 51.

SI RECOGNOSCAT (Lat. if he acknowledge). In old practice. A writ which lay for a creditor against his debtor for money numbered (pecunia numerata) or counted; that is, a specific sum of money, which the debtor had acknowledged in the county court, to owe him, as received in pecuniis numeratis. Cowell.

SI SUGGESTIO NON SIT VERA, LITAE PATENTES VACUAE SUNT. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Coke, 113.

SI TE FECERIT SECURUM (Lat. if he make you secure). Words which occur in the form of writs, which originally required, or still require, that the plaintiff should give security to the sheriff that he will prosecute his claim, before the sheriff can be required to execute such writ.

SIB (Saxon). A relative or kinsman. Used in the Scotch tongue, but not now in English. A trace of it is found in the word "gossip" which originally was "God's sib," meaning God's kin.

SIC (Lat.) Thus; so; in such manner.

SIC ENIM DEBERE QUEM MELIOREM AGRUM SUUM FACERE, NE VICINI DETERIOREM FACIAT. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent, Comm. 441.

SIC INTERPRETANDUM EST UT VERBA ACCIPIANTUR CUM EFFECTU. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. 3 Inst. 80.

SIC SUBSCRIBITUR (Lat.) In Scotch practice. So it is subscribed. Formal words at the end of depositions, immediately preceding the signature. 1 How. St. Tr. 1379.

SIC UTERE TUO UT ALIENUM NON IAEDAS. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Bl. Comm. 306; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 206, note, 246, 327, 332, 336, 340, 348, 353; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2379; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 Adol. & E. 384; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 99; 17 Mass. 334; 4 McCord (S. C.) 472; 9 Coke, 59; 22 Ill. 510. Applied to the use of water powers. 90 Wis. 370, 28 L. R. A. 443.

SICH. A little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter. Cowell.

SICIUS. A sort of money current among the ancient English, of the value of 2d.

SICKNESS. The state of being sick or suffering from disease; a diseased condition of the system; illness; ill health; a disease; a malady; a particular kind of disorder; a diseased, distracted, or enfeebled state. Inability to work from mere old age is not. 51 J. P. 227; pregnancy is not; 26 L. J. C. M. 169; but a woman may be "ill" from pregnancy. Color blindness and incurable blindness have been held to be sickness. 7 E. & B. 794; 90 Neb. 114; Ann. Cas. 1913 A 765; 3 El. & Bl. 587; 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 176.

SICUT (Lat.) As.

SICUT ALIAS. As at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

SICUT ALIAS PRAECIPIMUS. As we have formerly commanded you. 70 Ill. App. 179; 172 Ill. 196.

SICUT ME DEUS ADJUVET (Lat.) So help me God. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 4.

SICUT NATURA NIL FACIT PER SALtum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

SIDE. See "Plea Side."

SIDE-BAR RULES. In English practice. Rules which were formerly moved for by attorneys on the side bar of the court, but now may be had of the clerk of the rules, upon a praecipe. These rules are, that the sheriff return his writ, that he bring in the body, for special imparlance, to be present at the taxing of costs, and the like.

SIDELINGS (L. Lat.) In old records. Unploughed pieces of land on the sides of fields. Meres or balks on the side of arable lands. Cowell.

SIDESMEN (testes, synodales). In ecclesiastical law. A kind of impanelled jury, consisting of two, three, or more persons, in every parish, who were, upon oath, to present all heretics and irregular persons. In process of time they became standing officers in many places, especially cities. They were called "synodsmen,"—by corruption, "sidesmen;" also "questmen." But their office has become absorbed in that of church warden. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 399.

SIENS. Scions or descendants.

SIERVO (Spanish). In Spanish law. A slave. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 21, lib. 1.

SIETE PARTIDAS (Spanish). Seven parts. See "Las Partidas."

SIGHT. Presentment. Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight, or a certain number of days or months after sight.

SIGILLUM (Lat.) A seal.

SIGILLUM EST CERA IMPRESSA, QUIA
cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal. 3 Inst. 169. But see "Seal."

SIGLA (Lat.) In Roman law. Marks or signs of abbreviation used in writing. Code, l. 17. 11. 13.

SIGN. To make a mark. The signature is the sign thus made. 140 Iowa 80.

Signing does not necessarily mean a written signature, as distinguished from a signature by mark, by print, by stamp, or by the hand of another. 157 Mass. 439. See "Signature."

A token of anything; a note or token given without words.

SIGN MANUAL. In English law. The signature of the king to grants or letters patent, inscribed at the top. 2 Bl. Comm. 347*.

Any one's name written by himself. Webster; Wharton. The sign manual is not good unless countersigned, etc. 9 Mod. 54.

SIGNA (Lat.) In civil law. Those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses; such as stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offense, and the like.

Signa, although not to be rejected as instruments of evidence, cannot always be relied upon as conclusive evidence, for they are frequently explained away. In the instance mentioned, the blood may have been that of a beast; and expressions of terror have been frequently manifested by innocent persons who did not possess much firmness. See Best, Pres. Ev. 13, note (f); Denisart.

SIGNARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To seal; to affix a seal; to confirm by a seal.

In old English law. To seal a measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1.

SIGNATORIUS ANNULUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A signet ring; a seal ring. Dig. 50. 16. 74.

SIGNATURE.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a sort of rescript, without seal, containing the supplication, the signature of the pope or his delegate, and the grant of a pardon. Dict. Dr. Canonique.

—In Practice. By signature is understood the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument, to adopt its statements, or attest its validity. The name thus written is also called a "signature." It must be the actual writing of the name, or the doing of some act intended by the person to be equivalent to the actual signature of the name. Fry Specif. Perf. § 517; 3 Mer. 2.

It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself, to constitute a signature; nor is it necessary that it be written as distinguished from signing by mark, by print, by stamp, or by the hand of another, 157 Mass. 439; or another may, with the signer's consent, guide his hand. 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 262, 269.

A mark is sufficient even though the party is able to write. 8 Adol. & E. 94; 3 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 752; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; and a printed name, if ratified and adopted, will suffice. Fry. Spec. Perf. § 518; 2 B. & P. 239; 27 W. R. 706; 48 L. J. Ch. 587; 2 M. & S. 286. See Sign.

SIGNET. A seal commonly used for the sign manual of the sovereign. Wharton. The signet is also used for the purpose of civil justice in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

SIGNIFICATION (Lat. signum, a sign, facere, to make). In French law. The notice given of a decree, sentence, or other judicial act.

SIGNIFICAVIT (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. When this word is used alone, it means the bishop's certificate to the court of chancery in order to obtain the writ of excommunication; but where the words writ of significavit are used, the meaning is the same as writ de excommunicato capiendo. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 248; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 502.

SIGNING JUDGMENT.

—In English Practice. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause has reached such a stage that he is entitled to a judgment, obtains the signature or allowance of the proper officer; and this is called "signing judgment," and is instead of the delivery of judgment in open court. Steph. Pl. 111. It is the leave of the master of the office to enter up judgment, and may be had in vacation. 3 Barn. & C. 317; Tidd, Prac. 616.

—In American Practice. It is an actual signing of the judgment on the record, by the judge or other officer duly authorized. Graham, Prac. 341.

SIGNUM (Lat.)

—In the Roman and Civil Law. A sign; a mark; a seal. The seal of an instrument. Calv. Lex.

—In the Saxon Law. The sign of a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed.

SILENT LEGES INTER ARMA. Laws are silent amidst arms. 4 Inst. 70.

SILK GOWN. The professional robe worn by those barristers who have been appointed queen's counsel (q. v.) It is the distinctive badge of queen's or king's counsel.

SILVA CAEDUA (Lat.) By these words, in England, is understood every sort of wood, except gross wood of the age of twenty years. Bac. Abr. "Tythes" (C).

SIMILITER (Lat. likewise). In pleading The plaintiff's reply that, as the defendant has put himself upon the country, he, the plaintiff, does the like. It occurs only when the plea has the conclusion to the country, and its effect is to join the plaintiff in the issue thus tendered by the defendant. Co. Litt. 126a. The word similiter was the effective word when the proceedings were in Latin. 1 Chit. Pl. 519; Archb. Civ. Pl. 250. See Steph. Pl. 255; 2 Saund. 319b; Cowp. 407; 1 Strange, 551; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 32.

SIMILITUDO LEGALIS EST, CASUUM diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno simillium valet, valet in altero. Dissimillium, dissimillium est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191.

SIMONIA EST VOLUNTAS SJVE DESIDERIUM emendi vel vendendi spiritalia vel spiritalibus adhaerentia. Contractus ex turpi causa et contra bonos mores. Simony is the will or desire of buying or selling spiritualities, or things pertaining thereto. It is a contract founded on a bad cause, and against morality. Hob. 167.

SIMONY. In ecclesiastical law. The selling and buying of holy orders or an ecclesiastical benefice. Bac. Abr. By "simony" is also understood an unlawful agreement to receive a temporal reward for something holy or spiritual. Code, 1. 3. 31; Ayliffe, Par. 496.

SIMPLE AVERAGE. Particular average (q. v.)

SIMPLE CONTRACT. A contract the evidence of which is merely oral or in writing, not under seal nor of record. 1 Chit. Cont. 1; 1 Chit. Pl. 88. And see 11 Mass. 30; 11 East, 312; 4 Barn. & Ald. 588; 3 Starkie, Ev. 995; 2 Bl. Comm. 472.

SIMPLE DEPOSIT. A deposit made, according to the civil law, by one or more persons having a common interest.

SIMPLE LARCENY. The felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, unattended by acts of violence. It is distinguished from "compound larceny," which is stealing from the person or with violence. See "Larceny."

SIMPLE OBLIGATION. An unconditional obligation; one which is to be performed without depending upon any event provided by the parties to it.

SIMPLE TRUST. A simple or passive trust corresponds with the ancient use, and is where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settler, is left to the construction of law. It differs from a "special trust," in that the trustee performs no duty. 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 25; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. See "Trust."

SIMPLE WARRANTICE. In Scotch law. An obligation to warrant or secure from all subsequent or future deeds of the grantor. Whishaw. A simple warranty against the grantor's own acts.

SIMPLEX (Lat.) Simple or single; as, charta simplex is a deed poll or single deed. Jacob.

SIMPLEX BENEFICIUM. In ecclesiastical law. A minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice, as distinguished from a cure of souls. It may therefore be held with any parochial cure, without coming under the prohibitions against pluralities.

SIMPLEX COMMENDATIO NON OBLIGAT. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent, Comm. 485; Broom, Leg. Max. (5d London Ed.) 700; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Cro. Jac. 4; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 354; 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 95.

SIMPLEX DICTUM. In old English practice. Simple averment; mere assertion without proof. Bracton, fol. 320.

SIMPLEX ET PURA DONATIO DICI POTERIT, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bracton, 1.

SIMPLEX JUSTITIARIUS (Law Lat.) In old records. Simple justice. A name sometimes given to a puisne justice. Cowell.

SIMPLEX LOQUELA. In old English practice. Simple speech; the mere declaration or plaint of a plaintiff. Called in Fleta, simplex vox. Lib. 2, c. 63, § 9.

SIMPLEX OBLIGATIO. A single obligation; a bond without a condition. 2 Bl. Comm. 840.

SIMPLEX PEREGRINATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Simple pilgrimage. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2, § 2.

SIMPLICITAS EST LEGIBUS AMICA, ET nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Coke, 8.

SIMPLICITER (Lat.) Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

SIMUL CUM (Lat. together with). In pleading. Words used in indictments and declarations of trespass against several persons, when some of them are known and others are unknown.

In cases of riots, it is usual to charge that A. B., together with others unknown, did the act complained of. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 488; 2 Salk. 593.

When a party sued with another pleads separately, the plea is generally entitled in the name of the person pleading, adding, "sued with _____," naming the other party. When this occurred, it was, in the old phraseology, called pleading with a simul cum.

SIMUL ET SEMEL (Lat.) Together and at one time. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 5; 1 Saund. 323a, note (6).

SIMULATED FACT. In the law of evidence. A fabricated fact; an appearance given to things by human device, with a view to deceive and mislead. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 181.

SIMULATIO LATENS. A species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists. Beck, Med. Jur. 3.

SIMULATION (Lat. simul, together). In French law. The concert or agreement of two or more persons to give to one thing the appearance of another, for the purpose of fraud. Merlin, Repert.

With us, such act might be punished by indictment for a conspiracy, by avoiding the pretended contract, or by action to recover back the money or property which may have been thus fraudulently obtained.

SINE (Lat.) Without.

SINE ANIMO REVERTENDI. Without the intention of returning.

SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI (Lat. without the consent of the chapter). In old English practice. A writ which lay where a dean, bishop, prebendary, abbot, prior, or master of a hospital alienated the lands holden in the right of his house, abbey, or priory, without the consent of the chapter; in which case his successor might have this writ. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 195.

SINE CONSIDERATIONE CURIAE (Lat.) Without the judgment of the court.

SINE DECRETO (Lat.) Without authority of a judge. 2 Kames, Eq. 115.

SINE DIE (Lat.) Without day. A judgment for a defendant in many cases is quod eat sine die, that he may go without day. While the cause is pending and undetermined, it may be continued from term to term by dies datus. See "Continuance;" Co. Litt. 362b, 363a. When the court or other body rise at the end of a session or term, they adjourn sine die.

SINE HOC QUOD (Law Lat. without this, that). A technical phrase in old pleading, of the same import with the phrase "absque hoc" (q. v.)

SINE JUDICIO (Law Lat.) Without judgment; without a judicial sentence. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 14, § 1.

SINE LIBERIS (Lat.) Without children. For the construction of this phrase in the civil law, see Dig. 50. 16. 148; Id. 50. 17. 187.

SINE NUMERO (Law Lat. without stint or limit). A term applied to common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 8.

SINE POSSESSIONE USUCAPIO PROCEDERE NON POTEST. There can be no prescription without possession.

SINE PROLE. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables.

SINECURE. In ecclesiastical law. A term used to signify that an ecclesiastical officer is without a charge or cure.

In common parlance, it means the receipt of a salary for an office when there are no duties to be performed.

SINGLE BILL. One without any condition, and which does not depend upon any future event to give it validity. 5 Ill. 483.

SINGLE BOND. A bond without a condition.

SINGLE COMBAT, TRIAL BY. See "Bat-tel."

SINGLE ORIGINAL. An original instrument which is not executed in duplicate.

SINGULAR SUCCESSOR. A purchaser is so termed in the Scotch law, in contradistinction to the heir of the landed proprietor, who succeeds to the whole heritage by regular title of succession, whereas the purchaser acquires rights solely by the single title of the former proprietor.

SINGULI IN SOLIDUM TENENTUR. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 252.

SINKING FUND. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan, and for the gradual payment of the principal. 9 Neb. 453.

SIST. In Scotch practice. A stay or suspension of proceedings, an order for a stay of proceedings. Bell, Dict.

SISTER. A female person considered in the relation to another person having the same parents. 193 Ill. App. 617.

SITHCUNDMAM. The high constable of a hundred.

SITTINGS AFTER TERM. Sittings in banc after term were held by authority of St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 32. The courts were at liberty to transact business at their sittings as in term time, but the custom was to dispose only of cases standing for argument or judgment. Wharton.

SITTINGS IN BANK (or BANC). The sittings which the respective superior courts of common law hold during every term for the purpose of hearing and determining the various matters of law argued before them.

They are so called in contradistinction to the sittings at nisi prius, which are held for the purpose of trying issues of fact. The former are usually held, in England, before four of the judges, while at the latter one judge only presides. Holthouse; 3 Steph. Comm. 423.

In America, the practice is essentially the same, all the judges, or a majority of them, usually, sitting in banc, and but one holding the court for jury trials, and the term has the same application here as in England.

SITTINGS IN CAMERA. See "Chambers."

SITUS (Lat.) Situation; location. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 524.

Real estate has always a fixed situs, while personal estate has no such fixed situs; the law rei sitae regulates real, but not the personal, estate. Story, Conf. Laws, § 379.

The rules as to the situs of personal property have been stated as follows:

- (1) Movable and tangible chattels are of the county where they may be at the time.
- (2) Shares in corporations or joint-stock companies are of the county where the chief office of the company is situated.
- (3) Judgments and other debts of record are of the county where the record is kept.
- (4) Bonds and negotiable securities are of the county where they happen to be at the time.
- (5) Promissory notes, bills of exchange, and all simple contracts are of the county where the debtor resides.
- (6) Demands against a commonwealth are of the county wherein is situated the seat of government. 2 Minor, Inst. 853.

SIVE TOTA RES EVINCATUR, SIVE pars habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 690.

SIX ACTS, THE. The acts passed in 1819 for the pacification of England, are so called. They, in effect, prohibited the training of persons to arms; authorized general searches and seizure of arms; prohibited meetings of more than fifty persons for the discussion of public grievances; repressed with heavy penalties and confiscations seditious and blasphemous libels; and checked pamphleteering by extending the newspaper stamp duty to political pamphlets. Brown.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. Abolished by 5 Vict. c. 5. 3 Bl. Comm. 443*; Spence, Eq. Jur.; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 15.

SIXHINDI. Servants of the same nature as rodknights. Anc. Inst. Eng.

SKELETON BILL. In commercial law. A blank paper, properly stamped, in those countries where stamps are required, with the name of a person signed at the bottom.

In such case, the person signing the paper will be held as the drawer or acceptor, as it may be, of any bill which shall afterwards be written above his name, to the sum of which the stamp is applicable. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 390.

SKIAGRAPH. A skiagraph is not a picture of the object or substance itself, but of the shadow merely, which is cast by such object or substance. 149 Ill. App. 445.

SLAINS. See "Letters of Slains."

SLANDER. In torts. Words maliciously spoken or written of another, imputing to him some crime, or tending to exclude him from society, and cause him to be avoided (see 87 N. C. 300), or which tend to his prejudice in his profession, trade, or business (36 Wis. 515). See "Slut."

SLANDER OF TITLE. In torts. A statement tending to cut down the extent of title. See 60 Cal. 160. An action for slander of title is not properly an action for words spoken, or for libel written and published, but an action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title. An action is permitted against one who falsely and maliciously disparages the title of another to property, whether real or personal, and thereby causes him some special pecuniary loss or damage. 90 Cal. 537. This action is ranged under that division of actions in the digests and other writers on the text law, and is so held by the courts at the present day. An action for slander of title is a sort of metaphorical expression. Slander of title may be of such a nature as to fall within the scope of ordinary slander. Slander of title ordinarily means a statement tending to cut down the extent of title, which is injurious only if it is false. It is essential, to give a cause of action, that the statement should be false. It is essential, also, that it should be malicious,—not malicious in the worst sense, but with intent to injure the plaintiff. If the statement be true, if there really be the infirmity in the title that is suggested, no action will lie, however malicious the defendant's intention might be. Heard, Lib. & Sland. §§ 10, 59 et seq.

SLANDERER. A calumniator who maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another, of which he is innocent.

For this offense, when the slander is merely verbal, the remedy is an action on the case for damages; when it is reduced to writing or printing, it is a libel.

SLAVE. One over whose life, liberty, and property another has unlimited control. The jus vitæ et necis is included in pure or absolute slavery. Such a power has no foundation in natural law, and hence the Justinian Code declared it contra naturam esse. Inst. 1. 4. 2.

Every limitation placed by law upon this absolute control modifies and to that extent changes the condition of the slave. In every slaveholding state of the United States, the life and limbs of a slave were protected from violence inflicted by the master or third persons.

Among the Romans, the slave was classed among things (res). He was homo sed non persona. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, § 75. He was considered pro nullo et mortuo, quia nec statu familiae nec civitatis nec libertatis gaudet. Id. § 77. See, also, 4 Dev. (N. C.) 340; 9 Ga. 582. In the United States, as a person, he was capable of committing crimes, of receiving his freedom, of being the subject of homicide, and of modifying by his volition, very materially, the rules applicable to other species of property. His existence as a person being recognized by the law, that existence was protected by the law. 1 Hawks (N. C.) 217; 2 Hawks (N. C.) 454; 1 Ala. 8; 1 Miss. 83; 11 Miss. 518; 2 Va. Cas. 394; 5 Rand. (Va.) 678; 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 156; 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 172.

In the slaveholding states, the relations of husband and wife and parent and child were recognized by statutes in relation to public sales, and by the courts in all cases where such relations were material to elucidate the motives of their acts.

A slave has no political rights, the government being the judgment who shall be its citizens. His civil rights, though necessarily more restricted than the freeman's, are based upon the same foundation,—the law of the land. He has none but such as are by that law and the law of nature given to him. The civil-law rule "partus sequitur ventrem" was adopted in all the slaveholding states, the status of the mother at the time of birth deciding the status of the issue. 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 134; 2 Rand. (Va.) 246; 4 Rand. (Va.) 600; 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 234; 1 Cooke (Tenn.) 381; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 298; 2 Dana (Ky.) 432; 5 Dana (Ky.) 207; 2 Mo. 71; 3 Mo. 540; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 220; 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 446; 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 18; 2 Brev. (N. C.) 307; 3 Har. & McH. (Md.) 139; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 568; 2 How. (U. S.) 265, 496. In South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Virginia, Louisiana, and perhaps Maryland, this rule was adopted by statute.

The slave cannot acquire property; his acquisitions belong to his master. 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 397; 1 Bailey (S. C.) 633; 2 Hill, Ch. (S. C.) 397; 2 Rich. (S. C.) 424; 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 299; 2 Ala. 320; 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 186. The peculium of the Roman slave was ex gratia, and not of right. Inst. 2. 9. 3; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. ii. tit. xviii. In like manner, negro slaves in the United States were, as a matter of fact, sometimes permitted by their masters, ex gratia, to obtain and retain property. The same was true of ancient villeins in England. The slave could not be a witness, except for and against slaves or free negroes. This was, perhaps, the rule of the common law. None but a freeman was othesworth. The privilege of being sworn was one of the characteristics of a "liber et legalis homo." To lose this privilege, amittere liberam legem, was a severe punishment. 3 Bl. Comm. 340; Fortesc. c. xxvi.; Co. Litt. 6b. With this the civil law agreed. Huberus, Praelec. lib. xxv. tit. v. § 2. In the United States, the rule of exclusion mentioned was enforced in all cases where the evidence was offered for or against free white persons. 6 Leigh (Va.) 74. In most of the states this exclusion was by express statutes, while in others it existed by custom and the decision of the courts. 10 Ga. 519. In the slaveholding states, and in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, by statute, the rule was extended to include free persons of color or emancipated slaves. 14 Ohio, 199; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 97. The slave could be a suitor in court only for his freedom. For all other wrongs, he appeared through his master, for whose benefit the recovery was had. 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 19; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 326; 1 Mo. 608; 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 303; 3 Brev. (N. C.) 11; 4 Gill (Md.) 249; 9 La. 156; 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 169. The suit for freedom is favored. 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 143; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 44; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 467; 2 Call (Va.) 350; 4 Rand. (Va.) 134. Lapse of time worked no forfeiture by reason of his dependent condition (3 Dana [Ky.] 382; 8 B. Mon. [Ky.] 631; 1 Hen. & M. [Va.] 141), and such was the civil law (Code, 7. 22. 2. 3). The master was bound to maintain, support, and defend his slave, however helpless or impotent. If he failed to do so, public officers were provided to supply his deficiency at his expense. In Tennessee, the master in such a case was responsible for all that he stole.

Cruel treatment was a penal offense of a high grade. Emancipation of the slave was the consequence of conviction in Louisiana; and the sale of the slave to another master was a part of the penalty in Alabama and Texas. In some of the ancient German states, and also by the "Code noir," another and more effectual penalty was a total disqualification of the master forever to hold slaves.

Among the ancient Lombards, if a master debauched his slave's wife, the slave and his wife were thereby emancipated. Among the Romans, double damages were given for the corruption of a slave. The enfranchisement of a slave is called "manumission." The word is expressive of the idea. Thus, Litt. § 204, "manumittere quod idem est, quod extra manum, vel potestatem alterius ponere." Manumission being merely the withdrawal of the dominion of the master, the right to manumit exists everywhere, unless forbidden by law. No one but the owner can manumit (4 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 103; 10 Pet. [U. S.] 583), and the effect is simply to make a freeman, not a citizen. The state must decide who shall be citizens. See "Servus."

SLAVE TRADE. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit. It is either foreign or domestic. The former is when the trade includes transportation from a foreign state; the latter, when confined within a single state or states connected in a federal union.

SLAVERY. The status or condition of a slave. The keeping of slaves as a practice or legal institution.

SLEEPING PARTNER. See "Partner."

SLEEPING RENT. An expression used in English coal-mine leases to indicate a fixed rent, as distinguished from a rent based on the output. It is said to be so called because payable though the mine was "sleeping" (unworked).

SLIP. In insurance law. An informal memorandum of the particulars of a contract of insurance to be afterwards included, usually called in the United States a "binding slip."

SLIPPA. A stirrup. There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

SLOUGH. A swale or slough is a natural depression or natural water course into which surface water may be cast by open or covered drains wholly upon one's own land, without incurring liability to owner of lower land. 157 Iowa 6.

SLOUGH SILVER. A rent paid to the castle of Wigmore in lieu of certain days' work in harvest, heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants. Cowell.

SLUT. An untidy woman, a slattern, and also a female dog, the same as "bitch." Such terms when applied to a woman, do not amount to a charge of crime or of want of chastity, and are not, therefore, in their common meaning, slanderous words. 27 Ill. App. 398.

SMALL. Small is a comparative term, denoting things of little size as compared with other things of the same class. 201 Ill. 97.

SMALL DEBTS COURTS. The several county courts established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for the purpose of bringing justice home to every man's door.

SMALL TITHES. All personal and mixed tithes, and also hops, flax, saffrons, potatoes, and sometimes, by custom, wood. Otherwise called "privy tithes." 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 726.

SMART MONEY. Vindictive or exemplary damages given beyond the actual damage, by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. 15 Conn. 225; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; 6 Hill (N. Y.) 466. That it cannot be given by jury, see 2 Greenl. Ev. (4th Ed.) § 253, note. See "Damages."

SMOKE-FARTHINGS. In old English law. An annual rent paid to cathedral churches; another name for the pentecostals or customary oblations offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, when they made their processions to the mother cathedral church. Cowell.

SMOKE SILVER. A modus of sixpence in lieu of tithe wood. Twisdale, Hist. Vindicat. 77.

SMUGGLING. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. More specifically, a secret introduction of goods into a state with intent to avoid payment of duty thereon. Bac. Abr.

SO HELP ME GOD. A formal invocation of the Deity to witness, by which an oath is concluded.

SOBRE JUEZES. In Spanish law. Superior judges. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 4, lib. 1.

SOBRINI, or SOBRINAE (Lat.) In the civil law. The children of cousins german in general. Cooper, Just. Inst. notes,* 573; Dig. 38. 10, 3, pr.

SOC, SOK, or SOKA. In Saxon law. Jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory. Cowell.

SOCA. A seignior or lordship, enfranchised by the king, with liberty of holding a court of his socmen or socagers, i. e., his tenants.

SOCAGE. This word, according to the earlier common-law writers, originally signified a service rendered by a tenant to his lord, by the soke or ploughshare; but Mr. Somner's etymology, referred to by Blackstone, seems more apposite, who derives it from the Saxon word soc, which signifies liberty or privilege, denoting thereby a free or privilege tenure. A species of English tenure, whereby the tenant held his lands of the lord by any certain service in lieu of all other services, so that the service was not a knight's service. Its principal feature was its certainty; as, to hold by fealty and a certain rent, or by fealty homage and a certain rent, or by homage and fealty without rent, or by fealty and certain corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land for a specified number of days. 2 Bl. Comm. 80.

The term "socage" was afterwards extended to all services which were not of a military character, provided they were fixed; as, by the annual payment of a rose, a pair of gilt spurs, a certain number of capons, or of so many bushels of corn. Of some tenements, the service was to be hangman, or executioner of persons condemned in the lord's court; for in olden times such officers were not volunteers, nor to be hired for lucre, and could only be bound thereto by tenure. There were three different species of these socage tenures,—one in frank tenure, another in ancient tenure, and the third in base tenure. The second and third kinds are now called, respectively, "tenure in ancient demesne," and "copyhold tenure." The first is called "free and common socage," to distinguish it from the other two; but, as the term "socage" has long ceased to be applied to the two latter, "socage" and "free and common socage" now mean the same thing. Bracton; Co. Litt. 17, 86.

By St. 12 Car. II. c. 24, the ancient tenures by knight's service were abolished, and all lands, with the exception of copyholds and of ecclesiastical lands, which continued to be held in free alms (frankmoigne), were turned into free and common socage, and the great bulk of real property in England is now held under this ancient tenure. Many grants of land in the United States, made, previous to the Revolution, by the British crown, created the same tenure among us, until they were formally abolished by the legislatures of the different states. In 1787, the state of New York converted all feudal tenure within its boundaries into a tenure by free and common socage; but in 1830 it abolished this latter tenure, with all its incidents, and declared that from thenceforth all lands in the state should be held upon a uniform allodial tenure, and vested an absolute property in the owners according to their respective estates. Similar provisions have been adopted by other states; and the ownership of land throughout the United States is now essentially free and unrestricted. See "Tenure."

SOCAGER. A tenant by socage.

SOCAGIUM IDEM EST QUOD SERVITUM socae; et soca, idem est quod caruca. Socage is the same as service of the soc; and "soc" is the same thing as a plow. Co. Litt. 86.

SOCER (Lat.) The father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

SOCIDA (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense, or for a part of the profits, certain animals, on condition that, if any of them perish, they shall be replaced by the bailer, or he shall pay their value.

A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired. Wolff. § 638.

SOCIEDAD. In Spanish law. Partnership. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 153, 154.

SOCIETAS (Lat.) In civil law. A contract in good faith made to share in common the profit and loss of a certain business or thing, or of all the possessions of the parties. Calv. Lex.; Inst. 3. 26; Dig. 17. 21. See "Partnership."

Also, companionship or partnership in good or evil. Cicero, pro S. Rosc. 34; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 18.

SOCIETAS LEONINA (Lat.) In Roman law. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits should belong to some of the partners, in exclusion of the rest.

It was so called in allusion to the fable of the lion and other animals, who, having entered into partnership for the purpose of hunting, the lion appropriated all the prey to himself. Dig. 17. 2. 29. 2; Poth. Traite de Societe, note 12. See 2 McCord (S. C.) 421; 6 Pick. (Mass.) 372.

SOCIETAS NAVALIS (Lat.) In European law. Naval partnership or company; the sailing of a number of vessels in company, for mutual protection. Otherwise called admiralitas. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 2; Id. lib. 3, c. 7.

SOCIETE (Fr.) In French law. Partnership. See "Commendam."

SOCIETE ANONYME. In French law. An association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had in England until lately no other name than that of "chartered company," meaning thereby a joint-stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions. 2 Mill, Pol. Econ. 485.

SOCIETE EN COMMENDITE. In Louisiana. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. Civ. Code La. art. 2810; Code de Comm. 26, 33, 4 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 1027; Dalloz, "Societe Commerciale," note 166. See "Commendam."

SOCIETY. In its abstract sense (used with no article prefixed), the public at large; the people; the body politic. In a concrete sense, a voluntary unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose.

SOCII MEI SOCIUS, MEUS SOCIUS non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47. 1.

SOCIUS. In the civil law, a partner.

SOCMAN. A tenant by socage.

SOCMANRY. Free tenure by socage.

SOCNA. A privilege, liberty, or franchise. Cowell.

SODOMITE. One who has been guilty of sodomy. Formerly, such offender was punished with great severity, and was deprived of the power of making a will.

SODOMY. A carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 1029.

A distinction not generally recognized has been made between bestiality and sodomy, the former being defined as carnal connection between a human being and a brute, and the latter as carnal connection between two human beings against the order of nature. 10 Ind. 355.

It has generally been held that at common law the crime of sodomy was committed by penetration per anum, and not per os. A penetration of the mouth is not sodomy. Bishop's New Criminal Law, Vol. 2, § 1194; 2 Russell on Crimes, p. 638; McClain's Crim. Law, § 1153; 86 Neb. 237, 21 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 336; 133 Ky. 720, 118 S. W. 943.

SOIT BAILE AUX COMMONS (Law Fr. let it be delivered to the commons). The form of indorsement on a bill when sent to the house of commons. Dyer, 93a.

SOIT BAILE AUX SEIGNEURS (Law Fr. let it be delivered to the lords). The form of indorsement on a bill in parliament when sent to the house of lords. Hob. 111a.

SOIT DROIT FAIT AL PARTIE. In English law. Let right be done to the party. A phrase written on a petition of right, and subscribed by the king. See "Petition of Rights."

SOIT FAIT COMME IL EST DESIRE (Law Fr. let it be as it is desired). The royal assent to private acts of parliament, SOJOURNING (Fr. sejourner). Literally, dwelling for a day. "The term 'sojourning' means something more than 'traveling,' and applies to a temporary, as contradistinguished from a permanent residence." 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 5.

SOKE REEVE. The lord's rent gatherer in the soca. Cowell.

SOKEMANRIES. Lands and tenements which were not held by knight service, nor by grand serjeantry, nor by petit, but by simple services; being, as it were, lands enfranchised by the king or his predecessors from their ancient demesne. Their tenants were "sokemans." Wharton.

SOKEMANS. In English law. Those who held their land in socage. 2 Bl. Comm. 100.

SOLA AC PER SE SENECTUS DONATIONEM testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate a will or a gift. 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148, 158.

SOLAR DAY. That period of time which begins at sunrise and ends at sunset; the same as "artificial day." Co. Litt. 135a; 3 Chit. St. 1376, note.

SOLAR MONTH. A calendar month; the mean quantity of which is thirty days, ten hours, twenty minutes, and five seconds, being one twelfth of the time composing the whole year. 1 Jones L. (N. C.) 87; Co. Litt. 135b; 1 W. Bl. 450; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bing. 307; 3 Chit. St. 1375, note.

SOLARES. In Spanish law. Lots of ground. This term is frequently found in grants from the Spanish government of lands in America. 2 White, Coll. 474.

SOLARIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A rent paid for the ground, where a person built on the public land. A ground rent. Spelman; Calv. Lex.

SOLATIUM. Compensation; damages allowed for injury to the feelings.

SOLD NOTE. The name of an instrument in writing, given by a broker to a buyer of merchandise, in which it is stated that the goods therein mentioned have been sold to him; or one given to the buyer by a broker employed to sell goods, in his own name, as agent of both seller and buyer, whereby they are respectively bound. 167 Ill. 372. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 435; Story, Ag. § 28. Some confusion may be found in the books as to the name of these notes. They are sometimes called "bought notes."

SOLD SHORT. See "Gambling Contract."

SOLE. Alone, single; used in contradistinction to "joint" or "married." A sole tenant, therefore, is one who holds lands in his own right, without being joined with any other. A feme sole is a single woman; a sole corporation is one composed of only one natural person.

SOLE CORPORATION. A corporation consisting of one person and his legal successors, thus having the attribute of perpetuity, as a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church or of the Church of England.

SOLE TENANT. He that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him. Cowell.

SOLEMN. Formal; in regular form.

SOLEMN FORM. In English law. Probate may be granted either in solemn form or in common form.

Probate in solemn form is only employed when there is or is likely to be a dispute as to the validity of the will, and in such a case the person who wishes its validity to be established commences an action against the person who disputes it. The action proceeds as to pleadings, trial, etc., in the same way as an ordinary action. If the plaintiff makes out his case, the court pronounces for the validity of the will, and the executor may then take probate of it as if it had not been disputed. Coote, Prob. Prac. 250, 308. As a general rule, probate in solemn form is conclusive on all who are parties to the proceedings, or cognizant of them. Browne, Prob. Prac. 101.

Probate in common form is that "form which is slight and summary for ordinary and undisputed cases."

SOLEMN WAR. A war made in form by public declaration. See "War."

SOLEMNES LEGUM FORMULAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Solemn forms of laws; forms of forensic proceedings and of transacting legal acts. One of the sources of the unwritten law of Rome. Butler, Hor. Jur. 47.

SOLEMNITAS ATTACHIAMENTORUM (Law Lat.) In old English practice. Solemnity or formality of attachments. The issuing of attachments in a certain formal and regular order. Bracton, fols. 439, 440; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 480; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 5.

SOLEMNITATES JURIS SUNT OBSERVANDAE. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 13.

SOLEMNITY. The formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

A marriage, for example, would not be valid if made in jest and without solemnity. See "Marriage;" Dig. 4. 1. 7; Id. 45. 1. 30.

SOLICITATION OF CHASTITY. The asking a person to commit adultery or fornication.

This, of itself, is not an indictable offense. Salk. 382; 2 Chit. Prac. 478. The contrary doctrine, however, has been held in Connecticut. 7 Conn. 267. In England, the bare solicitation of chastity is punished in the ecclesiastical courts. 2 Chit. Prac. 478. See 2 Strange, 1100; 10 Mod. 384; Sayer, 33; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 809.

The civil law punished arbitrarily the person who solicited the chastity of another. Dig. 47. 11. 1. See 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 508.

SOLICITOR. A person whose business is to be employed in the care and management of suits depending in courts of chancery.

A solicitor, like an attorney, will be required to act with perfect good faith towards his clients. He must conform to the authority given him. It is said that, to institute a suit, he must have a special authority, although a general authority will be sufficient to defend one. The want of a written authority may subject him to the expenses incurred in a suit. 3 Mer. 12; Hovenden, Frauds, c. 2, pp. 28-61. See 1 Phil. Ev. 102; 2 Chit. Prac. 2. See "Attorney."

SOLICITOR-GENERAL. In English law. A law officer of the crown, appointed by patent during the royal pleasure, and who assists the attorney general in managing the law business of the crown. Selden, 1. 6. 7. He is first in right of precedence. 3 Bl. Comm. 28, n. (a), n. 9; Enc. Brit.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY. The title of one of the officers of the United States, created by Act May 29, 1830 (4 U. S. St. at Large, 414), which prescribed his duties and his rights.

His powers and duties as originally fixed were: First those which were by law vested and required from the agent of the treasury of the United States. Second, those which theretofore belonged to the commissioner or acting commissioner of the revenue, relating to the superintendence of the collection of outstanding direct and internal duties. Third, to take charge of all lands which shall be conveyed to the United States, or set off to them in payment of debts, or which are vested in them by mortgage or other security; and to release such lands which had, at the passage of the act, become vested in the United States, on payment of the debt for which they were received. Fourth, generally to superintend the collection of debts due to the United States, and receive statements from different officers in relation to suits or actions commenced for the recovery of the same. Fifth, to instruct the district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States, in all matters and proceedings appertaining to suits in which the United States are a party or interested, and to cause them to report to him any information he may require in relation to the same. Sixth, to report to the proper officer from whom the evidence of debt was received the fact of its having been paid to him, and also all credits which have, by due course of law, been allowed on the same. Seventh, to make rules for the government of collectors, district attorneys, and marshals, as may be requisite. Eighth, to obtain from the district attorneys full accounts of all suits in their hands, and submit abstracts of the same to congress.

His rights were: First to call upon the attorney general of the United States for advice and direction as to the manner of conducting the suits, proceedings, and prosecutions aforesaid. Second, to receive a salary of three thousand five hundred dollars per annum. Third, to employ, with the approbation of the secretary of the treasury, a clerk, with a salary of one thousand five hundred dollars, and a messenger, with a salary of five hundred dollars. Fourth, to receive and send all letters, relating to the business of his office, free of postage.

SOLICITOR TO THE SUITORS' FUND. An officer of the English court of chancery, who is appointed in certain cases guardian ad litem.

SOLIDO. See "In Solidum."

SOLIDUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A whole; an entire or undivided thing. See "In Solidum."

SOLINUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Two plough lands, and somewhat less than a half. Co. Litt. 5a. Spelman defines it a plough land.

SOLO CEDIT QUOD SOLO IMPLANTATUR. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1572.

SOLO CEDIT QUOD SOLO INAEDIFICATUR. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 268; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1571.

SOLUM PROVINCIALE. In Roman law. The solum italicum (an extension of the old Ager Romanus) admitted full ownership, and of the application to it of usucapio; whereas the solum provinciale (an extension of the old Ager Publicus) admitted of a possessory title only, and of longi temporis possessio only. Justinian abolished all distinctions between the two, sinking the italicum to the level of the provinciale. Brown.

SOLUM REX HOC NON FACERE POTEST, QUOD NON POTEST INJUSTE AGERE. This alone the king cannot do,—he cannot act unjustly. 11 Coke, 72.

SOLUS DEUS HAEREDEM FACIT. God alone makes the heir. Co. Litt. 5.

SOLUTIO (Lat. release). In civil law. Payment. By this term is understood every species of discharge or liberation, which is called "satisfaction," and with which the creditor is satisfied. Dig. 46. 3. 54; Code 8. 43. 17; Inst. 3. 30. This term has rather a reference to the substance of the obligation than to the numeration or counting of the money. Dig. 50. 16. 176.

SOLUTIO INDEBITI (Lat.) In civil law. The case where one has paid a debt, or done an act or remitted a claim, because he thought that he was bound in law to do so, when he was not. In such cases of mistake there is an implied obligation (quasi ex contractu) to pay back the money, etc. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 468.

SOLUTIO PRETHI EMPTIONIS LOCO habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 56.

SOLUTIONE FEODI MILITIS PARLIAMENTI, or Feodi burgensis parliamenti. Old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages or allowance if it had been refused. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

SOLUTUS (Lat. from solvere, to loose).
—In the Civil Law. Loosed; freed from confinement; set at liberty. Dig. 50. 16. 48.
—In Scotch Practice. Purged. A term used in old depositions. See "Purged of Partial Counsel."

SOLVABILITE (Fr.) In French law. Ability to pay; solvency. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 8, § 15.

SOLVENCY. The state of a person who is able to pay all his debts; the opposite of "insolvency" (q. v.)

Imports adequate means of a person to pay his debts, which embraces within its meaning the opportunity by reasonable diligence to convert and apply to such purpose. In other words, a person is deemed insolvent who at the time in question is unable to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business.

It means that the debtor is in such a condition that the demand may be collected out of his property by due course of law. Ability to raise money on credit for the payment of debts does not constitute solvency. 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 375, 377; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 650.

SOLVENDO (Lat. paying). An apt word of reserving a rent in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 47a.

SOLVENDO ESSE. To be in a state of solvency, i. e., able to pay.

SOLVENDO ESSE NEMO INTELLIGITUR nisi qui solldum potest solvere. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

SOLVENDUS (Lat.) In old English law. To be paid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 3.

SOLVENT. One who has sufficient to pay his debts and all obligations. Dig. 50. 16. 114. The opposite of insolvent (q. v.)

SOLVERE (Lat. to unbind; to untie). To release; to pay. Solvere dicimus eum qui fecit quod facere promisit. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 807.

SOLVIT. (Lat. from solvere, q. v.) He paid. 10 East, 206.

SOLVIT AD DIEM (Lat. he paid at the day). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action on a bond, or other obligation to pay money, by which the defendant pleads that he paid the money on the day it was due. See 1 Strange, 652; Rep. temp. Hardw. 133; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 W 29).

This plea ought to conclude with an averment, and not to the country. 1 Sid. 215; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 253. See 2 Phil. Ev. 92; Coxe (N. J.) 467.

SOLVIT POST DIEM (Lat. he paid after the day). In pleading. The name of a special plea in bar to an action of debt on a bond, by which the defendant asserts that he paid the money after the day it became due. 1 Chit. Pl. 480, 555; 2 Phil. Ev. 93.

SOLVITUR ADHUC SOCIETAS ETIAM MORTE SOCII. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner. Inst. 3. 26. 5; Dig. 17. 2.

SOLVITUR EO LIGAMINE QUO LIGATUR. In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 582.

SOMERSETT'S CASE. A celebrated decision of the English king's bench, in 1771-72, affirming the extinction of villeinage, and the nonexistence of any other form of slavery in England.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE (Law Fr. his own first assault). In pleading. A form of a plea to justify an assault and battery, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff committed an assault upon him, and the defendant merely defended himself.

When the plea is supported by evidence, it is a sufficient justification, unless the retaliation by the defendant were excessive, and bore no proportion to the necessity, or to the provocation received. 1 East, P. C. 406; 1 Chit. Prac. 595.

SONS. The words "sons," "daughters," "child," and "children" are not technical legal terms, to which a fixed and determined meaning must be given regardless of the sense in which they are employed, but they are flexible and subject to construction, to give effect to the intention of the testator. 230 Ill. 270.

SONTAGE. A tax of forty shillings anciently laid upon every knight's fee. Cowell.

SONTICUS (Lat.) In the civil law. That which hurts or hinders; that which tends to delay or put off.

SOREHON, or SORN. An arbitrary exaction, formerly existing in Scotland and Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called "gilliwitfitts," and lived on free quarters. See Bell, Dict.

SORNER. In Scotch law. A person who takes meat and drink from others by force or menaces, without paying for it. Bell, Dict.

SORS (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A lot; chance; fortune. Calv. Lex.; Ainsworth. Sort; kind. The little scroll on which the thing to be drawn by lot was written. Carpentier. A principal or capital sum; e. g., the capital of a partnership. Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. A principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the interest itself. Pryn, Collect. tom. 2, p. 161; Cowell.

SORTITIO (Lat. from sortiri, to cast or draw lots). In the civil law. A casting or drawing of lots; a determination or choice by lot. Sortitio iudicum, a drawing of judges (judices) on criminal trials, resembling the modern practice of drawing a jury. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13, No. 20; 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

SOUL SCOT. A mortuary, or customary gift due ministers, in many parishes of England, on the death of parishioners. It was originally voluntary, and intended as amends for ecclesiastical dues neglected to be paid in the lifetime. 2 Bl. Comm. 425*.

SOUND MIND. That state of a man's mind which is adequate to reason, and comes to a judgment upon ordinary subjects like other rational men.

SOUNDING IN DAMAGES. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions, or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be sounding in damages. Steph. Pl. 126, 127.

SOUS SEING PRIVE. In Louisiana. An act or contract evidenced by writing under the private signature of the parties to it. The term is used in opposition to the "authentic act," which is an agreement entered into in the presence of a notary or other public officer.

The form of the instrument does not give it its character so much as the fact that it appears or does not appear to have been executed before the officer. 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 196; 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 548.

The effect of a sous seing prive is not the same as that of the "authentic act." The former cannot be given in evidence until proved, and, unless accompanied by possession, it does not, in general, affect third persons. 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 429, 432. The latter, or authentic acts, are full evidence against the parties and those who claim under them. 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 132.

SOUTH SEA FUND. The produce of the taxes appropriated to pay the interest of such part of the English national debt as was advanced by the South Sea Company and its annuitants. The holders of South Sea annuities have been paid off, or have received other stock in lieu thereof. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 578.

SOVEREIGNTY. The union and exercise of all human power possessed in a state. It is a combination of all power; it is the power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like. Story, Const. § 207.

Abstractly, sovereignty resides in the body of the nation, and belongs to the people; but these powers are generally exercised by delegation.

When analyzed, sovereignty is naturally divided into three great powers, namely, the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary. The first is the power to make new laws, and to correct and repeal the old; the second is the power to execute the laws, both at home and abroad; and the last is the power to apply the laws to particular facts, to judge the disputes which arise among the citizens, and to punish crimes.

Strictly speaking, in our republican forms of government the absolute sovereignty of the nation is in the people of the nation; and the residuary sovereignty of each state, not granted to any of its public functionaries, is in the people of the state. 2 Dall. (U. S.) 471. And see, generally, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 433, 455; 3 Dall. (U. S.) 93; 1 Story, Const. § 208; 1 Toul-lier. Dr. Civ. note 20; Merlin, Repert.

SOWMING and ROWMING. In Scotch law. Terms used to express the form by which the number of cattle brought upon a common by those having a servitude of pasturage may be justly proportioned to the rights of the different persons possessed of the servitude. Bell, Dict.

SOWNE. In old English law. To be leviable. An old exchequer term applied to sheriff's returns. "Estreats that sowne not" were such as could not be collected. 4 Inst. 107; Cowell; Spelman.

SPADONES (Lat.) In civil law. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate. Inst. 1. 11. 9; Dig. 1. 7. 2. 1. And see "Impotence."

SPARSIM (Lat.) Here and there; in a scattered manner; sparsedly; dispersedly.

It is sometimes used in law; for example, the plaintiff may recover the place wasted, not only where the injury has been total, but where trees growing sparsim in a close are cut. Bac. Abr. "Waste" (M); Brownl. 240; Co. Litt. 54a; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3690.

SPATAE PLACITUM. A court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents. Cowell.

SPEAKING DEMURRER. In pleading. One which alleges new matter in addition to that contained in the bill as a cause for demurrer. 4 Brown, Ch. 254; 2 Ves. Jr. 83; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 374.

SPECIAL. That which relates to a particular species or kind, or is confined to a particular person, object or class, opposed to general; as, special verdict and general verdict; special imparlance and general imparlance; special jury, or one selected for a particular case, and general jury; special issue and general issue, etc.

SPECIAL ACCEPTANCE. A qualified acceptance of a bill of exchange, as by stipulating for payment at a certain time or place.

SPECIAL ACT. A private statute (q. v.)

SPECIAL ADMINISTRATION. See "Administration."

SPECIAL AGENT. An agent whose authority is confined to a particular or an individual instance. It is a general rule that he who is invested with a special authority must act within the bounds of his authority, and he cannot bind his principal beyond what he is authorized to do. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1299; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 174. See "Agent."

SPECIAL ALLOWANCES. In taxing the costs of an action as between party and party, the taxing officer is, in certain cases, empowered to make special allowances; i. e., to allow the party costs which the ordinary scale does not warrant.

SPECIAL APPEARANCE. See "Appearance."

SPECIAL ASSESSMENT. A species of taxation to pay for local improvements for public purposes upon real property, which recognizes the general public interest, but rests upon the theory that such property, by reason of locality, is specially benefited by the improvement. 246 Ill. 52; 190 Ill. 476; 155 Ill. 271; 133 Ill. 469.

SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT. In practice. An action of assumpsit brought on a special contract, which the plaintiff declares upon, setting out its particular language or its legal effect.

It is distinguished from a general assumpsit, where the plaintiff, instead of setting out the particular language or effect of the original contract, declares as for a debt arising out of the execution of the contract, where that constitutes the debt. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3426.

SPECIAL BAIL. See "Bail."

SPECIAL BASTARD. One born of parents before marriage, the parents afterwards intermarrying. See "Bastard."

SPECIAL BENEFITS. Any benefits not conjectural or speculative, which result to the market value of property as a result of an improvement are special benefits. 267 Ill. 124.

SPECIAL CASE. The name given in English practice to an agreed statement of facts, on which a cause is submitted to the court without trial. Also the statement of facts on which a point reserved for further consideration or for reference to another court is heard.

SPECIAL CLAIM. In English law. A claim not enumerated in the orders of 22d April, 1850, which required the leave of the court of chancery to file it. Such claims are abolished.

SPECIAL COMMISSION. In English law. An extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the crown to the judges when it is necessary that offenses should be immediately tried and punished. Wharton.

SPECIAL CONSTABLE. A person appointed and sworn as a constable in an emergency to augment the constabulary, or to serve during disability or disqualification of the constable.

SPECIAL CONTRACT. A specialty.

SPECIAL COUNT. A statement of the facts of the particular case, as opposed to the common counts (q. v.)

SPECIAL CUSTOM. A local custom. See "Custom."

SPECIAL DAMAGES. The damages recoverable for the actual injury incurred through the peculiar circumstance of the individual case, above and beyond those presumed by law from the general nature of the wrong. See "Damages."

SPECIAL DEMURRER. In pleading. One which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection and the particular ground of the exception. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3022. See "Demurrer."

SPECIAL DEPOSIT. A deposit made of a particular thing with the depositary. It is distinguished from an irregular deposit.

—In Banking Law. A deposit which is to be returned in specie.

SPECIAL ELECTION. An election specially called for an emergency, as opposed to general election (q. v.)

SPECIAL ERRORS. Special pleas in error are those which assign for error matters in confession and avoidance, as a release of errors, the act of limitations, and the like, to which the plaintiff in error may reply or demur.

SPECIAL EXAMINER. An examiner in chancery appointed to take evidence in a particular suit.

SPECIAL EXECUTION. A special execution is process upon which a sale of property is had which has already been levied upon by writ of attachment and is in the custody of the law. 198 Ill. 494.

SPECIAL EXECUTOR. See "Executor."

SPECIAL FINDING. A finding by the jury of a particular ultimate fact material to the issue.

SPECIAL GUARANTY. See "Guaranty."

SPECIAL GUARDIAN. A guardian of limited or temporary power in respect of his ward, or of his ward's estate. A guardian of a particular fund, appointed because of the general guardian's adverse interest, or one who exercises general powers during a limited time, as where the general guardian is disqualified or incapacitated, are examples. In the broadest sense, guardians ad litem are special, but the term is not usually applied to them, and under the laws of some states, notably New York, they are distinct.

SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In pleading. An imparlance which contains the clause, "saving to himself all advantages and exceptions, as well to the writ as to the declaration aforesaid." 2 Chit. Pl. 407, 408. See "Imparlance."

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT. An indorsement of a note or bill, naming the indorsee.

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT OF WRIT. In English practice. The writ of summons in an action may, under Order iii. 6, be indorsed with the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered in the action, after giving credit for any payment or set-off; and this special indorsement (as it is called) of the writ is applicable in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising upon a contract, express or implied, as, for instance, on a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other simple contract debt, or on a bond or contract under seal for payment of a liquidated amount of money, or on a statute where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money, or in the nature of a debt, or on a guaranty, whether under seal or not. Brown.

SPECIAL ISSUE. In pleading. A plea to the action which denies some particular material allegation, which is in effect a denial of the entire right of action. It differs from the general issue, which traverses or denies the whole declaration or indictment. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38. See "General Issue."

SPECIAL JURISDICTION. Limited jurisdiction.

SPECIAL JURY. One selected in a particular way by the parties. See "Jury."

SPECIAL LAW. See "Statute."

SPECIAL LEGACY. A "specific legacy" (q. v.)

SPECIAL LIEN. A particular lien. See "Lien."

SPECIAL LIMITATION. A qualification serving to make out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event without action, entry or claim, before it would, or might, otherwise expire by force of, or according to, the general limitation. A special limitation may be created by the words "until," "so long," "till," "whilst" and "during." 59 Pa. St. 340.

SPECIAL MALICE. Express malice. See "Malice."

SPECIAL MATTER. Matter of special defense admitted under the general issue by a relaxation of the common-law rules of pleading. 3 Bl. Comm. 306. See "Special Plea."

SPECIAL MEETING. A meeting called for and limited to the transaction of a specified business. Applied to corporate meetings, including meetings of municipal councils or assemblies.

SPECIAL MOTION. A special motion is a motion addressed to the discretion of the court, and which must be heard and determined, as distinguished from one which may be granted of course. 173 Mich. 109.

SPECIAL NON EST FACTUM. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that the deed which he has executed is not his own, or binding upon him, because of some circumstance which shows that it was not intended to be his deed, or because it was not binding upon him for some lawful reason; as, when the defendant delivered the deed to a third person as an escrow to be delivered upon a condition, and it has been delivered without the performance of the condition, he may plead non est factum, state the fact of the conditional delivery, the nonperformance of the condition, and add, "and so it is not his deed;" or if the defendant be a feme covert, she may plead non est factum, that she was a feme covert at the time the deed was made, "and so it is not her deed." Bac. Abr. "Please," etc. (H 8, I 2); Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 64. See "Issint."

SPECIAL OCCUPANT. When an estate is granted to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, and the grantee die without alienation, and while the life for which he held continues, the heir will succeed, and is called a "special occupant." 2 Bl. Comm. 259. In the United States, the statute provisions of the different states vary considerably upon this subject. In New York and New Jersey, special occupancy is abolished. Virginia, and probably Maryland, follow the English statutes. In Massachusetts and other states, where the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed in the same way and manner, the question does not seem to be material. 4 Kent, Comm. 27.

SPECIAL OFFICER. One who has been appointed a constable for a particular occasion, as in the case of an actual tumult or a riot, or for the purpose of serving a particular process.

SPECIAL OWNER. One having a special property. See "Property."

SPECIAL PAPER. A list kept in the English courts of common law, and now in the queen's bench, common pleas, and exchequer divisions of the high court, in which list demurrers, special cases, etc., to be argued are set down. It is distinguished from the new trial paper, peremptory paper, crown paper, revenue paper, etc., according to the practice of the particular division.

SPECIAL PARTNER. See "Partner."

SPECIAL PARTNERSHIP. See "Partnership."

SPECIAL PLEA. A plea which alleged matter to distinguish away or palliate the charge in the declaration. They were various, limitations and estoppel being examples of matters so to be pleaded.

SPECIAL PLEA IN BAR. One which advances new matter. It differs from the general in this, that the latter denies some material allegation, but never advances new matter. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38.

SPECIAL PLEADER. In English practice. A lawyer whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements submitted to him, either in writing or verbally, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of the general course. 2 Chit. Prac. 42.

SPECIAL PLEADING. The science of pleading.

The allegation of special or new matter to avoid the effect of the previous allegations of the opposite party, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 246; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (E 15).

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS. A phrase used in the codes of procedure to denote all proceedings other than actions; generally, any proceeding in a court which was not under the common law and equity practice either an action at law or a suit in chancery is a special proceeding. 117 Cal. 387; Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 112.

SPECIAL PROPERTY. That property in a thing which gives a qualified or limited right. See "Property."

SPECIAL REQUEST. A request actually made, at a particular time and place. This term is used in contradistinction to a "general request," which need not state the time when nor place where made. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2843.

SPECIAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See "Restraint of Trade."

SPECIAL RULE. A rule or order of court made in a particular case, for a particular purpose. It is distinguished from a "general rule," which applies to a class of cases. It differs also from a "common rule," or "rule of course."

SPECIAL SERVICE. In Scotch law. That form of service by which the heir is served to the ancestor who was feudally vested in the lands. Bell, Dict.

SPECIAL SESSIONS. In English law. A meeting of two or more justices of the peace, held for a special purpose (such as the licensing of alehouses), either as required by statute, or when specially convoked, which can only be convened after notice to all the other magistrates of the division, to give them an opportunity of attending. See "Statute."

SPECIAL STATUTE. A private statute. See "Statute."

SPECIAL TAIL. Where an estate tail is limited to the children of two given parents, as to "A. and the heirs of his body by B., his wife." 1 Steph. Comm. 244.

SPECIAL TERM. A term of court called for a special occasion, as distinguished from the regular terms held at times appointed by law.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE. See "Traverse."

SPECIAL TRUST. A special trust is one where a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in the case of a simple trust, a mere passive depository of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. 115 Ill. 668. See "Trust."

SPECIAL VERDICT. In practice. A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges, as where the jury instead of finding for either party, find and state all the facts at issue, and conclude conditionally, that if upon the whole matter thus found, the court should be of the opinion that the plaintiff has a good cause of action, they then find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages; if otherwise, then for the defendant. 129 Ill. 142. See "Verdict."

SPECIALIA GENERALIBUS DEROGANT. Special words derogate from general words. A special provision as to a particular subject matter is to be preferred to general language, which might have governed in the absence of such special provision. L. R. 1 C. P. 546.

SPECIALTY. A writing sealed and delivered, containing some agreement. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 503; Willes, 189; 1 P. Wms. 130; 10 Ga. 167. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified. Bac. Abr. "Obligation" (A).

Although in the body of the writing it is not said that the parties have set their hands and seals, yet if the instrument be really sealed, it is a specialty, and, if it be not sealed, it is not a specialty, although the parties in the body of the writing make mention of a seal. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 504; 2 Coke, 5a. See "Bond;" "Debt;" "Obligation."

SPECIALTY DEBT. A debt due or acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal. 2 Bl. Comm. 465.

SPECIE. Metallic money issued by public authority.

This term is used in contradistinction to "paper money," which in some countries is emitted by the government, and is a mere engagement which represents specie. Bank paper in the United States is also called "paper money." See "In Specie."

SPECIES (Lat.) In the civil law. Form; figure; fashion or shape; a form or shape given to materials. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 277, § 265.

A particular thing; as distinguished from "genus."

—Zoology. A species embraces individuals of the same kind, and all of the individuals having the same characteristics. It embraces all individuals that are precisely alike in every character, and not capable of change by any accidental circumstances, and capable of uniform, invariable and permanent continuance by natural propagation. Or, it is founded on identity of form and structure, both external and internal—the principal characteristics of species in animals being the power to produce beings like themselves, and who are themselves naturally productive. 69 Ill. 471.

SPECIES FACTI (Lat.) The particular kind of act. Ainsworth.

SPECIFIC. Having a certain form or designation; observing a certain form; particular; precise. Burrill.

SPECIFIC DEVISES. Devisees of lands particularly specified in the terms of the devise, as opposed to general and residuary devisees of land, in which the local or other particular descriptions are not expressed. For example, "I devise my Hendon Hall estate" is a specific devise; but "I devise all my lands," or, "all other my lands," is a general devise or a residuary devise. But all devisees are, in effect, specific; even residuary devisees being so. L. R. 3 Ch. 420; L. R. 10 Ch. 136; Brown.

SPECIFIC LEGACY. A bequest of a particular thing, so described that it may be identified. The description may be such as to distinguish a particular article among several of the class owned by testator, or it may embrace all the property of a class owned by him. Thus, a legacy of "one set of blacksmith's tools" is general (8 N. Y. 520); but a legacy of "the diamond ring presented to me by A.," or of "all the personal property on the farm or in the house at the time of my death" (30 Hun [N. Y.] 531), is specific.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The actual accomplishment of a contract by the party bound to fulfill it.

An equitable remedy to compel the precise or substantial performance of a contract.

The right to the remedy was in its origin dependent on the inadequacy of the legal remedy by suit for damages, but this rule has been very much relaxed. 2 N. Y. 60; 7 Ill. 327.

SPECIFICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. The process by which, from material either of one kind or different kinds, either belonging to the person using them or to another, a new form or thing is created; as, if from gold or silver a cup be made, or from grapes' wine. Calv. Lex. Whether the property in the new article was in the owner of the materials, or in him who effected the change, was a matter of contest between the two great sects of Roman lawyers. Stair, Inst. p. 204, § 41; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 241.

SPECIFICATION. A particular and detailed account of a thing.

For example, in order to obtain a patent for an invention, it is necessary to file a specification or an instrument of writing, which must lay open and disclose to the public every part of the process by which the invention can be made useful. If the specification does not contain the whole truth relative to the discovery, or contains more than is requisite to produce the desired effect, and the concealment or addition was made for the purpose of deception, the patent would be void; for if the specification were insufficient on account of its want of clearness, exactitude, or good faith, it would be a fraud on society that the patentee should obtain a monopoly without giving up his invention. 2 Kent, Comm. 300; 1 Bell, Comm. pt. 2, c. 3, § 1, p. 112; Perpigna, Pat. 67; Renouard des Brevets d'Inv. 252. See "Patent."

—In Military Law. The clear and particular description of the charges preferred against a person accused of a military offense. Tytler, Mil. Law, 109.

SPECIFY. To mention specifically or explicitly, to state in full or explicit terms or explicitly and in detail, name expressly, distinctly and particularly. 145 Iowa 424, 431.

SPECIMEN. A sample; a part of something by which the other may be known.

Act Cong. July 4, 1836, § 6, requires the inventor or discoverer of an invention or discovery to accompany his petition and specification for a patent with specimens of ingredients, and of the composition of matter, sufficient in quantity for the purpose of experiment, where the invention or discovery is of the composition of matter.

SPECULATION. The hope or desire of making a profit by the purchase and resale of a thing. Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 12. The profit so made; as, he made a good speculation.

SPECULATIVE DAMAGES. See "Damages."

SPECULUM (Lat.) Mirror or looking glass. The title of several of the most ancient law books or compilations. One of the ancient Icelandic books is styled Speculum Regale. In the preface to this work, four others, bearing the same title of Speculum, are referred to. There is also a collection of the ancient laws of Pomerania and Prussia, under the same title. Barr. Obs. St. 1, 2, note (b).

SPEEDY EXECUTION. An execution which, by the direction of the judge at nisi prius, issues forthwith, or on some early day fixed upon by the judge for that purpose after the trial of the action. Brown.

SPEEDY TRIAL. A trial brought on as speedily as the prosecution can reasonably be expected or required to be ready for it. 4 Nev. 113; 74 Iowa 369.

SPENDTHRIFT. A person who, by excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or debauchery of any kind, shall so spend, waste, or lessen his estate as to expose himself or his family to want or suffering, or expose the town to charge or expense for the support of himself or family. Rev. St. Vt. c. 65, § 9.

SPENDTHRIFT TRUST. A trust created for the purpose of providing for the maintenance of a person, and at the same time putting the property from which such maintenance is derived beyond the reach of the improvidence of the beneficiary. It is generally held that such trusts are ineffective, on the ground that the beneficial interest of the cestui que trust, whatever it may be, is liable for his debts (5 [Wall.] U. S. 441; 15 Ohio St. 419); but in some states, such trust provisions have been upheld (20 Mo. App. 1; 86 Tenn. 81).

SPERATE (Lat. spero, to hope.) That of which there is hope.

In the accounts of an executor and the inventory of the personal assets, he should distinguish between those which are sperate and those which are desperate. He will be prima facie responsible for the former, and discharged for the latter. 1 Chit. Prac. 520; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 644; Toller, Ex'rs, 248. See "Desperate."

SPES EST VIGILANTIS SOMNIUM. Hope is the dream of the vigilant. 4 Inst. 203.

SPES IMPUNITATIS CONTINUUM AFFECTUM tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

SPES RECUPERANDI (Lat. the hope of recovery). A term applied to cases of capture of an enemy's property as a booty or prize, while it remains in a situation in which it is liable to be recaptured. As between the belligerent parties, the title to the property taken as a prize passes the moment there is no longer any hope of recovery. 2 Burrows, 683.

SPINSTER. An addition given, in legal writings, to a woman who never was married. Lovelace, Wills, 269.

SPIRITUAL CORPORATIONS. Corporations, the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. They are of two sorts,—sole, as bishops, certain deans, parsons, and vicars, or aggregate, as dean and chapter, prior and convent, etc.

SPIRITUAL COURTS. Ecclesiastical courts (q. v.)

SPIRITUAL LORDS. The archbishops and bishops of the house of lords. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 328.

SPIRITUALISM. A belief in the power of departed spirits to communicate with the living by means of mediums. 160 Ill. App. 642.

SPIRITUALITY OF BENEFICES. The tithes of land, etc.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS. These are intoxicating liquids produced by distillation, and forming an article of commerce. 1 Exch. 281. The term does not include fermented liquors. 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 118.

SPITAL, or SPITTLE. A charitable foundation; a hospital for diseased people. Cowell.

SPIKE FENCE. A fence erected maliciously and with no other purpose than to shut out the light and air from a neighbor's window. Such a fence is a nuisance, for no man has a right to build and maintain an entirely useless structure for the sole purpose of injuring his neighbor. 151 N. C. 434, 440, 19 Ann. Cas. 473, 475. 68 Ill. 479.

SPLIT. See "Gambling Contract."

SPLITTING A CAUSE OF ACTION. The bringing an action for only a part of the cause of action. This is not permitted either at law or in equity. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4167.

SPOLIATION.

—In English Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a suit sued out in the spiritual court to recover for the fruits of the church, or for the church itself. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 85.

A waste of church property by an ecclesiastical person. 3 Bl. Comm. 90.

—In Torts. Destruction of a thing by the act of a stranger; as, the erasure or alteration of a writing by the act of a stranger is called "spoliation;" as contradistinguished from "alteration." 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 344. This has not the effect to destroy its character or legal effect. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566.

—In Admiralty Law. By spoliation is also understood the total destruction of a thing; as, the spoliation of papers by the captured party is generally regarded as a proof of guilt; but in America it is open to explanation except in certain cases, where there is a vehement presumption of bad faith. 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 241; 1 Dods. Adm. 480, 486. See "Alteration."

SPOLIATOR (Lat. from spoliare, to despoil). In old English law. A despoiler; a disseisor. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2, §§ 19, 20, 22.

A destroyer (of a deed). See "In Odium Spoliatoris."

—Of Evidence. One who wilfully withholds evidence in his possession or under his control, such as books, maps, contracts, etc., is a spoliator of evidence; his conduct being attributed to his supposed knowledge that the truth would have operated against him. 138 Ill. 539.

SPOLIATUS DEBET ANTE OMNIA RESTITUI. He who has been despoiled ought to be restored before anything else. 2 Inst. 714; 4 Bl. Comm. 353.

SPOLIUM. In the civil and common law. A thing violently or unlawfully taken from another. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 261, note.

SPONDEO (Lat.) In the civil law. I undertake; I engage. Inst. 3. 16. 1.

SPONDES? SPONDEO (Lat.) Do you undertake? I do undertake. The most common form of verbal stipulation in the Roman law. Inst. 3. 16. 1.

SPONDET PERITIAM ARTIS. He promises to use the skill of his art. Poth. de Contr. du Louage, note 425; Jones, Bailm. 22, 53, 62, 97, 120; Domat, liv. 1, tit. 4, § 8, note 1; 1 Story, Bailm. § 431; 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 459; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1004.

SPONSALIA, or STIPULATIO SPONSALITIA (Lat.) A promise lawfully made between persons capable of marrying each other, that at some future time they will marry. See "Esponsals;" Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

SPONSIA JUDICIALIS. The feigned issue of the Romans. See "Feigned Issue."

SPONSIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An engagement or undertaking; particularly such as was made in the form of an answer to a formal interrogatory by the other party. Calv. Lex.; Dig. 50. 16. 7.

An engagement to pay a certain sum of money to the successful party in a cause. Calv. Lex.

SPONSIO LUDICRA (Lat.)

—In Scotch Law. A trifling or ludicrous engagement, such as a court will not sustain an action for. 1 Kames, Eq. Introd. 34.

—In the Civil Law. An informal undertaking, or one made without the usual formula of interrogation. Calv. Lex.

SPONSIONS. In international law. Agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals, in time of war, either without authority or by exceeding the limits of authority under which they purport to be made.

Before these conventions can have any binding authority on the state, they must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification. The former is given in positive terms and in the usual forms; the latter is justly implied from the fact of acting under the agreement as if bound by it, and from any other circumstance from which an assent may be fairly presumed. Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 2, § 3; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 15, § 16; Id. lib. 3, c. 22, §§ 1-3; Vattel. Law Nat. bk. 2, c. 14, §§ 209-212; Wolff. Inst. § 1156.

SPONSOR. In civil law. He who intervenes for another voluntarily and without being requested. The engagement which he enters into is only accessory to the principal. See Dig. 17. 1. 18; Nov. 4. 1; Code de Comm. arts. 158, 159; Code Nap. 1236; Wolff. Inst. § 1556.

SPONTE OBLATA. A free gift or present to the crown.

SPONTE VIRUM FUGIENS MULIER ET adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, loses her dower, unless her husband takes her back of his own accord. Co. Litt. 37.

SPORTING HOUSES. Houses of ill fame. 202 Ill. 66.

SPORTULA, or SPORTELLA. A dole or largess, either of meat or money, given by princes or great men to the poor. It was properly the pannier or basket in which the meat was brought, or with which the poor went to beg it, thence the word was transferred to the meat itself, and thence to money sometimes given in lieu of it. Enc. Lond.

SPOUSALS. In old English law. Mutual promises to marry.

SPOUSE BREACH. In old English law. Adultery. Cowell.

SPREAD. See "Gambling Contract."

SPRINGING USE. A use limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor, or remains in him in the meantime. Gilb. Uses (Sugden Ed.) 153, note; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 498.

A future use, either vested or contingent, limited to arise without any preceding limitation. Cornish, Uses, 91.

It differs from a remainder in not requiring any other particular estate to sustain it than the use resulting to the one who creates it, intermediate between its creation and the subsequent taking effect of the springing use. Dyer, 274; Poll. 65; 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 34; 4 Dru. & W. 27; 1 Mod. 238; 1 Me. 271. It differs from an executory devise in that a devise is created by will, a use by deed. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 385 (Butler's note); Wilson, Uses. It differs from a shifting use, though often confounded therewith. See, generally, 2 Washb. Real Prop. 281. See "Use."

SPULZIE (spoliatio). In Scotch law. The taking away movables without the consent of the owner or order of law. Stair, Inst. 96, § 16; Bell, Dict.

SPURIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A bastard; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, otherwise called vulgo quaestus, or conceptus. Inst. 1. 10. 12.

One born of an unlawful intercourse (ex nuptiis injustis, or ex damnato coitu). Inst. 1. 10. 12; Bracton, fol. 63.

SPY. One who penetrates secretly or in disguise or by false pretenses within military lines for the purpose of obtaining information to be used to the disadvantage of the forces so spied upon.

SQUATTER. One who settles on the lands of others without any legal authority. This term is applied particularly to persons who settle on the public land. 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 293; 5 Biss. (U. S.) 530.

SQUEEZED. See "Gambling Contract."

STAB. To make a wound with a pointed instrument. A stab differs from a cut or a wound. 3 La. Ann. 514; Russ. & R. 356; Russ. Crimes, 597; Bac. Abr. "Maihem" (B).

STABILIA. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed land in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ. Wharton.

STABIT PRAESUMPTIO DONEC Probetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand good until the contrary is proved. Hob. 297; 3 Bl. Comm. 371; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 852; 16 Mass. 87.

STABLE STAND. In forest law. One of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man was convicted of an intent to steal the king's deer in the forest. This was when a man was found at his standing in the forest with a cross-bow or long-bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip. Cowell.

STABULARII (Lat. pl. of stabularius). In the civil law. Stable keepers; hostlers; qui stabulum exercent. Dig. 4. 9. 1. 5; Story, Bailm. § 464.

STAGE RIGHT. Words which it has been attempted to introduce as a substitute for "the right of representation and performance," but it can hardly be said to be an accepted term of English or American law.

STAGNUM (Lat.) A pool. It is said to consist of land and water, and therefore by the name of stagnum the water and the land may be passed. Co. Litt. 5.

STAKE. A sum of money or other valuable thing, the ownership of which is in dispute, or to which one or more have contributed, or own, who agree that it shall become the sole property of some person or persons upon the happening, in the future of an event at present uncertain. The person chosen as custodian of the property is called the stakeholder (q. v.) 81 N. Y. 539.

STAKEHOLDER. A third person chosen by two or more persons to keep in deposit property the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to the one who shall establish his right to it. Thus, each of them is considered as depositing the whole thing. This distinguishes this contract from that which takes place when two or more tenants in common deposit a thing with a bailee. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 7, § 4; 1 Vern. 44, note 1.

A person having in his hands money or other property claimed by several others is considered in equity as a stakeholder. 1 Vern. 144.

The stakeholder cannot be regarded as a party to an illegal contract, or in pari delicto. He is a mere depository, with a naked authority to deliver it over on the proposed contingency. If the authority is actually revoked before the money or thing is paid over or delivered, it remains a naked deposit to the use of the depositor. 32 Ill. App. 116; 2 Ill. 32.

STALE DEMAND. A claim which has been for a long time undemanded; as, for example, where there has been a delay of twelve years unexplained. 3 Mason (U. S.) 161.

STALLAGE (Saxon, stal). The liberty or right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same. Blount; Wharton; 6 Q. B. 31.

STALLARIUS (Lat.) In Saxon law. The praefectus stabuli, now master of the horse (Saxon, stalstabulum). Blount. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, p. 13.

STAMP. An impression made by order of the government, on paper, which must be used in reducing certain contracts to writing, for the purpose of raising a revenue. See Starkie, Ev.; 1 Phil. Ev. 444.

A paper bearing an impression or device authorized by law, and adapted for attachment to some subject of duty or excise.

The term in American law is used often in distinction from "stamped paper," which latter meaning, as well as that of the device or impression itself, is included in the broader signification of the word.

Stamps or stamped paper are prepared under the direction of officers of the government, and sold at a price equal to the duty or excise to be collected. The stamps are affixed and cancelled; and where stamped paper is used, one use obviously prevents a second use. The internal revenue acts of the United States of 1862 and subsequent years require stamps to be affixed to a great variety of subjects, under severe penalties in the way of fines, and also under penalty of invalidating written instruments, and rendering them incapable of being produced in evidence.

STAND. To abide by a thing; to submit to a decision; to comply with an agreement; to have validity; as, the judgment must stand.

STANDARD.

—In War. An ensign or flag used in war.

—In Measures. A weight or measure of certain dimensions, to which all other weights and measures must correspond; as, a standard bushel. Also, the quality of certain metals, to which all others of the same kind ought to be made to conform; as, standard gold, standard silver.

STANDING ASIDE. A practice prevailing in England and a few of the United States in the selection of jurors in a criminal case, whereby the prosecuting attorney may peremptorily put aside a juror without challenge until the panel is exhausted, at which time the jurors so put aside are called, and cause must be shown against them.

STANDING MUTE. Refusal of one charged with crime to plead to the charge, or, after plea of not guilty, to put himself upon the country.

STANDING SEISED TO USES. See "Covenant to Stand Seized to Uses."

STANNARY COURTS (stannary, from Lat. stannum, Cornish, stean, tin,—a tin mine). In English law. Courts of record, in Devonshire and Cornwall, England, for the administration of justice among the tanners therein. They are of the same limited and exclusive nature as those of the counties palatine.

STAPLE. In international law. The right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandises and wares to sale, but in a certain place.

This practice is not in use in the United States. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 103; 4 Inst. 238; Malone, Lex. Merc. 237; Bac. Abr. "Execution" (B 1). See "Statute Staple."

STAR CHAMBER. See "Court of Star Chamber."

STARE DECISIS. To abide by or adhere to decided cases. It is a general rule that, when a point has been settled by a decision, it becomes a precedent which should be followed in subsequent cases before the same court. The rule is based wholly on policy, in the interest of uniformity and certainty of the law, but is frequently departed from. See "Rule of Property."

STARE DECISIS, ET NON QUIETA MOVERE. To adhere to precedents, and not to unsettle things which are established. 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 428; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 504, 507; 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 336, 340; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 119, 142; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 271, 323; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 592, 595; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 97, 106.

STARE IN JUDICIO (Lat.) To appear before a tribunal, either as plaintiff or defendant.

STAT PRO RATIONE VOLUNTAS. The will stands in place of a reason. 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 408, 411; 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 514, 525.

STAT PRO RATIONE VOLUNTAS POPULI. The will of the people stands in place of a reason. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 344, 376.

STATE (Lat. stare, to place, establish).
—In Governmental Law. A self-sufficient body of persons united together in one community for the defense of their rights, and to do right and justice to foreigners. In this sense, the state means the whole people united into one body politic; and the "state," and the "people of the state," are equivalent expressions. 1 Pet. Cond. Rep. (U. S.) 37-39; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 425; 3 Dall. (Pa.) 93; 2 Wilson, Lect. 120; Dane, Abr. Append. § 50, p. 63; 1 Story, Const. § 361. A body governmental and politic, comprising all the human beings within a certain defined territory, organized for the purpose of governing, and which does supremely govern, within the limits of that territory. The positive or actual organization of the legislative or judicial powers; thus, the actual government of the state is designated by the name of the state; hence the expression, the state has passed such a law or prohibited such an act. The section of territory occupied by a state; as, the state of Pennsylvania.

One of the commonwealths which form the United States of America.

—In Practice. To make known specifically; to explain particularly; as, to state an account, or to show the different items in an account; to state the cause of action in a declaration.

STATE OF FACTS AND PROPOSAL. In English lunacy practice, when a person has been found a lunatic; the next step is to submit to the master a scheme called a "state of facts and proposal," showing what is the position in life, property, and income of the lunatic, who are his next of kin and heir at law, who are proposed as his committees, and what annual sum is proposed to be allowed for his maintenance, etc. From the state of facts and the evidence adduced in support of it, the master frames his report. Elmer, Lun. 22; Pope, Lun. 79. A similar practice formerly prevailed in chancery.

STATE TRIALS. Trials of political offenders. Also the name of a series of reports of such trials held in England.

STATE'S EVIDENCE. A term used in the United States corresponding to the king's (or queen's) evidence of England.

STATED ACCOUNT. An acknowledgment of or agreement to an existing condition of liability of the parties, from which the law implies that all items therein are true and a promise to pay the balance thus acknowledged to be due. 246 Ill. 241; 121 Cal. 590; 71 Cal. 60.

STATED TERM. A regular term of court, held at the time fixed by law or rule.

STATEMENT. See "Particular Statement."

STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS. In English bankruptcy practice, a bankrupt or debtor who has presented a petition for liquidation or composition must produce at the first meeting of creditors a statement of his affairs, giving a list of his creditors, secured and unsecured, with the value of the securities, a list of bills discounted, and a statement of his property. Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 19.

STATEMENT OF CLAIM. A written or printed statement by the plaintiff in an action in the English high court, showing the facts on which he relies to support his claim against the defendant, and the relief which he claims. It is delivered to the defendant or his solicitor. The delivery of the statement of claim is usually the next step after appearance, and is the commencement of the pleadings. A somewhat similar procedure has been adopted in some courts in the United States.

STATEMENT OF DEFENSE. In the practice of the English high court, where the defendant in an action does not demur to the whole of the plaintiff's claim, he delivers a pleading called a "statement of defense." The statement of defense deals with the allegations contained in the statement of claim (or the indorsement on the writ, if there is no statement of claim), admitting or denying them, and, if necessary, stating fresh facts in explanation or avoidance of those alleged by the plaintiff.

STATEMENT OF PARTICULARS. In English practice, when the plaintiff claims a debt or liquidated demand, but has not indorsed the writ specially (i. e., indorsed on it the particulars of his claim under Order iii. r. 6), and the defendant fails to appear, the plaintiff may file a statement of the particulars of his claim, and after eight days enter judgment for the amount, as if the writ had been specially indorsed. Rules of Court xiii. 5.

STATIM (Lat.) Immediately.

STATING PART OF A BILL. See "Bill."

STATION. In civil law. A place where ships may ride in safety. Dig. 49. 12. 1. 13; Id. 50. 15. 59.

STATIONERS' HALL. St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, authorizes, in every case of copyright, the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall, and provides that, without previous registration, no action shall be commenced, though an omission to register is not otherwise to affect the copyright itself. It was founded A. D. 1558. 2 Hall, Hist. Lit. pt. 2, c. 8. p. 366; 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 37.

STATU LIBERI (Lat.) In Louisiana. Slaves for a time, who have acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which is not fulfilled, or in a certain event which has not happened, but who in the meantime remain in a state of slavery. Civ. Code La. art. 37. See 3 La. 176; 6 La. 571; 4 Mart. (La.) 102; 7 Mart. (La.) 351; 8 Mart. (La.) 219. This is substantially the definition of the civil law. Hist. de la Jur. lib. 40; Dig. 40. 7. 1; Code, 7. 2. 13.

STATUS (Lat.) The condition of persons. It also means "estate," because it signifies the condition or circumstances in which the owner stands with regard to his property. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1689.

STATUS DE MANERIO. The assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

STATUS QUO (Lat.) The existing state of things at any given date. Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war.

STATUTA PRO PUBLICO COMMODO late Interpretantur. Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 21.

STATUTA SUO CLAUDUNTUR TERRITORIO, nec ultra territorium disponunt. Statutes are confined to their own territory, and have no extraterritorial effect. 4 Allen (Mass.) 324.

STATUTABLE, or STATUTORY. That which is introduced or governed by statute law, as opposed to the common law or equity. Thus, a court is said to have statutory jurisdiction when jurisdiction is given to it in certain matters by statute.

STATUTE. A law established by the act of the legislative power; an act of the legislature; the written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state.

This word is used to designate the written law, in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See "Common Law."

Among the civilians, the term "statute" is generally applied to laws and regulations of every sort. Every provision of law which ordains, permits, or prohibits anything is designated a "statute," without considering from what source it arises. Sometimes the word is used in contradistinction from the imperial Roman law, which, by way of eminence, civilians call the "common law."

—In Old Common Law. A bond or obligation of record. See "Statute Merchant;" "Statute Staple."

Classification:

(1) An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms. Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law. 2 Inst. 200; Dwarr. St. 474. If, for example, a statute without negative words declares that, when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner as they might have been before the statute was passed. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 169. Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect. Dwarr. St. 474.

(2) A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been.

(3) A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (G).

(4) Penal statutes are those which command or prohibit a thing under a certain penalty. Espinasse, Pen. Act. 5; Bac. Abr. See, generally, Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig. "Parliament;" Viner, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; Chit. Prac.; 1 Kent, Comm. 447-459; Barr. Obs. St.; Boscawen, Pen. St.; Espinasse, Pen. Act.; Dwarr. St.; Sedgw. Const. Law. A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 273; 1 Bin. (Pa.) 110; 37 Eng. Law & Eq. 475; 14 N. H. 294; 4 Iowa 490; 7 Ind. 77.

(5) Mandatory statutes are such as imperatively require compliance.

(6) Directory statutes are such as may be violated without invalidating the acts done in violation of it.

(7) Permissive statutes are those which allow something without requiring it.

(8) A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so.

If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (D).

(9) A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment.

It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature, has only a single and temporary operation—e. g., an appropriation bill—is also called a “temporary statute.”

The most ancient English statute extant is Magna Charta. Formerly the statutes enacted after the beginning of the reign of Edw. III. were called Nova Statuta, or new statutes, to distinguish them from the ancient statutes. The modern English statutes are divided into public general acts, local and personal acts declared public, private acts printed, and private acts not printed. In parliamentary practice are adopted other distinctions, resting upon different grounds.

(10) A remedial statute is one made to supply such defects and abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. 1 Bl. Comm. 86.

These remedial statutes are themselves divided into

(a) “Enlarging” statutes, by which the common law is made more comprehensive and extended than it was before, and into

(b) “Restraining” statutes, by which it is narrowed down to that which is just and proper. The term “remedial statute” is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy, and in some respects such statutes are penal. Espinasse, Pen. Act. 1.

(11) Public statutes are those which affect the public at large, whether their operation be throughout the state, or in a particular locality. 93 N. C. 600.

(12) Private statutes are such as affect in a peculiar manner certain persons or classes. 43 N. Y. 10.

By the civilians, statutes are considered as real, personal, or mixed.

(1) Mixed statutes are those which concern at once both persons and property; but in this sense almost all statutes are mixed, there being scarcely any law relative to persons which does not at the same time relate to things.

(2) Personal statutes are those which have principally for their object the person, and treat of property only incidentally. Such are those which regard birth, legitimacy, freedom, the right of instituting suits, majority as to age, incapacity to contract, to make a will, to plead in person, and the like. A personal statute is universal in its operation, and in force everywhere.

(3) Real statutes are those which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons except in relation to property. Story, Conf. Laws, § 13. Such are those which concern the disposition which one may make of his property either alive or by testament. A real statute, unlike a personal one, is confinied in its operation to the country of its origin.

STATUTE FAIR. In English law. A fair at which laborers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called, also, “Mop.”

STATUTE MERCHANT. A security entered before the mayor of London, or some chief warden of a city, in pursuance of 13 Edw. I. st. 3, c. 1, whereby the lands of the debtor are conveyed to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them his debt may be satisfied. Cruise, Dig. tit. 14, § 7; 2 Bl. Comm. 160.

STATUTE OF ALLEGIANCE DE FACTO. Act 11 Hen. VII. c. 1, requiring subjects to give their allegiance to the actual king for the time being, and protecting them in so doing.

STATUTE OF DISTRIBUTION. A statute regulating the distribution of the estate of an intestate.

STATUTE OF ELIZABETH. St. 13 Eliz. c. 5, relating to fraudulent conveyances.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See “Frauds, Statute of.”

STATUTE OF USES. See “Use.”

STATUTE OF WILLS. The statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, by which the right of testamentary disposal of property in lands is created. 2 Bl. Comm. 375.

STATUTE ROLL. A roll upon which an English statute, after receiving the royal assent, was formerly entered.

STATUTE STAPLE. The statute of the staple (27 Edw. III. st. 2) confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called “estaple” or “staple,” where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called “statute staple,” to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce. The mayor of the place is entitled to take a recognizance of a debt in proper form, which has the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he may be satisfied. 2 Bl. Comm. 160; Cruise, Dig. tit. 14, § 10; 2 Rolle, Abr. 446; Bac. Abr. “Execution” (B 1); 4 Inst. 238.

STATUTI (Lat.) In Roman law. Those advocates whose names were inscribed in the registers of matriculation, and formed a part of the college of advocates. The number of advocates of this class was limited. They were distinguished from the supernumeraries from the time of Constantine to Justinian. See Calv. Lex.

STATUTORY EXPOSITION. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former act.

STATUTORY RELEASE. A conveyance which superseded the old compound assurance by lease and release. It was created by St. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, which abolished the lease for a year.

STATUTUM (Lat. statuere, to establish).

—In the Civil Law. Established; determined. A term applied to judicial action. Dig. 50. 16. 46. pr.

—In Old English Law. A statute; an act of parliament. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 10.

STATUTUM AFFIRMATIVUM NON DEROGAT COMMUNI LEGI. An affirmative statute does not take from the common law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 24.

STATUTUM DE MERCATORIBUS. The statute of Acton Burnell (q. v.)

STATUTUM EX GRATIA REGIS DICITUR, quando rex dignatur cedere de jure suo regno, pro commodo et quiete populi sui. A statute is said to be by the grace of the king when the king deigns to yield some portion of his royal rights for the good and quiet of his people. 2 Inst. 378.

STATUTUM GENERALITER EST INTELLIGENDUM quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, it is to be understood generally. 10 Coke, 101.

STATUTUM HIBERNIAE DE COHAEREDIBUS. St. 14 Hen. III. The third public act in the statute book. It has been pronounced not to be a statute. In the form of it, it appears to be an instruction given by the king to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained doubt. It seems the justices itinerant in that country had a doubt, when land descended to sisters, whether the younger sisters ought to hold of the eldest, and do homage to her for their several portions, or of the chief lord, and do homage to him; and certain knights had been sent over to know what the practice was in England in such a case. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 259.

STATUTUM SESSIONEM. In old English law. The statute session; a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

STATUTUM SPECIALE STATUTO SPECIALI NON DEROGAT. One special statute does not take away from another special statute. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 199.

STATUTUM WALLIAE (Lat.) The statute of Wales. The title of a statute passed in the twelfth year of Edw. I., being a sort of constitution for the principality of Wales, which was thereby, in a great measure, put on the footing of England with respect to its laws and the administration of justice. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 93-99.

STAY. The arresting of a judicial proceeding or process.

STAY LAWS. Laws suspending remedies against debtors. They are adopted during periods of financial distress or depression. There were numerous instances in acts passed by the legislatures of the American states which had been in rebellion against the Union during the few years which ensued after the war of the rebellion had closed. Adoption of similar measures of relief was practiced by a number of governments during the World War.

STAY OF EXECUTION. An arrest of the issuance of execution process on a judgment. It may be by direction of the judgment creditor for some cause which he conceives to be to his advantage, or it may be by composition or agreement, or it may be by way of a remedy in favor of the judgment debtor, by which, on the giving of approved security usually, the issue of process is postponed for a time fixed by statute. The statutory stay by giving security is the most commonly observed, and is the one to which the term usually refers.

STAY OF PROCEEDING. A suspension of proceedings in a cause, either by an order of the court in the cause, or by some proceeding such as (in some states) an appeal which operates ipso facto as a suspension.

STEALING. This term imports, ex vi termini, nearly the same as larceny (2 G. Greene [Iowa] 311) but in common parlance it does not always import a felony: as, for example, you stole an acre of my land.

In slander cases, it seems that the term "stealing" takes its complexion from the subject matter to which it is applied, and will be considered as intended of a felonious stealing, if a felony, could have been committed of such subject matter. Starkie. Sland. & L. 80; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; 3 Bin. (Pa.) 546.

STEALTH. Theft is so called by Finch. "Stealth is the wrongful taking of goods without pretense of title." Finch, Law, bk. 3, c. 17.

STEELBOW GOODS. Instruments of husbandry, cattle, corn, etc., delivered by a landlord to his tenant on condition that the like number of goods of like quality should be returned on expiration of the lease. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. 285, § 81.

STELLONATUS. In civil law. A name given generally to all species of frauds committed in making contracts.

This word is said to be derived from the Latin stellio, a kind of lizard remarkable for its cunning and the change of its color, because those guilty of frauds used every art and cunning to conceal them. But more particularly it was the crime of a person who fraudulently assigned, sold, or engaged the thing which he had before assigned, sold, or engaged to another, unknown to the person with whom he was dealing. Dig. 47. 20. 3; Code, 9. 34. 1; Merlin, Repert.; Civ. Code La. art. 2069; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 426.

STEP-RATE SYSTEM. A system of fraternal insurance by which the member pays each year or group of years according to the actual cost of the society of the protection furnished him, and thus increases each year or group of years as age increases, as distinguished from the level rate by which the member pays more than the actual cost in the earlier years and less than the actual cost in the later years. 188 Ill. App. 273, 274.

STERBRECHE, or STREBRICH. The breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way. Termes de la Ley.

STERE. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. It is a cubic meter. See "Measure."

STERILITY. Barrenness; incapacity to produce a child. It is curable and incurable. See "Impotence."

Incapacity of the male to impregnate, or of the female to conceive, when copulation is natural and complete. Keysor, Med. Leg. Manual, 219.

STERLING. Current money of Great Britain, but anciently a small coin worth about one penny, and so called, as some suppose, because it was stamped with the figure of a small star, or, as others suppose, because it was first stamped in England in the reign of King John by merchants from Germany, called "Esterlings." "Pounds sterling" originally signified so many pounds in weight of these coins. Thus, we find in Matthew Paris, A. D. 1242, the expression, Accepit a rege pro stipendio tredecim libras esterlingorum. The secondary or derived sense is a certain value in current money, whether in coins or other currency. Lowndes, 14; Watts.

STET BILLA. If the plaintiff in a plaint in the mayor's court of London has attached property belonging to the defendant, and obtained execution against the garnishee, the defendant, if he wishes to contest the plaintiff's claim, and obtain restoration of his property, must issue a scire facias ad disprobandum debitum. If the only question to be tried is the plaintiff's debt, the plaintiff, in appearing to the scire facias, prays stet billa. "that his bill original," i. e., his original plaint, "may stand, and that the defendant may plead thereto." The action then proceeds in the usual way as if the proceedings in attachment (which are founded on a fictitious default of the defendant in appearing to the plaint) had not taken place. Brand. For. Attachm. 115, and forms. See "Attachment."

STET PROCESSUS (Lat.) In practice. An order made, upon proper cause shown, that the process remain stationary. As, where a defendant, having become insolvent, would, by moving judgment in the case of nonsuit, compel a plaintiff to proceed, the court will, on an affidavit of the fact of insolvency, award a stet processus. See 7 Taunt. 180; 1 Chit. Bailm. 738; 10 Wentw. Pl. 43.

STEVEDORE. A person employed in loading and unloading vessels. He has no maritime lien on the ship for wages. Dunl. Adm. Prac. 98.

STEWARD OF ALL ENGLAND. In old English law. An officer who was invested with various powers, and, among others, it was his duty to preside on the trial of peers.

STEWES. In English law. Places formerly permitted in England to women of professed lewdness, and who for hire would prostitute their bodies to all comers.

These places were so called because the dissolute persons who visited them prepared themselves by bathing,—the word stews being derived from the old French estuves, stove, or hot bath. 3 Inst. 205.

STIFLING A PROSECUTION. Agreeing, in consideration of receiving a pecuniary or other advantage, to abstain from prosecuting a person for an offense not giving rise to a civil remedy, e. g., perjury. As a general rule, such an agreement invalidates any transaction of which it forms part. 6 Q. B. 308; 1 Campb. 45; L. R. 1 H. L. 200.

STILLICIDIUM (Lat.) In civil law. The rainwater that falls from the roof or eaves of a house by scattered drops. When it is gathered into a spout, it is called flumen.

Without the constitution of one or other of these servitudes, no proprietor can build so as to throw the rain that falls from his house directly on his neighbor's grounds; for it is a restriction upon all property, nemo potest immittere in alienum; and he who, in building, breaks through that restraint, truly builds on another man's property; because to whomsoever the area belongs, to him also belongs whatever is above it, cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum. 3 Burge, Confl. Laws, 405. See "Servitus;" Inst. 3. 2. 1; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

STINT. The proportionable part of a man's cattle which he may keep upon the common. The general rule is that the commoner shall not turn more cattle upon the common than are sufficient to manure and stock the land to which his right of common is annexed. There may be such a thing as common without stint or number; but this is seldom granted, and a grantee cannot grant it over. 3 Bl. Comm. 239; 1 Ld. Raym. 407.

STIPENDIARY ESTATES. Estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind. 1 Steph. Comm. 174.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES. In English law. Paid magistrates.

STIPULATED DAMAGE. Liquidated damage. See "Damages."

STIPULATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. A contract made in the following manner, viz.: The person to whom the promise was to be made proposed a question to him from whom it was to proceed, fully expressing the nature and extent of the engagement, and, the question so proposed being answered in the affirmative, the obligation was complete.

It was essentially necessary that both parties should speak (so that a dumb man could not enter into a stipulation), that the person making the promise should answer conformably to the specific question proposed, without any material interval of time, and with the intention of contracting an obligation. No consideration was required.

STIPULATIO AQUILIANA (Lat.) In Roman law, a particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the liabilities of every kind and quality of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract. Brown.

STIPULATION. A material article in an agreement.

The term appears to have derived its meaning from the use of stipulatio above given; though it is applied more correctly and more conformably to its original meaning to denote the insisting upon and requiring any particular engagement. 2 Poth. Obl. (Évans Ed.) 19. It is commonly applied to agreements between counsel in respect to matters of proceeding.

—In Admiralty Practice. A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law fide jussors) in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl. Comm. 108.

These stipulations are of three sorts, namely: Judicatum solvi, by which the party is absolutely bound to pay such sum as may be adjudged by the court; de judicio sisti, by which he is bound to appear from time to time during the pendency of the suit, and to abide the sentence; de ratio, or de rato, by which he engages to ratify the acts of his proctor. This stipulation is not usual in the admiralty courts of the United States.

The securities are taken in the following manner, namely: Cautio fide jussoria, by sureties; pignoratitia, by deposit; juratoria, by oath,—this security is given when the party is too poor to find sureties, at the discretion of the court; nude promissoria, by bare promise,—this security is unknown in the admiralty courts of the United States. Hall, Adm. Prac. 12; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 150, 151. See 17 Am. Jur. 51.

STIPULATOR. In the civil law, the party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation; the other party, or he who answered, being called the "promissor." But in a more general sense, the term was applied to both the parties. Calv. Lex.

STIRPES (Lat.) Descents. The root, stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family. See "Per Stirpes." 2 Bl. Comm. 209.

STOCK. The capital of a merchant or tradesman, including his money, merchandise, and credits. See "Capital." The goods and wares he has for sale and traffic.

—Of Corporations. The amount of money or property subscribed and paid in, or agreed to be paid in, by the shareholders. It is ordinarily divided into equal shares of a determined value, and apportioned among the stockholders in proportion to the amount which they have paid in, or for which they are liable.

Distinction has been made between the capital stock, which is an asset of the corporation, and the shares of stock, which are the property of the several shareholders. 34 Eng. & Am. Corp. Cas. 223.

STOCK BROKER. See "Brokers."

STOCK CERTIFICATES. A written acknowledgment by the corporation of the interest of a shareholder in the corporate property and franchises. It expresses the contract between the shareholder and the corporation and his co-shareholders. It is in the nature of an instrument evidencing a chose in action, but, properly speaking, it is not a chose in action. 5 Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations 5604.

STOCK DIVIDENDS. Dividends consisting of the issue of certificates of stock.

There is a clear distinction between a stock dividend and an extraordinary cash dividend, the latter being a disbursement to the stockholder of accumulated earnings, where the corporation at once parts irrevocably with all interest therein, while the former involves no disbursement by the corporation, which parts with nothing to the stockholder, the latter receiving, not an actual dividend, but certificates of stock which evidence in a new proportion his interest in the entire capital, including such as by investment of accumulated profits has been added to the original capital, 205 Ill. 314.

STOCK EXCHANGE. A building or room in which stock brokers meet to transact their business of purchasing or selling stocks.

An association of stock brokers for the purpose of transacting their business.

In large cities, the stock business is transacted through the medium of the members of the board of brokers. This is an association of stock brokers governed by rules and regulations made by themselves, to which all the members are obliged to subject themselves. Admission is procured by ballot, and a member defaulting in his obligations forfeits his seat. A regular register of all the transactions is kept by an officer of the association, and questions arising between the members are generally decided by an arbitration committee. The official record of sales is the best evidence of the price of any stock on any particular day. The stocks dealt in at the sessions of the board are those which are placed on the list by a regular vote of the association; and when it is proposed to add a stock to the list, a committee is appointed to examine into the matter, and the board is generally guided by the report of such committee. Sewell, Bankr.

STOCK JOBBING. A fictitious transaction in stocks by way of speculation. Also the title of an act relating to such transaction. See "Gambling Contract."

STOCK SUBSCRIPTION. A contract of subscription to the stock of a corporation by which the subscriber agrees to take a certain number of shares of the capital stock of a corporation, paying for the same, or expressly or impliedly promising to pay for the same. The effect of such a contract, the company being in existence at the time of the subscription, and having accepted the same, and the subscription being unconditional, is to make the subscriber a stockholder in the corporation, and to bind him to pay for his stock in accordance with the terms of his contract. 2 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 1120.

STOCKS. In criminal law. A machine, commonly made of wood, with holes in it, in which to confine persons accused of or guilty of crime.

It was used either to confine unruly offenders by way of security, or convicted criminals for punishment. This barbarous punishment has been generally abandoned in the United States.

STOCKHOLDER. The holder of shares of stock in a corporation or joint-stock company.

STOP ORDER.

—In English Chancery Practice. An order to prevent a fund in court from being paid out or otherwise dealt with without notice to a claimant.

—In Commercial Usage. An order to buy or sell on margins and close out at a set price. See under "Gambling Contract."

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. A resumption by the seller of the possession of goods not paid for, while on their way to the vendee, and before he has acquired actual possession of them. 15 Me. 314.

For most purposes, the possession of the carrier is considered to be that of the buyer; but by virtue of this right, which is an extension of the right of lien, the vendor may reclaim the possession before they reach the vendee, in case of the insolvency of the latter. 12 Pick. (Mass.) 313; 4 Gray (Mass.) 336; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 98; 8 Mees. & W. 341.

To give a right of stoppage in transitu, the sale must have been on credit, but the giving of a note is not payment unless so agreed (13 Me. 103), the buyer must be insolvent, and such insolvency must have been unknown at the time of the sale (102 N. C. 390; 27 Barb. [N. Y.] 663), and the goods must be in transit, i. e., they must not have come into the actual or constructive possession of the buyer (16 Neb. 614; 40 Iowa, 627).

STORES. The victuals and provisions collected together for the subsistence of a ship's company; of a camp; or any like body of men.

Store, as commonly used, is equivalent of the English "shop," when indicating a place where merchandise is sold, but in the broader sense it means a place of deposit; a storehouse. 53 Ala. 481; 25 Am. Rep. 643; Ann. Cas. 1913E 1126 note.

A restaurant and bakery may be carried on in a building insured for use as a store. 60 Mich. 425.

A shop is a place where goods are sold by retail. 15 Gray (Mass.) 197.

STOUTHRIEFF. In Scotch law. Formerly this word included in its signification every species of theft accompanied with violence to the person; but of late years it has become the vox signata for forcible and masterful depredation within or near the dwelling house; while "robbery" has been more particularly applied to violent depredation on the highway or accompanied by house breaking. Alis. Sc. Law, 227.

STOWAGE. In maritime law. The proper arrangement in a ship of the different articles of which a cargo consists, so that they may not injure each other by friction, or be damaged by the leakage of the ship.

STRADDLE. A privilege in the holder to demand of the seller at a certain price within a certain time certain property, or to require him to take, at the same price within the same time, the same property. 83 N. Y. 95. See "Gambling Contract."

STRAMINEUS HOMO. A man of straw.

STRANDING. In maritime law. The running of a ship or other vessel on shore. It is either accidental or voluntary.

Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves.

Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate, or for some fraudulent purpose. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 12, § 1.

In a Marine Insurance, "a touch and go" is not a stranding; in order to constitute a stranding, the ship must be stationary. 1 Starkie, 130; 4 M. & S. 503.

STRANGER. A person born out of the United States; but in this sense the term "alien" is more properly applied until he becomes naturalized.

A person who is not privy to an act or contract. Example, he who is a stranger to the issue shall not take advantage of the verdict. Brooke, Abr. "Record," pl. 3; Viner, Abr. 1. And see Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 54).

When a man undertakes to do a thing, and a stranger interrupts him, this is no excuse. Comyn, Dig. "Condition" (L 14). When a party undertakes that a stranger shall do a certain thing, he becomes liable as soon as the stranger refuses to perform it. Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (Q 4).

STRATAGEM. A deception, either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratagems, though contrary to morality, have been justified unless they have been accompanied by perfidy, injurious to the rights of humanity, as in the example given by Vattel of an English frigate, which, during a war between France and England, appeared off Calais and made signals of distress in order to allure some vessel to come to its relief, and seized a shallow and its crew who had generously gone out to render it assistance. Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 3, c. 9, § 178.

Sometimes stratagems are employed in making contracts. This is unlawful and fraudulent, and avoids the contract. See "Fraud."

STRATOCRACY. A military government; government by military chiefs of an army.

STRAW BAIL. Nominal or worthless bail. Professional sureties, so called, it is said, from an ancient custom of such persons of wearing a straw about their clothing, that they might be known to one in search of bail.

Common bail (q. v.)

STRAW MEN. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i. e., by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of "straw shoes." An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to find one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate. The party looked at the fee, and gave no sign; but the fee increased, and the powers of memory increased with it. "To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it!" And straw shoes went into court and swore it. Athens abounded in straw shoes. Quart. Rev. xxxiii, 344.

STRAY. See "Estray."

STREET. A public thoroughfare or highway in a city or village. 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 106; 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 399; 39 Ill. App. 474. See "Highway."

STREET RAILROAD. A railroad constructed on a street for the purpose of conveying passengers and to accommodate street travel, making frequent stops to take on and let off passengers and without regular stations; it conforms to the grade of the street and its fundamental purpose is to accommodate local street travel. 228 Ill. 273.

STREIGHTEN. In the old books. To narrow or restrict. "The habendum should not streighten the devise." 1 Leon. 58.

STREPITUS (Law Lat.) In old records. Estreperment or strip; a species of waste or destruction of property. Spelman.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION. A rule of judicial interpretation or exposition which follows closely the letter of the statute or instrument construed disfavoring any extension or relaxation of it by implication, favor, or equity; a close and conservative adherence to the literal or textual interpretation. It is not the exact converse of "liberal construction," for it does not consist in giving words the narrowest meaning of which they are susceptible. 267 Ill. 86.

STRICT FORECLOSURE. See "Foreclosure."

STRICT SETTLEMENT. A settlement of lands to the parent for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail, with an interposition of trustees to preserve the contingent remainders.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS (Lat. the most strict right or law). In general, when a person receives an advantage, as the grant of a license, he is bound to conform strictly to the exercise of the rights given him by it, and in case of a dispute it will be strictly construed. See 3 Story (U. S.) 159.

STRICTO JURE (Lat.) In strict law. 1 Kent, Comm. 65.

STRICTUM JUS (Lat.) The rigor of law, strict law, in contradistinction to equity.

STRIKE. Used as an abbreviated form of "strike out" or "strike off," as a motion "to strike" evidence.

The combined act or effort of workmen to obtain some concession by stopping work altogether at a preconceived time, and refusing to continue until the concession is granted. 255 Ill. 222.

STRIKING A DOCKET. In English practice. Entering the creditor's affidavit and bond in bankruptcy. 1 Deac. Bankr. 106.

STRIKING A JURY. In English practice. Where, for nicety of the matter in dispute, or other cause, a special jury is necessary, upon motion and rule granted thereon, the sheriff is to attend the prothonotary or proper officer with the book of freeholders, and to take indifferently forty-eight of the principal freeholders, when the attorneys on each side, being present, are to strike off twelve respectively, and the remaining twenty-four are returned. 3 Bl. Comm. 357. Essentially the same practice prevails in some of the states.

STRIKING OFF THE ROLL. Disbarment.

STRONG HAND. The words "with strong hand" imply a degree of criminal force, whereas the words vi et armis ("with force and arms") are mere formal words in the action of trespass, and the plaintiff is not bound to prove any force. The statutes relating to forcible entries use the words "with a strong hand," as describing that degree of force which makes an entry or detainer of lands criminal. See "Forcible Entry or Detainer."

STRUCK. In pleading. A word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arises from any wounding, beating, or bruising. 1 Bulst. 184; 5 Coke, 122; 3 Mod. 202; Cro. Jac. 655; Palmer, 282; 2 Hale, P. C. 184, 186, 187; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 23, § 82; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, *243; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 179.

STRUCK JURY. A special jury obtained by striking. See "Striking a Jury."

STRUCK OFF. A term applied to a case which the court, having no jurisdiction over, and not being able to give judgment, order to be taken off the record. This is done by an entry to that effect.

STRUCK OFF, or KNOCKED DOWN. Property is understood to be "struck off" or "knocked down" when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. 7 Hill (N. Y.) 431, 439.

STRUMPET. A harlot, or courtesan. The word was formerly used as an addition. Jacob.

STUFF GOWN. The robe of barristers who have not been made queen's or king's counsel. See "Silk Gown."

STULTIFY (Lat. stultus, stupid). To make one out mentally incapacitated for the performance of an act.

It has been laid down by old authorities (Litt. § 405; 4 Coke, 122; Cro. Eliz. 898) that no man should be allowed to stultify himself, i. e., plead disability through mental unsoundness. This maxim was soon doubted as law (1 Hagg. Ecc. 414; 2 Bl. Comm. 292), and has been completely overturned (4 Kent, Comm. 451).

STULTILOQUIUM. In old English law. Vicious or disorderly pleading, for which a fine was imposed by King John, supposed to be the origin of the fines for beaupleader (q. v.) Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 135.

STUMPTAIL. Depreciated currency. 35 Ill. 163.

STUPIDITY. In medical jurisprudence. That state of the mind which cannot perceive and embrace the data presented to it by the senses, and therefore the stupid person can, in general, form no correct judgment. It is a want of the perceptive powers. Ray, Med. Jur. c. 3, § 40. See "Imbecility."

STUPRUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The criminal sexual intercourse which took place between a man and a single woman, maid, or widow, who before lived honestly. Inst. 4. 18. 4; Dig. 48. 5. 6; Id. 50. 16. 101; 1 Bouv. Inst. Theolo. ps. 3, quaest. 2, art. 2, p. 252.

STYLE. As a verb, to call, name, or entitle one; as a noun, the title or appellation of a person.

The names in which a cause is entitled.

SUA SPONTE (Lat.) Of his or its own motion.

SUAPE NATURA (Lat.) In its own nature. Suaapte natura sterilis, barren in its own nature and quality; intrinsically barren. 5 Maule & S. 170.

SUB (Lat.) Under; upon.

SUB CONDITIONE. Upon condition; under condition.

SUB DISJUNCTIONE (Law Lat.) In the alternative. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

SUB JUDICE (Lat.) Under or before a judge or court; under judicial consideration; undetermined. 12 East, 409.

SUB MODO (Lat.) Under a qualification. A legacy may be given sub modo, that is, subject to a condition or qualification.

SUB PEDE SIGILLI (Lat.) Under the foot of the seal; under seal. This expression is used when it is required that a record should be certified under the seal of the court.

SUB POTESTATE (Lat.) Under or subject to the power of another; as, a wife is under the power of her husband; a child is subject to that of his father; a slave to that of his master.

SUB SALVO ET SECURO CONDUCTU. Under safe and secure conduct. 1 Strange, 430. Words in the old writ of habeas corpus.

SUB SILENTIO (Lat.) Under silence; without any notice being taken. Sometimes passing a thing sub silentio is evidence of consent.

SUB SPE RECONCILIATIONIS (Lat.) Under the hope of reconciliation. 2 Kent, Comm. 127.

SUB SUO PERICULO (Law Lat.) At his own risk. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 5, § 5.

SUBAGENT. A person appointed by an agent to perform some duty, or the whole of the business relating to his agency. See "Agent."

SUB-BALLIVUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An under bailiff; a sheriff's deputy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 2.

SUBCONTRACT. A contract by one who has contracted for the performance of labor or service with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service. 9 Mees. & W. 710; 3 Gray (Mass.) 362; 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 550; 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 395; 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 716; 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 558. See "Contract."

SUBDELEGARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To sub-delegate; to appoint a delegate of a delegate; to delegate power already delegated.

SUBDITUS (Lat.) In old English law. A vassal; a dependent; any one under the power of another. Spelman; Bracton, fol. 412.

SUBDIVIDE. To divide a part of a thing which has already been divided. For example, when a person dies leaving children, and grandchildren, the children of one of his own who is dead, his property is divided into as many shares as he had children, including the deceased, and the share of the deceased is subdivided into as many shares as he had children.

SUBDUCT. In English probate practice, to subduct a caveat is to withdraw it.

SUBHASTARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To sell at public auction, which was done sub hasta, under a spear; to put or sell under the spear. Calv. Lex.

SUBHASTATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A sale by public auction, which was done under a spear, fixed up at the place of sale as a public sign of it. Calv. Lex. The Roman custom of setting up a spear at an auction seems to have been derived from the circumstance that at first only those things which were taken in war were sold in that manner. Adams, Rom. Ant. 59.

SUBINFEUDATION. The act of an inferior lord by which he carved out a part of an estate which he held of a superior, and granted it to an inferior tenant to be held of himself.

It was an indirect mode of transferring the fief, and resorted to as an artifice to elude the feudal restraint upon alienation. This was forbidden by the statute of Quia Emptores. 18 Edw. I.; 2 Bl. Comm. 91; 3 Kent, Comm. 406.

SUBJACENT SUPPORT. An easement of support of the soil as against an adjoining tract of land, so that the dominant tract shall not fall in by reason of undermining or withdrawal of support from beneath. Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 618; 66 Pa. St. 429.

SUBJECT.

—In Scotch Law. The thing which is the object of an agreement.

—In Governmental Law. An individual member of a nation, who is subject to the laws. This term is used in contradistinction to "citizen," which is applied to the same individual when considering his political rights.

In monarchical governments, by "subject" is meant one who owes permanent allegiance to the monarch. See "Body Politic;" Greenl. Ev. § 286; Phil. Ev. 732, note 1.

SUBJECT MATTER. The right which one party claims as against the other, and claims the judgment of the court upon. 41 Mich. 93. The cause of action. 15 N. Y. 509.

SUBJECTION (Lat. sub, under, jacio, to put, throw). The obligation of one or more persons to act at the discretion or according to the judgment and will of others. Private subjection is subjection to the authority of private persons. Public subjection is subjection to the authority of public persons.

SUBLATA CAUSA TOLLITUR EFFECTUS. Remove the cause and the effect will cease. 2 Bl. Comm. 203.

SUBLATA VENERATIONE MAGISTRATUM, REPUBLICA RUIT. The commonwealth perishes, if respect for magistrates be taken away. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 48.

SUBLATO FUNDAMENTO CADIT OPUS. Remove the foundation, the structure or work falls. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 106.

SUBLATO PRINCIPALI TOLLITUR ADJUNCTUM. If the principal be taken away, the adjunct is also taken away. Co. Litt. 389.

SUBLEASE. A lease by a tenant to another person of a part of the premises held by him, or a part of his term; an under lease. If the whole premises be let by the tenant for his entire term, so that there is no reversion in him, it is not a subletting, but an assignment of his lease.

SUBMERGENCE. The sudden disappearance of riparian lands under the water, whereby they are lost to the owner. See 100 N. Y. 424.

SUBMISSION (Lat. submitio,—sub, under, mittere, to put,—a putting under). Used of persons or things. A putting one's person or property under the control of another; a yielding to authority. A citizen is bound to submit to the laws, a child to his parents, a guardian to his ward. A victor may enforce the submission of his enemy.

—In Trial Practice. The leaving of a cause with the court or jury for decision.

—To Arbitration. An agreement by which parties submit a matter of difference to the decision of one or more arbitrators. 4 N. Y. 157.

—To Court. This, usually known as "submission of controversy," is the submission of an agreed statement of facts to the court, without trial of the issues, for a decision thereon.

SUBNERVARE. To hamstring by cutting the sinews of the legs and thighs.

It was an old custom meretrices et impudicas mulieres subnervare. Wharton.

SUBNOTATIONS (Lat.) In civil law. The answers of the prince to questions which had been put to him respecting some obscure or doubtful point of law. See "Rescript."

SUBORN (Lat. subornare, from sub, under, and ornare, to prepare). In criminal law. To procure another to commit perjury. Steph. Crim. Law, 74. Literally, to instruct one privily, or in an underhanded manner, what to say; to prepare secretly, or underhand; to procure unlawfully. Sayer, 292. Subornare est quasi subitus in aure ipsam male ornare, to suborn is to instruct one privily, as by whispering in his ear, with a bad design. 3 Inst. 167.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY. In criminal law. The procuring another to commit legal perjury, who, in consequence of the persuasion, takes the oath to which he has been incited. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 69, § 10.

SUBPOENA (Lat. sub, under, poena, penalty).

—In Practice. A process to cause a witness to appear and give testimony, commanding him to lay aside all pretenses and excuses, and appear before a court or magistrate therein named, at a time therein mentioned, to testify for the party named, under a penalty therein mentioned. This is called distinctively a subpoena ad testificandum.

A subpoena duces tecum is one whereby the witness is commanded to bring with him books or papers in his possession or under his control, to produce the same in evidence.

—In Chancery Practice. A mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them. The writ of subpoena was originally a process in the courts of common law to enforce the attendance of a witness to give evidence; but this writ was used in the court of chancery for the same purpose as a citation in the courts of civil and canon law, to compel the appearance of a defendant, and to oblige him to answer upon oath the allegations of the plaintiff.

It was invented by John Waltham, bishop of Salisbury, and chancellor to Richard II., under the authority of the statutes of Westminster II. and 13 Edw. I. c. 34, which enabled him to devise new writs. Cruise, Dig. tit. 11, c. 1, §§ 12-17. See Viner, Abr.; 1 Swanst. 209.

SUBREPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. Obtaining gifts to escheat, etc., from the king by concealing the truth. Bell, Dict.; Calv. Lex. "Subripere."

SUBREPTION. In French law. The fraud committed to obtain a pardon, title, or grant, by alleging facts contrary to truth.

SUBROGATIO EST TRANSFUSIO UNIUS creditoris in alium, eadem vel mitiori conditione. Subrogation is the substituting one creditor in the place of another on the same or a better condition. Merlin, Quest. de Droit. "Subrogation."

SUBROGATION. The substitution of another person in the place of a claimant, to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the claim. That change which puts another person in the place of the creditor, and which makes the right, the mortgage, or the security which the creditor has, pass to the person who is subrogated to him,—that is to say, who enters into his right. Domat, Civ. Law, pt. i. lib. iii. tit. i. § vi.

It is a legal fiction by force of which an obligation extinguished by payment made by a third party is considered as continuing to subsist for the benefit of this third person, who makes but one and the same person with the creditor in the view of the law. Subrogation is the act of putting one thing in place of another, or one person in place of another. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Subrogation," § ii.

Subrogation gives to the substitute all the rights of the party for whom he is substituted. 4 Md. Ch. 253. Among the earlier civil-law writers, the term seems to have been used synonymously with "substitution;" or, rather, "substitution" included "subrogation," as well as its present more limited signification. See Domat, Civ. Law, passim; Poth. Obl. passim. The term "substitution" is now almost altogether confined to the law of devises and chancery practice. See "Substitution."

The word "subrogation" is originally found only in the civil law, and has been adopted, with the doctrine itself, thence into equity. It is an equitable doctrine (3 Ired. Eq. [N. C.] 386), but in the law, as distinguished from equity, it hardly appears as a term, except perhaps in those states where, as in Pennsylvania, equity is administered through the forms of law, and those where the distinction between legal and equitable remedies has been abolished. There the term "subrogation," adopted from the Roman law, has of late years come into quite general use. 6 Pa. St. 504. The equitable doctrine of marshalling assets is plainly derived from the Roman law of subrogation or substitution; and although the word is, or, rather, has been, used sparingly in the common law, many of the doctrines of subrogation are familiar to the courts of common law.

Subrogation differs from cession in this, that while cession only substitutes the one to whom the debt is ceded in place of the ceder, in subrogation the debt would have become extinguished but for the effect of the subrogation; and also because, although subrogation supposes a change in the person of the creditor, it does not imply novation; but, through the fiction of the law, the party who is subrogated is considered as making only one and the same person with the creditor, whom he succeeds. Masse, Dr. Comm. "Payment in Subrogation."

It is one thing to decide that a surety is entitled, on payment, to have an assignment of the debt, and quite another to decide that he is entitled to be subrogated or substituted as to the equities and securities to the place of the creditor, as against the debtor and his cosureties. Story, Eq. Jur. § 493, note; 2 McLean (U. S.) 451; 1 Dev. (N. C.) 137.

The legal subrogation of the civilians is generally intended by the term "subrogation." Some original interest is essential to entitle one to subrogation. Thus, a surety paying the debt is subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal (23 Minn. 74; 28 N. Y. 271), and the holder of a lien who pays a prior lien is subrogated to the rights of the lienholder whom he pays (2 Allen [Mass.] 111); but a mere stranger or volunteer paying a debt has no right to subrogation (93 N. Y. 235; 76 Va. 262).

—In the Civil Law. Subrogation of persons is of three sorts:

First, the canonists understand by subrogation the succession of a priest to the rights of action of the occupant of a benefice who has died during a suit. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Subrogation of Persons," § 1.

Second, the second sort arose from a local custom of the Bourbonnais, and had for its object the protection of the debtor from the effects of collusion on the part of the attaching creditor.

Third, subrogation in fact to aliens and pledgees, which is only the change of one creditor for another. See Guyot, ut supra, and, also, Masse Dr. Comm.

Nearly all the instances in which the common law has adopted the doctrines of subrogation have arisen under this latter class.

Subrogation is either legal or conventional.

Legal subrogation is that resulting by operation of law from the satisfying of a claim as to which the person making payment has some original privilege. 14 Cal. 565.

Conventional subrogation results as its name indicates, from the agreement of the parties, and can take effect only by agreement. This agreement is, of course, with the party to be subrogated, and may be either by the debtor or creditor. Civ. Code La. 1249.

Thus, it may happen when the creditor receiving payment from the third person subrogates the payor to his right against the debtor. This must happen by express agreement; but no formal words are required. This sort of subrogation only takes place where there is a payment of the debt by a third party,—not where there is an assignment, in which case, subrogation results from the assignment.

This principle is recognized by the common law in cases where, upon payment, the securities are transferred to a party having an interest in the payment. Or, in case the debtor borrows money from a third party to pay a debt, he may subrogate the lender to the rights of the creditor; for by this change the rights of the other creditors are not injuriously affected. To make this mode of subrogation valid, the borrowing and discharge must take place before a notary. In the borrowing, it must be declared that the money has been borrowed to make payment, and in the discharge, that it has been made with money furnished by the creditor. Masse, Dr. Comm. lib. 5, tit. 1, c. 5, §§ 1, 2.

SUBROGEE. A person who is subrogated; one who succeeds to the rights of another by subrogation.

SUBROGUER, Surroguer. L. Fr. To make a deputy or surrogate; to substitute. Kelham.

SUBSCRIBE. To write under, 54 L. J. Q. B. 213; 14 Q. B. D. 667; to give assent to; to attest; 24 L. J. Q. B. 171; 4 E. & B. 450; placing a signature at the end of an instrument, 4 Colo. 282.

While the idea of a written signature is involved, yet by common usage it is often employed to include an agreement, written or oral, to some purpose for the promotion of which numerous persons are uniting their means and effort. 143 Iowa 13, 19; 136 Am. St. Rep. 731n. See "Sign; Signature; Subscription."

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. One who subscribes his name to a writing in order to be able at a future time to prove its due execution; an attesting witness.

In order to make a good subscribing witness, it is requisite he should sign his name to the instrument himself, at the time of its execution, and at the request or with the assent of the party. 6 Hill (N. Y.) 303; 11 Mees. & W. 168; 1 Greenl. Ev. (4th Ed.) § 569a; 5 Watts (Pa.) 399.

SUBSCRIPTIO (Lat. from subscribers). In the civil law. A writing under, or underwriting; a writing of the name under or at the bottom of an instrument by way of attestation or ratification; subscription. The subscriptio testium (subscription of witnesses) was one of the formalities in the execution of wills, being required by the imperial constitutions in addition to the seals of the witnesses. Inst. 2. 10. 3.

That kind of imperial constitution which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calv. Lex.

SUBSCRIPTION (Lat. sub, under, scribo, to write). The placing a signature at the bottom of a written or printed engagement, or it is the attestation of a witness by so writing his name; but it has been holden that the attestation of an illiterate witness by making his mark is a sufficient subscription. 7 Bing. 457; 2 Ves. Sr. 454; 1 Atk. 177; 1 Ves. Jr. 11; 3 P. Wms. 253; 1 Ves. & B. 392.

"Subscribe," according to both its popular and literal signification, requires a signature at the end of a document. 4 Colo. 282. See "Signature; Subscribe."

The act by which a person contracts, in writing, to furnish a sum of money for a particular purpose; as, a subscription to a charitable institution, a subscription for a book, for a newspaper, and the like.

SUBSCRIPTION LIST. A list of subscribers to some agreement with each other or a third person.

SUBSELLIA (Lat. from sub, under, and sella, a seat). In the Roman law. Lower seats or benches, occupied by the judices (judges or jurors), and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor. Calv. Lex.; Budaeus.

SUBSEQUENS MATRIMONIUM TOLLIT peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage (of the parties) removes a previous fault, i. e., previous illicit intercourse, and legitimates the offspring. A rule of Roman law.

SUBSIDY. A legislative grant of money in aid of a private enterprise deemed to promote the public welfare.

—In English Law. An aid, tax, or tribute granted by parliament to the king for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods. Jacob.

—In International Law. The assistance given in money by one nation to another to enable it the better to carry on a war, when such nation does not join directly in the war. Vattel, liv. 3, § 82. See "Neutrality."

SUBSIGNARE (Lat. from sub, under, and signare, to seal or sign). In the civil law. To undersign; to subscribe. According to the strict etymology, to seal under, or seal. But the word is said, in the Digests, to have been used among the ancient Romans in the sense of "writing." Subsignatum dicitur quod ab aliquo subscriptum est, nam veteres subsignationis verbo pro adscriptione uti solebant, that is said to be undersigned which is underwritten by any one, for the ancients were accustomed to use the word subsignatio for adscriptio. Dig. 50. 16. 39. Some copies of the Digests have subscriptio in place of adscriptio.

SUBSTANCE (Lat. sub, under, stare, to stand). That which is essential. It is used in opposition to form.

It is a general rule that on any issue it is sufficient to prove the substance of the issue. For example, in a case where the defendant pleaded payment of the principal sum and all interest due, and it appeared in evidence that a gross sum was paid, not amounting to the full interest, but accepted by the plaintiff as full payment, the proof was held to be sufficient. 2 Strange, 690; 1 Phil. Ev. 161.

It is also used in the sense of "property." Cowp. 307.

SUBSTANTIVE LAW. That portion of the body of the law which contains the rights and duties and the regulations of government, as opposed to that part which contains the rules and remedies by which the substantive law is administered. The latter is called, in opposition to "substantive law," the "adjective law," or the "remedial law." The exact boundary between the two is difficult of definition, and has been the cause of much learned discussion.

SUBSTITUTE (Lat. substitutus). One placed under another to transact business for him. In letters of attorney, power is generally given to the attorney to nominate and appoint a substitute.

Without such power, the authority given to one person cannot, in general, be delegated to another, because it is a personal trust and confidence, and is not, therefore, transmissible. The authority is given to him to exercise his judgment and discretion, and it cannot be said that the trust and confidence reposed in him shall be exercised at the discretion of another. 2 Atk. 88; 2 Ves. Jr. 645. But an authority may be delegated to another when the attorney has express power to do so. Bunb. 166; T. Jones, 110. See Story, Ag. §§ 13, 14. When a man is drawn into the militia, he may in some cases hire a substitute.

SUBSTITUTED SERVICE. See "Service."

SUBSTITUTES. In Scotch law. Where an estate is settled on a long series of heirs, substituted one after another, in tailzie, the person first called in the tailzies is the institute; the rest the heirs of tailzie, or the substitutes. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 8. See "Tailzie."

SUBSTITUTIO (Lat. from substituere, to substitute). A putting of one person in the place of another.

—In the Civil Law. The appointment of one person as heir in place of another, in the event of the first not taking the inheritance. As, si ille haeres non erit, ille haeres esto, if such a one will not be heir, let such a one be heir. Inst. 2. 15. pr. And a testator might appoint one heir after another in this way, to what extent he pleased (in quantum velit testator substituere potest), which was called making several grades of heirs (plures gradus haeredom), the person last named, without further alternative, being termed "necessary heir" (necessarius haeres), or heir at all events. Id.

SUBSTITUTIO HAEREDIS (Lat.) In Roman law, it was competent for a testator, after instituting a haeres (called the "haeres institutus"), to substitute another (called the "haeres substitutus") in his place in a certain event. If the event upon which the substitution was to take effect was the refusal of the instituted heir to accept the inheritance at all, then the substitution was called "vulgaris" (or common); but if the event was the death of the infant (pupillus) after acceptance, and before attaining his majority (of fourteen years if a male, and of twelve years if a female), then the substitution was called "pupillaris" (or for minors). Brown.

SUBSTITUTION (Lat. substitutio). In civil law. The putting of one person in the place of another, so that he may, in default of ability in the former, or after him, have the benefit of a devise or legacy.

Direct substitution is merely the institution of a second legatee in case the first should be either incapable or unwilling to accept the legacy; for example, if a testator should give to A. his estate, but provides that, in case he cannot legally receive it, or he willfully refuses it, it shall go to B.

Fidei commissary substitution is that which takes place when the person substituted is not to receive the legacy until after the first legatee, and, consequently, must receive the thing bequeathed from the hands of the latter; for example, I institute A. my heir, and I request that at his death he shall deliver my succession to B. Merlin, Repert.; 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 14. See "Subrogation."

SUBSTITUTIONAL, or SUBSTITUTIONARY. Where a will contains a gift of property to a class of persons, with a clause providing that, on the death of a member of the class before the period of distribution, his share is to go to his issue, if any, so as to substitute them for him, the gift to the issue is said to be substitutional or substitutionary. A bequest to such of the children of A. as shall be living at the testator's death, with a direction that the issue of such as shall have died shall take the shares which their parents would have taken, if living at the testator's death, is an example. Under such a gift, the issue of children dead at the date of the will cannot take anything. 2 Jarm. Wills, 771 et seq.

SUBSTITUTIONARY EXECUTOR. A person nominated by the testator to be executor in the event that the person primarily nominated shall fail to qualify or cease to act.

SUBTENANT. An under tenant.

SUBTRACTION (Lat. sub, away, traho, to draw). The act of withholding or detaining anything unlawfully.

In French law. The act of taking something fraudulently. It is generally applied to the taking of the goods of the estate of a deceased person fraudulently. See "Ex-pilation."

SUBTRACTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. The act of a husband or wife living separately from the other without a lawful cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 94.

SUBVASSORES (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. Base holders; inferior holders; they who held their lands of knights. Skene de Verb. Sign.

SUCCESSIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A coming in place of another, on his decease; a coming into the estate which a deceased person had at the time of his death. This was either by virtue of an express appointment of the deceased person by his will (ex testamento), or by the general appointment of law in case of intestacy (ab intestato). Inst. 2. 9. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 10; Id. lib. 3, tit. 13.

SUCCESSION.

—In Louisiana. The right and transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to his heirs. The estate, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceed the charges, or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has left only charges without property. The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also of the new charges to which it becomes subject. That right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be.

(1) Irregular succession is that which is established by law in favor of certain persons, or of the estate in default of heirs, either legal or instituted by testament.

(2) Legal succession is that which is established in favor of the nearest relations of the deceased.

(3) Testamentary succession is that which results from the constitution of the heir, contained in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See "Heir;"

"Descent;" Poth. des Success.; Toullier, Dr. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 1.

—In Common Law. The mode by which one set of persons, members of a corporation aggregate, acquire the rights of another set which preceded them. This term in strictness is to be applied only to such corporations. 2 Bl. Comm. 430.

—In Stirpes. The lineal descendants, infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor who stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living. These representatives take neither more nor less, but just so much as their principals would have done. 114 Ill. 605. See "Per Stirpes; Stirpes."

SUCCESSION TAXES. Taxes levied on the successions due or inheritance of a decedent's estate. They are variously called "inheritance taxes," "collateral inheritance taxes," "transfer taxes," and perhaps other names. The local statutes imposing them determine the modes for their collection, and the persons or properties liable.

SUCCESSOR. One who follows or comes into the place of another.

This term is applied more particularly to a sole corporation, or to any corporation. The word "heir" is more correctly applicable to a common person who takes an estate by descent. 12 Pick. (Mass.) 322; Co. Litt. 8b.

A person who has been appointed or elected to some office after another person.

SUCCURRITUR MINORI; FACILIS EST lapsus juventutis. A minor is to be aided; youth is liable to err. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 47.

SUCH. The word such is descriptive, and is a relative word, and as such must be referred to the last antecedent, unless the meaning of the sentence would thereby be impaired. 190 Mich. 313, 324.

SUCKEN, or SUCHEN. In Scotch law. The whole lands restricted to a mill,—that is, whose tenants are bound to grind there. The possessors of these lands are called "suckeners." Bell, Dict.

SUE. To commence or continue legal proceedings for the recovery of a right. See "Action;" "Suit."

SUE OUT. In practice. To obtain judicially; to issue. Applied only to process; particularly such as is granted specially. To sue out a writ is to obtain and issue it; to issue it on leave obtained for the purpose.

SUERTE. In Spanish law. A small lot of ground. 5 Tex. 83.

SUFFER. To suffer an act to be done, by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it; to approve of it, and not to hinder it. It implies a willingness of the mind. 19 Conn. 505.

SUFFERANCE, TENANCY AT. See "Tenancy."

SUFFERANCE WHARVES. Wharves on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the commissioners of the customs. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, § 13; 2 Steph. Comm. 500, note.

SUFFERING A RECOVERY. A recovery was effected by the party wishing to convey the land suffering a fictitious action to be brought against him by the party to whom the land was to be conveyed (the demandant), and allowing the demandant to recover a judgment against him for the land in question. The vendor, or conveying party, in thus assisting or permitting the demandant so to recover a judgment against him, was thence technically said to "suffer a recovery." Brown.

SUFFRAGAN (Law Lat. suffraganeus). A titular bishop ordained to assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual functions, or to take his place. The number was limited to two to each bishop by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 14. So called because by his suffrage ecclesiastical causes were to be judged. Termes de la Ley.

SUFFRAGE. Vote; the act of voting; the right to vote.

SUGGESTIO FALSI (Lat.) A statement of a falsehood. This amounts to a fraud whenever the party making it was bound to disclose the truth.

The following is an example of a case where chancery will interfere and set aside a contract as fraudulent, on account of the suggestio falsi: A purchaser applied to the seller to purchase a lot of wild land, and represented to him it was worth nothing, except for a sheep pasture, when he knew there was a valuable mine on the lot, of which the seller was ignorant. The sale was set aside. 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 390; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3837 et seq. See "Concealment;" "Misrepresentation;" "Representation;" "Suppressio Veri."

SUGGESTION. In practice. Information. It is applied to those cases where, during the pendency of a suit, some matter of fact or circumstance which will materially affect or put a stop to the suit in its existing form, which for some reason cannot be pleaded, 186 Mich. 617, 625; such as death or insolvency of a party. The counsel of the other party announces the fact in court, or enters it upon the record. The fact is usually admitted, if true, and the court issues the proper order thereupon. See 2 Sellon, Prac. 191.

In wills, when suggestions are made to a testator for the purpose of procuring a devise of his property in a particular way, and when such suggestions are false, they generally amount to a fraud. Bac. Abr.

"Wills" (G 3); 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 706.

SUGGESTIVE INTERROGATION. A phrase which has been used by some writers to signify the same thing as "leading question." 2 Benth. Ev. bk. 3, c. 3. It is used in the French law.

SUI GENERIS (Lat.) Of its own kind; the only one of its kind.

SUI HAEREDES (Lat.) In the civil law. One's own heirs; proper heirs. Inst. 2. 19. 2; Dig. 38. 16.

SUI JURIS (Lat. of his own right). Possessing all the rights to which a freeman is entitled; not being under the power of another, as a slave, a minor, and the like.

To make a valid contract, a person must, in general, be sui juris. Every one of full age is presumed to be sui juris. Story, Ag. 10.

SUICIDE. Self-destruction and suicide are synonymous and mean the voluntary destruction of one's self. 29 Ill. App. 439. If a person who is incapable, by reason of unsoundness of mind, of resisting an insane impulse to take his own life, or to understand the general nature or consequences and effects of his act, kills himself, it is not suicide. 209 Ill. 33. At common law, suicide was a felony entailing forfeiture of estate. 1 Hale, P. C. c. 27.

Since the abolition of forfeitures, punishment of suicide is, of course, impossible, but an attempt to commit suicide is indictable (9 Cox, C. C. 247); and one who persuades another to suicide is guilty of murder (4 Bl. Comm. 189; 123 Mass. 422), though, if he be not present at the commission of the suicide, it is held that he cannot be punished, because he is an accessory before the fact, and the prior conviction of the principal is impossible (9 Car. & P. 79).

SUING AND LABORING CLAUSE. A clause in an English policy of marine insurance, generally in the following form: "In case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful for the assured, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labor, and travel for, in, and about the defense, safeguard, and recovery of the" property insured, "without prejudice to this insurance; to the charges whereof we, the assurers, will contribute." The object of the clause is to encourage the assured to exert themselves in preserving the property from loss. 15 C. B. (N. S.) 291; 2 Q. B. Div. 501; 4 App. Cas. 755.

SUIT. In its broadest sense, any proceeding in a court of justice by which a party pursues a remedy which the law affords him. In this sense, it is a broader term than "action," including proceedings in petition. 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449; 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540.

"Suit" applies to criminal proceedings (143 Mass. 136), and proceedings both in equity and at law (20 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 381).

In a narrower sense, "suit" has been held synonymous with "action." 4 Wall. (U. S.) 112. And "suit" is commonly applied to proceedings in equity, and "action" to proceedings at law. 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 300.

—In Louisiana. A suit is a real, personal, or mixed demand made before a competent judge, by which the parties pray to obtain their rights and a decision of their disputes. Code Prac. art. 96. In that acceptance, the words "suit," "process," and "cause" are in that state almost synonymous.

—At Common Law. The term had several meanings, not included in the idea of proceedings in court, as:

- (1) Suit of court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court. Cowell; Jacob, 4.
- (2) Suit covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.
- (3) Suit custom, where service is owed time out of mind.
- (4) The following one in chase; as, fresh suit.
- (5) A petition to a king, or a great person, or a court.

SUIT SILVER, or SUTER SILVER. A small rent or sum of money paid in some manors to excuse the freeholders' appearance at the courts of their lord. Cowell.

SUITAS (Law Lat.) In the civil law. The condition or quality of a suus haeres, or proper heir. Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 9, No. 11; Calv. Lex. This term seems to have been framed by the later civilians.

SUITE (French.) Those persons who, by his authority, follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

In general, the suite of a minister are protected from arrest, and the inviolability of his person is communicated to those who form his suite. Vattel, lib. 4, c. 9, § 120; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 177; Baldw. (U. S.) 240. See "Ambassador."

SUITOR. One who is a party to a suit or action in court; one who is a party to an action. In its ancient sense, "suitor" meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also, one who formed part of the secta.

SUITORS' DEPOSIT ACCOUNT. Formerly suitors in the English court of chancery derived no income from their cash paid into court unless it was invested at their request and risk. Now, however, it is provided by the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act 1872, that all money paid into court, and not required by the suitor to be invested, shall be placed on deposit, and shall bear interest at two per cent. per annum for the benefit of the suitor entitled to it. The sum required for the payment of this interest is produced by placing all money in court not required for meeting current demands in the hands of the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, who invest it in government securities. This arrangement is called the "suitsors' deposit account." See Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874; Report of Chancery Funds Commissioners (1864) lvii.

SUITORS' FEE FUND. A fund arising partly from the fees of the English court of chancery, and partly from the surplus income of the suitsors' fund (q. v.) Out of it the salaries and other expenses of the court of chancery were paid. By the Courts of Justice (Salaries and Funds) Act 1866, the suitsors' fee fund was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and the salaries and expenses formerly paid out of it were charged on the consolidated fund. Rep. Chanc. Fund Comm. 1864.

SUITORS' FUND. A fund belonging to the English court of chancery, and consisting of two parts. Fund A consisted of government stocks resulting from the investment of so much of the money in court belonging to the suitsors as was not required for current purposes. Part of the income arising from these investments was employed in paying certain expenses of the court, and the balance was invested in government stocks, which formed fund B. Subsequently the surplus income of both funds was annually added to the suitsors' fee fund (q. v.) By the Courts of Justice, etc., Act 1869, the suitsors' fund was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and the consolidated fund was made liable for the due payment of the money which belonged to the suitsors, and had been invested as above stated. Chanc. Funds Comm. Rep. 1864.

SULCUS. A small brook or stream of water. Cowell.

SUM. A summary or abstract; a compendium; a collection.

SUM IN GROSS. An entire sum, as distinguished from one composed of separate or specified parts. 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 61, 262.

SUMMA CARITAS EST FACERE JUSTITIAM singulis et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit. The greatest charity is to do justice to every one, and at any time whenever it may be necessary. 11 Coke, 70.

SUMMA EST LEX QUAE PRO RELIGIONE facit. That is the highest law which favors religion. 10 Mod. 117, 119; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

SUMMA RATIO EST QUAE PRO RELIGIONE facit. That is the highest law which which determines in favor of religion. Co. Litt. 341a; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 18; 5 Coke, 14b; 10 Coke, 55a; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

SUMMAM ESSE RATIONEM QUAE PRO religione facit. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion. Dig. 11. 7. 43, cited in Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 12, § 7. See 10 Mod. 117, 119.

SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON BILLS OF exchange. This phrase refers to St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, passed in 1855, for the purpose of facilitating the remedies on bills and notes by the prevention of frivolous or fictitious defenses. By this statute, a defendant in an action on a bill or note, brought within six months after it has become payable, is prohibited from defending the action without the leave of the court or a judge. See 2 Steph. Comm. 118, note; Lush, Prac. 1027.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING. A form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. See 8 Gray (Mass.) 329.

In no case can the party be tried summarily unless when such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority, except perhaps in cases of contempts; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial. 4 Bl. Comm. 280. See 2 Kent, Comm. (6th Ed.) 73; 2 Conn. 819; 4 Conn. 535; 37 Me. 172; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 145; 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; 4 Dev. (N. C.) 15; 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59.

SUMMARY TRIALS. A modern term employed to designate criminal trials before magistrates, justices of the peace, or other inferior judicial officers or courts, which trials are not according to the common-law trial by jury on indictment, but are conducted in a less formal and cautious manner. Only the minor offenses are tried thus. It seems that the term should include a trial on indictment if it lacks the element of trial by a common-law jury.

SUMMER-HUS SILVER. A payment to the lords of the wood on the Wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer, when their under tenants were bound to prepare little summer houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Customale de Newington juxta Sittingburn, M. S.; Cowell.

SUMMING UP. In practice. The act of making a speech before a court and jury, after all the evidence has been heard, in favor of one of the parties in the cause, is called "summing up." When the judge delivers his charge to the jury, he usually sums up the evidence in the case. 6 Harg. St. Tr. 832; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 632. See "Charge."

SUMMON. In practice. To notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and that he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. This is done by a proper officer's either giving the defendant a copy of the summons, or having it at his house, or by reading the summons to him.

SUMMONERS. Petty officers who cite men to appear in any court.

SUMMONITIO (Law Lat.) In old English practice. A summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court, of which there were various kinds. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6.

A command or precept of the king that one be before him to answer or do something, or that one be and have such a one to answer or to do something. Bracton, fol. 333.

SUMMONITIONES AUT CITATIONES nullae liceant fieri intra palatium regis. Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace. 3 Inst. 141.

SUMMONITORES SCACCARII. Officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the court of exchequer.

SUMMONS.

—In Common-Law Practice. The name of a writ commanding the sheriff, or other authorized officer, to notify a party to appear in court to answer a complaint made against him, and in the said writ specified, on a day therein mentioned. Viner, Abr.; 2 Sellon, Prac. 356; 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

The writ of summons was substituted by St. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39, for the original writs by which actions were formerly commenced.

—In Code Practice. The proceeding to commence an action in many of the code states consists of a notice to defendant, requiring him to serve an answer to the complaint. It is ordinarily signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, bears no teste, and is not process. It may be served by any disinterested person or by the attorney.

In other code states the summons runs in the name of the state or people, is issued by the clerk under seal, and is served by the sheriff.

Some of the states permit the use of either of these two modes of summons. See "Process."

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. See "Severance."

SUMMUM JUS (Lat.) Strict right; extreme right. 3 Bl. Comm. 392; 1 Burrows, 54. The extremity or rigor of the law. Burr. Sett. Cas. 588. Lord Bacon applies the phrase to strict law, untempered by equity. Works, IV. 274.

SUMMUM JUS, SUMMA INJURIA. The rigor or height of law is the height of of wrong. Hob. 125.

SUMPTUARY LAWS. Laws relating to the expenses of the people, and made to restrain excess in apparel, food, drink, furniture, etc.

They originated in the view that luxury is, in some of its degrees, opposed to public policy, and that the state is bound to interfere against it. Montesq. Esprit des Loix, bk. 7, c. 2, 4, and Tacitus, Ann. bk. 2, c. 33; Id. bk. 3, c. 52.

In England, in 1336, it was enacted (10 Edw. III. c. 3), that, inasmuch as many mischiefs had happened to the people of the realm by excessive and costly meats, by which, among other things, many who aspired in this respect beyond their means were impoverished and unable to aid themselves or their liege lord in time of need, all men were forbidden to have served more than two courses at a meal, each of but two sorts of victual, except on the principal feasts of the year, and then only three courses were allowed. Blackstone states that this is still unrepealed. 4 Bl. Comm. 170. Subsequent statutes—that of 1363, and those of 1463 and 1482—regulated the dress, and to some extent the diet, of the people, with careful regard to their rank. The substance of these statutes will be found in Knight's History of England, vol. 2, pp. 272-274. They were repealed by 1 Jac. I. c. 25.

SUNDAY. The first day of the week. In some of the New England states it begins at sunset on Saturday, and ends at the same time the next day; but in other parts of the United States it generally commences at twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends in twenty-four hours thereafter. 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268. And see Bac. Abr. "Heresy, etc." (D), "Sheriff" (N 4); 1 Salk. 78; 1 Sellon, Prac. 12. The "Sabbath," the "Lord's Day," and "Sunday" all mean the same thing. 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268. See 3 Watts (Pa.) 56, 59; 6 Watts (Pa.) 231.

SUN SET. A definite period of time at any given locality. What that time is can only be known from scientific calculations. It is not precisely the same on any two days in succession, nor is it exactly the same at any two points distant apart on the same day. It is later at a point west than one further east, and of this fact the court may take judicial notice. 111 Ill. 135.

SUNSTROKE. An acute prostration from excessive heat of weather; and the same effects may be produced by heat which is not of solar origin. 100 Ill. App. 195.

SUO NOMINE (Lat.) In his own name.

SUO PERICULO (Lat.) At his own peril or risk.

SPELLEX (Lat.) In the Roman law. Household furniture. Dig. 33. 10.

SUPER ALTUM MARE (Lat.) Upon the high sea. See "High Seas."

SUPER FIDEM CHARTARUM, MORTUIS testibus, erit ad patriam de necessitate recurrendum. The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury when the witnesses are dead. Co. Litt. 6.

SUPER JURARE. A term anciently used when a criminal endeavored to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses. Wharton.

SUPER PRAEROGATIVA REGIS. A writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 174.

SUPER STATUTO. 1 Edw. III. c. 12. A writ that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

SUPER STATUTO DE ARTICULIS CLERICI. A writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands anciently belonging to the church.

SUPER STATUTO FACTO POUR SENE-SCHAL et marshal de roy, etc. A writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

SUPER STATUTO VERSUS SERVANTES et laboratores. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another, contrary to law.

SUPER VISUM CORPORE (Lat.) Upon view of the body. When an inquest is held over a body found dead, it must be super visum corpore. See "Coroner."

SUPERCARGO. In maritime law. A person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Supercargoes have complete control over the cargo and everything which immediately concerns it, unless their authority is either expressly or impliedly restrained. 12 East, 381. Under certain circumstances, they are responsible for the cargo (4 Mass. 115. See 1 Gill & J. [Md.] 1), but the supercargo has no power to interfere with the government of the ship (3 Pardessus, note 646; 1 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 421).

SUPERDEMANDA (Law Lat.) In old English practice. An over demand; a demand of more than was just or due. Cadit in misericordiam pro superdemanda, becomes subject to amendment for his over demand. Bacton, fol. 179b.

SUPERFICIARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. He who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. This is not very different from the owner of a lot on ground rent in Pennsylvania. Dig. 43. 18. 1.

SUPERFICIES (Lat.) In civil law. Whatever has been erected on the soil.

SUPERFLUA NON NOCENT. Superfluities do no injury. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 184.

SUPERFLUOUS LANDS. In English law. Lands acquired by a railway company under its statutory powers, and not required for the purposes of its undertaking. The company is bound, within a certain time, to sell such lands, and, if it does not, they vest in and become the property of the owners of the adjoining lands. 13 Ch. Div. 607.

SUPERINDUCTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of obliteration. Dig. 28. 4. 1.

SUPERINSTITUTION. Where a church is full by institution, and a second institution is granted to the same church, this is a superinstitution, and necessarily raises the question who is entitled to the benefice. It is said that the party who obtains a superinstitution may try his title by ejectment, but that, in consequence of its inconveniences, this method is discouraged, and the more usual remedy of a quare impedit adopted. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 476.

SUPERIOR. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank; as, a soldier is bound to obey his superior.

In estates, some are superior to others. An estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the "superior" or "dominant," and the other the "inferior" or "servient" estate. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1612.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. In Scotch law. A feudal relation corresponding with the English "lord and tenant." Bell, Dict.

SUPERIOR COURT.

—In English Law. A term applied collectively to the three courts of common law at Westminster, namely, the king's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer.

It denotes a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction and the courts of last resort.

—In American Law. A court of intermediate jurisdiction between the inferior courts and those of last resort.

In Delaware it is the court of last resort; and in some of the states there is a superior court for cities.

SUPERIORITY. In Scotch law. The dominium directum of lands, without the profit. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 97; Bell, Dict.

SUPERNUMERARII (Lat.) In Roman law. Those advocates who were not statuti (q. v.)

The statuti were inscribed in the matriculation books, and formed a part of the college of advocates in each jurisdiction. The supernumeraries were not attached to any bar in particular, and could reside where they pleased. They took the place of advocates by title as vacancies occurred in that body.

SUPERONERATIO (Law Lat. superonere). Surcharging a common, i. e., putting in beasts of a number or kind other than the right of common allows. It can only be of a common appendant or appurtenant. Bracton, fol. 229, and Fleta, lib. 4, c. 23, § 4, give two remedies, novel disseisin and writ of admeasurement, by which latter remedy no damages are recovered till the second offense. Now, distraining, trespass, and case are used as remedies. 3 Bl. Comm. 238*.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURAE. A judicial writ that lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts. Obsolete.

SUPERPLUSAGIUM. Overplus; surplus; residue or balance. Spelman.

SUPERSEDE. To stay, stop, interfere with, or annul; e. g., to supersede the proceedings in outlawry, or in bankruptcy, or in lunacy, etc.

SUPERSEDEAS (Lat. that you set aside). A stay of proceedings. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law. It is either express, by the issuance of a writ of supersedeas, or implied, by the issuance of a writ, as of certiorari, a writ of error when bail is given, etc., which operate as supersedeas.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE. In English law. When lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and towards the maintenance of a priest or chaplain to say mass; for the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such church or elsewhere; to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory,—in such cases the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses cy pres under the sign manual. Bac. Abr. "Charitable Uses and Mortmain" (D); Duke, Char. Uses, 105; 6 Ves. 567; 4 Coke, 104.

In the United States, where all religious opinions are free, and the right to exercise them is secured to the people, the English doctrine of superstitious uses does not prevail. In Alabama and Wisconsin gifts for prayer or masses for the departed are invalid chiefly on the ground of want of living beneficiaries. 6 Cyc. 920.

SUPPLEMENT, LETTERS OF. In Scotch practice. A process by which a party not residing within the jurisdiction of an inferior court may be cited to appear before it. Bell, Dict.

SUPPLEMENTAL. That which is added to a thing to complete it; as, a supplemental affidavit, which is an additional affidavit to make out a case; a supplemental bill.

SUPPLEMENTAL AFFIDAVIT. In practice. An affidavit made in addition to a previous affidavit, for the purpose of supplying some deficiency in it.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER. One which was filed in chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed. Smith, Ch. Prac. 334.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In equity practice. A bill brought as an addition to an original bill to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment. See 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 200; 15 Miss. 456; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 161; 14 Ala. (N. S.) 147; 18 Ala. (N. S.) 771. It may be brought by a plaintiff or defendant (2 Atk. 533; 2 Ball & B. 140; 1 Story, C. C. [U. S.] 218), and as well after as before a decree (3 Md. Ch. 306; 1 Macn. & G. 405; Story, Eq. Pl. § 338; Hinde, Chanc. Prac. 43), but must be within a reasonable time (2 Halst. [N. J.] 465). See "Original Bill."

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL, BILL IN THE NATURE OF A. See "Bill in the Nature, etc."

SUPPLEMENTAL CLAIM. A further claim which was filed when further relief was sought after the bringing of a claim. Smith, Ch. Prac. 655.

SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT. In code practice. A complaint supplying some defect or omission in the original complaint, not curable by amendment.

SUPPLETORY OATH. In ecclesiastical law. An oath given by the judge to the plaintiff or defendant upon half proof, as by one witness, already made. The oath, added to the half proof, enables the judge to decide. It is discretionary with the judge. Strange, 80; 3 Bl. Comm. 370*.

SUPPLICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A petition for pardon of a first offense; also, a petition for reversal of judgment; also, equivalent to duplicatio, which is our "rejoinder." Calv. Lex.

SUPPLICAVIT (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace. It is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting in the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bl. Comm. 233. See Viner, Abr.; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (4 R), "Forcible Entry" (D 16, 17).

SUPPLICIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A corporal punishment ordained by law; the punishment of death; so called because it was customary to accompany the guilty man to the place of execution, and there offer supplications for him.

SUPPLIES. In English law. Extraordinary grants to the king by parliament to supply the exigencies of the state. Jacob.

SUPPONERE (Lat.) In old English law. To put under; to put in place of another; to substitute fraudulently; to put a false thing in place of the true or genuine; to put a strange child in place of the true heir.

SUPPORT. In the law of easements. The right to rest the beams or framework of a building into a wall of an adjoining building. Also rights of lateral and subjacent support which pertain to owners of adjoining lands. See "Party Walls;" "Lateral Support."

In the law of decedents' estates the term "support" is sometimes used as a synonym for the allowance of articles or money set apart for the survivor and children.

SUPPRESS. To put a stop to anything when actually existing. Does not extend to prevention by suppressing what may lead to it. 34 L. J. M. C. 9; 17 C. P. N. S. 625.

SUPPRESSIO VERI (Lat.) Concealment of truth. See "Fraud."

SUPPRESSIO VERI, EXPRESSIO FALSI. Suppression of the truth is (equivalent to) the expression of what is false. 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 374, 417.

SUPPRESSIO VERI, SUGGESTIO FALSI. Suppression of the truth is equivalent to the suggestion of what is false. 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 521, 525.

SUPRA (Lat.) Above; upon.

SUPRA PROTEST (over protest). In mercantile law. A term applied to an acceptance of a bill by a third person, after protest for nonacceptance by the drawee. 3 Kent, Comm. 87.

SUPREMA VOLUNTAS (Lat.) The last will. Et suprema voluntas quod mandat fierique jubet, parere necesse est, and what a last will commands and orders to be done must be obeyed. Doderidge, J., Latch, 137.

SUPREMACY. Sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence; the highest state. In the United States, the supremacy resides in the people, and is exercised by their constitutional representative,—the president and congress. See "Sovereignty."

SUPREMACY, ACT OF. See "Act of Supremacy."

SUPREMACY, OATH OF. In English law. An oath to uphold the supreme power of the kingdom in the person of the reigning sovereign.

SUPREME. That which is superior to all other things; as, the supreme power of the state, which is an authority over all others; the supreme court, which is superior to all other courts.

SUPREME COURT. A court of superior jurisdiction in many of the states of the United States and the federal court of last resort.

The name is properly applied to the court of last resort, and is so used in most of the states. In nearly all the states there is a supreme court, but in one or two there is a court of appellate jurisdiction from the supreme court.

SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Connecticut.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE. The court formed by the English judicature act of 1873, as modified by the judicature act of 1875, the appellate jurisdiction act of 1876, and the judicature acts of 1877, 1879, and 1881, in substitution for the various superior courts of law, equity, admiralty, probate, and divorce, existing when the act was passed, including the court of appeal in chancery and bankruptcy, and the exchequer chamber. It consists of two permanent divisions, viz., a court of original jurisdiction, called the "high court of justice," and a court of appellate jurisdiction, called the "court of appeal." Its title of "supreme" is now a misnomer, as the superior appellate jurisdiction of the house of lords and privy council, which was originally intended to be transferred to it, has been allowed to remain.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the states of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire.

SUPREMUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Last; the last.

SUPREMUS EST, QUEM NEMO SEQUITUR. He is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

SUR (French). Upon. In the titles of real actions, "sur" was used to point out what the writ was founded upon. Thus, a real action brought by the owner of a reversion or seignior, in certain cases where his tenant repudiated his tenure, was called "a writ of right sur disclaimer." So, a writ of entry sur disseisin was a real action to recover the possession of land from a disseisor.

SUR CUI IN VITA. A writ that lay for the heir of a woman whose husband had aliened her land in fee, and she had omitted to bring the writ of cui in vita for the recovery thereof, in which case, her heir might have this writ against the tenant after her decease. Cowell. See "Cui in Vita."

SURCHARGE. To put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain, or than the party hath a right to do. 3 Bl. Comm. 237.

In case of common without stint, it could only happen when insufficient herbage was left for the lord's own cattle. 1 Rolle, Abr. 399.

The remedy was by distraining the beasts beyond the proper number; an action of trespass which must have been brought by the lord of the manor; an action on the case, or a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Bl. Comm. 238, note.

—In Equity Practice. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging. Story, Eq. Jur. § 526; 2 Ves. Jr. 565; 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237; 8 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 248. It is opposed to "falsify" (q. v.) Leave to surcharge and falsify is granted in preference to opening an account, in case of an account stated by the parties or reported by an auditor, where the party obtaining the liberty would be concluded by the account were it not granted. See "Account;" "Auditor."

SURDUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Deaf; a deaf person. Inst. 2. 12. 3. Surdus et mutus, a deaf and dumb person. Id.; Dig. 28. 1. 6. 1; Id. 28. 1. 7; Id. 50. 17. 124; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 38, § 1; Id. c. 40, § 2.

SURETY. A person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another, who is already bound for the same. See "Suretyship."

SURETY COMPANY. An association or corporation engaged in the business of offering itself, in consideration of a premium paid, as a surety for the fidelity of persons in positions of trust, or for the responsibility of persons bound to the performance of any act.

SURETY OF THE PEACE. Surety of the peace is a species of preventive justice, and consists in obliging those persons whom there is a probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not take place, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior. Brown.

SURETYSHIP. An undertaking to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another by which the surety becomes bound as the principal or original debtor is bound.

It differs from "guaranty" in this, that suretyship is a primary obligation to see that the debt is paid, while guaranty is a collateral undertaking, essentially in the alternative, to pay the debt if the debtor does not pay it. 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252. And, accordingly, a surety may be sued as a promisor to pay the debt, while a guarantor must be sued specially on his contract. 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

While guaranty applies only to contracts not under seal, and principally to mercantile obligations, suretyship may apply to all obligations under seal or by parol. The subjects are, however, nearly related, and many of the principles are common to both. There must be a principal debtor liable, otherwise the promise becomes an original contract; and, the promise being collateral, the surety must be bound to no greater extent than the principal. Suretyship is one of the contracts included in the statute of frauds (29 Car. II. c. 8.)

Kent, C. J., divides secondary undertakings into three classes: (1) Cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time, and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal or direct debtor. Here there is not, and need not be, any other consideration than that moving between the creditor and original debtor. (2) Cases in which the collateral undertaking is subsequent to the creation of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, though the subsisting liability is the ground of the promise, without any distinct and unconnected inducement. Here there must be some further consideration shown, having an immediate respect to such liability; for the consideration for the original debt will not attach to this subsequent promise. (3) When the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the newly-contracting parties. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 29; 21 Y. 415; 21 Me. 459; 15 Pick. (Mass.) 159.

A simpler division is into two classes: (1) Where the principal obligation exists before the collateral undertaking is made. (2) Where there is no principal obligation prior in time to the collateral undertaking. In the last class, the principal obligation may be contemporaneous with or after the collateral undertaking. The first class includes Kent's second and third, the second includes Kent's first, to which must be added cases where the guaranty referring to a present or future principal obligation does not share the consideration thereof, but proceeds on a distinct consideration. Moreover, there are other original undertakings out of the statute of frauds, and valid, though by parol, besides his third class. These are where the credit is given exclusively to the promisor, though the goods or consideration pass to another.

Under this division, undertakings of the first class are original, (1) when the principal obligation is thereby abrogated; (2) when, without such abrogation, the promisor, for his own advantage, apparent on the bargain, undertakes for some new consideration moving to him from the promisee; (3) where the promise is in consideration of some loss or disadvantage to the promisee; (4) where the promise is made to the principal debtor on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promissor. Theobald, Sur. 37 et seq., 49 et seq.

SURFACE WATER. Water which spreads over the surface of the ground, or stands in swamps, or percolates through or under the soil. It has its origin most commonly in rains and melted snow. 84 Wis. 488, 20 L. R. A. 40.

SURGEON. A surgeon, formerly, was a mere operator, who joined his practice to that of a barber. At the present time the profession has risen into great and deserved eminence, and surgery is now, properly speaking, treatment of bodily injuries and ills by manual operations and the use of surgical instruments and appliances.

SURMISE (Law Fr. and Eng.) In old practice. Suggestion. "The plaintiff, upon a surmise of goods come to the hands of the executors, shall have a sci. fa." 1 Leon. 68, 286; Hardr. 82, 811.

SURNAME. A name which is added to the Christian name. In modern times, these have become family names. The family name is that which is continued from parent to child. 149 Iowa 672; 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112.

They are called "surnames," because originally they were written over (sur) the name in judicial writings and contracts. They were and are still used for the purpose of distinguishing persons of the same name. They were taken from something attached to the persons assuming them; as, John Carpenter, Joseph Black, Samuel Little, etc. See "Name."

SURPLUS. That which is left from a fund which has been appropriated for a particular purpose; the remainder of a thing; the overplus; the residue. See 18 Ves. 466.

SURPLUSAGE.

—In Accounts. A greater disbursement than the charges amount to; a balance over. 1 Lew. 219.

—In Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action is surplusage. Cowp. 683; 5 East, 275; 10 East, 205; 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 52; 1 Mason (U. S.) 57; 16 Tex. 656.

SURPLUSAGIUM NON NOCET. Surplusage does no harm. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2949; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 559.

SURPRISE. In equity practice. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. 2 Brown, Ch. 150; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 120, note.

The situation in which a party is placed, without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests. 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 407.

Mr. Jeremy (Eq. Jur. 366, 383, note) seems to think that the word "surprise" is a technical expression, and nearly synonymous with "fraud." It is sometimes used in this sense when it is deemed presumptive of, or approaching to, fraud. 1 Fonbl. Eq. 123; 3 Chanc. Cas. 56, 74, 103, 114. See 6 Ves. 327, 338; 16 Ves. 81, 86, 87; 2 Brown, Ch. 326; 1 Cox 340.

SURREBUTTER. In pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rebutter. It is governed by the same rules as the replication. See 6 Comyn, Dig. 185; 7 Comyn, Dig. 389.

SURREJOINDER. In pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. It is governed in every respect by the same rules as the replication. Steph. Pl. 77; Archb. Civ. Pl. 284; 7 Comyn, Dig. 389.

SURRENDER. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, by which the lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement. Co. Litt. 337b.

The deed by which the surrender is made.

A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for, as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater, by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderer, and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter. Shep. Touch. 300, 301.

The technical and proper words of this conveyance are, surrender and yield up; but any form of words by which the intention of the parties is sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender. Perk. § 607; 1 Term R. 441; Comyn, Dig. "Surrender" (A).

The surrender may be express or implied. The latter is when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 28; 2 Wils. 26; 1 Barn. & Ald. 50; 2 Barn. & Ald. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. And see 6 East, 86; 9 Barn. & C. 288; 7 Watts (Pa.) 123; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 7; Comyn, Dig.; 4 Kent, Comm. 102; Rolle, Abr.; 11 East, 317, note.

SURRENDER BY BAIL. The delivery, by his bail, of the accused person, or principal again into custody, or to a person or court having authority to re-commit or re-bail him. 220 Ill. 354.

SURRENDER OF COPYHOLD. The yielding of a copyhold into the hands of the lord. The usual method of transferring copyholds was by a surrender of the copyhold to the lord, to the use of the intended transferee, and the acceptance of him by the lord.

SURRENDER OF CRIMINALS. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. See "Extradition."

SURRENDER TO USES OF WILL. A right of copyholders in some manors to devise their copyholds by surrendering them to the uses of their wills during their lives.

SURRENDEREE. One to whom a surrender has been made.

SURRENDEROR. One who makes a surrender; as, when the tenant gives up the estate and cancels his lease before the expiration of the term. One who yields up a freehold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

SURREPTITIOUS. That which is done in a fraudulent, stealthy manner.

SURROGATE (Lat. surrogatus, from subrogare, or surrogare, to substitute).

—In English Law. A deputy or substitute of the chancellor, bishop, ecclesiastical or admiralty judge, appointed by him. He must take an oath of office. He can grant licenses, hold courts, and adjudicate cases to the same extent and with the same authority as his principal, provided his grant of powers has been coextensive with those possessed by his principal. The office has arisen by usage, but it is sanctioned by canon 128, and recognized by St. 26 Geo. II. c. 33, 56 Geo. III. c. 82, and 10 Geo. IV. c. 53, by which latter act it was provided that the surrogates of the arches and consistory of London are to continue after the death of the judges of those courts till new appointments are made. 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 205; 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 667.

—In American Law. A term used in some states to denote the judge to whom jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the grant of administration, and of guardianship is confided. In some states, he is called "surrogate," in others, "judge of probate," "register," "judge of the orphans' court," etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county.

—Court. In the United States. A state tribunal, with similar jurisdiction to the court of ordinary, court of probate, etc. (q. v.) relating to matters of probate, etc. 2 Kent, Comm. 409, note (b).

SURSISA (Law Lat. from Law Fr. sursise, q. v.) In old English law. Neglect; default. Potest defendere summonitionem et sursisam, he may defend [deny] the summons and the default. Bracton, fol. 356.

SURSISE (Law Fr. from sursiser, q. v.) In old English law. Neglect; omission; default; a ceasing or cessation. De somounses, et de sursises, et de essoines. Britt. c. 120. E ki le cri orat e sursera, la sursise li Rei amend, and whoever hears the cry [hue and cry], and neglects to pursue it, shall make amends for the neglect to the king. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 48.

SURSISER, or SURCESSER (Law Fr.) To neglect; to omit doing a thing; to surcease; to fail to obey process. Si levesque sursiat nostre somounse, si soit attache de vener par destresse, if the bishop fail to obey our summons, he shall be attached to appear by distress. Britt. c. 26. See "Sursise."

SURSUM REDDERE (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. To render up; to surrender. See "Sursum Redditio."

SURSUM REDDITIO (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. A surrender. The yielding up of an estate for life or years to him that hath an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, wherein the estate for life or years may drown by mutual agreement between them. A surrender must be by mutual agreement of the parties. 91 Ill. App. 520.

SURVEY. The act by which the quantity of a piece of land is ascertained. An instrument sui generis, in the nature of a partition; a customary mode in which a proprietor has set off to himself, in severalty a part of the common estate. 56 N. J. Law 237. The paper containing a statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land is also called a "survey."

By "survey" is also understood an examination; as, a survey has been made of your house, and now the insurance company will insure it.

A plan and description of the present existence, state, condition, and mode of use of the insured property. 179 Mich. 443, 453.

SURVEY OF A VESSEL. An examination of a vessel to determine her condition. It is frequently had where some disaster has befallen the ship before proceeding to make repairs, or take measures for saving her.

SURVIVE. Ordinarily means to live longer than some other individual, but it may mean to continue to live beyond a specified period, event or condition. 220 Ill. 511.

It imports that the person who is to survive must be living at the death of the person whom, or at the happening of the event which, he is to survive. To outlive. "To live after" is somewhat ambiguous. See "Survivor." 35 L. J. Ch. 640; L. R. 2 Eq. 341.

SURVIVOR. One who survives another; one who outlives another; one of two or more persons who lives after the other or others have deceased; the longest liver of two or more joint tenants, or of any two or more persons who have a joint interest in anything. See 2 Bl. Comm. 183, 184.

One or more of certain individuals named or referred to, who are living when any other or others of them happen to die. See 1 Cush. (Mass.) 118; 11 Grat. (Va.) 67.

This is the natural and proper meaning of the term, which is usually given to it by the courts, in the construction of wills. 2 Jarm. Wills, 609-616 (435-439, Perkins' Ed. 1849). In some cases, however, "survivor" has been construed to mean "other," where it has appeared necessary in order to give effect to the apparent intention of the testator. See Id. 616-619 (440-442, Perkins' Ed.); 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1256. See "Survive."

SURVIVORSHIP. The living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others.

Survivorship is where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it. The most familiar example is in the case of joint tenants, the rule being that, on the death of one of two joint tenants, the whole property passes to the survivor.

SURVIVORSHIP, CLAUSE OF. An express clause in a devise or deed of gift to tenants in common that the property is to go to the survivor. Sometimes called the "clause of accruer."

SUS' PER COLL'. In English law. In the English practice, a calendar is made out of attainted criminals, and the judge signs the calendar with their separate judgments in the margin. In the case of a capital felony, it is written opposite the prisoner's name, "Let him be hanged by the neck," which, when the proceedings were in Latin, was "suspendatur per collum," or, in the abbreviated form, "Sus' per coll'." 4 Bl. Comm. 403.

SUSPEND. The word "suspend" in its natural significance rather imports something which may not be permanent, than that which necessarily is so; but which, while it ordinarily implies a temporary cessation, may, in certain connections, imply a termination. 167 Mich. 123, 131.

SUSPENDER. In Scotch law. He in whose favor a suspension is made.

In general, a suspender is required to give caution to pay the debt in the event it shall be found due. Where the suspender cannot, from his low or suspected circumstances, procure unquestionable security, the lords admit juratory caution; but the reasons of suspension are in that case to be considered with particular accuracy at passing the bill. Act 8 Nov. 1682; Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 6.

SUSPENDERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To hang; to execute by hanging. Suspensus, hanged. See "Sus' per Coll'."

SUSPENSE. When a rent, profit a prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened. Co. Litt. 313a.

SUSPENSION. A temporary stop of a right, of a law, and the like.

In times of war, the habeas corpus act may be suspended by lawful authority.

There may be a suspension of an officer's duties or powers when he is charged with crimes. Wood, Inst. 510.

Suspension of a right in an estate is a partial extinguishment, or an extinguishment for a time. It differs from an extinguishment in this, a suspended right may be revived; one extinguished is absolutely dead. Bac. Abr. "Extinguishment" (A).

The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time; but it has not the effect of a repeal. 8 Dall. (Pa.) 365.

—In Scotch Law. That form of law by which the effect of a sentence condemnatory, that has not yet received execution, is stayed or postponed till the cause be again considered. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 5. Suspension is competent, also, even where there is no decree, for putting a stop to any illegal act whatsoever. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 7.

Letters of suspension bear the form of a summons, which contains a warrant to cite the charter.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function, or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total; for a limited time, or forever, when it is called "deprivation" or "amotion." Ayliffe, Par. 501.

SUSPENSION OF A RIGHT. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time.

When a right is suspended by operation of law, the right is revived the moment the bar is removed; but when the right is suspended by the act of the party, it is gone forever.

SUSPENSION OF ARMS. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time, or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them.

SUSPENSION, PLEAS IN. Those alleged matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the action. Steph. Pl. 45.

SUSPENSIVE CONDITION. One which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled; as, if I promise to pay you one thousand dollars on condition that the ship Thomas Jefferson shall arrive from Havre, the contract is suspended until the arrival of the ship. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 731.

SUSPICION. That state of mind which in a reasonable man would lead to inquiry. 137 Wis. 66, 73.

SUSUM. In old European records. A form of the Lat. sursum, up, upwards.

SUUM CUIQUE TRIBUERE (Lat.) To render unto every man that which belongs to him. One of the three precepts to which Justinian said that the law might be reduced. Inst. 1. 1. 8. The others are alterum non laedere and honeste vivere (q. v.)

SUUS HAERES (Lat.) In civil law. The proper heir, as it were, not called in from outside.

Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him. Calv. Lex.

SUUS JUDEX (Lat.) In old English law. A proper judge; a judge having cognizance of a cause. Literally, one's own judge. Bracton, fol. 401.

SUZEREIGN (Norman Fr. suz, under, and re or rey, king). A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. Dict. de l'Academie Française. A tenant in capite or immediately under the king. Note 77 of Butler & Hargrave's notes, Co. Litt. lib. 3.

SWAIN MOTE, SWEIN MOTE, or SWAIN gemote (from Saxon swang, an attendant, or bocklandman, or freeholder, and mote, or gemote, a meeting). In forest law. A court holden before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the swain mote, thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. Its principal jurisdiction is, first, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest, and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments against offenses in vert and venison. 3 Bl. Comm. 71, 72; Cowell.

SWEAR. To take an oath administered by some officer duly empowered. See "Affirmation;" "Oath."

To use such profane language as is forbidden by law. This is generally punished by statutory provinces in the several states. See "Profaneness."

SWEARING THE PEACE. Showing to a magistrate that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to have him bound over to keep the peace. See "Surety of the Peace."

SWEATING. The questioning of a person in custody charged with crime in an attempt to obtain from him information concerning his connection with crime or knowledge thereof, after he has been arrested and in custody, by plying him with questions or by threats or other wrongful means, extorting from him information to be used against him as testimony upon his trial for such alleged crime. 153 Ky. 412, 155 S. W. 1131, Ann. Cas. 1915C 134.

SWINDLER. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons. 1 Term R. 748; 2 H. Bl. 531; Starkie, Sland. & L. 135. See 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 128.

Swindling is usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use. 2 Russ. Crimes, 130; Alis. Crim. Law Sc. 250; 2 Mass. 406.

SWORN BROTHERS. Persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes. See Sedg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

SYB AND SOM (Saxon). Peace and security. Words occurring in the laws of Canute. Eallum Cristenum mannum syb and som gemene, to all Christian men let there be common peace and security. LL. Ecc. Canuti R. c. 17.

SYLLABUS. A headnote of a reported decision, briefly stating a conclusion on a point of law presented in the case.

SYLVA CAEDUA (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. Wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which, being cut, grew again from the stump or root. Lyndw. Prov. 190; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 90.

SYMBOLAEOGRAPHY. The art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extrajudicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, and testaments or last wills. Wharton.

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY. The delivery of some thing as a representation or sign of the delivery of some other.

Where an actual delivery of goods cannot be made, a symbolical delivery of some particular thing, as a halfpenny, will vest the property equally with an actual delivery. Long, Sales, 162; 8 How. (U. S.) 399; 6 Md. 10; 19 N. H. 419; 39 Me. 496; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 282; 3 Cal. 140.

SYMBOLUM ANIMAE. A mortuary, or soul scot.

SYMOND'S INN. Formerly an inn of chancery.

SYNALLAGMATIC CONTRACT. In the civil law. A bilateral or reciprocal contract, in which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, each binding himself to the other. Such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc. Pothier Obl. part 1, c. 1, sect. 1, art. 2. Civil Code of Louis. Art. 1758.

SYNCOPARE. To cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood. Cowell.

SYNDIC. In French law. The assignee of a bankrupt.

One who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense, the word corresponds to director or manager. Rodman, Notes to Code de Com. p. 351; Civ. Code La. art. 429; Dalloz.

SYNDICATE. Persons united for the purpose of an enterprise too large for individuals to undertake.

A group of financiers who buy up the shares of a company in order to sell them at a profit by creating a scarcity. See 108 Pa. St. 162.

SYNDICUS (Greek). One chosen by a college, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. Calv. Lex. See "Syndic."

SYNGRAPH (Greek). A deed, bond, or other instrument of writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties "wrote together."

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment, and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together, proved their authenticity.

Deeds thus made were denominated syngraphs by the canonists, and by the common lawyers, chirographs. 2 Bl. Comm. 296.

SYNOD. An ecclesiastical assembly.

SYR (Law Fr.) Sir. A word used by counsel in addressing a court. Keilw. 170b. Year Books, passim.

T

T. An abbreviation of Termino, or Term, in the old reports.

An abbreviation of Teste, in old writs. 1 Inst. Cler. 13.

T. Every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. The practice is abolished. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

T. R. E. In old records, tempore Regis Edwardi, in the time of King Edward. Of common occurrence in Domesday Book, where the valuation of manors as it was in the time of Edward the Confessor is recounted.

TABARD. A short gown; a herald's coat; a sur coat.

TABARDER. One who wears a tabard or short gown. The name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford. Enc. Lond.

TABELLA (Lat.) In civil law. A small table on which votes were often written. Cicero, in Rull. 2. 2. Three tablets were given to the judges; one with the letter "A" for absolutio, one with "C" for condemnatio, and one with "N L" for non liquet, not proven. Calv. Lex.

TABELLIO (Lat.) In Roman Law. An officer among the Romans, who reduced to writing, and into proper form, agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments, and witnessed their execution.

The term tabellio is derived from the Latin tabula, seu tabella, which, in this sense, signified those tablets or plates covered with wax which were then used instead of paper. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 53; Delauriere, sur Ragneau, Notaire.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects. They had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aides of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones. Enc. de M. D'Alembert, "Tabellion;" Jacob, "Tabellion;" Merlin, Repert. "Notaire," § 1; 3 Giannone, Istoria di Napoli, p. 86.

TABERNA (Lat. from tabula, a board).

—In the Civil Law. A shop, as being inclosed with boards (quod tabulis clauditur). Dig. 14. 3. 3; Id. 14. 3. 5. 10. 13; Id. 14. 3. 8; Id. 14. 3. 13. 2; Id. 14. 3. 18.

Any building fit for habitation (omne utile ad habitandum aedificium). Dig. 50. 16. 183.

A wine shop. Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. A drinking house; a tavern. Taverns and wakes (tabernae vigiliaeque) are spoken of in Fleta as places of nocturnal resort by servants, to the neglect of their duties. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 9. And see Id. c. 82, § 3.

TABERNACULUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A public inn or house of entertainment. Consuet. Dom. de Farendon, MS. fol. 48; Cowell.

TABERNARIUS (Lat. from taberna, a shop).

—In the Civil Law. A shop keeper. Dig. 14. 3. 5. 7.

—In Old English Law. A taverner or tavern keeper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 17.

TABLE DE MARBRE (Fr.) In old French law. Table of Marble; a principal seat of the admiralty, so called. These Tables de Marbre are frequently mentioned in the Ordonnance of the Marine. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 1, art. 10; Id. tit. 2, art. 13; Id. tit. 3, art. 3.

TABLE RENTS. Rents paid to bishops and other ecclesiastics, appropriated to their table or housekeeping. Jacob.

TABLES. A synopsis in which many particulars are brought together in a general view, as, genealogical tables, which are composed of the names of persons belonging to a family. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1963, 1964.

TABLEAU OF DISTRIBUTION. In Louisiana. A list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to. 4 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 535.

TABULA IN NAUFRAGIO (Lat. a plank in a wreck). In English law. A figurative term used to denote the power of a third mortgagee, who, having obtained his mortgage without any knowledge of a second mortgage, may acquire the first incumbrance, and squeeze out and have satisfaction before the second. 2 Ves. Jr. 573; 2 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 3, c. 2, § 2; 2 Vent. 337; 1 Chanc. Cas. 162; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 414, 415. See "Tacking."

TABULAE. In civil law. Contracts and written instruments of all kinds, especially wills. So called because originally written on tablets and with wax. Calv. Lex.

TABULAE NUPTIALES. In the civil law. A written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.

TABULARIUS. In the civil law. A notary.

TAC. A kind of customary payment by a tenant. Blount, Ten. 155.

TAC FREE. Free from payments, etc.; e. g., "tac free de omnibus propriis porcis suis infra metas de C." i. e., paying nothing for his hogs running within that limit. Jacob.

TACIT (from Lat. taceo, to be silent). That which, although not expressed, is understood from the nature of the thing, or from the provision of the law; implied.

TACIT LAW. A law which derives its authority from the common consent of the people without any legislative enactment. 1 Bouv. Inst. 120.

TACIT RELOCATION. In Scotch law. The tacit or implied renewal of a lease when the landlord, instead of warning a tenant, has allowed him to continue without making a new agreement. Bell, Dict. "Relocation."

TACIT TACK. See "Tacit Relocation."

TACITA QUÆDAM HABENTUR PRO EXPRESSIS. Certain things, though unexpressed, are considered as expressed. 8 Coke, 40.

TACITE (Lat.) Silently; impliedly; tacitly.

TACK. In Scotch law. A contract of location by which the use of land or any other immovable subject is let to the lessee or tacksman for a certain yearly rent, either in money, the fruits of the ground, or services. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 8. This word is nearly synonymous with "lease."

TACK DUTY. Rent reserved upon a lease.

TACKING.

—Of Securities. The union of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser's claiming title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien, which is prior, without redeeming or discharging other liens, also which are subsequent, to his own title. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 1, c. 2, § 1, pp. 188-191; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 412.

The doctrine is not recognized in the United States. 37 Vt. 345.

—Of Possession. The connecting of successive possessions by persons in privity, so as to make a continuous adverse possession. 80 Hun (N. Y.) 287.

TACKSMAN. In Scotch law. A tenant.

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Touching the holy (evangelists). Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16, § 21. "A bishop may swear visis evangelis (looking at the Gospels), and not tactis, and it is good enough." Vaughan, C. J., Freem. 133.

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS SCRIPTURIS (Lat.) In old European law. Touching the holy Scriptures. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 2, pr. Saorosanctis evangelis tactis. Code, 3. 1. 14. 1.

TACTO PER SE SANCTO EVANGELIO (Law Lat.) Having personally touched the holy Gospel. Cro. Eliz. 105. The description of a corporal oath.

TAIL. See "Estates."

TAIL AFTER POSSIBILITY OF ISSUE extinct. The estate of a surviving tenant in special tail after the death, without surviving issue, of the person from whose body the issue to inherit was to spring. 2 Bl. Comm. 124.

TAIL FEMALE. An estate tail limited to the female heirs of the donee.

TAIL GENERAL. An estate tail granted to one and the heirs of his body in general. 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

TAIL MALE. An estate tail limited to the male heirs of the donee.

TAIL SPECIAL. An estate tail granted to one and certain only of the heirs of his body, as those to be begotten on his then wife. 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

TAILLE (French).

—In Old French Law. A tax or assessment levied by the king, or by any great lord, upon his subjects. Brande.

—In Old English Law. The fee which is opposed to fee simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee,—in short, an estate tail.

TAILZIE. In the Scotch law, an arbitrary line of succession laid down by a proprietor, in substitution of a legal line of succession. A deed of tailzie creates a Scotch entail by which, until 11 & 12 Vict. c. 36, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 94, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 84, an estate might be tied up forever. See, also, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 61.

TAINT. Attainder (q. v.)

TAKE. A technical expression which signifies to receive; as, a devisee will take under the will. The devisee takes only when the possession of the testator has ceased. 41 N. J. Law, 70.

To seize; as, to take and carry away, either lawfully or unlawfully.

To choose; e. g., ad capiendas assisas, to choose a jury.

To obtain; e. g., to take a verdict in court, to get a verdict.

TAKER. One to whom an estate comes. The "first taker" is he who holds the immediate estate, with expectant estates following, or the first of a line of grantees.

TAKING. An element of "larceny" (q. v.)

TALE. In English law. The ancient name of the declaration or count. 3 Bl. Comm. 293.

TALES (Lat. talis, such, like). In practice. A number of jurors added to a deficient panel sufficient to supply the deficiency.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS (Lat. a like number of the bystanders). A sufficient number of jurors selected from the bystanders to supply a deficiency in the panel.

The order of the judge for taking such bystanders as jurors.

Whenever, from any cause, the panel of jurors is insufficient, the judge may issue the above order, and the officer immediately executes it. See 2 Hill (S. C.) 381; 2 Pa. St. 412; Coxe (N. J.) 283; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 63; 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 426; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 43, note. The number to be drawn on successive panels is in the discretion of the court. 17 Ga. 497.

TALESMAN. A person summoned to act as a juror from among the bystanders in the court.

TALIO (Lat. from talis, such, like). In the civil law. Like for like; punishment in the same kind; the punishment of an injury by an act of the same kind, as an eye for an eye, a limb for a limb, etc. Called similitudo supplicii, likeness of punishment; reciproca poena, reciprocal punishment. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 291.

TALIS INTERPETATIO SEMPER FINEnda est, ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne iudicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient is to be avoided, and so that the judgment be not nugatory. 1 Coke, 52.

TALIS NON EST EADEM, NAM NUL-lum simile est idem. What is like is not the same, for nothing similar is the same. 4 Coke, 18.

TALIS RES, VEL TALE RECTUM, QUAE vel quod non est in homine adtunc super-stite sed tantummodo est et consistit in consideratione et intelligentia legis, et quod all dixerunt talem rem vel tale rectum fore in nubibus. Such a thing or such a right as is not vested in a person then living, but merely exists in the consideration and contemplation of law, is said to be in abeyance, and others have said that such a thing or such a right is in the clouds. Co. Litt. 342.

TALITER PROCESSUM EST. Upon pleading the judgment of an inferior court, the proceedings themselves, and this general judgment, and on which the same was founded, must, to some extent, appear in the pleading, but the rule is that they may be alleged with a general allegation that "such proceedings were had," instead of a detailed account of the proceedings themselves, and this general allegation is called the "taliter processum est." A like concise mode of stating former proceedings in a suit is adopted at the present day in chancery proceedings upon petitions, and in actions in the nature of bills of revivor and supplement. Brown.

TALLAGE (Fr. tailler, to cut). In English law. A term used to denote subsidies, taxes, customs, and, indeed, any imposition whatever by the government for the purpose of raising a revenue. Bac. Abr. "Smuggling, etc." (B); Fortescue de Laud. 26; Madd. c. 17; 2 Inst. 531, 532; Spelman.

TALLAGERS. Tax or toll gatherers; mentioned by Chaucer.

TALLAGIUM (perhaps from French taille, cut off). A term including all taxes. 2 Inst. 532; Stat. de tal. non Concedendo, temp. Edw. I.; Stow, Annals, 445; 1 Bl. Comm. 311*. Chaucer has talaigiers for "tax gatherers."

TALLAGIUM FACERE. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

TALLATIO. A keeping account by tallies. Cowell.

TALLIA. Commons in meat or drink; tax or tribute.

TALLY (Fr. tailler; Ital. tagliare, i. e., scindere, to cut off). A stick cut into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. Hence the tallier of the exchequer is now called the "teller." Lex. Const. 205; Cowell. One party must have one part, and the other the other, and they must match. Tallies in the exchequer are abolished by 2 Geo. III. c. 82. There was the same usage in France. Dict. de l'Acad. Franc.; Poth. Obl. pt. 4, c. 1, art. 2, § 8.

TALLY TRADE. A system of dealing, by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly installments. McCulloch, Dict. A tally was a common security for money in the day of Edw. I. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. xi. p. 253.

TALTARUM'S CASE. A case reported in Y. B. 12 Edw. IV. 19-21, which is said to have established the foundation of common recoveries, and their efficacy to bar an entail.

TALZIE. See "Tailzie."

TAM QUAM. A phrase used where a proceeding is applied or referred to two things or persons.

A writ of error from inferior courts, when the error is supposed to be as well in giving the judgment as in awarding execution upon it. Tam in redditione iudicii, quam in adjudicatione executionis.

A venire tam quam was one by which a jury was summoned, as well to try an issue as to inquire of the damages on a default. 2 Tidd, Prac. 722, 895.

TAMEN (Lat.) Notwithstanding; nevertheless; yet.

TANGIBLE PROPERTY. That which may be felt or touched. It must necessarily be corporeal, but it may be real or personal.

TANISTRY (a thanis). In Irish law. A species of tenure founded on immemorial usage, by which lands, etc., descended seniori et dignissimo viri sanguinis et cognominis, i. e., to the oldest and worthiest man of the blood and name. Jacob.

TANTEO (Spanish). In Spanish law. Preamption. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 3.

TANTUM BONA VALENT, QUANTUM vendi possunt. Things are worth what they will sell for. 3 Inst. 305.

TARDE VENIT (Lat.) In practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ, when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return day.

The sheriff is required to show that he has yielded obedience to the writ, or give a good excuse for his omission; and he may say, quod breve adeo tarde venit quod exequi non possunt. It is usual to return the writ with an indorsement of tarde venit. Comyn, Dig. "Return" (D 1).

TARE. An allowance in the purchase and sale of merchandise for the weight of the box, bag, or cask, or other thing, in which the goods are packed. It is also an allowance made for any defect, waste, or diminution in the weight, quality, or quantity of goods. It differs from "tret" (q. v.)

TARIFF. Customs, duties, toll, or tribute payable upon merchandise to the general government are called "tariff." The rate of customs, etc., also bears this name, and the list of articles liable to duties is also called the "tariff."

TASSARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To stack; to heap up.

TASSUM (Tassa. L. Lat.) In old English law. A heap; a hay-mow, or hay-stack.

TAURI LIBERI LIBERTAS. A common bull, because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc.

TAVERN. A place of entertainment; a house kept up for the accommodation of strangers. Webster. Originally, a house for the retailing of liquors to be drunk on the spot. Webster.

In almost all the states, the word has come to mean the same as "inn," with no particular reference to the sale of liquors. See 2 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 597*, note (a); 5 N. H. 258.

Tavern, hotel, inn and public house are in this country used synonymously; and while they entertain the traveling public, and keep guests, and receive compensation therefor, they do not lose their character, though they may not have the privilege of selling liquors. The distinction, as respects inn and tavern keepers, observed in England under the common law, does not exist with us, and different names are applied to them, though "hotel" and "house" are usually and commonly used to denote a higher order of public houses than the ordinary tavern or inn. The word "tavern" includes all hotels and houses that entertain and accommodate the public for compensation. 46 Mo. 593, Ann. Cas. 1914B 874, note.

TAVERN KEEPER. An innkeeper (q. v.)

TAVERNER. (Law Fr. and Eng.; Fr. tavernier, from taverne). In old English law. A seller of wine; one who kept a house or shop for the sale of wine. Et puis soit enquis de taverners que ont vendu vins encontre la droit assise, and afterwards it shall be inquired of taverners who have sold wines against the right assize. Britt. c. 30. A retailer of wines. Hardr. 338. "Taverner" is used as the addition of a person in a writ in the Register. Reg. Orig. 195. But "tavern keeper" has now, for the most part, taken its place.

TAX. A contribution imposed by government on individuals for the service of the state. 13 Pa. St. 104; 115 Ill. 109. It is distinguished from a subsidy, as being certain and orderly. Jacob.

A sum of money assessed under the authority of the state on the personal property of an individual for the use of the state. 60 Me. 124.

It is distinguished from a local assessment, as being imposed without reference to peculiar benefits to particular individuals or property. 84 N. Y. 108; 22 Minn. 494. See "Special Assessment."

"Excise" and "impost" are sometimes used as synonymous with "tax," but in strictness apply only to taxes upon production or consumption, and upon imports, respectively.

Taxes are either:

(1) Direct or indirect, direct being those assessed on the property, person, business, etc., of those who are to pay them, and indirect being a tax levied on commodities before they reach the consumer. Cooley, Tax'n, 6.

(2) Ad valorem or specific, ad valorem being those imposed in proportion to value, and specific those consisting of a fixed sum imposed upon an article or thing by name.

(3) General or local, general being those imposed on property throughout the state, and local being those imposed on the locality specially benefited.

Taxes are also classified according to the nature of the property on which they are imposed, as income taxes, inheritance taxes, personal property taxes, etc.

TAX DEED. An instrument whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the rightful proprietor to the purchaser at the tax sale, or sale of the land for nonpayment of taxes.

TAX FERRETS. Persons who engage in the business of searching for property omitted from taxation. 218 Ill. 477.

TAX LEVY. The amount of tax to be raised, or the official act by which the amount is determined upon.

TAX LIEN. A statutory lien on lands to secure the payment of taxes, which exists in favor of the public.

TAX LISTS. The assessment roll; the list of persons or property against whom or which taxes are levied.

TAX SALE. A sale of lands for the nonpayment of taxes assessed thereon. A sale made in a proceeding in rem. 108 Ill. 334.

TAX TITLE. A title to land derived through the sale of it for delinquent taxes, or through the foreclosure of a tax lien.

TAXATI. Soldiers of a garrison or fleet, assigned to a certain station. Spelman.

TAXATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The modification by a judge of the amount of damages claimed or sworn to by the plaintiff.

TAXATIO ECCLESIASTICA. The valuation of ecclesiastical benefits made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV. granting to King Henry III. the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III., and hence called "Taxatio Norwicensis." It is also called "Pope Innocent's Valor." Wharton.

TAXATIO EXPENSARUM (Law Lat.) In old English practice. Taxation of costs.

TAXATIO NORWICENCIS. See "Taxatio Ecclesiastica."

TAXATION. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. Webster.

—In Practice. Adjustment. Fixing the amount; e. g., taxation of costs. 3 Chit. Gen. Prac. 602.

TAXATION OF COSTS. In practice. Fixing the amount of costs to which a party is entitled.

It is a rule that the jury must assess the damages and costs separately, so that it may appear to the court that the costs were not considered in the damages; and when the jury give costs in an amount insufficient to answer the costs of the suit, the plaintiff may pray that the officer may tax the costs, and such taxation is inserted in the judgment. This is said to be done ex assensu of the plaintiff, because at his prayer. Bac. Abr. "Costs" (K). The costs are taxed in the first instance by the prothonotary or clerk of the court. See 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 591; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 412; 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 245, 310; 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412; Harper (S. C.) 326; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211; 10 Mass. 26; 16 Mass. 370. A bill of costs, having been once submitted to such an officer for taxation, cannot be withdrawn from him and referred to another. 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 252.

TAXERS. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, England, to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

TAXING MASTERS. Officers of the English supreme court, who examine and allow or disallow items in bills of costs. See 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (12th Ed.) 507; Smith, Ch. Prac. 12, 62, 829; 2 Daniell, Ch. Prac. (5th Ed.) 1308.

TAXING OFFICER. Each house of parliament has a taxing officer, whose duty it is to tax the costs incurred by the promoters or opponents of private bills. May, Parl. Prac. 843.

TAXT WARD. An annual payment made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due to him under the tenure of wardholding. Abolished.

TEAM, or THEAME. A royalty or privilege granted, by royal charter, to a lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, chattels, etc. Glanv. 1, 5, c. ii.

TEAMSTER. One who drives horses in a wagon for the purpose of carrying goods for hire. He is liable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496. See "Carrier."

TECHNICAL. That which properly belongs to an art.

In the construction of contracts it is a general rule that technical words are to be taken according to their approved and known use in the trade in which the contract is entered into, or to which it relates, unless they have manifestly been understood in another sense by the parties. 2 Bos. & P. 164; 6 Term R. 320; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1036.

TEIND COURT. In Scotch law. A court which has jurisdiction of matters relating to the augmentation of stipends, and the valuation and sale of tithes.

It is held before justices of the court of sessions organized as a separate court, with distinct clerks and ministerial officers. Bell, Dict.

TEINDS. In Scotch law. That liquidated proportion of the rents or goods of the people which is due to churchmen for performing divine service, or exercising the other spiritual functions proper to their several offices. Ersk. Inst. 2. 10. 2.

TEINLAND. Thainland (q. v.)

TELEGRAPHIAE. Written evidence of things past. Blount.

TELLER (tallier, one who keeps a tally). An officer in a bank or other institution; a person appointed to receive votes; a name given to certain officers in the English exchequer.

TELLERS IN PARLIAMENT. In the language of parliament, the "tellers" are the members of the house selected to count the members when a division takes place. In the house of lords, a division is effected by the "noncontents" remaining within the bar, and the "contents" going below it, a teller being appointed for each party. In the commons, the "ayes" go into the lobby at one end of the house, and the "noes" into the lobby at the other end, the house itself being perfectly empty, and two tellers being appointed for each party. May, Parl. Prac.

TELLIGRAPHUM. An Anglo-Saxon character of land. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 1, p. 10.

TELLWORC. That labor which a tenant was bound to do for his lord for a certain number of days.

TEMENTALE, or TENEMENTALE. A tax of two shillings upon every ploughland; a decenary (q. v.)

TEMERE (Lat.) In the civil law. Rashly; inconsiderately; without sufficient cause. A plaintiff was said temere litigare, who demanded a thing out of malice, or sued without just cause, and who could show no ground or cause of action. Brissonius.

TEMPLARS. A religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because the members dwelt in a part of the temple of Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulchre of our Lord. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and their profession was at first to defend travellers from highwaymen and robbers. The order was suppressed A. D. 1307, and their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious orders. Brown.

TEMPLE. Two English inns of court, thus called because anciently the dwelling place of the Knights Templar. On the suppression of the order, they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitia, or inns of court. They are called the "Inner" and "Middle Temple," in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the "Outer Temple," because situated without Temple Bar. Enc. Lond.

TEMPORAL AFFAIRS. The temporal affairs of a church are understood to be the revenues, lands and tenements, in other words, secular possessions, with which it is endowed. The hiring of a sexton to perform the duties incident to his office has nothing to do with the management of the temporalities of the church. 76 Ill. 253.

TEMPORAL LORDS. The peers of England; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of parliament. 2 Steph. Comm. 330, 345.

TEMPORALIS ACTIO (Lat.) An action which could only be brought within a certain period.

TEMPORALIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.) A temporary exception which barred an action for a time only.

TEMPORALITIES (Law Lat. temporalia). Revenues, lands, tenements, and lay fees which bishops have from livery of the king, and in virtue of which they sit in parliament. 1 Rolle, Abr. 881.

TEMPORARY. Which is to last for a limited time.

A temporary statute, or one which is limited in its operation for a particular period of time after its enactment; the opposite of perpetual. 70 Ill. 399. See Statute.

TEMPORIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. A plea of lapse of time in bar of an action, like our statute of limitations. Dig. "De Diversis Temporalibus Actionibus."

TEMPUS (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Time in general. A time limited; a season; e. g., tempus personis, mast time in the forest.

TEMPUS CONTINUUM (Lat.) In civil law. A period of time which runs continually having once begun, feast days being counted as well as ordinary days, and it making no difference whether the person against whom it runs is present or absent. Calv. Lex.

TEMPUS ENIM MODUS TOLLENDI OBLIGATIONES et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores. For a time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contempters of their own rights. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 12.

TEMPUS SEMESTRE. Half a year, and not six lunar months. Westminster II. c. 5.

TEMPUS UTILE (Lat.) In civil law. A period of time which runs beneficially; i. e., feast days are not included, nor does it run against one absent in a foreign country, or on business of the republic, or detained by stress of weather. But one detained by sickness is not protected from its running; for it runs where there is power to act by an agent, as well as where there is power to act personally; and the sick man might have deputed his agent. Calv. Lex.

TENANCY. The state or condition of a tenant; the estate held by a tenant.

TENANT. (Lat. teno, tenere, to hold). One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will. In a popular sense, he is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands or tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupation are usually defined by an agreement called a "lease," while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant. 5 Man. & G. 54; Bouv. Inst. Index.

—Tenants in Common. Such as hold lands and tenements by several and distinct titles, and not by a joint title, but occupy in common, the only unity recognized between them being that of possession. They are accountable to each other for the profits of the estate; and if one of them turns another out of possession, an action of ejectment will lie against him. They may also have reciprocal actions of waste against each other. 2 Bl. Comm. 191. See "Estate in Common;" 7 Cruise, Dig.; Bac. Abr. "Joint Tenants, and Tenants in Common;" Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (E 10, F 6), "Chancery" (3 V 4), "Devise" (N 8), "Estates" (K 8, R 2); 1 Vern. 353; Archb. Civ. Pl. 53, 73.

—Tenant by the Curtesy. A species of life tenant who, on the death of his wife seised of an estate of inheritance, after having issue by her which is capable of inheriting her estate, holds her lands for the period of his own life. After the birth of such a child, the tenant is called "tenant by the curtesy initiate" (Co. Litt. 29a; 2 Bl. Comm. 126); but to consummate the tenancy four things are requisite: lawful marriage, actual seizin of the wife, issue capable of inheriting, and death of the wife. The first three without the last constitute tenancy by the curtesy initiate. The husband's estate is initiate on issue had, and consummate on the death of the wife. 142 Ill. 393; 4 Kent's Com. pp. 28-30; 44 Ill. 58; 128 Ill. 102. See "Curtesy."

—Tenant in Dower. Another species of life tenant, occurring where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance, and dies, and the wife thereby becomes entitled to hold the third part of all the lands and tenements of which he was seised at any time during the coverture to her own use, for the term of her natural life. See "Dower;" 2 Bl. Comm. 129; Comyn, Dig. "Dower" (A).

—Tenant of the Demesne. One who is tenant of a mesne lord; as, where A. is tenant of B. and C. of A.; B. is the lord, A. the mesne lord, and C. the tenant of the demesne. Hammond, N. P. 392, 393.

—Tenant In Fee. Under the feudal law one who held his lands either immediately or derivatively from the sovereign, in consideration of the military or other services he was bound to perform. If he held directly from the king, he was called a "tenant in fee," in capite. With us, the highest estate which a man can have in land has direct reference to his duty to the state, 108 Ill. App. 10. From it he ultimately holds his title, to it he owes fealty and service, and if he fails in his allegiance to it, or dies without heirs upon whom this duty may devolve, his lands revert to the state under which he held. Subject to this qualification, however, a tenant in fee has an absolute unconditional ownership in land, which, upon his death, vests in his heirs, 122 Ill. 328; and hence he enjoys what is called an "estate of inheritance." See "Estates"; 2 Bl. Comm. 81; Litt. § 1; Plowd. 555.

—Joint Tenants. Two or more persons to whom lands or tenements have been granted to hold in fee simple, for life, for years, or at will. In order to constitute an estate in joint tenancy, the tenants thereof must have one and the same interest, arising by the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 180. The principal incident to this estate is the right of survivorship, by which, upon the death of one joint tenant, the entire tenancy remains to the surviving cotenant, and not to the heirs or other representatives of the deceased, the last survivor taking the whole estate. It is an estate which can only be created by the acts of the parties, and never by operation of law. Co. Litt. 184b; 2 Cruise, Dig. 43; 4 Kent. Comm. 358; 2 Bl. Comm. 179; 7 Cruise, Dig. "Joint Tenancy;" Prest. Est.

—Tenant for Life. One who has a freehold interest in lands, the duration of which is confined to the life or lives of some particular person or persons, or to the happening or not happening of some uncertain event. 1 Cruise, Dig. 76. When he holds the estate by the life of another, he is usually called tenant pur autre vie. 2 Bl. Comm. 120; Comyn, Dig. "Estates" (F 1). See "Estate for Life;" "Emblements."

—Tenant by the Manner. One who has a less estate than a fee in land, which remains in the reversioner. He is so called because in avowries and other pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant of the land, in contradistinction to the veray tenant, who is called simply "tenant." See "Veray."

—Tenant by the Marital Right. At common law, by virtue of the marriage alone, and without the birth of issue, the husband was seized of an estate, during coverture, in the lands held by his wife in fee. He is said to have been seized of the freehold jure uxoris. He took the rents and profits during the joint lives of himself and his wife. This estate was ended by the death of the wife or the death of the husband. It is a freehold estate in the husband, since it must continue during their joint lives, and it may by possibility last during his life. It was liable to be sold on execution against the husband. 142 Ill. 393; 2 Kent, Comm. 130.

—Tenant paravail. The tenant of a tenant. He is so called because he has the avails or profits of the land.

—Tenant in Severalty. He who holds lands and tenements in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl. Comm. 179.

—Tenant at Sufferance. He who comes into possession by a lawful demise, but after his term is ended continues the possession wrongfully by holding over. He has only a naked possession, stands in no privity to the landlord, and may, consequently, be removed without notice to quit. Co. Litt. 57b; 2 Leon. 46; 3 Leon. 153; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 123; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 150, 312; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 128.

—Tenant in Tail. One who holds an estate in fee, which by the instrument creating it is limited to some particular heirs, exclusive of others; as, to the heirs of "his body," or to the heirs, "male or female," of his body. The whole system of entailment, rendering estates unalienable, is so directly opposed to the spirit of our republican institutions as to have become very nearly extinct in the United States. Most of the states, at an early period of our independence, passed laws declaring such estates to be estates in fee simple, or provided that the tenant and the remainderman might join in conveying the land in fee simple. In New Hampshire, Chancellor Kent says, entails may still be created; while in some of the states they have not been expressly abolished by statute, but in practice they are now almost unknown. See "Entail;" 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

—Tenant at Will. One who holds rent free by permission of the owner, or where he enters under an agreement to purchase, or for a lease, but has not paid rent; or one who is placed on land without a term prescribed, or without any terms or rent reserved, but as a mere occupier. 184 Ill. 337. Formerly all leases for uncertain periods were considered to be tenancies at will merely; but in modern times they are construed into tenancies from year to year; and, in fact, the general language of the books now is that the former species of tenancy cannot exist without an express agreement to that effect. 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 75;

4 Ired. (N. C.) 291; 3 Dana (Ky.) 66; 12 Mass. 325; 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 616; 12 N. Y. 346. The great criterion by which to distinguish between tenancies from year to year and at will is the payment or reservation of rent. 5 Bing. 361; 2 Esp. 718.

A tenancy at will must always be at the will of either party, and such a tenant may be ejected at any time, and without notice; but as soon as he once pays rent, he becomes tenant from year to year. 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 90; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 56; Co. Litt. 55; 2 Lilly, Reg. 555; 2 Bl. Comm. 145. See Comyn. Dig. "Estates" (H 1); 12 Mass. 325; 17 Mass. 282; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 33; 2 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 314; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 169; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 13, 235, 331.

A tenant holding over is not a tenant at will unless he holds over by the express or implied consent of his landlord. 40 Mich. 283.

—Tenant for Years. He to whom another has let lands, tenements, or hereditaments for a certain number of years, agreed upon between them, and the tenant enters thereon. Before entry, he has only an inchoate right, which is called an interesse termini; and it is of the essence of this estate that its commencement as well as its termination be fixed and determined, so that the lapse of time limited for its duration will, ipso facto, determine the tenancy; if otherwise, the occupant will be tenant from year to year, or at will, according to circumstances. See "Lease;" Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 54; 2 Bl. Comm. 140.

—Tenant from Year to Year. Where lands or tenements have been let without any particular limitation for the duration of the tenancy; hence any general occupation with permission, whether a tenant is holding over after the expiration of a lease for years, or otherwise, becomes a tenancy from year to year. 3 Burrows, 1609; 1 Term R. 163; 3 East, 451; 3 Barn. & C. 478; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 330; 3 Zab. (N. J.) 311. The principal feature of this tenancy is that it is not determinable even at the end of the current year, unless a reasonable notice to quit is served by the party intending to dissolve the tenancy upon the other. 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 547; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 616; 8 Term R. 3; 5 Bing. 185.

TENANT A VOLUNTE (Law Fr.) Tenant at will. Litt. § 68. See "Tenant."

TENANT BY COPY OF COURT ROLL (shortly, "tenant by copy"). The old fashioned name for a copyholder. Litt. § 73.

TENANT RIGHT. In leases from the crown, corporations, or the church, it is usual to grant a further term to the old tenants in preference to strangers; and, as this expectation is seldom disappointed, such tenants are considered as having an ulterior interest beyond their subsisting term; and this interest is called the "tenant right."

Bac. Abr. "Leases and Terms for Years" (U).

TENANT TO THE PRAECIPE. Before the English fines and recoveries act, if land was conveyed to a person for life, with remainder to another in tail, the tenant in tail in remainder was unable to bar the entail without the concurrence of the tenant for life, because a common recovery could only be suffered by the person seised of the land. In such a case, if the tenant for life wished to concur in barring the entail, he usually conveyed his life estate to some other person in order that the praecipe in the recovery might be issued against the latter, who was therefore called the "tenant to the praecipe." Williams, Seisin, 169.

TENANTS BY THE VERGE. These "are in the same nature as tenants by copy of court roll [i. e., copyholders]. But the reason why they be called 'tenants by the verge' is, for that when they will surrender their tenements into the hands of their lord to the use of another, they shall have a little rod (by the custome) in their hand, the which they shall deliver to the steward or to the bailife, * * * and the steward or bailife, according to the custome, shall deliver to him that taketh the land the same rod, or another rod, in the name of seisin; and for this cause they are called 'tenants by the verge;' but they have no other evidence [title deed] but by copy of court roll." Litt. § 78; Co. Litt. 61a.

TENAUNT (Law Fr. from tener, to hold). In old English law. Tenant; a tenant.

TENDE. To tender or offer. Old Nat. Brev. 123.

TENDER (Lat. tendere, to extend, to offer). An offer to deliver something, made in pursuance of some contract or obligation, under such circumstances as to require no further act from the party making it to complete the transfer.

As applied to cases of mutual and concurrent promises, means readiness to perform, provided the other party is ready and willing to perform. 143 Ill. 502.

To constitute a valid tender, there must be an actual production (46 Barb. [N. Y.] 227), at the time (90 N. Y. 442) and place (6 Barb. [N. Y.] 258) where the obligation was due, of the full amount (41 Vt. 66), in current funds (34 N. Y. 649) by the person who is under obligation, or his agent (11 Ga. 570), and an offer to the creditor or his agent (46 Barb. [N. Y.] 227) absolutely and without condition, to which the creditor may rightfully object (39 N. Y. 481), of the exact amount due, but tender of an excessive amount is good if no change is asked in return (25 Ind. 261), and the tender must be kept good by continued readiness to pay or deliver the amount or property tendered (24 Vt. 536; 86 Ill. 431).

TENDER OF AMENDS. An offer by a person who has been guilty of any wrong or breach of contract to pay a sum of money by way of amends. If a defendant in an action make tender of amends, and the plaintiff decline to accept it, the defendant may pay the money into court, and plead the payment into court as a satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Mozley & W.

TENDER OF ISSUE. The conclusion of a pleading whereby the pleader offers to refer the averments thereof to a trial. The common tender of an issue of fact is, "and of this he puts himself upon the country." Steph. Pl. 54, 230.

TENEMENT (from Lat. teneo, to hold). Everything of a permanent nature which may be holden.

Its original meaning, according to some, was house or homestead. Jacob. In modern use, it also signifies rooms let in houses. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204.

In its most extensive signification, "tenement" comprehends everything which may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature; and not only lands and inheritances which are holden, but also rents and profits a prendre of which a man has any frank tenement, and of which he may be seised ut de libero tenemento, are included under this term. Co. Litt. 6a; 2 Bl. Comm. 17; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 105. But the word "tenement" simply, without other circumstances, has never been construed to pass a fee. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204. See 4 Bing. 293; 1 Term R. 358; 3 Term R. 772; 3 East, 113 5 East, 239; 1 Barn. & Adol. 161; Comyn, Dig. "Grant" (E 2), "Trespass" (A 2); 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10.

Bracton says that tenements acquired by a villein were as to the lord in the same condition as chattels, because bought with the chattels which rightfully belong to the lord. Bracton, 26.

TENEMENTAL LAND. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

TENEMENTIS LEGATIS. An ancient writ, lying to the city of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 244.

TENEMENTUM (Law Lat. from tener, to hold). In old English law. A tenement; a thing held by service; a fee, fief, or feudal estate; an estate which a tenant holds of a lord. Spelman. Devenio homo vester, de tenemento quod de vobis teneo, I become your man, of the tenement which I hold of you. Bracton, fol. 80. Liberum tenementum, a free tenement, or freehold, as distinguished from villenagium.

TENENDAS (Lat.) In Scotch law. The name of a clause in charters of heritable rights, which derives its name from its first words, tenendas praedictas terras, and expresses the particular tenure by which the lands are to be holden. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 3, note 0.

TENENDUM (Lat.) That part of a deed which was formerly used in expressing the tenure by which the estate granted was holden; but since all freehold tenures were converted into socage, the tenendum is of no further use, even in England, and is therefore joined to the habendum in this manner,—to have and to hold. The words “to hold” have now no meaning in our deeds. 2 Bl. Comm. 298. See “Habendum.”

TENENS. A tenant; the defendant in a real action.

TENENTIBUS IN ASSISA NON ONERANDIS. A writ that formerly lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he should not be molested in assize for damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them. Reg. Orig. 214.

TENEO (Lat. I hold). Said by Lord Coke to have the following significations:

To have, as an estate. Co. Litt. 1b.

To hold of some superior. Id.

To keep, as a covenant. Id.

To bind, as an obligation. Id.

To judge or deem. Id.

See these senses applied to the word “tenant.” Id. See “Tenere.”

TENER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To hold. A aver et tener a luy et a ses heires, to have and to hold to him and his heirs. Litt. § 625.

To keep. Tener hors de droit heire, to keep out the right heir. Britt. c. 65.

TENERE (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. To hold. A term expressive of mere fact, without reference to right; or expressive of what was termed corporeal and natural possession. Habere (to have) and possidere (to possess), on the other hand, were terms expressive of right, or what was termed “civil” possession. Calv. Lex. See “Habere.”

To observe or keep. Calv. Lex.

To bind. Id.

To be of force or validity. Id.

—In Old English Law. To hold by service, in the feudal sense. De tenemento quod d: vobis teneo, of the tenement which I hold c. you. Bracton, fol. 80; Co. Litt. 1b.

To hold judicially. Tenere placitum, to hold plea; to take cognizance of an action; to exercise or entertain jurisdiction. Prohibemus vobis ne teneatis placitum, we prohibit you that you do not hold plea. Reg. Orig. 34. Tenere placita, to hold pleas; to have a court of one's own. Finch, Law, bk. 2, c. 14.

To hold, or be seised of; to have. Co. Litt. 1b.

TENERI (Lat.) In contracts. That part of a bond where the obligor declares himself to be held and firmly bound to the obligee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, is called the teneri. 3 Call (Va.) 350.

TENET (Lat. he holds). In pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done during tenancy.

When the averment is in the tenet, the plaintiff, on obtaining a verdict, will recover the place wasted, namely, that part of the premises in which the waste was exclusively done, if it were done in a part only, together with treble damages. But when the averment is in the tenuit, the tenancy being at an end, he will have judgment for his damages only. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 652.

TENHEDED, or TIENHEOFED. A dean.

TENHEVED (Saxon tienheofod, from tien, ten, and heofod, head). In old English law. The head of a tithing, or decenary; a tithingman, chief pledge, head borough or borsholder. Spelman.

TENMENTALE, or TENMANTALE. The number of ten men, which number, in the time of the Saxons, was called a “decenary;” and ten decennaries made what was called a “hundred.” Also a duty or tribute paid to the crown, consisting of two shillings for each ploughland. Enc. Lond.

TENNE. A term of heraldry, meaning orange color. In engravings it should be represented by lines in bend sinister crossed by others bar-ways. Heralds who blazon by the names of the heavenly bodies call it “dragon's head,” and those who employ jewels, “jacinth.” It is one of the colors called “stainand.” Wharton.

TENOR.

—In Pleading. A term used to denote that an exact copy is set out, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 273; 14 Ohio St. 61; 1 Mass. 203; 1 East, 180, and the cases cited in the notes; and binds the pleader to the strictest accuracy. And an indictment for forgery of an instrument, professing to set it out according to its tenor, should give the names, in describing the instrument, spelled as they appear spelled in the original. 66 Ill. 346.

—In Chancery Pleading. A certified copy of records of other courts removed into chancery by certiorari. Gresl. Ev. 309.

TENOR EST QUI LEGEM DAT FEUDO. It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent. Craig, Jus Feud. (3d Ed.) 66. See Co. Litt. 19a; 2 Bl. Comm. 310; 2 Coke. 71; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 410; Wright, Ten. 21, 52, 152.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO. A writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon, was called out of another court into the Queen's (or king's) Bench. Reg. Orig. 69.

TENORE PRAESENTIUM. By the tenor of these presents, i. e., the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof. Cowell.

TENSERIAE. A sort of ancient tax or military contribution. Wharton.

TENTERDEN'S ACT. St. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, extending the statutes of frauds to certain other contracts.

TENTHS.

—In English Law. A temporary aid issuing out of personal property, and granted to the king by parliament; formerly the real tenth part of all the movables belonging to the subject. 1 Bl. Comm. 308.

—In English Ecclesiastical Law. The tenth part of the annual profit of every living in the kingdom, formerly paid to the pope, but by St. 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3, transferred to the crown, and afterwards made a part of the fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty." 1 Bl. Comm. 284-286.

TENUIT (Lat. he held). In pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done after the termination of the tenancy. See "Tenet."

TENURA EST PACTIO CONTRA COMMUNEM FEUDI NATURAM AC RATIONEM, IN CONTRACTU INTERPOSITA. Tenure is a compact contrary to the common nature and reason of the fee, put into a contract. Wright, Ten. 21.

TENURE (from Lat. tenere, to hold). A term of extensive signification. While it means the mode by which one holds an estate in land, it imports any kind of holding from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance. 153 Cal. 718; 96 Pac. 500; Ann. Cas. 1914D 686.

In the most general sense, the mode or right of holding, as "tenure of office." More specifically, the mode by which a man holds an estate in lands.

Such a holding as is coupled with some service, which the holder is bound to perform so long as he continues to hold.

The thing held is called a "tenement;" the occupant, a "tenant;" and the manner of his holding constitutes the "tenure."

Classification of feudal tenures.

(1) The principal species of tenure which grew out of the feudal system was the tenure by knight's service. This was essentially military in its character, and required the possession of a certain quantity of land, called a "knight's fee," the measure of which, in the time of Edward I., was estimated at twelve ploughlands, of the value of twenty pounds per annum. He who held this portion of land was bound to attend his lord to the wars forty days in every year, if called upon. It seems, however, that if he held but half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days. Many arbitrary and tyrannical incidents or lordly privileges were attached to this tenure, which at length became so odious and oppressive that the whole system was destroyed at a blow by St. Charles II. c. 24, which declared that all such lands should thenceforth be held in free and common socage,—a statute, says Blackstone, which was a greater acquisition to the civil property of this kingdom than even Magna Charta itself; since that only pruned the luxuriances which had grown out of military tenures, and thereby preserved them in vigor, but the statute of King Charles extirpated the whole, and demolished both root and branches. See "Feudal Law;" Co. Litt. 69; St. Westminster I., c. 36.

(2) Tenure in socage seems to have been a relic of Saxon liberty which, up to the time of the abolition of military tenures, had been evidently struggling with the innovations of the Normans. Its great redeeming quality was its certainty; and in this sense it is by the old law writers put in opposition to the tenure by knight's service, where the tenure was altogether precarious and uncertain. Littleton defines it to be where a tenant holds his tenement by any certain service, in lieu of all other services, so that they be not services of chivalry or knight's services; as, to hold by fealty and twenty shillings rent, or by homage, fealty, and twenty shillings rent, or by homage and fealty without any rent, or by fealty and a certain specified service, as, to plough the lord's land for three days. Litt. 117; 2 Bl. Comm. 79. See "Socage."

(3) Other tenures have grown out of the two last-mentioned species of tenure, and are still extant in England, although some of them are fast becoming obsolete. Of these is the tenure by grand serjeanty, which consists in some service immediately respecting the person or dignity of the sovereign; as, to carry the king's standard, or to be his constable or marshal, his butler or chamberlain, or to perform some similar service. While the tenure by petit serjeanty requires some inferior service, not strictly military or personal, to the king; as, the annual render of a bow or sword. The late duke of Wellington annually presented his sovereign with a banner, in acknowledgment of his tenure. There are also tenures by copyhold and in frankalmoigne, in burgage and of gavelkind; but their nature, origin, and history are explained in the several articles appropriated to those terms. 2 Bl. Comm. 66; 2 Inst. 233.

(4) Tenures were distinguished by the old common-law writers, according to the quality of the service, into free or base. The former were such as were not unbecoming a soldier or a freeman to perform, as, to serve the lord in the wars; while the latter were only considered fit for a peasant, as, to plough the land, and the like. They were further distinguished with reference to the person from whom the land was held; as, a tenure in capite, where the holding was of the person of the king, and tenure in gross, where the holding was of a subject. Before the statute of Quia Emptores (18 Edw. I), any person might, by a grant of land, have created an estate as a tenure of his person, or of his house or manor; and although by Magna Charta a man could not alienate so much of his land as not to leave enough to answer the services due to the superior lord, yet, as that statute did not remedy the evil then complained of, it was provided by the statute above referred to, that if any tenant should alien any part of his land in fee, the alienee should hold immediately of the lord of the fee, and should be charged with a proportional part of the service due in respect to the quantity of land held by him. The consequence of which was that, upon every such alienation, the services upon which the estate was originally granted became due to the superior lord, and not to the immediate grantee. 4 Term R. 443; 4 East, 271; Crabb, Real Prop. § 735.

Wharton's classification is as follows:

(A) Lay tenures.

I. Frank tenement, or freehold.

- (1) The military tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, and reduced to free socage tenures) were: Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry; grand serjeanty; cornage.
- (2) Free socage, or plough service; either petit serjeanty tenure in burgage, or gavelkind.

II. Villeinage.

- (1) Pure villeinage (whence copyholds at the lord's [nominal] will, which is regulated according to custom).
- (2) Privileged villeinage, sometimes called "villein socage" (whence tenure in ancient demesne, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord's will), and is of three kinds: Tenure in ancient demesne; privileged copyholds, customary freeholds, or free copyholds; copyholds of base tenure.

(B) Spiritual tenures.

- I. Frankalmoigne, or free alms.
- II. Tenure by divine service.

TENURE BY DIVINE SERVICE. See "Divine Service."

TENURE OF OFFICE. See "Tenure;" "Term of Office."

TERCE. In Scotch law. A life rent competent by law to widows who have not accepted of special provisions in the third part of the heritable subjects in which the husband died infert.

The terce takes place only where the marriage has subsisted for a year and a day, or where a child has been born alive of it. No terce is due out of lands in which the husband was not infert, unless in case of a fraudulent omission. Craig, Inst. 423, § 28. The terce is not limited to lands, but extends to teinds, and to servitudes and other burdens affecting lands. Ersk. Inst. 2. 9. 26; Burge, Conf. Laws, 429-435.

TERCER. In the Scotch law, a widow that possesses the third part of her husband's land, as her legal jointure. 1 Kames, Eq. pref.

TERM.

—In Construction. Word; expression; speech.

Terms are words or characters by which we announce our sentiments, and make known to others things with which we are acquainted. These must be properly construed or interpreted in order to understand the parties using them.

—In Contracts. The space of time granted to a debtor for discharging his obligation. These are express terms, resulting from the positive stipulations of the agreement, as, where one undertakes to pay a certain sum on a certain day, and also terms which tacitly result from the nature of the things which are the object of the engagement, or from the place where the act is agreed to be done. For instance, if a builder engage to construct a house for me, I must allow a reasonable time for fulfilling his engagement. 1 Wis. 314.

—In Estates. The limitation of an estate; as, a term for years, for life, and the like. The word "term" does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate, also, and interest that passes by that lease, and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the time; as, by surrender, forfeiture, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 145; 8 Pick. (Mass.) 339.

—Of Court. The space of time during which a court holds a session. The stated periods during which courts sit for the dispatch of business. Sometimes the term is a monthly, at others it is a quarterly, period, according to the constitution of the court.

TERM ATTENDANT ON THE INHERITANCE. See "Attendant Terms."

TERM FOR YEARS. An estate for years, and the time during which such estate is to be held, is each called a "term"; hence the term may expire before the time, as, by a surrender. Co. Litt. 45. See "Estate for Years."

TERM IN GROSS. A term of years is said to be either in gross (outstanding) or attendant upon the inheritance. It is outstanding, or in gross, when it is unattached or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, as where it is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance. It is attendant when vested in some trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance. Brown.

TERM OF OFFICE. The term of office as fixed by law is sometimes used interchangeably with the term or time of occupancy of the incumbent of such office, but it must be distinctly borne in mind that the term of office as fixed by law is entirely different from the period of time such office is held by the incumbent thereof, some times referred to as the term. The general rule seems to be that the term of office, when not fixed as to the date of its beginning and ending by a constitution or statute, begins in the case of elective offices on the date of election. 280 Ill. 444.

TERM PROBATORY. The time during which evidence may be taken in a cause.

TERM TO CONCLUDE. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are understood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations.

TERM TO PROPOUND ALL THINGS. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS. The words as used in contracts generally mean the propositions, limitations, and exactions which comprise in whole or in part the agreement, and govern the contracting parties, defining what they obligate themselves to do or not to do. 173 Mich. 314.

TERMINABLE PROPERTY. Such property (e. g., leaseholds, terminable annuities, etc.), as has no permanent duration, but must and will end at a certain time, usually determined beforehand.

TERMINARE (Lat.) In old English law. To end or determine; to dispose of judicially; to decide.

TERMINATING BUILDING SOCIETIES. Societies, in England, where the members commence their monthly contributions on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, by the advance of the capital of the society to such members as required it, and the payment of interest as well as principal by them, so as to insure such realization within a given period of years. They have been almost superseded by permanent building societies.

TERMINER (Law Fr.; from Lat. terminare q. v.). To determine. A oyer et terminer toutes querelles, to hear and determine all complaints. Britt. fol. 1.

TERMINO. In Spanish law. A common; common land. Common because of vicinage. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 1, note.

TERMINUM (Lat.) In civil law. A day set to the defendant. Spelman. In this sense, Bracton, Glanville, and some others sometimes use it. Reliquiae Spelmanianae, p. 71; Beames, Glanv. 27, note.

TERMINUM QUI PRETERIT, WRIT OF entry ad. A writ which lay for the reversioner, when the possession was withheld by the lessee, or a stranger, after the determination of a lease for years. Brown.

TERMINUS (Lat.) A boundary or limit, either of space or time. A bound, goal, or borders parting one man's land from another's. Est inter eos non de terminis, sed tota possessione contentio. Cic. Acad. 4, 43. It is used also for an estate for a term of years; e. g., "interesse termini." 2 Bl. Comm. 143.

Terminus a quo. The starting point of a private way is so called. Hammond, N. P. 196. The point or place from which the grantee is to set out in order to use the way. 19 Ill. 563.

Terminus ad quem. The point of termination of a private way is so called. 19 Ill. 564.

TERMINUS ANNORUM CERTUS DEBET esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and determinate. Co. Litt. 45.

TERMINUS ET (AC) FEODUM NON possunt constare simul in una eademque persona. A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time. Plowd. 29; 3 Mass. 141.

TERMINUS JURIS (Law Lat.) In English ecclesiastical practice. The time of one or two years, allowed by law for the determination of appeals. Halifax, Anl. bk. 3, c. 11, No. 38.

TERMOR. One who holds lands and tenements for a term of years, or life. Litt. § 100; 4 Tyrwh. 561.

TERRA. Earth; land.

—Terra Affirmata. Land let to farm.

—Terra Boscalla. Woody land.

—Terra Culta. Cultivated land.

—Terra Debilis. Weak or barren land.

—Terra Dominica (or Indominicata).

The demesne land of a manor. Cowell.

—Terra Excultabilis. Land which may be plowed. Mon. Angl. i. 426.

—Terra Extendenda. A writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery. Reg. Writs, 293.

—Terra Frusca (or Frisca). Fresh land, not lately plowed. Cowell.

—Terra Hydata. Land subject to the payment of hydage. Selden.

—Terra Lucrabilis. Land gained from the sea, or inclosed out of a waste. Cowell.

—Terra Manens Vacua Occupanti Conceditur. Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant. 1 Sid. 347.

—Terra Normanorum. Land held by a Norman. Par. Ant. 197.

—Terra Nova. Land newly converted from wood ground or arable. Cowell.

—Terra Putura. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein. 4 Inst. 307.

—Terra Sabulosa. Gravelly or sandy ground.

—Terra Testamentalis. Gavelkind land, being disposable by will. Spelman.

—Terra Transit cum Onere. Land passes with the incumbrances. Co. Litt. 231; Broom, Leg. Max (3d London Ed.) 437, 630.

—Terra Vestita. Land sown with corn. Cowell.

—Terra Wainabilis. Tillable land. Cowell.

—Terra Warrenata. Land that has the liberty of free warren.

TERRAE DOMINCALES REGIS. The demesne lands of the crown.

TERRAGES. An exemption from all uncertain services. Cowell.

TERRARIUS. In old English law. A landholder.

TERRE TENANT (improperly spelled ter tenant). One who has the actual possession of land; but, in a more technical sense, he who is seised of the land; and in the latter sense, the owner of the land, or the person seised, is the terre tenant, and not the lessee. 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 256; Bac. Abr. "Uses and Trusts." It has been holden that mere occupiers of the land are not terre tenants. See 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 432; 3 Pa. 229; 2 Saund. 7, note 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 91, 328.

TERRIER. In English law. A roll, catalogue, or survey of lands, belonging either to a single person or a town, in which are stated the quantity of acres, the names of the tenants, and the like.

By the ecclesiastical law, an inquiry is directed to be made from time to time of the temporal rights of the clergyman of every parish, and to be returned into the registry of the bishop. This return is denominated a "terrier." 1 Phil. Ev. 602, 603.

TERRIS BONIS ET CATALLIS REHABENDIS post purgationem. A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged. Reg. Orig.

TERRIS ET CATALLIS TENTIS ULTRA debitum levatum. A judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt. Reg. Jud.

TERRIS LIBERANDIS. A writ that lay for a man convicted by attain, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver to him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste. Reg. Orig. 232. Also it was a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed, or upon security taken that he should perform them. Id. 293.

TERRITORIAL COURTS. The courts established in the territories of the United States.

TERRITORIUM (Lat. from terra, land). A territory, or district; the territorial limits of a government; the extent or limits of the jurisdiction of a court.

TERRITORY. A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. The extent or compass of land and the waters thereof within the bounds of or belonging to the jurisdiction of any sovereign state, or city or other body. 110 Ill. App. 370.

The word is derived from terreo, and is said to be so called because the magistrate within his jurisdiction has the power of inspiring a salutary fear. Dictum est ab eo quod magistratus intra fines ejus terrendi jus habet. Henrion de Pansy, Auth, Judiciaire, 98. In speaking of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, Francis Duaren observes that the ecclesiastics are said not to have territory, nor the power of arrest or removal, and are not unlike the Roman magistrates of whom Gellius says vocationem habebant non prehensionem. De Sacris Eccles. Minist. lib. 1, c. 4.

—In American Law. A portion of the country subject to and belonging to the United States which is not within the boundary of any of the states.

TERROR (Lat.) That state of the mind which arises from the event or phenomenon that may serve as a prognostic of some catastrophe; affright from apparent danger.

One of the constituents of the offense of riot is that the acts of the persons engaged in it should be to the terror of the people, as a show of arms, threatening speeches, or turbulent gestures; but it is not requisite, in order to constitute this crime, that personal violence should be committed. 3 Campb. 369; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 5; 4 Car. & P. 373, 538. See Rolle, 109; Dalton, Just. c. 186; Viner, Abr. "Riots" (A 8).

TERTIA DENUNCIATIO (Lat.) In old English law. Third publication or proclamation of intended marriage. Cum bannum et tertia denunciatio fiat, when the banns and third publication are made. Bracton, fol. 307b.

TERTIUS INTERVENIENS (Lat.) In civil law. One who, claiming an interest in the subject or thing in dispute in action between other parties, asserts his right to act with the plaintiff, to be joined with him, and to recover the matter in dispute, because he has an interest in it, or to join the defendant, and with him oppose the interest of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. He differs from the intervener, or he who interpleads in equity. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3819, note.

TEST. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing. 7 Pa. St. 428; 6 Whart. (Pa.) 284. See Test Act.

TEST ACT. Act 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was enacted that all persons holding any office, civil or military (excepting some very inferior ones), or receiving pay from the crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under a penalty of £500 and disability to the office. 4 Bl. Comm. 59. From this act the word "test" originally acquired its signification in connection with the word "oath." 116 Ill. 606. An odious act now abolished, 9 Geo. IV, c. 17, so far as taking sacrament is concerned, and a new form of declaration substituted. Enc. Brit.

TEST ACTION. An action brought to determine a doubtful right affecting many persons. It may be an action selected from a number of pending actions brought to enforce such a right, the parties agreeing that all actions shall follow the decision in the test action, or a single action may be brought by one person at the instance of all to determine the right. Test cases are sometimes had in criminal practice where the validity of a statute or ordinance is questioned, and a prosecution is lodged against one person, with the tacit understanding that further prosecutions will be postponed, or will be determined according to the result of that one.

TEST OATH. An oath required as a condition precedent to the right to fill a public office. Generally, an oath of present allegiance, or of denial of connection with some past insurrection.

TEST PAPER. A paper submitted to the jury as a test or standard by which to determine the genuineness of other writings. 7 Pa. St. 428; 6 Whart. (Pa.) 284. Only admissible when no collateral issue can be raised concerning it. See 14 N. Y. 439; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 581.

TESTABLE. A person is said to be testable when he has capacity to make a will. A man of twenty-one years of age and of sane mind is testable. The capacity to make a will must be distinguished from a special power to dispose of property by will. Thus, a power given to a married woman by a settlement to dispose of property by will does not make her testable. L. R. 7 H. L. 593. But if property is settled on a married woman for her separate use, she is testable so far as that property is concerned.

TESTACY. The condition of one dying having made a will. Opposed to "intestacy" (q. v.) It may exist as to all property, or may be but "partial," as to such only as is disposed of.

TESTAMENT. In civil law. The appointment of an executor or testamentary heir, according to the formalities prescribed by law. Domat, liv. 1, tit. 1, § 1.

At first there were only two sorts of testaments among the Romans,—that called calatis comitiis, and another called in procinctu. In the course of time, these two sorts of testament having become obsolete, a third form was introduced, called per aes et libram, which was a fictitious sale of the inheritance to the heir apparent. The inconveniences which were experienced from these fictitious sales again changed the form of testaments, and the praetor introduced another, which required the seal of seven witnesses. The emperors having increased the solemnity of these testaments, they were called "written" or "solemn" testaments, to distinguish them from "nuncupative" testaments, which could be made without writing. Afterwards military testaments were introduced in favor of soldiers actually engaged in military service.

(1) A testament calatis comitiis, or made in the comitia,—that is, the assembly of the Roman people,—was an ancient manner of making wills, used in times of peace among the Romans. The comitia met twice a year for this purpose. Those who wished to make such testaments caused to be convoked the assembly of the people by these words, calatis comitiis. None could make such wills that were not entitled to be at the assemblies of the people. This form of testament was repealed by the law of the Twelve Tables.

(2) A civil testament is one made according to all the forms prescribed by law, in contradistinction to a military testament, in making which some of the forms may be dispensed with. Civil testaments are more ancient than military ones; the former were in use during the time of Romulus, the latter were introduced during the time of Coriolanus. See Hist. de la Jur. Rom. de M. Terrason, p. 119.

(3) A common testament is one which is made jointly by several persons. Such testaments are forbidden in Louisiana (Civ. Code La. art. 1565), and by the laws of France (Civ. Code 968), in the same words, namely: "A testament cannot be made by the same act, by two or more persons, either for the benefit of a third person, or under the title of a reciprocal or mutual disposition."

(4) A testament ab irato is one made in a gust of passion or hatred against the presumptive heir, rather than from a desire to benefit the devisee. When the facts of unreasonable anger are proved, the will is annulled as unjust, and as not having been freely made. See "Ab Irato."

(5) A mystic testament (called a "solemn testament," because it requires more formality than a nuncupative testament) is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing it in the presence of witnesses.

This kind of testament is used in Louisiana. The following are the provisions of the Civil Code of that state on the subject, namely: The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the "close testament," is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself, or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing these dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence; then he shall declare to the notary, in the presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator and by the notary and the witnesses. 5 Mart. (La.) 182. All that is above prescribed shall be done without interruption or turning aside to other acts; and in case the testator, by reason of any hindrance that has happened since the signing of the testament, cannot sign the act of superscription, mention shall be made of the declaration made by him thereof, without its being necessary in that case to increase the number of witnesses. Those who know not how or are not able to write, and those who know not how or are not able to sign their names, cannot make dispositions in the form of the mystic will. If any one of the witnesses to the act of superscription knows not how to sign, express mention shall be made thereof. In all cases the act must be signed by at least two witnesses. Civ. Code La. arts. 1577-1580.

(6) A nuncupative testament was one made verbally, in the presence of seven witnesses. It was not necessary that it should have been in writing; the proof of it was by parol evidence. See "Nuncupative Will."

In Louisiana, testaments, whether nuncupative or mystic, must be drawn up in writing, either by the testator himself, or by some other person under his dictation. The custom of making verbal statements, that is to say, resulting from the mere deposition of witnesses who were present when the testator made known to them his will, without his having committed it or caused it to be committed to writing, is abrogated. Nuncupative testaments may be made by public act, or by act under private signature. Civ. Code La. arts. 1568-1570.

(7) An olographic testament is one which is written wholly by the testator himself. In order to be valid, it must be entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form. See Civ. Code La. art. 1581.

See "Will."

TESTAMENTA LATISSIMAM INTERPRETATIONEM HABERE DEBENT. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 81.

TESTAMENTARY. Belonging to a testament; as, a testamentary gift; a testamentary guardian, or one appointed by will or testament; letters testamentary, or a writing under seal, given by an officer lawfully authorized, granting power to one named as executor to execute a last will or testament.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. Mental capacity sufficient to make a valid will.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. In English law. Causes relating to probate of testaments and administration, and accounts upon the same. They are enumerated among ecclesiastical causes by Lord Coke. 5 Coke, 1, and tables of cases at the end of the part. Over these causes the probate court has now exclusive jurisdiction, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95.

TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION. A gift which does not take effect as an executed and completed transfer to the donee, either legal or equitable, during the lifetime of the donor. 136 Ill. 398.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. A guardian appointed by last will of a father to have custody of his child and his real and personal estate till he attains the age of twenty-one. In England, the power to appoint such guardian was given by 12 Car. II. c. 24. The principles of this statute have been generally adopted in the United States (12 N. H. 437), but not in Connecticut (1 Swift, Dig. 48).

TESTAMENTUM (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. A testament; a will, or last will.

—In Old English Law. A testament or will; a disposition of property made in contemplation of death. Bracton, fol. 60.

A general name for any instrument of conveyance, including deeds and charters, and so called either because it furnished written testimony of the conveyance, or because it was authenticated by witnesses (testes). Spelman.

TESTAMENTUM EST VOLUNTATIS nostrae justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which any one wishes done after his death; or, as Blackstone translates, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Bl. Comm. 499; Dig. 28. 1. 1; Id. 29. 3. 2. 1.

TESTAMENTUM, I. E., TESTATIO MENTIS, facta nullo praesente metu periculi, sed cogitatione mortalitatis. A testament, i. e., the witnessing of one's intention, made under no present fear of danger, but in expectancy of death. Co. Litt. 322.

TESTAMENTUM INOFFICIOSUM (Lat.) In the civil law. An unofficious testament.

TESTAMENTUM OMNE MORTE CONSUMMATUM. Every will is completed by death. Co. Litt. 232.

TESTATE. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATION. Witness; evidence.

TESTATOR (Lat.) One who has made a testament or will.

TESTATORIS ULTIMA VOLUNTAS EST perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his real intention. Co. Litt. 322.

TESTATRIX (Lat.) A woman who makes a will or testament.

TESTATUM (Lat.)

—In Practice. The name of a writ which is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county in the same state, when the defendant cannot be found in the county where the court is located; for example, after a judgment has been obtained, and a ca. sa. has been issued, which has been returned non est inventus, a testatum ca. sa. may be issued to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is. See Viner, Abr. "Testatum," 259.

—In conveyancing. That part of a deed which commences with the words "this indenture witnesseth."

TESTATUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Testate; one who has made a will. Testatus et intestatus, testate and intestate. Dig. 50. 17. 7.

TESTE MEIPSO (Lat.) In old English law and practice. A solemn formula of attesta-tion by the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery. Spelman.

TESTE OF A WRIT (Lat.) In practice. The concluding clause, commencing with the word "witness," etc. A signature in attestation of the fact that a writ is issued by authority.

The act of Congress of May 8, 1792 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 227), directs that all writs and process issuing from the supreme or a circuit court shall bear teste of the chief justice of the supreme court, or, if that office be vacant, of the associate justice next in precedence; and that all writs or process issuing from a district court shall bear teste of the judge of such court, or, if the said office be vacant, of the clerk thereof. See Serg. Const. Law, Index; 20 Viner, Abr. 262; Steph. Pl. 25.

TESTED. Bearing teste.

TESTES (Lat.) Witnesses.

TESTES QUI POSTULAT DEBET DARE eis sumptus competentes. Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.

TESTES, TRIAL PER. A trial had before a judge without the intervention of a jury, in which the judge is left to form in his own breast his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined; but this mode of trial, although it was common in the civil law, was seldom resorted to in the practice of the common law, but it is now becoming common when each party waives his right to a trial by jury. Brown. See "Trial."

TESTIBUS DEPONENTIBUS IN PARI numero dignioribus est credendum. When the number of witnesses is equal on both sides, the more worthy are to be believed. 4 Inst. 279.

TESTIFY. To give evidence according to law; the examination of a witness who declares his knowledge of facts.

TESTIMONIA PONDERANDA SUNT, non numeranda. Evidence is to be weighed, not enumerated.

TESTIMONIAL. A certificate under the hands of a justice of the peace testifying the place and time when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling and birth, whither he is to pass. Cowell; 3 Inst. 85. The document holds a kind of doubtful position midway between a certificate and a permit, or pass. Brown.

TESTIMONIAL PROOF. In civil law. A term used in the same sense as "parol evidence" is used at common law, and in contradistinction to "literal proof," which is written evidence.

TESTIMONIES. In Spanish law. An attested copy of an instrument by a notary. Newman & Barretti; Tex. Dig.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE. In conveyancing. That clause of a deed or instrument with which it concludes: "In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals."

TESTIMONY. The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

For distinction between "testimony" and "evidence," see "Evidence."

TESTIS (Lat.) A witness.

TESTIS DE VISU PRAEPODERAT allis. An eye witness outweighs others. 4 Inst. 470.

TESTIS LUPANARIS SUFFICIT AD FAC- tum in lupanari. A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel. Moore, 817.

TESTIS NEMO IN SUA CAUSA ESSE potest. No one can be a witness in his own cause. Otherwise in England, by St. 14 & 15 Vict. 99, and many of the states of the United States.

TESTIS OCOLATUS UNUS PLUS VALET quam auriti decem. One eye witness is worth ten ear witnesses. 4 Inst. 279. See 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3154.

TESTMOIGNE. This is an old and barbarous French word, signifying, in the old books, evidence. Comyn, Dig.

TESTMOIGNES NE POENT TESTIFIE le negative, mes l'affirmative. Witnesses cannot witness to a negative; they must witness to an affirmative. 4 Inst. 279.

TEXTUS ROFFENSIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. The Rochester text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc., of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see from A. D. 1114 to 1124. Cowell. Blount gives it a greater antiquity.

THAINLAND, or THANELAND. In old English law. The land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thains or thanes was so called. Crabb, Com. Law, 10.

THALER. A silver coin of Germany. The composition and value of this piece formerly varied considerably in different portions of the country,—the value ranging from ninety-five to one hundred and five cents. But the convention of the German states in 1838 fixed the weight of the thaler at 343.8 grains troy, and the fineness at 750 thousandths, which is the only standard now in use. The value, at this rate, is seventy-two cents. The name (thaler) is supposed to have originated from the German word thal, a dale, or valley,—the first thalers having been coined in the valley of Joachim, from which it obtained the name of "Joachim's thaler." From this coin the word "dollar," as applied to Spanish and American coins, is derived.

THALWEG. A line following the lowest part of a valley whether under water or not. Webster. Where a navigable river forms the boundary of coterminous states, the thalweg, or middle of the navigable channel is generally taken as the line of separation between them. 145 Ill. 603.

THANE (Saxon thenian, to serve). In Saxon law. A word which sometimes signifies a nobleman; at others, a freeman, a magistrate, an officer, or minister. A tenant of the part of the king's lands called the king's "thaneage." Termes de la Ley.

THANEAGE OF THE KING. In old English law. A certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called "thane." Cowell; Blount.

THANESHIP. The office and dignity of a thane; the seigniorship of a thane.

THAVIES INN. An inn of chancery. See "Inns of Chancery."

THE. A demonstrative word which particularizes the noun before which it stands and limits its meaning more definitely and particularly than the indefinite article "a". 261 Ill. 417.

THEFT. A popular term for larceny, adopted in lieu of the latter term by the Penal Code of Texas.

—In Scotch Law. The secret and felonious abstraction of the property of another for sake of lucre, without his consent. Alis. Crim. Law, 250.

THEFT BOTE. The act of receiving a man's goods from the thief, after they had been stolen by him, with the intent that he shall escape punishment.

This is an offense punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment. Hale, P. C. 130. See "Compounding a Felony."

THEFT BOTE EST EMENDA FURTI capta, sine consideratione curiae domini regis. Theft bote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king. 3 Inst. 184.

THELONIO IRRATIONABILI HABENDO. A writ that formerly lay for him that had any part of the king's demesne in fee farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king's tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled. Reg. Orig. 87.

THELONIUM. An abolished writ for citizens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 226.

THELUSSON ACT. An English statute (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98), forbidding the holding of property for the purpose of ac-accumulation beyond a period of twenty-one years from the death of the testator. It was so called because its necessity and passage were suggested by the curious will of one Thelusson, who provided that his estate should be accumulated until the body of it should constitute the largest estate, as the testator designed, in the world.

THEM, or THEME. The power or right of having jurisdiction over villeins, their offspring, and cattle.

THEMMAGIUM. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme. Cowell.

THEN. In the grammatical sense is an adverb of time. In such case the context should plainly show that it was so used before effect is thus given to it. 233 Pa. St. 35; Ann. Cas. 1913B 321; 2 Atk. 308; 19 N. Mex. 477. It is often used for the purpose of denoting an event or contingency, and is equivalent to the words "in that event" or "in that case." Frequently used in legal instruments to designate limitations of estates, or future contingencies on which they are made to depend. When thus used it becomes a word of reference, and does not indicate any particular point of time. 6 Gray (Mass.) 24; 16 Ga. 557; Ann. Cas. 1913B 321. See "Then and There."

THEN AND THERE. Refers to the time and place last specified, unless some phrase is used in connection therewith which shows that a different reference was intended. 263 Ill. 476, 477; 138 Ill. 556. In an indictment it means at the time and place charged, and refers to a single transaction only. 19 N. Mex. 477; Ann. Cas. 1917D 825; 153 Ind. 93.

THEOCRACY. A species of government which claims to be immediately directed by God.

La religion, qui, dans l'antiquite, s'associa souvent au despotisme, pour regner par son brus ou a son ombrage, a quelquefois tente de regner seule. C'est ce qu'elle appelait le regne de Dieu, la theocratie. Religion, which in former times frequently associated itself with despotism, to reign by its power or under its shadow, has sometimes attempted to reign alone; and this she has called the "reign of God,"—theocracy. Matter, de l'Influence des Moeurs sur les Lois, et de l'Influence des Lois sur les Moeurs, 189.

THEODOSIAN CODE. See "Code."

THEOF. In Saxon law. Offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations. Wharton.

THEREBY. By that; by that means; in consequence of that; through the agency or in consequence of that. 113 Ill. App. 556.

THEREUPON. An adverb signifying immediately, at once, without delay, and it is in that sense that it would ordinarily be understood. 23 Ill. App. 618.

THESAURUS, or THESAURIUM. The treasury; a treasure.

THESAURUS ABSCONDITUS. Treasure hidden, or buried. Spelman.

THESAURUS COMPETIT DOMINO REGI, et non domino libertatis, nisi sit per verba specialia. A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words. Fitz. Coron. 281.

THESAURUS INVENTUS. Treasure trove (q. v.).

THESAURUS INVENTUS EST VETUS dispositio pecuniae, etc., cujus non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam dominum non habeat. Treasure trove is an ancient hiding of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner. 3 Inst. 132.

THESAURUS NON COMPETIT REGI, nisi quando nemo scit qui abscondit thesaurum. Treasure does not belong to the king unless no one knows who hid it. 3 Inst. 132.

THESAURUS REGIS EST VINCULUM pacis et bellorum nervus. The king's treasure is the bond of peace and the sinews of war. Godb. 293.

THESE. The plural of "this" and opposed to "those," relates to the persons or things nearest or last mentioned, and "those" to the most remote or first mentioned. 69 Ill. App. 386.

THESMOTHETE. A law maker; a law giver.

THIEF. One who has been guilty of larceny or theft. 113 Ill. App. 450.

THIEVES. The term "thieves" is broad enough in law to cover both compound and simple larceny, and, in common parlance to include the latter; and when used in a policy of insurance upon the cargo of a vessel, it is not restricted in its application to external or assailing thieves, as pirates, rovers, etc., but covers a simple larceny committed by a stranger to the ship. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25, affirmed in 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563. And see 5 Paige (N. Y.) 285.

THINGS. By this word is understood every object, except man, which may become an active subject of right. Code du Canton de Berne, art. 332.

Any object that may be possessed; all matters of substance in contradiction to persons; whatever may be possessed or owned; subjects of property and dominion; synonymous with "effects" or "goods" or "assets" or "property." 240 Pa. St. 261, 87 Atl. 590. Ann. Cas. 1915A 24.

In this sense it is opposed, in the language of the law, to the word "persons." See Property; Res.

THINGS IN ACTION. A chose in action. Civ. Code Cal. § 953. See "Chose."

THINGS PERSONAL. Goods, money, and all other movables which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go. 2 Bl. Comm. 16. Things personal consist of goods, money, and all other movables, and of such rights and profits as relate to movables. 1 Steph. Comm. 156.

THINGS REAL, or REALTY. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Comm. 16. This definition has been objected to, as not embracing incorporeal rights. Mr. Stephen defines things real to "consist of things substantial and immovable, and of the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of these." 1 Steph. Comm. 156. Things real are otherwise described to consist of lands, tenements, and hereditaments. See "Real."

THINGUS. A thane or nobleman; knight or freeman. Cowell.

THINK. To believe. When a witness prefaces his testimony with "I think," he is to be taken as testifying to what he remembers. 288 Ill. 97; 43 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 536.

THIRD BOROW. In old English law. A constable. Lambard, Duty of Const. 6; 28 Hen. VII. c. 10.

THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE. By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a "third-night-awn-hinde," and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offense. The first night, forman-night, or uncuth (unknown), he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, twa-night, a guest; and the third night, an awn-hinde, a domestic. Bracton, lib. 3.

THIRD PARTIES. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 384. See, also, 2 La. 425; 6 Mart. (La.) 528.

But it is difficult to give a very definite idea of "third persons;" for sometimes those who are not parties to the contract, but who represent the rights of the original parties, as executors, are not to be considered third persons. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1335 et seq.

THIRD PENNY. In old English law. Of the fines and other profits of the county courts (originally, when those courts had superior jurisdiction, before other courts were created) two parts were reserved to the king, and a third part, or penny, to the earl of the county. See "Denarius Tertius Comitatus;" Kennett, Par. Ant. 418; Cowell.

THIRDINGS. The third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat, in Hereford. Blount.

THIRDS. Occurring in a will, construed to mean the same thing as dower. 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 558; 2 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 418, affirming 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 609.

THIRLAGE. In Scotch law. A servitude by which lands are astricted or thirled to a particular mill, and the possessors bound to grind their grain there, for the payment of certain multures and sequels as the agreed price of grinding. Ersk. Inst. 2. 9. 18.

THIS. A demonstrative word referring particularly to what is present or near in place, time, or thought, or to something just mentioned or about to be mentioned. 248 Ill. 144.

THIS DAY SIX MONTHS (or THREE months). Fixing "this day six months or three months" for the next stage of a bill is one of the modes in which the house of lords and the house of commons reject bills of which they disapprove. A bill rejected in this manner cannot be reintroduced in the same session.

THISTLE TAKE. It was a custom within the manor of Halton, in Chester, that if, in driving beasts over a common, the driver permit them to graze or take but a thistle, he shall pay a halfpenny apiece to the lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton, in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called "thistle take." Cowell.

THOROUGHFARE. A street or way opening at both ends into another street or public highway, so that one can go through and get out of it without returning. It differs from a cul de sac, which is open only at one end.

Whether a street which is not a thoroughfare is a highway seems not fully settled. 1 Vent. 189; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76, § 1. In a case tried in 1790, where the locus in quo had been used as a common street for fifty years, but was no thoroughfare, Lord Kenyon held that it would make no difference; for otherwise the street would be a trap to make people trespassers. 11 East, 375. This decision in several subsequent cases was much criticised, though not directly overruled. 5 Taunt. 126; 5 Barn. & Ald. 456; 3 Bing. 447; 1 Campb. 260; 4 Adol. & E. 698. But in a later English case the decision of Lord Kenyon was affirmed by the unanimous opinion of the court of queen's bench. The doctrine established in the latter case is that it is a question for the jury, on the evidence, whether a place which is not a thoroughfare is a highway or not. 14 Eng. Law & Eq. 69. And see 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 30. In the United States there are but few cases in which this question has been discussed; though in Rhode Island it has been determined that a street terminating upon private land, and extending neither to another way, a mill, a market, nor other public place, is incapable of dedication to the public as a highway. 2 R. I. 172. And a similar decision has been made in New York. 23 N. Y. 103. And see 23 N. H. 331; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 106.

THOSE. See "These."

THOUGHT. The operation of the mind. No one can be punished for his mere thoughts, however wicked they may be. Human laws cannot reach them,—first, because they are unknown; and secondly, unless made manifest by some action, they are not injurious to any one; but when they manifest themselves, then the act which is the consequence may be punished. Dig. 50. 16. 225.

THRAVE, THREAVE (Sax.) L. Lat. trabes, trava. In old English law. A measure of corn or grain, consisting of twenty-four sheaves of four shocks, six sheaves to every shock. Stat. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2. Cowell.

THREAD. A figurative expression used to signify the central line of a stream or watercourse. Harg. Law Tr. 5; 4 Mason (U. S.) 397; Holt, 490. See "Filum Aquae."

THREAT. A menace brought to the knowledge of the one sought to be affected thereby. 84 Iowa 473; 51 N. W. 25. It may affect the life, character, or property of the person against whom it is made. It need not be in any particular form or phrase, but must be directly made. Any language which conveys with sufficient clearness to be understood the proposition that a charge will be made is enough. The threat may be bluntly spoken, or it may be thinly veiled in suggestive terms. 69 Ill. App. 399.

Threats in themselves are not indictable or actionable, but if a threat is accompanied by appearance of present ability and intention to carry out the threat, it is an assault (1 Ired. [N. C.] 125); and, if made with the purpose of extorting money it is a misdemeanor at common law (1 Hawk. [P. C.] c. 53, § 1). If business is interrupted, or freedom of locomotion is restrained, it is actionable. 27 Mich. 267.

THRENGES. Vassals, but not of the lowest degree; those who held lands of the chief lord.

THRITHING. A division consisting of three or four hundreds.

THUDE WEALD. A woodward, or person that looks after a wood.

THURINGIAN CODE. One of the "barbarian codes," as they are termed; supposed by Montesquieu to have been given by Theodoric, king of Austrasia, to the Thuringians, who were his subjects. Esprit des Lois, lib. 28, c. 1.

THWERTNICK. The custom of giving entertainments to a sheriff, etc., for three nights.

TICKET. A mere receipt, token or voucher adopted for convenience to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another. It does not constitute the contract of carriage. Parol evidence of the contract is admissible. 161 Ill. 195; 149 Ill. 607; 162 Ill. 531.

TICKETS OF LEAVE. In English criminal law, licenses to be at large, which are granted to convicts for good conduct, but are recallable upon subsequent misconduct. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 7; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, § 9; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, § 5; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, §§ 4-10; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112; 4 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 451, note.

TIDE. The ebb and flow of the sea.

The law takes notice of three kinds of tides, viz., the high spring tides, which are the fluxes of the sea at those tides which happen at the two equinoctials; the spring tides, which happen twice every month, at the full and change of the moon; the neap or ordinary tides, which happen between the full and change of the moon, twice in twenty-four hours. Angell, Tide Waters, 68. The changeable condition of the tides produces, of course, corresponding changes in the line of high-water mark. Now, inasmuch as the soil of all tidal waters up to the limit of high-water mark, at common law, is in the crown, or, in this country, in the state, it is important to ascertain what is high-water mark, in legal contemplation, considered as the boundary of the royal or public ownership. In an English case this ownership has been held to be limited by the average of the medium high tides between the spring and the neap in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the year, excluding only extraordinary catastrophes or overflows. 4 De Gex, M. & G. 206; 3 Barn. & Ald. 967; 5 Barn. & Ald. 268; 2 Doug. 629; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 357. See "River."

TIDE WATER. Water which flows and reflows with the tide. All arms of the sea, bays, creeks, coves, or rivers, in which the tide ebbs and flows, are properly denominated "tide waters."

The term "tide water" is not limited to water which is salt, but embraces, also, so much of the water of fresh rivers as is propelled backwards by the inrush and pressure of the tide. 5 Coke, 107; 2 Doug. 441; 6 Clark & F. 628; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324. The supreme court of the United States has decided that, although the current of the river Mississippi at New Orleans may be so strong as not to be turned backwards by the tide, yet if the effect of the tide upon the current is so great as to occasion a regular rise and fall of the water, it might properly be said to be within the ebb and flow of the tide. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324. The flowing, however, of the waters of a lake into a river, and their reflowing, being caused by the occasional swell and subsidence of the lake, and not by the ebb and flow of regular tides, do not constitute such a river a tidal, or, technically, navigable, river. 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 98. And see 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 195; 2 Conn. 481; Woolr. Waters, c. ii.; Angell, Tide Waters, c. iii.

TIDESMAN. In English law, a tidewaiter or custom-house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty on goods be paid, and the ships unladen.

TIEL. An old manner of spelling tel; such as nul tiel record, no such record.

TIEMPO INHABIL (Spanish). In Louisiana. A time when a man is not able to pay his debts.

A man cannot dispose of his property, at such a time, to the prejudice of his creditors. 4 Mart. (La.; N. S.); 292; 3 Mart. (La.) 270; 10 Mart. (La.) 70.

TIERCE (Law Fr.; from Lat. tertius). Third. Tierce mien, third hand. Britt. c. 120.

TIGNI IMMITTENDI (Lat.) In civil law. A servitude which confers the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighboring house, in order that it may rest on the latter, and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight. Dig. 8. 2. 36; Dig. 8. 5. 14.

TIGNUM. In the civil law, any material for building.

TIHLER. In old Saxon law, an accusation.

TIMBER. As a generic term, it properly signifies only such trees as are used in building either ships or dwellings. 160 Mich. 186, 189. See "Timber Trees."

TIMBER TREES. Oak, ash, elm, and such other trees as are commonly used for building. 2 Bl. Comm. 28. But it has been contended, arguendo, that to make it timber, the trees must be felled and severed from the stock. 6 Mod. 23; Starkie, Slander, 79; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 239. See "Waste."

TIMBERLODE. A service by which tenants were bound to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house. Cowell.

TIME DÉPOSIT. A deposit for a fixed time, which is not usually subject to check. 271 Ill. 348.

TIME IMMEMORIAL. Time out of mind. In England this is said to be before the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

TIME OUT OF MEMORY. See "Time Immemorial."

TIMORES VANI SUNT AESTIMANDI qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Fears which do not affect a brave man are vain. 7 Coke, 17.

TINBOUNDING. A custom regulating the manner in which tin is obtained from waste land, or land which has formerly been waste land, within certain districts in Cornwall and Devon. Bain. M. & M. 146 et seq. The custom is described in the leading case on the subject as follows: "Any person may enter on the waste land of another, and may mark out by four corner boundaries a certain area; a written description of the plot of land so marked out with metes and bounds, and the name of the person, is recorded in the local Stannaries court, and is proclaimed on three successive court days. If no objection is sustained by any other person, the court awards a writ to the bailiff to deliver possession of the said 'bounds of tinwork' to the 'bounder,' who thereupon has the exclusive right to search for, dig, and take for his own use all tin and tin ore within the enclosed limits, paying as a royalty to the owner of the waste a certain proportion of the produce under the name of 'toll tin.'" 10 Q. B. 26, cited in Elt. Comm. 113. The right of tinbounding is not a right of common (see "Common"), but is an interest in land, and, in Devonshire, a corporeal hereditament (Elt. Comm. 114). In Cornwall, tin bounds are personal estate. Bain. M. & M. 150. See "Stannary Courts."

TINEL LE ROY. The king's hall, where-in his servants used to dine and sup. 13 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 3.

TINEMAN, or TIENMAN. A petty officer in the forest, who had the care of vert and venison at night, and other servile duties. Cowell.

TINEWALD. The ancient parliament or annual convention of the people in the Isle of Man.

TINKERMEN. Fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines. Cowell.

TINSEL OF THE FEU. The loss of an estate held in feu in Scotland, from allowing two years' feu duty to remain unpaid. Bell, Dict.

TIPLING HOUSE. A place where spirituous liquors are sold and drunk in violation of law. Sometimes the mere selling is considered as evidence of keeping a tippling house.

TIPSTAFF. An officer appointed by the marshal of the court of king's bench to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver.

In the United States, the courts sometimes appoint an officer who is known by this name, whose duty it is to wait on the court and serve its process.

TITHES. In English law. A right to the tenth part of the produce of lands, the stocks upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. These tithes are raised for the support of the clergy.

TITHING. In English law. Formerly, a district containing ten men, with their families. In each tithing there was a tithingman, whose duty it was to keep the peace, as a constable now is bound to do. St. Armand, in his Historical Essay on the Legislative Power of England (page 70), expresses an opinion that the tithing was composed not of ten common families, but of ten families of lords of a manor.

TITHINGMAN. In Saxon law. The head or chief of a decennary of ten families. He was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. Now tithingmen and constables are the same thing. Jacob.

In New England, a parish officer to keep good order in church. Webster.

TITIUS. A Roman name commonly used in the civil law in illustrating rules of example, or to designate a fictitious person, like the John Doe of English law.

TITLE. The means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property. Co. Litt. 345; 2 Bl. Comm. 195. See 1 Ohio, 349. This is the definition of title to lands only.

(1) A bad title is one which conveys no property to the purchaser of an estate.

(2) A doubtful title is one which the court does not consider to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it. 1 Jac. & W. 568; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 344.

(3) A good title is that which entitles a man by right to a property or estate, and to the lawful possession of the same.

(4) A marketable title is one which a court of equity considers to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser.

The doctrine of marketable titles is purely equitable and of modern origin. Atkins, Titles, 26. At law every title not bad is marketable. 5 Taunt. 625; 6 Taunt. 263; 1 Marsh. 258. See 2 Pa. Law J. 17.

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession. This happens when one man disposes another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself, but in another. This right of possession is of two sorts,—an apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better, and an actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all opponents. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or the right of possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 195.

Title to real estate is acquired by descent, by purchase, and by adverse possession.

Title to personal property may accrue in three different ways,—by original acquisition, by transfer by act of law, by transfer by act of the parties.

Title by original acquisition is acquired by occupancy (see "Occupancy"); by accession (see "Accession"); by intellectual labor (see "Literary Property").

The title to personal property is acquired and lost by transfer by act of law, in various ways,—by forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, intestacy (q. v.)

Title is acquired and lost by transfer by the act of the party by gift, by contract, or sale.

—In Legislation. That part of an act of the legislature by which it is known and distinguished from other acts; the name of the act.

—In Literature. The particular division of a subject, as a law, a book, and the like; for example, Digest, book 1, title 2. The name of a newspaper, book, etc.

—Personal Relations. A distinctive appellation denoting the rank to which the individual belongs in society.

The constitution of the United States forbids the grant by the United States or any state of any title of nobility. Titles are bestowed by courtesy on certain officers. The president of the United States sometimes receives the title of "Excellency;" judges and members of congress, that of "Honorable;" and members of the bar and justices of the peace are called "Esquires." Cooper, Just. Inst. 416; Brackenridge, Law Misc.

Titles are assumed by foreign princes, and among their subjects they may exact these marks of honor; but in their intercourse with foreign nations they are not entitled to them as a matter of right. Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 3, § 6.

—In Pleading. The right of action which the plaintiff has. The declaration must show the plaintiff's title, and if such title be not shown in that instrument, the defect cannot be cured by any of the future pleadings. Bac. Abr. "Pleas, etc." (B 1).

—In Practice. That part of a pleading or other paper in a cause that states the names of the parties plaintiff and defendant thereto.

TITLE, COVENANTS FOR. They comprise "covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty." Rawle, Cov. § 21.

TITLE DEEDS. Those deeds which are evidences of the title of the owner of an estate.

The person who is entitled to the inheritance has a right to the possession of the title deeds. 1 Car. & M. 653.

TITULADA. In Spanish law. Title. White New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 2.

TITULARS OF ERECTION. See "Lords of Erection."

TITULUS (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. Title; the source or ground of possession; the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not.

—In Old Ecclesiastical Law. A temple or church; the material edifice. So called because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title. Spelman.

TITULUS EST JUSTA CAUSA POSSIDENDI id quod nostrum est. Title is a just cause of possessing that which is ours. 8 Coke, 153 (305); Co. Litt. 345b.

TITULUS EST JUSTA CAUSA POSSIDENDI id quod nostrum est; dicitur a tuendo. A title is the just right of possessing that which is our own; it is so called from "tuendo," defending. 8 Coke, 153.

TO. "To" often has a meaning nearly synonymous with "towards," although its ordinary meaning is not satisfied unless the point or object is actually attained. 54 Mich. 87; 6 Ex. 205; 20 L. J. Ex. 146.

In expressing a boundary, is a term of exclusion, unless, by necessary implication, manifestly used in a different sense. Sumner's R. 178.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. The words in a conveyance which show the estate intended to be conveyed. 132 Ill. 605. Thus, in a conveyance of land in fee simple, the grant is to "A. and his heirs, to have and to hold the said (land) unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns, forever." See Williams, Real Prop. 198.

Strictly speaking, however, the words "to have" denote the estate to be taken, while the words "to hold" signify that it is to be held of some superior lord, i. e., by way of tenure (q. v.) The former clause is called the "habendum," the latter, the "tenendum." Co. Litt. 6a.

TO WIT. That is to say, 99 Ill. 560; namely; scilicet; videlicet.

—In Pleading. In describing various articles in general terms, "to wit" is used to avoid a variance and a positive aver-ment which must be strictly proved. 47 Ill. 177.

TOALIA. A towel. There is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the king's coronation. Cowell.

TOFT. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay. It also signifies a messuage.

TOGATI (Lat.) In Roman law. Under the empire, when the toga had ceased to be the usual costume of the Romans, advocates were nevertheless obliged to wear it whenever they pleaded a cause. Hence they were called togati. This denomination received an official or legal sense in the imperial constitutions of the fifth and sixth centuries; and the words togati, consortium (corpus, ordo, collegium) togatorum, frequently occur in those acts.

TOKEN. A document or sign of the existence of a fact.

Tokens are either public or general, or privy tokens. They are either true or false. When a token is false, and indicates a general intent to defraud, and is used for that purpose, it will render the offender guilty of the crime of cheating (12 Johns. [N. Y.] 292); but if it is mere privy token, as, counterfeiting a letter, in another man's name, in order to cheat but one individual, it would not be indictable (9 Wend. [N. Y.] 182; 1 Dall. [Pa.] 47; 2 Const. [S. C.] 139; 2 Va. Cas. 65; 4 Hawks [N. C.] 348; 6 Mass. 72; 12 Johns. [N. Y.] 293; 2 Dev. [N. C.] 199; 1 Rich. [S. C.] 244).

—In Common Law. In England, this name is given to pieces of metal, made in the shape of money, passing among private persons by consent at a certain value. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 182.

TOLERATION (Lat.) In some countries, where religion is established by law, certain sects who do not agree with the established religion are nevertheless permitted to exist; and this permission is called "toleration." They are permitted and allowed to remain rather as a matter of favor than a matter of right.

In the United States there is no such thing as toleration; all men have an equal right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences.

"We sometimes hear it said that all religions are tolerated in Ohio, but the expression is not strictly accurate. It is not by mere toleration that every individual here is protected in his belief or disbelief. He reposes not on the leniency of government, or the liberality of any class or sect of men, but upon his natural indefeasible rights of conscience, which are beyond the control or interference of any human authority." 2 Ohio St. 392.

TOLERATION ACT. St. 1 Wm. & Mary, st. 1, c. 18, confirmed by 10 Anne, c. 2, by which all persons dissenting from the Church of England (except Roman Catholics and persons denying the Trinity) were relieved from such of the acts against Non-conformists as prevented their assembling for religious worship according to their own forms, or otherwise restrained their religious liberty, on condition of their taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing a declaration against transubstantiation; and in case of dissenting ministers, subscribing also to certain of the Thirty-nine Articles. The clause of this act which excepted persons denying the Trinity from the benefits of its enactments was repealed by 53 Geo. III. c. 160. 4 Broom & H. Comm. 67. The disqualifications of Roman Catholics have been since, for the most part, removed.

TOLL. Toll at common law includes a large class of dues and exactions that are in the nature of fixed rights, and cannot be lawfully exceeded, and are generally, if not universally, connected with some franchise which involves duties as well as privileges of a general or public nature, such as those which belong to fairs, markets, mills, turnpikes, ferries and bridges. 41 Mich. 279.

*A sum of money for the use of something generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature.

The compensation paid to a miller for grinding another person's grain.

The rate of taking toll for grinding is regulated by statute in most of the states. See 2 Washb. Real Prop.; 6 Q. B. 31.

A Saxon word originally signifying a payment in towns, markets, or fairs for goods and cattle bought and sold there. It is now also popularly applied to the charges which canal and railroad companies require for the transportation of goods; but it does not necessarily import an immediate payment. The word means nothing more than a compensation for the privilege or service granted; and the period of payment depends, as in other cases, on the understanding of the parties.

Various definitions of the term collected, and the nature of tolls, considered. 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 589; 3 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 1 Keys (N. Y.) 72.

To bar, defeat, or take away; as, to toll an entry into lands is to deny or take away the right of entry. To toll the statute of limitations is to interrupt its running. See "Tolls."

TOLL BOOTH. A prison; a custom house; an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed.

TOLL DISH. A vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measure.

TOLL THOROUGH. In English law. A toll for passing through a public highway, or over a ferry or bridge. Cowell, TOLL TRAVERSE. In English law. A toll for passing over private grounds. Cowell.

TOLL TURN. In English law. A toll on beasts returning from a market. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 101, § 102. A toll paid at the return of beasts from fair or market, though they were not sold. Cowell.

TOLLS. In a general sense, tolls signify any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any wares or merchandise, to be taken of the buyer. 2 Inst. 58.

TOLLAGE. Payment of toll; money charged or paid as toll; the liberty or franchise of charging toll.

TOLLE VOLUNTATEM ET ERIT OMNIS actus Indifferens. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent. Bracton, fol. 2.

TOLLER, or TOLER (Law Fr. from Lat. tollere, q. v.) To take away; to bar or defeat. Discentis que tollent entries, descent; which toll or bar entries. Litt. § 385.

TOLLERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To lift up or raise; to elevate; to build up. See "Servitus Altius non Tollendi."

To take away; to dissolve or destroy. Tollitur omnis obligatio solutione ejus quod debetur, every obligation is dissolved by the payment of that which is due. Inst. 3. 30, pr. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 5.

To put an end to an action. Calv. Lex. To quash, or annul a judgment. Id.; Spiegelius.

To bring up, or educate. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 51.

TOLNETUM, Theolnetum. Law Lat. In old English law. Toll.

A tax, charge or imposition.

TOLSESTER. An old excise; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale. Cowell.

TOLSEY. The same as toll booth (q. v.) Also, a place where merchants meet; a local tribunal for small civil causes held at the Guildhall, Bristol.

TOLT. A writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron was taken and removed into a county court. Old Nat. Brev. 4.

TOLTA. Wrong; rapine; extortion. Cowell.

TONNAGE. The capacity of a ship or vessel; the duties paid on the tonnage of a ship.

This term is most usually applied to the capacity of a vessel in tons, as determined by the legal mode of measurement; and, as a general rule, in the United States, the official tonnage of a vessel is considerably below the actual capacity of the vessel to carry freight,

For the rule for determining the tonnage of British vessels under the law of England, see McCulloch, "Tonnage," Eng. Merch. Shipp. Act 1854, §§ 20-29.

In the United States it is provided that the tonnage of a vessel shall be her entire internal cubic capacity in tons of one hundred cubic feet each, to be ascertained in the manner prescribed by the statute. Rev. St. U. S. § 4153.

TONNAGE RENT. When the rent reserved by a mining lease or the like consists of a royalty on every ton of minerals gotten in the mine, it is often called a "tonnage rent." There is generally a dead rent in addition. See "Rent."

TONNAGIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A custom or impost upon wines and other merchandise exported or imported, according to a certain rate per ton. Spelman; Cowell.

TONNETIGHT. In old English law. The quantity of a ton or tun, in a ship's freight or bulk, for which tonnage or tunnage was paid to the king. Pat. 2 Rich. II; Cowell.

TONODERACH. In old Scotch law. A thief taker (qui fures exquirat). LL. Ken. Reg. § 5; Spelman.

TONSURA (Lat. from tondere, to shave or clip). In old English law. A shaving or polling; the having the crown of the head shaven; tonsure. One of the peculiar badges of a clerk or clergyman. Habitus et tonsura clericalis, the clerical habit and tonsure without which no man originally could be admitted to the privilege of clergy. 2 Hale, P. C. 372; 4 Bl. Comm. 366; Nov. 5, c. 2.

TONTINE. In French law. The name of a partnership composed of creditors or recipients of perpetual or life rents or annuities, formed on the condition that the rents of those who may die shall accrue to the survivors, either in whole or in part.

This kind of partnership took its name from Tonti, an Italian, who first conceived the idea and put it in practice. Merlin, Reper.; Dalloz; 5 Watts (Pa.) 351.

TONTINE INSURANCE. A system of life insurance whereby the surplus funds of the insurer are accumulated during a period called the "tontine period," and then distributed to such of the policy holders as then survive. See 38 Hun (N. Y.) 309.

TOOK AND CARRIED AWAY. In criminal pleading. Technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny. Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Cro. Car. 37; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 244. See "Asportation."

TOOLS. Those implements which are commonly used by the hand of one man in some physical operation when applied or directed by hand, and are movable to accomplish such operation as distinguished from a machine operated by some motive power other than that of the hand. 156 Wis. 78. It has been held to include also the implements of a professional man. 17 Mich. 342.

The apparatus of a printing office, such as types, presses, etc., are not, therefore, included under the term "tools." 13 Mass. 82; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 423; 3 Vt. 133. And see 2 Pick. (Mass.) 80; 5 Mass. 313.

TORNADO. Tornado is synonymous with "hurricane" and means a violent storm.

A violent gust of wind or a tempest distinguished by the vehemence of the wind and by a whirling, progressive motion, usually accompanied by thunder, lightning, and torrents of rain, and commonly of short duration and small breadth. 151 Ia. 73, 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 266n.

TORT. (Fr. tort; from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted, wrested aside). A private or civil wrong or injury; a wrong independent of contract. 1 Hilliard, Torts, 1.

The commission or omission of an act by one without right, whereby another receives some injury, directly or indirectly, in person, property, or reputation.

"The word 'tort' means nearly the same thing as the expression 'civil wrong.' It denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by mere breach of contract; or, to be more nicely accurate, a tort is a disturbance of another in rights which the law has created, either in the absence of contract, or in consequence of a relation which a contract had established between the parties." Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 4.

(1) Distinguished from breach of contract. As recognized by the law for the enforcement of rights and redress of injuries, torts may be distinguished from breach of contracts by these qualities: That parties jointly committing torts are severally liable without right to contribution from each other; that the death of either party destroys the right of action; that persons under personal disabilities to contract are liable for their torts; that attachment, arrest, and imprisonment are allowed on claims arising under contracts. 1 Hilliard, Torts, 3. A tort, however, may grow out of, or make part of, or be coincident with, a contract; as in the familiar case of a fraudulent sale or fraudulent recommendation of a third person. Indeed, the wrong of fraud almost necessarily implies an accompanying contract. In these cases, the law often allows the party injured an election of remedies; that is, he may proceed against the other party either as a debtor or contractor, or as a wrongdoer. 10 Hilliard, Torts, 28; 10 C. B. 83; 24 Conn. 392.

(2) Distinguished from crime. The distinction of public wrongs from private crimes, and misdemeanors from civil injuries, seems principally to consist in this, that private wrongs or civil injuries are an infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals merely as individuals. "Public wrongs or crimes and misdemeanors are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community in its social aggregate capacity." 4 Bl. Comm. 5.

TORTFEASOR. A wrongdoer; one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

TORTURA LEGUM PESSIMA. The torture or wresting of laws is the worst kind of torture. 4 Bac. Works, 434.

TORTURE. Bodily pain or hurt inflicted with the object of compelling a disclosure of guilt or of knowledge in respect of a crime or its perpetrator. It was imposed by various means, and under sanction of law.

TOT. In old English practice. A word written by the foreign opposer or other officer opposite to a debt due the king, to denote that it was a good debt, which was hence said to be "totted." St. 42 Edw. III. c. 9.

TOTA CURIA (Law Lat.) In the old reports. The whole court.

TOTAL LOSS. In insurance. A total loss in marine insurance is either the absolute destruction of the insured subject by the direct action of the perils insured against, or a constructive—sometimes called "technical"—total loss, in which the assured is deprived of the possession of the subject, still subsisting in specie, or where there may be remnants of it or claims subsisting on account of it, and the assured, by the express terms or legal construction of the policy, has the right to recover its value from the underwriters, so far as, and at the rate at which, it is insured, on abandonment and assignment of the still subsisting subject or remnants or claims arising out of it. 2 Phil. Ins. c. xvii.; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 286.

A constructive total loss may be by capture; seizure by unlawful violence; as, piracy (1 Phil. Ins. § 1106; 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 85); or damage to ship or goods over half of the value at the time and place of loss (2 Phil. Ins. § 1608; 1 Curt. [U. S.] 148; 9 Cush. [Mass.] 415; 5 Denio [N. Y.] 342; 6 Denio [N. Y.] 282; 19 Ala. [N. S.] 108; 1 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 141; 6 Johns. [N. Y.] 219); or loss of the voyage (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1601, 1606, 1619; 4 Me. 431; 24 Miss. 461; 19 N. Y. 272; 1 Mart. [La.] 221); though the ship or goods may survive in specie, but so as not to be fit for use in the same character for the same service or purpose (2 Phil. Ins. § 1605; 2 Caines, Cas. [N. Y.] 324; Valin, tom. 2 tit. Ass. a. 46); or by jettison (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1616, 1617; 1 Caines [N. Y.] 196); or by necessity to sell on account of the action and effect of the peril insured against (2 Phil. Ins. § 1623; 5 Gray [Mass.] 154; 1 Cranch [U.

S.] 202); or by loss of insured freight consequent on the loss of cargo or ship (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1642, 1645; 18 Johns. [N. Y.] 208).

There may be a claim for a total loss in addition to a partial loss. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1743; 17 How. (U. S.) 595. A total loss of the ship is not necessarily such of cargo (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1601 et seq., 1622; 3 Bin. [Pa.] 287); nor is submersion necessarily a total loss (2 Phil. Ins. § 1607; 7 East, 38); nor is temporary delay of the voyage (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1618, 1619; 5 Barn. & Ald. 597).

A constructive total loss, and an abandonment thereupon of the ship, is a constructive total loss of freight; and a constructive total loss and abandonment of cargo has a like effect as to commissions or profits thereon; and the validity of the abandonment will depend upon the actual facts at the time of the abandonment, as the same may subsequently prove to have been. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1630 et seq.; 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 93.

TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.) In so many words.

TOTIES QUOTIES (Lat.) As often as the thing shall happen.

TOTIS VIRIBUS (Lat.) With all one's might or power; with all his might; very strenuously.

TOTUM PRAEFERTUR UNICUIQUE parte. The whole is preferable to any single part. 3 Coke, 41a.

TOUCH AND STAY. Words frequently introduced in policies of insurance, giving the party insured the right to stop and stay at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. A vessel which has the power to touch and stay at a place in the course of the voyage must confine herself strictly to the terms of the liberty so given; for any attempt to trade at such a port during such a stay, as, by shipping or landing goods, will amount to a species of deviation which will discharge the underwriters, unless the ship have also liberty to trade as well as to touch and stay at such a place. 1 Marsh. Ins. 275; 1 Esp. 610; 5 Esp. 96.

TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST (Law Fr. always and still ready). This is the name of a plea of tender; as, where a man is indebted to another, and he tenders the amount due, and afterwards the creditor brings a suit, the defendant may plead the tender, and add that he has always been and is still ready to pay what he owes, which may be done by the formula toujours et uncore prist. He must then pay the money into court; and if the issue be found for him, the defendant will be exonerated from costs, and the plaintiff made justly liable for them. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2923. See "Tout Temps Prist."

TOUR D'ECHELLE. In French law. A right which the owner of an estate has of placing ladders on his neighbor's property to facilitate the reparation of a party wall, or of buildings which are supported by that wall. It is a species of servitude. Lois des Bat. pt. 1, c. 3, sec. 2, art. 9, § 1.

The space of ground left unoccupied around a building for the purpose of enabling the owner to repair it with convenience. This is not a servitude, but an actual corporeal property.

TOURN. In old English law. A court of record, having criminal jurisdiction, in each county, held before the sheriff twice a year, in one place after another, following a certain circuit or rotation.

TOUT (Fr.) All.

TOUT CE QUE LA LOI NE DEFEND pas est permis. Everything is permitted which is not forbidden by law.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST (Law Fr. always ready). In pleading. A plea by which the defendant signifies that he has always been ready to perform what is required of him. The object of the plea is to save costs; as, for example, where there has been a tender and refusal. 3 Bl. Comm. 303; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 Y 5). So, in a writ of dower, where the plea is detinue of charters, the defendant might reply, "Always ready." Rast. Entr. 229b; Stearns, Real Actions, 310. See "Uncore Prist."

TOUT UN SOUND (Law Fr.) All one sound; idem sonans.

TOUTE EXCEPTION NON SURVEILLEE tend a prendre la place du principe. Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

TOWARDS. In a course of line leading to or in the direction of. 180 Mich. 654.

TOWN.

—In General. The word "town" sometimes indicates a division of the county next smaller in extent than the county itself. It is also often used to denote a small city or village. 125 Ga. 559; 54 S. E. 539. The word may be and frequently is used as meaning "township" and vice versa. 244 Ill. 554; 82 Ill. 121. See "Township."

—Organization, Purpose and Government. In the New England states, the town is for many purposes the unit of civil government. In other states, the county is the unit, and the town has local government in only a few matters. Generally they are mere political organizations created wholly by statute for certain purposes of local government. They are vested with no franchises or special privileges for their own benefit, have only such powers as the statute confers, and are subject to no obligations, except such as are derived from statutory provisions. 161 Mich. 571, 576.

—In English Law. The term "town" or "vill" comprehends under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. 1 Bl. Comm. 114.

TOWN CLERK. An officer who manages the public business of a town.

TOWN COLLECTOR. An officer of a town charged with collecting the township taxes.

TOWN COMMISSIONER. One of the board of officers in whom, under the laws of some of the states, the management of the business of a town is vested. Abbott.

TOWN CRIER. An officer in a town whose business it is to make proclamations.

TOWN MEETING. An assemblage of the voters of a town to select town officers and discuss other business of the town.

TOWN PLAT. The acknowledgment and recording of a town plat vests the legal title to the ground embraced in the streets and alleys in the corporation of the town. Therefore it is held that the proprietor who has thus dedicated the streets and alleys to the public cannot maintain trespass for an injury to the soil or freehold. The corporation alone can seek redress for such injury. 11 Ill. 554; 13 Ill. 54, 308. This is not so, however, with a highway. The original owner of the fee must bring his action for an injury to the soil. 13 Ill. 54. See "Highway." If the streets or alleys of a town are dedicated by a different mode from that pointed out by the statute, the fee remains in the proprietor, burdened with the public easement. 13 Ill. 312.

TOWN REEVE. The reeve or chief officer of a town.

TOWN TAX. One levied to meet the separate expenses of a town. Opposed to "state tax," "county tax."

TOWNS IMPROVEMENT. The English Towns Improvement Clauses Act of 1847 was passed to consolidate in one act certain provisions usually contained in acts for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving towns. Local acts appointing commissioners for the improvement of towns generally incorporate the provisions of this act, but such acts are now rarely passed, as the provisions of the general health acts, the local government acts, the sanitary acts, and the public health acts have practically superseded them.

TOWNSHIP. The public lands of the United States are surveyed first into tracts called "townships," being in extent six miles square. The subdivisions of a township are called "sections," each a mile square, and containing six hundred and forty acres. These are subdivided into quarter sections, and from that into lots of forty acres each. This plan of subdividing the public lands was adopted by Act Cong. May 18, 1796. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, 493.

In some states the largest subdivision of a county. See "Town."

TRA. In old practice. The caret mark made to show where a clause or word left out, and interlined in writing, should come in. 1 Instr. Cler. 20.

TRABES (Lat.) In the civil law. A beam or rafter of a house. Calv. Lex.

In old English law. A measure of grain, containing twenty-four sheaves, a thrave. Spelman.

TRACEA. In old English law. The track or trace of a felon, by which he was pursued with the hue and cry; a footstep, hoof print, or wheel track. Bracton, fols. 116, 121b.

TRACT. An area, or a region of land or water of indefinite extent. 70 Ill. App. 44.

TRACTENT FABRILIA FABRI. Let smiths perform the work of smiths. 3 Coke, Epist.

TRADAS IN BALLIUM. You deliver to bail. In old English practice. The name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime, commanding the sheriff that, if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainperners for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize. Bracton, fol. 123; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 252.

TRADE. The original meaning of the word "trade" was "track" or "course," hence "trade-wind." In modern use it is employed in three different senses: (1) An occupation; a handicraft by which one earns a livelihood; mechanical employment in contradistinction to agriculture and the liberal arts. Ann. Cas. 1916A 1197; 86 Tex. 250; 22 L. R. A. 490; (2) Sale or exchange of merchandise or other property; a mercantile business, as opposed to the liberal arts or professions, 230 Ill. 236; and (3) a broader and more extended meaning synonymous with "commerce." 142 Ga. 267; Ann. Cas. 1916A 1197.

TRADE-MARK. A symbol, emblem, or mark used by a person to indicate that the article to which it is affixed is manufactured or sold by him, or that he carries on business at a particular place. 35 L. J. Ch. 61.

Its original use was by manufacturers, but its use has been extended to other than tradesmen, to indicate the nature of their business, their identity, or the place where their business is carried on. Slater, Trade-Marks, 232; 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 151; 7 Cush. (Mass.) 322; 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 101.

The office of a trade-mark is to indicate the origin, ownership, nature, etc., of goods manufactured or sold, or the person by whom, or the place where, they are so manufactured or sold. The essentials, therefore, of a good trade-mark, are that it be truthful in its express or implied statements, and that it be incapable of truthful application to other goods. 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1; 39 Conn. 450.

Descriptive words, or words indicating quality or attributes, which may be truthfully applied by others to the same class of goods, cannot constitute a valid trade-mark. 136 Ill. 215; 67 Ga. 562.

Arbitrary or fanciful names, constituting the majority of trade-marks, derive their value from the fact that they have come to identify the goods of the user, and cannot, therefore, be truthfully used by others. 51 Fed. 829; 63 Hun (N. Y.) 330.

TRADE-MARKS REGISTRATION ACT 1875. St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 91, amended by the acts of 1876 and 1877. It provides for the establishment of a register of trade-marks under the superintendence of the commissioners of patents, and for the registration of trade-marks as belonging to particular classes of goods, and for their assignment in connection with the goodwill of the business in which they are used. Registration is substituted for public use as the mode of acquiring the right to a trade-mark, so that now no one can enforce his right to a trade-mark until it is registered. For the purposes of the act, a trade-mark consists (1) of a name of an individual or firm printed, impressed, or woven in some particular and distinctive manner; (2) of a written signature or copy of a written signature of an individual or firm; or (3) of a distinctive device, mark, heading, label or ticket. See 3 Ch. Div. 659. There may be added to any one or more of these essential particulars any letters, words, or figures. Certain kinds of marks used as trade-marks before the passing of the act may be registered under the act, although not coming within the statutory definition. See generally, as to the act, Sebastian, Trade-Marks; 4 App. Cas. 479; 15 Ch. Div. 181.

TRADE-NAME. A trade-name is a name which by user and reputation has acquired the property of indicating that a certain trade or occupation is carried on by a particular person. The name may be that of a person, place, or thing, or it may be what is called a "fancy name" (i. e., a name having no sense, as applied to the particular trade), or word invented for the occasion, and having no sense at all. Seb. Trade-Marks, 37.

TRADE UNION. An association of workmen, usually, but not necessarily, employed in the same trade, for the purpose of combined action in securing the most favorable wages and conditions of labor. Popularly abbreviated to "union."

TRADE USAGE. A usage connected with the practice of a particular trade.

TRADER. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, or goods and chattels, and to sell the same for the purpose of making a profit. The quantum of dealing is immaterial, when an intention to deal generally exists. 3 Starkie, 56; 2 Car. & P. 135; 1 Term R. 572.

A farmer who, in addition to his usual business, occasionally buys a horse not calculated for his usual occupation, and sells him again to make a profit, and who, in the course of two years, had so bought and sold five or six horses, two of which had been sold, after he had bought them, for the sake of a guinea profit, was held to be a trader. 1 Term R. 537, note; 1 Price, 20. Another farmer, who bought a large quantity of potatoes, not to be used on his farm, but merely to sell again for a profit, was also declared to be a trader. 1 Strange, 513. See 7 Taunt. 409; 5 Bos. & P. 78; 11 East, 274.

A butcher who kills only such cattle as he has reared himself is not a trader; but if he buy them and kill and sell them with a view to profit, he is a trader. 4 Burrows, 21, 47. See 2 Rose, 38; 3 Campb. 233; Cooke, Bankr. Law, 48, 73; 2 Wils. 169; 1 Atk. 128; Cowp. 745.

A brickmaker who follows the business for the purpose of enjoying the profits of his real estate merely is not a trader; but when he buys the earth by the load or otherwise, and manufactures it into bricks, and sells them with a view to profit, he is a trader. Cooke, Bankr. Law, 52, 63; 7 East, 442; 3 Car. & P. 500; Moody & M. 263; 2 Rose, 422; 2 Glyn & J. 183; 1 Brown, Ch. 173.

For further examples the reader is referred to 4 Man. & R. 486; 9 Barn. & C. 577; 1 Term R. 34; 1 Rose, 316; 2 Taunt. 178; 2 Marsh. 236; 3 Moore & S. 761; 10 Bing. 292; Peake, 76; 1 Vent. 270; 3 Brod. & B. 2; 6 Moore, 56.

TRADICION (Spanish). In Spanish law. Delivery. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 9.

TRADING CORPORATIONS. Such corporations as are engaged in trading or trading and commerce, including all corporations engaged in a business which properly falls within the definition of trading. Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 121. See Trade.

TRADING VALUE. A rather vague and variable standard, meaning such value as an ingenious and energetic puffing would lead the buyer to believe he could realize from the stuff in his next deal. 233 Ill. 453.

TRADITIO (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. Delivery; transfer of possession; a giving possession of a corporeal thing; a derivative mode of acquiring, by which the owner of a corporeal thing, having the right and the will of alienating it, transfers it for a lawful consideration to the receiver. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 380.

—In Old English Law. Delivery or livery.

TRADITIO BREVIS MANUS (Lat.) In civil law. The delivery of a thing by the mere consent of the parties; as, when Peter holds the property of Paul as bailee, and afterwards he buys it, it is not necessary that Paul should deliver the property to Peter, and he should redeliver it to Paul. The mere consent of the parties transfers the title to Paul. 1 Duv. nota 252; 21 Me. 231; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50, cdlxxiv.; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 944.

TRADITIO CLAVIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Delivery of keys; a symbolical kind of delivery, by which the ownership of merchandise in a warehouse might be transferred to a buyer. Inst. 2. 1. 44.

TRADITIO LOQUI FACIT CHARTAM. Delivery makes the deed speak. 5 Coke, 1.

TRADITIO NIHIL AMPLIUS TRANSFERRE DEBET VEL POTES, AD EUM QUI ACCIPIT, QUAM EST APUD EUM QUI TRADIT. Delivery cannot and ought not to transfer to him who receives more than was in possession of him who made the delivery. Dig. 41. 1. 20.

TRADITIO REI (Lat.) Delivery of the thing. See 5 Maule & S. 82.

TRADITION (Lat. trans, over, do, dare, to give). In civil law. The act by which a thing is delivered by one or more persons to one or more others.

The delivery of possession by the proprietor with an intention to transfer the property to the receiver. Two things are, therefore, requisite in order to transmit property in this way,—the intention or consent of the former owner to transfer it, and the actual delivery in pursuance of that intention.

Tradition is either real or symbolical. Real tradition takes place where the ipsa corpora of movables are put into the hands of the receiver. Symbolical tradition is used where the thing is incapable of real delivery, as, in immovable subjects, such as lands and houses, or such as consist in jure (things incorporeal), as, things of fishing, and the like. The property of certain movables, though they are capable of real delivery, may be transferred by symbol. Thus, if the subject be under lock and key, the delivery of the key is considered as a legal tradition of all that is contained in the repository. Cujas, Observations, liv. 11, c. 10; Inst. 2. 1. 40; Dig.

41. 1. 9; Ersk. Inst. 2. 1. 10. 11; Civ. Code La. art. 2452 et seq. See "Delivery"

TRADITOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A traitor; one guilty of high treason. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, § 8.

TRADITOR IN BALLIUM (Law Lat.) In old practice. Is delivered to bail. Emphatic words of the old Latin bail piece. 1 Salk. 105.

TRAFFIC. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like.

TRAINBANDS. The militia; the part of a company trained to martial exercises.

TRAISTIS. In old Scotch law. A roll containing the particular dittay taken up upon malefactors, which, with the porteous, is delivered by the justice clerk to the coroner, to the effect that the persons whose names are contained in the porteous may be attached, conform to the dittay contained in the traistis. So called because committed to the traist [trust], faith, and credit of the clerks and coroner. Skene de Verb. Sign.

TRAITOR. One guilty of treason. See charge of Judge Sprague, District Court of Massachusetts, 1682; Bish. Crimes.

The punishment of a traitor is death.

TRAITOROUSLY. In pleading. A technical word, which is essential in an indictment for treason in order to charge the crime, and which cannot be supplied by any other word or any kind of circumlocution. Having been well laid in the statement of the treason itself, it is not necessary to state every overt act to have been traitorously committed. See Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 55; 1 East, P. C. 115; 2 Hale, P. C. 172, 184; 4 Bl. Comm. 307; 3 Inst. 15; Cro. Car. 37; Carth. 319; 2 Salk. 683; 4 Harg. St. Tr. 701; 2 Ld. Raym. 870; Comb. 259; 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 104 note (b).

TRANSACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The settlement of a suit or matter in controversy, by the litigating parties, between themselves, without referring it to arbitration. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 8, No. 14. An agreement by which a suit, either pending or about to be commenced, was forborne, or discontinued on certain terms. Calv. Lex. See Dig. 2. 15; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 17, § 2.

TRANSACTION (from Lat. trans and ago, to carry over). Whatever may be done by one person which affects another's rights and out of which cause of action may arise. 151 Wis. 266, 271; 143 Wis. 564, 572, 128 N. W. 445; the doing or the performing of any affair, management of any matter; as the transaction of business; that which is done or in the process of being done; an affair. 149 Ia. 645, 650.

—In civil law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, for the purpose of preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their difference, by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on. In Louisiana this contract must be reduced to writing. Civ. Code La. art. 3038.

Transactions regulate only the differences which appear to be clearly comprehended in them by the intentions of the parties, whether they be explained in a general or particular manner, unless it be the necessary consequence of what is expressed; and they do not extend to differences which the parties never intended to include in them. Civ. Code La. art. 3040.

To transact, a man must have the capacity to dispose of the things included in the transaction. 1 Domit, Lois Civ. 1. 13. 1; Dig. 2. 15. 1; Code, 2. 4. 41. In the common law, this is called a compromise. See "Compromise."

TRANSCRIPT (Lat.) A copy of an original writing, deed, or record.

—In Appellate Practice. The copy of the record transmitted to the appellate court.

TRANSCRIPTIO PEDIS FINIS LEVATI mittendo in cancellarium. A writ which certified the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, etc., into the chancery. Reg. Orig. 669.

TRANSCRIPTIO RECOGNITIONIS FAC-tae coram iudicialibus Itinerantibus, etc. An old writ to certify a cognizance taken by justices in eyre. Reg. Orig. 152.

TRANSFER (Lat. trans, over, fero, to bear or carry). The act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person, with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter. 1 Ala. 669; 36 Conn. 426.

TRANSFER OF A CAUSE. Removal of it to another court.

TRANSFERABLE. Capable of being passed to another. Railway passage tickets and personal privileges or licenses are often made "Not Transferable," i. e., valid only in the purchaser's hands.

TRANSFEREE. He to whom a transfer is made.

TRANSFERENCE. In Scotch law. The name of an action by which a suit which was pending at the time the party died is transferred from the deceased to his representatives, in the condition in which it stood formerly. If it be the pursuer who is dead, the action is called a transference active; if the defender, it is a transference passive. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 32.

TRANSFEROR. One who makes a transfer.

TRANSFERUNTUR DŌMINIA SINE TITULO et traditione, per usucaptionem, scilicet, per longam continuam et pacificam possessionem. Rights of dominion are transferred without title or delivery, by usucaption, to wit, long and quiet possession. Co. Litt. 113.

TRANSFRETATIO. (Lat.) In old English law. A crossing of the Strait (of Dover); a passing or sailing over from England to France.

TRANSGRESSIO EST CUM MODUS NON SERVATUR nec mensura, debit enim quilibet in suo facto modum habere et mensuram. Transgression is when neither mode nor measure is preserved, for every one in his act ought to have a mode and measure. Co. Litt. 37.

TRANSGRESSION (Lat. trans, over, gressio, a step). The violation of a law.

TRANSGRESSIONE MULTIPLICATA, crescat poena inflictio. When transgression is multiplied, let the infliction of punishment be increased. 2 Inst. 479.

TRANSHIPMENT. In maritime law. The act of taking the cargo out of one ship, and loading it in another.

When this is done from necessity, it does not affect the liability of an insurer on the goods. 1 Marsh. Ins. 166; Abb. Shipp. 240. But when the master tranships goods without necessity, he is answerable for the loss of them by capture by public enemies. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 443.

TRANSIENT MERCHANT. The term has reference rather to the character of the business than to the residence of the merchant. 151 Iowa 221, 226.

In an ordinance exacting a license from that class of persons, a transient merchant, trader, dealer, or vendor is one who, for a short space of time locates at a place, 119 Wis. 224; or who carries or transports his goods from house to house or place to place, and makes sales and deliveries of his wares as do other merchants or salesmen. 38 Ill. App. 361; or one who conducts a mercantile business from a fixed place of business temporarily maintained in a community; 171 Iowa 678, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 505; 159 Ill. 295, as distinguished from hawkers, peddlers, or salesmen or agents who merely solicit orders for the goods of their principals. 119 Wis. 244; 159 Ill. 295.

TRANSIRE. In English law. A warrant for the custom house to let goods pass; a permit. See, for a form of a transire, Harg. Law Tr. 104.

TRANSIT IN REM JUDICATAM. It passes into a judgment. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 298; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 100. See, also, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 463; 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 436; 6 East, 251.

TRANSIT TERRA CUM ONERE. The land passes with its burden. Co. Litt. 231a; Shep. Touch. 178; 5 Barn. & C. 607; 7 Mees. & W. 530; 3 Barn. & Ald. 587; 18 C. B. 845; 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 365; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 437, 630.

TRANSITIVE COVENANT. One binding the representatives of the covenantor.

TRANSITORY ACTION. In practice. An action the cause of which might have arisen in one place or county as well as another.

In general, all personal actions, whether ex contractu (5 Taunt. 25; 6 East, 352; 2 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 335; 3 Caines [N. Y.] 374; 3 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 500; 1 Chit. Pl. 243), or ex delicto (1 Chit. Pl. 243), are transitory.

Such action might, at common law, be brought in any county, but in the United States statutes have been passed prescribing in what counties the suit may be brought.

TRANSITUS (Lat.) A transit. See "Stoppage in Transitu."

TRANSLADO (Spanish). A transcript.

TRANSLATION. The reproduction in one language of what has been written or spoken in another.

In pleading, when a libel or an agreement written in a foreign language must be averred, it is necessary that a translation of it should also be given.

In evidence, when a witness is unable to speak the English language so as to convey his ideas, a translation of his testimony must be made. In that case, an interpreter should be sworn to translate to him, on oath, the questions propounded to him, and to translate to the court and jury.

The bestowing of a legacy which had been given to one, on another. This is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption. Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (C).

The transfer of property; but in this sense it is seldom used. 2 Bl. Comm. 294. See "Interpreter."

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The removal from one place to another; as, the bishop was translated from the diocese of A. to that of B. in the civil law, "translation" signifies the transfer of property. Cief des Lois Rom.

TRANSLATITIUM EDICTUM. So much of the edict promulgated by the former praetor as was retained and republished by his successor.

TRANSLATIVE FACT. A fact by means of which a right is transferred or passes from one person to another.

TRANSMISSION (from Lat. trans, over, mitto, to send). In civil law. The right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights. Domat. liv. 3, tit. 1, § 10; 4 Toulhier, Dr. Civ. note 186; Dig. 50. 17. 54; Code, 6. 51.

TRANSPORTATION (from Lat. trans, over, beyond, porto to carry). In English law. A punishment inflicted by virtue of sundry statutes. It was unknown to the common law. 2 H. Bl. 223. It is a part of the judgment or sentence of the court that the party shall be transported or sent into exile. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 789-796; Princ. Pen. Law, a. 4, § 2.

TRANSMUMPTS. In the Scotch law, an action of transumpt is an action competent to any one having a partial interest in a writing, or immediate use for it, to support his title or defenses in other actions. It is directed against the custodian of the writing, calling upon him to exhibit it, in order that a transumpt, i. e., a copy, may be judicially made and delivered to the pursuer. Bell, Dict.

TRASSATUS. One who is drawn, or drawn upon. The drawee of a bill of exchange. Heinec. de Camb. c. 6, §§ 5, 6.

TRAVAIL. The act of child bearing.

A woman is said to be in her travail from the time the pains of child bearing commence, until her delivery. 5 Pick. (Mass.) 63; 6 Me. 460.

TRAVERSE (Law Fr. traverser, to turn over, to deny). To deny; to put off.

—In Civil Pleading. To deny or controvert anything which is alleged in the previous pleading. Lawes, Pl. 116. A denial. Willes, 224. A direct denial in formal words: "Without this, that, etc." (absque hoc). 1 Chit. Pl. 523, note (a). A traverse may deny all the facts alleged (1 Chit. Pl. 525), or any particular material fact (20 Johns. [N. Y.] 406).

(1) A common traverse is a direct denial, in common language, of the adverse allegations, without the absque hoc, and concluding to the country. It is not preceded by an inducement, and hence cannot be used where an inducement is requisite. 1 Saund. 103b, note 1.

(2) A general traverse is one preceded by a general inducement, and denying all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, in general terms, instead of pursuing the words of the allegation which it denies. Gould, Pl. vii. 5, 6. Of this sort of traverse the replication de injuria sua propria absque tali causa, in answer to a justification, is a familiar example. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 1); Steph. Pl. 171; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 5; Archb. Civ. Pl. 194.

(3) A special traverse is one which commences with the words absque hoc, and pursues the material portion of the words of the allegation which it denies. Lawes, Pl.

116-120. It is regularly preceded by an inducement consisting of new matter. Gould, Pl. c. 7, §§ 6, 7; Steph. Pl. 188. A special traverse does not complete an issue, as does a common traverse. 20 Viner, Abr. 339; Yelv. 147, 148; 1 Saund. 22, note 2.

(4) A traverse upon a traverse is one growing out of the same point or subject matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side. Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42, note. It is a general rule that a traverse well intended on one side must be accepted on the other. And hence it follows, as a general rule, that there cannot be a traverse upon a traverse if the first traverse is material. The meaning of the rule is that, when one party has tendered a material traverse, the other cannot leave it and tender another of his own to the same point upon the inducement of the first traverse, but must join in that first tendered; otherwise the parties might alternately tender traverses to each other in unlimited succession, without coming to an issue. Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42. The rule, however, does not apply where the first traverse is immaterial, nor where it is material if the plaintiff would thereby be ousted of some right or liberty which the law allows. Poph. 101; F. Moore, 350; Hob. 104; Cro. Eliz. 99, 418; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (G 18); Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 4); Bouv. Inst. Index.

—In Criminal Practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment till a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. Dick. Sess. 151; 4 Bl. Comm. 351.

TRAVERSE JURY. A petit or trial jury.

TRAVERSE OF AN OFFICE. Proof that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator is defective and untrue made.

TRAVERSER. One who traverses or denies.

TRAVERSING ANSWER or TRAVERSING NOTE. In suits under the old English practice in chancery, where the defendant refused or neglected to file an answer to the bill, the plaintiff might file either a traversing answer or a traversing note, which produced the same effect as if the defendant had filed an answer traversing the case made by the bill. Daniell, Ch. Prac. 436. The modern practice dispenses with these fictions. See Rules of Court xxix. passim. See, also, "Pro Confesso."

TREACHER, TRECHETOUR, or treachour. A traitor.

TREADMILL. An instrument of prison discipline in England. It is composed of a large revolving cylinder, having ledges or steps fixed around its circumference. The prisoners walk up these ledges, and their weight moves the cylinder around.

TREASON.

—At Common Law. This word imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of allegiance. 4 Bl. Comm. 75.

Treason was either:

(1) High treason, which was the compassing of the king's death, the aiding and comforting of his enemies, the forging or counterfeiting of his coin, the counterfeiting of the privy seal, or the killing of the chancellor, or either of the king's justices.

(2) Petit treason, which was where a wife murdered her husband, a servant his master, or an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary. 4 Bl. Comm. 73.

—In the United States. The constitution of the United States (article 3, § 3) defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid or comfort. This offense is punished with death. Act April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83). By the same article of the constitution, no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court. See, generally, 3 Story, Const. 39, p. 667; 1 Bl. Comm. Append. 275, 276; 3 Wilson, Law Lect. 96-99; Foster, Disc. (I); Fed. Cas. No. 14, 692; 4 Cranch (U. S.) 126; 469-508; 1 Dall. (U. S.) 35; 2 Dall. (U. S.) 246, 355; 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 234; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 553; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 549; Comyn, Dig. "Justices" (K); 1 East, P. C. 37-158; 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 60-102; Archb. Crim. Pl. 378-387.

TREASON FELONY. An offense under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, consisting of compassing, etc., to depose her majesty, or to levy war to intimidate parliament, etc. Mozley & W.

TREASONABLE. Having the nature or guilt of treason.

TREASURE TROVE. Found treasure. This name is given to such money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, which, having been hidden or concealed in the earth or other private place so long that its owner is unknown, has been discovered by accident. Should the owner be found, it must be restored to him; and in case of not finding him, the property, according to the English law, belongs to the king. In the latter case, by the civil law, when the treasure was found by the owner of the soil, he was considered as entitled to it by the double title of owner and finder; when found on another's property, one-half belonged to the owner of the estate and the other to the finder; when found on public property, it belonged one-half to the public treasury and the other to the finder. Lecon. du Dr. Rom. §§ 350-352. This includes not only gold and silver, but whatever may constitute riches; as, vases, urns, statues, etc.

The Roman definition includes the same things under the word pecunia; but the thing found must have a commercial value; for ancient tombs would not be considered a treasure. The thing must have been hidden or concealed in the earth, and no one must be able to establish his right to it. It must be found by a pure accident, and not in consequence of search. Dalloz, "Propriete," art. 3, § 8.

According to the French law, le tresor est toute chose cachee ou enfouie, sur laquelle personne ne peut justifier sa propriete, et quie est decouverte par le pur effet du hasard. Code Civ. 716. See 4 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 34. See, generally, 20 Viner, Abr. 414; 7 Comyn, Dig. 649; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 237; 1 Bl. Comm. 295; Poth. Traite du Droit de Propriete, art. 4.

TREASURER'S REMEMBRANCER. He whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. There is still one in Scotland.

TREASURY. That fiscal department of the government which controls the payments of the public money in accordance with the votes of the legislature.

TREASURY BENCH. In the English house of commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker is so called, because occupied by the first lord of the treasury, or principal minister of the crown. Brown.

TREASURY CHEST FUND. A fund, in England, originating in the unusual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for banking and loan purposes by the commissioners of the treasury. Its amount was limited by St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 127, and has been further reduced to one million pounds, the residue being transferred to the consolidated fund by St. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 56. Wharton.

TREASURY STOCK. Stock reserved at the time of organization as assets of the corporation and the stockholders to be used in furtherance of corporate purposes. In respect to mining stock it has been held to mean "such stock as is set aside for the actual development of the property." Stock which has been issued as full paid to certain stockholders and has by them been subsequently donated to the corporation to be used by it in furtherance of its purposes is often spoken of as treasury stock. Strictly speaking it is not treasury stock, however, but occupies rather the status of any other property that it may own and which it may sell or barter at any time as it would sell or barter other personal property. 5 Fletcher Cyclopaedia of Corporations, 5601.

TREATY. Treaties are agreements made and entered into by one independent state with another, in conformity with law, by which it places itself under an obligation.

The following are not considered treaties:

(1) Agreements entered into by a state with private individuals.

(2) Agreements between a state and the church, and especially concordats of the different states with the pope.

(3) Agreements by sovereigns or sovereign dynasties, whether among themselves or with foreign states, relative to their personal or dynastic pretensions to the government of a country. Glenn, Int. Law, 139; Hall, Int. Law, 323, note 1.

—Treaty of Alliance. One entered into by two or more states with a view of securing concerted action for the purpose designated in the treaty. Alliances may be either equal or unequal, and either offensive or defensive, or both. Davis, Int. Law, 82, note.

—Treaty of Guaranty. One entered into for the purpose of securing the observance of a treaty already existing, or the permanence of an existing state of affairs. The treaty of London of 1832, by which France, Great Britain, and Russia guaranteed the sovereignty and independence of Greece, is an example.

—Treaty of Peace. A treaty of peace is an agreement or contract made by belligerent powers, in which they agree to lay down their arms, and by which they stipulate the conditions of peace and regulate the manner in which it is to be restored and supported. Vattel, bk. 4, c. 2, § 9.

TREATY OF PARIS. An agreement, more properly, perhaps, termed a "declaration," signed at Paris April 16, 1856, by representatives of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey.

The points agreed on relate to maritime law in time of war and are:

(1) Privateering is abolished.

(2) The neutral flag covers enemy's goods except contraband of war.

(3) Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not subject to capture under the enemy's flag.

(4) Blockade, to be effective, must be maintained by a force sufficient to prevent access to the coast of the enemy.

TREATY OF VERSAILLES. The treaty of peace between Germany and the Allied Powers which concluded the World War. It was signed at Versailles on June 28, 1919, and ratifications were exchanged at Paris on Jan. 10, 1920. The treaty was not ratified by the United States.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON. A treaty signed on May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States of America, with reference to certain differences arising out of the war between the northern and southern states of the Union, the Canadian fisheries, and other matters. Wharton.

TREBLE COSTS.

—In English Practice. The taxed costs and three-fourths the same added thereto. It is computed by adding one-half for double costs, and, in addition, one-half of one-half for treble costs. 1 Chit. 137; 1 Chit. Prac. 27.

—In American Law. In Pennsylvania the rule is different. When an act of assembly gives treble costs, the party is allowed three times the usual costs, with the exception that the fees of the officers are not to be trebled when they are not regularly or usually payable by the defendant. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 201.

In New York, the English method is followed. 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 443.

TREBLE DAMAGES. In actions arising ex contractu, some statutes give treble damages, and these statutes have been liberally construed to mean actually treble damages; for example, if the jury give twenty dollars damages for a forcible entry, the court will award forty dollars more, so as to make the total amount of damages sixty dollars. 4 Barn. & C. 154; McClell. 567.

The construction on the words "treble damages" is different from that which has been put on the words "treble costs." See 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 288; 1 Browne (Pa.) 9; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 160, 175, 176, 584; 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 115.

TREBUCKET. The name of an engine of punishment, said to be synonymous with "tumbrel."

TREMAGIUM, TREMESIUM, or TERMISLUM. The reason or time of sowing summer corn, being about March, the third month, to which the word may allude. Cowell.

TRES FACIUNT COLLEGIUM. Three form a corporation. Dig. 50. 16. 85; 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

TRESAYLE. An abolished writ sued on ouster by abatement on the death of the grandfather's grandfather.

TRESPASS. Any misfeasance or act of one man, whereby another is injuriously treated or damaged. 3 Bl. Comm. 208; 7 Conn. 125.

Any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another.

Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another, to the damage thereof.

The word is used oftener in the last two somewhat restricted significations than in the first sense here given. In determining the nature of the act, neither the amount of violence or the intent with which it is offered, nor the extent of the damage accomplished or the purpose for which the act was committed, are of any importance; since a person who enters upon the land of another without leave, to lead off his own runaway horse, and who breaks a blade of grass in so doing, commits a trespass. 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 325; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 5.

It is said that "some" damage must be committed to make an act a trespass. It is undoubtedly true that damage is required to constitute a trespass for which an action will lie; but, so far as the tort itself is concerned, it seems more than doubtful if the mere commission of an act affecting another, without legal authority, does not constitute trespass, though, until damage is done, the law will not regard it, inasmuch as the law does not regard trifles.

The distinction between the different classes of trespass is of importance in determining the nature of the remedy.

A trespass committed with force is said to be done "vi et armis," one committed by entry upon the realty, "by breaking the close."

—In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for the injury sustained by the plaintiff, as the immediate consequence of some wrong done forcibly to his person or property, against the person committing the same. Force is the essential of the action, and distinguishes it from "trespass on the case."

TRESPASS DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. de bonis asportatis, for goods which have been carried away). In practice. A form of action brought by the owner of goods to recover damages for unlawfully taking and carrying them away. 1 Me. 117.

It is no answer to the action that the defendant has returned the goods. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 36 (H).

TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS. A form of action, supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has unlawfully received during the time of his occupation. 3 Bl. Comm. 205; 4 Burrows, 1668. The person who actually received the profits is to be made defendant, whether defendant to the ejectment or not. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 280. It lies after a recovery in ejectment (5 Cow. [N. Y.] 33; 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 55), or entry (6 N. H. 391), but not trespass to try title (Const. [S. C.] 102; 1 McCord [S. C.] 264); and the judgment in ejectment is conclusive evidence against the defendant for all profits which have accrued since the date of the demise stated in the declaration in ejectment (1 Blackf. [Ind.] 56; 2 Rawle [Pa.] 49); but suit for any antecedent profits is open to a new defense, and the tenant may plead the statute of limitations as to all profits accruing beyond the period fixed by law (3 Bl. Comm. 205, note; 2 Root [Conn.] 440).

TRESPASS ON THE CASE. In practice. The form of action by which a person seeks to recover damages caused by an injury unaccompanied with force, or which results indirectly from the act of the defendant. It is more generally called simply "case." See "Case;" 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 3482-3509.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT (Lat. quare clausum fregit, because he has broken the close). In practice. The form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries to the realty consequent upon entry without right, but not by force, upon the plaintiff's land.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE. An action authorized in a few states by statutes allowing title to be tried in trespass q. c. f. The nature and scope of the action differs with the various statutes. In South Carolina, the action is in the nature of ejectment, while in Texas it is an action to quiet title.

TRESPASS VI ET ARMIS (Lat. vi et armis, with force and arms). In practice. The form of action which lies to recover damages for an injury which is the immediate consequence of a forcible wrongful act done to the person or personal property. 2 Const. (S. C.) 294. It is distinguished from case in this, that the injury in case is the indirect result of the act done. See "Case;" 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3583.

TRESPASSER. One who does an unlawful act, or a lawful act in an unlawful manner, to the injury of the person or property of another.

TRESPASSER AB INITIO. A term applied to denote that one who has commenced a lawful act in a proper manner has performed some unlawful act, or some lawful act in an unlawful manner, so connected with the previous act that he is to be regarded as having acted unlawfully from the beginning. See 8 Coke, 146; 5 Taunt. 198; 7 Adol. & E. 176; 11 Mees. & W. 740; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 401. See "Ab Initio."

TRESTONARE. To turn or divert another way. Cowell.

TRET. An allowance made for the water or dust that may be mixed with any commodity. It differs from "tare."

TREYNE. (L. Fr.) In old English law. Drawn; dragged to the scaffold.

TREYT. Withdrawn, as a juror. Written also "treat." Cowell.

TRIA CAPITA. In the Roman law, were civitas, libertas, and familia, i. e., citizenship, freedom, and family rights. See "Caput;" "Status."

TRIAL. The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue. 4 Mason (U. S.) 232.

The methods of trial at common law were:

(1) By certificate, where the evidence of the person certifying is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. 3 Bl. Comm. 333.

(2) By inspection or examination, where the judges upon the testimony of their senses decide the point in dispute.

(3) By witnesses, without the intervention of a jury (3 Bl. Comm. 336).

(4) By jury, which is that form of trial in which the facts are determined by twelve men impartially selected from the body of the county. See "Jury."

(5) By the record, where an issue of nul tiel record is joined in any action.

(6) By grand assize, a peculiar method of trial allowed in writs of right. See "Grand Assize."

(7) By wager of battel, which, in the old English law, was a barbarous mode of trying facts, among a rude people, founded on the supposition that heaven would always interpose and give the victory to the champions of truth and innocence. This mode of trial was abolished in England as late as St. 59 Geo. III. c. 46, A. D. 1818. It never was in force in the United States. See 3 Bl. Comm. 337; 1 Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 188. See a modern case, 1 Barn. & Ald. 405.

(8) By wager of law, which mode of trial has fallen into complete disuse; but, in point of law, it seems in England to be still competent in most cases to which it anciently applied. The most important and best-established of these cases is the issue of nil debet, arising in action of debt on simple contract, or the issue of non detinet, in an action of detinue. In the declaration in these actions, as in almost all others, the plaintiff concludes by offering his suit (of which the ancient meaning was followers or witnesses, though the words are now retained as mere form) to prove the truth of his claim. On the other hand, if the defendant, by a plea of nil debet or non detinet, deny the debt or detention, he may conclude by offering to establish the truth of such plea "against the plaintiff and his suit, in such manner as the court shall direct." Upon this, the court awards the wager of law (Co. Entr. 119a; Lilly, Entr. 467; 3 Chit. Pl. 479), and the form of this proceeding, when so awarded is that the defendant brings into court with him eleven of his neighbors, and for himself makes oath that he does not owe the debt or detain the property.

TRIAL AT BAR. Trial before all the judges at the bar of the court in which the suit is brought. Steph. Pl. 84. Seldom used except in cases of great importance.

TRIAL AT NISI PRIUS. Trial before a justice of assize; the usual method of trial. 3 Bl. Comm. 353.

TRIAL LIST. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term.

TRIATIO IBI SEMPER DEBET FIERI, ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. Trial ought always to be had where the jurors can have the best information. 7 Coke, 1.

TRIBUERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To give. Calv. Lex. To distribute.

TRIBUNAL. The seat of a judge; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction. 155 Ill. App. 405. The jurisdiction which the judges exercise.

The term is Latin, and derives its origin from the elevated seat where the tribunes administered justice.

TRIBUNAUX DE COMMERCE. In the French law, courts consisting of a president, judges, and substitutes elected in an assembly of the principal traders. No person under thirty years is eligible as a member of the tribunal, and the president must be forty years of age, at the least. The tribunal takes cognizance of all cases arising between merchants, and also of all disagreements arising among partners. The course of procedure is as in civil cases, and with an appeal to the regular courts. Brown.

TRIBUTE. A contribution which is sometimes raised by the sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state. It is also a sum of money paid by one nation to another under some pretended right. Wolff. § 1145.

TRICESIMA. An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called, because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.

TRIDING MOTE. The court held for a triding or trithing. Cowell.

TRIENNIAL ACT. An act limiting the duration of every parliament to three years, unless sooner dissolved. It was passed by the long parliament in 1640, and afterwards repealed, and the term was fixed at seven years by the septennial act (St. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 38).

TRIENS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing four unciae; the proportion of four-twelfths or one-third. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note (m).

TRIGAMUS. In old English law. One who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives; a trigamist. 3 Inst. 88.

TRIGILD. In Saxon law. A triple gild, geld, or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction. Spelman, voc. "Geldum."

TRINITY HOUSE. In English law. The short name usually given to a society incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII., and charged by successive acts of parliament with duties relating to the marine, especially in relation to pilotage, and the erection and maintenance of lighthouses, beacons, and sea marks.

TRINITY MASTERS. Elder brethren of the Trinity House. If a question arising in an admiralty action depends upon technical skill and experience in navigation, the judge or court is usually assisted at the hearing by two trinity masters, who sit as assessors, and advise the court on questions of a nautical character. Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 271; Sweet.

TRINITY SITTINGS. Sittings of the English court of appeal and of the high court of justice in London and Middlesex, commencing on the Tuesday after Whitsun week, and terminating on the 8th of August.

TRINITY TERM. In English law. One of the four terms of the court. It begins on the 22d day of May, and ends on the 12th of June. St. 11 Geo. IV., and Wm. IV., c. 70. It was formerly a movable term.

TRINOBANTES, TRINONANTES, or TRINOVANTES. In habitants of Britain, situated next to the Cantii, northward, who occupied, according to Camden and Baxter, that country which now comprises the counties of Essex and Middlesex, and some part of Surrey. But if Ptolemy be not mistaken, their territories were not so extensive in his time, as London did not then belong to them. The name seems to be derived from the three following British words: Tri, now, hant, i. e., inhabitants of the new city (London). Enc. Lond.

TRINODA NECESSITAS (Lat.) The threefold necessary public duties to which all lands were liable by Saxon law, viz., for repairing bridges, for maintaining castles or garrisons, and for expeditions to repel invasions. In the immunities enumerated in king's grants, these words were inserted, "exceptis his tribus, expeditione, pontis et arcis constructione." Kennett, Par. Ant. 46; 1 Bl. Comm. 263.

TRIORS. In practice. Persons appointed according to law to try whether a person challenged to the favor is or is not qualified to serve on the jury. They do not exceed two in number, without the consent of the prosecutor and defendant, or unless some special case is alleged by one of them, or when only one juror has been sworn and two triors are appointed with him. Co. Litt. 158a; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (E 12).

TRIPARTITE. Consisting of three parts; as, a deed tripartite, between A. of the first part, B. of the second part, and C. of the third part.

TRIPLICACION (Law Fr.) In old pleading. A rejoinder in pleading; the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. Britt. c. 77.

TRIPLICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. The reply of the plaintiff (actor) to the rejoinder (duplicatio) of the defendant (reus). It corresponds to the surrejoinder of common law. Inst. 4. 14; Bracton, lib. 5, tit. 5, c. 1.

TRIPLUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The triple value of a thing. Actio in triplum, an action for the triple value. Inst. 4. 6. 21. 24.

TRISTIS. A forest immunity. Manw. For. Law, 1, 86.

TRITHING (Saxon, trithinga). The third part of a county, consisting of three or four hundreds.

A court within the circuit of the trithing, in the nature of a court leet, but inferior to the county court. Camd. 102. The ridings of Yorkshire are only a corruption of trithings. 1 Bl. Comm. 116; Spelman, 52; Cowell.

TRITHING MOTE. The court held for a trithing or riding.

TRITHING REEVE. A governor of a trithing.

TRIUMVIR. A trithing man or constable of three hundred. Cowell.

TRIUMVIRI (or TREVIRI, or TRESVIRI) capitales (Lat.) In Roman law. Officers who had charge of the prison, through whose intervention punishments were inflicted. Sallust, in Catilin. They had eight lictors to execute their orders. Vicat.

TRIVERBIAL DAYS. In the civil law. Juridical days; days allowed to the praetor for deciding causes; days on which the praetor might speak the three characteristic words of his office, viz., do, dico, addico. Calv. Lex. Otherwise called "dies fasti." 3 Bl. Comm. 424, and note (w).

TRIVIAL. Of small importance. It is a rule in equity that a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4237. See Hopk. 112; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 183; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 364.

TRONAGE. In English law. A customary duty or toll for weighing wool; so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12.

TRONATOR. A weigher of wool. Cowell.

TROPHY MONEY. Money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, etc.

TROVER (Fr. trouver, to find). In practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages against one who has, without right, converted to his own use goods or personal chattels in which the plaintiff has a general or special property.

The action was originally an action of trespass on the case where goods were found by the defendant and retained against the plaintiff's rightful claim. The manner of gaining possession soon came to be disregarded, as the substantial part of the action is the conversion to the defendant's use; so that the action lies whether the goods came into the defendant's possession by finding or otherwise, if he fails to deliver them up on the rightful claim of the plaintiff. It differs from detinue and replevin in this, that it is brought for damages, and not for the specific articles; and from trespass in this, that the injury is not necessarily a forcible one, as trover may be brought in any case where trespass for injury to personal property will lie; but the converse is not true. In case possession was gained by a trespass, the plaintiff, by bringing his action in this form, waives his right to damages for the taking, and is confined to the injury resulting from the conversion. 17 Pick. (Mass.) 1; 21 Pick. (Mass.) 559; 17 Me. 434; 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 209.

TRUCE. In international law. An agreement between belligerent parties by which they mutually engage to forbear all acts of hostility against each other for some time, the war still continuing. Burlam. Nat. Law, pt. 4, c. 11, § 1.

Truces are of several kinds,—general, extending to all the territories and dominions of both parties, and particular, restrained to particular places, as, for example, by sea, and not by land, etc. Burlam. Nat. Law, pt. 4, c. 11, § 5. They are also absolute, indeterminate, and general; or limited and determined to certain things; for example, to bury the dead. Id. See 1 Kent, Comm. 159; Halleck, Int. Law, 654; Wheaton, Int. Law, 682.

TRUCE OF GOD (Law Lat. treuza Dei; Saxon treuge or trewa, from German treu; Fr. treve de Dieu). In the middle ages, a limitation of the right of private warfare introduced by the church. This truce provided that hostilities should cease on holidays, from Thursday evening to Sunday evening of each week, the whole season of Advent and Lent, and the octaves of great festivals. The penalty for breach of the truce was excommunication. The protection of this truce was also extended constantly to certain places, as, churches, convents, hospitals, etc., and certain persons, as, clergymen, peasants in the field, crusaders (Clermont, 1095), and, in general, all defenseless persons. It was first introduced into Aquitaine in 1077, and into England under William the Conqueror. Enc. Am.

TRUCK ACT. St. 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 37, passed to abolish what is commonly called the "truck system," under which employers were in the practice of paying the wages of their work people in goods, or of requiring them to purchase goods at certain shops. This led to laborers being compelled to take goods of inferior quality at a high price. The act applies to all artificers, workmen, and laborers, except those engaged in certain trades, especially iron and metal works, quarries, cloth, silk, and glass manufactories. It does not apply to domestic or agricultural servants. Smith, Mast. & S. 166; St. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, § 28. Acts similar in purpose have been passed in some of the United States.

TRUE BILL. In practice. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment when a grand jury, after having heard the witnesses for the government, are of opinion that there is sufficient cause to put the defendant on his trial. Formerly the indorsement was Billa vera when legal proceedings were in Latin. It is still the practice to write on the back of the bill Ignoramus. When the jury do not find it to be a true bill, the better opinion is that the omission of the words "a true bill" does not vitiate an indictment. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 473; 13 N. H. 488. See 5 Me. 432, and Bennett's note.

TRUE, PUBLIC, and NOTORIOUS. These three qualities used to be formally predicated in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally.

TRUST. A right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another.

The party holding is called the "trustee," and the party for whose benefit the right is held is called the cestui que trust, or, using a better term, the "beneficiary."

Sometimes the equitable title of the beneficiary, sometimes the obligation of the trustee, and, again, the right held, is called the "trust." But the right of the beneficiary is in the trust, the obligation of the trustee results from the trust, and the right held is the subject matter of the trust. Neither of them is the trust itself. All together they constitute the trust.

An equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from its legal ownership.

A personal obligation for paying, delivering, or performing anything where the person trusting has no real right or security, for by that act he confides altogether to the faithfulness of those intrusted.

An obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Willis, Trust, 1; 4 Kent, Comm. 295; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 1; 1 Saunders, Uses, 6; Cooper, Eq. Pl. Introd. 27; 3 Bl. Comm. 431.

The Roman fidei commissa were, under the name of "uses," first introduced by the clergy into England in the reign of Richard II. or Edward III., and, while perseveringly prohibited by the clergy, and wholly discountenanced by the courts of common law, they grew into public favor, and gradually developed into something like a regular branch of law, as the court of chancery rose into importance and power. For a long time the beneficiary, or cestui que trust, was without adequate protection; but the statute of uses, passed in 27 Henry VIII., gave adequate protection to the interests of the cestui que trust. Prior to this statute, the terms "use" and "trust" were used, if not indiscriminately, at least without accurate distinction between them. The distinction, so far as there was one, was between passive uses, where the feoffee had no active duties imposed on him, and active trusts, where the feoffee had something to do in connection with the estate. The statute of uses sought to unite the seisin with the use, making no distinction between uses and trusts, the result being that, by a strict construction, both uses and trusts were finally taken out of its intended operation, and were both included under the term "trust." The statute was passed in 1538; but trusts did not become settled on their present basis till Lord Nottingham's time, in 1676. 2 Washb. Real Prop. Index, "Trust;" 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 338.

(1) Trusts are either active, being those in which the trustee has some duty to perform, or passive (sometimes called "dry"), which require the performance of no duty by the trustee, but by force of which the legal title merely rests in the trustee.

(2) Trusts are either executed or executory, executed trusts being those fully declared by the person creating it, so that nothing need be done to make it complete, while an executory trust is one requiring some further act to complete the intention of the creator, as a conveyance to B. in trust to convey to C.

(3) Trusts are either for value or voluntary, accordingly as they are or are not based on a valuable consideration.

(4) Trusts are public or private, accordingly as their object is for the general public good, or for the benefit of certain individuals.

(5) Trusts are, as to the manner of their creation, either express or implied.

Express trusts are those which are created in express terms in the deed, writing, or will. The terms to create an express trust will be sufficient if it can be fairly collected upon the face of the instrument that a trust was intended. Express trusts are usually found in preliminary sealed agreements, such as marriage articles, or articles for the purchase of land; in formal conveyances, such as marriage settlements, terms for years, mortgages, assignments for the payment of debts, raising portions, or other purposes; and in wills and testaments, when the bequests involve fiduciary interests for private benefit or public charity. They may be created even by parol. 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 97.

Implied trusts are those which, without being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction as matters of intent, or which are superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties. The term is used in this general sense, including constructive and resulting trusts, and also in a more restricted sense, excluding those classes.

TRUST DEED. A form of mortgage in use in Missouri and some other states, and in the District of Columbia. A deed is made in trust with a power of sale, and the power is exercised for the mortgagee's benefit. Similar deeds are frequently made by railroad companies or other corporations to secure bond issues where of necessity the creditors secured are very numerous.

TRUSTEE. A person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another.

One to whom property has been conveyed to be held or managed for another.

—In Scotch Law. He who creates a trust.

TRUSTEE ACTS. Sts. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55, passed to enable the court of chancery (now the high court of justice, on petition presented in the chancery division) to appoint new trustees of a settlement, will, or other instrument creating a trust, whenever a trustee's death, lunacy, absence or refusal to act, or other reason, makes it necessary to apply to the court. In other words, when the power of appointing new trustees contained in the instrument, or provided by statute, cannot be exercised. They also empower the court, where property is held upon trust or mortgage by a lunatic or person of unsound mind, or out of the jurisdiction of the court, to transfer it by a vesting order (q. v.) to some other person, or to make an order appointing some person to execute a deed in the place of a trustee or mortgagee, so as to give it the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had executed it. Lewin, Trusts; Shelf. R. P. St. 647; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 1798; Pope, Lun. 263. See "Petition."

TRUSTEE DE SON TORT. Sometimes called constructive trustee. One who without authority undertakes to execute a trust, or assumes the management of trust property, or otherwise intermeddling with the trust affairs. Such persons are subject to the same rules and the same liability as other trustees. 182 Ill. 96.

TRUSTEE EX MALEFICIO. One who, by reason of his own wrong or fraud in acquiring property, is regarded as holding it as a trustee for the purpose of rectifying the wrong.

TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY. A trustee in bankruptcy is a person in whom the property of a bankrupt is vested in trust for the creditors, not for the bankrupt. 10 Ch. Div. 388, 434. His duty is to discover, realize, and distribute it among the creditors, and for that purpose to examine the bankrupt's property, accounts, etc., to investigate proofs made by creditors, and to admit, reject, expunge, or reduce them, according to circumstances. He also has to keep various accounts of his dealings with the property, and of the course of the bankruptcy, which are audited by the committee of inspection and the comptroller in bankruptcy. Robson, 488.

TRUSTEE PROCESS. In practice. A means of reaching goods, property, and creditors of a debtor in the hands of third persons, for the benefit of an attaching creditor.

It is a process, so called, in the New England states, and similar to the garnishee process of others. It is a process given by statute 15 of the statutes of Massachusetts. All goods, effects, and credits so intrusted or deposited in the hands of others that the same cannot be attached by ordinary process of law may by an original writ of process, the form of which is given by the statute, be attached in whose hands or possession soever they may be found, and they shall, from the service of the writ, stand bound and be held to satisfy such judgment as the plaintiff may recover against the principal defendant. Cushing, Trustee Process 2.

The trustees, on suing out and service of the process, according to statute, and its entry in court, may come into court and be examined on oath as to property of the principal in their hands. If the plaintiff recovers against the principal, and there are any trustees who have not discharged themselves under oath, he shall have execution against them. Cushing, Trustee Process, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. (8th Ed.) 497, note.

TRUSTEE RELIEF ACTS. In England, if a person has in his hands a sum of money subject to a trust, and he does not know who is beneficially entitled to it, he may, instead of incurring the responsibility of paying it to the wrong person, or of instituting an action for the execution of the trust, pay it into court under the trustee relief acts (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74).

TRUSTOR. A word occasionally, though rarely, used as a designation of the creator, donor, or founder of a trust.

TRY. To examine by judicial modes in order to determine.

TUAS RES TIBI HABETO (Lat.) Have or take your things to yourself. The form of words by which, according to the old Roman law, a man divorced his wife. Dig. 24. 2. 21. Otherwise expressed, "Tuas res tibi agito."

TUB MAN. In English law. A barrister who has a preaudience in the exchequer, and also one who has a particular place in court, is so called.

TUCHAS. In Spanish law. Objections or exceptions to witnesses. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 7, c. 10.

TUERTO. In Spanish law. Tort. Las Partidas, pt. 7, tit. 6, lib. 5.

TUICION. Law Fr. (from Lat. tuitio). Protection.

TUITISCUS. (L. Lat.) In old European law. Of the people, or native population; the language of a country. Tuitiscè; in the vernacular. Spelman.

TUMBREL. An instrument of punishment made use of by the Saxons, chiefly for the correction of scolding women by ducking them in water, consisting of a stool or chair fixed to the end of a long pole.

TUMULTUOUS PETITIONING. By St. 13 Car. II. st. 1, c. 5, signing of more than twenty names to any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for the alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the contents thereof had been approved by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at assizes or quarter sessions, or the delivery of a petition by more than ten persons. 4 Steph. Comm. 255.

TUN. A measure of wine or oil, containing four hogsheads.

TUNGREVE (Saxon tungaraeva, i. e., villae praepositus). A reeve or bailiff. Spelman; Cowell.

One who in estates, which we call "manors," sustains the character of master, and in his stead disposes and arranges everything. Qui in villis (quae dicimus maneriis) domini personam sustinet, ejusque vice omnia disponit atque moderatur.

TURBA (Lat.) In the civil law. A multitude; a crowd or mob; a tumultuous assembly of persons. Said to consist of ten or fifteen at the least. Dig. 47. 8. 4. 2. 3.; Calv. Lex.

TURBARY. In English law. A right to dig turf; an easement.

TURN, or TOURN. The great court leet of the county, as the old county court was the court baron. Of this the sheriff is judge, and the court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the "sheriff's tourn," and it had its name originally from the sheriff making a turn or circuit about his shire, and holding this court in each respective hundred. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10.

TURNKEY. A person under the superintendence of a jailer, whose employment is to open and fasten the prison doors, and to prevent the prisoners from escaping.

It is his duty to use due diligence; and he may be punished for gross neglect or willful misconduct in permitting prisoners to escape.

TURNPIKE. A gate set across a road, to stop travelers and carriages until toll is paid for passage thereon. In the United States, turnpike roads are often called "turnpikes," just as mail coach, hackney coach, stage coach, are shortened to mail, hack, and stage. Enc. Am.

TURNPIKE ROAD. A road or highway over which the public have the right to travel upon payment of toll, and on which the parties entitled to such toll have the right to erect gates and bars to insure its payment. 6 Mees. & W. 428; 1 Ry. Cas. 665; 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 113; 16 Pick. (Mass.) 175; 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 492.

TURPIS CAUSA (Lat.) A base or vile consideration, forbidden by law, which makes the contract void; as, a contract the consideration of which is the future illegal cohabitation of the obligee with the obligor.

TURPIS EST PARS QUAE NON CONVENIT cum suo toto. That part is bad which accords not with its whole. Plowd. 161.

TURPITUDE (Lat. turpitude, from turpis, base). Everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals is said to be done with turpitude.

TURPITUDO (Lat.) Turpitude.

TURRIS. (Lat.) In old English law. A tower; the tower; the Tower of London. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 11, §§ 6, 7.

TUT (L. Fr.) All; a corruption of tout.

TUTA EST CUSTODIA QUAE SIBI MET creditur. That guardianship is secure which trusts to itself alone. Hob. 340.

TUTELA (Lat.) A power given by the civil law over a free person to defend him, when, by reason of his age, he is unable to defend himself. Women, by the civil law, could only be tutors of their own children. A child under the power of his father was not subject to tutelage, because not a free person, caput liberum. D. lib. 26, tit. 1, ff. de tutelis; Inst. lib. 1, tit. 13, de tutelis; Inst. lib. 3, tit. 28, de obligationibus quae ex quasi cont. nascuntur. Nov. 72, 94. 155. 118.

Tutela legitima was where the tutor was appointed by the magistrate. Leg. 1, D. ff. de leg. tut.

Tutela testamentaria was where the tutor was appointed by will. D. lib. 26, tit. 2, ff. de testament. tut.; C. lib. 5, tit. 28, de testament. tut.; Inst. lib. 1, tit. 14, qui testamento tutores dari possunt.

TUTELA LEGITIMA (Lat.) In the civil law. Legal tutelage; tutelage created by act of law, as where none had been created by testament. Inst. 1. 15. pr.

TUTELA TESTAMENTARIA (Lat.) In the civil law. Testamentary tutelage or guardianship; that kind of tutelage which was created by will. Calv. Lex.

TUTELAE ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An action of tutelage; an action which lay for a ward or pupil, on the termination of tutelage, against the tutor or guardian, to compel an account. Calv. Lex.

TUTELAGE. Guardianship; state of being under a guardian.

TUTELAM REDDERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To render an account of tutelage. Calv. Lex. Tutelam repossere, to demand an account of tutelage.

TUTEUR OFFICIEUX. In French law, a person over fifty years of age may be appointed a tutor of this sort to a child over fifteen years of age, with the consent of the parents of such child, or (in their default) the conseil de famille. The duties which such a tutor becomes subject to are analogous to those in English law of a person who puts himself in loco parentis to any one. Brown. See "In Loco Parentis."

TUTEUR SUBROGE. In French law, in the case of an infant under guardianship, a second guardian is appointed to him, the duties of the latter (who is called the "subroge tuteur") only arising where the interests of the infant and his principal guardian are in conflict. Code Nap. 420, Brown.

TUTIUS ERRATUR EX PARTE MITIORI. It is safer to err on the side of mercy. 3 Inst. 220.

TUTIUS SEMPER EST ERRARE ACQUIETANDO, quam in puniendo; ex parte misericordia quam ex parte justitia. It is always safer to err in acquitting than punishing; on the side of mercy than on the side of justice. Branch, Princ.; 2 Hale, P. C. 290.

TUTOR. In civil law. One who has been lawfully appointed to the care of the person and property of a minor.

By the laws of Louisiana, minors under the age of fourteen years, if males, and under the age of twelve years, if females, are, both as to their persons and their estates, placed under the authority of a tutor. Civ. Code La. art. 263. Above that age, and until their majority or emancipation, they are placed under the authority of a curator. Id.

TUTOR ALIENUS (Lat.) In English law. The name given to a stranger who enters into the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen and takes the profits.

He may be called to an account by the infant, and be charged as guardian in socage. Litt. § 124; Co. Litt. 89b, 90a; Harg. Law Tr. note 1.

TUTOR PROPRIUS (Lat.) The name given to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

TUTORSHIP. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. Tutorship differs from curatorship.

TUTRIX (Lat.) A woman who is appointed to the office of a tutor.

TUZ (L. F.) All; a corruption of touts.

TWA NIGHT GEST (Sax.) On the second night, a guest. Spelman. See "Guest."

TWELFHINDI. The highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1,200s. If any injury were done to such persons, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth. Cowell.

TWELVE-DAY WRIT. A writ issued under St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes, abolished by rule of court in 1880. Wharton.

TWELVEMONTH. In the singular, includes the whole year, but in the plural twelve months of twenty-eight days each. 6 Coke, 62; 2 Bl. Comm. 140, note.

TWELVE TABLES. Laws of ancient Rome, composed in part from those of Solon and other Greek legislators, and in part from the unwritten laws and customs of the Romans.

These laws first appeared in the year of Rome 303, inscribed on ten plates of brass. The following year two others were added, and the entire code bore the name of the "Laws of the Twelve Tables." The principles they contained were the germ of all the Roman law, the original source of the jurisprudence of the greatest part of Europe.

See a fragment of the Law of the Twelve Tables in Cooper, Just. 656; Gibb. Hist. Rom. Emp. c. 44; Code, § 27.

TWICE IN JEOPARDY. See "Jeopardy."

TWYHINDI. The lower order of Saxons, valued at 200s. in the scale of pecuniary mulcts inflicted for crimes. Cowell.

TYBURN TICKET. In English law. A certificate given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction.

By 10 & 11 Wm. III. c. 23, the original proprietor or first assignee of such certificate is exempted from all and all manner of parish and ward offices within the parish or ward where the felony shall have been committed. Bac. Abr. "Constable" (C).

TYHTLAN (Saxon). In Saxon law. An accusation, impeachment, or charge of any offense. Nex componat aliquis pro ulla tyhtlan, si non intersit testimonium praepositi regis, nor shall any one compound for any accusation, unless there be present evidence on behalf of the king. LL. Ethelr. c. 2; Cowell.

TYLWITH (Brit. from tyle, the site of a house, or tylath, a beam in a building). A tribe or family branching or issuing out of another. Cowell.

U

U. R. Ut rogas, as you desire. In Roman law, a vote in favor of a proposed law or a candidate. See "Rogare."

UBERRIMA FIDES (Lat. most perfect good faith). A phrase used to express the perfect good faith, concealing nothing, with which a contract must be made; for example, in the case of insurance, the insured must observe the most perfect good faith towards the insurer. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 317; 3 Kent, Comm. (4th Ed.) 288.

UBI ALIQUID CONCEDITUR, CONCEDITUR ET ID SINE QUO RES IPSA ESSE NON POTEST. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing granted cannot exist. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 429; 13 Mees. & W. 706.

UBI ALIQUID IMPEDITUR PROPTER UNUM, EO REMOTO, TOLLITUR IMPEDIMENTUM. When anything is impeded by one single cause, if that be removed, the impediment is removed. 5 Coke, 77a.

UBI CESSAT REMEDIUM ORDINARIUM IBI DECURRITUR AD EXTRAORDINARIUM. When a common remedy ceases to be of service, recourse must be had to an extraordinary one. 4 Coke, 93.

UBI CULPA EST, IBI POENA SUBESSE DEBET. Where the crime is committed, there the punishment should be inflicted. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 325.

UBI DAMNA DANTUR, VICTUS VICTORI IN EXPENSIS CONDEMNARI DEBET. Where damages are given, the losing party should be adjudged to pay the costs of the victor. 2 Inst. 289; 3 Bl. Comm. 399.

UBI ET DANTIS ET ACCIPIENTIS TURPITUDO VERSATUR, NON POSSE REPETI DICIMUS; QUOTIENS AUTEM ACCIPIENTIS TURPITUDO VERSATUR, REPETI POSSE. Where there is turpitude on the part of both giver and receiver, we say it cannot be recovered back, but as often as the turpitude is on the side of the receiver alone, it can be recovered back. 17 Mass. 562.

UBI FACTUM NULLUM, IBI FORTIA NULLA. Where there is no act, there can be no force. 4 Coke, 43.

UBI JUS, IBI REMEDIUM. Where there is a right, there is a remedy. 1 Term R. 512; Co. Litt. 197b; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2411; 4 Bouv. Inst. 3726.

UBI JUS INCERTUM, IBI JUS NULLUM. Where the law is uncertain, there is no law.

UBI LEX ALIQUEM COGIT OSTENDERE CAUSAM, NECESSE EST QUOD CAUSA SIT JUSTA ET LEGITIMA. Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and legal. 2 Inst. 269.

UBI LEX EST SPECIALIS, ET RATIO EJUS GENERALIS, GENERALITER ACCIPIENDA EST. Where the law is special, and the reason of it is general, it ought to be taken as being general. 2 Inst. 43.

UBI LEX NON DISTINGUIT, NEC NOS DISTINGUERE DEBEMUS. Where the law does not distinguish, we ought not to distinguish. 7 Coke, 5.

UBI MAJOR PARS EST, IBI TOTUM. Where is the greater part, there is the whole. F. Moore, 578.

UBI MATRIMONIUM, IBI DOS. Where there is marriage, there is dower. Bracton, 92.

UBI NON ADEST NORMA LEGIS, OMNIA QUASI PRO SUSPECTIS HABENDA SUNT. When the law fails to serve as a rule, almost everything ought to be suspected. Bac. Aph. 25.

UBI NON EST ANNUA RENOVATIO, IBI DECIMAE NON DEBENT SOLVI. Where there is no annual renovation, there tithes ought not to be paid.

UBI NON EST CONDENDI AUCTORITAS, IBI NON EST PARENDI NECESSITAS. Where there is no authority to establish, there is no necessity to obey. Dav. 69.

UBI NON EST DIRECTA LEX, STANDUM EST ARBITRIO JUDICIS, VEL PROCEDENDUM AD SIMILIA. Where there is no direct law, the judgment of the judge must be depended upon, or reference made to similar cases.

UBI NON EST LEX, IBI NON EST TRANSGRESSIO QUOAD MUNDUM. Where there is no law, there is no transgression, as it regards the world. 4 Coke, 1b.

UBI NON EST MANIFESTA INJUSTITIA, JUDICES HABENTUR PRO BONIS VIRIS, ET JUDICATUM PRO VERITATE. Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth. 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 341, 345.

UBI NON EST PRINCIPALIS, NON POTEST ESSE ACCESSORIUS. Where there is no principal, there can be no accessory. 4 Coke, 43.

UBI NULLA EST CONJECTURA QUAE DUCAT ALLO, VERBA INTELLIGENDA SUNT EX PROPRIETATE NON GRAMMATICA SED POPULARI EX USU. Where there is no inference which would lead in any other direction, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, nongrammatical, but according to popular usage. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 16, § 2.

UBI NULLUM MATRIMONIUM, IBI NULLUM DOS. Where there is no marriage there is no dowry. Co. Litt. 32a.

UBI PERICULUM, IBI ET LUCRUM COLLOCATUR. He at whose risk a thing is, should receive the profits arising from it.

UBI PUGNANTIA INTER SE IN TESTAMENTO JUBERENTUR, NEUTRUM RATUM EST. When two directions conflicting with each other are given in a will, neither is held valid. Dig. 50. 17. 188, pr.

UBI QUID GENERALITER CONCEDITUR, IN EST HAEC EXCEPTIO, SI NON ALIQUID SIT CONTRA JUS FASQUE. Where a thing is conceded generally, this exception arises, that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right. 10 Coke, 78.

UBI QUIS DELINQUIT IBI PUNIETUR. Let a man be punished where he commits the offense. 6 Coke, 47.

UBI REVERA (Lat.) Where in reality; where in truth, or in point of fact. Cro. Eliz. 645; Cro. Jac. 4.

UBI VERBA CONJUNCTA NON SUNT, SUFFICIT ALIQUID ESSE FACTUM. Where words are used disjunctively, it is sufficient that either one of the things enumerated be performed. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 3.

UBICUNQUE EST INJURIA, IBI DAMNUM SEQUITUR. Wherever there is a wrong, there damage follows. 10 Coke, 116.

UBICUNQUE FUERIMUS IN ANGLIA (Law Lat.) Wheresoever we shall be in England). The style of the return of writs in the court of king's or queen's bench; it being in theory a movable court, attendant upon the sovereign's person. 3 Bl. Comm. 41, 284. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 5; Id. lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

UDAL. A term mentioned by Blackstone, as used in Finland to denote that kind of right in real property which is called in English law "allodial." 2 Bl. Comm. 45, note (f). The term is used in Orkney and Zetland. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, pp. 6, 82.

UKAAS, or UKASE. The name of a law or ordinance emanating from the czar of Russia.

ULLAGE. In commercial law. The amount wanting when a cask, on being gauged, is found only partly full.

ULNA FERREA. The standard ell of iron, which was kept in the exchequer for the rule of measure. Mon. Angl. ii. 383.

ULNAGE. Alnage; a duty for measuring cloth.

ULTERIOR CONCILIUM. (L. Lat.) Further argument. A common term in the older reports. 1 Burr. 1020; 2 Wils. 243.

ULTIMA RATIO. The last resort.

ULTIMA VOLUNTAS (Lat.) In old English law. Last will; the last will. In testamento suo, in ultima voluntate sua, in his testament, in his last will. Reg. Orig. 244b.

ULTIMA VOLUNTAS TESTATORIS EST PERIMPLENDA SECUNDUM VERAM INTENTIONEM SUAM. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Co. Litt. 322; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 505.

ULTIMATE FACTS. The main or primary facts in an issue. The logical results of the proofs. 175 Ill. 482. The facts which prove the ultimate facts are evidentiary facts or probative facts. The ultimate facts are to be pleaded, while the others are not, being "evidence."

ULTIMATUM (Lat.) The last proposition made in making a contract, a treaty, and the like; as, the government of the United States has given its ultimatum,—has made the last proposition it will make to complete the proposed treaty. The word also means the result of a negotiation, and it comprises the final determination of the parties concerned in the object in dispute.

ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM (Lat.) The last or extreme punishment; the penalty of death.

ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM ESSE MORTEM SOLAM INTERPRETAMUR. The extremest punishment we consider to be death alone. Dig. 48. 19. 21.

ULTIMUM TEMPUS PARIENDI (Lat.) The extreme period of bearing; the extreme period between the conception and the birth of a child. 2 Steph. Comm. 317.

ULTIMUS HAERES (Lat.) The last or remote heir; the lord. So called in contradistinction to the haeres proximus and the haeres remotior. Dair. Feud. Prop. 110.

ULTRA. In Latin phrases. Beyond; outside of.

ULTRA MARE (Lat. beyond sea.) One of the old essoins or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process. Bracton, fol. 338.

ULTRA POSSE NON POTEST ESSE, ET VICE VERSA. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse, what cannot exist is not possible. Wingate, Max. 100.

ULTRA REPRISES. After deductions.

ULTRA VIRES (Lat.) The modern technical designation, in the law of corporations, of acts beyond the scope of their powers, as defined by their charters or acts of incorporation; as distinguished from acts which are authorized.

It was early contended that a corporation could not exceed its powers; that the acts of its agents beyond the charter powers of the corporation were not the acts of the corporation; but it is now well settled that "corporations, like natural persons, have power and capacity to do wrong. They may, in their dealings and contracts, break over the liability imposed upon them by their charters, and when they do so, their exemption from liability cannot be claimed on the mere ground that they have no attributes or faculties which render it possible for them to thus act." 119 Ind. 324. The act need not necessarily be expressly prohibited by the charter or by statute. Nor need it be in any sense immoral or injurious to others. It may be an act which could be lawfully done by a natural person. It may be even praiseworthy, as in the case of a gift by a corporation for charitable or religious purpose. Yet, if it is not authorized by the charter of the corporation, or is not an implied or incidental power, it is ultra vires. 3 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations, 2571.

There is much conflict in the cases as to the validity of an ultra vires contract. In some states, it is held that, if the corporation had no authority to make the contract, it is void, but if it was within the general scope of the corporate power, and the want of power in that case was because of particular facts, it is valid (43 Wis. 420; 8 Ohio 257); while in several states it is held that "the plea of ultra vires should not prevail, whether it is imposed for or against the corporation, when it would not advance justice, but, on the contrary, would accomplish a legal wrong (63 N. Y. 62; 151 Ill. 531).

ULTRONEUS WITNESS. In Scotch law. A witness who offers his testimony without being regularly cited. The objection only goes to his credibility, and may be removed by a citation at any time before the witness is sworn. See Bell, Dict. "Evidence."

UMBILICUS. (Lat.) Literally, the navel; the center of any thing. The name given to the fourth and middle part of the Digests, consisting of eight books, from the twentieth to the twenty-seventh, both inclusive.

UMPIRAGE. The decision of an umpire. This word is used for the judgment of an umpire, as the word "award" is employed to designate that of arbitrators.

UMPIRE. A person selected by arbitrators who cannot agree as to the subject matter referred to them for the purpose of deciding the matter in dispute.

His province is to determine the issue submitted to the arbitrators on which they have failed to agree and to make an award thereon, which is his sole award. Neither of the original arbitrators is required to join in the award in order to make it valid and binding on the parties. In the absence of any agreement or assent by the parties to the controversy, dispensing with a full hearing by the umpire, it is his duty to hear the whole case, and to make a distinct award thereon as the result of his judgment. He stands, in fact, in the same situation as a sole arbitrator, and he is bound to hear and determine the case in like manner as if it had been originally submitted to his determination. 75 Ill. 30.

Sometimes the term is applied to a single arbitrator selected by the parties themselves. Kyd, Awards, 6, 75, 77; Caldwell, Abr. 38; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Viner, Abr. 93; Comyn, Dig. "Arbitrament" (F); 4 Dall. (U. S.) 271, 432; 4 Scott, N. S. 378; Bouv. Inst. Index.

UN NE DOIT PRISE AVANTAGE DE son tort demeane. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong. 2 And. 38. 40.

UNA CUM OMNIBUS ALIIS (Lat. together with all other things). A phrase in old conveyancing. Hob. 175.

UNA PERSONA VIX POTEST SUP- plere vices duarum. One person can scarcely supply the place of two. 4 Coke, 118.

UNA VOCE (Lat.) With one voice; un- animously.

UNALIENABLE. In capable of being sold. Things which are not in commerce, as public roads, are in their nature unalienable. Some things are unalienable in consequence of particular provisions in the law forbidding their sale or transfer; as, pensions granted by the government. The natural rights of life and liberty are unalienable.

UNANIMITY (Lat. unus, one, animus, mind). The agreement of all the persons concerned in a thing, in design and opinion.

Generally, a simple majority of any number of persons is sufficient to do such acts as the whole number can do,—for example, a majority of the legislature can pass a law; but there are some cases in which unanimity is required,—for example, a traverse jury composed of twelve individuals cannot decide an issue submitted to them unless they are unanimous.

UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT. An unavoidable accident is necessarily one occurring not because of negligence. 243 Ill. 460.

UNCEASESATH. An oath by relations not to avenge a relation's death. Blount.

UNCERTAINTY. Vagueness or obscurity of language in written instruments.

UNCIA. The twelfth part of the Roman as. Dess. Dict. du Dig. "As." The as was used to express an integral sum; hence uncia for one-twelfth of anything, commonly one-twelfth of a pound, i. e., an ounce. Id.; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note (m).

UNCIA TERRAE (Lat.) This phrase often occurs in charters of the British kings, and denotes some quantity of land. It was twelve modii, each modius possibly one hundred feet square. Mon. Angl. tom. 3, pp. 198, 205.

UNCIARIUS HAERES. In the Roman law, an heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance. Calv. Lex.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS. In English bankruptcy practice, dividends remaining unclaimed for five years are forfeited to the government (Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 116), but may, upon satisfactory proof of right thereto, be paid over to the creditors entitled (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 32). And in chancery, the lord chancellor may, under St. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 98, § 3, order dividends unclaimed for fifteen years to be carried to "the suitors' unclaimed dividend account;" and these, under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 91, are transferred to the public on their indemnity. Dividends not being claimed for ten years on stock in the Bank of England, the stock is forthwith transferred to the government on the like indemnity. Brown.

UNCONSCIONABLE BARGAIN. A contract which no man in his senses, not under delusion, would make, on the one hand, and which no fair and honest man would accept, on the other. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3848.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL. That which is contrary to the constitution.

UNCORE PRIST (Law Fr. still ready). In pleading. A plea or replication that the party pleading is still ready to do what is required. Used in connection with the words tout temps prist, the whole denotes that the party always has been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bl. Comm. 303.

UNCUTH. In Saxon law. Unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. Bracton, fol. 124b.

UNDE COGNATI (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to cognates, or relations on the part of the mother. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 724; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDE LEGITIMI (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to agnates, or the lawful heirs. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 723; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDE LIBERI (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to emancipated children, or the proper heirs of the deceased. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 722; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5; Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 6.

UNDE NIHIL HABET. See "Dower."

UNDE VI (Lat. wherefrom by force). In the civil law. The technical name of that species of interdict which was granted to recover the possession of an immovable thing wherefrom a person had been ejected by force. Inst. 4. 15. 6; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 15, § 1303; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 250, § 253.

UNDE VIR ET UXOR (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to a husband or wife, and by which they succeeded each other, on failure of the cognati. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 11; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 725; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDEFENDED. In pleading. Without defense or denial. Where judgment passes by default against a defendant, the language in which the default is recorded is that the defendant "says nothing in bar or preclusion of the action, whereby the plaintiff remains therein undefended against the said defendant." Archb. Forms, 336.

UNDER-CHAMBERLAINS OF THE EXCHEQUER. Two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies, and read the same, that the clerk of the pell and comptrollers thereof might see their entries were true. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domesday Book. Abolished.

UNDER LEASE. An alienation by a tenant of a part of his lease, reserving to himself a reversion. It differs from an "assignment," which is a transfer of all the tenant's interest in the lease. 3 Wils. 234; W. Bl. 766. And even a conveyance of the whole estate by the lessee, reserving to himself the rent, with a power of re-entry for nonpayment, was held to be not an assignment, but an under lease. Strange, 405. In Ohio it has been decided that the transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term, is an under lease. 2 Ohio, 216. In Kentucky, such a transfer, on the contrary, is considered as an assignment. 4 Bibb (Ky.) 538. See "Lease."

UNDER SHERIFF. In English law. A person appointed by the sheriff of a county to perform all his ordinary duties in his behalf. Sometimes confounded with a deputy sheriff, but the latter term is properly applicable to those whom the sheriff appoints to execute process in his behalf, and who have no other powers than such as appertain to that particular duty. 1 Bl. Comm. 345, note.

UNDERTAKING. In the primary sense of the word, an undertaking is a promise.

In the old books, "undertaker" means a promisor. 1 Salk. 27.

"Undertaking" is frequently used in the special sense of a promise given in the course of legal proceedings by a party or his counsel, generally as a condition to obtaining some concession from the court or the opposite party.

UNDER TENANT. One who holds by virtue of an underlease.

UNDER TUTOR. In Louisiana. In every tutorship there shall be an under tutor, whom it shall be the duty of the judge to appoint at the time letters of tutorship are certified for the tutor.

It is the duty of the under tutor to act for the minor whenever the interest of the minor is in opposition to the interest of the tutor. Civ. Code La. arts. 300, 301; 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 462; 9 Mart. (La.) 643; 11 La. 189; Poth. des Personnes, partie prem. tit. 6, § 5, art. 2. See "Procurator;" "Protutor."

UNDERTOOK. Assumed; promised. This is a technical word, which ought to be inserted in every declaration of assumpsit charging that the defendant undertook to perform the promise which is the foundation of the suit; and this, though the promise be founded on a legal liability, or would be implied in evidence. Bac. Abr. "Assumpsit" (F); 1 Chit. Pl. 88, note (p).

UNDERWRITER. In insurance. The party who agrees to insure another on life or property, in a policy of insurance. He is also called the "insurer."

UNDERWRITING. As applied to corporate stock, an underwriting agreement is an agreement made before such stock is offered to the public whereby the signer, or "underwriter" agrees for a certain compensation to take a stipulated number of shares of stock, or a portion thereof, if the public does not subscribe for or take all of such stock. The same definition applies to the underwriting of corporate bonds, and it is an agreement by the subscribers, based on a consideration, to insure the sale of the bonds subscribed at a stipulated price, and, if they are not sold to others, that the subscribers will purchase and pay for them at the price fixed therein. It has been held that an underwriting in this sense is a purchase together with a guaranty of a sale of the bonds. Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 950.

UNDIQUE. (Lat.) On all sides; from every quarter. 1 Curtis R. 350.

UNDIVIDED. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal.

Tenants in common, joint tenants, and partners hold an undivided right in their respective properties until partition has been made. The rights of each owner of an undivided thing extend over the whole and every part of it, totum in toto, et totum in qualibet parte. See "Per My et Per Tout."

UNDRES (Saxon). In old English law. Minors or persons under age.

UNDUE INFLUENCE. Any improper constraint, machination or urgency of persuasion whereby the will of a person is overpowered, and he is induced to act otherwise than he would have done. It has been said to imply more subtle influence than "duress" (see Story, Eq. Jur. § 239), but has been held to include threats and violence, in which use it is synonymous with "duress" (33 N. J. Eq. 494). As used in respect to wills, it includes duress.

UNEQUIVOCALLY. Without doubt; without room to doubt. 83 Ill. 89; 2 Ill. App. 51.

UNFAIR COMPETITION. Unfair competition consists in conducting a trade or business in such a manner that there is an express or implied representation that the goods or business of one man are the goods or business of another. 167 Iowa 202.

UNG. Law Fr. One; an old form of un. Kelham.

UNGELD. In Saxon law. An outlaw; a person whose murder required no composition to be made, or weregeld to be paid, by his slayer.

UNIARE. (L. Lat.) To unite; to make one; to join in a body.

UNICA TAXATIO (Lat.) In practice. The ancient language of a special award of venire, where of several defendants one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury who are to try and assess damages on the issue are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default. Lee.

UNIFORM. Conforming to one rule, mode, or unvarying standard; agreeing with each other; substantially one and the same; not different at different times or places; applicable to all places or divisions of a country. A law is uniform when all persons brought within the relation and circumstances provided for are affected alike; when it has uniform operation upon all within the class upon which it purports to operate. 266 Ill. 387.

UNIFORMITY, ACT OF. St. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, which regulates the terms of membership in the Church of England and the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. See St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59. The act of uniformity has been amended by St. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35, which inter alia provides a shortened form of morning and evening prayer. Wharton.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCESS. In English law. An act providing for uniformity of process in personal actions in his majesty's courts of law at Westminster. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39 (23d May, 1832); 3 Chit. St. 494.

UNIFORMITY OF TAXATION. Equality in the burden of taxation, 373 Ill. 247; taxation which acts alike on all persons similarly situated. 139 Wis. 544, 557; 121 N. W. 347. See "Uniform."

UNILATERAL CONTRACT. A contract lacking in mutuality of obligation.

—In the Civil Law. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called "unilateral," even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. Civ. Code La. art. 1758; Code Nap. 1103. A loan of money and a loan for use are of this kind. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 2; Lec. Elm. § 781.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. That which cannot be understood.

When a law, a contract, or will is unintelligible, it has no effect whatever.

UNIO (Lat.) In canon law. A consolidation of two churches into one. Cowell.

UNIO PROLIUM (Lat.) union of offspring). A species of adoption used among the Germans, which takes place when a widower having children marries a widow who also has children. These parents then agree that the children of both marriages shall have the rights to their succession, as those which may be the fruits of their marriage. Lec. Elm. § 187.

UNION.

—In the English Poor Law. Two or more parishes which have been consolidated for the better administration of the poor law therein.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. Two or more benefices which have been united into one benefice. Such a union may be made under St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, passed "to abridge the holding of benefices in plurality," and amended by St. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98; and under St. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142, passed "to make better provision for the union of contiguous benefices in cities, towns and boroughs" (in substitution for St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127), amended by St. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 90.

UNITAS PERSONARUM. The unity of persons, as that between husband and wife, or ancestor and heir.

UNITED STATES COURT COMMISSIONERS. Officers, more properly "Commissioners of the Circuit Courts of the United States," authorized by Rev. St. U. S. § 627, to be appointed by the circuit court in each district to exercise such powers as may be expressly conferred on them by statute. They have the powers of committing magistrates in respect to federal offenses (Rev. St. § 1014), and other quasi judicial powers.

UNITY. In the law of estates. The agreement or coincidence of certain qualities in the title of a joint estate or an estate in common. It is the peculiar characteristic of an estate in joint tenancy and is four-fold, unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. In other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 180.

UNITY OF INTEREST. One of the properties of a joint estate; all the joint tenants being entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in the lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

UNITY OF POSSESSION. This term is used to designate the possession by one person of several estates or rights. For example, a right to an estate to which an easement is attached, or the dominant estate, and to an estate which an easement incumbers, or the servient estate may become the property of one person, in which case the easement is extinguished. 3 Mason (U. S.) 172; Poph. 166; Latch, 153. And see Cro. Jac. 121. But a distinction has been made between a thing that has being by prescription, and one that has its being ex jure naturae. In the former case, unity of possession will extinguish the easement; in the latter,—for example, the case of a water-course,—the unity will not extinguish it. Poth. Contr. 166.

By the Civil Code of Louisiana (article 801), every servitude is extinguished when the estate to which it is due and the estate owing it are united in the same hands. But it is necessary that the whole of the two estates should belong to the same proprietor; for if the owner of one estate only acquires the other in part or in common with another person, confusion does not take effect. See "Merger."

UNITY OF SEISIN. The condition which exists where a person seised of land which is subject to an easement, profit a prendre, or similar right, also becomes seised of the land to which the easement or other right is annexed. The term is usually applied to cases where the seisin is that of a tenant in fee simple, and is equally high or predurable in both pieces of land, so that the easement or other right is extinguished by the unity of seisin.

UNITY OF TIME. One of the essential properties of a joint estate; the estates of the tenants being vested at one and the same period. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

UNITY OF TITLE. One of the essentials of a joint estate; the estate of all the tenants being created by one and the same act.

UNIUS OMNINO TESTIS RESPONSIO non audiat. Let not the evidence of one witness be heard at all. Code, 4. 20. 9; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

UNIUSCUIUSQUE CONTRACTUS INITIUM spectandum est, et causa. The beginning and cause of every contract must be considered. Dig. 17. 1. 8; Story, Bailm. § 56.

UNIVERSAL AGENT. One who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the rarest occurrence. Story, Ag. 18.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY. In civil law. A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease. Civ. Code La. art. 1599; Civ. Code art. 1003; Poth. Donations Testamentaires, c. 2, sec. 1, § 1.

UNIVERSAL PARTNERSHIP. The name of a species of partnership by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire. Poth. du Contr. de Societe, note 29.

UNIVERSAL REPRESENTATION. In Scotch law. The heir universally represents his ancestor, i. e., is responsible for his debts. Originally, this responsibility extended only to the amount of the property to which he succeeded; but afterwards certain acts on part of the heir were held sufficient to make him liable for all the debts of the ancestor. Bell, Dict. "Passive Titles."

UNIVERSALIA SUNT NOTIORA SINGULARIBUS. Things universal are better known than things particular. 2 Rolle, 294; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 294.

UNIVERSATIS (Lat.) In the civil law. A corporation aggregate. Dig. 3. 4. 7. Literally, a whole formed out of many individuals. 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

UNIVERSITAS FACTI (Lat.) In the civil law. A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e. g., a herd of cattle, a stock of goods. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149; Inst. 2. 20. 18.

UNIVERSITAS JURIS (Lat.) In civil law. A quantity of things of various kinds, corporeal and incorporeal, taken together as a whole, e. g., an estate. It is used in contradistinction to universitas facti, which is a whole made up of corporeal units. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 149.

UNIVERSITAS RERUM (Lat.) In civil law. Several things not mechanically united, but which, taken together, in some legal respects are regarded as one whole. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 149.

UNIVERSITAS VEL CORPORATIO NON dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat. A university or corporation is not said to do anything unless it be deliberated upon collegially, although the majority should do it. Dav. 48.

UNIVERSITY. The name given to certain societies or corporations which are seminaries of learning where youth are sent to finish their education. Among the civilians, by this term is understood a corporation.

UNIVERSITY COURT. See "Chancellors' Courts in the Two Universities."

UNIVERSUS (Lat.) The whole; all together. Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. The whole; all Universitatem vestram scire volumus, we will that all of you know. Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

UNJUST. That which is done against the perfect rights of another; that which is against the established law; that which is opposed to a law which is the test of right and wrong. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 5; Aust. Jur. 276, note; Lec. Elm. § 1080.

UNKOUTH. Unknown. The law French form of the Saxon "uncouth," or "uncuth." Britt. c. 12.

UNLAGE (Saxon, from un, without, and lag, law). An unjust law. LL. Hen. I. c. 34, 84; Cowell.

UNLARICH. In old Scotch law. That which is done without law or against law. Spelman.

UNLAW. In Scotch law. A witness was formerly inadmissible who was not worth the king's unlaw, i. e., the sum of £10 Scots, then the common fine for absence from court and for small delinquencies. Bell, Dict.

UNLAWFUL. That to which the law is opposed. It is not strictly synonymous with "illegal," though so used quite often. "Illegal" means positively forbidden, while "unlawful" may include things which are immoral, or against public policy. Sweet.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY. In criminal law. A disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in the execution of some unlawful enterprise of a private nature, with force and violence. If they move forward towards its execution, it is then a rout; and if they actually execute their design, it amounts to a riot. 4 Bl. Comm. 140; 1 Russ. Crimes, 254; Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 9; Comyn, Dig. "Forcible Entry" (D 10); Viner, Abr. "Riots, etc." (A).

UNLAWFULLY. In pleading. This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offense. It is necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offense which it creates, uses the word (1 Moody, Cr. Cas. 389); but it is unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and is manifestly illegal (1 Chit. Crim Law, *241; Hawk. bk. 2, c. 25, § 96; 2 Rolle, Abr. 82; Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); 1 Ill. 199; 2 Ill. 120.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Such damages as are unascertained; as those arising out of torts, as well as those following breaches of contract, where the amount of damages has not, by agreement, been determined. 95 Ill. App. 101; 176 Ill. App. 523; 208 Ill. App. 187. In general, such damages cannot be set off. No interest will be allowed on unliquidated damages. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1108.

UNLIQUIDATED DEBT. A debt which one of the parties cannot alone render certain. 69 Ill. 523; 48 Ill. 409.

UNLIQUIDATED DEMAND. When any part of a demand is, in good faith, disputed, it is unliquidated. A demand is not liquidated, even if it appears that something is due, unless it appears how much is due, and when it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a genuine dispute as to which is the proper amount, the demand is regarded as unliquidated, within the meaning of that term as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction. 97 Ill. App. 455; 183 Ill. 183; 161 Ill. 345; 138 N. Y. 231.

UNMARRIED. Generally signifies never having been married, but sometimes used in the sense of not having a husband or wife living. 187 Ill. 315. The word is of flexible meaning to be construed with reference to the context. 170 Ill. 312.

UNNATURAL OFFENSE. Sodomy or buggery.

UNO ABSURDO DATO, INFINITA SEQUUNTUR. One absurdity being allowed, an infinity follow. 1 Coke, 102.

UNO ACTU (Lat.) In a single act; by one and the same act.

UNO FLATU (Lat.) In one breath. 3 Man. & G. 45. Uno flatu, et uno intuitu, at one breath, and in one view. 3 Story (U. S.) 504.

UNOCCUPIED. Unoccupied means no one has the actual use or possession. 153 Ill. App. 33.

Unoccupied and vacant are words of the same import. 87 Mich. 138; 49 N. W. 480.

UNQUES (Law Fr.) Still; yet. This barbarous word is frequently used in pleas, as ne unques executor, ne unques guardian; ne unques accouple; and the like.

UNQUES PRIST (Law Fr.) Always ready. The same as "uncore prist."

UNSEATED LAND. Wild or unoccupied land. See "Seated Lands."

UNSEAWORTHY. See "Seaworthiness."

UNSOLEMN WAR. That war which is not carried on by the highest power in the states between which it exists, and which lacks the formality of a declaration. Grotius de Jure Belli, et Pac. lib. 1, c. 3, § 4. A formal declaration to enemy is now disused, but there must be a formal, public act proceeding from the competent source. With us, it has been said, it must be an act of congress. 1 Kent, Comm. 55; 1 Hill (N. Y.) 409. See "War."

UN SOUND MIND, or UNSOUND MEMORY. These words have been adopted in several statutes, and sometimes indiscriminately used, to signify not only "lunacy," which is periodical madness, but also a permanent adventitious insanity, as distinguished from idiocy. 1 Ridg. Parl. Cas. 518; 3 Atk. 171.

The term "unsound mind" seems to have been used in those statutes in the same sense as "insane;" but they have been said to import that the party was in some such state as was contradistinguished from idiocy and from lunacy, and yet such as made him a proper subject of a commission to inquire of idiocy and lunacy. Shelf. Lun. 5; Ray, Med. Jur. prel. § 8; 8 Ves. 66; 12 Ves. 447; 19 Ves. 286; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 573; Cooper, Ch. Cas. 108; 2 Madd. Chanc. Prac. 731, 732.

UNTHRIFT. A person of outrageous prodigality.

UNTIL. Usually a word of limitation, unless there are other controlling expressions in the connection, showing that a different meaning is intended. 12 Ill. 304.

When time is given to file a pleading until a day named, "until" is ordinarily exclusive. 126 Iowa 669.

The word may, either in a contract or a law, have an exclusive or an inclusive meaning according to the subject to which it is applied, the nature of the transaction which it specifies, and the connection in which it is used. 12 Ill. 304; 87 Ill. 347.

UNTRUE. A statement is untrue which not express things exactly as they are. 188 Ill. 138.

UNUMQUODQUE EODEM MODO QUO COLLIGATUM EST DISSOLVITUR. In the same manner in which anything is bound, it is loosened. 2 Rolle, 39.

UNUMQUODQUE EST ID QUOD EST PRINCIPALIUS IN IPSEO. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself. Hob. 123.

UNUMQUODQUE LIGAMEN DISSOLVITUR EODEM LIGAMINE QUOD LIGATUR. Every obligation is dissolved in the same manner in which it is contracted. 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 366, 375.

UNUMQUODQUE PRINCIPORUM EST sibi metipse fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Every principle is its own evidence, and plain truths are not to be proved. Co. Litt. 11; Branch, Princ.

UPLIFTED HAND. When a man accused of a crime is arraigned, he is required to raise his hand, probably in order to identify the person who pleads. Perhaps for the same reason, when a witness adopts a particular mode of taking an oath, as, when he does not swear upon the gospel, but upon Almighty God, he is requested to hold up his hand.

UPPER BENCH. The king's bench was so called during Cromwell's protectorate, when Rolle was chief justice. 3 Bl. Comm. 202.

UPSET PRICE. In sales by auctions, an amount for which property to be sold is put up, so that the first bidder at that price is declared the buyer. Wharton.

UPSUN. In Scotch law. Between the hours of sunrise and sunset. Poinding must be executed with "upsun" (i. e., while the sun is up). 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 32.

URBAN. Relating to a city; relating to houses.

URBAN SERVITUDES. Servitudes attached to an urban estate, such as the right of support, of drip, of drain, etc. 3 Kent, Comm. 436.

URBS (Lat.) In civil law. A walled city. Often used for civitas. Ainsworth. It is the same as oppidum, only larger. Urbs, or urbs aurea, meant Rome. Du Cange. In the case of Rome, urbs included the suburbs. Dig. 50. 16. 2. pr. It is derived from urbum, a part of the plough by which the walls of a city are first marked out. Ainsworth.

URE (Norman-French; from Lat. opera, a work). "Operation" or "effect." To put in ure, therefore, is to put in operation. See St. 13 Eliz. c. 2, § 1.

USAGE. Long and uniform practice. In its most extensive meaning, this term includes "custom" and "prescription," though it differs from them. In the narrower sense, it is applied to the habits, modes, and course of dealing which are observed in trade generally, as to all mercantile transactions, or to some particular branches of trade. See 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 349.

A usage must be generally known and established, and so well settled and so uniformly acted upon, as to raise a fair presumption that it was known to both parties, and that they contracted with reference to and in conformity with it. 207 Ill. App. 325.

USANCE. In commercial law. The time which, by usage or custom, is allowed in certain countries for the payment of a bill of exchange. Poth. Contr. du Change, note 15.

USE. Use is not the thing itself or any part thereof, but is that which the thing will produce, 163 Mich. 353; that which the user is to enjoy, hold, occupy, and have the fruit thereof. 163 Mich. 556, 562.

—In Lands. A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or terre tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. Plowd. 352; Gilb. Uses, 1; Bac. Law Tr. 150, 306; Cornish, Uses, 13; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 363; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 7; Saunders, Uses, 2; Co. Litt. 272b; 1 Coke, 121; 2 Bl. Comm. 328; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1885 et seq.

A right in one person, called the cestui que use, to take the profits of land which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same, and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses were derived from the fidei commissa of the Roman law. It was the duty of a Roman magistrate, the praetor fidei commissarius, whom Bacon terms the particular chancellor for uses, to enforce the observance of this confidence. Inst. 2. 23. 2. They were introduced into England by the ecclesiastics in the reign of Edward III., before 1377, for the purpose of avoiding the statutes of mortmain, and the clerical chancellors of those times held them to the fidei commissa, and binding in conscience. To obviate many inconveniences and difficulties which had arisen out of the doctrine and introduction of uses, the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10, commonly called the "Statute of Uses," or, in conveyances and pleadings, the statute for transferring uses into possession, was passed. It enacts that, "when any person shall be seised of lands, etc., to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee simple, fee tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seised or possessed of the land, etc., of and in the like estate as they have in the use, trust, or confidence, and that the estates of the persons so seised to the uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use,—that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use to the possession, and, in this manner, making the cestui que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity. 2 Bl. Comm. 333; 1 Saund. 254, note 6.

A modern use has, therefore, been defined to be an estate of right which is acquired through the operation of the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10; and which, when it may take effect according to the rules of the common law, is called the "legal estate," and, when it may not, is denominated a "use," with a term descriptive of its modification. Cornish, Uses, 35.

The common-law judges decided, in the construction of this statute, that a use could not be raised upon a use (Dyer, 155 [A]), and that, on a feoffment to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs in trust for C. and his heirs, the statute executed only the first use, and that the second was a mere nullity. The judges also held that, as the statute mentioned only such persons as were seised to the use of others, it did not extend to a term of years, or other chattel interests, of which a termor is not seised, but only possessed. Bac. Law Tr. 335; Poph. 76; Dyer, 369; 2 Bl. Comm. 336. The rigid literal construction of the statute by the courts of law again opened the doors of the chancery courts. 1 Madd. Chanc. Prac. 448, 450.

Uses and trusts are often spoken of together by the older and some modern writers; the distinction being those trusts which were of a permanent nature, and required no active duty of the trustee, being called "uses;" those in which the trustee had an active duty to perform, as the payment of debts, raising portions, and the like, being called "special" or "active" trusts, or simply "trusts." 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 448.

For the creation of a use, a consideration either valuable, as money, or good, as relationship in certain degrees, was necessary. Crompt. 49b; 3 Swanst. 591; 7 Coke, 40; Plowd. 298; 17 Mass. 257; 4 N. H. 229, 397; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 210. See "Resulting Use." The property must have been in esse, and such that seisin could be given. Crabb, Real Prop. §§ 1610-1612; Cro. Eliz. 401. Uses were alienable, although in many respects resembling choses in action, which were not assignable at common law. Cornish, Uses, 19; 2 Bl. Comm. 331. When once raised, it might be granted or devised in fee, in tail, for life, or for years. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 455.

The effect of the statute of uses was much restricted by the construction adopted by the courts. It practically resulted, it has been said, in the addition of these words, "to the use," to every conveyance. Williams, Real Prop. 133. The intention of the statute was to destroy the estate of the feoffee to use, and to transfer it by the very act which created it to the cestui que use, as if the seisin or estate of the feoffee, together with the use, had, uno flatu, passed from the feoffer to the cestui que use. A very full and clear account of the history and present condition of the law of uses is given by Professor Washburn (2 Real Prop. 91-156), which is of particular value to the American student. Consult, also, Spence, Eq. Jur.; Cornish, Uses; Bac. Law Tracts; Greenl. Cruise, Dig.

Classification:

(1) A springing use is one limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding estate is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that of the grantor.

(2) A shifting use is one which takes effect in derogation of some other estate, and is either limited by the deed by which it is created, or authorized to be created by some one named in the deed.

(3) A contingent use is one limited to take effect as a remainder.

(4) Resulting use. Where the use returns to the person who raised it because of impossibility of execution or by expiration, it is sometimes called a "resulting use." 2 Bl. Comm. 335.

—In Civil Law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from "usufruct," which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy. 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 184; Lec. Elm. §§ 414, 416.

USE AND OCCUPATION. The character of the holding of another's land where there is no lease; also the name of an action of assumpsit by which a recovery is had for use and occupation.

USEE. A person for whose use a suit is brought. See 24 Miss. 77.

USER. The actual exercise of a franchise or incorporeal hereditament. User of a corporate franchise is an acceptance thereof; or nonuser may be a cause for dissolution. An easement may be prescribed upon user continued for the required time adverse to the owner of the land. Nonuser with intent to abandon extinguishes a prescriptive easement.

USER DE ACTION (Law Fr.) In old practice. The pursuing or bringing an action. Cowell.

USES TO BAR DOWER. When a conveyance of land is made in England to a person who was married to his present wife on or before the first of January, 1834, and he wishes to prevent her right to dower from attaching to the land, it is conveyed to the following uses: (1) To such uses as the purchaser shall appoint; (2) in default of appointment, to the use of him and his assigns during his life; (3) in the event of the determination of that estate, by forfeiture or otherwise, in his lifetime, to the use of a trustee during the life of the purchaser, in trust for him; with (4) an ultimate limitation to his heirs and assigns forever. By this means, the purchaser has a full power of alienation, without having a greater estate in possession than an estate for life, to which the wife's dower does not attach, and the intermediate estate of the trustee prevents the remainder in fee simple from vesting in the purchaser in possession, and so becoming liable to dower, by any accidental merger of the life estate. See Williams, Real Prop. 305, and Append. (D). See, also, "Dower."

USHER. This word is said to be derived from huissier, and is the name of an inferior officer in some English courts of law. Archb. Prac. 25.

USHER OF THE BLACK ROD. The gentleman usher of the black rod is an officer of the house of lords appointed by letters patent from the crown. His duties are, by himself or deputy, to desire the attendance of the commons in the house of peers when the royal assent is given to bills, either by the queen or king in person or by commission, to execute orders for the commitment of persons guilty of breach of privilege, and also to assist in the introduction of peers when they take the oaths and their seats. May, Parl. Law; Brown.

USO. In Spanish law. Usage; that which arises from certain things which men say and do and practice uninterruptedly for a great length of time, without any hindrance whatever. Las Partidas, pt. 1, tit. 2, lib. 1.

USQUE (Lat.) Up to; until.

USQUE AD MEDIUM FILUM VIAE (Lat.) To the middle thread of the way. See "Ad Medium Filum;" 7 Gray (Mass.) 22, 24.

UST. L. Fr. Had. Ust este; had been. Usses, ussomus; should or would have. Yearb. M. 8 Edw. III. 2.

USUAL. Common, frequent, ordinary, customary, general. 71 Ill. App. 153; 172 Ill. 605; 182 Ill. 541.

USUAL COVENANTS. The usual covenants expressed in a deed are "seisin" or "right to convey," "quiet enjoyment," "further assurance," "warranty," and "against incumbrances." In a lease, the covenant of quiet enjoyment is the only one that is always usual, the question being determined by circumstances and the custom of a locality. Rawle, Cov.; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 45.

USUAL TERMS. A phrase in the common-law practice, which meant pleading is-suably, rejoicing gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed.

USUARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. One who had the mere use of a thing belonging to another for the purpose of supplying his daily wants; a usuary. Dig. 7. 8. 10. pr.; Calv. Lex.

USUCAPIO CONSTITUTA EST UT ALI-quis Iltium finis esset. Prescription was instituted that there might be an end to litigation. Dig. 41. 10. 5; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 801, note; Wood, Civ. Law (3d Ed.) 123.

USUCAPTION. In civil law. The manner of acquiring property in things by the lapse of time required by law.

It differs from "prescription," which has the same sense, and means, in addition, the manner of acquiring and losing, by the effect of time regulated by law, all sorts of rights and actions. Merlin, Repert. "Prescription;" Aylife, Pand. 320; Wood, Inst. 165; Lec. Elm. § 437; 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 264, note; Vattel, bk. 2, c. 2, § 140.

USUFRUCT. In civil law. The right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing.

Perfect usufruct is of things which the usufructuary can enjoy without altering their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorated naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied; as, a house, a piece of land, animals, furniture, and other movable effects.

Imperfect or quasi usufruct is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume and expend them or change the substance of them; as, money, grain, liquors. In this case, the alteration may take place. Civ. Code La. art. 525 et seq.; 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 184; Poth. Tr. du Douaire, note 194; Ayliffe, Pand. 319; Poth. ad Pand. tom. 6, p. 91; Lec. Elm. § 414; Inst. lib. 2, tit. 4; Dig. lib. 7, tit. 1, lib. 1; Code, lib. 3, tit. 33.

USUFRUCTUARY. In civil law. One who has the right and enjoyment of a usufruct.

Domat, with his usual clearness, points out the duties of the usufructuary, which are to make an inventory of the things subject to the usufruct, in the presence of those having an interest in them; to give security for their restitution when the usufruct shall be at an end; to take good care of the things subject to the usufruct; to pay all taxes and claims which arise while the thing is in his possession as a ground rent, and to keep the thing in repair at his own expense. Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 11, § 4. See "Estate for Life."

USUFRUIT. In the French law, the same as the usufruct of the English and Roman law.

USURA (Lat. from usus, use). In the civil law. Money given for the use of money; interest. Dig. 50. 16. 121. Commonly used in the plural, usuræ. Dig. 22. 1.

Usura centesima, usuræ centesimæ or usuræ asses, twelve per cent. per annum, or one per cent. monthly. The highest rate of interest allowed before the time of Justinian. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, and note (m); Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 15, No. 6; Calv. Lex.

Usurae deuncæ, eleven per cent. 2 Bl. Comm. ubi supra.

Usurae dextances, ten per cent. Id.

Usurae dodrantes, nine per cent. Id.

Usurae besces, eight per cent. Id.

Usurae septunces, seven per cent. Id.

Usurae semisses, six per cent. Id.

Usurae quincunces, five per cent. Id.

Usurae quadrantæ, four per cent. This was the rate established by Justinian. Id.

Usurae trientes, three per cent. Id.

Usurae sextances, two per cent. Id.

Usurae uncia, one per cent. Id.

USURA EST COMMODUM CERTUM quod propter usum rei mutuatae recipitur. Sed secundario spirare de aliqua retributione, ad voluntatem ejus qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum. Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing lent. But to have an understanding (literally, to breathe or whisper), in an incidental way, about some compensation to be made at the pleasure of the borrower, is not unlawful. Branch, Princ.; 5 Coke, 70b; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 16.

USURA MARITIMA. Interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and is not affected by the usury laws.

USURAE or USURA (Lat.) In the civil law. Interest on money. Di. 22. 1. See "Usura."

USURARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To pay interest; to carry or be chargeable with interest. Artic. Magna Cart. Johan. c. 34; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 7.

USURARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An usurer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 14.

USURPATIO (Lat. from usurpare). In the civil law. The interruption of a usufruct by some act on the part of the real owner. Dig. 41. 3. 2; Calv. Lex.

USURPATION. The unlawful assumption of the use of property which belongs to another; an interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession. Tomlins.

According to Lord Coke, there are two kinds of usurpation,—first, when a stranger, without right, presents to a church, and his clerk is admitted; and, second, when a subject uses a franchise of the king without lawful authority. Co. Litt. 277b.

—In Governmental Law. The tyrannical assumption of the government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

USURPATION OF ADVOWSON. An injury which consists in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson or right of presentation, and which happens when a stranger who has no right presents a clerk, and the latter is thereupon admitted and instituted.

USURPER. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country. Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 32.

USURY. An illegal profit required and received by a lender of a sum of money from the borrower; something exacted from the use of money in excess of and in addition to the interest allowed by law; a loan or forbearance of money for a greater rate of interest than that allowed by law. 234 Ill. 229.

Originally, the word was applied to all interest reserved for the use of money, and in the early ages, taking such interest was not allowed.

USUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A precarious enjoyment of land, corresponding with the right of habitatio of houses, and being closely analogous to the tenancy at sufferance or at will of English law. The usuarius (i. e., tenant by usus) could only hold on so long as the owner found him convenient, and had to go so soon as ever he was in the owner's way (molestus). The usuarius could not have a friend to share the produce. It was scarcely permitted to him (Justinian says) to have even his wife with him on the land; and he could not let or sell, the right being strictly personal to himself. Brown.

USUS BELLICI (Lat.) In international law. Warlike uses or objects. It is the usus bellici which determine an article to be contraband. 1 Kent, Comm. 141.

USUS EST DOMINIUM FIDUCIARIUM. A use is a fiduciary ownership. Bac. Uses.

USUS ET STATUS SIVE POSSESSIO potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei. Use and estate, or possession, differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter. Bac. Uses.

USUS FRUCTUS. In the civil law. Usufruct; the right of using and enjoying the profits of a thing belonging to another, without impairing its substance.

UT (Lat.) In old English law. That. A particle particularly appropriated to express a modus, or qualification, as si was used to express a condition. Bracton, fol. 18b. Co. Litt. 204a. This shows that modus and conditio had essentially a different import. The use of ut in this peculiar application was taken from the civil law.

UT AUDIVI (Lat.) As I heard. Freem. 5, 19; Bunb. 165; Dyer, 30b. A reporter's note.

UT CREDO (Lat.) As I believe. Dyer, 76b. A reporter's note.

UT CURRERE SOLEBAT (Lat.) As it was wont to run; applied to a watercourse.

UT DE FEODO (Law Lat.) As of fee.

UT POENA AD PAUCOS, METUS AD OMNES PREVENIAT. That punishment may happen to a few; the fear of it affects all. 4 Inst. 63.

UT RES MAGIS VALEAT QUAM PEREAT. That the thing may rather have effect than be destroyed.

If a will is capable of a construction which will support a charitable bequest therein, the court is bound to give it that construction. 46 Wis. 70.

UT ROGAS. See "Rogare."

UT SUMMAE POTESTATIS REGIS EST POSSE QUANTUM VELIT, SIC MAGNITUDINUS EST VELLE QUANTUM POSSIT. As the highest power of a king is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do. 3 Inst. 236.

UTAS (Law Lat.; Law Fr. utave). In old English practice. Octave; the octave (octava); the eighth day following any term or feast; as the Utas of St. Michael, the Utas of St. Hilary. Cowell; Y. B. H. 9 Edw. III. 4; Dyer, 78 (Fr. Ed.)

UTERINE (Lat. uterinus). Born of the same mother (ex eodem utero). A uterine brother or sister is one born of the same mother, but by a different father.

UTERO GESTATION. Pregnancy.

UTERQUE (Lat.) Both; each. "The justices, being in doubt as to the meaning of this word in an indictment, demanded the opinions of grammarians, who delivered their opinions that this word doth aptly signify 'one of them.'" 1 Leon. 241.

UTFANGETHEF. Literally, an out-taken thief. The privilege of the lord of a manor to punish a thief dwelling outside his liberty for crimes committed therein.

UTI (Lat.) In the civil law. To use. Strictly, to use for necessary purposes; as distinguished from "frui," to enjoy. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 415.

UTI FRUI (Lat.) In the civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance. Calv. Lex. Hence "usus fructus" (q. v.)

UTI POSSIDETIS. Lat. as you possess. In international law. A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war.

UTI ROGAS (Lat.) As you ask. In Roman law. The form of words by which a vote in favor of a proposed law was orally expressed. The letters U. R. on a ballot, expressed the same sentiment. Adam's Rom. Ant. 98, 100.

UTILE PER INUTILE NON VITIATUR.

What is useful is not vitiated by the useless. 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 2949, 3293; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 221; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.); 298; 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 297; 6 Mass. 303; 12 Mass. 438; 9 Ired. (N. C.) 254. See 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 93, 94.

UTILIDAD (Spanish). In Spanish law. The profit of a thing. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 1.

UTILIS (Lat.) In the civil law. Useful; beneficial; equitable; available. Actio utilis, an equitable action. Calv. Lex. Dies utilis, an available day.

UTLAGATUS. In old English law. An outlaw.

UTLAGATUS EST QUASI EXTRA LEGEM POSITUS. CAPUT GERIT LUPINUM. An outlaw is, as it were, put out of the protection of law. He bears the head of a wolf. 7 Coke, 14.

UTLAGATUS PRO CONTUMACIA ET FUGA, NON PROPTER HOC CONVICTUS EST DE FACTO PRINCIPALI. One who is outlawed for contumacy and flight is not on that account convicted of the principal fact. Fleta.

UTLAGE (Law Fr.) An outlaw. Britt. c. 12.

UTLEP, or ULEPE (Saxon). In old English law. Escape; the escape of a robber or robbers (escapium latronum). Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 14.

UTRUBI. In Scotch law. An interdict as to movables, by which the colorable possession of a bona fide holder is continued until the final settlement of a contested right. Corresponding to uti possidetis as to heritable property. Bell, Dict.

UTTER. To publish; to pass or give currency to.

—In Criminal Law. The presentation or passing as genuine of a forgery or counterfeit.

To constitute the crime of uttering a forged instrument, the instrument must, with knowledge of its forged character, be asserted to be good, either directly or indirectly, by words or actions. 1 Whart. Crim. Law, § 703; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 332.

The instrument need not be passed; it is enough if it is presented or offered as genuine. 25 Mich. 388; 48 Mo. 520.

UTTER BAR. See "Outer Bar."

UTTER (or OUTER) BARRISTER. In English law. Those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from "benchers," or those who have been readers, and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king's counsel are. The same as "ouster barrister."

UTYME. (L. Fr.) An eighth. Mem. in Scacc. 25 Edw. I.

UX'. An abbreviation of uxor. 1 Instr. Cler. 13.

UXOR (Lat.) In civil law. A woman lawfully married.

UXOR ET FILIUS SUNT NOMINA NATURAE. Wife and son are names of nature. 4 Brac. Works, 350.

UXOR NON EST SUI JURIS, SED SUB POTESTATE VIRI. A wife is not her own mis-trous, but is under the power of her husband. 3 Inst. 108.

UXOR SEQUITUR DOMICILIUM VIRI. A wife follows the domicile of her husband. Tray. Lat. Max. 606.

UXORCIDE. A wife murderer; the killing of a wife. It is regarded in law and punished as homicide (q. v.)

V

V. A common abbreviation of versus, in the titles of causes, and reported cases.

V. F. An abbreviation of verba fecit (spoke). Tayl. Civ. Law, 564.

V. G. Verbi gratia, for the sake of example.

VS. In practice. A very common contraction of versus (against), used in entitling papers. Britt. c. 123.

V. V. B. C. An abbreviation of vous voies bein coment, you see well how. Common in the Year Book. See Y. B. M. 2 Hen. VI. 1.

VACANCY. A place which is empty. As applied to official position, has reference to an office that is unoccupied, one without an incumbent; an office not filled. 107 Ark. 386; 155 S. W. 502; Ann. Cas. 1915A 573.

It has been held to include an office newly created, and not yet filled. 108 Mo. 153. As used in statutes, it has been held to include temporary vacancies. 38 Ohio St. 23; and sometimes an office temporarily filled when it is evident from the context that such meaning was intended. 107 Ark. 386; 155 S. W. 502; Ann. Cas. 1915A 573.

By the constitution of the United States, the president has the power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate. Whether the president can create an office and fill it during the recess of the senate seems to have been much questioned. Story, Const. § 1553. See Sergeant, Const. Law, c. 31; 1 Ill. 70.

There has been much discussion whether a failure to elect constitutes a vacancy, the question generally arising where the governor has power to fill vacancies between the sessions of the legislature, and seeks to appoint after adjournment of the legislature, without agreeing on a selection. The better reason is to the effect that a vacancy exists, and it has been so held (15 R. I. 621; 91 N. Y. 634); but the United States senate, construing section 3, art. 1, Const. U. S., providing, "if vacancies [in the senate] happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature," the governor may appoint, has uniformly held that there was no power of appointment in the governor where the legislature had adjourned after a failure to elect.

VACANT. Vacant means empty of everything but air, wherefore a house full of furniture, clothing, etc., left in charge of servants, is not vacant. 153 Ill. App. 33, § 249a.

VACANT POSSESSION. A term applied to an estate which has been abandoned by the tenant. The abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises, it will not be so considered. 2 Chit. 177; 2 Strange, 1064; Buller, N. P. 97; Comyn, Landl. & Ten. 507, 517.

VACANT SUCCESSION. An inheritance for which the heirs are unknown.

VACANTIA BONA (Lat.) In civil law. Goods without an owner. Such goods escheat.

VACATE. To annul; to render an act void; as, to vacate an entry which has been made on a record when the court has been imposed upon by fraud, or taken by surprise.

VACATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. Exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation; exemption from the burden of office. Calv. Lex.

VACATION. That period of time between the end of one term and beginning of another. During vacation, rules and orders are made in such cases as are urgent, by a judge at his chambers.

VACATUR (Law Lat. it is vacated). In practice. A rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated; a vacating.

VACQUER (L. Fr.) To be at leisure. Kelham.

VACUA POSSESSIO. The vacant possession, i. e., free and unburdened possession, which (e. g.) a vendor had and has to give to a purchaser of lands.

VADELECT. In old English law. A servant; a ministerial officer. Cowell.

VADES. In the civil law, pledges; sureties; bail; security for the appearance of a defendant or accused person in court. Calv. Lex.

VADIARE DUELLUM. To wage combat. Where two contending parties, on a challenge, give and take a mutual pledge of fighting. Cowell.

VADIARE LEGEM (L. Lat.) In old English law. To wage law; to give gage or security to make one's law at a day assigned. Spelman.

VADIATIO. L. Lat. (L. Fr. gager). In old English law. Wager.

VADIMONIUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. Calv. Lex.

VADIUM. In the civil law. Pledge or security.

VADIUM MORTUUM (Lat.) A mortgage or dead pledge. It is a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that, if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgagor. 2 Bl. Comm. 257; 1 Powell, Mortg. 4.

VADIUM PONERE. To take bail or pledges for a defendant's appearance.

VADIUM VIVUM (Lat.) A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land. It was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. Litt. § 206; 1 Powell, Mortg. 3; Termes de la Ley.

VADLET. In old English law. The king's eldest son; hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards. Barr. Obs. St. 344.

VAGABOND (Fr. and Eng.; from Lat. vagabundus, from vagari, to wander). A wandering person; one who habitually goes about from place to place; one who has no settled residence or domicile. Les vagabonds sont les gens sans domicile, vagabonds are people without a domicile. Vattel, liv. 1, c. 19, s. 219. A vagabond is said to be a person who, without traveling in quest of a domicile, has really and truly no certain domicile at all. Phillim. Dom. 23.

In English and American law, "vagabond" is always used in a bad sense, denoting one who is without a home; a strolling, idle, worthless person. Vagabonds are described in old English statutes as "such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, and haunt customable taverns and ale houses, and routs about; and no man wot from whence they came, nor whither they go." 4 Bl. Comm. 169. Rogues and vagabonds are classed together by St. 17 Geo. II. c. 5; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38; 4 Steph. Comm. 309. In American law, the term "vagrant" is employed in the same sense. See "Vagrant."

VAGABUNDUM NUNCUPAMUS EUM qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitacionis. We call him a vagabond who has acquired nowhere a domicile or residence. Phillim. Dom. 23, note.

VAGRANCY. Vagrancy is distinguished from disorderly conduct and breaches of the peace, and includes only such cases of vagabondage as are known to the common law; and its statutory definition cannot be enlarged by municipal ordinance. 41 Mich. 299.

VAGRANT. A person who lives idly, without any settled home. A person who refuses to work, or goes about begging. This latter meaning is the common one in statutes punishing vagrancy. See 1 Wils. 331; 5 East, 339; 8 Term R. 26.

VAGRANT ACT. In English law. St 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. 2 Chit. St. 145.

VAGUENESS. Uncertainty.

Certainty is required in contracts, wills, pleadings, judgments, and, indeed, in all the acts on which courts have to give a judgment, and if they be vague so as not to be understood, they are, in general, invalid. 5 Barn. & C. 583; 1 Russ. & M. 116; 1 Chit. Prac. 123. A charge of frequent intemperance and habitual indolence is vague and too general. 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 530. See "Certainty."

VAILLER (L. Fr.) To be worth; to be of the value.

VALE. In Spanish law. A promissory note. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 3.

VALEAT QUANTUM VALERE POTEST. It shall have effect as far as it can have effect. Cowp. 600; 4 Kent, Comm. 493; Shep. Touch. 87.

VALEC, VALECT, or VADELET. A young gentleman; also a servitor or gentleman of the chamber. Cowell.

VALECTA (L. Lat.) In old English law. A body-servant, or attendant; a valet; a ward of the crown. Spelman.

VALESHERIA. In old English law. The proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on that of the mother, that a man was a Welshman.

VALID (Lat. validus). Strong; effectual; of binding force. An act, deed, will, and the like, which has received all the formalities required by law, is said to be valid or good in law.

VALIDITY. Freedom from vices of substance; effectiveness in point of law. It is broader than "form" or "requisites," as they are often applied; "form" signifying only regularity or technical phraseology, while "requisites" imports only positive requirements or essentials, and not matters extraneous to the act or instrument itself.

VALOR BENEFICIORUM (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first fruits and tenths are collected and paid. The valuation by which the clergy are at present rated was made 26 Hen. VIII., and is commonly called the "King's Books." 1 Bl. Comm. 284*, note 5.

VALOR MARITAGII (Lat.) The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. It was so much as a jury would assess, or as any one would give bona fide, for the value of the marriage. Litt. 110.

A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this, though no convenient marriage had been offered. Termes de la Ley.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. An equivalent in money or value for a thing purchased. See "Consideration."

VALUATION. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing.

It differs from "price," which does not always afford a true criterion of value; for a thing may be bought very dear or very cheap. In some contracts, as in the case of bailments or insurances, the thing bailed or insured is sometimes valued at the time of making the contract, so that, if lost, no dispute may arise as to the amount of the loss. 2 Marsh. Ins. 620; 1 Caines (N. Y.) 80; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 80; Story, Bailm. §§ 253, 254; Park, Ins. 98; Weskett, Ins.; Phil. Ins. See "Policy."

VALUATION ASSESSORS. In Pennsylvania, the assessors who estimate the value of property for taxation.

VALUE. The utility of an object. The price demanded or accepted as equivalent to the utility of anything. 161 Ill. 251; 154 Ill. 662. The worth of an object in purchasing other goods. The value of a thing is what it will produce. The first may be called "value in use;" the latter, "value in exchange." It is a relative term, depending upon different circumstances, 235 Ill. 435, and has no fixed criteria. 21 Minn. 322.

"Value" differs from "price." The latter is applied to live cattle and animals. In a declaration, therefore, for taking cattle, they ought to be said to be of such a price; and in a declaration for taking dead chattels, or those which never had life, it ought to lay them to be of such a value. 2 Lilly, Abr. 629.

VALUE RECEIVED. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been given for it.

The expression value received, when put in a bill of exchange, will bear two interpretations,—the drawer of the bill may be presumed to acknowledge the fact that he has received value of the payee (3 Maule & S. 351), or when the bill has been made payable to the order of the drawer, it implies that value has been received by the acceptor (5 Maule & S. 65). In a promissory note, the expression imports value received from the payee. 5 Barn. & C. 360. See 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 282.

VALUED POLICY. A valued policy is one where the value has been set on the ship or goods insured, and this value has been inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages, to save the necessity of proving it in case of loss. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1230. See "Policy."

VALVASORS, or VIDAMES. An obsolete title of dignity next to a peer. 2 Inst. 667; 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 612.

VANA EST ILLA POTENTIA QUAE nunquam venit in actum. Vain is that power which is never brought into action. 2 Coke, 51.

VANI TIMORES SUNT AESTIMANDI, qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Vain are those fears which affect not a firm man. 7 Coke, 27.

VANI TIMORIS JUSTA EXCUSATIO non est. A frivolous fear is not a legal excuse. Dig. 50. 17. 184; 2 Inst. 483; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 256, note.

VANTARIUS (Law Lat.) In old records. A fore footman. Spelman; Cowell.

VARDA. In old Scotch law. Ward; custody; guardianship. Answering to "warda," in old English law. Spelman. It had also the sense of "award." Skene de Verb. Sign.

VARIANCE. In pleading and practice. A disagreement or difference between two parts of the same legal proceeding which ought to agree together. Variances are between the writ and the declaration, and between the declaration, or bill in equity, and the evidence.

VARRANTIZATIO (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. Warranty. Craig. de Jur. Feud. 152.

VAS (Lat.) In the civil law. A pledge; a surety; one who became bail or surety for another in a criminal proceeding or civil action. Calv. Lex. The plural, vades (q. v.), was more commonly used.

VASALLUS (Law Lat.) In feudal law. A vassal; the grantee of a fief; a feudatory. Feud. lib. 1, tit. 26; Id. lib. 2, tit. 2 et passim. Skene writes the word vassallus.

VASLETTUS (Law Lat.) A valet or ward. Cowell; Spelman.

VASSAL. In feudal law. The name given to the holder of a fief bound to perform feudal service. This word was then always correlative to that of "lord," entitled to such service.

The vassal himself might be lord of some other vassal.

In after times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude, and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 53; Merlin, Reper.

VASSELERIA. The tenure or holding of a vassal. Cowell.

VASTITAS (Law Lat. from vastum, q. v.) In old English law. A waste. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 6.

VASTUM (Law Lat.) Waste; a waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Par. Ant. 351; Cowell.

VASTUM FORESTAE VEL BOSCI (Law Lat.) In old records. Waste of a forest or wood. That part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Par. Ant. 351, 497; Cowell.

VAUDERIE. Sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois. 3 Hallam, Mid. Ages, c. ix, pt. 2, p. 386, note.

VAVASOR or VAVASOUR (Law Lat.) In old English law. The vassal or tenant of a baron; one who held under a baron, and who had also tenants under him.

One who in dignity was next to a baron; a title of dignity next to a baron. Camd. Brit. 109. See "Valvasors." Bracton, in enumerating the various ranks of persons under the king, mentions them in the following order: Dukes, counts or earls, barons, magnates or vavasors, and knights (duces, comites, barones, magnates sive vavasores, et milites). Bracton, fol. 5b. And again, immediately after describing barons, as powerful men under the king (potentes sub rege), he proceeds to a description of vavasors as men of great dignity (virii magnas dignitatis), adding the following etymology of the word: Vavasor enim nihil melius dici poterit quam vas sortitus ad valetudinem, for a vavasor cannot be better described than a vessel or pledge (vas) chosen for strength. Id.

The term vavasor first came into use in England after the Conquest, being another form of valvasor, which was employed in the feudal law of the continent. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 24. As a title of dignity, it occurs as late as the time of Chaucer, but afterwards fell into disuse, and is now wholly antiquated. 1 Bl. Comm. 403. The etymology of the word given by Bracton seems to present vas (a vessel), validus (strong), and sortitus (chosen), as its constituent elements, which is very different from that given of valvasor (q. v.)

VAVASORY. The lands that a vavasour held. Cowell.

VECTIGAL (Lat. from vehere, to carry). In the civil law. A custom or impost upon goods brought into or carried out of a state (quod pro rebus civitati invectis vel evectis publico solvitur). Calv. Lex.

In a general sense, a tax or tribute of any kind, paid for the use of the state. Id. See Dig. 50. 16. 17. 1; Id. 6. 3; Id. 39. 4.

An equitable lien or implied agreement in favor of the vendor of land sold for the purchase money, 175 Ill. 441, where the deed expresses, contrary to the fact, that the purchase money is paid. Unless waived, the lien remains till the whole purchase money is paid. 16 Ves. 329; 4 Russ. 336; 1 W. Bl. 123; 2 P. Wms. 291; 1 Jac. & W. 284; 1 Vern. 267.

VENDUE. A public auction.

VENDUE MASTER. An auctioneer.

VENIA AETATIS. In the civil law. The privilege of age. A privilege granted by a prince or sovereign, in virtue of which a person is entitled to act, sui juris, as if he were of full age. Calv. Lex.; Story, Conf. Laws, § 60, nota.

VENIAE FACILITAS INCENTIVUM EST delinquendi. Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

VENIRE (Lat. to come). The name of a writ (more commonly called venire facias) by which a jury is summoned.

VENIRE FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to come). In practice. According to the English law, the proper process to be issued on an indictment for any petit misdemeanor, on a penal statute, is a writ called venire facias.

It is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear. 4 Bl. Comm. 18; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 351.

VENIRE FACIAS AD RESPONDENDUM. A writ to summon a person, against whom an indictment for a misdemeanor has been found, to appear and be arraigned for the offense. A justice's warrant is now more commonly used. Archb. Crim. Pl. 81.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO (Lat.) In practice. The name of a new writ of venire facias. This is awarded when, by reason of some irregularity or defect in the proceeding on the first venire, or the trial, the proper effect of the venire has been frustrated, or the verdict become void in law; as, for example, when the jury has been improperly chosen, or an uncertain, ambiguous, or defective verdict has been rendered. Steph. Pl. 120; 1 Sellon, Prac. 150.

VENIRE FACIAS JURATORES (Lat.; frequently called venire simply). In practice. The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to cause to come from the body of the county, before the court from which it issued, on some day certain and therein specified, a certain number of qualified citizens who are to act as jurors in the said court. Steph. Pl. 104; 2 Gravdon, Forms. 314. And see 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 414; Comyn, Dig. "Enquest" (C 1), etc.,

"Pleader" (2 S 12, 3 O 20). "Process" (D 8); 3 Chit. Prac. 797. See "Jury."

VENIREMAN. A juror summoned by venire.

VENIT ET DEFENDIT (Law Lat.) In old pleading. Comes and defends. The proper words of appearance and defense in an action. 1 Ld. Raym. 177.

Venit et defendit vim et injuriam, comes and says. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 2; 2 Salk. 443.

VENIT ET DICIT. In old pleading. Comes and says. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 2. 2 Salk. 544.

VENKU (L. Fr.) In old English law. Vanquished; overcome in judicial combat.

VENTE A REMERE. In French law. A sale made, reserving a right to the seller to repurchase the property sold by returning the price paid for it.

The term is used in Canada and Louisiana. The time during which a repurchase may be made cannot exceed ten years, and, if by the agreement it so exceed, it shall be reduced to ten years. The time fixed for redemption must be strictly adhered to, and cannot be enlarged by the judge, nor exercised afterwards. Civ. Code La. arts. 1545-1549.

The following is an instance of a vente a remere. A. sells to B. for the purpose of securing B. against indorsements, with a clause that "whenever A. should relieve B. from such indorsements, without B.'s having recourse on the land, then B. would reconvey the same to A. for A.'s own use." This is a vente a remere, and until A. releases B. from his indorsements, the property is B.'s, and forms no part of A.'s estate. 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 278. See 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 528; 3 La. 153; 4 La. 142; Tropl. Vente, c. 6; 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. p. 257.

VENTER, or VENTRE (Lat. the belly). The wife (so applied in matters relating to child bearing). For example, a man has three children by the first and one by the second venter. A child is said to be in ventre sa mere before it is born; while it is a foetus.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO (Lat.) In English law. A writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him that, in the presence of twelve men, and as many women, he cause examination to be made whether a woman therein named is with child or not, and if with child, then about what time it will be born, and that he certify the same. It is granted in a case when a widow, whose husband had lands in fee simple, marries again soon after her husband's death, and declares herself pregnant by her first husband, and, under that pretext, withholds the lands from the next heir. Cro. Eliz. 506; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 15.

VENUE (Law Lat. visnetum, neighborhood. The word was formerly spelled visne. Co. Litt. 125a). In practice. The county in which the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which the jury are to come to try the issue. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 102; Archb. Civ. Pl. 86; Cowp. 176; 1 How. (U. S.) 241; 86 Mich. 7. In modern practice, it is used as synonymous with "place of trial." See 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 462.

The designation of the county in which the cause is to be tried in pleadings and writs. Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 20); 86 Mich. 7. Generally, in modern pleading, in civil practice, no special allegation is needed in the body of the declaration, the venue in the margin being understood to be the place of occurrence till the contrary is shown. 1 Hempst. 236. See statutes and rules of court of the various states, and Reg. Gen. Hilary Term, 4 Hen. IV.

VERAY. An ancient manner of spelling vrai, true.

In the English law there are three kinds of tenants,—veray, or true tenant, who is one who holds in fee simple; tenant by the manner (q. v.), who is one who has a less estate than a fee which remains in the reversioner; veray tenant by the manner, who is the same as tenant by the manner, with this difference only, that the fee simple, instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another. Hammond, N. P. 394.

VERBA QUANTUMVIS GENERALIA, AD aptitudinem restringuntur, etiamsi nullam aliam paterentur restrictionem. Words, however general, are restrained to fitness (i.

e., to harmonize with the subject matter), though they would bear no other restriction. Spiegelius.

VERBA RELATA HOC MAXIME OPERANTUR PER REFERENTIAM UT IN EIS INESSE VIDENTUR. Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clause referring to them. Co. Litt. 359; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 599; 14 East, 568.

VERBA SECUNDUM MATERIAM SUBJECTAM INTELLIGI NEMO EST QUI NESCIT. There is no one who is ignorant that words should be understood according to the subject matter. Calv. Lex.

VERBA SEMPER ACCIPIENDA SUNT IN MITIORI SENSU. Words are always to be taken in their milder sense. 4 Coke, 17.

VERBA STRICTAE SIGNIFICATIONIS AD LATAM EXTENDI POSSUNT, SI SUBSIT RATIO. Words of a strict signification can be given a wide signification if reason require. Calv. Lex.; Spiegelius.

VERBA SUNT INDICES ANIMI. Words are indications of the intention. Latch, 106.

VERBAL. Parol; by word of mouth; as, verbal agreement; verbal evidence. Sometimes incorrectly used for "oral."

VERBAL NOTE. In diplomatic language, a memorandum or note not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps the affair does not require, and, on the other hand, not to afford any ground for supposing that it is forgotten, or that there is no intention of prosecuting it any further, is called a "verbal note."

VERBAL PROCESS. In Louisiana. A written account of any proceeding or operation required by law, signed by the person commissioned to perform the duty, and attested by the signature of witnesses. See "Proces Verbal."

VERBERA. (Lat.) In old English law. Blows; beatings. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 53, § 1.

VERBIS STANDUM UBI NULLA AMBIGUITAS. One must abide by the words where there is no ambiguity. Tray. Lat. Max. 612.

VERBUM IMPERFECTI TEMPORIS REM ADHUC IMPERFECTAM SIGNIFICAT. The imperfect tense of the verb indicates an incomplete matter. 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 120.

VERDEROR (from Fr. verdeur, from vert or verd, green; Law Lat. viridarius). An officer in king's forest, whose office is properly to look after the vert, for food and shelter for the deer. He is also sworn to keep the assizes of the forest, and receive and enroll the attachments and presentments of trespasses within the forest, and certify them to the swain mote or justice seat. Cowell; Burn, Ecc. Law; Manw. For. Law, pt. 1, p. 332.

VERDICT. The expression of the concurrence of individual judgments, rather than the product of mixed thoughts. 17 Kan. 462; 20 Ann. Cas. 880.

—In practice. The unanimous decision made by a jury and reported to the court on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of a trial of a cause.

It is the theory of jury trials that, from the testimony each individual juror should be led to the same conclusion; and this unanimous conclusion is the certainty of fact sought in the law. 17 Kan. 462; 20 Ann. Cas. 880.

Under comparatively recent statutory provisions in some states a verdict or special finding in a civil case, concurred in by three-fourths of the jurors only, is valid. 171 Mo. 84; 70 S. W. 891; 7 Ohio App. 99; 100 Ohio St. 315; 125 N. E. 875.

(1) A general verdict is one by which the jury pronounce at the same time on the fact and the law, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant. Co. Litt. 228; 4 Bl. Comm. 461. The jury may find such a verdict whenever they think fit to do so.

(2) A partial verdict in a criminal case is one by which the jury acquit the defendant of a part of the accusation against him, and find him guilty of the residue.

The following are examples of this kind of a verdict, namely: When they acquit the defendant on one count, and find him guilty on another, which is indeed a species of general verdict, as he is generally acquitted on one charge, and generally convicted on another; when the charge is of an offense of a higher, and includes one of an inferior, degree, the jury may convict of the less atrocious by finding a partial verdict. Thus, upon an indictment for burglary, the defendant may be convicted of larceny, and acquitted of the nocturnal entry; upon an indictment for murder, he may be convicted of manslaughter; robbery may be softened to simple larceny; a battery into a common assault. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 638, and the cases there cited.

(3) A privy verdict is one delivered privily to a judge out of court. A verdict of this kind is delivered to the judge after the jury have agreed, for the convenience of the jury, who, after having given it, separate. This verdict is of no force whatever, and this practice, being exceedingly liable to abuse, is seldom if ever allowed in the United States. The jury, however, are allowed in some states, in certain cases, to seal their verdict and return it into court, as, for example, where a verdict is agreed upon during the adjournment of the court for the day.

(4) A public verdict is one delivered in open court. This verdict has its full effect, and, unless set aside, is conclusive on the facts, and, when judgment is rendered upon it, bars all future controversy, in personal actions. A private verdict must afterwards be given publicly in order to give it any effect.

(5) A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. 1 Litt. (Ky.) 376; 4 Rand. (Va.) 504; 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 235; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 499; 2 Mason (U. S.) 31.

The jury have an option, instead of finding the negative or affirmative of the issue, as in a general verdict, to find all the facts of the case as disclosed by the evidence before them, and, after so setting them forth, to conclude to the following effect: "That they are ignorant, in point of law, on which side they ought upon those facts to find the issue; that if, upon the whole matter, the court shall be of opinion that the issue is proved for the plaintiff, they find for the plaintiff accordingly, and assess the damages at such a sum, etc.; but if the court are of an opposite opinion, then they find vice versa." This form of finding is called a "special verdict." In practice they have nothing to do with the formal preparation of the special verdict. When it is agreed that a verdict of that kind is to be given, the jury merely declare their opinion as to any fact remaining in doubt, and then the verdict is adjusted without their further interference. It is settled, under the correction of the judge, by the counsel and attorneys on either side, according to the state of the facts as found by the jury, with respect to all particulars on which they have delivered an opinion, and, with respect to other particulars, according to the state of facts which it is agreed that they ought to find upon the evidence before them. The special verdict, when its form is thus settled, is together with the whole proceedings on the trial, then entered on record; and the question of law, arising on the facts found, is argued before the court in banc, and decided by that court as in case of a demurrer. If either party be dissatisfied with their decision, he may afterwards resort to a court of error. Steph. Pl. 113; 1 Archb. Prac. 189; 3 Bl. Comm. 377; Bac. Abr. "Verdict" (D, E).

There is another method of finding a special verdict. This is when the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject, nevertheless, to the opinion of the judges or the court above on a special case, stated by the counsel on both sides, with regard to a matter of law. 3 Bl. Comm. 378. And see 10 Mass. 64; 11 Mass. 358. See, generally, Bouv. Inst. Index.

(6) A sealed verdict is one arrived at and delivered, to be returned to the court when it shall again convene after a recess or adjournment for the day, during which the agreement of the jurors is reached. It is inclosed in a sealed packet, and is opened and read at the ensuing sitting of the court, in the presence of the jury. It is permitted by special direction of the court in order to avoid confining the jury for a long period after agreeing, and enables them to separate subject to the duty to attend the opening of the verdict.

VERDICT SUBJECT TO OPINION OF COURT. A verdict returned by the jury, the entry of judgment upon which is subject to the determination of points of law reserved by the court upon the trial.

VERDIT (Law Fr. from ver, true, and dit, a saying). In old English law. Verdict; a declaration by a jury of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to them for trial.

VEREBOT (Saxon). In old records. A packet boat, or transport vessel. Cowell.

VEREDICTUM (Law Lat. from vere, truly, or verus, true, and dictum, a saying). In old English law. A verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

VEREDICTUM, QUASI DICTUM VERITATIS; UT JUDICIUM, QUASI JURIS DICTUM. A verdict is, as it were, the saying of the truth, in the same manner that a judgment is the saying of the law. Co. Litt. 226.

VERGE. "At common law, the coroner of the county had no jurisdiction within the compass of the king's court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord high steward of the household, and comprehends a circuit of twelve miles round the residence of the court (wherever held). This jurisdiction is usually called the 'verge,' within which the coroner of the king's household, or, as commonly called, the 'coroner of the verge,' had jurisdiction over all matters within the duty of a coroner, exclusive of the coroner of the county. A jurisdiction so exclusive, particularly as the king's court was movable, was found to be attended with many inconveniences, * * * and therefore it was found expedient to impart, in some cases, to the coroner of the county, a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the coroner of the verge." Jervis, Cor. 5, 59; Sts. 28 Edw. I. c. 3, and 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12, § 3.

VERGELT. In Saxon law. A mulct or fine for a crime. See "Wergild."

VERGENS AD INOPIAM (Law Lat.) In Scotch law. Verging towards poverty; in declining circumstances. 2 Kames, Eq. 8.

VERGERS. In English law. Officers who carry white wands before the justices of either bench. Cowell. Mentioned in Fleta as officers of the king's court, who oppressed the people by demanding exorbitant fees. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 38.

VERIFICATION (Lat. verum, true, facio, to make).

—In Common-Law Pleading. An averment by the party making a pleading that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded.

The usual form of verification of a plea containing matter of fact is, "And this he is ready to verify," etc. See 1 Chit. Pl. 587, 616; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 144; 1 Saund. 103, note 1; Willes, 5; 3 Bl. Comm. 309.

—In Code Pleading. The affidavit of the party, or his agent or attorney, to the truth of a pleading.

—In Practice. The examination of the truth of a writing; the certificate that the writing is true. See "Authentication."

VERITAS (Lat. from verus, true). Truth; verity.

VERITAS, A QUOCUNQUE DICITUR, A Deo est. Truth, by whomsoever pronounced, is from God. 4 Inst. 153.

VERITAS DEMONSTRATIONIS TOLLIT errorem nominis. The truth of the description removes the error of the name. 1 Ld. Raym. 303. See "Legatee."

VERITAS HABENDA EST IN JURATORE; justitia et iudicium in iudice. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge. Bracton, 185b.

VERITAS NIHIL VERETUR NISI ABScondi. Truth fears nothing but concealment. 9 Coke, 20.

VERITAS NIMIUM ALTERCANDO AMITtitur. By too much altercation truth is lost. Hob. 344.

VERITAS NOMINIS TOLLIT ERROREM demonstrationis. The truth of the name takes away the error of description. Bac. Max. reg. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 571; 8 Taunt. 313; 2 Jones, Eq. (N. C.) 72.

VERITAS, QUAE MINIME DEFENSatur opprimitur; et qui non improbat, approbat. Truth which is not sufficiently defended is overpowered; and he who does not disapprove, approves. 3 Inst. 27.

VERITATEM QUI NON LIBERE PRONunciat, proditor est veritatis. He who does not speak the truth freely is a traitor to the truth. 4 Inst. Epil.

VERITY. The quality of being very true or real. Webster. Complete and absolute truth. The record of a court of record is said to import verity.

VERS (Law Fr.; from Law Lat. versus, q. v.) In old practice. Against. Exceptions vers le juge, ou vers le pleyntyfe, vers qui il pirra dire, exceptions against the judge, or against the plaintiff, against whom he may say. Britt. c. 57.

VERSARI (Lat.) In the civil law. To be employed; to be exercised; to be continually engaged; to be conversant. Versari male in tutela, to misconduct one's self in a guardianship. Calv. Lex. Versari in lucro, to be in gain, or a gainer. Id.

VERSUS (Law Lat.) In practice. Against; an abbreviation of the Latin adversus. Used by Bracton indifferently with contra (q. v.) Actio competit contra eum, an action lies against him. Bracton, fol. 103b. Actio datur versus eum, an action is given against him. Id. Retained in modern practice, in the titles of causes, but commonly in its contracted forms, vs. and v. The French form, vers, frequently occurs in Britton.

VERT. Everything bearing green leaves in a forest. Bac. Abr. "Courts of the Forest;" Manw. For. Law, 146.

VERY LORD AND VERY TENANT. An immediate lord and tenant. Blount.

VEST. To give an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment; to give a legal or an equitable seisin. 246 Pa. St. 348; Ann. Cas. 1916D 573. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Fearn, Cont. Rem. 2. See Rop. Leg. 757; Comyn, Dig.; Vern. 323, note; 5 Ves. 511.

VESTED IN INTEREST. A legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment; as reversions, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain. Wharton.

VESTED IN POSSESSION. An existing right of present enjoyment.

VESTED LEGACY. A legacy is said to be vested when the words of the testator making the bequest convey a transmissible interest, whether present or future, to the legatee in the legacy. Thus, a legacy to one to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years is a vested legacy, because it is given unconditionally and absolutely, and therefore vests an immediate interest in the legatee, of which the enjoyment only is deferred or postponed. Brown.

VESTED REMAINDER. The accepted definition of a vested remainder is, that it is one that throughout its continuance gives to the remainderman or his heirs the right to the immediate possession, whenever and however the preceding estate may determine. There must be some certain defined person in being and ascertained who answers the description of remainderman at some time during the continuance of the particular estate and not merely at the time fixed for its termination. 270 Ill. 228; 266 Ill. 17. See "Remainder."

VESTED RIGHT. A right resting on a perfect obligation. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324. A fixed immediate right of present or future enjoyment. 24 Miss. 90.

An expectancy (8 N. Y. 110), e. g., an inchoate right of dower (104 Ill. 403), is not a vested right.

There is no vested right in a remedy. 58 Wis. 621; 57 Pa. St. 433; 1 Neb. 419.

VESTER, Vestre. L. Fr. In old English law. To vest; to enure. Kelham.

VESTIGIUM (Law Lat.) In the law of evidence. A trace, or track; a mark left by a physical object. Vestigia carectae, the tracks of a cart. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 25, § 6.

VESTIMENTUM (Law Lat. from vestire, to clothe). In old English law. Clothing. A figurative expression denoting the character, quality, or circumstance of right, as opposed to the negation or destitution of right, which was compared to a state of nakedness. Possessio est nuda donec ex tempore et seysina pacifica acquiratur vestimentum, the possession is naked until a clothing [i. e., of right] be acquired by time and peaceable seisin. Bracton, fol. 160.

—In Feudal Law. Investiture; seisin. Lord Mansfield, C. J., 1 Burrows, 109, quoting Bracton, fol. 160.

—In Old English Law. The technical form of a contract, requisite to give it effect. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, §§ 3, 4.

VESTING ORDER. In English law. A decree passing title in lieu of a conveyance for that purpose. Wharton.

VESTRY.

—In England. A parochial assembly.

—In the United States. A body of men, chosen by the parish of an Episcopal church, to have the care and management, in conjunction with the wardens, of the church's temporal affairs. Webster.

VESTRY CESS. A rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by 27 Vict. c. 17.

VESTRY CLERK. An officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 122, note; 2 Steph. Comm. 699, note; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 57, §§ 6-8.

VESTRYMEN. A select number of parishioners elected in large and populous parishes to take care of the concerns of the parish; so called because they used ordinarily to meet in the vestry of the church. Cowell.

VESTUE. Clothed. Contract vestue, a clothed contract. The opposite of nue, naked or nude. Britt. c. 28.

VESTURA. A crop of grass or corn. Cowell. Also a garment; metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

VESTURA TERRAE. See "Vesture of Land."

VESTURE. In old English law. Profit of land. "How much the vesture of an acre is worth." Cowell.

VESTURE OF LAND. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land and clothe it externally.

He who has the vesture of land has a right, generally, to exclude others from entering upon the superficies of the soil. Co. Litt. 4b; Hammond, N. P. 151. See 7 East, 200; 1 Vent. 393; 2 Rolle, Abr. 2.

VETERA STATUTA (Lat.) The name of vetera statuta—ancient statutes—has been given to the statutes commencing with Magna Charta, and ending with those of Edward II. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 222.

VETITUM NAMIUM (Law Lat. vetitum, forbidden, namium, taking). Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in placitum de vetito namio. 2 Inst. 140; Rec. in Thesaur. Scacc.; 2 Bl. Comm. 148.

VETO (Lat. I forbid). A term including the refusal of the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent, stating such refusal, and the reasons therefor.

By the constitution of the United States government, the president has a power to prevent the enactment of any law, by refusing to sign the same after its passage, unless it be subsequently enacted by a vote of two-thirds of each house. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 7. When a bill is engrossed, and has received the sanction of both houses, it is transmitted to the president for his approbation. If he approves of it, he signs it. If he does not, he sends it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, and that house enter the objections on their journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. See Story, Const. § 878; 1 Kent, Comm. 239. Similar powers are possessed by the governors of many of the states.

The veto power of the British sovereign has not been exercised for more than a century. It was exercised once during the reign of Queen Anne. 10 Edinb. Rev. 411; Parke, Lect. 126. But anciently the king frequently replied, Le roy s'avisera, which was in effect withholding his assent. In France the king had the initiative of all laws, but not the veto. See 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. nn. 39, 42, 52, note 3.

VETUS JUS (Lat.) The old law; old law. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law.

Calv. Lex. A law principle or doctrine of long standing.

VETUSTAS (Lat. from vetus, old). In the civil law. Antiquity; ancient or former law or practice; the same with antiquitas. Inst. 3. 1. 15.

VEXATA QUAESTIO. A vexed question; a point often discussed, but undetermined.

VEXATIOUS SUIT. A suit which has been instituted maliciously, and without probable cause, whereby a damage has ensued to the defendant.

VI AUT CLAM. In the civil law. By force or covertly. Dig. 43. 24.

VI BONORUM RAPTORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Of goods taken away by force. The name of an action given by the praetor as a remedy for the violent taking of another's property. Inst. 4. 2; Dig. 47. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4. tit. 2.

VI ET ARMIS (Lat.) With force and arms. With actual or implied force. 18 Ill. 203; 147 Ill. 340. See Trespas.

VIA (Lat.) A cart way, which also includes a foot way and a horse way. See "Way."

VIA ANTIQUA VIA EST TUTA. The old way is the safe way. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 527, 530.

VIA PUBLICA (Lat.) In the civil law. A public way or road, the land itself belonging to the public. Dig. 43. 8. 2. 21.

VIA REGIA (Lat.) In English law. The king's highway for all men. Co. Litt. 56a. The highway or common road, called "the king's" highway, because authorized by him, and under his protection. Cowell. Called also via regalis. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24, § 8.

VIA TRITA EST TUTISSIMA. The beaten road is the safest. 10 Coke, 142; 4 Maule & S. 168.

VIA TRITA, VIA TUTA. The old way is the safe way. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 223.

VIABILITY (from the French vie). Capability of living. A term used to denote the power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence.

That a child may be viable, it is necessary that not only the organs should be in a normal state, but likewise all the physiological and pathological causes which are capable of opposing the establishment or prolongation of its life be absent.

Although a child may be born with every appearance of health, yet, from some malformation, it may not possess the physical power to maintain life, but which must cease from necessity. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said to exist more than temporarily,—no longer, indeed, than is necessary to prove that a continued existence is impossible.

It is important to make a distinction between a viable and a nonviable child, although the latter may outlive the former. The viable child may die of some disease on the day of its birth, while a nonviable child may live a fortnight. The former possesses the organs essential to life, in their integrity; while the latter has some imperfection which prevents the complete establishment of life.

As it is no evidence of nonviability that a child dies within a few hours of its birth, neither is it a proof of viability if a child appears to be well, and the function of respiration be fully established.

There are many affections which a child may have at birth that are not necessarily mortal, such as transposition of some of the organs, and other malformations. There are also many diseases which, without being necessarily mortal, are an impediment to the establishment of independent life, affecting different parts of the system, such as inflammation, in addition to many malformations. There is a third class, in which are many affections that are necessarily mortal, such as a general softening of the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, developed before birth, or the absence of the stomach, and a number of other malformations. These distinctions are of great importance; for children affected by peculiarities of the first order must be considered as viable; affections of the second may constitute extenuating circumstances in questions of infanticide; while those of the third admit of no discussion on the subject of their viability.

The question of viability presents itself to the medical jurist, under two aspects,—first, with respect to infanticide, and, second, with respect to testamentary grants and inheritances. Billard, Infants (Translation by James Stewart, M. D.) Appendix; Briand, Med. Leg. 1ere Partie, c. 6, art. 2. See 2 Savignay, Dr. Rom. Append. III., for a learned discussion of this subject.

VIABLE (Lat. vitas habilis, capable of living). A term applied to a child who is born alive in such an advanced state of formation as to be capable of living. Unless he is born viable, he acquires no rights, and cannot transmit them to his heirs, and is considered as if he had never been born.

VIAE SERVITUS (Lat.) A right of way over another's land.

VIANDER. In old English law. A returning officer. 7 Mod. 13.

VICARAGE. In ecclesiastical law. The living or benefice of a vicar, usually consisting of the small tithes. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 75, 79.

VICARIUS NON HABET VICARIUM. A deputy cannot appoint a deputy. Branch,

Max. 38; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 758; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1300.

VICE (Lat.; ablative of vicis, place). In the place or stead. Vice mea, in my place. Used in the composition of words denoting a delegated or deputed authority.

A term used in the civil law and in Louisiana, by which is meant a defect in a thing; an imperfection. For example, epilepsy in a slave, roaring and crib biting in a horse, are vices. Redhibitory vices are those for which the seller will be compelled to annul a sale and take back the thing sold. Poth. Vente, 203; Civ. Code La. arts. 2498-2507.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS. In English law. Courts established in the queen's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. 3 Steph. Comm. 435; 3 Bl. Comm. 69.

VICE CHAMBERLAIN. A great officer under the lord chamberlain, who, in the absence of the lord chamberlain, has the control and command of the offices appertaining to that part of the royal household which is called the "chamber." Cowell.

VICE CHANCELLOR. An equity judge who acts as assistant to the chancellor, holding a separate court, from which an appeal lies to the chancellor.

VICE CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITIES. See "Chancellors' Courts in the Universities."

VICE COMES (Lat.) The sheriff.

VICE COMES DICITUR QUOD VICEM comitis suppleat. "Vice comes" (sheriff) is so called because he supplies the place of the "comes" (earl). Co. Litt. 168.

VICE COMES NON MISIT BREVE (Lat. the sheriff did not send the writ). An entry made on the record when nothing has been done by virtue of a writ which has been directed to the sheriff.

VICE COMITISSA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A viscountess. Spelman. Vice comitissa dotissa, viscountess dowager. Com. 185.

VICE CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND. An ancient officer in the time of Edward IV.

VICE CONSUL. An officer who performs the duties of a consul within a part of the district of a consul, or who acts in the place of a consul. See 1 Phil. Ev. 306.

VICE DOMINUS. In Saxon law. A governor of a province.

VICE GERENT. A deputy or lieutenant.

VICE MARSHAL. An officer who was appointed to assist the earl marshal.

VICE-PRINCIPAL. One who performs personal duties of the master which cannot be delegated, as distinguished from a foreman or superior servant. 216 Ill. 628.

VICE VERSA (Lat.) On the contrary; on opposite sides.

VICEROY. One empowered to act in place of the king; as a colonial governor.

VICINAGE. The neighborhood; the venue.

VICINETUM (Lat.) The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue. Co. Litt. 158b.

VICINI VICINIORA PRAESUMUNTUR scire. Neighbors are presumed to know things of the neighborhood. 4 Inst. 173.

VICINIA (Lat. from vicinus, near). In the civil law. Nearness of dwelling; neighborhood; a neighborhood; a neighboring place. Distinguished from confinium, as being applied to urban estates. Calv. Lex.

VICINITY. The term does not denote so close a connection as "neighborhood." 190 Ill. 625.

VICIOUS INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. A meddling with the movables of a deceased, without confirmation or probate of his will or other title. Wharton.

VICIS ET VENELLIS MUNDANDIS. An ancient writ against the mayor or bailiff of a town, etc., for the clean keeping of their streets and lanes. Reg. Orig. 267.

VICOUNTIEL. Belonging to the sheriff.

VICOUNTIEL JURISDICTION. That jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county; as sheriffs, coroners, etc.

VICTUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Sustenance; support; the means of living. The word included everything necessary to the support of human life (quae ad vivendum homini necessaria sunt). Dig. 50. 16. 43.

VIDAME. In French feudal law. Originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, etc.; continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere. Brande.

A chief in the neighborhood of a church or abbey, who acted as its protector. Steph. Lect. 236.

Blackstone, quoting Camden, makes vidame to be a title in old English law, synonymous with that of valvasor. 1 Bl. Comm. 403.

VIDE (Lat.) A word of reference. Vide ante, or vide supra, refers to a previous passage, vide post, or vide infra, to a subsequent passage, in a book.

VIDEBIS EA SAEPE COMMITTI, QUAE saepe vindicantur. You will see those things frequently committed which are frequently punished. 3 Inst. Epilog.

VIDELICET (Lat.) A Latin adverb, signifying to wit, that is to say, namely; scilicet. This word is usually abbreviated viz.

The office of the videlicet is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is not required to prove them. Steph. Pl. 309; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 42; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450; 3 Term R. 67, 643; 8 Taunt. 107; Greenl. Ev. § 60; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 209. See Yelv. 94; 3 Saund. 291a, note; 4 Bos. & P. 465; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 214, 222; 16 Mass. 129.

VIDETUR QUI SURDUS ET MUTUS NE poet faire alienation. It seems that a deaf and dumb man cannot alienate. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441, 444.

VIDIMUS. We have seen. A species of exemplification of the enrollment of charters, etc. An inspeximus (q. v.)

VIDUA REGIS. In old English law. A king's widow. The widow of a tenant in capite. So called because she was not allowed to marry a second time without the king's permission; obtaining her dower also from the assignment of the king, and having the king for her patron and defender. Spelman.

VIDUITY. Widowhood.

VIE (Fr.) Life. See "Pur Autre Vie."

VIEW. Inspection; a prospect.

Every one is entitled to a view from his premises; but he thereby acquires no right over the property of his neighbors. The erection of buildings which obstruct a man's view, therefore, is not unlawful, and such buildings cannot be considered a nuisance. 9 Coke, 58b. See "Ancient Lights;" "Nuisance."

—In Practice. In most real and mixed actions, in order to ascertain the identity of land claimed with that in the tenant's possession, the tenant is allowed, after the demandant has counted, to demand a view of the land in question, or, if the subject of claim be rent, or the like, a view of the land out of which it issues. Viner, Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; Booth, 37; 2 Saund. 45b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 435. The term is also sometimes applied to the practice of sending the jury, in the custody of an officer, to the scene of the transaction involved in the action, that they may be the better able to understand the evidence. It may also be ordered in a criminal trial to instruct the jury in respect to the place.

VIEW AND DELIVERY. When a right of common is exercisable not over the whole waste, but only in convenient places indicated from time to time by the lord of the manor or his bailiff, it is said to be exer-cisable after "view and delivery." Elton, Commons, 233.

VIEW, DEMAND OF. In real actions, the defendant was entitled to demand a view, that is, a sight of the thing, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances; as, if a real action were brought against a tenant, and such tenant did not exactly know what land it was that the demandant asked, then he might pray the view, which was that he might see the land which the demandant claimed. Brown.

VIEW OF AN INQUEST. A view or inspection taken by a jury, summoned upon an inquisition or inquest, of the place or property to which the inquisition or inquiry refers. Brown.

VIEW OF FRANK PLEDGE. In English law. An examination to see if every freeman within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freemen pledges for his peaceable demeanor. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7. It took place, originally, once in each year, after Michaelmas, and subsequently twice, after Easter and Michaelmas, at the sheriff's tourn or court leet at that season held. See "Court Leet;" "Sheriff's Tourn."

VIEWERS. Persons appointed by the courts to see and examine certain matters, and make a report of the facts, together with their opinion, to the court. In practice, they are usually appointed to lay out roads, and the like.

VIGILANTIBUS ET NON DORMIENTIBUS Jura subserviunt. The laws serve the vigilant, not those who sleep. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2327. See "Laches;" Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 799.

VIGORE CUJUS (Law Lat.) By force whereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 412.

VIIIS ET MODIS (Lat.) In the ecclesiastical courts, service of a decree or citation viis et modis, i. e., by all "ways and means" likely to affect the party with knowledge of its contents, is equivalent to substituted service in the temporal courts, and is opposed to personal service. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1258, 1283.

VILL. In England, this word was used to signify the parts into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. Fortesc. c. 24. See Co. Litt. 115b. It also signifies a town or city. Barr. Obs. St. 133.

VILLA EST EX PLURIBUS MANSIONIBUS vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis, et sub appellatione villarum continentur burgi et civitates. Vill is a neighborhood of many mansions, a collection of many neighbors, and under the term of "vills," boroughs and cities are contained. Co. Litt. 115.

VILLAGE. Any small assemblage of houses for dwelling or business, or both whether incorporated or not, 76 Minn. 469; 79 N. W. 510, or whether situated upon regularly laid out streets or not. 71 Ill. 569; 27 Ill. 49.

The word "village" has different meanings, and the sense in which it is employed must be determined from the context. 273 Ill. 180.

"Towns" will include "villages," 125 Ga. 559; 54 S. E. 539, but the terms are not synonymous within the meaning of the law. 197 Ill. 452.

Villages are auxiliaries of the government in the important business of municipal rule, 17 Wall. 328; agencies in the administration of civil government; public corporations partaking of the nature of municipal corporations in their incidents. 77 Me. 530; 1 Atl. 689, 690.

VILLAIN. An epithet used to cast contempt and contumely on the person to whom it is applied.

To call a man a villain in a letter written to a third person will entitle him to an action without proof of special damages. 1 Bos. & P. 331.

VILLANIS REGIS SUBTRACTIS REDUCENDIS. A writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged. Reg. Orig. 87.

VILLANUM SERVITIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Villein service. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 13, § 1.

VILLEIN (vilis, base or villa, estate). A person attached to a manor, who was substantially in the condition of a slave, who performed the base and menial work upon the manor for the lord, and was generally a subject of property, and belonging to him. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 26.

The feudal villein of the lowest order, unprotected as to property, and subject to the most ignoble services. But his circumstances were very different from the slave of the Southern states, for no person was, in the eye of the law, a villein, except as to his master; in relation to all other persons he was a freeman. Litt. Ten. §§ 189, 190; Hallam, View Mid. Ages, vol. 1, 122, 124; Id. vol. 2, 199.

VILLEIN IN GROSS. A villein annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one person to another. Litt. § 181.

VILLEIN REGARDANT. A villein annexed to the manor or land; a serf.

VILLEIN SERVICES. Base, but certain and determined, services. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 187.

VILLEIN SOCAGE (Saxon, soc, free, or Lat. soca, a plough). The villeins, from living on one piece of land, came at last to be allowed to hold it by tenure of villeinage, e. g., uncertain menial services. These services at last became fixed; the tenure was then called "villein socage." 1 Washb. Real Prop. 26.

VILLENAGIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Villenage; the condition or tenure of a villein; bondage. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 1.

VILLENOUS JUDGMENT. In old English law. A judgment given by the common law in attain, or in cases of conspiracy.

Its effects were to make the object of it lose his liberam legem, and become infamous. He forfeited his goods and chattels, and his lands during life; and this barbarous judgment further required that his lands should be wasted, his houses razed; his trees rooted up, and that his body should be cast into prison. He could not be a juror or witness. Burrows, 996, 1027; 4 Bl. Comm. 136.

VIM VI REPELLERE LICET, MODO fiat moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad repulsandam injuriam. It is lawful to repel force by force; but let it be done with the self-control of blameless defense,—not to take revenge, but to repel injury. Co. Litt. 162.

VINCULACION. In Spanish law. An entail. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 308.

VINCULO. In Spanish law. The bond, chain, or tie of marriage. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 6, c. 1, § 2.

VINCULO MATRIMONII. See "Divorce."

VINCULUM (Lat.) A chain; a connected series; a connection or relation. See "Consanguinity."

A bond; a band; a tie. Vinculum matrimonii, the bond or tie of marriage; the matrimonial obligation.

The binding force of law. Obligatio est juris vinculum, obligation is a bond of law, or legal tie. Bracton, fol. 99.

VINDEX. In the civil law, a defender.

VINDICARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To claim, or challenge; to demand one's own; to assert a right in or to a thing; to assert or claim a property in a thing; to claim a thing as one's own. Calv. Lex. To avenge; to punish.

VINDICATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The claiming a thing as one's own; the asserting of a right or title in or to a thing.

The name of an action in rem, by which a right or thing was claimed. Inst. 4. 6. 15.

VINDICATION. In civil law. The claim made to property by the owner of it. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 281. See "Revendication."

VINDICATORY PARTS OF LAWS. The sanction of the laws, whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any public wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty. 1 Steph. Comm. 37; 1 Brown & H. Comm. 50-1.

VINDICTA. In Roman law. A rod or wand, and, from the use of that instrument in their course, various legal acts came to be distinguished by the term; e. g., one of the three ancient modes of manumission was by the vindicta; also the rod or wand intervened in the progress of the old action of vindicatio, whence the name of that action. Brown.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES. Exemplary or punitive damages.

VIOL (Fr.) In French law. Rape. Barr. Obs. St. 139.

VIOLENCE. The abuse of force. Theorie des Lois Criminelles, 32. That force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Merlin, Repert. The term is synonymous with "physical force." 31 Conn. 212. See "Force."

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION. A strong or necessary presumption. 3 Bl. Comm. 371; Burr. Circ. Ev. 60.

VIOLENT PROFITS. In Scotch law. The gains made by a tenant holding over are so called. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 54.

VIOLENTA PRAESUMPTIO ALIQUANDO est plena probatio. Violent presumption is sometimes full proof. Co. Litt. 6b.

VIPERINA EST EXPOSITIO QUAE CORRODIT viscera textus. That is a viperous exposition which gnaws or eats out the bowels of the text. 11 Coke, 34.

VIR ET UXOR CENSENTUR IN LEGE una persona. Husband and wife are considered one person in law. Co. Litt. 112; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 27.

VIR ET UXOR SUNT QUASI UNICA persona, quia caro et sanguis unus; res licet sit propria uxoris, vir tamen ejus custos, cum sit caput mulleris. Man and wife are, as it were, one person, because only one flesh and blood; although the property may be the wife's, the husband is keeper of it, since he is the head of the wife. Co. Litt. 112.

VIR MILITANS DEO NON IMPLICETUR secularibus negotiis. A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business. Co. Litt. 70.

VIRE ACQUIRIT EUNDO. It gains strength by continuance. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 231, 237.

VIRGA. An obsolete word, which signifies a rod of staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, and constables carry as a badge or ensign of their office.

VIRGATA REGIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The royal verge; the verge; the bounds of the king's household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 185. A space of twelve leagues in circuit around the king's palace or residence. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 2; Id. c. 4, § 2.

VIRGE, TENANT BY. A species of copyholder, who holds by the virge or rod.

VIRGO INTACTA. A pure virgin.

VIRIDARIO ELIGENDO. A writ for choice of a verderer in the forest. Reg. Orig. 177.

VIRILIA (Lat.) The privy members of a man. Bracton, lib. 3, p. 144.

VIRTUS. (Lat.) In old English practice. The substance or tenor.

VIRTUTE CUJUS. By virtue whereof. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

VIRTUTE OFFICII (Lat.) By virtue of his office. A sheriff, a constable, and some other officers may virtute officii apprehend a man who has been guilty of a crime in their presence.

VIS (Lat. force). Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property.

VIS ABLATIVE (Lat.) In the civil law. Ablative force; force which is exerted in taking away (auferendo) a thing from another. Calv. Lex.

VIS ARMATA. In the civil and old English law. Armed force; force exerted by means of arms, weapons, or anything that can hurt or injure.

VIS CLANDESTINA (Lat.) In old English law. Clandestine force; such as is used by night. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS COMPULSIVA. In civil and old English law. Compulsive force; that which is exerted to compel another to do an act against his will; force exerted by menaces or terror. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS DIVINA (Lat.) In the civil law. Divine or superhuman force; the act of God. Dig. 19. 2. 25. 6.

VIS EXPULSIVA (Lat.) In old English law. Expulsive force; force used to expel another, or put him out of his possession. Bracton contrasts it with vis simplex, and divides it into expulsive force with arms, and expulsive force without arms. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS EXTURBATIVA (Lat.) In the civil law. Exturbative force; force used to thrust out (exturbare) another. Force used between two contending claimants of possession, the one endeavoring to thrust out the other. Calv. Lex.

VIS FLUMINIS (Lat.) In the civil law. The force of a river or stream; the force exerted by the rapidity or magnitude of a current of water.

VIS IMPRESSA (Lat.) Immediate force; original force. This phrase is applied to cases of trespass when a question arises whether an injury has been caused by a direct force, or one which is indirect. When the original force, or vis impressa, had ceased to act before the injury commenced, then there is no force, the effect is mediate, and the proper remedy is trespass on the case.

When the injury is the immediate consequence of the force, or vis proxima, trespass, vi et armis lies. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3483; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3583.

VIS INERMIS. In old English law. Unarmed force; the opposite of "vis armata." Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS INJURIOSA. In old English law. Wrongful force; otherwise called "illicita" (unlawful). Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS INQUIETATIVA. In the civil law. Disquieting force. Calv. Lex. Bracton defines it to be where one does not permit another to use his possession quietly and in peace. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS LAICA. In old English law. Lay force; an armed force used to hold possession of a church. Reg. Orig. 59, 60.

VIS LEGIBUS EST INIMICA. Force is inimical to the laws. 3 Inst. 176.

VIS LICITA. In old English law. Lawful force. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS MAJOR (Lat.) A superior force. In law it signifies inevitable accident.

This term is used in the civil law in nearly the same way that the words "act of God" (q. v.) are used in the common law. Generally, no one is responsible for an accident which arises from the vis major; but a man may be so where he has stipulated that he would, and when he has been guilty of a fraud or deceit. 2 Kent, Comm. 448; Poth. Pret a Usage, notes 48, 60; Story, Bailm. § 25.

VIS PERTURBATIVA (Lat.) In old English law. Perturbative force. Force used between parties contending for a possession; or, as Bracton explains it, where one contends that he possesses the thing, though he has not the right, and the other asserts that he is in possession, since he has the right (ubi quis contendit se possidere cum jus non habeat, et alius dicat se esse in possessione, cum jus habeat). Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS PROXIMA (Lat.) Immediate force. See "Vis Impressa."

VIS SIMPLEX. In old English law. Simple or mere force. Distinguished by Bracton from "vis armata," and also from "vis expulsiva." Bracton, fol. 162.

VISA. In civil law. The formula put upon an act; a register; a commercial book, in order to approve of it and authenticate it.

VISCOUNT (Lat. vice comes). This name was made use of as an arbitrary title of honor, without any office pertaining to it, by Henry VI. for the first time. The sheriff or earl's deputy holds the office of vice comes, of which viscount is a translation, but used, as we have just seen, in a different sense. The dignity of a viscount is next to an earl. 1 Bl. Comm. 397.

WISE. An indorsement on a passport by the authorities, denoting that it has been examined, and that the person who bears it is permitted to proceed on his journey. Webster.

VISINETUS (L. Lat.) In old English law. Venue.

VISITATION. The act of examining into the affairs of a corporation.

The power of visitation is applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations. 1 Bl. Comm. 480; 2 Kyd, Corp. 174. The visitation of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice. See 2 Kent, Comm. 240.

VISITATION AND SEARCH. In international law. The right of a belligerent to board neutral private vessels on the high seas, or in the waters of either belligerent, and examine their papers and cargo. See Wheaton, Int. Law, § 525; Hall, Int. Law, p. 724.

VISITATION BOOKS. Compliations made out or collected by the heralds in the circuits which their commissions authorized them to make, for the purpose of inquiring into the state of families and registering marriages and descents which were verified to them by oath. They are good evidence of pedigree. 3 Bl. Comm. 105.

VISITER. An inspector of the government, of corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Bl. Comm. 482. See Dane, Abr. Index; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 303; 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244.

VISNE. The neighborhood; a neighboring place; a place near at hand; the venue.

Formerly the visne was confined to the immediate neighborhood where the cause of action arose, and many verdicts were disturbed because the visne was too large, which becoming a great grievance, several statutes were passed to remedy the evil. 21 Jac. I. c. 13, gives aid after verdict, where the visne is partly wrong.—that is where it is warded out of too many or too few places in the county named. 16 & 17

Car. II. c. 8, goes further, and cures defects of the visne wholly, so that the cause is tried by a jury of the proper county. See "Venue."

VISUS (Lat.) In old English practice. View; inspection, either of a place or person.

Examination or inspection by jurors of the subject of an action. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6, § 1 et seq. See "Vew."

VISUS TERRAE (L. Lat.) In old English practice. View of land. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 48.

VITILITIGATION. Cavilous litigation. Obsolete. Webster.

VITIOUS INTROMISSION. See "Vicious Intromission."

VITIUM CLERICI NOCERE NON DEBET. Clerical errors ought not to prejudice. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 23; Dig. 34. 5. 8.

VITIUM EST QUOD FUGI DEBET, NE, si rationem non invenias, mox legem sine ratione esse clames. It is a fault which ought to be avoided, that if you cannot discover the reason, you should presently exclaim that the law is without reason. Ellesmere, Postn. 86.

VITIUM SCRIPTORIS. In old English law. The fault or mistake of a writer or copyist; a clerical error. Gilb. For. Rom. 185.

VIVA AQUA. In the civil law. Living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain (quae fonte exit). Calv. Lex.

VIVA PECUNIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Live cattle. See "Pecunia."

VIVA VOCE (Lat. with the living voice). Verbally. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce when he does so in open court. The term is opposed to "deposition." It is sometimes opposed to "ballot;" as, the people vote by ballot, but their representatives in the legislature vote viva voce.

VIVA VOX (Lat.) The living voice; oral utterance, as distinguished from written words. Hence the common phrase, viva voce, by word of mouth.

VIVARIUM, or VIVARY (Lat. from vivus, alive).

—In the Civil Law. An inclosed place, where live wild animals are kept. Calv. Lex.; Spelman; A. Gell. Noct. Att. ii. 20.

—In Old English Law. A place in land or water where living things are kept; a vivary. Most commonly in law it signifies a park, warren, or fishery. In the statute of Merton (c. 11) it is taken for a warren and fishery. 2 Inst. 100; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 2.

VIVUM VADIUM. See "Vadium Vivum."

VIX (Lat.) Scarcely; hardly; rarely.

VIX ULLA LEX FIERI POTEST QUAE omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti, prospiciat, utilis est. Scarcely any law can be made which is beneficial to all; but if it benefit the majority, it is useful. Plowd. 369.

VOCABULA ARTIS (Lat.) Words of art; "vocables" of art; technical terms. Co. Litt. pref.; 5 Coke, 121b.

VOCABULA ARTIUM EXPLICANDA sunt secundum definitiones prudentium. Terms of art should be explained according to the definitions of those who are most experienced in that art. Puffendorff, de Off. Hom. lib. 1, c. 17, § 3; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 16, § 8.

VOCARE AD CURIAM. In feudal law. To summon to court. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 22.

VOCATIO IN JUS (Lat.) In Roman law. According to the practice in the legis actiones of the Roman law, a person having demand against another verbally cited him to go with him to the praetor; in jus eamus; in jus te voco. This was denominated vocatio in jus. If a person thus summoned refused to go, he could be compelled by force to do so, unless he found a vindex,—that is, a procurator, or a person to undertake his cause. When the parties appeared before the praetor, they went through the particular formalities required by the action applicable to the cause. If the cause was not ended the same day, the parties promised to appear again at another day, which was called vadimonium. See Matt. v. 25.

VOCIFERATIO (Lat.) In old English law. Outcry; hue and cry. Cowell.

VOCO (Lat.) In civil and old English law. I call; I summon; I vouch. In jus voco te, I summon you to court; I summon you before the praetor. The formula by which a Roman action was anciently commenced. Adams, Rom. Ant. 242. Voco talem, I call or vouch such a one. The old formula of vouching to warranty. Bracton, fol. 382b.

VOID. That which has no force or effect. "Void" is often loosely used in varied meanings, and applied indifferently to a thing which has no force or effect, and is an absolute nullity, or to that which by reason of some inherent vice or defect, may be adjudged void by a court when the question is presented to it; 214 Ill. 395; often used in the sense of "voidable" (q. v.) 44 Pa. St. 15.

VOIDABLE. That which has some force or effect, but which, in consequence of some inherent quality, may be legally annulled or avoided.

The steps to avoid it must be taken by the proper party and by means of a direct attack upon it. 156 Ill. 544; 181 Ill. App. 53; 252 Ill. 42.

VOILOIR, Voillour. L. Fr. In old English law. A will; a testament. Kelham.

VOIR DIRE. A preliminary examination of a witness or venireman to ascertain whether he is competent.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA. He who consents cannot receive an injury. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 2279, 2327; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 245; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 449; Wingate, Max. 482; 4 Term R. 657; Plowd. 501.

VOLO (Lat.) I will; I wish or desire. One of the appropriate words used in Roman testaments to create a trust. Inst. 2. 24. 3. Bracton uses it as a term of conveyance. Bract. fol. 18b.

VOLUI' SED NON DIXIT. He willed, but did not say. 4 Kent, Comm. 538.

VOLUMEN (Lat. from volvere, to roll.) In the civil law. A volume; so called from its form, being rolled up.

VOLUMUS. We will. The first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters patent.

VOLUNTARIUS DAEMON. A drunkard. Co. Litt. 247a.

VOLUNTARY. Willingly; done with one's consent; negligently. Wolff. § 5.

VOLUNTARY ANSWER. In chancery practice. An answer put in by a defendant, when the plaintiff had filed no interrogatories which required an answer.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. An assignment made by a debtor in trust for the benefit of his creditors. So called in contradistinction from "compulsory assignments," or such as are made under statutes of bankruptcy and insolvency, or by order of some competent court. Burrill, Assignm. p. 4; 10 Paige (N. Y.) 445; 1 Comst. (N. Y.) 201.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. The transfer of an estate made without any adequate consideration of value.

VOLUNTARY DEPOSIT. In civil law. A deposit which is made by the mere consent or agreement of the parties. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1054. See "Deposit."

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE. The giving to a prisoner voluntarily any liberty not authorized by law. 5 Mass. 310; 2 Chipm. (Vt.) 11; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 559; 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 106; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2332. See "Escape."

VOLUNTARY IGNORANCE. A willing omission to learn or know.

VOLUNTARY JURISDICTION. In ecclesiastical law. That kind of jurisdiction which requires no judicial proceedings; as, the granting letters of administration and receiving the probate of wills.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See "Manslaughter."

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT. In practice. The abandonment of his cause by a plaintiff, and an agreement that a judgment for costs be entered against him. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3306.

VOLUNTARY OATH. An oath taken in some extrajudicial matter, or before some magistrate or officer who cannot compel it to be taken.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT. That made by free will and choice. Not compelled by process or force.

VOLUNTARY REDEMPTION. In Scotch law. Where a mortgagee receives the sum due into his own hands, and discharges the mortgage, without any consignment. Bell, Dict.

VOLUNTARY SALE. One made freely, without constraint, by the owner of the thing sold. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 974.

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT. A transaction whereby a grantor makes and executes a deed which he does not deliver to the grantee, but leaves it with a notary with instructions to record the deed after the death of the grantor is a voluntary settlement. 216 Ill. 164.

VOLUNTARY WASTE. That which is either active or willful, in contradistinction to that which arises from mere negligence, which is called "permissive" waste. 2 Bouv. Inst. 2394 et seq. See "Waste."

VOLUNTAS DONATORIS, IN CHARTA doni sui manifeste expressa observetur. The will of the donor, clearly expressed in the deed, should be observed. Co. Litt. 21a.

VOLUNTAS EST JUSTA SENTENTIA de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A will is an exact opinion or determination concerning that which each one wishes to be done after his death.

VOLUNTAS ET PROPOSITUM DISTINGUUNT maleficia. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes. Bracton, 2b, 136b.

VOLUNTAS FACIT QUOD IN TESTAMENTO scriptum valeat. The will of the testator gives validity to what is written in the will. Dig. 30. 1. 12. 3.

VOLUNTAS IN DELICTIS NON EXITUS spectatur. In offenses, the will, and not the consequences, are to be looked to. 2 Inst. 57.

VOLUNTAS REPUTABATUR PRO FAC-to. The will is to be taken for the deed. 3 Inst. 69.

VOLUNTAS TESTATORIS AMBULATO-ria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory until his death; that is, he may change it at any time. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83; 4 Coke, 61.

VOLUNTAS TESTATORIS HABET IN-terpretationem latam et benignam. The will of a testator has a broad and liberal interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 260; Dig. 50. 17. 12.

VOLUNTAS ULTIMA TESTATORIS EST perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Co. Litt. 322.

VOLUNTEER.

—In Conveyances.

Persons who receive a voluntary conveyance.

It is a general rule of the courts of equity, that they will not assist a mere volunteer who has a defective conveyance. Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 5, § 2. And see the note there for some exceptions to this rule. See, generally, 1 Madd. 271; 1 Supp. Ves. Jr. 320; 2 Supp. Ves. Jr. 321; Powell, Mortg. Index; 4 Bouv. Inst. notes 3968-3973.

—Rendition of Services. One who introduces himself into matters which do not concern him, and does, or undertakes to do, something which he is not bound to do or which it is not in pursuance or protection of any interest of the master, and which is undertaken in the absence of any peril requiring him to act as on an emergency. 279 Ill. 17.

One who has no interest in the work being done; a person who gives his services without any express or implied promise of remuneration in return. 82 Ill. App. 674.

—In Military Law. Persons who, in time of war, voluntarily enlist in the military service.

Their rights and duties are prescribed by the municipal laws of the different states, but when in actual service, they are subject to the laws of the United States and the articles of war.

VOTE. Suffrage; the voice of an individual in making a choice by many. The total number of voices given at an election; as, the presidential vote.

VOTING TRUST. A voting trust may be comprehensively defined as one created by an agreement between a group of the stockholders of a corporation and the trustee, or by a group of identical agreements between individual stockholders and a common trustee, whereby upon certain contingencies or under certain circumstances, it is provided that control over the stock owned by such stockholders shall be lodged in the trustee, either with or without a reservation to the owners or persons designated by them of the power to direct how such control shall be used. 3 Fletcher Cyclopedica Corporations 2871.

VOTUM. A vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding day. Fleta, 1, 4.

VOUCHEE. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the "vouchee." 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2093.

—In Accounts. An account book in which are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Any acquittance or receipt which is evidence of payment, or of the debtor's being discharged. See 3 Halst. (N. J.) 299; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 218.

VOUCHER. The ordinary meaning of "voucher" is a document which shows that services have been performed or expenses incurred. It covers any acquittance or receipt discharging the person or evidencing payment by him. When used in connection with the disbursement of moneys it implies some instrument that shows on what account or by what authority a particular payment has been made, or that services have been performed which entitle the party to whom it is issued to payment. It vouches for the truth of accounts or estimates. 136 Ill. App. 465.

—In Old Conveyancing. The person on whom the tenant to the praecipe calls to defend the title to the land, because he is supposed to have warranted the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

The person usually employed for this purpose is the crier of the court, who is therefore called the "common voucher." Cruise, Dig. tit. 36, c. 3, § 1; 22 Viner, Abr. 26; Dane, Index. See "Recovery."

VOUCHER TO WARRANTY. The calling one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him. Co. Litt. 101b.

VOUS VEIES (VOIES, or VEITZ) BIEN coment (Law Fr. you see well how). Formal words anciently used by counsel in addressing the court. Y. B. T. 1 Edw. III. 9; Y. B. H. 2 Edw. III. 9; Y. B. P. 8 Edw. III. 23; Y. B. M. 4 Hen. VI. 1.

VOX (L. Lat.) In old practice. Speech; saying; statement. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 1; c. 63, § 9.

VOX EMISSA VOLAT; LITERA SCRIP-ta manet. Words spoken vanish; words written remain. A written contract cannot be varied by parol proof. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 594; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 571, 572.

VULGARIS OPINIO EST DUPLEX, VIZ., orta inter graves et discretos, quae multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines absque specie veritatis.

Common opinion is of two kinds, viz., that which arises among grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that which arises among light and common men, without any appearance of truth. 4 Coke, 107.

VULGARIS PURGATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Common purgation; a name given to the trial by ordeal, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. 4 Bl. Comm. 342.

VULGO CONCEPTI (Lat.) In the civil law. Spurious children; bastards; those who cannot point out their father, or, if they can, have him for a father whom it is not lawful to have (qui patrem demonstrare non possunt, vel qui possunt quidem, sed eum habent quem habere non licet). Dig. l. 5. 28.

VULGO QUAESITI (Lat.) In the civil law. Spurious children; literally, gotten from the people; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, who are considered as having no father. Inst. 3. 4. 3; Id. 3. 5. 4.

VYCINE (Law Fr.; Lat. vicinus). A neighbor. Dyer, 36b (Fr. Ed.)

W

WACREOUR (Law Fr.) In old English law. A vagabond or vagrant. De wacreours per pays. Britt. c. 29.

WADIUS, Wadium. L. Lat. In old European law. A pledge. Spelman.

WADSET. In Scotch law. A right by which lands or other heritable subjects are impignorated by the proprietor to his creditor in security of his debt. Like other heritable rights, it is protected by seisin.

Wadsets, by the present practice, are commonly made out in the form of mutual contracts, in which one party sells the land, and the other grants the right of reversion. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 1. 2.

Wadsets are proper where the use of the land shall go for the use of the money; improper where the reverser agrees to make up the deficiency; and where it amounts to more, the surplus profit of the land is applied to the extinction of the principal. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 12. 13.

WADSETTER. In Scotch law. A creditor to whom a wadset is made.

WAFORS. Conductors of vessels at sea. Cowell.

WAGE. To give a pledge or security for the performance of anything; as to wage or gage deliverance to wage law, etc. Co. Litt. 294. This word is but little used.

WAGER. A wager is a contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening of an uncertain event. 75 Ill. 560; 78 Ill. App. 241; 113 Ill. 239.

A bet (q. v.)

WAGER OF BATTEL. A superstitious mode of trial which formerly disgraced the English law.

The last case of this kind was commenced in the year 1817 but not proceeded in to judgment; and at the next session of the British parliament an act was passed to abolish appeals of murder, treason, felony, or other offenses, and wager of battel, or joining issue or trial by battel, in writs of right. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. For the history of this species of trial, see 3 Bl. Comm. 337; 4 Bl. Comm. 347; Enc. "Gage de Bataille;" Steph. Pl. 122, and Append. note 35.

WAGER OF LAW. In old practice. An oath taken by a defendant in an action of debt that he does not owe the claim, supported by the oaths of eleven neighbors.

When an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract, and the defendant pleads nil debet, and concludes his plea with this plea, with this formula, "And this he is ready to defend against him the said A. B. and his suit, as the court of our lord the king here shall consider," etc., he is then put in sureties (vadios) to wage his law on a day appointed by the judge. The wager of law consists in an oath taken by the defendant on the appointed day, and confirmed by the oaths of eleven neighbors or compurgators. This oath had the effect of a verdict in favor of the defendant, and was only allowed in the actions of debt on simple contract and detinue; nor was it allowed to any one not of good character. In consequence of this privilege of the defendant, assumpsit displaces debt as a form of action on simple contracts, and, instead of detinue, trover was used. But in England, wager of law was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 13. And even before its abolition it had fallen into disuse. It was last used as a method of defense in 2 Barn. & C. 538, where the defendant offered to wage his law, but the plaintiff abandoned the case. This was in 1824. If it ever had any existence in the United States, it is now completely abolished. 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 642.

The name (in law Latin, vadiatio legis) comes from the defendant's being put in pledges (vadios) to make his oath on the appointed day. There was a similar oath in the Roman law, and in the laws of most of the nations that conquered Rome. It was very early in use in England, as Glanville distinctly describes it. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 9, 12. See Steph. Pl. 124, 250, and note xxxix.; 2 Inst. 119; Mod. Entr. 179; Lilly, Entr. 467; 3 Chit. Pl. 497; 13 Viner, Abr. 58; Bac. Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index. For the origin of this form of trial, see Steph. Pl. note xxxix.; Co. Litt. 394, 395; 3 Bl. Comm. 341.

WAGER POLICY. In insurance law. A policy without any real interest to support it; a policy in which the insured has no interest, being in fact nothing more than a wager or bet between the parties, whether such a voyage would be performed, or such a ship arrive safe. 3 Kent, Comm. 277, 278. A mere hope or expectation, without some interest in the subject matter, is a wager policy. Id. 275. Mr. Arnould defines a wager policy to be "one in which the parties, by express terms, disclaim, on the face of it, the intention of making a contract of indemnity." 1 Arnould, Ins. 276 (281, Perkins Ed.) Policies of this kind are now generally held to be illegal. Id. 285 (289); 1 Duer, Ins. 98-95, 154, 155.

WAGERING CONTRACTS. See "Gambling Contract."

WAGES. A compensation given to a hired person for manual or other inferior services.

The term "wages" does not include "salary," and the term "wages earned" is an apt expression in regard to laborers who are only entitled to pay for services actually rendered, but is entirely inappropriate when used concerning public officers or clerks who receive annual salaries, which are not due until the end of the year, and who are entitled to be paid so long as they hold their offices, without regard to the services rendered. 25 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 368. See "Salary."

WAIFS. Stolen goods waived or scattered by a thief in his flight in order to effect his escape.

Such goods, by the English common law, belong to the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 296; 5 Coke, 109; Cro. Eliz. 694. This prerogative has never been adopted here against the true owner, and never put in practice against the finder, though against him there would be better reason for adopting it. 2 Kent, Comm. 292. See Comyn, Dig.; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 239, note.

WAINABLE. In old records. That may be plowed or manured; tillable. Cowell; Blount.

WAINAGE. In old English law. The team and instruments of husbandry belonging to a countryman, and especially to a villein who was required to perform agricultural services.

WAINAGIUM (Saxon woeg; Lat. vagina). What is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land. Barr. Obs. St. p. 12; Magna Charta, c. 14. According to Selden and Lord Bacon, it is not the same as contenementum, used in the same chapter of Magna Charta, meaning the power of entertaining guests, or countenance, as common people say.

WAITING CLERKS. Officers whose duty it formerly was to wait in attendance upon the court of chancery. The office was abolished in 1842 by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. Mozley & W.

WAIVE. A term applied to a woman as "outlaw" is applied to a man. A man is an outlaw; a woman is a waive. Crabb.

To abandon or forsake a right.

To abandon without right; as, "if the felon waives,—that is, leaves any goods in his flight from those who either pursue him, or are apprehended by him so to do,—he forfeits them, whether they be his own goods, or goods stolen by him." Bac. Abr. "Forfeiture" (B).

WAIVER. The voluntary surrender and relinquishment of a right. 29 Minn. 191. The intentional relinquishment of a known right. 153 Ill. 468.

It is a somewhat narrower term than "abandonment" (q. v.) and is applied to rights, not to property.

To constitute a waiver proper, there must ordinarily be a valuable consideration (75 N. Y. 453), a full knowledge of the right to be waived (48 N. Y. 399), and an actual intent to waive (15 Gray [Mass.] 229); but where there are circumstances of estoppel, i. e., where a party has misled another to his prejudice as to intent to insist on a right, it amounts to a waiver, irrespective of intent (7 Lea [Tenn.] 467); or consideration (30 N. Y. 164); and there are certain acts to which the law imputes the character of a waiver, irrespective of intent, as the right to a dilatory plea is waived by pleading to the merits (29 Conn. 82).

Unless affected by the statute of frauds (9 Wend. [N. Y.] 79), no special formalities are required, and even a writing under seal may be waived by parol (101 U. S. 527).

WAIVIARE. (L. Lat.) In old English law. To waive; to throw away; to forsake, or abandon. Spelman.

WAKEMAN. The chief magistrate of Ripon, in Yorkshire. Camd. Brit.

WAKENING. In Scotch law. The revival of an action.

An action is said to sleep when it lies over, not insisted on for a year, in which case it is suspended. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 33. With us a revival is by scire facias.

WALAPAUZ (Lomb.) In old Lombardic law. The disguising the head or face, with the intent of committing a theft. LL. Longobard, tit. 15, cap. ult.

WALESCHERY. The being a Welshman. Spelman.

WALISCUS. In Saxon law. A servant or any ministerial officer. Cowell.

WALKERS. Foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them. Cowell.

WALLA, or WALLIA (Law Lat.; from Saxon wal; Lat. vallum). In old English law. A bank of earth cast up for a mound, or boundary; a wall; a sea wall. 2 Mon. Angl. 920; Cowell; Spelman, voc. Wallia.

WAND OF PEACE. In Scotch law. The wand which the messenger carries along with his blazon, in executing a capton, and with which he touches the prisoner. A sliding along this staff of a movable ring, or the breaking of the staff, is a protest that the officer has been resisted or deforced. Burton, Law Scot. p. 572; Bell, Dict. "Imprisonment."

WANG (Saxon). In old English law. A field. Blount.

The cheek or jaw wherein the teeth are set. "Hence, with Chaucer," says Blount, "we call the cheek teeth or grinders 'wangs'."

and 'wang teeth,' which is also notified in that old way of sealing writings:

'And in witness that this is sooth,
I bite the wax with my wang tooth.'

WANLASS. An ancient customary tenure of lands; i. e., to drive deer to a stand, that the lord may have a shot. Blount, Ten. 140.

WANTON. Reckless; disregarding the rights of others; without reasonable excuse. See 14 Tex. App. 201. The act must be intentional, with design, and under circumstances evincing a reckless destructive spirit. 147 Wis. 70, 75. It is not synonymous with "wilful." 28 Ind. 290.

WAPENTAKE (from Saxon, wapen, i. e., armatura, and tac, i. e., tactus). A Saxon court, held monthly by the alderman for the benefit of the hundred.

It was called a "wapentake" from "wapen," arms, and "tac," to touch; because, when the chief of the hundred entered upon his office, he appeared in the field on a certain day, on horseback, with a pike in his hand, and all the principal men met him with lances. Upon this he alighted, and they all touched his pike with their lances, in token of their submission to his authority. In this court, causes of great moment were heard and determined, as Mr. Dugdale has shown from several records. Besides which, it took cognizance of theft, trials by ordeal, view of frank pledge, and the like; whence after the Conquest it was called the sheriff's tourn, and, as regarded the examination of the pledges, the court of the view of frank pledge. These pledges were no other than the freemen within the liberty, who, according to an institution of King Alfred, were mutually pledged for the good behavior of each other. Fortesc. de Laud. c. 24; Dugd. Orig. Jur. 27; 4 Bl. Comm. 273. Sir Thomas Smith derives it from the custom of taking away the arms, at the muster of each hundred, from those who could not find sureties for good behavior. Rep. Angl. lib. 2, c. 16.

WAR. War is a hostile contest with arms between two or more states or communities claiming sovereign rights. Field, Int. Code, p. 467.

Classification:

(1) War is either offensive, defensive, or auxiliary. The distinction between offensive and defensive war has been based on the provocation leading to the war, but this test is difficult of application. The most practical test is as to the belligerent in whose territory the war is waged. See Glenn, Int. Law, 169.

An auxiliary war is one undertaken by a third nation in support of a belligerent.

(2) War is either public or private, accordingly as it has or has not the sanction of the sovereign power of the state.

A insurrectionary war in which one party is a government, and the other is not, has been called "mixed war,"

(3) War is either perfect (sometimes called "solemn"), or imperfect (sometimes called "unsolemn"), accordingly as it has been declared in due form by the sovereign power, or is limited as respects places or persons. 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 483.

(4) War is either foreign or civil, according as it is between independent states, or between a state, as such, and a party or section of its own subjects. Civil war is distinguished from a mere treasonable insurrection only by degree, "by the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on." 2 Black (U. S.) 635.

WAR, ARTICLES OF. See "Articles of War."

WARACTUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Fallow; fallow ground. Quando tenementum jacet incultum et ad waractum, when the tenement lies untilled, and at fallow. Bracton, fol. 228b.

WARD. An infant placed by authority of law under the care of a guardian.

While under the care of a guardian, a ward can make no contract whatever binding upon him, except for necessaries. When the relation of guardian and ward ceases, the latter is entitled to have an account of the administration of his estate from the former. During the existence of this relation, the ward is under the subjection of his guardian, who stands in loco parentis. See "Guardian."

A subdivision of a city to watch in the daytime, for the purpose of preventing violations of the law. It is the duty of all police officers and constables to keep ward in their respective districts.

WARD FEGH. (Saxon.) In old records. Ward fee; the value of a ward, or the money paid to the lord for his redemption from wardship. Blount.

WARD HOLDING. In old Scotch law. Military tenure by which lands were held. It was so called from the yearly tax in commutation of the right to hold vassals' lands during minority. It was abolished in 1747. Burton, Law Scot. p. 375; Bell, Diet.

WARD IN CHANCERY. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor.

WARDS AND LIVERIES. In English law. The title of a court of record established in the reign of Henry VIII. See "Court of Wards and Liveries."

WARDA (Law Lat.)

—In Old English Law. Ward; guard; protection; keeping; custody. Spelman.

A ward; an infant under wardship. Spelman.

—In Old Scotch Law. An award; the judgment of a court.

WARDEN. A guardian; a keeper. This is the name given to various officers; as, the warden of the prison, the wardens of the port of Philadelphia, church wardens.

WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. Governor of the ports of England lying next France, with the authority of admiral, and power of sending out writs in his own name, etc. The constable of Dover Castle is the warden of the Cinque Ports, and was first appointed by William the Conqueror; but John I. granted to the wardens their privileges on condition that they should provide a certain number of vesels for forty days as often as the king should require them. See "Cinque Ports."

WARDMOTE (from ward, and Saxon mote, or gemote, a meeting). In English law. A court held in every ward in London.

The wardmote inquest has power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures, and searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished. Chart. Hen. II.; Enc. Lond. 185; Cunningham; Wharton. See Cowell; 4 Inst. 249; 2 Show. 525; Enc. Lond. 185; Chart. Hen. II.

WARDPENNY. Wardage.

WARDSHIP.

—In English Law. The right of the lord over the person and estate of the tenant, when the latter was under a certain age.

—In Modern Law. The status of a ward (q. v.)

WARDSHIP IN CHIVALRY. An incident to the tenure of knight service.

WARDSHIP IN COPYHOLDS. The lord is guardian of his infant tenant by special custom.

WARDWIT, WARDWYTE, or WARDWITE. In old English law. Immunity or exemption from the duty or service of ward, or from contributing to such service. Spelman. Exemption from amerement for not finding a man to do ward. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 16; Co. Litt. 83.

WARDWRIT. The being quit of giving money for the keeping of wards. Spelman.

WARECTARE. To plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement, which in Kent is called "summer land."

WAREHOUSE. A place used for the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. 23 Me. 47.

WAREHOUSE RECEIPT. A receipt by a warehouseman for chattels placed in his custody. Its return is usually required in order to obtain the property. By custom of trade it has come to be virtually negotiable in many instances. Grain, provisions, and many other staple commodities are largely transferred by delivery or indorsement of warehouse receipts.

WAREHOUSEMAN. A person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire.

WARENTIZARE. L. Lat. In old English law. To warrant; to save one harmless. Spelman.

WARGUS. (L. Lat.) In old European law. An outcast; an exile; a banished person.

WARNING. In old English probate practice. A notice to one who had entered a caveat to appear and set forth his interest. Sweet.

WARNOth. In old English law. An ancient custom, whereby, if any tenant holding of the Castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double and for the second failure, treble, etc. Cowell.

WARRANTICE. In Scotch law. A clause in a charter of heritable rights, by which the grantor obliges himself that the right conveyed shall be effectual to the receiver. It is either personal or real. A warranty. Ersk. Inst. 2. 3. 11.

WARRANT. In its broadest sense, "a writing from a competent authority, in pursuance of law, directing the doing of an act, and addressed to an officer or person competent to do the act, and affording him protection from damage if he does it." 71 N. Y. 376.

In practice, it is largely confined to process of a criminal or quasi criminal nature, the more important being:

(1) Warrant of arrest, which is a writ issued by a justice of the peace or other authorized officer, directed to a constable or other proper person, requiring him to arrest a person therein named, charged with committing some offense, and to bring him before that or some other justice of the peace.

(2) Bench warrant, which is a process granted by a court, authorizing a proper officer to apprehend and bring before it some one charged with some contempt, crime, or misdemeanor.

(3) Search warrant, which is a process issued by a competent court or officer, authorizing an officer therein named or described to examine a house or other place for the purpose of finding illicit or contraband goods or goods which it is alleged have been stolen.

—Municipal Warrants. The name "warrant" is also given to a class of municipal securities, in the nature of a bill of exchange, drawn by an officer of a municipality upon the treasurer thereof. 19 Wall. (U. S.) 468.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt, and usually containing a stipulation not to bring any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him.

WARRANT OF COMMITMENT. The written authority by which a court empowers a jailer to commit a person to custody.

WARRANT TO SUE AND DEFEND. In old practice. A special warrant from the crown, authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him. Gilb. C. P. 82; 3 Bl. Comm. 25.

A special authority, given by a party to his attorney, to commence a suit, or to appear and defend a suit, in his behalf. These warrants are now disused, though formal entries of them upon the record were long retained in practice. 1 Burrill, Prac. 39.

WARRANTEE. One to whom a warranty is made. Shep. Touch. 181.

WARRANTIA CHARTAE. An ancient and now obsolete writ, which was issued when a man was enfeoffed of land with warranty, and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.

It was brought by the feoffor pending the first suit against him, and had this valuable incident, that when the warrantor was vouched, and judgment passed against the tenant, the latter obtained judgment simultaneously against the warrantor, to recover other lands of equal value. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 134; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Rand. (Va.) 141, 148, 156; 4 Leigh (Va.) 132; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 115; Viner, Abr.; Co. Litt. 100; Hob. 22, 217.

WARRANTIZARE EST DEFENDERE ET acquietare tenentem, qui warrantum vocavit, in seisinā sua; et tenens de re warranti ex-cambium habebit ad valentiam. To warrant is to defend and insure in peace the tenant, who calls for warranty, in his seisin; and the tenant in warranty will have an exchange in proportion to its value. Co. Litt. 365.

WARRANTOR. One who makes a warranty. Shep. Touch. 181.

WARRANTOR POTES EXCIPIERE quod querens non tenet terram de qua petit warrantiam, et quod donum fuit insufficientis. A warrantor may object that the complainant does not hold the land of which he seeks the warranty, and that the gift was insufficient. Hob. 21.

WARRANTY.

—In Insurance. A statement or agreement by the insured, which is part of the contract of insurance, and the truth of which is essential to the validity of the policy.

For the distinction between "warranty" and "representation," see "Representation."

—In Sales of Personal Property. An undertaking, express or implied, by which the seller insures the existence of certain facts as to the thing sold. It is an express or implied statement of something which the party undertakes shall be a part of the contract, and, though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. 4 Mees. & W. 404.

It is express when the undertaking is by express words of the seller; it is implied when it results by inference of law from the nature of the transaction.

—In Sales of Real Property. In old law, a real covenant, whereby the grantor of an estate of freehold and his heirs were bound to warrant the title, and, either upon voucher or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartae, to yield other lands to the value of those from which there had been an eviction by a paramount title. Co. Litt. 365a.

Collateral warranty existed when the heir's title was not derived from the warranting ancestor, and yet it barred the heir from claiming the land by any collateral title, upon the presumption that he might thereafter have assets by descent from or through the ancestor; and it imposed upon him the obligation of giving the warrantee other lands in case of eviction, provided he had assets. 2 Bl. Comm. 301, 302.

Lineal warranty existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

St. 4 Anne, c. 16, annulled these collateral warranties, which had become a great grievance.

In the United States, warranty in its original form, it is presumed, has never been known. The more plain and pliable form of a covenant has been adopted in its place; and this covenant, like all other covenants, has always been held to sound in damages, which, after judgment, may be recovered out of the personal or real estate, as in other cases. And in England the matter has become one of curious learning, and of little or no practical importance. See 4 Kent, Comm. 469; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 67, note; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 45; 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 268; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 109; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 442; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 358; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 14; 1 Ired. (N. C.) 509; 2 Saund. 38, note 5.

WARRANTY DEED. One which contains covenants of warranty.

WARRANTY, VOUCHER TO. In old practice. The calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him (Co. Litt. 101b; Comyn, Dig. "Voucher" [A 1]; Booth, Real Actions, 43; 2 Saund. 32, note 1), and the time of such voucher is after the demandant has counted.

It lies in most real and mixed actions, but not in personal. Where the voucher has been made and allowed by the court, the vouchee either voluntarily appears, or there issues a judicial writ (called a summons ad warrantizandum), commanding the sheriff to summon him. Where he, either voluntarily or in obedience to this writ, appears and offers to warrant the land to the tenant, it is called entering into the warranty; after which he is considered as tenant in the action, in the place of the original tenant. The demandant then counts against him de novo, the vouchee pleads to the new count, and the cause proceeds to issue.

WARREN (Ger. wahren; Fr. garens). A place privileged by prescription or grant of the king for the preservation of hares, conies, partridges, and pheasants, or any of them. Termes de la Ley. An action lies for killing beasts of warren inside the warren; but they may be killed damage feasant on another's land. 5 Coke, 104. It need not be inclosed. 4 Inst. 318.

WARSCOT. A contribution usually made towards armor in the time of the Saxons.

WARTH. A customary payment for castle guard. Cowell.

WASH TRADES. See "Gambling Contract."

WASHING HORN. The sounding of a horn for washing before dinner. The custom is still observed in the Temple.

WASTE. Lasting and wrongful injury by the holder of a particular estate to the detriment of the holder of the reversion or remainder.

To constitute waste, the injury must be wrongful (3 Sup. Ct. N. Y. 60), by the tenant, or through his fault (2 Minor, Inst. p. 529), and must occasion lasting injury to the inheritance (1 Washb. Real Prop. 147).

What constitutes waste in a particular case is a question of fact. 22 N. J. Law, 521.

Waste is distinguished from "trespass" in that the latter is the act of a stranger, while waste is the act of a tenant.

It is distinguished from "devastavit," which is waste by an executor or administrator.

(1) Permissive waste consists in the mere neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury (69 Mich. 259), as, to suffer a house to go to decay for the want of repair. And it may be incurred in respect to the soil, as well as to the buildings, trees, fences, or live stock on the premises. See "Permissive Waste."

(2) Voluntary waste consists in the commission of some destructive act; as, in pulling down a house, or ploughing up a flower garden. 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

(3) Equitable waste is such injury to the inheritance as is within the legal right of the tenant, but which a man of ordinary prudence would not commit in the management of his own property. 29 Law J. Ch. 598.

(4) Meliorating waste is that which increases the present value of the estate, but damages the inheritance by charging it with added burden, as by improvement, the unpaid cost whereof is a lien.

WASTORS. Thieves. Cowell.

WATCH AND WARD. A phrase used in the English law to denote the superintendence and care of certain officers whose duties are to protect the public from harm.

WATCHMAN. An officer in many cities and towns, whose duty it is to watch during the night and take care of the property of the inhabitants.

He possesses, generally, the common-law authority of a constable to make arrests, where there is reasonable ground to suspect a felony, though there is no proof of a felony having been committed. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 24; 2 Hale, P. C. 96; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 13, § 1, etc.; 1 East, P. C. 303; 2 Inst. 52; Comyn, Dig. "Imprisonment" (H 4); Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Taunt. 14; 1 Barn. & Ald. 227; Peake, 39; 1 Moody, C. C. 334; 1 Esp. 294.

WATER BAILIFF. In English law. An officer appointed to search ships in ports. 10 Hen. VII. 30.

WATER BAYLEY. In American law. An officer mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth (A. D. 1671), whose duty was to collect dues to the colony for fish taken in their waters. Colony Laws (Ed. 1836) 164, 166. Probably another form of water bailiff (q. v.)

WATERCOURSE. This term is applied to the flow or movement of the water in rivers, creeks, and other streams.

Surface water flowing from one tract to another having a fixed and determinate course, so as to uniformly discharge it upon the servient tract at a fixed and definite point, the course thus uniformly followed by the water in its flow is a watercourse. 177 Ill. 140.

WATER MEASURE. A greater measure than the Winchester, formerly used for selling coals in the pool, etc. 22 Car. II. c. 11.

WATER ORDEAL. In Saxon and old English law. The ordeal or trial by water, which was of two kinds,—by hot water and by cold water. The hot-water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. 4 Bl. Comm. 343; Spelman. The cold-water ordeal was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming, it was deemed an evidence of his guilt, but, if he sank, he was acquitted. Id.

WATERED STOCK. Stock which is issued as fully paid up, when in fact the whole amount of the par value thereof has not been paid in. If any amount less than the whole face value of the stock has not been paid, and the stock has been issued as fully paid, then the stock is watered to the extent of the deficit. Watered stock is, accordingly stock which purports to represent, but does not represent, in good faith, money paid into the treasury of the company, or money's worth actually contributed to the working capital of the concern. 188 Mich. 7, 13; Cook on Corporations. See Watering Stock.

WATERGANG (Law Lat. watergangium). A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes. Ord. Mar. de Rom. Chart. Hen. III.

WATERGAVEL. A rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit from, some river. Chart. 15 Hen. III.

WATERING STOCK. Fictitiously increasing the capital stock of a corporation. It is commonly done when the ordinary profits exceed an ordinary return on the investment, and as much new stock is then issued as will reduce the rate of earnings to normal. See Watered Stock.

WATERSCAPE. An aqueduct or passage for water.

WATLING (or WETLING) STREET. One of the four great Roman ways or roads in Britain. Cowell; Blount; LL. Gul. Cong. lib. 30; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 21. Otherwise called "Verlam Street," from its passing through Verulam. Spelman, voc. "Ikenild Street."

WAVESON. Such goods as appear upon the waves after shipwreck. Jacob.

WAX SCOT. Duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches. Spelman.

WAY. A passage, street, or road.

In its most general sense, it includes both public highways and private ways (Co. Litt. 56a; but it is generally used as synonymous with "private way" (q. v.) See "Way from Necessity."

WAY BILL. A writing in which are set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land. When the goods are carried by water, the instrument is called a "bill of lading," and this term is now commonly applied to carriage by land as well.

WAY FROM NECESSITY. A way which is necessarily incident to a grant and without which the grant would be useless. 194 Ill. 250. It arises by implication where the only manner of enjoying the benefit of the grant would be to pass over other lands of the grantor. 222 Ill. 540; 221 Ill. 638; 77 Ill. 574.

WAY-GOING CROP. In Pennsylvania. By the custom of the country, a tenant for a term certain is entitled, after the expiration of his lease, to enter and take away the crop of grain which he had put into the ground the preceding fall. This is called the "way-going crop." 5 Bin. (Pa.) 289; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 14; 1 Pa. St. 224. See "Away-Going Crop."

WAYLEAVE. A right of way over or through land for the carriage of minerals from a mine or quarry. It is an easement (q. v.), being a species of the class called "rights of way," and is generally created by express grant or reservation. A wayleave rent may be a fixed annual sum, or a sum payable according to the quantity of minerals drawn over the way, or a combination of the two. Bainb. Mines (4th Ed.) 211 et seq.; Elph. Conv. 264.

WAYNAGIUM. Implements of husbandry. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 5, 268.

WAYWARDENS. The English highway acts provide that in every parish forming part of a highway district there shall annually be elected one or more waywardens. The waywardens so elected, and the justices for the county residing within the district, form the highway board for the district. Each waywarden also represents his parish in regard to the levying of the highway rates, and in questions arising concerning the liability of his parish to repairs, etc. Highway Acts 1862, 1863, 1864, 1878.

WEALD (Sax.) A wood; the woody part of a country, as the weald of Kent. Camd. Brit. 247. 4 Mod. 343, arg.

WEALREAF. The robbing of a dead man in his grave.

WEAPON. An instrument of offensive or defensive combat; something to fight with. 81 Wis. 243.

WEAR or WEIR. A great dam made across a river, accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill. Jacob. See "Dam."

WEAR AND TEAR. Deterioration by use.

WED. A covenant or agreement; whence a wedded husband.

WEDBEDRIP (Saxon). In old English law. A customary service which tenants paid to their lords, in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties; as if a covenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding. Cowell.

WEEK. A period of time commencing on Sunday morning and ending on Saturday night. 60 Neb. 280.

Though it usually means any consecutive seven days, it will sometimes be interpreted to mean the ordinary notion of a week reckoning from Sunday to Sunday. 24 L. J. 368, 416.

WEIGHAGE. In English law. A duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise. It is called "tronage" for weighing wool at the king's beam, or "pesage" for weighing other avoirdupois goods. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 16.

WEIGHTS OF AUNCCEL. See "Auncel Weight."

WEIR. See "Wear."

WELL KNOWING. The technical words to plead scienter.

WELSH MORTGAGE. In English law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as a security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the principal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption.

It is a species of vivum vadium. Strictly, however, there is this distinction between a Welsh mortgage and a vivum vadium,—in the latter, the rents and profits of the estate are applied to the discharge of the principal after paying the interest; while in the former, the rents and profits are received in satisfaction of his interest only. 1 Powell, Mortg. 373a.

WEND. A certain quantity or circuit of land. Cowell.

WERE, or WERA. The name of a fine among the Saxons imposed upon a murderer.

The life of every man, not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the "were," or aestimatio capitis. The amount varied according to the dignity of the person murdered. The price of wounds was also varied according to the nature of the wound, or the member injured.

WEREGELT THEF (Saxon). In old English law. A robber who might be ransomed. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 13.

WERELADA. A purging from a crime by the oaths of several persons, according to the degree and quality of the accused. Cowell.

WERGILD, or WEREGILD. In old English law. The price which, in a barbarous age, a person guilty of homicide or other enormous offense was required to pay, instead of receiving other punishment. 4 Bl. Comm. 188.

See, for the etymology of this word, and a tariff which was paid for the murder of the different classes of men, Guizot, Essais sur l'Histoire de France, Essai, 4eme, c. 2, § 2.

WERPIRE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To throw; to throw away; to waive. Spelman.

WERRA (Law Lat.) In old English law. War; private war, as well as public. Spelman.

WERVAGIUM (Law Lat.) In old records. Wharfage; money paid at a wharf for lading or unlading goods. 1 Mon. Angl. 550. Cowell.

WEST SAXON LAGE. The law of the West Saxons, which was observed in the counties in the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire, in the beginning of the eleventh century. Supposed by Blackstone to have been much the same with the laws of Alfred. 1 Bl. Comm. 65.

WESTMINSTER. A city by express creation of Henry VIII. It was dissolved as a see and restored to the bishopric of London by Edward VI. and turned into a collegiate church, subject to a dean, by Queen Elizabeth. The superior courts sat here, and the common-law courts have continued to do so, as do still the divisions of the high court of justice which represent them. The chancery division, except upon the first day of certain sittings, sits at Lincoln's Inn. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE FIRST. St. 3 Edw. I., A. D. 1275. This statute, which deserves the name of a code rather than an act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the powers of the king's escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous, but not capital, offense; and embraces the subject of procedure in civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious. 1 Campb. Lives, L. Ch. p. 167; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 9, p. 107. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE SECOND. St. 13 Edw. I. st. 1, A. D. 1285, otherwise called the Statute de Donis Conditionalibus. See "De Donis, the Statute." See 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 10, p. 163. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, and St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE THIRD. St. 18 Edw. I. st. 1, A. D. 1290. Otherwise called the Statute Quia Emptores. See "Quia Emptores."

WHACK. A slang word meaning to divide into shares; apportion; parcel out; make a division settlement; square accounts; pay. 188 Mich. 617, 632.

WHARF. A space of ground artificially prepared for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading and discharging of such vessel.

A structure on the margin of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded. 62 Conn. 138; 93 N. Y. 151.

WHARFAGE. The money paid for landing goods upon, or loading them from, a wharf. Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Cal. 41, 45.

WHARFINGER. One who owns or keeps a wharf for the purpose of receiving and shipping merchandise to or from it for hire.

WHATSOEVER. "Whatsoever," as a rule, excludes any limitation or qualification, and implies that the genus to which it relates is to be understood in its utmost generality. 53 L. J. Q. B. 344; 13 Q. B. D. 843; 50 L. T. 778; 32 W. R. 813; 48 J. P. 501.

WHEEL. The punishment of the wheel was formerly to tie a criminal on a wheel, and then to break his bones until he expired. This barbarous punishment was never used in the United States, and it has been abolished in almost every civilized country.

WHEN. At which time.

In wills, standing by itself unqualified and unexplained, this is a word of condition, denoting the time at which the gift is to commence. 6 Ves. 243; 2 Mer. 286. The context of a will may show that the word "when" is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; but to justify this construction, there must be circumstances, or other expressions in the will, showing such to have been the testator's intent. 7 Ves. 422; 9 Ves. 230; 11 Ves. 489; Cooper, 145; 3 Brown, Ch. 471. For the effect of the word "when" in contracts and in wills in the French law, see 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 520.

WHEREAS. This word implies a recital, and, in general, cannot be used in the direct and positive averment of a fact in a declaration or plea. Those facts which are directly denied by the terms of the general issue, or which may, by the established usage of pleading, be specially traversed, must be averred in positive and direct terms; but facts, however material, which are not directly denied by the terms of the general issue, though liable to be contested under it, and which, according to the usage of pleading, cannot be specially traversed, may be alleged in the declaration by way of recital, under a whereas. Gould, Pl. c. 43, § 42; Id. c. 3, § 47; Bac. Abr. "Pleas, etc." (B 5, 4); 2 Chit. Pl. 151, 178, 191.

WHILE. An adverb expressing duration. 246 Ill. 580.

During the time that. It seems to necessarily imply some degree of continuance. 101 Ill. App. 12; 141 Ill. 625.

WHIPPING POST. A post to which criminals are tied to inflict the punishment of whipping, which is in use in Delaware, and perhaps one or two other states.

WHITE ACRE. A fictitious name given to a piece of land, in the English books, for purposes of illustration. See "Black Acre."

WHITE BONNET. In Scotch law. A fictitious bidder at an auction. Where there is no upset price, and the auction is not stated to be without reserve, there is no authority for saying that employment of such person is illegal. Burton, Law Scot. 362.

WHITE FRIARS. A place in London, between the Temple and Blackfriars, which was formerly a sanctuary, and therefore privileged from arrest.

WHITE PERSONS. Persons of the Caucasian race. It excludes Indians, Mongolians, etc. 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 115. The general rule is that a person having three-fourths or more of Caucasian blood is regarded as white. See 3 Dana (Ky.) 382.

WHITE RENTS. In English law. Rents paid in silver, and called "white rents," or redditus albi, to distinguish them from other rents which were not paid in money. 2 Inst. 19. See "Alba Firma."

WHITE SPURS. A kind of esquires. Cowell,

WHITEHART SILVER. A mulct on certain lands in or near to the forest of Whitehart, paid into the exchequer, imposed by Henry III. upon Thomas de la Linda for killing a beautiful white hart which that king before had spared in hunting. Camd. Brit. 150.

WHITTANWARI (Law Lat.) In old English law. A class of offenders who whitened stolen oxhides and horsehides so that they could not be known and identified. Barr. Obs. St. 124, note (f).

WHOLE BLOOD. Being related by both the father and mother's side. This phrase is used in contradistinction to "half blood," which is relation only on one side. See "Blood."

WHOLESALE. To sell by wholesale is to sell by large parcels, generally in original packages, and not by retail.

WHORE. A woman who practices unlawful commerce with men, particularly one that does so for hire; a prostitute. While a woman may acquire that character without being generally accessible to men, as where she is the mistress of one man, yet the term implies the idea that the offenses against chastity on the part of the person to whom it is applied are public and notorious, and it is not proper to apply it to a woman who has yielded only to her affianced. 43 Iowa 183.

WHOREDOME. Any act of sexual intercourse between a married female and a male person not her husband, or between an unmarried female and a male person, is whoredome. 6 Ind. 343.

WICK, or WIC. A town or village. A termination denoting territorial limits of authority. Thus, "bailiwick" is the territory to which the authority of a bailiff extends.

WIDOW. A woman whose husband is dead, and who has not remarried. 164 Iowa 208; 145 N. W. 467.

As used in statute of distributions, this does not include a divorced woman, though it may in the law of dower. 37 Hun (N. Y.) 152; 103 N. Y. 284, 288.

WIDOW'S BENCH. The share of her husband's estate which a widow is allowed besides her jointure.

WIDOW'S CHAMBER. In English law. In London, the apparel of a widow and the furniture of her chamber, left by her deceased husband, is so called, and the widow is entitled to it. 2 Bl. Comm. 518.

WIDOW'S QUARANTINE. See "Quarantine."

WIDOW'S TERCE. The right which a wife has after her husband's death to a third of the rents of lands in which her husband died infert; dower. Bell, Dict.

WIDOWER. A man whose wife is dead. A widower has a right to administer on his wife's separate estate, and, as her administrator, to collect debts due to her, generally for his own use.

WIDOWHOOD. The state of a man whose wife is dead, or of a woman whose husband is dead. In general, there is no law to regulate the time during which a man must remain a widower, or a woman a widow, before they marry a second time. The term widowhood is mostly applied to the state or condition of a widow.

WIFE'S EQUITY. See "Equity to a Settlement."

WILD ANIMALS. Animals in a state of nature; animals ferae naturae. See "Animal."

WILD LAND. Unimproved and uncultivated; land left in a state of nature, uninhabited, unoccupied and uncultivated, and not in use by the owner, his agent or lessee, for any artificial purpose. 156 Wis. 257, 259.

WILD'S CASE, RULE IN. A devise to B. and his children or issue, B. having no issue at the time of the devise, gives him an estate tail, which would become a life estate in the first taker under our statute. 194 Ill. 400; 221 Ill. 64. But if he have issue at the time, B. and his children take joint estates for life. 6 Coke, 16b; White & T. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 542, 581. The rule was intended to enlarge the estate, and not to cut it down. 221 Ill. 64.

WILL. The legal declaration of a man's intention respecting the disposition of his property, which he wills to be performed after his death. See 2 Bl. Comm. 309. See Joint Will.

The word is of common-law origin, the corresponding civil-law term being "testament" (q. v.) "Will," "testament," and "last will and testament" are now said to be synonymous. Schouler, Wills, § 2.

In general, any instrument executed with the required formalities, conferring no present rights, but intended to take effect on the death of the maker, will be considered to be a will. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; 104 Pa. St. 240.

(1) Holographic (or olographic) wills are those written and signed entirely with the testator's own hand. By reason of this, certain formalities in execution are in some jurisdictions dispensed with.

(2) Nuncupative wills are those made by oral declaration in the presence of witnesses. They are not in use in the United States, and in England are confined to seamen and soldiers in active service.

(3) Mystic wills, in Louisiana, are wills sealed in the presence of witnesses. See "Mystic Testament."

"WILL." See "May."

WILL, ESTATE AT. See "Estates."

WILLFUL. In the common sense, voluntary or intentional. In criminal law, the term generally means more than "voluntary," and implies an evil mind or intent. 96 U. S. 699; 140 Ind. 246; 20 Pick. [Mass.] 206; 14 Tex. App. 200. Thus, one who acts in good faith, believing that no highway existed at that place, is not guilty of "willfully" obstructing a highway. 34 Wis. 675.

WILLFUL ACT. A "willful" differs essentially from a "negligent" act. The one is positive, and the other negative. Intention is always separated from negligence by a precise line of demarcation. 38 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 281, 317, affirmed in 63 N. Y. 77.

WILLFULLY. Intentionally.

In charging certain offenses, it is required that they should be stated to be willfully done. Archb. Crim. Pl. 51, 58; Leach, C. C. 556.

In Pennsylvania, it has been decided that the word "maliciously" was an equivalent for the word "willfully," in an indictment for arson. 5 Whart. (Pa.) 427. See "Willful."

WILLS ACT. See "Statute of Wills."

WINCHESTER MEASURE. The standard measure which was originally kept at Winchester. It is abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 63.

WINCHESTER, STATUTE OF. A statute passed in the 13th year of the reign of Edward I., by which the old Saxon law of police was enforced, with many additional provisions. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 163; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 189. It was repealed by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. See "Constable."

WINDING UP. The term used in England to denote the dissolution of a corporation or partnership, and the settlement of its affairs.

WINDOW TAX. A tax on windows, levied on houses which contained more than six windows, and were worth more than £5 per annum; established by St. 7 Wm. III. c. 18. St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36, substituted for this tax a tax on inhabited houses.

WINDSOR FOREST. A royal forest founded by Henry VIII.

WINDSTORM. A tumultuous outburst of wind. 151 Ia. 73, 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A 266n. See Tornado.

WINTER CIRCUIT. An occasional circuit appointed for the trial of prisoners, in England, and in some cases of civil causes, between Michaelmas and Hilary terms.

WINTER HEYNING. The season between 11th November and 23d April, which is excepted from the liberty of commoning in certain forests. St. 23 Car. II. c. 3.

WISBUY, LAWS OF. A code of maritime laws, compiled at Wisbuy, the ancient capital of Gothland in Sweden, towards the close of the thirteenth century, and which, soon after their promulgation, were adopted as laws of the sea by all the nations of modern Europe. Even in the time of Cleirac (who published them, with a commentary, in his work entitled Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer), they were still observed in Sweden, Denmark, Flanders, and in the north of Germany. These laws resemble in many respects the laws of Oleron, to which, indeed, according to Cleirac, they were but a supplement, and they were adopted as the basis of the later collection known as the "Laws of the Hanseatic League." 3 Kent, Comm. 13, and note; 1 Duer, Ins. 40, 41; Introd. Disc. Lect. ii. They have been published in the United States, in the appendix to the first volume of Peters' Admiralty Decisions.

WISTA. A measure of land among the Saxons, containing sixty acres.

WITAM. The purgation from an offense by the oath of the requisite number of witnesses.

WITE. In Saxon law. A punishment, pain, penalty, mulct, or criminal fine. Cowell. It was the fine paid to the magistrate, as distinguished from "were," the compensation paid to the injured persons.

WITEKDEN. A taxation of the West Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom.

WITENA DOM. In Saxon law. The judgment of the county court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, on the title to property, real or personal. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22.

WITENA GEMOTE (spelled, also witena gemot, gewitena gemote, from the Saxon wita, a wise man, gemote, assembly,—the assembly of wise men). An assembly of the great men of the kingdom in the time of the Saxons, to advise and assist in the government of the realm.

It was the grand council of the kingdom, and was held, generally, in the open air, by public notice or particular summons, in or near some city or populous town. These notices or summonses were issued upon determination by the king's select council, or the body met without notice, when the throne was vacant, to elect a new king. Subsequently to the Norman Conquest it was called commune concilium regni, curia magna, and, finally "parliament;" but its character had become considerably changed. It was a court of last resort more especially for determining disputes between the king and his thanes, and, ultimately, from all inferior tribunals. Great offenders, particularly those who were members of or might be summoned to the king's court, were here tried. The casual loss of title deeds was supplied, and a very extensive equity jurisdiction exercised. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 73-76; 1 Bl. Comm. 147, 148; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7; 9 Coke, pref.

The principal duties of the witenagemote, besides acting as high court of judicature, was to elect the sovereign, assist at his coronation, and co-operate in the enactment and administration of the laws. It made treaties jointly with the king, and aided him in directing the military affairs of the kingdom. Examinations into the state of churches, monasteries, their possessions, discipline, and morals, were made before this tribunal. It appointed magistrates, and regulated the coin of the kingdom. It also provided for levying upon the people all such sums as the public necessities required; and no property of a freeman was, in fact, taxable without the consent of the gemote. Bede, lib. 2, c. 5; 3 Turner, Ang. Sax. 209; 1 Dugd. Mon. 20; Saxon, Chron. 126, 140.

WITENS. The chiefs of the Saxon lords or thanes, their nobles, and wise men.

WITH. A word used to denote association in respect of situation or environment, and not simultaneous happening. 54 Ill. App. 436.

WITH STRONG HAND. In pleading. A technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 8 Term R. 357.

WITHDRAWING A JUROR. In practice. An agreement made between the parties in a suit to require one of the twelve jurors impanelled to try a cause to leave the jury box; the act of leaving the box by such a juror is also called the withdrawing a juror.

This arrangement usually takes place at the recommendation of the judge, when it is obviously improper the case should proceed any further.

The effect of withdrawing a juror puts an end to that particular trial, and each party must pay his own costs. 3 Term R. 657; 2 Dowl. 721; 1 Crompton, M. & R. 64. But the plaintiff may bring a new suit for the same cause of action. Ryan & M. 402; 3 Barn. & Adol. 349. See 3 Chit. Prac. 916.

WITHDRAWING RECORD. The withdrawing by plaintiff's attorney of the nisi prius record filed in a cause, before jury is sworn, has the same effect as a motion to postpone. 2 Car. & P. 185; 3 Campb. 333; Paine & D. Prac. 465.

WITHERNAM. In practice. The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writ of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant's own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be replevied, and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ. Hammond, N. P. 453; 2 Inst. 140; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68, 69; Grotius de Jure Belli, 3. 2. 4. note 1.

WITHHOLD. To hold back; to restrain; to keep from action; to retain; to keep back; not to grant. 146 Iowa 360, 374, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

WITHIN. In the limits or compass of; not further in length than; not exceeding in quantity; inside the limits of; not going outside of; not beyond or exceeding. 150 Ill. 634.

WITHOUT DAY. This signifies that the cause or thing to which it relates is indefinitely adjourned; as, when a case is adjourned without day, it is not again to be inquired into. When the legislature adjourn without day, they are not to meet again. This is usually expressed in Latin, sine die.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. When a tenant for life holds the land without impeachment of waste, he is, of course, punishable for waste, whether willful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused, so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste. Dane, Abr. c. 78, a. 14, § 7; Bac. Abr. "Waste" (N); 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. "Waste" (A, pl. 8); 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2402. See "Impeachment of Waste."

WITHOUT ISSUE. This phrase has been construed to mean "without having had issue," irrespective of whether they survive or not. 215 Ill. 110.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. A phrase frequently used in connection with admissions, orders, etc. Its general effect is to reserve certain rights which would otherwise be indirectly or impliedly affected. See 20 Wall. (U. S.) 12; 58 Vt. 414.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. An indorsement of a negotiable instrument, whereby the indorser relieves himself of any liability to subsequent holders. The usual form is by prefixing the words "Without recourse" to the indorser's signature.

WITHOUT RESERVE. These words are frequently used in conditions of sale at public auction, that the property offered, or to be offered, for sale, will be sold without reserve.

When a property is advertised to be sold without reserve, if a puffer be employed to bid, and actually bid at the sale, the courts will not enforce a contract against a purchaser, into which he may have been drawn by the vendor's want of faith. 5 Madd. 34. See "Puffer."

WITHOUT STINT. Without limit. Applied to common, it is the same as common sans nombre.

WITHOUT THIS, THAT. In pleading. These are technical words used in a traverse (q. v.) for the purpose of denying a material fact in the preceding pleadings, whether declaration, plea, replication, etc. In Latin it is called absque hoe (q. v.) Lawes, Pl. 119; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (G 1); Summary of Pleading, 75; 1 Saund. 108, note; Ld. Raym. 641; 1 Burrows, 320; 1 Chit. Pl. 576, note (a).

WITNESS. One who gives oral testimony in a judicial proceeding. If his testimony be given by deposition, he is known as a "deponent;" if by affidavit, as an "affiant." One who is present at any transaction, particularly persons required by law to be present, by way of preappointed evidence. If the witness signs an instrument to denote that same was executed in his presence, he is called a "subscribing" or "attesting" witness.

WITNESSING PART. In a deed or other formal instrument, that part which comes after the recitals, or, where there are no recitals, after the parties. It usually commences with a reference to the agreement or intention to be effectuated, then states or refers to the consideration, and concludes with the operative words and parcels, if any. Where a deed effectuates two distinct objects, there are two witnessing parts. 1 Dav. Prec. Conv. 63 et seq.

WOLF'S HEAD. In old English law. A term applied to outlaws. They who were outlawed in old English law were said to carry a wolf's head; for, if caught alive, they were to be brought to the king, and if they defended themselves, they might be slain and their heads carried to the king, for they were no more to be accounted of than wolves. Termes de la Ley, "Woolforthod."

WOMEN. All the females of the human species. All such females who have arrived at the age of puberty. Mulieris appellatione etiam virgo viri potens continetur. Dig. 50. 16. 13. See 84 Ill. 11.

WOOD CORN. A certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors to the lord for the liberty to pick up dried or broken wood. Cowell.

WOOD GELD. The cutting of wood within the forest, or rather the money paid for the same. Cowell.

WOOD PLEA COURT. A court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun, in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments. Cowell.

WOOD STREET COMPTER. The name of an old prison in London.

WOODGELD. In old English law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233a. The same as "pudzeld."

WOODMOTE. The court of attachment. Cowell.

WOODWARDS. Officers of the forest. whose duty consists in looking after the wood and vert and venison, and preventing offenses relating to the same. Manw. For. Laws, 189.

WOOLSACK. The seat of the lord chancellor of England in the house of lords, being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. Webster. The judges, king's counsel-at-law, and masters in chancery sit also on woolsacks. The custom arose from wool being a staple of Great Britain from early times. Enc. Am.

WORD. One or more syllables which, when united, convey an idea; a single part of speech.

Words will be construed according to their strict and primary acceptation, unless from the context of the writing, and the intention of the parties collected from it, they appear to have been used in a different sense, or unless in their strict sense they are incapable of being carried into effect. 109 Ill. 416. This is equally true of words having a technical meaning unless the very nature of the subject indicates or the context suggests their use in a technical sense. 283 Ill. 503.

The natural import of words is that which their utterance promptly and uniformly suggests to the mind, that which common use has affixed to them; the technical is that which is suggested by their use in reference to a science or profession, that which particular use has affixed to them, and when the natural and technical import unite upon a word, both rules combine to control its construction. 1 Col. 359.

The omission of a letter will not ordinarily affect the meaning of a word unless such omission makes a word of another signification. 3 Salkeld 225.

WORDS OF LIMITATION. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed "words of limitation." Fearne, Cont. Rem. 78.

WORDS OF NEGOTIABILITY. Those words in an instrument which render it negotiable. The words "to the order of" before the name of the payee, or the words "or order," or "or bearer," after the name, are the usual words of negotiability. See "Negotiable Instrument."

WORDS OF PROCREATION. To create an estate tail by deed, it is necessary that words of procreation should be used in order to confine the estate to the descendants of the first grantee, as in the usual form of limitation,—“to A. and the heirs of his body.”

WORDS OF PURCHASE. Words of purchase are words which denote the person who is to take the estate. Thus, if I grant land to A. for twenty-one years, and after the determination of that term to A.'s heirs, the word “heirs” does not denote the duration of A.'s estate, but the person who is to take the remainder on the expiration of the term, and is, therefore, called a “word of purchase.” Williams, Real Prop.; Fearn, Cont. Rem. 76 et seq. Hence, “words of purchase” and “words of limitation” are opposed to each other.

WORK AND LABOR. One of the common counts in assumpsit, used to declare on work and labor done and materials furnished.

WORK BEAST, or WORK HORSE. These terms mean an animal of the horse kind, which can be rendered fit for service, as well as one of maturer age and in actual use. 8 Bush (Ky.) 587.

WORKHOUSE. A prison where prisoners are kept in employment; a penitentiary. A house provided where the poor are taken care of and kept in employment.

WORKING DAYS. In settling lay days, or days of demurrage, sometimes the contract specifies “working days;” in the computation, Sundays and custom-house holidays are excluded. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 577.

WORKSHOP. The place where the work of making, altering, etc., is done upon a product; a shop where any manufacture or handiwork is carried on, whether for the purpose of repair or manufacture; a building in which an artisan carries on his business, or laborers, workmen, or mechanics, by the use of tools or machinery manufacture, alter or repair articles of trade. 188 Ill. App. 501.

WORLD. This term sometimes denotes all persons whatsoever who may have, claim, or acquire an interest in the subject matter; as in saying that a judgment in rem binds “all the world.”

WORSHIP. The act of paying divine honors to the Supreme Being; religious reverence and homage; adoration paid to God or a being viewed as God; adoration; a religious act of reverence; honor paid to the Supreme Being or by heathen nations to their deities; the performance of those external acts and the observance of all those rites and ceremonies in which men engage with the professed and sole view of honoring God. 245 Ill. 338; 200 Ill. 572; 132 Ill. 285.

In the United States, this is free, every one being at liberty to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. See “Public Worship.”

—In English Law. A title or addition given to certain persons. 2 Inst. 666; Bac. Abr. “Misnomer” (A 2).

WORT, or WORTH. A curtilage or country farm.

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. An expression used to designate that in descent the sons are to be preferred to daughters, which is the law of England. See some singular reasons given for this in Plowd. 305.

WORTHINE, or WORTHING OF LAND. A certain quantity of land so called in the manor of Kingsland, in Hereford. The tenants are called “worthies.”

WOUND. An injury to the person, whereby the skin is broken. Steph. Crim. Law, 171.

—In Medical Pariance. Injuries of every description that affect either the hard or soft parts of the body, and it comprehends bruises, contusions, fractures, luxations, etc. 167 Mich. 31. Breaking of a bone has been held not to be a wounding. 4 Car. & P. 381.

—In Law. Any lesion of the body. 167 Mich. 31.

WOUNDING. An aggravated species of assault and battery, consisting in one person giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl. Comm. 121.

WRECCUM MARIS SIGNIFICAT ILLA bona quae naufragio ad terram pelluntur. A wreck of the sea signifies those goods which are driven to shore from a shipwreck.

WRECK (called in Law Lat. wreccum maris, and in Law Fr. wrec de mer). In a popular sense, a ship which has received injuries rendering her incapable of navigation.

—In Maritime Law. Such goods as, after a shipwreck, are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some country, so as not to belong to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, but to the common law. 2 Inst. 167; 1 Bl. Comm. 290-293.

WRECK COMMISSIONERS. Persons appointed by the English lord chancellor under Merch. Shipp. Act 1876, § 29, to hold investigations at the request of the board of trade into losses, abandonments, damages, and casualties of or to ships on or near the coast of the United Kingdom, whereby loss of life is caused.

WRECKFREE. Exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the king. Cowell.

WRIT.* In practice. A mandatory precept, issued by the authority and in the name of the sovereign or the state, for the purpose of compelling the defendant to do something therein mentioned.

*The common-law writs, of which there were a multitude, generally bore specific Latin names, from their purpose, or from their emphatic words. The aim in the present work has been to place these according to their customary form. The great majority of them, being customarily introduced by the prefix "De," or "Pro," will be found so placed. Those not customarily so introduced will be found under the first word of their names. Writs having English names are placed under the name without the prefix "Writ of" (e. g., "Habeas Corpus") except where such short form is never used, in which case the prefix is used, and the phrase placed under "W" (e. g., "Writ of Right").

It is issued by a court or other competent jurisdiction, and is returnable to the same. It is to be under seal and tested by the proper officer, and is directed to the sheriff or other officer lawfully authorized to execute the same. Writs are divided into original, by which actions or proceedings are begun, of mesne process, by which interlocutory proceedings are initiated, of execution, by which the judgment or decree is carried into effect. See 3 Bl. Comm. 273; 1 Tidd, Prac. 93; Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 1.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE. In English practice, a chancery writ issued in aid of commissioners of sequestration, who were unable to obtain possession of the property. In early English practice, the writ had more extensive use, being used generally to eject persons from land wrongfully held; but it has been to a great extent superseded by statutory writs of possession and delivery. In the United States, the writ issues out of chancery to aid the sheriff in giving possession of land pursuant to a sale by him.

WRIT OF ASSOCIATION. In English practice. A writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bl. Comm. 59.

WRIT OF ATTACHMENT. A writ employed to enforce obedience to an order or judgment of the court. It commands the sheriff to attach the disobedient party, and to have him before the court to answer his contempt. Smith, Actions, 176. It is used not only as a writ of execution (e. g., to enforce a judgment for the recovery of chattels), but also to enforce obedience to interlocutory orders, injunctions, etc.

WRIT OF CERTIORARI. A writ whose object is to bring up the record of a proceeding from an inferior to a superior tribunal. 196 Ill. 323. See "Certiorari."

WRIT OF CONSPIRACY. The name of an ancient writ, now superseded by the more convenient remedy of an action on the case, which might have been sued against parties guilty of a conspiracy. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 260. See "Conspiracy."

WRIT OF COVENANT. In practice. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant, i. e., of a promise under seal.

WRIT OF DEBT. In practice. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt, i. e., a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

This is debt "in the debet," which is the principal and only common form. There is another species mentioned in the books, called the debt "in the detinet," which lies for the specific recovery of goods under a contract to deliver them. 1 Chit. Pl. 101.

WRIT OF DECEIT. The name of a writ which lies where one man has done anything in the name of another, by which the latter is damnified and deceived. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 217.

The modern practice is to sue a writ of trespass on the case to remedy the injury.

WRIT OF DELIVERY. A writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment for the delivery of chattels. It commands the sheriff to cause the chattels mentioned in the writ to be returned to the person who has obtained the judgment, and, if the chattels cannot be found, to distrain the person against whom the judgment was given until he returns them. Smith, Actions, 175.

WRIT OF DETINUE. In practice. A writ which lies where a party claims the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or deeds and writings, detained from him. This is seldom used. Trover is the more frequent remedy, in cases where it may be brought.

WRIT OF DOWER. In practice. A writ which lies for a widow claiming the specific recovery of her dower, no part having been yet assigned to her. It is usually called a writ of dower unde nihil habet. 3 Chit. Pl. 393; Booth, 166.

There is another species, called a "writ of right of dower," which applies to the particular case where the widow has received a part of her dower from the tenant himself, and of land lying in the same town in which she claims the residue. Booth, 166; Glanv. lib. 6, c. 4. 5. This latter writ is seldom used in practice.

WRIT OF EJECTMENT. In practice. The name of a process issued by a party claiming land or other real estate, against one who is alleged to be unlawfully in possession. See "Ejectment."

WRIT OF ENTRY. A real action to recover the possession of land where the tenant (or owner) has been disseised or otherwise wrongfully dispossessed. If the disseisor has aliened the land, or if it has descended to his heir, the writ of entry is said to be in the per, because it alleges that the defendant (the alienee or heir) obtained possession "through" the original disseisor. If two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the per and cui, because it alleges that the defendant (the second alienee) obtained possession "through" the first alienee, to whom the original disseisor had aliened it. If more than two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the post, because it simply alleges that the defendant acquired possession "after" the original disseisin. Co. Litt. 238b; 3 Bl. Comm. 180. The writ of entry was abolished, with other real actions, in England, by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 36, but is still in use in a few of the states of the Union.

WRIT OF ERROR. A writ by which a superior court commands an inferior to send up the record of a proceeding for review. A writ of error lay only to a court of record (88 Pa. St. 291) after final judgment (2 Mass. 445), and lies only to errors of law (141 Mass. 194) apparent of record (72 N. Y. 393).

Error was the appropriate remedy at common law to review proceedings at law, while an appeal (q. v.) lay in equity.

—Writ of Error Coram Nobis. The ordinary writ of error which issued from a superior to an inferior court.

—Writ of Error Coram Vobis. A writ which issued to review proceedings previously had in the court issuing it. See "Coram Vobis."

It was called at length in the old books, breve de errore corrigendo, a writ about correcting error; the abbreviation of which (breve de errore) has been literally translated, "writ of error." Sometimes simply termed "error." Defined by Lord Coke to be a writ which "lieth where a man is grieved by any error in the foundation, proceeding, judgment, or execution [of a suit], and thereupon it is called breve de errore corrigendo." Co. Litt. 238b.

WRIT OF FALSE JUDGMENT. A writ which appears to be still in use to bring appeals to the English high court from inferior courts not of record proceeding according to the course of the common law. Archb. Prac. 1427.

WRIT OF MAINPRIZE. In English law. A writ directed to the sheriff (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offense and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offense or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below) commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance, commonly called "mainperners," and to set him at large. 3 Bl. Comm. 128.

WRIT OF MESNE. In old English law. A writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, Unde idem A., qui medius est inter C. et praejatum B.; that is, A., who is mesne between C., the lord paramount, and B., the tenant paravail. Co. Litt. 100a.

WRIT OF POSSESSION. This is the writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment to recover the possession of land. It commands the sheriff to enter the land and give possession of it to the person entitled under the judgment. Smith, Actions, 175.

WRIT OF PRAECIPE. This writ is also called a writ of covenant, and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be conveyed by fine, the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bl. Comm. 349, 350.

WRIT OF PREVENTION. This name is given to certain writs which may be issued in anticipation of suits which may arise. Co. Litt. 100.

WRIT OF PROCLAMATION. In English practice. A writ which issues at the same time with the exigi facias, by virtue of St. 31 Eliz. c. 3, § 1, by which the sheriff is commanded to make proclamations in the statute prescribed.

When it is not directed to the same sheriff as the writ of exigi facias is, it is called a "foreign writ of proclamation." Lee; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 261.

WRIT OF PROTECTION. In England, the sovereign may, by his writ of protection, privilege any person in his service from arrest in civil proceedings during a year and a day; but this prerogative is seldom, if ever, exercised. Archb. Prac. 687. See Co. Litt. 130a.

WRIT OF RECAPTION. In practice. A writ which lies where, pending an action of replevin, the same distrainer takes, for the same supposed cause, the cattle or goods of the same distrainee. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 169.

This writ is nearly obsolete, as trespass, which is found to be a preferable remedy, lies for the second taking; and, as the defendant cannot justify, the plaintiff must necessarily recover damages proportioned to the injury.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. Bac. Abr. "Execution" (Q).

WRIT OF RIGHT. In practice. The remedy appropriate to the case where a party claims the specific recovery of corporeal hereditaments in fee simple, founding his title on the right of property, or mere right, arising either from his own seisin or the seisin of his ancestor or predecessor. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 1 (B); 3 Bl. Comm. 391.

At common law, a writ of right lies only against the tenant of the freehold demanded. 8 Cranch (U. S.) 239.

This writ brings into controversy only the rights of the parties in the suit; and a defense that a third person has better title will not avail. 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 27; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133; 3 Bing. (N. S.) 434; 4 Bing. (N. S.) 711; 5 Bing. (N. S.) 161; 4 Scott, 209; 6 Scott, 435, 738; 6 Adol. & E. 103; 1 H. Bl. 1; 3 Taunt. 167; 5 Taunt. 326; 1 Marsh. 68; 2 Bos. & P. 570; 4 Bos. & P. 64; 4 Taunt. 572; 2 W. Bl. 1261; 2 Car. & P. 187; 271; 8 Cranch (U. S.) 229; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 306; 11 Me. 312; 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 250; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 57; 3 Rand. (Va.) 563; 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 104; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 396; 1 Dana (Ky.) 410; 2 Leigh (Va.) 1; 4 Mass. 64; 17 Mass. 74.

WRIT OF SUMMONS. In ordinary actions in the English high court, the writ of summons is a writ issued at the instance of the plaintiff for the purpose of giving the defendant notice of the claim made against him, and of compelling him to appear and answer it if he does not admit it. It is the first step in the action.

The court of probate had power to cause questions of fact, arising in suits or proceedings, to be tried by a jury by means of an issue directed to one of the superior courts of law. The issues were contained in a document called a "writ of summons." Browne, Prob. Prac. 314; Court of Probate Act 1857; § 35. This practice seems no longer applicable. Rules of Court, xxxvi. 29.

WRIT OF TOLL. In English law. The name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court baron into the county court. 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. 1, § 2.

WRIT OF WASTE. The name of a writ to be issued against a tenant who has committed waste of the premises. There are several forms of this writ. That against a tenant in dower differs from the others. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 125. See "Waste."

WRITER OF THE TALLIES. In England. An officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' bills.

WRITERS TO THE SIGNET. In Scotch law. Anciently, clerks in office of the secretary of state, by whom writs passing the king's signet were prepared. Their duty now is to prepare the warrants of all lands flowing from the crown, and to sign almost all diligencies of the law affecting the person or estate of a debtor, or for compelling implement of decree of superior court. They may act as attorney or agent before court of sessions, and have various privileges. Bell, Dict. "Clerk to Signet."

WRITING. In the most general sense of the word, "writing" denotes a document, whether manuscript or printed, as opposed to mere spoken words. Writing is essential to the validity of certain contracts and other transactions. Sweet.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. A bond; an agreement reduced to writing, by which the party becomes bound to perform something, or suffer it to be done.

A contract under seal. 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 350.

WRITTEN. The words "written" or in writing" may be construed to include printing, except where the written signature is required by law. 52 Mich. 520.

Words traced with a pen, stamped, printed, engraved or made legible by any other device, are written. 287 Ill. 493; 35 Ind. App. 94; 103 Ind. 98.

WRITTEN LAW. One of the two leading divisions of the Roman law, comprising the leges, plebiscita, senatus consulta, principum placita, magistratum edicta, and responsa prudentum. Inst. 1. 2. 3.

Statute law; law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. 1 Bl. Comm. 62, 85.

WRONG. An injury; a tort; a violation of right.

In its most usual sense, wrong signifies an injury committed to the person or property of another, or to his relative rights, unconnected with contract; and these wrongs are committed with or without force. But in a more extended signification, wrong includes the violation of a contract. A failure by a man to perform his undertaking or promise is a wrong or injury to him to whom it was made. 3 Bl. Comm. 158.

A public wrong is an act which is injurious to the public generally, commonly known by the name of "crime," "misdemeanor," or "offense;" and it is punishable in various ways, such as indictments, summary proceedings, and, upon conviction, by death, imprisonment, fine, etc.

Private wrongs which are injurious to individuals, unaffecting the public. These are redressed by actions for damages, etc. See "Tort."

WRONGDOER. One who commits an injury; a tortfeasor. See Dane, Abr. Index.

WRONGFULLY INTENDING. In pleading. Words used in a declaration when, in an action for an injury, the motive of the defendant in committing it can be proved, for then his malicious intent ought to be averred. This is sufficiently done if it be substantially alleged, in general terms, as wrongfully intending. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2871.

WRONGOUS, or WRANGOUS. In Scotch law. Wrongful; unlawful; as wrongous imprisonment. Ersk. Princ. 4. 4. 25.

WULTAVA, or WULITAVA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A disfiguring of the face. Addit. ad L. Frison, tit. 3, § 16; Spelman.

WULVESHEVED, or WULFESHEOFOD (Saxon, from wulfe, wolf, and heofod, head). In Saxon law. Wolf's head; a term applied to an outlaw.

WURTH (Saxon). In Saxon law. Worthy; competent; capable. Atheswurthe, worthy of oath; admissible or competent to be sworn. Spelman. See "Othesworthe."

WYTE. In old English law. Acquittance or immunity from amercement. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §§ 15-17.

X-Y-Z

X. A contraction of the word extra, used in citing that part of the canon law called Gregory's Decretals.

XENODOCHIUM. In the civil and old English law. An inn allowed by public license for the entertainment of strangers and other guests. Calv. Lex.; Cowell.

A hospital; a place where sick and infirm persons are taken care of. Cowell.

XENODOCHY. Reception of strangers; hospitality. Enc. Lond.

XYLON. A punishment among the Greeks answering to our stocks. Wharton.

YA ET NAY. In old records. Mere assertion and denial, without oath. Cowell; Blount.

YARD. An enclosed space or area, generally attached to a dwelling-house. A common term in deeds. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 176.

YARDLAND. In old English law. A quantity of land containing twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69a.

YCEL (Law Fr.) It; this; the same. Kelham.

YCEMENT (Law Fr.) Thus; in like manner. Kelham.

YCESTES (Law Fr.) These. Kelham.

YCEUX, Yceaux. L. Fr. Those; them. Kelham.

YCONOMUS, or OECONOMUS (Law Lat.) In old records. An advocate or defender; a patron. Cowell.

YEAR. The period in which the revolution of the earth around the sun, and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed.

The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap years, of three hundred and sixty-six days.

The year is divided into half-year, which consists, according to Coke (Litt. 135b), of one hundred and eighty-two days; and quarter of a year, which consists of ninety-one days (Id.; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, lib. 40). It is further divided into twelve months.

The civil year commences immediately after 12 o'clock at night of the thirty-first day of December,—that is the first moment of the first day of January,—and ends at midnight of the thirty-first day of December twelve months thereafter. See Comyn, Dig. Annus; 2 Bl. Comm. 140, note; Chit. Prac. Index. "Time."

In computing time by the calendar year, days are not counted, but the calendar is examined and the day numerically corresponding to that day in the following year is ascertained, and the calendar year expires on that day less one. 209 Ill. App. 320. 279 Ill. 408.

Unless from the context or otherwise a different intent is gathered, the word "year" when used in a statute is construed to mean a calendar year. 104 Iowa 204; 104 Iowa 293.

In New York it is enacted that whenever the term "year" or "years" is or shall be used in any statute, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, the year intended shall be taken to consist of three hundred and sixty-five days; half a year, of a hundred and eighty-two days; and a quarter of a year, of ninety-two days; and the day of a leap year, and the day immediately preceding, if they shall occur in any period so to be computed, shall be reckoned together as one day. Rev. St. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3.

YEAR AND DAY. A period of time much recognized in law.

It is not in all cases limited to a precise calendar year. In Scotland, in computing the term, the year and day is to be reckoned, not by the number of days which go to make up a year, but by the return of the day of the next year that bears the same denomination. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 721; 2 Stair, Inst. 842. See Bac. Abr. Descent (I 3); Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 22. In the law of all the Gothic nations, it meant a year and six weeks.

It is a term frequently occurring; for example, in case of an estray, if the owner challenged it not within a year and a day, it belonged to the lord. 5 Coke, 108. So of a wreck. 2 Inst. 168. This time is given to prosecute appeals and for actions in a writ of right, and, after entry or claim, to avoid a fine. Plowd. 357a. And if a person wounded die in that time, it is murder 3 Inst. 53; 6 Coke, 107. So, when a judgment is reversed, a party, notwithstanding the lapse of time mentioned in the statute of limitations pending that action, may commence a fresh action within a year and a day of such reversal. 3 Chit. Prac. 107. Again, after a year and a day have elapsed from the day of signing a judgment, no execution can be issued till the judgment be revived by scire facias. Bac. Abr. "Execution" (H); Tidd. Prac. 1108.

Protection lasted a year and a day; and if a villein remain from his master a year and a day in an ancient demesne, he is free.

Cunningham. If a person is afraid to enter on his land, he may make claim as near as possible, which is force for a year and a day. 3 Bl. Comm. 175. In case of prize, if no claim is made within a year and a day, the condemnation is to captors as of course. 2 Gall. (U. S.) 388. So, in case of goods saved, the court retains them till claim, if made within a year and a day, but not after that time. 8 Pet. (U. S.) 4.

The same period occurs in the civil law, in Book of Feuds, the Laws of the Lombards, etc.

YEAR BOOKS. Books of reports of cases in a regular series from the reign of the English King Edward II., inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII., which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and published annually, whence their name "Year Books." They consist of eleven parts, namely: Part 1. Maynard's Reports temp. Edw. II.; also divers Memoranda of the Exchequer temp. Edw. I. Part 2. Reports in the first ten years of Edw. III. Part 3. Reports from 17 to 39 Edw. III. Part 4. Reports from 40 to 50 Edw. III. Part 5. Liber Assisarum; or, Pleas of the Crown temp. Edw. III. Part 6. Reports temp. Hen. IV. and Hen. V. Parts 7 and 8. Annals; or Reports of Hen. VI. during his reign, in two vols. Part 9. Annals of Edw. IV. Part 10. Long Quinto; or, Reports in 5 Edw. IV. Part 11. Cases in the reigns of Edward V., Rich. III., Hen. VII., and Hen. VIII.

YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE (Lat. annus, dies, et vastum). A part of king's prerogative, whereby he takes the profits of the lands and tenements of those attainted of petty treason or felony, for a year and a day, but, in the end, may waste the tenements, destroy the houses, root up the woods, gardens, and pasture, and plough up the meadows (except the lord of the fee agree with him for redemption of such waste); after which the lands are to be restored to the lord of the fee. Staundf. Prerog. c. 16, fol. 44. By Magna Charta, it would appear that the profits for a year and a day were given in lieu of the waste. 9 Hen. III, c. 22. But 17 Edw. II. declares the king's right to both.

YEARS, ESTATE FOR. See "Estates."

YEOMAN. In the United States, this word does not appear to have any very exact meaning. It is usually put as an addition to the names of parties in declarations and indictments. In England it signifies a free man who has land of the value of forty shillings a year. 2 Inst. 668; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 92.

YEOVEN, or YEVEN. Given (dated).

YIELD. In the law of real property, to perform a service due by a tenant to his lord. Hence the usual form of reservation of a rent in a lease begins with the words "yielding and paying."

YIELDING AND PAYING. These words, when used in a lease, constitute a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay the rent (Platt, Cov. 50; 3 Pa. St. 464; 1 Sid. 447, pl. 9; 2 Lev. 206; 3 Term R. 402; 1 Barn. & C. 416; 2 Dowl. & R. 670), but whether it be an express covenant or not seems not to be settled (Styles, 387, 406, 451; Sid. 240, 266; 2 Lev. 206; T. Jones, 102; 3 Term R. 402).

In Pennsylvania, it has been decided to be a covenant running with the land. 3 Pa. St. 464. See 1 Saund. 233, note 1; 9 Vt. 191.

YINGEMAN. A word occurring in the laws of Henry I. (c. 16), which Spelman thinks might be a mistake for Ynglishman, or Englishman.

YORK, CUSTOM OF. Recognized by 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, and 1 Jac. II. c. 17. By this custom, the effects of an intestate are divided according to the anciently universal rule of pars rationabilis. 4 Burn, Ecc. Law, 342.

YORK, STATUTE OF. The name of an English statute, passed 12 Edw. II., A. D. 1318, and so called because it was enacted at York. It contains many wise provisions and explanations of former statutes. Barr. Obs. St. 174. There were other statutes made at York in the reign of Edward III., but they do not bear this name.

YORKSHIRE LAND REGISTRIES. These are regulated by Sts. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4, 5 Anne, c. 18 (6 Anne, c. 20, in the statutes of the realm), as to the West Riding; 6 Anne, c. 35 (or 62), as to the East Riding, and 8 Geo. II. c. 6.

YOUNGER CHILDREN. This phrase, when used in English conveyancing with reference to settlements of land, signifies all such children as are not entitled to the rights of an eldest son. It therefore includes daughters, even those who are older than the eldest son. Mozley & W.

Z is frequently used for y, in old English and Scotch records.

ZABULUM (Law Lat.) In old records. Coarse sand or gravel. Blount.

ZE (Old Scotch). Ye. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Homagium."

ZEIR (Old Scotch). Year. "Zeir and day." Bell, Dict.

ZELDE (Old Scotch.) A gift or donation. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Herezelda."
