FIRMARIUS (Law Lat.) A fermor; a lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed. 2 Inst. 144, 145; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 107; 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312-315; 7 Adol. & E. 637.

FIRMATIO. In forest law. Doe season. Cowell.

FIRME. In old records. A farm.

FIRMIOR ET POTENTIOR EST OPERATIO legis quam dispositio hominis. The operation of law is firmer and more powerful than the will of man. Co. Litt. 102.

FIRMITAS. In old English law. An assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

FIRMURA. In old English law. Liberty to scour and repair a mill dam, and carry away the soil, etc. Blount.

FIRST CLASS. The term "first class" is a relative term, and depends upon the use of the thing to which it is applied, and the character of the persons who are to use it. 218 Ill. 90.

FIRST CLASS MISDEMEANANT. In English law, one convicted of misdemeanor who is designated by the judge to be treated with special favor. Such designation is in the discretion of the judge. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, § 67.

FIRST COUSIN. A person's first cousin is the child of his uncle or aunt; and only persons standing in that relationship to him will take under a gift to his "first cousins;" first cousins once removed will not be comprised, 8 L. J. Ch. 18; 25 L. J. Ch. 116; unless there be no first cousins properly so called. 1 Jarm. 153.

FIRST FRUITS. The first year's whole profits of the spiritual preferments. There were three valuations (valor beneficium) at different times, according to which these first fruits were estimated, made in 1253, 1288, and 1318. A final valuation was made by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3.

They now form a perpetual fund, called "Queen Anne's Bounty," the income of which is used for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 284, and notes; 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 260.

FIRST IMPRESSION. First examination; first presentation to a court for examination or decision. A cause which presents a new question for the first time, and for which, consequently, there is no precedent, is said to be a case of the first impression.

FIRST PURCHASER. In the English law of descent, the first purchaser was he who first acquired an estate in a family which still owns it. A purchase of this kind signifies any mode of acquiring an estate, except by descent. 2 Bl. Comm. 220.

FISC. In civil law. The treasury of a prince; the public treasury. 1 Low. (U. S.) 361.

Hence, to confiscate a thing is to appropriate it to the fisc. Paillet, Dr. Pub. 21, note, says that fiscus, in the Roman law, signified the treasure of the prince, and aerarium the treasurer of the state. But this distinction was not observed in France.

FISCAL. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury.

FISCAL JUDGE (Law Lat. judex fiscalis). An officer named in the laws of the barbarous nations of Europe; the same with the grafio, graf, greve, or greeve. Spelman, voc. "Grafio." Called fiscla, because charged with the collection of public moneys, either directly, or by the imposition of fines. Id. In the Ripaurian law, he is said to be the same with the comes or count. L. Ripaur. tit. 35; Montesq. Esp. des Lois, liv. 30, c. 18.

FISCUS.

—In Roman Law. The treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from "aerarium," which was the treasury of the state. Spelman; Plin. Pand. 36; Tacit vi. 2; Calv. Lex.

The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign. Dig. 49. 14; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 149, § 144.

—In English Law. The king's treasury, as the repository of forfeited property. Bracton, fol. 150.

The treasury of a noble, or of any private person. Spelman.

The use of the word in the sense of a treasury is derived from its primary meaning, a wicker basket or hamper in which money was kept by the Romans. Burrill.

FISH. An animal which inhabits the water, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous.

Fishes in rivers and in the sea are considered as animals ferae naturae; consequently, no one has any property in them until they have been captured, and, like other wild animals, if, having been taken, they escape and regain their liberty, the captor loses his property in them.

FISH ROYAL. A whale, porpoise, or sturgeon thrown ashore on the coast of England belonged to the king as a branch of his prerogative. Hence these fish are termed "royal fish." Hale, de Jur. Mar. pt. 1, c. 7; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 290; Plowd. 305; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 3.

FISHERY. A place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks. This is commonly applied to the place of drawing a seine or net. 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131, 132.

A right or liberty of taking fish; a species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed "piscary," of which there are several kinds. 2 Bl. Comm. 34, 39; 3 Kent, Comm. 409-418; Angell, Watercourses, § 61 et seq.; Angell, Tide Waters, p. 124, c. 5.

A common of fishery is not an exclusive right, but one enjoyed in common with certain other persons. 3 Kent, Comm. 329.

A free fishery is said to be a franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil. 3 Kent, Comm. 329.

A several fishery is one by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all others, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner. 5 Burrows, 2814.

A distinction has been made between a common fishery (commune piscarium), which may mean for all mankind, as in the sea, and a common of fishery (communium piscariae), which is a right, in common with certain other persons, in a particular stream. 8 Taunt. 183. Mr. Angell seems to think that "common of fishery" and "free fishery" are convertible terms. Angell, Watercourses, c. 6, §§ 3, 4.

Mr. Woolrych says that sometimes a free fishery is confounded with a several, sometimes it is said to be synonymous with common, and again it is treated as distinct from either. Woolr. Waters, 97.

A several fishery, as its name imports, is an exclusive property. This, however, is not to be understood as depriving the territorial owner of his right to a several fishery when he grants to another person permission to fish; for he would continue to be the several proprietor, although he should suffer a stranger to hold a coextensive right with himself. Woolr. Waters, 96.

These distinctions in relation to several, free, and common of fishery are not strongly marked, and the lines are sometimes scarcely perceptible. "Instead of going into the black-letter books to learn what was a fishery, and a free fishery and a several fishery," says Huston, J., "I am disposed to regard our own acts, even though differing from old feudal law." 1 Whart. (Pa.) 132.

FISHGARTH. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish. Cowell.

FISK. In Scotch law. The revenue of the crown. Generally used of the personal estate of a rebel, which has been forfeited to the crown. Bell, Dict.

FISTUCA, or FESTUCA (Lat.) The rod which was transferred, in one of the ancient methods of feoffment, to denote a transfer of the property in land. Called, otherwise, baculum, virga, fustis. Spelman.

FISTULA. In the civil law. A pipe for conveying water. Dig. 8. 2. 18.

FIVE-MILE ACT. An act of parliament, passed in 1665, against nonconformists, whereby ministers of that body were prohibited from coming within five miles of any corporate town or place where they had preached or lectured. Brown.

FIXING BAIL. In practice. Rendering absolute the liability of special bail.

The bail are fixed upon the issue of a ca. sa. (capias ad satisfaciendum) against the defendant (2 Nott & McC. [S. C.] 569; 16 Johns. [N. Y.] 117; 3 Har. [N. J.] 9; 11 Tex. 15), and a return of non est thereto by the sheriff (4 Day [Conn.] 1; 2 Bailey [S. C.] 492; 3 Rich. [S. C.] 145; 1 Vt. 276; 7 Leigh [Va.] 371), made on the return day (2 Metc. [Mass.] 590; 1 Rich. [S. C.] 421), unless the defendant be surrendered within the time allowed ex gratia by the practice of the court (3 Conn. 316; 9 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 24; 2 Johns. [N. Y.] 101; 9 Johns. [N. Y.] 84; 1 Dev. [N. C.] 91; 11 Gill & J. [Md.] 92; 2 Hill [N. Y.] 216; 8 Cal. 552; 17 Ga. 88).

In New Hampshire (1 N. H. 472) and Massachusetts (2 Mass. 485) bail are not fixed till judgment on a sci. fa. is obtained against him, except by the death of the defendant after a return of non est to an execution against him.

The death of the defendant after a return of non est by the sheriff prevents a surrender and fixes the bail inevitably. 5 Bin. (Pa.) 332; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 407; 3 McCord (S. C.) 49; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 120; 4 N. H. 29; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604. See 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 224; 1 Ohio, 35; 2 Ga. 331.

In Georgia and North Carolina, bail are not fixed till judgment is obtained against them. 3 Dev. (N. C.) 155; 2 Ga. 331.

FIXTURES. The word "fixtures" is used with three distinct meanings:

(1) Chattels affixed to the realty, without regard to the right to remove them.

(2) An article which was a chattel, but which, by being permanently annexed to the soil, becomes a part of the realty, and cannot be removed without the consent of the owner of the freehold. 40 N. Y. 287.

(3) Personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. 8 Iowa, 544; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 544, note 1.

FLACO. A place covered with standing water.

FLAG. A symbol of nationality carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and used in many places where such a symbol is necessary or proper.

For the law upon the subject of nationality of a cargo as determined by the flag, see 5 East, 398; 9 East, 283; 3 Bos. & P. 201; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 1; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 16; 1 Dods. Adm. 81, 131; 9 Cranch (U. S.) 388; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 114, 118, note 129.

FLAG, DUTY OF THE. Saluting the British flag, by striking the flag, and lowering the topsails of a vessel, exacted as a tribute to the sovereignty of England over the British seas.

FLAGELLAT. Whipped; scourged. An entry on old Scotch records. 1 Pittc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 7.

FLAGRANS. Burning; raging; in actual perpetration. Flagrans bellum, a war actually going on. Flagrans crimen, a crime in the act of perpetration, or just perpetrated.

FLAGRANS CRIMEN. In Roman law. A term denoting that a crime is being or has just been committed. For example, when a crime has just been committed, and the corpus delictum is publicly exposed, or if a mob take place, or if a house be feloniously burned, these are severally flagrans crimen.

The term used in France is flagrant delit. The Code of Criminal Instruction gives the following concise definition of it (article 41): "Le delit qui se commet actuelle- ment ou qui vient de se commettre, est un flagrant delit."

FLAGRANT NECESSITY. A case of urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger.

FLAGRANTE BELLO. During an actual state of war.

FLAGRANTE DELICTO (Lat.) In the very act of committing the crime. 4 Bl. Comm. 307.

FLAT. The word "flat," as used with relation to stock transactions on the market, means "without interest." 205 Ill. 90.

Flats are as much separate dwellings as ordinary adjoining houses are. The difference is that flats are under one roof, and are divided one from another by a horizontal plane, but ordinary adjoining houses, by a perpendicular or vertical line. 117 Cal. 71.

When applied to lands, refers to the lands between the lines of high and low water. Gould, Waters, § 28.

FLAVIANUM JUS (Lat.) A treatise on civil law, which takes its name from its author, Cneius Flavius. It contains forms of actions. Vicat.

FLECTA. A feathered or fleet arrow. Cowell.

FLEDWITE. A discharge or freedom from ameracements where one having been an outlawed fugitive cometh to the place of our lord of his own accord. Termes de la Ley.

The liberty to hold court and take up the ameracements for beating and striking. Cowell.

The fine set on a fugitive as the price of obtaining the king's freedom. Spelman.

FLEE FROM JUSTICE. See "Fugitive from Justice."

FLEE TO THE WALL. A figurative expression used in the criminal law to express the duty of one assailed by violence to retreat as far as he safely may before making violent resistance. It probably originated from the language of Blackstone, who says: "The party assaulted must flee as far as he conveniently can, either by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit him." 4 Bl. Comm. 185.

FLEET. A place of running water where the tide or float comes up.

A prison in London, so called from a river or ditch which was formerly there, on the side of which it stood.

FLEM. In Saxon and old English law. A fugitive bondman or villein. Spelman.

The privilege of having the goods and fines of fugitives. Id.

FLEMENE FRIT, FLEMENES FRINTHE, or flymena frynth. The reception or relief of a fugitive or outlaw. Jacob.

FLEMESWHITE. The possession of the goods of fugitives. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 147.

FLET. House; home. Cowell.

FLETA. The title of an ancient law book, supposed to have been written by a judge while confined in the Fleet prison.

It is written in Latin, and is divided into six books. The author lived in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III. See liber 2, c. 66, § Item quod nullus; liber 1, c. 20, § Qui coeperunt; 10 Coke, pref. Edward II. was crowned A. D. 1306. Edward III. was crowned 1326, and reigned till A. D. 1377. During this period the English law was greatly improved, and the lawyers and judges were very learned. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 173. Blackstone (4 Com. 427) says of this work "that it was for the most part law until the alteration of tenures took place." The same remark he applies to Britton and Hingham.

FLICHWITE. In Saxon law. A fine on account of brawls and quarrels. Spelman.

FLIGHT. In criminal law. The evading the course of justice by a man's voluntarily withdrawing himself. 4 Bl. Comm. 387. See "Fugitive from Justice."

FLOAT. A certificate authorizing the party possessing it to enter a certain amount of land. 20 How. (U. S.) 504. See 2 Washb. Real Prop.

FLOATABLE. A stream capable of floating logs, etc., is said to be floatable. 2 Mich. 519.

FLOATING DEBT. By the term "floating debt," as applied to a municipal corporation, is meant that mass of lawful and valid claims against the corporation, for the payment of which there is no money in the corporation treasury specially designed, nor any taxation or other means of providing money to pay, particularly provided. 34 Ill. App. 510; 71 N. Y. 371-374.

The term "floating indebtedness," as used in a resolution of a corporation, does not include the amount of a debt secured by mortgage on real estate, 34 Ill. App. 510.

FLOATING SECURITY. A floating security is "a security on the property of the company as a going concern, subject to the powers of the directors to dispose of the property of the company while carrying on its business in the ordinary course." 1 Ch. 434, 10 Ch. D. 530.

Debentures which allow a company to deal with its assets in the ordinary course of business until the company is wound up or stops business or a receiver is appointed from the instance of the debenture holders constitute a floating security. They constitute a charge and give a license to the company to carry on its business. 2 Ch. 118, 1 Ch. 641.

FLODEMARK. High-tide mark. Blount. The mark which the sea at flowing water and highest tide makes upon the shore. And. 189; Cunningham.

FLORENTINE PANDECTS. A copy of the Pandects discovered accidentally about the year 1137, at Amalphi, a town in Italy, near Salerno. From Amalphi, the copy found its way to Pisa, and, Pisa having submitted to the Florentines in 1406, the copy was removed in great triumph to Florence. By direction of the magistrates of the town, it was immediately bound in a superb manner, and deposited in a costly chest. Formerly, these Pandects were shown only by torch light, in the presence of two magistrates, and two Cistercian monks, with their heads uncovered. They have been successively collated by Politian, Bolognini, and Antonius Augustinus. An exact copy of them was published in 1553 by Franciscus Taurellus. For its accuracy and beauty, this edition ranks high among the ornaments of the press. Brenchman, who collated the manuscript about 1710, refers it to the sixth century. Butler, Hor. Jur. 90, 91.

FLORIN. A coin, originally made at Florence. Called, also, "gulder."

FLOTAGES. Things which float by accident on the sea or great rivers. Blount.

The commissions of water bailiffs. Cunningham.

FLOTSAM, or FLOTSAN. A name for the goods which float upon the sea when cast overboard for the safety of the ship, or when a ship is sunk. Distinguished from "jetsam" and "ligan." Bracton, lib. 2, c. 5; 5 Coke, 106; Comyn, Dig. "Wreck" (A); Bac. Abr. "Court of Admiralty" (B); 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

FLOUD MARKE. Flødemark (q. v.)

FLUMEN (Law Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which consists in the right of turning the rain water, gathered in a spout, on another's land. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 9, note 9; Vicat. See "Stillicidium."

FLUMINA ET PORTUS PUBLICA sunt; ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est. Rivers and ports are public; therefore the right of fishing there is common to all. Dav. Ir. K. B. 55; Branch, Princ.

FLUVIUS. (Lat.) In old English law. A river. Fluvii regales, royal streams. Public rivers for public passage (Fr. haut streames le roy). So called, not in reference to the ownership of the river, but to the public use; all things of public safety and convenience being, in a special manner, under the king's care, supervision, and protection. Hale, de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 2.

Flood or flood tide. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 8, § 2.

FLUXUS. In old English law. Flow. Per fluxum et refluxum maris, by the flow and reflow of the sea. Dal. pl. 10.

FLYMA (Saxon). A fugitive or outlaw. Spelman.

FLYMAN FRYMTH. In old English law. The offense of harboring a fugitive, the penalty attached to which was one of the rights of the crown. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FOCAGE. House bote; fire bote. Cowell.

FOCALE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Firewood; the right of taking wood for the fire; fire bote. Cunningham.

FODERUM (Law Lat.) Food for horses or other cattle. Cowell.

—In Feudal Law. Fodder and supplies provided as a part of the king's prerogative for use in his wars or other expeditions. Cowell.

FODINA. A mine. Co. Litt. 6a.

FOEDUS (Lat.) A league; a compact.

FOEMINA VIRO CO-OPERTA. A feme covert.

FOEMINAE AB OMNIBUS OFFICIIS CIVILIBUS vel publicis remotae sunt. Women are excluded from all civil and public charges or offices. Dig. 50. 17. 2; 1 Exch. 645; 6 Mees. & W. 216.

FOEMINAE NON SUNT CAPACES DE publicis officiis. Women are not admissible to public offices (Jenk. Cent. Cas. 237); but a woman may be elected to the office of sexton (7 Mod. 263; Strange, 1114), or governor of a workhouse, and act by deputy (2 Ld. Raym. 1014), or an overseer (2 Term R. 395). See "Women."

FOENERATION. The act of putting out money at interest.

FOENUS NAUTICUS (Lat.) The name given to marine interest. The amount of such interest is not limited by law, because the lender runs so great a risk of losing his principal. Ersk. Inst. bk. 4, tit. 4, note 76. See "Marine Interest."

FOETICIDE. In medical jurisprudence. The act of criminal abortion. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288; Guy, Med. Jur. 133.

FOETURA (Law Lat.) In civil law. The produce of animals, and the fruit of other property, which are acquired to the owner of such animals and property by virtue of his right. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, c. 14, p. 81.

FOETUS (Lat.) In medical jurisprudence. An unborn child; an infant in ventre sa mere.

FOGAGIUM. In old English law. Fogage or fog; a kind of rank grass of late growth, and not eaten in summer. Spelman; Cowell. Distinguished from "hay."

FOI. In French feudal law. Faith; fealty. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 2.

FOINESUN. In old English law. The fawning or fawning time of deer. Spelman.

FOIRFAULT. In old English law. To forfeit. 1 How. St. Tr. 927.

FOIRTHOCHT. In old Scotch law. Forethought; premeditated. 1 Pitt. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 90.

FOITERERS. Vagrants.

FOLC LAND (Saxon). Land of the people. Spelman. Said by Blackstone to be land held by no assurance in writing, but to have been distributed amongst the common people at the pleasure of the lord, and resumable at his discretion. 2 Bl. Comm. 90; Cowell.

It was probably, however, land which belonged to the community, and which, being parcelled out for a term to people of all conditions, reverted again to the commons at the expiration of the term. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 8; Wharton.

FOLC MOTE, FOLK MOTE, or FOLC Gemote (Saxon, from folc, people, and mote, or gemote, meeting). In Saxon law. A meeting of the people; a general assembly of the people, to consider and order matters of the commonwealth. Somner; Spelman, voc. "Gemotum." Any popular or public meeting of all the folk or people of a place or district. Brande. See "Gemot."

The term was used to denote a court or judicial tribunal among the Saxons, which possessed substantially the powers afterwards exercised by the county courts and sheriff's tourn. These powers embraced the settlement of small claims, taking the oath of allegiance, preserving the laws, and making the necessary arrangements for the preservation of safety, peace, and the public weal. It appears that complaints were to be made before the folk gemote held in London annually, of any mismanagement by the mayor and aldermen of that city. It was called, also, a "burg gemote" when held in a burgh, and "shire gemote" when held for a county. See Manw. For. Laws; Spelman; De Brady; Cunningham.

A county court; an assembly of the people or freeholders of a county (conventus comitatus). Otherwise called the "shire mote." Spelman.

A city court; an assembly of the inhabitants of a city or borough (conventus civitatis seu burgi). Otherwise called the "burg mote." Spelman. The folc mote or city court of London is mentioned in ancient records. Id.; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 141. The term seems to have been generally applied to all courts that were adapted to the convenience of the people within any district. Id. 26. See Cowell.

FOLC RIGHT. The common right of all the people. 1 Bl. Comm. 65, 67.

FOLD-COURSE. In English law. Land used as a sheep walk.

Land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant. Sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called "common foldage." Co. Litt. 6a, note 1; W. Jones, 375; Cro. Car. 432; 2 Vent. 139.

FOLDAGE. A privilege possessed in some places by the lord of a manor, which consists in the right of having his tenant's sheep to feed on his fields, so as to manure the land.

The name of "foldage" is also given in parts of Norfolk to the customary fee paid to the lord for exemption at certain times from this duty. Elton, Commons, 45. 46.

FOLGARII. Menial servants; followers. Bracton.

FOLGERE. In old English law. A free-man, who has no house or dwelling of his own, but is the follower or retainer of another (heorthfoest), for whom he performs certain predial services. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FOLGOTH. Official dignity.

FOLIO. A leaf. The references to the writings of the older law authors are usually made by citing the folio, as it was the ancient custom to number the folio instead of the page, as is done in modern books.

A certain number of words specified by statute as a folio. Wharton. Originating, undoubtedly, in some estimate of the number of words which a folio ought to contain.

FONSADERA. In Spanish law. Any tribute or loan granted to the king for the purpose of enabling him to defray the expenses of a war.

FONTANA. A fountain or spring. Bracton, fol. 233.

FOOT. A measure of length, containing one-third of a yard, or twelve inches. Figuratively, it signifies the conclusion, the end; as, the foot of the fine, the foot of the account.

FOOT OF THE FINE. The fifth part of the conclusion of a fine. It includes the whole matter, reciting the names of the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

FOOTGELD. An amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet (expeditating him). To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest un-lawed without punishment or control. Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, p. 86; Cromp. Jur. 197; Termes de la Ley; Cunningham.

FOR. In French law. A tribunal. Le for interieur, the interior forum; the tribunal of conscience. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 3, § 4.

FOR A TURN. See "Gambling Contract."

FOR THAT, or FOR THAT WHEREAS. Words used in introduction in a declaration. "For that whereas" introduces recitals, "For that," positive allegations. Hammond, N P. 9.

FOR THE USE OF. In an action at law by one for the use of another the expression "for the use of" is for the purpose of protecting the interest of the usee against the nominal plaintiff, and not for the benefit of the defendant, who is not interested in the declaration of use, and as far as defendant is concerned, the expression is surplusage. 183 Ill. 286; 188 Ill. App. 429.

FOR VALUE RECEIVED. Generally the expression "for value received" used in a note imports a consideration. 177 Ill. 291.

FORANEUS. One from without; a forer; a stranger. Calv. Lex.

FORATHE. One who can take oath for another who is accused of one of the lesser crimes. Manw. For. Laws, p. 3. Cowell.

FORBALCA. In old records. A forebalk; a balk (that is, an unplowed piece of land) lying forward or next the highway. Cowell.

FORBANER. To deprive forever; to shut out. 9 Rich. II. c. 2; 6 Hen. VI. c. 4; Cowell.

FORBARRER (Law Fr.) To bar out; to prevent or preclude; to estop. Cowell.

FORBATUDUS. In old English law. The aggressor slain in combat. Jacob.

FORBEARANCE. A delay in enforcing rights; the act by which a creditor waits for the payment of a debt due him by the debtor after it has become due. It is sufficient consideration to support assumpsit, or a guarantee. 27 L. J. Ex. 120; 2 H. & N. 517; 32 Ch. D. 289; 56 L. J. Q. B. 518; 57 L. T. 554; contra 1 Ex. 74; 16 L. J. Ex. 237.

A forbearance is a determination of the will, not to do some given external act. Or in not doing some given external act, and in not doing it in consequence of a determination of the will. Const. Jurisp. 1, 377.

FORCE. Restraining power; validity; binding effect.

A law may be said to be in force when it is not repealed, or, more loosely, when it can be carried into practical effect. An agreement is in force when the parties to it may be compelled to act, or are acting, under its terms and stipulations.

Strength applied; active power; power put in motion.

Actual force is where strength is actually applied, or the means of applying it are at hand.

The display of power to injure sufficient to put in bodily fear is force. 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 18; 2 Whart. Crim. Law, 1698.

Implied force is that which is implied by law from the commission of an unlawful act. Every trespass quare clausum fregit is committed with implied force. 1 Salk. 641; Co. Litt. 57b, 161b, 162a; 1 Saund. 81, 140, note 4; 5 Term R. 361; 8 Term R. 78, 358; Bac. Abr. "Trespass;" 3 Wils. 18; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 890; 6 East, 387; 5 Bos. & P. 365, 454.

Mere nonfeasance cannot be considered as force, generally. 2 Saund. 47; Co. Litt. 161; Bouv. Inst. Index.

FORCE AND ARMS. A phrase used in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now necessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chit. Pl. 846, 850.

FORCED HEIRS. In Louisiana. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. Civ. Code La. art. 1482. As to the portion of the estate they are entitled to, see "Legitim." As to the causes for which forced heirs may be deprived of this right, see "Disinheriton."

FORCED SALE. A sale under process of law, and against the consent of the owner. It does not embrace a sale under a power in a mortgage. 15 Fla. 336.

FORCHEAPUM. Pre-emption. Blount.

FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETAINER. A forcible entry or detainer consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law. Comyn, Dig.; Gabbett, Crim. Law; 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 198; 4 Cush. (Mass.) 141.

Though generally referred to in the conjunctive, forcible entry and forcible detainer are distinct acts. 31 Cal. 122.

To authorize either a criminal prosecution or an action of forcible entry and detainer at common law, both entry and detainer must be forcible (93 Ind. 211); but a forcible entry will relate back to the entry, if that was unlawful, though peaceable; otherwise, if the entry was lawful (45 Cal. 597).

—In Modern Usage. The possessory action of forcible entry and detainer has been extended by statute to certain cases of constructive force, as where a tenant holds over after his term.

FORDA. In old records. A ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water. Cowell.

FORDAL (Saxon). A butt or headband; a piece.

FORDANNO. In old European law. He who first assaulted another. Spelman.

FORDIKA. In old records. Grass or herbage growing on the edge or bank of dykes or ditches. Cowell.

FORE (Saxon). Before (Fr.) Out. Kellham.

FORECLOSURE. To shut out; to bar. Used of the process of destroying an equity of redemption. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 589; Daniell, Ch. Pr. 1204; Coote, Mortg. 511; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 382.

A proceeding in chancery by which the mortgagor's right of redemption of the mortgaged premises is barred or closed forever.

In the more comprehensive sense which modern usage requires, any proceeding by which mortgaged property is applied to the payment of the mortgage debt, and the equity of the mortgagor therein barred.

As so defined, foreclosure is divided into:

(1) Strict foreclosure, being foreclosure by a proceeding in chancery, by which the equity of redemption is barred within a certain time, and the title of the mortgagee becomes absolute.

(2) By entry, by the act of the mortgagee taking possession either by his own peaceable act, or under writ of entry.

(3) By sale, being by an action for the judicial sale of the mortgaged property, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of the mortgage debt. Sometimes called "foreclosure by action."

(4) By advertisement, being a sale under a power of sale in the mortgage, notice thereof being given by advertisement. Sometimes called "foreclosure under power of sale."

The two first-named varieties are practically unused in the United States, though they exist in a few states.

FOREFAULT. In Scotch law. To forfeit; to lose.

FOREGIFT. A premium for a lease.

FOREGOERS. Royal purveyors. 26 Edw. III. c. 5.

FOREHAND RENT. In English law. A species of rent which is a premium given by the tenant at the time of taking the lease, as on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations, which is considered in the nature of an improved rent. 1 Term R. 486; 3 Term R. 461; 3 Atk. 473; Crabb, Real Prop. § 155.

FOREIGN. That which belongs to another country; that which is strange. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343.

Every nation is foreign to all the rest; and the several states of the American Union are foreign to each other with respect to their municipal laws. 2 Wash. C. (U. S.) 282; 4 Conn. 517; 6 Conn. 480; 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 458, 463; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 321; 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 203; 2 Hill (S. C.) 319; 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 303; 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 585; 5 Leigh (Va.) 471; 3 Pick. (Mass.) 293. And in respect to the distinction between foreign and inland bills of exchange. 112 U. S. 696; 41 Me. 302; 102 Mass. 141; 49 N. Y. 269.

But the reciprocal relations between the national government and the several states composing the United States are not considered as foreign, but domestic. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 398; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 317; 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607; 4 Cranch (U. S.) 384; 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1, 63.

—Foreign Administrator. An administrator appointed in a state other than that in which the decedent resided. Lee, Admn.

—Foreign Answer. An answer not triable in the county where it is made. St. 15 Hen. VI. c. 5; Blount.

—Foreign Apposer. An officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's estreats, comparing them with the records, and apposeth (interrogates) the sheriff what he says to each particular sum therein. 4 Inst. 107; Blount; Cowell, "Foreigne." The word is written "opposer," "opposeth," by Lord Coke; and this signification corresponds very well to the meaning given by Blount, of examiner (interrogator) of the sheriff's accounts.

—Foreign Assignment. An assignment made in a foreign country, or in another state. 2 Kent, Comm. 405 et seq.

—Foreign Attachment. A process by virtue of which the property of an absent debtor is seized for the purpose of compelling an appearance, and, in default of that, to pay the claim of the plaintiff. See "Attachment."

—Foreign Bill of Exchange. A bill of exchange drawn in one state or country, and payable in another. N. Y. Neg. Inst. Law, § 213.

—Foreign Coins. Coins issued by the authority of a foreign government.

There were several acts of congress passed which rendered certain foreign gold and silver coins a legal tender in payment of debts upon certain prescribed conditions as to fineness and weight. In making a report in 1854 on this subject, the late director of the mint, Mr. Snowden, suggested that there was no propriety or necessity for legalizing the circulation of the coins of other countries, and that in no other nation, except in the case of some colonies, was this mixture of currencies admitted by law, either on the score of courtesy or convenience; and he recommended that if the laws which legalize foreign coins should be repealed, it would be proper to require an annual assay report upon the weight and fineness of such foreign coins as frequently reach our shores, with a view to settle and determine their marketable value. Ex. Doc. No. 68, 38d Cong., 1st Sess. This suggestion was subsequently repeated, and finally led to the passage of the act of February 21, 1857 (11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 163), the third section of which is as follows: "That all former acts authorizing the currency of foreign gold or silver coins, and declaring the same a legal tender in payment for debts, are repealed; but it shall be the duty of the director of the mint to cause assays to be made from time to time of such foreign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their average weight, fineness, and value, and to embrace in his annual report a statement of the results thereof."

—Foreign Commerce. Commerce or trade between the United States and foreign countries.

—Foreign Corporation. A corporation created by or under the laws of another state, government, or country. 2 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 375, § 15.

—Foreign County. Another county. It may be in the same kingdom, it will still be foreign. See Blount, "Foreign."

—Foreign Creditor. One who resides in a different state or country from the debtor.

—Foreign Divorce. A divorce granted in a state or country other than that in which one of the parties is domiciled.

A divorce granted in a state or country other than that in which its validity is called in question.

—Foreign Domicile. A domicile gained in a foreign country.

—Foreign Enlistment Act. St. 59 Geo. III. c. 69, for preventing British citizens from enlisting as sailors or soldiers in the service of a foreign power. Wharton; 4 Steph. Comm. 226.

—Foreign Exchange. Exchange between foreign states or countries.

—Foreign Judgment. The judgment of a foreign tribunal.

The various states of the United States are in this respect considered as foreign to each other. In Louisiana it has been decided that a judgment rendered by a Spanish tribunal under the former government of that state is not a foreign judgment. 4 Mart. (La.) 301, 310.

—Foreign Jury. A jury obtained from a county other than that in which issue was joined.

—Foreign Laws. The laws of a foreign country.

—Foreign Matter. Matter which must be tried in another county. Blount. Matter done or to be tried in another county. Cowell.

—Foreign Plea. See "Plea."

—Foreign Port. A port or place which is wholly without the United States. 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 375; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 4, 7; 1 Brock. (U. S.) 235. A port without the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Dods. Adm. 201; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 1; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 29; 6 Exch. 886; 1 Blatchf. & H. (U. S.) 66, 71. Practically, the definition has become, for most purposes of maritime law, a port at such distance as to make communication with the owners of the ship very inconvenient or almost impossible. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 512, note.

—Foreign Service. In feudal law. That whereby a mesne lord held of another, without the compass of his own fee, or that which the tenant performed either to his own lord or to the lord paramount out of the fee. Kitch. Cts. 299. Foreign service seems also to be used for knight's service, or escuage uncertain. Jacob.

—Foreign Vessel. A vessel owned by residents in, or sailing under the flag of, a foreign nation.

—Foreign Voyage. A voyage whose termination is within a foreign country. 3 Kent, Comm. 177, note. The length of the voyage has no effect in determining its character, but only the place of destination. 1 Story (U. S.) 1; 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 342; 2 Bost. Law Rep. 146; 2 Wall. C. C. (U. S.) 264; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 31.

FOREIGNER. One who is not a citizen. Cowell.

—In the Old English Law. It seems to have been used of every one not an inhabitant of a city, at least with reference to that city. 1 H. Bl. 213. See, also, Cowell, "Foreigne."

—In the United States. Any one who was born in some other country than the United States, and who owes allegiance to some foreign state or country. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 349. An alien. See "Alien;" "Citizen."

FOREIN. An old form of "foreign" (q. v.) Blount.

FOREJUDGE. To deprive a man of the thing in question by sentence of court.

Among foreign writers, says Blount, forejudge is to banish, to expel. In this latter sense, the word is also used in English law of an attorney who has been expelled from court for misconduct. Cowell; Cunningham.

FOREJUDGER. In English practice. A judgment by which a man is deprived or put out of a thing; a judgment of expulsion or banishment. See "Forejudge."

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury.

FORENSIC. Belonging to courts of justice.

FORENSIC MEDICINE. Medical jurisprudence. "That science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law; hence its limits are, on the one hand, the requirements of the law, and, on the other, the whole range of medicine. Anatomy, physiology, medicine, surgery, chemistry, physics, and botany lend their aid as necessity arises; and in some cases all these branches of science are required to enable a court of law to arrive at a proper conclusion on a contested question affecting life or property." Tayl. Med. Jur. 1.

FORENSIS. Forensic; belonging to court. forensis homo, a man engaged in causes. A pleader; an advocate. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

FORESAID. Used in Scotch law as "aforesaid" is in English, and sometimes, in a plural form, "foresaid." 2 How. St. Tr. 715. "Foresaidis" occurs in old Scotch records. "The Loidis assesouris forsaidis." 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 107.

FORESCHOKE. Forsaken; Cowell.

FORESHORE. That part of the land adjacent to the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flow of the tides, i. e., by the medium line between the greatest and least range of tide,—spring tides and neap tides. In the later English decisions it appears to denote the shore and bed of the sea, and of every channel, creek, bay, estuary, and of every navigable river of the United Kingdom, as far up the same as the tide flows. Gould, Water, § 27. In England it forms part of the adjoining county and is ordinarily and prima facie vested in the crown, subject to the rights of the queen's subjects of fishing and navigation, not only in the sea, but in all tidal navigable rivers, and of passing over the foreshore itself; but it may belong to a subject, either by itself, or as part of a manor. 10 Price, 350, 378; 46 L. J. Ch. 654. Chitty, Prerog. 207.

FOREST. A certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. Manw. For. Laws, c. 1, No. 1; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bl. Comm. 289.

A royal hunting ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when a franchise passed into the hands of a subject. Spelman; Cowell; Manw. For. Laws, c. 1; 2 Bl. Comm. 83.

FOREST COURTS. In English law. Courts instituted for the government of the king's forests in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which the deer were lodged. They comprised the courts of attachments, of regard, of swain mote, and of justice seat; but since the revolution of 1688, these courts, it is said, have gone into absolute desuetude. 3 Steph. Comm. 439-441; 3 Bl. Comm. 71-74. But see 8 Q. B. 981.

FORESTAGIUM. A tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowell.

FORESTALL. To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. Cowell;

Blount. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Bl. Comm. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it. Cowell.

To commit the crime of forestalling the market.

FORESTALLER. One who commits the offense of forestalling. Used, also, to denote the crime itself, namely, the obstruction of the highway, or hindering a tenant from coming to his land. 3 Bl. Comm. 170.

FORESTALLING. Obstructing the way; intercepting a person on the highway.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET. Buying victuals on their way to the market before they reach it, with the intent to sell again at a higher price. Cowell; Blount; 4 Bl. Comm. 158. Every device or practice, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other provisions. 3 Inst. 196; Bac. Abr.; 1 Russ. Crimes, 169; 4 Bl. Comm. 158; Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 80, § 1. See 13 Viner, Abr. 430; 1 East, 132; 14 East, 406; 15 East, 511; 3 Maule & S. 67; Dane, Abr. Index.

FORESTARIUS. A forester; an officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bracton, 316; Du Cange.

FORESTER. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount; Cowell.

FORETHOUGHT FELONY. In Scotch law. Murder committed in consequence of a previous design. Ersk. bk. 4, tit. 4, c. 50; Bell, Dict.

FORFANG. A taking beforehand; a taking provisions from any one in fairs or markets before the king's purveyors are served with necessaries for his majesty. Blount; Cowell.

FORFEIT. To forfeit signifies the incurring of a forfeiture or penalty and is antagonistic to the idea of mere payment of compensation for damages for breach of contract. 172 Ill. App. 92.

To lose as the penalty of some misdeed or negligence. The word includes not merely the idea of losing, but also of having the property transferred to another without the consent of the owner and wrongdoer.

This is the essential meaning of the word, whether it be that an offender is to forfeit a sum of money, or an estate is to be forfeited to a former owner for a breach of condition, or to the king for some crime. Cowell says that forfeiture is general and confiscation a particular forfeiture to the king's exchequer. The modern distinction, however, seems to refer rather to a difference between forfeiture as relating to acts of the owner, and confiscation as relating to acts of the government. 1 Story (U. S.) 134; 13 Pet. (U. S.) 157; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. Confiscation is more generally used of an appropriation of an enemy's property; forfeiture, of the taking possession of property to which the owner, who may be a citizen, has lost title through violation of law. See 1 Kent, Comm. 67; 1 Story (U. S.) 134.

FORFEITURE. A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they become vested in the party injured as a recompense for the wrong which he alone, or the public together with himself, hath sustained. 2 Bl. Comm. 267. A sum of money to be paid by way of penalty for a crime. 21 Ala. (N. S.) 672; 10 Grat. (Va.) 700. See "Confiscate."

Forfeiture by alienation. By the English law, estates less than a fee may be forfeited to the party entitled to the residuary interest by a breach of duty in the owner of the particular estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 274.

In this country, such forfeitures are almost unknown, and the more just principle prevails that the conveyance by the tenant operates only on the interest which he possessed, and does not affect the remainderman or reversioner. 4 Kent, Comm. 81, 82, 424; 3 Dall. (Pa.) 436; 5 Ohio, 30; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 318; 1 Rice (S. C.) 459; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168; 1 Wash. (Va.) 381; 11 Conn. 553; 22 N. H. 500; 21 Me. 372. See, also, Stearns, Real Actions, 11; 4 Kent, Comm. 84; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 121, note; Williams, Real Prop. 25; 5 Dane, Abr. 6-8; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 92, 197.

Forfeiture for crimes. Under the constitution and laws of the United States (Const. art. 3, § 3; Act April 30, 1790, § 24 [1 Story, U. S. Laws, 88]), forfeiture for crimes is nearly abolished, and when it occurs, the state recovers only the title which the owner had. 4 Mason (U. S.) 174. See, also, Dalr. Feud. Prop. c. 4, pp. 145-154; Post. Crim. Law, 95; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 92.

Forfeiture by nonperformance of conditions. An estate may be forfeited by a breach or nonperformance of a condition annexed to the estate, either expressed in the deed at its original creation, or implied by law, from a principle of natural reason. 2 Bl. Comm. 281; Litt. § 361; 1 Prest. Est. 478; White & T. Lead. Cas. 794, 795; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 528; 2 N. H. 120; 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 375; 32 Me. 394; 18 Conn. 535; 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 190. Such forfeiture may be waived by acts of the person entitled to take advantage of the breach. 1

Conn. 79; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 126; Walk. Am. Law, 299; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 454.

Forfeiture by waste. Waste is a cause of forfeiture. 2 Bl. Comm. 283; 2 Inst. 299; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 118.

See, generally, 2 Bl. Comm. c. 18; 4 Bl. Comm. 382; Bouv. Inst. Index; 2 Kent, Comm. 318; 4 Kent, Comm. 422; 10 Viner, Abr. 371, 394; 13 Viner, Abr. 436; Bac. Abr. "Forfeiture;" Comyn, Dig.; Dane, Abr.; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 252; Considerations on the Law of Forfeiture for High Treason (London Ed. 1746; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 91, 92, 118, 197.

FORFEITURE OF A BOND. A failure to perform the condition on which the obligee was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Courts of equity and of law in modern practice will relieve from the forfeiture of a bond; and, upon proper cause shown, criminal courts will, in general, relieve from the forfeiture of a recognizance to appear. See 3 Yates (Pa.) 93; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 442; 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 104, 200; 1 Ill. 257.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry when he or she married contrary to the wishes of his or her guardian in chivalry. 2 Bl. Comm. 70.

FORFEITURES ABOLITION ACT. Another name for the English act of 1870, abolishing forfeitures on conviction of felony.

FORGAVEL. A small rent reserved in money; a quit rent.

FORGE. An establishment, or mechanical contrivance, by which iron is made, or manufactured from the ore. 1 Stock. Ch. (N. J.) 296.

To forge means, properly speaking, no more than to make or form, but in our law it is always taken in an evil sense. 2 East's P. C. 852, c. 19, § 1.

The French fauzer or fauser, however, which is a term employed by Britton, always radically imported a false making, and may have been the origin of the English word, instead of forger, to fashion.

To forge and to counterfeit are constantly used both in ancient and modern law, as synonymous terms. Britt. c. 4. The former, however, is usually applied to writing or written instruments, the latter to other subjects of imitation, especially money. See "Forgery."

—In Criminal Law. To make or fabricate a thing in imitation of another, with a view to deceive and defraud; to make falsely; to counterfeit.

FORGERY. The false making, with intent to defraud, or any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy, or the foundation of a legal liability. 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 533.

Bishop (2 New Crim. Law, § 533) has collected seven definitions of forgery, and justly remarks that the books abound in definitions. Coke says the term is "taken metaphorically from the smith, who beateth upon his anvil, and forgeth what fashion and shape he will." 3 Inst. 169.

The elements are (1) a false making (46 N. H. 266; 23 Minn. 52), but this may consist of a material alteration (64 Wis. 432) (2) of an instrument apparently capable of defrauding (20 Iowa, 541, 118 Mass. 685) (3) with intent to defraud (51 Vt. 105, 15 Mass. 526).

FORHERDA. In old records. A herdland headland, or foreland. Cowell.

FORINSECUM MANERIUM. That part of a manor which lies without the town, and is not included within the liberties of it. Par. Ant. 351.

FORINSECUM SERVITIUM (Lat.) The payment of extraordinary aid. Kennett.

FORINSIC (Lat. forinsecus). Outward; on the outside; without; foreign; belonging to another manor. Silio forinsecus, the outward ridge or furrow. Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town, and is not included within the liberties of it. Cowell; Blount; Cunningham; Jacob, "Foreign Service;" 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 273.

FORIS. Abroad; out of doors; on the outside of a place; without; extrinsic.

FORIS DISPUTATIONES. In civil law. Arguments in court; disputations or arguments before a court. 1 Kent, Comm. 530; Vicat, "Disputatio."

FORISBANITUS, or FORBANNITUS. Banished; outlawed. Spelman.

FORISFACERE (Lat.) To forfeit; to lose on account of crime. It may be applied not only to estates, but to a variety of other things, in precisely the popular sense of the word "forfeit." Spelman; Du Cange.

To confiscate. Du Cange; Spelman.

To commit an offense; to do a wrong; to do something beyond or outside of (foris) what is right (extra rationem). Du Cange. To do a thing against or without law. Co. Litt. 59a.

To disclaim. Du Cange.

FORISFACTUM (Lat.) Forfeited. Bona forisfacta, forfeited goods. 1 Bl. Comm. 299. A crime. Du Cange; Spelman.

FORISFACTURA (Lat.) A crime or offense through which property is forfeited. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 32.

A fine or punishment in money.

Forfeiture; the loss of property or life in consequence of crime. Spelman.

Forisfactura plena. A forfeiture of all a man's property; things which were forfeited. Du Cange; Spelman.

FORISFACTUS (Lat.) A criminal. One who has forfeited his life by commission of a capital offense. Spelman; Leg. Rep. c. 77; Du Cange. Si quiespiam forisfactus poposcerit regis misericordiam, etc., if any criminal shall have asked pardon of the king, etc. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 18.

Forisfactus servus. A slave who has been a freeman, but has forfeited his freedom by crime. Leg. Athelstan, c. 8; Du Cange.

FORISFAMILIATED, or FORISFAMILIATUS. In old English law. Portioned off. A son was forisfamiated when he had a portion of his father's estate assigned to him during his father's life, in lieu of his share of the inheritance, when it was done at his request, and he assented to the assignment. The word etymologically denotes put out of the family, emancipated.

One who is no longer an heir of the parent. Du Cange; Spelman; Cowell. Similar in some degree to the modern practice of advancement.

FORISJUDICATIO (Lat.) In old English law. Forejudger; a forejudgment; a judgment of court whereby a man is put out of possession of a thing. Co. Litt. 100b; Cunningham.

FORISJUDICATUS (Lat.) Forejudged; sent from court; banished; deprived of a thing by judgment of court. Bracton, 250b; Co. Litt. 100b; Du Cange.

FORISJURARE (Lat.) To forswear; to abjure; to abandon.

Forisjurare parentilam. To remove one's self from parental authority. The person who did this lost his rights as heir. Du Cange; Leg. Hen. I. c. 88.

Provinciam forisjurare. To forswear the country. Spelman; Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 6.

FORJUDGE. See "Forejudge."

FORJURER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To forswear; to abjure. Forjurer royalms, to abjure the realm. Britt. cc. 1, 16.

FORLANDUM, Forlanda. Law Lat. In old records. Land extending beyond, or lybefore other land; or bordering or lying outward; a foreland; an extra allowance of land; an allowance in meeting and bounding, otherwise called freebord. 2 Mon. Angl. fol. 332. Blount; Cowell.

FORLER LAND. Land in the diocese of Hereford, which had a peculiar custom attached to it, but which has been long since disused, although the name is retained. Butl. Surv. 56.

FORM. In practice. The model of an instrument or legal proceeding, containing the substance and the principal terms, to be used in accordance with the laws.

The legal order or method of legal proceedings or construction of legal instruments.

FORMA DAT ESSE. Form gives being. Lord Henley, C., 2 Eden, 99.

FORMA LEGALIS FORMA ESSENTIALIS. Legal form is essential form. 10 Coke, 100, 9 C. B. 493; 2 Hopk. 319.

FORMA NON OBSERVATA, INFERTUR annullatio actus. When form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. 12 Coke, 7.

FORMA PAUPERIS. See "In Forma Pauperis."

FORMALITIES. In England, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions. Enc. Lond.

FORMALITY. The conditions which must be observed in making contracts, and the words which the law gives to be used in order to render them valid. It also signifies the conditions which the law requires to make regular proceedings.

FORMATA. Canonical letters.

FORMATA BREVIA. Formed writs; writs of form. See "Brevia Formata."

FORMED ACTION. An action for which a form of words is provided, which must be exactly followed. 10 Mod. 140.

FORMEDON. An ancient writ provided by St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I.) c. 1, for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. Stearns, Real Actions, 322.

It is a writ in the nature of a writ of right, and is the highest remedy which a tenant in tail can have. Co. Litt. 316.

This writ lay for those interested in an estate tail who were liable to be defeated of their right by a discontinuance of the estate tail, who were not entitled to a writ of right absolute, since none but those who claimed in fee simple were entitled to this. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 255. It is called "formedon" because the plaintiff in it claimed per formam doni.

The writ was abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

—Formedon in the Descender. A writ of formedon which lies where a gift is made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliens the lands, or is disseised of them and dies, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 211; Litt. § 595.

If the demandant claims the inheritance as an estate tail which ought to come to him by descent from some ancestor to whom it was first given, his remedy is by a writ of formedon in the descender. Stearns, Real Actions, 322.

It must have been brought within twenty years from the death of the ancestor who was disseised. 21 Jac. I. c. 16; 3 Brod. & B. 217; 6 East, 83; 4 Term R. 300; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 193, note.

—Formedon in the Remainder. A writ of formedon which lies where lands are given to one for life or in tail, with remainder to another in fee or in tail, and he who hath the particular estate dies without issue, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder, and keeps him out of possession. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 211; Stearns, Real Actions, 323; Litt. § 597; 3 Bl. Comm. 293.

—Formedon in the Reverter. A writ of formedon which lies where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards, by death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns.

In this case, the demandant must suggest the gift, his own right as derived from the donor, and the failure of heirs of the donee. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 293; Stearns, Real Actions, 323; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 212; Litt. § 597.

FORMER ADJUDICATION. A previous determination of the matter in litigation by a competent court between the same parties. To constitute a former adjudication which will bar subsequent litigation, it is essential.

(1) That the judgment be final and upon the merits. 115 Ill. 29; 103 Mass. 280; 78 Mich. 234; 74 N. Y. 449; 82 N. Y. 55; 94 U. S. 351. Thus, a mere nonsuit (48 Me. 353) or dismissal because the action is premature (35 N. Y. 279) is not a bar to a subsequent action.

(2) The court must have had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter (93 U. S. 277; 132 Ill. 213), but it may be a foreign court (26 N. Y. 146).

(3) The same issues must have been involved (25 N. Y. 613), but the issues include every point which is either expressly in issue, or which must have been decided to support the judgment (24 Wis. 124. See 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 63, and note); and the adjudication is conclusive not only as to what was actually litigated, but as to all that might have been litigated under the pleadings and issues made (70 Ill. 385; 102 N. Y. 452).

(4) As respects adjudications in personam, the adjudication must have been between the same parties or their privies (24 How. [U. S.] 241), and in the same capacity (58 N. Y. 463), but their position as plaintiff and defendant need not be the same if they be adversary parties (86 N. Y. 390; 61 Iowa, 290).

Privies of a party are bound to the same extent as the party himself. See "Privy." 69 Ill. 457; 68 Iowa 145.

Lessor and lessee (46 Mo. 444), bailor and bailee (12 N. Y. 343), assignor and assignee (17 Mass. 365), mortgagor and mortgagee (105 N. Y. 39), ancestor and heir (61 Ala. 472), are ordinarily privies, but husband and wife (110 N. Y. 394), or guardian and ward (27 Pa. St. 226), are not.

A judgment in rem is conclusive as to the property in question and the title thereto without issues or parties. 23 Wall. (U. S.) 463.

FORMER RECOVERY. A recovery in a former action. See "Former Adjudication."

FORMIDO PERICULI (Lat.) Fear of danger. 1 Kent, Comm. 23; Huber de Jur. Civ. lib. 3, c. 7, § 4.

FORMS OF ACTION. The various classes of personal actions at common law, as assumpsit, trespass, case, detinue, trover, etc. (q. v.) The forms of action are now abolished in England by the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875, and in most of the United States.

FORMULA. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings.

—In Civil Law. An action. Calv. Lex.

FORMULAE. In Roman law. When the legis actiones were proved to be inconvenient, a mode of procedure called "per formulas" (i. e., by means of formulae) was gradually introduced, and eventually the legis actiones were abolished by the Lex Aebutia, B. C. 164, excepting in a very few exceptional matters. The formulae were four in number, namely: (1) The Demonstratio, wherein the plaintiff stated, i. e., showed, the facts out of which his claim arose; (2) the Intentio, where he made his claim against the defendant; (3) the Adjudicatio, wherein the judex was directed to assign or adjudicate the property, or any portion or portions thereof, according to the rights of the parties; and (4) the Condemnatio, in which the judex was authorized and directed to condemn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. These formulae were obtained from the magistrate (in jure), and were thereafter proceeded with before the judex (in judicio). Brown.

FORMULARIES. A collection of the forms of proceedings among the Franks and other early European nations. Co. Litt. Butler's note 77.

FORNAGIUM. The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord's common oven (in furno domini), or for a commission to use his own.

FORNICATION. In criminal law. Unlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be married or unmarried.

Fornication is distinguished from "adultery" by the fact that the guilty person is not married. Four cases of unlawful intercourse may arise: Where both parties are married; where the man only is married; where the woman only is married; where neither is married. In the first case, such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is adultery in the woman, and fornication (by statute, in some states, adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties.

In some states it is indictable by statute. 6 Vt. 311; 2 Tayl. (N. C.) 165; 2 Grat. (Va.) 555.

FORNO. In Spanish law. An oven. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, lib. 18.

FORO. In Spanish law. The place where tribunals hear and determine causes,—exercendarum litium locus. This word, according to Varro, is derived from ferendo, and is so called because all lawsuits have reference to things that are vendible, which presupposes the administration of justice to take place in the markets

FOROS. In Spanish law. Emphyteutic rents. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 309.

FORPRISE. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. Cowell; Blount.

In another sense, the word is taken for any exaction. Cunningham.

FORSPEAKER. An attorney or advocate; one who speaks for another. Blount.

FORSTAL. An intercepting or stopping in the highway. See "Forestall."

FORSTELLARIUS EST PAUPERUM DEPRESSOR, ET TOTIUS COMMUNITATIS ET PATRIAE PUBLICUS INIMICUS. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy to the whole community and the country. 3 Inst. 196.

FORSWEAR. In criminal law. To swear to a falsehood.

This word has not the same meaning as "perjury." It does not, ex vi termini, signify a false swearing before an officer or court having authority to administer an oath, on an issue. A man may be forsworn by making a false oath before an incompetent tribunal, as well as before a lawful court. Hence, to say that a man is forsworn will or will not be slander, as the circumstances show that the oath was or was not taken before a lawful authority. Heard, Libel & S. §§ 16, 34; Cro. Car. 378; Lutw. 292; 1 Rolle, Abr. 39, pl. 7; Bac. Abr. "Slander" (B 3); Cro. Eliz. 609; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 505; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 10; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 48, 80; 12 Mass. 496; 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 116.

FORTHCOMING. In Scotch law. The action by which an arrestment (attachment) of goods is made available to the creditor or holder.

The arrestee and common debtor are called up before the judge, to hear sentence given ordering the debt to be paid or the arrested goods to be given up to the creditor arresting. Bell, Dict.

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required. 2 Wash. (Va.) 189; 11 Grat. (Va.) 522.

FORTHWITH. As soon as, by reasonable exertion, confined to the object, it may be accomplished. This is the import of the term. Style, Pr. Reg. 452, 453.

The words "forthwith" and "immediately" have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression "within a reasonable time," and imply prompt, vigorous action, without any delay, and whether there has been such action is a question of fact, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case. 4 Q. B. Div. 471; 4 Tyrwh. 837.

Where a judge has to do a thing "forthwith" after the happening of something else, the word will have a different meaning according as the act to be done is: (1) Ministerial and demandable ex debito justitiae; or (2) judicial. If the act comes within the first of these classes the word will mean, "forthwith upon the application of the party entitled to have the act done." 28 L. J. M. C. 196.

Where, however, the act to be done is judicial and discretionary, "forthwith" is synonymous with "immediately." 12 L. J. Q. B. 273; 23 L. J. Ex. 200; 29 L. J. Q. B. 191.

In a contract, and the ordinary transactions of life, "forthwith" does not usually mean "immediately," 34 L. J. C. P. 241; but means "with all reasonable celerity." 7 M. & G. 494.

In a rule of court it has been construed to mean twenty-four hours. 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 328. But no such construction has been given to the term when used in a statute. "Without delay" is a reasonable meaning in a statute. 39 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 392, affirming 11 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 473; 20 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 222.

FORTIA (Lat.) A word of art, signifying the furnishing a weapon of force to do the act, and by force whereof the act was committed, and he that furnished it was not present when the act was done. 2 Inst. 182.

The general meaning of the word is an unlawful force. Spelman; Du Cange.

FORTIA FRISCA. Fresh force (q. v.)

FORTILITY. A fortified place; a castle; a bulwark. Cowell.

FORTIOR (Lat.) Stronger. A term applied, in the law of evidence, to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party. Burrill. Circ. Ev. 64, 66.

FORTIOR EST CUSTODIA LEGIS QUAM HOMINIS. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man. 2 Rolle, 325.

FORTIOR ET POTENTIOR EST DISPOSITIO LEGIS QUAM HOMINIS. The disposition of the law is stronger and more powerful than that of man. Co. Litt. 234; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 622; 10 Q. B. 944; 18 Q. B. 87; 10 C. B. 561; 3 H. L. Cas. 507; 13 Mees. & W. 285, 306; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 401.

FORTIORI. See "A Fortiori."

FORTIS. Strong. Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel. Towns. Pl. 227.

FORTLETT. A place or port of some strength; a little fort. Old Nat. Brev. 45.

FORTUIT. Accidental.

FORTUITOUS COLLISION. An accidental collision.

FORTUITOUS EVENT. In civil law. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted. Code La. art. 2522, No. 7.

That which neither of the parties has occasioned or could prevent. Lois des Bat. pt. 2, c. 2. An unforeseen event which cannot be prevented. Dict. de Jur. "Cas Fortuit."

There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or inevitable accident, and irresistible force. By the former, commonly called the "act of God," is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable. Of this nature are losses occasioned by the inroads of a hostile army, or by public enemies. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Bat. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1.

Fortuitous events are fortunate or unfortunate. The accident of finding a treasure is a fortuitous event of the first class. Lois des Bat. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2.

Involuntary obligations may arise in consequence of fortuitous events. For example, when, to save a vessel from shipwreck, it is necessary to throw goods overboard, the loss must be borne in common. There arises, in this case, between the owners of the vessel and of the goods remaining on board, an obligation to bear proportionably the loss which has been sustained. Lois des Bat. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2.

See, in general, Dig. 50. 17. 23; Id. 16. 3. 1; Id. 19. 2. 11; Id. 44. 7. 1; Id. 18. 6. 10; Id. 13. 6. 18; Id. 26. 7. 50.

FORTUNAM FACIUNT JUDICEM. They make fortune the judge. Co. Litt. 167. Spoken of the process of making partition among coparceners by drawing lots for the several purparts.

FORUM.

—At Common Law. A place; a place of jurisdiction; the place where a remedy is sought; jurisdiction; a court of justice.

Forum conscientiae. The conscience.

Forum contentiosum. A court. 3 Bl. Comm. 211.

Forum contractus. The courts of the place of making a contract. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum domesticum. A domestic court. 1 W. Bl. 82.

Forum domicilii. The court of the place of domicile. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum ecclesiasticum. An ecclesiastical court.

Forum rei gestae. The court of the place of transaction. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

Forum rei sitae. The court of the place where the thing is situated.

Forum seculare. A secular court.

Forum ligeantiae rei. The court or jurisdiction of the county to which defendant owes allegiance.

Forum regium. The king's court. St. Westminster II. c. 43.

Forum rei, or rei sitae (Law Lat.) The forum or court of the thing (res rei); the court of the place where a thing claimed is; the tribunal where the property is. Story, Conf. Laws, § 325k. The place where a thing in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction and remedy. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

—In Roman Law. The paved open space in cities, particularly in Rome, where were held the solemn business assemblies of the people, the markets, the exchange (whence cedere foro, to retire from 'change, equivalent to "to become bankrupt"), and where the magistrates sat to transact the business of their office. It came afterwards to mean any place where causes were tried, locus exercendarum litium. Isidor. lib. 18, Orig. A court of justice.

The obligation and the right of a person to have his case decided by a particular court.

It is often synonymous with that signification of judicium which corresponds to our word "court" (q. v.) in the sense of jurisdiction; e. g., foro interdicere (l. 1, § 13, D. 1. 12; C. 9, § 4; D. 48. 19); fori praescriptio (l. 7, pr. D. 2, 8; l. 1, C. 3, 24); forum rei accusator sequitur (l. 5, pr. C. 3, 13). In this sense, the forum of a person means both the obligation and the right of that person to have his cause decided by a particular court. 5 Gluck, Pand. 237. What court should have cognizance of the cause depends, in general, upon the person of the defendant, or upon the person of some one connected with the defendant.

By modern writers upon the Roman law, jurisdiction dependent on the person of the defendant is distinguished as (1) that of common right, forum commune, and (2) that of special privilege, forum privilegium.

(1) Forum commune. The jurisdiction of common right was either general, forum generale, or special, forum speciale.

(a) Forum generale. General jurisdiction was of two kinds, the forum originis, which was that of the birthplace of the party, and the forum domicilii, that of his domicile. The forum originis was either commune or proprium. The former was that legal status which all free-born subjects of the empire, wherever residing, had at Rome when they were found there, and had not the jus revocandi domum (i. e., the right of one absent from his domicile of transferring to the forum domicilii a suit instituted against him in the place of his temporary sojourn). L. 2, §§ 3, 4, 5, D. 5, 1; l. 28, § 4, D. 4, 6; 3 Gluck, Pand. 188. The forum originis proprium, or forum originis speciale, was the court of that place of which at the time of the party's birth his father was a citizen, though that might possibly be neither his own birthplace, nor the actual domicile of his father.

Forum domicilii. The place of the domicile exercised the greatest influence over the rights of the party. As to what constitutes domicile, see "Domicile." In general, one was subject to the laws and courts of his domicile alone, unless specially privileged. L. 29, D. 50, 1.

(b) Forum speciale. Particular jurisdiction. These were very numerous. The more important are: Forum continentiae causarum. Sometimes two or more actions or disputed questions are so connected that they cannot advantageously be tried separately, although in strictness they belong to different jurisdictions. In such cases the modern civil law permits them to be determined in a single court, although such court would be incompetent in regard to a portion of them taken singly. Forum contractus, the court having cognizance of the action on a contract.

Forum delicti, forum deprehensionis. The jurisdiction of the person of a criminal, and may be the court of the place where the offense was committed, or that of the place where the criminal was arrested.

Forum arresti. A jurisdiction unknown to the Roman law, but of frequent occurrence in the modern civil law. It is that over persons or things detained by a judicial order, and corresponds in some degree to the "attachment" of our practice.

Forum gestae administrationis. The jurisdiction over the accounts and administration of guardians, agents, and all persons appointed to manage the affairs of third parties. The court which appointed such administrator or wherein the cause was pending in which such appointment was made, or within whose territorial limits the business of the administration was transacted, had exclusive jurisdiction over all suits arising out of his acts, or brought for the purpose of compelling him to account, or brought by him to recover compensation for his outlays. L. 1, C. 3, 21; 6 Gluck, Pand. § 521.

(2) Forum privilegiatum. Privileged jurisdictions. In general, the privileged jurisdiction of a person held the same rank as the forum domicilii, and, like that, did not supplant the particular jurisdictions above named save in certain exceptional cases. The privilege was general in its nature, and applied to all cases not specially excepted, but it only arose when the person possessing it was sued by another; for he could not assert it when he was the plaintiff, the rule being, actor sequitur forum rei, the plaintiff must resort to the jurisdiction of the defendant. It was in general limited to personal actions; all real actions brought against the defendant in the character of possessor of the thing in dispute followed the forum speciale. The privilege embraced the wife of the privileged person and his children so long as they were under his potestas. And, lastly, when a forum privilegiatum purely personal conflicted with the forum speciale, the former must yield. 6 Gluck, Pand. 339-341.

Privileged persons were:

(a) Personas miserabiles, who were persons under the special protection of the law on account of some incapacity of age, sex, mind, or condition. These were entitled, whether as plaintiffs or defendants, to carry their causes directly before the emperor, and, passing over the inferior courts, to demand a hearing before his supreme tribunal, whenever they had valid grounds for doubting the impartiality or fearing the procrastination of the inferior courts, or for dreading the influence of a powerful adversary. 6 Gluck, Pand. § 522.

(b) Clerici, the clergy. The privilege of clerical persons to be impleaded only in the episcopal courts commenced under the Christian emperors.

(c) Academici. In the modern civil law, the officers and students of the universities are privileged to be sued before the university courts. This species of privilege was unknown to the Roman law. See 6 Gluck, Pand. § 524.

(d) Milites. Soldiers had special military courts as well in civil as criminal cases.

There are many classes of persons who are privileged in respect to jurisdiction under the modern civil law who were not so privileged by the Roman law. Such are officers of the court of the sovereign, including ministers of state and councillors, ambassadors, noblemen, etc. These do not require extended notice.

Jurisdiction ex persona alterius. A person might be entitled to be sued in a particular court on grounds depending upon the person of another. Such were (1) the wife, who, if the marriage had been legally contracted, acquired the forum of her husband (l. 65, D. 5, 1; l. ult. D. 50, 1; l. 19, D. 2, 1), and retained it until her second marriage (l. 22. § 1, D. 50, 1), or change of domicile.

Section 93, Voet. Com. ad Pand. D. 5, 1. (2) Servants, who possessed the jurisdiction of their master as regarded the forum domicilii, and also the forum privilegiatum, so far at least as the privilege was that of the class to which such master belonged, and was not purely personal. Gluck, Pand. § 510b. (3) The haeres, who in many cases retained the jurisdiction of his testator. When sued in the character of heir in respect to causes of action upon which suit had been commenced before the testator's death, he must submit to the forum which had acquired cognizance of the suit. Ll. 30, 34, D. 5, 1.

FORWARDING MERCHANT. A person who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which he receives a compensation from the owners, but who has no concern in the vessels or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight.

Such a one is not deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman or agent. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 282; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497. He is required to use only ordinary diligence in sending the property by responsible persons. 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 593. See Story, Bailm.

FOSSA (Lat.) In English law. A ditch full of water, where formerly women who had committed a felony were drowned; the grave. Cowell.

FOSSAGIUM. The duty levied on the inhabitants for repairing the moat or ditch around a fortified town.

FOSSATORIUM OPERATIO (Lat.) The service or laboring done by the inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town. A contribution in lieu of such work, called fossagium, was sometimes paid. Kennett; Cowell.

FOSSATUM (Law Lat. from fossa, q. v.) In old English law. A dyke; a bank of earth thrown up out of a ditch. Glanv. lib. 13, c. 34; Bracton, fol. 115; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 8; St. Westminster II. c. 46.

A ditch or trench. The same with fossa. Spelman; Rig. Orig. 92b, 199.

A moat or fosse around an encampment or fortified place. Spelman.

A canal or cut from a river. Cowell; Cart. 20 Hen. III.

A place fenced with a ditch. Cowell.

FOSSE WAY, or FOSSE. One of the four ancient Roman ways through England. Spelman, voc. "Ikenild Street."

FOSELLUM. A small ditch. Cowell.

FOSTERLAND. Land given, assigned, or allotted to the finding of food or victuals for any person or persons; as in monasteries for the monks, etc. Cowell; Blount.

FOSTERLEAN. The remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster child; also the jointure of a wife. Jacob.

FOUNDATION. The establishment of a charity; that upon which a charity is founded, and by which it is supported.

This word, in the English law, is taken in two senses,—fundatio incipiens, and fundatio perficiens. As to its political capacity, an act of incorporation is metaphorically called its foundation; but as to its dotation, the first gift of revenues is called the foundation. 10 Coke, 23a.

FOUNDER. One who endows an institution; one who makes a gift of revenues to a corporation. 10 Coke, 83; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 481.

In England, the king is said to be the founder of all civil corporations; and where there is an act of incorporation, he is called the "general founder," and he who endows is called the "perficient founder." 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 481.

FOUNDEROSUS. Out of repair. Cro. Car. 366.

FOUNDLING. A new-born child abandoned by its parents, who are unknown. The settlement of such a child is in the place where found.

FOUR CORNERS. A metaphorical expression indicating the whole face or contents of an instrument, taken as an entirety.

FOUR SEAS. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the western, including the Scotch and Irish; the northern, or North Sea; the eastern, being the German Ocean; the southern, being the British Channel. Selden, Mare Clausum, lib. 2, c. 1.

"Within the four seas" means within the jurisdiction of England. 4 Coke, 125; 2 Inst. 253. See "Beyond Sea."

FOURCHER (Fr. to fork). In English law. A method of delaying an action formerly practised by defendants.

When an action was brought against two, who, being jointly concerned, were not bound to answer till both appeared, and they agreed not to appear both in one day, the appearance of one excused the other's default, who had a day given him to appear with the other. The defaulter, on the day appointed, appeared; but the first then made default. In this manner they forked each other, and practised this for delay. See 2 Inst. 250; Booth, Real Actions, 16.

FOURCHING. The act of delaying legal proceedings. Termes de la Ley.

FOWL. The word comprehends all birds and poultry. 11 East, 577.

FOWLS OF WARREN. Such fowls are of two sorts, Terrestres and Aquatiles. Terrestres of two sorts, Silvestres, and Cam-pestres; Campestres, as partridge, quail, rail, etc.; Silvestres, as pheasant, woodcock, etc.; Aquatiles, as mallard, heron, etc.; and are preserved under the game laws in warrens. Co. Litt. 233.

FOX'S ACT. St. 52 Geo. III. c. 60, which secured to juries, upon the trial of indictments or informations for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilty on proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

FOY (Law Fr.) Faith; fidelity. Britt. 29; Oath. Britt. 70.

FRACTIO (Lat. from frangere, to break). A breaking; a breach. Fractio fidei, a breach of promise or of trust. 1 Rep. Ch. Append. 8.

FRACTION OF A DAY. A portion of a day; the dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 141.

The day may be divided, however, to show which of two acts was actually done first. 3 Burrows, 1434; 4 Kent, Comm. 95, note; 11 H. L. Cas. 411.

FRACTIONEM DIEI NON RECIPET lex. The law does not regard a fraction of a day. Lofft, 572. But see "Day."

FRACTITUM. Arable land. Mon Angl.

FRACTURA NAVIUM. Wreck of shipping at sea.

FRAIS DE JUSTICE. Costs incurred incidentally to the action. See 1 Tropl. Dr. Civ. 122, 135, note; 4 Low. (U. S.) 77.

FRANC. A French coin, of the value of about eighteen cents.

FRANC ALEU. In French law. An absolutely free inheritance; allodial lands. Generally, however, the word denotes an inheritance free from seignorial rights, though held subject to the sovereign. Dumoulin, "Cout. de Par." § 1; Guyot, Rep. Univ.; 3 Kent, Comm. 498, note; 8 Low. (U. S.) 95.

FRANCHILANUS. A freeman. Blount.

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individuals, and which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. Angell & A. Corp. § 4.

A particular privilege conferred by grant from government, and vested in individuals. 3 Kent, Comm. 458.

A branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. Finch, Law, lib. 2, c. 14; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 37.

In a popular sense, the word seems to be synonymous with "right" or "privilege"; as, the elective franchise. And it is commonly applied to those powers exercised by virtue of a grant of privilege.

"To be a corporation is a franchise. The various powers conferred on corporations are franchises. The execution of a policy of insurance by an insurance company, and the issuance of a bank note by an incorporated bank, are franchises." 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 387.

"The term [franchise] must be always considered in connection with the corporation or property to which it is supposed to appertain." 93 U. S. 223.

FRANCIGENA. A designation formerly given to aliens in England.

FRANCUS. Free; a freeman; a Frank Spelman.

—Francus Bancus. Free bench (q. v.)

—Francus Homo. A free man.

—Francus Plegius. In old English law. A frank pledge, or free pledge. Spelman.

—Francus Tenens. In old English law. A frank or free tenant; a freeholder.

FRANK. In old English law. Free.

FRANK BANK. In old English law. Free bench. Litt. § 166; Co. Litt. 110b. See under "Francus."

FRANK CHASE. Free chase. The liberty or franchise of having a chase.

FRANK FEE. Lands not held in ancient demesne. Called "lands pleadable at common law." Reg. Orig. 12, 14; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 161; Termes de la Ley.

That which a man holds to himself and his heirs, and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor. The opposite of copyhold. Cowell. A fine had in the king's court might convert demesne lands into frank fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 368.

FRANK FERME. Lands or tenements where the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment from knight's service to yearly service, and whence no homage but such as is contained in the feoffment may be demanded. Britt. c. 66, n. 3; Cowell; 2 Bl. Comm. 80.

FRANK FOLD. In old English law. Free fold; a privilege for the lord to have all the sheep of his tenants and the inhabitants within his seignory, in his fold, in his demesnes, to manure his land. Keilw. 198; Y. B. H. 1 Edw. III. 4.

FRANK LAW (Law Fr. franche ley; Law Lat. libera lex, lex terrae). In old English law. The liberty of being sworn in courts, as a juror or witness; one of the ancient privileges of a freeman, or free and lawful man (liber et legalis homo). Otherwise called the law of the land (lex terrae), or simply law (lex). The nature of this privilege may be understood from Bracton's description of the consequences of losing it, among which the principal one was that the parties incurred perpetual infamy, so that they were never afterwards to be admitted to oath, because they were not deemed to be oathworthy (that is, not worthy of making oath), nor allowed to give testimony. Perpetuam infamiam incurrant, et legem terrae amittant, et ita quod nunquam postea ad sacramentum admittantur, quia de coetero non erunt othesworth, nec ad testimonium recipientur. Bracton, fol. 292b. This was one of the punishments of jurors who had been convicted of perjury. Id.

This term has been very generally defined "the privilege of the law's protection," and "the benefit of the free and common law of the land." Holthouse; Wharton. But that it had a more particular and determinate meaning is clear both from the testimony of the ancient writers, and from the peculiar signification of the word "law," which, from a very early period, denoted an oath, or the taking or making of an oath; as in the common expressions "wager of law," and "making law." A lawful man (legalis homo) was one who was competent to be sworn as a juror or witness; and the word "lawful" is used in this sense in jury process to this day. 3 Bl. Comm. 340, 341, 352.

FRANK MARRIAGE. A species of estate tail where the donee had married one of kin (as daughter or cousin) to the donor, and held the estate subject to the implied condition that the estate was to descend to the issue of such marriage. On birth of issue, as in other cases of estate tail before the statute De Donis, the birth of issue was regarded as a condition performed, and the estate thereupon became alienable by the donee. 1 Cruise, Dig. 71; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 67.

The estate is said to be in frank marriage because given in consideration of marriage, and free from services for three generations of descendants. Blount; Cowell. See, also, 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 115; 1 Steph. Comm. 232.

FRANK PLEDGE. A pledge or surety for freemen. Termes de la Ley.

The bond or pledge which the inhabitants of a tithing entered into for each one of their number that he should be forthcoming to answer every violation of law. Each boy, on reaching the age of fourteen, was obliged to find some such pledge, or be committed to prison. Blount; Cowell.

FRANK TENANT. A freeholder. Litt. § 91.

FRANK TENEMENT. In English law. A free tenement, freeholding, or freehold. 2 Bl. Comm. 61, 62, 104; 1 Steph. Comm. 217; Bracton, fol. 207. Used to denote both the tenure and the estate.

FRANKALMOIGNE. A species of ancient tenure, still extant in England, whereby a religious corporation, aggregate or sole, holds its lands of the donor, in consideration of the religious services it performs.

In the United States, religious corporations hold land by the same tenure with which all other corporations and individuals hold; and the only approach to a tenancy in frankalmoigne may be found in the exemption from taxation which is enjoyed by churches in common with charitable and scientific institutions.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment therefor.

It is enjoyed by various officers of the federal government, theoretically for the public good. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws.

FRANKLEYN, FRANCLING, or FRANKLIN. A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman. Blount; Cowell.

FRASSETUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A wood, or ground that is woody. Co. Litt. 4b; Shep. Touch. 95. Blount considers it a corruption of fraxinetum, a wood where ashes grow.

FRATER (Lat.) Brother.

—Frater Consanguineus. A brother born from the same father, though the mother may be different.

—Frater Nutriclus. A bastard brother.

—Frater Uterinus. A brother who has the same mother, but not the same father. Blount; Vicat; 2 Bl. Comm. 232. See "Brother."

FRATER FRATRI UTERINO NON SUCCEDET In hereditate paterna. A brother shall not succeed an uterine brother in the paternal inheritance. Fort. de Laud. Leg. Ang. by Amos, p. 15; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. This maxim is now superseded in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 9. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 471; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 232.

FRATERNAL INSURANCE. A form of mutual life, and perhaps, also, health and accident, insurance. Its distinguishing characteristics seem to be (a) that it is written on members of a fraternal or beneficial society only, and (b) that the organization itself is the insurer. The premiums are usually paid by way of assessment or monthly dues, rather than by annual premium, and may or may not involve the creation of a reserve fund.

FRATERNIA. A fraternity or brotherhood.

FRATRIAGE. A younger brother's inheritance.

FRATRICIDE. The killing of a brother or sister.

One who has killed his brother or sister.

FRAUD. The unlawful obtaining of another's property by design, but without criminal intent, and with the assent of the owner obtained by artifice or misrepresentation.

Any cunning deception or artifice used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. Story, Eq. Jur. § 186.

Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with "covin," "collusion," and "deceit," but improperly so. Covin is a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. Collusion is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud another under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or neglect of his own, sustains damage thereby. Co. Litt. 357b; Bac. Abr.

Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice, used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 186.

Legal or constructive fraud includes such contracts or acts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a fraud, yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead others, or to violate private or public confidence, are prohibited by law. Thus, for instance, contracts against some general public policy or fixed artificial policy of the law; cases arising from some peculiar confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties, where advantage is taken of that relation by the person in whom the trust or confidence is reposed, or by third persons; agreements and other acts of parties which operate virtually to delay, defraud, and deceive creditors; purchases of property, with full notice of the legal or equitable title of other persons to the same property (the purchaser becoming, by construction, particeps criminis with the fraudulent grantor); and voluntary conveyances of real estate, as affecting the title of subsequent purchasers. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 7.

—In the Civil Law. According to the civilians, positive fraud consists in doing one's self, or causing another to do, such things as induce the opposite party into error, or retain him there. The intention to deceive, which is the characteristic of fraud, is here present; the definition of "constructive fraud" being the same as at common law. Fraud was also divided into that which has induced the contract, dolus dans causam contractui, and incidental or accidental fraud. The former is that which has been the cause or determining motive of the contract, that without which the party defrauded would not have contracted, when the artifices practised by one of the parties have been such that it is evident that without them the other would not have contracted. Incidental or accidental fraud is that by which a person, otherwise determined to contract, is deceived on some accessories or incidents of the contract,—for example, as to the quality of the object of the contract, or its price,—so that he has made a bad bargain. Accidental fraud does not, according to the civilians, avoid the contract, but simply subjects the party to damages. It is otherwise where the fraud has been the determining cause of the contract, qui causam dedit contractui. In that case, the contract is void. Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, note, § 5, note 86 et seq. See, also, 1 Mall. Anal. de la Disc. du Code Civ. pp. 15, 16; Bouv. Inst. Index.

—In Equity. It is sometimes inaccurately said that such and such transactions amount to fraud in equity, though not in law; according to the popular notion that the law allows or overlooks certain kinds of fraud which the more conscientious rules of equity condemn and punish. But, properly speaking, fraud in all its shapes is as odious in law as in equity. The difference is that, as the law courts are constituted, and as it has been found in centuries of experience that it is convenient they should be constituted, they cannot deal with fraud otherwise than to punish it by the infliction of damages. All those manifold varieties of fraud against which specific relief, of a preventive or remedial sort, is required for the purposes of substantial justice, are the subjects of equity and not of law jurisdiction.

The following classification of frauds as a head of equity jurisdiction is given by Lord Hardwicke (2 Ves. Jr. 155): (1) Fraud, or dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition. (2) It may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and no honest or fair man would accept, on the other. (3) It may be inferred from the circumstances and condition of the parties; for it is as much against conscience to take advantage of a man's weakness or necessity as of his ignorance. (4) It may be collected from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, as being an imposition on third persons.

—In Criminal Law. Without the express provision of any statute, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offense. Co. Litt. 3b; Dyer, 295; Hawk. P. C. c. 71.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF. The name commonly given to St. 29 Car. II. c. 3, entitled, "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries"; and to statutes of the various states patterned thereon, and substantially to the same effect.

These statutes differ in detail, but generally provide that no action shall be brought on certain classes of contract unless some memorandum thereof be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. A conveyance, the object, tendency, or effect of which is to defraud another, or the intent of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on the party making it. 2 Kent, Comm. 440; 4 Kent, Comm. 462.

There must be: (a) A creditor to be defrauded; but subsequent creditors are entitled to impeach a conveyance for fraud. 118 Mass. 527. (b) A conveyance by the debtor; but the form of the conveyance is immaterial. 89 Ind. 117. (c) Of property of value, out of which the creditor could have made a portion of his claim. 46 Mich. 243; 52 Vt. 45; 67 Me. 183. (d) With intent to hinder, delay, or defraud (88 N. Y. 669); but the fraud may arise from the nature and necessary result of the transaction, without regard to the actual intention of the parties (108 Ill. 502).

—Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances.

Fraudulent conveyances received early attention; and the statutes of 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18, declared all conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors, etc., to be void. This statute, on which all subsequent legislation has been patterned, defined a fraudulent conveyance as "a conveyance, the object, tendency, or effect of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent upon the party making the conveyance." By a liberal construction, it has become the settled English law that a voluntary conveyance shall be deemed fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser, even with notice. 9 East, 59; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 296; Roberts, Fraud. Conv. 2, 3.

Voluntary conveyances are not so construed in the United States, however, where the subsequent purchaser has notice, especially if there be a good consideration. 2 Gray (Mass.) 447.

These statutes have been generally adopted in the United States as the foundation of all the state statutes upon this subject. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 353; 4 Kent, Comm. 462, 463.

FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES. See "Preferences."

FRAUNC, FRAUNCHE, or FRAUNKE. See "Frank."

FRAUNCHISE. A franchise.

FRAUS (Lat. fraud). More commonly called, in the civil law, "dolus" and "dolus malus" (q v.). A distinction, however, was sometimes made between "fraus" and "dolus"; the former being held to be of the most extensive import. Calv. Lex.

FRAUS EST CELARE FRAUDEM. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud. 1 Vern. 270.

FRAUS EST ODIOSA, ET NON PRAESUMENDA. Fraud is odious, and not to be presumed. Cro. Car. 550.

FRAUS ET DOLUS NEMINI PATROCINARI DEBENT. Fraud and deceit should excuse no man. 3 Coke, 78.

FRAUS ET JUS NUNQUAM COHABITANT. Fraud and justice never dwell together. Wingate, Max. 680.

FRAUS LATET IN GENERALIBUS. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.

FRAUS LEGIS. (Lat.) In civil law. Fraud of law; fraud upon law. See "In Fraudem Legis."

FRAUS MERETUR FRAUDEM. Fraud deserves fraud. Plowd. 110; Branch, Princ. This is very poor law.

FRAXINETUM. In old English law. A wood of ashes; a place where ashes grow. Co. Litt. 4b; Shep. Touch. 95.

FRAY. See "Affray."

FRECTUM. In Old English law. Freight. Blount.

FREDNITE. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. Cowell; Cunningham.

To be free from law.

FREDSTOLE, or FRIDSTOLE. Sanctuaries; seats of peace.

FREDUM. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. Spelman; Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V., Append. note xxiii.

FREE. Not bound to servitude; at liberty to act as one pleases. This word is put in opposition to slave. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 2. Used in distinction from being bound as an apprentice.

The Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are born free; and in this sense the term is usually supposed to mean all mankind, though this seems to be doubted in 19 How. (U. S.) 393.

Certain; as, free services. These were also more honorable.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being held in common; as, free fishery.

FREE ALMS. Tenure by indefinite spiritual services; frankalmoigne (q. v.).

FREE BENCH. Copyhold lands which the wife has for dower after the decease of her husband. Kitch. Cts. 102; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, c. 13, No. 2; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 150; Plowd. 411.

Dower in copyhold lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 129. The quantity varies in different sections of England. Co. Litt. 110b. Incontinency was a cause of forfeiture, except on the performance of a ridiculous ceremony. Cowell; Blount.

FREE BORD. An allowance of land outside the fence, which may be claimed by the owner. An allowance, in some places, two and a half feet wide outside the boundary or inclosure. Blount; Cowell.

FREE CHAPEL. A chapel founded by the king, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. It may be one founded or endowed by a private person under a grant from the king. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

FREE COURSE. Having the wind from a favorable quarter. To prevent collision of vessels, it is the duty of the vessel having the wind free to give way to a vessel beating up to windward and tacking. 3 Hagg. Adm. 215. At sea, such vessel meeting another close hauled must give way, if necessary to prevent the danger of collision. 3 Car. & P. 528. See 9 Car. & P. 528; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 225; 2 Dods. Adm. 87.

FREE FISHERY. A franchise which gives an exclusive right of fishing in a public navigable river, without any ownership on the soil. 3 Kent, Comm. 329; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 39; 1 Salk. 637; Woolr. Waters, 97. Free fishery is the same as common of fishery. Co. Litt. Hargrave's notes, 122; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 39; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 79; Angell, Watercourses, c. 6, §§ 3, 4. See "Fishery."

FREE ON BOARD. Abbreviated f. o. b. in the law of sales. A sale free on board is one in which the seller agrees to deliver the goods on board cars or ship at a place named, at his own expense, free to be taken by the purchaser without any obstruction or impediment. 136 Wis. 495. See also F. O. B.

FREE SERVICES. Such as it was not unbecoming the character of a soldier or freeman to perform; as, to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 62; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 25.

FREE SHIPS. Neutral ships. "Free ships make free goods" is a phrase often used in treaties to denote that the goods on board neutral ships shall be free from confiscation, even though belonging to an enemy. Wheat. Int. Law, 507 et seq.; 1 Kent, Comm. 126. See 3 Phillim. Int. Law (3d Ed.) 238 et seq., for a full discussion of the subject.

FREE SOCAGE. Tenure in free socage is a tenure by certain and honorable services which yet are not military. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 52; Dalr. Feud. Prop. c. 2, § 1; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 25. Called, also, "free and common socage." See "Socage."

FREE SOC MEN. In old English law. Tenants in free socage. Glanv. lib. 3, c. 7; 2 Bl. Comm. 79.

FREE (or FRANK) TENURE. Freehold tenure. The opposite of the ancient villeinage or modern copyhold. 2 Bl. Comm. 89, 90.

FREE WARREN. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 39, 417;

Co. Litt. 233. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warden extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 39.

FREE-BOROUGH MEN. Such great men as did not engage, like the frank-pledge men, for their decennier. Jacob.

FREEDMAN. In Roman law. A person who had been released from a state of servitude. See "Liberti."

FREEDOM. The power by which man can do what does not interfere with the rights of another; its basis is nature; its standard is justice; its protection is law; its moral boundary is the maxim, "Do not unto others that you do not wish they should do unto you." French Const. of 1793.

FREEHOLD. See "Estates."

FREEHOLD IN LAW. A freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Termes de la Ley.

FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETIES. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other working men to purchase, at the least possible price, a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated. Wharton.

FREEHOLDER. The owner of a freehold estate. Such a man must have been anciently a freeman; and the gift to any man by his lord of an estate to him and his heirs made the tenant a freeman, if he had not been so before. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 29, 45 et seq.

FREEMAN. One who is not a slave; one born free, or made so.

—In Old English Law. A freeholder, as distinguished from a villein.

An inhabitant of a city. St. 1 Hen. VI. c. 11; 3 Steph. Comm. 196, 197; Cunningham.

FREEMAN'S ROLL. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corporation act (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76). Distinguished from the burgess roll. 3 Steph. Comm. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, of some of the American colonies.

FREIGHT. The amount due a carrier for the transportation of goods or live stock. Angell, Carr. § 391. Sometimes applied in a loose sense to the goods carried.

—In Maritime Law. The sum agreed on for the hire of a ship, entirely or in part, for the carriage of goods from one port to another. 13 East, 300. All rewards or compensation paid for the use of ships. 1 Pet. Adm. 206; 2 Boul. P. Dr. Com. tit. 8, § 1; 2 Bos. & P. 321; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 459; 2 Johns.

(N. Y.) 346; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 335; 3 Pardessus, note 705.

FREIGHTER. He to whom a ship or vessel has been hired, and who loads her under his contract; he who loads a general ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 173; 3 Pardessus, note 704.

FRENCHMAN. In early times, in English law, this term was applied to every stranger or "outlandish" man. Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 15.

FRENDESS MAN, or FRENDESSMAN (Saxon). The ancient name of an outlaw (utlaughe) in England. So called, according to Bracton, because he forfeited his friends (quod forisfacit amicos); all persons being forbidden to give him food or shelter, or to have any communication with him. Bracton, fol. 128b.

FRENDNITE, or FRENDSWITE. A fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend. Cowell; Cunningham. A quittance for forfang (exemption from the penalty of taking provisions before the king's purveyors had taken enough for the king's necessities). Cowell.

FRENETICUS. In old English law. A madman, or person in a frenzy. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 36.

FREBORGH. A free surety or free pledge. Spelman. See "Frank Pledge."

FREQUENT. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually. 109 Ind. 176.

To "frequent" a place is to frequently go there, or to be in the habit of going there. Therefore a conviction cannot be sustained under the Vagrant Act for "frequenting" a street, etc., with intent to commit felony, where the evidence does not show that the person has been there more than once. 14 Q. B. D. 93; 49 J. P. 246. He must in fact be seen hanging about the street. 1 Times Rep. 109.

FREQUENTIA ACTUS MULTUM OPERATUR. The frequency of an act effects much. 4 Coke, 78; Wingate, Max. 192.

FRESCA. In old records. Fresh water, or rain and land flood. Cowell.

FRESH DISSEISIN. Such disseisin as a man may seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without the help of the king or judges. There was no limit set to the time within which this might be done. It is set in one case at a disseisin committed within fifteen days. Bracton, lib. 4, c. 5. In another case it was held a fresh disseisin when committed within a year. Britt. cc. 43, 44; Cowell.

FRESH FINE. A fine levied within a year. St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I.) c. 45; Cowell.

FRESH FORCE. Force done within forty days. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 7; Old Nat. Brev.

4. The heir or reversioner in a case of disseisin by fresh force was allowed a remedy in chancery by bill before the mayor. Cowell.

FRESH PURSUIT. An immediate pursuit of an escaping criminal. The phrase does not imply instant pursuit, but pursuit without unreasonable delay. See 27 Cal. 574; 70 Miss. 253.

FRESH SUIT (Law Lat. recens insectio). In English law. Immediate or speedy pursuit or prosecution. The pursuit of an offender or felon as a thief immediately or as soon as possible after the robbery, including the prosecution of such pursuit until the apprehension and conviction of the offender. The object of this was to enable the party to recover his goods, which otherwise would belong to the king. Britt. c. 15.

The early and speedy prosecution of a suit. St. Gloc. c. 9.

FRESH-WATER RIVER. A fresh-water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks instead of shores. Gould Waters, § 45.

FRET (Fr.) In French marine law. Freight. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 3.

FRETER (Fr.) In French marine law. To freight a ship; to let it. Emerig. Ins. c. 11, § 3.

FRETEUR (Fr.) In French marine law. Freighter; the owner of a ship, who lets it to the merchant. Emerig. Ins. c. 11, § 3.

FRETTUM. In old English law. Freight money. Cowell.

FRETUM. A strait.

Fretum Britannicum, the strait between Dover and Calais. Otherwise called Fretum Gallicum. Cowell.

FRIARS. An order of religious persons of whom there were four principal branches, from whom the rest descend, viz.: (1) Franciscans, or Grey Friars; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) Carmelites, or White Friars. Wharton.

FRIBUSCULUM. In civil law. A slight dissension between husband and wife, which produced a momentary separation, without any intention to dissolve the marriage, in which it differed from a divorce. Poth. Pand. lib. 50, § 106; Vicat. This amounted to a separation in our law. See "Separation."

FRIDBORG, or FRITHBORG. Frank pledge. Cowell. Security for the peace. Spelman.

FRIDHBURGUS (Saxon). A kind of frank pledge, whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47. Cowell says it is the same as frank pledge.

FRODMORTEL, or FREOMORTEL. An immunity for committing manslaughter. Mon. Angl. tit. 1, p. 173.

FROM. As expressive of place, is always taken exclusively. Thus, "from a port" is exclusive of the port. The terminus a quo is the boundary line of the port, and when a vessel passes from that, she sails from the port, and is on the high seas. Story, J. 2 Mason's R. 130, 131.

Where the particular period sought is to begin or be computed "from" some recognized division of time, the date of beginning is to be excluded in making the computation unless a contrary intention appears. 46 Ill. 173; 41 Ill. 203. Used in a promissory note with reference to a named date, means a subsequent day. 165 Ill. 62.

The word simply expresses the general idea of separation. 103 Cal. 673.

FROM THE BODY OF THE COUNTY. It was not necessary that jurors should have been summoned from every township in the county, in order to comply with the statute requiring jurors to be summoned from the "body of the county." This language means, "from the county at large," "from the people of the county at large," competent to act as jurors. 39 Ia. 633; 10 Wyo. 476.

FRUCTUARIUS (Lat.) One entitled to the use of profits, fruits, and yearly increase of a thing; a lessee; a fermor. Bracton, 241; Vicat.

Sometimes, as applied to a slave, he of whom any one has the usufruct. Vicat.

FRUCTUS (Lat.) The right of using the increase or fruits; equivalent to usufruct.

That which results or springs from a thing; as, rents, interest, freight from a ship, etc.

All the natural return, increase, or additions which is added by nature or by the skill of man, including all the organic products of things. Vicat; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 154.

They were divided according to their nature into:

F. his attorney, comes and defends the force (or wrong) and injury when and where it shall behoove him, and the damages, and whatsoever else he ought to defend, and says," etc. Steph. Pl. (Am. ed. 1824) ch. i. sect. vii. rule v.

FULL LIFE. Life in fact and in law. See "In Full Life."

FULL PROOF. See "Plena Probatio."

FULLUM AQUAE. A stream of water, such as comes from a mill. Blount.

FULLY PAID UP SHARES. Shares upon which the whole amount that could be called up have been called up. [1897] A. C. 164.

FUMAGE. In old English law. The same as fuage, or smoke farthings. 1 Bl. Comm. 324. See "Fuage."

FUNCTION. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32. 65. 1.

FUNCTIONARY. One who is in office or in some public employment.

FUNCTUS OFFICIO (Lat.) A term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatsoever.

For example, a warrant of attorney on which a judgment has been entered is functus officio, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of its authority. When arbitrators cannot agree, and choose an umpire, they are said to be functi officio. Watson, Arb. 94. If a bill of exchange be sent to the drawee, and he passes it to the credit of the holder, it is functus officio, and cannot be further negotiated. 5 Pick. (Mass.) 85. When an agent has completed the business with which he was intrusted, his agency is functus officio. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1382.

FUNDAMENTAL. This word is applied to those laws which are the foundation of society. Those laws by which the exercise of power is restrained and regulated are fundamental. The constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the land. See Wolff. Inst. § 984.

FUNDAMUS. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 473; 3 Steph. Comm. 173.

FUNDATIO (Lat.) A founding.

FUNDED DEBT. A public debt for the payment of which money has been specifically appropriated.

That part of the national debt for which certain funds are appropriated towards the payment of the interest. 14 N. Y. 367.

FUNDI PATRIMONIALES. Lands of inheritance.

FUNDING. The term "funding" has been sometimes applied in this country to the process of collecting together a variety of outstanding debts against corporations, the principal of which was payable at short periods, and borrowing money upon the bonds or stocks of the corporation to pay them off. 14 N. Y. 367.

FUNDING A DEBT. The pledging of a specific fund to keep down the interest, and ultimately discharge the principal. When the extinguishment of the debt is contemplated, it is called a "sinking fund."

FUNDING BONDS. Funding and refunding bonds are those issued to pay off prior indebtedness. If issued merely to pay floating indebtedness they are generally referred to as "funding" bonds, while if issued to take up other bonds they are usually called "refunding" bonds. 2 Fletcher Encyclopedia Corporations 1920.

FUNDITORES. Pioneers. Jacob.

FUNDS. In its most restricted sense, cash on hand. In a wider sense it includes commercial paper (3 B. Mon. [Ky.] 8); in a still more extended sense, property of every kind, when such property is contemplated as something to be used or applied in the payment of debts (69 Iowa, 278).

FUNDUS (Lat. land). A portion of territory belonging to a person; a farm; lands, including houses. 4 Coke, 87; Co. Litt. 5a; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 209.

FUNERAL EXPENSES. Money expended in procuring the interment of a corpse.

The nature and extent of the allowance for funeral expense varies with the solvency of the estate, and the discretion of the surrogate, so that it is impossible to define the scope of the terms. 3 Redf. Wills, 243.

"Funeral expenses have been held to include carriage hire to convey the family and friends to the place of interment (44 Miss. 124), suitable gravestones (30 Conn. 209), monuments (77 Pa. St. 49), burial plots (5 Redf. Sur. [N. Y.] 484), and vaults (14 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 64); also mourning apparel to enable the widow and children to attend decently at the funeral." 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 316; 2 Woerner, Admn. 761.

FUNGIBLE. A term applicable to things that are consumed by the use, as wine, oil, etc., the loan of which is subject to certain rules, and governed by the contract called mutuum. See Schmidt, Civ. Law, 145; Story, Bailm.; 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 987, 1098.

FUR (Lat. a thief). One who stole without using force, as distinguished from a robber. See "Furtum."

FUR MANIFESTUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A manifest thief; a thief who is taken in the very act of stealing, or in the place where the theft was committed. Inst. 4. 1. 3; Dig. 47. 2. 3.

FURANDI ANIMUS. See "Animus."

FURCA. A fork; a gallows or gibbet. Bracton, fol. 56.

FURCA ET FLAGELLUM (Lat. gallows and whip). The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb. Cowell.

FURCA ET FOSSA (Lat. gallows and pit). A jurisdiction of punishing felons,—the men by hanging, the women by drowning. Skene de Verb. Sign.; Spelman; Cowell.

FURIGELDUM. Mulct paid for theft. Jacob.

FURIOSI NULLA VOLUNTAS EST. A madman has no will. Dig. 50. 17. 5; Id. 1. 18. 13. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 282.

FURIOSITY. In Scotch law. Madness, as distinguished from fatuity or idiocy.

FURIOSUS (Lat.) An insane man; a madman; a lunatic.

In general, such a man can make no contract, because he has no capacity or will: Furiosus nullum negotium gerere potest, quia non intelligit quod agit. Inst. 3. 20. 8. Indeed, he is considered so incapable of exercising a will that the law treats him as if he were absent: Furiosi nulla voluntas est. Furiosus absentis loco est. Dig. 1. ult. 40. 124. 1. See "Insanity"; "Non Compos Mentis."

FURIOSUS ABSENTIS LOCO EST. A madman is considered as absent. Dig. 50. 17. 24. 1.

FURIOSUS NULLUM NEGOTIUM CONTRAHERE (gerere) potest (quia non intelligit quod agit). A lunatic cannot make a contract. Dig. 50. 17. 5; 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) p. 76.

FURIOSUS SOLO FURORE PUNITUR. A madman is punished by his madness alone. Co. Litt. 247; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 14; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 24, 25.

FURIOSUS STIPULARI NON POTES nec aliquid negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. An insane person who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain, nor transact any business. 4 Coke, 126.

FURLINGUS (Lat.) A furlong, or a furrow one-eighth part of a mile long. Co. Litt. 5b.

FURLONG. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-eighth of a mile.

FURLOUGH. A permission given in the army and navy to an officer or private to absent himself for a limited time.

FURNAGE (from furnus, an oven). A sum of money paid to the lord by the tenants, who were bound by their tenure to bake at the lord's oven, for the privilege of baking elsewhere. The word is also used to signify the gain or profit taken and received for baking.

FURNITURE. Personal chattels in the use of a family. By the term "household furniture" in a will, all personal chattels will pass which may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder, or the ornament of the house; as, plate, linen, china (both useful and ornamental), and pictures. Ambl. 610; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329, 388; 1 Sim. & S. 189; 3 Russ. 301; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 752; 1 Rep. Leg. 203, 204; 3 Ves. 312, 313.

"It [the word "furniture"] is very general both in meaning and application, and its meaning changes so as to take the color of, or to be in accord with the subject to which it is applied." The articles spoken of as furniture of different places, as of a house, a ship, or a store, "differ in kind according to the purposes which they are intended to subserve; yet, being put and employed in the several places as the equipment thereof for ornament, or to promote comfort or to facilitate the business therein done, and being kept or intended to be kept for those or some of those purposes, they pertain to such places, and constitute the furniture thereof." 63 Ala. 401.

FURNITURE OF A SHIP. This term includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy. It comprehends all articles furnished by ship chandlers, which are almost innumerable. 1 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 369.

FURNIVAL'S INN. Formerly an inn of chancery. See "Inns of Chancery."

FUROR CONTRAHI MATRIMONIUM non sinit, quia consensu opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed. 1 Ves. & B. 140; 1 Bl. Comm. 439; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343, 345.

FURST AND FONDUNG (Saxon). Time to advise or take counsel. Laws Hen. I. c. 46; Whishaw.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Wharton.

FURTHER ASSURANCE. This phrase is frequently used in covenants when a covenantor has granted an estate, and it is supposed some further conveyance may be required. He then enters into a covenant for further assurance, that is, to make any other conveyance which may be lawfully required.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. When a master ordinary in chancery made a report in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, the cause was again set down before the judge who made the decree or order, to be proceeded with. Where a master made a separate report, or one not in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, a petition for consequential directions had to be presented, since the cause could not be set down for further directions under such circumstances. See 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. (5th Ed.) 1233, note; Rappalje & L.

FURTHER HEARING. In practice. Hearing at another time.

FURTHER MAINTENANCE OF ACTION, plea to. A plea of matter arising since the commencement of the suit.

FURTUM (Lat. theft). The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft, without the consent of the owner. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 36; Bracton, 150; 3 Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bracton, 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM. (Lat.) The theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen is found. "Detected theft" is, perhaps, the nearest concise translation of the phrase, though not quite exact. Vicat.

FURTUM EST CONTRECTATIO REI alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerat. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it was. 3 Inst. 107.

FURTUM GRAVE (Lat. aggravated theft). Formerly, there were three classes of this theft: First, by landed men; second, by a trustee or one holding property under a trust; third, theft of the majora animalia, larger animals, including children. 1 Bouv. Civ. Law, 352, note; Bell, Dict.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM (Lat. open theft). Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bracton, 150b.

FURTUM NON EST UBI INITIUM HABET detentionis per dominum rei. It is not theft where the commencement of the detention arises through the owner of the thing. 3 Inst. 107.

FURTUM OBLATUM (Lat.) The theft committed when stolen property is offered any one and found upon him; the crime of receiving stolen property. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

FUSTIGATIO. In old English law. A beating with sticks or clubs; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bracton, fol. 104b, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

FUSTIS. In old English law. A staff, used in making livery of seisin. Bracton, fol. 40.

A baton, club, or cudgel. Spelman.

FUTURE DEBT. In Scotch law. A debt which is created, but which will not become due till a future day. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 315.

FUTURE ESTATE. An estate which is to commence in possession in the future (in futuro). It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of terms for years. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 165. In New York law it has been defined as "an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time," thus excluding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time, because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor. 11 Rev. St. N. Y. (3d Ed.) 9, § 10.

FUTURES. See "Gambling Contract."

FUTURI (Lat. those who are to be). Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant presentes et futuri, quod ego, talis, dedi et concessi," etc., let all men now living and to come know that I, A. B., have, etc. Bracton, 34b.

FUZ, or FUST. A wood or forest.

FYHTWITE. One of the fines incurred for homicide.

FYLE, or FFYLE (Scotch). In old Scotch practice. To declare or find guilty; literally, to defile; to make or declare foul; as clenge was to acquit, literally to clean or cleanse. "Swa that he quha, of his conscience, can nocht clenge, he of necessitie mon fyle." 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 314. "The assyise in ane voce ffylis the said R. W." 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 73.

FYLIT. In old Scotch practice. Fyled; found guilty. See "Fyle."

FYNDERINGA (Saxon). An offense or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leg. Hen. I. c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it "treasure trove"; but Cowell reads fynderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called "firdnite." See Cowell; Spelman. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD. The military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. Wharton.

FYRDWITE. The fine incurred by neglecting to join the fyrd; one of the rights of the crown. Anc. Inst. Eng.

G

G. In Law French. Frequently used at the beginning of words to express the English "W."; as "gage" for "wage," "gainage" for "wainage," and the like.

GABEL, GAFOL, or GAVEL. A tax, imposition, or duty. This word is said to have the same signification that gabelle formerly had in France. Cunningham. But this seems to be an error; for gabelle signified in that country, previous to its revolution, a duty upon salt. Merlin, Repert. Lord Coke says that gabel or gavel, gabulum, gabellum, gabelletum, gabelletum, and gavilletum, signify a rent, duty, or service yielded or done to the king or any other lord. Co. Litt. 142a.

GABELLA. In old European law. A tax or duty on merchandise or personalty. Spelman; Cowell.

A tax on salt in France. Spelman; Brande.

GABLUM, GABULUM, or GABULA. The gable end of a building. Kennett, Par. Ant. p. 201; Cowell.

A tax. Du Cange.

GABULUS DENARIORUM. Rent paid in money. Seld. Tit. Hon. 321.

GAFOLGILD, or GAFFOLDGILD. The payment of rent or income.

Gafolgild, payment of such rent, etc. Gafolland was land liable to tribute or tax (Cowell); or land rented (Saxon Dict.). See Tayl. Hist. Gavelkind, pp. 26, 27, 1021; Anc. Inst. Eng.

GAGE, or GAGER (Law Lat. vadium). Personal property placed by a debtor in possession of his creditor as a security for the payment of his debt; a pledge or pawn (q. v.). Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britt. c. 27.

To pledge; to wage. Webster.

Gager is used both as noun and verb; e. g., gager del ley, wager of law. Jacob. Gager ley, to wage law. Britt. c. 27. Gager deliverance, to put in sureties to deliver cattle distrained. Termes de la Ley; Kitch. Cts. fol. 145; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. fols. 67, 74.

A mortgage is a dead gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

GAGE, ESTATES IN. Estates held in security, of which mortgages are the most common example.

GAGER DE DELIVERANCE. When he who has distrained, being sued, has not delivered the cattle distrained, then he shall not only avow the distress, but gager deliverance, i. e., put in surety or pledge that he will deliver them. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law.

GAIN. Profits.

A mutual insurance company is an association for the purpose of "gain"; the reduction of a loss being a gain. 51 L. J. Ch. Div. 344.

GAINAGE. Wainage, or the draught oxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage. Also, the land tilled itself, or the profit arising from it. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 117.

Gainor, the sokeman that hath such land in occupation. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 12.

GAINERY. Tillage, or the profit of tillage. Blount.

GAJUM (from gagium). In old European law. A thick wood. Spelman.

GALE. In English law. The right to open and work a mine within the hundred of St. Briavels, or a stone quarry within the open lands of the forest of Dean, in Gloucestershire. The peculiar laws and customs of this district are regulated by St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 43.

GALEA. A galley. Spelman.

GALENES. In old Scotch law. A kind of compensation for slaughter. Bell, Dict.

GALLI HALPENS, or GALLI HALF-pence. A kind of coin which, with suskins and doitkins, was forbidden by St. 3 Hen. V. c. 1, 4 Bl. Comm. 99; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 261.

GALLOWS. An erection on which to hang criminals condemned to death.

GAMACTA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A stroke or blow. L. Boior, tit. 2, c. 4; Spelman.

GAMALIS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A child born in lawful wedlock; also one born to betrothed, but unmarried, parents. Spelman.

GAMBLING. See "Gaming."

GAMBLING CONTRACT. One in which the parties in effect stipulate that they shall gain or lose upon the happening of an uncertain event in which they have no interest except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. 153 Pa. St. 247.

Gambling contracts may be by bet or wager (q. v.), which is their simplest form; by lottery (q. v.); or they may be disguised in the form of a legitimate transaction, the ordinary form being by dealing in futures (q. v.) infra. The validity of such contracts depends on whether the intention of the parties at the inception is to deliver the goods bargained for, or to settle on the basis of difference in price (155 Ill. 617; 53 N. Y. 318; 59 Wis. 197). The course of speculative dealing has given rise to a number of technical terms, some of which are here defined.

"Bulls and Bears." See infra, this title, "Long"; "Short."

"Corner." An artificial scarcity created by holding property off the market for the extortion of abnormally high prices. Where the purchases of any party or parties exceed the amount of contract grain in regular warehouses on the last delivery day of the month for which such purchases have been made, the grain so bought is said to be cornered.

"Cover." The buying in of grain or stocks to fill short contracts is called "covering."

"Covering shorts." Buying in property to fill contracts (usually for future delivery) previously made.

"Delivery." When stock is brought to the buyer in exact accordance with the rules of the stock exchange it is called a "good delivery." When there are irregularities, the shares being of unacceptable issues, or the rules of the exchange being contravened in some particular, the delivery is pronounced "bad," and the buyer can appeal to the board. Also when warehouse receipts for grain are delivered in fulfillment of contracts.

"For a turn." Said of a speculative investment for a small profit or loss. A quick play. A "flyer." See infra, this title, "Scalping."

"Futures." Buyers of cash products protect themselves against possible loss by selling an agreed amount for future delivery in some general market. Such contracts are called "futures" because they do not terminate until some designated month in the future. These transactions pass from hand to hand, and may be turned over hundreds and thousands of times in an active market before maturity, and this is called "dealing in futures." Nearly all speculative operations are in futures.

"Hedge." The operation called "hedging" by speculators is practically the same as "straddling," though the terms are not synonymous. Traders hedge to avert a loss, and straddle for a profit. See infra, this title, "Straddle."

"Holding the market." Buying sufficient stock or commodities to keep the price from declining.

"In sight." Said of stocks of grain, cotton, coffee, or other merchandise available for immediate use. Grain stored in private warehouses, or held by producers, is not usually included in the supply "in sight."

"Insiders." Those who own a controlling interest or an important interest in the stocks of a concern, and who are therefore influential in directing its affairs.

"Investment buying." This phrase is generally used in contradistinction to buying for speculation, or for a quick turn in the market. It is understood to mean buying to hold for a considerable time.

"Long." One who has property bought in anticipation of a rise in price. Hence, for a trader to be "long" of stocks or grain presupposes him to be a "bull." Also used adjectively.

"Long interest." The aggregate amount of investment holdings in any speculative market.

"Long market." A market that is overbought, the volume of open contracts to buy property for future delivery being in dangerous excess of the probable demand.

"Margin." Money or collaterals deposited with a broker to protect contracts, usually for future delivery.

"Option." Property bought or sold at the call or demand of the buyer or seller, as may be specified; a conditional contract.

"Outsiders." The general trading public. The investors in stock or grain who base their judgment largely on the general situation.

"Pegged." Said of a market that refuses either to advance or to decline, because brokers have been supplied with selling or buying orders in excess of the demand.

"Privileges." "Puts" and "calls." A "put" is the privilege or option, which a person purchases, of "putting," i. e., delivering property or contracts for property to the seller of such privilege, at a named price, within a stipulated time,—one or more days, weeks, or months. "Puts" are good (from the buyer's standpoint) when the market declines below the "put" price within the time covered by the privilege contract. The buyer can then buy the property at the cheaper figure, and "put" it to the person who sold him the risk, his profit being the difference between the "put" price and the quotation at which the property is bought with which to make the delivery. A "call" is the reverse of a "put," the purchaser of a "call" acquiring the right to "call" upon the seller of the privilege for property, or contracts for property, at a named price, within a stipulated time. "Calls" are good when the market advances above the call price, and the buyer of such privilege is enabled to sell at a profit the property "called" from the seller of the privilege. Trading in privileges is illegal in some states, notably in Illinois.

"Pyramiding." Enlarging one's operations by the use of profits which one has made.

"Scalper." One who trades in options continually, and, by reading the temper of the market at the moment, tries to get a profit out of the minor fluctuations.

"Scalping." Buying and selling on small fluctuations of the market. Taking a small profit or a small loss.

"Short," or "Short interest." The seller of a property which he does not possess and will not deliver until he has afterwards bought the same is called a "short." He is, by necessity, a "bear." The aggregate amount of such shortage by these sellers is called the "short interest."

"Short market." A market that is oversold; the volume of open contracts to deliver property being in dangerous excess of available supply.

"Short selling." The process of selling property for future delivery, in the expectation of being able to obtain the property cheaper before the maturity of contract, or of being able to close out the contract at a profit without the actual delivery of the property.

"Split." A transaction, one-half at one quotation and one-half at another. For instance, the quotation 53- $\frac{1}{2}$ - $\frac{3}{4}$ means that one-half of the quantity traded in was at 53 $\frac{1}{2}$ % and the other half at 53 $\frac{3}{4}$ %. This quotation is just half-way between 53% and 53 $\frac{3}{4}$ %. Only an even number of thousand bushels can be traded in on a split, as, for instance, 2,000, 6,000, 10,000, etc.

"Spread." A "spread" is a double privilege entitling the holder to deliver to, or to demand from, the signer a certain amount of stock on the terms specified. Differences in prices, as between May and July wheat, or between the put and call price, or between the price of the same option in different cities.

"Squeezed." Said of "short sellers," who, by reason of having oversold the market, are forced to pay an artificially high price for property with which to fill contracts.

"Stop order." An operator may give his broker orders to close out his deals when the market goes against him, and when quotations reach a certain point, and in that case he is said to have given a "stop order." When a declining market is filled with "stop orders" to sell, the bears may make extraordinary efforts to force quotations down to a point which reaches the "stop orders," and which will thus throw on the market more securities or commodities. In the same way, on an advancing market, the bulls may endeavor to raise quotations to a point that will reach stop orders of short sellers, and force their brokers to become buyers.

"Straddle." A trader who is "long" of one option and "short" of another option has "straddled" the market. Example: A. buys corn for May delivery, and sells an equal amount for December delivery, in the expectation that the former will advance and the latter decline. It is also called a "straddle" when a trader buys property for future delivery in one market, and sells in another.

"Wash trades." Pretended trading. Trades made on an open market by parties between whom there is a tacit or private understanding that they shall be void. Done with a view to influence prices, and considered a reprehensible practice.

GAMBLING DEVICE, or GAMING DEVICE. Any appliance or contrivance used for the purpose of gambling.

The game played, the intangible result of the device, is to be distinguished from the device. Thus, the game of poker is not a "gambling device." 2 Orig. 238.

GAMBLING POLICY. A policy of life insurance issued to one as beneficiary who has no interest in the life of the insured.

GAME. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bac. Abr. See 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79.

All sorts of birds and beasts that are objects of the chase. Wharton.

—Sports. In our language, the word game has a very broad and comprehensive signification. It means sport of any kind, and means physical contests, whether of man or beast, when practiced for the purpose of deciding wagers or rewards, or for the purpose of diversion, as well as games of hazard or skill by means of instruments or devices. Such were the Olympic and Nemean games among the Greeks, the former of which are lately being revived, and Appollinarian and Capitoline games among the Romans. 23 Ill. 440.

GAME LAWS. Laws regulating the killing or taking of birds and beasts, as game.

The English game laws are founded on the idea of restricting the right of taking game to certain privileged classes, generally landholders. In 1831, the law was so modified as to enable any one to obtain a certificate or license to kill game, on payment of a fee. The laws relating to game in the United States are generally, if not universally, framed with reference to protecting the animals from indiscriminate and unreasonable havoc, leaving all persons free to take game, under certain restrictions as to the season of the year and the means of capture. The details of these regulations must be sought in the statutes of the several states. 60 N. Y. 10; 97 Ill. 320.

GAMING. A contract between two or more persons, by which they agree to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance, and that one may be the loser, and another the winner.

To stake money on a chance. Whart. Crim. Law, § 1465.

Any sport or play carried on between two persons, depending on skill, chance, or the transpiring of an unknown future event, on the result of which some valuable thing is to be, without consideration, transferred from one to the other. Bish. St. Crimes, § 861.

The statutes against gaming are generally confined to games into which an element of chance enters. Thus, tenpins (8 Ired. [N. C.] 271), foot ball (1 Mod. 136), and wrestling (2 Car. & P. 376) have been held not to be gaming.

"Gaming" is synonymous with "gambling." Bish. St. Crimes, § 858.

It is to be distinguished from "bet" or "wager," which may be laid upon games, or things not games. 9 Ind. 14.

GAMING HOUSES. Houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable thing. They are nuisances in the eye of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices. 1 Russ. Crimes, 299; Rosc. Crim. Ev. 663; 3 Denio (N. Y.) 101.

A house, office, room, or other place kept for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto. Steph. Crim. Law, art. 182.

GANANCIAL. In Spanish law. Property held in community.

The property of which it is formed belongs in common to the two consorts, and, on the dissolution of the marriage, is divisible between them in equal shares. It is confined to their future acquisitions durante el matrimonio, and the frutos or rents and profits of the other property. 1 Burge, Conf. Laws, 418, 419; Aso & M. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 1.

GANANCIAL PROPERTY. That which husband and wife, living together, acquire during matrimony, by a common title, lucrative or onerous; or those which husband and wife or either acquire by purchase, or by their labor and industry, as also the fruits of the separate property which each brings to the matrimony or acquires by lucrative title during the continuance of the partnership. 18 Tex. 634.

GANANCIAS (Spanish). In Spanish law. Gains or profits resulting from the employment of property held by husband and wife in common. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.

GANG WEEK. The time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers,—rogation week. Enc. Lond.; Rapalje & L.

GANGIATORI. Officers in ancient times, whose business it was to examine weights and measures. Skene de Verb. Sign.

GANTELOPE. A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Enc. Lond. This was called "running the gauntlet," the word itself being pronounced "gauntlett."

GAOL. This word, now generally written "jail" is said to be derived from the Spanish jaula, a cage (derived from caula); in French, geole, gaol. 1 Man. & G. 222, note (a). A prison or building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those whose persons are judicially ordered to be kept in custody. See 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; 14 Viner, Abr. 9; Bac. Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Comyn, Dig. 619. See "Jail."

GAOL DELIVERY. In English law. To insure the trial, within a certain time, of all prisoners, a patent, in the nature of a letter, is issued from the king to certain persons, appointing them his justices, and authorizing them to deliver his gaols. See "General Gaol Delivery."

GAOL LIBERTIES, or GAOL LIMITS. A space, marked out by limits, which is considered as a part of the prison, and within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. Owing to the rigor of the law which allowed capias, or attachment of the person, as the first process against a debtor, statutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment. Thus, the whole city of Boston was held the "gaol liberties" of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. Act March 13, 1830 (3 Rev. St. N. Y. 1829, App. 116). The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison. 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 121.

GAOLER. The keeper of a gaol or prison; one who has the legal custody of the place where prisoners are kept. It is his duty to keep the prisoners in safe custody, and for this purpose he may use all necessary force. 1 Hale, P. C. 601. But any oppression of a prisoner under a pretended necessity will be punished; for the prisoner, whether he be a debtor or a criminal, is entitled to the protection of the laws from oppression.

GARANDIA, or GARANTIA (Law Lat.) A warranty. Spelman.

GARATHINX (Lomb.) In old Lombardic law. A gift; a free or absolute gift; a gift of the whole of a thing. Spelman.

GARAUNTOR. A warrantor or vouchee, who is obliged by his warranty (garauntie) to warrant (garaunter) the title of the warrantee (garaunte), that is, to defend him in his seisin, and if he do not defend, and the tenant be ousted, to give him land of equal value. Britt. c. 75.

GARBA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A bundle or sheaf. Applied to bundles of grain (Bracton, fol. 209), sheaves of arrows (Skene de Verb. Sign.), etc.

GARBALLO DECIMAE (Law Lat. from garba, a sheaf). In Scotch law. Tithes of corn; such as wheat, barley, oats, pease, etc. Also called parsonage tithes (decimae rectoriae). Ersk. Inst. bk. 11, tit. 10, § 13.

GARBLE. In old English statutes. To sort or cull out the good from the bad in spices, drugs, etc. Cowell; Blount.

GARBLER OF SPICES. An ancient officer in the city of London, who might enter into any shop, warehouse, etc., to view and search drugs and spices, and garble and make clean the same, or see that it be done. St. 6 Anne, c. 16.

GARD. A ward of a city.

GARDE. Custody; ward; care or keeping.

GARDEIN. A guardian. Britt. c. 35, 81. Used as an English word in Co. Litt. 38b.

GARDEN. A piece of ground appropriated to raising plants and flowers.
A garden is a parcel of a house, and passes with it. 2 Coke, 32; Plowd. 171; Co. Litt. 5b, 56a, 56b. But see F. Moore, 24; Bac. Abr. "Grants" (I).

GARDIANUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A guardian, defender, or protector. In feudal law, gardio. Spelman.
A warden. Gardianus ecclesiae, a churchwarden. Gardianus Quinque Portuum, warden of the Cinque Ports. Spelman.

GARDINUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A garden. Reg. Orig. 1b, 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 8.

GARENE (Law Fr.) A warren; a privileged place for keeping animals. Britt. c. 19.

GARNISH.
—In English Law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow prisoners on his entrance into prison.
To warn. To garnish the heir is to warn the heir. Obsolete.
—In Practice. To attach by process of garnishment.

GARNISHEE. In practice. A person who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, which money or property has been attached in his hands, and who has had notice of such attachment. He is so called because he has had warning or notice of the attachment.
Sometimes incorrectly used as a verb in place of "garnish."

GARNISHMENT.
—In Old Practice. A warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause. For example, in the practice of Pennsylvania, when an attachment issues against a debtor, in order to secure to the plaintiff a claim due by a third person to such debtor, notice is given to such third person, which notice is a garnishment, and he is called the "garnishee."
—In Modern Practice. A writ or process by which money owing to a defendant is attached in the hands of the creditor, and the creditor is required to appear at a designated time, and disclose the nature and extent of the indebtedness.
In some states this process is called "trustee process," in Connecticut "factorizing process," and in New York the term "garnishment" is not used, it being classed as an attachment.

GARNISTURA. In old English law. Garniture; whatever is necessary for the fortification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer, 328; Du Cange; Cowell; Blount.

GARSUMNE. In old English law. An amerciamento or fine. Cowell. See "Gresume"; "Grossome"; "Gersume."

GARTER. See "Knights of the Garter."

GARTH. In English Law. A yard; a little close or homestead in the north of England. Cowell; Blount.

A dam or wear in a river, for the catching of fish. Id.

GARYTOUR. In old Scotch law. Warder. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 8.

GASACHIO, Gasachius. (L. Lat.) In old European law. An adversary in a cause. L. Salic. tit. 52, § 2. Spelman.

GASTALDUS. A steward or bailiff. Spelman. Also applied to higher officers, as a governor of a city.

In the book of feuds it seems to have been used in the sense of "warden."

GASTINE (Law Fr.) Waste or uncultivated ground. Britt. c. 57.

GATE (Saxon, geat). At the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham.

In the words "beast gate" and "cattle gate," it means a right of pasture. These rights are local to Suffolk and Yorkshire, respectively. They are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie (2 Strange, 1084; 1 Term R. 137), and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gates of the pasture, and perhaps the name comes from this.

GAUDIES. Double commons.

A term used in the English universities. Wharton.

GAUGEATOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A gauger or gager. Cowell.

GAUGER. An officer appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, and tierces of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure.

GAUGETUM (Law Lat.) A gauge or gauging. Blount.

GAVEL. In old English law. Tribute; toll; custom; yearly revenue, of which there were formerly various kinds. Jacob; Tayl. Hist. Gavelkind, 26, 102. See "Gabel."

GAVELBRED. In English law. Rent reserved in bread, corn, or provisions; rent payable in kind. Cowell.

GAVELCESTER. A certain measure of rent ale. Cowell.

GAVELET. A customary process, whereby the lord of lands in gavelkind might seize the land in the nature of a distress, to be returned to the tenant in case he paid the rent. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 203.

GAVELGELD (Saxon, gavel, rent, geld, payment). That which yields annual profit or toll; the tribute or toll itself. 3 Mon. Angl. 155; Cowell; Du Cange, "Gavelgida."

GAVELHERTE. A customary service of ploughing. Du Cange.

GAVELING MEN. Tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides some customary duties to be done by them. Cowell.

GAVELKIND. The tenure by which almost all lands in England were held prior to the Conquest, and which is still preserved in Kent.

All the sons of a tenant of gavelkind lands take equally, or their heirs male and female by representation. 104 Ill. App. 170. The wife of such tenant is dowable of one-half the lands. The husband of such tenant has curtesy, whether issue be born or not, but only of one-half while without issue. Such lands do not escheat, except for treason or want of heirs. The heir of such lands may sell at fifteen years old, but must himself give livery. The rule as to division among brothers in default of sons is the same as among the sons.

Lord Coke derives gavelkind from "gave all kinde"; for this custom gave to all the sons alike (1 Co. Litt. 140a); Lambard, from gavel, rent,—that is, land of the kind that pays rent or customary husbandry work, in distinction from lands held by knight service (Perambulations of Kent, 1556, p. 585).

GAVELLER. An officer of the English crown having the general management of the mines, pits, and quarries in the forest of Dean and hundred of St. Briavels, subject, in some respects, to the control of the commissioners of woods and forests. He grants gales to free miners in their proper order, accepts surrenders of gales, and keeps the registers required by the acts. There is a deputy gaveler, who appears to exercise most of the gaveler's functions. See "Gale." Rapalje & L.

GAVELMAN. A tenant who is liable to tribute. Somn. Gavelkind, p. 33; Blount. Gavelingmen were tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides customary service. Cowell.

GAVELMED. A customary service of mowing meadow land or cutting grass (consuetudo falcandi). Somn. Gavelkind, Append.; Blount.

GAVELREP. In old English law. Bed-reap or bidreap; the duty of reaping at the bid or command of the lord. Somn. Gavelkind, 19, 21; Cowell.

GAVELWERK, or GAVELWEEK. A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Phill. Purv.; Blount; Somn. Gavelkind, 24; Du Cange.

GAYNAGE. (L. Fr.) Plough tackle, or implements of husbandry; wainage, Kelham.

GAZETTE. The official newspaper of the English government. It is published twice each week, and contains all the acts of state and proclamations, and also dissolutions of partnership and notices of proceedings in bankruptcy. Rapalje & L.

GEBOCED (Saxon). From "boc," a writing conveyed.

GEBOCIAN (from Saxon boc). To convey boc land; the grantor being said to gebocian the grantee of the land. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10. But the better opinion would seem to be that boc land was not transferable except by descent. See Du Cange.

GEBURSCIP, or GEBURSCRIPT. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS. In old English law. A country neighbor; an inhabitant of the same geburscip or village. Cowell.

GELD (from Saxon gildan; Law Lat. geldum). A payment; tax; tribute. Laws Hen. I. c. 2; Charta Edredi Regis apud Ingulfum, c. 81; Mon. Angl. tit. 1, pp. 52, 211, 379; Id. tit. 2, pp. 161-163; Du Cange; Blount.

The compensation for a crime. We find geld added to the word denoting the offense, or the thing injured or destroyed, and the compound taking the meaning of compensation for that offense, or the value of that thing. Capitulare 3, Anno 813, cc. 23, 25; Carl. Magn. So, wergeld, the compensation for killing a man, or his value; orfgeld, the value of cattle; angeld, the value of a single thing; octogeld, the value eight times over, etc. Du Cange, "Geldum."

GELDABILIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Taxable; geldable.

GELDABLE (Law Fr.) Liable to pay geld; liable to be taxed. Kelham.

GEMMA (Lat.) In the civil law. A gem; a precious stone. Gems were distinguished by their transparency; such as emeralds, chrysolites, amethysts. Dig. 34. 2. 19. 17.

GEMOT, or GEMOTE. (Saxon, from gemettand, to meet or assemble; Law Lat. gemotum). An assembly; a mote or moot, meeting, or public assembly.

There were various kinds; as, the wit-enagemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folcgemot, or general assembly of the people; the shiregemot, or county court; the burggemot, or borough court; the hundredgemot, or hundred court; the haligemot, or court baron; the halmote, a convention of citizens in their public hall; the holymote, or holy court; the sweingemote, or forest court; the wardmote, or ward court. Cunningham.

GENEALOGY. The summary history or table of a house or family, showing how the persons there named are connected together.

GENEARCH. The head of a family. Rapalje & L.

GENEATH (Saxon.) In Saxon law. A villein, or agricultural tenant (villanus villicus); a hind or farmer (firmarius rusticus). Spelman.

GENER (Lat.) A son-in-law.

GENERAL. Principal; universal; common to all, or to the greatest number.

—General Acceptance. Of a bill of exchange. An absolute acceptance precisely in conformity to the tenor of the bill. 3 Bush (Ky.) 626.

—General Agent. One authorized to transact all his principal's business, or all his business of a particular class. 94 Ala. 346; 41 Ind. 438.

A "general agent" is so called in distinction from a "special agent," whose authority is for a particular purpose, and confined to a particular act (49 N. Y. 555), and "universal agent," who is authorized to do any and every act which the principal might do. Story, Ag. § 21.

—General Appearance. See "Appearance."

—General Assembly. A name given in some of the states to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body.

—General Assignment. An assignment of all the assignor's property; or one for the benefit of all his creditors.

—General Average. General average contribution is defined to be a contribution by all the parties in a sea adventure to make good the loss sustained by one of their number on account of sacrifices voluntarily made on part of the ship or cargo to save the residue and the lives of those on board from an impending peril, or for extraordinary expense necessarily incurred by one or more of the parties for the general benefit of all the interests embarked in the enterprise. Losses which give a claim to general average are usually divided into two great classes: (1). Those which arise from sacrifices of part of the ship or part of the cargo, purposely made in order to save the whole adventure from perishing. (2). Those which arise out of extraordinary expenses incurred for the joint benefit of ship and cargo. 9 Wallace (U. S.) 228. See also "Average."

—General Charge. The instructions given by the court of its own motion, usually on the general aspects of the case, as distinguished from those given on the request of a party.

—General Covenant. One which relates to lands generally, and places the covenantee in the position of a specialty creditor. Brown.

—General Custom. One which obtains through a whole country, as distinguished from those peculiar to localities.

—General Damages. See "Damages."

—General Demurrer. A demurrer not indicating the precise ground of objection. One going to substance. See "Demurrer."

—General Deposit. A general deposit is a deposit which is to be returned to the depositor in kind. 141 Ill. 267. See, also, "Deposit."

—General Election.

(1) An election of officers throughout a state. 17 Mo. 511.

(2) An election of officers for the full term, as distinguished from an election to fill a vacancy. 52 Cal. 154.

(3) An election at a time appointed by law, as distinguished from one called specially.

—General Executor. One having general charge of the estate of his testator, as distinguished from a special executor appointed for a particular purpose or a limited time.

—General Gaol Delivery. In English law. One of the four commissions issued to judges holding the assizes, which empowers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whether an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not.

It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each prisoner, which were called writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. 4 Steph. Comm. 333, 334; 2 Hawk. P. C. 14, 28.

Under this authority, the gaol must be cleared and delivered of all prisoners in it, whenever or before whomever indicted, or for whatever crime. Such deliverance takes place when the person is either acquitted, convicted, or sentenced to punishment. Bracton, 110.

—General Guardian. One who has full general charge of the subject of guardianship.

—General Imparance. In pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions. See "Imparance."

—General Issue. In pleading. A plea which denies or traverses at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it.

It is called the general issue because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the indictment or declaration, it amounts at once to an issue. 2 Bl. Comm. 305. In the early manner of pleading, the general issue was seldom used except where the party meant wholly to deny the charges alleged against him. When he intended to excuse or palliate the charge, a special plea was used to set forth the particular facts.

But now, since special pleading is generally abolished, the same result is secured by requiring the defendant to file notice of special matters of defense which he intends to set up on the trial, or obliging him to use a form of answer adapted to the plaintiff's declaration, the method varying in different systems of pleading.

In criminal cases, the general issue is, not guilty. In civil cases, the general issues are almost as various as the forms of action: In assumpsit, the general issue is non assumpsit; in debt, nil debet; in detinue, non detinet; in trespass, non cul. (not guilty); in replevin, non cepit, etc.

Where the forms of action are abolished, the term is, in strictness, incorrect, but it is commonly applied to the general denial.

—General Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction applying to all subjects within the object of its general organization, and to all parties who can be reached by its process. 37 Miss. 48.

A jurisdiction which is not, within the limits of the judicial power of the sovereignty creating it, limited as to nature of subject matter, amount in controversy, or character of parties.

It is the nature of the jurisdiction, not its territorial extent, which determines whether a court is of limited or general jurisdiction. 11 Wis. 50.

—General Land Office. A bureau in the United States government which has the charge of matters relating to the public lands.

It was established by the act of April 25, 1812 (2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1238). Another act was passed March 24, 1824 (3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1938), which authorized the employment of additional officers. And it was reorganized by an act entitled, "An act to reorganize the general land office," approved July 4, 1836. It was originally a bureau of the treasury department, but was transferred in 1859 to the department of the interior.

—General Law. A law framed in general terms and restricted to no locality, operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard for the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. 266 Ill. 387.

—General Legacy. A pecuniary legacy, payable generally out of the assets of the testator. 2 Bl. Comm. 512.

—General Lien. A right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business. 2 Steph. Comm. 132.

—General Meeting. A meeting of the largest class of persons concerned in a matter. Applied to meetings of stockholders, members, etc.

—General Occupant. The man who could first enter upon lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant for life, living the cestui que vie. At common law he held the lands by right for the remainder of the term; but this is now altered by statute, in England, the term going to the executors if not devised. 29 Car. II. c. 3; 14 Geo. II. c. 20; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 258. This has been followed by some states (1 Code Md. 666, § 220, art. 93); in some states the term goes to heirs, if undevoted (Gen. St. Mass. c. 91, § 1).

—General Owner. The person having the permanent or residuary title, as distinguished from a mere special or possessory right.

—General Partnership. One whose business includes all transactions of a particular class, as distinguished from special partnerships formed for a particular transaction. See 1 Cliff (U. S.) 32.

—General Retainer. A fee paid to retain the services of an attorney generally, and not in a particular case. "It binds the person retained not to take a fee from another against his retainer, but to do nothing except what he is asked to do, and for this he is to be distinctly paid." 6 R. I. 206.

—General Sessions. In England, a court of record, held by two or more justices of the peace, for the execution of the authority given them by the commission of the peace and certain statutes. General sessions held at certain times in the four quarters of the year pursuant to St. 2 Hen. V. are properly called "quarter sessions" (q. v.), but intermediate general sessions may also be held. Pritch. Quar. Sess.; Rapalje & L.

In the United States, a court of general criminal jurisdiction in some states.

—General Ship. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired by a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. A ship advertised for general receipt of goods to be carried on a particular voyage. The advertisement should state the name of the ship and master, the general character of the ship, the time of sailing, and the proposed voyage. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 130; Abb. Shipp. (7th London Ed.) 123.

The shippers in a general ship generally contract with the master; but in law the owners and the master are separately bound to the performance of the contract, it being considered as made with the owners, as well as with the master. Abb. Shipp. (7th London Ed.) 319.

—General Special Impar lance. In pleading. One in which the defendant reserves to himself "all advantages and exceptions whatsoever." 2 Chit. Pl. 408. See "Impar lance."

—General Statute, or General Law. As opposed to "private," one relating to matters of public concern.

As opposed to "local," one operative throughout the jurisdiction of the legislative body.

As opposed to "special," one which affects equally all persons or things of the same class.

—General Tail. An estate tail where one parent only is specified, whence the issue must be derived, as to A. and the heirs of his body. Rapalje & L.

—General Tenancy. "Such tenancies only as are not fixed and made certain in point of duration by the agreement of the parties." 22 Ind. 122.

—General Term.

(1) A term held pursuant to law, as distinguished from one specially called.

(2) A term for the trial of cases, as distinguished from one for the hearing of motions.

(3) A sitting of the trial judges in banc, for appellate purposes.

—General Traverse. See "Traverse."

—General Usage. One which prevails generally throughout the country. See "General Custom," supra, this title.

—General Verdict. One finding generally for one of the parties, as distinguished from a special verdict finding the facts.

"A finding by the jury in the terms of the issue referred to them." 2 Tidd, Pr. 869.

—General Warrant. A process which used to issue from the state secretary's office, to take up (without naming any person in particular) the author, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were particularly specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the house of commons. Com. Jour. 22d April, 1766; Wharton.

A writ of assistance. The issuing of these was one of the causes of the American Republic. They were a species of general warrant, being directed to "all and singular justices, sheriffs, constables, and all other officers and subjects," empowering them to enter and search any house for uncustomed goods, and to command all to assist them. These writs were perpetual, there being no return to them. They were not executed, owing to the eloquent argument of Otis before the supreme court of Massachusetts against their legality. See Tudor, Life of Otis, 66.

—General Warranty. A covenant whereby the grantor warrants and agrees to defend the title to the premises conveyed against all persons whatsoever, as distinguished from a "special warranty" against persons "by or from" the grantor.

GENERALE DICTUM GENERALITER est interpretandum. A general expression is to be construed generally. 8 Coke, 116; 1 Eden, 96.

GENERALE NIHIL CERTUM IMPLICAT. A general expression implies nothing certain. 2 Coke, 34; Wingate, Max. 164.

GENERALE TANTUM VALET IN GENERALIBUS, quantum singulare in singulis. What is general prevails, or is worth as much, among things general, as what is particular among things particular. 11 Coke, 59.

GENERALIA PRAECEDUNT; SPECIALIA SEQUUNTUR. Things general precede; things special follow. Reg. Brev.; Branch, Princ.

GENERALIA SPECIALIBUS NON DEROGANT. Things general do not derogate from things special. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

GENERALIA VERBA SUNT GENERALITER intelligenda. General words are understood in a general sense. 3 Inst. 76; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 577.

GENERALIBUS SPECIALIA DEROGANT. Things special take from things general. Halk. Max. 51.

GENERALIS CLAUSULA NON PORRIGITUR ad ea quae antea specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things which are previously provided for specially. 8 Coke, 154.

GENERALIS REGULA GENERALITER est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally. 6 Coke, 65.

GENEROsa (Law Lat.) Gentlewoman. Cowell; 2 Inst. 668.

GENEROSI FILIUS. The son of a gentleman. Generally abbreviated "gen fil."

GENEROSUS. Gentleman; a gentleman. Spelman.

GENICULUM. A degree of consanguinity. Spelman.

GENS (Lat.) In Roman law. A union of families, who bore the same name, who were of an ingenuous birth (ingenui), none of whose ancestors had been a slave, and who had suffered no capitis diminutio.

Gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem nomine sunt; qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt; quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit; qui capite non sunt deminuti. This definition is given by Cicero (Topic 6), after Scaevola, the pontifex. But, notwithstanding this high authority, the question as to the organization of the gens is involved in great obscurity and doubt. The definition of Festus is still more vague and unsatisfactory. He says: "Gentilis dicitur et ex eodem genere ortus, et is, qui simili nomine appellatur, ut ait Cincius; Gentiles mihi sunt, qui meo nomine appellantur. Gens and genus are convertible terms; and Cicero defines the latter word: "Genus autem est quod sui similes communiione quadam, specie autem differentes, duas aut plures complectitur partes." De Oratore 1, 42. The genus is that which comprehends two or more particulars, similar to one another by having something in common, but differing in species. From this it may fairly be concluded that the gens or race comprises several families, always of ingenuous birth, resembling each other by their origin, general name,—nomen,—and common sacrifices or sacred rites,—sacra gentilitia (sui similes communiione quadam),—but differing from each other by a particular name,—cognomen and agnatio (specie autem differentes).

GENTES (Law Lat.) People. Contra omnes gentes, against all people. Bracton, fol. 37b. Words used in the clause of warranty in old deeds.

GENTILES. In Roman law. The members of a gens or common tribe.

GENTLEMAN. In English law. A person of superior birth.

According to Sir Edward Coke, he is one who bears coat armor, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. The eldest son had no exclusive claim to the degree; for, according to Littleton, "every son is as great a gentleman as the eldest." 2 Inst. 667. Sir Thomas Smith, quoted by Blackstone (1 Comm. 406), says: "As for gentlemen, they are made good cheap in this kingdom; for whosoever studies the laws of the realm, who studies in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and, to be short, who can live idly and without manual labor, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, shall be called master, and be taken for a gentleman." In the United States, this word is unknown to the law; but in many places it is applied by courtesy to all men. See Poth. Proc. Cr. § 1, Append. § 3.

"It originally signified a man of gentle birth, but the use of the term has become changed, and it is often applied to denote persons of all ranks, from the upper down to the lowest verge of the middle class." 1 C. P. Div. 61. Thus, a coal agent out of employment (3 Hurl. & N. 798), or a medical student who had been in no business for several months (3 Hurl. & N. 382), is properly described as a "gent."

GENTLEWOMAN. An addition formerly appropriate in England to the state or degree of a woman. 2 Inst. 667.

GENUINE. Not spurious or counterfeit. Used in relation to a written instrument, it does not cover either the authority (149 N. Y. 182) or the capacity (37 N. Y. 487) of the maker.

GERECHTSBODE (Belg.) In old New York law. A court messenger or constable. O'Callaghan, New Neth. 322.

GERENS. Bearing. Gerens datum, bearing date. 1 Ld. Raym. 386; Hob. 19.

GERMAN. Whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent; thus, "brother german" denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side; "cousins german," those in the first and nearest degree, i. e., children of brothers or sisters. Tech. Dict.; 4 Man. & G. 56.

GERMANUS (Lat.) Descended of the same stock, or from the same couple of ancestors; of the whole or full blood. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 145.

GERONTOCOMI. In civil law. Officers appointed to manage hospitals for poor old persons. Clef des Lois Rom. "Administrateurs."

GERONTOCOMIUM. In the civil law. An institution or hospital for taking care of the old. Calv. Lex. Their managers are called "gerontocomi."

GERSUMARIUS. In old English. Fineable, or liable to be mulcted, fined, or amerced at the discretion of the lord. Cowell.

GERSUME (Saxon.) In old English law. Expense; reward; compensation; wealth; especially, the consideration or fine of a contract; e. g., et pro hac concessione dedit nobis praedictus Jordanus 100 sol. sterling de gersume. Old charter, cited Somn. Gavelkind, 177; Tabul. Reg. Ch. 377; 3 Mon. Angl. 126, 920. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offense. 2 Mon. Angl. 973.

GEST, GUST or GESTE. In Saxon law. A guest.

GESTATION. See "Period of Gestation."

GESTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The doing or management of a thing. Negotiorum gestio, the doing voluntarily without authority business of another. De neg. gest. Gester negotiorum, one who so interferes with business of another without authority. Gestio pro haerede, behavior as heir; such conduct on the part of the heir as indicates acceptance of the inheritance, and makes him liable for ancestor's debts universally, e. g., an entry upon, or assigning, or letting any of the heritable property, releasing any of the debtors of the estate, or meddling with the title deeds or heirship movables, etc. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 82 et seq.; Stair, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

GESTIO PRO HAEREDE. Behavior as heir. That conduct by which an heir renders himself liable for his ancestor's debts, as by taking possession of title deeds, receiving rents, etc. Bell, Dict.

GESTOR. In civil law. One who acts for another, or transacts another's business. Calv. Lex.

GESTUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A thing done; a transaction. Strictly, a thing done without words, and so distinguished from actum. A distinction was sometimes made between "gestum" and "factum." Gaius, however, in the Digest (50. 16. 58) pronounces this to be subtle.

GEVILLOURIS. In old Scotch law. Gaolers. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 234.

GEWINEDA. In Saxon law. The ancient convention of the people to decide a cause. Laws Aethel. c. 1.

GEWITNESSA (Saxon). In Saxon and old English law. The giving of evidence. Laws Aethel. c. 2.

GEWRITE. In Saxon law. Deeds or charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10.

GIFT. A voluntary conveyance; that is, a conveyance not founded on the consideration of money or blood.

The word denotes rather the motive of the conveyance, so that a feoffment or grant may be called a gift when gratuitous. A gift is of the same nature as a settlement,—neither denotes a form of assurance, but the nature of the transaction. Watk. Conv. (Preston Ed.) 199. The operative words of this conveyance are do, or dedi,—I give, or I have given. The maker of this instrument is called the donor, and he to whom it is made, the donee. 2 Bl. Comm. 316; Litt. 59; Shep. Touch. c. 11.

Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts causa mortis are gifts made in prospect of death, and on the implied condition that they shall be of no effect if the donor shall recover. 49 N. Y. 17. See "Donatio."

GIFT ENTERPRISE. A scheme whereby gifts or premiums are distributed among the patrons of a business establishment, either the value of the premium, or the persons who shall receive the same, being determined by chance. See 165 Mass. 146; 73 Md. 529; 56 N. Y. 424; 48 Minn. 555.

GIFTA AQUAE. A stream of water. Blount.

GIFTOMAN. In Swedish law. He who has a right to dispose of a woman in marriage.

This right is vested in the father, if living; if dead, in the mother. They may nominate a person in their place; but for want of such nomination the brothers german, and for want of them the consanguine brothers, and in default of the latter the uterine brothers, have the right; but they are bound to consult the paternal or maternal grandfather. Swed. Code, "Marriage," c. 1.

GILD. See "Guild."

GILD HALL. See "Guildhall."

GILDA MERCATORIA (Law Lat.) A mercantile meeting.

If the king once grants to a set of men to have gildam mercatoriam, a mercantile meeting or assembly, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them forever. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 473, 474. A company of merchants incorporated. St. Wm. Reg. Scot. c. 35; Leg. Burg. Scot. c. 99; Du Cange; Spelman; 8 Coke, 125a; 2 Ld. Raym. 1134.

GILDABLE. See "Geldable."

GILDO. In Saxon law. Member of a gild or decennary. Oftener spelled "congildo." Du Cange; Spelman, "Geldum."

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint.

GILOUR (Law Fr.) A cheat or deceiver. Applied in Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for silver or latem for gold. Britt. c. 15.

GIRANTEM, or GIRANTE. In common law. An Italian word, which signifies the drawer. It is derived from girare, to draw, in the same manner as the English verb to murder is transformed into murdrare in our old indictments. Hall, Mar. Loans, 183, note.

GIRTH. A girth, or yard, is a measure of length. The word is of Saxon origin, taken from the circumference of the human body. Girth is contracted from girdeth, and signifies as much as girdle.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In Scotch law. A refuge or place of safety given to those who had slain a man in heat of passion (chaude melle), and unpremeditatedly. Abolished at the Reformation. 1 Hume, Hist. Eng. 235; 1 Ross, Lect. 331.

GISEMENT. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle. Rapalje & L.

GISER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To lie.

Giser et mason, to lie or lodge at a house. St. Westminster I. c. 1.

GISETAKER. An agister. See "Gisement."

GISIL, or GISLE. A pledge or hostage.

GIST (sometimes, also, spelled git).

—In Pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 12; 19 Vt. 102. In stating the substance or gist of the action, everything must be averred which is necessary to be proved at the trial. The moving cause of the plaintiff's bringing the action, and the matter for which he recovers the principal satisfaction, is frequently entirely collateral to the gist of the action. Thus, where a father sues the defendant for a trespass for the seduction of his daughter, the gist of the action is the trespass and the loss of his daughter's services; but the collateral cause is the injury done to his feelings, for which the principal damages are given. 1 Viner, Abr. 598; 2 Phil. Ev. 1, note; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (B); Doct. Plac. 85. See "Damages."

—Of an Action. The cause for which an action will lie; the ground or foundation of a suit, and without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of a suit; without which it is not a cause of action. 199 Ill. 256.

GIVE. A term used in deeds of conveyance. At common law, it implied a covenant. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. So in Kentucky. 1 Pirtle, Dig. 211. In Maryland and Alabama it is doubtful. 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 311; 2 Ala. (N. S.) 555. In Ohio, in conveyance of freehold, it implies warranty for the grantor's life. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. In Maine it implies a covenant. 5 Me. 227; 23 Me. 219. In New York it does not, by statute. See 14 Wend. 38. It does not imply covenant in North Carolina. 1 Murph. 343. Nor in England, by St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4.

GIVER. He who makes a gift. By his gift the giver always impliedly agrees with the donee that he will not revoke the gift.

GIVING IN PAYMENT. In Louisiana. A term which signifies that a debtor, instead of paying a debt he owes in money, satisfies his creditor by giving in payment a movable or immovable. See "Dation en Paiement."

GIVING RINGS. A ceremony by gift of finger rings by a barrister on being made a serjeant-at-law.

GIVING TIME. An agreement by which a creditor gives his debtor a delay or time in paying his debt beyond that contained in the original agreement. When other persons are responsible to him, either as drawer, indorser, or surety, if such time be given without the consent of the latter, it discharges them for responsibility to him.

GLADIUS (Lat.) In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction,—jus gladii.

GLANS (Lat.) In the civil law. Acorns or nuts of the oak or other trees. Brissonius. In a larger sense, all fruits of trees. Dig. 43. 28.

GLANVILLE. The author of the oldest treatise on English law, written in Latin, about A. D. 1181, under the title of Tractatus de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ (A Treatise of the Laws and Customs of England). The older writers are generally agreed that this was Ranulphus de Glanvilla, chief justiciary of England, to Henry II, who was equally eminent as a soldier and a judge, and died at the siege of Acre, in 1190. Hoveden in Hen. II, Staunf. Prær. c. 1, fol. 5. Catlin, C. J. Plowden, 368a. Cowell. 8 Co. pref. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 70. The same opinion is adopted by Spelman and Sir Mathew Hale. Hist. Com. Law, c. 7. Lord Coke gives the arms and genealogy of Glanville, and speaks with the greatest confidence on the subject, 8 Co. ub. sup. Mr. Reeves, however, doubts the identity of these individuals, and thinks that the Glanville who wrote the treatise might have been a person of that name who was a justice itinerant. 1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 223.

As to the work itself, there is little doubt of its being the most ancient treatise on English law. Spelman remarks that Glanville was the first who attempted to make that law a lex scripta, or written law. But it possesses a higher interest even than this, from the fact of its being the oldest work of the kind in Europe. Dr. Robertson observes that it was the first undertaking in any country in Europe, to collect into one body the customs which then regulated the administration of justice, and thus to render the law fixed. 1 Robertson's Charles V. Appendix, Note xxv. Defontaine's, the oldest law writer in France, composed his Conseil about half a century afterwards.

GLAVEA. A hand dart. Cowell.

GLEANING. The act of gathering such grain in a field where it grew as may have been left by the reapers after the sheaves were gathered.

There is a custom in England, it is said, by which the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's land after harvest, without being guilty of a trespass. 3 Bl. Comm. 212. But it has been decided that the community are not entitled to claim this privilege as a right. 1 H. Bl. 51. In the United States, it is believed, no such right exists. It seems to have existed in some parts of France. Merlin, Repert, "Glanage." As to whether gleaning would or would not amount to larceny, see Woodf. Landl. & Ten. 242; 2 Russ. Crimes, 99. The Jewish law may be found in the 19th chapter of Leviticus, verses 9 and 10. See Ruth ii. 2, 3; Isaiah xvii. 6.

GLEBA.

—In the Civil Law. A turf, sod, or clod of earth; the soil or ground; cultivated land in general.

—In Old English Law. Church land (solum et dos ecclesiae). Spelman. See "Glebe."

GLEBAE ASCRIPTITII. See "Adscriptiti."

GLEBARIAE. Turf or peat. Cowell.

GLEBE.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The land which belongs to a church. It is the dowry of the church. Gleba est terra qua consistit dos ecclesiae. 9 Cranch (U. S.) 329.

—In Civil Law. The soil of an inheritance. There were serfs of the glebe, called glebae addicti. Code, 11. 47. 7. 21; Nov. 54, c. 1.

GLOMERELLS. Commissioners appointed to determine differences between scholars in a school or university and the townsmen of the place. Jacob.

GLOS (Lat.) In civil law. A husband's sister. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6.

GLOSS (Lat. glossa). Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject,—especially the text of an author. See Webster.

—In Civil Law. Glossae, or glossemata, were words which needed explanation. Calv. Lex. The explanations of such words. Id. Especially used of the short comments or explanations of the text of the Roman law, made during the twelfth century by the teachers at the schools of Bologna, etc., who were hence called glossators, of which glosses Accursius made a compilation which possesses great authority, called Glossa Ordinaria. These glosses were at first written between the lines of the text (glossae interlineares), afterwards, on the margin, close by and partly under the text (glossae marginales). Cush. Introd. Rom. Law, 130-132.

GLOSSA VIPERINA EST QUAE CORRODIT viscera textus. That is a viperine gloss which eats out the vitals of the text. 10 Coke, 70; 2 Bulst. 79.

GLOSSATOR. A commentator or annotator of the Roman law. One of the authors of the Gloss.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. An English statute, passed 6 Edw. I., A. D. 1278. So called because it was passed at Gloucester. There were other statutes made at Gloucester which do not bear this name. See St. 2 Rich. II.

GLOVE SILVER. Extraordinary rewards formerly given to officers of courts, etc.; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judges' officers. Jacob.

GLOVES. In was an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there was no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It is an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath. Wharton

GLYN. A hollow between two mountains; a valley or glen. Co. Litt. 5b.

GO TO PROTEST. A term of the commercial law, indicating the dishonor of commercial paper by nonpayment or nonacceptance, whereby it becomes subject to protest (q. v.).

GO WITHOUT DAY. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again.

GOAT, or GOTE (Law Lat. gota; German, gote). A canal or sluice for the passage of water. Charter of Roger, Duke de Basingham, anno 1220, in Tabularis S. Bertini; Du Cange.

A ditch, sluice, or gutter. Cowell; St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5. An engine for draining waters out of the land into the sea, erected and built with doors and perculleses of timber, stone, or brick,—invented first in Lower Germany. Callis, Sew. 66.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. When a prisoner is arraigned, he is asked, "How will you be tried?" He answers, "By God and my country." This practice arose when the prisoner had the right to choose the mode of trial, namely, by ordeal or by jury, and then he elected by God or by his country, that is, by jury. It is probable that originally it was "By God or my country"; for the question asked supposes an option in the prisoner, and the answer is meant to assert his innocence by declining neither sort of trial. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 416; Barr. Obs. St. 73, note.

GOD BOTE. In ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical or church fine imposed upon an offender for crimes and offenses committed against God.

GOD'S PENNY. In old English law. Money given to bind a bargain; earnest-money. So called because such money was anciently given to God,—that is, to the church and the poor. See "Denarius Dei."

GOGING STOLE. An old form of "cucking stool" (q. v.). Cowell.

GOING CONCERN. A business establishment which continues to transact its ordinary business, though it may be embarrassed, or even insolvent. 30 Fed. 865.

GOING THROUGH THE BAR. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen's bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on. Wharton

GOING TO THE COUNTRY. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words, "and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination to a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. Rapalje & L.

GOING WITNESS. One who is going out of the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as, for example, if he is going from one to another of the United States, or in Great Britain, from England to Scotland. 2 Dickens, 454.

GOLDA. A mine. Blount. A sink or passage for water. Cowell.

GOLDSMITH'S NOTES. In English law. Banker's notes. So called because the trades of banker and goldsmith were originally joined. Chit. Bills, 423.

GOOD. Reasonable; suitable; sufficient; valid; meeting all legal requirements. See 10 Gray (Mass.) 302; 36 Mo. App. 192.

—As Applied to Commercial Paper. Genuine; collectible. 4 Metc. (Mass.) 48; 1 N. J. Law, 99.

—As Applied to Persons. Of a debtor, solvent (21 Mo. App. 372); of a person in a representative or official capacity (1 Blackf. [Ind.] 396).

—As Applied to Property Sold. Reasonably sound and suitable. See 1 Idaho, 41.

GOOD ABEARING. See "Abearance."

GOOD AND LAWFUL MEN. Those qualified to serve on juries; that is, those of full age, citizens, not infamous or non compos mentis; and they must be resident in the county where the venue is laid. Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A); Cro. Eliz. 654; 3 Inst. 30; 2 Rolle, 82; Cam. & N. (N. C.) 38.

The expression "good and lawful men" continues to be used in modern law, and criers in American courts ordinarily address a jury as "You good men," etc.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Conduct authorized by law. Surety of good behavior might at common law be demanded from any person justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution. 1 Bin. (Pa.) 98, note; 2 Yeates (Pa.) 437; 14 Viner, Abr. 21; Dane, Abr. Index. As to what is a breach of good behavior, see 2 Mart (La.; N. S.) 683; Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 61, § 6; 1 Chit. Prac. 676.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. See "Consideration."

GOOD COUNTRY. In Scotch law. Good men of the country. A name given to a jury.

GOOD FAITH. Honesty; absence of fraud, collusion, or deceit. 91 Wis. 464. See "Bona Fide Purchaser."

GOOD MORAL CHARACTER. What constitutes good moral character may vary from one generation to another. It would seem that whatever is forbidden by the law of the land ought to be considered, for the time being, immoral. 22 Fed. Cas. 921.

GOOD TITLE. A perfect title, free and clear from any legal exception or charge thereon. 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 370.

GOOD WILL. The benefit which arises from the establishment of particular trades or occupations. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 99. See 17 Ves. 336; 1 Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 68; 16 Am. Jur. 87.

It includes only that estimation and repute which is peculiar to the particular establishment. It is that species of connection in trade which induces customers to deal with a particular firm.

GOODS. The word goods, as a technical term of the law is nomen generalissimum, and has a very extensive meaning. 35 N. H. 483.

—In Contracts. The term "goods" is not so wide as "chattels," for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which "chattels" does include. Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

Goods will not include fixtures. 2 Mass. 495; 4 J. B. Moore, 73. In a more limited sense, "goods" is used for articles of merchandise. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 389. It has been held in Massachusetts that promissory notes were within the term "goods" in the statute of frauds (3 Metc. [Mass.] 365; but see 24 N. H. 484; 4 Dud. [S. C.] 28); so stock or shares of an incorporated company (20 Pick. [Mass.] 9; 3 Har. & J. [Md.] 38; 15 Conn. 400); so, in some cases, bank notes and coin (2 Story [U. S.] 52; 5 Mason [U. S.] 537). See "Chattel."

—In Penal Statutes. In a strict sense, as the word is understood in penal statutes, it is limited to movables belonging to the property of some person, which have an intrinsic value, and does not include securities, which are not valuable in themselves, but merely represent value. 35 N. H. 483.

—In Wills. In wills, goods is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. 35 N. H. 483; 1 Atk. 180-182; 2 Atk. 62; 1 P. Wms. 267; 1 Brown, Ch. 128; 4 Russ. 370; Williams, Ex'rs, 1014; 1 Rop. Leg. 250. But in general it will be limited by the context of the will. See 2 Belt, Supp. Ves. 287; 1 Chit. Prac. 89, 90; 1 Ves. Jr. 63; 3 Ves. 212; Hammond, Parties, 182; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 101; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 142; Ayliffe, Pand. 296; Weskett, Ins. 260; Sugd. Vend. 493, 497; and the articles "Biens;" "Chattel"; "Furniture."

GOODS AND CHATTELS.

—In Contracts. A term which includes not only personal property in possession, but choses in action and chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, or emblements. 12 Coke, 1; 1 Atk. 182; Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

—In Criminal Law. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels." And if described in an indictment as "goods and chattels," these words may be rejected as surplusage. 4 Gray. (Mass.) 416; 3 Cox, C. C. 460; 1 Den. C. C. 450; 1 Dears. & B. C. C. 426; 2 Zab. (N. J.) 207; 1 Leach, C. C. 241 (4th Ed. 468). See 5 Mason (U. S.) 537.

—In Wills. If unrestrained, these words will pass all personal property. Williams, Ex'rs, 1014 et seq., Am. notes. See Add. Cont. 31, 201, 912, 914.

GOODS BARGAINED AND SOLD. A phrase used to designate the action of assumpsit brought on a contract of sale, where the purchaser has not accepted delivery of the goods.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase used to indicate the action of assumpsit brought when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE. A phrase used in the statute of frauds, covering, generally, all classes of personal property. Fixtures do not come within it. 1 Crompt., M. & R. 275; 3 Tyrwh. 959; 1 Tyrwh. & G. 4. Growing crops of potatoes, corn, turnips, and other annual crops, are within it. 8 Dowl. & R. 314; 10 Barn. & C. 446; 4 Mees. & W. 347. Per contra, 2 Taunt. 38. See Add. Cont. 31, 32; 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 5 Barn. & C. 829; 10 Adol. & E. 753. See, generally, 118 Mass. 285; 20 Mich. 357. Promissory notes and shares in an incorporated company, and, in some cases, money and bank notes, have been held within it. See 2 Pars. Cont. 330-332.

GOODTITLE. Sometimes used as the name of the fictitious tenant in ejectment, as "Doe" or "Jackson" is more usually employed.

GOVERNMENT (Lat. gubernaculum, a rudder. The Romans compared the state to a vessel, and applied the term gubernator, helmsman, to the leader or actual ruler of a state. From the Latin, this word has passed into most of the modern European languages). That institution or aggregate of institutions by which a state makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming a state.

We understand, in modern political science, by "state," in its widest sense, an independent society, acknowledging no superior, and by the term "government," that institution or aggregate of institutions, by which that society makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming that society by those who possess the power or authority of prescribing them. Government is the aggregate of authorities which rule a society. By "administration," again, we understand in modern times, and especially in more or less free countries, the aggregate of those persons in whose hands the reins of government are for the time being,—the chief ministers or heads of departments. But the terms "state," "government," and "administration" are not always used in their strictness. The government of a state being its most prominent feature, which is most readily perceived, "government" has frequently been used for "state"; and the publicists of the last century, almost always used the term "government," or "form of government," when they discussed the different political societies or states. On the other hand, "government" is often used, to this day, for "administration," in the sense in which it has been explained.

They are never actually created by agreement or compact. Even where portions of government are formed by agreement, as, for instance, when a certain family is called to rule over a country, the contracting parties must previously be conscious of having authority to do so. As society originates with the family, so does authority or government. Nowhere do men exist without authority among them, even though it were but in its mere incipency. Men are forced into this state of things by the fundamental law that with them, and with them alone of all mammals, the period of dependence of the young upon its parents outlasts by many years the period of lactation, so that, during this period of post-lactational dependence, time and opportunity are given for the development of affection and the habit of obedience on the one hand, and of affection and authority on the other, as well as of mutual dependence. The family is a society, and expands into clusters of families, into tribes and larger societies, collecting into communities, always carrying the habit and necessity of authority and mutual support along with them. As men advance, the great and pervading law of mutual dependence shows itself more and more clearly, and acts more and more intensely. Man is eminently a social being, not only as to an instinctive love of aggregation, not only as to material necessity and security, but also as to mental and affectional development, and not only as to a given number of existing beings, or what we will call as to "extent," but also as to "descent" of generation after generation, or, as we may call it, "transmission." Society, and its government along with it, are continuous. Government exists and continues among men, and laws have authority for generations which neither made them, nor had any direct representation in making them, because the necessity of government—necessary according to the nature of social man and to his wants—is a continuous necessity. But the family is not only the institution from which once, at a distant period, society, authority, and government arose. The family increases in importance, distinctness, and intensity of action as man advances, and continues to develop authority, obedience, affection, and social adhesiveness, and thus acts with reference to the state as the feeder acts with reference to the canal. The state originates daily anew in the family.

Although man is an eminently social being, he is also individual, morally, intellectually, and physically; and, while his individuality will endure even beyond this life, he is necessitated, by his physical condition, to appropriate and to produce, and thus to imprint his individuality upon the material world around, to create property. But man is not only an appropriating and producing, he is also an exchanging, being. He always exchanges and always intercommunicates. This constant intertwining of man's individualism and socialism creates mutual claims of protection, rights, the necessity of rules, of laws,—in one word, as individuals and as natural members of society, men produce and require government. No society, no cluster of men, no individuals banded together even for a temporary purpose, can exist without some sort of government instantly springing up. Government is natural to man, and characteristic. No animals have a government; no authority exists among them; instinct and physical submission alone exist among them. Man alone has laws which ought to be obeyed, but may be disobeyed. Expansion, accumulation, development, progress, relapses, disintegration, violence, error, superstition, the necessity of intercommunication, wealth and poverty, peculiar disposition, temperament, configuration of the country, traditional types, pride and avarice, knowledge and ignorance, sagacity of individuals, taste, activity and sluggishness, noble or criminal bias, position, both geographical and chronological,—all that affects numbers of men affects their governments, and an endless variety of governments and political societies has been the consequence; but, whatever form of government may present itself to us, the fundamental idea, however rudely conceived, is always the protection of society and its members, security of property and person, the administration of justice therefor, and the united efforts of society to furnish the means to authority to carry out its objects,—contribution, which, viewed as imposed by authority, is taxation. Those bands of robbers which occasionally have risen in disintegrating societies, as in India, and who merely robbed and devastated, avowing that they did not mean to administer justice or protect the people, form no exception, although the extent of their soldiery, and the periodicity of their raids, caused them to be called governments. What little of government continued to exist was still the remnant of the communal government of the oppressed hamlets; while the robbers themselves could not exist without a government among themselves.

Aristotle classified governments according to the seat of supreme power, and he has been generally followed down to very recent times. Accordingly, we had monarchy, that government in which the supreme power is vested in one man, to which was added, at a later period, the idea of hereditariness. Aristocracy, the government, in which the supreme power is vested in the aristoi, which does not mean, in this case, the best, but the excelling ones, the prominent, i. e., by property and influence. Privilege is its characteristic. Its corresponding degenerate government is the oligarchy (from oligos, little, few), that government in which supreme power is exercised by a few privileged ones, who generally have arrogated the power. Democracy, that government in which supreme power is vested in the people at large. Equality is one of its characteristics. Its degenerate correspondent is the ochlocracy (from ochlos, the rabble), for which at present the barbarous term "mobocracy" is frequently used.

But this classification was insufficient, even at the time of Aristotle, when, for instance, theocracies existed; nor is the seat of supreme power the only characteristic, nor, in all respects, by any means the chief characteristic. A royal government, for instance, may be less absolute than a republican government. In order to group together the governments and political societies which have existed, and are still existing, with philosophical discrimination, we must pay attention to the chief power holder (whether he be one or whether there are many), to the pervading spirit of the administration or wielding of the power, to the characteristics of the society, or the influencing interests of the same, to the limitation or entirety of public power, to the peculiar relations of the citizen to the state. Indeed, every principle, relation, or condition characteristically influencing or shaping society or government in particular may furnish us with a proper division. We propose, then, the following:

Grouping of Political Societies and Governments.

I. According to the supreme power holder, or the placing of supreme power, whether really or nominally so.

The power holder may be one, a few, many, or all; and we have, accordingly:

A. Principalities, that is, states the rulers of which are set apart from the ruled, or inherently differ from the ruled, as in the case of the theocracy.

- (1) Monarchy.
 - (a) Patriarchy.
 - (b) Chieftain government (as our Indians).
 - (c) Sacerdotal monarchy (as the states of the church; former sovereign bishoprics).
 - (d) Kingdom, or principality proper.
 - (e) Theocracy (Jehovah was the chief magistrate of the Israelitic state).
- (2) Dyarchy. It exists in Siam, and existed occasionally in the Roman empire; not in Sparta, because Sparta was a republic, although her two hereditary generals were called kings.

B. Republic.

- (1) Aristocracy.
 - (a) Aristocracy proper.
 - (aa) Aristocracies which are democracies within the body of aristocrats (as the former Polish government).
 - (bb) Organic internal government (as Venice formerly).
 - (b) Oligarchy.
 - (c) Sacerdotal republic, or hierarchy.
 - (d) Plutocracy; if, indeed, we adopt this term from antiquity for a government in which it is the principle that the possessors of great wealth constitute the body of aristocrats.
- (2) Democracy.
 - (a) Democracy proper.
 - (b) Ochlocracy (mob rule), "mob" meaning unorganized multitude.

II. According to the unity of the public power, or its division and limitation.

A. Unrestricted power, or absolutism.

- (1) According to the form of government.
 - (a) Absolute monarchy, or despotism.
 - (b) Absolute aristocracy (Venice); absolute sacerdotal aristocracy, etc.
 - (c) Absolute democracy (the government of the Agora, or market democracy).

(2) According to the organization of the administration.

- (a) Centralized absolutism. Centralism, called "bureaucracy" when carried on by writing; at least, bureaucracy has very rarely existed, if ever, without centralism.
- (b) Provincial (satraps, pashas, proconsuls).

B. According to division of public power.

- (1) Governments in which the three great functions of public power are separate, viz., the legislative, executive, judiciary. If a distinct term contradistinguished to centralism be wanted, we might call these "co-operative governments."
- (2) Governments in which these branches are not strictly separate, as, for instance, in our government, but which are nevertheless not centralized governments; as Republican Rome, Athens, and several modern kingdoms.

C. Institutional government.

- (1) Institutional government comprehending the whole, or constitutional government.
 - (a) Deputative government.
 - (b) Representative government.
 - (aa) Bicameral.
 - (bb) Unicameral.
- (2) Local self-government. See V. We do not believe that any substantial self-government can exist without an institutional character and subordinate self-governments. It can exist only under an institutional government (see Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, under "Institution").

D. Whether the state is the substantive or the means, or whether the principle of socialism or individualism preponderates.

- (1) Socialism, that state of society in which the socialist principle prevails, or in which government considers itself the substantive; the ancient states absorbing the individual or making citizenship the highest phase of humanity; absolutism of Louis XIV indeed, all modern absolutism is socialistic.
- (2) Individualism, that system in which the state remains acknowledged a means, and the individual the substantive; where primary claims, that is, rights, are felt to exist, for the obtaining and protection of which the government is established,—the government, or even society, which must not attempt to absorb the individual. The individual is immortal, and will be of another world; the state is neither.

III. According to the descent or transfer of supreme power.

- A. Hereditary governments.
 - Monarchies.
 - Aristocracies.
 - Hierarchies, etc.
- B. Elective.
 - Monarchies.
 - Aristocracies.
 - Hierarchies.
- C. Hereditary — elective — governments, the rulers of which are chosen from a certain family or tribe.
- D. Governments in which the chief magistrate or monarch has the right to appoint the successor; as occasionally the Roman emperors, the Chinese, the Russian, in theory, Bonaparte when consul for life.

IV. According to the origin of supreme power, real or theoretical.

- A. According to the primordial character of power.
 - (1) Based on jus divinum.
 - (a) Monarchies.
 - (b) Communism, which rests its claims on a jus divinum, or extrapolitical claim of society.
 - (c) Democracies, when proclaiming that the people, because the people, can do what they list, even against the law; as the Athenians once declared it, and Napoleon III., when he desired to be elected president a second time against the constitution.
 - (2) Based on the sovereignty of the people.
 - (a) Establishing an institutional government, as with us.
 - (b) Establishing absolutism (the Bonaparte sovereignty).
- B. Delegated power.
 - (1) Chartered governments.
 - (a) Chartered city governments.
 - (b) Chartered companies, as the former great East India Company.
 - (c) Proprietary governments.
 - (2) Vice royalties; as Egypt, and, formerly, Algiers.
 - (3) Colonial government with constitution and high amount of self-government,—a government of great importance in modern history.

V. Constitutions. (To avoid too many subdivisions, this subject has been treated here separately. See II).

Constitutions, the fundamental laws on which governments rest, and which determine the relation in which the citizen stands to the government, as well as each portion of the government to the whole, and which, therefore, give feature to the political society, may be:

A. As to their origin.

- (1) Accumulative; as the constitutions of England or Republican Rome.
- (2) Enacted constitutions (generally, but not philosophically, called "written constitutions").
 - (a) Octroyed constitutions (as the French, by Louis XVIII).
 - (b) Enacted by the people, as our constitutions. ("We, the people, charter governments; formerly governments chartered the liberties of the people.")
- (3) Pacts between two parties, contracts, as Magna Charta, and most charters in the Middle Ages. The mediæval rule was that as much freedom was enjoyed as it was possible to conquer,—expugnare in the true sense.

B. As to extent or uniformity.

- (1) Broadcast over the land. We may call them national constitutions, popular constitutions, constitutions for the whole state.
- (2) Special charters. Chartered, accumulated and varying franchises, mediæval character. (See article "Constitution" in the Encyclopaedia Americana.)

VI. As to the extent and comprehension of the chief government.

A. Military governments.

- (1) Commercial government; one of the first in Asia, and that into which Asiatic society relapses, as the only remaining element, when barbarous conquerors destroy all bonds which can be torn by them.
- (2) Tribal government.
 - (a) Stationary.
 - (b) Nomadic. We mention the nomadic government under the tribal government, because no other government has been nomadic, except the patriarchal government, which indeed is the incipency of the tribal government.
- (3) City government; that is, city states; as all free states of antiquity, and as the Hanseatic governments in modern times.
- (4) Government of the Mediæval Orders extending over portions of societies far apart; as the Templars, Teutonic Knights, Knights of St. John. Political societies without necessary territory, although they had always landed property.

- (5) National states; that is, populous political societies spreading over an extensive and cohesive territory beyond the limits of a city.
- B. Confederacies.
- (1) As to admission of members, or extension.
- (a) Closed, as the Amphictyonic council, Germany.
- (b) Open, as ours.
- (2) As to the federal character, or the character of the members, as states.
- (a) Leagues.
- (aa) Tribal confederacies; frequently observed in Asia; generally of a loose character.
- (bb) City leagues, as the Hanseatic League, the Lombard League.
- (cc) Congress of deputies, voting by states and according to instruction; as the Netherlands republic and our Articles of Confederation, Germanic Confederation.
- (dd) Present "state system of Europe" (with constant congresses, if we may call this "system," a federative government in its incipency).
- (b) Confederacies proper, with national congress.
- (aa) With ecclesiae or democratic congress (Achaean League).
- (bb) With representative national congress, as ours.
- C. Mere agglomerations of one ruler.
- (1) As the early Asiatic monarchies, or Turkey.
- (2) Several crowns in one head; as Austria, Sweden, Denmark.
- VII. As to the construction of society, the title of property and allegiance.
- A. As to the classes of society.
- (1) Castes, hereditarily dividing the whole population, according to occupations and privileges. India, ancient Egypt.
- (2) Special castes.
- (a) Government with privileged classes or caste; nobility.
- (b) Government with degraded or oppressed caste; slavery.
- (c) Governments founded on equality of citizens (the uniform tendency of modern civilization).
- B. As to property and production.
- (1) Communism.
- (2) Individualism.
- C. As to allegiance.
- (1) Plain, direct; as in unitary governments.
- (2) Varied; as in national confederacies.
- (3) Graduated or encapsulated; as in the feudal system, or as is the case with the serf.
- D. Governments are occasionally called according to the prevailing interests or classes; as
- Military states; for instance, Prussia under Frederick II.
- Maritime state.
- Commercial.
- Agricultural.
- Manufacturing.
- Ecclesiastical, etc.
- VIII. According to simplicity or complexity, as in all other spheres, we have—
- A. Simple governments (formerly called "pure"; as "pure democracy").
- B. Complex governments, formerly called "mixed."
- GRACE. Favor or indulgence, as distinguished from right.
- GRACE, DAYS OF. See "Days of Grace."
- GRADATIM (Lat.) In old English law. By degrees or steps; step by step; from one degree to another. Bracton, fol. 64.
- GRADUS (Lat. a step). A measure of space. Vicat. A degree of relationship (distantia cognatorum). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 153; Bracton, fols. 134, 374; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1; Id. lib. 4, c. 17, § 4.
- A step or degree generally; e. g., gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat. A pulpit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.
- A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.
- GRADUS PARENTELAE. A pedigree; a table of relationship.
- GRAFFER, or GRAFFARIUS. In old English law. A graffer, notary, or scrivener. St. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.
- GRAFFIUM. A register; a leger book or cartulary of deeds and evidences.
- GRAFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. 1 Mart. Anec. Collect. 13. A fiscal judge; an advocate. Du Cange; Spelman; Cowell. For various derivations, see Du Cange.
- GRAFT. In equity. A term used to designate the right of a mortgagee in premises to which the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage had an imperfect title, but who afterwards obtained a good title. In this case the new mortgage is considered a graft into the old stock, and as arising in consideration of the former title. 1 Ball & B. 40, 46, 57; 1 Powell, Mortg. 190. See 9 Mass. 34. The same principle has obtained by legislative enactment in Louisiana. If a person contracting an obligation towards another, says the Civil Code (article 2371), grants a mortgage on property of which he is not then the owner, this mortgage shall be valid if the debtor should ever acquire the ownership of the property, by whatever right.

GRAIN. The twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight.

For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are constructed in decimal progression, from ten thousand grains to one hundredth of a grain.

Wheat, rye, barley, or other corn sown in the ground. In Pennsylvania, a tenant for a certain term is entitled to the away-going crop. 2 Bin. (Pa.) 487; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 258, 289; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 14. See "Away-Going Crop."

GRAINAGE. In English law. The name of an ancient duty collected in London, consisting of one-twentieth part of the salt imported into that city.

GRAMMATICA FALSA NON VITIAT chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a deed. 9 Coke, 48.

GRAMMATOPHYLACIUM (Graeco-Lat.) In the civil law. A place for keeping writings or records. Dig. 48. 19. 9. 6.

GRAMME. A French weight. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at the temperature of zero. It is equal to 15.4441 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

GRANATARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An officer having charge of a granary. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1; Id. c. 84.

GRAND ASSIZE. An extraordinary trial by jury, instituted by Henry II., by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous custom of trial by battel. For this purpose, a writ de magna assiza eliganda was directed to the sheriff to return four knights, who were to choose twelve other knights to be joined with themselves; and these sixteen formed the grand assize, or great jury, to try the right between the parties. 3 Bl. Comm. 351.

GRAND BILL OF SALE. In English law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. See "Bill of Sale"; 7 Mart. (La.) 318.

GRAND CAPE. In English law. A writ judicial which lieth when a man has brought a praecipe quod reddat, of a thing that toucheth plea of lands, and the tenant makes default on the day given him in the writ original, then this writ shall go for the king, to take the land into the king's hands, and, if he comes not at the day given him by the grand cape, he has lost his lands. Old Nat. Brev. fols. 161, 162; Reg. Jud. fol. 2b; Bracton, lib. 5, tr. 3, c. 1, Nos. 4, 5, 6. So called because its Latin form began with the word cape, "take thou," and because it had more words than the petit cape, or because petit cape summons to answer for default only. Petit cape issues after appearance to the original writ, grand cape before.

GRAND COUTUMIER. Two collections of laws bore this title. One, also called the "Coutumier of France," is a collection of the customs, usages, and forms of practice which had been used from time immemorial in France; the other, called the "Coutumier de Normandie" (which, indeed, with some alterations, made a part of the former), was composed about the fourteenth of Henry III., A. D. 1229, and is a collection of the Norman laws, not as they stood at the conquest of England by William the Conqueror, but some time afterwards, and contains many provisions probably borrowed from the old English or Saxon laws. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 6.

GRAND DAYS. In English practice. Those days in the term which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz., Candlemas Day in Hilary term, Ascension Day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist's Day in Trinity term, and All Saints' Day in Michaelmas term, which are dies nonjuridici, or no days in court, and are set apart for festivity. Jacob.

GRAND DISTRESS. In English practice. A process which formerly issued where the defendant, after being attached, neglected to appear; its object being to compel an appearance by distraining his goods (3 Bl. Comm. 280). It is called "grand" from its extent and stringency. Blount.

GRAND JURY. In practice. A body of men, consisting of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-four, respectively returned by the sheriff of every county to every session of the peace, oyer and terminer, and general gaol delivery, to whom indictments are preferred. 4 Bl. Comm. 302; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 310, 311.

There is reason to believe that this institution existed among the Saxons. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 35. By the constitutions of Clarendon, enacted 10 Hen. II. (A. D. 1164), it is provided that, "if such men were suspected whom none wished or dared to accuse, the sheriff, being thereto required by the bishop, should swear twelve men of the neighborhood, or village, to declare the truth" respecting such supposed crime, the jurors being summoned as witnesses or accusers, rather than judges. It seems to be pretty certain that this statute either established grand juries, if this institution did not exist before, or recognized them if they already existed. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 63.

GRAND LARCENY.

—At Common Law. Simple larceny was divided into grand and petit. The former was committed by the stealing of property exceeding twelve pence in value; the latter, when the property was of the value of twelve pence or under. This distinction was not abolished till the reign of George IV. Grand larceny was a capital offense, but clergyable unless attended with certain aggravations. Petit larceny was punishable with whipping, "or some such corporal punishment less than death"; and, being a felony, it was subject to forfeiture, whether upon conviction or flight.

—In the United States. The distinction between grand and petit larceny is generally preserved; the amount necessary to be stolen to constitute grand larceny being ordinarily about twenty dollars. Grand larceny is a felony, and petit larceny a misdemeanor.

GRAND SERJEANTY. In English law. A species of tenure in capite, by certain personal and honorable services to the king, called "grand" in respect of the honor of so serving the king. Instances of such services are, the carrying of the king's banner, performing some service at his coronation, etc. The honorable parts of this tenure were retained, and its oppressive incidents swept away, by St. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 73; 1 Steph. Comm. 198.

GRANDCHILDREN. The children of one's children. Sometimes these may claim bequests given in a will to children, though, in general, they can make no such claim. 6 Coke, 16. See "Child"; "Construction."

GRANGE. A barn or granary; other out-buildings used in husbandry.

GRANGIARIUS, or GRANGIARIUS. A grange keeper.

GRANT.

—At Common Law. A transfer by deed of that which cannot pass by livery. Williams, Real Prop. 149.

A grant was proper to transfer an incorporeal hereditament or a reversion or vested remainder in land, but in England, before 1845, a grant was not effectual to transfer an estate in fee in land in possession. 7 W. Va. 235.

A grant is now sufficient to convey any estate. 12 Minn. 468.

—In Modern Law. A general term, including all sorts of conveyances. 4 Mason (U. S.) 69.

The term is properly applicable only to realty (1 Mont. 410), but it has been applied to personalty. 12 Minn. 468.

It is particularly applied to conveyances by the government, whether of lands or of incorporeal hereditaments, as franchises.

By the word "grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 410. See 9 Adol. & E. 532; 5 Mass. 472; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 80.

"Office grant" applies to conveyances made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title.

"Private grant" is a grant by the deed of a private person.

"Public grant" is the mode and act of creating a title in an individual to lands which had previously belonged to the government.

The public lands of the United States, and of the various states, have been to a great extent conveyed by deeds or patents issued in virtue of general laws; but many specific grants have also been made, and are the usual method of transfer during the colonial period. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. 517-536; 4 Kent, Comm. 450, 494; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 548; 16 Pet. (U. S.) 367; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, "Lands"; "Patent."

Among the modes of conveyance included under office grant are levies and sales to satisfy execution creditors, sales by order or decree of a court of chancery, sales by order or license of court, sales for nonpayment of taxes, and the like. See Blackw. Tax Titles, passim; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 536-549.

With regard to private grants, see "Deed."

GRANT, BARGAIN, AND SELL. Words used in instruments of conveyance of real estate. See "Construction"; 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 463; 32 Me. 329; 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 30; 1 Conn. 79; 5 Tenn. 124; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 95; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 109; 1 Mo. 576; 1 Murph. (N. C.) 343.

GRANT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. A method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift by being always founded on some consideration or equivalent. 2 Bl. Comm. 440, 441. Its proper legal designation is an "assignment," or "bargain and sale." 2 Steph. Comm. 102.

GRANT TO USES. This is common grant, with uses superadded, and has become the favorite mode of transferring realty. Wharton.

GRANTEE. He to whom a grant is made.

GRANTOR. He by whom a grant is made.

GRANTZ. In old English law. Noblemen.

GRASSHEARTH. In old English law. The name of an ancient customary service of tenants' doing one day's work for their landlord.

GRASSON. In feudal law. A fine paid on transfer of a copyhold.

GRATIFICATION. A reward given voluntarily for some service or benefit rendered, without being requested so to do, either expressly or by implication.

GRATIS (Lat.) Without reward or consideration.

GRATIS DICTUM (Lat.) A saying not required; a statement voluntarily made without necessity.

GRATUITOUS. Without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance.

—In Old English Law. Voluntary; without force, fear, or favor. Bracton, fols. 11, 17.

GRATUITOUS CONTRACT. In civil law. One the object of which is for the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit, received or promised, as a consideration for it; as, for example, a gift. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 709.

GRAVA. In old deeds, a little wood. In old English law, a grove; a small wood; a coppice or thicket. A thick wood of high trees. Co. Litt. 4b. Cowell; Blount; Spelman.

GRAVAMEN (Lat.) The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of the action. See Greenl. Ev. § 66.

GRAVATIO (Lat.) An accusation.

GRAVIS (Lat.) Grievous; great. Ad grave damnum, to the grievous damage. 11 Coke, 40.

GRAVIUS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A grave; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "gravo," and used in combination with various other words, as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc. Spelman, voc. "Grafo."

GRAVIUS EST DIVINAM QUAM TEMPORALEM LAEDERE MAJESTATEM. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty. 11 Coke, 29.

GRAY'S INN. An inn of court. See "Inns of Court."

GREAT CATTLE. In English law. All manner of beasts, except sheep and yearlings. 2 Rolle, 173.

GREAT CHARTER. See "Magna Charta."

GREAT LAW. The name of an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, passed at Chester immediately after the arrival of William Penn, December 7, 1682. Sergeant, Land Laws Pa. 24, 230.

GREAT SEAL. By act of union (article 24) it was provided that there should be one great seal for the United Kingdom, to be used in sealing writs, to summon parliament, foreign treaties, etc., in all public acts which concern the United Kingdom, and all acts which concern England, and that a seal should be kept in Scotland, to be used in all things relating to private rights or grants which had theretofore passed the Great Seal of Scotland. Wharton.

GREAT TITHES. In ecclesiastical law. The more valuable tithes; as, corn, hay, and wood. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 680, 681; 3 Steph. Comm. 127.

GREE. Satisfaction for an offense committed, or injury done. Cowell.

GREEK. An important language in law, being the language of a large portion of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

The Novels of Justinian and his successors are, almost without exception, written in Greek; several of the constitutions in the Code are in the same language; and extracts from Greek writers, with numerous detached words and phrases, are scattered through the Pandects.

This Greek of the civil law, however, is, to a great extent, a corrupt and barbarous dialect, resembling in its uncouth combinations those varieties of the Latin and French, known as Law Latin and Law French, which were for so long a period the languages of the law and practice of England, and obviously framed on the same principles. Its peculiarities are (1) the conversion of Latin words into Greek, by simply writing them in Greek letters; (2) the mixture of Latin and Greek words together; and (3) the formation of new words by giving to Latin words Greek terminations.

GREEN CLOTH. An English board or court of justice, composed of the lord steward and inferior officers, and held in the royal household. So named from the cloth upon the board at which it is held.

GREEN GOODS. A slang term for counterfeit money. Usually used in connection with a swindle whereby, under a pretense of selling counterfeit money, some worthless substance is palmed off on the buyer. See 79 Hun (N. Y.) 310; 51 Hun (N. Y.) 624.

GREEN SILVER. A feudal custom in the manor of Writtel, in Essex, where every tenant whose front door opens to Greenbury shall pay a half-penny yearly to the lord, by the name of "green silver" or "rent." Cowell.

GREEN WAX. In English law. The name of the estreats of fines, issues and amercedments in the exchequer, delivered to the sheriff under the seal of that court, which is made with green wax.

GREENBACKS. The term greenback is the popular and almost exclusive name applied to all United States treasury issues, and is not applied to any other species of paper currency. 23 Ind. 23.

GREEVE, GREF. (Law Fr.) Grievous; severe.

GREGORIAN EPOCH. The time from which the Gregorian calendar or computation dates, i. e., from the year 1582.

GREMIO. In Spanish law. The union of merchants, artisans, laborers, or other persons who follow the same pursuits, and are governed by the same regulations. The word "guild," in English, has nearly the same signification.

GREMIUM (Lat.) Bosom. Ainsworth. De gremio mittere, to send from their bosom; used of one sent by an ecclesiastical corporation or body. A latere mittere, to send from his side, or one sent by an individual; as, a legate sent by the pope. Du Cange. In English law, an inheritance is said to be in gremio legis, in the bosom or under the protection of the law, when it is in abeyance. See "In Nubibus."

GRESSUME, GRESSAME, GRESSUM, or grossome (Scotch, grassum). In old English law. A fine due from a copyholder on the death of his lord. Plowd. fols. 271, 285; 1 Strange, 654. Cowell derives it from gersum.

GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGE. A marriage celebrated at Gretna, in Dumfries (bordering on the county of Cumberland), in Scotland. By the law of Scotland, a valid marriage may be contracted by consent alone, without any other formality. When the marriage act (26 Geo. II. c. 33) rendered the publication of banns, or a license, necessary in England, it became usual for persons who wished to marry clandestinely to go to Gretna Green, the nearest part of Scotland, and marry according to the Scotch law; so a sort of chapel was built at Gretna Green, in which the English marriage service was performed by the village blacksmith. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, § 1, now requires twenty-one days previous residence in Scotland, unless one of the parties has a usual place of residence therein. Wharton.

GREVA. (L. Lat.) In old records. The sea-shore, sand or beach. 2 Mon. Angl. 625. Cowell.

GREVE, Gereve. Sax. The contracted form of gerefa or grefa, used in the time of Edward the Confessor, to denote a chief magistrate or lord. Spelman.

GREVEMENT. (Law Fr.) Grievously; heavily, or severely.

GREVER. (Law Fr.) To hurt or harm. Britt. c. 22.

To prejudice or injure. Id. cc. 28, 39.

GRIEVED. Aggrieved. 3 East, 22.

GRIST. Grain carried to the mill to be ground separately for the owner; grain carried to the mill for grinding at one time. 119 Ill. App. 44.

GRITH (Saxon). Peace.

GRITHBRECH (Saxon, grith, peace, and brych, breaking). Breach of the king's peace, as opposed to frithbrech, a breach of the nation's peace with other nations. Leg. Hen. I. c. 36; Chart. Wilhelm, Conq. Eccl. St. Pauli in Hist. ejusd. fol. 90.

GRITHSTOLE (Saxon). In Saxon law. A seat, chair, or place of peace; a sanctuary; a stone within a church gate, to which an offender might flee. Skene writes the word "girtholl."

GROCER. In old English law. A merchant or trader who engrossed all vendible merchandise; an engrosser. St. 37 Edw. III. c. 5. See "Engrosser."

GROSS. Great or large; whole or entire; amount; the sum total; without deduction of any kind. 246 Ill. 209.

GROSS ADVENTURE. In maritime law. A maritime or bottomry loan. It is so called because the lender exposes his money to the perils of the sea, and contributes to the gross or general average. Poth.; Pardessus.

GROSS AVERAGE. In maritime law. That kind of average which falls on the ship, cargo, and freight, and is distinguished from "particular average." See "Average."

GROSS NEGLIGENCE. The omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property. Jones, Bailm.

The want of slight diligence. 103 Ill. 523.

Lata culpa, or, as the Roman lawyers most accurately called it, dolo proxima, is, in practice, considered as equivalent to dolus, or fraud itself. It must not be confounded, however, with fraud; for it may exist consistently with good faith and honesty of intention, according to common-law authorities.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSE BOIS. Great or large wood; timber. Cowell.

GROSSEMENT (Law Fr.) Largely; greatly. Grossement enseint, big with child. Plowd. 76.

GROSSOME. See "Grossome."

GROUND ANNUAL. In Scotch law. An annual rent of two kinds: First, the feu-duties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 11. 8. 52.

GROUND LANDLORD. The person to whom ground rent is reserved.

GROUND RENT. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's land. Johnson; Webster. A rent reserved by the owner of unimproved land upon a lease of the land to be built upon, as contradistinguished from the rent paid to the lessee by his tenant of the premises where the buildings are erected, and from the ordinary rent paid by the tenant to his landlord upon a demise of lands and tenements.

A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee simple, out of the land conveyed. See 9 Watts (Pa.) 262; 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 185; 2 Am. Law Reg. 577.

GROUND WRIT. By the English common-law procedure act of 1852 (chapter 121), "it shall not be necessary to issue any writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, but writs of execution may issue at once into any county, and be directed to and executed by the sheriff of any county, whether a county palatine or not, without reference to the county in which the venue is laid, and without any suggestion of the issuing of a prior writ into such county." Before this enactment, a ca. sa. or fi. fa. could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ, called a "ground writ," into the latter county, and then another writ, which was called a "testatum writ," into the former. The above enactment abolished this useless process. Wharton.

GROUNDAGE. In maritime law. The consideration paid for standing a ship in a port. Jacob.

GROWTH HALF-PENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Rapalje & L.

GRUARII. The principal officers of a forest. Rapalje & L.

GUADIA, or WADIA. In old European law. A pledge. Spelman; Calv. Lex. A custom. Spelman.

GUARANTEE. He to whom a guaranty is made.

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty.

GUARANTY. An undertaking to answer for another's liability, and collateral thereto. A collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it. Shaw, C. J., 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252. 194 Ill. App. 514.

It is distinguished from suretyship in being a secondary, while that is a primary, obligation; or, as sometimes defined, guaranty is an undertaking that the debtor shall pay; suretyship, that the debt shall be paid.

The undertaking is essentially in the alternative. A guarantor cannot be sued as a promisor, as the surety may; his contract must be specially set forth. A guarantor warrants the solvency of the promisor, which an indorser does not. 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

Guaranty, as distinguished from "suretyship," is an independent contract, while the surety is bound jointly with his principal. "A contract of suretyship is a direct liability for the act to be performed by the debtor, and a guaranty is a liability only for his ability to perform the act." 52 Pa. St. 440.

As distinguished from "indemnity," in that a principal obligation is essential to guaranty, while indemnity may be a primary contract.

Guaranties are either:

- (1) General, running to any person dealing with the principal.
- (2) Special, to a particular person.
- (3) Limited, i. e., covering only a particular transaction.
- (4) Continuing, applicable to a class of future transactions.
- (5) Absolute, conditioned only on the default of the principal.
- (6) Conditional, dependent on some extraneous condition.

GUARANTY INSURANCE. A guaranty or insurance against loss in case a person named shall make a designated default, or be guilty of specified conduct. 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 65, quoted in 174 Ill. 310.

GUARDIAN. One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

A person having the control of the property of a minor without that of his person is known in the civil law, as well as in some of the states of the United States, by the name of "curator." 1 Lec. Elm. 241; Rev. St. Mo. 1855, p. 823.

Guardians are also sometimes appointed of idiots, spendthrifts, etc.

The general classes of guardians are:

- (1) Guardian by chancery. This guardianship, although unknown at the common law, is well established in practice now. It grew up in the time of William III., and had its foundation in the royal prerogative of the king as parens patrias. 2 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 246.

This power the sovereign is presumed to have delegated to the chancellor. 10 Ves. 63; 2 P. Wms. 118; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 317.

By virtue of it, the chancellor appoints a guardian where there is none, and exercises a superintending control over all guardians, however appointed, removing them for misconduct, and appointing others in their stead. Co. Litt. 89; 2 Bulst. 679; 1 P. Wms. 703; 8 Mod. 214; 1 Ves. Jr. 160; 2 Kent, Comm. 227.

This power, in the United States, resides in courts of equity (1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 99; 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 439), and in probate or surrogate courts (2 Kent, Comm. 226; 30 Miss. 458; 3 Bradf. Sur. [N. Y.] 133).

(2) Guardian by nature. The father, and, on his death, the mother. 2 Kent, Comm. 220; 2 Root (Conn.) 320; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 36; 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 158; 4 Mass. 675.

(3) Guardian by nurture. This guardianship belonged to the father, then to the mother. The subject of it extended to the younger children, not the heirs apparent. In this country it does not exist, or, rather, it is merged in the higher and more durable guardianship by nature, because all the children are heirs, and, therefore, the subject of that guardianship. 2 Kent, Comm. 221; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 315; 6 Ga. 401. It extended to the person only (6 Conn. 494; 40 Eng. Law & Eq. 109), and terminated at the age of fourteen (1 Bl. Comm. 461).

(4) Guardian in socage. This guardianship arose when socage lands descended to an infant under fourteen years of age; at which period it ceased if another guardian was appointed, otherwise it continued. And. 313; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66.

The person entitled to it by common law was the next of kin, who could not by any possibility inherit the estate. 1 Bl. Comm. 461. Although formerly recognized in New York, it was never common in the United States (5 Johns. [N. Y.] 66; 7 Johns. [N. Y.] 157), because, by the statute of descents generally in force in this country, those who are next of kin may eventually inherit. Wherever it has been recognized, it has been in a form differing materially from its character at common law. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631.

(5) Guardians by statute. These are of two kinds: First, testamentary; second, those appointed by court in pursuance of some statute.

(6) Testamentary guardians. These are appointed by the deed or last will of the father, and they supersede the claims of all other guardians, and have control of the person and the real and personal estate of the child till he arrives at full age.

(7) Guardians appointed by court. The greater number of guardians among us, by far, are those appointed by court, in conformity with statutes which regulate their powers and duties. In the absence of special provisions, their rights and duties are governed by the general law on the subject of guardian and ward.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM. A guardian appointed for the purposes of a suit.

The appointment of such is incident to the power of every court to try a case (2 Cow. [N. Y.] 430), and the power is then confined to the particular case at bar (Co. Litt. 89, note 16). His duty is to manage the interest of the infant when sued, or to bring suit for him. In criminal cases, no guardian is appointed; the court acts as guardian. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 318.

GUARDIAN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See "Warden of the Cinque Ports."

GUARDIAN OF THE PEACE. A warden or conservator of the peace. Rapalje & L.

GUARDIAN OF THE POOR. In English law. A person acting as overseer of a parish in matters relating to the management and relief of the poor.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES. In English ecclesiastical law. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of a diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see. Cowell; Blount.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the king, who, as steward of the goods and profits thereof, was to give an account to the escheator, and he into the exchequer. Tomlins.

GUARDIANSHIP. The power of protective authority given by law, and imposed on an individual who is free and in the enjoyment of his rights, over one whose weakness on account of his age or infirmity renders him unable to protect himself.

GUARDIANUS, or GARDIANUS. A guardian, warden, or keeper. Spelman; 3 Salk. 176.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish law. A term applicable to the contract or writing by which courts of justice are empowered to execute and carry into effect a contract in the same manner as if it were decreed by the court after the usual legal formalities. This clause, though formerly inserted in contracts of sale, etc., stipulating the payment of a sum of money, is at present usually omitted, as courts of justice ordinarily compel the parties to execute all contracts made by authentic acts, that is, acts passed before a notary, in the presence of two witnesses.

GUARNIMENTUM (Law Lat. from Fr. garnement). In old European law. A provision of necessary things. Spelman. A furnishing or garnishment.

GUASTALD. One who had the custody of the royal mansions. Rapalje & L.

GUBERNATOR (Lat.) A pilot of a ship.

GUERPI, or GUERPY (Law Fr.) Abandoned; left; deserted. Britt. c. 33.

GUERRA, GUARRA, or GUERRE. War, either public or private. Spelman.

GUERRILLA PARTY (Span. guerra, war; guerrilla, a little war). In military law. Self-constituted sets of armed men, in times of war, who form no integrant part of the organized army, do not stand on the regular payroll of the army, or are not paid at all, take up arms and lay them down at intervals, and carry on petty war, chiefly by raids, extortion, destruction, and massacre. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 18. See Halleck, Int. Law, 386; Woolsey, Int. Law, 299.

Partisan, free-corps, and guerrilla are terms resembling each other considerably in signification; and, indeed, partisan and guerrilla are frequently used in the same sense. See Halleck, Int. Law, 386.

GUEST. A traveler who stays at an inn from day to day, for pay, and without a special contract to board for any definite time.

If he is invited as a friend by the inn keeper, he is not a "guest" in the technical sense (Bac. Abr. "Inns," c. 5), and, if he stays under a contract for a definite time, he is not a guest, but a boarder (5 Barb. [N. Y.] 560; 26 Ala. [N. S.] 377; 26 Vt. 332).

The distinction between a guest and a boarder seems to be this: The guest comes without any bargain for time, remains without one, and may go when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment which he receives; and it is not enough to make a boarder, and not a guest, that he has stayed a long time in the inn in this way. 25 Ia. 555.

GUEST TAKER, or GEST TAKER. An gister.

GUET. In old French law. Watch. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 6.

GUIA. In Spanish law. A right of way for narrow carts. White, New Recop. lib. 2, c. 6, § 1.

GUIDAGE. In old law. That which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another's territory. Cowell.

The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, written in Rouen—then Normandy—in 1671, as is supposed. It was received on the continent of Europe almost as equal in authority to one of the ancient codes of maritime law. The author of this work is unknown. This tract or treatise is contained in the "Collection de Lois Maritimes," by J. M. Pardessus, vol. 2, p. 371 et seq.

GUILD, or GILD. A brotherhood or company governed by certain rules and orders made among themselves by king's license; a corporation, especially for purposes of commerce; so called because, on entering the guild, the members pay an assessment, or tax (gild) towards defraying its charges. Termes de la Ley; Du Cange. A guild held generally more or less property in common,—often a hall, called a "guild hall," for the purposes of the association. The name of "guild" was not, however, confined to mercantile companies, but was applied also to religious, municipal, and other corporations. A friborg, that is, among the Saxons, ten families' mutual pledges for each other to the king. Spelman.

GUILD HALL. (Law Lat. gildhalla, variously spelled ghildhalla, guihalla, guihaula; from Saxon gild, payment, company, and halla, hall). A place in which are exposed goods for sale. Charter of Count of Flanders; Hist. Guinensi, 202, 203; Du Cange. The hall of a guild or corporation; Du Cange; Spelman. The hall of the merchants of the Hanseatic League in London, otherwise called the "Stilyard." Id.

GUILT. In criminal law. That which renders criminal and liable to punishment.

That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Rutherford, Inst. bk. 1, c. 18, § 10.

GUILTY. The state or condition of a person who has committed a crime, misdemeanor, or offense.

This word implies a malicious intent, and must be applied to something universally allowed to be a crime. Cowp. 275.

—In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant who is charged with a crime, misdemeanor, or tort admits or confesses it. In criminal proceedings, when the accused is arraigned, the clerk asks him, "How say you, A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is given ore tenus, is called his "plea"; and when he admits the charge in the indictment, he answers or pleads "guilty."

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, the same as St. Peter's Day ad Vincula. Cowell.

GURGES. Gurges, a deep pit of water, a gors or gulf, consisteth of water and land; and therefore by the grant thereof by that name the soil doth pass. In Domesday it is called guort, gort, and gors plurally. Co. Litt. 5b.

GUST, GEST. (Sax.) In old English law. A guest; a person who lodged a second night with another was so called, among the ancient Saxons.

GUTI. Jutes; one of the three nations who migrated from Germany to Britain at an early period. According to Spelman, they established themselves chiefly in Kent and the Isle of Wight.

GWABR MERCHED. Maid's fee. A British word signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of tenant's daughter, or otherwise on her incontinence. Cowell, "Marchet."

GWALSTOW (Saxon). A place of execution. Spelman.

GWAYF. Waif. Par. Ant. p. 196; Cowell.

GYLPUT. In old law. The name of a local court of the hundred of Pathbew, in Warwickshire.

GYLTWITE (Saxon). Compensation for fraud or trespass. Grant of King Edgar, A. D. 964; Cowell.

GYNARCHY. A government in which a woman holds, or is capable of holding, the position or chief executive.

GYVES. Fetters or shackles for the legs.

H

H is sometimes used in some Law Latin words in which it is more generally and properly omitted; thus, Ostium is sometimes written Hostium; Coercio, Cohertio; Abundanti, Habundanti; and the like. So, on the other hand, it is sometimes omitted where it should properly be used; thus, Hutesium occurs occasionally in the form Utesium, Hypotheca as Ypotheca, Horreum as Orreum, Hordeum as Ordeum, and the like.

HABE, or HAVE (Lat.) A form of the salutatory expression Ave (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. Prateus; Calv. Lex.; Spelman.

HABEAS CORPORA (Lat. that you have the bodies). In English practice. A writ issued out of the common pleas, commanding the sheriff to compel the appearance of a jury in a cause between the parties. It answered the same purpose as a distingas juratores in the king's bench. It is abolished by the common-law procedure act.

HABEAS CORPUS (Lat. that you have the body). A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner at a certain time and place, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the court or judge awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf.

This is the most famous writ in the law; and, having for many centuries been employed to remove illegal restraint upon personal liberty, no matter by what power imposed, it is often called the great "writ of liberty." It takes its name from the characteristic words it contained when the process and records of the English courts were written in Latin:

Praecipimus tibi quod corpus A B in custodia vestra detentum, ut dicitur. una cum causa captionis et detentionis suae, quocumque nomine idem A B censeatur in eadem habeas coram nobis apud Westm. etc., ad subjiciendum et recipiendum ea, quae curia nostra de eo ad tunc et ibidem ordinari contigerit in hac parte, etc.

There were several other writs which contained the words habeas corpus; but they were distinguished from this and from one another by the specific terms declaring the object of the writ, which terms are still retained in the nomenclature of writs, as, habeas corpus ad respondendum, ad testificandum, ad satisfaciendum, ad prosequendum, and ad faciendum et recipiendum, ad delibendum et recipiendum.

This writ was in like manner designated as habeas corpus ad subjiciendum et recipi- endum; but, having acquired in public esteem a marked importance by reason of the nobler uses to which it has been devoted, it has so far appropriated the generic term to itself that it is now, by way of eminence, commonly called the "Writ of Habeas Corpus."

The date of its origin cannot now be ascertained. Traces of its existence are found in Y. B. 48 Edw. III. 22; and it appears to have been familiar to, and well understood by, the judges in the reign of Henry VI. In its early history it appears to have been used as a means of relief from private restraint. The earliest precedents where it was used against the crown are in the reign of Henry VII. Afterwards the use of it became more frequent, and in the time of Charles I. it was held an admitted constitutional remedy. Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 145.

In process of time, abuses crept into the practice, which in some measure impaired the usefulness of the writ. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and third were issued before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain state prisoners in custody. 3 Bl. Comm. 135.

Greater promptitude in its execution was required to render the writ efficacious. The subject was accordingly brought forward in parliament in 1668, and renewed from time to time until 1679, when the celebrated habeas corpus act of 31 Car. II. was passed. The passage of this act has been made the theme of the highest praise and congratulation by British authors, and is even said to have "extinguished all the resources of oppression." Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 93.

This act being limited to cases of commitments for "criminal or supposed criminal matters," every other species of restraint of personal liberty was left to the ordinary remedy at common law; but, doubts being entertained as to the extent of the jurisdiction of the judge to inquire into the truth of the return to the writ in such cases, an attempt was made, in 1757, in the house of lords, to render the jurisdiction more remedial. It was opposed by Lord Mansfield as unnecessary, and failed, for the time, of success. It was subsequently renewed, however; and the act of 56 Geo. III. c. 100, supplies, in England, all the needed legislation in cases not embraced by the act of 31 Car. II. Hurd, Habeas Corpus.

The English colonists in America regarded the privilege of the writ as one of the "dearest birthrights of Britons," and sufficient indications exist that it was frequently resorted to. The denial of it in Massachusetts by Judge Dudley in 1689 to Rev. John Wise, imprisoned for resisting the collection of an oppressive and illegal tax, was made the subject of a civil action against the judge, and was, moreover, denounced, as one of the grievances of the people, in a pamphlet published in 1689 on the authority of "the gentlemen, merchants, and inhabitants of Boston and the country adjacent." In New York, in 1707, it served to effect the release of the Presbyterian ministers Makemie and Hampton from an illegal warrant of arrest issued by the governor, Cornbury, for preaching the gospel without license. In New Jersey, in 1710, the assembly denounced one of the judges for refusing the writ to Thomas Gordon, which, they said, was the "undoubted right and great privilege of the subject." In South Carolina, in 1692, the assembly adopted the act of 31 Car. II. This act was extended to Virginia by Queen Anne early in her reign, while in the assembly of Maryland in 1725 the benefit of its provisions was claimed, independent of royal favor, as the "birthright of the inhabitants." The refusal of parliament in 1774 to extend the law of habeas corpus to Canada was denounced by the continental congress in September of that year as oppressive, and was subsequently recounted in the Declaration of Independence as one of the manifestations on the part of the British government of tyranny over the colonies. Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 109-120.

It is provided in article 1, § 9, subd. 2, of the constitution of the United States that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it."

Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of most of the states. In Virginia and Vermont, however, it is forbidden to suspend the privilege of the writ in any case; but in the constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and South Carolina the writ is not mentioned.

Congress, by act of March 3, 1863, authorized the president to suspend the privilege of the writ throughout the whole or any part of the United States, whenever in his judgment the public safety might require it, during the Rebellion. A partial suspension took place.

Nor has the power of suspension ever been exercised by the legislature of any of the states, except that of Massachusetts, which, on the occasion of "Shay's Rebellion," suspended the privilege of the writ from November, 1786, to July, 1787.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT. The statute of 31 Chas. II. c. 2. 3 Bl. Comm. 135; 3 Steph. Comm. 699. This statute has been adopted in substance in the United States. 2 Kent, Comm. 27.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM et recipiendum (Lat.) A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus" (A); 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 132; Grady & S. Cr. Prac. 201. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county. 1 Tyrwh. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET recipiendum (Lat.) A writ usually issued in civil cases to remove an action from an inferior court, where the defendant is sued and imprisoned, to some superior court which has jurisdiction over the matter, in order that the cause may be determined there. This writ is commonly called habeas corpus cum causa, because it commands the judges of the inferior court to return the day and cause of the caption and detainer of the prisoner. Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus" (A); Bagl. Cham. Prac. 297; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; Tidd, Prac. 296.

This writ may also be issued at the instance of the bail of the defendant, to bring him up to be surrendered in their discharge, whether he is in custody in a civil suit or on a criminal accusation. Tidd, Prac. 298; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 132.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM (Lat.) A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 130.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM (Lat.) A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Sellon, Prac. 259; 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bl. Comm. 129; Tidd, Prac. 300.

This writ lies also to bring up a person in confinement to answer a criminal charge. Thus, the court issued it to the warden of the fleet, to take the body of the prisoner confined there before a magistrate, to be examined respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor. 5 Barn. & Ald. 730. But it was refused to bring up the body of a prisoner under sentence for a felony, for the purpose of having him tried for a previous felony.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM (Lat.) A writ which is issued to bring a prisoner from the prison of one court into that of another, in order to charge him in execution upon a judgment of the last court. 2 Sellon, Prac. 261; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; Tidd, Prac. 301.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM. See "Habeas Corpus."

HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM (Lat.) A writ which lies to bring up a prisoner detained in any jail or prison, to give evidence before any court of competent jurisdiction. Tidd, Prac. 739; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; 2 Sellon, Prac. 261.

The allowance of this writ resting in the discretion of the court, it will be refused if the application appear to be in bad faith, or a mere contrivance. 3 Burrows, 1440.

It was refused to bring up a prisoner of war (2 Doug. 419), or a prisoner in custody for high treason (Peake, Add. Cas. 21).

It would of course be refused where it appeared from the application that the prisoner was under sentence for crime which rendered him incompetent as a witness.

The application for the writ is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit and the materiality of the testimony, together with the general circumstances of restraint which render the writ necessary. Cowp. 672; Fost. Crim. Law, 396; 2 Cow. & H. notes to Phil. Ev. 658.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See "Habeas Corpus ad Faciendum et Recipiendum."

HABEMUS OPTIMUM TESTEM, CONFITEMENTEM REUM. We have the best witness, a confessing defendant. Fost. Crim. Law, 243. See 2 Hagg. 315; 1 Phil. Ev. 397.

HABENDUM (Lat. for having). In conveyancing. The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 642.

It commences with the words "to have and to hold." In Law French, these words are rendered "aver et tener," or "a aver et tener," and in Latin, "habendum et tenendum."

HABENDUM ET TENENDUM. In old conveyancing. To have and to hold. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period. Bracton, fol. 17b.

HABENTES HOMINES (Lat.) Rich men. Du Cange.

HABERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere (to hold), and possidere (to possess); habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both.

Habere was likewise distinguished as referring to incorporeal things, tenere to corporeal, and possidere to both. Calv. Lex.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM (Lat.) In practice. A writ of execution in the action of ejectment.

The sheriff is commanded by this writ that, without delay, he cause the plaintiff to have possession of the land in dispute which is therein described. A fi. fa. or ca. sa. for costs may be included in the writ. The duty of the sheriff in the execution and return of that part of the writ is the same as on a common fi. fa. or ca. sa. The sheriff is to execute this writ by delivering a full and actual possession of the premises to the plaintiff. For this purpose, he may break an outer or inner door of the house, and, should he be violently opposed, he may raise the posse comitatus. Watson, Sheriffs, 60, 215; 5 Coke, 91b; 1 Leon. 145; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3375.

The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fa. poss. See 10 Viner, Abr. 14; Tidd, Prac. (8th Eng. Ed.) 1081; 2 Archb. Prac. 58; 3 Bl. Comm. 412; Bing. Ex'ns, 115, 252; Bac. Abr.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM (Lat.) In practice. The name of a writ of execution, used in most real actions, by which the sheriff is directed that he cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands which he has recovered. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3374.

This writ may be taken out at any time within a year and a day after judgment. It is to be executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem, and for this purpose the officer may break open the outer door of a house to deliver seisin to the demandant. 5 Coke, 91b; Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (E); Watson, Sheriffs, 238. The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. seis. See Bing. Ex'ns, 115, 252; Bac. Abr.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM (Lat.) In practice. The name of a writ which lies when a view is to be taken of lands and tenements. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. Index, "View."

HABERE LICERE (Lat. to allow to have). In Roman law. A phrase denoting the duty of a seller to give possession.

HABERJECTS. A cloth of a mixed color, mentioned in Magna Charta, c. 26.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife. Calv. Lex.

HABILIS (Lat.) Fit; suitable. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 436. Active; useful (of a servant). Du Cange. Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Du Cange. Fixed; stable (of authority of the king.) Du Cange.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act. See 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 622; 18 Pa. St. 172; 5 Gray (Mass.) 851.

The habit of dealing has always an important bearing upon the construction of commercial contracts. A ratification will be inferred from the mere habit of dealing between the parties; as, if a broker has been accustomed to settle losses on policies in a particular manner, without any objection being made, or with the silent approbation of his principal, and he should afterwards settle other policies in the same manner, to which no objection should be made within a reasonable time, a just presumption would arise of an implied ratification; for, if the principal did not agree to such settlement, he should have declared his dissent. 2 Bouv. Inst. 1313, 1314.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of a certain thing having happened; e. g., marriage may be constituted by habit and repute. Bell, Dict.

HABITATIO. A habitation or dwelling. Towns. Pl. 116.

—In Civil Law. The right of dwelling; the right of free residence in another's house. Inst. 2. 5; Dig. 7. 8.

HABITATION.

—In Civil Law. The right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property.

It differed from a usufruct in this, that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose,—as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 184; Domat. Civ. Law, lib. 1, tit. 11, § 2, note 7.

—In Estates. A dwelling house; a home stall. 2 Bl. Comm. 4; 4 Bl. Comm. 220. See 10 Grat. (Va.) 64.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT. A name given to various statutes for the more severe punishment of repeated offenses. In England it was applied to St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99, giving power to apprehend, on suspicion, convicted persons holding a license under the penal servitude act. This statute is now repealed. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.

Also applied to statutes declaring professional criminals to be disorderly persons, and punishing them as such. Code Crim. Prac. N. Y. §§ 510-514, 899, subd. 9; Pen. Code N. Y. §§ 690-692.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to ebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. 5 Gray (Mass.) 85.

Occasional drunkenness is not enough (18 Pa. St. 172), yet daily intoxication is not required (112 Mass. 285).

HABLE. (Law Fr.) Able; competent. Dyer, 70b (Fr. ed.). In old English law. A port or harbor; a station for ships. Stat. 27 Hen. VI. c. 3.

HABUNDA. (Law Lat.) In old records. Abundance; plenty. Paroch. Ant. 548. Cowell.

HACCHE. (Sax. hæca, a hatch, or bolt). A hatch; a gate or door. Cowell.

HACHIA. (Law Lat.) In old records. A hack; a pick, or instrument for digging. Placita, 2 Edw. III. MS. Cowell.

HACIENDA. In Spanish law. A generic term, applicable to the mass of the property belonging to a state, and the administration of the same.

As a science, it is defined by Dr. Jose Can- ga Arguells, in his "Diccionario de Hacen-da," to be that part of civil economy which teaches how to aggrandize a nation by the useful employment of its wealth.

A royal estate. Newman & B.

HADBOTE. In French law. A recompense or amends made for violence offered to a person in holy orders.

HADE. (Law Lat. hada.) In old records. A piece of land; a head of land, or headland. Cowell. See Butts, Caput terræ, Caputia, Headlands; Fitzherb, Husb. § 6.

HADERUNGA. Hatred; ill will; prejudice or partiality. Spelman; Cowell.

HADGONEL. A tax or mulct. Jacob.

HAEC EST CONVENTIO (Law Lat. this is an agreement). Words with which agreements anciently commenced. Y. B. H. 6 Edw. II. 191.

HAEC EST FINALIS CONCORDIA (Law Lat. this is the final agreement). The words with which the foot of a fine commenced. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

HAEREDA. In Gothic law. A tribunal answering to the English court leet. 4 Bl. Comm. 274.

HAEREDE ABDUCTO. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person. Old Nat. Brev. 98.

HAEREDEM DEUS FACIT, NON HOMO. God, and not man, makes the heir. Bracton, 62b.

HAEREDEM EST NOMEN COLLECTIVUM. Heir is a collective name.

HAEREDES (Lat. plural of haeres). In civil law. Heirs.

HAEREDES EXTRANEI (Lat.) In civil law. Extraneous or foreign heirs; that is, those who were not children or slaves of the testator. Those only could be extraneous heirs who had a capacity of accepting the inheritance both at the time of making the will and at the death of the testator. Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.

HAEREDES NECESSARII (Lat.) In civil law. Necessary heirs. If slaves were made heirs, they had no choice, but on the death of the testator were necessarily free and his heirs. Calv. Lex.; Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 587.

HAEREDES PROXIMI (Lat.) The children or descendants of the deceased. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 110.

HAEREDES REMOTIORES (Lat.) The kinsmen other than children or descendants. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 110.

HAEREDES SUI ET NECESSARI (Lat.) In civil law. Proper and necessary heirs; heirs by relationship and necessity. The descendants of an ancestor in direct line were so called, sui denoting the relationship, and necessarii the necessity of law which made them heirs without their election, and whether the ancestor died testate or intestate. Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.; Mackeld, Civ. Law, §§ 681, 682; Hein. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 588.

HAEREDIPETA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Next heir. Laws Hen. I.; Du Cange. One who seeks to be made heir (qui cupit haereditatem).

HAEREDIPETAE SUO PROPINQUO vel extraneo periculoso sane custodi nulus committatur. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger, certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed. Co. Litt. 88b.

HAEREDITAS (Lat. from haeres).
—In Civil Law. "Nihil aliud est haereditas, quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuit." Inheritance is nothing else than succession to every right which the deceased possessed. Dig. 50. 17; Id. 50. 16; Id. 5. 2; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 605; Bracton, 62b.

—In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Mart. Anc. Collect. tit. 3, p. 269; Co. Litt. 9; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1.

HAEREDITAS, ALIA CORPORALIS, alia incorporalis; corporalis est, quae tangi potest et videri; incorporalis quae tangi non potest nec videri. An inheritance is either corporeal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen. Co. Litt. 9.

HAEREDITAS DAMNOSA. See "Damnosa Haereditas."

HAEREDITAS EST SUCCESSIO IN UNIVERSUM JUS QUOD DEFUNCTUS HABUERAT. Inheritance is the succession to every right which was possessed by the late possessor. Co. Litt. 237.

HAEREDITAS JACENS (Lat.)
—In Civil Law. A prostrate inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called as long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance, which, by a fiction of law, was said to sustain the person (sustinere personam) of the deceased, and not of the heir. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 685a. An estate with no heir or legatee to take. Code, 10. 10. 1; Bell, Dict.

—In English Law. An estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. Co. Litt. 342b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 259.

HAEREDITAS LUCTUOSA. In the civil law. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis). Code, 6. 25. 9; 4 Kent, Comm. 397.

HAEREDITAS NIHIL ALIUD EST, quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerit. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased. Dig. 50. 17. 62.

HAEREDITAS NUNQUAM ASCENDIT. The inheritance never ascends. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (2d London Ed.) 469; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 212, note; 3 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 331; 1 Steph. Comm. 378. Abrogated by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 6.

HAEREDUM APPELLATIONE VENIUNT haeredes haeredum in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity. Co. Litt. 9.

HAERES. In Roman law. One who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person, being appointed by the will of the decedent. It is to be observed that the Roman haeres had not the slightest resemblance to the English "heir." He corresponded in character and duties almost exactly with the "executor" under the English law. The institution of the haeres was the essential characteristic of a testament. If this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 632, 650.

HAERES ASTRARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An heir in actual possession.

HAERES DE FACTO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Heir from fact; that is, from the deed or act of his ancestor, without or against right. Applied to an heir whose title originated in the wrongful act of his ancestor. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law. Bracton, fol. 172.

HAERES EST ALTER IPSE, ET FILIUS est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is a part of the father.

HAERES EST AUT JURE PROPRIETATIS aut jure representationis. An heir is either by right of property or right of representation. 3 Coke, 40.

HAERES EST EADEM PERSONA CUM antecessore. The heir is the same person with the ancestor. Co. Litt. 22.

HAERES EST NOMEN COLLECTIVUM. "Heir" is a collective name or noun. 1 Vent. 215.

HAERES EST NOMEN JURIS; FILIUS est nomen naturae. "Heir" is a term of law; "son," one of nature.

HAERES EST PARS ANTECESSORIS. The heir is a part of the ancestor. Co. Litt. 22b; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 165, 167.

HAERES EX ASSE (Lat.) In civil law. An heir to the whole estate; a sole heir. Inst. 2. 23. 9.

HAERES EXTRANEUS (Lat.) In civil law. A strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juri subjecti non sunt, extranei haeredes appellantur. Inst. 2. 19. 3.

HAERES FACTUS (Lat.) In civil law. An heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Story, Conf. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224. Otherwise called "haeres ex testamento," and "haeres institutus." Inst. 2. 9. 7; Id. 2. 14.

HAERES FIDEICOMMISSARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. The person for whose benefit an estate was given to another, termed "haeres fiduciarius" (q. v.) by will. Inst. 2. 23. 6. 7. 9. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

HAERES FIDUCIARIUS. A fiduciary heir or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius." Inst. 2. 23. 1. 2. Corresponding nearly to the "trustee" of the English law. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 397.

HAERES HAEREDIS MEI EST MEUS haeres. The heir of my heir is my heir. Wharton.

HAERES LEGITIMUS (Lat.) A lawful heir. Code, 6. 58.

HAERES LEGITIMUS EST QUEM NUP-tiae demonstrant. He is the lawful heir whom the marriage demonstrates. Mirr. Just. 7; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Dig. 2. 4. 5; Co. Litt. 7b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 457. As to the application of the principle when the marriage is subsequent to the birth of the child, see 2 Clark & F. 571; 6 Bing. (N. C.) 385; 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 226, 262, note.

HAERES MINOR UNO ET VIGINTI AN-nis non respondebit, nisi in casu dotis. An heir minor, under twenty-one years of age, is not answerable, except in the matter of dower. F. Moore, 348.

HAERES NATUS (Lat.) In civil law. An heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir (haeres factus, q. v.); an heir at law, or by intestacy (ab intestato); the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy. Story, Conf. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224.

HAERES NECESSARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. A necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship. Inst. 2. 19. 1.

HAERES NON TENETUR IN ANGLIA ad debita antecessoris reddenda, nisi per antecessorem ad hoc fuerit obligatus, praeterquam debita regis tantum. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor's debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. But now, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 104, he is liable. Co. Litt. 386.

HAERES RECTUS (Lat.) In old English law. A right heir. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11.

HAERES SUUS (Lat.) In civil law. A man's own heir; a decedent's proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Inst. 3. 1. 4-5.

HAERETARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs. Cowell.

HAERETICO COMBURENDO. See "De Haeretico Comburendo."

HAFNE COURTS (hafne, Danish, a haven, or port). Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England. Spelman.

HAGA. A house. Blount.

A military inclosure. Spelman.

HAGIA, or HAIA. A hedge or inclosure. Mon. Angl. tom. 2, p. 273.

HAIEBOTE. In old English law. A permission or liberty to take thorns, etc., to make or repair hedges. Blount.

HAILL. In Scotch law. Whole; the whole. "All and hail" are common words in conveyances. 1 Bell, App. Cas. 499.

HAILWORKFOLK. Holywork. Those who formerly held lands by the service of defending or repairing a church or monument. Rapalje & L. See "Halywercfolk."

HAIMHALDARE. In old Scotch law. To seek restitution of one's own goods and gear, and bring the same home again. Skene de Verb. Sign.

HAIMSUCKEN. In Scotch law. The crime of beating or assaulting a person in his own house. Bell, Dict.

HALF-BLOOD. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have one parent only in common. By the English common law, one related to an intestate of the half-blood only could never inherit, upon the presumption that he is not of the blood of the original purchaser; but this rule has been greatly modified by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106.

In this country, the common-law principle on this subject may be considered as not in force, though in many states some distinction is still preserved between the whole and the half-blood. 4 Kent, Comm. 403, note; 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 115; 1 McCord (S. C.) 456; 31 Pa. St. 289; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 411. See "Descent."

HALF-BROTHER, or HALF-SISTER. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers.

HALF-DEFENSE. In common-law pleading. A name applied to the abbreviated form of words with which a plea is introduced.

HALF-ENDEAL. A moiety, or half of a thing. Rapalje & L.

HALF-KINEG. In Saxon law. Half-king (semi-rex). A title given to the aldermen of all England. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 28; Spelman.

HALF-PROOF. In civil law. That which is insufficient as the foundation of a sentence or decree, although in itself entitled to some credit. Vicat, "Probatio."

HALF-SEAL. A seal used in the English chancery for the sealing of commissions to delegates appointed upon any appeal, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes.

HALF-TIMER. A child who, by the operation of the English factory and education acts, is employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he may attend some "recognized efficient school." See Factory and Workshop Act 1878, § 23; Elementary Education Act 1876, § 11. Wharton.

HALF-TONGUE. A jury, half of one tongue or nationality, and half of another. Vide "De Medietate Linguae," Jacob.

HALF-YEAR. In the computation of time, a half-year is not the same as six months, but "'Half a year' containeth one hundred and eighty-two dayes; for the oddie houres, in legall computation are rejected." Co. Litt. 135b; Rev. St. N. Y. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3. But in Woodf. (348), a half-year is stated to be 183 days.

"It is clear from a series of cases running back as far as the time of Henry VIII., that 'half a year's notice' means notice for half a year, and not for six months." 15 Q. B. D. 405.

HALI GEMOTE. Halle gemote.

HALIMASS. In English law. The feast of All Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross-quarters of the year was computed from Halimass to Candlemass. Wharton.

HALL. A public building used either for the meetings of corporations, courts, or employed to some public uses; as, the city hall, the town hall. Formerly this word denoted the chief mansion or habitation.

HALLAGE. In old English law. A fee or toll due for goods or merchandise vended in a hall. Jacob.

A toll due to the lord of a fair or market, for such commodities as were vended in the common hall of the place. Cowell; Blount.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3. 5. 28; Id. 5. 48, 49; Id. 5. 20. 50.

HALLE GEMOTE. Hall assembly. A species of court baron.

HALLUCINATION. In medical jurisprudence. A species of mania by which an idea reproduced by the memory is associated and embodied by the imagination. This state of mind is sometimes called "delusion," or "waking dreams."

An attempt has been made to distinguish "hallucinations" from "illusions." The former are said to be dependent on the state of the intellectual organs, and the latter on that of those of sense. Ray, Med. Jur. § 99; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 538, note. An instance is given of a temporary hallucination in the celebrated Ben Johnson, the poet. He told a friend of his that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight, in his imagination. 1 Colly. Lun. 34. If, instead of being temporary, this affection of his mind had been permanent, he would doubtless have been considered insane. See, on the subject of spectral illusions, Hibbert, Alderson, and Farrar's Essays; Scott on Demonology, etc.; 3 Bostock, Physiology, 91, 161; 1 Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, 159.

HALMOTE. See "Halle Gemote."

HALYMOTE, HOLIMOT, or HALEGE-mot (from Saxon, halg, holy, and gemot or mot, a meeting). A holy or ecclesiastical court.

A court held in London before the lord mayor and sheriffs, for regulating the bakers.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the holymote, or holy court. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham. See Spelman; 4 Inst. 321.

HALYWERC FOLK. Those who held by the service of guarding and repairing a church or sepulchre, and were excused from feudal services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob.

HAM. Properly a house; 4 Inst. 294; a vill; a piece of ground shaped like the ham of the leg; Spelman.

A piece of land; a home close, or little meadow; a narrow skirt, hem, or edge of meadow.

A collection of houses; a village or town. Hence the names of many places in England ending with ham, as Nottingham, Buckingham, etc. Spelman.

In Saxon and old English law. A house or dwelling; a home. Æt ham; at home. LL. Inea, c. 5. Spelman supposes the radical meaning to be an enclosure or circuit, something that goes around. Hence the hem of a garment.

HAMA. A piece of land. In old English law. A hook; an engine with which a house on fire is pulled down. Yelv. 60.

HAMALLARE. (Law Lat.) In old European law. To summon to court; to go to law with; to sue or plead. Spelman.

HAMALLUS. (Law Lat.) In old European law. One who was summoned to court. Spelman.

HAMBLING. In the forest law. The hoxing or hock sinewing of dogs; an old mode of laming or disabling dogs. Termes de la Ley.

HAMESUCKEN. In Scotch law. The crime of hamesucken consists in "the felonious seeking and invasion of a person in his dwelling house." 1 Hume, Hist. Eng. 312; Alis. Crim. Law, 199.

The mere breaking into a house, without personal violence, does not constitute the offense, nor does the violence without an entry with intent to commit an assault. It is the combination of both which completes the crime. It is necessary (1) that the invasion of the house should have proceeded from forethought malice; but it is sufficient if, from any illegal motive, the violence has been meditated, although it may not have proceeded from the desire of wreaking personal revenge, properly so called. (2) The place where the assault was committed must have been the proper dwelling house of the party injured, and not a place of business, visit, or occasional residence. (3) The offense may be committed equally in the day as in the night, and not only by effraction of the building by actual force, but by an entry obtained by fraud, with the intention of inflicting personal violence, followed by its perpetration. (4) But, unless the injury to the person be of a grievous and material character, it is not hamesucken, though the other requisites to the crime have occurred. When this is the case, it is immaterial whether the violence be done lucri causa, or from personal spite.

The punishment of hamesucken in aggravated cases of injury is death; in cases of inferior atrocity, an arbitrary punishment. Alis. Crim. Law, c. 6; Ersk. Inst. 4. 9. 23.

This term was formerly used in England instead of the now modern term "burglary." 4 Bl. Comm. 223.

But in Hale's Pleas of the Crown it is said: "The common genus of offenses that comes under the name of 'hamesucken' is that which is usually called 'house breaking'; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of 'burglary,' whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house breaking of this kind is of two natures." 1 Hale, P. C. 547; 22 Pick. (Mass.) 4.

HAMFARE (Saxon, from ham, a house). In Saxon law. An assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. Spelman; Blount.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

—In Old English Law. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Anc. Inst. Eng.; Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offense. Will. Thorn. p. 2030; Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offense. Id.; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 44, § 18. An insult offered in one's own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange. Various spelled hamsoca, hamsocua, hamsoken, hamsuken, hamesaken.

HAMSOCA. (Law Lat.) In Saxon law. Hamsoken, or hamsocne. The privilege or liberty of a man's own house; a breach of such privilege by a violent entry. LL. Edmund. c. 6. See Hamma.

A fine for such entry; an immunity from such fine. Spelman.

HAMSOCNE hamsokne, hamsockne, hamsoken, hamsockene, homesoken. In Saxon law. The liberty, privilege, or immunity of a man's house. Spelman.

A breach of the immunity of a man's house by entering it against his will; the violent entry of a house. Spelman.

The offense of burglary. 4 Bl. Comm. 223.

A franchise or privilege granted to lords of manors, to hold pleas and take cognizance of the offence of entering a house against the will of the occupant, and of imposing and exacting fines therefor. Spelman; Blount.

A fine or amercement imposed for entering a house forcibly and without permission, and against the peace; an immunity or acquittance from such fine. See Hamma. Spelman.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Rich. II. c. 1. Equivalent to the Roman fiscus. Id. According to Spelman, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept. Mon. Angl. tom. 1, p. 943; Du Cange.

HANAPER OFFICE. An office on the common-law side of the English court of chancery, in which the writs relating to the business of the subject, and the returns to them, were anciently kept. 3 Bl. Comm. 48.

So called, according to Blackstone, because the writs were kept in a basket or hamper, but Spelman says that the basket was for keeping the fees of the office, and not the writs.

This and the petty bag office (q. v.) were offices in which writs relating to the interests of the subject and the crown, respectively, were kept. For a discussion of the historic origin of the names, see 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 337, 363.

HAND. A measure of length, four inches long; used in ascertaining the height of horses.

HAND BOROW (from hand, and Saxon borow, a pledge.) Nine of a decennary or friborg were so called, being inferior to the tenth or head borow,—a decenna or friborga being ten freemen or frankpledges, who were mutually sureties for each other to the king for any damage. Du Cange, "Friborg," "Head Borow."

HAND GRITH (Saxon). Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand. Cowell.

HANDBILL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done.

HANDHABEND. In Saxon law. One having a thing in his hand; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession,—latro manifestus of the civil law. See Laws Hen. I. c. 59; Laws Athelstane, § 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1; Britt. p. 72; Du Cange.

Jurisdiction to try such thief. Id.

HANSALE, or HANDSEL. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thus made was called handsale, venditio per mutuum manum complexionem. In process of time, the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. In some parts of the country it is usual to speak of hand money, as the part of the consideration paid or to be paid at the execution of a contract of sale. 2 Bl. Comm. 448; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, § 335; Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, note 33.

HANDWRITING. Anything written by a person. The manner in which a person writes, including the formation of the characters, the separation of the words, and other features distinguishing the written matter, as a mechanical result, from the writing of other persons.

HANGING IN CHAINS. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed, a practice quite contrary to the Mosaic law. Deut. xxi. 23. Abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 26. Wharton.

HANGMAN. An executioner. The name usually given to a man employed by the sheriff to put a man to death, according to law, in pursuance of a judgment of a competent court and lawful warrant.

HANGWITE (from Saxon hangian, to hang, and wite, fine). Fine, in Saxon law, for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange.

HANIG. Customary labor.

HANSE. A commercial confederacy for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members; an imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange, "Hansa."

HANSE TOWNS. A number of towns in Europe which joined in a league for mutual protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century.

Amsterdam and Bremen were the first two that formed it, and they were joined by others in Germany, Holland, England, France, Italy, and Spain, till in 1200 they numbered seventy-two. They made war and peace to protect their commerce, and held countries in sovereignty, as a united commonwealth. They had a common treasury at Lubeck, and power to call an assembly as often as they chose. For purposes of jurisdiction, they were divided into four colleges or provinces. Great privileges were granted them by Louis VI. of France, and succeeding monarchs. One of their principal magazines was at London. Their power became so great as to excite the jealousy of surrounding nations, who forced the towns within their jurisdiction which belonged to the league to renounce it. Their number and power became thus gradually reduced, beginning from the middle of the fifteenth century; and at the present day only Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck, and Frankfort-on-the-Main remain.—these being recognized by the act establishing the German Confederacy, in 1815, as free Hanseatic cities. Enc. Brit.

HANSE TOWNS, LAWS OF THE. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lubeck in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged. The text of this digest, and a Latin translation, are published with a commentary by Kuricke; and a French translation has been given by Cleirac. See "Code."

HANSEATIC. Pertaining to the hanse towns.

HANS GRAVE. The chief of a company; the head man of a corporation.

HANTELOD. An arrest. Jacob.

HAP. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used. Tech. Dict.; Cowell.

HAPPEN. The word happen, in its strictest literal sense, signifies an unexpected event. It is also not uncommonly used as synonymous with "occur," "take place," "exist" and "happens to be." 51 N. J. Law, 192.

HARBOR (Saxon, here berga, station for an army). A place where ships may ride with safety; any navigable water protected by the surrounding country; a haven. It is public property. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 435.

Harbor is to be distinguished from "port," which has a reference to the delivery of cargo. See 7 Man. & G. 870; 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371-377; 2 Barn. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor basin and docks of the port of Hull." 2 Barn. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster.

—In Torts. To receive clandestinely or without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same; for example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. 10 N. H. 247; 5 Ill. 498.

The harboring of such persons will subject the harbinger to an action for the injury; but, in order to put him completely in the wrong, a demand should be made for their restoration, for in cases where the harbinger has not committed any other wrong than merely receiving the plaintiff's wife, child, or apprentice, he may be under no obligation to return them without a demand. 1 Chit. Prac. 564; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 N. C. Law Rep. 249; 5 How. (U. S.) 215, 227.

HARBOR AUTHORITY. In England, a harbor authority is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, being proprietors of, or intrusted with the duty of constructing, improving, managing, or lighting, any harbor. St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47.

HARD LABOR. A phrase used in sentencing to confinement in institutions where labor is required of convicts. The word "hard" is surplusage. 29 Pa. St. 448.

HARDHEIDIS, or HARDIES (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Lions; coins formerly of the value of three half-pence. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 64, note.

HARER, HARIER. (Law Fr.) To stir up; to provoke; to importune. Kelham.

HARNASCA (Law Lat.) In old European law. The defensive armor of a man; harness. Spelman.

HARO, or HARROU (Fr.) In Norman and early English law. An outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors. Cowell.

HASP AND STAPLE. In old Scotch law. The form of entering an heir in a subject situated within a royal borough. It consisted of the heir's taking hold of the hasp and staple of the door (which was the symbol of possession), with other formalities. Bell, Dict.

HASPA.

—In Old English Law. The hasp of a door; by which the livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

—In Old Records. The hasp or clasp of a book.

HASTA (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. A spear; the badge of a sale by auction. Hasta subicere, to put under the spear; to put up at auction. Calv. Lex.

—In Feudal Law. A spear; the symbol used in making investiture of a fief.

HAT MONEY. In maritime law. Primage; a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HAUR. In old English law. Hatred. LL. Gul. Conq. c. 16.

HAUSTUS (Lat. from haurire, to draw). In civil law. The right of drawing water, and the right of way to the place of drawing. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 9.

HAUT CHEMIN (Law Fr.) Highway. Y. B. M. 4 Hen. VI. 4.

HAUT ESTRET (Law Fr.) High street; highway. Y. B. P. 11 Hen. VI. 2.

HAVE (Lat.) A form of the salutary expression Ave, used in the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. See Code 7. 62. 9; Id. 9. 2. 11.

To possess corporally. "No one, at common law, was said to have or to be in possession of land, unless it were conveyed to him by the livery of seisin, which gave him the corporal investiture and bodily occupation thereof." Bl. Law Tr. 113.

HAVE AND HOLD. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See "Habendum."

HAVEN. A place calculated for the reception of ships, and so situated, in regard to the surrounding land, that the vessel may ride at anchor in it in safety. Hale de Port. Mar. c. 2; 2 Chit. Com. Law, 2; 15 East, 304, 305. See "Port."

HAWKER. An itinerant or traveling trader, who carries small commodities about on his back or in a cart or wagon in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, 132 Ill. 383, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale, and sells them in a fixed place of business.

Superadded to this, though perhaps not essential, is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish. 12 Cush. (Mass.) 495.

HAY. In old English law. A hedge. Cowell.

A piece of ground enclosed with a hedge; an enclosure in forests and parks. Blount.

HAYBOTE (from haye, hedge, and bote, compensation). Hedgebote; one of the estovers allowed tenant for life or for years; namely, material to repair hedges or fences. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 35; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 99.

HAYWARD (from haye, Ledge, and ward, keeping). In old English law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town. So called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound breaches. Kitch. Cts. 46; Cowell.

HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. A contract in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. Civ. Code La. art. 1769; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 707; 1 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 596; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 84. See "Maritime Loan."

HE, or HIS. The use of the masculine pronoun is not, as a rule of construction, conclusive that only males are embraced thereby. 71 Cal. 38.

HEAD COURTS. Certain tribunals in Scotland, abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Ersk. 1. 4. 5.

HEAD NOTE. The syllabus of a reported decision.

HEAD OF A FAMILY. Householder; one who provides for a family. 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 476. There must be the relation of father and child, or husband and wife. 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 216; 17 Ala. (N. S.) 486. Per contra, 20 Mo. 75. See "Family."

HEADBOROW, or HEADBOROUGH. In Saxon law. The head or principal man of a frank pledge decennary or tithing.

HEADLAND. In old English law. A narrow piece of unploughed land left at the end of a ploughed field for the turning of the plough. Called, also, "butt." Kennett, Par. Ant. 587; 2 Leon. 70, case 93; 1 Litt. 13.

HEAFODWEARD. A feudal service rendered by a thane, the nature of which is now unknown.

HEALGEMOTE. A court baron.

HEALSFANG (from German hals, neck, and fangen, to catch). A sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks.

"The fine which every man would have to pay in commutation of this punishment, had it been in use," for it was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon kings. Anc. Inst. Eng.; Spelman.

HEALTH LAWS. Laws designed to preserve the public health.

HEALTH OFFICER. An officer, usually municipal, charged with the enforcement of health laws.

HEAPED MEASURE. That kind of measure in which the commodities measured are heaped above the top of the vessel containing them.

HEARING. In legal contemplation, the word hearing, when used in connection with the trial of a lawsuit, includes not only the listening to the examination of the witnesses but the entire judicial examination of the issues, both of law and of fact, between the parties. 155 Ill. 232. Consequently the word embraces the listening to the arguments of counsel on both sides if oral arguments are made and the reading of the arguments if written or printed arguments are presented; and, also, the consideration of these arguments in respect to both points of law and of fact. 151 Ill. App. 505, 506.

—In Chancery Practice. The trial of a chancery suit.

The hearing is conducted as follows: When the cause is called on in court, the pleadings on each side are opened in a brief manner to the court by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; after which the plaintiff's leading counsel states the plaintiff's case and the points in issue, and submits to the court his arguments upon them. Then the depositions (if any) of the plaintiff's witnesses, and such parts of the defendant's answer as support the plaintiff's case, are read by the plaintiff's solicitor; after which the rest of the plaintiff's counsel address the court. Then the same course of proceedings is observed on the other side, excepting that no part of the defendant's answer can be read in his favor if it be replied to. The leading counsel for the plaintiff is then heard in reply; after which the court pronounces the decree. Newland, Prac. 153, 154; 14 Viner, Abr. 233; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (T. 1, 2, 3); Daniell, Ch. Prac.

—In Criminal Law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See "Examination."

HEARSAY EVIDENCE. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person. 1 Phil. Ev. 185; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 99.

The term applies to written, as well as oral, matter. See "Evidence."

HEARTH MONEY. A tax, granted by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, abolished 1 Wm. & Mary, st. 1, c. 10, of two shillings on every hearth or stove in England and Wales, except such as pay not to the church and poor. Jacob. Commonly called "chimney money." Id.

HEARTH SILVER. A sort of modus for tithes, viz., a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. In criminal law. Furor brevis, sudden passion caused by reasonable provocation. It is a characteristic of the crime of voluntary manslaughter, a killing without malice in heat of passion being manslaughter, not murder. 5 Mass. 295; 86 Va. 466.

It need not be so overpowering as for the time to shut out knowledge and destroy volition, but only sufficient to exclude deliberation and malice. 4 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 491; 10 Mich. 212.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the Thames below London bridge. So called because they generally fished at ebbing tide or water. 4 Hen. VII. c. 15; Jacob.

HEBBERTHEF. The privilege of having goods of thief and trial of him within such a liberty. Cart. S. Edmundi MS. 163; Cowell.

HEDAGIUM (Saxon, heda, hitha, port). A toll or custom paid at the hith, or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which an exemption was granted by the king to some particular persons and societies. Cart. Abbatiae de Redinges; Cowell.

HEDGE. See "Gambling Contract."

HEDGE BOTE. Wood used for repairing hedges or fences. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 15.

HEGIRA. The account of time used by the Turks and Arabians, who begin their computation of time from the day that Mahomet was compelled to escape from Mecca,—Friday, July 16, A. D. 622. Whar-ton.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf; a beast of this kind two years and a half old was held to be improperly described in the indictment as a cow. 2 East, P. C. 616; 1 Leach, C. C. 105.

HEINFAR. In Saxon law. The departure, flight, escape or loss of a servant. Spelman.

A fine paid for killing a man. Domesday. Spelman.

The right of taking cognizance of such an offence. Id.

HEIR.

—At Common Law. He who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments immediately upon the death of his ancestor.

The term "heir" has a very different signification at common law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term applies to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party, or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the "testamentary heir"; and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the "heir at law," or "heir by intestacy." The executor of the common law is in many respects not unlike the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors—unless expressly authorized by the will—and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 344; Story, Conf. Laws, § 508.

No person is heir of a living person. A person occupying a relation which may be that of heirship is, however, called "heir apparent" or "heir presumptive." 2 Bl. Comm. 208. A monster cannot be heir. Co. Litt. 7b. A bastard cannot be heir. 2 Kent, Comm. 208.

In the word "heirs" is comprehended heirs of heirs in infinitum. Co. Litt. 7b, 9a; Wood. Inst. 69.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word "heirs." 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Godb. 155; T. Jolies, 111; Cro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burrows, 38; 10 Viner, Abr. 233. But see 2 Prest. Est. 9, 10. In wills, in order to effectuate the intention of the testator, the word "heirs" is sometimes construed to mean the "next of kin" (1 Jac. & W. 388) and children (Ambl. 273). See, further, as to the force and import of this word, 2 Vent. 311; 1 P. Wms. 229; 2 P. Wms. 1, 369; 3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 60, 454; 2 W. Bl. 1010; 4 Ves. 26, 766, 794; 2 Atk. 89, 580; 5 East, 533; 5 Burrows, 2615; 11 Mod. 189.

—In Civil Law. He who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person. See "Haeres."

HEIR APPARENT. One who has an indefeasible right to the inheritance, provided he outlive the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 208.

HEIR AT LAW. He who, after his ancestor's death intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as "heir general."

HEIR BENEFICIARY. One who accepts the succession under benefit of inventory (q. v.)

HEIR BY CUSTOM. In English law. One whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English. Co. Litt. 140.

HEIR BY DEVISE. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the haeres factus (q. v.) of the civil law.

HEIR, COLLATERAL. One who is not of the direct line of the deceased, but comes from a collateral line; as, a brother, sister, an uncle and aunt, a nephew, niece, or cousin, of the deceased.

HEIR, CONVENTIONAL. In civil law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract—for example, a marriage contract—which entitles the heir to the succession.

HEIR, GENERAL. Heir at common law.

HEIR INSTITUTE. One to whom the right of succession is ascertained by disposition or express deed of the deceased. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR, LEGAL. In civil law. A legal heir is one who is of the same blood as the deceased, and who takes the succession by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ. Code La. arts. 873, 875; Dict. de Jur. "Heritier Legitime." There are three classes of legal heirs, to-wit, the children and other lawful descendants, the fathers and mothers and other lawful ascendants, and the collateral kindred. Civ. Code La. art. 883.

HEIR MALE. In Scotch law. An heir institute, who, though not next in blood to the deceased, is his nearest male relation that can succeed to him. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

HEIR OF CONQUEST. In Scotch law. One who succeeds to the deceased in conquest, i. e., lands or other heritable rights to which the deceased neither did nor could succeed as heir to his predecessor. Forbes, Inst. pt. 377.

One who succeeds to lands acquired by purchase. Bell, Dict.

HEIR OF LINE. In Scotch law. One who succeeds lineally by right of blood; one who succeeds to the deceased in his heritage; i. e., lands and other heritable rights derived to him by succession as heir to his predecessor. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 77.

An heir at law is so called because he succeeds according to certain lines of proximity. Bell, Dict.

HEIR OF PROVISION. In Scotch law. One who succeeds as heir by virtue of a particular provision in a deed or instrument. Wharton.

HEIR OF TAILZIE. In Scotch law. He on whom an estate is settled that would not have fallen to him by legal succession. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR PRESUMPTIVE. One who, in the present circumstances, would be entitled to the inheritance, but whose rights may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. 2 Bl. Comm. 208. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. Civ. Code La. art. 876.

HEIR SPECIAL. In English law. The issue in tail, who claims per formam doni, by the form of the gift.

HEIR SUBSTITUTE, IN A BOND. In Scotch law. He to whom a bond is payable expressly in case of the creditor's decease, or after his death. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

HEIR, TESTAMENTARY. In civil law. One who is constituted heir by testament executed in the form prescribed by law. He is so called to distinguish him from the "legal heirs," who are called to the succession by the law; and from "conventional heirs," who are so constituted by a contract inter vivos. See "Haeres Factus"; "Devisee."

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called "co-heiresses," or "coheirs."

HEIRLOOM. While the authorities generally credit the origin of the word to the Saxon, some claim it was derived from "heier" or "heir," and "leoma," a limb or member; others are inclined to the opinion that it is a compound of the words "heir" and "loom," the latter being a frame to weave in; still others claim that it had its origin in the Saxon word "loma" or "ge-loma," which signifies utensils, or vessels generally.

The older authorities limited the application of the term to articles of household furniture or "dead chattels movable," but recent writers have given it a more general signification, until now it may be said that, in the common acceptance of the term, it includes all chattels which go to the heir, along with the inheritance, and necessary to its enjoyment, and which by custom, having belonged to a house, are seldom inventoried after the decease of the owner and do not go to the executor or administrator of the last proprietor.

Articles which are considered as annexed to the freehold and cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering it; and utensils of the stronger or more ponderous kind which are not easily separated from the house are considered heirlooms.

Charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of the land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, and wainscots, fish in a pond, deer in a park and doves in a dovehouse have been held to have been heirlooms going with the inheritance. Co. Litt. 3a, 185b, 8a; 7 Coke, 17b; Cro. Eliz. 372; Brooke, Abr. "Charters," pl. 13; 2 Bl. Comm. 28, 427; 14 Viner, Abr. 291; 2 Kent's Com. 343; 1 Williams on Exec. 606, 607, 609; Bro. Abr. Descent, pl. 43; Termes de la Ley; Spelman.

HEIRS, BENEFICIARY. In civil law. Those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ. Code La. art. 879. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

HEIRS, FORCED. Those who cannot be disinherited. See "Forced heirs."

HEIRS, IRREGULAR. In Louisiana. Those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ. Code La. art. 874. When the deceased has left neither lawful descendants nor ascendants, nor collateral relations, the law calls to his inheritance either the surviving husband or wife, or his or her natural children, or the state. Id. art. 911. This is called an "irregular succession."

HEIRS OF THE BODY. Lineal descendants. 37 Ala. 178.

"The term 'heir of the body' is a well-established technical term, with which the words 'children' or 'issue' or 'lawful issue' are not synonymous." 115 Mass. 276.

Like all similar expressions, its technical sense is frequently subordinated to the evident intent.

Thus it has been construed as synonymous with "children." 147 Ind. 95; 8 Ga. 387.

HEIRS, UNCONDITIONAL. In Louisiana. Those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Civ. Code La. art. 878.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Hope, Minor Prac. p. 538; Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 13-17 et seq; Bell, Dict.

HELL. The name given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich. Dict.

HEMOLDBORH, or HELMELBORCH. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo Saxon law extant. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday Book.

HENGHEN. In Saxon law. A prison, or house of correction. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENGWYTE (Saxon). In old English law. An acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I. is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HERALD (from French, herault). An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals and coronations, and, anciently, to carry messages between princes and proclaim war and peace.

HERALDS' COLLEGE. In 1450, the heralds in England were collected into a college by Richard II. The earl marshal of England was chief of the college, and under him were three kings-at-arms (styled Garter, Clarencieux, Norroy), six heralds-at-arms (styled of York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset), and four pursuivants-at-arms (styled Blue Mantle, Rouge Croix, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis). This organization still continues. Enc. Brit.

HERBAGE. In English law. An easement which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

HERBERY. An inn. Herbergare, to entertain at an inn. Herbergatus, entertained.

HERD WERCK, or HEORDWERCH. Customary uncertain services as herdsmen, shepherds, etc. A. D. 1166, Reg. Ecc. Christi Cant. MS.; Cowell.

HEREBANNUM. Calling out the army by proclamation; a fine paid by freemen for not attending the army; a tax for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREDAD. In Spanish law. A portion of land that is cultivated. Formerly it meant a farm, hacienda de campo, real estate.

HEREDAD YACENTE (Spanish, from Lat. "haereditas jacens," q. v.). In Spanish law. An inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 2, § 8.

HEREDERO. In Spanish law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Haeres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona." Las Partidas, 7. 9. 13.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited. Co. Litt. 5b; 2 Bl. Comm. 17. By this term, such things are denoted as may be the subject matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself. It cannot, therefore, by its own intrinsic force, enlarge an estate prima facie a life estate into a fee. 2 Bos. & P. 251; 8 Term R. 503. See 4 Washb. Real Prop. Index.

Hereditaments are either (1) corporeal, such as are substantial and permanent, being comprehended under the general denomination "land"; (2) incorporeal, being heritable rights issuing out of things corporeal.

They include advowsons, tithes, dignities, pensions, franchises, offices, commons, ways, annuities, and rents. 2 Bl. Comm. 19 et seq.

Hereditaments are also divided into real, personal, and mixed. Challis, Real Prop. 39, 40.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREGEAT. A heriot (q. v.). Spelman.

HEREGELD (Saxon). In old English law. A tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Spelman.

HERES. See "Haeres."

HERESCHIP (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Theft or robbery. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, pp. 26, 89.

HERESY. In English law. An offense against religion, consisting not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. 4 Bl. Comm. 44, 45. An opinion on divine subjects devised by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. 1 Hale, P. C. 384. This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, and is no longer punishable by the secular law. 4 Steph. Comm. 233.

HERETOFORE. In the time before the present; down to this time; before this time. 167 Ill. 447; 117 N. Y. 150.

In times past; previous time; previously. 253 Ill. 539.

In times before the present; formerly. 167 Ill. 456.

HEREIN. Herein, as used in legal phraseology, is a locative adverb, and its meaning is to be determined by the context. It may refer to the section, the chapter, or the entire enactment in which it is used, and this rule is applicable to the construction of a document, as well as of a statute. 98 Cal. 608.

HERGE. In Saxon law. Persons who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit crimes.

HERIOT. In English law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land.

Heriot service is such as is due upon a special reservation in the grant or lease of lands, and therefore amounts to little more than a mere rent. Heriot custom arises upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depends merely upon immemorial usage and custom. See 2 Bl. Comm. 97, 422; Comyn, Dig. "Copyhold" (K. 18); Bac. Abr.; 2 Saund.; 1 Vern. 441.

HERISCHILD. A species of English military service.

HERISCHULDAE. A fine for disobedience to proclamation of warfare. Skene de Verb. Sign.

HERITABLE BOND. In Scotch law. A bond for a sum of money, to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge. 1 Ross, Lect. 76; 2 Ross, Lect. 324.

HERITABLE JURISDICTION. In Scotch law. Grants of criminal jurisdiction made to great families for the better execution of justice. Abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 43. Bell, Dict.

HERITABLE RIGHTS. In Scotch law. Rights which go to the heir; generally, all rights in or connected with lands. Bell, Dict. "Heritable."

HERITAGE. In civil law. Every species of immovables which can be the subject of property, such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 472. See Co. Litt. § 731.

HERITOR. In Scotch law. A land owner.

HERMANDAD. In Spanish law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power.

To carry into effect the object of this association, each village and town elected two alcaldes,—one by the nobility, and the other by the community at large. These had under their order inferior officers, formed into companies, called cuad villeros. Their duty was to arrest delinquents and bring them before the alcaldes, when they were tried substantially in the ordinary form. This tribunal, established during the anarchy prevailing in feudal times, continued to maintain its organization in Spain for centuries; and various laws determining its jurisdiction and mode of proceeding were enacted by Ferdinand and Isabella and subsequent monarchs. Nov. Recop. tit. 35, bk. 12, § 7. The abuses introduced in the exercise of the functions of these tribunals caused their abolition, and the santas hermandades of Ciudad Rodrigo, Talavera, and Toledo, the last remnants of these anomalous jurisdictions, were abolished by the law of the 7th of May, 1835. Called, also, "Santa Hermandad."

HERMAPHRODITUS TAM MASCULO quam foeminae comparatur, secundum praevalentiam sexus incalescentis. An hermaphrodite is to be considered male or female according to the predominance of the exciting sex. Co. Litt. 8; Bracton, fol. 5.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERRING SILVER. This was a composition in money for the custom of supplying herrings for the provision of a religious house. Rapalje & L.

HERUS. A master. Servus facit ut herus det, the servant does [the work] in order that the master may give [him the wages agreed on]. Herus dat ut servus facit, the master gives [or agrees to give, the wages] in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing [the work]. 2 Bl. Comm. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HEST CORN. In old records. Corn or grain given or devoted to religious persons or purposes. 2 Mon. Angl. 367b. Cowell.

HETERIA. In Roman law. A society or company.

HEUVELBORH. In Saxon law. A surety.

HEYBOTE, HAYBOTE. In English law. A liberty granted to a tenant, of cutting as much underwood and bushes on the premises, as was necessary for mending and maintaining the fences or hedges. Cowell. See Haybote.

HEYLODE. In feudal law. A duty of certain tenants to repair hedges (hays).

HIDAGE. In old English law. A tax levied, in emergencies, on every hide of land; the exemption from such tax. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 56. It was payable sometimes in money, sometimes in ships or military equipments; e. g., in the year 994, when the Danes landed in England, every three hundred hides furnished a ship to king Ethelred, and every eight hides one pack and one saddle. Jacob.

HIDALGO, or HIJODALGO. In Spanish law. He who, by blood and lineage, belongs to a distinguished family, or is noble by descent. Las Partidas, 2. 12. 3. The origin of this word has given rise to much controversy; for which, see Esriche.

HIDALGUIA. In Spanish law. Nobility by descent or lineage. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 4. See "Hidalgo."

HIDE (from Saxon hyden, to cover; so, Lat. tectum, from tegere). In old English law. A building with a roof; a house.

As much land as might be ploughed with one plough. The amount was probably determined by usage of the locality. Some make it sixty, others eighty, others ninety-six, others one hundred or one hundred and twenty, acres. Co. Litt. 5; 1 Plowd. 167; Shep. Touch. 93; Du Cange.

As much land as was necessary to support a hide, or mansion house. Co. Litt. 69a; Spelman; Du Cange, "Hida"; 1 Introd. to Domesday Book, 145. At present, the quantity is one hundred acres. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HIDE AND GAIN. In English law. A term anciently applied to arable land. Co. Litt. 85b.

HIDE LANDS. In old English law. Lands appertaining to a hide, or mansion. See "Hide."

HIDEL. In old English law. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIGH BAILIFF. An officer attached to an English county court. His duties are to attend the court when sitting, to serve summonses, and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 33; Poll. Cir. Ct. Prac. 16. He also has similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts. Rapalje & L.

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. In English law. An ecclesiastical court of very extensive jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offenses, contempts, and enormities.

It was erected by St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, and abolished by 16 Car. II. c. 11.

HIGH CONSTABLE. An officer appointed in some cities with powers generally limited to matters of police, and not more extensive, in these respects, than those of constables. See "Constable."

HIGH CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND, Lord. His office has been disused (except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the coronation, or the like) since the attainder of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VII. Rapalje & L.

The origin and history of the office, duties of the incumbent and final disuse may be found in 1 Bl. Comm. 355, 356; Bacon's works iv. 309; Bract. fol. 337; Britt. fol. 2; Willcock's Off. Constable, 76, 78, 80; 1 Wooddes Lect. 152, 153 and Spelman. See also Constable.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See "Admiralty."

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. In English law. A tribunal which formerly exercised appellate jurisdiction over cases brought from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts.

It was a court of great dignity, erected by St. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. It was abolished, and its jurisdiction transferred to the judicial committee of the privy council. See 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 66.

HIGH COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Mississippi.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. That branch of the English supreme court of judicature (q. v.) which exercises (1) the original jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of chancery, the courts of queen's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, the courts of probate, divorce, and admiralty, the court of common pleas at Lancaster, the court of pleas at Durham, and the courts of the judges or commissioners of assize; and (2) the appellate jurisdiction of such of those courts as heard appeals from inferior courts. Judicature Act 1873, § 16; Rapalje & L.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See "Court of Justiciary."

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. In English law. The English parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons.

The house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity.

This term is applied to parliament by most of the law writers. Thus, parliament is said by Blackstone to be the supreme court of the kingdom, not only for the making, but also for the execution, of the laws. 4 Bl. Comm. 259. Lord Coke and Lord Hale also apply the term "court" to the whole parliament. And see Finch, Law, 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2. But, from the fact that in judicial proceedings, generally, the house of commons takes no part, but only in the trial of impeachments, and then only as prosecutor, and from the fact that the house of commons disclaimed possession of judicial powers at the deposition of Richard II., and the twelve judges made a similar decision in 1 Hen. VII., the propriety of this use of the term has been questioned. Bl. Comm. (Warren, Abr.) 215. The propriety of its application would seem to be derived from the claim of parliament to be considered as the successor of the aula regis, which was a judicial as well as a legislative body, and, if the succession is established, would be applicable, although the judicial power may have been granted to the various courts. See "Court."

The house of lords only acts in a judicial capacity in civil cases and in most criminal cases. See "House of Lords"; "Impeachment."

HIGH CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS. A term used in Const. U. S. art. 2, § 4, and elsewhere, as a ground of impeachment. Its technical sense is parliamentary, and it includes many acts not constituting crimes. Cooley, Const. Lim. 159.

"High crimes and misdemeanors are such immoral and unlawful acts as are nearly allied and equal in guilt to felony, yet, owing to some technical circumstance, do not fall within the definition of 'felony.'" 1 Russ. Crimes, 61. And see 39 La. Ann. 186.

HIGH JUSTICE. In feudal law. The jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V., Append. note 23.

HIGH JUSTICIER. In old French and Canadian law. A feudal lord who exercised the right called "high justice." Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 26.

HIGH SEAS. The uninclosed waters of the ocean, and also those waters on the seacoast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 624; 1 Mason (U. S.) 360; 5 Mason (U. S.) 290; 1 Bl. Comm. 110; 2 Hagg. Adm. 398; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 32, 33.

Waters within the ebb and flow of the sea (Gilp. 524), though in a harbor (Fed.

Cas. No. 14,509), but not in a landlocked haven (4 Mason [U. S.] 307; 5 Mason [U. S.] 290; 3 Blatchf. [U. S.] 435).

The open waters of the great lakes are "high seas" (150 U. S. 249), but the waters of an inland river flowing into the great lakes are not (7 Mich. 161).

HIGH STEWARD, COURT OF THE lord. In English law. A tribunal instituted for the trial of peers indicted for treason or felony, or for misprision of either, but not for any other offense. The office is very ancient, and was formerly hereditary, or held for life, or dum bene se gesserit; but it has been for many centuries granted pro hac vice only, and always to a lord of parliament. Wharton.

HIGH TREASON. In English law. The compassing of the king's death; the aiding and comforting of his enemies; the forging or counterfeiting of his coin; or the killing of the chancellor or either of the king's justices. 4 Bl. Comm. 73. See "Treason."

HIGH-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waves ordinarily reach when the tide is at its highest. 6 Mass. 435; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180; 1 Halst. (N. J.) 1; 1 Russ. Crimes, 107; 2 East, P. C. 808. See "Seashore"; "Tide."

—Of Tidal Waters. The ordinary high-water point. 60 Pa. St. 339. The point reached by the medium high tide between the spring and neap tides. 44 N. J. Eq. 398.

—Of Nontidal Waters. The highest point reached by the waters in the normal state, unaffected by freshets. 88 Me. 155. And see 56 Minn. 513.

HIGHER AND LOWER SCALE. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature, there are two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. The lower scale applies (unless the court otherwise orders) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the queen's bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation is under £1,000. The higher scale applies in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained is an injunction. 5 Q. B. Div. 167, 431; 6 Q. B. Div. 190; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 1320.

HIGHNESS. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I., were not usually saluted with the title of "Majesty," but with that of "Highness." The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of "Highness." Wharton.

HIGHWAY. A passage, road, or street which every citizen has a right to use. 1

Bouv. Inst. note 442; 3 Keft, Comm. 432; 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421; Angell & D. Highways, § 2; 16 Mass. 33.

In a more abstract sense, a public easement or right of way.

The term "highway" is the generic name for all kinds of public ways, whether they be carriage ways, bridle ways, foot ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries or navigable rivers. 6 Mod. 255; Angell & D. Highways, c. 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 432.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. Robbery committed on a public highway was, under St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 1, more severely punished than robbery committed elsewhere. This distinction was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. & Mary, c. 9.

HIGHWAYMAN. A robber on the highway.

HIGLER. In English law. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish law. The written acknowledgment given by each of the heirs of a deceased person, showing the effects he has received from the succession.

HIKENILD STREET. A name sometimes given to Ikenild street (q. v.).

HILARY TERM. In English law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st day of January in each year.

HINDER AND DELAY. To hinder and delay is to do something which is an attempt to defraud, rather than a successful fraud; to put some obstacle in the path, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before the creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. 10 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 63.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.

In all the arrangements for the administration of justice in India, made by the British government and the East India Company, the principle of reserving to the native inhabitants the continuance of their own laws and usages within certain limits has been uniformly recognized. The laws of the Hindus and Mohammedans have thus been brought into notice in England, and are occasionally referred to by writers on English and American law. The native works upon these subjects are very numerous. The chief English republications of the Hindu law are, Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, London, 1801; Sir Wm. Jones' Institutes of Hindu Law, London, 1797. For a fuller account of the Hindu law, and of the original Digests and Commentaries, see Morley's Law of India, London, 1858, and Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law, London, 1860. The principal English republications of the Mohammedan law are Hamilton's Hedaya, London, 1791; Baillie's Digest, Calcutta, 1805; Precis de Jurisprudence Mussulmane Selon le Rite Malikite, Paris, 1848; and the treatises on succession and inheritance translated by Sir William Jones. An approved outline of both systems is Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law; also contained in the "Principles and Precedents" of the same law previously published by the same author.

HINEFARE. The departure of a husbandry servant (hine) from his master.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish law. A mortgage of real property. Johnson, Civ. Law Spain, 156 [149]; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 7.

HIRE. A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent, Comm. 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

Locatio operis faciendi is the hire of labor and work to be done, or care and attention to be bestowed, on the goods let by the hirer, for a compensation.

Locatio operis mercium vshendarum is the hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another, for a compensation. Jones, Bailm. 85, 86, 90, 103, 118; 2 Kent, Comm. 456; Civ. Code La. art. 1709-1711.

Locatio rei or locatio conductio rei is the bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract arises from the principles of natural law. It is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblance to the contract of sale; the principal difference between them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprietary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with it only for a temporary use and purpose. In a sale, the thing itself is the object of the contract; in hiring, the use of the thing is its object. Vinnius, lib. 3, tit. 25, in pr.; Poth. de Contr. du Louage, notes 2-4; Jones, Bailm. 86; Story, Bailm. § 371; 2 Kent, Comm. 456.

HIRER. He who hires. See "Bailment."

HLAFORD (Saxon). A lord. Hlaford-socna, a lord's protection. Hlafordswice, the crime of betraying one's lord.

HLAFORDSWICE (Saxon, hlaford, lord, literally bread given, and wice). In old English law. Betraying one's lord; treason. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 59, 301.

HLOTHBOTE (Saxon, hloth, company, and bote, compensation). In old English law.

Fine for presence at an illegal assembly. Du Cange.

HLOTHE. An unlawful assembly of from eight to thirty-five persons. Cowell. See "Herge."

HOC (Lat.) This.

HOC PARATUS EST VERIFICARE. See "Et hoc, etc."

HOC SERVABITUR QUOD INITIO CONVENIT. This shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning. Dig. 50. 17. 23; Bracton, 73b.

HOCUS SALTIS. A hoke, hole, or lesser pit of salt. Cowell.

HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY. This was a duty given to the landlord that his tenants and bondmen might solemnize the day on which the English conquered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowell.

HODGE-PODGE ACT. A name given to a legislative act which embraces many subjects. Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. Instances of this wretched legislation are everywhere to be found. See Barr. Obs. St. 449.

HOG HOWARDS. Township officers at one time elected in New York, whose duty was to catch hogs running at large, and put rings in their noses. 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 522.

HOGHENHYNE (from Saxon hogh, house, and hine, servant). A domestic servant. Among the Saxons, a stranger guest was, the first night of his stay, called uncuth, or unknown; the second, gust, guest; the third, hoghenhyne; and the entertainer was responsible for his acts as for those of his own servant. Bracton, 124b; Du Cange, "Agenhine"; Spelman, "Homehine."

HOGSHEAD. A liquid measure, containing half a pipe; the fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.

HOLD PLEAS. To hear or try causes. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 35, 298.

HOLDER. The holder of a bill of exchange is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawee or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee. 4 Dall. (Pa.) 53.

HOLDING.

—In English Law. A piece of land held under a lease or similar tenancy for agricultural, pastoral, or similar purposes.

—In Scotch Law. The tenure or nature of the right given by the superior to the vassal. Bell, Dict.

HOLDING THE MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

HOLIDAY. A day of cessation from labor; a day when public business is suspended; a nonjudicial day.

Primarily the term meant a "holy day," or religious festival. In modern usage it indicates a secular day on which, by statute, public business is suspended. It does not appropriately include Sunday. 51 N. J. Law, 255.

HOLOGRAFO. In Spanish law. Olographi; a term applicable to the paper, document, disposition, and more particularly to the last will of a person, which, in order to be valid, must be wholly written, signed, and dated by the testator. "Holographum, apud testum, appellatur testamentum, quod totum manu testatoris scriptum est et sub-signatum."

HOLOGRAPH. What is written with one's own hand. See "Olograph."

HOLY ALLIANCE. A league entered into by Alexander I., the Czar of Russia, Francis I., emperor of Austria, and William III., King of Prussia.

The alliance was entered into at Paris, 26 Sept. 1815, twenty days before Napoleon landed at St. Helena. All creeds were to be united, Greek, Roman Catholic and Protestant, and all other powers were invited to join, except the Sultan, who was excluded because he was not Christian enough, and the pope, who was so conspicuously Christian that if admitted he would have to take the first place. Those included in it were subsequently joined by all the sovereigns of Europe, except the King of England.

The professed objects of the alliance were the union of Christian nations in a Christian brotherhood, and the application of Christian principles to the dealings of sovereign with sovereign and the relations of sovereign to subject.

These were no doubt to some extent the real objects, for motives are seldom wholly covert, even in the mind of a king.

But other objects there undoubtedly were in the background of consciousness which moved the contracting parties far more powerfully. These were, it cannot be doubted, the strengthening of defenses against the dreaded shape then just banished from the world they hoped to dominate, against him and his, a special clause barring the way to any European throne against any of the Bonaparte family in the erecting of barriers against the notions in regard to the rights of man and the sphere of government which since the first French revolution had been gradually making their way throughout Europe; the strengthening thus of their several dynasties against whatever might come against them.

The change that was then coming over the world had however gone too far. The alliance really fell before the new forces which it was created to control, enforced no doubt by the obvious fact that the conduct of princes was no more Christian than it was before, though to the casual eye, the causes of its dissolution were the French revolution of 1830, the European upheaval of 1848, and the re-establishment of the Napoleonic dynasty in 1850.

HOLY ORDERS. In ecclesiastical law. The orders or dignities of the church. Those within holy orders are archbishops, bishops, priests and deacons. The form of ordination must be according to the form in the book of Common Prayer. Besides these orders, the church of Rome had five others, viz., subdeacons, acolyths, exorcists, readers, and ostiaries. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 39, 40.

HOMAGE (anciently hominium, from homo). A mere acknowledgment of tenure made by a tenant by knight service upon investiture, in the following form:

The tenant in fee or fee tail that holds by homage shall kneel upon both his knees, ungirded, and the lord shall sit and hold both the hands of his tenant between his hands, and the tenant shall say, "I become your man (homo) from this day forward of life and member, of earthly honor, and to you shall be faithful and true, and shall bear to you faith for the lands that I claim to hold of you, saying that faith that I owe to our lord the king"; and then the lord so sitting shall kiss him. The kiss is indispensable, except sometimes in the case of a woman. Du Cange. After this the oath of fealty is taken; but this may be taken by the steward, homage only by the lord. Termes de la Ley. This species of homage was called homagium planum or simplex (1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 367), to distinguish it from homagium ligium, or liege homage, which included fealty and the services incident. Du Cange; Spelman.

Liege homage was that homage in which allegiance was sworn without any reservation, and was therefore due only to the sovereign; and, as it came in time to be exacted without any actual holding from him, it sunk into the oath of allegiance. Termes de la Ley.

The obligation of homage is mutual, binding the lord to protection of the vassal, as well as the vassal to fidelity. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. Homage was so called where time out of mind a man and his ancestors had held by homage; and in this case the lord who had received the homage was bound to acquit the tenant of all services to superior lords, and, if vouched, to warrant his title. If the tenant by homage ancestral aliened in fee, his alienee held by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. The jury of a lord's court, or court baron. So called because generally composed of those who owed homage to the lord, or the pares curiae. Kitch. Cts.; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 54, 366.

HOMAGER. One that is bound to do homage to another. Jacob.

HOMAGIUM. Homage. (q. v.)

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. Liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman. So called from ligando (binding) because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

HOMAGIUM, NON PER PROCURATORES nec per literas fieri potuit, sed in propria persona tam domini quam tenentis capi debet et fieri. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant. Co. Litt. 68.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. In feudal law. Plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V., Append. note 8.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE. To renounce homage; to give it up or dissolve it. Bracton, fol. 81b.

HOMAGIUM SIMPLEX. In feudal law. Simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords. Harg. Co. Litt. note 18, lib. 2.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish law. The ordinary judge of a district.

Hence, when the law declares that a contract, or some other act, is to be conformable to the will of the hombre bueno, it means that it is to be decided by the ordinary judge. Las Partidas, 7. 34. 31.

In matters of conciliation, it applies to the two persons, one chosen by each party, to assist the constitutional alcalde in forming his judgment of reconciliation. Article 1, c. 3, Decree of October 9, 1812.

Arbitrators chosen by litigants to determine their differences.

Persons competent to give testimony in a cause.

HOME. A place of abode from which one has no present intention of removing. 43 Me. 418; 124 Mass. 147.

HOME NE SERA PUNY PUR SUER DES briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong. 2 Inst. 228.

HOME OFFICE. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries.

HOME PORT. The port where the owner of a ship resides.

HOMESOKEN, or HOMSOKEN. See "Hamesucken."

HOMESTALL. The mansion house.

HOMESTEAD. The house and land constituting a family residence. 6 N. D. 482.

"Stethe or sted," says Lord Coke, 'betokeneth properly a bank of a river, and many times a place.' Co. Litt. 4, 6. The homestead, according to that definition, means the home place, the place where the house is, and such is its legal acceptance at the present day. It is the home, the house, and the adjoining land, where the head of the family dwells; the home farm." 36 N. H. 158.

The principal importance of the term is in respect to the exemption of the homestead from execution, and the nature and extent of such exemption is regulated in each state by the statutes allowing the same.

As a general rule, to constitute a homestead within the exemption laws the property must be actually occupied. (11 Allen [Mass.] 37; 51 Mich. 541; 23 Minn. 435) as a residence (27 Ill. 393) by the head of a family (10 Allen [Mass.] 425; 159 Ill. 143) who has a present possessory interest in the property (170 Ill. 115; 74 Iowa, 683), with the intention of making such property a homestead (6 Cal. 234; 53 Vt. 554).

HOMICIDE. Homicide is any killing of a human being. To constitute homicide, (1) the killing must be of a living human being; (2) the death must have been caused by the act or omission of the accused; (3) death must happen within a year and a day after the injury.

Homicide is either (1) justifiable; (2) excusable; or (3) felonious. Felonious homicide is either murder or manslaughter. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 466. See "Murder"; "Manslaughter."

HOMICIDIUM (Lat.) Homicide.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAM. See "De Homine Capto in Withernam."

HOMINE ELIGENDO (Lat.) In English law. A writ directed to a corporation, requiring the members to make choice of a new man, to keep the one part of a seal appointed for statutes merchant. Tech. Dict.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. See "De Homine Replegiando."

HOMINES (Lat.) In feudal law. Men; feudatory tenants who claimed a privilege of having their causes, etc., tried only in their lord's court. Par. Ant. 15.

HOMINES LIGII. In feudal law. Liege men; feudal tenants or vassals, especially those who held immediately of the sovereign. 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

HOMINUM CAUSA JUS CONSTITUTUM est. Law is established for the benefit of man.

HOMIPLAGIUM. In old English law. The maiming of a man. Blount.

HOMMES DE FIEF (Fr.) In feudal law. Men of the fief; feudal tenants; the peers in the lords' courts. Montesq. Esp. des Lois, liv. 28, c. 27.

HOMMES FEODAUZ (Fr.) In feudal law. Feudal tenants; the same with hommes de fief (q. v.). Montesq. Esp. des Lois, liv. 28, c. 36.

HOMO (Lat.) A human being, whether male or female. 2 Inst. 45.

—In Feudal Law. A vassal; one who, having received a feud, is bound to do homage and military service for his land. Various names called vassalus, vassus, miles, cliens feudalis, tenens per servitium militare, sometimes baro, and most frequently leudes. Spelman. Homo is sometimes also used for a tenant by socage, and sometimes for any dependent. A homo claimed the privilege of having his cause and person tried only in the court of his lord. Kennett, Par. Ant. p. 152.

HOMO CHARTULARIUS. One manumitted from slavery by charter.

HOMO COMMENDATUS. In feudal law. One who surrendered himself into the power of another for the sake of protection or support. L. Ripuar, tit. 72, § 5.

HOMO ECCLESIASTICUS. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spelman.

HOMO EXERCITALIS. A man of the army (exercitus); a soldier.

HOMO FEODALIS. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee (feodum), or part of a fee. Spelman.

HOMO FISCALIS (or FISCALINUS). A servant or vassal belonging to the treasury or fiscus.

HOMO FRANCUS, HOMO INGENUUS, or homo liber. In old English law. A free man.

HOMO LIGIUS. A liege man; a subject; a king's vassal; the vassal of a subject. Spelman.

HOMO NOVUS. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spelman.

HOMO PERTINENS. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal; one who belonged to the soil (qui glebae adscribitur).

HOMO POTEST ESSE HABILIS ET INHABILIS diversis temporibus. A man may be capable and incapable at divers times. 5 Coke, 98.

HOMO REGIUS. A king's vassal. L. Ripuar, tit. 11, § 3.

HOMO ROMANUS. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations. L. Salis. tit. 34, § 3; Spelman.

HOMO TRIUM LITTERARUM. A man of three letters; i. e., "f," "u," "r,"—a thief. Wharton.

HOMO VOCABULUM EST NATURAE; persona juris civilis. "Man" (homo) is a term of nature; "person" (persona) of the civil law. Calv. Lex.

HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish law. The tacit consent and approval, inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees, of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also, the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and executory. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

HOMOLOGARE. In civil law. To confirm or approve; to consent or assent; to confess. Calv. Lex. Sometimes corruptly written "emologare."

HOMOLOGATE. In modern civil law. To approve; to confirm; as, a court homologates a proceeding. See "Homologation." Literally, to use the same words with another; to say the like. 9 Mart. (La.) 324. To assent to what another says or writes.

HOMOLOGATION.
—In Civil Law. Approbation; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act; as, the approbation of an award, and ordering execution on the same. Merlin, Repert.; Civ. Code La.; Dig. 4. 8; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 224. To homologate is to say the like, similiter dicere. 9 Mart. (La.) 324.

—In Scotch Law. An act by which a person approves a deed, so as to make it binding on him, though in itself defective. Ersk. Inst. 3. 3. 47 et seq.; 2 Bligh, 197; 1 Bell, Comm. 144.

HOMONYMIAE (Graeco-Lat.) A term applied in the civil law to cases where a law was repeated, or laid down in the same terms, or to the same effect, more than once.

Cases of iteration and repetition. Bac. Works, IV. 371. See 2 Kent, Comm. 489, note.

HONESTE VIVERE (Lat.) To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts to which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law (Inst. 1. 1. 3; Bracton, fols. 3, 3b), the others being alterum non laedere, not to injure others, and suum cuique tribuere, to render to every man his due.

This phrase is rendered by Blackstone, as well as Harris & Cooper, in their translations of the Institutes, "to live honestly," but this is not the proper meaning of honeste. Burrill.

HONOR.

—In English Law. The seigniorship of a lord paramount. 2 Bl. Comm. 91.

—In Common Law. To accept a bill of exchange; to pay a bill accepted, or a promissory note, on the day it becomes due. 7 Taunt. 164; 1 Term R. 172.

HONOR COURTS. Tribunals held within honors. Cowell.

HONORABLE. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons, and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for judges, members of congress, and other high officials, but without any distinct rule for its application.

HONORARIUM. Something given in gratitude for services rendered.

It is so far of the nature of a gift that it cannot be sued for. 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 412; 1 Chit. Bailm. 38; 2 Atk. 332; 3 Bl. Comm. 28. Of this character were formerly in England, though never in the United States, the fees of counsellors at law and of physicians. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 28.

HONORARY. Without fee, profit, or reward, either to or by the holder of the honorary position. 81 N. Y. 255.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest.

HONORARY SERVICES. Services by which lands in grand serjeantry were held; such as to hold king's banner, or to hold his head in the ship which carried him from Dover to Whitsand, etc. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 73, and note.

HONORARY TRUSTEES. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders. So called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course. Lewin, Trusts, 408.

HONTFONGENTHEF (Saxon). A thief taken with the stolen thing in his hand. See "Handhabend."

HORA AURORAE. In old English law. The morning bell. Cowell.

HORA NON EST MULTUM DE SUBSTANTIA NEGOTII, LICET IN APPELLO DE EA ALIQUANDO FIAT MENTIO. The hour is not of much consequence as to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned. 1 Bulst. 82.

HORAE JUDICIAE (Lat.) Hours judicial, or those in which judges sit in court. In Fortesque's time, these were from 8 to 11 a. m., and the courts of law were not open in the afternoon. Co. Litt. 135a; 2 Inst. 246; Fortesque, 51, p. 120, note.

HORCA. In Spanish law. A gallows; the punishment of hanging. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 4, § 1.

HORE. (Law Fr.) Now; hour; the present time. Kelham.

HORN. In old Scotch practice. A kind of trumpet used in denouncing contumacious persons, rebels, and outlaws, which was done with three blasts of the horn by the king's sergeant. This was called "putting to the horn," and the party so denounced was said to be "at the horn." Bell, Dict.; Skene de Verb. Sign.; 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, pp. 77, 80.

HORN TENURE. Tenure by winding a horn on approach of enemy, called "tenure by cornage." If lands were held by this tenure of the king, it was grand serjeantry; if of a private person, knight service. Many anciently so held their lands towards the Picts' Wall. Co. Litt. § 156; Camden, Brit. 609.

HORN WITH HORN. A phrase used to describe the coming together of horned beasts of different species.

HORNGELD. (Sax.) In old English law. A tax within a forest, paid for horned beasts. Cowell; Blount.

HORNING. In Scotch law. A process issuing on a decree of court of sessions, or of an inferior court, by which the debtor is charged to perform, in terms of his obligation, or on failure made liable to caption, that is, imprisonment. Bell, Dict. "Horning, Letters of"; "Diligence." The name comes from the ancient custom of proclaiming letters of horning not obeyed, and declaring the recusant a rebel, with three blasts of a horn, called "putting him to the horn." 1 Ross, Lect. 258, 308.

HORS (Law Fr.) Out; out of; without. Hors son sen, out of his mind. Britt. c. 85.

HORS DE SON FEE (Fr. out of his fee). In old English law. A plea to an action brought by one who claimed to be lord for rent services as issuing out of his land, by which the defendant asserted that the land in question was out of the fee of the demandant. 9 Coke, 30; 2 Mod. 104.

HORS PRIS (Law Fr.) Except.

HORSE. Until a horse has attained the age of four years, he is called a "colt." 1 Russ. & R. 416. This word is sometimes used as a generic name for all animals of the horse kind. 3 Brev. (N. C.) 9. See Yelv. 67a.

HOSPEL. (Lat.) In civil and old English law. A guest. 8 Co. 32, Calye's case. A host or entertainer. Calv. Lex. More commonly hospitator.

HOSPITATOR (Lat.) A host or entertainer.

Hospitator communis, an innkeeper. 8 Coke, 32.

Hospitator magnus, the marshal of a camp.

HOSPITIA. Inns. Hospitia communia, common inns. Reg. Orig. 105. Hospitia curiae, inns of court. Hospitia cancellariae, inns of chancery. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 428, 429; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 120.

HOSTAGE. A person delivered into the possession of a public enemy in the time of war, as a security for the performance of a contract entered into between the belligerents.

Hostages are frequently given as a security for the payment of a ransom bill, and if they should die, their death would not discharge the contract. 3 Burrows, 1734; 1 Kent, Comm. 106; Dane, Abr. Index.

HOSTELLAGIUM. In English law. A right reserved to the lords to be lodged and entertained in the houses of their tenants.

HOSTES. Enemies.

"Enemies are those who declare war against us, or against whom we declare war publicly; all others are pirates or robbers." Dig. 50. 16. 118. See "Enemy."

HOSTES SUNT QUI NOBIS VEL QUIBUS NOS BELLUM DECERNIMUS; CAETERI TRADITORES VEL PRAEDONES SUNT. Enemies are those upon whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates. 7 Coke, 24; Dig. 50. 16. 118; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 257.

HOSTICIDE. One who kills an enemy.

HOSTILE. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. See 1 Kent, Comm. c. 4.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. See "Embargo."

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i. e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Rapalje & L.

HOSTILITY. A state of open enmity; open war. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 1191.

Permanent hostility exists when the individual is a citizen or subject of the government at war.

Temporary hostility exists when the individual happens to be domiciliated or resident in the country of one of the belligerents. In this latter case, the individual may throw off the national character he has thus acquired by residence, when he puts himself in motion, bona fide, to quit the country sine animo revertendi. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 12; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 14. See "Enemy"; "Domicile."

HOTCHPOT, HODGE-PODGE, or Hotchpotch. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

The bringing together all the personal estate of the deceased, with the advancements he has made to his children, in order that the same may be divided agreeably to the provisions of the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates.

In bringing an advancement into hotchpot, the donee is not required to account for the profits of the thing given. For example, he is not required to bring into hotchpot the produce of negroes, nor the interest of money. The property must be accounted for at its value when given. 1 Wash. (Va.) 224; 17 Mass. 358; 3 Pick. (Mass.) 450; 2 Desaus. (S. C.) 127; 3 Rand. (Va.) 117, 559. See "Advancement."

HOTEL. A public house for the entertainment of travelers and casual guests. 44 N. J. Law, 492.

The term is synonymous with "inn" or "tavern." 2 Daly (N. Y.) 17; 84 Ala. 452; 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311.

HOT-WATER ORDEAL. See "Ordeal."

HOUR. (Lat. hora). The twenty-fourth part of a day, consisting of sixty minutes.

HOUR OF CAUSE. In Scotch practice. The hour when a court is met. 3 How. St. Tr. 603.

HOUSE. "In a general sense, a building or shed intended or used as a shelter or habitation for animals of any kind; but appropriately a building or edifice for the habitation of man; a dwelling place." Webster, quoted in 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 292.

Several buildings, so constructed that they may be used as an entirety, may constitute a "house." 9 Ch. Div. 425.

"House" has been variously held to mean "dwelling house" (11 Abb. Pr. [N. Y.] 292), or to include buildings used for other purposes (37 Tex. 412; 9 Ch. Div. 425), according to the context.

HOUSE BOTE. An allowance of necessary timber out of the landlord's woods for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. This belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life. House hote is said to be of two kinds, estoveriam uedificandi et ardendi. Co. Litt. 41.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament.

It is composed of the representatives of the people, as distinguished from the house of lords, which is composed of the nobility. It consists of six hundred and seventy members, elected as follows: Four hundred and ninety-five from England and Wales, seventy-two from Scotland, and one hundred and three from Ireland. See "Parliament"; "High Court of Parliament."

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. A place for the imprisonment of those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME. A bawdy house (q.v.); a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. 5 Ired. (N. C.) 603. See 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26; 21 N. H. 345; 33 Conn. 91.

HOUSE OF LORDS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament.

This body is the supreme court of judicature in the kingdom. It has no original jurisdiction, but is the court of appeal in the last resort, with a few exceptions, and under some limitations as to the right, from the inferior courts upon appeal or writ of error for mistake of law. Appeals lie to this tribunal from Scotch and Irish courts, in some cases. See St. 4 Geo. IV. c. 85, as to Scotch, and St. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67, art. 8, as to Irish, appeals.

This body, when sitting as a court of law, is presided over by the lord chancellor, whose attendance alone is in any respect compulsory, and is composed of as many of its members who have filled judicial stations as choose to attend. Three laymen also attend in rotation, but do not vote upon judicial matters. 11 Clark & F. 421. In the absence of the chancellor, deputy speakers, who were members of the profession, but not of the house, have been appointed. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 56.

It sits also to try impeachments. See "Impeachment"; "High Court of Parliament"; "Parliament."

HOUSE OF REFUGE. A prison for juvenile delinquents.

HOUSEBREAKING. In criminal law. The breaking and entering the dwelling house of another, by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary.

This crime is of a local character, and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment.

HOUSEHOLD. Those who dwell under the same roof, and constitute a family. Webster. But it is not necessary that they should be under a roof, or that the father of the family be with it, if the mother and children keep together so as to constitute a family. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402.

Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household, or the ornament of the house; as, plate, linen, china, both useful and ornamental, and pictures. But goods or plate in the hands of testator in the way of his trade will not pass, nor books, nor wines. 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 591, 596, note; 1 Ves. Sr. 97; 2 Williams, Ex'rs (Am. Ed.) 1017; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329. See "Furniture."

HOUSEHOLD GOODS. In wills. This expression will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house, but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals, nor guns and pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defense of house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass. 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 589; 1 Rep. Leg. 253. See "Goods."

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. Words sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under the term (2 Freem. Ch. 64), but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, and choses in action, which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass. 15 Ves. 319. Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under utensils of "household stuff." 2 P. Wms. 302. In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house. Swinb. Wills, pt. 7, § 10, p. 484.

HOUSEHOLDER. Master or chief of a family; one who keeps house with his family. Webster. It "means more than the mere occupant of a room or house. It implies the idea of a domestic establishment." 37 Ala. 145. But a man who has absconded from the state, and left his wife and children remaining together as a family, was for their benefit held to be a householder. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402. And a single man renting a house in which he lodged with a younger brother has been held a householder. 2 Tex. App. 432.

A keeper of a tavern or boarding house, or a master or mistress of a dwelling house. 1 Supp. Rev. St. Mass. 1836-1853, Index, p. 170. A person having and providing for a household. The character is not lost by a temporary cessation from housekeeping. 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 456; 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who occupies a house.

A person who occupies every room in the house, under a lease, except one, which is reserved for his landlord, who pays all the taxes, is not a housekeeper. 1 Chit. Bailm. 502. Nor is a person a housekeeper who takes a house which he afterwards underlets to another, whom the landlord refuses to accept as his tenant. In this case, the under tenant paid the taxes, and let to the tenant the first floor of the house, and the rent was paid for the whole house to the tenant, who paid it to the landlord. Id. note.

In order to make the party a housekeeper, he must be in actual possession of the house (1 Chit. Bailm. 288) and must occupy a whole house. See 1 Barn. & C. 178; 2 Term R. 406; 3 Petersd. Abr. 103, note; 2 Mart. (La.) 313.

The term is rarely, if ever, used in American law.

HOVEL. A place used by husbandmen to set their ploughs, carts, and other farming utensils out of the rain and sun. Law Lat. Dict. A shed; a cottage; a mean house.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy, or small coasting vessel.

Hoymen are liable as common carriers. Story, Bailm. § 496.

HUDE-GELD. In old English law. A compensation for an assault (transgressio illata) upon a trespassing servant (servus). Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for hinegeld. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20. Also, the price of one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. Du Cange.

HUE AND CRY. In old English law. A pursuit of one who had committed felony, by the highway.

The meaning of "hue" is said to be "shout," from the Saxon huer; but this word also means "to foot," and it may be reasonably questioned whether the term may not be "up foot and cry"; in other words, run and cry after the felon. We have a mention of hue and cry as early as Edward I.; and by the Statute of Winchester (13 Edw. I.), "immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and county to county, by horsemen and footmen, to the seaside. The constable (the person being described, etc.) is to call upon the parishioners to assist him in the pursuit in his precinct, and to give notice to the next constable, who is to do the same as the first, etc. If the county will not answer the bodies of the offenders, the whole hundred shall be answerable for the robberies there committed, etc." A person engaged in the hue and cry apprehending a felon was, on the felon's conviction, entitled to forty pounds, on a certificate of the judge or justice before whom there was conviction, as well as to the felon's horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken with him, subject to the rights of other persons therein. Wood, Inst. 370-373. See 2 Hale, P. C. 100.

HUEBRA. In Spanish law. An acre of land, or as much as can be ploughed in a day by two oxen. 2 White, New Coll. 49.

HUISSIER. An usher of the court; an officer who serves process.

In France, an officer of this name performs many of the duties of an English sheriff or constable. In Canada, there may be many huissiers in each county, whose acts are independent of each other; while there can be but one sheriff, who is presumed cognizant of the acts of his subordinates. The French huissier certifies his process; the Canadian merely serves what is put into his hands.

HUMBUG. Humbug is an imposition, imposture, deception; and as a verb, signifies to impose upon, to cozen, to swindle; all implying intention to misrepresent, by the assertion of what is not the actual condition or the suppression or concealment of what is. 65 Ill. App. 432, 433.

HUNDRED. In English law. A division of a county, which some make to have originally consisted of one hundred hides of land; others of ten tithings, or one hundred free families.

It differed in size in different parts of England. 1 Steph. Comm. 122. In many cases, when an offense is committed within a hundred, the inhabitants are liable to make good the damage if they do not produce the offender. See 12 East, 244.

This system was probably introduced by Alfred (though mentioned in the Poenitentiae of Egbert, where it seems to be the addition of a later age), being borrowed from the continent, where it was known to the Franks, under the name centena, in the sixth century. See Charlemagne, Cap. lib. 3, c. 10.

It had a court attached to it, called the "hundred court," or "hundred lagh," like a court baron, except in its larger territorial jurisdiction. It was governed by the hundredary (hundredarius). 9 Coke, 25. The jurisdiction of this court has devolved upon the county courts. Jacob; Du Cange. Hundred penny was a tax collected from the hundred by its lord or by the sheriff. Hundred setena signified the dwellers in the hundred. Charta Edg. Reg. Mon. Angl. tom. 1, p. 16.

HUNDRED COURT. An inferior court, whose jurisdiction extended to the whole territory embraced in a hundred. They were courts not of record; the freeholders were the judges; they were held before the steward of the manor as register; and they resembled courts baron in all respects except in their territorial jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Comm. 34, 35.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. An assembly among the Saxons of the freeholders of a hundred.

It met twelve times in the year, originally; though subsequently its meetings became less frequent.

It had an extensive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, and was the predecessor of the county court and sheriff's tourn, and possessed very similar powers. Spelman, "Hundredum"; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7.

HUNDRED LAGH (Saxon). Liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman. See Cowell; Blount.

HUNDRED PENNY. In old English law. A tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred. Spelman, voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDRED SETENA. In Saxon law. The dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred. Cowell; Blount. Spelman suggests the reading of scatena from Saxon scæt, a tax.

HUNDREDARIUS. In old English law. A hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it. Spelman, voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDREDARY (Lat. hundredarius). The chief magistrate of a hundred. Du Cange.

HUNDREDORS. The inhabitants of a hundred, who, by several statutes, are held to be liable, in the cases therein specified, to make good the loss sustained by persons within the hundred by robbery or other violence, therein also specified. The principal of these statutes are 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 1, § 4; 28 Edw. III. c. 11; 27 Eliz. c. 13; 29 Car. II. c. 7; 8 Geo. II. c. 16; 22 Geo. II. c. 24.

Persons serving on juries, or fit to be impanelled thereon, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 6. And some such were necessarily on every panel till 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16. 4 Steph. Comm. 370. Him that had the jurisdiction of the hundred; the bailiff of the hundred. Horne, Mirr. Just. lib. 1; Jacob.

HUNTING. The act of pursuing and taking wild animals; the chase.

The grant or reservation of "hunting, shooting, fishing and sporting" includes all things generally hunted, shot, fished, or sported after, in contradistinction to small birds and things of a similar character, e. g., rats and sparrows. 34 L. J. C. P. 261; 19 C. B. N. S. 264. Rabbits would be included in such a reservation. A covenant for quiet enjoyment in such a grant or reservation, does not imply any undertaking restricting the ordinary use of the land. 44 L. J. Ch. 334; 10 Ch. 355.

HURDLE. In English law. A species of sledge, used to draw traitors to execution.

HURTO. In Spanish law. Theft. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 20.

HUSBAND. A man who has a wife.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See "Ship's Husband."

HUSBRECE. Housebreaking; burglary.

HUSCARLE. In old English law. A house servant or domestic; a man of the household. Spelman.

A king's vassal, thane, or baron; an earl's man or vassal. A term of frequent occurrence in Domesday Book.

HUSGABLUM. In old records. House rent; or a tax or tribute laid upon a house. 3 Mon. Angl. 254; Cowell; Blount.

HUSTINGS. In English law. The name of a court held before the lord mayor and aldermen of London. It is the principal and supreme court of the city. See 2 Inst. 327; St. Armand, Hist. Essay, Leg. Power Eng. 75. This name is also applied to some courts in Virginia.

The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

The term is used in Canadian as well as English law. The manner of conducting an election in Canada and England for a member of the legislative body is substantially as follows: Upon warrant from the proper officer, a writ issues from the clerk of the crown in chancery, directed to the sheriff, registrar, or other returning officer of the electoral division. He thereupon issues and posts in public places a proclamation appointing a day, place and hour for his holding an election, and also fixing a day when a poll will be opened, if one be demanded and granted. The first day is called "nomination day." On this day he proceeds to the hustings, which must be in the open air, and accessible to all the voters, proclaims the purpose of the election, and calls upon the electors present to name the person they require to represent them. The electors then make a show of hands, which may result in an election, or a poll may be demanded by a candidate or by any elector. On such demand, a poll is opened in each township, ward, or parish of the election district, at the places prescribed by statute.

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR. Hue and cry (q. v.).

HYDRAULIC MINING. (Hydraulicng.) The process of mining gold and other precious minerals by forcing water, at great pressure through pipes or hose upon deposits of earth which contain the minerals. A considerable portion of the earth and debris is carried away through the sluices, at the bottom of which the heavier minerals remain. 81 Fed. 243; 9 Saw. 441; Raymond, Gloss. Mining terms; Bancroft's Handbook Mining.

HYPOBOLUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry. Tech. Dict.

HYPOTHEC. In Scotch law. A right over a subject which is acquired by a creditor while the subject remains in the possession of the debtor.

HYPOTHECA. In civil law. That kind of pledge in which the possession of the thing pledged remains with the debtor; the obligation resting in mere contact. Dig. 1. 3. 7. 9. 2.

HYPOTHECARIA ACTIO. In civil law. An hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged. Inst. 4. 6. 7; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 356. Adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana, under the name of "l'action hypothecaire" (translated, "action of mortgage"). Article 3361.

HYPOTHECARIJ CREDITORES. In civil law. Hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca (q. v.). Calv. Lex.

HYPOTHECATE. To pledge a thing without delivering the possession of it to the pledgee. "The master, when abroad, and in the absence of the owner, may hypothecate the ship, freight, and cargo, to raise money requisite for the completion of the voyage." 3 Kent, Comm. 171.

HYPOTHECATION. A right which a creditor has over a thing belonging to another, and which consists in a power to cause it to be sold, in order to be paid his claim out of the proceeds.

There are two species of hypothecation, one called "pledge" (pignus), and the other properly denominated "hypothecation." Pledge is that species of hypothecation which is contracted by the delivery by the debtor to the creditor of the thing hypothecated. Hypothecation, properly so called, is that which is contracted without delivery of the thing hypothecated. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 25.

In the common law, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law,—that is, of a pledge of a chattel without possession by the pledgee,—are scarcely to be found; cases of bottomry bonds and claims for seamen's wages against ships are the nearest approach to it; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations. Story, Bailm. § 288. It seems that chattels not in existence, though they cannot be pledged, can be hypothecated, so that the lien will attach as soon as the chattel has been produced. 14 Pick. (Mass.) 497.

(1) Conventional hypothecations are those which arise by agreement of the parties. Dig. 20. 1. 5.

(2) General hypothecations are those by which the debtor hypothecates to his creditor all his estate which he has or may have.

(3) Legal hypothecations are those which arise without any contract therefor between the parties, express or implied.

(4) Special hypothecations are hypothecations of a particular estate.

(5) Tacit hypothecations are such as the law gives in certain cases, without the consent of the parties, to secure the creditor. They are a species of legal hypothecation.

Thus, the public treasury has a lien over the property of public debtors. Code, 8. 15. 1. The landlord has a lien on the goods in the house leased, for the payment of his rent. Dig. 20. 2. 2; Code, 8. 15. 7. The builder has a lien, for his bill, on the house he has built. Dig. 20. 1. The pupil has a lien on the property of the guardian for the balance of his account. Dig. 46. 6. 22; Code, 5. 37. 20. There is hypothecation of the goods of a testator for the security of the legacy. Code, 6. 43. 1.

See, generally, Poth. de l'Hyp.; Poth. Cont. (Cushing Ed.) 145, note 26; Merlin, Repert.; 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 195; Abb. Shipp.; Pars. Mar. Law.

HYPOTHECATION BOND. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

HYPOTHEQUE. In French law. Hypothecation; the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.

HYPOTHETICAL. Based upon an assumption or hypothesis, as a hypothetical question is one which calls for the opinion of the witness upon facts assumed by the question.

HYSTEROPOTMOI. In Roman law. Those who, having been thought dead, unexpectedly returned. They were not permitted to enter their own houses by the door, but through a hole in the roof.

I

I, at the beginning of words having the first syllable In, commonly denotes a derivation from the Latin, as E, in a similar position, indicates a derivation from the French. But I and E were formerly, in many instances, used as initial letters indifferently, and in some words the practice continues to be retained. See E.

I. E. An abbreviation for "id est," that is; that is to say.

I. O. U. In common law. A memorandum of debt in use among merchants. It is not a promissory note, as it contains no direct promise to pay. See 4 Car. & P. 324; 1 Man. & G. 46; 1 C. B. 543; 1 Esp. 426; Pars. Bills & Notes.

IBI SEMPER DEBET FIERI TRIATIO ubi Juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed. 7 Coke, 1b.

IBIDEM (Lat.) In the same book or place; the same subject. Abbreviated ib or ibid.

ICTUS (Lat.) In old English law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, contusion, or swelling produced by a blow from a club or stone, as distinguished from "plaga," a wound. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3.

ICTUS ORBIS (Lat.) In medical jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin.

When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound." Bracton, lib. 2, tr. 2, cc. 5, 24.

Ictus is often used by medical authors in the sense of percussus. It is applied to the pulsation of the arteries, to any external lesion of the body produced by violence; also to the wound inflicted by a scorpion or venomous reptile. Orbis is used in the sense of circle, circuit, rotundity. It is applied, also, to the eyeballs, oculi dicuntur orbis. Cast. Lex. Med.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI potest. That is certain which may be rendered certain. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 929; 2 Bl. Comm. 143; 4 Kent, Comm. 462; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179; Broom, Leg. Max. (8d London Ed.) 556.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself. 9 Coke, 47a.

ID EST (Lat.) That is. Commonly abbreviated "i. e."

ID PERFECTUM EST QUOD EX OMNIBUS suis partibus constat. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts. 9 Coke, 9.

ID POSSUMUS QUOD DE JURE POSSUMUS. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully. Lane, 116.

ID QUOD EST MAGIS REMOTUM, NON trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case. Co. Litt. 164.

ID QUOD NOSTRUM EST, SINE FACTO nostro, ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our act. Dig. 50. 17. 11. But this must be understood with this qualification, that the government may take property for public use, paying the owner its value. The title to property may also be acquired, without the consent of the owner, by a judgment of a competent tribunal.

ID SOLUM NOSTRUM QUOD DEBITIS deductis nostrum est. That only is ours which remains to us after deduction of debts. Tray. Lat. Max. 227.

IDEM (Lat. the same). According to Lord Coke, idem has two significations: Idem syllabis seu verbis, the same in syllables or words, and idem re et sensu, the same in substance and in sense. 10 Coke, 124a.

—In Old Practice. The said or aforesaid. Towns. Pl. 15, 16.

IDEM AGENS ET PATIENS ESSE NON potest. To be at once the person acting and the person acted upon is impossible. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40.

IDEM EST FACERE, ET NOLLE PROHIBERE cum possis. It is the same thing to do a thing as not to prohibit it when in your power. 3 Co. Inst. 158.

IDEM EST NIHIL DICERE ET INSUFFICIENTER dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing, and not to say sufficiently. 2 Inst. 178.

IDEM EST NON ESSE, ET NON APPARERE. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be. Broom, Leg. Max. 165.

IDEM EST NON PROBARI ET NON ESSE; non deficit jus, sed probatio. What does not appear, and what is not, are the same; it is not the defect of the law, but the want of proof.

IDEM EST SCIRE AUT SCIRE DEBET aut potuisse. To be able to know is the same as to know. This maxim is applied to the duty of every one to know the law.

IDEM NON ESSE ET NON APPARERE. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207.

IDEM SEMPER ANTECEDENTI PROXIMO refertur. Idem always relates to the next antecedent. Co. Litt. 385.

IDEM SONANS. Sounding the same. A term applied to names which are spelled differently, but have substantially the same sound; the difference in spelling being held in such case not to constitute a variance. Thus, "Hutson" for "Hudson" (7 Miss. 142), "Keen" for "Keene" (Thach. C. C. [Mass.] 67), and "Deadema" for "Diadema" (2 Ired. [N. C.] 346).

IDENTIFICATION. The establishment of identity (q. v.).

IDENTITAS VERA COLLIGITUR EX multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a number of signs. Bac. Reg. 29.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS. (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ which lies for a person taken upon a capias or exigent, and committed to prison, for another man of the same name. This writ directs the sheriff to inquire whether he be the person against whom the action was brought, and if not, then to discharge him. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 267. In practice, a party in this condition would be relieved by habeas corpus.

IDENTITY. Sameness; the state of being the same as something described; the fact that a person or thing is the same as it is represented or charged to be.

IDEO (Lat.) Therefore. Calv. Lex.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST (Law Lat.) Therefore it is considered. The initial words of the ancient entry of judgment in an action at law, and by which that part of the record is sometimes called in modern practice.

IDES (Lat.) In civil law. A day in the month from which the computation of days was made.

The divisions of months adopted among the Romans were as follows: The calends occurred on the first day of every month, and were distinguished by adding the name of the month; as, calendis Januarii, the first of January. The nonas occurred on the fifth of each month, with the exception of March, July, October, and May, in which months they occurred on the seventh. The ides occurred always on the ninth day after the nonas, thus dividing the month equally. In fact, the ides would seem to have been the primal division, occurring in the middle of the month, nearly. Other days than the three designated were indicated by the number of days which would elapse before the next succeeding point of division. Thus, the second of April is the quarto nonas Aprilis; the second of March, the sexto nonas Martii; the eighth of March, octavus idus Martii; the eighth of April, sextus idus Aprilis; the sixteenth of March, decimus septimus calendis Aprilis.

This system is still used in some chanceries in Europe, and we therefore give the following:

Table of the Calends, Nones, and Ides.

Jan., 31 days.	Aug., 31 days.	Dec., 31 days.	March, July, Oct., 31 days.	May, Sept., Nov., 30 days.	April, June, 30 days.	February 28, bisextile, 29 days.

IDIOCHIRA (Gr.) In civil law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from one publicly executed. Vicat.

IDIOCY. In medical jurisprudence. A form of insanity, resulting either from congenital defect, or some obstacle to the development of the faculties in infancy.

It is an imbecility or sterility of mind, and not a perversion of the understanding. Chit. Med. Jur. 327, note (s) 345; 1 Russ. Crimes, 6; Bac. Abr. "Idiot" (A); Brooke, Abr.; Co. Litt. 246, 247; 3 Mod. 44; 1 Vern. 16; 4 Coke, 126; 1 Bl. Comm. 302.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2.

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO, WRIT DE. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 232.

IDONEARE (Law Lat.) To make or prove one's self innocent. Spelman.

IDONEUS (Lat.) Sufficient; fit; adequate. He is said to be idoneus homo who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and civility; and if an officer, etc., be not idoneus, he may be discharged. 8 Coke,

41. If a clerk presented to a living is not persona idonea, which includes ability in learning, honesty of conversation, etc., the bishop may refuse him. And to a quare impedit brought thereon, "in literatura minus sufficiens is a good plea, without setting forth the particular kind of learning." 5 Coke, 58; 6 Coke, 49b; 2 Inst. 681; 3 Lev. 311; 1 Show. 88; Wood. Inst. 32, 33.

So of things: Idonea quantitas. Calv. Lex. Idonea paries, a wall sufficient or able to bear the weight.

—In Civil Law. Rich; solvent; e. g., idoneus tutor, idoneus debitor. Calv. Lex.

IDONIETAS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Ability or fitness (of a parson). Artic. Cleri, c. 13.

IGLISE. (Law. Fr.) A church. Kelham. Another form of eglise.

IGNIS JUDICIUM (Lat.) In old English law. The judicial trial by fire.

IGNITEGIUM (from ignis, fire, and tegere, to cover). In old English law. The curfew, or evening bell. Cowell. See "Curfew."

IGNOMINY. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem.

IGNORAMUS (Lat. we are ignorant or uninformed). In practice. The word which is written on a bill by a grand jury when they find that there is not sufficient evidence to authorize their finding it a true bill. Sometimes, instead of using this word, the grand jury indorse on the bill, "Not found." 4 Bl. Comm. 305.

IGNORANCE. The lack of knowledge.

Ignorance is distinguishable from "error" or "mistake." Ignorance is want of knowledge; error is the nonconformity or opposition of ideas to the truth. Considered as a motive of actions, ignorance differs but little from error. They are generally found together, and what is said of one is said of both. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 108 et seq. See 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 567.

(1) Ignorance of fact is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question. It would be an error resulting from ignorance of fact, if a man believed a certain woman to be unmarried and free, when, in fact, she was a married woman, and were he to marry her under that belief, he would not be criminally responsible. 6 Allen (Mass.) 591. Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another state, is ignorance of fact. 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112. See, for the difference between ignorance of law and ignorance of fact, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112.

(2) Ignorance of law consists in the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know. The law forbids any one to marry a woman whose husband is living. If any man, then, imagined he could marry such a woman, he would be ignorant of the law, and if he married her he would commit an error as to a matter of law. How far a party is bound to fulfill a promise to pay, upon a supposed liability, and in ignorance of the law, see 12 East, 38; 2 Jac. & W. 263; 5 Taunt. 143; 3 Barn. & C. 280; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 512, 516; 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 674; 4 Mass. 342; 7 Mass. 452, 488; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112; 1 Bin. (Pa.) 27. Ignorance of law is a passive state, and is distinguished from actual mistake of law. 7 Ga. 70.

(3) Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance, so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business. 2 Kent, Comm. 367.

(4) Nonessential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract; as, if a man should marry a woman whom he believed to be rich, and she proved to be poor, this fact would not be essential, and the marriage would therefore be good.

(5) Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. A neglect to become acquainted with them is therefore voluntary ignorance. Doctor & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

(6) Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which could not have been avoided by any means at the party's command, as of a law not yet promulgated.

IGNORANCE OF LAW. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA. Ignorance; want of knowledge. Distinguished from mistake, error or wrong conception. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 165. Divided in the civil law into ignorantia facti, ignorance of fact, and ignorantia juris, ignorance of law. Dig. 22. 6. Lord Coke adopts this division, adding that the former is twofold,—lectionis et lingue, ignorance of reading, and ignorance of language. 2 Coke, 3b.

IGNORANTIA EORUM QUAE QUIS scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things which every one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42. See Tindal, C. J., 10 Clark & F. 210; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 245; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 27.

IGNORANTIA EXCUSATUR, NON JURIS sed facti. Ignorance of fact may excuse, but not ignorance of law. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA FACTI EXCUSAT; IGNORANTIA JURIS non excusat. Ignorance of facts excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse. 1 Coke, 177; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3828; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 231; 1 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 119, note. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA JUDICIS EST CALAMITAS INNOCENTIS. The ignorance of the judge is the misfortune of the innocent. 2 Inst. 591.

IGNORANTIA JURIS NON EXCUSAT. Ignorance of the law is no excuse. 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 284; 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 586, 588; 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 189, 195; 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 467, 472.

The true meaning of that maxim is that parties cannot excuse themselves from liability from all civil or criminal consequences of their acts by alleging ignorance of the law, but there is no presumption that parties must be taken to know all the legal consequences of their acts, and especially where difficult questions of law, or of the practice of the court are involved. 13 App. Cas. 78.

IGNORANTIA JURIS QUOD QUISQUE SCIRE TENETUR, NEMINEM EXCUSAT. Ignorance of law which every one is bound to know excuses no one. 2 Coke, 3b; 1 Plowd. 343; per Ld. Campbell, 9 Clark & F. 324; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 232; 7 Car. & P. 456; 2 Kent, Comm. 491.

IGNORANTIA LEGIS NEMINEM EXCUSAT. Ignorance of law excuses no one. See "Ignorance"; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 111.

IGNORANTIS TERMINIS, IGNORATUR ET ARS. Terms being unknown, the art also is unknown. Co. Litt. 2.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of. Webster. To pass over as if not in existence. A grand jury are said to ignore a bill when they do not find the evidence such as to induce them to make a presentment. Brande.

IGNOSCITUR EI QUI SANGUINEM SUUM QUALITER REDEMPTUM VOLUIT. The law holds him excused who chose that his blood should be redeemed on any terms. Dig. 48. 21. 1; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 131.

IKENILD STREET. One of the four Roman roads in England.

ILL FAME. A technical expression, which not only means bad character as generally understood, but applies to every person, whatever may be his conduct and character in life, who visits bawdy houses, gaming houses, and other places which are of ill fame. 1 Rogers, City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 67; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 558; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 80; Ayliffe, Par. 276; 1 Hagg. Ecc. 720, 767; 1 Hagg. Consist. 302; 2 Hagg. Consist. 24; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 44. See "House of Ill Fame."

ILLATA ET INVECTA. In Roman law. Things brought into the house by the tenant for his use, and which were liable to distress (jus hypothecae) by the landlord.

ILLEGAL. Contrary to law. Not synonymous with unlawful (q. v.).

ILLEGALITY. Signifies that which is contrary to the principles of law, and denotes a complete defect in the proceedings. 1 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 432.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to law. It is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock.

ILLEVIABLE. A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied. Nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLICENCIATUS (Lat.) Without license.

ILLCIT. What is unlawful; what is forbidden by the law.

This word is frequently used in policies of insurance, where the assured warrants against illicit trade. By "illicit trade" is understood that "which is made unlawful by the laws of the country to which the object is bound." The assured, having entered into this warranty, is required to do no act which will expose the vessel to be legally condemned. 2 La. 337, 338. See "Insurance"; "Warranty."

ILLCITE. Unlawfully.

This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful; as, in the case of a riot. 2 Hawk. P. C. 25, § 96.

ILLCITUM COLLEGIUM. An illegal corporation.

ILLITERATE. Unacquainted with letters.

ILLOCABLE. Incapable of being hired out.

ILLUD (Lat.) That.

ILLUD QUOD ALIAS LICITUM NON EST, NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM, ET NECESSITAS INDUCIT PRIVILEGIUM QUOD JURE PRIVATUR. That which is not otherwise lawful necessity makes lawful, and necessity makes a privilege which supersedes the law. 10 Coke, 61.

ILLUD QUOD ALTERI UNITUR EXTINGUITUR, NEQUE AMPLIUS PER SE VACARE LICET. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

ILLUSION. A species of mania, in which the sensibility of the nervous system is altered, excited, weakened, or perverted.

The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequent in a state of health, but reason corrects the errors, and dissipates them. A square tower, seen from a distance, may appear round, but, on approaching it, the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflect tion and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken on the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 538; Esquirol, tom. 1, p. 202; Dict. des Sciences Medicales, "Hallucination." See "Hallucination."

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Such an appointment or disposition of property under a power as is merely nominal, and not substantial.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT ACT. St. Wm. IV. c. 46, providing that no appointment shall be impeached in equity on the ground that it is unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal.

IMAGINE. In English law. In cases of treason, the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. In order to complete the offense, there must, however, be an overt act,—the terms "compassing" and "imagining" being synonymous. It has been justly remarked that the words "to compass" and "imagine" are too vague for a statute whose penalty affects the life of a subject. Barr. Obs. St. 248. See "Fiction."

IMBASING. The act of reducing coin below the standard alloy. See 1 Hale, P. C. 102.

IMBECILITY. In medical jurisprudence. A form of insanity consisting in mental deficiency, either congenital, or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

IMBEZZLE. Occasionally used for "embezzle."

IMBRACERY. See "Embracery."

IMMATERIAL. Not material; not essential or important.

IMMATERIAL AVERMENT. In pleading. A statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with, and as descriptive of, what is material. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 186. Such averments must, however, be proved as laid, it is said (Doug. 665), though not if they may be struck out without striking out at the same time the cause of action, and when there is no variance. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 188. See 1 Chit. Pl. 282.

IMMATERIAL ISSUE. In pleading. An issue taken upon some collateral matter, the decision of which will not settle the question in dispute between the parties in action. For example, if in an action of debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of ten dollars and fifty cents at a certain day, the defendant pleads the payment of ten dollars according to the form of the condition, and the plaintiff, instead of demurring, tenders issue upon the payment, it is manifest that, whether this issue be found for the plaintiff or the defendant, it will remain equally uncertain whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, or not; for in an action for the penalty of a bond, conditioned to pay a certain sum, the only material question is whether the exact sum were paid or not, and the question of payment of a part is a question quite beside the legal merits. Hob. 113; 5 Taunt. 386; Cro. Jac. 585; 2 Wm. Saund. 319b. A repleader will be ordered when an immaterial issue is reached, either before or after verdict. 2 Wm. Saund. 319b, note; 1 Rolle, Abr. 86; Cro. Jac. 585. See "Repleader."

IMMEDIATE. At once. "Though in strictness it excludes all mean times, it shall be construed such convenient time as is reasonably requisite for doing the thing." 2 Lev. 77.

It is stronger than the phrase "within a reasonable time," and implies prompt, vigorous action, without any delay. L. R. 4 Q. B. 469.

Acting with nothing interposed or between, or without the intervention of another object as a cause, means, medium or condition; producing its effect by direct agency. 60 Ill. App. 108.

IMMEDIATE DESCENT. Descents have long been distinguished as mediate and immediate, but these terms are susceptible of different interpretations, whence some confusion has been introduced into their legal discussion, since different judges have used them in different senses. In immediate descents there can be no impediment but what ariseth in the parties themselves, but in mediate descents, it is agreed, the disability of being an alien or attainted, in him that is the medius antecessor, will disable the other, though he have no such disability. Where the question is whether the inheritance by a brother from his brother, the father being an alien, is mediate or immediate, it is held after much discussion that the inheritance is immediate, so as not to be affected by the alienage of the father. It is held that in tracing the line of inheritance between brothers or their descendants it is not necessary to name the father as their common ancestor, and that alienism in any ancestor whom it was not necessary to name in tracing such inheritance or descent does not have the effect to impede it. 6 Pet. (U. S.) 112; 155 Ill. 604.

IMMEMORIAL. Time out of mind.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ. Code La. art. 762; 2 Mart. (La.) 214; 7 La. 46; 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. p. 410; Poth. Cont. note 244; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3069, note.

IMMEMORIAL USAGE. A usage which has existed from time immemorial.

IMMEUBLES. In French law. Immovables.

IMMIGRATION. The removing into one place from another. It differs from "emigration," which is the moving from one place into another.

IMMISCERE. (Lat.) In the civil law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with; to take or enter upon an inheritance. Calv. Lex.

IMMISSIO. (Law Lat.) In old English law. A putting in; introduction. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 11.

IMMITTERE. (Lat.) In the civil law. To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calv. Lex. Dig. 50. 17. 242. 1.

In old English law. To put cattle on a common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 20, § 7.

IMMOBILIA SITUM SEQUUNTUR. Immovables follow the law of their locality. 2 Kent, Comm. 67.

IMMOBILIS (Lat.) Immovable. Immobilia, or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 152, § 147; 2 Kent, Comm. 347.

IMMORAL. That which tends to subvert morality or decency. Contracts, etc., tending to sexual immorality furnish the most common examples, but a contract in derogation of religion was held "immoral" in England (L. R. 2 Exch. 230), as was a contract involving the removal of several thousand bodies from a burying ground (1 Cab. & El. 577).

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. For example, an agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties (3 Burrows, 1568; 1 Esp. 13; 1 Bos. & P. 340, 341), an agreement for the value of libellous and immoral pictures (4 Esp. 97), or for printing a libel (2 Starkie, 107), or for an immoral wager (Chit. Cont. 156), cannot, therefore, be enforced. For whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void, quid turpi ex causa promissum est non valet. Inst. 3. 20. 24.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores.

In England, it is not punishable, in some cases, at the common law, on account of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, e. g., adultery. But except in cases belonging to the ecclesiastical courts, the court of king's bench is the custos morum, and may punish delicto contra bonos mores. 3 Burrows, 1438; 1 W. Bl. 94; 2 Strange, 788.

IMMOVABLES. In civil law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself or be removed. Poth. des Choses, § 1.

IMMUNITY. Rights of exemption only—freedom from what otherwise would be a duty or burden. 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 306

An exemption from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform. See Dig. lib. 50, tit. 6; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 821; 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 341.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF A CONTRACT. Any law, which enlarges, abridges, or in any manner changes the intention of the parties to the contract when it is discovered, necessarily impairs the contract itself, which is but the evidence of that intention. 11 Wheaton (U. S.) 256.

Any law impairs the obligation which renders the contract in itself less valuable or less enforceable, whether by changing its terms and stipulations, its legal qualities and conditions, or by regulating the remedy for its enforcement. 15 Rich. (S. C.) 105.

Whether the statute operates to impair debt or the remedy, the result is the same. 5 Lea (Tenn.) 112.

IMPANEL.

—In Old English Practice. To write the names of jurors on a panel, which is an oblong piece of parchment attached to the venire. This is done by the sheriff, or other officer lawfully authorized.

—In American Practice. The word is used of a jury drawn for trial of a particular cause by the clerk, as well as of the general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. Graham, Prac. 275. See 1 Arch. Prac. 365; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 354.

IMPANELLING. Has nothing to do with drawing, selecting, or swearing jurors, but means simply making the list of those who have been selected. 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 441.

IMPARCARE (Law Lat. from in and parcus, a pound or inclosed place). In old English law. To impound. Reg. Orig. 92b.

To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up. Bracton, fol. 124.

IMPARGAMENTUM. The right to impound cattle.

IMPARL. To have delay. Literally, to "speak with" (the plaintiff). The original object of an imparlance was to obtain time for an amicable adjustment. 3 Bl. Comm. 299. But the actual object has long been merely to obtain time to plead. 3 Chit. Prac. 700.

IMPARLANCE (from Fr. parler, to speak). In pleading and practice. Time given by the court to either party to answer the pleading of his opponent; as, either to plead, reply, rejoin, etc.

It is said to be nothing else but the continuance of the cause till a further day. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (C). In this sense, imparlances are no longer allowed in English practice. 3 Chit. Prac. 700.

Time to plead. This is the common signification of the word. 2 Wm. Saund. 1, note 2; 2 Show. 310; Barnes, 346; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 93. In this sense, imparlances are not recognized in American law, the common practice being for the defendant to enter an appearance, when the cause stands continued, until a fixed time has elapsed within which he may file his plea. See "Continuance."

—General Imparlance. The entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception, so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

—General Special Imparlance. Contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea. Tidd, Prac. 418, 419.

—Special Imparlance. Reserves to the defendant all exception to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

See Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (I 19, 20, 21), "Pleader" (D); 1 Chit. Pl. 420; 1 Selton, Prac. 265; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (C).

IMPARSONEE. One in possession of a benefice.

IMPATRONIZATION. The act of a patron in putting one into possession of a benefice.

IMPEACH. To accuse; to question the sufficiency or genuineness of.

To proceed by impeachment (q. v.).

—In the Law of Evidence. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for that purpose.

IMPEACHMENT.

—In English Law. The prosecution of a peer or commoner by the house of commons at the bar of the house of lords for treason, high crimes, or misdemeanors. 6 Enc. Laws Eng. 318.

—In American Law. A proceeding against a public civil officer, ordinarily prosecuted by the more numerous body of the legislature at the bar of the other, for the removal of such officer from office.

—In Practice. An attack on the testimony of a witness by showing his lack of veracity. It is to be distinguished from contradiction, which is an attack on testimony by showing that the facts at issue are other than as testified to.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. A restraint from committing waste upon lands or tenements; or a demand of compensation for waste done by a tenant who has but a particular estate in the land granted, and therefore no right to commit waste.

All tenants for life or any less estate are liable to be impeached for waste, unless they hold without impeachment of waste; in the latter case they may commit waste without being questioned, or any demand for compensation for the waste done. 11 Coke, 82.

IMPECHIARE, or IMPESCARE (Law Lat.) To impeach or accuse. Cowell.

IMPEDIENS (Law Lat.) In old practice. One who hinders; an impeding. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called. Cowell; Blount.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

The disabilities arising from this cause are twofold, viz:

(1) Impedimento dirimente,—such disabilities as render the marriage null, although contracted with the usual legal solemnities.

Among these impediments, some are absolute, others relative. The former cannot be cured, and render the marriage radically null; others may be removed by previous dispensation.

(2) Impedimento, impediens, or prohibitivo,—such disabilities as impede the contracting of a marriage, but do not annul it when contracted.

For the effects of these impediments, see Escriche, Dict. Raz. "Impedimento Prohibitivo."

IMPEDIMENTS. Legal hindrances to making contracts. Some of these impediments are minority, want of reason, coverture, and the like. See "Contract"; "Incapacity."

—In Civil Law. Bars to marriage.

(1) Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable.

(2) Dirimant impediments are those which render a marriage void; as, where one of the contracting parties is already married to another person.

(3) Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment.

(4) Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with regard to each other; as, the marriage of a brother to a sister.

IMPEDITOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A disturber in the action of quare impedit, St. Marlb. c. 12.

IMPENSAE (Lat.) In civil law. Expense; outlay. Divided into necessariae, for necessity, utiles, for use, and voluptuarias, for luxury. Dig. 79. 6. 14; Vocat.

IMPERATIVE. See "Mandatory."

IMPERATOR. Emperor. This was the title of the Roman emperor and of the English kings before the Conquest. 1 Bl. Comm. 242.

IMPERFECT OBLIGATIONS. Those which are not, in view of the law, of binding force.

IMPERFECT TRUST. A trust which has not been executed. See "Trust."

IMPERII MAJESTAS EST TUTELAE SALUS. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection. Co. Litt. 64.

IMPERITIA. Unskillfulness.

IMPERITIA CULPAE AENUMERATUR. Ignorance or want of skill is considered a fault, i. e., a negligence, for which one who professes skill is responsible. Dig. 50. 17. 132; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1004; 2 Kent, Comm. 588; 4 Ark. 523.

IMPERITIA EST MAXIMA MECHANORUM POENA. Lack of skill is the greatest punishment of artisans. 11 Coke, 54a.

IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws. This is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 58.

IMPERSONALITAS NON CONCLUDIT nec ligat. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds. Co. Litt. 352.

IMPERTINENT (Lat. in, not, pertinens, pertaining or relating to).

—In Equity Pleading. A term applied to matters introduced into a bill, answer, or other proceeding in a suit which are not properly before the court for decision at that particular stage of the suit. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 506; 3 Story (U. S.) 13; 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 555; 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 439. Impertinent matter is not necessarily scandalous; but all scandalous matter is impertinent.

—In Pleading at Law. A term applied to matters not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defense. Cowp. 683; 5 East, 275; 2 Mass. 283. It constitutes surplusage (q. v.).

—In Practice. A term applied to evidence of facts which do not belong to the matter in question. That which is immaterial is, in general, impertinent, and that which is material is not, in general, impertinent. 1 McClell. & Y. 337. Impertinent matter in the interrogatories to witnesses or their answers, in equity, will be expunged after reference to a master at the cost of the offending party. 2 Younge & C. 445.

IMPESCARE. See "Impechiare."

IMPETITIO VASTI. Impeachment of waste (q. v.).

IMPETRARE (Lat.) In old English practice. To obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. Bracton, fols. 57, 172b. This application of the word seems to be derived from the civil law. Calv. Lex.

IMPETRATION. The obtaining anything by prayer or petition. In the ancient English statutes, it signifies a preobtaining of churches benefices in England from the church of Rome, which belonged to the gift of the king or other lay patrons.

IMPIER. Umpire.

IMPIERMENT (Law Fr.) Impairing or prejudicing. St. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Blount; Kelham.

IMPIGNORATA (Law Lat.) Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data); mortgaged. A term applied in Bracton to land. Bracton, fol. 20.

IMPIUS ET CRUELIS JUDICANDUS est qui libertati non favet. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty. Co. Litt. 124.

IMPLACITARE (Law Lat. from in, into, and placitum, a plea or suit). In old English law and practice. To subject to an action, or placitum; to implead or sue.

IMPLACITATUS (Law Lat.) Impleaded; sued.

IMPLEAD. In practice. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. 9 Watts (Pa.) 47.

IMPLEADED (Lat. implacitatus). Sued or prosecuted. Still used in practice.

The word is not synonymous with the expression "et al.," but when used in formal pleadings and in court records the word "impleaded" is properly used following the name of a defendant when there is more than one defendant and only one defendant appears, to designate that there are defendants other than the defendant who is then present in court.

In actions where there are more defendants than one and one answers, his name is sometimes stated thus in the title of his answer or plea: "Richard Roe, impleaded with John Doe," signifying that the two are sued together but one only interposed the plea. 250 Ill. 518, 519.

IMPLEMENTS (Lat. impleo, to fill). Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. 11 Metc. (Mass.) 82.

Whatever may supply wants. Particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor; as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Webster. Things of necessary use in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed. Also, the furniture of a house, as all household goods and implements, such as tables, presses, cupboards, etc. Termes de la Ley; Jacob; Tomlins; Williams.

The term does not apply to animals. 5 Ark. 41; 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79.

IMPLICATA (Lat.) Small adventures for which the freight contracted for is to be received, although the cargo may be lost. Targa, c. 34; Emerig. Mar. Loans, § 5.

IMPLICATION. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. See terms defined under "Implied."

IMPLIED. Arising by intendment or inference, rather than by actual expression in words.

IMPLIED ABROGATION. See "Abrogation."

IMPLIED ASSUMPSIT. See "Assumpsit."

IMPLIED CONDITION. See "Condition."

IMPLIED CONSIDERATION. See "Consideration."

IMPLIED CONTRACT. See "Contract."

IMPLIED COVENANT. See "Covenant."

IMPLIED MALICE. Malice presumed or implied by law from the acts of a party and the circumstances of a case; malice inferred from any deliberate, cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. Whart. Hom. 88.

IMPLIED POWER. By an implied power is meant one that is directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power granted, and not one that has slight or remote relation to it. 180 Ill. 268.

IMPLIED TRUST. See "Trust."

IMPLIED USE. See "Resulting Use."

IMPLIED WARRANTY. See "Warranty."

IMPORTATION. In common law. The act of bringing goods and merchandise into a country from a foreign country. 5 Cranch (U. S.) 368; 9 Cranch (U. S.) 104, 120; 2 Man. & G. 155, note (a).

IMPORTS. Goods or other property imported or brought into a country from foreign territory. Story, Const. § 949. See (U. S.) Const. art. 1, § 10; 7 How. (U. S.) 477.

IMPORTUNITY. Urgent solicitation, with troublesome frequency and pertinacity. Generally applied to solicitation of a testator. Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 14, s. 5, 6, 7; 2 Phillim. Ecc. 551, 552.

IMPOSITIO. (Lat.) In old English law. An imposition, tax, or tribute. The older expression was maletot. Stat. Confirm. Chartar. c. 7. 2 Inst. 580.

IMPOSITIONS. Imposts, taxes, or contributions.

IMPOSSIBILITY. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i. e., impossible in any case (e. g., for A. to reach the moon), or relative (sometimes called "impossibility in fact"), i. e., arising from the circumstances of the case (e. g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person). To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e. g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. Rapalje & L.

IMPOSSIBILIMUM NULLA OBLIGATIO est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things. Dig. 50. 18. 185; 1 Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, sec. 4, § 8; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. (6th Ed.) 763; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 228.

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS. Such contracts as cannot be performed, either because of the nature of the obligation undertaken, or because of some supervening event which renders the performance of the obligation either physically or legally impossible. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 176.

IMPOSTS. Taxes, duties, or impositions. A duty on imported goods or merchandise. Federalist, No. 30; Elliott, Deb. 289; Story, Const. § 949; 12 Wheaton (U. S.) 437.

In a larger sense it is any tax or imposition. 7 Wallace (U. S.) 445.

IMPOTENCE. In medical jurisprudence. The incapacity for copulation or propagating the species. It has also been used as synonymous with "sterility."

The principal use of the term is as a ground of divorce, and as so used it signifies "the irremediable physical incapacity of one of the parties to a marriage for any reasonable sexual connection with the other." 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 766.

To avoid impotence, there must be capacity for "copula vera," copulation in its natural and ordinary meaning, and not merely of incipient and imperfect coition. 33 Md. 405.

IMPOTENS (Lat.) Unable; impotent; without power or ability. Impotens sui, having no power of himself, unable to help himself. Bracton, fol. 15; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

IMPOTENTIA (Lat.) Inability; impossibility.

IMPOTENTIA EXCUSAT LEGEM. Impossibility is an excuse in the law. Co. Litt. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (8d London Ed.) 223.

IMPOTENTIAM. Impotence; impossibility.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER. See "Property Propter Impotentiam."

IMPOUND. To place in a pound goods or cattle distrained or estray. 3 Bl. Comm. 12.

IMPRESCRIPTIBILITY. The state of being incapable of prescription.

A property which is held in trust is imprescriptible, that is, the trustee cannot acquire a title to it by prescription; nor can the borrower of a thing get a right to it by any lapse of time, unless he claims an adverse right to it during the time required by law.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE RIGHTS. Rights to which no claim can be acquired by prescription.

IMPRESSMENT. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the queen's ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessel. (1 Bl. Comm. 420; Maude & P. Shipp. 123), but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings (e. g., persons employed in the Greenland fisheries), or voluntarily. Rapalje & L.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat.) A license or allowance to one to print.

At one time, before a book could be printed in England, it was requisite that a permission should be obtained. That permission was called an imprimatur. In some countries where the press is liable to censure, an imprimatur is required.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes, this word is used to signify a printing office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS (Lat. in the first place). It is commonly used to denote the first clause in an instrument, especially in wills, item being used to denote the subsequent clauses. This is also its classical and literal meaning. Ainsworth. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54. Imprimatus and imprimum also occur. Dugange, Prec. Ch. 430; Cas. temp. Talb. 110; 6 Madd. 31; Magna Cart. 9 Hen. III.; 2 Anc. Inst. Eng. 506.

IMPRISONMENT. The restraint of a man's liberty. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 669.

The restraint of a person contrary to his will. 2 Inst. 589; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 239, 600. Any forcible detention of a man's person, or control over his movements. 3 Harr. (Del.) 418.

Actual confinement is not essential, a forcible detention on the street being sufficient. 3 Bl. Comm. 127. Nor is actual manual violence. 100 Mass. 79.

Words are sufficient to constitute an imprisonment, if they impose a restraint upon the person, and the plaintiff is accordingly restrained; for he is not obliged to incur the risk of personal violence and insult by resisting, until actual violence is used. 9 N. H. 493.

IMPRISTI. Followers or adherents.

IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. An act by which falsehood and forgery are proved. Ersk. Inst. 4. 119; Stair, Inst. 4. 20; Bell, Dict.

IMPROPER FEUDS. Derivative feuds, such, for instance, as those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual license, or descended indifferently to males or females, or otherwise varied from the rules ordinarily pertaining to feudal tenure. Wharton.

IMPROPRIATE RECTOR. A lay rector.

IMPROPRIATE TITHES. Tithes in the hands of a lay owner.

IMPROPRIATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of employing the revenues of a church living to one's own use. It is also a parsonage or ecclesiastical living in the hands of a layman, or which descends by inheritance. Tech. Dict.

IMPROVE. To impeach as false or forged; to cultivate. 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 190.

—In Scotch Law. To improve a lease means to grant a lease of unusual duration to encourage a tenant, when the soil is exhausted, etc. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. p. 676, § 23.

IMPROVEMENT. An amelioration in the condition of real or personal property effected by the expenditure of labor or money for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes.

—In Patent Law. An addition of some useful thing to a machine, manufacture, or composition of matter.

The patent law of July 4, 1836, authorizes the granting of a patent for any new and useful improvement on any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. Section 6. It is often very difficult to say what is a new and useful improvement, the cases often approaching very near to each other. In the present improved state of machinery it is almost impracticable not to employ the same elements of motion, and, in some particulars, the same manner of operation, to produce any new effect. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 478; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 51. See 4 Barn. & Ald. 540; 2 Kent, Comm. 370.

IMPRUIARE (Law Lat.) In old records. To improve land. Impruiamentum, the improvement so made of it. Chart. Abbat. MS. fol. 50a; Cowell.

IMPUBER (Lat.) In civil law. One who is more than seven years old, or out of infancy, and who has not attained the age of puberty; that is, if a boy, till he has attained his full age of fourteen years, and, if a girl, her full age of twelve years. Domat, Liv. Prel. tit. 2, § 2, note 8.

IMPUNITAS CONTINUUM AFFECTUM tribuit delinquenti. Impunity offers a continual bait to a delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

IMPUNITAS SEMPER AD DETERIORA invitat. Impunity always invites to greater crimes. 5 Coke, 109.

IMPUTATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In civil law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

The debtor may apply his payment as he pleases, with the exception that in case of a debt carrying interest it must be first applied to discharging the interest.

The creditor may apply the funds by informing the debtor at the time of payment.

The law imputes in the neglect of the parties to do so, and in favor of the debtor. It directs that imputation which would have been best for the debtor at the time of payment. Hence it applies the funds to obligations most burdensome to the debtor; e. g., to a mortgage rather than to a book account, and to a debt which would render the debtor insolvent if unpaid, rather than to any less important one. If nothing else appears to control it, the rule of priority prevails.

In Louisiana the preceding civil law rules are in force. The statutory enactment (Civ. Code, art. 2159 et seq.) is a translation of the Code Napoleon (articles 1253-1256), slightly altered. See Poth. Obl. note 528, Translation by Evans, and the notes. Payment is imputed first to the discharge of interest. 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 571; 10 Rob.

(La.) 51; 5 La. Ann. 738. But if the interest was not binding, being usurious, the payment must go to the principal.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. Negligence of another than the injured person contributing to the injury, and imputed to him by law. As a general rule, contributory negligence will be imputed to another than the negligent person, so as to bar an action by such other for injuries received by him (1) if the negligent person was under the direction and control of the injured person (38 Me. 443), or (2) where the injured person is not sui juris, and the negligent person is responsible for him as parent or guardian. 75 Pa. St. 257.

IN (Law Fr. eins). A term used, from a very early period, to express the nature of a title, or the mode of acquiring an estate, or the ground upon which a seisin is founded. Thus, in Littleton, a tenant is said to be "in by lease of his lessor" (eins per lease son lessor), that is, his title or estate is derived from the lease. Litt. § 82. So, parceners are said to be "in by divers descents." Id. § 313. So, the issue of a husband is said to be "in by descent" (eins per descent). Id. § 403. So, two sisters are said to be "in by divers titles." Id. § 662. So, in modern law, parties are constantly said in the books to be "in by descent," "in by purchase." A dowress is said to be "in, of the seisin of her husband." 4 Kent, Comm. 69. A devisor is said to be "in, of his old estate." 1 Powell, Devises (by Jarman) 621, note. So, a lessor. Shaw, C. J., 1 Metc. (Mass.) 120. "If he has a freehold, he is in as freeholder. If he has a chattel interest, he is in as a termor. If he has no title, he is in as a trespasser." Lord Mansfield, 1 Burrows, 114.

IN ACTION. A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery, the possessor unwilling, an action is necessary. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 396. See "Chose."

IN ADVERSUM (Law Lat.) Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum." 3 Story (U. S.) 318.

IN AEDIFICIIS LAPIS MALE POSITUS non est removendus. In buildings, a stone badly placed is not to be removed. 11 Coke, 69.

IN AEQUA (or AEQUALI) MANU (Law Lat.; Law Fr. en owels main). In equal hand; held equally or indifferently between two parties. Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it in the hands of a third person, to keep on certain conditions, it was said to be held in aequali manu. Reg. Orig. 28.

IN AEQUALI JURE (Lat.) In equal right.

IN AEQUALI JURE MELIOR EST CONditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 215; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 285; 1 Madd. Ch. Prac. 170; Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 684; Plowd. 296.

IN ALIENO SOLO (Lat.) In another's land. 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

IN ALIO LOCO. See "Cepit in Alio Loco."

IN ALTA PRODITIONE NULLUS POTEST ESSE ACCESSORIUS SED PRINCIPALIS SOLUM-MODO. In high treason, no one can be an accessory, but only principal. 3 Inst. 138.

IN ALTERNATIVIS ELECTIO EST DEBITORIS. In alternatives, the debtor has the election.

IN AMBIGUA VOCE LEGIS EA POTIUS ACCIPIENDA EST SIGNIFICATIO, QUAE VITIO CARET; PRAEERTIM CUM ETIAM VOLUNTAS LEGIS EX HOC COLLIGI POSSIT. When obscurities, ambiguities, or faults of expression render the meaning of an enactment doubtful, that interpretation shall be preferred which is most consonant to equity, especially where it is in conformity with the general design of the legislature. Dig. 1. 3. 19; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 513; Bac. Max. reg. 3; 2 Inst. 173.

IN AMBIGUIS CASIBUS SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO REGE. In doubtful cases, the presumption is always in favor of the king.

IN AMBIGUIS ORATIONIBUS MAXIME SENTENTIA SPECTANDA EST EJUS QUI EAS PROTULISSET. When there are ambiguous expressions, the intention of him who uses them is especially to be regarded. This maxim of Roman law was confined to wills. Dig. 50. 17. 96; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 506.

IN ANGLIA NON EST INTERREGNUM. In England there is no interregnum. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 205; Broom, Leg. Max. 50.

IN APERTA LUCE (Law Lat.) In open daylight; in the daytime. 9 Coke, 65b.

IN APICIBUS JURIS. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law. 1 Kames, Eq. 190. See "Apex Juris."

IN ARBITRIUM JUDICIS. In the discretion of the court.

IN ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA (Law Lat.) In close and safe custody. 3 Bl. Comm. 415.

IN ARTICULO MORTIS. In the article of death; at the point of death. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 159.

IN ATROCIORIBUS DELICTIS PUNITUR AFFECTUS LICET NON SEQUATUR EFFECTUS. In more atrocious crimes, the intent is punished, though the effect does not follow. 2 Rolle, 89.

IN AUTER SOILE. (Law Fr.) In or on another's land. Dyer, 36b (Fr. ed.)

IN AUTRE DROIT (Law Fr.) In another's right; as representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit.

IN BANCO (Law Lat.) In bank; in the bench. See "Banc."

IN BLANK. Without restriction. Applied to indorsements on promissory notes where no indorsee is named.

IN BONIS (Lat.) Among the goods or property; in actual possession. Inst. 4. 2. 2; Tayl. Civ. Law, 479.

IN CAMERA. In private; in chambers.

IN CAPITA (Lat.) To or by the heads or polls. Thus, where persons succeed to estates in capita, they take each an equal share. So, where a challenge to a jury is in capita, it is to the polls, or to the jurors individually, as opposed to a challenge to the array. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 361. Per capita is also used.

IN CAPITE (Lat.) In chief. A tenant in capite was one who held directly of the crown (2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 60), whether by knight's service or socage. But tenure in capite was of two kinds,—general and special; the first from the king (caput regni), the second from a lord (caput feudi). A holding of an honor in king's lands, but not immediately of him, was yet a holding in capite. Kitch. Cts. 127; Dyer, 44; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 5. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

IN CASU EXTREMAE NECESSITATIS omnia sunt communia. In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common. Hale, P. C. 54; Broom, Leg. Max. 1.

IN CASU PROVISO (Law Lat.) In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et provisum, in such case made and provided. Towns. Pl. 164, 165.

IN CAUSA. In the cause, as distinguished from in initialibus (q. v.). A term in Scotch practice. 1 Brown, Ch. 252.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him, in relation to the matter in issue at the trial. The examination so conducted for this purpose.

Evidence or examination in chief is to be distinguished from evidence given on cross-examination, and from evidence given upon the voir dire.

Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrant, and a departure from this rule will be sometimes highly inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, that two assaults have been committed, one in January and the other in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January; he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both. 1 Campb. 473. See, also, 6 Car. & P. 73; 1 Moody & R. 282.

This matter, however, is one of practice; and a great variety of rules exist in the different states of the United States, the leading object, however, being in all cases the same,—to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

IN CIVILIBUS MINISTERIUM EXCUSAT, in criminalibus non item. In civil matters, agency or service excuses, but not so in criminal matters. Lofft, 228; Tray. Lat. Max. 243.

IN CLARIS NON EST LOCUS CONJECTURIS. In things obvious there is no room for conjecture.

IN COMMENDAM (Lat.) The state or condition of a church living which is void or vacant, and which is commended to the care of some one. In Louisiana there is a species of partnership called "partnership in commendam." See "Commendam."

IN COMMODATO HAEC PACTIO, NE DOLUS PRAESTETUR, RATA NON EST. If in a contract for a loan there is inserted a clause that fraud should not be accounted of, such clause is void. Dig. 13. 7. 17.

IN COMMUNI (Law Lat.) In common. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 4, § 2.

IN CONJUNCTIVIS, OPORTET UTRAMQUE PARTEM ESSE VERAM. In conjunctives, each part must be true. Wingate, Max. 13.

IN CONSIDERATIONE INDE (Law Lat.) In consideration thereof. 3 Salk. 64, pl. 5.

IN CONSIDERATIONE LEGIS (Law Lat.) In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance. Dyer, 102b.

IN CONSIDERATIONE PRAEMISSIONUM (Law Lat.) In consideration of the premises. 1 Strange, 535.

IN CONSIMILI CASU CONSIMILE DEBET ESSE REMEDIUM. In similar cases, the remedy should be similar. Hardr. 65.

IN CONSUETUDINIBUS NON DIUTURNITAS TEMPORIS SED SOLIDITAS RATIONIS EST CONSIDERANDA. In customs, not the length of time, but the strength of the reason, should be considered. Co. Litt. 141.

IN CONTINENTI (Lat.) Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Calv. Lex. Sometimes written as one word, in-continenti.

IN CONTRACTIBUS, BENIGNA; IN TESTAMENTIS, BENIGNIOR; IN RESTITUTIONIBUS, BENIGNISSIMA INTERPRETATIO FACIENDA EST. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal. Co. Litt. 112a.

IN CONTRACTIBUS, REI VERITAS POTIUS QUAM SCRIPTURA PERSPICUI DEBET. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded, rather than the writing. Code, 4. 22. 1.

IN CONTRACTIBUS TACITE INSUNT QUAE SUNT MORIS ET CONSUETUDINIS. In contracts, those things which are of custom and usage are tacitly implied. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 759; 3 Bing. N. C. 814, 818; Story, Bills, § 143; 3 Kent, Comm. 260.

IN CONTRAHENDA VENDITIONE, AMBIGUUM PACTUM CONTRA VENDITOREM INTERPRETANDUM EST. In negotiating a sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller. Dig. 50. 17. 172; Id. 18. 1. 21.

IN CONVENTIONIBUS CONTRAHENTIUM VOLUNTATEM POTIUS QUAM VERBA SPECTARI PLACUIT. In agreements, the rule is to regard the intention of the contracting parties, rather than their words. Dig. 50. 16. 219; 2 Kent, Comm. 555; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 491; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 150.

IN CORPORE (Lat.) In body or substance; in a material thing or object. Sive consistant in corpore, sive in jure, whether they consist in or belong to a material object, or a mere right. Bracton, fol. 37b.

IN CRASTINO (Law Lat.) On the morrow. In crastino Animarum, on the morrow of All Souls. 1 Bl. Comm. 342.

IN CRIMINALIBUS, PROBATIONES DEBENT ESSE LUCE CLARIORES. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than the light. 3 Inst. 210.

IN CRIMINALIBUS SUFFICIT GENERALIS MALITIA INTENTIONIS CUM FACTO PARIS GRADUS. In criminal cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient, with an act of equal or corresponding degree. Bac. Max. reg. 15; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 291.

IN CRIMINALIBUS VOLUNTAS REPUBLICITUR PRO FACTO. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed. 3 Inst. 106.

IN CUJUS REI TESTIMONIUM. In testimony whereof.

IN CUSTODIA LEGIS. In the custody of the law. A term applied to property which has been lawfully seized by or committed to the care of an officer of a court for some purpose incident to an action. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400. The property must be legally held by the officer. Thus, where the clerk of court received money paid in to keep a tender good, without an order to that effect, it was held that the money was not in custodia legis. 49 Minn. 133.

IN DELICTO. In fault; culpable; guilty. See "In Pari Delicto."

IN DIEM. (Lat.) For a day; for the space of a day. Calv. Lex. Spiegelius.

On, or at a day. In diem debitum; a debt due at a certain day. Calv. Lex. Brissonius.

IN DISJUNCTIVIS SUFFICIT ALTERAM partem esse veram. In disjunctives, it is sufficient if either part be true. Wingate, Max. 13; Co. Litt. 225a; 10 Coke, 50; Dig. 50. 17. 110.

IN DOMINICO (Law Lat.) In demesne. In dominico suo, ut de feodo, in his demesne as of fee. Bracton, fols. 253b, 261b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 13; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 428; Co. Litt. 17a; 2 Bl. Comm. 105, 106.

IN DORSO. On the back. 2 Bl. Comm. 468; 2 Steph. Comm. 164. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Coke, 45. Hence the English "indorse," "indorsement," etc.

IN DUBIIS (Lat.) In doubtful cases; in matters or cases of doubt.

IN DUBIIS BENIGNIORA PRAEFERENDA sunt. In doubtful matters, the more favorable are to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

IN DUBIIS MAGIS DIGNUM EST ACCIP- lendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be taken. Branch, Princ.

IN DUBIIS NON PRAESUMITUR PRO testamento. In doubtful cases, there is no presumption in favor of the will. Cro. Car. 51.

IN DUBIO (Lat.) In doubt; in a state of uncertainty; in a doubtful case.

IN DUBIO HAEC LEGIS CONSTRUCTIO quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

IN DUBIO PARS MELIOR EST SEQUEN- da. In doubt, the gentler course is to be followed.

IN DUBIO SEQUENDUM QUOD TUTIUS est. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

IN DUPLO. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 1.

IN EADEM CAUSA (Lat.) In the same state or condition. Calv. Lex.

IN EMULATIONEM VICINI (Lat.) In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini. 1 Kames, Eq. 56.

IN EO QUOD PLUS SIT SEMPER INEST et minus. The less is always included in the greater. Dig. 50. 17. 110.

IN EQUITY. According to equitable doctrines.

IN ESSE (Lat.) In being; in existence. An event which may happen is in posse; when it has happened, it is in esse. The term is often used of liens or estates. A child in its mother's womb is, for some purposes, regarded as in esse.

IN EXCAMBIO (Law Lat.) In exchange. Formal words in old deeds of exchange.

IN EXITU (Lat.) In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue. 12 Mod. 372.

IN EXPOSITIONE INSTRUMENTORUM, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible. 6 Coke, 39; 2 Pars. Cont. 26.

IN EXTENSO. At length; in full.

IN EXTREMIS (Lat.) At the very end; in the last moments.

IN FACIE CURIAE (Law Lat.) In the face of the court. Dyer, 28.

IN FACIE ECCLESIAE (Lat.) In the face or presence of the church. A marriage is said to be made in facie ecclesiae when made in a consecrated church or chapel, or by a clerk in orders elsewhere; and one of these two things is necessary to a marriage in England in order to the wife's having dower, unless there be a dispensation or license. Bright, Husb. & Wife, pp. 370, 371, 391. But see 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85; 1 Vict. c. 22; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72. It was anciently the practice to marry at the church door, and there make a verbal assignment of dower. These verbal assignments, to prevent fraud, were necessarily held valid only when made in facie et ad ostium ecclesiae. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 103; Taylor.

IN FACIENDO (Lat.) In doing. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1308.

IN FACT. Actual; not based on legal fiction or intendment of law.

IN FACTO In fact; in deed. In facto dicit, in fact says. 1 Salk. 22, pl. 1. Depending on fact. Calv. Lex.

IN FACTO QUOD SE HABET AD BO- num et malum magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. In a deed which may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad. Co. Litt. 78.

IN (or EN) FAIT (Law Fr.) In fact; in deed. Lord Coke distinguishes "matters of record" from "matters in fait." Co. Litt. 380b.

IN FAVORABILIBUS MAGIS ATTENDITUR quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm. Bac. Max. reg. 12.

IN FAVOREM LIBERATIS (Lat.) In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITAE (Lat.) In favor of life.

IN FAVOREM VITAE, LIBERTATIS, ET INNOCENTIAE omnia praesumuntur. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, all things are to be presumed. Lofft, 125.

IN FEODO (Law Lat.) In fee. Bracton, fol. 207; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 15. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

IN FICTIONE JURIS SEMPER AEQUITAS existit. A legal fiction is always consistent with equity. 11 Coke, 51; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 120, 123; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348; 3 Bl. Comm. 43, 283.

IN FIERI (Lat.) In being done; in process of completion. A thing is said to rest in fieri when it is not yet complete; e. g., the records of a court were anciently held to be in fieri, or incomplete, till they were recorded on parchment, but now till the giving of judgment, after which they can be amended only during the same term. 2 Barn. & Adol. 791; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 407. It is also used of contracts.

IN FINE. At the end.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS (Lat.) In the character or form of a poor man.

When a person is so poor that he cannot bear the charges of suing at law or in equity, upon making oath that he is not worth five pounds, and bringing a certificate from a counsellor at law that he believes him to have a just cause, he is permitted to sue in forma pauperis, in the manner of a pauper; that is, he is allowed to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel assigned him without fee. 3 Bl. Comm. 400. And in most if not all the states, provision is made by statute for suing in forma pauperis, the manner of obtaining such privilege varying with the statutes. See 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 65; 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 588; 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 273; 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 58; 2 Molloy, 475.

IN FORMA PRAEDICTA (Law Lat.) In form aforesaid. Perk. c. 3, § 242.

IN FORO (Lat.) In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIAE (Lat.) Before the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously. The term is applied to moral obligations, as distinct from the obligations which the law enforces. In the sale of property, for example, the concealment of facts by the vendee which may enhance the price is wrong in foro conscientiae, but there is no legal obligation on the part of the vendee to disclose them, and the contract will be good if not vitiated by fraud. Poth. Vente. pt. 2, c. 2, note 233; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 185, note (c).

IN FORO CONTENTIOSO. In the forum of contention or litigation.

IN FORO ECCLESIASTICO (Law Lat.) In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 13.

IN FORO SAECULARI (Law Lat.) In a secular forum or court. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 14; 1 Bl. Comm. 20.

IN FRAUDEM CREDITORUM (Lat.) In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors. Inst. 1. 6. pr. 3.

IN FRAUDEM LEGIS (Lat.) In fraud of the law; contrary to law. Taylor. Using process of law for a fraudulent purpose; and if a person gets an affidavit of service of declaration in ejection, and thereupon gets judgment, and turns the tenant out, when he has no manner of title in a house, he is liable as a felon, for he used the process of law in fraudem legis. 1 Ld. Raym. 276; Sid. 254.

An act done in fraudem legis cannot give right of action in the courts of the country whose laws are evaded. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433.

IN FULL LIFE. Neither physically nor civilly dead. The term "life" alone has also been taken in the same sense, as including natural and civil life; e. g., a lease made to a person "during life" is determined by a civil death, but if "during natural life," it would be otherwise. 2 Coke, 48. It is a translation of the French phrase en plein vie. Law Fr. Dict.

IN FUTURO (Lat.) In future; at a future time; the opposite of in praesenti. 2 Bl. Comm. 166, 175.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO (Law Lat.) In the general passage; passagium being a journey, or, more properly, a voyage, and especially when used alone or with the adjectives magnum, generale, etc.—the journey to Jerusalem of a crusader, especially of a king. 36 Hen. III.; 3 Prynne, Collect. 767; Du Cange.

In generali passagio was an excuse for nonappearance in a suit, which put off the hearing sine die; but in simplici peregrinatione or passagio—i. e., being absent on a private pilgrimage to the Holy Land—put off the hearing for a shorter time. Bracton, 338.

IN GENERALIBUS VERSATUR ERROR. Error dwells in general expressions. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 290.

IN GENERE (Lat.) In kind; of the same kind. Things which, when bailed, may be restored in genere, as distinguished from those which must be returned in specie, or specifically, are called fungibles. Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 148, note.

Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 619, defines genus as what the philosophers call "species," viz., a kind. See Dig. 12. 1. 2. 1.

IN GENERE QUICUNQUE ALIQUID DICIT, SIVE ACTOR SIVE REUS, NECESSE EST UT PROBAT. In general, whoever says anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it. Best, Ev. 294, § 252.

IN GREMIO LEGIS (Lat. In the bosom of the law). This is a figurative expression, by which is meant that the subject is under the protection of the law; as, where land is in abeyance.

IN GROSS. At large; not appurtenant or appendant, but annexed to a man's person, e. g., common granted to a man and his heirs by deed is common in gross; or common in gross may be claimed by prescriptive right. 2 Bl. Comm. 84.

IN HAC PARTE (Law Lat.) In this behalf. Reg. Orig. 25.

IN HAEC VERBA. In these words; in the same words. Dig. 34. 4. 30.

IN HAEREDES NON SOLENT TRANSIRE ACTIONES QUAE PENALES EX MALEFICIO SUNT. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs. 2 Inst. 442.

IN HIS ENIM QUAE SUNT FAVORABILIA ANIMAE, QUAMVIS SUNT DAMNOSA REBUS, FIAT ALIQUANDO EXTENTIO STATUTI. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should be sometimes made. 10 Coke, 101.

IN HIS QUAE DE JURE COMMUNI OMNIBUS CONCEDUNTUR, CONSUETUDO ALIQUJUS PATRIAE VEL LOCI NON EST ALLEGANDA. In those things which, by common right, are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be alleged. 11 Coke, 85.

IN HOC. In this.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS (Lat.) In the same terms. 9 East, 487.

IN INDIVIDUO (Law Lat.) In the distinct, identical, or individual form; in specie. Story, Bailm. § 97.

In special; particular.

IN INFINITUM. Infinitely or indefinitely.

IN INITIALIBUS (Lat.) In Scotch law. In the preliminaries. Before a witness is examined as to the cause in which he is to testify, he must deny bearing malice or ill will, being instructed what to say, or having been bribed, and these matters are called initialia testimonii, and the examination on them is said to be in initialibus. It is similar to our voir dire. Bell, Dict. "Initialia Testimonii"; Ersk. Inst. p. 451; Halk. Tech. Terms.

IN INITIO (Lat.) In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit. Bracton, fol. 400.

IN INTEGRUM (Lat.) The original condition. See "Restitutio in Integram." Vicat, "Integer."

IN INVITUM (Lat.) Unwillingly. Taylor. Against an unwilling party, or one who has not given his consent, by operation of law. Wharton.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS (Lat.) In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis faucibus of a port, actually entering a port. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 233. 234.

IN ITINERE (Lat.) On a journey; on the way. Justices in itinere were justices in eyre, who went on circuit through the kingdom for the purpose of hearing causes. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 351; Spelman. In itinere is used in the law of lien, and is there equivalent to in transitu; that is, not yet delivered to vendee.

IN JUDICIIS MINORI AETATI SUCCURRITUR. In judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 46.

IN JUDICIO (Lat.) In or by a judicial proceeding; in court. In judicio non creditur nisi juratis, in judicial proceedings no one is believed unless on oath. Cro. Car. 64. See Bracton, fols. 98b, 106, 287b, et passim.

—In Civil Law. The proceedings before a praetor, from the bringing the action till issue joined, were said to be in jure; but after issue joined, when the cause came before the judex, the proceedings were said to be in judicio. See "Judex."

IN JUDICIO NON CREDITUR NISI JURATA. In law, none is credited unless he is sworn. All the facts must, when established by witnesses, be under oath or affirmation. Cro. Car. 64.

IN JURE (Lat.) In law.

—In Civil Law. A phrase which denotes the proceedings in a cause before the praetor, up to the time when it is laid before a judex; that is, till issue joined (litis contestatio); also the proceedings in causes tried throughout by the praetor (cognitiones extraordinariae). Vicat, "Jus."

—In English Law. In law; rightfully; in right. In jure, non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. Broom, Leg. Max. 104. Incorporeal hereditaments, as right of jurisdiction, are said to exist only in jure, in right, or contemplation of law, and to admit of only a symbolical delivery. See Halk. Tech. Terms.

IN JURE ALTERIUS (Lat.) In another's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JURE NON REMOTA CAUSA, SED proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked to. Bac. Max. reg. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 202. See 2 Pars. Cont. 455.

IN JURE PROPRIO (Lat.) In one's own right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE (Lat.) To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4. 16. 3; Calv. Lex. In jus vocando, summoning to court. Dig. 2. 4; 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

IN KIND. Of the same sort. Return of property is "in kind," as distinguished from in specie, where an article of the same kind, but not the identical one obtained, is returned.

IN LAW. Implied by law; depending on legal fiction or intendment.

IN LECTO MORTALI (Lat.) On the death bed. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 28, § 12.

IN LIMINE (Lat.) In or at the beginning. This phrase is frequently used; as, the courts are anxious to check crimes in limine.

IN LITEM (Lat. ad litem). For a suit; to the suit. Greenl. Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO (Lat.) In place; in lieu; in stead; in the place or stead. Towns. Pl. 38.

IN LOCO PARENTIS (Lat.) In the place of a parent; as, the master stands towards his apprentice in loco parentis.

IN MAJORE SUMMA CONTINETUR Minor. In the greater sum is contained the less. 5 Coke, 115.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM (Lat.) For greater security. 1 Strange, 105, arg.

IN MALEFICIIS VOLUNTAS SPECTATUR non exitus. In offenses, the intention is regarded, not the event. Dig. 48. 8. 14; Bac. Max. reg. 7; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 292.

IN MALEFICIO RATIHABITO MANDATO comparetur. In a tort, ratification is equivalent to a command. Dig. 50. 17. 152. 2.

IN MAXIMA POTENTIA MINIMA LICENTIA. In the greatest power there is the least liberty. Hob. 159.

IN MEDIO (Law Lat.) Intermediate. A term applied, in Scotch practice, to a fund held between parties litigant.

IN MERCIBUS ILLICITIS NON SIT COMMERCUM. No commerce should be in illicit goods. 3 Kent, Comm. 262, note.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing any offense not directly censured by the law. Thus, to be in the grievous mercy of the king is to be in hazard of a great penalty. 11 Hen. VI. c. 6. So, where the plaintiff failed in his suit, he and his pledges were in the mercy of the lord, pro falso clamore suo. This is retained nominally on the record. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 376. So the defendant is in mercy if he fail in his defense. Id. 398.

IN MISERICORDIA (Lat. in mercy). The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, Ideo in misericordia, etc. The phrase was used because the punishment in such cases ought to be moderate. See Magna Cart. c. 14; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 5, c. 6. Sometimes misericordia means the being quit of all ameracements.

IN MITIORI SENSU (Lat. in a milder acceptance). A phrase denoting a rule of construction formerly adopted in slander suits, the object of which was to construe phrases, if possible, so that they would not support an action.

IN MODUM ASSISAE (Law Lat.) In the manner or form of an assize. Bracton, fol. 183b. In modum juratae, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181b.

IN MORA (Lat.) In delay.

IN MORTUA MANU (Lat. in a dead hand). Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civili-ter mortui. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 479; Taylor.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN (Lat.) In the name of God, Amen. A solemn form of introduction, anciently used in wills and many other instruments, public and private. The Proemia to the Institutes and Digests of Justinian commence, In nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." The confirmation of the Code and several of the Novels are introduced with the same form. Some old wills began, In nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti, Amen. Blount, voc. "Will." Mercantile instruments, such as protests, policies, procurations, etc., frequently began, In Dei nomine, Amen.

IN NOVO CASU, NOVUM REMEDIUM apponendum est. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case. 2 Inst. 3.

IN NUBIBUS (Lat.) In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terra vel in custodia legis, in the air, earth, or sea, or in the custody of the law. Taylor. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis; e. g., in case of a grant of life estate to A., and afterwards to heirs of Richard, Richard in this case, being alive, has no heirs until his death, and, consequently, the inheritance is considered as resting in nubibus, or in the clouds, till the death of A., when the contingent remainder either vests or is lost, and the inheritance goes over. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 107, note; 1 Coke, 137.

IN NULLIUS BONIS (Lat.) Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure trove and wreck were anciently considered. Bracton, fol. 120.

IN NULLO EST ERRATUM (Lat.) In pleading. A plea to errors assigned on proceedings in error, by which the defendant in error affirms there is no error in the record. As to the effect of such plea, see 1 Vent. 252; 1 Strange, 684; 9 Mass. 532; 1 Burrows, 410; T. Raym. 231. It is a general rule that the plea in nullo est erratum confesses the fact assigned for errors (Yelv. 57; Dane, Abr. Index), but not a matter assigned contrary to the record (7 Wend. [N. Y.] 55; Bac. Abr. "Error" [G]).

IN OBSCURA VOLUNTATE MANUMIT- tentis favendum est libertati. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored. Dig. 50. 17. 179.

IN OBSCURIS INSPICI SOLERE QUOD verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. Where there is obscurity, we usually regard what is probable or what is generally done. Dig. 50. 17. 114.

IN OBSCURIS QUOD MINIMUM EST SE- quimur. In obscure cases, we follow that which is least so. Dig. 50. 17. 9.

IN OCTAVIS, or OCTABIS. (Law Lat.) On the octave. One of the ancient return days in the English courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 277, 278.

IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS (Lat.) In hatred of a despoiler. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrongdoer, in odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur.

IN OMNI ACTIONE UBI DUAE CONCUR- runt districtiones, videlicet in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est quae magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, as those in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bracton, 372; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 14, § 28.

IN OMNI RE NASCITUR RES QUAE IP- sam rem exterminat. In everything, the thing is born which destroys the thing itself. 2 Inst. 15.

IN OMNIBUS CONTRACTIBUS, SIVE nominatis, sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In every contract, whether nominate or innominate, there is implied an exchange, i. e., a consideration.

IN OMNIBUS OBLIGATIONIBUS, IN quibus dies non ponitur, praesenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no time is fixed for the payment, the thing is due immediately. Dig. 50. 17. 14.

IN OMNIBUS POENALIBUS JUDICIIS, et aetati et imprudentiae succurritur. In all trials for penal offenses, allowance is made for youth and lack of discretion. Dig. 50. 17. 108; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 282.

IN OMNIBUS QUIDEM MAXIME TAMEN in jure, aequitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but principally in those which concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded. Dig. 50. 17. 90.

IN PACE DEI ET REGIS (Law Lat.) In the peace of God and the king. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

IN PAIS. Out of court, or without judicial process. Matter in pais is distinguished from matter of record. 2 Bl. Comm. 294. Conveyances were either by matter in pais or deed which was an assurance transacted between two or more private persons out of court, or by matter of record which was an assurance transacted in a court of record. 1 Steph. Comm. 466. Notice in pais is notice given without the intervention of the court. Story, Bailm. § 348.

Without writing, by act or conduct, as distinguished from "by deed." Thus, estoppels are said to be by record, by deed, or by matter in pais. See "Estoppel."

IN PAPER. In English practice. A term used of a record until its final enrollment on the parchment record. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 406; 10 Mod. 88; 2 Lilly, Abr. 322; 4 Geo. II.

IN PARI CAUSA (Lat.) In an equal cause. It is a rule that when two persons have equal rights in relation to a particular thing, the party in possession is considered as having the better right, in pari causa possessor potior est. Dig. 50. 17. 128; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 952.

IN PARI CAUSA POSSESSOR POTIOR haberi debet. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is always in favor of the possessor. Dig. 50. 17. 128.

IN PARI DELICTO. Equally in fault. A term applied to parties who have participated equally in a transaction which is illegal, fraudulent, or contrary to public policy, neither of whom can for that reason obtain relief in equity from any injury suffered from the other in respect to such transaction. Thus, one making a conveyance of his property to defraud creditors cannot set aside the conveyance if his accomplice subsequently refuse to reconvey. 64 Fed. 195; 36 Mich. 229. But to put parties in pari delicto there must be equality of turpitude. See 124 N. Y. 160.

Though both parties assent to the illegal transaction, if there is great disparity of intelligence or condition, they are not in pari delicto. 59 Ill. 470; 82 Ky. 564; 9 Md. 348; 69 Mo. 115.

IN PARI DELICTO MELIOR EST CONDItio possidentis. When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258; 3
Cranch (U. S.) 244; Cowp. 341; Broom,
Leg. Max. 325; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3724.

IN PARI DELICTO POTIOR EST CONDItio defendentis (et possidentis). Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable. 11 Mass. 376;
Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 591, 592.

IN PATRIMONIO (Lat.) As a subject of property. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 2.

IN PECTORE JUDICIS (Lat.) In the breast of the judge. Latch, 180. A phrase applied to a judgment.

IN PEJOREM PARTEM (Law Lat.) In the worst part; on the worst side. Latch, 159, 160.

IN PENDENTI (Lat.) In suspension or obeyance. Bracton, fols. 12, 19b. Written in Fleta as one word, inpendenti and impendenti. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 7.

IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM (Lat.)
For the perpetual memory or remembrance of a thing. Gilb. For. Rom. 118.

IN PERSONAM (Lat.) A remedy where the proceedings are against the person, in contradistinction to those which are against specific things, or in rem. 1 Bouv. Inst.
note 2646.

IN PERSONAM ACTIO EST, QUA CUM eo agimus qui obligatus est nobis ad faciendum aliquid vel dandum. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 101b.

IN PIOS USUS (Law Lat.) For pious uses; for religious purposes. 2 Bl. Comm.
505.

IN PLENA VITA (Law Lat.) In full life.
Y. B. P. 18 Hen. VI. 2.

IN PLENO COMITATU (Law Lat.) In full county court. 2 Bl. Comm. 36.

IN POENALIBUS CAUSIS BENIGNIUS
Interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more favorable interpretation is to be made.
Dig. 50. 17. 155. 2; Plowd. 86b; 2 Hale, P.
C. 365.

IN POSSE (Lat.) In possibility; not in actual existence; used in contradistinction to in esse.

IN POTESTATE PARENTIS (Lat.) In the power of a parent. Inst. 1. 8; pr.; Id. 1.
9; 2 Bl. Comm. 498.

IN PRAEMISSORUM FIDEM (Law Lat.)
In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

IN PRAEPARATORIIS AD JUDICIUM favetur actori. In things preparatory before trial, the plaintiff is favored. 2 Inst. 57.

IN PRAESENTI (Lat.) At the present time; used in opposition to in futuro. A marriage contracted in words de praesenti is good; as, "I take Paul to be my husband" is a good marriage; but words de futuro would not be sufficient, unless the ceremony was followed by consummation. 1
Bouv. Inst. note 258.

IN PRAESENTIA MAJORIS POTESTA-tis, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 214; Cas. temp.
Hardw. 28; 13 How. (U. S.) 142; 13 Q. B.
740.

IN PRENDER (Law Fr. in taking). A term applied to such incorporeal hereditaments as a party entitled to them was to take for himself; such as common. 2 Steph.
Comm. 23; 3 Bl. Comm. 15.

IN PRETIO EMPTIONIS ET VENDITIOnis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other. 1 Story,

IN PRIMIS. (Law Lat.) In the first place.
Mag. Cart. Johan. c. 1.

IN PRINCIPIO (Lat. at the beginning).
This is frequently used in citations; as,
Bac. Abr. "Legacies in pr."

IN PROPRIA CAUSA NEMO JUDEX. No one can be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat.) In his person; himself; as, the defendant appeared in propria persona; the plaintiff argued the cause in propria persona.

IN QUINDENA (Law Lat.) In fifteen days. One of the return days in the old practice of the English courts. 2 Reeves'
Hist. Eng. Law, 57-61.

IN QUO QUIS DELINQUIT, IN EO DE jure est puniendus. In whatever thing one offends, in that he is rightfully to be punished. Co. Litt. 233b.

IN RE (Lat.) In the matter; as in re
A. B., in the matter of A. B.

IN RE COMMUNI NEMINEM DOMINOrum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10. 3. 28.

IN RE COMMUNI POTIOR EST CONDItio prohibentis. In a partnership, the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

IN RE DUBIA BENIGNIOREM INTERPRETATIONEM SEQUI, NON MINUS JUSTIUS EST, QUAM TUTIUS. In a doubtful case, to follow the milder interpretation is not less the more just than it is the safer course. Dig. 50. 17. 192. 2; Id. 28. 4. 3.

IN RE DUBIA MAGIS INFICIATO QUAM AFFIRMATIO INTELLIGENDA. In a doubtful matter, the negative is to be understood, rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37.

IN RE LUPANARI, TESTES LUPANARES ADMITTENTUR. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 320, 324.

IN RE PARI, POTIOREM CAUSAM ESSE AFFIRMANTIS CONSTAT. Where a thing is owned in common, it is agreed that the cause of him prohibiting its use is the stronger. Dig. 10. 3. 28; 3 Kent, Comm. 45; Poth. Con. de Soc. note 90; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 491.

IN RE PROPRIA INIQUUM ADMODUM EST ALICUI LICENTIAM TRIBUERE SENTENTIAE. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

IN REBUS (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

IN REBUS MANIFESTIS ERRAT QUI AUCTORITATES LEGUM ALLEGAT, QUIA PERSPICUA VERA NON SUNT PROBANDA. He errs who alleges the authorities of law in things manifest, because obvious truths need not be proved. 5 Coke, 67.

IN REM (Lat.) A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

Proceedings in rem include not only those instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property as forfeited in the admiralty or the English exchequer, or as prize, but also suits against property to enforce a lien or privilege in the admiralty courts, and suits to obtain the sentence, judgment, or decree of other courts upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, or the like. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 525, 541.

Courts of admiralty enforce the performance of a contract, when its performance is secured by a maritime lien or privilege, by seizing into their custody the very subject of hypothecation. In these suits, generally, the parties are not personally bound, and the proceedings are confined to the thing in specie. Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 98. And see 2 Gall. C. C. (U. S.) 200; 3 Term R. 269, 270.

There are cases, however, where the remedy is either in personam or in rem. Seamen, for example, may proceed against the ship or freight for their wages, and this is the most expeditious mode; or they may proceed against the master or owners. 4 Burrows, 1944; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 396.

See, generally, 1 Phil. Ev. 254; 1 Starkie, Ev. 228; Dane, Abr.; Serg. Const. Law, 202, 203, 212; Pars. Mar. Law.

"Various definitions have been given of a judgment in rem, but all are criticised as either incomplete or comprehending too much. It is generally said to be a judgment declaratory of the status of some subject matter, whether this be a person or a thing. Thus, the probate of a will fixes the status of the document as a will. The personal rights and interests which follow are mere incidental results of the status or character of the paper, and do not appear on the face of the judgment. So, a decree establishing or dissolving a marriage is a judgment in rem, because it fixes the status of the person. A judgment of forfeiture, by the proper tribunal, against specific articles or goods, for a violation of the revenue laws, is a judgment in rem. But it is objected that the customary definition does not fit such a case, because there is no fixing of the status of anything, the whole effect being a seizure, whatever the thing may be. In the foregoing instances, and many others, the judgment is conclusive against all the world, without reference to actual presence or participation in the proceedings. If the expression 'strictly in rem' may be applied to any class of cases, it should be confined to such as these. A very able writer says: 'The distinguishing characteristic of judgments in rem is that, wherever their obligation is recognized and enforced as against any person, it is equally recognized and enforced as against all persons. It seems to us that the true definition of a judgment in rem is "an adjudication" against some person or thing, or "upon the status of some subject matter," which, wherever and whenever binding upon any person, is equally binding upon all persons.' 10 Mo. App. 78.

IN REM ACTIO EST PER QUAM REM NOSTRAM QUAE AB ALIO POSSIDETUR PETIMUS, ET SEMPER ADVERSUS EUM EST QUI REM POSSIDET. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 102.

IN RENDERE. A thing in a manor is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant, e. g., rent; to lie in prender, when it may be taken by the lord or his officer when it chance. West, Symb. pt. 2, "Fines," § 126.

IN REPUBLICA MAXIME CONSERVANDA SUNT JURA BELLII. In the state, the laws of war are to be greatly preserved. 2 Inst. 58.

IN RERUM NATURA (Lat.) In the nature or order of things; in existence. Not in rerum natura is a dilatory plea, importing that the plaintiff is a fictitious person.

—In Civil Law. A broader term than in rebus humanis; e. g., before quickening, an infant is in rerum natura, but not in rebus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis, as well as in rerum natura. Calv. Lex.

IN RESTITUTIONEM, NON IN POENAM, haeres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty. 2 Inst. 198.

IN RESTITUTIONIBUS BENIGNISSIMA interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions. Co. Litt. 112.

IN ROBERIA. (Law Lat.) In or by robbery. Bract. fol. 146b.

IN SATISFACTIONIBUS NON PERMITTITUR amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Coke, 58.

IN SCRINIO JUDICIS (Law Lat.) In the writing case of the judge; among the judge's papers. "That is a thing that rests in scrinio judicis, and does not appear in the body of the decree." Hardr. 51.

IN SEPARALI (Law Lat.) In several; in severalty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 20.

IN SIGHT. See "Gambling Contract."

IN SIMILI MATERIA. Dealing with the subject matter of the same kind.

IN SIMPLICI PEREGRINATIONE (Lat.) In simple pilgrimage. Bracton, fol. 338. A phrase in the old law of essoins. See "In Generali Passagio."

IN SIVE JUXTA. In or near. 14 Q. B. D. 253.

IN SOLIDUM, or IN SOLIDO (Lat.) In civil law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation or contract is said to be in solido or in solidum when each is liable for the whole, but so that a payment by one is payment for all; i. e., it is a joint and several contract.

Possession is said to be in solidum when it is exclusive. "Duo in solidum precario habere non magis possunt, quam duo in solidum vi possidere aut clam; nam neque justae neque injustae possessiones duae concurrere possunt." Savigny, lib. 3, § 11.

IN SOLO (Lat.) In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another's ground. In solo proprio, in one's own ground. 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

IN SPECIE (Lat.) In the same form; e. g., a ship is said to no longer exist in specie when she no longer exists as a ship, but as a mere congeries of planks. 8 Barn. & C. 561; Arnould, Ins. 1012. To decree a thing in specie is to decree the performance of that thing specifically.

IN STATU QUO (Lat.) In the same situation as; in the same condition as.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS CUM QUÆRITUR quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem

interpretanda sunt. In contracts, when the question is what was agreed upon, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 45. 1. 38. 18. Chancellor Kent remarks that the true principle appears to be "to give the contract the sense in which the person making the promise believes the other party to have accepted it, if he in fact did so understand and accept it." 2 Kent, Comm. (7th Ed.) 721; 2 Day (Conn.) 281; 1 Duer, Ins. 159, 160; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 584; Dig. 45. 1. 38. § 18.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS ID TEMPUS spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, reference is had to the time at which they were made. Dig. 50. 17. 144. 1.

IN STIRPES. According to roots or stocks; by representation. See "Per Stirpes."

IN STRICTO JURE. (Lat.) In strict law; in strict right.

IN SUBSIDIUM. In aid.

IN SUO QUISQUE NEGOTIO HEBETIOR est quam in alieno. Every one is more dull in his own business than in that of another. Co. Litt. 377.

IN SUPERFICIE. (Lat.) In the surface.

IN TANTUM (Law Lat.) In so much; so much; so far; so greatly. Reg. Orig. 97, 106.

IN TERMINIS TERMINANTIBUS (Law Lat.) In terms of determination; exactly in point. 11 Coke, 40b. In express or determinate terms. 1 Leon. 93.

IN TERROREM (Lat.) By way of threat, terror, or warning. For example, when a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorem. If, therefore, there exist probabilis causa litigandi, the nonobservance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture. 2 Vern. 90; 1 Hill, Abr. 253; 3 P. Wms. 344; 1 Atk. 404.

IN TERROREM POPULI (Lat. to the terror of the people). A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 Car. & P. 373.

Lord Holt has given a distinction between those indictments in which the words in terrorem populi are essential, and those wherein they may be omitted. He says that, in indictments for that species of riots which consist in going about armed, etc., without committing any act, the words are necessary, because the offense consists in terrifying the public; but in those riots in which an unlawful act is committed, the words are useless. 11 Mod. 116; 10 Mass. 518.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS TESTATORIS intentionem scrutamur. In testaments, we should seek diligently the will of the testator. "But," says Dodderidge, C. J., "this is to be observed with these two limitations: (1) His intent ought to be agreeable to the rules of the law; (2) his intent ought to be collected out of the words of the will." 3 Bulst. 103; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 494.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS VOLUNTATES TESTANTUM INTERPRETANTUR. In testaments, the will of the testator should be liberally construed. That is to say, a will shall receive a more liberal construction than its strict meaning, if alone considered, would permit. Dig. 50. 17. 12; Cujac. ad loc., cited 3 Poth. Pand. 46; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 507.

IN TESTAMENTIS RATIO TACITA NON DEBET CONSIDERARI, SED VERBA SOLUM SPECTARI DEBENT; ADEO PER DIVINATIONEM MENTIS A VERBIS RECEDERE DURUM EST. In wills, an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to, so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.

IN TESTIMONIUM (Lat.) In witness whereof.

IN THE COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT. While engaged generally in the service of the master. 97 Minn. 312, 313; 162 Mass. 66.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.) In just so many words; as, the legislature has declared this to be a crime in totidem verbis.

IN TOTO (Lat.) In the whole; wholly; completely; as, the award is void in toto. In the whole, the part is contained, in toto et pars continetur. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

IN TOTO ET PARS CONTINETUR. A part is included in the whole. Dig. 50. 17. 113.

IN TRADITIONIBUS SCRIPTORUM CHARTARUM NON QUOD DICTUM EST, SED QUOD GESTUM FACTUM EST, INSPICITUR. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said, but what is done, is to be considered. 9 Coke, 137.

IN TRAJECTU (Lat.) In the passage over; on the voyage over. See Sir William Scott, 3 Rob. Adm. 141.

IN TRANSITU (Lat.) During the transit or removal from one place to another. See "Stoppage in Transitu."

IN VADIO (Lat.) In pledge; in gage.

IN VENTRE SA MERE (Law Fr.) In his mother's womb.

IN VERAM QUANTITATEM FIDEJUSSER TENEATUR, NISI PRO CERTA QUANTITATE ACCESSIT. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agreed for a certain quantity. 17 Mass. 597.

IN VERBIS NON VERBA SED RES ET RATIO QUÆRENDA EST. In words, not the words, but the thing and meaning is to be inquired after. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 132.

IN VINCULIS (Lat.) In chains; in actual custody. Gilb. For. Rom. 97.

Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 302.

IN VOCIBUS VIDENDUM NON A QUO SED AD QUID SUMATUR. In discourses, it is to be seen not from what, but to what, it is advanced. Ellesmere, Postn. 62.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. These words, which, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were in cuius rei testimonium, are the initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as, under ordinary circumstances, would be considered insufficient.

INADMISSIBLE. What cannot be received in evidence.

INAEDIFICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Building on another's land with own materials, or on own land with another's materials. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 363. The word is especially used of a private person's building so as to encroach upon the public land. Calv. Lex. The right of possession of the materials yields to the right to what is on the soil. Id.

INALIENABLE. A word denoting the condition of those things the property in which cannot be lawfully transferred from one person to another. Public highways and rivers are inalienable. There are also many rights which are inalienable, as the rights of liberty or of speech.

INAUGURATION. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

It was afterwards applied to the installation of emperors, kings, and prelates, in imitation of the ceremonies of the Romans when they entered the temple of the augurs. It is applied in the United States to the installation of the chief magistrate of the republic, and of the governors of the several states.

INBOARD. In marine policy. Not projecting over the rail of the vessel. 46 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 175, 181, 85 N. Y. 473.

INBORH (Saxon.) In old English law. A security, pledge, or hypotheca, consisting of the chattels of a person unable to obtain a personal "borg," or surety.

INCAPACITY. The want of a quality legally to do, give, transmit, or receive something. See "Capacity."

INCAUSTUM, or ENCAUSTUM (Lat.) Ink; a fluid anciently used for writing, of which, as appears from the following passage of Bracton, there were two kinds,—the black (incaustum nigrum), and the red (incaustum rubrum), the former being also termed atramentum (from ater, black), which is the Latin word generally used for "ink." Item diversitas incausti et atramenti, ut si una pars scribatur incausto nigro, et altera pars incausto rubro, non atramento. Bracton, fol. 398b.

INCAUTE FACTUM PRO NON FACTO habetur. A thing done unwarily or unadvisedly will be taken as not done. Dig. 28. 4. 1.

INCENDIARY (Lat. incendium, a kindling). One who maliciously and willfully sets another person's building on fire; one guilty of the crime of arson.

INCENDIUM AERE ALIENO NON exult debitorum. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt. Code, 4. 2. 11.

INCEPTION. The commencement; the beginning. In making a will, for example, the writing is its inception. 3 Coke, 31b; Slowd. 343.

INCEPTA PRO NULLIS HABENTUR. Things uncertain are held for nothing. Dav. 33.

INCERTA QUANTITAS VITIAT ACTUM. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act. 1 Rolle, 465.

INCERTI TEMPORIS. (Lat.) Of uncertain time or date. A title given to some English statutes enacted between Magna Charta and the reign of Edward III.; their period not being ascertained. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 85, 312.

INCEST. The carnal copulation of a man and a woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law. Bish. Mar. & Div. 214-221.

INCH (Lat. uncia). A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot.

INCH OF CANDLE. A mode of sale at one time in use among merchants. A notice is first given upon the exchange, or other public place, as to the time of sale. The goods to be sold are divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are published. When the sale takes place, a small piece of candle, about an inch long, is kept burning, and the last bidder, when the candle goes out, is entitled to the lot or parcel for which he bids. Wharton.

INCHARTARE. To grant by a writing.

INCIDENT. This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion (1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 243), while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant (1 Washb. Real Prop. 54). So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England. Kitch. Cts. 36; Co. Litt. 151. All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law have certain incidents which they draw with them, and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. See Jacob.

INCIDERE (Lat. from in, into or upon, and cadere, to fall). In the civil and old English law. To fall into. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

To fall out; to happen; to come to pass. Calv. Lex.

To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law. Brissonius. Quibus modis quis incidat in assisam, in what ways a person may become liable to an assize. Bracton, fols. 170b, 171. Incidere in misericordiam, to fall into mercy; to become liable to amercement. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44, § 2.

INCIPITUR (Lat.) In practice. This word, which means "it is begun," signifies the commencement of the entry on the roll or signing judgment, etc.

INCIVILE EST, NISI TOTA LEGE PROSPECTA, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon a view of a single clause of it. Dig. 1. 3. 24. See Hob. 171a.

INCIVILE EST NISI TOTA SENTENTIA inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to pass an opinion on any part of a sentence without examining the whole. Hob. 171.

INCLAMARE (Law Lat. from in, to or upon, and clamare, to cry). In old European law. To cry out for a person, as a crier does in court; to summon to court. Inclamatus, proclaimed; called or summoned by proclamation (in jus exactus). Edict. Theod. c. 145; Spelman.

INCLOSURE. In English law. Inclosure is the act of freeing land from rights of common, commonable rights, and generally all rights which obstruct cultivation and the productive employment of labor on the soil. Also, an artificial fence around one's estate. 39 Vt. 34, 326; 36 Wis. 42. See "Close."

INCLUSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALterius. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. 11 Coke, 58.

INCLUSIVE. Comprehended in computation. In computing time, as ten days from a particular time, one day is generally to be included, and one excluded. See "Exclusive."

INCOLA (Lat. from incolere, to inhabit, to dwell in). In the civil law. An inhabitant; a dweller or resident. Properly, one who has transferred his domicile to any country. One who comes from abroad, and takes up his abode in a place, with the view of residing there. The peculiar sense of the word seems to be derived from the component particle "in," having the sense of "into," or "entry." Domicile made a person an incola, as birth made him civis (a citizen). Code, 10. 40. 7; Phillim. Dom. 25, 26.

—In Old English Law. A subject. St. Marlb. pr.; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 13.

INCOLA DOMICILIUM FACIT. Residence creates domicile. 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 363, 366. See "Domicile."

INCOME. The gain which proceeds from labor, business, or property of any kind. 44 Pa. St. 347. It is as large a word as can be used to denote a person's receipts (21 Ch. Div. 85), and means "gross income," not "profits" (18 Wend. [N. Y.] 605), though the contrary has been held (5 Metc. [Mass.] 596).

INCOME BONDS. As the term is ordinarily used, income bonds are bonds which carry interest only so far as the interest is earned from the net income of the corporation, within an interest period. They bear a close resemblance to capital stock. Such interest is ordinarily not cumulative. 2 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 1922.

INCOMMODUM NON SOLVIT ARGUMENTUM. An inconvenience does not solve an argument.

INCOMMUNICACION. In Spanish law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement. A person accused cannot be subjected to this treatment unless it be expressly ordered by the judge, for some grave offense, and it cannot be continued for a longer period than is absolutely necessary. Art. 7, Reglamento de 26 Setiembre, 1835. This precaution is resorted to for the purpose of preventing the accused from knowing beforehand the testimony of the witnesses, or from attempting to corrupt them, and concert such measures as will efface the traces of his guilt. As soon, therefore, as the danger of his doing so has ceased, the interdiction ceases likewise. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus, the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. Two offices may be incompatible, either from their nature or by statutory provisions.

Const. U. S. art. 6, § 3, note 5; Id. art. 1, § 6, note 2; 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 277; 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 219. See "Office."

INCOMPETENCY.

—Of Officers. Lack of ability or fitness to discharge the required duty.

Judges and jurors are said to be incompetent from having an interest in the subject matter. A judge is also incompetent to give judgment in a matter not within his jurisdiction. See "Jurisdiction."

—Of Witness. Want of legal capacity to testify.

—Of Evidence. Not proper to be received. Incompetency relates to the evidence itself, not to the fact to be proved thereby.

—In French Law. Inability or insufficiency of a judge to try a cause brought before him, proceeding from lack of jurisdiction.

INCONCLUSIVE. Not finally decisive. Inconclusive presumptions are capable of being overcome by opposing proof. 3 Bouv. Inst. 3063.

INCONSULTO. (Lat.) In the civil law. Unadvisedly; unintentionally. Dig. 28. 4. 1.

INCONTINENCE. Impudicity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

INCORPORALIA BELLO NON ADQUIRUNTUR. Things incorporeal are not acquired by war. 6 Maule & S. 104.

INCORPORATE.

(1) To form into a corporation; to procure or to grant a corporate franchise.

(2) To include in any writing the contents of any other writing, whether by actual insertion, or by mere reference to the document to be incorporated.

INCORPORATION. The act of creating a corporation.

—In Civil Law. The union of one domain to another.

INCORPOREAL. Having no body or corpus; not material or tangible; not an object of sense, but existing solely in contemplation of law.

INCORPOREAL CHATTELS. A class of incorporeal rights growing out of or incident to things personal; such as patent rights and copyrights. 2 Steph. Comm. 72.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable, and not tangible or visible. 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate, whether real or personal, or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 20; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10. See "Hereditaments."

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In civil law. That which consists in legal right merely.

The same as choses in action at common law.

INCORRIGIBLE ROGUE. A species of rogue or offender, described in St. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38. 4 Steph. Comm. 309.

INCREASE, COSTS OF. In English law. It was formerly a practice with the jury to award to the successful party in an action the nominal sum of 40s. only for his costs; and the court assessed by their own officer the actual amount of the successful party's costs; and the amount so assessed, over and above the nominal sum awarded by the jury, was thence called "costs of increase." Lush, Com. Law Prac. 775. The practice has now wholly ceased. Rapalje & L.

INCREMENTUM. In old English law. Increase; addition; accretion. Cowell.

INCROACHMENT. See "Encroachment."

INCUPLICATE. To impute blame or guilt; to accuse.

INCULPATORY. In the law of evidence. Going or tending to establish guilt; intended to establish guilt; criminative. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 251, 252.

INCUMBENT. From the verb incumbere, that is, to be diligently resident; and when it is written incumbent, it is falsely written. Co. Litt. 119b. See Termes de la Ley.

One who is in possession of an office and is legally authorized to discharge the duties of that office; as, the present incumbent. 11 Ohio 50.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A clerk resident on his benefice with cure. He is so called because he does, or ought to, bend the whole of his studies to his duties.

INCUMBRANCE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. 5 Conn. 527; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242.

INCUMBRANCER. One who holds an incumbrance upon another's estate.

INCUR. To become subject to; to bring on. 4 Denio (N. Y.) 103. "Men contract debts; they incur liabilities." 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 48.

INCURRERE, or INCURRAMENTUM. To become liable to or subject to. Cowell.

INDE. Thereof; therefrom; therefore or therewith.

INDE DATAE LEGES NE FORTIOR OMNIA POSSET. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power. Dav. 36.

INDEBITATUS. (Law Lat.) Indebted. Nunquam indebitatus, never indebted. The title of the plea substituted in England for nil debet.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT (Lat.) In pleading. That species of action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff alleges, in his declaration, first a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt to pay the amount to the plaintiff.

It is so called from the words in which the promise is laid in the Latin form, translated in the modern form, "being indebted he promised." The promise so laid is generally an implied one only. See 1 Chit. Pl. 334; Steph. Pl. 318; 4 Robinson, Prac. 490 et seq.; Yelv. 21; 4 Coke, 92b. This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand. Upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 155; Selw. N. P. 68, 69, et seq.

Indebitatus assumpsit is in this distinguished from "debt" and "covenant," which proceed directly for the debt, damages being given only for the detention of the debt. Debt lies on contracts by specialty as well as by parol, while indebitatus assumpsit lies only on parol contracts, whether express or implied. Browne, Actions at Law, 317.

For the history of this form of action, see 3 Reeve, Hist. Com. Law; 2 Comyn, Cont. 549-556; 1 H. Bl. 550, 551; 3 Bl. Comm. 154; Yelv. 70. See "Assumpsit."

INDEBITI SOLUTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The payment to one of what is not due to him. If the payment was made by mistake, the civilians recovered it back by an action called condictio indebiti. With us, such money may be recovered by an action of assumpsit.

INDEBITUM (Lat.) In civil law. Not due or owing. Dig. 12. 6; Calv. Lex.

INDEBTEDNESS. A word of large meaning. It is used to denote almost every kind of pecuniary obligation originating in contract. 12 R. I. 179.

The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

But in order to create an indebtedness, there must be an actual liability at the time, either to pay then or at a future time. If, for example, a person were to enter and become surety for another, who enters into a rule of reference, he does not thereby become a debtor to the opposite party until the rendition of the judgment on the award. 1 Mass. 134. See Debt.

INDECENCY. An act tending to obscenity. "The term [indecent] is said to signify more than 'indelicate,' and less than 'immodest,'—to mean something unfit for the eye or ear." 12 Fed. 671.

INDECENT EXPOSURE. Willful or negligent exposure of the person, or the private parts thereof, in a public place. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 1130; 2 Gray (Mass.) 72; 32 Mo. 560; 56 Ind. 328.

To constitute an offense at common law, the offense must be in such a place that a number of persons may be offended thereby. 11 Cox, C. C. 659; 18 Vt. 574.

INDECIMABLE. Not tithable.

INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated or undone. This epithet is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated.

INDEFENSUS (Lat.) One sued or impleaded who refuses or has nothing to answer.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE. See "Failure of Issue."

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

INDEFINITE PAYMENT. That which a debtor who owes several debts to a creditor makes without making an appropriation. In that case the creditor has a right to make such appropriation.

INDEFINITUM AEQUIPOLLET UNIVERSALI. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Vent. 368.

INDEFINITUM SUPPLET LOCUM UNIVERSALI. The undefined supplies the place of the whole. 4 Coke, 77.

INDEMNIFY. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to make good; to put one in the situation he was in before sustaining a loss.

INDEMNIS (Lat.) Without loss, damage, or harm.

INDEMNITEE. The person who is protected by a contract of indemnity.

INDEMNITOR. The person who, by a contract of indemnity, agrees to protect another.

INDEMNITY. That which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. 2 McCord (S. C.) 279.

Security to save harmless. A contract whereby one party agrees to secure another against an anticipated loss or damage, and the liability under which is coterminous with the liability it is intended to cover. 53 L. J. Q. B. 321; 12 Q. B. D. 152.

For distinction between "indemnity" and "guaranty," see "Guaranty."

INDEMPNIS (Law Lat.) The old form of writing indemnitas. Towns. Pl. 19. So, indempnificatus for indemnificatus.

INDENIZATION. The act of making a denizen.

INDENT (Lat. in, and dens, tooth). To cut in the shape of teeth.

Deeds of indenture were anciently written on the same parchment or paper as many times as there were parties to the instrument, the word chirographum being written between, and then the several copies cut apart in a zigzag or notched line (whence the name), part of the word chirographum being on either side of it, and each party kept a copy. The practice now is to cut the top or side of the deed in a waving or notched line. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice; as to indent a young man to a shoemaker. Webster.

—In American Law. An indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or interest of the public debt. Ramsay; Hamilton; Webster; Eliot, Funding System, 35; 5 McLean (U. S.) 178; Act April 30, 1790, Sess. 2, c. 9, § 14; Act March 3, 1825, Sess. 2, c. 65, § 17. The word is no longer in use in this sense.

INDENTURE. A formal written instrument made between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to a deed poll, which is one made by a single person, or by several having similar interests.

Its name comes from a practice of indenting or scolloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving line. This is not necessary in England at the present day, by St. 8 & 9, Vict. c. 106, § 5, but was in Lord Coke's time, when no words of indenture would supply its place. 5 Coke, 20. In this country it is a mere formal act, not necessary to the deed's being an indenture. See Bac. Abr. "Leases" (E 2); Comyn, Dig. "Fait" (C, and note d); Litt. § 370; Co. Litt. 143b, 229a; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 1, § 24; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 294; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 587 et seq.; 1 Steph. Comm. 447. The ancient practice was to deliver as many copies of an instrument as there were parties to it. And as early as King John it became customary to write the copies on the same parchment, with the word chirographum, or some other word, written between them, and then to cut them apart through such word, leaving part of each letter on either side the line, which was at first straight, afterwards indented or notched. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 89; Du Cange; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 587 et seq. See "Indent."

INDENTURE OF APPRENTICESHIP. A contract in two parts, by which a person is bound to serve another in his trade, art, or occupation, on condition of being instructed in it. See "Apprentice."

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT. One in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or considerations. Civ. Code La. art. 1762; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 699.

INDEPENDENT COVENANTS. Covenants in an instrument which are independent of each other, or where the performance of one does not depend on the performance of the other. 1 Seld. 247.

INDEPENDENTER SE HABET ASSECURATIO A VIAGGIO NAVIS. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 318, note.

INDETERMINATE. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated; as, if I sell you one hundred bushels of wheat, without stating what wheat. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 950.

INDEX ANIMI SERMO. Speech is the index of the mind.

INDIAN TRIBE. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. See 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 16, 17; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 193; 3 Kent, Comm. 308-318; Story, Const. § 1096; 4 How. (U. S.) 567; 1 McLean (U. S.) 254; 6 Hill (S. C.) 546; 3 Ala. (N. S.) 48.

INDICARE (Law Lat. from index, a shower or pointer). In the civil law. To show or discover.

To fix or tell the price of a thing. Calv. Lex.

To inform against; to accuse. Dig. 50. 16. 197.

INDICATIF. An abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court christian to the queen's bench. Enc. Lond.

INDICATION. In the law of evidence. A sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 251, 252, 263, 275.

INDICAVIT (Lat. from indicare, to show). In English practice. A writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl. Comm. 91; 3 Steph. Comm. 711. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form. Reg. Orig. 35b, 36.

INDICIA (Lat.) Signs; marks. Conjectures which result from circumstances not absolutely certain and necessary, but merely probable, and which may turn out not to be true, though they have the appearance of truth.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with "circumstantial evidence." It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves. However numerous indicia may be, they only show that a thing may be, not that it has been. An indictum can have effect only when a connection is essentially necessary with the principal. Effects are known by their causes, but only when the effects can arise only from the causes to which they are attributed. When several causes may have produced one and the same effect, it is therefore unreasonable to attribute it to any particular one of such causes.

The term is much used in common law of signs or marks of identity. For example, in replevin it is said that property must have indicia, or ear marks, by which to distinguish it from other property of the same kind. So it is much used in the phrase "indicia of crime," in a sense similar to that of the civil law.

INDICIUM (Lat.) Singular of indicia (q. v.). In civil law. A sign or mark; a species of proof, answering very nearly to the "circumstantial evidence" of the common law. Best, Pres. p. 13, § 11, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 34.

INDICTED. Having had an indictment found against him.

INDICTEE. A person indicted.

INDICTIO (Lat.) In old public law. A declaration; a proclamation. Indictio belli, a declaration or indiction of war. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 17.

INDICTION. The space of fifteen years. It was used in dating at Rome and in England. It began at the dismission of the Nicene council, A. D. 312. The first year was reckoned the first of the first indiction, and so on till fifteen years afterwards. The sixteenth year was the first year of the second indiction; the thirty-first year was the first year of the third indiction, etc.

INDICTMENT. In criminal practice. A written accusation against one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, presented to, and preferred upon oath or affirmation by, a grand jury legally convoked. 4 Bl. Comm. 299; Co. Litt. 126; 2 Hale, P. C. 152; Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 168.

An accusation at the suit of the crown, found to be true by the oaths of a grand jury.

A written accusation of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, preferred to and presented on oath by a grand jury, and by assent of twelve at least. 12 Conn. 452.

The word is said to be derived from the old French word inditer, which signifies to indicate, to show, or point out. Its object is to indicate the offense charged against the accused. Rey des Inst. l'Angl. tom. 2, p. 347.

A distinction has been taken between "indictment" and "presentment," the former being a bill of indictment presented to the grand jury by the prosecuting officer, and by it found to be "a true bill"; while the latter is a return made by the grand jury of its own motion, upon which a bill of indictment was subsequently framed. 4 Bl. Comm. 801; 7 Grat. (Va.) 631. This distinction is no longer of much practical importance; an indictment in modern practice being both a finding and a presentment. See 9 Gray (Mass.) 290.

INDICTOR. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indictor."

INDIFFERENT. To have no bias or partiality. 7 Conn. 229. A juror, an arbitrator, and a witness ought to be indifferent; and when they are not so they may be challenged. See 9 Conn. 42.

INDIGENA (Lat. from inde, in, and geno, gigno, to beget). A native; born or bred in the same country or town. Ainsworth. A subject born, or naturalized by act of parliament. Opposed to alienigena. Rymer, tom. 15, p. 37; Co. Litt. 8a.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE. Evidence which does not prove the fact in question, but one from which it may be presumed. See "Evidence."

INDISTANTER. Instantly.

INDITEE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An indictor. 9 Coke, pref.

INDIVIDUUM (Lat.) In civil law. That cannot be divided. Calv. Lex.

INDIVISIBLE. Which cannot be separated; entire.

INDIVISUM (Lat.) That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

INDORSAT. In old Scotch law. Indorsed. 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 41.

INDORSE. To write on the back. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back. Writs in Massachusetts are indorsed in some cases by a person's writing his name on the back, in which case he becomes liable to pay the costs of the suit.

INDORSEE. The person to whom a negotiable instrument is transferred by indorsement.

INDORSEMENT.

—In Commercial Law. That which is written on the back of an instrument in writing, and which has relation to it.

Writing one's name on the back of a promissory note or other negotiable instrument. 20 Vt. 499.

An indorsement is generally made primarily for the purpose of transferring the rights of the holder of the instrument to some other person. It has, however, various results, such as rendering the indorser liable in certain events; and hence an indorsement is sometimes made merely for the purpose of additional security. This is called an "accommodation indorsement" when done without consideration other than an exchange of indorsements. See "Accommodation."

(1) A blank indorsement is one in which the name of the indorser only is written upon the instrument. It is commonly made by writing the name of the indorser on the back (13 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 315), but a writing across the face may answer the same purpose (18 Pick. [Mass.] 63; 16 East, 12).

(2) An indorsement in full is one in which mention is made of the name of the indorsee. Chit. Bills, 170.

(3) A conditional indorsement is one made subject to some condition without the performance of which the instrument will not be or remain valid. 4 Taunt. 30.

(4) A qualified indorsement is one which restrains, or limits, or qualifies, or enlarges the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Chit. Bills (8th Ed.) 261; 7 Taunt. 160. The words commonly used are sans recours, without recourse. 3 Mass. 225; 12 Mass. 14.

(5) A restrictive indorsement is one which restrains the negotiability of the instrument to a particular person, or for a particular purpose. 1 Rob. (La.) 222.

—In Criminal Law. An entry made upon the back of a writ or warrant.

When a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a crime has been issued by a justice of the peace of one county, which is to be executed in another county, it is necessary, in some states, that it should be indorsed by a justice of the county where it is to be executed. This indorsement is called "backing."

INDORSER. The person who makes an indorsement.

INDUCEMENT.

—In Contracts. The benefit which the obligor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it.

—In Criminal Law. The motive. Confessions are sometimes made by criminals under the influence of promises or threats. When these promises or threats are made by persons in authority, the confessions cannot be received in evidence. See "Confession."

—In Pleading. The statement of matter which is introductory to the principal subject of the declaration or plea, and which is necessary to explain or elucidate it. See "Colloquidm."

INDUCIAE (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A truce; cessation from hostilities for a time agreed upon. Also, such agreement itself. Calv. Lex. So in international law. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 2, § 11; Huber, Jur. Civ. p. 743, § 22.

—In Old Practice. A delay or indulgence allowed by law. Calv. Lex.; Du Cange; Bracton, fol. 352b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 8. See Bell, Dict.; Burton, Law Scot. 561. So used in old maritime law; e. g., an inducias of twenty days after safe arrival of vessel was allowed in case of a bottomry bond, to raise principal and interest. Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 2, c. 6, § 11.

INDUCIAE LEGALES (Lat.) In Scotch law. The days between the citation of the defendant and the day of appearance; the days between the teste day and day of return of the writ.

INDUCING. The words "inducing" and "persuading" as used in an information for pandering, are practically synonymous and charge only one offense. 198 Ill. App. 361.

INDUCTION. In ecclesiastical law. The giving a clerk, instituted to a benefice, the actual possession of its temporalities, in the nature of livery of seisin. Ayliffe, Par. 299.

INDULGENCE. A favor granted.

It is a general rule that where a creditor gives indulgence, by entering into a binding contract with a principal debtor, by which the surety is or may be damnified, such surety is discharged, because the creditor has put it out of his power to enforce immediate payment, when the surety would have a right to require him to do so. 6 Dow, Parl. Cas. 238; 3 Mer. 272; Bac. Abr. "Oblig." (D).

INDULTO. In Spanish law. The condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offense. L. 1, tit. 32, pt. 7. This power is exclusively vested in the king.

INDUMENT. Endowment. (q. v.)

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS. The expression industrial pursuit is broader than "trading" or "manufacturing." It includes both, and something more. It has been held that a statute authorizing corporations for "industrial pursuits" authorizes a corporation for carrying on the express business, and a corporation for carrying on a mercantile business for the sale of goods, mining supplies, etc. Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 131.

INDUSTRIAM. See "Per Industriam."

INEBRIATE. An habitual drunkard. A person rendered unfit, by habitual intoxication, to transact business.

INELIGIBILITY. The incapacity to be lawfully elected to an office.

INESSE POTEST DONATIONI, MODUS, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as (ut), introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause. Dyer, 138.

INEST DE JURE. It is implied by law.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT. A term used in the civil law, nearly synonymous with fortuitous event. 10 Miss. 572.

Any accident which cannot be foreseen and prevented. Though used as synonymous with "act of God," it would seem to have a wider meaning, including not only accidents resulting from natural forces, but those originating from human agencies. 4 Doug. 287, 290, per Lord Mansfield; 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 198, per Cowen, J.; 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 222; 2 Ga. 349; 10 Miss. 572; 1 Pars. Cont. 635; Whart. Neg. 553.

—In the Law of Maritime Collisions. Inevitable accident, "an occurrence which the party charged with the collision could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill." 2 Wall. (U. S.) 550.

INFALISTATUS (Law Lat. from in, and Fr. falaize, the seashore). In old English law. Exposed upon the sands or seashore. A species of punishment mentioned in Hengham. Summa Parva, c. 3; Cowell.

INFAMARE. (Lat.) In the civil law. To defame; to attack or injure one's character by word or writing. Brissonius; 3 Bl. Com. 125.

INFAMIS (Lat.) In Roman law. One who, in consequence of the application of a general rule, and not by virtue of an arbitrary decision of the censors, lost his political rights, but preserved his civil rights. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 79.

INFAMOUS CRIME. A crime which works infamy in one who has committed it.

—In the United States. It has been held that only those crimes are infamous that were so at common law (1 Dak. 289), but the general rule is that any offense is infamous that may be punished by death, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, with or without hard labor. 128 U. S. 393; 8 Gray (Mass.) 349; 75 Mich. 611.

A crime which subjects the party to a disqualification to hold office, in case he is convicted of such crime. 171 Ill. 73.

The test is the possible punishment, and not that awarded in a particular case. 114 U. S. 417.

—At Common Law. Treason and all felonies, and certain misdemeanors affecting the public interest most closely, were infamous crimes, the nature of the crime being the test. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; 114 U. S. 417.

INFAMOUS PERSONS. Such as may be challenged as jurors propter delictum, and therefore shall never be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury with whom they were too scandalous to associate. 59 Pa. St. 116.

INFAMOUS PUNISHMENT. Disqualification from holding office, if inflicted as a punishment for crime, is an infamous punishment. 171 Ill. 73.

INFAMY. That state which is produced by the conviction of an infamous crime, and the loss of honor, which renders the infamous person incompetent as a witness or juror. 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 842.

INFANGTHEFE (from in, within, fang, taken, and thef, or theof, a thief). In old English law. A thief taken in, or within; i. e., within the manor or liberty of any man having jurisdiction to try him. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 37, § 2. A thief taken on any one's lands, being one of his own men or tenants, found in possession of the thing stolen. Bracton, fol. 154b; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 40.

The privilege or liberty, anciently granted to lords of certain manors, to try such offenders. Id.; Cowell; LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 3, note.

INFANS NON MULTUM A FURIOSO distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 2, § 8; Dig. 50. 17. 5. 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 223, 224, 242.

INFANT. At common law, one of either sex under the age of twenty-one years. Co. Litt. 171. By statute, the age at which females reach their majority has been lowered in some states. See "Age."

INFANTIA (Lat. from infans). In the civil law. The age from birth till the completion of seven years. 4 Bl. Comm. 22; Calv. Lex.; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 21, § 247.

INFANTICIDE. The murder of a newborn infant. It is thus distinguishable from "abortion" and "foeticide," which are limited to the destruction of the life of the foetus in utero.

INFANZON. In Spanish law. A person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him.

INFEST. In Scotch law. To give seisin or possession of lands; to invest or enfeoff. 1 Kames, Eq. 215.

INFESTMENT.

—In Old Scotch Law. Investiture or infeudation, including both charter and seisin. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 110.

—In Later Law. Sasine, or the instrument of possession. Bell. Dict.

INFENSARE CURIAM (Law Lat.) An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance. Spelman.

INFEOFFMENT. The act or instrument of feoffment. In Scotland it is synonymous with sasine, meaning the instrument of possession. Formerly it was synonymous with "investiture." Bell, Dict. See "Enfeoffment."

INFERENCE. A conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof.

INFERIOR. One who, in relation to another, has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 8.

INFERIOR COURTS. By this term are understood all courts except the supreme courts. An inferior court is a court of limited jurisdiction, and it must appear on the face of its proceedings that it has jurisdiction, or its proceedings will be void. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2529.

INFICIARI, or INFITIARI (Lat.) In the civil law. To deny; to deny one's liability; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge; to deny the allegation of a plaintiff; to deny the charge of an accuser. Calv. Lex.

INFICIATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Denial; denial of fact alleged by plaintiff,—especially, a denial of debt or deposit. Vocat; Calv. Lex.

INFIDEL. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world, or that which is to come. Willes, 550. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 368.

This term has been very indefinitely applied. Under the name of "infidel," Lord Coke comprises Jews and heathens (2 Inst. 506; 3 Inst. 165), and Hawkins includes among infidels such as do not believe either in the Old or New Testament (Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 46, § 148).

INFIDELITAS (Lat.) In feudal law. Infidelity; faithlessness to one's feudal oath. Spelman.

INFIDUCIARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To pledge property. Spelman.

INFIGHT (Saxon). An assault upon an inhabitant of same dwelling. Anc. Inst. Eng.

INFINITUM IN JURE REPROBATUR. That which is infinite or endless is reprehensible in law. 9 Coke, 45.

INFIRMATIVE. Weakening. Webster. Tending to weaken or render infirm; disprobabilizing. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 13, 14. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 120 et seq.; Best, Pres. § 217 et seq.

INFIRMATIVE CONSIDERATION. In the law of evidence. A consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deducible from them. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 153-155.

INFIRMATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deducible from them. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 14; Best, Pres. § 217 et seq.; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 154.

Otherwise called an "exculpatory fact."

INFIRMATIVE HYPOTHESIS. In the law of evidence. An hypothesis upon which the criminative circumstances may be explained consistently with the innocence of the accused.

INFORMAL. Deficient in matters of form.

INFORMALITY. Want of legal form.

INFORMATION. The communication of material facts for the first time. 4 M. & W. 24.

—In French Law. The act or instrument which contains the depositions of witnesses against the accused. Poth. Proc. Civ. § 2, art. 5.

—In Practice. A criminal information is an accusation or a complaint exhibited against a person for some criminal offense. It differs principally from an indictment in this, that an indictment is found upon the oath of twelve men and an information is only the allegation of the officer who exhibits it. 4 Bl. Comm. 308. It is a prosecution originating with an officer, but may originate with a private citizen, but its object is, not compensation to the informer, but solely the public advantage. 67 Mo. 379.

Informations "are of two sorts; first, those which are partly at the suit of the king and partly at that of a subject; and secondly, such as are only in the name of the king." And the last "are of two kinds; first those which are truly and properly his own suits, and filed ex officio by his own officer, the Attorney-General; and secondly, those in which, though the King is the nominal prosecutor, yet it is at the relation of some private person or common informer. 12 Conn. 452.

Criminal informations are analogous to declarations for the redress of a personal injury, except that the latter are at the suit of a subject for the satisfaction of a private wrong, and the former are in the name of the King, for the punishment of offences affecting the interests of the public. 20 N. H. 296.

The process has not been formally put in motion by congress for misdemeanors, but is common in civil prosecutions for penalties and forfeitures. 3 Story, Const. 659. The information is usually made upon knowledge given by some other person than the officer, called the "relator."

The term is also applied to the pleading by which proceedings by the government, particularly those of a quasi criminal character, are begun.

INFORMATION IN THE NATURE OF A quo warranto. A proceeding against the usurper of a franchise or office. See "Quo Warranto."

INFORMATION OF INTRUSION. A proceeding instituted by the state prosecuting officer against intruders upon the public domain. See Gen. St. Mass. c. 141; 3 Pick. (Mass.) 224; 6 Leigh (Va.) 588.

INFORMATUS NON SUM (Lat.) In practice. I am not informed. A formal answer made in court or put upon record by an attorney when he has nothing to say in defense of his client. Styles, Reg. 372.

INFORMER. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute.

INFORTIATUM (Lat.) In civil law. The second part of the Digest or Pandects of Justinian. See "Digest."

This part, which commences with the third title of the twenty-fourth book, and ends with the thirty-eighth book, was thus called because it was the middle part, which, it was said, was supported and fortified by the two others. Some have supposed that this name was given to it because it treats of successions, substitutions, and other important matters, and, being more used than the others, produced greater fees to the lawyers.

INFRA (Lat.) Below; under; beneath; underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est,—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia; in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter. Inst. 3, 6. 1.

In another sense, this word signifies "within"; as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the county; infra praesidia, within the guards; infra clausum, within the close. So of time, "during"; infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The sole instance of the word in this sense in the Code, infra anni spatium (Code, bk. 5, tit. 9, § 2), is corrected to intra anni spatium, in the edition of the Corpus Jur. Civ. of 1833, at Leipsic. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire. In Italian, the preposition fra, which is a corruption of infra, is used in the sense of intra. Bonetti, Ital. Dict.

INFRA AETATEM (Lat.) Within or under age.

INFRA ANNOS NUBILES (Law Lat.) Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age. 6 Coke, 22.

INFRA ANNUM LUCTUS (Lat.) Within the year of grief or mourning. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 457; Code, 5. 9. 2. But intra anni spatium is the phrase used in the passage in the Code referred to. See Corp. Jur. Civ. 1843, Leipsic. Intra tempus luctus occurs in Novella 22, c. 40. This year was at first ten months, afterwards twelve. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 612.

INFRA BRACHIA (Lat.) Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure as well as de facto. 2 Inst. 317. Also, inter brachia. Bracton, fol. 148b. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua. Woman's Lawy., pp. 332, 335.

INFRA CIVITATEM. Within the state.

INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS (Lat.) Within the body of the county.

The common-law courts have jurisdiction infra corpus comitatus. The admiralty, on the contrary, has no such jurisdiction, unless, indeed, the tide water may extend within such county. 5 How. (U. S.) 441, 451. See "Admiralty"; "Fauces Terrae."

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURIAE (Lat.) Below the dignity of the court. Example: In equity a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. See 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 183; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 364; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4237.

INFRA FUROREM (Law Lat.) During madness; while in a state of insanity. Bracton, fol. 19b; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 17.

INFRA HOSPITIUM (Lat.) Within the inn. When once a traveler's baggage comes infra hospitium, that is, in the care and under the charge of the innkeeper, it is at his risk. See 1 Coke, 32; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175; 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 282; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 642; 8 N. H. 408; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 47; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280; 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; 1 Adol. & E. 522; 3 Nev. & M. 576; 2 Kent, Comm. 593 (9th Ed.) Story, Bailm. § 478; 1 Pars. Cont. 631, notes. See "Guest"; "Innkeeper."

INFRA JURISDICTIONEM (Law Lat.) Within the jurisdiction. 2 Strange, 827; Latch, 214.

INFRA LIGEANTIAM REGIS (Law Lat.) Within the king's ligeance. Comb. 212.

INFRA METAS (Law Lat.) Within the bounds or limits. Infra metas forestae, within the bounds of the forest. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 12. Infra metas hospitii, within the limits of the household; within the verge. Id. lib. 2, c. 2, § 2.

INFRA PRAESIDIA (Lat. within the walls). A term used in relation to prizes, to signify that they had been brought completely in the power of the captors; that is, within the towns, camps, ports, or fleet of the captors. Formerly the rule was, and perhaps still in some countries is, that the act of bringing a prize infra praesidia changed the property; but the rule now established is that there must be a sentence of condemnation to effect this purpose. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 134; 1 Kent, Comm. 104; Chit. Law Nat. 98; Abb. Shipp. 14; Hugo, Dr. Rom. § 90.

INFRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat.) Within the four seas. Litt. § 157.

According to classical style, the phrase ought to be "intra," etc. Harg. Co. Litt. lib. 2, note 115.

INFRA REGNUM (Law Lat.) Within the realm. Reg. Orig. 25.

INFRA TEMPUS SEMESTRE (Law Lat.) Within six months (infra sex menses). St. Westminster II. c. 5, 2 Inst. 361; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 195; 3 Bl. Comm. 249.

INFRA TRIDUUM (Law Lat.) Within three days. Formal words in old appeals. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6; Id. c. 35, § 3.

INFRACTION (Lat. infrango, to break in upon). The breach of a law or agreement; the violation of a compact. In the French law this is the generic expression to designate all actions which are punishable by the Code of France.

INFRINGEMENT. In patent law. A word used to denote the act of trespassing upon the incorporeal right secured by a patent. Any person who, without legal permission, shall make, use, or sell to another to be used, the thing which is the subject matter of any existing patent, is guilty of an infringement.

To constitute an infringement, there need not be a precise duplication, but only an adoption of the "operative principle" (1 Fish. Pat. Cas. [U. S.] 319); a mere change in the mechanical incidents, while retaining the principle, being an infringement. By the "principle" of a machine is not meant the original elementary principles of motion, but the modus operandi,—the peculiar device or manner of producing the effect. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 478.

The term is also applied to the unlawful or unauthorized use of copyrighted matter or of a trade-mark or trade name.

INFUGARE. To cause to flee.

INFUSION. In medical jurisprudence. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a substance whose medical properties it is desired to extract. The product of this operation.

Although "infusion" differs from "decoction," they are said to be ejusdem generis; and in the case of an indictment which charged the prisoner with giving a decoction, and the evidence was that he had given an infusion, the difference was held to be immaterial. 3 Campb. 74.

INGENIUM (Lat. of middle ages). A net or hook (Du Cange); hence, probably, the meaning given by Spelman of artifice, fraud (ingin). A machine (Spelman), especially for warlike purposes; also, for navigation of a ship (Du Cange).

INGENUI (Lat.) In civil law. Those freemen who were born free. Vicat.

They were a class of freemen, distinguished from those who, born slaves, had afterwards legally obtained their freedom. The latter were called, at various periods, sometimes liberti, sometimes libertini. An unjust or illegal servitude did not prevent a man from being ingenuus.

INGENUITAS (Law Lat.) Manumission; liberty.

INGENUITAS REGNI (Law Lat.) In old English law. The freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Cowell. Applied sometimes also to the barons. Id.

INGRESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS. These words are frequently used in leases to express the right of the lessee to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

INGRESSU (Lat.) An ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Tech. Dict.

INGRESSUS (Lat.) In old English law. Ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called. Cowell.

INGROSSATOR (Law Lat.) An engrosser. Ingrossator magni rotuli, engrosser of the great roll; afterwards called "clerk of the pipe." Spelman; Cowell.

INGROSSING. In practice. The act of copying, from a rough draft, a writing, in order that it may be executed; as, ingrossing a deed.

INHABITANT (Lat. in, in, habeo, to dwell). One who has a habitation at a given place. It embraces locality of existence; refers to the place of a person's actual residence and excludes the idea of occasional or temporary residence. 3 Ill. 396, 403. See "Habitation."

The term is one whose meaning varies with the context. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 771.

Used in the tax laws as convertible with "resident." In making residence a test of taxability, the statute looks only to an actual inhabitancy for some permanent period and purpose, at a prescribed time. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 51.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY. A tax assessed in England on inhabited dwelling-houses, according to their annual value (St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, § 11), which is payable by the occupier, the landlord being deemed the occupier where the house is let to several persons (St. 48 Geo. III. c. 55, Schedule B). Houses occuried solely for business purposes are exempt from duty, although a caretaker may dwell therein, and houses partially occupied for business purposes are to that extent exempt. Rapalje & L.

INHERENT POWER. An authority possessed without its being derived from another; a right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another.

INHERETRIX. The old term for "heir-ess." Co. Litt. 13a.

INHERIT. To take by inheritance; to take as heir on the death of the ancestor. "To inherit to" a person is a common expression in the books. 3 Coke, 41; 2 Bl. Comm. 254, 255.

INHERITABLE BLOOD. Blood of an ancestor which, while it makes the person in whose veins it flows a relative, will also give him the legal rights of inheritance incident to that relationship. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 254, 255. Descendants can derive no title through a person whose blood is not inheritable. Such, in England, are persons attainted and aliens. But attainder is not known in this country. Id. See 4 Kent, Comm. 413, 424; 1 Hilliard Real Prop. 148; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 190.

INHERITANCE. A perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs; the right to succeed to the estate of a person who dies intestate. Dig. 50. 16. 24. The term is applied to lands.

The property which is inherited is called an inheritance.

The term "inheritance" includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee simple or fee tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance, because the purchaser's heirs may inherit it. Co. Litt. § 9. See "Estate."

—In Civil Law. The succession to all the rights of the deceased. It is of two kinds: That which arises by testament when the testator gives his succession to a particular person; and that which arises by operation of law, which is called "succession ab intestat." Heinec. Lec. Elem. §§ 484, 485.

INHERITANCE ACT. The English statute of 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, regulating the law of inheritance. 2 Chit. St. 575; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 37; 1 Steph. Comm. 500.

INHIBITION.

—In Civil Law. A prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. Halifax, Anal. p. 126.

—In English Law. The name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him. It is in the nature of a prohibition. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 39.

—In Scotch Law. A personal prohibition which passes by letters under the signet, prohibiting the party inhibited to contract any debt or do any act by which any part of the heritable property may be aliened or carried off, in prejudice of the creditor inhibiting. Ersk. Prac. bk. 2, tit. 2, § 2. See "Diligence."

INHIBITION AGAINST A WIFE. In Scotch law. A writ in the sovereign's name, passing the signet, which prohibits all and sundry from having transactions with a wife, or giving her credit. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 26.

INHOC, or INHOKE (Saxon; Law Lat. inhokium). In old records. A nook or corner of a common or fallow field, inclosed and cultivated. Kennett Par. Ant. 297, 298; Cowell.

INHONESTUS (Lat.) In old English law. Unseemly; not in due order. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 8.

INIQUISSIMA PAX EST ANTEPONENDA justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 305.

INIQUITY In Scotch Practice. A technical expression applied to the decision of an inferior judge who has decided contrary to law. He is said to have committed iniquity. Bell, Dict.

INIQUUM EST ALIOS PERMITTERE, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade, and to prohibit others. 3 Inst. 181.

INIQUUM EST ALIQUEM REI SUI ESSE judicem. It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

INIQUUM EST INGENUIS HOMINIBUS non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is against equity for freemen not to have the free disposal of their own property. Co. Litt. 223. See 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 455, 460.

INITIAL (from Lat. initium, beginning). Beginning; placed at the beginning. Webster. Thus, the initials of a man's name are the first letters of his name.

There is no presumption of sex from use of initials. 180 Ill. App. 578.

The middle initial is no part of a name, and it will be presumed, after many years, in absence of evidence to contrary, that a person who attested a will, signing his first name with an initial for middle name, was the same person who testified, signing by initials of first and middle names, where the first initial is the first letter of the given name in the attestation, although the middle initial, when testifying, was different. 253 Ill. 58.

INITIALIA TESTIMONII (Lat.) In Scotch law. A preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain what disposition he bears towards the parties,—whether he has been prompted what to say, whether he has received a bribe, and the like. It resembles in some respects an examination on voir dire in English practice.

INITIATE. Commenced.

A husband was, in feudal law, said to be tenant by the curtesy initiate when a child who might inherit was born to his wife, because he then first had an inchoate right as tenant by the curtesy, and did homage to the lord as one of the pares curiae, peers of the court; whence "curtesy." This right became consummated on the death of the wife before the husband. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 127; 1 Steph. Comm. 247.

INITIATIVE. In French law. The name given to the important prerogative conferred by the Charte Constitutionnelle (article 16) on the late king to propose through his ministers projects of laws. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 39. See "Veto."

INITIUM. (Lat.) A, or the beginning; the origin, cause or foundation of a thing, act or contract.

INJUNCTION. A prohibitory writ, issued by the authority of, and generally under the seal of, a court of equity, to restrain one or more of the defendants or parties, or quasi parties, to a suit or proceeding in equity, from doing, or from permitting his servants or others who are under his control to do, an act which is deemed to be unjust or inequitable so far as regards the rights of some other party or parties to such suit or proceedings in equity. Eden, Inj. c. 1; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 3, c. 2, § 1; Story, Eq. Jur. § 861; Willard, Eq. Jur. 341; 4 Bouv. Inst. 120; 2 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 136; 1 Madd. 126.

(1) Preliminary injunctions are used to restrain the party enjoined from doing or continuing to do the wrong complained of, either temporarily or during the continuance of the suit or proceeding in equity in which such injunction is granted, and before the rights of the parties have been definitely settled by the decision and decree of the court in such suit or proceeding.

(2) Final or perpetual injunctions are awarded, or directed to be issued, or the preliminary injunction already issued is made final or perpetual, by the final decree of the court, or when the rights of the parties so far as relates to the subject of the injunction are finally adjudicated and disposed of by the decision and the order or decree of the court. 2 Freem. Ch. 106; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 69; 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 366; 1 Bibb (Ky.) 184; 4 Bouv. Inst. 123.

In England, injunctions were divided into "common injunctions" and "special injunctions," Eden, Inj. (3d Am. Ed.) 178, note; Willard, Eq. Jur. 342; Saxt. (N. J.) 504. The common injunction was obtained of course when the defendant in the suit in equity was in default for not entering his appearance, or for not putting in his answer to the complainant's bill within the time prescribed by the practice of the court. Eden, Inj. (3d Am. Ed.) 59-61, 68-72, 93, note; Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; 18 Ves. 523; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 3, c. 2, § 1, p. 339; Gilb. For. Rom. 194; Newby, Chanc. Prac. c. 4, § 7. Special injunctions were founded upon the oath of the complainant, or other evidence of the truth of the charges contained in his bill of complaint. They were obtained upon a special application to the court, or to the officer of the court who was authorized to allow the issuing of such injunctions, and usually upon notice of such application given to the party whose proceedings were sought to be enjoined. Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; 4 Eden, Inj. 78, 290; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 339, 341, 342; 3 Mer. 475; 18 Ves. 522, 523. In the United States courts, and in the equity courts of most of the states of the Union, the English practice of granting the common injunction has been discontinued or superseded, either by statute or by the rules of the courts. And the preliminary injunctions are therefore all special injunctions in the courts of this country, where such English practice has been superseded.

INJURIA ABSQUE (or SINE) DAMNO. Wrong without damage; an actionable wrong not resulting in any legal damage.

The doctrine of injuria absque damno applies only in those cases where, though there was a wrongful act, it did not amount to an invasion of a substantial right, the tendency of modern law being to presume nominal damages from every infraction of a legal right, though no actual damage result. Whether nominal damages will be presumed, or the rule of injuria absque damno applied, depends on the disposition of the court to invoke the maxim "de minimis," etc. See 75 Cal. 182; 30 Vt. 443. And this will be done generally, only where the right infringed was in itself trivial, as where an officer, on attaching hay, used for a few moments, without leave, a fork belonging to the attachment debtor, and then returned it uninjured. 22 Vt. 231. See Sedgw. Dam. § 96; Suth. Dam. § 3; "Nominal Damages."

INJURIA FIT EI CUI CONVICIUM DICTUM est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Coke, 60.

INJURIA NON EXCUSAT INJURIAM. A wrong does not excuse a wrong. Broom. Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 247, 343, 349; 11 Exch. 822; 15 Q. B. 276; 6 El. & Bl. 76; Branch, Princ.

INJURIA NON PRAESUMITUR. A wrong is not presumed. Co. Litt. 232.

INJURIA PROPRIA NON CADET IN BENEFICIUM FACIENTIS. No one shall profit by his own wrong.

INJURIA SERVI DOMINUM PERTINGIT. The master is liable for injury done by his servant. Lofft, 229.

INJURIOUS WORDS. In Louisiana. Slander, or libellous words. Civ. Code La. art. 3501.

INJURY (Lat. in, negative, jus, a right). A wrong or tort.

Relative injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

Absolute injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Private injuries are infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals.

Public injuries are breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Injuries to personal property are the unlawful taking and detention thereof from the owner; and other injuries are some damage affecting the same while in the claimant's possession, or that of a third person, or injuries to his reversionary interests.

Injuries to real property are ousters, trespasses, nuisances, waste, subtraction of rent, disturbance of right of way, and the like.

It is obvious that the divisions overlap each other, and that the same act may be, for example, a relative, a private, and a public injury at once. For many injuries of this character, the offender may be obliged to suffer punishment for the public wrong, and to recompense the sufferer for the particular loss which he has sustained. The distinction is more commonly marked by the use of the terms civil injuries to denote private injuries, and of crimes, misdemeanors, etc., to denote the public injury done, though not always; as, for example, in case of a public nuisance which may be also a private nuisance.

—In Civil Law. A delict committed in contempt or outrage of any one, whereby his body, his dignity, or his reputation is maliciously injured. Voet. Com. ad Pand. 47, tit. 10, note 1.

A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected; as, striking one with a cane, or even aiming a blow without striking; spitting in one's face; assuming a coat of arms, or any other mark or distinction, proper to another, etc. The composing and publishing defamatory libels may be reckoned of this kind. Ersk. Prac. 4. 4. 45.

A verbal injury, when directed against a private person, consists in the uttering contumelious words, which tend to injure his character by making him littl or ridiculous. Where the offensive words are uttered in the heat of a dispute, and spoken to the person's face, the law does not presume any malicious intention in the utterer, whose resentment generally subsides with his passion; and yet, even in that case, the truth of the injurious words seldom absolves entirely from punishment. Where the injurious expressions have a tendency to blacken one's moral character, or fix some particular guilt upon him, and are deliberately repeated in different companies, or handed about in whispers to confidants, the crime then becomes slander, agreeably to the distinction of the Roman law. Dig. 15. § 12, "De Injur."

INJUSTUM EST, NISI TOTA LEGE INSPECTAE, DE UNA ALIQUA EJUS PARTICULA PROPOSITA JUDICARE VEI RESPONDERE. It is unjust to give judgment or advice concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law. 8 Coke, 117b.

INLAGARE, or INLEGIARE. To restore to protection of law. Opposed to utlagare. Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 14, § 1; Du Cange.

INLAGATION. Restoration to the protection of law.

INLAGHE. A person subject to the law; under the protection of the law.

INLAND. Within the same country.

INLAND BILL OF EXCHANGE. One drawn upon a person living in the same state or country with the drawer.

INLAND NAVIGATION. Includes navigation upon rivers (6 Biss. [U. S.] 364), but not on the Great Lakes (24 How. [U. S.] 1).

INLANDTAL, or INLANTAL (Saxon). The same with inland (q. v.). Cowell.

INLAUGHE. See "Inlaghe."

INLAW. To place under the protection of the law. Swearing obedience to the king in a leet, which doth inlaw the subject." Bac. Works, IV. 328.

INLIGARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To confederate; to join in a league (in ligam coire). Spelman.

INMATE. One who dwells in a part of another's house, the latter dwelling, at the same time, in the said house. Kitch. Cts. 45b; Comyn, Dig. "Justices of the Peace" (B 85); 1 Barn. & C. 578; 8 Barn. & C. 71; 9 Barn. & C. 335; 2 Dowl. & R. 743; 2 Man. & R. 227; 4 Man. & R. 151; 2 Russ. Crimes, 937; 1 Deac. Crim. Law, 185; 2 East, P. C. 499, 505; 1 Leach, Crim. Law, 90, 237, 427; Alc. Reg. Cas. 21; 1 Man. & G. 83. See "Lodger."

INN. A house where a traveller is furnished with everything he has occasion for while on his way. Bac. Abr. "Inns" (B); 12 Mod. 255; 3 Barn. & Ald. 283; 4 Camp. 77; 2 Chit. Bailm. 484; 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72; 3 Chit. Comm. Law, 365, note 6. A public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it. 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 247.

INNAMIUM. A pledge.

INNATURALITAS. (Law Lat.) In old records. Unnatural usage. Cowell.

INNAVIGABLE. A term applied in foreign insurance law to a vessel not navigable, through irremediable misfortune by a peril of the sea. The ship is relatively innavigable when it will require almost as much time and expense to repair her as to build a new one. Targa, c. 54, p. 238, c. 60, p. 256; Emerig. tom. 1, pp. 577, 591; 3 Kent, Comm. 323, note.

INNER BARRISTER. One admitted to plead within the bar.

INNINGS. Lands gained from the sea by draining. Cunningham.

INNKEEPER. The keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travelers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Bac. Abr. "Inns," etc.; Story, Bailm. § 475. But one who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper. 2 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 424; 7 Ga. 296.

INNOCENCE. The absence of guilt (q. v.).

INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. In English law. A technical term used to signify those conveyances made by a tenant of his leasehold which do not occasion a forfeiture. These are conveyances by lease and release, bargain and sale, and a covenant to stand seised by a tenant for life. 1 Chit. Prac. 243, 244.

INNOMINATE (Lat.) In civil law. Not named or classed; belonging to no specific class; ranking under a general head. A term applied to those contracts for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed, but a general action on the case only. Dig. 2. 1. 4. 7. 2; Id. 19. 4. 5.

INNOMINATE CONTRACTS. In civil law. Contracts which have no particular names, as permutation and transaction. Inst. 2. 10. 13. There are many innominate contracts; but the Roman lawyers reduced them to four classes, namely, do ut des, do ut facias, facio ut des, and facio ut facias. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 2.

INNONIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A close or inclosure (clausum, in Clausura). Spelman.

INNOTESCIMUS (Lat.) In English law. An epithet used for letters patent, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument not of record, concluding with the words, innotescimus per præsentes, etc. Tech. Dict.

INNOVATION. In Scotch law. The exchange of one obligation for another, so that the second shall come in the place of the first. Bell, Dict. The same as "novation."

INNS OF CHANCERY. So called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the court of chancery. There are nine of them,—Clement's, Clifford's and Lyon's Inn; Furnival's, Thavies', and Symond's Inn, New Inn; and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the inns of court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the inns of court. Wharton.

INNS OF COURT. The name given to the colleges of the English professors and students of the common law.

The four principal inns of court are the Inner Temple and Middle Temple (formerly belonging to the Knights Templar), Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn (anciently belonging to the earls of Lincoln and Gray). The other inns are the two Sergeants' Inns. See "Inns of Chancery."

INNUENDO (Lat. innuere, to nod at, to hint at; meaning). The word was used when pleadings were in Latin, and has been translated by "meaning."

—In Pleading. A clause in a declaration, indictment, or other pleading containing an averment which is explanatory of some preceding word or statement.

It derives its name from the leading word by which it was always introduced when pleadings were in Latin. It is mostly used in actions of slander, and is then said to be a subordinate averment, connecting particular parts of the publication with what has gone before, in order to elucidate the defendant's meaning more fully. 1 Starkie, Sland. & L. 431.

Its object is to explain the defendant's meaning by reference to previous matter. See "Colloquium." It may be used to point to the plaintiff as the person intended in the defendant's statement. It may show that a general imputation of crime is intended to apply to the plaintiff (Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 226; 1 H. L. Cas. 637; 2 Hill [N. Y.] 282), but it cannot be allowed to give a new sense to words where there is no such charge (8 Q. B. 825; 7 C. B. 280).

It may point to the injurious and actionable meaning, where the words complained of are susceptible of two meanings (8 Q. B. 841; Moore & S. 727), and generally explain the preceding matter (1 Dowl. [N. S.] 602; 7 C. B. 251; 15 C. B. 360; 1 Mees. & W. 245; 5 Bing. 17; 10 Bing. 250; 12 Adol. & E. 317), but cannot enlarge and point the effect of language beyond its natural and common meaning in its usual acceptation (Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 219; Metc. Yelv. 22; 2 Salk. 513; 1 Ld. Raym. 256; 2 Cowp. 688; 4 Per. & D. 161; 6 Barn. & C. 154; 4 Nev. & M. 841; 4 Dowl. 703; 9 Adol. & E. 282; 12 Adol. & E. 719; 15 Pick. [Mass.] 335), unless connected with the proper introductory averments (1 Crompt. & J. 143; 1 Adol. & E. 554; 9 Adol. & E. 282, 286, note; 1 C. B. 728; 6 C. B. 239; 1 Saund. 242; 2 Pick. [Mass.] 320; 13 Pick. [Mass.] 198; 15 Pick. [Mass.] 321; 16 Pick. [Mass.] 1; 11 Metc. [Mass.] 473; 8 N. H. 246; 12 Vt. 51; 1 Bin. [Pa.] 537; 5 Bin. [Pa.] 218; 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 343; 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 211).

INOFFICIOSUM (Lat.) In civil law. Inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or of that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti. Dig. 2, 5, 8, 13; Paulus, lib. 4, tit. 5, § 1.

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT. A will not in accordance with the natural affections and ties of relationship of the testator.

INOFICIOCIDAD. In Spanish law. Everything done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature, inoficiosum dicitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

INOPS CONSILII (Lat.) Destitute or without counsel. In the construction of wills, a greater latitude is given, because the testator is supposed to have been inops consilii.

INPENY AND OUTPENY. In old English law. A customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy (pro exitu de tenura, et pro ingressu). Spelman; Cowell.

INQUEST OF OFFICE. An inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, either virtute officii, or by writ sent to him for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. It is done by a jury of no determinate number,—either twelve, or more, or less. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 258; Finch, Law, 323-325. An inquest of office was bound to find for the king upon the direction of the court. The reason given is that an inquest concluded no man of his right, but only gave the king an opportunity to enter, so that he could have his right tried. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 260; 4 Steph. Comm. 61; F. Moore, 730; Vaughan, 135; 3 Hen. VII. 10; 2 Hen. IV. 5; 3 Leon. 196. An inquest of office was also called, simply, "office." As to "office" in the United States, see 1 Caines (N. Y.) 426; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 603; 2 Kent, Comm. 16, 23.

INQUILINUS. In civil law. The hirer of a house in the city; a city tenant, as colonus was a country tenant. Bracton, fol. 42b.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. A writ sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tries the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount must always be returned to the court. But the return of the inquest merely informs the court, which may, if it choose, in all cases assess damages, and thereupon give final judgment. 2 Archb. Prac. (Waterman Ed.) 952; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 398; 3 Chit. St. 495, 497.

INQUISITIO (Lat.) In old English law. An inquisition or inquest. Inquisitio post mortem, an inquisition after death. An inquest of office held, during the continuance of the military tenures, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. Inquisitio patriae, the inquisition of the country; the ordinary jury, as distinguished from the grand assize. Bracton, fol. 15b.

INQUISITION. In practice. An examination of certain facts by a jury impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. The sheriff or coroner, and the jury who make the inquisition, are called the "inquest." The term "inquest" is now generally used instead of "inquisition."

INQUISITOR. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them; a judge.

INROLMENT, or ENROLLMENT (Law Lat. irrotulatio). The act of putting upon a roll.

Formerly, the record of a suit was kept on skins of parchment, which, best to preserve them, were kept upon a roll, or in the form of a roll. What was written upon them was called the "inrolment." After, when such records came to be kept in books, the making up of the record retained the old name of "inrolment." Thus, in equity, the inrolment of a decree is the recording of it, and will prevent the rehearing of the cause, except on appeal to the house of lords, or by bill of review. The decree may be inrolled immediately after it has been passed and entered, unless a caveat has been entered. 2 Freem. 179; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 501. And before signing and inrolment, a decree cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit, though it can be insisted on by way of answer. 3 Atk. 809; 2 Ves. Jr. 577; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199. See Saund. Ord. Chanc.

Transcribing upon the records of a court deeds, etc., according to the statutes on the subject. See 1 Chit. St. 425, 426; 2 Chit. St. 69, 76-78; 3 Chit. St. 1497. Placing on file or record generally, as annuities, attorneys, etc.

INSANITY. Unsoundness or derangement of mind.

Insanity is the general term, and includes all mental unsoundness, whether complete or partial, and whether congenital or induced.

It may be divided into (1) idiocy or imbecility, being the state of one who has been from birth without reason, and (2) lunacy, the state of one who once possessed reason, but has lost it in whole or in part.

"Lunacy" may be either (1) impulsive, consisting in an unnatural and sometimes irresistible impulse to certain acts, apart from or against all reason, and (2) delusive, consisting in persistent and incorrigible hallucinations as to matters of fact.

Further subdivisions have been sometimes made, as into the various manias,—homicidal, suicidal, etc.

Moral or emotional insanity is a perverted condition of the emotional or moral nature, inducing criminal acts, and not accompanied by intellectual delusion. It is the negative aspect of "irresistible impulse."

"Insanity" is frequently used in the sense of "lunacy," and as excluding "idiocy," and "imbecility."

The forms of insanity have been tabulated by a distinguished alienist as follows:

I. Defective development of faculties.

- (1) Idiocy.
 - (a) Resulting from congenital defect.
 - (b) Resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.
- (2) Imbecility.
 - (a) Resulting from congenital defect.
 - (b) Resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

II. Lesion of the faculties subsequent to their development.

- (1) Mania.
 - (a) Intellectual.
 - (aa) General.
 - (bb) Partial.
 - (b) Affective.
 - (aa) General.
 - (bb) Partial.
- (2) Dementia.

(a) Consecutive to mania, or injuries of the brain.

(b) Senile, peculiar to old age.

1 Ray, Med. Jur. "Insanity" (3d Ed.) p. 71.

INSANUS EST QUI, ABJECTA RATIONE, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage. 4 Coke, 128.

INSCRIBERE. In the Roman law. To subscribe an accusation. The subscriber was bound to substantiate his charge, or suffer the penalty appropriate to such charge. Calv. Lex.

INSCRIPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. A written accusation; an undertaking to suffer the punishment of the accused in case of a failure to prove him guilty. Calv. Lex.

INSCRIPTION.

—In Civil Law. An engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been inflicted upon him had he been guilty. Code, 9. 1. 10; Id. 9. 2. 16. 17.

—In Evidence. Something written or engraved.

Inscriptions upon tombstones and other proper places, as rings, and the like, are held to be evidence of pedigree. Buller, N. P. 233; Cowp. 591; 10 East, 120; 13 Ves. 145. See "Declaration"; "Hearsay Evidence."

INSCRIPTIONES (Lat.) The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything is granted. Blount.

INSENSIBLE. In pleading. That which is unintelligible is said to be insensible. Steph. Pl. 378.

INSIDERS. See "Gambling Contract."

INSIDIATORES VIARUM (Lat.) Persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

INSIMUL (Lat.) Together; jointly. Towns Pl. 44.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSENT (Lat.) They had accounted together. See "Account."

INSIMUL TENUIT. In old English practice. The name of a species of the writ of formedon in the descender, which lay for a cotenant against a stranger.

INSINUACION. In Spanish law. The presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby giving it judicial authenticity.

"Insinuatio est ejus quod traditur, sive agitur, coram quocumque iudice in scripturam redactio."

This formality is requisite to the validity of certain donations inter vivos. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INSINUARE. In civil law. To put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression "to file." To transcribe an act in the public registers; to record. Si non mandatum actis insinuatatum est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court. Inst. 4. 11. 3.

To declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form. Calv. Lex.

To make known; to give information. Id.

INSINUATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Information or suggestion. Ex insinuatione, on the information. Reg. Jud. 25, 50.

INSINUATION. In civil law. The transcription of an act on the public registers, like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation. Inst. 2. 7. 2; Poth. Tr. des Donations, Entre Vifs, sec. 2, art. 3, § 3; Encyclopedie; 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 198.

INSINUATION OF A WILL. In civil law. The first production of it; or, leaving it in the hands of the register in order to its probate. 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5; Jacob.

INSOLIDE (Law Lat.) Solidly; without any separation of possession or ownership.

A term used by Bracton to express that impossible or impracticable kind of possession where two persons hold a thing at the same time exclusively. Bract. fol. 45.

INSOLVENCY. The state of a person who is unable, from any cause, to pay his debts. Two tests of insolvency prevail, their application generally being governed by the purpose for which the fact of insolvency is ascertained, though there is some confusion in the cases in this respect.

Generally, for the purpose of enabling the debtor or his creditors to take advantage of insolvent acts, one is insolvent who is unable to meet his obligations as they accrue in due course of trade, and is unable to proceed in business without making some arrangement with his creditors, without regard to the ultimate sufficiency of his assets in liquidation. 112 Pa. St. 294; 98 Iowa, 321; 86 Me. 246; 3 Gray (Mass.) 600; 116 Mo. 226.

Within the rule relating to conveyances by insolvent persons, it is generally held that one is insolvent whose obligation could not be collected by legal means out of his property. 43 N. Y. 75; 31 Mo. 73. If one has means from which payment could be enforced, he is not insolvent, even though he is in embarrassed circumstances, and unable to make present payment (136 N. Y. 104; 52 Mo. App. 282), or has even been compelled to suspend business (63 Hun [N. Y.] 632). Property so situated that it cannot be reached by creditors is not to be considered in determining the issue of solvency (q. v.).

Distinction between "insolvency" and "bankruptcy," see "Bankruptcy."

INSOLVENT. One who is in a state of insolvency (q. v.)

INSPECTATOR. An adverse party.

INSPECTION (Lat. inspicere, to look into). The examination of certain articles made by law subject to such examination, so that they may be declared fit for commerce. The decision of the inspectors is not final. The object of the law is to protect the community from fraud, and to preserve the character of the merchandise abroad. 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 45. See 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 205; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 331; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 312; 3 Caines (N. Y.) 207.

—In Practice. Examination.

—Books and Records. The inspection of all public records is free to all persons who have an interest in them, upon payment of the usual fees. 7 Mod. 129; 1 Strange, 304, 2 Strange, 260, 954, 1005. But it seems a mere stranger, who has no such interest, has no right at common law. 8 Term R. 390.

A stockholder has, as a general rule, the right to inspect the books and records of his corporation.

INSPECTION, TRIAL BY. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof, and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 331. In this way questions whether a party were an infant or not, whether an injury was mayhem or not, etc., were determined; but this has been long out of use. 3 Steph. Comm. 582.

INSPECTOR. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction; as, inspector of bark, one who is by law authorized to examine bark for exportation, and to approve or disapprove of its quality. Inspectors of customs are officers appointed by the general government. As to their duties, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 590, 605, 609, 610, 612, 619, 621, 623, 650; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1490, 1516; 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1650, 1790.

INSPECTORSHIP, DEED OF. In English law. An agreement between an insolvent and his creditors, by which a certain person is appointed to supervise the winding up of the estate.

INSPEXIMUS (Lat. we have seen). A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim. It then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient. 5 Coke, 54.

INSTALLATION, or INSTALMENT. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The president of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the requisition of the constitution and laws.

INSTANCE. Literally, standing on; hence, urging, solicitation. Webster.

—In Civil and French Law. In general, all sorts of actions and judicial demands. Dig. 44. 7. 58.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. Causes of instance are those proceeded in at solicitation of some party, as opposed to causes of office, which run in the name of the judge. Halifax, Anal. p. 122.

—In Scotch Law. That which may be insisted on at one diet or course of probation. Wharton.

INSTANCE COURT. In English law. That branch of the admiralty court which has the jurisdiction of all matters except those relating to prizes.

An "instance court" takes cognizance of contracts made and injuries committed on the high seas; a "prize court" has jurisdiction of prizes, etc. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 257.

The term is sometimes used in American law for purposes of explanation, but has no proper application to admiralty courts in the United States, where the powers of both instance and prize courts are conferred without any distinction. 3 Dall. (U. S.) 6; 1 Gall. (U. S.) 563; 3 Kent, Comm. 355, 378. See "Admiralty."

INSTANCIA. In Spanish law. The institution and prosecution of a suit from its inception until definitive judgment. The first instance, primera instancia, is the prosecution of a suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, segunda instancia, is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, tercera instancia, is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal, that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

All civil suits must be tried and decided, in the first instance, within three years; and all criminal, within two years.

As a general rule, three instances are admitted in all civil and criminal cases. Const. 1812, art. 285.

INSTANS EST FINIS UNIUS TEMPORIS et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time, and the beginning of another. Co. Litt. 185.

INSTANTER (Lat.) Immediately; presently; instantly; forthwith; without any delay or the allowance of any time. This term, it is said, means that the act to which it applies shall be done within twenty-four hours; but a doubt has been suggested by whom is the account of the hours to be kept, and whether the term "instantanter," as applied to the subject matter, may not be more properly taken to mean "before the rising of the court," when the act is to be done in court, or "before the shutting of the office the same night," when the act is to be done there. 1 Taunt. 343; 6 East, 587, note (e); Tidd. Prac. (3d Ed.) 508, note; 3 Chit. Prac. 112. See 3 Burrows, 1809; Co. Litt. 157; Styles, Reg. 452; 20 Ill. App. 110.

—Pleading. An order that the defendants plead instantanter technically means within the judicial day then begun. 1 Bouvier Law Dic. 645; 20 Ill. App. 110. It is probably true that the term, as ordinarily used, is understood to mean instantly, immediately, or at once, so that upon such a rule, a default may follow the entry of the rule, and this, in effect, makes the rule unnecessary, for the default might as well be entered without it. 53 Ill. App. 160, 161.

INSTAR (Lat.) Like; resembling; equivalent; as, instar dentium, like teeth; instar omnium, equivalent to all.

INSTAURUM (Law Lat.) In old English deeds. A stock or store of cattle, and other things; the whole stock upon a farm, including cattle, wagons, ploughs, and all other implements of husbandry. 1 Mon. Angl. 548; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 1; Id. c. 72, § 7. Terra instaurata, land already stocked, or furnished with all things necessary to carry on the use or occupation of a farm.

INSTIGATION. The act by which one incites another to do something; as, to injure a third person, or to commit some crime or misdemeanor, to commence a suit, or to prosecute a criminal. See "Accomplice."

INSTIRPARE. To establish.

INSTITOR (Lat.) In civil law. A clerk in a store; an agent.

He was so called because he watched over the business with which he was charged; and it is immaterial whether he was employed in making a sale in the store, or whether charged with any other business. Institor appellatus est ex eo, quod negotio gerendo instet; nec multum facit tabernae sit praepositus, an cuilibet alii negotiationi. Dig. 14. 3. 1. 3. Mr. Bell says that the charge given to a clerk to manage a store or shop is called "institorial power." 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 479; Ersk. Inst. 3. 3. 46; 1 Stair, Inst. (by Brodie) bk. 1, tit. 11, §§ 12, 18, 19; Story, Ag. § 8.

INSTITORIA ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q. v.) to compel the principal to performance. Inst. 4. 7. 2; Dig. 14. 3. 1; Story, Ag. § 426.

INSTITUTE.

—In Scotch Law. The person first called in the "tailzie"; the rest, or the heirs of tailzie, are called "substitutes." Ersk. Prac. 3. 8. 8. See "Substitutes."

—In Civil Law. One who is appointed heir by testament, and is required to give the estate devised to another person, who is called the "substituta."

To name or to make an heir by testament. Dig. 28. 5. 65. To make an accusation; to commence an action.

INSTITUTES. Elements of jurisprudence; text books containing the principles of law made the foundation of legal studies.

The word was first used by the civilians to designate those books prepared for the student, and supposed to embrace the fundamental legal principles arranged in an orderly manner. Two books of Institutes were known to the civil lawyers of antiquity,—Gaius and Justinian.

(1) Coke's Institutes. Four volumes of commentaries upon various parts of the English law.

Sir Edward Coke hath written four volumes of "Institutes," as he is pleased to call them, though they have little of the institutional method to warrant such a title. The first volume is a very extensive commentary upon a little excellent treatise of tenures, compiled by Judge Littleton in the reign of Edw. IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. The second volume is a comment on many old acts of parliament, without any systematical order; the third, a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth, an account of the several species of courts. These Institutes are usually cited thus: The first volume as Co. Litt., or 1 Inst.; the second, third, and fourth as 2, 3, or 4 Inst., without any author's name. 1 Bl. Comm. 72.

(2) Gaius' Institutes. A tractate upon the Roman law, ascribed to Caius or Gaius.

Of the personal history of this jurist nothing is known. Even the spelling of his name is matter of controversy, and he is known by no other title than Gaius, or Caius. He is believed to have lived in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. The history of Gaius' Institutes is remarkable. In 1816, Niebuhr was sent to Rome by the king of Prussia. On his way thither, he spent two days in the cathedral library of Verona, and at this time discovered these Institutes, which had been lost to the jurists of the middle ages. In 1817, the Royal Academy of Berlin charged Goeschen, Bekker, and Hollweg with the duty of transcribing the discovered manuscript. In 1819, Goeschen gave the first completed edition, as far as the manuscript could be deciphered, to his fellow jurists. It created an unusual sensation, and became a fruitful source of comment. It formed a new era in the study of Roman law. It gave the modern jurist the signal advantage of studying the source of the Institutes of Justinian. It is believed by the best modern scholars that Gaius' was the first original tractate of the kind, not being compiled from former publications. The language of Gaius is clear, terse, and technical,—evidently written by a master of law, and a master of the Latin tongue. The Institutes were unquestionably practical. There is no attempt at criticism or philosophical discussion. The disciple of Sabinus is content to teach law as he finds it. Its arrangement is solid and logical, and Justinian follows it with an almost servile imitation.

The best editions of Gaius are Goeschen's second edition, Berlin, 1824, in which the text was again collated by Bluhme, and the third edition of Goeschen, Berlin, 1842, edited by Lachman from a critical revision by Goeschen, which had been interrupted by his death. In France, Gaius attracted equal attention, and we have three editions and translations: Boulet, Paris, 1824; Domenget, 1843; and Pellat, 1844.

In 1859, Francesco Lisi, a learned Italian scholar, published, at Bologna, a new edition of the first book of Gaius, with an Italian translation, en regard. The edition is accompanied and enriched by many valuable notes, printed in both Latin and Italian. Perhaps this must be considered, so far as printed, the most complete edition of the old civilian that modern scholars have yet produced.

The reader who may wish to pursue his Gaiian studies should consult the list of some thirty-odd treatises and commentaries mentioned in Mackeldey's Lehrbuch des Rom. Rechts, p. 47, note (b), (13th Ed.) Wein, 1851; Huschke, Essay Zur Kritik und Interp. von Gaius Inst., Breslau, 1830; Haubold's Inst. Jur. Rom. Prev. Line pp. 151, 152, 505, 506, Lipsiae, 1826; Boecking's Gaius, Preface, pp. 11-18, Leps. 1845; Lisi's Gaius, Preface, pp. x. xi., Bologna, 1859.

(3) Justinian's Institutes. An abridgment of the Code and Digest, composed by order of that emperor, and under his guidance, with an intention to give a summary knowledge of the law to those persons not versed in it, and particularly to students. Inst. Proem. § 3.

The lawyers employed to compile it were Tribonian, Theophilus, and Dorotheus. The work was first published on the 21st of November in the year 529, and received the sanction of statute law by order of the emperor. It is divided into four books; each book is divided into titles, and each title into separate paragraphs or sections, preceded by an introductory part. The first part is called principium, because it is the commencement of the title; those which follow are numbered, and called "paragraphs." The work treats of the rights of persons, of things, and of actions. The first book treats of persons; the second, third, and the first five titles of the fourth book, of things; and the remainder of the fourth book, of actions. The method of citing the Institutes should be understood, and is now commonly by giving the number of the book, title, and section, thus: Inst. I. 2. 5.—thereby indicating book I. title 2, section 5. Where it is intended to indicate the first paragraph, or principium, thus: Inst. B. I. 2. pr. Frequently the citation is simply I. or J. I. 2. 5. A second mode of citation is thus: § 5, Inst. or I. I. 2,—meaning book I. title 2, paragraph 5. A third method of citation, and one in universal use with the older jurists, was by giving the name of the title and the first words of the paragraph referred to, thus: § senatusconsultum est I de jure nat. gen. et civil.—which means, as before, Inst. B. I. tit. 2, § 5. See 1 Colquhoun, § 61.

The first printed edition of the Institutes is that of Schoyffer, fol. 1468. The last critical German edition is that of Schrader, Berlin, 1832. This work of Schrader is the most learned and most elaborate commentary on the text of Justinian in any language, and was intended to form a part of the Berlin Corpus Juris, but nothing further has been published. It is impossible in this brief article to name all the commentaries on these Institutes, which in all ages have commanded the study and admiration of jurists. More than one hundred and fifty years ago, one Homberg printed a tract De Multitudine nimia Commentatorum in Institutiones Juris. But we must refer the reader to the best recent French and English editions. Ortolan's Institutes de l'Empereur Justinien avec le texte, la traduction en regard, et les explications sous chaque paragraphe, Paris, 1857, 3 vols. 8vo, sixth edition. This is, by common consent of scholars, regarded as the best historical edition of the Institutes ever published. Du Caurroy's Institutes de Justinien traduites et expliquées par A. M. Du Caurroy, Paris, 1851, 8th ed. 2 vols. 8vo. The Institutes of Justinian, with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Thomas Collet Sandars, M. A., London, 1853, 8vo; 2d Ed., 1860. This work has been prepared expressly for beginners, and is founded mainly upon Ortolan, with a liberal use of La Grange. Du Caurroy, Warnkoenig, and Puchta, as well as Harris and Cooper. A careful study of this edition will result in the student's abandoning its pages, and betaking himself to Schrader and Ortolan. The English edition of Harris, and the American one of Cooper, have ceased to attract attention.

(4) Theophilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A. D. 533.

It is generally supposed that in A. D. 534, 535, and 536, Theophilus read his commentary in Greek to his pupils in the law school of Constantinople. He is conjectured to have died some time in A. D. 536. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century.

This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

It has, however, always been somewhat in use, and jurists consider that its study aids the text of the Institutes; and Cujas and Hugo have both praised it. The first edition was that of Zuichem, fol. Basle, 1531; the best edition is that of Reitz, 2 vols. 4to, 1751, Haag. There is a German translation by Wusterman, 1823, 2 vols. 8vo; and a French translation by Mons. Iregier, Paris, 1847, 8vo, whose edition is prefaced by a learned and valuable introduction and dissertation. Consult Mor-treuil, Hist. du Droit Byzan., Paris, 1843; Smith, Dict. Biog. London, 1849, 3 vols. 8vo; 1 Kent, Comm. 533; Profession d'Avocat, tom. ii. note 536, p. 95; Intro. a l'Etude du Droit Romain, p. 124; Dict. de Jurisp.; Merlin, Repert.; Enc. d'Alembert.

INSTITUTIO HAEREDIS (Lat.) In Roman law. The appointment of the haeres in the will. See "Haeres."

INSTITUTION (Lat. instituere, to form, to establish).

—In Civil Law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights, active and passive. Halifax, Anal. 39; Poth. Tr. des Donations Testamentaires, c. 2, sec. 1, § 1; Civ. Code La. art. 1598; Dig. 28. 5. 1; Id. 1. 28. 6. 1. 2. 4.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. To become a parson or vicar, four things are necessary, viz., holy orders, presentation, institution, induction. Institution is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk, previous to which the oath against simony and of allegiance and supremacy are to be taken. By institution the benefice is full, so that there can be no fresh presentation (except the patron be the king), and the clerk may enter on parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. See 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 389-391; 1 Burns, Ecc. Law, 169-172.

—In Political Law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government; as, the Institutions of Lycurgus. Webster. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. Webster.

—In Practice. The commencement of an action; as, A. B. has instituted a suit against C. D. to recover damages for trespass.

INSTITUTIONES (Lat. from instituere, to instruct, or educate). Works containing the elements of any science; institutions, or institutes. One of Justinian's principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See "Institutes."

INSTRUCTIONS.

—In the Law of Agency. Orders given by a principal to his agent in relation to the business of his agency.

The agent is bound to obey the instructions he has received, and when he neglects so to do he is responsible for the consequences, unless he is justified by matter of necessity. 4 Bin. (Pa.) 361; 1 Livermore, Ag. 368. See "Agent."

—In English Practice. The statements of a cause of action, given by a client to his attorney, and which, where such is the practice, are sent to his pleader to put into legal form of a declaration. Warren, Law Stud. 284.

Instructions to counsel are their indemnity for any aspersions they may make on the opposite party; but attorneys who have a just regard to their own reputation will be cautious, even under instructions, not to make any unnecessary attack upon a party or witness. For such unjustifiable conduct the counsel will be held responsible. Eunnom. Dial. 2, § 43, p. 132. For a form of instructions, see 3 Chit. Prac. 117, 120, note.

—In American Practice. The charge or directions as to the law, given by the court to the jury.

—In French Law. The means used and formality employed to prepare a case for trial. It is generally applied to criminal cases, and is then called "criminal instruction." It is then defined as the acts and proceedings which tend to prove positively a crime or delict, in order to inflict on the guilty person the punishment which he deserves.

INSTRUMENT. The writing which contains some agreement, and is so called because it has been prepared as a memorial of what has taken place or been agreed upon.

Something reduced to writing as a means of evidence. Abbott. A will has been held to be an "instrument." 14 Eq. Cas. 402.

The agreement and the instrument in which it is contained are very different things,—the latter being only evidence of the existence of the former.

INSTRUMENT OF APPEAL. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition. Browne, Div. 322.

INSTRUMENT OF EVIDENCE. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons, as well as writings. Best, Ev. § 123.

INSTRUMENTA (Lat.) That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as, court rolls, accounts, and the like. 3 Co. Litt. (Thomas Ed.) 487.

INSUFFICIENCY. In chancery practice. After filing of defendant's answer, the plaintiff has six weeks in which to file exceptions to it for insufficiency, which is the fault of not replying specifically to specific charges in the bill. Smith, Ch. Prac. 344; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 376, note; Saunders, Ord. Chanc. Index.

INSULA (Lat. island). A house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground. Calv. Lex.

INSUPER (Lat.) Moreover; over and above.

An old exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account. Blount.

INSURABLE INTEREST. Such an interest in a subject of insurance as will entitle the person possessing it to obtain insurance.

In the law of fire insurance, an insurable interest may be defined as such an interest as would entail a pecuniary loss were the property destroyed. 62 N. Y. 47.

In the law of life insurance, an insurable interest in the life of another is such a relation that the death of such person would entail pecuniary loss. Any relationship resulting in dependence, or giving a right to service or support, gives an insurable interest to the person benefited. 12 Mass. 115; 57 Vt. 496; 66 Mo. 63. A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor. 23 Conn. 244.

INSURANCE. A contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to indemnify the other against loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the indemnity is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." 1 Phil. Ins. §§ 1-5. Called, also, "assurance."

Insurance is classified according to the nature of the risk insured against, or the nature of the property insured, the principal sorts being (1) fire insurance, being against injury to property by fire; (2) life insurance, being against injury by the death of one in whose interest the assured has a pecuniary interest; (3) marine insurance, being against injury to vessels or their cargo by any peril of navigation; and (4) accident insurance, being against loss from accidental personal injury

Many other varieties, however, have become common in recent years, as against injury to crops by hail; against loss by default; against defects of title to land, etc.

INSURANCE AGENT. An agent for effecting insurance may be such by appointment, or the recognition of his acts done as such. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1848; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645. He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes for both. 16 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 252; 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 68.

INSURED. The person who procures an insurance.

INSURER. The underwriter in a policy of insurance; the party agreeing to make indemnity to the other. Sometimes applied improperly to denote the party insured.

INSURGENT. One who is concerned in an insurrection. He differs from a rebel in this, that "rebel" is always understood in a bad sense, or one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the tyranny of constituted authorities. The colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels.

INSURRECTION. A rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government.

An insurrection may constitute treason (2 Dall. [U. S.] 348), and, if extensive, may amount to civil war. 67 U. S. 635.

INTAKERS. In English law. The name given to receivers of goods stolen in Scotland, who take them to England. 9 Hen. V. c. 27.

INTEGER (Lat.) Whole; untouched. Res integra means a question which is new and undecided. 2 Kent, Comm. 177.

INTEMPERANCE. Habitual immoderate use of intoxicants does not necessarily imply drunkenness. 76 Ill. 213.

INTEND (from Lat. intendere, from in, to or towards, and tendere, to stretch or strain). To fix the mind upon a thing; to mean; to determine; to act with a full knowledge of consequences, and with a determination or willingness to produce such consequences. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 18; 3 Maule & S. 11, 15; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 38, 47.

INTENDANT. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

INTENDED TO BE RECORDED. This phrase is frequently used in conveyancing, in deeds which recite other deeds which have not been recorded. In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to be a covenant, on the part of the grantor, to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 14.

INTENDENTE. In Spanish law. The immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces of the Spanish monarchy. See Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INTENDMENT OF LAW. The true meaning, the correct understanding, or intention, of the law; a presumption or inference made by the courts. Co. Litt. 78.

INTENT. Intention (q. v.).

That the terms are synonymous, see 2 Jones (N. C.) 414.

INTENTIO (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. The formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the praetor. "Reus exceptionem velut intentionem implete"; id est, reus in exceptione actor est, the defendant makes up his plea as if it were a declaration; i. e., the defendant is plaintiff in the plea.

—In Old English Law. A count or declaration in a real action (narratio). Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 2, c. 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7; Du Cange.

INTENTIO CAECA MALA. A hidden intention is bad. 2 Bulst. 179.

INTENTIO INSERVIRE DEBET LEGIBUS, non leges intentioni. Intentions ought to be subservient to the laws, not the laws to intentions. Co. Litt. 314.

INTENTIO MEA IMPONIT NOMEN OPERI meo. My intent gives a name to my act. Hob. 128.

INTENTION. A design, resolve, or determination of the mind.

The exercise of an intelligent will, the mind being fully aware of the nature and consequences of the act which is about to be done, and with such knowledge, and with full liberty of action, willing and electing to do it. 2 Lea (Tenn.) 619.

It implies contractual obligation to carry out the intention, and is to be distinguished from "promise." 24 N. J. Law, 430.

It is not synonymous with "motive" (131 Mo. 397), nor with "attempt" (3 Dev. [N. C.] 330).

INTER. In Latin phrases. A preposition, meaning among; between.

INTER ALIA (Lat.) Among other things; as, "the said premises, which, inter alia, Titius granted to Caius."

INTER ALIAS CAUSAS ACQUISITIONES magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift. Bracton, 11.

INTER ALIOS (Lat.) Between other parties, who are strangers to the proceeding in question.

INTER ALIOS RES GESTAS ALIIS NON posse praejudicium facere saepe constitutum est. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code, 7. 60. 1. 2.

INTER APICES JURIS. See "Apex Juris."

INTER CAETEROS (Lat.) Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nom-inatim). A term applied, in the civil law, to clauses of disinheritance in a will. Inst. 2. 13. 1; Id. 2. 13. 8.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM (Lat.) between the dog and the wolf). The twilight; because then the dog seeks his rest, and the wolf his prey. 3 Inst. 63.

INTER CONJUGES. Between husband and wife.

INTER PARTES (Lat.) between the parties). A phrase signifying an agreement professing in the outset, and before any stipulations are introduced, to be made between such and such persons; as, for example, "This indenture, made the _____ day of _____, 1848, between A. B., of the one part, and C. D., of the other." It is true that every contract is in one sense inter partes, because to be valid there must be two parties at least, but the technical sense of this expression is as above mentioned. Add. Cont. 9.

INTER REGALIA. Among the regalia (q. v.).

INTER SE, INTER SESE (Lat.) Among themselves. Story, Partn. § 405.

INTER VIVOS (Lat.) Between living persons; as, a gift inter vivos, which is a gift made by one living person to another. See "Gifts." It is a rule that a fee cannot pass by grant or transfer inter vivos, without appropriate words of inheritance. 2 Prest. Est. 64. See "Donatio Mortis Causa."

INTERCALARE (Lat.) In civil law. To introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate. Dig. 50. 16. 98. pr.

INTERCHANGEABLY (Law Lat. alternatim). In the way, mode, or form of exchange or interchange. A term constantly used in the concluding clause of indentures, —in witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals,—and properly importing not only an execution by all the parties, but an actual interchange of signatures and seals, such as take place in the case of instruments executed in duplicate, or in part and counterpart, where the signature and seal of each party are affixed to the part given to the other. It is used, however, every day in deeds signed by the grantor only, but will not be held to import a signature by the grantee. 7 Pa. St. 329.

INTERCOMMON. To enjoy a right of common mutually with the inhabitants of a contiguous town, vill, or manor. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 33; Termes de la Ley.

INTERCOMMONING. A mutual privilege, between the tenants of adjoining manors, of pasturing their cattle on the commons of each other.

INTERCOURSE (Lat. intercursus, from inter, between, and currere, to run). Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce. 7 How. (U. S.) 283-573.

INTERDICT.

—In Civil Law. The formula according to which the praetor ordered or forbade anything to be done in a cause concerning true or quasi possession until it should be decided definitely who had a right to it. But in modern civil law it is an extraordinary action, by which a summary decision is had in questions of possession or quasi possession. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1287. Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force (interdict unde vi, 50 Ill. 465), the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Id. 1290. Interdicts were decided by the praetor without the intervention of a judex, differing in this from actions (actiones).

The etymology of the word, according to Justinian, is quod inter duos dicitur; according to Isidorus, quod interim dicitur. Vocat; Sand. Just. 589; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 195, 230, 235. Like an injunction, the interdict was merely personal in its effects; and it had also another similarity to it, by being temporary or perpetual. Dig. 43. 1. 1. 3. 4. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 865; Halifax, Anal. c. 6. See "Injunction."

—In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services are prohibited either to particular persons or particular places. These tyrannical edicts, issued by ecclesiastical powers, have been abolished in England since the reformation, and were never known in the United States. See 2 Burns, Ecc. Law, 340, 341. Baptism was allowed during an interdict; but the holy eucharist was denied, except in the article of death, and burial in consecrated ground was denied, unless without divine offices.

INTERDICTION. In civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

The condition of the party who labors under this incapacity.

INTERDICTUM SALVIANUM (Lat.) In civil law. The Salvian interdict. A process which lay for the owner of a farm to obtain possession of the goods of his tenant who had pledged them to him for the rent of the land. Inst. 4. 15. 3.

INTERDUM EVENIT UT EXCEPTIO quae prima facie justa videtur, tamen ini- que noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4. 14; Id. 4. 14. 1. 2.

INTERESSE (Lat.) The interest of money, as distinguished from the principal. An interest in land.

INTERESSE TERMINI (Lat.) An interest in the term. The demise of a term in land does not vest any estate in the lessee, but gives him a mere right of entry on the land, which right is called his interest in the term, or interesse termini. See Co. Litt. 46; 2 Bl. Comm. 144; 10 Viner, Abr. 348; Dane, Abr. Index; Watk. Conv. 15; 1 Washb. Real Prop. Index.

INTEREST. (Lat.) It concerns; it is of advantage.

—In Contracts. The right of property which a man has in a thing. See "Insurable Interest."

—On Debts. The compensation which is paid by the borrower of money to the lender for its use, and, generally, by a debtor to his creditor in recompense for his detention of the debt.

INTEREST, MARITIME. See "Marine Interest."

INTEREST OR NO INTEREST. A provision in a policy of insurance, which imports that the policy is to be good though the insured have no insurable interest in the subject matter. This constitutes a "wager policy," which is bad in England, by St. 19 Geo. II. c. 37, and, generally, from the policy of the law. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 89, note.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE NE MALEFICIA remaneant impunita. It concerns the commonwealth that crimes do not remain unpunished. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 30, 31.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE NE SUA quis male utatur. It concerns the republic that no one misuse his property. 6 Coke, 36.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE QUOD HOMINES conserventur. It concerns the commonwealth that we be preserved. 12 Coke, 62.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE RES JUDICATAE non rescindi. It concerns the commonwealth that things adjudged be not rescinded. See "Res Judicata."

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE SUPREMA hominum testamenta rata haberi. It concerns the commonwealth that men's last wills be sustained. Co. Litt. 236.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT CARCERES sint in tuto. It concerns the commonwealth that prisons be secure. 2 Inst. 589.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT PAX IN regno conservetur, et quaecunque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It benefits the state to preserve peace in the kingdom, and to prudently decline whatever is adverse to it. 2 Inst. 158.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT QUALI- bet re sua bene utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that every one use his property properly. 6 Coke, 37.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT SIT FI- nis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be a limit to litigation. Co. Litt. 303.

INTEREST SUIT. In English probate law. A suit to determine which of several persons is by interest entitled to administer an estate.

INTERFERENCE. The state of things which exists when a person applies for a patent which, if granted, would cover any of the patentable ground occupied by any existing patent, or by any patent for which an application is then pending. An investigation is ordered by the commissioner of patents, for the purpose of determining which of the parties was the first to make the invention, or that portion of it from which the interference results. When the controversy is between two applications, a patent will be finally granted to him who is shown to be the first inventor, and will be denied to the other applicant so far as the point thus controverted is concerned. But if the interference is between an application on the one hand and an actual patent on the other, as there is no power in the patent office to cancel the existing patent, all that can be done is to grant or withhold from the applicant the patent he asks. If the patent is granted to him, there will be two patents for the same thing. The two parties will stand upon a footing of equality, and must settle their rights by a resort to the courts, in the manner provided by the act of congress. In interference-cases, each party is allowed to take the testimony of witnesses in accordance with rules established by the patent office. See Act July 4, 1836, §§ 8, 16.

INTERIM (Lat.) In the meantime; meanwhile. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. 2 Bell, Comm. 355.

INTERIM COMMITTATUR. In the meantime let him be committed.

INTERIM CURATOR. An officer appointed to have the temporary management of the property of a convict, since the abolition of escheats. 4 Steph. Comm. 462.

INTERIM FACTOR. In Scotch law. A judicial officer elected or appointed under the bankruptcy law to take charge of and preserve the estate until a fit person shall be elected trustee. 2 Bell, Comm. 357.

INTERIM OFFICER. One appointed to fill a temporary vacancy.

INTERLAQUEARE. In old practice. To link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called "interlaqueata" where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 2. They were, in other words, simul cum writs.

INTERLINEATION. Writing between two lines.

INTERLOCUTOR. In Scotch practice. An order or decree of court; an order made in open court. 2 Swint. 362; Arkley, 32.

INTERLOCUTOR OF RELEVANCY. In Scotch practice. A decree as to the relevancy of a libel or indictment in a criminal case. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 373.

INTERLOCUTORY. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action which decides some point or matter, which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue; as, interlocutory judgments, or decrees, or orders.

—Interlocutory Costs. Costs accruing upon proceedings in the intermediate stages of a cause, as distinguished from final costs; such as the costs of motions. 3 Chit. Gen. Prac. 597.

—Interlocutory Decree. A provisional or preliminary decree, which is not final, and does not determine the suit, but directs some further proceedings preparatory to the final decree. A decree pronounced for the purpose of ascertaining matter of law or fact preparatory to a final decree. 1 Barb. Ch. Prac. 326, 327.

—Interlocutory Judgment. A preliminary or intermediate judgment. A judgment given in the course of an action upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not determine or complete the suit, as upon a demurrer or plea in abatement, or where the right of the plaintiff is established, but the quantum of damages is not ascertained. 1 Tidd, Prac. 568. See "Final."

—Interlocutory Order. An order made during the progress of a cause upon some incidental matter which arises out of the proceedings.

—Interlocutory Sentence. In civil law. A sentence on some indirect question arising from the principal cause. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 40.

INTERLOPERS. Persons who interrupt the trade of a company of merchants, by pursuing the same business with them in the same place, without lawful authority.

INTERN. To restrict a person to a limited territory; to forbid departure from the realm.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. The system of rules which Christian states acknowledge to be obligatory upon them in their relations to each other and to each other's subjects. It is the jus inter gentes, as distinguished from the jus gentium.

The rules of conduct regulating the intercourse of states. Halleck, Int. Law, 41; Davis, Int. Law, § 2. It consists of those rules of conduct which reason deduces as consonant to justice from the nature of the society existing among independent nations, with such definitions and modifications as may be established by mutual consent. Wheaton, Int. Law, § 14.

International law has been divided into (1) public, and (2) private, under which division public international law is the law of nations as above defined, while private international law consists of the rules by which courts determine within what national jurisdiction an action or proceeding falls, or by what national law it should be decided. Glenn, Int. Law, § 2.

Various divisions of international law have been proposed, but none are of any great importance. One has been into natural and voluntary law, in which latter conventional or treaty law and customary are embraced. Another, somewhat similar, separates international rules into those which are deducible from general natural jus, those which are derived from the idea of estate, and those which grow out of simple compact. Whatever division be made, it is to be observed that nations are voluntary, first, in deciding the question what intercourse they will hold with each other; second, that they are voluntary in defining their rights and obligations, moral claims and duties, although these have an objective existence beyond the control of the will of nations; and third, that, when international law has arisen by the free assent of those who enter into certain arrangements, obedience to its provisions is as truly in accordance with natural law, which requires the observance of contracts, as if natural law had been intuitively discerned or revealed from heaven, and no consent had been necessary at the outset.

INTERNUNCIO. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the court of Rome, where that court has no nuncio under that title.

INTERNUNCIUS (Lat. from inter, between, and nuncius, a messenger). A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties. 4 Rob. Adm. 204.

INTERPOLATION. In civil law. The act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time. Wolff. Inst. § 752.

In the case of a lease from year to year, or to continue as long as both parties please, a notice given by one of them to the other of a determination to put an end to the contract would bear the name of "interpolation."

INTERPLEADER.

—At Common Law. A proceeding in the action of detinue, by which the defendant states the fact that the thing sued for is in his hands, and that it is claimed by a third person, and that whether such person or the plaintiff is entitled to it is unknown to the defendant, and thereupon the defendant prays that a process of garnishment may be issued to compel such third person so claiming to become defendant in his stead. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 23; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 141; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 800, 801, 802.

—In Equity. A bill whereby one from whom two or more persons claim the same duty or thing can compel them to interplead, and have their several claims adjudged, lest he be twice compelled to render the same debt, duty, or property. 77 Ill. 139.

—In Modern Law. Several statutory remedies have been substituted in various states. In some, a complaint in the nature of a bill of interpleader (see 17 Mo. 499), and in others a formal collateral proceeding to try title to property (130 Ill. 87).

INTERPRETARE ET CONCORDARE LEGES LEGIBUS EST OPTIMUS INTERPRETANDI MODUS. To interpret and reconcile laws so that they harmonize is the best mode of construction. 8 Coke, 169.

INTERPRETATIO CHARTARUM BENIGNE FACIENDA EST, UT RES MAGIS VALEAT QUAM PEREAT. The interpretation of deeds is to be liberal, that the thing may rather have effect than fail. Broom, Leg. Max. 543.

INTERPRETATIO FIENDA EST UT RES MAGIS VALEAT QUAM PEREAT. Such a construction is to be made that the subject may have an effect, rather than none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 198.

INTERPRETATIO TALIS AMBIGUIS SEMPER FIENDA EST, UT EVITETUR INCONVENIENS ET ABSURDUM. In ambiguous things, such a construction should be made that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. 4 Inst. 328.

INTERPRETATION. The act of finding out the true sense of any form of words—that is, the sense which their author intended to convey—and of enabling others to derive from them the same idea which the author intended to convey. 14 How. Pr. R. (N. Y.) 272.

The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm.

"Construction" is sometimes used as a synonym (Jones, Const. p. 3), though it has been said that "construction" is the broader term, and includes also the legal effect (2 Pars. Cont. 491, note a).

The "true meaning" of any signs is that meaning which those who used them were desirous of expressing. A person adopting or sanctioning them "uses" them as well as their immediate author. Both parties to an agreement equally make use of the signs declaratory of that agreement, though one only is the originator, and the other may be entirely passive. The most common signs used to convey ideas are words. When there is a contradiction in signs intended to agree, resort must be had to construction,—that is, the drawing of conclusions from the given signs, respecting ideas which they do not express.

(1) Close interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal," but the term is inadmissible. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm. 66.

(2) Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

(3) Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

(4) Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

(5) Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Ernesti, Inst. Interp.

(6) Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vasa), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

The civilians divide interpretation into:

(1) Authentic (interpretatio authentica), which proceeds from the author himself.

(2) Usual (interpretatio usualis), when the interpretation is on the ground of usage.

(3) Doctrinal (interpretatio doctrinalis), when made agreeably to rules of science. Doctrinal interpretation is subdivided into extensive, restrictive, and declaratory,—extensive, whenever the reason of a proposition has a broader sense than its terms, and it is consequently applied to a case which had not been explained; restrictive, when the expressions have a greater latitude than the reasons; and declaratory, when the reasons and terms agree, but it is necessary to settle the meaning of some term or terms to make the sense complete.

INTERPRETATION CLAUSE. A clause in a statute defining words used therein, or prescribing rules for its interpretation.

INTERPRETER. One employed to make a translation.

An interpreter should be sworn before he translates the testimony of a witness. 4 Mass. 81; 5 Mass. 219; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 155.

A person employed between an attorney and client to act as interpreter is considered merely as the organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications. 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 356; 4 Munf. (Va.) 273; 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 337.

INTERREGNUM (Lat.) The period, in case of an established government, which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another, is called "interregnum." The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

INTERROGATOIRE. In French law. An act or instrument which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused. Poth. Proc. Crim. sec. 4, art. 2, § 1.

INTERROGATORIES. Material and pertinent questions, in writing, to necessary points, not confessed, exhibited for the examination of witnesses or persons who are to give testimony in the cause.

Interrogatories are exhibited in various proceedings, as in a bill of equity by way of discovery, on a statutory discovery, on the taking of a deposition.

Interrogatories to a witness are either original and direct on the part of him who produces the witnesses, or cross and counter, on behalf of the adverse party, to examine witnesses produced on the other side. Either party, plaintiff or defendant, may exhibit original or cross interrogatories.

INTERRUPTIO (Lat. from interrumpere, to break through or apart). Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription. Calv. Lex.

INTERRUPTIO MULTIPLEX NON TOLLIT praescriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not defeat a prescription once obtained. 2 Inst. 654.

INTERRUPTION. The effect of some act or circumstance which stops the course of a prescription or act of limitations. 3 Bligh (N. S.) 444; 4 Mees. & W. 497.

Civil interruption is that which takes place by some judicial act.

Natural interruption is an interruption in fact. 4 Mason (U. S.) 404; 2 Younge & J. 285. See "Easement"; "Limitations"; "Prescription."

—In Scotch Law. The true proprietor's claiming his right during the course of prescription. Bell, Dict.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. Commerce between persons or places in different states. The exchange of property in one state for property in another, its essential characteristic being that it involves the moving of property from one state to another. 223 Ill. 590. See "Commerce." A shipment from one state to another under a contract for continuous carriage is interstate commerce, even as to so much of the journey as is within the limits of a single state (102 U. S. 541), or though the journey is temporarily interrupted before leaving the state (116 U. S. 517); but a shipment between points in the same state is not interstate commerce, though the goods are carried out of the state en route (145 U. S. 192).

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT. Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1888, regulating interstate commerce, designed to secure reasonable and uniform charges for carriage of freight and passengers, and prevent rebates, preferences, and pooling.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. A commission created by the interstate commerce act to enforce its provisions.

INTERVALLUM. (Lat.) In old English law. An interval of time or place.

INTERVENER. A party who seeks to interpose in a suit. See "Intervention."

INTERVENTION (Lat. intervenio, to come between or among).

—In Civil Law. The act by which a third party becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons.

The intervention is made either to be joined to the plaintiff, and to claim the same thing he does, or some other thing connected with it; or to join the defendant, and with him to oppose the claim of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. Poth. Proc. Civ. c. 2, sec. 6, § 3.

—In Modern Practice. The term is sometimes used in the same sense as in the civil law.

—In English Ecclesiastical Law. The proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject matter in dispute, in order the better to protect such interest, interposes his claim. 2 Chit. Prac. 492; 3 Chit. Com. Law, 633; 2 Hagg. Const. 137; 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 586; 1 Add. Ecc. Law, 5; 4 Hagg. Ecc. Law, 67; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 74. The intervener may come in at any stage of the cause, and even after judgment, if an appeal can be allowed on such judgment. 2 Hagg. Const. 137; 1 Eng. Ecc. Law, 480; 2 Eng. Ecc. Law, 13.

INTESTABILIS. An incompetent or disqualified witness.

INTESTABLE. One who cannot lawfully make a testament.

An infant, an insane person, or one civilly dead cannot make a will, for want of capacity or understanding. A married woman cannot make such a will without some special authority, because she is under the power of her husband. They are all intestable.

INTESTACY. The state or condition of dying without a will.

INTESTATE. One who, having lawful power to make a will, has made none, or one which is defective in form. In that case, he is said to die intestate, and his estate descends to his heir at law.

This term comes from the Latin intestatus. Formerly, it was used in France indiscriminately with de-confess; that is, without confession. It was regarded as a crime, on account of the omission of the deceased person to give something to the church, and was punished by privation of burial in consecrated ground. This omission, according to Flournel, Hist. de Avocats, vol. 1, p. 116, could be repaired by making an ampliative testament in the name of the deceased. Vely, tom. 6, p. 145; Henrion de Pansey, Authorite Judiciaire, 129, and note. See "Descent"; "Distribution"; "Will."

INTESTATE SUCCESSION. The succession or devolution of interest of the property of one dying intestate. In Louisiana, the term "succession" is applied to the estate as a whole.

INTESTATO. In the civil law. Intestate; without a will. Calv. Lex.

INTESTATUS. In the civil and old English law. An intestate; one who dies without a will. Dig. 50. 17. 7.

INTESTATUS DECEDIT, QUI AUT OMNINO testamentum non fecit aut non juri fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo haeres exstitit. He dies intestate who either has made no will at all, or has not made it legally, or whose will which he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or from whom there is no living heir. Inst. 3. 1, pr.; Dig. 38. 16. 1; Id. 50. 16. 64.

INTIMATION.

—In Civil Law. The name of any judicial act by which a notice of a legal proceeding is given to some one; but it is more usually understood to mean the notice or summons which an appellant causes to be given to the opposite party, that the sentence will be reviewed by the superior judge.

—In Scotch Law. An instrument of writing, made under the hand of a notary, and notified to a party, to inform him of a right which a third person had acquired; for example, when a creditor assigns a claim against his debtor, the assignee or cedent must give an intimation of this to the debtor, who, till then, is justified in making payment to the original creditor. Kames, Eq. bk. 1, p. 1, § 1.

INTITLE. An old form of entitle. 6 Mod. 304.

INTOL AND UTTOL. In old records. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out. Cowell.

INTOXICATED. Drunk from the use of intoxicating liquors. See 47 Vt. 294.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. Such liquors as will, if used as a beverage, produce drunkenness. 25 Kan. 767.

It includes all liquors, whether spirituous, vinous, or malt (70 Mass. 20), of which the human stomach can contain enough to produce intoxication. 21 N. Y. 173.

INTRA. In Latin phrases. A preposition, meaning in; near; within. Infra or inter has taken the place of intra in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

INTRA ANNI SPATIUM. Within the space of a year. Code, 5. 9. 2. Intra annale tempus. Id. 6. 30. 19.

INTRA FIDEM. Within belief; credible. Calv. Lex.

INTRA LUCTUS TEMPUS (Lat.) Within the time of mourning. Code, 9. 1.

INTRA MAENIA (Lat. within the walls of a house). A term applied to domestic or menial servants. 1 Bl. Comm. 425.

INTRA PARIETES (Lat.) Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation. Calv. Lex.

INTRA PRAESIDIA (Lat.) Within the defenses. Dig. 49. 15. 5. 1. See "Infra Praesidia."

INTRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat.) Within the four seas. Shep. Touch. 378.

INTRA VIRES. Within the power. The opposite of ultra vires (q. v.).

An act which might be done by the managing board of a corporation or by a majority of the stockholders in meeting assembled. The act in intra vires although done by the managing board of directors, and in opposition to the will of a majority of the stockholders. 113 Ill. App. 609.

INTRINSIC VALUE. "Its true, inherent, and essential value, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere, and to every one." 5 Ired. (N. C.) 698.

INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. The assuming possession of property belonging to another, either on legal grounds, or without any authority. In the latter case it is called "vicious" intromission. Bell, Dict.

INTRONISATION. In French ecclesiastical law. The installation of a bishop in his episcopal see. Clef des Lois Rom.

INTRUDER. One who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter.

INTRUSION. The entry of a stranger after the determination of a particular estate of freehold, before the entry of him in reversion or remainder. Intrusion or usurpation, and trespass are not synonymous terms. 96 Ill. 255.

The entry and interposition of the stranger differs from an abatement in this, that an abatement is always to the prejudice of an heir or immediate devisee; an intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 169; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 203; Archb. Civ. Pl. 12; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Steph. Comm. 443.

The name of a writ brought by the owner of a fee simple, etc., against an intruder. New Nat. Brev. 453. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 57.

—At Common Law. Intrusion at the common law is one of the modes of ouster of the freehold, and is defined to be "an entry by a stranger after a particular estate of freehold is determined before him in reversion or remainder; as when a tenant for life dieth seized of certain lands and tenements, and a stranger cometh thereon, after such death of the tenant, and before any entry of him in reversion or remainder." 3 Ch. Bl. 169.

—Trespass Distinguished. Trespass is an entry on another's ground without lawful authority, and doing some damage however inconsiderable to his real property. This broad distinction does not exist under our statute dispensing with livery of seizin; but the only distinction apparent to my mind between an intrusion and a trespass is, that the former implies an unlawful possession of lands, while the latter may amount to a mere entry upon land without retaining possession, but doing some damage. Hulick v. Scovil, 9 Ill. 170, 171.

INTUITUS (Lat. from intueri, to look upon or view). A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q. v.), with a different view.

View or sight. Intuitu Dei, in the sight of God. Magna Charta, pr.

INURE. To take effect; to result.

INUTILIS LABOR, ET SINE FRUCTU, non est effectus legis. Useless labor and without fruit is not the effect of law. Co. Litt. 127; Wingate, Max. 38.

INVADIARE (Law Lat.) In feudal and old European law. To pledge; to engage or pledge lands; to mortgage.

INVADIATIO (Law Lat.) A pledge or mortgage.

INVADIATUS (Law Lat.) One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him. Spelman.

A person acquitted.

INVALID. Not valid; of no binding force.

INVASION. The entry of a country by a public enemy, making war.

INVECTA ET ILLATA (Lat.) In civil law. Things carried and brought in; things brought into a building hired (aedes), or into a hired estate in the city (praedium urbanum), which are held by a tacit mortgage for the rent. Vocat; Domat, Civ. Law.

INVEIGLE. To inveigle, in a legal sense, is to induce a party to come within the jurisdiction of the court, by some scheme, subterfuge, fraud, trick, device, or misrepresentation, that he may be served with process. 106 Mich. 525; 13 N. Y. Supp. 570.

INVENIENS LIBELLUM FAMOSUM ET non corrumpens punitur. He who finds a libel, and does not destroy it, is punished. F. Moore, 813.

INVENTIO.

—In Civil Law. Finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinec, lib. 2, tit. 1, § 350. Sometimes rendered in English "invention."

—In Old English Law. A thing found; as goods, or treasure trove. Cowell. The plural, inventiones, is also used.

INVENTION. In patent law. The act or operation of finding out something new; the contrivance of that which did not before exist. The word is also used to denote the thing itself which has been so contrived, and which is the subject matter of a patent.

The test of novelty to determine whether a given contrivance is an "invention" is whether an ordinary mechanic would, without other suggestion than his knowledge of the art, make such a contrivance. If so, it is not an invention. 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. (U. S.) 98; 27 Fed. 219.

An invention differs from a "discovery," inasmuch as this latter term is used to signify the finding out of something which existed before. Thus, we speak of the discovery of the properties of steam, or of electricity; but the first contrivance of any machinery by which those discoveries were applied to practical use was an invention; the former always existed, though not before known; the latter did not previously exist.

INVENTIONES. A word used in some ancient English charters to signify treasure trove.

INVENTOR. One who finds out something new, or who contrives or produces a thing which did not before exist; one who makes an invention. The word is generally used to denote the author of such contrivances as are by law patentable. See "Invention."

INVENTORY. A list, schedule, catalogue, or enumeration in writing, containing, article by article, the goods and chattels, rights and credits, and, in some cases, the lands and tenements, of a person or persons, without attempt to describe the same in detail. 217 Ill. 169. But enumerating them with reasonable particularity according to the well understood usage of business men. 20 Q. B. D. 114; 58 L. T. 34. A conservatory act, which is made to ascertain the situation of an intestate's estate, the estate of an insolvent, and the like, for the purpose of securing it to those entitled to it.

INVENTUS (Lat.) Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure trove. Non est inventus, he is not found.

INVERITARE. To verify or prove.

INVEST (Lat. investire, to clothe). to put in possession of a fief upon taking the oath of fealty or fidelity to the prince or superior lord.

INVESTITIVE FACT. One by means of which a right comes into existence. Holland, Jur. 132.

They are divided by Bentham into collative, conferring rights, and impositive, imposing duties.

INVESTITURE. The act of giving possession of lands by actual seisin.

When livery of seisin was made to a person by the common law, he was invested with the whole fee. This the foreign feudists, and sometimes our own law writers, call "investiture"; but, generally speaking, it is termed by the common-law writers the "seisin of the fee." 2 Bl. Comm. 209, 313; Ferne, Cont. Rem. 223, note (z).

By the canon law, investiture was made per baculum et annulum, by the ring and crosier, which were regarded as symbols of the Episcopal jurisdiction. Ecclesiastical and secular fiefs were governed by the same rule in this respect,—that previously to investiture neither a bishop, abbot, or lay lord could take possession of a fief conferred upon them by the prince.

Pope Gregory VI. first disputed the right of sovereigns to give investiture of ecclesiastical fiefs, A. D. 1045; but Pope Gregory VII. carried on the dispute with much more vigor, A. D. 1073. He excommunicated the emperor Henry IV. The popes Victor III., Urban II., and Paul II. continued the contest. This dispute, it is said, cost Christendom sixty-three battles, and the lives of many millions of men.

INVESTMENT BUYING. See "Gambling Contract."

INVIOLABILITY. That which is not to be violated. The persons of ambassadors are inviolable. See "Ambassador."

INVITO (Lat.) Being unwilling.

INVITO BENEFICIUM NON DATUR. No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50. 17. 69; Broom, Leg.

Max. (3d London Ed.) 625. But if he does not dissent, he will be considered as assenting. See "Assent."

INVITO DEBITORE (Lat.) Against the will of the debtor.

INVITO DOMINO (Lat.) In criminal law. Without the consent of the owner.

In order to constitute larceny, the property stolen must be taken invito domino; this is the very essence of the crime. Cases of considerable difficulty arise when the owner has, for the purpose of detecting thieves, by himself or his agents, delivered the property taken, as to whether they are larcenies or not. The distinction seems to be this, that when the owner procures the property to be taken, it is not larceny; and when he merely leaves it in the power of the defendant to execute his original purpose of taking it, in the latter case it will be considered as taken invito domino. 2 Bailey (S. C.) 569; 2 Russ. Crimes, 66, 105; 2 Leach, C. C. 913; 2 East, P. C. 666; Bac. Abr. "Felony" (C); Alia. Crim. Prac. 273; 2 Bos. & P. 508; 1 Car. & M. 217. See "Larceny."

INVOICE. In commercial law. An account of goods or merchandise sent by merchants to their correspondents at home or abroad, in which the marks of each package, with other particulars, are set forth. Marsh. Ins. 408; Dane, Abr. Index. 47 Miss. 76. An invoice ought to contain a detailed statement, which should indicate the nature, quantity, quality, and price of the things sold, deposited, etc. 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 248. See "Bill of Lading"; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 113, 155.

An invoice of goods sometimes means the goods themselves, and invoice price or cost sometimes means the prime price or cost of goods, although there is no invoice in fact. 6 Jones & Spencer (N. Y.) 342.

INVOICE BOOK. A book in which invoices are copied.

INVOLUNTARY. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q. v.), or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress. Wolff. Inst. § 5.

The term is frequently used in connection with various proceedings to denote an adverse proceeding. Thus, involuntary bankruptcy proceedings are those instituted by a creditor, and not by the bankrupt.

A nonsuit allowed on the motion of the defendant and against the plaintiff's will is an involuntary nonsuit. 223 Ill. 174; 180 Ill. 191.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. Homicide committed unintentionally, but without excuse, and not under such circumstances as to raise the implication of malice. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 562.

INVOLUNTARY PAYMENT. A payment of money upon an illegal or unjust demand, where a party is advised of all the facts, can only be considered involuntary when it is made to secure the release of person or property from detention, or where the payee is armed with apparent authority to seize upon one or the other and to prevent this the payment is made. 57 Ill. App. 240; 94 Ill. App. 526.

What shall constitute the compulsion or coercion which the law will recognize as sufficient to render the payments involuntary, may often be a question of difficulty. It may be said in general that there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power, possessed or supposed to be possessed by the party exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of another, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief. 100 Pa. St. 346; 18 Cal. 272, 407; 46 Cal. 598; 94 Ill. App. 526; 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.), § 943.

INWADIARE. (Law Lat.) In old European law. To pledge. LL. Longob. lib. 1, tit. 14, l. 10.

IOTA. The ninth and smallest letter of the Greek alphabet; hence any minute or insignificant thing.

IPSAE LEGES CUIUNT UT JURE REGANTUR. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right. Co. Litt. 174b, quoted from Cato.

IPSE (Lat.) I (before verbs of first person); thou (before verbs of second person); he himself, she herself, he alone, etc.; the very one; e. g., ipsum corpus, the very thing itself. Halk. Tech. Terms. Ipsae [etenim] leges cupiunt ut jures regantur, for the very laws themselves wish that they should be ruled by right,—a line, quoted from Cato, which occurs in the decision of Chief Justice Wray and the whole court in the Case of Bankrupts, 2 Coke, 25b.

IPSE DIXIT. He himself said it. Applied as a substantive to the unsupported assertion of one person.

IPSISSIMIS VERBIS (Lat.) In the identical words; opposed to "substantially." 7 How. (U. S.) 719; 5 Ohio St. 346.

IPSO FACTO (Lat.) By the fact itself; by the mere fact.

IPSO JURE (Lat.) By the operation of law; by mere law.

IRA FUROR BREVIS EST. Anger is a short insanity. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 336, 355.

IRA MOTUS (Lat.) Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne. 1 Tidd, Prac. 645.

IRE AD LARGUM (Lat.) To go at large.

IRENARCHA. In Roman law. An officer whose duties are described in Dig. 5. 4. 18. 7. See Id. 48. 3. 6; Code, 10. 75. Literally, a peace officer or magistrate.

IRREGULAR. Not according to rule. See "Irregularity."

IRREGULAR DEPOSIT. See "Deposit."

IRREGULAR PROCESS. Such as a court has general jurisdiction to issue, but which is unauthorized in the particular case by reason of the existence or nonexistence of some fact or circumstance rendering it improper in such a case. 103 N. Y. 84, 90.

IRREGULARITY. In practice. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. 115 Ill. 590.

It is the technical term for every defect in proceedings or the mode of conducting an action or defense. It is a comprehensive term, including all formal objections to matters of practice.

An irregularity is a formal but a nullity is a substantial defect. One applies chiefly to the manner, the other to the matter or merits of the proceeding; the former is voidable, the latter absolutely void. As a general rule whenever there is any doubt upon the matter it will always be safer to treat the defect as an irregularity rather than as a nullity. 130 Ill. App. 588; Macnamara on Nullities and Irregularities in Law, 20.

IRRELEVANT. Matter in a pleading which has no substantial relation to the controversy in suit. 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 743; 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312.

Equivalent to "impertinent." Includes "Scandalous" matter in a pleading. 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 53.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE. That which does not support the issue, and which, of course, must be excluded.

IRREPARABLE INJURY. An injury is "irreparable," within the rule that injunction will issue to prevent only such injuries, not only where the injury, from its nature, cannot be compensated by damages, or the damages cannot be ascertained by any certain measure 4 N. J. Eq. 449, or when the wrongdoer is insolvent and for that reason incapable of responding in damages. 210 Ill. 464; 218 Ill. 87; 51 Iowa, 385; 42 Neb. 238.

That species of injury, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other; and because it is so large on the one hand or so small on the other, is of such constant and frequent recurrence, that no fair or reasonable redress can be had therefor in a court of law. 76 Ill. 326; 149 Ill. 570; 181 Ill. 611; 246 Ill. 534; 52 Ill. App. 615.

IRREPLEVIABLE. That cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, "irreplevisable." Co. Litt. 145; 13 Edw. I. c. 2.

IRRESISTIBLE FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as, the inroads of a hostile army. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Batim. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1. It differs from "inevitable accident" (q. v.).

IRREVOCABLE. Which cannot be revoked or recalled. A power of attorney in which the attorney has an interest granted for consideration is irrevocable. See "Will."

IRRIGATION. The act of wetting or moistening the ground by artificial means; the application of water to land by artificial means for the raising of crops and other products of the soil. Long, Irrigation, § 1; 111 Cal. 476.

IRRITANCY. In Scotch law. The happening of a condition or event by which a charter, contract, or other deed, to which a clause irritant is annexed, becomes void. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 5, note 25. Irritancy is a kind of forfeiture. It is legal or conventional. Burton, Real Prop. 298.

IRRITANT. In Scotch law. Avoiding or making void; as an irritant clause. See "Irritancy."

IRRITANT CLAUSE. In Scotch law. A provision by which certain prohibited acts specified in a deed are, if committed, declared to be null and void.

IRROGARE. In civil law. To impose or set upon, as a fine. Calv. Lex. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

IRROTULATIO (Law Lat.) An inrolling; a record. 2 Rymer, Foed. 673; Du Cange; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Bracton, fol. 293; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11.

ISH. In Scotch law. The period of the termination of a tack or lease. 1 Bligh, 522.

ISLAND. A body of land surrounded by water. The title to islands in navigable waters is in the state (53 Am. Rep. 215); but an island in private waters belongs to the owners of the nearest mainland, unless otherwise appropriated (9 Cush. [Mass.] 548).

ISSINT (Norman Fr. thus, so). In pleading. A term formerly used to introduce a statement that special matter already pleaded amounts to a denial.

In actions founded on deeds, the defendant may, instead of pleading non est factum in the common form, allege any special matter which admits the execution of the writing in question, but which, nevertheless, shows that it is not in law his deed, and may conclude with, "and so it is not his deed," as, that the writing was delivered to A. B. as an escrow, to be delivered over on certain conditions, which have not been complied with, "and so it is not his act"; or that, at the time of making the writing the defendant was a feme covert, "and so it is not her act." Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 3), (I 2); Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 64.

An example of this form of plea, which is sometimes called the "special general issue," occurs in 4 Rawle (Pa.) 83, 84.

ISSUABLE. In practice. Leading or tending to an issue. An issuable plea is one upon which the plaintiff can take issue and proceed to trial.

ISSUABLE PLEA. A plea in chief to the merits, upon which the plaintiff may take issue and go to trial.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity terms are so called from the making up of the issues, during those terms, for the assizes, that they may be tried by the judges, who generally go on circuit to try such issues after these two terms. But for town causes all four terms are issuable. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 350; 1 Tidd, Prac. 121.

ISSUE.

—In Real Property Law. Lineal descendants; all persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. 257; 17 Ves. 481; 19 Ves. 547; 1 Rep. Leg. 90.

In a will it may be held to have a more restricted meaning, to carry out the testator's intention. 7 Ves. 522; 19 Ves. 73; 1 Rep. Leg. 90; 173 Ill. 229; 255 Ill. 357, 358. See "Heirs of the Body."

—In Pleading. A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side, and denied on the other.

The entry of the pleadings. 1 Chit. Pl. 630.

Several connected matters of fact may go to make up the point in issue.

A collateral issue is one framed upon some matter not directly in the line of the pleadings; as, for example, upon the identity of one who pleads diversity in bar of execution. 4 Bl. Comm. 396.

A common issue is that which is formed upon the plea of non est factum to an action of covenant broken.

An actual issue is one formed in an action brought in the regular manner, for the purpose of trying a question of right between the parties.

A feigned issue is one formed in a fictitious action, under direction of the court, for the purpose of trying before a jury some question of fact.

Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, for which no jury is summoned, to ascertain the truth of some disputed fact. They are also frequently used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 452. Suppose, for example, it is desirable to settle a question of the validity of a will in a court of equity. For this purpose an action is brought, in which the plaintiff, by a fiction, declares that he laid a wager for a sum of money with the defendant, for example, that a certain paper is the last will and testament of A., then avers it is his will, and therefore demands the money; the defendant admits the wager, but avers that it is not the will of A.; and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of chancery to be tried; and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity.

The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious. It is a contempt of the court in which the action is brought to bring such an action, except under the direction of some court. 4 Term R. 402.

(1) A formal issue is one which is framed according to the rules required by law, in an artificial and proper manner.

(2) An informal issue is one which arises when a material averment is traversed in an improper or inartificial manner. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (G 2, N 5); 2 Wm. Saund. 319a, note 6.

(3) An issue in fact is one in which the truth of some fact is affirmed and denied.

In general, it consists of a direct affirmative allegation on one side, and a direct negative on the other. Co. Litt. 126 a; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (G 1); 2 W. Bl. 1312; 8 Term R. 278; 5 Pet. (U. S.) 149. But an affirmative allegation which completely excludes the truth of the preceding may be sufficient. 1 Wils. 6; 2 Strange, 1177. Thus, the general issue in a writ of right, called the "mise," is formed by two affirmatives, the demandant claiming a greater right than the tenant, and the tenant a greater than the demandant. 3 Bl. Comm. 195, 305. And in an action of dower, the count merely demands that the third part of [] acres of land, etc., as the dower of the demandant of the endowment of A. B., heretofore the husband, etc., and the general issue is that A. B. was not seised of such estate, etc., and that he could not endow the demandant thereof, etc.; which mode of denial, being argumentative, would not, in general, be allowed. 2 Saund. 329.

(4) A general issue is one which denies in direct terms the whole declaration; as, for example, where the defendant pleads nil debet, that he owes the plaintiff nothing, or nul disseisin, no disseisin committed. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 9; 3 Bl. Comm. 305. See "General Issue."

(5) A special issue is one formed by the defendant's selecting any one substantial point, and resting the weight of his cause upon that. It is contrasted with the general issue. Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (R 1, 2).

(6) A material issue is one properly formed on some material point which will, when decided, decide the question between the parties.

(7) An immaterial issue is one formed on some immaterial matter, which, though found by the verdict, will not determine the merits of the cause, and will leave the court at a loss how to give judgment. 2 Wm. Saund. 319, note 6. See "Immaterial Issue."

(8) An issue in fact is an issue taken upon or consisting of matter of fact, the fact only, and not the law being disputed, and which is to be tried by a jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 314, 315; Co. Litt. 126a; 3 Steph. Comm. 572.

(9) An issue in law is an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. 3 Bl. Comm. 314; 3 Steph. Comm. 572, 580.

ISSUE ROLL. In English law. The name of a record which contains an entry of the term of which the demurrer book, issue, or paper book is entitled, and the warrants of attorney supposed to have been given by the parties at the commencement of the cause, and then proceeds with the transcript of the declaration and subsequent proceedings, continuances, and award of the mode of the decision as contained in the demurrer, issue or paper book. Steph. Pl. 98, 99. After final judgment, the issue roll is no longer called by that name, but assumes that of judgment roll. 2 Archb. Prac. 206.

ISSUES. In English law. The goods and profits of the lands of a defendant against whom a writ of distringas or distress infinite has been issued, taken by virtue of such writ, are called "issues." 3 Bl. Comm. 280; 1 Chit. Crim. Law. 351.

IT IS CONSIDERED. The language of courts in pronouncing judgment. 100 Ill. 490.

ITA EST (Lat. so it is). Among the civilians, when a notary dies, leaving his register, an officer who is authorized to make official copies of his notarial acts writes, instead of the deceased notary's name, which is required when he is living, ita est.

ITA LEX SCRIPTA EST. The law is so written. 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 374, 380.

The law must be obeyed, notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl. Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl. Comm. 32.

ITA QUOD (Lat.) The name or condition in a submission, which is usually introduced by these words, "so as the award be made of and upon the premises," which, from the first words, is called the ita quod.

When the submission is with an ita quod, the arbitrator must make an award of all matters submitted to him of which he had notice, or the award will be entirely void. 7 East, 81; Cro. Jac. 200; 2 Vern. 109; Rolle, Abr. "Arbitrament" (L 9).

ITA SEMPER FIAT RELATIO UT VALEAT dispositio. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand. 6 Coke, 76.

ITA TE DEUS ADJUVET (Lat. so help you God). The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, so help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints. Willes, 338.

ITA UTERE TUO UT ALIENUM NON LAEDAS. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written, "Sic utere tuo," etc. (q. v.)

ITEM (Lat.) Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. These are the various meanings of this Latin adverb.

It is used to introduce a new paragraph, or chapter, or division; also to denote a particular in an account. It is used when any article or clause is added to a former, as if there were here a new beginning. Du Cange. Hence the rule that a clause in a will introduced by item shall not influence or be influenced by what precedes or follows, if it be sensible, taken independently (1 Salk. 239), or there is no plain intent that it should be taken in connection, in which cases it may be construed conjunctively, in the sense of "and," or "also," in such a manner as to connect sentences. If, therefore, a testator bequeath a legacy to Peter, payable out of a particular fund, or charged upon a particular estate, item, a legacy to James, James' legacy as well as Peter's will be a charge upon the same property. 1 Atk. 436; 3 Atk. 256; 1 Brown, Ch. 482; 1 Rolle, Abr. 844; 1 Mod. 100; Cro. Car. 368; Vaughan, 262; Rop. Leg. 849; 1 Salk. 234.

The word is commonly used and well understood as a separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total which is separate and distinct from the other particulars or entries. 277 Ill. 131.

ITER. (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (praedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) Iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 408. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e. g., via, eight feet; actus, four feet, etc. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 290; Bracton, 232; 4 Bell, H. L. Sc. 390.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. Iter is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Co. Litt. 56a; Inst. 2. 3. pr.; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 343, § 314.

—In Old English Law. A journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission. Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, cc. 11, 12, 13; Britt. c. 2; Cowell. See "Justices in Eyre."

ITERATIO. Again; a second time.

ITERUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A second time. Dig. 2. 13. 7. 1.

ITINERA (Lat. pl. of iter). Eyres, or circuits. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 52.

ITINERANT. Wandering; travelling; who makes circuits. See "Justices in Eyre."

ITINERANTES (Law Lat.) Itinerant; travelling; in eyre. A term applied to justices instituted by Hen. II.

ITINERATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. An eyre, or circuit; the same with iter. Spelman. Si infra diem illum incipiat itineratio, if the eyre begins within that day. Bracton, fol. 110.

J

J. P. These letters are commonly used and understood to indicate the office of justice of the peace. 12 Ill. 200; 5 Ill. 481.

JA (Law Fr.) Yet; never; nevertheless. Kelham; Britt. c. 49, 93.

JACENS (Lat.) Lying; fallen; prostrate; in abeyance. Bracton, fol. 84.

JACENS HAEREDITAS. An inheritance which is in abeyance.

JACTITATION. Throwing out; a false boasting.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE. In English ecclesiastical law. The boasting by an individual that he or she has married another, from which it may happen that they will acquire the reputation of being married to each other.

The ecclesiastical courts may in such cases entertain a libel by the party injured, and, on proof of the facts, enjoin the wrongdoer to perpetual silence, and, as a punishment, make him pay the costs. 3 Bl. Comm. 93; 2 Hagg. Consist. 285, 423; 2 Chit. Prac. 459.

JACTITATION OF TITHES. The boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title.

JACTIVUS. One who is in default, or loses by default. Spelman.

JACTURA (Lat. jaceo, to throw). A jettison.

JACTUS (Lat.) A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14. 2, de lege Rhodia de jactu; 1 Pardessus, 104 et seq.; Kuricke, Inst. Mar. Hanseat. tit. 8; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 288, note.

JACTUS LAPILLI. In the civil law. The throwing down of a stone (of a structure being erected on land). One of the means whereby the true owner might assert his title, and interrupt the running of an adverse possession.

JAIL. A term generally substituted in modern usage for "gaol" (q. v.).

JAIL DELIVERY. See "Gaol Delivery."

JAIL LIBERTIES. See "Gaol Liberties."

JALO. (Law Lat.) In old English law. A gallon. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 11.

JAMUNLINGI, or JAMUNDILINGI. Freeman who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. Du Cange. The same as commendati.

JANITOR (Lat.) In old English law. A doorkeeper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 24.

JAVELOUR. In Scotch law. Jailer or gaoler. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 33.

JECT. (Law Fr.) In old practice. Cast; thrown; overthrown or defeated in law. Litt. §§ 448, 680, 682, 684. A term derived from the old practice in trial by battel, and literally signifying thrown to the ground; unhorsed.

JEDBURGH JUSTICE. Lynch law. Rapalje & L.

JEO DONE. (Law Fr.) I give; I do.

JEOFAILE (Law Fr.) I have failed; I am in error.

Certain statutes are called statutes of amendments and jeofailes, because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error (jeofaile), he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. The amendment, however, is seldom made; but the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception. 3 Bl. Comm. 407; Steph. Pleading, C. I. 93, note (i); 1 Saund. 228, note 1; Doct. Plac. 297; Dane, Abr. These statutes do not apply to indictments.

JEOPARDY. Peril; danger. See Baldw. (U. S.) 93.

The usual technical use of the term is in connection with the rule of criminal law, that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. Const. U. S. art. 5, Amend.

A person is "in jeopardy," within this rule, when a trial jury is impanelled and sworn to try his case (83 Ind. 331; 18 N. Y. 128; 105 Pa. St. 1) upon issue joined (111 Ind. 47) by plea to a valid indictment (105 Mass. 53; 5 Md. 82) in a court of competent jurisdiction (7 Mich. 162; 48 N. J. Law, 371), and the jury has been charged with his deliverance (23 Pa. St. 12; 2 Kelly [Ga.] 60). Where the practice of charging the jury with the deliverance of the prisoner at the outset does not obtain, jeopardy attaches when the jury is sworn.

There are some holdings that jeopardy does not attach till after verdict. 5 Litt. (Ky.) 137; 1 Walk. (Miss.) 134.

JERGUER. In English law. An officer of the custom house, who oversees the waiters. Tech. Dict.

JET (Fr.) In French law. Jettison. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 8; Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, § 40.

JETSAM. Goods cast out from a ship by way of jettison, and which sink, being thus distinguished from floatsam, jettisoned goods which float, and ligan, jettisoned goods, bound to some buoyant substance. 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

JETTISON. The throwing overboard of part of the cargo, or any article on board a ship, or the cutting and casting away of masts, spars, rigging, sails, or other furniture, for the purpose of lightening or relieving the ship in case of necessity or emergency. Gourlie, Gen. Av. 74.

In its largest sense, it signifies any throwing overboard; but, in its ordinary sense, it means throwing overboard for the preservation of the ship and cargo, and most jurists treat of it in this sense under the head of general average. 3 B. & Ald. 400, Termes de la Ley, Jetsam.

JEUX DE BOURSE. In French law. A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things. 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 162.

JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. In this sense it is employed in the Civil Code of Louisiana (article 2727): "To build by plot, or to work by the job," says that article, "is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price." See Duranton, Cont. liv. 3, tit. 8, notes 248, 263; Poth. Cont. notes 392, 394. See "Deviation."

JOBBER. In commercial law. One who buys and sells articles for others.

One who buys from importers, and sells to retailers. 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 587.

One who sells to any one who comes to him at a fraction above the market price, and buys of any one at a fraction below the market price. L. R. 7 P. C. 104.

JOCALIA (Lat.) Jewels. This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the payment of debts. 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOCLET. In old English law. A little farm or manor. Cowell; Blount.

JOCUS (Lat.) In old English law. A game of hazard. Reg. Orig. 290.

JOCUS PARTITUS. In old English practice. A divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard (sub periculo); as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain (quod unus amittat si ita sit, et si non sit, quod alius lucretur). Bracton, fols. 211b, 379b, 432, 434, 200b.

This arrangement, however, was altogether a voluntary and extrajudicial one.

JOHN DOE. A name given in legal proceedings to a party whose true name is unknown. It was the name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle," or "Jackson." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

JOINDER. A joining or uniting together; persons or things together; as of several persons as plaintiffs or defendants in one suit, or of several causes of action, or counts, in one declaration. 1 Chit. Pl. 8, 41, 64, 84, 199.

JOINDER IN DEMURRER. The formal answer made to a demurrer at common law.

JOINDER IN ERROR. A joinder in error is equivalent to a demurrer to the assignments of error, and raises a question of law whether there are such errors in the record as the assignments of error allege. Cass v. Duncan, 260 Ill. 228; Tobias v. Tobias, 193 Ill. App. 98.

JOINDER OF ACTIONS. Joinder of two or more causes of action in the same complaint or declaration.

JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION. See "Joinder of Actions."

JOINDER OF ISSUE. The acceptance by one party of an issue of fact tendered by the other.

JOINDER OF OFFENSES. The uniting of several distinct offenses in one indictment or information.

JOINDER OF PARTIES. The uniting of two or more persons as coparties, either plaintiff or defendant.

JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs, or against two or more as defendants.

JOINT ADVENTURE. An enterprise undertaken by several persons jointly to carry out a single business enterprise for profit. 206 Mich. 153.

JOINT AND SEVERAL BOND. A bond of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees, who can sue all the obligors jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against part, that is, treat it as joint as to some, and several as to others. Upon the payment of the whole by one of such obligors, a right to contribution arises in his favor against the other obligors.

JOINT BOND. The bond of two or more obligors, the action to enforce which must be joint against them all.

JOINT CONTRACT. One in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation.

JOINT CREDITORS. Persons jointly holding the same debt or demand.

JOINT DEBTORS. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness.

JOINT EXECUTORS. Those who are joined in the execution of a will.

JOINT FIAT. A fiat in bankruptcy, issued against two or more trading partners. Wharton.

JOINT FINE. In old English law. "If a whole vill is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but, in other cases, fines for offenses are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them." Jacob.

JOINT HEIR. A coheir.

JOINT INDICTMENT. One indictment brought against two or more offenders, charging the defendants jointly. It may be where there is a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants. Thus, there may be a joint indictment against the joint keepers of a gaming house. 1 Vent. 302; 2 Hawk. P. C. 240.

JOINT LIVES. This expression, which is met with more frequently in English books, applies when a right is granted to two or more persons, to be enjoyed while both or all of them shall live. Abbott.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS. In English law. A species of quasi corporations, or companies regulated by deeds of settlement.

In some respects they stand in the same situation as other unincorporated bodies; but they differ from the latter in this, that they are invested by certain statutes with powers and privileges usually incident to corporations. These enactments provide for the continuance of the partnership notwithstanding a change of partners. The death, bankruptcy, or the sale by a partner of his share does not affect the identity of the partnership. It continues the same body, under the same name, by virtue of the act of parliament, notwithstanding these changes. 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, § 9.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANY. A partnership having a capital stock divided into transferable shares. Shumaker, Partnership, 447.

JOINT-STOCK CORPORATION. A term used sometimes instead of "stock corporation" to indicate those corporations (including substantially all corporations for pecuniary profit) which have a capital stock divided into shares.

JOINT TENANTS. Two or more persons who acquire together lands or tenements to be held jointly between them in equal shares, the interests of all uniting and forming one ownership.

Joint tenants differ from tenants in common, in that the title of the former must have been acquired at the same time, by the same conveyance or act, while the latter hold by several titles; and also in that the shares of the former are equal, while those of the latter need not be so.

JOINT TRESPASSERS. Two or more who unite in committing a trespass.

JOINT TRUSTEES. Two or more persons charged jointly with the execution of a trust.

JOINT WILL. A joint will contained in a single instrument is the will of each of the makers, and at the death of one may be probated as his will and be again probated at the death of the other as the will of the latter. Wills may be joint or mutual or both joint and mutual. A joint will is one where the same instrument is made the will of two or more persons and is jointly signed by them. It is not necessarily either mutual or reciprocal. Mutual wills may be defined as the separate wills of two persons which are reciprocal in their provisions. A will that is both joint and mutual is one executed jointly by two or more persons, the provisions of which are reciprocal, and which shows on its face that the devises are made one in consideration of the other. These several classes of wills have some characteristics that distinguish them one from the other. A joint will which is not reciprocal is simply the individual personal will of each of the persons signing the same and is subject to the same rules that would apply if the will were several. Mutual wills,—that is, where two persons execute wills reciprocal in their provisions but separate instruments,—may or may not be revocable at the pleasure of either party, according to the circumstances and understanding upon which they were executed. To deprive either party of the right to revoke such mutual will it is necessary to prove, by clear and satisfactory evidence, that such wills were executed in pursuance of a contract or a compact between the parties, and that each is the consideration for the other; and even in cases where mutual wills have been executed in pursuance of a compact or agreement between the parties, the law appears to be well settled that either party may, during the lifetime of both, withdraw from the compact and revoke the will as to him. A joint and mutual will is revocable during the joint lives of either party, so far as relates to his own disposition, upon giving notice to the other.

but it becomes irrevocable after the death of one of them if the survivor takes advantage of the provision made by the other. 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d ed.), 621, 1 Redfield on Wills, 182, 183; Walpole v. Orford, 3 Ves. Jr. 402; Schouler on Wills, § 455 et seq.

When mutual or joint wills first came up for consideration, the courts of England, both common law and spiritual, pronounced against them, and the same unfavorable position was taken by some of the earlier American cases, but the later and better opinions in both countries now sustain such wills where they have been executed with the necessary formalities and have not been revoked by some later instrument. Schouler on Wills, 456. In a leading case in England on this subject (1 Dick. 419) it was held that a joint and mutual will might be revoked by both jointly or that it might be revoked separately, provided the party intending it had given notice to the other of such revocation, but that neither of them could, during their joint lives, revoke it secretly, nor could it be done by the survivor after the death of the other; that such wills constituted a mutual contract between the parties which could not be rescinded by the survivor after the death of one, on the theory that the first that dies carries his part of the contract into execution. In such a case the courts will not permit the other party to afterwards break the contract. The doctrine of this case has been approved in a number of well considered cases in this country. 86 Wis. 364; 155 N. Y. 55; 72 Mich. 76; 198 Mo. 289; 243 Ill. 84, 85.

JOINTRESS, or JOINTURESS. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Co. Litt. 46.

JOINTURE. A joint estate limited to both husband and wife. A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least.

Jointures are regulated by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, commonly called the "Statute of Uses."

To make a good jointure, the following circumstances must concur, namely: It must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of part of it only. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. It must be made before marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to the claim of dower, or, rather, it prevents its ever arising. But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife, which, Lord Coke says, are good jointures within the statute, provided the wife accepts of them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower. Cruise, Dig. tit. 7; 2 Bl. Comm. 137. In its more enlarged sense, a jointure signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife. 2 Bl. Comm. 137. See 14 Viner, Abr. 540; Bac. Abr.; 2 Bouv. Inst., note 1761 et seq.; Washb. Real Prop.

JORNALE (Law Lat.) In old European law. As much ground as might be ploughed in one day. Spelman.

JOUR. A French word, signifying day. It is used in our old law books; as, tout jours, forever. It is also frequently employed in the composition of words; as, journal, a day book; journeyman, a man who works by the day; journeys account.

JOUR EN BANC. In old practice. A day in banc. Distinguished from "jour en pays," a day in the country, otherwise called "jour en nisi prius." Y. B. H. 11 Hen. VI. 1.

JOURNAL.

—In Maritime Law. The book kept on board of a ship or other vessel, which contains an account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. Another name for log book. Chit. Law Lat. 199.

—In Commercial Law. A book used among merchants, in which the contents of the waste book or day book are separated every month, and entered on the debtor and creditor side, for more convenient posting in the ledger.

—In Legislation. An account of the proceedings of a legislative body.

JOURNEY. The term originally signified a day's travel (see "Jour"), but now means travel, without regard to duration.

JOURNEYS ACCOUNT. In English practice. A new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of "journeys account,"—that is, journeys acomptes or counted. This writ was quasi a continuance of the first writ, and so related back to it as to oust the defendant or tenant of his voucher, plea of nontenure, joint tenancy fully administered, or any other plea arising upon matter happening after date of the first writ. Co. Litt. fol. 9b.

JUBERE (Lat.) In civil law. To order, direct, or command. Calv. Lex. The word jubeo, I order, in a will, was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." Code, 6. 43. 2.

To assure or promise. Calv. Lex.

To decree or pass a law. Adam, Rom. Ant.

JUBILACION. In Spanish law. The right of a public officer to retire from office, retaining his title and his salary, either in whole or in part, after he has attained the age of fifty years, and been in public service at least twenty years, whenever his infirmities prevent him from discharging the duties of his office.

JUDAEUS. A Jew.

JUDAISMUS (Lat.) The religion and rites of the Jews. Du Cange. A quarter set apart for residence of Jews. Du Cange. A usurious rate of interest. 1 Mon. Angl. 839; 2 Mon. Angl. 10, 665. Sex marcus sterlingorum ad quietandam terram praedictum de Judaismo, in quo fuit impignorata. Du Cange. An income anciently accruing to the king from the Jews. Blount.

JUDEX (Lat.)

—In Roman Law. One who, either in own right, or by appointment of the magistrate for the special case, judged causes.

Thus, the praetor was formerly called judex. But, generally, praetors and magistrates who judge of their own right are distinguished from judices, who are private persons, appointed by the praetor, on application of the plaintiff, to try the cause, as soon as issue is joined, and furnished by him with instructions as to the legal principles involved. They were variously called judices delegati, or pedanei, or speciales. They resemble in many respects jurors. Thus, both are private persons, brought in at a certain stage of the proceedings, viz., issue joined, to try the cause, under instructions from the judge as to the law of the case. But civilians are not clear whether the judices had to decide the fact alone, or the law and fact. The judex resembles in many respects the arbitrator, or arbiter, the chief differences being, first, that the latter is appointed in cases of trust and confidence, the former in cases where the relations of the parties are governed by strict law (in practionibus strictis); second, the latter has the whole control of case, and decides according to equity and good conscience, the former by strict formulae; third, that the latter may be a magistrate, the former must be a private person; fourth, that the award of the arbiter derives its force from the agreement of submission, while the decree of the judex has its sanction in the command of the praetor to try the cause. Calv. Lex.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, note; Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 193, note.

There was generally one judex, sometimes three,—in which case the decision of two, in the absence of the third, had no effect. Calv. Lex. Down to the time of handing over the cause to the judex, that is, till issue joined, the proceedings were before the praetor, and were said to be in jure; after that, before the judex, and were said to be in judicio. In all this we see the germ of the Anglo-Saxon system of judicature. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 67.

—In Civil Law. A judge who conducts the trial from beginning to end; magistratus. The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time; therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1327.

—In Old English Law. A juror. Spelman. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i. e., a common-law judge,—to denote an ecclesiastical judge. Bracton, fols. 401, 402.

JUDEX A QUO. The judge from whom an appeal is taken. See "A Quo."

JUDEX AD QUEM. A judge to whom an appeal is taken. See "A Quo."

JUDEX AEQUITATEM SEMPER SPECIARE DEBET. A judge ought always to regard equity. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

JUDEX ANTE OCULOS AEQUITATEM SEMPER HABERE DEBET. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

JUDEX BONUS NIHIL EX ARBITRIO SUO FACIAT, NEC PROPOSITIONE DOMESTICAE VOLUNTATIS, SED JUXTA LEGES ET JURA PRONUNCIET. A good judge should do nothing from his own arbitrary will, or from the dictates of his private wishes; but he should pronounce according to law and justice. 7 Coke, 27a.

JUDEX DAMNATUR CUM NOCENS ABSOLVITUR. The judge is condemned when the guilty are acquitted.

JUDEX DATUS. In Roman law. A judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the praetor to try a cause.

JUDEX DEBET JUDICARE SECUNDUM ALLEGATA ET PROBATA. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

JUDEX DELEGATUS (Lat.) In civil law. A delegated judge; a special judge.

JUDEX EST LEX LOQUENS. The judge is the speaking law. 7 Coke, 4a.

JUDEX FISCALIS. In old European law. A fiscal judge; a judge having cognizance of matters pertaining to the fiscus, or public treasury.

JUDEX HABERE DEBET DUOS SALES,—salem sapientiae, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiae, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts,—the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. 3 Inst. 147.

JUDEX NON POTEST ESSE TESTIS IN PROPRIA CAUSA. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. 4 Inst. 279.

JUDEX NON POTEST INJURIAM SIBI datam punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. 12 Coke, 114.

JUDEX NON REDDIT PLUS QUAM quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff demands. 2 Inst. 286, case 84.

JUDEX ORDINARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. A judge who had jurisdiction by his own right, not by another's appointment. Calv. Lex.; Vicat. Blackstone says that judices ordinarii decided only questions of fact, while questions of law were referred to the centumviri; but this would seem to be rather the definition of judices selecti; and not all questions of law were referred to the centumviri, but particular actions, e. g., querela inofficiosi testamenti. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 315; Vicat, "Centumviri."

JUDEX PEDANEUS. In Roman law. A name given to the judge appointed by the praetor to try a cause from the law seat which he occupied at the foot of the tribunal or praetor's bench.

JUDGE. A public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law.

An officer so named in his commission, and who presides in some court.

In its most extensive sense, the term includes all officers appointed to decide litigated questions while acting in that capacity, including justices of the peace, and even jurors, it is said, who are judges of the facts. 4 Dall. (Pa.) 229; 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300. In ordinary legal use, however, the term is limited to the sense of the second of the definitions here given (15 Ill. 388), unless it may be that the case of a justice or commissioner acting judicially is to be considered an extension of this meaning. See 3 Cush. (Mass.) 584.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court martial who is to discharge some duties at the trial of offenders. His duties are to prosecute in the name of the United States; but he shall so far consider himself as counsel for the prisoner, after the prisoner shall have made his plea, as to object to leading questions to any of the witnesses, or any question to the prisoner the answer to which might tend to criminate himself. He is, further, to swear the members of the court before they proceed upon any trial. Rules & Articles of War, art. 69; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1001; Holt, Dig. passim.

JUDGE ORDINARY. By St. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 9, the judge of the court of probate was made judge of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act, under the name of the "judge ordinary."

JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE. In English practice. The written statement of the judge who tried the cause, that one of the parties is entitled to costs in the action. It is very important in some cases that these certificates should be obtained at the trial. See Tidd, Prac. 879; 3 Chit. Prac. 458, 486; 3 Camp. 316; 5 Barn. & Ald. 796. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 453. See "Case Stated."

JUDGE'S NOTES. Short statements, noted by a judge on the trial of a cause, of what transpires in the course of such trial.

JUDGMENT. In practice. The conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their default in the course of the suit. Tidd, Prac. 930.

The decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury.

A final decision entered in a book of judgments under the signature of the judge (3 Green [N. J.] 383), or, as is the practice in many jurisdictions, under the signature of the clerk.

A final or definitive sentence or decision, by which a cause is determined, though not capable of being enrolled, so as to constitute what is technically called a "record," is a judgment. 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 44.

Judgments are either in rem, or in personam. See "In Rem"; "In Personam."

They are either final, or interlocutory. See "Final Judgment"; "Interlocutory Judgment."

Accordingly, as they are rendered for various causes, and at various stages of the proceedings without trial, or on a partial trial of the issues, judgments are:

(1) Judgment by default. A judgment rendered in consequence of the nonappearance of the defendant.

(2) Judgment by nil dicit. One rendered against a defendant for want of a plea.

(3) Judgment by confession. A judgment entered for the plaintiff in case the defendant, instead of entering a plea, confesses the action, or, at any time before trial, confesses the action and withdraws his plea.

(4) Judgment of retraxit. One given against the plaintiff, where, after appearance, he withdraws his suit. It differs from nonsuit in being a voluntary renunciation of the claim, and will bar a subsequent action. 3 Bl. Comm. 396.

(5) Judgment of nonsuit. A judgment rendered against a plaintiff when he, on trial by jury, fails to be present. See "Nonsuit."

(6) Judgment of nolle prosequi. A judgment entered against the plaintiff where, after appearance, he refuses to further prosecute his suit.

(7) Judgment by non sum informatus. One which is rendered when defendant's attorney, instead of entering a plea, says that he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action.

(8) Judgment of non prosequitur. One given against a plaintiff for neglect to take any of the steps which it is incumbent upon him to take in due time.

Among the different judgments rendered in particular actions, or on particular pleas, are:

(9) Judgment quod recuperet. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff that he do recover, which is rendered when plaintiff has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory pleading.

(10) Judgment quod partitio fiat. The interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

(11) Judgment partitio facto, firma et stabilis in perpetuum. The final judgment in partition.

(12) Judgment quod computet. A judgment in an action of account render that the defendant account.

(13) Judgment pro retorno habendo. A judgment in an action for the possession of goods, that plaintiff have a return thereof.

(14) Judgment of nil capiat per breve, or per billam. A judgment in favor of a defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

(15) Judgment of cassetur breve (that the writ be quashed). A judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ.

(16) Judgment of error. A judgment rendered by an appellate court on a record sent up from an inferior court.

(17) Judgment of respondeat ouster. One rendered against a defendant that he do answer over after he has failed to establish a dilatory plea.

(18) Judgment quod partes replacitant. A judgment for replender.

(19) Judgment nul tiel record. One rendered upon a plea denying the existence of a record.

(20) Judgment capiatur. One formerly rendered against a defendant in a civil action for a wrong vi et armis, rendering him liable to arrest and imprisonment until a fine was paid to the king for the breach of the peace.

(21) Judgment non obstante veredicto. A judgment rendered without regard to a verdict rendered in the action. See "Non Obstante Veredicto."

JUDGMENT CREDITOR. One who is entitled to enforce a judgment by execution (q. v.). The owner of an unsatisfied judgment.

JUDGMENT DEBTOR. One against whom a judgment stands unsatisfied.

JUDGMENT DEBTOR SUMMONS. Under the English bankruptcy act of 1861 (sections 76-85), these summonses might be issued against both traders and non-traders, and, in default of payment of, or security or agreed composition for, the debt, the debtors might be adjudicated bankrupt.

This act was repealed by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83, § 20. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, however (bankruptcy act 1869), provides (section 7) for the granting of a "debtor's summons," at the instance of creditors, and, in the event of failure to pay or compound, a petition for adjudication may be presented, unless in the events provided for by that section. Rapalje & L.

JUDGMENT DEBTS. Debts, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered up, either upon a cognovit, or upon a warrant of attorney, or as the result of a successful action.

JUDGMENT NISI. A judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record with the postea indorsed, which will become absolute according to the terms of the "postea" unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded shall, within the first four days of the following term, otherwise order.

Under the compulsory arbitration law of Pennsylvania, on filing the award of the arbitrators, judgment nisi is to be entered, which judgment is to be valid as if it had been rendered on a verdict of a jury, unless an appeal is entered within the time required by law.

JUDGMENT NOTE. A promissory note given in the usual form, and containing, in addition, a power of attorney to appear and confess judgment for the sum therein named.

JUDGMENT PAPER. In English practice. An incipitur of the pleadings, written on plain paper, upon which the master will sign judgment. 1 Archb. Prac. 229, 306, 343.

JUDGMENT RECORD.

—In English Practice. A parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Steph. Comm. 632.

—In American Practice. A record signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk, all of which is necessary to suing out execution. Graham, Prac. 341.

JUDGMENT ROLL. In English law. A record made of the issue roll (q. v.), which, after final judgment has been given in the cause, assumes this name. Steph. Pl. 133; 3 Chit. St. 514.

JUDICANDUM EST LEGIBUS NON EXEMPLIS. We are to judge by the laws, not by examples. 4 Coke, 33b; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 405; 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 513.

JUDICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Judging; the pronouncing of sentence, after hearing a cause. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 8, No. 7.

JUDICATOIRES TERRARUM. Persons in the county palatine of Chester, who, on a writ of error, were to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it; otherwise they forfeited £100 to the crown by custom. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 71.

JUDICATURE. The state of those employed in the administration of justice; and in this sense it is nearly synonymous with "judiciary." This term is also used to signify a tribunal; and sometimes it is employed to show the extent of jurisdiction; as, the judicature is upon writs of error, etc. Comyn, Dig. "Parliament" (L 1). And see Comyn, Dig. "Courts" (A).

JUDICATURE ACTS. A series of acts of parliament reforming and consolidating the English courts, and simplifying the procedure therein. St. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, and amendments. Also applied to similar acts adopted by the various states.

JUDICES NON TENENTUR EXPRI-MERE CAUSAM SENTENTIAE SUAE. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 75.

JUDICES ORDINARIII (Lat.) In civil law. Ordinary judices; the common judices appointed to try causes, and who, according to Blackstone, determined only questions of fact. 3 Bl. Comm. 315.

JUDICES PEDANEOS (Lat.) In Roman law. Judges chosen by the parties.

Among the Romans, the praetors and other great magistrates did not themselves decide the actions which arose between private individuals. These were submitted to judges chosen by the parties, and these judges were called judices pedaneos. In choosing them, the plaintiff had the right to nominate, and the defendant to accept or reject those nominated. Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 4, tit. b. note 40; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 353.

JUDICES SELECTI (Lat.) In civil law. Select or selected judices or judges; those who were used in criminal causes, and between whom and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed. 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

JUDICI OFFICIUM SUUM EXCEDENTI per paretur. To a judge who exceeds his office or jurisdiction no obedience is due. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 139.

JUDICI SATIS POENA EST QUOD DEUM HABET ULTOREM. It is punishment enough for a judge that he is responsible to God. 1 Leon. 295.

JUDICIA (Lat.) In Roman law. Judicial proceedings; trials. Judicia publica, criminal trials. Dig. 48. 1.

JUDICIA IN CURIA REGIS NON ADNIHILANTUR, SED STENT IN ROBORE SUO QUOUSQUE PER ERROREM AUT ATTINCTUM ADNULLANTUR. Judgments in the king's courts are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attain. 2 Inst. 539.

JUDICIA IN DELIBERATIONIBUS CREBRO MATURESCUNT, IN ACCELERATE PROCESSU NUNQUAM. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberation, never by hurried process. 3 Inst. 210.

JUDICIA POSTERIORA SUNT IN LEGE FORTIORA. The latter decisions are stronger in law. 8 Coke, 97.

JUDICIA SUNT TANQUAM JURIS DICTA, ET PRO VERITATE ACCIPIUNTUR. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta or sayings of the law, and are received as truth. 2 Inst. 537.

JUDICIAL. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority.

Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer.

Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act.

Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination.

Constituting the basis of a judgment; as a judicial opinion.

Whatever emanates from a judge as such, or proceeds from a court of justice, is judicial. A power which, when exercised by officers not connected with the judiciary, would be regarded as purely administrative, becomes at once judicial when exercised by a court of justice.

Where any power is conferred upon a court of justice, to be exercised by it as a court, in the manner and with the formalities used in its ordinary proceedings, the action of such court is to be regarded as judicial, irrespective of the original nature of the power. 22 N. Y. 67, 82, 84; 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 301, 315.

JUDICIAL ACTION. An act performed by a court, touching the rights of parties, or property, brought before it by voluntary appearance, or by the prior action of ministerial officers, in short, by ministerial acts. 17 Ind. 173.

JUDICIAL ACTS. Acts requiring the exercise of some judicial discretion, as distinguished from ministerial acts, which require none. Rapalje & L.

JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS. Admissions of the party which appear of record as the admissions of the party.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. In English law. A tribunal, composed of members of the privy council, which exercises the entire appellate jurisdiction of the sovereign in council, and also advises him upon any matters which he may refer to it.

Its jurisdiction extends to cases in civil, ecclesiastical, and maritime law, in equity, and to many of the colonial cases, including cases arising under the Hindoo and Mohammedan law. It consists of eminent lawyers, chiefly of judicial station. When questions arise which belong to any peculiar jurisdiction, as the ecclesiastical or civil, the attendance and aid of judges in that branch are required; and in case of questions under the Hindoo or other peculiar systems of law, assistance is, in like manner, derived from those skilled in such proceedings.

Allegations and proofs are made before this committee, which thereupon reports to the sovereign in council, by whom judgment is finally rendered. Bl. Comm. (Warren, Abr.) 220.

JUDICIAL CONFESSIONS. In criminal law. Those voluntarily made before a magistrate, or in a court, in the due course of legal proceedings. A preliminary examination, taken in writing, by a magistrate lawfully authorized, pursuant to a statute, or the plea of guilty made in open court to an indictment, are sufficient to found a conviction upon them.

JUDICIAL CONVENTIONS. Agreements entered into in consequence of an order of court; as, for example, entering into a bond on taking out a writ of sequestration. 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 494.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS. The opinions or determinations of the judges in causes before them. Hale, Hist. Crim. Law, 68; Willes, 666; 3 Barn. & Ald. 122; 1 H. Bl. 63; 5 Maule & S. 185. See "Dictum."

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT. That department of government which interprets, construes and applies the laws. 270 Ill. 510.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION. See "Discretion."

JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS. Proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.

JUDICIAL MORTGAGE. In Louisiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether these be rendered on contested cases, or by default, whether they be final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ. Code La. art. 3289.

JUDICIAL NOTICE. The cognizance taken by a court of matters of fact, without the production of evidence thereof. The matters of fact of which judicial notice will be taken are, in general, those of general notoriety, immemorial usage, or uniform national occurrence.

JUDICIAL POWER. The authority vested in the judges or courts, as distinguished from that vested in other departments of government. That power by which judicial tribunals construe the constitution, and laws of the United States, or of the states, and determine the rights of parties, and application of the laws. 14 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 165; 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 444; 270 Ill. 510, 511; 256 Ill. 621; 192 Ill. 612.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. A proceeding which takes place in or under the authority of a court of justice, or which relates in any way to the administration of justice, or which legally ascertains any right or liability. 197 Ill. 228.

JUDICIAL SALE. A sale, by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose. In a strict sense, an execution sale is not a judicial sale (18 Vt. 394), but it is generally so regarded (66 Ind. 505).

JUDICIAL WRITS. In English practice. The capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable.

Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, they are called "judicial" writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called "original" writs. 3 Bl. Comm. 282.

JUDICIARY. That which is done while administering justice; the judges taken collectively; as, the liberties of the people are secured by a wise and independent judiciary. See "Court"; 3 Story, Const. bk. 3, c. 38.

JUDICIARY ACT. The name ordinarily given to Act Cong. Sept. 24, 1789, establishing the system of federal courts.

JUDICIS POSTERIORIBUS FIDES EST ADHIBENDA. Faith or credit is to be given to the later decisions. 13 Coke, 14.

JUDICIS EST IN PRONUNTIANDO SEQUI REGULAM, EXCEPTIONE NON PROBATA. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

JUDICIS EST JUDICARE SECUNDUM ALLEGATA ET PROBATA. A judge ought to decide according to the allegations and proofs. Dyer, 12a; Halk. Max. 73.

JUDICIS EST JUS DICERE NON DARE. It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not to enact it. Lofft, 42.

JUDICIS OFFICIUM EST OPUS DIEI IN DIE SUO PERFICERE. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day. Dyer, 12.

JUDICIS OFFICIUM EST UT RES ITA TEMPORA RERUM QUÆRERE, QUÆSITO TEMPORE TUTUS ERIS. It is the duty of a judge to inquire the times of things, as well as into things; by inquiring into the time you will be safe. Co. Litt. 171.

JUDICIUM. A court; judicial power; a judicial proceeding; sometimes applied in this sense to an action generally, and sometimes to a determination therein, as a verdict or judgment.

JUDICIUM A NON SUO JUDICE DATUM nullus est momenti. A judgment given by an improper judge is of no moment. 10 Coke, 76b; 2 Q. B. 1014; 13 Q. B. 143; 14 Mees. & W. 124; 11 Clark & F. 610.

JUDICIUM CAPITALE. In old English law. Judgment of death; capital judgment. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39, § 2. Called, also, "judicium vite amissionis," judgment of loss of life. Id. lib. 2, c. 1, § 5.

JUDICIUM DEI (Lat. the judgment or decision of God). In old English law. A term applied to trials by ordeal; for, in all trials of this sort, God was thought to interfere in favor of the innocent, and so decide the cause. These trials are now all abolished.

JUDICIUM EST QUASI JURIS DICTUM. Judgment is, as it were, a saying of the law. Co. Litt. 168.

JUDICIUM NON DEBET ESSE ILLUSORIUM; suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Inst. 841.

JUDICIUM PARIUM. In old English law. Judgment of the peers; judgment of one's peers; trial by jury. Magna Charta, c. 29.

JUDICIUM REDDITUR IN INVITUM. Judgment is given against one, whether he will or not. Co. Litt. 248b.

JUDICIUM REDDITUR IN INVITUM, IN PRÆSUMPTIONE LEGIS. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against inclination. Co. Litt. 248b, 314b.

JUDICIUM SEMPER PRO VERITATE ACCIPITUR. A judgment is always taken for truth. 2 Inst. 380; 17 Mass. 237.

JUGERUM (Lat.) An acre. Co. Litt. 5b. As much as a yoke (jugum) of oxen could plough in one day.

JUGES D'INSTRUCTION. In French law. Officers subject to the procureur imperial or general, who receive in cases of criminal offenses the complaints of the parties injured, and who summon and examine witnesses upon oath, and, after communication with the procureur imperial, draw up the forms of accusation. They have also the right, subject to the approval of the same superior officer, to admit the accused to bail. They are appointed for three years, but are re-eligible for a further period of office. They are usually chosen from among the regular judges. Brown.

JUGULATOR. In old records. A cutthroat or murderer. Cowell.

JUGUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A yoke; a measure of land; as much land as a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. Nov. 17, c. 8. Called, also, jugerum, jugulum and zygocephalum. Id. See Brissonius.

JUGUM TERRÆ (Law Lat.) In old English law. A yoke of land; half a plough land. Domesday Book; Co. Litt. 5a; Cowell.

JUICIO. In Spanish law. A trial or suit. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 4, c. 1.

JUICIO DE APEO. In Spanish law. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

JUICIO DE CONCURSO DE ACREEDORES. In Spanish law. The decree obtained by a debtor against his creditors, or by the creditors against their debtor, for the payment of the amounts due, according to the respective rank of each creditor, when the property of the debtor is insufficient to pay the whole of his liabilities.

JUMENT. In old Scotch law. An ox used for tillage. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 89.

JUMENTA. In civil law. Beasts of burden; animals used for carrying burdens. This word did not include "oxen." Dig. 32. 65. 5.

JUMP BAIL. A colloquial expression, meaning to abscond in violation of the obligation of a bail bond.

JUNCTA JUVANT. Things joined have effect. 11 East, 220.

JUNCTURA. (Lat.) In old English law. A joining together; the uniting, putting together, or including of several covenants in one stipulation or contract. Bract. fol. 100b. A jointure; a joint estate. 4 Co. 2a.

JUNIOR. Younger; subsequent to in point of time. Thus, junior creditor, one whose claim accrued after that of another; junior judgment, one entered after another against the same person; junior writ, one issued after another against the same person.

The term is no part of the name of a person. It is a term used to designate and describe the person, as the name of his residence is sometimes used for the same purpose. 131 Mass. 184.

As applied to a manufactured article, it indicates the later or more recent product, or a smaller type or model of a machine that has been on the market. 249 Fed. 52.

JURA (Lat. pl. of jus, q. v.) Rights; laws. 1 Bl. Comm. 123. Freedoms or abilities. Bac. Works, iii. 265.

JURA ECCLESIASTICA LIMITATA SUNT INFRA LIMITES SEPARATOS. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds. 3 Bulst. 53.

JURA EODEM MODO DESTITUUNTUR QUO CONSTITUUNTUR. Laws are abrogated or repealed by the same means by which they are made. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785.

JURA FISCALIA (Lat.) In English law. Fiscal rights; rights of the exchequer. 3 Bl. Comm. 45.

JURA IN RE (Lat.) In civil law. Rights in a thing, as opposed to rights to a thing (jura ad rem). Rights in a thing which are not gone upon loss of possession, and which give a right to an action in rem against whoever has the possession. These rights are of four kinds: Dominium, hereditas, servitus, pignus. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 333. See "Jus in Re."

JURA MIXTI DOMINII. In old English law. Rights of mixed dominion. The king's right or power of jurisdiction was so termed. Hale, Anal. § 6.

JURA NATURAE SUNT IMMUTABILIA. The laws of nature are unchangeable. Branch, Princ.; Oliver, Forms, 56.

JURA PERSONARUM (Lat.) In civil law. Rights which belong to men in their different characters or relations, as father, apprentice, citizen, etc. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 122, note.

JURA PRAEDIORUM. In civil law. The rights of estates. Dig. 50. 16. 86.

JURA PUBLICA ANTEFERENDA PRIVATA. Public rights are to be preferred to private. Co. Litt. 130.

JURA PUBLICA EX PRIVATO PROMISCUAE DECIDI NON DEBENT. Public rights ought not to be decided promiscuously with private. Co. Litt. 181b.

JURA REGALIA (or REGIA) (Lat.) Royal rights. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 117, 119, 240; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 45. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45.

JURA REGIS SPECIALIA NON CONCEDUNTUR PER GENERALIA VERBA. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 103.

JURA RERUM. Rights of things; the rights of things; rights which a man may acquire over external objects or things unconnected with his person. 1 Bl. Comm. 122; 2 Bl. Comm. 1.

JURA SANGUINIS NULLO JURE CIVILI DIRIMI POSSUNT. The right of blood and kindred cannot be destroyed by any civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Bac. Max. reg. 11; Broom, Leg. Max. (8d London Ed.) 474.

JURA SUMMI IMPERII. Rights of supreme dominion; rights of sovereignty. 1 Bl. Comm. 49; 1 Kent, Comm. 211.

JURAMENTAE CORPORALES (Lat.) Corporal oaths. These oaths are so called because the party making oath must touch the Bible, or other thing, by which he swears.

JURAMENTUM (Lat.) In civil law. An oath.

JURAMENTUM CALUMNIAE (Lat. oath of calumny). In civil and canon law. An oath required of plaintiff and defendant, whether the parties themselves insist on it or not, that they are not influenced in seeking their right by malice, but believe their cause to be just. It was also required of the attorneys and procurators of the parties. Called also, jusjurandum or sacramentum calumniae. Calv. Lex.; Vicat; Clerke, Prax. tit. 42.

JURAMENTUM EST INDIVISIBILE; ET NON EST ADMITTENDUM IN PARTE VERUM ET IN PARTE FALSUM. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be held partly true and partly false. 4 Inst. 274.

JURAMENTUM JUDICIALE (Lat.) In civil law. An oath which the judge, of his own accord, defers to either of the parties.

It is of two kinds: First, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name juramentum judiciale, and is sometimes called supplementary oath, juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called juramentum in litem. Poth. Obl. p. 4, c. 3, § 3, art. 3.

JURAMENTUM NECESSARIUM. In Roman law. A necessary (compulsory) oath. A statement under oath which might be required of a party on his adversary agreeing to be bound thereby.

JURAMENTUM VOLUNTARIUM. In Roman law. A voluntary oath, which a party might make on the offer of his adversary to be bound thereby. He was not, however, compelled to accept the offer, as in case of the juramentum necessarium.

JURARE. To swear; to take an oath.

JURARE EST DEUM IN TESTEM VOCARE, ET EST ACTUS DIVINI CULTUS. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion. 3 Inst. 165. See 3 Bouv. Inst. 3180, note; 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 376, 371, note.

JURAT. In practice. That part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was "sworn" before him, and when and where.

JURATA (Lat.) In old English law. A jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assiza, or jury established or re-established by St. Hen. II.

The jurata, or common-law jury, was a jury called in to try the cause, upon the prayer of the parties themselves, in cases where a jury was not given by St. Hen. II., and, as the jury was not given under the statute of Henry II., the writ of attain provided in that statute would not be against a jurata for false verdict. It was common for the parties to a cause to request that the cause might be decided by the assiza, sitting as a jurata, in order to save trouble of summoning a new jury, in which case "cadit assiza et vertitur in juratam," and the cause is said to be decided non in modum assizae, but in modum juratae. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 335, 336; Glanv. lib. 13, c. 20; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 30. But this distinction has been long obsolete.

Juratae were divided into: First, jurata dilatoria, which inquires out offenses against the law, and presents the offenders' names, together with their offenses, to the judge, and which is of two kinds,—major and minor, according to the extent of its jurisdiction; second, jurata judicaria, which gives verdict as to the matter of fact in issue, and is of two kinds,—civilis, in civil causes, and criminalis, in criminal causes. Du Cange.

A clause in nisi prius record called the "jury clause," so named from the word jurata, with which its Latin form begins.

A jurat.

JURATION. The act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

JURATO CREDITUR IN JUDICIO. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment. 3 Inst. 79.

JURATOR. A juror; a compurgator (q. v.).

JURATORES DEBENT ESSE VICINI, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbors, of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 141.

JURATORES SUNT JUDICES FACTI. Jurors are the judges of the facts. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 68.

JURATORY CAUTION. A security sometimes taken in Scotch proceedings, when no better can be had, viz., an inventory of effects given up upon oath, and assigned in security of the sums which may be found due. Bell, Dict.

JURATS (Law Lat. jurati). Sworn men; officers of certain municipal corporations in England, in the nature of aldermen or assistants. Cowell; Blount. So called from their official oaths. See Dugdale, Imbanking, 18 et seq.

JURE (Lat.) By right; in right; by the law; according to the law.

JURE BELLI. By the right or law of war. 1 Kent, Comm. 126; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 289.

JURE CIVILI. By the civil law. Inst. 1. 3. 4; 1 Bl. Comm. 423.

JURE ECCLESIAE. In right of the church. 1 Bl. Comm. 401.

JURE EMPHYTEUTICO. By the right or law of emphyteosis. 3 Bl. Comm. 232. See "Emphyteosis."

JURE GENTIUM. By the law of nations. Inst. 1. 3. 4; 1 Bl. Comm. 423.

JURE NATURAE AEQUUM EST, NEMINEM cum alterius detrimento, et injuria fieri locupletiolem. According to the laws of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched with detriment and injury to another, i. e., at another's expense. Dig. 50. 17. 200.

JURE PROPINQUITATIS (Lat.) By right of relationship. Co. Litt. 10b.

JURE REPRESENTATIONIS (Lat.) By right of representation. See "Per Stirpes." 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 219, note 14, 224.

JURE UXORIS (Lat.) By right of a wife.

JURI NON EST CONSONUM QUOD ALIQUIS accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit atinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact. 2 Inst. 183.

JURIDICAL (Lat. juridicus, q. v.) Relating to the administration of justice. A juridical day is one on which courts sit for the administration of justice.

Belonging to the office of a judge. See "Judicial."

JURIDICUS (Lat. from jus, law, and dicere, to say, or pronounce). Belonging to law; relating to the administration of justice in or by a court. Dies juridicus, a day on which courts can lawfully sit; a juridical day; a law or court day.

JURIS EFFECTUS IN EXECUTIONE consistit. The effect of a law consists in the execution. Co. Litt. 289b.

JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat. of right and by law). A presumption is said to be juris et de jure when it is conclusive, i. e., when no evidence will be admitted to rebut it, in contradistinction to a presumption, which is simply juris, i. e., rebuttable by evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 29; Best, Pres. p. 20, § 17; Best. Ev. p. 43, § 48.

JURIS ET SEISINAE CONJUNCTIO (Lat.) The union of seisin, or possession, and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

JURIS POSITIVI. Positive, as distinguished from natural, law.

JURIS PUBLICI (Lat.) Of common right; of common or public use; such things as, at least in their own use, are common to all the king's subjects; as common highways, common bridges, common rivers, and common ports. Hale, Anal. § 23. The phrase publici juris is also used. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 3.

JURIS UTRUM (Law Lat.) In English law. A writ which lay for the incumbent of a benefice, to recover the lands or tenements belonging to the church, which were alienated by his predecessor. Termes de la Ley; 48 Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 49. Sometimes called "the parson's writ of right," being the highest writ he could have. 3 Bl. Comm. 252.

JURISCONSULTUS (Lat. skilled in the law). In civil law. A person who has such knowledge of the laws and customs which prevail in a state as to be able to advise, act, and to secure a person in his dealings.

The early juriconsults gave their opinions gratuitously, and were also employed in drawing up written documents. From Augustus to Adrian, only those allowed by the emperor could be juriconsults. Before and after those emperors, any could be juriconsults who chose. If their opinion was unanimous, it had the force of law; if not, the praetor could follow which opinion he chose. Vicat.

There were two sects of juriconsults at Rome,—the Procleians and Labinians. The former were founded by Labeo, and were in favor of innovation; the latter by Capito, and held to the received doctrine. Cush. Rom. Law, §§ 5, 6.

JURISDICTION EST POTESTAS DE PUBLICO introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice. 10 Coke, 73a.

JURISDICTION (Lat. jus, law, dicere, to say). The authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes; power to hear and determine a cause. 3 Ohio, 494; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 591. And it has been considered that it is essential to jurisdiction that the court should not only have power to hear and determine the case generally, but that, in the course of the hearing, and in the particular judgment rendered, it keep within its power. 93 U. S. 282.

Jurisdiction is either (1) general over all matters within the judicial power of the sovereignty creating it, or (2) limited to certain specified subject matters or persons. See "General Jurisdiction."

It is either (3) original, being that of the tribunal in which an action is commenced in the first instance, or (4) appellate, being that of the tribunal to which the action is removed by proceedings for review.

It is either (5) exclusive in some particular court, (6) concurrent in being possessed at the same time by two or more separate tribunals, or (7) assistant, being that possessed by a tribunal in aid of proceedings in another separate tribunal.

It is either (8) criminal, that which exists for the punishment of crimes, or (9) civil, over subject matters not of a criminal nature.

JURISDICTION CLAUSE. In equity practice. That part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the plaintiff, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the "jurisdiction clause." Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 43.

This clause is unnecessary; for if the court appear from the bill to have jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained without this clause; and if the court have not jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed, though the clause may be inserted. Story, Eq. Pl. § 34.

JURISDICTIONAL. Pertaining to; essential to or conferring jurisdiction.

JURISPERITUS (Lat. from jus, law [juris, of law], and peritus, skilled). Skilled or learned in the law.

JURISPRUDENCE. The science of the law; the practical science of giving a wise interpretation to the laws, and making a just application of them to all cases as they arise.

By science, in the first definition, is understood that connection of truths which is founded on principles either evident in themselves, or capable of demonstration,—a collection of truths of the same kind, arranged in methodical order. In the latter sense, it is the habit of judging the same questions in the same manner, and by this course of judgments forming precedents. 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 3; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. § 1, note 1, 12, 99; Merlin, Repert.; 19 Am. Jur. 3.

JURISPRUDENTIA (Lat. from jus, law [juris, of law] and prudencia, wisdom, knowledge). In the civil and common law. Jurisprudence, or legal science.

JURISPRUDENTIA EST DIVINARUM atque humanarum rerum notitia; justae atque injustae scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of the just and the unjust. Dig. 1. 1. 10. 2; Inst. 1. 1. 1; Bracton, 3; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 295.

JURISPRUDENTIA LEGIS COMMUNIS Angliae est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science sociable and copious. 7 Coke, 28a.

JURIST. One versed in the science of the law; one skilled in the civil law; one skilled in the law of nations.

JURISTIC ACT. One of legal efficacy.

JURO. In Spanish law. A certain pension granted by the king on the public revenues, and more especially on the salt works, by favor, either in consideration of meritorious services, or in return for money loaned the government, or obtained by it through forced loans. It is a portion of the yearly revenue of the state, assigned as a rightful indemnity, either in perpetuity or as an annuity.

JUROR (Lat. juror, to swear). A man who is sworn or affirmed to serve on a jury.

JURY (Lat. jurata, sworn). In practice. A body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are delivered from the evidence placed before them.

It is applied loosely to a number of bodies, as coroners' juries, etc.

As applied to petit juries, its most common use, the full number of twelve men is essential to a common-law jury. 18 N. Y. 128.

The origin of this venerable institution of the common law is lost in the obscurity of the middle ages. Antiquarians trace it back to an early period of English history; but, if known to the Saxons, it must have existed in a very crude form, and may have been derived to them from the mode of administering justice by the peers of litigant parties, under the feudal institutions of France, Germany, and the other northern nations of Europe. The ancient ordeals of red-hot iron and boiling water, practiced by the Anglo-Saxons to test the innocence of a party accused of crime, gradually gave way to the wager of battle, in the days of the Normans; while this latter mode of trial disappeared in civil cases in the thirteenth century, when Henry II. introduced into the assizes a trial by jury. It is referred to in Magna Charta as an institution existing in England at that time, and its subsequent history is well known. See "Grand Assize"; 3 Bl. Comm. 349; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 23, 84; Glanv. c. 9; Bracton, 155.

A jury de medietate linguae is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.

Such juries might formerly be claimed, both in civil and criminal cases, where the party claiming the privilege was an alien born, by virtue of 28 Edw. III. c. 13. And see 8 Hen. VI. c. 29; 3 Geo. III. c. 25, by which latter statute the right is thought to be taken away in civil cases. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 360; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 352. A provision of a similar nature, providing for a jury one-half of the nationality of the party claiming the privilege, where he is a foreigner, exists in some of the states of the United States.

A grand jury is one organized for certain preliminary purposes. See "Grand Jury."

A petit jury is a jury who try the question in issue, and pass finally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term "jury" is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.

A common jury is one drawn in the usual manner.

A special or struck jury is one selected by the assistance of the parties.

This is granted in some cases upon motion and cause shown, under various local provisions. See 33 Eng. Law & Eq. 406. The method at common law was for the officer to return the names of forty-eight principal freeholders to the prothonotary or proper officer. The attorneys of the respective parties, being present, strike off each twelve names, and from the remaining twenty-four the jury is selected. A similar course is pursued in those states where such juries are allowed. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 357.

JURY BOX. A place set apart for the jury to sit in during the trial of a cause.

JURY LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impanelled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURY OF MATRONS. See "Jury Women."

JURY PROCESS. In practice. The writs for summoning a jury, viz., in England, venire juratores facias, and distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum. These writs are now abolished, and jurors are summoned by precept. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (by Prent.) 344; Com. Law Proc. Act 1852, §§ 104, 105; 3 Chit. St. 519.

JURY WHEEL. A revolving box, from which names are drawn by chance to form the jury list (q. v.).

JURY WOMEN. A jury of women was given in two cases, viz., on writ de ventre inspiciendo, in which case the jury was made up of men and women, but the search is made by the latter (1 Madd. 11; 2 P. Wms. 591); and where pregnancy was pleaded by condemned criminal in delay of execution, in which case a jury of twelve discreet women was formed, and on their returning a verdict of enseinte, the execution was delayed till birth, and sometimes the punishment commuted to perpetual exile. But if the criminal be privement enseinte, and not "quick," there is no respite. 2 Hale, P. C. 412. As to time of quickening, see 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 229.

JURYPAN. A juror; one who is impanelled on a jury. Webster.

JUS. Right in general or in the abstract; justice or equity.

Law in general; law as distinguished from equity.

A rule of law; a statute or regulation.

Power or authority.

An action; a court or judicial tribunal.

JUS ABUTENDI (Lat. the right to abuse). By this phrase is understood the right to abuse property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 86. Used in contradistinction to the jus utendi (q. v.).

JUS ACCRESCENDI (Lat.) The right of survivorship.

At common law, when one of several joint tenants died, the entire tenancy or estate went to the survivors, and so on to the last survivor, who took an estate of inheritance. This right, except in estates held in trust, has been abolished by statute in most of the United States.

JUS ACCRESCENDI INTER MERCATORES locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. The right of survivorship does not exist among merchants for the benefit of commerce. Co. Litt. 182; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 682.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRAEFERTUR oneribus. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Co. Litt. 185.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRAEFERTUR ultimae voluntati. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will. Co. Litt. 185b.

JUS AD REM (Lat.) A right which belongs to a person only mediately and relatively, and has for its foundation an obligation incurred by a particular person.

The jus in re, by the effect of its very nature, is independent and absolute, and is exercised per se ipsum, by applying it to its object; but the jus ad rem is the faculty of demanding and obtaining the performance of some obligation by which another is bound to me ad aliquid dandum, vel faciendum, vel praestandum. Thus, if I have the ownership of a horse, the usufruct of a flock of sheep, the right of habitation of a house, a right of way over your land, etc., my right in the horse, in the flock of sheep, in the house, or the land, belongs to me directly, and without any intermediary; it belongs to me absolutely, and independently of any particular relation with another person; I am in direct and immediate relation with the thing itself which forms the object of my right, without reference to any other relation. This constitutes a jus in re. If, on the other hand, the horse is lent to me by you, or if I have a claim against you for a thousand dollars, my right to the horse or to the sum of money exists only relatively, and can only be exercised through you; my relation to the object of the right is mediate, and is the result of the immediate relation of debtor and creditor existing between you and me. This is a jus ad rem. Every jus in re, or real right, may be vindicated by the actio in rem against him who is in possession of the thing, or against any one who contests the right. It has been said that the words jus in re of the civil law convey the same idea as "thing in possession" at common law. This is an error, arising from a confusion of ideas as to the distinctive characters of the two classes of rights. Nearly all the common-law writers seem to take it for granted that by the jus in re is understood the title or property in a thing in the possession of the owner; and that by the jus ad rem is meant the title or property in a thing not in the possession of the owner. But it is obvious that possession is not one of the elements constituting the jus in re, although possession is generally, but not always, one of the incidents of this right, yet the loss of possession does not exercise the slightest influence on the character of the right itself, unless it should continue for a sufficient length of time to destroy the right altogether by prescription. In many instances the jus in re is not accompanied by possession at all; the usuary is not entitled to the possession of the thing subject to his use; still, he has a jus in re. So with regard to the right of way, etc. See "Dominium."

A mortgage is considered by most writers as a jus in re; but it is clear that it is a jus ad rem. It is granted for the sole purpose of securing the payment of a debt, or the fulfillment of some other personal obligation. In other words, it is an accessory to a principal obligation and corresponding right. It can have no separate and independent existence. The immovable on which I have a mortgage is not the object of the right, as in the case of the horse of which I am the owner, or the house of which I have the right of habitation, etc. The true object of my right is the sum of money due to me, the payment of which I may enforce by obtaining a decree for the sale of the property mortgaged. 2 Marcade, 350 et seq.

JUS AESNECIAE. The right of primogeniture.

JUS ALBINATUS. The droit d'aubaine (q. v.). See "Albinatus Jus."

JUS ANGLORUM. The laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred before all others. Wharton.

JUS AQUAEDUCTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source, or from any other place.

JUS BANCI. In old English law. The right of bench; the right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, anciently allowed only to the king's judges, who hence were said to administer "high" justice, summam administrant justitiam. Blount.

JUS BELLII. The law of war; the law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations.

The right of war; that which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, § 3.

JUS BELLUM DICENDI. The right to declare war.

JUS CANONICUM. The canon law.

JUS CIVILE (Lat.) In Roman law. The private law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium. 1 Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 1, § 1.

JUS CIVILE EST QUOD SIBI POPULUS constituit. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 424, 426.

JUS CIVITATIS (Lat.) In Roman law. The collection of laws which are to be observed among all the members of a nation. It is opposed to jus gentium, which is the law which regulates the affairs of nations among themselves. 2 Lepage, c. 5, p. 1.

JUS CLOACAE (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which requires the party who is subject to it to permit his neighbor to conduct the waters which fall on his grounds over those of the servient estate.

JUS COMMUNE.

—In Civil Law. Common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jus singulare (q. v.). Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 196.

—In English Law. The common law, answering to the Saxon "folcright." 1 Bl. Comm. 67.

JUS CONSTITUI OPORTET IN HIS quae ut plurimum accidunt non quae ex opinato. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence. Dig. 1. 3. 3; Broom, Leg. Max. 43.

JUS CORONAE. In English law. The right of the crown, or, rather, to the crown; the right of succession to the throne. 1 Bl. Comm. 191; 2 Steph. Comm. 434.

JUS CUDENDAE MONETAE. In old English law. The right of coining money. 2 How. St. Tr. 118.

JUS CURIALITATIS. In English law. The right of curtesy. Spelman.

JUS DARE (Lat.) To give or to make the law. Jus dare belongs to the legislature; jus dicere, to the judge.

JUS DELIBERANDI (Lat.) The right of deliberating given to the heir, in those countries where the heir may have "benefit of inventory" (q. v.), in which to consider whether he will accept or renounce the succession.

In Louisiana, he is allowed ten days before he is required to make his election. Civ. Code La. art. 1028.

JUS DESCENDIT, ET NON TERRA. A right descends, not the land. Co. Litt. 345.

JUS DICERE (Lat.) To declare the law. It is the province of the court jus dicere, to declare what the law is.

JUS DICERE, NON JUS DARE. To declare the law, not to make it. 7 Term R. 696; Arg. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 566; 7 Exch. 543; 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 29; 4 C. B. 560, 561; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 140.

JUS DISPONENDI (Lat.) The right to dispose of a thing.

JUS DIVIDENDI. The right of disposing of realty by will. Du Cange.

JUS DUPLICATUM (Lat. double right). When a man has the possession as well as the property of anything, he is said to have a double right, jus duplicatum. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 4, c. 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 199.

JUS EST ARS BONI ET AEQUI. Law is the science of what is good and just. Dig. 1. 1. 1. 1.

JUS EST NORMA RECTI; ET QUICQUID EST CONTRA NORMAM RECTI EST INJURIA. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury. 3 Bulst. 313.

JUS ET FRAUS NUNQUAM COHABITANT. Right and fraud never live together.

JUS EX INJURIA NON ORITUR. A right cannot arise from a wrong. 4 Bin. 639.

JUS FALCANDI. (Lat.) In old English law. The right of mowing or cutting. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1.

JUS FECIALE (Lat.) In Roman law. That species of international law which had its foundation in the religious belief of different nations, such as the international law which now exists among the Christian people of Europe. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 2, § 11.

JUS FIDUCIARUM (Lat.) In civil law. A right to something held in trust; for this there was a remedy in conscience. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS FLAVIANUM. In old Roman law. A body of laws drawn up by Cneius Flavius, a clerk of Appius Claudius, from the materials to which he had access. It was a popularization of the laws. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 39.

JUS FLUMINUM. In civil law. The right to the use of rivers. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 6.

JUS FODIENDI (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. A right of digging on another's land. Inst. 2. 3. 2; Bracton, fol. 222; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 6.

JUS GENTIUM (Lat.) The law of nations. Although the Romans used these words in the sense we attach to "law of nations," yet among them the sense was much more extended. Falck, Enc. Jur. 102, note 42.

Modern writers have made a distinction between the laws of nations which have for their object the conflict between the laws of different nations, which is called jus gentium privatum, or private international law, and those laws of nations which regulate those matters which nations, as such, have with each other, which is denominated jus gentium publicum, or public international law. Foelix, Droit Int. Prive, note 14. See "International Law."

JUS GLADII (Lat. the right of the sword). Supreme jurisdiction; the right to absolve from or condemn a man to death.

JUS HABENDI (Lat.) The right to have a thing.

JUS HABENDI ET RETINENDI. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage. Rapalje & L.

JUS HAEREDITATIS. The right of inheritance. Rapalje & L.

JUS HAURIENDI. (Lat.) In civil and old English law. The right of drawing water. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 1.

JUS HONORARIUM. The body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the praetors.

JUS IMMUNITATIS. In civil law. The law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office. Dig. 50. 6.

JUS IN PERSONAM. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something. Rapalje & L.

JUS IN RE (Lat.) A right which belongs to a person, immediately and absolutely, in a thing, and which is the same against the whole world,—idem erga omnes. See "Jus ad Rem."

JUS IN RE INHAERIT OSSIBUS USUFRUCTUARIIS. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

JUS IN RE PROPRIA. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re aliena, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

JUS INCOGNITUM (Lat.) An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws, which, as Bacon truly observes, are unjust; for the law, to be just, must give warning before it strikes. Bac. Aph. 8, § 1; Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 38. But until it has become obsolete, no custom can prevail against it. See "Obsolete."

JUS INDIVIDUUM (Law Lat.) An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division. 36 Eng. Law & Eq. 25.

JUS JURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFFERT, RE CONVENIT; HUNC ENIM SENSUM HABERE DEBET, UT DEUS INVOCETUR. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense,—that the Deity is invoked. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 13, § 10.

JUS LATII. In Roman law. The right of Latium or of the Latins. The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the praetor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites. Butler, Hor. Jur. 41.

JUS LEGITIMUM (Lat.) In civil law. A legal right which might have been enforced by due course of law. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS MARITI (Lat.) In Scotch law. The right of the husband to administer, during the marriage, his wife's goods and the rents of her heritage.

In the common law, by jus mariti is understood the rights of the husband, as jus mariti cannot attach upon a bequest to the wife, although given during coverture, until the executor has assented to the legacy. 1 Bailey, Eq. (S. C.) 214.

JUS MERUM (Lat.) A simple or bare right; a right to property in land, without possession, or the right of possession.

JUS NATURAE. The law of nature. See "Jus Naturale."

JUS NATURALE. Natural law; the rule and dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act according to its suitability to a reasonable nature. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, c. 3.

The term is used interchangeably with jus gentium. Tayl. Civ. Law, 128.

JUS NATURALE EST QUOD APUD HOMINES EANDEM HABET POTENTIAM. Natural right is that which has the same force among all men. 7 Coke, 12.

JUS NAVIGANDI. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 3.

JUS NEC INFLECTI GRATIA, NEC FRANGI POTENTIA, NEC ADULTERARI PECUNIA POTEST; QUOD SI NON MODO OPPRESSUM, SED DESERTUM AUT NEGLIGENTIA ASSERVATUM FUERIT, NIHIL EST QUOD QUISSQUAM SE HABERE CERTUM, AUT A PATRE ACCEPTURUM, AUT LIBERIS ESSE RELICTURUM, ARBITRETUR. Favor ought not to be able to bend justice, power to break it, nor money to corrupt it; for not only if it be overborne, but if it be abandoned or negligently observed, no one can think that he holds anything securely, or that he will inherit anything from his father, or be able to leave anything to his children. Cicero.

JUS NECIS. In Roman law. The right of death, or of putting to death; a right which a father anciently had over his children. 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. 169.

JUS NON HABENTI, TUTE NON PARETUR. It is safe not to obey him who has no right. Hob. 1. 46.

JUS NON PATITUR UT IDEM BIS SOLVATUR. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

JUS NON SCRIPTUM. The unwritten law. 1 Bl. Comm. 64.

JUS PAPIRIANUM. The civil law of Papirius. The title of the earliest collection of Roman leges curiatae, said to have been made in the time of Tarquin, the last of the kings, by a pontifex maximus of the name of Sextus or Publius Papirius. Dig. 1. 2. 2. 2. Very few fragments of this collection now remain, and the authenticity of these has been doubted. 1 Kent, Comm. 517; Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 14, § 21.

JUS PASCENDI. (Lat.) In civil and old English law. The right of pasturing cattle. Bract. fol. 53b, 222.

JUS PATRONATUS (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. A commission from the bishop, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are required to summon a jury, composed of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bl. Comm. 246.

JUS PERSONARUM (Lat.) The right of persons. See "Jure Personarum."

JUS POSSESSIONIS (Lat.) A (or the) right of possession, or seisin. Bracton, fol. 3; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 2; Co. Litt. 266a; 3 Bl. Comm. 177, 191.

JUS POSTLIMINII.

—In Civil Law. The right of postliminy; the right or claim of a person who had been restored to the possession of a thing, or to a former condition, to be considered as though he had never been deprived of it. Dig. 49. 15. 5; 3 Bl. Comm. 107, 210.

—In International Law. The right by which property taken by an enemy, and recaptured or rescued from him by the fellow subjects or allies of the original owner, is restored to the latter upon certain terms. 1 Kent, Comm. 108.

JUS PRAESENS. In civil law. A present or vested right; a right already completely acquired. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 174, § 183.

JUS PRAETORIUM. In civil law. The discretion of the praetor, as distinct from the leges, or standing laws. 3 Bl. Comm. 49. That kind of law which the praetors introduced for the purpose of aiding, supplying, or correcting the civil law for the public benefit. Dig. 1. 1. 7. Called, also, jus honorarium (q. v.).

JUS PRECARIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS PRIVATUM. The king's private property in the soil covered by navigable water. 202 Ill. 433.

JUS PROJICIENDI (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude by which the owner of a building has a right of projecting a part of his building towards the adjoining house, without resting on the latter. It is extended merely over the ground. Dig. 50. 16. 242; Id. 8. 2. 25; Id. 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROPRIETATIS. The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessionis, or right of possession. Bracton, fol. 3. Called by Bracton "jus merum," the mere right. Id.; 2 Bl. Comm. 197; 3 Bl. Comm. 19, 176.

JUS PROTEGENDI (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 1; Id. 8. 2. 25; Id. 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PUBLICUM. The right to have the water kept free from obstructions for the purpose of navigation. 202 Ill. 433.

—In the Roman Law. Public law; that which regards the condition of the Roman state (quod ad statum rei Romanae spectat). Inst. 1. 1. 4; Dig. 1. 1. 1. 2. This definition is borrowed by Bracton, who accommodates it to the English jurisprudence. Est jus publicum quod ad statum reipublicae pertinet. Bracton, fol. 3b.

JUS PUBLICUM ET PRIVATUM QUOD EX NATURALIBUS PRAECEPTIS AUT GENTILUM AUT CIVILIBUS EST COLLECTUM; ET QUOD IN JURE SCRIPTO JUS APPELLATUR, Id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in the civil law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be "right." Co. Litt. 185.

JUS PUBLICUM PRIVATORUM PACTIS MUTARI NON POTEST. A public right cannot be changed by agreement of private parties.

JUS QUAESITUM (Lat.) A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quaesitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 323.

JUS QUIRITIMUM. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus praetorium (q. v.), or equity. Brown.

JUS QUO UNIVERSITATES UTUNTUR est idem quod habent privati. The law which governs corporations is the same which governs individuals. 16 Mass. 44.

JUS RELICTAE (Lat.) In Scotch law. The right of a wife, after her husband's death, to a third of movables if there be children, and to one-half if there be none.

JUS RERUM (Lat.) The right of things. Its principal object is to ascertain how far a person can have a permanent dominion over things, and how that dominion is acquired. See Bl. Comm.

JUS RESPICIT AEQUITATEM. Law regards equity. Co. Litt. 24b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 143; 17 Q. B. 292.

JUS SCRIPTUM.

—In Roman Law. Written law. Inst. 1. 2. 3. All law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 125, § 113.

—In English Law. Written law, or statute law, otherwise called lex scripta, as distinguished from the common law, lex non scripta. 1 Bl. Comm. 62.

Jus scriptum is used in Fleta to denote the civil law, as distinguished from the common law of England. Liber 6, c. 1, § 1.

JUS SINGULARE. In civil law. A peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 181, § 188.

JUS STAPULAE. In old European law. The law of staple; the right of staple; a right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 10.

JUS STRICTUM (Lat.) A Latin phrase, which signifies law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

JUS SUPERVENIENS AUCTORI ACCRESCIT SUCCESSORI. A right growing to a possessor accrues to a successor. Halk. Max. 76.

JUS TERTII. The right or interest of a third party.

JUS TESTAMENTORUM PERTINET ORDINARIO. Y. B. 4 Hen. VII., 13b. The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.

JUS TRIPERTITUM. In the Roman law. The law of wills. Sir Henry Maine says that it is so called because of its three-fold derivation from the imperial constitutions, the civil law, and the praetorian edicts. Anc. Law, 207.

JUS TRIPLEX EST,—PROPRIETATIS, possessionis, et possibilitatis. Right is three-fold,—of property, of possession, and of possibility.

JUS TRIUM LIBERORUM. In Roman law. A right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. 2 Kent, Comm. 85; 2 Bl. Comm. 247. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn. Adams, Rom. Ant. (Am. Ed.) 227.

JUS UTENDI (Lat.) The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 86.

JUS VENANDI ET PISCANDI. The right of hunting and fishing.

JUS VENDIT QUOD USUS APPROBAVIT. The law dispenses what use has approved. Ellesmere, Postn. 35.

JUSJURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFFERT, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked. Grotius de Jure Belli, bk. 2, c. 13, § 10.

JUSJURANDUM (Lat.) In civil law. An oath.

Juramentum is the usual law Latin word.

JUSJURANDUM INTER ALIOS FACTUM nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made in another cause ought neither to hurt nor profit. 4 Inst. 279.

JUST COMPENSATION. As used in the constitution, means a full and fair equivalent for the loss sustained by the taking for public use. It may be more, or it may be less, than the mere money value of the property actually taken. The exercise of the power being necessary for the public good, and all property being held subject to its exercise when and as the public good requires it, it would be unjust to the public that it should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the loss he sustains by the appropriation of his property for the general good. On the other hand, it would be equally unjust to the owner if he should receive less than a fair indemnity for such loss. To arrive at this fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 462.

Compensation for the actual loss in dollars and cents. 157 Ill. 56.

JUSTA CAUSA (Lat.) In the civil law. A just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 287, § 274. See Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 23, § 13.

JUSTICE. The constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 1: 2 Inst. 56. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 5.

In the most extensive sense of the word, it differs little from "virtue"; for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is that which considered positively and in itself is called "virtue," when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of "justice." But justice, being in itself a part of virtue, is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought.

Toullier exposes the want of utility and exactness in this division of distributive and commutative justice, adopted in the compendium or abridgments of the ancient doctors, and prefers the division of internal and external justice,—the first being a conformity of our will, and the latter a conformity of our actions, to the law, their union making perfect justice. Exterior justice is the object of jurisprudence; interior justice is the object of morality. Dr. Civ. tit. prel. notes 6, 7.

According to the Frederician Code (part 1, bk. 1, tit. 2, § 27), justice consists simply in letting every one enjoy the rights which he has acquired in virtue of the laws. And, as this definition includes all the other rules of right, there is properly but one single general rule of right, namely, give every one his own.

Commutative justice is that virtue whose object it is to render to every one what belongs to him, as nearly as may be, or that which governs contracts. To render commutative justice, the judge must make an equality between the parties, that no one may be a gainer by another's loss.

Distributive justice is that virtue whose object it is to distribute rewards and punishments to each one according to his merits, observing a just proportion by comparing one person or fact with another, so that neither equal persons have unequal rights, nor unequal persons things equal. Toullier's learned note, Droit Civ. tit. prel. n. 7. note.

—In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Kelham.

—In Feudal Law. Feudal jurisdiction, divided into high (alta justitia), and low (simplex, inferior justitia), the former being a jurisdiction over matters of life and limb; the latter over smaller causes. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 26; Du Cange. Sometimes high, low, and middle justice or jurisdiction were distinguished.

An assessment. Du Cange. Also, a judicial fine. Du Cange.

—In Practice. A title given in England and America to judges of common-law courts, being a translation of justitia, which was anciently applied to common-law judges, while judex was applied to ecclesiastical judges and others; e. g., judex fiscalis. Leg. Hen. I. §§ 24, 68; Anc. Inst. Eng. Index; Co. Litt. 71b.

The judges of king's bench and common pleas, and the judges of almost all the supreme courts in the United States, are properly styled "justices."

The term "justice" is also applied to the lowest judicial officers; e. g., a trial justice; a justice of the peace.

JUSTICE AYRES. In Scotch law. The circuits through the kingdom made for the distribution of justice. Ersk. Inst. 1. 3. 25.

JUSTICES COURTS. In American law. Inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal. There are courts so called in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and probably other states.

JUSTICES IN EYRE. Certain judges established, if not first appointed, A. D. 1176, 22 Hen. II.

England was divided into certain circuits, and three justices in eyre—or "justices itinerant," as they were sometimes called—were appointed to each district, and made the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years, for the purpose of trying causes. They were afterwards directed, by Magna Charta, c. 12, to be sent into every county once a year. The itinerant justices were sometimes mere justices of assize or dower, or of general gaol delivery, and the like. 3 Bl. Comm. 58; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 103, 104.

JUSTICES OF ASSIZE. These justices, or, as they are sometimes called, "justices of nisi prius," are judges of the superior English courts, who go on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as are ready for trial at the assizes. Rapalje & L.

JUSTICES OF GAOL DELIVERY. Those justices who are sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, have been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to mainprise those prisoners who were not bailable by law, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize. Brown.

JUSTICES OF LABORERS. In old English law. Justices appointed to try the cases of laboring men who would not work for the wages prescribed by the statute of laborers. 23 Edw. III.

JUSTICES OF NISI PRIUS. In English law. This title is now usually coupled with that of "justices of assize"; the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. 3 Bl. Comm. 58, 59. Formerly there was a distinction made, justices of assize having power to render judgments, but justices of nisi prius having power only to receive verdicts.

JUSTICES OF OYER AND TERMINER. Certain persons appointed by the king's commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the "assizes," heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors.

JUSTICES OF THE BENCH. The justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

JUSTICES OF THE FOREST. In old English law. Officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the "justice seat of the forest." They were also sometimes called the "justices in eyre of the forest."

JUSTICES OF THE HUNDRED. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds; they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds, and held the hundred courts.

JUSTICES OF THE JEWS. Justices appointed by Richard I. to carry into effect the laws and orders which he had made for regulating the money contracts of the Jews.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION (justiciarii pavilionis). Certain judges of court of piepoudre, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, authorized by the bishop of Winchester, at a fair held at St. Giles Hills near that city, by virtue of letters patent granted by Edw. IV. Prynne on 4 Inst. fol. 191.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. Public officers invested with judicial powers for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace, and bringing to punishment those who have violated the law. 58 N. Y. 530. They have also a limited jurisdiction in civil matters.

JUSTICES OF TRAIL BASTON. A sort of justice in eyre, with large and summary powers, appointed by Edw. I. during his absence in war. Old. Nat. Brev. fol. 52; 12 Coke, 25. For derivation, see Cowell.

JUSTICIAR, or JUSTICIER. In old English law. A judge or justice. Baker, fol. 118; Cron. Angl. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty.

The chief justiciar (capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ) was a special magistrate, who presided over the whole aula regis, who was the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 37; Spelman, 330, 331, 332; 2 Hawk. P. C. 6. The last who bore this title was Philip Basset, in the time of Hen. III.

JUSTICIARE, or JUSTITIARE (Law Lat. from justicia or justitia, justice). In old English law. To justice; to do justice or right; to compel a person to appear in court. Bracton, fol. 308b; 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law, 125, 173, 174. Hence the writ of justicies (q. v.) Justiciari, to be justiced; to have justice. St. Marl. c. 1.

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES (Lat.) In English law. Justices who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were usually called justices in eyre, to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called justicii residentes. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES (Lat.) In English law. Justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster. They were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARIUS, or JUSTITIARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A justice. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. cc. 12, 13.

JUSTICIARY. Another name for a judge. In Latin, he was called justiciarius, and in French justicier. Not used. Brac. Abr. "Courts" (A).

JUSTICIARY COURT. The chief criminal court of Scotland.

JUSTICIATUS (Law Lat. from justiciare, q. v.) In old English law. Judicature, prerogative, or jurisdiction. Blount.

JUSTICIES (from justiciare). In English law. A special writ, in the nature of a commission, empowering a sheriff to hold plea in his county court of a cause which he could not take jurisdiction of without this writ; e. g., trespass vi et armis for any sum, and all personal actions above forty shillings. 1 Burn, Just. 449. So called from the Latin word justicies, used in the writ, which runs, "praecipimus tibi quod justicies A. B." etc.; we command you to do A. B. right, etc. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, c. 13; Kitch. Cts. 74; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 117; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 3, 6.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. Justifiable homicide is the necessary killing of another in the performance of the legal duty, or the exercise of a legal right, the slayer not being at all in fault. Homicide is justifiable (1) in the execution of a capital sentence pronounced by a competent court; (2) to prevent the commission of a felony; (3) to suppress a riot; (4) to effect the arrest of a felon, or prevent his escape after arrest; (5) where one who is feloniously assaulted, and who is himself without fault, kills his assailant to save himself from death or great bodily harm then appearing reasonably imminent. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 582.

JUSTIFICATION.

—In Torts. Facts making the act charged legally justifiable.

—In Pleading. The allegation of matter of fact by the defendant, establishing his legal right to do the act complained of by the plaintiff.

Justification admits the doing of the act charged as a wrong, but alleges a right to do it on the part of the defendant, thus denying that it is a wrong. Excuse merely shows reasons why the defendant should not make good the injury which the plaintiff has suffered from some wrong done. See "Avowry."

—In Practice. The proceeding by which sureties establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

JUSTIFICATORS. A kind of compurgators, or those who, by oath, justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of wagers of law.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. In practice. The production of bail in court, who there justify themselves against the exception of the plaintiff. See "Bail."

JUSTITIA (Lat.) Justice; a jurisdiction, or the office of a judge.

JUSTITIA DEBET ESSE LIBERA, QUIA nihil iniquius venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celeris, quia dilatio est quaedam negatio. Justice ought to be unbought, because nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to halt; and quick, for delay is a kind of denial. 2 Inst. 56.

JUSTITIA EST CONSTANS ET PERPETUA voluntas ius suum cuique tribuendi. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due. Inst. 1. 1. pr.; Dig. 1. 1. 10.

JUSTITIA EST DUPLEX, VIZ., SEVERE puniens et vere praeveniens. Justice is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.

JUSTITIA EST VIRTUS EXCELLENS, et Altissimo complacens. Justice is an excellent virtue and pleasing to the Most High. 4 Inst. 58.

JUSTITIA FIRMATUR SOLIUM. By justice the throne is established. 3 Inst. 140.

JUSTITIA NEMINI NEGANDA EST. Justice is to be denied to none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 178.

JUSTITIA NON EST NEGANDA, NON differenda. Justice is not to be denied nor delayed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 76.

JUSTITIA NON NOVIT PATREM NEC matrem; solum veritatem spectat justitia. Justice knows neither father nor mother; justice looks to truth alone. 1 Bulst. 199.

JUSTITIA PIEPOUDROUS. Speedy justice. Bracton, 333b.

JUSTITIUM. In civil law. A suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time. Calv. Lex.

JUSTIZA. In old Spanish law. A supreme judge; a judicial magistrate peculiar to the kingdom of Aragon.

JUSTUM NON EST ALIQUEM ANTENATUM mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born, who all his life has been accounted legitimate. 8 Coke, 101.

JUVENES. (Lat.) (Youths or young men.) In old English law. Inferior clerks of chancery, so called. Crabb's Hist. Eng. Law, 184.

JUXTA (Lat.) According to. 1 Ld. Raym. 415. The same as secundum, in the civil law. 12 Mod. 218.

Juxta formam statuti, according to the form of the statute. Reg. Orig. 16. The established phrase by which reference to a statute was expressed in old writs and records.

Juxta tenorem sequentem, according to the tenor following. 2 Salk. 417. A phrase used in the old books, when the very words themselves referred to were set forth. Id.; 1 Ld. Raym. 415.

Juxta conventionem, according to the covenant. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 6.

Juxta ratam, at or after the rate. Dyer, 82.

JUZGADO. In Spanish law. The collective number of judges that concur in a decree, and more particularly the tribunal having a single judge.

K

K. B. An abbreviation for "king's bench" (q. v.).

KAIA (Law Lat.) A key, kay, or quay. Spelman.

KAIAGIUM (Law Lat.) Kayage or wharfage. Spelman.

KAIN. In Scotch law. A payment of fowls, etc., reserved in a lease. It is derived from canum, a word used in ancient grants to signify fowls or animals deliverable by the vassal to his superior as part of the reddendum. Ersk. Inst. 11. 10. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 236, 405.

KALENDAE. Rural chapters, or conventions of the rural deans and parochial clergy, which were formerly held on the calends of every month; hence the name. Par. Ant. 604.

KALENDAR. The original form of "calendar."

KALENDARIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A calendar; a book of accounts, memorandum book, or debt books; a book in which accounts were kept of moneys loaned out on interest. Dig. 32. 64. So called because the Romans used to let out their money, and receive the interest on the calends of each month. Calv. Lex.

KALENDS. See "Calends."

KARAXARE. (Charaxare, Law Lat.) In old records. To mark; to put down in characters or letters; to write. Spelman.

KARL (Saxon). In Saxon and old English law. A man; a serving man. Buskarl, a seaman. Huskarl, a house servant. Spelman.

KARRATA (Law Lat.) In old records. A cartload. Cowell; Blount.

KAST (Swed.) In Swedish law. Jettison; a literal translation of the Latin jactus (q. v.). Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 7, § 1.

KAST GELD (Swed.) Contribution for a jettison; average. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 8, § 1.

KE (Law Fr. that). A corruption of que. E volums ke meismes celes chartres, and we will that these same charters. Conf. Cart. 25 Edw. I.

KEELAGE. The right of demanding money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbor. The money so paid is also called "keelage."

KEELHALE, KEELHAUL, or KEELRAKE. To drag a person under the keel of a ship by means of ropes from the yard-arms, a punishment formerly practiced in the navy. Enc. Lond.

KEELS. This word is applied, in England, to vessels employed in the carriage of coals. Jacob.

KEEP. A strong tower or hold in the middle of any castle or fortification, wherein the besieged make their last efforts of defense, was formerly, in England, called a "keep"; and the inner pile within the castle of Dover, erected by King Henry II. about the year 1153, was termed the "King's Keep"; so at Windsor, etc. It seems to be something of the same nature with what is called abroad a "citadel." Jacob.

KEEP AND BEAR ARMS. The words "bear arms" as used in the constitutional provision have reference to their military use, and the wearing of them in war or in peace, 3 Heisk. 194, and were not employed to mean wearing them about the person as part of the dress. 2 Hump. 158.

The "arms" are such as are needful to, and ordinarily used by the militia; weapons ordinarily used in battle, and such as are necessary and suitable to enable a free people to resist oppression, prevent usurpation, repel invasion, etc.; and include guns of every kind, swords, bayonets, pistols, etc.; with the right to load and shoot them and use them as such things are ordinarily used in battle. 53 Ga. 474; 1 Ga. 251; 31 Ark. 458; 11 La. Ann. 633; 35 Tex. 476.

KEEP OPEN. As applied to a place of business, implies "a readiness to carry on the usual business therein." 16 Mich. 477.

KEEP THE PEACE. To refrain from any breach of the peace (q. v.).

KEEPER. One who has the care, custody or superintendence of anything. 67 Ill. 590.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST (called, also, the "chief warden of the forest"). An officer who had the principal government over all officers within the forest, and warned them to appear at the court of justice seat on a summons from the lord chief justice in eyre. Manw. For. Law, pt. 1, p. 156; Jacob.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL. A judicial officer who is, by virtue of his office, a lord and a member of the privy council. Through his hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the crown, to be sealed with the great seal, which is under his keeping. The office was consolidated with that of lord chancellor by 5 Eliz. c. 18, and the lord chancellor is appointed by delivery of the great seal, and taking oath. 4 Inst. 87; 1 Hale, P. C. 171, 174; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 47.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL. The officer through whose hands go all charters, pardons, etc., signed by the king before going to the great seal, and some which do not go there at all. He is of the privy council virtute officii. He was first called clerk of the privy seal, then guardian, then lord privy seal, which is his present designation. 12 Rich. II. c. 12; Rot. Parl. 11 Hen. IV.; St. 34 Hen. VIII. c. 4; 4 Inst. 55; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 347.

KEEPER OF THE TOUCH. The master of the assay in the English mint. 12 Hen. VI. c. 14.

KEEPING HOUSE. In English bankruptcy law. The act of a trader in withdrawing to a secret part of the house, refraining from going to business, or confining himself to the house for the purpose of avoiding his creditors. It is an act of bankruptcy. Robs. Bankr. 107 et seq.

KEEPING TERM. It was necessary for students in the Inns of Court to keep twelve terms, comprising three years, for admission to the English bar. Each term was three or four weeks, including one grand week. "Keeping the term" was to dine in the hall once in each grand week, and once in each of two half weeks. The terms so kept need not have been consecutive. Robinson, "Bench and Bar."

KENILWORTH EDICT. An edict or award between Henry III. and those who had been in arms against him; so called because made at Kenilworth Castle, in Warwickshire, A. D. 1266. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five years' rent of the estates forfeited. Hale, Com. Law, 10, note (d).

KENNING TO A TERCE. In Scotch law. The ascertainment by a sheriff of the just proportion of the husband's lands which belongs to the widow in virtue of her terce or third. An assignment of dower by sheriff. Ersk. Inst. 11. 9. 50; Bell, Dict.

KENTLAGE. In maritime law. A permanent ballast, consisting usually of pigs of iron, cast in a particular form, or other weighty material, which, on account of its superior cleanliness, and the small space occupied by it, is frequently preferred to ordinary ballast. Abb. Shipp. 5.

KENTREF. The division of a county; a hundred in Wales. See "Cantred."

KEPT MISTRESS. The expression as used in modern times, amounts to the same thing as "concubine." 124 Ill. 616.

KERNES. Idlers; vagabonds.

KEYAGE. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

KEYS.

—Of Court. In old Scotch law. Certain officers of courts. See "Claves Curiae."

—Of the isle of Man. The twenty-four chief commoners, who form the local legislature. 1 Steph. Comm. 99.

—In Old English Law. A guardian or warden.

KEYUS. A guardian, warden, or keeper. Mon. Angl. tom. 2, p. 71.

KIDDER. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price.

KIDNAPPING. The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them into another. 4 Bl. Comm. 219. Statutory definitions are somewhat different.

Actual force is not necessary; fraud or intimidation may suffice. 88 N. Y. 182. But the taking must be against the will of the person, and consent is a defense unless the person was incapable of consenting (8 N. H. 550; 25 N. Y. 272), or the consent was obtained by fraud (20 Ill. 315).

KILDERKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to eighteen gallons.

KILKETH. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry. Cowell.

KILL.

(1) A Dutch word, meaning the channel or bed of a stream. Sometimes applied to the stream itself. 1 Const. (N. Y.) 107.

(2) An Irish word, meaning church or cemetery. Enc. Lond.

KILLYTHSTALLION. A custom by which lords of manors were bound to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants' mares. Spelman.

KIN. Relation or relationship by blood or consanguinity. "The nearness of kin is computed according to the civil law." 2 Kent, Comm. 413.

KINDERGARTEN. A garden of children was devised by Froebel, a German philosopher and educator, to apply to a system which he elaborated for the instruction of children of very tender years. "Children's garden" ought to be taken in its allegorical sense. The child is a plant, the school is a garden and Froebel calls teachers "gardeners of children." 107 Cal. 190. Compayré, History of Pedagogy, § 537, Payne's translation.

KINDRED. Relations by blood.

Nature has divided the kindred of every one into three principal classes: (1) His children, and their descendants. (2) His father, mother, and other ascendants. (3) His collateral relations; which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters, and their descendants; and, secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of either sex, who have not descended from a brother or sister of the deceased. All kindred, then, are descendants, ascendants, or collaterals. A husband or wife of the deceased, therefore, is not his or her kindred. 14 Ves. 372. See Wood. Inst. 50; Ayliffe, Par. 325; Dane, Abr.; 2 Bl. Comm. 516, note; Poth. des Success. c. 1, art. 3.

It has been held to include an adopted child (4 S. W. 683), but not an illegitimate child (88 Me. 158).

KING. The chief magistrate of a kingdom, vested usually with the executive power.

The following table of the reigns of English and British kings and queens, commencing with the Conquest, is added, to assist the student in many points of chronology:

KING GELD. A royal aid; an escuage (q. v.).

KING JAMES VERSION. A version of the Bible published in London in 1611. 245 Ill. 343.

KINGDOM. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff. Inst. § 994. In some kingdoms the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

KING'S BENCH. See "Court of King's Bench."

KING'S CHAMBERS. Those portions of the seas, adjacent to the coasts of Great Britain, which are inclosed within headlands, so as to be cut off from the open sea by imaginary straight lines drawn from one promontory to another. Rapalje & L.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar, and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which is, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 27, note.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) EVIDENCE. In English law. An accomplice in a felony, who, on an implied promise of pardon if he fully and fairly discloses the truth, is admitted as evidence for crown against his accomplices. See "State's Evidence."

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) SILVER. A fine or payment due to the king for leave to agree in order to levying a fine (finalis concordia). 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 350; Dyer, 320, pl. 19; 1 Leon, 249, 250; 2 Leon, 56, 179, 233, 234; 5 Coke, 89.

KING'S WIDOW. In feudal law. A widow of the king's tenant. She was not allowed to remain without the king's consent, lest she thereby induct the king's enemy into the tenure.

KINSBOTE (from kin, and bote, a composition). In Saxon law. A composition for killing a kinsman. Anc. Inst. Eng. Index, "Bote."

KINTLIDGE. A term used by merchants and seafaring men to signify a ship's ballast. Merc. Dict.

KIRBY'S QUEST. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the English exchequer. So called from being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to Edward I.

KISSING THE BOOK. A ceremony used in taking the corporal oath; the object being, as the canonists say, to denote the assent of the witness to the oath in the form it is imposed. The witness kisses either the whole Bible, or some portion of it; or a cross, in some countries. See the ceremony explained in Oughton's Ordo, tit. lxxx.; Consilt. Courts pt. 3, sec. 1, § 3; Junkin, Oath, 173, 180; 2 Poth. Obl. (Evans Ed.) 234.

KLEPTOMANIA. A mania to steal.

KNAVE. A false, dishonest, or deceitful person. This signification of the word has arisen by a long perversion of its original meaning, which was merely "servant" or "attendant."

KNAVESHIP. In old English law. The portion of grain given to the servant in charge of a mill by tenants who were thirled to the mill.

KNIGHT. In English law. The next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are Knights of the Garter, instituted by Edward III. in 1344; next follows, a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a custom of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bl. Comm. 403. These are sometimes called "knights of the chamber," being such as are made in time of peace, and so called because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. 2 Inst. 666. Of the more recently established orders are the knights of St. Michael and St. George, established in 1818, and the knights of St. Patrick, an Irish order instituted in 1763. These last have no rank in England. Knights were called equites, because they always served on horseback; aurati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and milites, because they formed the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures.

KNIGHTENCOURT. A court which used to be held twice a year by the bishop of Hereford.

KNIGHTENGUILD, or KNIGHTENGYLD. An ancient guild or society formed by King Edgar.

KNIGHTHOOD. The character, dignity, or status of a knight.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS BANNERET. See "Knight."

KNIGHT'S FEE. The word is a compound word, and may comprehend many things. And therefore by the grant of this may pass land, meadow and pasture as parcel of it. Anciently so much of an inheritance in land as was sufficient to maintain a knight; and every man possessed of such an estate was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or pay a pecuniary sum in lieu thereof, called "escuage." In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at twenty pounds a year; but Lord Coke, in his time, states it to be an estate of six hundred and eighty acres. Co. Litt. 69, 69a.

According to Selden, however, it did not consist of land of a fixed extent or value, but it was as much as the king was pleased to grant, upon the condition of having the service of one knight. Tit. of Hon. part 2, §§ 17, 26.

KNIGHTS HOSPITALERS. An order of knights that had their name from a hospital erected at Jerusalem for the use of pilgrims coming to the Holy Land, and dedicated to St. John Baptist. They were afterwards called "Knights of St. John of Jerusalem," and their first business was to provide for and protect such pilgrims as came to that hospital. Afterwards, being driven out of the Holy Land, they settled at Rhodes, and then at Malta, and were then called "Knights of Malta." Many of them came to England in the year 1100, where, in process of time, they became of so much wealth and dignity that their superior was the first lay baron, and had a seat among the lords in parliament.

KNIGHTS OF ST. MICHAEL AND ST. GEORGE. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE BATH. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE CHAMBER. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE POST. Hireling witnesses.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE. In English law. Members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations. So called because, as the terms of the writ for election still require, it was formerly necessary that he should be a knight. 2 Steph. Comm. 362, 392.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids, until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished at the restoration, by St. 12 Car. II. c. 24, 1 Bl. Comm. 410; 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS. An order of knights so called from having their first residence in some apartments adjoining the temple at Jerusalem; and their employment was to guard the roads for the security of pilgrims in the Holy Land. They came into England in the reign of Stephen, where they increased so much in wealth and power that they were considered dangerous to the state, and the order was suppressed in 1312.

KNOCK DOWN. To accept a bid at an auction. So called from the fact that the auctioneer's acceptance of the bid is commonly signified by a stroke of his hammer. "Knocked down" is synonymous with "struck off." 7 Hill (N. Y.) 439.

KNOW ALL MEN. In conveyancing. A form of public address, of great antiquity, and with which many written instruments, such as bonds, letters of attorney, etc., still commence.

KNOWINGLY. In pleading. The word "knowingly," or "well knowing," will supply the place of a positive averment, in an indictment or declaration, that the defendant knew the facts subsequently stated. If notice or knowledge be unnecessarily stated, the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. See Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); 2 Cush. (Mass.) 577; 2 Strange, 904; 2 East, 452; 1 Chit. Pl. 367.

It implies actual personal knowledge. 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 22.

In an indictment it signifies that defendant, at the time of committing the offense charged, well knew what he was doing. 14 Fed. 127.

KNOWLEDGE. Positive assurance of a fact.

It is not synonymous with "information," 21 Pac. 39, or "notice," 1 So. 777, and differs from "belief" in degree. The act or state of knowing; clear perception of fact; that which is or may be known. Acquainted with things ascertained or ascertainable; specific information, 28 Ind. App. 367; a firm belief, 9 Gray (Mass.) 271. It implies actual notice as distinguished from constructive notice. 176 Iowa 316.

Believe; to exercise trust or confidence; to be persuaded upon evidence, arguments and deductions, or by other circumstances other than personal knowledge. 28 Ind. App. 367.

KNOWN MEN. A title formerly given to the Lollards. Cowell.

KNUCKLES. See "Brass Knuckles."

KURDI. A certain kind of shells used among many of the native tribes on the headwaters of the Niger, as currency or a circulating medium, about 2500 kurdi representing the value of a dollar. 27 Ill. 507.

KYTH. Kin or kindred.

L

L. S. An abbreviation for locus sigilli (q. v.).

When appearing in the margin of an instrument, in the place where a seal is usually found, indicate a seal. 36 Ill. 164; 155 Ill. 431. See Seal.

LA (Law Fr.) There. Dyer (Fr. Ed.) 62. La ou, there where; whereas. Kelham; Law Fr. Dict. Que la, until that. Kelham.

LA. (Fr.) The definite article feminine.

LA CONSCIENCE EST LA PLUS CHANGEANTE DES REGLES. Conscience is the most changeable of rules.

LA LEY FAVOUR LA VIE D'UN HOME. The law favors a man's life. Y. B. Hen. VI. 51.

LA LEY FAVOUR L'INHERITANCE d'un home. The law favors a man's inheritance. Y. B. Hen. VI. 51.

LA LEY VOIT PLUS TOST SUFFER UN MISCHIEFE QUE UN INCONVENIENCE. The law would rather suffer a mischief than an inconvenience. Litt. § 231.

LABEL. A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, hanging at or out of the same. This name is also given to an appending seal. See 2 Fed. 217. It is also a mark, or design, or statement placed on goods to indicate their origin or contents.

The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength; pains; toil; work to be done; work done; performance; exercise; motion with some degree of violence; childbirth; travail. 2 Ohio St. 400. Biddle's Lexicon.

LABOR A JURY. To tamper with a jury; to persuade jurymen not to appear. It seems to come from the meaning of "labor," to prosecute with energy, to urge; as, to labor a point. Dyer, 48; Hob. 294; Co. Litt. 157b; 14 & 20 Hen. VII. 30, 11. The first lawyer that came from England to practice in Boston was sent back for laboring a jury. Washb. Jud. Hist.

LABORARIIS. An ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labor, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer. Reg. Orig. 189.

LABORER. One who performs manual labor, 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 642, not requiring special knowledge or skill. 17 Ill. App. 200.

A contractor is not (6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 619), nor is an architect who merely provides plans (90 Pa. St. 47); but one who directs the work is (35 Pa. St. 42).

Clerks, bookkeepers, traveling salesmen, etc., are not. 44 Ill. App. 338, 341. See Servant.

LABORERS, STATUTES OF. St. 23 Edw. III., St. 12 Rich. II., 5 Eliz. c. 4, and St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125, making regulations as to laborers, servants, apprentices, etc.

LACHES (Fr. lacher, to slacken; to let slip). Negligent delay in enforcing a right. "Inexcusable negligence and inattention to one's interests." 16 N. J. Eq. 242.

"Laches presupposes not only lapse of time, but also the existence of circumstances which render negligence imputable, and unless reasonable diligence is shown in the prosecution of a claim to equitable relief, the court, acting on the maxim vigilantibus non dormientibus subveniunt leges, will decline to interfere." Lindl. Partn. 902.

LACTA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Defect in the weight of money; lack of weight. This word and the verb lactare are used in an assize or statute of the sixth year of King John. Spelman.

LACUS (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. A lake; a receptacle of water which is never dry. Dig. 43. 14. 1. 3.

—In Old English Law. Alloy or alloy of silver with base metal. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 6. This word is not found either in Spelman or Cowell.

LADA (from Saxon ladian, to purge).

—In Saxon Law. A purgation, or mode of trial by which one purged himself of an accusation; as by oath or ordeal. Spelman.

A watercourse; a trench or canal for draining marshy grounds. In old English, a lade or load. Spelman; Cowell.

—In Old English Law (from Saxon lathian, to assemble). A court of justice; a lade or lath. Cowell.

LADE, or LODE. The mouth of a river.

LADEN IN BULK. Freight with a cargo which is neither in casks, boxes, bales, nor cases, but lies loose in the hold, being defended from wet or moisture by a number of mats and a quantity of dunnage. Cargoes of corn, salt, etc., are usually so shipped. Wharton.

LADY. The title pertaining to a peer's wife, and (by courtesy) to the wife of a baronet or knight, and the daughter of an earl. Webster.

LADY COURT. The court of a lady of the manor.

LADY DAY. The feast of the Annunciation, March twenty-fifth.

LADY'S FRIEND. The name of a functionary in the British house of commons. When the husband sues for a divorce, or asks the passage of an act to divorce him from his wife, he is required to make a provision for her before the passage of the act. It is the duty of the lady's friend to see that such a provision is made. Macq. Husb. & Wife, 213.

LAESA MAJESTAS (Lat.) Lese majesty, or injured majesty; high treason. It is a phrase taken from the civil law, and anciently meant any offense against the king's person or dignity, defined by 25 Edw. III. c. 6. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 2; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 75; Bracton, 118. See "Crimen."

LAESIO ULTRA DIMIDIUM VEL ENORMIS. In Roman law. The injury sustained by one of the parties to an onerous contract when he had been overreached by the other to the extent of more than one-half of the value of the subject matter; e. g., when a vendor had not received half the value of property sold, or the purchaser had paid more than double value. Colq. Civ. Law, § 2094.

LAESIONE FIDEL, SUITS PRO. Suits or actions for breach of faith in civil contracts which the clergy, in the reign of Stephen, introduced into the spiritual courts, by means of which they took cognizance of many matters of contract belonging to the temporal courts under a pretext that faith solemnly plighted was of a religious nature, the breach of which belonged to the spiritual tribunals. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 74.

LAESIWERP. In old English law. A thing surrendered into the hands or power of another; a thing given or delivered. Spelman.

LAGA. The law.

LAGAN (Saxon liggan, cubare). Goods found at such a distance from shore that it was uncertain what coast they would be carried to, and therefore belonging to the finder. Bracton, 120. See "Ligan."

LAGE DAY. In old English law. A law day; a day of open court.

LAGE MAN. A juror. Cowell.

LAGU. In old English law. Law; also used to express the territory or district in which a particular law was in force, as Dena lagu, the district under Danish law, etc.

LAHLSLIT (Saxon). A breach of law. Cowell. A mulct for an offense, viz., twelve "ores." 1 Anc. Inst. Eng. 169.

LAHMAN (Saxon). A lawyer. Domesday Book, I. 189.

LAICUS. A layman.

LAIRESITE. The name of a fine imposed upon those who committed adultery or fornication. Tech. Dict.

LAITY. Those persons who do not make a part of the clergy. In the United States the division of the people into clergy and laity is not authorized by law, but is merely conventional.

LAKE. Fresh-water lakes are bodies of standing water distinguishable from rivers chiefly by the fact that they have no current. The fact that there is a current from a higher to a lower level does not make that a river which would otherwise be a lake, nor does a lake lose its distinctive character because there is a current in it for a certain distance tending towards a river which forms its outlet. Gould Waters, § 79.

LAMBETH DEGREE. A degree given by archbishop of Canterbury. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 381, note. Although he can confer all degrees given by the two universities, the graduates have many privileges not shared by the recipients of his degrees.

LAME DUCK. A lame duck is one who is unable to meet his contracts in the exchange,—an insolvent. Biddle, Br. 71.

The expression "lame duck" would be actionable if applied to a person on the stock exchange, because there it has acquired a particular meaning. 27 L. J. Ex. 412; 3 H. & N. 376; 31 L. T. O. S. 217.

LAMMAS LANDS. Lands over which there is a right of pasturage by persons other than the owner from about Lammas, or reaping time, until sowing time. Whar-ton.

LANCETI. In feudal law. Vassals who were obliged to work for their lord one day in the week, from Michaelmas to autumn, either with fork, spade, or flail, at the lord's option. Spelman.

LAND, or LANDS. A term comprehending any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as, meadows, pastures, woods, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. 170 Ill. 256.

An estate of frank tenement at the least. Shep. Touch. 92.

In the technical sense, freeholds are not included within the word "lands." 3 Madd. 535. The term terra in Latin was used to denote land, from terendo, quia vomere teritur (because it is broken by the plough), and, accordingly, in fines and recoveries, land, i. e., terra, has been held to mean arable land. Salk. 256; Cowp. 346; Co. Litt. 4a; 11 Coke, 55a. But see Cro. Eliz. 476; 4 Bing. 90; Burton, Real Prop. 196. See, also, 2 P. Wms. 458, note; 5 Ves. 476; 20 Viner, Abr. 203.

"Land" comprehendeth in its legal significance any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever. It includes, also, all castles, houses, or other buildings, for they consist of two things,—land, which is the foundation, and structures thereon. Land hath also, in its legal signification, an indefinite extent upwards, as well as downwards." 1 Inst. 4a; 2 P. Wms. 458, note; 5 Ves. 476; 20 Viner, Ired. L. (N. C.) 280; 49 Am. Dec. 379.

"Lands" is not as broad a term as "tenements" or "hereditaments," but has been sometimes used as including these. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 9. It does not include incorporeal hereditaments issuing out of lands. 5 Denio (N. Y.) 324.

LAND CEAP, or LAND CHEAP (land, and Saxon ceapan, to buy). A fine payable in money or cattle, upon the alienation of land, within certain manors and liberties. Cowell.

LAND CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION acts. Certain English statutes (8 Vict. C. 8, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18), to provide legislative clauses in a convenient form for incorporation by reference in future special acts of parliament for taking lands, with or without the consent of their owners, for the promotion of railways, and other public undertakings. Mozley & W.

LAND COURT. The name of a court in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, having sole jurisdiction in St. Louis county in suits respecting lands, and in actions of ejectment, dower, partition.

LAND GABEL (or GABLE). A tax or rent issuing out of land. Blount. A ground rent. Cowell.

LAND-REEVE. A person whose business it is to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and watercourses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others, and to report the same to the manager or land steward. Enc. Lond.

LAND TAX. A tax on beneficial proprietor of land. So far as a tenant is beneficial proprietor, and no farther, does it rest on him. It has superseded all other methods of taxation in Great Britain. Sugd. Vend. 268. It was first imposed in 1693, a new valuation of the lands in the kingdom having been made in 1692, which has not since been changed. In 1798 it was made perpetual, at a rate of four shillings in a pound of valued rent. See Enc. Brit. "Taxation"; Wharton.

LAND TENANT (commonly called terre tenant). He who actually possesses the land.

LAND WAITER. In English law. An officer of the custom house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof. In some ports they also execute the office of a coast waiter. They are likewise occasionally styled "searchers," and are to attend and join with the patent searchers in the execution of all cockets for the shipping of goods to be exported to foreign parts; and, in cases where drawbacks on bounties are to be paid to the merchant on the exportation of any goods, they, as well as the patent searchers, are to certify the shipping thereof on the debentures. Enc. Lond.

LANDATOR. A witness to character.

LANDBOC (Saxon, from land, and boe, a writing). In Saxon law. A charter or deed by which lands or tenements were given or held. Spelman; Cowell; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10; 1 Spence, Ch. 22.

LANDEFRICUS. A landlord.

LANDEGANDMAN (Saxon.) In old English law. A kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor. Spelman.

LANDIMER (Scotch; Lat. agrimensor). In old Scotch law. A measurer of land. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Particata."

LANDIRECTA. In Saxon law. Services and duties laid upon all that held land, including the three obligations called "trinoda necessitas" (q. v.); quasi land rights. Cowell.

LANDLORD.

—In Old Law. The lord or proprietor of land, who, under the feudal system, retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud, or fee of the land; while his grantee, who had only the possession and use of the land, was styled the "feudatory," or "vassal," which was only another name for the tenant or holder of it.

—In Modern Law. The lessor of lands or tenements.

Not the lord of the soil, but the person between whom and the tenant the relation of landlord and tenant exists. 2 Hurlst. & N. 450.

LANDMARK. A monument set up in order to ascertain the boundaries between two contiguous estates. For removing a landmark an action lies. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 787. See "Monument."

LANDS, TENEMENTS, AND HEREDITAMENTS. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as "goods and chattels" is of personalty. Williams, Real Prop. 5.

LANDSLAGH. In Swedish law. A body of common law, compiled about the thirteenth century, out of the particular customs of every province; being analogous to the common law of England. 1 Bl. Comm. 66.

LANDWARD. (Scotch). Rural.

LANGUAGE. The medium for the communication of perceptions and ideas.

Spoken language is that wherein articulate sounds are used.

Written language is that wherein written characters are used, and especially the system of characters called "letters and figures."

LANGUIDUS (Lat.) In practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he has taken by virtue of process, is so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

LANGUOR. (Law Lat.) In old English practice. Sickness; a confirmed and lingering sickness, as distinguished from a transient indisposition. Bract. fol. 340, 344b, 352b, 357b. Skene defines it to be "a vehement sickness of body or of mind." Reg. Maj. lib. 1, c. 8. If it continued over a year, it was called morbus soticus. Bract. fol. 344b.

LANIS DE CRESCENTIA WALLIAE traducendis absque custuma, etc. An ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales. Reg. Orig. 279.

LANZAS. In Spanish law. A certain contribution in money paid by the grandees and other high officers in lieu of the soldiers they ought to furnish government in time of war.

LAPIS MARMORIUS. A marble stone about twelve feet long and three feet broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster Hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which the English sovereigns anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times the lord chancellor. Rapalje & L.

LAPSE. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees, to slip; to deviate from the proper path. Webster. See "Lapsed Devise"; "Lapsed Legacy."

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by forfeiture, of a right to present or collate to a vacant benefice from a person vested with such right to another, in consequence of some act of negligence by the former. Ayliffe, Par. 331.

Upon six months' neglect of the patron, the right lapses to the bishop; upon six months' neglect of bishop, to archbishop; upon his six months' neglect, to king. The day on which the vacancy occurs is not counted, and the six months are calculated as a half-year. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law 355.

LAPSE PATENT. A patent issued to petitioner for land; a patent for which land to another party has lapsed through neglect of patentee. The lapse patent relates to date of original patent, and makes void all mesne conveyances. 1 Wash. (Va.) 39, 40.

LAPSED DEVISE. A devise which has lapsed, or does not take effect because of the death of devisee before testator.

LAPSED LEGACY. A legacy which, on account of the death of the legatee before the period arrives for the payment of the legacy, lapses or deviates from the course prescribed by the testator, and falls into the residuum. 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 1036.

A distinction exists between a lapsed devise and a lapsed legacy. A legacy which lapses does not fall into the residue unless so provided by the will, but descends to the heir at law; on the contrary, personal property passes by the residuary clause where it is not otherwise disposed of. 2 Bouv. Inst. 2154-2156. See "Lapsed Devise."

LARCENY. In criminal law. The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away by one person of the mere personal goods of another from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to his, the taker's, use, and make them his property without the consent of the owner. 2 East, P. C. 553; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 700.

In a recent English case, Mr. Baron Parke said that this definition, which was the most complete of any, was defective, in not stating what is the meaning of the word "felonious," which, he said, "may be explained to mean that there is no color of right or excuse for the act; and the 'intent' must be to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently, of his property." 2 Car. & K. 942; 1 Den. C. C. 370; Templ. & M. C. C. 40. It is safer to be guided by the cases than by the definitions given by text writers.

Larceny is of two kinds, namely, simple larceny, and compound larceny.

(1) Simple larceny at common law is the taking and carrying away of the mere personal goods of another of any value, from any place, with a felonious intent to steal the same. This definition includes the following elements:

(a) The subject of the offense must be the mere personal goods of another, though, at common law, other things are made the subject of larceny by statute.

Therefore—

(i) It must be personal, as distinguished from real property.

(ii) It must be something which the law recognizes as property, and the subject of ownership.

(iii) It must be of some value; but the least value to the owner is sufficient.

(iv) It must be the property of another; but a special property in another is sufficient, even as against the general owner; and mere possession is enough as against others than the owner.

(b) The goods must be taken, and the taking must be under such circumstances as to amount technically to a trespass.

(c) There must be some asportation or carrying away of the goods.

(d) Both the taking and the carrying away must be with a felonious intent,—an intent to steal,—existing at the time.

Grand and petit larceny. By statute in some jurisdictions, larceny has been divided, according to the value of the property or other circumstances, into grand larceny and petit larceny.

(2) Compound larcenies are larcenies committed under certain aggravating circumstances. Thus:

(a) At common law, robbery, which is larceny from the person or in the presence of another by violence, or by putting him in fear, is a compound larceny.

(b) By statute in most jurisdictions, it is a compound larceny, punished more severely than simple larceny, to steal (1) from the person of another, or (2) from a dwelling house, or certain other places specified in the statute. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 649.

LARCENY BY BAILEE. A statutory offense existing in one or two states, consisting of the fraudulent conversion of property by a bailee thereof. The offense is covered by the ordinary statutes against embezzlement.

LARGE (Law Fr.) Broad; the opposite of estreite, strait or strict. Pures et larges. Britt. c. 34.

LARGURE. (Largeur. Law Fr. from large.) Breadth. According to the breadth and length. Britt. c. 63, c. 103.

LARGUS. (Lat.) Large; broad; comprehensive. Bract, fol. 37b.

LARON, or LARUN. In old English law. A thief; thieves. Petits larons, petty thieves. Britt. c. 29.

LAS PARTIDAS. The name of a code of Spanish law. It is sometimes called las siete partidas, or the seven parts, from the number of its principal divisions. It is a compilation from the civil law, the customary law of Spain, and the canon law. It was compiled by four Spanish juriconsults, under the eye of Alphonso X., A. D. 1250, and published in Castille in 1263, but first promulgated as law by Alphonso XI., A. D. 1348. The maritime law contained in it is given in volume 6, Pardessus; Col. Mar. Law. He follows the edition of 1807, at Paris. It has been translated into English. Such of its provisions as are applicable are in force in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. 1 Bl. Comm. 66; 1 White, New Recop. 354.

LASCIVIOUS CARRIAGE. In Connecticut. A term including those wanton acts between persons of different sexes, who are not married to each other, that flow from the exercise of lustful passions, and which are not otherwise punished as crimes against chastity and public decency. 2 Swift. Dig. 343; 2 Swift, Syst. 331.

Lascivious carriage may consist not only in mutual acts of wanton and indecent familiarity between persons of different sexes, but in wanton and indecent actions against the will and without the consent of one of them; as, if a man should forcibly attempt to pull up the clothes of a woman. 5 Day (Conn.) 81.

LASHITE, or LASHLITE. A kind of forfeiture during the government of the Danes in England. Enc. Lond.

LAST (Law Lat. lastus, lestus). In English law. A burden; a weight or measure of various commodities, as of pitch, hides, fish, corn, wool, leather, etc. Cowell.

LAST ANTECEDENT. The last antecedent is the last word which can be made an antecedent, without impairing the meaning of a sentence. 190 Mich. 313.

LAST COURT. A court held by the twenty-four jurats in the marshes of Kent, and summoned by the bailiffs, whereby orders were made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, etc., for the preservation of the said marshes. Enc. Lond.

LAST HEIR. He to whom the lands come if they escheat for want of lawful heirs, viz., sometimes the lord of whom the lands are held, sometimes the king. Bracton, lib. 5, c. 17.

LAST RESORT. A court from which there is no appeal is called the "court of last resort."

LAST SICKNESS. That of which a person dies. The last sickness includes the whole of the sickness of which the person dies, no matter of how long duration. 8 Me. 167.

The expenses of this sickness are generally entitled to a preference in payment of debts of an insolvent estate. Civ. Code La. art. 3166.

To prevent impositions, the statute of frauds requires that nuncupative wills shall be made during the testator's last sickness. Roberts, Frauds, 556; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502.

LAST WILL (Lat. ultima voluntas). A disposition of real estate, to take effect after death.

It is strictly distinguishable from "testament," which is applied to personal estate (1 Williams, Ex'rs, 6, note [b] Am. Notes); but the words are generally used together, "last will and testament," in a will, whether real or personal estate is to be disposed of.

Those words do not, of themselves, revoke a former will, 9 Moo. P. C. 131; 5 D. G. M. & G. 704; 23 L. J. Ch. 838; but may be confirmatory proof of an intention to revoke. 16 Bea. 173; 22 L. J. ch. 185; 1 W. R. 3. See "Will."

LASTAGE, or LESTAGE. A custom exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things bought whither one will. But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Also custom paid for wares sold by the last, as herrings, pitch, etc.

LATA CULPA DOLO AEQUIPARATUR. Gross negligence is equal to fraud.

LATE. Recently; last. 7 Cal. 226. Defunct. 17 Ala. 190.

LATELY. This word has been held to have "a very large retrospect, as we say 'lately deceased' of one dead ten or twenty years." 2 Show. 294.

LATENS (Lat. from latere, to lie hid). Latent; hidden; not apparent.

LATENT AMBIGUITY. One which does not appear from the words of an instrument, but only from the application of the words to the subject matter. See 117 U. S. 221.

A latent ambiguity may arise from the fact that there are two or more persons or objects to which a perfect description will apply. Thus, where lands were conveyed to one by name, and it appeared that there were two of that name, it was held a latent ambiguity. 131 Mass. 179. Or it may arise from a misdescription not apparent on the face of the instrument, whereby two persons or objects or none at all are described. 117 U. S. 221.

A mere mistake in a description, whereby it is made to apply to something other than was intended, is not an ambiguity. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 201.

LATENT DEED. One kept for twenty years or more in a man's scrutoire or strong box, accompanied by no distinctive possession. 7 N. J. Law, 177.

LATENT DEFECT. One not discoverable by external examination. 13 N. Y. 9.

The term is used both in personal injury law, and in the law of sales.

—In Personal Injury Law. An employee (108 Ind. 286) and a fortiori a third person is not bound to take notice of latent defects, while the owner of the defective appliance is bound to use due care and diligence to discover the same, if it can be done by any appropriate test (Wood, Mast. & S. § 368); while a carrier is held to every test dictated by the utmost possible care (119 Mass. 412).

—In the Law of Sales. A seller is bound to disclose latent defects known to him, but does not impliedly warrant against latent defects except under peculiar circumstances, as where the goods are of his own manufacture. 21 N. Y. 552.

LATERAL SUPPORT. The support of land by the adjoining land; so called in contradistinction from "subjacent support," that of the soil beneath. The right to such lateral support exists as a natural incident of real property (25 N. J. Law, 356; 122 Mass. 199); and an adjoining landowner who, by excavation on his own land, removes such lateral support, is liable in damages (135 Mass. 150; 57 Minn. 493).

LATERARE (Law Lat. from latus, a side). In old English law. To lie sideways; literally, to side; the opposite of captare, to head or abut. Cowell. See "Captare."

LATHE, or LATH (Law Lat. laestrum or leda). A division of certain counties in England, intermediate between a county or shire and a hundred, sometimes containing three or four hundreds, as in Kent and Sussex. Cowell. But in Sussex the word used for this division is "rape." 1 Bl. Comm. 116. There was formerly a lathe reeve or bailiff in each lathe. Id. This division into lathes continues to the present day. See 12 East, 244. In Ireland, the lathe was intermediate between the tything and the hundred. Spencer, Ireland. See Termes de la Ley.

LATHE REEVE, LATHREVE, or LEIDGREVE (Saxon.) An officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a lathe. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

LATIDEMEO. In Spanish law. The tax paid by the possessor of land held by quit rent or emphyteusis to the owner of the estate, when the tenant alienates his right in the property.

LATIFUNDIUM (Lat.) In civil law. Great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. Ainsworth. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundus), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. p. 17.

LATIFUNDUS (Lat. late possidens). A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones. Du Cange.

LATIN. An important language in the law; being the language not only of the civil and canon law, but of the early European codes, of much of the ancient common law of England and Scotland, and of a large proportion of the public, civil and maritime law of later times. The Code and Institutes exhibit the language in the periods of its decline and decay, and the Latin of most of the subsequent law belongs to that peculiar and technical dialect known as low Latin, or law Latin. The value of the Latin has always consisted in its peculiar expressiveness as a language of law terms, in its superior conciseness which has made it the appropriate language of law maxims, and in its almost unlimited capacity of condensation by means of abbreviations and contractions, many of which are retained in popular use at the present day.

LATINI JUNIANI (Lat.) In Roman law. A class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romani" and "Dediticii." Slaves under thirty years of age at the date of their manumission, or manumitted otherwise than by vindicta, census, or testamentum, or not the quiritary property of their manumissors at the time of manumission, were called "Latini." By reason of one or other of these three defects, they remained slaves by strict law even after their manumission, but were protected in their liberties first by equity, and eventually by the Lex Junia Norbana, A. D. 19, from which law they took the name of "Juniani" in addition to that of "Latini." Brown.

LATITAT (Lat. he lies hid.) In English law. The name of a writ calling a defendant to answer to a personal action in the king's bench. It derives its name from a supposition that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex (in which the said court is holden) to be taken there, but is gone into some other county, and therefore requiring the sheriff to apprehend him in such other county. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 78.

LATITATIO. In the civil law and old English practice. A lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person. Dig. 42. 4. 7. 5; Bracton, fol. 126.

LATRO. In the civil and old English law. A robber. Dig. 50. 16. 118; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1. A thief.

LATROCINATION. The act of robbing; a depredation.

LATROCINIUM. Larceny or theft. Reg. Orig. 268b.

A thing stolen. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 7.

The liberty of infangthef, or privilege of judging and executing thieves.

LATROCINY. Larceny.

LAUDARE.

—In Civil Law. To name; to cite or quote; to show one's title or authority. Calv. Lex.

—In Feudal Law. To determine or pass upon judicially. Feud. lib. 1, tit. 22. Laudamentum, the finding or award of a jury. 2 Bl. Comm. 285.

LAUDATIO. In Roman law. Testimony adduced in favor of the character of an accused person. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13.

LAUDATOR. A witness to the good character of an accused person, LAUDEMIO, or LAUDATIOREM (Lat. a laudando domino). A fiftieth part of the purchase money, or (if no sale) of the value of the estate paid to the landlord (dominus) by a new emphyteuta on his succession to the estate, not as heir, but as singular successor. Voet. Com. ad Pand. lib. 6, tit. 3, §§ 26-35; Mackeld. Civ. Law, 297.

—In Old English Law. The tenant paid a laudemium or acknowledgment money to new landlord on the death of the old. See Blount, "Acknowledgment Money."

LAUDUM. An arbitrament or award. Rappalje & L.

—In Old Scotch Law. Sentence or judgment; dome or doom. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 8.

LAUGEMANNI (Law Lat.) Lords of manors, according to Coke's definition, who writes the word launemanni. Domesday Book; Co. Litt. 5a.

LAUGHE. Frank pledge. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 17.

LAUGHLESMAN (Saxon). In old English law. An outlaw. Bracton, fol. 125.

LAUNCEGAY. A kind of offensive weapon, now disused, and prohibited by 7 Rich. II. c. 13.

LAUNCH. The movement by which a ship or boat descends from the shore into the water when she is first built, or afterwards.

A large, long, low, flat-bottomed boat. Mar. Dict. The long-boat of a ship; a small vessel employed to carry the cargo of a large one to and from the shore.

LAUS DEO (Lat.) Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange. West, Symb. pt. 1, lib. 2, § 660.

LAVOR NUEVA (Spanish). In Spanish law. A new work. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, lib. 1.

LAW. That which is established; a rule or method of action.

A distinction is to be observed in the outset between the abstract and the concrete meaning of the word. In the broadest sense which it bears when used in the abstract law, it is the science which treats of the theory of government.

In a stricter sense, but still in the abstract, it is the aggregate of those rules and principles enforced and sanctioned by the governing power in a community, and according to which it regulates, limits, and protects the conduct of members of the community. In the abstract sense, it includes the decisions of courts. 164 Wis. 228.

Used in the concrete, law is a rule of action prescribed by a superior. 1 Bl. Comm. 38.

In a stricter concrete sense, it is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Steph. Comm. 25.

In the strictest sense, it is a statute; a rule prescribed by the legislative power. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 18.

Used without an article prefixed, the abstract sense is generally intended; with an article, the sense is usually concrete.

Law is used to denote the system of the common law, as distinguished from equity. See "Equity."

It is also used in contradistinction to "fact." See "In Law."

Arbitrary law. A law or provision of law so far removed from considerations of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall not be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary.

The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law,—one that is in violation of justice.

Irrevocable laws. All laws which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided are, in theory, perpetual; but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind their posterity by an irrevocable law. See this subject discussed by Benth. Works, vol. 2, pp. 402-407; and see Dwarr. St. 479.

Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single state, nation, or community. See "Municipal Law."

Penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation.

Positive law is the system naturally established by a community, in distinction from "natural law."

A private law is one which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large.

A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past.

A public law is one which affects the public, either generally or in some classes.

A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past, or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called "retroactive law." In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights, or impair the obligation of contracts, it is in so far void. 3 Dall. (Pa.) 391. But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid. 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 102, 103; 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 72; 2 Pet. (U. S.)

380, 627; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420. See "Ex Post Facto."

For matters peculiar to the following classes of laws, see their several titles: "Adjective Law"; "Brehon Law"; "Bretts and Scotts, Laws of the"; "Canon Law"; "Civil Law"; "Code"; "Colonial Laws"; "Commercial Law"; "Consuetudinary Law"; "Corn Laws"; "Criminal Law"; "Crown Law"; "Ecclesiastical Law"; "Ex Post Facto Law"; "Fecial Law"; "Feudal Law"; "Foreign Law"; "Game Laws"; "Hindu Law"; "Insolvency"; "Laws of Oleron"; "Military Laws"; "Retrospective Law"; "Rhodian Laws."

LAW ALWAYS CONSTRUETH THINGS to the best. Wingate, Max. p. 720, max. 193.

LAW BORGH. In old Scotch law. A pledge or surety for appearance.

LAW BURROWS. In Scotch law. Security for the peaceful behavior of a party; security to keep the peace. This process was much resorted to by the government of Charles II. for political purposes.

LAW CHARGES. In Louisiana. Costs.

LAW COURT OF APPEALS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

LAW DAY. The day fixed in a mortgage or defeasible deed for the payment of the debt secured. 24 Ala. (N. S.) 149; 10 Conn. 280.

The phrase formerly marked the time when all legal rights were lost by the mortgagor's default. There is now no such time, until foreclosure; and the term serves only to engender confusion. 21 N. Y. 343, 345, 365, 367.

—In Old English Law. Law day or lage day denoted a day of open court; especially the more solemn courts of a county or hundred. The court leet, or view of frankpledge.

LAW FRENCH. From the time of William the Norman down to that of Edward III., all public proceedings and documents in England, including the records of the courts, the arguments of counsel, and the decisions of the judges, were in the language of the Norman French. After Latin and English were substituted in the records and proceedings, however, the cases and decisions continued until the close of the seventeenth century to be reported in French; the first reports published in England being those of Style, in 1658. The statutes of the reign of Henry III., and some of the subsequent reigns, are partly or wholly in this language; but English was substituted in the reign of Henry VII. Of the law treatises in French, the Mirroure and Britton, and the works of Littleton, may be mentioned.

LAW LATIN. Edward III. substituted the Latin language for the Norman French in the records, and the English in other proceedings. The Latin was used by virtue of its being the language of scholars of all European nations; but, in order to adapt it to the purposes of the profession, the English terms of legal art in most frequent use were Latinized by the simple addition of a Latin termination, and the diverse vocabulary thus collected was arranged in English idioms. But this barbarous dialect commended itself by a semblance of scholarly sound, and more by the precision which attaches to technical terms that are never used in popular language. During the time of Cromwell, English was used; but with the restoration Latin was reinstated, and held its place till 4 Geo. II. c. 26, when it was enacted that, since the common people ought to know what was done for and against them, proceedings should be in English. It was found, however, that certain technical terms had become so fixed that, by a subsequent act, such words were allowed to continue in use. 6 Geo. II. c. 14. Hence a large class of Latin words are still in use of which nisi prius, habes corpus, lis pendens, are examples. Consult 3 Bl. Comm. 318-323, and as to particular words and phrases, Termes de la Ley; Taylor; Law French & Law Latin Dict.; Kelham; Du Cange.

LAW LIST. An annual English publication of a quasi official character, comprising various statistics of interest in connection with the legal profession. It includes (among other information) the following matters: A list of judges, queen's counsel, and serjeants at law; the judges of the county courts; benchers of the inns of court; barristers, in alphabetical order; the names of counsel practicing in the several circuits of England and Wales; London attorneys; county attorneys; officers of the courts of chancery and common law; the magistrates and law officers of the city of London; the metropolitan magistrates and police; recorders; county court officers and circuits; lord lieutenants and sheriffs; colonial judges and officers; public notaries. Mozley & W.

LAW LORDS. Peers in the British parliament who have held high judicial office, or have been distinguished in the legal profession. Mozley & W.

LAW MARTIAL. The military law or articles of war.

LAW MERCHANT.

—In England. The general body of commercial usages in matters relative to commerce. Blackstone calls it the "custom of merchants," and ranks it under the head of the particular customs of England, which go to make up the great body of the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 75. Since, however, its character is not local, nor its obligation confined to a particular district, it cannot with propriety be considered as a "custom" in the technical sense. 1 Steph. Comm. 54. It is a system of law which does not rest exclusively on the positive institutions and local customs of any particular country, but consists of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice have established, to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world. 3 Kent, Comm. 2.

—In the United States. The law merchant of England, consisting of the body of usages, the decisions of the English courts construing the same, and statutes confirming and modifying the same prior to the Declaration of Independence, are a part of the common law of the United States. 19 Ill. 598; 1 Morris (Iowa) 128.

LAW OF ARMS. That law which gives precepts and rules concerning war, how to make and observe leagues and truce, to punish offenders in the camp, and such like. Cowell; Blount. Now more commonly called the "law of war."

LAW OF CITATIONS. In Roman law. An act of Valentinian, passed A. D. 426, providing that the writings of only five jurists, viz., Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestinus, should be quoted as authorities. The majority was binding on the judge. If they were equally divided, the opinion of Papinian was to prevail, and in such a case, if Papinian was silent upon the matter, then the judge was free to follow his own view of the matter. Brown.

LAW OF MARQUE. Law authorizing reprisal against the goods of another, where justice cannot be had in ordinary course. See "Letter of Marque and Reprisal."

LAW OF NATIONS. See "International Law."

LAW OF NATURE. That law which God, the sovereign of the universe, has prescribed to all men, not by any formal promulgation, but by the internal dictate of reason alone. It is discovered by a just consideration of the agreeableness or disagreeableness of human actions to the nature of man, and it comprehends all the duties which we owe either to the Supreme Being, to ourselves, or to our neighbors; as, reverence to God, self-defense, temperance, honor to our parents, benevolence to all, a strict adherence to our engagements, gratitude, and the like. Ersk. Prac. Scotch Law, 1. 1. 1. See Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 2, p. 2; Cicero, de Leg. lib. 1.

The primitive laws of nature may be reduced to six, namely, comparative sagacity, or reason; self-love; the attraction of the sexes to each other; the tenderness of parents towards their children; the religious sentiment; sociability. See "Jus Naturale."

LAW OF THE FLAG. The flag is used, in the prosecution of commerce upon the high seas, as a symbol of nationality. The nationality of a ship is determined by the flag which it carries. A ship, navigating under the flag and pass of a foreign country, is to be considered as bearing the national character of the country under whose flag she sails. Under what is called, in international law, "the law of the flag," a ship-owner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the ship-master, that he intends the law of that flag to regulate those contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him or his agent at all. 185 Ill. 144.

LAW OF THE LAND. The law of the land has been defined to be the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities, under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything, which may pass under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land. 207 Ill. 368.

Lord Coke says that the words "by the law of the land," mean by the course and process of law by indictment or presentment of good and lawful men, where such deeds be done in due manner or by original writ of the common law. 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 199.

Due process of law (q. v.). 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 50; 6 Pa. St. 86; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140.

LAW OF THE ROAD. The rules of law regulating the conduct of persons on highways to avoid collision with or other injury to other persons thereon. It cannot be stated in rules, but is a general duty to observe in speed, vigilance, etc., what due and ordinary care may require under the circumstances of the particular case. An illustration is that meeting vehicles should each turn to the right of the center of the road (28 Mich. 32; 195 Pa. St. 190), though nonobservance may be justified by circumstances (9 App. Div. [N. Y.] 68), and the rule does not apply as between vehicles and pedestrians (147 Mo. 679).

LAW OF THE STAPLE. See "Law Merchant."

LAW SPIRITUAL. The ecclesiastical law, or law Christian. Co. Litt. 344.

LAW WORTHY. Being entitled to, or having the benefit and protection of, the law.

LAWFUL. Legal; that which is not contrary to law; that which is sanctioned or permitted by law; that which is in accordance with law. 101 Ill. 215. The terms "lawful," "unlawful," and "illegal" are used with reference to that which is in its substance sanctioned or prohibited by the law. The term "legal" is occasionally used with reference to matters of form alone. Thus, an oral agreement to convey land, though void by law, is not properly to be said to be unlawful, because there is no violation of law in making or in performing such an agreement; but it is said to be not legal, or not in lawful form, because the law will not enforce it, for want of that written evidence required in such cases.

LAWFUL AGE. Majority; usually the age of twenty-one years.

LAWFUL MAN. A freeman, unattainted, and capable of bearing oath; a legalis homo.

LAWFUL MONEY. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts; e. g., gold and silver coined at the mint. 2 Salk. 446; 5 Mod. 7; 3 Ind. 358; 2 How. (U. S.) 244; 3 How. (U. S.) 717; 16 Ark. 83. See 1 Hempst. (U. S.) 236.

LAWING OF DOGS. Mutilating the forefeet of mastiffs, to prevent them from running after deer. 3 Bl. Comm. 71.

LAWLESS COURT. An ancient local English court, said to have been held in Essex once a year, at cock crowing, without a light or pen and ink, and conducted in a whisper.

LAWLESS MAN. An outlaw.

LAW OF OLERON. A maritime code said to have been drawn up by Richard I. at the Isle of Oleron, whence its name. See Fed. Cas. vol. 30, Appendix, for a copy.

LAWSUIT. An action at law, or litigation.

LAWYER. One skilled in the law.

A popular term for a person engaged in the practice of law, See "Attorney."

LAY.

—In English Law. That which relates to persons or things not ecclesiastical. In the United States, the people are not by law divided, as in England, into ecclesiastical and lay. The law makes no distinction between them.

—In Pleading. To state or to allege. The place from whence a jury are to be summoned is called the "venue," and the allegation in the declaration of the place where the jury is to be summoned is, in technical language, said to "lay the venue." 3 Steph. Comm. 574; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2826. To state at the conclusion of a declaration the amount of damages which the plaintiff claims is to "lay damages."

LAY CORPORATION. A corporation composed of lay persons, or for lay purposes. Angell & A. Corp. 28-30; 1 Bl. Comm. 470. According to the line of demarcation drawn by Blackstone, all corporations other than ecclesiastic are called "lay corporations." They are created for a variety of temporal or secular purposes, and are according to their object either eleemosynary or civil. 1 Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 85.

LAY DAMAGES. See "Lay."

LAY DAYS. In maritime law. The time allowed to the master of a vessel for loading and unloading the same. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are to be computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge. 10 Mees. & W. 331. See 3 Esp. 121. See "Demurrage."

LAY FEE. A fee held by ordinary feudal tenure, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical tenure of frankalmoign, by which an ecclesiastical corporation held of donor. The tenure of frankalmoign is reserved by St. 12 Car. II., which abolished military tenures. 1 Bl. Comm. 101.

LAY IMPROPRIATOR. Lay rector, to whom the greater tithes are reserved, the lesser going to the vicar. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 75, 76.

LAY OUT. This has always been regarded as an appropriate expression for the location and establishment of a highway. 133 Mass. 329.

LAY PEOPLE. Jurymen. Finch, Law, 381.

LAYING THE VENUE. See "Lay."

LAYMAN. In ecclesiastical law. One who is not an ecclesiastic nor a clergyman.

LAZARET, or LAZARETTO. A place, selected by public authority, where vessels coming from infected or unhealthy countries are required to perform quarantine.

LE CONGRES. A species of proof on charges of impotency in France, coitus coram testibus. Abolished A. D. 1677. Ralphe & L.

LE CONTRAT FAIT LA LOI. The contract makes the law.

LE GUIDON (or LE GUIDON DE LA MER). The title of a celebrated French treatise on the law of insurance, being the earliest work extant on that subject. It was prepared for the use of the merchants of Rouen at least as early as the sixteenth century, but its author's name has not been preserved. It was published by Cleirac in 1671, in his collection entitled Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer. 3 Kent, Comm. 346; 1 Buer, Ins. Introd. Disc. Lect. ii.

LE LEY DE DIEU ET LE LEY DE TERRE sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one, and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land. Keilw. 191.

LE LEY EST LE PLUS HAUT ENHERITANCE que le roy ad, car par le ley, li mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fult, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and, if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

LE ROI LE VEUT. The king assents. This is the formula used in England, and formerly in France, when the king approved of a bill passed by the legislature. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52.

LE ROI S'AVISERA. The king will consider of it. This phrase is used by the English monarch when he gives his dissent to an act passed by the lords and commons. The same formula was used by the late king of the French for the same purpose. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52. See "Veto."

LE ROI VEUT EN DELIBERER. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the late French king used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 42.

LE ROY (or LA REINE) REMERCIE SES LOYAL SUJETS, accepte leur benevolence, et aussi le veut (Law Fr.) The king (or queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it to be so. The form of the royal assent to a bill of declaring the use of a fine; i. e., specifying to whose use the fine shall inure before the supply. 1 Bl. Comm. 184.

LEADING A USE. A term applied to deeds declaring the use of a fine; that is, specifying to whose use the fine shall inure before the fine is levied. 2 Bl. Comm. 363. See "Deed."

LEADING CASE. A case decided by a court of last resort, which decides some particular point in question, and to which reference is constantly or frequently made, for the purpose of determining the law in similar questions.

Many elements go to the constitution of a case as a leading case, among which are the priority of the case, the character of the court, the amount of consideration given to the question, the freedom from collateral matters or questions. The term is applied to cases as leading either in a particular state, or at common law. A very convenient means of digesting the law upon any subject is found to be the selection of a leading case upon the subject, and an arrangement of authorities illustrating the questions decided. See Bennett & H. Lead. Cr. Cas.; Smith, Lead. Cas.; Hare & W. Sel. Dec.; White & T. Lead. Cas.; and a variety of others.

LEADING COUNSEL. That one of two or more counsel employed on the same side in a cause who has the principal management of the cause. So called as distinguished from the other, who is called the "junior counsel."

LEADING QUESTION. In practice. A question which puts into the witness' mouth the words to be echoed back, or plainly suggests the answer which the interrogating party desires or expects. 164 Ill. App. 612; 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 171; 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 247. In that case the examiner is said to lead him to the answer. It is not always easy to determine what is or is not a leading question.

These questions cannot, in general, be put to a witness in his examination in chief. 3 Bin. (Pa.) 130; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 483; 1 Phil. Ev. 221; 1 Starkie, Ev. 123. But, in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry; and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth, or to favor the opposite party, or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject. 1 Campb. 43; 1 Starkie, 100.

In cross-examinations, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions. 1 Starkie, Ev. 132; 3 Chit. Prac. 892; Rosc. Civ. Ev. 94; 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 3203, 3204.

LEAGUE. A measure of length, which consists of three geographical miles. The jurisdiction of the United States extends into the sea a marine league. See Acts Congress June 5, 1794 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 352), and April 20, 1818 (3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1694); 1 Wait, State Papers, 195.

—In Criminal Law. A conspiracy to do an unlawful act. The term is but little used.

—In International Law. An agreement between states. Leagues between states are of several kinds: First, leagues offensive and defensive, by which two or more nations agree not only to defend each other, but to carry on war against their common enemies. Second, defensive, but not offensive, obliging each to defend the other against any foreign invasion. Third, leagues of simple amity, by which one contracts not to invade, injure, or offend the other. This usually includes the liberty of mutual commerce and trade, and the safeguard of merchants and traders in each other's domain. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 4). See "Confederacy;" "Conspiracy;" "Truce;" "War."

LEAKAGE. The waste which has taken place in liquids, by their escaping out of the casks or vessels in which they were kept.

By Act March 2, 1799, § 59 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 625), it is provided that there be an allowance of two per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of liquors subject to duty by the gallon, and ten per cent. on all beer, ale, and porter in bottles, and five per cent. on all other liquors in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage; or it shall be lawful to compute the duties on the actual quantity, to be ascertained by tale, at the option of the importer, to be made at the time of entry.

LEAL. Loyal; that which belongs to the law.

LEALTE (Law Fr.) Legality; the condition of a legalis homo, or lawful man. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 16.

LEAP YEAR. See "Bissextile."

LEARNED IN THE LAW. A qualification usually prescribed by statute for judges and district attorneys. Admission to the bar is the only and conclusive test of legal learning within such a requirement. 12 S. D. 16.

LEASE. A contract by which a person owning or controlling lands or tenements permits another to occupy the same for a period less than that to which the right of the lessor extends. The person so permitting the occupation of premises is called the "lessor"; the person contracting for possession is called the "lessee." Regarded with respect not to the making of the lease, but of the relation created thereby, the parties are known respectively as "landlord" and "tenant."

LEASE AND RELEASE. A species of conveyance much used in England, consisting theoretically of two instruments, but which are practically united in the same instrument.

It was invented by Sergeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrollment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him.

The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 339; 4 Kent, Comm. 482; Co. Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

LEASEHOLD. The estate held by virtue of a lease.

For the various kinds of leasehold estates, see "Tenancy."

LEASING MAKING. In Scotch law. Verbal sedition, viz., slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of his majesty, his council and proceedings, etc. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 29.

LEAUTE (Law Fr.) Legality; sufficiency in law. Britt. c. 109.

LEAVE. To give or dispose of by will. "The word 'leave,' as applied to the subject matter, prima facie means a disposition by will." 10 East, 488.

LEAVE AND LICENSE. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission granted by the court to do something which, without such permission, would not be allowable.

LECHERWITE, LAIRWITE, or LEGERWITE. A fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors. 4 Inst. 206.

LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish law. The person duly authorized by the government to read and decipher ancient documents and titles, in order to entitle them to legal effect in courts of justice.

The importance of the functions of this officer caused the queen of Spain to issue an ordinance on the 2d of July, 1838, ordering that no person should be permitted to exercise it unless he justified, first, that he was a man of good character; second, that he was twenty-five years of age, and submitted to a strict examination, justifying that he was acquainted with the Latin language, and especially with the idioms of it used in writings and documents of the middle ages, also with the Romance or ancient Castilian, the Limousin, used in the ancient provinces of Arragon, paleology, Spanish history and chronology; and, third, that he could decipher the ancient manuscripts preserved in the archives of Spain, the ancient modes of writing, and the changes introduced in it by time. This examination to be conducted under the superintendence of the Chefe Politico, and the proces verbal forwarded to the queen, together with the observations of the board of examiners. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

LEDE. (Law Fr.) Grievous. Kelham. Afflicted; impaired or damaged in appearance.

LEDENGE. (Law Fr.) Damaged. Kelham.

LEDER. (L. Fr.) To hurt. Ledera; shall hurt. Ledez; hurt. Kelham.

LEDGER BOOK. In ecclesiastical law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bac. Abr.

LEDGREVIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A lathe reeve, or chief officer of lathe. Spelman.

LEES. (Law Fr. from lesser, to let.) A lease.

A leash by which dogs were led. Yearb. M. 18 Hen. VI. 6.

LEET. In English law. The name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See "Court Leet."

LEGA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The alloy of money. Cowell; Blount.

A termination of the names of places in old records, supposed by Spelman to signify "place."

LEGABILIS. In old English law. That which may be bequeathed. Cowell.

LEGACY. A gift by last will. The term is more commonly applied to money or personal property, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 947; 5 Term R. 716; 1 Burrows, 268; 7 Ves. 391, 522.

—Absolute Legacy. One given without condition, to vest immediately. 1 Vern. 254; 2 Vern. 181; 5 Ves. 461; 19 Ves. 86; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (I 4).

—Additional Legacy. One given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given. It may be either by an increase in a codicil of a prior legacy given in the will, or by another legacy added to that already given by the will. 6 Mod. 31; 2 Ves. Jr. 449; 3 Mer. 154.

—Alternative Legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things, without designating which.

—Conditional Legacy. A bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take place or be defeated. 1 Rep. Leg. (3d Ed.) 645.

—Demonstrative Legacy. A bequest of a certain sum of money with reference to a particular fund for payment. Williams, Ex'rs, 995.

—General Legacy. One so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money of the testator, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 1 Rep. Leg. (3d Ed.) 170.

—Indefinite Legacy. A bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities; as, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds. Lowndes, Leg. 84; Swinb. Wills, 485; Ambl. 641; 1 P. Wms. 697.

—Lapsed Legacy. One which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator, or before the period for vesting, has never vested.

—Legacy for Life. One in which the legatee is to enjoy the use of the legacy for life.

—Model Legacy. A bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit; for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice. 2 Vern. 431; Lowndes, Leg. 151.

—Pecuniary Legacy. One of money. Pecuniary legacies are most usually general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy; for example, of the money in a certain bag. 1 Rop. Leg. 150, note.

—Residuary Legacy. A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. Lowndes, Leg. 10; Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (I).

—Specific Legacy. A bequest of a specified part of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 3 Beav. Rolls, 349.

LEGAL Opposed (1) to that which is unlawful; (2) to that which is equitable; (3) to that which is actual. See "In Law."

As a prefix, it ordinarily implies sufficient in point of law; thus, legal consideration, legal debts, legal defenses, etc.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts, and to legacies in the spiritual by course of law. Equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1408-1431 (Am. Notes). No such distinction exists in Pennsylvania. 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 347. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 551; 2 Jarm. Wills, 543.

LEGAL DEFINITIONS. Legal definitions are, for the most part, inductive generalizations derived from our juridical experience; and, in order to be complete and adequate, they must sum up the results of all that experience, as they are to be found in the special cases that belong to the class to be defined. 1 Grant's Cases (Pa.) 328.

LEGAL ESTATE. One the right to which may be enforced in a court of law.

It is distinguished from an equitable estate, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1688.

The party who has the legal title has alone the right to seek a remedy for a wrong to his estate, in a court of law, though he may have no beneficial interest in it. The equitable owner is he who has not the legal estate, but is entitled to the beneficial interest.

The person who holds the legal estate for the benefit of another is called a "trustee." He who has the beneficiary interest and does not hold the legal title is called the "beneficiary," or, more technically, the cestui que trust.

When the cestui que trust has a claim, he must enforce his right in a court of equity, for he cannot sue any one at law in his own name (1 East, 497; 8 Term R. 332; 1 Saund. 158, note 1; 2 Bing. 20), still less can he in such court sue his own trustee. (1 East, 497).

LEGAL INTEREST. That rate of interest which is allowed by law in the absence of an express contract.

LEGAL MALICE. Constructive or implied malice. See "Malice."

LEGAL MEMORY. See "Memory."

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE. Sometimes used for "personal representative" (q. v.).

LEGAL REVERSION. In Scotch law. The period within which a proprietor is at liberty to redeem land adjudged from him for debt. Bell, Dict.

LEGAL TENDER. Lawful money which may be tendered in payment of debt. Under the laws of the United States, gold coin is full legal tender, silver coin is legal tender in payments of not to exceed five dollars, the minor coins in payments not to exceed twenty-five cents. Treasury notes, etc., are full legal tender except in payment of duties on imports and interest on the public debt. U. S. Rev. St., § 3584 et seq.

LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.) A person who possesses all his civil rights; a lawful man; one who stands rectus in curia, not outlawed nor infamous. In this sense are the words probi et legales homines.

LEGALIS MONETA ANGLIAE. Lawful money of England. 1 Inst. 207.

LEGALITY, or LEGALNESS. Lawfulness.

LEGALIZATION. The act of making lawful.

By legalization is also understood the act by which a judge or competent officer authenticates a record, or other matter, in order that the same may be lawfully read in evidence. See 102 Mass. 127.

LEGALLY. See "Legal."

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Popes Gregory IX. and Clement IV. in the reign of Hen. III., about the years 1220 and 1268. 1 Bl. Comm. 83. Burns says, 1237 and 1268. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 30d.

LEGARE (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. To bequeath; to leave or give by will; to give in anticipation of death. In Scotch phrase, to legate. Bracton, fol. 18b. Applied to real, as well as personal, property.

LEGATARIUS. (Lat.) In the civil law. One to whom a thing is bequeathed; a legatee, or legatary. Bract. fol. 40. In old European law. A legate, messenger, or envoy. Spelman.

LEGATARIUS PARTIARIUS. A legatee to whom the testator has in his will instructed his heir to give a definite share of his universal succession.

This kind of legacy was called a legacy of partition (legatum partitionis), because the legatee divided the inheritance with the heir. Inst. 2, 23, 5.

LEGATARY. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

LEGATEE. The person to whom a legacy is given. See "Legacy."

LEGATES. Legates are extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to Catholic countries to represent him, and to exercise his jurisdiction. They are distinguished from the ambassadors of the pope who are sent to other powers.

Legates a latere hold the first rank among those who are honored by a legation. They are always chosen from the college of cardinals, and are called a latere, in imitation of the magistrates of ancient Rome, who were taken from the court, or side of the emperor.

Legati missi are simple envoys.

Legati nati are those who are entitled to be legates by birth. See "A Latere."

LEGATION. An embassy; a mission. All persons attached to a foreign legation, lawfully acknowledged by the government of this country, whether they are ambassadors, envoys, ministers, or attaches, are protected by the act of April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83), from violence, arrest, or molestation. 1 Dall. (Pa.) 117; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 232; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 435; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 531; 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 467; 1 Miles (Pa.) 366; 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 217; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 240; Wheat. Int. Law, 167. See "Ambassador"; "Arrest"; "Privilege."

LEGATARY. The third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will. Bac. Abr. "Customs of London" (D 4).

LEGATOS VIOLARE CONTRA JUS GENTIUM est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors. Branch, Princ.

LEGATUM.

—In Civil Law. A legacy; a gift left by will. Dig. 3136. A gift left by a deceased person to be executed by the heir. Inst. 2. 20. 1.

—In Common Law. A legacy.

—In Old Ecclesiastical Law. A soul scot or a gift to the church. Cowell.

LEGATUM MORTE TESTATORIS TANTUM confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone. Dyer, 143.

LEGATUS, REGIS VICE FUNGITUR A quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills. 12 Coke, 17.

LEGEM AMITTERE. To lose one's law; to become infamous or outlaw.

LEGEM ENIM CONTRACTUS DAT. The contract makes the law. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 233.

LEGEM FACERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To make law, or oath. Legem vadiare, to wage law. Legem habere, to have law; to be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Legem amittere, to lose the law, or privilege of being admitted to oath. Legem terrae amittentes perpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt, they who lose the lex terrae (law of the land) justly incur therefor the perpetual brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221. In Branch's Maxims, the peculiar meaning of lex terrae, in this passage, has been misapprehended.

LEGEM FERRE (Lat.) In the Roman law. To propose a law to the people for their adoption. Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 1, tit. 2; Tayl. Civ. Law, 9.

LEGEM HABERE. To have one's law; to be a legal person.

LEGEM JUBERE (or SCISCERE). In the Roman law. To give consent and authority to a proposed law; to make or pass it. Tayl. Civ. Law, 9.

LEGEM TERRAE AMITTENTES PERPETUAM Infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who do not preserve (or who lose) the law of the land, thence justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221.

LEGEM VADIARE. To wage one's law.

LEGES (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. Laws proposed by a magistrate of the senate, and adopted by the whole people in comitia centuriata. See "Populiscitum"; "Lex."

—In English Law. Laws.

Leges scriptae, written or statute laws. Hale's Hist. Com. Law, 1, 2.

Leges non scriptae, unwritten or customary laws; the common law, including general customs, or the common law, properly so called; and also particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and those particular laws that are, by custom, observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Bl. Comm. 67. "These parts of law are therefore styled leges non scriptae, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power and the force of laws by long and immemorial usage." 1 Steph. Comm. 40, 66. It is not to be understood, however, that they are merely oral, for they have come down to us in reports and treatises.

LEGES ANGLIAE SUNT TRIPARTITAE: Jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: Common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

LEGES FIGENDI ET REFIGENDI CONSUETUDO EST PERICULOSISSIMA. The custom of making and unmaking laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Coke, pref.

LEGES HUMANAЕ NASCUNTUR, VIVUNT, ET MORIUNTUR. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25; 2 Atk. 674; 11 C. B. 767; 1 Bl. Comm. 89.

LEGES NATURAE PERFECTISSIMAE SUNT ET IMMUTABILES; HUMANI VERO JURIS CONDITIO SEMPER IN INFINITUM DECURRIT, ET NIHIL EST IN EO QUOD PERPETUO STARE POSSIT. Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, moriuntur. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25.

LEGES NON VERBIS SED REBUS SUNT IMPOSITAE. Laws are imposed on things, not words. 10 Coke, 101.

LEGES POSTERIORES PRIORES CONTRARIAS ABROGANT. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. 2 Rolle, 410; 11 Coke, 626, 630.

LEGES SUUM LIGENT LATOREM. Laws should bind the proposers of them. Fleta, bk. 1, c. 17, § 11.

LEGES TABELLARIAE (Lat.) Roman laws regulating the mode of voting by ballot (tabella). 1 Kent, Comm. 232, note.

LEGES VIGILANTIBUS, NON DORMIENTIBUS SUBVENIUNT. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent. Fanning; Dunham; 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 122, 145; Toole; Cook; 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 142, 144.

LEGIBUS SOLUTUS (Lat.) Released from the laws; not bound by the laws. An expression applied in the Roman civil law to the emperor. Calv. Lex.; 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. 157.

LEGIBUS SUMPTIS DESINENTIBUS, LEGE NATURAE UTENDUM EST. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature. 2 Rolle, 298.

LEGIS CONSTRUCTIO NON FACIT INJURIAM. The construction of law does no wrong. Co. Litt. 183.

LEGIS INTERPRETATIO LEGIS VIM OBTINET. The construction of law obtains the force of law. Branch, Princ.

LEGIS MINISTER NON TENETUR, IN EXECUTIONE OFFICII SUI, FUGERE AUT RETROCEDERE. The minister of the law is not bound, in the execution of his office, either to fly or retreat. 6 Coke, 68.

LEGISLATIVE POWER. The authority, under the constitution, to make laws, and to alter or repeal them.

LEGISLATOR. One who makes laws; a member of the legislature (q. v.).

LEGISLATORUM EST VIVA VOX, REBUS ET NON VERBIS, LEGEM IMPONERE. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things, and not on words. 10 Coke, 101.

LEGISLATURE. That body of men in the state which has the power of making laws.

LEGISPERITUS (Law Lat.) A person skilled or learned in the law; a lawyer or advocate. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 1.

LEGIT UT CLERICUS. He reads as a clerk. The answer made by the ordinary to the question legit vel non, importing that the prisoner could read, and was entitled to benefit of clergy. Dyer, 205.

LEGIT VEL NON? Does he read or not? The question asked of the ordinary on the trial, whether a prisoner claiming benefit of clergy could read. 1 Salk. 61.

LEGITIM (called, otherwise, "Bairn's Part of Gear"). In Scotch law. The legal share of father's free movable property, due on his death to his children. If widow and children are left, it is one-third; if children alone, one-half. Ersk. Inst. 3. 9. 20; 4 Bell, H. L. Sc. 286.

LEGITIMACY. The state of being born in wedlock; that is, in a lawful manner.

LEGITIMATE. That which is according to law; as, legitimate children are lawful children, born in wedlock, in contradistinction to bastards; legitimate authority, or lawful power, in opposition to usurpation.

LEGITIMATION. The act of giving the character of legitimate children to those who were not so born. This was formerly effected (1) By subsequent marriage of the parents, Hunter, Introd. Rom. Law, 29, introduced by Constantine (A. D. 335), abrogated by Zeno (A. D. 476), and revived and amplified by Justinian (A. D. 529). (2) By offering the natural child to the curia (per oblationem curiae); making a son a decurio, or a member of the class that furnished the magistrates in provincial towns, or giving a daughter in marriage to a decurio. (3) By rescript of the emperor; introduced by Justinian.

Legitimation of bastards, either by subsequent marriage or by an act of the government (Rescriptum principis), is nothing but a legal equalization of certain children illegitimately begotten with legitimate children. 96 Cal. 560; Bar on International Law, p. 434.

LEGITIMATION PER SUBSEQUENS matrimonium. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents. Bell, Dict.

LEGITIME. In civil law. That portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.

The Civil Code of Louisiana declares that donations inter vivos or mortis causa cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half if he leaves two children; and one-third if he leaves three, or a greater number. Under the name of "children" are included descendants of whatever degree they may be. It must be understood that they are only counted for the child they represent. Civ. Code La. art. 1480.

LEGITIME IMPERANTI PARERE NECESSE EST. One who commands lawfully must be obeyed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

LEGITIMUS. Lawful; legitimate. Legitimus haeres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful. Bracton, fol. 63.

LEGO (Lat.) In Roman law. I bequeath. A common term in wills. Dig. 30. 36. 81 et seq.

LEGULEIUS (Lat.) A person skilled in law (in legibus versatus); one versed in the forms of law. Calv. Lex.; Cicero de Orat. i. 55.

LEIDGREVE. In Saxon law. An officer who had jurisdiction over a lathe. Cowell.

LEIPA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A fugitive or runaway. LL. Hen. I. c. 43. Spelman. Possibly the root of "elope."

LENDER. He from whom a thing is borrowed; the bailor of an article loaned.

LEOD (Saxon). People; a people; a nation. Spelman, voc. "Leodes."

LEODES (Law Lat.; from Saxon Leod). In old European law. A vassal, or liege man (vassallus; homo ligeus). Spelman.

Service (servitium). Id.; Marculf. lib. 1, form. 40.

A were or weregild (wera, wergildum). Spelman.

LEOHT GESCEOT. A tax for lighting the church.

LEONINA SOCIETAS (Lat.) An attempted partnership, in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in Roman law; and, apparently, it would also be void as a partnership in English law, as being inherently inconsistent with the notion of partnership. Dig. 17. 2. 29. 2; Brown.

LEPRA. (Lat.) In old English law. Leprosy. Leprosus; a leper. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 40, § 3.

LEPROSO AMOVENDO. A writ which anciently lay to remove a leper who attended at church or public meetings, to the danger and annoyance of the inhabitants.

LES FICTIONS NAISSENT DE LA LOI, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

LES LOIS NE SE CHARGENT DE PUNIR que les actions exteriures. Laws do not undertake to punish other than outward actions. Montesq. Esp. de Lois, bk. 12, c. 11; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 279.

LESE MAJESTY, Laese Majesty. (Law Fr. leze majest.) The old English and Scotch translation of lesa majestas, or high treason. 2 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 6. See "Leze Majesty."

LESION. In civil law. A term used to signify the injury suffered, in consequence of inequality of situation, by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.

The remedy given for this injury is founded on its being the effect of implied error or imposition; for in every commutative contract equivalents are supposed to be given and received. Code La. art. 1854. Persons of full age, however, are not allowed, in point of law, to object to their agreements as being injurious, unless the injury be excessive. Poth. Obl. p. 1, c. 1, sec. 1, art. 3, § 4. But minors are admitted to restitution, not only against any excessive inequality, but against any inequality whatever. Id. § 5; Code La. art. 1858. See "Fraud"; "Guardian"; "Sale."

LESPEGEND (Saxon). A lessor than or baron. Const. Canuti Regis de Foresta, art. 2. Spelman prefers to write it "lesthegen."

LESSEE. He to whom a lease is made; he who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. See "Lease."

LESSOR. He who grants a lease. See "Lease."

LESTAGE, or LASTAGE (Saxon last, burden). A custom for carrying things in fairs and markets. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47; Termes de la Ley.

LESWES. Lesues. Pastures. Domesday. Co. Litt. 4b. A term often inserted in old deeds and conveyances. Cowell.

LET. Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction. To lease; to grant the use and possession of a thing for compensation. It is the correlative of "hire." See "Hire."

LETRADO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An advocate. White's New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 1, c. 1, § 3, note.

LETTER. He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Bailm. § 369. See "Hire."

LETTER CARRIER. A person employed to carry letters from the post office to the persons to whom they are addressed. Provisions were made by the act of March 3, 1851 (11 U. S. St. at Large, 591), for the appointment of letter carriers in cities and towns, and by chapter 21, § 2, of the same act, for letter carriers in Oregon and California.

LETTER MISSIVE. In English law. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament, against whom a bill has been filed, desiring the defendant to appear and answer the bill. It is issued by the lord chancellor, on petition, after the filing of the bill; and a neglect to attend to this places the defendant, in relation to such suit, on the same ground as other defendants who are not peers, and a subpoena may then issue. Newland, Prac. 9; 2 Madd. Ch. Prac. 196; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 16.

LETTER OF ADVICE. A letter containing information of any circumstances unknown to the person to whom it is written; generally informing him of some commercial transaction by the writer of the letter.

It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chit. Bills, 185.

LETTER OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch law. The decree or warrant of the supreme court or court of sessions, discharging the inferior tribunal from all further proceedings in the matter, and advocating the action to itself. This proceeding is similar to a certiorari issuing out of a superior court for the removal of a cause from an inferior.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY. A written instrument, by which one or more persons, called the "constituents," authorize one or more other persons, called the "attorneys," to do some lawful act for or instead, and in the place of, the former. 1 Moody, C. C. 52, 70. It may be parol or under seal. See "Power of Attorney."

LETTER OF CREDESCENCE. In international law. A written instrument addressed by the sovereign or chief magistrate of a state to the sovereign or state to whom a public minister is sent, certifying his appointment as such, and the general object of his mission, and requesting that full faith and credit may be given to what he shall do and say on the part of his court.

When it is given to an ambassador, envoy, or minister accredited to a sovereign, it is addressed to the sovereign or state to whom the minister is delegated. In the case of a charge d'affaires, it is addressed by the secretary or minister of state charged with the department of foreign affairs to the minister of foreign affairs of the other government. Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 7; Wicq. de l'Ambassadeur. lib. 1, § 15.

LETTER OF CREDIT. A letter whereby one person requests another to advance money or give credit to a third, and agrees to reimburse or indemnify the person making the advance, or giving the credit.

At first it was practically confined to merchants, and was designed to enable a merchant to obtain goods or money to buy the same.

In modern times it is much used as a convenience by travelers in foreign parts to avoid carrying large sums of money; a sum being deposited with a bank, which issues a letter of credit to its correspondents in foreign parts.

Letters of credit are special if addressed to some particular person; general if addressed to any one giving credit to the bearer.

LETTER OF LICENSE. An instrument or writing made by creditors to their insolvent debtor, by which they bind themselves to allow him a longer time than he had a right to, for the payment of his debts, and that they will not arrest or molest him in his person or property till after the expiration of such additional time.

LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL. A commission granted by the government to a private individual, to take the property of a foreign state, or of the citizens or subjects of such state, as a reparation for an injury committed by such state, its citizens or subjects. A vessel loaded with merchandise, on a voyage to a friendly port, but armed for its own defense in case of attack by an enemy, is also called a "letter of marque." 1 Boul. P. Dr. Com. tit. 3, § 2, p. 300.

By the constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 11), congress have power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. See Chit. Law Nat. 73; 1 Bl. Comm. 251; Viner, Abr. "Prerogative" (B 4); Comyn, Dig. "Prerogative" (B 4); Molloy, bk. 1, c. 2, § 10; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 440; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 224; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 9, 260. And see "Reprisal."

LETTER OF RECALL. A written document addressed by the executive of one government to the executive of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former to him has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION. An instrument given by one person to another, addressed to a third, in which the bearer is represented as worthy of credit. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 371; 3 Term R. 51; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 69; Fell, Guar. c. 8; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 181; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; 1 Day (Conn.) 22. See "Recommendation."

LETTER OF RECREDENTIALS. A document delivered to a minister by the secretary of state of the government to which he was accredited. It is addressed to the executive of the minister's country. This is in reply to the "letter of recall."

LETTERS. Epistles; despatches; written messages, usually on paper, folded up and sealed, and sent by one person to another. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 582.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. In practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant, to such person as he approves, "letters to collect the goods of the deceased," which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods, and keep them in his safe custody. 2 Bl. Comm. 505.

LETTERS CLOSE. Close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from "letters patent."

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. An instrument in writing, granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction and power of granting such letters, thereby giving the administrator (naming him) "full power to administer the goods, chattels, rights, and credits, which were of the said deceased, in the county or district in which the said judge or officer has jurisdiction; as also to ask, collect, levy, recover, and receive the credits whatsoever of the said deceased, which at the time of his death were owing, or did in any way belong, to him, and to pay the debts in which the said deceased stood obliged, so far forth as the said goods and chattels, rights and credits, will extend, according to the rate and order of law." See "Letters Testamentary."

LETTERS OF FIRE AND SWORD. See "Fire and Sword."

LETTERS OF HORNING. See "Horning."

LETTERS OF REQUEST. In English ecclesiastical law. An instrument by which a judge of an inferior court waives or remits his own jurisdiction in favor of a court of appeal immediately superior to it.

Letters of request, in general, lie only where an appeal would lie, and lie only to the next immediate court of appeal, waiving merely the primary jurisdiction to the proper appellate court, except letters of request from the most inferior ecclesiastical court, which may be direct to the court of arches, although one or two courts of appeal may by this be ousted of their jurisdiction as courts of appeal. 2 Add. Ecc. 406. The effect of letters of request is to give jurisdiction to the appellate court in the first instance. See a form of letters of request in 2 Chit. Prac. 498, note (h).

LETTERS OF SAFE-CONDUCT. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has "letters of safe-conduct," which, by divers old statutes, must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity. Wharton.

LETTERS OF SLAINS (or SLANES). Letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assyhtment, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application. Bell, Dict.

LETTERS PATENT. The name of an instrument granted by the government to convey a right to the patentee; as, a patent for a tract of land; or to secure to him a right which he already possesses, as, a patent for a new invention or discovery. Letters patent are matter of record. They are so called because they are not sealed up, but are granted open. See "Patent."

LETTERS ROGATORY. An instrument sent in the name and by the authority of a judge or court to another, requesting the latter to cause to be examined, upon interrogatories filed in a cause depending before the former, a witness who is within the jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom such letters are addressed.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. The formal instrument in writing granted to an executor by the judge or officer having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, stating his appointment as executor, and authorizing him to proceed.

LETTING OUT. In American law. The act of awarding a contract.

This term is much used in the United States, and most frequently in relation to contracts to construct railroads, canals, or other mechanical works. When such an undertaking has reached the point of actual construction, a notice is generally given that proposals will be received until a certain period, and thereupon a letting out, or award of portions of the work to be performed according to the proposals, is made. See 35 Ala. (N. S.) 55.

LETTRE (Law Fr.) In old English law. A letter; conveyance or grant, so called from its form. A toutz ceux que ceste lettre verront ou orront, A. de B. salut: Saches moy aver done a P. etc. To all those who shall see or hear this letter, A. of B. greeting: Know that I have given to P., etc. Britt. c. 41.

LEUCA, LEUGA, or LEGA (Law Lat.)

—In Old French Law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces. Spelman.

—In Old English Law. A league or mile of a thousand paces. Domesday Book; Spelman; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 2.

A privileged space around a monastery of a league or mile in circuit. Spelman.

LEUDIS, Leodis. (Law Lat.) In old European law. A vassal; a liege man or feudal dependant; a retainer; a feudal tenant; a crown vassal or baron; a layman; a common or illiterate person. Spelman.

LEVANDAE NAVIS CAUSA (Lat.) In civil law. For the sake of lightening the ship. Goods thrown overboard with this purpose are subjects of a general average.

LEVANT ET COUCHANT (Law Fr.) Rising up and lying down. A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have laid down to rest and risen up to feed, which, in general, is held to be a night and a day. 3 Bl. Comm. 9.

LEVANTES ET CUBANTES. Same as levant et couchant.

Applied by Bracton to villeins, who lived on their lord's estate. Bracton, fol. 6b.

LEVARI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be levied).

—In Practice. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment.

Under this writ, the sheriff was to sell the goods and collect the rents, issues, and profits of the land in question. It has been generally superseded by the remedy by elegit, which was given by St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I.) c. 18. In case, however, the judgment debtor is a clerk, upon the sheriff's return that he has no lay fee, a writ in the nature of a levari facias goes to the bishop of the diocese, who thereupon sends a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the church wardens, to collect and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Yet the same course is pursued upon a fi. fa. 2 Burns, Ecc. Law, 329. See 2 Tidd, Prac. 1042; Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (C 4); Finch, Law, 471; 3 Bl. Comm. 471.

—In American Law. A writ used to sell lands mortgaged, after a judgment has been obtained by the mortgagee, or his assignee, against the mortgagor, under a peculiar proceeding authorized by statute. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3396.

LEVARI FACIAS DAMNA DE DISSEISITORIBUS. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseisor had been condemned to pay to the disseisee. Cowell.

LEVARI FACIAS QUANDO VICECOMES returnavit quod non habuit emptores. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor's goods as would satisfy the whole debt. Cowell.

LEVARI FACIAS RESIDIUM DEBITI.

An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tenements or chattels of the debtor. Cowell.

LEVATO VELO (Lat.) An expression used in the Roman law (Code, 11. 4. 5), and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression, but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door, and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require despatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 26, § 3.

LEVIABLE. That which may be levied.

LEVIR. A husband's brother. Vicat.

LEVITICAL DEGREES. Those degrees of kindred, set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons are prohibited to marry.

LEVY. To raise. Webster. To levy a nuisance, i. e., to raise or do a nuisance (9 Coke, 55); to levy a fine, i. e., to raise or acknowledge a fine (2 Bl. Comm. 357; 1 Steph. Comm. 236); to levy a tax, i. e., to raise or collect a tax; to levy war, i. e., to raise or begin war, to take arms for attack (4 Bl. Comm. 81); to levy an execution, i. e., to raise or levy so much money on execution (Reg. Orig. 298).

—In Practice. The raising of the money for which an execution has been issued. The seizing of property under an execution.

LEVYING WAR. In criminal law. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. 4 Cranch (U. S.) 473, 474; Const. art. 3, § 3. See "Treason"; Fed. Cas. No. 14,692. This is a technical term, borrowed from the English law, and its meaning is the same as it is when used in St. 25 Edw. III. 4 Cranch (U. S.) 471; Hall, Law J. 351; 1 East, P. C. 62-77; Alis. Crim. Law, 606; 9 Car. & P. 129.

LEWDNESS. Licentiousness; an offense against the public economy, when of an open and notorious character; as, by frequenting houses of ill fame, which is an indictable offense, or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency, for which the punishment at common law is fine and imprisonment. The various acts which constituted lewdness at common law are now generally covered by a variety of statutory offenses, as "indecent exposure," "lascivious cohabitation," etc.

LEX (Lat.) The law; a law for the government of mankind in society. Among the ancient Romans this word was frequently used as synonymous with right, ius. When put absolutely, it means the law of the Twelve Tables.

LEX AELIA SENTIA. The Aelian Sentian law, respecting wills, proposed by the consuls Aelius and Sentius, and passed A. U. 756, restraining a master from manumitting his slaves in certain cases. Calv. Lex.; Halifax, Anal. bk. 1, c. 3.

LEX AEQUITATE GAUDET; APPETIT perfectum; est norma recti. The law delights in equity; it covets perfection; it is a rule of right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 36.

LEX AGRARIA. In Roman law. The agrarian law. A law proposed by Tiberius Gracchus, A. U. 620, that no one should possess more than five hundred acres of land, and that three commissioners should be appointed to divide among the poorer people what any one had above that extent. Liv. Epit. 58.

LEX ALAMANNORUM (or ALEMANNORUM). The law of the Alemanni; first reduced to writing from the customs of the country by Theodoric, king of the Franks, A. D. 512. Amended and re-enacted by Clotaire II. Spelman; Butler, Hor. Jur. 84.

LEX ALIQUANDO SEQUITUR AEQUITATEM. The law sometimes follows equity. 3 Wils. 119.

LEX AMISSA. One who is an infamous, perjured, or outlawed person. Bracton, lib. 4, c. 19.

LEX ANGLIAE. The law of England; the common law; or, the curtesy of England.

LEX ANGLIAE EST LEX MISERICORDIAE. The law of England is a law of mercy. 2 Inst. 315.

LEX ANGLIAE NON PATITUR ABSURDUM. The law of England does not suffer an absurdity. 9 Coke, 22.

LEX ANGLIAE NUNQUAM MATRIS SED semper patris conditionem imitari partum judicat. The law of England rules that the offspring shall always follow the condition of the father never that of the mother. Co. Litt. 123.

LEX ANGLIAE NUNQUAM SINE PARLIAMENTO mutari potest. The law of England cannot be changed but by parliament. 2 Inst. 218, 619.

LEX APPARENS. In old English and Norman law. Apparent or manifest law. A term used to denote the trial by battel or duel, and the trial by ordeal, "lex" having the sense of process of law (process litis). Spelman. Called "apparent" because the plaintiff was obliged to make his right clear by the testimony of witnesses before he could obtain an order from the court to summon the defendant.

LEX AQUILIA. In the Roman law. The Aquilian law; a celebrated law passed on the proposition of the tribune C. Aquilius Gallus, A. U. 672, regulating the compensation to be made for that kind of damage called "injurious," in the cases of killing or wounding the slave or beast of another. Inst. 4. 3; Dig. 9. 2; Code, 8. 35; Calv. Lex.

LEX ATILIA. In the Roman law. The Atilian law; a law passed on the proposition of the tribune L. Atilius Regulus, A. U. 443, authorizing the praetor, with a majority of the tribunes, to appoint guardians. Changed by Justinian. Inst. 1. 20. 3. 4.

LEX ATINIA. In the Roman law. The Atinian law; a law declaring that the property in things stolen should not be acquired by prescription (usucapione). Inst. 2. 6. 2; Adam, Rom. Ant. 207.

LEX BAIUVARIORUM (BAIORIORUM, or Bolorum). The law of the Bavarians, a barbarous nation of Europe, first collected (together with the law of the Franks and Alemanni) by Theodoric I., and finally completed and promulgated by Dagobert. Spelman.

LEX BARBARA. The barbarian law. A term applied to the laws of those nations that were not in subjection to the Roman empire, such as the Burgundian and Salian law, the law of the Lombards, etc. Spelman.

LEX BENEFICIALIS REI CONSIMILI remedium praestat. A beneficial law affords a remedy in a similar case. 2 Inst. 689.

LEX BREHONIA (Law Lat.) The Brehon law. See "Brehon Law."

LEX BRETOYSE (or BRETOISE). The law of the ancient Britons, or Marches of Wales.

LEX BURGUNDIONUM. The law of the Burgundians, a barbarous nation of Europe, first compiled and published by Gundebald, one of the last of their kings, about A. D. 500. Spelman; Butler, Hor. Jur. 84.

LEX CITIUS TOLERARE VULT PRIVATUM damnum quam publicum malum. The law would rather tolerate a private loss than a public evil. Co. Litt. 152b.

LEX COMITATUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. The law of the county, or the law administered in the county court before the earl (comes) or his deputy. Spelman.

LEX COMMISSORIA. In Roman law. A law by which a debtor and creditor might agree, where a thing had been pledged to the latter to secure the debt, that, if the debtor did not pay at the day, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. This was abolished by a law of Constantine. Kent, Comm. 583.

A law according to which a seller might stipulate that, if the price of the thing sold were not paid within a certain time, the sale should be void. Dig. 18. 3.

LEX COMMUNIS. The common law. See "Jus Commune."

LEX CONTRA ID QUOD PRAESUMIT, probationem non recipit. The law admits no proof against that which it presumes. Lofft, 573.

LEX CORNELIA DE FALSO (or FALSIS). In Roman law. The Cornelian law respecting forgery or counterfeiting. Passed by the dictator Sylla. Dig. 48. 10; Calv. Lex.

LEX CORNELIA DE INJURIIS. In Roman law. The Cornelian law respecting injuries; a law passed by the dictator L. Cornelius Sylla, providing remedies for certain injuries, as for battery, forcible entry of another's house, etc. Calv. Lex. Being the most important of the Cornelian laws, it is sometimes known generally as "Lex Cornelia."

LEX CORNELIA DE SICARIIS ET VENEFCIS. In Roman law. The Cornelian law respecting assassins and poisoners. Passed by the dictator Sylla. Dig. 48. 8; Calv. Lex.

LEX DANORUM. The law of the Danes; Dane-law or Dane-lage. Spelman.

LEX DE FUTURO; JUDEX DE PRAETERITO. The law provides for the future; the judge for the past.

LEX DEFICERE NON POTEST IN JUS-TITIA EXHIBENDA. The law ought not to fail in dispensing justice. Co. Litt. 197.

LEX DERAISNIA. The proof of a thing which one denies to be done by him, where another affirms it; defeating the assertion of his adversary, and showing it to be against reason or probability. This was used among the old Romans, as well as the Normans. Cowell.

LEX DILATIONES SEMPER EXHORRET. The law always abhors delay. 2 Inst. 240.

LEX DOMICILII (Lat.) The law of the domicile. 2 Kent, Comm. 112, 433.

LEX EST DICTAMEN RATIONIS. Law is the dictate of reason. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 117.

LEX EST NORMA RECTI. Law is a rule of right.

LEX EST RATIO SUMMA, QUAE JUBET quae sunt utilia et necessaria, et contraria prohibet. Law is the perfection of reason, which commands what is useful and necessary, and forbids the contrary. Co. Litt. 319b.

LEX EST SANCTIO SANCTA, JUBENS honesta, et prohibens contraria. Law is a sacred sanction, commanding what is right, and prohibiting the contrary. 2 Inst. 587.

LEX EST TUTISSIMA CASSIS; SUB clypeo legis nemo decipitur. Law is the safest helmet; under the shield of the law no one is deceived. 2 Inst. 56.

LEX ET CONSUETUDO PARLIAMENTI. The law and custom of parliament. The houses of parliament constitute a court not only of legislation, but also of justice, and have their own rules, by which the court itself and the suitors therein are governed. May, Parl. Prac. (6th Ed.) 38-61. See 1 Bl. Comm. 163.

LEX ET CONSUETUDO REGNI. The law and custom of the realm; one of the names of the common law.

LEX FALCIDIA. See "Falcidian Law."

LEX FAVET DOTI. The law favors dower. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 105.

LEX FINGIT UBI SUBSISTIT AEQUITAS. Law feigns where equity subsists. 11 Coke, 90; Branch, Princ.

LEX FORI (Lat. the law of the forum). The law of the country, to the tribunal in which an action is brought. 5 Clark & F. 1.

LEX FRANCORUM. The law of the Franks; promulgated by Theodoric I., son of Clovis I., at the same time with the law of the Alemanni and Bavarians. Spelman. This was a different collection from the Salic law.

LEX FRISIONUM. The law of the Frisians, promulgated about the middle of the eighth century. Spelman.

LEX FURIA (or FUSIA) CANINIA. In Roman law. The Furian Caninian law; a law passed in the consulship of P. Furius Camillus and C. Caninius Gallus, A. U. 752, prohibiting masters from manumitting by will more than a certain number or proportion of their slaves. This law was abrogated by Justinian. Inst. 1. 7; Code, 7. 3; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 7.

LEX GOTHICA. The Gothic law, or law of the Goths. First promulgated in writing, A. D. 466. Spelman.

LEX HOSTILIA. The Hostilian law, passed in the consulship of A. Hostilius, authorizing actions of theft to be brought in the name of captives or persons absent on the business of the state. Inst. 4. 10. pr.; Calv. Lex.

LEX IMPERATORIA. The Imperial or Roman law. Quoted under this name by Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 15; Id. lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

LEX INTENDIT VICINUM VICINI FACTA SCIRE. The law presumes that one neighbor knows the actions of another. Co. Litt. 78b.

LEX JUDICAT DE REBUS NECESSARIO FACIENDIS QUASI RE IPSA FACTIS. The law judges of things which must necessarily be done as if actually done. Branch, Princ.

LEX JUDICIALIS. An ordeal. Leg. H. 1.

LEX JULIA MAJESTATIS. In Roman law. The Julian law of majesty; a law promulgated by Julius Caesar, and again published with additions by Augustus, comprehending all the laws before enacted to punish transgressors against the state. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 12; Calv. Lex.

LEX LOCI (Lat.) The law of the place. This may be either lex loci contractus aut actus, the law of the place of making the contract or of the thing done; lex loci rei sitae, the law of the place where the thing is situated; lex loci domicilii, the law of the place of domicile.

In general, however, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus aut actus.

LEX LOCI DELICTUS. The law of the place where an offense was committed.

LEX LOCI SOLUTIONIS. The law of the place where payment or performance of a contract is, by its terms, to be made.

LEX LONGOBARDORUM (Lat.) The name of an ancient code in force among the Lombards. It contains many evident traces of feudal policy. It survived the destruction of the ancient government of Lombardy by Charlemagne, and is said to be still partially in force in some districts of Italy.

LEX MANIFESTA. Manifest or open law; the trial by duel or ordeal. The same as lex apparens (q. v.).

LEX MERCATORIA (Lat.) That system of laws which is adopted by all commercial nations, and which, therefore, constitutes a part of the law of the land. See "Law Merchant."

LEX NECESSITATIS EST LEX TEMPORIS, I. E., INSTANTIS. The law of necessity is the law of time, that is, time present. Hob. 159.

LEX NEMINEM COGIT AD VANA SEU INUTILIA PERAGENDA. The law forces no one to do vain or useless things. Wingate, Max. 600; 3 Bl. Comm. 144; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 121; 13 East, 420; 7 Pa. St. 206, 214; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 598.

LEX NEMINEM COGIT OSTENDERE QUOD NESCIRE PRAESUMITUR. The law forces no one to make known what he is presumed not to know. Lofft, 569.

LEX NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. The law does wrong to no one. Branch, Princ.

LEX NEMINI OPERATUR INIQUUM, NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. The law never works an injury, or does him a wrong. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 22.

LEX NIL FACIT FRUSTRAM, NIL JUBET FRUSTRAM. The law does nothing and commands nothing in vain. 3 Bulst. 279; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

LEX PRAETORIA. In Roman law. The Praetorian law; a law by which every freedman who made a will was commanded to leave a moiety to his patron. Inst. 3. 8. 1. L. C. B. Gilbert has applied the term to the rules that govern in a court of equity. Gilb. Ch. pt. 2.

LEX PROSPICIT, NON RESPICIT. The law looks forward, not backward. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 284. See "Retrospective Law."

LEX PUNIT MENDACIUM. The law punishes falsehood. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 15.

LEX REGIA. A law by which it was claimed that the legislative power was transferred by the Roman people to the emperor. Inst. 1. 2. 6. Whether such a law was passed has been doubted. 1 Kent, Comm. 544; Tayl. Civ. Law, 236, note.

LEX REI SITAE (Lat.) The law of the place of situation of the thing.

LEX REJICIT SUPERFLUA, PUGNANTIA, INCONGRUA. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 133, 140, 176.

LEX REPROBAT MORAM. The law disapproves of delay.

LEX RESPICIT AEQUITATEM. Law regards equity. See 14 Q. B. 504, 511, 512.

LEX RHODIA. The Rhodian law, particularly the fragment of it on the subject of jettison (de jactu), preserved in the Pandects. Dig. 14. 2. 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 232, 233.

LEX SACRAMENTALIS. Purgation by oath. Leg. H. 1.

LEX SALICA. The Salic law; the law of the Salian Franks, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul in the fifth century. It is the oldest of the barbarian codes, being said to have been framed about A. D. 422. The most celebrated provision of this code, one excluding females from inheritance, is often referred to alone as the Salic law.

According to Spelman, many provisions of the laws of Henry I. were taken from this source.

LEX SCRIPTA. The statutory law. 20 Ill. App. 288.

LEX SCRIPTA SI CESSET, ID CUSTODIRI oportet quod moribus et consuetudine inductum est; et, si qua in re hoo defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et, si id non appareat, tunc Jus quo urbs Romana utitur servari oportet. If the written law be silent, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then that which is next and analogous to it; and, if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed. 7 Coke, 19. This maxim of Lord Coke is so far followed at the present day that, in cases where there is no precedent of the English courts, the civil law is always heard with respect, and often, though not necessarily, followed. Wharton.

LEX SEMPER DABIT REMEDIUM. The law will always give a remedy. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2411; Bac. Abr. "Actions in General" (B); Branch, Princ.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 181; 12 Adol. & E. 266; 7 Q. B. 451.

LEX SEMPER INTENDIT QUOD CONVENIT RATIONI. The law always intends what is agreeable to reason. Co. Litt. 78.

LEX SITUS. Modern law Latin for "the law of the place where property is situated." The general rule is that lands and other immovables are governed by the lex situs, i. e., by the law of the country in which they are situated. Westl. Priv. Int. Law, 62.

LEX SPECTAT NATURAE ORDINEM. The law regards the order of nature. Co. Litt. 197; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 231.

LEX SUCCURRIT IGNORANTI. The laws succor the ignorant. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 15.

LEX SUCCURRIT MINORIBUS. The law assists minors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

LEX TALIONIS (Lat.) The law of retaliation, an example of which is given in the law of Moses,—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, etc.

Amicable retaliation includes those acts of retaliation which correspond to the acts of the other nation under similar circumstances.

Jurists and writers on international law are divided as to the right of one nation punishing with death, by way of retaliation, the citizens or subjects of another nation. In the United States, no example of such barbarity has ever been witnessed; but prisoners have been kept in close confinement in retaliation for the same conduct towards American prisoners. See Rutherford, Inst. bk. 2, c. 9; Mart. Law Nat. bk. 8, c. 1, § 3, note; 1 Kent, Comm. 93; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 4, c. 1, § 1.

Vindictive retaliation includes those acts which amount to a war.

LEX TERRAE (Lat.) The law of the land. See "Due Process of Law."

LEX UNO ORE OMNES ALLOQUITUR. The law speaks to all with one mouth. 2 Inst. 184.

LEX VIGILANTIBUS, NON DORMIENTIBUS subvenit. Law assists the wakeful, not the sleeping. 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 502.

LEX WALLENSICA. The Welsh law; the law of Wales. Blount.

LEX WISIGOTHORUM. The law of the Visigoths, or Western Goths, who settled in Spain; first reduced to writing A. D. 466. They were made by Euric, amended by Chindaswindus and Recaswindus. A revision of these laws was made by Egigas. Spelman.

LEY (Old Fr.; a corruption of loi). Law. For example, Termes de la Ley,—Terms of the Law. In another, and an old technical sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, il tend sa ley aiu pleyntiffe. Britt. c. 27.

LEY CIVILE. In old English law. The civil or Roman law. Y. B. H. 8 Edw. III. 42. Otherwise termed ley escripte, the written law. Y. B. 10 Edw. III. 24.

LEY GAGER. Wager of law; an offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators (q. v.), which oath used to be allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," fesans de ley. Termes de la Ley, "Ley"; 2 Barn. & C. 538; 3 Bos. & P. 297; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 16.

LEYES DE ESTILLO. In Spanish law. Laws of the age; a book of explanations of the Fuero Real, to the number of two hundred and fifty-two, formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the thirteenth century or beginning of the fourteenth, and some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. See 1 White, New Recop. p. 354.

LEZE MAJESTY. An offense against sovereign power; treason; rebellion. See "Lese Majesty."

LI. LO. An abbreviation of licentia loquendi, formerly used in practice to signify an imparlance. Towns. Pl. 159.

LIABILITY. Responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed.

LIBEL.

—In Practice. A written statement by a plaintiff, in ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit. Law, Ecc. Law, 17; Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 506; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 111. It performs substantially the same office in the ecclesiastical courts, and those courts which follow the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, as the bill in chancery and the declaration in common-law practice.

—In Torts. That which is written or printed, and published, calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. Parke, J., 15 Mees. & W. 344.

Everything, written or printed, which reflects on the character of another, and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been. 15 Mees. & W. 437.

A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. 1 Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 73, § 1; 4 Mass. 168; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 115; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 214; 1 Denio (N. Y.) 347; 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 434; 9 Barn. & C. 172; 4 Man. & R. 127; 2 Kent, Comm. 13.

It has been defined, perhaps, with more precision, to be a censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals. 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 354; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 215; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 340.

Any publication not oral, which exposes a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or tends to injure him in his business or calling, impairing his standing in society, or cause him to be shunned or avoided by his neighbors. Odgers, Libel & S. 22.

LIBEL OF ACCUSATION. In Scotch law. The instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

Every libel assumes the form of what is termed, in logic, a "syllogism." It is first stated that some particular kind of act is criminal; as, that "theft is a crime of a heinous nature, and severely punishable." This proposition is termed the "major." It is next stated that the person accused is guilty of the crime so named, "actor, or art and part." This, with the narrative of the manner in which, and the time when, the offense was committed, is called the "minor" proposition of the libel. The "conclusion" is that, all or part of the facts being proved, or admitted by confession, the panel "ought to be punished with the pains of the law, to deter others from committing the like crime in all time coming." Burton, Pub. Laws, 300, 301.

LIBELLANT. The party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions in the common-law courts.

LIBELLE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in proceedings in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law suit.

LIBELLUS (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A little book. Libellus simplex, a petition, especially to emperor, all petitions to whom must be in writing. L. 15, Dig. in jus voc. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. L. 2, § 2, Dig. de jur. fisc. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions, L. 12, Dig. de distr. pign.; and one whose duty it is to do so is called magister libellorum. There were also promagistri. L. 1, Dig. de offic. praef. pract. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. L. 17, § 1, and L. 29, § 8, Dig. ad leg. Jul. de adult. Libellus divortii, a writing of divorcement. L. 7, Dig. de divort. et repud. Libellus rerum, an inventory. Calv. Lex. Libellus or oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before senate. Calv. Lex.; Suet. Caes. 56.

LIBER (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A book, whatever the material of which it is made; a principal subdivision of a literary work; thus, the Pandects, or Digest of the Civil Law, is divided into fifty books. L. 52, Dig. de legat.

—In Civil and Old English Law. Free; e. g., a free (liber) bull. Jacob. Exempt from service or jurisdiction of another, e. g., a free (liber) man. L. 3, Dig. de statu hominum.

LIBER ASSISARUM (Lat.) The book of assigns or pleas of the crown; being the fifth part of the Year Books.

LIBER BANCUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free bench. Bracton, fol. 97b.

LIBER ET LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.) A free and lawful man; one worthy of being a juryman. Liberi homines, freemen; owners of land. Wright on Tenures, 66, and note. He must neither be infamous nor a bondman. 3 Bl. Comm. 340, 362; Bracton, fol. 14b; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 25, § 4; Id. lib. 4, c. 5, § 4.

One must only be a freeman and not bound, but also one that hath such freedom of mind that he stands indifferent as he stands unsworn. 144 Ill. 163. See Liber Homo.

LIBER FEUDORUM (Lat.) A code of the feudal law, which was compiled by direction of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published in Milan, in 1170. It was divided into five books, of which the first, second, and some fragments of the others still exist, and are printed at the end of all the modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. Giannone, bk. 13, c. 3; Cruise, Dig. prel. diss. c. 1, § 31.

LIBER HOMO (Lat.) A free man; a free-man lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417; Keb. 563. One must not only be a freeman and not bound, but also one that hath such freedom of mind that he stands indifferent as he stands unsworn. 144 Ill. 163. See, also, Liber Et Legalis Homo.

In London, a man can be a liber homo either (1) by service, as having served his apprenticeship; or (2) by birthright, being a son of a liber homo; or (3) by redemption, i. e., allowance of mayor and aldermen. There was no intermediate state between villein and liber homo. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 22. But a liber homo could be vassal of another. Bracton, fol. 25.

—In Old European Law. An allodial proprietor, as opposed to a feudatory. Calv. Lex. "Alode."

LIBER JUDICIARUM (Lat.) The book of judgment, or doom book. The Saxon Domboc. Conjectured to be a book of statutes of ancient Saxon kings. See Jacob, "Domboc"; 1 Bl. Comm. 64.

LIBER NIGER (Lat.) Black book. A name given to several ancient records. See "Black Book of the Exchequer."

LIBER NIGER SCACCARI (Law Lat.) The Black Book of the Exchequer, attributed to Gervase of Tillbury. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 220, note.

LIBER RUBER SCACCARII (Law Lat.) The Red Book of the Exchequer. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 220, note. See "Red Book of the Exchequer."

LIBERA BATELLA (Law Lat.) In old records. A free boat; the right of having a boat to fish in a certain water; a species of free fishery. Plac. Itin, apud Cestriam, 14 Hen. VII.

LIBERA ELEEMOSYNA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free alms; frankalmoign. Bracton, fol. 27b.

LIBERA FALDA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Frank fold; free fold; free fold-age. 1 Leon. 11.

LIBERA LEX (Law Lat.) In old English law. Frank law; free law; otherwise called lex terrae (q. v.). Called libera, according to Lord Coke, to distinguish men who enjoy it, and whose best and freest birthright it is, from them that by their offenses have lost it. Co. Litt. 94b. Amittere liberam legem, to lose one's frank law. 3 Bl. Comm. 340; 4 Bl. Comm. 136; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 318, 319; Co. Litt. 294b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 8, § 2.

LIBERA PISCARIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A free fishery (q. v.). Co. Litt. 122a.

LIBERA WARRENA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free warren (q. v.)

LIBERAM LEGEM AMITTERE. To lose one's free law (called the villainous judgment) to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators, but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment. Hawk. P. C. 61, c. 72, § 9; 3 Inst. 221.

LIBERARE.

—In the Civil Law. To free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty. Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. To deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc. Bracton, fols. 116, 176b.

LIBERATA PECUNIA NON LIBERAT offerentem. Money being restored does not set free the party offering. Co. Litt. 207.

LIBERATE (Lat.) In English practice. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent, and in the sheriff's return thereto. See Comyn, Dig. "Statute Staple" (D 6).

LIBERATIO.

—In Old English Law. Livery; money paid for the delivery or use of a thing.

—In Old Scotch Law. Livery; a fee given to a servant or officer. Skene de Verb. Sign.

Money, meat, drink, clothes, etc., yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestic servants. Blount.

LIBERATION. In civil law. The extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 749. Synonymous with "payment." Dig. 50. 16. 47.

LIBERI.

—In Saxon Law. Freemen; the possessors of allodial lands. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. law, 5.

—In the Civil Law. Children. The term included "grandchildren."

LIBERI CHASEA (or CHACIA) (Law Lat.) In old English law. A free chase. Reg. Jud. 87; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 51.

LIBERTAS. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

LIBERTAS ECCLESIASTICA. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

LIBERTAS EST NATURALIS FACULTAS ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Liberty is the natural power of doing whatever one pleases, except that which is restrained by law or force. Co. Litt. 116.

LIBERTAS INAESTIMABILIS RES EST. Liberty is an inestimable good. Dig. 50. 17. 106; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, § 13.

LIBERTAS NON RECIPIT AESTIMATIONEM. Freedom does not admit a valuation. Bracton, 14.

LIBERTAS OMNIBUS REBUS FAVORABILIOR EST. Liberty is more favored than all things. Dig. 50. 17. 122.

LIBERTAS REGALES AD CORONAM spectantes ex concessione regum a corona exierunt. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings. 2 Inst. 496.

LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262.

LIBERTATIBUS EXIGENDIS IN ITINERE. An ancient writ, whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defense of another's liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

LIBERTI, or LIBERTINI. In Roman law. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 99.

There is some distinction between these words. By libertus was understood the freedman when considered in relation to his patron, who had bestowed liberty upon him; and he was called libertinus when considered in relation to the state he occupied in society subsequent to his manumission, Lec. Dr. Civ. § 93.

LIBERTICIDE. A destroyer of liberty.

LIBERTIES. Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction.

LIBERTINUM INGRATUM LEGES CIVILES in pristinam servitutem redigunt; sed leges Angliæ semel manumissum semper liberum judicant. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free. Co. Litt. 137.

LIBERTY (Lat. liber, free; libertas, freedom, liberty). Freedom from restraint; the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without.

As used in the constitution means not only freedom of the citizen from servitude and restraint, but embraces the right of every man to be free in the use of his powers and faculties, and to adopt and pursue such calling as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare. 231 Ill. 346; 193 Ill. 345; 185 Ill. 139; 161 Ill. 296; 217 Ill. 248; 155 Mass. 117; 109 N. Y. 389; 16 Wall. 36; 113 Pa. St. 431; 33 W. Va. 179.

A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which some men enjoy greater privileges than ordinary subjects.

A territory with some extraordinary privilege.

A part of a town or city; as, the Northern Liberties of Philadelphia. See "Faubourg."

Civil liberty is the greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state.

The term is frequently used to denote the amount of absolute liberty which is actually enjoyed by the various citizens under the government and laws of the state as administered. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

The fullest political liberty furnishes the best possible guaranty for civil liberty.

Lieber defines civil liberty as guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection, including Blackstone's divisions of civil and political under this head.

Natural liberty is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consonant to their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. Burlam. Nat. Law, c. 3, § 15; 1 Bl. Comm. 125. It is called by Lieber "social" liberty, and is defined as the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of.

Personal liberty consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. 1 Bl. Comm. 134.

Political liberty is an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws. Lieber, Civ. Lib.

Liberty, in its widest sense, means the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without. It means self-determination, unrestrainedness of action. Thus defined, one being only can be absolutely free, namely, God. So soon as we apply the word "liberty" to spheres of human action, the term receives a relative meaning, because the power of man is limited; he is subject to constant influences from without. If the idea of unrestrainedness of action is applied to the social state of man, it receives a limitation still greater, since the equal claims of unrestrained action of all necessarily involves the idea of protection against interference by others. We thus come to the definition, that liberty of social man consists in the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of, or in the most efficient protection of his rights, claims, interests, as man or citizen, or of his humanity, manifested as a social being. See "Right." The word "liberty," applied to men in their political state, may be viewed with reference to the state as a whole, and in this case means the independence of the state, of other states; or it may have reference to the relation of the citizen to the government, in which case it is called "political" or "civil" liberty; or it may have reference to the status of a man as a political being, contradistinguished from him who is not considered master over his body, will, or labor,—the slave. This is called "personal" liberty, which, as a matter of course, includes freedom from prison.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends. 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 394. The right to print without previous license or restraint, subject to the consequences of law. 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 628; 13 W. Va. 182.

LIBERTY OF THE RULES. A privilege to go out of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons within certain limits, and there reside. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

LIBERTY TO HOLD PLEAS. The liberty of having a court of one's own. Thus, certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

LIBERUM CORPUS AESTIMATIONEM non recipit. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation. Dig. 9. 8. 7.

LIBERUM EST CUIQUE APUD SE EXPLORARE an expediat sibi consilium. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interests. 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 181, 184.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM (Lat.) In old English law. Frank marriage (q. v.) 2 Bl. Comm. 115; Litt. § 17; Bracton, fol. 21.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service; service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called servitium liberum armorum. Somn. Gavelkind, p. 56; Jacob; 4 Coke, 9.

Service not unbecoming character of freemen and soldiers to perform; as, to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 60. The tenure of free service does not make a villein a free man, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bracton, fol. 24.

LIBERUM SOCAGIUM. In old English law. Free socage. Bracton, fol. 207; 2 Bl. Comm. 61, 62.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM.

—In Real Law. Freehold; frank tenement. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1690; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 46.

—In Pleading. A plea in justification by the defendant in an action of trespass, by which he claims that he is the owner of the close described in the declaration, or that it is the freehold of some third person, by whose command he entered. 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term R. 355; 1 Wm. Saund. 299b, note.

It has the effect of compelling the plaintiff to a new assignment, setting out the abutments where he has the locus in quo only generally in his declaration (11 East, 51, 72; 16 East, 343; 1 Barn. & C. 489); or to set forth tenancy in case he claims as tenant of the defendant, or the person ordering the trespass (1 Saund. 299b). It admits possession by the plaintiff, and the fact of the commission of a trespass as charged. 2 McCord (S. C.) 226.

LIBLAC. In Saxon law. Witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters.

LIBLACUM. In Saxon law. Bewitching any person; also a barbarous sacrifice.

LIBRA ARSA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound burned; that is, melted, or assayed by melting, to test its purity. Librae arsaes et pensatae, pounds burned and weighed. A frequent expression in Domesday Book, to denote the purer coin in which rents were paid. Spelman; Cowell.

LIBRA NUMERATA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound counted; that is, paid or reckoned by tale (ad numerum), instead of being weighed. Spelman.

LIBRA PENSA (or PENSATA) (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound weighed, or tried by weight. Spelman. See "Libra Arsa."

LIBRARIUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A writer or amanuensis; a copyist. Dig. 50. 17. 92. See Calv. Lex.

LIBRATA (Law Lat. from libra, a pound). In old English law. A quantity of land yielding a pound rent per annum; a pound land. Bracton, fol. 16; Reg. Orig. 1b, 94; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, 41; Cowell, voc. "Fardingdeal."

LIBRIPENS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A weigher, or balance holder; the person who held a brazen balance in the ceremony of emancipation per aes et libram. Inst. 2. 10. 1; Adam, Rom. Ant. 52.

LIBRORUM APPELLATIONE CONTINENTUR OMNIA VOLUMINA, SIVE IN CHARTA, SIVE IN MEMBRANA SINT, SIVE IN QUAVIS ALIA MATERIA. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether upon paper, or parchment, or any other material. Dig. 32. 52. pr. et per tot.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish law. Lawyer or advocate. By a decree of the Spanish government of 6th November, 1843, it was declared that all persons who have obtained diplomas of "Licentiate in Jurisprudence" from any of the literary universities of Spain are entitled to practice in all the courts of Spain without first obtaining permission by the tribunals of justice.

Their title is furnished them by the minister of the interior, to whom the universities forward a list of those whom they think qualified.

This law does not apply to those already licensed, who may, however, obtain the benefit of it, upon surrendering their license and complying with certain other formalities prescribed by the law.

LICENSE (Lat. licere, to permit).

—By Government. An authorization by the government to an individual to do certain acts, or carry on a certain business. Thus, marriage licenses, saloon keepers' licenses, pilots' licenses, etc.

—In Contracts. A permission; a right given by some competent authority to do an act which, without such authority, would be illegal.

An authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. 11 Mass. 533; 4 Sands. Ch. (N. Y.) 72; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148.

The written evidence of the grant of such right.

An executed license exists where the licensed act has been done.

An executory license exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

An express license is one which is granted in direct terms.

An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and a lease, or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148.

A license may be by specialty (2 Pars. Cont. 22); by parol (13 Mees. & W. 838; 4 Maule & S. 562; 7 Barb. [N. Y.] 4; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148); or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock (Hob. 62; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427).

—In International Law. Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, to carry on a trade interdicted by war. Wheaton. Int. Law, 475.

—In Patent Law. A right granted by a patentee to another to use or vend the patented article.

—In Pleading. A plea of justification to an action of trespass, that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the freehold to commit the trespass complained of.

A license must be specially pleaded to an action of trespass (2 Term R. 166), but may be given in evidence in an action on the case (2 Mod. 6; 8 East, 308).

LICENSEE. A person to whom a license has been granted.

—Invitation. In a strict and legal sense there is a distinction between a mere licensee and one who comes upon the premises of another by invitation, express or implied. While in a general sense one upon the premises of another by invitation is a licensee, in a legal sense an invitation gives the visitor a different status from that of a licensee, and entitles him to a somewhat higher degree of care from the owner. 141 Ill. App. 437; 200 Ill. 122; 235 Ill. 526.

—Naked Licensee. A person on premises by permission of law but without invitation from the owner is a mere naked licensee. 179 Ill. App. 604; 143 Ill. 189.

LICENSOR. The grantor of a license.

LICENTIA. Lat. [from licere, to be lawful.] License; liberty; permission.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI (Lat. leave to agree). One of the formal steps in the levying a fine. When an action is brought for the purpose of levying a fine, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of accommodation to the plaintiff, who accepts them, but, having given pledges to prosecute his suit, applies to the court, upon the return of the writ of covenant, for leave to make the matter up. This, which is readily granted, is called the licentia concordandi. 5 Coke, 39; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, 22.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. Impar lance.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In old English law. Liberty of rising; a liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant, who is essoined, de malo lecti, in a real action, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bracton, lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10.

LICENTIA TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to keeper of port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let the person who has this license of the king pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 93.

LICENTIATE. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The doing what one pleases, without regard to the rights of others. It differs from liberty in this, that the latter is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas the former does not respect those rights. Wolff. Inst. § 84.

In a narrower sense, lewdness or lasciviousness.

LICERE, or LICERI (Lat.) In Roman law. To offer a price for a thing; to bid for it.

LICET (Lat.) It is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Id omne licitum est, quod non est legibus prohibitum, quamobrem, quod, lege permitte, fit, poenam non meretur. Licere dicimus quod legibus, moribus, institutisque conceditur. Cic. Philip. 13; L. 42, D. ff. de ritu nupt. Est aliquid quod non oporteat; tametsi licet; quicquid vero non licet certe non oportet. L. verbum oportere, ff. de verb. et rer. sign.

Although. Calv. Lex. An averment that "although such a thing is done or not done" is not implicative of the doing or not doing, but a direct averment of it. Plowd. 127.

LICET DISPOSITIO DE INTERESSE FUTURO sit inutilis tamen potest fieri declaratio praecedens quae sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu. Although the grant of a future interest be inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made which may take effect, provided a new act intervene. Bac. Max. reg. 14; Broom, Leg. Max. London Ed.) 600.

LICET SAEPIUS REQUISITUS (Lat. although often requested). In pleading. A formal allegation in a declaration that the defendant has been often requested to perform the acts of nonperformance of which is complained of.

It is usually alleged in the declaration that the defendant, licet saepius requisitus, etc., he did not perform the contract the violation of which is the foundation of the action. This allegation is generally sufficient when a request is not parcel of the contract. Indeed, in such cases it is unnecessary even to lay a general request; for the bringing of the suit is itself a sufficient request. 1 Saund. 33, note 2; 2 Saund. 118, note 3; Plowd. 128; 1 Wils. 33; 2 H. Bl. 131; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99, 319; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 462; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 485; 3 Maule & S. 150. See "Demand."

LICITA BENE MISCENTUR, FORMULA nisi juris obstet. Misful acts may well be fused into one, unless some form of law forbid; e. g., two having a right to convey, each a moiety, may unite and convey the whole. Bac. Max. 94; Crabb, Real Prop. 179.

LICITACION. In Spanish law. The sale made at public auction by coproprietors, or coheirs, of their joint property which is not susceptible of being advantageously divided in kind.

LICITARE (Lat.) In Roman law. To offer a price at a sale; to bid; to bid often; to make several bids, one above another. Calv. Lex.

LICITATION. In civil law. An offering for sale to the highest bidder, or to him who will give most for a thing. An act by which coheirs or other coproprietors of a thing in common and undivided between them put it to bid between them, to be adjusted and to belong to the highest and last bidder, upon condition that he pay to each of his coproprietors a part in the price equal to the undivided part which each of the said coproprietors had in the estate licited, before the adjudication. Poth. Cont. Sale, notes 516, 638.

LICITATOR. In Roman law. A bidder at a sale.

LIDFORD LAW. See "Lynch Law."

LIEGE (from liga, a bond, or litis, a man wholly at command of his lord). In feudal law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king's subjects. St. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c. 2. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict. But in ancient times private persons, as lords of manors, had their lieges. Jacob; 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

Liege, or ligius, was used in old records for full, pure, or perfect; e. g., ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Par. Ant. 280. Probably in this sense derived from legitima. So in Scotland. See "Liege Poustie."

LIEGE HOMAGE. Homage based on allegiance, as opposed to that which implied merely an acknowledgment of tenure. The former was due to the sovereign alone, while the latter was rendered to any superior lord of whom lands were held. 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

LIEGE LORD. A sovereign; a superior lord.

LIEGE POUSTIE (legitima potestas). In Scotch law. That state of health which gives a person full power to dispose of, mortis causa, or otherwise, his heritable property. Bell, Dict.

LIEGEMAN. He that oweth allegiance. Cowell.

LIEGER, or LEGER. A resident ambassador.

LIEGES, or LIEGE PEOPLE. Subjects.

LIEN. A French word which originally signified a string, tie, or band, and in the metaphorical sense in which the law now uses it, it signifies the hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as security for the satisfaction of a debt, duty or demand, by which he may, if in possession of the property, detain it until the same is satisfied. 2 South. (N. J.) 441. Actual possession by the lien claimant being essential. 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 467.

The term may be defined as a charge imposed on specific property, real or personal, by which it is made security for the performance of an act. 4 Cliff. (U. S.) 225.

In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property. It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that a mortgage is made and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment, or, as in case of a judgment, by mere act of the law, without any act of the party. In this general sense, the word is commonly used by English and American law writers to include those preferred or privileged claims given by statute or by admiralty law, and which seem to have been adopted from the civil law, as well as the security existing at common law, to which the term more exactly applies.

Liens are divided, in respect to their origin and nature, into common law, civil law, equitable, maritime, and statutory.

(1) Common-law liens. As distinguished from the other classes, they consist in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid.

In the case of a factor, an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties, and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds, the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves.

A particular lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property. Whit. Liens, 9.

A general lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner. 3 Bos. & P. 494.

(2) Civil-law liens. The civil law embraces, under the head of mortgages and privilege, the peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law, and equity, are termed "liens."

In regard to privilege, Domat says: "We do not reckon in the number of privileges the preference which the creditor has on the movables that have been given him in a pawn, and which are in his custody. The privilege of a creditor is the distinguishing right which the nature of his credit gives him, and which makes him to be preferred before other creditors, even those who are prior in time, and who have mortgages." Domat. Civ. Law, pt. 1, lib. iii. tit. i. § v.

These privileges are of two kinds: One gives a preference on all the goods, without any particular assignment on any one thing; the other gives to the creditors their security on certain things, and not on the other goods.

(3) Equitable liens. Such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance.

A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem. It is not property in the thing, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing to which they are attached as an incumbrance, and they can be enforced only in courts of equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217.

An equitable lien on a sale of realty is very different from a lien at law, for it operates after the possession has been changed, and is available by way of charge instead of detainer. Adams, Eq. Jur. 127.

(4) Maritime liens. Maritime liens do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession. 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 62. See 15 Bost. Law Rep. 555; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 1, 264; 17 Bost. Law Rep. 93, 421. A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession. 7 How. (U. S.) 729.

(5) Statutory liens. Under this head it is convenient to consider some of those liens which subsist at common law, but have been extensively modified by statutory regulations, as well as those which subsist entirely by force of statutory regulations.

The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and liens of materialmen and builders.

Liens, whether common-law, equitable, or statutory, are either conventional, i. e., by express agreement of the parties, or by operation of law, by legal implication from the acts of parties.

LIEN OF A COVENANT. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

LIENOR. One who holds or owns a lien.

LIEU, LEU, LIU, or LYU (Law Fr.; from Lat. locus). A place. Britt. c. 27.

LIEU CONUS (Law Fr.) In old pleading. A known place; a place well known and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it, as a castle, a manor, etc. Wishaw; 1 Ld. Raym. 259. "A liberty is in the nature of a lieu conus." North, C. J., 2 Mod. 48; Wishaw, 1 Ld. Raym. 259.

LIEUTENANT. This word has now a narrower meaning than it formerly had. Its true meaning is a deputy, a substitute, from the French lieu (place or post) and tenant (holder). Among civil officers we have lieutenant governors, who in certain cases perform the duties of governors, lieutenants of police, etc. Among military men, "lieutenant general" was formerly the title of a commanding general, but now it signifies the degree above major general. Lieutenant colonel is the officer between the colonel and the major. Lieutenant, simply, signifies the officer next below a captain.

LIFE ANNUITY. An annual income to be paid during the continuation of a particular life. See "Annuity."

LIFE ASSURANCE. An insurance of a life upon the payment of a premium. This may be for the whole life, or for a limited time. On the death of the person whose life has been insured during the time for which it is insured, the insurer is bound to pay to the beneficiary the money agreed upon. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1231. See "Loss."

LIFE ESTATE. An estate whose duration is limited to the life of the party holding it, or of some other person; a freehold estate, not of inheritance. 4 Kent, Comm. 23, 25.

LIFE INSURANCE. A contract of insurance wherein the insurer agrees to pay a specified sum in the event of the death of a particular person, if it occurs at a time and under circumstances within the terms of the contract.

LIFE INTEREST. An interest, limited by the term of the life, either of the person in whom the right is vested, or of another.

LIFE, LIBERTY AND PROPERTY. This phrase embraces every personal, political and civil right or liberty which any person within the state may possess, including the right to labor, to make and terminate contracts and to acquire property, right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, the right to buy and sell as others may. By no authority can any person be deprived of any of these rights or restricted in their exercise except by due process of law, by a statute general in its operation and affecting in the same way all persons similarly situated. 249 Ill. 514.

LIFE PEERAGE. Letters patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the house of lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the house. Wharton.

LIFE POLICY. A policy of life insurance.

LIFE RENT. In Scotch law. A right to use and enjoy a thing during life, the substance of it being preserved.

A life rent cannot, therefore, be constituted upon things which perish in the use; and though it may upon subjects which gradually wear out by time, as household furniture, etc., yet it is generally applied to heritable subjects. Life rents are divided into conventional and legal.

The conventional are either simple or by reservation. A simple life rent, or by a separate constitution, is that which is granted by the proprietor in favor of another. A life rent by reservation is that which a proprietor reserves to himself in the same writing by which he conveys the fee to another. Life rents by law are the terce and the curtesy (q. v.).

LIFE RENTER. In Scotch law. A tenant for life without waste. Bell, Dict.

LIGA (Law Lat.) On old European law. A league or confederation (foedus, confoederatio). Spelman.

LIGAN, or LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. 5 Coke, 108; Harg. St. Tr. 48; 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

LIGARE (Lat.) To tie, or bind. Bracton, fol. 369b.

To enter into a league or treaty (inire foedus). Spelman.

LIGEA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A liege woman; a female subject. Reg. Orig. 312b.

LIGEANCE. The true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. It signifies, also, the territory of a sovereign. See "Allegiance."

LIGEANTIA EST QUASI LEGIS ESSENTIA; est vinculum fidel. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of the law; it is the bond of faith. Co. Litt. 129.

LIGEANTIA NATURALIS, NULLIS claustris coercetur, nullis metis refrænatur, nullis finibus premitur. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, curbed by no bounds, compressed by no limits. 7 Coke, 10.

LIGHTERMAN. The owner or manager of a lighter; a lighterman is considered as a common carrier. See "Lighters."

LIGHTERS. Small vessels employed in loading and unloading larger vessels.

The owners of lighters are liable like other common carriers for hire. It is a term of the contract on the part of the carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employments for which he offers and holds it forth to the public. It is the immediate foundation and substratum of the contract that it is so; the law presumes a promise to that effect on the part of the carrier, without actual proof; and every principle of sound policy and public convenience requires it should be so. 5 East. 428; Abb. Shipp. 225; 1 Marsh. Ins. 254; Park, Ins. 23; Weskett, Ins. 328; Pars. Mar. Law.

LIGHTS. Those openings in a wall which are made rather for the admission of light than to look out of. 6 J. B. Moore, 47; 9 Bing. 305. See "Ancient Lights."

Lamps carried on board vessels, under statutory regulations or otherwise, for the purpose of preventing collisions at night.

Lamps or lights placed in lighthouses, or other conspicuous positions, as aids to navigation at night.

LIGIUS. A tie or bond allegiance.

LIGNA ET LAPIDES SUB "ARMORUM" appellatione non continentur. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of arms. Bracton, 144b.

LIGULA. In old English law. A copy, exemplification, or transcript of a court roll or deed. Cowell.

LIMB. Ordinarily, only a member useful in fight, and the loss of which would amount to mayhem at common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

Sometimes metaphorically used for general physical safety.

LIMENARCHA (Graeco-Lat.) In the Roman law. An officer who had charge of a harbor or port. Dig. 50. 4. 18. 10; Code 7. 16. 38.

LIMITATION OF ASSIZE. In old practice. A certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seised of lands sued for by a writ of assize. Cowell.

LIMITATION, WORDS OF. See "Words of Limitation."

LIMITATIONS.

—Of Actions. The statutory restriction of the time within which action may be brought.

—Of Criminal Prosecutions. The statutory restriction of the time within which indictment may be found for an offense.

—Of Estates. A circumscription of the quantity of time comprised in any estate. 1 Prest. Est. 25.

The definition or circumscription, in any conveyance, of the interest which the grantee is intended to take. The term is used by different writers in different senses. Thus, it is used by Lord Coke to denote the express definition of an estate by the words of its creation, so that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Co. Litt. 23b. In the work of Mr. Sanders on Uses, the term is used, however, in a broader and more general sense, as given in the second definition above. 1 Sanders, Uses (4th Ed.) 121 et seq. And, indeed, the same writers do not always confine themselves to one use of the term, though the better usage is undoubtedly given by Mr. Stephen in his note below cited. And see Fearne, Cont. Rem. (Butler's note [n]; 9th Ed.) 10; 1 Steph. Comm. (5th Ed.) 304, note. For the distinctions between limitations and remainders, see "Conditional Limitation"; "Contingent Remainder."

Consult, generally, Angell, Ballantine, and Price, on Limitations; Flintoff and Washburn on Real Property; Barbour and Bishop on Criminal Law.

LIMITED. Restricted; bounded; prescribed; confined within positive bounds; restricted in duration, extent, or scope.

LIMITED ADMINISTRATION. Special administration. See "Administration."

LIMITED DIVORCE. A divorce a mensa et thoro. See "Divorce."

LIMITED FEE. A general term, opposed to fee simple, and covering all qualified or conditional estates of inheritance in lands. It includes base fees, conditional fees, and fees tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 109.

LIMITED JURISDICTION. See "Jurisdiction."

LIMITED OWNER. One whose title in lands is less than a fee simple.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP. One wherein the liability of one or more of the members is, by compliance with certain statutory provisions, limited to the amount of their contribution to the capital stock. The term "special partnership" is sometimes used; but "limited partnership" seems better, for "particular partnerships," or partnerships for a single transaction, are sometimes called "special partnerships."

LINARIUM (Law Lat. from linum, flax). In old records. A place where flax is sown; a flax plat. Pat. 22 Hen. IV. par. 1, m. 33; Blount.

LINE.

—In Descents. The series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other, in the order of their birth. It connects successively all the relations by blood to each other. See "Consanguinity"; "Degree."

The line is either direct or collateral. The direct line is composed of all the persons who are descended from each other. If, in the direct line, any one person is assumed as the propositus, in order to count from him upwards and downwards, the line will be divided into two parts, the ascending and descending lines. The ascending line is that which, counting from the propositus, ascends to his ancestors, to his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. The descending line is that which, counting from the same person, descends to his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc. The preceding table is an example.

The collateral line, considered by itself, and in relation to the common ancestor, is a direct line. It becomes collateral when placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. For example:

These two lines are independent of each other; they have no connection except by their union in the person of the common ancestor. This reunion is what forms the relation among the persons composing the two lines.

A line is also paternal or maternal. In the examination of a person's ascending line, the line ascends first to his father, next to his paternal grandfather, his paternal great-grandfather, etc., so on from father to father. This is called the paternal line. Another line will be found to ascend from the same person to his mother, his maternal grandmother, and so from mother to mother. This is the maternal line. These lines, however, do not take in all the ascendants; there are many others who must be imagined.

See 2 Bl. Comm. 200 bk. 2, c. 14; Poth. des Success. c. 1, art. 3, § 2; "Ascendants."

—Boundary Lines. The division between two estates. Limit; border; boundary.

—Measures. A line is a lineal measure, containing the one-twelfth part of an inch.

LINEA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. A line; a series of persons descending from a common stock (series personarum a communi stipite descendendum). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 10, § 153. It was ascendens as well as descendens. Hale, Anal. § 18; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11.

LINEA RECTA (Lat.) The perpendicular line; the direct line; the line of ascent, through father, grandfather, etc., and of descent, through son, grandson, etc. Co. Litt. 10, 158; Bracton, fol. 67; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. This is represented in a diagram by a vertical line.

Persons springing from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called "ascendants" and "descendants." Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 129.

LINEA RECTA EST INDEX SUI ET OB liqui; lex est linea recti. A right line is an index of itself and of an oblique; law is a line of right. Co. Litt. 158.

LINEA RECTA SEMPER PRAEFERTUR transversali. The right line is always preferred to the collateral. Co. Litt. 10; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; 1 Steph. Comm. (4th Ed.) 406.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS (Lat.) A line crossing the perpendicular lines. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called "collaterals," and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

LINEAL. In a direct line.

LINEAL CONSANGUINITY. That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards, in the direct descending line. 2 Bl. Comm. 203; 198 Ill. 317.

LINEAL DESCENT. Descent in a right line, as where an estate descends from ancestor to heir in one line of succession, as opposed to collateral descent, which is descent in a transverse or zigzag line, namely, up through the common ancestor, and then down from him.

LINEAL WARRANTY. A warranty by ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to heir. 2 Bl. Comm. 301; Rawle, Cov. 30; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 360. Thus, a warrant by an elder son during lifetime of father was lineal to a younger son, but a warranty by younger son was collateral to elder; for, though the younger might take the paternal estate through the elder, the elder could not take it through the younger. Litt. § 703. Abolished. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, § 14.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary lines and their angles with each other. 17 Miss. 459; 21 Ala. 66; 9 Fost. & H. (N. H.) 471; 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; 16 Ga. 141.

LINGUA. (Lat.) A tongue; speech. Applied, in old English law, to the verdict of a jury.

LIQUERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To be clear, evident, or satisfactory. When a judex was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the praetor, under oath, sibi non liquere, that it was not clear to him, and was thereupon discharged. Calv. Lex.

LIQUET. It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears. 1 Strange, 412.

LIQUEUR. A liquor compounded of alcohol, water, sugar, and different aromatic substances. 28 Fed. Cas. 141.

LIQUIDATE. To pay; to settle. Webster; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 322.

To ascertain or make certain in amount. 20 Ga. 53.

LIQUIDATED ACCOUNT. A liquidated account is one the amount of which is agreed upon by the parties or is fixed by operation of law. 61 Conn. 568; 15 Ga. 321; 43 Conn. 469.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Liquidated damages are ascertained damages. 48 Ill. 408.

LIQUIDATED DEBT. A debt is liquidated when its amount and the fact that it is due are certain. 69 Ill. 523.

LIQUIDATING PARTNER. The member of a dissolved partnership who winds up its business. Shumaker, Partn. 128.

LIQUIDATION. A fixed and determinate valuation of things which before were uncertain.

LIQUIDATOR. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company.

LIRRA. (Law Fr.) It shall be lawful. Lirroit; it should be lawful. Kelham.

LIS (Lat.) A controversy or dispute. See "Lis Mota."

A suit at law; an action; a controversy carried on in form of law. In the civil law, this was a more general term than actio. Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, the term lis signifies every kind of action. Dig. 50. 16. 36; Co. Litt. 292.

LIS ALIBI PENDENS. A suit pending elsewhere. The fact that proceedings are pending between a plaintiff and defendant in one court in respect to a given matter is frequently a ground for preventing the plaintiff from taking proceedings in another court against the same defendant for the same object, and arising out of the same cause of action. Rapalje & L.

LIS MOTA (Lat.) A controversy begun i. e., on the point at issue, and prior to commencement of judicial proceedings. Such controversy is taken to arise on the advent of the state of facts on which the claim rests; and after such controversy has arisen (post litem motam), no declarations of deceased members of family as to matters of pedigree are admissible. 6 Car. & P. 560; 4 Campb. 417; 2 Russ. & M. 161; Greenl. Ev. §§ 131, 132; 4 Maule & S. 497; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 337; 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 177.

LIS PENDENS (Lat.) A pending suit.

The control which a court has, during the pendency of an action, over property involved therein. Bennett, Lis Pendens, § 2.

The property involved is the res. Its character remains fixed during the litigation, and this litigated or contested quality is called res litigiosa. Lis pendens, notice of lis pendens, and rule lis pendens, when used without reference to a statute defining their meaning, are synonymous terms. Bennett, Lis Pendens, §§ 2, 59.

One who purchases property pending an action concerning it (pendente lite, q. v.) takes subject to the event of the action, the maxim of the law being pendente lite nihil innovetur.

All real property is subject to lis pendens (45 N. H. 517), and all personalty (37 Pa. St. 353; 23 Wis. 1), except negotiable paper (103 U. S. 806; 48 N. Y. 613).

To constitute lis pendens there must be an action actually commenced (27 Mo. 560) in a court of competent jurisdiction, involving the title to particular property (13 R. I. 102), to which the claimant of the property is a party (24 Iowa 155), and the property must be sufficiently described in the pleadings so that it can be identified by reasonable inquiry (4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 39).

LIST. A table of cases arranged for trial or argument; as, the trial list, the argument list. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3031. See "Calendar."

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Rev. St. Vt. 538.

LITE PENDENTE (Lat.) Pending the suit. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 23.

LITEM SUAM FACERE (Lat.) To make a suit his own. Where a judex, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litem suam facere. Calv. Lex.

LITERA (Lat.) A letter; the letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See "Letter."

LITERA PISANA. The Pisan letter. A term applied to the old character in which the copy of the Pandects formerly kept at Pisa, in Italy, was written. Spelman.

LITERAE. Letters. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.

LITERAE DIMISSORIAE. Dimissory letters. See "Dimissoriae Litterae."

LITERAE HUMANIORES. A term including Greek, Latin, general philology, logic, moral philosophy, metaphysics; the name of the principal course of study in the University of Oxford. Wharton.

LITERAE MORTUAE. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute. Lord Bacon observes that "there are in every statute certain words which are as veins, where the life and blood of the statute cometh, and where all doubts do arise, and the rest are litterae mortuae, fulfilling words." Bac. St. Uses, (Works, iv. 189).

LITERAE PATENTES. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

LITERAE PATENTES REGIS NON erunt vacuae Letters patent of the king shall not be void. 1 Bulst. 6.

LITERAE PROCURATORIAE (Lat.) In civil law. Letters procuratory; a written authority, or power of attorney (litera attorneyati), given to a procurator. Vicat; Bracton, fols. 40-43.

LITERAE RECOGNITIONIS. In maritime law. A bill of lading. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 172.

LITERAE SCRIPTAE MANENT. Written words last.

LITERAE SIGILLATAE. In old English law. Sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing. This contract is perfected by the writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Lec. Elm. § 887.

LITERAL PROOF. In civil law. Written evidence.

LITERARY PROPERTY. The interest of an author, or those who claim under him, in his work before or after publication, and with or without copyright. Drone, Copyright, 97.

Literary property is the common-law ownership of the original work. Copyright is the statutory right to make all the copies of it that shall be made for a term of years. Abbott.

The scope of such property is, in the absence of copyright laws, that an author has the sole right of first printing and publishing his writings. 4 Burrows, 2408. The author's property right is lost as soon as he prints and publishes the manuscript (8 Pet. [U. S.] 591); though a private use or circulation of a manuscript, as for the purpose of instructing students, will not forfeit the author's literary property.

By statute, a penalty is denounced against the publication of a manuscript without the author's consent. Rev. St. U. S. § 4966.

LITERATURA (Lat. from litera, a letter). In old English law. Education; learning; knowledge of letters. Ad literaturam ponere, to put to learning; to put to school. Par. Ant. 401; Cowell. Minus sufficiens in literatura, deficient in education.

LITERIS OBLIGATIO. In Roman law. The contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing (scriptura). It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversaria) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor (nomen); and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called nomina transscriptitia. No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium, i. e., a real contract, re contractus, and not a nomen proprium. Brown.

LITIGANT. One engaged in a suit; one fond of litigation.

LITIGARE (Lat.) To litigate; to carry on a suit (litem agere), either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

LITIGATE. To contend in form of law.

LITIGATION. A contest, authorized by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

LITIGIOSA RES. See "Lis Pendens."

LITIGIOSITY. In Scotch law. The pendency of a suit. It is an implied prohibition of alienation, to the disappointment of an action, or of diligence, the direct object of which is to obtain possession, or to acquire the property of a particular subject. The effect of it is analogous to that of inhibition. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 152. See "Lis Pendens."

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, litigious signifies a disposition to sue; a fondness for litigation.

LITIGIOUS RIGHTS. In French law. Those which are or may be contested either in whole or in part, whether an action has been commenced, or when there is reason to apprehend one. Poth. Vente, note 584; 9 Mart. (La.) 183; Tropl. de la Vente, note 984 a 1003; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 2623; Eva Civ. Code, art. 3522, note 22. See "Contentious Jurisdiction."

LITIS AESTIMATIO. The measure of damages.

LITIS CONTESTATIO.

—In the Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself.

—In the Practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denies the matter charged against him in the libel. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 11, No. 9.

LITIS DOMINIUM. In civil law. Ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 10, §§ 1246, 1247.

LITIS NOMEN ACTIONEM SIGNIFICAT, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. The word lis, i. e., a lawsuit, signifies every action, whether in rem or in personam. Co. Litt. 292.

LITISPENDENCE. An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish law. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

In order to render this condition valid, it is necessary that the judge be competent to take cognizance of the cause; that the defendant has been duly cited to appear, and fully informed, in due time and form, of the nature of the demand, or that, if he has not, it has been through his own fault or fraud.

The litispendencia produces two effects: The legal impossibility of alienating the property in dispute during the pendency of the suit; the accumulation of all the proceedings in the cause, in the tribunal where the suit is pending, whether the same be had before the same judge or other judges or notaries. This cumulation may be required in any stage of the cause, and forms a valid exception to the further proceeding, until the cumulation is effected. Escriche, Di. Raz.

LITRE. A French measure of capacity. It is of the size of a decimetre, or one-tenth part of a cubic metre. It is equal to 61.028 cubic inches. See "Measure."

LITTORAL (litus). Belonging to shore; as, of sea and great lakes. Webster. Corresponding to riparian proprietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. Although used coextensively with "riparian," 7 Cush. (Mass.) 94, its employment is preferred to "riparian," in respect to the shores of the sea, and also, according to important authorities, as including "riparian." Gould Waters, § 148; 2 Ex. D. 63; 17 How. 432, 433; 7 Allen 158, 167; Smith v. Power, 14 Texas 146.

LITTORAL PROPRIETOR. One whose lands border upon tide waters, as distinguished from lands bounding on a water-course. See "Riparian Proprietors." There appears to be no word or phrase of sufficiently broad meaning to include both riparian and littoral, although each is sometimes used to denote the other. Gould Waters, § 148. See "Littoral."

LITURA. In civil law. An obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument. Dig. 28. 4. 1. 1.

LITUS EST QUOUSQUE MAXIMUS fluctus a mari pervenit. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached. Dig. 50. 16. 96; Angell, Tide Waters, 67.

LITUS MARIS (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. Shore; beach. Qua fluctus eluderet. Cic. Top. c. 7. Qua fluctus adluit. Quinct. lib. 5, c. ult. Quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Celsus. Said to have been first so defined by Cicero, in an award as arbitrator. L. 92, D, de verb. signif. Qua maximus fluctus exaestuatur. L. 112, D. eod. tit. Quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. lib. 2, de rer. divis. et qual. § 3. That is to say, as far as the largest winter wave runs up. Vocab.

—At Common Law. The shore between common high-water mark and low-water mark. Hale de Jur. Mar. cc. 4, 5, 6; 3 Kent, Comm. 427; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 90.

Shore is also used of a river. 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 385; 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 149. See 13 How. (U. S.) 381; 28 Me. 180; 14 Pa. St. 171.

LIVERY. In English law. The delivery of possession of lands to those tenants who hold of the king in capita or by knight's service.

The name of a writ which lay for the heir of age to obtain possession of the seisin of his lands at the king's hands. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 155; 2 Bl. Comm. 68.

The distinguishing dress worn by the servants of a gentleman or nobleman, or by the members of a particular guild. "Livery or clothing." Sayer, 274. By St. 1 Rich. II. c. 7, and St. 16 Rich. II. c. 4, none but the servants of a lord, and continually dwelling in his house, or those above rank of yeomen, should wear the lord's livery.

Privilege of a particular company or guild. Wharton.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. In estates. A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments unto one entitled to the same. This was a ceremony used in the common law for the conveyance of real estate; and livery was in deed, which was performed by the feoffor and the feoffee going upon the land, and the latter receiving it from the former; or in law, where the same was not made on the land, but in sight of it. 2 Bl. Comm. 315, 316.

In most of the states, livery of seisin is unnecessary, it having been dispensed with either by express law or by usage. The recording of the deed has the same effect. Washb. Real Prop. 14, 35. In Maryland, however, it seems that a deed cannot operate as a feoffment without livery of seisin. 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158. See 4 Kent, Comm. 381; 1 Mo. 553; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 508; 1 Bay (S. C.) 107; 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158; 11 Me. 318; Dane, Abr. See "Seisin."

LIVERY STABLE. A place where horses and vehicles are kept to be let to the public. See 30 La. Ann. 1095.

Though some other related business may be carried on, as the boarding of horses for hire, the keeper of the stable is, as to such, an agister, etc., as the case may be, not a livery stable keeper.

LIVORARE. (Law Lat.) In old European law. To beat; to bruise by beating. Marculf. lib. 1, form. 29.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. In common law. A coin used in France before the revolution. It is to be computed, in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act March 2, 1798, § 61 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 629). See "Foreign Coins."

LLOYDS. A mutual fire and marine insurance association, the members underwriting each other's policies.

LOADMANAGE. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail or row before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way. Poth. des Avaries, note 137; Guidon de la Mer, c. 14; Bac. Abr. "Merchant and Merchandise" (F). It is not in use in the United States.

LOAN. A bailment without reward; a bailment of an article for use or consumption without reward; the thing so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but in some cases a loan may be for a reward; as, the loan of money. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 109.

It would be an inquiry too purely speculative whether this use of the term "loan" originated in the times when taking interest was considered usury, and improper, the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind. The supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation of the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee.

In order to make a contract usurious, there must be a loan (Cowp. 112, 770; 1 Ves. Jr. 527; 2 Bl. 859; 3 Wils. 390), and the borrower must be bound to return the money at all events (2 Schoales & L. 470). The purchase of a bond or note is not a loan (3 Schoales & L. 469; 9 Pet. [U. S.] 103); but if such a purchase be merely colorable, it will be considered as a loan (2 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 60, 66; 12 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 46; 15 Johns. [N. Y.] 44).

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION. A contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the "lender," delivers it to the bailee, called the "borrower," to be returned in kind. For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of "bailments," but it lacks the one essential element of bailment—that of a return of the property. It is more strictly a barter or an exchange; the property passes to the borrower. 4 N. Y. 76; 8 N. Y. 433; 1 Ohio St. 98; 3 Mason (U. S.) 478; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 353; Story, Bailm. § 439. Those cases sometimes called mutuum (the corresponding civil-law term), such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into wheat, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services, or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale; payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money.

LOAN FOR USE. A bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use. 2 Kent, Comm. (4th Ed.) 573.

Loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes. They are of comparatively recent origin in England, and are authorized and regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, and 21 Vict. c. 19.

LOBBYING. Personal solicitation of a member of a legislative body during a session thereof, by one not a member, with reference to any matter pending in the legislature, so called from the fact that such solicitation is supposed to take place in the "lobby" of the legislative hall.

The term is generally used in a bad sense, as including only secret or wrongful solicitation, and not the submission of petitions, or the presentation of arguments, at a proper time and place.

As a general rule, all contracts for personal solicitation of legislators, or the use of personal influence with them, are void, though no bribery or other corrupt practice is contemplated. 36 N. Y. 241; 101 U. S. 108. But the professional services of a lawyer may be employed for legitimate purposes connected with pending legislation, such as the presentation of evidence or argument openly, and at proper times and places. 80 Va. 475; 21 Wall. (U. S.) 441.

L'OBLIGATION SANS CAUSE, OU SUR UNE FAUSSE CAUSE, OU SUR CAUSE ILLICITE, NE PEUT AVOIR AUCUN EFFET. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect. Code, § 3. 4; Chit. Cont. (10th Am. Ed.) 25, note.

LOCAL (Law Lat. localis, from locus, place). Relating to place; expressive of place; belonging or confined to a particular place. Distinguished from general, personal and transitory.

LOCAL ACTION. In practice. An action the cause of which could have arisen in some particular county only.

All local actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.

In general, all actions are local which seek the recovery of real property (2 W. Bl. 1070; 4 Term R. 504; 7 Term R. 589), whether founded upon contract or not; or damages for injury to such property, as waste, under the statute of Cloucester, trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass or case for injuries affecting things real, as for nuisances to houses or lands, disturbance of rights of way or of common, obstruction or diversion of ancient watercourses (1 Chit. Pl. 271; Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 105, 106, 107); but not if there were a contract between the parties on which to ground an action (15 Mass. 284; 1 Day [Conn.] 263).

Many actions arising out of injuries to local rights are local; as, quare impedit. 1 Chit. Pl. 241. The action of replevin is also local. 1 Wm. Saund. 247, note 1; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 111; Comyn, Dig. "Action." See "Transitory Action."

LOCAL ALLEGIANCE. The allegiance due to a government from an alien while within its limits. 1 Bl. Comm. 370; 2 Kent, Comm. 63, 64.

LOCAL CHATTEL. A fixture.

LOCAL COURT. A court whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular locality. Sometimes applied to the courts of the home jurisdiction, as opposed to foreign courts.

LOCAL CUSTOM. One whose observance is confined to a particular locality.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Government confined to a certain locality. The autonomous government of a minor subdivision of a state or country, as opposed to the general government.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS. Improvements made in a particular locality, by which the real estate in that locality is specially benefited. Cooley, Tax'n, 109, 177, 419.

The question whether an improvement is local depends not on whether it is of use to the general public, but on the special benefit which will result to the real property adjoining or near the locality in which it is made. 22 Minn. 507. See "Special Assessments."

LOCAL OPTION. A privilege granted to a locality of determining by popular vote whether a general law shall be effective in that locality. Usually applied to the determination by popular vote whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor shall be allowed in a particular locality.

LOCAL PREJUDICE. A prejudice against a litigant, or in favor of his adversary, prevailing in a particular locality, and tending to prevent a fair trial there. Such prejudice is ground for change of venue.

LOCAL STATUTES. Statutes whose operation is intended to be restricted within certain limits, much less than the limits of the legislative jurisdiction. A statute is not local because it excludes from its operation one or two counties in the state. See 86 N. Y. 7; Dwarr. St. p. 384. It may be either public or private. 1 Bl. Comm. 85, 86, note. "Local statutes" is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to "personal statutes," which relate to personal transitory contracts; whereas local statutes refer to things in a certain jurisdiction alone; e. g., the statute of frauds relates only to things in England. 1 W. Bl. 246.

LOCAL TAXES. Taxes (more often called "assessment") limited to certain civil divisions of the state or city.

LOCAL VENUE. The venue of a local action (q. v.).

LOCALITY. In Scotch law. This name is given to a life rent created in marriage contracts in favor of the wife, instead of leaving her to her legal life rent of terce. 1 Bell, Comm. 55. See "Jointure."

LOCARE. To let for hire; to deliver or bail a thing for a certain reward or compensation. Bracton, fol. 62.

LOCARIUM. In old European law. The price of letting; money paid for the hire of a thing; rent. Spelman.

LOCATARIUS. In civil law. A depositary.

LOCATE. To fix or definitely determine.

LOCATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Letting for hire. Calv. Lex.; Vocat. The term is also used by text writers upon the law of bailment at common law. 1 Pars. Cont. 602. In Scotch law it is translated "location." Bell, Dict.

LOCATIO-CONDUCTIO. In civil law. A compound word used to denote the contract of bailment for hire, expressing the action of both parties, viz., a letting by the one, and a hiring by the other. 2 Kent, Comm. 586, note; Story, Bailm. § 368.

LOCATIO CUSTODIAE. A letting to keep; a bailment or deposit of goods for hire. Story, Bailm. § 442.

LOCATIO MERCIUM VEHENDARUM (Lat.) In civil law. The carriage of goods for hire.

In respect to contracts of this sort entered into by private persons not exercising the business of common carriers, there does not seem to be any material distinction varying the rights, obligations, and duties of the parties from those of other bailees for hire. Every such private person is bound to ordinary diligence and a reasonable exercise of skill; and of course he is not responsible for any losses not occasioned by ordinary negligence, unless he has expressly, by the terms of his contract, taken upon himself such risk. 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 917, 918; 4 Taunt. 787; 6 Taunt. 577; 2 Marsh. 293; Jones, Bailm. 103, 106, 121; 2 Bos. & P. 417; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1020. See "Common Carriers."

LOCATIO OPERIS (Lat.) In civil law. The hiring of labor and services.

It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 392. This is divided into two branches: First, locatio operis faciendi; and, secondly, locatio mercium vehendarum (q. v.).

LOCATIO OPERIS FACIENDI (Lat.) In civil law. Hire of services to be performed.

There are two kinds: First, the locatio operis faciendi, strictly so called, or the hire of labor and services; such as the hire of tailors to make clothes, and of jewelers to set gems, and of watchmakers to repair watches. Jones, Bailm. 90, 96, 97. Secondly, locatio custodiae, or the receiving of goods on deposit for a reward, which is properly the hire of care and attention about the goods. Story, Bailm. §§ 422, 442; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 994.

In contracts for work, it is of the essence of the contract, first, that there should be work to be done; secondly, for a price or reward; and, thirdly, a lawful contract between parties capable and intending to contract. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, notes 395-408.

LOCATIO REI (Lat.) In civil law. The hiring of a thing. It is a contract by which one of the parties obligates himself to give to the other the use and enjoyment of a certain thing for a period of time agreed upon between them, and in consideration of a price which the latter binds himself to pay in return. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 1.

LOCATION. In the apportionment of public lands, the selection and designation of lands which the person making the location claims under the law.

—In Scotch Law. A contract by which the temporary use of a subject, or the work or service of a person, is given for an ascertained hire. 1 Bell, Comm. bk. 2, pt. 3, c. 2, sec. 4, art. 2, § 1, p. 255. See "Bailment"; "Hire."

LOCATIVE CALLS. Calls describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified.

Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds by which the land to be located is exactly described. 2 Bibb (Ky.) 145; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 414.

Special, as distinguished from general, calls or descriptions. 3 Bibb (Ky.) 414; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 211; 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 463; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 171; 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 157;

16 Johns. (N. Y.) 257; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 29; 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; Jones Law (N. C.) 469; 16 Ga. 141; 5 Ind. 302; 15 Mo. 80; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 118.

LOCATOR. In civil law. He who leases or lets a thing to hire to another. His duties are, first, to deliver to the hirer the thing hired, that he may use it; second, to guarantee to the hirer the free enjoyment of it; third, to keep the thing hired in good order in such manner that the hirer may enjoy it; fourth, to warrant that the thing hired has not such defects as to destroy its use. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 53.

LOCKMAN. An officer in the Isle of Man to execute the orders of the governor, something like our undersheriff. Wharton.

LOCKOUT. The closing of a factory or workshop by an employer, usually in order to bring the workmen to satisfactory terms by a suspension of wages. 202 Ill. 398.

LOCK UP HOUSE. A place used temporarily as a prison.

LOCO PARENTIS. See "In Loco Parentis."

LOCOCESSION (Lat.) In the civil law. The act of giving place.

LOCUM TENENS (Lat.) Holding the place. Applied to a deputy.

LOCUPLES (Lat.) In civil law. Able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover. Dig. 50. 16. 234. 1.

LOCUS (Lat.) A place; the place where a thing is done.

LOCUS CONTRACTUS. See "Lex Loci."

LOCUS CONTRACTUS REGIT ACTUM. The place of the contract governs the act. 2 Kent, Comm. 458.

LOCUS CRIMINIS. The locality of a crime; the place where a crime was committed.

LOCUS DELICTI. The place where the tort, offense, or injury has been committed.

LOCUS IN QUO (Lat.) the place in which). In pleading. The place where anything is alleged to have been done. 1 Salk. 94.

LOCUS PARTITUS. In old English law. A place divided; a division made between two towns or counties to make out in which the land or place in question lies. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 1; Cowell.

LOCUS PRO SOLUTIONE REDITUS aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandus. The place for the payment of rent or money is to be strictly observed according to the condition of the lease or obligation. 4 Coke, 73.

LOCUS PUBLICUS. In civil law. A public place. Dig. 43. 8. 1; Id. 43. 8. 2. 3.

LOCUS REGIT ACTUM. In private international law. The rule that, when a legal transaction complies with the formalities required by the law of the country where it is done, it is also valid in the country where it is to be given effect, although by the law of that country other formalities are required. 8 Savigny, System, § 381; Westl. Priv. Int. Law, 159.

LOCUS REI SITAE. See "Lex Rei Sitae."

LOCUS SIGILLI. The place of the seal. The letters L. S. (an abbreviation of locus sigilli) surrounded by a scroll, is in some states held a good seal (5 Wis. 549), but in others a common-law seal is required. See "Seals."

LOCUS STANDI. A place of standing; standing in court. A right of appearance in a court of justice, or before a legislative body, on a given question.

LODEMAN. In old English law. A kind of pilot who navigated a vessel within a harbor. Jacob.

LODEMANAGE. Pilotage fees paid to a lodeman.

LODGER. One who inhabits a portion of a house of which another has the general possession and custody. It is by this retention of general possession and control by another that a "lodger" is distinguished from a "tenant." 40 L. J. C. P. 188; L. R. 6 C. P. 360. A lodger has no interest in the real estate. 117 Cal. 71.

It is difficult, in the present state of the law, to state exactly the distinctions between a "lodger," a "guest," and a "boarder." A person may be a guest at an inn without being a lodger. 1 Salk. 388; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 653; 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 242; 16 Ala. (N. S.) 666; 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 535; 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 193; 6 C. B. 132. And boarder includes one who regularly takes his meals with, and forms in some degree a part of, the householder's family. 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 76.

LODGING HOUSE. A lodging house is distinguished from a hotel in that the keeper specially deals with his customers by contracting personally with the customer for the nature of the accommodation to be provided, the duration of the stay, and exercises the right to reject all applicants at his pleasure. 168 Wis. 119. See "Hotel."

LODS ET RENTES. A fine payable to the seigneur upon every sale of lands within his seignior. 1 Low. (U. S.) 59.

Any transfer of lands for a consideration gives rise to the claim (1 Low. [U. S.] 79): as, the creation of a rente viagere (life rent) (1 Low. [U. S.] 84); a transfer under bail emphyteotique (1 Low. [U. S.] 295); a promise to sell, accompanied by transfer of possession (9 Low. [U. S.] 272). It does not arise on a transfer by a father to his son subject to a payment by the son of a life rent to the father, and of the father's debts (8 Low. [U. S.] 5, 34, 324); nor where property is required for public uses (1 Low. [U. S.] 91).

LOG BOOK. A ship's journal. It contains a minute account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. 1 Marsh. Ins. 408.

LOG ROLLING. A name given to a legislative practice of obtaining the passage of several measures by a combination of minorities. The original method was to embody the different measures in a single bill, and pass the same by a united vote of the minorities favoring each. This practice is now rendered impossible by constitutional provision in most of the states, that no bill shall embrace more than one subject. The term is now applied to the practice of agreement by minorities favoring several bills to vote for all. 106 Ill. 206.

LOGIA or LOGIUM. A small house.

LOGOGRAPHUS. In Roman law. A public clerk or accountant.

LOIAL. (Law Fr.) Lawful. Kelham. *

LOLLARDS A body of primitive Wesleyans, who assumed importance about the time of John Wycliffe (1360), and were very successful in disseminating evangelical truth; but, being implicated (apparently against their will) in the insurrection of the villeins in 1381, the statute De Haereticis Comburendo (2 Hen. IV. c. 15) was passed against them, for their suppression. Brown.

LOMBARDS. A name given to the merchants of Italy, numbers of whom, during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were established as merchants and bankers in the principal cities of Europe.

LONG. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG INTEREST. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG PARLIAMENT. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The name "Long Parliament" is, however, also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II." Mozley & W.

LONG QUINTO, THE. An expression used to denote part second of the Year Book which gives reports of cases in 5 Edw. IV.

LONG VACATION. The recess of the English courts from August 10th to October 24th.

LONGA PATIENTIA TRAHITUR AD consensum. Long sufferance is construed as consent. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 4.

LONGA POSSESSIO EST PACIS JUS. Long possession is the law of peace. Co. Litt. 6.

LONGA POSSESSIO JUS PARIT. Long possession begets right. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 6.

LONGA POSSESSIO PARIT JUS POSSIDENDI, et tollit actionem vero domino. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action. Co. Litt. 110.

LONGUM TEMPUS, ET LONGUS USUS qui excedit memoria hominum, sufficit pro jure. Long time, and long use beyond the memory of man, suffices for right. Co. Litt. 115.

LOOSE WOMAN. A loose woman, a woman of loose character, is an unchaste woman in the ordinary signification of those terms. By an unchaste woman is meant a sexually impure woman, ordinarily. 68 Vt. 320.

LOPWOOD. A right in the inhabitants of a parish, within a manor in England, to lop for fuel, at certain periods of the year, the branches of trees growing upon the waste lands of the manor.

LOQUELA (Lat.) In practice. An imparlance, loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Formerly by loquela was meant the allegations of fact mutually made on either side, now denominated the "pleadings." Steph. Pl. 29.

LOQUENDUM UT VULGUS; SENTIENDUM ut docti. We should speak as the common people; we should think as the learned. 7 Coke, 11.

LORD.

—In Feudal Law. The superior of whom land is held by feudal tenure.

—In English Law. A title belonging to the degree of baron, but sometimes applied to all persons of nobility. 1 Bl. Comm. 396.

LORD ADVOCATE. The chief public prosecutor of Scotland. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 84.

LORD CHIEF BARON. The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE. See "Justice."

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. See "Chancellor, The Lord High."

LORD HIGH STEWARD. In England, when a person is impeached, or when a peer is tried on indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords is appointed lord high steward, and acts as speaker pro tempore. Sweet.

LORD HIGH TREASURER. An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lord's commissioners of the treasury. Mozley & W.

LORD IN GROSS. In feudal law. He who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. "Very lord" is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and "very tenant," he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant. Wharton.

LORD JUSTICE CLERK. The second judicial officer in Scotland.

LORD KEEPER. Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II.'s reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office. Com. Dig. "Chancery" (B 1).

LORD MAYOR'S COURT. In English law. One of the chief courts of special and local jurisdiction in London. It is a court of the queen, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure are amended, and its powers enlarged, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157. In this court, the recorder, or, in his absence, the common serjeant, presides as judge; and from its judgments error may be brought in the exchequer chamber. 3 Steph. Comm. 449, note (1).

LORD OF A MANOR. The grantee or owner of a manor.

LORD ORDINARY. In Scotch law. A judge of sessions officiating for the time being as the judge of first instance.

LORDS APPELLANTS. Five peers who for a time superseded Richard II. in his government, and whom, after a brief control of the government, he in turn superseded in 1397, and put the survivors of them to death. Richard II.'s eighteen commissioners (twelve peers and six commoners) took their place, as an embryo privy council acting with full powers, during the parliamentary recess. Brown.

LORD'S DAY. Sunday. Co. Litt. 135.

LORDS MARCHERS. Those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings.

Abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, and 6 Edw. VI. c. 10. Wharton.

LORDS OF ERECTION. On the reformation in Scotland, the king, as proprietor of benefices formerly held by abbots and priors, gave them out in temporal lordships to favorites, who were termed "lords of erection." Wharton.

LORDS OF PARLIAMENT. Those who have seats in the house of lords. During bankruptcy, peers are disqualified from sitting or voting in the house of lords. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 50. Wharton.

LORDS ORDAINERS. Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward II., for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country. Brown.

LORDS SPIRITUAL. The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

LORDS TEMPORAL. Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

LORDSHIP. Dominion, manor, seignior, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titular appellation of the judges and some other persons in authority and office. Wharton.

LOSS. In insurance. The destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against, according to the express provisions and construction of the contract.

These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils. Marsh. Ins. 1, c. 12.

Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and where the loss is not fraudulent, as where one assured, who assures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.

Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of policy, be by the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured by fire.

In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to, a total loss; for if it be not the latter, it must be the former. See 4 Mass. 374; 6 Mass. 102, 122, 317; 12 Mass. 170, 288; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 237; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 487; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 595; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 553.

A total loss is such destruction of, or damage to, the thing insured that it is of little or no value to the owner.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages. See "Average."

Total losses, in maritime insurance, are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See "Abandonment."

Consult Phil. Ins.; Arnold, Ind.; Pars. Mar. Law. See "Total Loss."

LOST, OR NOT LOST. A phrase in policies of insurance, signifying the contract to be retrospective and applicable to any loss within the specified risk, provided the same is not already known to either of the parties, and that neither has any knowledge or information not equally obvious or known to the other. The clause has been adopted only in maritime insurance; though a fire or life policy is not unfrequently retrospective, or under a different phraseology, by a provision that the risk is to commence at some time prior to its date. 1 Phil. Ins. § 925.

LOST PAPERS. Papers which have been destroyed (107 Mass. 546), or so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search (1 Vt. 470; 9 Gray [Mass.] 351).

LOT. That which fortuitously determines what we are to acquire.

When it can be certainly known what are our rights, we ought never to resort to a decision by lot; but when it is impossible to tell what actually belongs to us, as if an estate is divided into three parts, and one part given to each of three persons, the proper way to ascertain each one's part is to draw lots. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 669.

LOT AND SCOT. In English law. Certain duties which must be paid by those who claim to exercise the elective franchise within certain cities and boroughs, before they are entitled to vote. It is said that the practice became uniform to refer to the poor rate as a register of "scot and lot" voters; so that the term, when employed to define a right of election, meant only the payment by a parishioner of the sum to which he was assessed on the poor rate. Brown.

LOT OF GROUND. A small piece of land in a town or city, usually employed for building a yard, a garden, or such other urban use. 2 Ohio St. 124; 25 Ark. 101. Lots are "in-lots," or those within the boundary of the city or town, and "out-lots," or those which are out of such boundary, and which are used by some of the inhabitants of such town or city.

LOTHERWITE, or LEYERWIT. In old English law. A liberty or privilege to take amends for lying with a bondswoman without license.

LOTTERY. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot to persons buying chances. 49 Ala. 396. A scheme whereby one, on paying money or other valuable thing to another, becomes entitled to receive from him such a return in value or nothing as some formula of chance may determine. Bish. St. Crimes, § 952.

A lottery has been distinguished from a mere bet or wager in that the latter is executory on both sides, and determined by an independent event; while in case of the former, a price is paid for a chance of a prize, and it is determined by the manager of the game, according to a prearranged scheme, whether he who pays the money is to have a prize. 137 Mass. 250.

A gift enterprise (q. v.) is a lottery (37 Tenn. 507), as is any enterprise by which prizes are paid by lot to persons paying to become members of an association (8 N. Y. 228; 33 N. H. 329; 59 Ill. 160).

L'OU LE LEY DONE CHOSE, LA CEO done remede a vener a ceo. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover. 2 Rolle, 17.

LOUAGE (Fr.) This is the contract of hiring and letting in French law, and may be either of things or of labor. The varieties of each are the following:

(1) Letting of things; bail a loyer being the letting of houses; bail a ferme being the letting of lands.

(2) Letting of labor; loyer being the letting of personal service; bail a cheptel being the letting of animals. Brown.

LOUDRES (Law Fr.) London.

LOVE DAY. The day on which any dispute between neighbors was amicably settled, or a day on which one neighbor helped another without hire. Wharton.

LOW JUSTICE. In old European law. Jurisdiction of petty offenses, as distinguished from "high justice" (q. v.).

LOW-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest. 125 Ill. 26. Where the water usually stands when free from disturbing causes. 94 Wis. 642.

The ordinary low-water mark, independent of spring or neap tides on the ocean, or of drought or freshet in respect to rivers. 60 Pa. St. 343. See "High-Water Mark."

LOWBOTE. Recompense for the death of one killed in an affray.

LOYAL. Legal, or according to law; as, loyal matrimony, a lawful marriage.

"Uncore n'est loyal a homme de faire un tort," it is never lawful for a man to do a wrong. Dyer, fol. 36, § 38. "Et per curiam n'est loyal," and it was held by the court that it was not lawful. T. Jones, 24. Also spelled loyal. Dyer, fol. 36, § 38; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. The Norman spelling is "loyse." Kelham.

Faithful to a prince or superior; true to plighted faith or duty. Webster.

LOYALTY. Adherence to law; faithfulness to the existing government.

LUBRICUM LINGUAE NON FACILE trahendum est in poenam. The slipperiness of the tongue, i. e., its liability to err, ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment. Cro. Car. 117.

LUCID INTERVALS. In medical jurisprudence. Periods in which a lunatic is so far free from his disease that the ordinary legal consequences of insanity do not apply to acts done therein.

LUCRATIVA CAUSA (Lat.) In Roman law. A consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over. Brown.

LUCRATIVA USUCAPIO (Lat.) This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon a decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or forfeiture of the heir, whence it was called "usucapio pro haerede." The adjective "lucrativa" denoted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a mala fide possessor, his acquisition, or usucapio, was called also "improba," i. e., dishonest; but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the haeres to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the haeres, this usucapio was complete in one year. Brown.

LUCRATIVE SUCCESSION. In Scotch law. The passive title of praeceptio haereditatis, by which, if an heir apparent receive gratuitously a part, however small, of the heritage which would come to him as heir, he is liable for all grantor's precontracted debts. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 87-89; Stair, Inst. 3. 7.

LUCRI CAUSA (Lat. for the sake of gain). In criminal law. A term descriptive of the intent of deriving personal gain with which property is taken in cases of larceny, robbery, and other crimes against property. It is generally held not to be essential (34 Minn. 221; 52 Ala. 411; 17 Tex. 521), though the contrary has been held (1 McAll. [U. S.] 196).

LUCRUM CESSANS. In Scotch law. A cessation of gain. Opposed to damnum emergens, an actual loss.

LUCRUM FACERE EX PUPILLI TUTELA tutor non debet. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 527, 535.

LUCTUOSA HAEREDITAS. A mournful inheritance. See "Haereditas Luctuosa."

LUGGAGE. This term is synonymous with "baggage;" the latter being in more common use in this country, while the former seems to be almost exclusively used in England. It may consist of any article intended for the use of a passenger while traveling, or for his personal equipment. 85 Cal. 330. See "Baggage."

LUM. L. Fr. A man. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 41.

LUMEN. In the civil law. Light; an easement of light. The plural form was lumina.

LUNACY. Lunacy is that condition or habit in which the mind is directed by the will, but is wholly or partially misguided, or erroneously governed by it; or it is the impairment of any one or more faculties of the mind, accompanied with, or inducing a defect in the comparing faculty. 1 Bland Ch. (Md.) 386. See "Insanity."

LUNATIC. One who is insane. See "Insanity."

LUNATICUS, QUI GAUDET IN LUCIDIS intervallis. He is a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals. 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 70.

LUNDRESS. In old English law. A silver penny, so called because it was to be coined only at London, and not at the country mints. Lowndes' Essay on Coins, 17. Cowell.

LUPANATRIX. In Roman law. A bawd.

LUPINUM CAPUT GERERE (Lat.) To be outlawed, and have one's head exposed, like a wolf's, with a reward to him who should take it. Cowell.

LUPULICETUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A hop ground, or place where hops grow. Co. Litt. 4 b.

LUXURY. Excess and extravagance, which was formerly an offense against the public economy, but is not now punishable. 1 Jac. I. c. 25.

LYEF GELD. In Saxon law. Leave money; a small sum paid by customary tenant for leave to plough, etc. Cowell; Somn. Gavelkind, p. 27.

LYING IN FRANCHISE. Things derelict, such as waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action. 3 Steph. Comm. 258.

LYING IN GRANT. Capable of being passed by grant without livery or seisin. Incorporeal rights and things which cannot be transferred by livery of possession, but which exist only in idea, in contemplation of law, are said to lie in grant, and pass by the mere delivery of the need.

LYING IN LIVERY. Incapable of being passed by grant without livery.

LYING IN WAIT. Hiding in ambush or concealment. 122 Ia. 125.

For the purpose of murdering another. 8 W. Va. 769.

To constitute lying in wait, three things must concur, to wit, waiting, watching, and secrecy; and these facts must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, to authorize the conclusion that there was such lying in wait. 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 651.

LYNCH LAW. A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting an injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offense. In England this is called "Lidford Law." See also "Jedburgh Justice."

LYNDHURST'S (LORD) ACT. This statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

LYON KING OF ARMS. In Scotch law. The chief herald.

LYTAE. In the old Roman law. A name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law. Tayl. Civ. Law, 39.

M

M. Persons convicted of manslaughter, in England, were formerly marked with this letter on the brawn of the thumb.

This letter is sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. 13 Pet. (U. S.) 176.

MACE BEARER. In English law. An officer attending the court of session.

MACE PROOF. Secure against arrest.

MACEDONIAN DECREE. In Roman law. A decree of the Roman senate, which derived its name from that of a certain usurer, who was the cause of its being made, in consequence of his exactions.

It was intended to protect sons who lived under the paternal jurisdiction from the unconscionable contracts which they sometimes made on the expectations after their fathers' deaths; another, and perhaps the principal, object, was to cast odium on the rapacious creditors. It declared such contracts void. Dig. 14. 6. 1; Domat, Civ. Law, liv. 1, tit. 6, § 4; Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 2, § 12, note. See "Catching Bargain;" "Post Obit."

MACEGRIEF, or MACEGREF. In old English law. One who bought stolen meats, knowing it to be stolen. Spelman.

MACER. A mace bearer; an officer attending the court of session in Scotland.

MACHINATION. The act by which some plot or conspiracy is contrived or set on foot; an artful design.

MACHINE. In patent law.

In its broadest signification, this term is applied to any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight. "The term 'machine' includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result." 15 How. (U. S.) 267.

What are sometimes called the "simple machines" are six in number: The lever, the pulley, the wheel and axle, the wedge, the screw, and the inclined plane. These are sometimes known as the mechanical powers, though neither these nor any other machinery can ever constitute or create power. They can only economize, control, direct, and render it useful.

Machines, as generally seen and understood, are compounded of these simple machines in some of their shapes and modifications. Such a combination as, when in operation, will produce some specific final result, is regarded as an entire machine. It is so treated in the patent law; for, although a new machine, or a new improvement of a machine, is an invention, and although only one invention can be included in a single patent, still, several different contrivances, each of which is in one sense a machine, may all be separately claimed in a single patent, provided they all contribute to improve or to constitute one machine, and are intended to produce a single ultimate result; and a new combination of machines is patentable, whether the machines themselves be new or old. 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 69; 1 Story (U. S.) 273, 568; 2 Story (U. S.) 609; 1 Mason (U. S.) 474; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 482; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 454.

MACHINERY. This term is said to be more comprehensive than "machine," including the appurtenances necessary to its working. 111 Mass. 540.

MACTATOR. A murderer.

MADE KNOWN. Words used as a return to a scire facias when it has been served on the defendant.

MAEC BURGH (Saxon). Family.

MAEGBOTE, or MAEGBOT. In Saxon law. A recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman. Spelman.

MAEREMIUM (Law Lat. from Law Fr. marisme, timber). In old English law. Timber; wood for the construction of houses or ships. Blount; Bract. fol. 122.

MAGIS (Lat.) More.

MAGIS DE BONO QUAM DE MALO LEX intendit. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. Co. Litt. 78b. Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned "to assign all offices" will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable. Chit. Cont. 78.

MAGIS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE MINUS dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy. Y. B. 20 Hen. VI. 2, arg.

MAGISTER (Lat.) A master; a ruler; one whose learning and position make him superior to others. Thus, one who has attained to a high degree or eminence in science and literature is called a "master;" as, master of arts.

MAGISTER AD FACULTATES (Lat.) In English ecclesiastical law. The title of an officer who grants dispensations; as, to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, and the like. Bac. Abr. "Ecclesiastical Courts" (A 5).

MAGISTER CANCELLARIAE. In old English law. Master in chancery.

MAGISTER EQUITUM. In Roman law. Master of the horse.

MAGISTER LIBELLORUM. In Roman law. Master of requests.

MAGISTER NAVIS (Lat.) In civil law. Master of a ship; he to whom the whole care of a ship is given up, whether appointed by the owner, or charterer, or master. Calv. Lex.; Story, Ag. § 36.

MAGISTER RERUM USUS. Use is the master of things. Co. Litt. 229b. Usage is a principal guide in practice.

MAGISTER RERUM USUS; MAGISTRA rerum experientia. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things. Co. Litt. 69, 229; Wingate, Max. 752.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS (Lat.) In civil law. Managing partner. Vicat; Calv. Lex. Especially used of an officer employed in the business of collecting revenues, who had power to call together the tything men (decumands), as it were a senate, and lay matters before them, and keep account of all receipts, etc. He had, generally, an agent in the province, who was also sometimes called magister societatis. Id.; Story, Partn. § 95.

MAGISTERIAL. Pertaining to a magistrate.

MAGISTRACY. In its most enlarged signification, this term includes all officers, legislative, executive, and judicial. For example, in most of the state constitutions will be found this provision: "The powers of the government are divided into three distinct departments, and each of these is confided to a separate magistracy, to wit, those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judiciary, to another." In a more confined sense, it signifies the body of officers whose duty it is to put the laws in force; as, judges, justices of the peace, and the like. In a still narrower sense, it is employed to designate the body of justices of the peace. It is also used for the office of a magistrate.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA (Lat.) Writs adapted to special cases, and so called because drawn by the masters in chancery. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 239. For the difference between these and judicial writs, see Bracton, 413b.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, invested with some part of the legislative, executive or judicial power given by the constitution. 32 Ark. 127.

The president of the United States is the chief magistrate of this nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of their respective states,

In a narrower sense, an inferior judicial officer, as a justice of the peace. 32 Ark. 127. The term generally applies to judicial officers having power to issue warrants for the arrest of persons charged with crime, but the use of the term has been held not to necessarily imply such a power. 32 Ark. 124.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. The court of a magistrate (q. v.)

—In South Carolina. A court having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of contract of and under twenty dollars.

MAGISTRATUS. In civil law. A magistrate. Calv. Lex.

MAGNA ASSISA. The grand assize.

MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA. See "De Magna, etc."

MAGNA AVENA. Great beasts (oxen, etc.)

MAGNA CENTUM. The great hundred, or six score. Wharton.

MAGNA CHARTA. The great charter of English liberties, so called, but which was really a compact between the king and his barons, and almost exclusively for the benefit of the latter, though confirming the ancient liberties of Englishmen in some few particulars, was wrung from King John by his barons assembled in arms, on the 15th of June, 1215, and was given by the king's hand, as a confirmation of his own act, on the little island in the Thames, within the county of Buckinghamshire, which is still called "Magna Charta Island."

The preliminary interview was held in the meadow of Running Mede, or Runny Mede (from Saxon rune, council), that is, council meadow, which had been used constantly for national assemblies, and which was situated on the southwest side of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor. Though such formalities were observed, the provisions of the charter were disregarded by John and succeeding kings, each of whom, when wishing to do a popular thing, confirmed this charter. There were thirty-two confirmations between 1215 and 1416, the most celebrated of which were those by Hen. III. (1225) and Edw. I., which last confirmation was sealed with the great seal of England at Ghent, on the 5th of November, 1297. The Magna Charta printed in all the books as of 9 Hen. III. is really a transcript of the roll of parliament of 25 Edw. I. There were many originals of Magna Charta made, two of which are preserved in the British Museum.

Magna Charta consists of thirty-seven chapters, the subject matter of which is various. Chapter 1 provides that the Anglican church shall be free, and possess its rights unimpaired, probably referring chiefly to immunity from papal jurisdiction. Chapter 2 fixes relief which shall be paid by king's tenant of full age. Chapter 3 relates to heirs and their being in ward. Chapter 4. Guardians of wards within age are by this chapter restrained from waste of ward's estate, "vasto hominum et rerum," waste of men and of things, which shows that serfs were regarded as slaves even by this much-boasted charter; and as serfs and freemen were at this time the divisions of society, and as freemen included, almost without exception, the nobility alone, we can see somewhat how much this charter deserves its name. Chapter 5 relates to the land and other property of heirs, and the delivering them up when the heirs are of age. Chapter 6 relates to the marriage of heirs. Chapter 7 provides that widow shall have quarantine of forty days in her husband's chief house, and shall have her dower set out to her at once, without paying anything for it, and in meanwhile to have reasonable estovers; the dower to be one-third of lands of husband, unless wife was endowed of less at the church door; widow not to be compelled to marry, but to find surety that she will not marry without consent of the lord of whom she holds. Marriage settlements have now in England taken the place, in great measure, of dower. Chapter 8. The goods and chattels of crown debtor to be exhausted before his rents and lands are distrained; the surety not to be called upon if the principal can pay. If sureties pay the debt, they to have the rents and lands of debtor till the debt is satisfied. Chapter 9 secures to London and other cities and boroughs and town barons of the five ports, and all other ports, to have their ancient liberties. Chapter 10 prohibits excessive distress for more services or rent than was due. Chapter 11 provides that court of common pleas should not follow the court of the king, but should be held in a certain place. They have been, accordingly, located at Westminster. Chapter 12 declares the manner of taking assizes of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor. These were actions to recover lost seisin (q. v.), now abolished. Chapter 13 relates to assizes darein presentment brought by ecclesiastics to try right to present to ecclesiastical benefice. Abolished. Chapter 14 provides that amerement of a freeman for a fault shall be proportionate to his crime, and not excessive, and that the villein of any other than the king shall be amerced in same manner, his farm, utensils, etc., being preserved to him (salvo wanagio suo); for otherwise he could not cultivate lord's land. Chapter 15 and chapter 16 relate to making of bridges, and keeping in repair of sewers and sea walls. This is now regulated by local parochial law. Chapter 17 forbids sheriffs and coroners to hold pleas of the crown. Pleas of the crown are criminal cases which it is desirable should not be tried by an inferior and perhaps ignorant magistrate. Chapter 18 provides that, if any one holding a lay fee from crown die, the king's bailiff, on showing letters patent of summons for debt from the king, may attach all his goods and chattels, so that nothing be moved away till the debt to crown be paid off clearly, the residue to go to executors to perform the testament of the dead; and if there be no debt owing to crown, all the chattels of the deceased to go to executors, reserving, however, to the wife and children their reasonable parts. Debts to the government have precedence in United States, as well as in England. A man can now in England will away his whole personal property from wife and children, but not in some of the United States. See Gen. St. Mass. 1560. Chapter 19 relates to purveyance of king's house. Chapter 20 relates to the castle guard. Chapter 21 relates to taking horses, carts, and wood for use of royal castles. The three last chapters are now obsolete. Chapter 22 provides that the lands of felons shall go to the king for a year and a day; afterwards to the lord of the fee. So in France. The day is added to prevent dispute as to whether the year is exclusive or inclusive of its last day. Chapter 23 provides that the weirs shall be pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and throughout England, except on the sea-coast. These weirs destroyed fish, and interrupted the floating of wood and the like down stream. Chapter 24 relates to the writ of praecipe in capite for lords against their tenants offering wrong, etc. Now abolished. Chapter 25 provides a uniform measure. See 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 63. Chapter 26 relates to inquisitions of life and member, which are to be granted freely. Now abolished. Chapter 27 relates to knight service and other ancient tenures, now abolished. Chapter 28 relates to accusations, which must be under oath. Chapter 29 provides that "no freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised from his freehold, or liberties, or immunities, nor outlawed, nor exiled nor in any manner destroyed, nor will we come upon him or send against him, except by legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land. We will sell or deny justice to none, nor put off right or justice." This clause is very much celebrated, as confirming the right to trial by jury. By common law, the twelve jurors must be unanimous. Lord Campbell, in England, introduced a bill changing this, and, in certain cases, allowing the majority to decide. In some jurisdictions in the United States statutes have been enacted doing away in certain cases with the requirement for a unanimous verdict. Chapter 30 relates to merchant strangers, who are to be civilly treated, and, unless previously prohibited, are to have free passage through, and exit from, and dwelling in, England, without any manner of extortions, except in time of war. If they are of a country at war with England, and found in England at the beginning of the war, they are to be kept safely until it is found out how English merchants are treated in their country, and then are to be treated accordingly. Chapter 31 relates to escheats. Chapter 32 relates to the power of alienation in a freeman, which is limited. Chapter 33 relates to patrons of abbeys, etc. Chapter 34 provides that no appeal shall be brought by a woman except for death of her husband. This was because the defendant could not defend himself against a woman in single combat. The crime of murder or homicide is now inquired into by indictment. Chapter 35 relates to rights of holding county courts, etc. Obsolete. Chapter 36 provides that a gift of lands in mortmain shall be void, and lands so given go to lord of fee. Chapter 37 relates to escuage and subsidy. Chapter 38 confirms every article of the charter.

Magna Charta is said by some to have been so called because larger than the Charta de Foresta, which was given about the same time. Spelman. But see Cowell. Magna Charta is mentioned casually by Bracton, Fleta, and Britton. Glanville is supposed to have written before Magna Charta. The Mirror of Justices (chapter 315 et seq.) has a chapter on its defects. See 2 Inst.; Barr. Obs. St.; 4 Bl. Comm. 423. See a copy of Magna Charta in 1 Laws S. C. edited by Judge Cooper (page 78). In the Penny Magazine for the year 1833 (page 229), there is a copy of the original seal of King John affixed to this instrument; a specimen of a fac simile of the writings of Magna Charta, beginning at the passage, Nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur, etc. A copy of both may be found in the Magasin Pittoresque for the year 1834 (pages 52, 53). See 8 Enc. Brit. 722; 6 Enc. Brit. 332; Wharton.

MAGNA CHARTA AND CHARTA DE FORESTA are called les deux grand charters. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the two great charters. 2 Inst. 570.

MAGNA CULPA DOLUS EST. Great neglect is equivalent to fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226; 2 Spears (S. C.) 256; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 646.

MAGNA NEGLIGENTIA CULPA EST; magna culpa dolus est. Gross negligence is a fault; gross fault is a fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226. Culpa is an intermediate degree of negligence between negligentia, or lack of energetic care, and dolus, or fraud, seeming to approach nearly to our "negligence" in meaning.

MAGNA SERJEANTIA. In old English law. Grand serjeanty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 4, § 1.

MAGNUM CAPE. Grand cape (q. v.)

MAGNUM CENTUM. (L. Lat.) In old records. The great hundred; six-score, or one hundred and twenty. Cart. 20. Cowell.

MAGNUM CONCILIUM. In old English law. The great council; the general council of the realm; afterwards called "parliament." 1 Bl. Comm. 148; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 62; Spelman.

The king's great council of barons and prelates. Spelman; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 228.

MAGNUS ROTULUS STATUTORUM. The great statute roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Charta, and ending with Edward III. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 16, 17.

MAGRE, Maugre. L. Fr. Against the will; in spite of; notwithstanding. Keilham.

MAHEMIUM EST HOMICIDIUM INCHORUM. Mayhem is incipient homicide. 3 Inst. 118.

MAHLBRIEF. Germ. In maritime law. A contract for the building of a vessel, specifying the denomination and size of the vessel, the time when she is to be completed, and the time and manner of payment. Jacobsen's Sea Laws, 2-8. There is no corresponding term for this contract in English.

MAIDEN ASSIZE. In English practice. An assize at which no capital conviction takes place. In such a case, the sheriff of the county presents the judges with white gloves. Wharton's Lex.

MAIDEN RENTS. In old English law. A fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowell.

MAIHEM. See "Mayhem;" "Maim."

MAIHEMATUS. Maimed.

MAIHEMIUM, or MAIHEM. Mayhem (q. v.)

MAIHEMIUM EST INTER CRIMINA MAJORA minimum, et inter minora maximum. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small. Co. Litt. 127.

MAIHEMIUM EST MEMBRI MUTILATIO, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum. Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight. Co. Litt. 126.

MAIL (Fr. malle, a trunk). Originally used in reference to the bag or valise which postillions had behind them, and in which they carried letters. In modern usage it is a general term to express the carriage of letters by public authority. 6 Daly (N. Y.) 558. It is used also in reference to the whole or any part of the matter so carried. 41 Fed. 130.

MAILE. In old English law. A small piece of money; a rent or tribute.

MAILS AND DUTIES. In Scotch law. Rents of an estate. Stair, Inst. 2. 12. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 235, 381, 431-439.

MAIM. In criminal law. To deprive a person of such part of his body as to render him less able in fighting or defending himself than he would have otherwise been. See "Mayhem."

MAINAD. Perjury. Cowell.

MAINE PORT. A small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes. Cowell.

MAINOUR. In criminal law. The thing stolen found in the hands of the thief who has stolen it.

Hence, when a man is found with property which he has stolen, he is said to be taken with the mainour, that is, it is found in his hands.

Formerly there was a distinction made between a larceny, when the thing stolen was found in the hands of the criminal, and when the proof depended upon other circumstances not quite so irrefragable. The former properly was termed pris ove maynovere, or ove mainer, or mainour, as it is generally written. Barr. Obs. St. 315, 316, note.

MAINOVRE, or MAINOEUVRE. A trespass committed by hand. See 7 Rich. II. c. 4.

MAINPERNABLE. Capable of being bailed; one for whom bail may be taken; bailable.

MAINPERNORS. In English law. Those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearance.

Mainpernors differ from bail. A man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are merely sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for all the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 6 Mod. 231; 7 Mod. 77, 85, 98; 3 Bl. Comm. 128. See Dane, Abr.

MAINPRISE. In English law. The taking a man into friendly custody, who might otherwise be committed to prison, upon security given for his appearance at a time and place assigned. Wood. Inst. bk. 4, c. 4.

MAINSWORN. Forsworn, by making false oath with hand (main) on book. Used in the North of England. Brownl. & G. 4; Hob. 125.

MAINTAINED. In pleading. A technical word indispensable in an indictment for maintenance. 1 Wils. 325.

MAINTAINORS. In criminal law. Those who maintain or support a cause depending between others, not being retained as counsel or attorney. For this they may be fined and imprisoned. 2 Swift, Dig. 328; 4 Bl. Comm. 124; Bac. Abr. "Barrator."

MAINTENANCE. Aid, support, assistance; the support which one person, who is bound by law to do so, gives to another for his living; for example, a father is bound to find maintenance for his children; and a child is required by law to maintain his father or mother, when they cannot support themselves, and he has ability to maintain them. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 284-286.

—In Criminal Law. A malicious, or, at least, officious, interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action without any authority of law. 1 Russ. Crimes, 176. See 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 623.

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation. 2 Pars. Cont. 266. See 4 Term. R. 340; 6 Bing. 299; 4 Q. B. 883.

There must be assistance actually rendered (1 Hempst. [Ark.] 300), though the suit need not be pending (13 Ired. [N. C.] 201), and under the modern doctrine, the assistance must be either in giving or hiring legal advice, or the bearing part of the expenses.

But there are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. They may be justified, first, because the party has an interest in the thing in variance, as when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never come in esse (Bac. Abr. "Maintenance." And see 11 Mees. & W. 675; 9 Metc. [Mass.] 489; 13 Metc. [Mass.] 262; 1 Me. 292; 6 Me. 361; 11 Me. 111); second, because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, or heir apparent, or husband or wife (3 Cow. [N. Y.] 623); third, because the relation of landlord and tenant or master and servant subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him; fourth, because the money is given out of charity (1 Bailey [S. C.] 401); fifth, because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is not more justified in giving his client money than another man (1 Russ. Crimes, 179; Bac. Abr. "Maintenance;" Broke, Abr. "Maintenance"). See "Champertry."

MAINZIE (Scotch). Mayhem.

MAIRE.

—In Old English Law. A mayor; an officer classed with justices and sheriffs.

—In Old Scotch Law. An officer to whom process was directed. Otherwise called "mair of fie" (fee), and classed with the serjant. Skene de Verb. Sign.

MAISON DE DIEU (Fr. house of God). A hospital; an almshouse; a monastery. St. 39 Eliz. c. 5.

MAISTER. An old form of master.

MAJESTAS. In Roman law. The magistry or prerogative of the sovereign or state.

MAJESTY. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor. It sometimes means power; as when we say, the majesty of the people. See Wolff. Inst. § 998.

MAJOR. One who has attained his full age, and has acquired all his civil rights; one who is no longer a minor; an adult.

—In Military Law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

MAJOR ANNUS. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days. Bracton, fol. 359b.

MAJOR-GENERAL. In military law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general. He commands a division consisting of several brigades, or even an army.

MAJOR HAEREDITAS VENIT UNICUIQUE nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents. 2 Inst. 56.

MAJOR NUMERUS IN SE CONTINET minorem. The greater number contains in itself the less. Bracton, 16.

MAJORA REGALIA. See "Regalia."

MAJORE POENA AFFECTUS QUAM legibus statuta est, non est infamis. One affected with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous. 4 Inst. 66.

MAJORES.

—In Roman Law and Genealogical Tables. The male ascendants beyond the sixth degree.

—In Old English Law. Greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

MAJORI CONTINET IN SE MINUS. The greater includes the less. 19 Viner, Abr. 379.

MAJORI SUMMAE MINOR INEST. The lesser is included in the greater sum. 2 Kent, Comm. 618; Story, Ag. § 172.

MAJORITY. The state or condition of a person who has arrived at full age. He is then said to be a "major," in opposition to "minor," which is his condition during infancy.

The greater number; more than all the opponents; more than half of the whole number or group. 146 Iowa, 215.

MAJUS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE minus dignum. The more worthy or the greater draws to it the less worthy or the lesser. 5 Viner, Abr. 584, 586; Co. Litt. 43, 355b; 2 Inst. 307; Finch, Law, 22.

MAJUS EST DELICTUM SEIPSUM OCCIDERE quam allum. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another.

MAJUS JUS. In old practice. Greater right, or more right. A plea in the old real actions. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 476. Majus jus merum, more mere right. Bracton, fol. 31.

MAKE. To perform or execute; as, to make his law is to perform that which a man had bound himself to do; that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath and the oath of his neighbors. Old Nat. Brev. 161. To make a contract is to execute the same. To make default is to fail to appear in proper trial. To make oath is to swear according to the form prescribed by law. To make money on an execution is to collect the same. It is also used intransitively of persons and things, to have effect, to tend; e. g., "That case makes for me." Hardr. 133; Webster. See "Facias."

MAKER. A term applied to one who makes a promissory note, and promises to pay it when due.

He who makes a bill of exchange is called the "drawer;" and frequently in common parlance and in books of reports we find the word "drawer" inaccurately applied to the maker of a promissory note. See "Promissory Note."

MAKING HIS LAW. A phrase used to denote the act of a person who wages his law. Bac. Abr. "Wager of Law."

MALA (Lat.) Bad.

MALA FIDES (Lat.) Bad faith. It is opposed to bona fides, good faith.

MALA GRAMMATICA NON VITIAT chartam; sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed; but in the construction of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided. 6 Coke, 39; 9 Coke, 48; Viner, Abr. "Grammar" (A); Lofft, 441; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 612.

MALA IN SE. That which is wrong in itself, without regard to statutory prohibition, because of its palpable and proximate injury to the public peace, order, or morals.

A distinction was formerly made, in respect of contracts, between mala prohibita and mala in se; but that distinction has been exploded, and it is now established that when the provisions of an act of the legislature have for their object the protection of the public, it makes no difference, with respect to contracts, whether the thing be prohibited absolutely or under a penalty. 5 Barn. & Ald. 335, 340; 10 Barn. & C. 98; 3 Starkie, 61; 13 Pick. (Mass.) 518; 2 Bing. N. C. 636, 646. The distinction is, however, important in criminal law in some cases with reference to the question of intent. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 2157.

Thus, one who kills another by accident in committing a misdemeanor mala in se is guilty of manslaughter, but otherwise if the misdemeanor was mala prohibita. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 20.

Crimes mala in se include all common-law offenses, for the common law punishes no act not in itself wrong. See 114 Mass. 323.

MALA PRAXIS. Malpractice (q. v.)

MALA PROHIBITA. That which is wrong only because it is prohibited by statute. 1 Bl. Comm. 57. See "Mala in Se."

MALANDRINUS. In old English law. A thief.

MALBERGE. A hill where the people assembled at a court, like the English assizes, which by the Scotch and Irish were called "parley hills." Du Cange.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young; the sex opposed to the female.

MALE CREDITUS. In old English law. Unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit. Bracton, fols. 116, 154.

MALE FAME. (L. Fr.) Bad character. Stat. Westm. 1, c. 12.

MALEDICTA EXPOSITIO QUAE CORRUMPIT TEXTUM. It is a cursed construction which corrupts the text. 2 Coke, 24; 4 Coke, 35; 11 Coke, 34; Wingate, Max. 26.

MALEDICTION (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses against those who should violate their rights.

MALEFACTOR (Lat.) He who has been guilty of some crime; in another sense, one who has been convicted of having committed a crime.

MALEFICIA NON DEBENT REMANERE IMPUNITA, ET IMPUNITAS CONTINUUM AFFECTUM TRIBUIT DELINQUENTI. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished, and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

MALEFICIA PROPOSITIS DISTINGUUNTUR. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 290.

MALEFICIUM (Lat.) In civil law. Waste damage; torts; injury. Dig. 5. 18. 1.

MALESON, or MALISON. A curse. Bailey.

MALFEASANCE. The unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not, to do. 33 Com. 115. It differs from misfeasance and nonfeasance (q. v.) See 1 Chit. Prac. 9; 1 Chit. Pl. 134.

MALFETRIA. In Spanish law. Offense. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 1, § 1.

MALICE.

—In Crimes. In its broadest legal sense, the term is substantially synonymous with "criminal intent," and means the state of mind of a person, irrespective of his motive, whenever he consciously violates the law. In this sense, every person who is sui juris, and who, without justification or excuse, willfully does an act which is prohibited and made punishable by law as a crime, does the act maliciously. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 139.

Malice, in its legal sense, characterizes all acts done intentionally with an evil disposition, a wrong and unlawful motive and purpose; the willful doing an injurious act without lawful excuse. 9 Metc. (Mass.) 93, or just cause, 194 Mich. 197; 4 B. & C. 255; 107 Mich. 215.

Malice implies not only willfulness, but an absence of lawful excuse. 12 Fla. 117.

In relation to particular crimes, the term is sometimes used in a narrower sense. Thus, as applied to the offense of malicious mischief, it implies a sense of resentment or ill will towards the owner of the property injured. 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558.

Malice is either express or implied. Express malice is actual malice, and exists where a person actually contemplates the injury or wrong which he inflicts. Implied malice, otherwise called "constructive malice," or "malice in law," is that which is imputed by the law from the nature of the act done, irrespective of the actual intent of the party. See 10 N. Y. 120.

—In Torts. Generally, malice implies no more than an absence of legal excuse (4 Wend. [N. Y.] 13); a mind not sufficiently cautious before it inflicts injury upon another (11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 39); but in some connections, as, for example, to authorize the allowance of punitive damages, there must be either actual ill will, or a wanton disregard of consequences (37 Mich. 34; 77 Ill. 280).

Malice, to render one liable in punitive damages, contemplates not merely an injurious act, but an act conceived in a spirit of mischief, or of willful indifference to civil obligations. See 91 U. S. 489.

Specific ill will is not essential (27 Mo. 28); but a general wanton desire to annoy is sufficient to constitute malice (2 Hilt. [N. Y.] 40).

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Wicked purpose. These words in the description of murder do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take and the actual execution of that intent, but rather denote purpose and design, in contradistinction to accident and mischance. 5 Cush. (Mass.) 306. And see 8 Car. & P. 616; 2 Mason (U. S.) 60; 1 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 121, 163; 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299; 3 Ala. (N. S.) 497. They do not imply evil design against a particular person, but evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart. 49 N. H. 399.

The term implies more than "malice" (1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 492). It includes not only a willful doing of wrong without lawful excuse, but an evil purpose, general or particular therein. 2 Moody, 40. See 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 342.

MALICE PREPENSE. Malice aforethought (q. v.)

MALICIOUS. Done with malice (q. v.)

MALICIOUS ARREST. A wanton arrest made without probable cause by a regular process and proceeding. See "Malicious Prosecution."

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF. The wanton or reckless destruction of property.

The word "malicious" is not sufficiently defined as the willfully doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse. In order to a conviction of the offense of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or of wicked revenge. Jacob. "Mischief," "Malicious;" Alis. Sc. Cr. Law, 448; 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558; 2 Metc. (Mass.) 21; 3 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 130; 5 Ired. (N. C.) 364; 8 Leigh (Va.) 719; 3 Me. 177. Authorities are divided as to whether wantonness or general malice is sufficient. That it is not, see 79 N. C. 656; 44 Ala. 380; 49 Miss. 331. Contra, 28 Ga. 380; 44 N. H. 392.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. A judicial proceeding instituted without probable cause (97 U. S. 642; 59 Ind. 500), and with malicious intent (7 Ill. App. 181; 30 N. Y. 625).

While malice may be inferred by the jury from absence of probable cause, the presence of malice in fact is essential. 44 Cal. 144.

At common law, the malicious prosecution of a civil action was actionable (Co. Litt. 161), but in most of the states only the malicious institution of a criminal proceeding is the subject of an action. (4 N. J. Law, 330).

MALIGNARE. To malign or slander; also to maim.

MALITIA (Lat.) Malice. 4 Bl. Comm. 199.

MALITIA EST ACIDA; EST MALI ANIMI affectus. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind. 2 Bulst. 49.

MALITIA PRAECOGITATA. Malice aforethought. 4 Bl. Comm. 198.

MALITIA SUPPLET AETATEM. Malice supplies age. Dyer, 104; 1 Bl. Comm. 464; 4 Bl. Comm. 22, 23, 312; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 284. See "Malice."

MALITIIS HOMINUM EST OBVIANDUM. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted. 4 Coke, 15b.

MALLUM. In old European law. A court of the higher kind (placitum majus), in which the more important business of the county was dispatched by the count or earl (comes). Spelman. A public national assembly. 1 Robertson, Hist. Chas. V. Append. note xl.

MALO ANIMO. With evil intent.

MALO SENSU. In an evil sense.

MALPRACTICE. Bad or unskillful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured.

Physicians and surgeons impliedly contract that they are reasonably and ordinarily qualified to practice the medical profession, and for a failure to possess and exercise such qualifications they are liable. 17 Ind. 115; 21 Minn. 464; 75 N. Y. 12.

Willful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers medicines or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in damage or death to the individual under his care; as in the case of criminal abortion. Elwell, Malprac. 243 et seq.; 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires; as, if a physician should administer medicines, while in a state of intoxication, from which injury would arise to his patient.

Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, and which a well-educated and scientific medical man would know were not proper in the case. Elwell, Malprac. 198 et seq.; 7 Barn. & C. 493, 497; 6 Bing. 440; 6 Mass. 134; 5 Car. & P. 333; 1 Moody & R. 405; 5 Cox, C. C. 587.

MALTREATMENT. Synonymous with bad treatment. 2 Allen (Mass.) 143.

MALT TAX, or MALT SCOT. In English law. An excise duty on malt.

MALUM HOMINUM EST OBVIANDUM. The malicious plans of men must be avoided. 4 Coke, 15.

MALUM IN SE. An act wrong in itself. The plural form is mala in se (q. v.)

MALUM NON HABET EFFICIENTEM, sed deficientem causam. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause. 3 Inst. Proeme.

MALUM NON PRAESUMITUR. Evil is not presumed. 4 Coke, 72; Branch, Princ.

MALUM PROHIBITUM. A thing wrong only because prohibited by law. The plural form is mala prohibita (q. v.)

MALUM QUO COMMUNIUS EO PEJUS. The more common the evil, the worse. Branch, Princ.

MALUM VENIENDI (Fr. mal de venue.) Misfortune or sickness, or accident happening to a party on his way to court. Bract. fol. 339.

MALUS USUS EST ABOLENDUS. An evil custom is to be abolished. Co. Litt. 141; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 827; Litt. § 212; 5 Q. B. 701; 12 Q. B. 845; 2 Myline & K. 449.

MALVEILLES. Ill will. In some ancient records, this word signifies malicious practices, or crimes and misdemeanors.

MALVEIS PROCURORS. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice. Art. Sup. Chart. c. x. Cowell.

MALVERSATION. In French law. This word is applied to all punishable faults committed in the exercise of an office, such as corruptions, exactions, extortions, and larceny. Merlin, Repert.

MAN. A human being; a person of the male sex; a male of the human species above the age of puberty, as distinguished from a woman or a boy. 106 Wis. 346.

In its most extended sense, the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children. Examples: "Of offenses against man, some are more immediately against the king, others more immediately against the subject." Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 2, § 1. "Offenses against the life of man come under the general name of 'homicide,' which in our law signifies the killing of a man by a man." Id. bk. 1, c. 8, § 2.

In a statute prohibiting fornication it will be held to include all male persons who have arrived at the age of puberty, 106 Wis. 346.

It was considered in the civil or Roman law that, although "man" and "person" are synonymous in grammar, they had a different acceptation in law. All persons were men, but not all men—for example, slaves—were not persons, but things. See Barr. Obs. St. 216, note.

MAN OF STRAW. See "Straw Men."

MANAGER. A person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. A term applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 190; 17 Mass. 29.

In England and Canada, the chief executive officer of a branch bank is called a "manager." His duties are those of our presidents and cashiers combined. His signature is necessary to every contract binding on the bank, except entries in the pass-books of customers. He indorses bills, signs bills of exchange and drafts, and conducts the correspondence of the bank. He is under the control of the board of directors of the bank, and there is usually a local or branch board of directors, at which he acts as presiding officer. Sewell, Bank.

One of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

MANAGING AGENT. The managing agent of a corporation is one exercising general powers and having general supervision over its affairs. 16 Wis. 220.

MANAGING OWNER OF SHIP. The managing owner of a ship is one of several co-owners, to whom the others, or those of them who join in the adventure, have delegated the management of the ship. He has authority to do all things usual and necessary in the management of the ship and the delivery of the cargo, to enable her to prosecute her voyage and earn freight, with the right to appoint an agent for the purpose. 6 Q. B. Div. 93; L. R. 1 C. P. 649.

MANAGIUM. A mansion house or dwelling place. Cowell.

MANBOTE. A compensation paid the relations of a murdered man by the murderer or his friends.

MANCEPS. In Roman law. A purchaser; one who took the articles sold in his hand (qui manu cepit); a formality observed in certain sales; a farmer of the public taxes. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 55.

MANCHE PRESENT. A bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

MANCIPARE. In the Roman law. To sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities.

To sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

MANCIPATIO (Lat. from mancipare, q. v.) In the Roman law. A kind of sale in the presence of five witnesses, accompanied with delivery of possession or seisin; the purchaser taking the thing sold in his hand. It took place among Roman citizens only, and was confined to certain property called res Mancipi or mancipia. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 55, 58.

The imaginary sale of a son in the ceremony of emancipation; so called because the natural father gave over (mancipabat, i. e., manu tradebat) his son to the purchaser, adding these words, Mancupo tibi hunc filium qui meus est. Adams, Rom. Ant. 52; Cooper, Just. Inst. notes, *442, 443.

MANCIPI RES (Lat.) In old Roman law. A name given to one of the leading divisions of private property, the precise meaning of which is not settled. Ulpian defines or describes it as embracing estates in Italy (praedia in Italico solo) which were acquired by mancipation, usucapion, or adjudication, those rights of country estates called servitudes, slaves, and working animals. Calv. Lex. Gibbon explains it to mean things originally taken in war (manu capti), and which were sold in the particular form called mancipatio, in order to assure the purchaser that they had been the property of an enemy, and not of a fellow citizen. 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. (Am. Ed. 1844) 176.

MANCIPIUM. The power acquired over a freeman by the mancipatio.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater-familias, viz.: The manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per aes et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater-familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is that, on the emancipation from the mancipium, he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater-familias. Si pater filium ter venum duit, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginarium quaedam venditio, because in his time it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See "Adoption;" "Pater-Familias;" 1 Ortolan, 112 et seq.

MANCOMUNAL. In Spanish law. An obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 120.

MANDAMIENTO. In Spanish law. Commission; authority or power of attorney; a contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 12, c. 1.

MANDAMUS. In practice. This is a high prerogative writ, usually issuing out of the highest court of general jurisdiction in a state, in the name of the sovereignty, directed to any natural person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within its jurisdiction, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which appertains to their office or duty. 3 Bl. Comm. 110; 4 Bac. Abr. 495; Opinion of Marshall, C. J., 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137, 168.

It is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a specific act where the act is ministerial in its character (12 Pet. [U. S.] 524; 34 Pa. St. 293; 26 Ga. 665; 7 Iowa, 186, 390); but where the act is of a discretionary (6 How. [U. S.] 92; 11 How. [U. S.] 272; 17 How. [U. S.] 284; 12 Cush. [Mass.] 403; 20 Tex. 60; 10 Cal. 376; 5 Har. [Del.] 108; 12 Md. 329; 4 Mich. 187; 5 Ohio St. 528) or judicial nature (14 La. Ann. 60; 7 Cal. 130; 18 B. Mon. [Ky.] 423; 7 El. & Bl. 366), it will lie only to compel action generally (11 Cal. 42; 30 Ala. [N. S.] 49; 28 Mo. 259); and where the necessity of acting is a matter of discretion, it will not lie even to compel action (6 How. [U. S.] 92; 5 Iowa, 380).

The writ of mandamus is either alternative or peremptory. The former usually issued at the commencement of the suit, commanding in the alternative that defendant do the specified act, or show cause why he should not, and the latter, issued after hearing, commanding the performance of the decree without alternative.

MANDANS. In civil law. The employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him. Inst. 3. 27. 1. et seq.

MANDANT. The ballor in a contract of mandate.

MANDATA LICITA STRICTAM RECIPIUNT interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful, a wide or broad construction. Bac. Max. reg. 16.

MANDATAIRE. In French law. A mandatary.

MANDATARIUS TERMINOS SIBI POSITOS transgredi non potest. A mandatary cannot exceed the bounds of his authority. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 53.

MANDATARY, or MANDATARIUS. One who undertakes to perform a mandate. Jones, Bailm. 53.

MANDATE.

—In Practice. A judicial command or precept issued by a court or magistrate, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. Commonly applied to the precept issued by an appellate court after decision of the cause, commanding the lower court to proceed therein.

—In Contracts. A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137; 148 Ill. 186.

The contract of mandate in the civil law is not limited to personal property, nor does it require a delivery of personal property when it relates to that. Poth. de Mand. note 1; Civ. Code La. arts. 2954-2964. It is, however, restricted to things of a personal nature at common law, and of these there must be a delivery, actual or constructive. Story, Bailm. § 142; 3 Strob. (S. C.) 343.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits the custody is the principal thing and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140.

—In Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor addressed to a public functionary, and which were to serve as rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictionis, and were ordinarily binding on the legates or lieutenants of the emperor of the imperial provinces, and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 3, § 24, note 4.

—International Law. The authority under which former German colonies were taken over and administered under the treaty of Versailles.

MANDATO. In Spanish law. The contract of mandate. Escriche, Dic. Raz., Schmidt, Civ. Law, 197.

MANDATOR. The person who consigns property to another under a contract of mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138.

MANDATORY. Containing a command; preceptory. As applied to statutes, a provision is mandatory if proceedings in disregard of it are absolutely void. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 79.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. One which commands the doing of some affirmative act by the person to whom it is directed. See 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 106; 25 Fed. 654; High, Inj. § 478.

MANDATUM. In the civil law. Mandate (q. v.)

MANDATUM NISI GRATUITUM NUL- lum est. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate. Dig. 17. 1. 1. 4; Inst. 3. 27; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1070.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. In English practice. The return made by a sheriff when he has committed the execution of a writ to a bailiff of a liberty, who has the right to execute the writ.

MANENS (pl. manentes; Law Lat. from manere, to remain or stay). In Saxon and old English law. A kind of tenant inhabiting a manse (mansu incolu); an agricultural tenant (qui hydan colit). Spelman. The ceorls are mentioned in the later Anglo-Saxon charters, under the name of manentes. 1 Spence, Ch. 50.

MANERA. In Spanish law. Manner or mode. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 4, lib. 2.

MANERIUM DICITUR A MANENDO, SE- cundum excellentiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm. Co. Litt. 58.

MANHOOD. In feudal law. A term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was devenio vester homo, I become your man. 2 Bl. Comm. 54. See "Homage."

MANIA. In medical jurisprudence. This is the most common of all the forms of recent insanity, and consists of one or both of the following conditions, viz., intellectual aberration, and morbid or affective obliquity.

In other words, the maniac either misapprehends the true relations between persons and things, in consequence of which he adopts notions manifestly absurd, and believes in occurrences that never did and never could take place, or his sentiments, affections, and emotions are so perverted that whatever excites their activity is viewed through a distorting medium; or, which is the most common fact, both these conditions may exist together, in which case their relative share in the disease may differ in such a degree that one or the other may scarcely be perceived at all. According as the intellectual or moral element prevails, the disease is called "intellectual" or "moral" mania. Whether the former is ever entirely wanting has been stoutly questioned, less from any dearth of facts than from some fancied metaphysical incongruity. The logical consequence of the doubt is that, in the absence of intellectual disturbance, there is really no insanity,—the moral disorders proceeding rather from unbridled passions than any pathological condition. Against all such reasoning it will be sufficient here to oppose the very common fact that in every collection of the insane may be found many who exhibit no intellectual aberration, but in whom moral disorders of the most flagrant kind present a marked contrast to the previous character and habits of life.

Both forms of mania may be either general or partial. In the latter, the patient has adopted some notion having a very limited influence upon his mental movements, while outside of that no appearance of impairment or irregularity can be discerned. Pure "monomania," as this form of insanity has been often called,—that is, a mania confined to a certain point, the understanding being perfectly sound in every other respect,—is, no doubt, a veritable fact, but one of very rare occurrence. The peculiar notions of the insane, constituting insane belief, are of two kinds,—“delusions” and “hallucinations.” By the former is meant a firm belief in something impossible, either in the nature of things or in the circumstances of the case, or, if possible, highly improbable, and associated in the mind of the patient with consequences that have to it only a fanciful relation. By “hallucination” is meant an impression supposed by the patient, contrary to all proof or possibility, to have been received through one of the senses. For instance, the belief that one is Jesus Christ or the pope of Rome is a delusion; the belief that one hears voices speaking from the walls of the room, or sees armies contending in the clouds, is a hallucination. The latter implies some morbid activity of the perceptive powers; the former is a mistake of the intellect exclusively.

MANIA A POTU. See “Delirium Tremens.”

MANIFEST.

—In Commercial Law. A written instrument containing a true account of the cargo of a ship or a commercial vessel.

As to the requirements of the United States laws in respect to manifests, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 593, 594.

The want of a manifest, where one is required, and also the making a false manifest, are grave offenses.

—In Evidence. That which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious.

MANIFESTA PROBATIONE NON INDIGENT. Manifest things require no proof. 7 Coke, 40b.

MANIFESTO. A solemn declaration, by the constituted authorities of a nation, which contains the reasons for its public acts towards another.

On the declaration of war, a manifesto is usually issued, in which the nation declaring the war states the reasons for so doing. Vattel, lib. 3, c. 4, § 64; Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 1187.

MANKIND. Persons of the male sex; the human species. St. 25 Hen. VIII., c. 6, makes it felony to commit sodomy with mankind or beast. Females as well as males are included under the term “mankind.” Fortescue, 91; Bac. Abr. “Sodomy.”

MANNER. Manner has a broader meaning than “method.” The word is derived from the Latin, manus, the hand, and in a wider sense embraces both method and mode. 20 Ill. App. 326.

MANNER AND FORM. In pleading. After traversing any allegation in pleading, it is usual to say, “in manner and form as he has in his declaration in that behalf alleged,” which is as much as to include in the traverse not only the mere fact opposed to it, but that in the manner and form in which it is stated by the other party. These words, however, only put in issue the substantial statement of the manner of the fact traversed, and do not extend to the time, place, or other circumstances attending it, if they were not originally material and necessary to be proved as laid. 3 Bouv. Inst. 297. See “Modo et Forma.”

MANNIRE. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from bannire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge. Du Cange.

MANNOPUS. (Lat.) An ancient word, which signifies goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.

MANOR. This word is derived from the French manoir, and signifies a house, residence, or habitation. At present its meaning is more enlarged, and includes not only a dwelling house, but also lands. See Co. Litt. 58, 108; 2 Rolle, Abr. 121; Merlin, Repert, “Manoir.” See Sergeant, Land Laws Pa. 195.

—In English Law. A tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which (terrae tenementales) were given by the grantee or lord of the manor to his followers; the rest he retained, under the name of his demesnes (terrae dominicales). That which remained uncultivated was called the “lord’s waste,” and served for public roads, and commons of pasture for the lord and his tenants. The whole fee was called a “lordship,” or “barony,” and the court appendant to the manor the “court baron.” The tenants, in respect to their relation to this court and to each other, were called pares curiae; in relation to the tenure of their lands, copyholder (q. v.), as holding by a copy of the record in the lord’s court.

The franchise of a manor, i. e., the right to jurisdiction and rents and services of copyholders. Cowell. No new manors were created in England after the prohibition of subinfeudation by St. Quia Emptores, in 1290. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 30.

—In American Law. A manor was formerly a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to oldest son of proprietor, who in New York was called a “patroon.”

“Manor” is derived originally either from Latin manendo, remaining, or from British maer, stones, being the place marked out or inclosed by stones. Webster.

MANQUELLER (Saxon). A murderer.

MANRENT, or MANRED. In Scotch law. The service of a man or vassal. A bond of manrent was an instrument by which a person, in order to secure the protection of some powerful lord, bound himself, “in manrent and service, to be leil and trew man and servant,” specifying the service.

MANSE. Habitation; farm and land. Spelman. Parsonage or vicarage house. Paed. Ant. 431; Jacob. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

MANSER. A bastard. Cowell.

MANSIO L. Lat. [from manere, to stay.] In old European law. An inn; a place of entertainment and accommodation for travelers. Spelman.

In old English law. A dwelling; a mansion; which might be constructed of several houses. Bract. fol. 434.

MANSION HOUSE. Any house of dwelling, in the law of burglary, etc. 3 Inst. 64.

The term "mansion house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling house, but also all the buildings within the curtilage, as the dairy house, the cow house, the stable, etc.; though not under the same roof nor contiguous. Burn, Inst. "Burglary;" 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 215, 216; 1 Hale, P. C. 558; 4 Bl. Comm. 225. See 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 199; 4 Strob. (S. C.) 372; 13 Bost. Law Rep. 157; 4 Call. (Va.) 109; 14 Mees. & W. 181; 4 C. B. 105.

MANS LAUGHTER. Manslaughter is homicide committed without excuse or justification, and without malice aforethought, expressed or implied. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30, §§ 2, 3; Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, art. 223.

Voluntary manslaughter is an intentional homicide in sudden passion or heat of blood caused by reasonable provocation, and not with malice aforethought. 1 Hale, P. C. 466.

To constitute voluntary manslaughter, (1) the killing must be intentional; (2) it must be without malice; (3) the provocation must be so great as to reasonably excite passion in an ordinary man, and cause him to act rashly and without reflection, and so immediate as not to afford reasonable cooling time.

Involuntary manslaughter is homicide committed unintentionally, but without excuse, and not under such circumstances as to raise the implication of malice. 23 Iowa, 154; 62 Mich. 29. It may arise (1) from the doing of a criminal act not amounting to a felony, nor naturally tending to cause death or great bodily harm; (2) from the doing of a lawful act with gross negligence; (3) from the omission to perform a legal duty under circumstances showing gross negligence.

By statutes in the various states, the degrees of manslaughter and the elements of each degree have been variously altered.

MANSUETUS. Tame. See "Animals."

MANSUM CAPITALE. The manor house.

MANTHEOFF (Saxon). A horse thief.

MANU BREVI (Lat.) In civil law. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuitry. Calv. Lex.

MANU FORTI. With strong hand. Used in writs of trespass.

MANU LONGA. In civil law. With a long hand; indirectly or circuitously. Calv. Lex.

MANUAL LABOR. The term manual labor, in its ordinary and usual meaning and acceptation, means labor performed by and with the hand or hands, and implies the ability for such sustained exercise and use of the hand or hands at labor as will enable a person thereby to earn or assist in earning a livelihood. 206 Ill. 211.

MANUCAPERE. L. Lat. [from manus, hand, and capere, to take.] In old law and practice. To become surety; to offer one's self as a surety to redeem another from imprisonment, and to have him in court at an appointed day. Spelman.

MANUCAPTIO. A writ which lay to admit to bail one taken on suspicion of felony, and who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff.

MANUCAPTORS. Mainpernors (q. v.)

MANUFACTURE. Primarily, something made by hand as distinguished from a natural growth, but as machinery has largely supplanted this primitive method the word is now ordinarily used to denote an article upon the material of which labor has been expended to make the finished product. 255 Ill. 272.

To manufacture is to make or fabricate, as anything for use, especially in considerable quantities or numbers, or by the aid of many hands or machinery; to make wares or merchandise by hand or machinery or by other agency. 188 Ill. 495.

MANUFACTURING CORPORATIONS. Such as are engaged in "the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to natural forces." 99 N. Y. 184.

It has been held to include a company for the manufacture and supply of illuminating gas (89 N. Y. 409); but otherwise as to a company supplying natural gas (108 Pa. 111). It includes a company preparing ice by artificial refrigeration, but not one cutting and storing natural ice. 99 N. Y. 181. It includes a company engaged in refining oil (101 Mass. 385); a milling company (17 Ill. 54); but not a mining company (106 Mass. 131), nor a dry-dock company engaged in repairing vessels (92 N. Y. 487). A company engaged in publishing a newspaper is not a manufacturing company (51 N. J. Law, 75; 60 Minn. 82; 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 319); but a book and job printing company is (47 N. J. Law, 36; 51 N. J. Law, 75; 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 238).

A company dealing in the articles of its manufacture is not engaged exclusively in manufacturing. 66 Minn. 234.

MANUMISSION. The act of releasing from the power of another; the act of giving liberty to a slave.

—In the Roman Law. It was a generic expression, equally applicable to the enfranchisement from the manus, the mancipium, the dominica potestas, and the patria potestas.

MANUNG, or MONUNG. In old English law. The district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

MANURABLE. In old English law. Capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal. Hale, Anal. § 24.

MANUS (Lat. hand). Anciently signified the person taking an oath as a compurgator. The use of this word probably came from the party laying his hand on the New Testament. Manus signifies, among the civilians, power, and is frequently used as synonymous with potestas. Lec. Elm. § 94.

MANUS MEDIAE. Men of low degree.

MANUS MORTUA. A dead hand; mortmain. Spelman.

MANUSCRIPT. An unpublished writing, or one that has been published without the consent of the person entitled to control it.

MANUTENENTIA. In old English law. Maintenance.

MANWORTH. In old English law. The price or value of a man's life or head. Cowell.

MARASTRE. (L. Fr.) A mother-in-law. Kelham. A step-mother. Britt. c. 119.

MARAUDER. One who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits a larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army. Merlin, Repert. See Halleck, Int. Law; Lieber, Guerrilla Parties; 37 Mo. 328.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a coin. The marc-banco of Hamburg, as money of account, at the custom house, is deemed and taken to be of the value of thirty-five cents. Act March 3, 1843.

MARCH. In Scotch law. A boundary line. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 4.

MARCHERS. In old English law. Nobles who lived on the Marches, and had their own laws, and power over life and death, as if they were petty princes. Camden; Jacob. Abolished by St. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, 1 Edw. VI. c. 10, and 1 & 2 Philip & M. c. 15. They were also called "Lords Marchers."

MARCHES. In old English law. Boundaries or frontiers of a state.

MARCHETA.

—In Old Scotch Law. A custom for the lord of a fee to lie the first night with the bride of his tenant. Abolished by Malcolm III. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 83.

A fine paid by the tenant for the remission of such right, originally a mark or half a mark of silver. Spelman.

—In Old English Law. A fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage. Cowell.

The etymology of the term is variously traced from Scotch march, a horse, Latin marca, a mark, and British merch, a maid. The first of these is approved by Skene.

MARCHIONESS. A dignity in a woman corresponding to that of marquis in a man, and obtained either by creation or by marriage with a marquis. Wharton.

MARESCALLUS (from German, march, horse, and schalch, master). A groom of the stables, who also took care of the diseases of the horses. Du Cange.

An officer of the imperial stable, magister equorum. Du Cange.

A military officer, whose duty it was to keep watch on the enemy, to choose place of encampment, to arrange or marshal the army in order of battle, and, as master of the horse to commence the battle. This office was second to that of comes stabuli, or constable. Du Cange.

An officer of the court of exchequer. 51 Hen. III. 5.

An officer of a manor, who oversaw the hospitalities (mansionarius). Du Cange; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 74.

Marescallus aulae. An officer of the royal household, who had charge of the person of the monarch and peace of the palace. Du Cange.

MARETUM (Lat.) Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co. Litt. 5.

MARGIN. See "Gambling Contract."

MARGINAL PURCHASE. By a marginal purchase of an article is usually meant a purchase where the full price is not given at the time of the execution of the order, without regard to the percentage of the unpaid balance thereon and without regard to whether the purchase is made as an investment with the expectation of later making full payment and acquiring possession of the article or as a speculation with the intention of selling upon a rise in the market and without any intention of making full payment therefor or acquiring possession of the article purchased. 171 Mich. 38.

MARINARIUS (Law Lat.) An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Belonging to the sea; relating to the sea; naval. A soldier employed, or liable to be employed, on vessels of war, under the command of an officer of marines, who acts under the direction of the commander of the ship. See "Marine Corps." It is also used as a general term to denote the whole naval power of a state or country.

MARINE CONTRACT. One which relates to business done or transacted upon the sea and in seaports, and over which the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law. See "Maritime Contract;" Pars. Mar. Law; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 398.

MARINE CORPS. A body of officers and soldiers under an organization separate and distinct from that of the army, and intended for service, in detached portions, on board of ships of war.

MARINE INSURANCE. A contract of indemnity by which one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other, to the extent of the amount insured, against all perils of the sea, or certain enumerated perils, to which his ship, cargo, and freight, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time.

MARINE INTEREST. A compensation paid for the use of money loaned on bottomry or respondentia. Provided the money be loaned and put at risk, there is no fixed limit to the rate which may be lawfully charged by the lender; but courts of admiralty, in enforcing the contract, will mitigate the rate when it is extortionate and unconscionable.

MARINE LEAGUE. A measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree of latitude. Bouch. Inst. note 1845. It is generally conceded that a nation has exclusive territorial jurisdiction upon the high seas for a marine league from its own shores. 1 Kent, Comm. 29.

MARINER. One whose occupation it is to navigate vessels upon the sea. Surgeons, engineers, clerks, stewards, cooks, porters, and chamber maids, on passenger steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship or crew, are also deemed mariners, and permitted as such to sue in the admiralty for their wages. 1 Conkl. Adm. 107. See "Seaman."

MARIS ET FOEMINAE CONJUNCTIO est de jure naturae. The union of male and female is founded on the law of nature. 7 Coke, 13.

MARITAGIO AMISSO PER DEFALTAM. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

MARITAGIUM (Lat.) A portion given with a daughter in marriage.

During the existence of the feudal law, it was the right which the lord of the fee had, under certain tenures, to dispose of the daughters of his vassal in marriage. Beames, Glanv. 138, note; Bracton, 21a; Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 69; Co. Litt. 21b, 76a.

MARITAGIUM EST AUT LIBERUM aut servitio obligatum; liberum maritagium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terra sic data quieta sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio. A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called "frank marriage" when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service. Co. Litt. 21.

MARITAGIUM HABERE. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

MARITAL. That which belongs to marriage; as, marital rights, marital duties.

MARITAL PORTION. In Louisiana. The name given to that part of the deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. Civ. Code La. 334, art. 55; 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 1.

MARITAL RIGHTS. The rights of a husband. Chiefly applied to the right of sexual intercourse.

MARITIMA ANGLIAE. In old English law. The emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs anciently collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral. Spelman.

MARITIMA INCREMENTA. In old English law. Marine increases; lands gained from the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. pt. 1, c. 4.

MARITIME. Pertaining to the sea. Ordinarily, the term is synonymous with "marine."

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause arising from a maritime contract, whether made at sea or on land.

The term includes such causes as relate to the business, commerce, or navigation of the sea; as charter parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment; bottomry and respondentia contracts; and contracts for maritime services in repairing, supplying, and navigating ships and vessels; contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons, when the party prosecuting has a maritime lien; and also those arising from torts and injuries committed on the high seas, or on other navigable waters within the admiralty jurisdiction.

MARITIME CONTRACT. One which relates to the business of navigation upon the sea, or to business appertaining to commerce or navigation to be transacted or done upon the sea, or in seaports, and over which courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law.

Such contracts, according to the civilians, include, among others, charter parties, bills of lading, marine hypothecations, contracts for services in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships, contracts respecting averages, jettisons, etc.

In an early opinion by Story, J., these views were generally adopted (2 Gall. [U. S.] 398), but it has been since held that the contract for building a vessel is not a maritime contract. (20 How. [U. S.] 393; 22 How. [U. S.] 129).

MARITIME COURT. A court of admiralty jurisdiction.

MARITIME INTEREST. Marine interest (q. v.)

MARITIME LAW. That system of law which particularly relates to the affairs and business of the sea, to ships, their crews and navigation, and to the marine conveyance of persons and property. See 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558.

MARITIME LIEN. See "Lien."

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that, if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects, or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerig. Mar. Loans, c. 1, § 2. See "Bottomry;" "Gross Adventure;" "Marine Interest;" "Respondentia."

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARITIME STATE. In English law. The officers and enlisted men of the English navy.

MARITIME TORT. One committed on the high seas, or otherwise within admiralty jurisdiction.

MARK. A sign, traced on paper or parchment, which stands in the place of a signature; usually made by persons who cannot write. It is most often the sign of the cross, made in a little space left between the Christian name and surname. 2 Bl. Comm. 305; 2 Curt. 324; Moody & M. 516; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 150; 7 Bing. 457; 2 Ves. Sr. 455; 1 Ves. & B. 362; 1 Ves. Jr. 11. A mark is now held to be a good signature, though the party was able to write. 8 Adol. & E. 94; 3 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. 752; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; 2 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 385; 24 Pa. St. 502; 29 Pa. St. 221; 19 Mo. 609; 21 Mo. 17; 18 Ga. 396; 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102; 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 69, 112, note; 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 63. See St. Pa. 1848.

MARKET (Lat. merc, merchandise; anciently, mercat). A public place and appointed time for buying and selling. A public place appointed by public authority, where all sorts of things necessary for the subsistence or for the convenience of life are sold. 14 N. Y. 356. All fairs are markets, but not vice versa. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 24; Co. Litt. 22; 2 Inst. 401; 4 Inst. 272. Markets are generally regulated by local laws.

The franchise by which a town holds a market, which can only be by royal grant or immemorial usage. 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 296, 2 Bl. Comm. 37.

By the term "market" is also understood the demand there is for any particular article; as, the cotton market in Europe is dull. See 15 Viner, Abr. 42; Comyn, Dig.

MARKET GELD. The toll of a market.

MARKET OVERT. An open or public market; that is, a place appointed by law or custom for the sale of goods and chattels at stated times in public. "An open, public, and legally constituted market." Jervis, C. J., 9 J. Scott, 601.

The market place is the only market overt out of London; but in London every shop is a market overt. 5 Coke, 83; F. Moore, 300. In London, every day except Sunday is market day. In the country, particular days are fixed for market days. 2 Bl. Comm. 449.

The term is of importance in English law, because of the protection afforded purchasers in good faith in market overt. 5 Coke, 83.

MARKET PRICE. See "Market Value."

MARKET TOWNS. Those towns which are entitled to hold markets. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 180.

MARKET VALUE. The price established by public sales, or sales in the way of ordinary business, 99 Mass. 345; what the property will sell for as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell. 151 Wis. 224.

MARKET ZELD, or MARKET GELD. The toll of a market.

MARKETABLE TITLE. A title not subject to such reasonable doubt as would create a just apprehension of invalidity in the mind of a reasonable, prudent and intelligent person; one that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence, guided by competent legal advice, would be willing to take and pay fair value for. 154 Ill. 607; 27 Ill. App. 280.

A title which is not only good, but as to which there is no reasonable doubt as to matter of either law or fact. Such a title as dealers in real estate, banks, etc., would be willing to invest in. 46 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

MARKSMAN. In practice and conveyancing. One who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments. Archb. N. P. 13; 2 Chit. 92.

MARLBIDGE, STATUTE OF. An important English statute (52 Hen. III. [1267]) relating to the tenures of real property, and to procedure. It derived its name from the town in Wiltshire in which parliament sat when it was enacted, now known as Marlborough. Compare 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 62; Crabb, Com. Law, 156; Barr. Obs. St. 66.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL. See "Letter of Marque and Reprisal."

MARQUIS. A nobleman next in rank to a duke.

MARRIAGE. The word marriage is used to signify either the act of entering into the marital condition, or the condition itself. In the latter and more frequent legal sense, it is a civil status, existing in one man and one woman, legally united for life for those civil and social purposes, which are based in the distinction of sex. Its source is the law of nature whence it has flowed into the municipal laws of every civilized country, and into the general law of nations. And since it can exist only in pairs, and since no persons are compelled, but all who are capable are permitted to assume it, marriage may be said to proceed from a civil contract between one man and one woman of the needful physical and civil capacity. 30 Georgia 176.

As applied to the act of becoming married, marriage is the acts, whether of private contract or official or religious ceremonial, by which a man and a woman lawfully enter into the married state.

As distinguished from the agreement to marry, and the act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on husband and wife. See Bish. Mar. & Div. § 3.

Marriage is generally referred to as a contract, but, under modern doctrine, its contractual nature is confined to the formation of the relation, such formation being wholly a matter of contract. But, when formed, marriage is not a contract, but a status. 30 Ga. 176; 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 307; 53 Mo. 578; 9 Ind. 37.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, in accordance with which the marriage settlement is afterwards to be drawn up. They are to be binding in case of marriage. They must be in writing, by statute of frauds. Burton, Real Prop. 484; Crabb, Real Prop. § 1809; 4 Cruise, Dig. 274, 323. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. Append.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE. The act by which a person interferes, for a consideration to be received by him, between a man and a woman, for the purpose of promoting a marriage between them. 83 Ill. App. 509. The money paid for such service is also known by this name.

It is a doctrine of the courts of equity that all marriage brokerage contracts are utterly void, as against public policy, and are therefore, incapable of confirmation. 1 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 4, § 10, note (s); 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 263; Newland, Cont. 469. But where a party is established in business as a marriage broker, one dealing with him is not in pari delicto, and can recover back money deposited on a contract. 124 N. Y. 156.

MARRIAGE LICENSE. A license required in some states to be obtained from a public officer by persons intending to marry.

MARRIAGE PORTION. That property which is given to a woman on her marriage. See "Dowry."

MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. A promise of marriage is a contract entered into between a man and woman that they will marry each other.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. An agreement made by the parties in contemplation of marriage, by which the title to certain property is changed, and the property to some extent becomes inalienable. 1 Rice, Eq. (S. C.) 315. See 2 Hill Ch. (S. C.) 3; 8 Leigh (Va.) 29; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. C.) 389; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (S. C.) 103; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 344; 15 Mass. 106; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 221; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 348; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3947. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. Append.

MARSH. Marsh is equivalent to meadow. It does not appear to have been used in the earlier records or in grants. 155 N. Y. 303.

MARSHAL. An officer of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the process of the courts of the United States. His duties within the district for which he is appointed are very similar to those of a sheriff. See U. S. St. at Large, Index; Sergeant, Const. Law, c. 25; 2 Dall. (U. S.) 402; Burr's Trial, 365; 1 Mason (U. S.) 100; 2 Gall (U. S.) 101; 4 Cranch (U. S.) 96; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 276; 9 Cranch (U. S.) 86, 212; 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 194; 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 645.

MARSHALLING. Arranging; putting in proper order; e. g., "the law will marshal words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B., Hardr. 92. So to marshal assets. See "Assets." So to marshal coat armor. This now belongs to heralds. Wharton.

MARSHALLING ASSETS. Such an arrangement of creditors into classes with respect all parties having equities therein to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding the intervening interests of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a part of the funds. 1 Story, Eq. 558. The doctrine does not apply unless there are two funds in existence to which claim is made by several having diverse rights. L. R. 3 Eq. 668. But it is immaterial what is the nature of the property which constitutes the fund.

MARSHALLING SECURITIES. An arrangement of creditors into classes with respect to their satisfaction out of the assets of the common debtor in such manner as to compel the creditor having a right of resort to two or more different funds to satisfy his claim first from the fund to which no other creditor has a right to resort. 1 Story, Eq. 633.

MARSHALSEA. In English law. A prison belonging to the king's bench. It has now been consolidated with others, under the name of the queen's prison.

MARSHALSEA, COURT OF. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal household.

It was instituted to administer justice between the servants of the king's household, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and their services lost. It was anciently ambulatory; but Charles I. erected a court of record, by the name of curia palatii, to be held before the steward of the household, etc., to hold pleas of all personal actions which should arise within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London. This court was held weekly, to determine causes involving less than twenty pounds, together with the ancient court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark. A writ of error lay thence to the king's bench. Both courts were abolished by St. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. See Jacob; Wishaw.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE (Lat. to run by its own force). A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end, without any impediment. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

MARTIAL LAW. That military rule and authority which exists in time of war, and is conferred by the laws of war, in relation to persons and things under and within the scope of active military operations, in carrying on the war, and which extinguishes or suspends civil rights and the remedies founded upon them, for the time being, so far as it may appear to be necessary in order to the full accomplishment of the purposes of the war. Prof. Joel Parker, in N. A. Rev., Oct., 1861.

It depends on the just but arbitrary power and pleasure of the king, who may not make laws without the consent of parliament, yet in time of war, by reason of the necessity of it, to guard against dangers that often arise, he uses absolute power; so that his word is law. 21 Ind. 377.

The phrases, "martial law" and "military law," are sometimes carelessly used as meaning the same thing, but there is a broad distinction between them.

Acting under constitutional authority, congress has passed divers acts prescribing the rules and articles of war, which constitute the military law, but apply only to persons in the military or naval service of the government.

Martial law, when once established, applies alike to citizens and soldiers. In a proper sense it is not law, but merely the will of the military commander, who is responsible to his government or superior officer. Hale's Hist. C. L. 54.

War being simply an appeal to force, necessarily suspends and displaces the ordinary laws, and martial law prevails as an unavoidable necessity to restrain disloyal acts and preserve the authority of the government. This is true not only in the actual field of military operations, but also in remote districts where the inhabitants may be so far in sympathy with the public enemy as to obstruct the administration of the laws by the civil tribunals and render resort to military power necessary.

But where the civil courts, in the midst of loyal communities, are exercising their ordinary jurisdiction, the appeal to the military arm or to martial law is needless. 44 Ill. 159.

MASCULINE. Belonging to, or descriptive of the male sex.

The masculine frequently includes the feminine; as "man" includes "woman." The masculine sex always includes the feminine. Dig. 32. 62.

MASSA. In the civil law. A mass; raw material.

MASSACHUSETTS TRUST. A trust created for the operation and conduct of a business enterprise; also known as common law companies, and business trusts.

MAST. To fatten with mast (acorns, etc.) 1 Leon. 186.

MAST SELLING. In old English law. The practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast. Held void. 7 Mod. 141.

MASTER. One who has control over an apprentice.

A master stands in relation to his apprentices in loco parentis, and is bound to fulfill that relation, which the law generally enforces. He is also entitled to be obeyed by his apprentices as if they were his children. Bouv. Inst. Index. See "Apprenticeship."

One who is employed in teaching children; known, generally, as a "schoolmaster."

One who has in his employment one or more persons hired by contract to serve him, either as domestic or common laborers.

MASTER AT COMMON LAW. In English law. An officer of the superior courts of common law (each court having five), whose principal duties, when attending court, consists in taking affidavits sworn in court, in administering oaths to attorneys on their admission, and in certifying to the court, in cases of doubt or difficulty, what the practice of the court is. Their principal duties out of court consist in taxing attorneys' costs, in computing principal and interest on bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other documents, under rules to compute, in examining witnesses who are going abroad for the purpose of obtaining their testimony, in hearing and determining rules referred to them by the court in the place of the court itself, and in reporting to the court their conclusions with reference to the rules so referred to them. Holthouse.

MASTER IN CHANCERY (anciently master of the chancery) (Law Lat. magister cancellariae). In equity practice. An important officer of courts of equity, who acts as assistant to the chancellor or judge, and whose principal duty consists in inquiring into various matters referred to him for the purpose, and reporting thereon to the court. Wharton; Holthouse. 180 Ill. App. 538; 169 Ill. 495. In England, there are twelve of these masters, of whom the master of the rolls is the chief.

These officers were originally the chief clerks of the chancery (clerici de prima forma), 180 Ill. App. 538; 169 Ill. 495; who acted as the assessors or council of the lord chancellor (collaterales et socii cancellarii). 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 251. According to Mr. Spence, they obtained the title of "masters" in the reign of Edward III. 1 Spence, Ch. 360. But they appear to have had the title of praeceptores at a much earlier period. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, ubi supra; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 184.

MASTER OF A SHIP. In maritime law. The commander or first officer of a merchant ship; a captain.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. In English law. The queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of queen's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person, or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Wharton.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. (Law Lat. magister rotulorum). In English law. An assistant judge of the court of chancery, who holds a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. 3 Steph. Comm. 417; Wharton.

MASURA. (L. Lat.) In old English law. A house and ground; a piece of ground belonging to a house; a house in a city. Spelman.

An old decayed house or wall; the ruins of a building. Cowell.

MATE. In maritime law. The officer next in rank to the master on board a merchant ship or vessel.

In such vessels there is always one mate, and sometimes a second, third, and fourth mate, according to the vessel's size, and the trade in which she may be engaged. When the word "mate" is used without qualification, it always denotes the first mate; and the others are designated as above. On large ships the mate is frequently styled "first officer," and the second and third mates, "second" and "third" officers. Parlish, Sea Off. Man. 83-140.

MATER-FAMILIAS. In civil law. The mother of a family; the mistress of a family.

A chaste woman, married or single. Calv. Lex.

MATERIA (Lat.)

—In the CIVIL Law. Materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 7-12; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 14.

Materials (wood) for building, as distinguished from "lignum." Dig. 32. 55. pr.

—In English Law. Matter; substance; subject matter. 3 Bl. Comm. 322.

MATERIAL.

(1) That which enters into the erection or repair of any structure. It does not include tools or facilities used. 71 Pa. St. 293.

(2) That which is essential or important.

MATERIAL FACT. Material facts are those which relate to the merits of the cause of action or defense—facts which are within the issues to be tried and which may be made available on the trial as completing the cause of action or defense. 54 Ill. App. 353.

MATERIALITY. The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.

MATERIALMEN. Persons who furnish materials to be used in the erection of buildings, ships, etc.

By the general American law, materialmen have a lien on a foreign ship (9 Wheat. [U. S.] 409), but not on a domestic ship (20 How. [U. S.] 398). By statute, materialmen have a lien on a building. See "Mechanic's Lien."

MATERNA MATERNIS (Lat. from the mother to the mother's). In French law. A term denoting the descent of property of a deceased person derived from his mother to the relations on the mother's side.

MATERNAL. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as, maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line. See "Line."

MATERNAL ANCESTOR. The words maternal ancestor are manifestly limited to progenitors, or ancestors in the direct ascending line, according to their common meaning and the only sense in which the word "ancestor" is used throughout the statute of descents, the rules of which statute are declared to be those of the statute of distributions also. 108 Mass. 42.

MATERNAL PROPERTY. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prel. tit. 3, § 2, note 12.

MATERNITY. The state or condition of a mother.

It is either legitimate or natural. The former is the condition of the mother who has given birth to legitimate children; while the latter is the condition of her who has given birth to illegitimate children. Maternity is always certain; while the paternity is only presumed.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. That evidence which is established by a demonstration. It is used in contradistinction to "moral evidence."

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICIDE. The murder of a mother; or one who has slain his mother.

MATRICULA. In civil law. A register in which are inscribed the names of persons who become members of an association or society. Dig. 50. 3. 1. In the ancient church there were matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy, and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved; hence, to be entered in the university is to be matriculated.

MATRIMONIA DEBENT ESSE LIBERA. Marriages ought to be free. Halk. Max. 86; 2 Kent, Comm. 102.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In the English ecclesiastical courts there are five kinds of causes which are classed under this head, viz.: Causes for a malicious jactitation; suits for nullity of marriage, on account of fraud, incest, or other bar to the marriage (2 Hagg. Consist. 423); suits for restitution of conjugal rights; suits for divorces on account of cruelty or adultery, or causes which have arisen since the marriage; suits for alimony.

MATRIMONIUM. In civil law. A legal marriage. A marriage celebrated in conformity with the rules of the civil law was called justum matrimonium; the husband vir, the wife uxor. It was exclusively confined to Roman citizens, and to those to whom the connubium had been conceded.

It alone produced the paternal power over the children, and the marital power—manus—over the wife. The farreum, the coemptio, or the usus was indispensable for the formation of this marriage. See "Pater-Familias."

MATRIMONIUM SUBSEQUENS TOLLIT peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

MATRIMONY. The nuptial state.

MATRIX. In civil law. The protocol or first draft of a legal instrument, from which all copies must be taken. See 16 S. W. 53.

MATRON. A woman who is a mother. See "Jury Women."

MATTER EN LEY NE SERRA MISE EN bouche del jurors. Matter of laws shall not be put into the mouth of jurors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 180.

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY. The subject of litigation; the amount demanded and for which the suit is brought and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined. 1 Wallace (U. S.) 339; 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 269.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Co. Litt. 320; Steph. Pl. 197.

MATTER IN DISPUTE. See Matter in Controversy.

MATTER IN ISSUE. That matter upon which the plaintiff bases his action and which the defendant denies or controverts by his pleadings. 132 Ill. 339; 165 Mich. 380. See Issue; Matter in Controversy.

MATTER IN PAIS (literally, matter in the country). Matter of fact, as distinguished from matter of law or matter of record. See "In Pais."

MATTER OF AGGRAVATION. Matter of aggravation, correctly understood, does not consist in acts of the same kind and description as those constituting the gist of the action, but in something done by the defendant, on the occasion of committing the trespass, which is, to some extent, of a different legal character from the principal act complained of. As where the plaintiff declares in trespass for breaking and entering his dwelling-house, and alleges, in addition, that the defendant also destroyed his goods in the house, assaulted and beat his domestics, or debauched his daughter, or servant. 19 Vt. 107. See Gist.

MATTER OF AVOIDANCE. Matter of avoidance in pleading is new matter which admits the declaration to be true, but shows nevertheless, either that the defendant was never liable to the recovery claimed against him or that he has been discharged from his original liability, by something supervenient. 31 Conn. 177. See Confession and Avoidance; Pleas; Special Plea in Bar.

MATTER OF COURSE. See "Of Course."

MATTER OF FACT. In pleading, Matter the existence or truth of which is determined by the senses, or by reasoning based upon their evidence. The decision of such matters is referred to the jury. Hob. 127; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

MATTER OF FORM. See "Form."

MATTER OF LAW. Matter of truth or falsity of which is determined by the established rules of law or reasoning based on them. 70 N. C. 167.

MATTER OF RECORD. Those facts which may be proved by the production of a record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty. See "Record."

MATTER OF SUBSTANCE. See "Substance."

MATTERS OF SUBSISTENCE FOR man. Comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer, or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article. 19 Grat. (Va.) 813.

MATURIORA SUNT VOTA MULIERUM quam virorum. The wishes of women are of quicker growth than those of men; i. e., women arrive at maturity earlier than men. 6 Coke, 71a; Bracton, 36b.

MATURITY. The time when a bill or note becomes due.

MAUNDER. (L. Fr.) In old English law. To command; to return (a writ). Stat. Westm. 1, c. 45.

MAXIM. An established principle or proposition; a principle of law universally admitted, as being just and consonant with reason. The wisdom of many, but the wit of one.

Maxims in law are somewhat like axioms in geometry. 1 Bl. Comm. 68. They are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim; which belongs to the judges and not the jury. Termes de la Ley; Doctor & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8. Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted. Co. Litt. 11, 67. See Plowd. 27b.

The application of the maxim to the case before the court is generally the only difficulty. The true method of making the application is to ascertain how the maxim arose, and to consider whether the case to which it is applied is of the same character, or whether it is an exception to an apparently general rule.

*The most important of the maxims of law will be found alphabetically arranged through this book.

MAXIME ITA DICTA QUIA MAXIMA est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur. A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest, and its authority the most certain, and because universally approved by all. Co. Litt. 11.

MAXIME PACI SUNT CONTRARIA, VIS et Injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong. Co. Litt. 161.

MAXIMUS ERRORIS POPULUS MAGIS-ter. The people is the greatest master of error.

MAY. See also "Shall."

—Construction in General. That "may" always means "must" is a misconception, 44 Ch. D. 270. It is ordinarily permissive, 52 N. Y. 96; 107 Mass. 196. It gives a power as to the exercise of which there is discretion. 44 Ch. D. 270. An enabling and discretionary power. 174 Mass. 245; is permitted to; has liberty to.

In the absence of any controlling consideration the word is not considered as mandatory, 122 Iowa 669, but when the power is given in the interest of public justice; or whenever the object of the power is to effectuate the public interests, or a private, or legal right; where the public or third persons have a claim, de jure, that the power shall be exercised, 77 Ill. 273; 56 N. J. L. 300; 68 N. Y. 119; 21 Wis. 371; 49 L. J. Q. B. 577; 2 Q. B. 274; or to carry out the intention of a contract, the word will be construed as compulsory. 84 Ill. 471; 44 Conn. 534.

Where a power is deposited with a public officer for the purpose of being used for the benefit of persons who are specifically pointed out, or with regard to whom the legislature has supplied the conditions upon which they are entitled to call for the exercise of the power, the courts will require it to be exercised. 49 L. J. Q. B. 577, 585.

When the point in controversy is not covered by authority, those who contend that an obligation for exercise of the power exists must show something which creates such obligation. 49 L. J. Q. B. 577.

The word "may" may be interchangeably used with "shall" or "will." State v. Starr, 24 N. M. 180, 173 Pac. 674.

While colloquially the words "may" and "will" are used interchangeably and are commonly so understood, in grammatical construction they perform entirely different distinct offices, and therefore convey essentially different meanings, the one importing a mere possibility or vague or indefinite speculation as to the existence of some fact or thing, the other the unqualified or unconditional existence of some fact or thing; or, in other words, the one meaning an existence in possibility, and the other an existence in actuality. Scally v. W. T. Garratt & Co., 11 Cal. App. 138.

—Construction of Statutes. The word "may" in a statute is sometimes mandatory, but not necessarily so, 86 Iowa 352. It is to be construed as "must" where the evident purpose of the statute, the object of the provision and the context so require. 136 Iowa 445; 51 L. J. M. C. 27, 132; 8 Q. D. B. 306; 9 Q. D. B. 238, and in all cases where the statute imposes a positive and absolute duty, devoid of any discretion; 1 Peters 46, 64; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 612, 615; or where public justice, 2 Salk. 609; 204 Ill. 462, public interests, or rights of persons depend on the exercise of the power, or the performance of the duty to which it refers. 130 Ill. 490; 270 Ill. 145; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 64; 12 Ala. 693; 1 Vern. 153; 1 Kent's Com. 467, note. In such statutes "may" or "shall" may be read interchangeably, as will best express the legislative intention. 77 Ill. 273; 181 Ill. App. 290; 219 Ill. 174.

May should not be construed as mandatory when inconsistent with the manifest intention of the legislature, or repugnant to the text of the statute, and only when necessary to give effect to the clear policy and intention of the enacting body. 123 Iowa 660. Where persons or the public have an interest in having the act done by a public body, "may" in such a statute means "must." 52 N. Y. 27.

The word "will" as used in an act providing that "any citizen of the state may, within ten days, by written notice to the secretary of state and to the party or parties who file such petition, protest against the same, at which time he will hear testimony and arguments for and against the sufficiency of such petition," means "shall" and is mandatory, and, being addressed to a public official, excludes the idea of discretion. Russell v. Harrison, 33 Okla. 225.

MAYHEM. In criminal law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 Car. & P. 167; 4 Bl. Comm. 205. The cutting or disabling, or weakening, a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or fore tooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law. 4 Bl. Comm. 205. The offense has been extended by statute to these and other injuries. See 87 N. C. 509; 70 Iowa, 505.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed. This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleadings by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc. 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 548; 7 Mass. 247.

MAYNOVER (from Fr. mayn, hand). Anything produced by manual labor.

MAYOR. (Lat. major; meyr, miret, or maer, one that keeps guard; old English, maier, potestas, power or authority, 25 Wend. [N. Y.] 50.) The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. The old word was "portgreve." The word "mayor" first occurs in 1189, when Richard I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Bracton, 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called "lord mayor." Wharton.

MAYORALTY. The office or dignity of a mayor.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 White, New Recop. 119.

The right to the enjoyment of certain aggregate property, left with the condition therein imposed, that they are to pass in their integrity perpetually, successively to the eldest son. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 62.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offenses committed within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute.

MEAL RENT. A rent formerly paid in meal.

MEAN. See "Mesne."

MEANDER. To wind, as a river or stream. Webster.

The winding or bend of a stream.

To survey a stream according to its meanders or windings. Rev. St. Wis. c. 34, § 1; 2 Wis. 317.

MEANDER LINE. A line designed to point out the sinuosities of the bank or shore, and a means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction which is to be paid for by the purchaser. 241 Ill. 319.

MEASE, or MESE (Norman French). A house. Litt. §§ 74, 251.

MEASON DUE. A corruption of Maison de Dieu.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount; a certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In practice. The rules by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured; the quantum of damage allowed by law.

MECHANIC'S LIEN. A statutory lien in favor of persons who have performed labor or furnished material for the erection or repair of any building, upon the building and the land on which it is situated.

MEDFEE. In old English law. A bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange where the things exchanged were not of equal value. Cowell.

MEDIA ANNATA. In Spanish law. Half-yearly profits of land. 5 Tex. 34, 79.

MEDIA NOX. Midnight.

MEDIAE ET INFIRMAE MANUS HOMINES. Men of a middle and base condition. Blount.

MEDIATE DESCENT. See Immediate Descent.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example, the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits. These subordinate powers are sometimes called "mediate powers." Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 Campb. 163; 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 149.

MEDIATE TESTIMONY. Secondary evidence (q. v.).

MEDIATION. The act of some mutual friend of two contending parties, who brings them to agree, compromise, or settle their disputes. Vattel, Dr. des Gens, liv. 2, c. 18, § 328.

MEDIATOR. One who interposes between two contending parties, with their consent, for the purpose of assisting them in settling their differences. Sometimes this term is applied to an officer who is appointed by a sovereign nation to promote the settlement of disputes between two other nations. See "Minister."

MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS. In English law. Six persons authorized by statute (27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 24), who, upon any question arising among merchants relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple, upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit. Cowell.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men—at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their sciences and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malprac. 285.

MEDICINE. The art of understanding diseases and curing or relieving them when possible. It is that branch of physic which relates to the healing of diseases. It is not restricted to any particular methods or remedies. 71 Ill. App. 239.

The term "medicine" is not limited to substances supposed to possess curative or remedial properties, but has also the meaning of the healing art,—the science of preserving health and treating disease for the purpose of cure,—whether such treatment involves the use of medical substances or not. 278 Ill. 257.

MEDICINE CHEST. A box containing an assortment of medicines.

Statutory provisions in the United States require all vessels above a certain size to keep a medicine chest. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 106; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 971.

MEDIETAS LINGUAE. In old practice. Moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury, impaneled in a cause, consisting the one-half of natives, and the other half of foreigners.

MEDIO ACQUIETANDO. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Jur. 129.

MEDITATIO FUGAE. In Scotch law. Contemplation of flight; intention to abscond. 2 Kames, Eq. 14, 15.

MEDIUM TEMPUS. In old English law. Meantime; mesne profits. Cowell.

MEDIUS. (Lat.) In old English law; mean, intermediate; between two; a mesne; an intermediate lord; a tenant having a mesne between himself and the chief lord. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 6.

In old continental law. A man of middle condition. L. Alam. tit. 67, MEDLETUM. In old English law. A mixing together; a medley or melee; an affray or sudden encounter; an offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word "medley" is preserved in the term "chance medley." An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business. Spelman.

MEDLEY. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a melee. See "Chance Medley;" "Chaud Medley."

MEDSCEAT. In old English law. A bribe; hush money.

MEETING. The word meeting implies a concurrence, or coming face to face of at least two persons. 46 L. J. Q. B. 104; W. N. (77) 223; 2 Q. B. D. 26; 25 W. R. 66; 36 L. T. 188. There is speaking generally, no meeting of shareholders or other bodies if only one attends; though no doubt in a particular statute the word might be used in a special sense, so that the attendance of one might satisfy. 46 L. J. Q. B. 104.

MEGBOTE. A recompense for the murder of a relative.

MEIGNE. A family.

MEINDRE AGE. Lesser age; minority.

MEJORADO. In Spanish law. Preferred; advanced. White, New Recop. lib. 3, tit. 10, c. 1, § 4.

MELANCHOLIA. In medical jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of "monomania." It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See "Mania."

MELDFEON (Saxon). A fee paid to an informer.

MELIOR (Lat.) Better.

MELIOR EST CAUSA POSSIDENTIS. The cause of the possessor is preferable. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTIS. The cause of the defendant is the better. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 639, 642; Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2; Hob. 199; 1 Mass. 66.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS et rei quam actoris. Better is the condition of the possessor and that of the defendant than that of the plaintiff. 4 Inst. 180; Vaughan, 58, 60; Hob. 103.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS, ubi neuter jus habet. Better is the condition of the possessor where neither of the two has a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 118.

MELIOR EST JUSTITIA VERE PRAEVENIENS quam severe puniens. That justice which justly prevents a crime is better than that which severely punishes it.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Comm. 73.

MELIOREM CONDITIONEM ECCLESIAE suae facere potest praelatus, deteriorem nequaquam. A bishop can make the condition of his own church better, but by no means worse. Co. Litt. 101.

MELIOREM CONDITIONEM SUUM FACERE potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam. A minor can improve or make his condition better, but never worse. Co Litt. 337b.

MELIUS EST IN TEMPORE OCCURRERE, quam post causam vulneratum remedium quaerere. It is better to restrain or meet a thing in time, than to seek a remedy after a wrong has been inflicted. 2 Inst. 299.

MELIUS EST JUS DEFICIENS QUAM jus incertum. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain. Lofft, 395.

MELIUS EST OMNIA MALA PATI quam consentire. It is better to suffer every wrong or ill than to consent to it. 3 Inst. 23.

MELIUS EST PETERE FONTES QUAM sectari rivulos. It is better to go to the fountain head than to follow little streamlets.

MELIUS EST RECURRERE QUAM MALO currere. It is better to recede than to proceed wrongly. 4 Inst. 176.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIREndo. In old English practice. A writ which, in certain cases, issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utligatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc., of lands, etc., might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MELLER. (L. Fr.) To mix or blend; to meddle with; to interfere or interpose. Kellham.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defense. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatum operationem in corpore. Co. Litt. 126a.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government; as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States.

MEMBERS. In English law. Places where a custom house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocat.; Du Cange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 17.

MEMORANDUM (Lat. from memorare, to remember). A note to assist the memory. 32 Conn. 509. An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement; so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word, though written in English; as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, "Be it remembered that," etc.

—In English Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2 Tidd. Prac. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice; e. g., "memorandum in error," a document alleging error in fact, and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Also, a "memorandum of appearance," etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A writing required by the statute of frauds. Vide "Note or Memorandum."

—In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment; such understanding being denoted by the word "memorandum" upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 122; 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 612.

MEMORANDUM CLAUSE. In a policy of marine insurance, the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It begins as follows: "N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded;" meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by sea water or the like.

MEMORANDUM OF ALTERATION. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this, St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q. v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification. Johns. Pat. 151; St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, § 39.

MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION. A document by the registration of which a company is formed under the English companies act of 1862.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a "petition."

MEMORITER (Lat.) From memory.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power. When we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelf. Lun. Introd. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased, and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term R. 126; 5 Coke, 125; Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 73, § 1.

MEMORY, TIME OF. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard I., A. D. 1189. 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription. 2 Saund. 175a, 175d; Peake, Ev. 336; 2 Price, 450; 4 Price, 198.

MEN OF STRAW. "See Straw Men."

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrongdoer. Comyn. Dig. "Battery" (D); Viner, Abr.; Bac. Abr. "Assault;" Co. Litt. 161a, 162b, 253b; 2 Lutw. 1428.

MENDACIUM (Lat.) In old English law. Falsehood; a falsehood or lie; a false statement made with intent to deceive. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 22, § 6.

MENIAL. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See St. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21.

MENS (Lat.) Mind.

MENS LEGISLATORIS. The intent of the legislators.

MENS REA (Lat.) A guilty mind.

MENS TESTATORIS IN TESTAMENTIS spectanda est. In wills, the intention of the testator is to be regarded. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 277.

MENSA (Lat.) An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessaries for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See "Divorce."

MENSOR. In the civil law. A surveyor.

MENSULARIUS. In the civil law. A money changer.

MENSURA. A measure.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. "The measure of our lord the king." The standard of weights and measures, established under King Richard I, 1197. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

MENTAL INCAPACITY. Lack of sufficient mind and memory on the part of a grantor or testator to comprehend the nature and character of the transaction in which he was engaged. 230 Ill. 586; 93 Ill. 516.

MENTAL RESERVATION. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise. Wharton.

MENTAL SUFFERING. A mental emotion arising from a physical injury; any mental anguish connected with bodily injury. Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 408; Tomasi v. Donk Bros. Coal Co., 257 Ill. 75.

MENTIRI (Lat.) To lie; to assert a falsehood. Calv. Lex.; 3 Bulst. 260.

MENTIRI EST CONTRA MENTEM IRE. To lie is to go against the mind. 3 Bulst. 260.

MENTITION. The act of lying; a falsehood.

MERA NOCTIS. Midnight.

MERCANDISA, Merchandise, Mercandisia. L. Lat. In old English law. Merchandise; all goods and wares exposed to sale in fairs or markets. Brac. fol. 57.

MERCANTILE. Having to do with or engaged in trade, or the buying and selling of commodities; pertaining to the business of merchants; concerned with trade or the buying and selling of commodities; pertaining to trade; commercial; 255 Ill. 273, 563; 167 Ill. App. 147.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. See "Law Merchant."

MERCANTILE PAPER. Commercial paper (q. v.)

MERCANTILE PARTNERSHIP. One formed for trading purposes.

MERCAT. A market. An old form of the latter word common in Scotch law, formed from the Latin mercatum.

MERCATIVE. Belonging to trade.

MERCATUM (Lat.) A market. Du Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commatus). Id. See Bracton, 56; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bl. Comm. 65.

MERCENARIUS. A mercenary.

MERCES (Lat.) In civil law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensis, it means the rent of farms (praedia rustici). Calv. Lex.

MERCHANDISE (Lat. merx). A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail; as, dry-goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, note 8; Dig. 13. 3. 1; Id. 19. 4. 1; Id. 50. 16. 66; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 277; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335.

Mere evidences of value, as bank bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., 2 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 10, 53, 54. See 2 Mass. 467; 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9; 3 Metc. (Mass.) 367; 2 Pars. Cont. 331, note (w).

Nor are baggage (6. Fed. 413) tools or facilities (26 Ind. 294), or animals kept for use; though otherwise if they were imported for purpose of sale only (22 Vt. 655).

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT 1862. St. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 88. Its principal provision is that making it a misdemeanor to forge or falsely apply any trade-mark or indication of quality, or to sell any goods falsely marked.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator; merx). A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods, and sells them by wholesale. Webster; Lex. Merc. 23. These are known by the name of "shipping merchants." See Comyn, Dig.; Dyer, 279b; Bac. Abr.

"Merchants," in the statute of limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held (1 Chanc. Cas. 152; 1 Watts & S. [Pa.] 469); but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quaere (1 Mod. 238; 4 Scott, N. R. 819; 2 Pars. Cont. 369, 370. See, also, 5 Cranch [U. S.] 15; 6 Pet. [U. S.] 151; 12 Pet. [U. S.] 300; 5 Mason [U. S.] 505).

According to an old authority, there are four species of merchants, namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travelers, and merchant residents. 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; 1 Bl. Comm. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton, 334.

One whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise. This applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 469; 2 Salk. 445.

The term does not include those who buy goods for the purpose of manufacture and subsequent sale. 33 Mo. 424. A commercial traveler is not a merchant (58 Miss. 478), nor is a farmer who raises produce for the market (3 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 330), nor a speculator in stocks (8 Ben. [U. S.] 563).

MERCHANTABLE TITLE. A merchantable title must be good beyond a reasonable doubt, and this must appear from the abstract itself. That the title may, in fact, be good, or that it may be made good is insufficient. The abstract on its face must show that there is no reasonable doubt about it. The opinion of the court that it is probably good, is not sufficient. It must be such a title as will not detract from the salability of the land, or depreciate its value on the market, or expose the vendee to possible litigation or to the danger of being defeated in an action concerning it. If there is even a color of outstanding title which may prove substantial a purchaser will not be required to take it and thus encounter the hazard of litigation with an adverse claimant over whom the court has no jurisdiction. Where the vendor in a contract for the sale of land has agreed to furnish an abstract of title showing good merchantable title in him, all the vendee need do to defeat a bill by the vendor for specific performance is to show that that title which the vendor was prepared to convey was doubtful in character. 241 Ill. 514.

On the other hand, an objection cannot be founded on unsubstantial trifles; and a bare possibility that the title may be affected by the existing causes which may subsequently be developed when the highest evidence of which the case admits, amounting to a moral certainty, is given that no such cause exists, is not to be regarded as a sufficient ground for a refusal to perform the contract. 156 Ill. App. 137, 138.

MERCHANTS' SHIPPING ACTS. English statutes for the amelioration of the condition of seamen on merchant vessels, and the general improvement of shipping, and vesting a control of merchant shipping in the board of trade to that end.

MERCHET. Marcheta (q. v.)

MERCIAMENT. An amerciamento.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIAE. In old records. The impost of England upon merchandise. Cowell.

MERCIS APPELLATIO AD RES MOBILES tantum pertinet. The term "merchandise" belongs to movable things only. Dig. 50. 16. 66.

MERCIS APPELLATIONE HOMINES non continere. Under the name of "merchandise," men are not included. Dig. 50. 16. 207.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia).

—In Practice. The arbitrament of the king or judge in punishing offenses not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob. So, to be in mercy signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

—In Criminal Law. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a "pardon;" when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a "conditional pardon;" or, before sentence, it is called "clemency" or "mercy." See Rutherford, Inst. 224; 1 Kent, Comm. 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Pars. Cont. 262, notes.

MERE (Fr.) Mother. This word is frequently used; as, en ventre sa mere, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERE MOTION. See "Ex Mero Motu."

MERE RIGHT. An abstract right of property without possession or right thereto. 2 Bl. Comm. 197.

MERE STONE. A boundary stone.

MEREMIU. (Law Lat. [from L. Fr. meresme, mereme.]) In old English and Scotch law, Timber.

MERETRICIOUS. Illicit, as applied to sexual relations.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist, but the greater is not increased.

There appears to be a distinction recognized by most of the authorities between a "merger," strictly speaking, and a "consolidation," but the terms are not always used with strict accuracy. 256 Ill. 522.

—In Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be to one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right. 2 Bl. Comm. 177; Latch, 153; Poph. 166; 6 Madd. 119; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 53; 3 Mass. 172.

—In Contracts. Merger, in the law of contracts, is the absorption or extinguishment of a security of a lower legal degree in another of a higher legal degree. 120 Ill. App. 554.

—Of Rights. Rights or demands merged in a judgment for their enforcement (65 Ind. 243; 25 Pa. St. 200; 41 Mo. 205), or in a security of a higher nature (10 Iowa, 443; 14 Mo. 450). Rights are also said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. 117 Ill. 338. This is more properly called a "confusion of rights," or "extinguishment."

—In Torts. Where a person, in committing a felony, also commits a tort against a private person, the wrong was, under the old law, sunk in the felony, and, by modern law, is suspended until after the felon's conviction. 1 Chit. Prac. 10. The rule is generally changed by statute.

—In Crimes. At common law, if an act included several offenses of different degree (i. e., misdemeanors and felony), the misdemeanors merged in the felony (5 Mass. 106; 1 Mich. 217; 26 N. J. Law, 213); but if the offenses were of the same grade, there was no merger, and the prosecution might elect on which to prosecute (48 Me. 238; 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 265; 93 Fed. 452).

The doctrine of merger of offenses is now repudiated in England (11 Q. B. 929), and in some of the United States (57 Conn. 461; 51 Minn. 382).

MERIDIES. Noon.

MERITS. The strict legal rights of the parties, as distinguished from matters of practice and matters resting in the discretion of the court. 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329; Id. 432; 2 Daly (N. Y.) 203.

A cause of action or defense on the merits is one resting on matters of substance, not on form or technicality. See 12 Wis. 588. A judgment on the merits is one decisive of some strictly legal right of the party. 12 Minn. 357; 26 S. C. 119.

MERITS, AFFIDAVIT OF. See "Affidavit of Merits."

MERO MOTU. See "Ex Mero Motu."

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordinance or statute (20 Hen. III. [1253]), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. 2 Inst. 79; Barr. Obs. St. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 9, 10, 18.

MERUM (Lat.) In old English law. Mere; naked or abstract. Merum jus, mere right. Bracton, fol. 31. Majus jus merum, more mere right. Id. See "Mere Right."

MERX EST QUIDQUID VENDI POTEST. Merchandise is whatever can be sold. 3 Metc. (Mass.) 365. See "Merchandise."

MES. tof. mo. co. gar. ter. pra. pas. bos. brue. mora.

Junca. maris. alne. rus. re. sectare priora.
A rhyming couplet artificially constructed by the old practitioners in real actions, for the more easy remembrance of the rule requiring the various parcels of land which might be demanded in a writ of right to be named in a certain order. It consists of the first syllables of the following words: Messuagium, toftum, molendinum, columbare, gardinum, terra, pratium, pastura, boscus, bruera, mora, Juncaria, mariscus, alnetum, ruscaria, reditus (in English, mesuage, toft, mill, dovehouse, garden, land, meadow, pasture, wood, heath, moor, rush ground, marsh, alder ground, broom ground, rent); the words sectare priora (follow the first syllables) denoting how it was to be read. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 2 (C). In the register, the complementary syllables are written over each of the abbreviations. Reg. Orig. 2.

MESAGUIM. A message.

MESCROYANT. Used in our ancient books. An unbeliever.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify "house;" probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass. Co. Litt. 56.

MESNALITY. The estate of a mesne tenant.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

In England, the word "mesne" also applies to a dignity; those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior, who is called "lord paramount," and grant the same to inferior persons, are called "mesne lords."

MESNE LORD. A middle or intermediate lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 59; 1 Steph. Comm. 168, 174. See "Mesne."

MESNE PROCESS. In practice. All writs necessary to a suit between its beginning and end, that is, between primary process or summons and final process, or execution, whether for the plaintiff, against the defendant, or for either against any party whose presence is necessary to the suit.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of land during the period of a wrongful possession thereof; that is to say, from the time of wrongful entry to dispossession. 3 Bl. Comm. 205.

The net rental value or value of the use and occupation of premises during the period of a wrongful occupation. 101 N. Y. 13.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail. The latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 316.

MESPRISION. (Law Fr.) Mistake; a mistaking.

MESQUE (Law Fr.) Except; unless. Fet. Assaver, § 23.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at home port of vessel. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 50.

MESSENGER. An employe or officer whose duty is to bear messages or communications.

—In English Law. An officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate.

MESSENGER ASSOCIATION. An association engaged in the business of furnishing messengers for hire to any who may desire them. Such associations are held to be common carriers. 31 Abb. N. C. 147; 6 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 534.

MESSIS SEMENTEM SEQUITUR. The harvest follows the sowing. Ersk. Inst. 174. 26; Bell, Dict.

MESSAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with "dwelling house." A grant of a message with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built. Co. Litt. 5b; 2 Saund. 400; Hammond, N. P. 189; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term. R. 502; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331. But see the cases cited in 9 Barn. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church. 11 Coke, 26; 2 Esp. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 Barn. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Bl. 726; 4 Mees. & W. 567; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 617; 1 Saund. 6.

META (Lat.) The goal of a Roman race-course; a mark or object about which the chariots turned, and where the course ended.

—In Old English Law. A boundary line; a border or terminus. Properly, a visible object, standing upon the line, as a stone or tree, and showing where it ended; a butt. See "Butts and Bounds." Bundae et metae, et rationabiles divisae quae ponuntur in terminis et finibus agrorum, ad distinguendum praedia et dominia vicinorum, bounds and metes and reasonable divisions which are set on the borders and limits of lands, in order to distinguish the estates and properties of neighbors. Bracton, fols. 166b, 167; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 30. Pro metis et terminis ponendis. Mag. Rot. 3 Hen. III. rot. 14b.

METALLUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Metal; a mine.

Labor in mines, as a punishment for crime. Dig. 40. 5. 24. 5; Calv. Lex.

METATUS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A dwelling; a seat; a station; quarters; the place where one lives or stays. Spelman.

METAYER SYSTEM. A system of agricultural holdings, under which the land is divided, in small farms, among single families, the landlord generally supplying the stock which the agricultural system of the country is considered to require, and receiving, in lieu of rent and profit, a fixed proportion of the produce. This proportion, which is generally paid in kind, is usually one-half. 1 Mill. Pol. Econ. 296, 363; 2 Smith, Wealth of Nations, 3, c. 2; Wharton.

METECORN. A measure of corn given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward for labor.

METEGAVEL. A rent paid in victuals.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. Courses and distances control, unless there is matter of more certain description, e. g., natural monuments. 42 Me. 209.

The boundary line may be pointed out and ascertained by reference to permanent objects either natural or artificial, and so situated that they may conveniently be used for the purpose of indicating its extent. Such objects, when so used in a description, are called monuments; streams, trees, walls, fences, streets and highways, or railroad tracks, or other objects may be referred to as monuments. 46 Ill. App. 128; 25 Ill. 152.

A joint tenant cannot convey by metes and bounds. 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 582. See "Boundary."

METHEL (Saxon). Speech.

METHOD. See "Process."

METROPOLIS (Graeco-Lat. and Eng.) A mother city; one from which a colony was sent out. Calv. Lex.

The capital of a province. Id.

METROPOLITAN. In English law. One of the titles of an archbishop. Derived from the circumstance that archbishops were consecrated at first in the metropolis of a province. 4 Inst. 94.

METUS (Lat.) A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Bl. Comm. 131; Calv. Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calv. Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MEU (Law Fr.) Moved; commenced, as a suit. Kelham; Britt. c. 126.

MEUBLES. In French law. Movable (q. v.) Meubles meublans, household utensils and ornaments.

MEUM EST PROMITTERE, NON DIMITTERE. It is mine to promise, not to discharge. 2 Rolle, 39.

MICHAELMAS TERM. In English law. One of the four terms of the courts. It begins on the 2d day of November, and ends on the 25th of November. It was formerly a movable term. St. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70.

MICHEL GEMOT, or MICEL GEMOTE (Saxon, great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorably held in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 147.

One of the great councils of a king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called wittena gemotes, afterwards micel synods, and micel gemotes. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham. See "Michel Synoth."

MICHEL SYNOTH (Saxon, great council). One of the names of the general council immemorably held in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 147.

The Saxon kings usually called a "synod," or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a "parliament" till Henry III.'s time. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham.

MICHERY. Theft; dishonesty.

MIDDLE OF THE RIVER. The phrases "middle of the river" and "middle of the main channel" are equivalent expressions and both mean the main line of the channel, or, as is frequently expressed, the middle thread of the current. 270 Ill. 422. See "Middle Thread."

MIDDLE THREAD (Law Lat. medium filum; Law Fr. fil de myleu). An imaginary line drawn through the middle of a stream in the direction of its length. Story, J., 3 Sumn. 170, 178.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a subagent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the subagent, the principal being alone responsible. 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term R. 411; 14 East, 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them.

MIDWIFE. In medical jurisprudence. A woman who practices midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

MIESES (Spanish). Crops.

MILE. A length of a thousand paces, or seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Starkie, 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation of so much per mile allowed to officers traveling on the public business, or to any person authoritatively summoned in respect to a matter of public importance, as to a witness.

MILES.

—In Civil Law. A soldier. Vel a "militia," aut a "multitudine," aut a numero, "mille hominum." Vocat.

—In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bl. Comm. 404; Seld. Tit. Hon. 334.

MILITARY CAUSES. In English law. Causes of action or injuries cognizable in the court military, or court of chivalry. 3 Bl. Comm. 103.

MILITARY COURTS. In English law. Include the ancient court of chivalry and modern court-martial (q. v.) 3 Bl. Comm. 68, 103.

MILITARY FEUDS. The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

MILITARY LANDS. In American law. Lands granted to soldiers for military services.

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulation by acts of congress prescribing the rules and articles of war, and providing for the government of the army and discipline of the troops. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, note; 44 Ill. 153.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Martial, 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. 44 Ill. 142. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. See 2 Kent, Comm. 10; 34 Me. 126. See Martial Law.

The body of the military law of the United States is contained in the act of April 30, 1806, and the amendatory acts.

MILITARY OFFENSES. Those offenses which are cognizable by the courts military, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc.

MILITARY SERVICE. A statute releasing an attachment issued against any property of any "soldiers in the actual military service of the United States" does not include a person in the naval service. One may be in the naval service, or connected with the navy without being a soldier, as when he belongs to merchantmen or the merchant's service. A soldier in the military service, on the contrary, means one belonging to the soldiery, militia or army of a nation or state. 18 Iowa 513.

MILITARY STATE. The soldiery of the kingdom of Great Britain.

MILITARY STATION. Is synonymous with the term "military post," and means a place where troops are assembled, where military stores, animate and inanimate, are kept or distributed, where military duty is performed or military protection afforded, —where something in short, more or less closely connected with arms or war is kept or is to be done. 4 Otto (U. S.) 222.

MILITARY TENURES. The various tenures by knight service, grand serjeanty, cornage, etc., are frequently called "military tenures," from the nature of the services which they involve. 1 Steph. Comm. 204.

MILITARY TESTAMENT. In English law. A nuncupative will,—that is, one made by word of mouth,—by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. St. 1 Vict. c. 26, § 11.

MILITES. Knights, and, in Scotch law, freeholders.

MILITIA. A body of persons enlisted and trained to military duty, but not kept in service, being subject only to service on call, as in case of invasion, insurrection, or riot. 94 Ill. 120.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The house or building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster.

MILLBANK PRISON. Formerly called the "Penitentiary at Millbank." A prison at Westminster, for convicts under sentence of transportation, until the sentence or order shall be executed, or the convict be entitled to freedom, or be removed to some other place of confinement. This prison is placed under the inspectors of prisons, appointed by the secretary of state, who are a body corporate, "The inspectors of the Millbank Prison." The inspectors make regulations for the government thereof, subject to the approbation of the secretary of state, and yearly reports to him, to be laid before parliament. The secretary also appoints a governor, chaplain, medical officer, matron, etc. Wharton.

MILLEATE, or MILL LEAT. A trench to convey water to or from a mill. St. 7 Jac. I. c. 19.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money, and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Leach, C. C. 708.

MILREIS. The name of a coin. The milreis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The milreis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The milreis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents. Act March 3, 1843 (5 U. S. St. at Large, 625).

MINA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A measure of corn or grain. Cowell; Spelman.

MINARE (Law Lat.) In old records. To mine or dig mines. Cowell. Minator, a miner. Id.

To drive. Spelman. Minator carucae, a plough driver. Cowell.

MINATUR INNOCENTIBUS QUI PARCIT NOCENTIBUS. He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty. 4 Coke, 45.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 585, 586; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 262; 1 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 82, 85; 2 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 563, 604; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, 306, 311, 312; 8 Conn. 265; 9 Conn. 105.

MINERALS (Law Lat. minera, a vein of metal). The term mineral is not confined to metallic substances. 233 Ill. 62.

All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried. 14 Mees. & W. 859, in construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175, 176.

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster. But see 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 95.

Including every kind of stone, flint, marble, slate, brick earth, chalk, gravel and sand when found under the surface and not lying loosely upon it.

The following substances have been held to be minerals: Brick clay, 22 Q. D. B. 555; 58 L. J. Q. B. 573; whether got under ground or by open workings, 51 L. J. Ch. 570; 55 L. J. Ch. 745; 5 App. Ca. 820; 43 L. T. 513; china clay, 417 L. J. Ch. 761; coal and ironstone, 35 L. J. Ch. 337; 37 Ch. D. 386; 15 App. Ca. 19; coprolites, 46 L. J. Ch. 654; 5 Ch. D. 750; freestone and limestone got by open workings, 1 Shaw, App. 225; 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 223; granite, 1 Times Rep. 549; oil and gas, 233 Ill. 62; 240 Ill. 367; stone got by quarrying, 4 Eq. Cas. 19; 14 M. & W. 859; 20 L. J. Ex. 313; 6 Ex. 644; 17 L. T. O. S. 185; petroleum, 237 Ill. 337; stratum of clay, 1 Ch. 427.

The following have been held not to be minerals: Boat, ancient and embedded, but unpetrified, 55 L. J. Ch.; 33 Ch. D.; brine formed by the percolation of rain-water through rock salt, 26 S. J. 359; clay and sand, 48 L. J. P. C. 36; 4 App. Ca. 294; 40 L. T. 764; clay subsoil, 13 App. Ca. 657; 37 W. R. 627; 31 L. J. C. P. 201; freestone quarry, 1 Shaw App. 225; limestone, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 223.

MINERATOR. In old records. A miner.

MINIMA POENA CORPORALIS EST MAJOR QUALIBET PECUNIARIA. The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one. 2 Inst. 220.

MINIME MUTANDA SUNT QUAE CERTAM HABUERUNT INTERPRETATIONEM. Things which have had a certain interpretation are to be altered as little as possible. Co. Litt. 365.

MINIMENT. An old form of muniments (q. v.) Blount.

The least possible quantity, amount or degree that can be assigned in a given case or under fixed conditions. 233 Ill. 554.

MINIMUM EST NIHILO PROXIMUM. The least is next to nothing. Bac. Arg. Low's Case of Tenures.

MINING PARTNERSHIP. An association between the tenants in common of a mine, who work it together, and divide the profits in proportion to their several interests. 1 Mont. 224; 23 Cal. 198.

It has been said not to be a true partnership, but rather a cross between a tenancy in common and a partnership proper (Bates, Partn. § 14. And see 35 Cal. 365), for the reason that it has no delectus personarum. 102 U. S. 641; 52 Cal. 540.

MINISTER.

—In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of some one of the principal branches of the government.

Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. 4 Conn. 134.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the Gospel.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriage, and are liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the right of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Shep. Touch. (Anthon Ed.) 564; 2 Mass. 500; 10 Mass. 97; 14 Mass. 333; 11 Me. 487.

—In International Law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation, with the consent of two other nations who have a matter in dispute, with a view by his interference and good office to have such matter settled.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of recent origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character. These are simply called "ministers," to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank or character.

The minister represents his government in a vague and indeterminate manner, which cannot be equal to the first degree, and he possesses all the rights essential to a public minister.

There are also "ministers plenipotentiary," who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, § 74; 1 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 48; Merlin, Repert.

Formerly no distinction was made in the different classes of public ministers, but the modern usage of Europe introduced some distinctions in this respect, which, on account of a want of precision, became a source of controversy. To obviate these, the congress of Vienna, and that of Aix-la-Chapelle, put an end to these disputes by classing ministers as follows: (1) Ambassadors and papal legates or nuncios; (2) envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (aupres des souverains); (3) ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns; (4) Charges d'Affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Recez du Congres de Vienne, du 19 Mars, 1815; Protocol du Congres d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du 21 Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 6. See "Ambassador."

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial; as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. 10 Me. 377; Bac. Abr. "Justices of the Peace" (E); 1 Conn. 295; 3 Conn. 107; 9 Conn. 275; 12 Conn. 464. See "Mandamus."

MINISTERIAL OFFICE. Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and which require him to obey some superior, many of which are merely employments requiring neither a commission nor a warrant of appointment, as temporary clerks or messengers. 7 Court of Claims R. 293.

MINISTERIAL POWERS. A phrase used in English conveyancing to denote powers given for the good, not of the donee himself exclusively, or of the donee himself necessarily at all, but for the good of several persons, including or not including the donee also. They are so called because the donee of them is as a minister or servant in his exercise of them.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS. Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. Called, also, "instrumental trusts."

MINISTRANT. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

MINISTRI REGIS (Lat.) In old English law. Ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). A minor; one not a major, i. e., not twenty-one. 2 Inst. 291; Co. Litt. 88, 128, 172b; 6 Coke, 67; 3 Bulst. 143; Bracton, 340b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60; § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calv. Lex. "Major" and "minor" belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are "adult" and "infant."

MINOR AETAS (Lat.) Minority or infancy. Cro. Car. 516. Literally, lesser age.

MINOR ANTE TEMPUS AGERE NON POTEST IN CASU PROPRIETATIS, nec etiam convenire. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree. 2 Inst. 291.

MINOR FACT. In the law of evidence. A relative, collateral or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Wills, Circ. Ev. 27; Burrill, Circ. Ev. p. 121, note 582.

MINOR JURARE NON POTEST. A minor cannot make oath. Co. Litt. 172b. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury. Litt. 289.

MINOR MINOREM CUSTODIRE NON DEBET; alios enim praesumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. A minor ought not to be guardian of a minor, for he is presumed to govern others ill who does not know how to govern himself. Co. Litt. 88.

MINOR NON TENETUR RESPONDERE durante minori aetati; nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem. A minor is not bound to answer during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower. 3 Bulst. 143.

MINOR, QUI INFRA AETATEM 12 AN- norum fuerit, utlagari non potest, nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem aetatem, non est sub lege aliqua, nec in decenna. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the laws, because, before such age, he is not under any laws, nor in a decenary. Co. Litt. 128.

MINOR 17 ANNIS, NON ADMITTITUR fore executores. A minor under seventeen years of age is not admitted to be an executor. 6 Coke, 67.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; a status; infancy, depending for its existence upon the laws of the state in which the person is domiciled. 57 Ill. App. 496.

The lesser number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to "majority (q. v.)"

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government.

MINTAGE. The charge at the mint for coining.

MINUS SOLVIT, QUI TARDIUS SOLV- it; nam et tempore minus solvitur. He does not pay who pays too late; for, from the delay, he is judged not to pay. Dig. 50. 16. 12. 1.

MINUTE.

—In Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See "Measure."

—In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small; that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record. 1 Ohio, 268. See 23 Pick. (Mass.) 184, though in some states, notably New York, they are by statute made part of the judgment-roll. Code Crim. Proc. N. Y. § 485.

MINUTE BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar; e. g., eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 680; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MINUTES.

—In Scotch Practice. A pleading put into writing before the lord ordinary, as the ground of his judgment. Bell, Dict.

—In Business Law. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. Thus, the record of the proceedings at a meeting of directors or shareholders of a company is called the "minutes."

MINUTIO. In the civil law. Diminution.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a treatise written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. It was first published in 1642, and in 1768 it was translated into English by William Hughes. Some diversity of opinion seems to exist as to its merits. Pref. to 9 and 10 Coke. As to the history of this celebrated book, see St. Armand's Essays on the Legislative Power of England, 58, 59.

MISA.

—In Old English Law. The mise or issue in a writ of right. Spelman.

—In Old Records. A compact or agreement; a form of compromise. Cowell.

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: (1) When the death ensues from innocent recreations; (2) from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; (3) from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution. 4 Bl. Comm. 182; 1 East, P. C. 221. See "Homicide;" "Manslaughter."

MISALLEGE. To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

MISAPPROPRIATION. Wrongful conversion of property by one to whom it has been intrusted. Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, 275.

Somewhat similar to embezzlement in certain cases, as the misapplication of funds intrusted to a person for a particular purpose, by devoting them to some unauthorized purpose. 108 Cal. 426.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 683.

Generally applied to a breach of duty or propriety by an officer, witness, juror, etc., not amounting to a crime.

MISCARRIAGE.

—In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed "abortion." When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated "premature labor." But the criminal act of destroying the foetus at any time before birth is termed, in law, "procuring miscarriage." Chit. Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dungal. Hum. Phys. 364. See "Abortion."

—In Practice. A term used in the statute of frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action. 2 Barn. & Ald. 613; 2 Day (Conn.) 457; 63 N. C. 198; Browne, St. Frauds, § 155.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4128.

MISCEGENATION. Marriage between persons of different races.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. St. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONTINUANCE. In practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2 Hawk. P. C. 299; Kitch. Cts. 231; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISCREANT. In old English law. An apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl. Comm. 44.

MISCREAUNTES. (L. Fr.) In old English law. Apostates; unbelievers; infidels. Classed by Britton with the worst criminals; as murderers, robbers, prison-breakers, sorcerers, poisoners, etc. Britt. c. 29. Hence the term miscreant. 4 Bl. Comm. 44.

MISDEMEAN. In old English law. To use improperly; to abuse. "If he misde-mean an authority." Finch, Law, bk. 1, c. 8, No. 63.

MISDEMEANMENT. A person guilty of a misdemeanor.

MISDEMEANOR. Every offense inferior to felony. See "Felony."

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place).

—In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to "join the mise on the mere right" when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's. 2 Wm. Saund. 45h, 45i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and everything except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant. Booth, Real Actions, 98, 114; 3 Wils. 420; 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 31; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 52; 10 Grat. (Va.) 350. The payee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant. 2 Wm. Saund. 45d, note. It was the more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

—In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions; as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua, that he recovers his damages, and pro misis et custagiis, for costs and charges, so much, etc.

MISERA EST SERVITUS, UBI JUS EST vagum aut incertum. It is a miserable slavery where the law is vague or uncertain. 4 Inst. 246; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 427; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 286.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Poth. Proc. Civ. pt. 5, c. 1, § 1; Code La. art. 2935.

MISERERE. The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms (Ps. li., 1), being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy; whence it is also called the "psalm of mercy." Wharton.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.) An arbitrary or discretionary amercement.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may, in his discretion, inflict. According to Spelman, miseri-cord is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 126b; Madd. c. 14.

MISERICORDIA COMMUNIS. In old English law. A fine on the whole community.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent, Comm. 443; Doct. Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance, the mandatary is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it, but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury. 5 Term R. 143; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 81; 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 92; 1 Esp. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Story, Bailm. § 165; Bouv. Inst. Index.

MISFORTUNE. An adverse event not immediately dependent on the action or will of him who suffers from it, and of such a character that no prudent man would take it into his calculation in reference to the interest of himself or of others.

Homicide by misfortune. See "Excusable Homicide."

MISJOINER. An improper joinder, whether of actions, causes of action, offenses, parties, etc. See "Joinder."

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Saxon cennan, summon). A wrongful citation; a variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob; Du Cange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name in designating any person in any instrument or proceeding. In contracts and deeds, a misnomer is generally immaterial if the person intended can be ascertained. 11 Coke, 20; 1 Ld. Raym. 304.

In a pleading, a misnomer of a party is ground of abatement, while misnomer of a third person is or is not a fatal variance, accordingly as it is or is not material. See "Idem Sonans."

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defense of an action, is so called. 198 Ill. 466.

Pleading "Not guilty" to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

It comprehends misdeclaring, whether the error is in separate counts, or in the mis-joining of counts. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 369, 375.

MISPRISION. In criminal law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. 3 Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon (Act Cong. April 30, 1790, § 6; 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 84); for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act Cong. April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83; 1 East, P. C. 139). If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Bl. Comm. c. 9.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea. Under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See "Recital."

MISREPRESENTATION. The assertion of that which is not true.

The nature of misrepresentations to entitle a party injured thereby varies with the nature of the relief sought, but in general the misrepresentation for which relief will be granted must be a willfully false statement respecting a matter of fact (not of law or opinion), which was reasonably calculated to mislead the party to his prejudice in respect to the business in hand, and which did actually have that effect.

MISSILIA (Lat. from mittere, to send or throw). In the Roman law. Gifts or liberalities, which the praetors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people. Inst. 2. 1. 45.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case. 2 Strange, 1199; Park, Ins. 63; Marsh. Ins. 488; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150; 1 Caines (N. Y.) 525; Holt, 242.

MISSIO (Lat. from mittere, to send or put). In the civil law. A sending or putting. Missio in bona, a putting the creditor in possession of the debtor's property. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 378, § 344; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 20; 2 Kames, Eq. 208.

Missio iudicum in consilium, a sending out of the judices (or jury) to make up their sentence. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13, No. 31.

MISSIVES. In Scotch practice. Writings passed between parties as evidence of a transaction. Bell, Dict.

MISSTAICUS (Lat.) In old records. A messenger.

MISTAKE. An erroneous conception, conviction, or belief in respect to matter of either fact or law, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 110. 159 Iowa 529.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 2, pt. 2, p. 358. An erroneous mental condition, conception, or conviction induced by a misapprehension of the truth, without which the act complained of would not have taken place. 159 Iowa 529.

Distinction between "mistake" and "ignorance," see "Ignorance."

MISTAKE OF FACT. Mistake of fact has been defined to be a mistake, not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract, or belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of a thing which has not existed. 151 Ill. 224.

MISTAKE OF LAW. An erroneous conclusion as to the legal effect of known facts. 151 Ill. 223.

MISTERY. An old form of mystery (q. v.)

MISTRESS. The style of the wife of an esquire or gentleman.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed, as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Croke, 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right. In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Bl. Comm. 153; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment; as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See "Damages;" "Character."

MITIOR SENSUS. See "In Mitiori Sensu."

MITIUS IMPERANTI MELIUS PARETUR. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed. 3 Inst. 24.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS. An abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER (Law Fr.) To put, to send, or to pass; as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Bl. Comm. 324; Bac. Abr. "Release" (C); Co. Litt. 193, 273b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTER AVANT (Law Fr.) In old practice. To put before; to present before a court; to produce in court. Mist avant un fait, produced a deed. Y. B. M. 5 Edw. III. 119.

MITTIMUS.

—In Old English Law. A writ inclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine. It derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. 1 Mart. (La.) 278; 2 Mart. (La.) 88.

—In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offense therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Co. Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. In practice. An action partaking of the nature both of a real and of a personal action, by which real property is demanded, and also damages for a wrong sustained. An ejectment is of this nature. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3650. See "Action."

MIXED CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given; as, a legacy charged with some thing of less value than the legacy itself. Poth. Obl. note 12.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical government.

MIXED JURY. A bilingual jury; a jury of the half-tongue.

Also a jury composed partly of negroes and partly of white men.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny. See "Larceny."

MIXED LAWS. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

MIXED PRESUMPTIONS. Presumptions partaking of the nature both of presumptions of law and presumptions of fact; i. e., presumptions of fact recognized by law.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heirlooms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title deeds to an estate, are of this nature. 1 Bl. Comm. 428; 3 Barn. & Adol. 174; 4 Bing. 106. See "Mixed Subjects of Property."

MIXED SUBJECTS OF PROPERTY. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals, ferae naturae, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms. Wharton.

MIXED TITHES. In ecclesiastical law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground;" e. g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law. 380; 2 Bl. Comm. 24.

MIXED WAR. A mixed war is one which is made on one side by public authority, and on the other by mere private persons. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 377, 415.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated; as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the willful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the willful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See "Confusion."

MIXTUM IMPERIUM (Lat.) In old English law. Mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates, as distinct from "jurisdiction." Hale, Anal. § 11.

MOB. An unorganized assemblage of many persons bent on unlawful violence; a riot involving a multitude. Abbott.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch law. A general term, including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and unlawful purposes which are attended with injury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together; but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are sometimes used separately in legal language,—the word "mobbing" being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage and violence of a number of persons, and that of "rioting" to the outrageous behavior of a single individual. Alis. Crim. Law, c. 23, p. 509.

MOBILIA. See "Movables."

MOBILIA NON HABET SITUM. Movables have no situs. 4 Johns Ch. (N. Y.) 472.

MOBILIA PERSONAM SEQUUNTUR; immobilia situm. Movable things follow the person; immovable, their locality. Story, Conf. Laws (3d Ed.) 638, 639.

MOBILIA SEQUUNTUR PERSONAM. Movables follow the person. Story, Conf. Laws (3d Ed.) 638, 639; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 462.

MODALIS. (L. Lat. from modus). In old English law. Having the character of a modus; qualified; enlarged or restricted.

MODERAMEN INCULPATAE TUTELAE. (Lat.) In Roman law. The regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Calv. Lex.; Bell, Dict.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA. A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the parties. New Nat. Brev. 167; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 76.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. In pleading. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chit. Pl. 576; 2 Bos. & P. 224; 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phil. Ev. 147; Bac. Abr. "Assault" (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient. 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting. Sometimes he is called a "chairman." The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODICA CIRCUMSTANTIA FACTI JUS mutat. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

MODIUS (Lat.) In old English law. A bushel. Cowell; Spelman.

A larger measure, of uncertain quantity. Id.

A measure of land. Id.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). In pleading. Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Lawes, Pl. 120; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 22; Steph. Pl. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. "Modo et forma."

MODUS.

—In Civil Law. Manner; means; way. Ainsworth. A rhythmic song. Du Cange.

—In Old Conveyancing. Manner; e. g., the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs, according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim, modus et conventio vincunt legem. Co. Litt. 19a; Bracton, 17b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 293. A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See "Modus Decimandi."

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. In ecclesiastical law. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 31, note.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO NON VALET. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void. Lofft, 427; Cro. Eliz. 511; 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be, first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the parson; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large,—that would be a rank modus. 2 Bl. Comm. 30. See 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100; 13 Mees. & W. 822.

MODUS ET CONVENTIO VINCUNT LEGEM. The form of agreement and the convention of the parties overrule the law. 2 Coke, 73.

MODUS HABILIS. A good or valid manner.

MODUS LEGEM DAT DONATIONI. The manner gives law to a gift. Co. Litt. 19a; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 615.

MODUS LEVANDI FINES. The manner of levying fines; the title of a short statute in French, passed in the eighteenth year of Edward I. 2 Inst. 510; 2 Bl. Comm. 349.

MODUS TENENDI. The manner of holding; i. e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

MODUS TRANSFERRENDI. The manner of transferring.

MODUS VACANDI. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase. See Tray. Lat. Max. s. v.

MODUS VIVENDI. In international law. An agreement between nations not rising to the dignity of a treaty, regulating their conduct in respect to a particular matter. Ordinarily applied to agreements to preserve the status quo pending the negotiation of a final treaty.

MOERDA. The secret killing of another; murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 194.

MOHATRA. In French law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 44; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1118.

MOIETY. The half of anything; as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A., and the other to B., each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Litt. 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonry, or of controverted marches. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 48.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure. Not used.

MOLITURA LIBERA. Free grinding; a liberty to have a mill without paying tolls to the lord. Jacob.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.) He laid his hands on gently.

—In Pleading. Technical words in a plea in justification of a trespass to the person, that defendant used no more force than was reasonably necessary (20 Johns. [N. Y.] 427; 4 Denio [N. Y.] 448; 2 Strob. [S. C.] 232; 17 Ohio, 454), in defense of property (3 Cush. [Mass.] 154; 3 Ohio. St. 159; 9 Barb. [N. Y.] 652; 23 Pa. St. 424. See 19 N. H. 562; 25 Ala. [N. S.] 41; 4 Cush. [Mass.] 597), or the prevention of crime (2 Chit. Pl. 574).

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, a legendary or mythical king of the Britons, who is supposed to have begun his reign about 400 B. C. These laws were famous in the land until the Conquest. Tomlins; Mozley & W.

MOMENTUM. In the civil law. An instant; an indivisible portion of time. Calv. Lex.

A portion of time that might be measured, a division or subdivision of an hour, answering in some degree to the modern "minute," but of longer duration. According to Accursius, ten moments (momenta) made a point (punctum), and four points an hour. Calv. Lex. Hence, no doubt, the rule stated in Bracton, that an hour consists of forty moments (hora fit ex quadraginta momentis), which has been so far misunderstood as to be pronounced a misprint. Bracton, fols. 264, 359b; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31.

MONARCHY. That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

MONASTERIUM (Graeco-Lat. and Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. A monastery; a church. Nov. 5; Spelman. Hence, according to Spelman, the Saxon mynster and munster, and probably, also, the Law French monstre.

MONETA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Money. Said to be derived from monere, to warn, because by the impression upon it we are warned whose it is, that is, by whom coined, and what is its value. Falsa moneta, counterfeit money. Code, 9, 24. Monetam conterfactam. Mem. in Scacc. M. 22 Edw. I. De moneta et cambio domini regis, of the money and exchange of the lord the king. Bracton, fol. 117.

MONETA EST JUSTUM MEDIUM ET mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetæ fit omnium rerum conveniens, et justa aestimatio. Money is the just medium and measure of all commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 922.

MONETANDI JUS COMPREHENDITUR in regalibus quæ nunquam a regio sceptro abdicantur. The right of coining is comprehended amongst those rights of royalty which are never relinquished by the kingly sceptre. Dav. 18.

MONEY. A representative of value, established by law, and made a legal tender in the payment of debts. 65 N. C. 415.

In a strict sense, gold and silver coin. Const. U. S. art. 1, §§ 8, 10. See 44 Tex. 622.

In a broader sense, the common medium of exchange in a civilized nation. 45 Tex. 309; 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 15.

The term is used to designate the whole volume of the medium of exchange, recognized by law or the custom of merchants. 34 Fed. 681. It is generally held to include banknotes. 3 Mass. 403; 71 Ala. 544; 47 Wis. 557. But see, contra, 3 Conn. 534.

As used in wills, it has been construed as synonymous with personalty, to effect the intent of the testator. Jarm. Wills, c. 24.

MONEY CLAIMS. In English practice. Under the judicature act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Mozley & W.

MONEY COUNTS. In pleading. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions, the indebitatus assumpsit, the quantum meruit, the quantum valebant, and the account stated.

MONEY DEMAND. A demand which is certain beforehand, or ascertainable by calculation.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. In pleading. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

An action of assumpsit will lie, without regard to privity of contract, to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with good conscience retain, on a count for money had and received. 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 369; 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 219; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 148; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 154; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175; 1 Har. (N. J.) 447; 1 Har. & G. (Md.) 258; 7 Mass. 288; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 290; 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 488; Add. Cont. 230.

MONEY JUDGMENT. One which requires the payment of money, as distinguished from one directing some act to be done.

MONEY LENT. In pleading. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent. 7 Bing. 266; 3 Mees. & W. 434; 9 Mees. & W. 729. See 1 N. Chip. (Vt.) 214; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 87.

MONEY MADE. The return on execution that the amount has been collected thereon.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French law.

Earnest money. So called because given at parting, in completion of the bargain. Poth. Sale, 507. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

MONEY PAID. In pleading. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

MONEYED CORPORATION. In New York law corporations formed under or subject to the banking or insurance law, and they include every corporation having banking powers, or having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make contracts of insurance. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. 731; 3 N. Y. 479. Fletcher Cyclopaedia Corporations 133.

MONIER, or MONEYER (Law Lat. monetarius). In old English law. A minister of the mint, who made and coined the king's money. There were several of these moniers or workmen; "some to shear the money, some to forge it, others to beat it broad, some to round it, and some to stamp or coin it." Cowell, voc. "Moniers;" "Mint." A banker; one who dealt in money. Cowell.

MONITION. In practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases, the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation of monition, served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warrant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 135. See Conkl. Adm.; Pars. Mar. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In ecclesiastical law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Repert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy." Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature. 1 Denio (N. Y.) 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMACHY. Single combat.

MONOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

The most simple form of this disorder is that in which the patient has imbibed some single notion, contrary to common sense, and to his own experience, and which seems, and no doubt really is, dependent on errors of sensation. It is supposed the mind in other respects retains its intellectual powers. In order to avoid any civil act done or criminal responsibility incurred, it must manifestly appear that the act in question was the effect of monomania. Cyc. Prac. Med. "Soundness and Unsoundness of Mind;" Ray, Ins. § 203; 13 Ves. 89; 3 Brown, Ch. 444; 1 Add. Ecc. 283; 2 Add. Ecc. 402; Hagg. 18; 2 Add. 79, 94, 209; 5 Car. & P. 168; Burrows, Ins. 484, 485. See "Delusion;" "Mania."

MONOMANIACS. Persons who are insane upon some one or more subjects, and apparently sane upon all others. 2 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 34, 37.

MONOPOLIA DICITUR, CUM UNUS SOLUS aliquod genus mercaturæ universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure. 11 Coke, 86.

MONOPOLIUM (Graeco-Lat.) The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calv. Lex.; Code, 4, 59; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 12, § 16.

MONOPOLY (from Lat. monopolium, q. v.) An exclusive right granted to a few, of something which was before of common right. 11 Peters (U. S.) 607.

The exclusive privilege of selling any commodity. Defined in English law to be "a license or privilege allowed by the king for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using of anything whatsoever, whereby the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before." 4 Bl. Comm. 159; 4 Steph. Comm. 291.

Any exclusive right or privilege.

The term also indicates the possession of total (or in some cases a dominating control of a commodity, etc.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dunl. Hum. Phys. 422.

A monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified. 2 Bl. Comm. 246;

1 Beck, Med. Jur. 366; Co. Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, System, 331; Fred. Code. pt. 1, bk. 1, tit. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Med. Leg. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Fodere, Med. Leg. §§ 402-405.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chit. Prerog. Cr. 345; 3 Bl. Comm. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (E); 1 And. 181; 5 Leigh (Va.) 512; 12 Grat. (Va.) 564.

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (I 12, note 1).

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English law. A writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 31.

MONTES PIETATIS, or MONTS DE PI. etc. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses, and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which the goods pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called "pawn-brokers," perform this office,—sometimes with doubtful fidelity. See Bell, Inst. 5. 2. 2.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as it is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil, solar or calendar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap years of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only. 2 Bl. Comm. 141; 6 Coke, 62; 6 Term R. 224; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bing. 307. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and "a twelve-months." The latter has been held to mean a year. 6 Coke, 61.

But in mercantile contracts in England, and for any purpose in the United States, a month simply signifies a calendar month. Chit. Bills, 406; 3 Brod. & B. 187; 1 Maule & S. 111; Story, Bills, § 143; Story, Partn. § 213; 2 Mass. 170; 4 Mass. 460; 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 179; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99; 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 512; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 358; 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 518, 605; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 302; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 143; 4 Mass. 461; 4 Bibb (Ky.) 105, which ends on the corresponding day in the month succeeding its beginning, less one day. 279 Ill. 401.

In England, in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar. 3 Burrows, 1455; 1 Maule & S. 111.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a "cenotaph," which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; Id. 11. 7. 2. 42.

A permanent landmark, whether natural or artificial, established for the purpose of indicating a boundary.

MONUMENTA QUAE NOS RECORDA vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity. Co. Litt. 118.

MOORING. In maritime law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo, free from any immediate impending peril insured against. 1 Phil. Ins. 968; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 358; 2 Strange, 1243; 5 Mart. (La.) 637; 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Saxon gemot, meeting together). In English law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212.

To plead a mock cause. Also spelled "meet," from Saxon motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction. An undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting as judge in presence of the school. The argument is conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below. Enc. Lond.

MOOT MAN. One of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the inns of court.

MORA (Lat.) In the civil law. Delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default. Calv. Lex.

MORA REPROBATUR IN LEGE. Delay is disapproved of in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 51.

MORAL CERTAINTY. This expression has been introduced into our jurisprudence from the publicists and metaphysicians, and signifies only a very high degree of probability. 118 Mass. 23.

That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict. It is only probability; but it is called "certainty," because every sane man assents to it necessarily, from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law Nat. bk. 1, c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment, of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Com. v. Webster, Bemis., Report of the trial, 469, 470. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt." Parke, B., Best, Pres. 257, note; 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 217.

MORAL DURESS. Moral duress consists in imposition, oppression, undue influence, or the taking of undue advantage of the business or financial stress or extreme necessities or weakness of another; the theory under which relief is granted being that the party profiting thereby has received money, property or other advantage, which in equity and good conscience he ought not to be permitted to retain. 164 Ill. App. 258; 114 Ill. App. 255.

MORAL FRAUD. Fraud involving actual turpitude, as distinguished from mere constructive fraud.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfill.

These obligations are of two kinds: (1) Those founded on a natural right; as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. (2) Those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration; as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience; but if the debtor promise to pay it, the moral obligation is a sufficient consideration for the promise, and the creditor may maintain an action of assumpsit to recover the money. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 623. See "Consideration."

MORARI (Lat.) In old English law. To delay; to pause or rest. Moratur in lege. (he) rests or pauses in law; (he) demurs.

MORBOSUS (Lat. from morbis). In the civil law. Diseased. See Dig. 21. 1. 1-16.

MORBUS SONTICUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A sickness which rendered a man incapable of attending to any business (qui cuique rei nocet). Dig. 50. 16. 113; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 137, § 127, note. A sickness of the severer kind, having the power of causing great pain. A. Gellius, Noct. Att. lib. 20. c. 1. A sickness which excused a nonappearance in court. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 245, 272. Bracton uses this term in treating of the law of essoins, but gives it the meaning of an incurable disease. Bracton, fol. 344b.

MORE COLONICO (Lat.) In old pleading. In husbandlike manner. Towns. Pl. 108.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. 394; Powell, Powers, 397. So in contracts of sale generally. 2 Barn. & Adol. 106.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the middle ages. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, bk. 2, art. 3; Poth. du Mar. 1, c 2, § 2; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835.

MORGANGIVA, or MORGENGEBE (Law Lat.; Lomb. morgingap; Saxon, morgan gyfe; from morgin, morning, and gab, a gift). In old European law. A gift made to a wife on the morning of the nuptial day; a species of dower, which Spelman compares to the English dower ad ostium ecclesiae. This word occurs in the laws of the Burgundians, Alemanni, Ripuarians, and Lombards, and also in the laws of Canute. LL. Canuti, c. 71. Spelman.

MORGEN (Anglo-Dutch). In old New York law. A measure of land, equal to about two acres. O'Callaghan's New Netherlands, vol. 2, Append. 593.

MORS (Lat.) Death.

MORS DICITUR ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM. Death is denominated the extreme penalty. 3 Inst. 212.

MORS OMNIA SOLVIT. Death dissolves all things.

MORT CIVILE. In French law. Civil death, as upon conviction for felony. It was nominally abolished by a law of the 31st of May, 1854, but something very similar to it, in effect, at least, still remains. Thus, the property of the condemned, possessed by him at the date of his conviction, goes and belongs to his successors (heritiers), as in case of an intestacy, and his future acquired property goes to the state by right of its prerogative (par droit de desherence), but the state may, as a matter of grace, make it over in whole or in part to the widow and children. Brown.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Co. Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTALITY. The word "mortality" may, under certain circumstances, include every description of death, every termination of life to which mortals are subject. It applies generally, however, to that description of death which is not occasioned by violent means. 5 B. & Ald. 110, 112; 3 B. & C. 793.

MORTALITY (or MORTUARY) TABLES. Tables showing the duration of human life, as based on observations and records of vital statistics. The records of deaths kept at certain places for long periods form the basis of the tables more commonly known as "Carlisle Tables," or "Northampton Tables" (q. v.)

MORTGAGE. The conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent, Comm. 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 475.

By the law of several states, a mortgage is no longer a conveyance by which an estate passes, but a mere pledge creating only a lien. Holmes, Mortg. § 1.

Two general theories prevail as to the nature of the estate created by mortgage. The common-law theory that a mortgage passes title to the mortgagee subject to defeat by the performance of the condition subsequent has been adopted in Alabama (69 Ala. 442), Arkansas (65 Ark. 174), Connecticut (19 Conn. 218), Illinois (1 Scam. 140), Maine (2 Me. 182), Maryland (6 Gill & J. 72), Massachusetts (5 Mass. 120), New Hampshire (5 N. H. 420), North Carolina (66 N. C. 477), Ohio (10 Ohio, 71), Pennsylvania (77 Pa. St. 250), Rhode Island (6 R. I. 542), Tennessee (10 Humph. 214), and Virginia (4 Rand. 245).

The common-law theory, in a somewhat modified form, prevails in Delaware (1 Houst. 320), Mississippi (24 Miss. 368), Missouri (10 Mo. 229), New Jersey (40 N. J. Law, 417), and Vermont (44 Vt. 294).

The equitable doctrine that a mortgage conveys only a lien is adopted in California (2 Cal. 491; 64 Cal. 514), Colorado (Laws 1887, § 263, p. 174), Florida (17 Fla. 698), Georgia (76 Ga. 384), Idaho (Rev. St. 1887, § 3350), Indiana (27 Ind. 472), Iowa (30 Iowa, 268), Kansas (35 Kan. 120), Kentucky (14 Bush, 788), Michigan (65 Mich. 598), Minnesota (12 Minn. 330), Montana (6 Mont. 596), Nebraska (14 Neb. 246), Nevada (1 Nev. 179), New York (54 N. Y. 599), North Dakota (Rev. Code, § 1733), Oregon (11 Or. 534), South Carolina (27 S. C. 309), South Dakota (Rev. Code 1877, § 1733), Utah (Comp. Laws 1876, p. 478), Washington (3 Wash. T. 318), Wisconsin (7 Wis. 566), 1 Pingrey, Mortg. 16.

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that, a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer, being different, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases. See "Chattel Mortgage."

A mortgage may in form be either a conveyance with provision for a defeasance, or a conveyance absolute in form, with a collateral agreement for a defeasance. 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 555; 2 Me. 152; 12 Mass. 456.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. See "Equitable Mortgage."

A legal mortgage is a conveyance of property intended by the parties at the time of making it to be a security for the performance of some prescribed act. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 479.

MORTGAGE OF GOODS. A conveyance of goods in gage, or mortgage, by which the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute in law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. Story, Bailm. § 287. It is distinguished from a pledge by the circumstance that possession by the pledgee is not, or may not be, essential to create or to support the title. Id. See 2 Kent, Comm. 522-532; 4 Kent, Comm. 138.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See "Mortgage."

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See "Mortgage."

MORTH (Saxon). Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "meurtre de guet-apens."

MORTHLAGA. A murderer. Cowell.

MORTHLAGE. Murder. Cowell.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch law. A term nearly synonymous with "mortmain."

MORTIS CAUSA (Lat.) By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase, donatio mortis causa (q. v.)

MORTIS MOMENTUM EST ULTIMUM vite momentum. The last moment of life is the moment of death. 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 245, 250.

MORTMAIN. Mortmain, so called by resemblance to a man in his last moments, who holds whatever he takes in his hand mortuo manu, that is, so fast that he never quits it until he is dead. Plowden 193.

A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of "mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bl. Comm. 268; Co. Litt. 2b; Ersk. Inst. 2. 4. 10; Barr. Obs. St. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 1137; Shelf. Mortm.

MORTMAIN ACTS. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the possession or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua manu. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I., it was enacted by St. 9 Geo. II. c. 36 (called the "Mortmain Act" par excellence), that no lands should be given to charities unless certain requisites should be observed. Brown.

MORTUARY. In ecclesiastical law. A burial place. A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second-best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church yard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See "Soulscoot." They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord. Par. Ant. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse present. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Bl. Comm. 427.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.) Dead. Ainsworth. So in sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridg. 469; Brooke, Abr. "Retorne de Briefe," pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. "Return," lib. 2, pl. 12.

MORTUUS EXITUS NON EST EXITAS. To be dead-born is not to be born. Co. Litt. 29. See 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 35; Domat. liv, prel. tit. 2 § 1, note 4, 6; 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1721, 1935.

MOS RETINENDUS EST FIDELISSIMAE vetustatis. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained. 4 Coke, 78.

MOSTRENCOS. In Spanish law. Strayed goods; estrays. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 6.

MOT BELL (Saxon). Meeting bell; a bell used by the Saxons to summon the people to the folc mote. Spelman. See "Folc Mote."

MOTE (Saxon). A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folk-mote, etc.

MOTEER. The customary payment at the court (mote) of a feudal lord.

MOTION. In practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice. Properly, an oral application for a rule or order (41 Cal. 650), but the term is now generally applied to applications, whether written or oral.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL. A motion designed to bring in review before the trial court the occurrences of the trial, and to present for consideration alleged errors during the course of the trial. 217 Ill. 82, 177 Ill. 333.

MOTIVE. (from Lat. movere, to move or stir). In the law of evidence. That which moves or influences the mind or will; an emotion, passion, or desire which incites or impels to action.

—In Criminal Evidence. An unlawful desire or emotion, awakened by the perception or contemplation of some external object, or end to be attained by action. This ultimate object is, in fact, the cause or spring of the motive itself, and has sometimes been called the "exterior" or "external" motive, as distinguished from the desire or passion it creates, which is termed the "interior" or "internal" motive. See 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 183. It is, in other words, the inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge the criminal desire. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 283, 284.

MOTWORTHY (Old Eng.) A common councilman. Cowell, voc. "Concionator."

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

The expenses paid for such apparel.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense. 2 Car. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. 346; 1 Ves. & B. 364. See 2 Bell. Comm. 156.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calv. Lex. But these words, mobilia and moventia, are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Id. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house, or such as are in possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. See "Personal Property;" Fonbl. Eq. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index; 2 Bl. Comm. 384; Civ. Code La. arts. 464-472; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 462; 2 Steph. Comm. 67; Shep. Touch. 447; 1 P. Wms. 267.

In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crop, nor building materials on ground. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014; 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 123; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 101; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 142.

—In Scotch Law. Every right which a man can hold which is not heritable. Opposed to "heritage." Bell, Dict.

MOVANT. One who moves; one who makes a motion before a court; the applicant for a rule or order.

MOVING FOR AN ARGUMENT. Making a motion on a day which is not motion day, in virtue of having argued a special case; used in the exchequer after it became obsolete in the queen's bench. Wharton.

MR. The word "Mr." indicates only a man. 15 Ill. App. 103.

MRS. The designation "Mrs." is not a name but usually distinguishes the person referred to as a married woman. 240 Ill. 110.

MUEBLES. In Spanish law. Movables; all sorts of personal property. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 3, c. 1, § 2.

MUIRBURN. In Scotch law. The offense of setting fire to a muir or moor. 1 Brown, Ch. 78, 116.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. 7 Mass. 88; 2 Bailey (S. C.) 558.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offense.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULCTA DAMNUM FAMAЕ NON IRROGAT. A fine does not impose a loss of reputation. Code, l. 54; Calv. Lex.

MULIER. Of ancient time, "muller" was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name "mulier." Co. Litt. 170, 243; 2 Bl. Comm. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate (Co. Litt. 243), and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere and not ex concubina, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlie borne, and the other not so borne." Holmshead, Chron. Ireland, an. 1558.

MULIER PUISNE (Law Fr.) When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigne, and the younger son is mulier puisne.

MULTA CONCEDUNTUR PER OBLIQUUM quae non conceduntur de directo. Many things are conceded indirectly which are not allowed directly. 6 Coke, 47.

MULTA FIDEM PROMISSA LEVANT. Many promises lessen confidence. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 350.

MULTA IGNORAMUS QUAE NOBIS non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fult familiaris. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us. 10 Coke, 73.

MULTA IN JURE COMMUNI CONTRA rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason. Co. Litt. 70; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 150; 2 Coke, 75. See 3 Term R. 146; 7 Term R. 252.

MULTA MULTO EXERCITATIONE FACILIS quam regulis percipies. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules. 4 Inst. 50.

MULTA NON VETAT LEX, QUAE TAMEN tacite damnabit. The law fails to forbid many things which yet it has silently condemned.

MULTA TRANSEUNT CUM UNIVERSITATE quae non per se transeunt. Many things pass as a whole which would not pass separately. Co. Litt. 12a.

MULTI MULTA; NEMO OMNIA NOVIT. Many men know many things; no one knows everything. 4 Inst. 348.

MULTI UTILIUS EST PAUCA IDONEA effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things. 4 Coke, 20.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In equity pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 182; 18 Ves. 80; 2 Mason (U. S.) 201; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682; 2 Gray (Mass.) 467.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. This latter is more properly called "misjoinder" (q. v.)

The subject admits of no general rules, but the courts seem to consider the circumstances of each case with reference to avoiding on one hand a multiplicity of suits, and on the other inconvenience and hardship to the defendants from being obliged to answer matters with which they have, in great part, no connection, and the complication and confusion of evidence. 1 Mylne & C. 618; 5 Sim. 288; 3 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 25; 2 Gray (Mass.) 471; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274, 530. It is to be taken advantage of by demurrer (2 Anstr. 469), or by plea and answer previous to a hearing (Story, Eq. Pl. 530, note), or by the court of its own accord at any time (1 Mylne & K. 546; 3 How. [U. S.] 412; 5 How. [U. S.] 127). See, generally, Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274-290, 530-540; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4243.

MULTIPLE POINDING. In Scotch law. Double distress; a name given to an action which may be brought by a person in possession of goods claimed by different persons pretending a right thereto, calling the claimants and all others to settle their claims, so that the party who sues may be liable only "in once and single payment." Bell, Dict.; 2 Bell, Comm. 299; Stair, Inst. 3. 1. 39.

MULTIPLEX ET INDISTINCTUM PARIT confusionem; et questiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; the more simple questions are, the more lucid they are. Hob. 335.

MULTIPLICATA TRANSGRESSIONE crescat poenae inflecto. The infliction of punishment should be in proportion to the increase of crime. 2 Inst. 479.

MULTIPLICITY (from Lat. multiplex, from multus, many, and plicare, to fold). A state of being many. Webster. That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars; undue variety. 2 Saund. 410.

A multiplying or increasing. Story, Eq. Pl. § 287.

MULTIPLICITY OF SUITS. A multiplicity of suits does not mean a multitude of suits. It does not apply to a situation where each of several parties jointly and severally liable may be independently sued, but where one party may be sued several times in relation to the same subject matter, in its entirety or in respect to some element or elements thereof. 133 Wis. 561.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that, to make a multitude, there must be ten persons, at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Co. Litt. 257.

MULTITUDINEM DECEM FACIUNT. Ten make a multitude. Co. Litt. 247.

MULTITUDO ERRANTIUM NON PARIT errori patrociniū. The multitude of those who err is no protection for error. 11 Coke, 75.

MULTITUDO IMPERITORUM PERDITURIAM. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court. 2 Inst. 219.

MULTURE (Law Lat. multura, molitura, from molere, to grind). In old English law. A grinding of grain at a mill; the grain ground.

The toll or fee due for grinding grain. 2 Mon. Angl. 825; Cowell. Called multer in an old award. 28 Hen. IV. cited by Blount.

—In Scotch Law. A duty paid for grinding in any mill. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 140. A quantity of grain payable to the proprietor of a mill for grinding grain. Bell, Dict.

MUND. Peace.

MUNDBRYE. A breach of the peace.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will, or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and, though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates.)

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Vocat; Calv. Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia. These cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called "municipal magistrates." With us this word has a more extensive meaning; for example, we call "municipal law" not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Bl. Comm. "Municipal" is used in contradistinction to "international." Thus, we say, an offense against the law of nations is an international offense, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offense.

MUNICIPAL AID. A contribution of money, lands, municipal bonds, etc., by a municipality to some private enterprise deemed to be of general benefit, to procure or encourage the construction thereof.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation; e. g., a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Angell & A. Corp. 9, 29; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 222.

An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1.

The incorporation, by authority of the government, of the inhabitants of a particular place, and authorizing them, in their corporate capacity, to exercise certain specified powers with respect to their local government. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 2.

In modern usage, the term is somewhat narrower, and is generally confined to bodies politic, specially organized or chartered, and excluding the ordinary political divisions of the state. In this sense, it includes cities and villages, but excludes counties, townships, or school districts. 44 Wis. 489; 34 Iowa, 84; 52 Mo. 309. But see 36 Minn. 430.

—In English Law. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as of other countries) from very early times, deriving their authority from "incorporating" charters granted by the crown. Wharton.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ACT. In English law. A general statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76), passed in 1835, prescribing general regulations for the incorporation and government of boroughs.

MUNICIPAL COURTS. Courts whose jurisdiction extends only to the limits of a municipality. They are sometimes so called in the statutes creating them, but sometimes have other designations.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law is the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bl. Comm. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. In any one state, the municipal law of another state is foreign law. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic law do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat; as, "criminal or penal law," "civil law," "military law," and the like. "Constitutional law," "commercial law," "parliamentary law," and the like, are departments of the general province of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE. An ordinance of a municipal corporation.

MUNICIPAL SECURITIES. Municipal securities are evidences of municipal indebtedness issued by the municipality.

They are of two general classes:

(1) Municipal bonds, being written and usually sealed obligations executed by the proper officers of the municipality, binding it to pay a specified sum at a particular time. Such bonds are ordinarily negotiable.

(2) Municipal warrants, being instruments generally in the form of a bill of exchange drawn by a municipal officer, upon the treasurer directing him to pay a specified amount to a person named, or to bearer.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers, taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs, and defend its interests.

MUNICIPIUM (Lat. from munus, office or honor, and capere, to take).

—In Roman Law. A foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there; a free town. Butler, Hor. Jur. 29; Adams, Rom. Ant. 47, 77.

A free or privileged town; one that had the right of being governed by its own laws and customs. Id. 77. Hence the Latin municipalis, and English "municipal" (q. v.)

—In Old English Law. A castle. Spelman.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; 3 Inst. 170.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud; a gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calv. Lex.; Du Cange.

MUR, or MURE (Law Fr. from murus). A wall. Par mure ou par haye, by a wall or by a hedge. Britt. c. 61. Mur abatu, a wall beaten or thrown down. Id.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls. St. Westminster I. c. 30.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Starkie, 274.

MURDER. In criminal law. The willful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 13, § 3. Russell says, the killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express or implied by law. 1 Russ. Crimes, 421; 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. 3 Inst. 47.

This latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone (4 Comm. 195), Chitty (2 Crim. Law, 724), and others, has been severely criticized. What, it has been asked, are "sound memory and understanding?" What has soundness of memory to do with the act? Be it ever so imperfect, how does it affect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? For is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a new-born infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice aforethought? Can there be any malice afterthought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304.

According to Coke's definition, there must be: First, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence; it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life and eventually prove fatal. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 31, § 4; 1 Hale, P. C. 431; 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 289; 9 Car. & P. 356; 2 Palmer, 545. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive and in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come wholly forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1722. Foeticide would not be such a killing; he must have been in rerum natura. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide. See "Malice."

In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees, according to the degree of premeditation.

MURDRARE (Law Lat.) In old criminal law. To murder. 3 Bl. Comm. 321. Murdravit, murdered. A necessary word in old indictments for murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 307; 5 Coke, 122b; Lord Kenyon, 2 East, 30.

To hide, conceal, or stifle. Nullam veritatem celabo, nec celari permittam, vel murdrari, I will conceal no truth, nor will I permit it to be concealed or stifled. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 4. Words of the oath of an inquisitor or juror. And see Id. §§ 8, 10.

MURDRE (Law Fr.) Murder. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 26.

A fine so called. Id. See "Murdrum."

MURDRITOR (Law Lat. from murdrare, q. v.) In old English law. A murderer. Murdritores, murderers. Bracton, 101. 115b.

MURDRUM. In old English law. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner, and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks for his death. After the Conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Frenchmen, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law 219, note (r).

MURORUM OPERATIO. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage (q. v.) Cowell.

MURTHRUM. In old Scotch law. Murder or murder. Skene de Verb. Sign.

MUSEUM. By tracing the Greek word from which "museum" is derived to its root it is found to signify amusement, or to amuse; and thus, the term museum would appear to embrace not only collections of curiosities for the entertainment of the sight, but also such as would interest, amuse and instruct the mind. But see Webster. 5 Stev. & Port. (Ala.) 109.

MUSTER ROLL. In maritime law. A list or account of a ship's company, required to be kept by the master or other person having care of the ship, containing the names, ages, national character, and quality of every person employed in the ship. Abb. Shipp. 191, 192; Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 161.

MUSTIZO. A name given to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Dudley (S. C.) 174.

MUTA CANUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pack of hounds. Spelman. See 2 How. St. Tr. 1164.

MUTATIO NOMINIS (Lat.) In the civil law. Change of name. Code, 9. 25.

MUTATION. In French law. This term is synonymous with "change," and is particularly applied to designate the change which takes place in the property of a thing in its transmission from one person to another. Permutation therefore happens when the owner of the thing sells, exchanges, or gives it. It is nearly synonymous with transfer. Merlin, Repert.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. In practice. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Dunl. Adm. Prac. 213; Law, Ecc. Law, 165-167; 1 Paine (U. S.) 435; 1 Gall. (U. S.) 123; 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 261.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.) The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE (Lat. mutus). See "Standing Mute."

MUTILATION. In criminal law. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

MUTINY. In criminal law. The unlawful resistance to a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt.

MUTINY ACT. In English law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689. See 22 Vict. cc. 4, 5. The passage of this bill is the only provision for the payment of the army, and, like our appropriation bills, it must be passed, or the wheels of government will be stopped. There is a similar act with regard to the navy. 1 Bl. Comm. 416, 417, note.

MUTUAL. Reciprocal; reciprocally giving and receiving. Applied to contracts and relations by which reciprocal duties are imposed.

MUTUAL ACCOUNT. See "Account."

MUTUAL AND OPEN ACCOUNT CURRENT. A mutual and open account current is one consisting of credits as well as debits between the parties. 73 W. 545.

MUTUAL CONTRACT. To constitute a mutual contract both parties must be bound. Without this reciprocal obligation no contract can be constituted. If for any reason a contract cannot be enforced against one party, that party is incapable of enforcing it against the other. 157 Ill. 342.

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i. e., each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than "mutual debts." Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once; that by the other payable in futuro; yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts. 1 Atk. 230; 7 Term R. 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other. Thus, where an acceptance of A. came into the hands of B. who bought goods of A., not knowing the acceptance to be in B.'s hands, it was held a mutual credit. 3 Term R. 507, note; 4 Term R. 211; 3 Ves. 65; 8 Taunt. 156, 499; 1 Holt, 408; 2

Smith, Lead. Cas. 179; 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 310; 4 Gray (Mass.) 284.

MUTUAL INSURANCE. A form of life insurance in which the insurer is an association in which all the policy holders are members, and the losses are met by assessments levied upon the members either periodically, or as the exigency arises. See 50 Miss. 662.

MUTUAL MISTAKE. The phrase "mutual mistake," as used in equity, means a mistake common to all the parties to a written contract or instrument, and it usually relates to a mistake concerning the contents or the legal effect of the contract or instrument. 150. Mass. 30. See "Mistake."

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Hob. 88; 14 Mees. & W. 855; Add. Cont. 22. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration; but not if void. Story, Cont. § 81; 2 Steph. Comm. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; acting in return. Add. Cont. 622; 26 Md. 37. See "Consideration."

MUTUANT. The person who lends chattels in the contract of mutuum (q. v.)

MUTUARI. To borrow; mutuatus, a borrowing. 2 Archb. Prac. 25.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him, and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUS (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Dumb; mute; a dumb person. Dig. 50. 17. 124; Inst. 3. 20. 7; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 19. Mutus et surdus, dumb and deaf. Cro. Jac. 105.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower, and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money, which are to be used or consumed, and are to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See "Loan for Consumption"; "Loan and Use."

MY (Law Fr.) Half; middle. En my lou, in the middle place; in the middle. Britt. c. 119. Per my et per tout, by the half or moiety, and by all. 2 Bl. Comm. 182.

MYALGIA. A nervous disease affecting the muscles. 244 Ill. 342.

MYELITIS. Inflammation of the spinal cord. 193 Ill. 279; 41 Ill. App. 273.

MYNUTE (Law Fr.) Midnight. Britt. c. 80.

MYS (Law Fr. from mitter, to put). Put; sent; put in or inserted. Mys a lour penance, put to their penance. Britt. c. 4. Mys en ferges, put in irons. Id. c. 11. Poles mys en escritz, words put in writings. Id. c. 39. Que date soit mys del jour, that a date be put in of the day. Id. Mys en la gaole. Id. c. 100. Mys en certaine, put in certain. Dyer, 55b.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written metier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. 2 Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawk. P. C. c. 23, § 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will under seal. 5 Mart. (La.) 182; 5 La. 396; 10 La. 323; 15 La. 88.

So called from the fact that it is sealed up or enclosed by the testator before attestation. Civ. Code La. arts. 1567, 1584.

N

N. An abbreviation of Novellæ, the Novels of Justinian; used in citing them. Tayl. Civ. Law, 24.

N. E. I. An abbreviation for non est inventus (q. v.)

N. L. An abbreviation of non liquet (q. v.)

NACION. (L. Fr.) Birth; origin.

NAIF (Law Fr.; Law Lat. nativus, a born slave). A villein; a born slave (nee serfe). Britt. c. 31; LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 33.

NAKED. As used in legal phrases, the term means either without consideration or legal formality, or without support or corroboration.

NAKED CONFESSION. A confession of crime unsupported by extrinsic evidence showing the commission of the crime.

NAKED POWER. A right, power or authority disconnected from any interest or estate of the donee in the subject-matter to which it relates. 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 15; 47 Miss. 534.

NAKED TRUST. A passive trust.

NAM, or NAAM.

—In Old English Law. The taking of a pledge; a distress. A component part of the word "withernam" (q. v.) —In Latin Phrases. For. Used as introductory to the quotation of a maxim, and sometimes erroneously treated as part of the maxim itself.

NAMARE (Law Lat.) To take; to detain. Spelman. The derivatives namptus and namptum were also used.

NAMATO (Law Lat.) In old English and Scotch law. A distraining or taking of a distress; an impounding. Spelman.

The English namation is given by Cowell and Blount.

NAME. One or more words habitually used to distinguish a particular individual.

A letter of the alphabet does not constitute a name. 232 Ill. 228.

The name of a person consists, among Anglo-Saxon peoples, of one family name, surname, or patronymic, by which all members of the immediate family are known, and one Christian, baptismal, or surname bestowed upon one by his parents, to distinguish him from others of the same family. 5 Robt. 599.

Only one Christian name is recognized in law, and for all legal purposes the use of a middle name is surplusage. 31 Minn. 385; 78 Iowa, 519; 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 479.

For all practical and legal purposes, the name by which a person is known and called in the community in which he lives and is best known, is his name. 149 Iowa 672, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112.

The word "junior" or "jr" forms no part of a person's name, but is merely descriptive. 182 Ill. 424; 192 Ill. 184.

NAME AND ARMS CLAUSE. The popular name in English law for the clause, sometimes inserted in a will or settlement by which property is given to a person, for the purpose of imposing on him the condition that he shall assume the surname and arms of the testator or settlor, with a direction that if he neglects to assume or discontinues the use of them, the estate shall devolve on the next person in remainder, and a provision for preserving contingent remainders. 3 Dav. Prec. Conv. 277.

NAMELY. In a strict grammatical sense a difference exists between "namely" and "including." The former imports interpretation, i. e., indicates what is included in the previous term; but "including" imports addition, i. e., indicates something not included. 1 Jarm. 753; 2 Jarm. 229; 14 Bea. 626; as to its antecedents, Dy. 77b, pl. 38; Hob. 173.

NAMIUM. An old word which signifies the taking or distraining another person's movable goods. 2 Inst. 140; 3 Bl. Comm. 149. A distress. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 113.

NAMIUM VETITUM. An unjust taking of the cattle of another, and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them. 3 Bl. Comm. 149.

NARR (an abbreviation of the word narratio). A declaration in a cause.

NARRATOR. A pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant-at-law. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 37. Obsolete.

NARROW SEAS. In English law. Those seas which adjoin the coast of England. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (B 3).

NASCITURUS (Lat. from nasci, to be born). In the civil law. An unborn child; a child to be born, or about to be born. 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 128, § 118; Tayl. Civ. Law, 248.

NASTRE (Law Fr.) Born. Fols nastres, born fools; idiots from birth. Britt. c. 34.

NATALE. The state or condition of a man acquired by birth.

NATI ET NASCITURI (Lat.) Born and to be born. An expression including all heirs, near and remote. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 8. See Comb. 154.

NATIO (Lat.) In old records. A native place. Cowell.

NATION. An independent body politic; a society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.

But every combination of men who govern themselves independently of all others will not be considered a nation. A body of pirates, for example, who govern themselves, are not a nation. To constitute a nation, another ingredient is required. The body thus formed must respect other nations in general, and each of their members in particular. Such a society has her affairs and her interests; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common,—thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, Prelim. §§ 1, 2; 5 Pet. (U. S.) 52. See 1 Idaho (N. S.) 612.

NATIONAL BANKS. National banks are, and are not, foreign corporations. They are incorporated and exist under acts of congress and are agencies of the federal government, domesticated in the state. 192 Mich. 640.

NATIONAL CORPORATIONS (sometimes called "federal corporations"). Those incorporated under acts of congress.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See "Public Domain."

NATIONAL DOMICILE. Domicile considered with respect to the nation within which one is domiciled, rather than with respect to the particular locality.

NATIONALITY. Character, status, or condition with reference to the rights and duties of a person as a member of some one state or nation, rather than another.

The term is in frequent use with regard to ships. See, generally, "Citizen;" "Denizen;" "Domicile;" "Naturalization."

NATIVA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A neife, or female villein. So called, because for the most part bond by nativity. Co. Litt. 122b.

NATIVE, or NATIVE CITIZEN. A natural-born subject. 1 Bl. Comm. 366. A person born within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether after Declaration of Independence or before, if he did not withdraw before the adoption of the constitution; or the child of a citizen born abroad, if his parents have ever resided here; or the child of an alien born abroad, if he be in the country at the time his father is naturalized. 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 433; Act Cong. Feb. 10, 1855; 2 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 38 et seq.

NATIVI (Law Lat.) Vassals or feudal tenants. So called, even before feuds became hereditary. Wright, Ten. 14.

Villeins. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51. See "Nativus."

NATIVITAS. In old English law. Villenage; that state in which men were born slaves. 2 Mon. Angl. 643. Called by Britton naifte. Britt. c. 31.

NATIVO HABENDO. A writ which lay for a lord whose villein had run away, commanding the sheriff to apprehend the villein, and restore him to the lord.

NATIVUS. A born villein.

NATURA APPETIT PERFECTUM, ITA ET LEX. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law. Hob. 144.

NATURA FIDE JUSSIONIS SIT STRICTISSIMI JURIS ET NON DURAT, VEL EXTENDATUR DE RE AD REM, DE PERSONA AD PERSONAM, DE TEMPORE AD TEMPUS. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time, Burge, Sur. 40.

NATURA NON FACIT SALTUM, ITA NEC LEX. Nature makes no leap, nor does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

NATURA NON FACIT VACUUM; NEC LEX SUPERVACUUM. Nature makes no vacuum; the law nothing purposeless. Co. Litt. 79.

NATURAE VIS MAXIMA; NATURA BIS MAXIMA. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great. 2 Inst. 564.

NATURAL AFFECTION. The affection which a husband, a father, a brother, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts, and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed. See "Bargain and Sale;" "Covenant to Stand Seised to Uses."

NATURAL ALLEGIANCE.

—In English Law. That kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth, which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of their own. 1 Bl. Comm. 369; 2 Kent, Comm. 42.

—In American Law. The allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native country, and also from naturalized citizens, and which cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law. 2 Kent, Comm. 43-49.

NATURAL-BORN SUBJECTS. In English law. Such persons as are born within the dominions of the crown of England, or rather within the allegiance of the king.

NATURAL CHILDREN. Bastards; children born out of lawful wedlock.

—In Civil Law. Children by procreation, as distinguished from children by adoption.

—In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. Civ. Code La. art. 220.

NATURAL DAY. That space of time included between the rising and the setting of the sun. See "Day."

NATURAL EQUITY. That which is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which arises ex aequo et bono.

It corresponds precisely with the definition of justice or natural law, which is a constant and perpetual will to give to every man what is his. This kind of equity embraces so wide a range that human tribunals have never attempted to enforce it. Every code of laws has left many matters of natural justice or equity wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, from the almost impossibility of enforcing them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, or kindness. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3720.

NATURAL FOOL. An idiot; one born without the reasoning powers, or a capacity to acquire them.

NATURAL FRUITS. The natural production of trees, bushes, and other plants, for the use of men and animals, and for the reproduction of such trees, bushes, or plants.

This expression is used in contradistinction to artificial or figurative fruits. For example, apples, peaches, and pears are natural fruits; interest is the fruit of money, and this is artificial.

NATURAL INFANCY. A period of nonresponsible life, which ends with the seventh year.

NATURAL LAW. The law of nature; the divine will, or the dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. A proposition naturally recognized, pointing out actions which are the source of common good. Cumberland, De Lege Nat. V. 1. Sometimes used of the law of human reason, in contradistinction to the revealed law, and sometimes of both, in contradistinction to positive law.

They are independent of any artificial connections, and differ from mere presumptions of law in this essential respect, that the latter depend on and are a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong; but mere natural presumptions are derived wholly by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any particular rule of law, but simply from the course of nature and the habits of society. These presumptions fall within the exclusive province of the jury, who are to pass upon the facts. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3064; Greenl. Ev. § 44.

NATURAL LIBERTY. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

NATURAL LIFE. The period between birth and natural death, as distinguished from civil death (q. v.)

NATURAL OBLIGATION. One which in honor and conscience binds the person who has contracted it, but which cannot be enforced in a court of justice. Poth. notes 173, 191. See "Obligation."

NATURAL PERSONS. Such as are formed by the Deity, as distinguished from artificial persons, or corporations, formed by human laws for purposes of society and government.

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. In evidence. Presumptions of fact; those which depend upon their own form and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections which are pointed out by experience. See also "Natural Law."

NATURAL YEAR. In old English law. That period of time in which the sun was supposed to revolve in its orbit, consisting of three hundred and sixty-five days and one-fourth of a day, or six hours. Bracton, fol. 359b.

NATURALE EST QUIDLIBET DISSOLVI eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 66; 4 Denio (N. Y.) 414, 417; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785.

NATURALEZA. In Spanish law. The state of a natural-born subject. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 2. Called naturalidad.

NATURALIZATION. The process of conferring citizenship on an alien.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States under the constitution and laws.

He has all the rights of a natural-born citizen, except that of being eligible as president or vice president of the United States. In foreign countries he has a right to be treated as such, and will be so considered even in the country of his birth, at least for most purposes. 1 Bos. & P. 430. See "Citizen."

NAUCLERUS (Lat.) Master or owner of a vessel. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

NAUFRAGE. In French maritime law. When, by the violent agitation of the waves, the impetuosity of the winds, the storm, or the lightning, a vessel is swallowed up, or so shattered that there remain only the pieces, the accident is called naufnage.

It differs from echouement, which is when the vessel remains whole, but is grounded; or from bris, which is when it strikes against a rock or a coast; or from sombrier, which is the sinking of a vessel in the sea when it is swallowed up, and which may be caused by any accident whatever. Pardessus, note 643. See "Wreck."

NAUFRAGIUM (Lat.) Shipwreck.

NAUGHT. In old practice. Bad; defective. "The bar is naught." 1 Leon. 77. "The avowry is naught." 5 Mod. 73. "The plea is undoubtedly naught." 10 Mod. 329. See 11 Mod. 179. Sometimes written "naughty." Brownl. & G. 97.

NAULAGE. The freight of passengers in a ship. Johnson; Webster.

NAULUM (Lat.) Freight or passage money. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 124, note; Dig. 1. 6. 1, qui potiores in pignore.

NAUTA (Lat.) One who charters (exercet) a ship. L. 1, § 1, ff. nautae, caupo; Calv. Lex. Any one who is on board a vessel for the purpose of navigating her. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 213; Vicat; 2 Enmerig. 448; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 4, tit. 9, note 2; Id. lib. 47, tit. 5, notes 1-3, 8, 10. A carrier by water. 2 Ld. Raym. 917.

NAUTICAL ASSESSORS. Persons experienced in navigation, who are called upon by an admiralty judge to sit with him in cases involving questions of correct navigation, and advise him thereon. 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 369.

NAVAGIUM. A duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship. 1 Mon. Angl. 922.

NAVAL. Appertaining to the navy (q. v.)

NAVAL COURTS. Courts held abroad in certain cases to inquire into complaints by the master or seamen of a British ship, or as to the wreck or abandonment of a British ship. A naval court consists of three, four, or five members, being officers in her majesty's navy, consular officers, masters of British merchant ships, or British merchants. It has power to supersede the master of the ship with reference to which the inquiry is held, to discharge any of the seamen, to decide questions as to wages, send home offenders for trial (Merch. Ship. Act 1854, § 260), or try certain offenses in a summary manner (Merch. Ship. Act 1855, § 28).

NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL. Tribunals for the trial of offenses arising in the management of public war vessels.

NAVAL LAW. A system of regulations for the government of the navy. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, note. Consult Act April 3, 1800; Act Dec. 21, 1861; Act July 16, 1862; Homans, Nav. Laws; De Hart, Courts-Martial.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer of the customs of the United States.

His office relates to the estimating duties, countersigning permits, clearances, etc., certifying the collectors' returns, and similar duties.

NAVARCHUS, or NAVICULARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. The master of an armed ship. Navicularius also denotes the master of a ship (patronus) generally; also, a carrier by water (exercitor navis). Calv. Lex.

NAVIGABLE. Capable of being navigated. In English law, only waters in which the tide flows are navigable in the technical sense. 5 Taunt. 705; Davies, 149.

In American law, any water is navigable which is used as a means of useful commerce. 112 Ill. 611; 42 Minn. 532; 110 N. Y. 380.

The navigation need not be by boats. Waters used for floating rafts or logs are public highways for that purpose. 31 Mich. 336; 58 N. H. 304; 72 N. Y. 211.

The capacity for navigation need not be perennial. 42 Wis. 203; 17 Ore. 165. Nor need it be continuous through the entire length of the stream. 31 Me. 9.

The Niagara river has been held navigable, notwithstanding the obstruction of the falls. 37 Hun. (N. Y.) 537.

"Those only are navigable waters where the public pass and repass upon them with vessels or boats in the prosecution of useful occupations. There must be some commerce or navigation which is essentially valuable. A hunter or fisherman, by drawing his boat through the waters of a brook or shallow creek, does not create navigation, or constitute their waters channels of commerce. 20 Conn. 217.

NAVIGATION. The science or art of conducting a ship from one place to another. This includes the supply of necessary implements and skillful mariners. The instruments are useless without the skillful mariners, and conversely, navigation includes two things,—the supply of the instruments or organs of the ship, and the living instruments, or seamen. If either of these is wanting by the negligence of the owner, or of those for whom he is responsible, there is improper navigation. 53 L. J. P. D. & A. 66; 9 P. D. 145.

NAVIGATION ACT. St. 12 Car. II. c. 78. It was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120.

NAVIRE (Fr.) In French law. A ship. Emerig. Tr. des. Assur. c. 6, § 1.

NAVIS (Lat.) A ship; a vessel. Dig. 21. 2. 44; Id. 47. 9.

NAVIS BONA (Lat.) A good ship; one that was staunch and strong, well caulked, and stiffened to bear the sea, obedient to her helm, swift, and not unduly affected by the wind. Calv. Lex., citing Seneca, lib. 5, p. 77.

NAVY. The whole shipping, taken collectively, belonging to the government of an independent nation, and appropriated for the purposes of naval warfare. It does not include ships belonging to private individuals, nor (in the United States, at least) revenue vessels or transports in the service of the war department. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws.

NAZERANNA. A sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office. Enc. Lond.

NE ADMITTAS (Lat.) The name of a writ, so called from the first words of the Latin form, by which the bishop is "forbidden to admit" to a benefice the other party's clerk during the pendency of a quare impedit. It ought to be issued within six months after avoidance of the benefice, before title to present has devolved upon the bishop by lapse, or it will be useless. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 37; Reg. Orig. 31; 3 Bl. Comm. 248; 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 31.

NE BAILA PAS. He did not deliver. In pleading. A plea in detinue, by which the defendant denies the delivery to him of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. In pleading. The general issue in quare impedit. Hob. 162. See Rast. Entr. 517; Winch, Entr. 708.

NE DONA PAS, NON DEDIT. In pleading. The general issue in formedon. It is in the following formula: "And the said C. D., by J. K., his attorney, comes and defends the right, when, etc., and says that the said E. F. did not give the said manor, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, to the said G. B. and the heirs of his body issuing, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath in his count above alleged. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country." 10 Wentw. Pl. 182.

NE EXEAT.

—In Old English Law. A high prerogative writ, generally called ne exeat regno, issued out of chancery to forbid a subject from leaving the realm. Originally it was issued for political reasons only. 1 Bl. Comm. 162, 319.

—In Modern Law. The name of a writ issued by a court of chancery, directed to the sheriff, reciting that the defendant in the case is indebted to the complainant, and that he designs going quickly into parts without the state, to the damage of the complainant, and then commanding him to cause the defendant to give bail in a certain sum that he will not leave the state without leave of the court, and for want of such bail that he, the sheriff, do commit the defendant to prison.

The writ has been abolished in most of the United States.

NE GIST PAS EN BOUCHE (Law Fr.) It does not lie in the mouth. A common phrase in the old books. Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 50.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8. 4. 15. 17.

NE RECIPIATUR (Lat. that it be not received). A caveat or words of caution given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sellon, Prac. 8.

NE RECTOR PROSTERNET ARBORES (Law Lat.) St. 35 Edw. I. § 2, prohibiting rectors, i. e., parsons, from cutting down the trees in church yards. In 1 Keb. 557, it was extended to prohibit them from opening new mines, and working the minerals therein. Brown.

NE RELESSA PAS (Law Fr.) The name of a replication to a plea of release, by which the plaintiff insists he "did not release." 2 Bulst. 55.

NE UNJUSTE VEXES (Lat.) In old English law. The name of a writ which issued to relieve a tenant upon whom his lord had distrained for more services than he was bound to perform.

It was a prohibition to the lord, not unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE (Law Fr.) In pleading. A plea by which the party denies that he ever was lawfully married to the person to whom it refers. See the form, 2 Wils. 118; 10 Wentw. Pl. 158; 2 H. Bl. 145; 3 Chit. Pl. 599.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. In pleading. A plea by which the party who uses it denies that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be; or that the defendant is executor, as the plaintiff in his declaration charges him to be. 1 Chit. Pl. 484; 1 Saund. 274, note 3; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 D 2); 2 Chit. Pl. 498.

NE UNQUES SEISIE QUE DOWER. In pleading. A plea by which a defendant denies the right of a widow who sues for and demands her dower in lands, etc., late of her husband, because the husband was not, on the day of her marriage with him, or at any time afterwards, seised of such estate, so that she could be endowed of the same. See 2 Saund. 329; 10 Wentw. Pl. 159; 3 Chit. Pl. 598, and the authorities there cited.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. In pleading. The name of a plea in an action of account render, by which the defendant affirms that he never was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Viner, Abr. 183.

NE VARIETUR (Lat. that it be not changed). A form sometimes written by notaries public upon bills or notes, for the purpose of identifying them. This does not destroy their negotiability. 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338.

NEAT, or NET. The exact weight of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NEAT CATTLE. Oxen or heifers. The term is not as broad as "beeves." 36 Tex. 324.

NEAT LAND. Land let out to the yeomanry. Cowell.

NEATNESS. In pleading. The statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts, and no more. Lawes, Pl. 62.

NEC CURIA DEFICERET IN JUSTITIA exhibenda. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice. 4 Inst. 63.

NEC TEMPUS NEC LOCUS OCCURRIT regl. Neither time nor place bars the king. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 190.

NEC VENIAM EFFUSO SANGUINE, CAUSUS habet. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable. 3 Inst. 57.

NEC VENIAM, LAESO NUMINE, CASUS habet. Where the Divinity is insulted, the case is unpardonable. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

NECATION. The act of killing.

NECESSARIES. Such things are as proper and necessary for the sustenance of man.

As used to describe those things for which an infant may lawfully contract, necessities are such articles, suitable to the infant's station in life, as are needful to supply the personal requirements of the infant, whether of body or mind. 12 Metc. (Mass.) 561. It includes board and lodging (23 Vt. 378), medical attendance (42 Conn. 203), or education suitable to the infant's station in life (16 Vt. 683). It does not include services essential to the improvement or protection of his property rights (12 Metc. [Mass.] 559; 32 N. H. 345), but does include services essential to secure or protect his personal rights (68 Hun [N. Y.] 589; 12 Kan. 463).

As used to describe those things for which a wife may pledge her husband's credit, it has a slightly narrower significance, excluding instruction (40 Conn. 75), and including only those things which are presently needful for the present support of the wife (63 Mo. App. 191), or to maintain her personal rights (50 Ill. App.

27); but the nature of the support for which she is entitled to contract depends on the husband's means and station in life (114 Mass. 429).

As used to describe those things for which a master may hypothecate the ship, it includes such articles fit and proper for the ship as the owner would, in the exercise of reasonable prudence, have ordered, if present. Maude & P. Shipp, 71.

NECESSARIUM EST QUOD NON POTEST aliter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

NECESSARIUS (Lat.) Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful. See "Necessity."

NECESSARY. Necessary is often employed as a term somewhat analogous to "expedient," or "appropriate," or "reasonably convenient." 115 Ia. 734.

NECESSARY DEPOSITS. See "Deposit."

NECESSARY DOMICILE. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice. Phillim. Dom. 27-97.

NECESSARY INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. That kind of intromission or interference where a husband or wife continues in possession of the other's goods, after their decease, for preservation. Wharton.

NECESSARY REPAIRS. Include not only those absolutely indispensable to the safety of the ship, but such as are reasonably fit and proper under the circumstances. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 237.

NECESSITAS. In the civil law. Necessity; vis major.

NECESSITAS CULPABILIS. Culpable or blameworthy necessity; that kind of necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo. So called by Lord Bacon to distinguish it from the necessity of killing a thief or malefactor. Bac. Com. Law, c. 5; 4 Bl. Comm. 187.

NECESSITAS EST LEX TEMPORIS ET loci. Necessity is the law of a particular time and place. 8 Coke, 69; Hale, P. C. 54.

NECESSITAS EXCUSAT AUT EXTENUAT delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but not in civil. See "Necessity."

NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM QUOD alias non est licitum. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is unlawful. 10 Coke, 61.

NECESSITAS INDUCIT PRIVILEGIUM quoad jura privata. With regard to private rights, necessity privileges. Bac. Max. reg. 5.

NECESSITAS NON HABET LEGEM. Necessity has no law. Plowd. 18. See "Necessity." 15 Viner, Abr. 534; 22 Viner, Abr. 540.

NECESSITAS PUBLICA MAJOR EST quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private. Bac. Max. reg. 5; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 34; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 18.

NECESSITAS, QUOD COGIT, DEFENDIT. Necessity defends what it compels. Hale, P. C. 54.

NECESSITAS SUB LEGE NON CONTINETUR, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum. Necessity is not restrained by law; since what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful. 2 Inst. 326, Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM. Necessity overcomes the law. Hob. 144.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM; LEGUM vincula irridet. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of law. Hob. 144.

NECESSITY (Lat. necessitas). Irresistible power; compulsive force, physical or moral. Webster.

The influence or operation of superior power or irresistible force; the influence of a cause which cannot be avoided nor controlled.

A constraint upon the will, whereby a man is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves, and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. It is highly just and equitable, therefore, that a man should be excused for those acts which are done through unavoidable force and compulsion. 4 Bl. Comm. 27.

NECK VERSE. A cant term for the verse which the ordinary gave a malefactor who prayed his clergy to read, and by reading which he escaped hanging. The first verse of the 51st Psalm, being that ordinarily given, was called the "neck verse."

NEFAS (Lat.) That which is against right or the divine law (fas). A wicked or impious thing or act. Calv. Lex.

NEFASTUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A term applied to a day on which it was unlawful to administer justice. Adams, Rom. Ant. 129.

NEGATIO CONCLUSIONIS EST ERROR in lege. The denial of a conclusion is error in law. Wingate, Max. 268.

NEGATIO DESTRUIT NEGATIONEM, et ambae faciunt affirmationem. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative. Co. Litt. 146.

NEGATIO DUPLEX EST AFFIRMATIO. A double negative is an affirmative.

NEGATIVE AVERMENT. In pleading. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 751.

NEGATIVE COVENANT. One in negative form, whereby the covenantor binds himself not to do a particular thing.

NEGATIVE EASEMENT. One which consists in a prohibition upon the owner of the servient estate of some act which would be detrimental to the dominant estate.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In pleading. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. Thus, where a defendant pleaded a license from the plaintiff's daughter, and the plaintiff rejoined that he did not enter by her license, the rejoinder was objected to successfully as a negative pregnant. Cro. Jac. 87. The fault here lies in the ambiguity of the rejoinder, since it does not appear whether the plaintiff denies that the license was given, or that the defendant entered by the license. Steph. Pl. 381.

This ambiguity constitutes the fault (Hob. 295), which, however, does not appear to be of much account in modern pleading (1 Lev. 88; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" [R 6]; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 36).

NEGATIVE STATUTE. One which is enacted in negative terms, and which so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. "Statutes" (G); Brooke, Abr. "Parliament," pl. 72.

NEGLIGENCE. The breach of a legal noncontractual duty to use care, with no precise intention of producing a particular injury thereby. See Shear. & R. Neg. § 3; Beven, Emp. Liab.

An inadvertent imperfection by a responsible human agent in the discharge of a legal duty, which produces, in an orderly and natural sequence, a damage to another. Whart. Neg. § 3.

Any lack of carefulness in one's conduct, whether in doing, or in abstaining from doing, wherefrom by reason of its not filling the full measure of the law's requirement in the particular circumstances there comes to another a legal injury. Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 436.

Negligence has been defined as the doing or omission of something which a reasonable prudent person would not have done or omitted under the circumstances (95 U. S. 439); but this is rather a statement of what constitutes proper care, and moreover omits the element of a duty imposed by law which is broken by the negligent act or omission (Pollock, Torts, 352).

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. The omission on the part of a gaoler to take such care of a prisoner as he is bound to take, when in consequence thereof the prisoner departs from his confinement without the knowledge or consent of the gaoler, and eludes pursuit.

For a negligent escape, the sheriff or keeper of the prison is liable to punishment, in a criminal case; and in a civil case, he is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the plaintiff. In both cases the prisoner may be retaken. 8 Bl. Comm. 415. See "Escape."

NEGLIGENTIA (Lat. from negligere, to neglect). In the civil law. Negligence, want or omission of care or attention; inattention. This term hardly seems to correspond with what is called in English simple "negligence," since it took a high degree of it to constitute culpa, or fault. Magna negligentia culpa est. Dig. 50. 16, 226. See "Culpa."

NEGLIGENTIA SEMPER HABET INFORTUNIAM COMITEM. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion. Co. Litt. 246; Shep. Touch. 476.

NEGOTIABILITY. In mercantile law. Transferable quality. That quality of bills of exchange and promissory notes, which renders them transferable from one person to another, and from possessing which, they are emphatically termed "negotiable paper." 3 Kent, Comm. 74, 77, 89, et seq. See Story, Bills, § 60.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. Any written instrument which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so as to give the indorsee the legal title, and enable him to sue in his own name. 15 Mo. 337.

In a narrower sense, those instruments the indorsee of which, under the law merchant, takes free of certain equities and defenses between the original parties.

NEGOTIABLE WORDS. See "Words of Negotiability."

NEGOTIATION. The deliberation which takes place between the parties touching a proposed agreement.

That which transpires in the negotiation makes no part of the agreement, unless introduced into it. It is a general rule that no evidence can be given to add, diminish, contradict, or alter a written instrument. 1 Dall. (Pa.) 426; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 340; 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 609.

—In Mercantile Law. The act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

Until an accommodation bill or note has been negotiated, there is no contract which can be enforced on the note; the contract, either express or implied, that the party accommodated will indemnify the other, is, till then, conditional. 2 Man. & G. 911.

NEGOTIORUM GESTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. Literally, a doing of business or businesses; a species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note; Inst. 3. 28. 1; Dig. 3. 5.

The intervention of a person acting without authority in transacting the affairs of another.

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR (Lat.) In civil law. One who spontaneously, and without authority, undertakes to act for another, during his absence, in his affairs.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract; but the civil law raises a quasi mandate by implication for the benefit of the owner in many such cases. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 460; 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note; Story, Bailm, §§ 82, 189.

NEGRO. Generally a person belonging to the African race, and having such a proportion of African blood as will identify him with that race. 5 Jones, Law (N. C.) 11; 80 Va. 544.

It has been held to mean a black man and not to include a mulatto. 18 Ala. 20.

NEIF. In old English law. A woman who was born a villein, or a bond woman.

NEIGHBORHOOD. The immediately adjacent locality. See 27 Mo. App. 584; 63 N. H. 246; as applied to place, signifies nearness, as opposed to remoteness, 63 N. H. 246. Vicinity does not denote so close a connection as neighborhood. A neighborhood is a more immediate vicinity. 27 Mo. App. 584, 190 Ill. 625.

NEMBA (Teut.) In Swedish and Gothic law. A jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 349, 359; Barr. Obs. St. 18, note (z).

NEMINE CONTRADICENTE (usually abbreviated nem. con.) Words used to signify the unanimous consent of the house to which they are applied. In England, they are used in the house of commons; in the house of lords, the words used to convey the same idea are nemine dissentiente.

NEMI. See "Nerny."

NEMINEM OPORTET ESSE SAPIENTIOREM LEGIBUS. No man need be wiser than the laws. Co. Litt. 97.

NEMO ADMITTENDUS EST INHABILITARE SEIPSUM. No one is allowed to incapacitate himself. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40. But see "To Stultify;" 5 Whart. (Pa.) 371; 2 Kent, Comm. 451, note.

NEMO AGIT IN SEIPSUM. No man acts against himself (Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40); therefore no man can be a judge in his own cause (Broom, Leg. Max. [3d London Ed.]

201, note; 4 Bing. 151; 2 Exch. 595; 18 C. B. 253; 2 Barn. & Ald. 822).

NEMO ALIENAE REI, SINE SATISDACTIONE, DEFENSOR IDONEUS INTELLIGITUR. No man is considered a competent defender of another's property, without security. 1 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 202.

NEMO ALIENO NOMINE LEGE AGERE POTEST. No man can sue at law in the name of another. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

NEMO ALIQUAM PARTEM RECTE INTELLIGERE POTEST, ANTEQUAM TOTUM ITERUM ATQUE ITERUM PERLEGIT. No one can properly understand any part of a thing till he has read through the whole again and again. 8 Coke, 59.

NEMO ALLEGANS SUAM TURPITUDINEM, AUDIENDUS EST. No one alleging his own turpitude is to be heard as a witness. 4 Inst. 279; 3 Story (U. S.) 514, 516.

NEMO BIS PUNITUR PRO EODEM DELICTO. No one can be punished twice for the same crime or misdemeanor. 2 Hawk. P. C. 377; 4 Bl. Comm. 315.

NEMO COGITATIONIS POENAM PATITUR. No one suffers punishment on account of his thoughts. Tray. Lat. Max. 362.

NEMO COGITUR REM SUAM VENDERE, ETIAM IUSTO PRETIO. No one is bound to sell his property, even for a just price. But see "Eminent Domain."

NEMO CONTRA FACTUM SUUM VENIRE POTEST. No man can contradict his own deed. 2 Inst. 66.

NEMO DAMNUM FACIT, NISI QUI ID FACIT QUOD FACERE JUS NON HABET. No one is considered as doing damage unless he who is doing what he has no right to do. Dig. 50. 17. 151.

NEMO DARE POTEST QUOD NON HABET. No man can give that which he has not. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 8.

NEMO DAT QUI NON HABET. No one can give who does not possess. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 250.

NEMO DE DOMO SUA EXTRAHI DEBET. A citizen cannot be taken by force from his house to be conducted before a judge or to prison. Dig. 50. 17. 103. This maxim in favor of Roman liberty is much the same as that every man's house is his castle. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 384.

NEMO DEBET ALIENA JACTURA LOCUPLETARI. No one ought to gain by another's loss. 2 Kent, Comm. 336.

NEMO DEBET BIS PUNIRI PRO UNO DELICTO. No one ought to be punished twice for the same offense. 4 Coke, 43; 11 Coke, 59b.

NEMO DEBET BIS VEXARI PRO [UNA ET] EADEM CAUSA. No one should be twice harassed for the same cause. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 24, 27, 182; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 153; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 10, 38; 2 Hall (N. Y.) 454; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 420; 6 Hill (N. Y.) 133; 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 285; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 32; 5 Pet. (U. S.) 61; 1 Archb. Prac. (Chit. Ed.) 476; 2 Mass. 355; 17 Mass. 425.

NEMO DEBET BIS VEXARI, SI CONSTAT CURIAE QUOD SIT PRO UNA ET EADEM CAUSA. No man ought to be twice punished, if it appear to the court that it is for one and the same cause. 5 Coke, 61; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 294.

NEMO DEBET ESSE JUDEX IN PROPRIA CAUSA. No one should be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 114; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 111.

NEMO DEBET IMMISCERE SE REI ALIENAE AD SE NIHIL PERTINENTI. No one should interfere in what no way concerns him. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 18.

NEMO DEBET IN COMMUNIONE INVITUS TENERI. No one should be retained in a partnership against his will. 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 568, 598; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 106, 114.

NEMO DEBET LOCUPLETARI EX ALTERIUS INCOMMODO. No one ought to be made rich out of another's loss. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 4; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 626, 633.

NEMO DEBET REM SUAM SINE FACTO AUT DEFECTU SUO AMITTERE. No one should lose his property without his act or negligence. Co. Litt. 263.

NEMO DUOBUS UTATUR OFFICIIS. No one should fill two offices. 4 Inst. 100.

NEMO EJUSDEM TENEMENTI SIMUL POTEST ESSE HAERES ET DOMINUS. No one can be at the same time heir and lord of the same fief. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 106.

NEMO ENIM ALIQUAM PARTEM RECTE INTELLIGERE POSSIT ANTEQUAM TOTUM ITERUM ATQUE ITERUM PERLEGERIT. No one is able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole. Broom, Leg. Max. 593.

NEMO EST HAERES VIVENTIS. No one is an heir to the living. Co. Litt. 22b; 2 Bl. Comm. 70, 107, 208; Viner, Abr. "Abeyance"; 2 Bouv. Inst. 1694; 1832; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 36.

NEMO EST SUPRA LEGES. No one is above the law. Lofft, 142.

NEMO EX ALTERIUS FACTO PRAEGRAVARI DEBET. No man ought to be burdened in consequence of another's act. 2 Kent, Comm. 646; Poth. Obl. (Evans' Ed.) 133.

NEMO EX CONSILIO OBLIGATUR. No man is bound for the advice he gives. Story, Balm. § 155.

NEMO EX DOLO SUO PROPRIO RELIEVETUR, aut auxilium caplat. Let no one be relieved or gain an advantage by his own fraud. A civil-law maxim.

NEMO EX PROPRIO DOLO CONSEQUITUR actionem. No one acquires a right of action from his own wrong. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 270.

NEMO EX SUO DELICTO MELIOREM suam conditionem facere potest. No one can improve his condition by his own wrong. Dig. 50. 17. 134. 1.

NEMO IN PROPRIA CAUSA TESTIS ESSE debet. No one can be a witness in his own cause. But to this rule there are many exceptions. 1 Bl. Comm. 448; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

NEMO INAUDITUS CONDEMNARI DEBET, si non sit contumax. No man ought to be condemned unheard, unless he be contumacious. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 18.

The Latin nepos, from which "nephew" is derived, was used in the civil law for nephew, but more properly for grandson; and we accordingly find neveu, the original form of nephew, in the sense of grandson. Britton, c. 119.

NEPUOY (Old Scotch). In Scotch law. A grandson. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Eneya."

NET. Clear of anything extraneous, with all deductions (such as charges, expenses, discounts, commissions, taxes, etc.) made; after deductions made; clear of all charges; free from expenses. 198 Ill. 311.

NETHER HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT. The house of commons was so called in the time of Henry VIII.

NEUTRALITY. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war with each other. The strict definition rather imports the duty which a neutral owes to a belligerent, than the relative situation in which that belligerent chooses to place her. But as it rests with every belligerent to determine, according to its views of expediency, in what way it will deal with neutrals who have acted in violation of their duty; neutrality, therefore, in a more enlarged sense, may signify that permitted relation between any two states, after the right to its continuance has been forfeited by one of them. 1 M. & S. 459.

Neutrality consists in the observance of a strict and honest impartiality, so as not to afford advantage in the war to either party, and particularly in so far restraining its trade to the accustomed course which is held in time of peace as not to render assistance to one of the belligerents in escaping the effects of the other's hostilities. Even a loan of money to one of the belligerent parties is considered a violation of neutrality. 9 J. B. Moore, 586. A fraudulent neutrality is considered as no neutrality.

NEVER INDEBTED (Law Lat. nunquam indebitatus). In English practice. A form of plea in actions of debt on simple contract, substituted by the late pleading rules in place of the plea of nil debet (q. v.) Reg. Hillary Term, 4 Wm. IV.; Steph. Pl. 156. The substance of it is that the defendant "never was indebted in manner and form as in the declaration alleged." Id. It is made the proper form of plea in cases where the defendant means to deny, in point of fact, the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would, by law, be implied. Wharton.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. A restatement of the cause of action by the plaintiff, with more particularity and certainty, but consistently with the general statement in the declaration. Steph. Pl. 241; 20 Johns. (N. Y. 43.

Its purpose is to avoid the effect of an evasive plea which apparently answers the declaration, though it does not really apply to the matter which the plaintiff had in view. 1 Wm. Saund. 299b, note 6. Thus, if a defendant has committed two assaults on the plaintiff, one of which is justifiable, and the other not, as the declaration may not distinguish one from the other, the defendant may justify, and the plaintiff, not being able either to traverse, demur, or confess and avoid, must make a new assignment.

NEW FOR OLD. A term used in the law of insurance in cases of adjustment of a loss when it has been but partial. In making such adjustment, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. See 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 265; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 245; 4 Ohio, 284; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 259; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 141.

NEW INN. An inn of chancery. See "Inns of Chancery."

NEW MATTER. In pleading. Matter extrinsic to the matter in the pleading to which the party introducing the same answers or replies. 7 Hun (N. Y.) 482.

Facts different from those alleged in the complaint, and not embraced within the judicial inquiry into their truth. 16 S. C. 586.

Thus, payment (16 N. Y. 297; 25 Ohio St. 276), fraud in obtaining the instrument sued on (20 Minn. 411), or limitations (57 Iowa, 307) constitute new matter.

NEW PROMISE. A contract made after the original promise has, for some cause, been rendered invalid, by which the promiser agrees to fulfill such original promise.

NEW STYLE. The modern system of computing time was introduced into Great Britain A. D. 1752, the 3d of September of that year being reckoned as the 14th.

NEW TRIAL. In practice. A rehearing of the legal rights of the parties, upon disputed facts, before another jury, granted by the trial court, or a reviewing on application of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose. 4 Chit. Prac. 30; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 32.

NEW TRIAL PAPER. In English practice. A paper containing a list of causes in which rules nisi have been obtained for a new trial, or for entering a verdict in place of a nonsuit, or for entering judgment non obstante veredicto, or for otherwise varying or setting aside proceedings which have taken place at nisi prius. These are called on for argument in the order in which they stand in the paper, on days appointed by the judges for the purpose. Brown.

NEW WORK. In the civil law. An edifice or other work newly commenced on any ground whatever. Civ. Code La. art. 852.

NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. Proof of some new material fact in a case, ascertained since the decision.

To constitute such newly-discovered evidence as is ground for a new trial, the evidence must be new and material, not merely impeaching (125 Ill. 122; 24 Pick. [Mass.] 246; 67 Barb. [N. Y.] 411; 36 Minn. 323), nor cumulative (20 Conn. 306; 43 Barb. [N. Y.] 203). It must have been discovered since the former trial (39 Me. 263; 37 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 524), and reasonable diligence must have been used, without success, to discover it in time for the trial (113 Ill. 82; 34 Minn. 351; 35 Hun [N. Y.] 95).

NEWSPAPER. A printed publication, issued in numbers at stated intervals, conveying intelligence of passing events. The term "newspaper" is commonly applied to such publications only as are issued in a single sheet, and at short intervals, as daily or weekly. 4 Op. Attys. Gen. U. S. 10; 7 Exch. 97.

As used in statutes regulating the publication of legal notices, etc., a newspaper must contain matter of general interest; a journal confined to the interests of a single trade or profession not being within the term. 25 Minn. 147. But see 75 Ill. 51. But where, though the main body of the paper is devoted to some special interest, there is in each issue one or more columns of general news and reading matter and advertisements confined to no one calling or trade, the publication is a newspaper. 126 Ill. 219 (law journal); 38 Minn. 349 (religious weekly); 43 N. Y. Supp. 720 (daily mercantile journal).

NEXI. In Roman law. Persons bound (nexi); that is, insolvents, who might be held in bondage by their creditors until their debts were discharged. Vicat; Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 3. tit. 380; Calv. Lex.; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 486a.

NEXT. Next is only an abbreviation of the word "nearest." 1 Coll. C. C. 9; 13 L. J. Ch. 147; 36 L. J. Ch. 793; L. R. 4 Eq. 359. It means nearest or highest; not in the sense of propinquity alone, as, for example, three persons on three chairs, one in the midst, those on each side of the middle one are equally near, each "next" to the center one. But it signifies also order, or succession, or relation as well as propinquity. 27 L. J. Ch. 654.

NEXT FRIEND. One who, without being regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris. Same as prochein ami (q. v.)

NEXT OF KIN. The next of kin of a deceased person are his nearest blood relatives. It has been held that the next of kin included all blood relatives who took under the statute of distribution (28 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 417); but the more modern holding is that it includes only the nearest in blood, excluding some who may be within the statute (150 Mass. 225). It includes relatives of the half blood.

The term does not include a surviving husband or wife, they not being related by blood. 113 Mass. 431; 44 Ill. 446; 69 N. Y. 36.

NEXUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The transfer of the ownership of a thing, or the transfer of a thing to a creditor as a security.

In one sense, nexum includes mancipium; in another sense, mancipium and nexum are opposed, in the same way as sale and mortgage or pledge are opposed. The formal part of both transactions consisted in a transfer per aes et libram. The person who became nexus by the effect of a nexum placed himself in a servile condition, not becoming a slave, his ingenuitas being only in suspense, and was said to be nexum inire. The phrases nexi datio, nexi liberatio, respectively express the contracting and the release from the obligation.

NICHIL. An old form of nihil (q. v.)

NIECE. The daughter of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207.

NIEFE. In old English law. A woman born in vassalage.

NIENT (Law Fr.) Nothing; not; null.

NIENT COMPRISE (Law Fr. not included). An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Tomlins.

NIENT CULPABLE (Law Fr. not guilty). The name of a plea used to deny any charge of a criminal nature, or of a tort.

NIENT DEDIRE (Law Fr. to say nothing). Words used to signify that judgment be rendered against a party because he does not deny the cause of action; i. e., by default.

When a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid, the practice in the English courts is, on an affidavit of the circumstances, to change it in transitory actions; or, in local actions, they will give leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, with a nient dedire, in order to have the trial in another county. 1 Tidd, Prac. (8th Ed.) 655.

NIENT LE FAIT (Law Fr.) In pleading. The same as non est factum, a plea by which the defendant asserts that the deed declared upon is not his deed.

NIENT SEISI. In old pleading. Not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 424.

NIGER LIBER. The black book of register in the exchequer; chartularies of abbey, cathedrals, etc.

NIGHT. That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which, by its light, the countenance of a man may be discerned. At common law, the night, for the purpose of burglary, does not begin until after and ceases when there is daylight enough to discern a man's countenance. 1 Hale, P. C. 550; 4 Bl. Comm. 224; 10 N. H. 105; 42 Vt. 629. See "Daytime."

NIGHT MAGISTRATE. A constable of the night; the head of a watch house.

NIGHT WALKERS. Persons who sleep by day and walk by night (5 Edw. III. c. 14); that is, persons of suspicious appearance and demeanor, who walk by night.

Watchmen may undoubtedly arrest them; and it is said that private persons may also do so. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120. Women walking up and down the streets to pick up men. 3 Taunt. 14, 15. See Hammond, N. P. 135; 15 Viner, Abr. 555; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIGRUM NUNQUAM EXCEDERE DEBET RUBRUM. The black should never go beyond the red; i. e., the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title. Tray. Lat. Max. 373.

NIHIL, NICHIL, or NIL (Lat.) Nothing. —In Practice. A return made by a sheriff to a writ of scire facias, that the bail or defendants have nothing (nihil habent) by which he can make known to them. 2 Tidd, Prac. 1124.

A return formerly made to process of attachment and distringas to compel the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl. Comm. 282.

A return or answer formerly made by a sheriff, on being opposed (that is, interrogated) in the exchequer concerning ill-leviable debts, that they were worth nothing. Cowell.

—In American Law. A return to an attachment in garnishee process. 4 Pa. St. 232.

NIHIL ALIUD POTES REX QUAM quod de jure potest. The king can do nothing but what he can do justly. 11 Coke, 74.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE (Lat. that he take nothing by his writ). In practice. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co. Litt. 363.

NIHIL CONSENSUI TAM CONTRARIUM est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so contrary to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50. 17. 116.

NIHIL DAT QUI NON HABET. He gives nothing who has nothing.

NIHIL DE RE ACCRESCIT EI QUI NIHIL in re quando jus accresceret habet. Nothing accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in the subject matter. Co. Litt. 188.

NIHIL DICIT (Lat. he says nothing). The name of the judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. In such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. See 15 Viner, Abr. 556; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL EST ENIM LIBERALE QUOD non idem justum. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just. 2 Kent, Comm. 441, note (a).

NIHIL EST MAGIS RATIONI CONSENTANEUM quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that everything should be dissolved in the same way in which it was made. Shep. Touch. 323.

NIHIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS CUM DE corpore constat. An error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the thing. 11 Coke, 21; 2 Kent, Comm. 292.

NIHIL HABET (Lat. he has nothing). The name of a return made by a sheriff, marshal, or other proper officer, to a scire facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. 5 Whart. (Pa.) 367.

Two returns of nihil are, in general, equivalent to a service. Yelv. 112; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 70; 1 Law Rep. (N. C.) 491; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 188; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 40.

NIHIL HABET FORUM EX SCENA. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

NIHIL IN LEGE INTOLERABILIS EST, eandem rem diverso jure censerit. Nothing in law is more intolerable than that the same case should be subject (in different courts) to different views of the law. 4 Coke, 93.

NIHIL INFRA REGNUM SUBDITOS magis conservat in tranquillitate et concordia quam debita legum administratio. Nothing preserves in tranquillity and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws. 2 Inst. 158.

NIHIL INIQUIUS QUAM AEQUITATEM nimis intendere. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far. Halk. Max. 103.

NIHIL MAGIS JUSTUM EST QUAM quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than what is necessary. Dav. 12.

NIHIL NEQUAM EST PRAESUMENDUM. Nothing wicked is to be presumed. 2 P. Wms. 583.

NIHIL PERFECTUM EST DUM ALIQUID restat agendum. Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done. 9 Coke, 9.

NIHIL PETI POTES ANTE ID TEM- pus, quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit. Nothing can be demanded before that time when, in the nature of things, it can be paid. Dig. 50. 17. 186.

NIHIL POSSUMUS CONTRA VERITA- tem. We can do nothing against truth. Doctor & Stud. dial. 2, c. 6.

NIHIL PRAESCRIBITUR NISI QUOD possidetur. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed. 5 Barn. & Ald. 277.

NIHIL QUOD EST CONTRA RATIONEM est licitum. Nothing against reason is lawful. Co. Litt. 97.

NIHIL QUOD EST INCONVENIENS EST licitum. Nothing inconvenient is lawful. 4 H. L. Cas. 145, 195.

NIHIL SIMUL INVENTUM EST ET PER- fectum. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment. Co. Litt. 230; 2 Bl. Comm. 298, note.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATU- rall aequitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that each thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound. 2 Inst. 360; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785. See Shep. Touch. 323.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATU- rall aequitati, quam voluntatem domini vo-lentis rem suam in alium transferre, ratam haberl. Nothing is more conformable to natural equity than to confirm the will of an owner who desires to transfer his property to another. Inst. 2. 1. 40; 1 Coke, 100.

NIHIL TAM NATURALE EST, QUAM EO genere quidque dissolvere, quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as that an obligation should be dissolved by the same principles which were observed in contracting it. Dig. 50. 17. 35. See 1 Coke, 100; 2 Inst. 359.

NIHIL TAM PROPRIUM IMPERIO QUAM legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live according to the law. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 17, § 11; 2 Inst. 63.

NIL AGIT EXEMPLUM LITEM QUOD lite resolvit. An example does no good which settles one question by another. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 44, 49.

NIL DEBET (Lat. he owes nothing). In pleading. The general issue in debt on simple contract. It is in the following form: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not owe the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country." When, in debt on specialty, the deed is the only inducement to the action, the general issue is nil debet. Steph. Pl. 174, note; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 83; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS SI DE corpore constat. An error in the name is immaterial if the body is certain. Broom, Leg. Max. (8d London Ed.) 566; 11 C. B. 406.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS (Lat.) In pleading. A plea by which the defendant, who is sued by his landlord in debt for rent upon a lease, but by deed indented, denies his landlord's title to the premises, alleging "that he has no interest in the tenements." 2 Lilly, Abr. 214; 12 Viner, Abr. 184; 15 Viner, Abr. 556.

NIL SINE PRUDENTI FECIT RATIONE vetustas. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason. Co. Litt. 65.

NIL TEMERE NOVADUM. Nothing should be rashly changed. N. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 163.

NIMIA CERTITUDO CERTITUDINEM IPSAM destruit. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself. Lofft, 244.

NIMIA SUBTILITAS IN JURE REPROBatur. Too much subtlety in law is discountenanced. Wingate, Max. 26.

NIMIA SUBTILITAS IN JURE REPROBatur, et talis certitudo certitudinem confundit. Too great subtlety is disapproved of in law; for such nice pretense of certainty confounds true and legal certainty. Broom, Leg. Max. (8d London Ed.) 175; 4 Coke, 5.

NIMIUM ALTERCANDO, VERITAS amittitur. By too much altercation, truth is lost. Hob. 344.

NIMMER. A thief; a pilferer.

NISI (Lat. unless). A word frequently affixed to the words "order," "rule," etc., to indicate that such order or rule is conditional, being operative unless the party shall show cause to the contrary.

NISI PRIUS (Lat. unless before). In practice. For the purpose of holding trials by jury. Important words in the writ (venire) directing the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial of causes depending in the superior courts of law in England, which have come to be adopted, both in England and the United States, to denote those courts or terms of court held for the trial of civil causes with the presence and aid of a jury. The origin of the use of the term is to be traced to a period anterior to the institution of the commission of nisi prius in its more modern form. By Magna Charta it was provided that the common pleas should be held in one place, and should not follow the person of the king; and by another clause, that assizes of novel disseisin and of mort d'ancestor, which were the two commonest forms of actions to recover land, should be held in the various counties before the justices in eyre. A practice obtained very early, therefore, in the trial of trifling causes, to continue the cause in the superior court from term to term, provided the justices in eyre did not sooner (nisi justiciarii diu) come into the county where the cause of action arose, in which case they had jurisdiction when they so came. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 1, § 11. By the statute of nisi prius (13 Edw. I. c. 30, enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16), justices of assize were empowered to try common issues in trespass and other suits, and return them, when tried, to the superior court, where judgment was given. The clause was then left out of the continuance and inserted in the venire, thus: "Praecipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octabis Soti Michaelis, nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint, duodecim." etc. We command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of Saint Michael, unless such and such a one, on such a day and place, shall come to those parts, twelve, etc. Under the provisions of 42 Edw. III. c. 11, the clause is omitted from the venire, and the jury is respited in the court above, while the sheriff summons them to appear before the justices, upon a habeas corpora juratorum, or, in the king's bench, a distringas. See Sellon, Prac. Introd. lxx;

1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 116; 3 Bl. Comm. 352-354; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 245, 382.

See, also "Assize;" "Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius;" "Jury."

NISI PRIUS ROLL. In practice. The transcript of a case made from the record of the superior court in which the action is commenced, for use in the nisi prius court.

It includes a history of all the proceedings in the case, including the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, issue, etc. It must be presented in proper manner to the nisi prius court. When a verdict has been obtained and entered on this record, it becomes the postea, and is returned to the superior court.

NISI PRIUS WRIT. The old name of the writ of venire, which originally, in pursuance of the statute of Westminster II., contained the nisi prius clause. Reg. Jud. 28, 75; Cowell. The clause, however, as it appears in the forms, was not in the original nisi prius form, but in the alternative, the jury being directed to be summoned to come before the justices at Westminster, etc., or before the justices of assize if they should sooner come to the place of trial, on the day designated. The emphatic Latin words were not nisi prius, but vel si prius. See Reg. Jud. ubi supra.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea to an action or award. 2 Ala. 520; 1 N. Chip. (Vt.) 131; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 367.

NO BILL. Words frequently indorsed on a bill of indictment by the grand jury when they have not sufficient cause for finding a true bill. They are equivalent to "Not found," or "Ignoramus" (q. v.) 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 558.

NO PAR VALUE. Stock issued without any expressed par value. Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations, § 2456.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. In Scotch law. An equitable power of the court of sessions, by which it is able, to a certain extent, to give relief when none is possible at law. Stair, Inst. bk. 4, tit. 3, § 1; Ersk. Inst. 1. 3. 22; Bell, Dict.

NOBILES MAGIS PLECTUNTUR PECUNIA; plebes vero in corporo. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person. 3 Inst. 220.

NOBILES SUNT QUI ARMA GENTILITIA antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors. 2 Inst. 595.

NOBILIORES ET BENIGNIORES PRESUMPTIONES IN DUBIIS SUNT PRAEFERENDAE. When doubts arise, the most generous and benign presumptions are to be preferred. Reg. Jur.

NOBILITAS EST DUPLEX,—SUPERIOR et inferior. There are two sorts of nobility,—the higher and the lower. 2 Inst. 583.

NOBILITY. A division of the civil state, comprising persons exalted to some title or dignity. It is the opposite of "commonalty," and in England includes dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. 1 Bl. Comm. 396.

NOCENT (from Lat. "nocere"). Guilty. "The nocent person." 1 Vern. 429.

NOCTANTER. By night. An abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen's bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

NOCTES and NOCTEM DE FIRMA. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights. Domesday Book.

NOCUMENTUM (Lat. harm, nuisance). In old English law. A thing done whereby another man is annoyed in his free lands or tenements. Also, the assize or writ lying for the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 183; Old Nat. Brev. 108, 109. Manw. For. Laws, c. 17, divides nocumentum into generale, commune, speciale. Reg. Orig. 197, 199; Coke, Will Case. Nocumentum was also divided into damnosum, for which no action lay, it being done by an irresponsible agent, and injuriousum et damnosum, for which there were several remedies. Bracton, 221; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NOLENS VOLENS (Lat.) Whether willing or unwilling.

NOLISSEMENT (Fr. from nolis). In French marine law. Affreightment. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 1.

NOLLE (Lat.) To be unwilling; to will not do a thing; to refuse to do a thing. Used, in the civil law, to denote a voluntary act under full knowledge. Calv. Lex. A distinction was made between nolle and non velle. Id. Ejus est nolle, quis potest velle (q. v.).

NOLLE PROSEQUI. In practice. An entry made on the record, by which the prosecutor or plaintiff declares that he will proceed no further. It was formerly used in both civil and criminal proceedings, but in the former is now superseded by the practice of discontinuance.

NOLO CONTENDERE. I will not contend. A plea to an indictment on which the defendant might be sentenced, but which did not estop him in a civil proceeding for the same cause.

NOMEN (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A name of a person or thing. In a stricter sense, the name which declared the gens or family, as, Porcius, Cornelius; the cognomen being the name which marked the individual, as Cato, Marcus; agnomen, a name added to the cognomen for the purpose of description. The name of the person himself; e. g., nomen curiis addere. The name denoting the condition of a person or class; e. g., nomen liberorum, condition of children. Cause or reason (pro causa aut ratione); e. g., nomine culpa, by reason of fault. A mark or sign of anything, corporeal or incorporeal. Nomen supremum, i. e., God. Debt, or obligation of debt; a debtor. See Vicat; Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. A name; the Christian name, e. g., John, as distinguished from the family name. It is also called praenomen. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

—In Scotch Law. Nomen debiti, right to payment of a debt.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM (Lat.) A word in the singular number, which is to be understood in the plural in certain cases.

Misdemeanor, for example, is a word of this kind, and when in the singular may be taken as nomen collectivum, and including several offenses. 2 Barn. & Adol. 75. "Heir," in the singular, sometimes includes all the heirs. "Felony" is not such a term.

NOMEN EST QUASI REI NOTAMEN. A name is, as it were, the note of a thing. 11 Coke, 20.

NOMEN GENERALE (Lat.) A general name; the name of a genus. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 1.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM (Lat.) A most universal or comprehensive term; e. g., land. 2 Bl. Comm. 19; 3 Bl. Comm. 172; Taylor. So, "goods." 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014.

NOMEN JURIS. A name of the law; a legal name or designation; a technical legal term. 2 Swinton, 429.

NOMEN NON SUFFICIT SI RES NON sit de jure aut de facto. A name does not suffice if the thing do not exist by law or by fact. 4 Coke, 107.

NOMINA SI NESCIIS PERIT COGNITIO rerum. If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes. Co. Litt. 86.

NOMINA SUNT MUTABILIA, RES AUTEM immobiles. Names are mutable, but things immutable. 6 Coke, 66.

NOMINA SUNT NOTAE RERUM. Names are the notes of things. 11 Coke, 20.

NOMINA SUNT SYMBOLA RERUM. Names are the symbols of things.

NOMINA VILLARUM (Lat.) Names of the villages. The name of a return made by the sheriffs of England into the exchequer, in the reign of Edward II. of the names of all the villages and their possessors in every county. Cowell; Blount.

NOMINAL. Existing in name only; formal, and not substantial.

NOMINAL DAMAGES. In practice. A trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained. See "Injuria Absque Damno." Practically no damages at all. Such as exist only in name, and not in amount. They are such as are to be awarded in a case where there has been a breach of contract and no actual damages whatever have been or can be shown. 59 Conn. 272; 21 Am. St. Rep. 110; 188 Ill. 241, 242.

NOMINAL PARTNER. One who is apparently or ostensibly a member of a firm, but who is not really so.

The term "ostensible partner" has been used in the sense of nominal partner (67 Tex. 383), but it is better to confine the term "ostensible partner" to one who is really a partner, and known as such, and apply "nominal partner" to one who is not really a partner, but only apparently so.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who is named as the plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought.

NOMINARE (Lat. from nomen, name). To name; to nominate; to appoint. Calv. Lex.

NOMINATE. To appoint. Applied in this sense to the designation by a person of one to act as fiduciary or personal representative. Thus it is the customary term in designating the executor by a testator.

To make a candidate for election. See "Candidate."

NOMINATE CONTRACT. A contract distinguished by a particular name, the use of which name determines the rights of all the parties to the contract; as, purchase and sale, hiring, partnership, loan for use, deposit, and the like. The law thus supercedes the necessity for special stipulations, and creates an obligation in the one party to perform, and a right in the other to demand, whatever is necessary to the explanation of that contract. In Roman law there were twelve nominate contracts, with a particular action for each. Bell, Dict. "Nominate and Innominate;" Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 395, 408; Fig. 2, 14. 7. 1.

NOMINATING AND REDUCING. A mode of obtaining a panel of special jurors in England, from which to select the jury to try a particular action. The proceeding takes place before the under sheriff or secondary, and in the presence of the parties' solicitors. Numbers denoting the persons on the sheriff's list are put into a box and drawn until forty-eight unchallenged persons have been nominated. Each party strikes off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four are returned as the "panel" (q. v.) This practice is now only employed by order of the court or judge. Smith, Actions, 130; Juries Act 1870, § 17; Rapalje & L.

NOMINATIVUS PENDENS (Lat.) A nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes, "This indenture," etc., down to "whereas," though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind. Wharton.

NOMINE POENAE (Lat. in the nature of a penalty).

—In Civil Law. A condition annexed to heirship by the will of the deceased person. Domat, Civ. Law; Halifax, Anal.

—At Common Law. A penalty fixed by covenant in a lease for nonperformance of its conditions. 2 Lilly, Abr. 221.

It is usually a gross sum of money, though it may be anything else, appointed to be paid by the tenant to the reversioner, if the duties are in arrear, in addition to the duties themselves. Hammond, N. P. 411, 412.

NOMINEE. One who has been nominated. See "Nominate."

NOMOCANON.

(1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. Balsamon wrote a commentary upon it in 1180.

(2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without any regard to imperial constitutions. Such is the nomocanon by M. Cotelier. Enc. Lond.

NOMOGRAPHER. One who writes on the subject of laws.

NOMOGRAPHY. A treatise or description of laws.

NOMOTHETA. A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus among the Greeks, and Caesar, Pompey, and Sylla among the Romans. Calv. Lex.

NON (Lat.) Not; no.

NON ACCEPTAVIT (Lat. he did not accept). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange upon a supposed acceptance by him. See 4 Man. & G. 561.

NON ACCIPI DEBENT VERBA IN DEMONSTRATIONEM FALSAM, QUAE COMPETUNT IN LIMITATIONEM VERAM. Words ought not to be accepted to import a false description, which may have effect by way of true limitation. Bac. Max. reg. 13; 2 Pars. Cont. 62-65; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 573; 3 Barn. & Adol. 459; 4 Exch. 604; 3 Taunt. 147.

NON ALIO MODO PUNIATUR ALIQUIS, QUAM SECUNDUM QUOD SE HABET CONDEMNATIO. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins. 3 Inst. 217.

NON ALITER A SIGNIFICATIONE VERBORUM RECEDI OPORTET QUAM CUM MANIFESTUM EST, ALIUD SENSISSE TESTATOREM. We must never depart from the signification of words, unless it is evident that they are not conformable to the will of the testator. Dig. 32. 69. pr.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 500; 2 De Gex., M. & G. 313.

NON ASSUMPSIT (Lat. he did not undertake). In pleading. The general issue in an action of assumpsit.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not undertake or promise, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this he puts himself upon the country."

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS. (Lat. he has not undertaken within six years). In pleading. The plea by which, when pleadings were in Latin, the defendant alleged that the obligation was not undertaken and the right of action had not accrued within six years, the period of limitation of the right to bring suit.

NON AUDITUR PERIRE VOLENS. One who wishes to perish ought not to be heard. Best, Ex. § 385.

NON BIS IN IDEM. In civil law. A phrase which signifies that no one shall be twice tried for the same offense; that is, that when a party accused has been once tried by a tribunal in the last resort, and either convicted or acquitted, he shall not again be tried. Code, 9. 2. 9. 11; Merlin, Repert. See "Jeopardy."

NON CEPIT MODO ET FORMA (Lat. he did not take in manner and form). In pleading. The plea which raises the general issue in an action of replevin.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not take the said cattle (or, goods and chattels, according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration mentioned, or any of them, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country."

It denies the taking the things, and having them in the place specified in the declaration, both of which are material in this action. Steph. Pl. 183, 184; 1 Chit. Pl. 490.

NON COMPOS MENTIS (Lat. not of sound mind, memory, or understanding). A generic term, including all the species of madness, whether it arise from idiocy, sickness, lunacy, or drunkenness. Co. Litt. 247; 4 Coke, 124; 1 Phil. 100; 4 Comyn, Dig. 613; 5 Comyn, Dig. 186; Shelf. Lun. 1. See "Idiocy;" "Insanity."

NON CONCEDANTUR CITATIONES PRIUSquam exprimat super qua re fieri decet citatio. Summonses or citations should not be granted before it is expressed upon what ground a citation ought to be issued. 12 Coke, 47.

NON CONCESSIT (Lat. he did not grant). In English law. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that the crown granted to the plaintiff by letters patent the rights which he claims as a concession from the king; as, for example, when a plaintiff sues another for the infringement of his patent right, the defendant may deny that the crown has granted him such a right.

It does not deny the grant of a patent, but of the patent as described in the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Burrows, 1544; 6 Coke, 15b.

NON CONSENTIT QUI ERRAT. He who errs does not consent. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 581; Bracton, 44.

NON CONSTAT (Lat. it does not appear). Words frequently used, particularly in argument, to express dissatisfaction with the conclusions of the other party; as, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, because non constat whether A. B. was seventeen years of age when the action was commenced. Swinb. pt. 4, § 22, p. 331.

NON CULPABILIS (Lat.) In pleading. Not guilty. It is usually abbreviated non cul. 16 Viner, Abr. 1; 2 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 317.

NON DAMNIFICATUS (Lat. not injured). In pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond of indemnity, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has received no damage. 1 Bos. & P. 640, note (a); 1 Taunt. 428; 1 Saund. 116, note 1; 2 Saund. 81; 7 Wentw. Pl. 615, 616; 1 H. Bl. 253; 2 Lilly, Abr. 224; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 177; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 42; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 153, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 313; 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 396, 405; 3 Halst. (N. J.) 1.

NON DAT QUI NON HABET. He gives nothing who has nothing. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 417.

NON DEBEO MELIORIS CONDITIONIS esse, quam auctor meus a quo jus in me transt. I ought not to be in better condition than he to whose rights I succeed. Dig. 50. 17. 175. 1.

NON DEBET ADDUCI EXCEPTIO EJUS rei cuius petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter the dissolution of which is sought ought not to be made. Bac. Max. reg. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 157; 3 P. Wms. 317; 1 Ld. Raym. 57; 2 Ld. Raym. 1433.

NON DEBET ALII NOCERE, QUOD INTER alios actum est. A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others. Dig. 12. 2. 10.

NON DEBET ALTERI PER ALTERUM Iniqua conditio inferri. A burdensome condition ought not to be brought upon one man by the act of another. Dig. 50. 17. 74.

NON DEBET, CUI PLUS LICET, QUOD minus est, non licere. He who is permitted to do the greater may with greater reason do the less. Dig. 50. 17. 21; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 165.

NON DEBET DICI TENDERE IN PRAE-judicium ecclesisticae libertatis quod pro rege et republica necessarium videtur. That which seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty. 2 Inst. 625.

NON DEBET ACTORI LICERE, QUOD reo non permittitur. That which is not permitted to the defendant ought not to be to the plaintiff. Dig. 50. 17. 41.

NON DECET HOMINES DEDERE CAUSA non cognita. It is unbecoming to surrender men when no cause is shown. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 106, 114; 3 Wheeler, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 473, 482.

NON DECIPITUR QUI SCIT SE DECIPi. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived. 5 Coke, 60.

NON DEDIT. In pleading. The general issue in formedon. See "Ne Dona Pas, Non Debit."

NON DEFINITUR IN JURE QUID SIT conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. 6 Coke, 42.

NON DEMISIT (Lat. he did not demise). In pleading. A plea proper to be pleaded to an action of debt for rent, when the plaintiff declares on a parol lease. Gilb. Debt, 436, 438; Buller, N. P. 177; 1 Chit. Pl. 477.

It cannot be pleaded when the demise is stated to have been by indenture. 12 Viner, Abr. 178; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 W. 48).

NON DETINET (Lat. he does not detain). In pleading. The general issue in an action of detinue. Its form is as follows: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not detain the said goods and chattels (or "deeds and writings," according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration specified, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country."

NON DIFFERUNT QUAE CONCORDANT re, tametsi non in verbis liadam. Those things which agree in substance, though not in the same words, do not differ. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 70.

NON DUBITATUR, ETSI SPECIALITER venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that, although the vendor has not given a special guaranty, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted. Code, 8. 45. 6. But see Doctor & Stud. bk. 2, c. 47; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 690.

NON EFFICIT AFFECTUS NISI SEQUATUR effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows. 1 Rolle, 226.

NON ERIT ALIA LEX ROMAE, ALIA Athenis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna, et immortalis continebit. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time. Cicero, Frag. de Repub. lib. 3; 3 Kent, Comm. 1.

NON EST ARCTIUS VINCULUM INTER homines quam Jusjurandum. There is no stronger link among men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 126.

NON EST CERTANDUM DE REGULIS juris. There is no disputing about rules of law.

NON EST CONSONUM RATIONI, QUOD cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediatur, ubi cognitio causae principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court. 12 Coke, 65.

NON EST DISPUTANDUM CONTRA principia negantem. There is no disputing against a man denying principles. Co. Litt. 343.

NON EST FACTUM (Lat. is not his deed). In pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond or other specialty.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that the said supposed writing obligatory (or "indenture," or "articles of agreement," according to the subject of the action) is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country." 6 Rand. (Va.) 86; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 158.

NON EST INVENTUS (Lat. I have not found him). In practice. The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. Chit. Prac.

NON EST JUSTUM ALIQUEM ANTENATUM post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitae suae pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elder born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. 12 Coke, 44.

NON EST NOVUM UT PRIORES LEGIS ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. thing that prior statutes shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26; Id. 1. 1. 4; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 27.

NON EST RECEDENDUM A COMMUNI observanti. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Coke, 74.

NON EST REGULA QUIN FALLAT. There is no rule but what may fail. Off. Exec. 212.

NON EST SINGULIS CONCEDENDUM, quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults. Dig. 50. 17. 176.

NON EX OPINIONIBUS SINGULORUM, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

NON FACIES MALUM, UT INDE VENIAT bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it. 11 Coke, 74a.

NON FECIT (Lat. he did not make it). The name of a plea, for example, in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. 3 Man. & G. 446.

NON FECIT VASTUM CONTRA PROHIBITIONEM (Lat. he did not commit waste against the prohibition). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement, that the defendant did not commit waste contrary to the prohibition. 3 Bl. Comm. 226, 227.

NON IMPEDIT CLAUSULA DEROGATORIA, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a quibus constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things or acts from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made. Bac. Max. reg. 19.

NON IMPEDIVIT (Lat. he did not impede). In pleading. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. 3 Bl. Comm. 305; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 36. In law French, ne disturba pas.

NON IMPLACITANDO ALIQUEM DE LIBERO TENEMENTO SINE BREVI. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold without the king's writ. Reg. Orig. 171.

NON IN LEGENDO SED IN INTELLIGENDO LEGES CONSISTUNT. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Coke, 167.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM (Lat. he has not broken the covenant). In pleading. A plea in an action of covenant. This plea is not a general issue; it merely denies that the defendant has broken the covenants on which he is sued. It being in the negative, it cannot be used where the breach is also in the negative. Bac. Abr. "Covenant" (L); 3 Lev. 19; 2 Taunt. 278; 1 Aik. (Vt.) 150; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 436; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 71.

NON INTERFUI. I was not present. A reporter's note. T. Jones, 10.

NON INTROMITTANT CLAUSE. In English law. A clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county.

NON INTROMITTENDO, QUANDO BREVE PRAECIPE IN CAPITIS SUBDOLE IMPETRATUR. A writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called "praecipe in capite," any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4.

NON JURIDICUS. Not judicial. See "Dies Non."

NON JUS EX REGULA, SED REGULA EX JURE. The law does not arise from the rule, or maxim, but the rule from the law. Tray. Lat. Max. 384.

NON JUS, SED SEISINA FACIT STIPTEM. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock from which the inheritance must descend. Fleta, lib. 6. cc. 14, 2, § 2; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 72, note (b); Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 466; 2 Bl. Comm. 209; 1 Steph. Comm. 365, 368, 394; 4 Kent, Comm. 383, 389; 4 Scott, N. R. 468.

NON LICET QUOD DISPENDIO LICET. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted to be done. Co. Litt. 127.

NON LIQUET (Lat. it is not clear). In civil law. Words by which the judges (judices) in a Roman trial were accustomed to free themselves from the necessity of deciding a cause when the rights of the parties were doubtful. On the tablets which were given to the judges wherewith to indicate their judgment, was written "N. L." Vicat.

NON MERCHANDIZANDA VICTUALIA. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON NASCI, ET NATUM MORI, PARIASUNT. Not to be born, and to be dead born, are the same.

NON OBLIGAT LEX NISI PROMULGATA. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

NON OBSERVATA FORMA, INFERTUR ADNULLATIO ACTUS. When the form is not observed, it is inferred that the act is annulled. 12 Coke, 7.

NON OBSTANTE. In English law. These words, which literally signify "notwithstanding," are used to express the act of the English king by which he dispenses with the law, that is, authorizes its violation.

He cannot by his license or dispensation make an offense dispunishable which is malum in se; but in certain matters which are mala prohibita he may, to certain persons and on special occasions, grant a non obstante. Vaughan, 330-359; Lev. 217; Sid. 6, 7; 12 Coke, 18; Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 7). See "Judgment."

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. See "Judgment."

NON OFFICIT CONATUS NISI SEQUITUR EFFECTUS. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow. 11 Coke, 98.

NON OMITTAS (Lat. more fully, non omittas propter libertatem, do not omit on account of the liberty or franchise). In practice. A writ which lies when the sheriff returns on writ to him directed, that he hath sent to the bailiff of such a franchise, which hath return of writs, and he hath not served the writ; then the plaintiff shall have this writ directed to the sheriff, that he "omit not on account of any franchise," but himself enter into the franchise, and execute the king's writ. Termes de la Ley.

This clause is now usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs. Wharton; 2 Wm. IV. c. 39; 3 Chit. St. 494; 3 Chit. Prac. 190, 310.

NON OMNE DAMNUM INDUCIT INJURIAM. Not every loss produces an injury, i. e., gives a right of action. See 3 Bl. Comm. 219; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 131; Broom, Leg. Max. 93; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2211.

NON OMNE QUOD LICET HONESTUM EST. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable. Dig. 50. 17. 144.

NON OMNIUM QUAE A MAJORIBUS NOSTRIS CONSTITUTA SUNT RATIO REDDI POTEST. A reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors. 4 Coke, 78; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 149; Branch, Princ.

NON PERTINET AD JUDICEM SECLAREM COGNOSCERE DE IIS QUAE SUNT MERE SPIRITUALIA ANNEXA. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual. 2 Inst. 488.

NON PONENDIS IN ASSISIS ET JURATIS. A writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 165.

NON POSSESSORI INCUMBIT NECESITAS PROBANDI POSSESSIONES AD SE PERTINERE. It is not incumbent on the possessor of property to prove his right to his possessions. Code, 4. 9. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 639.

NON POTEST ADDUCI EXCEPTIO EJUSDEM REI CUIUS PETITUR DISSOLUTIO. A plea of the same matter, the dissolution of which is sought by the action, cannot be brought forward. Bac. Max. reg. 2. When an action is brought to annul a proceeding, the defendant cannot plead such proceeding in bar. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 154; Wingate, Max. 647; 3 P. Wms. 317.

NON POTEST PROBARI QUOD PROBATIONE NON RELEVAT. That cannot be proved which, proved, is irrelevant. See 1 Exch. 91, 92, 102.

NON TENENT INSIMUL. (Lat. they do not hold together). In pleading. A plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denies that he holds the property which is the subject of the suit, together with the complainant or plaintiff.

NON TENUIT (Lat. he did not hold). In pleading. The name of a plea in bar in replevin, when the plaintiff has avowed for rent arrear, by which the plaintiff avows that he did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges.

NON VALEBIT FELONIS GENERATIO, nec ad haereditatem paternam vel maternam; si autem ante feloniam generationem fecerit, talis generatio succedit in haereditate patris vel matris a quo non fuerit felonia perpetrata. The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but, if he had offspring before the felony, such offspring may succeed as to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom the felony was not committed. 3 Coke, 41.

NON VALENTIA AGERE (Law Lat.) Inability to sue. 5 Bell, App. Cas. 172.

NON VALET CONFIRMATIO, NISI ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself, or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession. Co. Litt. 295.

NON VALET EXCEPTIO EJUSDEM REI cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of that of which the dissolution is sought is not valid. 2 Eden, 134.

NON VALET IMPEDIMENTUM QUOD de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment is of no avail which by law has no effect. 4 Coke, 31a.

NON VERBIS SED IPSIS REBUS, LE- ges imponimus. Not upon words, but upon things themselves, do we impose law. Code, 6. 43. 2.

NON VIDENTUR QUI ERRANT CON- sentire. He who errs is not considered as consenting. Dig. 50. 17. 116; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 240; 2 Kent, Comm. 477; 14 Ga. 207.

NON VIDENTUR REM AMITTERE QUI- bus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing whose own it was not. Dig. 50. 17. 85.

NON VIDETUR CONSENSUM RETIN- uisse si quis ex praescripto minantis aliquid immutavit. He does not appear to have retained his consent, who has changed anything at the command of a party threatening. Bac. Max. reg. 22; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 254.

NON VIDETUR PERFECTE CUJUSQUE id esse, quod ex casu auferri potest. That does not truly belong to any one which can be taken from him upon occasion. Dig. 50. 17. 159. 1.

NON VIDETUR QUISQUAM ID CA- pere, quod ei necesse est alii restituere. One is not considered as acquiring property in a thing which he is bound to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 51.

NON VIDETUR VIM FACERE, QUI jure suo utitur, et ordinaria actione exercitur. He is not judged to use force who exercises his own right, and proceeds by ordinary action. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 1.

NONACCESS. The nonexistence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife is generally expressed by the words "non-access of the husband to the wife;" which expressions, in a case of bastardy, are understood to mean the same thing. 2 Starkie, Ev. 218, note. See "Access."

NONAGE. By this term is understood that period of life from the birth till the arrival of twenty-one years. In another sense, it means under the proper age to be of ability to do a particular thing; as, when nonage is applied to one under the age of fourteen, who is unable to marry. See "Age."

NONAGIUM, or NONAGE. A ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses. Blount.

NONAPPARENT EASEMENT. A discontinuous easement. See "Apparent Easement."

NONCLAIM. An omission or neglect by one entitled to make a demand within the time limited by law; as, when a continual claim ought to be made, a neglect to make such claim within a year and a day.

NONCONFORMISTS. In English law. A name given to certain dissenters from the rites and ceremonies of the church of England.

NONCONTINUOUS EASEMENT. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement. See "Apparent Easement."

NONES. In the Roman calendar. The fifth, and, in March, May, July, and October the seventh, day of the month. So called because, counting inclusively, they were nine days from the Ides. Adams, Rom. Ant. 355, 357. See "Ides."

NONFEASANCE. The neglect or failure of a person to do some act which he ought to do. The term is not generally used to denote a breach of contract, but rather the failure to perform a duty towards the public whereby some individual sustains special damage, as where a sheriff fails to execute a writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 165; Broom, Com. Law, 655.

When a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its nonfeasance will subject the party to punishment; as, if a statute require the supervisors of the highways to repair such highways, the neglect to repair them may be punished. See 1 Russ. Crimes, 48. See also, "Mandate."

NONISSUABLE PLEAS. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (12th Ed.) 249.

NONJOINER. Omission of a necessary or proper party. See "Joinder."

NONJURORS. In English law. Persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. See 1 Dall. (Pa.) 170.

NONPLEVIN. In old English law. A neglect to replevin land taken into the hands of the king upon default, within fifteen days, by which seisin was lost, as by default. Heugh, de Magna Charta, c. 8. By 9 Edw. III. c. 2, no man shall lose his land by nonplevin.

NONRESIDENCE. In ecclesiastical law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NONRESIDENT. A nonresident is one who does not reside in or is not a resident of a particular place. One may be a nonresident of the United States or of a state, or of a county, or of any particular place. 169 Ill. 42, 43; 69 Ill. App. 423.

NONRESIDENTIA PRO CLERICO REGIS. A writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his nonresidence; in which case he is to be discharged. Reg. Orig. 58.

NONSENSE. That which in a written agreement or will is unintelligible.

NONSUIT. A judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case, or, when he neglects or refuses to proceed to trial, judgment of nonsuit dismisses the action, but does not determine the issues.

Voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by the plaintiff either before the trial is commenced, or during the presentation of his case.

Involuntary nonsuit is judgment of nonsuit ordered by the court where plaintiff fails to appear, or where he has given no evidence on which a verdict in his favor could be rendered.

NONSUMMONS, WAGER OF LAW OF. The mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time. 31 Eliz. c. 3, § 2; 2 Saund. 45.

NONTENURE. In pleading. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserted that he did not hold the land, or at least some part of it, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration (1 Mod. 250); in which case the writ abates as to the part with reference to which the plea is sustained (8 Cranch [U. S.] 242). It may be pleaded with or without a disclaimer. It was a dilatory plea, though not strictly in abatement (2 Saund. 44, note 4; Dyer, 210; Booth, Real Actions, 179; 3 Mass. 312; 11 Mass. 216), but might be pleaded as to part along with a plea in bar as to the rest (1 Lutw. 716; Rast. Entr. 231a, 231b), and was subsequently considered as a plea in bar (14 Mass. 239; 1 Me. 54; 2 N. H. 10; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" [I 9]).

NONTERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NONTERMINUS. The vacation between term and term, formerly called the time or days of the king's peace.

NONUSER. Neglect to make use of a franchise, privilege, or right. See 23 Pick. (Mass.) 141.

NOOK OF LAND (Law Lat. noka, or nocata terrae). In old records. A measure or description of land, of uncertain quantity. Blount observes that he had seen an old deed of Sir Walter de Pedwardyn, wherein twelve acres and a half were granted for a noke of land, but he thought the quantity was not certain.

NOON. The middle of the day, the time when the sun is in the meridian, and is to be determined by mean sun time, and not by arbitrary standard time, in the absence of any evidence that standard time was intended. 110 Iowa 75.

NORTH. Unless qualified or controlled by other words, "north" means due north. 96 Cal. 508.

NORTHAMPTON TABLES. Longevity and annuity tables compiled from bills of mortality kept in All Saints Parish, England, in 1735-1780.

NOSAUNCE, Noysaunce. L. Fr. (from noier, or nuire, to hurt). A nuisance; an act done by one to the injury of another's freehold; an act by which a person is prevented from enjoying his tenement as conveniently or freely as he ought to do. Britt. c. 61.

NOSCITUR A SOCIIS. It is known from its associates. The meaning of a word may be ascertained by reference to the meaning of words associated with it. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 523; 9 East, 267; 13 East, 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Vent. 225; 1 Barn. & C. 644; Arg. 10 Barn. & C. 496, 519; 18 C. B. 102, 893; 5 Man. & G. 639, 667; 3 C. B. 437; 5 C. B. 380; 4 Exch. 511, 519; 5 Exch. 294; 11 Exch. 113; 3 Term R. 87; 8 Term R. 118; 1 N. Y. 47, 69; 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 43, 63; 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 644.

NOSCITUR EX SOCIO, QUI NON COGNOSCITUR EX SE. He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate. F. Moore, 817; 1 Vent. 225; 3 Term R. 87; 9 East, 267; 13 East, 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Barn. & C. 644.

NOSOCOMI. In civil law. Persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers. Clef Lois Rom. mot "Administrateurs."

NOT FOUND. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they have not sufficient evidence to find a true bill. See "Ignoramus."

NOT GUILTY.

—In Pleading. The general issue in several sorts of actions of tort.

—In Criminal Law. The general traverse of the accusation by the accused.

NOT POSSESSED. In pleading. A plea sometimes used in actions of trover, when the defendant was not possessed of the goods at the commencement of the action. 3 Man. & G. 101, 103.

NOT PROVEN. In Scotch criminal law. It is a peculiarity of the Scotch jury system in criminal trials that it admits a verdict of "Not proven," corresponding to the Non liquet of the Roman law. The legal effect of this is equivalent to "Not guilty;" for a prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again. According to the homely but expressive maxim of the law, no man can be made to thole an assize twice. But, although the verdict of "Not proven" is so far tantamount to an acquittal that the party cannot be tried a second time, it falls very far short of it with regard to the effect upon his reputation and character. He goes away from the bar of the court with an indelible stigma upon his fame. There stands recorded against him the opinion of a jury that the evidence respecting his guilt was so strong that they did not dare to pronounce a verdict of acquittal. So that many of the evil consequences of a conviction follow, although the jury refuses to convict. When Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was tried and acquitted by an English jury in 1554, he said: "It is better to be tried than to live suspected." But in Scotland a man may be not only tried, but acquitted, and yet live suspected, owing to the sinister influence of a verdict of "Not proven." Forsyth, Hist. Trial by Jury, 334-339.

NOTA (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. A mark or brand put upon a person by the law. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 134, 135.

—In Old English Conveyancing. A note or memorandum of a charter or deed, drawn up preparatory to the execution of the charter itself. Si autem dicant testes quod praesentes fuerint confectioni notae in quam utraque pars consentit, donator et donatorius, hoc sufficit ad probationem, licet praesentes non essent ubi charta scripta fuit et assignata [signata]. But if the witnesses say that they were present at the making of the note, to which each party agreed, donor and donee, this is sufficient for proof, though they were not present when the charter was written and sealed. Bracton, fol. 398; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 34, § 2.

A promissory note. 11 Mod. 340.

NOTAE (Lat.) In civil and old European law. Shorthand characters or marks of contraction, in which one person wrote what was said by another, or in which the emperors' secretaries took down what they dictated. Spelman; Calv. Lex. See "Notarius."

NOTARE INFAMIA (Lat.) In the civil law. To mark or brand with infamy, or disgrace. Dig. 3. 2. For a description of the persons who were so branded (de his qui notantur infamia), see Id.

NOTARIAL. Belonging to a notary; made or done by a notary.

NOTARIUS.

—In Civil Law. One who took notes or draughts in shorehand of what was said by another, or of proceedings in the senate or in a court. One who draughted written instruments, wills, conveyances, etc. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

—In English Law. A notary. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Cowell.

NOTARY, or NOTARY PUBLIC. An officer appointed by the executive or other appointing power, under the laws of different states, having power generally to attest writings for the purpose of establishing their authenticity, to administer oaths, etc.

NOTATION. In English probate practice, notation is the act of making a memorandum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration. Thus, where a grant is made for the whole personal estate of the deceased within the United Kingdom, which can only be done in the case of a person dying domiciled in England, the fact of his having been so domiciled is noted on the grant. Coote, Prob. Prac. 36.

NOTE OF A FINE. The fourth step of the proceedings in acknowledging a fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord, naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement, and enrolled of record in the proper office. 2 Bl. Comm. 351, Append. note iv. § 3; 1 Steph. Comm. 518.

NOTE OF ALLOWANCE. This was a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings, allowing him to bring error. See Com. Law Prac. Act 1852, § 149.

NOTE OF HAND. A popular name for a promissory note.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A note or minute of the protest, made by the notary, at time of protest on the bill, to be completed or filled out at his leisure. Byles, Bills (5th Ed.) 9.

NOTE OR MEMORANDUM. No form of language used in a writing is necessary in order to comply with the Statute of Frauds, requiring some "note or memorandum" as evidence of a contract not in writing, provided that from the writing the intention may be gathered, and any writing from a solemn deed down to hasty notes or memoranda in books, papers, or letters will satisfy the statute, provided that the writing contains on its face or by reference to other writings, the names of the parties, a description of the property, sufficient for its identification, together with the terms, conditions and consideration. 209 Ill. 478.

NOTHUS (Lat.) A natural child, or a person of spurious birth.

NOTICE. Information, whether actual or presumptive, and whether direct or indirect, respecting a matter of fact.

Notice is either (1) actual, consisting of information actually received, or (2) constructive, consisting of facts which, by implication of law, constitute notice without regard to whether they actually impart information.

Actual notice is either (a) express, consisting of direct positive knowledge of the fact in question, or (b) implied, consisting of information sufficient to put one on inquiry as to the fact in question.

"Notice" is a broader term than "knowledge," which includes only express actual notice. 81 Ala. 140; 79 Me. 195.

NOTICE OF APPEARANCE. A notice by defendant to plaintiff that he appears in the action, or by an attorney that he appears for defendant. See "Appearance."

NOTICE OF DISHONOR. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or an indorser of a negotiable note, by a subsequent party, that it has been dishonored either by nonacceptance in the case of a bill, or by nonpayment in the case of an accepted bill or a note.

NOTICE OF JUDGMENT. A written notice of the entry of judgment required in some states to be given to the judgment debtor to start the running of time to appeal.

NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS. See "Lis Pendens."

NOTICE OF MOTION. A notice in writing to the adverse party to an action that a specified motion will be made at a time stated.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given to the drawer or indorser of a bill, or to an indorser of a note, by a prior party, that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. See "Notice of Dishonor."

NOTICE OF TRIAL. A notice by one party to his adversary that he will bring the cause on for trial at the next term of court.

NOTICE TO ADMIT. In the practice of the English high court, either party to an action may call on the other party by notice to admit the existence and execution of any document, in order to save the expense of proving it at the trial; and the party refusing to admit must bear the costs of proving it unless the judge certifies that the refusal to admit was reasonable. No costs of proving a document will in general be allowed, unless such a notice is given. Rules of Court, xxxii. 2.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. Written notice to defendant, requiring him to plead within a certain time. It must always be given before plaintiff can sign judgment for want of a plea. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (Prent. Ed.) 221. Notice to plead, indorsed on the declaration, or delivered separately, is sufficient without demanding plea or rule to plead, in England, by statute. See 3 Chit. St. 515.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. In practice. When it is intended to give secondary evidence of a written instrument or paper which is in the possession of the opposite party, it is in general, requisite to give him notice to produce the same on the trial of the cause, before such secondary evidence can be admitted.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A request by a landlord to his tenant to quit the leased premises, and give possession thereof to the landlord at a time therein mentioned. 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 357; 7 Halst. (N. J.) 99.

NOTING. A term denoting the act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initials of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentment was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for nonacceptance or nonpayment, together with his charge. The noting is not indispensable, it being only a part of the protest; it will not supply the protest. 4 Term R. 175.

NOTIO (Lat. from noscere, to know). In the civil law. The power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 8, Nos. 3, 6; Calv. Lex.

In a more general sense, notio included both cognitio (cognizance) and jurisdictio (jurisdiction). Dig. 50. 16. 99, pr.; Calv. Lex.

NOTITIA (Lat. from notus, known, or noscere, to know). In the civil law. Knowledge; information; intelligence.

—In Old Practice. Notice. Inde notitiam habuit, had notice thereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 70, 70. Notitia non debet claudicare, notice ought not to be lame or imperfect. 6 Coke, 29b.

NOTITIA DICITUR A NOSCENDO; ET notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is called from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt, i. e., be imperfect. 6 Coke, 29.

NOTORIAL. The Scotch form of "notarial" (q. v.). Bell, Dict.

NOTORIOUS. Primarily "notorious" means "generally known and talked of by the public." 151 Mass. 426.

NOTOUR. In Scotch law. Open; notorious. A notour bankrupt is a debtor who, being under diligence by horning and caption of his creditor, retires to sanctuary, or absconds, or defends by force, and is afterwards found insolvent by court of sessions. Bell, Dict.; Burton, Law of Scotland, 601.

NOVA CONSTITUTIO FUTURIS FORMAM imponere debet, non praeteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form upon what is to come, not upon what is past. 2 Inst. 292; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 33, 36; T. Jones, 108; 2 Show. 16; 6 Mees. & W. 285; 7 Mees. & W. 536; 2 Mass. 122, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 139; 2 N. Y. 245; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 503 et seq.,—where this rule is fully considered and the authorities reviewed.

NOVA CUSTOMA. An imposition or duty. See "Antiqua Custuma."

NOVA STATUTA. New statutes. A term including all statutes passed in the reign of Edw. III. and subsequently.

NOVAE NARRATIONES. "New counts or tallys." A book of such pleadings as were then in use, published in the reign of Edw. III. 3 Bl. Comm. 297; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 151.

NOVALE (Lat.) Land newly ploughed, or that had not been tilled before within the memory of man. Cowell; Spelman.

NOVALIS (Lat. from novus, new). In the civil law. Land that rested a year after the first ploughing. Dig. 50. 16. 30. 2.

NOVATIO (Lat. from novare, to make new, from novus, new). In the civil law. Literally, a making new. A change of a former debt or obligation into another of the same or a different kind, either by a change of the persons, called delegatio, or by a change in the obligation, the persons continuing the same. Inst. 3. 30. 3; Dig. 46. 2; Code, 8. 42; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 20, No. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1011 et seq. This term, translated or converted into "novation," is extensively used in modern civil law, and in the jurisprudence of Holland, Spain, France, Scotland, and the state of Louisiana. Burge, Sur. 166. Called in Fleta, innovatio. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12. See "Novation."

NOVATIO NON PRAESUMITUR. A novation is not presumed. Halk. Max. 104.

NOVATION. The substitution of a new obligation for an old, which is thereby extinguished. 57 Wis. 534. The term is of civil law origin, and is rarely used in the common law.

Novation is of three sorts:

(1) Where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Here, either the subject matter of the debt may be changed, or the conditions of time, place, etc., of payment.

(2) Where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted for the old. This novation may be made without the intervention or privity of the old debtor (in this case the new agreement is called expromissio, and the new debtor expromissor), or by the debtor's transmission of his debt to another, who accepts the obligation, and is himself accepted by the creditor. This transaction is called delegatio. Domat lays down the essential distinction between a delegation and any other novation, thus: That the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt.

(3) Where the debt remains the same, but a new creditor is substituted for the old. This also is called delegatio, for the reason adduced above, to wit, that all three parties must assent to the new bargain. It differs from the cessio nominis of the civil law by completely cancelling the old debt, while the cessio nominis leaves the creditor a claim for any balance due after assignment. See Civ. Code Cal. §§ 1530, 1532.

To constitute a novation there must be (1) a valid pre-existing obligation; (2) consent of capable parties; (3) express intention to innovate.

The release of the old obligation is a sufficient consideration. 37 Ohio St. 279.

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See "New Assignment."

NOVEL DISSEISIN. See "Assize of Novel Disseisin."

NOVELLAE LEONIS. The ordinances of Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains one hundred and thirteen Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilaeus.

NOVELS, or NOVELLAE CONSTITUTIONES. In civil law. The name given to the constitutions or laws of Justinian and his immediate successors, which were promulgated soon after the Code of Justinian.

It appears to have been the intention of Justinian, after the completion of the second and revised edition of the Code, to supply what had not been foreseen in the preceding laws, together with any necessary amendments or alterations, not by revising the Code, but by supplementary laws. Such laws he promulgated from time to time; but no official compilation of them is known to have been made until after his death, when his laws, one hundred and fifty-nine in number, with those of the reigns of Justin II. and Tiberias, nine in number, were collected, together with some local edicts, under this name. They belong to various times between 535 and 565 A. D.

NOVERINT UNIVERSI PER PRAESENTES (Law Lat.) Know all men by these presents. Words with which deeds, obligations, letters of attorney, and other instruments were formerly commenced. Litt.

§ 445; West, Symb. pars 1, lib. 2, §§ 102, 518, 522-525.

NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A protest against or prohibition of a new work. Where a person began to build up or to pull down something (which was technically called novum opus, a new work), another person, who feared that his right would be impaired thereby, might extrajudicially hinder the completion of the work, by protesting before the workmen on the spot, or before some one present representing the owner, against the prosecution of the work, and forbidding the same. Dig. 39. 1; Id. 43. 24; Code, 8. 11. See "Opus Novum."

NOVIGILD. In Saxon law. A pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid. Spelman.

NOVISIMA RECOPIACION. Span. (Latest compilation). The title of a collection of Spanish law compiled by order of Don Carlos IV. in 1805. 1 White's Recop. 355.

NOVITAS NON TAM UTILITATE PRODEST quam novitate perturbat. Novelty benefits not so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

NOVITER PERVENTA, or NOVITER ad notitiam perventa. In ecclesiastical procedure. Facts "newly come" to the knowledge of a party to a cause. Leave to plead facts noviter perventa is generally given, in a proper case, even after the pleadings are closed. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1257; Rog. Ecc. Law, 723.

NOVODAMUS (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. We give anew. The name given to a charter or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right. Bell, Dict.

NOVUM JUDICIUM NON DAT NOVUM jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new law, but declares the old. 10 Coke, 42.

NOVUM OPUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A new work. See "Novi Operis Nunciatio;" "Opus Novum."

NOVUS HOMO (Lat. a new man). This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, by which he is restored to society and is rehabilitated.

NOXA (Lat.) In civil law. Damages resulting from an offense committed by an irresponsible agent; the offense itself; the punishment for the offense; the slave or animal who did the offense, and who is delivered up to the person aggrieved (datur noxae) unless the owner choose to pay the damage. The right of action is against whoever becomes the possessor of the slave or animal (noxa caput sequitur). Vicat; Calv. Lex.

NOXA SEQUITUR CAPUT. The injury (i. e., liability to make good an injury caused by a slave) follows the head or person, i. e., attaches to his master. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 8, § 1231.

NOXALIS ACTIO. See "Actio Noxalis."

NOXIA (Lat.) In the civil law. An offense committed or damage done by a slave. Inst. 4. 8. 1.

NUBILIS (Lat.) In civil law. One who is of a proper age to be married. Dig. 32. 51.

NUDA (Lat.) Bare or mere. Nuda patientia, mere sufferance. Nuda possessio, mere possession.

NUDA PACTIO OBLIGATIONEM NON PARIT. A naked promise does not create an obligation. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; Code, 4. 65. 27; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 670; Brisson. "Nudus."

NUDA RATIO ET NUDA PACTIO NON IIGANT ALIQUEM DEBITOREM. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

NUDE. Naked. Figuratively, this word is applied to various subjects.

A nude contract, nudum pactum, is one without a consideration. Nude matter is a bare allegation of a thing done, without any evidence of it.

NUDUM PACTUM. A contract made without consideration. See "Consideration."

It is a mere agreement, without the requisites necessary to confer upon it a legal obligation to perform. In the Roman Law, an agreement not made by specialty so as to support an action of covenant, or falling within one of certain classes so as to support an action of debt. Early English law gave it the same meaning. Pollock, Princ. Cont. 695. 3 McLean (U. S.) 330; 2 Denio (N. Y.) 403; 6 Ired. (N. C.) 480; 1 Strobb. (S. C.) 329; 1 Ga. 294; 1 Doug. (Mich.) 188. The term, and the rule which decides upon the nullity of its effects, are borrowed from the civil law; yet the common law has not in any degree been influenced by the notions of the civil law in defining what constitutes a nudum pactum. Dig. 19. 5. 5. See, on this subject, a learned note in Fonbl. Eq. 335, and 2 Kent, Comm. 364. Toullier defines nudum pactum to be an agreement not executed by one of the parties. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tom. 6, note 13, page 10.

It is of no consequence whether the agreement be oral or written (7 Term R. 350; 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 550; 4 Johns. [N. Y.] 235; 5 Mass. 301, 392; 2 Day [Conn.] 22); but a contract under seal cannot be held a nudum pactum for lack of consideration, since the seal imports consideration (2 Barn. & Ald. 551). See "Consideration," 2 Bl. Comm. 445; 16 Viner, Abr. 16.

NUDUM PACTUM EST UBI NULLA SUBEST CAUSA PROPTER CONVENTIONEM; SED UBI SUBEST CAUSA, FIT OBLIGATIO, ET PARIT ACTIONEM. Nudum pactum is where there is no consideration for the undertaking or agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created, and an action arises. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 445; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 669; Plowd. 309; 1 Powell, Cont. 330 et seq.; 3 Burrows, 1670 et seq.; Viner, Abr. "Nudum Pactum" (A); 1 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 335a.

NUDUM PACTUM EX QUO NON ORITUR ACTIO. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises. Code, 2. 3. 10; Id. 5. 14. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 676.

NUE. (L. Fr.) Nude; naked; bare.

NUEVA RECOPIACION. Span. The title of a code of Spanish law, promulgated in the year 1567. Schmidt's Civ. Law, Introd. 79-81.

NUISANCE. A nuisance is anything that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Bl. Comm. 216.

Any offensive erection, which, from its nature, may be an annoyance, and from its situation actually becomes so, is a nuisance. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 201.

—Public Nuisance. Such an inconvenience or troublesome offense as annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person. 4 Bl. Comm. 166. Such an annoyance as infringes on rights common to the public. 7 Mich. 432. Some considerable portion of the community must be affected, for while that is a public nuisance which injures generally such citizens as may be so circumstanced as to come within its influence (43 N. J. Eq. 478; 8 Cow. [N. Y.] 146), it must be in a public place, where members of the community are liable to come within its influence (7 Blackf. [Ind.] 534; 34 Tex. 230; 36 N. J. Law, 283). The test is not the number of persons annoyed, but the possibility of invasion of the public rights. 5 Rand. (Va.) 691.

—Private Nuisance. Anything done or maintained whereby special annoyance or injury is done to another.

A public nuisance may be private, as well, and such have been termed "mixed nuisances." Wood, Nuisance, § 17.

The exact amount of annoyance or inconvenience necessary to constitute a private nuisance has never been settled. In general terms, the injury should cause an inconvenience "materially interfering with the ordinary comfort, physically, of human existence; not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain, sober, and simple notions." 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 15.

The filling of the air with smoke or noxious vapor, to the detriment of health (11 Mo. 517; 12 L. T. [N. S.] 776), or with noisome odors (20 N. J. Eq. 201; 23 N. J. Eq. 251), the production of great noise and clangor in a quiet neighborhood (14 Mo. App. 590), the maintenance of excessive heat, rendering adjoining premises uninhabitable (46 Ala. 381), the keeping of explosives or inflammable substances (35 N. J. Law, 17), are well-recognized forms of private nuisance.

NUISANCE, ASSISE OF. See "Assize of Nuisance."

NUL. No; none. A law French negative particle, commencing many phrases.

NUL AGARD (Law Fr. no award). In pleading. A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, when the defendant avers that there was no legal award made. 3 Burrows, 1730; 2 Strange, 923.

NUL CHARTER, NUL VENDE, NE NUL done vault perpetualment, si le doner n'est seise al temps de contracts de deux droites, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de proprietie. No grant, no sale, no gift is valid forever, unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession, and the right of property. Co. Litt. 266.

NUL DISSEISIN. In pleading. No disseisin. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin. It is a species of the general issue.

NUL NE DOIT S'ENRICHIR AUX DEPENS des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

NUL PRENDRA AVANTAGE DE SON tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 265.

NUL SANS DAMAGE AVERA ERROR ou attainit. No one shall have error or attainit unless he has sustained damage. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 323.

NUL TIEL CORPORATION. No such corporation exists. The form of a plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation.

NUL TIEL RECORD (Fr. no such record). In pleading. A plea which is proper when it is proposed to rely upon facts which disprove the existence of the record on which the plaintiff founds his action.

Any matters may be introduced under it which tend to destroy the validity of the record as a record, provided they do not contradict the recitals of the record itself. 10 Ohio, 100. It is frequently used to enable the defendant to deny the jurisdiction of the court from which the alleged record emanates. 2 McLean, C. C. (U. S.) 129; 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 293.

It is said to be the proper plea to an action on a foreign judgment, especially if of a sister state, in the United States (2 Leigh [Va.] 72; 6 Leigh [Va.] 570; 17 Vt. 302; 6 Pick. [Mass.] 232; 11 Miss. 210; 1 Pa. St. 499; 2 South. [S. C.] 778; 2 Breeze [Ill.] 2), though it is held that nil debet is sufficient (33 Me. 268; 3 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 600), especially if the judgment be that of a justice of the peace (3 Har. [N. J.] 408). See "Conflict of Laws."

NUL TORT (Law Fr. no wrong). In pleading. A plea to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong. It is a species of general issue.

NUL WASTE. In pleading. The general issue in an action of waste. 3 Inst. 700a, 708a. The plea of nil waste admits nothing, but puts the whole declaration in issue; and in support of this plea the defendant may give in evidence anything which proves that the act charged is no waste, as that it happened by tempest, lightning, and the like. Co. Litt. 283a; 3 Wm. Saund. 238, note 5.

NULL. Properly, that which does not exist; that which is not in the nature of things. In a figurative sense, it signifies that which has no more effect than if it did not exist. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 320.

NULLA BONA (Law Lat. no goods). The return made to a writ of flori facias by the sheriff, when he has not found any goods of the defendant on which he could levy. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3393.

NULLA CURIA QUAE RECORDUM non habet potest imponere finem, neque aliquem mandare carceri, quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court which has not a record can impose a fine, or commit any person to prison, because those powers belong only to courts of record. 8 Coke, 60.

NULLA EMPTIO SINE PRETIO ESSE potest. There can be no sale without a price. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 189.

NULLA IMPOSSIBILIA AUT INHONESTA sunt praesumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed, but things true, honorable, and possible. Co. Litt. 78.

NULLA PACTIO NE EFFICI POTEST ne dolus praestetur. By no agreement can it be effected that there shall be no accountability for fraud. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 3; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 622, 118, note; 5 Maule & S. 466.

NULLA VIRTUS, NULLA SCIENTIA, locum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia. Without modesty, no virtue, no knowledge, can preserve its place and dignity. Co. Litt. 394.

NULLE REGLE SANS FAUTE. There is no rule without a fault.

NULLE TERRE SANS SEIGNEUR. No land without a lord. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 28.

NULLI ENIM RES SUA SERVIT JURE servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Dig. 8. 2. 26; 17 Mass. 443; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1600.

NULLITY. An act or proceeding which has absolutely no legal effect whatever. See Chit. Cont. 228.

NULLIUS FILIUS (Lat.) The son of no one; a bastard.

NULLIUS HOMINIS AUCTORITAS apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no man ought to avail with us, that we should not follow better opinions, should any one present them. Co. Litt. 333b.

NULLIUS JURIS. In old English law. Of no legal force. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 24.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM (Lat.) In pleading. The name of a plea to an action on an arbitration bond for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant asserts that there is no award.

NULLUM CRIMEN MAJUS EST INOBEDIENTIA. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 77.

NULLUM EXEMPLUM EST IDEM OMNIBUS. No example is the same for all purposes. Co. Litt. 212a.

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM (Lat.) In pleading. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc. Bac. Abr. "Arbiter, etc." (G).

NULLUM INIQUUM EST PRAESUMENDUM in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law. 4 Coke, 72.

NULLUM MATRIMONIUM, IBI NULLA DOS. No marriage, no dower. 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 192, 194.

NULLUM SIMILE EST IDEM. Nothing which is like another is the same, i. e., no likeness is exact identity. 2 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 512; Story, Partn. 90; Co. Litt. 3a; 2 Bl. Comm. 162.

NULLUM SIMILE EST IDEM NISI QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT. No like is identical, unless it run on all fours. Co. Litt. 3.

NULLUM SIMILE QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT. No simile runs upon four feet, or, as ordinarily expressed, "on all fours." Co. Litt. 3a; Eunom. Dial. 2, p. 155; 1 Story, C. C. 143.

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. St. 3 Geo. III. c. 16. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, and 7 Wm. III. c. 3. It was so called because the right of the crown to sue, etc., was limited by it to sixty years, in contradiction to the Maxim, Nullum tempus occurrit regi. 3 Chit. St. 63.

NULLUM TEMPUS AUT LOCUS OCCURRIT REGI. No time or place affects the king. 2 Inst. 273; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 83; Broom, Leg. Max. 65.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REGI. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the crown. 2 Inst. 273; 1 Bl. Comm. 247; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 62; Hob. 347; 2 Steph. Comm. 504; 1 Mass. 355; 2 Brock. C. C. (U. S.) 393; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 227; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 139.

One of the ancient maxims of the common law, being a natural offshoot of the maxim, "rex non potest peccare." 97 Ill. 88.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REIPUBLICAE. Lapse of time does not bar the commonwealth. 11 Grat. (Va.) 572; Hilliard, Real Prop. 173; 8 Tex. 410; 16 Tex. 305; 5 McLean, C. C. (U. S.) 133; 19 Mo. 667.

NULLUS ALIUS QUAM REX POSSIT EPISCOPO DEMANDARE INQUISITIONEM FACIENDAM. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition. Co. Litt. 134.

NULLUS COMMODUM CAPERE POTEST DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 265; 4 Bing. N. C. 395; 4 Barn. & Ald. 409; 10 Mees. & W. 309; 11 Mees. & W. 680.

NULLUS DEBET AGERE DE DOLO, UBI ALIA ACTIO SUBEST. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo. 7 Coke, 92.

NULLUS DICITUR ACCESSORIUS post feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum recepit et confortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but he who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him. 3 Inst. 138.

NULLUS DICITUR FELO PRINCIPALIS nisi actor, aut qui praesens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one shall be called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party present aiding and abetting in its commission. 3 Inst. 138.

NULLUS IDONEUS TESTIS IN RE SUA INTELLIGITUR. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 10; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 328, 344.

NULLUS JUS ALIENUM FORISFACERE POTEST. No man can forfeit another's right. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 11.

NULLUS RECEDAT E CURIA CANCELARIA SINE REMEDIO. No one ought to depart out of the court of chancery without a remedy. Y. B. 4 Hen. VII. 4.

NULLUS VIDETUR DOLO FACERE qui suo jure utitur. No man is to be esteemed a wrongdoer who avails himself of his legal right. Dig. 50. 17. 55; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 124, 118, note q; 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 339, 492.

NUMBER. A collection of units.

NUMERATA PECUNIA (Lat.) In civil law. Money counted or paid; money given in payment by count. L. 3, 10, C. de non numerat. pecun.; Vicat.

NUMMATA TERRAE (Law Lat.) In old records. A quantity of land, thought to contain an acre. Cowell.

NUNC PRO TUNC (Lat. now for then). A phrase used to express that a thing is done at one time as if or with the same effect as if performed at another.

NUNCIATIO. In civil law. A formal proclamation or protest. It may be by acts (realis) or by words. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 237. Thus, nunciatio novi operis was an injunction which one man could place on the erection of a new building, etc., near him, until the case was tried by the praetor. Id.; Calv. Lex. An information against a criminal. Calv. Lex.

NUNCIO. The name given to the pope's ambassador. Nuncios are ordinary or extraordinary; the former are sent upon usual missions, the latter upon special occasions.

NUNCIUS. In international law. A messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a "nuncio."

NUNCUPATE. To declare publicly and solemnly.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. An oral will, declared by a testator, in extremis, before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. 4 Kent, Comm. 576; 2 Bl. Comm. 500; 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 130-136. See 1 Wm. IV. c. 20; 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 9, 11; 11 Eng. Law & Eq. 596,—by which the privilege of making a nuncupative will is only allowed to soldiers and seamen in actual service. So in almost all the states. See, in general, 27 Ala. (N. S.) 296, 596; 26 N. H. 372; 9 N. Y. 196; 10 Grat. (Va.) 548; 27 Miss. 119, 725; 2 R. I. 133; 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 154; 22 Ga. 293, 603; 12 La. Ann. 114, 603; 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 616; 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 59; Swinb. Wills; Ayliffe, Pand. 359; Roberts, Wills; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 436; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 288.

NUNDINAE (Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. Fair or fairs. Dion Halic. lib. 2, p. 98; Vicat; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

NUNQUAM (Lat.) Never. Nunquam fuit ballivus ejus, vel mercator, vel denariorum suorum receptor, vel administrator, never was his bailiff or merchant, or receiver of his moneys, or his administrator (manager). Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 9.

NUNQUAM CRESCIT EX POST FACTO praeteriti delicti aestimatio. The quality of a past offense is never aggravated by that which happens subsequent. Dig. 50. 17. 138. 1; Bac. Max. reg. 8; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 41.

NUNQUAM DECURRITUR AD EXTRA-ordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. We are never to recur to what is extraordinary till what is ordinary fails. 4 Inst. 84.

NUNQUAM FICTIO SINE LEGE. There is no fiction without law.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS (Lat. never indebted). In pleading. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 Car. & P. 545; 1 Mees. & W. 542; 1 Q. B. 77.

NUNQUAM NIMIS DICITUR QUOD nunquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much. Co. Litt. 375.

NUNQUAM PRAESCRIBITUR IN FAL-so. There is never prescription in case of falsehood (crimen falsi). Bell, Dict.

NUNQUAM RES HUMANAЕ PROS-pere succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae. Human things never prosper when divine things are neglected. Co. Litt. 95; Wingate, Max. 2.

NUNTIUS, or NUNCIUS. In old English practice. One who made excuse for absence of one summoned; an apparitor, beadle, or sergeant. Cowell. A messenger or legate, e. g., pope's nuncio. Jacob. Essoniator was sometimes wrongly used for nuntius in the first sense. Bracton, fol. 345, § 2.

NUPER OBIIT (Lat. he or she lately died). In practice. The name of a writ which in the English law lies for a sister co-heiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee simple. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 197.

NUPTIAE (Lat. from nubere, to cover or veil). In the civil law. Marriage; nuptials; the union of man and woman; companionship for all life (conjunctio maris et feminae, et consortium omnis vitae). Dig. 23. 2. 1. See Code, 5. 4. Justinian uses nuptiae and matrimonium as synonymous. Inst. 1. 9. 1. Properly, the nuptial ceremony. Calv. Lex.; Tayl. Civ. Law, 269, 274. See "Consensus Non, etc."

NUPTIAE SECUNDAE (Lat.) In the canon law. A second marriage; any marriage after the first. The canon law put a mark of disapprobation upon nuptiae secundae, for so they termed every marriage after the first. No benediction could be pronounced, nor could any priest be present at the celebration of them. Corvin. Jus, Canon. 108, 109, 110; Launc. Inst. Jur. Can. lib. 2, tit. 16; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 63.

NUPTIAL. Of or pertaining to the marital relation.

NUPTIAS NON CONCUBITUS, SED consensus facti. Not cohabitation, but consent, makes the marriage. Dig. 50. 17. 30; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 239; Co. Litt. 33.

NURTURE. The rearing and care of children.

NUSANCE. The old form of "nuisance." Hale, Anal. § xlii.

NUTAUNTRE, NUTANDER, or NUIC-tander (Law Fr.) By night. Ou nutauntre ou de jour, by night or by day. Britt. c. 47; Y. B. P. 10 Edw. III. 37.

NUYT, or NUTE (Law Fr.) Night. Britt. c. 80.

NYMPHOMANIA. Erotic insanity manifested in a female. It is said to be distinguished from erotomania, in that it proceeds from some sexual disorder as an exciting cause. Wharton.

O. C. In the civil law. An abbreviation for "ope consilio" (q. v.)

O. K. The abbreviation "O. K." has a well-defined meaning and signifies "all right," "correct," its effect being determined from the circumstances of the situation. 204 Ill. App. 398.

O. NI. It was the course of the English exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head "O. Ni." which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc. 4 Inst. 116. But sheriffs now account to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. Wharton.

OATH. An outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Tyler, Oaths, 15.

The term has been variously defined: As, "a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it." 1 Starkie, Ev. 22. Or, "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth." 2 Leach, C. C. 482. Or, as "a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it." 10 Toullier, Dr. Civ. notes 343-348; Puffendorff, bk. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God's authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by His laws.

In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

—Assertory Oaths. Those required by law other than in judicial proceedings, and upon induction to office, such, for example, as custom-house oaths.

—Promissory Oaths. Oaths taken by authority of law, by which the party declares that he will fulfill certain duties therein mentioned; as, the oath which an alien takes, on becoming naturalized, that he will support the constitution of the United States; the oath which a judge takes that he will perform the duties of his office. The breach of this does not involve the party in the legal crime or punishment of perjury. 3 Zab. (N. J.) 49.

—Extrajudicial Oaths. Those taken without authority of law. Though binding in foro conscientiae, they do not, when false, render the party liable to punishment for perjury.

—Judicial Oaths. Those administered in judicial proceedings.

OATH AGAINST BRIBERY. One which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102. Wharton.

OATH DECISORY. In civil law. An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause.

OATH EX OFFICIO. The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence. 3 Bl. Comm. 101, 447; Mozley & W.

OATH IN LITEM. An oath which, in the civil law, was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant, and he suppressed proof in his possession. See Greenl. Ev. § 348; Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Vern. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; 1 Me. 27; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 84; 12 Viner, Abr. 24.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In civil law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 5, tits. 16, 17, § 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunl. Adm. Prac. 289, 290.

OATH PURGATORY. An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself when he removes the suspicions which were against him; as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. See "Purgation."

OATH RITE. The form used at the taking of an oath.

OATH SUPPLETORY. In civil and ecclesiastical law. An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause, upon half proof already made, which, being joined to half proof, supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. See Strange, 80; 3 Bl. Comm. 270.

OATHWORTHY. Worthy of making an oath; credible.

OB. On account of; for. A few Latin phrases and maxims commence with this word, but in is more commonly used.

OB CAUSAM ALIQUAM A RE MARI-TIMA ORTAM. For some cause arising out of a maritime matter. 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 92. Said to be Selden's translation of the French definition of admiralty jurisdiction, "pour le fait de la mer." Id.

OB CONTINENTIAM DELICTI. On account of contiguity to the offense; a ground for extending the operation of a decree of maritime condemnation. Thus, a cargo of a vessel condemned for carrying dispatches for the enemy may be condemned ob continentiam delicti. 6 Rob. Adm. 440.

OB CONTINGENTIAM. In Scotch law. On account of connection; by reason of similarity. A ground for the consolidation of actions. 7 Bell, App. Cas. 163.

OB FAVOREM MERCATORUM. In favor of merchants. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 12.

OB INFAMIAM NON SOLET JUXTA LEGEM TERRAE ALIQUIS PER LEGEM APPARENTEM SE PURGARE, NISI PRIUS CONVICTUS FUERIT VEL CONFESSUS IN CURIA. On account of evil report it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court. Glanv. lib. 14, c. 2.

OB TURPEM CAUSAM. For a base or immoral cause or consideration.

OBAERATUS. In Roman law. A debtor who was obliged to serve his creditor till his debt was discharged.

OBEDIENTIA. (Lat.) Obedience; submission.

In old records. A kind of rent. Cowell.
In the canon law. An office, or the administration of an office. Id.

OBEDIENTIA EST LEGIS ESSENTIA. Obedience is the essence of the law. 11 Coke, 100.

OBIIIT SINE PROLE. (Lat.) (He) died without issue. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 1.

OBIT. That particular solemnity or office for the dead which the Roman Catholic church appoints to be read or performed over the body of a deceased member of that communion before interment; also, the office which, upon the anniversary of his death, was frequently used as a commemoration or observance of the day. 2 Cro. 51; Dyer, 313.

OBITER (Lat. from obire, to pass). By the way; in passing. "This point was not the principal question in the case of Clere and Brooke, but the law concerning it is delivered obiter only, and in the course of argument, by Justice Manwoode." 2 Bl. Comm. 238.

OBITER DICTUM. See "Dictum."

OBJECT. Anything which comes within the cognizance or scrutiny of the senses; especially anything tangible or visible. Anything, whether concrete or abstract, real or imaginary, that may be perceived or apprehended by the mind; that of which the understanding has knowledge. 83 N. J. L. 641, 85 Atl. 194, Ann. Cas. 1914 B 847.

OBJECT OF ACTION. The thing sought to be attained by the action; the remedy demanded, or relief prayed for. It differs from the subject of the action, which is the subject matter out of which the cause of action arose. 18 Kan. 406.

OBJECTION. The act by which a party questions the propriety of evidence offered or proceedings proposed to be had in the course of the trial.

OBJECTS OF A POWER. A name given to the members of a class among whom one is empowered to appoint the power.

OBLATI ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession. Inst. 3. 1. 4.

OBLATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A tender of money in payment of debt made by debtor to creditor. L. 9, C. de solut. What-ever is offered to the church by the pious. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

OBLIGACION (Law Fr.) Obligation. Obligacion est un lien de droit, obligation is a bond of law. Britt. c. 28. See "Obligation."

OBLIGATIO. In Roman law. A legal bond which obliges us to the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179.

It corresponded nearly to our word "contract." Justinian says, "Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate adstringimur alicujus solvendae rei, secundum nostrae civitatis jura." Pr. Just. 3. 13.

The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civilis. In the course of time, however, the praetorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations, and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles, and obligationes praetoriae. Inst. 1. 8. 13. But there was a third class, the obligationes naturales, which derived their validity from the law of nature and nations, or the natural reason of mankind. These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law. For instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor, he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc., where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6. And see Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1180.

The second classification of obligations made by Justinian has regard to the way in which they arise. They were, in this aspect, either ex contractu or quasi ex contractu, or ex maleficio or quasi ex maleficio. Inst. 2. 3. 13.

OBLIGATION (Lat. obligo; ligo, to bind). A legal bond, whereby constraint is laid upon a person or group of persons to act or forbear on behalf of another person or group. Savigny, Obl. §§ 2-4; Anson, Cont. § 2.

Secondarily applied to an instrument whereby one binds himself, under penalty, to an act or forbearance (2 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 502; 6 Vt. 40), and sometimes in modern usage to all written contracts (22 Ohio St. 111).

—Absolute Obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

—Accessory Obligation. One which is dependent on the principal obligation. For example, if I sell you a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title papers which I have relating to it, to take care of the estate till it is delivered to you, and the like.

—Alternative Obligation. Where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that the payment of one will acquit him of all.

—Civil Obligation. One which has a binding operation in law, and which gives to the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice. In other words, it is an engagement binding on the obligor. 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 318, 337.

Civil obligations are divided into express and implied, pure and conditional, primitive and secondary, principal and accessory, absolute and alternative, determinate and indeterminate, divisible and indivisible, single and penal, and joint and several. They are also purely personal, purely real, or mixed.

—Conditional Obligation. One, the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

—Determinate Obligation. One which has for its object a certain thing; as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse, named "Bucephalus." In this case, the obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse.

—Divisible Obligation. One which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided with or without the consent of the parties.

—Express or Conventional Obligations. Those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation.

—Imperfect Obligations. Those which are not binding on us as between man and man, and for the nonperformance of which we are accountable to God only, such as charity or gratitude. In this sense, an obligation is a mere duty. Poth. Obl. art. prel. note 1.

—Implied Obligation. One which arises by operation of law; as, for example, if I send you daily a loaf of bread, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay me the value of the bread.

—Indeterminate Obligation. One where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species; as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

—Indivisible Obligation. One which is not susceptible of division; as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. See "Divisible."

—Joint Obligation. One by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfill their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance; or, if any be dead, the survivors must all be sued. See "Parties."

—Natural or Moral Obligation. One which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice.

As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. 5 Bin. (Pa.) 573. Although natural obligations cannot be enforced by action, they have the following effect: First, no suit will lie to recover back what has been paid or given in compliance with a natural obligation (1 Term R. 285, 1 Dall. [Pa.] 184); second, a natural obligation is a sufficient consideration for a new contract (2 Bin. [Pa.] 591; 5 Bin. [Pa.] 83; Yelv. 41a, note 1; Cowp. 290; 2 Bl. Comm. 445; 3 Bos. & P. 249, note; 2 East, 506; 3 Taunt. 311; 5 Taunt. 36; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 207; Chit. Cont. 10). See "Consideration."

—Penal Obligation. One to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. See "Damages."

—Perfect Obligation. One which gives a right to another to require us to give him something, or not to do something. These obligations are either natural or moral, or they are civil.

—Personal Obligation. One by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance.

It also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives.

—Primitive Obligation. This obligation, which, in one sense, may also be called a "principal obligation," is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled.

—Principal Obligation. One which is the most important object of the engagement of the contracting parties.

—Pure (or Simple) Obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, it has been fulfilled.

—Real Obligation. One by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

A familiar example will explain this: When an estate owes an easement as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage. He is not liable for the debt, though his estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seised of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning or parting with the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and pledged his estate for the fulfillment of his obligations.

—Secondary Obligation. One which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if I sell you my house, I bind myself to give a title; but if I find I cannot, as the title is in another, then my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my nonperformance of my obligation.

—Several Obligation. One by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement. In this case, each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more be dead, their respective executors may be sued. See "Parties."

—Single Obligation. One without any penalty; as, where I simply promise to pay you one hundred dollars. This is called a "single bill," when it is under seal.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT. The duty imposed by law on the parties to a contract to perform the same. 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197.

The remedy by which the contract can be enforced is deemed a part of its obligation, within the constitutional prohibition of its impairment, to the extent that its adequacy must be maintained (47 N. Y. 157; 97 U. S. 293), but the mere form of the remedy (157 U. S. 219), or the rules of evidence (108 Mo. 303), are not.

OBLIGATORY WRITING. See "Writing Obligatory."

OBLIGEE. The person in favor of whom an obligation is contracted.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Code La. art. 3522, No. 12. One who makes a bond.

OBLIQUUS (Lat.)

—In the Old Law of Descents. Oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right, or upright. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 7, § 2.

—In the Law of Evidence. Indirect; circumstantial. Vinn. Juris. Cont. lib. 4, c. 25.

OBLITERATION. The destruction of words in an instrument by erasure, blotting, or striking out. They need not be completely effaced. The term is most commonly applied to wills which may be revoked by obliteration. 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 6.

OBLOQUY. Censure; odium, reproach. See 70 Cal. 275.

OBRA (Spanish; from Lat. opera). In Spanish law. Work. Obras, works or trades; those which men carry on in houses or covered places. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6.

OBREPTIO (Lat. from obrepere, to creep upon). The obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise. Calv. Lex. Called, in Scotch law, "obreption."

OBREPTION. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from sovereign, by making false representations. Bell, Dict. "Subreption;" Calv. Lex.

OBROGARE (Lat. from ob, and rogare, to pass a law). In the civil law. To pass a law contrary to a former law, or to some clause of it; to change a former law in some part of it. Calv. Lex.; Tayl. Civ. Law, 155.

OBROGATION. The annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it; the alteration of a law. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

OBSCENITY. In criminal law. Such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals. It may consist in written or spoken words, conduct, pictures, or effigies. It need not be couched in obscene or vulgar terms if the idea conveyed tends to produce indecency. 16 Blachf. (U. S.) 362.

OBSERVE. In civil law. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. 1. 3. 32.

OBSES (Lat.) In the law of war. A hostage. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 20, § 52. Obsides, hostages. Id. Magna Carta Johan. c. 49.

OBSESSUM (Lat. from obsidere, to besiege or block up). In the law of war. Besieged. Oppidum obsessum, a town besieged. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 1, § 5; 1 Kent, Comm. 144.

OBSIGNARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To seal up, as money that had been tendered and refused. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1007.

OBSOLETE. Fallen into disuse. A term applied to laws which, by change in conditions or subject matter, or by long neglect, have lost their efficacy without being repealed.

A positive statute, unrepealed, can never be repealed by nonuser alone. 4 Yeates (Pa.) 181, 215; 1 P. A. Browne (Pa. App.) 28; 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 447. The disuse of a law is at most only presumptive evidence that society has consented to such a repeal. However this presumption may operate on an unwritten law, it cannot, in general, act upon one which remains as a legislative act on the statute book, because no presumption can set aside a certainty. A written law may indeed become obsolete when the object to which it was intended to apply, or the occasion for which it was enacted, no longer exists. 1 P. A. Browne (Pa. App.) 28. "It must be a very strong case," says Chief Justice Tilghman, "to justify the court in deciding that an act standing on the statute book, unrepealed, is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such a case may not exist where there has been a nonuser for a great number of years, where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief if suddenly brought into action, where a long practice inconsistent with it has prevailed, and especially where, from other and later statutes, it might be inferred that in the apprehension of the legislature the old one was not in force." 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 452; Rutherford, Inst. bk. 2, c. 6, § 19; Merlin, Repert. "Desuetude."

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS. Withstand or resist beginnings.

OBSTANTE. Withstanding; hindering. See "Non Obstante."

OBSTRUCTION. Obligation; bond.

OBTAIN. To get hold of; to obtain possession of; to acquire; to maintain a hold upon; to keep; to possess. 39 Ill. App. 562.

OBTEMPERANDUM EST CONSUETUDINI RATIONABILI TANQUAM LEGI. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law. 4 Coke, 38.

OBTORTO COLLO (Lat.) In Roman law. Taking by the neck or collar; as a plaintiff was allowed to drag a reluctant defendant to court. Adams, Rom. Ant. 242; Gilb. For. Rom. 20.

OBTULIT SE (Lat. offered himself). In old practice. The emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the latter did not appear. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 417.

OBVENTIO (Lat. obvenire, to fall in).

—In Civil Law. Rent or profit accruing from a thing, or from industry. It is generally used in the plural.

—In Old English Law. The revenue of spiritual living, so called. Cowell. Also, in the plural, offerings. 2 Inst. 661.

OCCASION, or OCCASION (Spanish). In Spanish law. Accident. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, lib. 21; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 9, c. 2.

OCCASIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Molestation; trouble; hindrance; vexation by suit. Spelman; Carta de Foresta, c. 12; Barr. Obs. St. 38, 39, note (k).

OCCASIONARE (Law Lat.) In old practice. To trouble or molest; to vex or harass with litigation. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, § 20; Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

OCCASIONES (Law Lat.) In old English law. Assarts. Spelman.

OCCISION (Law Fr. from Lat. occisio, from occidere, to kill). A killing or slaying. Murdre est occision de home. Britt. c. 6.

OCCULTATIO (Lat.) In old English law. A hiding. Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa, the fraudulent concealment of treasure trove. Bracton, fol. 119b; 3 Inst. 133.

OCCUPANCY. The taking possession of those things corporeal which are without an owner, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use.

Pothier defines it to be the title by which one acquires property in a thing which belongs to nobody, by taking possession of it with design of acquiring it. Tr. du Dr. de Propriete, note 20. The Civil Code of Louisiana (article 3375), nearly following Pothier, defines occupancy to be "a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with an intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it."

Sometimes used in the sense of actual possession of things corporeal.

"Occupancy and possession, when applied to land, are synonymous." 21 Ill. 178.

A distinction is sometimes made in the use of "occupation" to indicate mere possession and "occupancy" for the acquirement of title by the taking of possession (Abbott), but it is not generally observed.

OCCUPANT, or OCCUPIER. One who has the actual use or possession of a thing. Occupancy implies the exclusion of every one else from enjoyment. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54.

Tenant in possession. 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, 101.

OCCUPANTIS FIUNT DERELICTA. Things abandoned become the property of the first occupant. 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 53.

OCCUPARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another. Calv. Lex.

OCCUPATIO Lat. from occupare, to occupy). In the civil law. A taking possession of a thing which before belonged to nobody (quod ante nullius est); as of wild beasts and other wild animals, property and persons captured in war, gems and other things found upon the seashore, etc. Inst. 2. 1. 12. 17. 18. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2.

OCCUPATION. That which occupies or engages the time or attention; the principal business of one's life; vocation; employment; calling; trade. 134 Ill. 234. See "Occupancy."

OCCUPAVIT (Lat.) In old practice. The name of a writ which lies to recover the possession of lands when they have been taken from the possession of the owner by occupation.

OCCUR. In its general and most popular sense the word "occur" means to "happen." When used in a contract limiting the time within which an action may be brought to a certain time after the happening of a particular event, should be given the sense of "accrue." 61 How. § 146; 91 Ill. 92.

OCCURRERE. (Lat.) To meet; to run against; to stop, or bar.

OCCYS. (L. Fr. from Lat. occisus). Slain; killed. Britt. c. 5.

OCHIERN (Scotch; Law Lat. ogetharius). In old Scotch law. A name of dignity and of a freeholder. Skene de Verb. Sign.

OCHLOGRACY. A government where the authority is in the hands of the multitude; the abuse of a democracy. Vaumene, Dict. du Language Politique.

OCTABIS (Law Lat. from octo, eight). In old practice. The octave. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 35. See "Octave."

OCTAVE (Law Lat. utis). In old English practice. The eighth day inclusive after a feast. 3 Bl. Comm. 277.

OCTO TALES (Lat. eight such). If, when a trial at bar is called on, the number of jurors in attendance is too small, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales awarded, according to the number deficient; as, at common law, namely, a writ to the sheriff to summon eight more such men as were originally summoned. 3 Bl. Comm. 364.

OCTROI (Fr.) In old French law. Originally, a duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king. Steph. Lect. p. 361.

ODHALL RIGHT. The same as "allo-dial."

ODIO ET ATIA. See "De Odio et Atia."

ODIOSA ET INHONESTA NON SUNT in lege praesumenda. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law. Co. Litt. 78; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 228, 231; 18 N. Y. 295, 300.

ODIOSA NON PRAESUMUNTUR. Odious things are not presumed. Burr. Sett. Cas. 190.

OECONOMICUS. An executor.

OECONOMUS (Lat.)- In the civil law. A manager or administrator. Calv. Lex.

OEPS, or OES (Law Fr.) Use. A nostre oeps, to our use. Britt. c. 21; St. Westminster I. c. 48. A son oeps demesne. Dyer, 5. See "Opus."

OF COUNSEL. A term applied to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, or whose name appears upon the papers. Derived probably from the Latin a consiliis (q. v.) and expressed by the Law Latin de consilio (Law French de counsel). Dyer, 34b, 38. The modern phrase "of counsel for" a party was formerly expressed "of counsel with." "The counsellor should give his counsel to him with whom he is of counsel." 5 Coke, 20.

OF COURSE. A term applied to those acts in the course of a judicial proceeding which may be done without leave of court, or which will be granted by the court on application without inquiry.

OF NEW. A Scotch expression, closely translated from the Latin "de novo" (q. v.).

OFFA EXECRATA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The morsel of execration; the corsned (q. v.). 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 21

OFFENSE. In criminal law. The doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. In this sense, it is nearly synonymous with "crime." In a more confined sense, it may be considered as having the same meaning with "misdemeanor;" but it differs from it in this, that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by the forfeiture of a penalty. 1 Chit. Prac. 14.

OFFER. The word offer is frequently used by courts and text writers as synonymous with "tender," and it may properly be so used with reference to articles capable of manual delivery and actually produced. But with respect to heavy articles of merchandise, situated at a distance from the place to which they must be transported if restored to the vendor, the phrase "offer to return" is more commonly or aptly applied to express a willingness, or to make a proposal, to rescind the contract and return the goods. 156 Ill. App. 476.

OFFICE. A right to exercise a function or employment, and take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 149; 23 Ind. 449; 36 Miss. 273.

The term is ordinarily used with respect to the power conferred on individuals to exercise public functions, and in this connection "public office" is a more discriminating term. An "office" in this sense implies a delegation of a part of the sovereign power to an individual. See 3 Me. 481.

The office exists and survives as an entity apart from the incumbent (28 Cal. 382; 29 Ohio St. 347), but it has been said that the essence of the office is the power and jurisdiction of the officer (62 Pa. St. 343).

Offices are either civil or military. Civil offices are either executive, judicial, or legislative.

OFFICE COPY. A copy of a writing or record made and certified or authenticated by the officer legally intrusted with its custody or control. Such a copy is admissible in evidence to prove the original. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 507.

OFFICE FOUND.

—In English Law. When an inquisition is made to the king's use of anything, by virtue of office of him who inquires, and the inquisition is found, it is said to be "office found."

—In American Law. An action by the state or national government, or its proper officer, for the enforcement of escheat.

OFFICE GRANT. A conveyance made by a public officer in certain cases, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass title. See 3 Washb. Real Prop. *537.

OFFICER. The incumbent of an office. The term is ordinarily applied to the incumbent of a public office, though it may be otherwise applied, as to the officer of a corporation.

A public officer is one occupying a public office, to whom a portion of the sovereign power is delegated, and whose duties are continuous in their nature, and prescribed by law.

The distinction between an officer and a government employee is that the duties of the former are fixed by law, and not by contract. 22 Conn. 379; 36 Miss. 273; 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481.

—Executive Officers. Those whose duties are mainly to cause the laws to be executed. For example, the president of the United States of America, and the several governors of the different states, are executive officers. Their duties are pointed out in the national constitution, and in the constitutions of the several states.

—Legislative Officers. Those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures.

These officers are confined in their duties, by the constitution, generally to make laws; though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachments. The legislatures have, besides, the power to inquire into the conduct of their members, judge of their elections, and the like.

—Judicial Officers. Those whose duties are to decide controversies between individuals, and accusations made in the name of the public against persons charged with a violation of the law.

—Ministerial Officers. Those whose duty it is to execute the mandates, lawfully issued, of their superiors.

—Military Officers. Those who have command in the army.

—Naval Officers. Those who are in command in the navy.

OFFICER DE FACTO. One whose acts, though not those of lawful officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised, (1) without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; (2) under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; (3) under color of a known election or appointment void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or, by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power or defect, being unknown to the public; (4) under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law before the same is adjudged to be such. 38 Conn. 449.

The most generally accepted of the short definitions of the term is that of Lord Ellenborough: "An officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law." 6 East, 856.

OFFICER DE JURE. One having the legal right to an office; generally applied to such officers when not in possession of the office.

OFFICIA JUDICIALIA NON CONCEDANTUR ANTEQUAM VACENT. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant. 11 Coke, 4.

OFFICIA MAGISTRATUS NON DEBENT ESSE VENALLA. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold. Co. Litt. 234.

OFFICIAL. An officer (q. v.) —In Old Civil Law. The person who was the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate.

—In Canon Law. The person to whom the bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction bears this name. Wood, Inst. 30, 505; Merlin, Repert.

OFFICIAL ACT. By an official act is not simply meant a lawful act of the officer—it means any act done by the officer in his official capacity, under color and by virtue of his office. 154 Ill. 601, 52 Ill. App. 845; 137 Mass. 191.

OFFICIAL BOND. The bond of a public officer; though more loosely it is often applied to any bond legally required of one exercising a given function, e. g., an executor's or trustee's bond.

OFFICIAL USE. An active use. Wharton.

OFFICIIARIIS NON FACIENDIS VEL AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has until inquiry is made of his manners, etc. Reg. Orig. 126.

OFFICINA JUSTITIAE. The workshop or office of justice.

—In English Law. The chancery is so called, because all writs issue from it, under the great seal, returnable into the courts of common law. See "Court of Chancery."

OFFICIOUS WILL. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Sandars, Just. Inst. 207. See "In-officious Testament."

OFFICIT CONATUS SI EFFECTUS SEQUITUR. The attempt becomes of consequence if the effect follows.

OFFICIUM NEMINI DEBET ESSE DAMNOSUM. An office ought to be injurious to no one. Bell, Dict.

OIL, Oile, Oyl, Oyel. (L. Fr.) Yes; yea. Schard. The assent of the commons in 23 Edw. III. Kelham.

Oil is a mineral and part of the realty. Owing to its fugitive nature, a grant of oil under the ground is a grant, not of the oil in place in the earth, but of such oil as the grantee may find there and save. 240 Ill. 367; 233 Ill. 12. See "Minerals."

OIR (Spanish; from Lat. audire, to hear). In Spanish law. To hear; to take cognizance. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 1, c. 7.

OLD STYLE. See "New Style."

OLD TENURES. The title of a small tract, which, as its title denotes, contains an account of the various tenures by which land was holden in the reign of Edward III. This tract was published in 1719, with notes and additions with the eleventh edition of the First Institutes, and reprinted in 8vo, in 1764, by Serjeant Hawkins, in a Selection of Coke's Law Tracts.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A maritime code promulgated by Eleanor, duchess of Guienne, mother of Richard I., at the Isle of Oleron,—whence their name. They were modified and enacted in England under Richard I., and again promulgated under Henry III. and Edward III., and are constantly quoted in proceedings before the admiralty courts, as are also the Rhodian Laws. Co. Litt. 2. See Code, § 25.

OLIGARCHY (Gr. the government of a few). A name given to designate the power which a few citizens of a state have usurped, which ought by the constitution to reside in the people. Among the Romans, the government degenerated several times into an oligarchy; for example, under the decemvirs, when they became the only magistrates in the commonwealth.

OLOGRAPH. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party from whom it emanates. See Civ. Code La. art. 1581; Civ. Code, 970; 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 357; 1 Stuart, K. B. 327; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2139.

OLOGRAPHIC WILL. One that is entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator himself. Belcher, 100 Cal. 207.

OM, or OMME (Law Fr.) Man; a man or person. Corrupted forms of "home" (q. v.) Kelham.

OME BUENO (Spanish). In Spanish law. A good man; a substantial person. Las Partidas, pt. 5, tit. 13, lib. 38.

OMISSIO (Lat. from omittere). Omission; a leaving out.

OMISSIO EORUM QUAE TACITE INSUNT nihil operatur. The omission of those things which are silently expressed is of no consequence. 2 Bulst. 131.

OMISSION. Neglect to perform an act required by law.

OMISSIS OMNIBUS ALIIS NEGOTIIS (Lat.) Laying aside all other businesses. 9 East, 347.

OMIT. To fail to use or to do; neglect; disregard; to fail, forbear, neglect to mention or to speak of; say nothing of; to leave out; forbear, fail to assert or include, as to omit an item from a list. 146 Ia. 360, 378; 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

OMNE ACTUM AB INTENTIONE AGENTIS est judicandum. Every act is to be estimated by the intention of the doer. Branch, Princ.

OMNE CRIMEN EBRIETAS ET INCENDIT et detegit. Drunkenness inflames and reveals every crime. Co. Litt. 247.

OMNE JUS AUT CONSENSUS FECIT, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. All law has either been derived from the consent of the people, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom. Dig. 1. 3. 40; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 616, note.

OMNE MAGIS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the latter be more ancient. Co. Litt. 355.

OMNE MAGNUM EXEMPLUM HABET aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility. Hob. 279.

OMNE MAJUS CONTINET IN SE MINUS. The greater contains in itself the less. 5 Coke, 115a; Wingate, Max. 206; Story, Ag. § 172; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 173.

OMNE MAJUS DIGNUM CONTINET IN SE minus dignum. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy. Co. Litt. 143.

OMNE MAJUS MINUS IN SE COMPLECTITUR. Every greater embraces in itself the minor. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 208.

OMNE PRINCIPALE TRAHIT AD SE accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory. 17 Mass. 425; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 580.

OMNE QUOD INAEIFICATUR SOLO cedit. Everything belongs to the soil which is built upon it. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 10; Id. 47. 3. 1; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 355; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

OMNE SACRAMENTUM DEBET ESSE de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge. 4 Inst. 279.

OMNE TESTAMENTUM MORTE CONSUMMATUM est. Every will is consummated by death. 3 Coke, 29b; 4 Coke, 61b; 2 Bl. Comm. 500; Shep. Touch. 401.

OMNES ACTIONES IN MUNDO INFRA certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods. Bracton, 52.

OMNES HOMINES AUT LIBERI SUNT aut servi. All men are freemen or slaves. Inst. 1. 3. pr.; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 1, § 2.

OMNES LICENTIAM HABERE HIS quae pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. All shall have liberty to renounce those things which have been established in their favor. Code, 2. 3. 29; Id. 1. 3. 51; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 625.

OMNES PRUDENTES, ILLA ADMITTERE solent quae probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art. 7 Coke, 19.

OMNES SORES SUNT QUASI UNUS haeres de una haereditate. All sisters are, as it were, one heir to one inheritance. Co. Litt. 67.

OMNIA DELICTA IN APERTO LEVIORA sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter. 8 Coke, 127.

OMNIA PERFORMAVIT (Lat. he has done all). In pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative. 1 Me. 189.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR CONTRA spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a wrongdoer. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 843.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR LEGITIME facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved. Co. Litt. 232.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ESSE acta. All things are presumed to be done in due form. Co. Litt. 6.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ET SOLEMNITER ESSE acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. Co. Litt. 232b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 847; 12 C. B. 738; 3 Exch. 191; 6 Exch. 716. Omnia rite esse acta praesumuntur. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 441; 2 Ohio St. 246, 247; 4 Ohio St. 148; 6 Ohio St. 298.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ET SOLEMNITER ESSE acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 157, 849; 3 Bing. 381; 2 Campb. 44; 1 Crompt. & M. 461; 17 C. B.

183; 5 Barn. & Adol. 550; 12 Mees. & W. 251; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 69, 70.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR SOLEMNI-ter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been done rightly. Co. Litt. 6.

OMNIA QUAE JURE CONTRAHUNTUR, contrario jure pereunt. Obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

OMNIA QUAE SUNT UXORIS SUNT ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's belong to the husband. Co. Litt. 112; 2 Kent, Comm. 130, 143.

OMNIBUS AD QUOS PRAESENTES litterae pervenerint, salutem. To all to whom the present letters shall come, greeting. A form of address with which charters and deeds were anciently commenced.

OMNIS ACTIO EST LOQUELA. Every action is a complaint. Co. Litt. 292.

OMNIS CONCLUSIO BONI ET VERI JU- dicii sequitur ex bonis et veris praemissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Co. Litt. 226.

OMNIS CONSENSUS TOLLIT ERRO-rem. Every consent removes error. 2 Inst. 123.

OMNIS DEFINITIO IN JURE CIVILI periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

OMNIS DEFINITIO IN JURE PERICU-losa est; parum est enim ut non subverti posset. Every definition in law is perilous, for it is within an ace of being subverted. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

OMNIS EXCEPTIO EST IPSA QUOQUE regula. An exception is in itself also a rule.

OMNIS INDEMNATUS PRO INNOKIS legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent. Lofft, 121.

OMNIS INNOVATIO PLUS NOVITATE perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulst. 338; 1 Salk. 20.

OMNIS INTERPRETATIO SI FIERI PO- test ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. The interpretation of instruments is to be made, if they will admit of it, so that all contradictions may be removed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 96.

OMNIS INTERPRETATIO VEL DEC- larat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

OMNIS NOVA CONSTITUTIO FUTURIS formam imponere debet, non praeteritis. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form to future, not to past, acts. Bracton, fol. 228; 2 Inst. 95.

OMNIS PERSONA EST HOMO, SED non vicissim. Every person is a man, but not every man a person. Calv. Lex.

OMNIS PRIVATIO PRAESUPPONIT habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Co. Litt. 339.

OMNIS QUERELA ET OMNIS ACTIO injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times. Co. Litt. 114.

OMNIS RATIHABITIO RETRO TRAHIT-ur et mandato aequiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command. Co. Litt. 207a; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 102; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 715; 2 Bouv. Inst. 25; 4 Bouv. Inst. 26; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 363; 7 Exch. 726; 10 Exch. 845; 9 C. B. 532, 607; 14 C. B. 53.

OMNIS REGULA SUAS PATITUR EX- ceptiones. Every rule of law is liable to its own exceptions.

OMNIUM (Lat.) In mercantile law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stocks in which a loan is usually funded. 2 Esp. 361; 7 Term R. 630.

OMNIUM CONTRIBUTIONE SARCIA- tur quod pro omnibus datum est. What is given for all shall be compensated for by the contribution of all. 4 Bing. 121; 2 Marsh. 309.

OMNIUM RERUM QUARUM USUS est, potest esse abusus, virtute sola excepta. There may be an abuse of everything of which there is a use, virtue only excepted. Dav. 79.

ON. Where an act is to be done on a particular day, the party has the whole of that day in which to perform it. 14 Ill. 333.

When used as indicating relative situation or position, "on" means at, near, or adjacent to, without implying contact or support. 143 Ia. 297, 300. See "From."

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CON- cern, or For whom it may concern. A clause in policies of insurance, under which all are insured who have an insurable interest at the time of effecting the insurance, and who were then contemplated by the party effecting the insurance. 2 Pars. Mar. Law. 30.

ON CALL. On demand. 22 Grat. (Va.) 609.

ON DEMAND. When requested. A promissory note payable "on demand" is payable immediately without demand, i. e., is always due.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. See "Jeopardy."

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS clause. A precautionary stipulation inserted in a deed making a good tenant to the praecipe in a common recovery. See 1 Prest. Conv. 110.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS. A writ that lay for a joint tenant or tenant in common who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to. Reg. Orig. 182.

ONERARI NON (Lat. ought not to be burdened). In pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged. It is used in an action of debt. 1 Saund. 290, note (a).

ONERATUR NISI. See "O. Ni."

ONERIS FERENDI (Lat. of bearing a burden). In civil law. The name of a servitude by which the wall or pillar of one house is bound to sustain the weight of the buildings of the neighbor.

The owner of the servient building is bound to repair and keep it sufficiently strong for the weight it has to bear. Dig. 8. 2. 23; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1627.

ONEROUS. A contract, lease, share, or other right is said to be "onerous" when the obligations attaching to it counterbalance or exceed the advantage to be derived from it, either absolutely or with reference to the particular possessor. Rapalje & L.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In civil law. A valuable consideration.

ONEROUS CONTRACT. In civil law. One made for a consideration given or promised, however small. Civ. Code La. art. 1767.

ONEROUS DEED. In Scotch law. A deed given for valuable consideration. Bell, Dict. See "Consideration."

ONEROUS GIFT. The gift of a thing subject to certain charges imposed by the giver on the donee. Poth. Obl.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to a signature which is in a different handwriting from the body of the instrument. 2 Benth. Jud. Ev. 460, 461.

ONUS PROBANDI (Lat.) In evidence. The burden of proof.

OPE CONSILIO (Lat.) By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessories, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio."

OPEN A CREDIT. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, note 296.

OPEN ACCOUNT. A running or unsettled account.

OPEN CORPORATION. One in which all members have a vote to choose officers, as distinguished from a "close corporation," wherein the officers fill vacancies. 3 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 416, note.

The latter term in common use means that all stock is closely held, usually by a few persons, so that no one else can, by purchase of shares, obtain a voice in the policy of the corporation.

OPEN COURT. A court formally opened and engaged in the transaction of all judicial functions.

A court to which all persons have free access as spectators while they conduct themselves in an orderly manner.

The term is used in the first sense as distinguishing a court from a judge sitting in chambers or informally for the transaction of such matters as may be thus transacted. See "Chambers;" "Court."

In the second sense, all courts in the United States are open; but in England, formerly, while the parties and probably their witnesses were admitted freely in the courts, all other persons were required to pay in order to obtain admittance. St. 13 Edw. I. cc. 42, 44; Barr. Obs. St. 126, 127. See Princ. Pen. Law, 165.

OPEN DOORS. In Scotch law. "Letters of open doors" are process which empower the messenger or officer of the law to break open doors of houses or rooms in which the debtor has placed his goods. Bell, Dict.

OPEN LAW. The trial by duel or ordeal. See "Lex Manifesta."

OPEN POLICY. An open policy is one in which the amount of the interest of the insured is not fixed by the policy, and is to be ascertained in case of loss. See "Policy."

OPEN THEFT. In Saxon law. The same with the Latin furtum manifestum (q. v.)

OPENING.

—In American Practice. The beginning; the commencement; the first address of the counsel. The opening is made immediately upon the impaneling of the jury. It embraces the reading of such of the pleadings as may be necessary, and a brief outline of the case as the party expects to prove it, where there is a trial, or of the argument, where it is addressed to the court.

—In English Practice. The address made immediately after the evidence is closed. Such address usually states, first, the full extent of the plaintiff's claims, and the circumstances under which they are made, to show that they are just and reasonable; second, at least an outline of the evidence by which those claims are to be established; third, the legal grounds and authorities in favor of the claim or of the proposed evidence; fourth, an anticipation of the expected defense, and statement of the grounds on which it is futile, either in law or justice, and the reasons why it ought to fail. But the court will sometimes restrict counsel from an anticipation of the defense. 3 Chit. Prac. 881; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3044 et seq.

OPENING A COMMISSION. An entering upon the duties under a commission, or commencing to act under a commission, is so termed. Thus, the judges of assize and nisi prius derive their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commence acting under the powers so committed to them, they are said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commence their proceedings is thence termed the "commission day of the assizes." Brown.

OPENING A JUDGMENT. Taking off the bar of finality so as to permit the reconsideration of the judgment and of the cause on which it was founded. It does not abrogate the judgment, as does "vacation of judgment."

OPENING A POLICY OF INSURANCE. The question has been made whether, and in what cases, if any, the valuation in a valued policy shall be opened. The valuation, being a part of the agreement of the parties, is not to be set aside as between them in any case. The question is, how shall it be treated where only a part of the subject insured and valued is put at a risk, and also in the settlement of a particular average? and the answer is the same in both cases, viz., when the proportion or rate per centum put at risk or loss is ascertained, the agreed valuation of the whole is to be applied to the part put at risk, or the proportion lost, pro rata. 2 Phil. Ins. 1203.

OPENING A RULE. The act of restoring or recalling a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way. Brown.

OPENING BIDDINGS. Ordering a resale. When estates are sold under decree of equity to the highest bidder, the court will, on notice of an offer of a sufficient advance on the price obtained, open the biddings, i. e., order a resale; but this will not generally be done after the confirmation of the certificate of the highest bidder. So, by analogy, a resale has been ordered of an estate sold under bankruptcy. Sugd. Vend. 90; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 167; 8 Md. 322; 9 Md. 228; 13 Grat. (Va.) 639; 4 Wis. 242; 31 Miss. 514.

OPENING THE PLEADINGS. Making an opening statement to the jury of the issues at the beginning of a trial.

OPERARIUS (Law Lat. from opus, work). In old English law. A workman or laborer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 4.

OPERATION OF LAW. A term applied to indicate the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own, as, the right to an estate of one who dies intestate is cast upon the heir at law, by operation of law. When a lessee for life enfeoffs him in reversion, or when the lessee and lessor join in a feoffment, or when a lessee for life or years accepts a new lease or demise from the lessor, there is a surrender of the first lease by operation of law. 5 Barn. & C. 269; 9 Barn. & C. 298; 2 Barn. & Adol. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. See "Descent," "Purchase."

OPERATIVE. A workman; one employed to perform labor for another. See 2 Cush. (Mass.) 371.

OPERATIVE PART. In a written instrument, that which carries out the main object of the instrument, as distinguished from the recitals, formal conclusion, etc. Sometimes everything that follows the recitals is called the operative part.

OPERATIVE WORDS. Those by which the purpose of an instrument is effected. Generally applied to those words in a deed by which an estate is passed, viz., "grant," "quitclaim," "demise," "bargain and sell," etc.

OPERIS NOVI NUNTIATIO. In the civil law. A protest or warning against (of) a new work. Dig. 39. 1.

OPINIO EST DUPLEX, SCILICET, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quae vultum veritatis habet, et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth. 4 Coke, 107.

OPINIO QUAE FAVET TESTAMENTO est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

OPINION.

—In Evidence. An inference or conclusion stated by a witness, as distinguished from a statement of matters of fact.

—In Practice. The statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. The judgment itself is sometimes called an opinion, and sometimes the opinion is spoken of as the judgment of the court.

A declaration, usually in writing, made by a counsel to his client of what the law is, according to his judgment, on a statement of facts submitted to him.

An opinion is in both the above cases a decision of what principles of law are to be applied in the particular case, with the difference that judicial opinions pronounced by the court are law and of authority, while the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are merely advice to his client or argument to the court.

OPORTET (Lat.) It behooves; it is needful or necessary. Oportebit (the future form) had, in the civil law, the sense of oportet. Dig. 50. 16. 8. And as to the meaning of oportere, see Dig. 50. 16.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA RES DEDUCATUR in donationem. It is necessary that a certain thing be brought into the gift, or made the subject of the conveyance. Bracton, fol. 15b.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA RES DEDUCATUR in iudicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be certain or definite. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 84; Bracton, fol. 15b.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA SIT RES quae venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be certain or definite.

OPORTET QUOD CERTAE PERSONAE, terrae, et certi status, comprehendantur in declaratione usuum. It is necessary that certain persons, lands, and estates be comprehended in a declaration of uses. 9 Coke, 9.

OPP'. A contraction of obtulit or optulit, in the old books. A. opp' see versus B. quarto die, A. offered himself against B. on the fourth day. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11; Id. c. 67, § 2.

OPPIDUM (Lat.) A town. Dig. 50. 16. 239. 7.

OPPIGNERARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To pledge. Calv. Lex.

OPPOSER (Law Lat. oppositor). In old English law. An officer in the court of exchequer. See "Foreign Apposer." Sometimes treated as a corrupted form of apposer (q. v.), but there are good reasons for considering it as the genuine word.

OPPOSITA JUXTA SE POSITA MAGIS alucescunt. Opposites placed next each other appear in a clearer light. 4 Bac. Works, 256, 258, 353.

OPPOSITION. In bankruptcy practice. The act of a creditor who declares his dissent to a debtor's being discharged under the bankrupt laws.

OPPRESSION. The act of an officer in inflicting upon any person, with improper motive, any bodily harm, imprisonment, or other injury, not constituting extortion. Steph. Dig. art. 119; 4 Q. B. 475.

OPTIMA ENIM EST LEGIS INTERPRES consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of law. 2 Inst. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 823.

OPTIMA EST LEX, QUAE MINIMUM relinquit arbitrio iudicis. That is the best system of law which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge. Bac. Aph. 46.

OPTIMA STATUTI INTERPRETRIX est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpreter of a statute is (all the separate parts being considered) the statute itself. 8 Coke, 117; Wingate, Max. 239, max. 68.

OPTIMAM ESSE LEGEM, QUAE MINIMUM relinquit arbitrio iudicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty. Bac. Aph. 8.

OPTIMUS INTERPRES RERUM USUS. Usage is the best interpreter of things. 2 Inst. 282.

OPTIMUS INTERPRETANDI MODUS est sic legis interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make them accord. 8 Coke, 169.

OPTIMUS JUDEX, QUI MINIMUM SIBI. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion. Bac. Aph. 46.

OPTIMUS LEGUM INTERPRES consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. 4 Inst. 75; 2 Pars. Cont. 53.

OPTION. A right of choice or election. Sometimes applies specifically to contracts whereby one purchases the right for a certain time, at his election, to demand and receive or to deliver property at a stated price. See "Gambling Contract."

OPTIONAL WRIT. An original writ in the alternative, commanding either to do a thing, or show cause why it has not been done. 3 Bl. Comm. 274; Finch, Law, 257.

OPTOMETRY. The employment of subjective and objective mechanical means to determine the accommodative and refractive states of the eye and the scope of its functions in general; the employment of any means, other than the use of drugs, for the measurement of the powers or range of human vision and the adaptation of lenses or frames for the aid thereof; measurement of the powers of vision in general, as acuteness of perception of form and color or the extent of the field. 280 Ill. 21.

OPTULIT. An old form of obtulit, used in Bracton. Bracton, fols. 354, 354b.

OPUS (Lat. and Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. Work; labor; benefit; advantage. This word seems to have been framed from the Law French oeps (q. v.)

A thing made or done by labor.

OPUS LOCATUM (Lat.) In civil law. A work, i. e., the result of work, let to another to be used. A work, i. e., something to be completed by work, hired to be done by another. Vicat, "Opus," "Locare;" L. 51, § 1, D. "Locat.;" L. 1, § 1, D. ad leg. Rhod.

OPUS MAGNIFICIUM (or MANIFICIUM) (from Lat. opus, work; manus, hand). In old English law. Manual labor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 48, § 3.

OPUS NOVUM. In civil law. A new work. A new (i. e., late or recent) construction on land, or alteration in works already there. Dig. 39. 1. 1. 11.

OR. Ordinarily a disjunctive particle. 249 Ill. 117; 99 Ill. 560. To further the intent of the parties, however, it has often been construed as conjunctive. 98 U. S. 143; 30 Ohio St. 407; 36 Wis. 466; 3 Gill (Md.) 492; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 316; 14 Daly (N. Y.) 361; 55 Ill. 239; 181 Ill. App. 715.

It is sometimes used also to introduce a synonymous or further expression in explanation of what precedes. 91 U. S. 362; 8 Mass. 59.

The usual province of the word is to disjoin the parts of a sentence, and while it suggests an alternative it also denotes opposition. 54 N. J. Law, 133.

Used in its ordinary and disjunctive sense, it corresponds with either, "meaning one or the other of two, but not both." 143 Ill. 100.

The word "or" is often construed "and," and vice versa, to further the intent of the parties in legacies, devises, deeds, bonds and writings. 213 Ill. 130; 249 Ill. 117.

In such cases it may usually be determined from the context that the wrong word was mistakenly used. 51 L. J. Q. B. 557; 9 Q. D. B. 643.

Instances in which "or" should be read "and." 2 Ves. 243; 6 D. & R. 257; 30 L. J. M. C. 245; 10 C. B. N. S. 317; 21 L. J. Ch. 434; 2 Sim. N. S. 212; 6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 118.

Instances in which "and" should not be read "or." 3 Rep. 80a; 12 East. 228; 26 L. J. Ch. 473; 6 H. L. Ca. 61; 28 Bea. 440; L. R. 11 Eq. 514; 40 L. J. Ch. 355; L. R. 2 Eq. 400; 33 L. J. Ch. 279; 33 Bea. 353;

22 L. J. Ex. 144; 8 Ex. 578; L. R. 1 Eq. 675.

"Or" sometimes means "nor." 51 L. J. M. C. 22; 8 Q. D. B. 445.

ORACULUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a kind of decision given by the Roman emperors.

ORAL. Spoken, in contradistinction to written; as, oral evidence, which is evidence delivered verbally by a witness.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

ORATIO SIGNIFICATIVA. (Lat.) In old English law. The meaning of an instrument, as distinguished from the mere letters (litterae) in which it was written. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 20.

ORATOR.

—In Chancery Practice. The party who files a bill.

—In Roman Law. An advocate. Code 1. 3. 33. 1.

ORATRIX. The feminine form of "orator."

ORCINUS LIBERTUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A freedman who obtained his liberty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased (orcinus), not of the haeres. Brown.

ORDAIN. To ordain is to make an ordinance, to enact a law.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that the people "do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America." The third article of the same constitution declares that "the judicial power shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." See 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 324; 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 402.

ORDAINED. When the word is applied to a clergymen, it means, that he has been invested with ministerial functions, or sacerdotal power. 4 Conn. 139.

ORDEAL. An ancient superstitious mode of trial.

When in a criminal case the accused was arraigned, he might select the mode of trial either by God and his country,—that is, by jury,—or by God only,—that is, by ordeal.

The trial by ordeal was either by fire or by water. Those who were tried by the former passed barefooted and blindfolded over nine hot, glowing ploughshares, or were to carry burning irons in their hands, and accordingly as they escaped or not they were acquitted or condemned. The water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold water.

In cold water, the parties suspected were adjudged innocent if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; and if, after putting their bare arms or legs into scalding water, they came out unhurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime. It was supposed that God would, by the mere contrivance of man, exercise his power in favor of the innocent. 4 Bl. Comm. 342; 2 Am. Jur. 280. For a detailed account of the trial by ordeal, see Herbert, Ant. Inns of Court, 146.

ORDEFFE. A liberty whereby one claims ore found on his own land.

ORDENAMIENTO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form, and in the mode of its promulgation. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

ORDENAMIENTO DE ALCALA (Spanish). A collection of Spanish law, promulgated by the Cortes in the year 1348. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 75.

ORDER. Command; direction.

An informal bill of exchange or letter of request requiring the party to whom it is addressed to deliver property of the person making the order to some one therein described.

A designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid.

This order, in the case of negotiable paper, is usually by indorsement, and may be either express, as, "Pay to C. D.," or implied merely, as by writing A. B. (the payee's name). See "Indorsement."

—In French Law. The act by which the rank of preferences of claims, among creditors who have liens over the price which arises out of the sale of an immovable subject, is ascertained. Dalloz.

—In Governmental Law. By this expression is understood the several bodies which compose the state. In ancient Rome, for example, there were three distinct orders, namely, that of the senators, that of the patricians, and that of the plebeians. In the United States there are no orders of men; all men are equal in the eye of the law. See "Rank."

ORDER NISI. A conditional order, which is to be confirmed unless something be done, which has been required, by a time specified. Eden, Inj. 122. See "Nisi."

ORDER OF FILIATION. The judgment rendered in a bastardy proceeding, whereby a certain man is adjudged the father of a bastard child.

ORDER OF HARUGARI. An order composed of German-speaking persons, whose general object is to preserve and spread the German language wherever the order exists, to facilitate and promote the intellectual and material welfare of its members and improve and elevate social conditions among German families.

ORDERS OF THE DAY. Any member of the English house of commons who wishes to propose any question, or to "move the house," as it is termed, must, in order to give the house due notice of his intention, state the form or nature of his motion on a previous day, and have it entered in a book termed the "order book;" and the motions so entered, the house arranges, shall be considered on particular days, and such motions or matters, when the day arrives for their being considered, are then termed the "orders of the day." Brown; May, Parl. Prac.

ORDINANCE.

—In Modern Usage. A law passed by the legislative body of a municipal corporation for the government of such municipality. 117 Ind. 221.

—In Old Law. The term was applied to laws of other than municipal bodies.

The following account of the difference between a statute and an ordinance is extracted from Bac. Abr. "Statute" (A): "Where the proceeding consisted only of a petition from parliament and an answer from the king, these were entered on the parliament roll; and if the matter was of a public nature, the whole was then styled an 'ordinance.' If, however, the petition and answer were not only of a public, but a novel, nature, they were then formed into an act by the king, with the aid of his council and judges, and entered on the statute roll." See Co. Litt. 159b, Butler's note; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 146.

According to Lord Coke, the difference between a statute and an ordinance is that the latter has not had the assent of the king, lords, and commons, but is made merely by two of these powers. 4 Inst. 25. See Barr. Obs. St. 41, note (x).

It is distinguished from a "resolution" by the same body by the fact that an ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of government, while a resolution is of a temporary character. 11 Ohio St. 96; 114 Ind. 336; 174 Ill. 445; 184 Ill. 51; 262 Ill. 396. Thus matters upon which a city council wishes to legislate must be put in the form of an ordinance, but all acts that are done in its ministerial capacity may be in the form of resolutions. Resolutions are special and temporary, applicable only to a single matter of passing moment; ordinances are permanent regulations, applicable to all states of facts thereafter arising within the scope of their provisions. 186 Ill. 571.

Certain enactments in the nature of constitutions have also been referred to as ordinances, as, for example, the "ordinance for the government of the Northwest Territory," passed by congress in 1787.

ORDINANCE OF THE FOREST. In English law. A statute made touching matters and causes of the forest. 33 & 34 Edw. I.

ORDINANDI LEX. The law of procedure, as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

ORDINARIUS ITA DICITUR QUIA HABET ORDINARIAM JURISDICTIONEM, IN JURE PROPRIO, ET NON PROPTER DEPUTATIONEM. The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one. Co. Litt. 96.

ORDINARY. In ecclesiastical law. An officer who has original jurisdiction in his own right, and not by deputation.

In England, the ordinary is an officer who has immediate jurisdiction in ecclesiastical causes. Co. Litt. 344.

In the United States, the ordinary possesses, in those states where such officer exists, powers vested in him by the constitution and acts of the legislature. In South Carolina, the ordinary is a judicial officer. 1 Const. (S. C.) 267; 2 Const. (S. C.) 384.

ORDINARY CARE. Such a degree of care, skill and diligence as men of ordinary prudence, under similar circumstances, usually employ (31 Pa. St. 512; 3 Mass. 132; 2 Wis. 316; 23 Conn. 443; 28 Vt. 150; 9 N. Y. 416), and is to be determined with reference to all the attendant circumstances of the transaction (35 N. Y. 27; 47 Super. Ct. 292, 296).

ORDINARY CONVEYANCES. Those deeds of transfer which are entered into between two or more persons, without an assurance in a superior court of justice.

ORDINARY COURSE OF BUSINESS. The rules or questions prevailing in business generally, or in a particular business. See 14 Q. B. Div. 386.

ORDINARY DILIGENCE. The degree which men of ordinary prudence generally exercise.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE. Absence of ordinary care (q. v.)

ORDINARY OF ASSIZE AND SESSIONS. In old English law. A deputy of the bishop of the diocese, anciently appointed to give malefactors their neck verses, and judge whether they read or not; also to perform divine services for them, and assist in preparing them for death. Wharton.

ORDINARY OF NEWGATE. The clergyman who is attendant upon condemned malefactors in that prison to prepare them for death. He records the behavior of such persons. Formerly it was the custom of the ordinary to publish a small pamphlet upon the execution of any remarkable criminal. Wharton.

ORDINARY SKILL. Such skill as a person conversant with the matter undertaken might be reasonably supposed to have. 11 Mees. & W. 113; 20 Mart. (La.) 68, 75; 1 H. Bl. 158, 161; 6 Ga. 213, 219; 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 515; 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 380; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 211; 4 Burrows, 2060; 3 Campb. 17, 19; 7 Car. & P. 289; 6 Bing. 460; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 625; 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 368; 15 Mass. 316; 15 Pick. (Mass.) 440; 2 Cush. (Mass.) 316; 8 Car. & P. 479; 3 Campb. 451; 4 Barn. & C. 345.

ORDINATION. The act of conferring the orders of the church upon an individual.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIENTES. A writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master contrary to the ordinance of St. 23 & 24 Edw. III. Reg. Orig. 189.

ORDINATUM EST (Lat.) It is ordered. The initial words are of the record entry of an order.

ORDINE PLACITANDI SERVATO, SERVATUR ET JUS. The order of pleading being preserved, the law is preserved. Co. Litt. 303.

ORDINES MAJORES ET MINORES. In ecclesiastical law. The holy orders of priest, deacon, and subdeacon, any of which qualified for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure were called "ordines majores," and the inferior orders of chanters, psalmists, ostiary, reader, exorcist, and acolyte were called "ordines minores." Persons ordained to the ordines minores had their prima tonsura, different from the tonsura clericalis. Cowell.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM. See "Beneficium Ordinis."

ORDINUM FUGITIVI. In old English law. Those of the religious who deserted their houses, and, throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Par. Ant. 388.

ORDO ALBUS. The friars. Ordo Griseus, the gray friars; ordo Niger, the black friars.

ORDO ATTACHIAMENTORUM. The order of attachments.

ORDO JUDICIORUM. In the canon law. The order of judgments; the rule by which the due course of hearing each cause was prescribed. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 17.

ORE. The word "ore" has a definite signification, and designates a compound of metal and other substance; metal unrefined, yet in its fossil state. 147 N. Y. 501; 1 Ch. 432.

ORE TENUS (Lat.) Verbally; orally. Formerly the pleadings of the parties were ore tenus; and the practice is said to have been retained till the reign of Edward III. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 95; Steph. Pl. 29. And see Bracton, 372b.

In chancery practice, a defendant may demur at the bar ore tenus (3 P. Wms. 370) if he has not sustained the demurrer on the record (1 Swanst. 288; Mitf. Pl. 176; 6 Ves. 779; 8 Ves. 405; 17 Ves. 215, 216).

ORFGILD (Saxon orf, cattle, gild, payment. Also called "cheapgild"). A payment for cattle, or the restoring them. Cowell.

A restitution made by the hundred or county of any wrong done by one that was in pledge. Lambard, Arch. 125, 126.

A penalty for taking away cattle. Blount.

ORGANIC LAW. The written or unwritten constitution; the underlying rules and principles on which the government is established.

ORGILD (Saxon). Without recompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelman.

ORIGINAL. That which is first in order; an authentic instrument of something, and which is to serve as a model or example to be copied or imitated. It also means first, or not deriving any authority from any other source; as, original jurisdiction, original writ, original bill, and the like.

ORIGINAL AND DERIVATIVE ESTATES. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent. Prest. Est. 125.

ORIGINAL BILL. In chancery practice. A bill relating to a matter not before brought before the court by the same parties, standing in the same interests. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 33; Willis, Pl. 13 et seq.

Proceedings in a court of chancery are either commenced by way of information, when the matter concerns the state or those under its protection, or by original petition or bill, when the matter does not concern the state or those under its protection. The original bill states simply the cause of complaint, and asks for relief. It is composed of nine parts (Story, Eq. Pl. 7, 8), and is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings before the court (1 Daniell, Chanc. Prac. 351). See "Bill."

ORIGINAL BILL IN THE NATURE OF SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. A bill embracing in some degree the qualities of both an original and a supplemental bill. It is founded on an event occurring after the filing of the original bill, of such a nature that the suit cannot be continued as to all the parties, as by a supplemental bill.

ORIGINAL CHARTER. In Scotch law. One by which the first grant of land is made. On the other hand, a charter by progress is one renewing the grant in favor of the heir or singular successor of the first or succeeding vassals. Bell, Dict.

ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES (called, also, primary conveyances). Those conveyances by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises, viz., feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. 2 Bl. Comm. 309, 310*; 1 Steph. Comm. 466.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. See "Jurisdiction."

ORIGINAL PACKAGE. The term "original package" as employed by law, admits of no precise definition applicable to all. Generally, it is said to be a parcel, bundle, bale, box, or case made up of or "packed" with some commodity with a view to its safety and convenient handling and transportation. It does not necessarily mean that goods shall be inclosed in a tight or sealed receptacle. It relates wholly to goods as prepared for transportation, and has no necessary reference whatever to the package originally prepared or put up by the manufacturer. Indeed the idea of the "original package" may well be made to cover certain forms of property which do not ordinarily admit of being packed or incased in any other manner than in the car or vessel in which they are transported; such, for instance, as steel beams, threshing machines, and other bulky articles. 170 Fed. 449, 99 C. C. A. 667; 119 Ia. 384, 93 N. W. 372, 373; 179 U. S. 343, 45 Law. ed. 224.

Within the meaning of interstate commerce regulations, the original unbroken package imported into a state from another state or a foreign country before it becomes by sale or otherwise part of the general mass of property in the state. 135 U. S. 100.

ORIGINAL PROCESS. That process which issues for defendant's appearance. See "Process."

ORIGINAL WRIT. In English practice. A mandatory letter issued in the king's name, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed or supposed to have been done, requiring him to command the wrongdoer, or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is deemed necessary to give the courts of law jurisdiction.

In modern practice, however, it is often dispensed with, by recourse, as usual, to fiction, and a proceeding by bill is substituted. In this country, our courts derive their jurisdiction from the constitution, and require no original writ to confer it. Improperly speaking, the first writ which is issued in a case is sometimes called an original writ; but it is not so in the English sense of the word. See 3 Bl. Comm. 273; Walk. Am. Law, 514.

ORIGINALIA (Lat.) In English law. The transcripts and other documents sent to the office of the treasurer remembrancer in exchequer are called by this name to distinguish them from recorda, which contain the judgments of the barons.

ORIGINE PROPRIA NEMINEM POSSE voluntate sua eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can renounce his origin (put off or discharge his natural allegiance). Code, 10. 34. 4. See 1 Bl. Comm. c. 10; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 313; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 246; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 74.

ORIGO REI INSPICI DEBET. The origin of a thing ought to be inquired into. 1 Coke, 99.

ORNERY. The word "ornery" is not recognized by lexicographers. It is generally understood to be of uncertain meaning, but used to express the opposite of good qualities. 78 Iowa 79.

ORNEST. In old English law. The trial by battle, which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the north, where it was practiced under the name of "holmgang," from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm. Wharton.

ORPHAN. A minor or infant who has lost both of his or her parents. Sometimes the term is applied to such a person who has lost only one of his or her parents. 3 Mer. 48; 2 Sim. & S. 93; Aso & M. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 2, c. 1. See 14 Haz. Pa. Reg. 188, 189, for a correspondence between the Hon. Joseph Hopkinson and ex-President J. Q. Adams as to the meaning of the word "orphan." See, also, Hob. 247.

ORPHANAGE. In English law. The share reserved to an orphan by the custom of London.

By the custom of London, when a freeman of that city dies, his estate is divided into three parts, as follows: One-third part to the widow; another to the children advanced by him in his lifetime, which is called the "orphanage;" and the other third part may be by him disposed of by will. Now, however, a freeman may dispose of his estate as he pleases; but in cases of intestacy, the statute of distribution expressly excepts and reserves the custom of London. Lovelace, Wills, 102, 104; Bac. Abr. "Custom of London" (C).

ORPHANAGE PART. That portion of an intestate's effects which his children were entitled to by the custom of London. This custom appears to have been a remnant of what was once a general law all over England, namely, that a father should not by his will bequeath the entirety of his personal estate away from his family, but should leave them a third part at least, called the "children's part," corresponding to the "bairns' part" or legitim of Scotch law, and also (although not in amount) to the legitima quarta of Roman law. Inst. 2. 18. This custom of London was abolished by St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94. Brown.

ORPHANOTROPHI. In civil law. Persons who have the charge of administering the affairs of houses destined for the use of orphans. Clef des Lois Rom. "Administrateurs."

ORPHANS' COURT. In American law. Courts of more or less extended probate jurisdiction.

ORRAY (Law Fr. from oyer, to hear). Shall hear. Orrount (plur.) Britt. c. 41.

ORWIGE, SINE WITA. In old English law. Without war or feud, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstances, against the foeht, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain. Anc. Inst. Eng.

OSTENDIT VOBIS (Law Lat.) In old pleadings. Shows to you. Formal words with which a demandant began his count. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 38, § 2.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER. One whose name appears in a firm as a partner, and who is really such. See "Nominal Partner."

OSTENSURUS (Law Lat.) To show. A formal word in old writs. Reg. Orig. 36; Fet. Assaver, § 21.

OSTENTUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A monstrous or prodigious birth. Dig. 50. 16. 38.

OSTEOPATHY. Osteopathy is a system of treatment of physical ailments based on the theory that diseases are generally due to deranged mechanism of the joints, nerves, blood vessels and other tissues, and can be remedied by manipulations of those parts. 155 Wis. 55.

OSTER (Law Fr.) To take away; to take out or off. Oste del file, taken off the file. Y. B. H. 20 Hen. VI. 1.

OSTER LA TOUAILLE (Old Fr.) In the laws of Oleron. To deny a seaman his mess. Article 13. Literally, to deny the table cloth or victuals for three meals. See 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) Append. xxvii; 2 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) Append. lxxxv.

OSTIA REGNI (Lat.) Gates of the kingdom. The ports of the kingdom of England are so called by Sir Matthew Hale. Hale de Jur. Mar. pt. 2, c. 3.

OSTIUM ECCLESIAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. The door or porch of the church, where dower was anciently conferred. See "Ad Ostium Ecclesiae."

OSWALD'S LAW. The law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the introduction of monks into churches, by Oswald, bishop of Worcester, about A. D. 964. Wharton.

OSWALD'S LAW HUNDRED. An ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from Bishop Oswald, who obtained it from King Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's Church in Worcester. It was exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction, and comprehends three hundred hides of land. Camd. Brit.

OTHERWISE. A different manner; in another way differently; in other respects in a different manner; in different respects; in a different manner or way; differently; in other respects. 187 Ill. 268.

OTHESWORTHE (Saxon, eoþh, oath). Worthy to make oath. Bracton, 185, 192.

OUTRE LE MERE (Law Fr.) Beyond the sea. Y. B. P. 1 Edw. III. 27.

OURLOP. The herwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant when his daughter was debauched. Cowell.

OUST (from L. Fr. ouster, q. v.) In old English law. To take away.

To put out; to turn out or eject. 3 Bl. Com. 201, 202.

In modern law. To deprive, as ousting a corporation of its franchises. 12 Mod. 18, 19.

OUSTER (Law Fr. outré, oultre; Lat. ultra, beyond). Out; beyond; besides; farther; also; over and more. Le ouster, the uppermost. Over,—respondeat ouster, let him answer over. Britt. c. 29. Ouster le mer, over the sea. Jacob. Ouster eit, he went away. 6 Coke, 41b; 9 Coke, 120.

To put out; to oust. Il oust, he put out or ousted. Oustes, ousted. 6 Coke, 41b.

"Judgment of ouster," in some states, is used to denote the judgment in quo warranto, by which one is held not entitled to an office; in others to the judgment in summary proceedings for possession of property.

—In Torts. The actual turning out or keeping excluded the party entitled to possession of any real property corporeal.

OUSTER LE MAIN (Law Fr. to take out of the hand). In old English law. A livery of lands out of the hands of the lord after the tenant came of age. If the lord refused to deliver such lands, the tenant was entitled to a writ to recover the same from the lord. This recovery out of the hands of the lord was called ouster le main.

OUSTER LE MER. Beyond the sea; a cause of excuse if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court. Cowell.

OUT OF THE STATE. Beyond sea (q. v.)

OUT OF TIME. In marine insurance. Missing. Generally speaking, a ship may be said to be missing or out of time when she has not been heard of after the longest ordinary time in which the voyage is safely performed. 1 Arnould, Ins. 540; 2 Duer, Ins. 469, note.

OUTER BAR. In the English courts, barristers at law have been divided into two classes, viz., queen's counsel, who are admitted within the bar of the courts, in seats specially reserved for themselves, and junior counsel, who sit without the bar; and the latter are thence frequently termed barristers of the "outer bar," or "utter bar," in contradistinction to the former class.

OUTER HOUSE. The name given to the great hall of the parliament house in Edinburgh, in which the lords ordinary of the court of session sit as single judges to hear causes. The term is used colloquially as expressive of the business done there, in contradistinction to the "Inner House," the name given to the chambers in which the first and second divisions of the court of sessions hold their sittings. Bell, Dict.

OUTFANGTHEF. A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. Du Cange.

OUTFIT.

—In Maritime Law. That part of a ship's apparel which ordinarily perishes or is consumed in the course of her voyage. Lowndes, Av. 11.

—In the Diplomatic Service. An allowance made by the government of the United States to a minister plenipotentiary, or charge des affaires, on going from the United States to any foreign country.

OUTHOUSES. Buildings adjoining or belonging to dwelling houses.

Buildings subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal mansion house, located either within or without the curtilage. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 175; 4 Conn. 46; 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 402; 2 Craw. & D. 479.

Any house standing out and apart from houses where people reside, or where business is transacted. 15 Tex. 260.

A building appurtenant to some main building. A school house is not an outhouse. 10 Conn. 143.

OUTLAND. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay beyond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. One part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called "theodans," or lesser thanes; the other part they allotted to their husbands, or churls. Jacob.

OUTLAW. In English law. One who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 22 Viner, Abr. 316; 1 Phil. Ev. Index; Bac. Abr. "Outlawry;" 2 Sellon, Prac. 277; Doct. Plac. 331; 3 Bl. Comm. 283, 284.

OUTLAWED. Applied to debts, barred by limitations. See 37 Me. 389.

OUTLAWRY. In English law. The act of being put out of the protection of the law, by process regularly sued out against a person who is in contempt in refusing to become amenable to the court having jurisdiction. The proceedings themselves are also called the "outlawry."

Outlawry may take place in criminal or in civil cases. 3 Bl. Comm. 283; Co. Litt. 128; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4196.

In the United States, outlawry in civil cases is unknown, and if there are any cases of outlawry in criminal cases, they are very rare. Dane, Abr. c. 193a, 34. See Bac. Abr. "Abatement" (B), "Outlawry;" Gilb. Hist. 196, 197; 2 Va. Cas. 244; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 92.

OUTPARTERS. A name given in old English statutes to certain depredators from Redesdale, on the northern border of England, who made incursions into Scotland, and brought back to their accomplices at home (called intakers) any booty they had taken. Spelman voc. "Intakers;" St. 9 Hen. V. c. 8.

OUTRAGE. A grave injury; a serious wrong. A generic word which is applied to everything which is injurious in a great degree to the honor or rights of another. 44 Iowa 314.

OUTRIDERS. In English practice. Bailiffs employed by the sheriffs and their deputies to ride to the farthest places of their counties or hundreds, to summon such as they thought good to attend their county or hundred court.

OUTROPER. Old English. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute. 2 H. Bl. 557.

OUTSETTER. Scotch. Publisher. 3 How. St. Tr. 603.

OUTSIDERS. See "Gambling Contract."

OUTSUCKEN MULTURES. In Scotch law. Out-town multures; multures, duties, or tolls paid by persons voluntarily grinding corn at any mill to which they are not thirled, or bound by tenure. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 140; Bell, Dict. voc. "Multures."

OVELTY. In old English law. Equality of service in subordinate tenures.

OVER. In conveyancing, the word "over" is used to denote a contingent limitation intended to take effect on the failure of a prior estate. Thus, in what is commonly called the "name and arms clause" in a will or settlement, there is generally a proviso that, if the devisee fails to comply with the condition, the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over. Watson, Comp. Eq. 1110.

OVERCYTED, or OVERCYHSED. Proved guilty or convicted. Blount.

OVERDRAW. To obtain by bills or checks upon an individual, bank, or other depository, a greater amount of funds than the party who draws is entitled to.

OVERHERNISSA. In Saxon law. Contumacy or contempt of court. Leg. Aethel. c. 25.

OVERPLUS. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the remainder of a thing. The same as "surplus."

OVERREACHING CLAUSE. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement. The clause is so called because it provides that the resettlement shall be overreached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the tenant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, etc., created under the original settlement. 3 Dav. Conv. 489; Rapalje & L.

OVERRULE. To annul; to make void.

This word is frequently used to signify that a case has been decided directly opposite to a former case. When this takes place, the first-decided case is said to be overruled as a precedent, and cannot any longer be considered as of binding authority.

It also signifies that a majority of the judges have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the latter are said to be overruled.

OVERSAMESSA. In old English law. A forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor. 3 Inst. 116.

OVERSEERS OF HIGHWAYS. Officials of the local division of government, as towns, who supervise and direct the maintenance or construction of highways.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR. Persons appointed or elected to take care of the poor with moneys furnished to them by the public authority.

The duties of these officers are regulated by local statutes. In general, the overseers are bound to perform those duties, and the neglect of them will subject them to an indictment. See 1 Bl. Comm. 360; 16 Viner, Abr. 150; 1 Mass. 459; 3 Mass. 436; 1 Pennington (N. J.) 6, 136; Comyn, Dig. "Justices of the Peace" (B 63-65).

OVERSMAN. In Scotch law. A person commonly named in a submission, to whom power is given to determine in case the arbiters cannot agree in the sentence. Sometimes the nomination of the oversman is left to the arbiters. In either case, the oversman has no power to decide unless the arbiters differ in opinion. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 16. The office of an oversman very much resembles that of an umpire.

OVERT, OVERTÉ, or OUVÉRTÉ (Law Fr. and Eng.) Open. Pound overt, an open or uncovered pound. 3 Bl. Comm. 12. Market overt, open market. 2 Id. 449. Lettres ouvertes, open letters; letters patent (q. v.)

OVERT ACT (Law Lat. apertum factum). In criminal law. An open, manifest act, from which criminality may be implied. 193 Ill. App. 128. Brande. An open act, which must be manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12.

OVERVERT. In old English law. High wood. See "Vert."

OVES (Lat. [pl. of ovis], sheep). In the civil law. Under a bequest of sheep (ovibus), lambs and rams were not included. Dig. 32. 65. 7; Id. 32. 81. 4. But under the name of a flock of sheep (ovium grege), both were included. Id. 32. 81. 5.

OVESQUE (Law Fr.) With. Litt. § 240; Britt. c. 38.

For. Il voile av' argue ovesque le lease, he would have argued for the lease. Dyer, 126b.

OWEL, or OWELE (Law Fr. from Lat. aequalis). Equal. En owele mayn, in equal hand. Britt. c. 39. Owement, equally. Id. c. 119.

OWELTY. The difference which is paid or secured by one coparcener to another for the purpose of equalizing a partition. Litt. § 251; Co. Litt. 169a; 1 Watts (Pa.) 265; 1 Whart. (Pa.) 292; Cruise, Dig. tit. 19, § 32; 1 Vern. 133; Plowd. 134; 16 Viner, Abr. 223, pl. 3; Brooke, Abr. "Partition," § 5; 99 Tex. 51, 97 S. W. 334, Ann. Cas. 1914 A650; 117 Ill. 351; 160 Ill. 602.

OWING. Something unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

In a business sense, in correspondence or contracts, a legal obligation is implied. In ordinary transactions between debtor and creditor it does not necessarily imply an enforceable obligation. 155 Mich. 567.

OWLER. In English law. One guilty of the offense of owling.

OWLING. In English law. The offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom.

The name is said to owe its origin to the fact that this offense was carried on in the night, when the owl was abroad.

OWNER. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right. 31 Cal. 649.

The term has no exact technical meaning. Hare, Am. Const. Law, 355.

As applied to lands, it has been said to include all who had an interest therein, though it fall short of ownership of the fee. (38 Mich. 171; 2 Ohio St. 114), and it has been applied both to the holder of the legal title (6 Hun [N. Y.] 553) and of an equitable estate (21 Minn. 107).

In like manner, as applied to personalty, it has been held to include one having a temporary right of possession. 44 Conn. 298. Such persons are ordinarily designated as "special owner," in contradistinction from "general owner," in whom is the full title. See 10 Cush. (Mass.) 399; 50 Mich. 249.

OWNERSHIP. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular to the exclusion of all others. Civ. Code La. art. 480. See "Owner."

OXFIELD. A restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same. Lambard, Arch. 125.

OXGANG (from Saxon, gang, going, and ox; Law Lat. bovata). In old English law. So much land as an ox could till. According to some, fifteen acres. Co. Litt. 69a; Crompt. Jur. 220. According to Balfour, the Scotch oxengang, or oxgate, contained twelve acres; but this does not correspond with ancient charters. See Bell, Dict. "Ploughgate." Skene says thirteen acres. Cowell.

OYER. The reading to a party of a written instrument stated in the pleadings of the opposite party. In modern practice a copy of the writing is ordered furnished on application. See "Profert in Curia."

OYER AND TERMINER. See "Assize;" "Court of Oyer and Terminer."

OYER DE RECORD. A petition made in court that the judges, for better proofs, compel the production of a record for inspection.

OYER ET TERMINER (Law Fr.) To hear and determine. A oyer et terminer toutes quereles, to hear and determine all complaints. Britt. fol. 1. De oyr et terminer. Art. Sup. Chart.

OYEZ (Fr. hear ye). The introduction to any proclamation or advertisement by public crier. It is wrongly and usually pronounced "oh yes." 4 Bl. Comm. 340, note.

P

P. H. V. Pro hac vice, for this occasion.

P. P. S. An abbreviation used in insurance for the words "policy proof of interest." It amounts to an agreement that in the event of loss, the insured shall be recognized, without further proof, to have had the interest named in the policy in the subject-matter insured. 279 Fed. 893.

PAAGE. A toll for passage through another's land.

PACARE. In old records. To pay.

PACATIO. Payment. Mat. Par. A. D. 1248.

PACE. A measure of length, containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long. The common pace is the length of a step; the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

PACEATUR (Lat.) Let him be freed or discharged.

PACI SUNT MAXIME CONTRARIA, VIS et injuria. Force and wrong are especially contrary to peace. Co. Litt. 161.

PACIFICATION (Lat. pax, peace, facere, to make). The act of making peace between two countries which have been at war; the restoration of public tranquillity.

PACK. To deceive by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude; as, packing a jury. See "Jury;" Bac. Abr. "Juries" (M); 12 Conn. 262.

PACKED PARCELS. The name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones, each bearing a different address, collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together.

PACT. In civil law. An agreement made by two or more persons on the same subject, in order to form some engagement, or to dissolve or modify one already made. Conventio est duorum in idem placitum consensus de re solvenda, id est facienda vel praestanda. Dig. 2. 14; Clef des Lois Rom.; Ayliffe, Pand. 558; Merlin, Repert. "Pacte."

PACTA CONVENTA, QUAE NEQUE contra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts which are not illegal, and do not originate in fraud, must in all respects be observed.

Code, 2. 3. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 624.

PACTA DANT LEGEM CONTRACTUI. Agreements give the law to the contract. Halk. Max. 118.

PACTA PRIVATA JURI PUBLICO DEROGARE NON POSSUNT. Private contracts cannot derogate from the public law. 7 Coke, 28.

PACTA QUAE CONTRA LEGES CONSTITUTIONESQUE VEL CONTRA BONOS MORES SUNT, nullam vim habent, indubitati juris est. It is indubitable law that contracts against the laws or good morals have no force. Code, 2. 3. 6; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 620.

PACTA QUAE TURPEM CAUSAM CONTINENT NON SUNT OBSERVANDA. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 539; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 658.

PACTIO (Lat. from pangere, to strike). In civil law. A bargaining or agreeing of which pactum (the agreement itself) was the result. Calv. Lex. It is used, however, as the synonym of pactum.

PACTIONS. In international law. Contracts between nations which are to be performed by a single act, and of which execution is at an end at once. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 100.

PACTIS PRIVATORUM JURI PUBLICO NON DEROGATUR. Private contracts do not derogate from public law. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 621; per Dr. Lushington, Arg. 4 Clark & F. 241; Arg. 3 Clark & F. 621.

PACTITIOUS. Settled or governed by agreement.

PACTO ALIQUOD LICITUM EST, QUID sine pacto non admittitur. By a contract, something is permitted, which, without it, could not be admitted. Co. Litt. 166.

PACTUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A pact; an agreement or convention without specific name, and without consideration, which, however, might, in its nature produce a civil obligation. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 775.

A pact was distinguished from a contract (contractus), which had a specific name or present consideration, and carried with it a civil obligation, both being a species of conventio (convention) which was the general term. Do ut des, I give that you may give, was a contract. Dabo ut des, I will give that you may give, was a pact.

FACTUM CONSTITUTAE PECUNIAE (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or it may be defined simply an agreement by which a person promises a creditor to pay him.

When a person by this pact promises his own creditor to pay him, there arises a new obligation, which does not destroy the former by which he was already bound, but which is accessory to it; and by this multiplicity of obligations the right of the creditor is strengthened. Poth. Obl. pt. 2, c. 6, § 9.

There is a striking conformity between the pactum constitutae pecuniae, as above defined, and our indebitatus assumpsit. The pactum constitutae pecuniae was a promise to pay a subsisting debt, whether natural or civil, made in such a manner as not to extinguish the preceding debt, and introduced by the praetor to obviate some formal difficulties. The action of indebitatus assumpsit was brought upon a promise for the payment of a debt. It was not subject to the wager of law and other technical difficulties of the regular action of debt, but by such promise the right to the action of debt was not extinguished nor varied. 4 Coke, 91, 95. See 1 H. Bl. 550-555, 850; Doug. 6, 7; 3 Wood, Inst. 168, 169, note (c); 1 Viner, Abr. 270; Brooke, Abr. "Action sur le Case" (pl. 7, 69, 72); Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 94 (a), note (a), 145 (g); 4 Bos. & P. 295; 1 Chit. Pl. 89; Toullier, Dr. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 3, c. 4, notes 388, 396.

FACTUM DE NON PETANDO (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement, the debtor is freed from his obligation. This is not unlike the "covenant not to sue," of the common law. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 755.

FACTUM DE QUOTA LITIS (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement by which a creditor of a sum difficult to recover promises a portion—for example, one-third—to the person who will undertake to recover it. In general, attorneys will abstain from making such a contract, yet it is not unlawful at common law.

PADDER. A robber; a foot highwayman.

PAGA (Spanish). In Spanish law. Payment. Las Partidas, pt. 5, tit. 14, lib. 1, pagamento, satisfaction.

PAGODA. In commercial law. A denomination of money in Bengal. In the computation of ad valorem duties it is valued at one dollar and ninety-four cents. Act March 2, 1799, § 61 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626).

PAGUS. A county. Jacob.

PAIN, Payne. [Lat. poena.] A penalty. "To incur a pain"; "to pay a pain." 1 Leon. 203. "Under pain," "pains and penalties," are expressions still used.

PAINE FORTE ET DURE. See "Peine Forte et Dure."

PAINS AND PENALTIES, BILLS OF. See "Bill of Pains and Penalties."

PAIRING OFF. A legislative practice, said to have originated in the time of Cromwell, whereby legislators of opposite opinions agree not to vote on a given measure. Usually resorted to in order to relieve a member from the necessity of remaining constantly present to await a vote.

PAIS, or PAYS. A French word, signifying "country." In law, matter in pais is matter of fact, in opposition to matter of record; a trial per pais is a trial by the country,— that is, by a jury. See "In Pais."

PAIS, CONVEYANCES IN. In old English law. Ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country, i. e., upon the land to be transferred.

PALACE COURT. In English law. A court which had jurisdiction of all personal actions arising between any parties within twelve miles of Whitehall, not including the city of London.

It was erected in the time of Charles I., and was held by the steward of the household, the knight marshal and steward of the court, or his deputy. It had its sessions once a week, in the borough of Southwark. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13.

PALAGIUM. A duty to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine at any of their ports. Jacob.

PALATINE. Possessing royal privileges, See "County Palatine."

PALATINE COURTS. Formerly the court of common pleas at Lancaster, the chancery court of Lancaster, and the court of pleas at Durham, the second of which alone now exists.

PALATIUM (Lat.) A palace. The emperor's house in Rome was so called from the Mons Palatinus on which it was built. Adams, Rom. Ant. 613.

—In Old English Law. A paling; a fence. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 1.

PALEFRETUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A palfrey. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 19.

PALINGMAN. In old English law. A merchant denizen; one born within the English pale. Blount.

PALLIO COOPERIRE. In old English law. An ancient custom, where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried. The children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnized. It was in the nature of adoption. The children were legitimate by the civil, but not by the common, law. Jacob.

PALMER'S ACT. A name given to the English statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the central criminal court to be tried in that court.

PANDECTS. In civil law. The name of an abridgment or compilation of the civil law, made by Tribonian and others, by order of the emperor Justinian, and to which he gave the force of law A. D. 529.

It is also known by the name of the Digest, because in his compilation of writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestiæ. The emperor, in 529, published an ordinance entitled De Conceptione Digestorum, which was addressed to Tribonian, and by which he was required to select some of the most distinguished lawyers to assist him in composing a collection of the best decisions of the ancient lawyers, and compile them in fifty books, without confusion or contradiction. The instructions of the emperor were to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid contradictions, and, by the necessary changes, to produce a complete body of law. This work was a companion to the Code of Justinian, and was to be governed in its arrangement of topics by the method of the Code. Justinian allowed the commissioners, who were sixteen in number, ten years to compile it; but the work was completed in three years, and promulgated in 529. A list of the writers from whose works the collection was made, and an account of the method pursued by the commissioners, will be found in Smith Dict. Gr. & R. Ant. The Digest, although compiled in Constantinople, was originally written in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek.

The Digest is divided in two different ways: The first into fifty books, each book into several titles, and each title into several extracts or leges, and at the head of each series of extracts is the name of the lawyer from whose work they were taken.

The first book contains twenty-two titles. The subject of the first is De Justicia et Jure, of the division of persons and things, of magistrates, etc. The second, divided into fifteen titles, treats of the power of magistrates and their jurisdiction, the manner of commencing suits, of agreements and compromises. The third, composed of six titles, treats of those who can and those who cannot sue, of advocates and attorneys and syndics, and of calumny. The fourth, divided into nine titles, treats of causes of restitution, of submissions and arbitrations, of minors, carriers by water, inn-keepers, and those who have the care of the property of others. In the fifth there are six titles, which treat of jurisdiction and inofficious testaments. The subject of the sixth, in which there are three titles, is actions. The seventh, in nine titles, embraces whatever concerns usufructs, personal servitudes, habitations, the uses of real estate and its appurtenances, and of the sureties required of the usufructuary. The eighth book, in six titles, regulates urban and rural servitudes. The ninth book, in four titles, explains certain personal actions. The tenth in four titles, treats of mixed actions. The object of the eleventh book, containing eight titles, is to regulate interrogatories, the cases of which the judge was to take cognizance, fugitive slaves, of gamblers, of surveyors who made false reports, and of funerals and funeral expenses. The twelfth book, in seven titles, regulates personal actions in which the plaintiff claims the title of a thing. The thirteenth, in seven titles, and the fourteenth, in six titles, regulate certain actions. The fifteenth, in four titles, treats of actions to which a father or master is liable in consequence of the acts of his children or slaves, and those to which he is entitled, of the peculium of children and slaves, and of the actions on this right. The sixteenth, in three titles, contains the law relating to the senatus consultum Velleianum, of compensation or set-off, and of the action of deposit. The seventeenth, in two titles, expounds the law of mandates and partnership. The eighteenth book, in seven titles, explains the contract of sale. The nineteenth, in five titles, treats of the actions which arise on a contract of sale. The law relating to pawns, hypothecation, the preference among creditors, and subrogation, occupy the twentieth book, which contains six titles. The twenty-first book explains, under three titles, the edict of the ediles relating to the sale of slaves and animals, then what relates to evictions and warranties. The twenty-second book, in six titles, treats of interest, profits, and accessories of things, proofs, presumptions, and of ignorance of law and fact. The twenty-third, in five titles, contains the law of marriage, and its accompanying agreements. The twenty-fourth, in three titles, and the twenty-fifth, in seven titles, regulate donations between husband and wife, divorces, and their consequence. The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh, each in two titles, contain the law relating to tutorship and curatorship. The twenty-eighth, in eight titles, and the twenty-ninth, in seven, contain the law on last will and testaments. The thirtieth, thirty-first, and thirty-second, each divided into two titles, contain the law of trusts and specific legacies. The thirty-third, thirty-fourth, and thirty-fifth—the first divided into ten titles, the second into nine titles, and the last into three titles—treat of various kinds of legacies. The thirty-sixth, containing four titles, explains the senatus consultum Trebellianum, and the time when trusts become due. The thirty-seventh book, contains fifteen titles, has two objects,—to regulate successions, and to declare the respect which children owe their parents, and freedmen their patrons. The thirty-eighth book, in seventeen titles, treats of a variety of subjects,—of successions, and of the degree of kindred in successions; of possession; and of heirs. The thirty-ninth explains the means which the law and the praetor take to prevent a threatened injury, and donations inter vivos and mortis causa. The fortieth, in sixteen titles, treats of the state and condition of persons, and of what relates to freedmen and liberty. The different means of acquiring and losing title to property are explained in the forty-first book, in ten titles. The forty-second, in eight titles, treats of the res judicata, and of the seizure and sale of the property of a debtor. Interdicts, or possessory actions, are the object of the forty-third book, in three titles. The forty-fourth contains an enumeration of defenses which arise in consequence of the res judicata, from the lapse of time, prescription, and the like. This occupies six titles; the seventh treats of obligations and actions. The forty-fifth speaks of stipulations, by freedmen or by slaves. It contains only three titles. The forty-sixth, in eight titles, treats of securities, novations and delegations, payments, releases, and acceptilations. In the forty-seventh book are explained the punishments inflicted for private crimes, de privatis delictis, among which are included larcenies, slander, libels, offenses against religion and public manners, removing boundaries, and similar offenses. The forty-eighth book treats of public crimes, among which are enumerated those of laesae-majestatis, adultery, murder, poisoning, parricide, extortion, and the like, with rules for procedure in such cases. The forty-ninth, in eighteen titles, treats of appeals, of the rights of the public treasury, of those who are in captivity, and of their repurchase. The fiftieth and last book, in seventeen titles, explains the rights of municipalities, and then treats of a variety of public officers.

These fifty books are allotted in seven parts: The first contains the first four books; the second, from the fifth to the eleventh book, inclusive; the third, from the twelfth to the nineteenth, inclusive; the fourth, from the twentieth to the twenty-seventh, inclusive; the fifth, from the twenty-eighth to the thirty-sixth, inclusive; the sixth commences with the thirty-seventh, and ends with the forty-seventh book; and the seventh, or last, is composed of the last six books.

The division into digestum vetus (book first to and including title second of book twenty-fourth), digestum infortiatum (title third of book twenty-fourth, to and including book thirty-eighth), and digestum novum (from book thirty-ninth to the end), has reference to the order in which these three parts appeared.

The Pandects are more usually cited by English and American jurists by numbers, thus: Dig. 23. 3. 5. 6, meaning book 23, title 3, law or fragment 5, section 6; sometimes, also, otherwise, as, D. 23. 3. fr. 5, § 6; or fr. 5, § 6. D. 23. 3. The old mode of citing was by titles and initial words, thus: D. de jure dotium, L. profectitia, § si pater; or the same references in reverse order. From this afterwards originated the following: L. profectitia, 5. § se pater, 6. D. de jure dotium, and, lastly, L. 5. § 6. D. de jure dotium,—which is the form commonly used by the continental jurists of Europe. 1 Hackeld. Civ. Law, pp. 54, 55, § 65. And see Tayl. Civ. Law, 24, 25. The abbreviation f. was commonly used instead of Dig. or Pandects.

The Pandects—as well, indeed, as all Justinian's laws, except some fragments of the Code and Novels—were lost to all Europe for a considerable period. During the pillage of Amalfi, in the war between the two soi-disant popes Innocent II. and Anaclet II., a soldier discovered an old manuscript, which attracted his attention by its envelope of many colors. It was carried to the Emperor Clothaire, and proved to be the Pandects of Justinian. The work was arranged in its present order by Warner, a German, whose Latin name is Irnerius, who was appointed by that emperor Professor of Roman Law at Bologna. 1 Fournel, Hist. des Ovocats, 44, 46, 51. The style of the work is very grave and pure, and contrasts in this respect with that of the Code, which is very far from classical. On the other hand, the learning of the Digest stands rather in the discussing of subtle questions of law, and enumerations of the variety of opinions of ancient lawyers thereupon, than in practical matters of daily use, of which the Code so simply and directly treats. See Ridley, View, pt. 1, cc. 1, 2.

PANDOXARE (Law Lat.) In old records. to brew. Cowell.

Pandoxatrix, an ale wife; a woman that both brewed and sold ale and beer. Id.

PANEL (diminutive from either pane, apart, or page, pagella).

—In Practice. A schedule or roll, containing the names of jurors summoned by virtue of a writ of venire facias, and annexed to the writ. It is returned into the court whence the venire issued. Co. Litt. 158b; 3 Bl. Comm. 353.

—In Scotch Law. The prisoner at the bar, or person who takes his trial before the court of justiciary for some crime. So called from the time of his appearance. Bell, Dict. Spelled, also, pannel. See "Im-panel."

PANIER. A waiter at table at English bar dinners.

PANIS (Lat.) In old English law. Bread; loaf; a loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9.

PANNAGE. In old English law. Food that swine fed on in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, &c. which some called pawns. Cowell.

A duty for feeding in woods. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 31.

PANNAGIUM EST PASTUS PORCORUM, In nemoribus et in silvis, ut puta, de glandibus, etc. A pannagium is a pasture of hogs, in woods and forests, upon acorns, and so forth. 1 Bulst. 7.

PANNELLATION. The act of impaneling a jury.

PAPER BLOCKADE. A blockade proclaimed, but not maintained by a naval force sufficient to render it effective. See "Blockade."

PAPER BOOK. In appellate practice. A book or paper, usually printed, containing a transcript or an abstract, as may be required, of all the evidence and proceedings submitted to the appellate court.

PAPER DAYS. In English law. Days on which special arguments are to take place. Tuesdays and Fridays in term time are paper days appointed by the court. Lee, Dict.; Archb. Prac. 101.

PAPER MONEY. The engagements to pay money which are issued by governments and banks, and which pass as money. Pardeus, Dr. Com. note 9. Bank notes are generally considered as cash, and will answer all the purposes of currency; but paper money is not a legal tender if objected to. See "Legal Tender."

PAPER OFFICE. In English law. An ancient office in the palace of Whitehall, where all the public writings, matters of state and council, proclamations, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the queen's ministers abroad, and generally all the papers and dispatches that pass through the office of the secretaries of state, are deposited. Also an office or room in the court of queen's bench, where the records belonging to that court are deposited; sometimes called "paper mill." Wharton.

PAPER TITLE. A claim of title unfounded in fact, but founded on a conveyance or chain of conveyances showing an apparently good title.

PAR. In common law. Equal. It is used to denote a state of equality or equal value. An equality of actual with nominal value. 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 410, 99 Miss. 859; 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791; 156 N. Y. 363, 50 N. E. 973. Bills of exchange, stocks, and the like, are at par when they sell for their nominal value; above par, or below par, when they sell for more or less.

PAR DELICTUM (Lat.) Equal guilt. "This is not a case of par delictum. It is oppression on one side, and submission on the other. It never can be predicated as par delictum when one holds the rod and the other bows to it." 6 Maule & S. 165. See "In Pari Delicto."

PAR IN PAREM IMPERIUM NON HABET. An equal has no power over an equal. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 174. Example, one of two judges of the same court cannot commit the other for contempt.

PAR OF EXCHANGE. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currency of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 224. The exchange between the two countries is said to be at par when bills are negotiated on this footing, i. e., when a bill for £100 drawn on London sells in Paris for 2,520 frs., and vice versa. Bowen, Pol. Econ. 321. See 11 East, 267.

PAR ONERI. Equal to the damage.

PAR VALUE. In its customary and commercial sense, with reference to exchange between different states or countries, par value has been defined to be "the equivalency of a certain amount of the currency of one country in the currency of the other." 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 224.

By the par value of stock is generally understood the value expressed on the face of the certificate.

PARACIUM. The tenure between parceners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service. Domesday Book.

PARAGE. Equality of blood, name, or dignity, but more especially of land in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs. Co. Litt. 166b. Hence "disparage," and "disparagement." Blount.

—In Feudal Law. Where heirs took of the same stock and by same title, but from right of primogeniture, or some other cause, the shares were unequal, the younger was said to hold of the elder, jure et titulo paragii, by right and title of parage, being equal in everything but the quantity, and owning no homage or fealty. Calv. Lex.

PARAGIUM (Lat. par, equal, and agium). 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 681. Equality.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The portion which a woman gets on her marriage. Ayliffe, Par. 336.

PARAGRAPH. A part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete. Wharton.

PARAMOUNT (par, by, mouunter, to ascend). Above; upwards. Kelham. Para- mount specific, above specified. Plowd. 209a.

That which is superior; usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135. Where A. lets lands to B. and he underlets them to C., in this case A. is the paramount and B. is the mesne landlord. 2 Bl. Comm. 91; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 484, note 79, 485, note 81. The estate which is entitled to the benefit of an easement is known as the "paramount estate."

PARANOIA. A form of insanity, the principal characteristic of which is that the sufferer possesses insane delusions. 227 Ill. 192.

PARAPHERNA (Lat.) In civil law. Goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dower (dos). Vocat; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 6; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 529.

PARAPHERNAL. Belonging or pertaining to the parapherna.

PARAPHERNALIA. Apparel and ornaments of a wife, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bl. Comm. 435.

PARAPHERNAUX, BIENS (Fr.) In French law. All the wife's property which is not subject to the regime dotal is called by this name, and of these articles the wife has the entire administration; but she may allow the husband to enjoy them, and in that case he is not liable to account. Brown.

PARASYNEXIS. In the civil law, a conventicle or unlawful meeting.

PARATITLA (Lat.) In civil law. An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

PARATUM HABEO (Lat. I have ready). In practice. A return made by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, which signified that he had the defendant ready to bring into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned cepi corpus and bail bond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body. 7 Pa. St. 535.

PARATUS EST VERIFICARE. In old pleading. This he is ready to verify.

PARAVAIL. Tenant paravail is the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is the immediate tenant to one who holds of another. He is called tenant paravail because it is presumed he has the avails or profits of the land. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135; 2 Inst. 296.

PARCEL. A part of the estate. 1 Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 51), "Grant" (E 10). To parcel is to divide an estate. Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (O).

A small bundle. It is the diminutive of package. 1 Hughes (U. S.) 529.

The word "parcel" is not a sufficient description of the property alleged in an indictment to have been stolen. The prisoner was indicted for stealing "one parcel, of the value of one shilling, of the goods," etc. The parcel in question was taken from the hold of a vessel, out of a box broken open by the prisoner. Held an insufficient description. 7 Cox, C. C. 18.

PARCEL MAKERS. Two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels or items of the escheators' accounts, where-in they charged them with everything they had levied for the sovereign's use during the term of their office, and delivered the same to the auditors to make up their accounts therewith.

PARCELLA TERRAE. A parcel of land.

PARCELS, BILL OF. An account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser.

PARCENARY. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parceners, before the common inheritance has been divided. See "Coparcenary, Estates in."

PARCENERS. The daughters of a man or woman seised of lands and tenements in fee simple or fee tail, on whom, after the death of such ancestor, such lands and tenements descend, and they enter. See "Coparceners."

PARCHMENT (Fr.; Law Lat. pergamenum). Sheep skins dressed for writing; so called because invented at Pergamus, in Asia Minor, by King Eumenes, when the exportation of paper, which was made in Egypt only, was forbidden by Ptolemy.

PARCO FRACTO (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes from thence beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

PARCUS (Lat.) A park.

PARDON. An act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 160.

Every pardon granted to the guilty is in derogation of the law. If the pardon be equitable, the law is bad; for where legislation and the administration of the law are perfect, pardons must be a violation of the law. But, as human actions are necessarily imperfect, the pardoning power must be vested somewhere, in order to prevent injustice when it is ascertained that an error has been committed.

(1) An absolute pardon is one which frees the criminal without any condition whatever.

(2) A conditional pardon is one to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. 1 Bailey (S. C.) 283; 10 Ark. 284; 1 McCord (S. C.) 176; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 47.

(3) A general pardon, more properly called "amnesty" (q. v.), is one which extends to all offenders of the same kind. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 423.

"The distinction between pardon, amnesty, and reprieve seems to be that pardon permanently discharges the individual designated from some or all special penal consequences of his crime, but does not affect the legal character of the offense committed; while amnesty obliterates the effect, and declares that government will not consider the thing done punishable, and hence operates in favor of all persons involved in it, whether mentioned or not; and reprieve only temporarily suspends execution of punishment, leaving the legal character of the act unchanged, and the individual subject to its consequences in time to come." Abbott.

PARENS. A parent. This was the original and proper sense of the word.

In the civil law, any relative in the direct ascending line, either male or female.

PARENS EST NOMEN GENERALE AD omne genus cognationis. Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Co. Litt. 80; Litt. §108; Magna Carta Johan. c. 50.

PARENS PATRIAE (Lat.) Father of his country. In England, the king, in America, the state, 94 Kan. 115; the people, 3 Bl. Comm. 427; 2 Steph. Comm. 528; 4 Kent, Comm. 508, note; 17 How. (U. S.) 393; Shelf. Ins. 12; 94 Kan. 115, Ann. Cas. 1916E 1024.

PARENTAGE. Kindred in the direct ascending line. See 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1955.

PARENTS. The lawful father and mother of the party spoken of. 1 Murph. (N. C.) 336; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 93.

The term "parent" differs from that of "ancestor;" the latter embracing not only the father and mother, but every person in an ascending line. It differs also from "predecessor." Wood Inst. 68; 7 Ves. 522; 1 Murph. (N. C.) 336; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 255. See "Father."

By the civil law, grandfathers and grandmothers, and other ascendants, were, in certain cases, considered parents. Dict. de Jur. "Parente." See 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55; 2 Kent, Comm. 159; 5 East, 223; Bouv. Inst. Index.

PARENTUM EST LIBEROS ALERE etiam nothos. It is the duty of parents to support their children, even when illegitimate. Lofft, 222.

PARES (Lat.) A man's equals; his peers. 3 Bl. Comm. 349.

PARES CURIAE (Lat.) In feudal law. Those vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 3, § 17; 1 Washb. Real Prop.

PARES REGNI. The peers of the realm.

PARESIS. A progressive disease, manifesting itself at first by a slight loss of memory, dropping of words or carelessness as to dress or person, these conditions becoming more marked as the disease progresses and affecting in an increasing degree the memory, judgment and mental functions, until, at an advanced stage of the disease, the mental powers of the victim are wholly destroyed. 250 Ill. 176.

PARI DELICTO (Lat.) In criminal law. In a similar offense or crime; equal in guilt.

A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former. 8 East, 381, 382; 124 N. Y. 156. See "In Pari Delicto."

PARI MATERIA (Lat.) Of the same matter; on the same subject; as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (I 3).

PARI PASSU (Lat.) By the same gradation. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund, without any precedence over each other.

PARI RATIONE (Lat.) For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

PARIA COPULANTUR PARIBUS. Similar things unite with similar.

PARIBUS SENTENTIIS REUS ABSOLVITUR. When opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted. 4 Inst. 64.

PARIENTES. In Spanish law. Relations. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PARIES. In the civil law. A wall. Dig. 50. 16. 157.

PARIES COMMUNIS. In the civil law. A common wall; a party wall. Dig. 29. 2. 39.

PARISH. A district of country, of different extents.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The territory committed to the charge of a parson, or vicar, or other minister. Ayliffe, Par. 404; 2 Bl. Comm. 112.

—In Louisiana. Divisions corresponding to counties. The state is divided into parishes.

—In New England. Divisions of a town, originally territorial, but which now constitute quasi corporations, consisting of those connected with a certain church. See 2 Mass. 501; 7 Mass. 447; 16 Mass. 457, 488, 492 et seq.; 1 Picfl. (Mass.) 91.

PARISH APPRENTICE. The children of poor persons in England who are bound by the overseers of the parish, with the consent of two justices. 2 Steph. Comm. 230.

PARISH CONSTABLE. A petty constable exercising his functions within a given parish. Mozley & W.

PARISH COURT. In Louisiana. A court established in each parish, having general probate jurisdiction, and a limited civil jurisdiction.

PARISH OFFICERS. Church wardens, overseers, and constables.

PARIUM EADEM EST RATIO, IDEM JUS. Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.

PARIUM JUDICIUM (Lat. the decision of equals). The right of trial by one's peers, i. e., by jury in the case of a commoner, by the house of peers in the case of a peer.

PARK (Law Lat. parcus).

—In Old Law. An inclosure. 2 Bl. Comm. 38. A pound. Reg. Orig. 166; Cowell. Pairk is still retained in Ireland for "pound."

—In English Law. An inclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. 13 Car. II. c. 10; Manw. For. Laws; Cromp. Jur. fol. 148; 2 Bl. Comm. 38.

—In American Law. A piece of ground in a city or village set apart for ornament, or to afford the benefit of air, exercise, or amusement. 36 N. Y. 120.

PARK BOTE. To be quit of inclosing a park, or any part thereof.

PARLE HILL (also called Parling Hill). A hill where courts were held in old times. Cowell.

PARLER. (L. Fr.) To speak. Kelham.

PARLIAMENT (said to be derived from parler la ment, to speak the mind, or parum lamentum). In English law. The legislative branch of the government of Great Britain, consisting of the house of lords and the house of commons.

PARLIAMENTARY AGENTS. Persons (usually solicitors) who transact the technical business connected with passing private bills through parliament. They are required to sign a declaration and give security for compliance with the rules of parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY TAXES. Such taxes as are imposed directly by act of parliament, i. e., by the legislature itself, as distinguished from those which are imposed by private individuals or bodies under the authority of an act of parliament. Thus, a sewers rate, not being imposed directly by act of parliament, but by certain persons termed "commissioners of sewers," is not a parliamentary tax; whereas the income tax, which is directly imposed, and the amount also fixed, by act of parliament, is a parliamentary tax.

PARLIAMENTUM DIABOLICUM. A parliament held at Coventry, 3 Hen. VI., wherein Edward, Earl of March (afterwards King Edward IV.), and many of the chief nobility were attainted, was so called; but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Jacob.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM (Law Lat.) Unlearned or lack learning parliament. A name given to a parliament held at Coventry in the sixth year of Henry IV., under an ordinance requiring that no lawyer should be chosen knight, citizen or Burgess; "by reason whereof," says Sir Edward Coke, "this parliament was fruitless, and never a good law made thereat." 4 Inst. 48; 1 Bl. Comm. 177.

PARLIAMENTUM INSANUM. A parliament assembled at Oxford, 41 Hen. III., so styled from the madness of their proceedings, and because the lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the king, lords, and commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. Jacob.

PARLIAMENTUM RELIGIOSORUM. In most convents there has been a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; conferences there being termed parliamentum. Likewise, the societies of the two temples, or inns of court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses a "parliament." Jacob.

PAROCHIA EST LOCUS IN QUO DEGIT populus allcujus ecclesiae. A parish is a place in which the population of a certain church resides. 5 Coke, 67.

PAROL (more properly parole, a French word, meaning literally "word" or "speech"). Oral; by word of mouth.

—In Contracts. Verbal or merely written, as distinguished from sealed. 1 Chit. Cont. 1; 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60.

—In Evidence. Parol evidence is that delivered verbally by witnesses in court.

PAROLE.

—In International Law. The agreement of persons who have beentaken by an enemy that they will not again take up arms against those who captured them, either for a limited time or during the continuance of the war. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 8, § 151.

—In Criminal Law. A form of conditional pardon, by which the convict is released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject, during the remainder thereof, to supervision by the public authorities, and to return to imprisonment on violation of the conditions of the parole.

PAROLS FONT PLEA. Words make the plea. 5 Mod. 458; Y. B. 19 Hen. VI. 48.

PARRICIDE (from Lat. pater, father, and caedere, to slay). In civil law. One who murders his father; one who murders his mother, his brother, his sister, or his children. Merlin, Repert.; Dig. 48. 9. 1. 3, 4.

The common law does not define the crime and makes no difference in punishment between it and other murders. 1 Hale, P. C. 380.

In colloquial use, the term is applied according to its derivative, rather than its civil-law meaning, to the slayer of a father only.

PARRICIDIUM. In the civil law. Parricide; the murder of a parent. Dig. 48. 9. 9.

PARS (Lat.) A party (to a suit). Pars actrix, a party plaintiff. Reg. Orig. 9a; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 11; Clerke, Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 4. Singularly translated in Dyer (179a), part actress. Pars agens. 3 How. St. Tr. 863.

Pars rea, a party defendant. St. Marlb. c. 13.

PARS ENITIA (Lat.) In old English law. The share of the eldest daughter where lands were parted between daughters by lot, she having her first choice after the division of the inheritance. Co. Litt. 166b; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 3; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 10, § "In Divisionem."

PARS GRAVATA. In old practice. A party aggrieved; the party aggrieved. Hardr. 50; 3 Leon. 237.

PARS PRO TOTO. Part for the whole; the name of a part used to represent the whole; as the roof for the house, ten spears for ten armed men, etc.

PARS RATIONABILIS (Lat. reasonable part). That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children. 2 Bl. Comm. 492; Magna Charta; 9 Hen. III. c. 18; 2 Steph. Comm. 228, 254.

PARSON. In ecclesiastical law. One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. So called because the church, which is an invisible body, is represented by his person. In England he is himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession. Co. Litt. 300.

PARSON IMPARSONA (Lat.) A persona, or parson, may be termed "impersonata," or "impersonee," only in regard to the possession he hath of the rectory by the act of another. Co. Litt. 300. One that is inducted and in possession of a benefice, e. g., a dean and chapter. Dyer, 40, 221. He that is in possession of a church, be it presentative or appropriate, and with whom the church is full,—persona in this case meaning the patron who gives the title, and persona impersonata the parson to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right. Reg. Jud. 24.

PARSONAGE. A parsonage is a house in which a minister of the gospel resides. 189 Mich. 408.

PART. A share; one of the portions equal or unequal into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; a piece; a fragment, division, a member, a constituent, 9 Ill. App. 407; a purpart. This word is also used in contradistinction to counterpart, and is synonymous with section. 9 Ill. App. 407. Covenants were formerly made in a script and rescript, or part and counterpart.

PART AND PERTINENT. In Scotch law. A term in a conveyance including lands or servitudes held for forty years as part of, or pertinent to, lands conveyed, natural fruits before they are separated, woods and parks, etc., but not steelbow stock, unless the lands have been sold on a rental. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 2. 5. 3. et seq.

PART OWNERS. Those who own a thing together or in common.

—In Maritime Law. A term applied to two or more person who own a vessel together, and not as partners.

In general, when a majority of the part owners are desirous of employing such a ship upon a particular voyage or adventure, they have a right to do so upon giving security in the admiralty by stipulation to the minority, if required, to bring her back and restore the ship, or, in case of her loss, to pay them the value of their respective shares. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3780; Abb. Shipp. 70; 3 Kent, Comm. (4th Ed.) 151; Story, Partn. § 489; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175. When the majority do not choose to employ the ship, the minority have the same right, upon giving similar security. 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175; 1 Hagg. Adm. 306; Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 442.

PARTE NON COMPARENTE (Lat.) The party not having appeared. The condition of a cause called "default."

PARTE QUACUMQUE INTEGRANTE sublata, tollitur totum. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Coke, 41.

PARTEM ALIQUAM RECTE INTELLIGERE nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again. 3 Coké, 52.

PARTES FINIS NIL HABUERUNT (Lat. the parties to the fine had nothing, i. e., nothing which they could convey). In old English pleading. The plea to a fine levied by a stranger, and which only bound parties and privates. 2 Bl. Comm. 356*; Hob. 334; 1 P. Wms. 520; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 315.

PARTIAL LOSS. A loss of a part of a thing, or of its value, as contrasted with a total loss.

—In Maritime Law. Where this happens by damage to an article, it is also called a particular average (q. v.)

PARTICEPS (Lat. plur. participes; from pars, a part, and capere, to take). Literally, a part-taker; a partaker or sharer; one jointly interested with another; an associate or accomplice.

In old English law. A part-owner; a parcener.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS. A sharer or part-taker in crime. Applied, also, to persons participating in an illegal or immoral transaction or contract not criminal. One may be particeps criminis, and not in pari delicto. 124 N. Y. 156.

PARTICEPS PLURES SUNT QUASI unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus. Many parceners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part. Co. Litt. 4.

PARTICULA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Parcel. Perk. c. 10, §§ 674, 676, 679.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE. Every kind of expense or damage, short of total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be wholly borne by the proprietor of that concern or interest alone. 2 Phil. Ins. § 354; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 284. See "Average."

PARTICULAR AVERMENT. See "Averment."

PARTICULAR CUSTOM. A custom which only affects the inhabitants of some particular district.

To be good, a particular custom must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; must have been continued; must have been peaceable; must be reasonable; must be certain; must be consistent with itself; must be consistent with other customs. 1 Bl. Comm. 74, 79.

PARTICULAR ESTATE. An estate which is carved out of a larger, and which precedes a remainder; as, an estate for years to A., remainder to be for life; or an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the "particular estate." 2 Bl. Comm. 165; 4 Kent, Comm.

226; 16 Viner, Abr. 216; 4 Comyn, Dig. 32; 5 Comyn, Dig. 346. See "Remainder."

PARTICULAR LIEN. A right which a person has to retain property in respect of money or labor expended on such particular property. See "Lien."

PARTICULAR MALICE. Malice against a particular person. See "Malice."

PARTICULAR STATEMENT. In Pennsylvania pleading and practice. A statement particularly specifying the date of a promise, book account, note, bond (penal or single), bill, or all of them, on which an action is founded and the amount believed by the plaintiff to be due from the defendant. 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 21. It is founded on the provisions of a statute passed March 21, 1806. See 4 Smith, Pa. Laws, 328. It is an unmethodical declaration, not restricted to any particular form. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 537; 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 405; 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 316, 567; 2 Browne (Pa.) 40.

PARTICULAR TENANT. The holder of a particular estate (q. v.).

PARTICULARS. See "Bill of Particulars."

PARTICULARS OF CRIMINAL charges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general is frequently ordered to give the defendant a statement of the acts charged, which is called, in England, the "particulars" of the charges.

In the United States, a bill of particulars is often ordered for the same purpose.

PARTICULARS OF SALE. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a document called the "particulars" copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the property. Dart, Vend. 113; 1 Dav. Conv. 511.

PARTIES (Lat. pars, a part. Those who take part in the performance of an act, as, making a contract, carrying on an action. A party in law may be said to be those united in interest in the performance of an act. It may then be composed of one or more persons. "Parties" includes every party to an act. It is also used to denote all the individual separate persons engaged in the act—in which sense, however, a corporation may be a party.

—To Contracts. Those persons who engage themselves to do or not to do the matters and things contained in an agreement.

—In Actions. The persons seeking relief, and those against whom relief is sought, in any action. Parties are either "of record," being those in whose name the suit is brought, or who are named as defendants, and "not of record," those not so named, but who have a beneficial interest in the subject matter. 6 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 147.

PARTITION. The division which is made between several persons of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of goods and chattels, which belong to them as coheirs or coproprietors. The term is more technically applied to the division of real estate made between coparceners, tenants in common, or joint tenants.

Compulsory partition is that which takes place by a judicial proceeding for that purpose, without regard to the wishes of one or more of the owners.

Voluntary partition is that made by the owners by mutual consent.

PARTNER. One who is a member of a partnership (q. v.)

—Ostensible Partners. Those held out and known as partners, and who in reality are such.

—Secret Partners. Those whose relation to the partnership is concealed.

—Active Partners. Those who take an active part in the conduct of the business. They may be either ostensible or secret partners.

—Silent Partners. Those who take no active part in the management of the business. They may be either ostensible or secret partners.

—Dormant Partners. Such as are both secret and silent partners. The term is sometimes applied, however, as meaning merely a secret partner, and sometimes as meaning a silent partner. Pars. Partn. § 31.

—Nominal Partners. Such as are apparently partners, but really are not.

—General Partners. Those members of a limited partnership whose liability is not limited by special agreement.

—Special Partners. Those members of a limited partnership whose liability is limited. See "Partnership." Shumaker, Partnership, 124.

PARTNERSHIP. The relation subsisting between two or more persons who have contracted together to share as common owners the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them. Shumaker, Partnership, 2.

Elements:

The essential elements of a partnership are (1) a contract between the partners; a true partnership being always formed by contract, not by operation of law. 138 Ill. 74; 43 Mo. 391; 63 Pa. St. 273. The so-called partnership by estoppel or holding out is only an apparent exception; it not being a true partnership inter se, but only a liability of individuals to third persons as if they were partners. (2) A sharing of profits; but the profits must be shared between the partners as common owners thereof, not because of a portion thereof being due to a party as a debt. 8 H. L.

Cas. 268; 5 Colo. 564; 30 Me. 384; 38 Cal. 205; 28 Ohio St. 319. But community of ownership in the stock or capital by means of which profits are earned is not essential. 15 Conn. 67.

Test:

Profit sharing, therefore, is not a test, nor is mutual agency, for mutual agency results from partnership, not partnership from agency. The true test is the intention of the parties to share in the profits as common owners. An agreement to share both profits and losses is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of intention to form a partnership (97 Ill. 303), as is an agreement to share profits with nothing said about losses (145 U. S. 611), or with a stipulation against the liability of one of the parties for losses (18 Fed. 888); but not an agreement to share gross returns (15 Ill. 31; 20 N. Y. 93), or to share losses or expenses only (92 Ill. 103; 132 Mass. 423). The common ownership of property does not create a partnership unless it be employed in business for common profit. 27 Iowa, 131.

Classification:

Partnerships classified with reference to the nature of the association are either (1) ordinary partnerships, (2) limited partnerships, being those wherein the liability of one or more partners is, by compliance with certain statutory provisions, limited to the amount of their contribution to the capital stock, or (3) joint-stock companies, being partnerships with a capital stock divided into transferable shares.

Partnerships classified with reference to their extent are either (1) universal partnerships, being those in which the parties bring into the firm all their property, of whatever nature, and employ all their services for the common benefit, (2) general partnerships, being those formed to transact some general class of business, or (3) special or particular partnerships, being those formed for a particular transaction.

Partnerships classified with reference to their business are either (1) trading or commercial partnerships, being those whose business consists in buying or preparing for sale and selling commodities for profit, or (2) nontrading partnerships.

PARTNERSHIP IN COMMENDAM. In Louisiana law. Partnership in commendam is formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. Civ. Code La. art. 2839.

PARTURITION. The act of giving birth to a child. See "Birth."

PARTUS (Lat.) The child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth; offspring.

PARTUS EX LEGITIMO THORO NON certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suam. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue, c. 42.

PARTUS SEQUITUR VENTREM. The off-spring follows the condition of the mother. Inst. 2. 1. 19. This is the law in the case of slaves and animals (1 Bouv. Inst. notes 187, 502), but with regard to freemen, children follow the condition of the father.

PARTY. See "Parties."

PARTY JURY. A jury de medietate linguæ (q. v.)

PARTY STRUCTURE. A structure separating buildings, stories, or rooms which belong to different owners, or which are approached by distinct staircases or separate entrances from without, whether the same be a partition, arch, floor, or other structure. St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, § 3. Mozley & W.

PARTY WALL. A wall erected on the line between two adjoining estates, belonging to different persons, for the use of both estates. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1615.

It is ordinarily owned in common by the adjoining owners, but may be divided longitudinally or divided latitudinally, the sections being subject to mutual easements, or it may belong to one owner, and be subject to an easement in favor of the other. 50 N. Y. 646; 75 Ill. 118.

PARUM CAVET NATURA. Nature takes little heed. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 127, 166.

PARUM CAVISSE VIDETUR. In Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care. A form used by judges in pronouncing sentence.

PARUM DIFFERUNT QUAE RE CONCORDANT. Things differ but little which agree in substance. 2 Bulst. 86.

PARUM EST LATAM ESSE SENTENTIAM, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that sentence should be given, unless it be committed to execution. Co. Litt. 289.

PARUM PROFICIT SCIRE QUID FIERI debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It avails little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. 2 Inst. 503.

PARVA SERJANTIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Petty serjeanty. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11. Called also, parva serjanteria. Magna Carta, 9 Hen. III. c. 27.

PARVUM CAPE. See "Petit Cape."

PAS (Fr.) Precedence.

PASCHA (Law Lat.; Law Fr. pasche). In old English law and practice. Easter De termino Paschæ, of the term of Easter. Bracton, fol. 246b. A die Paschæ in quindecim dies, from the day of Easter in fifteen days; after fifteen days of Easter. Reg. Jud. 36; 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. iii. § 3.

PASCUA SILVA (Lat.) In the civil law. A feeding wood; a wood devoted to the feeding of cattle (quæ pastui pecudum destinata est). Dig. 50. 16. 30. 5.

PASS.

—In Practice. To proceed; to be entered. A verdict or judgment is said "to pass for" a party where it is delivered in his favor. This term is directly taken from the old French passer.

—In Conveyancing. To go from one person to another; to be transferred. "The names of things by which they pass in assurances." Hale, Anal. § xxiv. "By what names things pass." Id. § xxxv.

To convey or transfer. "To pass an estate." "Effectual words to pass the interest." Id. § xxxv. "The passing of estates." Id.

PASSAGE MONEY. The sum claimable for the conveyance of a person, with or without luggage, on the water.

The difference between freight and passage money is this, that the former is claimable for the carriage of goods, and the latter for the carriage of the person. The same rules which govern the claim for freight affect that for passage money. 3 Chit. Com. Law, 424; 1 Pet. Adm. (N. Y.) 126; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 335. See "Common Carriers of Passengers."

PASSAGIO. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 193.

PASSAGIUM (Law Lat.; Law Fr. passage, from passer, to pass. In old English law. Passage; a passing over sea; a voyage. Reg. Orig. 193b. A term frequently used in the law of essoins, in the days of the Crusades. Bracton, fol. 339; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 8.

PASSATOR. He who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Wharton.

PASSENGER. One who has taken a place in a public conveyance for the purpose of being transported from one place to another. One who is so conveyed from one place to another.

Though the relation of passenger and carrier is in a sense a matter of contract, on account of the duty of the carrier to receive all persons without discriminations, the implications of contract are broader than in other cases. Thus, one is a passenger on a train which he took by mistake. 64 Tex. 536; 40 Ind. 37.

One who is carried gratuitously is a passenger, as is one who has not yet paid his fare (57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 348; 46 Mo. App. 555), but not one who designs evading payment of fare (157 Mass. 377), even by using a pass issued to another (107 Ind. 442).

An employe of the carrier not engaged in the management of the particular train is a passenger (69 Ga. 715; but see 95 N. Y. 267), as is an employe of another carrier under contract, as an express messenger (56 Ark. 594), or a postal clerk (95 N. Y. 562; 57 Fed. 165).

The relation of passenger and carrier begins the moment one goes on the carrier's premises to take passage on one of its trains (58 Ga. 461; 36 Fed. 72; 40 Barb. [N. Y.] 546), and is not ended until the passenger leaves the conveyance and the carrier's premises (55 Kan. 582; 146 Mass. 241; 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599).

PASSIVE DEBTS. In the civil law. All the sums of which one is a debtor, as distinguished from "active debt,"—those which are owed to one; the terms being used in the same sense as "bills payable" and "bills receivable." The term "passive debt" is also used to indicate one upon which no interest is payable, as distinguished from "active debt,"—one which draws interest.

PASSIVE TRUST. See "Trust."

PASSIVE USE A permissive use (q. v.)

PASSPORT (Fr. passer, to pass, port, harbor or gate).

—In Maritime Law. A paper containing a permission from the neutral state to the captain or master of a ship or vessel to proceed on the voyage proposed. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

It is also called a "sea brief," or "sea letter." But Marshall distinguishes sea letter from passport, which latter, he says, is intended to protect the ship, while the former relates to the cargo, destination, etc. See Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 66, note. This document is indispensably necessary in time of war for the safety of every neutral vessel. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 9, § 6, 317, 406b.

A Mediterranean pass or protection against the Barbary powers. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 66, note; Act Cong. 1796.

—In International Law. A document granted in time of war to protect persons or property from the general operation of hostilities. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475; 1 Kent, Comm. 161; 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 3.

An official letter of identification, given to travelers in most countries of continental Europe. These are intended to protect them on their journey from all molestation while they are obedient to the laws. Passports are also granted by the secretary of state to persons traveling abroad, certifying that they are citizens of the United States. 9 Pet. (U. S.) 692. See 1 Kent, Comm. 162, 182; Merlin, Repert.

PASTO (Spanish; from Lat. pastus, q. v.) In Spanish law. Feeding; pasture; a right of pasture. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 4.

PASTURES. Lands upon which beasts feed themselves. By a grant of pastures, the land itself passes. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 202.

PASTUS. The procuration or provision which feudal tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money. Wharton.

PATEAT UNIVERSIS PER PRAESENTES. Know all men by these presents.

PATENT. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals. Phil. Pat. 1.

As the term was originally used in England, it signified certain written instruments emanating from the king, and sealed with the great seal. These instruments conferred grants of lands, honors, or franchises; they were called "letters patent," from being delivered open, and by way of contradistinction from instruments like the French lettres de cachet, which went out sealed.

In the United States the word "patent" is sometimes understood to mean the title deed by which a government, either state or federal, conveys its lands. But in its more usual acceptation it is understood as referring to those instruments by which the United States secures to inventors for a limited time the exclusive use of their own inventions.

PATENT AMBIGUITY. One arising from the words of an instrument, and hence obvious on its face before attempting to apply the words to the subject matter. See "Latent Ambiguity."

PATENT OF PRECEDENCE. Letters patent granted, in England, to such barristers as the crown thinks fit to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and precedence as are assigned in their respective patents, which is sometimes next after the attorney general, but more usually next after her majesty's counsel then being. These rank promiscuously with the king's (or queen's) counsel, but are not the sworn servants of the crown. 3 Bl. Comm. 28; 3 Steph. Comm. 274.

PATENT RIGHT. A right of exclusive sale or manufacture secured by a patent.

PATENT ROLLS. In English law. Rolls containing the records of letters patent granted by the crown since the year 1516. The earlier of these records are deposited in the Tower, the others are in the Rolls' Chapel. Hubback, Ev. Success. 616, 617, where a particular description is given.

PATENT WRIT. In old practice. An open writ; one not closed or sealed up. See "Close Writs."

PATER (Lat.) A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes included avus (grandfather). Dig. 50. 16. 201.

PATER-FAMILIAS (Lat.) In civil law. One who was sui juris, and not subject to the paternal power.

In order to give a correct idea of what was understood in the Roman law by this term, it is proper to refer briefly to the artificial organization of the Roman family,—the greatest moral phenomenon in the history of the human race. The comprehensive term familia embraced both persons and property. Money, lands, houses, slaves, children, all constituted part of this artificial family, this juridical entity, this legal patrimony, the title to which was exclusively vested in the chief or pater-familias, who alone was capax domini, and who belonged to himself, sui juris.

The word pater-familias is by no means equivalent to the modern expression father of a family, but means "proprietor," in the strongest sense of that term. It is he, qui in domo dominium habet, in whom were centered all property, all power, all authority. He was, in a word, the lord and master whose authority was unlimited. No one but he who was sui juris, who was pater-familias, was capable of exercising any right of property, or wielding any superiority or power over anything, for nothing could belong to him who was himself alieni juris. Hence the children of the filii-familias, as well as those of slaves, belonged to the pater-familias. In the same manner, everything that was acquired by the sons or slaves formed a part of the familia, and, consequently, belonged to its chief. This absolute property and power of the pater-familias only ceased with his life, unless he voluntarily parted with them by a sale; for the alienation by sale is invariably the symbol resorted to for the purpose of dissolving the stern dominion of the pater-familias over those belonging to the familia. Thus, both emancipation and adoption are the results of imaginary sales,—per imaginarias venditiones. As the daughter remained in the family of her father, grandfather, or great-grandfather, as the case might be, notwithstanding her marriage, it followed as a necessary consequence that the child never belonged to the same family as its mother. There is no civil relationship between them; they are natural relations,—cognati,—but they are not legally related to each other,—agnati, and therefore the child never inherits from its mother, nor the mother from her child. There was, however, a means by which the wife might enter into the family and subject herself to the power of her husband, in manu mariti, and thereby establish a legal relationship between herself and her husband. This marital power of the husband over the wife was generally acquired either coemptione, by the purchase of the wife by the husband from the pater-familias, or usu, by the prescription based on the possession of one year,—the same by which the title to movable property was acquired according to the principles governing the usucapio (usu capere, to obtain by use). Another mode of obtaining the same end was the confarreatio, a sacred ceremony performed by the breaking and eating of a small cake, farreum, by the married couple. It was supposed that by an observance of this ceremony the marital power was produced by the intervention of the gods. This solemn mode of celebrating marriages was peculiar to the patrician families. By means of these fictions and ceremonies, the wife became, in the eye of the law, the daughter of her husband, and the sister of the children to whom she gave birth, who would otherwise have been strangers to her. Well might Gaius say, Fere nulli alii sunt homines qui talem in liberos habeant potestatem, qualem nos habemus.

This extraordinary organization of the Roman family, and the unlimited powers and authority vested in the pater-familias, continued until the reign of Justinian, who, by his 118th Novel, enacted on the 9th of August, 544, abolished the distinction between the agnatio and cognatio, and established the order of inheritance, which, with some modifications, continues to exist at the present day in all countries whose jurisprudence is based on the civil law. See "Patria Potestas."

PATER IS EST QUEM NUPTIAE DEMONSTRANT. The father is he whom the marriage points out. 1 Bl. Comm. 446; 7 Mart. (N. S.; La.) 548, 553; Dig. 2. 4. 5; 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 273, 304, 322; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 458.

PATER PATRIAE. Father of the country. See "Parens Patriae."

PATERNA PATERNIS (Lat. the father's to the father's). In French law. An expression used to signify that, in a succession, the property coming from the father of the deceased descends to his paternal relations,

PATERNAL. That which belongs to the father or comes from him; as, paternal power, paternal relation, paternal estate, paternal line. See "Line."

PATERNAL POWER. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. See "Father."

PATERNAL PROPERTY. That which descends or comes from the father and other ascendants or collaterals of the paternal stock. Domat, tit. 3, § 2, note 11.

PATERNITY. The state or condition of a father.

PATIBULATED. Hanged.

PATIBULUM. In old English law. A gallows or gibbet. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 3, § 9.

PATIENS. In the civil law, the passive party to a transaction. The correlative term is agens. See "Agent and Patient."

PATRIA (Lat.) The country; the men of the neighborhood competent to serve on a jury; a jury. This word is nearly synonymous with pais (q. v.)

PATRIA LABORIBUS ET EXPENSIS non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 6.

PATRIA POTESTAS (Lat.) In civil law. The paternal power; the authority which the law vests in the father over the persons and property of his legitimate children.

One of the effects of marriage is the paternal authority over the children born in wedlock. In the early period of the Roman history, the paternal authority was unlimited. The father had the absolute control over his children, and might even, as the domestic magistrate of his family, condemn them to death. They could acquire nothing except for the benefit of the paterfamilias (q. v.), and they were even liable to be sold and reduced to slavery by the author of their existence. But in the progress of civilization, this stern rule was gradually relaxed. The voice of nature and humanity was listened to on behalf of the oppressed children of a cruel and heartless father. A passage in the 37th book (title 12, § 5) of the Pandects informs us that, in the year 870 of Rome, the emperor Trajan compelled a father to release his son from the paternal authority, on account of cruel treatment. The same emperor sentenced a father to transportation because he had killed his son in a hunting party, although the son had been guilty of adultery with his stepmother; for, says Marcianus, who reports the case, patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate, consistere. Ulpianus says that a father is not permitted to kill his son without a judgment from the prefect or the president of the province. In the year 981 of Rome, the emperor Alexander Severus addressed a constitution to a father, which is found in book 8, tit. 47, § 3, of the Justinian Code, in which he says: "Your paternal authority authorizes you to chastise your son, and, if he persists in his misconduct you may bring him before the president of the province, who will sentence him to such punishment as you may desire." In the same book and title of the Code we find a constitution of the emperor Constantine, dated in the year of Rome 1065, which inflicts the punishment denounced against parricide on the father who shall be convicted of having killed his son. The power of selling the child, which at first was unlimited, was also much restricted, and finally altogether abolished, by subsequent legislation, especially during the empire. Paulus, who wrote about the middle of the tenth century of Rome, informs us that the father could only sell his child in case of extreme poverty,—contemplatione extremæ necessitatis aut alimentarum gratia. In 1039 of Rome, Diocletian and Maximian declare in a rescript that it is beyond doubt manifestissimi juris that a father can neither sell nor pledge nor donate his children. Constantine, in 1059, permitted the sale by the father of his child at its birth, and when forced to do so by abject poverty,—propter nimiam pauperatatem egestatemque victus; and the same law is re-enacted in the Code of Justinian. Code, 4. 43. 2. 3.

The father, being bound to indemnify the party who had been injured by the offenses of his child, could release himself from this responsibility by an abandonment of the offender, in the same manner as the master could abandon his slave for a similar purpose,—noxali causa mancipare. This power of abandonment continued to exist, with regard to male children, up to the time of Gaius, in the year 925 of Rome. But by the Institutes of Justinian it is forbidden. Inst. 4. 8. 7.

With regard to the rights of the father to the property the child might acquire, it was originally as extensive and absolute as if it had been acquired by a slave. The child could possess nothing nor acquire anything that did not belong to the father. It is true, the child might possess a peculium, but of this he had only a precarious enjoyment, subject to the will and pleasure of the father. Under the first emperors, a distinction was made in favor of the son as to such property as had been acquired by him in the army, which was called castrense peculium, to which the son acquired a title in himself. Constantine extended this rule by applying it to such property as the child had acquired by services in offices held in the state, or by following a liberal profession. This was denominated quasi castrense peculium. He also created the peculium adventitium, which was composed of all property inherited by the son from his mother, whether by will or ab intestat; but the father had the usufruct of this peculium. Arcadius and Honorius extended it to everything the son acquired by succession or donations from his grandfather or mother or other ascendants in the maternal life. Theodosius and Valentinian embraced in it whatever was given by one of the spouses to the other, and Justinian included in it everything acquired by the son, except such as was produced by property belonging to the father himself. It is thus seen that, by the legislation of Justinian and his predecessors, the paternal power with regard to property was almost entirely destroyed.

The pater-familias had not only under his paternal power his own children, but also the children of his sons and grandsons,—in fact, all his descendants in the male line; and this authority continued in full force and vigor, no matter what might be the age of those subject to it. The highest offices in the government did not release the incumbent from the paternal authority. The victorious general or consul to whom the honors of a triumph were decreed by the senate was subject to the paternal power in the same manner and to the same extent as the humblest citizen. It is to be observed, however, that the domestic subjection did not interfere with the capacity of exercising the highest public functions in the state. The children of the daughter were not subject to the paternal authority of her father,—they entered into the family of her husband. Women could never exercise the paternal power. And even when a woman was herself sui juris, she could not exercise the paternal power. It is for this reason, Ulpian observes, that the family of which a woman, sui juris, was the head, mater-familias, commenced and ended with her,—mulier autem familiae suae et caput et finis est. 1 Ortolan, 191 et seq.

The modern civil law has hardly preserved any features of the old Roman jurisprudence concerning the paternal power. Article 233 of the Louisiana Code provides, it is true, that a child, whatever be its age, owes honor and respect to its father and mother; and the next article adds that the child remains under the authority of the father and mother until his majority or emancipation, and that, in case of a difference of opinion between the parents, the authority of the father shall prevail. In the succeeding article, obedience is enjoined on the child to the orders of the parents as long as he remains subject to the paternal authority. But article 236 renders the foregoing rules in a great measure nugatory, by declaring that "a child under the age of puberty cannot quit the paternal house without the permission of his father and mother, who have a right to correct him, provided it be done in a reasonable manner." So that the power of correction ceases with the age of fourteen for boys and twelve for girls. Nay, at these ages the children may leave the paternal roof in opposition to the will of their parents. It is seen that, by the modern law, the paternal authority is vested in both parents, but practically it is generally exercised by the father alone, for, wherever there is a difference of opinion, his will prevails. The great object to be attained by the exercise of the paternal power is the education of the children to prepare them for the battle of life, to make them useful citizens and respectable members of society. During the marriage, the parents are entitled to the enjoyment of the property of their minor children, subject to the obligation of supporting and educating them, and of paying the taxes, making the necessary repairs, etc. Donations made to minors are accepted by their parents or other ascendants. The father has under his control all actions which it may be necessary to bring for his minor children during the marriage. When the marriage is dissolved by the death of one of the spouses, the paternal power ceases, and the tutorship is opened; but the surviving parent is the natural tutor, and can at his death appoint a testamentary tutor to his minor children. See "Pater-Familias."

PATRIA POTESTAS IN PIETATE DEBET, NON IN ATROCI TATE CONSISTERE. Paternal power should consist in affection, not in atrocity.

PATRICIDE. One guilty of killing his father. See "Parricide."

PATRICIUS. In Roman law. A nonhereditary title to nobility conferred by the emperor.

PATRIMONIAL. A thing which comes from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

PATRIMONIUM. In civil law. That which is capable of being inherited.

Things capable of being possessed by a single person exclusively of all others are, in the Roman or civil law, said to be in patrimonio; when incapable of being so possessed, they are extra patrimonium.

Most things may be inherited; but there are some which are said to be extra patrimonium, or which are not in commerce. These are such as are common, as the light of heaven, the air, the sea, and the like; things public, as rivers, harbors, roads, creeks, ports, arms of the sea, the seashore, highways, bridges, and the like; things which belong to cities and municipal corporations, as public squares, streets, market houses, and the like. See 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 421-446.

PATRIMONY. Any kind of property; such estate as has descended in the same family; estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

The father's duty to take care of his children. Swinb. Wills, pt. 3, § 18, note 31, p. 235.

PATRIMUS (Lat. from pater, father. In the civil law. One who had a father living. Calv. Lex.; Spelman.

PATRINUS (Law Lat. from pater, father). In old ecclesiastical law. A god-father. Spelman.

PATROCINIUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate. See "Patronus."

PATRON.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. He who has the disposition and gift of an ecclesiastical benefice.

—In Roman Law. The former master of a freedman. Dig. 2. 4. 8. 1.

PATRONAGE. The right of appointing to office; as, the patronage of the president of the United States, if abused, may endanger the liberties of the people.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. 2 Bl. Comm. 21.

PATRONATUS (Lat. from patronus, q. v.)

—In the Roman Law. The condition, relation, right, or duty of a patron.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. Patronage (q. v.)

PATRONUM FACIUNT DOS, AEDIFICATIO, fundus. Endowment, building, and land make a patron. Dod. Adv. 7.

PATRONUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A modification of the Latin word pater, father. A denomination applied by Romulus to the first senators of Rome, and which they always afterwards bore. Romulus at first appointed a hundred of them. Seven years afterwards, in consequence of the association of Tattius to the Romans, a hundred more were appointed, chosen from the Sabines. Tarquinius Priscus increased the number to three hundred. Those appointed by Romulus and Tattius were called patres majorum gentium, and the others were called patres minorum gentium. These and their descendants constituted the nobility of Rome. The rest of the people were called the "plebeians," every one of whom was obliged to choose one of these fathers as his patron. The relation thus constituted involved important consequences. The plebeian, who was called cliens (a client), was obliged to furnish the means of maintenance to his chosen patron, to furnish a portion for his patron's daughters, to ransom him and his sons, if captured by an enemy, and pay all sums recovered against him by judgment of the courts. The patron, on the other hand, was obliged to watch over the interests of his client, whether present or absent, to protect his person and property, and especially to defend him in all actions brought against him for any cause. Neither could accuse or bear testimony against the other, or give contrary votes, etc. The contract was of a sacred nature; the violation of it was a sort of treason, and punishable as such. According to Cicero (De Repub. ii. 9), this relation formed an integral part of the governmental system, Et habuit plebem in clientelas principum descriptum, which he affirms was eminently useful. Blackstone traces the system of vassalage to this ancient relation of patron and client. It was, in fact, of the same nature as the feudal institutions of the middle ages, designed to maintain order in a rising state by a combination of the opposing interests of the aristocracy and of the common people, upon the principle of reciprocal bonds for mutual interests. Dumazeau, Barreau Romain, § iii. Ultimately, by force of radical changes in the institution, the word patronus came to signify nothing more than an advocate. Id. iv.

PATROON. In old New York law. The lord of a manor.

PATRUELIS (Lat.) In civil law. A cousin german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 1.

PATRUUS (Lat.) In civil law. An uncle by the father's side; a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 10. Patruus magnus is a grandfather's brother,—grand uncle. Patruus major is a great-grandfather's brother. Patruus maximus is a great-grandfather's father's brother.

PAUPER. One so poor that he must be supported at the public expense.

A person who, being unable to support himself or herself and his or her children, applies to the public authorities for relief, becomes by so doing a pauper. 159 Ill. 500. 12 Metc. (Mass.) 35; Garland v. Dover, 19 Me. 44; Clinton v. York, 26 Me. 167; Green v. Brookfield, 3 Greenl. 136; East Haddam v. Lyme, 14 Cow. 394; Northfield v. Roxbury, 15 Vt. 622.

PAUPERIES (Lat.) In civil law. Poverty. In a technical sense, damnum absque injuria, i. e., a damage done without wrong on the part of the doer; e. g., damage done by an irrational being, as an animal. L. 1, § 3, D. si quod paup. fec.; Vicat; Calv. Lex.

PAVIAGE. A contribution or tax for paving streets or highways.

PAWN. A pledge. A pledge includes, in Louisiana, a pawn and an antichresis; but sometimes pawn is used as the general word, including pledge and antichresis. Civ. Code La. art. 3101; Hennen, Dig. "Pledge."

PAWNBROKER. One whose business it is to lend money, usually in small sums, upon pawn or pledge.

PAWNEE. He who receives a pawn or pledge.

PAWNOR. One who, being liable to an engagement, gives to the person to whom he is liable a thing to be held as a security for the payment of his debt or the fulfillment of his liability.

PAX (Lat.) In old English law. Peace; the peace. A state of order and quiet, in the preservation of which the whole community was concerned; otherwise called the "king's peace" (pax regis), he being the principal conservator of the peace of the kingdom. 1 Bl. Comm. 268, 349, 350. Quod pax nostra teneatur, that our peace be maintained. Magna Carta, 9 Hen. III. c. 35. The term occurs also in feudal law. Feud. Lib. 2, tits. 27, 53.

Freedom from molestation by another. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, §§ 2, 3.

The privilege of a member of a legislative assembly. See 1 Bl. Comm. 165.

PAX ECCLESIAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. The peace of the church. See "Peace of God and the Church."

A particular privilege attached to a church; sanctuary (q. v.) Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 41; Cowell.

PAX REGIS (Lat.) The peace of the king. That peace or security for life and goods which the king promises to all persons under his protection. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 11; 6 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 13.

In ancient times there were certain limits which were known by this name. The pax regis, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace gate to the distance of three miles, three furlongs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns (Crabb, Com. Law, 41); or from the four sides of the king's residence, four miles, three furlongs, nine acres in breadth, nine feet, nine barleycorns, etc. (LL. Edw. Conf. c. 12 et LL. Hen. I.)

PAYABLE. A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obligation to pay it. "Payable" may therefore signify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, "payable" means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to "owing." 2 Ch. Div. 103.

PAYEE. The person in whose favor a note or bill of exchange is made payable.

PAYMENT. The fulfillment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement.

The discharge in money of a sum due. In its most general sense, the rendition by the person under an obligation (68 Cal. 41) to the person to whom the same is due, or one lawfully authorized to represent him (6 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 161), of the exact act or thing required by such obligation (23 La. Ann. 84; 3 Duer [N. Y.] 441; 1 Cush. [Mass.] 76), with the assent of both parties that the same is rendered and received in satisfaction of such obligation, and not for another purpose (50 Mich. 112; 6 Helsk. [Tenn.] 131).

In a more restricted sense, payment is the rendition of a sum of money due. As so used, payment in cash is implied, and the giving of a note or check is not payment. 26 Conn. 487; 70 Iowa, 406; 42 N. Y. 538.

PAYMENT INTO COURT. Deposit of a sum of money with a proper officer of court for the benefit of the adverse party, and by way of a continuing tender thereof to him in answer to his claim.

PAYS. Country. Trial per pays, trial by jury (the country). See "Pais."

PEACE (Law Fr. peas, pees; Lat. pax). Quiet, orderly behavior; the quiet, orderly behavior of the citizens or subjects of a community towards one another, and towards the government, which is said to be broken by acts of a certain kind. See "Breach of Peace." Defined in the old books, "a quiet and harmless behavior toward the king and his people." Lambard, Eiren, lib. 1, c. 2; Cowell.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH. The freedom from suits at law between the terms. Spelman; Jacob.

PECCATA CONTRA NATURAM SUNT gravissima. Offenses against nature are the heaviest. 3 Inst. 20.

PECCATUM PECCATO ADDIT QUI CULPAE QUAM FACIT PATROCINUM DEFENSIONIS ADJUNGIT. He adds one offense to another who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defense. 5 Coke, 49.

PECK. A measure of capacity, equal to two gallons. See "Measure."

PECORA (Lat.; pl. of pecus). In the Roman law. Cattle; beasts. The term included all quadrupeds that fed in flocks. Dig. 32. 65. 4.

PECULATION.

—In Civil Law. The unlawful appropriation, by a depository of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use or that of others. Domat, Supp. au. Dr. Pub. lib. 3, tit. 5.

—In American Law. An offense defined by statute in New York, essentially the same as in the civil law.

PECULATUS. In the civil law. The offense of stealing or embezzling the public money. Hence the common English word "peculation;" but "embezzlement" is the proper legal term. 4 Bl. Comm. 121, 122.

PECULIAR. In ecclesiastical law. A parish or church in England which has jurisdiction of ecclesiastical matters within itself, and independent of the ordinary.

They may be either:

(1) Royal, which include the sovereign's free chapels.

(2) Of the archbishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishops and archdeacons.

(3) Of the bishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated.

(4) Of the bishops in their own diocese, excluding archidiaconal jurisdiction.

(5) Of deans, deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, excluding the bishop's jurisdiction in consequence of ancient compositions.

The court of peculiars has jurisdiction of causes arising in such of these peculiars as are subject to the metropolitan of Canterbury. In other peculiars the jurisdiction is exercised by commissaries. 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 202, note 245; Skin. 589; 3 Bl. Comm. 65.

PECULIUM (Lat.) In civil law. The most ancient kind of peculium was the peculium profectitium of the Roman law, which signified that portion of the property acquired by a son or slave which the father or master allowed him, to be managed as he saw fit. In modern civil law there are other kinds of peculium, viz., peculium castrense, which includes all movables given to a son by relatives and friends on his going on a campaign, all the presents of comrades, and his military pay and the things bought with it; peculium quasi castrense, which includes all acquired by a son by performing the duties of a public or spiritual office or of an advocate, and also gifts from the reigning prince; peculium adventitium, which includes the property of son's mother and relatives on that side of the house, and all which comes to him on a second marriage of his parents, and, in general, all his acquisitions which do not come from his father's property, and do not come under castrense or quasi castrense peculium.

The peculium profectitium remains the property of the father. The peculium castrense and quasi castrense are entirely the property of the son. The peculium adventitium belongs to the son, but he cannot alien it nor dispose of it by will; nor can the father, unless under peculiar circumstances, alien it without consent of son. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 557-559; Vicat; Inst. 2. 9. 1; Dig. 15. 1. 5. 3; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50, tit. 17, c. 2, art. 3.

PECULIUM CASTRENSE. That property which a minor son who was in the army might hold by reason thereof, or which he acquired in war.

PECUNIA (Lat.) In civil law. Property, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal. Things in general, omnes res. So the law of the Twelve Tables said, uti quisque paterfamilias legasset super pecunia tutelave rei suae, ita jus esto, in whatever manner a father of a family may have disposed of his property, or of the tutorship of his things, let this disposition be law. 1 Lec. Elm. 288. But Paulus (liber 5, D. de Verb. Signif.) gives it a narrower sense than res, which he says means what is not included within patrimony; pecunia what is. Vicat. In a still narrower sense, it means those things only which have measure, weight, and number and most usually strictly money. Id. The general sense of property occurs, also, in the old English law. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10.

Flocks were the first riches of the ancients; and it is from pecus that the words pecunia, peculium, and peculatus are derived. In old English law, pecunia often retains the force of pecus. So often in Domesday Book,—pastura ibidem pecunie villae, i. e., pasture for cattle of the village. So vivae pecunie, live stock. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10; Emendat. Willielmi Primi ad Leges Edw. Confess.; Cowell.

PECUNIA CONSTITUTA. In Roman law. Money owing (even upon a moral obligation) upon a day being fixed (constituta) for its payment became recoverable upon the implied promise to pay on that day, in an action called "de pecunia constituta," the implied promise not amounting (of course) to a stipulatio.

PECUNIA DICITUR A PECUS, OMNES enim veterum divitiarum in animalibus consistebant. Money (pecunia) is so called from cattle (pecus), because all the wealth of our ancestors consisted in cattle. Co. Litt. 207.

PECUNIA NONNUMERATA (Lat.) Money not paid or numbered. The exception nonnumeratae pecunie (plea of money not paid) is allowed to the principal or surety by the creditor. Calv. Lex.

PECUNIA NUMERATA (Lat.) Money given in payment of a debt. Properly used of the creditor, who is properly said to number, i. e., count out, the money to the debtor which he must pay, and improperly of the debtor, who is said to number or count out the money to the creditor, i. e., to pay it. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

PECUNIA SEPULCHRALIS. Money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of a grave for the good of the deceased's soul.

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA (Lat.) A loan of money which, either itself or in the shape of goods bought with it, is to be carried over the sea, the lender to take the risk from the commencement of voyage till arrival at port of destination, and on that account to have higher interest; which interest is not essential to the contract, but, if reserved, is called foenus nauticum. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 398b. The term foenus nauticum is sometimes applied to the transaction as well as the interest, making it coextensive with pecunia trajectitia.

PECUNIARY. That which relates to money.

PECUNIARY CAUSES. Causes in ecclesiastical courts where satisfaction is sought for withholding ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act connected with the church. 3 Bl. Comm. 88. For what causes are ecclesiastical, see 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 39.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. A bequest of money.

PECUNIARY LOSS. A loss of money, or of that by which money or something of money value may be acquired. 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 33.

PECUS (Lat.; pl. pecudes). In the Roman law. Cattle; a beast. Under a bequest of pecudes were included oxen and other beasts of burden. Dig. 32. 81. 2.

PEDAGIUM, or PEDAGE (Lat. from pes, foot). Money paid for passing by foot or horse through any forest or country. Pupilla Oculi, p. 9, c. 7; Cassan de Coutum. Burgund. p. 118; Rot. Vasc. 22 Edw. III. m. 34.

PEDANEUS (Lat. from pes, foot). In the Roman law. On, or at the foot; occupying a low position. A term applied to the judices appointed by the praetor to determine causes; either from their not occupying a tribunal or elevated seat, or because they were occupied with small or less important causes. See "Judex Pedaneus."

PEDAULUS (Lat. from pes, foot). In civil law. A judge who sat at the foot of the tribunal, i. e., on the lowest seats, ready to try matters of little moment at command of praetor. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PEDDLER. A word is commonly used to describe one who travels about retailing small wares. It carries the idea of pettiness as respects the character of the business transacted. The original root of the word is "ped," meaning "basket" in old English and descriptive of the receptacle in which a peddler carries his goods about for sale. 65 Conn. 292. See "Pedlars."

PEDE PULVEROSUS. In old English and Scotch law. Dusty foot. A term applied to itinerant merchants, chapmen, or peddlers who attended fairs. "Ane merchand or cremar quha hes ne certaine dwelling place quhair the dust may be dicht fra his feet or schone." Skene de Verb. Sign.

PEDEM PONERE. (L. Lat.) In civil and old English law. To put or place the foot. A figurative expression used to denote the taking possession of lands; which was done by standing upon or walking over them, or symbolically by merely placing the foot upon the ground. Britt. cc. 35, 36, 42, 43.

PEDIGREE. A succession of degrees from the origin. It is the state of the family as far as regards the relationship of the different members, their births, marriages, and deaths. This term is applied to persons or families who trace their origin or descent.

PEDIS ABSCISSIO (Lat.) In old criminal law. The cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38.

PEDIS POSITIO (Lat. a planting or placing of the foot). A term used to denote an actual corporal possession. Possessio est quasi pedis positio, possession is, as it were, a planting of the foot. 3 Coke, 42; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) per Kent, C. J.; 5 Pa. St. 303; 2 Nev. & M. 343. See "Pedis Possessio."

PEDIS POSSESSIO (Lat.) A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession, there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2193; 2 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 343.

PEDLARS. Persons who travel about the country with merchandise for the purpose of selling it.

One is a pedlar who carries his goods about the country for sale by public conveyance. 4 Barn. & A. 510.

One who solicits orders by sample for one who ships the same from an established place of business is not a pedlar. 34 Kan. 434.

Persons, except those peddling newspapers, Bibles, or religious tracts, who sell, or offer to sell, at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, traveling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country. Act Cong. July 1, 1862. See "Peddler."

PEERS (Lat. pares). The vassals of a lord; the freeholders of a neighborhood, before whom livery of seisin was to be made, and before whom, as the jury of the county, trials were had. 2 Bl. Comm. 316. Trial by a man's peers or equals is one of the rights reserved by Magna Charta. 4 Bl. Comm. 349. These vassals were called pares curiae (q. v.) 1 Washb. Real Prop. 23. One's equals in rank and condition.

The nobility of England, who, though of different ranks, viz., dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, yet are equal in their privilege of sitting and voting in the house of lords; hence they are called "peers of the realm." They are created by writ summoning them to attend the house of lords by the title intended to be given, or by letters patent directly conferring the dignity. The former is the more ancient way, but the grant by patent is more certain. See Sullivan, Lect. 19a; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 37.

Peers are tried by their peers in cases of treason, felony, and misprision of the same. In cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, they have no privilege from arrest. 1 Bl. Comm. 401*, note 11.

Bishops who sit in parliament are peers; but the word "spiritual" is generally added: e. g., "lords temporal and spiritual." 1 Bl. Comm. 401*, note 12.

PEERS OF FEES. Vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function. These were termed "peers of fees," because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but, if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers. Cowell.

PEGGED. See "Gambling Contract."

PEINE FORTE ET DURE (Law Fr.) In English law. A punishment formerly inflicted in England on a person who, being arraigned of felony, refused to plead and put himself on his trial, and stubbornly stood mute; the purpose of standing mute being, of course, to avoid the confiscation of estate which would follow on conviction. He was to be laid down, naked, on his back, on the ground, his feet, head, and loins covered, his arms and legs drawn apart by cords, and as much weight of iron or stone as he could bear placed on his chest. He was to have the next day three morsels of barley bread, without drink; the next, three draughts, as much each time as he could drink, of the nearest stagnant water to the prison, without bread; and such was to be his diet on alternate days till he died. It was vulgarly called "pressing to death." 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 134; 4 Bl. Comm. 324; Cowell; Britt. c. 4, fol. 11*. This punishment was introduced between 31 Edw. III. and 8 Hen. IV. 4 Bl. Comm. 324; Y. B. 8 Hen. IV. 1. Standing mute was now, by statute, in England, equivalent to a confession or a verdict of guilty 12 Geo. III. c. 20. Subsequently it was provided that where the accused stood mute, the court might record a plea of "Not guilty," and such plea would have the same effect as if it had been made by the accused. 7 and 8 Geo. IV, c. 28, s. 2. See "Standing Mute."

The only instance in which this punishment has ever been inflicted in this country is that of Giles Cory, of Salem, who refused to plead when arraigned for witchcraft. Washb. Jud. Hist. 142; 1 Chand. Am. Crim. Tr. 122.

PELLEX (Lat.) In the Roman law. A concubine. Dig. 50. 16. 144.

PELLS, CLERK OF THE. An officer in the English exchequer, who entered every seller's bill on the parchment rolls, the roll of receipts, and the roll of disbursements.

PENAL (from Lat. poenalis, from poena, punishment or penalty). Enacting punishment. Webster. Imposing a punishment or penalty. See "Penal Statutes."

Connected with a penalty, either as the object or consequence of an action.

PENAL ACTION. An action for recovery of statute penalty; "penalty" in this case being used in its narrowest sense of a pecuniary punishment for a noncriminal act. 3 Steph. Comm. 535. See Hawk. P. C. "Informatio." It is distinguished from a popular or qui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king. 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 25, note; 2 Archb. Prac. 188.

PENAL BILL. The old name for a bond with condition, by which a person is bound to pay a certain sum of money or do a certain act, or, in default thereof, pay a certain sum of money by way of penalty. Jacob, "Bill."

PENAL LAWS. Laws imposing a penalty; the term being used, like "penalty," in several senses.

PENAL STATUTES. Those which inflict a penalty for the violation of some of their provisions.

PENAL SUM. A sum payable as a penalty. Usually applied to the sum fixed by a bond to be paid on breach of its condition.

PENALTY. The punishment inflicted by law for an illegal act. The term is used loosely to embrace all the consequences visited by law on those who violate police regulations. 26 Mich. 482.

In a narrower sense it is confined to pecuniary penalties. "The terms fine, forfeiture and penalty are often used loosely and even confusedly. But when a discrimination is made, the word 'penalty' is found to be generic in its character, including both fine and forfeiture." 4 Iowa, 300.

In its narrowest sense, it includes only pecuniary punishment imposed by statute for such unlawful acts as do not constitute crimes or which are for this purpose regarded in other than their criminal aspect.

—In Contracts. A clause in an agreement, by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money if he shall fail to fulfill the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement.

A penal obligation differs from an alternative obligation, for this is but one in its essence; while a penalty always includes two distinct engagements, and when the first is fulfilled the second is void.

When a breach has taken place, the obligor has his option to require the fulfillment of the first obligation, or the payment of the penalty, in those cases which cannot be relieved in equity, when the penalty is considered as liquidated damages.

PENANCE. In ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense. Ayliffe, Par. 420.

PENDENCY. The state of being pending or undecided.

PENDENS (Lat. from pendere, to hang). Hanging; pending. See "Lis Pendens."

PENDENTE LITE (Lat.) Pending the continuance of an action while litigation continues. See "Lis Pendens."

PENDENTE LITE NIHIL INNOVETUR. During a litigation, nothing should be changed. Co. Litt. 344. See 20 How. (U. S.) 106; Cross, Liens, 140; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 406; 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 33.

PENDENTES (Lat.) In civil law. The fruits of the earth not yet separated from the ground; the fruits hanging by the roots. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, lib. 2, § 4.

PENDING. As applied to judicial proceedings, remaining undecided (4 N. H. 386), and an action has been held to be pending till the judgment is satisfied (41 N. Y. 159).

PENETRATION. In criminal law. In rape and some other sexual crimes, actual carnal knowledge is requisite, but the slightest penetration is sufficient (102 N. Y. 234), it being enough if any part of the virile member be within the labia of the pudendum (1 Car. & K. 393). Rupture of the hymeneal membrane is not requisite, though, in the absence of such rupture, proof of penetration should be clear. 8 Car. & P. 641.

PENITENTIARY. A prison in which persons convicted of serious offenses (felonies), or sentenced for long terms of imprisonment, are confined.

PENNYWEIGHT. A troy weight which weighs twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

PENSA (Law Lat. from Lat. pendere, to weigh).

—In Old English Law. A weight. Ad pensam, by weight. The ancient way of paying into the exchequer as much money for a pound of sterling as weighed twelve ounces troy. Lowndes' Essay upon Coin, 4; Cowell. This was distinguished from payment de numero, by count.

—In Old Records. A wey (weigh) of salt or cheese, containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds. Cowell.

PENSIO (Lat. from pendere).

—In the Civil Law. A payment, properly, for the use of a thing. Calv. Lex.

A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house. Calv. Lex.

PENSION. A stated and certain allowance granted by the government to an individual, or those who represent him, for valuable services performed by him for the country. It is sometimes loosely used in the sense of "annuity."

—In Spanish Law. Rent; a rent, White, New Recop. bk. 2, c. 2, § 3.

PENSIONER. One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another. It is more usually applied to him who receives an annuity or pension from the government.

PEONAGE. The holding of any person to service or labor against his will. Prohibited by U. S. Rev. St. § 1990.

PEONIA. In Spanish law. A portion of land which was formerly given to a simple soldier on the conquest of a country. It is now a quantity of land of different size in different provinces. In the Spanish possessions in America, it measured fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep. 2 White, Coll. 49; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 444, notes.

PEOPLE. A state; as, the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. 4 Term R. 783. See 6 Pet. (U. S.) 467.

The word "people" occurs in a policy of marine insurance. The insurer insures against "detainments of all kings, princes, and people." He is not by this understood to insure against any promiscuous or lawless rabble which may be guilty of attacking or detaining a ship. 2 Marsh. Ins. 508. See "Body Politic;" "Nation."

PEPPERCORN. A dried pepper berry. In England, the payment of a peppercorn is sometimes stipulated where a nominal consideration is intended.

PER. In Latin phrases. A preposition meaning by or through.

PER AES ET LIBRAM (Lat. aes, brass, libram, scale). In civil law. A sale was said to be made per aes et libram when one called libripens held a scale (libra), which the one buying struck with a brazen coin (aes), and said, "I say, by the right of a Roman, this thing is mine," and gave the coin to the vendor, in presence of at least three witnesses. This kind of sale was used in the emancipation of a son or slave and in making a will. Calv. Lex. "Mancipatio;" Vicat, "Mancipatio."

PER ALLUVIONEM (Lat.) In civil law. By alluvion, or the gradual and imperceptible increase arising from deposit by water. Vocab. Jur. Utr. "Alluvio;" Angell & A. Watercourses, 53-57.

PER ALLUVIONEM ID VIDETUR ADJICI, quod ita paulatim adjicitur, ut intelligere non possumus quantum quoque momento temporis adjiciatur. That is said to be added by alluvion which is so added little by little that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 1; Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 4; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 6.

PER AND CUI. When a writ of entry is brought against a second alienee or descendant from the disseisor, it is said to be in the per and cui, because the form of the writ is that the tenant had not entry but by and under a prior alienee, to whom the intruder himself demised it. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

PER AND POST. To come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate; as the heirs or assigns of the grantee. To come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title; as the lord by escheat.

PER ANNULUM ET BACULUM (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. The symbolical investiture of an ecclesiastical dignity was per annulum et baculum, i. e., by staff and crossier. 1 Bl. Comm. 378, 379; 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 209.

PER ANNUM (Lat.) By the year; for the space of a year. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, §§ 3-12. A common expression still in use.

PER AUTRE VIE (Law Fr.) For or during another's life.

PER AVERSIONEM (Lat.) In civil law. By turning away. Applied to a sale not by measure or weight, but for a single price for the whole in gross; e. g., a sale of all the wine of a vineyard for a certain price. Vocab. Jur. Utr. "Aversio." Some derive the meaning of the phrase from a turning away of the risk of a deficiency in the quantity from the seller to the buyer; others, from turning away the head, i. e., failure to make a particular examination; others think aversio is for adversio. Calv. Lex.; 2 Kent, Comm. 640; 4 Kent, Comm. 517.

PER BOUCHE (L. Fr.) By the mouth; orally. 3 How. St. Trials, 1024.

PER CAPITA (Lat. by the head or polls). When descendants take as individuals, and not by right of representation (per stirpes), they are said to take per capita. For example, if a legacy be given to the issue of A. B. and A. B., at the time of his death, shall have two children and two grandchildren, his estate shall be divided into four parts, and the children and grandchildren shall each have one of them. 3 Ves. 257; 13 Ves. 344; 2 Bl. Comm. 218; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 162; 2 Jarm. Wills (Perkins' Notes) 47; 3 Beav. Rolls, 451; 4 Beav. Rolls, 239; 2 Steph. Comm. 253; 3 Steph. Comm. 197; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114. See "Capitation."

PER CONSEQUENS. By consequence; consequently. Y. B. M. 9 Edw. III. 8.

PER CONSIDERATIONEM CURIAE. In old practice. By the consideration (judgment) of the court. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 2.

PER CURIAM (Lat. by the court). A phrase which occurs in all the reports. It is sometimes translated. See 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 353.

PER EUNDEM. By the same. This phrase is commonly used to express "by, or from the mouth of, the same judge." So "per eundem in eadem" means "by the same judge in the same case."

PER EXTENSUM. In old practice. At length.

PER FORMAM DONI (Lat. by the form of the gift.) According to the line of descent prescribed in the conveyance of the ancestor or donor of estate tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 113*; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 323; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 74, 81.

PER FRAUDEM (Lat.) A replication to a plea where something has been pleaded which would be a discharge if it had been honestly pleaded that such a thing has been obtained by fraud; for example, where, on debt on a statute, the defendant pleads a prior action depending, if such action has been commenced by fraud, the plaintiff may reply per fraudem. 2 Chit. Pl. *675.

PER INCURIAM. Through inadvertence. 35 Eng. Law & Eq. 302.

PER INFORTUNIUM (Lat. by misadventure). In criminal law. Homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure, is said to take place when a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent to hurt, unfortunately kills another. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 11; Fost. Crim. Law, 258, 259; 3 Inst. 56.

PER LEGEM ANGLIAE. By the law of England; by the curtesy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 18.

PER LEGEM TERRAE (Lat.) By the law of the land; by indictment or presentment of good and lawful men. 7 Ill. 519.

PER METAS ET BUNDAS (Law Lat.) old English law. By metes and bounds.

PER MINAS (Lat. by threats). When a man is compelled to enter into a contract by threats or menaces, either for fear of loss of life or mayhem, he may avoid it afterwards. 1 Bl. Comm. 181; Bac. Abr. "Duress," "Murder" (A). See "Duress."

PER MISADVENTURE (Lat. and Eng.) In old English law. By mischance. 4 Bl. Comm. 182. The same with per infortunium (q. v.)

PER MY ET PER TOUT (Law Fr. by the moiety, or half, and by the whole). The mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 406; 2 Bl. Comm. 182.

—In partnerships. Each partner has a joint interest in the whole but not a separate interest in any particular part of the partnership property; and being so possessed, and because the title of partners is undivided, it follows that all have a moiety or the same species of interest in the stock in trade, whether each individual partner contributes exactly in the same proportion or not. But their several degrees of interest must be regulated according to the stipulated proportions and the different conditions of the partnership. 213 Ill. 480; 80 Ill. 300.

PER PROCURATION. By proxy; by letter of attorney. Used in connection with the signature of an agent or attorney in fact. It is notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign. Byles, Bills, 38. Commonly abbreviated "per proc."

The term is little used in the United States, though it has been adopted by the negotiable instrument laws. Neg. Inst. Law, § 40.

PER QUAE SERVITIA. A real action by which the grantee of a seigniorship could compel the tenants of the grantor to attorn to himself. Shep. Touch. 254. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 35.

PER QUOD. By which. Used in common-law pleading to introduce a conclusion. Sometimes used as the name of the clause averring special damages.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her company). If a man's wife is so injured that thereby he loses her company and assistance for any time, he has a separate remedy by an action of trespass (in the nature of an action on the case) per quod consortium amisit, in which he shall recover satisfaction in damages. 3 Bl. Comm. 140; Cro. Jac. 501, 538; 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 59.

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her or his service). Where a servant has been so beaten or injured that his or her services are lost to the master, the master has an action of trespass vi et armis, per quod servitium amisit, in which he must allege and prove the special damage he has sustained. 3 Bl. Comm. 142. This action is commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant is necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, must be shown. 5 East, 45; 6 East, 391; 11 East, 23; T. Raym. 459; 3 Wils. 18; 2 Term R. 4; 5 Bos. & P. 466;

PER RATIONES PERVENITUR AD LEGITIMAM RATIONEM. By reasoning we come to legal reason. Litt. § 386.

PER RERUM NATURAM, FACTUM NEGANTIS NULLA PROBATIO EST. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

PER SALTUM (Lat.) By a leap or bound; by a sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings. "The parties have proceeded per saltum." Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 511.

PER SE. By itself; of itself. Fraud per se. 3 Pick. (Mass.) 257.

PER SERVITIUM. (L. Lat.) By the service.

PER STIRPES (Lat. stirps, trunk or root of a tree or race). By or according to stocks or roots; by right of representation. Gen. St. Mass. 1860; c. 9, § 12; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 162; 2 Bl. Comm. 217, 218; 2 Steph. Comm. 253; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114, 115; 2 Kent, Comm. 425.

PER TOTAM CURIAM. By the whole court.

PER TOUT ET NON PER MY (Law Fr.) By the whole, and not by the moiety. 2 Bl. Comm. 182. See "Per My et per Tout."

PER UNIVERSITATEM (Lat. by the whole). Used of the acquisition of any property as a whole, in opposition to an acquisition by parts; e. g., the acquisition of an inheritance, or of the separate property of the son (peculium), etc. Calv. Lex. "Universitas."

PER VADIUM ET SALVOS PLEGIOS. In old practice. By gage and safe pledge. Words in the old writ of attachment or pone commanding the sheriff to summon the defendant by gage (taking of his goods) and safe pledges (requiring sureties) for appearance. 3 Bl. Comm. 280.

PER VARIOS ACTUS, LEGEM EXPERIENTIA FACIT. By various acts experience frames the law. 4 Inst. 50.

PER VERBA DE FUTURO. By words of the future (tense). 1 Bl. Comm. 439; 2 Kent, Comm. 87.

PER VERBA DE PRAESENTI. By words of the present (tense). 1 Bl. Comm. 439.

PER VISUM ECCLESIAE. In old English law. By view of the church; under the supervision of the church. The disposition of intestates' goods per visum ecclesiae was one of the articles confirmed to the prelates by King John's Magna Charta. 3 Bl. Comm. 96.

PER VIVAM VOCEM (Law Lat.) In old English law. By the living voice; the same with viva voce. Bracton, fol. 95.

PERAMBULATION. The act of walking over and about the boundaries of a district manor, parish, or piece of land with or without witnesses, either for the purpose of determining them, or of preserving evidence of them, and to see that no encroachments have been made, or that landmarks have not been removed. Thus, in many parishes in England, it is the custom for the parishioners to perambulate the boundaries of the parish in rogation week in every year. Such a custom entitles them to enter any man's land and abate nuisances in their way. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1867; Hunt, Boundaries, 103; Britt. 124b; 57 N. Hamp. 392.

PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT de. In English law. The name of a writ which is sued by consent of both parties when they are in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates. It is directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 309.

"The writ de perambulatione facienda is not known to have been adopted in practice in the United States," says Professor Greenleaf (Greenl. Ev. § 146, note), "but in several of the states, remedies somewhat similar in principle have been provided by statutes."

PERCENNARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A parcener; one of several commoners. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 24, § 11.

PERCEPTION (from per and capere). The taking possession of. For example, a lessee or tenant before perception of the crops, i. e., before harvesting them, has a right to offset any loss which may happen to them against the rent; but after the perception they are entirely at his risk. Mackeld Civ. Law, § 378. Used of money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Also used for food due to soldiers. Vicat.

PERCEPTURA (Law Lat.) In old records. A weir; a place in a river made up with banks, dams, etc., for the better convenience of preserving and taking fish. Par. Ant. 120; Cowell.

PERCH. The length of sixteen feet and a half; a pole or rod of that length. Forty perches in length and four in breadth make an acre of land.

PERCOLATING WATERS. Flowing, seeping, or moving subterranean waters.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIAE (Lat.) In English law. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of the king's courts, is outlawed, and afterwards, of his own accord, surrenders.

PERDUELLIO (Lat.) In civil law. At first, an honorable enmity to the republic; afterwards, a traitorous enmity of a citizen; consisting in being of a hostile disposition towards the republic, e. g., treason aiming at the supreme power, violating the privileges of a Roman citizen by beating him, etc., attempting anything against the person of the emperor, and, in general, any open hostility to the republic. Sometimes used for the enemy or traitor himself. Perduellio was distinguished from crimen imminutae majestatis, as being an attempt against the whole republic, punishable in comitia centuriata, by crucifixion and by infamy after death. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PERDURABLE (old Fr. perdurable, eternal, from Lat. per, intensive, and durabilis, lasting). As applied to an estate, perdurable signifies lasting long or forever. Thus, a disseisor or tenant in fee upon condition has as high and great an estate as the rightful owner or tenant in fee simple absolute, but not so perdurable. The term is chiefly used with reference to the extinguishment of rights by unity of seisin, which does not take place unless both the right and the land out of which it issues are held for equally high and perdurable estates. Co. Litt. 313a, 313b; Gale, Easem. 582.

PEREGRINI (Lat.) In civil law. Under the denomination of peregrini were comprehended all who did not enjoy any capacity of the law, namely, slaves, alien enemies, and such foreigners as belonged to nations with which the Romans had not established relations. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 66.

PEREMPTORIUS (Lat. from perimere, to destroy). In civil law. That which takes away or destroys forever; hence, exceptio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar. See "Peremptory." Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 3; Calv. Lex.

PEREMPTORY. Absolute; positive. A final determination to act without hope of renewing or altering. Joined to a substantive, this word is frequently used in law; as, peremptory action (Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 35, 38, 104, 108); peremptory nonsuit (Id. 5, 11); peremptory exception (Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20); peremptory undertaking (3 Chit. Prac. 112, 793); peremptory challenge of jurors (Inst. 4. 13. 9; Code, 7. 50. 2; Id. 8. 36. 8; Dig. 5. 1. 70. 73).

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE. A challenge without cause given, allowed to prisoner's counsel in criminal cases, up to a certain number of jurors. 11 Chit. Stat. 59, 689; 2 Harg. St. Tr. 808; 4 Harg. St. Tr. 1; Fost. Crim. Law, 42; 4 Bl. Comm. 353*. See "Challenge."

PEREMPTORY DEFENSE. A defense which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4206.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION. Any defense which denies entirely the ground of action. 1 White, New Recop. 283. So of a demurrer. 1 Tex. 364.

PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTION. A binding instruction by the court to the jury. Usually the direction of a verdict.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. A mandamus requiring a thing to be done absolutely. It is usually granted after failure to show satisfactory cause on an alternative mandamus. No other return will be permitted but absolute obedience. 3 Bl. Comm. 110*; Tapping, Mand. 400 et seq. See "Mandamus."

PEREMPTORY NONSUIT. An involuntary nonsuit. See "Nonsuit."

PEREMPTORY PAPER. A list of the causes which were enlarged at the request of the parties, or which stood over from press of business in court to a day which was specified in the paper, and which day was peremptory.

PEREMPTORY PLEA. A plea which goes to destroy the right of action itself; a plea in bar or to the action. 3 Steph. Comm. 576; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 57; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 645; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2391.

PEREMPTORY RULE. An absolute rule, as distinguished from a rule nisi.

PEREMPTORY WRIT. An original writ, called from the words of the writ a "si te fecerit securum," and which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. The writ was rarely used, and where nothing was specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; as in the case of writs of trespass on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing was sued for, but only damages to be assessed by a jury. Brown.

PERFECT. Complete.

This term is applied to rights and obligations in order to distinguish those which may be enforced by law, which are called "perfect," from those which cannot be so enforced, which are said to be "imperfect." 37 Ga. 128.

PERFECT ABSTRACT. An abstract is said to be perfect where it shows a complete title, 2 Hare. 111, that is, when it shows that a vendor is either himself competent to convey, or can otherwise procure to be vested in him, the legal and equitable estates free from encumbrance. 8 Ves. 436;

Dart. Vend. & P. 303; 2 Exch. 783. See "Mercantile Title"; "Perfect Title."

PERFECT OBLIGATION. One which is enforceable by law.

PERFECT TITLE. A title which is good both at law and in equity. 21 Conn. 449. See "Merchantable Title."

PERFECT TRUST. An executed trust (q. v.).

PERFECTING BAIL. Justification of bail. See "Justifying Bail."

PERFECTUM EST CUI NIHIL DEEST secundum suae perfectionis vel naturae modum. That is perfect which wants nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

PERFIDY. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Wolff. § 390.

PERFORMANCE. Such a fulfillment of an obligation as puts an end thereto by leaving nothing more to be done.

PERICULOSUM EST RES NOVAS ET INUSITATAS INDUCERE. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things. Co. Litt. 379.

PERICULOSUM EXISTIMO QUOD BONORUM VIVORUM NON COMPROBATUR EXEMPLE. I think that dangerous which is not warranted by the example of good men. 9 Coke, 97.

PERICULOSUS (Lat.) Dangerous.

PERICULUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Peril; danger; hazard; risk.

PERICULUM REI VENDITIAE, NONDUM TRADITAE, EST EMPTORIS. The purchaser runs the risk of the loss of a thing sold, though not delivered. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 939; 2 Kent, Comm. 498, 499; 4 Barn. & C. 481, 941.

PERIL. Danger; the accident by which a thing is lost. Lec. Elm. § 911.

—In insurance. The risk, contingency, or cause of loss insured against in a policy of insurance.

PERILS OF THE RIVER. A term used in respect to river navigation in the United States, and having the same significance as "perils of the sea." 8 Ala. 176.

PERILS OF THE SEA. One of the perils insured against in marine insurance, and from which bills of lading usually exempt the carrier. It signifies "all marine casualties resulting from the violent action of the elements, as distinguished from their natural silent influence on the fabric of the vessel; casualties which may, and not consequences which must, occur." L. R. 9 Q. B. 596.

Loss by foundering (3 Wheat. [U. S.] 168), or stranding (57 Me. 170), injury to the vessel by ice (15 Wall. [U. S.] 202), or to cargo from water shipped in a storm (16 Me. 207), or loss of property overboard (16 Mo. 98), or loss of property are perils of the sea. But damages by rats. (1 Wils. 281) or worms (2 Mass. 429), or the breakage of packages, are not.

PERINDE VALERE (Law Lat. to be equally valid). In English ecclesiastical law. The name of a writ of dispensation granted to a clerk who, being defective in his capacity to a benefice or other ecclesiastical function, was, de facto, admitted to it. So called from the emphatic words of the Latin form, the faculty being declared to be equally effectual to the party dispensed with as if he had been actually capable of the thing for which he was dispensed with, at the time of his admission. St. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21; Cowell.

PERIOD. A space of time; any portion of complete time.

"The word 'period' has its etymological meaning, but it also has a distinctive signification, according to the subject with which it may be used in connection. It may mean any portion of complete time, from a thousand years or less to the period of a day; and when used to designate an act to be done or to be begun, though its completion may take an uncertain time, as for instance the act of exportation, it must mean the day on which the exportation commences, or it would be an unmeaning and useless word in its connection in the statute." Wayne, J., 20 How. (U. S.) 579.

PERIPHRAISIS. Circumlocution; the use of other words to express the sense of one.

Some words are so technical in their meaning that, in charging offenses in indictments, they must be used, or the indictment will not be sustained. For example, an indictment for treason must contain the word "traitorously;" an indictment for burglary, "burglariously;" and "feloniously" must be introduced into every indictment for felony. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 242, 3 Inst. 15; Carth. 319; 2 Hale, P. C. 172, 184; 4 Bl. Comm. 307; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 55; 1 East, P. C. 115; Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Cro. Car. c. 37.

PERISHABLE GOODS. Goods which are lessened in value and become worse by being kept.

PERISHABLE PROPERTY. Perishable property in its most enlarged sense, would mean all personal, as distinguished from real property; whilst in its most restricted sense, it would only mean such personal property as had in itself the elements of destruction or decomposition, as for instance, fruits, or such productions from the labor and skill of man as are ephemeral in their existence, or evanescent and changeable in their value. 23 Ala. 768.

PERJURI SUNT QUI SERVITIS VERBIS Juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. They are perjured who, preserving the words of an oath, deceived the ears of those who receive it. 3 Inst. 166.

PERJURY. Perjury at common law is the willful and corrupt taking of a false oath in a judicial proceeding in regard to a matter material to the issues. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 1; 4 Bl. Comm. 153. It is extended by statute in most jurisdictions to false swearing in certain proceedings not judicial. To constitute the offense, (1) the testimony must be false, or believed to be false, or the witness must not know whether it be true or false (42 Vt. 152; 17 N. H. 373); (2) the taking of the false oath must be both willful and corrupt; (3) the matter sworn to must be material to the issue or question in controversy (12 Mass. 273; 54 Vt. 146); (4) some form of oath or its equivalent must have been duly administered by an authorized officer (86 N. Y. 154; 107 U. S. 671; 76 N. Y. 220); (5) the oath itself, as well as the facts sworn to, must have been material (45 Mich. 543; 17 Ohio, 365); (6) to constitute perjury in a judicial proceeding, the court or tribunal must have jurisdiction (49 Me. 412; 8 Pick. [Mass.] 453; 96 Ky. 407).

PERMANENT ALIMONY. Permanent alimony is a provision for the support and maintenance of a wife out of her husband's estate during her lifetime, ordered by a court on decreeing a divorce. 188 Mich. 195.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT. Permanent improvements are not necessarily everlasting in character, but are such as rest upon, or are attached to, the soil, are reasonably enduring and not intended for removal at the end of a limited term. 153 Iowa, 397.

PERMANENT TRESPASS. A trespass consisting of trespasses of one and the same kind, committed on several days, which are in their nature capable of renewal or continuation, and are actually renewed or continued from day to day, so that the particular injury done on each particular day cannot be distinguished from what was done on another day. In declaring for such trespasses, they may be laid with a continuando. 3 Bl. Comm. 212; Bac. Abr. "Trespass" (B 2, I 2); 1 Saund. 24, note 1. See "Continuando;" "Trespass."

PERMISSION. Leave or license to do any act. It ordinarily implies consent actually given (105 Ill. 558), but has been held to mean "allow," by not prohibiting (9 Allen [Mass.] 266).

PERMISSIVE. Allowed; that which may be done; as, permissive waste, which is the permitting real estate to go to waste. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2400. See "Waste."

PERMISSIVE USE. A passive use which was resorted to before the statute of uses, in order to avoid a harsh law; as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture. It was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy; as a conveyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate.

PERMISSIVE WASTE. Waste suffered by omission of care, not by actual depredation; the mere neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury, as, to suffer a house to go to decay for want of repairs; and voluntary waste consists in the commission of destructive acts, as, pulling down a house, or plowing up a flower garden. 57 Ill. App. 663. See Waste.

PERMIT. A license or warrant to do something not forbidden by law; as, to land goods imported into the United States, after the duties have been paid or secured to be paid. Act Cong. March 2, 1799, § 49, cl. 2. See form of such a permit. Gordon, Dig. Append. II. 46.

PERMUTATIO (Lat. from permutare, to exchange). In the civil law. Exchange; barter. Dig. 19. 4; Code, 4. 64.

PERMUTATION. In civil law. Exchange; barter.

This contract is formed by the consent of the parties; but delivery is indispensable, for without it, it is a mere agreement. Dig. 31. 77. 4; Code, 4. 64. 3.

Permutation differs from sale in this, that in the former a delivery of the articles sold must be made, while in the latter it is unnecessary. It agrees with the contract of sale, however, in the following particulars: That he to whom the delivery is made acquires the right or faculty of prescribing (Dig. 41. 3. 4. 17); that the contracting parties are bound to guaranty to each other the title of the things delivered (Code, 4. 64. 1); and that they are bound to take back the things delivered when they have latent defects which they have concealed (Dig. 21. 1. 63).

PERMUTIONE. A writ commanding an ordinary to admit a clerk on exchange of benefices.

PERNANCY (from Fr. prendre, to take). A taking or receiving.

PERNOR (from Law Fr. parnour, or pernour, q. v.) A taker. Pernor of profits is the taker or receiver of the profits of an estate. Cowell.

PERNOR OF PROFITS. He who receives the profits of lands, etc. A cestui que use, who is legally entitled and actually does receive the profits, is the pernor of profits.

PERNOUR (Law Fr.) A taker. Le pernour ou le detenour, the taker or the detainer. Britt. c. 27.

PERPETUA LEX EST, NULLAM LEGEM humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bac. Max. reg. 19; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 27.

PERPETUAL. That which is to last without limitation as to time; as, a perpetual statute, which is one without limit as to time, although not expressed to be so.

PERPETUAL CURACY. The office of a curate, in a parish where there is no spiritual rector or vicar, but where the curate is appointed to officiate for the time by the impropriator. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55.

The church of which the curate is perpetual. 2 Ves. Sr. 425, 429. See 2 Steph. Comm. 76; 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55; 9 Adol. & E. 556. As to whether such curate may be removed, see 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55.

PERPETUAL INJUNCTION. Opposed to an injunction ad interim; an injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time.

PERPETUAL LEASE. A lease without limitation as to term; a grant in fee, subject to a reserved rent.

PERPETUAL STATUTE. One not subject to repeal or expiration at any future time.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY. The act by which testimony is reduced to writing as prescribed by law, so that the same shall be read in evidence in some suit or legal proceedings to be thereafter instituted.

The origin of this practice may be traced to the canon law (chapter 5, X ut lite non contestata, etc.) Bockmer, note 4; 8 Toul-lier, Dr. Civ. note 22. Statutes exist in most of the states for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for the same purpose.

PERPETUITY. Any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation. Rand. Perp. 48. Such a limitation of property as renders it unalienable beyond the period allowed by law. Gilb. Uses (Sugd. Ed.) 260, note.

An interest subject to a condition precedent, which condition is not to be fulfilled within twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest. Gray, Perp. § 216.

Mr. Justice Powell, in 12 Mod. 278, distinguished perpetuities into two sorts,—absolute and qualified; meaning thereby, as it is apprehended, a distinction between a plain, direct, and palpable perpetuity, and the case where an estate is limited on a contingency, which might happen within a reasonable compass of time, but where the estate nevertheless, from the nature of the limitation, might be kept out of commerce longer than was thought agreeable to the policy of the common law. But this distinction would not now lead to a better understanding or explanation of the subject; for whether an estate be so limited that it cannot take effect until a period too much protracted, or whether on a contingency which may happen within a moderate compass of time, it equally falls within the line of perpetuity, and the limitation is therefore void; for it is not sufficient that an estate may vest within the time allowed, but the rule requires that it must. Rand. Perp. 49. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 23; 1 Belt, Supp. Ves. 406; 2 Ves. Jr. 357; 3 Saund. 388; Comyn Dig. "Chancery" (4 G 1); 3 Chanc. Cas. 1; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1890.

PERPETUITY OF THE KING. That fiction of the English law which, for certain political purposes, ascribes to the king in his political capacity the attribute of immortality; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, i. e., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes immediately on his death.

PERQUIRERE (Law Lat. from per, through, and quaerere, to obtain). In feudal law. To gain or acquire; to acquire by one's own act; to purchase. Breve perquirere, to purchase a writ. Cowell.

PERQUISITES. In its most extensive sense, perquisites signifies anything gotten by industry or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 30, note 3; Id. lib. 4, c. 22. In a more limited sense, it means something gained by a place or office beyond the regular salary or fee. 201 Mich. 468.

PERQUISITIO. Purchase. 2 Bl. Comm. 241. Acquisition by one's own act or agreement, and not by descent. Id. See "Purchase."

PERQUISITOR. A purchaser; one who first acquired an estate to his family; one who acquired an estate by sale, by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent. 2 Bl. Comm. 220.

PERQUISITUM. Purchase. Bracton, fol. 65. Co. Litt. 3b, 18b. An estate acquired by purchase, that is, by one's own act, and not by descent; praedium quod quis non a patre vel majoribus possidet, sed quod sua industria vel pecuniis comparato gaudet. Spelman.

PERSECUTIO (Lat. from persequi, q. v.) In the civil law. A following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution, Properly, that kind of judicial proceeding before the praetor which was called "extraordinary." Calv. Lex.

In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only actions (actiones) properly so called, but other proceedings also. Calv. Lex.

PERSEQUI (Lat.) In the civil law. To follow after; to pursue or claim in form of law. An action is called a jus persequendi. See "Actio."

PERSEWAR (Old Scotch). In old Scotch law. Pursuer; plaintiff or prosecutor. See "Pursuer."

PERSON. A man considered according to the rank he holds in society, with all the rights to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 137.

A corporation, which is an artificial person. 1 Bl. Comm. 123; 4 Bing. 669; Woodeson, Lect. 116; 1 Mod. 164; 22 N. Y. 352; 10 Ill. 48; 32 Conn. 216; 118 U. S. 394. And it has been held to include a partnership association. 108 Pa. St. 147. It includes both sexes. 136 Mass. 580.

PERSONA (Lat.) In civil law. Character, in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man, and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus, one man may unite many characters (personae); as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 117.

In its original signification, a mask; afterwards, a man in reference to his condition or character (status). Vicat. It is used metaphorically of things, among which are counted slaves. It is often opposed to res; as, actio in personam and actio in rem.

Power and right belonging to a person in a certain character (pro jure et potestate personae competente). Vicat. Its use is not confined to the living, but is extended to the dead and to angels. Id. A statue in a fountain whence water gushes.

PERSONA CONJUNCTA AEQUIPARATUR Interesse proprio. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Bac. Max. reg. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 474.

PERSONA EST HOMO, CUM STATU quodam consideratus. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 2, § 75.

PERSONA NON GRATA. A person not acceptable. Applied to diplomatic representatives who are not acceptable at the court to which they are accredited.

PERSONA REGIS MERGITUR PERSONA ducta. The person of duke merges in that of king. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 160, PERSONA STANDI IN JUDICIO. Capacity of standing in court or in judgment; capacity to be a party to an action; capacity or ability to sue.

A phrase probably derived from Bracton (folios 155b, 196). See 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 83.

PERSONABLE (Law Lat. personabilis, from persona, capacity). In old English law. Able to maintain a plea in court; having capacity to sue. Cowell. Derived probably from the phrase persona standi in judicio (q. v.)

Of capacity to take a thing granted or given. Plowd. 27a, arg. But in the case here cited, it is used as two words, "person able." "There is a maxim that when a remainder is appointed to one, he to whom it is appointed ought at that time to be 'a person able,' and to have capacity to take the remainder, or else it shall be void." Id.

PERSONAE VICE FUNGITUR MUNICIPIUM ET DECURIA. Towns and boroughs act as if persons. 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 144.

PERSONAL. Belonging to the person.

This adjective is frequently employed in connection with substantives, as personal services (see 59 N. H. 551), personal goods (see 5 Mason [U. S.] 356), etc. Personal rights are those which belong to the person; personal duties are those which are to be performed in person.

PERSONAL ACTION.

—In the Civil Law. An action in which one person (the actor) sues another (the reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor either ex contractu or ex delicto. It will be seen that this includes all actions against a person, without reference to the nature of the property involved. In a limited sense of the word "action" in the civil law, it includes only personal actions, all others being called "petitions." See "Real Action."

—At Common Law. An action brought for the recovery of personal property, for the enforcement of some contract or to recover damages for its breach, or for the recovery of damages for the commission of an injury to the person or property. Such arise either upon contracts, as account, assumpsit, covenant, debt, and detinue (q. v.), or for wrongs, injuries, or torts, as trespass, trespass on the case, replevin, trover (q. v.) Other divisions of personal actions are made in the various states; and in Vermont and Connecticut an action is in use called the "action of book debt." 71 Me. 287. See "Action."

PERSONAL ASSETS. Chattels, money, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor.

PERSONAL CHATTELS. Strictly and properly speaking, things movable, which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl. Comm. 388*. See Chattel; Personal Effects.

PERSONAL CONTRACT. A contract as to personal property. A covenant (or contract) personal relates only to matters personal as distinguished from real, and is binding on the covenantor (contractor) during his life, and on his personal representatives after his decease, in respect of assets. Angell & A. Watercourses, 305; Co. Litt. 22.

PERSONAL COVENANT. A covenant which binds only the covenantor and his personal representatives in respect to assets, and can be taken advantage of only by the covenantee.

A covenant which must be performed by the covenantor in person. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 340.

All covenants are either personal or real, but some confusion exists in regard to the division between them. Thus, a covenant may be personal as regards the covenantor, and real as regards the covenantee; and different definitions have been given, according to whether the rights and liabilities of the covenantor or the covenantee have been in consideration. It is apprehended, however, that the prevalent modern usage is to hold a covenant real, if it is real,—that is, runs with the land, so as to apply to an assignee, either as regards the covenantor or the covenantee. See Platt, Cov. 61; 4 Bl. Comm. 304, note, 305, note; 3 N. J. 260; 7 Gray (Mass.) 83.

All covenants which relate to personalty merely are of this class. 30 Miss. 145.

PERSONAL EFFECTS. Without qualifying words, "personal effects" generally include such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person, but for the most part, as used in wills, the phrase derives its meaning from descriptions of articles and classifications immediately preceding. 66 Ark. 381. See Personal Chattels.

PERSONAL ESTATE. Personal property.

PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE. Knowledge derived at first hand from actual sight or hearing of the matter in question, and not from hearsay.

PERSONAL LAW. As opposed to territorial law, personal law is the law applicable to persons not subject to the law of the territory in which they reside. It is only by permission of the territorial law that personal law can exist at the present day; e. g., it applies to British subjects resident in the Levant and in other Mohammedan and barbarous countries. Under the Roman Empire, it had a very wide application. Brown.

PERSONAL LIBERTY. The right or power of locomotion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. 1 Bl. Comm. 134. Its modern definition is wider, embracing the right of the individual to do as he pleases, unrestricted save by the right of the public to subordinate his freedom of action to the welfare of the public.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. Chattels (q. v.)

PERSONAL REPLEVIN. A proceeding which succeeded to the court de homine replegiando, and was in turn succeeded by the writ of habeas corpus.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. The executors or administrators of the person deceased. 6 Mod. 155; 5 Ves. 402; 1 Madd. 108.

In wills, these words are sometimes construed to mean "next of kin." 2 Jarm. Wills, 28; 1 Beav. Rolls, 46; 1 Russ. & M. 587.

PERSONAL RIGHTS. The right of personal security, comprising those of life, limb, body, health, reputation, and the right of personal liberty. Wharton.

PERSONAL SECURITY. A person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bl. Comm. 129.

PERSONAL SERVICE. Service of process on one by actual delivery thereof to him, as distinguished from substituted service at his residence or constructive service by publication.

PERSONAL SERVITUDE. Servitudes in gross; i. e., belonging to a person, and not appurtenant to an estate.

PERSONAL STATUTE. A law whose principal, direct, and immediate object is to regulate the condition of persons.

The term is not properly in use in the common law, although Lord Mansfield, in 2 W. Bl. 234, applied it to those legislative acts which respect personal transitory contracts, but is occasionally used in the sense given to it in civil law, and which is adopted as its definition. It is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person, and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity which he does not change with his abode. See 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 613.

PERSONAL THINGS. In the old books, include personal rights and duties.

PERSONALIA PERSONAM SEQUUNTUR. Personal things follow the person. 10 Cush. (Mass.) 516.

PERSONALIS ACTIO. See "Actio."

PERSONALITER. In old English law. Personally.

PERSONALITY. In foreign and modern civil law. That quality of a law which concerns the condition, state, and capacity of persons. By the personality of laws, foreign jurists generally mean all laws which concern the condition, state, and capacity of persons. Story, Conf. Laws, § 16.

PERSONALTY. Personal property.

PERSONATION. The offense of falsely representing one's self as another person, and thereby obtaining some material advantage.

The offense of personating a voter is complete as soon as a person has, to the proper officer, falsely represented himself as the person entitled to vote, even though he stop short of voting. 38 L. J. M. C. 81; 4 B. & S. 15.

PERSONE (Law Fr.) A parson. En mesme la manere est de persone de un esglise, in the same manner is it with the parson of a church. Britt. c. 48.

PERSONERO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An attorney. So called, because he represents the person of another, either in or out of court. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 5, lib. 1.

PERSONNE (Fr.) A person. This term is declared by the Civil Code of Louisiana to be applicable to men and women, or to either. Article 3522, No. 25.

PERSPICUA VERA NON SUNT PROBANDA. Plain truths need not be proved. Co. Litt. 16.

PERTAIN. To belong or pertain, whether by right of nature, appointment or custom; to relate, as "things pertaining to life." 174 Ill. 182.

PERTICA, PERTICATA, or PARTICATA (Law Lat. from pertica). In old Scotch law. A perch. Skene de Verb. Sign.

PERTINENT (from Lat. pertineo, belonging to). Belonging to or related to the subject or matter in hand; fit or appropriate in any way; adapted to the end proposed; opposite; material; relevant. 174 Mich. 351. That which tends to prove or disprove the allegations of the parties. Willes. 319. Matters which have no such tendency are called "impertinent." 8 Toul-lier, Dr. Civ. note 22.

PERTINENTIAE (Law Lat. from pertinere, to belong). In old English law. Appurtenances, or, as anciently written, "appurtenances;" in Scotch law, pertinents; things belonging or incident to another (principal) thing. Reg. Orig. 1; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 11. Appurtenances had sometimes their own appurtenances, called pertinentias pertinentiarum. Thus, to the right of feeding and pasture, themselves appurtenant to a tenement, were appurtenant the right of way, and free ingress and egress; habent hujusmodi pertinentias suas pertinentias, sicut ad jus pascendi et ad pasturam pertinent via et liber ingressus et egressus. Bracton, fol. 232. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 3.

PERTINENTS. In Scotch law. Appurtenances. "Parts and pertinents," "parts pendicles and pertinents," are formal words in old deeds and charters. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, pp. 112, 118.

PERTURBATION. This is a technical word which signifies disturbance or infringement of a right. It is usually applied to the disturbance of pews or seats in a church. In the ecclesiastical courts, actions for these disturbances are technically called "suits for perturbation of seat." 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 323. See "Pew."

PERTURBATRIX. A woman who breaks the peace.

PERVISE, or PARVISE. The palace yard at Westminster.

A place where counsel used to advise with their clients.

An afternoon exercise or moot for the instruction of students. Cowell; Blount.

PESAGE, In England, a toll charged for weighing avoirdupois goods other than wool. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 16.

PESQUISIDOR. In Spanish law. Coroner. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 1, § 3.

PESSIMI EXEMPLI. Of the worst example.

PESSONA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Mast, including acorns, nuts, and other similar produce of trees. Bracton, fol. 222b.

PETENS (Lat.; Fr. petere, to demand). In old English law. A demandant; the plaintiff in a real action. Bracton, fols. 102, 106b; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6, § 1.

PETER FUNK SALE. A fraudulent auction sale. 27 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 378.

PETIT (sometimes corrupted into "petty"). A French word signifying little, small. It is frequently used; as, petit larceny, petit jury, petit treason.

PETIT CAPE. When the tenant is summoned on a plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded, if at the day given him he prays the view, and, having it given him, makes default, then shall this writ issue from the king. Old Nat. Brev. 162; Reg. Jud. fol. 2; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44. See "Grand Cape."

PETIT JUDICIUM. (Lat.) In old practice. Prays judgment. 6 Mod. 236. 10 Id. 210, 211.

PETIT (or PETTY) JURY. The ordinary jury of twelve, as opposed to the grand jury, which was of a larger number, and whose duty it was to find bills for the petit jury to try. 3 Bl. Comm. 351*.

A body of twelve men, who are sworn to try the facts of a case as they are presented in the evidence placed before them. Any less than this number of twelve would not be a common law jury and not such a jury as the Constitution guarantees to accused parties, when a less number is not allowed in express terms; and the necessity of a full panel could not be waived—at least in the case of felony—even by consent. The infirmity in the case of a trial by a jury of less than twelve, by consent, would be that the tribunal would be one unknown to the law, created by mere voluntary act of the parties; and it would in effect be an attempt to submit to a species of arbitration the question whether the accused has been guilty of an offense against the State. Cooley's Const. Lim. 319; 128 Ill. 593.

PETIT (or PETTY) LARCENY. In old English law, based on St. Westminster I. c. 15, larceny where the value of the property stolen was twelve pence or less. The distinction between grand and petit larceny has been abolished in England. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 4.

In the United States there are statutes in some states making a distinction between grand and petty larceny based on the value of the property stolen.

PETIT SERJEANTY. A tenure by which lands are held of the crown by the service of rendering yearly some small implement of war, as a lance, an arrow, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 82. Though St. 12 Car. II. took away the incidents of livery and primer seisin, this tenure still remains a dignified branch of socage tenure, from which it only differs in name on account of its reference to war. Such is the tenure of the grants to the dukes of Marlborough and Wellington.

PETIT (or PETTY) TREASON. In English law. The killing of a master by his servant, a husband by his wife, a superior by a religious man. 4 Bl. Comm. 73. In the United States this is like any other murder. See "Treason."

PETITE ASSIZE. Used in contradistinction from the "grand assize," which was a jury to decide on questions of property. Petite assize, a jury to decide on questions of possession. Britt. c. 42; Glanv. lib. 2, c. 6, 7; Horne, Mir. lib. 2, c. "De Novel Disseisin."

PETITIO (Lat. from petere, to ask or demand).

—In the Civil Law. The plaintiff's or actor's statement of his cause of action, in an action in rem. Dig. 44. 7. 28; Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. Petition or demand; the count in a real action; the form of words in which a title to land was stated by the demandant, and which commenced with the word peto (q. v.) 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 176. Obviously borrowed from the civil law.

PETITION. An instrument of writing or printing, containing a prayer from the person presenting it, called the "petitioner," to the body or person to whom it is presented, for the redress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor which the latter has the right to give. 48 Miss. 36.

—In Practice. An application to a court in writing; in contradistinction to a "motion," which may be viva voce. Shaw, C. J., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 376. A motion stated in writing.

—In Equity Practice. An application in writing for an order of the court, stating the circumstances upon which it is founded; a proceeding resorted to whenever the nature of the application to the court requires a fuller statement than can be conveniently made in a notice of motion. 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 578. See 3 Daniell, Chanc. Prac. (Perkins' Ed.) 1801.

PETITION DE DROIT (Law Fr.) In English practice. A petition of right; a form of proceeding to obtain restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself. 3 Bl. Comm. 256; 8 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 208.

PETITION OF RIGHT. In English law. A proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king.

This is in the nature of an action against a subject, in which the petitioner sets out his right to that which is demanded by him, and prays the king to do him right and justice; and, upon a due and lawful trial of the right, to make him restitution. It is called a "petition of right," because the king is bound of right to answer it, and let the matter therein contained be determined in a legal way, in like manner as causes between subject and subject. The petition is presented to the king, who subscribes it with these words, soit droit fait al partie, and thereupon it is delivered to the chancellor to be executed according to law. 4 Inst. 419, 422b; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 30, 31; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 22, 23.

PETITION OF RIGHTS. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I. in 1629. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights (1689), which has passed into a permanent constitutional statute.

PETITIONING CREDITOR. The creditor at whose instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a bankrupt.

PETITOR (Lat. from petere, to demand). In Roman law. A plaintiff or actor, particularly in an action in rem; a demandant. Calv. Lex. Actor est qui agit in personam, petitor, qui agit in rem, an actor is one who prosecutes against a person, a demandant one who prosecutes against a thing. Cujac. Observ. lib. 7, c. 26.

PETITORY. That which demands or petitions; that which has the quality of a prayer or petition; a right to demand.

A petitory suit or action is understood to be one in which the mere title to property is to be enforced by means of a demand, petition, or other legal proceeding, as distinguished from a suit where only the right of possession and not the mere right of property is in controversy. 1 Kent, Comm. 371; 7 How. (U. S.) 846; 10 How. (U. S.) 257. Admiralty suits touching property in ships are either petitory, in which the mere title to the property is litigated, or possessory, to restore the possession to the party entitled thereto.

The American courts of admiralty exercised unquestioned jurisdiction in petitory as well as possessory actions; but in England the courts of law, some time after the restoration in 1660, claimed exclusive cognizance of mere questions of title, until the statute of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. By that statute, the court of admiralty was authorized to decide all questions as to the title to or ownership of any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof remaining in the registry in any cause of possession, salvage, damage, wages, or bottomry, instituted in such court after the passing of that act. Ware, Dist. Ct. 232; 18 How. (U. S.) 287; 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 426.

—In Scotch Law. Actions in which damages are sought.

This class embraces such actions as assumpsit, debt, covenant, and detinue, at common law. See Patterson, Comp. 1058, note.

PETITORY SUIT (or ACTION).

—In Admiralty Law. A suit in which the mere title to property is litigated and sought to be enforced, as distinguished from a possessory action (q. v.) 5 Mason (U. S.) 465; 1 Kent, Comm. 371. See "Petitory."

—In Scotch Law. An action wherein the pursuer (plaintiff) claims something as due or belonging to him by the defender (defendant). 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 4, p. 163; Bell, Dict.

PETO (Lat.)

—Roman Law. I request. A common word by which a fideicommissum, or trust, was created in a will. Inst. 2. 24. 3.

—In Old English Law. I demand. The word with which a demandant's count commenced.

PETRA (Lat.) In old English law. Stone. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 114.

A stone. A weight of twelve pounds and a half. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 1.

PETTIFOGGER. One who pretends to be a lawyer, but possesses neither knowledge of the law nor conscience.

An unprincipled practitioner of law, whose business is confined to petty cases. See 40 Mich. 256. See, also, "Shyster."

PETTIFOGGING. Practicing the arts of a pettifogger, like the raising of unprofessional or dishonorable quibbles, practicing petty deceptions on the court, attempting to bring scandalous or impertinent issues into the trial, etc.

PETTY. Small; inferior. A word framed from the Fr. petit, and sometimes used indiscriminately with it.

PETTY AVERAGE (called, also, "customary average"). Several petty charges which are borne partly by the ship and partly by the cargo, such as the expense of tonnage, beaconage, etc. Abb. Shipp. (7th Ed.) 404; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 312; 1 Bell, Comm. 567; 2 Magens, 277. See "Average."

PETTY BAG OFFICE. In English law. An office in the court of chancery, appropriated for suits against attorneys and officers of the court, and for process and proceedings by extent on statutes, recognizances ad quod damnum, and the like. Termes de la Ley. See "Hanaper Office."

PETTY CONSTABLE. The ordinary constable, as distinguished from the high constable of the hundred. 1 Bl. Comm. 355; Bac. Law Tr. 181, "Office of Constable;" Willcock, Const. c. 1, § 1. See "Constable."

PEW. A seat in a church, separated from all others, with a convenient place to stand therein. It is derived from puye, and signifies primarily an inclosed seat in a church. L. R. 5 C. P. 224.

It is an incorporeal interest in the real property. And although a man has the exclusive right to it, yet it seems he cannot maintain trespass against a person entering it (1 Term R. 430); but case is the proper remedy (3 Barn. & Ald. 361; 8 Barn. & C. 294).

In Connecticut and Maine, pews are considered real estate. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire, they are personal property. Gen. St. Mass. c. 30, § 38; 1 Smith, St. 145. The precise nature of such property does not appear to be well settled in New York. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 218; 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 28; 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 494. See 10 Mass. 323; 17 Mass. 438; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 138; 4 N. H. 180; 4 Ohio, 515; 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 279; Best, Pres. 111; Crabb, Real Prop. §§ 481-497; Washb. Easem.

PEWTER. An alloy of lead and tin. 28 L. Cas. 326.

PHAROS. (Lat.) In maritime law. A light-house. Mar. lib. 2, c. 1, sec. 7.

PHYSICAL FACT. A fact the existence of which may be perceived by the senses, such as the sound of a pistol shot, a man running, impressions of feet on the ground. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 130.

PHYSICIAN. A person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution.

One lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

The term is not limited to any of the schools of practitioners recognized by law. 62 Wis. 289.

PIA FRAUS. A pious fraud. A term applied to evasions of the statute of mortmain, and other frauds in the interest of religious institutions.

PICCAGE (Law Lat. piccagium, from Fr. piquer, to perforate, or pick). In old English law. Money paid at fairs for leave to break the ground, to set up booths or stalls. Cowell; Spelman.

PICKERY. In Scotch law. Stealing of trifles, punishable arbitrarily. Bell, Dict.; Tait, Inst. "Theft."

PICKET. A relay of guards in front of a factory or place of business of an employer for the purpose of watching who enters or leaves it, or the establishment and maintenance of an organized espionage upon the works and upon those going to and from them, 178 Mich. 305; it has also been defined as "a body of men belonging to a trade union sent to watch and annoy non-union workers in a shop or against which a strike is in progress," but the word originally had no such meaning. 118 Mich. 497.

PICKPOCKET. A thief; one who in a crowd or in other places steals from the pockets or person of another, without putting him in fear. This is generally punished as simple larceny, but by some states larceny from the person, committed privily, is made a distinct crime. Pen. Code Ga. § 175; Pen. Code Tex. art. 879.

PIEDPOUDRE. See "Court of Plepoudre."

PIERAGE. Toll for using a marine pier. Webster; Smart.

PIGNORATIO (Lat. from pignorare, to pledge). In civil law. The obligation of a pledge. L. 9 D. "De Pignor." Sealing up (obsignatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one's field, and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master. New Dec. 1. 34. 13.

PIGNORATITIA ACTIO. See "Actio Pignoratitia."

PIGNORATIVE CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract by which the owner of an estate engages it to another for a sum of money, and grants to him and his successors the right to enjoy it until he shall be reimbursed, voluntarily, that sum of money. Poth. Obl.

PIGNORIS CAPTIO (Lat.) In Roman law. The name given to one of the legis actiones of the Roman law. It consisted chiefly in the taking of a pledge, and was, in fact, a mode of execution. It was confined to special cases determined by positive law or by custom, such as taxes, duties, rents, etc., and is comparable in some respects to distresses at common law. The proceeding took place in the presence of a praetor.

PIGNUS (Lat.) In civil law. Pledge, or pawn; the contract of pledge; the right in the thing pledged.

"It is derived" says Gaius, "from pugnum, the fist, because what is delivered in pledge is delivered in hand." Dig. 50. 16. 238. 2. This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted etymological explanations of words. The elements of pignus (pig) are contained in the word pan(g)-o and its cognate forms. See Smith.

Though pledge is distinguished from mortgage (hypotheca), as being something delivered in hand, while mortgage is good without possession, yet a pledge (pignus) may also be good without possession. Domat, Civ. Law, bk. iii. tit. 1, § 5; Calv. Lex. Pignus is properly applied to movables, hypotheca to immovables; but the distinction is not always preserved. Id.

PILFERAGE. Pilferage has but one meaning, and it is one form of stealing. 207 Ill. App. 492.

PILLAGE. A robbery by force or violence; and not a simple larceny merely. 26 Wend. 573. The taking by violence of private property by a victorious army from the citizens or subjects of the enemy. This in modern times is seldom allowed, and then only when authorized by the commanding or chief officer at the place where the pillage is committed. The property thus violently taken belongs, in general, to the common soldiers. Dalloz. "Propriete," art. 3, § 5; Wolff. § 1201. See "Booty;" "Prize."

PILLORY. An instrument of punishment, consisting of a wooden machine, in which the neck of the culprit is inserted, he being ordinarily exposed in a public place while so secured.

PILOT. An officer serving on board of a ship during the course of a voyage, and having the charge of the helm and of the ship's route. An officer authorized by law, who is taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into port. 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 30.

Pilots of the second description are established by legislative enactments at the principal seaports in this country, and have rights, and are bound to perform duties, agreeably to the provisions of the several laws establishing them; the principal being the obligation of every vessel entering the port to take on a licensed pilot of the port, usually the first who offers his services (118 U. S. 90; 12 Fed. 81; 10 Fed. 135), or pay pilotage to the pilot so offering.

PILOTAGE. The compensation given to a pilot for conducting a vessel in or out of port. Poth. des Avaries, note 147.

Pilotage is a lien on the ship, when the contract has been made by the master or quasi master of the ship, or some other person lawfully authorized to make it (1 Mason [U. S.] 598; 32 Fed. 486), and the admiralty court has jurisdiction when services have been performed at sea (Id.; 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 428; 6 Pet. [U. S.] 682; 10 Pet. [U. S.] 108). And see 1 Pet. Adm. Dec. (U. S.) 227.

PIMP. A procurer; a panderer; a man who has intercourse with a loose woman, and usually she is taking care of him,—supporting him. The word has no technical meaning. 75 Mich. 131.

PIMP TENURE. A very singular and odious kind of tenure mentioned by the old writers, "Wilhelmus Hoppeshort tenet dimidiam virgatum terrae per servitium custodiendi sex damisellas, scil. meretrices ad usum domini regis." 12 Edw. I.

PIN MONEY. Money allowed by a man to his wife to spend for her own personal comforts. 9 Beav. 55; 2 Clark & F. 654.

It has been conjectured that the term "pin money" has been applied to signify the provision for a married woman, because anciently there was a tax laid for providing the English queen with pins. Barr. Obs. St. 181.

PINT. A liquid measure, containing half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon.

PIOUS USES. See "Charitable Uses."

PIPE. In English law. The name of a roll in the exchequer, otherwise called the "Great Roll" or "pipe roll." Spelman. A measure, containing two hogheads. One hundred and twenty-six gallons is also called a pipe.

PIPE LINES. A line or series of pipes designed for the transportation of water, gas, etc.

PIPOWDER, or PIEPOUDRE (Ft. piepoudre). In English law. The name of a court held for fairs and markets. See "Court of Piepoudre." Pipowder courts were formerly appointed to be held at fairs in the town and borough of Westchester, New York. Bolton, Hist. Westchester, i. 194.

PIRACY.

—In Criminal Law. A robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility. 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610; 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 163; 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 209. This is the definition of this offense by the law of nations. 1 Kent, Comm. 183.

"A pirate is one who roves the seas in an armed vessel, without any commission from any sovereign, and for the purpose of seizing by force and appropriating to himself every vessel which he may meet." Trial of Savannah Privateers, p. 371.

The commission upon the high seas of such acts of robbery and depredation as would, if committed on land, have amounted to a felony. 4 Bl. Comm. 72.

—In Torts. By piracy is understood the plagiarisms of a book, engraving, or other work for which a copyright has been taken out.

When a piracy has been made of such a work, an injunction will be granted. 4 Ves. 681; 5 Ves. 709; 12 Ves. 270. See "Copyright."

PIRATA EST HOSTIS HUMANI GENERIS. A pirate is an enemy of the human race. 3 Inst. 113.

PIRATE. A sea robber, who, to enrich himself, by subtlety or open force, setteth upon merchants and others trading by sea, despoiling them of their loading, and sometimes bereaving them of life and sinking their ships. Ridley, View, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3. One guilty of the crime of piracy. Merlin, Repert. See, for the etymology of this word, Bac. Abr. "Piracy."

PIRATICALLY. In pleading. This is a technical word, essential to charge the crime of piracy in an indictment, which cannot be supplied by another word or any circumlocution. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 37, § 15; 3 Inst. 112; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, *244.

PISCARY. The right of fishing in the waters of another. Bac. Abr.; 5 Comyn, Dig. 366. See "Fishery."

PISTAREEN. A small Spanish coin. It is not made current by the laws of the United States. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 618.

PIT. A hole dug in the earth, which was filled with water, and in which women thieves were drowned, instead of being hung. The punishment of the pit was formerly common in Scotland.

PIT AND GALLOWES (Law Lat. fossa et furca). In Scotch law. A privilege of inflicting capital punishment for theft, given by King Malcolm, by which a woman could be drowned in a pit (fossa) or a man hanged on the gallows (furca). Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. 277, § 62.

PIX (Lat.) A mode of testing coin. The ascertaining whether coin is of the proper standard is, in England, called "pixing" it; and there are occasions on which resort is had for this purpose to an ancient mode of inquisition called the "trial of the pix," before a jury of members of the Goldsmith's Company. 2 Steph. Comm. 540, note.

PIXIS (Law Lat.) In old pleading. A box. Cro. Jac. 664. "Trover was brought de una pixide, Anglice, a box full of bands," etc. Id. A box for deeds and muniments. Latch, 195.

PLACE. See "Venue."

PLACE OF ABODE. By place of abode is usually meant the place of residence. A man's residence, where he lives with his family and sleeps at night, is always his place of abode in the full sense of that expression. 21 L. J. Q. B. 153; 17 Q. B. 772.

PLACE OF BUSINESS. The place where a man usually transacts his affairs or business.

A place of business is a place actually occupied, either continually or at regular intervals, by a person, or those in his employment, for the transaction of business; the mere occasional transaction of business at a place, not at stated periods, not being sufficient. 8 Port. (Ala.) 155.

A place in the house of another, where one is employed two or three days a week in settling up his old business, is not a place of business. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 578.

The term implies a particular place appropriated exclusively to a local business. 38 Tex. 599.

When a man keeps a store, shop, counting room, or office, independently and distinctly from all other persons, that is deemed his place of business; and when he usually transacts his business at the counting house, office, and the like, occupied and used by another, that will also be considered his place of business, if he has no independent place of his own. But when he has no particular right to use a place for such private purpose, as in an insurance office, an exchange room, a banking room, a post office, and the like, where persons generally resort, these will not be considered as the party's place of business, although he may occasionally or transiently transact business there. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 582; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 121; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 501; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 231; 16 Pick. (Mass.) 392.

PLACE OF CONTRACT. See "Lex Loci."

PLACEA. (Law Lat.) In old records. A place.

PLACITA. The convening order of the court. 63 Ill. 497.

PLACITA COMMUNIA (Lat.) Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject. 3 Bl. Comm. 38, 40*; Cowell, "Plea." See "Placitum."

PLACITA CORONAE (Lat.) Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people. 3 Bl. Comm. 40*; Cowell, "Plea."

PLACITA DE TRANSGRESSIONE CONTRA PACEM REGIS, IN REGNO ANGLIÆ VI ET ARMIS FACTA, SECUNDUM LEGEM ET CONSUETUDINEM ANGLIÆ SINE BREVI REGIS PLACITARI NON DEBENT. Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king's writ. 2 Inst. 311.

PLACITA JURIS (Lat.) Arbitrary rules of law. Bac. Law Tr. 73; Bac. Max. reg. 12.

PLACITA NEGATIVA DUO EXITUM NON FACIUNT. Two negative pleas do not form an issue. Lofft, 415.

PLACITABILE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Pleadable. Spelman.

PLACITAMENTUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The pleading of a cause. Spelman.

PLACITARE (Law Lat. from placitum, q. v.) In old English law. To plead; to state to a court in form of law. Placitantur placita, pleas are pleaded. Bracton, fol. 106. Placitavit (he) pleaded. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II.

To litigate; to make the subject of a plea or action; to implead or prosecute. Breve Gul. Conq. apud Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 120.

PLACITATOR (Law Lat. from placitare, q. v.) In old records. A pleader. Cowell; Spelman.

PLACITUM (Lat. from placere).

—In Civil Law. Any agreement or bargain; a law; a constitution or rescript of the emperor; the decision of a judge or award of arbitrators. Vicat; Calv. Lex.; Dupin, Notions Sur le Droit.

—In Old English Law (Ger. plats; Lat. plateas, i. e., fields or streets). An assembly of all degrees of men, where the king presided, and they consulted about the great affairs of the kingdom. First held, as the name would show, in the fields or street. Cowell.

So on the continent. Hinc. de Ordine Palatii, c. 29; Bertinian, Annals of France, A. D. 767; Const. Car. Mag. c. ix.; Hinc. Epist. 197, 227; Laws of the Longobards, passim.

A lord's court. Cowell.

An ordinary court. Placita is the style of the English courts at the beginning of the record at nisi prius. In this sense, placita are divided into pleas of the crown and common pleas (q. v.) Cowell.

A trial or suit in court. Cowell. Jacobs.

A fine. Black Book of Exchequer, lib. 2, tit. 13; 1 Hen. I. cc. 12, 13.

A plea. This word is nomen generalissimum, and refers to all the pleas in the case. 1 Saund. 388, note 6; Skin. 554; Carth. 334; Yelv. 65. By placitum is also understood the subdivisions in abridgements and other works, where the point decided in a case is set down separately, and generally numbered. In citing, it is abbreviated as follows: Viner, Abr. "Abatement," pl. 3.

Placitum nominatum is the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead.

Placitum fractum is a day past or lost to the defendant. 1 Hen. I. c. 59.

PLAGIARISM. The act of appropriating the ideas and language of another, and passing them for one's own. When this amounts to piracy, the party who has been guilty of it will be enjoined when the original author has a copyright. See "Copyright;" "Piracy;" "Quotation;" Pardessus, Dr. Com. note.

PLAGIARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. He who fraudulently concealed a freeman or slave who belonged to another.

The offense itself was called plagium. It differed from larceny or theft in this, that larceny always implies that the guilty party intended to make a profit, whereas the plagiarius did not intend to make any profit. Dig. 48. 15. 6; Code, 9. 20. 9. 15.

PLAGIUM (Lat.) Man stealing; kidnapping. This offense is the crimen plagii of the Romans. Alis. Crim. Law, 280, 281.

PLAIDEUR (Old Fr.) A pleader; an advocate.

PLAIN STATEMENT. One that may be readily understood, not merely by lawyers, but by all who are sufficiently acquainted with the language in which it is written. 5 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 557, 564.

PLAINT. In English law. The exhibiting of any action, real or personal, in writing. The party making his plaint is called the plaintiff.

PLAINTIFF. He who complains. He who, in a personal action, seeks a remedy for an injury to his rights. 3 Bl. Comm. 25.

—In Code Practice. The person by whom a civil action is brought.

PLAINTIFF IN ERROR. A party who sues out a writ of error; and this, whether in the court below he was plaintiff or defendant.

PLANT. The fixtures and tools necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business. 77 Ga. 748.

PLANTATIONS.

—In English Law. Colonies; dependencies. 1 Bl. Comm. 107. If this use of the term was ever current in America, it is now obsolete. See 7 Conn. 201.

In England, this word, as it is used in St. 12 Car. II. c. 18, is never applied to any of the British dominions in Europe, but only to the colonies in the West Indies and America. 1 Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 3, § 2, p. 64. The title of the state of Rhode Island, at the time of the Articles of Confederation, was "Rhode Island and Providence Plantations."

—In American Law. A large estate, cultivated chiefly by negroes, who live in a distinct community on the estate, under the control of the proprietor. 79 Ga. 721. Apparently the term is applied in Maine to a minor civil subdivision. Webster.

PLAT. A map of a piece of land, on which are marked the courses and distances of the different lines, and the quantity of land it contains.

Such a plat may be given in evidence in ascertaining the position of the land and what is included, and may serve to settle the figure of a survey and correct mistakes. 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 160. See 17 Mass. 211; 5 Me. 219; 7 Me. 61; 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 444; 14 Mass. 149.

PLATEA. (Latin.) A wide place; a court yard; a barn-yard. In old English law. A clear or open space of ground; a plat or plot of ground.

PLAY. (L. Fr.) In old English law. A plea, or action.

PLAZA. (Spanish derivation.) A plat of ground in a city or village dedicated to the use of the general public for a market place, a common or a park. 79 Ill. App. 441.

PLEA.

—In Equity. A special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, or delayed, or barred. Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 219; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 223; Story, Eq. Pl. § 649.

The modes of making defense to a bill in equity are said to be by "demurrer," which demands of the court whether, from the matter apparent from the bill, the defendant shall answer at all; by "plea," which, resting on the foundation of new matter offered, demands whether the defendant shall answer further; by "answer," which responds generally to the charges of the bill; by "disclaimer," which denies any interest in the matters in question. Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 13; 2 Story (U. S.) 59; Story, Eq. Pl. § 437. Pleas are said to be "pure" which rely upon foreign matter to discharge or stay the suit, and "anomalous" or "negative" which consist mainly of denials of the substantial matters set forth in the bill. Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 651, 667; 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 97, 110; Beames, Eq. Pl. 123; Adams, Eq. 236.

(1) Pleas to the jurisdiction assert that the court before which the cause is brought is not the proper court to take cognizance of the matter.

(2) Pleas to the person may be to the person of the plaintiff or defendant. Those of the former class are mainly outlawry, excommunication, popish recusant convict, which are never pleaded in America, and very rarely now in England; attainder, which is now seldom pleaded (2 Atk. 399); alienage, which is not a disability unless the matter respect lands, when the alien may not hold them, or he be an alien enemy not under license (2 Ves. & B. 323); infancy, coverture, and idiocy, which are pleadable as at law (see "Abatement"); bankruptcy and insolvency, in which case all the facts necessary to establish the plaintiff as a legally declared bankrupt must be set forth (3 Mer. 667), though not necessarily as of the defendant's own knowledge (Younge, 331; 4 Beav. Rolls, 554; 1 Younge & C. 39); want of character in which he sues, as that he is not an administrator (2 Dick. 510; 1 Cox, 198), is not heir (2 Ves. & B. 159; 2 Brown, Ch. 143; 3 Brown, Ch. 489), is not a creditor (2 Sim. & S. 274), is not a partner (6 Madd. 61), as he pretends to be, that the plaintiff named is a fictitious person, or was dead at the commencement of the suit (Story, Eq. Pl. § 727). Those to the person of the defendant may show that the defendant is not the person he is alleged to be, or does not sustain the character given by the bill (6 Madd. 61; Rep. temp. Finch, 334), or that he is bankrupt, to require the assignees to be joined (Story, Eq. Pl. § 732). These pleas to the person are pleas in abatement, or, at least, in the nature of pleas in abatement.

(3) Pleas to the bill or the frame of the bill object to the suit as framed, or contend that it is unnecessary. These may be the pendency of another suit, which is analogous to the same plea at law, and is governed in most respects by the same principles (Story, Eq. Pl. § 736; 2 Mylne & C. 602; 1 Phil. Ch. 82; 1 Ves. Jr. 544; 4 Ves. Jr. 357; 1 Sim. & S. 491; Mitf. Eq. Pl. [Jeremy Ed.] 248; see "Lis Pendens"). and the other suit must be in equity, and not at law (Beames, Eq. Pl. 146-148); want of proper parties, which goes to both discovery and relief, where both are prayed for (Story, Eq. Pl. § 745; see 3 Younge & C. 447), but not to a bill of discovery merely (2 Paige [N. Y.] 280; 3 Paige [N. Y.] 222; 3 Cranch [U. S.] 220); a multiplicity of suits (1 P. Wms. 428; 2 Mason [U. S.] 190); multifariousness, which should be taken by way of demurrer, when the joining or confession of the distinct matters appears from the face of the bill, as it usually does (Story, Eq. Pl. § 271).

(4) Pleas in bar rely upon a bar created by statute, as, the statute of limitations (1 Sim. & S. 4; 2 Sim. 45; 3 Sumn. [U. S.] 152), which is a good plea in equity as well as at law, and with similar exceptions (Coop. Eq. Pl. 253; see "Statute of Limitations"), the statute of frauds, where its provisions apply (1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y., 425; 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 275; 4 Ves. 24, 720; 2 Brown, Ch. 559), or some other public or private statute (2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 768); matter of record or as of record in some court, as, a common recovery (1 P. Wms. 754; 2 Freem. Ch. 180; 1 Vern. 13); a judgment at law (1 Keen, 456; 2 Mylne & C. 602; Story, Eq. Pl. § 781, note), the sentence or judgment of a foreign court or a court not of record (12 Clark & F. 368; 14 Sim. 265; 3 Hare, 100; 1 Younge & C. 464), especially where its jurisdiction is of a peculiar or exclusive nature (12 Ves. 307; Ambl. 756; 2 How. [U. S.] 619), with limitations in case of fraud (1 Ves. Jr. 284; Story, Eq. Pl. § 788), or a decree of the same or another court of equity (Cas. temp. Talb. 217; 7 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 1; 2 Sim. & S. 464; 2 Younge & C. 43); matters purely in pais, in which case the pleas may go to discovery, relief, or either, both, or part of either, of which the principal (though not the only) pleas are, account, stated or settled (2 Atk. 1; 13 Price, 767; 7 Paige [N. Y.] 573; 1 Mylne & K. 231), accord and satisfaction (1 Hale, 564), award (2 Ves. & B. 764), purchase for valuable consideration (2 Sumn. [U. S.] 507; 2 Younge & C. 457), release (3 P. Wms. 315), lapse of time, analogous to the statute of limitations (1 Ves. Jr. 264; 10 Ves. 466; 1 Younge & C. 432, 453; 2 Jac. & W. 1; 1 Hare, 594; 1 Russ. & M. 453; 2 Younge & C. 58; 1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 46; 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 152; 1 Schoales & L. 721; 6 Madd. 61; 3 Paige [N. Y.] 273; 5 Paige [N. Y.] 26; 7 Paige [N. Y.] 62), title in the defendant (Story, Eq. Pl. § 812).

—At Law. The defendant's answer by matter of fact to the plaintiff's declaration, as distinguished from a demurrer, which is an answer by matter of law.

It includes as well the denial of the truth of the allegations on which the plaintiff relies, as the statement of facts on which the defendant relies. In an ancient use, it denoted action, and is still used sometimes in that sense; as, "summoned to answer in a plea of trespass." Steph. Pl. 38, 39, note; Warren, Law Stud. 272, note (w); Oliver, Prec. 97. In a popular, and not legal, sense, the word is used to denote a forensic argument. It was strictly applicable in a kindred sense when the pleadings were conducted orally by the counsel. Steph. Pl. Append. note 1.

Pleas are either dilatory, which tend to defeat the particular action to which they apply on account of its being brought before the wrong court, by or against the wrong person or in an improper form, or peremptory, which impugn the right of action altogether, or which answer the plaintiff's allegations of right conclusively. Pleas are also said to be to the jurisdiction of the court, in suspension of the action, in abatement of the writ, in bar of the action. The first three classes are dilatory, the last peremptory. Steph. Pl. 63; 1 Chit. Pl. 425; Lawes, Pl. 36.

Pleas are of various kinds,—in abatement (see "Abatement"); in avoidance, called, also, "confession and avoidance," which admits, in words or in effect, the truth of the matters contained in the declaration, and alleges some new matter to avoid the effect of it, and show that the plaintiff is, notwithstanding, not entitled to his action (1 Chit. Pl. 540; Lawes, Pl. 122), see "Confession and Avoidance"; in bar, which deny that the plaintiff has any cause of action (1 Chit. Pl. 407; Co. Litt. 303b). The term is often used in a restricted sense to denote what are with propriety called "special pleas in bar." These pleas are of two kinds,—the general issue, and special pleas in bar. See "Special Plea in Bar."

The parts of a plea are: First, the title of the court. Second, the title of the term. Third, the names of the parties in the margin. These, however, do not constitute any substantial part of the plea. The surnames only are usually inserted, and that of the defendant precedes the plaintiff's; as, "Roe ads. Doe." Fourth, the commencement, which includes the statement of the name of the defendant, the appearance, the defense (see "Defense"), the actio non (see "Actio Non"). Fifth, the body, which may contain the inducement, the protestation (see "Protestation"), ground of defense, quas est eadem, the traverse. Sixth, the conclusion.

(1) Dilatory pleas go to destroy the particular action, but do not affect the right of action in the plaintiff, and hence delay the decision of the cause upon its merits. Gould, Pl. c. ii. § 33. This class includes pleas to the jurisdiction, to the disability of the parties, and all pleas in abatement. All dilatory pleas must be pleaded with the greatest certainty, must contain a distinct, clear, and positive averment of all material facts, and must, in general, enable the plaintiff to correct the deficiency or error pleaded to. 1 Chit. Pl. 365. See "Abatement;" "Jurisdiction."

(2) Pleas in discharge admit the demand of the plaintiff, and show that it has been discharged by some matter of fact. Such are pleas of judgment, release, and the like.

(3) Pleas in excuse admit the demand or complaint stated in the declaration, but excuse the noncompliance with the plaintiff's claim, or the commission of the act of which he complains, on account of the defendant's having done all in his power to satisfy the former, or not having been the culpable author of the latter. A plea of tender is an example of the former, and a plea of son assault demesne an instance of the latter.

(4) Foreign pleas go to the jurisdiction, and their effect is to remove the action from the county in which the venue is originally laid. Carth. 402. Previous to the statute of Anne, an affidavit was required. 5 Mod. 335; Carth. 402; 1 Saund. Pl. 98, note 1; Viner, Abr. "Foreign Pleas;" 1 Chit. Pl. 382; Bac. Abr. "Abatement" (R).

(5) Pleas of justification, which assert that the defendant has purposely done the act of which the plaintiff complains, and in the exercise of his legal rights. 8 Term R. 78; 3 Wils. 71. No person is bound to justify who is not prima facie a wrongdoer. 1 Leon. 301; 2 Leon. 83; Cowp. 478; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 126; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 443, 579; 1 Chit. Pl. 436.

(6) Pleas puis darrein continuance, which introduce new matter of defense, which has arisen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge since the last continuance. In most of the states, the actual continuance of a cause from one term to another, or from one particular day in term to another day in the same term, is practically done away with, and the prescribed times for pleading are fixed without any reference to terms of court. Still, this right of a defendant to change his plea so as to avail himself of facts rising during the course of the litigation remains unimpaired; and though there be no continuance, the plea is still called a plea puis darrein continuance, meaning, now, a plea upon facts arising since the last stage of the suit.

—In Criminal Law. The formal answer of the defendant to the indictment.

Pleas are either general or special; the general pleas being "guilty," "not guilty," and "nollo contendere," and all other pleas being special. Special pleas are either in bar, being, if found true, a bar to further prosecution, or in abatement, those which go merely to abate or suspend the proceeding. See "Pleading."

PLEA IN ABATEMENT. See "Plea."

PLEA IN BAR. See "Plea."

PLEA OF LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. A plea that at the time of the alleged trespass the plaintiffs were in the lawful possession of the premises as tenants of the defendant. 115 Ill. 180.

PLEA OF SET-OFF. A plea of set-off is in the nature of a cross-action, and the same principles apply as in the case of an original suit on the claim pleaded as a set-off. 88 Ill. App. 30. See Set-off.

PLEA SIDE. The plea side of a court is that branch or department of the court which entertains or takes cognizance of civil actions and suits, as distinguished from its criminal or crown department. Thus, the court of queen's bench is said to have a plea side and a crown or criminal side; the one branch or department of it being devoted to the cognizance of civil actions, the other to criminal proceedings and matters peculiarly concerning the crown. So the court of exchequer is said to have a plea side and a crown side; the one being appropriated to civil actions, the other to matters of revenue. Brown.

PLEAD ISSUABLY. To plead in such manner as to make an issue of law and fact.

PLEAD OVER. To interpose a general plea after a special plea or demurrer has been disposed of.

PLEADER (Law Fr. pleador, pledor; old Fr. pleideoir; Law Lat. placitans advocatus). A person professionally employed to manage another's cause for him, particularly to plead orally, or argue for him in court. The use of professional pleaders or advocates may be traced, among some of the continental nations, to a period extremely remote. Steph. Pl. Append. note (8). In the assizes of Jerusalem, the term "pleader" (pledcoir), is used as nearly synonymous with "counsel" (conseill).

PLEADING.

—In Chancery Practice. Consists in making the formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties on the record to maintain the suit, or to defeat it, of which, when contested in matters of fact, they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 4, note. The substantial object of pleading is the same, but the forms and rules of pleading are very different, at law and in equity.

—In Civil Practice. The stating in a logical and legal form the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's ground of defense. It is the formal mode of alleging that on the record which constitutes the support or the defense of the party in evidence. 3 Term R. 159; Doug. 278; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (A); Bac. Abr. "Pleas and Pleading;" Comp. 682. Pleading is used to denote the act of making the pleadings.

—In Criminal Practice. The rules of pleading are the same as in civil practice. There is, however, less liberty of amendment of the indictment. The order of the defendant's pleading is as follows: First, to the jurisdiction; second, in abatement; third, special pleas in bar, as former jeopardy or pardon; fourth, the general issue.

See, generally, Lawes, Chitty, Stephen, and Gould on Pleading; 3 Bl. Comm. 301 et seq., and notes; Co. Litt. 303; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader;" Bac. Abr. "Plea and Pleading."

PLEADING, SPECIAL. By special pleading is meant the allegation of special or new matter, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18. See "Special Pleading."

PLEADINGS.

—In Chancery Practice. The written allegations of the respective parties in the suit. The pleadings in equity are less formal than those at common law.

The parts of the pleadings are (1) the bill, which contains the plaintiff's statement of his case or information, where the suit is brought by a public officer in behalf of the sovereign; (2) the demurrer, by which the defendant demands judgment of the court, whether he shall be compelled to answer the bill or not; (3) the plea, whereby he shows some cause why the suit should be dismissed or barred; (4) the answer, which, controverting the case stated by the bill, confesses and avoids it, or traverses and denies the material allegations in the bill, or, admitting the case made by the bill, submits to the judgment of the court upon it, or relies upon a new case, or upon new matter stated in the answer, or upon both; (5) disclaimer, which seeks at once a termination of the suit by the defendants, disclaiming all right and interest in the matter sought by the bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 546; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 13, 106; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 108; 2 Story (U. S.) 59.

—In Common-Law Civil Practice. The statements of the parties, in legal and proper manner, of the causes of action and grounds of defense. The result of pleading. They were formerly made by the parties or their counsel, orally, in open court, under the control of the judge. They were then called the "parole." 3 Bl. Comm. 293; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 267.

The regular parts are (1) the declaration or count; (2) the plea, which is either to the jurisdiction of the court, or suspending the action, as in the case of a parol demurrer, or in abatement, or in bar of the action, or in replevin, an avowry or cognizance; (3) the replication, and, in case of an evasive plea, a new assignment, or, in replevin, the plea in bar to the avowry or cognizance; (4) the rejoinder, or, in replevin the replication to the plea in bar; (5) the sur-rejoinder, being in replevin the rejoinder; (6) the rebutter; (7) the sur-rebutter (Viner, Abr. "Pleas and Pleadings" [C]; Bac. Abr. "Pleas and Pleadings" [A]); (8) pleas puis darrein continuance, when the matter of defense arises pending the suit.

The irregular or collateral parts of pleading are stated to be (1) demurrers to any part of the pleadings above mentioned; (2) demurrers to evidence given at trials; (3) bills of exceptions; (4) pleas in scire facias; (5) and please in error. Viner, Abr. "Pleas and Pleadings" (C); Bouv. Inst. Index.

—In Civil Practice under the Codes. The pleadings are (1) the complaint, (2) the answer, (3) the reply, and (4) the demurrer, which lies to either complaint, answer or reply.

—In Criminal Practice. The pleadings are (1) the indictment; (2) the plea, either special or general.

PLEAS OF THE CROWN. In English law. A phrase now employed to signify criminal causes in which the king is a party. Formerly it signified royal causes for offenses of a greater magnitude than mere misdemeanors.

These were left to be tried in the courts of the barons; whereas the greater offenses, or royal causes, were to be tried in the king's courts, under the appellation of "pleas of the crown." 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V. 48.

PLEAS ROLL. In English practice. A record which contains the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, and other pleadings, and the issue. Eunom. Dial. 2, § 29, p. 111.

PLEBEIAN. One who is classed among the common people, as distinguished from the nobles.

PLEBEYOS. In Spanish law. Commons; those who exercise any trade, or who cultivate the soil. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6, and note.

PLEBISCITE. A submission to the popular vote of a law or governmental policy.

PLEBISCITUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A law established by the people (plebs), on the proposal of a popular magistrate, as a tribune. Vicat; Calv. Lex.; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 27, 37.

PLEBITY. The plebeians.

PLEBS (Lat.) In the Roman law. The commonalty, or citizens, exclusive of the patricians and senators. Plebs appellatioe, sine patriciis et senatoribus, caeteri cives significantur. Inst. 1. 2. 4; Dig. 50. 16. 238, pr.

PLEDABLE (Law Fr.) That may be brought or conducted, as an action, or "plea," as it was formerly called. Britt. c. 32.

PLEDGE, or PAWN. A bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. 41 N. Y. 241.

A deposit of personal property as security, with an implied power of sale in case of default. Jones, Pl. § 1.

A pledge or pawn (Lat. pignus), according to Story, is a bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. Story, Bailm. § 286, which see for the less comprehensive definitions of Sir Wm. Jones, Lord Holt, Pothier, etc. Domat broadly defines it as an appropriation of the thing given for the security of an engagement. But the term is commonly used as Sir Wm. Jones defines it, to wit, as a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged. Jones, Bailm. 117; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Poth. de Naut. art. prelim. 1; Civ. Code, art. 2071; Domat, bk. 3, tit. 1, § 1, note 1; Civ. Code La. art. 3100; 6 Ired. (N. C.) 309. The pledgee secures his debt by the bailment, and the pledgor obtains credit or other advantage. See 1 Pars. Cont. 591 et seq.

Pledge and pawn. At common law, the terms were synonymous, but in modern usage "pawn" generally indicates the pledging of goods with a pawnbroker (q. v.)

Pledge and mortgage. A pledge is distinguished from a chattel mortgage in that it depends for its validity on possession of the subject matter.

Pledge and hypothecation. Hypothecation (q. v.) is a special form of pledge wherein the possession remains in the debtor.

—In Louisiana. There are two kinds of pledges,—the pawn and the antichresis. The former relates to movable securities, and the latter to immovables. If a creditor have not a right to enter on the land and reap the fruits, the security is not an antichresis. 3 La. 157. A pledge of negotiable paper is not valid against third parties without transfer from debtor to creditor. 2 La. 387. See, in general, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 351; 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 618; 18 La. 543; 1 La. Ann. 340; 2 La. Ann. 872.

PLEDGEE. One to whom a thing is pledged.

PLEDGERY. Suretyship.

PLEDGES. In pleading. Those persons who became sureties for the plaintiff's prosecution of the suit. Their names were anciently appended at the foot of the declaration. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledges, or they might be omitted altogether (1 Tidd, Prac. 455; Archb. Civ. Pl. 171), or inserted at any time before judgment (4 Johns. [N. Y.] 90), and are now omitted.

PLEDGES TO RESTORE. In England, before the plaintiff in foreign attachment can issue execution against the property in the hands of the garnishee, he must find "pledges to restore," consisting of two householders, who enter into a recognizance for the restoration of the property, as a security for the protection of the defendant; for, as the plaintiff's debt is not proved in any stage of the proceedings, the court guards the rights of the absent defendant by taking security on his behalf, so that, if he should afterwards disprove the plaintiff's claim, he may obtain restitution of the property attached. Brand, For. Attachm. 93.

PLEDGOR. The party who makes a pledge.

PLEE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An action or suit; a "plea" in the ancient sense of the word. Parsonels plees pledables par attachments, personal actions which may be prosecuted by attachments. Britt. c. 32. En plees realx, et auxi en plees personals, in real actions, and also in personal actions. Litt. § 464.

A plea, in the modern sense. Plee en barre, a plea in bar. Litt. § 492.

PLEGIABILIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. That may be pledged; the subject of pledge or security. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 98.

PLEGII DE PROSEQUENDO. Pledges to prosecute with effect an action of replevin.

PLEGII DE RETORNO HABENDO. Pledges to return the subject of distress, party bringing the action of replevin. 3 should the right be determined against the Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 422, note.

PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS, WRIT DE. The name of an ancient writ in the English law, which lies where a man becomes pledge or surety for another to pay a certain sum of money at a certain day. After the day, if the debtor does not pay the debt, and the surety be compelled to pay, he shall have this writ to compel the debtor to pay the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 321.

PLENA AETAS. Of full age.

PLENA ET CELERIS JUSTITIA FIAT partibus. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties. 4 Inst. 67.

PLENA FORISFACTURA. A forfeiture of all that one possesses.

PLENA PROBATIO. In civil law. A term used to signify full proof, in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is only a presumption. Code, 4. 19. 5. et seq.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 119.

PLENARTY. In ecclesiastical law. Signifies that a benefice is full. See "Avoidance."

PLENARY. Full; complete.

In the courts of admiralty, and in the English ecclesiastical courts, causes or suits in respect of the different course of proceedings in each are termed "plenary" or "summary." Plenary, or full and formal, suits are those in which the proceedings must be full and formal; the term "summary" is applied to those causes where the proceedings are more succinct and less formal. 2 Chit. Prac. 481.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT (Lat. he has fully administered). In pleading. A plea in bar entered by an executor or administrator, by which he affirms that he had not in his possession at the time of the commencement of the suit, nor has had at any time since, any goods of the deceased to be administered. When the plaintiff replies that the defendant had goods, etc., in his possession at that time, and the parties join issue, the burden of the proof will be on the plaintiff. See 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 323; 6 Term R. 10; 1 Barn. & Ald. 254; 11 Viner, Abr. 349; 12 Viner, Abr. 185; 2 Phil. Ev. 295; 6 Comyn, Dig. 311.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT PRAETER (Lat. he has fully administered except). In pleading. A plea by which a defendant executor or administrator admits that there is a balance remaining in his hands unadministered.

PLENE COMPUTAVIT (Lat. he has fully accounted). In pleading. A plea in an action of account render, by which the defendant avers that he has fully accounted. Bac. Abr. "Accompt" (E). This plea does not admit the liability of the defendant to account. 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 153.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. Possessing full powers; as, a minister plenipotentiary is one authorized fully to settle the matters connected with his mission, subject, however, to the ratification of the government by which he is authorized.

PLENUM DOMINIUM (Lat.) The unlimited right which the owner has to use his property as he deems proper, without accountability to any one.

PLEYNTYFE (L. Fr. from pleyndre, to complain). In old English law. Plaintiff; a complaining party.

PLEYTO. In Spanish law. The pleadings in a cause. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 7.

PLIGHT. An old English word, used sometimes for the estate with the habit and quality of the land. Co. Litt. 221. It extends to a rent charge, and to a possibility of dower. Id.; 1 Rolle, Abr. 447; Litt. § 289.

PL'IT'M. A contraction of placitum. Pl'ito, of placito. 1 Inst. Cl. 11.

PLOUGH BOTE. An allowance made to a rural tenant of wood sufficient for ploughs, harrows, carts, and other instruments of husbandry.

PLOUGH LAND. In old English law. An uncertain quantity of land. According to some opinions, it contains one hundred and twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69a.

PLOUGH SILVER. Money paid by tenants in composition of a duty to plough.

PLUMBATURA (Lat. from plumbum, lead). In the civil law. Soldering. Dig. 6. 1. 23. 5.

PLUMBUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Lead. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 2.

PLUNDER. The capture of personal property on land by a public enemy, with a view of making it his own. The property so captured is called "plunder."

The taking by open force, as by pirates. It has been used in the sense of aggravated and open larceny. 8 Fed. 232.

PLUNDERAGE. In maritime law. The embezzlement of goods on board of a ship is known by the name of "plunderage."

The rule of the maritime law in such cases is that the whole crew shall be responsible for the property thus embezzled, because there must be some negligence in finding out the depredator. Abb. Shipp. 457; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 17; 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 200, 239, 243; 4 Bos. & P. 347.

PLURAL. Words implying the plural may be construed to include the singular: the greater includes the less. 1 Iowa, 282; 60 Mich. 462; 54 Mich. 245.

PLURALIS NUMERUS EST DUOBUS contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rolle, 476.

PLURALITER. In the plural; plurally.

PLURALITY. The greatest number of votes given for any one person.

Plurality has the meaning, as used in governmental law, given above. Thus, if there are three candidates, for whom four hundred, three hundred and fifty, and two hundred and fifty votes are respectively given, the one receiving four hundred has a plurality, while five hundred and one would be a majority of the votes cast.

PLURES COHAEREDES SUNT QUASI unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several coheirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess. Co. Litt. 163.

PLURES PARTICIPES SUNT QUASI unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Several part owners are as one body, by reason of the unity of their rights. Co. Litt. 164.

PLURIES (Lat. many times). A writ issued subsequently to a first and second (alias) of the same kind, which have proved ineffectual. The name is given to it from the word pluries in the Latin form of the writ: "We command you, as we have often (pluries) commanded you before," which distinguishes it from those which have gone before. Pluries is variously translated, in the modern forms of writs, by "formerly," "more than once," "often." The next writ to the pluries is called the second pluries, and so on. 3 Bl. Comm. 283, Append. 15; Nat. Brev. 33.

PLURIS PETITIO (Lat.) In Scotch practice. An excessive demand.

PLUS EXEMPLA QUAM PECCATA NOcent. Examples hurt more than offenses.

PLUS PECCAT AUCTOR QUAM ACtor. The instigator of a crime is worse than he who perpetrates it. 5 Coke, 99.

PLUS PETITIO. In Roman law. A phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one's pleadings. This "more" might be claimed in four different respects, viz.: (1) Re, i. e., in amount (e. g., £50 for £5); (2) loco, i. e., in place (e. g., delivery at some place more difficult to effect than the place specified); (3) tempore, i. e., in time (e. g., claiming payment on the 1st of August of what is not due till the 1st of September); and (4) causa, i. e., in quality (e. g., claiming a dozen of champagne, when the contract was only for a dozen of wine generally). Prior to Justinian's time, this offense was in general fatal to the action; but, under the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justinian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second. Brown.

PLUS VALET CONSUEUDO QUAM concessio. Custom is more powerful than grant.

PLUS VALET UNUS OCULATUS TESTIS, quam auriti decem. One eye witness is better than ten ear ones. 4 Inst. 279.

PLUS VIDENT OCULI QUAM OCLUS. Eyes see more than one eye. 4 Inst. 160.

PO. LO. SUO. An old abbreviation for the words "ponit loco suo," put in his place, used in warrants of attorney. Towns. Pl. 431.

POACHING. Unlawful taking of game from the land of another. Unlawfully entering land, in nighttime, armed, with intent to destroy game. 1 Russ. Crimes, 469; 2 Steph. Comm. 82; 2 Chit. St. 221-245.

POBLADOR. In Spanish law. A colonizer; he who peoples; the founder of a colony.

POCKET JUDGMENT. A statute merchant which was enforceable at any time after nonpayment on the day assigned, without further proceedings. Wharton.

POCKET SHERIFF. In English law. A sheriff appointed by sole authority of the crown, not being one of the three nominated by the judges in the exchequer. 1 Bl. Comm. 342*.

POENA AD PAUCOS, METUS AD OMNES perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

POENA CORPORALIS. Corporal punishment.

POENA EX DELICTO DEFUNCTI, HAERES teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty inflicted for the crime of the ancestor. 2 Inst. 198.

POENA NON POTEST, CULPA PERENNIS erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual. 21 Viner, Abr. 271.

POENA PILLORALIS. In old English law. Punishment of the pillory. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 11.

POENAE POTIUS MOLLIENDAE QUAM exasperandae sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated. 3 Inst. 220.

POENAE SINT RESTRINGENDAE. Punishments should be restrained. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 29.

POENAE SUOS TENERE DEBET ACTORES et non alios. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others. Bracton, 380b; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 12; Id. lib. 4, c. 17, § 17.

POENALIS (Lat. from poena). In the civil law. Penal; imposing a penalty; claiming or enforcing a penalty. Actiones poenales, actions for penalties; penal actions. Inst. 4. 6. 12.

POENITENTIA (Lat. from poenitere, to repent). In the civil law. Repentance; a change of mind or purpose; the rescinding of a contract.

POER, Poetr, Poair. L. Fr. Power; authority.

POET, Poit, Puit, Pout. L. Fr. May; can.

POINDING. In Scotch law. That diligence (q. v.) affecting movable subjects by which their property is carried directly to the creditor. Poining is real or personal. Ersk. Inst. 3. 6. 11.

—Personal. Poining of the goods belonging to the debtor, and of those goods only.

It may have for its warrant either letters of horning, containing a clause for poining, and then it is executed by messengers; or precepts of poining, granted by sheriffs, commissaries, etc., which are executed by their proper officers. No cattle pertaining to the plough, nor instrument of tillage, can be poined in the time of laboring or tilling the ground, unless where the debtor has no other goods they may be poined. Ersk. Inst. 3. 6. 11. This process is somewhat similar to distress.

—Real. Poining of the ground. Though it be properly a diligence, this is generally considered by lawyers as a species of real action, and is so called to distinguish it from personal poining, which is founded merely on an obligation to pay.

Every debitum fundi, whether legal or conventional, is a foundation for this action. It is therefore competent to all creditors in debts which make a real burden on lands. As it proceeds on a real right, it may be directed against all goods that can be found on the lands burdened; but goods brought upon the ground by strangers are not subject to this diligence. Even the goods of a tenant cannot be poined for more than his term's rent. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 3.

POINT. A single distinct proposition or principle of law.

POINT RESERVED. A point or question of law which the court, not being fully satisfied how to decide, in the hurried trial of a cause, rules in favor of the party offering it, but subject to revision on a motion for a new trial. If, after argument, it be found to have been ruled correctly, the verdict is supported; if otherwise, it is set aside.

POISON. In medical jurisprudence. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life. Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 493; Tayl. Poisons (2d Am. Ed.) 18.

POLE. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half.

POLICE. That species of superintendence by magistrates which has principally for its object the maintenance of public tranquillity among the citizens. The officers who are appointed for this purpose are also called the police.

"Police is in general a system of precaution either for the prevention of crime or of calamities." Bentham.

The due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the individuals of the state, like members of a well-governed family, are bound to conform their general behavior to the rules of propriety. 4 Bl. Comm. 162.

The word "police" has three significations. The first relates to the measures which are adopted to keep order, the laws and ordinances on cleanliness, health, the markets, etc. The second has for its object to procure to the authorities the means of detecting even the smallest attempts to commit crime, in order that the guilty may be arrested before their plans are carried into execution, and delivered over to the justice of the country. The third comprehends the laws, ordinances, and other measures which require the citizens to exercise their rights in a particular form.

"Police has also been divided into "administrative police," which has for its object to maintain constantly public order in every part of the general administration; and "judiciary police," which is intended principally to prevent crimes by punishing the criminals. Its object is to punish crimes which the administrative police has not been able to prevent.

POLICE JURY. In Louisiana. A name given to certain officers who collectively exercise jurisdiction in certain cases of police; as, levying taxes, regulating roads, etc.

POLICE JUSTICE. A magistrate having criminal jurisdiction of minor offenses similar to that of a justice of the peace, but charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of the conservator of the peace. The prefix "police" serves merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction. 58 N. Y. 530. Usually a city officer.

POLICE POWER. The general power of government in the administration of its police (q. v.), to preserve and promote the welfare of the public, even at the expense of infringing the private rights of individuals. Cooley, Const. Lim. 704.

It is an exception to the right of the citizen to conduct himself and use his property in such manner as he may see fit.

"It involves a provision and means of enforcing the legal maxim which underlies all law,—sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. The power of the government to impose this restraint is called 'police power.'" Tiedeman, Lim. Police Power, § 1.

"The police power of a state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and to the protection of all property within the state, and hence to the making of all regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety." 95 U. S. 465.

POLICY. In insurance. The instrument whereby insurance is made by an underwriter in favor of an assured, expressed, implied, or intended, against some risk, peril, or contingency in reference to some subject. It is usually either marine, or against fire, or on a life.

(1) An interest policy is one where the insured has a real, substantial, assignable interest in the thing insured.

(2) An open policy is one on which the value is to be proved by the assured. 1 Phil. Ins. §§ 4, 6, 7, 27, 439, 948, 1178. By an "open policy" is also sometimes meant, in the United States, one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time. 12 La. Ann. 259; 19 N. Y. 305; 6 Gray (Mass.) 214.

(3) A valued policy is one where a value has been set on the ship or goods insured, and this value inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. In such a policy, the value of the subject is expressly agreed, or is, as between the parties, the amount insured.

(4) A wager policy is a pretended insurance, founded on an ideal risk, where the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can therefore sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. These policies are strongly reprobated. 3 Kent, Comm. 225.

POLICY OF THE LAW. Public policy (q. v.)

POLITIAE LEGIBUS NON LEGES POLITIÆ adaptandæ. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics. Hob. 154.

POLITICAL. Pertaining to policy, or the administration of the government. 90 Ill. 563. Political rights are those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government; "rights" being synonymous with "power." 90 Ill. 563. They are distinguished from civil rights, which are the rights which a man enjoys as regards other individuals, and not in relation to the government. A political corporation is one which has principally for its object the administration of the government, or to which the powers of government, or a part of such powers, have been delegated. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 182, 197, 198.

POLITICAL ARITHMETIC. An expression sometimes used to signify the art of making calculations on matters relating to a nation; the revenues, the value of land and effects; the produce of lands and manufactures; the population, and the general statistics of a country. Wharton.

POLITICAL OFFENSES. A class of offenses excluded from many extradition treaties, and including, generally, crimes against the government as such, and crimes incident to political uprisings. Treason, sedition, lese majestae, etc., are examples. Spear, Extradition, 48.

The nature of political offenses is open to treaty definition, and in some treaties it has been defined to exclude the assassination of the ruler.

POLITICAL OFFICES. Such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or with the execution of the orders of a superior, as the president or the head of a department. 13 Wall. (U. S.) 568, 575.

POLITICAL OR CIVIL LIBERTY. Natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

POLITICAL QUESTIONS. Questions involving executive policy, and within the power of the executive to determine, such as the recognition of a particular government in a foreign state. Such questions will not be decided by the courts. See 7 How. (U. S.) 39.

POLITICAL RIGHTS. Rights which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government, the word "rights," as so used, being synonymous with "power." 90 Ill. 563.

A political right is a right exercisable in the establishment or administration of government, while a civil right is a right accorded to every member of a distinct community or nation with reference to property, family or marriage, and the like. Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government. 203 Ill. 104; 151 Ill. 41; 122 N. E. 344. See Civil Rights; Political.

POLITICS. The science and art of government; the science dealing with the organization, regulation and administration of a state in both its internal and external affairs. 264 Ill. 313.

POLL. A head. Hence poll tax is the name of a tax imposed upon the people at so much a head.

To poll a jury is to require that each juror shall himself declare what is his verdict. This may be done, at the instance of either party, at any time before the verdict is recorded, according to the practice in some states. See 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 23; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 188; 1 Ill. 109; 7 Ill. 342; 9 Ill. 336. In some states it lies in the discretion of the judge. 1 McCord (S. C.) 24, 525; 22 Ga. 431.

—In Conveyancing. A deed poll, or single deed, is one made by a single party, whose edges are polled, or shaved even, in distinction from an "indenture," whose sides are indented, and which is executed by more than one party. 2 Bl. Comm. 296. See "Deed Poll."

POLLICITATION. In civil law. A promise not yet accepted by the person to whom it is made. It differs from a contract, inasmuch as the latter includes a concurrence of intention in two parties, one of whom promises something to the other, who accepts, on his part, of such promise. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 2; Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, sec. 1, art. 1, § 2.

POLLS. The place where electors cast in their votes.

POLYANDRY. The state of a woman who has several husbands. Polyandry is legalized only in Thibet.

POLYGAMIA EST PLURIUM SIMUL VI-RORUM UXORUMVE CONNUBIUM. Polygamy is the marriage with many husbands or wives at one time. 3 Inst. 88.

POLYGAMY. The act or state of a person who, knowing that he has two or more wives, or that she has two or more husbands, marries another.

It differs from "bigamy" (q. v.) Comyn, Dig. "Justices" (S 5); Dict. de Jur.; 3 Inst. 88.

But "bigamy" is now commonly used even where "polygamy" would be strictly correct. 1 Russ. Crimes, 186, note. On the other hand, "polygamy" is used where "bigamy" would be strictly correct. Gen. St. Mass. 1860, p. 817.

POLYGARCHY. A term used to express a government which is shared by several persons; as, when two brothers succeed to the throne, and reign jointly.

POND. A body of stagnant water; a pool, either natural or artificial. 13 Pick. (Mass.) 265. A pond differs from a lake only in size.

PONDERANTUR TESTES NON NUME-rantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

1 Starkie, Ev. 554; Best, Ev. 426, § 389; 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 105, 109.

PONDUS (Lat.) In old English law. Poundage; literally, weight. A duty anciently paid to the king.

PONDUS REGIS (Lat.) In old English law. The king's weight; the standard weight appointed by the king. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 276.

PONE (Lat. ponere, to put). In English practice. An original writ issuing out of chancery, for the purpose of removing a plaint from an inferior court into the superior courts at Westminster. The word signifies "put,"—put by gages, etc. The writ is called from the words it contained when in Latin, pone per vadium et salvos plegios, etc., put by gage and safe pledges, etc. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 69, 70a; Wilkinson, Repl. Index.

PONE PER VADIUM. In English practice. An obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute. It was so called from the words of the writ, "pone per vadium et salvos plegios," "put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant." It issued out of the common pleas, being grounded on the non-appearance of the defendant at the return of the original writ, and commanded the sheriff to take certain of his goods, which he should forfeit if he did not appear or make him find sureties. 3 Bl. Comm. 210.

PONENDIS IN ASSISIS. An obsolete writ to impanel a jury.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM. A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 133.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTI-
ONEM. A writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings, before them, according to St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 31).

PONERE (Lat.) To put. The word is used in the old law in various connections, in all of which it can be translated by the English verb "put." See Glanv. lib. 2, c. 3.

PONIT SE (Lat. puts himself). In English criminal practice. When the defendant pleads "not guilty," his plea is recorded by the officer of the court, either by writing the words "po. se," an abbreviation of the words ponit se super patriam, puts himself upon his country, or, as at the central criminal court, non cul. 2 Den. C. C. 392. See "Arraignment."

PONTAGE. A contribution towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairs of a bridge. The toll taken for this purpose also bears this name. Obsolete.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS. An old writ directed to the sheriff, requiring him to charge one or more to repair a bridge. Reg. Orig. 153.

POOL. A pond (q. v.)

A combination of independent persons or corporations for the division of earnings. See "Pooling Contract."

A pool or trust is a combination having the intention and power, or tendency, to monopolize business, or to control production, or to interfere with trade, or to fix and regulate prices, and the like. The primary object of a pool or trust is to secure a monopoly. The law does not call for proof of monopoly in order to declare such combinations unlawful. 114 Ill. App. 112.

POOLING CONTRACT. Strictly, an agreement between common carriers to divide their earnings on an agreed basis, irrespective of the proportions which such earnings bore to each other, the same being put into a common fund or "pool" (15 Fed. 667; 23 Fed. 306); but the term is loosely applied to other combinations of carriers. See 126 Ind. 348.

POOR DEBTOR. One who, being imprisoned in a civil action, has no property to pay the debt whereon the same was issued, and who is accordingly entitled to his release on making oath to such fact, and on other conditions variously affixed by statute.

POOR DEBTOR'S OATH. An oath of poverty, on taking which one imprisoned on execution is entitled to release.

POPE. The bishop of Rome and the head of the Roman Catholic church. He is a temporal prince. He is elected by certain officers called "cardinals," and remains in power during life. In the 9th Collation of the Authentics, it is declared the bishop of Rome hath the first place of sitting in all assemblies, and the bishop of Constantinople the second. Ridley, Civ. & Ecc. Law, pt. 1, c. 3, § 10.

POPULAR ACTION. An action given by statute to any one who will sue for the penalty. A qui tam action. Dig. 47. 23. 1.

POPULISCITUM (Lat.) An act of the commons; same as plebiscitum. Ainsworth.

A law passed by the whole people assembled in comitia centuriata, and at the proposal of one of the senate, instead of a tribune, as was the case with a plebiscitum. Tayl. Civ. Law, 178; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 26, 37.

POPULUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. The people; the whole body of the citizens, including, with the plebs or commonalty, the patricians and senators; appellatione populi universi cives significantur, connumeratis etiam patriciis et senatoribus. Inst. 1. 2. 4.

PORCION. In Spanish law. A part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of land. See 16 S. W. 49.

PORT. A place to which the officers of the customs are appropriated, and which includes the privileges and guidance of all members and creeks which are allotted to them. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 726; Postlethwaite.

A proper place for the lading or unlading of vessels, recognized and supervised for maritime purposes by the public authorities.

A port differs from a haven, and includes something more. First, it is a place at which vessels may arrive and discharge or take in their cargoes. Second, it comprehends a ville, city, or borough, called in Latin caput corpus, for the reception of mariners and merchants, for securing the goods and bringing them to market, and for victualling the ships. Third, it is impressed with its legal character by the civil authority. Hale de Port. Mar. c. 2; 1 Harg. Tr. 46, 73; Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 5); Comyn, Dig. "Navigation" (E); 4 Inst. 148; Callis, Sewers, 56; 2 Chit. Com. Law, 2; Dig. 50. 16. 59; Id. 43. 12. 1. 13; Id. 47. 10. 15. 7; Id. 39. 4. 15.

PORT TOLL. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

PORTARE. (L. Lat.) In old English practice. To bear; to bring.

PORTATICA (Law Lat.) In English law. The generic name for port duties charged to ships. Harg. Tr. 74.

PORTER. The name of an ancient English officer who bore or carried a rod before the justices. The door keeper of the English parliament also bears this name.

One who is employed as a common carrier to carry goods from one place to another in the same town is also called a porter. Such person is, in general, answerable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496.

PORTGREVE (from Saxon gerefa, reeve or bailiff, and port). A chief magistrate in certain maritime towns. The chief magistrate of London was anciently so called, as appears from a charter of King William I. Instead of this portgreve of London, the succeeding kings appointed two bailiffs, and afterwards a mayor. Camden, Hist. 325.

PORTMEN. The burgesses of Ipswich and of the Cinque Ports were so called.

PORTMOTE. In old English law. A court held in ports or haven towns, and sometimes in inland towns also. Cowell; Blount.

PORTORIA (Lat.) In civil law. Duties paid in ports on merchandise. Code, 4. 61. 3. Taxes levied in old times at city gates; tolls for passing over bridges. Vicat; Spelman.

PORTSALES. Auctions were anciently so called, because they took place in ports.

PORTSOKA, or PORTSOKEN. The suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction. Somner; Cowell.

POSITIVE. Express; absolute; not doubtful. This word is frequently used in composition.

POSITIVE CONDITION. One in which the thing which is the subject of it must happen; as, if I marry. It is opposed to a negative condition, which is where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen; as, if I do not marry.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE. That which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence (q. v.) 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3057.

POSITIVE FRAUD. The intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 186; Dig. 4. 3. 1. 2; Id. 2. 14. 7. 9. It is cited in opposition to constructive fraud.

POSITIVE LAW. Law actually ordained or established, under human sanctions, as distinguished from the law of nature or natural law, which comprises those considerations of justice, right, and universal expediency that are announced by the voice of reason or of revelation. Municipal law is chiefly, if not essentially, positive; while the law of nations has been deemed by many of the earlier writers as merely an application of the law of nature. That part of the law of nations which rests on positive law may be considered in a threefold point of view: First, the universal voluntary law, or those rules which become law by the uniform practice of nations in general, and by the manifest utility of the rules themselves; second, the customary law, or that which, from motives of convenience, has, by tacit but implied agreement, prevailed not necessarily among all nations nor with so permanent a utility as to become a portion of the universal voluntary law, but enough to have acquired a prescriptive obligation among certain states so situated as to be mutually benefited by it (1 Taunt. 241); third, the conventional law, or that which is agreed between particular states by express treaty, a law binding on the parties among whom such treaties are in force. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 28.

POSITIVI JURIS (Law Lat.) Of positive law. "That was a rule positivi juris; I do not mean to say an unjust one." Lord Ellenborough, 12 East, 639.

POSITO UNO OPPOSITORUM NEGATUR alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rolle, 422.

POSSE. This word is used substantively to signify a possibility. For example, such a thing is in posse, that is, such a thing may possibly be. When the thing is in being, the phrase to express it is, in esse.

POSSE COMITATUS (Lat.) The power of the county.

Citizens summoned by the sheriff to assist him in the execution of process.

POSSESSED. This word is applied to the right and enjoyment of a termor, or a person having a term, who is said to be possessed, and not seised. Bac. Tr. 335; Poph. 76; Dyer, 369.

POSSESSIO (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. The detention of a thing; divided into, first, natural, or the naked detention of a thing, without intention to acquire ownership; second, civil, or the detention of a thing to which one has a right, or with intention of acquiring ownership. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1288; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 210, 213.

—In Old English Law. Possession; seisin. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 227; Bracton, lib. 2, c. 17; Cowell, "Possession." But seisina cannot be of an estate less than freehold; possessio can. New England Sheriff, 141; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 450; 6 Metc. (Mass.) 439.

POSSESSIO BONA FIDE (Lat.) Possession in good faith.

POSSESSIO BONORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The possession of goods. More commonly termed bonorum possessio.

POSSESSIO CIVILIS. In Roman law. A legal possession, i. e., a possessing accompanied with the intention to be or to thereby become owner, and, as so understood, it was distinguished from "possessio naturalis," otherwise called "nuda detentio," which was a possessing without any such intention. Possessio civilis was the basis of usucapio or of longi temporis possessio, and was usually, but not necessarily, adverse possession. Brown.

POSSESSIO EST QUASI PEDIS POSITIO. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot. 3 Coke, 42.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS (Lat. the brother's possession). A technical phrase applied in the English law relating to descents, to denote the possession by one in such privity with a person as to be considered the person's own possession.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS DE FEODO SIMPLICI facit sororem esse haeredem. Possession of the brother in fee simple makes the sister to be heir. 3 Coke, 42; 2 Bl. Comm. 227; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 473.

POSSESSIO NATURALIS. See "Possessio Civilis."

POSSESSIO PACIFICA POUR ANNS 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 26.

POSSESSION. The detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself, or by another who keeps or exercises it in his name.

The owning or having a thing in one's power. 64 N. Y. 80. "Possession of land is the holding of and exercise of exclusive dominion over it." 25 Iowa, 177.

By the possession of a thing, we always conceive the condition in which not only one's own dealing with the thing is physically possible, but every other person's dealing with it is capable of being excluded. Thus, the seaman possesses his ship, but not the water in which it moves, although he makes each subservise his purpose.

(1) Actual possession exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party. 3 Dev. (N. C.) 34.

(2) Constructive possession is that which exists in contemplation of law, without actual personal occupation. 11 Vt. 129; 64 N. Y. 80. And see 1 McLean (U. S.) 214, 265; 2 Bl. Comm. 116.

(3) Adverse possession is possession inconsistent with the right of the true owner. See "Adverse Possession."

(4) Naked possession, called also "bare possession," is actual possession without shadow or pretense of right. 3 Colo. 360. —In Louisiana.

(1) Civil possession exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title, and under the conviction of possessing as owner. Civ. Code La. arts. 3392, 3394.

(2) Natural possession is that by which a man detains a thing corporeal; as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in his possession. Natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession, or with a title which is void. Civ. Code La. arts. 3391, 3393.

POSSESSION MONEY. An allowance to one put in possession of goods taken under writ of feri facias. Holthouse.

POSSESSION VAUT TITRE (Fr.) In English law, as in most systems of jurisprudence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about). Brown.

POSSESSION, WRIT OF. Process to put into execution a judgment in ejectment for delivery of the premises. 2 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 310, § 37.

POSSESSOR. He who holds, detains, or enjoys a thing, either by himself or his agent, which he claims as his own.

In general, the possessor of personal chattels is presumed to be the owner; and in case of real estate he has a right to receive the profits until a title adverse to his possession has been established, leaving him subject to an action for the mesne profits.

POSSESSOR BONA FIDE. See "Bona Fide Possessor, etc."

POSSESSORY. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

POSSESSORY ACTION.

—In Old English Law. A real action, in which the plaintiff, called the "demandant," sought to recover the possession of land, tenements, and hereditaments. On account of the great nicety required in its management, and the introduction of more expeditious methods of trying titles by other actions, it has been laid aside. Finch, Laws, 257; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2640.

—In Louisiana. An action by which one claims to be maintained in the possession of an immovable property, or of a right upon or growing out of it, when he has been disturbed; or to be reinstated to that possession, when he has been divested or evicted. 2 La. 227, 254.

—In Scotch Law. An action by which the possession of heritable or movable property may be recovered and tried. An action of molestation is one of them. Paterson, Comp. §. 1058, note.

POSSESSORY JUDGMENT. In Scotch practice. A judgment which entitles a person who has uninterruptedly been in possession for seven years to continue his possession until the question of right be decided in due course of law. Bell, Dict.

POSSIBILITAS (Lat.) In old English law. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur, a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. 1 Rolle, 321. After a possibility has become executed, it will not be revived by a dissolution of the estate, as by a divorce. Post executionem status, lex non patitur possibilitatem, after the execution of an estate, the law does not suffer a possibility. 3 Bulst. 108.

POSSIBILITY. An uncertain thing which may happen. Lilly, Reg. An expectancy which is not founded on any limitation, provision, or trust, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, who may be disinherited by will, or may not survive the ancestor.

(1) A bare possibility is one that is not coupled with an interest, as that a son may inherit the lands of his father, who is living.

(2) A possibility coupled with an interest is where the person who is to take an estate upon the happening of a contingency is ascertained and fixed.

(3) A near or common possibility is such as death or death without issue.

(4) A remote possibility is such as a remainder to the heirs of a person not in being. 4 Kent, Comm. 206, 262.

POSSIBILITY ON A POSSIBILITY. See "Double Possibility."

POSSIDERE. (Lat.) To possess.

POSSIDERE PRO HEREDE. To possess in the belief that one is heir. Inst. 4, 15, 3.

POSSIDERE PRO POSSESSORE. To possess a part or the whole of an inheritance, without any right, and with the knowledge that it does not belong to one. Inst. 4, 15, 3.

POSSUMUS. We can; we can or may do.

POST (Lat.) After.

—In Real-Estate Law. When two or more alienations or descents have taken place between an original intruder and the tenant or defendant in a writ of entry, the writ is said to be in the post, because it states that the tenant had not entry unless after the ouster of the original intruder. 3 Bl. Comm. 182.

—In Military Law. A station where military duty is performed, or stores are kept, or something connected with military affairs is done. 94 U. S. 219.

—In Latin Phrases. A preposition meaning "after."

POST-ACT. An after-act; an act done afterwards.

POST CONQUESTUM. After the Conquest. Words first used in the king's title by King Edward I., 1328, to distinguish the Edwards after the Conquest from those before it, and constantly used in the time of Edward III. Tomlins.

POST DATE. To date an instrument a time after that on which it is made. See "Date."

POST DIEM (Lat.) After the day; as a plea of payment post diem,—after the day when the money became due. Comyn, Dig. "Pleaser" (2 W 29).

POST DISSEISIN. In English law. The name of a writ which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again disseised by a former disseisor. Jacob.

POST ENTRY. In maritime law. An entry made by a merchant upon the importation of goods, after the goods have been weighed, measured, or gauged, to make up the deficiency of the original or prime entry. The custom of making such entries has arisen from the fact that a merchant in making the entry at the time of importation is not or may not be able to calculate exactly the duties which he is liable to pay. He therefore makes an approximately correct entry, which he subsequently corrects by the post entry. See Chit. Com. Law, 746.

POST EXECUTIONEM STATUS LEX non patitur possibilitatem. After the execution of the estate, the law suffers not a possibility. 3 Bulst. 108.

POST FACTO (Lat.) After the fact. See "Ex Post Facto."

POST-FACTUM. An after-act; an act done afterwards; a post-act.

POST FINE. In old conveyancing. A fine or sum of money, otherwise called the "king's silver," formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

POST LITEM MOTAM (Lat.) After the commencement of the suit.

Declarations or acts of the parties made post litem motam are presumed to be made with reference to the suit then pending, and, for this reason, are not evidence in favor of the persons making them; while those made before an action has been commenced, in some cases, as when a pedigree is to be proved, may be considered as evidence. 4 Campb. 401.

POST MORTEM (Lat.) After death; as, an examination post mortem is an examination made of a dead body to ascertain the cause of death; an inquisition post mortem is one made by the coroner.

POST-NATUS (Lat.) Literally, after-born. It is used by the old law writers to designate the second son.

POST NOTES. A species of banknotes payable at a distant period, and not on demand. 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 463. A kind of banknotes intended to be transmitted a distance by post. See 24 Me. 36.

POST NUPTIAL. Something which takes place after marriage; as, a post-nuptial settlement, which is a conveyance made generally by the husband for the benefit of the wife.

POST OBIT (Lat.) An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money, and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living. 7 Mass. 119; 6 Madd. 111; 5 Ves. 57; 19 Ves. 628; 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 95.

Equity will, in general, relieve a party from these unequal contracts, as they are fraudulent on the ancestor. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 342; 2 P. Wms. 182, 2 Sim. 183,

192; 5 Sim. 524. But relief will be granted only on equitable terms; for he who seeks equity must do equity. 1 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 2, § 13, note (p); 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 344. See "Catching Bargain;" "Macedonian Decree."

POST PROLEM SUSCITATAM. After issue born. Co. Litt. 19b.

POST-TERMINAL SITTINGS. Sittings after term. See "Sittings After Term."

POST TERMINUM. After term, or post term. The return of a writ not only after the day assigned for its return, but after the term also, for which a fee was due. The fee itself. Cowell.

POSTEA (Lat. afterwards). In practice. The indorsement, on the nisi prius record purporting to be the return of the judge before whom a cause is tried, of what has been done in respect of such record.

It states the day of trial, before what judge, by name, the cause is tried, and also who is or was an associate of such judge. It also states the appearance of the parties by their respective attorneys, or their defaults, and the summoning and choice of the jury, whether those who were originally summoned, or those who were tales, or taken from the standers-by. It then states the finding of the jury upon oath, and the assessment of the damages, with the occasion thereof, together with the costs.

POSTERIORA DEROGANT PRIORIBUS. Posterior things derogate from things prior. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 90.

POSTERIORES (Lat.) This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree. It is still used in making genealogical tables.

POSTERIORITY. Being or coming after. It is a word of comparison, the correlative of which is "priority;" as, when a man holds lands from two landlords, he holds from his ancient landlord by priority, and from the other by posteriority. 2 Inst. 392.

These terms, "priority" and "posteriority," are also used in cases of liens. The first are prior liens, and are to be paid in the first place; and the last are posterior liens, and are not entitled to payment until the former have been satisfied.

POSTERITY. All the descendants of a person in a direct line.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. One born after the death of its father, or, when the Caesarian operation is performed, after that of the mother.

POSTLIMINIUM (Lat. from post, after, and limen, a threshold).

—In the Civil Law. The return or restoration of a person to a former estate or right; sometimes, in English, "postliminy."

A fiction applied in the case of a person who had been taken prisoner by an enemy, and afterwards returned from captivity, by which he was supposed never to have been abroad, and was on this ground restored to his former rights. Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est in civitate semper fuisse, postliminy supposes that he who was taken prisoner had always been in the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5. See Dig. 49. 15.

Postliminium included things as well as persons. Paulus, in the Digests, defines it to be jus amissae rei recipiendae ab extraneo, et in statum pristinum restituendae, inter nos ac liberos populos regesque moribus, legibus constitutum. Nam quod bello amissimus, aut etiam citra bellum, hoc si rursus recipiamus dicimur postliminio recipere, the right of receiving a lost thing from a foreigner, and of restoring it to its former state, established between us and free nations and kings, by customs and by laws. For whatever we have lost in war, or even not in war, if we receive it again, we are said to receive it postliminio. Dig. 49. 15. 19, pr.

Postliminium is thus analyzed and explained in the Institutes: It is called postliminium from limen (threshold), and post (after). Wherefore we properly say of one who was taken by an enemy, and afterwards came into our borders or limits, that he has returned postliminio. For as the threshold of a house makes, as it were, the limit or boundary of it, so the ancients chose to call the boundary or border of the empire its threshold. Hence limen (a threshold) came to be used in the sense of a limit (finis), and boundary (terminus). And hence the word postliminium was framed, and used to signify that a person had returned to the same threshold which he had lost; ab eo postliminium dictum est, quia ad idem limen revertebatur quod amiserat. So that now a prisoner who is recovered from an enemy, and returns home, is supposed to have returned in postliminy, that is, in the way explained. Inst. 1. 12. 5.

—In the Law of Nations. A right which arises from a return in limen, that is, to the borders of one's country. Grotius de Jur. Belli, lib. 3, c. 9, § 2. A term derived from the Roman law, and extensively used in public law. See its etymology explained by Grotius de Jure Belli lib. 3, c. 9, § 1. See his whole chapter, "De Postliminio." The term is used in maritime law. See Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 4.

POSTLIMINIUM FINGIT EUM QUI CAPTUS EST IN CIVITATE SEMPER FUISSE. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5; Dig. 49. 15.

POSTMAN. A senior barrister in court of exchequer, who has precedence in motions. So called from the place where he sits. 2 Bl. Comm. 28; Wharton. A letter carrier. Webster.

POSTMARK. A stamp or mark put on letters in the post office.

Postmarks are evidence of a letter's having passed through the post office. 2 Campb. 620; 2 Bos. & P. 316; 15 East, 416; 1 Maule & S. 201; 15 Conn. 206.

POSTNATI (Lat. those born after). Applied to American and British subjects born after the separation of England and the United States; also to the subjects of Scotland born after the union of England and Scotland. Those born after an event, as opposed to antenati, those born before. 2 Kent, Comm. 56-59; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 394; 5 Day (Conn.) 169*. See "Antenati."

POSTNUPTIAL SETTLEMENT. A settlement made after marriage upon a wife or children; otherwise called a "voluntary" settlement. 2 Kent, Comm. 173.

POSTPONEMENT. The putting over of a cause for trial to another term. Considerable confusion exists in the use of the words, "continuance," "adjournment," and "postponement." In exact phraseology, "continuance" means the revival of a cause after it has abated, "adjournment" the putting over of a cause from day to day within the term, and "postponement" the putting over of a cause from term to term.

POSTREMO GENITURE. Borough English (q. v.)

POSTULATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. The name of the first act in a criminal proceeding.

A person who wished to accuse another of a crime appeared before the praetor and requested his authority for that purpose, designating the person intended. This act was called postulatio. The postulant (calumnius jurabat) made oath that he was not influenced by a spirit of calumny, but acted in good faith, with a view to the public interest. The praetor received this declaration, at first made verbally, but afterwards in writing, and called a "libel." The postulatio was posted up in the forum, to give public notice of the names of the accuser and the accused. A second accuser sometimes appeared, and went through the same formalities.

Other persons were allowed to appear and join the postulant or principal accuser. These were said postulare subscriptionem, and were denominated subscriptores. Cicero, Caecil. Divinatio, 15. But commonly such persons acted concurrently with the postulant, and inscribed their names at the time he first appeared. Only one accuser, however, was allowed to act; and if the first inscribed did not desist in favor of the second, the right was determined, after discussion, by judges appointed for the purpose. Cicero, Verres, i. 6. The preliminary proceeding was called divinatio, and is well explained in the oration of Cicero entitled Divinatio. See Aulus Gellius, Att. Noct. lib. ii. c. 4.

The accuser having been determined in this manner, he appeared before the praetor, and formally charged the accused by name, specifying the crime. This was called nominis et criminis delatio. The magistrate reduced it to writing, which was called inscriptio, and the accuser and his adjuncts, if any, signed it, subscribebant. This proceeding corresponds to the indictment of the common law.

If the accused appeared, the accuser formally charged him with the crime. If the accused confessed it, or stood mute, he was adjudged to pay the penalty. If he denied it, the inscriptio contained his answer, and he was then in reatu (indicted, as we should say), and was called reus, and a day was fixed, ordinarily after an interval of at least ten days, according to the nature of the case, for the appearance of the parties. In the case of Verres, Cicero obtained one hundred and ten days to prepare his proofs, although he accomplished it in fifty days, and renounced, as he might do, the advantage of the remainder of the time allowed him.

At the day appointed for the trial, the accuser and his adjuncts or colleagues, the accused, and the judges, were summoned by the herald of the praetor. If the accuser did not appear, the case was erased from the roll. If the accused made default, he was condemned. If both parties appeared, a jury was drawn by the praetor or iudex quaestionis. The jury was called jurati homines, and the drawing of them sortitio, and they were taken from a general list made out for the year. Either party had a right to object to a certain extent to the persons drawn, and then there was a second drawing, called subsortitio, to complete the number.

In some tribunals, quaestiones (the jury) were editi (produced) in equal number by the accuser and the accused, and sometimes by the accuser alone, and were objected to or challenged in different ways, according to the nature of the case. The number of the jury also varied according to the tribunal (quaestio). They were sworn before the trial began; hence they were called jurati.

The accusers, and often the subscriptores, were heard, and afterwards the accused, either by himself or by his advocates, of whom he commonly had several. The witnesses, who swore by Jupiter, gave their testimony after the discussions or during the progress of the pleadings of the accuser. In some cases it was necessary to plead the cause on the third day following the first hearing, which was called comperendinatio.

After the pleadings were concluded, the praetor or the iudex quaestionis distributed tablets to the jury, upon which each wrote, secretly, either the letter A. (absolvo), or the letter C. (condemno), or N. L. (non liquet). These tablets were deposited in an urn. The president assorted and counted the tablets. If the majority were for acquitting the accused, the magistrate declared it by the words fecisse non videtur, and by the words fecisse videtur if the majority were for a conviction. If the tablets marked N. L. were so many as to prevent an absolute majority for a conviction or acquittal, the cause was put off for more ample information, ampliatio, which the praetor declared by the word amplius. Such, in brief, was the course of proceedings before the quaestiones perpetuae.

The forms observed in the comitia centuriata and comitia tributa were nearly the same, except the composition of the tribunal and the mode of declaring the vote.

POSTULATIO ACTIONIS (Lat.) In civil law. Demand of an action (actio) from the praetor, which some explain to be a demand of a formula, or form of the suit; others, a demand of leave to bring the cause before the judge. Tayl. Civ. Law, 80; Calv. Lex. "Actio."

POSTUMUS. A child of a testator, born after his death, who if born in his lifetime, would have been entitled to succeed him if he died intestate; a child of a testator conceived before the date of the will, but born afterwards, and before the testator's death. See "Posthumous Child."

POSTUMUS ALIENUS. A posthumous stranger; a posthumous child that would not have been under the testator's power if born in his lifetime. Inst. 2, 20, 28.

POT-DE-VIN. In French law. A sum of money frequently paid, at the moment of entering into a contract, beyond the price agreed upon. It differs from arrha in this, that it is no part of the price of the thing sold, and that the person who has received it cannot, by returning double the amount, or the other party by losing what he has paid, rescind the contract. 18 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52.

POTENTATE. One who has a great power over an extended country; a sovereign.

By the naturalization laws of the United States, an alien is required, before he can be naturalized, to renounce all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereign whatever.

POTENTIA (Lat.) Possibility; power.

POTENTIA DEBET SEQUI JUSTITIAM, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede, justice. 3 Bulst. 199.

POTENTIA EST DUPLEX, REMOTA ET PROPINQUA; et potentia remotissima et vana est quae nunquam venit in actum. Possibility is of two kinds, remote and near; that which never comes into action is a power the most remote and vain. 11 Coke, 51.

POTENTIA INUTILIS FRUSTRATA EST. Useless power is vain.

POTENTIA NON EST NISI AD BONUM. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

POTENTIA PROPINQUA. Common possibility. See "Possibility."

POTEST QUIS RENUNCIARE PRO SE, et suis, jus quod pro se Introductum est. A man may relinquish, for himself and those claiming under him, a right which was introduced for his own benefit. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83.

POTESTAS (Lat.) In civil law. Power; authority; domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves, which makes it nearly synonymous with dominium. See Inst. 1. 9. 12; Dig. 2. 1. 13. 1; Id. 14. 1; Id. 14. 4. 1. 4.

POTESTAS STRICTE INTERPRETATUR. Power should be strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

POTESTAS SUPREMA SEIPSUM DISSOLVARE POTEST, IIGARE NON POTEST. Supreme power can dissolve, but cannot bind itself. Bac. Max. reg. 19.

POTIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTIS. Better is the condition of the defendant than that of the plaintiff. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 664; 15 Pet. (U. S.) 471.

POTIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS. Better is the condition of the possessor. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 201, note.

POTWALLOPER. A term formerly applied to voters in certain boroughs of England, where all who boil (wallop) a pot were entitled to vote. Webster.

POULTRY COUNTER (or COMPTER). The name of a prison formerly existing in London. 2 Mod. 306; 6 Mod. 247. See "Counter."

POUND. Ex vi termini is an enclosed piece of land, secured by a firm structure of stone, or of posts and timber, placed in the ground. 2 Cush. (Mass.) 309.

A place, inclosed by public authority, for the temporary detention of stray animals. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 258; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 514; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 14.

—In Weights. There are two kinds of weights, namely, the troy and the avoirdupois. The pound avoirdupois is the greater, being seven thousand grains, the troy pound, five thousand seven hundred and sixty. The troy pound contains twelve ounces; that of avoirdupois sixteen ounces.

—In Money. The sum of twenty shillings. Previous to the establishment of the federal currency, the different states made use of the pound in computing money. It was of different value in the several states.

Pound sterling is a denomination of money of Great Britain. It is of the value of a sovereign. In calculating the rates of duties, the pound sterling was, by statute, considered and taken as of the value of four dollars and eighty cents. Act March 3, 1883.

Under the same act the pound sterling of Ireland was to be computed, in calculating said duties, at four dollars and ten cents.

POUND BREACH. The offense of breaking a pound in order to take out the cattle impounded. 3 Bl. Comm. 146. The writ de parco fracto, or pound breach, lies for recovering damages for this offense; also case. Id. It is also indictable.

POUNDAGE. In practice. The amount allowed to the sheriff, or other officer, for commissions on the money made by virtue of an execution. This allowance varies in different states, and to different officers.

POUR COMPTE DE QUI IL APPARTIENT (Fr.) For account of whom it may concern. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 11, sec. 4, § 3. A phrase in insurance law.

POUR SEISIR TERRES (Law Fr. for seizing the lands). In old practice. A writ by which the king seized the land which the wife of a tenant in capite, deceased, had for her dower, if she married without his leave. Cowell.

POURPARLER. In French law. The conversations and negotiations which have taken place between the parties in order to make an agreement. These form no part of the agreement. Pardessus, Dr. Com. 142.

POURPARTY (Law Fr.; Law Lat. propars, propartis, propartia). In old English law. Division; a divided share. Literally, "for," or as "divided" (pour parti); a close translation of the Latin phrase pro divisio. To make pourparty is to divide and sever the lands that fall to parceners, which, before partition, they held jointly and pro indiviso. Cowell.

POURPRESTURE. See Purpresture."

POURSUIVANT. A follower; a pursuer. In the ancient English law, it signified an officer who attended upon the king in his wars, at the council table, exchequer, in his court, etc., to be sent as a messenger. A poursuivant was, therefore, a messenger of the king.

POURVEYANCE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from Fr. pourvoire, to provide). In old English law. The providing corn (grain), fuel, victual, and other necessaries for the king's house. Cowell. See "Purveyance."

POURVEYOR (from Fr. pourvoire, to provide). In old English law. An officer of the king or queen, or other great personage, that provided corn (grain) and other victual for their house. Cowell. See "Purveyor."

POUSTIE, or POISTEE (Scotch). In Scotch law. Power. 1 Pitt. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 162. See "Liege Poustie." A word formed from the Latin potestas.

POVERTY AFFIDAVIT. A term used in a few states for an affidavit in forma pauperis. See "In Forma Pauperis."

POWER. The right, ability, or faculty of doing something.

An authority by which one person enables another to do some act for him. 2 Lilly, Abr. 339.

In a more technical sense, an authority vested in one person to dispose of an estate which is vested in another.

(1) Inherent powers are those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

(2) Derivative powers are those which are received from another. This division includes all the powers technically so called. They are of the following classes:

a) Naked, being a right of authority disconnected from any interest of the donee in the subject matter. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 365.

(b) Coupled with an interest, being a right or authority to do some act, together with an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised. Marshall, C. J., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 203.

A power of this class survives the person creating it, and, in case of an excess in execution, renders the act valid so far as the authority extends, leaving it void as to the remainder only. It includes powers of sale conferred on a mortgagee.

—Powers under the Statute of Uses. An authority enabling a person, through the medium of the statute of uses, to dispose of an interest in real property, vested either in himself or another person. 52 N. Hamp. 271.

Methods of causing a use, with its accompanying estate, to spring up at the will of a given person. Williams, Real Prop. 245; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 300.

The right to designate the person who is to take a use. Co. Litt. 271b, Butler's note, 231, § 3, pl. 4.

A right to limit a use. 4 Kent, Comm. 334.

An authority to do some act in relation to lands, or the creation of estates therein, or of charges thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself lawfully perform. Rev. St. N. Y.

Powers are divided generally into powers of appointment, being those which are to create new estates and powers of revocation, which are to divest or abridge an existing estate. But as every appointment must divest an existing estate, the distinction is of doubtful exactness.

They are distinguished as:

(1) Appendant, being those which the donee is authorized to exercise out of the estate limited to him, and which depend for their validity upon the estate which is in him. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 304. A life estate limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, is an example. Hardr. 416; 1 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 15; Sugd. (Pow. Ed. 1856) 107; Burton, Real Prop. § 179.

(2) Collateral, being those in which the donee has no estate in the land. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 305.

(3) General, being those by which the donee is at liberty to appoint whom he pleases.

(4) Special, being those in which the donee is restricted to an appointment to or among particular objects only. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 307.

(5) In gross, being those which give a donee, who has an estate in the land, authority to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him, or take effect out of his own interest. 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 236; White & T. Lead. Cas. 293; Watk. Conv. 260.

(6) Beneficial, when by its terms no person other than the donee has any interest in its execution. See "Beneficial Power."

(7) In trust, when any person or class of persons is designated to receive the benefit.

—Designation of Parties. The person bestowing a power is called the "donor;" the person on whom it is bestowed is called the "donee;" the person who receives the estate by appointment of the donee is called the "appointee." When referred to in connection with the appointee, the donee is sometimes called the "appointor."

By statute in New York, the term "grantor of a power" is used to denote the person by whom a power is created, and "grantee of a power" to denote the person in whom it is vested. 4 Rev. St. N. Y. § 135, p. 2451.

POWER OF ATTORNEY. An instrument authorizing a person to act as the attorney in fact of the person granting it.

A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal.

A special power is one limited to particular acts.

POYNDING. See "Poinding."

POYNINGS' LAWS. A set of statutes enacted in the tenth year of Henry VII. (so called from Sir Edward Poynings, being then lord deputy), regulating the method of passing statutes in Ireland. By another of these laws it was provided that all acts of parliament before made in England should be in force within the realm of Ireland. 1 Bl. Comm. 102, 103.

P'P'M. A contraction of perpetuum. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

PRACTICA. (L. Lat.) Practice; the practice of a court. Clerke's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 42.

PRACTICAL CONSTRUCTION.

—Of a Statute. One determined by long-established procedure under it, to which deference will be paid by the courts in interpreting the statute, if possible, without doing violence to its terms. 16 Ohio, 559; 49 Mo. 404; 93 Ill. 191.

—Of a Contract. That given to the contract by the parties, and under which they acted in performing it. Such an interpretation will be effectuated by the court, if possible. 76 U. S. 50; 80 U. S. 608; 41 Minn. 308; 41 Neb. 56; 67 Vt. 1.

PRACTICAL LOCATION. Mutual acquiescence in a known boundary line for a long period of time. 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 287.

PRACTICE. The form, manner, and order of conducting and carrying on suits or prosecutions in the courts through their various stages, according to the principles of law and the rules laid down by the respective courts.

PRACTICE COURT. In English law. A court attached to the court of king's bench, which hears and determines common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc.

It was formerly called the "bail court." It is held by one of the puisne justices of the king's bench.

PRACTICES. A succession of acts of a similar kind, or in a like employment. Webster.

PRACTICKS. In Scotch law. The decisions of the court of session, as evidence of the practice or custom of the country. Bell, Dict.

PRAEBENDA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A prebend. Bracton, fol. 442b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 10; Id. c. 69, § 3.

An allowance of fodder for horses and cattle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 76, § 8.

PRAEPTORES (Lat.) Heretofore masters in chancery were so called, as having the direction of making out remedial writs. Fleta, 76; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 251. A species of benefice, so called from being possessed by the principal templars (praepiores templi), whom the chief master by his authority created. 2 Mon. Angl. 543.

PRAEPTORIES. A kind of feudal benefices; so called because they were possessed by the more eminent templars, whom the chief master by his authority created and called Praeptores Templi. 2 Mon. Angl. 543.

PRAEPIE, or PREPIE (Lat.) A slip of paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written. It is lodged in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Wharton.

PRAEPIE IN CAPITE. A writ of chancery which lay (in case of his deforcement) for a tenant holding of the crown in capite, viz., in chief. Magna Charta, c. 24.

PRAEPIE QUOD REDDAT (Lat.) Command him to return. An original writ, of which praepie is the first word, commanding the person to whom it is directed to do a thing, or to show cause why he has not done it. 3 Bl. Comm. 274; Old Nat. Brev. 13. It is as well applied to a writ of right as to other writs of entry and possession.

PRAEPIE QUOD TENEAT CONVENTIONEM. The writ which commenced the action of covenant in fines. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

PRAEPIPIUM. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

PRAEPIPUT CONVENTIONNEL. In the French law, under the regime en communautaire, when that is of the conventional kind, if the surviving husband or wife is entitled to take any portion of the common property by a paramount title, and before partition thereof, this right is called by the somewhat barbarous title of the conventional praepiput, from pras, before, and capere, to take. Brown.

PRAECO (Lat.)

—In Roman Law. A herald or crier. Adams, Rom. Ant. 189, 190.

—In Later Practice. The crier of a court. Bac. Works, iv. 316.

PRAECOGNITA. Things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

PRAEDA BELLICA (Lat.) Booty; property seized in war.

PRAEDIA (Lat.) In civil law. Lands.

Praedia urbana, those lands which have buildings upon them and are in the city.

Praedia rustica, those lands which are without buildings or in the country. Vocat.

It indicates a more extensive domain than fundus. Calv. Lex.

PRAEDIA STIPENDIARIA. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the people.

PRAEDIA TRIBUTARIA. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.

PRAEDIAL. That which arises immediately from the ground; as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, herbs, and the like; as praedial tithes. 2 Bl. Comm. 23.

PRAEDIAL (or PREDIAL) SERVITUDE. A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (praedia) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called "praedium serviens," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium dominans." Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 306; Inst. 2. 3; Dig. 8. 1-6.

PRAEDIAL TITHES. Arising out of or from land. Natural products not principally produced by care and nurture, as corn, grass, hops, wood. 2 Bl. Comm. 24.

PRAEDICTUS, PRAEDICTA, or PRAEDICTUM (Lat.) In old pleading. Aforesaid. Abbreviated in old entries praed., praedict., p'dc'us, etc. Hob. 117; 10 Coke, 65.

Of the three words, idem, praedictus, and praefatus (all corresponding to the English aforesaid), idem was most usually applied to plaintiffs or demandants; praedictus, to defendants or tenants, places, towns, or lands; and praefatus, to persons named, not being actors or parties. Towns. Pl. 15.

PRAEDIUM DOMINANS (Lat.) the ruling estate). In civil law. The name given to an estate to which a servitude is due. It is called the ruling estate.

PRAEDIUM RUSTICUM (Lat.) a country estate). In civil law. By this is understood all heritages which are not destined for the use of man's habitation; such, for example, as lands, meadows, orchards, gardens, woods, even though they should be within the boundaries of a city.

PRAEDIUM SERVIENS (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an estate which suffers or yields a service to another estate.

PRAEDIUM URBANUM (Lat.) In civil law. By this term is understood buildings and edifices intended for the habitation and use of man, whether they be built in cities or whether they be constructed in the country.

PRAEDO (Lat.) In Roman law. A robber. See Dig. 50. 17. 126.

PRAEFATUS. In old pleadings. Aforesaid. Sometimes abbreviated to praefat. and p. fat. See "Praedictus."

PRAEFECTUS (Lat.)

—In the Roman Law. A chief officer; a governor or commander. The title of various officers and magistrates. Dig. 1. 11; Id. 1. 12; Id. 1. 15; Code, 1. 28; Calv. Lex.

—In Old English Law. The chief officer of a hundred, and other divisions. Spelman, voc. "Praepositus."

PRAEFECTUS VIGILIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The chief officer of the night watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offenses affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies; but he could inflict only slight punishments.

PRAEFINE. The fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

PRAEJUDICIALIS (Lat.) from prae, before, and judicare, to judge). In the civil law. That which is to be predetermined, or decided before something else. See "Actio Praejudicialis."

PRAEJUDICIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Prejudice; detriment; disparagement. Bracton, fol. 19. Sine praejudicio melioris sententiae, without prejudice to the better opinion. Id. fol. 48. A common phrase used by Bracton, when expressing his own opinion on any point.

PRAEJURAMENTUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A preparatory oath.

PRAEMIUM (Lat.) Reward; compensation. Praemium assecurationis, compensation for insurance; premium of insurance. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 5, § 6. Now used in the law of insurance, in the form "premium," as a common English word.

PRAEMIUM PUDICITIAE (Lat.) The price of chastity; or compensation for loss of chastity. A term applied to bonds and other engagements given for the benefit of a seduced female. Sometimes called premium pudoris. 2 Wils. 339, 340.

PRAEMUNIRE (Lat.) In order to prevent the pope from assuming the supremacy in granting ecclesiastical livings, a number of statutes were made in England, during the reigns of Edward I. and his successors, punishing certain acts of submission to the papal authority therein mentioned. In the writ for the execution of these statutes, the words praemunire facias, being used to command a citation of the party, gave not only to the writ, but to the offense itself of maintaining the papal power, the name of praemunire. Co. Litt. 129; Jacob.

PRAENOMEN (Lat.) Forename, or first name. The first of the three names by which the Romans were commonly distinguished. It marked the individual, and was commonly written with one letter; as A. for Aulus; C. for Caius, etc. Adams, Rom. Ant. 35. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 9; Butler, Hor. Jur. 28.

PRAEPOSITUS. An officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred called praepositus regius; or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the wicnere,

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

One who was set over others; a presiding officer.

PRAEPOSITUS ECCLESIAE. A church reeve, or warden. Spelman.

PRAEPOSITUS VILLAE. A constable of a town, or petty constable.

PRAEROGATIVA REGIS. (L. Lat.) In old English law. The king's prerogative. Crabb's Hist. 204.

PRAESCRIPTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. That mode of acquisition whereby one becomes proprietor of a thing on the ground that he has for a long time possessed it as his own; prescription. Dig. 41. 3; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 290, § 276. It was anciently distinguished from "usucapio," (q. v.), but was blended with it by Justinian. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 6, § 438.

PRAESCRIPTIO EST TITULUS EX USU et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time. Co. Litt. 113.

PRAESCRIPTIO ET EXECUTIO NON pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendae. Prescription and the execution of a contract do not affect the validity of the contract, but the time and manner of bringing an action. 3 Mass. 84; 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 190, 219.

PRAESCRIPTIONES. In Roman law. Forms of words (of a qualifying character) inserted in the formulae in which the claims in actions were expressed, and, as they occupied an early place in the formulae, they were called by this name, i. e., qualifications preceding the claim. For example, in an action to recover the arrears of an annuity, the claim was preceded by the words "so far as the annuity is due and unpaid," or words to the like effect (cujus rei dies fuit). Brown.

PRAESENTARE NIHIL ALIUD EST quam praesto dare seu offerre. To present is no more than to give or offer on the spot. Co. Litt. 120.

PRAESENTIA CORPORIS TOLLIT ER-rorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cures the error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error in the description. Bac. Max. reg. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 568; 6 Coke, 66; 3 Barn. & Adol. 640; 6 Term R. 675; 11 C. B. 996; 1 H. L. Cas. 792; 3 De Gex, M. & G. 140.

PRAESES (Lat.) In the Roman law. A president, or governor. Dig. 1. 18. 1. Called a nomen generale, including proconsuls, legates, and all who governed provinces. Id.

PRAESIDIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A guard; a fortress; a defense, aid, or shelter.

In records of the middle ages, all household stuff or effects, including particularly gold and silver. Spelman. Every kind of property, real as well as personal (omnis vis bonorum, tam immobilium quam mobilium). Id.

PRAESTARE (Lat.)

—In Old English Law. To pay, or render; to make or execute; to perform. Praestitit sacramentum, made oath, or took an oath. T. Raym. 34; 2 Ld. Raym. 1376; Mem. in Scacc. P. 16 Edw. I.

To make good. Praestare tenetur quodcumque damnum obvieniens in mari, the insurer is bound to make good any loss happening on the sea. 3 Kent, Comm. 291.

—In Old European Law. To lease, or let to farm. Chart. Alaman. 75; Spelman.

PRAESTAT CAUTELA QUAM MEDELA. Prevention is better than cure. Co. Litt. 304.

PRAESUMATUR PRO JUSTITIA SENTENTIAE. The justice of a sentence should be presumed. Best, Ev. Introd. 42; Mascardus de Prob. Conc. 1237, note 2.

PRAESUMITUR PRO LEGITIMATIONE. Legitimacy is to be presumed. 5 Coke, 98b; 1 Bl. Comm. 457.

PRAESUMITUR PRO NEGANTE. It is presumed for the negative. The rule of the house of lords when the numbers are equal on a motion. Wharton.

PRAESUMPTIO, EX EO QUOD PLERUMQUE FIT. Presumptions arise from what generally happens. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425, 475.

PRAESUMPTIO FORTIOR (Lat.) A strong (literally, stronger) presumption (of fact). One which determines the tribunal in its belief of an alleged fact, without, however, excluding the belief of the possibility of its being otherwise; the effect of which is to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party, and if this proof be not made, the presumption is held for truth. Hub. Prael. J. C. lib. 22, tit. 3, note 16; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 66.

PRAESUMPTIO HOMINIS (Lat.) The presumption of the man or individual; that is, natural presumption unfettered by strict rule. Heinec. ad Pand. par. 4, § 124.

PRAESUMPTIO JURIS (Lat.) In Roman law. A deduction from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another which admits of proof to the contrary. A rebuttable presumption. An intendment of law which holds good until it is weakened by proof or a stronger presumption. Best, Pres. 29.

PRAESUMPTIO JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.) In Roman law. A deduction drawn, by reason of some rule of law, from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another, so conclusively that no proof can be admitted to the contrary. A conclusive presumption.

PRAESUMPTIO VIOLENTA, PLENA probatio. Violent presumption is full proof.

PRAESUMPTIO VIOLENTA VALET IN lege. Strong presumption avails in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

PRAESUMPTIONES SUNT CONJECTURAE ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumptae. Presumptions are conjectures from probable proof, assumed for purposes of evidence. J. Voct. Com. ad Pand. lib. 22, tit. 3, note 14.

PRAETEXTU LICITI NON DEBET ADMITTI illicitum. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted. 10 Coke, 88.

PRAETOR. In Roman law. A municipal officer of Rome, so called because (praesiret populo) he went before or took precedence of the people.

The consuls were at first called praetors. Liv. Hist. iii. 55. He was a sort of minister of justice, invested with certain legislative powers, especially in regard to the forms or formalities of legal proceedings. Ordinarily, he did not decide causes as a judge, but prepared the grounds of decision for the judge, and sent to him the questions to be decided between the parties. The judge was always chosen by the parties, either directly, or by rejecting, under certain rules and limitations, the persons proposed to them by the praetor. Hence the saying of Cicero (pro Cluentis, 43) that no one could be judged except by a judge of his own choice. There were several kinds of officers called praetors. See Vicat.

Before entering on his functions, he published an edict announcing the system adopted by him for the application and interpretation of the laws during his magistracy. His authority extended over all jurisdictions, and was summarily expressed by the words do, dico, addico, i. e., do, I give the action; dico, I declare the law, I promulgate the edict; addico, I invest the judge with the right of judging. There were certain cases which he was bound to decide himself, assisted by a council chosen by himself,—perhaps the decemvirs; but the greater part of causes brought before him he sent either to a judge, an arbitrator, or to recuperators (recuperatores), or to the centumvirs, as before stated. Under the empire, the powers of the praetor passed by degrees to the prefect of the praetorium, or the prefect of the city, so that this magistrate, who at first ranked with the consuls, at last dwindled into a director or manager of the public spectacles or games.

Till lately, there were officers in certain cities of Germany denominated praetors. See 1 Kent, Comm. 528.

PRAETOR FIDEI COMMISSARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A special praetor created to pronounce judgment in cases of trusts or fidei commissa. Inst. 2. 23. 1; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 966. Called, by Lord Bacon, a "particular chancellor for uses." Bac. Law Tr. 315; 4 Kent, Comm. 290.

PRAEVARICATOR (Lat.) In the civil law. One who betrays his trust, or is unfaithful to his trust. An advocate who aids the opposite party by betraying his client's cause. Dig. 47. 15. 1. Used in Spanish law. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 6, lib. 15.

PRAEVENTO TERMINO. In old Scotch practice. A form of action known in the forms of the court of session, by which a delay to discuss a suspension or advocacy was got the better of. Bell, Dict.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION.
—In French Law. An expression used to designate those ordinances which concern the most important object of the civil or ecclesiastical administration. Merlin, Repert.; 1 Fournel, Hist. de Avocats, 24, 38, 39.

—In Civil Law. The answer given by the emperors on questions of law, when consulted by a corporation or the citizens of a province or of a municipality, was called a "pragmatic sanction." Lec. Elm. § 53. This differed from a "rescript."

PRAGMATICA (Spanish). In Spanish colonial law. An order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form and in the mode of promulgation. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

PRAXIS JUDICUM EST INTERPRES LEGUM. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws. Hob. 96; Branch. Princ.

PRAY IN AID. In old English practice. To call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate. 3 Bl. Comm. 300. See "Aid Prayer."

PRAYER. In equity practice. The request in a bill that the court will grant the aid which the petitioner desires. That part of the bill which asks for relief. The word denotes, strictly, the request, but is very commonly applied to that part of the bill which contains the request.

PREAMBLE. An introduction prefixed to a statute, reciting the intention of the legislature in framing it, or the evils which led to its enactment.

A preamble is said to be the key of a statute, to open the minds of the makers as to the mischiefs which are to be remedied, and the objects which are to be accomplished, by the provisions of the statute. 4 Inst. 330; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 301. In modern legislative practice, preambles are much less used than formerly, and in some of the United States are rarely, if ever, now inserted in statutes. In the interpretation of a statute, though resort may be had to the preamble, it cannot limit or control the express provisions of the statute. Dwarr. St. 504-508. Nor can it by implication enlarge what is expressly fixed. 1 Story, Const. bk. 3, c. 6; 3 McCord (S. C.) 298; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Busb. (N. C.) 131; 2 Ware (U. S.) 38.

PREAPPOINTED EVIDENCE. Evidence whose nature and quantity are prescribed beforehand by law, as for the attestation of wills.

PREAUDIENCE. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the queen's attorney general, and ending with barristers at large. 3 Bl. Comm. 28, note; 3 Steph. Comm. 387, note.

PREBEND. In ecclesiastical law. The stipend granted to an ecclesiastic, in consideration of officiating in the church. It is in this distinguished from a "canonicate," which is a mere title, and may exist without stipend. The prebend may be a simple stipend, or a stipend with a dignity attached to it, in which case it has some jurisdiction belonging to it. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 88; Strange, 1082; 1 Term R. 401; 2 Term R. 630; 1 Wils. 206; Dyer, 273a; 7 Barn. & C. 113; 8 Bing. 490; 5 Taunt. 2.

PREBENDARY (Lat. praebendarius, from praebenda). In English ecclesiastical law. One that has a prebend (q. v.) Cowell. The stipendiary of a cathedral or collegiate church. Webster.

PRECARIOUS RIGHT. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

If there is a time fixed during which the right may be used, it is then vested for that time, and cannot be revoked until after its expiration. Wolff. Inst. § 333.

PRECARIUM (Lat.) The name of a contract among civilians, by which the owner of a thing, at the request of another person, gives him a thing to use as long as the owner shall please. Poth. note 87. See Yelv. 172; Cro. Jac. 236; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 687; Rolle, 128; Bac. Abr. "Bailment" (C); Ersk. Inst. 3. 1. 9; Wolff. Inst. § 333.

A tenancy at will is a right of this kind.

PRECARIAE, or PRECES (Law Lat.) In old English law. Days' works, which the tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for the lord in harvest. Vulgarly called "bind days," which Spelman supposes to be a corruption of "biden days," which in Saxon, answered to dies precariae (literally, pray days, or prayed days), the Saxon biden signifying to pray. Spelman; Cowell.

PRECATORY TRUST. A trust created by certain words which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty. Words of entreaty when coupled with discretionary words, 15 L. J. Ch. 182; 20 L. J. Ch. 280; 17 Bea. 156; 18 Bea. 215; L. R. 4 Eq. 151, 4 Ch. D. 238, 40 L. J. Ch. 447, 6 Ch. 597, or with an absolute gift do not create such trust. E. g., "They are hereby enjoined to take care of my nephew J. J. as may seem best in the future," 55 L. J. Ch. 413; "feeling confident that she will act justly," 51 L. J. P. C. 72, 7 App. Ca. 321; "agreeably to my wishes," 46 L. J. Ch. 880, 5 Ch. D. 225, 36 L. T. 498. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are "having full confidence, I hereby request," 59 Wis. 172; "recommend and request," 127 U. S. 300; "request," 82 N. Y. 405; "hope and trust," 109 U. S. 725; "advise him to settle," 5 L. J. Ch. 98; "well assured," 1 Atk. 389, 1 Amb. 520; "have full assurance and confident hope," 17 Bea. 299; "authorize and empower," 4 Ves. 708, 5 Ib. 495, 8 Ib. 561, 18 Ib. 192, 11 L. J. Ch. 219, 5 Bea. 241; "beg," Ir. Rep. 7 Eq. 456; "in the full belief," W. N. (75) 140; "most heartily beseech," 1 Sim. 553; "confide," 11 L. J. Ch. 219, 5 Bea. 241, 2 J. & H. 766; "have the fullest confidence," 32 Bea. 143, 60 L. T. 140; 17 Ves. 255, 19 Ib. 299, 21 L. J. Ch. 625; 2 Sim. N. S. 267. Where the words expressing "confidence" are preceded by an absolute gift. 52 L. J. Ch. 758, 24 Ch. D. 199, 6 Ch. 597; 8 Ch. D. 540, 51 L. J. P. C. 72, 7 App. Ca. 321.

"In consideration the legatee has promised to give," 1 Amb. 519; "under the firm conviction," 26 L. J. Ch. 92, 2 Jur. N. S. 1127; "of course the legatee will give," 6 Mad. 194, 2 My. & K. 198; "desire," 1 Atk. 469, Amb. 4, 2 Vern. 708, 3 Ves. 7, 9 Ves. 319; "do not doubt," 18 Ves. 476, 2 V. & B. 378; "entreat," 2 Mad. 458, 1 Sim. 553, 555; "hope," 1 Bro. C. C. 142, L. R. 4 Eq. 151; "well know," 7 L. J. Ch. 268, 9 Sim. 323, 1 Bro. C. C. 489, 3 Mac. & G. 546, 46 L. J. Ch. 880, 36 L. T. 498; "order and direct," 2 Sch. & Lef. 189; "recommend," Jac. 317, 19 Ves. 656, 1 S. & S. 387, 8 Ves. 280, 3 Ves. 150, 1 Sim. 553, 2 Hogan 166, 14 Sim. 590, 18 Bea. 215, 15 Sim. 33.

That "recommend" may amount to a command and create a binding trust is certain. It is equally certain that the word is susceptible of a different interpretation. It must depend upon the language of the particular instrument in which this word is found, in which of the two senses it is to be taken, 17 L. J. Ch. 438, 2 D. G. & S. 356; "request," 2 Bro. C. C. 38, 3 Ir. Ch. Rep. 26, Johns. 276; "trusting," 38 L. J. Ch. 635, L. R. 8 Eq. 673; "trusting and confiding," 5 L. J. Ch. 361, 6 Ib. 366, 2 My. & C. 684, 12 Sim. 114; "will," Pr. Ch. 200, 1 Vern. 411; "will and declare," 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 218; "will and desire," 3 V. & B. 198; "wish and desire," 29 L. J. Ch. 619, 28 Bea. 266; "wish and request," 5 Sim. 138, 2 My. & K. 138.

But any of the foregoing or similar phrases might easily be controlled the other way by a context, 52 L. J. Ch. 761, 24 Ch. D. 199; and at the present time, the courts are not disposed to enlarge the number of such phrases, so as to create a trust. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1016.

PRECATORY WORDS. Words which create a precatory trust (q. v.)

PRECEDENCE, PATENT OF. In English law. A grant from the crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents. 3 Steph. Comm. 274.

PRECEDENT CONDITION. A precedent condition is one which must be performed before the estate can vest. 260 Ill. 102. See "Condition."

PRECEDENTS. Authorities to be followed in courts of justice. A term particularly applied to judicial decisions upon points of law arising in any given case. 1 Kent, Comm. 475, 476. These are recognized in equity as well as at law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 18. The old books are full of expressions in support of precedents. Jenk. Cent. Cas. viii. See "Stare Decisis."

Written forms of proceedings which have been approved by the courts, or by long professional usage, and are to be (usually strictly) followed. Steph. Pl. 392. Lord Bacon observes that there are political as well as legal precedents. Bac. Works, iv. 354.

PRECEPT (Lat. precipio, to command). A writ directed to the sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to do something.

PRECEPT OF CLARE CONSTAT. In Scotch feudal law. An acknowledgment by the lord of the right of an heir of the tenant to succeed to his right.

PRECES (Lat.) In the Roman law. Prayers. One of the names of an application to the emperor. Tayl. Civ. Law, 230.

PRECINCT.

—In English Law. The district for which a high or petty constable is appointed. Wilcox, Const. xii.

—In American Law. A district, usually of a subordinate character, marked out for governmental purpose. See 113 U. S. 516; 124 Mass. 172.

PRECIPE. See "Praecepte."

PRECIPUT. In French law. An object which is ascertained by law or the agreement of the parties, and which is first to be taken out of property held in common, by one having a right, before a partition takes place.

The preciput is an advantage or a principal part to which some one is entitled praecipuum jus, which is the origin of the word preciput. Dalloz; Poth. Obl. By preciput is also understood the right to sue out the preciput.

PRECLUDI NON (Lat.) In pleading. A technical allegation contained in a replication which denies or confesses and avoids the plea.

It is usually in the following form: "And the said A. B., as to the plea of the said C. D., by him secondly above pleaded, says that he, the said A. B., by reason of anything by the said C. D. in that plea alleged, ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action thereof against the said C. D., because he says that," etc. 2 Wils. 42; 1 Chit. Pl. 573.

PRECOGNITION. In Scotch law. The examination of witnesses who were present at the commission of a criminal act, upon the special circumstances attending it, in order to know whether there is ground for a trial, and to serve for direction to the prosecutor. But the persons examined may insist on having their declaration cancelled before they give testimony at the trial. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. note 49.

PRECOGNOSCE (Scotch; from Lat. praecognoscere). In Scotch practice. To examine beforehand. Arkley, 232.

PRECONTRACT. An engagement entered into by a person which renders him unable to enter into another; as, a promise or covenant of marriage to be had afterwards. When made per verba de presenti, it is in fact a marriage, and in that case the party making it cannot marry another person.

PREDECESSOR. One who has preceded another.

This term is applied in particular to corporations who are now no longer such, and whose rights have been vested in their successor. The word "ancestor" is more usually applicable to common persons. The predecessor in a corporation stands in the same relation to the successor that the ancestor does to the heir.

One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent.

PREDIAL SERVITUDE. See "Praedial Servitude."

PRE-EMPTION. In international law. The right of pre-emption is the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 103; 2 Bl. Comm. 287.

This right is sometimes regulated by treaty. In that which was made between the United States and Great Britain, bearing date the 19th day of November, 1794, ratified in 1795, it was agreed (article 18), after mentioning that the usual munitions of war, and also naval materials, should be confiscated as contraband, that "whereas the difficulty of agreeing on precise cases in which alone provisions and other articles not generally contraband may be regarded as such renders it expedient to provide against the inconveniences and misunderstandings which might thence arise, it is further agreed that whenever any such articles so being contraband according to the existing laws of nations shall for that reason be seized, the same shall not be confiscated, but the owners thereof shall be speedily and completely indemnified; and the captors, or, in their default, the government under whose authority they act, shall pay to the masters or owners of such vessel the full value of all articles, with a reasonable mercantile profit thereon, together with the freight, and also the damages incident to such detention." See Manning, Comm. bk. 3, c. 8.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT. The right given to settlers upon the public lands of the United States to purchase them at a limited price, in preference to others.

PREFECT. In French law. A chief officer invested with the superintendence of the administration of the laws in each department. Merlin, Repert.

PREFERENCE. Priority of payment, or right thereto. Preferences may be either involuntary, being the right which a creditor obtains by law to be first paid out of the assets of the debtor, as by obtaining a judgment which is a lien on his lands, or voluntary, being the paying or securing to one or more of his creditors by a debtor (usually insolvent) the whole or a part of their claims, to the exclusion of the rest.

PREFERENCE SHARES. A name sometimes given in England to preferred stock.

PREFERENTIAL ASSIGNMENT. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, giving preferences (q. v.)

PREFERRED CREDITOR. One to whom the debtor has given a preference (q. v.), or to whom he has directed that a preference be given.

PREFERRED STOCK. Corporate stock entitled to priority in payment of dividends, or to a higher rate of dividends.

PREGNANCY, PLEA OF. A plea by a woman under sentence of death, on which, if she be found quick with child, execution is stayed. 4 Bl. Comm. 394.

PREGNANT. See "Affirmative Pregnant;" "Negative Pregnant."

PREJUDICE (Lat. prae, before, judicare, to judge). A forejudgment. A leaning towards one side of a cause formed before the person entertaining the same is called upon to hear and determine the cause. See "Bias."

PRELATE. The name of an ecclesiastical officer. There are two orders of prelates—the first is composed of bishops, and the second, of abbots, generals of orders, deans, etc.

PRELEVEMENT. In French law. The portion which a partner is entitled to take out of the assets of a firm before any division shall be made of the remainder of the assets between the partners.

The partner who is entitled to a prelevement is not a creditor of the partnership,—on the contrary, he is a part owner; for, if the assets should be deficient, a creditor has a preference over the partner. On the other hand, should the assets yield any profit, the partner is entitled to his portion of it, whereas the creditor is entitled to no part of it, but he has a right to charge interest when he is in other respects entitled to it.

PRELIMINARY. Something which precedes; as, preliminaries of peace, which are the first sketch of a treaty, and contain the principal articles on which both parties are desirous of concluding, and which are to serve as the basis of the treaty.

PRELIMINARY ACT. In English admiralty practice. A document narrating the particulars of a collision, required to be filed by each solicitor in actions for damages in such collision. Wharton.

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION. Sometimes called an ad interim injunction. One issued at the commencement of a suit, to restrain the commission of some act pending the suit.

PREMEDITATION. A design formed to commit a crime or to do some other thing before it is done.

Premeditation differs essentially from "will," which constitutes the crime; because it supposes, besides an actual will, a deliberation and a continued persistence, which indicate more perversity.

It is also to be distinguished from "deliberation." "Premeditation" implies merely previous contrivance or formed design, and does not necessarily exclude acts on a sudden impulse. "Deliberation" implies reflection upon the act before committing it. Fixed and determined purpose, as distinguished from sudden impulse. 53 Pa. St. 9.

PREMISES (Lat. prae, before, mittere, to put, to send). That which is put before; the introduction; statements previously made. See 1 East, 456.

—In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties, with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the contract then entered into is founded; and it is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down, and the certainty of the thing granted. 2 Bl. Comm. 298; 8 Mass. 174; 6 Conn. 289.

—In Equity Pleading. The stating part of a bill. It contains a narrative of the facts and circumstances of the plaintiff's case, and the wrongs of which he complains, and the names of the persons by whom done, and against whom he seeks redress. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 9; Bart. Suit in Eq. 27; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 43; Story, Eq. Pl. § 27.

Every material fact to which the plaintiff intends to offer evidence must be stated in the premises; otherwise, he will not be permitted to offer or require evidence of such fact. 1 Brown, Ch. 94; 3 Swanst. 472; 3 P. Wms. 276; 2 Atk. 96; 1 Vern. 483; 11 Ves. 240; 2 Hare, 264; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 565; 9 Ga. 148.

—In Estates. Lands and tenements. 1 East, 453; 3 Maule & S. 169.

PREMIUM (from Lat. praemium, reward). The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an assured to the insurers, as the consideration for the insurance; being a certain rate per cent. on the amount insured. 1 Phil. Ins. 205; 3 Kent, Comm. 253.

The price of a risk.

PREMIUM PUDICITIAE (Lat. the price of chastity). The consideration of a contract by which a man promises to pay to a woman with whom he has illicit intercourse a certain sum of money. In the civil law, sometimes applied to the compensation recovered for loss of chastity.

PREMUNIRE. See "Praemunire."

PRENDA. In Spanish law. Pledge. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 7.

PRENDER, or PRENDRE (Law Fr. to take). This word is used to signify the right of taking a thing before it is offered; hence the phrase of law, "it lies in render, but not in prender." Gale & W. Easem.; Washb. Easem.

PRENDER DE BARON (Law Fr.) In old English law. A taking of husband; marriage. An exception or plea which might be used to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against the killer of her former husband. Staundf. P. C. lib. 3, c. 59.

PRENOMEN (Lat.) The first or Christian name of a person. Benjamin is the pre-nomen of Benjamin Franklin. See Cas. temp. Hardw. 286; 1 Tayl. (N. C.) 148.

PREPENSE. Aforethought. See 2 Chit. Crim. Law, *784.

PREPONDERATE. To "preponderate" is to "outweigh." There may be evidence which, standing by itself, establishes a certain state of facts, but the evidence does not preponderate in favor of any given state of facts unless it is sufficient to outweigh all the testimony introduced in opposition thereto. 138 Ill. 13.

PREROGATIVE.

—In Civil Law. The privilege, pre-eminence, or advantage which one person has over another; thus, a person vested with an office is entitled to all the rights, privileges, prerogatives, etc., which belong to it.

—In English Law. The royal prerogative is an arbitrary power vested in the executive to do good, and not evil. Rutherford, Inst. 279; Co. Litt. 90; Chit. Prerog.; Bac. Abr.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

—In English Law. An ecclesiastical court held in each of the two provinces of York and Canterbury, before a judge appointed by the archbishop of the province.

Formerly in this court testaments were proved, and administrations granted where a decedent left chattels to the value of five pounds (bona notabilia) in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions within the province, and all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable. This jurisdiction was transferred to the court of probate by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, § 4, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95.

An appeal lay formerly from this court to the king in chancery, by St. 25 Hen. VIII, c. 19, but lies now to the privy council, by St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 92; 2 Steph. Comm. 237, 238; 3 Bl. Comm. 65, 66.

—In American Law. A court having a jurisdiction of probate matters in the state of New Jersey.

PREROGATIVE LAW. That part of the common law of England which is more particularly applicable to the king. Com. Dig. tit. "Ley" (A).

PREROGATIVE WRIT. A writ issued upon some extraordinary occasion, and for which it is necessary to apply by motion to the court. 3 Bl. Comm. 132. The writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari belong to this class. 3 Steph. Comm. 681.

Prerogative writs have also been distinguished from writs ministerially directed, viz., those issued to the sheriff; the prerogative writs being generally directed to no sheriff or officer of the court, but to the public or private parties, whose acts are the subject of complaint. 2 Burrows, 855.

PRES (Law Fr.) Near, Cy pres, so near; as near. See "Cy Pres."

PRESBYTER (Lat.) In civil and ecclesiastical law. An elder; a presbyter; a priest. Code, 1. 3. 6. 20; Nov. 6.

PRESCRIBABLE. To which a right may be acquired by prescription.

PRESCRIPTION. A mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment.

The distinction between a prescription and a custom is that a custom is a local usage, and not annexed to a person. A prescription is a personal usage, confined to the claimant and his ancestors or grantors. The theory of prescription was that the right claimed must have been enjoyed beyond the period of the memory of man, which for a long time, in England, went back to the time of Richard I. To avoid the necessity of proof of such long duration, a custom arose of allowing a presumption of a grant on proof of usage for a long term of years. In modern practice, the period of legal limitation for adverse possession of lands is generally adopted. 100 N. Y. 455.

To acquire title by prescription, the user must be adverse (117 Ill. 532), exclusive (7 Metc. [Mass.] 33), peaceable (31 N. J. Eq. 706), notorious (7 Allen [Mass.] 368), and continuous (2 Cush. [Mass.] 191).

PRESCRIPTION ACT. St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 71, passed to limit the period of prescription in certain cases.

PRESCRIPTION, TIME OF. See "Time Immemorial."

PRESENCE. The being in a particular place.

In many contracts and judicial proceedings it is necessary that the parties should be present in order to render them valid; for example, a party to a deed, when it is executed by himself, must personally acknowledge it, when such acknowledgment is required by law, to give it its full force and effect, and his presence is indispensable, unless, indeed, another person represent him as his attorney, having authority from him for that purpose.

Presence at a particular transaction is in a measure relative. Thus, a crime is committed in the presence of a police officer if he can detect the act, and could have seen the persons had it been light (53 Mich. 493); and a married woman executes a deed in the presence of her husband, if he was under the same roof, though not in the same room (112 Mass. 287).

Actual presence is being bodily in the precise spot indicated.

Constructive presence is being so near to or in such relation with the parties actually in a designated place as to be considered in law as being in the place. Thus, a man was held constructively present at a stage robbery, where he built a fire on a mountain forty miles distant as a notice to the robber of the leaving of the stage. 13 Nev. 386.

PRESENT. A gift, or, more properly, the thing given.

PRESENT ESTATE. An estate in possession; one presently vested.

PRESENT USE. One which has an immediate existence, and is at once operated upon by the statute of uses.

PRESENTATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of a patron offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted in a church or benefice.

PRESENTTEE. In ecclesiastical law. A clerk who has been presented by his patron to a bishop in order to be instituted in a church.

PRESENTLY. Immediately; in the present tense.

PRESENTMENT.

—In Criminal Practice. The written notice taken by a grand jury of any offense, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government. 4 Bl. Comm. 301; 109 Cal. 448; 183 Mich. 207.

Upon such presentment, when proper, the officer employed to prosecute afterwards frames a bill of indictment, which is then sent to the grand jury, and they find it to be a true bill. In an extended sense, presentments include not only what are properly so called, but also inquisitions of office and indictments found by a grand jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 1.

The difference between a presentment and an inquisition is this: that the former is found by a grand jury authorized to inquire of offenses generally, whereas the latter is an accusation found by a jury specially returned to inquire concerning a particular offense. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 6. See, generally, Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (B); Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (A); 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 163; 7 East, 387; 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 112; 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 12.

The chief distinction between an indictment and a presentment at common law was that the former was made at the suggestion of the crown, while the latter was made upon the knowledge of one or more of the jurors, and instead of being indorsed "a true bill" by the foreman alone, was signed by all of the jurors.

The writing which contains the accusation so presented by a grand jury. 1 Brock. (U. S.) 156.

—In Contracts. The production of a bill of exchange or promissory note to the party on whom the former is drawn, for his acceptance, or to the person bound to pay either, for payment.

PRESENTS. This word signifies the writing then actually made and spoken of; as, these presents; know all men by these presents; to all to whom these presents shall come.

PRESS. In old practice. A piece or skin of parchment, several of which used to be sewed together in making up a roll or record of proceedings. See 1 Bl. Comm. 183; Towns. Pl. 486.

PRESSING TO DEATH. See "Peine Forte et Dure."

PREST (and afterwards PRIST) (Law Fr.; from Lat. paratus).

—In Old Pleading and Practice. Ready. Prest averrer, ready to prove. Y. B. P. 11 Hen. VI 8; Y. B. M. 12 Hen. VI. 13. Prest de prover. Britt. c. 22. A formal word at the conclusion of pleas and replications, expressive of a tender and acceptance of issue. Prest, etc., was a mere common form. See Y. B. 8 Edw. III. 20; Y. B. T. 8 Edw. III. 11.

Prest a passer, ready to pass, that is, to give a verdict. Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 56. See "Passer."

—In Old English Law. A duty in money to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. Cowell.

PRESTATION (Lat. praestatio, from praestare, q. v.) In old English law. A payment or performance; the rendering of a service; a toll, custom or duty.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE. See "Circumstantial Evidence."

PRESUMPTIVE HEIR. One who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, under existing condition of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as, a brother, who is the presumptive heir, may be defeated by the birth of a child to the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm 208

PRESUMPTIVE TITLE. That which arises from mere occupation, with no pretense of right to hold possession. It is the very lowest order of title.

PRET (Fr.) Loan.

PRET A USAGE (Fr. loan for use). A phrase used in the French law instead of commodatum.

PRETENSED, or PRETENCED (Law Lat. praetensum). In old English law. Pretended; claimed. Where a party out of possession of lands or tenements claimed or sued for the possession, he was said to have a pretended right and title (ius praetensum). Cowell; Dyer, 74b.

PRETENSED TITLE STATUTE. The English statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, § 2. It enacts that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor has received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or has been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder, on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor. See 4 Broom & H. Comm. 150.

PRETENSES. In equity pleading. Allegations sometimes made in a bill for the purpose of negating an anticipated defense. Hunt, Eq. pt. 1, c. 1.

PRETENSION. In French law. The claim made to a thing which a party believes himself entitled to demand, but which is not admitted or adjudged to be his.

The words "rights," "actions," and "pretensions" are usually joined; not that they are synonymous, for "right" is something positive and certain, "action" is what is demanded, while "pretension" is sometimes not even accompanied by a demand.

PRETER LEGAL. Not agreeable to law.

PRETERITION (Lat. praeter and eo, to go by). In civil law. The omission by a testator of some one of his heirs who is entitled to a legitime (q. v.) in the succession.

Among the Romans, the preterition of children when made by the mother was presumed to have been made with design. The preterition of sons by any other testator was considered as a wrong, and avoided the will, except the will of a soldier in service, which was not subject to so much form.

PRETERMISSION. In the law of wills. The intentional passing over without making provision for a child or legal heir or next of kin. Same as "preterition," which is the strictly proper term.

PRETEXT (Lat. praetextum, woven before). The reasons assigned to justify an act, which have only the appearance of truth, and which are without foundation, or which, if true, are not the true reasons for such act. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 3, § 32.

An ostensible reason or motive assigned or assumed as a color or cover for the real motive or reason. 27 Neb. 601.

PRETIUM, or PRECIUM (Lat. price; value). In the civil law. The price of a thing sold, which properly consisted in counted money; pretium in numerata pecunia consistere debet. Inst. 3. 24. 2. Pretium constitui oportet, nam nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest, the price ought to be fixed for there can be no purchase without a price. Id.; Dig. 18. 1. 2; 2 Kent, Comm. 477.

PRETIUM AFFECTIONIS (Lat.) An imaginary value put upon a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it, or for the person from whom he obtained it. Bell, Dict.

PRETIUM SUCCEDIT IN LOCUM REI. The price stands in the place of the thing sold. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 939; 2 Bulst. 312.

PRETORIUM. In Scotch law. A court house, or hall of justice. 3 How. St. Tr. 425.

PREVARICATION. In civil law. The acting with unfaithfulness and want of probity. The term is applied principally to the act of concealing a crime. Dig. 47. 15. 6.

PREVENTION (Lat. preveniatio, to come before). In civil law. The right of a judge to take cognizance of an action over which he has concurrent jurisdiction with another judge.

In Pennsylvania it has been ruled that a justice of the peace cannot take cognizance of a cause which has been previously decided by another justice. 2 Dall. (Pa.) 77, 114.

PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT. The statute 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, passed for the purpose of securing a better supervision over habitual criminals. This act provides that a person who is for a second time convicted of crime may, on his second conviction, be subjected to police supervision for a period of seven years after the expiration of the punishment awarded him. Penalties are imposed on lodging house keepers, etc., for harboring thieves or reputed thieves. There are also provisions relating to receivers of stolen property, and dealers in old metals who purchase the same in small quantities. This act repeals the habitual criminals act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99). Brown.

PRICE. See "Value."

PRICKING FOR SHERIFFS. In England, when the yearly list of persons nominated for the office of sheriff is submitted to the queen, she took a pin, and to insure impartiality, as it is said, she let the point of it fall upon one of the three names nominated for each county, etc., and the person upon whose name it chanced to fall was sheriff for the ensuing year. This is called "pricking for sheriffs." Atk. Sheriffs, 18.

PRIMA FACIE. At first view; from the appearance, without contradiction or explanation.

PRIMA FACIE CASE. A case established by prima facie evidence (q. v.)

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE. Such as is, in judgment of law, sufficient to establish the fact, and, if not rebutted remains sufficient for the purpose.

PRIMA PARS AEQUITATIS AEQUALITAS. The radical element of justice is equality.

PRIMA TONSURA (Lat.) A grant of a right to have the first crop of grass. 1 Chit. Prac. 181.

PRIMAE IMPRESSIONIS (Law Lat.) Of the first impression; without precedent. A term applied to a new case, or one which has not occurred before, or to a question which is raised for the first time. Eyre, J., 5 Mod. 23; 1 Vern. 94; Platt, J., 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 310. "The question here, as there, is primae impressionis; the case here, as there, is the first of its kind." Story, J., 3 Mason (U. S.) 116, 125. The expression is applied to actions, returns, motions, and other proceedings. Freem. 431; Holt, C. J., 5 Mod. 21; Mansfield, C. J., 4 Taunt. 3; 1 Taunt. 492, arg. The Gunpowder Plot was called by Lord Coke, in his argument as attorney general in the case, an offense primae impressionis. 2 How. St. Tr. 167.

PRIMAE (or PRIMARIAE) PRECES (Lat.) In the civil law. An imperial prerogative, by which the emperor exercised the right of naming to the first prebend that became vacant after his accession, in every church of the empire. Goldast. Constit. Imper. tom. 3, p. 406; 1 Bl. Comm. 381.

PRIMAGE. In mercantile law. A duty payable to the master and mariners of a ship or vessel,—to the master for the use of his cables and ropes to discharge the goods of the merchant; to the mariners for lading and unlading in any port or haven. Abb. Shipp. 270.

This payment appears to be of very ancient date, and to be variously regulated in different voyages and trades. It is sometimes called the "master's hat money." 3 Chit. Com. Law, 431.

PRIMARY. That which is first or principal; as, primary evidence, that evidence which is to be admitted in the first instance, as distinguished from secondary evidence, which is allowed only when primary evidence cannot be had.

PRIMARY CONVEYANCES. See "Conveyance."

PRIMARY EVIDENCE. The best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3053. See "Evidence."

PRIMARY OBLIGATION. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract; for example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 702.

PRIMARY POWERS. The principal authority given by a principal to his agent. It differs from "mediate powers." Story, Ag. § 58.

PRIMATE. In ecclesiastical law. An archbishop who has jurisdiction over one or several other metropolitans.

PRIME SERJEANT. The queen's first serjeant at law.

PRIMER ELECTION. A term used to signify first choice.

In England, when coparcenary lands are divided, unless it is otherwise agreed, the eldest sister has the first choice of the parts. This part is called the entia pars. Sometimes the oldest sister makes the partition, and in that case, to prevent partiality, she takes the last choice. Hob. 107; Litt. §§ 243-245; Bac. Abr. "Coparceners" (U).

PRIMER FINE. In old English practice. A fine or payment which was due to the king on suing out the writ of praecipe, at the commencement of the proceedings to levy a fine of lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

PRIMER SEISIN. In English law. The right which the king had, when any of his tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession, and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bl. Comm. 66.

PRIMITIAE (Lat.) In English law. First fruits; the first year's whole profits of a spiritual preferment. 1 Bl. Comm. 284; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 252.

PRIMO EXCUTIENDA EST VERBI VIS, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. The force of a word is to be first examined, lest by the fault of diction the sentence be destroyed, or the law be without arguments. Co. Litt. 68.

PRIMOGENITURE. The state of being first born; the eldest.

Formerly primogeniture gave a title in cases of descent to the oldest son in preference to the other children. This unjust distinction has been generally abolished in the United States.

PRIMOGENITUS (Lat. from primo, first, and genitus, born or begotten). In old English law. A first born or eldest son. Bracton, fol. 33; 1 Ves. Sr. 290. And see 3 Maule & S. 25; 8 Taunt. 468; 3 Vern. 660.

PRIMUM DECRETUM (Lat.) In the courts of admiralty, this name is given to a provisional decree. Bac. Abr. "Court of Admiralty" (E).

PRINCE. In a general sense, a sovereign; the ruler of a nation or state. The son of a king or emperor, or the issue of a royal family; as, princes of the blood. The chief of any body of men.

By a clause inserted in policies of insurance, the insurer is liable for all losses occasioned by "arrest or detainment of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever." 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1218.

PRINCEPS (Lat.) In the civil law. The prince; the emperor. Quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem, the emperor's pleasure has the force of law. Inst. 1. 2. 6.

PRINCEPS ET RESPUBLICA EX JUSTA causa possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the commonwealth, for a just cause, can take away my property. 12 Coke, 13.

PRINCEPS LEGIBUS SOLUTUS EST. The emperor is free from laws. Dig. 1. 3. 31; Halifax, Anal. pref. vi., vii., note.

PRINCEPS MAVULT DOMESTICOS MILites quam stipendiarios bellicis opponere casibus. A prince, in the chances of war, had better employ domestic than stipendiary troops. Co. Litt. 69.

PRINCIPAL. Leading; chief; more important.

This word has several meanings. It is used in opposition to "accessary," to show the degree of crime committed by two persons.

In estates, "principal" is used as opposed to "incident" or "accessory," to denote the more important subject to which others are appurtenant or ancillary, as in the rule: "The incident shall pass by the grant of the principal, but not the principal by the grant of the incident,—accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale." Co. Litt. 152a.

It is used in opposition to "agent," and in this sense it signifies that the principal is the prime mover.

It is used in opposition to "interest;" as, the principal being secured, the interest will follow.

It is used also in opposition to "surety," to denote the person for whom the surety is bound. Thus, we say, the principal is answerable before the surety.

Principal is used also to denote the more important; as, the principal person.

In the English law, the chief person in some of the inns of chancery is called "principal of the house." Principal is also used to designate the best of many things; as, the principal bed, the principal table, and the like.

—In Contracts. One who, being competent sui juris to do any act for his own benefit or on his own account, confides it to another person to do for him. 1 Domat, bk. 1, tit. 15, Intro.; Story, Ag. § 3.

—In Criminal Law. Principals in crime are either in the first or second degree.

A principal in the first degree is the one who actually commits the crime, either by his own hand, or by an inanimate agency (4 Bl. Comm. 34; 2 Sumn. [U. S.] 482), or by an innocent human agent (1 N. Y. 173; 1 Mass. 136).

A principal in the second degree is one who, being present at the commission of a crime by another, aids and abets him therein. There must be a guilty principal in the first degree. The principal in the second must be present, but constructive presence, as by keeping watch at a distance, is sufficient (83 N. Y. 408; 13 Nev. 386), and the principal in the second degree must in some manner assist or abet the principal offender; mere presence and acquiescence not being enough (81 Ill. 333; 45 Cal. 293). See "Aiding and Abetting;" "Presence."

The distinction between principals and accessories is not recognized in treason or in misdemeanors. 4 Bl. Comm. 35, 36.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE. A principal challenge was grounded on such manifest presumption of partiality that if the fact alleged was proved to be true, the disqualification of the juror followed as a legal conclusion, incapable of being rebutted. 144 Ill. 164. See Challenge.

PRINCIPAL CONTRACT. One entered into by both parties on their own accounts, or in the several qualities they assume.

PRINCIPAL FACT. The main fact in issue. The fact ultimately to be proved.

PRINCIPAL LEGATEE. In the statute as to right to letters of administration with will annexed means general, rather than chief or most important. 2 How. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 194.

PRINCIPAL OBLIGATION. That obligation which arises from the principal object of the engagement which has been contracted between the parties. It differs from an accessory obligation. For example, in the sale of a horse, the principal obligation of the seller is to deliver the horse; the obligation to take care of him till delivered is an accessory engagement. Poth. Obl. note 182. By principal obligation is also understood the engagement of one who becomes bound for himself, and not for the benefit of another. Poth. Obl. note 186.

PRINCIPALIS. (Lat. from princeps, first or chief). In civil and old English law. Principal; a principal debtor. Principalis debitor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 5. Called capitalis debitor (chief debtor). Id.

PRINCIPALIS DEBET SEMPER EXECUTI ANTEQUAM PERVENIATUR AD FIDELI JUSSORES. The principal should always be exhausted before coming upon the sureties. 2 Inst. 19.

PRINCIPIA DATA SEQUUNTUR CONCOMITANTIA. Given principles are followed by their concomitants.

PRINCIPIA PROBANT, NON PROBANTUR. Principles prove, they are not proved. 3 Coke, 40. See "Principles."

PRINCIPIIS OBSTA. Oppose beginnings. Branch, Princ.

PRINCIPIORUM NON EST RATIO. There is no reasoning of principles. 2 Bulst. 239. See "Principles."

PRINCIPIUM (Lat. from princeps, first). In civil and old English law. A beginning. In principio donationis, at the commencement of the gift. Bracton, fol. 17b.

A principle; a maxim. Analyzed by Lord Coke, in his peculiar manner, to be quasi primum caput (the first head), from which many cases have their origin or beginning. Co. Litt. 303a.

PRINCIPIUM EST POTISSIMA PARS CUJUSQUE REL. The beginning is the most powerful part of a thing. 10 Coke, 49.

PRINCIPLES. By this term is understood truths or propositions so clear that they cannot be proved nor contradicted unless by propositions which are still clearer.

They are of two kinds: One when the principle is universal, and these are known as "axioms" or "maxims;" as, "no one can transmit rights which he has not;" "the accessory follows the principal," etc. The other class are simply called "first principles." These principles have known marks, by which they may always be recognized. These are, first, that they are so clear that they cannot be proved by anterior and more manifest truths; second, that they are almost universally received; third, that they are so strongly impressed on our minds that we conform ourselves to them whatever may be our avowed opinions.

First principles have their source in the sentiment of our own existence, and that which is in the nature of things. A principle of law is a rule or axiom which is founded in the nature of the subject, and it exists before it is expressed in the form of a rule. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. prel. tit. 1, § 2; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 17. "The right to defend one's self continues as long as an unjust attack" was a principle before it was ever decided by a court; so that a court does not establish, but recognizes, principles of law.

That which constitutes the essence of a body, or its constituent parts. 8 Term R. 107. See "Patent."

PRIOR PETENS (Lat.) The first applicant. Priori petenti, to the first applicant.

PRIOR TEMPORE, POTIOR JURE. He who is first in time is preferred in right. Co. Litt. 14a; 2 P. Wms. 491; 1 Term R. 733; 9 Wheat. (U. S.) Append. 24.

PRIORITY. Precedence. Thus, claims are said to be allowed priority where they are satisfied from a fund before other claims against the same are allowed to participate.

PRISAGE. An ancient hereditary revenue of the crown, consisting in the right to take a certain quantity from cargoes of wine imported into England. In Edward I.'s reign it was converted into a pecuniary duty called "butlerage." 2 Steph. Comm. 561.

PRIZE (Fr.)

—In French Law. Prize; captured property. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 9. See "Prize."

Capture, by a naval force. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, sec. 18, § 1.

—In Old English Law. Things taken of the king's subjects by purveyors; provisions taken for the king's use. Cowell; Artic. sup. Chart. c. 2; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 50, § 21.

PRISEL EN AUTER LIEU (Law Fr.) A taking in another place; a plea in abatement in the action of replevin. 2 Ld. Raym. 1016, 1017.

PRISO (Law Lat.; Law Fr. prison, from prise, taken). In old English law. A prisoner; a captive in war. Spelman.

A prisoner, or imprisoned malefactor. Prisones vero, sic imprisonati, but prisoners so imprisoned. Bracton, fol. 123. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, § 5.

PRISON. A public building for confining persons, either to insure their production in court, as accused persons and witnesses, or to punish, as criminals.

The root is French, as is shown by the Norman prisons, prisoners (Kelham), and French prisons, prisons (Britt. c. 11, "De Prisons"). Originally it was distinguished from "gaol," which was a place for confinement, not for punishment. See Jacob, "Gaol." But at present there is no such distinction.

It is a general term to include jails, penitentiaries, etc.

PRISON BONDS. See "Gaol Liberties."

PRISON BREACH. The act of one who is lawfully detained on a criminal charge, or under sentence for a crime, in breaking out of the place in which he is detained, against the will of the person by whom he is detained.

It is something more than an escape,—adding thereto a breaking out of custody. The breaking must be actual, but need not be intentional. Thus, if loose bricks on top of a prison wall are thrown by a convict in climbing over the same, it is a breach. Rus. & R. 458. The opening of a window or unlocking of a door in the course of an escape constitutes a breach. 53 N. J. Law, 488.

PRISONER. One held in confinement against his will.

PRISONER OF WAR. One who has been captured while fighting under the banner of some state. He is a prisoner, although never confined in a prison. Not only such persons as a belligerent can lawfully kill, but all who may be separated from the mass of noncombatants by their importance to the enemy's state, or by their usefulness to him in his war, may be made prisoners of war. Glenn, Int. Law, 187.

Any person captured and held by the military power while carrying on war, and held as an enemy prisoner, whether rightly or wrongfully so held. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 65, note.

PRIST (Law Fr. ready). A formal word used in the days of oral pleading, to express a tender of or joinder in issue.

PRIUS VITIIS LABORAVIMUS, NUNC legibus. We labored first with vices, now with laws. 4 Inst. 76.

PRIVATE. Affecting or belonging to individuals, as distinct from the public generally; not clothed with office.

PRIVATE ACT. An act operating only upon particular persons and private concerns, and rather an exception than a rule. Opposed to "public act." 1 Bl. Comm. 86; 1 Term R. 125; Plowd. 28; Dyer, 75, 119; 4 Coke, 76. Private acts ought not to be noticed by courts unless pleaded.

PRIVATE BANKERS. Such as engage in the business of banking, without having any special grant of authority from the state. 80 N. Y. 225.

PRIVATE BILL OFFICE. An office of the English parliament where the business of obtaining private acts of parliament is conducted.

PRIVATE CARRIER. A carrier who is not a common carrier, because he does not hold himself out as ready to carry all persons who may employ him.

PRIVATE CORPORATION. A corporation founded by a private individual, or the stock of which is owned by private persons, such as a hospital or college, a bank, an insurance, turnpike, or railroad company. 2 Kent, Comm. 275.

PRIVATE EASEMENT. One the enjoyment of which is restricted to certain individuals.

PRIVATE HOUSE. A dwelling place, not open for the accommodation of all applicants who come lawfully and pay regularly. A boarding house for the accommodation of such only as are accepted by the proprietor is a private house. 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 344.

PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW. Is a convenient expression for such rules as, in the jurisprudence of most civilized nations, are applied, ex comitate, to the solution of questions depending upon foreign status, foreign laws, or foreign contracts. But no law, binding proprio vigore upon any independent state, can be established by generalization from the jurisprudence of other nations. 10 App. Cas. 513. See "Conflict of Laws;" "International Law."

PRIVATE NUISANCE. See "Nuisance."

PRIVATE PERSON. One not an officer.

PRIVATE PROPERTY. Within the constitutional requirement of compensation for "private property taken for public use," it includes, of course, all property owned by individuals, and also certain property held by public bodies, such as municipal corporations, which is held not for the performance of the public duties devolving upon it, but for purposes not deemed strictly public and political.

PRIVATE RIGHTS. Those rights which relate to the person, or to personal or real property of particular individuals. 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 3.

PRIVATE STATUTE. A statute which operates only upon particular persons and private concerns. 1 Bl. Comm. 86. See "General Statute."

PRIVATE WAY. An easement of one person, or of any number of persons less than the public at large, to pass over the servient land of another in the manner, at the times, on the location, and for the purpose allotted or agreed for the particular way. Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 866.

Private ways are either (1) appurtenant, i. e., pertaining to some particular land, or (2) in gross, i. e., personal to some particular individual or individuals. 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

PRIVATE WRONGS. A private wrong, otherwise termed a "tort" or "civil injury," is an infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals, considered merely as individuals. 4 Bl. Comm. 5. See "Public Wrongs."

PRIVATEER. A vessel owned by one or more private individuals, armed and equipped at his or their expense, for the purpose of carrying on a maritime war, by the authority of one of the belligerent parties. The commissions issued to such vessels are generally called "letters of marque."

The treaty of Paris (q. v.) provides for the discontinuance of the use of privateers except as against such powers (of which the United States is one) as did not accede to such treaty, and the general policy of the United States is against their use. See 1 Kent, Comm. 97.

PRIVATIO PRAESUPPONIT HABITUR. A deprivation presupposes a possession. 2 Rolle, 419.

PRIVATIS PRACTIONIBUS NON DUBIUM EST NON LAEDI JUS CAETERORUM. There is no doubt that the rights of others cannot be prejudiced by private agreements. Dig. 2. 15. 3. pr.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 623.

PRIVATORUM CONVENTIO JURI PUBLICO NON DEROGAT. Private agreements cannot derogate from public law. Dig. 50. 17. 45. 1.

PRIVATUM COMMODUM PUBLICO CEDIT. Private yields to public good. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 273.

PRIVATUM INCOMMODO PUBLICO BONO PENSATUR. Private inconvenience is made up for by public good.

PRIVEMENT ENCEINTE (Law Fr.) A term used to signify that a woman is pregnant, but not quick with child. Wood, Inst. 662.

PRIVIES. By privies are meant heirs, executors, administrators, terre-tenants, or those having an interest in remainder or reversion, or one who is made a party by the law. 7 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 857; 232 Ill. 168; 173 Ill. 117.

In judgments or decrees which do not determine status, but relate to rights or interests of parties in and to certain property, "privies" are those who succeed to the ownership of the property or some right or interest therein, under one of the parties to the litigation, directly or by mesne conveyance, by gift, by kinship, or by operation of law. Privity in such cases has reference to persons in their relation to property. 153 Wis. 69. See "Privy."

PRIVIGNUS (Lat.) In civil law. Son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a stepson. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PRIVILEGE. An exemption or immunity peculiar to a particular person or body. Commonly applied to the various special rights and immunities of legislators, and to the privilege of witnesses from testifying to certain facts as self-incriminating ones. See "Privileged Communications."

—In Civil Law. A right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other creditors. Code La. art. 3153; Dalloz, "Privilege;" Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 2, tit. 1, § 4, note 1.

—In Maritime Law. An allowance to the master of a ship of the general nature with prize, being compensation, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equitable allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties.

PRIVILEGE, WRIT OF. A process to enforce or maintain a privilege. Cowell.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

—In the Law of Slander. A communication made bona fide upon any subject matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contain criminatory matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable.

—In Evidence. Communication which the law refuses, on grounds of public policy, to allow to be disclosed in evidence. The policy prohibiting such disclosure may be (1) political, as that restraining the disclosure of secrets of state, (2) judicial, as that which prohibits the disclosure of proceedings in the jury room, (3) professional, as that which forbids the disclosure of statements by client to attorney, or (4) social, as that which restricts the disclosure of communications between husband and wife. Best, Ev. § 578.

PRIVILEGED COPYHOLDS. Those copyholds which are held according to the customs of the manor, and not according to the will of the lord. They include ancient demesne and customary freehold. 2 Woodde-son, Lect. 33-49; Lee, Real Prop. 63; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 709, 919; 2 Bl. Comm. 100.

PRIVILEGED DEED. In Scotch law. An instrument, for example, a testament, in the execution of which certain statutory formalities usually required are dispensed with, either from necessity or expediency. Ersk. Inst. 3. 2. 22; Bell, Dict.

PRIVILEGED VILLENAGE. In old English law. A species of villenage in which the tenants held by certain and determinate services; otherwise called "villein socage." Bracton, fol. 209. Now called "privilege copyhold," including the tenure in ancient demesne. 2 Bl. Comm. 99, 100.

PRIVILEGES. See "Gambling Contract."

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES. The "privileges and immunities" which are protected by the constitutional inhibition concern the personal and private rights of the citizen, such as his right to acquire and possess property, to pursue ordinary callings and secure happiness and safety, etc., and do not include within their meaning the right to hold office. The State may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such nonresidents of any privilege or immunity protected by the constitution of the general government, or of liberty or property within the meaning of those words as used in our state Constitution. 217 Ill. 248; 175 Ill. 611.

PRIVILEGIA QUAE RE VERA SUNT IN praejudicium reipublicae, magis tamen habent speciosa frontispicia, et boni publici praetextum, quam bonae et legales concessiones; sed praetextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. Privileges which are truly in prejudice of public good have, however, a more specious front and pretext of public good than good and legal grants; but, under pretext of legality, that which is illegal ought not to be admitted. 11 Coke, 88.

PRIVILEGIUM (priva lex, i. e., de uno homine). In civil law. A private law inflicting a punishment or conferring a reward. Calv. Lex.; Cicero, de Lege, 3, 19, pro Domo, 17; Vicat. Every peculiar right by which one creditor or class of creditors is preferred to another in personal actions. Vicat. Every privilege granted by law in derogation of common right. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 188, 189. A claim or lien on a thing, which, once attaching, continued till waiver or satisfaction, and which existed apart from possession. So at the present day in maritime law, e. g., the lien of seamen on ship for wages. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 561-563.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE (Lat.) Benefit of clergy.

PRIVILEGIUM EST BENEFICIUM PERSONALE et extinguitur cum persona. A privilege is a personal benefit, and dies with the person. 3 Bulst. 8.

PRIVILEGIUM EST QUASI PRIVATA lex. A privilege is, as it were, a private law. 2 Bulst. 189.

PRIVILEGIUM NON VALET CONTRA rempublicam. A privilege avails not against the commonwealth. Bac. Max. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 17; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 34.

PRIVITY (Law. Fr. privitie). Connection; interest; mutuality of interest; such as subsists between the immediate parties to a contract, as between lessor and lessee; otherwise called "personal privity," or "privity of contract." 3 Coke, 23a; Litt. §§ 460, 461. But this does not seem to be privity in its proper sense, for privies are they who are not parties. See "Privy."

A derivative kind of interest, founded upon or growing out of the contract of another, as that which subsists between an heir and his ancestor, between an executor and testator, and between a lessor or lessee and his assignee. 3 Coke, 23a.

The mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189; 6 How. (U. S.) 60; 246 Ill. 573; 127 Ill. 571; 161 Mich. 503. See "Privy."

PRIVY. One who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing. Co. Litt. 271a.

One who has an interest in an estate created by another, or in a contract or conveyance to which he is not a party.

A mutual or successive relationship of persons. 263 Ill. 203; 246 Ill. 573.

Privy may be:

(1) Of contract, being the relation which exists between the immediate parties to a contract.

(2) In estate, as between lessor and lessee.

(3) In blood, as between an heir and his ancestor.

(4) In representation, as between a testator and his executors.

(5) In tenure, as between a lord and his feudal tenants.

(6) In person, as between husband and wife or trustee and beneficiary.

(7) In possession, as between joint tenants or tenants in common.

(8) In law, as where the law casts land upon another without privity of blood or estate, as by escheat.

A more general division has been made into privies in estate, privies in blood, and privies in law. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189.

PRIVY COUNCIL. The chief council of the sovereign, called, by pre-eminence, "The Council," composed of those whom the king appoints. 1 Bl. Comm. 229-232.

By St. Charles II., in 1679, the number was limited to thirty,—fifteen the chief officers of the state ex virtute officii, the other fifteen at the king's pleasure; but the number is now indefinite. A committee of the privy council is a court of ultimate appeal in admiralty causes and causes of lunacy and idiocy (3 P. Wms. 108), and from all dominions of the crown except Great Britain and Ireland (1 Wooddeson, Lect. 157b; 2 Steph. Comm. 479; 3 Steph. Comm. 425, 432).

PRIVY SEAL. In English law. A seal which the king uses to such grants or things as pass the great seal. 2 Inst. 554.

PRIVY SIGNET. The seal which is first used in making grants, etc., of the crown. It is always in custody of the secretary of state. 2 Bl. Comm. 347; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 250; 1 Steph. Comm. 571.

PRIVY VERDICT. In practice. A verdict given privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. 3 Bl. Comm. 377. Now disused.

PRIZE.

—In Maritime Law. The apprehension and detention at sea of a ship or other vessel, by authority of a belligerent power, either with the design of appropriating it, with the goods and effects it contains, or with that of becoming master of the whole or a part of its cargo. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 228.

The vessel or goods thus taken.

Goods taken on land from a public enemy are called "booty;" and the distinction between a prize and booty consists in this, that the former is taken at sea, and the latter on land.

—In Contracts. A reward which is offered to one of several persons who shall accomplish a certain condition, 81 N. Y. 539; as if an editor should offer a silver cup to the individual who shall write the best essay in favor of peace. In this case there is a contract subsisting between the editor and each person who may write such essay that he will pay the prize to the writer of the best essay. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 675.

A thing which is won by putting into a lottery.

PRIZE COURT. In English law. That branch of admiralty which adjudicates upon cases of maritime captures made in time of war. A special commission issues in England, in time of war, to the judge of the admiralty court, to enable him to hold such court. See "Admiralty."

Some question has been raised whether the prize court is or is not a separate court from the admiralty court. Inasmuch as the commission is always issued to the judge of that court, and the forms of proceeding are substantially those of admiralty, while the law applicable is derived from the same sources, the fact that the commission of prize is only issued occasionally would hardly seem to render the distinction a valid one.

In the United States, the admiralty courts discharge the duties both of a prize and an instance court.

PRIZEFIGHT. A personal combat between men, without weapons, in public and by agreement, for a prize or reward. 67 Miss. 352.

PRO. In Latin phrases. A preposition meaning "for."

PRO BONO ET MALO. For good and for evil. •

PRO CONFESSO (Lat. as confessed). In equity practice. A decree taken where the defendant has either never appeared in the suit, or, after having appeared, has neglected to answer. 1 Daniell, Ch. Prac. 479; Adams, Eq. 327, 374; 1 Smith, Ch. Prac. 254.

PRO CORPORA COMITATUS. Latin words meaning "for the body of the county." Watt v. People, 126 Ill. 33.

PRO DEFECTU EMPTORUM. For want (failure) of purchasers.

PRO DEFECTU EXITUS. For, or in case of, default of issue. 2 Salk. 620.

PRO DEFECTU HAEREDIS. For want of an heir.

PRO DEFECTU JUSTITIAE. For defect or want of justice. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 62, § 2.

PRO DEFENDENTE (Law Lat.) For the defendant. Vaughan, 65. Commonly abbreviated, pro. def. Hardr. passim. "Morton, pro querent. Blackstone, pro def." 1 W. Bl. 532.

PRO DERELICTO (Lat.) As derelict or abandoned. A species of usucaption in the civil law. The title of Dig. 41. 7. Quod pro derelicto habitum est, what is held as derelict. Id. 41. 7. 4.

PRO DIGNITATE REGALI. In consideration of the royal dignity. 1 Bl. Comm. 223.

PRO DIVISO. As divided, i. e., in severalty.

PRO DONATO. As a gift; as in case of gift; by title of gift. A species of usucaption in the civil law. Dig. 41. 6. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO DOTE. As a dowry; by title of dowry. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 9. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO EMPTORE. As a purchaser; by the title of a purchaser. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 4. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO EO QUOD (Lat.) In pleading. For this that. This is a phrase of affirmation, and is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117, note 4; 2 Chit. Pl. 369-393; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

PRO FACTI. As a fact.

PRO FALSO CLAMORE SUO. A nominal amercement of a plaintiff for "his false claim," which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

PRO FORMA. As a matter of form. 3 East, 232; 2 Kent, Comm. 245.

PRO HAC VICE. For this turn; for this one particular occasion.

PRO ILLA VICE. For that turn. 3 Wils. 233, arg.

PRO INDEFENSO. As undefended; as making no defense. A phrase in old practice. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 7.

PRO INDIVISO (Lat.) For an undivided part. The possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, and where, consequently, neither knows his several portion till divided. Bracton, lib. 5.

PRO INTERESSE SUO (Lat.) According to his interest.

PRO LAESIONE FIDEI. For breach of faith. 3 Bl. Comm. 52.

PRO LEGATO. As a legacy; by the title of a legacy. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 8.

PRO LUCRARI (Law Lat.) For to gain. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 7, § 12.

PRO MAJORI CAUTELA. For greater caution.

PRO NON SCRIPTO (Lat.) As not written; as though it had not been written; as never written. Ambl. 139. Pro non scriptis, as void. 7 Wils. & S. 523.

PRO OPERE ET LABORE (Law Lat.) For work and labor.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS. An ancient writ for partition of lands between coheirs. Reg. Orig. 316.

PRO POSSE SUO. To the extent of his power or ability. Bracton, fol. 109.

PRO POSSESSORE. As a possessor; by title of a possessor. Dig. 41. 5. See Id. 5. 3. 13.

PRO POSSESSORE HABETUR QUI dolo injuriave deest possidere. He is esteemed a possessor whose possession has been disturbed by fraud or injury. Off. Exec. 166.

PRO QUERENTE (Lat.) For the plaintiff; usually abbreviated pro quer., or p. q.

PRO RATA (Lat.) According to the rate, proportion, or allowance. A creditor of an insolvent estate is to be paid pro rata with creditors of the same class.

PRO RE NATA (Lat.) For the occasion as it may arise.

PRO SALUTE ANIMAE. For the good of his soul. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are pro salute animae; hence it will not be a temporal damage founding an action for slander that the words spoken put any one in danger of such a suit. 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 309n, 437; 4 Steph. Comm. 207.

PRO SE. For himself; in his own behalf; in person.

PRO SOCIO. For a partner; the name of an action in behalf of a partner. A title of the civil law. Dig. 17. 2; Code, 4. 37.

PRO SOLIDO. For the whole; as one; jointly; without division. Dig. 50. 17. 141. 1.

PRO TANTO (Lat.) For so much. See 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 400.

PRO TEMPORE. For the time being; temporarily; provisionally.

PROBABILITY. Likelihood; consonance to reason; for sample, there is a strong probability that a man of good moral character, and who has heretofore been remarkable for truth, will, when examined as a witness under oath, tell the truth; and, on the contrary, that a man who has been guilty of perjury will not under the same circumstances, tell the truth. The former will therefore be entitled to credit, while the latter will not.

It is not as strong an expression as "proof." "Demonstration produces certain knowledge; proof produces belief and probability opinion." 19 S. C. 39.

PROBABLE. Having the appearance of truth; appearing to be founded in reason.

That which is probable is that which has more evidence for than against it; which inclines the mind to believe a fact although it leaves some room for doubt. Probability is that quality or state which presents an appearance of truth. 269 Ill. 319.

PROBABLE CAUSE. Such a state of facts as to make it a reasonable presumption that their supposed existence was the cause of action.

The principal technical use of the phrase is to define the degree of certainty which will justify one in instituting a criminal prosecution, and relieve from liability for malicious prosecution should the charge prove unfounded.

As so used, "probable cause" is such a state of facts known to and influencing the prosecutor as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence, acting conscientiously, impartially, reasonably, and without prejudice, to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty. Hilliard, Torts, c. 12, § 18; 81 Ala. 220; 62 N. Y. 19.

Belief in the guilt of the person accused must exist (67 Wis. 350), but is not in itself sufficient (56 Mich. 367), if ordinary care, diligence, and impartiality were not exercised (60 Miss. 916).

PROBABLE EVIDENCE. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability. Butler, Anal. Intro.

PROBABLE REASONING (Lat. argumentum verisimile). In the law of evidence. Reasoning founded on the probability of the fact or proposition sought to be proved or shown; reasoning in which the mind exercises a discretion in deducing a conclusion from premises. Burr. Circ. Ev. 22, 23.

PROBANDI NECESSITAS INCUMBIT illi qui agit. The necessity of proving lies with him who sues. Inst. 2. 20. 4.

PROBATE COURTS. See "Court of Probate."

PROBATE OF A WILL. The proof before an officer or court authorized by law that an instrument offered to be proved or recorded is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be.

In some jurisdictions, the term is loosely used to denote the proof of claim against estates, etc.

PROBATIO (Lat.) Proof; more particularly direct, as distinguished from indirect, or circumstantial, evidence.

PROBATIO MORTUA. Dead proof; that is, proof by inanimate objects, such as deeds or other written evidence.

PROBATIO PLENA. In the civil law. Full proof; proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

PROBATIO SEMI-PLENA. In the civil law. Half-full proof; half-proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

PROBATIO VIVA. Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of living witnesses.

PROBATION. The evidence which proves a thing. It is either by record, writing, the party's own oath, or the testimony of witnesses. Proof. It also signifies the time of a novitiate; a trial. Nov. 5.

PROBATIONES DEBENT ESSE EVIDENTES, id est, perspicuae et faciles intelligi. Proofs ought to be made evident, that is, clear and easy to be understood. Co. Litt. 283.

PROBATIO EXTREMIS, PRAESUMITUR media. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 20.

PROBATIVE. In the law of the evidence. Having the effect of proof.

PROBATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact which actually has the effect of proving a fact sought; an evidentiary fact. 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 18.

PROBATOR. In old English law. Strictly, an accomplice in felony who, to save himself, confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. Jacob.

PROBATORY TERM. In the British courts of admiralty, after the issue is formed between the parties, a time for taking the testimony is assigned. This is called a "probatory term."

This term is common to both parties, and either party may examine his witnesses. When good cause is shown, the term will be enlarged. 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 418; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 217.

PROBI ET LEGALES HOMINES (Lat.) Good and lawful men; persons competent, in point of law, to serve on juries. Cro. Eliz. 654, 751; Cro. Jac. 635; Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 147; Hardin (Ky.) 63; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A).

PROBITY. Justice; honesty. A man of probity is one who loves justice and honesty, and who dislikes the contrary. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 772.

PROCEDENDO (Lat.) In practice. A writ which issues where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior jurisdiction by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege, and it does not appear to such superior court that the suggestion upon which the cause has been removed is sufficiently proved; in which case, the superior court by this writ remits the cause to the court from whence it came, commanding the inferior court to proceed to the final hearing and determination of the same. See 1 Chit. 575; 2 W. Bl. 1060; 1 Strange, 527; 6 Term R. 365; 4 Barn. & Ald. 535; 16 East, 387.

It also issues where an inferior court unwarrantably delays in giving judgment. 3 Bl. Comm. 109; 4 Minor, Inst. 276, 301.

PROCEDENDO ON AID PRAYER. If one pray in aid of the crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquela come to them. So, also, on a personal action. New Nat. Brev. 154.

PROCEDURE. The rule of pleading and practice by which rights are enforced. It is generally considered as not including the law of evidence.

PROCEEDING. In its general acceptation, this word means the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, the mode of deciding them, of opposing judgments, and of executing.

In a narrower sense, any act, in the course of an action, done to achieve a given end.

A prescribed mode of action to carry into effect a right. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 620.

Ordinary proceedings intend the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course at common law.

Summary proceedings are those where the matter in dispute is decided without the intervention of a jury. These must be authorized by the legislature, except, perhaps, in cases of contempt, for such proceedings are unknown to the common law.

In Louisiana there is a third kind of proceeding, known by the name of "executory proceeding," which is resorted to in the following cases: When the creditor's right arises from an act importing a confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; or when the creditor demands the executor. o. a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. Code La. art. 732.

In New York, and some other states, the code of practice divides remedies into actions and special proceedings. An action is a regular judicial proceeding, in which one party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Every other remedy is a special proceeding. Code N. Y. § 2.

PROCEEDS. Money or articles of value arising or obtained from the sale of property. Goods purchased with money arising from the sale of other goods, or obtained on their credit, are proceeds of such goods. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 201, 202. The sum, amount, or value of goods sold, or converted into money. Wharton.

It is a term of equivocal import, depending on the context. 89 Pa. St. 46.

PROCERES (Lat.) The name by which the chief magistrates in cities were formerly known. St. Armand, Hist. Eq. 88.

PROCES VERBAL. In French law. A true relation in writing, in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species of inquisition of office.

The proces verbal should be dated, contain the name, qualities, and residence of the public functionary who makes it, the cause of complaint, the existence of the crime, that which serves to substantiate the charge, point out its nature, the time, the place, the circumstances, state the proofs and presumptions, describe the place,—in a word, everything calculated to ascertain the truth. It must be signed by the officer. Dalloz.

PROCESS.

—In Practice. The means of compelling a defendant to appear in court, after suing out the original writ, in civil, and, after indictment, in criminal, cases. In a broader sense all writs and mandates issued in the course of the proceeding. 15 Fla. 410.

The method taken by law to compel a compliance with the original writ or commands of the court.

In a strict sense, "process" is confined to the mandate of a court under its seal, whereby a party or an officer of the court is commanded to do certain acts. Thus, the summons used in many states, signed by plaintiff's attorney only, is not process. 12 Minn. 80; 17 Ore. 564.

In civil causes, in all real actions and for injuries not committed against the peace, the first step was a summons, which was served in personal actions by two persons called summoners, in real actions by erecting a white stick or wand on the defendant's grounds. If this summons was disregarded, the next step was an attachment of the goods of the defendant, and in case of trespasses the attachment issued at once without a summons. If the attachment failed, a distringas issued, which was continued till he appeared. Here process ended in injuries not committed with force. In case of such injuries, an arrest of the person was provided for. See "Arrest." In modern practice some of these steps are omitted; but the practice of the different states is too various to admit tracing here the differences which have resulted from retaining different steps of the process.

In the English law, process in civil causes is called "original" process, when it is founded upon the original writ; and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate process, which issues pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as, to summon juries, witnesses, and the like. "Mesne" process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to "final" process, or process of execution; and then it signifies all process which intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Bl. Comm. 279. And this is the modern usage. 31 N. J. Law, 231.

—In Patent Law. The art or method by which any particular result is produced.

A process, eo nomine, is not made the subject of a patent in our act of congress. It is included under the general term "useful art." Where a result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called "processes." A new process is usually the result of discovery; a machine, of invention. The arts of tanning, dyeing, making waterproof cloth, vulcanizing india rubber, smelting ores, and numerous others, are usually carried on by "processes," as distinguished from "machines." But the term "process" is often employed more vaguely in a secondary sense, in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus, we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively, as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine, as distinguished from a process. In this use of the term it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine, and does not constitute a patentable subject matter, because there cannot be a valid patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine, but only for the machine which produces it. 15 How. (U. S.) 267, 268. See 2 Barn. & Ald. 349.

PROCESS OF GARNISHMENT. See "Garnishment."

PROCESS OF LAW. See "Due Process of Law."

PROCESS ROLL. In practice. A roll used for the entry of process to save the statute of limitations. 1 Tidd, Prac. 161, 162.

PROCESSIONING. A term used to denote the manner of ascertaining the boundaries of land. It consists in a survey of the lands in the presence of all persons interested who shall have been previously given notice. Comp. St. Tenn. 548. The term is also used in North Carolina (3 Murph. 504; 3 Dev. 268), and Georgia (69 Ga. 53).

It is similar to the English "perambulation" (q. v.)

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. In English practice. A writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCESSUS LEGIS EST GRAVIS VEXATIO, executio legis coronat opus. The process of the law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work. Co. Litt. 289.

PROCHEIN. (Law Fr.) Next. A term somewhat used in modern law, and more frequently in the old law; as, prochein ami prochein cousin. Co. Litt. 10.

PROCHEIN AMI (Law Fr.; spelled, also, prochein amy and prochain amy). Next friend. He who, without being appointed guardian, sues in the name of an infant for the recovery of the rights of the latter, or does such other acts as are authorized by law; as, in Pennsylvania, to bind the infant apprentice. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 172; 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 27. For some of the rules with respect to the liability or protection of a prochein ami, see 3 Madd. 468; 4 Madd. 461; 2 Strange, 709; 1 Dick. 346; 1 Atk. 570; Mosely, 47, 85; 1 Ves. Jr. 409; 7 Ves. 425; 10 Ves. 184; Edwards, Parties, 182-204.

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE. Next vacancy. Used in respect to appointments to ecclesiastical vacancies.

PROCIINCTUS (Lat. from procingi [properly, praecingi], to be girt about). In the Roman law. A girding or preparing for battle. Testamentum in procinctu, or testamentum procinctum, a will made by a soldier, while girding himself, or preparing to engage in battle. A. Gell. Noct. Att. lib. xv. c. 27, note 4; Adams, Rom. Ant. 62; Calv. Lex. This mode of making a will had become obsolete in the time of Justinian. Inst. 2. 10. 1.

PROCLAMARE (Lat.)

—In the Civil Law. To cry out, or proclaim; to give warning. Inst. 4. 3. 5.

To assert a claim. Calv. Lex.

—In Old European Law. To appeal (to a higher court). Flod. lib. 3, c. 23; Capit. lib. 6, c. 299; Spelman.

PROCLAMATION. The act of causing some state matters to be published or made generally known. A written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority; as, the president's proclamation, the governor's proclamation, the mayor's proclamation. The word "proclamation" is also used to express the public nomination made of any one to a high office; as, such a prince was proclaimed emperor.

The giving of publicity is essential to the idea of a proclamation, no paper being such until it is in some manner published. 101 U. S. 770.

—In Practice. The declaration made by the crier, by authority of the court, that something is about to be done.

It usually commences with the French word oyez (hear ye), in order to attract attention. It is particularly used on the meeting or opening of the court, and at its adjournment. It is also frequently employed to discharge persons who have been accused of crimes or misdemeanors.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. In old English practice. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issued to the sheriff of the county where the party dwelt, to make three proclamations for the defendant to yield himself or be outlawed.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION. In old English practice. When a party neglected to appear upon a subpoena, or an attachment in the chancery, a writ bearing this name issued, and, if he did not surrender himself by the day assigned, he was reputed and declared a rebel.

PROCLAMATION OF RECUSANTS. A proceeding whereby such persons were formerly convicted, on nonappearance at the assizes. Jacob.

PROCREATION. The generation of children. It is an act authorized by the law of nature. One of the principal ends of marriage is the procreation of children. Inst. tit. 2. pr.

PROCTOR. One appointed to represent in judgment the party who empowers him, by writing under his hand, called a "proxy." The term is used chiefly in the courts of civil, ecclesiastical, and admiralty law. The proctor is somewhat similar to the attorney. Ayliffe, Par. 421.

PROCURACY. The writing or instrument which authorizes a procurator to act. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

PROCURARE (Lat. from pro, for, and curare, to take care of). To take care of another's affairs for him, or in his behalf; to see to the affairs of another; to govern; to manage; to take care of, or superintend. Dig. 17. 1. 34.

PROCURATIO (Lat. from procurare, to manage). Management of another's affairs by his direction, and in his behalf; pro-curation; administration; agency. See "Pro-curation."

A taking care of another. Spelman.

PROCURATION. In civil law. The act by which one person gives power to another to act in his place, as he could do himself. A letter of attorney.

An express procuration is one made by the express consent of the parties. An implied or tacit procuration takes place when an individual sees another managing his affairs and does not interfere to prevent it. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 2; Id. 50. 17. 60; Code, 7. 32. 2.

Procurations are also divided into those which contain absolute power, or a general authority, and those which give only a limited power. Dig. 3. 3. 58; Id. 17. 1. 60. 4. Procurations are ended in three ways: First, by the revocation of the authority; second, by the death of one of the parties; third, by the renunciation of the mandatory, when it is made in proper time and place, and it can be done without injury to the person who gave it. Inst. 3. 27; Dig. 17. 1; Code. 4. 35. See "Authority;" "Letter of Attorney;" "Mandate."

PROCURATION FEE (or MONEY). In English law. Brokerage or commission allowed to scriveners and solicitors, for obtaining loans of money. 4 Bl. Comm. 157.

PROCURATIONS. In ecclesiastical law. Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishops or archdeacons ratione visitationis. Dig. 3. 39. 25; Ayliffe, Par. 429; 17 Viner, Abr. 544.

PROCURATOR. In civil law. A proctor; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration. Procurator est, qui aliena negotia mandata Domini administrat. Dig. 3. 3. 1. See "Attorney;" "Authority."

PROCURATOR, FISCAL. In Scotch law. A public prosecutor. Bell, Dict.

PROCURATOR IN REM SUAM. In Scotch law. A term which imports that one is acting as attorney as to his own property. When an assignment of a thing is made, as a debt, and a procuration or power of attorney is given to the assignee to receive the same, he is in such case procurator in rem suam. 3 Stair, Inst. 1. 2. 3, etc.; 3 Ersk. Inst. 3. 5. 2; 1 Bell, Dict. bk. 5, c. 2, sec. 1, § 2.

PROCURATOR LITIS (Lat.) In civil law. One who, by command of another, institutes and carries on for him a suit. Vicat. Procurator is properly used of the attorney of actor (the plaintiff), defensor of the attorney of reus (the defendant). It is distinguished from advocatus, who was one who undertook the defense of persons, not things, and who was generally the patron of the person whose defense he prepared, the person himself speaking it. It is also distinguished from cognitor, who conducted the cause in the presence of his principal, and generally in cases of citizenship; whereas the procurator conducted the cause in the absence of his principal. Calv. Lex.

PROCURATOR NEGOTIORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The manager of another's business or affairs; an agent; an attorney in fact. Calv. Lex.

PROCURATOR PROVINCIAE (Lat.) In the Roman law. A provincial officer who managed the affairs of the revenue, and had a judicial power in matters that concerned the revenue. Adams, Rom. Ant. 178.

PROCURATORIUM (Lat.) The proxy or instrument by which a proctor is constituted and appointed.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION. In Scotch law. A form of proceeding by which a vassal authorizes the feu to be returned to his superior. Bell, Dict. It is analogous to the surrender of copyholds in England. Wharton.

PROCURER. In French law. An attorney; one who has received a commission from another to act on his behalf. There were in France two classes of procureurs: Procureurs ad negotia, appointed by an individual to act for him in the administration of his affairs; persons invested with a power of attorney; corresponding to "attorneys in fact." Procureurs ad lites were person appointed and authorized to act for a party in a court of justice. These corresponded to attorneys at law (now called, in England, "solicitors of the supreme court"). The order of procureurs was abolished in 1791, and that of avoués established in their place. Mozley & W.

PROCURER GENERAL. In French law. An officer of the French court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecutes every one who is accused of a crime, according to the forms of French law. His functions appear to be confined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He has a general superintendence over the officers of police and of the juges d'instruction, and he requires from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months. Brown.

PRODES HOMINES. The barons of the realm.

PRODIGUS. In civil law. A person who, though of full age, is incapable of managing his affairs, and of the obligations which attend them, in consequence of his bad conduct, and for whom a curator is therefore appointed.

PRODITION. Treason; treachery.

PRODITOR. A traitor.

PRODITORIE (Lat.) Treasonably. This is a technical word formerly used in indictments for treason, when they were written in Latin.

PRODUCENT. In ecclesiastical law. He who produces a witness to be examined.

PRODUCTIO SECTAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Production of suit; the production, by a plaintiff, of his secta or suit, that is, a number of persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in his count (or intentio). This was done at the time of counting, or immediately after, and was expressed by the phrase at the end of the count or declaration: "Et inde producit sectam," and thereupon, or thereof, he produces suit. Translated in the modern forms: "And therefore he brings suit." Et inde statim producat sectam sufficientem, duos ad minus, vel tres, vel plures, si possit, and thereupon he should immediately produce a sufficient suit, two at least, or three or more, if he can. Bracton, fol. 410. See Id. 159, 314b; Steph. Pl. 429, and note.

PRODUCTION OF SUIT (productio sectae). The concluding clause of all declarations is, "and thereupon he brings his suit." In old pleading this referred to the production by the plaintiff of his secta or suit, i. e., persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in the declaration.

The phrase has remained; but the practice from which it arose is obsolete. 3 Bl. Comm. 295; Steph. Pl. 428.

PROFANE. That which has not been consecrated. By a profane place is understood one which is neither sacred, nor sanctified, nor religious. Dig. 11, 7. 2. 4.

PROFANELY. In a profane manner. In an indictment, under the act of assembly of Pennsylvania, against profanity, it is requisite that the words should be laid to have been spoken profanely. 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394.

PROFANENESS, or PROFANITY. In criminal law. Imprecations in the name of the Deity.

It is a form of blasphemy. 8 Conn. 375.

PROFECTITUS (Lat.) In civil law. That which descends to us from our ascendants. Dig. 23. 3. 5.

PROFER (Law. Lat. proferus, profrus, from Law Fr. proferer, to produce). In old English law. An offer or proffer; an offer or endeavor to proceed in an action, by any man concerned to do so. Cowell. A judicial offer to do some act.

A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer; a payment made on such return. Cowell.

PROFERT IN CURIA (Lat. he produces in court. Sometimes written profert in curiam, with the same meaning). In pleading. A declaration on the record that a party produces the deed under which he makes title in court. In ancient practice, the deed itself was actually produced; in modern times, the allegation only is made in the declaration, and the deed is then constructively in possession of the court. 3 Salk. 119; 6 Man. & G. 277; 11 Md. 322.

Profert is, in general, necessary when either party pleads a deed and claims rights under it, whether plaintiff (2 Dutch. [N. J.] 293) or defendant (17 Ark. 279). to enable the court to inspect and construe the instrument pleaded, and to entitle the adverse party to oyer thereof (10 Coke, 92b; 1 Chit. Pl. 414; 1 Archb. Prac. 164), and is not necessary when the party pleads it without making title under it (Gould, Pl. c. 7, p. 2, § 47). But a party who is actually or presumptively unable to produce a deed may plead it without profert, as in suit by a stranger (Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" [O 8]; Cro. Jac. 217; Cro. Car. 441; Carth. 316), or one claiming title by operation of law (Co. Litt. 225; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" [I 12]; 5 Coke, 75), or where the deed is in the possession of the adverse party, or is lost. In all these cases, the special facts must be shown, to excuse the want of profert. See Gould, Pl. c. 8, p. 2; Lawes, Pl. 96; 1 Saund. 9a, note. Profert and oyer are abolished in England by the common-law procedure act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), and a provision exists (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99) for allowing inspection of all documents in the possession or under the control of the party against whom the inspection is asked. See 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 304. In many of the states of the United States profert has been abolished, and in some instances the instrument must be set forth in the pleading of the party relying upon it. The operation of profert and oyer, where allowed, is to make the deed a part of the pleadings of the party producing it. 11 Md. 322; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 234. See 7 Cranch (U. S.) 176.

PROFESSION. A public declaration respecting something. Code, 10. 41. 6. A state, art, or mystery; as, the legal profession. Dig. 1. 18. 6. 4; Domat, Dr. Pub. lib. 1, tit. 9, § 1, note 7. See 41 Mich. 155.

—In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of entering into a religious order. See 17 Viner, Abr. 545.

PROFICUUM. (L. Lat.) In old English law. Profit.

PROFIT A PRENDRE. A right to take products or emblements from the lands of another.

"Under the term 'profit' is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface, as herbage, wood, turf, coal, minerals, stones; also fish in a pond or stream." 9 S. E. 562.

Profits a prendre are distinguished from easements, in that they are rights of profit, while an easement is a right without profit. See "Easement."

PROFITS. An excess of the value of returns over the value of expenditures. The net amount made after deducting any proper expenses incident to the transaction. 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 452; 15 Minn. 519.

The expenses to be deducted are ordinarily the current expenses incident to the business; not such items as the depreciation of buildings in which the business is carried on. 94 U. S. 500.

This is a word of very extended significance. In commerce, it means the advance in the price of goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. In distinction from the wages of labor, it is well understood to imply the net return to the capital or stock employed, after deducting all the expenses, including not only the wages of those employed by the capitalist, but the wages of the capitalist himself for superintending the employment of his capital or stock. Smith, Wealth of Nations, bk. i. c. 6, and McCulloch's notes; Mill, Pol. Econ. c. 15. After indemnifying the capitalist for his outlay, there commonly remains a surplus, which is his profit, the net income from his capital. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. c. 15. The word "profit" is generally used by writers on political economy to denote the difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment.

The profit of the farmer and the manufacturer is the gain made by the sale of produce or manufactures, after deducting the value of the labor, materials, rents, and all expenses, together with the interest of the capital employed,—whether land, buildings, machinery, instruments, or money. The rents and profits of an estate, the income or the net income of it, are all equivalent expressions. The income or the net income of an estate means only the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management. 5 Me. 202, 203; 35 Me. 420, 421.

Under the term "profit" is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface; as, herbage, wood, turf, coals, minerals, stones; also fish in a pond or running water. Profits are divided into profits a prendre, or those taken and enjoyed by the mere act of the proprietor himself, and profits a vendre, namely, such as are received at the hands of and rendered by another. Hammond, N. P. 172.

Profits are divided by writers on political economy into gross and net,—gross profits being the whole difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment, and net profits being so much of that difference as is attributable solely to the capital employed. What remains as the clear gains in any business venture after deducting the capital invested, the expense incurred and the loss sustained. 83 Mich. 63.

The remainder of the difference, or in other words, the gross profits minus the net profits, has no particular name; but it represents the profits attributable to industry, skill, and enterprise. See Malthus, Def. Pol. Econ.; McCulloch, Pol. Econ. (4th Ed.) 563. But the word "profit" is generally used in a less extensive signification, and presupposes an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances.

PROGRESSION (Lat. progressio; from pro and gredior, to go forward). That state of a business which is neither the commencement nor the end. Some act done after the matter has commenced, and before it is completed. Plowd. 343.

PROHAEREDS. (L. Lat.) In old European law. Persons acting for heirs, or in place of heirs.

Remote heirs. Spelman.

PROHIBETUR NE QUIS FACIAT IN SUO quod nocere possit alieno. It is prohibited to do on one's own property that which may injure another's. 9 Coke, 59.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO, DIRECTA PARTI. A judicial writ which used to be addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste pending suit. Reg. Jud. 21; Moore, 917.

PROHIBITION (Lat. prohibition; from pro and habeo, to hold back). In practice. The name of a writ issued by a superior court, directed to the judge and parties of a suit in an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of the same, upon a suggestion that the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court. 3 Bl. Comm. 112; Comyn, Dig.; Bac. Abr.; Saund. Index; Viner, Abr.; 2 Sellon, Prac. 308; Ayliffe, Par. 434; 2 H. Bl. 533.

The writ is based on absence of jurisdiction, and will issue only where the lower court has either no jurisdiction of the action (47 Cal. 584; 4 Minn. 366; 60 N. Y. 31), or where, having jurisdiction of a cause, it proceeds to some act beyond its power (20 N. Y. 531). But where the lower court has jurisdiction of all matters involved, mere error in its decision is no ground for prohibition. 100 Mo. 59; 13 Ind. 235.

"The writ of prohibition, as its name imports, is one which commands the person to whom it is directed not to do something which, by the suggestion of the relator, the court is informed he is about to do. If the thing be already done, it is manifest that the writ of prohibition cannot undo it, for that would require an affirmative act, and the only effect of a writ of prohibition is to prevent any further proceedings in the prohibited direction." 4 Wall. (U. S.) 159.

PROHIBITIVE IMPEDIMENTS. Those impediments to a marriage which are only followed by a punishment, but do not render the marriage null. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 44.

PROJECT (Fr.) In international law. The draft of a proposed treaty or convention.

PROJECTIO (Lat. from projicere, to cast up). In old English law. A throwing up of earth by the sea. Used by Sir Matthew Hale a synonym of alluvio.

PROLEM ANTE MATRIMONIUM NATAM, ita ut post legitimam, lex civilis succedere facit in haereditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non sinit lex Anglorum. The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage [provided such offspring be afterwards legitimized] to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed. Fortescue, c. 39.

PROLES (Lat.) Progeny; such issue as proceeds from a lawful marriage, and, in its enlarged sense, it signifies any children.

PROLES SEQUITUR SORTEM PATERNAM. The offspring follows the condition of the father. 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 583, 660.

PROLETARIUS. In civil law. One who had no property to be taxed, and paid a tax only on account of his children (proles); a person of mean or common extraction. The word has become Frenchified, proletaire signifying one of the common people.

PROLICIDE (Lat. proles, offspring, cedere, to kill). In medical jurisprudence. A word used to designate the destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the subject into "foeticide," or the destruction of the foetus in utero, and "infanticide," or the destruction of the new-born infant. Ryan, Med. Jur. 137.

PROLIXITY. The unnecessary and superfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence. This will be rejected as impertinent. 7 Price, 278, note.

PROLOCUTOR (Lat. pro and loquor, to speak before). In ecclesiastical law. The president or chairman of a convocation.

PROLONGATION. Time added to the duration of something.

When the time is lengthened during which a party is to perform a contract, the sureties of such a party are, in general, discharged, unless the sureties consent to such prolongation.

In the civil law, the prolongation of time to the principal did not discharge the surety. Dig. 2. 14. 27; Id. 12. 1. 40.

PROLYTAE (Lat.) In Roman law. The term used to denominate students of law during the fifth and last year of their studies. They were left during this year very much to their own direction, and took the name prolytae omnino soluti. They studied chiefly the Code and the imperial constitutions. See Dig. Pref. Prim. Const. 2; Calv. Lex.

PROMISE. An engagement by which the promisor contracts towards another for the performance of some act. 1 Denio (N. Y.) 226.

"We are in the habit of considering as the essential feature of contract a promise by one party to another, or by two parties to one another, to do or forbear from doing certain acts. We are further in the habit of using the word 'promise' to signify a binding promise, as opposed to the offer of a promise, or, to use the cumbersome terminology of Austin, a sollicitation. * * * There are then three stages necessary to the making of that sort of agreement which results in contract: There must be an offer, there must be an acceptance of the offer resulting in a promise, and the law must attach a binding force to the promise, so as to invest it with the character of an obligation." Anson, Cont. 4.

PROMISE OF MARRIAGE. A contract between a man and a woman to marry each other at some future time. The implied agreement is, if no time be expressed, to marry within a reasonable time. 42 Mich. 346; 97 Pa. St. 465.

The agreement need not be in any set form (53 N. Y. 267), nor in express terms, but may be inferred from conduct (71 Hun [N. Y.] 187; 85 Ill. 222; 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 639).

To render the contract valid, the parties must be competent to contract generally (8 Mich. 318; 26 Barb. [N. Y.] 615), and, moreover, must be able to enter into the marriage relation; a promise by one already married (60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 222), or one who is impotent (41 N. J. Law, 13), being void; but precontract to marry another does not invalidate the promise (18 Mo. 389).

PROMISEE. A person to whom a promise has been made.

PROMISOR. One who makes a promise.

PROMISSORY NOTE. A written promise to pay a certain sum of money at a future time, unconditionally. Bailey, Bills, 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 74; 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 264; 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 143; 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 675; 1 Ala. 263; 7 Mo. 42; 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 536; 6 N. H. 364; 7 Vern. 22.

A written engagement to pay absolutely to a person named, or to order or bearer, at a specified time or on demand, a certain sum of money. 10 Ill. 252; 15 Mass. 387; 127 N. Y. 92.

No particular form of expression is required. 37 Ill. 137; 7 Vt. 22.

A date is not essential. 32 Ind. 375; 30 Vt. 11; 76 Ala. 339.

The promise must be unconditional. 30 Minn. 441; 6 Wis. 209.

The promise to pay may be implied from a phrase such as "good for," etc. (33 Ill.

424; 6 N. H. 364), or "due to," etc. (88 Hun [N. Y.] 535; 27 Ill. 337; 17 Ga. 574).

To be a promissory note, the instrument must be for the payment of money only. 40 Ark. 344; 20 N. Y. 272; 17 Wis. 139.

The payee must be clearly designated (13 Ga. 55; 6 Mo. App. 583; 1 Ill. 18); but this may be done by description, without naming him (16 Ill. 169).

The consideration need not be expressed. 127 N. Y. 92; 26 Or. 315; 8 Cal. 288.

The place of payment need not be stated. 31 Tex. 614.

The time of payment must be designated, unless the note is payable "on demand" (86 U. S. 560). But see 8 Miss. 176; 1 Pin. (Wis.) 643.

The amount payable must be certain (60 Mich. 432), but the addition of "current exchange" (9 Mich. 241; 54 Minn. 184; 10 Wis. 34), or "attorneys' fees" (82 Ind. 370), does not prevent the instrument being a note.

The decisions are in conflict as to whether negotiability is an essential of a promissory note. That it is not, see 1 Ga. 226; 46 Me. 387; 10 Gill & J. 299; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 172; 34 Vt. 402. Contra, 1 Ill. 18; 8 N. J. Law, 262; 66 N. Y. 14.

PROMOTERS.

—In English Law. Those who, in popular or penal actions, prosecute in their own names and the king's, having part of the fines and penalties.

—In Modern Corporation Law. Those persons who manage the incorporation of a company, issuing prospectuses, procuring the stock subscriptions, organizing, etc. Any one who actively assists in doing this, whether as a business or in a single instance, is a promoter. 1 Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations 264.

PROMOVENT. A plaintiff in a suit of duplex querela (q. v.) 2 Prob. Div. 192.

PROMULGATION. The order given to cause a law to be executed, and to make it public. It differs from "publication." 1 Bl. Comm. 45; St. 6 Hen. VI. c. 4.

PROMUTUUM (Lat.) In civil law. A quasi contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much. Poth. de l'Usure, pt. 3, § 1, a. 1.

This contract is called promutuum, because it has much resemblance to that of mutuum. This resemblance consists in this: First, that in both a sum of money or some fungible things are required; second, that in both there must be a transfer of the property in the thing; third, that in both there must be returned the same amount or quantity of the thing received. But, though there is this general resemblance between the two, the mutuum differs essentially from the promutuum. The former is the actual contract of the parties, made expressly, but the latter is a quasi contract, which is the effect of an error or mistake. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 1125, 1126.

PRONUNCIATIO (Lat. From pronunciare, to pronounce.) In old English law. Delivery of judgment on a verdict. Bract. fol. 289.

PROOF. The conviction or persuasion of the mind of a judicial tribunal by the exhibition of evidence of the reality of a fact alleged. See "Evidence."

PROPER FEUDS. The original and genuine feuds held by pure military service.

PROPERTY. The right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels, to the exclusion of others. 6 Bin. (Pa.) 98; 4 Pet. (U. S.) 511; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 283; 59 N. Y. 192; 31 Cal. 637; 11 East, 290, 518; 14 East, 370.

The right to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing in any manner not forbidden by law (56 N. Y. 268; 31 Cal. 637); the power of disposition being essential (18 N. Y. 396; 70 Mich. 537).

The term is frequently applied to that which is the subject of property and in this sense it includes everything corporeal or incorporeal which is the subject of ownership. 26 Conn. 449; 84 N. Y. 565. It includes choses in action. 23 Minn. 239.

Within legal and constitutional provisions for the protection of "property," it has been held to include the right to labor (33 Hun [N. Y.] 374), to practice a profession (90 Pa. St. 477), the right to take an appeal (57 Cal. 464). See "Real Property;" "Chattel Property."

PROPERTY PER INDUSTRIAM. A qualified property in animals acquired by reclaiming or confining them.

PROPERTY PROPTER IMPOTENTIAM. A qualified property which one has in animals ferae naturae, which are on his premises, and unable, by immaturity, to leave them. It is lost when such animals become able to leave.

PROPERTY PROPTER PRIVILEGIUM. A qualified property in wild animals by reason of a privilege of hunting them, to the exclusion of others. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

PROPINQUIOR EXCLUDIT PROPINQUUM; propinquus remotum; et remotus remotiorem. He who is nearer excludes him who is near; he who is near, him who is remote; he who is remote, him who is more remote. Co. Litt. 10.

PROPINQUITY (Lat.) Kindred; parentage. See "Affinity;" "Consanguinity."

PROPINQUUS (Lat.) In old English law. Near; near of kin.

PROPIOS, or PROPRIOS. In Spanish law. Certain portions of ground laid off and reserved when a town was founded in Spanish America, as the unalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, etc., or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

PROPONE.

—In Scotch Law. To state. To propone a defense is to state or move it. 1 Kames, Eq. pref.

—In Ecclesiastical and Probate Law. To bring forward for adjudication; to exhibit as basis of a claim; to proffer for judicial action.

PROPONENT. In ecclesiastical law. One who propounds a thing; as, "the party proponent doth allege and propound." 6 Ecc. 356, note.

He who propounds a will for probate.

PROPORCITAS, Proportatio. L. Lat. In old records. The purport, tenor or substance of a thing; a report or relation of a matter. Called proport. Spelman.

In old Scotch law. A verdict; called the proport or report of the jury or assise. Spelman.

PROPURTUM. In old records. Purport; intention or meaning. Cowell.

PROPOSAL. An offer; a formal offer to perform some undertaking, stating the time and manner of performance, and price demanded, or one or more of these particulars, either directly or by implied or direct reference to some announcement requesting such an offer. See 35 Ala. (N. S.) 33. A proposal of this character is not to be considered as subject to different rules from any other offer. Pierce, Am. Ry. Law, 364.

PROPOSITION. An offer to do something. Until it has been accepted, a proposition may be withdrawn by the party who makes it, and, to be binding, the acceptance must be in the same terms, without any variation. See "Acceptance;" 1 La. 190; 4 La. 80.

PROPOSITUM INDEFINITUM AEQUIPOLLET universall. An indefinite proposition is equal to a general one.

PROPOSITUS (Lat.) The person proposed. In making genealogical tables, the person whose relations it is desired to find out is called the propositus.

PROPOUND. In the law of wills. To offer for probate.

PROPRES. In French law. The term propres or biens propres is used to denote that property which has come to an individual from his relations, either in a direct line, ascending or descending, or from a collateral line, whether the same have come by operation of law or by devise. Propres is used in opposition to acquets. Poth. des Propres; 2 Burge, Conf. Laws, 61.

PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat. in his own person). It is a rule in pleading that pleas to the jurisdiction of the court must be pleaded in propria persona, because, if pleaded by attorney, they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. Lawes, Pl. 91.

An appearance may be in propria persona, and need not be by attorney.

PROPRIEDAD. In Spanish law. Property. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROPRIETARY. Belonging or pertaining to a proprietor. See 117 U. S. 487.

PROPRIETARY MEDICINES. Proprietary medicines are described as those "prepared, put up and marked and ready for use by the public so soon as they leave the hands of the manufacturer. They are in packages or bottles, are labeled with the name, and are accompanied with wrappers containing directions for their use and the conditions for which they are claimed to be specifics. 176 Ill. App. 628.

PROPRIETARY RIGHTS. Those rights which an owner of property has by virtue of his ownership. When proprietary rights are opposed to acquired rights, such as easements, franchises, etc., they are more often called "natural rights."

PROPRIETAS (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. Property; that which is one's own; ownership.

—Proprietas Nuda. Naked or mere property or ownership; the mere title, separate from the usufruct.

—Proprietas Plena. Full property, including not only the title, but the usufruct, or exclusive right to the use. Calv. Lex.

PROPRIETAS TOTIUS NAVIS CARINAE causam sequitur. The property of the whole ship follows the ownership of the keel. Dig. 6. 1. 61. Provided it had not been constructed with the materials of another. Id.; 2 Kent, Comm. 362.

PROPRIETAS VERBORUM EST SALUS proprietatum. The propriety of words is the safety of property.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA. The name of a writ. See "De proprietate Probanda."

PROPRIETATES VERBORUM OBSERVANDAE SUNT. The proprieties (i. e., proper meanings) of words are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 136.

PROPRIETOR. An owner; the holder of the legal title; the person who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything, whether in possession or not. Latham v. Roach, 72 Ill. 181.

PROPRIO VIGORE (Lat.) By its own force or vigor. An expression frequently used in construction. A phrase is said to have a certain meaning proprio vigore.

PROPTER AFFECTUM (Lat.) For or on account of some affection or prejudice. A jurymen may be challenged propter affectum; as, because he is related to the party, has eaten at his expense, and the like. See "Challenge."

PROPTER DEFECTUM (Lat.) On account of or for some defect. This phrase is frequently used in relation to challenges. See "Challenge."

PROPTER DEFECTUM SANGUINIS. On account of failure of blood.

PROPTER DELICTUM (Lat.) For or on account of crime. A juror may be challenged propter delictum when he has been convicted of an infamous crime. See "Challenge."

PROPTER HONORIS RESPECTUM. On account of respect of honor or rank. See "Challenge."

PROROGATED JURISDICTION. In Scotch law. That jurisdiction which, by the consent of the parties, is conferred upon a judge who, without such consent, would be incompetent. Ersk. Inst. 1. 2. 15.

At common law, when a party is entitled to some privilege or exemption from jurisdiction, he may waive it, and then the jurisdiction is complete; but the consent cannot give jurisdiction.

PROROGATION (Lat.) Putting off to another time. It is generally applied to the English parliament, and means the continuance of it from one day to another. It differs from "adjournment," which is a continuance of it from one day to another in the same session. 1 Bl. Comm. 186.

—In Civil Law. The giving time to do a thing beyond the term prefixed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 1. See "Prolongation."

PROSCRIBED (Lat. proscribo, to write before). In civil law. Among the Romans, a man was said to be proscribed when a reward was offered for his head; but the term was more usually applied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the consequences of civil death. Code, 9. 49.

PROSECUTION. The conducting or carrying forward of a judicial proceeding.

The means adopted to bring a supposed offender against the criminal law to punishment by due course of law.

PROSECUTOR. In practice. He who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government.

The public prosecutor is an officer appointed by the government to prosecute all offenses,—he is the attorney general or his deputy.

A private prosecutor is one who prefers an accusation against a party whom he suspects to be guilty.

PROSEQUI (Lat.) To follow up or pursue. See "Nolle Prosequi."

PROSPECTIVE (Lat. prospicio, to look forward). That which is applicable to the future. It is used in opposition to retrospective. To be just, a law ought always to be prospective. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 116.

PROSPECTIVE DAMAGES. Such as will naturally result from the injury complained of, but have not accrued at the time of the trial; such, for example, as the loss of wages from a personal injury which will result where plaintiff has not, at the time of the trial, recovered his earning capacity.

PROSTERNERE. (Lat.) In old English law. To throw down; to break or pull down; to abate.

PROSTITUTE. A female given to indiscriminate lewdness for gain.

PROSTITUTION. The common lewdness of a woman for gain. The act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for hire. 12 Metc. (Mass.) 97; 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 610; 102 Ind. 161; 154 Ill. 647. In Iowa, the term seems to be used in a wider sense than elsewhere prevails. 56 Iowa, 432; 78 Iowa, 492.

In a figurative sense, it signifies the bad use which a corrupt judge makes of the law, by making it subservient to his interest; as, the prostitution of the law, the prostitution of justice.

PROTECTIO TRAHIT SUBJECTIONEM, subjectio protectionem. Protection draws to it subjection; subjection, protection. Co. Litt. 65.

PROTECTION.

—In Mercantile Law. The name of a document generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

—In Governmental Law. That benefit or safety which the government affords to the citizens.

—In English Law. A privilege granted by the king to a party to an action, by which he is protected from a judgment which would otherwise be rendered against him. Of these protections there are several kinds. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 65.

PROTECTION OF INVENTIONS ACT. St. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 27. By this act it is provided that the exhibition of new inventions shall not prejudice patent rights, and that the exhibition of designs shall not prejudice the right to registration of such designs.

PROTECTION ORDER. In English probate practice. An order for the protection of the property of a deserted wife.

PROTECTIONIBUS, STATUTE DE. The English statute 33 Edw. I. st. 1, allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, etc.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT. One who may be appointed by the settler of an estate tail, without whose consent the tenant in tail cannot bar the entail except as against his own issue.

PROTECTORATE. Government by a protector. The period of his rule. Specially so used with reference to the period of English history during which Oliver and Richard Cromwell held the title of "Lord Protector."

—In International Law. A relation assumed by a strong nation toward a weak one, whereby the former protects the latter from hostile invasion or dictation, and interferes more or less in its domestic concerns. Cent. Dict. Such, for example, is the supervision assumed jointly by the United States, Germany, and Great Britain over Samoa. See Davis, Int. Law, 247.

PROTEST.

—In Mercantile Law. A notarial act, made for want of payment of a promissory note, or for want of acceptance or payment of a bill of exchange by a notary public, in which it is declared that all parties to such instruments will be held responsible to the holder for all damages, exchanges, re-exchange, etc.

—In Legislation. A declaration made by one or more members of a legislative body that they do not agree with some act or resolution of the body. It is usual to add the reasons which the protestants have for such a dissent.

—In Maritime Law. A writing, attested by a justice of the peace, a notary public, or a consul, made and verified by the master of a vessel, stating the severity of a voyage by which a ship has suffered, and showing that it was not owing to the neglect or misconduct of the master. See Marsh. Ins. 715, 716; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 145, 238, 408, note; 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 119; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 6, 10, 317; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 195; 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 144.

PROTESTANDO. See "Protestation."

PROTESTATION.

—In Pleading. The indirect affirmation or denial, by means of the word "protestando" (in the Latin form of pleadings, protestando), of the truth of some matter which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed, denied, or entirely passed over. See 3 Bl. Comm. 311.

The exclusion of a conclusion. Co. Litt. 124.

Its object was to secure to the party making it the benefit of a positive affirmation or denial in case of success in the action, so far as to prevent the conclusion that the fact was admitted to be true as stated by the opposite party, and at the same time to avoid the objection of duplicity to which a direct affirmation or denial would expose the pleading. 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 96; 2 Saund. 103; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (N); Plowd. 276; Lawes, Pl. 171. Matter which is the ground of the suit upon which issue could be taken could not be protested. Plowd. 276; 3 Wils. 109; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. But see 2 Wm. Saund. 103, note. Protestations are no longer allowed (3 Bl. Comm. 312), and were generally an unnecessary form (3 Lev. 125).

The common form of making protestations is as follows: "Because protesting that," etc., excluding such matters of the adversary's pleading as are intended to be excluded in the protestando, if it be matter of fact; or, if it be against the legal sufficiency of his pleading, "because protesting that the plea by him above pleaded in bar" (or by way of reply, or rejoinder, etc., as the case may be) "is wholly insufficient in law." See, generally, 1 Chit. Pl. 534; Archb. Civ. Pl. 245; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (N); Steph. Pl. 235.

—In Practice. An asseveration made by taking God to witness. A protestation is a form of asseveration which approaches very nearly to an oath. Wolff. Inst. § 375.

PROTESTED FOR NONPAYMENT.

These words, in mercantile law, have come to have a technical meaning. In them is included not only the idea that the bill is past due, but that payment of it has been demanded; and not being paid, it is therefore dishonored. They mean that the process necessary to dishonor the bill, to-wit, demand, refusal of payment and the drawing up of a formal protest, has been gone through with. All this is included in and meant by the term "protested." 2 Douglas' (Mich.) R. 425; 8 Cal. 637; 28 N. Y. 554; 12 Barb. 250.

PROTHONOTARY. The title given to an officer who officiates as principal clerk of some courts. Viner, Abr. The office exists in Pennsylvania.

In the ecclesiastical law, the name of "prothonotary" is given to an officer of the court of Rome. He is so called because he is the first notary,—the Greek word protos, signifying primus, or first. These notaries have pre-eminence over the other notaries, and are put in the rank of prelates. There are seven of them. Dalloz.

PROTOCOL. A record or register. Among the Romans, protocollum was a writing at the head of the first page of the paper used by the notaries or tabellions. Nov. 44.

In France, the minutes of notarial acts were formerly transcribed on registers, which were called "protocols." Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 6, § 1, note 413.

By the German law it signifies the minutes of any transaction. Enc. Am. "Protocol." In the latter sense, the word has of late been received into international law. Id.

PROFOLLUM (Graeco-Lat.) In the civil law. A brief note or memorandum of a transaction made by a notary, for the purpose of being afterwards extended or written out in full (quod breviter et succincte notatur a tabellione, ut extendi deinde atque absolvi possit). Calv. Lex. A hasty note of a transaction, as it were prima collectio rerum, the first getting together of matters. Id.

Protocollum, among the Romans, seems to have originally signified a formal caption or heading of instruments drawn by tabelliones (notaries); or, more particularly, a writing at the head of the paper used by these officers, containing the name of the comes sacrarum largitionum (chief officer of the imperial treasury), and the time when the instrument was made. Nov. 44. It seems to have served the purpose of an official stamp. In the forty-fourth Novel, the tabelliones are forbidden to write their instruments upon any other paper than such as contained this protocollum at the head.

PROTOCOLO. In Spanish law. The original draft or writing of an instrument which remains in the possession of the escribano, or notary. White, New Recop. lib. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROTUTOR (Lat.) In civil law. He who, not being the tutor of a pupil or minor, has administered his property or affairs as if he had been, whether he thought himself legally invested with the authority of a tutor or not.

He who marries a woman who is tutrix becomes, by the marriage, a protutor. The protutor is equally responsible as the tutor.

PROUT PATET PER RECORDUM (Lat.)

As appears by the record. This phrase is frequently used in pleading; as, for example, in debt on a judgment or other matter of record, unless when it is stated as an inducement, it is requisite, after showing the matter of record, to refer to it by the prout patet per recordum. 1 Chit. Pl. *356; 10 Me. 127.

PROVE. To make proof of; to establish by evidence.

PROVER. In old English law. One who undertakes to prove a crime against another. 28 Edw. I.; 5 Hen. IV. One who, being indicted and arraigned for treason or felony, confesses before plea pleaded, and accuses his accomplices to obtain pardon; state's evidence. 4 Bl. Comm. 329, 330*. To prove. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Britt c. 22.

PROVINCE. Sometimes this signifies the district into which a country has been divided; as, the province of Canterbury, in England; the province of Languedoc, in France. Sometimes it means a dependency or colony, as the province of New Brunswick. It is sometimes used figuratively to signify power or authority; as, it is the province of the court to judge of the law, that of the jury to decide on the facts.

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS. The decrees of provincial synods held under divers archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Henry III., to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V., and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI.

PROVING OF THE TENOR. In Scotch practice. An action for proving the tenor of a lost deed. Bell, Dict.

PROVISION.

—In Common Law. The property which a drawer of a bill of exchange places in the hands of a drawee; as, for example, by remittances, or when the drawee is indebted to the drawer when the bill becomes due, provision is said to have been made. Acceptance always presumes a provision. See Code de Comm. arts. 115-117.

—In French Law. An allowance granted by a judge to a party for his support,—which is to be paid before there is a definitive judgment. In a civil case, for example, it is an allowance made to a wife who is separated from her husband. Dalloz.

PROVISIONAL ASSIGNEES. Those who, under the old bankruptcy practice of England, were appointed to take charge of bankrupt estates until the creditors' assignees were appointed.

PROVISIONAL ORDER. In English law. Under various acts of parliament, certain public bodies and departments of the government are authorized to inquire into matters which, in the ordinary course, could only be dealt with by a private act of parliament, and to make orders for their regulation. These orders have no effect unless they are confirmed by an act of parliament, and are hence called "provisional orders." Several orders may be confirmed by one act. The object of this mode of proceeding is to save the trouble and expense of promoting a number of private bills.

PROVISIONAL REMEDY. A remedy adopted to meet a particular exigency. The term is ordinarily applied to process issued at the commencement or during the pendency of a suit to preserve some status until the rights of the parties are adjudicated. Preliminary injunction, attachment, arrest on mesne process, garnishment, etc., are provisional remedies.

PROVISIONAL SEIZURE.

—In Louisiana. A term which signifies nearly the same as attachment of property.

It is regulated by the Code of Practice as follows, namely: The plaintiff may, in certain cases, hereafter provided, obtain the provisional seizure of the property which he holds in pledge, or on which he has a privilege, in order to secure a payment of his claim. Code La. art. 284.

Provisional seizure may be ordered in the following cases: First, in executory proceedings, when the plaintiff sues on a title importing confession of judgment; second, when a lessor prays for the seizure of furniture or property used in the house, or attached to the real estate which he has leased; third, when a seaman, or other person, employed on board of a ship or water craft, navigating within the state, or person having furnished materials for or made repairs to such ship or water craft, prays that the same may be seized, and prevented from departing, until he has been paid the amount of his claim; fourth, when the proceedings are in rem, that is to say, against the thing itself which stands pledged for the debt, when the property is abandoned or in cases where the owner of the thing is unknown or absent. Code La. art. 285. See 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 168; 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 153; 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 320; 1 Mart. (La.) 168; 12 Mart. (La.) 32.

PROVISIONS OF EMPOWERIZATION. Provisions granting power. 146 Ill. App. 420.

PROVISIONS OF OXFORD. Certain provisions made in the parliament of Oxford, 1258, for the purpose of securing the execution of the provisions of Magna Charta against the invasions thereof by Henry III. The government of the country was in effect committed by these provisions to a standing committee of twenty-four, whose chief merit consisted in their representative character, and their real desire to effect an improvement in the king's government. Brown.

PROVISO. A proviso is a limitation or exception to a grant made or authority conferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate or the other be exercised unless in case provided. 187 Mich. 516, 525.

The name of a clause inserted in an act of the legislature, a deed, a written agreement, or other instrument, which generally contains a condition that a certain thing shall or shall not be done, in order that an agreement contained in another clause shall take effect.

"This word hath divers operations. Sometimes it worketh a qualification or limitation, sometimes a condition, and sometimes a covenant." Co. Litt. 146b, 203b.

It always implies a condition, unless subsequent words change it to a covenant; but when a proviso contains the mutual words of the parties to a deed, it amounts to a covenant. 2 Coke, 72; Cro. Eliz. 242; Moore, 707.

A proviso differs from an exception. 1 Barn. & Ald. 99. An exception exempts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso defeats their operation conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. 8 Am. Jur. 242; Plowd. 361; Carth. 99; 1 Saund. 234a, note; Lilly, Reg., and the cases there cited. See, generally, Am. Jur. No. 16, art. 1; Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (A); Comyn, Dig. "Condition" (A 1), (A 2); Dwarr. St. 660.

PROVISO EST PROVIDERE PRAESENTIA ET FUTURA, NON PRAETERITA. A proviso is to provide for the present and the future, not the past. 2 Coke, 72; Vaughan, 279; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 275.

PROVISOR. He that hath the care of providing things necessary, but more especially one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision. Jacob; 25 Edw. III. One nominated by the pope to a benefice before it became void, in prejudice of right of true patron. 4 Bl. Comm. 111*.

PROVOCATION (Lat. provoco, to call out). The act of inciting another to do something. Such conduct as tends to arouse passions which may lead to the commission of an act.

Provocation is no defense for crime, but may mitigate the damages for an assault (3 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 518), and if adequate to arouse in the mind of a reasonable man such passion as to cause him to act rashly and without reflection, it will reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter. See "Cool Blood."

PROVOST. A title given to the chief of some corporations or societies. In France, this title was formerly given to some presiding judges. The word is derived from the Latin praepositus.

PROVOST MARSHAL. A military officer appointed to arrest and secure deserters and other offenders, to prevent pillaging, indict offenders, and see to the passage and execution of sentence, and also to perform other certain duties pertaining to the police and discipline of the service. The provost marshal of the navy has charge of prisoners, etc. Webster.

PROXENETAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Among the Romans, these were persons whose functions somewhat resembled those of the brokers of modern commercial nations. Dig. 50. 14. 3; Domat, lib. 1, tit. 17, § 1, art. 1.

PROXIMATE CAUSE. That which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by a new cause, produced an event, and without which that event would not have occurred. Shear. & R. Neg. § 261.

PROXIMATE DAMAGES. Proximate damages are such as are the ordinary and natural results of the omission or commission of acts of negligence, and such as are usual and might have been reasonably expected. 123 Ill. App. 24-25; 175 Ill. 406. See "Remote Damages."

PROXIMITY (Lat.) Kindred between two persons. Dig. 38. 16. 8.

PROXIMUS EST CUI NEMO ANTECEDIT; SUPREMUS EST QUEM NEMO SEQUITUR. He is next whom no one precedes; he is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

PROXY. A person appointed in the place of another, to represent him.

The instrument by which a person is appointed so to act. It is said to be a contraction of "procuracy."

—In Ecclesiastical Law. A judicial proctor, or one who is appointed to manage another man's law concerns, is called a "proxy." Ayliffe, Par.

An annual payment made by the parochial clergy to the bishop, etc., on visitations. Tomlins. See Rutherford, Inst. 253; Hall, Prac. 14.

PRUDENTER AGIT QUI PRAECEPTO LEGIS OBTEMPERAT. He acts prudently who obeys the commands of the law. 5 Coke, 49.

PRYK. A kind of service of tenure. Blount says it signifies an old-fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant holding land by this tenure was to find for the king. Wharton.

PSYCHOLOGICAL FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact which can only be perceived mentally; such as the motive by which a person is actuated. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 130, 131.

PUBERTY. In civil law. The age in boys of fourteen and in girls of twelve years. Ayliffe, Pand. 63; Hall, Prac. 14; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tom. 5, p. 100; Inst. 1. 22; Dig. 1. 7. 40. 1; Code, 5. 60. 3; 1 Bl. Comm. 436.

PUBLIC. The whole body politic, or all the citizens of the state. It is inapplicable to a municipal corporation or other political subdivision; the people are the public. 21 Mich. 335. It does not necessarily mean all of the inhabitants of a state, a county or a community. 184 Ill. App. 156; 169 Ill. 84.

This term is sometimes joined to other terms, to designate those things which have a relation to the public; as, a public officer, a public road, a public passage, a public house.

A distinction has been made between the terms "public" and "general;" they are sometimes used as synonymous. The former term is applied strictly to that which concerns all the citizens and every member of the state; while the latter includes a lesser, though still a large, portion of the community. Greenl. Ev. § 128.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR. One appointed to administer the estates of intestates where there is no person interested in them competent and willing to take the administration. He is generally a standing officer, or an officer of court acting ex officio, as the sheriff in Arkansas (28 Ark. 304), or the clerk of the superior court in Georgia (20 Ga. 775); but the term is also applied to an administrator appointed for the occasion in default of any application for administration.

PUBLIC AUCTION. This phrase is frequently used, but it is difficult to conceive of a private auction, so the word "public" seems to add nothing. See "Auction."

PUBLIC BRIDGE. One forming part of a public highway; one erected for common use or public convenience, as distinguished from one erected for the use and convenience of a private person.

Common use on special occasion will constitute a public bridge. 4 Campb. 189.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS. Buildings ordinarily used in or indispensable to the conduct of the public business. 41 Pa. St. 270.

PUBLIC CARRIER. A common carrier (q. v.)

PUBLIC CHARITY. Any charity whose objects are undefined; one for the benefit of an indefinite number of unselected persons. See "Charitable Uses."

PUBLIC COMPANY. A term used in the English law for an open corporation. "What a 'public company' is has not been defined, but one test is whether the members have a right to transfer their shares." Buckl. 3; 12 Ch. Div. 655.

PUBLIC CORPORATIONS. Public corporations are political corporations, such as are founded wholly for public purposes, and the whole interest in which is in the public. All corporations, whether public or private, are, in contemplation of law, founded upon the principle that they will promote the interest or convenience of the public. 71 Ill. 322.

PUBLIC DEBT. That which is due or owing by the government.

PUBLIC DOMAIN. In its most general sense, all landed property owned by the public. In peculiar context it has been limited to unappropriated public lands. 68 Tex. 547.

PUBLIC EASEMENT. An easement, such as a public right of way, the enjoyment of which belongs to the public generally, and not to the owner of a particular dominant estate.

PUBLIC ENEMY. This word, used in the singular number, designates a nation at war with the United States, and includes every member of such nation. Vattel, bk. 3, c. 5, § 70.

To make a public enemy, the government of the foreign country must be at war with the United States; for a mob, howsoever numerous it may be, or robbers, whoever they may be, are never considered as a public enemy. 2 Marsh. Ins. 508; 3 Esp. 131, 132.

A common carrier is exempt from responsibility whenever a loss has been occasioned to the goods in his charge by the act of a public enemy; but the burden of proof lies on him to show that the loss was so occasioned. 3 Munf. (Va.) 289; 4 Bin. (Pa.) 127; 2 Bailey (S. C.) 157.

Bills of lading exempting the carrier from liability for losses arising from the act of God or the "public enemy," refer, by the expression quoted, to the enemy of the country, and not to that of the carrier, and do not include mobs and riots. 242 Ill. 188. See "Common Carriers."

PUBLIC LAND. In its most general sense, all lands owned by the government. In the more limited sense in which it is ordinarily used, it signifies such lands as are subject to sale or other disposition by the government under general laws. 92 U. S. 761; 98 U. S. 118.

PUBLIC LAW. In one sense, international law. In another sense, a general law.

PUBLIC MINISTERS. A general term of the international law, which includes all diplomatic representatives, but excludes consuls.

PUBLIC NOTICE. Notice given to the public generally, as by advertisement or posting, and not to some particular individual.

PUBLIC NUISANCE. See "Nuisance."

PUBLIC OFFENSE. Includes all criminal offenses, including violations of municipal ordinances. 34 Minn. 1.

PUBLIC PASSAGE. A right to pass over a body of water. This term is synonymous with "public highway," with this difference: by the latter is understood a right to pass over the land of another; by the former is meant the right of going over the water which is on another's land. Carth. 193; Hammond, N. P. 195.

PUBLIC PEACE. "Public tranquillity; that quiet, order, and freedom from disturbance which is guaranteed by the laws." The determination of what acts disturb the public peace rests in the sound discretion of the legislature. 6 Daly (N. Y.) 276, 280.

PUBLIC POLICY. The criterion by which the courts condemn contracts as opposed to the public will, or as tending to subvert the public welfare.

Thus, public policy invalidates contracts tending to immorality, as for the rental of a brothel (27 Mo. App. 649), or in consideration of future illicit cohabitation (58 Ala. 303; 57 Hun [N. Y.] 292); contracts facilitating divorce (89 Ill. 349; 25 Minn. 72); contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade (49 N. J. Eq. 217); combinations to restrict competition (90 Cal. 110; 68 N. Y. 558); contracts to unfairly influence an appointment or election to public office (8 Kan. 601; 23 Mo. App. 555); to unlawfully influence legislation (88 Mass. 152); to limit the jurisdiction of courts, as by agreeing not to sue in a particular court (94 U. S. 535); to compound a criminal offense (83 Ill. 418); to restrict competition at a public sale, as by agreeing not to bid thereat (47 Ga. 479). And the agreement need only tend to illegality. Thus, an agreement for witness' fees contingent on the success of the party for whom the witness is to testify (10 Ala. 206), or for a fee to a private prosecutor contingent on a conviction (62 Ky. 207), or by an attorney to defend against offenses to be committed in the future (41 Kan. 364), are void as against public policy.

PUBLIC RECORD. A record maintained by public authorities, or open to the inspection of the public.

PUBLIC RIVER. A navigable river. See "Navigable."

PUBLIC ROAD. A road dedicated to, and kept up by the public, as contradistinguished from private ways or neighborhood roads, which are not so kept up. 20 Ala. 88.

PUBLIC SALE. A sale conducted on notice to the public, at which the public is invited to attend and purchase.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Schools maintained at the public expense by taxation.

PUBLIC SEAL. The official seal of a public officer. See "Seals."

PUBLIC STOCKS. Public obligations or securities.

PUBLIC TRIAL. A trial which, under reasonable limitations, the public are freely admitted to attend. The attendance may be limited to the reasonable seating capacity of the courtroom (92 Mo. 542), and persons whose attendance as a class would probably tend to disorder may be excluded (Fed. Cas. No. 14680), but the exclusion of all persons except officers of the court is a violation of the right to a public trial (103 Cal. 242), as is an order to an officer to admit only "respectable persons," where it appears that proper persons were excluded (89 Mich. 276),

"The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused, that the public may see he is fairly dealt with, and not unjustly condemned, and that the presence of interested spectators may keep his triers keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions; and the requirement is fairly observed if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence could be of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether." Cooley, Const. Lim. *312.

PUBLIC USE. The nature of the "public use" for which private property may be taken is "flexible" (43 N. J. Law, 384), "dependent somewhat on the situation and wants of the community for the time being" (1 N. J. Eq. 694), and not reducible to any set of rules or principles of certain and uniform application (7 W. Va. 195). It has been limited to use by the public themselves (21 W. Va. 534), and, on the other hand, extended to any use for the public utility or advantage (16 Gray [Mass.] 417). The use may be by a private person for the public benefit (17 N. H. 57), and it is immaterial that such person may derive private profit therefrom (39 N. Y. 171).

The establishment of public highways is an undisputed public use (103 Mass. 120), as is the establishment of a railway line (23 Wall. [U. S.] 108; 9 N. Y. 100), and its various facilities, as depots (111 Mass. 125), but spur tracks for private advantage have been held not to be (40 Ohio St. 504; 48 Fed. 615). Canals (39 N. Y. 171), public wharves (110 N. Y. 569), drains necessary to preserve the public health (72 N. Y. 1), irrigation (4 Colo. 100), public cemeteries (66 N. Y. 569), public grain elevators (68 N. Y. 208), have been held to be public purposes.

PUBLIC VERDICT. A verdict delivered by the jury in open court, as distinguished from a privy verdict sealed and delivered by the jury when court is not in session.

PUBLIC WAR. See "War."

PUBLIC WAYS. Highways (q. v.)

PUBLIC WORSHIP. "May mean the worship of God, conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises, under a provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. In this country, what is called 'public worship' is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish. A church absolutely belonging to the public, and in which all persons without restriction have equal rights, such as the public enjoy in highways or public landings, is certainly a very rare institution, if such a thing can be found." 14 Gray (Mass.) 586, 602.

PUBLIC WRONGS. A public wrong, otherwise termed a "crime," is a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community, considered as a community in its social aggregate capacity. 4 Bl. Comm. 5; Thatcher's Cr. Cas. 550.

Thus, an entry on the land of another without committing a breach of the peace is a mere trespass (8 Grat. [Va.] 708; 5 Denio [N. Y.] 277), but an entry upon the land of another in such manner as to cause a breach of the public peace is a public wrong, criminally punishable (8 Grat. [Va.] 708). See 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 4.

PUBLICAN. In civil law. A farmer of the public revenue; one who held a lease of some property from the public treasury. Dig. 39. 4. 1. 1; Id. 39. 4. 12. 3; Id. 39. 4. 13.

PUBLICANUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A farmer of the customs; a publican (qui publico fructur). Dig. 39. 4. 1; Id. 50. 16. 16; Calv. Lex.

PUBLICATION. The act by which a thing is made public.

Printing without circulation is not publication (5 Fed. 729), and circulation in manuscript is publication (3 Fed. 486). See, also, "Literary Property."

It differs from "promulgation" (q. v.) And see, also, Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. "Preliminaire," note 59, for the difference in the meaning of these two words.

Publication has different meanings. When applied to a law, it signifies the rendering public the existence of the law; when it relates to the opening of the depositions taken in a case in chancery, it means that liberty is given to the officer in whose custody the depositions of witnesses in a cause are lodged, either by consent of parties, or by the rules or orders of the court, to show the depositions openly, and to give out copies of them. Prac. Reg. 297; Blake, Ch. Prac. 143. When spoken of a will, it signifies that the testator has done some act from which it can be concluded that he intended the instrument to operate as his will. Cruise, Dig. tit. 38, c. 5, § 47; 3 Atk. 161; 4 Me. 220; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 15; Comyn, Dig. "Estates by Devise" (E 2), "Chancery" (Q).

—In the Law of Libel and Slander. The communication of the defamatory words to some third person.

The sending of a letter to the person defamed is not publication. 68 Iowa, 726. Nor is the speaking of slanderous words where no third person could hear them. 13 Gray (Mass.) 304.

PUBLICI JURIS (Lat.) Of public right. As applied to a thing or right means that it is open to or exercisable by all persons.

When a thing is common property, so that any one can make use of it who likes, it is said to be "publici juris;" as in the case of light, air, and public water.

PUBLICIANA (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an action introduced by the praetor Publicius, the object of which was to recover a thing which had been lost. Inst. 4. 6. 4; Dig. 6. 2. 1. 16. 17. Its effects were similar to those of our action of trover.

PUBLICUM JUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Public law; that law which regards the state of the commonwealth (quod ad statum rei Romanae spectat). Inst. 1. 1. 4.

PUBLISHER. One who, by himself or his agent, makes a thing publicly known, one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, and other papers.

PUDICITY. Chastity; the abstaining from all unlawful carnal commerce or connection. A married woman or a widow may defend her pudicity as a maid may her virginity. See "Chastity;" "Rape."

PUDZELD. In old English law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233a. The same as "woodgeld."

PUEBLO. In Spanish law. People; all the inhabitants of any country or place, without distinction. A town, township, or municipality. Las Partidas, pt. 1, tit. 2, l. 5; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 4; Schmidt, Civ. Law, 44, 185; 10 Otto (U. S.) 251.

PUER (Lat.) A boy; a child. In its enlarged sense, this word signifies a child of either sex, though in its restrained meaning it is applied to a boy only.

A case once arose which turned upon this question, whether a daughter could take lands under the description of puer; and it was decided by two judges against one that she was entitled. Dyer, 337b. In another case, it was ruled the other way. Hob. 33.

PUERI SUNT DE SANGUINE PARENTUM, sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puerorum. Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of their children. 3 Coke, 40.

PUERILITY. In civil law. A condition which commenced at the age of seven years, the end of the age of infancy, and lasted till the age of puberty,—that is, in females till the accomplishment of twelve years, and in males till the age of fourteen years fully accomplished. Ayliffe, Pand. 63.

The ancient Roman lawyers divided puerility into proximus infantiae, as it approached infancy, and into proximus pubertati, as it became nearer to puberty. 6 Toul-lier, Dr. Civ. note 100.

PUERTIA (Lat.) In civil law. Age from seven to fourteen. 4 Bl. Comm. 22; Whar-ton. The age from birth to fourteen years in the male, or twelve in the female. Calv. Lex. The age from birth to seventeen. Vicat.

PUFFER. A person employed by the owner of property which is sold at auction to bid it up, who does so accordingly, for the purpose of raising the price upon bona fide bidders.

This is a fraud, which, at the choice of the purchaser, invalidates the sale. 3 Madd. 112; 5 Madd. 37, 440; 12 Ves. 483; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 227, note; 2 Kent, Comm. 423; Cowp. 395; 3 Ves. 628; 3 Term R. 963; 6 Term R. 642; 2 Brown, Ch. 326; 1 P. A. Browne (Pa.) 346; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 89; 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 328; 4 Har. & Mch. (Md.) 282; 2 Dev. (N. C.) 126; 2 Const. (S. C.) 821. See "Auction;" "Bidder."

PUFFING. Exaggerated statements of value such as a vendor is allowed to make use of. 85 Ill. 275.

PUIS, PUYS, PUES, PUS, or PUZ (Law Fr.) After; since; afterwards. Kelham.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE (Law Fr. since last continuance). In pleading. A plea which is put in after issue joined, for the purpose of introducing new matter, or matter which has come to the knowledge of the party pleading it subsequently to such joinder.

There is a distinction between a plea setting up matter of defense, which has arisen since the commencement of the action but before plea pleaded, and pleas alleging matters of defense originating after pleas pleaded. A plea of the former kind is not, properly speaking, a plea of puis darrein continuance. Such a plea differs from a plea in bar in this only, that it cannot destroy the original cause of action, and cannot be pleaded in bar generally, but must be pleaded to the further maintenance of the suit. 8 Ill. 103. See "Plea."

PUISNE (Law Fr.) Younger; junior; associate.

PULSARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To beat, without giving pain.

To accuse or charge; to proceed against at law. Calv. Lex.

PULSATOR. In the civil law. A name sometimes applied to the actor.

PUNCTUM (Lat.) A point; an indivisible point of time. See "Punctum Temporis."

A quarter of an hour, according to the old computation. Ten moments (momenta) made a point (punctum), and four points an hour. See "Momentum."

PUNCTUM TEMPORIS (Lat.) A point of time; an indivisible period of time; the shortest space of time; an instant. Calv. Lex.

A point or period from which a computation of time is made. 2 Alis. Crim. Prac. 188.

PUNDBRECH. In old English law. Pound breach (q. v.).

PUNIR L. Fr. (from Lat. punire). To punish. Puni, puny; punished. Britt. c. 68.

PUNISHMENT. In criminal law. Some pain or penalty warranted by law, inflicted on a person for the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, or for the omission of the performance of an act required by law, by the judgment and command of some lawful court.

Punishments are either corporal or not corporal.

The former are: Death, which is usually denominated "capital punishment;" imprisonment, which is either with or without labor (see "Penitentiary"); whipping, in some states; and banishment.

The punishments which are not corporal are: Fines, forfeitures; suspension or deprivation of some political or civil right; deprivation of office, and being rendered incapable to hold office; compulsion to remove nuisances.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES. Exemplary damages.

PUPIL.

—In Civil Law. One who is in his or her minority. See Dig. 1. 7.; Id. 26. 7. 1. 2; Id. 50. 16. 239; Code, 6. 30. 18. One who is in ward or guardianship.

—At Common Law. One who is under tuition in any school, or under a private instructor.

PUPILLARIS SUBSTITUTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The nomination of another besides his son pupil to succeed, if the son should not be able or inclined to accept the inheritance, or should die before he came of age to make a testament.

If the child survive the age of puberty, though he made no testament, the substitute had no right of succession. See Bell, Dict. "Substitution;" Dig. 28. 6.

PUPILLARITY. In civil law. That age of a person's life which included infancy and puerility.

PUPILLUS PATI POSSE NON INTELLIGITUR. A pupil is not considered able to do an act which would be prejudicial to him. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 2; 2 Kent, Comm. 245.

PUR. A corruption of the French word par, by or for. It is frequently used in old French law phrases, as, pur autre vis. It is also used in the composition of words, as, purparty, purlieu, purview.

PUR AUTRE VIE (Old Fr. for another's life). An estate is said to be pur autre vie when a lease is made of lands or tenements to a man to hold for the life of another person. 2 Bl. Comm. 259; 10 Vin. Abr. 296; 2 Belt, Supp. Ves. 41.

PUR TANT QUE (Law Fr.) Forasmuch as; because; to the intent that. Kelham.

PURCHASE. In the broadest sense, the transmission of property from one person to another by their voluntary agreement on a valuable consideration. 4 Kent, Comm. 509.

In a stricter sense, a term including every mode of acquisition of estate known to the law, except that by which an heir on the death of his ancestor becomes substituted in his place as owner by operation of law. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 401.

There are six ways of acquiring a title by purchase, namely: By deed; by devise; by execution; by prescription; by possession or occupancy; by escheat. In its more limited sense, "purchase" is applied only to such acquisitions of lands as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money or some other valuable consideration. Cruise, Dig. tit. 30, §§ 1-4; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 20. In common parlance, purchase signifies the buying of real estate and of goods and chattels.

PURCHASE MONEY. The consideration in money which is agreed to be paid by a purchaser.

PURCHASE MONEY MORTGAGE. A mortgage given on the purchase of land by the purchaser to the vendor to secure the payment of the purchase money, or the unpaid balance thereof.

PURCHASE, WORDS OF. Those by which, taken absolutely, without reference to or connection with any other words, an estate first attaches, or is considered as commencing in point of title, in the person described by them, such as the words "son," "daughter." Words which create a title in certain persons, as distinguished from those which merely limit or define the quantum of estate. See "Shelley's Case, Rule in."

PURCHASER. A buyer; a vendee. The term is applied indifferently to persons acquiring, by purchase, either realty or personalty, but in the interest of exact nomenclature it should be applied only with respect to the sale of realty; "buyer" being the appropriate term for one who obtains personalty by sale.

PURCHASER OF A NOTE OR BILL. The person who buys a promissory note or bill of exchange from the holder without his indorsement. Bayley, Bills, 370.

PURE DEBT. In Scotch law. A debt actually due, in contradistinction to one which is to become due at a future day certain, which is called a "future debt," and one due provisionally, in a certain event, which is called a "contingent debt." 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 315.

PURE OBLIGATION. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been performed. Poth. Obl. note 176.

PURE PLEA. In equity pleading. One which relies wholly on some matter dehors the bill; as, for example, a plea of a release on a settled account.

Pleas not pure are so called in contradistinction to pure pleas. They are sometimes also denominated "negative pleas." 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4275.

PURE VILLENAGE. A base tenure, where a man holds upon terms of doing whatsoever is commanded of him, nor knows in the evening what is to be done in the morning, and is always bound to an uncertain service. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 188.

PURGATION (Lat. purgo; from purum and ago, to make clean). The clearing one's self of an offense charged, by denying the guilt on oath or affirmation.

Canonical purgation was the act of justifying one's self, when accused of some offense, in the presence of a number of persons worthy of credit, generally twelve, who would swear they believed the accused. See "Compurgator."

Vulgar purgation consisted in superstitious trials by hot and cold water, by fire, by hot irons, by battle, by corsned, etc.

In modern times, a man may purge himself of an offense in some cases where the facts are within his own knowledge; for example, when a man is charged with a contempt of court, he may purge himself of such contempt by swearing that in doing the act charged he did not intend to commit a contempt.

PURGED OF PARTIAL COUNSEL. In Scotland, every witness, before making oath or affirmation, is "purged of partial counsel," i. e., cleared by examination on oath of having instigated the plea, of having been present with the party for whom he testifies at consultations of lawyers, where it might be shown what was necessary to be proved, or of having acted as his agent in any of the proceedings. So, in a criminal case, he who is agent of prosecutor, or who tampers with the panel, cannot be heard to testify, because of "partial counsel." Stair, Inst. p. 768, § 9; Bell, Dict. "Partial Counsel."

PURGING A TORT. This is like the ratification of a wrongful act by a person who has power of himself to lawfully do the act; but, unlike ratification, the purging of the tort may take place even after commencement of the action. 1 Brod. & B. 282.

PURGING CONTEMPT. See "Purgation."

PURLIEU. In English law. A space of land near a forest, known by certain boundaries, which was formerly part of a forest, but which has been separated from it.

The history of purlieus is this: Henry II., on taking possession of the throne, manifested so great a taste for forests that he enlarged the old ones wherever he could, and by this means enclosed many estates which had no outlet to the public roads; and things increased in this way until the reign of King John, when the public reclamations were so great that much of this land was disforested,—that is, no longer had the privileges of the forests; and the land thus separated bore the name of “purlieu.”

PURLIEU MEN. Those who have ground within the purlieu to the yearly value of 40s. a year freehold are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus. Manw. For. Law, c. 20, § 8.

PURPARTY. That part of an estate which, having been held in common by parceners, is by partition allotted to any of them. To make purparty is to divide and sever the lands which fall to parceners. Old Nat. Brev. 11.

PURPORT. In pleading. The substance of a writing as it appears on the face of it to the eye that reads it. It differs from tenor (q. v.) 2 Russ. Crimes, 365; 1 East, 179; and therefore, where the instrument is stated according to its tenor, the purport of it must necessarily appear. 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 394.

To “purport” means “to intend to show; to intend; to mean; to signify.” 39 Ill. App. 594.

PURPOSE. Something intended to be done. 22 Q. B. D. 296.

PURPRESTURE. An inclosure by a private individual of a part of a common or public domain.

According to Lord Coke, purpresture is a close or inclosure, that is, when one encroaches or makes several to himself that which ought to be in common to many; as, if an individual were to build between high and low water mark on the side of a public river. In England this is a nuisance, and in cases of this kind an injunction will be granted, on ex parte affidavits, to restrain such a purpresture and nuisance. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2382; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3798; 2 Inst. 28. And see Skene de Verb. Sign.; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 11. p. 239, note; Spelman; Hale de Port Mar.; Harg. Tr. 84; 2 Anstr. 606; Callis, Sew. 174.

PURPRISUM (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. pourpris, an inclosure). In old records. A close or inclosure. Cowell.

The whole compass of a manor. Cowell.

PURQ' (Law Fr. wherefore). A word used in old practice, at the end of pleas, arguments, and judgments. Very common in the Year Books. Purq', pur default de r'ns, no' d'dons judgt, et prions nos dam', wherefore, for want of an answer, we demand judgment and pray our damages. The clause is sometimes abbreviated, purq', etc.

PURSER. The person appointed by the master of a ship or vessel, whose duty it is to take care of the ship's books, in which everything on board is inserted, as well the names of mariners as the articles of merchandise shipped. Roccius, Ins. note.

PURSUE (from Lat. persequi). To follow a matter judicially, as a complaining party. In Scotch law, to prosecute criminal-ly. 3 How. St. Tr. 425.

PURSUER. The name by which the complainant or plaintiff is known in the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Ecc. 350.

PURUS (Lat.) In old English law. Pure; clear; simple; free of any qualification or condition. Donationum quaedam libera et pura, et quaedam sub conditione vel sub modo, of gifts, one kind is free and pure, and another under a condition or qualification. Bracton, fol. 11b.

Absolute. Purus idiota, a clear or absolute idiot. 1 Bl. Comm. 303.

PURVEYANCE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from pourvoir, to provide. In old English law. A providing of necessities for the king's house. Cowell. A buying at the king's price. Hale, Anal. § viii. See “Pourveyance.”

PURVEYOR. One employed in procuring provisions. See Code, l. 34.

PURVIEW. That part of an act of the legislature which begins with the words, “Be it enacted,” etc., and ends before the repealing clause. Cooke (Tenn.) 330; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 181. According to Cowell, this word also signifies a conditional gift or grant. It is said to be derived from the French pourvu, provided. It always implies a condition.

PUT.

—In Pleading. To select; to demand; as, “the said C. D. puts himself upon the country;” that is, he selects the trial by jury as the mode of settling the matter in dispute, and does not rely upon an issue in law. Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 19.

—In Mercantile Usage. A term of the stock markets, signifying an option to sell to another certain goods within a specified time, at a specified price. See “Gambling Contract.”

PUT IN SUIT. Applied to a chose in action, to sue on.

PUT IN URE. In old statutes. To put in practice or effect; to carry into effect. Sometimes written to “put in use.”

PUT OUT. To open. To put out lights; to open or cut windows. 11 East, 372.

PUT UPON. (Law Lat. ponere super). In practice. To rest upon; to submit to; as a defendant "puts himself upon the country."

PUTATIVE. Reputed to be that which is not. The word is frequently used; as, putative father, putative marriage, putative wife, and the like. And Toullier (Dr. Civ. tom. 7, note 29) uses the words putative owner, proprietaire putatif. Lord Kames uses the same expression (Eq. 391).

PUTATIVE FATHER. The reputed father. This term is most usually applied to the father of a bastard child.

PUTATIVE MARRIAGE. In the civil law. A marriage which is forbidden, but which has been contracted in good faith and ignorance of the impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties.

PUTEUS. (Lat.) In old English law. A well. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 8.

PUTS AND CALLS. See "Gambling Contract."

PUTTING IN FEAR. The causing of such reasonable apprehension of death or serious injury as will excuse the person so threatened from running the risk of incurring the same by resistance to unlawful aggression. In the crime of robbery, such putting in fear is accounted constructive violence. The fear inspired to compel a man to surrender his property may be of injury to his person (2 East, P. C. 712), or to his property (Id. 729). Fear of injury to character or reputation is not sufficient (7 Humph. [Tenn.] 45, 12 Ga. 293), with the single exception of a threat to accuse of an unnatural crime (1 Car. & P. 479).

PUTURE. A custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse's meat, and dog's meat of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, etc. The land subject to this custom was called "terra putura." Others, who call it "pulture," explain it as a demand in general, and derive it from the monks, who, before they were admitted, pulsabant, knocked at the gates for several days together. 4 Inst. 307; Cowell.

PYKERIE (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Petty theft. 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 43.

PYRAMIDING. See "Gambling Contract."

Q

Q. A letter used in the Roman law, in various abbreviations. An abbreviation used in writing out decrees of the senate. Tayl. Civ. Law, 576. Calv. Lex.

Q. C. An abbreviation of "queen's counsel" (q. v.)

Q. C. F. An abbreviation of quare clausum fregit. See "Trespass."

Q. V. Quod vide, which see. Used after the mention of a title, chapter, etc., to refer the reader thereto.

QAR (Law Fr.) For Fet. Assaver, § 45,

Q'D. A contraction of quod, in old pleading. 1 Inst. Cler. 12.

QUA. As; in the character or capacity of. "The judge qua judge cannot know." Vaughan, 147.

QUACK. One who, without sufficient knowledge, study, or previous preparation, undertakes to practice medicine or surgery, under the pretense that he possesses secrets in those arts.

The origin of the word "quack" is not clearly ascertained. Johnson derives it from the words "to quack," or gabble like a goose. Butler uses this verb as descriptive of the encomiums empirics heap upon their nostrums. Thus, in Hudibras, "To quack of universal cures."

The Egyptian hieroglyphic for a doctor was a duck, and it has been a question whether this may not form a clue to the derivation of the word "quack." The English quack—or "quacksalber," as it was originally written—is from the German quacksalber, or rather the Dutch kwaksalver, which Bilderdyk states should be more properly kwabsalver, from kwab, a wen, and zalver, to salve or anoint. 5 Notes & Queries.

QUACUNQUE VIA DATA (Lat.) Which ever way you take it; in whichever view of the case. 2 Burrows, 980; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 26.

QUADRAGESIMA (Lat.) The fortieth. The first Sunday in Lent is so called because it is about the fortieth day before Easter. Cowell.

QUADRAGESIMS. The third volume of the Year Books of the reign of Edward III. So called, because beginning with the fortieth year of the reign. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 327; Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 8.

QUADRANS (Lat.)

—In Civil Law. The fourth part of the whole. Hence the heir ex quadrante; that is to say, of the fourth part of the whole.

—In Old English Law. A farthing; a fourth part or quarter of a penny.

Before the reign of Edward I. the smallest coin was a sterling or silver penny marked with a cross or traverse strokes, by the guidance of which a penny, upon occasion, might be cut in halves for a half penny, or into quarters for farthings or fourth parts, till, to avoid the fraud of unequally cutting, King Edward I., A. D. 1279, coined half pence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Cowell; Spelman, voc. "Denarius," citing Stow, p. 306, where some curious old verses are given.

QUADRANT. In angular measures, a quadrant is equal to ninety degrees. See "Measure."

QUADRANTALIS (Law Lat.; from quadrans, q. v.) In old English law. Of the value or price of a quarter or farthing. Paris quadrantal, the farthing loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9. Britton, in the parallel passage, has the word ferlinges. Britt. c. 30. But the word is not taken notice of either by Spelman or Cowell.

QUADRANTATA TERRAE (Law Lat.) The fourth part of an acre, according to Cowell. But Spelman makes it to be the fourth part of a yard land. Spelman voc. "Fardella."

QUADRARIUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A quarry or stone pit. Par. Ant. 208; Cowell.

QUADRIENNIIUM (Lat. from quatuor, four, and annus, year). The four years' course of studying the civil law, before arriving at the code or imperial constitutions. Inst. proem; Tayl. Civ. Law, 39.

QUADRIENNIIUM UTILE (Lat.) In Scotch law. The four years of a minor between his age of twenty-one and twenty-five years are so called. During this period he is permitted to impeach contracts made against his interest previous to his arriving at the age of twenty-one years. Ersk. Inst. 1. 7. 19. 35; 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 135.

QUADRIPARTITE (Lat.) Having four parts, or divided into four parts; as, this indenture quadripartite, made between A. B., of the one part, C. D., of the second part, E. F., of the third part, and G. H., of the fourth part.

QUADROON. A person who is descended from a white person and another person who has an equal mixture of the European and African blood. 2 Bailey (S. C.) 558. See "Mulatto."

QUADRUPLICATION. In pleading. Formerly this word was used instead of "sur-rebutter." 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 469, note.

QUAE AB HOSTIBUS CAPIUNTUR, STATIM captentium fiunt. Things taken from public enemies immediately become the property of the captors. Inst. 2. 1. 17; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 6, § 12.

QUAE AB INITIO INUTILIS FUIT INSTITUTIO, ex post facto convalescere non potest. An institution void in the beginning cannot acquire validity from after-matter. Dig. 50. 17. 210.

QUAE AB INITIO NON VALENT, EX post facto convalescere non possunt. Things invalid from the beginning cannot be made valid by subsequent act. Tray. Lat. Max. 482.

QUAE ACCESSORIUM LOCUM OBTINENT, extinguuntur cum principales res peremptae fuerint. When the principal is destroyed, those things which are accessory to it are also destroyed. Poth. Obl. pt. 3, c. 6, art. 4; Dig. 33. 8. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 439.

QUAE AD UNUM FINEM LOQUUTA sunt, non debent ad alium detorqueri. Words spoken to one end ought not to be perverted to another. 4 Coke, 14.

QUAE COHAERENT PERSONAE A PERSONA separari nequeunt. Things which belong to the person ought not to be separated from the person. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 28.

QUAE COMMUNI LEGI DEROGANT stricte interpretantur. Laws which derogate from the common law ought to be strictly construed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 221.

QUAE CONTRA RATIONEM JURIS INTRODUCTA sunt, non debent trahi in consequentiam. Things introduced contrary to the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. 12 Coke, 75.

QUAE DUBITATIONIS CAUSA TOLLENDAE inseruntur communem legem non laedunt. Whatever is inserted for the purpose of removing doubt does not hurt or affect the common law. Co. Litt. 205.

QUAE DUBITATIONIS TOLLENDAE causa contractibus inseruntur, jus commune non laedunt. Particular clauses inserted in agreements to avoid doubts and ambiguity do not prejudice the common law. Dig. 50. 17. 81.

QUAE EST EADEM (Lat. which is the same). In pleading. A clause containing a statement that the trespass, or other fact mentioned in the plea, is the same as that laid in the declaration, where from the circumstances there is an apparent difference between the two. 1 Chit. Pl. 473; Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 79, 80; 29 Vt. 455.

The form is as follows: "Which are the same assaulting, beating, and ill-treating, the said John, in the said declaration mentioned, and whereof the said John hath above thereof complained against the said James." See 1 Saund. 14, 208, note 2; 2 Saund. 5a, note 3; Archb. Civ. Pl. 217; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (E 31); Cro. Jac. 372; 1 Chit. Pl. 473.

QUAE IN CURIA ACTA SUNT RITE AGI praesumuntur. Whatever is done in court is presumed to be rightly done. 3 Bulst. 43.

QUAE IN PARTES DIVIDI NEQUEUNT solida, a singulis praestantur. Things (i. e., services and rents) which cannot be divided into parts are rendered entire by each severally. 6 Coke, 1.

QUAE IN TESTAMENTO ITA SUNT scripta ut intelligi non possunt, perinde sunt ac si scripta non essent. Things which are so written in a will that they cannot be understood are as if they had not been written. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3.

QUAE INCONTINENTER VEL CERTO fiunt in esse videntur. Whatever things are done at once and certainly appear part of the same transaction. Co. Litt. 236.

QUAE INTER ALIOS ACTA SUNT NEMINI nocere debent, sed prodesse possunt. Transactions between strangers may benefit, but cannot injure, persons who are parties to them. 6 Coke, 1.

QUAE LEGI COMMUNI DEROGANT NON sunt trahenda in exemplum. Things derogatory to the common law are not to be drawn into precedent. Branch, Princ.

QUAE LEGI COMMUNI DEROGANT stricte interpretantur. Those things which derogate from the common law are to be construed strictly. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 29.

QUAE MALA SUNT INCHOATA IN principio vix bono peragantur exitu. Things bad in the commencement seldom end well. 4 Coke, 2.

QUAE NIHIL FRUSTRUM. (Law Lat.) Which (does or requires) nothing in vain; which requires nothing to be done, that is to no purpose. 2 Kent, Comm. 53.

QUAE NON FIERI DEBENT, FACTA VALENT. Things which ought not to be done are held valid when they have been done. Tray. Lat. Max. 484.

QUAE NON VALEANT SINGULA, JUNCTA JUVANT. Things which may not avail singly, when united have an effect. 3 Bulst. 132.

QUAE PLURA (Law Lat. what more). In old English practice. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been made by an escheator in any county of such lands or tenements as any man died seised of, and all that was in his possession was imagined not to be found by the office; the writ commanding the escheator to inquire what more (quae plura) lands and tenements the party held on the day when he died, etc. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 255a; Reg. Orig. 293; Cowell.

QUAE PRAETER CONSUETUDINEM ET morem majorum fiunt, neque placent, neque recta videntur. What is done contrary to the custom and usage of our ancestors, neither pleases nor appears right. 4 Coke, 78.

QUAE PROPTER NECESSITATEM RE- cepta sunt, non debent in argumentum trahi. Things which are tolerated on account of necessity ought not to be drawn into precedent. Dig. 50. 17. 162.

QUAE RERUM NATURA PROHIBEN- tur, nulla lege confirmata sunt. What is prohibited in the nature of things can be confirmed by no law. Finch, Law, 74.

QUAE SINGULA NON PROSUNT, JUNC- ta Juvant. Things which, taken singly, are of no avail, afford help when taken together. Tray. Lat. Max. 486.

QUAE SUNT MINORIS CULPAE SUNT majoris infamiae. Things which are of the smaller guilt are of the greater infamy. Co. Litt. 6.

QUAECUNQUE INTRA RATIONEM LE- gis Inveniuntur, intra legem ipsam esse judicantur. Whatever appears within the reason of the law is considered within the law itself. 2 Inst. 689.

QUAELIBET CONCESSIO DOMINI RE- gis capi debet stricte contra dominum regem, quando potest intelligi duabus viis. Every grant of our lord the king ought to be taken strictly against our lord the king, when it can be understood in two ways. 3 Leon. 243.

QUAELIBET CONCESSIO FORTISSIME contra donatorem Interpretanda est. Every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. Co. Litt. 183a.

QUAELIBET JURISDICTIO CANCEL- los suos habet. Every jurisdiction has its bounds. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 139.

QUAELIBET PARDONATIO DEBET CA- pli secundum intentionem regis, et non addeceptionem regis. Every pardon ought to be taken according to the intention of the king, and not to the deception of the king. 3 Bulst. 14.

QUAELIBET POENA CORPORALIS, quamvis minima, major est qualibet poena pecuniaria. Every corporal punishment, although the very least, is greater than any pecuniary punishment. 3 Inst. 220.

QUAERAS DE DUBIIS, LEGEM BENE discere si vis. Inquire into doubtful points if you wish to understand the law well. Litt. § 443.

QUAERE (Lat.) In practice. A word frequently used to denote that an inquiry ought to be made of a doubtful thing. 2 Lilly, Abr. 406.

QUAERE DE DUBIIS, QUIA PER RATIO- nes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. Inquire into doubtful points, because by reasoning we arrive at legal reason. Litt. § 377.

QUAERENS. In old practice. A plaintiff; the plaintiff.

QUAERENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM (Lat.) In practice. The plaintiff has not found pledge. The return made by the sheriff to a writ directed to him with this clause, namely, Si A facerit B securem de clamore suo prosequendo, when the plaintiff has neglected to find sufficient security. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 38.

QUAERERE DAT SAPERE QUAE SUNT legitima vere. To investigate is the way to know what things are really lawful. Litt. § 443.

QUAESTIO (Lat.) In Roman law. A sort of commission (ad quaerendum) to inquire into some criminal matter given to a magistrate or citizen, who was called quaesitor or quaestor, who made report thereon to the senate or the people, as the one or the other appointed him. In progress of time he was empowered (with the assistance of a counsel) to adjudge the case, and the tribunal thus constituted was called quaestio.

This special tribunal continued in use until the end of the Roman republic, although it was resorted to, during the last times of the republic, only in extraordinary cases.

The manner in which they were constituted was this: If the matter to be inquired of was within the jurisdiction of the comitia, the senate, on the demand of the consul, or of a tribune, or of one of its members, declared by a decree that there was cause to prosecute a citizen. Then the consul ex auctoritate senatus asked the people in comitia (rogabat rogatio) to enact this decree into a law. The comitia adopted it, either simply or with amendment, or they rejected it.

The increase of population and of crimes rendered this method, which was tardy at best, onerous, and even impracticable. In the year 149 B. C., under the consulship of Censorinus and Manilius, the tribune Calpurnius Piso procured the passage of a law establishing a questio perpetua, to take cognizance of the crime of extortion committed by Roman magistrates against strangers de pecuniis repetundis. Cicero, Brut. 27; Cicero de Off. ii. 21; Cicero in Verr. iv. 25.

Many such tribunals were afterwards established, such as quaestiones de majestate, de ambitu, de peculatu, de vi, de sodalitiis, etc. Each was composed of a certain number of judges taken from the senators, and presided over by a praetor, although he might delegate his authority to a public officer, who was called judez quaestionis. These tribunals continued a year only; for the meaning of the word perpetuus is (non interruptus), not interrupted during the term of its appointed duration.

The establishment of these quaestiones deprived the comitia of their criminal jurisdiction, except the crime of treason. They were, in fact, the depositories of the judicial power during the sixth and seventh centuries of the Roman republic, the last of which was remarkable for civil dissensions, and replete with great public transactions. Without some knowledge of the constitution of the quaestio perpetua, it is impossible to understand the forensic speeches of Cicero, or even the political history of that age. But when Julius Caesar, as dictator, sat for the trial of Ligarius, the ancient constitution of the republic was, in fact, destroyed, and the criminal tribunals, which had existed in more or less vigor and purity until then, existed no longer but in name. Under Augustus, the concentration of the triple power of the consuls, proconsuls, and tribunes in his person transferred to him, as of course, all judicial powers and authorities.

QUAESTIONES PERPETUAE. In the Roman law. Commissions (or courts) of inquisition into crimes alleged to have been committed. They were called "perpetuae," to distinguish them from "occasional" inquisitions, and because they were permanent courts for the trial of offenders. Brown.

QUAESTOR (Lat.) The name of a magistrate of ancient Rome.

QUAESTORES CLASSICI (Lat.) In Roman law. Officers intrusted with the care of the public money.

Their duties consisted in making the necessary payments from the aerarium, and receiving the public revenues. Of both they had to keep correct accounts in their tabulae publicae. Demands which any one might have on the aerarium, and outstanding debts, were likewise registered by them. Fines to be paid to the public treasury were registered and exacted by them. They were likewise to provide proper accommodations for foreign ambassadors and such persons as were connected with the republic by ties of public hospitality. Lastly, they were charged with the care of the burials and monuments of distinguished men, the expenses for which had been decreed by the senate to be paid by the treasury. Their number at first was confined to two, but this was afterwards increased as the empire became extended. There were quaestores of cities and of provinces, and quaestores of the army; the latter were in fact paymasters.

QUAESTORES PARRICIDII (Lat.) In Roman law. Public accusers, two in number, who conducted the accusation of persons guilty of murder or any other capital offense, and carried the sentence into execution. They ceased to be appointed at an early period. Smith.

QUAESTUS. That estate which a man has by acquisition or purchase, in contradistinction to "haereditas," which is what he has by descent. Glanv. 1, 7, c. 1.

QUALE JUS (Lat.) In old English law. A judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land before execution was made of the judgment. It went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by the collusion of the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Jud. 8.

QUALIFICATION. Having the requisite qualities for a thing; as, to be president of the United States, the candidate must possess certain qualifications.

The natural endowment or acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment. See 4 Wall. (U. S.) 319.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR. One entitled to vote.

QUALIFIED FEE. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. A limitation to a man and "his heirs on the part of his father" affords an example of this species of estate. Litt. § 254; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1695.

QUALIFIED INDORSEMENT. A transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. The words usually employed for this purpose are sans recours, without recourse. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1188.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. Property not in its nature permanent, but which may sometimes subsist and at other times not subsist. A defeasible and precarious ownership, which lasts as long as the thing is in actual use and occupation; e. g., first, property in animals ferae naturae, or in light, or air, where the qualified property arises from the nature of the thing; second, property in a thing held by any one as a bailee, where the qualified property arises not from the nature of the thing, but from the peculiar circumstances under which it is held. 2 Bl. Comm. 391, 395*; 2 Kent, Comm. 347; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 385. Any ownership not absolute.

QUALITAS QUAE INESSE DEBET, FACILE PRAESUMITUR. A quality which ought to form a part is easily presumed.

QUALITER (Lat.) In what manner. A word used in old writs. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

QUALITY.

—Of Persons. The state or condition of a person.

Two contrary qualities cannot be in the same person at the same time. Dig. 41, 10. 4. Every one is presumed to know the quality of the person with whom he is contracting. In the United States the people happily are all upon an equality in their civil rights.

—In Pleading. That which distinguishes one thing from another of the same kind.

QUALITY OF ESTATE. The period when, and the manner in which, the right of enjoying an estate is exercised. It is of two kinds: (1) The period when the right of enjoying an estate is conferred upon the owner, whether at present or in future; and (2) the manner in which the owner's right of enjoyment of his estate is to be exercised, whether solely, jointly, in common, or in coparcenary. Wharton.

QUAM LONGUM DEBET ESSE "RATIOnabile tempus," non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione iudicialiorum. What is "reasonable time" the law does not define; it is left to the discretion of the judges. Co. Litt. 56. See 11 Coke, 44.

QUAM RATIONABILIS DEBET ESSE finis, non definitur, sed omnibus circumstantiis inspectis pendet ex iudicialiorum discretione. What a reasonable fine ought to be is not defined, but is left to the discretion of the judges, all the circumstances being considered. 11 Coke, 44.

QUAMDIU (Lat.) As long as; so long as. A word of limitation in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 235a; 10 Coke, 41b; Shep. Touch. 125.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT (Lat. as long as he shall behave himself well). A clause inserted in commissions, when such instruments were written in Latin, to signify the tenure by which the officer held his office.

QUAMVIS ALIQUID PER SE NON SIT malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although in itself a thing may not be bad, yet if it holds out a bad example it is not to be done. 2 Inst. 564.

QUAMVIS LEX GENERALITER LOQUITUR, restringenda tamen est, ut cessante ratione et ipsa cessat. Although the law speaks generally, it is to be restrained, since when the reason on which it is founded fails, it fails. 4 Inst. 330.

QUANDO ABEST PROVISIO PARTIS, adest provisio legis. When a provision of the party is lacking, the provision of the law is at hand. 13 C. B. 960.

QUANDO ACCIDERINT (Lat. when they fall in). In practice. When a defendant, executor or administrator, pleads plene administravit, the plaintiff may pray to have judgment of assets quando acciderint. Buller, N. P. 169; Bac. Abr. "Executor" (M).

By taking a judgment in this form, the plaintiff admits that the defendant has fully administered to that time. 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 442, note. See 11 Viner, Abr. 379; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 D. 9).

QUANDO ALIQUID CONCEDITUR, CON-ceditur id sine quo illud fieri non possit. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which it cannot be of effect. 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 516, 518; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 354, 359.

QUANDO ALIQUID MANDATUR, MANdatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded. 5 Coke, 116. See 7 C. B. 886; 14 C. B. 107; 6 Exch. 886, 889; 10 Exch. 449; 2 El. & Bl. 301; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 110, 179, 242, 299; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 431.

QUANDO ALIQUID PER SE NON SIT malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. When anything by itself is not evil, and yet may be an example for evil, it is not to be done. 2 Inst. 564.

QUANDO ALIQUID PROHIBETUR EX directo, prohibetur et per obliquum. When anything is prohibited directly, it is also prohibited indirectly. Co. Litt. 223.

QUANDO ALIQUID PROHIBETUR, PRO-hibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When anything is prohibited, everything by which it is reached is prohibited. 2 Inst. 48; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 432; Wingate, Max. 618. See 7 Clark & F. 509, 546; 4 Barn. & C. 187, 193; 2 Term R. 251, 252; 8 Term R. 301, 415; 15 Mees. & W. 7; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 329.

QUANDO ALIQUIS ALIQUID CONCED-
it, concedere videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest. When a person grants a thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used. 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

QUANDO CHARTA CONTINET GENERalem clausulam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quae clausulae generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words, consistent with the general clause, the deed is to be construed according to the special words. 8 Coke, 154.

QUANDO DE UNA ET EADEM RE, DUO onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro, onerabitur. When two persons are liable concerning one and the same thing, if one makes default, the other must bear the whole. 2 Inst. 277.

QUANDO DISPOSITIO REFERRI POtest ad duas res, ita quod secundum rela-tionem unam vitiat et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est ratio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition may be made to refer to two things, so that, according to one reference, it would be vitiated, and by the other it would be made effectual, such a reference must be made that the disposition shall have effect. 6 Coke, 76b.

QUANDO DIVERSI DESIDERANTUR actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of an estate, the law chiefly regards the original act. 10 Coke, 49.

QUANDO DUO JURA CONCURRUNT IN una persona, aequum est ac si essent in diversis. When two rights concur in one person, it is the same as if they were in two separate persons. 4 Coke, 118.

QUANDO JUS DOMINI REGIS ET SUBDITI concurrunt jus regis praeferri debet. When the right of the sovereign and of the subject concur, the right of the sovereign ought to be preferred. 1 Coke, 129; Co. Litt. 30b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 66.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALICUI CONCE-
DIT, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law gives anything, it gives the means of obtaining it. 5 Coke, 47; 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALICUI CON-
CEDIT, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. When the law gives anything, it gives tacitly what is incident to it. 2 Inst. 326; Hob. 234.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALIQUO CON-
CEDIT, conceditur et id sine qua res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants a thing to any one, it grants that also without which the thing itself cannot exist. 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 153, 160.

QUANDO LEX EST SPECIALIS, RATIO autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When the law is special, but its reason is general, the law is to be understood generally. 2 Inst. 83; 10 Coke, 101.

QUANDO LICET ID QUOD MAJUS, VIDE-
TUR licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the less seems to be allowed also. Shep. Touch. 429.

QUANDO MULIER NOBILIS NUPSERIT ignobili, desinit esse nobilis nisi nobilitas nativa fuerit. When a noble woman marries a man not noble, she ceases to be noble, unless her nobility was born with her. 4 Coke, 118.

QUANDO PLUS FIT QUAM FIERI DE-
BET, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that too shall be considered as performed which should have been performed; as, if a man, having a power to make a lease for ten years, make one for twenty years, it shall be void only for the surplus. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 166; 5 Coke, 115; 8 Coke, 85a.

QUANDO QUOD AGO NON VALET UT ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do does not have effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 172, 178; 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 261.

QUANDO RES NON VALET UT AGO, valeat quantum valere potest. When a thing is of no force as I do it, it shall have as much as it can have. Cowp. 600; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 483; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 294; 6 East, 105; 1 Vent. 216; 1 H. Bl. 614, 620.

QUANDO VERBA ET MENS CON-
GRUUNT, non est interpretationi locus. When the words and the mind agree, there is no place for interpretation.

QUANDO VERBA STATUTI SUNT SPE-
CIALIA, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason or object of it general, the statute is to be construed generally. 10 Coke, 101b.

QUANTI MINORIS (Lat.) The name of a particular action in Louisiana. An action quanti minoris is one brought for the reduction of the price of a thing sold, in consequence of defects in the thing which is the object of the sale.

Such action must be commenced within twelve months from the date of the sale, or from the time within which the defect became known to the purchaser. 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 287; 11 Mart. (La.) 11.

QUANTITY. In pleading. That which is susceptible of measure.

It is a general rule that, when the declaration alleges an injury to goods and chattels, or any contract relating to them, their quantity should be stated. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 35. And in actions for the recovery of real estate, the quantity of the land should be specified. Bracton, 431a; 11 Coke, 25b, 55a; Doct. Plac. 85, 86; 1 East, 441; 8 East, 357; 13 East, 102; Steph. Pl. 314, 315.

QUANTUM DAMNIFICATUS (Lat.) In equity practice. An issue directed by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain by a trial before a jury the amount of damages suffered by the nonperformance of some collateral undertaking which a penalty has been given to secure. When such damages have thus been ascertained, the court will grant relief upon their payment. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3913.

QUANTUM MERUIT (Lat.) In pleading. As much as he has deserved.

When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. In such case, the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit. 2 Bl. Comm. 162, 163; 1 Viner, Abr. 346; 2 Phil. Ev. 82.
